

DOCUMENTS RELATIFS AUX
RELATIONS EXTÉRIEURES DU CANADA

DOCUMENTS ON CANADIAN EXTERNAL RELATIONS

CANADA

DOCUMENTS RELATIFS AUX
RELATIONS EXTÉRIEURES
DU CANADA

DOCUMENTS ON CANADIAN
EXTERNAL RELATIONS

VOLUME 24
1957-1958
TOME I/PART I

Sous la direction de
Michael D. Stevenson
Editor

MINISTÈRE DES AFFAIRES ÉTRANGÈRES ET DU COMMERCE INTERNATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

©Her Majesty the Queen in Right of Canada, represented by the Minister of Public Works and Government Services, 2003.

Available through your local book seller or by mail from Canadian Government Publishing Public Works and Government Services Canada
Ottawa (Ontario)
K1A 0S9

Telephone: (819) 956-4800

Fax: (819) 994-1498

Orders only: 1-800-635-7943

Internet: <http://publications.pwsc.gc.ca>

Catalogue No. E2-39/24-2003
ISBN 0-660-62323-4

©Sa Majesté la Reine du Chef du Canada, représentée par le Ministre des Travaux publics et Services gouvernementaux, 2003.

En vente chez votre libraire local ou par la poste auprès des Éditions du gouvernement du Canada
Travaux publics et Services gouvernementaux Canada
Ottawa (Ontario)
K1A 0S9

Téléphone : (819) 956-4800

Télécopieur : (819) 994-1498

Commandes seulement : 1-800-635-7943

Internet : <http://publications.tpsgc.gc.ca>

N° de catalogue E2-39/24-2003
ISBN 0-660-62323-4

TABLE DES MATIÈRES CONTENTS

	PAGE		PAGE
INTRODUCTION	ix	INTRODUCTION	ix
PROVENANCE DES DOCUMENTS	xxvii	LOCATION OF DOCUMENTS	xxvii
LISTE DES ABRÉVIATIONS	xxix	LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS	xxix
LISTE DES PERSONNALITÉS	xxxiii	LIST OF PERSONS	xxxiii
ILLUSTRATIONS	li	ILLUSTRATIONS	li

Chapitre I

Chapter I

NATIONS UNIES ET AUTRES ORGANISATIONS INTERNATIONALES

UNITED NATIONS AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

I. Nations Unies

I. United Nations

a) Douzième session de l'assemblée générale à New York, 17 septembre au 14 décembre 1957 i) Instructions à la délégation canadienne 1 ii) Élections du conseil de sécurité 6 iii) Algérie 8 iv) Appréciation 25 b) Treizième session de l'assemblée générale à New York, 16 septembre au 13 décembre 1958 i) Instructions à la délégation canadienne 32 ii) Représentation de la Chine..... 37 iii) Chypre 44 iv) Appréciation 57 c) Conseil économique et social i) Vingt-quatrième session, New York, 2 juillet au 2 août 1957 .. 70 ii) Vingt-cinquième session, New York, 16 avril au 6 mai 1958... 77 iii) Vingt-sixième session, Genève, 1^{er} juillet au 28 juillet 1958 78 d) Droit de la mer 91 e) Fonds spécial i) Douzième session de l'assemblée générale 212 ii) Comité préparatoire..... 249 iii) Vingt-sixième session du conseil économique et social 262 iv) Treizième session de l'assemblée générale 266	a) Twelfth Session of the General Assembly, New York, September 17 to December 14, 1957 i) Instructions to the Canadian Delegation 1 ii) Security Council Elections 6 iii) Algeria 8 iv) Assessment..... 25 b) Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly, New York, September 16 to December 13, 1958 i) Instructions to the Canadian Delegation 32 ii) Representation of China..... 37 iii) Cyprus 44 iv) Assessment..... 57 c) Economic and Social Council i) Twenty-fourth Session, New York, July 2 to August 2, 1957 70 ii) Twenty-fifth Session, New York, April 16 to May 6, 1958 77 iii) Twenty-sixth Session, Geneva, July 1 to July 28, 1958..... 78 d) Law of the Sea..... 91 e) Special Fund i) Twelfth Session of the General Assembly..... 212 ii) Preparatory Committee 249 iii) Twenty-sixth Session of the Economic and Social Council... 262 iv) Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly..... 266
--	---

f) Désarmement
i) Sous-comité de la commission du désarmement	276
ii) Douzième session de l'assemblée générale	297
iii) Délibérations du conseil de sécurité	314
iv) Treizième session de l'assemblée générale	323
g) Contributions aux programmes extra-budgétaires des Nations Unies	330
h) Organisation internationale du travail Convention de l'abolition du travail forcé	339
2. Accord général sur les tarifs douaniers et le commerce
a) Douzième session des parties contractantes	343
b) Treizième session des parties contractantes	371
3. Fonds monétaire international	393
4. Dix-neuvième conférence internationale de la Croix Rouge, New Delhi, 24 octobre au 7 novembre 1957	396
5. Accord international sur le sucre	404

Chapitre II

ORGANISATION DU TRAITÉ DE L'ATLANTIQUE NORD

1. Planification de la défense à venir	409
2. Politique des armes nucléaires	478
3. Aide mutuelle	535
4. Réunion des chefs du gouvernement, Paris, 16-19 décembre 1957	546
5. Islande	583
6. Réduction des forces du Royaume-uni	591
7. Chypre	603
8. Le général de Gaulle et la restructuration de l'OTAN	626
9. Recherche scientifique	649
10. Constitution de réserves alimentaires	651
11. Berlin	653

f) Disarmament
i) Sub-committee of the Disarmament Commission	276
ii) Twelfth Session of the General Assembly	297
iii) Security Council Deliberations ..	314
iv) Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly	323
g) Contributions to United Nations Extra-Budgetary Programmes	330
h) International Labour Organization Convention on Abolition of Forced Labour	339
2. General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade
a) Twelfth Session of the Contracting Parties	343
b) Thirteenth Session of the Contracting Parties	371
3. International Monetary Fund	393
4. Nineteenth International Red Cross Conference, New Delhi, October 24 to November 7, 1957	396
5. International Sugar Agreement	404

Chapter II

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

1. Future Defence Planning	409
2. Nuclear Weapons Policy	478
3. Mutual Aid	535
4. Heads of Government Meeting, Paris, December 16-19, 1957	546
5. Iceland	583
6. United Kingdom Force Reductions	591
7. Cyprus	603
8. General de Gaulle and NATO Restructuring	626
9. Scientific Research	649
10. Food Stockpiling	651
11. Berlin	653

12. Réunion ministérielle du conseil de l'Atlantique Nord, Paris, 16-18 décembre 1958 686

12. Ministerial Meeting of the North Atlantic Council, Paris, December 16-18, 1958 .. 686

Chapitre III

Chapter III

RELATIONS AVEC LE COMMONWEALTH

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

1. Réunion des premiers ministres du Commonwealth, 26 juin-3 juillet 1957 .. 699

2. Réunion des ministres des finances du Commonwealth, Mont Tremblant, du 28 au 30 septembre 1957, et discussions bilatérales sur le libre-échange avec le Royaume-Uni 745

3. Conférence économique et commerciale du Commonwealth, 15-26 septembre 1958

 a) Aperçu général 798

 b) Échanges du Commonwealth en matière d'éducation 850

4. Tour du monde du premier ministre 879

5. La politique du gouvernement en matière d'achat 931

6. Plan de Colombo

 a) Politique générale 942

 b) Provision de blé aux pays membres du plan de Colombo..... 961

 c) Réunion du comité consultatif à Saïgon, 21-24 octobre 1957 991

 d) Réunion du comité consultatif à Seattle, 10-13 novembre 1958..... 1000

7. Relations avec des pays particuliers

 a) Royaume-Uni

 i) Mission commerciale au Royaume-Uni 1015

 ii) Visite du premier ministre Macmillan à Ottawa, 24-26 octobre 1957 1022

 iii) Visite du premier ministre Macmillan à Ottawa, 11-13 juin 1958..... 1024

 b) Nouvelle Zélande : importation de fromage..... 1028

 c) Antilles

 i) Aide 1039

1. Meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, June 26-July 3, 1957 699

2. Meeting of Commonwealth Finance Ministers, Mont Tremblant, September 28-30, 1957, and Bilateral Free Trade Discussions with the United Kingdom... 745

3. Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference, September 15-26, 1958

 a) General Overview..... 798

 b) Commonwealth Educational Exchanges 850

4. Prime Minister's World Tour 879

5. Government Purchasing Policy..... 931

6. Colombo Plan

 a) General Policy 942

 b) Provision of Wheat to Colombo Plan Countries 961

 c) Consultative Committee Meeting, Saïgon, October 21-24, 1957..... 991

 d) Consultative Committee Meeting, Seattle, November 10-13, 1958 1000

7. Relations with Individual Countries

 United Kingdom

 i) Trade Mission to the United Kingdom 1015

 ii) Visit of Prime Minister Macmillan to Ottawa, October 24-26, 1957 1022

 iii) Visit of Prime Minister Macmillan to Ottawa, June 11-13, 1958..... 1024

 b) New Zealand: Cheese Imports 1028

 c) West Indies

 i) Aid 1039

ii) Libéralisation du commerce.....	1063
iii) Service de la société Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships.....	1078
d) Inde
i) Immigration.....	1082
ii) La crise financière.....	1083
e) Pakistan : situation politique.....	1090
f) Ghana : visite du premier ministre à Ottawa, 24-27 juillet 1958.....	1096

Chapitre IV

EUROPE DE L'OUEST

1. Zone européenne de libre-échange.....	1105
2. France : crise politique et Algérie.....	1151
3. Autriche : traité d'état.....	1190
4. République fédérale d'Allemagne : visite du président et du ministre des affaires étrangères à Ottawa, 28 mai au 4 juin 1958.....	1193
5. Comité interministériel pour les migrations européennes.....	1200

Chapitre V

ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE

1. Exportations d'uranium.....	1206
2. Agence internationale de l'énergie atomique.....	1293
3. EURATOM.....	1321
4. Comité de politique concertée.....	1346

INDEX.....	1351
------------	------

ii) Trade Liberalization.....	1063
iii) Canadian National (West Indies) Steamship Service.....	1078
d) India
i) Immigration.....	1082
ii) Financial Crisis.....	1083
e) Pakistan: Political Situation.....	1090
f) Ghana: Visit of Prime Minister to Ottawa, July 24-27, 1958.....	1096

Chapter IV

WESTERN EUROPE

1. European Free Trade Area.....	1105
2. France: Political Crisis and Algeria.....	1151
3. Austria: State Treaty.....	1190
4. Federal Republic of Germany: Visit of President and Foreign Minister to Ottawa, May 28 to June 4, 1958.....	1193
5. Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration.....	1200

Chapter V

ATOMIC ENERGY

1. Uranium Exports.....	1206
2. International Atomic Energy Agency....	1293
3. EURATOM.....	1321
4. Combined Policy Committee.....	1346

INDEX.....	1365
------------	------

INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

Le volume 24 des Documents relatifs aux relations extérieures du Canada est le premier des deux consacrés à la période allant du 10 juin 1957 au 31 décembre 1958 qui a suivi l'élection du gouvernement progressiste-conservateur minoritaire de John G. Diefenbaker. Ce volume contient des documents qui expliquent en détail la participation du Canada aux affaires des Nations Unies, de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique Nord (OTAN) et du Commonwealth. Il contient également des chapitres sur l'Europe occidentale et l'énergie atomique. Le volume suivant documentera les relations du Canada avec les États-Unis, le Moyen-Orient, l'Union soviétique et l'Europe de l'Est, l'Extrême-Orient et l'Amérique latine.

La victoire électorale des conservateurs en 1957 garantissait que les affaires du Commonwealth seraient traitées de façon plus prioritaire que sous les gouvernements libéraux précédents. Comme le révèle l'abondante documentation du chapitre trois, cependant, ce changement n'a pas toujours conduit à des orientations productives. Le premier ministre Diefenbaker s'envola pour Londres pour assister à la rencontre des premiers ministres du Commonwealth, décidé à obtenir leur appui pour une conférence commerciale et économique du Commonwealth, la première depuis 1952. Ses homologues accueillirent la proposition avec tiédeur, mais John Diefenbaker rentra au Canada avec la promesse qu'ils examineraient favorablement une demande de réunion des ministres des Finances du Commonwealth au Canada. À son arrivée à l'Aéroport d'Uplands, le 6 juillet 1957, John Diefenbaker annonça son intention d'acheter à la Grande-Bretagne 15 p. 100 des marchandises normalement achetées aux États-Unis, idée qui sera ensuite au centre des efforts déployés pour organiser la rencontre des ministres des Finances.

De hauts fonctionnaires avisèrent rapidement John Diefenbaker de ce qu'une telle préférence marquée pour les marchandises britanniques aurait de « graves répercussions sur les exportations et sur la prospérité générale du Canada ». [Document 345] Cependant, les Britanniques prirent John Diefenbaker au mot et allèrent même plus loin en proposant un accord de libre-échange entre le Canada et la Grande-Bretagne, projet politique qui, s'il se réalisait, serait désavantageux pour le Canada. [Document 351] Le 9 septembre, le ministre de l'Agriculture britannique, Derick Heathcote Amory, rencontra John Diefenbaker et le ministre des Finances, Donald Fleming, à Ottawa, pour demander que les Canadiens se décident rapidement au sujet du projet de libre-échange, tactique que Wynne Plumtre, sous-ministre adjoint des Finances, décrivit comme « purement scandaleuse ». [Document 354] Les propos échangés lors de pourparlers bilatéraux détaillés entre des ministres du Cabinet et de hauts fonctionnaires [documents 353 et 360] s'ébruitèrent avant et après la réunion des ministres des Finances du Commonwealth Finance qui eut lieu à Mont-Tremblant (Québec), du 28 au 30 septembre 1957, mais aucun accord de fond ne fut trouvé sur des mesures qui auraient permis d'accroître sensiblement les échanges commerciaux anglo-canadiens.

Malgré cette initiation éprouvante à la scène politique du Commonwealth, le gouvernement Diefenbaker reçut l'approbation nécessaire à Mont-Tremblant pour organiser une Conférence économique et commerciale du Commonwealth à Montréal, en septembre 1958. Les hauts fonctionnaires avaient compris dès le départ qu'il y avait au sein du Commonwealth « une discordance entre le fond et la forme » [Document 364], mais des préparatifs minutieux furent entrepris pour garantir le succès de la conférence. À la veille de celle-ci, toutefois, des membres du Cabinet reconnaissaient être « assez pessimistes » à son propos [Document 370], et leurs craintes s'avérèrent

INTRODUCTION

Volume 24 in the Documents on Canadian External Relations series is the first of two covering the period from 10 June 1957 to 31 December 1958 following the election of John G. Diefenbaker's minority Progressive Conservative government. This volume contains documents detailing Canada's involvement in the affairs of the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), and the Commonwealth. It also contains chapters on Western Europe and atomic energy. The succeeding volume will document Canada's relations with the United States, the Middle East, the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, the Far East, and Latin America.

The Conservative election victory in 1957 guaranteed that Commonwealth affairs would be granted a higher priority than they had enjoyed under previous Liberal governments. As the extensive documentation in Chapter Three reveals, however, this shift in emphasis did not always lead in productive directions. Prime Minister Diefenbaker travelled to the London meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers determined to gather support for a Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference—the first since 1952. Although the response to this proposal was lukewarm, Diefenbaker returned to Canada with the promise that a request for a meeting of Commonwealth Finance Ministers in Canada in September would be considered favourably. Arriving at Uplands Airport on 6 July 1957, Diefenbaker announced his intention to divert fifteen percent of Canada's import purchases from the United States to Britain, a proposal that dominated the ensuing efforts to convene the Finance Ministers' meeting.

Senior bureaucrats quickly advised Diefenbaker that a marked shift in preference for British goods would have "severe repercussions on exports and on Canada's general prosperity" [Document 345]. British officials, however, took up Diefenbaker's offer and raised the ante by proposing a free trade agreement between Canada and Britain, a politically motivated scheme that, if implemented, would have been disadvantageous to Canada [Document 351]. The British Minister of Agriculture, Derick Heathcote Amory, met with Diefenbaker and Finance Minister Donald Fleming on 9 September in Ottawa to press for a quick Canadian decision on a free trade plan, a tactic Wynne Plumptre, the assistant deputy minister of finance, described as "absolutely outrageous" [Document 354]. Detailed bilateral discussions among Cabinet ministers and senior officials [Documents 353 and 360] did transpire prior to and following the meeting of Commonwealth Finance Ministers held at Mont Tremblant, Quebec, from 28-30 September 1957, but no substantive agreement could be reached concerning measures to significantly boost the level of Anglo-Canadian trade.

Despite this bruising initiation into the arena of Commonwealth politics, the Diefenbaker Government received the necessary approval at Mont Tremblant to host a Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference in Montreal in September 1958. Senior officials realized from the outset that the Commonwealth itself "involved a clash between form and substance" [Document 364], but they undertook extensive preparations attempting to ensure the conference's success. On the eve of the conference, however, Cabinet members admitted that its prospects were "somewhat depressing" [Document 370], an assessment that proved to be largely correct in terms of substantive economic benefits for Canada. Nonetheless, important measures were adopted during the conference, including an agreement in principle to construct a largement fondées quant aux avantages économiques en tant que tels pour le Canada. Cependant, des mesures importantes furent adoptées au cours de la conférence, y compris une entente de principe en vue d'installer un réseau de câble dans le Commonwealth et, point plus important encore, une décision visant le financement d'un système global de bourses d'études pour les étudiants du Commonwealth. [Documents 374-386]

Bien que la Conférence commerciale et économique se fût soldée par une déception, faute de réels progrès pour le Canada sur le plan économique, le lien avec le Commonwealth se révéla considérablement important dans d'autres domaines stratégiques. Les conservateurs de Diefenbaker restaient déterminés à ce que le Canada continue de contribuer avec une générosité exemplaire au Plan de Colombo. Le Canada continuait de financer des programmes d'investissement pour aider les pays bénéficiaires, mais les conservateurs choisirent également d'utiliser le Plan de Colombo pour se débarrasser d'une partie de l'excédent de blé considérable du Canada. [Documents 414-428] Le lien sentimental qui unissait de nombreux Canadiens au Commonwealth fut mis en évidence et renforcé par la longue série de visites officielles à l'étranger entreprise par le ministre Diefenbaker le 29 octobre 1958. Diefenbaker fit d'abord la tournée des capitales européennes, ce qui fut l'occasion de conversations importantes avec les dirigeants britanniques, français et allemands. Puis il se rendit dans des pays du Commonwealth en Extrême-Orient, pour rentrer au Canada à la mi-décembre, pleinement convaincu du succès retentissant de ces visites sur le plan publicitaire.

Malgré l'attention accrue prêtée aux questions relatives au Commonwealth, les représentants canadiens, comme le montre la documentation du chapitre premier, continuaient d'accorder une grande priorité aux dossiers des Nations Unies. De fait, l'initiative multilatérale la plus importante prise par le Canada au cours des dix-huit premiers mois du mandat de John Diefenbaker visait à obtenir la conclusion d'un accord codifiant le droit international de la mer, notamment en ce qui concernait la délimitation des eaux territoriales. Le gouvernement St-Laurent s'était d'abord déclaré favorable à une zone de douze milles marins, mais, sous les fortes pressions exercées par les États-Unis et la Grande-Bretagne, avait finalement adopté une politique appelant à opter pour des eaux territoriales allant jusqu'à trois milles au-delà des côtes, plus une zone contiguë de neuf milles dans laquelle l'État côtier exercerait un contrôle exclusif sur la pêche. En préparation à la première conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer, qui devait s'ouvrir à Genève le 24 février 1958, le nouveau gouvernement conservateur choisit d'accepter la formule des trois plus neuf comme position officielle du Canada pour ce qui était des eaux territoriales. [Documents 37, 40 et 43] Se fondant sur des consultations préalables à la conférence, qui eurent lieu à New York entre des représentants du Canada et leurs homologues britanniques et américains [Documents 39 et 42], la délégation canadienne s'attendait à une certaine coopération de la part de ses principaux alliés.

Cependant, cet espoir se révéla illusoire. Après que la position canadienne sur les eaux territoriales fut rendue publique à la conférence, le 17 mars 1958, le Royaume-Uni et les États-Unis abandonnèrent tous deux leurs positions rigides d'avant la conférence pour épouser la proposition de mer territoriale de trois milles sans zone de pêche contiguë. Le 2 avril, la délégation britannique déposa une résolution demandant que les eaux territoriales soient portées à six milles au-delà des côtes, sans zone de pêche contiguë. Peu après, la délégation américaine proposait que les eaux territoriales Commonwealth cable system, and, of greatest significance, a decision to fund a comprehensive system of scholarships for Commonwealth students [Documents 374-386].

Although the Trade and Economic Conference proved to be a disappointment in terms of securing a dramatic economic breakthrough benefiting Canada, the Commonwealth link nonetheless proved to be of considerable importance in other policy areas. Diefenbaker's Conservatives remained committed to maintaining Canada's exemplary record of contributing generously to the Colombo Plan. Although Canada continued to fund capital programs to assist recipient countries, the Conservatives also chose to use Colombo Plan channels to aggressively dispose of portions of Canada's considerable wheat surplus [Documents 414-428]. The sentimental link many Canadians enjoyed with the Commonwealth was emphasized and reinforced by Prime Minister Diefenbaker's extensive world tour beginning 29 October 1958. Diefenbaker first toured European capitals and conducted important conversations with British, French, and German leaders. He then proceeded to tour Commonwealth countries in the Far East, returning to Canada in mid-December fully convinced that the tour had been an outstanding publicity success.

Despite the increased attention paid to Commonwealth issues, Canadian officials, as the documentation in Chapter One indicates, continued to place a high priority on United Nations matters. Indeed, Canada's most important multilateral initiative in the first eighteen months of Diefenbaker's mandate centred on efforts to broker an agreement codifying the international law of the sea, particularly in the delineation of the breadth of the territorial sea. The St. Laurent government had originally supported a twelve-mile territorial sea, but had ultimately adopted a policy, under strong pressure from the United States and Great Britain, calling for a territorial sea of three miles with an additional nine-mile zone contiguous to the territorial sea in which a coastal state would have exclusive control of the fisheries. In preparation for the first United Nations conference on the law of the sea, to be held in Geneva beginning 24 February 1958, the new Conservative government chose to accept the three plus nine formula as the formal Canadian position on the territorial sea [Documents 37, 40, and 43]. Based on pre-conference consultations that had occurred in New York between Canadian officials and their British and American counterparts [Documents 39 and 42], the Canadian delegation in Geneva assumed that some measure of cooperation from their primary allies would be forthcoming.

This hope, however, proved illusory. After the Canadian position on the territorial sea was unveiled at the conference on 17 March 1958, both the United Kingdom and the United States abandoned their rigid pre-conference positions embracing a three-mile territorial sea with no contiguous fishing zone. On 2 April, the British delegation tabled a resolution calling for a territorial sea of six miles with no contiguous fishing zone. Shortly thereafter, the American delegation introduced a proposal calling for a territorial sea of six miles with a six-mile contiguous zone in which a coastal state would exercise exclusive control over fisheries after a phasing out period of at least five years had elapsed for countries exercising traditional fishing rights. In light of the fact that the Canadian position had "steadily deteriorated," the chairman of the Canadian delegation, George Drew, concluded that the Canadian proposal stood "no hope whatever" of being accepted [Document 61]. Eventually, Drew sought and received approval from Ottawa to table another proposal that called for a six-mile soient portées à six milles et que s'y ajoute une zone contiguë de six autres milles dans laquelle l'État côtier aurait le contrôle exclusif de la pêche après une période transitoire de cinq ans au moins pour les pays y exerçant des droits de pêche traditionnels. Voyant que la position canadienne « ne cessait de se détériorer », le président de la délégation du Canada, George Drew, conclut que la proposition du Canada n'avait « aucune chance » d'être retenue. [Document 61] Pour finir, il demanda et obtint l'autorisation d'Ottawa de déposer une autre proposition visant à porter les eaux territoriales à six milles au-delà des côtes, avec en plus une zone contiguë de pêche exclusive de six milles, ce qui revenait à copier la proposition américaine sans reconnaître les droits de pêche traditionnels.

Le 19 avril 1958, le comité de la conférence qui étudiait la question des eaux territoriales se prononça sur les nombreuses propositions qui lui avaient été présentées. Après quatorze votes, seul le deuxième paragraphe de la proposition canadienne, qui demandait une zone de pêche exclusive contiguë à la mer territoriale s'étendant au maximum à douze milles des côtes, fut approuvé par la majorité des membres. Peu troublée par le rejet de sa résolution par le comité, la délégation américaine réussit à représenter sa proposition en séance plénière de la conférence. Le 25 avril 1958, la proposition américaine et la portion de proposition canadienne adoptée au comité emportèrent la majorité des voix. Cependant, ni l'une ni l'autre n'obtinrent les deux tiers des voix nécessaires pour entrer dans le droit international. Dans son analyse rétrospective de la conférence, George Drew affirmait que les Américains et les Britanniques avaient menacé bon nombre de délégations de leur retirer leur aide économique si la position du Canada recueillait les deux tiers des voix en séance plénière. Il concédait, cependant, que le rejet de la résolution américaine, qui n'avait donc pas été intégrée dans le droit, constituait une « véritable victoire » dans la défense des intérêts halieutiques du Canada face à « l'impérialisme flagrant du dollar ». [Document 78] Il concluait également que la conférence avait été « un succès remarquable », puisque l'on y avait notamment « reconnu sans réserve » la nécessité d'une zone de pêche contiguë. Les États réunis s'étaient déclarés favorables à une nouvelle rencontre et, à sa XIII^e Session, l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies (AGNU) réussit à s'entendre sur une deuxième conférence, qui se tiendrait à Genève au printemps de 1960. [Documents 81-86] territorial sea and a six-mile contiguous exclusive fisheries zone, a proposal that mimicked the American plan without recognizing traditional fishing rights.

En plus du droit de la mer, deux questions qui avaient auparavant dominé l'ordre du jour de l'ONU occupent une place importante dans ce volume. Les efforts continus déployés pour créer un Fonds spécial des Nations Unies pour le développement économique (SUNFED) donnèrent enfin des résultats. [Documents 88 à 116] En juillet 1957, à la XXIV^e Session du Conseil économique et social, les pays en développement obtinrent l'appui des Pays-Bas et de la France dans l'adoption d'une résolution demandant la création du SUNFED. Comprenant qu'ils ne pouvaient plus retarder l'inévitable, les États-Unis formulèrent une version modifiée du SUNFED étroitement liée aux mécanismes de l'assistance technique onusienne. À la XII^e Session de l'AGNU, la délégation du Canada exerça une « influente modératrice importante » [Document 105] dans les efforts déployés pour rédiger la résolution qui serait adoptée en séance plénière le 14 décembre 1957 et qui portait création d'un fonds spécial en principe. Après qu'un comité préparatoire se fut réuni au printemps de 1958 pour définir les paramètres officiels du Fonds spécial, celui-ci fut officiellement établi en octobre 1958.

On 19 April 1958, the conference committee studying the territorial sea voted on the numerous proposals before it. After fourteen separate votes, only the second paragraph of the Canadian proposal calling for an exclusive fishing zone adjacent to the territorial sea extending out to a maximum distance of 12 miles from the coast secured a majority vote. Undaunted by the defeat of their resolution in Committee, the American delegation secured the reintroduction of their proposal into the plenary session of the conference. On 25 April 1958, both the American proposal and the portion of the Canadian proposal carried from the committee stage of the conference secured majority support. Both plans, however, failed to secure the necessary two-thirds support to be adopted as international law. In his post-mortem on the conference, Drew claimed that many delegations had been threatened by the Americans and the British with the withdrawal of economic aid if the Canadian position received two-thirds support in the plenary session. Drew reported, however, that the failure of the American resolution to be enshrined in law was a "real victory" in defence of Canadian fishing interests in the face of blatant "dollar imperialism" [Document 78]. He also concluded that the conference had been a "very outstanding achievement," with one of its most important outcomes being the "unqualified acceptance" of the need for a contiguous fishing zone. The conference had supported meeting again, and the thirteenth session of the United Nations General Assembly (UNGA) succeeded in scheduling a second conference to be held in Geneva in the spring of 1960 [Documents 81-86].

In addition to the law of the sea, two issues that had previously dominated the agenda of the United Nations are featured prominently in this volume. The perennial attempt to establish the Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development (SUNFED) finally yielded results [Documents 88 to 116]. In July 1957, at the twenty-fourth session of the Economic and Social Council, developing countries gained the support of the Netherlands and France in passing a resolution calling for the establishment of SUNFED. The United States realized that it could no longer postpone the inevitable, and it formulated a modified version of SUNFED that was closely linked with existing UN technical assistance machinery. At the twelfth session of the UNGA, the Canadian delegation exercised an "important moderating influence" [Document 105] in efforts to draft the resolution endorsed in plenary session on 14 December 1957 that established a Special Fund in principle. After a Preparatory Committee met in the spring of 1958 to set the official parameters of the Special Fund, it was formally established in October 1958.

While the creation of the Special Fund ended a decade of procedural wrangling between developed and developing nations, the question of disarmament remained unresolved [Documents 117-143]. The Sub-committee of the United Nations Disarmament Commission, meeting in London in the summer of 1957, failed to make any progress, despite the presentation of a comprehensive Western disarmament package [Document 117]. Charles Ritchie's account of the Sub-committee's deliberations [Document 123] cogently outlined the reasons for the unbridgeable chasm between East and West over the disarmament issue. At the twelfth session of the UNGA, efforts to secure propaganda victories followed their usual course, and the Soviet Union subsequently announced its intention to withdraw from participating further in UN-sponsored disarmament consultations [Document 134]. A poorly

La création du Fonds spécial mettait fin à une décennie de disputes procédurales entre les pays développés et pays en développement, mais la question du désarmement restait en suspens. [Documents 117-143] Le sous-comité de la Commission du désarmement des Nations Unies, réuni à Londres durant l'été 1957, ne marqua aucun progrès, malgré la présentation d'un plan de désarmement occidental détaillé. [Document 117] Dans son compte rendu des délibérations du sous-comité [Document 123], Charles Ritchie expose avec à-propos les raisons du clivage irrémédiable entre l'Est et l'Ouest au sujet du désarmement. À la XII^e Session de l'AGNU, les États s'efforcèrent de nouveau de remporter des victoires de propagande, après quoi l'Union soviétique annonça son intention de ne plus participer à des consultations onusiennes sur le désarmement. [Document 134] La piètre réaction occidentale à une plainte déposée par les Soviétiques auprès du Conseil de sécurité, en avril 1958, au sujet des vols du Commandement des forces aériennes stratégiques vers l'Union soviétique, amena Charles Ritchie à faire observer que le Conseil était « impuissant face aux risques réels qui pèsent sur la paix et la sécurité ». [Document 138]. À la XIII^e Session de l'AGNU, cette impuissance était manifeste, car aucune mesure constructive ne fut proposée pour relancer les négociations sur le désarmement sous l'égide des Nations Unies. Parallèlement, deux conférences indépendantes sur les attaques surprises et la suspension des essais nucléaires avaient lieu à Genève, et l'ONU en était tout simplement réduite à adopter des résolutions les appuyant.

Le chapitre deux du présent volume se penche sur la participation du Canada à l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique Nord. Deux sujets présentaient un intérêt immédiat pour les représentants canadiens. Premièrement, l'OTAN formulait alors un document d'orientation important, appelé MC 70, qui fixait le nombre de soldats que chaque pays devait aligner entre 1958 et 1963. [Documents 181-204] Le Canada joua un rôle décisif pour ce qui est de convaincre le Conseil de l'OTAN d'inscrire la mise en œuvre du document MC 70 dans l'Examen annuel de 1958. [Document 193] Cependant, Ottawa refusa d'engager les ressources financières nécessaires pour remplir ses obligations aux termes du document MC 70, y compris l'acquisition d'un deuxième porte-avions et le rééquipement de sa division aérienne en Europe avec des avions d'attaque. Le besoin de repli financier du Canada était également évident dans les crédits votés pour l'aide mutuelle aux pays de l'OTAN [Documents 237 à 242], qui tombèrent à 90 millions de dollars pour l'exercice 1959-1960, après avoir atteint 290 millions de dollars en 1953-1954.

La deuxième décision stratégique fondamentale qui retint l'attention des responsables canadiens en ce qui concerne l'OTAN visait la question épineuse des réserves stratégiques d'armes nucléaires en Europe. [Documents 205 à 236] Le volume 25 de la présente série proposera quantité de documents sur l'élaboration de la politique sur le rôle des armes nucléaires dans la défense continentale nord-américaine. Ottawa ne s'en intéressait pas moins à la proposition américaine de fournir des armes nucléaires à ses alliés de l'OTAN, étant donné, notamment, qu'il était possible que l'on demande à la brigade d'armée canadienne stationnée en Europe de se doter d'armes nucléaires tactiques. Après que les chefs de gouvernement de l'OTAN réunis à Paris, en décembre 1957, eurent approuvé la proposition américaine concernant les réserves stratégiques, les responsables canadiens surveillèrent de près l'évolution des négociations entre Washington et les capitales européennes sur l'incorporation d'armes nucléaires dans les arsenaux de l'Europe occidentale. La managed Western response to a Soviet complaint to the Security Council in April 1958 concerning Strategic Air Command flights toward the Soviet Union prompted Ritchie to note that the Council was “impotent in the face of real risks to peace and security” [Document 138]. At the thirteenth session of the UNGA, this impotence was manifestly evident, as no constructive measures were put forward to kick-start disarmament negotiations under the aegis of the UN. By this time, two independent conferences in Geneva dealing with surprise attack and nuclear test suspension were underway, and the UN was reduced to simply passing resolutions supporting these conferences.

Chapter Two of this volume examines Canada’s participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Two topics were of immediate interest to Canadian officials. First, NATO was involved in formulating a major policy document—known as MC-70—that set the minimum force requirements for each member country between 1958 and 1963 [Documents 181-204]. Canada played a decisive role in convincing the NATO Council to incorporate the implementation of MC-70 into the 1958 Annual Review process [Document 193]. Ottawa, however, refused to commit the financial resources necessary to fulfil its MC-70 obligations, including the acquisition of a second aircraft carrier and the re-equipping of its air division in Europe with strike aircraft. Canada’s need for fiscal retrenchment was also evident in its appropriations for mutual aid to NATO countries [Documents 237 to 242], which dropped to ninety million dollars for fiscal year 1959-1960, a substantial reduction from the figure of 290 million dollars in 1953-1954.

The second substantive policy decision capturing the attention of Canadian officials regarding NATO was the contentious issue of nuclear weapons stockpiles in Europe [Documents 205 to 236]. Volume 25 of this series will provide extensive documentation on the formation of policy concerning the role of nuclear weapons in North American continental defence. Ottawa nonetheless maintained an active interest in the American proposal to provide nuclear weapons to its NATO allies, especially in the light of the fact that Canada’s army brigade in Europe might be called upon to arm itself with tactical nuclear missiles. After the NATO Heads of Government meeting in Paris in December 1957 endorsed the American stockpile proposal, Canadian officials maintained a careful watch on the progress of negotiations between Washington and European capitals concerning the incorporation of nuclear weapons into the arsenals of Western Europe. The possibility of the Federal Republic of Germany acquiring nuclear weapons was of particular concern, and a frank exchange of views between Secretary of State for External Affairs Sidney Smith and his American counterpart, John Foster Dulles, occurred in the spring of 1958 [Documents 221 and 226]. Department of External Affairs officials remained unclear about the command and control of nuclear weapons stockpiles throughout this period. A colourful exchange of letters between General Charles Foulkes, the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff, and Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs Jules Léger in the summer of 1957 [Documents 206 and 207] revealed the “considerable difference of opinion” [Document 206] between civilian and military officials concerning the control of nuclear weapons. Foulkes believed that NATO military leaders had full authority to use nuclear weapons without seeking the assent of political leaders, while Léger categorically denied the supremacy of the military over their civilian counterparts. This debate took possibilité que la République fédérale d'Allemagne acquière des armes nucléaires l'inquiétait tout particulièrement, et un échange de vues franc entre le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures Sidney Smith et son homologue américain, John Foster Dulles, se produisit au printemps de 1958. [Documents 221 et 226] Les représentants du ministère des Affaires extérieures restèrent vagues sur le commandement et le contrôle des réserves stratégiques d'armes nucléaires pendant toute cette période. Un échange fort intéressant de lettres entre le général Charles Foulkes, président du Comité des chefs d'état-major, et le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures Jules Léger, pendant l'été 1957 [Documents 206 et 207], révéla la « divergence d'opinion profonde » [Document 206] entre les responsables civils et militaires au sujet du contrôle des armes nucléaires. Le général Foulkes estimait que les responsables militaires de l'OTAN avaient toute autorité pour utiliser l'arme nucléaire sans avoir à demander l'assentiment des dirigeants politiques, alors que Jules Léger refusait catégoriquement la suprématie de l'armée sur les pouvoirs civils. Ce débat prit un tout autre relief quand les accords négociés entre Washington et les pays membres de l'OTAN sur les réserves stratégiques d'armes nucléaires entrèrent en vigueur. À la fin de 1958, les hauts fonctionnaires canadiens étaient encore incapables de dire avec certitude à qui incombait en dernier ressort la responsabilité de déployer des armes nucléaires en cas de guerre. [Documents 228-236]

L'OTAN était également préoccupée par plusieurs autres questions importantes. La menace que les Soviétiques faisaient de nouveau planer sur le statut de Berlin, au risque de provoquer une nouvelle crise de Berlin, inquiétait fort la communauté internationale. La décision des États-Unis, de la Grande-Bretagne, de la France et de l'Allemagne d'organiser des pourparlers séparés pour trouver une réponse à l'initiative soviétique concernant Berlin déplaisait aux responsables canadiens. [Document 313] Le représentant permanent du Canada au Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord qualifia de « peu inspirés » et de « déprimants » les efforts que l'OTAN déploya ensuite pour rédiger des notes diplomatiques à l'intention de Moscou. [Document 320] Les événements qui se déroulaient en France absorbaient également l'attention des pays membres de l'OTAN. Le retour de Charles de Gaulle au pouvoir, en juin 1958, garantissait qu'il essaierait de faire admettre son point de vue sur la place et la position que la France devrait occuper au sein de l'Alliance. En septembre 1957, le général de Gaulle avait contacté le premier ministre britannique Harold Macmillan et le président américain Dwight Eisenhower afin de constituer un triumvirat au sein de l'OTAN, initiative que le premier ministre Diefenbaker rejeta en précisant qu'elle trahissait « le manque total de réalisme [du général de Gaulle] par rapport à la puissance de la France et à son influence dans les affaires de l'OTAN ». [Document 289] Cependant, les représentants canadiens se rendaient compte que le projet français reléguerait des pays membres de l'OTAN tels que le Canada au deuxième rang au sein de l'Alliance, et ils suivirent donc de près les entretiens diplomatiques entre les Français, les Américains et les Britanniques pendant les derniers mois de 1958.

Les faits et gestes des représentants de la France occupent une place importante dans deux sujets clés documentés au chapitre quatre du présent volume, qui porte sur la politique du Canada vis-à-vis de l'Europe occidentale. Ottawa continua de s'intéresser de près à la situation politique en France avant et après le retour de Charles de Gaulle au pouvoir, et les fonctionnaires canadiens étaient directement concernés par les politiques et les attitudes françaises par rapport à l'Algérie. Des représentants on added importance once agreements between Washington and NATO countries concerning the stockpiling of nuclear weapons became final. At the end of 1958, senior Canadian bureaucrats still remained uncertain about who was ultimately responsible for deploying nuclear weapons in the event of war [Documents 228-236].

NATO was also preoccupied with a number of other important issues. Of great international concern was the renewed Soviet threat to alter the political status of Berlin and instigate a second Berlin crisis. Canadian officials were displeased with the decision of the United States, Britain, France, and Germany to hold separate talks to formulate a response to the Soviet initiative concerning Berlin [Document 313]. The subsequent NATO effort to draft diplomatic notes to be sent to Moscow was described by the Canadian permanent representative to the North Atlantic Council as “uninspiring and depressing” [Document 320]. Events in France further absorbed the attention of NATO members. Charles de Gaulle’s return to power in June 1958 guaranteed that he would attempt to force his views on the proper place and position of France within the alliance. In September 1957, de Gaulle contacted British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan and American President Dwight Eisenhower seeking to establish a triumvirate within NATO, an initiative Prime Minister Diefenbaker dismissed as one that betrayed de Gaulle’s “totally unrealistic assessment of France’s power and influence in NATO affairs” [Document 289]. Nevertheless, Canadian officials realized that the French proposal would relegate NATO members such as Canada to second-class status within the alliance, and they carefully watched diplomatic discussions among French, American, and British officials that occurred during the final months of 1958.

The actions of French officials figured prominently in two important topics documented in Chapter Four of this volume, which deals with Canada’s policy toward Western Europe. Ottawa maintained a keen interest in the domestic political situation in France before and after de Gaulle assumed power, and Canadian bureaucrats were directly affected by French policies and attitudes concerning Algeria. External Affairs officials incurred the wrath of Paris when they considered receiving a mission from various African nations to discuss the Algerian question. After the mission was abruptly cancelled in the face of French pressure, a departmental memorandum identified “lingering colonialism” [Document 505] as marking the French relationship with Canada. Perhaps more sensitive to potential criticism in the aftermath of this incident, Canada actively lobbied Commonwealth members to withhold recognition from the provisional government of Algeria formed by the Front de libération nationale (FLN), an initiative that was greatly appreciated by Paris [Document 516]. France also dominated the complex negotiations spearheaded by the United Kingdom to form a European Free Trade Area, a trade bloc that could have had a significant negative impact on Canadian trade with Europe. Throughout 1958, an inter-governmental committee headed by Reginald Maudling attempted to win the six members of the European Economic Community over to the idea of a wider continental free trade association. France, however, remained intransigent, and came precariously close to “wrecking the Common Market itself” [Document 491].

The final chapter in this volume provides a comprehensive examination of Canada’s atomic energy policy. The application of controls and safeguards to uranium exports was one of the key policy issues facing Canadian officials from a number of government departments. Bilateral agreements with West Germany and Switzerland des Affaires extérieures s'attirèrent les foudres de Paris en envisageant de recevoir une mission composée de divers pays africains afin d'examiner la question algérienne. Après la brusque annulation de cette mission sous les pressions françaises, un mémoire ministériel parlait de « colonialisme persistant » [Document 505] pour qualifier les relations de la France avec le Canada. Sans doute plus sensible à des critiques éventuelles après cet incident, le Canada exerça des pressions sur les pays membres du Commonwealth pour qu'ils ne reconnaissent pas le gouvernement provisoire algérien formé par le Front de libération nationale (FLN), initiative qu'apprécia beaucoup Paris. [Document 516] La France dominait également les négociations complexes menées par le Royaume-Uni en vue de former une zone européenne de libre-échange, bloc commercial qui aurait pu être lourd de conséquences pour le commerce canado-européen. Tout au long de 1958, un comité intergouvernemental dirigé par Reginald Maudling chercha à gagner les six membres de la Communauté économique européenne à l'idée d'une association de libre-échange continental plus vaste. Cependant, la France resta intransigeante et faillit bien « saboter le Marché commun lui-même ». [Document 491]

Le dernier chapitre du présent volume propose un examen détaillé de la politique du Canada en matière d'énergie atomique. L'application de contrôles et de garanties aux exportations d'uranium était une des principales questions stratégiques auxquelles les responsables de plusieurs ministères fédéraux canadiens étaient confrontés. L'Allemagne de l'Ouest et la Suisse négocièrent très facilement des accords, et le Canada travailla en étroite collaboration avec les États-Unis et le Royaume-Uni afin d'adopter une politique globale en matière de contrôles internationaux. Ces contrôles s'imposaient manifestement au vu des actions de pays producteurs d'uranium tels que l'Afrique du Sud, qui se montraient prêts à exporter ce produit sans appliquer de mesures de contrôle. L'attachement du Canada à la supervision internationale de l'énergie atomique était également évident dans son approche de l'Agence internationale de l'énergie atomique (AIEA). Bien que Max Wershof, représentant du Canada auprès de l'AIEA, se déclarât pessimiste quant aux capacités administratives de l'AIEA [Document 572], le Canada s'attacha à la soutenir sans relâche, par des contributions financières et par le don d'uranium métal que l'Agence revendrait au Japon. [Documents 583 et 585]

Pendant les trois premiers mois du mandat conservateur, John Diefenbaker s'occupa du portefeuille des Affaires extérieures, en plus de ses fonctions de premier ministre. Tout au long de son mandat, il s'intéressa de près aux affaires internationales et insista pour traiter personnellement les questions de politique étrangère délicates, écartant souvent ce faisant les représentants des Affaires extérieures. John Diefenbaker considérait avec une certaine méfiance les « Pearsonalités » du Ministère, à cause de leur allégeance apparente à leur ancien maître politique. En août 1957, Robert Bryce, greffier du Conseil privé, fit donc en sorte que H. Basil Robinson soit chargé d'assurer à plein temps la liaison entre le Cabinet du premier ministre et le Ministère, responsabilité dont H. Basil Robinson s'acquitta remarquablement. En septembre 1957, John Diefenbaker nomma Sidney Smith, recteur de l'Université de Toronto, au poste de secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures. Administrateur et universitaire capable, Sidney Smith ne réussit pas à se distinguer dans ses nouvelles fonctions avant son décès soudain, en mars 1959. La documentation réunie dans le présent volume démontre amplement qu'il opta souvent pour la passivité dans son portefeuille, se were negotiated with considerable ease, and Canada worked closely with the United States and the United Kingdom to adopt a comprehensive policy of international controls. These controls were manifestly necessary in the light of the actions of uranium producing countries such as South Africa, which displayed a willingness to export uranium without the application of control provisions. Canada's commitment to the international supervision of atomic energy was also evident in its approach to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Although Max Wershof, the Canadian representative to the IAEA, expressed a pessimistic view of the administrative capabilities of the Agency [Document 572], Canada nonetheless remained firmly dedicated to supporting the IAEA through direct financial contributions and the donation of uranium metal to the Agency for resale to Japan [Documents 583 and 585].

For the first three months of the Conservative mandate, John Diefenbaker held the portfolio of External Affairs in addition to his duties as prime minister. Throughout his term in office, Diefenbaker maintained a keen interest in international affairs and insisted on personally handling critical foreign policy issues, often excluding External Affairs officials in the process. Diefenbaker viewed the department's "Personalities" with a certain degree of suspicion owing to their perceived allegiance to their former political master. As a result, Robert Bryce, the Clerk of the Privy Council, arranged in August 1957 to have H. Basil Robinson appointed as a full-time liaison between the Prime Minister's Office and the department, a responsibility that Robinson handled with distinction. In September 1957, Diefenbaker handpicked Sidney Smith, President of the University of Toronto, to fill the position of secretary of state for external affairs. An able academic administrator, Smith failed to carve out an independent niche for himself prior to his sudden death in March of 1959. The documentation in this volume provides ample evidence that Smith often adopted a passive stance toward his portfolio, content to let his departmental officials shape his views on many key issues. Smith was also overshadowed by other ministers with more clout at the Cabinet table such as Donald Fleming and Gordon Churchill, who played an active and prominent role in determining Canada's position on key international issues.

Both Diefenbaker and Smith were able to draw on the advice of a veteran group of senior External Affairs officials during the first eighteen months of the Conservative administration. Jules Léger served as Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs before Norman Robertson replaced him in October 1958. R.M. Macdonnell assisted Léger and Robertson as Deputy Under-Secretary from September 1958 (this position had been vacant from May 1957). The Department depended on the services of four Assistant Under-Secretaries during the period covered by this volume: John Holmes, Douglas LePan, W.D. Matthews, and Marcel Cadieux. Cadieux also served as the Department's Legal Adviser.

No major changes in representation occurred at Canada's major posts abroad until the autumn of 1958. Norman Robertson served as Ambassador in Washington until 10 October 1958 before he returned to Ottawa to assume his duties as under-secretary. A.D.P. Heeney replaced Robertson in Washington. In June 1957, Diefenbaker appointed George Drew as High Commissioner to the United Kingdom. Jean Désy served as Ambassador to France until July 1958 before being replaced by Pierre Dupuy. Prior to his retirement in July 1958, Dana Wilgress served as Permanent Representative to the North Atlantic Council and Representative to the Organization contentant de laisser les fonctionnaires de son ministère dicter ses opinions sur de nombreuses questions clés. Il était aussi éclipsé par d'autres ministres plus influents au sein du Cabinet, comme Donald Fleming et Gordon Churchill, qui jouaient un rôle déterminant dans la définition de la position du Canada sur les grandes questions internationales.

Pendant les 18 premiers mois du gouvernement conservateur, John Diefenbaker et Sidney Smith purent tous deux profiter des conseils d'un groupe de vétérans des Affaires extérieures. Jules Léger servit comme sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures avant que Norman Robertson le remplace en octobre 1958. R.M. Macdonnell les assista tous les deux en qualité de sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint à partir de septembre 1958 (ce poste était vacant depuis mai 1957). Pendant la période couverte dans le présent volume, le Ministère compta quatre sous-secrétaires adjoints; à savoir : John Holmes, Douglas LePan, W.D. Matthews et Marcel Cadieux. Marcel Cadieux fut également juriste du Ministère.

Aucun changement majeur d'ambassadeur n'intervint dans les principales missions du Canada à l'étranger jusqu'à l'automne 1958. Norman Robertson représenta le Canada à Washington jusqu'au 10 octobre 1958, date à laquelle il regagna Ottawa pour prendre ses fonctions de sous-secrétaire. A.D.P. Heeney le remplaça dans la capitale américaine. En juin 1957, John Diefenbaker nomma George Drew haut-commissaire du Canada au Royaume-Uni. Jean Désy fut ambassadeur en France jusqu'en juillet 1958, après quoi il fut remplacé par Pierre Dupuy. Avant de prendre sa retraite en juillet 1958, Dana Wilgress fut représentant permanent du Canada auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et représentant auprès de l'Organisation européenne de coopération économique. Jules Léger le remplaça à ces postes en septembre 1958.

Les documents présentés dans le présent volume ont été choisis principalement dans les archives du ministère des Affaires extérieures et du Bureau du Conseil privé. D'autres documents ont été choisis dans les dossiers du ministère des Finances et du ministère du Commerce, ainsi que dans les papiers personnels de ministres du Cabinet et de hauts fonctionnaires. J'ai bénéficié, pour préparer le présent volume, d'un accès illimité aux dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures et d'un accès généreux à d'autres collections. Une liste complète des archives consultées figure à la page xxvii.

Le choix des documents du volume 24 est guidé par les principes généraux énoncés dans l'introduction au volume 7 (pp. ix-xi), dans leur version modifiée dans l'introduction au volume 20 (p. xxiii). En bref, la série vise à présenter un « compte rendu indépendant des principales décisions de politique étrangère prises par le gouvernement du Canada », en se concentrant sur les relations bilatérales et multilatérales les plus importantes de celui-ci et sur les grands dossiers internationaux qui ont amené des membres du Cabinet et de hauts fonctionnaires à participer à la politique de fond.

Les signes typographiques employés dans le présent volume sont les mêmes que ceux décrits dans l'introduction au volume 9 (p. xix). Une croix (†) indique un document canadien qui n'est pas imprimé. Les suppressions rédactionnelles sont signalées par une ellipse (...). L'expression « groupe corrompu » signale des problèmes de décryptage dans la transmission du télégramme original. Les mots et passages qui ont été barrés par l'auteur, les notes marginales et les listes de distribution sont reproduits sous formes de notes de bas de page uniquement quand ils sont importants. Sauf indication contraire, il est entendu que les documents ont été lus for European Economic Cooperation. Jules Léger replaced him in these positions in September 1958.

Documents in this volume were selected primarily from the records of the Department of External Affairs and the Privy Council Office. Additional documents were chosen from the files of the Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce, and from the private papers of Cabinet ministers and senior government officials. In preparing this volume, I was given unrestricted access to the files of the Department of External Affairs and generous access to other collections. A complete list of the archival sources consulted to prepare this volume is found on page xxvii.

The selection of documents in Volume 24 is guided by the general principles outlined in the Introduction to Volume 7 (pp. ix-xi), as amended in the Introduction to Volume 20 (p. xxiii). In short, the series attempts to provide a “self-contained record of the major foreign policy decisions taken by the Government of Canada,” by concentrating on Canada’s most important bilateral and multilateral relationships and on the major international issues that directly involved Cabinet members and senior bureaucrats in substantive policy decisions.

The editorial apparatus employed in this volume remains identical to that described in the Introduction to Volume 9 (p. xix). A dagger (†) indicates a Canadian document that is not printed. Editorial excisions are shown by an ellipse (...). The phrase “group corrupt” indicates decryption problems in the transmission of the original telegram. Words and passages that were struck out by the author, marginal notes, and distribution lists are reproduced as footnotes only when important. Unless otherwise indicated, it is assumed that documents have been read by the intended recipient. Proper and place names are standardized. The editor has silently corrected spelling, capitalization, and punctuation, as well as transcription errors whose meaning is clear from their context. All other editorial additions to the documents are indicated by the use of square brackets. Documents are reprinted in either English or French, depending on their original language.

Many individuals collaborated in the preparation of this volume. The Historical Section continues to rely on the staff of the National Archives of Canada for help in locating relevant records. Paulette Dozois and Maureen Hoogenraad responded quickly to requests for help, and Loretta Barber allowed me to see certain files from the Donald Fleming papers. At the Privy Council Office, Ciuneas Boyle, the director of the Access to Information and Privacy Division, and Herb Barrett facilitated access to classified Cabinet records for the period and declassified several documents that are printed in this volume. At the Diefenbaker Canada Centre, Bruce Shepard, the Director, Johnson Kong, and Rob Paul provided invaluable assistance during my stay in Saskatoon and responded quickly to many subsequent requests for information. Basil Robinson steered me toward important documentation contained in his personal papers. Finally, Father Jacques Monet, s.j., graciously granted permission for me to view the papers of Jules Léger.

Ted Kelly helped research portions of this volume and supervised the production process with great efficiency. Boris Stipernitz, Liz Turcotte, and Michael Carroll provided invaluable assistance in researching extensive sections of this volume. Christopher Cook conducted archival research and proofread the manuscript. Hector Mackenzie and Mary Halloran provided advice and moral support during the editing par le destinataire prévu. Les noms propres et noms de lieu sont normalisés. Le rédacteur a corrigé discrètement les fautes d'orthographe, de majuscule et de ponctuation, ainsi que les erreurs de transcription dont le sens est clair d'après le contexte. Tous les autres ajouts rédactionnels aux documents sont indiqués par l'utilisation de crochets. Les documents sont reproduits en anglais ou en français, selon leur langue originale.

Beaucoup de personnes ont collaboré à la préparation du présent volume. La Section des affaires historiques continue de s'en remettre au personnel des Archives nationales du Canada pour localiser les archives recherchées. Paulette Dozois et Maureen Hoogenraad ont répondu rapidement aux demandes d'aide, et Loretta Barber m'a autorisé à consulter certains dossiers dans les papiers de Donald Fleming. Au Bureau du Conseil privé, Ciuneas Boyle, directeur de la Direction de l'accès à l'information et de la protection des renseignements personnels, et Herb Barrett ont facilité l'accès à des archives classifiées du Cabinet de l'époque et ont déclassifié plusieurs documents reproduits dans le présent volume. Au Centre Diefenbaker Canada, Bruce Shepard, le directeur, Johnson Kong et Rob Paul m'ont été d'une précieuse assistance pendant mon séjour à Saskatoon et ils ont répondu rapidement aux nombreuses demandes de renseignements que je leur ai ensuite adressées. Basil Robinson m'a dirigé vers une documentation importante faisant partie de ses papiers personnels. Enfin, le père Jacques Monet, s.j., m'a gentiment permis d'examiner les papiers de Jules Léger.

Ted Kelly a aidé à la recherche pour certaines parties du présent volume et supervisé le processus de production avec beaucoup d'efficacité. Boris Stipernitz, Liz Turcotte et Michael Carroll ont prêté un précieux concours dans la recherche nécessaire à de grands passages du présent volume. Christopher Cook a effectué des recherches dans les archives et corrigé le manuscrit. Hector Mackenzie et Mary Halloran ont dispensé des conseils et apporté un soutien moral pendant la mise en forme. Greg Donaghy m'a patiemment appris les subtilités de l'édition de documents, et son soutien tout au long de mes efforts est grandement apprécié. John Hilliker, éditeur général de cette série, a examiné soigneusement tout le manuscrit et a suggéré des idées constructives et détaillées pour l'améliorer. La série elle-même ne serait pas possible sans le soutien de l'ancien directeur de la Direction des programmes de communications et de sensibilisation, Gaston Barban, et de son successeur, Roger Bélanger, directeur de la Direction des programmes de sensibilisation et des communications électroniques. Je reste entièrement responsable de la sélection finale des documents présentés dans ce volume.

La Section des affaires historiques a fourni le texte supplémentaire et coordonné la préparation technique du présent document. Aline Gélinau a tapé et composé le manuscrit. Gail Kirkpatrick Devlin a corrigé le manuscrit et dressé la liste des personnes. Le Bureau de la traduction a fourni le français pour l'essentiel des légendes et des textes secondaires, qui ont été soigneusement revus par Francine Fournier de la Direction des services de communications.

Enfin, mon épouse, Robbie, a supporté patiemment une autre période de séparation prolongée pendant que je terminais le présent volume. Je la remercie de son soutien continu.

MICHAEL STEVENSON

process. Greg Donaghy patiently instructed me in the finer points of documentary editing, and his unflagging support of my academic efforts is greatly appreciated. John Hilliker, the general editor of this series, carefully scrutinized the manuscript in its entirety and offered constructive and detailed suggestions for improvement. The series would not be possible without the support of the former director of the Communications Programs and Outreach Division, Gaston Barban, and his successor, Roger Bélanger, director of the Outreach Programs and E-Communications Division. I remain solely responsible for the final selection of documents in this volume.

The Historical Section provided the supplementary text and coordinated the technical preparation of this volume. Aline Gélinau typed and formatted the manuscript. Gail Kirkpatrick Devlin proofread the manuscript and composed the List of Persons. The Translation Bureau supplied the French for most of the captions and ancillary texts. These were carefully edited by Francine Fournier of the Communications Services Division.

Finally, my wife, Robbie, patiently endured another extended period of separation while I completed this volume. I thank her for her continued support.

MICHAEL STEVENSON

PROVENANCE DES DOCUMENTS¹ LOCATION OF DOCUMENTS¹

Dossiers de l'ambassade du Canada à Washington, Archives nationales (RG 25 B2)	C.E.W.	Canadian Embassy, Washington, Files, National Archives (RG 25 B2)
Dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures, Archives nationales (RG 25)	DEA	Department of External Affairs Files, National Archives (RG 25)
Dossiers du ministère des Finances, Archives nationales (RG 19)	DF	Department of Finance Files, National Archives (RG 19)
Documents de Donald Fleming Archives nationales (MG 32 B9)	D.M.F.	Donald Fleming Papers National Archives, (MG 32 B9)
Dossiers du ministère du Commerce, Archives nationales (RG 20)	DTC	Department of Trade and Commerce Files, National Archives (RG 20)
Documents de Gordon Churchill Archives nationales (MG 32 B9)	G.C.	Gordon Churchill Papers National Archives, (MG 32 B9)
Documents de John Diefenbaker Centre Diefenbaker (le numéro du dossier suit le numéro de la série)	J.G.D/ Series #.	John Diefenbaker Papers Diefenbaker Centre (the file Number follows the series number)
Bureau du conseil privé— conclusions du cabinet et documents du Cabinet Archives nationales (RG 2)	PCO	Privy Council Office— Cabinet Conclusions and Cabinet Documents National Archives (RG 2)
Autres documents des archives du BCP Archives nationales (RG 2)	PCO/Vol. #	Other documents from PCO records National Archives (RG 2)

¹ Ceci est une liste des symboles utilisés pour indiquer la provenance des documents. Les cotes des collections déposées aux Archives nationales du Canada sont entre parenthèses.

This is a list of the symbols used to indicate the location of documents. The call numbers of collections deposited at the National Archives of Canada are in parentheses.

LISTE DES ABBRÉVIATIONS LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

ABC	AIR BRIDGE TO CANADA
ACE	ALLIED COMMAND EUROPE
AEC	ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION (US)
AECB	ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD
AECL	ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED
AR(Q)	ANNUAL REVIEW (QUESTIONNAIRE) (NATO)
ASW	ANTISUBMARINE WARFARE
AVRO	A.V. ROE & CO. LTD.
AWX	ALL WEATHER AIRCRAFT INTERCEPTOR
BOAC	BRITISH OVERSEAS AIRWAYS CORPORATION
BOMARC	BOEING-MICHIGAN AERONAUTICAL CENTRE
BWI	BRITISH WEST INDIES
BWIA	BRITISH WEST INDIES AIRWAYS
CANDU	CANADIAN DEUTERIUM URANIUM
CBC	CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION
CCOS	CHAIRMAN, CHIEFS OF STAFF
CCTA	COMMISSION FOR TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION IN AFRICA SOUTH OF THE SAHARA
CDA	COMBINED DEVELOPMENT AGENCY
CDC	CABINET DEFENCE COMMITTEE
CDFC	COMMONWEALTH DEVELOPMENT FINANCE COMPANY
CDU	Christlich-Demokratische Union [Christian Democratic Union] (Federal Republic of Germany)
CEA	CENTRAL ELECTRICITY AUTHORITY (UK)
CICT	COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY TRADE
CINCENT	COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, ALLIED FORCES, CENTRAL EUROPE
CINCHAN	COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF CHANNEL AND SOUTHERN NORTH SEA
CIR	CANADA-INDIA REACTOR
CJS	CANADIAN JOINT STAFF
CMMA	CANADIAN METAL MINING ASSOCIATION
CNI	CENTRE NATIONAL DES INDÉPENDANTS ET DES PAYSANS (NATIONAL CENTRE OF INDEPENDENTS AND PEASANTS)
CNR	CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS
CNS	CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS
CN(WI)S	CANADIAN NATIONAL (WEST INDIES) STEAMSHIPS
COCOM	COORDINATING COMMITTEE ON EXPORT CONTROLS
CPA	CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES
CRO	COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS OFFICE (UK)
DDE	ESCORT DESTROYER
DDP	DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION
DDR	Deutsche Demokratische Republik (German Democratic Republic)
DEA	DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
DEC	DOLLAR EXPORTS COUNCIL
DG	DIRECTOR GENERAL
DM	Deutsche Mark
DSTB	DOLLAR STERLING TRADE BOARD
DSTC	DOLLAR STERLING TRADE COUNCIL
DOT	DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT
ECAFE	ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR ASIA AND THE FAR EAST (UN)
ECOSOC	ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF UNITED NATIONS
ECSC	EUROPEAN COAL AND STEEL COMMUNITY
EDC	EUROPEAN DEFENCE COMMUNITY
EEC	EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY
EFTA	EUROPEAN FREE TRADE AREA
ENEA	ENTE NAZIONALE PER L'ENERGIA ATOMICA (ITALY)
EOKA	ETHNIKI ORGANOSIS KYPRION AGONISTON (NATIONAL ORGANIZATION OF CYPRIOT FIGHTERS)
EPU	EUROPEAN PAYMENTS UNION

ETAP	EXPANDED TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM (UN)
EURATOM	EUROPEAN ATOMIC ENERGY COMMUNITY
FAMA	FOUNDATION FOR MUTUAL ASSISTANCE IN AFRICA SOUTH OF THE SAHARA (FONDATION POUR L'ASSISTANCE MUTUELLE EN AFRIQUE AU SUD DU SAHARA)
FAO	FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION
FLN	FRONT DE LIBÉRATION NATIONALE (NATIONAL LIBERATION FRONT)
FO	FOREIGN OFFICE (UK)
FRUS	Foreign Relations of the United States
FTA	FREE TRADE AREA
F.O.D.	FREE OF DAMAGE
GATT	GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE
GDR	GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC
GMT	GREENWICH MEAN TIME
GNP	GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT
HQ	HEADQUARTERS
IAEA	INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY
IAEC	INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY COMMITTEE
IBRD	INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT
ICA	INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION
ICAO	INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION
ICBM	INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILE
ICCICA	INTERIM CO-ORDINATING COMMITTEE FOR INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY ARRANGEMENTS
ICEM	INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE FOR EUROPEAN MIGRATION
ICRP	INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON RADIOLOGICAL PROTECTION
ICSC	INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION FOR SUPERVISION AND CONTROL
IDF	INTERCEPTOR DAY FIGHTER
IFC	INTERNATIONAL FINANCE CORPORATION (UN)
ILC	INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION
ILO	INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION
IMF	INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND
INTEL	INTELLIGENCE
IRBM	INTERMEDIATE-RANGE BALLISTIC MISSILE
IRO	INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION
ISA	INTERNATIONAL SUGAR AGREEMENT
JIB	JOINT INTELLIGENCE BUREAU
MAAG	MILITARY ASSISTANCE ADVISORY GROUP (US)
MFN	MOST FAVOURED NATION
M.P.	MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT
MRP	MOUVEMENT RÉPUBLICAIN POPULAIRE (POPULAR REPUBLICAN MOVEMENT)
NAC	NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL
NATO	NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION
NCCU	NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES
NMA	NATO MILITARY AUTHORITIES
NORAD	NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE
NPD	NUCLEAR POWER DEMONSTRATION
NPP	NUCLEAR POWER PLANT
NRX	NATIONAL RESEARCH EXPERIMENTAL
NZ	NEW ZEALAND
OAS	ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES
OEEC	ORGANIZATION FOR EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COOPERATION
OGL	OPEN GENERAL LICENCE
OTC	ORGANIZATION FOR TRADE COOPERATION (GATT)
PC(O)	PRIVY COUNCIL (OFFICE)
PIDC	PAKISTAN INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION
RAF	ROYAL AIR FORCE (UK)
RCAF	ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE
RCN	ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

RPF	RASSEMBLEMENT DU PEUPLE FRANÇAIS (RALLY OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE)
SAC	STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND (US)
SACEUR	SUPREME ALLIED COMMANDER, EUROPE (NATO)
SACLANT	SUPREME ALLIED COMMANDER, ATLANTIC (NATO)
SAGE	SEMI-AUTOMATIC GROUND ENVIRONMENT
SEATO	SOUTHEAST ASIA TREATY ORGANIZATION
SFIO	SECTION FRANÇAISE DE L'INTERNATIONALE OUVRIÈRE
SHAPE	SUPREME HEADQUARTERS, ALLIED POWERS, EUROPE (NATO)
SITC	STANDARD INTERNATIONAL TRADE CLASSIFICATION
SPD	SOZIALDEMOKRATISCHE PARTEI DEUTSCHLANDS [SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF GERMANY] (FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY)
SPP	SPECIAL PROJECTS PROGRAMME
SPUR	SPECIAL PROGRAMME FOR UNDER-DEVELOPED REGIONS
SUNFED	SPECIAL UNITED NATIONS FUND FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT (FONDS SPÉCIAL DES NATIONS UNIES POUR LE DÉVELOPPEMENT ÉCONOMIQUE)
TAB	TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE BOARD
TAC	TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE COMMITTEE (UN)
TAF	TACTICAL AIR FORCE
TCA	TRANS-CANADA AIRLINES
TCC	TEMPORARY COUNCIL COMMITTEE (NATO)
TLP	TRADE LIBERALIZATION PLAN
UAR	UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC
UCWI	UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF THE WEST INDIES
UDSR	UNION DÉMOCRATIQUE ET SOCIALISTE DE LA RÉSISTANCE (DEMOCRATIC AND SOCIALIST UNION OF THE RESISTANCE)
UDSR-RGR	UNION DÉMOCRATIQUE ET SOCIALISTE DE LA RÉSISTANCE-RASSEMBLEMENT DES GAUCHES RÉPUBLICAINES (DEMOCRATIC AND SOCIALIST UNION OF THE RESISTANCE-ASSEMBLY OF THE REPUBLICAN LEFT)
UK	UNITED KINGDOM
UKAEA	UNITED KINGDOM ATOMIC ENERGY AUTHORITY
UN	UNITED NATIONS
UNCURK	UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR UNIFICATION AND REHABILITATION OF KOREA
UNEF	UNITED NATIONS EMERGENCY FORCE
UNESCO	UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION
UNGA	UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY
UNICEF	UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND
UNHCR	UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES
UNREF	UNITED NATIONS REFUGEE FUND
UNRRA	UNITED NATIONS REFUGEE AND RELIEF AGENCY
UNRWA	UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST
UNTAA	UNITED NATIONS TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION
UPA	URANIUM PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION
USA	UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
USAEC	UNITED STATES ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION
USAF	UNITED STATES AIR FORCE
USSEA	UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
USSR	UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS
WEU	WESTERN EUROPEAN UNION
WFUNA	WORLD FEDERATION OF UNITED NATIONS ASSOCIATIONS
WHO	WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION
WOGL	WORLD OPEN GENERAL LICENCE

LISTE DES PERSONNALITÉS¹ LIST OF PERSONS¹

- | | |
|---|--|
| ABDOH, Djalal, représentant permanent de l'Iran auprès des Nations Unies. | ABDOH, Djalal, Permanent Representative of Iran to United Nations. |
| ADAMS, sir Grantley, premier ministre de la Fédération des Antilles. | ADAMS, Sir Grantley, Prime Minister of Federation of West Indies. |
| ADEANE, sir Michael, secrétaire particulier de la Reine et Garde des archives de Sa Majesté. | ADEANE, Sir Michael, Private Secretary to the Queen and Keeper of Her Majesty's Archives. |
| ADENAUER, Konrad, chancelier de la République fédérale d'Allemagne. | ADENAUER, Konrad, Chancellor of Federal Republic of Germany. |
| ALI, Mohammed, ambassadeur du Pakistan aux États-Unis. | ALI, Mohammed, Ambassador of Pakistan in United States. |
| AMJAD, Ali Syed, ministre des Finances du Pakistan. | AMJAD, Ali Syed, Minister of Finance of Pakistan. |
| ALPHAND, Hervé, ambassadeur de la France aux États-Unis. | ALPHAND, Hervé, Ambassador of France in United States. |
| ANDERSEN, Hans, représentant permanent de l'Islande, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord. | ANDERSEN, Hans, Permanent Representative of Iceland to North Atlantic Council. |
| AVEROFF, Evangelos, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la Grèce. | AVEROFF, Evangelos, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Greece. |
| BAILEY, professeur Kenneth H., solliciteur général de l'Australie; chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer et président du premier comité. | BAILEY, Professor Kenneth H., Solicitor-General of Australia; Chairman, Delegation to Conference on the Law of the Sea and Chairman, First Committee. |
| BAKER, Vincent, Bureau des Affaires politiques et de sécurité, département d'État des États-Unis; adjoint spécial au secrétaire d'État des États-Unis sur les questions atomiques (août 1958-). | BAKER, Vincent, Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Department of State of United States; Special Assistant to Secretary of State for Atomic Energy Affairs (Aug. 1958-). |
| BALDWIN, J.R., sous-ministre du Transport. | BALDWIN, J.R., Deputy Minister of Transport. |
| BANDARANAIKE, Solomon, premier ministre du Ceylan. | BANDARANAIKE, Solomon, Prime Minister of Ceylon. |
| BARKER, James, Direction du protocole. | BARKER, James, Protocol Division. |
| BARTLETT, D.W., Chief, Technical Co-operation Services, ministère du Commerce. | BARTLETT, D.W., Chief, Technical Co-operation Services, Department of Trade and Commerce. |
| BARTON, W.H., conseiller, légation en Autriche. | BARTON, W.H., Counsellor, Legation in Austria. |
| BASDEVANT, Jules, directeur général, Bureau des Affaires de Tunisie et du Maroc, ministère des Affaires étrangères de la France. | BASDEVANT, Jules, Director General, Moroccan and Tunisian Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France. |
| BAUDISSIN, Wolf von, ministère de la Défense de la République fédérale d'Allemagne. | BAUDISSIN, Wolf von, Ministry of Defence, Federal Republic of Germany. |
| BAXTER, DR. J.P., président, Atomic Energy Commission de l'Australie. | BAXTER, DR. J.P., Chairman, Atomic Energy Commission of Australia. |

¹Ceci est une sélection des principales personnalités canadiennes et de certaines personnalités de l'étranger souvent mentionnées dans les documents. Les notices biographiques se limitent aux fonctions qui se rapportent aux documents reproduits dans ce volume.

This is a selection of important Canadian personalities and some foreign personalities often mentioned in the documents. The biographical details refer only to the positions pertinent to the documents printed herein.

- BEELEY, Harold, sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni (-juin 1958); représentant permanent suppléant auprès des Nations Unies.
- BEELEY, Harold, Assistant Under-Secretary of State, Foreign Office of United Kingdom (-June 1958); Deputy Permanent Representative to United Nations.
- BENNETT, W. J., président, Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée. (-avr. 1958), et président, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltée. (-mai 1958); gérant, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltée.
- BENNETT, W. J., President, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. (-Apr. 1958), and President, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd. (-May 1958); Managing Director, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd.
- BLACK, Eugene, président de la Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement.
- BLACK, Eugene, President, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.
- BLANKENHORN, Herbert A.H., représentant permanent de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord (-nov. 1958); ambassadeur en France.
- BLANKENHORN, Herbert A. von., Permanent Representative of Federal Republic of Germany to North Atlantic Council (-Nov. 1958); Ambassador in France.
- BOLAND, Frederick H., représentant permanent de l'Irlande auprès des Nations Unies.
- BOLAND, Frederick H., Permanent Representative of Ireland to United Nations.
- BOOKER, Malcolm R., conseiller, ambassade de l'Australie aux États-Unis.
- BOOKER, Malcolm R., Counsellor, Embassy of Australia in United States.
- BOULGANIN, Nikolai A., président, Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique (-mars 1958).
- SEE BULGANIN.
- BOWEN, G., commissaire principal du Commerce et conseiller économique, haut-commissariat du Royaume-Uni (-oct. 1958).
- BOWEN, G., Senior Trade Commissioner and Economic Adviser, High Commission of United Kingdom (-Oct. 1958).
- BOYESEN, Jens M., représentant permanent de la Norvège, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
- BOYESEN, Jens M., Permanent Representative of Norway to North Atlantic Council.
- BRANDT, Willi, maire de Berlin Ouest.
- BRANDT, Willi, mayor of West Berlin.
- BREITHUT, Richard, adjoint suppléant spécial des Affaires du désarmement et d'énergie atomique au secrétaire d'État, département d'État des États-Unis.
- BREITHUT, Richard, Deputy Special Assistant to Secretary of State for Disarmament and Atomic Energy Affairs, Department of State of United States.
- BRIDLE, Paul, conseiller, délégation permanente auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord.
- BRIDLE, Paul, Counsellor, Permanent Delegation to North Atlantic Council.
- BROADBRIDGE, Arthur F., Direction des États-Unis (-nov. 1957); premier secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis.
- BROADBRIDGE, Arthur F., U.S.A. Division (-Nov. 1957); First Secretary, Embassy in United States.
- BROOK, sir Norman, secrétaire du Cabinet du Royaume-Uni.
- BROOK, Sir Norman, Secretary to Cabinet of United Kingdom.
- BROWN, J.C.G., haut-commissaire en Afrique du Sud.
- BROWN, J.C.G., High Commissioner in Union of South Africa.
- BROWNE, W.J., ministre sans portefeuille; vice-président de la délégation à la treizième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- BROWNE, W.J., Minister without Portfolio; Vice-Chairman, Delegation to 13th Session of United Nations General Assembly.
- BRYCE, R.B., greffier du Conseil privé et secrétaire du Cabinet.
- BRYCE, R.B., Clerk of Privy Council and Secretary to Cabinet.
- VOIR BOULGANIN.
- BULGANIN, Nikolai A., Chairman, Council of Ministers of Soviet Union (-Mar. 1958).

- BURGESS, W. Randolph, sous-secrétaire aux Affaires monétaires, département du Trésor des États-Unis (-juill. 1957); représentant permanent, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord.
- BURNS, Major-Général (Lieutenant-Général, jan. 1958), E.L.M., commandant, Force d'urgence des Nations Unies.
- BURWASH, Dorothy, Direction économique.
- CACCIA, sir Harold, ambassadeur du Royaume-Uni aux États-Unis.
- CADIEUX, Marcel, sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint des Affaires extérieures et conseiller juridique.
- CAHAN, J.F., secrétaire-général suppléant, OEEC.
- CAMERON, R.P., 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense.
- CAMPBELL, Ross, chef, Direction du Moyen-Orient (août 1957-).
- CAPE, Donald, département d'Énergie atomique et du Désarmement, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni.
- CASEY, Richard G., ministre des Affaires extérieures de l'Australie.
- VOIR TCHANG KAI-CHEK.
- VOIR TCHOU EN-LAI.
- CHURCHILL, Gordon M., ministre du Commerce.
- CLARKE, Richard William Barnes (Otto), troisième secrétaire, Trésor du Royaume-Uni, et membre, Conseil de la planification économique du Trésor.
- COHEN, sir Andrew, représentant permanent du Royaume-Uni auprès du Conseil de la tutelle des Nations Unies.
- COLE, W. Sterling, (R- New York), membre de la Commission mixte sur l'énergie atomique (-déc. 1957); directeur général, Agence internationale de l'Énergie atomique.
- COOMARASWAMY, Raju, secrétaire adjoint du ministère des Finances du Ceylan.
- CORNETT, Donald, premier secrétaire, haut-commissariat en Australie (-avr. 1958); conseiller, haut-commissariat en Pakistan.
- COTY, René, président de la Quatrième République française.
- COUILLARD, L.E., chef, Direction économique.
- COUVE DE MURVILLE, Maurice, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la France (juin 1958-).
- BURGESS, W. Randolph, Under Secretary for Monetary Affairs, Treasury of United States (-July 1957); Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council.
- BURNS, Maj.-Gen. E.L.M., (Lt.-Gen. Jan, 1958), Commander, United Nations Emergency Force.
- BURWASH, Dorothy, Economic Division.
- CACCIA, Sir Harold, Ambassador of United Kingdom in United States.
- CADIEUX, Marcel, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and Legal Adviser.
- CAHAN, J.F., Deputy Secretary-General, OEEC.
- CAMERON, R.P., Defence Liaison (1) Division.
- CAMPBELL, Ross, Head, Middle East Division (Aug. 1957-).
- CAPE, Donald, Department of Atomic Energy and Disarmament, Foreign Office of United Kingdom.
- CASEY, Richard G., Minister of External Affairs of Australia.
- CHIANG KAI-SHEK, Generalissimo, President of Republic of China.
- CHOU EN-LAI, Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of People's Republic of China.
- CHURCHILL, Gordon M., Minister of Trade and Commerce.
- CLARKE, Richard William Barnes (Otto), Third Secretary, Treasury of United Kingdom and member, Economic Planning Board of Treasury.
- COHEN, Sir Andrew, Permanent Representative of United Kingdom to United Nations Trusteeship Council.
- COLE, W. Sterling, (R- New York), member, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy (-Dec. 1957); Director-General, International Atomic Energy Agency.
- COOMARASWAMY, Raju, Assistant Secretary, Department of Finance of Ceylon.
- CORNETT, Donald, First Secretary, High Commission in Australia (-Apr. 1958); Counsellor, High Commission in Pakistan.
- COTY, René, President of Fourth French Republic.
- COUILLARD, L.E., Head, Economic Division.
- COUVE DE MURVILLE, Maurice, Minister of Foreign Affairs of France (June 1958-).

- CREAN, G.G., ministre, ambassade en France.
- CUNNINGHAM, M.W., secrétaire, Bureau du Conseil privé.
- CURTIS, Professor G.F., Doyen de la faculté de droit de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique.
- DALE, William N., agent responsable des Affaires britanniques et irlandaises, Bureau des Affaires du Commonwealth britannique et d'Europe nord, Bureau des Affaires européennes, département d'État des États-Unis (-juin 1958); sous-directeur, Bureau des Affaires du Commonwealth britannique et d'Europe nord.
- DARIDAN, Jean Henri, directeur-général des Affaires politiques et économiques, ministère des Affaires étrangères de la France.
- DAVIDSON, Dr. G.F., sous-ministre (Bien-être) de la Santé et du Bien-être.
- DAVIS, Henry F., ministre-conseiller, ambassade en France (-avr. 1958); chef, Direction européenne.
- DE COURCEL, Geoffroy, secrétaire général, ministère de la Défense nationale de la France (-juin 1958); représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique nord.
- DE GAULLE, général Charles, premier ministre de la France (juin 1958-).
- DE SEYNES, Philippe, sous-secrétaire, département des Affaires économiques et sociales, Secrétariat des Nations Unies.
- DE SILVA, M.W.H., ministre de la Justice et président du Sénat du Ceylan.
- DEAN, Arthur H., avocat, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York et chef de la délégation des États-Unis à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer.
- DESAI, Morarji, ministre des Finances de l'Inde.
- DÉSY, Jean, ambassadeur en France (-juill. 1958).
- DEUTSCH, John J., directeur de la faculté d'économie de l'Université de la Colombie-Britannique.
- DEWAR, D.B., Bureau du Conseil privé.
- DIEFENBAKER, John G., premier ministre; secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures (juin-sept. 1957).
- DIEM, Ngo Dinh, président de la République du Vietnam.
- CREAN, G.G., Minister, Embassy in France.
- CUNNINGHAM, M.W., Secretary, Privy Council Office.
- CURTIS, Professor G.F., Dean, School of Law, University of British Columbia.
- DALE, William N., Officer-in-Charge, United Kingdom and Ireland Affairs, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Bureau of European Affairs, Department of State of United States (-June 1958); Deputy Director, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs.
- DARIDAN, Jean Henri, Director General, Political and Economic Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France.
- DAVIDSON, Dr. G.F., Deputy Minister (Welfare), Department of National Health and Welfare.
- DAVIS, Henry F., Minister-Counsellor, Embassy in France (-Apr. 1958); Head, European Division.
- DE COURCEL, Geoffroy, Permanent Secretary General of National Defence of France (-June 1958); Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council (Sept. 1958-).
- DE GAULLE, General Charles, Prime Minister of France (June 1958-).
- DE SEYNES, Philippe, Under-Secretary, Department of Economic and Social Affairs, United Nations Secretariat.
- DE SILVA, M.W.H., Minister of Justice and Leader of the Senate, Ceylon.
- DEAN, Arthur H., Lawyer, Sullivan & Cromwell, New York and Chairman, Delegation of United States to Conference on the Law of the Sea.
- DESAI, Morarji, Minister of Finance of India.
- DÉSY, Jean, Ambassador in France (-July 1958).
- DEUTSCH, John J., Head, Department of Economics, University of British Columbia.
- DEWAR, D.B., Privy Council Office.
- DIEFENBAKER, John G., Prime Minister; Secretary of State for External Affairs (June-Sept. 1957).
- DIEM, Ngo Dinh, President of Republic of Vietnam.

- DILLON, C. Douglas, sous-secrétaire adjoint aux Affaires économiques, département d'État des États-Unis.
- DILLON, C. Douglas, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Department of State of United States.
- DIXON, sir Pierson, représentant permanent du Royaume-Uni auprès des Nations Unies.
- DIXON, Sir Pierson, Permanent Representative of United Kingdom to United Nations.
- DREW, George A., haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni (août 1957-).
- DREW, George A., High Commissioner in United Kingdom (Aug. 1957-).
- DRINKALL, John Kenneth, département de l'Ouest, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni.
- DRINKALL, John Kenneth, Western Department, Foreign Office of United Kingdom.
- DULLES, John Foster, secrétaire d'État des États-Unis.
- DULLES, John Foster, Secretary of State of United States.
- DUPUY, Pierre, ambassadeur en Italie (-août 1958); ambassadeur en France.
- DUPUY, Pierre, Ambassador in Italy (-Aug. 1958); Ambassador in France.
- ECCLES, sir David, président, chambre de commerce du Royaume-Uni.
- ECCLES, Sir David, President, Board of Trade of United Kingdom.
- ECHARDT, Felix von, chef, département de presse et d'Information de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- ECHARDT, Felix von, Head, Press and Information Department, Federal Republic of Germany.
- EISENHOWER, Dwight D., président des États-Unis.
- EISENHOWER, Dwight D., President of United States.
- ELBRICK, C.B., sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires européennes, département d'État des États-Unis.
- ELBRICK, C.B., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs, Department of State of United States.
- ELLIS-REES, sir Hugh, délégué permanent du Royaume-Uni auprès de l'OECE.
- ELLIS-REES, Sir Hugh, Permanent Delegate of United Kingdom to OEEC.
- ENGEN, Hans, représentant permanent de la Norvège auprès des Nations Unies.
- ENGEN, Hans, Permanent Representative of Norway to United Nations.
- ENGLISH, John, sous-ministre adjoint, ministère du Commerce (-mai 1958); sous-ministre.
- ENGLISH, John, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Trade and Commerce (-May 1958); Deputy Minister.
- ENTEZAM, Nasrollah, ambassadeur de l'Iran en France et représentant à la douzième Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- ENTEZAM, Nasrollah, Ambassador of Iran in France, Representative to United Nations 12th General Assembly.
- ERHARD, Dr. Ludwig, ministre des Affaires économiques de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et, jusqu'au octobre 1957, vice-chancelier.
- ERHARD, Dr. Ludwig, Minister of Economic Affairs, Federal Republic of Germany and, until October 1957, Vice-Chancellor.
- ETZDORF, Hasso von, ambassadeur de la République fédérale d'Allemagne (-août 1958); sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint, ministère des Affaires étrangères.
- ETZDORF, Hasso von, Ambassador of Federal Republic of Germany (-Aug. 1958); Assistant Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
- EVANS, William Vincent John, conseiller et conseiller juridique, mission permanente du Royaume-Uni auprès des Nations Unies.
- EVANS, William Vincent John, Counsellor and Legal Adviser, Permanent Mission of United Kingdom to United Nations.
- FAIRCLOUGH, Mme Ellen, secrétaire d'État (juin 1957—mai 1958); ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration.
- FAIRCLOUGH, Mrs. Ellen, Secretary of State (June 1957—May 1958); Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

- FARLEY, Philip J., adjoint au spécial suppléant au secrétaire d'État des États-Unis sur les questions atomiques (-oct. 1957); adjoint spécial au secrétaire d'État sur les questions atomiques (-déc. 1957); adjoint spécial des Affaires du désarmement et d'énergie atomique au secrétaire d'État.
- FARQUHARSON, R.A., conseiller, ambassade aux États-Unis.
- FAURE, Edgar, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la France (-avr. 1958); ministre de l'Intérieur et ministre des Institutions européennes.
- FAWZI, Dr. Mahmoud, ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Égypte.
- FINCHAM, Dr. C.B.H., premier secrétaire, haut-commissariat de l'Afrique du Sud.
- FIRESTONE, Dr. O. J., conseiller économique au sous-ministre du Commerce.
- FITZMAURICE, Sir Gerald, conseiller juridique, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni.
- FLEMING, Donald, ministre des Finances.
- FOULKES, lieutenant-général Charles, président du Comité des chefs d'état-major.
- FULTON, E. Davey, ministre de la Justice.
- GAILLARD, Felix, ministre des Finances de la France (-nov. 1957); premier ministre (-avr. 1958).
- GARNER, sir Joseph John Saville, haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni.
- GBEDEMAH, K.A., ministre des Finances du Ghana.
- GEORGES-PICOT, Guillaume, représentant permanent de la France auprès des Nations Unies.
- GIBSON-SMITH, W., premier secrétaire (commercial), haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni.
- GILCHRIST, W.M., président, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltée. (juill. 1958-).
- GILL, Evan, haut-commissaire au Ghana.
- GLAZEBROOK, G.P. deT., chef, Direction du Commonwealth.
- GOLDEN, David, sous-ministre de la Production pour la défense.
- GOLDSCHLAG, Klaus, deuxième secrétaire, haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni (-août 1957); Direction économique.
- GOTLIEB, A.E., Direction juridique.
- FARLEY, Philip J., Deputy to Special Assistant to Secretary of State of United States for Atomic Energy Affairs (-Oct. 1957); Special Assistant to Secretary of State for Atomic Energy Affairs (-Dec. 1957); Special Assistant to Secretary of State for Disarmament and Atomic Energy Affairs.
- FARQUHARSON, R.A., Counsellor, Embassy in United States.
- FAURE, Edgar, Minister of Foreign Affairs of France (-Apr.1958); Minister of the Interior and Minister of European Institutions.
- FAWZI, Dr. Mahmoud, Foreign Minister of Egypt.
- FINCHAM, Dr. C.B.H., First Secretary, High Commission of South Africa.
- FIRESTONE, Dr. O. J., Economic Adviser to Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.
- FITZMAURICE, Sir Gerald, Legal Adviser, Foreign Office of United Kingdom.
- FLEMING, Donald, Minister of Finance.
- FOULKES, Lt.-Gen. Charles, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee.
- FULTON, E. Davey, Minister of Justice.
- GAILLARD, Felix, Minister of Finance of France (-Nov. 1957); Prime Minister of France (-Apr. 1958).
- GARNER, Sir Joseph John Saville, High Commissioner of United Kingdom.
- GBEDEMAH, K.A., Minister of Finance of Ghana.
- GEORGES-PICOT, Guillaume, Permanent Representative of France to United Nations.
- GIBSON-SMITH, W., First Secretary (Commercial), High Commission in United Kingdom.
- GILCHRIST, W.M., President, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd. (July 1958-).
- GILL, Evan, High Commissioner in Ghana.
- GLAZEBROOK, G.P. deT., Head, Commonwealth Division.
- GOLDEN, David, Deputy Minister of Defence Production.
- GOLDSCHLAG, Klaus, Second Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom (-Aug. 1957); Economic Division.
- GOTLIEB, A.E., Legal Division.

- GRANDY, J.F., Direction économique (-fév. 1958); conseiller (finances), haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni.
- GRAY, J.L., président, Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée. (mai 1958-).
- GREGH, François-Didier, secrétaire général adjoint aux Affaires économiques et financières, Secrétariat de l'OTAN.
- GREY, R.Y., Direction économique.
- GRUENTHER, lieutenant-général Alfred M., conseiller aux questions du désarmement au secrétaire d'État des États-Unis.
- GROMYKO, Andrei, ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique.
- HADWEN, J.G., deuxième secrétaire, mission permanente auprès des Nations Unies (-oct. 1958); premier secrétaire.
- HALL, John, directeur, Direction des Affaires internationales, United States Atomic Energy Commission (-nov 1958); gérant adjoint des Activités internationales.
- HALLSTEIN, professeur Walter, secrétaire d'État, ministère des Affaires étrangères de la République fédérale d'Allemagne (-déc. 1958); président, Commission de la CEE.
- HAMILTON, Alvin, ministre des Affaires du Nord et des Ressources nationales (août 1957-).
- HAMMARSKJÖLD, Dag, secrétaire général des Nations Unies.
- HARKNESS, Douglas, ministre des Affaires du Nord et des Ressources nationales et ministre d'Agriculture par intérim (juin—août 1957); ministre d'Agriculture.
- HARRISON, Dr. James M., directeur, Commission géologique du Canada.
- HEASMAN, George, haut-commissaire en Nouvelle-Zélande (déc. 1957-).
- HEATHCOAT-AMORY, Derick, ministre de l'Agriculture, des Pêcheries et de l'Alimentation du Royaume-Uni (-jan. 1958); chancelier de l'Échiquier et président du Conseil des ministres de l'OECE.
- HERTER, Christian A., sous-secrétaire d'État et président, Conseil de coordination des activités, département d'État des États-Unis.
- HEUSS, Theodor, président de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- HOCKIN, A. B., conseiller (financière), ambassade aux États-Unis.
- GRANDY, J.F., Economic Division (-Feb. 1958); Counsellor (Finance), High Commission in United Kingdom.
- GRAY, J.L., President, Atomic Energy Canada Ltd. (May 1958-).
- GREGH, Francois-Didier, Assistant Secretary General for Economic and Financial Affairs, NATO Secretariat.
- GREY, R.Y., Economic Division.
- GRUENTHER, Lt.-Gen. Alfred M., disarmament adviser to Secretary of State of United States.
- GROMYKO, Andrei, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Soviet Union.
- HADWEN, J.G., Second Secretary, Permanent Mission to United Nations (-Oct. 1958); First Secretary.
- HALL, John, Director, Division of International Affairs, United States Atomic Energy Commission (-Nov. 1958); Assistant General Manager of International Affairs.
- HALLSTEIN, Professor Walter, Secretary of State, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Federal Republic of Germany (-Dec. 1958); President of EEC Commission.
- HAMILTON, Alvin, Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Aug. 1957-).
- HAMMARSKJÖLD, Dag, Secretary General of United Nations.
- HARKNESS, Douglas, Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and Acting Minister of Agriculture (June-Aug. 1957); Minister of Agriculture.
- HARRISON, Dr. James M., Director, Geological Survey of Canada.
- HEASMAN, George, High Commissioner in New Zealand (Dec. 1957-).
- HEATHCOAT-AMORY, Derick, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food of United Kingdom (-Jan. 1958); Chancellor of the Exchequer and Chairman, Council of Ministers of the OEEC.
- HERTER, Christian A., Under Secretary of State and Chairman, Operations Coordinating Board, Department of State of United States.
- HEUSS, Theodor, President of Federal Republic of Germany.
- HOCKIN, A. B., Counsellor (Financial), Embassy in United States.

- HOLMES, John W., sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures.
- HOLMES, John W., Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- HOME, Lord Alexander Frederick Douglas, secrétaire d'État des Relations avec le Commonwealth du Royaume-Uni.
- HOME, Lord Alexander Frederick Douglas, Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations of United Kingdom.
- HOOTON, F.G., 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense.
- HOOTON, F.G., Defence Liaison (1) Division.
- HUDON, L.D., section des Relations économiques internationaux, Direction des Affaires économiques internationales, ministère des Finances.
- HUDON, L.D., International Economic Relations Section, Economic and International Affairs Division, Department of Finance.
- HUSSEIN, roi de la Jordanie.
- HUSSEIN, King of Jordan.
- ISBISTER, C.M., sous-ministre adjoint, ministère du Commerce.
- ISBISTER, C.M., Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Trade and Commerce.
- JACKSON, sir Robert, président, Commission préparatoire du Ghana sur le projet du fleuve Volta.
- JACKSON, Sir Robert, Chairman, Volta River Project Preparatory Commission of Ghana.
- JACOBSEN, Per, directeur général et président du Conseil de direction, FMI.
- JACOBSEN, Per, Managing Director and Chairman of the Executive Board, IMF.
- JARRING, Gunnar V., représentant permanent de la Suède auprès des Nations Unies et représentant au Conseil de sécurité; ambassadeur aux États-Unis (mai 1958-).
- JARRING, Gunnar V., Permanent Representative of Sweden to United Nations and Security Council; Ambassador in United States (May 1958-).
- JAY, R.H., premier secrétaire, mission permanente auprès du Bureau européen des Nations Unies.
- JAY, R.H., First Secretary, Permanent Mission to European Office of United Nations.
- JEBB, sir Gladwyn, ambassadeur du Royaume-Uni en France.
- JEBB, Sir Gladwyn, Ambassador of United Kingdom in France.
- JOHNSON, Jesse, directeur, Direction des matières premières, United States Atomic Energy Commission.
- JOHNSON, Jesse, Director, Division of Raw Materials, United States Atomic Energy Commission.
- JOHNSON, David, ambassadeur en Union soviétique.
- JOHNSON, David, Ambassador in Soviet Union.
- JOXE, Louis, secrétaire général, ministère des Affaires étrangères de France.
- JOXE, Louis, Secretary General, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France.
- JUDD, Walter H., (R- Minnesota); représentant des États-Unis à la deuxième Commission de la douzième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- JUDD, Walter H., (R- Minnesota); Representative of United States to Second Committee of United Nations 12th General Assembly.
- KHAN, Ayub, président du Pakistan (oct. 1958-).
- KHAN, Ayub, President of Pakistan (Oct. 1958-).
- KHROUCHCHEV, N.S., premier secrétaire du Comité central du Parti communiste de l'Union soviétique.
- KHROUSHCHEV, N.S., First Secretary of Central Committee of Communist Party of Soviet Union.
- KIRKWOOD, D.H.W., Direction économique.
- KIRKWOOD, D.H.W., Economic Division.
- KOTSCHNIG, Walter, directeur, Bureau des Affaires économiques et sociales internationales, département d'État des États-Unis.
- KOTSCHNIG, Walter, Director, Office of International Economic and Social Affairs, Department of State of United States.
- KRATZER, Myron, directeur adjoint, United States Atomic Energy Commission.
- KRATZER, Myron, Assistant Director, United States Atomic Energy Commission.

- KUZNETSOV, V.V., premier vice-ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique et chef, délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- LACOSTE, Francis, ambassadeur de la France.
- LALL, Arthur, représentant permanent de l'Inde auprès des Nations Unies.
- LANGE, Halvard M., ministre des Affaires étrangères de la Norvège.
- LANGLAIS, Henri, directeur adjoint, Affaires de l'Europe de l'Ouest, Direction politique de l'Administration centrale de la France.
- LANGLEY, J.C., Direction économique.
- LEE, sir Frank, secrétaire permanent, chambre de commerce du Royaume-Uni.
- LEE, Sir Henry S., ministre des Finances de la Malaisie.
- LÉGER, Jules, sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures (-oct. 1958); représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et de l'OECE.
- LENNOX-BOYD, Alan Tindal, secrétaire d'État du Royaume-Uni pour les Colonies.
- LEPAN, D.V., sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures.
- LÉVESQUE, René, correspondant de la Société Radio-Canada.
- LINTOTT, sir Henry, sous-secrétaire d'État suppléant, Bureau des Relations avec le Commonwealth du Royaume-Uni.
- LLOYD, John Selwyn, Foreign Secretary du Royaume-Uni.
- LODGE, Henry Cabot Jr., représentant permanent des États-Unis auprès des Nations Unies.
- LOUTFI, Omar, représentant permanent de l'Égypte auprès des Nations Unies.
- LOUW, Eric, ministre des Affaires extérieures de l'Union d'Afrique du Sud.
- LUBKE, Heinrich, ministre de l'Alimentation, de l'Agriculture et de la Sylviculture de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- MACDERMOT, T.W.L., haut-commissaire en Australie.
- MACDONALD, John Allan, directeur, Travaux et contrats de défense, Direction de l'analyse des programmes du Conseil du Trésor, ministère des Finances.
- KUZNETSOV, V.V., First Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs of Soviet Union and Head, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly.
- LACOSTE, Francis, Ambassador of France.
- LALL, Arthur, Permanent Representative of India to United Nations.
- LANGE, Halvard M., Minister of Foreign Affairs of Norway.
- LANGLAIS, Henri, Deputy Director of West European Affairs, Political Division of the Central Administration of France.
- LANGLEY, J.C., Economic Division.
- LEE, Sir Frank, Permanent Secretary, Board of Trade of United Kingdom.
- LEE, Sir Henry S., Minister of Finance of Malaya.
- LÉGER, Jules, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (-Oct. 1958); Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC.
- LENNOX-BOYD, Alan Tindal, Secretary of State for the Colonies of United Kingdom.
- LEPAN, D.V., Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- LÉVESQUE, René, CBC correspondent.
- LINTOTT, Sir Henry, Deputy Under-Secretary of State, Commonwealth Relations Office of United Kingdom.
- LLOYD, John Selwyn, Foreign Secretary of United Kingdom.
- LODGE, Henry Cabot Jr., Permanent Representative of United States to United Nations.
- LOUTFI, Omar, Permanent Representative of Egypt to United Nations.
- LOUW, Eric, Minister of External Affairs of Union of South Africa.
- LUBKE, Heinrich, Minister of Food, Agriculture and Forestry, Federal Republic of Germany.
- MACDERMOT, T.W.L., High Commissioner in Australia.
- MACDONALD, John Allan, Director, Defence Works and Contracts, Programme Analysis Division of Treasury Board, Department of Finance.

- MACDONALD, Thomas L., ministre de la Défense de la Nouvelle-Zélande (-sept. 1957); ministre des Affaires extérieures (-déc. 1957).
- MACDONNELL, J.M., ministre sans portefeuille.
- MACDONNELL, R.M., ambassadeur en Égypte et ministre au Liban (-août 1958); sous-secrétaire d'État suppléant aux Affaires extérieures.
- MACINTYRE, Donald, ministre des Finances de la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyasaland.
- MACKAY, R.A., représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies (-jan. 1958); ambassadeur en Norvège et en Islande.
- MACKENZIE, Dr. C.J., président, Commission de contrôle de l'énergie atomique.
- MACLEAN, J. Angus, ministre des Pêcheries.
- MACMILLAN, Harold, premier ministre du Royaume-Uni.
- MACPHERSON, Marion, deuxième secrétaire, haut-commissariat au Ghana (jan. 1958-).
- MAKINS, sir Roger, co-secrétaire permanent du Trésor du Royaume-Uni.
- MALIK, Dr. Charles, ministre des Affaires étrangères du Liban; président du treizième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- MANNINGHAM-BULLER, sir Reginald, procureur général, avocat principal de la Couronne et chef de la délégation du Royaume-Uni à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer.
- MAO TSE TOUNG, président du Parti communiste de la République populaire de Chine.
- MARTIN, W.R., secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet.
- MATSUDAIRA, Koto, représentant permanent du Japon auprès des Nations Unies.
- MATTHEWS, W.D., sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint des Affaires extérieures.
- MAUDLING, Reginald, trésorier-payeur de l'Échiquier du Royaume-Uni.
- MAYNIER, Earle Anthony, secrétaire permanent au ministre du Commerce et de l'Industrie de la Fédération des Antilles.
- MCBRIDE, Robert H., sous-directeur, Bureau des Affaires de l'Europe de l'Ouest, Bureau des Affaires européennes, département d'État des États-Unis (-sept. 1958); directeur.
- MCCARDLE, J.J.M., 1^{er} Direction de liaison avec la Défense.
- MACDONALD, Thomas L., Minister of Defence of New Zealand (-Sept. 1957); Minister of External Affairs (-Dec. 1957).
- MACDONNELL, J.M., Minister without Portfolio.
- MACDONNELL, R.M., Ambassador to Egypt and Minister to Lebanon (-Aug. 1958); Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- MACINTYRE, Donald, Minister of Finance of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.
- MACKAY, R.A., Permanent Representative to United Nations (-Jan. 1958); Ambassador in Norway and Iceland.
- MACKENZIE, Dr. C.J., President, Atomic Energy Control Board.
- MACLEAN, J. Angus, Minister of Fisheries.
- MACMILLAN, Harold, Prime Minister of United Kingdom.
- MACPHERSON, Marion, Second Secretary, High Commission in Ghana (Jan. 1958 -).
- MAKINS, Sir Roger, Joint Permanent Secretary, Treasury of United Kingdom.
- MALIK, Dr. Charles, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Lebanon; President, United Nations 13th General Assembly.
- MANNINGHAM-BULLER, Sir Reginald, Attorney-General, Senior Law Officer of the Crown, and Chairman, Delegation of United Kingdom to Conference on the Law of the Sea.
- MAO TSE-TUNG, Chairman, Communist Party of People's Republic of China.
- MARTIN, W.R., Assistant Secretary to Cabinet.
- MATSUDAIRA, Koto, Permanent Representative of Japan to United Nations.
- MATTHEWS, W.D., Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- MAUDLING, Reginald, Paymaster General of United Kingdom.
- MAYNIER, Earle Anthony, Permanent Secretary to Minister of Trade and Industry, Federation of West Indies.
- MCBRIDE, Robert H., Deputy Director, Office of Western European Affairs, Bureau of European Affairs, Department of State of United States (-Sept. 1958); Director.
- MCCARDLE, J.J.M., Defence Liaison (1) Division.

- MCCARTHY, John G., directeur, Bureau des Affaires économiques, mission des États-Unis auprès des organisations régionales européennes à Paris.
- MCELROY, Neil H., secrétaire de la Défense des États-Unis (oct. 1957-).
- MCEWEN, John, vice-premier ministre et ministre du Commerce de l'Australie.
- MCKINNEY, Robert M., représentant des États-Unis, Conseil des gouverneurs, Agence internationale de l'énergie atomique (juill. 1957-oct. 1958).
- MELAS, Michel, représentant permanent de la Grèce, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord.
- MENON, V.K. Krishna, ministre de la Défense de l'Inde et chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies (1957); membre de la délégation (1958).
- MENZIES, A.R., chef, Direction de l'Extrême-Orient.
- MENZIES, Robert, premier ministre de l'Australie.
- MERCHANT, Livingston, ambassadeur des États-Unis.
- MICHAELS, M.I., sous-secrétaire, Atomic Energy Office du Royaume-Uni.
- MIKOYAN, A.I., membre, Présidium du Comité central du Parti communiste de l'Union soviétique.
- MILLER, F.R., sous-ministre de la Défense nationale.
- MILLS, W. D., attaché, Plan du Colombo, haut-commissariat au Pakistan.
- MIRZA, Iskander, président du Pakistan (-oct. 1958).
- MOCH, Jules, délégué permanent de la France à la Commission pour le désarmement des Nations Unies.
- MONTGOMERY, vicomte Bernard Law, commandant suprême adjoint des Forces alliées, OTAN (-sept. 1958).
- MORAN, H.O., haut-commissaire au Pakistan.
- MUELLER Armack, A., représentant de la République fédérale de l'Allemagne auprès de l'OECE.
- MUNRO, sir Leslie, ambassadeur de la Nouvelle-Zélande aux États-Unis et représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies.
- MURPHY, Robert, sous-secrétaire d'État suppléant, département d'État des États-Unis.
- MCCARTHY, John, Director, Office of Economic Affairs, United States Mission to European Regional Organizations at Paris.
- MCELROY, Neil H., Secretary of Defense of United States (Oct. 1957-).
- MCEWEN, John, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Trade of Australia.
- MCKINNEY, Robert M., Representative of United States, Board of Governors, International Atomic Energy Agency (July 1957-Oct. 1958).
- MELAS, Michel, Permanent Representative of Greece to North Atlantic Council.
- MENON, V.K. Krishna, Minister of Defence of India and Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly (1957); member of Delegation (1958).
- MENZIES, A.R., Head, Far Eastern Division.
- MENZIES, Robert, Prime Minister of Australia.
- MERCHANT, Livingston, Ambassador of United States.
- MICHAELS, M.I., Under-Secretary, Atomic Energy Office of United Kingdom.
- MIKOYAN, A.I., Member, Praesidium of Central Committee of Communist Party of Soviet Union.
- MILLER, F.R., Deputy Minister of National Defence.
- MILLS, W. D., Colombo Plan Attaché, High Commission in Pakistan.
- MIRZA, Iskander, President of Pakistan (-Oct. 1958).
- MOCH, Jules, Permanent Delegate of France to United Nations Disarmament Commission.
- MONTGOMERY, Viscount Bernard Law, Deputy Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, NATO (-Sept. 1958).
- MORAN, H.O., High Commissioner in Pakistan.
- MUELLER Armack, A., Representative of Federal Republic of Germany to OEEC.
- MUNRO, Sir Leslie, Ambassador of New Zealand in United States and Permanent Representative to United Nations.
- MURPHY, Robert, Deputy Under Secretary of State, Department of State of United States.

- MUSTAPHA, M.W., ministre des Finances de la Sierra Leone.
- MUSTAPHA, M.W., Minister of Finance of Sierra Leone.
- NASH, Walter, premier ministre de la Nouvelle-Zélande (déc. 1957-).
- NASH, Walter, Prime Minister of New Zealand (Dec. 1957-).
- NASSER, colonel Gamal Abdel, président de l'Égypte (-jan. 1958); président de la République arabe unie.
- NASSER, Colonel Gamal Abdel, President of Egypt (-Jan. 1958); President of United Arab Republic.
- NEHRU, Pandit Jawaharlal, premier ministre de l'Inde.
- NEHRU, Pandit Jawaharlal, Prime Minister of India.
- NESBITT, Wallace, député, (CP - Oxford), adjoint parlementaire au premier ministre (août 1957-).
- NESBITT, Wallace, M.P. (PC—Oxford), Parliamentary Assistant to the Prime Minister (Aug. 1957-).
- NICKSON, R.B., chef, section du Commonwealth, Direction générale des Relations commerciales internationales, ministère du Commerce.
- NICKSON, R.B., Head, Commonwealth Section, International Trade Relations Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce.
- NKRUMAH, Kwame, premier ministre du Ghana.
- NKRUMAH, Kwame, Prime Minister of Ghana.
- NOBLE, commandant sir Allan, ministre d'État aux Affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni.
- NOBLE, Commander Sir Alan, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs of United Kingdom.
- NORDMEYER, A.H., ministre des Finances de la Nouvelle-Zélande.
- NORDMEYER, A.H., Minister of Finance of New Zealand.
- NORSTAD, général Lauris, commandant suprême des Forces alliées en Europe (SACEUR), OTAN.
- NORSTAD, General Lauris, Supreme Allied Commander in Europe (SACEUR), NATO.
- NUTT, J.S., Direction juridique.
- NUTT, J.S., Legal Division.
- NUTTING, S.C.H., Direction du Commonwealth.
- NUTTING, S.C.H., Commonwealth Division.
- O'HURLEY, Raymond, ministre de la Production pour la défense (mai 1958-).
- O'HURLEY, Raymond, Minister of Defence Production (May 1958-).
- OKOTIE-BOOH, chef Festus S., ministre des Finances du Nigeria.
- OKOTIE-BOOH, Chief Festus S., Minister of Finance of Nigeria.
- OZERE, S.V., sous-ministre adjoint des Pêcheries.
- OZERE, S.V., Assistant Deputy Minister of Fisheries.
- PARKER, General Theodore William, Bureau du chef d'état major de l'Armée des États-Unis et représentant adjoint au groupe permanent de l'OTAN.
- PARKER, General Theodore William, Office of United States Army Chief of Staff, and Deputy Liaison Officer to NATO Standing Group.
- PEARKES, George, ministre de la Défense nationale.
- PEARKES, George, Minister of National Defence.
- PFLIMLIN, Pierre, premier ministre de la France (mai-juin 1958).
- PFLIMLIN, Pierre, Prime Minister of France (May-June 1958).
- PICK, A.J., Direction européenne.
- PICK, A.J., European Division.
- PIERCE, S.D., haut-commissaire suppléant au Royaume-Uni.
- PIERCE, S.D., Deputy High Commissioner in United Kingdom.
- PINEAU, Christian, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la France (-avr. 1958).
- PINEAU, Christian, Minister of Foreign Affairs of France (-Apr. 1958).
- PLOWDEN, sir Edwin, président, Atomic Energy Authority du Royaume-Uni.
- PLOWDEN, Sir Edwin, President, Atomic Energy Authority of United Kingdom.
- PLUMPTRE, A.F.W., sous-ministre adjoint du ministère des Finances.
- PLUMPTRE, A.F.W., Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Finance.

- POLLOCK, Sidney, directeur, Contributions et programmes internationaux, ministère des Finances.
- POYNTON, sir Hilton, section pour les Colonies, délégation du Royaume-Uni à la Conférence économique et commerciale du Commonwealth.
- RAHMAN, Abdul, premier ministre de la Malaisie.
- RASMINSKY, Louis, sous-gouverneur de la Banque du Canada et directeur exécutif canadien, FMI.
- REID, Escott, haut-commissaire en Inde (-mai 1957); ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne (nov. 1957-).
- REISMAN, Sol Simon, directeur, Direction des Relations commerciales internationales, ministère du Commerce.
- REY, Jean, ministre des Affaires économiques de la Belgique (-nov. 1958).
- RITCHIE, A.E., ministre, ambassade aux États-Unis.
- RITCHIE, Charles S. A., ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne (-jan. 1958); représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies.
- ROBERTS, sir Frank, représentant permanent du Royaume-Uni, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord.
- ROBERTSON, Norman A., ambassadeur aux États-Unis (-oct. 1958); sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures.
- ROBERTSON, R.G., sous-ministère des Affaires du Nord et des Ressources nationales.
- ROBINSON, H. Basil, chef, Direction du Moyen-Orient (-août 1957); adjoint spécial au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures.
- RONNING, Chester A., haut-commissaire en Inde.
- ROOTES, sir William, Conseil des exportations réglables en dollars du Royaume-Uni.
- ROPER, J.C.A., premier secrétaire, ambassade du Royaume-Uni aux États-Unis.
- ROSENTHAL, R.W., administrateur du Plan de Colombo, Direction de la coopération économique et technique internationale, ministère du Commerce.
- ROWAN, sir Leslie, deuxième secrétaire, Conseil du Trésor du Royaume-Uni.
- POLLOCK, Sidney, Director, International Programmes and Contributions, Department of Finance.
- POYNTON, Sir Hilton, Colonies Section, Delegation of United Kingdom to Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference.
- RAHMAN, Abdul, Prime Minister of Malaya.
- RASMINSKY, Louis, Deputy Governor of Bank of Canada and Canadian Executive Director, IMF.
- REID, Escott, High Commissioner in India (-May 1957); Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany (Nov. 1957-).
- REISMAN, Sol Simon, Director, International Economic Relations Division, Department of Finance.
- REY, Jean, Minister of Economic Affairs of Belgium (-Nov. 1958).
- RITCHIE, A.E., Minister, Embassy in United States.
- RITCHIE, Charles S. A., Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany (-Jan. 1958); Permanent Representative to United Nations.
- ROBERTS, Sir Frank, Permanent Representative of United Kingdom to North Atlantic Council.
- ROBERTSON, Norman A., Ambassador in United States (-Oct. 1958); Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- ROBERTSON, R.G., Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.
- ROBINSON, H. Basil, Head, Middle East Division (-Aug. 1957); Special Assistant to Secretary of State for External Affairs.
- RONNING, Chester A., High Commissioner in India.
- ROOTES, Sir William, Dollar Exports Council of United Kingdom.
- ROPER, J.C.A., First Secretary, Embassy of United Kingdom in United States.
- ROSENTHAL, R.W., Colombo Plan Administrator, International Economic and Technical Co-operation Division, Department of Trade and Commerce.
- ROWAN, Sir Leslie, Second Secretary, Treasury of United Kingdom.

- SALAN, Général Raoul Albin Louis, commandant suprême, Algérie (-mai 1958); Résident général du gouvernement de la France, commandant en chef, Algérie (-déc. 1958).
- SALAN, General Raoul Albin Louis, Supreme Military Commander in Algeria (-May 1958); Resident-General of French government, Commander-in-Chief, Algeria (-Dec. 1958).
- SANDERS, William, adjoint spécial au sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis (-avr. 1958); vice-président, délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer.
- SANDERS, William, Special Assistant to Under Secretary of State of United States (-Apr. 1958); Vice-Chairman, Delegation to Conference on the Law of the Sea.
- SANDYS, Duncan, ministre de la Défense du Royaume-Uni.
- SANDYS, Duncan, Minister of Defence of United Kingdom.
- SARPER, Selim, représentant permanent de la Turquie, Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord.
- SARPER, Selim, Permanent Representative of Turkey to North Atlantic Council.
- SCHAETZEL, J. Robert, adjoint spécial au secrétaire adjoint des Affaires économiques, département d'État des États-Unis.
- SCHAETZEL, J. Robert, Special Assistant to Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, Department of State of United States.
- SCHWARZMANN, Maurice, directeur adjoint, Direction générale des Relations commerciales internationales, ministère du Commerce.
- SCHWARZMANN, Maurice, Assistant Director, International Trade Relations Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce.
- SEN, Asoke-Kumar, ministre du Droit de l'Inde et chef, délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer.
- SEN, Asoke-Kumar, Minister of Law of India and Chairman, Delegation to Conference on the Law of the Sea.
- SHAH, Manubhai, ministre de l'Industrie de l'Inde.
- SHAH, Manubhai, Minister of Industry of India.
- SHARP, M.W., sous-ministre du Commerce (-mai 1958).
- SHARP, M.W., Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce (-May 1958).
- SIHANOUK, Prince Norodom, premier ministre, ministre des Affaires étrangères, ministre de Planification et ministre de l'Intérieur du Cambodge.
- SIHANOUK, Prince Norodom, Prime Minister, Foreign Minister, Minister of Plans and Minister of the Interior of Cambodia.
- SISCO, Joseph J., Bureau des Affaires politiques et de la sécurité des Nations Unies, Direction générale des Affaires des organisations internationales, département d'État des États-Unis.
- SISCO, Joseph J., Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs, Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State of United States.
- SMITH, Gerard, adjoint spécial au secrétaire d'État des États-Unis sur les questions atomiques.
- SMITH, Gerard, Special Assistant for Atomic Affairs to Secretary of State of United States.
- SMITH, R. G. C., commissaire en Trinité.
- SMITH, R. G. C., Commissioner in Trinidad.
- SMITH, Sidney, secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures (sept. 1957-).
- SMITH, Sidney, Secretary of State for External Affairs (Sept. 1957-).
- SOBOLEV, Arkadey A., représentant permanent de l'Union soviétique auprès des Nations Unies, délégué à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies et président, Commission pour le désarmement.
- SOBOLEV, Arkadey A., Permanent Representative of Soviet Union to United Nations and Delegate to United Nations General Assembly and Chairman of Disarmament Commission.
- SOUSTELLE, Jacques, ministre de l'Information de la France (juill. 1958-).
- SOUSTELLE, Jacques, Minister of Information of France (July 1958-).
- SPAACK, Paul-Henri, secrétaire-général de l'OTAN.
- SPAACK, Paul-Henri, Secretary-General of NAŦO.
- SPARLING, major-général H.A., président, état-major interarmes du Canada aux États-Unis.
- SPARLING, Maj.-Gen. H.A., Chairman, Canadian Joint Staff in United States.

- SPENDER, sir Percy, ambassadeur d'Australie aux États-Unis et chef suppléant, délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- STABELL, Bredo, directeur, Direction juridique, ministère des Affaires étrangères de la Norvège et vice-président, délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer.
- STADERINI, Ettore, chef, Affaires politiques, ministère des Affaires étrangères de l'Italie; Commission de l'Euratom.
- STARR, Michael, ministre du Travail.
- STASSEN, Harold, adjoint spécial au président des États-Unis (désarmement).
- STAVROPOULOS, Constantin A., conseiller juridique, Bureau des Affaires juridiques, secrétariat des Nations Unies.
- STEACIE, Dr. E.W.R., président, Conseil national de recherches.
- STEPHENS, L.A.D., conseiller, ambassade en République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- STEWART, J.G., conseiller, ambassade d'Afrique du Sud aux États-Unis et membre, délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
- STONE, J.H., secrétaire commercial, haut-commissariat en Nouvelle-Zélande.
- STONE, W.F., Direction économique.
- STONER, O.G., premier secrétaire, ambassade en Belgique.
- STRAUSS, amiral Lewis L., président, United States Atomic Energy Commission (-juin 1958) ; secrétaire du Commerce des États-Unis (oct. 1958-).
- STRAUSS, Franz Josef, ministre de la Défense de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- STURSBURG, Peter, attaché du presse et secrétaire, commission commerciale au Royaume-Uni.
- SUCRE, Carlos, chef, délégation du Panama à la Conférence du droit de la mer et président, troisième Commission de la Conférence.
- SUHRWARDY, Huseyn Shaheed, premier ministre du Pakistan (-oct. 1957).
- SUKARNO, président de l'Indonésie.
- SWEENEY, inspecteur C.J., Division spéciale/Direction de la sécurité et du renseignement, GRC.
- TAGGART, Dr. James Gordon, sous-ministre de l'Agriculture.
- TAYLOR, K.W., sous-ministre des Finances.
- SPENDER, Sir Percy, Ambassador of Australia in United States and Vice-Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly.
- STABELL, Bredo, Director, Legal Department, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Norway and Vice-Chairman, Delegation to Conference on the Law of the Sea.
- STADERINI, Ettore, Head, Political Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Italy; Euratom Commission.
- STARR, Michael, Minister of Labour.
- STASSEN, Harold, Special Assistant to President of United States on Disarmament.
- STAVROPOULOS, Constantin A., Legal Counsel, Office of Legal Affairs, United Nations Secretariat.
- STEACIE, Dr. E.W.R., President, National Research Council.
- STEPHENS, L.A.D., Counsellor, Embassy in Federal Republic of Germany.
- STEWART, J.G., Counsellor, Embassy of South Africa in United States, and member, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly.
- STONE, J.H., Commercial Secretary, High Commission in New Zealand.
- STONE, W.F., Economic Division.
- STONER, O.G., First Secretary, Embassy in Belgium.
- STRAUSS, Admiral Lewis L., Chairman, United States Atomic Energy Commission (-June 1958); Secretary of Commerce of United States (Oct. 1958—).
- STRAUSS, Franz Josef, Minister of Defence, Federal Republic of Germany.
- STURSBURG, Peter, Press Officer and Secretary, Trade Commission to United Kingdom.
- SUCRE, Carlos, Chairman, Delegation of Panama to Conference on the Law of the Sea; Chairman, Third Committee, Conference on the Law of the Sea.
- SUHRWARDY, Huseyn Shaheed, Prime Minister of Pakistan (-Oct. 1957).
- SUKARNO, President of Indonesia.
- SWEENEY, Inspector C. J., Special Branch/Directorate of Security and Intelligence, RCMP.
- TAGGART, Dr. James Gordon, Deputy Minister of Agriculture.
- TAYLOR, K.W., Deputy Minister of Finance.

- TCHANG KAI-CHEK, général, président de la République de Chine.
- TCHOU EN-LAI, premier ministre et ministre des Affaires étrangères de la République populaire de Chine.
- THOMPSON, Tyler, ministre, ambassade des États-Unis.
- THORNEYCROFT, Peter, chancelier de l'Échiquier du Royaume-Uni (-jan. 1958).
- TREMBLAY, Paul, chef, 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense.
- ULBRICHT, Walter, premier ministre de la République démocratique d'Allemagne.
- VAN RHIJN, Dr. A.J.R., ministre des Mines et aux Affaires économiques de l'Afrique du Sud.
- VAN SCHERPENBERG, Dr. Albert Hilger, secrétaire d'État, ministère des Affaires étrangères de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- VANIER, General Georges P., ancien ambassadeur en France.
- VASEY, E.A., ministre des Finances et du Développement du Kenya.
- VON BRENTANO, Heinrich, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.
- WAN WAITHAYAKON, Prince K.N.B., ministre des Affaires étrangères de la Thaïlande.
- WATKINS, J.B.C., sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures (-sept. 1958); ambassadeur au Danemark.
- WATSON, A., directeur, Construction navale et approvisionnement, ministère des Transports.
- WATSON, D., secrétaire, Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.
- WELENSKY, sir Roy, premier ministre de la Rhodésie et de la Nyasaland.
- WERSHOF, M.H., représentant permanent auprès du Bureau européen des Nations Unies.
- WILGRESS, L. D., représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et de l'OECE (-oct. 1958).
- WILLIAMS, Dudley F.P., deuxième secrétaire, ambassade du Royaume-Uni aux États-Unis.
- WILLIAMSON, Harry, attaché scientifique, ambassade aux États-Unis.
- WOLFE, Glenn George, directeur exécutif, ambassade des États-Unis en France et directeur administratif, délégation au Conseil de l'Atlantique nord.
- SEE CHIANG KAI-SHEK.
- SEE CHOU EN-LAI.
- THOMPSON, Tyler, Minister, Embassy of United States.
- THORNEYCROFT, Peter, Chancellor of the Exchequer of United Kingdom (-Jan. 1958).
- TREMBLAY, Paul, Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division.
- ULBRICHT, Walter, Premier, Democratic Republic of Germany.
- VAN RHIJN, Dr. A.J.R., Minister of Mines and Economic Affairs of South Africa.
- VAN SCHERPENBERG, Dr. Albert Hilger, State Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Federal Republic of Germany.
- VANIER, General Georges P., former Ambassador in France.
- VASEY, E.A., Minister of Finance and Development of Kenya.
- VON BRENTANO, Heinrich, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Federal Republic of Germany.
- WAN WAITHAYAKON, Prince K.N.B., Minister of Foreign Affairs of Thailand.
- WATKINS, J.B.C., Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (-Sept. 1958); Ambassador to Denmark.
- WATSON, A., Director, Ship Construction and Supply, Department of Transport.
- WATSON, D., Secretary, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd.
- WELENSKY, Sir Roy, Prime Minister of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.
- WERSHOF, M.H., Permanent Representative to European Office of United Nations.
- WILGRESS, L. D., Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC (-Oct. 1958).
- WILLIAMS, Dudley F.P., Second Secretary, Embassy of United Kingdom in United States.
- WILLIAMSON, Harry, Scientific Attaché, Embassy in United States.
- WOLFE, Glenn George, Executive Director, Embassy of United States in France and Director of Administration, Delegation to North Atlantic Council.

- WORMSER, Olivier, directeur, Affaires économiques et financières, ministère des Affaires étrangères de la France.
- WRIGHT, amiral Jerauld, commandant suprême des Forces alliées (SACLANT), OTAN.
- WYNDHAM White, Eric, secrétaire exécutif du GATT.
- YINGLING, R.T., conseiller juridique adjoint, département d'État des États-Unis.
- ZORIN, Valerian A., sous-ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique.
- ZORLU, Fatin Rüstü, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la Turquie.
- ZOUREK, Jaroslav, directeur, Direction des droits internationaux, Académie des sciences de la Tchécoslovaquie, président de la Commission du droit international des Nations Unies (1957) et représentant de la Tchécoslovaquie à cette commission (1958); président du cinquième Commission de la Conférence sur le droit de la mer (fév.-avr. 1958).
- WORMSER, Olivier, Director of Economic and Financial Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France.
- WRIGHT, Admiral Jerauld, Supreme Allied Commander (SACLANT), NATO.
- WYNDHAM White, Eric, Executive Secretary, GATT.
- YINGLING, R.T., Assistant Legal Adviser, Department of State of United States.
- ZORIN, Valerian A., Deputy Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union.
- ZORLU, Fatin Rüstü, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Turkey.
- ZOUREK, Jaroslav, Director, International Rights Division, Academy of Sciences, Czechoslovakia; Chairman, United Nations International Law Commission (1957) and Representative of Czechoslovakia to International Law Commission (1958); Chairman, Fifth Committee of the Conference on the Law of the Sea (Feb.-Apr. 1958).

ILLUSTRATIONS

Toutes les photographies provenant de la Direction de l'art documentaire et de la photographie des Archives nationales portent le numéro du négatif dans l'angle inférieur gauche.

Toutes les démarches possibles ont été effectuées en vue de communiquer avec les détenteurs des droits d'auteur.

All photos from the Documentary Art and Photography Division of the National Archives are marked with the negative number in the bottom left-hand corner.

Every attempt has been made to contact copyright holders.

PA 57930

Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker, December 1958.

Le premier ministre John G. Diefenbaker, décembre 1958.

PA 214179

Under-secretary of State for External Affairs, Jules Léger (left) and Secretary of State for External Affairs, Sidney Smith, September 1957.

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures, Jules Léger (gauche) et le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures, Sidney Smith, septembre 1957.

UN 56789

The Hon. George A. Drew, Chairman of the Canadian Delegation to the First United Nations Law of the Sea Conference in Geneva, addresses a meeting of the First Committee dealing with the territorial sea and contiguous zones, March 1958.

L'honorable George A. Drew, président de la délégation canadienne à la Première Conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer à Genève, prend la parole à une réunion de la Première Commission portant sur la mer territoriale et la zone contiguë, mars 1958.

UN 54810

The Canadian Delegation attends a meeting of the United Nations General Assembly, New York, 23 September 1958. Front row, left to right: Frank Lennard, Josie D. Quart, Wallace Nesbitt, Sidney Smith, John Diefenbaker. Second row, left to right: W.D. Matthews, Théogène Ricard, E.B. Rogers, Escott Reid and Harry White.

La délégation canadienne assiste à une réunion de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à New York, le 23 septembre 1958. Première rangée, de gauche à droite : Frank Lennard, Josie D. Quart, Wallace Nesbitt, Sidney Smith, John Diefenbaker. Deuxième rangée, de gauche à droite : W.D. Matthews, Théogène Ricard, E.B. Rogers, Escott Reid et Harry White.

PA 214238

Norman Robertson, Canadian Ambassador in Washington, presents a $50,000 cheque on behalf of the Canadian Red Cross to James T. Nicholson, executive vice-president of the American Red Cross, to aid hurricane victims in Texas and Louisiana, July 1957.

Norman Robertson, ambassadeur du Canada à Washington, présente un chèque de 50 000 $ au nom de la Croix-Rouge canadienne à James T. Nicholson, vice-président administratif de la Croix-Rouge américaine, afin d'aider les victimes des ouragans au Texas et en Louisiane, juillet 1957.

Diefenbaker Centre. JGD 4456

Sidney Smith, Finance Minister Donald Fleming, Defence Minister George Pearkes and John Diefenbaker at the NATO Heads of Government Meeting, Paris, 1958.

Sidney Smith, le ministre des Finances Donald Fleming, le ministre de la Défense George Pearkes et John Diefenbaker à la réunion des chefs de gouvernement de l'OTAN, Paris, 1958.

PA 128994

Left to right: Sir Saville Garner, High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in Canada, K.W. Taylor, Deputy Minister of Finance and A.F.W. Plumptre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance at the Commonwealth Finance Ministers Conference, Mont Tremblant, September 1957.

De gauche à droite : Sir Saville Garner, haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni au Canada, K.W. Taylor, sous-ministre des Finances, et A.F.W. Plumptre, sous-ministre adjoint des Finances, à la Conférence des ministres des Finances du Commonwealth au Mont Tremblant en septembre 1957.

PA 214180

Gordon Churchill (left), Minister of Trade and Commerce, prepares to visit the United Kingdom, September 1957. On the right is Richard Hatfield, Churchill's executive assistant and the future premier of New Brunswick.

Gordon Churchill (gauche), ministre du Commerce, se prépare à effectuer une visite au Royaume-Uni, en septembre 1957. On observe à droite Richard Hatfield, chef de Cabinet de Churchill et futur premier ministre du Nouveau-Brunswick.

PA 114549

Leaders of delegations to the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference, Montreal, September 1958. Front row, left to right: Morarji Desai (India), A.H. Nordmeyer (New Zealand), D. Heathcoat Amory (United Kingdom), Donald Fleming (Canada), John McEwan (Australia), A.J.R. van Rijhan (South Africa). Back row, left to right: Sir Henry Lee (Malaya), Stanley de Zoysa (Ceylon), Syed Amjad Ali (Pakistan), K.A.Gbedemah (Ghana), Donald McIntyre (Rhodesia and Nyasaland).

Chefs de délégations à la Conférence du Commonwealth sur le commerce et les affaires économiques à Montréal en septembre 1958. Au premier rang, de gauche à droite : Morarji Desai (Inde), A.H. Nordmeyer (Nouvelle-Zélande), D. Heathcoat Amory (Royaume-Uni), Donald Fleming (Canada), John McEwan (Australie), A.J.R. van Rijhan (Afrique du Sud). Au dernier rang, de gauche à droite : Sir Henry Lee (Malaya), Stanley de Zoysa (Ceylan), Syed Amjad Ali (Pakistan), K.A. Gbedemah (Ghana), Donald McIntyre (Rhodésie et Nyassaland).

Diefenbaker Centre, JGD 982

Olive Diefenbaker, John Diefenbaker and Chester Ronning, Canada's High Commissioner in India, pay their respects at Mahatma Gandhi's shrine at Rajghat, November 1958.

Olive Diefenbaker, John Diefenbaker et Chester Ronning, haut-commissaire du Canada en Inde, présentent leurs respects sur le tombeau de Mahatma Gandhi à Rajghat en novembre 1958.

PA 214237

Mohammed Saeed (right), Canada's 1,000th Colombo Plan trainee, greeted in Ottawa by the Pakistan High Commission's Commercial Secretary, I. Malik (left), and D. Bartlett, Colombo Plan Administrator, Department of Trade and Commerce, October 1958.

Mohammed Saeed (à droite), 1 000^e stagiaire au Canada du Plan de Colombo, est accueilli à Ottawa par le secrétaire commercial du haut-commissariat du Pakistan, I. Malik (à gauche), et D. Bartlett, administrateur du Plan Colombo, ministère du Commerce, octobre 1958.

PA 214184

Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Prime Minister of Ghana, reviews an honour guard on Parliament Hill, Ottawa, July 1958.

Kwame Nkrumah, premier ministre du Ghana, passe en revue une garde d'honneur sur la Colline du Parlement à Ottawa en juillet 1958.

CHAPITRE PREMIER/CHAPTER I NATIONS UNIES ET AUTRES ORGANISATIONS
INTERNATIONALES
UNITED NATIONS AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1

NATIONS UNIES
UNITED NATIONS

SECTION A

DOUZIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE À NEW YORK,
17 SEPTEMBRE AU 14 DÉCEMBRE 1957
TWELFTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, NEW YORK,
SEPTEMBER 17 TO DECEMBER 14, 1957

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

INSTRUCTIONS À LA DÉLÉGATION CANADIENNE
INSTRUCTIONS TO THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

1.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 223-57

[Ottawa], September 16, 1957

SECRET

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE TWELFTH SESSION
OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS¹

Attached to this Memorandum are General Instructions for the Canadian Delegation to the Twelfth Session of the United Nations General Assembly which opens in New York on September 17, 1957.

¹ La délégation canadienne était dirigée par Sidney Smith et Wallace Nesbitt, respectivement président et vice-président. Pour obtenir la liste exhaustive des membres de la délégation, voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures vol 9, N° 10, octobre 1957, p. 296.

The Canadian delegation was led by Sidney Smith and Wallace Nesbitt as Chairman and Vice-Chairman, respectively. For a complete list of Delegation members, see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 9, No. 10, October 1957, p. 295.

These Instructions provide broad policy guidance and summarize the position to be taken by the Delegation on the major issues likely to arise at the Twelfth Session.

Items on Suez Canal Clearance and the future of the United Nations Emergency Force do not as yet appear on the Provisional Agenda but they are likely to be introduced at an early stage. If necessary, these will be subjects of further submissions to Cabinet.

The undersigned recommends that the attached Instructions be approved by Cabinet.²

JOHN G. DIEFENBAKER

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

SECRET

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE TWELFTH SESSION
OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The Twelfth regular session of the United Nations General Assembly opens on September 17 with an agenda of 63 items. This memorandum contains instructions on certain important items and on the general policy of the Delegation. These will be supplemented by instructions to the Delegation on specific questions as they arise.

At the forthcoming session Canada is a candidate for the Security Council on which Canada served for a term in 1948 and 1949. Widespread support for our candidature has been expressed by Commonwealth and other governments. Election to the Security Council would entail important new responsibilities for Canada.

The Delegation should seek to express Canada's strong support for the United Nations and to point out that, despite its imperfections, the organizations has played an essential part in maintaining peace, ending conflicts and advancing the social and economic welfare of its members. The Delegation in particular should play the active role which Canada is peculiarly fitted to play in promoting understanding between Western countries and the countries of Asia and Africa in order to prevent the widening of a breach which threatens to weaken the strength of the United Nations.

² Le Cabinet a approuvé ces instructions le 19 septembre 1957, à l'exception des sections autorisant le Canada à soutenir la candidature de l'Égypte à un siège au Conseil économique et social, et de l'inscription des points portant sur l'apartheid et le traitement des personnes d'origine indienne en Afrique du Sud. Le Cabinet estimait que l'Afrique du Sud pouvait établir ses propres politiques internes, et que la délégation devait en conséquence avoir la capacité de voter contre l'inclusion de ces points si nécessaire. Les fonctionnaires des Affaires extérieures ont par la suite convaincu le premier ministre Diefenbaker que voter contre la candidature de l'Égypte à un siège de l'ECOSOC en l'absence de tout autre candidat valable constituerait un affront fait aux nations arabes. Le 20 septembre 1957, le Cabinet autorisait la délégation à appuyer l'Égypte.

Cabinet approved these instructions on September 19, 1957 with the exception of the sections authorizing Canada's support of Egypt for a seat on the Economic and Social Council and the inscription of the items dealing with apartheid and the treatment of people of Indian origin in South Africa. Cabinet agreed that South Africa could determine its own domestic policies and the Delegation should therefore be given the flexibility to vote against inscription of these items if necessary. External Affairs officials subsequently convinced Prime Minister Diefenbaker that a vote against Egypt's bid for an ECOSOC seat in the absence of any other suitable candidate would be an affront to Arab nations. On September 20, 1957, Cabinet authorized the Delegation to support Egypt.

Disarmament

The situation is now one of virtual deadlock as a result of the negative Soviet response to the four-power proposals. The widespread international concern which now exists over lack of progress towards disarmament will no doubt find full expression in the Assembly, and the Western Powers must be ready to defend their position.

The Delegation should act in concert with other Western Powers in presenting the Western position in the best possible light, mitigating pressures for action which might be prejudicial to Western security and rallying United Nations opinion in favour of the resumption of negotiations. In particular, since our principal allies are not prepared to accept the cessation or suspension of nuclear tests as an isolated proposition, we should join with them and other friendly delegations in making clear the drawbacks of such a step.

Hungary

Canada's objectives in this question should be to gain broad endorsement for the Special Committee's report which denounces Soviet intervention in forthright terms; to keep Soviet actions in Hungary prominently in the eyes of the world; and to bring pressure to bear on the Soviet and Hungarian governments which it is hoped may eventually result in relief from oppression for the people of Hungary.

Algeria

The inflexibility of the French attitude — that Algeria is essentially French and that independence for Algeria is out of the question — creates increasing difficulties for the friends of France. Opposing the French position on the substantive issue, however, could have serious consequences for NATO and our relations with France, as well as contributing to a reduction in French cooperation in the work of the United Nations. The Delegation should not, therefore, oppose the French position in the Assembly debate on the question, but they should do what they can behind the scenes to bring about a reasonable resolution that would avoid an open break on this issue between the African-Asian group and the West.

Cyprus

Last year the United Kingdom Delegation did not oppose inscription of this item, and the wisdom of this decision was shown by the fact that they achieved a good deal of support for their position in the debate. This year the problem has been complicated by the fact that the Greeks have included in the wording of the item references to "violations of human rights and atrocities", which prejudice the issue. The item in this form would almost inevitably be opposed by the United Kingdom, which might submit a counter-item. The Greeks may, however, be persuaded to have the item simply inscribed as "The Cyprus Question." The Delegation should not support inscription unless a change of this kind is made. On the substance of the matter it should support the United Kingdom position while seeking to assist any helpful moves toward a settlement.

Chinese Representation

The problem of Chinese representation has arisen at every session of the General Assembly since 1950 and this year the United States will probably again be able to carry its procedural motion to postpone consideration of the question for the duration of the session. Though there are signs that the United States attitude on this question may not remain in the future as rigid as in the past, United States public opinion on this remains strong and the acceptance of Communist Chinese credentials to the Chinese seat in the United Nations at this stage could have serious repercussions on the attitude of the United States to the United Nations. The Delegation should therefore vote in favour of a procedural motion postponing consideration of Chinese representation for a fixed period such as "for the duration of the twelfth session of the General Assembly".

Elections to Organs of the United Nations

The Delegation should vote for Sir Leslie Munro for the Presidency of the twelfth session rather than Dr. Charles Malik of Lebanon who is the only other candidate. In the elections to the Security Council, in which Canada is a candidate for one of the three non-permanent seats, the Delegation should also support Japan and the candidate picked by the Latin American caucus which will probably be Panama.

There are six vacancies to be filled in the Economic and Social Council. France, The Netherlands, Chile and Costa Rica will be elected without difficulty in accordance with the established conventions of representation and the Delegation may support them. The Delegation may also support Egypt for the Middle Eastern seat if no other acceptable Middle Eastern candidate emerges. One of the conventions would provide for the re-election of China as one of the "great powers" but a contest is expected for this seat. The Delegation may vote for China on the first ballot but if a deadlock appears likely the Delegation may shift its vote to the Philippines, which will probably have Asian support.

For election to the International Court of Justice, the Delegation should vote for the following four candidates nominated by the Canadian National Groups: Sir Percy Spender, (Australia), Mr. Winiarski, (Poland), Mr. Sauser-Hall (Switzerland), Mr. Mynt Thein (Burma). The Delegation will be instructed later on the fifth candidate to support.

The Admission of New Members

Canada with fellow members of the Commonwealth will co-sponsor a resolution recommending Malaya's admission to the United Nations.

If the admission of both halves of the divided countries of Korea and Vietnam is raised again at the twelfth session, the Delegation should vote for the admission of South Korea and against the admission of North Korea, which we do not recognize. Because of our enforced neutral position as a member of the International Supervisory Commission in Vietnam the Delegation should abstain in the vote on North and South Vietnam. The Delegation might also abstain on the admission of Mongolia as a compromise between the Canadian position that the United Nations is more effective if it is as universal as possible and the strong opposition of the United States and some other countries to the admission of Mongolia.

Expansion of United Nations Organs

Asian and African members of the United Nations are justifiably dissatisfied with the composition of the Security Council upon which they are not adequately represented. In the face of a Soviet refusal to contemplate any Charter amendment to increase membership until the question of Chinese representation had been resolved, the Assembly at the eleventh session referred to the twelfth session the questions of enlarging the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the International Court of Justice. If last year's proposal to enlarge the Security Council by two non-permanent members is revived and receives general support the Delegation may support it in preference to proposals for a larger increase which might diminish the effectiveness of this body.

The increase in the membership of the United Nations has also resulted in proposals for expansion of the Economic and Social Council and it is most probable that provision for wider representation by enlargement of the Council will eventually be made although agreement on the amendment to the Charter required for this purpose will not be easy to obtain. There is a danger that wider expansion will render the Economic and Social Council unwieldy and its work less effective. The Delegation may support a proposal to enlarge the Council if such a proposal is pressed and has strong support. It should favour a modest increase (three seats) in preference to more extensive proposals and should favour a distribution of seats which would maintain so far as possible the present pattern of voting strength in the Council.

The Delegation should oppose an increase in the number of judges in the International Court since the size of United Nations membership has no bearing on the size of the Court.

South Africa

At past sessions Canada has voted for inscription of two items dealing with apartheid and with the treatment of people of Indian origin in South Africa. If the situation in the Assembly at the present session has not materially changed, the Delegation might again vote for inscription of these items. If, however, some friendly delegations come to the conclusion that it would be desirable to encourage South Africa to resume a fuller cooperation with the United Nations and that this might be effected by not favouring inscription, the Delegation this year might abstain on inscription of this item. In explanation of such action it might be stated that there has been ample opportunity in the past to discuss racial problems in South Africa and there is no practical value in so doing once again. If, as expected, the items are inscribed, the Delegation should vote against any proposals which call for United Nations intervention in South African affairs. If any resolutions are put forward which do not call for intervention and are not objectionable in themselves, the Delegation may nevertheless abstain if our position on inscription requires such action in order to be consistent.

Korea

At this session the main discussion on this procedural item will centre on the recently-announced intention of the United States forces in Korea to modernize its military equipment in Korea because of Communist breaches of the Armistice Agreement and the need to counterbalance the military buildup which has taken place in North Korea. A Communist-sponsored motion condemning the United States decision will probably be introduced and the Delegation should vote against it. As some accusations have been made that the West is not seriously interested in reunification it is desirable to avoid any statement on reunification which indicates a too rigid or inflexible view of the conditions on which reunification might be achieved.

West Irian (West New Guinea)

For the fourth successive year an item on West New Guinea (known as West Irian to the Indonesians) has been inscribed on the Provisional Agenda. Since The Netherlands relinquished sovereignty over Indonesia in 1949, Indonesia has disputed The Netherlands' right to rule West New Guinea, but The Netherlands retains possession. Canada's position in the past has been that the dispute should be referred to the International Court for decision on the legal merits of the two claims. We have not considered that there were sound reasons for opposing a discussion of the subject in the Assembly, but we have doubted whether such a discussion would assist in finding a solution. Consequently Canada has abstained on the question of inscribing the item. At this session the Delegation should abstain on inscription of the item. On the substance of the issue the Delegation should not support the Indonesian claim which is not based on sound arguments of racial affinity or historical right.

Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development

The idea of establishing, under the auspices of the United Nations, a special fund for channelling capital aid to the less developed countries has been under discussion in the General Assembly and elsewhere since 1951. It has had strong support, especially from the under-developed countries.

At the twenty-fourth session of ECOSOC, a resolution was passed with only Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States opposing, calling for a special fund to be established by the General Assembly at its next Session. The Delegation may therefore find it necessary to indicate whether or not Canada would be prepared to contribute to such a fund if it is established, with or without the support of the United States and the United Kingdom. Pending a decision by the Government in this connection, the Delegation should intervene in the debate only to the extent that is necessary to indicate its continued support in principle for the establishment of some type of fund, and its doubts about the usefulness of any such fund which does not have strong financial support.

Questions of Dependent Territories

In trusteeship matters it has been the Canadian view that the details of the administration of trust territories should be left to the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly should concern itself with broad principles. The Delegation should maintain this attitude. It should also seek to moderate the inevitable disagreements between those countries that administer trust territories or colonies and those that do not and are critical of the administering powers.

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

ÉLECTIONS DU CONSEIL DE SÉCURITÉ
SECURITY COUNCIL ELECTIONS

2.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 128-57

[Ottawa], July 8, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

THE COMMONWEALTH SEAT ON THE SECURITY COUNCIL

1. In accordance with the so-called "Gentlemen's Agreement" reached in San Francisco in 1945 one of the non-permanent seats of the Security Council has been considered a "Commonwealth Seat" and by 1955 had been occupied in turn by all the Commonwealth members of the United Nations, excluding the United Kingdom, which has a permanent seat, and South Africa, which chose not to run. With the election of Australia for a two-year term beginning January 1, 1956, a second round was started and Canada stands next in line. The two newest members of the Commonwealth, Ceylon and Ghana, have only recently been admitted to the United Nations and have not displayed any interest in running for election to the Council.

2. Because of the considerable expansion of membership of the United Nations during the last two years there is a likelihood that conventions governing the allocation of seats will break down or be disregarded. It is important, however, to attempt to maintain the institution of a Commonwealth seat, not only because it contributes to Commonwealth solidarity but also because it affords by far the best opportunity for countries like Canada to have a regular opportunity to serve on the Council. But by the same token it is in our own interest to do all we can to ensure that the newer members of the Commonwealth, without whose participation the statistical justification for a Commonwealth seat in an expanded United Nations would disappear, are convinced that it is to their advantage to remain on the Commonwealth roster. For this reason some thought has been given to the desirability of yielding our turn to one of the Asian members and in particular to India (since at this stage Ceylon appears neither well equipped nor anxious to assume such heavy responsibilities) and of standing for election to the Council two years later.

3. The principal advantages of such a course are:

(a) It might serve to arrest any tendency on the part of Asian members to drift away from the Commonwealth roster on to the roster of an Asian seat should one be provided by amendment of the Charter.

It would also constitute effective evidence of our understanding of the legitimate aspirations of the Asian members of the Commonwealth and be well calculated to strengthen their belief in the value of Commonwealth association.

(b) It would afford opportunity for Asia, which is undoubtedly under-represented at present, to be represented on the Council without interference with existing conventional allocation of seats while in the interim it might be possible to reach agreement on an expansion of the membership of the Council.

(c) It would relieve us from accepting further burdensome responsibilities at a time when our available resources are already under severe strain. Two years from now our present engagements in Indo-China and the Middle East may be substantially reduced, whereas membership in the Security Council in 1958-9 would inevitably involve us in a great many additional complex and difficult disputes one of which, the question of Kashmir, is particularly embarrassing for a Commonwealth country.

4. Soundings were accordingly taken to determine what would be the reaction of some of our principal friends and allies if we were to stand down. As a result it has become clear that, among others, the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and the United States would very much prefer Canada to be a candidate because, even though they recognize the force of arguments in favour of passing the seat to Asia, they believe that the next two years will be particularly important for determining the future role of the United Nations. Moreover India has indicated that it would be glad to support Canada's candidature for the Security Council and we have had informal indication that Pakistan, while it would vigorously oppose the candidature of India, would readily support that of Canada.

5. There are a number of additional reasons why Canada should consider standing for election, viz:

(a) Canada has played an active role in the United Nations and is regarded by many members as a country which can be counted upon to help find acceptable solutions to difficult problems; if we run, therefore, our chances for election appear to be very good.

(b) If in the next few years the "Gentlemen's Agreement" is to break down we might, in addition to losing the principle of a Commonwealth seat, forfeit our opportunity to serve on the Security Council for a long time to come.

(c) Japan has announced its candidature for the seat occupied this year by the Philippines under a temporary arrangement designed to break the deadlock with Yugoslavia in the 1955 elections for the Eastern European seat.³ With the support of the United States Japan may well succeed in winning election, in which case Asia would secure representation.

(d) The election of Canada to the Commonwealth seat and of Japan to the Eastern European seat might serve to persuade both the USSR and India that in their own interests they should support the widespread move for a limited expansion of the Security Council which, for different reasons, they have previously opposed; this in turn might serve to maintain respect for the convention upon which the institution of the Commonwealth seat depends.

6. If we are to run, it is important that we should announce our candidature as soon as possible and on balance, after having discussed the matter with our Commonwealth colleagues during the Prime Ministers' Conference, particularly with the Prime Minister of India, it is my considered opinion that even though election to the Security Council would impose heavy additional responsibilities upon us, we should not be justified in declining to accept the obligations of membership in the Council at this juncture.⁴

JOHN G. DIEFENBAKER

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III

ALGÉRIE
ALGERIA

3.

DEA/12177-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*⁵

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs*⁴

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], September 11, 1957

THE ALGERIAN QUESTION

A group of Arab and Asian states has for the third successive year requested that "The Algerian Question" be inscribed on the agenda of the United Nations General Assembly. While France at the last two sessions of the General Assembly has maintained that the difficulties in Algeria are exclusively within its domestic jurisdiction and that consequently the United Nations has no competence in the matter, it decided last year to refrain from opposing inscription of the item.

³ Voir/See Volume 21, Document 3.

⁴ Le 11 juillet 1957, le Cabinet convenait que le Canada devait se faire élire au Conseil de sécurité. Le 1^{er} octobre suivant, le Canada était un des pays élus au Conseil, ayant reçu 72 votes sur les 78 inscrits. Les autres pays étaient le Panama, avec 74 votes, et le Japon, avec 55 votes.

On July 11, 1957, Cabinet agreed that Canada should stand for election to the Security Council. On October 1, 1957, Canada was one of the countries elected to the Security Council, receiving 72 votes out of a total of 78 ballots cast. Canada was joined by Panama, which received 74 votes, and Japan, which received 55 votes.

⁵ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Seen & returned by the Minister Sept 17 [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

2. At the 10th session of the General Assembly (1955) Canada sided with France in opposing inscription.⁶ At the 11th session the Canadian delegate expressed doubt as to the wisdom of discussing a matter which under the United Nations Charter was clearly within the domestic jurisdiction of a member state but welcomed the French decision to present their views on the problem.⁷ He then went on to praise France's efforts in Algeria and urged that France be left to work out a solution of the Algerian problem with the elected representatives of the Algerian people. Canada took no further part in the debate but voted against resolutions unacceptable to France and joined in the unanimous adoption of a resolution which expressed the hope that "in a spirit of co-operation, a peaceful, democratic and just solution will be found, through appropriate means, in conformity with the principles of the United Nations Charter".

3. French tactics at the forthcoming session are not yet certain. It seems likely that they will once again maintain that the United Nations lacks competence in the matter but will not oppose inscription of the item. They will probably, as last year, describe their efforts to achieve a settlement in Algeria through their offer of a cease-fire to be followed by free elections (to the National Assembly in Paris) and negotiations for the future status of Algeria. In support of their assertion that they are making a constructive effort to achieve a solution the French will point to a new statute for Algeria (now being considered by the French Cabinet) which will provide for the division of Algeria into several regions, each with an Assembly and a large measure of autonomy and increased Algerian representation in Paris. They are also likely to dwell on the atrocities of the Algerian Nationalists and their intransigence in refusing to budge from their demand for French acceptance of the principle of Algerian independence as a prior condition to political negotiations on the future of the territory.

4. The French plan for Algeria, to the extent that it has been revealed, does not retreat from their previous stand that Algerian independence is out of the question. This will prove unacceptable to the Afro-Asian bloc. This bloc may submit a condemnatory or critical resolution. Even our abstention on such a resolution, while it would be welcome to the declared opponents of France, might influence a number of uncommitted countries to do likewise and thereby increase the possibility of an adverse vote. It would be very strongly resented by the French Government.

5. We should not lose sight of the fact that as the history of the Algerian Nationalists' struggle for independence lengthens, so support grows for their cause in the uncommitted countries of the world. Our continued support for France in the United Nations on this issue could therefore be misconstrued and we would lay ourselves open to accusations that we are supporting the maintenance of a colonial régime against the wishes of the people concerned.

6. Informal consultations in London reveal that the United Kingdom has decided to support the French position. They and the United States have, however, strongly urged the French that something must be done to improve their case on Algeria in time to avoid a nasty battle in the United Nations. It is suggested that in the circumstances the Delegation be instructed to do what it can behind the scenes to bring about a reasonable compromise resolution that will avoid an open break on this issue between the Afro-Asian group and the West. What we have in mind would be to contribute towards producing the kind of compromise resolution (quoted in paragraph 2) which was eventually adopted in the plenary last session. The French should be told privately and informally that it is becoming very difficult for us to continue to support them on the Algerian issue.

⁶ Voir/See Volume 21, Document 94.

⁷ Voir/See Volume 22, Document 345.

J. L[ÉGER]

4.

DEA/12177-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2670

New York, December 3, 1957

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

By Bag Cairo from Ottawa.

By Bag Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid from London.

ALGERIA PROPOSED ARAB-ASIAN RESOLUTION

The following is the text of a working draft of the proposed Arab-Asian resolution tentatively agreed on this afternoon. It is being circulated confidentially and when other groups' reaction has been ascertained a definitive text will be agreed on at a meeting tomorrow.

2. Our own comments will follow shortly.

3. Text Begins:

"The General Assembly having discussed the question of Algeria, recalling its resolution 1012 (XI) February 15/57, regretting that the hope expressed in that resolution has not yet been realized, recognizing that the principle of self-determination is applicable to the Algerian people, noting that the situation in Algeria continues to cause much suffering and loss of human life, calls for negotiations for the purpose of arriving at a solution in accordance with the principle and purposes of the charter of the UN." Text ends.

5.

DEA/12177-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2677

New York, December 3, 1957

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris (Information).

Repeat Cairo deferred from Ottawa.

By Bag Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid from London.

ALGERIA

The position in the First Committee, now discussing the Algerian item, is as follows:

(a) The list of speakers was closed this evening at which time a substantial number of names had been added. The Chairman announced that the Committee would hold three meetings on December 4 in order to complete the general debate on the item. As yet no draft resolution has been tabled.

(b) The African-Asian group have given tentative approval to the draft resolution contained in our telegram 2670 December 3. A working group of nine will seek the reactions of other delegations and report to the group early tomorrow afternoon. Lall of India has already indicated that he might accept "recommends discussion" instead of "calls for negotiations" in the operative paragraph. Lall hinted also that the fourth (self determination) paragraph of the preamble might be deleted if this would make the text acceptable to the French. Later, Loutfi of Egypt said he could accept "invites discussions" in the last operative paragraph. These changes, of course, would have to be accepted by the group.

(c) The representatives of Italy and Peru are contemplating a text which would reflect the position of France. The French are aware that this text would fail to win the necessary support in the Assembly.

(d) The representatives of Iran and Japan (and perhaps Thailand) have been working "in great secrecy" on a compromise. They have already produced drafts acceptable to France. They are no doubt thinking along the lines of their initiative last year but we have regretfully concluded that their activities at this session might have been premature. They are apparently considering an operative paragraph which would invite France to take advantage of the opportunities afforded by recent developments for reaching a peaceful solution to the Algerian question. To the French "recent developments" could mean the Loi Cadre and to the African-Asians, the offer of good offices by Tunisia and Morocco. The formula is ingenious but perhaps too much so to meet the current situation.

2. We have the impression that both the French and the Japanese have been surprised by the moderation expressed in the African-Asian draft resolution. We believe that the African-Asians are earnestly seeking a text which would have the widest possible support in the Assembly and which at the same time would cause minimum embarrassment to the French government. On its face the current text seems unobjectionable and we and others, including the USA and Norwegian delegations, might be hardpressed to find a suitable explanation for a vote against the draft resolution. The question arises whether we should try to persuade the French to accept the text or a modified version.

3. In their present mood the French delegation are unlikely to be accommodating and they might count on the Italian-Peruvian proposal and the initiative by Iran and Japan to save the day for them. It might be quite possible for the French in these circumstances and with the help of their NATO partners to defeat the African-Asian proposal by the process of a blocking third. However, this result might be neither helpful to the actual situation in Algeria nor beneficial to the long-term position of the Western Powers in Africa and Asia.

4. We have reported the Arab references to Spaak's remarks about the position of NATO as regards Algeria. We now know from NATO telegram 2162 December 3† that Spaak has been quoted out of context and that the interpretation given here is not well founded. We seriously doubt, however, that Spaak's remark could be effectively explained away by placing it in its context. Spaak's accompanying remarks, as quoted by Wilgress, do not readily lend themselves to effective application in debate here, and this would be particularly true if the NATO powers should find themselves voting consistently with France on the various proposals submitted.

5. For this reason we have been considering with the USA and Norwegian delegations what action we might take to try to improve the position of the Western Powers in the eyes of other delegations and particularly our friends from Africa and Asia. The most effective method would be, of course, to persuade the French to accept the African-Asian text. Alternatively they might be urged to accept a real compromise and not one to which they had agreed beforehand. Such a compromise would have to contain some comfort for each side and it might be a modification of either the African-Asian text or the one which Japan and Iran are contemplating. We had in mind that as a start the Japanese might indicate to the French their misgivings about pursuing their own initiative in the face of the moderate text put forward by the African-Asians. This would make the French less complacent about the outcome of the debate and perhaps influence them to have more flexibility toward the African-Asian approach. At the same time we and others, but especially the USA and Norwegian delegations, could indicate to the French that we might find it difficult to oppose the African-Asian text. These tactics might help to bring about some accommodation of opposing views in the Assembly.

6. We emphasize that our aim would be not to weaken the position of France in the Assembly but to give the French government an opportunity to adjust its policies to meet the moderate approach by the African-Asians. The USA delegation believe that the French should be persuaded by one means or another to take advantage of the Tunisian-Moroccan initiative. Apparently USA officials have some concern about the USA position in those two countries. For our part we are much more concerned about the general position of the Western Powers in the whole of Africa and Asia and of course Canada's own relations with the individual countries. We have in mind too the position which Canada has carefully built over the years at the UN. We shall be exploring these ideas in further conversations during the next day or so and specifically we shall approach the UK delegation who have tended to stand on the sidelines, but who have shown some misgiving about the inflexibility in the French position.

[W.K.] NESBITT

6.

DEA/12177-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM S-392

Ottawa, December 4, 1957

SECRET. EMERGENCY.

Reference: Your Tel 2677 of Dec 3.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information) (Routine).

By Bag Cairo, Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid.

ALGERIA

It seems to us that the happiest end of the present debate on Algeria would be a resolution introduced by the Arab-Asian group which could be supported by the French. We are impressed by the moderate wording of the Arab-Asian resolution (your telegram 2670 of December 3) and wonder whether it might not be possible to have it introduced with some amendments (along the lines hinted at by Lall and Loufi) which might make it acceptable to the French.

2. We also think for many reasons, including those referred to in paragraph 6 of your telegram 2677, that some reference should be made to discussions (implicit in the Tunisian-Moroccan offer of good offices) as a means to bring about at least a cease-fire. While we realize that the French have rejected the Tunisian-Moroccan offer as a means of seeking a settlement between France and the Algerian nationalists, it is our impression that they might not reject Tunisian and Moroccan assistance in bringing about a cease-fire.

3. If the opportunity is still open to you we would suggest that you approach the French informally to see whether they would be prepared to accept the Arab-Asian draft resolution from which reference to self-determination had been deleted and the last part of which had been amended to read along the following lines: "Expresses the hope that discussions will take place to bring about an early cessation of hostilities and the creation of conditions in which a solution can be found in accordance with the purposes and principles of the charter of the U.N." If it appears that the French could accept such a modified version of the Arab-Asian draft resolution, you might then give it informally to one of your friends in the Arab-Asian group as a modification of their original draft which we could support and which we think might be generally acceptable.

4. As regards your position vis-à-vis the Japanese and Iranians we wonder whether you could not perhaps seek their support in the attempt to have the Arab-Asians modify their draft resolution once you have ascertained that the French would accept a modified version.

7.

DEA/12177-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2712

New York, December 5, 1957

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2677 Dec 3.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

Repeat Cairo from Ottawa.

By Bag Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid from London.

ALGERIA

In this telegram we can do little more than summarize briefly the developments behind the scenes during the past two days which have been both rapid and confused. The telegram will serve to confirm and complete our reports by phone on this subject.

2. The main activity has been to find language for a draft resolution which the French could acquiesce in even though they could not accept it. The assumption has been that the French delegation would not participate either in the debate or in the voting on resolutions. Because of the moderation in the African-Asian approach this year we have been trying to find a formula for improving their text from the point of view of France. As matters stand tonight, we have not succeeded in bringing about a reconciliation of the opposing views but I think we have demonstrated to both sides our perseverance and good faith in pursuing that aim. We have been working very closely with the Norwegians and USA delegation and have been consulting as appropriate with others, such as the delegations of France, UK, Brazil, India, Iran, Pakistan, Japan, Egypt and Ireland.

3. We have been concentrating on two paragraphs in the African-Asian draft namely:

(a) The fourth preambular paragraph, which in their text referred to the principle of self-determination being applicable to the Algerian people. Mention of "self-determination", like "sovereignty" and "independence", in the draft resolution has been considered objectionable by the French, so that we had tended to work for a formula which was first suggested by Boland of Ireland and later revised by Engen of Norway. It would recognize that people of Algeria "are entitled to work out their own future in a democratic way".⁸ This language would be less objectionable to the French because it tends to recognize that elections should precede any other step in the direction of a more independent status for Algeria.

(b) The operative paragraph, which in the African-Asian text called for "negotiations for the purpose of arriving at a solution". This raises a major point of difference as between the French and Arabs. The French insist that in the initial stage there can only be discussion or negotiation about a ceasefire and not about a "solution" which would involve discussion about the future status of Algeria. Because of the difficulties involved there has been no disposition here to define what party or parties the French would negotiate with. Both sides seem willing to leave that question unanswered.

4. On December 4, the African-Asians met early in the afternoon to consider the reactions of other delegations to their draft resolution. It was clear from their discussions with Western representatives, like the Norwegians, that the African-Asians would have to alter their text if it was to have wide support. Loutfi and Lall reported on the preference for language like "invites discussion" rather than "calls for negotiations" in the operative paragraph. There were also suggestions that the fourth preambular paragraph should be revised. According to Lall, he persuaded the group to withhold their decision on the text until six o'clock. During the interval he would pursue earlier discussions with Western representatives, but particularly with representatives of Canada, Norway and USA, to try to evolve a text which could be swallowed by the French without adding too much water for the Arabs' taste.

5. After some discussion with those delegations a draft resolution, which contained the African-Asian text less the fourth preambular and operative paragraphs, was prepared. They were respectively replaced by the following: (a) "Recognizing that the people of Algeria are entitled to work out their own future in a democratic way". (b) "Invites discussions for the purpose of arriving at a solution in accordance with the principles and purposes of the charter of the UN". After some further discussion we discussed this draft with members of the French delegation. At first they did not seem too critical of the text and suggested one or two revisions, in particular that the words "ceasefire and a" be inserted in the operative paragraph after the words "arriving at a". The French officials, however, said they would have to discuss the whole text with Pineau.

6. In the meantime, we discussed the suggested revisions with Lall and found that words like "ceasefire" and "cessation of hostilities", if placed before "solution", would be unacceptable to the Arabs, who believed that whatever negotiations were held should encompass the whole problem of Algeria and not merely a ceasefire. The Arabs are sensitive about a ceasefire because they believe that the French are trying to trick the FLN and others into surrendering their arms which would make them easier to deal with in subsequent negotiations. Lall did agree to try on the Arabs the words "including a cessation of hostilities" after "solutions".

⁸ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
? [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

7. However, it soon became apparent that the French would not take the language of the operative paragraph and for several hours Engen, Lodge and members of our delegation played with words in an effort to close the gap between the opposing sides concerning that paragraph. These efforts proved fruitless but they were sufficiently vigorous to persuade the African-Asians not to submit their own text to the Secretariat last night. Before midnight they agreed to allow the Canadian, Norwegian and USA delegations further time to explore the situation.

8. By that time we were aware that the Spaniards and some of the Latins were working on a feeble text (which was sent to you this evening). This would replace the earlier Italian-Peruvian text which was admittedly unacceptable to the Committee. The initiative by Japan and Iran had been placed in cold storage, partly because of the other activity and partly because the Japanese had encountered difficulties with the French.

9. Early this morning we and the Norwegians met with the USA delegation to review the situation. Our intention was to try once more to produce a text which might not be acceptable to either side but which might not be opposed because of the support which it would have in the Assembly. As in the early stages, we were concerned mainly with the operative paragraph. Before we had reached any conclusion, the discussion was resumed in the Committee and the only speaker was Pineau who wound up the general debate. Lall joined the drafting group, which eventually produced the following operative paragraph: "Proposes effective discussion for the purpose both of resolving the present troubled situation and of reaching a solution in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the UN".

10. Lall had little confidence that the African-Asians would take this text but he agreed to discuss it with them. Before he had reported their reaction we learned that the African-Asians had submitted to the Secretariat (immediately after lunch today) their own text (the one contained in our telegram 2670 December 3). Since this draft resolution would have priority in any voting in the Committee and since Lall and other African-Asians indicated to us that we should pursue our efforts to have our own text incorporated, we and the Norwegians, with some support from the USA, began to consider whether we should submit, as amendments to the African-Asian text, our own text for the fourth preambular and operative paragraphs. After considerable discussion with other delegations, including those of Austria, Brazil, Ireland, Sweden, Denmark and Iran, we and the Norwegians agreed with the USA delegation that amendments of this kind should be submitted, if only for tactical reasons (we discussed this with you on the phone and Mr. Nesbitt spoke to the Minister).⁹ This action would not only demonstrate to both sides that we were continuing our efforts to reach a middle ground but it would provide us with sufficient reason for abstaining on the African-Asian resolution, if the amendment should fail to be adopted.¹⁰ Late this evening, it was agreed that Canada, Ireland and Norway should submit the amendments.

⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

no — spoke to Pick in absence of Minister [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

¹⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

N.B. [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

11. Before doing so, however, we decided to inform the French (the Indians and other African-Asians were already aware of our intentions). Engen had a long discussion with Pineau and explained fully the position in which some of the Western Powers found themselves in the Assembly. Pineau said that he was not in a position to accept the amendments but Engen gained the impression that Pineau's personal attitude towards them was "positive". Engen made clear to Pineau, moreover, that we did not expect the French to accept the amendments but only to acquiesce in them. Engen argued that it would be to the advantage of France to have the amendments adopted and he hoped that the French delegation would urge their friends to support the amendments. Pineau, who apparently became aware for the first time, after Engen's explanation, that the Committee might adopt only one resolution, and that would probably be the African-Asian text, asked for time to discuss our amendments with his delegation, including his parliamentary colleagues. He and Engen will meet again tomorrow morning at 10:15, after which the amendments will probably be submitted.

12. There is no clear evidence that these amendments will be adopted. We can expect opposition to them from at least some of the African-Asians and from the USSR bloc. There may be a large number of abstentions. However, even if the amendments should fail, for reasons which we have given we consider it desirable to table them. If it should become apparent that the opposition to them is heavy, we might not press them to a vote. We are satisfied that if the African-Asian draft resolution should be adopted in the Committee, the majority will not be sufficient to meet the purpose of the African-Asians and that, therefore, they will be better disposed to accept amendments like ours in plenary, in order to widen the support for their position. At this stage, however, there seems little advantage in trying to forecast what action would be taken in plenary.

8.

DEA/12177-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures¹¹*

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs¹¹

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 5, 1957

ALGERIA

The First Committee of the Assembly in New York has been considering the Algerian question so actively during the past two days that our Delegation has not had the opportunity to send us full reports by telegram. We are anxious to describe the immediate situation to you since the French Ambassador is to see you later this afternoon.

2. We have learned by telephone that the Arab-Asian proposed resolution contained in telegram no. 2670, attached, has now been introduced and circulated. It is sponsored, we understand, by most of the Arab States and a number of the Asian States, but not India and Pakistan. The Indians have not co-sponsored it and would apparently be prepared to see some modifications made to it. If it is put to a vote they would feel obliged to vote for it. Our own Delegation considers that the Afro-Asian countries have been surprisingly moderate in their statements as well as in the text they have submitted. In the atmosphere of debate, our Delegation feel that it would be very difficult to vote against this resolution, which is clearly what the French would hope we would do. They are disposed to endeavour to have it amended. If it is put to a vote as it stands, the Delegation has in mind to abstain.

¹¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Seen by the Minister

3. Our Delegation has been consulting actively with the Norwegian and the American Delegations. Norway, Denmark and Iceland will certainly not vote in favour of this resolution. They will probably abstain and are not likely to actually vote against it. As a result of our talks with the Americans and the Norwegians, we have in mind encouraging some other country to propose the amendment of the final operative paragraph to read as follows:

“Proposes effective discussion for the purpose both of resolving the present troubled situation and of reaching a solution in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter”.

The phrase “troubled situation” is intentionally vague to provide for the calling of a cease fire and is so worded in the hope that it might be acceptable to the French.

4. We understand that a resolution is to be submitted in the name of certain Latin American countries, though actually the handiwork of the French themselves. This would in substance repeat the resolution adopted by the Assembly last February which expressed “the hope that in a spirit of co-operation, a peaceful, democratic and just solution will be found, through appropriate means, in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations.”

5. Since the above was dictated, we have learned from the French Embassy that you will be pressed to instruct our Delegation to vote against the Afro-Asian resolution rather than abstain. The French fear that if this resolution is put to the vote first, it will be adopted because a number of countries will abstain; and, therefore, there will be no opportunity to pass upon the Latin American resolution.

J.B.C. WATKINS
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

9.

DEA/12177-40

*Note de la Direction européenne pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*¹²

*Memorandum from European Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*¹²

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 6, 1957

ALGERIA

The Minister received the French Ambassador yesterday afternoon just before six o'clock in an interview that lasted about twenty minutes. Before Mr. Lacoste came in, Mr. Smith was able to read our memorandum prepared earlier in the afternoon, and I was able to add to it some points I had received by telephone from Mr. Holmes and from Mr. Nesbitt.

¹² Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Mr. Léger — see esp. para. 6. [A.J. Pick]

2. Lacoste said that he had received an appeal early that morning from Mr. Pineau to seek to get the Canadian Delegation to cast a negative vote on the Arab-Asian resolution. Mr. Lacoste translated the text which was clearly the same as that contained in our Delegation's telegram no. 2670 of December 3. In other words, the text, as tabled, had not been altered. He said that Indonesia was acting as spokesman for the co-sponsors which included a large number of Arab and Asian countries. This resolution was definitely unacceptable to the French because it called for negotiations for a settlement or solution with the FLN. Mr. Lacoste insisted that France could not negotiate political matters with the FLN, although it was prepared to negotiate a cease-fire, and this only, with the FLN. (Actually the text of the resolution does not indicate who are to be the parties to negotiations). The French wanted us not merely to abstain but definitely to vote against this. Mr. Lacoste said that he hoped we would reserve our affirmative vote for the Latin-American resolution. He translated a text of this for us and indeed the text, as actually tabled, was sent in to Mr. Lacoste in a note during the interview. Essentially this resolution is the same as that adopted last February, which was reproduced in paragraph 4 of our memorandum to the Minister. This stands in the name of Spain, Peru and a lot of other Latin-American countries. As tabled it also has two additional preambular clauses, one making a friendly reference to the offer of good offices by Tunisia and Morocco, and the other to the recent legislative measures in France, meaning, of course, the Loi Cadre. The Minister was able to indicate to Mr. Lacoste that if it did come to a vote on the Spanish-Latin American resolution, we would be happy to vote in favour. The Minister was non-committal regarding our voting position on the Arab-Asian resolution. He did not say that we would vote against it, though he did assure Mr. Lacoste that we would never actually vote against France. Mr. Lacoste insisted, with his usual charm and persuasiveness, that in this instance an abstention might amount to a vote against, since, if Canada and a number of other friends of France were to abstain, the Arab-Asian resolution would probably secure a simple majority in the Committee.

3. Mr. Lacoste made some vague reference to the possibility of amending the Arab-Asian resolution. This gave us our opportunity to mention what our Delegation had in mind. The Minister asked me to explain paragraph 3 of our memorandum. Mr. Smith later gave Mr. Lacoste the draft text of a possible amendment. We explained to him that this might be put in the name of a number of countries including Canada, Norway, Iceland, Austria and Iran. We understood that it might not be unacceptable to the French Delegation. Mr. Lacoste, who had had no opportunity to consider the text, made no comment on this.

4. It was pointed out to Mr. Lacoste that if we could proceed by the method of an amendment, then this, under the rules of procedure, would be put to a vote first. It would not serve to introduce a new resolution since this could not be voted on before the Arab-Asian resolution which might well pass.

5. I explained to Mr. Lacoste that we understand that the preambular clause: "Recognizing that the principle of self-determination is applicable to the Algerian people", was to be changed, it was suggested, to make some reference to the people of Algeria working out their ultimate destiny. Unfortunately I did not get a draft text for this change from Mr. Holmes or Mr. Nesbitt.

6. I went out with the Ambassador as the Minister had to hurry over to a dinner at the Centre Block. I, therefore, did not get any specific instructions from our Minister for our Delegation. I gathered the impression, however, from my talk with him before and during the interview, that he is disposed to go along with the idea of attempting to amend the Arab-Asian resolution in such a way as to make it less objectionable to the French.¹³ I would also assume that the Minister does not want us to vote against the present text of the Arab-Asian resolution, since he was careful not to make any commitment to Mr. Lacoste in this sense.

7. If our proposed amendment goes through, and on the assumption that the French will acquiesce in it, though without enthusiasm, then presumably we shall have to vote in favour of the amended Arab-Asian resolution. If the proposed amendment fails, then we can readily justify an abstention on the original text, at least in the eyes of the Afro-Asians, though we would still not be satisfying the French.

8. I telephoned Mr. Holmes later to tell him how the interview had gone. I also conveyed, at his request, my impression as to the views of our own Minister as set forth in paragraph 6 above.

A.J. PICK

10.

DEA/12177-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2730

New York, December 7, 1957

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 2712 Dec 5.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information)

Repeat Cairo from Ottawa.

By Bag Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid from London.

ALGERIA

1. We omitted to mention in our telegram 2712 an important link in the process of evolving the texts which eventually emerged as amendments to the African-Asian draft resolution. Following is the text suggested by Pineau for the operative paragraphs of that resolution (apparently he was not too concerned about the fourth preambular paragraph concerning "the principle of self-determination" although he did prefer the formulation contained in our amendment): "Desires that the cessation of hostilities should promote in a democratic way a solution in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter: desires discussions to that end." You will readily appreciate why this text would not have been acceptable to the African-Asians and, in fact, Lall considered it unwise to present it to them. However, Pineau's suggestions began the train of thought which ultimately led to the operative paragraph in our amendments.

2. Yesterday morning (December 6) Engen again discussed with Pineau the amendments and our intentions to submit them in the Committee. Pineau was agreeable to this and he suggested some wording for the French translation (a suggestion which later led to consid-

¹³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Later, the Minister confirmed to me (1:00 pm today) that he was prepared to have Nesbitt work for such a compromise. A.J. P[ick] erable confusion in the Committee). After his conversation with Engen, Pineau informed Lodge, Dixon, Benelux and other west European representatives, in that order. During the rest of the day all members of the French delegation worked energetically to have our amendments adopted by the Committee.

3. We and the Norwegians met with the USA delegation immediately after Pineau's conversations with Engen and Lodge. We discussed tactics and concluded that the amendments should be submitted in committee, even though we knew some of the African-Asians, like Iran and Ceylon had been advising that the move should be made in plenary. Our decision to proceed in committee was based mainly on the French attitude, but we also had in mind tactical considerations, like the fact that the African-Asian resolution would be put to the vote first and would probably carry with almost a two-thirds majority. It was our view that it might be very difficult to introduce the amendments in plenary either because of a change in the French attitude or because the African-Asians, flushed with success, had hardened their opposition to our texts. We wish to emphasize that these texts were acceptable to many if not the majority of the African-Asians. In particular, they were acceptable to Fawzi, whom Engen kept informed throughout the exercise.

4. Shortly before the Committee adjourned for lunch, Boland introduced the amendments in a brief but masterly intervention. The confusion about the translations kept us from speaking in the morning. The confusion arose because the French text, owing to some overzealous translation, was far more favourable to France than the English original. The Spanish and Russian texts were based on the French one, so there were complaints from all sides.

5. Accordingly, when we intervened after lunch, we placed on record that the co-sponsors stood by the English original. We then spoke briefly in favour of the amendments. The debate went on for the rest of the afternoon and it became clear that the African-Asians intended to oppose the amendments.

6. This resulted from a decision taken by the group in a meeting after lunch. We understand that the representatives of Iran, Ceylon, Thailand and Afghanistan argued strongly in favour of the amendments. Fawzi had previously tried unsuccessfully to persuade the Arab group to take them. The African-Asian decision was that the whole group should oppose the amendments and apparently oppose the draft resolution if the amendments should be adopted. Prior to the vote, however, the African-Asians were quite confident that our amendments would be voted down. Our arithmetic showed that the vote would be extremely close, with one or two votes in doubt on either side.

7. When the vote came, the amendments were adopted as a package by a vote of 37 in favour, 36 against, and 7 abstentions. Of the African-Asians, Laos voted in favour, and Turkey, Liberia, Philippines and Cambodia abstained. Most of the Latins voted for the amendments but Haiti was opposed and Guatemala, Mexico and Bolivia abstained. Yugoslavia, the Soviet Bloc, and the remaining African-Asians voted against the amendments.

8. When the amended resolution was put to a vote, the Liberian switched from an abstention to a vote against, something of a surprise especially because his was the last name on the roll call vote. The draft resolution was rejected because of a tie, 37 to 37, with 6 abstentions. France, of course, did not participate in the voting, and South Africa was absent.

9. There was some confusion in the Committee immediately after the vote. The Tunisian moved that the African-Asian draft resolution be put to the vote in its original form. This, of course, amounted to a motion to reconsider and it would have required a two-thirds majority under the rules. Argentina, however, asked for a ten minute recess for the purpose of consultations. After the recess Argentina stated that the 7 Power draft resolution would not be pressed to the vote and nothing more was heard from the Tunisian. The Committee was adjourned until Monday when it will discuss Cyprus. The Chairman announced that the Algerian item would be passed to plenary with a resolution.

10. The results of the Committee debate can be summarized as follows:

(a) The French and their supporters were very satisfied with the outcome, notwithstanding some earlier nervousness about the course which we and the Norwegians had been following. Pineau thanked Engen warmly for his efforts and stated that if in plenary the resolution, as amended, should be reintroduced with Canada, Ireland and Norway as co-sponsors (or presumably among the co-sponsors) France could go along with this outcome.

(b) African-Asians, including the delegations of Iran, India, Afghanistan, Malaya, Pakistan, Egypt, Thailand and possibly others, were irritated by the group decision to oppose the draft resolution because it had been amended. Probably the Japanese have the same attitude, although Matsudaira may be upset because his own initiative, which was begun prematurely, had been overtaken by ours. Before the vote, Fawzi had discussed with Engen the possibility of reintroducing the amended resolution by which time most of the African-Asians would be prepared to accept it.

(c) The defeat of the draft resolution in committee provided a sorry spectacle for the press and public and was therefore damaging to the UN. However, some of the members may have been given a useful lesson in what is required if the UN is to work effectively. In other words, the initiators of the African-Asian's text may have learned that concessions are required from both sides when the issue is as hotly contested as the Algerian question.

This is our preliminary reaction to what happened yesterday but we may have occasion to add to the assessment in preparing the final report on this item.

11.

DEA/12177-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2749

New York, December 9, 1957

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2734 Dec 9.†

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

Repeat Cairo from Ottawa.

By Bag Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid from London.

ALGERIA

We learned this morning (December 9) that because Pineau wished to return to Paris as soon as possible, the French delegation would like to have the plenary meeting on Algeria on December 10. This would not allow the time for quiet consultations, which we suggested in our telegram 2734 would be required if a satisfactory outcome of the Assembly proceedings were to be achieved. The situation was complicated further by the fact that Fawzi was absent from New York during most of the day on a visit to Washington.

2. Nevertheless, during the day there was activity behind the scenes involving representatives of the seven co-sponsors of the Latin draft resolution (introduced but not pressed to the vote in committee); Iran, Japan and Thailand (at an earlier stage the prospective co-sponsors of a middle way); and India and Mexico. The delegations of Canada, Ireland and Norway were brought to these discussions late in the afternoon when the others had reached agreement, more or less, on a "compromise" text which was acceptable to the French delegation but which still had to be accepted by the Arab group and by the African-Asians as a whole. As you will see from the text, the operative part of which is contained in the next paragraph, the draft resolution falls considerably short of the earlier African-Asian text, even as amended by Canada, Ireland and Norway. It is difficult to see tonight how this diluted text could be accepted by the Arabs, but presumably the shortage of time for consultation and their desire to have a resolution of some kind might combine to persuade them to go along with the latest draft.

3. The preamble of the draft resolution refers to the discussion of the Algerian situation and recalls the resolution of the 11th Session. The operative paragraphs read as follows:

"1. Expresses again its concern over the situation in Algeria:

2. Takes note of the constructive possibilities suggested and particularly of the offer of good offices made by His Majesty the King of Morocco and by His Excellency the President of the Republic of Tunisia:

3. Expresses the hope that in a spirit of effective cooperation, pourparlers and other conciliatory means as appropriate will be utilized in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the UN".

4. It would appear that the origin of these paragraphs was mainly French. The second looks very much like the compromise which the Japanese were hinting at earlier in the committee stage and which they said at the time was acceptable to Pineau. The third is taken from a draft resolution which the Mexicans were promoting (probably with the drafting assistance of Lall) and which also had French blessing. The main concession by the French seems to be recognition of the offer of good offices. Paragraph 3, expressing hope concerning discussions is considerably weaker than either the African-Asian operative paragraph or the amended version which we and others submitted.

5. Earlier this evening the representatives of Italy, Spain, Mexico, Argentina, Cuba, Japan, Iran, Thailand, Canada, Ireland and Norway met to discuss this draft. Lall also attended for part of the time. We and the Irish and Norwegians were brought to the meeting at a stage when eight Latin powers (Brazil, Peru and Dominican Republic in addition to those already listed), Japan, Iran and Thailand had already agreed to co-sponsor the text. It was explained that the draft was acceptable to the French and that the Moroccans and Tunisians would probably accept it, although they would prefer the word "wish" rather than "hope" in the third operative paragraph. The other representatives wondered whether Canada, Ireland and Norway would co-sponsor it. Engen enquired about the attitude of the Arabs and of other African-Asians. Like us, he could not understand how this text could be acceptable when the stronger resolution (that is the amended African-Asian text) had been rejected in committee. The answer was that the Arabs were at the time considering the text and their reaction was expected soon. Before the meeting broke up, the Moroccan joined the group to report that the Arabs had reached no agreement on the text which they would refer to the whole group of African-Asians. Because the African-Asian reaction was by no means clear and because of our own reservations about the text, the Norwegians, Irish and ourselves postponed the reply on co-sponsorship. We also cautioned against a proposal by the Japanese that the text should be submitted on a conditional basis to the Secretariat, the condition being that African-Asian reaction should be favourable. It was clear from what was said that the representatives of Japan, Iran and Thailand hoped to persuade a majority, though not necessarily the whole group of African-Asians, to support the new text. There was more than an implication, moreover, that the group should be faced with a fait accompli. Under persuasion from Engen, Matusdaira and Entezam agreed to hold the draft in abeyance until after the African-Asians had met (tomorrow morning at ten; the Arabs will meet beforehand).

6. After the meeting of prospective co-sponsors, Engen learned from Fawzi that the Arabs were not happy about the new text but that the Moroccans and Tunisians were attracted by the substantial reference to the offer of good offices. The Arab group decided to leave it up to the Algerian representatives here whether the text should be accepted. The Algerian reaction will be made known at tomorrow's meeting of the Arabs.

7. Also this evening, Pineau tried to persuade Engen to co-sponsor the new text. Engen gave his reasons for not doing so and emphasized that if the delegation of Norway (like Canada and Ireland) should co-sponsor this draft resolution without knowing the full reaction of the Arabs and their Asian supporters, there would be more than suspicion that as co-sponsors of the amendment in committee Canada, Ireland and Norway had deliberately torpedoed the African-Asian text in order to clear the way for the watered-down version which they would help to promote in plenary. You will no doubt agree that Engen's views in this regard have considerable force.

8. We and the Norwegians tonight informed the USA delegation about these developments. We all agreed that the parliamentary situation as regards the Algerian item might continue to be confused even after the General Assembly has begun its plenary session tomorrow morning, but particularly until the African-Asians have had an opportunity to consider the new text.

12.

DEA/12177-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2758

New York, December 10, 1957

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2749 Dec 9.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

Repeat Cairo deferred from Ottawa.

By Bag Beirut, Tel Aviv, Athens, Rome, Madrid from London.

ALGERIA

This morning December 10 proceedings in the plenary session were delayed while the African-Asian group discussed the draft resolution which was described in our telegram 2749 (paragraph 3). The first reports to come out of the group meeting confirmed our impression of last night that the Arabs were not happy about the new text. In the end, however, after the Assembly had already begun to discuss the report of the Credentials Committee we learned that the group as a whole had agreed to take the new text, but that they would prefer, and this the Arabs in particular preferred, that the second and third operative paragraphs be revised to read as follows:

“(a) Takes note of the offer of good offices made by His Majesty the King of Morocco and His Excellency [the President] of the Republic of Tunisia (that is deleting the phrase about constructive possibilities which the Arabs interpreted as referring to the Loi Cadre);

(b) Expresses the hope that in a spirit of effective cooperation, pourparlers will be entered into, and other appropriate means utilized, with a view to a solution, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the UN.”

2. Once the African-Asian group had reached agreement about the text, the task remained to persuade the French to accept the changes. In addition, the African-Asians, and more particularly the Arabs, were anxious that Canada, Ireland and Norway should co-sponsor the revised text. The Japanese also desired this. We and the other two were reluctant to do so unless the text should prove to be acceptable to both sides. This we ascertained in consultations with representatives of both sides. In particular Engen learned from Pineau that the changes would be acceptable to France. In the end we agreed to co-sponsor.

3. Once these consultations had been completed the outcome of the Assembly consideration was quickly reached. The President read the revised text to the Assembly and mentioned the list of co-sponsors: Argentina, Brazil, Canada, Cuba, Dominican Republic, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Norway, Peru, Spain and Thailand. The President then put the draft resolution to the vote and it was adopted unanimously, 80-0-0 with South Africa absent and France not participating in the vote.

4. It is a bit difficult to understand why this relatively weaker text should have proven more acceptable to the African-Asians than the amended draft resolution which faced the Committee last Friday. It is also curious that the French should have given in on such points as the offer of good offices and their previous insistence that initially discussions should be concerned only with ceasefire. We gathered that some of the Arabs consider that the new text is stronger than the previous one but we can only assume that this arises from a misunderstanding of what the previous text implied. As regards the French attitude, we understand that the French press gave Pineau most of the credit for the developments of Friday last and that perhaps in the current state of public opinion in France, Pineau was satisfied that he could take the new text, particularly since it was to be co-sponsored by a widely representative group of UN members but without the Arabs. Whatever the reasons, the current view here is that the Assembly has been able to dispose of the Algerian item much more effectively than at previous sessions. There is also a sense of relief that this outcome was accomplished well before the target date for the end of the session.

SUBDIVISION IV/SUB-SECTION IV

APPRÉCIATION ASSESSMENT

13.

DEA/5475-DW-52-D-40

Extrait du rapport final de la douzième session de l'Assemblée générale à New York¹⁴

Extract from Final Report on the Twelfth Session of the General Assembly in New York¹⁴

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa, n.d.]

* * *

GENERAL ASSESSMENT

The international climate of the late summer and autumn of 1957 was not too favourable for constructive endeavour at the Twelfth Session of the General Assembly. One of the main factors was the weakness and indecision of Western leadership. Even before the opening of the Assembly the Soviet Union had announced the successful launching of an intercontinental ballistic missile and this considerable achievement was dramatically enhanced by the launching during the session of two earth satellites. The failure, until quite recently, by the United States to demonstrate its ability in the field of rocketry and the accompanying emotional reaction in the United States undoubtedly helped to lower the prestige of the United States — and consequently of the Western Powers — at the Twelfth Session. Nevertheless, the very noticeable faltering of Western leadership could be attributed to deeper causes than to the Soviet Union's spectacular but possibly temporary gains in the science of rockets.

2. The deterioration of the Western position in the Middle East was a contributing factor of no mean importance. The Assembly opened in the threatening atmosphere of a new crisis along the Syrian-Turkish frontier and the United States bore the brunt of sharp criticism for its part in what was regarded as interference in the domestic affairs of the Arab states. This was a further development in the adverse Arab reaction to the Eisenhower doctrine and to the United States efforts to strengthen its position in the Arab world by exploiting rifts between the Arab governments. This policy which the United States followed during the spring and summer of 1957 had a two-fold reaction against United States interests. It served to dissipate considerable goodwill which the United States had gained from its part during the Middle East crisis of late 1956 and it helped the Soviet Union to strengthen its foothold in the area. The strength of the Arab reaction against those United States policies was sharply illustrated during the general debate at the Twelfth Session and particularly in the response to Mr. Dulles's suggestion that the United Nations should examine the events which had been occurring in Syria and possibly take action to counteract them. Some of the Arab friends of the West were much more outspokenly critical than their neutralist colleagues, in particular Dr. Fawzi, whose remarks about Great Power manoeuvring in the Middle East had a double edge.

¹⁴ Ce document est tiré du Rapport final sur la 12^e Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, compilé par les fonctionnaires du Ministère à Ottawa sur la foi des rapports soumis par les membres de la Mission permanente à New York. L'évaluation générale originale non révisée de cette Assemblée générale, qui avait été envoyée de New York, n'a pas été retrouvée.

This document is taken from the Final Report on the Twelfth United Nations General Assembly compiled by departmental officials in Ottawa based on reports submitted by members of the Permanent Mission in New York. The original unedited general assessment of the 12th General Assembly sent from New York was not located.

3. The Western Powers also suffered disabilities resulting from the Anglo-French armed intervention in the Middle East in 1956. During the Twelfth Session there was remarkably little criticism of either the United Kingdom or France, from the Arabs or from any other quarter than the Soviet bloc, but the Delegations of France and the United Kingdom seemed inhibited by the events which had dominated the Eleventh Session and therefore shrank from taking initiatives at the Twelfth. In addition, the French were almost exclusively preoccupied with the Algerian question and the United Kingdom Delegation, although at first not too concerned about Cyprus, seemed paralyzed by their anxiety about possible items concerning Oman, Aden and other situations with a colonial tinge. The net result was that none of the Great Powers of the West were confidently disposed to take a strong lead at the Twelfth Session, but particularly in the political committees. However, the United States Delegates (Congressman Judd) in the Second Committee and the United Kingdom Delegate (Sir Andrew Cohen) in the Fourth Committee turned in creditable performances.

4. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, was in a strong position to dominate the Assembly. The potentialities of sputnik diplomacy were considerable and at first the Soviet Delegation showed every sign of exploiting them skilfully. Mr. Gromyko's statement in the general debate was generally regarded as one of the best ever made in the Assembly by a Soviet spokesman. It reflected wisdom, moderation and confidence. However, in the discussion of what were perhaps the two most important political items — disarmament and the Syrian situation — the Soviet Delegation resorted to a brand of toughness which was quite out of keeping with Soviet policies at the Assembly during the past four years. While there was some nervousness on the part of some delegates like those from Poland, Yugoslavia and Indonesia, the main reaction of important neutralists, like the Indians and Egyptians, was to deplore Soviet attempts to bully the Assembly. This reaction against the Soviet Union, and particularly during the consideration of the Syrian item, came to be shared by almost all segments of opinion in the Assembly. This was followed by a noticeable softening, or perhaps indifference, in the Soviet line. Soviet criticism of Western Powers during the discussion of such items as the financing of UNEF, Algeria and Cyprus was almost perfunctory in comparison with earlier sessions. The turning point in the Soviet attitude seemed to coincide with the ousting of Marshal Zhukov. Viewed from New York, however, the softening in the Soviet attitude was an apparent result from the realization that the policy of harshness had served to reduce the benefit reaped by the Soviet Union from its scientific achievements.

5. A by-product of the Soviet attitude was that the satellite delegations tended to assume the initiative for the Soviet bloc. This was particularly noticeable in the Special Committee and in the Second and Third Committees, where the Delegations of Czechoslovakia, Poland and Romania were active. Moreover, the Polish position in the principal political bodies, the Plenary Session and the First Committee, continued to show variation from the main Soviet theme. There were signs, but particularly after the reaction against the bullying tactics of the Soviet Union, that the satellite delegations had stepped up their efforts to communicate with and influence uncommitted countries not only from Africa and Asia but including less dependable Latin American allies of the West like El Salvador, Guatemala and Haiti. So it developed at the Twelfth Session that many of the initiatives by the Soviet Union were in the hands of the satellites just as on the Western side important initiatives were developed by smaller powers.

6. Some observers have tended to regard this as an inevitable development in an eighty-two-member assembly, which is mainly composed of small powers. The possibility should not be ruled out, however, that the Soviet Union at some future session, perhaps as early as the Thirteenth, might firmly seize the initiative and with the help of the satellite delegations, whose recent experience would be invaluable in those circumstances, try to reassert great power leadership in the Assembly, but, of course, from the communist side of the house. Given the enhanced position in the uncommitted world of the Soviet Union and the apathy and indecision which the Western great powers have recently shown, there could be a marked shift in developments at future assemblies and to the decided disadvantage of the West.

7. On the encouraging side a more subtle influence began to make its appearance at the Twelfth Session and frequently with the most promising results. There was a clear demonstration that the fear, which for the past two years has haunted some of the Western delegations, about a "blocking third" consisting of the combined African-Asian and Soviet groups, was more apparent than real. There was increasing evidence at the Twelfth Session that important members of the African-Asian group were reluctant to become bound by group decisions, usually reached under the sway of the more extremist opinion within the group. This was most strikingly demonstrated during the consideration of the Syrian item, when Dr. Fawzi proved to be the strongest influence for moderation. There were other demonstrations, but particularly behind the scenes, during the debates on Algeria, Cyprus, the financing of UNEF and of the Suez Canal clearance. During the consultations about the major colonial items the Delegations of Ceylon, Iran and Japan rendered effective assistance in combating extremist elements in the African-Asian group. Concerning the Middle East questions, and including some difficult negotiations about the resolution on UNRWA, the Egyptians were the champions of moderation and proved much more helpful to the West than some of its Arab allies. The Indian Delegation provided a moderating influence as well but the Indian position within the African-Asian group was considerably weakened because of a strong reaction against Mr. Krishna Menon. (Toward the end of the session he did not attend group meetings). There was evidence of an increase in Japan's influence within the group and of a growing rivalry between Japan and India. The Indians continued to be active, however, in the Fourth Committee. It can be broadly concluded that the African-Asians are not unresponsive to reasonable appeals for moderation and indeed at the Twelfth Session they seemed more than willing to seek a middle ground. The possibilities of compromise with this group seemed promising, as long as the interested Western powers maintained some flexibility in their own approach.

8. Also apparent at the Twelfth Session was the desire of the Arab states, but particularly Egypt and Syria, to repair their lines of communication with the Western powers. The emphasis on Arab nationalism, independence and neutralism during the general debate was most pronounced. There was concrete evidence behind the scenes that the Egyptians in particular wished to restore the balance in their international relations, as between the Soviet bloc and the Western powers. Perhaps the best illustration was given during the Syrian debate but the Egyptian position in this regard was consistent throughout the Twelfth Session. It clearly reflected Dr. Fawzi's desire to "clean up the mess of last year" and to explore possibilities for improving the overall situation in the Middle East. The response of the Western Great Powers to this shift in Egyptian policy was sluggish, and particularly by the United States, presumably because of domestic political difficulties and a desire not to irritate the United Kingdom and France. The impression was, however, that the Egyptians were reasonably encouraged by the Western reaction, particularly on the part of Canada and Norway, to continue their efforts at reconciliation.

9. This process was largely facilitated through United Nations machinery. The successes of the UNEF experiment and of the Canal-clearing operation have greatly strengthened United Nations influence in the Middle East, and especially in Cairo and Damascus. The confidence which existed between the Secretary-General and Dr. Fawzi not only helped to solve difficult problems like the financing of UNEF and the recovery of the costs of clearing the Canal but paved the way for future developments, like an agreement on compensation for the Universal Suez Canal Company and possibly on a comprehensive programme, linked loosely to the United Nations, for the economic development of the area. This strengthening of United Nations influence in what is perhaps the area of greatest tension in the world today helps to offset the deadlocks and disappointments in such important fields as disarmament and East-West relations in general. It is perhaps the modest beginning of a trend toward greater diplomatic activity on the part of the United Nations Secretariat under the very able guidance of Mr. Hammarskjöld.

10. A further development which gained emphasis at the Twelfth Session was the effort on the part of a few Western delegations, The Economist of December 28th has dubbed them the "greater Scandinavian" group, to modify extremist positions and to work energetically for compromise resolutions which while not entirely acceptable to opposing sides would meet with the approval of the substantial majority in the Assembly. This group of Delegations, which included from time to time, and in various circumstances: Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Iran, Ireland, Japan, Norway, Sweden and Thailand kept in fairly close touch throughout the Assembly and tried to bridge gaps between sharply opposed delegations or groups of delegations. The nucleus of the Western section of this "fire brigade" was provided by the Delegations of Canada and Norway. They participated prominently in the consultation and negotiation concerning the main political issues but particularly disarmament, the Syrian situation, Algeria, Cyprus and the Middle East items. By working closely with the United States Delegation and with the Secretary-General, the Canadian and Norwegian Delegations managed not only to keep well abreast of developments in the Assembly but on many occasions to be somewhat in advance of them.

11. It was clear that the United States Delegation favoured the "fire brigade" technique. They preferred to have Western initiatives taken by delegations from small powers, although United States officials expected to be kept fully informed about and to assist in promoting these initiatives. The effort on the part of the Delegations of Canada, Ireland and Norway to amend the African-Asian draft resolution on Algeria was perhaps the most striking example of the cooperation between the "fire brigade" and the United States. This technique proved to be reasonably effective in many of the holding operations which were almost characteristic of the Twelfth Session but it is seriously open to question whether this approach would be as effective at future sessions, when the Assembly would almost certainly be required to do more than adopt watery compromises if it is to survive as an effective international instrument. In an atmosphere in which the Assembly would be expected to take firm and forward steps, the Western delegations which might be called upon to take the initiative would require much more support not only from the United States but from the United Kingdom and France, and this would be particularly true of the latter two when their own interests were directly involved.

12. Perhaps what is most urgently required of the Western Great Powers is that they approach the annual sessions of the General Assembly with fixed policy objectives in mind rather than with the impromptu expedients designed mainly to head off unpalatable proposals. A growing number of states members of the United Nations are treating the annual Assembly as a serious exercise of diplomacy in which a considerable effort is made to bring about some reconciliation of the various national view-points. This "matching up" of foreign policies is not too apparent in the innocuous resolutions and often dismal compromises, which the Assembly frequently adopts, but in the negotiations behind the scenes more often than not there is a realistic and useful exposition of national policies. Perhaps, if nothing else were to happen each autumn, this earnest exchange of views would be enough to make the Assembly worthwhile. However, this process of consultation, negotiations and frequently reconciliation behind the scenes is insufficient if it leads nowhere; and obviously it can lead nowhere if some of those who participate in this activity are working only for postponement, window-dressing or a two-thirds majority in lieu of solid policy objectives. In this regard the recent performances of France, the United Kingdom and the United States have tended to be less impressive than that of the Soviet Union which, for all its ineptness, does give the appearance of taking the Assembly seriously and of seeking solid objectives there. There seems little doubt that this earnestness of purpose, whatever its motivation, has an appeal for many United Nations members, and particularly among the African-Asians, who have looked in vain to the West for decisive leadership.

13. Perhaps this point can be illustrated by reference to some of the main items on the agenda of the Twelfth Session:

(a) Disarmament. Even before the Twelfth Session began it was generally accepted by United Nations members that the deadlock which had developed in the Sub-Committee late in the summer of 1957 was not going to be resolved by the Assembly without a substantial shift in the positions of one side or the other, or both. With two sputniks in outer space the Soviet Union was unlikely to shift its position and indeed the Yugoslavs and others cautioned against any effort at serious negotiations with the Soviet Union during this period of triumph. There was nevertheless widespread disappointment that the only response which the West could muster at a time of extreme anxiety was to seek Assembly endorsement of the Four-Power position of August 29th. This smacked too much of "business as usual" on disarmament and produced a widely held conclusion that the Assembly had failed miserably in its consideration of disarmament, notwithstanding the impressive majority which supported the West for a variety of reasons. In this atmosphere delegations, representing most shades of opinion, worked hard to evolve a compromise on the enlargement of the Disarmament Commission. The aim was to salvage the machinery even if the issues of substance were deadlocked. Although the Western Great Powers were more or less pushed into accepting the twenty-five-member Commission, it was the Soviet Union which bore the main brunt of the Assembly's disappointment about the failure of that compromise. Nevertheless, it should not be assumed that uncommitted countries like Egypt, India and Yugoslavia would seek to embarrass the Soviet Union by agreeing to convene the enlarged Commission, because those countries and others have considerable sympathy for the Soviet complaint that it has always been unfairly outnumbered during the long course of United Nations discussion of the Disarmament question.

(b) Colonial Items. In the consideration of the three main items, Algeria, Cyprus and West New Guinea, only the debate on the Algerian question showed any semblance of progress. This was possible because of the tireless efforts of negotiators behind the scenes and because the French Foreign Minister showed some flexibility in his position, a flexibility which the Arab side recognized and reciprocated in some degree. The opposite was true of the proceedings on Cyprus and on West New Guinea. Greece, Turkey and the United Kingdom clung to positions on Cyprus which were patently irreconcilable and which will have to be adjusted if this most damaging of NATO family quarrels is to be resolved. At least some means should be found to remove it from United Nations forum. As for West

New Guinea, Australia and The Netherlands, confident that they could hold their blocking third, gave no thought to any means for ameliorating their differences with Indonesia, which was no less unbending. Of these three issues only the Algerian question shows the slightest possibility of a United Nations solution and this can be accomplished only if France, and the friends of France, reach some understanding about policy objectives which they should pursue at the Assembly. The time for postponements and palliatives has passed.

(c) South African Items. At the Twelfth Session there seemed to be renewed interest in these items, probably because of the gradually swelling voice of the African nations. Spokesmen for Ghana, in particular, showed impatience and distrust when it was suggested that a breathing spell might be more beneficial than the perennial debate in the Assembly. The likelihood is that South Africa will be more persuaded than ever by the performance at the Twelfth Session to keep out of these discussions, which in South Africa's absence can only be sterile. As well, however, they can be increasingly embarrassing to the European members of the Commonwealth, who will be under constant pressure to take positive steps to induce South Africa to change its ways.

(d) Middle East Items. Perhaps the main political progress of the Twelfth Session was made on these items: the Syrian complaint; the future and financing of UNEF; the recovery of the costs of Suez Canal clearance; the perennial problem of Palestine refugees. Owing mainly to the energetic and determined efforts of a few delegations (Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Norway, Sweden aided by the Secretary-General and the United States), whose stake in restoring and continuing tranquillity in the Middle East was high, these items were debated in the Assembly in the most favourable atmosphere. Through intensive negotiation and consultation, during the course of which solid and consistent policy objectives were pursued, the way was systematically paved for a smooth passage of the necessary resolutions, with the exception of the Syrian complaint which was allowed to subside without formal decision. The activity behind the scenes amply demonstrated the value of a serious consultation and negotiation at the United Nations; and undoubtedly as a result relations between the countries closely concerned were strengthened. A useful precedent for the future might have been established. At best, however, these achievements at the Twelfth Session amounted to a little more than a continuing of the repair work so necessary in the Middle East after the crisis of 1956.

(e) Peaceful Co-Existence. The efforts made by India, Sweden and Yugoslavia to have the Assembly adopt their resolution on international cooperation reflected in the closing hours of the Assembly, when the propaganda debate on this item continued long into the night, the anxiety and frustration, which a great many delegations shared, about the poor political showing at the Twelfth Session. Undoubtedly the Indians and Yugoslavs were influenced in part by the knowledge that the Heads of NATO governments would shortly meet in Paris. Officials of the uncommitted countries seemed fearful that this meeting would produce a hardening of the Western attitude in response to a Soviet sputnik diplomacy. The large vote in favour of the three-power resolution did little to dispel the pessimism but at least one more item on the Assembly agenda was brought to a tidy conclusion.

14. As suggested in the foregoing balance sheet, which is admittedly roughly drawn and only concerned with political issues, the Twelfth Session was no model of United Nations achievement. Perhaps this result was inevitable in a year when the previous session, which had been so spectacular, was only a few months cold. There was a noticeable weariness among the experienced hands in the active delegations. There was even a lack of enthusiasm for, or even impatience with, the dreary debates on principles and abstractions which have consumed so much time at past sessions. Perhaps what was needed was a breathing spell in which all but essential measures (like the financing of UNEF) could be left more or less in abeyance. Perhaps this lull was usefully occupied in acclimatizing the 22 new members to their first "normal" Assembly. Perhaps in this year when man stepped into the threshold of outer space it was advisable not to try to reach solutions to questions which had been first raised long ago in very different circumstances. Perhaps the continued exploration behind the scenes of national policies, on a slightly wider scale than at earlier sessions, was still the best that could be hoped for at any annual session.

15. These are all handy and perhaps not altogether implausible excuses for the shortcomings of the Twelfth Session. They are valid just so long as they do not become too much of a pattern for assessing the annual Assembly. It can hardly be, however, that the Thirteenth and following sessions can be a succession of holding operations or breathing spells. Either the Assembly must go forward or decline as an influence in international life. At the beginning of 1958 there seems to be a considerable possibility that the Soviet Union will attempt to inject new life in the Assembly by attempting to seize the leadership which the Western Great Powers have allowed to slip from their hands. Certainly with its enhanced prestige the Soviet Union has every opportunity to do this but it is by no means inevitable that this should happen. Combined, the Western Powers still have a monopoly of knowledge, skill and experience which should enable them to maintain the initiative in the General Assembly. All that is needed is bold, sensible and firm leadership. If a strong challenge should come from the Soviet Union at the Thirteenth Session, the Western Powers should be prepared to meet it squarely and their leadership must come from the United States. Because of this real possibility it seems clear even now that serious preparations for the Thirteenth Session should begin in a very few months and should be developed through the most careful consultation among the principal Western powers. To be most effective these consultations should take place mainly in New York where the processes of the United Nations are best understood and where the links between Delegations are strongest.

SECTION B

TREIZIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE À NEW YORK,
16 SEPTEMBRE AU 13 DÉCEMBRE 1958
THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, NEW YORK,
SEPTEMBER 16 TO DECEMBER 13, 1958

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

INSTRUCTIONS À LA DÉLÉGATION CANADIENNE
INSTRUCTIONS TO THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

14.

DEA/50131-40

Note
Memorandum

SECRET

[Ottawa, n.d.]

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION¹⁵
TO THE THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The Thirteenth Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly opens on September 16 with an agenda of seventy-two items. This memorandum contains instructions on certain important items of the general policy of the Delegation.¹⁶ These will be supplemented by instructions to the Delegation on specific questions as they arise.

The Delegation will seek as always to promote greater international co-operation in the peaceful settlement of disputes and in pursuit of the broad objectives of the Charter. In doing so, it will bear in mind governmental policy as established in public statements on certain of the more significant subjects to be discussed in the General Assembly. Thus it has been made clear that Canada favours, in principle, strengthening the United Nations by the creation of arrangements for a permanent United Nations force which would assist in ¹⁵ La délégation canadienne était dirigée par Sidney Smith et W.J. Browne, respectivement président et vice-président. Pour obtenir la liste exhaustive des membres de la délégation, voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol 10, N° 12, décembre 1958, p. 296.

The Canadian delegation was led by Sidney Smith and W.J. Browne as Chairman and Vice-Chairman, respectively. For a complete list of Delegation members, see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 10, No. 12, December 1958, p. 296.

¹⁶ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

As approved by the Minister

Ces instructions n'ont pas été soumises à l'approbation du Cabinet. Sidney Smith avait demandé qu'elles soient transmises à la Délégation du Canada à New York, en indiquant qu'elles s'inscrivaient dans la ligne de pensée générale approuvée par le Cabinet concernant la 12^e Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, et que la Délégation devait demander des précisions spécifiques sur tout point non couvert par ces instructions pour la 13^e Session de l'Assemblée générale. Voir Robinson à Holmes, documents de HBR, Volume 1, Dossier « Septembre 1958 ».

These instructions were not submitted to Cabinet for approval. Sidney Smith asked that the instructions be sent to the Canadian Delegation in New York indicating that they followed the general line of the instructions approved by Cabinet for the Twelfth Session of the General Assembly and that the Delegation should ask for specific guidance on any item not covered by these instructions for the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly. See Robinson to Holmes, HBR Papers, Volume 1, File "September 1958".

the peaceful settlement of international disputes but recognizes that there are immense practical and political difficulties. Concerning the question of disarmament, it has been stated that we are prepared to regard the agreed Western proposals as flexible and as a basis for negotiation rather than as a plan to be accepted. On the question of the Middle East, Canada has given support to the resolution adopted by the Third Emergency Session of the General Assembly and has expressed hope that the countries primarily concerned will co-operate fully to ensure the success of the arrangements envisaged. Canada has given support to the establishment of a Special Fund within the United Nations to further the economic development of under-developed countries and Canadian delegations have participated in drafting the terms and conditions for the establishment and operation of the Fund. It has been stated that, provided the organizational arrangements as finally approved by the Assembly are well designed and provided that there is broad support for the proposal among particularly the contributing nations, Canada will consider making an appropriate contribution. Instructions on these and certain other items are contained in the following paragraphs.

Middle East

The current peace-making efforts of the Secretary-General in the Middle East under the unanimous resolution of the recently concluded third emergency special session of the General Assembly will come under review, in whole or in part, during the period of the thirteenth regular session, the Secretary-General having been instructed in the resolution to report thereunder by September 30, 1958. In general, the Canadian Delegation should endeavour to facilitate the tasks of the United Nations, and, particularly, of the Secretary-General, bearing in mind that the unanimous mandate conferred on him demonstrated not only that the United Nations machinery appears to offer the best, and perhaps the only, means of achieving a settlement in the area of dangerously conflicting Great Power interests; but also that the co-operation of the Arab states in the search for such a settlement will probably be forthcoming only if any United Nations action in the area recognizes the common political and economic fabric of the Arab World. While the Delegation should therefore render all necessary assistance to the United Nations efforts to reconcile inter-Arab differences, it should remain the Delegation's prime concern to assist in devising a formula to regulate relations between Israel and the Arab states, either individually or collectively.

Secretary-General's Study on Experience of UNEF

Since 1945 every effort aimed at developing permanent machinery for the preservation of peace through the employment of a United Nations force has failed. It remains the Canadian view that the effectiveness of the United Nations as an instrument for preventing or stopping armed conflict would be greatly enhanced if permanent arrangements existed for the provision of forces for use by the United Nations in appropriate circumstances. In view of persistent opposition, on political, financial and administrative grounds, to the creation of a permanent United Nations force, it seems unlikely that any major advance in this direction will be achieved at the thirteenth session of the General Assembly. However, the Secretary-General, in his report of the Secretariat study of UNEF experience, may indicate the possibility of at least limited progress through the establishment of a standby organization which would be capable of preparing for, and thereby facilitating, the rapid deployment of observer or patrol type groups to meet various future contingencies.

Until details of the Secretary-General's report are known specific instructions cannot be given. The Delegation will, however, wish to consult with other delegations and report upon the reception of the Secretary-General's study. The Delegation will wish to encourage any initiative which it would appear would carry support in the Assembly for the development of specific proposals to be considered by member governments which would tend to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations in the provision of observer groups or of forces to be charged with the tasks of fact-finding and reporting in areas of international tension or of prevention of conflict and preservation of settlements reached.

Outer Space

Canadian policy supports the establishment of an international space agency to assure that jurisdiction would be vested in the United Nations and that outer space would be used for peaceful and scientific purposes only. The Soviet Union has presented proposals for collaboration within the United Nations in the exploration of outer space, but has linked this question to the elimination of foreign bases. The United States is proposing that there should be a United Nations committee to survey the needs, potentialities and resources in the field of peaceful uses of outer space and to make recommendations.

The course proposed by the United States appears in general appropriate to command the support of the Delegation. It emphasizes international collaboration in the peaceful exploration of space. However, the Delegation should seek to ensure that the disarmament aspects are not neglected and that recognition is given to the need to find without delay a basis for agreement to ensure that outer space will be used exclusively for peaceful and scientific purposes.

Disarmament

The refusal of the Soviet Union to participate in the Disarmament Commission as composed for 1958 has meant that the regular processes of negotiation have been interrupted. However, there has taken place on an ad hoc basis the conference of experts on nuclear tests which reached agreed recommendations on a control system; there is an early prospect of a political conference of the three testing powers with a view to negotiating the terms of a suspension agreement; the United States proposal for technical talks on safeguards against surprise attack is expected to be accepted in principle by the Soviet Union; and there is a possibility that the problems raised by the penetration of outer space may be found suitable for similar specialized consideration. It is evident that, despite the lack of agreed United Nations machinery and the absence of negotiations on the overall problem, there is more evidence of concrete progress this year and a more promising outlook than could be reported at the outset of any previous session. Nevertheless, the existence of an accepted negotiating forum would be desirable to facilitate consideration of the results of specialized discussions and to ensure that the interests of the lesser powers are not neglected.

It would be appropriate for the Delegation to approach the appointment of members of the Disarmament Commission and the general debate on disarmament with the attitude that the piece-meal discussion of various aspects of disarmament by the governments most concerned should be continued as long as it shows promise of results, but that such discussion should be brought within the United Nations framework in a more formal way. To that end it would appear proper to advocate the continuation of specialized discussions, to stress the advantages of a flexible approach, to minimize discussion of the differences between the rival overall plans and to seek a compromise on the composition of the Disarmament Commission.

Cyprus

In June the United Kingdom announced a plan for the administration of Cyprus which was devised to increase Greek and Turkish participation in the administration of the island without prejudice to the ultimate political pattern which would not be determined for a probable period of seven years. The acquiescence of Greece and Turkey to the British plan, although sought by Mr. Macmillan, has not been forthcoming.

As yet, there has been no indication of Greek intentions in regard to the question of Cyprus which they have proposed for inclusion on the agenda; specific policy guidance will be provided when tactics at the Assembly become clearer. It is, however, thought that a specific endorsement by the United Nations might limit the flexibility of the United Kingdom plan and increase the problem of Greek and Turkish co-operation. On the other hand, general approval of the plan and encouragement to Greece and Turkey to co-operate might be helpful particularly if a resolution along these lines were sponsored and supported by the anti-colonial groups.

In view of Canada's common NATO membership and friendly ties with the United Kingdom, Greece and Turkey, the Delegation should be cautious in taking any initiative which might affect our good relations by urging on any of the parties concessions which they will oppose. Nevertheless, the Delegation might with due discretion encourage any step which would bring the parties more closely together and help towards a solution.

Algeria

The consequences for North Africa and France of failure by Premier de Gaulle to find a solution for the Algeria situation could be grave. Precipitate action and immoderate debate in the General Assembly which might hinder his efforts should therefore be avoided. Specific guidance will be sent to the Delegation when Premier de Gaulle's plans become known and the tactics of the sponsors of the Algerian item can be more clearly determined. The Delegation may, however, vote for inscription of the item on the agenda.

Hungary

Under this item there will be considered a further report of the Special Committee on Hungary dealing with the execution of Nagy, Maleter, and others. The Soviet Union's attitude towards United Nations resolutions in condemnation of the Soviet Union's violation of the independence of Hungary, the continuance by the Hungarian Government of acts of repression against the Hungarian people in defiance of United Nations resolutions, and the refusal to co-operate with the representatives of the United Nations charged with investigation of the Hungarian situation are deserving of condemnation. The continued pressure of world public opinion may conceivably restrain the Soviet Union and Hungarian Government from further repressive acts. It would be unfortunate if by passing over the latest report of continued repression too lightly the United Nations should give the impression that its earlier efforts on behalf of the Hungarian people were not sincere, or that the actions of the Soviet Union and Hungarian Government have been in any way forgotten or condoned. There is, however, little to be gained by seeking any further United Nations action of a specific character or by protracted debate which would be regarded by the uncommitted nations as merely an exchange of cold-war propaganda. It might be desirable to accept the termination of the existence of the Special Committee on Hungary at this stage if this can be done in such a way as to avoid any impression that United Nations concern in securing an amelioration of the sufferings of the Hungarian people is diminished.

At the same time it would be helpful if the General Assembly could approve an expression of continued international concern since this would not only be encouraging to the ordinary people of Hungary but might possibly have a deterrent effect on the repressive measures of the Hungarian Government.

Hungarian Credentials

In general it is not considered that credentials if formally in order should be rejected on political grounds. It is nevertheless difficult to agree that the United Nations should accept the representatives of a government maintained in power as a result of Soviet military intervention which the United Nations has condemned. For this reason the Delegation should support a resolution similar to the ones introduced by the United States in 1956 and 1957 and at the Third Emergency Session, by which the General Assembly took no decision as to the validity of the Hungarian credentials. This procedure permits the Hungarian Government Delegation to sit in the Assembly with full rights of participation but without formal acknowledgement of its right to do so. The Delegation should not vote to reject the credentials of the Hungarian delegation unless there is broad support for such action in the Assembly.

Chinese Representation

The problem of Chinese representation has arisen at every session of the General Assembly since 1950 and this year the United States may find it more difficult to carry its procedural motion to postpone consideration of the question for the duration of the session. The Delegation should vote in favour of a procedural motion postponing consideration of the issue for a fixed period of time such as "for the duration of the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly". The Delegation should also vote in favour of accepting the credentials of the Representative of the Republic of China if they are challenged.

South Africa

The South African Government which has maintained only token representation at the United Nations since 1956 has announced its intention of resuming full participation in the work of the United Nations and has based its decision on what it considered to be the more conciliatory attitude of a number of United Nations members towards the discussion of its policies at the last session of the General Assembly. The continued participation of South Africa in the work of the United Nations is to be encouraged. The efforts of the United Nations to secure an improvement in the racial policies of the South African Government will not, it is believed, be assisted by immoderate debates or by the continuation of critical attacks which would result in South Africa's withdrawal from the United Nations. With these considerations in mind the Delegation should seek to avoid any vote or action in the Assembly which would go further in support of United Nations action in respect of South African racial policies than the Canadian position at last year's General Assembly. The Delegation should, therefore, abstain on inscription of the items on race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policy of apartheid and on the treatment of Indians in South Africa on the basis that such further discussion in the Assembly would seem unlikely to serve a useful purpose. If the items are inscribed, as may be expected, the Delegation should abstain on any resolution appealing to South Africa to revise its policies but might in its discretion support an appeal for negotiations between South Africa and India and Pakistan on the treatment of Indians in South Africa.

The Korean Question

It may be expected that at this session the Soviet bloc will not only denounce the action taken by the United States to modernize military equipment in Korea in contrast to the Chinese withdrawal of forces, but will also propose again that the United Nations Commission on the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK) be abolished. This prospective attack makes it particularly important for those states which had forces in Korea to maintain a common front on the Korean question, and the Delegation, bearing this in mind, should work privately with friendly delegations for a resolution on the Korean problem reiterating United Nations objectives and sufficiently positive and conciliatory in tone to ensure the support of the majority of uncommitted countries.

Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development

At its twelfth session the General Assembly decided to establish a Special Fund to further the technical, economic and social development of the less developed countries. Canada played an active role in negotiations which led to the resolution now submitted by the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly.

The Delegation should support the ECOSOC resolution which sets out the organizational, administrative and financial arrangement for the Fund, and its detailed scope of operations. Canadian support in principle for the Fund has been announced by the Canadian Government and the Delegation may reaffirm Canadian willingness to make a suitable contribution provided arrangements along the lines of the ECOSOC resolution are approved by the Assembly and receive broad international support.

Conference on the Law of the Sea

The Delegation should give its full support to the convening of a new international conference on the law of the sea at the earliest practicable date following the conclusion of this session of the General Assembly (March or April 1959 would seem suitable). It would be preferable that the conference be held in a neutral location and Geneva or possibly New Delhi might be suggested. The Delegation should support inclusion in the terms of reference of the conference of the questions of the breadth of the territorial sea and of a contiguous fishing zone and should resist any attempt to separate these two items. The Delegation should support any move to include in the resolution a request that member states should refrain from taking unilateral action prior to the convening of a new conference and should oppose any attempt to include in a resolution a request that states attempt to enter into settlement among themselves with regard to fishing rights prior to the convening of the conference. The Delegation should oppose the inclusion of any questions other than the breadth of the territorial sea and a contiguous fishing zone in the terms of reference for the new conference.

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

REPRÉSENTATION DE LA CHINE

REPRESENTATION OF CHINA

15.

DEA/5475-EJ-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 31, 1958

REPRESENTATION OF CHINA IN THE UNITED NATIONS

Attached for your approval, if you agree, is a proposed article† for inclusion in the Commentary for the Canadian Delegation to the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly. The Indian Government formally submitted on July 14, 1958, the "Question of the Representation of China in the United Nations” for inclusion as an item of the provisional agenda for this session. In paragraph 17 of the draft article, following an outline of the treatment of this thorny question of Chinese representation in past sessions, it is proposed that Canada should follow the practice of previous years and give restrained support to the resolution which the United States regularly submits for postponement of consideration of the question of Chinese representation. The Canadian Delegation would:

- (a) refrain from giving support in debate to this year’s resolution for postponement; but
- (b) vote in favour of a procedural motion postponing consideration of the issue for a fixed period such as “for the duration of the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly”; and
- (c) vote in favour of accepting the credentials of the representative of the Republic of China if these are challenged.¹⁷

2. If Canada were to reverse its vote and oppose the procedural motion for postponement, which the United States is again expected to sponsor, it would almost certainly be taken as an indication that Canada was moving towards getting Peking seated in the United Nations. Such a move would be regarded with dismay by the United States and might, by encouraging others to vote against the postponement resolution, bring about its defeat.

3. Against this must be weighed the fact that what is at issue is discussion of the question, and not a substantive decision on Chinese representation. It is this consideration which makes it increasingly difficult to give continued Canadian support to the refusal of the United States even to consider a discussion and to the rigid insistence of the United States on the status quo.

4. Perhaps this difficulty in determining a reasonable position for our Delegation can be met by our attitude towards the expected Indian amendment to the resolution of the United States. In the last two sessions the Indians have proposed an amendment to the resolution for postponement which would have the effect of placing the item of Chinese representation on the agenda for consideration at the current session. Canada has voted against the Indian amendment, and it was defeated last year by only 43 votes against to 29 in favour with 9 abstentions. It is probable that the Indian amendment will again be defeated, although no doubt by a smaller margin, and the Canadian Delegation is instructed in the attached draft article to continue the practice of voting against it, if its defeat appears likely. There is, however, a possibility that it will succeed. I am suggesting, subject to your approval, that Canada should abstain rather than vote against this amendment, if the Delegation considers that there may be a significant shift towards favouring the Indian request for inclusion of the item on the Agenda. (See paragraph 18 of the attached article.)

5. An abstention could be defended on the grounds that Canada, while not committing itself on the issue of Chinese representation, is unwilling to oppose the desire of a large number of members to discuss the issue. By way of further justification it can be pointed out that, should the Indians succeed and the item be included on the Agenda, and should a motion subsequently be made to decide who should actually sit as the representatives of the Government of China, the General Assembly could — and no doubt would — decide by a simple majority vote (including Canada) that this is an important question and therefore requires a two-thirds majority for a decision. There is, therefore, very little danger that the United States will not be able, in the final analysis, to prevent admission of Communist China.

¹⁷ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
OK SE S[mith]

6. It is obvious that Communist China cannot be kept out of the United Nations indefinitely. Evidence shows that support for the seating of Communist China and opposition to the United States approach is growing each year. At this time it seems within the realm of possibility that the first step — a successful Indian amendment, to bring about discussion of this issue, — may be made in the direction of admission of Communist China, despite the strong opposition of the United States. The slight modification of our past voting procedure on the Chinese representation question which I have suggested is an attempt to meet this possibility.

J. L[ÉGER]

16.

DEA/5475-EJ-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1417

New York, September 19, 1958

RESTRICTED. PRIORITY.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

CHINESE REPRESENTATION

The General Committee devoted its meeting this morning to the consideration of the Indian request for inclusion of an item dealing with the question of the representation of China. The discussion followed the pattern of earlier years and no repeat no significant new arguments were advanced. The USA presented a draft resolution for the General Assembly's consideration by which the Assembly would decide "(1) to reject the request of India for the inclusion in the agenda of its thirteenth regular session of the item entitled: Question of the Representation of China in the UN; and (2) not repeat not to consider, at its thirteenth regular session, any proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China or to seat representatives of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China".

2. Before the vote the USSR questioned the competence of the General Committee to adopt a resolution of this nature and the Chairman then ruled that no repeat no question of competence arose in relation to paragraph one of the draft resolution and that paragraph two was within the Committee's competence since it amounted to a request for the non-inclusion of an item. This the Chairman considered to be within the Committee's competence in relation to the second sentence of rule 40.

3. Malik's ruling was challenged by the USSR and upheld by a vote of ten in favour to 3 against with 7 abstentions. A USA motion that the text of their resolution be put to the vote before voting on the inclusion of the item proposed by India was adopted by 10 in favour to 4 against with 5 abstentions.

4. The USA draft resolution was then put to a roll call vote in parts with first paragraph being adopted by a vote of 12 in favour 7 against and 2 abstentions. The second paragraph was adopted by a vote of 11 in favour 7 against with 3 abstentions. The text as a whole was adopted by 12 in favour (Pakistan, UK, USA, Uruguay, Australia, China, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Japan, Lebanon and Netherlands) 7 against (Rumania, USSR, Ceylon, Czechoslovakia, Indonesia, Ireland and Nepal) with 2 abstentions (Greece and Mexico). The additional abstention on paragraph 2 was that of El Salvador.

5. The General Committee is meeting again this afternoon to consider the USSR request for an additional item dealing with 10 to 15 percent reduction in military budgets and a Ukrainian request for an additional item dealing with the organization of an international public health and medical research year. The Chairman hopes to complete the consideration of these items this afternoon, as well as the question of allocation of items to committees in order that the General Assembly may have recommendations in these connections before it on Monday.

17.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 21, 1958

Present:

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the Chair,
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming),
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
 The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees),
 The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes),
 The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton),
 The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan),
 The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness),
 The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough),
 The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean),
 The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr),
 The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Browne) (for afternoon meeting only),
 The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith),
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley),
 The Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier).

* * *

UNITED NATIONS; RECOGNITION OF CHINA; DRAFT STATEMENT

3. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that there would be a motion before the U.N. on the following day on the admission of Communist China to the United Nations. This question had come up for the last five or six years. Each time, the United States had brought forward a resolution, the effect of which was to postpone consideration of the issue for a fixed period, such as for the duration of the current session of the General Assembly. On Thursday, the steering committee had adopted by 12 votes to 7, with 2 abstentions, the U.S. proposal that the Assembly should,

(a) reject the Indian request for inclusion of the question of Chinese representation on the agenda; and,

(b) decide not to consider during the present session new proposals to exclude the representatives of Nationalist China or accept the representatives of Communist China. Despite the acceptance of the U.S. resolution the result showed a trend unfavourable to the United States.

The Minister said that the Indian resolution might carry a procedural majority (that is, a simple majority as opposed to a two-thirds majority which was required when a matter of substance was involved). The question was whether Canada should support the resolution postponing the matter to the 14th General Assembly. While last June he might have said that the U.S. could not keep postponing this matter indefinitely, his thoughts at the moment were that this was not the time to discuss the question in view of the situation in the Taiwan Straits area. On that basis, he was in favour of Canada supporting the moratorium. Furthermore, he thought that the Canadian delegation should vote against the expected Indian amendment favouring discussion of the issue unless there were indications of a major shift in voting towards supporting the amendment. In that case, he wondered whether the delegation should be instructed to abstain, basing abstention on the proposal that Canada was willing to let other nations decide if they wanted to discuss the question while not necessarily assuming a position on the substantive issue of representation. In brief, should he vote for the moratorium and say nothing, or go on the podium and say that Canada considered that it was untimely for the General Assembly at the present session to consider the question of Chinese representation because of the existing international tension resulting from military activities in the Taiwan Straits area.

4. During the discussion the following points were raised:

(a) The British at the Commonwealth Economic and Trade Conference appeared very upset about the inflexible attitude of the United States concerning the Quemoy Islands, which the British did not consider as having any strategic significance. The U.S. could not withdraw now without loss of face. They were putting pressure on the British government. It was clear that, unless the situation were resolved, China's next demand would be on Hong Kong. The British were, therefore, forced to support the U.S. on Quemoy.

(b) A great part of the press in Canada appeared in favour of recognition. Mr. Holmes had reported from New York that there was a very great interest in the position which Canada would take.

(c) If, as an alternative move, Canada suggested an amendment to the resolution stressing that, under the present circumstances, it was not opportune to consider the matter, this amendment would be considered by the United States as a formal unfriendly act.

(d) In the Province of Quebec public opinion was against the United States attitude and the people did not want to see Canada get involved in a major conflict over Quemoy or Formosa. Chiang Kai-Shek was not popular in Quebec. Many of the clergy (including the clergy in the United States) considered the present situation as ridiculous. The French Ambassador had inquired from Mr. Fulton about the Roman Catholic point of view in Canada. The reasons for his inquiry appeared to be that, because of non-recognition, there was no possibility of protecting Roman Catholic missionary interests in China.

5. The Cabinet agreed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs vote in favour of a procedural motion postponing consideration of the issue for a fixed period such as for the duration of the 13th session of the General Assembly and that he deliver a statement in the Plenary Session along the lines proposed during the discussion.

(At a subsequent meeting held later in the day the draft statement was discussed and approved).

...

18.

DEA/5475-EJ-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1424

New York, September 22, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Paris, NATO Paris, Washington (Information).

CHINESE REPRESENTATION

Following is the text of a statement which the Minister intends to make in plenary this morning in connection with the USA moratorium resolution concerning the inclusion in the agenda at this session of the question of Chinese representation: "The Chinese question under discussion, upon which we are considering the General Committee's report, is one of the most important with which the UN organization is faced. There are factors which confuse and complicate the issue when military activities taking place in the Taiwan Straits area threaten the peace of the world.

It would be unrealistic to regard the China problem here at the General Assembly in isolation from what is happening in the Taiwan Straits, for surely it has a bearing on the matter. It is the opinion of the Canadian delegation that it would not repeat not be timely for the General Assembly at the thirteenth session to consider the question of Chinese representation because the international tension which has resulted from the pressing by military means of the dispute over the Chinese off shore islands would not repeat not afford a proper atmosphere for a discussion of the matter of Chinese representation in the UN. My delegation, for this reason, will vote in favour of the resolution which would effect postponement of the consideration of this question for the present session.

Distinguished delegates have expressed their hope that the talks between USA and communist Chinese representatives now going on in Warsaw will result in arrangements being made which will alleviate the dangerous situation off the China coast. I earnestly join in this hope, and I trust that the warlike activities will cease, since resort to force and the threat of force produce nothing but the danger of war".

2. We shall confirm delivery of the statement.

19.

DEA/5475-EJ-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1444

New York, September 23, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 1429 Sep 22.†

Repeat London, Paris, NATO Paris, Washington (Information).

CHINESE REPRESENTATION

The USA resolution contained in the General Committee's report was passed this afternoon by a vote of 44 (including Canada)-28-9, as opposed to last year's vote of 48-27-6. Austria, Greece, Iceland, Iraq and Libya changed from affirmative votes to abstentions and Iraq changed from yes to no repeat no. South Africa which was absent last year added one affirmative vote. Cambodia, which abstained last year, voted consistently against the USA position, while one negative vote of UAR replaced two negative votes of Syria and Egypt.¹⁸

2. Earlier, an Indian amendment to overthrow the USA resolution received 29 votes. The vote on the first paragraph of the USA resolution which rejects inclusion in the agenda of the Indian item on Chinese representation was only 40-28-13. New Zealand and Mexico both announced in the debate their intentions of abstaining on the first paragraph of this resolution, while supporting the second paragraph postponing any consideration of Chinese representation for this session,¹⁹ in order to demonstrate their respect for the principle that this issue should be discussed, while considering that it would be untimely to discuss it now. Ethiopia, Mexico and New Zealand abstained on the first part of the USA resolution; while Malaya and Peru abstained on the second part.

3. The most disturbing feature from a USA viewpoint was not repeat not the vote, so much as the debate. Of the 29 countries speaking, 24 spoke against the USA position. The UK and Canada supported the USA, while Mexico and New Zealand, as reported above, spoke only to announce modifications in their previous policy. Unlike the debate last year, the USA was unable to draw any statement of support for its position from continental Europe, Latin America, or Asia.

4. Menon, in his closing speech, drew attention to what he claimed was the failure of the USA itself to make a persuasive defence of its position in the UN. He recalled that Chou En-Lai had said in 1955 at Bandung that he wanted a peaceful solution to all problems, and from its information India still believed that these negotiations could begin with Chiang and the USA today. He issued an appeal for the Warsaw talks to be made fruitful, and hoped they would not repeat not be left at the ambassadorial level. He offered India's good offices if these could help to bring about serious negotiations. He referred to the build-up of nationalist troops in the off-shore islands, and argued that the current artillery bombard-

¹⁸ En février 1958, la Syrie et l'Égypte ont fusionné pour former la République arabe unie.

In February 1958, Syria and Egypt merged to form the United Arab Republic.

¹⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

That's what we should have done. [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

ment was not repeat not timed to attract the attention of the Assembly, but was a response to recent nationalist aggression in this area.

5. In explaining Cambodia's intention to oppose the USA resolution, Prince Sihanouk expressed his belief that communist China could be accepted as a sister nation in the Far East without this leading to communist subversion of other areas. He appealed for the neutralization of the off-shore islands. In explaining Iceland's intention to abstain on all votes, Thors recalled that as long ago as 1953 Iceland had said it was ill-advised to keep mainland China out of the UN. Now, with the dangers of a shooting war in the Formosa Straits, preparations for a change in the UN attitude should be begun: these should be gradual rather than abrupt. Therefore, while it could not repeat not vote for the Indian resolution, Iceland would abstain as a warning that a change in attitude was required.

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III

CHYPRE
CYPRUS

20. DEA/50141-40

*Note sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 8, 1958

CYPRUS IN THE U.N. ASSEMBLY

During our discussions last week with Mr. Beeley of the U.K. Mission to the United Nations, we ran over most of the principal subjects at the forthcoming Assembly. When we came to the subject mentioned above, I expressed the strictly personal opinion that the U.K. would find itself this year in a more satisfactory position vis-à-vis the Assembly than it had previously because it had put forward proposals²⁰ which should gain a good deal of sympathy in the Assembly. It seemed to me that the concessions made in these proposals in the direction of self-government should appeal to the more responsible Asian and African countries. The Indians, for instance, had never taken a strict anti-colonial line on Cyprus and Krishna Menon had in fact been helpful with compromises. It seemed to me that some of these countries might be even more disposed to support the British position now as it did seem to most people that it was only through some compromise of this kind that any progress could be made in Cyprus. I asked Mr. Beeley if he thought a resolution in the Assembly which gave general support to the U.K. initiative would help them in persuading the Greeks and the Turks to cooperate. He said he thought that it would.

2. It seems to me that the most constructive thing that the Assembly might do this year, and one on which it might be not too difficult to get a two-thirds majority, would be a resolution which gave general blessing to a solution along the lines the British are proposing. It would be unwise, of course, to attempt to get the Assembly specifically to endorse the British plan. There are a number of delegations which could be persuaded that a compromise of this kind was the only hope for a solution but whose prejudices or political problems would prevent them from patting the British on the back too obviously. It seems fairly clear that the British would now be prepared to take almost any step which would solve the Cyprus problem and that it is not they, but the Greeks and the Turks who have to have pressure put upon them by world opinion. It would certainly not help if we tried to marshal the forces against them in such a way as to humiliate them but if their faces could be considered in the process, we might in the Assembly be able to help create a propitious atmosphere for negotiations. Much, of course, would depend on what transpires between now and the time this is debated in the Assembly but if the situation has not changed very much, then a debate along these lines would be helpful. In fact, if some initiatives were taken shortly to prepare the way for such a resolution in the Assembly, the Greeks and Turks might thereby be induced to talk more gently and act more reasonably in order to avoid the Assembly's wrath.

²⁰ Pour un compte rendu des efforts déployés par le Royaume-Uni afin de régler le problème de Chypre dans le cadre de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique Nord, voir le chapitre II, 7^e partie.

For an account of United Kingdom efforts to solve the Cyprus issue within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, see Chapter II, Part 7.

3. It would clearly not be advisable for the U.K. themselves to take any initiative along these lines. I don't think it would be advisable either for the Americans or most other members of NATO to do so. Canada might not be the best open sponsor of such a move but our position vis-à-vis the Asians and Africans is such that I think we might try sounding some of them out. We might even persuade the Indians to take the initiative. The trouble in the past too often has been on issues of this kind that the British and Americans and their friends have prepared an initiative and a resolution and then asked Krishna Menon to join them. The only way to get Krishna behind any such move is to let him take hold of it at the beginning. The end result will not be exactly what we would have designed ourselves, but we at least have Krishna working on our side rather than against us.

4. Last year, you will recall that we worked very hard to secure a resolution on Algeria that won Mr. Pineau's gratitude in the end although the French Delegation viewed our activities with some suspicion enroute. We were then asked to do a similar job on Cyprus, but we were reluctant to do so because we had already exhausted our reputation as a mediator. The request for help came too late and the result was not very satisfactory. There might be something to be said, therefore, for our choosing Cyprus in advance as a field in which we might play a role and making adequate preparations rather than being caught in the eddy of last-minute manoeuvres. From the point of view of our general policy, furthermore, I think there is something to be said for working to help the United Kingdom in a good cause thereby seeking to prove to them that neither we nor the United Nations are as hostile as some of them sometimes think.

J.W. H[OLMES]

21.

DEA/50141-40

Note du chef de la Direction européenne pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures²¹

Memorandum from Head European Division, to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs²¹

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 31, 1958

CYPRUS IN THE U.N. ASSEMBLY

In your memo of July 8 you discuss the role that Canada might play in promoting a helpful consideration of the Cyprus issue at the next General Assembly, and particularly the possibility that we could interest Krishna Menon in organizing support for a compromise resolution. Certainly this three-sided disagreement seems to be one calling for skilful assistance from the outside. Because of Canada's NATO and Commonwealth association, we are perhaps not the most acceptable to take up such a task. Menon would seem to have many qualifications, particularly in regard to the spheres in which he should be able to find support. You mention, however, that the end result would not be exactly what we would have designed ourselves and this raises the question whether the United Kingdom and perhaps the Turks would find Menon acceptable.

From what we can gather, there are indications that the Greeks would be prepared to work towards some compromise, at least in timing, although they maintain their ultimate goal of self-determination for Cyprus. Their chief concern at the moment seems to be the adoption of an interim arrangement which would not prejudice the final result in favour of partition. The Turks for their part seem set on creating a situation where partition will be inevitable. In assessing the validity of the Turkish contention that the two communities cannot live together, we must not lose sight of the fact that they did live peacefully together for many years in Cyprus, and that Turkish and Greek communities still manage to get along in Constantinople and elsewhere. Turkish propaganda has obviously played its part in exacerbating friction between the communities in Cyprus.

Thus there would seem to be ground for believing that a compromise could be found and if Menon were acceptable to the three parties, he would seem to be well qualified for the role of Good Officer in organizing Assembly support for a resolution which would facilitate its achievement.

In the last paragraph of your memorandum you touch on the general question of Canadian activity at the next Assembly, and we agree entirely with your point that we should decide in advance the issues where we will try to play a part in finding a solution, and then make our preparations accordingly. As you suggest, for Cyprus this might be in promoting Krishna Menon as the Good Officer. We may also find the French will look to us again, in view of last year's success, to help on the Algerian item.

HENRY F. DAVIS

²¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Mr. Davis: We might at least save Mr. Biblica-Rosetti's life. J.W. H[olmes]

22.

DEA/50141-40

*Note du chef de la Direction européenne
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, European Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], November 7, 1958

CYPRUS

The Turkish Ambassador came to see me this morning about the Cyprus issue in the UN. He had received instructions from his Government to call on the Minister to ask that we vote against the Greek position in the UN. In the Minister's absence he had come to see me to convey this request. He received at length the history of the NATO discussions and expressed the view that on the Cyprus issue, where the UK and Turkish positions coincided, we would presumably support Turkey since he considered it inconceivable that we would vote against the UK.

I asked whether he had any information on what the Greeks would propose in New York, but he could only speculate that they would seek to get the General Assembly to support a plan for self-determination. Since the Turks believed that this would inevitably place the Turkish minority under the domination of the Greek Cypriot majority, they would vote against any such proposal, and he sought assurances that we would do likewise. I said that since the situation he was describing was as yet hypothetical, I could not say what the Canadian Government's attitude would be. We had all along considered that the complex issue on Cyprus could more profitably be examined directly by those principally concerned — a conference of three, or of five by adding representatives of the two Cypriot communities, or a somewhat larger group such as that proposed in NATO should those concerned consider it would be helpful to have others associated with them to facilitate finding a solution. On this last point the Turkish Ambassador said his Government would never agree to go past five, although they had agreed in Paris to the Chairmanship of the Secretary General and also the presence of the US in an observer capacity.

The Turkish Ambassador said that with this reservation his Government remained willing to participate in a conference which would examine the problem in the terms of the British proposal and modifications thereto, and would also be prepared to consider the shape of the final settlement. On this they hold firmly to the conviction that only partition would be satisfactory, since they did not believe that independence, even internationally guaranteed after the Austrian model, would be satisfactory or permanent. It would be unsatisfactory since it would put the Turkish Cypriot minority under the control of the Greek Cypriot majority, and it would not be permanent since the UN could not indefinitely reject a majority vote for annexation to Greece.

When he could not get me to say that the Canadian Government would vote against a Greek proposal whatever it might be, he attempted to get me to say that we did not want the issue to come up in the UN. I repeated that the Canadian interest was to facilitate a solution satisfactory to those directly concerned, and that it appeared to us that a conference composed in a way satisfactory to these interests would be the most likely way to advance the solution of the problem.

HENRY F. DAVIS

23.

DEA/50141-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2038

New York, November 27, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

CYPRUS

The debate on Cyprus began Tuesday with massive statements by Greece, the UK and Turkey in which they put their familiar arguments fully onto the record. The tone has been relatively unemotional and there seems to be a general feeling that there is room for compromise.

2. Averoff (Greece) laid emphasis on the formation of Cyprus as an independent entity free from the "repressions" of any outside power. The Greeks of course totally rejected the "monstrous" British plan which set up a joint government of Greek and Turk Cypriots under a British Governor. They believed that this would "plunge the knife of partition into the body of Cyprus" and make partition of the island certain and permanent. They are trying, not repeat not very nimbly, to woo the Asian-African group to their side by making allusion to "independence and freedom".

3. Noble (UK) insisted that the UK plan for Cyprus was the best possible working compromise in the circumstances and denied vigorously the Greek contention that the island would remain divided. He stressed that the plan would be in effect "a partnership", but that at present no repeat no binding decision need be taken in regard to the island's distant future. He did not repeat not exclude independence as an ultimate possibility and expressed the UK opinion that partition was not repeat not a solution. This last factor was most interesting and did something to re-establish the individuality of the positions of the three protagonists which may in turn reduce the Greek feeling of isolation. It was hopeful to hear Noble express satisfaction with the cessation of violence between the two communities, refuting in part the Turk premise that they cannot repeat not live together.

4. The Turks have attempted to disguise their interest in partition and have sought to identify their case with the UK position. Zorlu in his statement based his argument on the history of two separate common entities with divergent cultures, and urged the continuation of this separation. He attacked Greece bitterly and declared that there was no repeat no ground for belief in an independent Cyprus. He said that there was no repeat no Cypriot nation, not repeat not even a Cypriot political entity, and that no repeat no one was in a position even to consider such a situation.

5. France has been the only other speaker and seemed to voice the general view of all in expressing the hope that those concerned could find a solution.

6. Yesterday the exchanges between the three continued without perceptible advance towards a solution within the committee. Today the meetings are adjourned and the speakers list may be closed tomorrow. The real activity is in the corridors where compromise resolutions are sprouting, but as yet none has taken firm root, we are reporting on this aspect of the item in a separate telegram.

24.

DEA/50141-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2045

New York, November 27, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington (Information).

By Bag Ankara, Athens from London.

CYPRUS DEBATE

It appears now that none of the three original resolutions is likely to be pressed to a vote. It is generally expected that suggestions for compromise will be made.

2. At an early stage the UK delegation were in touch with us and with the Norwegians on a very confidential basis in an effort to encourage us to put forward a short resolution in very general terms which would call for the end of violence and encourage the continuation of consultation between those interested. We made it very clear that, while Assembly agreement on such a formula would be in accordance with our aims, we were in no repeat no position to undertake to co-sponsor or even work for such a resolution at this stage and indeed might never be. We are, however, continuing in the most complete privacy to consider with the Norwegians the elements of a resolution which, according to our assessment of the changing situation, might have a chance of commanding the support of the three parties principally interested and thus of a majority of the Assembly.

3. While this has been going on the Japanese together with the Swedes and Austrians sought the views of the Norwegians and ourselves on the text of a draft which they had in hand. As it stood it appeared to have no repeat no chance in our opinion of attracting the support of the Greeks and would thus not repeat not qualify for our support since it would divide the three interested parties. As a result of the cold reaction of the Greeks and the general absence of encouragement from those he had consulted, the Japanese representative has reluctantly and with evident disappointment put his idea aside at least for the time being.

4. Menon has now come into the act and, although his ideas are far from clear, he seems to be thinking in terms of a resolution which would recognize the right to nationhood for Cyprus and constitute to some extent at least an endorsement of its unity. This would be a modification of the Greek thesis which, while it would avoid the danger which the Indians would see in supporting, unqualified, the concept of independence, would still be readily acceptable to the Greeks. The UK reaction has been definitely unfavourable to an Indian initiative. They are openly suspicious of any manoeuvre by Menon and clearly still hope that they may prevail upon us and the Norwegians to intervene in a way which will satisfy them.

5. We have been able so far, we believe, to avoid any commitment whatsoever. Nevertheless, it must be recognized that an extremely difficulty tactical situation is developing. The UK are trying to encourage us to develop a resolution tailored to their wishes and the Indians have asked us to seek instructions to co-sponsor the resolution they are planning. This we have not repeat not undertaken to do but there are two aspects of the Indian move which we consider should not repeat not be ignored in considering our own policy in the Cyprus debate.

6. In the first place, the irresponsible behaviour of the Indian delegation at the emergency session of the General Assembly and over several questions before the present Assembly (e.g. the law of the sea) have produced tensions between the Indian delegation and others including members of the Commonwealth. There is deep mistrust within the UK delegation of Indian motives. We, for our part, despite our best efforts have not repeat not found it easy to establish the kind of fruitful working relations with the Indians which we have had in the past. In these circumstances, if this Indian initiative could be the basis of agreement for further consultation among the Three Powers, this, it seems to us, would be a good thing for Commonwealth relations as it would give the Indians the credit for a constructive initiative. For this reason, we do not repeat not wish to rebuff the approaches which the Indians have made to us although it seems to us obvious that we could not repeat not support an Indian resolution which while it carried the Greek support, was opposed by the UK and Turks. It is a delicate and difficult business to keep trying to encourage the more responsible element in Indian thinking and at the same time not repeat not to appear to the UK delegation to be encouraging what they regard as a mischievous Indian initiative. We feel, however, that in the interest of Commonwealth relations and of long-term relations with India, we should play our appropriate part in the endeavour although it must be admitted that we are not repeat not optimistic as to the outcome.

7. A further point to be borne in mind is that, once the Indians have gone into the field with a draft, the chances of Norway and Canada successfully pulling off a resolution more favoured by the UK become very unpromising. We should have to fight the Indians at every step, and in a contest with them for the uncommitted vote, we haven't a chance. Furthermore, the effect on Canadian-Indian relations of our doing so after the Indians had asked us to work in co-sponsorship with them on a draft, which is, on their part, an endeavour to be moderate, would be most unfortunate.

8. Behind this difficult tactical situation it is still possible to see some hopeful signs that wording acceptable to the UK and to the Greeks could be devised. The Turks, we expect, could then be brought along. At this stage, however, the Greeks are understandably not repeat not ready to abandon the favourable opportunities they see for organizing support within the Assembly behind the idea of independence or nationhood for a unified Cyprus, particularly if this thesis is being peddled by Menon. On the other hand, if we can rely on Menon not repeat not to be satisfied with anything less than massive support for his proposition, it may be possible after further manoeuvring to adjust the positions and reach agreement on a text to which none of the three interested parties would take strong opposition. We will continue to have this aim very much in mind and you can be sure that we are alive to the difficulties inherent in the situation.

9. In any event, as we understand our instructions, we shall continue to work for a conference on a basis acceptable to all the parties and this implies the avoidance of taking sides on the substance of the issue. There is just a possibility that if the Indian resolution and perhaps a counter-resolution reflecting UK and Turkish views are to appear in competition before the committee at a final stage a brief compromise text might command the support of the committee which we think will be reluctant to take sides on the question of substance.

25.

DEA/50141-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2056

New York, November 29, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington (Information).

By Bag Athens, Ankara from London.

CYPRUS

After several consultations with key delegations the Norwegians and ourselves yesterday produced a piece of paper which attempted to describe in a way palatable to the principal three the largest area of agreement which we thought could be found in the Assembly for a resolution to close the Cyprus debate. We met together late yesterday afternoon with the UK Permanent Representative to get his reactions to our line of approach. We pointed out that obviously our form of words was not repeat not a draft resolution but that we were showing the paper to him to see to what extent his delegation might find acceptable a resolution based on those ideas. We explained that they were being put to him informally in response to the UK suggestion that the Norwegians and ourselves might be helpful on the Cyprus item. We reiterated that we were not repeat not directly involved and, as my Norwegian colleague put it, it is happily not repeat not necessary for us to have a Cyprus policy. However, we remain willing to associate ourselves with a compromise which would command at least the acquiescence if not repeat not the support of the three principal parties. Thus, the Norwegian-Canadian paper could not repeat not be considered as an "initiative" and we would not repeat not proceed if we met objections from any of the three.

2. Dixon took exception to the main line of the paper, feeling that it placed unacceptable emphasis on agreement on a final solution and he suggested increased emphasis on a recognition of the Macmillan plan as the interim arrangement in operation for the "cooling off" period.²²

3. Dixon indicated to us that he anticipated that it would prove impossible to get Greek agreement to any formula which would be acceptable to the UK and the Turks. He thought that the intransigence of the Greek position had been increased by the activity of the Indian delegation in propounding draft resolutions which went further to meet the Greek position. In the circumstances he indicated that it might be preferable for the UK to proceed with their own resolution amended to make it more generally acceptable rather than to try for a solution based on acceptability to all three of the principal parties. The Norwegian Ambassador pointed out that this would of course be a decision for the UK to make, having in mind their estimate of the voting support which the UK resolution might obtain.

4. Dixon explained that the reactions he had voiced were personal and that he would seek London's views on our ideas. We reminded him of the status of our paper and said that it did not repeat not bear the judgment of either the Norwegian or the Canadian governments and in the circumstances requested him not repeat not have any standing. The next move is up to him.

²² Voir la 7^e partie, chapitre 2.
See Chapter 2, Part 7.

5. Clearly our approach does not repeat not meet Dixon's idea of the UK requirements. On the other hand, a line markedly nearer to the UK position and meeting Turkish requirements would appear to have no repeat no chance of acceptance by the Greeks. Indeed, we much doubt whether even our present Canadian-Norwegian paper would not repeat not be rejected by the Greeks as being too near the British position. The UK delegation seem to share our assessment on this point.

6. Advisers on the UK delegation have let us understand that there is still a possibility of something useful developing from our response to the original UK request for help. We propose to take no repeat no other action unless there are new developments.

26.

DEA/50141-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2062

New York, December 2, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

My telegram 2063 December 2 contains the texts of the Indian and the latest Iranian resolutions. The voting situation with which we may be confronted on these resolutions seems to us as follows:

2. The Iranian resolution, which may be voted on first, corresponds to the aims of the UK delegation and is in itself, we think, quite a good effort. It would be hard not repeat not to vote for it. On the other hand the Greeks may oppose it and the Indians likewise.

3. The Indian resolution is now couched in pretty mild terms. It will have Greek support and probably that of many of the Afro-Asian group and quite a large number of others. The British and Turks will in all probability be opposed to it.

4. Our dilemma therefore may be that instead of a resolution carrying the acquiescence of all three parties we shall have two competing resolutions, to neither of which we would object in substance. One possible line of voting would be to vote for the Iranian resolution, which is politically more neutral, and to abstain on the Indian resolution, which in inspiration is more biased.

5. I hope to be able to speak to the Under-Secretary by phone after this morning's meeting, since voting instructions along this line would mean moving away from the position of strict neutrality which we have up to now maintained on the Cyprus issue. We have found throughout the debate that several delegations including the USA, Netherlands, Norway and New Zealand have views similar to ours and they will thus face the same voting problem as ourselves, although we do not repeat not know yet how they may meet it.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

27.

DEA/50141-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2063

New York, December 2, 1958

OPIMMEDIATE.

Following is the text of the Indian resolution and, second, of the Iranian resolution:

The General Assembly,

Having considered the Cyprus question,

Recalling its resolution 1013(XI) which expressed the earnest desire for peaceful, democratic and just solution in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the UN and the hope that negotiations would be resumed and continued to this end,

Expressing concern at the situation in Cyprus,

Noting with regret that the efforts hitherto made have not repeat not resulted in a solution,

Desiring to see the restoration of peaceful conditions and to further friendly relations in the area,

Welcoming the statement of the Representative of the UK that his government seeks to "help to preserve the united personality of Cyprus",

Welcoming further the statement of the Representative of the UK that his government does not repeat not favour the partition of Cyprus or consider it to be a solution of the problem,

Welcoming the recent statements of the Greek government that they do not repeat not have territorial claims or expansionist desires in regard to Cyprus,

Believing that the Cypriot people are entitled to self-government in accordance with the Charter of the UN, (1) Urges all concerned, particularly the government and people of Cyprus, to use their best endeavours to establish conditions of the cessation of violence in Cyprus helpful to peaceful negotiations; (2) Considers that effective provisions for the protection of all legitimate minority interests are essential for a peaceful, equitable and stable settlement; (3) Requests the UK government to continue negotiations with a view to promoting self-government for Cyprus, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the UN, and the preservation of its integrity; (4) Calls upon all member states to co-operate to this end, undertaking to respect the integrity of Cyprus as well as its self-government when it is fully attained.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Cyprus,

Recalling its resolution 1013(XI),

Noting the efforts which have been made in furtherance of this resolution, and in particular the efforts to bring about a conference between the three governments concerned and representatives of the Cypriots, at which there would be discussion not repeat not only of the interim arrangements for the administration of Cyprus but also of a final solution, in accordance with the principles of the Charter and to meet the legitimate aspirations of the inhabitants of Cyprus,

Believing that such a conference, with the assistance if desired of governments and personalities acceptable to the three governments directly concerned, offers the best hope of peaceful progress towards an agreed solution of the Cyprus problem,

Urges that such a conference should be convened, and that all concerned should co-operate to ensure its success.

28.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 4, 1958

Present:

The Minister of Public Works and Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Green) in the Chair,
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming),
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes),
 The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
 The Minister of Justice and
 Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Fulton),
 The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean),
 The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr),
 The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
 The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
 The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Alvin Hamilton),
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley).
 The Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier).

UNITED NATIONS; INDIAN AND IRANIAN RESOLUTIONS ON CYPRUS

1. Mr. Fulton, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported that Mr. Nesbitt had telephoned from the U.N. delegation in New York on two occasions during the day in connection with the Indian and Iranian resolutions on Cyprus, on which there was likely to be a vote in the Political Committee during the day. Mr. Nesbitt had pointed out that the delegation's instructions were to vote in favour of the Iranian resolution but against the Indian resolution. The Indian resolution, meanwhile, had been modified, and he and the members of the delegation were strongly in favour of abstaining on the modified version. It was the delegation's view that Canada, in voting with Britain against the Indian resolution, would lose its "neutral" influence and reputation of impartiality in the United Nations. Furthermore, a vote against the Indian resolution would upset the Greeks, embarrass the Indians, and affect Canada's relations with them. Norway and New Zealand were proposing to abstain while Australia would vote with the British. Mr. Nesbitt had been informed that there would be no change in the instructions without Cabinet consideration of the matter. In a later call Mr. Nesbitt had reported that the Australians had now changed their minds and that they would abstain on the Indian resolution. This would leave Canada and the United Kingdom as the only Commonwealth countries voting against India. He again strongly urged that the delegation be instructed to abstain and pointed out that Greece would be embarrassed in N.A.T.O. if all N.A.T.O. countries voted against the resolution. Mr. Fulton had pointed out to Mr. Nesbitt that Turkey, who was also a member of N.A.T.O., had been more co-operative and more reasonable than Greece in the Council's discussions. He had received a visit from the Turkish Ambassador during the morning who had expressed the hope that Canada would support a resolution which would minimize the conflict rather than aggravate it. He had given the ambassador only general assurances.

2. Mr. Fulton read the Iranian resolution of which the operative part urged that the conference between the three governments concerned and representatives of the Cypriots not only discuss interim arrangements for the administration of Cyprus but also a final solution in accordance with the principles of the Charter and to meet the legitimate aspirations of the inhabitants of Cyprus. The modified Indian resolution prefaced its operative part with the words "believing that the Cypriot people are entitled to self-government in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations . . . requests the United Kingdom government to continue negotiations with a view to promoting self-government for Cyprus, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations etc., etc."

(Telegram Permisny, to External, Dec. 2, 1958, 2063).

3. During the discussion the following points were raised:

(a) The Canadian delegation had already indicated that it would support the Iranian resolution. The main difference between the Iranian resolution and the Indian resolution was that the former was acceptable to the United Kingdom while the latter was not. The Iranian resolution would likely carry in the Political Committee. Should the Indian resolution also carry, it was to be noted that it would have to obtain a two-thirds majority in the General Assembly to be approved.

(b) Abstention on Canada's part would be a sign of indifference towards this important problem. Canada should not refrain from stating its position. There was as yet no indication as to how the United States or France would vote on the Indian resolution. Public reaction in Canada would have to be taken into consideration. The position taken by the party two years previously on the Suez incident had, as later events indicated, received general approval of the public. The government was now in a position where it could not justify its action vis-à-vis its supporters if it did not stand with the United Kingdom. It was immaterial whether Canada lost its role of middle-man. It was unthinkable that Canada should not support the United Kingdom. Some, however, pointed out that the Suez and Cyprus situations were not comparable. The present government had taken a definite stand for self-determination and any vote against such a principle would have repercussions in the country. Also, it was difficult to determine the Canadian position in view of the fact that all Commonwealth countries except the United Kingdom and Canada would abstain, and also that the Canadian advisors in New York were strongly recommending that Canada abstain. On the other hand, it was doubtful whether the role of mediator should go so far as to lead Canada to vote against the United Kingdom. Abstention in this case would appear to be a vote against the United Kingdom.

4. The Cabinet agreed that the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs instruct the Canadian delegation in New York to vote against the modified Indian resolution unless the United Kingdom itself decided to abstain.

...

29.

DEA/50141-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2100

New York, December 5, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

FIRST COMMITTEE: CYPRUS

Last night the First Committee cleared the Cyprus item from its agenda. Unfortunately it cannot repeat not be said that the issue has been advanced and in fact last night's result could just as well have been achieved at the beginning of the debate, since it appears only to have confirmed the well known divisions which separate the parties principally involved.

2. The Chairman of the Committee must bear some of the responsibility for the unsatisfactory results since he failed to get control of the discussion and the general impression throughout the Committee that an agreed compromise would be found during the dinner recess quickly evaporated when the Chairman allowed the drafting wrangle to continue and to wear through the cover of goodwill with which both the Greeks and Turks had attempted to cloak their differences, even up to the vote. It seemed to have been within the power of the UK delegation to say the word of encouragement which would have smoothed the way. Noble, however, put on a particularly austere performance and it is difficult to avoid the impression that the UK tactics were deliberately designed to keep the Greeks in isolation and force a vote which by a majority, at least would register approval of the UK's policy. In the end this is what happened but it may turn out to be a pyrrhic victory for the sympathy of the Committee had been engaged by the evident desire of the Greeks and Turks to produce a compromise to the extent that their foreign ministers were exchanging veiled compliments rather than ill-disguised insults. The unhelpfulness of the UK delegation was in contrast with the studied unpartisanship of the USA. Lodge abstained throughout the preliminary votes on the Turkish amendments and the Greek amendments to the Iranian resolution. They joined the majority however to vote in favour of the amended text which, despite the Greek objection, included their proposals and was in substance a reasonably satisfactory paper. The vote was 31 in favour (including Canada), 22 against, with 28 abstentions. Of the NATO countries, Greece and Iceland alone voted against and Italy, reflecting its more direct involvement in the question, abstained.

3. The UK, Greece and Turkey withdrew their resolutions and the contentious pro-Greek proposal inspired by India was also withdrawn.

4. The Colombian resolution which called for the UN and the Secretary General to participate in promoting a peaceful, just, and democratic solution to the problem, was put to the vote and rejected 17 in favour, 17 against (including Canada) with 47 abstentions.

5. The Belgian resolution, which had been considered unexceptionable and which recommended that all concerned should resume and continue their efforts in a spirit of cooperation with a view to reaching a friendly solution in accord with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the UN (and which could have been much more useful had it been voted upon at a later date in view of the tense atmosphere which prevailed in the Committee last night) was voted on next. It was rejected by a vote of 11 in favour (including Canada), 22 against with 48 abstentions.

6. The item then passed to the plenary session of the Assembly. In the meantime steps were taken to inspire an unobjectionable sponsor for an unobjectionable procedural resolution to attract support from all sides. Before this tactic could succeed, however, it was necessary to change last night's atmosphere.

7. Fortunately this was achieved before the plenary session met this afternoon. The Mexican representative took two minutes to present an agreed resolution of which the operative paragraph read as follows: "The General Assembly expresses its confidence that continued efforts will be made by the parties to reach a peaceful, democratic and just solution in accordance with the Charter of the UN". The Chairman gave the meeting a few seconds to raise objections and when none was forthcoming declared the resolution passed unanimously.

SUBDIVISION IV/SUB-SECTION IV

APPRÉCIATION ASSESSMENT

30. DEA/5475-DW-58-D-40

*Projet d'une note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures*²³
*Draft Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*²³

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], January 27, 1959

THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

There is a strong impression among most of those who attended the last session of the Assembly that it was a disagreeable session which accomplished little and displayed trends which could lead to a serious decline in the force and prestige of the Assembly and of the United Nations as a whole. An examination of the record of the Assembly does little to dispel these doubts. It seems important, therefore, to identify the reasons for failure so that remedial action, if possible, may be taken in time, or, at any rate, so that our policy in and towards the United Nations may be suitably adjusted.

2. First, let us look very sketchily at the record of the Assembly on some of the principal items under consideration:

Disarmament

The only concrete result of the disarmament debate was the establishment of a Disarmament Commission of the whole. Its establishment represents the victory of a Soviet proposal made first at the previous session. However, this unsatisfactory body may never meet.

²³ Holmes avait joint la note manuscrite suivante adressée au sous-secrétaire : /Holmes attached the following handwritten note to the Under-Secretary:

This is a rough effort at a paper which is intended to provoke an examination of our U.N. policy not to settle it. We intend to carry on the examination among those directly involved in Assembly matters in the hope of producing some solid recommendations. If you would like to make any comments at this stage, we should be most grateful. J.W. H[olmes]

Because of its ponderous composition, the result of this decision may well be the further divorce of the United Nations from the active work of disarmament negotiation and intensification of the reliance on ad hoc meetings beyond the jurisdiction of the Assembly. The Assembly has never dealt, of course, and should not properly deal with the details of negotiation. Its principal purpose, if any, is to reach conclusions which will assist negotiations held elsewhere. This year all efforts to achieve a unanimous resolution and thereby give a useful fillip to the Geneva negotiations failed. The Western Powers won a meaningless victory by ballot in the Assembly, but neither they nor the Russians were able to gain the vote of the uncommitted.

Outer Space

The only accomplishment in this field was to introduce the notion of United Nations interest in, and possible control of, peaceful uses of outer space. The launching of this programme, however, was spoiled by the failure of the USSR and the Western Powers to agree on the composition of an ad hoc committee; even though this committee was intended only as an investigatory body which would report back to the next session on how the United Nations should deal with outer space. Again the West won a majority in the vote, but as the ad hoc committee will be boycotted not only by the Soviet Union but also by some of the uncommitted countries, it is doubtful if it can accomplish any of the purposes intended.

United Nations Force

Proposals sponsored by President Eisenhower and other Western leaders for a modest beginning at setting up a United Nations force had to be abandoned because of the flat opposition of the Soviet Union, which has always opposed a United Nations force of any kind; by India and the Arab countries, who saw in the suggestion an attempt to give a cloak of international legality to such Western military enterprises as the intervention in Lebanon and Jordan; and by the Latin Americans, who did not want to foot the bill. The Secretary-General, who advocated an examination of the possibilities, was forced to withdraw his proposals or risk a permanent break in his relations with the Soviet Delegation.

Cyprus

This was the only subject on which the Assembly managed to produce a unanimous compromise result in the manner which has become standard practice for items of this kind in the past few years. This, however, was a particularly broad and empty unanimity, achieved by declaration of the President in a plenary session after efforts on the part of a number of countries neutral in the issue to achieve agreement on a compromise resolution in Committee had ended in lamentable failure.

Algeria

Although at the previous session a compromise resolution on this subject had been achieved, this year it was hardly even attempted. A resolution supported primarily by the anti-colonialist countries not only achieved a majority in the committee but came one short of a two-thirds majority in plenary.

Korea

Another American-sponsored resolution on unification achieved a majority in the Assembly but is unlikely to have any more effect than its predecessors. There was perhaps some value in the debate. Somewhat more dissatisfaction with the American approach was expressed by member states, including Canada, all of which might have had some slightly unsettling and therefore beneficial effect on United States policy.

South African Questions

On questions of apartheid and treatment of Indians, South Africa lost ground. The lack of sympathy to South Africa shown by many European and Commonwealth countries has perhaps contributed slightly to diminishing the Asian resentment against them. On the question of South West Africa, however, the anti-colonialists, by rejecting without consideration the study of a solution by partition, indicated a discouraging unwillingness to look at practical proposals.

United Nations Special Fund

Although the debate was acrimonious, the Second Committee managed to hammer out a reasonably satisfactory establishment for the United Nations Special Fund. Funds, however, are not forthcoming in amounts to match the rhetoric.

International Administrative Service

Provision of this service for technical assistance to needy countries was one of the small but concrete achievements of this session.

French Togoland

A resolution bringing to an end the trusteeship agreement for Togoland was unanimously adopted, and by next year almost all the trusteeship territories will have been liquidated as such. The fighting in the Fourth Committee, however, over the future of French Togoland, was not very well calculated to make the best out of these happy signs of progress.

Law of the Sea

The Assembly was able, by a very narrow majority, to plan another conference on the Law of the Sea, although the date is much later than we should have liked. During the debate in the Assembly, there was a drawing of lines on the substance of the issue which does not augur well for a solution. Whereas at Geneva countries were divided largely on grounds of varying national interests, they tended in the Assembly to divide along conventional United Nations political lines, with the less powerful nations lining up against the major Western Powers — an unhappy example of the way in which the United Nations' own cold wars can poison international relations.

UNWRA

Although UNWRA was continued in being, the Assembly failed, because of strong Arab opposition, to grapple with the urgent problem of the future of the Agency after 1960, when it is scheduled to close down unless something is done.

Hungary

Perhaps not much harm was done over Hungary this year. The Assembly did strive to maintain its moral position while recognizing the practical limits to United Nations action. The appointment of Sir Leslie Munro, although unlikely to achieve anything positive, did prevent the Assembly from abdicating its interest in the issue without, on the other hand, setting out to accomplish what would be bound to fail.

UNEF

The continuation of UNEF was accomplished in a reasonably satisfactory manner, although the problem of general financial support remains highly unsatisfactory.

3. In addition to these issues which were discussed, one might mention two broad and important matters which were not considered in substance.

4. The first is the situation in the Middle East. Although no obvious progress was made in the Assembly on various Middle Eastern issues, the reason for this was not a bad one. In the Special Session in August, the Assembly had had in the united Arab resolution one of its more hopeful achievements. The détente produced by this resolution produced a considerable effect throughout the regular session of the Assembly. The relatively good atmosphere on these issues was one of the happier, even though negative, features of the session.

5. The other major issue was China. The Americans once more secured the passing of their moratorium on a discussion of the question of Chinese representation but they lost still more ground. With a number of other countries very uncertain on this issue, it seems highly doubtful if the moratorium procedure can be risked another year. If it is not, the Fourteenth Session could begin with one of the most dangerous and crucial debates in the Assembly's history. As for the question of the off-shore islands, this was the major preoccupation of members of the Assembly during the first weeks of the session. There was a great deal of diplomacy going on in the corridors and many projects for intervention by one or other of the United Nations organs or the Secretary-General. All of these, however, foundered on the anomalous position of China in the United Nations; and the absolute refusal of Peking to have any relations with the United Nations short of full satisfaction served to point up the ineffectiveness of the United Nations under present circumstances in dealing with a major threat to peace.

6. This apparent record of failure can, of course, be made to look worse than it is. Critics all too often forget that the purpose of the Assembly is to debate, not to legislate; that it is not the agency intended to deal with breaches of the peace; that its role is not to negotiate but to facilitate negotiation. It should never be expected that it would settle the issues of Cyprus, Algeria or Korea. The question is not whether it settles an issue but whether it contributes to the settlement or makes the settlement less likely.

7. Looking at the results in this way, one must conclude that for Algeria and Korea it did no good and possibly some harm. As for Cyprus, one's impression on the spot was that it did a great deal of harm. The debate was more bitter than ever, and efforts to compromise were frigidly rejected. Nevertheless, the facts are that, after a couple of months, agreement over Cyprus seems closer than it has been for a long time. The debate in the Assembly would, of course, be only one of many elements contributing to this result. It could be argued, however, that the failure of any party to a dispute to get satisfactory endorsement in the Assembly may contribute more to an atmosphere of settlement than the achievement, as in the past, of a deceptive agreement. In the disarmament debate, one also had on the spot the impression of failure. It seemed that the inability of the parties, with the assistance of neutral countries, to achieve the kind of unanimous resolution which would give the Geneva talks a good send-off, was discouraging. In fact, however, it is doubtful if this was the effect achieved. The Russians undoubtedly hoped to mobilize Assembly opinion to strengthen their hand for suspension of nuclear tests with as few conditions as possible; whereas the United States, the United Kingdom and France hoped to get support for their reasonable programme. Neither side, however, achieved a resounding success or the voting support of the uncommitted. This failure may also have contributed more to successful negotiations than the patching over of differences with pious resolutions.

8. If there is validity in this conclusion, then the implications for Canadian policy in the Assembly are considerable. The traditional pattern of our Assembly policy has been to cooperate with Scandinavian countries and with others in putting forward compromise resolutions which would draw away support from the two extremes and end the discussion with a better taste, in the hope that we would thereby help the parties concerned more easily to reach agreement. If, however, these compromises which we have achieved served only to conceal disagreement and prevented the parties from facing up to the need for genuine compromise, then perhaps our efforts might better be used in some other direction.

9. The fact seems to be that whether this policy of being a midwife for happy resolutions was a good play for Canadian policy or not, the play no longer works. The delegations which have traditionally produced compromises did, to some extent at least at this session, pursue their usual practices, and other delegations took for granted that this was the pattern of a debate. Scandinavians, the Japanese and we ourselves, however, seemed somewhat weary of the game. Perhaps we felt that we had now exploited the language of compromise. A more important factor was a hardening of the attitude of the two sides. The major Western Powers showed as little willingness to compromise as did the Russians. The Indians and Yugoslavs were very active in the compromise game but less effective. The most important factor in the defeat of these compromise moves was probably the fact that the Indians, for reasons of personnel as much as anything, have lost the confidence of the Western Powers and are not much respected by the Soviet Union. Trusted by neither, their traditional role in the Assembly is undermined, to the disadvantage of themselves and the Assembly. The Asian and African countries in general are, furthermore, feeling stronger and are less disposed themselves to accept evasive language for the sake of agreement. They know that the power of the Western countries to achieve a two-thirds majority or even, in some cases, the blocking third, is failing and they are less disposed to give ground.

10. The United Nations is going through a period when the balance of power is shifting and many members will have to adjust their policies to new conditions. The major Western powers have taken for granted that the automatic majority which they could achieve on major issues is not only natural but right and proper. They have denounced the Soviet veto in the Security Council as immoral but they have refused to recognize that, in Soviet eyes, the automatic majority is a veto of similar kind. (The American argument that this is a voluntary majority reflecting the views of the greater part of mankind may be true, but it is not seen in that light by the Russians.) Not only the Russians but the Asian and African countries have resented the automatic majority which the West could achieve on colonial issues. The realization of their greater power is making the opposition to the West rambunctious. The Russians are now making it quite clear in the Assembly, in their attitude towards Geneva negotiations, and even in things like their attitude towards the nationality of controllers in a nuclear test control system, that they will no longer put up with allowing the United States to call on its reliable friends to enable it to out-vote the Soviet Union. Hence the demand for "parity" which is now paralyzing much useful United Nations activity. Regardless of our pleas, the Soviet Union is not going to accept United Nations organs set up on the old basis of representation. We may or may not ignore their boycott, but we cannot solve any of the world's major problems without Soviet participation. The realization of this fact hung like a cloud over the past Assembly and accounted to some extent for the depression.

11. Related, of course, to this fact is the fact of China. There was a time when we could persuade the Communist Chinese to have informal relations with the United Nations over Korea or over the prisoners-of-war. This they are no longer prepared to do. It is becoming increasingly obvious, therefore, that no major issues of the Far East can be solved in the United Nations and that it would be extremely difficult, furthermore, to tackle general issues like disarmament without the participation of Peking. At the same time, there is a growing realization that this problem cannot be solved by a simple gesture of voting to seat the Communists. The finding of a solution will be a process which could itself wreck the United Nations. The admission of Peking would further upset the traditional balance of power in the Assembly; the disposition of the representatives of Taipeh is a question for which no one has a solution. The attitude of the United States Government to the United Nations after Peking had been admitted provides grounds for the deepest foreboding, and the fact that this issue may be joined at the next session is a major cause of gloom.

12. There is no doubt also that responsible people in the United Nations from all delegations are concerned over the trends of membership. Only the most intransigent still think that we could have avoided the decision on admission of new members some four years ago, but nevertheless the consequences of universality are becoming increasingly worrying. It is taken for granted that the new members will almost automatically join the anti-colonialists. Our hopes that the anti-colonialists would mature gracefully have been shaken by their behaviour in this session. Even such reasonably well-disposed people as the Ghanaians have showed a notable lack of balance, and the unscrupulous zeal with which Guinea was pushed into membership in order to increase the anti-colonialist vote was frightening to behold. It is not surprising, therefore, that the prospect of this situation getting steadily worse has had a particularly unfortunate effect on Western European countries. It takes the form of complete cynicism towards the United Nations and an attitude of uncompromising and bitter resistance which only exacerbates the tensions. As Western Powers see themselves becoming a minority, they display some, at least, of those neurotic tendencies which have characterized other "blocs".

13. One less discouraging factor is that compromise can still be achieved on such issues as the creation of the Special Fund. The strength of the under-developed countries is great and the West has no longer an automatic majority. Nevertheless, it has the money. There are questions which require expenditures or such things as the provision of forces or the status of a dependent territory on which no majority can prevail. The anti-colonialist countries will press very hard and they have a great tendency to exaggerate; nevertheless some of them do recognize the limits of their power. They will make life continually more difficult for the colonial powers and incite trouble, but they cannot force these countries to abandon their colonial territories. As for the Soviet Union, it makes some profit from the propaganda involved, but some of its interests are not entirely different from those of the major Western Powers. As the Communist states themselves contribute more to economic aid projects, they will be even less anxious to allow the under-developed countries to squeeze money out of them. Perhaps one may hope also that increasing Soviet involvement in the Middle East, for example, and the increasing awareness on the part of Arab countries of the dangers of Soviet imperialism, will mean that, although the Western powers will undoubtedly continue to bear the scourge of anti-colonialist fury, the Russians will make less profit out of it.

Policy Proposals

The question arises as to the attitudes and policies which we should adopt in the light of changing circumstances in the United Nations.

We might consider first whether we should revise our attitude to what the United Nations might be expected to accomplish and how it might best do so at the present time. There is no more possibility now of exorcising the United Nations than there was in the past. We may not like certain trends but we cannot by-pass the United Nations or run away from it. The institution is more deeply rooted than ever in the popular mind, and whatever distaste for it may be felt by the older powers, its importance becomes steadily greater in the eyes of the more recently emancipated countries. Whether we like it or not issues will go to the United Nations and we shall have to cope with them there. We can, however, adjust our attitudes on how they are best treated and on the extent to which they should be dealt with in the standard organs of the United Nations or off in the wings.

In order not to destroy faith in the future of the United Nations, it may be best to look upon the present as a transitional stage during which the usefulness of the principal organs of the United Nations is limited by lack of agreement among the Great Powers. It is a transitional stage in the United Nations because it is a transitional stage in the relations among the powers (including China, of course, as one of the Great Powers). Hitherto, the United Nations has been able to carry on with moderate effectiveness because, although relations between the Great Powers were by no means happy, the modus vivendi established in 1945 still worked. In the last year or so it has been breaking down, the most evident indication of this being the inability of the Assembly to reach agreement on the composition of functional sub-committees. It is breaking down not because relations between the powers are becoming worse but because the power relationships are being re-adjusted in accordance with a shift in the balance of real power. The primary cause of the present crisis is the refusal of the Soviet Union and China to accept any longer the positions of strength assigned to them on the basis of relationships in the immediate post-war period and, on the other side, the unwillingness of the Western Powers to put in jeopardy the veto by assured majority to which they consider they have a right in the United Nations.

The failure to reach a new modus vivendi in the United Nations does not mean, however, that the Soviet Union and the Western Powers are unwilling to negotiate. They in fact seem more willing than at any time since the end of the war to strike bargains. The agencies of negotiation, however, are conferences, or what sometimes amount virtually to standing committees, created on an ad hoc basis that is difficult to justify in theory but does enable the sides to get together. As this seems to be the only practical alternative to negotiation within conventional organs of the United Nations, it would be foolish to try to stop it on grounds of theory alone. For the sake of the dignity of the United Nations, it is well for it to try to throw a cloak or blessing over such conferences, enabling members of the United Nations to comment upon the proceedings, to prod and suggest, but not to interfere.

This kind of activity outside the halls of the United Nations does, nevertheless, derogate from the popular prestige of the institution. The best way, perhaps, to minimize the ill effects is to acknowledge that in the present state of affairs, and probably for some time to come, a good deal of negotiation will have to be done outside the Security Council, the Assembly and other United Nations bodies, but to argue at the same time that this is all complementary, that the virtue of the United Nations is that it brings people together and provides varied and flexible methods for dealing with disputes. In fact, this kind of extramural negotiation need not do great harm unless the Rousseauian purists among United Nations supporters have it so. Instead of wailing over the collapse of a San Francisco dream, one can take the optimistic — and historically better justified — view that the United Nations is groping its way to forms which will more adequately reflect the realities of the world, that this process will involve not altering the Charter but building upon it in the pragmatic Anglo-Saxon way. This Pollyanna approach, it may be argued, is an attempt to conceal the bitter truth. It all depends on what we are doing. If we approach the matter not in a spirit of self-delusion but rather as an effort to find a workable philosophy adapted to the exigencies of the times, there is justification for putting the best front on what is happening.

As for the particular aspects of Canadian policy, following are a few suggestions for consideration.

In the first place, there is no alternative to continuing patiently and understandingly to build bridges between the races, even though the task is perhaps more discouraging than ever. Canada has achieved a position in the United Nations which we could not immediately renounce if we wanted to, although the failure over several sessions to make substantial contributions to the process of compromise and mediation would soon lose us a position we have gained over the years. However difficult, we must continue to have faith in the possibility of understanding between the Asian and African peoples and the Europeans and not allow ourselves to be diverted by the argument that Asians and Africans are natural allies of the Communists and the only way to treat them is to form a solid NATO or Western bloc in the Assembly. Such an attitude requires even greater effort than before in the establishment of personal contacts in New York and our missions abroad and a more consistent and intense study of the problems of colonial areas to enable our good offices to be used more effectively.

A policy of greater appeasement of the anti-colonialists is not called for or timely. It has never been Canadian policy weakly to agree with either the colonialists or the anti-colonialists in principle. Our reputation is based on a willingness to discriminate, on not voting automatically one way or the other. Without retreating from our attitude of cool detachment towards the colonial and racial policies of countries like South Africa and Portugal, we might find it opportune to grow somewhat tougher or more impatient with the extreme anti-colonialists. If at all possible, we should try to indicate to them that their unbridled behaviour in the past Session is not the best way to achieve results. Because we have been sympathetic to them, we can afford to be outspoken when outspokenness is required. Above all, we should seek to persuade the more influential and the more sober members of the anti-colonial group, members of the Commonwealth in particular, that their tactics are threatening the power and influence of the Assembly and of the other organs of the United Nations as well. We should seek to convince them that the policy of goading to fury the rich and powerful countries is not the way to bring about a reduction of international tension or the launching of international economic aid programmes. We should argue that they, more than any other peoples, are dependent upon the United Nations to exert their influence in the world and as a field for their diplomacy and that a policy of bringing the United Nations into disrepute is weakening the principal arm of their own policy.

These remarks are not easy points to make, as anyone who has tried to make them will realize. Nevertheless, there are distinguished Asian and African leaders who would understand the gist of the argument if it were put in the right way. Canadians are certainly in a better position to put the argument than are representatives of the Great Powers themselves. We might consider the possibility of waging a tactful but discreet campaign through our missions in Commonwealth countries, not of course by instructing our high commissioners to go and deliver lectures in the Foreign Offices but possibly by asking them to initiate with the local officials a joint examination into the causes of our present discontents in the United Nations, thereby providing an opportunity for scoring a few points on a basis of equality.

We might have another hard look at our positions on some of the colonial topics in the United Nations to see if it is possible for us to budge a little. The complaints of the Europeans against the so-called "Afro-Asian Bloc" have little effect on most Asians and Africans because they point out that their "bloc" is by no means as consistent in its voting as the Western bloc. If we complain that Asian countries automatically support Indonesia on West Irian even though many of them have doubts about Indonesian policy on the subject, the reply is that we do exactly the same thing on Algeria. Our own position as a country with an open mind is based on our willingness to vote in disagreement with the major Western Powers from time to time. We cannot maintain this position unless we continue to show our independence, and our position would be strengthened if we could be somewhat more courageous somewhat more often.

Although we shall possibly have to accept the fact that until the United States and the Soviet Union have worked out some new bilateral understandings, agreement cannot be reached in the United Nations on the composition of effective bodies to deal with disarmament and other important issues or to enable the Security Council to deal effectively with all items on its agenda, nevertheless, we should not give up trying. We should continue our strong opposition to the Soviet proposals for "parity" on the grounds that a scheme of this kind is noxious in principle and would tend to harden the United Nations into a series of rigid blocs. Nevertheless, we should try to persuade the Americans and the Europeans that the previous pattern of composition is unfair, that our intransigence on the subject matches the intransigence of the other side and that we would at least look better in the eyes of the uncommitted if we proposed a composition which seemed to them equitable. We might try to persuade them, and ourselves as well, that life is possible without a guaranteed majority in the United Nations. We have to take our chance on winning majority support in the same way that the Communist countries or the Asian countries have to take their chances and the consequences of losing out a few times in the voting are not as disastrous as they may seem because the United Nations has the power only to recommend and not to legislate. It may be, furthermore, that the knowledge on the part of the Asians and Africans that it is within their power from time to time to win a vote in the Assembly will increase their sense of responsibility because they will realize more clearly the uselessness of passing resolutions which have no chance of being obeyed or carried out.

One practice which we might try to persuade our major friends to abandon, except in cases of dire emergency, is the practice of using our automatic majority for procedural purposes. Although it has become a routine practice for the Americans to use their majority in order to secure priority for their resolutions, it is a practice which causes much ill-will among not only the Communist but also the Asian and African countries. It is also sharp practice not consistent with the spirit of the Charter even though it may be in accordance with the letter of the Rules of Procedure. We should recognize also that we are storing up trouble for ourselves when an increasing number of Asian and African members will be able to turn these same procedures ruthlessly against us.

In our discussion of the issues in the Assembly, we might consider renouncing our policy of seeking soft-soap resolutions on such issues as Cyprus, Algeria and West Irian. These efforts have in some cases done some good in creating a better spirit for change or for negotiation or in putting the right amount of pressure on one or other party to the dispute. Nevertheless, there may be virtue in not concealing differences which exist. It may be, also, that with the passing of time the Assembly has grown tired of this kind of activity and that to continue it longer would serve only to bring the Assembly into disrepute. Too long association of our own Delegation with this kind of activity can also affect our reputation for integrity and intelligence. This is not to say, however, that the role of Canada as a mediator and a seeker-out of compromises in association with the Scandinavians and other friends has lapsed. There is a difference to be recognized between palliative resolutions on political issues which cannot be solved in the United Nations and genuine compromise proposals which achieve a reasonably satisfactory basis of cooperation. Examples of the latter are more likely to be found in practical fields such as the creation of the Special Fund or the establishment of UNEF or UNWRA. There are times also when a resolution, the text of which is pretty meaningless, is of value simply because it represents the association of sponsors of the countries whom we are trying to reconcile. The Middle Eastern resolution in the Special Assembly last year is a good example of this. Action by the Canadian Delegation to help promote this kind of thing is all to the good. On many issues in the First Committee, however, we might seek to maintain our good reputation and help reduce tension by variations from standard patterns in our voting and by speaking somewhat more candidly and boldly in our interventions rather than by chasing after unanimity on any basis.

J.W. H[OLMES]

31. DEA/5475-DW-58-C-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 266

New York, April 6, 1959

CONFIDENTIAL

THIRTEENTH SESSION GENERAL ASSEMBLY — GENERAL ASSESSMENT

Attached are 4 copies of a memorandum containing our general assessment of the thirteenth session of the General Assembly. This assessment is concerned primarily with the work of the political committees, but also deals briefly with the other committees.

2. Although it represents the views of this mission, rather than those of the Assembly delegation, this assessment also owes much to the first part of Mr. Holmes' most useful memorandum of January 27. As for the proposals for future policy contained in the second part of Mr. Holmes' memorandum, we hope to let you have our detailed comments before long.

C.S.A. RITCHIE

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

Memorandum

CONFIDENTIAL

GENERAL ASSESSMENT OF THE THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

It seems to be the general consensus that the thirteenth session of the General Assembly was disagreeable, disturbing and unproductive. This impression was not shared equally by all delegations. The Soviet bloc professed to be quite satisfied with the outcome, and some of the so-called "uncommitted" countries were by no means disappointed with the direction in which they were able to influence the Assembly's deliberations. However, most of the friendly and like-minded delegations with whom we have habitually worked most closely were decidedly discouraged by this session. An analysis of the factors that contributed to this impression may be useful for future consideration of remedial measures.

2. There is no doubt that the session was disagreeable. This was the experience in every committee. Intransigence rather than moderation, propaganda rather than constructive action seemed to be the order of the day. Public postures were often extreme; real negotiation was seldom sought; and only exceptionally was any attempt made at compromise or mediation. Emotion often blinded reasonable deliberation. Relatively few issues in any of the committees were free of either the "cold war" conflict between the Soviet bloc and the Western powers, or the friction between the "haves" and the "have nots", or a combination of both.

3. The session was disturbing, not only because it was disagreeable but also because of the implications it might carry for the future of the United Nations. There seemed to be a trend in the direction of more rigid blocs and groupings within the Assembly. This was accompanied by an increase in the relative strength and influence of the Soviet bloc and the anti-colonialist countries of the African-Asian group at the expense of the Western Powers, who were consequently pushed into more inflexible positions than they might otherwise have taken and who appeared at times to be isolated and out of sympathy with a majority of the Assembly. At the same time the mediating group of middle and small powers that had played a useful "fire brigade" role at previous sessions was no longer effective. The result was a feeling of frustration and concern on the part of those member countries to whom we have customarily looked for the most responsible behaviour, but who no longer seem to wield the same influence over developments in the United Nations.

4. In these circumstances it is hardly surprising that the thirteenth session was for the most part unproductive. Its positive achievements, particularly in the political field, were meagre. It was apparent moreover that the powers principally concerned with some of the more important political issues of the day preferred direct channels rather than the United Nations to seek settlement of these issues. This may not have been bad in itself, but it enhanced the impression of ineffectiveness that the session created. Although the Assembly did not actually deal with the Far East or the Middle East situations, it seems fair to say that the views expressed by speakers in the general debate and the informal consultations in the corridors had the effect of discouraging hasty or violent action in those areas.

5. The most notable feature of the disarmament debate was the failure of both the Western Powers and the Russians to gain the support of the uncommitted. All efforts failed to achieve a unanimous resolution and thereby give some positive encouragement to the Geneva negotiations, but the general support which most speakers gave to the permanent cessation of nuclear tests may have had an influence on Western policy at Geneva. The only concrete result in the Assembly was the establishment of a disarmament commission of the whole, which on the face of it appears to put disarmament back into the framework of the United Nations but in practice may further divorce the United Nations from the active work of negotiation on this subject among the few powers principally concerned.

6. On the outer space item too, the accomplishment was more apparent than real. The debate did establish the interest of the United Nations in this new field and produced an ad hoc committee to investigate future United Nations activities in the peaceful uses of outer space. Unfortunately the prospects for progress were spoiled by the failure to achieve agreement between the USSR and the Western Powers on the composition of the committee and by the consequent Soviet boycott of the committee.

7. No progress at all was made in the direction of even the most modest preparations for a United Nations standby force, in spite of a very useful study of the problem that was tabled by the Secretary-General. Efforts to build on the Secretary-General's study were unsuccessful against a combination of flat opposition on the part of the USSR, confusion and suspicion of Western motives on the part of the African-Asian delegations, and reluctance to foot the bill on the part of the Latin Americans.

8. On the emotionally charged issues of Cyprus and Algeria the results were hardly less lamentable. The lengthy and often bitter debate on Cyprus did little (at the time at least) to modify the rigid positions of the parties to the dispute. Efforts to reach agreement on a compromise resolution ended in failure and the only thing that could be agreed was an anodyne declaration by the President of the Assembly. However, it was probably during the later stages of these acrimonious debates over Cyprus that the main protagonists laid the foundation in private for the later fruitful negotiation which has brought about the present settlement. If so, this may be an example of the usefulness of the United Nations as a meeting place for negotiators in contrast to the sterility of public debate in the General Assembly.

10. On the question of Arab refugees also, the uncompromising stand of the Arab delegations blocked serious consideration of the future of UNRWA after 1960 and limited Assembly action to a continuation of the Agency for another year. Similar lack of compromise stultified the Assembly's consideration of the question of South West Africa, but on the other South African questions (apartheid and the treatment of Indians) the anti-colonial delegations acted with commendable moderation and thereby gained in breadth of sympathy and support.

11. One of the refreshing exceptions to this pattern was the treatment of the atomic radiation item. Although this question involved conflicts of political orientation and scientific interpretation, much of the desire to air these conflicts had been exhausted in the disarmament debate, and the Assembly in a rare show of conciliation agreed unanimously to continue the useful work of the Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation (work that is likely to become increasingly important in the future).

12. In the economic and social fields the impression was largely the same. The deliberations in the Second Committee were disagreeably contentious and frustrating. The two most encouraging achievements were the establishment on reasonably sound lines of the Special Fund and the setting up of the International Administrative Service. In the Third Committee there was prolonged wrangling, with very little result, over the questions of self-determination and freedom of information in particular, on which the Western delegations were unable to make their views prevail.

13. In the Fourth Committee the outstanding events were the announcement of the imminent independence of most of the trust territories and the unanimous resolution terminating the trusteeship agreement for Togoland. It was also encouraging that the able exposition of British colonial policy seemed to make a favourable impression and that there appeared to be developing a new confidence among some of the anti-colonial delegations in the good intentions of a majority of the colonial powers. On the other hand, the Committee often acted irresponsibly and, with the diminution of the Assembly's trust responsibilities, showed an increasing inclination to lump together its treatment of both the trust territories and the non-self-governing territories.

14. The conflicts and frictions noted above also took their toll in the Fifth and Sixth Committees. The operations of UNEF were continued for a further year but the failure to face up to the problem of financing the Force was discouraging. Examination of the United Nations information budget was influenced more by "cold war" considerations than by sound financial principles. The Sixth Committee's debate on the Law of the Sea, by far the most important item on the Committee's agenda, unfortunately served mainly to inject the divisions of the Assembly into this already complicated issue. A further conference was approved, but not for as early a date as we should have liked.

15. One feature emerges most forcefully from an analysis of what lay behind the friction, frustration and lack of achievement of the Thirteenth Session. This session seemed to make a period of transition when a new balance of political forces was taking shape within the old United Nations framework. There were three main contributing factors.

16. In the first place, there was a notable increase in the influence of the Asian-African countries, often in combination with anti-colonial and "have-not" countries elsewhere. They were generally better organized, more forceful and more skilful than in the earlier years. They were also more numerous, a combination which many members of the group found heady and which made them less amenable to moderation and reason. At the same time it was increasingly difficult for Canada and other members of the old "fire brigade" to work with India and the Asian-African countries. More than once we had the experience of attempting to find a compromise between extreme positions only to find that the Indians then moved to a point between that compromise and the Soviet position. Much depended on the personalities; in some committees the Indians played a mischievous and inconsistent role, while in others they were cooperative and reasonable.

17. In the second place, the Soviet bloc showed improved organization, greater skill in tactics and more restraint in their interventions. The Soviet Delegation was most successful in exploiting for their own ends the conflicts between the Western Powers and the African-Asian countries, between the "haves" and the "have-nots", between the colonial powers and the anti-colonial countries. Often the USSR was able to give the impression of protecting the interests of the less privileged countries.

18. In the third place, there was a notable lack of effective leadership on the part of the United States, in particular, and the other Western delegations in general.

19. This picture may give grounds for discouragement but should certainly not be cause for despair, if future Western policy in the United Nations takes account of the transition that has been taking place and works out new methods to deal with it instead of relying on tactics and formulae that are no longer applicable.

SECTION C

CONSEIL ÉCONOMIQUE ET SOCIAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

VINGT-QUATRIÈME SESSION, NEW YORK, 2 JUILLET AU 2 AOÛT 1957
TWENTY-FOURTH SESSION, NEW YORK, JULY 2 TO AUGUST 2, 1957

32.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le CabinetMemorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO: 127-57

[Ottawa], July 8, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

24TH SESSION OF THE UNITED NATIONS
ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

1. The 24th Session of the Economic and Social Council is meeting in Geneva from July 2 to August 2. Canada is at present serving a three-year term of office on the Council, which is composed of 18 members of the United Nations. The function of the Council is to review and coordinate the economic and social policies of the United Nations.

2. The Canadian Delegation is as follows:

Representative

Dr. R.A. MacKay,
Permanent Representative of Canada to the United Nations, New York

Alternative Representatives

Mr. Wershof, Permanent Representative of Canada to the European Office of the United Nations
Dr. G.F. Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare, Department of National Health and Welfare
Dr. O.J. Firestone,
Department of Trade and Commerce
Mr. S. Pollock,
Department of Finance.

3. The items to be considered at this session are, in general, issues which have already been discussed and social policies, and the debate is more in the nature of a review of attitudes than the taking of decisions. As it has not yet been possible for Cabinet to review all these questions, the Canadian Delegation has been instructed to avoid commitments and to conduct its intervention along the lines of generally acceptable Canadian positions. If issues arise on which a Government decision is required, these will be referred to Cabinet. Subjects discussed in the Economic and Social Council are referred to the General Assembly, which meets in the autumn, and it is in this body that Canadian policies may be defined.²⁴

4. Among the principal items under consideration is a review of development and co-ordination of all the programmes and activities of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies. This review is undertaken annually to achieve the most effective utilization of the resources and expertise available to the Organization. The Council will consider the reports of four of its functional commissions — the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women (to which Canada has been elected, term of office to commence next year), the Commission on Narcotic Drugs (of which Canada is a permanent member), and the Social Commission. In connexion with the latter the Council will have before it a report on the world social situation on which a wide-ranging discussion is expected but on which the delegations will not be expected to take positions involving policy decisions.

5. The Council will also consider the annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. There are two main issues: the possible extension in time of the High Commissioner's mandate and his shortage of funds. The Delegation has been instructed not to commit Canada to any further expenditures until the question of refugees can be considered by Cabinet.

6. Among the economic items on the agenda there are two which may give rise to controversy. One of these involves a long-standing proposal to establish a "Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development" (SUNFED), to which member countries would contribute funds (a total amount of $600 million has been suggested) for the financing of basic development projects in under-developed countries.²⁵ This proposal, which has been debated and examined many times in United Nations forums, is supported by most of the under-developed countries and some "advanced" countries such as the Netherlands. The United States and United Kingdom have led the opposition to SUNFED for somewhat differing reasons. The United States prefers to keep its funds for international assistance under its own control; the United Kingdom is more concerned about a possible extension of its external financial commitments. Neither the United States nor United Kingdom have shown any indication of changing their positions. The Delegation at the 24th Session is being instructed to maintain the position on SUNFED taken by other Canadian delegations during the past year, i.e. that we could consider Canadian participation only when sufficient support was forthcoming from the major potential contributors, and that we would wish to be assured that the administrative and operational aspects of the proposed fund were satisfactory. The Delegation has been asked to continue to do what it can to prevent the issue from dividing Western countries and the under-developed countries.

7. The other possibly contentious issue involves international trade in primary commodities. Many under-developed countries are heavily dependent on the export of a single, or of a very few, primary products; and these products are subject to violent fluctuations in price and volume. The under-developed countries have therefore been seeking some general over-all plan for commodity arrangements which could provide a solution to their difficul-

²⁴ A cause d'une erreur typographique évidente, l'original de ce document comporte deux paragraphes identiques numérotés (4). Un de ces paragraphes a été supprimé ici.

Due to an apparent typographical error, the original copy of this document has two identical paragraphs numbered (4). One of these duplicate paragraphs has been removed here.

²⁵ Pour les documents concernant SUNFED avant le 31 décembre 1958, voir la Section E du présent chapitre.

See Section E of this chapter for documents relating to SUNFED prior to December 31, 1958.

ties; Canada and other countries have been urging a commodity-by-commodity approach to these problems and have supported and participated in a number of commodity arrangements to achieve more stability in trade in certain commodities such as wheat, sugar and tin. The discussion at the 24th session of ECOSOC is likely to be largely concerned with the international machinery for dealing with commodity problems. It is hard to tell whether differences in views regarding this machinery will, in fact, give rise to serious difficulties; in any event, the Delegation has been asked to give general support for a continuation of the status quo among the bodies chiefly concerned.

8. It is recommended²⁶

1. That the Canadian Delegation be approved as constituted.
2. That the instructions be approved as described above.
3. That the Delegation seek to play a useful role in discussions of the economic and social work of the United Nations but reserve its position or, if time allows, refer to Ottawa for instructions on matters specifically involving Canadian economic and social policies.

J.G. DIEFENBAKER

33.

DEA/5475-DS-44-40

Rapport final

Final Report

CONFIDENTIAL. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Geneva, n.d.]

INTERNATIONAL IMPATIENCE

A GENERAL ANALYSIS

Perhaps the most striking characteristic of the 24th Session of ECOSOC was that of impatience on the part of under-developed countries. There appeared to be growing resentment on their part against the efforts of more favoured member nations to keep demands in ECOSOC within what they regarded as reasonable limits. Delegations from under-developed countries also appeared to be getting increasingly suspicious that ECOSOC's procedures for co-ordination of economic and social programmes were being exploited by more favoured member nations to restrict or prevent legitimate ECOSOC activities. In the Technical Assistance Committee, there was obvious dissatisfaction because of the difficulties involved in spreading limited resources over a wider geographical area as a result of additional countries becoming independent. In the Economic Committee, the Poles and Yugoslavs sometimes lost patience with the slowness of the Council in adopting measures designed to promote closer economic relations between East and West. The Brazilian Delegation wanted to revise completely the charters of the IBRD and the IMF which it considers as having failed to provide the necessary help to the less developed countries.

The major indication of impatience, however, arose over the item — A Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development. After very little debate the under-developed countries led by the Netherlands introduced a resolution for the establishment of this fund. Refusing to accept any compromise, they pressed this resolution to a vote over the direct and firm opposition of the USA, the UK and Canada. As one delegate said, "We have waited too long for the major contributors to agree to participate, the time has come to go ahead without them”.

²⁶ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 11 juillet 1957.

Approved by Cabinet on July 11, 1957.

What are the causes of this situation? In the first place, the Economic and Social Council, with its wide responsibilities for promoting advancement in Economic, Social and Human Rights conditions among the member states of the United Nations, is naturally productive of more dreams and hopes than can ever be realized. Secondly, member governments of more favoured nations have not been willing or able to make sufficient financial resources available for programmes which otherwise appeared practicable.

Perhaps another explanation for the difficulties at the 24th Session lies in the fact that many of the less developed countries know what they want and need more clearly than they did earlier in the history of the UN. In addition many references are being made to the differences in the rates of growth between the developed and less developed countries which, it is claimed, constitute a widening gap between the two groups.

This growing disappointment with ECOSOC on the part of under-developed members has no doubt been aggravated by the negative attitude on the part of the major western powers towards any expansion of ECOSOC activities. We have pointed to this attitude in reports on previous sessions. It was no less obvious at the 24th Session. Such an attitude inevitably tends to promote a sense of frustration, and perhaps financial irresponsibility, on the part of under-developed countries.

It seems possible that unless the Economic and Social Council recovers to some extent the confidence of the under-developed countries in it as a constructive and useful part of the UN machinery, it will decline in prestige and possible usefulness. Confidence in ECOSOC will in large measure depend on the leadership of the more favoured western nations, or at least on their readiness to cooperate in worthwhile programmes. Failing the strengthening of confidence, ECOSOC may easily become a major forum for the USSR to exploit the discontent of the economically under-developed countries.

Position of the Canadian Delegation

The Canadian Delegation did not have any major specific initiatives to propose at the 24th Session. In the circumstances the Delegation maintained its traditional role of improving, diverting or opposing resolutions submitted by others. In general, the Delegation's attitude to these issues was pragmatic. Its decisions were based on a judgment whether any important question of principle was involved and whether the resolutions in question were likely in practice to yield useful results. Unless some major question of principle was involved, the Delegation was unwilling to take an isolated stand in opposition.

During the Session the Canadian Delegation strongly opposed resolutions which it considered wasteful or unprofitable. Among such resolutions were one on the convening of a conference on new sources of energy suggested by the French Delegation, others by the USSR Delegation on the Common Market, on the convening of a meeting of international economists, and on nuclear tests. The Delegation also pressed for elimination of objectionable features in a resolution on inflation proposed by the US Delegation, in a five-year forward planning of specialized agency programmes suggested by the UK, and in a Polish-Yugoslav resolution calling for a panel of expert economists to advise the Secretary-General on methods for improving international consultation.

In cases where it seemed impossible to defeat a resolution to which the Canadian Delegation had serious objections the Delegation joined with other like-minded delegations in the preparation of amendments designed to make these resolutions generally acceptable or at least innocuous. The texts which finally emerged did not always conform to Canadian preferences but they were at least of a character which permitted Canadian acquiescence.

Close liaison was of course maintained throughout the meetings with the US and the UK insofar as a substantive action was concerned, and with the less developed countries who are or might become friendly to the West. Both in Committee work and on the social level the Canadian Delegation enjoyed very friendly relations with all delegations. Of passing interest is the fact that amongst those who stayed to the end of the Canadian reception were a substantially tipsy Russian accompanied by two cohorts, an Indonesian, an Indian, as well as the normal quota of imbibing westerners.

Attached to this analysis is a description of the role played at the 24th Session by the other countries on the Council.† Of special interest, however, was the flexibility and activity of the USSR Delegation. At the close of the 22nd Session of ECOSOC, the Canadian Delegation reported an absence of western great power leadership on the Council; the USA for congressional reasons, the UK for financial reasons and France for political reasons, seemed unwilling or unable to exercise the initiative which would be required to direct ECOSOC discussions into constructive channels. A year ago the USSR did not take advantage of this opening, but it did so to some extent at the 24th Session. This situation was further complicated by the newly found ability of the Polish and Yugoslav delegations to come forward with an increasing number of "independent" but still difficult suggestions. Instead of one rather clumsy and rigid opponent, the Western delegations at the 24th Session were confronted by three active, informed and fairly adaptable opponents. It took a good deal of effort, in which the Canadian Delegation took a leading part, to convince the less developed country participants where their best interests lay and to muster majorities for the appropriate decisions.

Future Possibilities

In the light of this situation, the Delegation gave some preliminary thought to possibilities for action in ECOSOC which might be supported by future Canadian delegations. It is not expected that the Canadian Government would wish to make a large number of extensive proposals in ECOSOC but the preliminary views of the Delegation may be useful in considering whether it is possible for future Canadian delegations to initiate, or persuade others to initiate, appropriate action and in what fields this action might be concentrated. It should be recalled that Canada will attend only two more full sessions of the Council in 1958 before its term will end. During this year, however, we might well have considerable influence in determining the future course of ECOSOC.

With these considerations in mind, the following are a few brief comments on some items which might be considered further by the Canadian authorities. They are not arranged in any order of priority.

1. Technical Assistance. The Technical Assistance Programme, although widely supported and efficient, is at present suffering from an acute shortage of funds in the face of expanding needs. Increased support for this effective multilateral UN programme can be justified not only on humanitarian grounds but on practical grounds. The Delegation is submitting a separate comment on this question.

2. Resources Development. The Delegation believes that whether the Canadian authorities want to encourage this development or not, there will be increased pressure in the coming years in ECOSOC and General Assembly for a United Nations programme designed to promote the development of natural resources in under-developed countries. This would not necessarily involve a capital assistance programme but might well involve substantial commitments of a technical assistance nature. In any case, Canadian delegations, in the light of Canada's own experience, should be able to make constructive and detailed suggestions in this field.

3. International Administrative Service. Other than the Indonesian Delegation, no delegation at the 24th Session of ECOSOC supported in any definite manner the International Administrative Service idea elaborated by the Secretary-General. During the Session the Canadian Delegation came to recognize that this proposal, which involves the provision by the UN of administrators to work as officials for long periods in the less developed countries, could be re-worked into a practical programme. This programme might be of considerable usefulness to some under-developed countries and would represent a reasonable expansion of the United Nations function of providing assistance to such countries in improving their internal administrations. This issue will arise again at the 26th session of ECOSOC and if the Canadian authorities wish to do so there would be an opportunity then and perhaps earlier in the General Assembly for making a useful contribution to the development of public administrative capacities in the under-developed countries by supporting some variation of these proposals. It is probable that if Canada or some other western delegation does not endeavour to push this idea, it will go by default.

4. Human Rights. It is suggested that our policy with respect to the Human Rights programme, which is of very considerable interest to many under-developed countries, might be re-examined. Hitherto we have not been very constructive in our approach. It may be that despite our constitutional difficulties a more co-operative approach is possible. Certainly the activities of the UN in this field are not of great financial proportions.

5. Refugees. It is unquestionable that, for relatively modest amounts of money the post World War II refugees problem in Europe could be settled. The programme currently approved, even if fully supported financially, falls short of this objective. On humanitarian, as well as financial, grounds there is a strong case for the extra effort to solve the problem.

6. Food Resources. The Delegation feels that one of the most potentially difficult issues which may be before future meetings concerns the use of surplus agricultural commodities in promoting economic development.

7. Community Development. The Delegation considers that the discussions of community development in the UN will certainly be active and will provide an important and probably reasonable opportunity to western delegations for the promotion of desirable progress in living conditions in under-developed countries. It is believed that support for this programme, which will likely be of relatively modest financial proportions, would be a constructive contribution in the social field, where hitherto Canada has not been a very active participant.

8. Commercial Policy. The USSR and other delegations have clearly shown that they intend to use UN forums for criticizing western commercial policy. It is possible that the Common Market proposals may come up for considerable discussion in the United Nations, particularly if the discussions in GATT do not yield what could be considered as generally satisfactory results for the under-developed countries. The pressure for commodity stabilization and arrangements will certainly continue to be felt on the Commission on International Commodity Trade, in which it cannot be expected that the US and UK will participate. The failure of the US Congress to ratify the OTC coupled with an apparent willingness on the part of the USSR and other communist countries to be more cooperative will create even greater difficulties.

9. Africa. ECOSOC will undoubtedly be expected in the future to pay much greater attention to the problems of Africa than it has until now. The principal emphasis will certainly be on economic development. Part of this pressure was revealed during the session in the TAC in connection with the resolution on Italian Somaliland.

10. Sunfed. Last and most important is the Sunfed item. A world-wide multilateral fund designed to promote the overall economic and social development of the less developed countries on a large scale is certainly not a practical possibility in the immediate future. Nevertheless the under-developed countries seem determined to press for such a fund in direct opposition to the USA (the major potential contributor), the UK and Canada and some, but a very few, other countries. In order to avoid probable failure and general disillusionment, and for sound political as well as economic reasons, the Delegation to the 24th Session of ECOSOC believes it would be most important for the Canadian authorities to give consideration to some of the possible alternatives to Sunfed sketched in the report on this individual item. Unless it is possible to do so, the Canadian Delegation will be faced with a difficult situation at the 12th General Assembly from which it may find it hard to emerge with much credit.

It is recognized that any of these suggestions would require detailed examination and approval in advance of ECOSOC and General Assembly meetings by the Canadian Government before they could be presented.

Coordination

One avenue of action in ECOSOC which in the Canadian Delegation's view is beginning to yield diminishing returns is that of coordination. The UK and other delegations are attempting to use the coordination item as a means of keeping expenditure down and preventing the implementation of projects which they do not support. It is probable that the Coordination Committee has achieved as much as it can in the avoidance of overlapping and in the reduction of the number of meetings and other expensive and unnecessary UN operations. The Delegation also believes that it is desirable for ECOSOC to remain within its appropriate field. ECOSOC is not a body which could be used as a budgetary committee. This is the function of the Fifth Committee. The Canadian role in the future should be to press for continued modest action in regard to "streamlining" but should also place its emphasis on the more constructive task of helping to shape and encourage emerging programmes of a more comprehensive nature, such as community development.

Progress of Candidature of Dr. Davidson for Presidency of ECOSOC in 1958

It is possible that there may be no opposing candidate for Dr. Davidson by the time of the 1958 elections to the presidency. The Yugoslavs appear to be in some doubt as to whether to push Dr. Brilej's candidature. He in any case appears to be unwell and perhaps more interested in other offices. The Mexican Delegation did not by its record in the Council justify much support nor did its potential candidate appear to be a strong contender against Dr. Davidson. The Delegation does not consider that any definite campaigning in favour of Dr. Davidson is necessary or desirable at this stage.

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

VINGT-CINQUIÈME SESSION, NEW YORK, 16 AVRIL AU 6 MAI 1958
TWENTY-FIFTH SESSION, NEW YORK, APRIL 16 TO MAY 6, 1958

34.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 52-58

[Ottawa], March 31, 1958

25TH SESSION OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL
OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The Economic and Social Council, one of the principal organs of the United Nations, will convene its 25th (spring) session at the Headquarters of the United Nations in New York on April 16 for a three-week period. The Council is responsible, under the authority of the General Assembly, for the economic and social activities of the United Nations. It is required by the terms of Article 62 of the Charter to make or initiate studies, reports and recommendations on international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and to promote respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. Canada's third term on the Council will expire at the end of 1958.

The candidature of Dr. George Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare, for the office of President of the Council for 1958, has been made known to the eighteen members of the Council and assurances of support have been received from fifteen members. Since there is at present no other candidate for the office, it appears probable that Dr. Davidson will be elected to the Presidency by acclamation.

In planning its work, the Council's practice is to consider the rather more routine items, less likely to give rise to serious differences of opinion, at its spring sessions and to reserve the more important questions and the coordination and overall supervision of its programme for its summer session.

The agenda for the spring session of the Council accordingly is not a heavy one and contains no matters which are likely to call for major policy decisions by the Government. On the economic side, the Council will consider the reports of the International Monetary Fund, of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and reports prepared by the Secretariat of the United Nations on aspects of the Economic Development of Under-developed Countries, including organizational machinery in the field of industrialization and problems of water resources development. On the social side, the Council will consider the work of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), a programme to which Canada makes major contributions and supports strongly.

The Council will fulfill its annual task of renewing the membership of certain functional commissions and the Executive Board of UNICEF. It will also elect the membership of a new body, the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which is to replace the present Executive Committee for the United Nations Refugee Fund. Canada was a member of the latter body and will seek election to the new body.

The Council will also consider a recommendation made by the General Assembly to give early and favourable consideration to the establishment of an Economic Commission for Africa and will in all probability establish a special committee to report to its 26th session in July on the establishment and terms of reference for such a commission.

I shall refer to my colleagues any questions which arise during the session which appear to require instructions from the Cabinet. The nature of the agenda does not, it would appear, require that instructions from Cabinet to the Delegation should be provided in advance. There has been consultation between my Department and other Departments of government when necessary, and I shall instruct the Delegation in accordance with the agreed views of the Departments concerned.

The approval of Cabinet is requested for a delegation to the 25th session of the Economic and Social Council to be composed as follows:²⁷

Representative:

Dr. G.F. Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare

Alternate Representatives:

Mr. L.E. Couillard, Department of External Affairs

Mr. J.A. Irwin, Department of External Affairs

(SIDNEY E. SMITH)

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III

VINGT-SIXIÈME SESSION, GENÈVE, 1^{ER} JUILLET AU 28 JUILLET 1958

TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION, GENEVA, JULY 1 TO JULY 28, 1958

35. PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 171-58

[Ottawa], June 20, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION — ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The 26th session of the Economic and Social Council will convene at the European Headquarters of the United Nations in Geneva on July 1, 1958.

At its forthcoming session the Council will be concerned for the most part with the problems of under-developed countries. In this respect it will take steps toward the establishment of the Special Fund which will make it possible for under-developed countries to undertake special projects in economic development. It will review the technical assistance

²⁷ Le Cabinet a pris note des recommandations du ministre et approuvé la composition de la délégation canadienne le 9 avril 1958. Pour un rapport sur les points précis discutés à la 25^e session, voir Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Le Canada et les Nations Unies, 1958 (Ottawa, 1959), pp. 35 à 58.

Cabinet noted the recommendations of the Minister and approved the composition of the Canadian delegation on April 9, 1958. For a report on specific items discussed at the 25th Session, see Department of External Affairs, Canada and the United Nations, 1958 (Ottawa, 1959), pp. 35-58.

activities of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies, both with regard to the country programmes carried out in the under-developed countries and to the administrative and budgetary factors involved in their implementation. In addition it will consider the establishment of a world food reserve in which countries with food surpluses would assist food-deficit countries to build up national food reserves, and the establishment of an international administrative service to provide trained administrators from advanced countries to serve in the national civil services of under-developed countries.

2. Another major subject will be the Secretary-General's World Economic Survey and a study of recent inflationary trends throughout the world.

3. The Commission on Human Rights, the Statistical Commission, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs have all submitted reports on their 1958 sessions to the Council for its consideration and approval. Canada serves on the three last Commissions.

4. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees presents his annual report to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council; as in past years, this report will be one of the major items on the social side of the Council's work.

5. General instructions for the Canadian Delegation and specific instructions on more important matters of policy are contained in the attachment to this memorandum. Approval for additional instructions will be sought with regard to the world food reserve, the international administrative service and the Special Fund.

6. It is proposed that the Canadian Delegation be under the leadership of Wallace B. Nesbitt, M.P., who will be Chairman of the Delegation and Alternate Representative. The Rules of Procedure of the Council relating to the composition of delegations make provision for the appointment of one Representative and as many Alternate Representatives as may be required. Dr. G.F. Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare, has been elected President of the Council for 1958. He will preside over the 26th session and formal considerations arising out of the Rules of Procedure require that he be designated as the Canadian Representative. It is proposed that in addition to Mr. Nesbitt and Dr. Davidson, the Canadian Delegation comprise the following persons to be designated as Alternate Representatives: M.H. Wershof, Q.C., Permanent Representative of Canada to the European Office of the United Nations, Geneva; S. Pollock, Director, International Programmes and Contributions, Department of Finance, and L.A.D. Stephens, Counsellor, Canadian Embassy, Bonn.

7. The approval of Cabinet is accordingly requested for:²⁸

(a) Instructions contained in the attachment to this memorandum and

(b) For the composition of the Canadian Delegation to the 26th session of ECOSOC as listed above.

SIDNEY SMITH

²⁸ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 24 juin 1958, avec ajout de la clause suivante « that agriculture be specifically mentioned as one of the provisions of the E.E.C. treaty giving Canada serious concern. »

Approved by Cabinet on June 24, 1958 with the added provision "that agriculture be specifically mentioned as one of the provisions of the E.E.C. treaty giving Canada serious concern."

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*NoteMemorandum*INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE 26TH SESSION OF ECOSOC

When toward the end of the war the task was taken up of creating the United Nations as an instrument of world order, it was realized that the United Nations should provide for political stability and security but for economic and social needs as well. The years between the wars had brought home the increasing complexity of economic interrelations and the need for international machinery that could deal with them. In addition there were the problems of reconstruction and stabilization to be faced at the close of the war. It was visualized that for the most part these needs and problems would be met by functional bodies operating within specific fields. Some such bodies, for example the Universal Postal Union and the International Labour Organization, had come into existence earlier and had already proven their worth in peace time. Others such as the Food and Agriculture Organization, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Agency, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund had been created during the war to anticipate the post-war situation. There was, however, the need for a body with a status comparable in some respects to that of the Security Council, to operate over the whole field of economic and social policy and to be responsible to the General Assembly for co-ordinating the work of the more specialized organs. Provision was therefore made in the Charter for the Economic and Social Council, to consist of 18 members elected by the General Assembly for three-year terms, and to consider and make recommendations to the General Assembly on international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and on the promotion of respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

2. In the years since its establishment ECOSOC has been faced by the fundamental fact of a sharp contrast between social and economic situations of the advanced and the under-developed countries and the vital bearing of this fact on the prospects for world peace and prosperity. Many of those under-developed countries which emerged at the end of the war or since from colonial control have brought an aroused nationalism and emotional anti-colonialism to heighten the divisions which have appeared between the advanced and the under-developed countries notwithstanding the strong common interest in rising productivity, increased purchasing power and elimination of barriers to the free flow of goods and capital. The split between the Soviet bloc and the free democracies of the West which has dominated the political field has added greatly to the long-range political and economic significance of such divisions.

3. Canada made a substantial contribution to the establishment of the Economic and Social Council and was one of the 18 countries initially elected to membership in 1946. In the years that have followed Canada has served two further terms on the Council. We will complete our present term at the end of 1958.

4. While giving full recognition to the essential role of the Council in the developing and increasingly complex pattern of international economic and social relationships, Canadian policy in ECOSOC has followed pragmatic lines, emphasizing the need to contain the Council's activities within the resources of funds and personnel available, the need for selection with a careful eye to the practical results to be expected, and the predominant role of the Council as a co-ordinating agency. We have aimed at improving relations between the advanced and under-developed countries. With this objective in mind Canadian delegations have been instructed to play as practical and constructive a role as possible even on proposals against which they might eventually have to vote; to keep in mind the necessity of close co-ordination with the United Kingdom and United States delegations; and to keep in mind the financial limitations on Canadian support generally applicable to United Nations programmes. Also delegations have been instructed to avoid unproductive propaganda debates which hamper the useful work of the Council but to reply as necessary to Soviet bloc delegations if East-West differences emerge.

5. In maintaining these well-established lines of Canadian policy the Delegation to the 26th session should bear in mind that Canada will this year be leaving the Council for an indefinite period and should indicate by active participation to the extent it considers appropriate the continued interest which we expect to take in the affairs of the Council and its increasingly important role in promoting the healthy and productive integration of the world society in the economic and social fields.

6. The following paragraphs contain more specific instructions on certain important items of the agenda. In addition, the approval of Cabinet will be sought for instructions concerning the World Food Reserve, the Special Fund for Economic Development and the International Administrative Service; and the Delegation will be informed of Cabinet's decisions.

World Economic Survey

7. The Economic and Social Council each year holds a general discussion of world economic problems, for which the Secretary-General prepares a report entitled "World Economic Survey". The World Economic Survey for 1957 deals with the inflationary trends experienced by many countries in the past three years and with the economic downturn which has become apparent in the Western world during 1957 and the early part of 1958. It is critical of some of the economic policies followed during this period by the industrialized countries and draws attention to the difficulties which fluctuations in economic activity have created for the under-developed countries and particularly the instability in commodity prices. The Survey indicates that the recovery from the present downturn may not be so rapid as in earlier postwar recessions. It refers to the continued expansion of production, although at a slower rate of growth, in the "centrally planned economies" of the Soviet bloc.

8. During the session the Soviet bloc may be expected to expound their views on the instability of the economics of the Western countries and may seek the adoption of a resolution calling for some far-reaching measures to deal with world economic problems. Past Soviet initiatives of this sort (e.g. for a world economic conference or for a new world trade organization) have not received much support. The Canadian position on such issues has been and should continue to be that existing international machinery is adequate and flexible enough to deal with economic problems, although we recognize a need to use it more effectively. Emphasis might also be given to the importance which Canada attaches to the expansion of international trade and our desire to support moves aimed at improving international trading conditions.

9. If efforts are made by under-developed countries to seek from the United Nations fresh initiatives in various fields to increase the scale or scope of assistance to their economic development programmes, the Canadian Delegation should take the occasion to express, in suitable terms, its sympathy for the problems and needs of those countries. In this context, the Delegation might make appropriate reference to the tangible support which Canada has given not only through many United Nations aid programmes for under-developed countries but through other programmes like the Colombo Plan. As further evidence of our genuine interest in the problems of the under-developed countries, the Delegation might point out that Canada has already expressed its readiness to join with others in offering support for the Special Fund which is now under consideration by the Council. Although the exact Canadian position on the Special Fund will be developed in the debate on the report of the Preparatory Committee which was established to prepare recommendations for the inauguration of the Special Fund, the Delegation should make it clear that Canadian support is subject to parliamentary approval, to satisfactory organizational and administrative arrangements being agreed upon, and to there being broad support from other members. While it is important that the Delegation should appear responsive and sympathetic to the legitimate aspirations of the less privileged countries, it is equally important that their expectations or hopes should not be falsely raised. The Delegation should therefore stress the wisdom of following a cautious policy in this field in not contemplating further claims on the resources of the United Nations community before the Special Fund has been set up and given an opportunity to commence operations.

Regional Economic Commissions; Economic Commission for Europe

10. One of the principal questions covered in the annual report for the Economic Commission for Europe is the European Common Market. Since it continues to be a matter of considerable interest to many countries, it is likely to be discussed at ECOSOC. The Canadian Delegation should reiterate in broad terms the general support of this country for the objectives of the Common Market as far as these efforts are directed to the expansion and diversification of trade, while expressing reservations in general terms about particular provisions of the EEC treaty which could impair the trading interests of third countries, weaken trading relations that have been built up between Western Europe and other regions in the post-war period, and impair the benefits to themselves which might be expected to result from this initiative. The Delegation should refer to the special consultation procedure which has been worked out by the GATT to deal with specific and practical problems arising from the Common Market Treaty and indicate Canadian hopes for reaching mutually satisfactory solutions. If endeavours are made to have ECOSOC undertake a detailed examination of the Treaty, the Delegation might point out that such an examination has already been initiated under the GATT.

International Commodity Problems

11. It is anticipated that in view of the difficult market conditions for many primary products in recent months, there will be a good deal of discussion on this subject.

12. This is a subject of considerable concern to Canada, as a producer of a wide range of agricultural and primary commodities. Under-developed countries, many of which depend on export earnings of one or a few products, have urged the adoption within the United Nations of a variety of measures — some quite extreme — to meet their difficulties. Canadian delegations have taken the position that no generalized solutions to international commodity problems can be found. The Canadian position has been that these problems can be approached most effectively on a commodity-by-commodity basis, and that solutions to commodity problems require the support of the principal countries concerned. In accordance with this position Canada has been represented at a variety of international conferences and study groups both within and outside the United Nations concerned with particular commodities; Canada is a member of the three intergovernmental commodity agreements on wheat, sugar and tin.

13. At the forthcoming meeting of ECOSOC, the Delegation should maintain the basic Canadian position. It should express an appreciation of the economic problems faced by countries whose export earnings are declining because of adverse developments in commodity prices; and reaffirm the readiness of the Canadian Government to join with producing and consuming countries, under procedures which have been internationally agreed, to examine whether intergovernmental action is feasible or desirable to meet problems of particular commodities.

Advisory Services in Human Rights

14. The programme of advisory services in the field of human rights was established by the General Assembly at its tenth session. Under the programme fellowships or experts in the broad field of human rights may be provided at the request of governments and seminars may be organized on a regional basis. The programme comprises a practical approach to current human rights problems and one through which countries, such as Canada, which for constitutional reasons will have difficulty in adhering to international covenants on human rights, may still participate actively in the United Nations activities and efforts to promote respect for human rights throughout the world.

15. The success of the programme in its initial two years has been such as to lead the Secretary-General to request an increase in the funds available for it. The Delegation might support a reasonable increase in its present budget of $55,000 in so far as it can be shown that the extra funds can be usefully expended.

36.

DEA/5475-DS-44-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*²⁹

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*²⁹

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], September 10, 1958

GENERAL ASSESSMENT OF THE 26TH SESSION OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

I think that you will be interested in the attached general assessment of the work of the Economic and Social Council at its recent 26th session which was prepared by the Chairman of the Canadian Delegation, Mr. Wallace B. Nesbitt, M.P. The assessment is being reproduced as a circular document for transmission to all our missions abroad.

You will see that Mr. Nesbitt characterizes the session as a constructive one with reference in particular to its work on the economic side (paragraphs 3-6 and 9). Of special importance were the approval of the report of the Special Fund's Preparatory Committee, the decision to reconstitute and change the terms of reference of the Commission on International Commodity Trade (to which Canada was re-elected for a three-year term) and discussions of commodity problems. It is encouraging to read the progress which the Council achieved in the coordination field.

The practice initiated by the Netherlands Delegation (paragraph 11) of holding meetings of certain heads of delegations to promote Western unity on the Council is one which I suggest should be cautiously considered if, in the future, we are called upon to take a position on it. It could conceivably create the impression of a Western bloc "ganging up" against the outsiders.

²⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Seen by the Minister

You might wish to take this opportunity to comment to Mr. Nesbitt on the assessment of the Council's work which he has provided, and to thank him for having undertaken the leadership of the Delegation. With this in mind, I have had prepared for your signature a letter† for this purpose. You might also wish to congratulate Dr. George Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare, who was the first Canadian to serve as President of the Economic and Social Council, and was the Canadian representative to its 25th and 26th sessions, and I attach a draft letter† which you might wish to consider. Dr. Davidson will preside over the resumed session of ECOSOC which is convened in New York for a day or two towards the end of each regular session of the General Assembly, to consider any business arising out of decisions which may have been taken at the Thirteenth Session. The draft letter suggests that this might possibly provide an occasion for you to discuss the economic and social activities of the United Nations with Dr. Davidson.

J. L.[ÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

Memorandum

CONFIDENTIAL. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa, n.d.]

GENERAL ASSESSMENT OF THE 26TH SESSION OF ECOSOC — CONSTRUCTIVE

- 1 -

1. When the Suez crisis occurred during the 22nd session of ECOSOC the result was increased tension and difficulty. In contrast, the events in the Middle East which occurred during the 26th session of ECOSOC served chiefly to distract attention from the debates and to aggravate the lack of interest which some delegations were already displaying in the work of the Council. This lack of interest was shown in a number of ways. Some delegations were not even represented at all the meetings of the Council Committees. The level of representation tended to be lower than at previous meetings. The U.S.S.R. and its satellites introduced a large number of draft resolutions, many of them prepared some time in advance and very well prepared. However, the Soviet Delegation did not press its resolutions vigorously. Even the less developed countries representation at the meetings was less active than might have been expected. The Indonesian Delegation made little or no positive contribution to the work of the Council at its 26th session, the Pakistan Delegation somewhat more. The Latin American Delegations were active only sporadically.

2. The Canadian Delegation had no special initiatives to negotiate during the 26th session. The Delegation was of course anxious to ensure that the Special Fund was established on a sound basis and to this end that the report of the Preparatory Committee was approved without major change. We had little difficulty in achieving this objective. Even on the Commodities item, in which we were most interested, it was more the responsibility of other delegations than ours to negotiate changes in the terms of reference of the C.I.C.T. The Delegation was, however, active in protecting our own seat on this Commission. In any event Canada was re-elected (16 out of a possible 18 votes) for a three-year term in the reconstituted body. In keeping with past traditions, the Delegation's major activity consisted of preventing unsatisfactory resolutions from being passed and amending or adapting the initiatives of other delegations for our own purposes. In pursuit of this objective the Canadian Delegation was one of the most active at the meeting. In the plenary sessions, in the Coordination Committee, the Economic Committee, the Technical Assistance Committee and the Social Committee, Canadian statements were among the more influential, and the Canadian Delegation participated in the negotiation on all major decisions. (See Section III for further details of the Canadian role at the meetings).

3. In a word, the 26th session could best be characterized as — constructive. Of considerable importance were the discussions on international trade problems. The Western delegations face considerable difficulty as a result of increased Soviet bloc interest in opening new channels for trade relations with the West since this interest coincides with concern by the less developed countries, particularly those of Latin America, at current instability in world commodity markets. The great interest shown in world commodity problems, if it did nothing else, emphasized the importance attached to these problems by both developed and under-developed countries. This may in the long run create an increased awareness of the difficulties inherent in international commodity trade which could have desirable results from a Canadian standpoint.

4. One of the major achievements of the 26th session was the decision to change the terms of reference of the C.I.C.T. and to reconstitute it so as to permit the U.K. and U.S.A. to rejoin the Commission. This decision may have useful consequences for Canada if the Commission benefits from U.S.A. and U.K. membership and if it is able to develop a work programme which does not conflict with the work ICCICA, GATT and the FAO are doing in the same field. This general issue will certainly be revived during the 13th session of the General Assembly.

5. The approval of the Special Fund Preparatory Committee Report was the next most important achievement of the 26th session. This action will enable the Canadian Government and other governments to plan their contributions to the Special Fund for announcement during the 13th session of the General Assembly. As the President noted in his concluding remarks, the creation of this new Economic Development Fund represents the first major forward step which the Council has taken in this general field since the establishment of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance in 1949.

6. The establishment of the International Administrative Service could result in improved national administrations in the less developed countries. This was a proposal encouraged by the Secretary-General himself as one of the most important contributions which the United Nations could make in promoting the economic development of the less developed countries.

7. The Council's decision to encourage the establishment of National Food Reserves can also be considered a significant decision of probable future importance to Canada.

8. Action was taken by the Council in respect of the narcotics and refugees items. In both these cases the Council did not face major issues of principle, except possibly in one instance, i.e., the decision to convene in plenipotentiary conference for the purpose of adopting a single convention on Narcotic Drugs. In this case, the Canadian Delegation was instrumental in persuading the Council to take a positive decision at this session. It should be added that difficult financial problems will arise in the near future in connection with the provision of international assistance to refugees.

9. Relations between the Council and the Specialized Agencies also appear to have improved considerably in comparison to the conditions which existed in the last two years. The Council may well claim some credit for this development and also for the possibility that there will be greater concerned practical action in the future than has been the case in the past where responsibilities between the Agencies and the United Nations overlap.

10. In an effort to make the Council more significant the U.S.A. initiated a move to expand its membership by six. This proposal may be unsuccessful because of Soviet opposition but could have useful political results for that reason alone. The Canadian Delegation considered that this move should have been better prepared than it was. (See the Delegation's report† on Agenda Item 2 (a) for further details). The issue will certainly be revived at the 13th session of the General Assembly.

11. One of the new developments at the 26th Session of ECOSOC was the practice initiated by the Netherlands of holding meetings of the heads of delegations without their advisers. The Netherlands believed that it promoted Western unity on the Council. Others considered that difficulties of coordination within delegations resulted (particularly within the U.S.A. and the U.K. Delegations).

12. There are however grounds for general satisfaction with the work of the 26th session. It should be recognized however that the less developed countries and the Soviet bloc were less aggressive and active at the 26th session of ECOSOC than they will be at the 13th session of the General Assembly. Some of the harmony and unanimity at the 26th session may prove to be illusory.

- II -

13. The following more specific comments on the work of the individual committees may be useful in support of the above conclusions.

Coordination Committee

The work of the Coordination Committee this year was, in comparison with its work in previous years, remarkable for the degree to which the under-developed countries and the agencies concerned seem to have accepted the view of the more advanced countries on the value of good coordination. The singular measure of "likemindedness" prevailing in the Committee is reflected by the unanimity achieved on all eight resolutions tabled in respect of coordination. The three most important of these resolutions deal respectively with coordination in the field of peaceful uses of atomic energy, prospects for further advances towards concerted action, and finally, plans for the completion of five-year appraisals by the United Nations and a number of the larger Specialized Agencies. The latter resolution was the main preoccupation of the United States, the United Kingdom and the Netherlands Delegations to whom this subject is of first importance. The reservations entertained by the Canadian Delegation last year on this exercise of five-year forecasting were not entirely dispelled. However, the more conservative attitude of the sponsors and the willingness of the agencies to cooperate with goodwill permitted us to vote for the resolution. It seems likely that Dr. Davidson will be nominated to the Committee to which the task of collating the appraisals will be given. As President of the Council, Dr. Davidson will also be asked to participate on an ECOSOC Delegation chosen to meet a delegation selected by I.L.O.

A second noticeable difference in the coordination field this year, as opposed to last year, was the almost complete apathy displayed by the Soviet Delegation and to a lesser extent by the Polish Delegation to the subject of coordination — Item 3 (a). This apathy changed to live interest when the Coordination Committee devoted its attention to Item 3 (b) arising out of General Assembly Resolution 1164 (XII) and dealing with exchanges in the fields of science, culture and education. Under this heading, the Soviet Delegation tabled three resolutions calling respectively for a survey by the Secretary-General of external relations and exchanges in the fields mentioned, the preparation of a convention on this subject by UNESCO and, somewhat illogically, a 2nd United Nations Conference in 1961 on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources. The Soviet Delegation did not obtain satisfaction on any these three initiatives, particularly on the latter two. Accordingly, the USSR can be expected to return to the charge on these three proposals in the future.

The Yugoslav Delegation, which provided a competent, if uninspiring Chairman of the Committee, was a valuable partner to the Western Delegations in achieving satisfactory results in coordination matters. The Mexican Representative also made a contribution by his intelligent assessment of the problems of the committee and by his willingness to intercede with other Latin American delegations when necessary.

As usual the United States Representatives on the Committee, Walter Kotschnig and Kathleen Bell, formed the sun around which all other friendly delegations revolved in selecting and achieving agreed objectives. The French Representatives were not up to the standard of previous years. The British were sound, but unimaginative. The Netherlands alone of other delegations, compared favourably with that of the United States team.

Social Committee

The work of the Social Committee at the 26th Session of the Council was only remarkable in the almost unanimous opinion of its members that it had reached an all-time low.

The substance of the reports of the three functional commissions, Status of Women, Human Rights and Narcotic Drugs received no real attention although interest was occasionally quickened by a procedural manoeuvre or an attempt by East or West to outwit the other. The debate on the Advisory Services of Human Rights was of a respectable quality but gave this Delegation the impression that most of the members of the Committee were thankful to find one subject on which they could express some enthusiasm and encouragement without getting into too deep waters or involving themselves in too much thought or reflection.

There were no particular line-ups or blocks. The Committee was perhaps also remarkable in its lack of cold war atmosphere and for the sense of agreement between its members.

The United States was by far the most active member of the Committee and seemed to work closely with the Secretariat in producing draft resolutions when required. The United Kingdom was a good second and Chile was the most useful and cooperative Latin American country. Mexico and Costa Rica were almost completely silent and Brazil perhaps because of a close personal tie between the Chairman of the Brazilian and United States Commissioner on Narcotics was active only during the discussion on the Report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Poland was the most politically aware of the Eastern bloc, but was not particularly aggressive. The only issue on which the Eastern bloc seemed really involved concerned the "internationalism" of the "regional" Human Rights seminars. Yugoslavia voted consistently with Poland [against] the USSR.

The Canadian Delegation was particularly struck by the non-political and constructive statements of the Soviet Delegate, Mrs. Muraveva and her real efforts whenever possible to collaborate with the Committee as a whole. It was unfortunate that for political reasons her highly sensible proposals usually had to be discouraged.

Technical Assistance Committee

The main work of the TAC consisted of a series of decisions on the detailed operation of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance. These decisions followed the administrative pattern established at previous meetings and, while they involve much detailed negotiation, did not raise major issues of principle. An important exception, however, was the decision already noted to establish an International Administrative Service.

Although no major changes in the structure and operations of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance were made at the 26th session of ECOSOC, the ground-work was laid for two important discussions in the future. At the suggestion of the U.S.A., consideration will be given (prior to the next summer session of ECOSOC) to possible revisions of the country programming procedures of the ETAP. This is a subject in which Canada as a major contributor has a particular interest and it would be desirable for the Canadian authorities to follow fairly closely any changes which the TAC may in the future suggest and which might affect the basic nature of the ETAP programme.

Another major question which will arise in the future concerns the method of allocating administrative and operational services costs between the budgets of the ETAP and of the participating organizations. It will be necessary for Canadian Delegations in each of the Specialized Agencies to take a consistent position on this question.

The TAC also began its work towards ensuring close cooperation between the ETAP programme and the programme of the proposed Special Fund. In general, the TAC session was a successful working meeting, much less the scene of East-West or of developed-under-developed conflicts than was the case in previous years or even in other committees of the Council.

Economic Committee

The Council commenced its activities under the cloud created by the difficulties occurring in the Middle-East, as well as the American recession. However, experience in the Economic Committee suggests that, although the Session was active and difficult, its results can be considered generally satisfactory.

Although the U.S.S.R. endeavoured to utilize the information in the World Economic Survey as justification for a number of unacceptable proposals, it was possible to counter these initiatives by concerted efforts but without excessive difficulty. At the same time the Economic Committee took action on other agenda items in addition to the recommendation for establishment of the Special Projects Fund. Inter alia the Committee (and later the Council) approved a widely supported resolution concerning the establishment of national food reserves (already noted) and took action on the C.I.C.T. (already noted).

- III -

The following comments on specific delegations may be of general political interest:

French Delegation

The French Delegation followed a somewhat less contradictory course than at previous ECOSOC sessions. The French Delegation participated actively in most of the discussions in the Council but did not have anything like the same position of influence as the U.S.A., United Kingdom and Netherlands Delegations.

United Kingdom Delegation

In contrast to the General Assembly, the United Kingdom Delegation can wield considerable authority in the sessions of ECOSOC. Together with the U.S.A. Delegation it is able with the cooperation of the Secretariat to exercise a major influence on events although frequently in a negative sense.

U.S.A. Delegation

The U.S.A. Delegation certainly provided much of the great power leadership at the 26th session of ECOSOC. It had considerable success, even though sometimes affected by internal divisions. In the Coordination Committee, for example, with good personnel and in cooperation with the Netherlands Delegation, it was able to achieve many of its and the West's objectives.

Latin American Delegations

Mexico was probably the best of the Latin American Delegations, frequently taking useful and constructive positions. In the Social Committee the Delegation of Chile played a useful role but created great difficulties for Canada and other friendly delegations in the Economic Committee. Frequently the Latin American Delegations were sharply divided. Some of them, Chile and Brazil in particular, were outspoken and bitter in their criticisms of the U.S.A.

U.S.S.R. Delegation

At the 26th session the U.S.S.R. submitted a large number of resolutions but apparently without any expectation that they would be adopted and without any intention of pushing them hard to a final decision. The U.S.S.R. was described as "playing for very small stakes". While the U.S.S.R. had a large delegation and prepared many of its resolutions and texts in advance, its members did not really make much use of ECOSOC and certainly seemed unable to participate in a constructive manner in its discussions. Soviet initiatives appeared designed for home consumption or intended to establish positions for use later in the General Assembly or in the Regional Economic Commissions.

Netherlands Delegation

The Netherlands had an impressive delegation headed by its Foreign Minister and was active in every discussion which the Council held, assuming influence in the Council second only to that of the U.S.A. and the U.K. The Netherlands, however, was frequently stubborn and sometimes selfish in its desire to gain political credit, (for example in its stand on SUNFED), at the expense of other Western delegations. Some of the Netherlands ideas were good; others proved difficult and unrealistic. The Netherlands Government has taken a decision to participate actively in the work of ECOSOC, even at the expense of its participation in other U.N. organs.

The Sudan

The Sudan Delegation was an interesting, active and sensible delegation. It took a moderate middle power position. The Sudan also made conscious efforts to speak for the African and the under-developed countries in opposition to what it sometimes regarded as negative Western positions. Its personnel, however, were friendly and cooperative and the delegation as a whole worked well with the Canadian Delegation.

Pakistan Delegation

The Pakistan Delegation was a responsible and friendly delegation.

Yugoslav Delegation

The Yugoslav Delegation was less active at this session of the Council than at previous sessions but nevertheless played an informed and important role in the work of the Council, providing a good Chairman for the Coordination Committee. The Yugoslav Delegation also clearly indicated its independence of the U.S.S.R. and of Poland and was one of the most helpful delegations in negotiating generally acceptable resolutions.

The following delegations made little or no contribution to the work of the Council. Indonesia, Finland, Greece, Costa Rica, China and Poland (the latter did not always vote exactly as did the U.S.S.R.).

Canadian Delegation

As already noted the Delegation was active in the negotiation of the main decisions at the 26th session. It was sometimes difficult to influence proposals promoted by the U.S.A., U.K. and the Netherlands Delegations. Most members of these three Delegations attended a number of sessions of the Council. Because of their established relationships with other delegations and the Secretariat, they exercise considerable influence over its proceedings. This consideration might be borne in mind in selecting Canadian representatives to ECOSOC and to other United Nations bodies. Of course the Agenda of ECOSOC and the nature of the problems discussed in that body are more continuous in nature than is the case for example in the General Assembly.

The Delegation considers that as in the case of other United Nations bodies there is much to be gained by anticipating the issues likely to arise. The Delegation also believes that there should be more prior discussions between friendly and Western Delegations before United Nations sessions, so that the West is not always placed in the position of reacting to Soviet proposals without constructive alternatives of its own. Taking initiatives for the sake of taking initiatives is not of course contemplated, but at least more carefully coordinated and more specific positions could be prepared by Western and friendly delegations. The alternative as shown by the 26th session of ECOSOC is to improvise stop-gap responses to initiatives frequently from the U.S.S.R. In general, the Delegation endeavoured to protect Canada's respected reputation in United Nations economic, social and human rights matters. This reputation can be used effectively when serious conflicts arise. Such conflicts did not, however, arise, or were prevented from arising, at the 26th session of ECOSOC.

One of the main contributions of the Canadian Delegation to ECOSOC during 1958 was Dr. George Davidson's presidency of the Council. Credit was reflected on Canada and on the Delegation as a result of Dr. Davidson's contributions to the work of the Council. Attached† as Appendix I to this report is Dr. Davidson's closing address as President which should be reproduced with this report.³⁰

³⁰ Pour un sommaire du discours de Davidson, voir Nations Unies, Conseil Économique et Social, Documents Officiels, Vingt-sixième session, pp. 166 à 167.

For a summary of Davidson's speech, see United Nations, Economic and Social Council, Official Records, Twenty-sixth session, pp. 150-151.

SECTION D

DROIT DE LA MER
LAW OF THE SEA

37.

PCO

*Note du ministre des Affaires du Nord et des Ressources nationales
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 169-57

[Ottawa], August 12, 1957

SECRET

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA; COMMENTS BY CANADA

1. The Law of the Sea, including international law relating to territorial waters, the continental shelf, and national jurisdiction over fisheries, has been under study for several years by an International Law Commission. It reported to the General Assembly of the United Nations last fall and the Assembly decided to call an International Conference on the Law of the Sea to be held either in Rome or Geneva in March, 1958. Canada has indicated its intention to be represented at the Conference.

2. Since 1952 the Canadian policy on territorial waters and other matters relating to the law of the sea has been under study by an Interdepartmental Committee under the chairmanship of the Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The Committee has been responsible for the preparations for the Conference insofar as Canada is concerned. It has also had prepared a comprehensive report by Mr. G.F. Curtis, Dean of the Faculty of Law, University of British Columbia, setting out the present position of international law governing territorial waters and examining the manner in which it could best be applied to Canadian waters, taking into account such statements or declarations of policy as may have been made in the past.

3. On November 16, 1955, the former Cabinet agreed that a Cabinet Committee consisting of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Chairman), the Minister of Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, together with such other Ministers as might wish to attend, be established to consider policy on territorial waters questions and recommendations that would be submitted by the committee of officials. Pursuant to a report by the Cabinet Committee, the Cabinet approved a number of recommendations as to Canadian policy on March 15, 1956.³¹ The principal decisions were as follows:

(a) To decide in principle to adopt the straight baseline system for the Coast of Labrador and the East and South Coasts of Newfoundland, subject to a guarantee of United States and French treaty fishing rights in the affected areas. The straight base-line system was sanctioned by the International Court of Justice in 1951 in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case. The system is particularly beneficial for deeply indented coasts like those of ³¹ Voir/See Volume 22, Document 316.

Labrador, probably B.C., etc. (The question of the application of this system to other parts of the coast is still under consideration by the Interdepartmental Committee).

(b) [Paragraphe non-déclassifié./Paragraph not declassified.]

(c) To consult the United States and the United Kingdom and France informally concerning the action contemplated.

(d) To decide in principle on the extension of the breadth of the territorial sea to 12 miles as an ultimate goal.

(e) [Paragraphe non-déclassifié./Paragraph not declassified.]

(f) To adopt the position that a littoral state should have the right to explore and exploit the natural resources of the seabed and subsoil of the continental shelf to the point where it plunges into ocean depths but where the outer edge of the shelf is ill-defined to agree to the limit being set at the 200 meter mark. (A 200 meter limit has been favoured by the International Law Commission as the maximum depth for a "continental shelf". However, much of the true continental shelf off the east coast of Canada is more than 200 meters deep.)

4. On July 30, the then Prime Minister, in response to questions in the House, indicated in general terms the Government policy with regard to the adoption of baselines and the 12-mile limit. (Hansard, July 30, 1956, pages 6700-6703). On August 3, 1956, the Government agreed that the United States, United Kingdom and French Governments should be officially informed of the decisions outlined in the House of Commons, i.e. that in the United Nations consideration of the report of the International Law Commission Canada would support the adoption of a straight baseline system for the measurement of territorial waters and would also support the adoption of the 12-mile limit for territorial waters.

5. Subsequently, in 1956, confidential discussions took place between Canadian officials and United States and United Kingdom officials. At these discussions United States and United Kingdom officials emphasized that universal adoption of a 12-mile territorial limit would have serious implications for security. In the light of their views, the government decided on a modified position which would involve, as the Canadian policy:

(a) a 3-mile limit for territorial waters proper,

(b) a 12-mile contiguous zone (measured from the same baselines from which the territorial sea would be measured) in which the coastal state would have the full right to impose fishing regulations (as well as customs, fiscal and sanitary regulations as already recommended by the Commission).

It was agreed that Canada make such a proposal at the General Assembly but that it should not exclude Canadian support for the 12-mile limit if at a later stage it appeared that no agreement could be reached on a 12-mile contiguous zone within which the coastal state would have adequate fishery controls. Subsequently the Canadian position on the breadth of the territorial sea was stated by the Canadian representative in the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly on December 7, 1956 as follows:

"The Canadian delegation believes that the 3-mile limit is not adequate for all purposes. In particular it is not adequate for the enforcement of customs, fiscal and sanitary regulations. It is also not adequate for the protection and control of fisheries. The Commission has already recommended a contiguous zone of not more than 12 miles from the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured for the purpose of exercising the necessary control in the enforcement of customs, fiscal or sanitary regulations. For Canada it is of fully as great importance that the rules of international law should provide adequately for the regulation and control of fisheries off the coasts of any state. One way of providing this would be by accepting, for general application, the twelve mile breadth for territorial waters. That would allow complete fishery, customs, fiscal and sanitary control and regulation within that limit. It would exclude the fishermen of other countries from the twelve mile coastal area. My Government recognizes, however, that a general extension of the breadth of the territorial sea to twelve miles could have consequences of importance with regard to the freedom of sea and air navigation. Freedom of the seas is of common benefit and clearly the principle must be given due consideration in dealing with the problem. Instead of having a general adoption of the twelve mile breadth for the territorial sea an alternative approach which would not affect the rights of navigation either by sea or by air would be to agree on a contiguous zone of twelve miles as recommended by the International Law Commission, but with the modification that it should cover fisheries as well. To be acceptable to Canada, the rights over fisheries accorded by such a zone would have to be as complete as those that would be afforded to the coastal state if territorial waters were extended to twelve miles."

6. In connection with preparations for the conference the Secretary-General of the United Nations has requested governments to let him have any provisional comments they wish to make on the International Law Commission's proposed rules. Ministers concerned in the late Government had agreed that Canada should submit comments on the following four aspects of the Commission's report of cardinal interest to Canada:

(a) The Breadth of the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone. The intention here was to reiterate the position taken by Canada at the Eleventh Session of the General Assembly.

(b) The Employment of Straight Baselines. The intention was to support the recommendation of the International Law Commission (which accords with the decision of the International Court of Justice in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case) that in appropriate cases states might measure their territorial sea from straight baselines drawn from headland to headland rather than from the sinuosities of the coastline.

(c) The Definition of the Seaward Boundary of the Continental Shelf. The International Law Commission has recommended a rule to the effect that "The coastal state exercises over the continental shelf sovereign rights for the purpose of exploring and exploiting its natural resources." The Commission recommends that the boundary of the shelf should be where the water over the shelf reaches a depth of 100 fathoms. Off the East Coast, the edge of the shelf is generally at a greater depth. The intention was to propose that the boundary of the shelf be its actual edge where it is well defined (as it is off Newfoundland and Labrador).

(d) The Régime for High Seas Fishing. Comments were submitted to the Secretary-General on the International Law Commission's suggested rules on high seas fishing on May 7, 1956. It was the intention to submit comments directed at modifying the proposed rules to protect adequately the interests of states, such as Canada, in

(a) coastal fisheries;

(b) high seas fisheries where those interests stem from investment of effort and money and compliance with self-denying ordinances aimed at conserving particular species in particular areas.

7. It is not essential that comments be put forward at this time. The Canadian position as it then was, on the breadth of the territorial sea and on the contiguous zone is already on the UN record as are Canadian comments on high seas fishing. The position on straight baselines coincides with the recommendations of the International Law Commission which are likely to be generally acceptable. Only our position on the boundary of the continental shelf is not a matter of public record. (It has been explained informally to United Kingdom, Australian and United States officials.) The advantage in putting comments forward is that the Canadian position will be included in the report on the provisional positions of Governments which the Secretary-General proposes to make available as part of the preparatory work for the proposed conference. This will facilitate any consultation with other Governments before the Conference which it may be deemed expedient to undertake. Since in his request for comments the Secretary-General has asked for "provisional" comments the Government would not be precluded from adopting modified views at a later date.

8. I recommend:³²

(a) that comments along the lines set forth in paragraph 5 be submitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations as the provisional views of Canada on the four points concerned, (a draft note for the purpose is attached);

(b) that the Interdepartmental Committee be directed to proceed with preparations for the International Conference and to submit a complete commentary for consideration by the Cabinet at a later date in regard to policy generally.

DOUGLAS S. HARKNESS

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet d'une note

Draft Note

No. _____ August ____ , 1957

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and has the honour to refer to Note No. LE 130(3)-9-2 dated March 25, 1957 from the Director of the Codification Division requesting any provisional comments which the Canadian Government might wish to make on the International Law Commission's final report on the Law of the Sea and related matters.

The Canadian Government desires to say that it considers that the increased interest of States in the exploitation of the resources of the sea and the consequent need for conservation and regulation of these resources along with the need to preserve the principle of the freedom of the seas calls for a reappraisal of the existing Law of the Sea and subsequent agreement on generally accepted rules, whether they be existing rules reaffirmed or revised or entirely new rules. Accordingly the Canadian Government welcomes the convoking of an international Conference to examine the Law of the Sea and proposes to be represented at this Conference, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the Secretary-General on April 17, 1957. Regarding the International Law Commission's Report on the Law of the Sea, the following are the views of the Canadian Government on some of the recommendations of the Commission:

(a) Breadth of the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone

The relevant recommendations of the International Law Commission are as follows:

³² Approuvé par le Cabinet le 27 août 1957. Pour le texte officiel de la lettre adressée au Secrétaire général le 10 septembre 1957, voir Chambre des Communes, Débats, volume II, 1957-1958, pp. 1737 à 1740.

Approved by Cabinet on August 27, 1957. For the official text of the letter to the Secretary-General dated September 10, 1957, see House of Commons, Debates, Volume II, 1957-58, pp. 1653-1656.

“Article 3:

1. The Commission recognizes that international practice is not uniform as regards the delimitation of the territorial sea.

2. The Commission considers that international law does not permit an extension of the territorial sea beyond twelve miles.

3. The Commission, without taking any decision as to the breadth of the territorial sea up to that limit, notes, on the one hand, that many States have fixed a breadth greater than three miles and, on the other hand, that many States do not recognize such a breadth when that of their own territorial sea is less.

4. The Commission considers that the breadth of the territorial sea should be fixed by an international conference.”

“Article 66:

1. In a zone of the high seas contiguous to its territorial sea, the coastal State may exercise the control necessary to

(a) Prevent infringement of its customs, fiscal or sanitary regulations within its territory or territorial sea;

(b) Punish infringement of the above regulations committed within its territory or territorial sea.

2. The contiguous zone may not extend beyond twelve miles from the baseline from which the breadth of the territorial sea is measured.”

The Canadian Government considers that any rules must meet the essential needs of coastal states. The 3-mile is not adequate for all purposes. It is not adequate for the enforcement of customs, fiscal and sanitary regulations. It is also not adequate for the protection and control of fisheries. The Commission has recognized in Article 66 (quoted above) the need for extended jurisdiction in respect of the enforcement of customs, fiscal and sanitary regulations. The Canadian Government considers it to be fully as important that the rules of international law should provide adequately for the regulation and control of fisheries off the coast of any state. One way of providing for this would be by accepting, for general application, the 12-mile breadth for the territorial sea. That would allow for complete fishery, customs, fiscal and sanitary control and regulation within that limit and dispense with the need for any provisions along the lines of those contained in Article 66. It is recognized, however, that a general extension of the breadth of the territorial sea to 12 miles could have consequences of importance with regard to the freedom of sea and air navigation. Instead, therefore, of having a general adoption of the 12-mile breadth for the territorial sea an alternative approach which would not affect the rights of navigation by sea or by air would be to agree on a contiguous zone of 12 miles as recommended by the Commission but with the modification that within that zone the coastal state should have the exclusive right of regulation and control of fishing. Rights over fisheries accorded by such a zone should, in the view of the Canadian Government, be as complete as those that are afforded to a coastal state within the limits of territorial waters.

(b) Straight Baselines

“Article 5:

1. Where circumstances necessitate a special régime because the coast is deeply indented or cut into or because there are islands in its immediate vicinity, the baseline may be independent of the low-water mark. In these cases, the method of straight baselines joining appropriate points may be employed. The drawing of such baselines must not depart to any appreciable extent from the general direction of the coast, and the sea areas lying within the lines must be sufficiently closely linked to the land domain to be subject to the régime of internal waters. Account may nevertheless be taken, where necessary, of economic interests peculiar to a region, the reality and importance of which are clearly evidenced by a long usage. Baselines shall not be drawn to and from drying rocks and drying shoals.

2. The coastal State shall give due publicity to the straight baselines drawn by it.

3. Where the establishment of a straight baseline has the effect of enclosing as internal waters areas which previously had been considered as part of the territorial sea or of the high seas, a right of innocent passage, as defined in Article 15, through those waters shall be recognized by the coastal State in all those cases where the waters have normally been used for international traffic."

This recommendation is acceptable to the Canadian Government as reflecting the decision of the International Court of Justice in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries Case. The Canadian Government agrees that the employment of straight baselines as outlined by the Commission should be recognized universally as being a proper means of establishing the datum-line for measuring the territorial sea or contiguous zone, in appropriate cases.

(c) Continental Shelf

"Article 67:

For the purposes of these articles, the term 'Continental Shelf' is used as referring to the seabed and subsoil of the submarine areas adjacent to the coast but outside the area of the territorial sea, to a depth of 200 metres (approximately 100 fathoms), or, beyond that limit, to where the depth of the superjacent waters admits of the exploitation of the natural resources of the said areas."

In its final report on the Law of the Sea (United Nations Document A/3159) the International Law Commission stated that it "accepted the idea that the coastal state may exercise control and jurisdiction over the continental shelf, with the proviso that such control and jurisdiction shall be exercised solely for the purpose of exploiting its resources . . ." The Commission believed, however, that the legal boundary of the continental shelf should be a fixed limit in terms of the depth of the superjacent waters because a boundary defined in terms of the admissibility of exploitation as the Commission's first draft of 1951 proposed, would "lack the necessary precision and might give rise to disputes and uncertainty". The 200-metre depth was selected by the Commission as the limit of the continental shelf because it considered that this depth is where the continental shelf in a geological sense "generally" comes to an end and that the limit proposed would be sufficient for all practical purposes at present.

Against the contingency that exploitation of the seabed at depths greater than 200 metres might prove technically possible the Commission recommended at its eighth session that the continental shelf in the legal sense might be considered as extending beyond the 200-metre depth mark to areas at greater depths where the superjacent waters admit of the exploitation of the resources of the seabed of these areas.

This additional provision reintroduces the uncertainty which led the Commission to favour a fixed limit in terms of the depth of superjacent waters for determining the legal boundary of the shelf. It is considered that the foreseeable possibilities of exploitation at greater depths than 200 metres might be provided for without sacrificing the element of certainty concerning the extent of States' rights to exploit the resources of the seabed. It is understood that in 90 percent of instances, excluding polar regions, the edge of the continental shelf is well-defined geographically. It is suggested, therefore, that in these cases the boundary of the shelf should be its actual edge. Where, however, the edge of the shelf is ill-defined or where there is no shelf in a geographical sense, the boundary might be set at such a depth as might satisfy foreseeable practical prospects of exploitation.

It should be added that this suggestion might also solve the special problem raised by the International Law Commission regarding submerged areas of a depth less than 200 metres which are separated from the main shelf by narrow channels. While the scarcity of soundings in many areas makes it impossible to be definite concerning the number of such submerged areas it is thought that if the actual edge of the shelf were considered to be the boundary, by far the greater number of these "islands" would then be included as part of the shelf and would so not create a special problem.

(d) High Seas Fishing

The Canadian government has the following comments with regard to the draft articles indicated:

Article 51

There is a possibility that in a given area the nationals of one state could be exploiting one kind of living marine resource and at the same time the nationals of another state could be exploiting another kind of resource. The Article, as presently drafted, does not seem to take account of such a situation. It refers to an area rather than to a particular resource. A more explicit statement appears to be desirable.

Article 52

The Article, as drafted, might be interpreted as applying only to a case where the nationals of two or more states fished the same stock or stocks of fish in any one area. In some instances, to provide adequate conservation measures it would be desirable to have them applied to the same stock of fish even though it were fished in different areas. A clarification in wording is therefore suggested.

The criterion suggested by the Commission (see paragraph I of its commentary to Article 52) for invoking the procedure envisaged in this Article is that a state be "regularly engaged in fishing." Under Article 53 an existing régime does not apply to a newcomer unless he is engaged in substantial fishing (see Paragraph 2 of the Commission's commentary on Article 53). It would seem reasonable therefore that under Article 52 a state ought only to be allowed to call for the establishment of a régime if it is engaged in substantial fishing, subject of course to Articles 54, 55 and 56.

Article 53

The Article, as drafted, would make conservation measures adopted pursuant to Articles 51 and 52 applicable to other states only in the case of fishing for the same stocks of fish in the same area. From the conservation point of view the provision is inadequate. It is the stocks of fish which must be protected regardless of the fact whether they are fished in the same area or not.

In paragraph 2 of the Commission's comment on this Article, it is stipulated that the regulations should be applicable to newcomers only if they engage in fishing on a scale which would substantially affect the stock or stocks in question. It would be preferable to have this stipulated in the Article, for instance, by adding after "any of the interested parties" in paragraph 2 of the Article the words, "engaged in the fishing on a substantial basis."

Article 56

Although there may, in certain circumstances, be some justification for a state not engaged in fishing in an area not contiguous to its coast requesting a fishing state to take certain conservation measures, care should be taken that this request would not extend to measures necessarily having to be taken within the boundaries of the fishing state. This Article, therefore, should be qualified to indicate that the fishing state would be under no obligation to take measures within its boundaries.

The Government of Canada is of the opinion that these Articles should be subject to the "abstention principle" which was considered at the Technical Conference on the Conservation of the Living Resources of the Sea held in Rome in 1955 and which is stated in the Report of the Conference (page 7, paragraphs 61-62) namely:

"61. A special case exists where countries, through research, regulation of their own fishermen and other activities, have restored or developed or maintained stocks of fish so that their productivity is being maintained and utilized at levels reasonably approximating their maximum sustainable productivity, and where the continuance of this level of productivity depends upon such sustained research and regulation. Under these conditions, the participation of additional States in the exploitation of the resource will yield no increase in food to mankind, but will threaten the success of the conservation programme. Where opportunities exist for a country or countries to develop or restore the productivity of resources, and where such development or restoration by the harvesting State or States is necessary to maintain the productivity of resources, conditions should be made favourable for such action.

"62. The International North Pacific Fishery Commission provides a method for handling the special case mentioned above. It was recognized that new entrants in such fisheries threatened the continued success of the conservation programme. Under these circumstances the State or States not participating in fishing the stocks in question agreed to abstain from such fishing when the Commission determines that the stock reasonably satisfies all the following conditions:

- (a) Evidence based upon scientific research indicates that more extensive exploitation of the stock will not provide a substantial increase in yield;
- (b) The exploitation of the stock is limited or otherwise regulated for conservation purposes by each party substantially engaging in its exploitation; and
- (c) The stock is the subject of extensive scientific study designed to discover whether it is being fully utilized, and what conditions are necessary for maintaining its maximum sustained productivity. The Convention provides that, when these conditions are satisfied, the States which have not engaged in substantial exploitation of the stock will be recommended to abstain from fishing such stock, while the States engaged in substantial exploitation will continue to carry out the necessary conservation measures. Meanwhile, the abstaining States may participate in fishing other stocks of fish in the same area."

All of the above comments are, of course, provisional at this stage. The fact that comments have not been submitted on other matters does not indicate that the remainder of the draft articles are necessarily acceptable to the Canadian government as they now stand. The comments are submitted with a view to facilitating the exchange of views among countries that will be essential in working out agreed provisions on the Law of the Sea.

38.

CEW/Vol. 3175

*Note pour l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*³³
*Memorandum for Ambassador in United States*³³

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington], December 20, 1957

MEETING — INTERNATIONAL LAW OF THE SEA

On December 3rd a meeting was held in New York between United States and Canadian officials for the purpose of exchanging informal views on questions relating to the conference on the Law of the Sea which is to commence in Geneva on February 24th, 1958. The representatives present at the meeting were:

United States

Mr. William Saunders, Co-ordinator, United States
 Preparations for the Conference on the Law of the Sea,
 Raymond T. Yingling, Assistant Legal Adviser, Department of State,
 Mr. William C. Herrington, Special Assistant to the Under-Secretary of State for Fisheries and Wildlife,
 Captain Wilfred A. Hearn, Judge Advocate General Staff, Navy.

Canada

Mr. Gordon Robertson, Deputy Minister, Northern Affairs and National Resources,
 Mr. S.V. Ozere, Assistant Deputy Minister, Fisheries,
 Mr. J.S. Nutt, Legal Division, Department of External Affairs,
 Mr. A.F. Broadbridge, Canadian Embassy, Washington.

2. Altogether, the meeting was, I think, most useful both to the Canadian delegation and to the United States delegation. There was a frank exchange of views and while in some instances no firm conclusions were reached, it was clear that view points had been frankly exchanged and that further sympathetic consideration of these would be made by both delegations on their return to Washington and Ottawa respectively.

3. The agenda for the New York meeting called for discussion of the following items:

- (a) International Law Commission Fishery Articles — including abstention, compulsory arbitration and criteria. (Report of the International Law Commission to the U.N. 1956)
- (b) Limits of the Territorial Sea
- (c) Contiguous Zones for Fisheries
- (d) Living Resources of the Continental Shelf
- (e) Conference Organization and Officers

4. The discussion on the first item was mainly of a technical nature and there was general agreement between the Canadian and United States representatives on the points raised. The position of the United States on conservation, arbitration and abstention are to a great extent covered in the attached appendices,† 1, 2 and 3. The discussions on these technical aspects will be dealt with in greater detail in the secretary's report. Considerable discussion was held in connection with Articles 53 and 55 of the Report of the International Law Commission. The United States delegation was particularly interested in the matter of violations by fishermen in areas where conversation is being practised. In this connection, the

³³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Interesting when you have time to look it over. AE R[itchie]

United States took the position that fishermen arrested for what, in effect, would be considered trespassing, must be handed over to their own country for trial. The United States could not permit its own fishermen to be tried by the court of another country. Mr. Robertson of the Canadian delegation questioned whether this would be considered practicable by some countries as there would be no guarantee that the United States, or any other country, would, in fact, prosecute. Mr. Herrington (US) replied that the arrest and handing over would cause sufficient delay in fishing operations to discourage further violations, whether or not prosecution followed. Mr. Robertson suggested that perhaps regulations could be written in the report concerning the penalties for first and second and third violations. Mr. Yingling (US) countered by saying that this would mean formulating international penal law, an act in which the United States Government would not wish to become involved. Mr. Robertson thought that the position of the United States might have merit, although he could see that there would be some difficulty in persuading certain Latin American and European states to agree to the United States procedure. The Canadian delegation proposed to recommend the United States procedure on arrest and trial to the Cabinet.

5. On the International Law Commission's Articles concerning arbitration (Articles 57, 58 and 59), there was also considerable discussion. The United States considered that an additional article on arbitration was necessary. Such an article should specify what criteria are necessary for the Arbitral Commission to reach a decision. Without such criteria the arbitral provisions are capable of such broad interpretation that they might easily lead to discussions within the Arbitral Commission not contemplated by the International Law Commission. In the main the Canadian delegation considered the criteria so outlined might be modified to some extent, but it was agreed that there was no great difference in views between the two governments.

6. On the matter of the limits of the Territorial Sea and the contiguous zones for fisheries, the United States chairman asked if the Canadian delegation would present the Canadian Government's views. Mr. Ozere pointed out that the Canadian Government had proposed a contiguous zone for fisheries, not as a conservation measure, but as a protection for small fishing operations. In these days there is always the fear of refrigerator ships from outside coming into coastal waters and by large scale modern methods putting the small operators out of business. Mr. Robertson added that the three-mile limit was not adequate for fisheries and that the 12-mile limit would, to some extent, meet Canadian requirements. The United States delegation countered with the argument that such industries as Japanese pearl fisheries would run into considerable difficulty under the 12-mile contiguous zone. Mr. Robertson replied that such special interests as Japanese pearl fisheries was a matter which would have to be given further consideration. Mr. Herrington (US) raised a point of whether Canada would be willing to have a 12-mile limit only where its economic importance to the country could be proved. He believed that there were a great many areas in the world where the fishing possibilities have not been exploited and therefore fencing off the ocean into 12-mile limits would not seem desirable. He thought the 12-mile contiguous zone might therefore be adopted in certain areas only. Mr. Robertson said that he did not consider this solution satisfactory because it was not possible to compare the economic importance of a particular area to a whole country. Fishing in Eastern Canada, for example, would probably be insignificant in terms of the national gross product, but was a most vital matter to the Maritimes. Mr. Herrington (US) said that the argument has been used by the proponents of the scheme that it should be of critical importance to the economy and cited Iceland as an example of a country which might benefit. The United Kingdom, on the other hand, he thought, would find it difficult to support the 12-mile contiguous zone.

Mr. Herrington added, however, that the 12-mile zone might be applicable to certain areas if conventions for such areas could be drawn up, and in this context he thought it might receive support at the Geneva Conference.

7. The position of the United States in support of the maintenance of the narrow breadth of the Territorial Sea is given in appendices 4† and 5.† Neither of these appendices, however, deal with the matter of fisheries and are mainly concerned with security. Therefore, despite the official United States view, the Canadian delegation felt that the United States might be realizing that there were advantages to the 12-mile contiguous zone, at least as far as fisheries were concerned, if only to act as a counter to the extension of the national coastal zone to 200 miles as advocated and, indeed, practised in certain areas in South America. The United States delegation also asked whether the Canadian Government had made any attempt to gain adherents to the 12-mile contiguous zone, and the Canadian delegation again felt that this might be an indication of United States interest. Indeed, this point raised by the American delegation prompted the Canadian delegation after the meeting to consider the advisability of promoting the plan. Some technical difficulties were foreseen, but the matter was to be studied in Ottawa immediately.

8. On the matter of the Continental Shelf there was very little discussion concerning the living resources but there was considerable discussion on the extent to which the resources, eg. minerals, oil, etc., might be considered within the national jurisdiction. The United States delegation suggested that it might be desirable to set the national limits of the Continental Shelf to a depth of 200 meters. The Canadian delegation pointed out that the floor of the Continental Shelf off the Canadian coast was uneven and it would be extremely difficult to prove with any exactitude where the Canadian interest ended. The Canadian delegation, therefore, favoured the plan of extending the country's limits to the point where the Continental Shelf ended. Mr. Yingling (US) expressed the view that limiting national jurisdiction to a depth of 200 meters was easily recognized and certainly covered a distance beyond present methods of exploitability. Mr. Robertson disagreed. He considered the 200-meter depth criterion artificial and much less desirable than a criterion based on geological and geographical fact. He also mentioned that there was every likelihood that in the development of new techniques it would be possible to explore beyond the 200 meter depth. In these circumstances, it would seem desirable to set the limit of national jurisdiction to the edge of the Continental Shelf.

9. The remaining part of the meeting was devoted to the question of organization of the conference and officers. This was a particularly desultory discussion since neither Canada nor the United States had formed any strong views. A few exploratory proposals were made concerning the committees and what nationals might serve on these committees. Nothing, however, was resolved and it was decided that each delegation would give this further consideration.

A.F. BROADBRIDGE

39.

DEA/9456-RW-40

*Le secrétaire du Bureau du Conseil privé
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Secretary, Privy Council Office,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

Ottawa, January 3, 1958

Dear Mr. Smith:

The attached memorandum is to be considered at the meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters that is to be held on Tuesday, January 7th, at 4:00 p.m., in Room 375, House of Commons. I understand that officials of your Department will be getting in touch with you in connection with this matter, if they have not already done so. I might also point out, for your information, that in the past the Ministers attending meetings of this Committee have in many instances been accompanied by their officials, who have been, for the most part, members of the Interdepartmental Committee that has been studying this general problem for several years.

Yours truly,

M.W. CUNNINGHAM

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du chef du Comité interministériel sur les eaux territoriales pour le Comité du Cabinet sur les eaux territoriales

Memorandum from Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters, to Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa], January 2, 1958

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — CANADIAN POSITION

I. DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND U.S. OFFICIALS

On December 3, in New York, Canadian officials met with United States officials at the latter's request for the purpose of exchanging informal views on some of the important questions to be dealt with at the International Conference on the Law of the Sea which commences on February 24, 1958 in Geneva. The discussions were concerned primarily with three inter-related matters:

The breadth of the territorial sea,
The contiguous zone for fisheries, and High Seas fishing.

These questions were the subject of comments which were sent by the Canadian Government on September 12 to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. These comments have since been published by the Secretary-General and were also published in Hansard on November 28, 1957. These comments are set out in the appendix to the memorandum to Cabinet of August 12, 1957, which is attached for the background information of Ministers.

Canadian Government Comments on Breadth of the Territorial Sea

2. In respect of the breadth of the territorial sea the Government's comments to the Secretary-General were that the 3-mile limit is no longer adequate for all purposes and in particular it is not adequate for the protection and control of fisheries. It was suggested that one solution to this problem would be to extend the territorial limit to 12 miles. An alternative which would safeguard the present position with regard to sea and air navigation would be to retain the old 3-mile limit and grant to coastal States the exclusive control over fisheries in the 12-mile contiguous zone which is already widely accepted for the purpose of exercising customs, fiscal and sanitary jurisdiction.

3. These Canadian proposals are motivated in part by the desire to see adopted some rule of general application. The present state of international law, in so far as the breadth of the territorial sea is concerned, is chaotic, there being, in the word of the International Law Commission of the General Assembly, no uniform practice as regards the delimitation of the territorial sea. At the same time the Commission has said that international law does not recognize a limit greater than 12 miles. In fact, apart from the extreme practice of Chile, Peru and Ecuador who claim jurisdiction out to 200 miles from their shores, the widest limit claimed seems to be 12 miles. The proposals also have significance in a purely Canadian context. Off the coast of Nova Scotia, large Canadian draggers have been prohibited from a zone within 12 miles of the coast in the interests of smaller Canadian fishing vessels. In recent years foreign draggers, particularly American draggers, have been fishing within this 12-mile limit. This has naturally caused a good deal of ill-feeling. If there were international agreement on a 12-mile limit for the territorial sea or a 12-mile contiguous zone in which the coastal State could exercise exclusive control over fisheries, foreign fishermen could be excluded from the coast of Nova Scotia, although it would still be necessary to recognize US and French rights guaranteed by treaties, whereby they may fish up to the shore on the west coast of Newfoundland and Labrador. The alternative proposal to retain the 3-mile limit for navigation but to support the adoption of a rule which would see coastal States having exclusive fishery rights within the 12-mile contiguous zone arose from our desire to accommodate as far as possible the US and UK view that a universal 12-mile territorial water limit would have very serious security implications.

Canadian Government Comments on High Seas Fisheries

4. Regarding high seas fisheries the Canadian Government's comments to the Secretary-General have under-written support of the so-called abstention principle. Under this principle, where the maximum sustainable yield of a particular high seas fishery is being maintained only as a result of research, regulation of their own fishermen and other activities of one or more States, third States which have not participated within recent times in the fishing would abstain from the fishery. This principle was incorporated in the North Pacific Fisheries Convention between the United States, Japan and Canada — Japan being the major abstainer. The principle is not widely supported since it is principally applicable only to the unique case of fisheries in the North Pacific developed by Canada and the United States. Another aspect of high seas fishing, which was not actually mentioned in our comments but which is important to States like Canada having fisheries off their shores, relates to the International Law Commission's recognition that the coastal State has a special interest in the maintenance of the productivity of the living resources in any area of high seas adjacent to its territorial sea, and that States have the right in certain instances to adopt unilateral measures of conservation on the high seas adjacent to their coast, subject to compulsory arbitration.

U.S. Suggestion re Canadian Comments

5. Our compromise proposal, that is, the retention of the 3-mile limit but with a 12-mile limit for fisheries, has appeared until recently to be no more acceptable to the United States than the proposal that the territorial sea should be extended to 12 miles. However, on the basis of the informal views expressed at the recent meeting, there is evidence of some modification of the United States position. They are still unalterably opposed for security reasons to extending the territorial sea. A further reason which they are reluctant to admit, appears to be that there are important United States shrimp fishery interests off the Coast of Mexico between the 3 and 12-mile limit which would be affected by either an extension of the territorial sea or by the adoption of a rule recognizing a State's exclusive right of control over fisheries in a 12-mile contiguous zone. Similarly, we think United States fears for the exclusion of their fisheries from Canadian Coastal waters. On the basis of the wide consultations they are carrying out it appears that the US are concerned for the general acceptability of the abstention principle. Furthermore, and presumably as a bargaining measure, they are not at present prepared to accept the International Law Commission's provision that in certain circumstances the coastal State may have the right to unilaterally prescribe conservation measures on the high seas adjacent to its coast. The chief new development in the American position, as outlined in these informal discussions, was a suggestion that our proposal for a 12-mile contiguous zone in which States would have exclusive control over fisheries, might be more acceptable if it were to have regional rather than general application. In sum the suggestion is that where the economic interests of the coastal area in question can be demonstrated to depend upon the resources of the adjacent sea, a case might be made for a 12-mile contiguous zone in that particular area, wherein the exclusive control of fishing would ensure to the State in question. Such a principle would at least have a parallel in that enunciated by the International Court of Justice in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case where Norway's right to employ the straight baseline system on a portion of its coast was considered justified primarily for geographical reasons, but also because of the economic dependence of the particular coastal regions on the waters enclosed by the straight baselines. Canadian officials expressed their interest in the variant of our proposal put forward by US officials and promised to consider it further.

6. At the forthcoming Conference, if any general agreement is to be reached on some of the more important aspects of the law of the sea, participating States will have to be prepared to modify positions taken at the beginning of the Conference. It would seem worthwhile, therefore, for the proposal made by the United States to be considered in its possible application to the Canadian coastline. It was suggested by Canadian officials that the economic dependence of Nova Scotia and particularly the island of Newfoundland on the offshore fisheries would probably warrant application of the scheme to those coasts. It is for consideration whether the same could be said of the West Coast or whether there, where the salmon fishery is paramount, a suitable régime involving the principle of abstention might not better serve the fishing industry in that part of Canada. This would leave the status quo on the Coast of Labrador and the Arctic Archipelago in so far as the application of the 12-mile contiguous zone is concerned.

II. DISCUSSION WITH U.K. GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

7. We are aware that the United Kingdom Government is concerned over the Canadian proposal. Informal meetings have been held with officials as late as August of this year when there was a meeting of officials of all Commonwealth countries in London, but none have been held since the Government decided to send its comments to the Secretary-General in September. United Kingdom authorities have been heard to contend that if the United Kingdom were excluded from within 12 miles of the coast of other States the United Kingdom fishing industry would be ruined. In view of the position Canada proposes to take at the Conference it would seem highly desirable to compare notes as carefully as possible with the United Kingdom authorities before the Conference, particularly since initial positions of Canada and the UK on some of the more important aspects of the work of the Conference may be diametrically opposed. Because of the complicated background to this question it is suggested that it would be preferable to have this consultation carried out first-hand in London by officials familiar with the problem. Besides these bilateral talks with UK officials it is extremely likely that the latter will also convene another meeting of Commonwealth officials.

III. COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

8. Another question not relating to the substance of matters to be dealt with at the Conference but which will require the early consideration of the Government is the composition of the Canadian delegation to the Conference. According to the United States officials they expect that their delegation will be chaired by an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior, who may not stay for the duration of the Conference, which will be nine weeks. The five working committees of the Conference would presumably be presided over by experts from the various departments of the US Government concerned. US officials also expect that the United States fishing industry will be represented on the Delegation with advisory status. According to our information the United Kingdom Delegation will have a ministerial head, possibly a Law Officer or one of the Foreign Office Ministers of State who would not stay long. The continuing leader of the Delegation will be Sir Gerald Fitzmaurice, the Legal Adviser of the Foreign Office. There will also be a representative of ambassador status and an Under-Secretary (Fisheries) along with experts and advisers from various interested government departments. We have no information that the British fishing industry will be represented.

9. It is suggested that the Cabinet Committee might wish to consider the advisability of it being recommended to the Government that the Canadian Delegation be chaired by a Cabinet Minister in view of the importance for Canada of the matters of substance with which the Conference will deal. The Vice-Chairman of the Delegation might be myself or Mr. Marcel Cadieux, Legal Adviser of the Department of External Affairs. (The position might possibly be covered by both on an alternating basis, since attendance for the full length of the Conference might be difficult in the light of departmental requirements at Ottawa.) Other representatives might be Mr. S.V. Ozere, Assistant Deputy Minister of Fisheries, an official from the Department of Transport, and Professor G.F. Curtis, Dean of the School of Law, University of British Columbia. Professor Curtis was retained by the Government in 1952 to advise the Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters on the principal changes of doctrine that might affect Canadian law on, or claims to, territorial waters and assess the degree and character of the possible application of various rules to Canada. Professor Curtis submitted a confidential report to the Interdepartmental Committee in 1955. He is also advising the Interdepartmental Committee on a supplementary report which is now being prepared on the status of the waters of the Arctic Archipelago. It is considered that Professor Curtis' knowledge of the matters to be dealt with at the Conference would be invaluable to the Canadian Delegation. Professor Curtis would be available to serve on the Delegation if the Government desired to invite him. Advisers and experts for the Delegation would have to be drawn from various Departments.

10. The question of industry representation (both fishing and shipping) may well be raised, either by the employers or the unions. It might be difficult to appoint representatives of one industry and not the other, though the fisheries questions are at the moment probably of greater importance to Canada. It would be difficult to appoint a representative of an employers association and not of a union. On the West Coast the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union is dominated by Communists so that this could prove embarrassing. Assuming it were decided that the fishing industry ought to be represented on a Canadian Government Delegation, an alternative might be to have a representative of the Fisheries Council of Canada appointed to the Delegation in some capacity. This is a national organization of producers (including cooperatives) and processors. While the West Coast Union could be expected to object to the National Council being represented an answer would be that the matters to be dealt with at the Conference are of national importance and that while the Government is prepared to have representatives of the industry attached to the delegation, it believed only national — as opposed to regional — organizations should qualify. It should be borne in mind that the Government agreed that two representatives of the Canadian Maritime Law Association, a private association, should serve as advisers to the Canadian Delegation to the Maritime Law Conference which was held in Brussels last summer. In a sense this could be considered to be a precedent for the contention that national associations concerned with the subject matter of a conference on which the Canadian Government is represented, might, in special circumstances, be considered as having some claim to being accorded the privilege of sending an expert to the Conference at government expense.

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS

11. In sum it is suggested:³⁴

(a) that consideration be given to the acceptability to Canada of the application of contiguous zones for fishing on a regional rather than a universal basis, using as a criterion for their application the economic dependence of the coastal regions in question on the living resources of the waters immediately adjacent to the coast;

(b) that it be proposed to United Kingdom officials that informal discussions with Canadian officials take place in London (perhaps en route to the Conference) on the following matters which will be dealt with at the Conference:

- (i) Breadth of the territorial sea;
- (ii) Contiguous zones for fishing;
- (iii) High seas fishing;
- (iv) Continental shelf boundaries and resources.

(c) that the Cabinet Committee submit to the Government as soon as possible recommendations concerning the composition of the Canadian Delegation to the International Conference on the Law of the Sea.

R.G. ROBERTSON

³⁴ À sa réunion du 7 janvier 1958, le Comité du Cabinet sur les eaux territoriales convenait de présenter au Cabinet des recommandations correspondant au contenu de cette note. Voir le document suivant.

At its meeting of January 7, 1958, the Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters agreed to make recommendations to Cabinet along the lines of this memorandum. See next document.

40.

PCO

*Note du chef du Comité du Cabinet sur les eaux territoriales
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Chairman, Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters,
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 10-58

[Ottawa], January 9, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

I. COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

The Geneva Conference is to open on February 24 and is expected to last for nine weeks. The following suggestions regarding the composition of the Delegation are submitted for consideration and decision:

Chairman—Because decisions of substance may have to be made on short notice, particularly during the latter half of the Conference, it would be desirable to have a member of the Government designated as Chairman of the Delegation. If this is not feasible a Parliamentary Assistant might be designated. Another possibility would be to have the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom appointed Chairman. Although desirable, it would not be essential for the Chairman to be present for the full nine weeks the Conference will meet.

Vice-Chairman—It is suggested that a senior official be designated as Vice-Chairman. Because of the considerable length of the Conference and the fact that appropriate officials have other official commitments, it does not appear feasible to have any one official designated in this capacity for the duration of the Conference. It is suggested that all of the following be designated as Delegates on the understanding that each would serve as Vice-Chairman as he might be available:

Mr. M.H. Wershof, Permanent Canadian Representative to the European Office of the United Nations in Geneva

Mr. Marcel Cadieux, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Mr. R.G. Robertson, Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources

Delegates and Advisers—There will be five main working committees of the Conference, three of which will be meeting at any one particular time. Four of these committees are important from a Canadian point of view and it would seem desirable to have a spokesman available for each of these. It is therefore suggested that the following persons be designated as additional delegates:

Mr. S.V. Ozere, Assistant Deputy Minister of Fisheries

Mr. L.J. Leavey, Canadian Maritime Commission, and

Professor G.F. Curtis, Dean of the Law School of the University of British Columbia. Professor Curtis was retained by the Canadian Government in 1952 to advise the Inter-Departmental Committee on Territorial Waters on the principal changes of doctrine that might affect Canadian law on, or claims to, territorial waters, and assess the degree and character of the possible application of various rules to Canada. Professor Curtis submitted a confidential report to the Inter-Departmental Committee in 1955. He is also advising the Inter-Departmental Committee on a supplementary report which is now being prepared on the status of the waters of the Arctic Archipelago. Professor Curtis would receive as a delegate the same remuneration he has been receiving for the above-mentioned services to the Government, i.e., $40 a working day and living and travelling expenses.

It is proposed to draw approximately six additional officials from the Permanent Mission in Geneva and Departments in Ottawa to act in the capacity of adviser, expert or secretary of the Delegation.

II CANADIAN PROPOSAL RE CONTIGUOUS ZONE

On August 27, 1957, the Cabinet agreed that the comments of the Canadian Government on certain of the draft articles on the Law of the Sea prepared by the International Law Commission should be submitted to the Secretary General for publication in the preparatory documents of the Conference on the Law of the Sea, which will meet in Geneva on February 24 next. A copy of these comments is attached. Regarding the breadth of the territorial sea, the comments stated that the 3-mile limit was no longer adequate for the protection and control of fisheries. It was suggested that one solution to this problem would be to extend the territorial limit to 12 miles. An alternative, which would safeguard the present position with regard to sea and air navigation, would be to retain the old 3-mile territorial limit and grant to coastal states the exclusive control over fisheries in the 12-mile contiguous zone which is already widely accepted for the purpose of exercising customs, fiscal and sanitary jurisdiction.

It is expected that the initial position of the United States and the United Kingdom at the Conference will be to retain the 3-mile territorial limit. In talks with Canadian officials, U.S. officials have suggested that the Canadian proposal might be more acceptable if it were to have regional rather than a general application. In sum, the U.S. suggestion was that where the economic interests of the coastal area in question depend upon the resources of the adjacent sea, a case might be made for a 12-mile contiguous zone in that particular area, wherein the state in question would enjoy exclusive control of fishing. For example, the economic dependence of Nova Scotia and particularly of the island of Newfoundland on the offshore fisheries would warrant application of such a scheme to those coasts. On the other hand, this very likely could not be said of the coast of Labrador or the perimeter of the Arctic Archipelago under present conditions. Whether such a scheme would apply to the West Coast of Canada would be a question of interpretation and application of the scheme as it might finally be evolved. On the West Coast where the salmon fishery is paramount, the so-called principle of abstention is probably of more importance to the fishing industry than a 12-mile contiguous zone. According to the principle of abstention, which was advocated by the Government in the comments to the Secretary General, states not already engaged in a utilized fishery, for instance the salmon fisheries of the North Pacific, would under certain prescribed conditions agree not to enter the fishery.

Recommendation

It is suggested that the Canadian Delegation might be instructed ad referendum that a scheme for 12-mile contiguous fishing zones to be applied on a regional basis, might be considered acceptable in principle to Canada as an alternative position should such a proposal seem likely to command wide acceptance, including that of such countries as the United Kingdom and United States.

ALVIN HAMILTON

41.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 16, 1958

Present:

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in the Chair,
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
 The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer),
 The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
 The Minister of Justice and
 Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton),
 The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan),
 The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness),
 The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr),
 The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Browne),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
 The Minister of Northern Affairs and
 National Resources (Mr. Alvin Hamilton),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Assistant Secretaries to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier), (Mr. Martin).

. . .

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA
 (PREVIOUS REFERENCE AUG. 27)

18. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that an International Conference on the Law of the Sea would open in Geneva on February 24th and was expected to last for about nine weeks. Approximately 70 countries would be represented. He recalled that the government had submitted its views to the Secretary General of the United Nations on certain of the draft articles on the law of the sea prepared by the International Law Commission. Regarding the breadth of the territorial sea, Canada had stated that the 3-mile limit was no longer adequate for the protection and control of fisheries and had suggested that one solution to this problem might be to extend the territorial limit to 12 miles. An alternative would be to retain the old 3-mile territorial limit and grant to coastal states the exclusive control over fisheries in the 12-mile contiguous zone which was already widely accepted for the purpose of exercising customs, fiscal, and sanitary jurisdiction.

In connection with the composition of the delegation, the Minister submitted the following suggestions:

(a) Chairman—Because decisions of substance might have to be made on short notice, it would be desirable to have a member of the government as chairman of the delegation. If this were not feasible, a parliamentary assistant might be designated. Another possibility would be to use the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom.

(b) Vice-Chairman—This should be a senior official. Owing to the length of the conference, it was suggested that all of the following might be named delegates on the understanding that each would serve as vice-chairman as available:

Mr. M.H. Wershof, Permanent Canadian Representative to the European Office of the United Nations in Geneva;

Mr. Marcel Cadieux, Assistant Under Secretary of State for External Affairs (he would be available to attend the first part of the conference); and,

Mr. R.G. Robertson, Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

(c) A number of persons should be named as additional delegates; among them Professor G.F. Curtis, Dean of the Law School of the University of British Columbia, who had been advisor for some time now to the Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters on such matters as the principal changes of doctrine that might affect Canadian law on, or claims to, territorial waters. As a delegate he might get the same remuneration as for his previous services to the government.

19. Mr. Alvin Hamilton, as Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters, reported that the expected initial position of the United States and the United Kingdom at the conference would be to retain the 3-mile territorial limit. In conversation with Canadian officials, U.S. officials have suggested that the Canadian proposal might be more acceptable if it were to have regional rather than a general application. They suggested that, where the economic interests of the coastal area in question depended upon the resources of the adjacent sea, a case might be made for a 12-mile contiguous zone in that particular area, wherein the state in question would enjoy exclusive control of fishing. This suggestion might have an appeal in the Atlantic Provinces. On the other hand, this might not be so on the west coast where the salmon fishery was paramount and where the so-called principle of abstention was probably of more importance to the industry than a 12-mile contiguous zone. The abstention principle had been advocated by the government in the comments submitted to the Secretary General.

He recommended that the Canadian delegation be instructed that a scheme for 12-mile contiguous fishing zones, to be applied on a regional basis, might be considered acceptable in principle to Canada as an alternative position, should such a proposal seem likely to command wide acceptance, including that of such countries as the U.K. and U.S.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated, (Minister's memorandum, Jan. 9, 1958-Cab. Doc. 10-58)

20. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) Owing to the present parliamentary situation it might not be feasible to have a member of the government or a parliamentary assistant as chairman of the delegation, at least during the early stage of the conference. The High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom might be asked to take on the duties of chairman on a pro tem basis, it being understood, that, as soon as the situation made the presence of a member of the government possible, he would replace Mr. Drew at the conference.

(b) If Canada were to accept the U.S. suggestion that the 12 mile contiguous zone proposal have a regional rather than a general application, there might be difficulties encountered in connection with the definition of regions.

(c) Discussions on the problem of the continental shelf did not appear likely to raise difficulties. It should be pointed out that, in the long run, the interests of Canada would lie more on the resources of the continental shelf than on those of the territorial sea.

(d) The U.K. and the U.S. have already taken a stand against the 12-mile contiguous zone. The U.S.S.R., however, appeared in favour. Canada's role would be not to get involved in a big power struggle but to seek her own economic advantage.

(e) There would appear to be some value in the Canadian delegation being instructed now to adhere to the proposal regarding the contiguous zone already submitted to the Secretary General. Should this proposal meet with opposition, the delegation should be requested to communicate with the government.

(f) The delegation should not let it be known for the time being that it might, if necessary, accept the alternative proposal suggested by the United States. Before agreeing to it, however, the delegation should be sure that the regions in Canada to which the U.S. alternative would apply were clearly defined.

21. The Cabinet noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and of Mr. A. Hamilton, Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters, in connection with the forthcoming International Conference on the Law of the Sea at Geneva and,

(a) agreed that the Honourable George Drew, Canadian High Commissioner in London, be asked to take on the responsibility of chairman of the Canadian delegation on a pro tem basis, until such time as it was found possible to replace him by a member of the government;

(b) approved the recommendation that certain senior officials be designated as delegates on the understanding that each would serve as vice-chairman as he might be available;

(c) agreed that Professor G.F. Curtis, Dean of the Law School of the University of British Columbia, be designated as an additional delegate and receive a remuneration of $40 a working day together with living and travelling expenses; and,

(d) agreed that the Canadian delegation be instructed:

(i) to adhere to the position regarding the contiguous zone as already outlined in the Canadian submission to the Secretary General;

(ii) to seek further instructions from the government should this position meet with strong opposition or if some other proposals were put forward during the conference; and,

(iii) to avoid commitments with the United Kingdom or the United States prior to the conference.

...

42. DEA/9456-RW-40

*La Direction juridique
au chef du Comité interministériel sur les eaux territoriales Legal Division to Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters*

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

Ottawa, January 27, 1958

Dear Mr. Robertson,

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — CONSULTATION WITH UNITED KINGDOM OFFICIALS

I attach a copy of a memorandum signed by Mr. Ozere and myself outlining our recent informal conversations in New York with Mr. Vincent Evans, Legal Adviser of the United Kingdom Mission to the United Nations concerning the forthcoming Conference on the Law of the Sea and the Canadian position regarding some of the matters which will be taken up at the Conference. You will recall that this meeting was arranged pursuant to instructions of the Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters at its most recent meeting.

I have sent a copy of this memorandum to the Secretary of the Interdepartmental Committee in the event that you wish to have it prepared for the information of the Cabinet Committee.

Yours sincerely,
J.S. NUTT

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du sous-ministre adjoint du ministère des Pêcheries et de la Direction juridique

Memorandum by Assistant Deputy Minister of Fisheries and by Legal Division

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa], January 24, 1958

CONSULTATION WITH UNITED KINGDOM OFFICIALS REGARDING CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

Pursuant to instructions of the Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters, the undersigned, S.V. Ozere, Assistant Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and J.S. Nutt, Department of External Affairs, held informal discussions on matters relating to the Conference on the Law of the Sea with Mr. Vincent Evans, Legal Adviser to the United Kingdom Permanent Mission to the United Nations. The meeting was held at the United Kingdom Mission in New York. The following topics were discussed:

1. Breadth of the territorial sea and contiguous zones for fishing: We referred to the Canadian views set forth in the Government's provisional comments to the Secretary General on this subject (cf. Note No. 17 dated September 10, 1957 attached) and said that the views expressed in these comments would be the initial position of the Canadian Government at the forthcoming Conference. Mr. Evans replied that the United Kingdom Government was very much distressed with the Canadian position. He said that if the Canadian proposal were accepted it would mean that the United Kingdom would suffer a loss of 40% of its catch off Iceland and the overall loss of catch in the British fishing industry would be 20% which the United Kingdom Government considered would be "disastrous" to the fishing industry. Evans said that the United Kingdom Government still has hopes of holding the line at three miles for the territorial sea plus a contiguous zone for fiscal, sanitary and customs purposes and fishing articles generally as recommended by the International Law Commission and "fervently" hopes that a similar settlement would be acceptable to Canada. Evans did not think that a regional application of 12 miles contiguous zones for fishing based on the economic dependence of the coastal area in question on the off-shore fisheries would in any way begin to meet the UK position since their fishing is done off coasts which might qualify under such a scheme for application for 12-mile contiguous zones for fishing.

Evans asked what were our reasons from a domestic point of view for desiring to have exclusive control over fishing out to 12 miles. This was explained along the following lines:

(1) Having a 12-mile zone in which Canada could exercise exclusive control over fisheries would facilitate conservation over certain stocks of in-shore fish;

(2) On the East Coast we have a situation where Canadian draggers are excluded from fishing within twelve miles of the coast of Nova Scotia. The reason for this legislation is to protect the in-shore fishermen using stationary nets. Since the war foreign draggers, particularly American draggers, have appeared within the 12-mile limit. This is resented by the fishermen who fish in the in-shore waters and by the Canadian draggers which are not allowed to fish where foreign draggers can fish. A 12-mile contiguous zone for fishing would bring about a solution to this problem. A 12-mile fishing limit on the East Coast would also reserve to Canada virtually the whole of the lobster fishery in that area which at the moment is carried on only by Canadian fishermen;

(3) On the West Coast of Canada the problem is primarily one of protecting the salmon fisheries. The abstention principle is the present answer to this problem. Under the North Pacific Fisheries Convention Japan agreed to abstain from taking salmon in areas of the eastern Pacific prescribed in the Convention. If this Convention were abrogated a 12-mile limit or even a 200-mile limit would not be sufficient to protect Canadian interests in the salmon fishery. It is for this reason that the gaining of some international recognition for the abstention principle is of pre-eminent importance to Canada on the West Coast. The significance of the 12-mile limit to West Coast fishermen stems from the fact that they do not fish within 12 miles of the coasts of the United States while American fishermen do fish within 12 miles of the coast of British Columbia for other species than salmon. There is therefore an interest in reserving this area to Canadian fishermen not only vis-à-vis United States fishermen but vis-à-vis other fishermen, for instance Japanese who may, depending upon the future of the North Pacific Fisheries Convention, some day venture into waters adjacent to the coast of British Columbia.

Evans' reply to this explanation was that it seemed to him that the specific fisheries problems on the East and West Coasts might be settled without there necessarily having to be a 12-mile limit. (At a previous informal meeting between Canadian, UK and US officials, at which Evans was present, a US official had suggested that the East Coast trawler problem might be worked out under the North Atlantic Fisheries Convention). The general interest in conservation which we had referred to would be taken care of adequately he thought by the International Law Commission's recommendations on fishing. We conceded that his first point was within the realm of possibility and that a suitable fishing régime might adequately provide for conversation. We pointed out that even assuming that the Canadian position were more to the liking of the United Kingdom, the fact had to be faced that many other countries were concerned with extending the region in which they might enjoy exclusive fishing rights. We asked how the United Kingdom expected to cope with this situation. Evans replied that the United Kingdom and the US hoped to be able to persuade other States as they are trying to persuade us. It is doubtful whether much faith is placed in the success of this endeavour for Evans went on to say that the United Kingdom realizes that it might have to compromise. However, if Canada presses too hard for its position at the beginning of the Conference it may well prejudice acceptance of the proposal as a compromise. This is the same line that Evans took at a meeting over a year ago and it was not clear whether he was just throwing this point in for good measure or whether he was under specific instructions to raise it again. If the latter is the case it indicates that the tactical aspects are the real concern of the UK given the fact of the Conference, and that the UK is probably resigned to cutting its losses if general agreement is to be had but they prefer to work towards a compromise and not announce it at the beginning of the Conference.

That the UK is resigned to the possibility of having to cut its losses in the interest of general agreement at the Conference and that its "distress" at the Canadian position is therefore not to be taken as lying entirely at the Canadian doorstep, may further be borne out by Evans' enquiry what the Canadian attitude might be to a six-mile territorial sea limit. (However, here again it was not clear whether he was just throwing out this suggestion or acting on instructions). The Legal Adviser of the Foreign Office mentioned privately to Mr. Nutt last summer that the United Kingdom might be willing to compromise on a six-mile territorial sea so it may well be that the UK is now prepared, if necessary, to accept six miles. We replied that the Canadian Government had not given any consideration to such proposal. A six-mile limit along with a suitable agreement regarding trawlers on the East Coast might prove acceptable to Canada assuming that there were general agreement at the Conference on such a proposal.

We asked Evans whether he had any information concerning the United Kingdom's attitude to the abstention principle regarding which in the past they have had doubts. Evans said that he had no instructions on the abstention principle. We said that Canada might have some difficulty accepting the fishing articles unless something along the lines of the abstention principle were acceptable. We were aware that the general acceptance of this principle was a doubtful possibility. Evans thought and we agreed that if a generally acceptable régime for high seas fishing could be worked out first the problem of the breadth of the territorial sea would prove less difficult to solve.

2. Straight Baselines: Evans called attention to the Foreign Office's informal comments on the Canadian comments to the Secretary General³⁵ on this subject (Letter to Canada House January 9, 1958 attached),† where the Foreign Office had said that it had no comment to make. He recalled that the United Kingdom comments which have been submitted to the Secretary General raised again the question of limiting the length of baselines. We said that since the existing recommendation of the Commission is based upon the decision of the International Court of Justice in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, we could not favour any arbitrary limitation on the length of baselines.

3. Continental Shelf: UK officials are studying the Canadian suggestion that the legal edge of the continental shelf should be its natural edge wherever this is well defined. At the same time the Foreign Office pointed out in its informal comments on our comments that it is the factor of exploitability in a greater or lesser degree which has led to the development of the whole of the continental shelf doctrine. It is not so much because there is a definite area involved, as because this area is, generally speaking, exploitable. Given that the right to the continental shelf involves no rights in respect of the waters above the shelf the UK feels that there are certain advantages in not relating the matter too much to any definite area as such.

Regarding resources of the continental shelf we said that we thought Canada could probably go along with the recommendation of the Commission that the only living resources of the seabed which would be treated as resources of the seabed under the continental shelf doctrine would be those permanently attached to the seabed and would not include for instance crustaceans.

4. The Indonesian Claim: Evans agreed that such specific issues as the Indonesian claim ought not to be discussed at the Conference other than in the context of the discussion of principles and rules. He mentioned that the United Kingdom Government had protested the Indonesian claim and asked why we had been reluctant to do so. We explained we had not wished to take any action at this time which might prejudice our position in the Arctic Archipelago. Evans then asked whether we had claimed the interconnecting waters of the ³⁵ Voir le document 37, note 32. See Document 37, footnote 32.

Arctic Archipelago. He was informed that Canada had made no unequivocal claim to the waters of the archipelago as such but he was referred to the statement of the then Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent, in the House of Commons on April 5, 1957. We added that we thought that a good case could be made for considering the waters to be internal waters. Evans said that he thought that if we were to make a definite claim to these waters the United Kingdom Government would be very much concerned though he did not specify exactly what action they would take. He then asked how we thought the Canadian Archipelago could be distinguished from the Indonesian Archipelago. We pointed out that first of all, geographically, the two situations were different. The Arctic Archipelago was an extension of the Canadian mainland. Furthermore, for a greater part of the year it was almost physically one with the mainland since the interconnecting waters were frozen over for a good part of the year. This was not so of the Indonesian Archipelago. Furthermore, the Indonesian claim encompassed seas, i.e. the Banda Sea and the Java Sea, which we thought had been international seaways for many years. While limited shipping was feasible in the Arctic Archipelago at the height of the summer months to serve certain bases, there was at present no question of its waterways being capable of being used as seaways for international commerce. We did not know whether the Indonesian claim intruded on the rights of free passage enjoyed heretofore by civil and military air traffic. If they did then this was another distinction. If the waters of the Canadian Archipelago were treated as internal waters this would certainly not affect existing rights of civil aircraft at any rate, since by the time they were flying over these waters on any recognized air route they had already had to fly over Canadian territory and thus conform to Canadian regulations.

5. Election of Officers for the Conference: It is proposed in the provisional rules of procedure for the Conference that there be a General Committee of 15 members, comprising the President of the Conference, the Chairman of the five main committees, and nine Vice-Presidents. Evans said that they had hoped that a suitable Western European candidate might have appeared as a candidate for the President of the Conference in view of the fact that the Conference is to be held in Europe. He said one had not materialized and that the name of Prince Wan of Thailand had come up. Evans said that both the UK and the US had agreed to Wan's candidacy and that Wan himself was prepared to accept. Prince Wan has been President of the General Assembly and though not an expert on the law of the sea, he is a lawyer. Additionally it had been previously thought that there would be some desire by the Afro-Asians to have an Afro-Asian as President. We thought that this looked like a happy solution to that problem and that we should be able to support Wan's candidature.

For chairman of the main committees Evans thought that the distribution should be geographically along the following lines: Old Commonwealth, West European, East European, Middle East and Latin America. The Czechs were interested in chairing the committee on the rights of land-locked states and would put up either Professor Zourek or Dr. Petrezelke, their Ambassador in Washington, who had had considerable UN experience. Evans said that he thought the UK would agree with this and I said that I thought we also would be able to go along with such a suggestion. Evans' view was that the committee on the territorial sea and contiguous zone and the two Committees on the high seas (general régime and fishing régime) should be chaired by the Old Commonwealth, West European and Latin American candidates, not necessarily in that order. He said the name of Professor Bailey of Australia had been mentioned but that he was not sure whether he had agreed to stand as a candidate. We said that we would welcome Bailey's candidature. Evans asked if we had anyone who would be available to be chairman of a committee; we replied that we thought not. The obvious Latin American candidate was Dr. Garcia Amador of Cuba. He has been Chairman of the International Law Commission and has served for many years at sessions of the General Assembly. His moderate views may not however commend him to the majority of the Latinos. We thought that we would be prepared to support Garcia Amador. Evans said that no Western European candidate had come forward as yet. He thought that the Middle East candidate might have a claim to chair the remaining Committee on the Continental Shelf. Two names have been suggested: Abdoh of Iran and Loutfi of Egypt. Both of these candidates are the Permanent Representatives of their respective countries at the UN. Loutfi was the better candidate and Evans thought the UK would be prepared to support him notwithstanding that he was an Egyptian.

Of the nine Vice-Presidents Evans expected that the five Great Powers would have one each as was the custom. Of the four remaining he thought that the Latins would make good a claim to two. A third should go to a West European, perhaps a Dutch or Norwegian. (We mentioned that we had already been asked by the Dutch to give consideration to their candidate as a vice-chairman). At the same time a South European candidate, e.g. Italy, would probably have a claim to be represented on the General Committee. We gathered that the UK would probably support a Norwegian and an Italian as the West European candidates for Vice-President and Chairman of one of the committees. The fourth Vice-President would very likely be an Asian candidate. Evans seemed to favour an Indian. He thought there might be a move to enlarge the General Committee to accommodate more candidates from various regions of the world. We agreed that once such a move got underway it would be difficult to stop it.

Evans emphasized that the views he had outlined on the distribution of offices had originated with Dr. Stavropolous of the Legal Department of the UN, and were not necessarily the Foreign Office's views. For instance he pointed out that the distribution of offices would depend upon how many States from the various regions are represented at the Conference though as matters stood it seemed as almost every country invited would be represented.

S.V. OZERE
J.S. NUTT

43.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 46-58

[Ottawa], February 13, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

The basic purpose of the Conference is to seek international agreement on the law of the sea which in some respects at the present time is in a chaotic state. The Delegation's general aim should be directed towards obtaining the maximum agreement on the definition of States' jurisdiction and the regulation of States' activities in respect of the sea. This general aim may be subject to certain qualifications. Wherever the substance of such agreement would be inconsistent with the Delegation's express instructions and in any event where it could compromise Canadian interests, the Delegation should reserve its position pending reference to Ottawa. The attitude of our major NATO allies and Commonwealth partners to any particular proposal should be constantly borne in mind. While this attitude may not necessarily affect a decision to support a particular proposal, it should be given weight by the Delegation in the exercise of any discretion and should wherever possible be reported to Ottawa when supplementary instructions are being sought.

Two of the major problems before the Conference are:

(a) how to reconcile the growing desire on the part of States which do not have well-developed fisheries, to stake a claim in the fishery resources of the seas with the desire of States which have long engaged in fishing to protect their established interests in these fisheries;

(b) how to reconcile the conflict between fishing States which fish largely off their own shores and those which fish off foreign shores which has arisen largely as a result of the tendency of Coastal States to attempt to exclude foreign fishermen from adjacent high seas.

If these conflicting interests could be reconciled by reaching general agreement on a régime for fishing on the high seas, the now controversial problem of the breadth of the territorial sea will present fewer difficulties. To assist in achieving this end it may be desirable for the Conference to postpone discussion of the question of the breadth of the territorial sea while attempting to reach general agreement on a régime for fishing on the high seas. The Delegation may use its discretion in supporting such a tactic in the light of developments at the Conference and in adopting tactics generally aimed at achieving the maximum agreement, bearing in mind the Canadian interest and attitude of NATO allies and Commonwealth partners.

It is not unlikely that the discussions will on occasion develop into disputation concerning specific claims and contentious matters such as the 200-mile claims of Chile, Ecuador and Peru, the Indonesian claim to the Banda and Java Seas, and the Gulf of Aqaba. Unless the discussions appear to have implications affecting Canadian interests, the Delegation should avoid any public declaration concerning such questions, and should likewise avoid controversy on any particular Canadian claims. The Delegation should take the position that the Conference is not the proper forum to consider the merits of specific claims and counter-claims or protests arising therefrom.

The annex to this Memorandum contains a summary of instructions on those specific matters involving important policy considerations. Where these instructions relate to the law of the sea they are a restatement of positions already taken by the Government. Where they relate to general questions, like Chinese representation, they are consistent with positions taken in the past at the UN and other international conferences. Additionally detailed instructions and comments, which are related to Canadian practice and interests in each instance, are being made available to the Delegation.

I recommend, with the concurrence of the Ministers of Fisheries and Northern Affairs and National Resources, that the instructions contained in this Memorandum and annex be communicated to the Chairman of the Canadian Delegation to the Conference on the Law of the Sea.³⁶

SIDNEY SMITH

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Annexe

Annex

Representation of Communist China

If the question of Chinese representation is raised at the Conference, the Delegation should follow a course or action consistent with the Government's practice in the United Nations, which has been to support the "Nationalist Government" as representing China in the United Nations. In any event, since the Conference is convened by the United Nations it should be for the General Assembly to make the decision of principle regarding Chinese representation.

Breadth of the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone for Fishing

At the outset the Delegation should take the position set out in the Government's provisional comments to the Secretary-General on this subject; that the 3-mile limit is no longer adequate for all purposes. One solution would be to extend the territorial sea to 12 miles, but having regard for the importance of the freedom of sea and air navigation an acceptable alternative would be to retain the 3-mile breadth for the territorial sea but to recognize that the coastal state should exercise exclusive control over fishing in a 12-mile contiguous zone. Should this position meet with strong opposition or should alternative proposals be made, the Delegation should seek further instructions from Ottawa.

Baselines and Bays

The Delegation should support the International Law Commission's recommendation that in appropriate cases the baselines, from which the territorial sea and contiguous zone are to be measured, instead of following the low water mark may be drawn from point to point. Bearing in mind the Government's undertaking to Newfoundland at the time of Confederation that the "headland to headland" rule should continue to apply to Newfoundland and bearing in mind also the Government's public assertion of its intention to contend and its hope that it will be able to get acquiescence in the contention, that the Gulf of St. Lawrence is an "inland sea", the Delegation should resist any attempt to amend the International Law Commission's recommendations by placing an arbitrary length on such baselines.

The Delegation should also bear in mind the above considerations in the discussions concerning the rules governing bays.

Archipelagos

In the discussions concerning the rules which might apply to groups of islands, the Delegation should bear in mind the need not to prejudice a Canadian claim to the inter-connecting waters of the Arctic Archipelago.

³⁶ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 18 février 1958.
Approved by Cabinet on February 18, 1958.

Continental Shelf

The Delegation should support the International Law Commission's general thesis that the right to explore and exploit the natural resources of the seabed and subsoil of the continental shelf enure to the coastal state but that the superjacent waters remain high seas. The Delegation should, however, endeavour to obtain agreement that the legal boundary of the shelf shall coincide with the physical boundary where that is well defined.

High Seas Fishing

The Delegation should support in general the International Law Commission's Articles on high seas fishing. It should endeavour to retain in the Articles the provision that a coastal state shall have a unilateral right to take conservation measures on areas of the high seas adjacent to its coast under certain conditions. The Delegation should also advocate inclusion in any agreed fishing régime of the "abstention principle" under which fully utilized fisheries developed by the nationals of one State alone or jointly with those of other States, would, under certain prescribed conditions be reserved for the exclusive use of the nationals of the State or States in question. The Delegation should also support the retention in a fishing régime of procedures for compulsory settlement of disputes concerning the application or administration of the régime agreed upon.

Nuclear Tests on the High Seas

The Delegation should adopt the view that the Conference is not the proper forum to consider the general question of regulation of nuclear tests. If, upon consultation with friendly Delegations, particularly the United Kingdom and the United States, it should seem desirable to include a specific proposal regarding regulation of nuclear tests on the high seas, or in any event if one seems likely to be adopted, the Delegation might take the position that since so little is known of the effects of nuclear tests at present, it should be sufficient to provide that the execution of nuclear tests not unreasonably interfere with the use of the high seas for other purposes.

The Final Act of the Conference and Conventions emerging from the Conference Provided the Final Act constitutes no more than a record of the Conference's proceedings, the Delegation may sign it. Otherwise the Delegation should consult Ottawa. If during the course of the Conference it appears that a Convention or Conventions will emerge which are acceptable to Canada, the Delegation should report to the Government and include in its report an indication of the arrangements made by the Conference for signature of the Convention or Conventions.

44.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 136

Geneva, February 26, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL.

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — PRELIMINARY OPERATIONS

The Conference has now begun its work and has already made a few decisions.

2. As was expected Prince Wan was elected President by unanimous vote. The Soviet Bloc Delegations made the usual statements concerning Chinese representation but they did not press for a vote. The tone of their interventions was rather mild.

3. The rules of procedure were adopted with minor alterations but there were difficulties concerning the acceptance of observers and experts from States which are not participating in the work of the Conference: a Bulgarian proposal to admit them was withdrawn and replaced by a Yemini scheme which would have given the General Committee authority to extend invitations under Rule 33. This was rejected on a USA motion of non-competence by a vote of 63 to 12 against and 11 abstentions.

4. It has not been possible so far to reach agreement on the membership of the General Committee which has now been raised to 19. Apparently the Latin American countries are not prepared to accept the chairmanship of Committees II and IV (in addition to two vice-presidencies) which have been offered to them as part of a broad allocation of seats between the various groups. They insist on holding the chairmanship of Committees I or III while they prefer Committee III. They also have some reservations concerning Professor Bailey as Chairman of Committee I but would be prepared to go along if their claim to the chairmanship of Committee III and three vice-presidencies were to be accepted. The USA Delegation are not reconciled to this Latin American proposal and they have not decided yet whether they would prefer to give up Committee I or III should it become unavoidable to recognize the Latin American claim to one of the two key committees.

5. There have been suggestions that the Latin American consider Professor Bailey as an "extremist" because he represents a country which supports the 3 mile limit for the territorial sea. We have been given to understand that they would be happier if a more "moderate" candidate e.g. a Canadian were available instead. We have indicated to the USA Delegation who have queried us about this that we have made a commitment to support Professor Bailey and that for the present he should be given all possible backing. In the event that agreement is reached that a Latin American should chair the First Committee it is expected that Professor Bailey would be elected chairman of either Committee II or IV. In this event the question of a Canadian chairman would not arise.

6. Negotiations within and between the various groups are continuing. Elections to the General Committee have already been postponed twice and it is possible but perhaps not likely that agreement will be reached before this afternoon. The main committees can then elect their chairman and begin to operate. There is general agreement that if at all possible an agreed slate should be developed so as to avoid a disorderly context in plenary. A few more days may be required before the necessary negotiations can be completed.

7. In their conversations with us the USA Delegation express the view that ultimately a compromise arrangement along the lines of our proposal may emerge as the only acceptable solution on the breadth of the territorial sea. They emphasize however that they would be unable to support for security reasons any scheme which involved an extension of the territorial sea beyond the present 3 mile limit.

45.

DEA/10600-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 177

Geneva, March 10, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 136 Feb 26.

UN CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — WEEKLY REPORT NO. 2

This is the first of a series of telegraphic surveys which we propose to send at weekly intervals on the progress of the work in the various committees; these reports will be supplemented by more detailed accounts in numbered letters, to be sent on proceedings in each committee at bi-weekly intervals unless special developments (not covered in the weekly telegrams) require special additional coverage. Minutes of daily delegation morning meetings will be sent each week by air bag.

2. We hope that the above methods of reporting will be adequate for your requirements and we would welcome your comments on their adequacy or otherwise.

3. Plenary meetings are not being held for the time being and the main operations [are] now being carried out in the various committees. The following is an account of what transpired in the five main committees during the week March 3-7.

4. Committee I: Under the able and skilful leadership of the Chairman, Professor Bailey the First Committee agreed unanimously upon the organization of its work on the following basis: a general debate on all of the articles allotted to it, followed by article by article consideration. During this latter stage proposals and amendments would be put forward and votes taken on the various articles.

5. A suggestion was made by Ecuador that consideration of articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 be postponed until some progress has been made in Committee III. The vote on this suggestion was postponed until the termination of the general debate.

6. The representative of Panama proposed establishing a sub-committee to study the question of historic bays. Consideration of this suggestion was also postponed for a few days in order that the Committee might be in a better position to know more precisely how many sub-committees it might be desirable to establish. This question was discussed at a Commonwealth meeting where the general consensus was that it would be undesirable to establish such a committee on the grounds that the decision whether a bay is historic or not depends upon the facts, and that the principles governing the determination are already established and, furthermore, that there really was not sufficient time for such a study.

7. Twenty statements have been made in the general debate this week. Generally speaking, the tone of the debate is moderate, all speakers swearing allegiance to the principle of the freedom of the seas, and exhorting the Conference to not miss the opportunity presented to it to arrive at agreement on the Law of the Sea. Two trends are evident: one is the attitude of the new countries which is that the present maritime rules were formulated by the maritime powers in their own interests, and that these rules now have to be changed to take account of different interests of new countries, the other (which except in the case of France can be detected in the statements of the countries which have adhered to the traditional three-mile rule) is that there will have to be some modification of the three-mile rule if there is to be general agreement. Sweden, for instance has suggested a six-mile breadth for the territorial sea. The UK made a statement defending the three-mile rule but there is even in this statement some evidence of resignation to a modification of the three-mile rule, particularly in a suggestion that should the territorial sea be extended absence of right of innocent passage of aircraft would be a serious matter. The representative of Denmark expressed doubt as to the possibility of reaching wide agreement on the basis of the three-mile limit. He wondered whether a solution might not be found which would not involve extension of the territorial sea. He noted that, "The Canadian Government has suggested a solution of this kind in its comments in the ILC draft." India has reasserted the suggestion made at the General Assembly in 1956 that States should have the right to decide the breadth of their territorial sea up to twelve miles.

8. In our private conversations with members of the UK Delegation, it appears that there is disagreement whether the last resort should be a 6-mile territorial sea or something along the lines of the Canadian proposal. UK defence experts seem to favour a position along the lines of the Canadian proposal whereas the fisheries experts favour a straight 6-mile territorial sea. As we have already reported, the final US position would appear to be to adopt the Canadian proposal if there is a 2/3 majority in favour of it.

9. It is evident that unless the UK is, in the final analysis, prepared to line up with the US in supporting some sort of a compromise proposal, it could give rise to a serious situation. We are endeavouring to assist in the reconciliation of the UK and US positions.

10. We understand from private conversations, and this is confirmed by the Soviet press release, excerpts of which have been referred to you, that the USSR will not consider modifying its claim to 12 miles territorial sea. Apparently, they consider that if the Canadian proposal is accepted the rest of the world will move one step closer to the position for which the USSR contends.

11. From private conversations we have also learned that the West Coast Latin Americans have no intention of budging from their claim to 200 miles jurisdiction over fisheries. Some of the other Latin American States may be prepared to adopt something along the lines of our proposal.

12. India introduced the subject of nuclear tests on the high seas by saying it was a question if this subject should come before this Conference or instead before the Disarmament Committee of the General Assembly. Reiterating that India's position concerning nuclear tests was well known, namely, that they should not be held at all, the opinion was put forward that this Conference was not repeat not the proper forum to pursue this subject and that it should be dealt with, as in the past, through the machinery of the General Assembly as part of the general problem of disarmament.

13. Later in the meeting the Committee heard an impassioned protest by the delegate of Yemen against nuclear tests on the high seas.

14. Committee II: The Second Committee decided to hold a short general debate. The Chairman divided the articles into eight groups upon the basis of a common or related subject matter within each group.

15. The Netherlands, the UK, Denmark and Norway appear to be in broad agreement with the articles dealing with status of ships and navigation as enunciated in the draft articles. No comments were made by these delegates on the subject of the slave trade, nuclear tests, submarine cables and policing.

16. Guatemala expressed agreement with the view put forward by France in the Sixth Committee: that the concept of nationality should not be used for defining the link between States and ships under their jurisdiction.

17. In the sixth meeting the Polish representative said that he thought that the ILC recommendations regarding the breadth of the territorial sea were good but that his delegation sympathized with other states who considered that they require greater breadth. Regarding piracy, he considered that Article 27 should apply in time of war as in time of peace and that the definition of piracy (Article 39) should be broadened to include acts of violence for other than strictly private ends. Concerning nuclear tests at sea, the Polish delegate was of the opinion that Article 48 should be strengthened by banning such tests and that this question was a proper one for decision by the Conference.

18. The delegate of the Philippines, speaking at the same meeting, said that the connecting waters of a state-archipelago should constitute internal waters. In the absence of appropriate provisions for this in Part I Article 27 should be amended to this effect.

19. Committee III: This Committee got off to a very slow start. Chairman Carlos Suchre of Panama has manifested no great talents for this office. The Committee has agreed to conduct a general debate on the fisheries articles. Only two substantive meetings (March 3 and 5) have been held since the formation of the Committee.

20. Burma spoke first in general debate and expressed general agreement with the articles and suggested that joint meetings of Committees I and III be held to discuss Article 66 and other overlapping matters. El Salvador spoke at some length reiterating special rights of the coastal state in all matters including arbitration. He did indicate that his country had accepted a 12-mile contiguous zone for fishing. Panama spoke briefly supporting El Salvador's statement and expressing misgiving about articles dealing with compulsory arbitration.

21. Exchange of views took place between the Canadian and USA representatives on the Third Committee with reference to the content and timing of the statements to be made by the delegations. It is expected that the USA statement in the general debate will be made early next week followed by the Canadian statement a day or so later.

22. Dr. N.K. Pannikar, Fisheries Development adviser to the Government of India, serves as Committee III rapporteur. He is well qualified for this post and perhaps the Committee's ablest officer.

23. Committee IV: Committee IV met four times during the week. The Committee got off to a good start Monday when a decision was taken that in keeping with the recommendation of the General Committee the first stage of the debate would be devoted to a broad general discussion rather than detailed consideration of individual articles.

24. The Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Perera of Ceylon, is an amiable and reasonably competent chairman although perhaps a trifle vain. The question was raised at an early stage as to whether the three weeks suggested to the committees for their general debates should be dated from the commencement of the Conference itself or from the date the committees began their work (one week later). Although the wording of the General Committee's recommendation leaves little doubt that it should be three weeks from the beginning of the Conference, the Chairman seems to have taken the opposite view. This may have serious consequences later by imposing strict limits on the time available for the difficult and lengthy process of considering the articles one by one.

25. A number of speeches were made during the week. With the exception of the Latin Americans — who continually emphasized the word "sovereignty" and seemed to favour an extension of states rights over the continental shelf — the speeches were very moderate in tone. Most speakers appeared to be in broad agreement with Articles 67 to 73 but suggested minor changes in emphasis. The French delegate opposed the criterion of exploitability as being too indefinite. The delegates of the UK and Union of South Africa both seemed to agree with this viewpoint and also suggested that certain other phrases such as "reasonable measures" were lacking in precision. Burma felt that "natural resources" should be interpreted more broadly to include "bottom fish" which are important to the hungry nations of Asia.

26. The delegate of Norway also found exploitability to be an unsatisfactory criterion in describing the limit of the shelf and suggested the possibility of using a fixed agreed distance from the shore rather than a specified depth. Both Sweden and China objected to the use of the word "sovereign" anywhere in the articles. It may well develop that the Latin Americans will find themselves in an isolated position on this matter.

27. Canada was prepared to make a statement Friday but it was decided for tactical reasons to defer it until after the statement in Committee I next week. The Canadian statement will put forward the proposal, in keeping with the delegations instructions that the outer limit of the continental shelf should be its physical edge where that is well-defined and in other instances at an agreed upon depth sufficient to satisfy practical prospects of exploitation.

28. Committee V: Fifth Committee met only once and considered the organization of its work. It was agreed that a general debate should take place; the sense of the Committee being that transit States should make a special effort to express their views on the proposals put forward by landlocked States. Debate will begin March 10.

29. From our discussions with other delegations we gather that the desires of the more extreme minded landlocked countries will meet with strong opposition from transit and other maritimes States many of whom share the views we expressed in our telegram 163 March 5.†

30. While perhaps unnecessarily heavy and systematic, Zourek (Czechoslovakia) is competent chairman. However from his opening statement it would seem that he considers himself as spokesman and advocate for landlocked countries.

31. General: The committees have now organized their work and with varying degrees of efficiency and enthusiasm have undertaken a preliminary and general exchange of views on the subjects which have been assigned to them.

32. The First Committee is making relatively good progress and unless the Third Committee can follow suit there will indeed be a problem in arranging for the postponement of the discussion on Articles 3 and 66. Generally, the views put forward have been expressed in moderate tone and there is a general atmosphere of cordiality that may be due to the fact that the lines have not yet been clearly drawn and that the committees have not yet really come to grips with the more controversial issues.

33. The Soviet attitude has continued relatively mild during the week: most delegations are busily sounding out friendly delegates, coordinating their positions and drafting general statements. We suspect that this rather relaxed process will continue until article by article discussion begins in a week or ten days from now.

34. An essential immediate preoccupation is to ensure that on the breadth of the territorial sea the ultimate position of our main partners is developed in a coordinated fashion.

46.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference

TELEGRAM L-57

Ottawa, March 13, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London (Information) (Routine).

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF SEA — USA AIDE-MÉMOIRE ON TERRITORIAL SEA AND CONTIGUOUS FISHING ZONE

On March 12 the United States Minister in Ottawa, Tyler Thompson, called on me in order to discuss the Canadian position with regard to the breadth of the territorial sea. Mr. Thompson delivered an aide-mémoire dated the same day, containing his government's assurances of "vigorous support" for the Canadian proposal for a twelve-mile contiguous fishing zone. The text of the aide-mémoire reads as follows:

"With regard to the Conference on the Law of the Sea now taking place in Geneva, the Canadian Government is aware of the great importance which the United States Government places on the security disadvantages of any extension of the limits of the territorial sea. The Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Chief of Naval Operations, United States Navy, have in recent days stressed to high-level Canadian military authorities their urgent hope that, in the current negotiations in Geneva, Canada will continue to adhere to the principle of the three-mile limit of the territorial sea."

"The United States Government understands the desire of the Canadian Government to resolve its fishery problems but wishes to state in confidence its conviction that any apparent willingness on the part of important western nations to depart from the principle of the three-mile limit of the territorial sea would inevitably lead the Conference to approve an extension of sovereignty out to at least twelve miles. In order to avoid losing the three-mile limit on territorial waters, the United States will be prepared to give vigorous support to the Canadian compromise proposal, i.e., to limit sovereignty to three miles but to accord the coastal state exclusive fishing rights out to twelve miles, if this is necessary to achieve the retention of the three-mile territorial sea."

During the course of our conversation, I informed Mr. Thompson that we welcomed indeed the vigorous support which his country was prepared to give to our compromise proposal and hoped that, with this support, it would be able to gain general acceptance at the Conference, thus obviating the likelihood of a successful challenge to the three-mile territorial limit. After assuring him that the Canadian government was aware of the importance which his government places on the security disadvantages of extending the three-mile territorial limit, I drew his attention to the fact that other countries were undoubtedly going to favour wider territorial limits on the basis of their own national interests. I pointed out that if it should therefore develop at the Conference that our compromise was not secured and we were put in the position of having to choose between the present situation and a twelve-mile territorial sea, we would be faced with a very difficult decision indeed. It was, of course, too early to know what type of solution to this question would be acceptable to the Conference as a whole. While we could not, under these circumstances, give final assurances concerning our position on the extension of the breadth of a territorial sea we were however hopeful that, with vigorous U.S.A. support, the present position under international law with regard to the breadth of the territorial sea would, in fact, be safeguarded.

[JULES] LÉGER

47.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 206

Geneva, March 15, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 177 Mar 10.

UN CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — WEEKLY REPORT NO. 3

Committee I: The Committee has now heard a total of more than 50 speakers in the general debate. The General Committee hopes the general debate may be completed in all committees by Wednesday next.

Both the US and the USSR spoke during the week, the former advocating the retention of the 3-mile rule and the latter advocating adoption of a formula which would permit states to establish their own limit for the territorial sea up to a maximum of 12 miles. These two positions are indicative of the main trends now apparent, the former being advocated by the major maritime powers, in many instances without any suggestion of compromise, while the latter position appears to be attractive to some Latin Americans and to a good many Afro-Asians. In fact the leader of the USA delegation has indicated to us privately that they believe that the proposal that States determine their own territorial sea up to 12 miles could probably command 45 votes.³⁷

While the Canadian proposal has so far only been alluded to in specific terms by the representative of Denmark, it is apparent from the statements of a number of countries that a proposal along the lines of the Canadian proposal would offer some attraction to them. This is confirmed by private intimations we have had from the US delegation based on information from their liaison officers. The Pakistanis, Chinese and Irish have told us that they will support the Canadian proposal. In private discussions with a member of the Vatican delegation we pointed out that the Canadian proposal had important security implications: in case of war the countries opposing communism might find themselves at a disadvantage if a wider limit for the territorial sea were adopted. We were given to understand that the point would be drawn to the attention of the appropriate quarters in the Vatican and perhaps, through the Vatican, to the attention of certain Latin American governments.

³⁷ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

line or words omitted [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

Le Centre de communications a reçu instruction de répéter ce message en incluant le texte manquant, mais la version corrigée de ce document n'a pas été retrouvée.

The Communications Centre was asked to repeat this message with the missing text included, but a corrected version of this document was not located.

We anticipate making our statement on Monday. In working subsequently for its support we propose emphasizing with the Europeans that our proposal is the only way to save the 3-mile limit; with the Afro-Asians that it is a compromise between the position of the major maritime powers and the USSR and with the Latin Americans that the 3-mile limit must be held in the interests of the security. The USA is anxious for us to put forward our proposal and as you know are prepared to work for it. At first blush we think that their early support should be discreet; otherwise our proposal will look too much like a "put-up" job which might prejudice support of the Afro-Asians particularly. We think, for the moment, there is no point in pressing the UK but rather that we should allow them to come along at their own speed as support for our proposal may develop. The USA agrees with this assessment and will concentrate on persuading the Latin Americans. The USA have informed UK that they intend to work for the adoption of our proposal. The UK have expressed their disappointment at this decision.

On Thursday it was brought to our attention that an Afro-Asian caucus had been held and that there were strong indications that a relatively large number of the Afro-Asian group were preparing to support a proposal that the delimitation of the territorial sea up to a maximum breadth of 12 miles should be left to the discretion of coastal states. This suggestion was made by both India and by the USSR in the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly in 1956 and was made again this week first by India and then by the USSR. In view of the fact that we had not yet been able to give our statement but anticipate doing so on Monday, we were anxious to ensure that no firm position should be taken by the majority of Afro-Asians until they had had an opportunity to consider the Canadian proposal. We therefore arranged an interview between myself and Sen, Chairman of the Indian Delegation and Minister of Law in the Indian Government. This interview took place Friday morning. I explained to Sen my concern that the Afro-Asian group should take a firm decision before they had had an opportunity to consider the Canadian proposal. I outlined the nature of our proposal and emphasized that it was indeed a compromise between the US position and the Soviet position. I said that since the USSR already claimed the 12-mile territorial limit the proposal that States be allowed to settle their own limit between 3 and 12 miles was no compromise at all from the USSR point of view and was in reality for them as rigid a position as was being adopted by some of the maritime powers who were contending for the 3-mile limit. Sen appeared to have some regard for my arguments in favour of the Canadian proposal and promised to consult his government. It was afterwards learned from the Americans that Sen had requested new instructions. Subsequently we also learned through the Pakistanis that Sen had in fact informed the Afro-Asian group that India was considering submitting to the Conference, with the support of the USSR (it was not specified whether this involved co-sponsorship by India and the USSR) a formal proposal that the delimitation of the territorial sea up to a breadth of 12 miles be left to the discretion of the coastal state. The intervention with Sen may therefore have been indeed fortuitous since a proposal sponsored by India would undoubtedly carry with it the support of a large number of Afro-Asian delegations. The Pakistanis intimated to us that certain Afro-Asians with some persuasion might quickly see a good deal of attraction in our proposal. Mentioned were Turkey, Malaya, Libya, Ghana, Liberia, Lebanon and Thailand. We propose to embark upon friendly persuasion of these and other delegations immediately, but to win general support of the Afro-Asian group, Indian support will be extremely helpful if not essential.

The Indonesians have suggested that a sub-committee might be established to study the question of archipelagos. It is doubtful whether such a sub-committee — or one to study historic bays as suggested by Panama — could, in the time available make the thorough study necessary to reach sensible conclusions. It may, however, appear desirable, depending upon developments, as a matter of tactics to accommodate these requests in some manner.

Burma, Ceylon, Japan, Roumania, Yugoslavia and Russia have all spoken against the holding of nuclear tests on the high seas. All consider that the Conference is competent to discuss the question. India, in Committee I, had introduced the question of nuclear tests and had said that this Conference was not the proper forum to pursue this subject (see paragraph 12 of our telegram 177 March 10). However, in Committee II this week the Indian delegate said that the Conference was a proper place to consider the question. We asked him privately to explain what seemed to us a contradiction in the two statements and he explained that while his delegation believed in the propriety of discussing the matter at the Conference they did not expect that any practical results would come of their suggestion in Committee II. Russia and Roumania spoke in favour of granting immunity to state-owned ships operating for commercial purposes. The Yugoslav delegate did not refer to the subject. Italy, Japan, India, Ireland and Australia spoke against the granting of immunity. We were very interested to hear the delegate of Colombia speak strongly against such immunity. He has proposed an amendment to Article 33 which would spell out that only state-owned or operated ships used for non-commercial purposes should enjoy the same immunity as warships.

The UK delegate suggested the deletion of Articles 34, 35 and 36 concerning safety of navigation, penal jurisdiction in matter of collision and the duty to render assistance from the I.L.C. report on the grounds that their provisions had been dealt with by existing international conventions and instruments. Ireland, Australia and Greece supported, in general terms, the UK suggestion.

The USSR and Roumania suggested that provision should be made to prevent states from holding naval and air manoeuvres over large areas of the high seas and near the coasts of other states. The Russian delegate named the USA and the UK as being offenders. The USA delegate replied that for centuries naval exercises had been performed by maritime powers. He then went on to say that the USSR had last year set aside some 700,000 square miles in the Barents Sea for manoeuvres and this, he believed, was the largest area which had ever been used by any state.

Committee III: Four meetings were held this week with 21 states including Norway, India, Peru, Japan, US and UK participating in debate. Norway questioned effect of fishery articles on existing international fishery agreements; rights of coastal state in Antarctica where there are many territorial claims, no people and a highly capitalized whale fishery; how enforcement of arbitral decisions were to be carried out. Also indicated Norway would have suggestions for improving articles dealing with arbitral procedures and cautioned that articles must be kept flexible as stocks of fish and techniques for catching them were constantly undergoing change.

India wants 100-mile fishery jurisdiction for coastal state but with no exclusion of foreign fishermen. Peru reviewed usual "scientific" claims for 200-mile territorial zone. Special claims included fertilization of coastal waters by guano birds, organic transport of rivers, richness of Humboldt (Peru) current and lack of continental shelf. Japan supported high seas fisheries regulation on basis of scientific findings; could not see how special claims of coastal state could be reconciled with widely proclaimed support of freedom of seas and fishing especially if the coastal state did no fishing. Did not mention abstention principle. USSR supported scientific research and was against discrimination of any kind, hence was opposed to abstention principle and special rights for coastal states. Claimed Rome Conference was conclusive in disposing of latter. USA questioned special rights of coastal states (Articles 54 and 55); the articles on compulsory arbitration should be more specific and provision should be made for enforcement; only mentioned, but did not detail, support of abstention principle. UK indicated that freedom of fishing and responsibility for conservation went together. Could not support special rights for coastal states and claimed that all states facing on the seas were coastal states.

As at Rome Conference, the special considerations for the coast state as provided in Articles 54 and 55 is becoming the most contentious subject.

As many States are holding up statements in Committee III until general policy statements are made by delegation heads in Committee I, progress is slow; Canada to make its statement early next week.

Committee IV: Committee IV met daily and debate continued in moderate tone. By the end of the week 38 countries including all the major powers except Canada, had spoken in the general debate. Five countries — Panama, Burma, Mexico, Argentina and France — have tabled formal proposals or amendments. The Panamanian proposal seeks to include both parts of the continental margin — i.e. the continental shelf proper and the continental slope — in the definition contained in Article 67. The Burmese amendment proposes that so-called “bottom fish” be included in the term “natural resources” in Article 68. France has proposed that the criterion of exploitability in Article 67 be deleted and that “bottom fish” should be explicitly excluded from natural resources. The Mexican and Argentinian proposals were directed principally towards strengthening the sovereignty of the coastal state.

Germany circulated a memorandum containing a curious proposal to the effect that the coastal State has no rights over the continental shelf beyond the outer limit of its territorial sea. Accordingly all States should be free to explore and exploit the subsoil outside the territorial sea. The coastal State would act on behalf of the international community in securing the observance of agreed-upon rules to safeguard navigation, protect fisheries and prevent excessive pollution. It is assumed that the Germans have put this proposal forward in the belief that if all the continental shelves of the world were open to all comers, the superiority of German technical knowledge would give them an advantage. There has been no evidence at all of support for this proposal and a number of speakers have specifically rejected it.

On Friday both the USA and the USSR participated in the debate. The Soviet made an obvious appeal to the materially underdeveloped nations by speaking at some length of the danger of a monopoly on exploitation of the continental shelf getting into the hands of powerful interests in certain countries to the detriment of the smaller nations. Otherwise, their speech was conciliatory in tone and they indicated broad general agreement with the ILC recommendations but said that certain proposals would be put forward later.

The US speech delivered by Miss Whiteman (both US and UK are represented by women in Committee IV) was an orderly and well-reasoned presentation. They accept the 200-metre depth and are prepared to explore the exploitability portion of Article 67 but seem to have some reservations as to wisdom of latter. They would prefer the deletion of word “sovereign” in Article 68 and would like to see Article 73 included in any convention. Natural resources, they felt, should include minerals and living organisms which have an attachment to the seabed during the harvesting period of their life — e.g. sponges, corals, oysters.

It now appears that the five main points of difficulty for the discussion ahead are (1) Article 67 with likelihood that exploitability will not be an acceptable criterion; (2) definition of natural resources; (3) sovereignty; (4) use of imprecise words such as "reasonable" and "unjustifiable"; (5) Article 73 re reference of disputes to International Court of Justice.

Canadian statement will likely be made Monday or Wednesday as Committee is not expected to sit Tuesday because of plenary session. General debate is expected to end not later than Wednesday after which Committee will consider individual articles in detail.

Committee V: General debate continues in Fifth Committee and is expected to be completed late next week. In the early stages of the debate the more extreme minded landlocked countries such as Afghanistan, Nepal and Laos put forward their views and requested as a minimum the adoption by the Conference of the seven principles which emanated from the preliminary conference of the landlocked countries. The manner in which the debate was developed offered little room for optimism until later in the week when the UK and France made well-balanced exposés of their positions expressing sympathy with landlocked countries which while they had no practical problems wished the Conference to place on record certain general principles. Both UK and France suggested that the right of access to the sea of landlocked countries might be recognized, subject to bilateral negotiations between interested governments. The Swiss, the Austrians and the Pakistanis have already expressed privately their willingness to accept this proposal which would have the advantage of offering a compromise solution to the impasse which earlier seemed to be developing between transit and landlocked countries.

Furthermore the UK and French proposals would seem politically desirable since, until now, the Communists have manoeuvred in such a way as to suggest that they were the only ones to show sympathy for the views of landlocked countries like Afghanistan, Bolivia and Nepal. There was a possibility that they might thus have enlisted their support on other issues such as the breadth of the territorial sea. The UK delegation has circulated to friendly delegations a draft of a possible resolution to be adopted by the Fifth Committee along the lines indicated above and while it is yet too soon to determine the nature of the response to their proposal, there are indications that it might be well received by a majority of governments. In addition to recognizing the right of access to the sea of landlocked countries, the draft resolution suggests that those States who have not yet become parties to the Barcelona Convention of 1921 on transit and the Geneva Convention of 1923 on the régime of maritime ports, might do so.

Our own view is that the UK draft resolution would be an acceptable compromise. It would do little more but confirm certain principles already embodied in conventional law. It is important, however, that the initiative in the Committee should not be left to the Soviet Bloc and we believe that a sympathetic Western attitude may have significance as regards the outcome of the debate on broader issues dealt with in other committees.

General: The general debates are about to be concluded in most of the committees and the issues are beginning to emerge.

So far, except perhaps in Committee V, the atmosphere has continued to be relatively calm and conducive to negotiations.

As regards the main issue, the breadth of the territorial sea, there are reasons for encouragement — the assurance of USA support — and for some concern — the developing Afro-Asian manoeuvre possibly in cooperation with the Soviet Bloc.

As we are about to make our major statements, the Conference will enter for us into a more active phase. The prospect of USA assistance will call for close coordination of effort but in certain areas lack of UK support e.g. in relation to countries like Ghana, Iraq and Malaya may make our task more difficult.

The key to success for the Conference may yet be held by the Latin American countries. The present indications are that they are divided and as the crucial debates develop a major effort will have to be made to enlist the support of as many of them as possible.

48.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 221

Geneva, March 19, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL.

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — CANADIAN PROPOSAL

Our statement in the First Committee yesterday was well received.³⁸ Pakistan voiced support for retention of the 3-mile limit for the territorial sea with an extension of exclusive fishing rights out to 12 miles. Following our statement the Vietnamese representative gave guarded support for our proposal. It is understood that Vietnam is under instructions to seek approval of a 50-mile contiguous zone for fishing but that the representative here will seek instructions to support the Canadian proposal. Ireland also gave unqualified support to the Canadian proposal while Norway gave it qualified support.

2. Norway was in favour of the 12-mile contiguous zone for fishing but wondered whether this might not be coupled with recognition of a territorial limit in excess of three miles, e.g., the Scandinavian league of four miles where this limit was long established and uncontested. In private discussions the Norwegian representative (Stabell) agreed that his suggestion regarding the territorial sea, if accepted, could detract from the acceptability of our proposal by countries like the USA which will support it only if it is accepted as a 3 plus 9 package. We explained to Stabell that we were grateful for Norway's qualified support of our proposal and we were sympathetic to their wish to retain the traditional Scandinavian league for measuring their territorial sea. At the same time we suggested that if they were prepared to come back to the 3-mile limit for the territorial sea this would undoubtedly be regarded as a dramatic gesture on their part, it might at the same time encourage other states to agree to reduce their territorial limits in return for an increase in exclusive fisheries' jurisdiction out to 12 miles. Stabell said that the Norwegian delegation here personally held the view that Norway should agree to do this and that his delegation were seeking instructions authorizing them to fall back to the 3-mile limit. We asked Stabell whether it would be helpful if our Ambassador in Oslo were to talk the matter over with the Norwegian authorities. Stabell preferred that we not repeat not do this at least for the time being.

3. In the general debate, the Canadian delegation had indicated its sympathy for a solution along the lines that had been proposed by India and USSR. On the basis of private conversations with a member of the Ghanaian delegation it is quite clear, however, that they have no firm instructions to support any particular proposal. They are interested in seeing General Agreement reached and would support any proposal which appeared to have the general approval of the Conference. The Ghanians clearly do not repeat not wish to commit themselves at the moment but promised to give careful consideration to our proposal.

³⁸ Voir: Nations Unies, Conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer, Documents officiels, Volume III: Première Commission (Comptes rendus analytiques des séances et Annexes), pp. 57 à 59.

See United Nations, United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, Official Records, Volume III: First Committee (Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone), Summary records of meetings and Annexes, pp. 51-53.

4. In the general debate in Committee One yesterday Australia made it clear that they would support the Canadian proposal if the three-mile limit could be held, that is, if it were a 3 plus 9 package. Iceland also stated that the Canadian proposal would go a long way towards meeting her needs — provided suitable arrangements could be made for fisheries outside that limit such as abstention. South Africa is satisfied with the three-mile limit and does not require an extra limit for fishing since they have no competition. They would passively support our proposal if it appeared to be likely to receive the approval of the necessary majority. The representative of the Holy See has informed us that he believes he will be able to support our proposal. We have had similar intimations from the Turkish and Thailand delegations. For the Turks this will involve reducing their territorial sea from six to three miles, and for the Thailanders reverting from what they consider to be the best breadth for the territorial sea namely six miles.

49.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 235

Geneva, March 22, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

Last night Sir Gerald Fitzmaurice, who is leading the UK delegation in the absence of Sir Geoffrey Manningham-Buller, called a special meeting of the leaders of the Commonwealth delegations at 11:30 this morning to discuss a subject which he indicated was of major importance. I attended the Conference with Ozere and Nutt.

2. When meeting opened Fitzmaurice explained that they had just received information regarding a decision by the Government of the UK in regard to what he described as "the Canadian proposal". He said that the UK delegation can not only not repeat not accept 12 mile contiguous zone for fisheries but will have to publicly announce its opposition thereto. He went on to say that the distant fisheries were important not only from the economic and social point of view but also from the defence point of view because of the part that trawlers and their crews had played in two world wars and would be called upon to play again if that necessity arose.

3. He did give figures indicating the effect of a 12 mile contiguous fisheries zone but I need not repeat these because they have been forwarded already.

4. As he had referred specifically to the Canadian proposal I dealt with his statement immediately and pointed out that we had merely placed before the Conference the position we had taken officially for over two years and particularly at the General Assembly of the UN in 1956 and again in a memorandum to the Secretary General of the UN in September 1957. I recalled that this was a matter of historic significance to us because since 1911 we had been denying the right to our own trawlers to fish within a 12 mile contiguous zone and that naturally we sought an international agreement which would establish this as recognized law. I emphasized that our proposal alone had not precipitated this situation. I did in fact refer to an appendix to their own publication on this subject which indicated the very large number of countries which were already unilaterally exercising control over distances ranging from 6 to 12 miles or even more. I pointed out that since this Conference had met other nations had clearly indicated their belief that there should be a 12 mile contiguous zone. Because of the British interest in that fishing area I referred to the speech of the delegate from Iceland last Wednesday in which he made it clear that a 12 mile contiguous zone would be the minimum which they thought would protect their interests and that because of their economic dependence upon fishing they would in fact seek a wider zone in particular areas. Having regard to these facts I suggested that it did not seem likely on the basis of the information now before us that any contiguous zone of less than 12 miles was likely to receive the necessary vote of the delegates at this Conference.

5. I did say that we attached the utmost importance to agreement at this Conference. I pointed out that if there were not agreement it was most unlikely that the UK would in any event be able to fish within 12 miles of the areas in which they have expressed such a keen interest.

6. I went on to point out that there seemed to be every reason to believe that bilateral and multilateral agreements could be made with the countries controlling the particular fishing areas in which they were interested and that they could in this way assure the highest possible rights which would be available to them in any event. I went on to say that if we do desire agreement it seems that we must be prepared to accept the common denominator which will be accepted by the necessary majority of the Conference and that from the opinions already expressed prior to and at this Conference it seemed that a 12 mile contiguous fishing zone would be the figure most likely to receive the support of the majority at this Conference.

7. I expressed our appreciation of the fact that the government of the UK had given us this information immediately as also did the representatives of Australia and other delegations.

8. When asked directly by Bailey of Australia whether the UK contemplated the possibility of any alternative proposal later in the Conference Fitzmaurice said that he was not in a position to discuss that now. He said that compromise proposals are under consideration but there is no immediate intention of putting one forward.

9. Fitzmaurice did say that so far as he knew it was not intended to communicate this information through the High Commissioners of the Commonwealth countries but to rely upon those attending this Conference to inform their own governments. It is our impression that this meeting was suddenly called together on Saturday morning much more for the purpose of seeking to impress the representatives of some of the Commonwealth countries than for the purpose of giving us this information. It does seem possible that it had the very opposite effect to what was intended and that it has in fact consolidated the support of some of the Commonwealth delegations behind our own proposal. While expressing their keen sympathy for the position of the UK government, which we had already emphasized ourselves, the delegates of Ceylon and India did at the same time indicate that the Canadian proposal offered attractive possibilities of reaching agreement. This was the first time that we had heard any such opinion expressed by Ceylon. Bailey for Australia said without reservation that they would support the Canadian proposal if it appeared that it offered the possibility of agreement which would also preserve the 3 mile territorial limit.

GEORGE A. DREW

50.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 239

Geneva, March 22, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 206 Mar 15.

UN CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA — WEEKLY REPORT NO. 4

Committee I

1. In telegram 221 March 19 we reported that our statement was made on Monday. We also indicated the support which had been voiced for it. It is difficult yet to assess with any certainty what hope the proposal has but there are a few intimations. Professor Bailey (Australia) who is Chairman of Committee I, believes it is the only proposal which has a chance. At the moment, the situation for many delegations seems to be that they would support it if others would. In many cases we believe delegations are seeking instructions. This is certainly so in the case of India and Norway as already reported to you. On the other hand many of the Western European delegations have struck a rigid pose which they appear unwilling to alter. The French, Spanish and Portuguese objections seem to arise primarily because they think that our proposal will work hardships for their fishing industries. It seems unlikely that support of the Western Europeans interested in distant water fishing for the proposal will be forthcoming. As we have already reported the UK has informed us privately that they will oppose our proposal publicly at an appropriate time. If some arrangements could be worked out on a bilateral basis this might alter the disposition of those states interested in distant fishing.

2. With the end of the general debate on Wednesday the Ecuadorian proposal to postpone Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 (breadth of the territorial sea and contiguous zone) until after April 10 quickly split the Conference. Two full meetings were devoted to a wrangle over this proposal which was finally revised upon the suggestion of Mexico to provide that the articles in question should come on for discussion not later than March 31. During the discussion India supported Mexico and gave as a reason that instructions were being awaited on the Canadian proposal. We found ourselves able to influence Ecuador to accept the Mexican and Indian suggestion. In this form the resolution passed by a vote of 46 in favour (including Canada, US, UK, India), 16 against (including USSR) with 8 abstention (including UAR). The USSR opposed postponement on the grounds that the breadth of the territorial sea was crucial and should be tackled immediately. It was suggested that they and other delegations were fearful that some of the proponents of postponement hope thereby to facilitate no decision on the territorial sea being taken because of lack of time. There are undoubtedly a number of delegations who harbour such motives. The USSR may also be afraid that our proposal is gaining in popularity (certainly it does not lack for publicity both public and private in the halls of the palais) and hope to head it off by early discussion and perhaps an early vote on their suggestion that States be granted the discretion to decide their own limits between 3 and 12 miles. On the other hand this may be straightforward divisive tactics on the part of the USSR.

3. The Committee will begin its article by article discussion next week beginning with Section III of Part I of the ILC report (Articles 15-25).

Committee II

4. The general debate continued until March 19 when it was concluded. The Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, UAR and Bulgaria all spoke against the holding of nuclear tests and said that the Conference was competent to discuss the question. Pakistan said that this question should be left to the UN Disarmament Commission. The representative of China also stated that the question of nuclear tests was outside the scope of this Conference. The Ukraine supported the point put forward by the UAR that the right to visit ships in "suspect" zones was anachronistic (Article 46 paragraph (b) of subsection 1 should be deleted from the ILC report). The delegate of Liberia gave a long and closely reasoned speech which was a defence of flags of convenience. He opposed what he described as the introduction of novel principles; this was an obvious reference to the genuine link concept.

5. On March 14 we made a very brief general statement in which we suggested postponement of consideration of the matter of freedom of fishing in the high seas until committee on fishing had decided what restrictions if any were to be placed on this freedom. We also said that it would be unprofitable for this Conference to deal with nuclear tests. We concluded by saying that care should be taken to ensure in relation to matters where there were existing conventions that the principles enunciated in various articles did not derogate from the wider obligations under those existing conventions.

6. The Committee adjourned on Wednesday to consider a proposal of the Chairman that the next phase of the work would consist of a consideration of the articles by the same groupings as dealt with in general debate. The Chairman proposed that there be 2 readings on each article and that provisional votes be taken at the first reading. This however with the understanding that States would not be prohibited from voting otherwise at the second meeting. This proposal was objected to by the UK and it was decided to defer decision until Monday March 25. There were 39 speakers in the general debate.

Committee III

7. Debate in Committee III ended Thursday March 20. Eighteen States and the director of FAO fisheries division spoke during the four days. The most contentious matter, as expected, were articles dealing with special rights for coastal states. The extremists for and against these articles are very emphatic and as at Rome, supporters for and those against are about equally divided. Many States, including most Latin Americans, indicated opposition to articles dealing with compulsory arbitration. The term "voluntary arbitration" was suggested by one.

8. Iceland made a plea for special consideration in fisheries' matters due to her great dependence on fisheries. They indicated by means of a very thorough study that a contiguous zone of 12 miles for fisheries and the fisheries' articles dealing with rights of coastal states were not adequate to meet Iceland's special needs.

9. Canada made its statement in committee. On Monday the Committee is considering mechanics and organization for the next state of work, which is the consideration of the individual articles.

Committee IV (Continental Shelf)

10. The general debate in Committee IV came to an end on Wednesday. In all, fifty nations — including the UAR whose credentials were accepted by the Conference in plenary session Tuesday — participated. The Canadian statement the last in the general debate was given Wednesday and attracted a considerable amount of interest and favourable comment.

11. Consideration of the articles seriatim began Thursday and the Chairman announced that three days would be allotted to the discussion of each article. This seemed to us to be a somewhat arbitrary decision since the same amount of time would presumably be given to those articles that are not particularly controversial as to the three articles — 67, 68 and 73 — around which most discussion is expected to take place. However, the Chairman indicated that there would be some latitude in this time-table.

12. At least a score of formal proposals have been placed before the Committee seeking modifications in the various articles. Many of these duplicate one another in intent if not in wording. Canada's amendment to Article 67 was put forward at the week's end. Meanwhile both the UK and the Netherlands had made proposals to establish the outer limit of the continental shelf at the 550-metre depth. Over the weekend the Canadian alternate representative on Committee IV was invited to join with Admiral Mouton and the representative of the UK in an effort to redraft a new proposal which would be submitted jointly by the Netherlands and the UK.

13. If an acceptable wording is developed it is expected that Canada will vote in favour of the 550-metre depth while at the same time indicating that support of this proposal does not mean abandonment of our position as stated earlier in the debate. If this proposal should gain acceptance our own would be withdrawn. If not the Canadian proposal would itself be put to a vote.

Committee V

14. General debate continued sluggishly with only two meetings. The USA expressed sympathy with desires of landlocked countries and said it would give support to all reasonable proposals. The USA representative while stating that "seven principles" appeared in accordance with present conventional law, did not state his government's willingness to agree to them. The German and Italian statements were generally negative in tone but we understand, through private discussions that the Germans are inclined to agree with UK draft resolution mentioned in last weeks report which would recognize right of access to the sea subject to bilateral negotiations. The Italian position remains dogmatic and it is not yet certain whether they would support a resolution along the lines of that proposed by the UK.

15. The only other statement of importance made in this weeks general debate was by Yugoslavia who expressed firm opposition to the request of landlocked states. There would seem to exist a Yugoslav fear that their agreement to requests formulated by landlocked countries might subsequently place them in an awkward bargaining position vis-à-vis bordering states.

16. The UK draft resolution, the highlights of which were summarized in our last report, has not yet been circulated as a committee document. It is hoped that this can be done in the latter part of week of March 24 or as soon as the general debate is completed. The delay is caused by the difficulty in reaching general agreement among maritime countries with regard to some form of recognition of the principle of right of access to the sea.

17. In the meantime the landlocked countries have been meeting under the chairmanship of Zourek who, as you know, is also committee chairman. Needless to say, this is not a sign of impartiality on Zourek's part and it is generally considered that he is too openly entering into activities which associate him too closely with a particular group of countries. We understand that Zourek has put forward a revision of the seven principles which he hopes the landlocked group will endorse. Delegations such as Austria, Luxembourg and Switzerland are stalling for time in the hope that some constructive proposal will be produced shortly by the maritime countries.

18. There are sixteen countries still listed to speak in the general debate which is not expected to be completed before the end of next week. Maritime countries are considering the advantage of requesting a postponement of the committee proceedings for approximately one week following the general debate in the event that their negotiations have not matured by then.

19. You will appreciate that regardless of what is taking place openly in any of the five committees the general debate having largely concluded the Conference has reached the stage where there is extensive discussion between delegations through informal and private meetings. In this we are taking an active part seeking widest possible support for the Canadian proposal.

51.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 263

Geneva, March 29, 1958

SECRET. EMERGENCY.

Reference: Your Tel L72 Mar 27.†

For Personal Attention Cadieux.

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA — WESTERN EUROPEAN ATTITUDE TOWARDS CANADIAN PROPOSAL

1. At the suggestion of the USA a meeting was held yesterday between representatives of Canada, USA, France, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Belgium and Norway to discuss the effect of the Canadian proposal on fishing industry of a number of Western European countries.

2. Arthur Dean opened meeting explaining that despite serious damage which Canadian suggestion for 12-mile contiguous zone would cause USA fishing industry, the US government considered that proposal was sound and that it probably constituted the only way of obtaining agreement at the Conference. He made it plain that his government was most anxious to see our proposal adopted.

3. I then explained the reasons which had prompted us to make our proposal expanding along lines already familiar to you. I emphasized the point that we were most anxious to see agreement reached at present Conference, and I strongly urged that when the Canadian proposal was studied representatives should ask themselves whether the complete absence of agreement would not produce a far worse situation than the adoption of our suggestion. I suggested to the Western Europeans that this was not a choice between the Canadian proposal and the retention of a 3-mile fishing zone, but rather a choice between a 12-mile contiguous zone for fishing and a chaotic situation which would produce far more damaging results for the fishing industry of many Western European countries. I supported my argument with the factual information contained in your telegram L72 which was extremely useful.

4. Following my remarks, Professor Gros of France expressed disagreement with the Canadian and USA arguments. He appeared to be speaking not only for his government but for most of the other Western Europeans present at the meeting. Gros disagreed with our view that chaos would result from an absence of agreement on the breadth of the territorial sea. He said that such a situation would only mean that countries would set their own rules which would have no validity whatever in international law and that France would never accept the legality of unilateral extension of territorial waters. He went on to say that April 24 should not be considered as a magic date and that no more than 15 or 20 articles of the ILC draft would by then be in a state where they could be placed in a convention. He said that "many other jurists of repute" had always agreed with him that a nine-week Conference was not enough to codify the Law of the Sea. He suggested that at the end of April, the Conference could adjourn until next year or until 1960 when it could meet again to carry on its work. In the meantime it was unlikely that a tragic situation would result from the absence of agreement and he compared this Conference with that of 1930.

5. Gros' statement was most cynical and the sense of his remarks suggested that he would not be unhappy if the present Conference were to fail in its chief purpose. It is becoming increasingly clear that he is waging among other Western Europeans a campaign not only harmful to our proposal but detrimental to the success of the Conference. Remarks made to us by other representatives also indicate that Gros has neglected to put all the facts before them and, in this sense, we feel that he has not been entirely truthful. He has ignored the very reasonable position taken by Simonette on March 21 and his frank admission that it was not the loss in Canadian waters which would be important but the effect of a 12-mile fishing zone in Europe and North Africa. In the circumstances I would suggest that you might consider the wisdom of informing the French Embassy in Ottawa immediately that the attitude of their representative here is not conducive to any agreement and hardly consistent with our long years of very close friendship and understanding. I think it might also be very important to emphasize that our own fishing communities are dependent upon fishing just as much as the fishing communities of France. In asking for a 12-mile contiguous fishing zone we are thinking of their interests on the east and west coast.

6. In replying to Gros, Arthur Dean said that his government did not agree that the situation in Geneva in 1958 was similar to that which existed at the Hague in 1930. While in 1930 there were some 40 participants in the Conference on the Law of the Sea, we now had some 87 countries many of whom had recently attained independence. Dean said that he feared that if the present Conference failed, the Soviets would begin a propaganda campaign with the new countries, suggesting to them that it was impossible to obtain agreement with the old countries of Europe. The absence of agreement, Dean suggested would also have an extremely detrimental effect on the economy of a number of small countries. The USA was most concerned about the possibility that small countries might leave the Conference disappointed at the absence of fruitful results. Saunders (USA) and I suggested that if there were no agreement and no régime of law instead of unilateral extension of fishing zones the only way the French attitude could be supported would be to protect their trawlers and other fishing boats by gunboats. In an obvious reference to some Latin American countries Saunders pointed out that many USA fishing vessels had been arrested in waters which were considered as belonging to the coastal State but that the USA had never thought of enforcing the unilateral rules established by countries who were friendly to them.

7. Supported by the Italians and the Spaniards, Gros retorted to Dean and myself that the price for agreement was too high and that it was only the Western Europeans who were being asked to pay the price. He said that our attitude resembled appeasement and that "France is not prepared to appease because, if now granted what they were claiming new countries would soon after ask for more concessions".

8. At Dean's suggestion and with our concurrence, it was agreed that the fisheries experts of the USA, Canada and some Western European countries should meet next Monday to exchange views on the technical aspects of the problems which our proposal raises for certain European countries. Dean suggested that some form of bilateral or regional agreements might be developed at a later date to minimize the damage which might be caused to those countries.

9. If suggestion about approach to French Embassy appeals to you suggest if possible it be done today as debate starts Monday. Having regard to difference between attitude of Gros and Simonette, who is no longer here, think message to French government repeating concern expressed in Ottawa might result in instructions which would reduce vigour of the campaign against our proposal which largely stems from Gros.

[GEORGE] DREW

52.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 268

Geneva, March 31, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 239 Mar 22.

For Personal Attention of Cadieux.

UN CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA — WEEKLY REPORT NO. 5
FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 29

Committee I — Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone

1. As reported in paragraph 3 of our reference telegram the Committee began its considerations of Articles 15 to 25 on Monday last. The provisional closing date for amendments on these articles was Tuesday morning. At that time no fewer than 125 amendments had been entered in respect of these articles. A good many of these were amendments of form which were set aside for the time being; also many of the amendments had similar aims and working parties composed of the proponents were fairly successful in reaching joint amendments.

2. The main discussion in the Committee has centered around the definition of the right of innocent passage, i.e. Article 15 of the International Law Commission's report and, to some extent, Articles 16, 17 and 18. The two main contentious issues in respect of Article

15 and, in particular sub-paragraph (3) which has come in for the greatest amount of discussion are (a) whether a ship's conduct in passage (as recommended by the ILC) or the passage itself should constitute grounds for a coastal State challenging the innocence of passage; and (b) whether a breach of the ILC articles or other rules of international law should (as the ILC recommends) or should not repeat not render passage not repeat not innocent.

3. Following upon deliberations of a working group the USA has proposed an amendment to paragraph 3 of Article 15 as follows:

"Passage is innocent so long as it is not prejudicial to the security of the coastal State. Such passage shall take place in conformity with the present rules."

We are somewhat puzzled by USA sponsorship of a proposal which leaves to the coastal State such a broad discretion in determining the innocence of passage. This point has been forcefully made by the delegate of Israel.

4. In line with our instructions we have co-sponsored with Denmark, Italy and Yugoslavia a proposal to add a new paragraph 5 to Article 15 to provide as follows:

"Foreign fishing vessels shall enjoy the right of innocent passage through the territorial sea provided they observe the laws and regulations made and published by the coastal State in order to prevent them from fishing in that sea. They shall in particular have their gear stowed away."

With some drafting changes this addition appears likely to be accepted. The UK has indicated that it will be prepared to support the amendment with some formal changes. The USA on the other hand has indicated that it will oppose the amendment on grounds that what is sought to be achieved by this amendment is already covered by Article 18 of the ILC draft. This point of view is tenable but in view of our instructions we felt we should support the position that some other states are taking that there should be an unequivocal provision in the draft articles.

5. At week's end, even though the Committee is now meeting on Saturday, not a single vote has been taken on any provision of Section 3 in the ILC report. Indeed not only was there disagreement concerning the substance of some of the articles we were debating but there were developing lengthy wrangles concerning the procedure to be adopted in voting on the amendments and the ILC articles. Section 3 of the report is of course now put over since Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 come on for consideration on March 31.

6. As you know we tabled the "Canadian proposal" on Friday³⁹ and we intend introducing it on Monday March 31. There may be a further move to delay discussion of Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 but in our opinion the Conference has now reached the stage that if it does not attempt to reach some agreement on the breadth of the territorial sea and contiguous zone, it will become hopelessly bogged down in detailed discussion of the individual articles and procedural debate — at least this will apply to Committee One's deliberations.

7. We have no assurance of the number of votes which our proposal taken as a package, will command. It is almost certain that the Committee will also have the opportunity to vote on a proposal which would enable States to fix their own territorial limits between 3 and 12 miles and there is some whispering that the UK with the support of France and some other Western Europeans may propose an overall 6-mile limit for the territorial sea. Yugoslavia had beaten us to the draw in putting in an amendment to Article 66 which is in principle the same as ours. The text of this proposal is as follows:

³⁹ Voir Conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer, Documents officiels, Volume III: Première Commission, p. 254.

See United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, Official Records, Volume III, First Committee, p. 232.

“The coastal State is authorized to regulate the exploitation of the living resources of the sea in the contiguous zone and to reserve exclusive fishing rights therein for its nationals. It may exercise the control necessary to prevent and punish infringements of its fishing laws and regulations in its territory, its territorial sea and the contiguous zone.”

This is obviously a move to provide all the advantages of our proposal without the obligation of having to withdraw from territorial claims in excess of 3 miles which our package would call for.

Committee II — High Seas: General Régime

8. As reported earlier the general debate concluded on Wednesday March 19. Committee meetings were adjourned until Monday March 24 to enable delegations to consider a proposal by the Chairman concerning the conduct of work in the article by article discussion. The Chairman's proposal was that the work would proceed in two stages. The first stage would consist of a debate upon the substance of the articles and provisional votes would be taken upon the understanding that delegations would be free to alter their positions at the final voting. In the second stage delegations would confine themselves largely to matters of drafting. The subject of provisional voting was a controversial issue. The UK objected to this course. The subject was discussed at a meeting of the Canadian delegation and the decision taken to oppose the proposal for provisional voting mainly upon the grounds that it might have a tendency to harden positions on the part of delegations and also that it might conceivably become a precedent which other committees might follow. This matter was put to a vote on Monday March 24 and a vote taken on a UK proposal for omitting provisional voting and proceeding with the discussion of article by article with final voting at the conclusion of the debate on the various groups of related articles. The UK proposal was carried by a vote of 33 to 17 with Canada voting in favour of the UK proposal.

9. A Peruvian proposal for a postponement of consideration of Articles 26, 27 and 47 until it was known what restrictions upon fishing in the high seas were recommended by the Third Committee. The Peruvian proposal was defeated by a vote of 41 to 7 with four abstentions. Canada was one of the seven voting in favour of the Peruvian proposal.

10. The Committee then proceeded with the article by article discussion, commencing with Article 26 which defines the term “high seas” in paragraph 1 and “internal waters” in paragraph 2. As indicated in the working paper prepared for the general debate, Article 27 was discussed in conjunction with Article 26.

11. The Canadian delegate interposed to speak in favour of a Mexican amendment to Article 27 of which the purport was to declare that the several freedoms covered in the article, including the freedom of fishing could be exercised only in accordance with the rules of the draft code and other rules of international law. The purpose of the intervention was to safeguard the “Canadian proposal”; this course was adopted in accordance with the instructions contained in the commentary.

12. The debate centred mainly about a proposal by three of the iron curtain nations and Yugoslavia which was aimed at banning nuclear tests on the high seas. The UK countered this proposal by introducing a resolution which referred the subject of nuclear tests to the competence of the General Assembly. Somewhat surprisingly India proposed an amendment to the UK proposal which deleted part of the recital and referred the matter to the General Assembly for appropriate action. After some discussion as to the language of the Indian amendment the UK withdrew its proposal and both UK and USA announced acceptance of the Indian proposal. On the procedural side the Committee adopted a USA proposal to vote upon the Indian resolution before the proposal of the USSR bloc for banning nuclear tests. The vote upon the Indian resolution was finally held on Friday afternoon and was accepted by a vote of 51 to 1 with 14 abstentions. Canada spoke briefly in favour of the Indian proposal and voted for it. The sole vote against the proposal was cast by Japan. The USSR bloc abstained. The Committee then decided not repeat not to deal with the iron curtain proposal for banning nuclear tests.

13. Subsequently on Friday the Committee voted in favour of referring paragraph 2 of Article 26, being the definition of internal waters to Committee I. Otherwise the ILC draft of Article 26 was accepted.

Committee III — High Seas: Fishing

14. Committee III met five times during the week. The Chairman circulated a Conference document in which he formally proposed that the Committee consider Articles 49 to 60 in three main groups:

- (1) the conservation of living resources of the sea (Articles 50 to 56 and Article 60);
- (2) the peaceful settlement of disputes (Articles 57 to 59); and
- (3) the right to fish (Article 49).

This was agreed to. He also placed time limits on the submission of amendments to the articles as follows:

- Article 50, March 25;
- Articles 51 to 53 and 56, March 26;
- Articles 54, 55 and 60, March 28; and
- Articles 49 and 57 to 59, April 8.

It was proposed by Canada and agreed to, that two days should pass between the last day of submitting amendments and the first provisional voting thereon.

15. The order in which articles were to be considered received some attention. Cuba proposed that articles dealing with the competence of non-coastal states should be considered first. This was opposed by other Latin American countries who maintained that rights of coastal states should be given priority. When put to a vote the Cuban proposal carried 41 to 5 with 13 abstentions. A proposal by Poland to begin the discussion with Article 49 was rejected (34 to 14 and 9 abstentions). Yugoslavia submitted three amendments on procedure and priority of articles and all were rejected.

16. Debate on Article 50 started on Tuesday, March 25. This was also the deadline for submission of amendments to this article. Following the two-day rule for voting the article was put to a vote on Thursday March 27.

17. Two amendments were submitted to Article 50; one by Sweden proposing that "conservation programmes should be formulated with a view to securing in the first place a supply of food for human consumption", and one submitted jointly by Costa Rica, Mexico, Peru and the UAR which proposed that "conservation programmes should be formulated with due regard to the special interests of the coastal state in the maintenance of the productivity of the resources of the high seas in the vicinity of its coasts". The first amendment was put to a vote without much debate and was accepted 32 to 7 with 26 abstentions (Canada abstaining) the second amendment was hotly debated with Cuba, Canada, USA, UK and others protesting that this was not repeat not the right place to introduce matters pertaining to the special rights of coastal states, which will be dealt with in Articles 54 and 55. It would only introduce a highly controversial subject into the definition of conservation. If this concept, they warned, were kept in this context they would be forced to vote against it. The proponents of the amendment on the other hand maintained that this amendment rounded out the definition of conservation, gave it some purpose and that the whole idea was agreed to at the Rome Conference. When put to a vote this amendment was voted down 32 to 26 with 8 abstentions, Canada voting against the amendment. Article 50 was passed as amended.

18. Amendments to Articles 51 to 53 and 56 continue to be submitted and discussed. By Friday night 39 amendments on the remaining fishery articles had been distributed. Articles 51 to 53 and 56 come up for vote in week of March 31.

Committee IV — Continental Shelf

19. This has been a productive week and the Committee has adopted texts for Articles 67 and 68 — the two most important articles in Section III of the ILC report. A beginning was also made Saturday morning on the discussion of Article 69.

20. The amended text of Article 67 as adopted by a vote of 51 in favour, including Canada, 9 against with 10 abstentions is that of the original ILC draft with the addition of an amendment proposed by the Philippines which reads as follows: "All references in the articles to "continental shelf" shall be understood to apply also to similar submarine areas adjacent to and surrounding the coasts of islands." The Canadian proposal was defeated along with similar amendments seeking a 550 metre depth put forward by the UK and the Netherlands. Support for the criterion of exploitability was particularly evident among the Latin Americans while the 200-metre depth enjoyed fairly widespread support among all groups.

21. Article 68 was adopted with five amendments by a vote of 34 in favour, 14 against with 17 abstentions. The only change in the wording of the ILC text was the substitution of the word "exclusive" for "sovereign" as a result of the adoption of the USA proposal which was carried by an exceedingly narrow margin of 21 in favour, 20 against with 27 abstentions. This accounts for the way the vote finally split on the article as amended. It is expected that there will be great difficulty later in reaching a two thirds majority in the plenary session because of the deletion of the word "sovereign". Most of the Latin Americans, the Soviet bloc, the Arabs, Canada and India voted against the USA amendment while UK, Australia, New Zealand and Pakistan abstained.

22. An important amendment adopted to Article 68 was the definition of natural resources put forward in a joint proposal by Australia, Ceylon, Malaya, India, Norway and the UK. While Canada did not co-sponsor this proposal Kask and Carty sat on a small informal Commonwealth group of scientists and lawyers who worked out the definition which excludes bottom fish and crustacea but includes such sedentary species as clams, oysters, pearl oysters, coral and sponges.

23. The remaining three adopted amendments to Article 68 were those proposed by Argentina, Yugoslavia and the UK. The UK amendment made it clear that the rights of the coastal State to exploit the subsoil by means of tunnelling from terra firma was not repeat not subject to any limit in terms of the depth of the superjacent waters. We abstained on the ground that this right already existed. The other two amendments simply sought to incorporate in the text of the article the idea contained in the commentary of the ILC report that if the coastal State does not exercise its rights over the shelf other States may not do so without its consent. These two amendments which both express the same thought will be subject later to drafting changes.

24. Texts of Articles 67 and 68 as adopted by the Committee are being forwarded by air.

Committee V — Landlocked States

25. General debate concluded this week with a number of speakers expressing disagreement with the suggestion that principle of right of access to the sea of landlocked countries should be recognized as part of international law. India, Pakistan and Thailand expressed strong views in that sense. India suggested that discussion was premature and that the matter should be referred to the ILC. Pakistan's view was that codification of any principles would be ultra vires of General Assembly resolution. Canada made a brief statement expressing sympathy with and understanding of the problems of landlocked countries and suggested postponement of general debate for three days in order to allow delegations to prepare and examine various proposals.

26. Activity by Committee V was noteworthy this week for corridor discussions. The UK, the Netherlands and Italy have introduced a draft resolution which the Committee will consider as one possibility during the next stage of its debates which began March 29. The landlocked countries to which certain maritime countries have associated themselves have also put forward a formal proposal consisting of nine principles which are similar to those which resulted from the preliminary conference last February.

27. In addition to certain differences of substance the two proposals do not repeat not have the same purpose. The UK-Netherlands-Italian suggestion referred to above is that a resolution be adopted by the Conference recognizing the needs of landlocked countries and recommending that countries concerned take these problems into account. On the other hand the proposal from the landlocked countries tends towards inclusion of principles in the form of articles into a treaty. Ends.

53.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 274

Geneva, March 31, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA — CANADIAN PROPOSAL

1. This morning I made a statement introducing the Canadian proposal to amend Articles 3 and 66. The text of the statement is incorporated in a separate telegram.†

2. Following my statement the representative of Yugoslavia made an explanation of the Yugoslav amendment to Article 66 which seeks to accomplish the same result as our amendment to Article 66, but in a more detailed manner. (See paragraph 7 of Our Tel 268, March 31, 1958.) The Yugoslav representative suggested that the Canadian proposal in respect of Article 66 would be examined by them, but took pains to point out that this would be without prejudice to the Yugoslav position on Article 3. This position, which had been explained during the general debate, was that States should be free to determine their own territorial limits between 3 and 12 miles.

3. The Mexican representative then introduced a formal proposal that "every State is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of 12 nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with Articles 4 and 5". The Mexican representative explained that this proposal was being put forward by his delegation along with that of India. The reason behind this proposal, he stated, was that international practice clearly indicated that the 3-mile limit was not the rule on the breadth of the territorial sea; that there was clearly a variable factor in international practice which had to be taken account of in any codification of a rule and that the outside limit with few exceptions which States claimed for the territorial sea was 12 miles.

4. Just before the Mexican representative introduced the joint Mexican-Indian proposal, Sen (Chairman of the Indian Delegation) spoke to me privately and explained that Indian co-sponsorship of the joint proposal did not signify a firm position on India's part. They were in fact still awaiting instructions on what their final attitude should be towards the Canadian proposal, their co-sponsorship of the Mexican proposal merely arose from the fact that their initial position which had already been stated in the general debate, was that a 3 to 12 mile "choose it yourself" rule might be an acceptable solution. Sen said that while they had allowed their name to go forward as a co-sponsor of this proposal, they would not speak immediately and hoped in the meantime to receive final instructions.

The debate on Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 has been adjourned until Wednesday to enable delegations to submit their amendments.

[GEORGE] DREW

54.

PCO

*Note du ministre des Pêcheries
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Fisheries
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 51-58

[Ottawa], April 2, 1958

SECRET

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA
GENEVA, FEBRUARY- APRIL 1958

Perhaps the most important problem now being debated at the Conference on the Law of the Sea is that of the breadth of the territorial sea. Mexico and India have recently proposed that states be allowed to settle in their own discretion the breadth of the territorial sea between three and twelve miles. While this position appears attractive to some Latin-American and many African and Asian countries, and is strongly supported by the Soviet Union, it is opposed by leading maritime powers, particularly the United States and United Kingdom, which consider that an extension of the territorial limits to twelve miles would have serious effects on the operation abroad of their naval vessels and aircraft. In views of this opposition, it is unlikely that the proposal of Mexico and India will be acceptable to a two-thirds majority of the Conference. On the other hand, it is equally unlikely that the Conference will agree on retaining the traditional three-mile territorial limit for all purposes, including fishing.

2. On March 17, the Head of the Canadian Delegation put forward a compromise plan (approved by Cabinet on February 18, 1958,) which calls for the establishment of a twelve-mile contiguous zone in which exclusive fishing rights would be reserved for coastal states. In effect, the Canadian proposal involves acceptance of the International Law Commission's recommendation that a twelve-mile contiguous zone be established for customs, fiscal and sanitary purposes, with, however, the modification that it cover fisheries as well. As our proposal allows the traditional three-mile territorial limit to be retained, it obviates the security objections put forward by the United States and United Kingdom.

3. While the Canadian statement elicited favourable support from a wide number of delegations, it is too early to assess with any certainty what are its possibilities for success. There are, however, intimations that it is the only plan which has a reasonable chance of being acceptable to a two-thirds majority of the Conference. The United States has recently informed us that they are prepared to give it their support and India appears to be reconsidering its earlier position. However, the positions of the United Kingdom and France, as well as that of a few other Western European Delegations interested in distant water fishing, appear distinctly unfavourable. Their opposition appears to be based on the fact that if the Canadian proposal is accepted by the Conference, it will result in the adoption of a new general rule of law involving the exclusion of foreign fishermen from the contiguous zone. Although, according to most recent data, France, Portugal and Spain take approximately only 10 per cent of their total cod production from within a twelve-mile area off Canadian coasts, and the United Kingdom an even smaller percentage, the total amount of cod production of these countries which takes place within twelve-mile zones off other coasts is of course significantly greater. (France possesses treaty rights along certain Canadian coasts, which presumably would not be affected by our proposal.) In the past, we have pointed out to these countries that while there is no question that as an alternative to the general acceptance of the straight three-mile territorial sea the Canadian proposal will involve sacrifices for certain countries, nevertheless, it is apparent that, if the Conference were to fail, many states would not adhere to the three-mile limit, but would claim exclusive fishing rights in even wider areas.

4. It was hoped earlier that these Western European countries, recognizing that a situation highly prejudicial to their interests was likely to develop if the Conference failed to reach any agreement, would adopt a less unfavourable attitude to the Canadian proposal; most recently however it appears that their opposition to our proposal has been hardening. The French have intimated us that they would prefer the Conference break up without any agreement whatsoever on this matter rather than our proposal be adopted. The United Kingdom, which has let it be known that they plan to oppose our proposal publicly in the near future, has now formally proposed to the Conference a six-mile limit to the territorial sea.

5. In view of the fact that the Canadian proposal is likely to continue to meet with strong opposition from these influential countries, thus lessening appreciably its chances for success, and that whether or not the Conference adopts our plan, we may be faced with a lingering ill-will in several Western European countries, it would seem desirable to take measures to meet this situation in some appropriate manner.

6. There seems little question that these states would consider most satisfactory the recognition by countries off whose coasts they fish (for example, Canada, Iceland, Norway and Denmark) of so-called traditional fishing rights. That agreement on our part to recognize such rights would defeat the purpose of our proposal is at once apparent, having regard to the fact that its chief appeal arises from the fact that it calls for the establishment of a twelve-mile zone exclusively reserved for the fishermen of the coastal state. This approach would also seem equally unsatisfactory from the point of view of countries like Iceland, Norway and Denmark, whose position must, of course, be considered in the formulation of any plan which is directed at reducing the opposition of fishing countries to our proposal.

7. A second approach would be to recognize the "rights" of countries which have traditionally fished within the twelve-mile zone, but subject to the imposition of quotas concerning the amount of fish that can actually be taken. Entirely aside from the fact that it would, of course, be difficult to reach agreement on the amount of these quotas, any such arrangement would be exceedingly troublesome to enforce. Furthermore, while this manner of dealing with the problem, like that of unqualifiedly recognizing "traditional" rights, might prevent certain countries which have not, in the past, fished regularly off our eastern coasts, — for example, the Soviet Union — from doing so in the future, nevertheless it might establish a dangerous precedent with regard to fishing off our Western coasts by Soviet and Japanese nationals.

8. A third possibility, which is not open to the objections raised in the earlier cases, would be to allow those European countries claiming traditional rights in contiguous zones to continue their present operations in such areas over a period of years while their fishing fleets were being adjusted to slightly different fishing areas. As any such arrangements could hardly be worked out during the course of the Conference, it would seem that the most that could be done would be to give an assurance that negotiations would be undertaken later with a view to concluding a series of bilateral agreements between those countries claiming "traditional rights" and those off whose coasts the alleged rights are exercised. Even if our proposal is adopted by the Conference, a period of from two to three years is likely to elapse before the Convention embodying it is generally ratified and our proposal implemented. It might therefore be agreed between ourselves and countries whose position is similar to ours that during a period of approximately five years, (an upward adjustment could be made if circumstances require) countries claiming "traditional rights" might be allowed to continue their current areas of fishing operations pending any necessary adjustments. It would be understood that such arrangements would only be contemplated if the opposing Western European countries were prepared to alter their attitude concerning our proposal.

9. I therefore recommend, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that Cabinet approve the course of action described in the immediately preceding paragraph; that, as a first step, the Delegation in Geneva be authorized to approach Denmark, Iceland and Norway, and other Delegations should this prove necessary; and that, should these countries be agreeable to our suggestion, the Delegation be authorized to raise it with those European Delegations concerned.

J. ANGUS MACLEAN

55.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 3, 1958

Present

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the Chair,
The Minister of Public Works
and Acting Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Green),
The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming),
The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer),
The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes),
The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
The Minister of Justice and
Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton),
The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan),
The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness),
The Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough),
The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean),
The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr),
The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton),
The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois),
The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
The Minister of Northern Affairs and
National Resources (Mr. Alvin Hamilton),
The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith).
The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
The Assistant Secretaries to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier), (Mr. Martin),
The Registrar of the Cabinet (Mr. Halliday).

. . .

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA; FURTHER
INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN DELEGATION
(PREVIOUS REFERENCE MARCH 4)

33. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that, while the Canadian compromise plan for a twelve-mile contiguous zone, in which exclusive fishing rights would be reserved for the coastal states, had been favourably received by a large number of delegations at the Conference on the Law of the Sea, and the United States had recently indicated they were prepared to support it, the United Kingdom and France, with other western European delegations, were against the plan and it was unlikely to carry.

However, it appeared that, of all the proposals, the Canadian was the only one that had a reasonable chance of obtaining the necessary two-thirds majority and it seemed desirable to do something. It was thought that a proposal for an interim period of adjustment might have some success. This would mean that the 9-mile contiguous zone for fishing would be agreed to but would not come into force for approximately five years, during which period the fishing fleets of other countries would adjust themselves to different fishing areas. Arrangements with individual countries claiming traditional rights could not be worked out during the conference but an assurance would be given that negotiations would be undertaken for a series of bilateral agreements on this point. It would be understood that such an undertaking would only be given if the opposing western European countries were prepared to alter their attitude on the original Canadian proposal.

The Minister of Fisheries, with Mr. Smith's concurrence, had therefore recommended that this course of action be approved and that, as a first step, the Canadian Delegation be authorized to approach Denmark, Iceland, and Norway, and other delegations, if necessary, and if there was agreement, the delegation be authorized to raise the plan with the west European Delegations concerned.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated, (Memorandum, Minister of Fisheries, April 2, 1958-Cab. Doc.51/58).

34. During the discussion the following points were made:

(a) Latest press reports indicated that the United Kingdom had altered its position and was recommending a six-mile zone. It was not clear whether this was three and three, or a full six-mile territorial limit.

(b) The paragraph in the circulated document setting out the adjustment suggestion, seemed to imply that it would only concern European countries. Fishermen on the west coast were much concerned over U.S. fishing in Canadian waters within twelve miles of the coast. It must be made certain that the adjustment plan would not confirm or recognize any U.S. traditional rights and it should be stated clearly that the compromise applied to America as well as Europe and that the contiguous zone would be recognized by the U.S. at the end of the adjustment period. On the other hand, the U.S. Delegation had already come around to the Canadian proposal of the three and nine mile zones.

35. The Cabinet agreed that the Canadian Delegation at the International Conference on the Law of the Sea, at Geneva, be authorized to make the necessary approaches to European Delegations concerned, with a view to obtaining approval for a plan by which the contiguous zone for control of fishing would be adopted only after a period of adjustment of, say five years; it being understood that this approval was contingent on the United States firmly accepting the proposal as applying to their fishing in waters adjacent to Canada.

R.B. BRYCE
Secretary to the Cabinet

56. DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 291

Geneva, April 3, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

(For Personal Attention Cadieux).

BREADTH OF THE TERRITORIAL SEA

1. Monday evening March 31, Manningham-Buller invited me to see him, Fitzmaurice and Curtis also being present. UK explained that they proposed as result of recent Cabinet decision to hand in a proposal⁴⁰ Tuesday afternoon in First Committee. Text of their proposal is included in Manningham-Buller speech of yesterday telegraphed to you. UK explained that this decision compelled them [to] state openly their opposition to Canadian proposal.

2. I expressed keen disappointment at this decision which created wholly new situation. The UK move would not only draw away support for Canadian proposal but brought into question the integrity of the arguments for the 3-mile limit put forward by UK both at press conference by Manningham-Buller and by UK statement to First Committee. UK position then had been that 3-mile limit not only essential but in law the one recognized limit departure from which would be retrograde step. Now even before vote taken on Canadian proposal UK was coming forward with a proposal which was inconsistent with earlier position taken by them. UK replied Canadian proposal wholly unacceptable to them because of 12-mile fishing zone. On this UK could and would not repeat not budge because 12-mile fishing zone would be ruinous UK fishing industry. UK expressed confidence that their proposal would command substantial support and that Canadian proposal not repeat not likely to gain the necessary majority. I strongly insisted that up to the present point Canadian proposal was attracting a good deal of support and stood a good chance of gaining a sufficient vote for its adoption. I was equally emphatic that I did not think UK proposal would gain sufficient votes. I insisted that if there was a danger of a 12-mile territorial sea being accepted by the Conference this danger would be greatly increased by UK proposal because the moment the UK departed from 3-mile limit arguments would immediately be strengthened that territorial sea should be 12 miles. UK replied that their proposal was a concession by them for the sake of agreement and under no repeat no circumstances would they go beyond six.

3. Stabell of Norwegian Delegation with an adviser joined discussion. Stabell indicated that Norway had decided to support Canadian proposal and expressed deep concern on learning of UK intentions. Stabell's position paralleled the Canadian position, Stabell arguing strongly against UK proposal and advisability of its introduction particularly at this point.

4. A second meeting took place with both UK and USA representatives on afternoon of April 1st. After Manningham-Buller had opened by referring to the UK decision I asked whether he was aware of the Indian amendment just filed to Article 49 to provide exclusive fishing up to 12 miles. I referred to the UK understanding indicated at the previous meeting that India was likely to support the new UK position. (My understanding from Sen had been contrary to the UK indication). Manningham-Buller was clearly taken by surprise and an invitation was sent to Sen to join the meeting.

5. On enquiry after he arrived Sen stated that the Indian amendment had been decided on before they knew of the UK decision and had been advanced as a "compromise". They hoped that by providing separately for the fishing problem the possibility of compromise on the territorial sea would be increased. They understood that the UK proposal was strictly a 6-mile proposal on fishing. Manningham-Buller appeared satisfied with this

⁴⁰ La proposition du Royaume-Uni prévoyait une mer territoriale de six milles, sans zone de pêche contiguë de 12 milles. Voir Conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer, Documents officiels, Volume III: Première Commission, p. 271.

The United Kingdom proposal called for a territorial sea of six miles with no 12 mile contiguous fishing zone. See United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, Official Records, Volume III, First Committee, pp. 247-248.

although there was nothing to support the previous suggestion stated by him that India was likely to be satisfied with 6-miles for fishing.

6. Further discussion took place on merits of Canadian and UK proposals and effect on Conference of introduction of UK proposal. In the course of this Mr. Dean stated with great bluntness and vigour that USA would not repeat not in any circumstances and at any stage compromise on the 3-mile limit for territorial waters. They would support the Canadian proposal and would oppose the UK proposal with all possible vigour.

7. The meeting concluded without any move from the positions of either [texte manquant/text missing].

8. In the Commonwealth meeting April 2, although the agenda did not include breadth of the territorial sea, Manningham-Buller immediately set forth UK decision and explained their position. He said the Canadian proposal was unacceptable and that the UK would openly oppose it and pursue its opposition relentlessly. He sought to close discussion at this point but I insisted that the Canadian attitude should be explained and did so. I said I wanted it understood by Commonwealth representatives that the UK decision came as a complete surprise and was marked departure from their position on the 3-mile limit which along with USA position had influenced Canada strongly in working out its proposal. I said we intended to follow through on our proposal vigorously. In reply to enquiry by Ceylon and India as to whether UK decision altered the Canadian position I said it did not repeat not.

9. I said that our main concern at all times had been in regard to a 12-mile fishing zone which had been enforced against our own trawlers for many years. While not so much directly concerned with width of territorial sea we had been impressed by arguments put forward privately by UK and USA Delegations in regard to the vital military importance of retaining the 3-mile limit for the territorial sea. We had therefore put forward a single proposal which we had hoped would gain the support of those who rigidly adhered or had said they did to a 3-mile territorial limit in the hope that we might in turn gain their support of those nations which demanded a much larger fishing zone.

10. Notes are being sent by airbag giving full details on the meetings of March 31 and April 1.

11. Yesterday in Committee One the UK proposal was introduced as planned. Mr. Dean immediately gave a statement on the USA position. He said that he had listened with sincere regret to the statement by Manningham-Buller. On behalf of the USA he said they were in favour of retaining 3-mile territorial limit as best for all nations and all circumstances. USA believes any departure would be a blow to free world and obligations USA has assumed. USA believes Canadian proposal a constructive step forward and in best interest of states old and new and its adoption would make Conference a real success. USA support for Canadian proposal not repeat not a bargaining position but as help to success of Conference. Dean made clear that USA cannot repeat not compromise on 3-miles. USA would oppose UK proposal and Dean reiterated support of Canadian proposal.

12. Earlier in day USA had filed a proposal which except for different phrasing of Article 3 is duplicate of Canadian proposal. Dean explained privately that purpose of USA filing was to put on record USA support of Canadian proposal.

[GEORGE] DREW

57.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 294

Geneva, April 3, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 268 Mar 31.

(For Personal Attention Cadieux).

UN CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — WEEKLY REPORT NO 6
FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 3

Committee One (Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone)

On March 31 the Committee again took up Articles One, Two, Three and 66 which had been postponed. As reported in our telegram 274 March 31 we introduced our proposal with a statement the text of which you have.

2. As outlined in above-mentioned telegram two other proposals were introduced: one an amendment to Article 66 by Yugoslavia and the other a proposal co-sponsored by Mexico and India and introduced by Mexico. The Yugoslav amendment to Article 66 provides: "The coastal State is authorized to regulate the exploitation of the living resources of the sea in the contiguous zone and to reserve exclusive fishing rights therein for its nationals. It may exercise the control necessary to prevent and punish infringements of its fishing laws and regulations in its territorial sea and the contiguous zone." (Document C1/54).

3. The joint India-Mexico proposal provides: "Every State is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of 12 nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with Articles 4 and 5." (Doc. C1/79).

4. Following the introduction of these proposals the debate was again adjourned until April 3 and a provisional time limit for receipt of proposals was set for the evening of April 2.

5. In the meantime the Committee went on with its consideration of Articles 15, 16, 17 and 18 and adopted the texts indicated in Articles 15(3), 17 and 18.

Article 15(3): "Passage is innocent so long as it is not prejudicial to the peace good order or security of the coastal State. Such passage shall take place in conformity with the present rules and to other rules of international law." 55 in favour (including Canada) none against and 8 abstentions.

Article 17(1): "The coastal State may take the necessary steps in its territorial sea to prevent passage which is not innocent." 36 (including Canada) in favour 21 against and 10 abstentions.

Article 17 paragraph 2 of the ILC text was adopted without vote.

Article 17(3): "Subject to the provisions of paragraph 4 the coastal State may without discrimination among foreign ships suspend temporarily in specific areas of its territorial sea the innocent passage of foreign ships if such suspension is essential for the protection of its security. Such suspension shall take effect only after having been duly published." 31 in favour (including Canada) 27 against and 5 abstentions.

Article 17(4): "There shall be no suspension of the innocent passage of foreign ships through straits which are used for international navigation between one part of the high seas and another part of the high seas or the territorial sea of a foreign State." 31 in favour (including Canada) 30 against and 10 abstentions.

France proposed the addition of a paragraph providing: "The measures which can be taken by the coastal State under paragraphs 1 and 2 above include checking the radio activity emitted by a nuclear power ship including checking board of the crew and of any material that may leave the ship from the time of its entry into territorial waters when the ship is bound for a port of the said "State." The vote on this proposal was 16 in favour 23 against 25 abstentions (including Canada). Also the Netherlands and Greece proposed a new paragraph providing: "The passage of foreign ships traversing the territorial sea without entering internal waters shall not be suspended for reasons based on the provenance or destination of the ship its crew passengers or cargo". This was defeated by a vote of 18 in favour (including Canada) 31 against and 19 abstentions.

6. It will be seen that the amendments to Article 17 of the ILC text carried only by bare majorities and it is doubtful if they can command the necessary 2/3 majority in plenary. As to the likely outcome in plenary it is perhaps significant that after many hours of discussion much of it procedural wrangling the Committee finally adopted the ILC version of Article 18 by a unanimous vote. 57 in favour (including Canada) none against and 3 abstentions.

7. It seems that most delegations can actually live with the ILC draft articles if their own amendments are unsuccessful. Unfortunately for the course of the Conference too many delegations seem to be under the impression that the Conference can draft a better set of articles in nine weeks than the ILC has done in eight years.

8. The debate on Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 was taken up again on Wednesday April 2. The first statement was that of the UK introducing its proposal which provides in part: "The limit of the breadth of the territorial sea shall not extend beyond 6 miles. Extension to this limit shall not however affect existing rights of passage for aircraft and vessels including warships outside 3 miles." (C1/L134). The UK statement was followed immediately by an announcement by the USA of its support for the Canadian proposal.

9. The following are the more important amendments which have been submitted for Articles 3 and 66:

1. Sweden: "The breadth of the territorial sea shall be fixed by the coastal State but may not exceed 6 marine miles." (C1/12).

2. USSR: "Each State shall determine the breadth of its territorial waters in accordance with established practice within the limits as a rule of 3 to 12 miles having regard to historical and geographical conditions, economic interests, the interest of security of the coastal State, and the interest of international navigation." (C1/L80).

3. Ceylon: "The territorial sea shall extend to 6 nautical miles from the baseline drawn in a manner provided in Articles 4 and 5." (C1/L136)

4. Greece: "The territorial sea extends to 3 nautical miles from the baseline drawn in accordance with Articles 4 and 5." (C1/L136).

5. Italy: "Each State has the right to fix the breadth of its territorial sea but in no case shall that breadth exceed 6 nautical miles." (C1/L137).

6. USA: substitute the following text for Article 3: "The breadth of the territorial sea is 3 miles." Article 66: Add the following as paragraph 2 (the present paragraph 2 being renumbered 3): "The coastal State has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea in this zone as it has in its territorial sea".

(CTI/L140). The USA proposal has a comment reading: "In the view of the sponsor the above constitutes a single proposal and should be discussed and voted upon as such."

7. Proposes that a new paragraph should be added at the end of Article 66 reading: "In exceptional circumstances where the people are primarily dependent on its coastal fisheries for its livelihood and/or economic development the State concerned has the right to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the fisheries up to the necessary distance from the coast in view of relevant local consideration." (C1/L131).

Committee II (High Seas — General Régime)

10. On March 31 voting proceeded on Article 27 — freedom of the high seas. A Yugoslav proposal for the deletion of the Article in its entirety and the substitution of a new article was defeated. The real purpose of the Yugoslav proposal was to add to the ILC draft a provision prohibiting the use of the high seas for purposes which might adversely affect nationals of other states. This was obviously aimed at the question of nuclear tests. A UK proposal to amend Article 27 by adding a provision, the tenor of which was that States should have reasonable regard for the rights of others in the use of the high seas, was accepted. Also accepted was a Mexican proposal which provided that the exercise of freedom must be in accordance with these rules and other rules of international law. Except for these amendments the ILC draft of Article 27 was accepted. Text of article as accepted is being forwarded.

11. The Committee agreed to postpone voting on groups II, III and IV until the conclusion of the debate on all three groups in order that voting could proceed seriatim instead of in the order of the groupings.

12. The debate on Articles 28, right of navigation, 34, safety of navigation, 35, penal jurisdiction in matters of collision, 36, duty to render assistance, 29, nationality of ships, 30, status of ships, and 31, ships sailing under two flags, has now concluded. From the tenor of the debate there appears to be a possibility that the ILC draft will be accepted with minor amendments. As regards Article 29 there is wide acceptance of the "genuine link" concept as amended by an Italian proposal which provides that the flag state must exercise jurisdiction and control in the administrative technical and social fields. This appears acceptable to Canada and other Commonwealth nations have expressed agreement.

13. Four meetings were held during the week on Articles 51 to 53 and 56. Eleven amendments were submitted to Article 51 but consolidated by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, UK and Yugoslavia into a joint amendment. At the instance of Latin American countries it was agreed 57 to 9 with 6 abstentions that the special interests of the coastal State be accepted in principle and incorporated into the appropriate articles by the drafting committee.

14. The joint proposal when put to a vote was accepted 57 (including Canada) to 0 with 6 abstentions. Article 51 as amended carried by 58 (including Canada) to 2 with 4 abstentions. As amended it read as follows: "A State whose nationals are engaged in fishing any stock or stocks of fish or other living marine resources in any area of the high seas where the nationals of other States are not thus engaged shall adopt for its own nationals measures in that area when necessary for the purpose of the conservation of the living resources affected."

15. Fourteen amendments were submitted for Article 52 paragraph 1. Nine countries (France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden, UK and Yugoslavia) again consolidated their several amendments into one. Their joint amendment was passed 42 to 0 with 5 abstentions and read as follows: "If the nationals of two or more States are engaged in fishing the same stock or stocks of fish or other living marine resources in any area or areas of the high seas these States shall at the request of any of them enter into negotiations with a view to prescribing by agreement for their nationals the necessary measures for the conservation of such resources.”

16. Consideration of paragraph 2 of Articles 52 and 53 is postponed until Articles 57 and 59 are considered.

17. Twelve amendments were submitted to paragraph 1 of Article 53. A joint USSR-Polish amendment providing that newcomers to a fishery should be admitted “on an equal footing” and no “discrimination” in matters of conservation measures was defeated. It was agreed 54 to 0 with 4 abstentions that a Yugoslav proposal introducing “no discrimination” would be handled by the drafting committee.

18. Six States (France, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden, UK and USA) submitted a joint consolidated amendment to paragraph 1 of this article which was adopted.

19. Article 53(1) as amended was passed 32 to 7 with 13 abstentions: “If subsequent to the adoption of the measures referred to in Articles 51 and 52 nationals of other States engage in fishing the same stock or stock of fish or other living marine resources in any area or areas of the high seas the other States shall apply the measures which shall not discriminate against them to their nationals no later than 7 months after the date on which the measures shall have been notified to the Director General of the Food and Agriculture Organization. The Director General shall notify such measures to any State which so requests and in any case to any State specified by the State initiating the measure”.

20. Eleven amendments were submitted to Article 56.

21. A French proposal placing the burden of scientific proof on the non-fishing but interested States when they asked that conservation measures be adopted was approved 35 to 6 with 15 abstentions. After some debate Article 56 with amendments was accepted by a vote of 45 to 2 with 14 abstentions. The exact wording of the amendment as adopted was not available at the time of reporting.

22. On disposing of Articles 50-53 and 56 the Committee took up Articles 54 and 55. Fourteen amendments had been submitted for Article 54. The Chairman asked the sponsors of the amendments to Article 54 to get together to see if they could be consolidated. Consideration of the consolidated articles is to take place next.

Committee IV: (Continental Shelf)

23. Committee IV adopted texts for Articles 69 and 70 as well as an additional article provisionally numbered 68A. Details on voting were reported in our telegram 277† and 278† April 1. Article 71 was adopted with a number of amendments April 3. Details on voting will follow.

Committee V: (Landlocked Countries)

24. The second phase of committee work has begun and will comprise study of the two proposals enclosed in our letter 208.† Chairman (Zourek) suggested that 19-power proposal be considered first and that examination of UK-Dutch-Italian draft resolution would follow. In his view the Committee should consider only at the end of its work the form in which decisions should be embodied.

25. Many friendly delegations objected to the Chairman’s suggestions with regard to organization of the Committee’s work. Zourek finally gave in and it was agreed that both proposals would be considered concurrently it being understood that delegates could refer to the [group corrupt] Convention declaration or resolution during the discussions.

26. Debate is not progressing rapidly and the delegates are still arguing as to the purpose of the expression "right of access to the sea" as contained in paper submitted by 19-powers.

27. At opening of the discussions earlier this week Switzerland, Austria and Luxembourg objected strongly to inclusion of maritime countries as co-sponsors of the nine "principles". We understand that Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan and Bolivia without consulting their landlocked partners arranged to add countries like Albania, Bulgaria, Tunisia, UAR, etc. to list of sponsors. Ambassador Ruegger of Switzerland said in furious mood that impression was being given that some maritime countries had participated in drafting of nine principles. He considered it "premature and irregular" to seek co-sponsorship of sea-faring countries. Obviously there exists many disagreements among landlocked countries and things are not going well between them. However, it is yet too soon to predict what will come out of Committee V.

58.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference*

TELEGRAM L-102

Ottawa, April 7, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

Tyler Thompson, USA Minister in Ottawa, informed us today that the Embassy had been requested by Washington to express to us the serious concern of USA about the prospects for success of the Canadian formula in view of the latest developments at the Conference. These were mentioned as the recent UK proposal for a 6-mile limit to the territorial sea and joint proposal for a 3 to 12 mile discretionary limit. In view of this concern USA considers it important to obtain greater Western European support for our proposal and that it should therefore be amended so as to take care of those countries concerned about their historic fishing fights.

2. Thompson informed us that USA still estimates that the 12-mile contiguous fishing zone is the only formula which can swing the Conference away from the 12-mile limit, and for this reason considers it imperative to have a formula with the greatest possible appeal. They regard some form of understanding as necessary so that nations will not repeat not be excluded from areas where their nationals have historically fished, if the Canadian proposal is to carry the important Western European group.

3. We were also given to understand by Thompson, on an informal basis, that such a move as suggested by them would be important in the USA because of mounting pressures in "industry" (presumably fishing) which might render USA ratification of our formula difficult.

4. We are passing this on to you now for your information and will, if necessary send you any further comments we may have after further consideration by officials tomorrow, Tuesday.

59.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 306

Geneva, April 9, 1958

SECRET

Reference: Your Tel L85 Apr 4.†

PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT FOR HISTORIC FISHING PRACTICES

Pursuant to the Cabinet decision as set forth in your telegram, I had a meeting yesterday with the Heads of the Delegations of Denmark and Iceland and Stabell, the Deputy Head of the Delegation of Norway. Robertson and Curtis were with me.

2. Portugal has filed an amendment to the Canadian proposal which would require the preservation of historic fishing practices in the contiguous zone and I used this amendment as a point of departure in raising the question as to whether the representatives of the other countries present thought it would be advantageous at this stage to make some move to meet the difficulties of the countries that have been fishing within the contiguous zone. I did not repeat not put forward the detailed proposal in your telegram at the outset as I thought it would be better first to get the general reaction of the other countries.

3. It became apparent that all had given some thought to the problem of adjustment for the countries that have been fishing hitherto. Denmark referred particularly to the need to negotiate with the UK in respect of fishing near the Faroes, and Norway also indicated that thought had been given to some bilateral arrangement for a period of adjustment. The Icelandic position was not repeat not as clear in this regard and I gained the impression they would be more reluctant to enter into any arrangement for an adjustment period but that it was not entirely to be excluded. With these indications of view the representatives also made it clear that they did not repeat not think there was any chance that their governments would be prepared to take a decision specifically on periods of adjustment before the Conference ends. Moreover, they were completely unanimous in the view that it would be thoroughly undesirable to have any amendment to our proposal that would provide either for the principle of adjustment or a period of adjustment as a general proposition.

4. Discussion then proceeded to the question whether there would be any advantage in indicating either confidentially or otherwise that we and the other countries present would be prepared to consider and enter into bilateral arrangements for a period of adjustment if our proposal were supported by the Western European countries and accepted. Mr. Stabell of Norway said bluntly that he did not repeat not think one single vote would be gained for our proposal by making any such indication and the other representatives agreed with him most emphatically. They all thought that such a move could not repeat not possibly gain Western European support at this stage. They also thought that if indications were given even on a confidential basis that such arrangements would be entered into this would become known and would be interpreted as a willingness to bargain away certain aspects of our proposal.

5. There was a good deal of discussion which is relevant to this question as to the sequence in which it would be desirable to have the various proposals voted on in order to improve the chances of success for the Canadian proposal. It was felt by all the representatives present, and this view is shared by the delegation here, that our proposal stands the best chance of success if it is voted on at or near the end. If it is voted on at an early point there seems little chance that it can gain a majority with other possibilities in the background. Stabell suggested the possibility of trying to arrange that voting should begin on the most extreme proposals with regard to the territorial sea and from those extreme limits move "inward" to our three-mile package proposal.

6. Following the meeting with Denmark, Iceland and Norway, I attended a meeting last night in Bailey's room for informal discussion on this question of the procedure in handling the proposals on the breadth of the territorial sea and especially of handling package proposals such as ours. Representatives of a number of countries were present including USA, UK, USSR, India, Mexico and other countries that have made proposals. It is apparent that there will be resistance by the USSR to voting on our proposal as a package but support for its treatment in this way will be forthcoming from most other countries. The meeting did not repeat not get around to more than a general discussion of sequence in voting and is to resume tomorrow.

7. In the light of the attitude of Denmark, Iceland and Norway and of the other considerations referred to above, I am strongly of the view that we should make no repeat no further move at this time in relation to a period of adjustment. I gather this is in accordance with the Cabinet view since your telegram refers to possible discussions with other countries only in the event that Denmark, Iceland and Norway were agreeable to the idea and it is certain that they are not repeat not.

8. With regard to the views expressed by Thompson, as set forth in your telegram L102 April 7, I think it likely that they are based more on pressure from and the interests of the USA fishing industry than on any conviction that an amendment of our proposal would gain Western European support.

9. Altogether I doubt if there are any new moves that can gain additional support for our proposal in the initial stages. Its main prospects depend upon the possibility of having it come after other proposals have been eliminated.

[GEORGE] DREW

60.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 326

Geneva, April 14, 1958

PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 294 Apr 3.

(For Personal Attention Cadieux).

UN CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — WEEKLY REPORT NO. 7
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 11

Committee I (Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone)

The Committee spent most of the week considering the remainder of Articles 15-25. The texts adopted for Articles 15(6) and 15(5), 16, 19, 20, 21 were reported in our telegrams Nos. 294 and 317†.

2. The text adopted for Article 24 and the vote thereon is as follows:

Article 24

“(1) The coastal State may make passage of warships through the territorial sea subject to previous authorization or notifications. Normally it shall grant innocent passage subject to the observance of the provisions of Articles 17 and 18:

(2) During the passage the warship shall enjoy complete immunity from the jurisdiction of every State other than its flag State.” 54 in favour 5 against (USA and UK) 8 abstentions (including Canada).

3. The Committee returned intermittently to consideration of Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66. A statement was made by India and was referred to in our telegrams 311† and 312†. Ceylon has entered an amendment (C1/L.149) to the Canadian proposal which would increase the territorial sea to six miles. Colombia introduced its proposal (C1/L.82 Corr.1) for a 12 plus 12 package and argued against the Mexico-India proposal because of its indefiniteness. Burma commended the Canadian proposal but said it suffers from the fact that the 3-mile limit is still in the foreground. But while urging compromise the representative of Burma expressed his “hearty support” for the India-Mexico proposal and the Soviet proposal. Pakistan came out strongly for the Canadian proposal and referred to the real spirit of compromise displayed by the USA in accepting the Canadian proposal.

4. Australia also made a further statement in support of our proposal.

5. The Portuguese have not yet introduced their amendment (C1/L.144) to our proposal (Reference our telegram 306 of April 9). This amendment would provide:

Add to paragraph 2:

“When however in zones which previously were where high seas nationals of other States have fished (for a long period of years) without damage to the stock the coastal State is bound to respect and maintain the right of those nationals to fish that stock subject only to the conservation measures internationally accepted in that area for that stock.”

Alternative

Should the last sentence of this amendment be rejected the following alternative wording is proposed:

“...subject only to non-discriminatory scientifically based measures of conservation.”

Comment:

“The expression “(for a long period of years)” is left to be defined to the satisfaction of the Committee and to be adequately drafted by the drafting committee”.

6. Saudi Arabia has also introduced a proposal (C1/L.152) in the form of a resolution intended “to be adopted in the event that the other main proposals based on the 12-mile limit are rejected.” The operative part of the resolution is as follows:

“Decides:

1. To request the Secretary-General of the UN to study ways and means including the convocation of a special conference with a view to arriving at an agreement on the extent of the territorial sea:

2. To accept the following principles until such agreement is realized:

(a) International practice is not uniform as regards the delimitation of the territorial sea:

(b) International law does not permit an extension of the territorial sea beyond twelve miles:

(c) The extension by a State of its territorial sea to a twelve-mile limit is not a breach of international law:

(d) The three-mile limit as a minimum is recognized as a rule of existing international law."

7. The UAR claiming that the Canadian proposal overlooked that many States want a territorial sea wider than 3 miles for reasons of defence stated its support of the India-Mexican proposal its merit being seen as a recognition of present international practice.

8. The Ukrainian SSR, Albania, Byelorussia and the USSR itself spoke in favour of the Soviet proposal.

9. The representative of the Lebanon indicated that his delegation would support the Mexican-Indian proposal and said that the USSR proposal merely codified anarchy.

10. The Committee began consideration of Article 4 ending by referring all but one of the amendments to the Committee on Form, the remaining amendment to stand over discussion when Article 5 is before the Committee.

Committee II (High Seas — General Régime)

11. At the opening of the meeting on April 8 the Chairman announced that April 16 was the time limit fixed for concluding the work of the Committee. Debate on Articles 32 and 33, immunity of warships and of other governments ships, was concluded.

12. Voting on Articles 28, 29, 30, 31 and amendments thereto then took place.

13. With respect to Articles 28, 30 and 31 all amendments were rejected and the ILC text was adopted with no dissenting votes and no abstentions.

14. In the case of Article 28 two amendments, one proposed by Italy and one by France, were adopted. These amendments added to the end of paragraph (1) the following words: "in particular the State must effectively exercise its jurisdiction and control over ships flying its flag in administrative technical and social matters."

The ILC text as so amended was adopted by a vote of 40 to 7 with 11 abstentions.

15. At the beginning of the meeting Rumania attempted to have Articles 32 and 33 referred to Committee I; this was defeated 42 to 11 with 2 abstentions.

16. By a vote of 29 votes to 12 with 14 abstentions a new article to be inserted after Article 31 was adopted. The text is:

"The provisions of the preceding articles do not prejudice the question of ships employed on the official service of an intergovernmental organization flying the flag of the organization." Voting then continued on Articles 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36. The ILC text of Article 33 proposed by the USA was adopted which accords immunity only to State-owned ships used on government non-commercial service.

17. A new text for Article 34 proposed by the UK and the Netherlands was adopted, the new text is a somewhat "watered-down" version of the ILC text. Articles 35 and 36 were adopted with relatively minor amendments.

18. At the evening meeting on April 9 debate on Articles 37, 38, 46 and 47 was commenced. Canada's chief interest in this group of articles arises in connexion with the "Canadian proposal" and whether hot pursuit may be commenced in the contiguous fishing zone. The UK and Western Europeans hewed strictly to the classical view that hot pursuit related only to offences committed within territorial waters. The debate continued on April 10 and in addition Article 48 was debated.

19. The debate on Article 48 raised anew the matter of nuclear tests. Surprisingly, the alignment of nations was somewhat different than in the case of the earlier debate. The USA and UK submitted a joint proposal for the deletion of paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article 48. In the debate the yeas and nays on this proposal seemed to be about evenly divided. Voting took place on Articles 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44 and 45. The ILC text of Articles 37, 38, 41, 42, 43 and 44 was adopted. Articles 39, 40 and 45 were adopted with minor amendments.

20. On Friday morning debate on Articles 61 to 65 was commenced. The USA withdrew a proposal for the deletion of Articles 62, 63 and 65 on the understanding that the UK would introduce a proposal which would make the articles subject to the 1884 Convention.

21. On the evening of April 11 voting took place on Articles 46, 47 and 48. The ILC text of Article 46 was adopted. With respect to Article 47 the main concern for Canada was the matter of hot pursuit in the contiguous zone. A proposal by Poland and Yugoslavia for permitting hot pursuit in the contiguous zone in respect of offences for the prevention of which the zone was established was adopted by a vote of 33 to 9 with 16 abstentions. The first paragraph of the ILC text of Article 48 was adopted. The proposal of USA for the deletion of paragraphs 2 and 3 and the adoption of a resolution was passed by a vote of 30 to 29 with 6 abstentions.

22. On April 12 voting took place on Articles 61 to 65. Articles 61, 62, 63 and 65 with minor amendments to Articles 61, 62 and 63 were adopted. Article 64 was deleted and the ILC text of Article 65 was adopted.

23. Still outstanding is a Colombian proposal pursuant to which disputes arising out of Committee II articles would be referred to the International Court of Justice unless the parties agreed upon other means of peaceful settlement. Also outstanding is a proposal by Portugal for defining warships, other government ships and merchant ships together with an attempt by Argentina, Ceylon, India and Mexico to re-open the article on pollution of the seas by radio-active waste and fall out.

Committee III (Fishing)

24. Six meetings were held during the week. Articles 54 and 55 were under consideration. On recommendation of the delegate of France a short general debate was held on these articles. A number of the high seas (non-coastal) fishing countries were prepared to accept the ILC articles with some modifications but only if compulsory arbitration articles went with them.

25. After complicated voting on amendments, Article 54 paragraphs 1 and 2 as amended carried. The Article reads as follows:

“1. A coastal State has a special interest in the maintenance of the productivity of the living resources in any area of the high seas adjacent to its territorial sea.

2. A coastal State is entitled to take part on an equal footing in any system of research and regulation for conservation purposes in that area even though its nationals do not carry on fishing there.

3. A State whose nationals are engaged in fishing in any area of the high seas adjacent to the territorial sea of a coastal State shall at the request of that coastal State enter into negotiations with a view to prescribing by agreement the measures necessary for the conservation of the living resources of the high seas in that area.

4. A State whose nationals are engaged in fishing in any area of the high seas adjacent to the territorial sea of a coastal State shall not enforce conservation measures in that area which are opposed to those which have been adopted by the coastal State but may enter into negotiations with the coastal State with a view to prescribing by agreement the measures necessary for the conservation of the living resources of the high seas in that area."

26. Fourteen amendments were submitted to Article 55. These were boiled down to two, one of these sponsored by eleven States (Burma, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Indonesia, Korea, Mexico, Nicaragua, Philippines, Vietnam and Yugoslavia). The other proposal was by nine States (Belgium, France, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal and UK).

27. The 11-state amendment was considered first. NZ, USSR, Norway, Pakistan, Cuba, Poland, USA, UK, Portugal and Australia spoke against the proposal while Uruguay, Mexico, Yugoslavia, Peru, El Salvador, Panama and India spoke for it. The 5-minute time limit "imposed" by the Chairman was at times carried to almost an hour.

28. Following this the UK asked to be permitted to explain the 9-state amendment before the 11-state amendment was put to a vote. This was agreed to.

29. India suggested that the two amendments were not too far apart and took the initiative in trying to reconcile them.

30. A new 11-state amendment was produced which had been accepted by the USA. This was debated and passed, the USSR voting for the amendment.

31. Article 55 as amended was put to the vote and passed 39 to 22 with 4 abstentions. The USSR voted against the new article which was very near the ILC article and which they indicated they would support. The exact language of the new article is not yet available.

32. Articles 57-59 are now up for consideration.

Committee IV (Continental Shelf)

33. Committee IV adopted texts for Articles 72 and 73 thus completing the consideration of all articles assigned to the Committee. However, there remained a proposal submitted by Argentina for the inclusion of an entirely new article on fishing which in our judgement was entirely unrelated to the work of Committee IV. We were prepared to support the UK delegate in a proposal that the General Committee be requested to submit the Argentina proposal to Committee III for consideration. If UK move had been unsuccessful we were prepared to propose that General Committee be requested to convene joint meeting of Committee III and IV. However, at last minute Argentina on April 11 voluntary withdrew proposal and indicated that it would be submitted to Committee III.

34. Article 72 as amended follows the ILC text with two additions as follows:

(1) In each of paragraphs 1 and 2 the words "the nearest points of" have been added after the words "equidistant from";

(2) A third paragraph has been added requiring boundaries to be drawn with reference to charts and geographical features as they exist at a particular date and with reference to fixed permanent identifiable points on the land.

These changes resulted from a joint UK-Netherlands proposal that received widespread support. Voting on article as amended which took place April 9 was 36 in favour and none against with 19 abstentions.

35. Original ILC text of Article 73 was adopted without change on April 10 by roll-call vote of 33 in favour and 15 against with 14 abstentions. Negative votes were registered by Soviet bloc, some of Latin Americans and India, Indonesia and Korea. Australia, Ceylon and several Latin Americans abstained. Amendments proposed by Argentina, Netherlands, India and Venezuela (re—introduction of Soviet proposal previously withdrawn in favour of Argentina amendment) were all rejected.

36. The Chairman on April 11 announced the appointment of a drafting committee of six persons including Wershof to review the texts of the articles as adopted and to report back to the Committee next week.

Committee V (Landlocked States)

37. The Committee has completed a rather superficial examination of the 3-power resolution and the 19-power proposal. Following this study the Chairman proposed that a working party of 12 countries be established for the purpose of marrying the two documents. This was opposed by many Western representatives who considered that the working party would have to be given precise terms of reference with regard to the form or forms in which the results of the Committee's work should be embodied. A Swedish proposal to this effect was adopted by 29 in favour (Canada) 11 against and 13 abstentions. The working party which has been established as a result of the Swedish proposals is to report to the Committee by Monday April 14.

38. On April 11 the Swiss Delegation put forward a proposal the effect of which would be to amend Articles 15, 27 and 28 to make it clear that the provisions of the future convention also apply to maritime countries. In addition the Swiss proposal seems to have been well received by a number of countries and while it is still difficult to foresee what may come out of Committee V it could well be that the proposal will commend itself to a majority of delegations as the only way out of a developing deadlock. Ends.

61.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 327

Geneva, April 14, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

1. At his invitation I called on Dean of the USA Delegation this afternoon accompanied by Robertson and Curtis. To our surprise he informed us that he had just received instructions from the President to put forward a new proposal in the name of the USA Delegation in an attempt to prevent the failure of the Conference.⁴¹ I am convinced that this proposal had just been communicated to him because he has been very frank with us and in a conversation earlier in the day there was no indication of a change in their position.

⁴¹ Voir Conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer, Documents officiels, Volume III: Première Commission, p. 276.

See United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, Official Records, Volume III, First Committee, p. 253.

2. There has been a very considerable change in the situation since Easter and it was my intention in any event to report to you today the situation as we see it. The British proposal unsettled things, generally weakened the arguments in support of the 3-mile territorial sea and by this departure from a very firmly stated position whetted the appetites of those who are seeking a still wider territorial sea. It was in this atmosphere that the Indian-Mexican proposal suddenly began gaining ground as a result of appeals to intense nationalism, the special interests of the Arab states and the support of the Soviet bloc which see in this proposal the same results they would achieve by their own.

3. Dean referred first to this situation and then said that their political officers had become convinced that with the developments that have taken place, and particularly the adverse effect of the British proposal, our proposal did not now have a chance of gaining a two-thirds majority. He said that he thought sufficient opposition could be organized to prevent the Indian-Mexican proposal getting a two-thirds majority but in that event there was nothing but failure ahead of the Conference as there is no chance that the British, the Soviet or any other proposal could now receive the necessary support. Because of this he had been instructed to introduce an amendment to their own proposal on Wednesday which would declare that the territorial sea could extend from the baseline to a distance of not more than six miles, that there would be a contiguous fishing zone up to 12-miles from the baseline in which all the rights over fishing exercised in the territorial sea would be established provided however that in the fishing zone outside of the territorial sea traditional fishing rights would be preserved to the fishing vessels of those nations which had been fishing there continuously for at least five years.

4. I pointed out the difficulty that this would present to Canada having regard to our firm commitment to do everything possible to secure a 12-mile fishing zone and I also pointed out the difficulties that would be presented by continuing indefinitely fishing rights in an area where our own trawlers have for so long been denied the right to fish.

5. He said that he recognized those difficulties but that a quick assessment today by their political officers convinced them that this would obtain a two-thirds majority. It is too early to express a well considered opinion on the accuracy of this assessment because I am reporting this conversation immediately for your information. However I do think I should give you our assessment of the situation as of noon today which was confirmed by an independent assessment by the USA Delegation immediately before we were informed of this new proposal they intend to make. It should be recognized that what follows does not take into consideration the effect of the new USA proposal. At the first stage it appears that we can at present count on the support of only 24 countries on the first vote. It had been our expectation as it had been that of the USA that the number would be very much higher and that there would be a substantial swing to our support after some of the other proposals had been disposed of. The countries definitely indicating their support for our proposal are: Denmark, Iceland, Ireland, Norway, Brazil, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Israel, Liberia, Pakistan, Turkey, South Africa (possibly but not definitely), Australia, Cambodia, China, NZ, Thailand, Vietnam, USA and Canada. The USA Delegation sets the definite opposition at 47. Subject to three or four who might shift at some stage this looks like a pretty realistic and firm assessment of opposition. It agrees with the one we have independently arrived at in the past few days. Probable abstentions are fifteen including the Holy See and the Philippines. We had hoped for support from both but it does not appear likely that it will be forthcoming.

6. The opposition countries are more numerous than we had reason to expect two weeks ago and this arises I think mainly from two factors. One is the hardening and solidifying of Afro-Asian positions since India definitely came down for the 3 to 12-mile formula and since Sen stated the view that our proposal is not a satisfactory compromise and does not protect the essential requirements of smaller countries. I think there is no doubt that this has had a good deal of influence. The other which has reinforced the first factor is the UK's 6-mile proposal. Whatever the purposes behind it, it has undoubtedly whetted the appetite of the advocates of more extreme positions as I have already explained and it has also strengthened their view that more can be got if they take an intransigent attitude. This has, I am sure, led many countries to move into the Indian-Mexican camp who might otherwise have supported our proposal.

7. This was the assessment we had intended to place before you. It was clear that our position had steadily deteriorated for the reasons which have been given. Now that the USA intend to introduce their new proposal I think it is clear that there is no hope whatever of our present proposal being accepted.

8. I do therefore submit the following for your consideration. It has been discussed with Mr. Hamilton and meets with his approval. Our main reason for proposing a 3-mile limit to the territorial sea was because of the argument put forward by the UK and USA in regard to the military factors and the right of overflight by commercial aircraft. As the two major maritime powers of the free world will now have declared for a 6-mile territorial sea then it seems that we can have no reason for asking the Conference to approve a lower figure. So far as overflight is concerned it would seem that this can best be dealt with through ICAO by way of amendments to their own regulations. I therefore suggest the advisability of authorizing us to amend our own proposal by a provision that territorial sea may be up to six miles. I think there is reason to believe that our proposal would then have as good or even a better chance than the USA proposal. We would lose the support of some of the European nations doing distant fishing which would support the USA proposal with its reservation of traditional fishing rights but on the other hand we would gain the support of nations such as Norway, Denmark and Iceland with the probability of additional support from some of those younger nations which are concerned about such a reservation for the reasons already explained. If this change were to be made in our proposal we should if possible be advised by Wednesday morning as it seems likely that voting on Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66 will begin on Wednesday. This would make our proposal the same as the USA proposal except that there would be no reservation of traditional fishing rights.

[GEORGE] DREW

62.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 329

Geneva, April 15, 1958

SECRET. EMERGENCY.

Reference: My Tel 327 Apr 14.

(For Immediate Attention Cadieux).

BREADTH OF THE TERRITORIAL SEA: REVISION OF CANADIAN POSITION

Since my RefTel we have been giving urgent consideration to the situation as it is developing here following upon the USA decision. It is apparent that their amendment if carried would place Canada in an extremely difficult position. It is also clear that they are getting in touch with as many delegations as possible and as urgently as possible to mobilize the maximum support for their new position. In these circumstances the loss of a few hours in action by us may be vital. Would you please therefore telephone to me just as soon as a decision is taken on the question raised in my RefTel.

2. In view of the present urgency I am meeting this morning with representatives of Norway, Iceland and Denmark to advise them of my request for authority to revise our position. I feel confident that they will support.

3. The USA decision increases the likelihood that the Indian-Mexican proposal can be blocked at the plenary stage. Mexico will be strongly opposed to the USA position. India has less direct reason to oppose it but might be open to persuasion to prefer our position if they are convinced that their own proposal may be blocked. In these circumstances our new proposal if authorized by the government would stand the best chance of success over the American proposal if we could secure the co-sponsorship of India and Mexico.

4. After discussion with Mr. Hamilton, who is going to telephone to the Prime Minister this morning, I am arranging a meeting with the Heads of the Indian and Mexican Delegations to see if they might be persuaded to withdraw their proposal and co-sponsor ours on the new basis.

5. If the government is in agreement it would be most helpful as an emergency matter also to have our representatives in Delhi and Mexico city make representations to the two governments along these lines.

6. I should add that we have learned that the Indian and Mexican Delegations have transmitted the USA decision to their governments. They will not repeat not of course receive the information until some time today so immediate action by our representatives could overtake it.

[GEORGE] DREW

63.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 333

Geneva, April 15, 1958

SECRET. EMERGENCY.

Reference: My Tel 329 Apr 15.

(For Immediate Attention Cadieux).

BREADTH OF THE TERRITORIAL SEA — REVISION OF CANADIAN POSITION

Since my RefTel Mr. Hamilton has telephoned to the Prime Minister about further urgent developments. This telegram will confirm the information given to him.

2. In my meeting this morning with the Heads of the Indian and Mexican Delegations they made it clear that they thought there was no repeat no chance of our proposal revised to six miles securing a two-thirds majority even if co-sponsored by them. They stated that it is definite that the Soviet bloc and the Arab bloc countries now at 12 miles will not repeat not withdraw from their present limits no matter what may be agreed on by this Conference. They stated that in their definite view the only proposal that would have any prospect of success would be one that recognized these facts.

3. The Indian and Mexican representatives suggested that a proposal that could gain a majority would be one which set a general limit for the territorial sea up to six miles but recognized already-established positions from six to twelve miles while providing that any limits over 12 miles would not be recognized. They indicated that if Canada were prepared to sponsor a proposal along these lines they would be prepared to drop their present proposal and join as co-sponsors.

4. Neither India nor Mexico is prepared to go along with the USA proposal for a fishing zone which would preserve traditional rights. The plan would therefore be to move an amendment to the USA proposal which would accept up to six miles as the general territorial limit with provision as indicated above and remove the clause that would preserve traditional fishing interests in the fishing zone.

5. The reason for acting in the form of an amendment to the USA proposal is to ensure that this new formula if approved would be voted on before the USA proposal itself.

6. In brief the amendment co-sponsored by Canada, India and Mexico would amend the USA provision that the territorial sea be up to six miles by adding a proviso that existing limits between six and 12 miles remain as at present but that no limits over 12 miles be recognized and secondly that in the fishing zone of 12 miles from the baselines there would be no repeat no reservation of traditional fishing interests.

7. It is the view of both the Indian and Mexican Delegations that this proposal would gain a two thirds majority. I share this view.

8. The situation here is extremely urgent. It is essential that a decision as to whether we can co-sponsor the above proposal be communicated today. If authority could possibly be given by 4:00 o'clock Ottawa time we can then hold a meeting tonight with Indian and Mexican Delegations to prepare the proposal for introduction and for vote which might have to be taken tomorrow.

9. If affirmative decision is given it is also most important our representatives in Delhi and Mexico City be advised on an emergency basis and asked to pursue with the two governments at once.

10. Co-sponsorship of this proposal and its success would reduce the possibility of a Soviet diplomatic triumph through having a flexible formula along their lines approved or alternatively of having the Conference break down through alleged Western intransigence. It would also do much to strengthen the Canadian position with the Afro-Asian group as well as with Latin America.

11. Our position if we co-sponsor this may well be criticized by the UK, the USA and other countries with traditional fishing interests as being selfish. It would help to soften the blow to them if we could indicate that the Government of Canada would, if this proposal were approved by the Conference, be willing to consider a short transitional period that would enable countries affected to adjust to the new situation. Please indicate whether a statement to this effect could be made if it is considered desirable when the proposal is introduced or in the course of discussion.

[GEORGE] DREW

64.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 15, 1958

Present

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the Chair,
 The Minister of Public Works
 and Acting Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Green),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming),
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
 The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees),
 The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
 The Minister of Justice and
 Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton),
 The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan),
 The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean),
 The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr),
 The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Browne),
 The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier).

. . .

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA; FURTHER
 INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN DELEGATION
 (PREVIOUS REFERENCE APRIL 3)

3. The Prime Minister reported that Mr. Alvin Hamilton and Mr. Drew had telephoned him from Geneva earlier that day to say that, in view of recent developments which had taken place at the Conference on the Law of the Sea, they would need immediate further instructions.

4. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reviewed the original instructions given to the Canadian Delegation and the subsequent changes which were made to meet changing situations. After a brief review of the recent developments at the conference, he stated that U.S. State Department officials had told him in Washington on the previous day that the United States was considering a proposal for a six mile territorial sea and a contiguous fishing zone up to twelve miles, on which traditional fishing rights would be preserved to those nations which had been fishing there continuously for at least five years. He pointed out that such an amendment, if adopted, would create difficulties for Canada because it would preserve foreign fishing rights in an area where Canadian trawlers, as a conservation measure, had for a long time been denied the right to fish. Mr. Dulles, with whom he had discussed the matter, had appeared uninformed on the subject and unaware of the adverse effects which the U.S. proposals might have on Canadian interests. Accordingly, in order to prevent a swing to such a proposal, if it were put forward, and to attract Afro-Asian and Latin American support away from schemes leaving discretion to countries to determine the breadth of their territorial sea up to twelve miles, Mr. Drew was seeking authority to join India and Mexico as co-sponsors in proposing the following plan:

(a) countries could choose the breadth of their territorial sea up to six miles (if they had not already gone beyond this limit);

(b) countries which had already adopted a limit between six and twelve miles would retain such a limit;

(c) countries which claimed more than twelve miles would be required to accept twelve miles as a maximum limit; and,

(d) within a contiguous zone beyond the territorial sea and up to twelve miles from the baselines, countries could claim exclusive fishing rights for their nationals.

There would be no question of recognizing traditional fishing rights in the area between the limit of the territorial sea and that of the contiguous zone.

The Minister pointed out, however, that French and U.S. rights under their existing treaty arrangements to fish up to the coastline in certain areas would, of course, not be effected as a result of the adoption of the scheme proposed.

5. Mr. Smith said that it was not expected that the new Canadian proposal would be acceptable to France, Spain, Portugal, the United Kingdom, and the United States all of which claimed extensive traditional rights. It was thought, however, that the proposal would have a good chance of emerging as a conference decision. It was urgent to let Mr. Drew know whether he could submit the proposal so that he might prepare it for introduction with the Indian and Mexican Delegations. A vote might have to be taken the following day.

Mr. Drew thought the Canadian proposal would be criticized by the U.K., the U.S. and other countries which claimed traditional fishing rights, and it would help to soften the blow if Canada would indicate that, should its amended proposals be approved by the conference, it would be willing to consider a transitional period, perhaps of five years, that would enable countries affected to adjust to the new situation.

6. During the discussion a number of objections were raised to Mr. Drew's suggestion concerning a transitional period during which the countries which claimed traditional fishing rights could adjust to the new situation. This suggestion would most certainly receive an unfavourable reaction amongst the fishermen of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and British Columbia. There was need for discussion of a number of questions in the field of American-Canadian relations at some future date and it was desirable to have a few bargaining points in reserve. The United States might be informed that, when such discussions took place, questions arising out of the law of the sea could be examined.

7. The Cabinet agreed,

(a) that the Canadian Delegation at the International Conference on the Law of the Sea at Geneva be authorized to join with India and Mexico in proposing the following plan:

(i) countries could choose the breadth of their territorial sea up to six miles; (if they were not now beyond this limit);

(ii) countries which had already adopted a limit between six and twelve miles would retain such a limit;

(iii) countries which claimed more than twelve miles would be required to accept twelve miles as a maximum limit;

(iv) within a contiguous zone, between the territorial sea and a line twelve miles from the baselines, countries could claim exclusive fishing rights for their nationals; (there would be no question of recognizing traditional fishing rights in this contiguous zone); and,

(b) that the delegation, in presenting the above proposals, be instructed not to put forward any suggestion whereby Canada would be willing to consider a transitional period in order to enable countries affected by the proposal to adjust to the new situation created.

...

65.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 344

Geneva, April 16, 1958

OPIMMEDIATE

(For Personal Attention Cadieux).

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA — CANADA, INDIA, AND MEXICO PROPOSAL

Following is text of proposal which we have co-sponsored with India and Mexico. We decided to submit this as a new proposal rather than as an amendment to the American proposal in the interests of simplicity and clarity:

“Article 3

1. A state is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of six nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with Articles 4 and 5 provided that if a state had prior to February 24, 1958 declared the breadth of its territorial sea to be in excess of six nautical miles so measured the breadth so fixed is the breadth of its territorial sea up to but not exceeding twelve nautical miles similarly measured.

2. Where the breadth of its territorial sea is less than 12 nautical miles measured as above a state has a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a limit twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured in which it has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea.”

2. I introduced the joint proposal this afternoon. Outline of statement follows immediately.† Text will not be available until tomorrow morning since statement was made extemporaneously.

[GEORGE] DREW

66.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 17, 1958

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA: FURTHER REVISION OF THE CANADIAN PROPOSAL

I spoke to Mr. Drew this afternoon to enquire as to when our proposal was likely to be voted on and whether he felt it would be useful if we were to send a circular to certain of our missions to enlist the support of the governments concerned.

2. Mr. Drew said that he had to report on new developments. To his surprise, late this afternoon the leaders of the Mexican and of the Indian Delegations explained that the provisions in our proposal relating to those countries which have adopted a limit of more than six miles for the territorial sea had further whetted the appetite of extremists, and that the members of the Asian block as a whole were not prepared to accept that part of our proposal which they consider to be inadequate. Because of their instructions to keep in line with the Afro-Asian group, the Indians were, therefore, withdrawing from co-sponsorship of our proposal.

3. In the circumstances, and because the part of our proposal which deals with limits of the territorial sea beyond six miles is not likely to be generally acceptable, Mr. Drew, and Mr. Hamilton concurs in this, proposes in effect to introduce a new proposal calling for a territorial sea of six miles and for six additional miles within which the coastal states will enjoy exclusive fishing rights. This is in effect the United States proposal without, however, the recognition of traditional fishing rights.

4. Rather than allow the Indians and the Mexicans to withdraw their support from our proposal, Mr. Drew is convinced that it is tactically preferable for us to take the initiative of introducing a new proposal and to explain that, as certain features of our earlier proposal were not likely to commend themselves generally as a basis for agreement, we had thought it preferable to simplify our proposal and to introduce it under our own name.

5. Mr. Drew considers that the situation in Geneva is now so uncertain as regards the breadth of the territorial sea that it is unlikely that there will be a majority for any particular scheme. The idea in introducing a new proposal is that there will be two votes. The first vote on the breadth of the territorial sea may well result in defeat for that part of our scheme, but there will be another vote on fishing rights and in this regard Mr. Drew is confident of success.

6. Both Mr. Drew and Mr. Hamilton consider that the revised Canadian scheme is in line with Cabinet instructions, and they propose to go ahead immediately as there is no time to await confirmation that the Government as a whole are in agreement. The plan is to table the proposal tonight, and to proceed with the explanation tomorrow morning.

7. Mr. Drew stressed that while this recent development is surprising, he is not downhearted as to the prospects of safeguarding our interests, at least insofar as fishing is concerned. While the Indians and the Mexicans will not be with us, both countries will endorse the second part of our proposal, i.e., the twelve-mile exclusive fishing zone. I told

Mr. Drew that I would report this new situation to you. I attach a short memorandum to the Prime Minister in case you feel that he should be advised of this new situation.⁴²

M. C[ADIEUX]

67.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 828

Washington, April 17, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Seadel Geneva from Ottawa (Information).

LAW OF THE SEA

Governor Herter (Under Secretary of State) asked me to see him this afternoon. He was worried and distressed about the drift of things in Geneva. He felt that the USA had gone a very long way in seeking a tolerable compromise solution by proposing their new formula of a 6 mile territorial sea plus a 6 miles exclusive fishing strip subject to historic fishing rights. They had been prepared to support the Canadian formula when it appeared to have a chance of adoption. They had hoped that we could accept their new position as the best attainable if the Conference were ever to achieve substantial agreement.

2. Herter read me Dean's telegrams of the last day or two reporting a pretty forthcoming and encouraging response from a large proportion of the countries he had been able to canvass. In particular he said that Sen, Leader of the Indian Delegation, had welcomed the American compromise and had promised to urge it on Nehru. Stavropoulos, UN Legal Adviser, at the Conference, had informed him that Hammarskjöld was prepared privately to urge India to accept the American proposal.

3. Against this background the Americans were puzzled by our apparent alignment with the Mexican-Arab-Indian position which seemed to them to amount in effect to a full acceptance of the Soviet position with all compromise to be made by other countries.

4. It seems to me that if some measure of compromise is worth making in order to secure substantially general agreement, then we would be pretty well served by accepting the American proposal. The 6 mile territorial sea would in itself double the area in which we can give effective protection to our own fishermen against disturbance from trawlers under other flag (except possibly for those countries possessing treaty rights). This would represent an important extension of sovereignty on both coasts and would not repeat not be subject to claims based on historic usage. With this territorial sea measured, as I presume it would be, from recognized baselines running from headland to headland the effective

⁴² Une note adressée au premier ministre avait été autorisée par Sidney Smith, mais H.B. Robinson avait ajouté dans la marge que cette note était « superseded by events before it could be sent to P.M. » Voir secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au premier ministre, 17 avril 1958, MAE/9456-RW-2-40.

A memorandum for the prime minister was authorized by Sidney Smith, but a marginal notation on this document written by H.B. Robinson states that the memorandum was "superseded by events before it could be sent to P.M." See Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister, April 17, 1958, DEA/9456-RW-2-40.

increase in areas available for our exclusive exploitation should look very considerable in realistic terms compared with past practice if not repeat not with our more ambitious objectives.

5. In the second place, I believe we should give very serious and sympathetic consideration to the recognition of historic fishing rights in the 6 mile zone contiguous to the territorial sea. Other countries' fishermen are quite as sensitive and articulate concerning their position in what has always been an open sea. The history of Canadian-American fishing disputes over the last hundred years provides plenty of evidence of the bitterness and resentment that they can provoke and of the way in which such disputes can affect other aspects of our commercial relations. I think we have usually had equity and fair dealing on our side in our arguments with the USA. I do not repeat not think we would have if we insist on disregarding their claim to a right to continue to share in fishing the 6 mile strip outside our new territorial sea in which they presently have exactly the same rights and interests as we have.

[NORMAN] ROBERTSON

68.

DEA-9456-RW-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM L-118

Ottawa, April 18, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 828 of Apr 17 and telephone conversation with Legal Adviser Apr 18. Repeat Seadel Geneva (Information).

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

The Legal Adviser raised with the Minister today the points mentioned in your telegram and in your telephone conversation under reference.

2. The Minister considers that Cabinet has adopted a firm position in favour of a twelve-mile contiguous fishing zone reserved exclusively for the fishermen of the coastal state. Under these circumstances the Minister is not prepared at this time to raise with Cabinet the question of altering the Canadian position so as either to permit support for the USA proposal or to offer any concessions (e.g. allowing a 5 or 10 year period of adjustment before implementation of our proposal, should it be adopted) to states claiming traditional fishing rights within a 12-mile contiguous zone off our coasts.

3. Should it develop that a new situation emerges when the Conference has completed its voting in committee and goes into plenary session, it is of course possible that Cabinet might wish to examine again the Canadian position on territorial sea and contiguous zone.

69.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 351

Geneva, April 18, 1958

OPIMMEDIATE

Reference: Telephone conversation with Cadieux Apr 17.

(For Personal Attention Cadieux).

Following is text of revised Canadian proposal which replaces proposal co-sponsored by Canada, India and Mexico text of which was incorporated in our telegram 344 April 16.

"Article 3:

1. A state is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of six nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with Articles 4 and 5.

2. A state has a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a limit twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured in which it has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea". Ends.

70.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], April 18, 1958

CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA:
U.S. AND CANADIAN PROPOSALS

Shortly after 1:00 p.m. today, I spoke to Mr. Robertson in Geneva.

I reported first that the Minister had considered Mr. N.A. Robertson's suggestion that he might recommend that Cabinet consider adopting the U.S. proposal. The Minister felt that his colleagues were not inclined to recognize traditional rights, that their position had been explored thoroughly within the last few days, and there would be no point in raising the matter again.

I then said to Mr. Robertson that we had been giving consideration at the official level within the Department to the situation which might arise should the U.S. proposal be adopted. I outlined the two possible lines of action which are mentioned in the attached draft telegram to Geneva. In the course of our conversation, I mentioned that the Deputy Minister of Fisheries was now prepared to agree to a period of adjustment of ten years, but emphasized that the two schemes in question had not been considered or approved at Ministerial or Cabinet level.

Mr. Robertson said that they themselves in Geneva had envisaged a scheme similar to our first one, e.g. a period of accommodation. He expects that voting will begin tomorrow morning, and that our proposal is likely to come up for consideration quite early. The Delegation are convinced that our proposal has no chance of being adopted as a whole. It is expected, however, that a motion will be introduced either by the Afro-Asians alone or by the Afro-Asians in combination with the Latin Americans, calling for a vote paragraph by paragraph. The prospect is that our first paragraph (calling for a territorial sea of 6 miles) will be defeated, but the second paragraph (calling for an exclusive fishing zone of 12 miles) will succeed. If our paragraph 2 is defeated, and the U.S. proposal carries, Mr. Robertson says that the delegation will then assess the situation and put forward suggestions as to the best course to follow. One point is clear, however, and that is that new proposals can no longer be introduced. If the U.S. proposal is adopted and our own is defeated, there will be time for us to consider our position and to decide on the best course to follow before the matter comes up for final decision in plenary.

Mr. Drew, who was with Mr. Robertson, then intervened to say that in his view there was no chance that the U.S. proposal would be adopted. The main danger, in his opinion, arose from a possible revival of the earlier Indian-Mexican scheme allowing countries to choose the breadth of their territorial sea between 6 and 12 miles. He thought that such a scheme could count on Soviet and substantial Afro-Asian and Latin American support.

In the course of the conversation, Mr. Drew made the following additional points:

(a) He felt that we should consider carefully the new American proposal as amended. In his view, it goes further than anything we have anticipated.

(b) If there is any suggestion that our proposal has involved the compromise of strategic interests, Mr. Drew feels that we should not be reluctant to point out that it is unrealistic to expect that the U.S.S.R. and her associates will pull back from 12 miles to a lower limit, and that if the situation is unsettled about the breadth of the territorial sea, the chief responsibility lies with the U.S. and the U.K. who have sold the pass after having insisted that we should present a firm and united front on the 3-mile sea. Mr. Drew feels most strongly that we should argue that the shoe is on the other foot, and that we should maintain that the U.S. and the U.K. are responsible for any threat that may develop to the joint security position. The trouble we are now facing stems from the unilateral action which these countries have taken.

M. C[ADIEUX]

71.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur en Italie*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in Italy

TELEGRAM L-119

Ottawa, April 18, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Athens from Rome (OpImmediate) (Information).

Repeat Hague, Paris, Accra, Wellington, Canberra, Delhi, Colombo, Ankara, Kuala Lumpur, Rio, Bogoto, Buenos Aires (OpImmediate) (Information).

Repeat Bern, Vienna from Geneva, Pretoria from New York, Beirut from Cairo, Santiago from Washington, SEADEL Geneva (OpImmediate) (Information).

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

Recent developments at Conference indicated earlier Canadian proposal for 12-mile contiguous fishing zone and 3-mile territorial sea was not repeat not likely to command sufficient support in order to be adopted by the Conference. In view of this fact and of general belief that 3-mile territorial sea could not repeat not be maintained, USA Delegation has formally put forward new resolution, which calls for up to 6-mile territorial sea measured from baselines and for 12-mile contiguous fishing zone in which areas States have "The same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea provided that such rights shall be subject to the right of the vessels of any State whose vessels have fished regularly in that portion of the zone having a continuous baseline and located in the same major body of water for the period of five years immediately preceding the signature of this convention to fish in the outer six miles of that zone under obligation to observe therein such conservation regulations as are consistent with the rules on fisheries adopted by this conference and other rules of international law." Please note that a clause at end of USA resolution provides that "It is proposed that this article be entered into with the express understanding that each party to the Convention undertakes to consider sympathetically the request of another party to consult on the question of whether the rights granted by the article are being exercised in such manner as to work an inequity upon one or more of the other parties and if so what measures should and can be taken to remedy the situation."

2. USA resolution would, if adopted, not repeat not be acceptable to Canada as it involves recognition of traditional fishing rights which we are not repeat not prepared to do. Additional difficulty for us is that these fishing rights would be partly in areas where our trawlers have long been denied right to fish.

3. Shortly after introduction of new USA proposal Canada joined with Mexico and India in introducing new joint resolution which recognized existing territorial limits between 6 and 12 miles and rejected exercise of traditional fishing rights in this area. Because of insufficient support among Afro-Asians this proposal has been withdrawn by all sponsors including Canada and is not repeat not now before Conference.

4. In its place Canada has introduced another proposal which calls for a territorial sea of up to 6 miles and for six additional repeat additional miles within which the coastal States will enjoy exclusive repeat exclusive fishing rights. This is, in effect, USA proposal with important qualification that there be no repeat no recognition of traditional rights. Text of latest Canadian proposal, replacing earlier Canada, India and Mexico text, is as follows: "A State is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a limit of six nautical miles measured from the baseline which may be applicable in conformity with Articles 4 and 5. A State has a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a limit twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured in which it has the same rights in respect of fishing and the exploitation of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea."

5. According to latest assessment above compromise formula has good chances for success. While it will no repeat no doubt be opposed by USA, UK, France, Portugal and Spain which wish to reserve their fishing "rights" off our coasts and of other countries, our new plan would probably attract support of other European countries such as Iceland, Norway, Denmark, and various other states which appear to consider 3-mile territorial sea does not repeat not adequately protect their essential requirements. On the other hand, while USA proposal will be supported by UK and have fair measure of support, doubtful if it will be able to obtain two-thirds majority vote of Conference, in view of fact that it requires perpetual reservation of fishing rights without limitation as to number of ships that can engage in coastal fishing nor size of catch. In fact, for many countries USA reservation regarding traditional fishing rights would seem to render 12-mile fishing zone almost meaningless.

6. We do not repeat not consider that additional clause at end of USA resolution, set out in paragraph 1 above, alters general attempt by USA to create perpetual reservation of traditional fishing rights. While it might under some circumstances be interpreted as favouring position of coastal States within whose contiguous zones traditional rights are claimed, nevertheless application of this clause would also favour states claiming "traditional fishing rights" in waters which were formally high seas but which under 6-mile rule would be territorial waters of coastal States.

7. Notwithstanding the swiftly fluctuating situation at Conference, we consider that Canadian proposal as set out above represents main alternative to failure of Conference to reach agreement. Voting takes place at end of this week or Monday. Suggest that on an urgent basis you approach authorities of country to which you are accredited at high level, in order to request immediate instructions to be issued to their delegation in Geneva to support new Canadian resolution. Please advise urgently both us and SEADEL Geneva.

8. For Bern only: You might point out to Swiss authorities that our Delegation in Geneva has been authorized to support their new compromise proposal on right to access to sea of landlocked States. This fact may be of some help in your attempt to enlist Swiss support.

72.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 357

Geneva, April 20, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

BREADTH OF THE TERRITORIAL SEA: ACTION IN COMMITTEE ONE

Beginning with the afternoon meeting of April 19, Committee One reached the dramatic point of voting on the provisions before it with regard to Article Three. After nearly 7 hours of session and 14 votes the result left only paragraph 2 of the Canadian proposal with a majority.

2. The afternoon began with Viet Nam moving that priority be given to the USA proposal. As there was no substantive article in the International Law Commission draft proposals had been listed in order of submission. The USA proposal was last and this would raise it above all other proposals. We, the UAR, the USSR and Mexico objected to giving priority. The voting on the motion was lost 31- 38 (Canada)- 12.

3. Sweden withdrew its proposal for a 6 mile limit in favour of the Italian proposal and thus the Canadian proposal came for consideration first. Ghana moved with previous consent from us to have paragraphs one and two voted on separately. The UK and France objected while Ecuador and the USSR supported. The motion to divide was carried 36(Canada)- 28- 18.

4. Prior to the vote Cuba and the UK had asked Portugal to withdraw its amendment to our proposal obviously for the reason that they expected it would be defeated and thus might compromise the USA proposal which treated the fishing zone in much the same way. Portugal withdrew.

5. Paragraph one of our proposal was lost 11(Canada)- 48- 23. Paragraph 2 was carried 37(Canada)- 35- 9.

6. We had expected paragraph 2 to receive support from the entire Arab bloc, from virtually all the other Afro-Asian countries, nearly all the Latin American group and possibly from the Communist bloc. There had thus been some chance of a better majority than emerged. The Communist bloc however voted solidly against paragraph 2. We have yet to determine why. They indicated to the Indians last night that they had voted against the proposal although they really favoured it and that the reason was that they feared their support would lead to Latin American opposition. They indicated that they would support our paragraph 2 when it comes to the plenary. The alleged reason sounds quite specious especially in view of the narrow result but it may well be that they will support our proposal at the plenary stage. In the case of Latin America opposition votes were cast by Colombia, Cuba, Nicaragua, the Dominican Republic and Brazil and abstentions by Honduras and Bolivia. The Afro-Asian group went solidly for our proposal with the exception of China and Pakistan which both abstained. The Arab bloc supported solidly the proposal as expected except Lebanon which abstained. The European countries opposed paragraph 2 solidly also as expected with the exception of Iceland, which of course supported it, and Denmark, which abstained. We had expected Switzerland to abstain but it voted against us. Austria, Finland and the Holy Sea abstained as expected.

7. Following the success of paragraph 2 there were procedural attempts by the Union of South Africa and the UK in the hope of securing new votes or ruling the proposal as "not operative" but both were ruled out of order by the Chairman.

8. The Peruvian proposal was withdrawn and the Committee proceeded to the Indian-Mexican proposal. As with all other votes of the day except one this was a roll-call vote and when the call was complete it was immediately apparent that there was a tie. Several Latin American countries had tried to resolve the opposing pressures of the Latin American group and the USA by abstention. These included Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Honduras, Paraguay and Peru. Before the result was announced by the Chair the delegate of Ecuador asked for the floor. The second representative seized the microphone from the chief delegate and said that the vote of Ecuador should have been recorded as "yes". Pandemonium was immediate and complete. The Chair ruled that the vote could be explained but not altered. It was argued that it was not a change but a correction and finally the USSR appealed the ruling. The appeal was lost 17- 49(Canada)- 17. The result of the vote on the Indian-Mexican proposal was then announced as for 35- against-35(Canada)- Abstain-12.

9. India moved for reconsideration under Article 32 and the Chair ruled that there could be no such motion until the vote was complete.

10. In the voting on the USSR proposal several of the Latin American countries that had abstained on the previous vote tried to save the day by voting for this motion. These included Ecuador (to great laughter), Peru and Costa Rica. Iceland, which had unwisely abstained on the previous proposal, voted for this. Many other countries, however, were against the USSR proposal either because it was sponsored by the USSR or because it really set no limit whatever on the territorial sea. It was lost 29- 44(Canada)- 9.

11. The UK withdrew its proposal.

12. During the dinner hour Latin American activities led Colombia to try to "clarify" its motion by having it provided that the territorial sea "may extend" to 12 miles rather than provide specifically that it does so extend. The Chair ruled this out of order and an appeal was rejected 17- 47(Canada)- 18. The Colombian proposal was then defeated 33- 42(Canada)- 7.

13. The Swedish-Italian proposal for a 6 mile limit was defeated on the single vote by show of hands. The result was 16(Canada)- 49- 14.

14. We and other delegations favourable to the Canadian proposal had agreed that it would be best to have the USA proposal divided for voting rather than voted on as a whole. It had been understood that Mexico would move for such division as we thought it preferable that we should not take the lead in doing so. Owing to some misunderstanding Mexico did not so move and I had to act by moving that the proviso in the USA proposal in relation to the fishing zone be voted on separately. Mexico then intervened to suggest a somewhat different basis of division and the UK further muddled the waters by suggesting that the principle of division should be voted on rather than my specific motion. The USA strongly opposed division as did Italy. After a good deal of confusion the Chair ruled that the Mexican suggestion should be voted on first as an amendment to my motion. The Mexican amendment was lost 33(Canada)- 39- 11. It became clear from this that there was a majority against division partly I think induced by the confusion that had resulted from the competing suggestions. This led some to move out of the minority camp and my motion was lost 30 (Canada)- 40- 13.

15. The USA proposal as a whole was defeated 36- 38(Canada)- 9.

16. The result was within the margins we had calculated as probable. It had seemed clear to us that it was uncertain whether the USA proposal would or would not get a majority. They had as you know amended their proposal somewhat to gain further support and they introduced a final revision yesterday morning which made no important change of substance but was designed to please certain delegations. They had worked very hard on the Latin American group and the Afro-Asian group, while Mexico in the one case and the Arab countries in the other had worked equally hard against. As a result the Latin Americans vote was completely split: 8 for the USA proposal, 9 against and 2 abstentions. Those for were Bolivia, Brazil, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua and Paraguay. Abstentions were Chile and Costa Rica. The Arab group were of course solidly against the USA proposal but the rest of the Afro-Asian bloc was badly split. Six countries voted for it: Liberia, Pakistan, Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia and China. Four countries abstained: Iran, Nepal, Philippines and Japan. One (Laos) apparently suffered a nervous collapse under the strain. It voted for the Mexican plan to divide the USA proposal, abstained on ours and was absent when the main vote came. The European countries voted solidly for the USA proposal except Finland, Sweden, the Holy See (all abstentions) and Iceland, which voted against.

17. Following this vote India again put the motion to reconsider the Indian-Mexican proposal. It was defeated 36- 39(Canada)- 7.

18. The result of the day's operations was that on the article regarding the breadth of the territorial sea no single proposal was carried that attempted to define it. Paragraph 2 of our proposal stands alone.

19. We have not as yet had an adequate opportunity to analyze the complex situation emerging from the above votes. This will be done at once and further info sent as soon as possible.

[GEORGE] DREW

73.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 363

Geneva, April 21, 1958

SECRET

Reference: Our Tel 326 Apr 14.

Personal Attention Cadieux.

WEEKLY REPORT NO. 8 FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 19

For report on other committees see following telegram 364.

Committee I

Committee I this week adopted Articles 4 to 10 inclusive and 22 and 23 subject to drafting changes. In addition the Committee came out of a twelve hour voting session on Saturday with an Article 3 which did not define the territorial sea but instead (in the terms of paragraph 2 of the Canadian proposal) defined the twelve mile fishing zone.

2. The texts adopted have been communicated separately. There were two important alterations to the ILC text. One in Article 7 substituting a 24 mile closing line for the ILC's 15 mile one and the introduction into Article 5 of a provision limiting the length of baselines to 15 miles on those coasts which are "deeply indented and cut into, or (have) a fringe of islands along the coast in its immediate vicinity ..." "... except where justified on historical grounds or imposed by the peculiar geography of the coast concerned ...".

3. The 24 mile closing line for bays was sponsored by the USSR (C.1/L.103) and was adopted by a vote of 31 in favour to 27 against (including UK and USA) with 13 abstentions (including Canada). According to our instructions a 15 mile closing line would be satisfactory given Article 5 on baselines. On this assumption (Article 7 was voted on before Article 5) we considered that we could be modest in our demands and therefore neither grasped for more nor refused it. In the light of the modification to Article 5, which if it stands in plenary could at least lead to more challenges to the application of the straight baseline system than would be the case if the ILC text were adopted and bearing in mind particularly Newfoundland bays, we shall be inclined to support a 24 mile closing line. In the light of the close vote in committee and the need for a 2/3 vote in plenary, we think it likely that the ILC text will be reestablished as a compromise between the 24 mile line adopted in committee and the 10 mile line advocated by the maritime powers (Greece, Germany, Japan and the USA, documents C.1/L.63, L.102, L.104 and L.109 respectively).

4. The qualification on the length of baselines introduced into Article 5 on the initiative of the UK (C.1/L.62/Corr.1) was adopted by a vote of 31 in favour (including the USA and UK), 23 against (including Canada and the Soviet bloc) with 12 abstentions. Article 5 as a whole which is substantially the same as the ILC article (except for the 15 mile qualifications) but different in form was adopted by a vote of 45 in favour (including Iceland) to 9 against (including Canada and the Soviet bloc) with 13 abstentions; we think on the basis of the first vote on the qualifications (31-23-12), that if a motion is made in plenary to vote on the 15 mile qualification separately it will not secure the necessary 2/3 majority.

5. During the discussion of Article 10 (Islands) there was some discussion on archipelagoes which culminated in the revival of a suggestion that further study of the question was necessary. This suggestion appeared to represent the consensus of the opinion of the Committee. There is already before the Committee a proposal co-sponsored by Panama and India (L.156/Rev.1) recommending that the Conference recommend to the General Assembly that the juridical régime of historic waters including historic bays be studied. It seems likely that the question of the study of archipelagoes will be joined with this proposal.

6. Towards the end of the week most of the Committee's time was devoted to consideration of Articles 1, 2, 3 and 66. During Thursday and Friday particularly, events moved rapidly as proposals were revised, withdrawn and re-submitted. This and the accompanying intense behind-the-scene activity culminated in three meetings of the Committee on Saturday lasting until virtually midnight. Out of the 14 votes (13 of which were roll-call) as already mentioned above and as outlined in detail in our telegram 357, the 12 mile fishing zone of the Canadian proposal (besides a number of interesting procedural decisions) was the one concrete proposal to be adopted, the American counter-proposal being defeated.

74.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 364

Geneva, April 21, 1958

Reference: Our Tel 326 Apr 14.

Attention Cadieux.

WEEKLY REPORT NO. 8 FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 19

Committee II (High Seas: General Régime)

1. The Committee met on April 14 and considered a proposal by Colombia that, in the absence of agreement on other means of settlement, disputes should be decided by the International Court of Justice. After statements by USA and USSR the delegate from Colombia moved that his proposal be referred to the plenary session. This motion was adopted 46 to 0 with two abstentions.

2. The Committee had earlier decided to reopen the discussion on the new Article 33A, containing a definition of government ships. After statements by various representatives, the UK announced its readiness to abandon the proposal. Article 33A was therefore withdrawn.

3. On April 15 the Portuguese withdrew their proposal for defining the various classes of ships including warships and government ships.

4. The new article introduced by Argentine, Ceylon, India and Mexico in effect, reintroduced in modified form paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article 48 dealing with the disposal of radio-active wastes. The resentment expressed by a number of delegations at the earlier rejection by only 1 vote of these two paragraphs had apparently caused the UK and USA to give second thought to the subject; statements made by both were conciliatory. A wording of the new article was framed in such manner as to be acceptable to both USA and UK and adopted 58 to 0 and 0 abstentions.

5. A discussion then ensued upon the kind of instrument to be adopted. There was considerable opposition to a proposal by South Africa for embodying the work in a declaration; most delegations seemed to favour a convention.

6. The Committee met on April 16 and adopted by a substantial majority with only 1 dissenting vote and 4 abstentions, a proposal by Turkey that the Committee did not wish to express by means of vote its view on the kind of instrument it should adopt and that a report of the discussions upon the subject should be sent to the plenary session.

7. On April 18 the Committee met and accepted the report of the drafting group. The only work left is to receive the report of the rapporteur.

Committee III (Fishing)

8. During the week all remaining Articles 57 to 60 and 49 were amended and adopted.

9. Article 55 as amended reads:

Article 55

“1. Having regard to the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article 54, any coastal state may, with a view to the maintenance of the productivity of the living resources of the sea, adopt unilateral measures of conservation appropriate to any stock of fish or other marine resources in any area of the high seas adjacent to its territorial sea, provided that negotiations to that effect with the other States concerned have not led to an agreement within six months.

2. The measures which the coastal state adopts under the previous paragraph shall be valid as to other States only if the following requirements are fulfilled:

(a) that there is a need for urgent application of conservation measures in the light of the existing knowledge of the fishery;

(b) that the measures adopted are based on appropriate scientific findings;

(c) that such measures do not discriminate against foreign fishermen.

3. These measures shall remain in force pending the settlement, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of this Convention, of any disagreement as to their validity.

4. These measures do not apply to seas adjacent to the coasts of uninhabited territories.

5. If these measures are not accepted by the other States concerned, any of the parties may initiate the procedure contemplated by Article 57. Subject to paragraph 2 of Article 58 the measures adopted shall remain obligatory in force, pending the decision of the special commission.

6. The principles of geographical demarcation as defined in Articles 12 and 14 shall be adopted when coasts of different States are involved.”

10. The first of the arbitration articles drew heavy fire from Latin Americans, the Soviet bloc and Japan who did not want compulsory arbitration of any kind. They preferred voluntary referral of disputes to the International Court of Justice or that disputes be handled under Article 33 of the UN Charter. Freedom of sea countries, on the other hand, wanted the strongest possible compulsory arbitration machinery.

After much manoeuvring the article passed as amended (roll-call vote on amendment 38 to 14 with 10 abstentions). It reads as follows:

11. Article 57:

“1. Any disagreement arising between States under Articles 52, 53, 54, 55 and 56 shall, at the request of any of the parties, be submitted for settlement to a special commission of five members, unless the parties agree to seek a solution by another method of peaceful settlement, as provided for in Article 33 of the Charter of the UN.

2. The members, one of whom shall be designated as Chairman, shall be named by agreement between the States in dispute within three months of the request for settlement in accordance with the provisions of this article. Failing agreement they shall, upon the request of any State party, be named by the Secretary-General of the UN, within a further three-month period, in consultation with the States in dispute and with the President of the International Court of Justice and the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization, from amongst well-qualified persons being nationals of countries not involved in the dispute and specializing in legal, administrative or scientific questions relating to fisheries, depending upon the nature of the dispute to be settled. Any vacancy arising after the original appointment shall be filled in the same manner as provided for the initial selection.

3. Any State party to a proceeding under these articles shall have the right to name one of its nationals to the special commission, with the right to participate fully in the proceedings on the same footing as a member of the commission but without the right to vote or to take part in the writing of the commission’s decision.

4. The commission shall determine its own procedure, assuring each party to the proceeding a full opportunity to be heard and to present its case, and it shall also determine how the costs and expenses shall be divided between the parties to the dispute, failing agreement by the parties on these questions.

5. The special commission shall render its decision within a period of five months from the time it is constituted unless it decides, in case of necessity, to extend that time limit not to exceed three months.

6. The special commission shall, in reaching its decisions, adhere to these articles and to any special agreements between the disputing sides regarding settlement of the dispute.

7. Decisions of the commission shall be by majority vote.”

12. On passage of Article 57, Thailand, Sweden, Mexico, France, USSR and Korea withdrew their amendments to Article 58. Two remained — one by Yugoslavia and one jointly submitted by Greece, Pakistan and the USA. The latter was debated first, amended and passed, the Yugoslav amendment was then withdrawn. Article 58 as amended reads as follows:

Article 58

“1. The special commission shall, in disputes arising under Article 55, apply the criteria listed in paragraph 2 of that article. In disputes under the remaining fishery articles the commission shall apply the following criteria, according to the issues involved in the dispute:

(a) common to the determination of disputes arising under Articles 52, 53 and 54 are the requirements:

- (i) that scientific findings demonstrate the necessity of conservation measures;
- (ii) that the specific measures are based on scientific findings and are practicable; and
- (iii) that the measures do not discriminate against fishermen of other States.

(b) applicable to the determination of disputes arising under Article 56 is the requirement that scientific findings demonstrate the necessity for conservation measures, or that the conservation programme is adequate, as the case may be.

2. The special commission may decide that pending its award the measures in dispute shall not be applied, provided that, in the case of disputes under Article 55, the measures should only be suspended when it is apparent to the commission on the basis of prima facie evidence that the need for the urgent application of such measures does not exist."

13. On passage of Articles 57 and 58 all amendments to 59 were withdrawn except one by Uruguay which was accepted. The article as amended reads:

Article 59:

"The decisions of the special commission shall be binding on the states concerned and the provisions of paragraph 2 of Article 94 of the Charter of the UN shall be applicable to those decisions. If the decision is accompanied by any recommendations, they shall receive the greatest possible consideration."

14. Norway proposed two additional Articles 59a and 59b. One of these 59a was adopted 39 to 2 with 9 abstentions. This read:

Article 59a:

"1. If the factual basis of the decision of the special commission is altered by substantial changes in the conditions of the stock or stocks of fish or other living marine resources or in methods of fishing any of the States concerned may request the other states to enter into negotiations with a view to prescribing by agreement the necessary modifications in the measures of conservation.

2. If no agreement is reached within a reasonable period of time, any of the States concerned may again resort to the procedure contemplated by Article 57 provided that at least two years have elapsed from the original award."

15. The proposed Article 59b was withdrawn.

16. On passage of the arbitration articles the appropriate paragraphs of Articles 52 to 56 were adopted which completed acceptance of these articles. The only change of consequence made in these paragraphs was changing "reasonable period of time" to "12 months."

17. Article 60 which deals with a very special situation in South East Asia was piloted through by India. Four amendments were submitted. One amendment by Ghana carried. The amended article reads:

Article 60:

"1. The regulation of fisheries conducted by means of equipment embedded in the floor of the sea in areas of the high seas adjacent to the territorial sea of a State may be undertaken by that State where such fisheries have long been maintained and conducted by its nationals, provided that non-nationals are permitted to participate in such activities on an equal footing with nationals except in areas where such fisheries have by long usage been exclusively enjoyed by such nationals. Such regulations will not, however, affect the general status of the areas as high seas.

2. Fisheries conducted by means of equipment embedded in the floor of the sea in this article means those using gear with supporting members embedded in the sea floor, constructed on a site and left there to operate permanently, or, if removed, restored each season on the same site."

18. Five amendments were submitted to Article 49. A UK amendment carried and the article now reads:

Article 49:

"1. All States have the right for their nationals to engage in fishing on the high seas, subject (a) to their treaty obligation (b) to the interests and rights of coastal states as provided for in this convention and (c) to the provisions contained in the following articles concerning conservations of the living resources of the high seas.

2. All States have the duty to adopt or to cooperate with other States in adopting such measures for their respective nationals as may be necessary for the conservation of the living resources of the high seas."

19. Five further amendments were submitted with Article 49 which made claims to exclusive or preferential fishing rights by virtue of special conditions. The joint submission on abstention by Canada and the USA comes under this heading as does Iceland's case for exclusive rights beyond the agreed-to fishery zone under cases of demonstrated need. These items are now being debated. The abstention principle was opposed by Western European fishing nations, the Soviet bloc and Japan. Some support is developing in Latin America and among Afro-Asians.

20. Also passed was a resolution originally submitted by Nepal but worked over by a committee appointed by the Chairman consisting of delegates from Australia, Monaco and Nepal dealing with humane killing of marine life. A non-governmental agency representing the humane society has had a delegate, Dr. Lillie, present throughout the whole conference. The resolution reads:

"The UN Conference on the Law of the Sea requests States to prescribe, by all means available to them, those methods for the capture and killing of marine life, especially of whales and seals, which will spare them suffering to the greatest extent possible."

21. The deadline for completing Committee III's work is April 19. Some doubt remains as to whether this can be accomplished on time.

Committee IV (Continental Shelf)

22. Committee IV concluded its work on April 18 with the adoption of the report to the Conference on the Committee's work.

23. Earlier in the week the Committee discussed the recommendation of the General Committee to consider the kind of instrument required to embody the results of its work and the content of final clauses. It would seem that the Latin American group wanted to prevent the Committee from making any recommendation to the Conference and to reserve their position on the continental shelf until the outcome of the work of other committees was known. They took the line that the discussion of instruments and final clauses was a matter for the plenary conference and outside the competence of the Committee. This was inconsistent with the fact that Committee IV had received a specific invitation from the General Committee to make recommendations on these matters.

24. Canada put forward a specific proposal in the following terms: "That Committee IV recommends to the Conference that the results of its work be embodied in a separate convention relating only to the continental shelf." After much discussion we accepted an amendment proposed by the USSR to delete the words "separate" and "only." Admittedly this weakened our proposal somewhat but it appeared to us to be superior to the alternatives of either making no recommendation or recommending some instrument other than a convention. The Canadian proposal as amended by the USSR was adopted by 39 to 6 with 7 abstentions.

25. On the question of final clauses the Committee agreed 21 to 19 with 10 abstentions that recommendations would be made to the plenary conference and then considered various types of sample clauses provided in a note prepared by the Secretariat (A/Conf.13/L.7). Recommendations were adopted on the form of each of the following final clauses: signature, ratification, accession, entry into force, revision, notifications and deposit of the Convention and languages.

26. The one disappointing feature of the debate on final clauses was the failure to reach agreement on a reservations clause. Four alternative reservation clauses had been provided in the note by the Secretariat. As a result of voting on each, it was agreed that alternative IV should be recommended. This clause provided for reservations to articles other than those specifically excepted. The Committee then voted article by article to determine on which of these articles reservations would not repeat not be permitted. As a result of this series of votes it was decided that reservations would be allowed only to Article 72. However, when the clause as a whole, with the inclusion of the articles to which no reservations could be made was put to a vote it was lost 21 to 20 with 5 abstentions. This matter may be reopened in plenary. In the course of the week's work the Committee also considered and approved the report of the drafting committee (A/Conf.13/C.4/L.65) which had made a number of useful revisions in the text of the articles as adopted by the Committee during the course of its five meetings. The most important revisions concern Articles 68 and 71 but there were minor drafting changes in 67 and 72 as well.

27. Three points should be mentioned re paragraph 68: (1) previous paragraphs 3 and 4 were combined to become paragraph 2; (2) Article 68A has been inserted [group corrupt]; (3) previous paragraph 5 was placed as a separate article and numbered 73. This of course necessitated the renumbering of previous Article 73 as 74.

28. Re Article 71, much consideration was given to the apparent incompatibility between paragraphs 1 and 8. However the drafting committee made no change and Committee IV itself decided against reopening consideration of the matter. The drafting group had combined purely as a matter of drafting the previous paragraphs 5 and 6. However, they consulted with the original sponsors of these paragraphs — the Netherlands, UK and Pakistan who then provided a composite text. In the Committee's consideration of the drafting committee's report this text was rejected in favour of a new text for paragraph 5 jointly proposed by Canada and India.

29. The Committee concluded its work with a general expression of appreciation to the Chairman of the Committee, the officers and Secretariat and the interpreters.

Committee V (Landlocked States)

30. Except for the consideration of its report to plenary the Committee this week completed its work. By an overwhelming majority, the Swiss proposal attached to our letter 239 April 11† was approved. A joint amendment (France, Netherlands, Germany, USA and Bolivia) to the second part of the Swiss proposal had previously been submitted and was also approved by a substantial majority. This amendment makes the Swiss proposal more satisfactory from the point of view of the transit and maritime countries while going a long way towards meeting the wishes of the more extreme-minded landlocked states. Canada supported both the amendment and the main proposal.

31. The draft resolution originally submitted by the UK, Netherlands and Italy had previously been withdrawn in a spirit of compromise. On the other hand the document submitted by 19 powers (No C.5/L.6) was never withdrawn by the sponsors and was given short shrift.

75.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Note de l'adjoint spécial du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

Memorandum from Special Assitant to Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], April 25, 1958

From reports received during the past twenty-four hours from Mr. Drew, it appears that the position at the Law of the Sea Conference is as follows:

(a) the vote on the territorial sea and fishing zones item is taking place in Geneva at this time;

(b) it seems not unlikely that all proposals so far advanced may fail to secure a two-thirds majority;

(c) there is a possibility that a proposal will be advanced providing that the question of territorial limits would be reconsidered at a new conference to be held in a relatively short time, i.e., a few months, pending which the status quo will be maintained; and

(d) Mr. Drew intends to support or, if necessary, propose such a resolution if the conference fails to reach agreement on any other proposal.⁴³

H.B. R[OBINSON]

76.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 385

Geneva, April 25, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: My Tel 384 Apr 24.†

BREADTH OF THE TERRITORIAL SEA

My reference telegram did not attempt to give any detail as to the present situation and likely prospects.

2. As I indicated, the vote on Articles 3 and 66 is to occur today at 5 o'clock. The decision to recommend this was taken at a meeting of the plenary conference yesterday on the recommendation of the General Committee. The basis of procedure for today on these articles is quite unusual and is required by the shortness of time before the conference must end and the determined resistance to the USA effort to secure reconsideration of their proposal in committee. In effect the USA agreed to abandon that attempt in consideration of the following procedure that has now been agreed on:

⁴³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Note for file: Shown to P.M. 11.30 am April 25. P.M. agreed to Mr. Drew's proposing procedural resolution for reconvening conference at a later date. H.B. R[obinson]

"1. The order of procedure in relation to voting on Articles 3 and 66 in the plenary session is to be decided by the President. Delegations are urged as far as possible not to appeal against the decisions of the President.

2. All proposals presented in plenary relating to Articles 3 and 66 are to be put to the vote at 5pm on Friday.

3. No proposals for postponement of voting on the above proposals relating to these articles shall be considered before the proposals referred to are voted on.

4. No amendments to, or motions for division of, proposals may be submitted or discussed.

5. Speeches to be limited to two speakers for and two against each proposal and to ten minutes duration each. Whether or not all speeches are concluded, voting will start at 5pm."

3. The plenary meeting on Articles 3 and 66 is to begin at 3 o'clock. As you will see from paragraph 4, there can be no repeat no amendment to our paragraph 2 (which will of course go forward from the Committee) nor to the USA or any other proposal that is put in. There can of course be new proposals which could be designed to supersede either our paragraph 2 or the USA proposal. It was made clear at the plenary conference yesterday afternoon that proposals approved in committee will be considered first. Our paragraph 2 will thus be voted on before the USA proposal.

4. It is difficult to say what the result will be on our paragraph. I have already reported on the heavy USA pressure. The situation is fluid and it would be unwise to attempt to anticipate the results of the voting on our proposal today.

5. As to the USA proposal we do not think they can get two-thirds. This view is shared by Bailey of Australia. I think the USA effort to reopen their proposal in committee is also evidence that they share the view that they cannot get a two-thirds vote in plenary. I think the main motive in their surprise move was to get a snap decision in favour of their proposal in the Committee and then to argue that this superseded the Canadian proposal. As the General Committee was heavily loaded in their favour this would have given them a distinct advantage.

6. After the USA motion of April 23 for reconsideration of their proposal there were two motions that were voted on: one for suspension of the meeting and one for adjournment of the discussion. These motions failed by votes: 35(Canada)-38-10 and 36(Canada)-38-8. We know that the opposition figures of 35 and 36 will not stand firm when the USA proposal comes to plenary. Ceylon and India, who are included in the figures, will definitely vote for USA. Ghana is not certain and that is the reason I asked that a message be sent to Accra. Chile, Ecuador and Uruguay may abstain. These changes will reduce the opposition vote to 29 or 30. This is precisely the figure we had come to by an independent assessment two days before. Our present estimate is that there will be six or seven abstentions. If this is correct the USA proposal will fail of getting a two-thirds vote.

7. If the above is correct and if, as appears certain, no other proposal gets a two-thirds majority there will be two possibilities: (a) the conference may break up with no action on the breadth of the territorial sea, or (b) a last-minute formula may emerge which will hold things in line with a view to a new effort on this item in a very short time.

8. I think there is a strong general view that course (a) is very undesirable.

9. As to course (b) there is a resolution by Saudi Arabia which in the form in which it now stands would (1) request the Secretary General of the UN "To study ways and means, including the convocation of a special conference, with a view to arriving at an agreement on the extent of the territorial sea” and (2) would also accept principles much as stated in Article 3 of the ILC text. This resolution would of course leave the way open for countries to change their limits of territorial sea and would not set any date for a conference. I understand there will be an amendment moved to delete the second portion of this resolution and call upon all countries to make no change in their territorial limits before the conference occurs. As this proposal has been before the conference for some time it will have priority after the articles are disposed of and in its amended form it may prove attractive. There is also the possibility of a draft resolution which would in its own terms call for this conference to meet again in a matter of a few months to consider Article 3 alone and call upon all countries to stand still as to territorial limits in the meantime.

10. We have been considering whether this result could not be achieved in a somewhat different manner by having the substance of this situation written in as an Article 3 for adoption. Naturally this could not be introduced before the voting at 5 o'clock today as it would weaken the position of our paragraph 2. There may be no repeat no opportunity to consult you on this matter before action is necessary today. I am assuming however that action along the above lines, if it becomes necessary would be acceptable to the government. If you have any comments I would of course be extremely glad to have them.

11. In the course of a conversation yesterday Bailey advised Robertson that he thought a standstill agreement could be secured if it were joined with a decision to have a conference on Article 3 not later than August or September of this year. He does not repeat not think that agreement could be secured to stand still for a period as long as a year or even until next February.

[GEORGE] DREW

77.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 395

Geneva, April 25, 1958

OPIMMEDIATE.

Personal Attention Cadieux.

Following is the result of the voting in plenary this afternoon:

1. Article 3 as adopted by Committee One (i.e. second paragraph of the Canadian proposal for fishing zone) 35 in favour, 30 against, with 20 abstentions.

2. USA proposal, 45 in favour, 33 against, with 7 abstentions.

3. Soviet Union proposal, 21 in favour, 47 against (Canada), with 17 abstentions.

4. Proposal co-sponsored by Burma, Colombia, Indonesia, Mexico, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, UAR and Venezuela, providing for the fixing of a territorial limit up to 12 miles and where the limit were less than 12 miles for a 12-mile fishing zone, 39 in favour, 38 against (Canada) with 8 abstentions.

5. The ILC text of Article 66 was adopted with the addition of immigration and of a provision for delimiting the contiguous zone between two adjacent or opposite States by a vote of 60 in favour (Canada), 0 against, with 13 abstentions. The version of Article 66 adopted in Committee One which included provision for enforcement of security regulations was defeated by a vote of 40 in favour, 27 against (Canada), with 9 abstentions.⁴⁴

78.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 397

Geneva, April 26, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Personal Attention Cadieux.

For immediate delivery.

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

1. More detailed report on voting yesterday will follow, but in the meantime thought I should give an impression of the results of voting reported in our telegram 395.

2. Doubtful if there has ever been such pressure on governments represented at any conference of this kind. During past 48 hours one delegate after another told me that his government had been forced to submit to the heaviest type of pressure mainly based on economic dependence. Various types of pressure exerted on countries which are receiving aid in one form or another. This even went to extent of representations on other grounds at highest level to the Vatican by the British Minister. As a result of Dupuy's prompt and effective intervention, Holy See delegate did abstain on our proposal but still voted for American proposal.

3. As you know we did obtain majority but considerably short of two-thirds. Our main concern at end was possibility of USA proposal getting two-thirds, and I regard failure of USA efforts after the extent to which they had exercised their dollar imperialism as a real victory in the defence of our own fishing interests which would have suffered so greatly under the USA proposal.

4. It now seems unlikely that anything very unusual will happen but there will be valuable conventions covering all articles except No. 3. This in itself is a very outstanding achievement in the codification of the law of the sea.

5. There seems to be almost unanimous agreement today that by reference back to the UN a time should be set for a special conference dealing with the measurement of the territorial sea and fishing zone. In fact various groups of delegates who were opposed yesterday are working together to draft a satisfactory resolution.

⁴⁴ Pour le texte officiel de toutes les propositions concernant les articles 3 et 66 mises au vote lors de la séance plénière de la conférence le 25 avril, voir Conférence des Nations Unies sur le droit de la mer, Documents officiels, Volume II, Séances Plénières, pp. 130 à 133, 142 à 143, 145.

For the official text of all proposals relating to Articles 3 and 66 put to a vote in the April 25 plenary session of the conference, see United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, Official Records, Volume II, Plenary Meetings, pp. 115-117, 125-126, 132.

6. You will realize under what tremendous pressure all our delegation working today, so shall defer more detailed report until Monday.

[GEORGE] DREW

79.

DEA/9456-RW-2-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence sur le droit de la mer
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Law of the Sea Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 401

Geneva, April 28, 1958

EMERGENCY.

(Personal Attention Cadieux)

CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

1. The Conference concluded at 2.15 this morning after nearly 13 hours of a very strenuous session during the morning, afternoon and evening. The fact that the Conference did not reach agreement on the measurement of the territorial sea and a contiguous fishing zone does not mean that this Conference has been a failure. On the contrary I should think that this has been the most successful general conference ever convened by the UN. It has produced a comprehensive code of the Law of the Sea covering all articles submitted by the International Law Commission except Article 3, and in addition several articles not embraced in the original recommendation.

2. The articles which were adopted in the plenary session cover every aspect of maritime law and give form to several new concepts never previously defined. That is particularly true in the case of the new law relating to the continental shelf and recognition of the position of land-locked states included in the recommendations of the Fifth Committee which will be incorporated in a single convention. There is also recognition for the first time of the special rights in regard to conservation of fish by the coastal states.

3. One of the most significant features of the Conference is the unqualified acceptance at the conclusion of the Conference of the need for a fishing zone. Although this subject was not even mentioned by the International Law Commission, it gained such increasing acceptance that in the final discussions yesterday no speaker even suggested that this would not be one of the two points considered at the new conference which has been requested to deal particularly with the unfinished business relating to Article 3. This in itself has been a very substantial success from the Canadian point of view.

4. The articles submitted by each of the five committees, with the amendments and changes made in the plenary session, are to be incorporated in five separate conventions which are to be presented for signature either tomorrow afternoon or Wednesday morning. There will also be a protocol on jurisdiction by the International Court. Several states have already received authorization to sign these conventions, and protocol subject of course to ratification, and there is to be a formal ceremony presided over by Prince Wan which will emphasize the truly substantial success of this Conference in the codification for the first time of the Law of the Sea.

5. I hope it will be the decision of the government to authorize signature by Canada in view of the part which our delegation has played in this conference, and particularly the fact that the articles which have been approved are completely satisfactory in every respect to Canada.⁴⁵

6. I should add that during yesterday's session several changes were made which greatly improved the articles from our point of view, particularly the elimination of any limitation of length of baselines. This was done at our request and against the vigorous opposition of the UK, USA and most of the Western European countries. One particularly significant feature of this conference is the measure of support we have been receiving from the newer countries in Asia and Africa as well as the older countries of Latin America.

7. Before adjournment early this morning the Conference approved a resolution "to request the UN General Assembly to study at its 13th session (1958) the advisability of convening a second international conference of plenipotentiaries for further consideration of the questions left unsettled by the present conference." In the discussions relating to this resolution it was made clear that the questions to which reference is made are the breadth of the territorial sea and the fishing rights of coastal states in the contiguous zone. What was particularly satisfactory from our point of view was the evidence of a general desire to have this special conference convened at the earliest practical date. In some way it may be best that this has been the result. It will give an opportunity for an exchange of information and particularly for down-to-earth discussions with the USA. It is clear that if there is to be general agreement on this point we must convince them of the correctness of our position and if possible find some common ground for a definition of these rights. It is not too much to say that if we can find such common ground with them, agreement at the special conference will not likely be difficult.

8. While I shall be making an extensive personal report⁴⁶ I do wish at this time to express my great admiration for the untiring efforts of every member of the Canadian Delegation. It was evident that their knowledge of the subject and their constant attention to the business of the conference gained the respect of all the other delegations.

[GEORGE] DREW

⁴⁵ Le 29 avril 1958, le Cabinet « agreed that the head of the Canadian delegation be vested with full powers to sign on behalf of Canada, subject to ratification, any conventions open for signature by the conference. »

On April 29, 1958, Cabinet "agreed that the head of the Canadian Delegation be vested with full powers to sign on behalf of Canada, subject to ratification, any conventions open for signature by the conference."

⁴⁶ Un exemplaire du volumineux rapport final de la délégation se trouve aux ANC, BCP, Accession 1990-1991/154, dossier C-100-25. Pour un bref rapport sur les délibérations de la conférence, voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol 10, Nos 4 et 5, avril-mai 1958, pp. 86 à 89, 111.

A copy of the delegation's voluminous final report can be found in NAC, PCO, Accession 1990-1991/154, file C-100-25. For a brief report on the conference proceedings, see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 10, Nos. 4-5, April-May 1958, pp. 86-89, 111.

80.

PCO

*Note du chef du Comité du Cabinet sur les eaux territoriales
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Chairman, Cabinet Committee on Territorial Waters,
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 182-58

[Ottawa, n.d.]

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

LAW OF THE SEA: CANADIAN POLICY

As Canada does not intend to adopt unilateral action at this time, it would seem that the only possible line of approach for Canada to realize its objective of achieving a wider coastal area reserved for the exclusive use of its fishermen would be to continue to seek international recognition of a coastal state's right to establish such a zone. As it is clear that this objective could more appropriately be realized at a general international conference, rather than at a regional or series of regional meetings, it would seem desirable for Canada to support, at the forthcoming session of the United Nations General Assembly in September, the convening of a new international general conference, at an early date after the conclusion of the next session of the General Assembly, and in a 'neutral' location such as Geneva.

2. At the recent Geneva Conference, the Canadian proposal for a six-mile territorial sea and an exclusive twelve-mile fishing zone fell short of obtaining the necessary two-thirds majority vote. The United States proposal, which was most unsatisfactory from a Canadian point of view in that it would have converted into firm legal and perpetually expanding rights, the fishing practices, in the outer six miles of the twelve-mile zone, of several European states and the United States, also fell short of achieving a two-thirds majority but obtained ten more affirmative votes, notwithstanding the fact that it was introduced relatively late in the proceedings of the Conference. There have recently been indications that in the course of the next few months the United States and United Kingdom will be conducting a vigorous campaign in favour of the United States proposal.

3. Since the conclusion of the Geneva Conference there have been certain important international developments affecting the question of a coastal state's right to a twelve-mile exclusive fishing zone which may be regarded as generally favourable to the Canadian proposal. The Icelandic Government has recently announced that, on September 1, it will extend its fisheries regulations to twelve miles and will exclude foreign fishermen from these areas. The Faeroe Islands, under the sovereignty of Denmark, have also declared that they will adopt a twelve-mile fisher regulation, and the Danish Government has now endorsed this position. The Norwegian Government has stated that in the light of these developments it may "be forced to take necessary steps to protect its coastal fishing grounds." This trend towards our position undoubtedly places those countries concerned in distant-water fishing (particularly the United Kingdom) in an exceedingly difficult position, leaving them, it would seem only the following three possible courses of action:

(a) resist by force if necessary the implementation of the Icelandic regulation; in this event the position, at a future conference, of the United Kingdom, the United States and those countries favouring the recognition of "traditional fishing rights" is likely to be seriously prejudiced;

(b) on a bilateral or multilateral basis, enter into a compromise agreement with Iceland; as Iceland has clearly rejected the United States proposal, as put forward at Geneva, such an agreement, whether interim (i.e., pending a new conference) or otherwise, would seem likely to be more favourable to coastal states seeking an exclusive fishing zone than the position formulated in the United States proposal;

(c) take no steps to resist the implementation of the Icelandic regulation, although not extending recognition to it; this would help to place the Icelandic precedent on a more secure footing.

4. As will be recalled, Canada favours the settlement of the Icelandic-United Kingdom dispute through bilateral negotiations between the two states concerned; we are opposed to a regional approach, — either in a NATO context or among North Atlantic states outside of NATO, — to a problem concerning a subject which has world-wide implications. The reasons for our policy are that:

(i) a forum for discussion of this dispute which would be restricted to Atlantic states would be likely to put Canada at a distinct bargaining disadvantage;

(ii) any decision on our part to enter into discussions with North Atlantic states on this matter may be regarded as a breach of faith with those Afro-Asian and Latin American states with which we worked closely at the Geneva Conference and which shared objectives similar to our own;

(iii) it is not open to a limited number of states to create a régime which would have general validity for all coastal states;

(iv) a regional approach to the problem might be likely to arouse an inclination in other regions to settle the general questions of the breadth of the territorial sea and of a contiguous fishing zone on purely regional terms; and

(v) Canadian participation in regional discussions would be likely to lead us to a compromise of the Canadian proposal, which we are not prepared to accept at this time.

5. Our present policy would therefore seem to call for Canada to hold to its present position and to await further developments in the North Atlantic area, at least until after the beginning of September when it has become clear whether the United Kingdom or other European states will attempt to resist by force the implementation of the Icelandic fishing regulation. Should Iceland be able to implement its decision, there is no question that, as this would help place the Icelandic precedent on a more secure foundation, it would constitute an important step in the recognition of a coastal state's right to a contiguous fishing zone.

6. In the meantime there would appear to be advantage in Canadian representatives approaching at this time certain of those Afro-Asian, Latin American, European and Commonwealth countries with which we worked closely at the Geneva Conference or which played an important role at the Conference, in order to receive an account of their thinking on several matters of interest to us, and to gain and consolidate support for our position. Thus our representatives could, by means of such discussions:

(a) seek to determine whether these countries share our view that the prospects for the success of the Canadian proposal are improving;

(b) seek an assessment of their thinking on the type of proposal which they consider likely to be successful at a future conference;

(c) seek an indication of their reaction to the Icelandic-United Kingdom dispute, and in particular with regard to the United Kingdom intention to use force if necessary to protect their fishing vessels in waters affected by the Icelandic decree;

(d) emphasize that, in accordance with our position taken at Geneva, we do not favour unilateral action at this time but the convening, in the near future, of a new international general conference; at the same time it could be pointed out that we have serious reservations about a regional approach to problems which are essentially of world-wide concern;

(e) emphasize that the United States proposal could never be satisfactory to states seeking preservation of their own fishing interests in view of the highly unsatisfactory and unprecedented nature of the fishing rights which the United States proposal would create in the outer six miles of the contiguous fishing zone;

(f) explain why Canada considers its proposal for a twelve-mile exclusive fishing zone to be the best possible basis for international agreement.

It would, of course, be understood that Cabinet will be informed of the results of these consultations when they are completed.

7. There are, however, two eventualities which may arise in the course of the next few months which it may be necessary to bring to Cabinet's attention:

(a) if a compromise is reached among those Atlantic states concerned in the Icelandic dispute, it would not seem unlikely that this position will be the position advanced by the Atlantic states at any future general conference. As this compromise formula will presumably constitute a modification of the United States proposal in the direction of our own, it may possess better prospects for success at a future general conference than the United States proposal in the form put forward at Geneva. Canada may therefore be required, immediately upon any compromise agreement being reached among the states concerned, to re-examine the position it will adopt at a future international conference;

(b) the Icelandic-United Kingdom dispute may deteriorate, i.e., force may be used by either side to uphold its position. A dispute will thus have developed between two of our NATO allies which, in addition to introducing a new and highly undesirable area of tension in the Western alliance, will be almost certain to be exploited by the Soviet Union (in fact, the Soviet Union has already welcomed the Icelandic decision to take unilateral action). In the event the situation does deteriorate, the situation will, of course, be brought to the immediate attention of Cabinet.

8. Having regard to Canadian policy as outlined in paragraphs 4 and 5 supra, I therefore recommend⁴⁷ with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries:

(1) that, at the next General Assembly of the United Nations, Canada support the convening, in the near future, and in a 'neutral' location, of a new international general conference to deal with the questions of the breadth of the territorial sea and a contiguous fishing zone;

(2) that no change be made at this time in the Canadian proposal for a twelve-mile contiguous fishing zone and that, after September 1, when the implications of the Icelandic-United Kingdom dispute will have developed further, or prior to that time in the event that an agreement is reached among the Atlantic states, the Canadian position be again re-examined by Cabinet;

(3) that the Canadian representatives in certain countries, such as India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Ghana, The Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Brazil, Mexico, Columbia, Australia, South Africa and the Philippines, determine what is the thinking of these Governments on ⁴⁷ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 12 juillet 1958.

Approved by Cabinet on July 12, 1958.

matters of interest to us of the nature indicated in paragraph 6 (sub-paragraphs (a) to (c)), and attempt to gain and consolidate support for the Canadian proposal, particular emphasis being given to the matters mentioned in sub-paragraphs (d) to (f) of paragraph 6.

[ALVIN HAMILTON]

81.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa], October 16, 1958

LAW OF THE SEA: CANADIAN POSITION

In accordance with the Cabinet decision of July [12], our representatives abroad made approaches in thirty countries in order to determine what was their thinking with regard to recent developments on the law of the sea, the Icelandic fisheries dispute, the chances for success of the Canadian proposal and other related matters. A detailed tabulation of the twenty-three replies received to date (many of which are only provisional) is set out in an annex† to this memorandum. The replies so far received generally tend to be rather inconclusive. The impression is gained that states are adopting a rather cautious, wait-and-see attitude to the question of what type of proposal may succeed at a future conference, although the view appears to be growing that, if a conference is to succeed, there may have to be some compromise adopted between the United States and Canadian positions. This view was tentatively suggested by Turkey, as well as by the following supporters of the United States proposal: New Zealand, Australia, Netherlands and Denmark.

2. Very generally, the replies seem to indicate that those states which supported the Canadian proposal at Geneva and which did not support the United States proposal (e.g., the Philippines, Uruguay, Colombia, Chile, Argentina, Peru, Turkey) are prepared to continue to support the Canadian proposal in the future. While it appears that a majority of those states approached which supported the United States proposal and either voted against the Canadian proposal (e.g., Netherlands, Sweden, Belgium, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa), or abstained on the Canadian proposal (Malaya), continue to regard the United States formula as preferable to our own, there have nevertheless been several indications that some states in this category might be prepared to change their positions with regard to our proposal. Thus, Norway now intends to give its full support to the Canadian proposal at a future conference. Among other states voting against or abstaining on the Canadian proposal, there have been some signs that Denmark and Pakistan, and perhaps Brazil, might also be wavering. It also seems possible that Turkey and Ghana, which supported both the Canadian and United States proposals at Geneva, might not continue to give support to the United States position at a future conference.

3. The replies indicate fairly wide support for the convening of a new international conference (15 in favour, 4 doubtful, with 4 giving no indication of opinion). Many of the countries approached do not regard themselves to be in a position to comment on the chances for success of the Canadian proposal or whether they are improving. However, Belgium, Brazil, Uruguay, the Philippines and Turkey have stated that they consider the chances for success of our proposal are strengthening. The reaction to the United Kingdom-Icelandic dispute was largely one of concern, considerable sympathy being demonstrated for the Icelandic position. As you know, the replies from two states — Ireland and New Zealand — were rather critical of the Canadian position and seemed to indicate that they consider our present position as somewhat inflexible.

4. Replies have not, as yet, been received from Burma, Iran, Cambodia, Viet Nam, Thailand, Ecuador and Haiti. The approaches to the representatives of the first six of these countries are being made in London and it is hoped that when those replies are received and further consultations have taken place in New York, it should be possible to assemble results of our survey in a more complete form and accordingly to draw more definite conclusions.

5. At the present time, discussions are about to take place at the General Assembly in New York on the question of convening a new conference. The United States and Commonwealth countries appear to favour a conference and, while a two-thirds majority support for a new conference seems likely, it cannot be regarded as assured. It appears that some states (in particular Mexico) have doubts as to whether it would be desirable to convene a new conference if the breach which developed at Geneva between coastal states and distant-water fishing states was not to some extent healed. The Soviet Bloc is thought to be opposed to a conference, but it is doubtful if they can muster the number of votes necessary to defeat the convening of a new conference. On the basis of preliminary discussions in New York, it seems rather unlikely that agreement can be reached on a date for the conference before the summer of 1959.

6. The Delegation in New York has drawn up a draft proposal on convening a new conference which is contained in telegram No. 1613 of October 10 (copy of which is attached),† which it plans to use in informal discussions with states which appear to favour the convening of an early conference — for example, Ghana, Norway and Denmark. You might wish to indicate whether this draft proposal seems acceptable as a basis for a formal proposal to be put forward at a later date when discussions at the Sixth Committee get under way.

7. A copy of this memorandum and annex, as well as the attached telegram from the Delegation in New York, is being sent to Mr. Drew in London, as well as to the Deputy Ministers of Fisheries and Northern Affairs and National Resources in order that they might bring these documents to the attention of their Ministers.

R.M. MACDONNELL
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

82.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1876

New York, November 12, 1958

SECRET. EMERGENCY.

Repeat Washington, London, NATO Paris, Paris (OpImmediate) (Information).
By Bag Oslo, Copenhagen from London.

SIXTH COMMITTEE: LAW OF THE SEA

Debate on the question of a new conference is likely to begin on Monday of next week.

2. There have been two important recent developments which may have a bearing on our position: (a) It appears that the February date envisaged in our suggested draft resolution set out in telegram 1613 of October 10[†] will not repeat not be able to attract more than a slight amount of support, perhaps a dozen votes at most. The general feeling of the committee members seems to be that if the General Assembly does not repeat not decide until December to convene a conference, as seems likely, February will definitely be regarded as too early. As you know, the USA and UK have been pressing for a July-August date, and have now informed us that they feel fairly confident that they can get the necessary majority support for this date. (b) Although we had no repeat no previous intimation of this development before yesterday the USA and UK have decided to submit and have now submitted a draft resolution on a new conference which is set out in our telegram 1877.[‡] You will note that it is substantially similar to the suggested draft proposal contained in our telegram of October 10, except for the question of the date and the place of the conference. It will be noted that the USA-UK proposal leaves out the place of the conference as in the case of General Assembly Resolution 1105(XI), convening the International Conference on the Law of the Sea (presumably the place of the conference will therefore be determined by the Secretary-General).

3. USA and UK have requested Canada to join as an original co-sponsor of this draft resolution (see paragraph 9 below). They have expressed the view that the July date will have the best chance of obtaining widest possible support if countries supporting various substantive positions can come together and support July.

4. As you know, our feeling to date has been that it would be better to encourage the earlier date (February) (a) for tactical reasons (some countries might propose a 1960 date and July would accordingly be a compromise), and (b) because we believe that the situation with regard to territorial limits is so fast deteriorating that any delay is dangerous.

5. In the light of these recent developments, it seems to us that it might not repeat not be desirable to press for the February date (although making clear that it would have been our preference) and that there are several reasons why we ought accordingly to give consideration to co-sponsoring the USA-UK resolution for July. These reasons are as follows:

(a) If we press for February, and introduce an amendment or resolution calling for this date, we are very likely to suffer a substantial defeat on this vote. It might be most undesirable for states associated with the twelve mile fishing zone to suffer a defeat on a matter of this nature where questions of substance are not repeat not involved.

(b) By advancing the February date we may have to vote against July; if our opposition to July is coupled with that of states opposed altogether to a new conference or favouring a 1960 date, we may be creating a risk of defeating both 1959 dates and thus opening the way for a postponement to 1960 or even later.

(c) If we do not repeat not associate ourselves at the outset with the UK-USA proposal, but maintain a position which is very likely to be defeated, we might in a sense find ourselves losing the initiative on this question. The conference may accordingly be a UK-USA venture, i.e., one set in motion by states claiming "traditional" fishing rights. Although the USA and UK state that they are out to obtain as wide a co-sponsorship as possible, the omission of Canada and Norway, main contenders for a twelve mile exclusive fishing zone, may be regarded by some as a matter of significance. If we are to maintain the initiative we have heretofore possessed it would seem to follow that having regard to the apparent general sentiment that February is too early a date, it would seem desirable for Canada to co-sponsor July as being the earliest practicable date for the conference, on which general agreement can be reached.

6. Our position is, however, seriously complicated by the position of Norway and Denmark. It might be said at this point that we have had a number of discussions with the Icelandic representatives in New York and they seem also to feel that we ought not repeat not to lose the initiative on the matter of a new conference. The Icelanders are now prepared to attend the conference but they have stated that, from their point of view, a February or July date is immaterial. Consequently, although the UK is a co-sponsor of the proposal for a July date and Iceland is not repeat not, we see in this circumstance no repeat no impediment to our co-sponsoring the July resolution.

7. With regard to the positions of Denmark and Norway, they have informed us that although they are convinced that a February date is not repeat not likely to possess any chance whatever of success, the political situation in their respective countries requires them to press and to continue to press for a February date for the conference. As they are not repeat not insensible to the undesirable effects of a substantial defeat for a resolution cosponsored by Canada, Norway and Denmark, for February, they seem to think that we ought not repeat not to co-sponsor any resolution whatever; Norway, Denmark and Canada should rather content themselves with stressing in their statements a preference for a February date. This would not repeat not involve us trying to defeat a July date, and we could support a July date when the matter comes to a vote. They do not repeat not seem to regard the matter of a Canadian-Norwegian initiative as of any importance, but their main concern is, we believe, with domestic political feelings in their own countries. As you know, since Iceland established its fishing zone, both the Danish and Norwegian governments have been under some pressure to extend fishing limits for their own nationals. These governments have apparently made clear to their fishing interests that they will do all they can to bring about agreement on a conference at the earliest possible date, i.e., February. They therefore have to continue to give at least formal adherence to this date. They have informed us that they will discuss this question with their delegations today, but feel that their view is (a) likely to remain that we ought simply to state our preference for February and be prepared to support the July proposal, without co-sponsoring, and (b) that their position might be untenable if Canada departed from this line.

8. We have outlined what we considered to be the principal reasons which might suggest that we and other countries like Norway, Denmark, Ghana, Turkey and other potential supporters of our substantive position, should join the July resolution as co-sponsors, all of us working for the success of this resolution. As pointed out above, our concern is not repeat not to advance or press for a position which (a) seems likely to fail; (b) we do not repeat not regard as essential to our position, and (c) the Icelanders also do not repeat not regard as essential. However, it also seems to us that these arguments in favour of co-sponsoring will be fully convincing only if we could carry Norway and Denmark with us which does not repeat not appear to be the case. We believe that the views of our close partners should be given fullest consideration, particularly in view of the fact that any departure by Canada from our common position might conceivably be construed as evidence of weakness. On balance, therefore, we are inclined to maintain our common line with Norway and Denmark which would involve our refusing to co-sponsor the USA-UK resolution at this stage, stating firmly in the debate our preference for a February date (but without putting forward a resolution or amendment). This of course leaves open the possibility of Norway, Denmark and Canada joining as co-sponsors later, if there would appear to be any tactical advantage in our doing so. It goes without saying that even if we do not repeat not co-sponsor Canada's firm position in favour of an early conference at a most practicable date will continue to be stressed.

9. The USA has already submitted its resolution although debates have not repeat not yet begun. By so doing they have obtained priority over a possible Soviet or other resolution calling for a 1960 or later date. It appears, however, that it is still possible for others to add themselves as original repeat original cosponsors of USA, UK resolution. We should be grateful for any comments you might have.⁴⁸ (It should be noted that having regard to conference commitments there is no repeat no alternative to February/March or July/August during 1959).

83.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1958

New York, November 19, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris (OpImmediate) (Information).

By Bag Oslo, Copenhagen from London.

QUESTION OF CONVENING A NEW CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

It appears from developments in the past day or two that the situation with regard to the convening of a new conference is highly fluid and the USA may have miscalculated in believing that the necessary majority support for their resolution was assured.

2. Up until today it was not repeat not entirely clear what form the opposition to a new conference would take and what countries would adopt a negative position with regard to this question. It was of course assumed that the Soviet Bloc would not repeat not give its support to a 1959 date for a new conference and that certain Latin American states would join them in this position. We have also had several intimations that the Mexicans had decided not repeat not to favour the convening of a new conference in 1959 and the position taken by the Mexican Sixth Committee Representative, Garcia Robles, seems to reflect this attitude. However it was felt that opposition to a 1959 conference would not repeat not extend beyond the Soviet Bloc and some Latin American states.

3. It now appears that the opposition to a new conference in 1959 will take one of two forms: (A) a resolution or amendment to the 11-power proposal may be put forward calling for postponing consideration of a new conference until the 14th Session of the General Assembly in September 59, or (b) a resolution or amendment may be put forward to the effect that the 14th Session of the General Assembly should itself discuss the substantive questions of the breadth of a territorial sea and a contiguous fishing zone and attempt, ⁴⁸ La Délégation canadienne à New York avait pour instruction de ne pas coparrainer la résolution des États-Unis et du Royaume-Uni, et de déclarer uniquement qu'elle soutenait la tenue d'une seconde conférence en février 1959.

The Canadian Delegation in New York was instructed to refuse to co-sponsor the U.S.A.-U.K. resolution and to state only that they supported a second conference in February 1959.

within the framework of the General Assembly itself, to reach a solution to these two problems.

4. It also appears likely that the Indian Delegation will co-sponsor an amendment or resolution along either of these lines. Today, of course, it appeared that while the Indian Government was not repeat not in favour of a very early date for a new conference they were not repeat not actually opposed to the convening of a conference. However, it now seems that India intends to join Poland, the UAR, Mexico and some other countries in a resolution or amendment calling for either of the above two approaches to this question. There seems very little doubt that either of these variants constitutes an attempt to defeat the convening of a conference in 1959.

5. The first variant — putting the entire question on the next session of the General Assembly — is obviously designed to shelve the matter for the time being. The second variant — calling for substantive discussions at the 14th Session (which seems the more likely of the two to be put forward as a proposal) may have a certain specious appeal in that the co-sponsors of such a resolution would appear to want to reach a solution to these two problems. However, having regard to the fact that the General Assembly is hardly a conducive atmosphere for the discussion of these two highly complex and difficult questions as well as the fact that other items are likely to be placed on the agenda of the 14th Session, thus probably crowding the law of the sea discussions (as was the case this year); the conclusion seems clear that either of the variants mentioned above are designed essentially to defeat a new attempt being made in 1959 to reach a solution to the questions of the breadth of a territorial sea and fishing zone.

6. We might add that the countries contemplating co-sponsorship of a proposal calling for postponement until the 14th Session appear to be attempting to woo the Icelandic Delegation. From what Andersen of the Icelandic Delegation has informed us it seems not repeat not unlikely that the Icelanders may not repeat not be entirely unsympathetic to this delaying approach. This fact is perhaps a reflection of Iceland's ambivalent attitude to the question of convening a new conference.

7. We have approached the Indian Sixth Committee Representative, Pathak, and requested an opportunity to discuss the Indian position. We are meeting him tomorrow afternoon and unless advised by you to the contrary will strongly urge the Indians to reconsider their position. It is likely that the positions of many Afro-Asian countries are as yet not repeat not crystallized and Indian co-sponsorship of a resolution calling for consideration of the problem at the 14th Session may very well have a significant effect on their voting. We propose to point out to Pathak that it is clear that many countries may interpret Indian co-sponsorship of such a proposal as evidence of the fact that India does not repeat not regard the convening of a new conference as a highly urgent problem and that in view of the close co-operation between our two countries in the past on this question we would hope that they would not repeat not adopt any position which is designed to shelve for the time being an attempt to reach a new solution to these pressing problems.

8. We might add parenthetically that it seems possible that Kirshna Menon may have had some influence in the decision by India to put forth a resolution of this sort. It is also perhaps possible that Indian co-sponsorship of the proposed resolution is a reflection of the continuing rivalry between Menon and Sen which was in evidence at the Geneva Conference.

9. In view of the fact that the proposed resolution might be put forward at any date it is clear that time is of the essence. You may therefore wish to give consideration to the desirability of making representations in Delhi on an urgent and high level basis in order to inform the Indians that if a solution is to be reached to these highly pressing problems we regard it as absolutely essential that a new conference be convened at the earliest possible date in 1959 and we accordingly hope that both our countries will continue to work together for the common achievement of this aim.

84.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2055

New York, November 30, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2054 Nov 30.†

Repeat London, Washington, Geneva, NATO Paris (OpImmediate) (Information).

By Bag Oslo from London.

SIXTH COMMITTEE: QUESTION OF CONVENING NEW CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

The debate on the Law of the Sea is now entering its final week. The general debate will probably close on Wednesday, and the vote on the two proposals before the Committee (the 11-power proposal calling for a July conference and the 7-power amendment postponing consideration of the problems until the 14th Session) will probably take place on Thursday or Friday.

2. You will note from our telegram 2054 and earlier reports that the debates have revealed that a considerable amount of support exists for postponing the question until the 14th Session — particularly among the Arabs and Latin American countries.

3. Unfortunately it appears that the influence of some important countries like India and Mexico is being used to bolster the Soviet thesis that the present issues are rather in the nature of "colonial" or imperialist "questions and that the convening of a new conference is nothing more than a device to impose the will of the great maritime powers on the smaller countries. Needless to say the Iceland-UK dispute has provided the Soviet group with very useful material in this connection. The Soviet Union is in fact sparing no repeat no effort in attempting to cause as much dissension and confusion as possible and to discredit and cast doubts upon the sincerity of any arguments put forward in favour of a conference. Thus the Ukrainian Representative stated in yesterday's debate that the putting forward of a February date for a conference is merely a tactic of USA to allow them to give the appearance of a concession in proposing July or August for the conference.

4. The USA and UK believe that they can obtain for their resolution a majority in committee and increased votes in plenary session; on the other hand, the co-sponsors of the amendment seem hopeful that they can obtain 40 votes or more for the amendment and thus defeat the 11-power resolution. Our discussions with a wide number of delegations during the past week, particularly Afro-Asian, have indicated that the entire situation is highly fluid and the outcome of the debate remains doubtful.

5. However, it appears from our most recent discussions yesterday with representatives of Ceylon, Philippines, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Turkey, Burma and others that the 11-power resolution seems likely to carry by a small margin. There seems to be a realization on the part of a number of Afro-Asian states that the 7-power amendment is essentially negative and may result in a burial of the subject for some time. The hard core of the opposition to a conference exists chiefly among the Latin-American, Soviet and Arab states. Among the Afro-Asian countries Ceylon, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Japan, Iran, Philippines, Turkey, Burma, Thailand, Ghana and Malaya will probably support the proposal for a new conference. The rest are largely opposed, although a few may be doubtful (Libya, Lebanon, Ethiopia, Cambodia). The Latin American states are divided; Chile, Ecuador, Venezuela and, of course Mexico are all committed to the joint amendment; a few are doubtful (Argentina, Brazil and perhaps Colombia, Cuba, Bolivia).

6. On balance we would think it unnecessary to make representations among the doubtful countries, having regard to the fact that the USA and UK have already made representations and that there would be little advantage in associating ourselves at this stage with those representations. Furthermore, it appears that in many cases the delegations here have a good deal of discretion and we are therefore actively attempting to encourage as many states as possible to support a conference in order to work out a solution satisfactory to coastal states.

7. You will also have noted from our reports that a wide number of delegations have entered into the substance of the questions at issue. In fact, almost all states which have spoken against a July conference have argued for the 3 to 12-mile discretionary rule for the territorial sea and have challenged the co-sponsors of the resolution to state what new elements have arisen which would suggest that a new conference can be successful when the last failed.

8. Our impression is that when we next intervene in the debates to speak against postponing the issue until the 14th Session (Wednesday or Thursday) it might be useful, if, in addition to attempting to expose the entirely negative aspect of the 7-power amendment, we also attempted to give emphasis to the fact that we are confident that the elements of compromise existed at the Geneva Conference and that agreement can be reached within the framework of the concepts proposed at that debate. We could go on to point out that several states have indicated in the debate that there is a good deal of flexibility in their positions and that their statements confirmed that the lessons of Geneva would seem to point in the direction of a greater recognition of the needs of coastal states with regard to the economic resources in their adjacent seas. By emphasizing these points, we might then be able to pick up some of the useful statements which have been made and accordingly to negate the idea that we have to look to some extraneous event before a new conference can be successful. It might well be that another intervention by Canada along these lines might help to give emphasis to the fact that it is a fallacy to expect that a solution can be reached to these problems through any manner other than negotiations and discussions at a conference; furthermore, it may tend to bring home to some states that it is truly in the interest of coastal states to have a conference notwithstanding the fact that it is the maritime powers which have put forward a proposal for another meeting. We will submit to you the text of any statement which we think could usefully be made along these lines.

9. We ought to point out, however, that we are to some extent concerned about the fact that there appears to be a rather widespread lack of feeling for convening a new conference. There seems little question that the USA and UK activities at the Geneva Conference have left the rather unfortunate impression that at a new conference the major maritime states might not repeat not be prepared to make any substantial concessions to coastal states and that in fact at a new conference these countries might again apply pressures in favour of a solution which might not repeat not be satisfactory to the needs of newer states.

To some extent, reference by these states at this debate to the 3-mile rule has, perhaps, tended to confirm this impression that no repeat no substantial concessions may be expected from the maritime powers. It has, of course, not repeat not been difficult for the Soviet Union, and the Mexicans and Indians as well, to exploit this feeling that at a new conference USA pressures might again be brought to bear.

10. In the course of a conversation yesterday between the Canadian adviser on the Sixth Committee and the First Secretary of the Indian Permanent Mission, the Indian representative remarked that India would be willing to support any attempt to convene a special session to deal with the Law of the Sea. It is difficult to know whether this suggestion was at all seriously put forward, particularly having regard to the delaying tactics they have heretofore adopted, and whether it could conceivably become Indian policy in the event that the 7-power amendment of which India is a co-sponsor fails to be adopted in the Sixth Committee. Probably any proposal by India or others for the convening of a special session in 1959 would meet with very strong opposition from the USA, UK and a very wide number of delegations, primarily in view of the fact that, if a special session were convened, the danger would exist that its agenda could be expanded to deal with a number of difficult political issues, such as China, Cyprus, Algiers and others.

11. You will recall that when the question of a special session was raised recently in the Fourth Committee in order to deal with the Cameroons question it was strongly opposed chiefly because of the danger that a special session would devote itself to a wider range of political questions. Consequently, when agreement was reached on a compromise proposal calling for the reconvening of the 13th Session to deal exclusively with the Cameroons question in February of next year, great emphasis was placed by a large number of delegations on the fact that the resumed session should be competent to deal only with the Cameroons problem.

12. By the end of next week, when the vote in the Sixth Committee takes place on the 11-power proposal and 7-power amendment, you will of course be in a better position to know whether the Indian suggestion was at all seriously made. It is of course quite clear that India is not repeat not likely to want to develop this idea unless their present policy calling for postponement until the 14th Session meets with failure in the Sixth Committee.

85.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2084

New York, December 4, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London, NATO Paris, Geneva (OpImmediate) (Information)
By bag Oslo from London.

QUESTION OF CONVENING A NEW CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

Following are the results of the voting in the Sixth Committee on the Eleven-Power resolution (A/C.6/L.435) calling for a new conference in July and the Seven-Power amendment (A/C.6/L.40) postponing the question until the 14th Session of the General Assembly;

(a) Vote on paragraph 1 of the Seven-Power amendment (specifying that considerable preparatory work was necessary to ensure the success of the conference); 37 votes in favour of the amendment, 35 against, with 9 abstentions. Paragraph 1 of the amendment was thus adopted.

(b) Vote on the first operative paragraph of paragraph 2 of the Seven-Power amendment (placing the question of a new conference on the agenda of the 14th Session); 37 votes in favour, 38 against, with 6 abstentions. The operative part of the amendment was thus rejected. The difference in the results in the voting on these two paragraphs arose from the fact that Bolivia, the Philippines and Jordan changed their votes from an abstention on the first vote to a negative vote on the operative part of the amendment.

(c) The vote on the joint Eleven-Power resolution (as amended so as to include the preambular paragraph regarding the necessity for considerable preparatory work) was then adopted by 42 votes in favour, 28 against, with 10 abstentions. Afghanistan and Nepal voted in favour of the amendment but also in favour of the joint Eleven-Power resolution. Burma, Cambodia and Greece abstained on the amendment but voted in favour of the resolution. Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ghana, Brazil, Saudi Arabia and Yugoslavia voted in favour of the amendment but abstained on the resolution.

2. There were several votes which were a source of surprise. It appears that a considerable amount of pressure was being applied on certain African, Asian and Latin American states, both by the USA as well as by India and others. In the course of the past two days the opposition to the convening of a new conference to some extent hardened further, and, as of this morning, the outcome of the debate was completely in doubt. Thus, to give one example, notwithstanding the firm position which Ghana took earlier in the debate in favour of a conference in the spring of 1959, the Ghanese Delegation voted in favour of the Seven-Power amendment (apparently pursuant to last minute instructions received from Accra).

3. The Sixth Committee then decided by a show of hands that the conference should be convened in Geneva rather than in New York (47 in favour of Geneva and 20 in favour of New York). The exact date of the conference will be set by the Secretary General.

4. In a telegram tomorrow we will give you a further analysis of the voting and an assessment as to possible developments in plenary session. At the present time it would seem likely that the resolution calling for a July conference will pick up more votes in plenary session, although it is also likely that the joint Seven-Power amendment will again be introduced.

86.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2150

New York, December 10, 1958

OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate) (Information).

Repeat London (OpImmediate) from Ottawa; NATO Paris, Geneva from London.

Airmail Oslo from New York.

SECOND CONFERENCE ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

This morning the seven co-sponsors of the committee amendment put in a new amendment deleting the July-August 1959 date for the convening of the second conference, and substituting a March-April 1960 date in the Sixth Committee's resolution.⁴⁹

2. The USA and UK, which were apparently of the view that this amendment would succeed in plenary session, agreed to support it, and as a result it was adopted by a large majority in plenary session. The voting on the 7-power amendment calling for the deletion of the July-August 1959 date and substituting the convening of the conference "at the earliest convenient date in March or April 1960" was adopted in plenary session by a vote of 68 in favour, 6 against (Canada, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Ireland and Sweden) with 3 abstentions (Iceland, NZ and Cambodia). The amended resolution was then adopted by a vote of 72 in favour, including Canada and Ireland, none against, with 6 abstentions (Cambodia, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden).

3. A full analysis and assessment of the voting as well as the implications arising from some of the statements made today in plenary session will be sent tomorrow.

4. The Canadian Delegation made a statement in explanation of vote which pointed out that we were voting against the amendment because we have urged throughout that a conference should be called as early as possible (February-March 1959) and that if a rule of law was not repeat not established soon there was a grave possibility that disorder and further confusion may result which could only be injurious to the international community of nations. We also explained that we were however voting in favour of the amended resolution because we keenly desired a conference, and because the March-April 1960 date appeared to be the earliest one acceptable to the members of the UN as a whole.

5. The Norwegian representative in plenary session stated that the situation off Norway's coast was very grave and that Norway could not repeat not commit itself to abstain beyond 1959 from taking remedial action.

87.

DEA/9456-RW-3-40

*Note de la Direction juridique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures*⁵⁰

*Memorandum from Legal Division to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*⁵⁰

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa], December 18, 1958

LAW OF THE SEA

I thought you might be interested in receiving a personal report on some impressions of the recent debate in the United Nations General Assembly on the convening of a new ⁴⁹ Pour le texte final de cette résolution (1307(XIII)), voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, treizième session, Supplément N° 18 (A/4090), pp. 56 à 57.

For the final text of this resolution (1307(XIII)), see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Thirteenth Session, Supplement No. 18 (A/4090), pp. 54-55.

⁵⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Many thanks. Copy referred to R.G. R[obertson] with suggestion that we might discuss soon at official level. M. C[adioux]

Conference on the Law of the Sea and some of the conclusions that might possibly be drawn.⁵¹

2. The profound degree of opposition which developed at the debates to the convening of a new conference cannot adequately be explained on the grounds of indifference on the part of some countries or mere uncertainty about the likelihood of such conference being a success. It was only with the greatest difficulty and effort, and after having made representations on a world-wide basis on perhaps several occasions, that the United States and United Kingdom were able to defeat the seven power Latin-American African-Asian amendment putting off consideration of convening a new conference until the fourteenth session of the General Assembly. You will recall that the amendment was rejected by a majority of one vote only. In fact, an hour or so before the voting in the Committee, the United States authorities were prepared to accept the fact that the amendment was likely to carry. The outcome of the debate actually depended on last minute instructions being received from two or three Latin-American countries whose governments directed the delegations concerned to vote against the amendment — presumably as a result of United States representation.

3. The nature of the debate was, I think, an accurate reflection of the fact that the situation with regard to coastal jurisdictions has not been a static one since the Geneva Conference. The debates indicated that a significant change seems to have taken place in the general attitude of many states since the Geneva Conference. This change, I should describe, as essentially a belief on the part of many African, Asian and Latin-American states that it is to their interest to achieve a twelve-mile territorial sea and that time is very much on the side of states favouring extensions of the territorial sea to such a limit. Accordingly, the belief seems to be growing that any attempt to limit the territorial sea to six miles — with or without a further jurisdiction for fishing and whether or not such jurisdiction is exclusive — is contrary to the trend of history, to the interests of smaller states and to the ultimate development of international law. It also follows, of course, from this line of reasoning, that as a conference would, from a western view-point, be essentially designed to reach agreement on a territorial limit of less than twelve miles, it would not be in the interest of the states claiming a twelve-mile territorial sea to have such a conference — at least until the twelve-mile limit achieves greater potential support.

4. There are, it would seem, several reasons which lead up to the development described in the foregoing paragraph.

(a) While the three-mile limit lost enormous ground at the Geneva Conference, I doubt whether many governments fully realized until some time later that there exists what amounts to a legal vacuum in this area of international law, and that, accordingly, it cannot be categorically stated that extensions of the territorial sea to greater limits than three miles are contrary to positive international law.

(b) United Kingdom protective action off Iceland created, it would seem, a more profound impression on many states than at first appeared. Having regard to the fact that a great number of states believe that there exists a legal vacuum with regard to the territorial sea, the decision to resort to force by a great maritime power — and one traditionally associated with the three-mile limit as well as the United States proposal at Geneva — has created a seemingly wide impression that the three-mile limit and, by association, the six-mile limit and the United States proposal itself, is an aspect of Western economic imperialism, advanced without even the existence of a sure footing in international law.

⁵¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Seen [R.G.] R[obertson] 1.1.59

(c) The decision of Communist China to establish a twelve-mile territorial sea has made it obvious that the governments of the people of over half the world claim the twelve-mile territorial limit. The decision of mainland China so to extend its territorial limits possesses potential ramifications in the entire area of South East Asia.

(d) In addition, Iceland, Communist China, Iraq, Libya and most recently Panama (and Iran has now a bill before its legislature calling for a 12-mile territorial sea), have taken unilateral action since the Geneva Conference. The implications are of course self-evident for the smaller states; the longer a new conference could be postponed the more likely it would be that a twelve-mile limit would prove to be the rule of law; conversely, the demand of the Western Powers for a new conference is essentially to prevent the universal adoption of the twelve-mile limit.

5. It is of course not possible to be dogmatic as to what national interests the African and Asian countries believe the twelve-mile territorial limit will serve. In New York there was a considerable amount of talk about the "security interests" of coastal states which was often difficult to reduce to precise terms. The Cambodian representative emphasized, in a private conversation, that the twelve-mile limit was no longer a matter of logic or self-interest, if it ever was that. Indeed, the Canadian proposal would suit most smaller countries equally well from the economic point of view. The question was rather a political one, and a highly emotional one, having roots in the cold war and in the question of East-West alignments. Thus, even relatively independent African-Asian states — for example, Tunisia and Iran both spoke very strongly in the debates in favour of the discretionary three-to-twelve-mile limit. Their statements came well before the extraordinary activity of India and Mexico to achieve solidarity among the African, Asian and Latin-American countries in favour of postponing the issue. You will recall these activities had notable effects, even with regard to Ghana, which stated in the Committee debates that they were in favour of convening a new conference in March-April 1959, but nevertheless then proceeded to vote in favour of the seven-power amendment. The fact that virtually half of the United Nations could vote in favour of what was chiefly a negative approach to the questions of the territorial sea and fishing zones is, I think, an accurate reflection of the fact that the vote on these questions would not now follow the patterns of the Geneva Conference, where states were more able to vote according to their own national self-interest rather than being carried along by bloc pressures and cold war political considerations.

6. The records of the last Conference would appear to demonstrate clearly that the threat of the proposal for a discretionary three-to-twelve-mile limit is an exceedingly grave one. There has, perhaps, been something of a tendency on our part to look upon the Geneva Conference as a dramatic opposition of the positions of the United States of America and Canada. But the joint proposal at Geneva of Burma, Colombia, Indonesia, Mexico, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Republic and Venezuela received in plenary session 39 affirmative votes — six less than the number cast in favour of the United States of America proposal and four more than the Canadian proposal received. Thus Mexico and India, at the last session of the General Assembly, strongly endeavoured to seek a forum for new discussions where several non-members of the United Nations, which voted against the three-to-twelve-mile discretionary rule could be eliminated. If San Marino, Monaco, the Vatican, Switzerland, West Germany, Vietnam and Korea — all non-members of the United Nations — would not have participated at Geneva, the three-to-twelve-mile discretionary rule would have received exactly the same amount of affirmative votes as the United States proposal.

7. Furthermore, by 1960, there may be several new African members of the United Nations which did not participate at the Geneva Conference. Guinea was, of course, admitted at the last session; these are all potential votes for the three-to-twelve-mile territorial limit. Another factor which might further strengthen the position of this proposal is the possibility of unilateral action by Norway. If a new dispute occurs between, for example, the United Kingdom and Norway, and if the United Kingdom should again take "protective" action, such a development could only serve to increase the antipathy to the position of the Western maritime powers, and accordingly, to bolster the position of the extremists. We have already seen at New York that Iceland lent its full and unqualified support to India and Mexico and the extent to which the Icelandic situation was exploited by them and by the Soviet Union.

8. The debates in the Sixth Committee also confirmed what our own survey carried out last summer seemed to indicate — that the United States proposal reached its high-point at Geneva and was now very much on the wane. I do not think this is wishful-thinking, but an accurate assessment, shared by many Delegations in New York of the changing world temperament with regard to these problems. Thus, during the United Nations debates, several states which supported the United States amendment at Geneva, and which also voted in favour of or abstained on the Canadian proposal, indicated a changing attitude towards the United States proposal. Norway clearly stated in the debates that it considered the Canadian proposal and not the United States proposal as the best compromise formula for reaching agreement; Ghana stated that its attendance at a future Conference would be on the assumption that the notion of traditional fishing rights would be repudiated; Turkey indicated clearly that it was the Canadian proposal which stood the best chance of proving the successful formula at a new Conference; the Indian representative volunteered to us that India would never again vote in favour of the United States proposal and that its support for the United States position at that time was a mistake (a reflection, perhaps, of the personal influence of Krishna Menon); the Pakistani and Irish representatives also indicated preferences for the Canadian proposal and optimism about its future. This was also true of the representatives of Ceylon and Afghanistan, particularly the latter, who seemed to regard the Canadian proposal as the hope for the future Conference. Our assessment last summer indicated that Brazil's position might also be more flexible vis-à-vis the Canadian proposal.

9. The conclusions which I think might be drawn from the foregoing analysis are as follows:

(a) That the twelve-mile territorial limit appears to be growing in potential support and that, as such a limit affects the strategic policy of the United States — in particular with regard to Communist China's claims to the offshore islands of Quemoy and Matsu, it constitutes a growing threat to Western defence policy.

(b) that time is clearly in favour of extreme provisions and, accordingly, by April 1960, several more states might be likely to adopt unilaterally a twelve-mile territorial sea.

(c) that the United States proposal recognizing "traditional" fishing rights is losing strength and cannot be considered sufficiently strong enough successfully to counter the growing support in favour of the twelve-mile territorial limit.

(d) that any changes in the United States proposal which are variations on its major theme — that of recognition of fishing rights — will not be likely to improve the appeal of this proposal. The basic defect in any proposal designed to protect traditional fishing rights — that it is discriminatory as against newer states which have not had in the past the wherewithal to finance distant water fishing fleets — is likely to bring about equally strong opposition from Africa, Asia and Latin-American states.

(e) that the position of the Canadian proposal has been steadily strengthening since the Geneva Conference.

(f) that it is doubtful whether the Canadian proposal, notwithstanding its improved position, is “extreme” enough to obtain two-thirds majority support even with the backing, at a future conference, of the major western maritime powers.

10. The chief question which accordingly seems to arise is whether, if the United States is willing to give its full and unqualified support to the Canadian proposal at the next conference, will it be able to obtain the necessary two-thirds majority support. The hardcore of opposition to any proposal other than one recognizing the twelve-mile limit is bound to be very strong, having regard to the increasingly intense political atmosphere which surrounds the problem of the territorial sea. Thus, if the votes of the Soviet bloc (which seemed, at New York, to be showing some signs of apprehension regarding the possibilities of success for the Canadian proposal) most of the Arab states and several extreme Latin-American states (such as Ecuador, Chile, Peru and Venezuela) and Asian states (such as Indonesia and Philippines) are added up, not many more additional votes may be needed to prevent any agreement whatever being reached at the next conference.

11. The essential fact is, I believe, that the potential weakness of the Canadian proposal, if it has one, is that it might not prove “extreme” enough to attract two-thirds of the members of the international community. A position somewhere in between the United States and the Canadian proposals would, I think, have virtually no chance for success at a future conference. It follows that perhaps the only hope for a satisfactory solution at the next conference is to persuade the United States and ultimately, the United Kingdom and Western European powers to give their full and unqualified support to the Canadian proposal; nothing less would be likely to have a chance to stop the tide in favour of the twelve-mile limit. It seems that in the past United States and United Kingdom policy regarding this question has unfortunately been somewhat behind events; to think now in terms of a halfway house between the United States and Canadian positions is essentially anachronistic and is not likely to prove productive, even in the short run.

12. This is, of course, not to say that we ought not to approach the United States authorities and begin discussions with them at the earliest possible date regarding the law of the sea. I think it must be undisputable that such discussions are a sine qua non for the success of a future conference; such discussions could have two functions:

(a) they could serve an educative purpose; the United States must be brought around to a full appreciation of the fact that (1) the Canadian proposal seems to be the only possible counter to the twelve-mile territorial sea, which might prove capable of preserving the Western strategic position, and (2) that even if the United States gives its full support to our position its success cannot be regarded as assured. It would, therefore, seem necessary for them as well as for us to undertake world-wide discussions in an attempt to achieve support for the Canadian proposal.

(b) In order to achieve United States and United Kingdom support for our proposal, it would seem desirable for us to be able to adopt a conciliatory and flexible attitude to the question of United States as well as United Kingdom, French and Portuguese fishing practices off our shores. These, however, should be viewed as essentially bilateral questions which operate outside of and quite independently of the rule of the law itself. The essential area of compromise between the Canadian and United States positions, which it might be both necessary and desirable to explore, should be able to be worked out without affecting the Canadian proposal as such. If the Canadian proposal's appeal lies in the fact that it unconditionally gives to states all the economic value which they would achieve under the twelve-mile territorial rule, it should in no way be watered down.

13. In any case one of the chief difficulties in the United States proposal seems to have been that it attempted to treat as a matter of law what were really questions of fact. The situation with regard to fishing rights undoubtedly differs enormously from country to country; these problems can appropriately be dealt with individually among the countries concerned, without affecting the rule of law as such. There is undoubtedly bound to be hardships arising from the bringing into operation of a new rule of law, but these are not appropriately dealt with within the terms of the rule of law itself. The rule of law and question of procedures for bringing about adjustments of situations arising from its application should, it would seem, at all times be regarded as distinct matters which operate on different planes. Thus the United States and Canada could appropriately approach their mutual problems bilaterally, and in the framework of the many other outstanding territorial waters' problems which exist between the two countries — Hecate Strait, Dixon entrance, Gulf of St. Lawrence, Hudson Strait and perhaps the Arctic Archipelago. United States support for the Canadian proposal could probably be facilitated through an understanding that, if it becomes adopted at a new conference, fair and appropriate arrangements will be made on a bilateral basis.

14. The impression was gained in New York that many states have come to rely upon the Canadian proposal and to look upon it as a firm proposition; it has really become a concept in its own right and is looked upon as one of the main possible lines of solution to the problems of the territorial sea and fishing zones. To attempt to deal, within the framework of the rule of law itself, with varying questions of fact which, by their very nature, cannot be appropriately cast in terms of the generalities ordinarily found within the scope of legal rules, would, I think, largely defeat the appeal of the Canadian proposal based, as it is, on the fact that it is an easily-applied universal formula.

15. I can, therefore, see no persuasive reason why we should approach the problem of making necessary adjustments for local fishing practices in certain specific areas through amending the Canadian proposal; i.e. through attempting to mould the Canadian proposal into a formula which could cover particular problems in particular areas. These problems belong to the spheres of bilateral discussions and if they are approached in this manner we might possibly stand a better chance of both coming to terms with the United States and United Kingdom and at the same time bringing about the success of the Canadian proposal.

16. One illustration of the value of our entering into discussions with the United States and United Kingdom may be found in connection with the recent debate in the General Assembly concerning the convening of a new conference. Earlier discussions with the United States and United Kingdom would perhaps have enabled us to map out together with them a suitable strategy for dealing with that item. We might have been able to bring home to them the danger involved in their pressing for a date late in 1959, as well as in the great maritime powers co-sponsoring a resolution for the conference. Had we been able to bring home these matters to United Kingdom and United States while their policy was still in a formative stage, I think the United Nations might well have established a 1959 date for the convening of a conference.

17. There is one other aspect of this problem I should also like to mention, which, when the question of Canadian policy is being examined, it might be desirable to bear in mind. I think that, from a Canadian point of view, the problem of the breadth of a territorial sea and fishing zones has, in the course of the past few weeks, taken on a rather different complication from that which it possessed earlier. The effects of displacement of the Western European fishing fleets from Icelandic shores has only just begun to be felt. The situation off Norway's coast has become very grave, foreign fishing having trebled there within the past few months. If Norway takes unilateral action, as seems likely, the situation in the North Atlantic is likely to deteriorate further, bringing in its train political difficulties perhaps exceeding in seriousness those arising from the Icelandic-United Kingdom dispute.

18. In the event that Norway does take unilateral action, the problem may arise whether Canada will continue to oppose discussions of the North Atlantic fishing problem on a regional basis. While the problem is a hypothetical one at the present time, it might, of course, become concrete in the near future. In that event it might not be easy for us to take an entirely negative view towards regional discussions (even though they might be considered dangerous from a Canadian standpoint), in view of the fact that a solution on a worldwide basis cannot possibly be reached until the late spring of 1960.

19. We may, however, be affected not only indirectly by Norwegian remedial action; the displacement of the Western European fishing fleets might conceivably lead to considerably increased fishing in the Grand Banks and off our coasts generally. This of course is a development which has in a sense been anticipated since the last war, but which nonetheless may cause serious problems with regard to conservation of fishing stock in the Grand Banks and to domestic political pressures within Canada for a unilateral extension of our coastal fishery jurisdiction.

A.E. GOTLIEB

SECTION E

FONDS SPÉCIAL
SPECIAL FUND

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

DOUZIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE TWELFTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

88.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 302-57

[Ottawa], November 19, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

ECONOMIC AID TO UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES
THROUGH THE UNITED NATIONS

The question of making more aid available through the UN to under-developed countries, which has been under discussion in UN forums for at least eight years, will very soon reach a decisive stage at the current meeting of the General Assembly. The question has come to an issue in the form of two competing resolutions: one calls for the establishment of a special UN fund for economic development (SUNFED); the other, put forward by the United States, calls for the expansion of existing UN Technical Assistance Programme and the setting-up of a special project fund.

2. For eight years a diminishing group of countries, including Canada, the US and the UK, have been able to prevent the issue being joined by temporizing, delaying, and diverting the pressure by procedural devices. This is no longer possible. Almost all of the UN membership, including the US, now favour the establishment of some [type] of UN fund.

3. The nature of the resolutions now before the Assembly — and their backing — means that if they both go forward independently, they could both secure broad support in the General Assembly. This would not be in the interest of the United Nations, which now requires that it be given a positive and clear cut role in assistance to economic development. Nor would this be in Canada's interest. Canada would inevitably be pressed to support one or other or both of two UN programmes; neither would be entirely to our liking and yet neither could be ignored. Both these proposals cannot be voted down — one at least will go forward. The developments in the last session of ECOSOC, which completely isolated Canada, the UK and the US on the SUNFED issue, make it clear that we cannot expect to defeat the SUNFED resolution by simply making a head-on attack.

3. However, the US proposal offers some possibility of manoeuvre. It has some attractions for the under-developed countries. Although it is not entirely to our liking, it might be modified in such a way that it could be used to contain the pressure for SUNFED. At the same time it could be made more acceptable to us. This Memorandum, after briefly reviewing the nature and history of the two proposals, goes on to recommend a course of action based on the assumption that Canada's interest requires that our Delegation intervene in the current debate.

SUNFED

4. The under-developed countries, with some support from the U.S.S.R., have been pressing for the establishment of a SUNFED since 1948. It is generally recognized that such a Fund, to be effective, would have to be of the order of $250 million. This would be made up of voluntary contributions by member governments; it would be used to assist underdeveloped countries by grants or low-interest loans for development projects which might not otherwise be financed. In 1953 the UN adopted a declaration put forward by the US that when there is a measure of internationally-supervised disarmament, a portion of the money thus saved should be used to establish such a UN fund.

5. Canada accepted this SUNFED idea in principle and voted for the 1953 resolution. However, more recently it has taken the position in the General Assembly that a decision to establish such a Fund should depend on two conditions being met: one, that there be suitable administrative arrangements; and two, that there be sufficient financial support to make the fund practicable, i.e., that there will be financial support from the US and the UK.

6. Neither of these conditions have been met. The current SUNFED proposal involves unfortunate administrative features, although the SUNFED countries have modified their views over the years in an attempt to meet our objections. Further, the US and UK continue to oppose SUNFED on the ground that it must await a measure of world-wide internationally supervised disarmament. In NATO the US has recently argued that the current SUNFED proposals conflict with western objectives in the under-developed countries, particularly in the Middle East, because they would create new opportunities for Soviet economic penetration.

7. The position of the USSR has been equivocal; it has supported the establishment of SUNFED without, at least until recently, offering a large and useable contribution. A Soviet contribution in the form of industrial goods and machinery has been mentioned. However, it has been reported that the USSR may announce a contribution of one million roubles ($25 million at the formal rate of exchange but much less in real terms) when the SUNFED resolution is debated in the Second Committee.

8. In view of US and UK opposition and the reluctance of any other countries to offer substantial contributions, the underdeveloped countries had been willing until last summer's Session of ECOSOC to accept procedural resolutions for further study of this question which were designed to prevent any decision being reached. In July of this year, however, the under-developed countries in ECOSOC, supported and led by the Netherlands and France, decided to force the issue to a decision. A resolution was passed by ECOSOC calling for the early establishment of SUNFED. Only Canada, the US and the UK voted against this resolution.

9. The SUNFED proposal is now embodied in a draft resolution, which will come up shortly in the Second Committee. It is sponsored by the Netherlands, India, and Mexico; they can count on the support of a large number of other countries from Western Europe, Asia and Latin America. The resolution calls for the establishment of a United Nations Economic Development Fund to begin operations by January 1, 1960.

The U.S. Proposal

10. The United States Administration has now come to consider that some expansion of economic assistance through the UN is necessary if the pressure for SUNFED is to be contained. Congressional leaders now accept this view. As put forward by the US Delegations to the UN and to NATO, as announced in Washington, and as contained in an aide-mémoire given to officials by the United States Embassy last Friday, the US proposes that, beginning in 1959 (a) the existing United Nations Technical Assistance programme should be expanded to $50 million from $31 million, and that (b) the scope of this programme should be broadened through the creation of a $50 million special project fund to finance resources surveys, training centres, industrial pilot projects and research projects. The operation of this fund would be fitted into the existing machinery for administering the technical assistance programme; a preparatory commission would be appointed to define, among other things, the changes which it would be necessary to make in this machinery to ensure the effective use of the fund. The total effect of the US proposal would ultimately involve an increase in UN technical assistance expenditures of $69 million. The US is willing to provide $15 million of this increase, and possibly somewhat more in the initial year (1959).

11. American officials principally concerned with formulating the US counter proposal have emphasized to Mr. Dulles that they do not regard it as a permanent substitute for a SUNFED. But they do believe that if their proposal receives significant support from countries such as Canada and the countries of Western Europe, the pressure for the immediate creation of some sort of SUNFED might be deferred for several years. Further, they believe that an expansion and broadening of the UN programme would in itself be a useful and constructive move.

Evaluation of US Proposal

12. In its present form the US proposal has two weaknesses. In the first place, it is questionable whether the existing machinery for administering the technical assistance programme could be satisfactorily modified to ensure effective use of the special project fund. Eight international organizations participate in the programme; the co-ordination of their activities through the Technical Assistance Board poses some very difficult problems. In the second place, the US proposal is not now formulated in terms which would be likely to induce under-developed countries to forego the benefits they hope to receive by pressing at this session for immediate establishment of SUNFED. At the same time it should be recognized that the US proposal represents a very significant step forward: for the first time the US is offering to finance capital projects through the UN. The Administration has persuaded Congressional leaders that to do any less would involve significant damage to US interests. The US will, however, continue to oppose SUNFED.

13. The US proposal does contain three features which make it attractive to the under-developed countries. It contains elements of the SUNFED proposal insofar as it involves the financing of some types of capital projects as distinct from the established technical assistance (training) programmes. Second, it involves United States participation in the financing on a grant basis of certain types of capital projects in under-developed countries through the United Nations. This is an objective which these countries have been striving to reach for some years; many of them are beginning to realize that they are unlikely to reach this objective if they continue to press for "SUNFED now". Third, it calls for a sizeable expansion in the Technical Assistance Programme, and gives to this programme, which the under-developed countries strongly support, a fresh impetus.

The Canadian Interest

14. It is possible that the US proposal could be presented to the under-developed countries in a fashion that might enable them to eventually abandon the SUNFED proposal permanently. Tactically, what is required is to present the US proposal in a way that would enable pro-SUNFED countries to proceed without loss of face in the UN. This would involve pointing out to them what will become obvious fairly soon in any event — that the need for capital aid is being recognized by the establishment of a special project fund, and that the experience gained from the operation of this fund will be invaluable in deciding the future of capital aid in the UN. The Canadian Delegation could, by pointing out the implications of the US proposal, do much to divert pressure away from SUNFED. If the Canadian Government were willing to authorize the Delegation to take initiatives in this direction, it should be recognized that these initiatives would involve on our part a moral commitment to give financial support to any sound and realistic plan, which might result if our initiatives are acceptable.

15. As mentioned above, it is doubtful that the existing technical assistance machinery can be effectively adapted to administer a special project fund. However, the World Bank has demonstrated that, of all multilateral agencies, it can administer economic aid most vigorously and effectively. Its management has the confidence of the US and its machinery could, if necessary, be expanded to administer capital aid programmes financed by the UN. From informal conversations it is believed that the Bank would be willing to consider proposals to manage a project fund; senior Bank officials support the view that more aid channelled through the UN and on a grant basis is needed. Further, if the USSR wished to participate in a fund managed by the Bank, it would have to do so on terms and conditions which we accept and which would limit the possibility of Soviet penetration. While the Delegation should refer to management by the Bank as one possibility, it would not be desirable to give too much prominence to the case for management by the Bank. A definitive proposal in the General Assembly at this stage would merely encourage Soviet and satellite opposition and also the opposition of some under-developed countries which have criticized the Bank for its rigorous lending policies. Our main objective would be reached if the terms of reference of the preparatory commission which would be set up by the Assembly were wide enough to allow it to examine various alternative methods of administering the project fund. However, the Delegation would seek informal agreement from a broadly representative group of delegations (including the US and other potential contributors) that they will, in the Preparatory Commission, support a recommendation (to ECOSOC and the Thirteenth General Assembly) to establish a special project fund managed by the Bank.

16. It should be noted that the US propose that it would double its present contribution to the technical assistance programme, thus raising the US contribution to $31 million, if the total sum which all countries would make available could be raised from the present $31 million to about $100 million. The Canadian contribution to the existing Technical Assistance Programme now runs at $2 million a year. Because the response of other countries to the US proposal is still not clear, it is difficult to envisage what an appropriate Canadian contribution might be. If the US contribution is to be doubled and the programme expanded from $31 million to $100 million, (as now proposed) all other contributors, taken as a group, would have to raise their contribution in 1959-1960 from $15 1/2 million to $62 million and to $69 million in 1960-1961.

17. The Delegation has suggested that there might be some advantages in having a Canadian contribution in part tied to the purchase of Canadian capital goods, engineering services, etc. even though past experience shows that inconvertible contributions reduce the effectiveness of multilateral aid programmes and cause administrative difficulties. However, this question should not be decided now; it should be considered later in the light of the detailed proposals to be worked out by the preparatory commission. To make any decision now would unnecessarily restrict the freedom of manoeuvre of the Delegation.

18. If the Delegation is not authorized to take an initiative along the lines indicated above, a possible alternative is to continue either opposing or abstaining on SUNFED and to abstain on the US resolution. This would mean that perforce Canada would be silent in a debate of major importance. There will be inevitable pressures which will call for a decision as to whether or not Canada will play a part in a new UN operation. This decision would have to be taken only after the current proposals had been considerably advanced, when it might be impossible to have Canadian views on organizational and financial arrangements taken into account. In addition to these reasons there are even more substantial political reasons for not postponing a decision on this matter.

19. The demand for the establishment of a UN Fund has now secured the support of virtually all UN countries except the English-speaking members of the Commonwealth and the US. The proposal to establish a SUNFED has brought together into one camp our friends in Asia, our friends in Europe, and the Soviet countries. They have formed a working alliance to fight through an issue in which many feel a deep sense of conviction. Of course there are among the SUNFED group some delegations (e.g. Pakistan) who are not perhaps as thoroughly convinced of the merits of their case as others, but if the issue comes to a vote, the resolution will undoubtedly be accepted by an overwhelming majority. Canada will then be faced with the establishment in the near future of a new UN agency which neither we nor our closest friends support and in which neither we nor our friends will have a voice. New opportunities for Soviet mischief-making would be created. Thus we would soon find ourselves faced with having to consider whether or not we should make a financial contribution to this new agency in order to have some share in making its decisions.

20. It is therefore desirable to present and seek support for a more acceptable proposal. The chances of success for a compromise proposal are not clear. They turn on the willingness of the SUNFED countries and of the US to have their resolutions referred to the same preparatory commission. It is clear that proposals must be put forward which some of the SUNFED countries, such as the Netherlands, France, and possibly Pakistan, are prepared to support and for which they are prepared to use their influence with other pro-SUNFED countries. The Netherlands and France now find themselves in the uncomfortable position of siding with the Soviet on this issue, and may welcome an initiative which would enable them to re-align themselves with their major allies in the West. This sort of consideration may help the US to accept the necessary changes in their proposal.

21. In the light of these considerations I recommend⁵² that the Canadian Delegation to the UN be instructed as follows:

(1) The Delegation should present the Canadian view on the US proposal, as outlined in paragraphs 12 to 17 above, to friendly delegations; the Delegation is to indicate to them that Canada would be prepared to give sympathetic consideration to making an appropriate contribution in 1959-1960 to a multilateral aid programme similar to the one envisaged in the US proposal, provided that two conditions are met:

(a) that the SUNFED resolution is withdrawn, or if it is not withdrawn that it will be referred to the same preparatory commission as will be considering the US proposal, and that it is understood among major friendly contributors that in the commission it will be merged with the US proposal; and

(b) that the terms of such a preparatory commission are broad enough to include examination of the possibility of having the proposed capital aid fund managed by the World Bank.

(2) Subsequently, if in the judgment of the Delegation there is a reasonable measure of agreement that these conditions will be met, then the Delegation may indicate during the course of debate that if a sound and realistic plan emerges which commands broad support in the UN, the Canadian Government will give sympathetic consideration to asking Parliament to make a reasonable financial contribution. In the debate the Delegation should suggest that the preparatory commission to be set up should be authorized to examine the possibility of the proposed capital aid fund being managed by the World Bank and should seek membership for Canada on such a commission.

(3) When and if such a preparatory commission is established, and if Canada is a member, the Canadian Delegation should seek to ensure that the report of the preparatory commission recommends that suitable arrangements be worked out with the World Bank to manage the capital aid programme.

(4) If in the judgment of the Delegation the conditions are not met, then when the SUNFED and US resolutions come to a vote it should seek instructions from Ministers concerned as to how it should cast its vote.

SIDNEY SMITH

⁵² Approuvé par le Cabinet le 29 novembre 1957.
Approved by Cabinet on November 29, 1957.

89.

DEA/11423-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2577

New York, November 22, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

ECONOMIC AID TO THE UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES THROUGH THE UN

We have been most grateful for the opportunity to discuss with Pollock the memorandum to Cabinet dated November 19. Unfortunately, Mr. Black had left New York before Pollock arrived. However, Pollock had conversation with Lopez Herrarte, IBRD representative here, and by phone with Demuth of the IBRD in Washington. Prior to Pollock's arrival we had informal conversation with Stibravy of the USA delegation and several discussions with the Minister, which are reflected in the following comments which Pollock has seen.

2. We were grateful for the interpretation which Pollock was able to give us of paragraph 21 (i)(b) of the memorandum to Cabinet. By "managed by the World Bank" we now understand the memorandum to Cabinet to mean "with an appropriate participation by the IBRD".

3. As our USA and Bank colleagues suggested the Bank would not want to assume responsibility for managing projects which are directly within the competence of other specialized agencies, for example WHO and FAO. In addition, as Demuth suggested, the Bank would have difficulty in managing projects involving the use of USSR and satellite contributions. We gather that the Bank officials themselves are thinking of terms of "informal arrangements" for securing adequate bank participation in the management of proposed UN economic aid programmes rather than "formal institutional relationship".

4. The Bank officials confirmed ideas which are already mentioned in paragraph 15 of the Cabinet memorandum on the need for care during the general debate in the Second Committee to avoid giving too much prominence to the role the Bank might play in relation to the proposed fund. What the Bank officials fear is that a few statements favouring close integration of the new fund's activities with the IBRD might provoke a flood of statements opposing such a suggestion. This might prejudice acceptance of the idea in the preparatory commission. You may be interested to know that USA authorities and officials of the UN Secretariat have already been discussing the possibility of a small, perhaps three man, board including a representative of the IBRD which would be responsible for allocating funds to the projects to be financed by the new fund. So far as the USA authorities tell us there has been no discussion of Bank management of projects excepting those which would naturally fall within the present competence of the Bank. It could be expected that the percentage which projects within the competence of the Bank would bear to the total number of projects undertaken by the new fund would be high since there is no other specialized agency with direct responsibilities in the field of industrialization and in the broad field of the promotion of economic development.

5. The second point which we have discussed separately with the Minister and with Pollock is the detailed nature of some of the tactical instructions contained in the memorandum for Cabinet. Pollock has had informal discussion with the Netherlands, Cuban, Indian, USA and other delegations. It is evident that it would be premature at this stage to seek any firm agreement of the kind suggested in the last sentence of paragraph 15 from "a broadly representative group of delegations" that they will in the preparatory commission support a recommendation that the special project fund be managed by the Bank.

6. The USA delegation pointed out in this connection that their Treasury officials might have some difficulty with this suggestion since it could be considered to represent the first step in the establishment of a UN fund for large scale capital assistance.

7. We have also discussed with Pollock paragraph 21 (i)(a). It is, of course, impossible to predict the outcome of the next two weeks of negotiations with any certainty. We do not think it should be assumed that either or both the SUNFED and the USA resolutions will be voted on in their present form and we intend to do our best to prevent such a situation. We believe that our first objective should be to promote a resolution acceptable to the USA, the less developed countries, the Netherlands and France, and which would also be consistent with achievement of the objectives in the Cabinet memorandum. As a first step the Indian and Yugoslav delegations have agreed to meet with ourselves, the USA and other delegations early next week to discuss the drafting of a text. After this meeting we should have a clearer idea regarding the possibility of a compromise.

8. Pollock will report personally on these and other discussions in which he will participate prior to his return to Ottawa over the weekend.

9. The Minister asked to receive a copy of this message but it was not available before his departure. Would you please provide him with one.

[R.A.] MACKAY

90.

DEA/11423-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Permanent Representative to United Nations

TELEGRAM E-1845

Ottawa, November 29, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 2577 Nov 22.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information)

ECONOMIC AID TO UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES THROUGH THE UN

Cabinet has approved the memorandum to Cabinet dated November 19. It is a matter for your judgment as to what delegations and in what detail you discuss Canadian views on this subject. However, you should bear in mind that we will need to know some time in advance when you plan to make a public statement in the Second Committee in which you indicate Canadian willingness to giving sympathetic consideration to making a contribution in 1958-1959. There have been some questions asked in the House⁵³ about this matter and it may be that the Minister will wish to make a statement in the House at the same time as is done in New York.

2. The representatives of the UK, Australia and New Zealand here have indicated considerable interest in knowing what the Canadian line would be and we propose to inform them generally of the approach authorized by Cabinet. The US Embassy also has requested (in an aide mémoire) some indication of our views on the US proposal. We will be speaking to them in the near future.

3. When Mr. Pollock returned from New York he reported to a meeting of senior officials here. He amplified the comments set out in your telegram under reference. At the meeting it was decided that it would be useful to have further information from senior officials of the World Bank as to the attitudes of the Bank on this subject. As a result, Mr. Hockin reported from Washington in telegram 2521 of November 27,† a copy of which was referred for information to Permis New York. In the course of the meeting officials reviewed the ideas which were set out in the memorandum to Cabinet in the light of your comments and Pollock's report. As we are sure you will realize after your discussions with Pollock, it was not our intention to discourage you from participating in any moves in New York to find a compromise based on the US proposal, provided that such a compromise was acceptable to the Netherlands, France, and the under-developed countries, as an alternative to SUNFED at this session. What seemed equally important to us was that such a compromise should be designed to contain the pressure for a UN capital aid programme until such time as the conditions set out in our reply to the SUNFED questionnaire are met. In this connection it seems very important to us that the US has indicated that it will not be willing to contribute to a capital aid programme until "sufficient progress has been made to internationally-supervised disarmament".

4. We doubted that the US proposal, in its present form, was completely satisfactory or that it would serve to contain the pressure for immediate or early action on SUNFED. Officials were not willing to recommend to ministers that Canada take an initiative which would commit US to an increase in the Canadian contribution to a larger technical assistance programme which might not be completely effective, while at the same time we continued to be exposed to sharp criticisms for our failure to support the SUNFED issue. The recommendations accepted by Cabinet were designed to authorize you to advance proposals which might facilitate agreement at this session and to offer an advantageous basis for any further action that might be necessary to meet continuing pressures for capital aid. In this connection we thought it important to secure a major role for the World Bank in the management of such increased resources as member states might contribute for economic development. It was our view that the maximum participation possible of the Bank might minimize, if not entirely eliminate, the centrifugal conflicts among the agencies. It would also provide an instrument which would be capable of managing major projects which might result from any future increase in capital aid funds. Since the Bank has the confidence of the US, participation by the Bank in the management of the Fund might even encourage the US to provide more funds.

5. To reach these objectives it seemed desirable that you should mention the World Bank during the course of the general debate. Such a reference would be in general terms but would give an indication of the direction of our thinking. At the same time we thought that the delegation could effectively put forward our ideas informally and confidentially to some of the major potential contributors to the Fund and to some of the key recipient countries to attempt to ensure that in any preparatory commission they might endorse such an approach. The minimum that seems desirable from a Canadian point of view was to ensure that any preparatory commission established to examine the US proposal is given authority to consider the role we propose for the Bank. Detailed proposals for participation of the Bank would, of course, not be advanced until the preparatory commission begins its work.

⁵³ Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1957-58, volume II, p. 1595.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1957-58, Volume II, p. 1516.

6. There seemed to us to be many ways in which the Bank might participate effectively; these would have to be worked out in detail in consultation with the Bank, prior to the inauguration of any formal discussion in the preparatory committee. The fact that different officers of the Bank have somewhat different views in these matters and that in the event the thinking of the Bank has not gone very far, will be evident to you from Washington's telegram 2521. In the preparatory commission we would be seeking maximum participation, limited only by the views of the Bank itself, on what it considers desirable and practical, and, of course, by the willingness of the members of the preparatory commission to agree to a practical programme acceptable to the Assembly.

7. We recognize and share your concern about the difficulties involved in working out such an arrangement but they seem to us to be no more difficult, and perhaps more fruitful, than the current attempts in the Second Committee to devise a formula to embrace what have been hitherto the irreconcilable desires of the under-developed countries for capital aid and the expressed view of the US that it will not provide capital aid at present.

8. If all these efforts do not produce a clear and more nearly final solution to the problem at this assembly, at least the Canadian Delegation will be in the position of defending constructive proposals rather than in the more dubious position it has found itself in the past of merely opposing proposals advanced by the Netherlands, France, and our friends amongst the under-developed countries. Members of the delegation will recall that after the last ECOSOC meeting the Canadian Delegation was of the view that because of the lack of initiative, Canada was constantly being placed in the invidious role of permanent opposition to aid proposals though we were one of the main contributors to economic aid and could reasonably expect to receive credit for playing a constructive role.

9. As a next step, and before the time arrives when you make a public statement of our attitude, it might be useful if the Delegation were to draft a resolution embodying our views and designed to secure broad support in the Second Committee. We would be grateful to have an opportunity to examine such a draft resolution before you show it to other delegations.

91.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2627

New York, November 29, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE THROUGH THE UN

Our telegram 2628† contains the text of a draft resolution presented to the USA, UK, French and Canadian Delegations by the Delegation of India on behalf of the SUNFED group.

2. During the preliminary consideration of this draft the USA representative suggested that the proposed Special Fund was more clearly divorced from the operations of the expanded programme than seemed desirable. A number of other drafting suggestions were made but the major point of difference will clearly center around the relationship of the proposed new Special Fund to existing UN programmes. The under-developed countries are now, as this text indicates, willing to recognize that until sufficient funds are available, a large scale UN capital aid fund cannot be established. Section C of the Indian text appears to accept this situation pending reconsideration by the General Assembly when large enough additional resources become available.

3. In the course of discussion it also became clear that figure to be inserted in paragraph 3 might be $100 million and that figure to be inserted in paragraph 5 might be considerably higher, the idea being to leave a twilight zone for expansion of concept of a special project and exploration of possibility of large scale capital assistance.

4. We have been giving consideration to the possibility of reconciling views of SUNFED group, as expressed in the draft telegram, with USA proposal, in a resolution which would provide for establishment of an economic development fund under which there would be two programmes — the present expanded technical assistance programme and a special projects programme — both of which might report to something like present TAC. TAB (and IBRD) might be represented on board set up to administer special projects and the present technical assistance machinery would be used as much as possible. Potentially there might be a third programme which could deal with large scale capital assistance, and this might be anticipated in the resolution somewhat in the manner in which it is anticipated in paragraph 5 of the draft that we are transmitting — provided this were acceptable to USA.

5. Countries might earmark contributions for one or both programmes but TAC (or its successor) would take steps to preserve proper balance. (Possibly, first $35 million would go to technical assistance, second $35 million to special projects, with any amount in excess of $70 million to be allocated 50/50 or as deemed appropriate.)

6. Arrangement along lines suggested above would meet USA desire for a single fund, would assure continuance of expanded programme of technical assistance, and should go a long way towards meeting desire of SUNFED group for a separation of technical assistance and special projects. We would be free to press for association of IBRD in administration of special projects.

7. We shall try to prepare language for a resolution expressing these ideas, which we shall send you as soon as possible.

8. We would certainly not discuss this with other delegations without express authority. It would be most helpful if you could let us have your views in time for a further meeting with SUNFED group which is scheduled for Wednesday December 4.

9. On receipt of instructions after Cabinet consideration it is possible that the delegation may be able to assist drafting of an improved resolution. We agree with our USA colleague, however, that the Indian text provides a useful basis for further negotiation.

92.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2631

New York, November 29, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE TO UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES THROUGH THE UN

USA, UK and French Positions

USA Views: We are forwarding by bag copies of an explanatory statement on the USA proposal which Judd made on November 27.† This was an important statement which we do not propose to summarize here since it was most carefully worded and lengthy. Two points are worth emphasizing.

(1) Mr. Judd reiterated his government's view that the new programme would "facilitate in the years to come new capital investments of all types private and public, national and international by creating conditions which will make such investments either feasible or more effective. It will thus help to increase the flow of capital resources to underdeveloped countries, the need for which we are the first to recognize". We believe that eventual agreement with the SUNFED group will centre around the interpretation of this statement in the form of a resolution.

(2) Judd also clarified the relationship between USA proposal and SUNFED in the following terms: "Regardless of the decision taken by this Committee on the USA proposal, my government would find it impossible to support the establishment of a capital development fund at this time. We continue to support the principle of the establishment of such a fund when circumstances give promise of its attaining a meaningful size in terms of the capital needs of the less developed countries. We cannot anticipate exactly when this time will come". It will presumably be possible on the basis of this statement, for the USA to accept a fairly forthcoming expression of hope for the eventual establishment of SUNFED as a large scale capital aid programme.

2. UK Views: The UK statement on November 27 was a general exposition of the role which the UK has played and continues to play as a capital exporting country. The UK representative made it clear that his government was "not in a position to contribute" to SUNFED and referred directly to the USA proposal in the following sentence only: "The proposals of the USA delegation accordingly seem to us to offer a constructive approach, and we think the Committee would be well advised to study it in this light". We have seen London's instructions on this subject which make it quite clear that while the UK could vote for some suitably worded compromise resolution, it would have to emphasize that a contribution could only be expected "when possible". Our UK informants seem convinced that under present UK economic and political conditions, a contribution to the USA scheme is not likely to be agreed even in principle in 1958. The UK is also urging that the USA proposal be considered separately from the technical assistance programme since the UK is not prepared to consider increasing its technical assistance contribution at the present time. The UK delegation agrees, however, that their position might lead to the creation of a separate organization for the new fund which they have also been instructed to oppose on grounds of economy. As one UK delegate put it, "We don't have much flexibility to our position on this issue at the moment".

3. French Position: As we reported to Ottawa by phone, the French position on SUNFED has changed, we understand chiefly as a result of conversations between Mr. Pineau and Mr. Dulles in Washington. In Washington, Mr. Pineau is reported to have said that his delegation would "go all the way with the USA proposal". The French delegation in New York is, however, taking a rather less clear cut line which might best be described by quoting the concluding paragraph of the French statement on November 25: "Ceci dit, et compte tenu de ces commentaires, il va de soi que quelle que soit la formule envisagée et retenue, la contribution française sera maintenue. Elle s'appliquera avec les modalités appropriées, soit à l'assistance technique accrue et au financement du fonds pour projets spéciaux que se distinguerait techniquement et administrativement de l'assistance technique, soit au financement du fonds initialement prévu, et cela sans attendre un désarmement que ma délégation considère cependant plus nécessaire et plus urgent que jamais". The meaning of this statement is apparently that the French delegation would no longer support the immediate establishment of SUNFED and that at least part of the contribution which it had envisaged for a possible SUNFED would be made available if something like the USA proposal was adopted. The French statement also contained, however, reference to the need for an international code of ethics governing private capital investments. It is difficult at this point to anticipate with any accuracy in financial terms what the French position means.

4. There have been no other statements of major interest in the Committee. We have reported elsewhere the stage which negotiations concerning a draft resolution have reached.

93.

DEA/11423-40

*Le sous-ministre adjoint du ministère des Finances
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Finance,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, December 3, 1957

Attention: Mr. L.E. Couillard

Dear Sir:

RE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE THROUGH THE UN⁵⁴

We have received copies of telegrams nos. 2627, 2628 and 2631 on SUNFED from our Delegation to the United Nations.

These telegrams suggest that the situation in the United Nations is developing along lines which, in our view, provide a favourable climate for advancing successfully the ideas contained in the memorandum on this question which Cabinet approved. The under-developed countries, as represented by India, want to disassociate the special projects fund

⁵⁴ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Text-Phoned to Hadwen 6:30 pm Dec 3. R. Grey from the technical assistance programme in order to remove the limitations which such a connection implies. The U.S. wants to maintain a close connection between the special fund and technical assistance. Would not close association of the International Bank with the special fund offer a sound and attractive middle course? Similarly, the U.K. would like to separate the U.S. proposal from the technical assistance programme, but fears that this might lead to the creation of a separate organization. Here again, the International Bank seems to offer a way out.

We do not understand why the Delegation does not seize the opportunity to promote with selected delegations the ideas included in the memorandum approved by Cabinet and to pave the way for later consideration in the preparatory commission of our suggestions for a major role for the International Bank. We find it difficult to reconcile some of the information provided in the telegrams with the conclusions. For instance, telegram no. 2631 reports that the U.S. representative stated that his "Government would find it impossible to support the establishment of a capital development fund at this time". Yet, the conclusion is reached that it will presumably be possible for the U.S.A. to accept a fairly forthcoming expression of hope for the eventual establishment of the fund. Can we accept this as an accurate statement of the current U.S. position?

We also note that the Annex to the Indian resolution seems to fix in advance important organizational features of the proposed special fund thereby limiting seriously, if it does not effectively preclude, the opportunity for developing arrangements in which the International Bank will play a significant role in the administration of the special fund. As you know, the Cabinet memorandum establishes two conditions for consideration of Canadian participation. The Indian resolution entirely ignores the condition set forth in paragraph 21 (1) b.

The Delegation proposes to submit a resolution which would provide that "the present technical assistance machinery will be used as much as possible", yet Cabinet has agreed that the U.N. technical assistance machinery is not suitable for purposes of administering the new fund. Insofar as we can determine, there seems to be little difference between the Delegation's position and the U.S. proposal even though the Cabinet agreed that the U.S. proposal was not satisfactory without modification. It is possible that paragraph 4 of telegram no. 2627 is intended to answer these questions, but it does not provide a clear picture of the situation. As far as we can see, it calls for the multiplication of programmes, boards and funds — in other words, for making the operation and administration of the programme as complicated as possible. In this system, the International Bank would play a minor role, its influence lost.

The Delegation should ensure that its position is consistent with the instructions approved by Cabinet. In particular, we would wish to be in a position, at the very least, to present to the Preparatory Commission our views on the role which we believe the International Bank should play in the operation of a special projects fund. This means, in practical terms, that there should be enough flexibility in terms of reference of the Preparatory Commission to allow full consideration of the Bank's possible role. It does not mean that the Delegation need vigorously promote the role of the Bank in public at this time. The Delegation is the best judge of what promotion can be done now.

Yours very truly,

A.F.W. PLUMPTRE

94.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2695

New York, December 5, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate), London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

It appears that there are two main problems that will have to be resolved if a compromise between the USA proposal and the Eleven Power proposal is to be achieved. One problem concerns the name of the proposed special projects fund or programme and its relationship to the expanded programme of technical assistance, which has to meet USA requirement that it be eligible for funds under "technical assistance" and yet save face of delegations that have been pressing for SUNFED. The other problem concerns a paragraph providing for reopening of SUNFED.

2. Paragraph 5 of the Indian draft (our telegram 2628) deals with the latter problem, and USA delegation is trying to redraft it. As soon as they have a text, we shall send it to you.

3. With a view to resolving the first problem we have prepared a draft resolution based partly on the Indian draft. We believe that this draft reflects Canadian policy, and we think, on basis of talks that we have had with USA delegation, that it would be acceptable to USA. We should be grateful for your comments as soon as possible. In the meantime we are discussing the problem with other delegations.

4. Eventually it may be desirable for us to sponsor or co-sponsor a draft resolution along lines of this text. Text begins:

The General Assembly,

In conformity with the determination of the UN, as expressed in its Charter, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and, for these ends, to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Conscious of the particular needs of the less developed countries for accelerated economic development,

Recognizing that the UN expanded Technical Assistance Programme is of proven effectiveness in promoting the economic development of the less-developed countries,

Considering that, in order to supplement the efforts being made by the UN and by individual countries to provide economic and technical assistance to the underdeveloped countries, it is desirable to take such steps as are practicable to enlarge the financial resources and scope of existing UN technical assistance programmes,

Convinced that an increase in such assistance through the UN to the less-developed countries would help to create favourable conditions for increasing the flow of capital to such countries and would, by stimulating their social and economic advancement, contribute to the stability and peace of the world,

Noting the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 662B (XXIV) that the General Assembly take steps to establish a special UN Fund for the financing of the economic and social development of under-developed countries,

Recognizing, however, that the establishment and successful operation of such a Fund would not be feasible at this time,

1. Commends the Ad Hoc Committee on the question of the establishment of a special UN Fund for economic development for its work as embodied in its final and supplementary reports prepared in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 923 (X) December 9/55, and 1030 (XI) February 26/57;

2. Decides that there should be established, within the general context of the programmes of technical assistance, a Special Fund which would provide systematic and sustained assistance in certain basic fields essential to the integrated technical, economic and social development of the less developed countries;

3. Decides further that, in the light of the resources prospectively available to it, the Special Fund shall be used to enlarge the scope of the current UN programmes by undertaking special projects in certain basic fields, for example, inventories of natural resources and the most appropriate methods for their utilization, and the creation or development of technological institutes;

4. Considers that although some new machinery will be required for the administration of the special fund, the fullest possible use should be made of the existing machinery of the expanded programme of technical assistance, and of the specialized agencies, including the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

5. An amended version of the Indian draft resolution which now reads as follows:

Considers further that, as and when the resources available to the special fund exceed _____, or if circumstances otherwise permit, it shall after due report to and approval of the General Assembly undertake projects of assistance in more extended fields designed to accelerate the integrated economic and social development of the less-developed countries, principally their economic and social infrastructure.

6. Establishes a Preparatory Committee composed of representatives of _____ members of the UN to be designated by the President of the General Assembly;

7. Decides that the Preparatory Committee shall

(a) define the basic fields, the types of projects which should be eligible for assistance.

(b) Define such changes in existing UN machinery and procedures as may be necessary in order to assure the early and effective operation of the Special Fund.

(c) Prepare any necessary draft amendments to UN resolutions governing existing programmes.

(d) Ascertain the extent to which governments would be willing to contribute to UN expanded programme of technical assistance and to the Special Fund;

8. Invites the Secretary General to provide the Preparatory Committee with all the necessary facilities, including the provision of such expert consultants as might be required;

9. Requests governments to assist the Preparatory Committee in its work by submitting their views and suggestions through the Secretary General and, in particular, by indicating the extent to which they would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund;

10. Invites the specialized agencies, the Technical Assistance Administration and the Technical Assistance Board to submit their views and suggestions to the Preparatory Committee through the Secretary General;

11. Requests the Preparatory Committee to submit the results of its work in the form of a report and recommendations to the Twenty-sixth Session of the Economic and Social Council;

12. Requests the Economic and Social Council to transmit the Preparatory Committee's report, together with its own comments, to the 13th Session of the General Assembly for final action;

13. Looks forward to the establishment of the Special Fund as of January 1, 1959;

14. Appeals to all States members of the UN, in a spirit of cooperation and solidarity, to give the greatest possible support to the Special Fund.

95.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2696

New York, December 5, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate) (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: RELATIONSHIP OF IBRD TO NEW UN AID PROGRAMME

You will have seen the paragraph in Mrs. Fairclough's speech referring to the IBRD. We showed this paragraph to the New York representatives of the Bank who approved.

2. As you will have seen from the draft resolution we are forwarding to you separately,⁵⁵ we have inserted a separate reference to the IBRD.

3. We have had conversations with the USA, UK, Netherlands, Yugoslavia and Indian delegations on the basis of which we believe there is strong support for association of IBRD with the new UN programme. It has not so far been possible to obtain from these delegations any firm statement of exactly what role of IBRD should be. The IBRD representative here has told us that the Bank would not, at this stage, like to be tied down to any specific function in relation to the new programme when no decisions have yet been taken regarding its organization and operation.

4. Principally as a result of USA insistence, it appears likely, however, that in addition to a close relationship with the IBRD, the new programme will also have to have a close relationship with present UN technical assistance machinery, particularly the field offices. It is generally accepted, however, that the new programme would not be subject to the direction of the Technical Assistance Board, nor would it be guided by the agency allocation procedure. It is possible, however, that situation, may change as the various specialized agencies bring pressure to bear on the governments most ready to accept their views.⁵⁶ In this connection we have passed to the local FAO representative your comments about FAO's record concerning joint projects in which Canada participates.

⁵⁵ Voir le document précédent./See previous document.

⁵⁶ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
any evidence [?] [R. Grey]

96.

DEA/11423-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM E-1891

Ottawa, December 6, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tels 2695 and 2696 Dec 5.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Routine) (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDER DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

The discussion in the Second Committee on this subject seems to be moving toward the position called for by the Cabinet memorandum. We recognize that there will be difficulties in defining the relationship of the Special Projects Programme (SPP) to the existing Technical Assistance Programme. However, the draft resolution set out in your telegram 2695 seems to us to give undue emphasis to a close relationship between the SPP and the existing Technical Assistance Programme. We do not quarrel with the idea that these two programmes should be properly coordinated and that the field offices should serve the SPP, but we hope that IBRD activities under the programme would not be subject to TAB.

2. We have a few comments on your draft resolution which may be of some use to you in discussion with other delegations. We would certainly hope that the resolution as it finally emerges would be such that you could co-sponsor it but we would want to see a final text beforehand; we would also wish at that time to have your views on an assessment of the organizational arrangements which the Preparatory Commission is likely to recommend.

3. In the fourth paragraph of the preamble to your draft resolution the words "technical assistance" should be deleted from the last line. We would hope that the US could accept this change.

4. Operative paragraph 4 of the resolution might begin as follows: "Considers that effective use should be made of the existing machinery and facilities of the UN and of the specialized agencies, including IBRD". If the role of the International Bank could be given more prominence, for example by saying "particularly the International Bank" rather than "including the International Bank" this paragraph would be much improved, but we recognize that such a change might be unacceptable to other delegations.

5. Operative paragraph 5 as amended from the Indian draft resolution seems to us to be quite dangerous. We think the underdeveloped countries should recognize that if there is a paragraph of this nature in the resolution which provides that when the Special Fund exceeds a stated amount, the scope of the programme may be broadened, this gives the major donor country full control over the scope of the programme. If the USA continues to be opposed to capital programmes a clause of this kind would, in fact, lead them to limit the size of any contribution which would bring a capital aid programme closer. This is not in the interests of the underdeveloped countries. This paragraph should be replaced by much more general language which merely indicates that when the resources available to the Fund are increased and other circumstances permit, consideration should be given to widening the scope of the Fund's activities. Possibly the American redraft of this paragraph to which you refer will meet some of these difficulties. We would have thought that the present version would be quite unacceptable to the United States.

6. Operative paragraph 9 is undesirable in that most countries including ourselves would not wish to indicate the extent to which they would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund until after the Preparatory Commission has reported. If it is necessary to put this request to governments in paragraph 9, governments should also be invited to indicate the conditions under which they would be prepared to contribute to the fund.

7. Operative paragraph 10 might be redrafted along the following lines: "Invites the Secretary General to submit his views on this matter to the Preparatory Committee and invites the Secretary General to seek the views of the specialized agencies, Technical Assistance Administration and the Technical Assistance Board, and to submit their views to the Preparatory Committee". Before proposing such a change you should seek reasonable informal assurances that the Secretary General's views are likely to reflect views of de Seynes rather than Technical Assistance personnel.

8. Reference paragraph 4 your telegram 2996 you should not hesitate to emphasize to representatives of the specialized agencies that if they press unreasonably for their special interests they will merely encourage strong demands to exclude them as far as possible from playing an active role in the new programme, to their own detriment.

97.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2731

New York, December 7, 1957

UNCLASSIFIED. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate); London from Ottawa; Paris, NATO Paris from London (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE

The following is the text of the USA draft resolution circulated at a meeting with representatives of the SUNFED group on December 7. Our comments follow in a separate message. Begins:

The General Assembly, in conformity with the determination of the UN, as expressed in its Charter, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, and for these ends, to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Conscious of the particular needs of the less developed countries for international aid in achieving accelerated economic development, including aid designed to strengthen their economic and social infrastructure,

Recalling General Assembly Resolution 724A(viii) regarding the establishment of an "international fund within the framework of the UN, to assist development and reconstruction in underdeveloped countries",

Noting the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council in its Resolution 662B(XXIV), Recognising that the UN expanded technical assistance programme is of proven effectiveness in promoting the economic development of the less developed countries,

Recognising, however, that the expanded technical assistance programme cannot now meet certain urgent needs for technical assistance which, if met, would advance the processes of economic and social development for the less developed countries, and, in particular, would facilitate new capital investments of all types — private and public, national and international — by creating conditions which will make such investments either feasible or more effective,

Convinced that a rapidly achieved enlargement in the financial resources and scope of the UN programmes of technical assistance up to 100 million dollars annually would constitute a feasible and constructive advance in UN aid which would be of immediate significance in accelerating the economic development of less developed countries,

A

Commends the Ad Hoc Committee on the question of the establishment of a Special UN Fund for Economic Development for its work as embodied in its final and supplementary reports prepared in accordance with General Assembly Resolutions 923(X) December 9, 1955 and 1030(XI) February 26, 1957;

B

1. Decides that subject to the conditions prescribed hereunder there shall be established as part of the technical assistance programs of the UN a separate Special Projects Fund which would provide systematic and sustained assistance in certain basic fields essential to the integrated technical, economic and social development of the less-developed countries,

2. Decides, further, that in view of the resources prospectively available at this time, the operations of the Fund shall be used to enlarge the scope of the UN programmes of technical assistance so as to include special projects of assistance in these basic fields to be defined by the Preparatory Committee provided for in paragraph 4 below, such as intensive surveys of water, mineral and potential power resources; the establishment, including staffing and equipping, of training institutes in public administration, statistics and technology, and of industrial research and productivity centers,

3. Considers that, while the fullest possible use should be made of the existing machinery of the expanded program of technical assistance, the Special Fund will require some new administrative and operational machinery,

4. Decides to establish a Preparatory Committee composed of representatives of _____ governments participating in the UN programmes of technical assistance to do the following:

(a) define the basic fields of assistance which the Special Fund should encompass and, within these fields, the types of projects which would be eligible for assistance;

(b) define the changes which will need to be made in the administration and machinery of the UN expanded technical assistance programme in order to assure rapid and effective use of the Special Fund;

(c) ascertain the extent to which governments would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund;

(d) prepare the necessary draft amendments in the present procedures and legislation of the expanded programmes;

5. Requests the President of the General Assembly to appoint the members of the Preparatory Committee;

6. Invites the Secretary General to provide the Preparatory Committee with all the necessary facilities, including the provision of such expert consultants as might be required;

7. Requests governments to assist the Preparatory Committee in its work by submitting their views and suggestions to the Preparatory Committee through the Secretary General and, in particular, by indicating the extent to which they would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund;

8. Invites the Specialized Agencies, the Technical Assistance Administration and the Technical Assistance Board to submit their views and suggestions to the Preparatory Committee through the Secretary General;

9. Requests the Preparatory Committee to submit the results of its work in the form of a report and recommendations to the Twenty-sixth Session of the Economic and Social Council;

10. Requests the Economic and Social Council to transmit the Preparatory Committee's report, together with its own comments, to the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly for final action;

11. Looks forward to the establishment of the Special Fund as of January 1, 1959;

12. Appeals to all states members of the UN, in a spirit of cooperation and solidarity, to give the greatest possible assistance to the Special Fund.

C

13. Subject to the recognition that many countries cannot make financial commitments except with the approval of legislatures and on an annual basis; and that amounts made available to any multilateral capital development fund would in some cases involve reductions in contributions made bilaterally for development purposes;

14. Resolves that when at least 500 million dollars are prospectively available on an annual basis to the UN for development aid beyond that provided by the Special Fund, the General Assembly upon notification of such fact by the Secretary General shall consider the desirability of undertaking a program of capital development by the establishment of a capital development fund principally designed to assist in the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the less-developed countries.

98.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2732

New York, December 8, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel E-1891 Dec 6 and Our Tel 2731 Dec 7.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

1. Our telegram 2731 contains the text of a draft based partly on the Indian draft which was given to us yesterday morning by the USA delegation at a meeting attended also by

UK and French delegations. Subsequently, we all met with representatives of the Indian, Netherlands, Yugoslav, Chilean and Venezuelan delegations.

2. The most important elements of the USA proposal are contained in operative paragraphs B1 and C14 of the USA draft.

3. Operative paragraph B1 provides for the establishment "as part of the technical assistance programmes of the UN" of a special projects fund. Please note that in this paragraph and elsewhere throughout the draft resolution the words "technical assistance programmes" are not capitalized. The words are capitalized only when the expanded programme of technical assistance is referred to specifically. The fund might be called a "Special Fund" or a "Special Projects Fund". The USA delegation has, however, rigid instructions to see to it that any Fund that is established is regarded as within the technical assistance programmes of the UN. Apparently, Congress will vote money for technical assistance but not for capital assistance through the UN. The USA agrees that the Special Projects Fund should be separate from the expanded programme of technical assistance: the need for separate machinery is recognized in paragraphs B3 and B4. It is unfortunate that the USA definition of technical assistance embraces some forms of what other people call capital assistance. If the delegations that have long supported the idea of a capital assistance fund would be able to report to their governments that a limited capital assistance fund would be established, much face would be saved. The acceptability of the USA proposal, which in substance marks a step forward, is greatly reduced by the insistence on describing it as a form of technical assistance.

4. Operative paragraph C14 twists the idea contained in paragraph 5 of the Indian draft resolution. The Indians and their co-sponsors envisage a special fund that might eventually engage in larger and more ambitious projects than those envisaged in the USA proposal. USA delegation admits privately that the step forward may prove to be a first step towards the establishment of a capital assistance fund but they cannot accept any language that contemplates this: to do so they say would entail moral commitment to contribute eventually to a large scale capital assistance fund. When asked how the Secretary General might ascertain the fact that $500 million was prospectively available for development aid beyond that provided by the Special Fund, Congressman Judd said that presumably the Secretary General would enquire of governments each year. We expressed distaste for this idea and said that we thought that the phrase "upon notification of such fact by the Secretary General" might be omitted: we said that when $500 million appeared to be available it would certainly be brought to the attention of the Assembly. Operative paragraph C13 is, of course, a preambular paragraph to paragraph C14. Dr. Judd explained that the second part of operative paragraph 13 was not intended as a threat but merely as honest notice that an increase in contributions to multilateral programmes might involve a switch in appropriations from bilateral programmes. The USA delegation has extremely rigid instructions on the texts of paragraphs C13 and C14. In the time available it will be very difficult to obtain any amendments whatsoever. We appreciate the apprehensions expressed in paragraph 5 and your telegram E-1891. We would point out, however, that the USA contribution cannot very well be cut in the manner that you suggest so long as the matching formula is contained in effect.

5. Now we should like to comment of other paragraphs of the USA draft.

6. The first five paragraphs of the preamble require no comment. If preambular paragraphs 6 and 7 should encounter any opposition, we might in the consequent redrafting try to insert the ideas contained in our own preambular paragraphs 4 and 5.

7. Operative paragraph A1 which commends the Ad Hoc Committee requires no comment. Paragraph B2 needs some slight redrafting, although the ideas expressed in it seem to be clear enough. Paragraph B3 might be redrafted along the lines suggested in paragraph 4 of your telegram. We shall try to obtain a reference here to the International Bank. Paragraph B4 requires some clarification. In paragraph B7(d) and paragraph B9, we shall try to obtain the elimination or amelioration of the provision that governments should be asked to indicate the extent to which they would be willing to contribute. With regard to paragraph 8 we shall consult with the Secretariat before suggesting changes proposed in paragraph 7 of your telegram E-1891. The other operative paragraphs require no comment.

8. You will recall that the Indian draft resolution contained an annex setting forth certain principles on the basis of which the Preparatory Committee would draft the rules to govern the administration and management of the Special Fund. The USA and UK delegations and we ourselves consider that there are some principles in the annex which are unacceptable and that there are others that would prejudice the decisions to be taken by the Preparatory Committee. We have, however, extracted a few principles which would seem to be acceptable and which might be included in an annex if the Indian delegation and their co-sponsors insist. A draft of a proposed annex is set for in my telegram 2733.

9. We should now like to comment on points raised in your telegram E-1891 which have not already been dealt with above. With regard to your paragraph 1 there is no question of the Special Projects [Fund] being made subject in any way to TAB. With reference to your paragraph 3, you will have noted from what we have already said that the USA delegation insists on inclusion of the words "technical assistance".

10. We are very conscious of the strong feelings regarding SUNFED that are held by many governments that have been advocating for years the establishment of a capital assistance fund. In substance the USA proposal offers them a limited measure of capital assistance, but the insistence of USA that the proposed "special projects" be a form of technical assistance makes it difficult for the advocates of SUNFED to accept USA proposal as a substantial step forward. Delegations and governments are likely to be disappointed and even bitter if they have to report to their peoples that their efforts over the years have yielded only some more technical assistance. We fear that the mention of a figure of $500 million or $400 million in paragraph C14 will be regarded as an attempt to deal a mortal blow to SUNFED, and the result is likely to be the opposite of that desired, that is, perennial agitation for the establishment of SUNFED.

11. We most earnestly suggest that our Embassy in Washington express our grave misgivings to the State Department as soon as possible. In particular, the Embassy might point out the desirability of omitting the explicit provisions that Special Projects Fund be "part of the technical assistance programmes of UN", while safeguarding position elsewhere in resolution by providing for close coordination of operations of Special Projects Fund and EPTA, including utilization of technical assistance machinery where possible and appropriate.⁵⁷ As for a provision regarding conditions in which establishment of a large scale capital assistance fund might be considered, we would suggest inclusion in resolution of a paragraph providing that when resources annually available to the Special Projects Fund are substantially in excess of $100 million, the Assembly should consider the desirability of establishing a capital assistance fund. Such a provision would give all the supporters of SUNFED a motive for making a success of the Special Projects Fund. We cannot expect advocates of SUNFED to undertake to stop agitating for a period of several years, but a provision along the lines suggested would enable USA, UK and ourselves to refuse with a clear conscience to enter into serious discussions at least until Special Projects Fund is operating successfully at a fairly high financial level. If USA cannot accept this idea, they might be persuaded to withdraw paragraphs C13 and C14 entirely. In this event they could make it clear in debate that they could not agree to discuss SUNFED seriously until the Special Projects Fund had reached a highly successful level, and presumably we might take similar line.

⁵⁷ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I spoke with Mr. Ritchie on Mon. am in this sense. R. G[rey]

12. We have received indications today that Indians et alios are preparing amendments to USA draft in which they accept idea that Special Projects Fund be part of the technical assistance programmes of the UN, reject reference to bilateral programmes in paragraph C13, and delete figure of $500 million in paragraph C14. Regardless of what they are prepared to accept, we think it important that resolution be in terms that can be accepted wholeheartedly not only by India, Netherlands and their associates, but also by other advocates of SUNFED, particularly Latin Americans, some of whom are pretty bitter about USA proposal. It is most desirable to do everything possible to restore good feeling. We therefore recommend that Washington Embassy urge upon State Department desirability of more positive and forthcoming attitude. Congressman Judd has told us that he and the members of USA delegation here have done all they can and that representations by our Embassy in Washington might have very useful effects.

13. Time is running out. Second Committee will discuss draft resolutions concerning commodity problems on Monday December 9 and will take up the question of the Special Fund on Tuesday, if a compromise text has been worked out, or at the latest on Wednesday. It is therefore most desirable that the Embassy in Washington take action at earliest possible moment, preferably on Monday.

[W.K.] NESBITT

99.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2733

New York, December 8, 1957

RESTRICTED. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2732 Dec 8.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate), London, NATO Paris, Paris (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

Following is draft of annex to resolution that might be included if Indians and others insist. Begins:

"In drafting proposals for the administration of the Special Fund the Preparatory Committee shall, so far as possible, give effect to the following principles:

(a) The Special Fund shall be a multilateral fund of the UN, with financial resources principally derived from voluntary annual contributions of governments and other in (or transferrable into) currency usable by it and as much as possible pledged or indicated for a number of years;

(b) Assistance from the Special Fund shall be given only to projects which would make a contribution to the economic development of the requesting country or countries. The operations of the Special Fund shall be in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the UN;

(c) The Special Fund shall be administered under policies which shall be in accordance with such rules and principles as may be laid down by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. Decisions on questions of policy, including the allocation of funds, shall require a qualified majority vote;

(d) The Special Fund shall establish close cooperation with the Specialized Agencies. The staff of the Special Fund shall be kept to a minimum." Ends.

100.

DEA/11423-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM E-1910

Ottawa, December 9, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tels 2731 of Dec 7, 2732 of Dec 8 and 2733 of Dec 8; Our Tel E-1891 of Dec 6.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate), London, Paris, NATO Paris (Routine) (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE — ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

We have asked Embassy Washington to speak to the State Department in the sense of paragraph 11 of your telegram 2732.

2. We have a number of comments on the draft resolution as set out below.

3. The first six paragraphs of the preamble are acceptable.

4. Paragraph 7 of the preamble — replace "technical" by "economic".

5. Operative paragraph (A) is acceptable.

6. Operative paragraph (B1). There are various ways this paragraph might be improved. The most desirable improvement would be to delete the phrase "as part of the technical assistance programs of the UN". Failing this, you might substitute "economic" for "technical". Failing that, you might say "as an adjunct to the technical assistance programs" rather than "as part of the technical assistance programs".

7. Operative paragraph 2 might read as follows: "Decides, further, that in view of the resources prospectively available at this time, the operations of the Fund shall be used to enlarge the scope of UN programs of economic assistance and to provide special projects of assistance in basic fields to be defined by the Preparatory Committee provided for in paragraph 4 below, including intensive surveys of water, mineral and potential power resources, training institutes in public administration, statistics and technology and industrial research and productivity centres".

8. Operative paragraph (B3): Our comments in paragraph 4 of our telegram E-1891 are relevant.

9. Operative paragraph (B4) might be revised as follows beginning with part (b): "In accordance with paragraph 3 above, define the changes in the organizational and administrative machinery necessary in order to assure rapid and effective use of the Special Fund; (c) (delete); (d) prepare the necessary draft amendments in the present procedures and legislation".

10. Operative paragraph (B5) — On December 2, the Minister stated in the External Affairs Committee that Canada hoped to be a member of the [Preparatory] Committee. We hope that the question of membership can safely be left to the President of the General Assembly on the understanding that a relatively balanced committee including Canada will be appointed.

11. Operative paragraph (B8) should be revised in accordance with paragraph 7 of our telegram E-1891.

12. Operative paragraph (C13) — We have no strong objections to this paragraph on our own account but we would think that the underdeveloped countries would find it offensive. You might wish to urge the US delegation to delete this paragraph and possibly provide that the rapporteur's report make reference to this view.

13. Operative paragraph (C14) — This paragraph seems to us to be unacceptable to the under-developed countries. We suggest that it be replaced by a paragraph along the following lines: "Resolves that at the end of ... years from the date the program is established the Economic and Social Council should re-examine the efficiency of the machinery established to administer the program and should consider whether the experience gained and other circumstances would justify an enlargement of the scope of the Fund to finance types of projects other than those recommended by the Preparatory Commission and approved by the Thirteenth General Assembly". The minimum number of years which should elapse before such a re-examination takes place should be two years. You might initially suggest four or five so as to be able to concede some ground. We would be glad to see the Indian redraft of this paragraph when it is available.

14. Any annex such as that set out in your telegram 2733 still seems to us undesirable. These are all matters which should be left to the Preparatory Commission but might well be explored informally beforehand with the Indians with the aim of finding some common ground. However, any attempt to specify some of these points in an annex at this time opens a whole new range of problems. For example we (and, we assume, the US) would object to the reference to voting control.

101.

DEA/11423-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
Ambassador in United States
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM 45

Washington, December 9, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 2732 Dec 8.

Repeat External (OpImmediate), London, NATO Paris, Paris (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the basis of your message we discussed the situation this afternoon with Walter Kotschnig, Director of the State Department's Office of International Economic and Social Affairs.

2. Kotschnig agreed that the difficulties which were being experienced in drafting the resolution regarding the Special Projects Fund were serious and that there was a risk of losing some of the important advantages which they had hoped to gain from their original initiative. The fact remained, however, that a fund was in the process of being created which could be of real value to the underdeveloped countries. He was anxious that this fact should not be obscured by wrangling over the terms of a resolution, but he did not see how such controversy could be ended to the satisfaction of all concerned.

3. We put forward the suggestions and made the points set out in your paragraph 11. He appeared to find merit in them but indicated that the USA position had been fairly precisely defined by Secretary Dulles himself after some two days of discussion here. While they had some room left for manoeuvre, he was doubtful that they could go quite as far as we were suggesting, particularly concerning the provision regarding conditions in which the establishment of a large scale capital assistance fund might be considered. He undertook, however, to have our ideas examined further as a matter of urgency. He himself is going to New York but others responsible in the State Department will probably be in touch with us tomorrow. He also promised that they would let us know if it appeared that further intervention by us at other levels in the State Department would be helpful.

102.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2759

New York, December 10, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel E-1910 Dec 9.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

We had a discussion this afternoon at which the Indian delegation presented a revised version of the draft sent in our telegram 2731 December 7. The text including certain amendments agreed upon at the meeting is in our telegram 2760. We did not have your telegram E-1910 until after the meeting.

2. When the meeting broke up it was agreed to have a further meeting tomorrow to discuss certain points of difference, as follows:

(a) In paragraph B(1), the USA delegation wishes to insert the words "certain basic" after "assistance in".

(b) In paragraph B2 the USA delegation wishes to delete the words "more immediately". These two points arise out of the desire of the SUNFED group to regard the Special Fund as one which, as resources become available, might gradually engage in capital assistance for the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the less developed countries.

(c) In paragraph B4, the USA delegation wishes to delete the words "having due regard to the principles set out in the annex" because it objects to the inclusion of an annex. The objection to the annex is that it prejudices certain matters relating to the organization of the Special Fund on which the USA government has not made up its mind. We objected to the inclusion of an annex on the same grounds.

(d) Part (c) is unacceptable to the USA which suggested the following alternative text: "Resolves that subject to the recognition that the amounts made available to any multilateral capital development fund would in some cases involve reductions in contributions made bilaterally for development purposes when at least $500 million are prospectively available on an annual basis to the UN for development aid beyond that provided by the Special Fund, the General Assembly upon notification of such fact by the Secretary General shall consider the desirability of undertaking a program of capital development by the establishment of a capital development fund designed to assist in the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the less developed countries". This alternative text appeared to be unacceptable to the SUNFED group. After much discussion the USA delegation agreed to try to get approval of a text proposed by us as follows: "Decides that as and when the resources available are considered by the General Assembly to be sufficient to enable the UN to enter into the field of capital development, principally the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the less developed countries, the General Assembly might decide to take the steps necessary to enable the Special Fund to expand its activities, or establish a new fund, or take such other action as it might deem appropriate". It is not clear whether this is acceptable to the SUNFED group but it is being considered by them. The SUNFED group considered irrelevant the first part of the USA redraft of part (c) which recognizes amounts made available to any multilateral capital development fund would in some cases involve reductions in contributions made bilaterally. It is not clear whether the USA delegation will be able to accept the deletion of this provision. If it is essential to USA to have something along these lines we might in order to avoid breakdown propose a preambular paragraph somewhat as follows: "Recognizing that the amounts contributed by governments to multilateral programmes have a bearing on the amounts that they are able to contribute to bilateral programmes and vice versa".

3. Our comments on your telegram E-1910 are as follows: Re your paragraph 4 there is no chance of replacing "technical" by "economic". "Technical" has been accepted by the SUNFED group and USA can accept no change as it is regarded as essential to Congressional approval of appropriations. Re your paragraph 6 there is no chance of deleting "as part of the technical assistance programmes of the UN" which has been accepted by the SUNFED group as "as a part of the technical assistance programmes of the UN and the Specialized Agencies". Re your paragraph 7 we shall support the USA request for deletion of "more immediately". If both sides accept the remainder of the text we would consider it unwise at this late stage to suggest further changes. Re your paragraph 8 we suggested "effective" instead of "fullest possible" but all the other delegations believed that "fullest possible" was better. You will note that the new text refers to the Specialized Agencies which of course include the International Bank and also refers to the existing international financial institutions. All concerned agreed that the text was intended to cover use of the facilities of the IBRD and we shall stress it in our statement in the Committee. Re your paragraph 9 we think that paragraph B4 (a) and (b) are in line with your desires and we would prefer not to attempt to obtain any further changes. As for paragraph 4 (c) there was a general desire that it be retained and general recognition that the word "extent" did not necessarily involve specific pledges of financial support. Re your paragraph 10 there has been little discussion of the composition of the Preparatory Committee but we fully expect that Canada will be a member and that membership will be well balanced. Re your paragraph 11 we think that the text of paragraph B (8) in substance meets your wishes since in fact it will be the Secretary General who will request the executive heads of the Specialized Agencies to forward their views. Re your paragraphs 12 and 13 we have already dealt above with the discussions on part (C). Re your paragraph 14 as noted above, we have opposed the inclusion of an annex. We have not been able to report to you all the various stages in the discussions on the financing of economic development in which we have participated. There has been a series of meetings by our delegation with the USA, UK and French delegations; another series of meetings with larger group of western minded delegations including Japan, Pakistan, the Scandinavians, Western Germany and Switzerland; and finally a so-called negotiating group has been meeting which consists of the USA, UK, Canada and France and the Netherlands, Yugoslavia, India, and sometimes a Latin American. The positions of all these delegations other than those in the negotiating group have not been very clear since there is no specific proposal before them. It is, however, our impression that many more delegations are prepared to side with the USA, UK and Canada principally as a result of the USA initiative than was the case at previous sessions of the General Assembly and certainly at ECOSOC. The Italians, Danes and Japanese have been particularly helpful. The Indian delegation has in its statements in the Committee and outside consistently taken the position that a mutually acceptable compromise is the solution to which the Committee should work. Together with the Netherlands and Yugoslav delegations the Indian representatives have succeeded in securing agreement by the eleven sponsors of the SUNFED resolution to support in general terms the substance of the USA proposal and to withdraw their draft resolution. We are as sure as one can be in relation to UN proceedings that neither the USA proposal nor the original 11-power text will be voted upon by the Committee and that a compromise text will emerge. The French delegation, after discussion between Pineau and Dulles in Washington, now in general supports the USA position. Even the Netherlands delegation has withdrawn from the extreme position which it took at the 23rd Session of ECOSOC. The Yugoslav delegation is likewise playing a much more responsible role than was the case in earlier ECOSOC and General Assembly debates. There is also some disposition on the part of the delegations of Cuba, Peru and Venezuela to support a moderate position. In the development of these attitudes we believe the Canadian delegation has played a useful role. On the other side of the picture the USA is now negotiating on the basis of a text very different from that originally presented. We believe the latest text in general meets the conditions set out in the Cabinet memorandum. We have urged a more flexible position on the USA delegation. We believe we have secured in the text of the resolution now under discussion satisfactory protection of our point of view concerning the IBRD. It is most difficult to anticipate how discussion in the Preparatory Commission will develop. It has been emphatically stated both by the underdeveloped countries such as India and Yugoslavia and by the USA that the new fund would not operate under the procedures of the expanded programme of technical assistance and that it would be a separate fund requiring some new organizational and administrative machinery. On the other hand the underdeveloped countries have clearly stated that they do not regard the proposed Special Fund as involving anything like a new specialized agency and that the existing facilities of the UN and the Specialized Agencies including IBRD would be used in order to avoid costly administrative expenditures. The underdeveloped countries, USA, UK and ourselves have emphatically stated that the new programme would not come under the TAB nor would it be subject to the present system of agency allocations under the expanded programme. Apart from these general indications it is not possible now to envisage how the work of the Preparatory Commission will develop except that the principles set out in the annex to the original SUNFED resolution will probably be basic to the position of those delegations from amongst 11 sponsors who may be appointed to the Committee.

103.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2760

New York, December 10, 1957

UNCLASSIFIED. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2759 Dec 10.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate) (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

The General Assembly in conformity with the determination of the UN, as expressed in its Charter, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, and for these ends, to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples, conscious of the particular needs of the less developed countries for international aid in achieving accelerated development of the economic and social infrastructure, recalling its resolutions on the establishment of an international fund for economic development within the framework of the UN and, in particular, reaffirming its unanimously adopted Resolution 724 A and B(VIII) of December 7, 1953, noting the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council in its Resolution 662 B(XXIV), recognizing that the UN expanded technical assistance programme is of proven effectiveness in promoting the economic development of the less developed countries, recognizing, however, that neither the expanded technical assistance programme nor other existing programmes of the UN or the Specialized Agencies can now meet certain urgent needs which, if met, would advance the processes of technical, economic and social development of the less developed countries, and, in particular, would facilitate new capital investments of all types private and public, national and international by creating conditions which will make such investments either feasible or more effective, convinced that a rapidly achieved enlargement in the financial resources and scope of technical assistance rendered by the UN and the Specialized Agencies to the less developed countries would constitute a constructive advance in UN assistance and would be of immediate significance in accelerating their economic development, recognizing that, while long term pledges are desirable, some governments are unable to make financial commitments except with the approval of their legislatures and on an annual basis,

(A) Commends the Ad Hoc Committee on the question of the establishment of a Special UN Fund for Economic Development for the work as embodied in its final and supplementary reports prepared in accordance with General Assembly Resolutions 923(X) of December 9, 1955 and 1030(XI) of February 26, 1957;

(B) 1. Decides that, subject to the conditions prescribed hereunder, there shall be established as a part of the technical assistance programme of the UN and the Specialized Agencies a separate Special Fund which would provide systematic and sustained assistance in fields essential to the integrated technical, economic and social development of the less developed countries,

2. Decides further that, in view of the resources prospectively available at this time, which are not likely to exceed one hundred million dollars annually, the operations of the Fund shall be used to enlarge the scope of the UN programmes of technical assistance so as to include special projects in certain basic fields to be defined by the Preparatory Committee provided for in paragraph 4 below, for example, intensive surveys of water, mineral and potential power resources, the establishment, including staffing and equipping of training institutes in public administration, statistics and technology, and of agricultural and industrial research and productivity centers;
3. Considers that while, without impairing the separate identity of the Special Fund, the fullest possible use should be made of the existing machinery of the UN, and of the Specialized Agencies (including that of the expanded programme of technical assistance and of the existing international financial institutions), the Special Fund will require some new administrative and operative machinery;
4. Decides to establish a Preparatory Committee composed of representatives of _____ governments to do the following, having due regard to the principles set out in the annex:
 - (a) define the basic fields of assistance which the Special Fund should encompass and, within these fields, the types of projects which should be eligible for assistance;
 - (b) define in the light of paragraphs 3 above, the administrative and operational machinery recommended for the Special Fund, including such changes as may be required in the present procedures and legislation of the expanded programme of technical assistance;
 - (c) ascertain the extent to which governments would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund;
5. Requests the President of the General Assembly to appoint the members of the Preparatory Committee;
6. Invites the Secretary General to provide the Preparatory Committee with all the necessary facilities, including the provision of such expert consultants as might be required;
7. Requests governments to assist the Preparatory Committee in its work by forwarding their views and suggestions to the Preparatory Committee through the Secretary General and, in particular, by indicating the extent to which they would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund;
8. Invites the Secretary General, the Executive Heads of the Specialized Agencies [and] the Executive Chairman of the Technical Assistance Board to forward their views and suggestions to the Preparatory Committee;
9. Requests the Preparatory Committee to submit the results of its work in the form of a report and recommendations to the Twenty-sixth Session of the Economic and Social Council;
10. Requests the Economic and Social Council to transmit the Preparatory Committee's report, together with its own comments, to the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly for final action;
11. Looks forward to the establishment of the Special Fund as of January 1, 1959;

12. Appeals to all states members of the UN, in a spirit of cooperation and solidarity, to give the greatest possible assistance to the Special Fund;

(C) Decides that as and when the resources available to the Special Fund are considered by the General Assembly or the Fund itself to be sufficient to enable the Fund to expand its activities into the field of capital development, principally the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the less developed countries, the General Assembly shall, upon report from the Fund or on its own initiative, take such action as it may deem appropriate.

Annex:

I. The Special Fund shall be a multilateral fund of the UN, with financial resources principally derived from voluntary annual contributions of governments and others in (or transferrable into) currency useable by it and as much as possible pledged or indicated for a number of years;

II. Assistance from the Special Fund shall be given only to projects which would make a contribution to the economic development of the requesting country or countries. The operations of the Special Fund shall be in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the UN and shall not be influenced by political considerations;

III. The Special Fund shall be administered by a Chief Executive Officer and the policy established by an executive body in accordance with such rules and principles as may be laid down by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. The membership of the executive body shall be equally distributed between two groups, one consisting mainly of major contributing countries and the other consisting mainly of less developed countries. Each member of the executive body shall have one vote. Decisions of the executive body on questions of policy, including the allocation of funds, shall require a qualified majority vote.

104.

DEA/11423-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM E-1922

Ottawa, December 11, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. EMERGENCY.

Reference: Your tels 2759 and 2760 Dec 10.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate), London, NATO Paris, Paris (Routine) (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE — ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

We appreciate that the negotiations which were reported in your telegram 2759 are moving into a difficult stage and that it may be impossible for you to report back further in any detail before final positions have to be taken. The position of the Canadian delegation when the final resolution emerges as to whether it is to sponsor, co-sponsor, vote for, or abstain, is a matter for the delegation to decide.

2. Your position will have to be assessed in the light of the two main considerations emphasized in the Cabinet memorandum. The first is that the resolution must be a compromise resolution which is broadly supported. By broadly supported is meant that the resolution must have the support of the leading underdeveloped countries, particularly of Canada's main Asian friends, of the Western European countries which have given support to SUNFED in the past, and of the United States. The second consideration is that suitable organizational arrangements should be made. In this connection the Canadian view might be summed up by saying that, insofar as the World Bank is associated with the management of the Fund, and insofar as the Fund is free from the log-rolling tendencies to which it might be exposed if it were too closely associated with the technical assistance programme, to that degree Canada would have confidence in the arrangements and be prepared to consider making a contribution.

3. In this connection you will be interested in the statement made yesterday before the External Affairs Committee by the Assistant Under-Secretary. This statement was authorized by the Minister. Recapitulating Mrs. Fairclough's remarks before the Second Committee, Mr. Matthews stated that: "Mrs. Fairclough had been authorized to inform the UN that if the USA initiative could be shaped into a generally acceptable proposal to broaden the basis of UN economic aid, and — this is a very important qualification of the Canadian undertaking — if suitable organizational arrangements are made, the Canadian government would give sympathetic consideration to seeking the approval of Parliament for an appropriate contribution." The External Affairs Committee would draw the inference from this statement that we place considerable emphasis on there being suitable organizational arrangements and that the Canadian government's undertaking was clearly conditional on these arrangements being satisfactory to Canada. You may wish to spell out these conditions during the debate to indicate the circumstances under which the Canadian commitment would apply.

4. We are commenting below on some aspects of the draft resolution set out in your telegram 2760. While we appreciate that the drafting may have overtaken some of these comments, they may nonetheless give you some guidance as to how these matters appear to us.

5. In paragraph B.1 we think it would be useful if you continue to press for the phrase "as an adjunct" rather than "as a part of". You could accept the USA suggestion that "in certain basic" be added after "sustained assistance" in this paragraph.

6. In paragraph B.2 we are not clear why there is the reference to "staffing and equipping" of training institutes in a list which is intended to be merely illustrative. This seems to add unnecessary detail to the description of one example of the type of projects to be carried out. We would have thought that staffing of such institutes would be the function of ETAP rather than of the special project programme.

7. Paragraph B.3. This paragraph we feel barely covers our position with regard to the World Bank. If it was weakened in any way we would think that you would find the resolution unacceptable.

8. Paragraph B.4. We think that the reference to the principles set out in the annex might be deleted from this paragraph, as will be clear from our comments below on the annex.

9. Paragraph B.4(c). This is one of two references in the resolution to the extent to which governments would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund. Both of them we feel are undesirable at this stage. We think that many governments, and certainly Canada, would not wish to indicate the extent to which it would contribute to the fund until after the Preparatory Committee reports. We would hope that you could achieve the deletion of at least one reference to this subject, and in any event, provide in this paragraph, if it remains, that the Preparatory Committee should "ascertain the extent to which, and the conditions under which, governments would be willing to contribute to the Special Fund."

10. Paragraph B8. Our comments on this paragraph are set out in paragraph 7 in our telegram E-1891 December 6. Either the Secretary General should be asked to submit his own views, in addition to transmitting the views of the Specialized Agencies, or even better the views of the Specialized Agencies should be evaluated by the Secretary General in his report to the Preparatory Committee. Before proposing this, you should as we suggested seek reasonable informal assurances that the Secretary General's views are likely to reflect the views of de Seynes, who we know is favourable to the Canadian view rather than the views of the technical assistance personnel. It seemed to us unfortunate that paragraph B8 places the Secretary General apparently at the same level as the Heads of the Specialized Agencies.

11. As for Part C we would of course prefer the draft you proposed in your telegram 2759 or the draft set out in your telegram 2760, rather than the USA draft. You should we think continue to press strongly for acceptance by the USA of a draft less patently objectionable than one they themselves propose. The USA draft would give us some difficulty but we think that you should be prepared to accept whatever draft on this contentious point is acceptable to both the USA and to the key western delegations in the SUNFED group.

12. The proposed annex raises much more serious problems than those discussed above. On the solution to these problems will depend on your decision to vote for or abstain with possible withdrawal of Canadian conditional offer of financial contribution. We think there are two positions that the delegation might take on the annex. First, as the most desirable alternative, you should press to have it deleted, using the argument that this is merely an attempt to prejudge the very matters on which the Preparatory Committee should report. You should not hesitate to emphasize to both the SUNFED group and the USA that our undertaking to give sympathetic consideration to making a contribution rests on the Preparatory Committee providing for suitable organizational arrangements, and any attempt to pre-judge this matter at this stage would of course affect this commitment.

13. The second position which you might take, only if you are satisfied that it will be impossible to get this annex deleted, will be to have it written in clearly permissive language. It might begin by some such phrase as "in making its report the Preparatory Committee might pay particular attention to the following principles ...". As to the specific points mentioned in the draft annex we would of course agree that the Special Fund should be a multilateral fund of the UN. However the reference to the sources of the Fund should not refer to sources other than voluntary annual contributions by governments. We accept the provisions set out in Part II of the annex. As for Part III there are real difficulties. You could if necessary agree to some permissive language which suggested that the fund should be administered by a small executive committee of say three members on which it was understood that the IBRD would play a prominent role. Of course if you had firm assurances that the Chief Executive Officer would be a nominee of the World Bank you would wish to accept the present wording but this may be difficult to ensure. As to the executive body you should not agree that it should be established, and if established constituted as provided in the draft annex. For the present we do not wish to prejudge this crucial issue in any way. However, it seems to us that the present proposal does not ensure that the executive body will reflect adequately the views of the major contributors: further, it might well give the Soviet group a deciding voice. You could, however, accept the notion of a qualified majority.

14. Part III of the annex, which should open with some broad permissive language, might thus read as follows: "The Special Fund might be administered by a small executive committee possibly of three members of which one member might be a representative of the World Bank; the executive committee might report to an executive body which would establish policy in accordance with such rules and principles as may be laid down by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. The Preparatory Committee in considering how any executive body might be constituted, should bear in mind the desirability of providing that decisions of the executive body should be by a qualified majority vote.”

15. You will realize from these comments on the annex that as far as the draft before us is concerned we doubt very much whether the delegation should be prepared to vote for a resolution in which this appeared. In pressing for the deletion of the annex or failing that for its appropriate amendment the delegation should not hesitate to indicate that if such an attempt is made to so completely prejudge the outcome of the Preparatory Committee's work on these matters the delegation might feel itself obliged to recommend to the Canadian government that it reserve its position. The USA and the members of the SUNFED group should be left in no doubt that the Canadian commitment made by Mrs. Fairclough depended on suitable organizational arrangements being made (as well as broad support). Mrs. Fairclough made these points clear but they will bear repetition.

16. In the event that the final resolution proposed for the Second Committee includes a mandatory annex with a Part III like the one now before us, you will want to reserve your position and report to us.

105.

DEA/11423-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2809

New York, December 16, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your Tel E-1922 Dec 11.

Repeat Washington (Priority), NATO Paris, Paris, London (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

This message summarizes developments in which our delegation participated in pursuance of the policy laid down in your reference telegram and in the Cabinet memorandum. As you anticipated events on December 13-14 moved very rapidly.

2. Our telegram 2810[†] contains the text of the resolution finally adopted.⁵⁸ In the Committee separate votes were requested by Roumania on behalf of the USSR bloc on the last paragraph of the preamble which recognizes that while long term pledges are desirable some governments are unable to make financial commitments except with the approval of their legislatures and on an annual basis. This paragraph was inserted in the final compromise draft mainly at the request of the USA delegation.

3. Separate votes were also requested on operative paragraph B2 which contains the main elements of the original USA proposal and on operative paragraph B4 which makes reference to the annex. On all these votes the USSR bloc (9 countries) abstained, the remaining delegations present (63) voting in favour.

⁵⁸ Pour le texte final de cette résolution (1219(XII)), voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, douzième session, Supplément N° 18 (A/3805), pp. 15 à 16.

For the final text of this resolution (1219(XII)), see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Twelfth Session, Supplement No. 18 (A/3805), pp. 15-16.

4. The 12 sponsors of the original SUNFED resolution had submitted on December 12 a revised version prepared during the preceding week's negotiations. However, on three points final agreement had not yet been reached. The USA delegation therefore submitted amendments in Document A/C.2/L.360. These amendments which our delegation played a part in preparing were designed to ensure that there could be no misunderstanding concerning the scope of the Fund which was being established. The USA delegation was not able to accept any text which implied that the proposed Special Fund could be interpreted as being SUNFED or was intended by the Assembly to proceed into the field of capital assistance or necessarily to form the organizational basis for an eventual large scale capital aid programme.

5. Two of the USA proposals were acceptable to the SUNFED co-sponsors. One of these included an amendment to which we attach particular importance in the light of the Cabinet memorandum and of your telegram E-1922. This amendment inserted after the word "annex" in operative paragraph B4 the words "and the views and suggestions put forward by governments pursuant to paragraph 7 below." Paragraph 7 requested governments to assist the Preparatory Committee by forwarding their views and suggestions. This amendment, originally suggested by the Canadian delegation, was designed to place the views and suggestions which any government might make before the Preparatory Commission so that the annex, also to be taken into account, had no special status. In accordance with your instructions we were also able to get the original reference to the way in which the Preparatory Committee should consider the annex modified to language which in our view was "permissive".

6. The USSR objected in the Committee (and in plenary) to the first paragraph of the annex, this paragraph raises the currency utilization question with which you will be familiar from previous TAC, ECOSOC and Second Committee debates. In response to a question from the delegate of Roumania, the Chairman stated that no vote was needed on the annex. The delegate of the USSR then asked for a separate vote on the reference to the annex in operative paragraph 4 with the result reported above. We believe that our delegation was fully protected in relation to the suggestions contained in the annex not only by our own amendment but by the Chairman's interpretation which appears in the report of the Committee.

7. At a late stage in a meeting on December 13, the delegation of Iran suggested wording which would amend operative paragraph B1 to read "there shall be established as an expansion of the existing technical assistance and development activities of the UN ...".

8. This proposal was accepted by the delegation of India on behalf of the eleven sponsors and by the delegation of the USA which then became a co-sponsor. Canada and France were added as co-sponsors just prior to the adoption of this resolution unanimously by the Second Committee.

9. The delegations of India, Yugoslavia and Ceylon in explaining their votes accepted the position with regard to the Special Fund contained in the resolution but expressed their regret that it had not been possible to proceed with the establishment of SUNFED during the Eleventh Assembly. The USSR and some of its satellites emphasized that in their view the resolution was not satisfactory since it represented a much less ambitious proposal than the SUNFED concept originally envisaged. The Canadian delegation intervened on an explanation of vote to refer once again to the terms of the undertaking contained in Mrs. Fairclough's speech and to emphasize the assumptions on which that undertaking had been made. The first of these was that there should be general agreement. The Canadian Delegation had indicated its willingness to co-sponsor the compromise draft on the understanding that this position had to a large extent been achieved. The second condition on which the Canadian government would be willing to consider making an appropriate contribution was that suitable organizational and administrative arrangements would be made. We indicated that we attached importance to the amendment which had been made to operative paragraph B4 ensuring that the annex attached to the resolution would have no different status to the views and suggestions which governments might put forward as anticipated by operative paragraph 7.

10. In the plenary on December 14, the delegation of France urged support for the practical decision which the Second Committee had taken. The UK delegation expressed appreciation for the "modest, constructive and practical programme which had been started after the frustrations of past years." The UK reiterated their view that resources of sufficient magnitude for SUNFED could not be conceived without international supervised disarmament. However, the UK undertook to "play its full part in the Preparatory Committee", and the government of the UK stood ready "when circumstances allow" to make a contribution to the special fund. The USSR delegation reiterated its previous stand on SUNFED and in particular its opposition to the first paragraph of the annex. An exchange between the delegations of the USA and India followed which, while moderately phrased, suggested that some differences of opinion still remained as to the amount of money which would be required to begin an expansion of the activities of the UN into the field of capital development. The resolution was adopted unanimously and the following 16 countries appointed to the Preparatory Commission: USSR, USA, UK, Canada, France, The Netherlands, Japan, Denmark, India, Pakistan, Egypt, Ghana, Yugoslavia, Mexico, Peru and Chile.

11. It is difficult for the delegation to assess its own role in the achievement of the compromise resolution adopted. However, the greater part of the language in the compromise text was the result of consultations in which we played an active part. In the informal meetings which were held, we were able to exercise an important moderating influence. We believe the final text meets the situation envisaged by the Cabinet memorandum and that our freedom of action to press for a satisfactory relationship between the IBRD and the new agency has been secured. We also believe, on the basis of evidence now available, that enough other delegations hold similar views to make it possible for the Preparatory Committee to suggest organizational machinery acceptable to us.

12. It will not be possible for delegations to urge the establishment of SUNFED in the future with anything like the same degree of success as at previous sessions of ECOSOC and the General Assembly. We consider also that the action taken at this session of the Assembly could result in a useful and practical extension of UN activities in the field of economic development. In any case, it has at long last been possible for the USA, Canada, France and The Netherlands to co-sponsor a resolution on this subject with the underdeveloped countries.

13. The USA delegation, as we understand, emphasized to Washington the value which this practical UN action may have in relation to the discussion at the NATO summit conference in Paris. According to The Netherlands delegation, thus UN action would seem to suggest one of the best ways NATO country members can cooperate in providing economic assistance to less developed countries.

14. We will forward, as soon as possible, a fuller and final report by bag.†

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II
 COMITÉ PRÉPARATOIRE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE

106.

DEA/11423-6-40

*Le sous-ministre adjoint du ministère des Finances
 au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
 Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Finance,
 to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

BY HAND

Ottawa, February 4, 1958

Attention: Mr. L.E. Couillard⁵⁹

Dear Sir:

ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE UN SPECIAL PROJECTS FUND

On December 18th, during my absence from Ottawa, Mr. Pollock convened an informal meeting to discuss the proposed United Nations Special Projects Fund. Although it was not possible to bring together all the officials in Ottawa who would normally be concerned with this matter, the meeting was able to focus attention on the main organizational problems to be examined by the Preparatory Committee and to suggest tentative Canadian positions during these discussions. In the time that has elapsed since the meeting, we have endeavoured to develop ideas based on the discussions which we have incorporated in the attached paper and which might form the basis for further inter-departmental consideration of this matter.

Mr. Pollock is away this week and I will be away next week. I would therefore suggest that a meeting be held in my office early in the week starting February 16th.⁶⁰

The attached paper has not been approved by the Minister. However, I have sent him a copy and he may wish to suggest some changes.

Yours very truly,

A.F.W. PLUMPTRE

⁵⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
 to see & retain. (I am holding a second copy) R. G[rey]

⁶⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
 date not yet fixed — but according to Hadwen, the sooner the better. R. G[rey]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du ministère des FinancesMemorandum by Department of Finance

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], January 31, 1958

THE UNITED NATIONS SPECIAL PROJECTS FUND

I. Functions of the Special Projects Fund

1. The Special Projects Fund should finance in less developed countries special technical assistance projects in the fields and of the types described below.⁶¹

II. Resources of the Special Projects Fund

2. All expenses of the Special Projects Fund should be financed from voluntary annual contributions from member governments. Contributions should be pledged, but not paid, nine to twelve months in advance of the financial year in respect to which they are pledged.

3. Contributions to the budget should normally be in the form of convertible currencies. (The provisions respecting contributions which apply to the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance might be adapted to the Special Projects Fund.)

III. Method of Disbursing the Special Projects Fund's Resources

4. Assistance given by the Special Projects Fund should be in the form of grants.

IV. Structure of the Special Projects FundA. Membership

5. Participation in the Special Projects Fund, either as a donor or recipient, should be open to any state which is a member of the United Nations or of one of the specialized agencies of the United Nations.

B. The Special Projects Committee

6. The Special Projects Committee should be composed of eighteen members elected by the General Assembly for three years, one-third of the members being elected each year.⁶² In the first instance, one-third of the members should be elected for one year, one-third for two years, and one-third for three years. Retiring members should be eligible for re-election. Representatives of the Specialized Agencies could be invited to attend meetings as observers; but they would not have the right to vote.

7. The membership of the Committee should be equally distributed between two groups, one consisting of major contributors and the other of countries electing to receive aid from the Special Projects Fund. Each member should have one vote. In addition, a representative of the country in whose territory a project is located or of the group of countries for whose immediate benefit a project is undertaken should also sit in the Committee and have the right to vote when that project is considered by the Committee.

⁶¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This is the way UN Sec Gen. Staff wish to approach the problem — i.e. define projects first. [R. Grey]

⁶² Note marginale :/Marginal note:

IBRD prefer no Committee — SPP would report back to ECOSOC — that seems to me quite impractical. [R. Grey]

8. Decisions of the Committee on questions of policy, including the approval of projects, should require [12] votes when the country in which a project is located or when the group of countries directly interested in a project is already represented in the Committee; in other cases, such decisions should require 13 votes.

C. The Special Projects Board

9. The Special Projects Board should be composed of a representative⁶³ of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, a representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Chairman of the Technical Assistance Board.⁶⁴ The representative of the I.B.R.D. shall be Chairman of the Special Projects Board and Executive Director of the Fund.⁶⁵ He shall be an ex officio member of the Special Projects Committee without, however, having the right to vote in the Committee. (Consideration should also be given to having him act as Chairman of the Special Projects Committee.)

D. The Executive Director

10. The Executive Director should be a high official of the International Bank seconded to the Special Projects Fund on a continuing basis. He shall also act as Chairman of the Special Projects Board.⁶⁶

V. Functions of the Organs of the Special Projects Fund

A. The Special Projects Committee

11. The main functions of the Special Projects Committee should be:

(a) to keep under review the general policies, rules and regulations established by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and, taking into account the advice of the Special Projects Board, to recommend to these two bodies any changes in these policies, rules and regulations, and to submit to them an annual report on the operations of the Special Projects Fund;

(b) to review projects which the Special Projects Board has recommended;

(c) to approve those projects which, it concludes, the Special Projects Fund should and can finance;⁶⁷

(d) to review progress achieved in implementing the projects financed by the Special Projects Fund with a view to ensuring that they are carried out in accordance with the general policies, rules and regulations laid down by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

(e) to review the progress reports submitted to it by the Special Projects Board.

B. The Special Projects Board

12. The Special Projects Board should not be responsible for the day-to-day operations of the Fund.⁶⁸ Its main functions should be:

⁶³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Who would instruct him? [L. Couillard]

⁶⁴ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

or possibly a rep. of ECOSOC? [R. Grey]

⁶⁵ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This is really straining — we will have to be prepared to back away. [R. Grey] ⁶⁶ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Where w[ould]d the IBRD's influence come from? [L. Couillard]

⁶⁷ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Can they initiate & approve? — see 16 below [R. Grey]

⁶⁸ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

? of the projects [L. Couillard]

(a) to examine the technical, economic and financial aspects of each project submitted to the Special Projects Fund⁶⁹ and, when necessary, refer such projects for detailed examination and advice to the I.B.R.D., or, if this is inappropriate,⁷⁰ to one of the other specialized agencies of the U.N.;

(b) to submit for concurrence⁷¹ to the Special Projects Committee recommendations on each approved project including recommendations on the best way of carrying the projects and on the conditions which should be imposed on the requesting country as a condition of Fund financing;⁷²

(c) to keep under review the progress of the projects financed by Special Projects Fund and to submit periodically progress reports on these projects to the Special Projects Committee.

C. The Executive Director

13. The Executive Director⁷³ should be responsible to the Special Projects Board for the day-to-day operations and general management of the Special Projects Fund. Among other things, his functions should include the preparation of the administrative budget of the Special Projects Fund, staff matters, the processing of applications, overseeing the execution of agreements between the Special Projects Fund and the recipients of the Fund aid.

VI. Allocation of the Resources of the Special Projects Fund

14. The main criterion which the Special Projects Fund should apply in allocating its resources should be the soundness of the projects. However, over a period of years, it should strive also to allocate its resources on a reasonable geographical basis.⁷⁴

VII. Procedures

A. Applications for Assistance

15. Applications for assistance should be submitted directly to the Special Projects Fund. In processing the applications, the Special Projects Board should decide whether it requires the assistance and advice of the I.B.R.D. or, in appropriate cases, of other⁷⁵ specialized agencies of the United Nations. Should the Board decide that an application does not warrant further examination, it should inform the Special Projects Committee that the project is unacceptable and that it should be rejected or withdrawn by the applicant. Should the Board decide that a project deserves further examination, it would consult with the I.B.R.D., and/or other specialized agencies in appropriate cases, on the arrangements for implementation. In general, any project involving capital expenditure or the purchase of ⁶⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

who is this? [L. Couillard]

⁷⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
drafting [R. Grey]

⁷¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
sec 11.c? [R. Grey]

⁷² Note marginale :/Marginal note:
terms and conditions under which the Fund will fin[ance] the project. [L. Couillard]

⁷³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
IBRD [R. Grey]

⁷⁴ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
country? [L. Couillard]

⁷⁵ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
drafting [R. Grey]

large quantities of equipment should be referred⁷⁶ to the I.B.R.D. The I.B.R.D. should also have primary responsibility for multi-purpose projects. Other specialized agencies should be invited, as required, to collaborate in projects submitted to the Bank and to undertake other projects within their specific sphere of responsibility. In the case of projects not falling within the specific responsibility of the UN TAA or a specialized agency, the appropriate agency should be the I.B.R.D.⁷⁷

16. After completing its consultations with other agencies, the Special Projects Board may include the project in the programme recommended to the Special Projects Committee. In the case of a favourable Board recommendation, the Committee may accept or reject the recommendations of the Board. In the case of an unfavourable recommendation, the Committee would be informed of the reasons for rejection but would not have authority to reconsider the proposal.⁷⁸ A member could, however, resubmit a rejected proposal at a later date, provided it can satisfy the Board that it has overcome or eliminated the factors leading to initial rejection.

B. Time of Meetings

17. The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairman to review applications submitted. The Board shall inform member states of the latest date at which applications must be submitted in order to permit consideration within a specified programme.⁷⁹

18. The Committee shall meet twice a year to review programme recommendations and receive progress reports from the Special Projects Board on approved projects. At one of these meetings a broader general policy review shall be undertaken in order to permit⁸⁰ annual reports to be submitted to the summer session of ECOSOC.

C. The Execution of Projects

19. The Special Projects Fund should employ on a fee basis (based on estimated cost of participation) the services of the specialized agency selected in accordance with paragraph 15 to act as its agent in the execution of a project. Normally, the same specialized agency that was chosen to examine a project should also be hired as agent.

20. The same procedures as are applied by the I.B.R.D. should apply to capital expenditures, large expenditures on equipment and the hiring of a firm to carry out a survey. The same procedures as are applied by the Expanded Programme should apply to the hiring of experts. Agreement shall be reached prior to inauguration of a project on the nature and extent of further financial assistance to be provided out of the Special Projects Fund to cover any running operational expenses.⁸¹

⁷⁶ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
? [L. Couillard]

⁷⁷ Note marginale :/Marginal note: awkward [R. Grey]

⁷⁸ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
sec 11 c [R. Grey]

⁷⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
? [L. Couillard]

⁸⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
prepare [L. Couillard]

⁸¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This is pretty idealistic — our C[olombo] Plan experience, and Canadian experience generally, would suggest that this cannot be done. [R. Grey]

VIII. Staffing

21. The Special Projects Fund should, in the examination and execution of projects, rely to the fullest extent practicable on the facilities and staff of the International Bank and other⁸² specialized agencies. As much as possible, it should strive to obtain from the specialized agencies, on a reimbursement basis, the services of particular experts for particular projects. It should also have a small clerical and administrative staff of its own plus 10 or 12 general experts to advise the Special Projects Board on reports received from the specialized agencies, to make field visits, etc.

107.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to United Nations*

TELEGRAM E-352

Ottawa, March 11, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington (OpImmediate), London (Priority) (Information).
By Bag Geneva from London.

UN SPECIAL PROJECTS FUND

Following is the text of a memorandum of instructions for the Canadian Delegation to the Preparatory Committee — U.N. Special Projects Fund. Text Begins:

General Objectives

In accordance with the Cabinet's directive on the establishment of the United Nations Special Projects Fund, the Canadian Delegation should be guided by the following general objectives:

- (a) the proposals to be drawn up by the Preparatory Committee should have the broad support of both the major donor and the major recipient countries;
- (b) the organization of the Special Fund should be such as to differentiate it from the expanded programme of technical assistance;
- (c) the organizational and administrative arrangements of the Fund should be such as to lead to the selection of sound projects and to their careful and economic execution.

2. In connection with the third general objective, the delegation should try to ensure that:

- (a) the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development has an important role and, if possible, a decisive role, in the selection of projects to be financed by the Fund;
- (c) the organization of the Fund, and in particular, the voting arrangements, provide for an ultimate control or veto power in the hands of the major contributing countries.

The Views of the Secretary-General

3. The paper prepared by the Secretary-General (A/AC.93/L2) provides a satisfactory basis for initiating discussion in the Preparatory Committee. However, a number of points

⁸² Note marginale :/Marginal note:
drafting [R. Grey]

in the paper require clarification and elaboration; others are not entirely consistent with our general objectives. These points are discussed below under the following headings; the Executive Board, the Executive Officer, the Joint Advisory Committee, relationship with Specialized Agencies, and scope of operations.

The Executive Board

4.(a) The Canadian Delegation should press strongly for the establishment of a new inter-governmental body (the Executive Board) to govern the Special Fund.

(b) It should also press strongly for the equal representation of donors and recipients on the Executive Board and for a voting procedure based on a qualified (two-thirds) majority.

(c) It should strongly oppose giving the Executive Board power to initiate projects and programmes. The power to initiate projects should be the exclusive right of governments and projects should be submitted directly by governments. The Executive Board, however, should be empowered to reject recommendations on projects submitted to it.

5. The delegation should resist proposals to entrust the supervision of the Special Fund to the Technical Assistance Committee. Such an arrangement would entail three serious disadvantages:

(a) by identifying the Special Fund with, rather than differentiating it from, the expanded programme of technical assistance, use of the Special Fund to contain the pressures for SUNFED would be seriously hampered and SUNFED could soon become an issue again;

(b) it would tend to reduce the role and the effectiveness of the IBRD in both the selection and execution of projects;

(c) it would make it extremely difficult to provide that the Board should represent donors and recipients equally and that the decisions of the Board should be taken by a qualified majority.

6. The delegation should bear in mind that departments concerned might be prepared to consider a change in the position as to the establishment of a new and separate inter-governmental body to deal with special projects, as outlined above, should it develop that the USA is completely unable or unwilling to support the Special Fund in terms of two separate inter-governmental bodies, one for the Special Fund and one for the expanded programme. A single inter-governmental body could be accepted only if agreement was reached on the three points mentioned in paragraph 4 above. Further, departments would wish to be satisfied that representatives on the single inter-governmental body would have the technical qualifications to deal with the problems arising out of the operations of the fund.

7. There are other points of importance relating to the Executive Board. It would be desirable to introduce an element of continuity by having the terms of membership on the Board last three years with one-third of the members retiring each year. The delegation may also propose that the members of the Board should be elected by the General Assembly, although the election of members of ECOSOC would be acceptable. The general policies of the Fund will be established by the General Assembly and ECOSOC. However, the Board should be empowered to recommend, in the light of experience, changes in these policies and in the rules governing the Fund's operations.

The Chief Executive Officer

8. The general objective of establishing a close relationship between the Special Fund and the International Bank would be advanced if the Chief Executive Officer was to be a high official of the Bank seconded to the Fund. The delegation should explore this idea in private to find out whether it is generally acceptable and whether an informal understanding on it can be reached. It should not press it, however, either in private or in public as it might prove controversial and mar from the outset the relationship between the Fund and the Bank.

9. The day-to-day operations of the Fund should lie in the hands of the Chief Executive Officer working in close collaboration with the Joint Advisory Committee. He should therefore be given greater independence of action than is contemplated in the Secretary-General's memorandum. In particular, he should be given substantial discretionary authority in dealing with the representatives of potential recipient governments, particularly in the initial investigation of projects and proposals which have not yet been formally submitted to the Fund for financing.

10. When a project has been formally submitted to the Fund the Executive Officer should be obliged to seek the views of the Joint Advisory Committee before making any recommendations to the Executive Board. If projects which were not unanimously approved by the Advisory Board could not be forwarded to the Board except for information purposes, the Fund would be less likely to finance projects which are not sound. The delegation should explore the acceptance of such a rule by the Preparatory Committee. If the rule proves unacceptable, the delegation should insist as a minimum that in all cases the Executive Officer should report the views of the Advisory Committee in making his recommendations to the Board.

11. The delegation might put forward the view that the Executive Officer should be Chairman of the Inter-Governmental Board, as is the case in the World Bank, although it might concede that the Chairman should be elected by the Board from among its own members.

Joint Advisory Board

12. We do not consider it essential that members of the Joint Advisory Board should attend meetings of the Executive Board; indeed the International Bank may object to such an arrangement.

13. As pointed out in paragraph 10 above the delegation should explore the possibility of placing an absolute or limited veto power in the hands of the Joint Advisory Board.

Relationship with the Specialized Agencies

14. The delegation should press for considerable independence for the special fund vis-à-vis the Specialized Agencies. It should also bear in mind the need to give the World Bank as important a role as possible in the selection and execution of projects. It will find guidance on both these points in the paper prepared by the Department of Finance, copies of which have been sent to New York. The same paper contains guidance on the related question of procedure.

Scope of Operations

15. The delegation should bear in mind the desirability of concentrating the Fund's limited resources on projects which are most likely to further the economic development of recipients by examining areas of potential investment suitable for private or public capital. Subject to this general limitation, the delegation should favour a fairly broad scope of operations for the Fund. In general, it should resist attempts to limit the scope of the operations of the Special Fund to forms of technical assistance. Text Ends. Message Ends.

108.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 359

New York, May 8, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

FINAL REPORT OF THE MEETINGS OF THE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE OF THE SPECIAL FUND

Enclosed is the report of the Canadian Delegation to the Meetings of the Preparatory Committee of the Special Fund. This report follows the pattern discussed with Mr. Pollock while he was in New York. We would be prepared to provide further information in respect of any particular point either in the report of the Canadian Delegation or in the report of the Preparatory Committee which you might find necessary.

C.S.A. RITCHIE

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

RapportReport

CONFIDENTIAL

REPORT ON THE MEETINGS OF THE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE OF THE SPECIAL FUND

The Canadian Delegation to the Preparatory Committee of the Special Fund consisted of Mr. S. Pollock, Representative, with Mr. Rodney Grey and Mr. J.G. Hadwen as Advisers. Unfortunately Mr. Pollock and Mr. Grey were both obliged to leave New York before the conclusion of the Preparatory Committee's work. This report is, therefore, subject to the additional comments and changes which they might wish to make. The Canadian Delegation's instructions for these meetings are contained in Department of Finance paper dated January 31, 1958 "The United Nations Special Projects Fund"⁸³ and Ottawa telegrams E-328 of March 6† and E-352 of March 11, (the latter containing the text of a memorandum of instructions for the Canadian Delegation). These instructions were amplified by telephone as the meetings progressed.

Telegram E-352 sets out the three general objectives which the Canadian Delegation was instructed to pursue. This report will consist of an analysis of the extent to which the Delegation was successful in achieving these objectives together with a description of the specific problems which can be expected to arise in ECOSOC and in the General Assembly before the Fund is established and in the Governing Council after its establishment. No effort is made to describe in detail the sometimes lengthy negotiations which were conducted on the important issues.

⁸³ Voir la pièce jointe au document 106.

See the enclosure to Document 106.

Section I — Objective A

“The proposals to be drawn up by the Preparatory Committee should have the broad support of both major donor and major recipient countries.” It is difficult to indicate categorically whether this objective has been achieved and the Canadian authorities may not have a clear understanding of the consequences of establishing the Special Fund until after the 13th General Assembly or even later. However, the report of the Preparatory Committee was adopted with a minimum of reservations by members of the Committee. The Soviet Union, as expected, made quite substantial reservations but presumably this need not concern us very greatly unless the Soviet position affected many of the Delegations from the less developed countries. The Indian and Yugoslav Delegations made some reservations principally on the currency utilization question and on language which do not fully accept their proposals for giving the Special Fund some SUNFED — like features. There were other reservations in connection with the role of the General Assembly in selecting the Managing Director and in electing the members of the Governing Council and some minor reservations on procedural points. On balance, however, the report of the Preparatory Committee has the support of the major donor countries (except for the Soviet Union) and of the major recipient countries (except for some expected reservations).

Objective B

“The organization of the Special Fund should be such as to differentiate it from the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance.” In general the organization and operations of the Special Fund are substantially different from the organization and operation of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance. All delegations supported this general objective.

The Special Fund will carry out a programme of economic assistance substantially different from that of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, the projects being larger in size, for longer terms, more concentrated in certain fields and more extensive in nature than the fellowship, scholarship and equipment programmes of the EPTA. The USA Delegation was hard-pressed by the representatives of the less developed countries and the Soviet Union for a complete separation of the Special Fund from the EPTA.

To promote practical procedures, some useful links were established between the two programmes (e.g. on the financial provisions and in the use of field staff). The situation with regard to the formal and organizational relationship between the two programmes is somewhat less satisfactory. In the first place the USA was obliged to insist on the description of this programme as an enlargement of “the scope of the United Nations programmes of technical assistance”. There was a considerable reaction to this position from the less developed countries. The Canadian Delegation both in Committee, and in informal discussions, and directly with the USA Delegation, stated its views which in essence were opposed to the USA position. (For a description of the Canadian Delegation’s viewpoint, see Washington telegram 505 of March 6, 1958,† particularly the memorandum quoted in paragraph 1).

However, the USA after a month of negotiations received firm instructions, which the USA representative frankly placed before the Committee, to disassociate itself from the work of the Preparatory Committee if a statement on the scope of the Special Fund such as that set out above was not included in the report. As the USA representative described it, both the executive and legislative branches of the USA Government took the position that the extent and degree of USA participation in any proposed Fund hinged heavily on this point. The USA Delegation came to an agreement on this subject with the Indian Delegation.

tion in the first place and subsequently with other delegations including most of the less developed countries and it was accepted subsequently by the Committee as a whole.

With regard to the organizational relationship between the Special Fund and the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, the USA was again obliged to insist on some measure of unified governmental control. It was agreed as set out in the Preparatory Committee's report that there would be a separate governing council for the Special Fund. The USA Delegation insisted, however, that principally for purposes of co-ordinating the two programmes, there must be a unified review by ECOSOC of their reports. For ease of reference the following is the text of the relevant paragraph in the Committee's report.

"With a view to facilitating the effective discharge of ECOSOC's responsibilities for formulating general rules and principles for the Special Fund, reviewing its operations and considering our relationships between the Special Fund and EPTA, it was recommended 'that the Economic and Social Council establish a committee of the Council concerning the Special Fund and the EPTA and of such questions relating to their operations as the Council may refer to it.'"

This language leaves open to further negotiation the exact nature of the Committee which ECOSOC would establish. It is possible that by the time this question arises (i.e. the summer of 1959, 28th Session of ECOSOC) the USA may be willing to accept either the Coordination or the Economic Committees of ECOSOC as the appropriate committees for this purpose. The use of the TAC may even be reconsidered. However, it is also possible that the USA will insist on some new additional ad hoc committee of the Council with these responsibilities. This admittedly absurd arrangement was regarded by the USA as the minimum which its delegation could accept. It was necessary for Washington to be able to point to some single governmental body other than the Economic and Social Council itself with responsibilities for both programmes. Members of the Preparatory Committee were willing to accept this USA view which appeared to be a condition of USA participation in the Fund. In general, however, the separate organization which the Special Fund was given is such as to make it possible for the Canadian and other delegations to consider their overall objective of keeping the two programmes distinct as achieved.

Objective C

"The organizational and administrative arrangements should be such as lead to the selection of sound projects and to their careful and economic execution." It will be necessary to study the programme of the Special Fund after its establishment to see whether this objective has been attained. However, the proposals contained in the report of the Preparatory Committee appear, on the basis of experience with other programmes, to make possible the successful operation of the Special Fund.

The Canadian Delegation took the lead in negotiating the establishment of a consultative board to advise the Managing Director composed of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Executive Chairman of the TAB and the President of the IBRD, or their designated representatives. In this way the advice and assistance of the IBRD will be available to the Special Fund. The Canadian Delegation was also able to secure arrangements (principally through informal discussions) for consultation between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the IBRD in selecting the Managing Director. The representatives of the IBRD in New York and Washington were also consulted from time to time in order to ensure that insofar as possible the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee took the views and positions of the IBRD into account.

There was some opposition from the Soviet Union and some of the less developed countries to an association of the IBRD with this new programme. The Canadian Delegation tion was successful, however, in arguing that the association of the IBRD brought substantial benefits in terms of expert advice and also in terms of promoting possible capital assistance as a result of the operations of the Special Fund.

While the report of the Preparatory Committee appears to take into account our views on the relationship of the Special Fund to the IBRD, it is nevertheless important to ensure that within its terms of reference the Special Fund develops along lines which will encourage IBRD cooperation.

Issues Which May Arise in the Economic and Social Council and in the General Assembly.

1. There will be the usual political objections by the Soviet Union and like-minded governments to the usual provisions concerning membership and participation in the new programme which is limited to "States Members of the United Nations or of the Specialized Agencies, or of the International Atomic Energy Agency." These objections will be defeated on the usual voting pattern unless there is some change in the General Assembly's consideration of issues concerning the representation of China, East Germany, etc.

2. It is unlikely, but there may be objections to the proposed "Committee of the Council," on which the USA insisted, as described above. Presumably Canadian Delegations would not oppose this provision.

3. There will also be various suggestions concerning the authority of the General Assembly in respect to the Special Fund. The under-developed countries prefer the General Assembly as the authority for holding elections, considering reports, etc., since the Assembly gives them a greater voting control. The developed countries and contributors prefer ECOSOC in which there is a better balance, or the Governing Council in which there is an equal balance between donors and receivers. This issue may, therefore, arise in ECOSOC and in the General Assembly on a number of points connected with the establishment of the Special Fund.

4. There may also be opposition to the provision for equal representation and to the requirement for two-thirds majority vote but these provisions have been given general support by the under-developed countries both during the 12th General Assembly and the meetings of the Preparatory Committee.

5. The Soviet Union will make a number of objections to the proposed organization of the Fund in addition to the political ones already mentioned.

(a) The Soviet Union will object to any relationship between the EPTA and the Special Fund (this position is deliberately designed to aggravate difficulties between the USA and less developed countries).

(b) The USSR will object to the fact that industrialization has not been given any special emphasis in the work which the Special Fund will conduct.

(c) The USSR will object to any references to the use of private consultations or firms by the Special Fund (on grounds of Marxist economic principles).

(d) The Soviet Union will object to almost any provision concerning currency utilization.

(e) The Soviet Union will object to any statement prohibiting contributions in the form of goods and services rather than in currency.

(f) The Soviet Union will also object to any provisions which appear to call for any Soviet financial contribution.

6. There will be continued differences of opinion concerning the "independence" of the Special Fund. Some delegations would like to see the Special Fund "independent" even of the United Nations. The Canadian Delegation has endeavoured to ensure that particularly in regard to the financial provisions the Special Fund is governed by General Assembly financial regulations.

7. The U.K. will continue to object to any references in the report which appear to envisage or call for substantial financial contributions.

8. The Specialized Agencies have in general accepted the principle that they will not have the same control over expenditures under the Special Projects Fund as they do over EPTA. However, suggestions may be made for increasing the significance of the role which the Specialized Agencies play in the operation of the Special Fund beyond the provisions contained in the report of the Preparatory Committee. Such efforts will presumably be resisted by Canadian Delegations.

9. The IMF will presumably continue to object to the fact that the Special Fund and its Managing Director have similar names to the IMF and its Managing Director. The Canadian Delegation suggested that the authorities of the two programmes should make arrangements so that confusion and uncertainty could be avoided. The USA may, however, suggest that the Special Fund be called "The Special Programme for Under-Developed Regions" (SPUR) which is a Cabot Lodge proposal designed to give the Fund sex appeal publicity-wise in the USA. This proposal has not been greeted by much enthusiasm since there is emotional content for the SUNFED supporters involved in the use of the term "Special Fund".

10. There may be differences concerning the choice of a Managing Director. The USA is now pushing at the official level, John Davis, the unsuccessful USA candidate for the post of Director General of FAO. It will be recalled that Mr. Davis withdrew in favour of Mr. Sen the present Director General. There does not appear to be much enthusiasm in New York for Mr. Davis. Other names mentioned in this connection are Mr. C.V. Narasimham, Executive Secretary of ECAFE, who may not be available; Mr. Paul Hoffman, who would be popular and may be interested. Martinez-Cabanas, who is presently Deputy Director General of UNTAA and who is believed to have the strong support of the Latin American delegations. Some Canadian names have even been mentioned, for example, that of Mr. J.J. Deutsch. Dr. Hugh L. Keenleyside's name has also been mentioned since he is due to retire shortly as Director General of UNTAA. Should the Canadian authorities have any views on this subject it would be useful if they would communicate it to the Secretary-General at an earlier stage.

11. There may be a series of proposals designed to change the formula on the convertibility of contributions contained in the Preparatory Committee report. (The Canadian Delegation was active in negotiating this text). In the first place the less-developed countries would like to be exempted from any provisions concerning the transferability of the currencies of any contributions they might make. The Soviet Union would like to be able to change the system of contributions to suit its own purposes as set out above. Presumably the present formula should be defended by Canadian delegations even though it does not go as far as we would have liked towards convertibility.

12. The Governing Council will have a series of decisions to make in respect of the organization of its Secretariat and the detailed procedures to be used in establishing the programme.

13. The Yugoslav Delegation has suggested on a number of occasions that unless a substantial volume of money is collected for the Special Fund and for the first year of its operation it might not be worthwhile to establish the Fund at all. This position may cause difficulties during the Thirteenth General Assembly.

14. Another and probably the most difficult difference between delegations will arise in connection with the financial relationship between EPTA and the Special Fund. Most delegations have agreed that the establishment of the Special Fund should not necessarily mean a reduction in the size of EPTA programme or the stabilization of the EPTA at a relatively lower level. However, no delegation has yet brought forward any specific proposals in this connection. It is probable that there will be discussions between delegations prior to the Thirteenth General Assembly. It is believed that the U.S.A. will make its own pledge in terms which will allow some flexibility in its support for the Special Fund and for the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance and some switching in the proportion of its contribution to these two programmes.

15. A detailed description of the lengthy discussion which took place as the report was adopted is contained in A/AC.93/Sr 18, 19 and 20. The final report which to a considerable extent is self-explanatory is contained in Document E/3098. Attached as Appendix I to this report is United Nations Press Release EC/1810† which gives a useful summary of the report.

In general the report of the Preparatory Committee has had a very favourable reception amongst delegations in New York.

It is also possible that the report will not be attacked in ECOSOC or the General Assembly. It is an agreed document supported by all delegations except the Soviet Union. It is to be hoped that the nature of the report will be such as to promote substantial contributions.

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III

VINGT-SIXIÈME SESSION DU CONSEIL ÉCONOMIQUE AND SOCIAL TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

109.

DEA/5475-DS-44-40

Le chef de la délégation à la vingt-sixième session du Conseil économique et social au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chairman, Delegation to Twenty-Sixth Session of Economic and Social Council, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

LETTER NO. 497

Geneva, August 5, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

FINAL REPORT — ITEM 4 — ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

Attached are four copies of the Final Report of the Canadian Delegation to ECOSOC on Agenda Item 4 — Economic Development of Under-Developed Countries. Also attached are copies of the relevant documents.†

WALLACE NESBITT

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Rapport de la délégation à la vingt-sixième session du Conseil économique et social Report of Delegation to Twenty-Sixth Session of Economic and Social Council

CONFIDENTIAL

[Geneva], August 4, 1958

ITEM 4

FINAL REPORT

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

The report of the Preparatory Committee on the Special Projects Fund (E-3074) and Secretariat studies on (a) the international flow of private capital (E-3128), (b) international Tax Problems (E/3074) and (c) international economic assistance to the under-developed countries (E-3131) were submitted to the Council as a basis for discussion on economic development.

2. In the earlier opening debate in Plenary on the "world economic situation" most delegations had referred to the need for assistance to the under-developed countries and it was evident that the debate on Item 4 would be concentrated on discussion of the adequacy of the proposed Special Fund as an instrument for meeting these needs. Accordingly, before commencement of the debate in Plenary on Item 4 the Canadian Delegation initiated discussion with other interested delegations to consider the steps essential to secure adoption of the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee.

3. At preliminary meetings representatives of the United States, United Kingdom, France, Canada and the Netherlands agreed that our primary efforts should be directed to ensuring that the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee are adopted without change. It was agreed that Assembly action to this end would undoubtedly be facilitated by a Council recommendation. Accordingly, the Secretariat was requested to prepare a resolution setting forth the main recommendations of the Preparatory Committee. It was further agreed that this resolution should form an annex to a covering ECOSOC resolution by which the Assembly would approve the recommendations and invite member states to make appropriate contributions. At this point other members of ECOSOC which had also participated in the work of this Preparatory Committee were invited to participate in private discussion of the annex and the covering resolution.

4. In this group the annex prepared by the Secretariat was approved with minor changes but considerable difficulty was experienced in arriving at agreement on the exact character of the covering resolution. Initially this difficulty was limited to a single paragraph of the draft resolution and arose from the desire of the Netherlands, Yugoslavia and others to introduce a paragraph which would give the impression that the Special Projects Fund is the forerunner of SUNFED. Although the United States recognized the possibility that in due course a Fund for capital development may emerge, the United States and to a lesser extent the United Kingdom were unwilling to accept any language which implied that they have given firm commitments to establish this Fund. In particular the United States contended that any such implication would jeopardize congressional support for the Special Fund. After long and arduous negotiation the United States and Netherlands finally agreed on a paragraph "Noting the conditions envisaged in Part III of General Assembly Resolution 1219 (XII) under which the General Assembly shall review the scope and future activities of the Special Fund and take such action as it may deem appropriate". Once this paragraph, which appears as paragraph 2 of the covering resolution, was approved, the remainder of the resolution was quickly agreed and submitted as Council document E/AC.6/L.228 (attached)† with the Secretariat draft appearing as an annex thereto.

5. While these private discussions were proceeding delegations were participating in the Plenary debate on this item. By agreement the members of the Preparatory Committee, inter alia, stressed their belief that the proposals of the Preparatory Committee represented the best possible compromise arrived at after long and difficult negotiations and that they should receive widespread support. A copy of the Canadian statement† in Plenary is attached.

6. As anticipated all delegations agreed on the need for economic assistance for the under-developed countries. In varying degrees the original sponsors of SUNFED (Netherlands, Yugoslavia and the under-developed countries) expressed regret that it was not possible to proceed with the long discussed SUNFED. However, they welcomed the inauguration of the new Fund. The United States, Canada and the United Kingdom on the other hand emphasized that the inauguration of the new Fund represented an important step forward in the provision of assistance for the under-developed countries. They referred to the long and difficult negotiations leading to the recommendation for the Special Fund and urged unanimous support for the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee.

7. Only the USSR introduced a dissenting note. After a general statement stressing the needs of the under-developed countries and the failure of existing financial agencies, both public and private, to meet these needs, the USSR professed to be distressed because the Council was not proceeding with the immediate establishment of SUNFED. The USSR went on to indicate that certain of the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee should be changed to “improve” the character of the new Fund. Although the USSR did not introduce formal proposals at this stage it was clear that the proposed changes were those on which the USSR had reserved its position during meetings of the Preparatory Committee. The USSR proposed:

(a) that membership in the new Fund should not be limited to the members of the United Nations and the agencies but should be open to all countries (this was clearly intended to cover the People’s Republic of China);

(b) that the President of the International Bank should not be included as a member of the Consultative Board;

(c) that contributions should be accepted from sources other than member states of the United Nations and the specialized agencies;

(d) that the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee on currency of contributions should be set aside in favour of a paragraph which would provide that contributions shall be made in any currency a country may choose.

The Delegations on the Preparatory Committee announced that they were cooperating in preparation of a resolution. When it was ready the Economic Committee was convened and the resolution (under the sponsorship of Canada, Chile, France, Mexico, Netherlands, Pakistan, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia — thereby including all members of the Preparatory Committee on the Council, except the USSR) was introduced by Kaufmann (Netherlands) who had been Rapporteur of the Preparatory Committee. The delegations of the United States, Pakistan, Yugoslavia and France followed to emphasize the wide support for the draft. By agreement, Canada and the other sponsors withheld their comments until the USSR had been given the opportunity to indicate its attitude toward the draft resolution. As anticipated the USSR stated its intention to request modification of the resolution in the way indicated during the statement in the general debate. At this point

Canada, followed by Mexico, made brief interventions pointing out that the new recommendations advanced by the USSR were of the same character as proposals already investigated very fully (and rejected) in the Preparatory Committee. The resolution before the Council represented a carefully balanced compromise which while not completely satisfactory to any single delegation offered an acceptable basis for inauguration of the Fund. The Canadian representative stated, inter alia, that "he considered that all delegations were ready to establish the Fund and if the USSR representative is really anxious to show his cooperation and his desire to make the Fund a success, he could do so by joining with others in accepting the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee and by indicating the contribution which his Government intended to make to the Special Fund. If the USSR representative again advanced the suggestion which had not been acceptable to the Preparatory Committee the Canadian delegate would find it necessary to explain why those suggestions had not been acceptable."

9. Although it seemed possible that the USSR had decided merely to speak for the record, amendments were submitted on all points referred to in its statements (see document E/AC.6/L.229, attached).†

10. In a relatively perfunctory debate it became evident that these amendments would be rejected by large majorities and further appeals were made to the USSR to withdraw its amendments in order to permit a unanimous vote. The USSR insisted on a vote and all the amendments were rejected by very substantial majorities. As far as the Delegation was able to record the votes on each amendment were as follows:

	In Favour	Against	Abstention
First Amendment	4 (USSR, Poland, Yugoslavia and Indonesia)	13	1 (Sudan)
Second Amendment	1 (USSR)	15	2 (including Poland)
Third Amendment	4 (including USSR, Poland and Yugoslavia)	14	0
Fourth Amendment	4 (including USSR, Sudan and Poland)	12	2 (Finland and Costa Rica)

The resolution as a whole then received unanimous support. Following the vote the USSR representative explained that although he had voted for the resolution the final position of his Government would be presented in the General Assembly. A similar explanation was given in Plenary where the resolution was again adopted unanimously.

11. It is evident that the USSR intends to re-open these questions in the General Assembly and the position taken in the Economic and Social Council accurately foreshadows a serious effort to gain wider support for these proposals. Although the member states on the Preparatory Committee, including Yugoslavia, were willing to maintain a common front at the Council, the possibilities for deviation are greater in the Assembly. It will therefore be important for the Canadian and other delegations at the Assembly to ensure that the uncommitted countries receive clear explanations of the nature of the proposed arrangements for establishment of the Special Fund and that they are encouraged to reject proposals for a change in the resolution.

12. A development of the debate on the Special Project Fund which will probably have further repercussions was the submission by the representative of the World Federation of United Nations Associations of "a large number of individuals in the more industrialized countries — to lend to or invest part of their savings in an International Fund or Institution administered by the United Nations and its Specialized Agencies for the purpose of assisting less-developed countries". One of the primary purposes of this proposal was to stimulate interest in the Economic Assistance Programme of the United Nations by giving a large number of small investors all over the world an opportunity to participate in it. In private discussions with the representative of WFUNA proposal the Canadian Delegation suggested it would be wisest to defer introducing the proposal until a practical programme had been worked out for putting it into effect. However, the WFUNA representative apparently had a mandate to submit the scheme at this session of ECOSOC. In introducing it he admitted that there were technical problems of implementation but suggested that one way in which capital could be raised was by issuing bonds at less than the commercial rate and within the revenue from these bonds to the Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

13. The WFUNA proposal was commented on favourably by several delegations in the course of the debate in Economic Committee. The Netherlands, Chile and Pakistan Delegations all expressed the hope that it would be implemented. On the other hand the United Kingdom, while indicating its interest, pointed out that thorough study would be needed to show whether it would work. Since it can be expected that this proposal will be brought up again in the future, probably in a more concrete form, careful consideration should be given to it by the interested Department in Ottawa.

SUBDIVISION IV/SUB-SECTION IV

TREIZIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE
THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

110.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 273-58

[Ottawa], September 26, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

ECONOMIC AID TO UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES
THROUGH THE UNITED NATIONS: THE SPECIAL FUND

The 12th General Assembly approved the establishment of a United Nations Special Fund, in part as an alternative to a much more ambitious proposal for a Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development (SUNFED). Detailed recommendations on the organizational, administrative and financial arrangements of the Special Fund have now been unanimously agreed upon by the members of the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), including the United Kingdom, the United States, France, the USSR and Canada. It is expected that these recommendations will be approved substantially in their present form by an overwhelming majority of the United Nations at the current Assembly and that the Fund will begin operations in 1959.

In the past Canada has supported a Special Fund in principle but has stressed that Canada could not support the actual setting up of the Fund unless the backing of the United Kingdom, the United States and other contributors assured adequate financial and administrative support for the Fund. Originally the sponsors of SUNFED had pressed for a capital aid fund with resources of about $250 million annually; last year the United States advanced a new but related proposal for a Special Fund of a much more modest size, to be devoted to resources surveys, technical training, demonstration projects, etc., rather than to capital aid.

On December 9, 1957, Cabinet authorized the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations General Assembly to take an active role in the debate on this matter and to seek an effective compromise between the SUNFED resolution and the United States proposal for a Special Fund.⁸⁴ The Canadian Delegation was authorized to indicate that if a sound, realistic and broadly acceptable plan emerged from discussions the Canadian Government would give sympathetic consideration to asking Parliament to make an appropriate financial contribution. In due course, a public statement to this effect was given in the Second Committee by the Secretary of State and has been reiterated by Canadian representatives at subsequent international gatherings.

The Canadian Delegation subsequently played an important role in debates and negotiations on the Fund in the United Nations and at meetings of a Preparatory Committee set up by the Assembly. Our Delegation and Delegations of like-minded countries succeeded in having accepted proposals incorporating the minimum objectives set by the Canadian Government. These are the proposals which have recently been approved unanimously by ECOSOC.

The present plans provide that the Fund will concentrate on relatively large projects, so as to avoid undue dispersion of its resources. A target figure of $100 million has been mentioned for the Fund but it is most unlikely that contributions will come close to this amount at least this year. The Fund will be controlled by a Governing Council consisting of eighteen states elected from members of the United Nations and its Specialized Agencies, and will provide for equal representation of economically more developed countries and under-developed countries. Provision has been made for a close working association with the International Bank. Of particular importance to Canada are the provisions that contributions shall be made in currencies "readily usable" by the Fund and that projects will be carried out without interference of any sort from donor countries. Not only is this feature of the Fund necessary for its effective administration but it is also essential to prevent interference by Communist governments. The USSR has only reluctantly agreed to several provisions of the present report and is expected to try to reopen the debate in the 13th Assembly.

A United Nations Pledging Conference will be held during the 13th Assembly, at which members of the United Nations will be invited to indicate the amount of their contributions to the Fund for 1959. In view of the fact that Canada is publicly pledged to make an appropriate contribution if the Fund is set up in a manner acceptable to Canada, and assuming that this condition will be fulfilled at the Assembly, it would seem desirable and important that authority be given for the Canadian Delegation to the 13th Assembly to make a precise pledge as to the contribution Canada will make in the next fiscal year, subject, of course, to the approval of Parliament.

The Canadian contribution should bear some relation to our participation in other comparable voluntary United Nations programmes, in particular to the Expanded Technical Assistance Programme, and also to contributions of other major donor countries. In this connection it should be noted that Canada's contribution to these programmes, in relation to capacity to pay, has been greater than that of the United States. Most of our aid has been concentrated in Commonwealth programmes; assistance through the United Nations is the only form of aid which we offer to other under-developed countries. Thus UN aid is a complement to our own bilateral programmes.

⁸⁴ Le Cabinet s'est penché sur cette question le 29 novembre 1957, et non le 9 décembre 1957. Cabinet dealt with this issue on November 29, 1957, not December 9, 1957.

Last year Canada contributed $2 million to ETAP out of a total budget of about $32 million. The ETAP will probably secure approximately $30 million next year. It is unlikely that the Special Fund will go significantly over that amount this year and it would therefore be appropriate for the Canadian contribution to the Special Fund to be of the same order as our contribution to the ETAP.

According to the latest information, United Kingdom authorities have in mind a contribution of the same proportion of the total Special Fund budget as the United Kingdom contribution to the ETAP bears to the total ETAP budget. This was 7% last year, i.e., $2.24 million. The United States are prepared to give up to $38 million to the ETAP and the Special Fund taken together, on condition that the U.S. contribution is not more than 40% of the total pledge to both programmes. The Netherlands have indicated that they will make a contribution of $2.4 million, while France has mentioned a contribution of the order of $2.78 million. Italy and Japan will each pledge $600,000. The German Delegation has recommended a German contribution of $2.5 million, and is expecting authority to announce a contribution of more than $1.5 million. Although in some cases these pledges are not yet firm, and some are made on a matching basis, there is clear indication that other countries will give effective support to the Fund and, therefore, justify an initial Canadian contribution of $2 million. At the same time it would be prudent for our Delegation to make clear that we are announcing a firm contribution for the first year in order to assist the Fund to be inaugurated on a sound and forward-looking basis, but that our future contributions will be reviewed in the light of the financial response of the full UN membership to the new programme.

It is therefore recommended⁸⁵ that the Canadian Delegation to the 13th General Assembly of the United Nations be authorized to state that, subject to the approval of Parliament, Canada will contribute $2 million (U.S.) to the Special Fund in 1959-60, and that future Canadian contributions will be subject to review and adjustment to take into account the extent to which readily usable contributions substantially exceed or fall below a total budget of $30 million.

[SIDNEY SMITH]

⁸⁵ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 1^{er} octobre 1958.
Approved by Cabinet on October 1, 1958.

111.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1502

New York, September 30, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

SECOND COMMITTEE: SPECIAL FUND

Discussion of the report of the Preparatory Committee is developing much as anticipated in our earlier messages.

2. A number of delegations including our own have considered that if sponsorship of the resolution proposed by ECOSOC were to create divisions in the Committee, it might be better if the ECOSOC resolution already officially before the General Assembly went unsponsored. However, the Pakistan delegate (Mir Khan) took the lead in seeking other sponsors and eventually submitted a draft resolution to the Second Committee (Document A/C.2/L.363). This text reproduced ECOSOC Resolution 692A(XXVI) with the addition of a preambular paragraph proposed by the Netherlands as follows: "Noting the conditions envisaged in Section III of General Assembly Resolution 1219(XII), under which the Assembly shall review the scope and future activities of the Special Fund and take such action as it may deem appropriate." This text was co-sponsored by the following countries: Argentina, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, France, Haiti, Iran, Japan, Laos, Liberia, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Spain, Thailand, Turkey, UK [and] USA.

3. Partly as a reaction to Pakistani leadership and partly out of the desire to maintain leadership on the subject of the financing of economic development, the Indian Delegation took the lead in submitting another draft resolution co-sponsored by Afghanistan, Brazil, Burma, Ceylon, Ethiopia, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Libya, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, United Arab Republic, Yemen [and] Yugoslavia.

4. The India text (see our telegram 1503) contains an enlarged preamble and an operative section which reaffirms rather than notes the provisions in Resolution 1219(XII) concerning future General Assembly discussions of a possible capital aid programme. The Indian text then incorporates the ECOSOC Resolution 692 with two changes, the first being the deletion of the word "possible" from the phrase which refers to review by the Assembly of the scope and future activities of the Special Fund (Section III of Resolution 1219). The Indian Delegation stressed, however, that the main reason for submitting an alternative resolution was the change they proposed in paragraph 13 to substitute the General Assembly for the Economic and Social Council as the body responsible for electing the Governing Council of the Special Fund.

5. While the USA and UK Delegations will strongly oppose the substitution of the General Assembly for ECOSOC as the body which elects the Governing Council, we have been advised in confidence that if the General Assembly is chosen, USA and UK financial support for the new programme would not repeat not be affected.

6. We did not repeat not accept offers of co-sponsorship by both groups because we considered that the basic Cabinet condition of "general acceptability" did not repeat not seem to apply to either text. We also wished to maintain our freedom of action in case amendments are submitted on points which would affect the basis on which we are authorized to reaffirm Canadian support for this programme.

7. Undoubtedly the USSR and possibly other delegations will submit amendments which we will have to strongly oppose in the Committee. However, to judge from the discussions so far, the Preparatory Committee's report seems generally certain of acceptance. The USA and UK Delegations believe it will be possible to reach agreement on the differences in preambular language. It will, however, certainly be necessary to have a vote on the electoral issue. We have already stated informally our preference for ECOSOC and will continue to support the UK and USA Delegations in this respect.

112.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1503

New York, September 30, 1958

UNCLASSIFIED

Reference: Our Tel 1502 Sep 30.

SECOND COMMITTEE: SPECIAL FUND

Following is the text of Indian draft resolution on this subject:

"The General Assembly in conformity with the determination of the UN, as expressed in its Charter, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, and for these ends, to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples, conscious of the particular needs of the less developed countries for international aid in achieving accelerated development of the economic and social infrastructure, recalling its Resolution 1219(XII), further recalling all previous resolutions on the establishment of an international fund for economic development within the framework of the UN, noting the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council Resolution 692(XXVI),

1. Reaffirms the provisions contained in Section III of General Assembly Resolution 1219(XII), under which the Assembly shall review the scope and future activities of the Special Fund and take such action as it may deem appropriate,

2. Commends the Preparatory Committee on its work,

3. Establishes a Special Fund in accordance with the provisions set forth below: The text of these provisions proposed by the sponsors of the joint draft resolution is that contained in the annex to Council Resolution 692 A(XXVI) of July 31, except: paragraph 1, which should read as follows:

"1. Pursuant to the provisions of General Assembly Resolution 1219(XII) and pending a review by the Assembly of the scope and future activities of the Special Fund, as envisaged in Section III of that resolution, the Special Fund shall:" and paragraph 13, which should read as follows:

“13. The states members of the Governing Council shall be elected by the General Assembly from among members of the UN or members of the Specialized Agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency.”

113.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM E-1851

Ottawa, October 2, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel E-1788 Sep 25,† your Tels 1502 and 1503 Sep 30.

SPECIAL FUND

Cabinet has accepted the recommendation set out in our telegram under reference. You therefore have authority to announce Canadian pledge at pledging conference and indicate our intentions to friendly delegations.

2. You should note that it is an essential condition of the Cabinet decision that the proposals embodied in the report of the Preparatory Committee and adopted by ECOSOC should be approved by the Assembly without significant changes. You should not repeat not hesitate to make this clear to other delegations. We would hope that you will be able to use the Cabinet decision to persuade other countries not to water down the Preparatory Committee's report.

3. In this connection we are concerned at reports that immediately following the opening Canadian statement the Yugoslav delegate spoke in terms which would appear to favour a weakening of the provision governing the convertibility and usability of contributions. As you know, the Preparatory Committee's report proposed a provision which is far from satisfactory from the Canadian point of view; it was accepted only because it was clearly impossible to get agreement on a more stringent provision. Any weakening of the present provision would therefore cause us considerable concern. You should therefore resist any such attempts very strongly.

4. As for the question of whether the Governing Council should be elected by ECOSOC or the Assembly, we agree with your position as defined in the last sentence of your telegram 1502.

114.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1620

New York, October 11, 1958

RESTRICTED. PRIORITY.

Repeat Washington (Information).

SECOND COMMITTEE: SPECIAL FUND

Voting on a resolution establishing the Special Fund began on October 10. The Chairman has put forward for the convenience of the Committee a text incorporating the agreed elements of the two resolutions previously submitted.

2. Two amendments have been moved to this text. The first provided for election by the General Assembly rather than ECOSOC of the Governing Council. This amendment was rejected 29 in favour, 46 against, 1 abstention. It is therefore unlikely that this question will be successfully contested in the General Assembly. We were able in informal discussion to assist in supporting ECOSOC as the electoral body.

3. A second amendment has been submitted and is now being discussed in several different forms, each of which would contain a request that governments work towards the fulfilment of the general conditions set out in Section III of Resolution 1219 (XII). It has naturally been difficult to find language in this regard acceptable to the USA and UK, ourselves and less-developed countries. We are assisting in this process with the objective of avoiding a division between the more-developed and the less-developed countries and of preventing so far as possible a situation in which the SUNFED proposals of the past would be revived in a manner which would prejudice the compromise reached last year.

115.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1640

New York, October 15, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 1620 Oct 11.

SECOND COMMITTEE: SPECIAL FUND

Committee action was completed late October 13. We have forwarded by bag (on October 14) copies of the report of the Second Committee on this item. In general the result can be considered satisfactory in terms of Cabinet instructions on the Special Fund. We will be reporting fully but the following information on developments since our telegram 1620 may however be useful to you in dealing with any enquiries on this subject.

2. The delegations led by India continued to insist on language which would at least have constituted an appeal for the creation of conditions under which the General Assembly could reconsider the scope and operations of the Special Fund (provided in Section III of Resolution 1219(XII)) with a view to the eventual establishment of a large-scale UN capital development fund. The first text introduced by the Indian delegation read as follows: "Appeals to member states to work for the speedy establishment of a UN capital development fund." By agreement this text was withdrawn and replaced by a text suggested by Mexico which, as later amended, read as follows: "Appeals to member states to make efforts towards the attainment of these conditions (e.g. those in Section III of 1219) as soon as possible."

3. After consultations in Washington "at the highest level" the USA received firm instructions against any language in the resolution on the Special Fund, even an appeal, which would carry Assembly consideration of this subject beyond Resolution 1219(XII).

4. Our delegation considered both positions somewhat rigid and in keeping with Cabinet instructions worked towards a solution in which there could be general agreement. At one stage we considered putting in an amendment to the resolution (document A/C.2/L.364) before the Committee which would have drawn on the preamble of Resolution 1219. We hoped thus to satisfy the UK and USA as well as the group led by India. Our proposal read as follows: "Urges governments to take action towards the creation of conditions which would facilitate new capital investment of all types, private and public, national and international."

5. On the basis of our draft and of a number of other suggestions being circulated, a further compromise text was prepared reading as follows: "Appeals to member states to lend their full support to the Special Fund and to make appropriate efforts, separately, and jointly through the UN and/or other bodies towards the establishment of conditions which would facilitate the financing of the economic development of the less-developed countries, particularly their economic and social infra-structure."

6. This language was considered by the USA, Indian and Yugoslav delegations and several Latin American delegations, and was accepted at referendum to their respective groups. In the Indian-led group, however, Ceylon, we understand, took the lead in promoting rejection of this text. The Latin American delegations were more willing to support it. So that the Committee would at least be faced with a choice acceptable to the USA, UK, ourselves and a good many of The Netherlands, Italy and France in presenting the compromise text in paragraph 5 above as an amendment. In the final analysis it was agreed not repeat not to put any text on this point to the vote.

7. When the decision to withdraw all texts before the Committee was made we stated our agreement to do so on the condition that the compromise contained in Resolution 1219(XII) remained valid. Earlier in the debate we had indicated that a sharp division in respect of the Special Fund would affect our ability to support it.

8. When the Iraq delegation withdrew the India-Mexican language, he stated that the group of delegations led by India reserved their right to continue a discussion of the financing of the economic development of the less-developed countries at a later stage in the Second Committee's discussions.

9. The Committee then voted as follows using A/C.2/L.364 as the basic text.

1. Preamble, 73 for, 0 against, 1 abstention (Saudi Arabia).

2. From paragraphs 1 to 6 inclusive (the report of the Preparatory Committee as approved by ECOSOC in Resolution 692A), 73 for, 0 against, 1 abstention.

3. Paragraph 7, 54 including Canada for, 0 against, 20 abstentions (including the Soviet bloc, India, Ceylon, Burma and Yugoslavia). This paragraph concerned membership and was voted separately as part of the issue of the representation of China in UN bodies.

4. Paragraph 8 to 12 inclusive, 73 for, 0 against, 1 abstention (Saudi Arabia).

5. Paragraph 13 was put to a roll call vote, 44 including Canada for, 26 against, 4 abstentions. (This paragraph provided for election by ECOSOC of the Governing Council.)

6. Paragraphs 14-44 inclusive, 73 for, 0 against, 1 abstention (Saudi Arabia).

7. Paragraphs 45-56 (excluding paragraph 47), 73 for, 0 against, 1 abstention (Saudi Arabia) (Chairman was confused at this point).

8. Paragraph 47, 52 including Canada for, 0 against, 21 abstentions. (This paragraph concerned the currency in which contributions would be made).

9. The resolution as a whole was adopted 73 for, 0 against, 1 abstention (Saudi Arabia abstained throughout out of pique).

10. In the Assembly the same votes were called for with roughly similar results to those in the Committee (see summary records A/PV/776 also forwarded by bag on October 15). The final vote on the resolution as a whole was 77 for, 0 against, 1 abstention (Saudi Arabia).⁸⁶

11. Dr. Vivian spoke on established Canadian lines in Plenary before the resolution was adopted (copies by bag). The statements of other delegations indicate that some discussion of the financing of economic development through the UN can be anticipated later in this session. We consider that such discussion would have been inevitable whatever resolution was adopted on the Special Fund. We also consider that when it occurs, the western delegations as initiators and supporters of the Special Fund already established, will be in a strong position. As indicated above it should be possible to envisage generally acceptable language along the lines of the amendment we co-sponsored. In any case, the Special Fund has been established with broad support and in a reasonably harmonious atmosphere. (The New York Times of October 15 is somewhat inaccurate and pessimistic on this score.) It has also been established in exactly the terms negotiated in the Preparatory Committee except for two minor linguistic changes. These terms in general meet Canada's position as set down earlier by Cabinet.

12. Dr. Vivian will be announcing Canadian support for the Special Fund on October 16 at the pledging conference as indicated in our telegram 1595 of October 8.† Elections to the Governing Council are likely to be held by ECOSOC on October 23. Canada is certain of one of the nine contributors' seats.⁸⁷

⁸⁶ Pour le texte final de cette résolution (1219(XII)), voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, treizième session, Supplément N° 18 (A/4090), pp. 11-14.

For the final text of this resolution (1219(XII)), see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Thirteenth Session, Supplement No. 18 (A/4090), pp. 11-14.

⁸⁷ Le 23 octobre 1958, le Canada était élu au Conseil d'administration du Fonds spécial pour un mandat d'un an.

On October 23, 1958, Canada was elected to the Governing Council of the Special Fund for a one-year term.

116.

DEA/11423-G-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1706

New York, October 21, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our Tel 1620 Oct 11.

Repeat Washington, London (Information).

PLEDGING CONFERENCE FOR EXPANDED PROGRAMME AND THE SPECIAL FUND

After consultation with the USA and other delegations and the Secretariat the results of the Pledging Conference of October 16 including contributions subsequently made known before October 20 are summarized below.

2. The following totals refer to contributions (including our own) concerning which no repeat no matching formulas or special conditions apply: Special Fund $9,373,622 EPTA $14,621,049.

3. Argentina's contribution of 1.15 percent of the total would amount to roughly $250,000. The contributions of Italy, Sweden and Western Germany which are as yet undivided between the two programmes amount to $1 million, $2,899,671 and $1,666,667 respectively for an aggregate of $5,566,338. It might be reasonable at this stage to assume that of this total $2.9 million would go to ETAP and $2.6 million to the Special Fund. Of the countries as yet uncommitted financially either to ETAP or to the Special Fund, it is considered that $790,000 will be pledged to ETAP and $3.8 million to the Special Fund on the assumption that 1958 contributions to ETAP would remain unchanged and that equivalent amounts would be contributed by countries as yet uncommitted to the Special Fund. This amount of $3.8 million would include a possible contribution of about $1 million from the UK and perhaps $300,000 from Norway. The above, if substantiated, would produce the following results: $18.3 million to ETAP and $16.1 million to the Special Fund for a total of $34.4 million from other countries on which a USA 40 percent matching contribution would amount to $23 million for a final aggregate total of $57.4 million. Although no repeat no official declaration has been made to this effect, it would appear that the USA intends to maintain ETAP's budget at 1958 level, namely $31.3 million. If such were the case the balance of $26.1 million would go to the Special Fund.

4. A record of 76 countries took part in the Pledging Conference of which 71 were able to pledge definite amounts to the Expanded Programme (UN press releases TA/729 and 730 October 16). Only 36 countries were in a position to pledge definite amounts to the Special Fund, while 6 (Turkey, France, Italy, USA, Sweden and Japan) announced contributions on a percentage of the total or a matching basis formula. Bolivia, Burma, Australia, Saudi Arabia, Federation of Malaya, Korea, and Laos stated that they would not repeat not be able to contribute more than a token amount, if any, to the Special Fund this year. 27 countries including the UK, West Germany, Norway, Switzerland, Venezuela, India, Mexico and Argentina will announce their contribution at a later date.

5. As it appears that the UK is seeking election to one of the contributors seats on the Governing Council it is expected that their contribution will be made known before October 23, the date of the election by ECOSOC. The NZ decision to contribute £25,000 to the Special Fund was influenced considerably by advance knowledge of our own proposed contribution. In view of foreign exchange difficulties and of other commitments to international aid programmes, Australia stated that it was unable to pledge anything to the Special Fund this year. Its contribution to ETAP remained at the 1958 level. It appears, however, that our contribution may influence Australia to reconsider this position and make at least a token contribution. Argentina, Brazil, India, Pakistan and Denmark, among others, expressed their appreciation for our contribution. We have also reason to believe that the Canadian contribution has influenced a number of other delegations.

6. In view of the fact that the General Assembly approved the establishment of the Special Fund only two days before the Pledging Conference and that many member governments had little time to consider participation, the results of the Pledging Conference can be considered satisfactory. As in the case of previous conferences, it may, however, be some months before the precise figures either for ETAP or for the Special Fund will be known.

SECTION F

DÉSARMEMENT

DISARMAMENT

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

SOUS-COMITÉ DE LA COMMISSION DU DÉARMEMENT

SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE DISARMAMENT COMMISSION

117.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 180-57

[Ottawa], August 15, 1957

SECRET

DISARMAMENT

Introduction

As the Cabinet is aware, the United Nations Sub-Committee on Disarmament has been meeting in London since March 18, 1957, with a view to arriving at a first stage disarmament agreement. During these discussions a number of proposals have been put forward by certain of the delegations and, in addition, various suggestions have been exchanged informally between the delegates of the United States and the U.S.S.R.

Although certain of the U.S.S.R. proposals appear to have some merit, in general they have been found to be unsatisfactory by the Western delegates. Consequently the four Western Delegations in London are in the process of drafting an agreed set of proposals for the first stage of disarmament. They have notified the North Atlantic Council of the preparation of these Four-Power proposals and are in process of consulting with NATO governments, with particular reference to proposals directly affecting their countries before tabling them in the Sub-Committee. The draft Four-Power proposals are attached as Annex I and are discussed below.

Article I—The Limitation and Reduction of Armed Forces and Armaments

(a) The Reduction of Armed Forces

Since no figures for Canadian force levels are included and since France, the United Kingdom and the United States have agreed to the figures given for their forces, it is considered that Canada also should agree to these provisions.

In the context of a first stage disarmament agreement it may be necessary for Canada to state the ceiling for her force levels. Should this be the case it is suggested that a figure of 250,000 would be appropriate.

It is considered that Canada could also agree to the further reductions in force levels for France, the United Kingdom, the United States and the U.S.S.R. set forth in this article and to corresponding reductions in armaments for these powers under the conditions outlined. In this connection, it may again be necessary for Canada to state ceilings for her force levels. If so, it is suggested that suitable figures for Canada would be 215,000 for the second stage and 175,000 for the third stage. With regard to corresponding ceilings for Canadian armaments, the considerations applying in (b) below would also apply in large measure to the second and third stages, and it is therefore considered that any reductions would have to be very small and limited to offensive type armaments only.

(b) The Reduction of Armaments

Since the other three western powers are themselves agreed in principle with the main provisions concerning armaments, it is considered that Canada should also agree to them insofar as they apply to the great powers.

However, Canada's forces are now equipped only with the minimum items and quantities of armaments for their primarily defensive role. Furthermore, the quantities of such equipment are based on the present actual strength of the forces, i.e., approximately 120,000 and not on any of the ceilings suggested above. Therefore it is considered that Canada should not agree at this time to reduce her armaments during the first stage.

Article II—Military Expenditures

It is considered that Canada can accept this article insofar as it applies to the great powers.

It should be noted that in its present wording this article does not require reductions in military expenditures but merely calls for the submission of relevant information to the Control Organization. In any event, since Canada would not be reducing her forces or armaments during the first stage of disarmament, there is little likelihood that our military expenditures could be reduced without reducing our present commitments. Furthermore, a Canadian contribution to an adequate control and inspection system under this agreement could well result in additional military expenditure. It is therefore considered that Canada should not make a commitment to reduce her military expenditures during the first stage of disarmament.

Article III—An Obligation Regarding Nuclear Weapons

This article deals only with the conditions under which nuclear weapons can be used. It meets Canadian requirements for the defence of Canada and it is therefore considered that Canada could agree to it.

Article IV—Control of Fissionable Material

Since Canada is a leading producer of uranium, the limitation that all future production of fissionable material would be for non-weapons purposes may affect Canadian interests. However, since an objective of Canadian policy since 1945 has been an agreement under which the production of fissionable materials would be for peaceful purposes only, it is considered that this provision could be accepted.

The defence of Canada may well require the use of certain nuclear weapons of the air-to-air and surface-to-air missile category. Accordingly, the portion of this article dealing with the prohibition of manufacture and transfer of nuclear weapons could only be accepted from a defence point of view if it were worded in such a way as to enable Canada to obtain such weapons for use to repel an attack against her territory. It is considered therefore that this portion of the article (paragraph C) can be accepted as now drafted.

Some form of inspection system will be required in order to verify that the provisions of this Article are being carried out. The design and implementation of an effective inspection system, which is provided for in this article, probably will involve Canadian participation. Furthermore, since Canada is a producer of fissionable material, any inspection system would undoubtedly extend to Canadian territory. In the interest of ensuring that an effective system is implemented, it is considered that Canada should contribute to its design and operation.

Article V—Nuclear Weapons Testing

Since Canada does not conduct nuclear test explosions, and since the provisions of this article are acceptable to France, the United Kingdom and the United States, it is considered that Canada could also agree. In doing so we would, of course, accept an obligation to participate in the design of the necessary inspection systems.

Article VI—The Control of Objects Entering Outer Space

This article is designed primarily to control the development of objects travelling through outer space, i.e., intercontinental ballistic missiles and similar devices to ensure that their use would be exclusively for peaceful and scientific purposes. It does not include missiles which do not enter outer space. On this understanding it is considered that Canada can accept this article. The article also calls upon the parties to cooperate in the establishment of a technical committee to study the inspection system necessary to achieve the above. It should be noted that the article only calls for a study of such an inspection system and not for the system to be put into operation. It is considered that Canada should agree to participate in the study insofar as our resources will permit.

Article VII—Safeguards Against the Possibility of Surprise Attack

(a) Aerial Inspection

The installation and maintenance of an aerial inspection system is designed as one of the measures necessary to guard against surprise attack. Its extension over the widest possible area is a condition precedent to introducing an effective system. Although no aerial inspection system could be 100% effective, any such system, providing reconnaissance is sufficiently frequent and widespread, would be a notable advance on the present state of affairs. The zones so far contemplated by the Western delegations do cover a sufficiently wide area. In this connection, it will be recalled that Cabinet approved on July 11, 1957, the inclusion of all or part of Canada as a portion of a North American zone of relatively equal importance to a U.S.S.R. zone.

The establishment of an aerial inspection system including Canadian territory would mean that foreign aircraft (possibly those of the U.S.S.R.) would be authorized to overfly Canada, and that logistic support elements for such aircraft would probably be stationed in Canada. The number of aircraft engaged in such inspection, and the frequency of their flights have not yet been determined, but it is thought that both might be considerable if the inspection system is to be useful. Furthermore, the operation of zones of aerial inspection, both in the U.S.S.R.-North American area and in Europe, will very probably involve a significant contribution on Canada's part in terms of personnel, aircraft, logistic support, etc. Such a contribution could only be made by either reducing our present commitments or providing additional facilities for carrying them out. It is recognized that this step might well prove onerous to Canada, but it is also recognized that it is an inevitable accompaniment of a disarmament agreement involving an aerial inspection system. It is therefore considered that Canada should agree to participate to the extent of her abilities.

(b) Ground Observation Posts and Mobile Teams

Our Western colleagues are agreed that, in order to provide against the possibility of surprise attack, international teams of observers, equipped with adequate communication facilities, shall be established from the entry into force of the agreement at large ports, railway junctions, major highways and important airfields. All delegations also agree that such observers should have agreed rights and limits of mobility. It is also agreed that these posts and teams may be established by agreement at points which would not be restricted to the limits of the zones of aerial inspection.

If the provisions given above are to be implemented, it would mean, so far as Canada is concerned, that there might be ground observation posts in Canada at the installations mentioned above either throughout the country or in areas to be negotiated, and that the observers at each post would have certain rights and freedom of movement within an agreed area. Furthermore, the establishment of such a system would mean, as in the case of aerial inspection, that Canada might be required to provide personnel, together with the necessary support. The implications of undertaking such an obligation are similar to those involved in aerial inspection. However, it is again considered that such a system of inspection to guard against surprise attack is a necessary part of the disarmament agreement, and it is therefore considered that Canada should agree to participate.

(c) Exchange of Inventories

In connection with the reductions specified in Article I, our Western Colleagues are in agreement that they should exchange inventories ("blueprints") of fixed military installations and numbers and locations of military forces and major designated armaments in the first stage. The United States Delegation has suggested that such an exchange might be limited to "an agreed inspection zone or zones" and has persuaded the United Kingdom and France to abandon their objections to this restriction. It is considered that Canada, in the circumstances, should not continue in opposition alone and so delay the presentation of the proposals but that, on the grounds that a limited exchange might prejudice Western security, our representatives should seek to ensure that the exchange and verification of inventories should as nearly as possible cover all the military forces and major designated armaments of states parties to the Treaty.

It is possible that measures for supervision and verification of the reduction in armed forces, armaments, and military expenditures might eventually be extended to Canada. If so, it would mean that elements of this organization would be located in Canada and that Canada might have to participate in the organization. Such obligations would appear, however, to be inseparable from any effectively supervised disarmament agreement. It is considered, therefore, that Canada should accept them.

Article VIII—The International Control Organization

Inasmuch as an acceptable plan for disarmament should contain provision for an effective inspection and control system, it is considered that Canada should agree in principle with this article, on the understanding that the details of the control organization will be worked out at a later date. In view of Canada's membership in the United Nations Disarmament Sub-Committee, it may be that we would be expected to be members, possibly permanent members, of the executive body of the control organization as is provided in paragraph (B). Such membership might well involve Canadian representation at a fairly senior level. However, since the details of the control organization have not yet been worked out it is considered that no decision should be taken at this time regarding the degree of possible Canadian participation in the executive organ.

Article IX—Export and Import of Armaments

This article as now drafted is considered acceptable. Under discussion in London is a possible additional clause concerning a system of notification of intended major movements of armed forces over foreign soil or through international waters or through international air space.

From a military point of view such an addition would appear to be desirable since it would provide for notification of the movement of military forces and armaments from one country through or into another and thus would contribute to the prevention of surprise attack. It would mean, of course, that Canada would have to notify the control organization of the movement of armed forces and armaments out of Canada, but this cannot be considered as a disadvantage to us since such movements are in general already made public. France and the United Kingdom have, however, made objections to it. Provided our western colleagues can reach agreement in the inclusion of this article, it is considered that Canada should also agree to it.

Article X—Suspension of the Convention

This is a straightforward article to which it is considered Canada can agree.

Article XI—Entry into Force

Some difficulty over this article has arisen among our western colleagues on the question whether the articles of the agreement should constitute inseparable parts of a whole. As most of the elements of the proposal are interdependent, it is considered that the present statement is satisfactory.

General Considerations

As will be noted from the above, the Four-Power proposals can only be regarded as a first stage plan and in no way constitute a comprehensive disarmament agreement. From a military point of view a less than comprehensive plan, particularly with regard to the control and inspection system, is bound to be less than satisfactory in providing for safeguarded disarmament and protection against surprise attack. Furthermore, an agreement of this sort may create a false sense of security among the general public in western countries since it may appear that more disarmament has been achieved than has in fact been the case. Such a development might well make it difficult to command public support for essential defence measures. On the other hand, it appears almost certain that comprehensive disarmament can be reached only through a series of stages and it therefore appears necessary to make a modest beginning if a start in disarmament is to be made at all. In addition, even an agreement for first stage measures of disarmament might go a long way toward creating a more favourable international atmosphere and thus eventually improve the chances of agreement on important political questions such as a European security settlement, the reunification of Germany, stabilization of the Middle East, etc. This in turn might lead to more comprehensive steps in disarmament. Finally, these proposals have, subject to reference to their governments, been accepted in principle by the other three Western delegations. It is therefore considered on balance that Canada should also agree to them in principle, but with the exceptions and conditions outlined above.

Cabinet will appreciate that the draft Four-Power proposals as presently set forth may undergo some revision before being tabled in the Sub-Committee. Furthermore, once tabled some or all of the proposals may require further revision in order to arrive at a compromise acceptable both to the U.S.S.R. and the Western Delegations. It is suggested, therefore, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in consultation with the Minister of National Defence, be empowered to agree in principle to reasonable compromises based on the suggested Canadian position outlined in the above discussion of the articles of the agreement and falling within agreed government policy.

Recommendations

I therefore recommend:⁸⁸

(a) that Canada accept in principle the eleven articles discussed above for inclusion in an agreed Four-Power proposal to be tabled in the Sub-Committee of the United Nations Disarmament Commission;

(b) that, in particular, approval be given

(i) to force levels for Canada of 250,000 in the first stage and 215,000 and 175,000 in the second and third stages respectively (Article I);

(ii) to the principle that Canada should not agree at this time to reduce her armaments until the third stage, unless strongly urged to do so at an earlier stage by her Western colleagues in the Sub-Committee, and then only in token numbers (Article I);

(iii) to Canada's acceptance of and, within limits of her capabilities, participation in the control and inspection systems proposed, namely:

(a) the submission and verification of inventories of fixed military installations and numbers and locations of military forces and major designated armaments (Article VII (H));

(b) an inspection system designed to ensure that all future production of fissionable material will be for non-weapons purposes (Article IV(A));

⁸⁸ À sa réunion du 22 août 1957, le Cabinet a reporté l'approbation des propositions intérimaires des quatre puissances, pendant que les États-Unis, le Royaume-Uni et la France examinaient les modifications au texte. Le 23 août 1957, J.W. Holmes indiquait que toutes les modifications étaient « within the limits of the recommendations which are made in the memorandum now before Cabinet and raise no fresh issues from the defence point of view. » Après un exposé oral du premier ministre, le Cabinet a approuvé la version révisée des propositions de désarmement occidentales le 27 août. Voir Holmes à Diefenbaker, 23 août 1957, MAE/50271-C-40.

At its August 22, 1957 meeting, Cabinet deferred approving the four-power draft proposals while amendments to the text were being considered by the United States, the United Kingdom, and France. On August 23, 1957, J.W. Holmes indicated that all amendments were "within the limits of the recommendations which are made in the memorandum now before Cabinet and raise no fresh issues from the defence point of view." After an oral briefing by the prime minister, Cabinet approved the revised draft of the Western disarmament proposals on August 27, 1957. See Holmes to Diefenbaker, August 23, 1957, DEA/50271-C-40.

- (c) an aerial inspection system to assist in guarding against surprise attack (Article VII);
- (d) a system of ground control posts to assist in guarding against surprise attack (Article VII);
- (e) a general control organization, the extent of such participation being decided later (Article VIII);
- (f) a system for the control of the international movement of arms and armed forces (if included in Article IX);
- (iv) to Canada's participation in
 - (a) planning an inspection system to verify the suspension of nuclear tests explosions (Article V); and
 - (b) the study of a plan for an inspection system which would assure that the sending of objects through outer space would be exclusively for peaceful and scientific purposes (Article VI);
- (v) to the principle that Canada will agree, under the disarmament treaty, not to manufacture nuclear weapons and not to accept the transfer of such weapons except on the condition that their use would be restricted to repelling an attack against her (Articles IV(A) and (C));
- (c) that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in consultation with the Minister of National Defence, be authorized to negotiate reasonable compromise positions based on the conclusions arrived at in the above discussion of the eleven articles, and within the limits set forth in the above recommendations.

J.G. DIEFENBAKER

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Annexe I/Annex I

CONFIDENTIAL

CANADA, FRANCE, THE UNITED KINGDOM AND THE UNITED STATES: DRAFT WORKING PAPER

I. The Limitation and Reduction of Armed Forces and Armaments

A. Within one year from the entry into force of the convention, the following states will restrict or reduce their armed forces respectively to the maximum limits indicated below:

France – 750,000
 United Kingdom – 750,000
 Soviet Union – 2,500,000
 United States – 2,500,000

The definition of the armed forces will be annexed to the convention.

B. During this same period, these states will place in storage depots, within their own territories, and under the supervision of an International Control Organization, specific quantities of designated types of armaments to be agreed upon and set forth in lists annexed to the convention.

C. The relation of other states to the convention, including the agreed levels of their armed forces, will, where not otherwise provided for, be determined later.

D. The states listed in paragraph I.A. will be prepared to negotiate on a further limitation of their armed forces and armaments upon condition that:

1. Compliance with the provisions of the convention has been verified to their satisfaction;
2. There has been substantial progress toward the solution of political issues;
3. Other states specified in an annex to the convention have become parties to it; have accepted levels for their armed forces and armaments, fixed in relation to the limits set out in paragraphs A. and B. above; and have accepted adequate control and verification of these measures.

E. Upon the conditions cited above, France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States will be prepared to negotiate on a further limitation of their armed forces which would involve agreed reductions for the United States and the USSR to not less than 2.1 million men each. The agreed level of forces for France and the United Kingdom, corresponding to this figure, would be 700,000 men each.

F. Thereafter, and subject to the same conditions, negotiations could be undertaken on further limitations to not less than 1.7 million men each for the United States and the Soviet Union. The agreed level corresponding to this figure for France and the United Kingdom would be 650,000 men each.

G. Upon the conditions cited in D. above, these states will also be prepared to negotiate on further limitations of armaments. Any such limitations will be calculated by reference to definitive lists of armaments which will have been negotiated in the year following the entry into force of the convention on the basis of agreed ratios between designated armaments and manpower. The parties must be satisfied at all times that the totals of designated armaments at the disposal of any participating party do not exceed the quantities thus allowed.

H. No measures for the reduction and limitation of armed forces and armaments beyond those provided for in paragraphs A. and B. above will be put into effect until the system of control is appropriately expanded and is able to verify such measures.

II. Military Expenditure

In order to assist in verifying compliance with the provisions of Paragraph I, and to facilitate the reduction of military expenditures, France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States agree to make available to the International Control Organization information about their military budgets and expenditures for the year preceding entry of the convention into force and for each year thereafter. The categories of information to be supplied will be agreed in advance and annexed to the convention.

III. An Obligation Regarding Nuclear Weapons

Each party assumes an obligation not to use nuclear weapons if an armed attack has not placed the party in a situation of individual or collective self-defense.

IV. The Control of Fissionable Material

A. The parties to the convention further undertake:

1. That all future production of fissionable materials will be used at home or abroad, under international supervision, exclusively for non-weapons purposes, including stockpiling, beginning one month after the International Board of Control described in paragraph VIII has certified that the installation of an effective inspection system to verify the commitment has been completed. Thereafter, such fissionable materials will not be transferred out of a party's control, nor will it accept transfer to it of such materials, except exclusively for non-weapons purposes.

2. That they will cooperate in the prompt installation and in the maintenance of such an inspection system.

3. That for the purpose of accomplishing the above undertakings, the five governments represented on the Subcommittee will appoint a group of technical experts to meet as soon as possible to design the required inspection system, and to submit a progress report for their approval within the first ten months after the entry into force of the convention.

B. The parties which are producers of fissionable material for weapons purposes at the time of cessation of production for weapons purposes undertake to provide, under international supervision, for equitable transfers, in successive increments, of fissionable materials from previous production to non-weapons purposes, at home or abroad, including stockpiling; and, in this connection

1. To fix the specific ratios of quantities of fissionable materials of comparable analysis to be transferred by each of them, and

2. To commence such transfers at agreed dates and in agreed quantities at the fixed ratios following the cutoff date for production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes.

C. From the date of the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes provided in Paragraph IV A 1, each party undertakes not to transfer out of its control any nuclear weapons, or to accept transfer to it of any such weapons, except through arrangements between the transferor and transferee designed to ensure that they will not be used in violation of paragraph III.

V. Nuclear Weapons Testing

A. All parties to the convention undertake to refrain from conducting nuclear test explosions for a period of ten months from the date of entry into force of the convention, provided that agreement has been reached on the installation and maintenance of the necessary controls, including inspection posts with scientific instruments, located within the territories of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, the United States, the area of the Pacific Ocean and at such other places as may be necessary, with the consent of the governments concerned.

B. A group of technical experts appointed by the five governments represented on the Subcommittee will meet as soon as possible to design the inspection system to verify the suspension of testing.

C. Upon termination of the ten months period, the parties will be free to conduct tests unless they have agreed to continue the suspension for a further period under effective international inspection.

D. If such a further period of suspension of nuclear test explosions for _____ months has been agreed upon, then, during that period a timetable for the beginning and completion of the installation of an inspection system to supervise the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes will be agreed upon. The cessation of such production will follow in accordance with the provisions of paragraph IV. A. 1. If agreement is not reached upon such a timetable, each party will be free, at the expiration of the second period of suspension, to conduct nuclear test explosions.

E. If tests are resumed, each party undertakes to announce and register in advance the dates of each series and the range of total energy to be released therein; to provide for limited observation of them; and to limit the amount of radioactive material to be released into the atmosphere.

VI. The Control of Objects Entering Outer Space

All parties to the convention agree that within three months after the entry into effect of the convention they will cooperate in the establishment of a technical committee to study the design of an inspection system which would make it possible to assure that the sending of objects through outer space will be exclusively for peaceful and scientific purposes.

VII. Safeguards Against the Possibility of Surprise Attack

A. From the entry into force of the convention the parties concerned will cooperate in the establishment and maintenance of systems of inspection to safeguard against the possibility of surprise attack.

B. The establishment of such systems will be subject to agreement on the details of its installation, maintenance and operation. It is proposed as a matter of urgency that a working group of experts appointed by the Five governments represented on the Subcommittee be set up at once to examine the technical problems and to report their conclusions which could form the basis for an annex to the agreement.

C. With regard to inspection in the Western Hemisphere and in the Soviet Union the governments of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States propose the following:

1. That all the territory of the continental United States, all Alaska including the Aleutian Islands, all the territory of Canada and all the territory of the Soviet Union will be open to inspection.
2. If the government of the Soviet Union rejects this broad proposal, to which is related the proposal for inspection in Europe, referred to in paragraph D below, the governments of Canada, France, the United Kingdom, and the United States (with the consent of the governments of Denmark and Norway) propose that:

All the territory north of the Arctic Circle of the Soviet Union, Canada, the United States (Alaska), Denmark (Greenland), and Norway; all the territory of Canada, the United States and the Soviet Union west of 140 degrees West longitude, east of 160 degrees East longitude and north of 50 degrees North latitude; all the remainder of Alaska; all the remainder of the Kamchatka peninsula; and all of the Aleutian and Kurile Islands will be open to inspection.

D. With regard to inspection in Europe, provided there is commitment on the part of the Soviet Union to one of the two foregoing proposals, the governments of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, with the concurrence in principle of their European allies and in continuing consultation with them, subject to the indispensable consent of the countries concerned and to any mutually agreed exceptions, propose that an area including all of Europe, bounded in the South by latitude 40 degrees North and in the West by 10 degrees West longitude and in the East by 60 degrees East longitude will be open to inspection.

E. If the government of the Soviet Union rejects this broad proposal, then, under the same proviso expressed above, a more limited zone of inspection in Europe could be discussed but only on the understanding that this would include a significant part of the territory of the Soviet Union, as well as the other countries of Eastern Europe.

F. The system of inspection to guard against surprise attack will include in all cases aerial inspection, with ground observation posts at principal ports, railway junctions, main highways, and important airfields, etc., as agreed. There would also, as agreed, be mobile ground teams with specifically defined authority.

G. Ground posts may be established by agreement at points in the territories of the states concerned without being restricted to the limits of the zones described in paragraphs C.1 and 2, but the areas open to ground inspection will not be less than the areas of aerial inspection. The mobility of ground inspection would be specifically defined in the agreement with in all cases the concurrence of the countries directly concerned. There would also be all necessary means of communication.

H. Within three months of the entry into force of the convention, the parties will provide to the Board of Control inventories of their fixed military installations, and numbers and locations of their military forces and designated armaments, including the means of delivering nuclear weapons located within an agreed inspection zone or zones, and within such additional area or areas as may be agreed.

I. Any initial system of inspection designed to safeguard against the possibility of surprise attack may be extended by agreement of all concerned to the end that ultimately the system will deal with the danger of surprise attack from anywhere.

VIII. The International Control Organization

A. All the obligations contained in the convention will be conditional upon the continued effective operation of an international control and inspection system to verify compliance with its terms by all parties.

B. All the control and inspection services described in the convention and those which may be created in the course of its implementation will be within the framework of an International Control Organization established under the aegis of the Security Council, which will include, as its executive organ, a Board of Control in which the affirmative vote of the representatives of the Governments represented on the Sub-Committee and of such other parties as may be agreed will be required for important decisions.

C. All parties to the convention undertake to make available information freely and currently to the Board of Control to assist it in verifying compliance with the obligations of the convention and in categories which will be set forth in an annex to it.

D. The functions of the International Control Organization will be expanded by agreement as the measures provided for in the convention are progressively applied.

E. Other matters relating to the Organization will be defined in annexes to the convention. These matters will include the method by which the Organization shall function, its composition, its relationship to the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations, its voting procedures, its working conditions, jurisdiction, immunities, prerogatives and duties.

IX. Movement of Armaments

In addition to other rights and responsibilities, the Board of Control will have authority to study a system for regulating the export and import of designated armaments.

X. Suspension of the Convention

A. Each party will have the right to suspend its obligations, partially or completely, by written notice to the International Control Organization, in the event of an important violation by another party, or other action by any state so prejudices the security of the notifying party as to require partial or complete suspension.

B. At its option a party may give advance notice of intention to suspend its obligations, in order to afford opportunity for correction of the violations or prejudicial action.

XI. This Working Paper is offered for negotiation on the understanding that its provisions are interdependent.

118.

DEA/50271-C-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2247

London, August 29, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, Permis New York, Washington, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Belgrade, Canberra, Copenhagen, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Delhi, Wellington, Tokyo from London.

DISARMAMENT — FOUR-POWER PAPER

The Four-Power proposals⁸⁹ were tabled in the Sub-Committee today with accompanied statements by the three other Western delegates and myself. In what he called a preliminary comment on the paper Zorin described it as offering nothing of genuine value and went on to condemn individual parts of the proposals. His speech seemed to amount to a total rejection of the paper. When asked by Moch whether it constituted rejection by the USSR government, Zorin made no direct reply. When further asked whether he would have any other comment to make on the proposals after referring the text to his government, he again avoided a direct reply, but the implication of his answer seemed to be completely negative. Thus, while there may remain some possibility that further comment will be received from the USSR government, the outlook does not seem very promising. The Sub-Committee meet on Tuesday September 3. Meanwhile Stassen is leaving tonight for his son's wedding in the USA and according to the press for consultations with Washington. It is obvious that in the event that Zorin's statement constitutes the complete rejection which it certainly appears to be, we shall have to consider the whole question of the continued session of the Sub-Committee.

2. I shall be sending you tomorrow a fuller account of today's meeting.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

⁸⁹ Pour le texte officiel des propositions des quatre puissances, voir Débats sur le désarmement, 1957 (Ottawa: Imprimeur de la Reine, 1958), pp. 39 à 44.

For the official text of the four-power proposals, see Report on Disarmament Discussions, 1957 (Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1958), pp. 33-38.

119.

DEA/50271-C-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2276

London, September 3, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel V-577 Aug 30.†

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, Permis New York, Washington, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome

By Bag Belgrade, Canberra, Copenhagen, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Delhi, Wellington, Tokyo from London.

DISARMAMENT

This morning's meeting of the Western Delegations turned on the question of the tactics to be pursued with regard to the continuation or recess of Sub-Committee meetings. Stassen, who had just returned from Washington where, according to the press, he has been in consultation with the President and Secretary of State, said that the USA government view was that it was important to continue to impress upon public opinion that the Western Powers were willing to pursue serious negotiation. If the Soviet Delegation's attitude continues negative, then Stassen proposes that at the Sub-Committee meeting on September 5 the Western Delegations should propose a recess of the Sub-Committee until the general debate in the UN had taken place. The onus for this recess would be placed on the unwillingness of the Soviet Delegation to discuss the Western proposals in the Sub-Committee. The USA government is anxious to propose a precise date for the reconvening and suggested September 28. It would be suggested that in the meantime the Soviet government should give further consideration to the Western proposals. The USA object in proposing a date as explained by Stassen is that such a proposal conveys the impression that the Western Powers are anxious to proceed with serious negotiation in the Sub-Committee. If it is turned down by the Soviet government this should strengthen our position with regard to public opinion. In any event it would be desirable in the USA view to propose a date for the next Sub-Committee meeting prior to the General Assembly debate on disarmament.

2. The UK and French Delegations were in favour of the proposal to recess the Sub-Committee on September 5 but were opposed, particularly the UK Delegation, to naming a date for reconvening the Sub-Committee.

3. A subsidiary question which seems to cause a certain amount of irritable feeling between the UK and USA Delegations is that of the place of meeting of the Sub-Committee after such a recess. Stassen is anxious that the Sub-Committee should meet in London as he says that the atmosphere here is more propitious for serious negotiation than that in New York in the midst of an Assembly session. The French seem inclined to support this view. The UK, on the other hand, strongly favour New York, partly, I think, because they would prefer to see Stassen under the closer control of the Secretary of State rather than operating more independently in London. This is one aspect of the lack of confidence which the UK Delegation feel and express about Stassen as a negotiator.

4. I have so far taken no part in this discussion of the relative merits of London and New York for a further meeting of the Sub-Committee, but I should be grateful for your views on this point.

5. With regard to the future sessions of the Sub-Committee,

(a) It is difficult to see any evidence in the present attitude of the Soviet Delegation for optimism concerning concessions on the part of the Soviet government at this stage. It seems more likely that if they are considering any concessions they might be more disposed to make them in the General Assembly itself than in the Sub-Committee, particularly in view of Zorin's uncomplimentary references to the composition and methods of work of the Sub-Committee and his hints of a preference for continuing discussion of disarmament in the General Assembly. I also think rather significant his remarks at the 151st meeting of the Sub-Committee on August 27 in which he spoke of the Western Powers having compelled the Sub-Committee to "work in secret" and said "The time when professional politicians and diplomats could decide questions affecting the basic and vital interests of peoples secretly and behind their backs has gone forever." This sounded as if the Soviet Delegation had decided that negotiation in the Sub-Committee and perhaps in particular the method of private conversations between Soviet and USA Delegations no longer serve their purpose at this time.

(b) The continuance of the Sub-Committee meetings in these circumstances would in all probability only lead to repetition of propaganda speeches which might bring the Sub-Committee into some disrepute, and by sharpening the propaganda content of its sessions make subsequent agreement in the Sub-Committee rather more difficult.

(c) On present form it seems unlikely that the Soviet Delegation will ask for a recess or adjournment of the Sub-Committee. They will wish to place the responsibility for such a move on the Western Delegations, although they themselves might not be sorry to see the Sub-Committee terminate its work for the time being, as they appear to have nothing to say beyond repeating former speeches.

(c) The Soviet Delegation have, however, by their brusque handling of the Four-Power proposals and their refusal even to examine these proposals in detail or to comment upon many of the proposals themselves, shown themselves in an unfavourable light. They have made it relatively easy for the Western Powers to assert that the breakdown of discussions in the Sub-Committee is due to the refusal of the Soviet Delegation to consider substantial proposals which had the backing of fifteen Western nations.

6. In the circumstances I should be inclined to go along with Stassen's suggestion for proposing a recess to give the Soviet government an opportunity thoroughly to study the Western proposals with a meeting to take place again prior to the disarmament debate in the UN. I should be grateful for your instructions on this and also on the question as to whether a precise date for the resumption of discussions should be mentioned when proposing a recess and if so whether the date proposed by Stassen, September 28, would be satisfactory to you. I can see some advantage in some date prior to the disarmament debate in the General Assembly being suggested.

7. Of course, when the proposal for a recess is put forward in the Sub-Committee, the Soviet Delegation may simply reply that there is no need for the Soviet government to study the Western proposals further as they have already rejected them. In this case it may be that there will be nothing for it but to adjourn the Sub-Committee indefinitely although Stassen will no doubt do everything in his power to avoid such a development.

8. I am cabling you separately† on this afternoon's Sub-Committee meeting which was in any case quite negative in result.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

120.

DEA/50271-C-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM V-582

Ottawa, September 5, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. EMERGENCY.

Reference: Your telegram 2276 of September 3.

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, Washington, Permex New York, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag From London: Belgrade, Copenhagen, Canberra, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Wellington, Delhi.

By Bag From Ottawa: Tokyo.

DISARMAMENT: TACTICS

For Ritchie:

The suggested procedure of proposing a recess until after the general debate in the Assembly appears sound. We are inclined to accept also Stassen's reasoning about the desirability of proposing a date for resuming discussions. However, we suspect that September 28, apart from being a Saturday, would be too early as it would allow only about ten days for the delivery of perhaps more than seventy lengthy speeches. October 7 might provide a more satisfactory margin.

2. We are able to see advantages in proposing either London or New York as the location for any resumed session. While negotiations in London would be freer from possible disturbing influences it should not be overlooked that there is likely to be intense interest in disarmament at the Assembly and the problems of coordination would probably be simplified if the Sub-Committee were also to meet in New York. Moreover, it might be preferable to propose New York in order to avoid Soviet charges that the Western Powers are trying to keep disarmament away from the other U.N. members.

3. Admittedly Stassen is likely to find himself more circumscribed in New York not only by Dulles but also by Lodge. However, prospects of serious negotiations in the near future appear to be so slim that his opportunity for any useful initiative would at best be correspondingly slight. On the other hand his presence in New York might have a salutary effect on the U.S. attitude in the Assembly. Thus, while we do not share the U.K. reasons, we are also inclined to favour New York.

4. Although we consider it desirable to propose that the Sub-Committee recess forthwith and resume in New York about October 7 we are uncertain about the substantive nature of the discussions which might then take place. We would be reluctant to see the Sub-Committee revert to a propaganda forum. This problem, however, is perhaps one which can be attended to more readily at a later stage when the attitude of the Soviet Union to a resumed session becomes known. In any event a resumed session would no doubt recess during the First Committee debate and in consequence one of the factors affecting its duration would be the stage in First Committee proceedings at which disarmament was discussed. Another factor is the extent of any demand which may exist for holding more than a formal session of the Commission prior to the First Committee debate.

5. You might suggest for the consideration of your colleagues that it be proposed to Zorin that the Sub-Committee recess now without further report and reconvene following the general debate to consider whether it should then report to the Commission or continue during the Assembly. That course might meet some of the U.K. and French objections to resumption since it would leave open the question whether substantive discussion should continue and allow some opportunity to consult on the possibilities of useful negotiation in the interval between the general debate and discussion in the First Committee.

121.

DEA/50271-E-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2294

London, September 5, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. EMERGENCY.

Reference: Your Tel V-582 Sep 5/57.

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, Permis New York, Washington, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Belgrade, Canberra, Copenhagen, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Delhi, Wellington, Tokyo from London.

DISARMAMENT TACTICS

At the Sub-Committee meeting today, in discussion of the UK proposal for a recess of the Sub-Committee Zorin said that he accepted the proposal for a recess but would not accept the naming of a date for reconvening the Sub-Committee. He argued that we should move into a discussion of disarmament in the General Assembly and that further sessions of the Sub-Committee during the General Assembly would only be a device for postponing a discussion in the General Assembly. Western delegations replied that there was no intention on their part to postpone or evade Assembly debate but that the proposal to postpone the next meeting of the Sub-Committee indefinitely would seem to indicate that the USSR was not interested in pursuing serious negotiation to obtain an agreement for partial measures of disarmament. As no agreement could be reached on the conditions for recess further discussion of this matter was postponed until tomorrow's Sub-Committee meeting.

2. The Four Western Powers met after the Sub-Committee meeting and it was agreed that Zorin had put the Soviet Union in a very unfavourable position from the publicity point of view by refusing a further session of the Sub-Committee and that we should seek to utilize this opportunity to make it clear to public opinion that responsibility for breaking off the negotiations lies with the Soviet Union. With this object in mind Moch produced a draft statement to be tabled in the name of the Four Western Powers in the Sub-Committee tomorrow and appended to our report to the Disarmament Commission, pointing out that the Soviet Union was responsible for postponing the next meeting of the Sub-Committee indefinitely and that this prevented any final attempt to reach agreement before the Assembly debate and obliged us to approach that debate on the basis of our divergencies, and thus reduce the possibility of agreement in the Assembly. As it is felt that the only chance of making effective use of such a joint statement in terms of public opinion would be to table it tomorrow, and as it will only be finally drafted tomorrow morning, it will not be possible to submit it to you in advance. So that unless I hear from you that you are opposed to this procedure I shall join with my colleagues in tabling the document.

3. This approach is based on the assumption that when we meet again tomorrow morning all four Western delegations will agree to abandon further efforts to obtain a resumption of the Sub-Committee session. There is no doubt that the UK and France are convinced that any further effort in this direction would be futile and that Zorin has presented us with a good opportunity to put the responsibility on them. Stassen also appeared tonight to share this view but it is always possible that he may tomorrow put forward some other proposal for a resumption of the Sub-Committee. Meanwhile I have received your very helpful telegram V-582 of September 5, and if there is any question of finding a formula for resuming Sub-Committee meetings I could put forward to our Western colleagues the suggestion contained in paragraph 5 of your reference telegram. I think, however, that it is more likely that all will agree to something along the lines of Moch's proposal referred to in paragraph 2 above and that the Sub-Committee will adjourn on this basis tomorrow.

4. I am very sorry to bombard you with these emergency telegrams but the tactics and timing are changing very rapidly and I wanted to inform you as soon as possible of developments.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

122.

DEA/50271-C-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2306

London, September 6, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, Permis New York, Washington, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Belgrade, Canberra, Copenhagen, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Delhi, Wellington, Tokyo from London.

DISARMAMENT

The Sub-Committee recessed today. The Soviet Delegation continued its refusal to accept any date for its reconvening. In the circumstances it was agreed to report to the Commission⁹⁰ and to recess.

2. I shall be sending you the precise formula with regard to the recess incorporated in the report when the text is available. The Western representatives deplored the fact that owing to the Soviet attitude we were recessing indefinitely. The Soviet Delegation continued to argue that the proposal for reconvening the Sub-Committee was just a device for putting off discussion of disarmament in the General Assembly. For their part they proposed that disarmament should be the first item on the agenda of the Political Committee.

⁹⁰ Le 30 septembre 1957, la Commission du désarmement a décidé uniquement de transmettre tous les rapports du Sous-comité au Conseil de sécurité et à l'Assemblée générale.

On September 30, 1957, the Disarmament Commission decided only to transmit all reports of the Sub-Committee to the Security Council and the General Assembly.

3. The project of a Four-Power statement mentioned in my telegram 2294 September 5 was dropped by the four Western powers. Most of the material to be incorporated in it was utilized by the heads of the Western delegations in their speeches. I joined in expressing disappointment with the Soviet attitude in insisting on indefinite adjournment and emphasized that there was no question of our desiring to delay discussion in the General Assembly.

4. I shall be sending you an appreciation of the situation resulting from the Sub-Committee's recess shortly.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

123.

DEA/50271-C-40

*Le haut-commissaire au Royaume Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2339

London, September 11, 1957

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, Permies New York, Washington, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Belgrade, Canberra, Copenhagen, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Delhi, Wellington, Tokyo from London.

DISARMAMENT

The recess of the Sub-Committee suggests some attempt at an assessment of its current session and of future prospects for the disarmament negotiations.

2. It would no doubt be a mistake to write off this five and a half months' work in the Sub-Committee as a total loss. There have been concessions on both sides. I suppose the main Soviet concession has been the apparent acceptance of the principle of control over the suspension of nuclear tests. The USSR also accepted the principle of aerial inspection and of a preliminary reduction of contentional armaments by means of agreed lists.

3. The Western powers have agreed that nuclear tests may be suspended before the cut-off of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes goes into effect and they have reduced their requirements for control over the first stage of conventional reductions. They have accepted the Soviet proposals for ground observation posts against surprise attack and have offered a wide choice of areas for aerial inspection.

4. Yet in the last month it became increasingly clear that the USSR Delegation was no longer interested in negotiating an agreement through the Sub-Committee. Zorin returned with greater emphasis to those elements in the Russian proposals which he knew were the least acceptable to the West: e.g., the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons, their elimination from national arsenals, and the reduction by one-third of armed forces stationed in Germany, etc. He made no reference, except in the vaguest terms, to USSR acceptance of the principle of control in relation to the suspension of nuclear tests. Moreover, when the Western proposals for aerial inspection were put forward formally he attacked the whole concept as merely an attempted arrangement for "the collection of reconnaissance data". In pressing the USSR insistence on proposals for the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons and their elimination from national arsenals, Zorin made no attempt to answer the challenge, frequently put to him, that the representatives of the USSR had themselves agreed (for example in their proposals tabled in the Sub-Committee in May 1955⁹¹ and in Bulganin's statement in Helsinki in June of this year) that it would be impossible to ensure through any reasonable practical system of inspection that commitments to take such measures would be faithfully implemented.

5. In retrospect it looks as though, if the Russians had ever been serious in hoping to attain an agreement, they decided perhaps sometime at the beginning of August, when Mr. Dulles appeared on the scene to preside over the presentation of the aerial inspection scheme, that they were not likely to make any progress in obtaining further concessions from the West at this stage. They then appeared to have determined to concentrate on the presentation of their proposals for the immediate cessation of nuclear tests as a separate and urgent proposal.

6. The Western position in the Assembly debate will presumably be based upon our Four-Power proposals of August 29. On the central element of the Western proposals — the link between the cessation of nuclear tests and the cut-off of the production of fissile materials for weapons purposes — the West has a pretty strong case. It should be possible to argue that the cessation of tests is in itself only a palliative measure and that in proposing a cut-off date for the manufacture of nuclear weapons we are attacking the heart of the problem it may be difficult for the Russians to explain why they are opposed to this link. But their proposal for a separate cessation of tests will, of course have a strong appeal.

7. The negotiation among the Western Powers of the position finally outlined in our Four-Powers paper of August 29 did, I think, lead to some change in the Western position. In particular it led to greater insistence on the "inseparability" of the different parts of the Western proposals. This "inseparability" could probably have been presented in a much more favourable light and it should be possible to do so in the General Assembly. While certain conditions are mentioned in the Four-Power proposals as a necessary prerequisite to progress in disarmament arrangements, the rigidity of the Western position is more apparent than real. Of the ten sections of the Four-Power proposals, two (Nos. VI and IX) merely proposed studies to work out measures for regulation of related disarmament activities; two more (Nos. II and III) are refusals to accept conditions which the USSR has insisted upon; one more (No. X) was new and merely suggests arrangements for the suspension of the obligations assumed under the Convention; the other five, which contain the real substance of the Western proposals, are attempts to formulate the provisions for those elements of disarmament which all five members of the Sub-Committee had discussed since the Sub-Committee began its meetings in March. These covered an arrangement for the balanced reduction of nuclear and conventional armaments and armed forces and provided in effect for the suspension of tests, so long as other measures were faithfully implemented. The only other "condition" insisted upon by the Western Powers was that further reductions in conventional forces and armaments should depend on progress towards the settlement of problems which made those forces necessary.

⁹¹ Voir/See Volume 21, Document 52.

8. However, we should not overlook the fact that there are some weak links in the chain of our interdependent proposals. In the closing days of the Sub-Committee some of the Western representatives were prepared in private to face these weaknesses, and even to discuss the possibility of concessions in the Western proposals to meet the kind of criticism to which they will probably be exposed. M. Moch, who emphasized that he was speaking as an individual rather than as the representative of the French government, raised some of these questions at the last meeting of the Western delegations. He said that in his opinion the best use the Western governments could make of the period between now and the disarmament debate in the General Assembly was to look over our proposals from the point of view of considering whether we could afford to make any modifications in them. He went on to point out some of the weakness in the Four-Power paper which are likely to attract criticism. He referred to the position of the USA government that even after the cut-off date for the manufacture of fissile materials for military purposes the right to manufacture weapons from the stock of fissile material which had been accumulated prior to the cut-off date would remain. This may be a vulnerable point in our Western position, and one which is not, I think, yet fully understood by public opinion, although no doubt the USSR Delegation at the UN will underline it. M. Moch went on to refer to the transfer provisions in our proposals which would permit the transfer by the USA of nuclear weapons to other governments while leaving it in the discretion of those governments as to how they should employ these weapons subject to the general and almost meaningless, provision that they should be used in self-defence. Although M. Moch did not mention the case of Germany in this connection, it is obvious that this is what he had in mind. If the USSR government could claim that the USA would be able to supply nuclear weapons to the German government to employ at its discretion, this might be a pretty powerful point against the proposals.

9. Mr. Stassen, in a private conversation which I had with him just before his departure, expressed some of his thoughts on this general subject. He said that he felt that the strongest factor in the Western position was the link between the cessation of tests and the cut-off of the manufacture of fissile materials for weapons purposes, and it was upon this element that we should place our main emphasis. On the other hand a number of the other conditions in the Four-Power proposals should be re-examined to see whether there was any possibility of modification in them. In particular Mr. Stassen referred to the smaller zone of aerial inspection in Europe, and wondered whether after the German elections it might not be possible to put forward a scheme for aerial inspection in Europe in a more positive form than that contained in the Four-Power paper.

10. I do not know if the USA, UK and French governments, as distinct from M. Moch and Mr. Stassen, would be prepared to consider any modifications in the Western proposals.

11. Another question which we shall have to consider before the subject of disarmament comes up in the General Assembly is the constitution of the Disarmament Sub-Committee. There can, I think, be no doubt from Mr. Zorin's preliminary gambit in the Sub-Committee that the USSR government will press for the extension of the membership of the Sub-Committee, and that it may be rather difficult to resist this proposal. The Soviet line, as fore-shadowed in the Sub-Committee, will be that there is an excessive representation of NATO countries on the Sub-Committee and that "entire continents", as Mr. Zorin puts it, are let off. This matter was discussed in a rather desultory way at meetings of the four Western delegations here. There was a general feeling that enlargement of the Sub-Committee would make any serious negotiation with the USSR government much more difficult. There was also the feeling that once one admits an extension of membership it would be very hard to prevent this getting out of control and the development of an unwieldy and irresponsible body. The three other Western delegations, while stating a strong preference for maintaining the Sub-Committee in its present form, seemed to think that if we were forced to accept an extension of membership it would be better for the Sub-Committee to reflect the membership of the Disarmament Commission. They felt that this would at least be some limit to the extension of membership and that it could be argued that such a membership was fairly representative in character. No doubt our representatives at the General Assembly will be considering this matter in common with the representatives of the other Western Powers on the Sub-Committee.

12. Another question which is almost certain to be raised by the USSR Delegation in New York is the place of the disarmament item on the agenda of the Political Committee. Mr. Zorin repeatedly stated in the Sub-Committee that the USSR government would press for this subject to be the first item on the agenda. He added that the USSR would be prepared to discuss the question at the beginning of October. At the meeting of the four Western delegations the UK Delegation expressed rather strongly the view that they would not be prepared to discuss this question early in October. The French representative stated that the main French interest was that the discussion of Algeria should come at the end of the Committee's agenda rather than near the beginning. The general trend of the discussion seemed to favour beginning the Committee's work with the discussion of Korea and perhaps Cyprus, going on to disarmament perhaps towards the end of October and ending with Algeria. However, these are matters which will no doubt be thrashed out between the delegations in New York.

13. In attempting this assessment of the work of the Sub-Committee during its last session, there are a number of imponderable elements to be taken into account.

14. In the background of diplomatic interchanges in the Sub-Committee one was of course always aware of the existence of certain timetables of weapon testing and weapon production both on the USSR and on the Western side. Timetables whose content was unknown — at any rate to the Canadian Delegation — but which obviously affected decisions and tactics. The dates of projected test explosions — either on the Western or on the USSR side — the stage reached in various programmes of weapon development, all latest intelligence estimates with regard to developments, all these considerations obviously played a very important part in shaping decisions on the timing and sometimes the content of proposals put forward.

15. The fact that the UK is an emergent nuclear power and that France has aspirations in the same direction has clearly been an important factor in these negotiations. It is one thing for the USA and USSR to negotiate from a position in which they are both already established nuclear powers, but the USA has had to take in consideration the policies and requirements of their allies (the USSR is presumably not under any such obligation). Indeed the negotiation between the USA and its UK and French and NATO allies has been one of the most important and time-consuming preoccupations of these last months. This has been of real value in achieving an agreed Western position, but it has also complicated the Western proposals by introducing into them provisions to meet the UK, French and NATO requirements.

16. Last, perhaps least important but still playing a certain role, has been the personal relation between members of the Western Delegations, centering around the personality and position of Mr. Stassen, and the connected question of Mr. Stassen's own relationship with the President and the Secretary of State. Mr. Stassen's patience and invincible optimism made him an impressive figure. Unfortunately he aroused the mistrust of the UK and French Delegations, particularly the former and his optimism as to the outcome of the negotiation proved, at any rate in the short run, to be unfounded. Mr. Zorin showed himself a formidable debater, with a grasp both of detail and of the underlying issues. M. Moch, though he tended to be erratic and fatigued in the latter stages, was impressive by his personality and intelligence. The UK Delegation was competent but uninspired in leadership and somewhat negative in attitude.

17. From the Canadian point of view I think it may be said that — as I have indicated in previous messages — Canada obtained the inclusion in the Four-Power proposals of all the provisions which were considered necessary to safeguard our own position. In addition most of the suggestions put forward by the Canadian government on the more general aspects of the Four-Power proposals were accepted.

18. Finally, I should add that the above comments are based only on my short period of work on the Sub-Committee of which Mr. Johnson⁹² has much fuller experience.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

DOUXIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE
TWELFTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

124.

DEA/50271-E-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1951

Washington, September 13, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Permis Tel 1823 Sep 12.†

Repeat London, Permis New York, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

USA DRAFT RESOLUTION ON DISARMAMENT

Baker, one of the officials concerned with disarmament questions at the State Department, gave us this afternoon the text of a draft resolution to cover the disarmament item of the General Assembly's agenda. The British and French embassies here are also being given copies of this draft, the text of which is contained in my telegram 1952.

2. By way of explanation, Baker said that this draft resolution had been worked out at the official level and approved by the Secretary as a basis for consultation, in the first instance with the USA's Western partners on the Sub-Committee. It is therefore open to amendment. Baker said that the language of the operative paragraphs was designed to stick as closely as possible to the text of the Four-Power paper. The State Department would be grateful for your comments. We pointed out to Baker that no provision had been made for noting the report of the Disarmament Commission, an omission which he said would be made good. The State Department would also be grateful to have your comments on whether the draft should be shown to the Japanese once it has been amended in the light of comments received from the British, French and ourselves. Their purpose in doing so would be not only to attempt to forestall a Japanese-sponsored resolution on the tests question but also with a view to obtaining their possible co-sponsorship. Baker explained that they expect that the Japanese Foreign Minister, who is visiting Washington next week, will almost certainly bring up the subject in conversation with the Secretary and for this reason they would hope to have our views before next Wednesday at the latest. In answer to our query Baker said that the State Department envisaged a widely representative group of sponsors from Europe, Asia and Latin America and of course the Western Four. They have not thought of any particular countries other than the Western Four and Japan. A further point in this connection on which Baker asked for our comments is the desirability of the USA putting forward the resolution in its own name if a situation should develop which made it necessary for such action to be taken. He foresaw, for example, the possibility of delay in obtaining agreement on the text if a number of delegations which would wish to be co-sponsors should desire such changes or delay because of difficulty in obtaining co-sponsors. The State Department would also like our views on the desirability of the Western Four alone sponsoring the resolution.

⁹² David Johnson a repris son poste d'ambassadeur du Canada à Moscou en août 1957, après avoir dirigé la délégation canadienne qui participait depuis mars 1957 aux réunions du Sous-comité tenues à Londres.

David Johnson returned to his post as Canadian Ambassador to Moscow in August 1957 after leading the Canadian delegation at the London Sub-Committee meetings since March 1957.

3. Bearing in mind Permis telegram 1823 September 12, we asked Baker if the State Department had, as yet, reached any position on the question as to whether disarmament should be placed on the agenda of the First Committee. He said that at the working level it was generally felt that the disarmament debate should come as soon as possible (they estimate that it might last for as long as two weeks). The views expressed in this connection were almost identical to those outlined in paragraph 2 of Permis telegram 1823. Baker said he understood that the British and French were not too keen to have disarmament discussed too early. Baker seemed to imply that perhaps the British and the French were not too keen on having an extended debate on disarmament whereas he felt that the position is a strong one and one which can be easily defended. Baker added that this was a matter which, of course, would have to be worked out at an early date.

4. We asked Baker whether the State Department had any views on how the Indian, Belgian and Czech items might be handled. He replied that their tentative view is that the Belgian and Indian items should be taken up at the same time as the report of the Disarmament Commission but that the Czech items should be dealt with separately.

5. As far as the Indian item is concerned, Baker said that the USA naturally hoped that the present membership would not be altered or enlarged but that it might be difficult to resist popular pressure to see the membership widened. They have not yet reached any final decision as they are attempting to reconcile the obvious disadvantages of a larger body with the dangers of opposing any widespread demand in the Assembly for broader membership. Baker intimated that the USA would be consulting with us, the British and the French on this point at an early date. As far as the Czech item was concerned Baker said merely that the USA would urge a simple procedural resolution referring it to the Committee on Atomic Radiation.

6. From the foregoing it would appear that the State Department is seeking General Assembly approval of the basic points in the Western paper, even though a resolution on these lines is bound to be opposed by the Soviet bloc, and possibly by some other states as well. They believe that the Western position is a strong one, and merits wide support, and gave no indication of considering that a purely procedural resolution (on the lines of the 11th Session) would be a preferable alternative.

7. Your views by Tuesday next are requested.

125.

DEA/50271-E-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1952

Washington, September 13, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 1951 Sep 13.

Repeat London, Permis New York, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

DRAFT RESOLUTION OF THE USA ON DISARMAMENT

Following is the text of the USA draft resolution: Begins:

“The General Assembly

A. Emphasizing the urgency of decreasing the danger of war and improving the prospects of a durable peace through achieving international agreement on reduction, limitation and open inspection of armaments and armed forces;

B. Welcoming the narrowing of differences which has resulted from the extensive negotiations in the Sub-Committee of the Disarmament Commission;

C. Recognizing that high levels of armaments and armed forces produce tensions which make more difficult the achievement of lasting international peace and security, and conversely, that comprehensive measures of disarmament are dependent upon progress in the resolution of major international political issues;

D. Believing that immediate, carefully measured steps should be taken for partial measures of disarmament and such controlled reductions of armaments and armed forces as are now feasible and thus facilitate further measures of disarmament;

E. Urges that the States concerned and particularly those on the Sub-Committee of the Disarmament Commission give priority to reaching a disarmament agreement which will provide for;

1. The progressive establishment of systems of open inspection with ground and aerial components to guard against the possibility of surprise attack,

2. The early cessation of production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes, under effective international control, and the complete devotion of future production of fissionable materials to peaceful purposes,

3. The beginning of elimination of stocks of nuclear weapons through a program of transfer on an equitable and reciprocal basis of stocks of fissionable material from weapons to internationally supervised peaceful uses,

4. The cessation of testing of nuclear weapons, under effective international control including inspection posts equipped with appropriate scientific instruments located within the territories of the USA, USSR, UK, Pacific Ocean areas and other points as required with consent of the States concerned,

5. Reciprocal reduction of armed forces and armaments through outer space will be for exclusively peaceful and scientific purposes.

F. Requests the Disarmament Commission to reconvene its Sub-Committee as soon as feasible for this purpose;

G. Requests the Sub-Committee to report to the Disarmament Commission by April 1, 1958, on the progress achieved." Ends.

126.

DEA/50271-E-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM V-620

Ottawa, September 16, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegrams 1951 and 1952 of Sept. 13.

Repeat London, NATO Paris, Paris, Permex New York, Bonn, Brussels, Geneva, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Belgrade, Copenhagen, Canberra, Moscow, Oslo, Stockholm, Wellington, Delhi, Tokyo.

DISARMAMENT: U.S.A. DRAFT RESOLUTION

We are inclined to favour the general tactical theories reflected in Baker's remarks. We are doubtful that it would be possible to reach an understanding with the Soviet Union as was done last session that the proceedings should end with no more than a procedural resolution relating to reconvening the Sub-Committee. Therefore it appears appropriate to have in hand a substantive resolution which is likely to command broad support.

2. In studying the U.S.A. draft we have had in mind London telegram 2339 of September 11⁹³ and particularly paragraphs 8-10. [It] seems to us that the U.S.A. text avoids the points of weakness and follows generally satisfactory lines. However there are some points where in our view improvements might be made.

3. Because of the announcements of Soviet reductions in forces totalling 1.8 million men to which they can be expected to refer, there might be some merit in including in the preamble provided that it can be done to the satisfaction of the British, the thought that extensive disarmament requires a basis in international agreement and cannot progress far by unilateral acts. Such an idea might fit in between paragraphs C. and D. and provide a link between them. Alternatively it might be conveyed by some editing of those two paragraphs.

4. Paragraph D. might be given a more positive cast by saying that steps can, rather than should, be taken. If that were acceptable the clause "and such controlled reductions ... now feasible" would perhaps be out of place. Indeed it may already be redundant.

5. In paragraph 1 we are not clear as to the significance of open as implied to inspection. Presumably it is an elliptical reference to the concept of an open world where secret preparations for attack could not take place. However it seems to us that the word could be dropped or the idea expanded.

⁹³ Voir/See Document 123.

6. In paragraph 2 an improvement would be made by a little editing so that effective control would clearly apply to both cessation and devotion.

7. In paragraph 3 it may be desirable to avoid the word "elimination" if our understanding of United States policies for the foreseeable future is correct. Some such word as reduction would be likely to cause rather less concern to NATO governments. It would also be more in conformity with our views on the feasibility of verifying complete elimination. Indeed, we ourselves would wish to consider further the context in which we could readily subscribe to a proposal for elimination.

8. While we would not wish to weaken proposals concerning nuclear tests we raise the question whether the United States is now prepared to be committed to cessation as part of a first step agreement. If they are not ready to go beyond the August 29 proposal for suspension the time to change the wording is now, before discussions take place with other potential sponsors. On the other hand, if the United States means cessation, it would in our view strengthen the general Western position.

9. It is a minor point but we consider that one disarmament measure must be as "reciprocal" as the next and we question the value of that word in paragraphs 3 and 5.

10. The foregoing are our preliminary observations prepared today to meet your timing requirements. We may have additional comments after further study.

11. With regard to consultations we see no objection to bringing in the Japanese at an early stage. Indeed we can see advantage in discussions with widely representative delegations with a view to avoiding any possible need for public withdrawal on any point in order to secure support.

12. Recent tactics in the U.N. have made it usual to seek a large group of co-sponsors and for this reason it seems desirable to enlist the kind of group envisaged by the State Department. In our view Norway would be a useful addition and we would be happy if they were consulted early.

13. As a co-sponsor of the Four-Power proposals of August 29 we would expect to be favourably inclined towards joining with the other three and other delegations in putting forward this kind of draft resolution. In our view it would be an advantage if the four could agree on a text before any emergency arises. Any important changes in substance effected to convert a draft sponsored by the United States alone to one endorsed by all four would be a reflection of lack of solidarity we would wish to avoid. In this connection our main concern is the word "elimination" in paragraph 3.

127.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1886

New York, September 19, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris, Bonn from Ottawa (Information).

DISARMAMENT

At a meeting this afternoon of officials from the USA, UK, French and Canadian Delegations we discussed the USA draft resolution and general tactics on the disarmament item. A tentatively agreed text for consideration by governments is being forwarded in a separate telegram.†

2. The USA and other delegations accepted the suggestions made in our telegram 1952 September 13 concerning paragraph D, paragraph E(2), paragraph E(3), paragraph E(4) and on the deletion of the word "reciprocal" from paragraph E(3) and E(5). They also accepted the UK suggestion to use "non-weapons uses" rather than "peaceful uses" in paragraph E(2) and E(3).

3. The USA representatives were willing to consider our suggestion for a new preambular paragraph to the effect that extensive disarmament must be international, not unilateral, but the personal view of the UK representative was that his government would not want to introduce this idea. He thought the UK attitude would be that any unilateral disarmament was a matter of the domestic policy of a country and should not, by implication, be criticized in the resolution. Since the USA and French representatives were not particularly anxious to have the new paragraph we did not press it.

4. The UK representative also queried the word "open" with reference to inspection but the USA said that Stassen was personally very anxious to retain the phrase "open inspection", since it was one which he had frequently employed. The USA feel that this phrase helps to dispel the impression created by the USSR that inspection is merely a thinly disguised anti-Soviet intelligence operation.

5. The UK representative reserved the UK position on three portions of the revised draft:

(1) The UK would like to delete subparagraph E(6). The UK defence department has queried this subparagraph and has indicated that they would not want to accept anything more definite or onerous than the rather vague proposals in the Western working paper. The USA representative replied that there was no intention to propose or suggest anything which went beyond the paper tabled in the Sub-Committee.

(2) The UK queried the order of the subparagraphs of paragraph E. They think it would be better tactics to put inspection against surprise attack after the measures of nuclear and conventional disarmament to avoid the charge that we give higher priority to inspection than to the disarmament it is intended to safeguard. The USA representatives felt that in view to their strong commitment to the open skies plan and of their long standing position that it is the starting point for disarmament, it should remain first. Another argument in favour of this is that the inspection of actual measures of disarmament is in fact written in to the other subparagraphs.

(3) The UK think that, aside from frivolous objections to April 1, which is the date for the report, it is much too early and they would prefer June 1. The present UK thinking is that the Sub-Committee might reconvene about March 1. The USA on the other hand said that they envisage a very early reconvening of the Sub-Committee after the Assembly and that they did not rule out the possibility, depending on the Soviet reaction to their proposals, that the Sub-Committee might even reconvene during the General Assembly.

6. At the end of the meeting the USA asked permission to show the revised draft, explaining the various reservations, to the Japanese. It was agreed that they should do so and they will probably approach the Japanese tomorrow morning. In this connection we raised the question of consultation with the Norwegians and the USA and the others agreed that the Norwegians should also be given the draft resolution very soon, perhaps on Monday morning.

7. There was some general discussion of other co-sponsors and the general view seemed to be that it would be useful to get a substantial number. The USA representative asked our view on the desirability of trying to get India to co-sponsor and this will no doubt be considered further. They are worried, however, that the Indians, if approached, might try to bargain their support for our support of the Indian proposal to enlarge the Sub-Committee. The present USA position seems to be firmly against enlarging the Sub-Committee.

128.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2021

New York, October 2, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris (Priority), Tokyo deferred from Ottawa (Information).

By Bag Bonn, Moscow from London.

DISARMAMENT AND FIRST COMMITTEE SCHEDULE

A further meeting to discuss disarmament items was held today by officials of the four Western Sub-Committee members. Discussing the order of items on the First Committee agenda, the USA urged strongly that disarmament should come first, and that the West should seize the initiative in proposing this. The Czech item of radiation effects could come immediately after to avoid a second full scale debate. It was agreed that these two items would take a month and that it would be possible for the Committee to settle the rest of its agenda after this time. France, in the light of its new crisis, wished to see Algeria far down on the list, the UK was willing to have Cyprus follow as the third item but Korea may precede it. Co-sponsors for proposed American resolution (see our telegram 1927 September 24†): the USA announced that the following seventeen nations had definitely agreed to co-sponsor this item: USA, UK, France, Canada, Philippines, Laos, Italy, Australia, Paraguay, Argentina, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Colombia, Brazil, Cuba, Liberia and The Netherlands. They expected to hear shortly from the following: Norway, Iraq, Burma, Tunisia, Cambodia, Lebanon and Ghana. It was agreed that the resolution should be tabled as soon as the first four of these had replied, which would be by tomorrow morning at the latest. After leaving the meeting we learned from Vennemoe of Norway that they would not co-sponsor the resolution partly for reasons of public opinion, partly because Norwegian ministers are busy with the election campaign, and partly to maintain for Norway flexibility for greater usefulness later in the Assembly. Vennemoe added that Norway would of course support the resolution and they would make this clear to whoever asked them. (The USA Delegation are continuing to press the Norwegians to co-sponsor.) The USA also reported that Pakistan and Thailand while supporting the resolution would not co-sponsor it, and some misgiving was expressed all round that more representative co-sponsorship had not been forthcoming.

Analysis of Probable Voting.

2. On the basis of a USA analysis, we discussed the probable voting. On the crucial issue of a separate resolution on suspension of tests it was felt that 21 nations might vote for (the Soviet and most Asian-African nations, plus Sweden) forty might vote against and twenty nations were at present doubtful, as follows: Austria, Burma, Cambodia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, Ghana, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Libya, Malaya, Mexico, Morocco, Saudi-Arabia and Tunisia. South Africa would probably not be present. The USA announced its intention to speak to all of this last group and called on others to do likewise.

Commission Expansion

3. On the other hand the USA announced that there seemed to be little support for the idea of expanding the Disarmament Commission and Sub-Committee, which they considered to be purely an initiative of Menon. (Sisco told the Norwegians that Menon had offered to drop all other Indian proposals on disarmament if the USA would support the expansion proposal.) In particular Brazil had now agreed to speak and vote against the idea of expansion. The USA and UK expressed the hope that Menon's initiative on this could be forgotten in the larger debate; and that to this end it might be well to press for early resumption of the Sub-Committee proceedings, as called for in the Japanese resolution. The UK suggested that to avoid expansion it might be advisable to consider giving way on the other of Gromyko's proposals in this respect, namely full publicity for proceedings. He added that the substitution of publicity for secrecy would ease the position of the Foreign Office vis-à-vis the UK Parliament. The UK took a very strong line that the Assembly should not be allowed to usurp the Commission's responsibilities for the composition and procedure of the Sub-Committee. Quoting from the Prime Minister's statement⁹⁴ we suggested that possibly opinion in the Assembly had come to feel that existing machinery had proved unrewarding, and that it might be better to recognize this feeling. The USA felt that it was important to maintain the proposition that the Sub-Committee proceedings had shown cause for hope and that there was no need for change as long as this was true.

Order of Speaking

4. We agreed that if possible the order of speaking on disarmament of Sub-Committee members might be as follows: USA, UK or Canada, USSR, France (Moch will arrive only on October 7th, and in any case was accepted as the best speaker to reply to the Russians), Canada or UK. It was agreed that each speech should touch on all the disarmament items before the Committee in order to avoid having four separate debates. It was expected that as the Committee will first meet on October 8 this debate would probably begin the ninth.

5. Little was said about possible alternative tactics if a two-thirds majority for the USA resolution does not appear to be forthcoming, though you will recall that Lodge in the last meeting (see our telegram 1926 September 24⁺) recognized that it would be difficult to obtain. In this respect you may be interested in Vennemoe's suggestion that without more widespread support it might be necessary (as last year) to consider referring all disarmament proposals, including the separate suspension of tests, to the Sub-Committee for further discussion. Members of the UK Delegation in private conversation have also agreed that this might be the final outcome.

⁹⁴ Voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol. 9, N° 10, octobre 1957, pp. 283 à 286.

See Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 9, No. 10, October 1957, pp. 283-286.

129.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2114

New York, October 10, 1957

RESTRICTED. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 2097 Oct 9.†

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

By Bag Bonn, Moscow from London.

DISARMAMENT — WESTERN RESOLUTION

At a meeting of officials of the four Western Sub-Committee powers, the following version of the Western disarmament resolution was finally agreed on. It is expected that all of the co-sponsors will concur and that the resolution will be tabled tomorrow morning. Text Begins:

The General Assembly

Emphasizing the urgency of decreasing the danger of war and improving the prospects of a durable peace through achieving international agreement on reduction, limitation and open inspection of armaments and armed forces;

Welcoming the narrowing of differences which has resulted from the extensive negotiations in the Sub-Committee of the Disarmament Commission;

Believing that immediate, carefully measured steps can be taken for partial measures of disarmament and that such steps will facilitate further measures of disarmament;

Urges that the States concerned and particularly those on the Sub-Committee of the Disarmament Commission give priority to reaching a disarmament agreement which upon its entry into force provides for the following:

1. The immediate suspension of testing of nuclear weapons with the prompt installation of effective international control, including inspection posts equipped with appropriate scientific instruments located within the territories of the USA, the USSR, the UK, Pacific Ocean areas, and other points as required with consent of the States concerned;

2. The cessation of production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes and the complete devotion of future production of fissionable materials to non-weapons purposes under effective international control;

3. The reduction of stocks of nuclear weapons through a program of transfer on an equitable and reciprocal basis and under international supervision of stocks of fissionable material from weapons to non-weapons uses;

4. Reduction of armed forces and armaments through adequate safeguarded arrangements;

5. The progressive establishment of open inspection with ground and aerial components to guard against the possibility of surprise attack;

6. Joint study of an inspection system designed to ensure that the sending of objects through outer space will be exclusively for peaceful and scientific purposes.

Requests the Disarmament Commission to reconvene its Sub-Committee as soon as feasible for this purpose;

Requests the Sub-Committee to report to the Disarmament Commission by April 30, 1958 on the progress achieved. Ends.

130.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2298

New York, October 28, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

By Bag Moscow, Bonn from London.

DISARMAMENT MEETING OF WESTERN OFFICIALS

Today's meeting of officials of the Four Western Powers produced only limited agreement on the procedural tactics to be followed in the First Committee. All agreed that before voting began one of the Western co-sponsors should ask for and obtain priority for the Western resolution. Moch proposed that if and when the Western proposal was passed the remaining resolutions should be divided into two categories: those contradictory to the Western proposal and those not. In the latter category he classed only the Belgian proposal and the Indian resolution on Commission expansion. Moch wished a majority resolution not to vote on any of the former category at all, as they would have been in effect negated by the vote in favour of the Western proposal.

2. Stassen felt it would be undesirable to treat these resolutions in such a summary fashion, unless, as was most unlikely, their sponsors agreed. He felt that the West would be seen in a better light if they merely asked for these resolutions to be referred to the Commission as evidence, not of the opinions of the Assembly, but of the state of mind of the countries which had proposed them and which (in the case of the USSR) must ultimately be party to a unanimous agreement. We supported Stassen in opposing Moch's suggestion that such resolutions as the Japanese and Indian should be prevented by majority resolution from coming to a vote. We argued that such a procedure would cause resentment in the states concerned and perhaps among other members of the Committee. Moch seemed inclined to come round to our way of thinking.

3. The same divergence of opinion occurred over the question of possible amendments to the Western proposals, and in particular the Western attitude towards the Secretary General's proposition.⁹⁵ Moch seemed quite sure of a two-thirds majority and felt that it would only complicate and possibly injure matters for the West to accept any kind of amendment at this late stage. Noble also felt that the existing resolution should preferably not be interfered with and that compromise, if necessary, should come elsewhere, for example on procedural matters. Later, he said he could see the reason for Stassen's conciliatory approach: but one could only proceed in this direction after very careful consideration. Stassen seemed considerably less sure of a two-thirds majority and said that to insist rigidly on the words of the resolution might lose it. The USA had been asked both by some NATO governments and Latin American states to show some indication of flexibility and receptivity to the ideas put forward in the Assembly debate. Therefore, without conceding any matters of principle, it was important to avoid seeming arbitrary; he referred in this respect to the line taken by Mr. Smith's speech⁹⁶ in particular, he thought it would be good for the West to accept some form of amendment, if this were possible: and that after obtaining priority the other sponsors might be consulted on this. He admitted that he had no specific amendment in mind, but was thinking of something along the lines of the Secretary General's proposal. While we did not express ourselves on the question of accepting amendments to the resolution, our preliminary view is that if such an amendment was reasonable in itself and was put forward from a friendly quarter, it might be hard to resist its inclusion particularly for us in view of the flexible position taken in Mr. Smith's statement in the Committee to which reference has been made by a number of delegations. On the other hand there is always the complication that once we begin to accept amendments, it may not be easy to draw the line. We should be grateful for your views on this point.

⁹⁵ Le 16 octobre 1957, le secrétaire général a proposé la formation d'un comité d'experts techniques dont les membres proviendraient des pays non représentés au Sous-comité de la Commission du désarmement, et qui aurait pour mandat de faire enquête sur le problème de l'inspection dans le contexte d'une éventuelle cessation des essais nucléaires.

On October 16, 1957, the Secretary General proposed the formation of a committee of technical experts from countries not represented on the Sub-Committee of the Disarmament Commission to investigate the problem of inspection in connection with the potential cessation of nuclear tests.

4. At this point Moch strongly opposed the Secretary General's ideas: he made it clear he feared that, in the absence of more widespread agreement between the great powers, any technical panel would be able to discuss the controls of tests suspension only. He also argued rather unconvincingly that the convening of such a panel would cause the existing Sub-Committee to be adjourned for at least a year. Finally he referred to the failures of preceding technical commissions.

5. Noble did not concur in these objections: he thought the proposal in some form might be accepted. Stassen showed some considerable interest in the Secretary General's proposal: he thought it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the Russians to boycott any such scientific panel under UN auspices. He had been glad to hear from the Secretary General that this Committee would report to the UN through the Commission and Sub-Committee, so that it could not get out of hand. Nor did he feel that the technical panel's discussions would prejudice the date on which the Sub-Committee resumed discussion. At the same time he admitted that the technical discussion of controlling a production cutoff, involving the release of classified information, would have to await some kind of treaty on this matter. On the other hand, the techniques of aerial inspection could be discussed immediately. Stassen added that as he understood it the Secretary General foresaw that two or three other countries would be added to those represented on the Sub-Committee, the choice of which would depend partly on the personnel available. For example, he had in mind Eklund of Denmark. Noble felt that there should be several technical groups, each seized with a particular problem; and Stassen agreed that the experts' work should be as diversified as possible.

⁹⁶ Voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol. 9, N° 11, novembre 1957, pp. 347 à 350.

See Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 9, No. 11, November 1957, pp. 346-348.

6. At this point Sisco of the USA pointed out that the Secretary General's proposal could not be considered a procedural matter; and therefore any action on it must be taken before the voting began. It was therefore agreed to discuss this matter again on Wednesday in the light of the new Soviet proposal for a permanent commission, the text of which had not, at that time, been released (see our telegram 2289 October 28†). It was agreed to oppose the Yugoslav resolution (which the USSR would also likely do) and also the Ecuador proposal for a working group, which as a procedural matter will probably be raised from the floor when the voting is finished. It was agreed to withhold judgement until Wednesday on the best way to deal with the disposing of the other resolution, and with the Secretary General's proposal.

7. Your views on these matters will be appreciated.

131.

DEA/50189-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM V-687

Ottawa, October 29, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 2298 of Oct 28.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris, Bonn (Information).

By Bag Moscow.

DISARMAMENT TACTICS

We agree that it would be unsound to try by majority decision to prevent voting on the Japanese and Indian proposals having in mind their express desire for a vote. We suggest, however, that your colleagues may wish to consider whether use could be made of the undoubted Western ability to arrange such a decision in order to persuade the Japanese and Indian Delegations to refrain from supporting the Soviet proposals on prohibition of use and suspension of tests.

2. We are doubtful about Stassen's notion of referring the resolutions to the Commission if they are voted upon. However we see no objection to adding a clause to the 24-power draft resolution which would transmit the record of the discussion in the First Committee to the Commission.

3. It is not clear to us that the Secretary-General's proposal would have to appear as an amendment to the 24-power text. On the basis of your telegram 2184 of October 16† we were inclined to regard it as a possible substitute for the Japanese, Indian and Soviet proposals concerning tests. We were therefore somewhat surprised by the discussion reported in paragraph 4 and 5 of your telegram under reference. We doubt that the same experts could deal competently with aerial inspection, the verification of suspension and the supervision of production cut-off. If the Secretary-General envisages a technical body with comprehensive terms of reference which might embrace all or most of the groups envisaged in the August 29 proposals, we would wish to examine a text before expressing an opinion.

4. On the question of amendments we consider it desirable to maintain the attitude of readiness to entertain suggestions indicated in our October 23 statement. However, that statement may perhaps be interpreted as reflecting flexibility with respect more to the August 29 proposals than to the 24-power draft resolution. Thus we consider that the six general objectives laid down in operative paragraph one of the draft resolution should be maintained in their essentials.

5. While we regard the present text as consistent throughout we would not object to additions to the preamble concerning further goals such as that suggested in paragraph 4 of our telegram V-676 of October 21. † Similarly we would be inclined in principle to accept a suitable formulation concerning the economic assistance which might flow from savings realized by disarmament. However, if such additions are thought to be useful to gain support we suggest that the drafting make clear the distinction between such ultimate goals and the more immediate objectives of a first stage agreement.

6. With regard to the disposition of the remaining resolutions we agree that you should vote against the Yugoslav proposals. The three Soviet proposals and the Indian proposals on tests and on establishing a new commission for special purposes should also be voted against if they are pressed to a vote. On the Indian proposal for enlargement of the Commission and Sub-Committee we consider that you should abstain unless our partners take a more favourable attitude towards it.

132.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2322

New York, October 30, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2298 Oct 28.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris, Bonn from Ottawa (Information).

By Bag Moscow from London.

DISARMAMENT

The following are some general considerations which have occurred to us in connection with the progress of the disarmament debate in the General Assembly as it approaches the stage when voting will take place on the resolutions. It may be that the voting stage will now be reached this week and it is possible that today may be the last day of the general debate. It is hard to assess the degree of sentiment in the Assembly in favour of resolutions in favour of immediate and isolated test suspension with proper inspection. The roll call of the vote which we hope to obtain in favour of our own resolution may not give the entire picture. We have the impression that even among our supporters there is a pretty widespread residual anxiety about the continuance of tests and that this has not been substantially allayed by arguments about "the clean bomb" or the degree of radiation to which mankind may be safely exposed. The Russians have cashed in on this sentiment and even if they are defeated in the Assembly vote they will continue to cash in. This is all the more annoying because it seems quite probable that the last thing they really want at this stage in their weapons development is the cessation of tests with really effective inspection. In other words, they have told the big lie and got away with it.

2. On our side we continue, of course, our array of arguments against isolated test suspension but in the USA Delegation there are some signs that this attitude does not entirely correspond with the personal views of at least some members of the delegation. These indications probably tell us more about the viewpoint of Mr. Stassen and his close associates than they do about policies likely to be followed in Washington. The fact remains, however, that so far as this delegation are aware, the USA authorities have never given an explanation, based on needs of USA security or of their weapons development programme, as to why they could not accept a suspension of tests with proper controls if the USSR were prepared to do likewise. In default of an explanation we are left to assume that the main reason for the Western rejection of such proposals lies in the disruptive effect which their acceptance would have upon some of our NATO allies, particularly the UK and France.

3. Turning from this background consideration to the problems of tactics in getting our resolution through the General Assembly, you will have observed from our telegram 2298 that there is a good deal of confidence among the Sub-Committee powers that we shall get a substantial and possibly a two-thirds majority — although the USA Delegation is now more cautious than it was — for our resolution. This is, of course, very satisfactory so far as it goes as it means a wholesome check to the USSR and implies that the Assembly has not been taken in by their propaganda.

In this respect we have been helped by the aggressive attitude of Gromyko who has not been making any new friends for Russia during this session of the Assembly to date. Some of our support has of course come from the loyal adherents of certain governments to a Western position just because it is a Western position. On the other hand there have been a number of well reasoned statements from our supporters in favour of our resolution and some have put considerable weight upon our case for the link between test suspension and the cut-off of production, although we may question whether the general public here or in other countries has been much influenced by arguments for this “link” which indeed has been little understood by the public at large. More easily comprehensible and more effective has been the Western insistence on valid and adequate inspection which has come to be widely recognized as the crux of the disarmament problem.

4. In any event, therefore, we may expect to get our resolution voted and, we hope, by a comfortable margin. However, as pointed out in our telegram 2298, Stassen considers that there will be attempts to amend the resolution, and that if these are reasonable and come from friendly quarters we should try to incorporate some amendment, while the French and British are inclined to oppose this. Having in mind the Canadian position as put in our statement to the Committee, (which has been commended in the speeches of a number of delegations including Norway, Nepal, Egypt and Israel), we should probably find it difficult to oppose an amendment of this nature, especially if the USA was willing to accept it. It is still too early to say what form such an amendment would take. Stassen seemed to be contemplating that some delegation may propose an amendment incorporating the idea of the Secretary General's special panel of disarmament experts to study the question of inspection. If however, such a body concentrated exclusively on inspection in connection with the cessation of tests it might be widely held to point the way to test suspension as an isolated step. The amendment might, therefore, have to be worded to take in other forms of inspection also. Indeed, this whole project of accepting an amendment to our resolution will have to be handled with care. There is always the danger that certain governments which have sponsored or supported our resolution may feel that the position they have taken has been undercut by any concessions to more dubious friends.

5. A parallel situation may come about in connection with proposals for the expansion of the Sub-Committee which may arise when the Indian resolution on this subject is voted upon. The Canadian Delegation might find it hard to vote against that resolution in view of our general attitude on this question. But we may find that other supporters of our resolution, a number of whom have argued pretty strongly in the Assembly against any change in the present disarmament machinery, will be disgruntled if changes are now accepted. This may be especially a problem for the USA if they decide to accept an expansion of the Sub-Committee in view of the firm line which they took earlier on against any such expansion. Those who have loyally hewed to the earlier USA line on this subject may be disconcerted if it is changed. There will also be a tendency for the attitude of the sponsoring powers on this question of the expansion of the Sub-Committee to be influenced by the size of estimated support for our resolution. In other words, some may argue: if we can get away with the continuance of the Sub-Committee in its present form, why not do so?

6. Meanwhile, the Soviet Delegation have produced their resolution, outline in my telegram 2289 October 28, for setting up what amounts to the First Committee in permanent session on disarmament and at the same time abolishing the Sub-Committee and the Disarmament Commission. We do not yet know how much support they may be able to collect for this proposal, but we are inclined to think that it will not be a popular one. It is of some interest that the Soviet government while proposing to abolish the Sub-Committee, state that under their proposal opportunities would present themselves for direct negotiations between states or group of states on disarmament. Kuznetsov emphasized this point in private conversation with Noble of UK Delegation yesterday. Soviet dislike for the Sub-Committee is no doubt partly based on the fact that in this framework there is continuing consultation between the USA and our principal allies and that joint and agreed Western positions result. They may hope under the looser arrangements foreseen in their proposal to open up separate and perhaps divisive negotiations with individual Western governments, particularly with the USA itself. Incidentally, the Soviet proposal for the abolition of the Sub-Committee may imply that in future they will refuse to serve on this body.

7. When all the resolutions are voted the question will remain as to whether there is any immediate outlook for serious progress over disarmament at this time. The successful passage of our resolution will not, of course, guarantee any such progress. On the Western side there seems to be a tendency among the Sub-Committee members to consider that a pause of some months should ensue after the Assembly debate before negotiations are resumed. It seems to be the French and British view, although American attitude is less clear. There also seems to be a belief among the Western Powers that the Soviet government also wishes for an interval of some months before negotiations are taken up again.

8. Mr. Moch has reverted in private conversation to his view that these months should be occupied on the Western side (and he hopes on the Soviet side) in reviewing our present positions with the object of seeing whether there is a possibility of modifications to find common ground. It is certainly hard at this stage to foresee what form these modifications might take. Perhaps the Irish representative in the First Committee was right when he expressed the view in his statement that progress on disarmament is unlikely unless some first steps were taken towards the solution of outstanding political problems, particularly in Europe and the MidEast.

9. Since drafting this telegram, we have received your V-687 on disarmament tactics which should be very helpful to us. Things may develop rather fast in the Assembly once we come to the stage of voting on resolutions and there will be the inevitable tactical manoeuvres and unexpected developments. We shall, of course, keep as closely as possible in touch with you but we may have to make decisions in short order. We are therefore particularly glad to have the guidance contained in your telegram V-687.

10. We shall be commenting separately on certain specific points raised in your telegram.

133.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion hebdomadaire des directions

Extract from Weekly Divisional Notes

SECRET

Ottawa, November 14, 1957

...

THE UNITED NATIONS

1. Disarmament

UNITED NATIONS DIVISION: (See Weekly Divisional Notes No. 39 of October 10,† and No. 42 of October 31)†. Voting on the draft resolutions and amendments under the disarmament item took place in the First Committee on November 6. Of the ten resolutions before the Committee only two were adopted: (i) a 24-power resolution based on the Western proposals of August 29, which was passed by 57 votes in favour (including Canada), 9 against (Soviet bloc) and 15 abstentions; (ii) a Belgian resolution providing for "collective action to inform and enlighten the peoples of the world" of the dangers of the armaments race and effects of modern weapons, which was adopted by 70 votes in favour (including Canada), 9 against (Soviet bloc) and 2 abstentions.

Of the remaining draft resolutions, four were defeated and four were not pressed to a vote. The Indian draft resolution on nuclear weapons tests, the Japanese proposal on the same question, the Soviet proposal for a temporary renunciation of the use of nuclear weapons, and the Soviet draft resolution calling for the replacement of the Disarmament Commission and its Sub-Committee by a permanent disarmament commission were all rejected. Not pressed to a vote were: two Indian proposals dealing respectively with the expansion of the Disarmament Commission and its Sub-Committee, and with special arrangements for negotiating on a number of matters related to production of fissionable materials, nuclear weapons and control of conventional armaments; a Soviet draft resolution calling for the suspension of nuclear weapons tests; and a Yugoslav draft resolution proposing several initial measures of disarmament. (Unclassified)

...

134.

DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion hebdomadaire des directionsExtract from Weekly Divisional Notes

SECRET

Ottawa, November 21, 1957

. . .

PART A

THE UNITED NATIONS

1. Disarmament — Voting on Resolutions in the General Assembly

UNITED NATIONS DIVISION: During the past week five resolutions on disarmament, and amendments to them, were voted on in plenary sessions of the General Assembly.

The 24-power resolution dealing with several measures of disarmament, and the Belgian resolution calling for an information campaign to inform the peoples of the world of the dangers of the armaments race, both of which had been recommended for adoption by the First Committee, were put to a vote in the General Assembly on November 14. The 24-power resolution was passed by a vote of 57 in favour (including Canada) and 9 against (Soviet bloc), with 14 abstentions. The Belgian proposal was adopted by a vote of 71 in favour (including Canada) and 9 against (Soviet bloc), with one abstention.

Two resolutions which had already been rejected in the First Committee were re-introduced in the General Assembly, and a vote was taken on them on November 19. The Soviet proposal to replace the Disarmament Commission and its Sub-Committee by a permanent disarmament commission composed of all members of the United Nations was rejected by a vote of 9 in favour (Soviet bloc) and 46 against (including Canada), with 24 abstentions. An Indian resolution proposing a suspension of nuclear tests was also rejected by a vote of 24 in favour and 34 against (including Canada), with 20 abstentions.

Also put to a vote on November 19 was a draft resolution co-sponsored by six powers (including Canada) which called for an expansion of the Disarmament Commission by fourteen members. The members to be added for 1958 would be Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, India, Italy, Mexico, Norway, Poland, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. Though it had been hoped that it might be possible to obtain unanimous support for this resolution, it was learned on the evening prior to the voting that the suggested list of additions would not be satisfactory to the Soviet Union. On the day of the vote, Albania introduced an amendment proposing the addition of a further seven states to the Commission (Austria, Bulgaria, Indonesia, Roumania, Sudan, Finland and Ceylon). This amendment was defeated by a vote of 19 in favour and 38 against (including Canada), with 19 abstentions. The six power resolution was then adopted by a vote of 60 in favour (including Canada) and 9 against (Soviet bloc), with 11 abstentions. Prior to the voting on the Albanian amendment, the Soviet, Polish and Czechoslovak representatives had announced that unless it was accepted they would not be willing to participate in the work of the expanded Disarmament Commission.⁹⁷ (Unclassified)

⁹⁷ Pour les textes officiels de la résolution présentée par 24 pays, (1148 (XII)), de la résolution belge (1149 (XII)), et de la résolution présentée par six pays (1150 (XII)), voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, douzième session, Supplément N° 18 (A/3805), pp. 3 à 4.

For the official texts of the 24-power resolution (1148 (XII)), the Belgian resolution (1149 (XII)), and the six-power resolution (1150 (XII)), see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Twelfth Session, Supplement No. 18 (A/3805), pp. 3-4.

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III
DÉLIBÉRATIONS DU CONSEIL DE SÉCURITÉ SECURITY COUNCIL DELIBERATIONS

135.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 28, 1958

Present

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the Chair,
The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming),
The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees),
The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer),
The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes),
The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
The Minister of Justice and
Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton),
The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness),
The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Browne),
The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois),
The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Alvin Hamilton),
The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith).
The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
The Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Martin),
The Registrar of the Cabinet (Mr. Halliday).

DISARMAMENT; ARCTIC ZONE OF INSPECTION

1. The Prime Minister said that the United States intended to present to the United Nations Security Council, on April 29th, a proposal for the establishment of a northern zone of inspection against surprise attack, comprising the area within the Arctic Circle together with Alaska, the Kamchatka Peninsula and their island chains, but omitting northern Sweden and Finland unless those countries wished to participate. The draft proposals provided for the designation of representatives by Canada, Denmark, France, Norway, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States to participate in discussions on the technical arrangements required.

The proposal, in effect, detached from the disarmament plan approved by Cabinet last August that part of the provision relating to safeguards against surprise attack which was of direct concern to Canada. A zone in Europe was not included, and France and the U.K. would not be directly affected.

This U.S. initiative was being taken partly to follow up the advantage gained by the Soviet withdrawal in the Security Council of charges that flights by aircraft of the U.S.

Strategic Air Command constituted a threat to peace⁹⁸ and, partly in the hope that arrangements in the north might contribute to security. The Prime Minister of the U.K. was prepared to support the plan strongly provided it was acceptable to Canada. Canada had stated previously that she was prepared to open all or part of her territory to aerial and ground inspection under a plan which would include comparable areas of the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister recommend that the U.S. initiative be supported and that the Prime Minister of the U.K. be advised accordingly.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated (Prime Minister's memorandum, April 28, 1958-Cab. Doc. 80/58)†

2. Mr. Diefenbaker added that he had discussed the matter with the U.S. Ambassador over the weekend. He had told Mr. Merchant that it would have been infinitely preferable for Canada to have sponsored the initiative herself. The Soviet Union had said that it had proof that Canada was assisting the U.S. in activities which might lead to a sudden attack on the U.S.S.R. Canada was quite prepared to have its northern areas inspected to show that these charges were without foundation, provided the U.S.S.R. would also agree to inspection of her north. Canada was not suspect by the nations who had come to believe that the U.S.S.R. had made a case. If Canada were to suggest the course proposed in the Security Council, it would be much harder, if not impossible, for the U.S.S.R. to brush it aside, than if the U.S. were to take the initiative. Mr. Merchant had replied that since President Eisenhower had originally suggested the "open skies" plan, it would be embarrassing for the U.S., as it were, to take second place in these discussions. The U.S. hoped Canada would co-sponsor the plan, the outlines of which had already been made public.

There seemed to be no alternative but to approve the proposal and support the U.S. but Canada should not be a co-sponsor. The attitude of the U.S. was quite unfortunate and as a result the plan would probably come to nothing.

3. During the discussion it was pointed out that the position of Greenland was not known. The Canadian Permanent Representative and Ambassador to the United Nations had had a brief but interesting discussion with the Soviet representative, who had said that the north of both Canada and the U.S.S.R. were wastes, with no installations of any account in them, and had quietly ridiculed the inspection plan.

4. The Cabinet noted the report of the Prime Minister on the disarmament proposal to be made by the United States in the United Nations Security Council for the establishment of a northern zone of inspection, consisting for the moment of the area within the Arctic Circle, together with Alaska, the Kamchatka Peninsula and their island chains, and agreed,

(a) that the plan be approved and supported but that Canada should not co-sponsor it; and,

(b) that the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom be informed of this position.

⁹⁸ Pour un compte rendu de la réunion du Conseil de sécurité tenue le 21 avril 1958 concernant la plainte des soviétiques, voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol 10, Nos 4 à 5, avril-mai 1958, pp. 90-94.

For an account of the Security Council meeting on April 21, 1958 dealing with the Soviet complaint see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 10, Nos. 4-5, April-May 1958, pp. 90-94.

136.

DEA/50271-E-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 661

New York, May 1, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris (Information).

By Bag Moscow, Bonn, Oslo from London.

SECURITY COUNCIL: DISARMAMENT

On April 29 the Security Council took up the USA proposal concerning an Arctic inspection zone. Also before the Council was a new Soviet draft resolution which was the one of April 21 plus a paragraph bringing in the Summit Conference.

2. On a point of order Sobolev asked whether Lodge intended to vacate the chair in accordance with rule 20 of the provisional rules of the Council. A move of this kind had been anticipated at a meeting of the Western Four on the previous day. They had agreed that Lodge should not repeat not be driven out as a result of Soviet insinuations and other members of the Council would in effect give Lodge a vote of confidence. The representatives of UK, Panama and France did just this and Lodge stayed in the chair.

3. Lodge introduced the USA proposal and drew attention to Eisenhower's appeal to Khrushchev to support this proposal. He stressed that the SAC flights were a necessary defensive measure but that if the danger of surprise attack were removed the 'need for this defence could be correspondingly lessened'. He quoted supporting remarks from the statements of other members in the Council on April 21. He traced the history of the open skies proposal and effectively used statements by Khrushchev, Bulganin, and Gromyko which indicated a positive if vague reaction to proposals for inspection to guard against surprise attack.

4. Lodge made clear that the USA proposal was made entirely apart from the general topic of disarmament and stated that the USA was not repeat not attempting by this move to bring the subject of disarmament before the Council. He produced a map of the proposed Arctic Zone. (Copy sent to Ottawa by bag.) He informed the Council that Denmark and Norway had agreed to open their territory to the proposed system of inspection. He ended by saying that "The States concerned must work out the actual inspection system, which means that the final product must be satisfactory to all of them."

5. Lodge's statement was a model of restraint. His quotations from statements of Soviet leaders were selected to convey the impression that the proposal put forward by the USA was not repeat not incompatible with the stand taken by the USSR and that the USA hoped that the scheme would be treated as a genuine attempt to reach a first step on inspection which might, in turn, lead to the other steps necessary for a general disarmament agreement.

6. By prearrangement Jarring of Sweden spoke next. You will recall that he was silent during the earlier debate on the Soviet item and his speech giving support to the USA proposal was all the more telling. After accepting the USA resolution Jarring expressed preference for an additional paragraph concerning the summit discussions. We have discussed this in detail in a separate telegram.

7. In marked contrast to Lodge's statement Sobolev's statement was harshly negative. He repeated the charges about the provocative actions of SAC aircraft and spoke of the USA proposal as a "diversionary manoeuvre." He complained about the lopsided membership of the proposed technical group and about the USA's continued reliance on an arithmetical majority of votes in the UN. He restated that in the Soviet government's view the solution of international questions, especially disarmament, could be found only at a summit conference. He referred to the disarmament proposals which the USSR had submitted for the agenda of that conference.

8. The USA proposal had of course not repeat not come as a surprise to Sobolev, so his attitude must have reflected instructions from Moscow. Gromyko had the same day made a toughly negative statement for the press. A negative response from the USSR had not repeat not been ruled out as a possibility by the Western representatives here but these flatly uncompromising pronouncements were sharply in contrast to the general lines of the Council debate.

9. The text of our statement was sent to you yesterday.⁹⁹ It was followed by somewhat colourless interventions by Georges-Picot and Dixon. In both these statements there was a tendency to regard the packaged proposals of last summer as the really substantial position of the West on disarmament.

10. Matsudaira said that the USA proposal was limited, but he welcomed it as "a significant first step towards disarmament." In commenting on the inspection zone, he reserved the position of his government on the status of the Kurile islands.

11. The representatives of Panama, Iraq and China also made statements in support of the USA proposal. Tsiang was privately unhappy about the Swedish amendment and expressed an oblique reservation about it. Lodge then expressed his regret at the nature of Sobolev's statement and said "We hope that the passage of a few days will result in a change of mind."

12. Lodge's statement set the debate on a constructive course which other members, except Sobolev, followed with varying enthusiasm. This created a very favourable impression on other representatives in the Council chamber and presumably on the public here and elsewhere. The net result was a build-up of pressure on the USSR to reconsider its negative stand. The Secretary General's intervention has been assessed in a separate telegram.

13. We believe that if the Western Powers can maintain the momentum of the current trend in the Council, the balance of advantage will be decidedly in their favour. For this reason we have been encouraging USA officials to continue the tone of restraint and constructiveness which has characterized USA statements so far. They should resist, in our view, the temptation to score relatively trivial propaganda points and to be overly exultant about the response from other Council members, in particular, of course, Sweden and Japan. At this state it seems hard to believe that the USSR will shift its stand to the extent of an abstention but there is no repeat no denying the USA contention that the stakes are high.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

⁹⁹ Voir/See Department of External Affairs, Statements and Speeches, 1958, No. 58/17.

137.

DEA/50271-E-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 675

New York, May 2, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).
By Bag Moscow, Bonn, Oslo from London.

DISARMAMENT: SECURITY COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

As prearranged this morning's proceedings in the Security Council on the Soviet item began with a brief statement from Lodge accepting the Swedish amendment but with the slight change desired by the USA. Jarring responded in kind. Dixon made a short statement mainly to give the UK interpretation of the Swedish amendment. Sobolev followed with an uncompromising restatement of Soviet opposition to the USA proposal which, he said, had the expected support of those in military alliance with the USA. He reiterated the Soviet propaganda points concerning the SAC flights and the "diversionary manoeuvre", which was designed to blind the uninitiated to the justice of the Soviet complaint. Briefly but sharply he criticized the Secretary General's endorsement of the USA move. Sobolev's statement would fully support a veto though he did not repeat not say how he would vote. The USA mission informed us that Sobolev had indicated privately to Jarring that the USSR would use its veto; and that Suslov had said to them that the USSR could not repeat not possibly abstain on the USA proposal.

2. Just before the meeting opened the Secretary General stated emphatically to me his opinion that to press the USA draft resolution to the vote in the face of apparent Soviet opposition and of Dulles' remarks yesterday at his press conference,¹⁰⁰ would be "political madness" but he did not repeat not elaborate. We passed this information to the USA mission and said that it substantiated our own misgivings but our understanding is that the Secretary General did not repeat not speak in the same sense to Lodge. During this morning's meeting the UK mission reverted privately to their arguments against insisting on a vote. At the noon adjournment, however, Lodge had firm instructions from Washington to proceed with the vote.

3. Lodge's preference would have been for a vote before lunch but he agreed with Dixon and others that before the vote there should be further consultation, particularly among the Western Four. This fitted in with Matsudaira's plan to propose a recess before the vote. Lodge had previously persuaded Matsudaira not repeat not to press for an adjournment until next week. This morning after Sobolev had spoken, Matsudaira made a short statement which emphasized the undesirability of having the Council's proceedings end with a veto. He urged that the veto not repeat not be used, that the constructive approach reflected in the USA proposal should be treated as a point of departure for serious negotiations whether at summit or elsewhere on the broader questions of disarmament. It turned out that Matsudaira's motion for adjournment corresponded with lunch hour.

¹⁰⁰ Voir/See United States, Department of State Bulletin, Volume XXXVIII, No. 986, May 19, 1958, pp. 804-810.

4. Just before this afternoon's Council the four Western members of the Sub-Committee met and eventually agreed that there would be a vote on the USA draft as amended and to vote down the Soviet proposal. We discussed the case against pressing for a vote (your telegram V-177 of May 1†) but since Dixon had decided that a vote should take place and Georges-Picot appeared indifferent, Lodge was not repeat not disposed to depart from his instructions.

5. Nothing that was said or done during the lunch hour seemed to have altered the positions of the principal parties concerned as they had appeared before the adjournment. Lodge made a brief statement further clarifying the position of the USA on the Swedish amendment and quoted Dulles on the USA position regarding a summit conference. The USA resolution¹⁰¹ was then put to a vote. The draft was supported by ten members of the Council but vetoed by Sobolev. Lodge then made a statement for the record drawing attention to this eighty-third veto on the part of the Soviet Union and ended with the statement that the USA would continue to strive for peace at the UN and in any other forum where negotiations might have a chance of success. Sobolev replied that the fact that the USA resolution was pressed to vote, although it had been clear that the Soviet Union could not repeat not support it, demonstrated the proposal had not repeat not been a serious one.

6. The Soviet proposal was then put to the vote. It was rejected by nine votes with one abstention (Sweden), and supported only by USSR. The Council then adjourned.

7. We hope to send you a more comprehensive analysis of the whole debate on the Soviet complaint when we have had the opportunity to reflect upon it further. My preliminary conclusion is that there was nothing in the Soviet statements today to give a shadow of hope that the USSR would give serious consideration to the USA proposal and on balance it may be that a vote was desirable to make this beyond argument. Moreover the USSR showed no repeat no interest even in exploiting the obvious opportunities like the Secretary General's reference to tests and Dulles' suggestion that SAC flights might be suspended pending technical discussions of Arctic inspection.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

138.

DEA/50271-E-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Permanent Representative to United Nations
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 703

New York, May 7, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 675 May 2.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

By Bag Bonn, Oslo, Moscow, Tokyo, Stockholm.

¹⁰¹ Voir/See United States, Department of State Bulletin, Volume XXXVIII, No. 986, May 19, 1958, p. 820.

RECENT SOVIET ITEM IN SECURITY COUNCIL

We have concluded that it might be worthwhile to attempt an analysis of the recent exercise in the Security Council on the Soviet item. We would, of course, welcome any comments on our assessment especially from those more directly concerned with the foreign policy of the USSR and the USA. I believe that there may be several quite important lessons to be learned from the recent proceedings which might help to prepare us in a general way for the Thirteenth Session of the General Assembly.

2. The timing of the Soviet complaint about the SAC flights, especially in view of the diplomatic consultations which were just beginning in Moscow, caught the attention of many observers here. One obvious conclusion, which principal officials in the USA mission tended to accept, was that the Soviet government had decided that it neither needed nor wanted a summit conference this year and that, therefore, the Soviet intention in bringing the complaint was to irritate the USA to the extent of either breaking off preparatory talks or responding with such violence that an eventual break-off of summit preparations would be inevitable. Certainly on April 18 the immediate reaction in UN circles was that the USSR had taken a step which could not repeat not but cast a blight on summit prospects. Yugoslav officials here were downcast and mystified; the Indians seemed puzzled.

3. Another explanation which tended to emerge later in the Council proceedings, especially after the USA had launched its proposal for Arctic inspection, was that the Soviet leaders, or at least the Khrushchev clique, had blundered into the complaint in much the same way as they had, according to a prevailing thesis, brought on the Syrian item at the Twelfth Session of the Assembly. This step, which came to be regarded later as a tactical error, was said to be the impulsive initiative of Khrushchev, who took it largely for domestic reasons and without the advice of his professional advisers. According to this theory Khrushchev saw advantage in exploiting USA articles, like the one of April 7 by Bartholomew of the UP, and had the complaint about SAC lodged without a proper assessment of possible consequences. This would explain the apparent indifference or awkwardness with which the Soviet representative dealt with the USA Arctic proposal; in other words because the Soviet move was ill-conceived or perhaps designed merely for temporary or local purposes, the Soviet government lost interest in the exercise when it began to backfire. You may recall that this seemed to be the pattern during the Syrian proceedings in the Assembly.

4. Whatever other considerations might have been involved, the Soviet complaint must have been calculated to make propaganda gains. Quite apart from the profound and widespread anxiety about an accidental outbreak of nuclear war, the Soviet propagandists could not repeat not have been unaware of the public sentiment in such countries as the UK and West Germany about over-flights of USA bombers carrying nuclear weapons. There were other developments, like the accidental dropping of a nuclear device from a bomber in the USA, the selling campaign against nuclear tests; the pronouncements, by leaders like Nehru, concerning the inherent dangers in having flights of aircraft armed with nuclear weapons. It could have been that the USSR was merely looking for a further opportunity to make substantial gains through what was essentially a propaganda move; the benefit from the unilateral declaration concerning the suspension of nuclear tests was obvious enough. However, if the USSR aim was mainly in the field of propaganda, it is curious that the Soviet representative in the Security Council seemed content to restate the same arguments, somewhat mechanically toward the end of the debate, without exploiting other opportunities for propaganda which were presented to him and which, if exploited, could have made considerable difficulty for the Western Powers. I refer, in particular, to the Secretary General's reference to nuclear tests in his intervention of April 29 and to Dulles' remarks concerning the possible reduction or suspension of SAC arrangements for meeting surprise attack.

5. There was, of course, one strong reason why the USSR might not repeat not wish to have been drawn into a discussion which was in any way related to previous UN proceedings concerning disarmament. The USSR during the past six months has taken a strong stand against discussing disarmament questions in international bodies, either which take decision by majority or in which the USSR and its supporters are clearly outnumbered. This applies in particular to UN bodies like the Disarmament Commission and Sub-Committee and the Security Council but not repeat not, if the Soviet position of last autumn still holds, to the General Assembly. This so-called principle of parity which the USSR has been pressing has a false basis but it also has an attractive ring, especially for UN members like the African-Asians who themselves have frequently complained about representation in various UN organs. Accordingly, it might be the current policy of the Soviet government not repeat not to participate in UN discussion of subjects which are of direct concern to the USSR and mainly East-West issues. This could be a reaction against the USA tendency to bring international issues before the UN. It could be part of a Soviet design to focus international attention on a summit conference which would not repeat not follow the pattern of post-war talks among the big Four but would involve new grouping of powers, some of whose interests would be far removed from post-war aims of the Western three and such performance at the summit, therefore, would probably tend to favour the USSR.

6. So much for the Soviet motives. The Soviet complaint in the Security Council could have been met in several ways. In outraged indignation the USA could have denounced the Soviet complaint as frivolous and insulting. There could have been a cold war contest with no repeat no holds barred. The USA would in any event have probably had sufficient support to prevent any Soviet proposal from being adopted and might even have been able to block the adoption of the agenda.

7. Alternatively, the USA could have turned the other cheek and tried to meet the Soviet complaint by launching at an appropriate stage in the debate an initiative designed to head off the USSR or even to deal seriously with the situation which was implicit in the complaint about SAC flights, that is, the danger of accidental war. As we mentioned earlier, the debate on April 21 provided a solid foundation for a constructive initiative to deal with that situation. For reasons which we have explained the debate was adjourned that same day largely at the insistence of the USA chairman.

8. Still another alternative, and this was the one which the USA more or less adopted, was to deal quietly but firmly with the Soviet complaint, to demonstrate that it was only for purposes of propaganda and to assure the world that USA actions were defensive and its intention was to minimize the risk of accidents. This response was satisfactory as far as it went but, to some extent because of the hasty procedure whereby the debate was adjourned on April 21, the USA reply lost some of its attraction. Support for the USA, which had rallied effectively in the Council and among other UN members, tended to disperse. Whether it was this reaction or a belated realization that the Soviet complaint might afford a useful opportunity for a Western initiative, the USA decided after a few days' hesitation to launch the proposal for an international inspection zone in the Arctic.

9. This was a sound proposal and displayed obvious advantages. With appropriate cooperation from all concerned it could have done much to allay anxiety about surprise attack and accidental war. The presentation of the proposal, however, was jeopardized by premature leaks to the press. Moreover, the interpretation by the press, interpretation which was not repeat not corrected from USA sources, of subsequent developments in the debate, like the Secretary General's intervention, made it virtually certain that the USSR would have had to reject the proposal, even if the Soviet government had been interested in it. Because of the press leaks, moreover, the initiative had to be launched without adequate preparation. Although there was considerable consultation in some quarters, the subsequent proceedings in the Council might have been more fruitful if the overall strategy had been mapped carefully. There was an unfortunate tendency on the part of the USA to move from A to B and so on.

10. Another difficulty was that the UK and France had differing aims from those of the USA. They seemed most interested in "keeping the package intact" and in their statements tended to relate the USA initiative to the August 29 proposal of the Western Four. Obviously it was to the advantage of the new initiative not repeat not to link it very firmly with the earlier discussions in the Sub-Committee. This difference of approach was further demonstrated in the UK-French urging that the Western Four should "stand together" in the Security Council, to the extent of speaking consecutively in the debate. This might have been only a matter of emphasis but it helped the Soviet representative to say that the new proposal was not repeat not really new but an old refrain of the NATO chorus. Moreover, in private consultations it became painfully clear that flexibility in the Western position, as regards both substance and tactics, was considerably hampered by the strained effort to keep in step. We wondered whether in the Council proceedings concerning the Arctic inspection zone it might not repeat not have been preferable for Canada and the USA to carry the main burden in the debate and, in the matter of tactics, even for Canada to make independent moves which were not repeat not necessarily endorsed whole heartedly in advance by the Western Four. I have in mind particularly the question whether the USA draft resolution, as amended by Sweden, should have been pressed to the vote. Because the Western Four agreed to be bound by the outcome of their private meetings, there was less flexibility in the tactics followed. As in the past the position of the Western Four tended to be the lowest common denominator, a condition which tends to cramp initiative.

11. Nevertheless, it is debatable whether the result of these proceedings would have been any different. The position of the USSR appeared hard and inflexible. There seemed little prospect for compromise either on substance or on tactics. Those who were suggesting behind the scenes (Japanese, Swedes, Indians and Yugoslavs) that an adjournment for a week or so might have produced a better atmosphere and consequently better results, had nothing to offer in the way of compromise and they admitted that to delay might have been merely to fritter away the Western initiative. The situation probably required that the debate be brought to a tidy end and we could see no repeat no possibility of using the consensus procedure, which was advocated at one stage by Lall. So on balance it may have been desirable, if not repeat not necessary, to have the vote, although this did enable the Soviet representative to decry the USA proposal as mere propaganda; and it did tend to slam the door on any future development of the Arctic proposal. Although I was considerably impressed by the Secretary General's view that a vote should not repeat not be taken in the face of Soviet opposition, which the Secretary General considered inevitable after Dulles' press conference on May 1, I think we must recognize that the Secretary General's UN interest would not repeat not correspond exactly with the interest and aims of the USA and its Western partners.

12. The exercise ended badly for the UN, of this there is no repeat no doubt. Not repeat not only was the Security Council once more shown to be impotent in the face of real risks to peace and security but the Secretary General had gambled away not repeat not a small part of his prestige and influence. Moreover, because of the voting tactics adopted (on April 21 and May 2), the Soviet assertion about the misuse by the Western Powers of their majority in the UN, an assertion which the Secretary General had tried in Moscow to discount, was strikingly reinforced. All this was depressing to me and I believe these sentiments were fully shared by my colleagues from Japan and Sweden. Undoubtedly a similar reaction was prevalent among other UN members who have worked hard and contributed much to produce practicable results through the UN. One implication might be that we should all pause and ponder carefully before pressing too quickly any further initiative related to disarmament in any of the UN bodies concerned and at least until the summit preparations assume a more definite shape.¹⁰²

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

SUBDIVISION IV/SUB-SECTION IV

TREIZIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE
THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

139.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1536

New York, October 3, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

DISARMAMENT

My telegram 1537 contains the text of a draft resolution on disarmament drafted by the USA Delegation and presented to us this morning by Lodge at a meeting with the UK, France and ourselves.

2. Lodge hopes the four of us would sponsor it but intends to broaden the basis of co-sponsorship as well. He would like our comments by Monday if possible and would then like by about Wednesday to show it to the Russians and ask them to co-sponsor. No repeat no one was very optimistic about Soviet willingness to do so, but all agreed this was a useful gesture. The Secretary General has not repeat not yet seen the draft but it was agreed that Lodge might show it to him.

¹⁰² À la suite des délibérations du Conseil de sécurité, les fonctionnaires américains et canadiens ont essayé, à l'été de 1958, de définir une position commune sur les modalités des inspections aériennes en tant que composante critique d'un éventuel accord de désarmement limité. Voir Albert Legault et Michel Fortmann, Une diplomatie de l'espoir : Le Canada et le désarmement, 1945-1988 (Les Presses de l'Université Laval, 1989), pp. 149 à 152.

In the aftermath of the Security Council deliberations, American and Canadian officials attempted during the summer of 1958 to define a common position on aerial inspection procedures as the critical component of a potential limited disarmament agreement. See Albert Legault and Michel Fortmann, A Diplomacy of Hope: Canada and Disarmament, 1945-1988 (McGill-Queen's University Press, 1991), pp. 152-155.

3. There seemed to be general agreement with the draft although all present naturally reserved their views pending further study. Georges-Picot noted that the resolution seemed to have moved pretty far away from last year's resolution and the "package." Noble and Ritchie questioned the advisability of forcing on the Russians a reference to last year's resolution, which they disliked intensely. The UK are rather keen on getting Soviet agreement to or at least acquiescence in a resolution in order to help the atmosphere at Geneva.

4. We thought the last two words in the resolution, "as appropriate," might rouse some suspicion on the part of those who will be looking for evidence of a desire to bypass the UN. It was suggested that we might drop these words and refer to the UN rather than the General Assembly, as this phrase was intended to cover the fact that the Assembly was not repeat not always in session and we would not repeat not want to provoke a special session.

5. The USA and UK are agreed in their desire to get through the Assembly if possible without much talk about substance and with no repeat no decisions on procedure beyond continuation of the Disarmament Commission pretty much as constituted. They are aware, however, of the opposition they may encounter from those anxious to assert the authority of the UN and give some direction on nuclear tests and other aspects of disarmament. We mentioned to Morgan of the UK our ideas about a committee to examine the UN organization on disarmament. He thought it a very useful idea to produce if necessary, that is, if they do not repeat not get away with the status quo. We are inclined to think that we might hold it in reserve. If it should prove possible to get by without a major row on machinery, we have no repeat no special interest in raising difficulties. We would certainly irritate our major friends if we did so. On the other hand, if we could produce this compromise scheme when they are running into rough weather, they might be grateful. The USA appear most anxious to help [keep] the UN role in disarmament to a minimum, at least for the ticklish period of negotiation now ahead of us.

140.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1537

New York, October 3, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 1536 Oct 3.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

DISARMAMENT

Following is the text of the draft resolution on disarmament given to us this morning by Cabot Lodge: "The General Assembly, emphasizing anew the urgency of progress toward meaningful measures of disarmament under effective international control to decrease the danger of war and improve the prospects of a durable peace, welcoming the agreement that has been achieved in the conference of experts on the possibility of detecting violations of an agreement on the suspension of nuclear tests,¹⁰³ noting that negotiations on the suspension of nuclear weapons tests and on the actual establishment of an international control system on the basis of the experts' report have begun (will begin on October 31), noting further that agreement has been achieved on the convening of qualified persons to study the technical aspects of safeguards against the possibility of surprise attack

(1) expresses its earnest hope that the negotiations now under way between States that have tested nuclear weapons will result in early agreement on the suspension of nuclear tests under effective international control

(2) calls attention to the importance from the standpoint of international peace and security of achievement of the widest possible measure of agreement in the forthcoming study of technical aspects of safeguards against the possibility of surprise attack

(3) recognizes that such conferences may help to create an atmosphere in which further agreements in the disarmament field can be reached

(4) requests the conferences on nuclear testing and surprise attack to avail themselves of the assistance and services of the Secretary General and to keep the General Assembly informed as appropriate."¹⁰⁴

¹⁰³ Entre le 1^{er} juillet et le 21 août 1958, des experts techniques des États-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la France et du Canada ont rencontré à Genève leurs homologues de l'Union soviétique, de la Tchécoslovaquie, de la Pologne et de la Roumanie afin de discuter des mesures permettant de détecter les violations à un éventuel accord de suspension des essais nucléaires. O.M. Solandt représentait le Canada à ces pourparlers. Pour le texte du communiqué final et du rapport final publiés à l'issue de ces rencontres, voir United States, Department of State Bulletin, Volume XXXIX, No. 1004, September 22, 1958, pp. 452 à 62.

Between July 1 and August 21, 1958, technical experts from the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and Canada met with their counterparts from the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Romania in Geneva to discuss measures to detect violations of a possible agreement on the suspension of nuclear tests. Dr. O.M. Solandt represented Canada at these talks. For the text of the final communiqué and the final report issued at the end of these meetings, see United States, Department of State Bulletin, Volume XXXIX, No. 1004, September 22, 1958, pp. 452-62.

¹⁰⁴ Entre le 31 octobre et le 19 décembre 1958, des fonctionnaires américains, britanniques et soviétiques se sont rencontrés à Genève pour amorcer des négociations en vue d'un accord sur la suspension des essais d'armes nucléaires. Entre le 10 novembre et le 18 décembre 1958, des fonctionnaires du Canada, des États-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la France, de l'Italie, de l'Union soviétique, de la Tchécoslovaquie, de la Pologne, de la Roumanie et de l'Albanie se sont rencontrés à Genève pour étudier des mesures propres à prévenir les attaques surprises. Le Canada était représenté par L.D. Wilgress. Pour un compte rendu de ces rencontres, voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol. 11, Nos 1-2, janvier-février 1959, pp. 24 à 26.

Between October 31 and December 19, 1958, American, British, and Soviet officials met in Geneva to begin negotiations for an agreement suspending nuclear weapons tests. Between November 10 and December 18, 1958, officials from Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Italy, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Romania, and Albania met in Geneva to study measures to prevent surprise attack. Canada was represented by L.D. Wilgress at this conference. For an account of these meetings, see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 11, Nos. 1-2, January-February 1959, p. 24-26.

141.

DEA/50189-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*
*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly*

TELEGRAM V-454

Ottawa, October 6, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegrams 1536, 1537 of Oct. 3.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, NATO Paris (Information).

By Bag Moscow, Oslo.

DISARMAMENT: U.S. DRAFT RESOLUTION

Apart from the points noted in paragraph 4 of your 1536 which we would endorse, we see no reason why we could not co-sponsor Lodge's draft resolution. There seem however to be a few places in which the text might be edited with advantage. In making these suggestions we have in mind that this might not be the only disarmament resolution and we are therefore not going outside the existing subject matter.

2. Although the first operative clause does not necessarily mean that the Three Powers can by themselves arrive at the final agreement which could forthwith be implemented to inaugurate a system of control over the suspension of nuclear tests, it is open to that construction. It would appear that the desirable outcome of their negotiations would be agreement on terms of the suspension of nuclear tests and on a fairly detailed description of the nature of an accompanying system of control, which they considered both adequate and acceptable. It might be appropriate to draw a distinction between a decision for the extension of something like the conditional suspension offered by the U.S. and U.K. which the Three Powers by themselves are fully competent to agree upon and the recommendations which they would present for the consideration of other governments, and especially those whose territory would be affected, with a view to bringing a control system into existence. A possible re-draft might be "... agreement on the suspension of nuclear tests and on an acceptable system which would effectively detect possible violations of such an agreement."

3. In the second operational clause consideration might be given to following the terminology of the draft note to the Soviet Union; namely, "To study the practical aspects of minimizing the possibility of surprise attack." Such formulation does not suggest the possibility of absolute safeguards.

4. We read the third clause as implying the usefulness of talks on the expert level. However the first clause concerns political negotiations which the Soviet Union proposes should be at the foreign minister level. If our interpretation of the intention is correct we suggest that it might read "recognizes that conferences of experts on specific problems might help ..." should some other meaning be intended perhaps it could be clarified and a further provision on the foregoing lines added.

5. The fourth clause might be improved if it contained two separate verbs so as to read "invites the conferences ... to avail themselves ... and requests them to keep the United Nations informed."

6. With regard to possible Soviet co-sponsorship we suspect that they would insist on the Assembly doing rather more than express an earnest hope for agreement regarding nuclear tests. Perhaps our principal allies would be prepared to consider stronger language in this passage assuming that they regard "suspension" as the key word to be defended against the intrusion of anything like "cessation." For tactical reasons, however, it might be as well to expose the Soviet Delegation to something quite like the present draft in order to discover whether they have any interest in an agreed resolution.

7. On the question of Commission composition it seems advisable in view of the U.S. and U.K. attitudes to reserve any initiative until there is an evident need for one. As a practical matter this perhaps is not an urgent problem having in mind the prospect that various special conferences are likely to constitute the only serious disarmament negotiations in the next few months. However because the composition question may be precipitated by some of the uncommitted it appears advisable to continue to assess plans that could be put forward on short notice. We will accordingly give further thought to the problem in the light of the Secretary-General's memorandum and your telegram 1519 of October 1.†

142.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1621

New York, October 13, 1958

UNCLASSIFIED. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 1590 Oct 8.†

FIRST COMMITTEE: DISARMAMENT

Following is the text of a resolution as finally submitted, co-sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, Iran, Italy, Laos, Netherlands, NZ, Norway, Pakistan, Thailand, UK and USA.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the continuing interest and responsibility of the UN in the field of disarmament, which have found expression in the Charter and in previous resolutions of the General Assembly,

Welcoming the agreement which has been achieved in the "conference of experts to study the possibility of detecting violations of a possible agreement on the suspension of nuclear tests,"

Noting that negotiations on the suspension of nuclear weapons tests and on the actual establishment of an international control system on the basis of the experts' report will begin on October 31,

Noting further that qualified persons are expected to meet soon to study the technical aspects of measures against the possibility of surprise attack,

Recognizing that these developments are encouraging steps in the direction of progressive openness of information concerning technologies and armaments, which may assist in promoting the fundamental aims of the UN in the field of disarmament,

A

1. Urges that in the negotiations between States that have tested nuclear weapons the parties make every effort to reach early agreement on the suspension of nuclear weapons tests under effective international control,

2. Urges the parties involved in these negotiations not repeat not to undertake further testing of nuclear weapons while these negotiations are in progress,

B

3. Calls attention to the importance and urgency of achieving the widest possible measure of agreement in the forthcoming study of the technical aspects of measures against the possibility of surprise attack,

C

4. Expresses determination that the trend of the recent encouraging initiatives, including the technical approach, should continue with a view to contribution to a balanced and effectively controlled world-wide system of disarmament,

D

5. Invites the Conferences on Nuclear Weapons Tests and on Surprise Attack to avail themselves of the assistance and services of the Secretary General and requests them to keep the UN informed,

6. Invites the Secretary General, in consultation with the governments concerned, to render whatever advice and assistance may seem appropriate to facilitate current developments or any further initiatives related to problems of disarmament,

7. Requests that the records of the meetings of the First Committee at which various aspects of disarmament were discussed be transmitted by the Secretary General to the participants in the Conferences on Nuclear Weapons Tests and on Surprise Attack.¹⁰⁵

143.

DEA/50189-40

*Le chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Delegation to United Nations General Assembly,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1820

New York, November 4, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris (Information).

FIRST COMMITTEE: DISARMAMENT

When the First Committee began its meeting Monday afternoon the Indian-Yugoslav resolution establishing a disarmament commission of 81 members on an ad hoc basis had not repeat not yet secured the support of both sides. In spite of Yugoslav preference for sticking to their text Lall was drawn into alterations to suit both sides and the whole draft ¹⁰⁵ Le 1^{er} novembre 1958, la Première commission adoptait cette résolution par un vote de 49 pour, 9 contre et 23 abstentions.

On November 1, 1958, this resolution was adopted in the First Committee with 49 votes in favour, 9 opposed, and 23 abstentions.

was in danger of falling apart. There seemed little chance of agreement when the meeting began. The USA and UK sought in particular to make sure that the commission would not repeat not operate in accordance with the rules of procedure of the former Disarmament Commission but in accordance with rule 162 of the Charter. Lodge proposed a paragraph to this effect and threatened to support the French amendments if his paragraph was not repeat not accepted. The Soviet side particularly disliked the French amendments, and Zorin said the USSR would not repeat not serve on the Sub-Committees proposed by the French.

2. It appeared in the end that there was in this case a mutual desire to reach agreement. When Lodge proposed an alteration to meet Zorin's wishes, the latter accepted it. Georges-Picot indicated that France took a pessimistic view of the whole proposal. He was joined in splendid abstention by the representative of Cuba. The vote was a happy 78 to none with 2 abstentions.

3. The Mexican representative was then enjoined by a number of delegations to withdraw his resolution but he was under firm instructions from Padilla Nervo to stand firm. An adjournment until this morning was arranged to allow for further communication with Mexico. This morning the Mexican resolution was withdrawn.

4. In the plenary session this afternoon the final voting took place after many statements by various delegations. Lall reintroduced the 14-power resolution but obtained no repeat no success. The results were as follows: the 17-power resolution was adopted in a vote of 49 in favour, 9 against with 22 abstentions.

5. The 3-power resolution submitted by Australia, Japan and Sweden which blesses the Geneva Conference was adopted by a vote of 55 in favour (Canada) 9 against with 12 abstentions. The resolution on surprise attack submitted by India and Yugoslavia was adopted by a vote of 75 (Canada) to none with 2 abstentions.

6. The resolution submitted by India and Yugoslavia calling for an 81 member disarmament commission was adopted by a vote of 76 (Canada) to none with 2 abstentions. The 14-power resolution was rejected by a vote of 27 in favour, 41 against with 3 abstentions.¹⁰⁶

¹⁰⁶ Pour les textes officiels des quatre résolutions sur le désarmement adoptées en séance plénière, voir Nations Unies, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, treizième session, Supplément N° 18 (A/4090), pp. 3 à 4.

For the official texts of the four disarmament resolutions passed in plenary session, see United Nations, Official Records of the General Assembly, Thirteenth Session, Supplement No. 18 (A/4090), pp. 3-4.

SECTION G

CONTRIBUTIONS AUX PROGRAMMES EXTRA-BUDGÉTAIRES DES NATIONS UNIES
CONTRIBUTIONS TO UNITED NATIONS EXTRA-BUDGETARY PROGRAMMES

144.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le CabinetMemorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT No. 268-57

Ottawa, October 15, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

CONTRIBUTIONS TO 1958 UNITED NATIONS
EXTRA-BUDGETARY PROGRAMMES

This submission is concerned with Canadian participation in and contributions to the following programmes:

United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance to Under-Developed Countries (ETAP)

United Nations Refugee Fund (UNREF)

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA)

United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)

United Nations Expanded Technical Assistance Programme to Under-developed Countries (ETAP)

2. The Expanded Technical Assistance programme supplements the regular technical assistance programme of the United Nations and its Specialized Agencies; it was devised to make available to the economically less well-developed countries of the world an increased volume of specialized knowledge through providing the services of experts and through technical training projects. It provides tangible evidence to the under-developed countries of the world that the developed countries have a genuine interest in their development. ETAP is conducted efficiently and it receives broad public support throughout the world. During the seventh ETAP financial period (1957) eighty countries pledged approximately $30.8 million (U.S.).

3. The programme's popularity among the recipient countries is confirmed by the way in which it has broadened in scope during recent years. It now provides assistance to almost all the under-developed countries and territories, and in addition is being asked to provide marginal assistance to countries not normally considered under-developed. As a result, the number of requests made on the ETAP exceeds the resources available, as might be expected of an effective and useful programme.

4. In addition to the strain on the ETAP caused by new and increased requests for assistance, there are now acute financial problems being created. For the past few years, the amount pledged by the United States under a "matching" arrangement has been approximately 50% of the total Expanded Programme. However, the United States representative at the Technical Assistance Committee meetings held recently in Geneva said that in keeping with Congressional action, the United States would decrease its percentage contribution in 1958 to 45%, to 38% in 1959, and 33 1/3% in 1960 and thereafter. This means that in order for the ETAP budget to remain at approximately the same level in 1958, countries other than United States would have to contribute $1.2 million (U.S.) more than in 1957. It may be necessary, therefore, prior to the 1959 Pledging Conference, to review our position with regard to the ETAP in the light of the United States decreasing percentage contribution and the final budget of the ETAP for 1958.

5. Last year Canada contributed $2 million (U.S.) to the ETAP (an increase of $200,000 over 1956), and the Canadian Delegation at the ETAP Pledging Conference was authorized to say that support of at least a similar order of magnitude could be expected from Canada in 1958 and 1959.

United Nations Refugee Fund (UNREF)

6. At the end of the Second World War there were approximately 2.2 million refugees in Europe (a refugee is defined as a person who has left the country of his normal residence because of fear of persecution). By the end of December 1956 there were still about 1 million refugees in Europe under the international legal protection of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and of this number the High Commissioner has estimated that about 125,000 will be in need of some material assistance from him by the end of 1958 when his refugee programme and fund (UNREF) are due to expire. Through the UNREF programme, the High Commissioner has been able to reduce the number of refugees requiring assistance from more than 350,000 in 1954 to an estimated 125,000 by the end of 1958.

7. Of the refugees still in need of material assistance from the UNHCR, there were, as of January 1957, just over 50,000 still living in refugee camps in Austria (19,850), Germany (23,430), Greece (1,680) and Italy (5,370), and this total of 50,000 was exclusive of the Hungarian refugees who fled to Austria and Yugoslavia after October 1956. Concerning these Hungarian refugees, there were approximately 31,000 of them in refugee camps in Austria (23,722) and Yugoslavia (7,915) at the end of August 1957.

8. The General Assembly of the United Nations in 1954 authorized the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to undertake a more comprehensive programme over a four-year (1955-58) period to achieve permanent solutions for the refugee problem while continuing to provide some emergency aid in destitute and problem cases.

9. UNREF's target budget for the four years (1955-58) is $16 million. After two years of operation, the accumulated deficit in government contributions to UNREF is $2.7 million. The High Commissioner has recently re-appraised the UNREF programme and decided that the original target of $16 million is insufficient to close all the refugee camps in Europe by the end of 1958. He will need an extra $4.8 million in order to do this.

10. Canada's contributions to UNREF have been: 1955—$125,000; 1956—$125,000; 1957 - $200,000. Pledges or contributions to UNREF from some other countries in 1957 are : France $257,000; Denmark, $72,000; Belgium, $200,000; Sweden, $116,000 plus a special contribution of $1.3 million; U.K., $280,000; U.S., $1.5 million (estimated).

11. It would seem appropriate for Canada's contribution to continue at $200,000.

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA)

12. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) was established by the United Nations in December 1949. It was intended to provide relief and temporary employment for some 950,000 Arab refugees, who had lost their homes and means of livelihood in Palestine during the hostilities following establishment of Israel, until such time as they might be able to exercise the choice between repatriation or resettlement with compensation. The early hope that the refugee problem could be solved in three years, through the repatriation of some and the compensation of others and their integration into the economies of the areas where they had taken refuge, did not materialize and the Agency's operational mandate has been extended to the end of June 1960.

13. The dimensions of the problem have not been diminished since 1949 and a solution appears to be as difficult as ever. The refugees on the rolls still number upwards of 900,000 of which about half are children under 15. The failure to reduce the numbers on relief is due mainly to three causes: (1) Israel has refused to consider admitting to its territory any substantial number of refugees; (2) the refugees have insisted that they had a right to return to their former homes and have tried to maintain as far as possible a united front in refusing any form of rehabilitation which might prejudice their chances of repatriation; (3) the governments of Arab states have supported the position taken by the refugees. Given the full political co-operation of the governments of the area, projects offering substantial opportunities for self-support could be developed. However, because of political difficulties expenditures against the fund of $200 million authorized in January 1952 for such resettlement projects hitherto have been mainly for research, experimentation and planning. The largest single item on the "rehabilitation" budget has been education.

14. Canada voted in favour of the establishment of the Agency and in favour of the extension of its mandate to 1960, and as a responsible member of the United Nations has been a regular contributor to the UNRWA budget. Our contributions have been particularly appreciated by the U.K., other Commonwealth members and the U.S. who have welcomed the stabilizing role of UNRWA in the area and have themselves been regular contributors. Since 1948 the Canadian Government has contributed to the Palestine Refugee programmes of UNRWA and its predecessor (the United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees) a total of $5,320,929 (Canadian) in cash or kind. Since 1951 the annual rate of contributions has been between $500,000 and $600,000. That rate has been satisfactory relative to other states although the level of Canadian contributions has not been commensurate with the rate of the Canadian assessment for the administrative budget of the United Nations (3.15%).

15. The other major contributors and their approximate totals are:

United States	$171.2 million	($17.5 million for 1956-57)
United Kingdom	$ 47.0 million	($4.4 million for 1956-57)
France	$ 12.0 million	($428,571 for 1956-57)
Australia	$ 1.7 million	($112,500 for 1956-57)
New Zealand	$ 1.2 million	($140,000 for 1956-57)

16. UNRWA's tentative budget for 1958 has been set at $41.5 million — $26.5 million for relief and $15 million for rehabilitation — which is in line with past expenditures.

17. It is generally agreed that the refugee problem is one of the potentially explosive factors in an already delicate Middle Eastern situation. The possible results of further curtailment of services to the refugees, which are only at the subsistence level (the per capita expenditure is approximately $30 per year), and particularly the repercussions which might follow the reduction of educational services, cannot be predicted but would certainly be serious. Since it is not considered to be in the interests of Canada to invite a situation which might increase the burden already carried by the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization and the United Nations Emergency Force, it would appear appropriate for Canada to continue to support measures which have already proved their usefulness in helping to maintain a degree of security in a troubled and strategically important area.

18. If the major contributing governments should put forward to solve the refugee problem a scheme involving special expenditures there would no doubt be pressure on Canada to increase its contribution. No definite plan of this kind has yet materialized. It would seem appropriate therefore for Canada's contribution to continue at the existing level of $500,000.

United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)

19. UNICEF was created in 1947, and by a decision of the United Nations in 1953 it will continue its work for an indefinite period. It provides assistance to recipient countries for the building up of child health and welfare services, for child feeding and other related undertakings. Three hundred and nineteen (319) UNICEF-aided programmes are currently in operation in one hundred and two (102) countries and territories mainly in Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America. Countries and territories receiving aid must equal or better the contributions allocated to them.

20. UNICEF's budget is made up of governmental as well as non-governmental contributions. Income from all sources in 1957 is estimated at $20.5 million. From 1952 to 1955 allocations made by UNICEF to its various programmes averaged approximately $16 million yearly. In 1956, they rose to just over $22 million. For 1957, total allocations are expected to amount to $24 million, and for 1958 to $25 million. In the last two years UNICEF was able to make allocations considerably higher than its revenues permitted by using unallocated resources which had been previously accumulated.

21. While the budget for 1958 has not yet definitely been set, the Executive Director is aiming at a target figure of close to $21 million in governmental contributions. The United States Congress has recently approved an appropriation of $11 million to UNICEF for 1958, or $1 million more than in 1957. At the same time, however, the United States has included the proviso that the United States contribution could not exceed 52.5% of the total 1958 contributions, whereas it was 55% of the 1957 contributions and 57.5% of the 1956 contributions. In order that UNICEF may avail itself of the increased U.S. participation, it will be necessary for the contributors to raise their pledges for 1958 from an estimated $8 million in 1957 to close to $10 million. Present indications are that it may be difficult to attain this goal. It is understood, however, that the U.S. is prepared to continue pledging to UNICEF sums of at least the same magnitude as those being given at the present time, even if the matching requirements are not met.

22. The Canadian Government has contributed just over $10.5 million to UNICEF since it began in 1947; in addition voluntary contributions to UNICEF from private Canadian sources exceed $1.5 million. Canada's pledged contribution to UNICEF for 1957 was $650,000. Contributions from some other countries in 1957 are as follows: France $785,000, U.K. $616,000, U.S.S.R. $500,000.

23. It is suggested that Canada's contribution to UNICEF for 1958 be maintained at the same figure as for 1957, i.e. $650,000, which is less than 1/15 of the U.S. pledge of $11 million.

*It is therefore recommended:*¹⁰⁷

ETAP

(1) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $2 million (U.S.) to the United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance for 1958.

UNREF

(2) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $200,000 to the United Nations Refugee Fund for 1958.

UNRWA

(3) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $500,000 to the United Nations Relief and Work Agency for Palestine Refugees for 1958.

UNICEF

(4) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $650,000 to the United Nations Children's Fund for 1958.

SIDNEY E. SMITH

145.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 223-58

[Ottawa], July 21, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

CONTRIBUTION TO UNITED NATIONS EXTRA-BUDGETARY PROGRAMME:
PROGRAMME OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES

This submission seeks authorization to announce a contribution to be made in 1959 to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the purpose of closing the refugee camps in Europe under his mandate.

2. At the end of the Second World War, the number of refugees in Europe was close to 2.2 million people. This number has now been reduced, either by emigration, re-establishment in the country of present asylum, or voluntary return to original homes, to less than 200,000 refugees who are not now settled. The 30,000 of this number who are still living in refugee camps after ten or more years, now include many aged, sick or physically handicapped persons who are known as "hard core" refugees. (Recent refugees from Hungary and Yugoslavia, who are helped under another programme of the High Commissioner, are not included in these figures or in the UNREF programme.) In 1954 the High Commissioner was authorized by the United Nations General Assembly to undertake for a four-year period the programme of the United Nations Refugee Fund (UNREF) to be devoted principally to the promotion of permanent solutions for certain refugees under his mandate. It is estimated that, on December 31, 1958, when this programme is due to close, there will still be some 17,600 refugees in camps who will not have yet been settled.

¹⁰⁷ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 7 novembre 1957./Approved by Cabinet on November 7, 1957.

3. Canada has contributed $18.8 million to the International Refugee Organization (IRO), which was disbanded in 1952, and $610,000 to its successor, the UNREF programme, from 1954 to 1958. (Contributions of Canada and other countries to this programme are listed in Annex I†). On November 7, 1957, Cabinet approved a further contribution of $200,000 to the UNREF programme in 1958, and this sum is included in the Main Estimates.

4. The Canadian contribution of $200,000 for 1958 was announced during the last session of the United Nations General Assembly. At this time contributions totalling approximately $3.3 million were pledged for 1958 by twelve governments. In view of the impending close of the UNREF programme, the General Assembly then adopted a resolution (co-sponsored by Canada) which requested the High Commissioner for Refugees to intensify the UNREF Programme with a view to its termination, and to appeal to governments for the purpose of raising additional funds needed for closing the refugee camps. The High Commissioner hopes that, if governments meet his request for increased contributions in the near future, these camps can be closed by the end of 1960, thus terminating one of the most urgent and costly aspects of his mandate.

5. The High Commissioner has estimated that the funds still required to carry out the approved UNREF programme — including the intensification of the programme — would be $7.5 million. The High Commissioner considered that the entire sum of $7.5 million should be pledged in 1958 in order to negotiate with governments and to draw up plans for the systematic closure of all camps, even though payments in fulfilment of the pledges might continue through 1959 and 1960. Among the thirteen other co-sponsors of this resolution were the United Kingdom and the United States, who have since indicated their intention of supporting this programme.

6. The High Commissioner for Refugees has now requested from Canada $369,060 as a contribution to the programme which he aims to complete in 1960. This figure is based on Canada's percentage assessment to the United Nations, adjusted so as to take into account the refusal of communist countries (with the exception of Yugoslavia) to assist the work of the High Commissioner for Refugees.

7. The programme to close the camps aims at disposing of an international problem which has continued since the end of the Second World War, and which if it continues may result in further annual appeals for funds from governments. By sharing proportionately in the support of the UNREF intensification programme, Canada will contribute to the permanent resettlement of refugees who have been living as public charges for a period of over ten years.

8. The High Commissioner has asked for a total of $369,060 from Canada, to be paid between now and 1960. Having regard to competing demands upon available Canadian resources for international aid, and to the present stage of the High Commissioner's camp closing programme, a suitable response might be a contribution in 1959 which is substantial but not in the full amount requested.

*It is therefore recommended*¹⁰⁸ that authorization be given to announce in the near future the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution in 1959 of $290,000 to the fund for the camp closing programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

SIDNEY SMITH

146.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 278-58

Ottawa, October 3, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

CONTRIBUTIONS TO 1959 UNITED NATIONS EXTRA-BUDGETARY PROGRAMMES

This submission is concerned with Canadian contributions to the following programmes, in which Canada has participated in the past and which are of a continuing nature:

United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance to Under-Developed Countries (ETAP)

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA)

United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)

United Nations Expanded Technical Assistance Programme for Under-Developed Countries (ETAP)

2. The Expanded Technical Assistance Programme supplements the regular technical assistance programme of the United Nations and its specialized knowledge through the provision of the services of experts and through technical training arrangements. It provides tangible evidence to the under-developed countries that the developed countries have a genuine interest in their development. The ETAP is conducted efficiently and it receives broad international support; during the eight ETAP financial periods (1958) eighty-three countries pledged approximately $32.6 million (U.S.).

3. The programme's popularity among the recipient countries is confirmed by the way in which, at their request, it has broadened in scope during recent years. The number of requests made on the ETAP exceeds by far the resources available, as might be expected of an effective and useful programme.

4. Since 1950 the major contributors to ETAP, and their approximate total contributions, have been the United States, $98.2 million; the United Kingdom, $13.4 million; Canada, $10.3 million; France, $9.3 million; USSR (since 1953), $6 million; the Netherlands, $4.9 million; Denmark, $3.2 million; and Australia, $3.1 million.

5. In the first years of the programme the United States contributed over 50% of the total, under a "matching" arrangement. Their annual pledges have risen from $11.4 million in 1952 to $15.2 million in 1957, as total contributions rose. In 1958 they pledged a maximum of $15.5 million, with a 45% matching provision; other governments had to contribute more during 1958 in order to maintain the programme. The matching provision in 1959 is down to 40%; the total contributions of other governments must, therefore, increase if the ETAP budget is to be maintained.

¹⁰⁸ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 27 août 1958./Approved by Cabinet on August 27, 1958.

6. It is recommended that for 1959 Canada maintain its contribution to the ETAP at the same level as this year, that is $2 million (U.S.).

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA)

7. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), established by the United Nations in December 1949, was intended to provide relief and temporary employment for some 950,000 Arab refugees, who had lost their homes and means of livelihood in Palestine during the hostilities following the establishment of Israel, until such time as they might be able to exercise the choice between repatriation or resettlement with compensation. The discouraging fact that refugees on the rolls still number upwards of 900,000, of which about half are children under 15, is mainly due to three causes: (1) Israel has refused to consider admitting to its territory any substantial number of refugees; (2) the refugees have refused any form of rehabilitation which might prejudice their "right" to repatriation; (3) the governments of Arab states have supported the position taken by the refugees.

8. Canadian contributions to the UNRWA budget have been particularly appreciated by the United Kingdom, other Commonwealth members and the United States, who have welcomed the stabilizing role of UNRWA in the area and have themselves been regular contributors. Since 1948 the Canadian Government has contributed to the Palestine Refugee programmes of UNRWA and its predecessor (the United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees) a total of $7,320,929 (Canadian) in cash or kind. This total includes $1,500,000 worth of wheat flour provided this year as a special additional contribution. Since 1951 the annual rate of contributions has been between $500,000 and $600,000. That rate has been considered adequate relative to the contributions of other states although the level of Canadian contributions has not been commensurate with the rate of the Canadian assessment for the administrative budget of the United Nations (3.15%). The other major contributors and their approximate total contributions since 1948 are: The United States, $182.7 million; the United Kingdom, $49.9 million; France, $12.1 million; Australia, $1.8 million; New Zealand, $1.2 million.

9. Only a rough outline of tentative estimates for UNRWA's 1959 budget has as yet been received, in which the Acting Director estimates that the Agency will need financial resources totalling $37.6 million. Although this is approximately $3 million less than the budget approved for 1958 ($40.6 million), it cannot be excluded that the serious financial difficulties which overtook the Agency early this year, and which the Special Canadian contribution of $1.5 million worth of wheat flour did much to allay, may not occur again in 1959.

10. In the circumstances, it would appear appropriate for Canada to maintain its support for measures which have already proved their usefulness in helping to preserve a degree of security in a troubled area. It is therefore recommended that Canada's contribution continue at the existing level of $500,000, bearing in mind that if the Agency encounters a serious financial crisis or if the major contributing governments, i.e. United States and United Kingdom, should propose a scheme to solve the refugee problem, there would no doubt be pressure on Canada to make an increased contribution.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)

11. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) was established by the General Assembly in December, 1946 to provide emergency aid for children in war-devastated countries following the termination of the activities of the United Nations Refugee and Relief Agency (UNRRA). In the early years its activities were confined to Europe and China. Its emphasis is now towards assisting governments to develop permanent or long-range health and welfare services for children, and assisting in mass campaigns to control or eradicate tuberculosis, yaws, malaria, trachoma and other diseases to which children are particularly susceptible. The under-developed countries are the main recipients of this aid. It is universally acknowledged that the United Nations Children's Fund has been one of the most useful and least controversial activities of the United Nations, and there is no doubt that it has made a substantial contribution towards enhancing the prestige of the United Nations.

12. The United Nations Children's Fund is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions from governments and private associations. Income from all sources in 1959 is estimated at $26,000,000. Governments requesting assistance from the Fund must be prepared to put into the programme from their own resources amounts at least equal to those received from UNICEF. This encourages serious consideration before requests are made and also means that double the amount of money contributed to UNICEF is utilized in the programme. In many cases the local contributions far exceed that of the Fund. The UNICEF effort is sustained on a broad front: aid is now being given under 322 programmes in 100 countries and territories, and there are three inter-regional programmes.

13. The United States has always contributed more than half the funds made available to UNICEF by governments. In 1959 it will offer $11 million on a matching basis of 50%. Other major contributors in 1958 were France ($786,000), the United Kingdom ($658,000), the U.S.S.R. ($612,500) and the Federal Republic of Germany ($476,000).

14. The Canadian contribution to UNICEF in 1958 was $650,000. It is recommended that a contribution of the same amount be made in 1959.

*It is therefore recommended:*¹⁰⁹

ETAP

(1) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $2 million (U.S.) to the United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance for 1959;

UNRWA

(2) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $500,000 to the United Nations Relief and Work Agency for Palestine Refugees for 1959;

UNICEF

(3) that authorization be given to announce the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for a contribution of $650,000 to the United Nations Children's Fund for 1959.

SIDNEY SMITH

¹⁰⁹ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 15 octobre 1958./Approved by Cabinet on October 15, 1958.

SECTION H

ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE DU TRAVAIL
 CONVENTION DE L'ABOLITION DU TRAVAIL FORCÉ
 INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION
 CONVENTION ON ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOUR

147.

DEA/5475-DX-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
 pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 26, 1958

RATIFICATION BY CANADA OF ILO CONVENTION NO. 105
 CONCERNING THE ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOUR

I am attaching for your signature, if you approve, a memorandum to Cabinet which has been prepared in the Department of Labour. It recommends the introduction of a resolution in the House of Commons at the next session of Parliament to obtain the approval by Parliament of the above Convention, with a view to its ratification by Canada.

ILO Convention No. 105 was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 40th Session in Geneva on June 25, 1957, with no dissenting votes and only one abstention. The four Canadian delegates, representing the Government, workers and employers, all voted for the Convention. Since that time, we have been advised that the Minister of Justice considers, for reasons set out on page 2 of the memorandum, "that it would be appropriate for Canada to ratify this Convention."

As you will recall, a memorandum† was previously submitted to Cabinet by the Minister of Labour and yourself on April 30 last, recommending the introduction of a resolution in Parliament to this effect. However, although the recommendation received the approval of the Cabinet Committee on Legislation, no final decision was taken on it by Cabinet at that time in view of the heavy legislative programme which had already been approved for the parliamentary session.

The attached memorandum makes the same recommendation as that previously submitted, but it has been drafted in more concise language. Mr. Starr proposes that it be put forward to Cabinet as a joint memorandum from the Minister of Labour and yourself.

In August of 1957, Mr. Jodoin, of the Canadian Labour Congress, wrote to the Prime Minister to urge that Canada ratify this Convention¹¹⁰ as soon as possible.

N.A. R[OBERTSON]

¹¹⁰ Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1960, N° 21.

See Canada Treaty Series, 1960, No. 21.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note du ministre du Travail et du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Labour and Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 364-58

[Ottawa], December 5, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

RATIFICATION OF I.L.O. CONVENTION 105 CONVENTION CONCERNING THE ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOUR

1. Under date of April 30, 1958, a Memorandum was submitted to Cabinet by the Minister of Labour and the Secretary of State for External Affairs recommending the introduction of a resolution in Parliament to approve Convention No. 105 Concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour, which was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 40th Session on June 25, 1957.

2. Although this recommendation received the approval of the Cabinet Committee on Legislation, no final decision was taken on it by the Cabinet at that time in view of the heavy legislative program which had already been approved for the parliamentary session.

3. It is considered that action should be taken at the coming session of Parliament to obtain the approval of Parliament to the ratification of this Convention.

4. The Convention obligates the member states of the International Labour Organization which ratify the Convention to suppress and not to make use of any form of forced or compulsory labour:

(a) as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system;

(b) as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development;

(c) as a means of labour discipline;

(d) as a punishment for having participated in strikes;

(e) as a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination.

5. Each member who ratifies the Convention undertakes to suppress and not to make use of any form of forced or compulsory labour, and to take effective measures to secure the abolition of forced or compulsory labour, as specified above.

6. The opinion of the Minister of Justice is that it would be appropriate for Canada to ratify this Convention, as indicated in a letter of January 28, 1958 from the Deputy Attorney-General of Canada to the Deputy Minister of Labour as follows:

"I have to refer to your letter of September 3rd last† enclosing a copy of the authentic text of Convention No. 105 concerning the abolition of forced labour, which was adopted by the Fortieth Session of the International Labour Conference in June, 1957, and to our subsequent conversations with regard thereto.

In answer to your inquiry as to whether the subject matter of this Convention is wholly or only partially within federal legislative jurisdiction, I have to advise that the Minister of Justice is of opinion that the subject matter of the Convention is only partially within federal legislative jurisdiction.

I have also to advise that the Minister of Justice is of opinion that it would be appropriate for Canada to ratify this Convention on the assumption that there is presently no provincial legislation which would be a breach of the Convention, which would appear to be a safe assumption, and on the assumption that, if any legislation that would be a breach of the Convention were ever enacted by a provincial legislature, it would be so contrary to the general views of the Canadian people that the Government of the day would feel entirely justified in exercising the power of disallowance."

It would appear from the opinion of the Minister of Justice that no legislation is required to implement the provisions of the Convention.

7. The following member states of the International Labour Organization have already ratified this Convention, namely:

Austria	Israel
Cuba	Jordan
Denmark	Norway
Dominican Republic	Poland
Haiti	Sweden
Honduras	Switzerland
Ireland	United Kingdom

8. There are strong reasons why Canada should ratify this Convention without further delay:

(a) The Convention is an effort by the International Labour Organization to carry out its essential aim of abolishing conditions of labour which involve injustice, hardship and privation to large numbers of people by the commitment of its member states to the elimination of such conditions. It is analogous to the international movement to abolish slavery. A convention which receives a large number of ratifications becomes a powerful force. Where ratification is secured, the procedure authorized by the I.L.O. Constitution makes it possible to maintain a constant moral pressure towards securing satisfactory compliance. However, the convention will not carry much force unless a substantial number of ratifications show general acceptance of its principles. The failure of Canada to ratify may be interpreted as a lack of serious interest in the universal abolition of forced labour which is the objective of this Convention.

(b) Another important reason for ratification is the importance the Convention has assumed in the struggle between ideologies. The U.S.S.R., since joining the I.L.O. in 1954, has attempted to set itself up at all times and in all respects as the champion of the worker. The question of forced labour brings up the fundamental relationship of the individual and the state as it impinges on the right of the individual in his working relationship. This is a point upon which the Western democracies have definite convictions which have great significance to the worker and which they should take every opportunity to assert.

The U.S.S.R. Government representatives in Conference discussions of the subject matter of the Convention, with the knowledge that the proposed instruments were primarily directed against forced labour policies and practices which had been found to exist in the U.S.S.R. and its satellite countries by the Ad Hoc Committee on Forced Labour appointed jointly by the United Nations and the International Labour Organization, stated that the U.S.S.R. had abolished forced labour within its territories and given full support to the proposed instrument. A widespread ratification of the Convention will provide pressure on the U.S.S.R. and its satellite countries to ratify.

(c) The Canadian trade union movement, as well as the international free trade movement as a whole, has placed a great deal of emphasis upon this Convention. They regard its principles as fundamental and a necessary antecedent to freedom of association.

(d) This Convention was adopted by the 1957 I.L.O. Conference with no dissenting votes and only one abstention. The four Canadian delegates representing the Government, workers and employers voted for the Convention.

Recommendation

Having regard to the foregoing considerations, we recommend¹¹¹ that a resolution be introduced in the House of Commons at the coming session of Parliament as follows:

“That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve of Convention No. 105, concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour which was adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 40th Session at Geneva on the 25th day of June, 1957, and that this House do approve the same.”

MICHAEL STARR
Minister of Labour

SIDNEY E. SMITH
Secretary of State for External Affairs

¹¹¹ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 9 avril 1959. La Chambre des communes a approuvé cette résolution le 19 mai 1959 et la convention a été ratifiée le 14 juillet 1959.

Approved by Cabinet on April 9, 1959. The House of Commons approved this resolution on May 19, 1959 and the Convention was ratified on July 14, 1959.

2^e PARTIE/PART 2ACCORD GÉNÉRAL SUR LES TARIFS DOUANIERS ET LE COMMERCE
GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

SECTION A

DOUZIÈME SESSION DES PARTIES CONTRACTANTES TWELFTH SESSION OF THE CONTRACTING PARTIES

148.

PCO

*Note du ministre des Finances et du ministre du Commerce pour le CabinetMemorandum from Minister of Finance and Minister of Trade and Commerce
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 254-57

[Ottawa], October 9, 1957

SECRET

TWELFTH SESSION OF GATT AND RENEGOTIATIONS OF GATT TARIFF SCHEDULES

The Twelfth Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade begins in Geneva, Switzerland, on October 17th. This will be one of the regular sessions which take place annually to administer the Agreement, to consider complaints and to seek solutions to particular points of difficulty.

In conjunction with the Session there will be a meeting of trade ministers in Geneva during the week commencing October 29. This meeting should serve to strengthen adherence to the multilateral GATT arrangements at a time when a number of important initiatives are being taken in the international economic field, and would also emphasize the importance attached to the work of this session. In addition it would enable the member countries to deal more effectively with some of the major issues and to provide an opportunity for a general exchange of views among the Ministers responsible for foreign trade. A number of countries, including the United States and the United Kingdom, have already indicated the intention of their Governments to send a Ministerial representative to such a meeting.

It is recommended that a Canadian delegation should attend this Session to participate in the discussion of agenda items and to represent Canadian interests. It is further recommended that a Canadian Minister should attend the meeting of Trade Ministers. In view of the fact that Canada will be initiating new measures of agricultural protection which may not be fully compatible with the GATT arrangements, it will be necessary for the Canadian delegation to ensure that in its participation the way is left open for whatever action it may be considered necessary for Canada to take.

The following paragraphs deal with the more important items on the agenda of particular interest to Canada, and matters which may come up for discussion during the Session. In such discussions it should be kept in mind that Canada may wish, in the future, to obtain broad waivers from its GATT obligations, and, accordingly, it would be inappropriate for the Canadian delegation to press for commitments and assurances from other countries which could be embarrassing for Canada in the light of these circumstances.

(a) Article XXVIII Negotiations and Rebinding of Schedules

The tariff schedules appended to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade — one for each Contracting Party — consist of a list of all the tariff concessions made in the course of GATT tariff negotiations. It has been the practice to bind these tariff concessions against increase for firm periods, generally three years. The present “bound period” expires at the end of this calendar year. In the course of meetings commencing October 1st in Geneva, Contracting Parties will have an opportunity to renegotiate particular items. On completion of these renegotiations, it is expected that Contracting Parties will wish to rebind their tariff schedules for a further three year period.

A number of Contracting Parties, including Canada, have indicated their intention to renegotiate certain items in their respective tariff schedules. A few of the new renegotiations notified by other countries affect Canadian exports and are of interest. In addition, to the extent that other countries might withdraw concessions as a consequence of Canada’s renegotiations, Canadian export interests are involved. Under the renegotiation procedures a country wishing to increase bound rates of duty may do so, but is expected to offer compensation in the form of tariff concessions on other tariff items. If appropriate “compensation” is not made, other countries are free to withdraw from that country “equivalent” tariff concessions. The question of what constitutes adequate compensation is a matter for negotiation with the countries affected. To avoid the possibility of these negotiations leading to an unravelling of the many interrelated tariff agreements it is important for countries to maintain in these negotiations the balance of concessions already achieved.

In order to obtain the freedom to implement Tariff Board recommendations contained in recent Tariff Board reports Canada will be required to engage in extensive renegotiations. There are also two particular tariff items which have not been referred to the Tariff Board, but which it appears advisable to modify at this time.

The Canadian items to be renegotiated this fall consist of the following groups:

- (1) Basic Iron and Steel products — See Annex “A”†
- (2) Pipes and Tubes of Iron or Steel — See Annex “B”†
- (3) Zinc and Manufactures of Zinc
- (4) Fresh Fruits and Vegetables
- (5) Two items which do not arise from references to the Tariff Board.

In the Tariff Board reports on iron and steel and pipes and tubes, there are both tariff decreases and tariff increases recommended — it is anticipated that this will also be the case in respect to zinc and manufactures of zinc. The Tariff Board report on this enquiry should be available shortly.

It is hoped that in these three groups tariff increases will be offset by tariff decreases and that no substantial “condensation” in the form of other tariff reductions will be required to secure acceptance of the proposed tariff changes. However, there are a few countries who are suppliers of particular items on which tariff increases are proposed and since it may not be possible to find adequate compensation in these cases, the possibility of withdrawals of concessions to Canada by such countries cannot be dismissed.

In respect to group (4), fresh fruits and vegetables, there is little prospect that the Tariff Board recommendations will make up a balanced package in terms of tariff reductions to offset tariff increases. It is to be anticipated, therefore, that unless “compensation” can be found — which appears unlikely — that “equivalent” tariff concessions would be withdrawn from Canada by the United States. The only country affected by prospective changes in the tariff on fresh fruits and vegetables is the United States.

With respect to the fifth category, these two items are electrical instruments and prune nectar. These items were negotiated only last year and have given rise to unexpected objections. They are of relatively minor importance. Consequently, it is not expected that it will prove difficult to find adequate "compensation" in other Canadian tariff items without raising difficulties for Canadian producers.

Two other groups of possible tariff changes, rubber footwear and textiles, should also be noted.

The recent report of the Tariff Board on rubber footwear did not make any recommendations. A subsequent reference to Tariff Board has requested recommendations and it is expected that these will be forthcoming from the Board before the end of this year. The tariff items concerned are bound in Canada's GATT schedule and it may be necessary to include these in the forthcoming renegotiations. Should this be the case, a subsequent recommendation will be made to Cabinet after the Board submits its report.

A more complex set of problems is raised by textiles. The textile tariff items were referred to the Tariff Board on September 24. It is most unlikely that a report will be received in time for the renegotiations which are taking place this fall. Accordingly, consideration will have to be given to the questions of how and when to deal with renegotiations of "bound textile items" which may result from the Tariff Board's recommendations. This will be the subject of a separate memorandum to Cabinet at a later date.

Rebinding of Tariff Schedules

One of the major benefits which Contracting Parties derive from the GATT is the considerable measure of tariff stability due to the fact that tariff schedules are bound against increase for firm periods of time. There are advance indications that Canada's major trading partners will be prepared to rebind their tariff concessions to Canada. In order to preserve these benefits, it will be necessary for Canada also to rebind its tariff schedules. The schedules to be rebound will, of course, include the results of the renegotiations. It should be emphasized that the rebinding of schedules for a firm period does not preclude renegotiation of particular items within the period. There are established procedures whereby, in special circumstances, this may be done.

It is recommended that Canada agree to the rebinding of the Canadian tariff schedules to GATT for a period of three years from January 1st, 1958, subject to the satisfactory completion of these renegotiations and subject to any subsequent Cabinet decisions relating to rubber footwear and textiles. Depending on how the Government should decide to deal with the rubber footwear and textile items, it may become necessary to seek some modification in the terms and procedures for rebinding the schedules.

(b) Canadian Agricultural Restrictions

Import controls are now being applied by Canada on butter, cheddar cheese, turkeys and fowl and skim milk. In addition, further measures of agricultural protection are being considered by Canada, which may entail additional Canadian restrictions. The present restrictions are inconsistent with some of Canada's obligations under GATT and it may become necessary, in due course, for Canada to seek a waiver from these obligations, both with respect to these restrictions and with respect to whatever additional restrictive measures may be taken in the future.

The GATT makes provision for a country to be granted a waiver in exceptional circumstances from an obligation it has entered into under the Agreement. The granting of such a waiver requires the approval of a two-thirds majority. A number of waivers have been granted, subject to terms and conditions, to meet particular difficulties of certain member countries. The obtaining of a waiver upsets the balance of rights and obligations under the GATT, and exposes the country concerned to retaliatory action by other countries whose interests may be adversely affected.

While Canada's restrictions have not yet been formally questioned in GATT, they are a matter of concern to some other countries and it may well be that the compatibility of these restrictions with GATT will be questioned during the Session. It is proposed that the Canadian delegation in conversations with other delegations, or, if necessary, in a formal statement outline Canada's position along the following lines:

(i) An explanation of the special nature of the difficulties which have arisen with respect to the products now under import control.

(ii) An indication that the Canadian Government recognizes that some of these restrictions raise problems in relation to the GATT.

(iii) An assurance that the matter is being given careful attention by the Government with a view to determining what appropriate steps should be taken, having in mind the interests of other Contracting Parties and Canada's obligations and responsibilities in the GATT.

A short note on the United States Agricultural Waiver is attached. (Appendix C)†

(c) European Common Market Treaty

The Contracting Parties will be examining the Common Market Treaty in order to determine whether this Treaty is consistent with the policies and principles envisaged under GATT. Ratification of this Treaty by the six European countries concerned has almost been completed and the Treaty is expected to go into effect next year.

The aim of the Treaty is the economic integration of its signatories. Canada has already indicated its sympathetic attitude to these objectives. However, a number of important features of the Common Market Treaty would appear to raise serious problems from the point of view of Canadian trade interests and from the point of view of multilateral trade generally. These relate to the following points, which have already been the subject of formal representations to the Six:

(i) With respect to the common tariff to be developed around the Customs Union, the Treaty lays down a framework which will facilitate unjustifiably high levels of protection on a wide range of products of interest to Canada such as base metals, aluminum, chemicals, synthetic rubber, pulp and paper and fish.

(ii) With respect to import restrictions, the Treaty establishes a basis for policies which could well reinforce existing discriminatory restrictions for an indefinite time and lead to the development of common measures of restrictions against outside countries contrary to Canadian interests.

(iii) The agricultural provisions of the Treaty (which cover both agriculture and fisheries products), envisage a protected and regulated system for agriculture involving high tariffs, guaranteed prices, preferential long-term marketing agreements and the use of quantitative restrictions against outside countries. These agricultural provisions are likely to lead to the stimulation of high-cost production in Europe and could affect Canadian exports of wheat and barley and other agricultural products which make up about 50 per cent of our present trade with these countries.

(iv) The Treaty provides for the association of the dependent overseas territories of the European countries, as well as of such countries as Morocco and Tunisia which have lately achieved independent status. Exports from these areas to the Common Market will receive preferential tariff treatment and will benefit from the protection of the agricultural arrangements. Some of these areas are, or might become, important producers of commodities which compete directly with Canadian exports such as wheat, iron ore and aluminum. The overseas territories features of the Common Market Treaty are of particular concern to underdeveloped countries.

The GATT examination of the Common Market Treaty which is to be initiated at this Session will provide an opportunity for outside countries, such as Canada, to influence the nature and direction of Common Market arrangements. Since Canada herself may be in the position of seeking broad waivers for measures envisaged in the field of agriculture and may also be looking for increased flexibility in the field of tariff action, the Canadian delegation should, in the review of the Treaty, avoid prejudicing Canada's future position. It is recognized that this may mean that Canada will not be in a position to press for strict safeguards within the GATT framework, particularly with respect to the agricultural provisions of the Treaty. It should be left open to the delegation to develop whatever safeguards may be possible on agriculture, tariffs and quantitative restrictions, in the light of these circumstances.

It is recommended that the Canadian delegation should be authorized at the GATT Session to make clear that, despite Canada's sympathetic attitude to the objectives of the Treaty (i) it is not authorized to acquiesce in those provisions of the Treaty which go beyond the essential principles of a customs union and unjustifiably impair Canadian trade interests, and (ii) Canada reserves its rights to take appropriate measures, if necessary, with a view to restoring the balance of advantage in the Trade Agreements between Canada and these countries.

(d) Free Trade Area

The Free Trade Area negotiations are still in a preliminary stage and the proposed Free Trade Area arrangements are therefore not yet being considered formally by the Contracting Parties to the GATT. However, it is expected that a progress report on these Free Trade Area negotiations will be given to the Contracting Parties at this Session. It is likely, therefore, that delegations will take this opportunity to make general statements about their governments' attitudes towards the Free Trade Area plans. The Canadian delegation should be authorized, if the occasion arises, to make such a statement. It is suggested that the Canadian statement should indicate a constructive and helpful attitude of acquiescence in the principle of the Free Trade Area proposals, and, at the same time, point out the vital importance of an outward-looking policy being followed by the European countries in the working out of arrangements which do not adversely affect the trading interests of third countries. It should be added, that Canadian approval of any Free Trade arrangement will be subject to careful examination of its terms and provisions.

(e) Surplus Disposals

The GATT Contracting Parties in a resolution dated March, 1955, urged that when arranging the disposal of surplus agricultural products in world trade countries should consult the principal suppliers of those products with a view to avoiding prejudice to the interests of other countries. At this Session there will be an opportunity to discuss the way in which this resolution is, in practice, being implemented. The Canadian delegation should take this opportunity to express Canada's serious concern about the effects of U.S. surplus disposal operations on Canadian interests and on world trade. The Canadian delegation should urge that the United States take more fully into account the interests of other countries in accordance with the terms of this resolution. In making any such statement the Canadian delegation should, of course, bear in mind the nature of the discussions that will have taken place on this subject at the meeting in Washington on October 7-8 of the United States-Canada Joint Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs.

It is recommended that the Hon. Gordon M. Churchill, Minister of Trade and Commerce, should represent Canada at the meeting of Trade Ministers; that Mr. L.D. Wilgress should be Chairman of the Canadian Delegation to this Session of the Contracting Parties to GATT; that the following officials should be included in the delegation, as required:

Mr. M.W. Sharp—Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. C.M. Isbister—Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. S.S. Reisman—Department of Finance
 Dr. C.F. Wilson—Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. L.R. Younger—Department of National Revenue
 Mr. M. Schwarzmann—Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. R.E. Latimer—Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. W. Lavoie—Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. J. Warren—Department of External Affairs
 Mr. W.F. Stone—Department of External Affairs
 Mr. L.C. Howey—Department of National Revenue
 Mr. G.J. Dobson—Department of Agriculture
 Mr. M.G. Clark—Department of Finance; and that an officer from the Department of External Affairs from one of the Canadian Missions in Europe should be included in the delegation, if required. It is recommended that Mr. G.H. Glass, Director, Tariffs Section, Department of Finance, should lead the negotiating team, insofar as the negotiation of the Canadian tariff items under Article XXVIII is concerned.¹¹²

DONALD FLEMING
 Minister of Finance
 GORDON CHURCHILL
 Minister of Trade and Commerce

Concurred in:

SIDNEY SMITH
 Secretary of State
 for External Affairs

149.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
 au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
 to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 633

Geneva, November 2, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat Dept Trade and Commerce, Bank of Canada, Dept of Finance, Washington, Paris, Bonn, London, Brussels, Hague, Rome, NATO Paris (Information).

¹¹² Approuvé par le Cabinet le 11 octobre 1957./Approved by Cabinet on October 11, 1957.

By Bag Oslo, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Berlin, Vienna, Delhi, Karachi, Djakarta, Pretoria, Wellington, Colombo, Rio from London.

TWELFTH SESSION OF GATT — MINISTERIAL MEETING

The ministerial meeting of GATT which took place October 28-30 provided a useful opportunity for the expression of governments' views about the Rome Treaty and other matters of international concern in the trade field and should be a good foundation for the more detailed examination of the trade and economic aspects of the Rome Treaty which is now to begin. Of the 37 Contracting Parties some 16 sent ministers and a number of others sent high level officials to Geneva for the meeting. Among the ministers were Eccles (UK), Fayat (Belgium), Zijistra (Netherlands), Carli (Italy), Van Rhijn (South Africa), Kono (Japan), Gbedema (Ghana) and Sin (Malaya). Hallstein spoke for Germany, Mann for the USA and Sa Hasnie for Pakistan. At the end of the ministers' meeting a decision was taken to establish a committee of the whole with Mr. Wilgress as chairman to examine the relevant provisions of the Rome Treaty in the light of the General Agreement. The text of the communiqué which incorporates the terms of reference of the committee was sent to you in our telegram 630 October 31.† This committee will begin work on November 4.

2. The principal features of the ministerial debate were: (a) the objections and apprehensions expressed by most Contracting Parties with respect to the Rome Treaty; (b) the insistence of the Six that the relevant provisions of the Rome Treaty were consistent with the GATT and that other countries had nothing to fear from it; (c) the concern expressed by many of the less industrialized countries and their interest in a new look at international arrangements for trade in agricultural products and perhaps other raw materials.

3. Ministers from the Six emphasized that their treaty encompassed much more than a customs union, that the provisions of interest from the GATT point of view were entirely consistent with GATT, that there could be no question of modifying any of its provisions or subjecting the treaty institutions to international control and that the interests of third countries would not be damaged. The French statement was the most extreme but other ministers were equally firm in maintaining the party line. It was made clear that the Six regarded the association of the overseas countries and territories (the most objectionable feature of the Treaty for many ministers present) as an essential and integral part of their arrangements. In attempting to dispel the concern of outsiders, German, Belgian and Netherlands' speakers pointed to their countries' continuing needs for outside sources of materials. Foodstuffs and markets and the prosperity that the Treaty would bring to Europe was an important assurance that the Community would be liberal minded and expansionist and that its trade with the rest of the world would increase. Benelux was offered as an example of the increases in production and foreign trade which could come from a common market in Europe. The invitations to join the Customs Union issued to other European countries and the willingness of the Six to join in negotiations for a European free trade area were offered as evidence of the outward looking attitude of the Six. Hallstein (Germany) and others attempted to meet the concern expressed by some speakers that European investment capital would be diverted increasingly to the French colonial territories. Hallstein said Germany would continue to furnish "any possible assistance" to the development programmes of other underdeveloped areas.

4. The agricultural provisions of the Treaty were defended as a natural and necessary continuation of present national policies in the field of agriculture and trade. Fayat (Belgium) noted that many other countries also had special régimes for agriculture. He agreed that the present state of affairs in world agricultural trade was unsatisfactory and should be improved. In the meantime the Six had their own agricultural problems to cope with. The only new feature was their intention to devise jointly a common policy. He argued vigorously that there was no case for asking more of the Six jointly in the way of performance or reports in the agricultural and other fields than was required of any Contracting Party. If in the implementation of the Treaty a contracting party or parties believed a breach of obligations was being committed then normal procedures should be applied. The Six should not, however, be asked to give advance undertakings which were not asked of other countries.

5. In essence the position of the Six was to stand pat on their Treaty and to resist any change or modification in the proposed arrangements. The Six offered to try to accommodate particular problems or difficulties of individual Contracting Parties but beyond agreeing to the establishment of the committee of the whole referred to above gave no indication that any major concessions would be made to the Contracting Parties on important matters of principle. At the same time the attitude of the six ministers was courteous and not lacking in understanding of the interests and concerns (which they thought unfounded) of other countries.

6. Speakers from almost all other countries, while clearly appreciative of the political importance of the Rome Treaty, were far from reassured about its economic and trade aspects and made their concerns plain. Concerning tariffs and quantitative restrictions it was widely agreed that the intentions of the Six were not clear enough to pass a final judgment. The impression was, however, that their common tariffs would be higher than that permitted by the customs union provisions of the GATT and would be designed to give undue protection not only to domestic producers but also to suppliers in the associated countries and territories.

7. The proposed agricultural régime which remains particularly vague caused special apprehension for a large number of countries which believe that the effects will be restrictive and discriminatory and damaging to outside countries. Certain delegates led by Westerman (Australia) maintained that the agricultural provisions of the Treaty clearly did not provide for free trade among the Six and could not therefore be regarded as in accord with Article 24 of the GATT.

8. The most vigorous and emotional assault on the Rome Treaty came from those countries whose interests are threatened by the association of overseas countries and territories with the common market. The UK placed primary emphasis on this feature of the Treaty (in the interests of its colonial territories) and was supported by all of the Commonwealth, the Latin Americans, Indonesia and some other non-Europeans. These countries protested the establishment of what would amount to new area of preference linking the industrial European countries with politically dependent areas of supply for raw materials and foodstuffs. The Indian Minister found the political aspects of this part of the Treaty particularly disturbing. It was the general view among all these countries that the overseas territories provisions of the Treaty were contrary to Article 24 and possibly Article 1 of the GATT. Ministers from Ghana and Cuba had concrete complaints: they pointed to the already envisaged taxes and higher duties on cocoa and sugar from outside the preferential area which could have serious disruptive effects on their economies.

9. It was clear from the debate that few outside countries are prepared at the present stage to agree that the relevant provisions of the Rome Treaty conform to the General Agreement. The speeches revealed a good deal of mistrust about the European plans although the Scandinavian and Austrian Ministers were prepared to have more confidence than others in the plans of the Six. The USA statement included only a brief and uncritical reference to the Rome Treaty. The USA, Mann said, recognizes that problems would undoubtedly arise in the trade relationships between the Six and other Contracting Parties. These problems should be faced and solutions sought which would give confidence to all Contracting Parties.

10. As mentioned, many speakers from agricultural and raw material producing countries called for greater attention to their particular trading problems. Led by Australia these countries maintained that the success of GATT in promoting multilateralism and reducing tariffs and reducing quantitative restrictions had mainly benefited the industrialized countries. Raw materials had never suffered much from tariffs and the advantages GATT had brought for the primary producers were considerably less than those accruing to the industrialized countries. The trading problems of raw-material-producing countries arose mainly from fluctuating prices, the relative decline in total trade in raw materials and agricultural products, the current decline in prices of certain raw materials and the difficulty of obtaining investment capital. When it came to agriculture these countries found their exports obstructed by protective devices of all kinds in industrialized countries which were not related to balance of payments difficulties.

11. In connection with agriculture the Australians made three specific suggestions: first, the Six should formulate their agricultural plans in detail and provide the safeguards to ensure that the benefits of economic progress within the Common Market would be shared with other Contracting Parties; second, a special GATT committee should be established to consult with the Six on their developing plans and bring to an early session of GATT proposals for examining and dealing with the problems of agricultural trade as related not only to the plans of the Six but to the practice of all countries in this field of trade; and third, a panel of top flight technical experts should examine and report on agricultural protection and its relation to the world trade objectives of GATT.

12. The concern expressed by the agricultural and primary producing countries is not new but the Australian initiative at this session seems to have struck a definite note of response. It cannot be ruled out that the session will be called on to deal with further proposals to meet the particular difficulties of these countries.

13. The text of Mr. Churchill's statement at the meeting which he made on October 29 was sent in our telegram 629 October 31.†

150.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 657

Geneva, November 13, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 633 Nov 2.

Repeat Trade and Commerce, Finance, Bank of Canada, Agriculture, Washington, NATO Paris, Paris, London, Brussels, Bonn, Hague, Rome (Information).

12TH SESSION OF GATT

This telegram reports on the Session since the ministerial meetings which ended on October 30 and on which we reported in our ref telegram. The main development since then has been the discussion by the Committee established by the ministerial meeting to review the Rome Treaty. There have also been several plenary sessions of interest and the Balance of Payments Committee has been continuing its work. On the tariff side there is little to report; our own renegotiations have been slow because other delegations have been preoccupied.

Rome Treaty

2. The discussion of the Committee on the Rome Treaty November 4-7 were of a general nature and covered (a) tariffs, (b) quantitative restrictions, (c) agriculture and (d) overseas territories. The Committee established working parties on tariffs and quantitative restrictions and are participating actively as seems necessary in meetings of the other two.

3. In the Committee's discussion of the tariff provisions of the Rome Treaty, the French Delegation on behalf of the Six maintained that the only question to be discussed was the general incidence of the common tariff of the customs union. Speakers from other countries, however, were in agreement that the general incidence of a tariff was in practice difficult to determine and that in any case there was considerable uncertainty about the common tariff to be applied by the Six (e.g. the items in List G). We took the position in common with Contracting Parties other than the Six that what was required was a commodity by commodity and country by country examination of the effects of the common tariffs to be applied by the Six, as these tariffs become known.

4. On quantitative restrictions we put forward in vigorous terms our long standing view that in the normal course of events quantitative restrictions can only be justified in terms of the balance of payments situation of individual Contracting Parties and that in this respect the Six would continue to be bound individually by GATT balance of payments articles. Our position received wide support except from the Six. The Belgian representative speaking for the Six emphasized that the Rome Treaty signatories had undertaken in the Treaty to eliminate quantitative restrictions among themselves and that paragraph 8 of GATT Article 24 permitted them to do this without extending similar liberalization measures to outside countries. He also argued that Article 24 permitted matching quotas among the Six without regard for the payments position of members of the Treaty.

5. In the Committee's discussion of the agricultural provisions of the Rome Treaty it was widely agreed among countries other than the Six that the provisions amounted to less than free trade in agriculture among the Six and further would probably require elaborate restrictions on imports from outside countries. It was a general feeling of third countries that the agricultural régime would contravene the GATT obligations of the Six.

6. Most speakers other than the Six were agreed that the proposed arrangements for the association of overseas countries and territories could not be regarded as a free trade area but would be an extension of a preferential area and therefore contrary to GATT Article I. The USA and Swedish Delegations adopted a neutral position on this point. The French representative stated flatly that the Six would not seek a waiver.

7. At this stage it seems unlikely that the working parties will be able to reconcile the opposing views held by the Six and by outside countries on these various aspects of the Rome Treaty. What seems more likely to develop in the working parties is a more precise enunciation of the issues involved; and clearer statements of the issues involved; and clearer statements of the views of outside countries on the way in which the Six should implement the relevant provision of their Treaty in relation to their GATT obligations and in order to avoid damage to outside countries. In addition decisions may emerge regarding continuing GATT machinery for keeping the common market arrangements under review and providing facilities for consultations with outside countries.

Plenary Meetings

8. The discussion on international commodity problems was based on a report to the Contracting Parties by the Chairman of the Interim Coordinating Committee on International Commodity Problems (ICCICA). The underdeveloped countries and Australia emphasized their difficulties arising from declining commodity prices, their worsening terms of trade and the decline in the volume of trade in primary commodities in relation to world trade. The French proposed that a working party should be established at this session but it was not clear to many delegations including our delegation what this working party would do or what it could accomplish. It was finally agreed that the Chairman would consult with a group of interested countries to determine what should be done. Despite considerable opposition it is not unlikely that some new intersessional committee may have to be established to meet the pressure for some GATT action in this field.

9. The discussion on surplus disposal was led off by a USA statement on the operation of its various disposal programmes. The Australians have replied and we intend to make a statement at the next plenary meeting.

10. A decision has been taken by the Contracting Parties to extend for one year the time limit for Contracting Parties to communicate their requests for "hard core" waivers under the decision of March 5, 1955. This decision is without prejudice to any further extension; the whole question is to be reviewed at the Thirteenth Session.

Balance of Payments Committee

11. The Balance of Payments Committee has now completed its consultations with all countries except Australia, Japan and NZ. The discussions in the Committee have on the whole been useful. It is expected that the Committee will have completed its consultations by mid November. The Committee has had a first discussion of the future arrangements under the revised Articles XII and XVIII.

Tariff Negotiations

12. No decision has yet been taken regarding the extension of schedules for a further bound period but we expect this matter will be dealt with within the next week or so. The session is faced with notifications of intention by NZ and Cuba to implement their new tariffs prior to renegotiations as called for under Article XVIII in the course of the next bound period. In addition Sweden has indicated that it will be coming forward with substantial negotiations at a later date.

13. Our own negotiations are not proceeding as fast as we should wish partly because of the elaborate negotiating procedures of the USA both here and in Washington and partly because of the pre-occupation of other countries with the Rome Treaty.

Future Work of Session

14. It appears likely that the session will end at the beginning of December as anticipated. One of the main matters still to be dealt with is the proposal by Australia for a new GATT approach to trade in agricultural products. The Australian proposal is likely to be supported by a number of other countries. We have expressed doubts about plunging into a review of the agricultural provisions of the agreement until there is a much clearer indication of whether this review could lead to fruitful results but it is impossible at this stage to predict the outcome of the Australian initiative.

151.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 668

Geneva, November 19, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 657 Nov 13.

Repeat Dept Trade and Commerce, Dept of Finance, Bank of Canada, Dept of Agriculture, NATO Paris, London, Paris, Brussels, Rome, Hague, Bonn, Washington (Information).

12TH SESSION OF GATT

1. We thought we should send you a report on progress of the four working parties which are considering various aspects of the Rome Treaty and on the outcome of plenary discussions of various agenda items during past week.

2. Working Party on Tariffs has confirmed unanimously that if the common tariff increases the duty on an item bound to another Contracting Party the Six must enter negotiations under the terms of paragraphs one to three of Article XXVIII. We expect that the Working Party will recommend that on the basis of a commodity by commodity and country by country examination a comparison should be made between the new common tariff and the individual tariffs previously in existence in order to determine whether the new common tariff is consistent with the terms of paragraph four and five (a) of Article XXIV. We also expect that the report will indicate that the Contracting Parties aim at holding a conference to carry out these tasks during the latter half of 1960 or first half of 1961. To this end the Six would be asked to complete their common tariff by July 1959. This would leave the Contracting Parties twelve to eighteen months to prepare for the conference (the Six have agreed to provide the other Contracting Parties with a key for comparing the new and old tariffs). This timetable would be reviewed in the light of progress made by the Six during the next eight or nine month towards completing their tariff proposals.

3. In Working Party on Quantitative Restrictions we have taken a lead in pressing for continued acceptance of principle that quantitative restrictions are justifiable only on the basis of the balance of payments situation of individual members of the Six. The Six have insisted that Article XXIV overrides and constitutes an exception from the balance of payments articles of the agreements and that discrimination in the application of quantitative restrictions is the natural outcome of the formation of a customs union and is justified under Article XXIV. UK Delegation has been helpful but not unexpectedly have taken the position that members of a customs union may liberalize quantitative restrictions on imports from outside countries. USA Delegation have not been as helpful as we wished but have lent their support to the drafting of a useful summary statement by the Chairman designed to form part of the final report. This statement by the Chairman reads in part as follows:

"The majority of the Working Party with the exception of the representatives of the Six have indicated that if the development of a common liberalization list involved a deliberalization by any individual member of the Rome Treaty not justified by that member's balance of payments situation or if it involved a limitation upon the degree of liberalization of any individual member not justified by that member's balance of payments situation such an arrangement would be inconsistent with GATT provisions."

4. The Working Party on the Agricultural Provisions of the Treaty has concerned itself mainly with the provisions regarding minimum prices (Article 44) and long term contracts (Article 45). The Six maintain that the minimum price provisions apply only to trade among themselves and are only relevant to the transitional period. Others on the Working Party however expressed the view that the provisions would require the imposition of quantitative restrictions on imports from outside the community. Some members of the Working Party were even more apprehensive of the effects on third countries of the Treaty provisions for long term contracts. The Six maintained that outside interests were covered by the requirement that "due account be taken of traditional trade currents." They said the provisions for long term contracts were designed to break through existing restrictive policies within the Community and not to interfere with trade with outside countries. Concern was expressed by many delegations over those provisions which implied that it was the intention of the Six to permit imports only in circumstances where supplies could not be obtained within the Community. While the discussion have not reached the stage where the results are predictable it is not unlikely that the Working Party report will indicate a sharply critical attitude on the part of the majority with respect to certain features of the Rome Treaty including minimum price and long term contracts.

5. The Working Party on Association of Overseas Countries and Territories has been the most controversial of all. It is still discussing the likely effects of the protective and revenue duties which the associated territories will be permitted to impose on their imports from the Six. The Six maintain that these duties will affect only a very small part of trade, that such duties fall within the scope of Article XVIII, that the association of the overseas territories with the Six is a free trade area within the terms of Article XXIV and accordingly that no waiver is required. They would be willing in the future to seek a waiver if more than twenty percent of the trade were to be affected by protective and revenue duties imposed by associated territories. Other members of the working party (except for the USA representative who has not expressed himself on the subject) agree that it is inevitable that as industrialization and development proceeds in the non-European territories these territories will make increasing use of protective tariffs, that consequently the relationship between the overseas territories and the Six does not now provide a basis for a free trade area and that in the future the relationship will depart more and more from a free trade area. A reconciliation of these sharply divided views does not appear likely. It may be that the best that can emerge from this Working Party is a clear statement of the majority view that the proposed arrangements do not provide for a free trade area. This is of course the central point of the whole discussion and the peg on which to hang the contention that a waiver from GATT Article I is required.

Plenary

6. In the discussion of the item on surplus disposal the opening USA statement was followed by statements by a number of other countries concerned including Australia, Netherlands, NZ, Denmark, Pakistan and ourselves. In our statement we stressed that serious damage had been done to Canada's wheat exports by USA disposal programmes, that we hoped and expected that the USA would in future refrain from disposal activities which damaged the legitimate commercial interests of other countries and that it was becoming increasingly difficult to maintain orderly trading relations in accordance with GATT principles in the face of USA disposal policies. The Pakistan statement was particularly balanced and helpful. It expressed gratitude to the USA for the assistance

Pakistan had received under disposal programmes but pointed also to the damage Pakistan exports had suffered from USA cotton disposal activities and concluded that national policies leading to the production of surpluses and subsequent programmes for disposing of these surpluses were on the whole not in the interests of underdeveloped countries.¹¹³

7. The debate on restrictive business practices was opened by a Norwegian statement urging the establishment of a working party at this session or an expert group to study the subject. The Norwegians received some support from the other Scandinavians and the Latin Americans but the majority view was that it should be left to the Intersessional Committee to look more closely into the matter on the basis of further information to be collected by the Secretariat. The Intersessional Committee will be asked to decide whether a working party or an expert group should be established. If they cannot agree on either of these two courses the intersessional may of course recommend against taking any action.

152.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 679

Geneva, November 22, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, NATO Paris, Paris, Bonn, Brussels, Hague, Rome, Washington, Dept Trade and Commerce, Bank of Canada, Dept Finance (Information).

12TH SESSION OF GATT: GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

1. As promised during the balance of payments consultation last June the German Delegation on November 20 made a statement of German policy regarding import restrictions. The relaxations announced were most disappointing.

2. The programme consists of: (a) the liberalization on January 1, 1958 of a number of products whose import value in 1956 was about 1.3 billion DM; (b) the liberalization over the next two years of a further list of products with an import value in 1956 of about 600 million DM; (c) as of January 1, 1960, the granting of global quotas for non-liberalized agricultural products of Contracting Parties other than OEEC members and Czechoslovakia and (d) as of July 1, 1958 the consolidation into a uniform global quotas for all non-liberalized industrial products which now come under separate soft currency and dollar area global quotas. When this programme is completed in 1960 some 20 percent of German imports would remain under quantitative control and there would remain a considerable element of discrimination in the system. Our preliminary analysis of the items affected indicates that only a handful are of interest to Canada and the more important of these, i.e. synthetic rubber and primary aluminum, would not be liberalized until January 1, 1960.

3. The Germans used a variety of arguments including the protocol of provisional application to show it was not possible to go farther towards dismantling import restrictions at ¹¹³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This is not quite what the Pak[istani]s said. W.[F. Stone?]

the present time. They gave no indication they would seek a hard core waiver. From their statement and conversations we have had with them it seems clear that in addition to domestic considerations, the early coming into force of the Rome Treaty and other prospective European arrangements are important elements in their unwillingness to move more rapidly and more extensively in the elimination of their restrictions.

4. The discussion is still in progress. So far vigorous statements have been made by the USA, UK, Australia, NZ, Norway, Rhodesia and ourselves calling on the Germans to honour their GATT obligations. A working party has been established to draw up a report on the initial reaction of Contracting Parties to the German programme for transmission to the German government.

5. We believe it would be useful if following this communication to the German authorities of the reaction of the Contracting Parties the Canadian Government were to make direct representations in Bonn on the matter. The USA Delegation here is making a similar recommendation to its government.

6. Great importance is attached to Germany's living up to its GATT obligations. In our comments on the German announcement we have urged early German action to remove its import restrictions. We have emphasized that such action is vital not merely because it affects the trade of individual countries but also because failure to comply would bring into serious question the effectiveness of GATT as an international trade agreement. We have also underlined the importance of Germany's action as an indication of the shape (or perhaps the shapelessness) of things to come in Europe.

153.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*L'ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 516

Bonn, November 25, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: GATDELS Tel 679 Nov 22.

Repeat London, NATO Paris, Paris, Hague, Brussels, Rome, Washington from Ottawa (Information).

12TH SESSION OF GATT: GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Von Hardenberg, who is in charge of GATT matters in the Foreign Office, implied strongly today that the German programme which had been approved by Cabinet was subject to alteration if the reaction to it by other Contracting Parties was extremely adverse. He indicated that the Cabinet's first decision (later reversed), based on Agricultural Minister Luebke's representations and taken at a meeting when Dr. Erhard was absent and Brentano inadequately briefed, was that the German Delegation should propose the total exclusion of agricultural products from GATT obligations at least so far as the elimination of quantitative restrictions was concerned. An adverse reaction to the present programme, which Von Hardenberg labelled provisional, would strengthen the hand of those ministers who found themselves in opposition to Luebke.

2. Von Hardenberg seemed very vague as to the details of the German programme announced. He said that no hard-core waiver was being sought and that, with the exception of certain agricultural products and a few industrial items, "complete liberalization was envisaged within a two-year period." So far as agricultural products, subject to state trading, were concerned, the Federal Government (including the Economics Ministry) was reluctant to relinquish the present scope for bilateral transactions, such as, for example, with France and Sweden.

3. In the light of the above, we would be inclined to endorse our GATT Delegation's recommendation that representations should be made in Bonn. Incidentally, at first glance at least, the German programme now presented to the GATT does not appear to differ substantially from the tentative programme reported in our telegram 368 July 29† and in subsequent messages. And though it is hazardous to be dogmatic, representations at that time might have been more profitable than they would be now.

[C.S.A.] RITCHIE

154.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to GATT Conference*

TELEGRAM E-1828

Ottawa, November 27, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your telegram 679 Nov 22.

Repeat London, Washington, NATO Paris, Bonn, Paris, Brussels, The Hague, Rome (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We agree that German position in this matter is unsatisfactory and that Canadian views should be made subject of direct representations in Bonn. We would gather from Bonn's telegram 516 November 25 that this course of action carries judgment of our Embassy. Nature and timing of our representations would depend to some extent on action taken by Contracting Parties on report of Balance of Payments Working Party. For this reason we should like you to let us know as soon as Contracting Parties have completed their consideration of this report.

2. Washington: It would be in order for you to tell Americans that we are thinking of making bilateral representations in Bonn and that we shall be glad to keep in touch with them on this question.

155.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 703

Geneva, December 3, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 668 Nov 18.

Repeat Dept Trade and Commerce, Bank of Canada, Dept Finance, Dept Agriculture, Dept National Revenue, Rome, Brussels, Bonn, Hague, London, NATO Paris, Paris, Washington (Information).

TWELFTH SESSION GATT

This telegram reports the outcome of the discussion of the Rome Treaty and other items of importance.

Common Market

2. In the sub-groups the main objective of countries other than the Six was

(a) to determine more precisely the areas where the provisions of the Rome Treaty or their implementation were or could be in conflict with the GATT;

(b) to impress upon the Six the extent of their concern over the possible adverse effects of the Rome Treaty on their trading interests, and if possible obtain some kind of guarantees or assurances; and

(c) to establish some supervisory machinery.

The Six directed their efforts to show that the Rome Treaty and its likely implementation was not incompatible with their GATT obligations. They resisted the notion that they must compensate for damage to the interests of third countries inherent in a customs union arrangement and refused to give any assurances beyond a statement that their Treaty would be operated within the framework of their international obligations. They insisted that unless and until they acted contrary to provisions of GATT they would not seek special dispensation and resisted the establishment of special GATT machinery.

3. The results of the examination of the Rome Treaty by the sub-groups at the session may be summarized as follows:

Tariffs and Plan and Schedule

4. The sub-group report found that since the duties were not yet known for a large part of the common tariff, it was not possible to determine whether the common tariff would be consistent with the requirements of GATT Article XXIV: 5(a). Most members of the sub-group agreed that a judgment about the general incidence of the common tariff could not be based on a simple arithmetical formula but required a detailed commodity examination on a country by country basis. The Six contended that their proposed common tariff was in full conformity with their obligations under paragraph 5(a) and it would be unnecessary and fruitless for any detailed examination to be made country by country. The Six agreed to communicate as soon as possible the rates of the common tariff which are not yet known, including List G. Many countries called for low tariffs on products in List G.

5. It was agreed by all that if the common tariff raised rates above those specified in the schedules of individual Rome Treaty countries these countries would undertake negotiations under Article XXVIII. There was some difference about what was required of the Six under Article XXVIII. It was felt that these negotiations should be completed before the Six take the first step to achieve a common tariff i.e. 1962 but the Six made no commitment on timing. The Six stated that in their view these negotiations should be the responsibility of the European Commission and not of individual countries.

Quantitative Restrictions

6. The Six insisted that Article XXIV took precedence over the balance of payments articles. They argued that Article XXIV imposed an obligation on members of the customs union to eliminate as far as possible quantitative restrictions among themselves while at the same time permitting them to maintain or impose restrictions against third countries. They also argued that quantitative restrictions imposed by members of the customs union should be contained in a common programme. The other members of the sub-group continued to maintain that members of a customs union would be covered individually by the provisions of the General Agreement relating to quantitative restrictions which permitted these to be maintained or imposed only if justified by the balance of payments situation of the individual country concerned. Concerning common quotas most members of the sub-group believed that their imposition by the Six would not only be contrary to Article XII but also contrary to fundamental economic reasoning unless the Six held their reserve in common. There was a difference of view among the members of the sub-group other than the Six regarding the relaxation of quantitative restrictions among the Six. The UK on legal grounds and the USA on practical grounds appeared to accept that during the transitional period the Six would be relaxing quantitative restrictions more rapidly among themselves as has been the case among OEEC countries. We and other members of the sub-group pointed out that because we had not formally objected to the OEEC liberalization programme as incompatible with GATT this did not mean we considered the OEEC programme was in compliance with GATT.

7. In view of the uncertainties about the way in which the provisions of the Rome Treaty would be implemented the members of the sub-group other than the Six considered that at this stage it was not possible to make a judgment that the application of the provisions of the Rome Treaty concerning the use of quantitative restrictions would or would not be compatible with the relevant provisions of the General Agreement. In these circumstances the sub-group concluded that at the present time it was not possible to decide what recommendations it might deem appropriate under Article XXIV but this should not be construed to mean that the Contracting Parties might not wish to take action at a later stage.

Agriculture

8. The members of the sub-group other than the representatives of the Six noted the large area of discretion left to the institutions of the Six and the lack of a sufficiently precise plan as to how the agricultural provisions of the Rome Treaty would be applied both in regard to trade of third countries with members of the Community and in regard to the removal of barriers to trade between the member states. The majority of members of the sub-group considered, moreover, that the particular measures envisaged under the Treaty carried a strong presumption of increased external barriers and a substitution of new internal barriers in place of existing tariffs and other measures. For these reasons the members of the sub-group excluding the representatives of the Six decided that it was not able to determine at this time either that the agricultural provisions of the Rome Treaty or their implementation would be consistent with the provisions of the association of overseas territories.

9. The work of this sub-group was the most unsatisfactory of all, partly because the UK failed to take the lead which was expected and the discussions were dominated by less responsible and extreme views of Ceylon, Brazil and Chile. In the event members of the sub-group stopped short of asking the Six to obtain a waiver for their plans. The concrete findings of the sub-group which the Six contested and on which the USA did not take a position were that:

(a) the proposed arrangements were an extension of an already existing preferential system and, therefore contrary to Article II;

(b) substantial barriers to trade between the various constituent territories would remain and these barriers would increase progressively as the overseas territories sought to protect their industrial development.

For this and other reasons the proposals of the Six for the associated territories did not conform to Article XXIV. There is to be an early examination in GATT of the effects of the association of overseas countries on the trade of third countries dealing first with the following products: cocoa, coffee, bananas, oilseeds and vegetable oils, wood and timber, tobacco, hard fibres and cotton, sugar and tea.

10. It remains to appraise the value of this GATT examination of the Rome Treaty. It provided an opportunity for a straight forward confrontation of the views of the Six and those of third countries. It is now clear that the interpretation of the Six of Article XXIV and of their obligations under GATT differ in many important respects from those held by most other Contracting Parties. It may be hoped the expressions of serious concern by many countries will have a moderating effect on the European arrangements as they develop over the next few years. The Six have not been given a green light by the Contracting Parties. Paragraph 7 of Article XXIV lays down certain responsibilities for the Contracting Parties in relation to a customs union. Although no recommendations to the Six are being made at the present time, this does not mean that the Contracting Parties have given up their rights to make recommendations should this be required. By way of continuing machinery between the Twelfth and Thirteenth Sessions the Intersessional Committee will be constituted to include all Contracting Parties and carry forward further consideration of the Rome Treaty after the end of the Twelfth Session. For this work the intersessional will have the same terms of reference as the Rome Treaty Committee of the whole (ref our telegram 633 November 1).

11. The reports of the four working groups were noted by the Rome Treaty Committee of the whole with little discussion on November 28. Considerable difficulty was encountered in reconciling the views of a group of underdeveloped countries who insisted that the Rome Treaty Committee continue in existence with those of the Six who opposed any special continuing machinery and wished the Intersessional Committee to assume the task of continuing the examination of the Rome Treaty.

12. In an oral report of the Contracting Parties Mr. Wilgress as Chairman of the Rome Treaty Committee said that because of insufficient time and lack of information it had not been possible for the working parties to arrive at definite conclusions. The reports were accordingly of an interim character but would contribute significantly to future consideration of the Rome Treaty. The Contracting Parties took note of Mr. Wilgress' report with little discussion.

13. The reconstituted Intersessional Committee met on November 30 to consider arrangements for continuing work on the Rome Treaty. Decisions were taken (a) to call a meeting of the members of the Working Group on Association of Overseas Territories on December 16 to begin the work called for in the report of this Working Group (see paragraph 9 above) and (b) to hold the next meeting of the Intersessional next April 15.

German Import Restrictions

14. We are reporting separately on this subject in the immediately following telegram.

Article XXVIII and Continued Application of Schedules

15. The revised Article XXVIII which came into force on October 7 provides for the automatic extension of schedules during successive three year periods beginning January 1, 1958 for twenty-five Contracting Parties (including Canada). The Contracting Parties have decided that a Contracting Party which before December 31 has notified its intention to enter into negotiations regarding modification or withdrawal of concessions may pursue such negotiations up to March 31, 1958. The Intersessional Committee is empowered to fix a later date than March 31, 1958 for the completion of negotiations on items notified before December 31. For countries which have not yet accepted revised Article XXVIII a declaration has been prepared to extend their schedules for a further three year period.

Australian Proposals re Agriculture

16. The Australians were not able to get much support from important delegations for a review of the agricultural provisions of GATT at this time. As a first step in this direction they proposed the appointment of a group of experts to examine the production, trade and protection of agricultural products. To attract the support of underdeveloped countries they incorporated proposals relating to commodity problems and trends in international trade. This proposal was adopted by the Contracting Parties. The experts are specifically requested not to pass judgment or make recommendations on policies of individual countries. It was decided that the experts should be chosen from a list of eighteen economists with international reputations which includes Deutsch (Canada), Haberler (USA), McDougall (UK), Austin Robinson (UK), Tinberger (Netherlands), Viner (USA) and Lionel Robbins (UK).

Budget

17. The Contracting Parties adopted a gross budget of $512,960 for calendar year 1958. Total assessments will amount to $431,600 of which the Canadian contribution has been set at $28,360. It was agreed that the total net remuneration of the Executive Secretary should be increased as of January 1, 1958 from $16,000 to $20,000 ($16,500 salary and $3,500 representational allowance) and the Deputy Executive Secretaries from $13,700 to $16,500 ($15,000 salary and $1,500 representation allowance).

18. It was decided to postpone until the April Intersessional a decision on whether or not to accept the Japanese invitation to hold the Thirteenth Session in Tokyo. A detailed report will be submitted in a few days.

19. A number of decisions were taken at the Session which will require a follow up by contracting countries. These include a declaration extending the standstill under Article XVI on export subsidies and reports on state trading operations under Article XVII and several other matters. These will be reported on separately and in detail shortly.

156.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 706

Geneva, December 3, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 679 Nov 22.

Repeat Dept Trade & Commerce, Dept of Finance, Bank of Canada, Dept of Agriculture, Dept of National Revenue, Washington, London, NATO Paris, Paris, Bonn, Rome, Hague (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

In accordance with its terms of reference the Working Party on German Quantitative Restrictions collected and presented in an orderly fashion for transmission to the German government the initial reactions of the Contracting Parties to the German statement concerning its import restrictions policy.

2. A majority of the working party — including all the principal trading nations e.g. USA, UK, Canada, Japan, Australia, Norway — jointly made the following points.

- (a) "Germany was no longer entitled to apply restrictions under Article XII";
- (b) They "could not accept the claim that the German marketing laws were covered by the Torquay Protocol relating to existing legislation";
- (c) The German liberalization programme "fell far short of what should be expected of a country in her financial position";
- (d) Germany "should be requested to consider and revise its import restriction policy".

3. At the end of the discussion Australia, Canada, UK and USA informed the Working Party that they had submitted a draft proposal requesting the Contracting Parties to recommend that:

(a) The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany reconsider its commercial policy and revise its programme with a view to eliminating its remaining import restrictions as soon as possible;

(b) If for any special reasons the German Government then considers that it cannot now eliminate its remaining restrictions it should make use of the agreed GATT procedures at the next meeting of the Intersessional Committee in order to bring its import policy into conformity with its obligations under the General Agreement;

(c) If the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany maintains the view that certain of its import restrictions are justifiable under paragraph (a)(ii) of the Torquay Protocol it should present to the Intersessional Committee the necessary information so that the relationship between the provisions of the German marketing laws and the Torquay Protocol may be clarified. In that event the Intersessional Committee should report its findings to the 13th Session of the Contracting Parties.

Ceylon, Japan, NZ, Norway and Sweden associated themselves with this draft recommendation in the Working Party.

4. When the plenary considered the draft recommendation France proposed that it be deferred to the April meeting of the Intersessional Committee. This proposal was adopted by 14 votes to 13. Supporting the French proposal were members of the Six, most Latin Americans, India and Turkey. After the vote Brazil, Turkey and Uruguay explained that they supported deferral on the grounds that Germany should be given time to review its policy in the light of the Working Party report. India and Dominican Republic said they shared this view but added that they also supported the draft recommendation. Chile explained that it did not have instructions.

5. During the discussion in plenary the German representative stated he would refer the Working Party's report to his government for early consideration. In doing so he would inform his government that a number of delegations indicated the hope that Germany would report its response to the points raised in the report by February 28, 1958. He also said that at the April meeting of the Intersessional Committee Germany would produce its marketing laws for examination and announce its intention concerning a hard core waiver.

6. While it would have been preferable to have obtained a recommendation from the Contracting Parties to Germany the debate made it clear that a large number of delegations representing a high proportion of world trade were becoming impatient with German tardiness in this matter. Furthermore the draft recommendation has not been rejected by the Contracting Parties but only deferred to the April meeting of the Intersessional Committee. It is to be hoped that this firm expression of opinion by the key trading nations will have an impact in Bonn.

157.

DEA/11271-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany

TELEGRAM E-1964

Ottawa, December 19, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your tel 536 of Dec 5.†

Repeat London, Geneva, Washington, NATO Paris, Rome, The Hague, Dept Trade & Commerce (Routine) (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We consider it worthwhile to make representations in fairly strong terms to the Federal Government on its import restrictions and should be grateful if you would present the following note to the Foreign Office as soon as possible:

Text Begins: . . . and has the honour to refer to the question of import restrictions maintained by the Federal Republic of Germany.

2. In the light of the conclusions reached in consultations held recently under the auspices both of the International Monetary Fund and of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which clearly established that Germany is no longer justified in maintaining import controls for balance of payments reasons, the Canadian Government expected that the Federal German Government would have taken immediate steps to remove its remaining import restrictions.

3. Accordingly, the Canadian Government was surprised and concerned at the announcement by the German Delegation at the Twelfth Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that many of the German import restrictions on industrial products would be maintained in force for another two years, and that there is no plan for liberalizing imports of the main agricultural products. Further, the German statement of policy envisaged continued discrimination in the administration of import restrictions on various agricultural products. This announced programme for the removal of restrictions falls far short of what could reasonably be expected in view of Germany's present financial position.

4. The Canadian Government is very much concerned, not only about the adverse effects of these restrictions on our present trade, but also about the implication of German policies in this field for the future development of the European Common Market and proposed free trade area. The Canadian Government has been confident that Germany would be particularly conscious of the need to promote outward-looking policies in the light of these new European developments.

5. Under the programme which has been announced by Germany approximately two-thirds of Canadian exports to Germany would be faced with the continuation of import controls for at least another two years. There is no indication that the main agricultural product which play a predominant part in Canada's trade with Germany will be liberalized even at that time. While Canadian exports to Germany accordingly would continue to be faced with import restrictions in spite of Germany's strong financial position, German exports to Canada enjoy an open and unrestricted market and are continuing to increase significantly particularly in the important field of fully manufactured goods. The Canadian Government accords this advantageous treatment to German products on the assumption that Canadian products will enjoy similar access to the German market.

6. In the light of these considerations and in accordance with the contractual obligations between our two countries, the Canadian Government urges the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany to reconsider its import policy and to take early and effective steps to remove its import restrictions. Ends.

158.

DEA/9100-AT-40

*L'ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 557

Bonn, December 20, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat London, Geneva, NATO Paris, Rome, Hague, Washington from Ottawa (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Over the past week or so we have had occasion to discuss informally with German officials from the Foreign Office and the Ministries of Agriculture and Economics, the German programme for the removal of quantitative import restrictions which was presented to the 12th Session of the Contracting Parties to the GATT. In this message we will set out our understanding of the German approach to the problem and attempt in conclusion a cautious and tentative forecast of the position likely to be taken by the German Delegation at the forthcoming intersessional meetings.

2. It is difficult to describe in simple terms the reaction of German officials to the reception accorded to their programme by the Contracting Parties. Officials of the Agricultural Ministry confessed to being "astonished" at the degree of opposition recorded. Officials of the Economics Ministry, which regards itself as the champion of liberal international economic policies, seemed ready to confess their concern and regret. On the other hand the economic section of the Foreign Office appears to have taken some pride in the accuracy of its own forecast. There is no doubt that the interdepartmental discussions which preceded the GATT meeting were difficult and the resulting Cabinet decisions could only be described as tentative and confused. No one was able to deny the arguments in favour of putting forward a programme which would give further evidence of the liberal economic philosophy of the German Government and its desire to live up to its GATT obligations. There was also a widespread recognition of the part played by imports in lending stability to the domestic price level. Finally the Federal Government was anxious to the extent politically feasible to adopt good creditor policies — though such policies must be viewed in terms of the regional imbalance in Germany's external transactions. These more or less liberal considerations were tempered as a result of the pressure on the Ministry of Agriculture to give added rather than lessened protection to this sector of the domestic economy. The Economics Ministry for its part was obliged to deal with representations from German manufacturers, some of whom have watched with growing concern the liberalization measures already adopted and who see in the further liberalization of German imports a threat to their established position. Aside from these domestic pressures was the need of the Federal Government to take into account "representations" from soft currency countries who were opposed to a further removal of discriminatory restrictions. But perhaps the most important factor was the reluctance at the highest level of the Federal Government to sanction any proposals which might place further obstacles (however low) in the way of implementation of the Common Market and negotiation of the agreement for a free trade area. There seems to be little doubt that the influence of the political regionalists has been growing of late at the expense of the economic multilateralists. This is not to say that there is not a full appreciation of the GATT as a link with the outside (non-European) world to which Germany must continue to export (and import). But it is clear that any decisions which effect the Six and the prospective free trade area will continue to be carefully appraised in terms of the interests of the Six and the requirements of the broader free trade area.

3. What emerged from these divergent pressures at the recent GATT meetings was a provisional compromise. Increased liberalization (and lessened discrimination) is to be achieved over a two year period. Because of future uncertainties, no real attempt was made to bring the German programme fully into accord with GATT obligations — a hard-core waiver was not sought because no one could guarantee that the five year time limit would be observed. What will be left on January 1, 1960 (on the tenuous assumption that the coming into force of the EEC does not result in a substantive modification of the present German programme) will be

(a) Non-discriminatory quantitative restrictions applying to non-agricultural items representing about 2 percent of present German imports. Included in this group will be items for which a supply monopoly exists abroad, items where Japanese imports present a special problem, items for which imports from Pakistan and India represent a real threat to domestic production and items which require the maintenance of non-discriminatory restrictions for purely protective purposes. An attempt will be made we are told to reduce the number of items in these categories and some form of waiver may be sought to attempt to legitimize the retention of the quantitative restrictions for the remainder. Here resort may be had to Article XXV 5(a) of the General Agreement.

(b) Quantitative restrictions for agricultural commodities which the Germans argue are maintained in accordance with the Torquay Protocol and the reservation made by the Federal Republic in respect of Parts II and III of the General Agreement. The German Delegation may be expected to continue to argue that the provisions of German legislation are mandatory in intent and hence restrictions for these commodities (representing about 11 percent of the value of present imports) do not contravene Germany's GATT obligations. There is in my view no likelihood that the Germans will agree to the removal of restrictions on items in this category (cereals, meat, fats and sugar), particularly as the provisions of the Common Market imply a continued need to discriminate in favour of agricultural production within the territory of the Six.

(c) Discriminatory quantitative restrictions with respect to certain other agricultural products, i.e. fresh vegetables, canned meats, etc., will be maintained. An attempt will be made to reduce the lists presented to the Contracting Parties at the next GATT Session and perhaps to seek formal sanction for the items remaining.

As will be seen from the above, some modification in the German programme will be laid before the Intersessional Committee at its meeting in April. But in my view there is little likelihood that the Germans will return to the GATT with a revised programme which would meet the full requirements of those who found themselves in opposition to the German proposals last month. Under the Common Market provisions the Federal Government will find itself obliged to take increasing quantities from European agricultural production. While it may be that no precise undertaking have been entered into by the Federal Government, it seems at least conceivable that pending the working out of a common agricultural policy and a common organization of agricultural market, increased quotas for say French wheat and Dutch and Italian agricultural products will be granted. (The Franco-German Trade Agreement expires next September and we suspect that the French have a reasonable guarantee that the wheat quota will be renewed or possibly expanded; agricultural producing countries within the Common Market will have a legitimate demand for increased exports — pending the working out of longer term arrangements — to compensate then for the progressive reduction of their tariffs and quantitative restrictions applying to industrial items.) For this reason alone, the Federal Government might be expected to resist the complete liberalization of agricultural products.

From our discussions with German officials it is apparent that the German Delegation was surprised that, without lobbying, they found so many ready allies at the 12th Session. It is quite likely that between now and the April session Germany will be attempting to persuade its European partners (and perhaps others who have something to lose through reduced German discrimination) to support any new programme which is put forward.

Since dictating the above, we have received a copy of your telegram E-1964 December 19. We would not wish to suggest any modification of its tone in the light of the additional information which has become available to us. Perhaps it might be desirable for the sake of completeness, however, to refer to the non-discriminatory quantitative restrictions which will continue to apply to non-agricultural items after January 1, 1960. If you agree, therefore, we will insert after the first sentence of paragraph 3 of your draft, "the German programme does not even after the end of a two-year interval envisage the complete abolition of quantitative restrictions on non-agricultural items."¹¹⁴

DEA/9100-AT-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 28

Geneva, January 15, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat Dept Finance, Dept Trade & Commerce, Bank of Canada, Washington, London, NATO Paris, Brussels, Bonn (Information).

GATT — 12TH SESSION OF CONTRACTING PARTIES

The interval before GATT meetings begin again in February is perhaps the time to attempt an assessment of the 12th Session and future prospects.

2. Looking back at the 12th Session the points that stand out are the European economic community and German import restrictions. Acceptance of these proposals¹¹⁵ would have opened the way for Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and The Netherlands to escape important obligations imposed by the GATT while at the same time retaining their privileges in the markets of other Contracting Parties. If events had taken this course there is a strong presumption that the EEC would become a discriminatory regional arrangement that increased barriers to trade with third countries. This in turn would seriously impair the balance of rights and obligations which is the heart of the GATT. In these circumstances most other Contracting Parties would be forced to retaliate by withdrawing concessions and raising barriers against imports from the Six. This spiral of increased protection could lead to the erosion of the multilateral trade rules and return to the destructive regional and national economic policies of the pre-war era. Some experienced observers believe that the EEC and German restrictions constitute the most serious threat to date to the multilateral trading system.

3. Throughout the session the Six took the position that the Rome Treaty was in line with GATT. They insisted that implementation of the EEC would not injure the trading interests of other Contracting Parties. They refused to commit themselves to pay compensation for damaging the interests of others. They suggested Contracting Parties should not complain until they had been hurt. On the other hand most Contracting Parties challenged the contention the EEC was in line with GATT. They stressed that the Six were claiming excessive privileges which would seriously damage trading interests of third countries contrary to the provisions of GATT. Accordingly they reserved the right to scrutinize implementation of the Treaty and to make recommendations under paragraph 7(b) of Article XXIV.

¹¹⁴ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
agreed & Bonn informed. W.[F. Stone?]

La note du Canada a été remise le 23 décembre 1957.
The Canadian note was delivered on December 23, 1957.

¹¹⁵ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
? [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

4. On the surface this confrontation ended in stalemate. Neither side abandoned their principles and all important problems remain unresolved. This is reflected in the reports of the sub-groups on the common tariffs, quantitative restrictions, agriculture and overseas territories which are limited to reporting conflicting views of Contracting Parties and the Six. In summing up the Chairman of the Committee on the EEC, Mr. Wilgress stated "The reports contained no definite conclusions — ... while they will contribute significantly to the future consideration of these problems they are largely of an interim character ... the Committee simply took note of the report and decided to bring them to the attention of the Contracting Parties for their information."

5. Perhaps the real measure of the session will be determined by the underlying forces it set in motion. For example, has the inescapable evidence that many third countries genuinely fear the EEC will damage their trade contrary to GATT principles persuaded the Six that they must make meaningful concessions or alienate many of their traditional trading partners? On the other hand has the failure of the Contracting Parties to take decisions stating that parts of the Treaty conflict with the GATT, lead the Six to believe they can drive their treaty through GATT without accepting guidance concerning its implementation or paying compensation to Contracting Parties whose interests are injured? Even more important has the failure to take decisions, particularly concerning the affiliation of overseas territories lead some Contracting Parties to lose confidence in the multilateral defense of their interests and decide to negotiate a bilateral settlement? At this time one can only guess at the answers to these questions. However, it is perhaps prudent to proceed on the assumption that all these forces were set in motion at the session and that it is still possible to encourage those that are in our interest or retard development of those that are not.

6. It should be stressed at this point that no Contracting Parties of substance tried to wreck the EEC. Their first objective was to ensure that EEC operations are in harmony with the provisions of GATT. They are striving to impose the same liberalizing influence over the European-African preferential arrangement that they have exerted on the Commonwealth preferential system. To the extent that they fail to achieve this primary objective they wish to secure compensation for any damage inflicted on their trade contrary to GATT provisions.

7. Looking to the future the Executive Secretary (Wyndham White) believes that the Contracting Parties must permit this stalemate to continue until the spring of 1959. In his view the key to imposing GATT direction on the EEC is the USA. To achieve this objective¹¹⁶ the USA must take new initiatives (such as renewal of the Trade Agreements Act including authority to reduce tariffs) and put pressure on the Six to make concessions. If the USA takes these steps he thinks the Six will cooperate in working out compromise solutions. However, he does not believe the USA will be prepared to announce any initiative before the spring of 1959. While recognizing that Congress will have authorized new initiatives by the end of June 1958 he doubts if the Administration will be prepared to announce a detailed programme¹¹⁷ until after the congressional elections in November 1958. This would not provide time to deal with the matter at the 13th Session in November 1958 and it will be necessary to defer action to the 14th Session. If his suggestion to change the rhythm of annual sessions is adopted (our telegram 14 January 9†) the 14th Session would meet in the spring of 1959.

¹¹⁶ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
? [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

¹¹⁷ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
for what? [W.F. Stone?]

8. While agreeing with Wyndham White that USA support is essential to ensure GATT direction of the EEC, we believe there are serious risks in marking time to the spring of 1959. A delay of this magnitude could lead to a crisis of confidence among Contracting Parties and prepare the ground for the bilateral deals the Six are trying to make.¹¹⁸ It is conceivable that by the spring of 1959 we could not secure enough votes to take a decision against any aspect of the Rome Treaty. Nor at this distance, from Washington do we believe it is necessary to wait until 1959. The broad lines of USA policy should be known before the Congress adjourns in summer of 1958. Assuming the Trade Agreement is renewed and the USA is prepared to press the Six to adhere to GATT principles, it should be possible to take decisions at the 13th Session.

9. It seems to us that a more profitable course would be to make progress wherever possible as quickly as possible.¹¹⁹ To this end we suggest consideration of the following steps:¹²⁰

(a) Register a complaint against Benelux matching quotas at the April meeting of the Intersessional Committee. The Intersessional Committee would probably establish a working party or panel to examine the matter. This would enable the Contracting Parties to make a finding at the 13th Session against matching quotas in customs unions unless justified by the balance of payments positions of individual members.

(b) Raise the issue of applying the procedures of Article XXVIII to tariff negotiations brought about by the common tariff increasing the duty on bound items. The Six are clearly searching for ways to circumvent some of the procedures of Article XVIII. They would for example like to avoid paying compensation to Contracting Parties with a principal supplying interest or substantial interest on items bound to other members of the Six. Partly because the complete application of paragraph 6 of Article XXIV is essential to protect our own interests and partly because the meaning of the paragraph is clear, we suggest that we should nail down this point as soon as possible. This might be done by raising the matter at the April intersessional with a view to taking a decision at the 13th Session.

(c) Aim at making a finding at the 13th Session that affiliation of the overseas territories is not within the terms of Article XXIV. We anticipate the Six would then request a waiver. At this point the Contracting Parties could say that before granting a waiver the Six must conclude negotiations with interested Contracting Parties protecting their legitimate trading interests.¹²¹

10. To achieve these objectives we will need the active cooperation of the USA, UK and some underdeveloped countries. A strong UK lead is probably essential to achieve 9(c).

11. Turning to the German problem events at the session were summarized in GATDEL telegram 706 December 3, 1957. The only point to mention now is that the next step has been established. The 12th Session decided that the April meeting of the Intersessional

¹¹⁸ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

with whom? And on what? W. [F. Stone?]

I'm afraid there is an answer to this question. The danger of the GATT front disintegrating into a number of mutually accommodating side deals is a real one [L. Couillard]

¹¹⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Vague, but right general line. L. C[ouillard]

¹²⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

We should be sure that we can get the right decisions — before we force these & other issues. L. C[ouillard]

¹²¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Canada shouldn't take the lead here. [W.F. Stone?]

Committee would deal with the matter. The German representative stated that "He felt confident that at the Intersessional Committee meeting in April his delegation would be in a position to state the views of his government on all the questions raised in the report." This means that the April meeting might be required to deal with three aspects of the problem:

- (a) the German programme of dismantling restrictions;
- (b) the validity of the German claim to some of the restrictions are justified under the protocol of provisional application, and
- (c) a German request for a hard-core waiver for certain remaining restrictions.

Australia requested Germany to state its position on the maintenance of restrictions not later than February 28.

[R.H.] JAY

SECTION B

TREIZIÈME SESSION DES PARTIES CONTRACTANTES THIRTEENTH SESSION OF THE CONTRACTING PARTIES

160.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, October 2, 1958

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION AT THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF GATT COMMENCING OCTOBER 16

Attached for your approval, if you agree, is a draft memorandum of instructions for the Canadian Delegation to the Thirteenth Session of GATT which begins in Geneva on October 16 which has been prepared in consultation with other Departments concerned and revised to take into account the discussions and conclusions of the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference in Montreal.¹²² The memorandum has now been approved by Mr. Fleming and Mr. Churchill, and the approval of Mr. Harkness is expected momentarily.

The main policy matters which are expected to come up for discussion at the Thirteenth Session are problems of trade in primary commodities, problems of trade in agricultural commodities, the maintenance of discriminatory import restrictions by Germany which are not compatible with its GATT obligations and problems relating to the establishment of the European Economic Community and the proposed Free Trade Area. It is expected also that questions may be asked concerning the import restrictions recently imposed by Canada on certain agricultural products under the Agricultural Stabilization Act or concerning the revision of the Canadian Customs Act (Bill C-51).

¹²² Voir la 3^e partie, chapitre III./See Chapter III, Part 3.

With regard to problems in primary commodities, it is proposed in line with the stand taken by Commonwealth countries in Montreal and in recognition of the importance of these problems for less developed countries to make known Canada's willingness to cooperate in any examination of these problems that may be decided and in particular to support the establishment of a study group on lead and zinc.

With respect to problems in agricultural commodities, the Canadian Delegation is instructed to support proposals for a review of existing GATT rules in this field with a view to strengthening them and making them as effective as the rules which apply to industrial products.

On German import restrictions, it is proposed to continue pressing for the removal of remaining restrictions in accordance with Germany's GATT obligations. If, however, it should be necessary to modify this position, the Canadian Delegation is authorized to agree to a waiver conforming as closely as possible to the standard conditions imposed in such cases by the GATT which would place a time limit on the maintenance of the import restrictions and would require that they be administered on a non-discriminatory basis. In no case is the Canadian Delegation to agree to a waiver which would permit discrimination.

The discussion concerning the EEC and the proposed free trade area which will probably not be extensive will provide a further opportunity to press for satisfactory safeguards and assurances for the protection of the legitimate interests of third countries such as Canada. It is expected that consultations on problems posed by the association of overseas territories with the EEC will begin during the Thirteenth Session in accordance with the procedure which was agreed upon with the six EEC countries some months ago.

Other subjects which may be brought up at the GATT session or be the subject of informal discussions at that time are the new Canadian legislation and regulations concerning agricultural commodities and the recent amendments to the Canada Customs Act. The position that the Canadian Delegation is instructed to take on each of these subjects is set out in paragraphs 25 - 30 (pages 6-7) of the attached document.

D.V. LEP[AN]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet d'une note
Draft Memorandum

MEMORANDUM OF INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE THIRTEENTH SESSION OF GATT

A. MEETINGS AND REPRESENTATION.

1. The Thirteenth Session will open on October 16 and will probably continue to the end of November. It will be one of the regular annual sessions at which the Agreement is administered; any complaints that may have been advanced are considered and solutions are sought for particular points of difficulty.

2. In conjunction with the Thirteenth Session, it is proposed to hold a meeting of Trade Ministers in Geneva, as was done last year. A number of countries, including the United Kingdom and the United States, have indicated their intention of sending a Ministerial Representative to such a meeting, which it is expected will be held on October 16-18.

3. It is recommended that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should represent Canada at the proposed ministerial meeting.

4. It is further recommended:

That a Canadian Delegation should attend the Thirteenth Session;

That Mr. M. Schwarzmann, Department of Trade and Commerce, should be Chairman of the Canadian Delegation.

That the following Officials should be included in the Delegation:

Mr. C.A. Annis, Department of Finance,

Mr. W.F. Stone, Department of External Affairs,

Mr. G.J. Dobson, Department of Agriculture,

Mr. W. Lavoie, Department of Trade and Commerce, and that an Officer from the Department of National Revenue and one from the Department of External Affairs who is posted to a Canadian Mission in Europe should be included in the Delegation if required.

B. GENERAL COMMENT.

5. The proposed ministerial meeting would give Ministers an opportunity for a general exchange of views on problems in the field of international trade. It is also likely that, on the basis of the report on trends in international trade prepared by a group of experts which was set up in response to the demands made at the Twelfth Session by the primary producing countries, Ministers will wish to discuss the problems of trade in agricultural and other primary commodities. There is, in addition, a possibility that representatives of other countries will wish to bring forward problems arising in connection with their trading relations with Canada.

C. AGENDA: QUESTIONS OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO CANADA.

A. Commodity Problems.

6. At this Session, Canada and the other contracting parties will have available to them, as a basis for a continuation of the debate on commodity problems which was begun at the Twelfth Session, a report on trends and developments in international trade. The two main issues in the previous debate were:

(a) Extreme short-term fluctuations in prices which affected the ability of less developed countries to contribute to the expansion of international trade and

(b) The question of the widespread use of protective devices in international trade in agricultural products. It was agreed that a panel of expert economists should be asked to make a study of these problems and attempt to clarify the issues. On the basis of this study it was hoped that the contracting parties would be able to decide on appropriate action.

7. It is recommended that during the discussion at the Thirteenth Session and in the light of the understandings reached at the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference, the Canadian Delegation should indicate a willingness to co-operate in any examination of these problems that the contracting parties may wish to undertake. In particular, the Canadian Delegation should support proposals to establish an international study group to advise on current trade problems in lead and zinc. It would further be appropriate to refer to Canadian participation in all existing commodity arrangements and study groups as a proof of Canada's interest in, and appreciation of, the problems now being encountered by many of the less industrialized among the contracting parties. If other problems arise on trade in agricultural or primary commodities the Canadian Delegation should be guided by the policy lines taken by Canada at the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference.

B. Lead and Zinc.

8. The United States Government has imposed quota restrictions on imports of lead and zinc. While the quotas established for Canada appear to be less restrictive than those which apply to other suppliers, they are likely to have adverse effects on our exports of these metals to the United States which in 1957 totalled about $55 million. These restrictions protect high-cost marginal producers in the United States and shift the burden of adjustment to world market conditions to outside suppliers. The imposition of import restrictions has serious implications with respect to future pressures that may develop in the United States for increased protection against imports of other products. It should be noted that this is the first time that the United States administration has on its own authority applied quota restrictions on any industrial product. The United States will presumably at the Thirteenth Session seek to regularize these new restrictions under the escape clause procedures (Articles XIX of GATT) which, in certain carefully defined circumstances, permit a country to take temporary emergency measures against imports which threaten serious injury to domestic industry. Article XIX of GATT provides for consultation with the countries affected by such emergency action and if satisfactory agreement is not reached, it authorizes the countries adversely affected to take compensatory measures to restore the balance of the Agreements. The Canadian Delegation should express Canada's serious concern about these import quotas and should state the view that these restrictions are unjustifiable and constitute an impairment of GATT. Regret and disappointment should be expressed that the United States should have taken this unilateral action at a time when steps were under way to search for international solution to lead and zinc problems in which all interested countries including the United States would play their part. The Canadian Delegation should direct its effort to seeking removal of these restrictions by the United States and obtaining agreement that the problems of lead and zinc should be considered in a commodity study group on the broadest possible basis. The Canadian Delegation should question the applicability of Article XIX of GATT to these United States measures and should reserve Canada's right to take compensatory action on imports from the United States if satisfactory solutions are not reached.

C. The European Common Market.

9. There will be a further opportunity at this Session to review the arrangements for the setting up of the European Economic Community. The Treaty of Rome came into force on January 1, 1958; the institutions of the Community have now been established and the first step in the removal of tariffs and quantitative restrictions within the Community is scheduled to take effect on January 1, 1959. Most of the arrangements, however, remain to be worked out, including the level of the common external tariff for a number of products of importance to Canada, such as aluminum, lumber and synthetic rubber; and the details of the agricultural régime, which will affect trade in wheat and other products of interest to Canada.

10. During the last Session, there was a detailed examination of the Treaty in relation to its compatibility with the GATT arrangements. Though this examination went a long way towards clarifying the issues, no solution to the problems created by the establishment of the EEC was found and no satisfactory assurances which might safeguard the trade of Canada and other third parties were obtained. Subsequently, a procedure has been worked out to deal with the specific problems raised for the trade of individual countries by the association of certain overseas territories with the EEC.

11. The Treaty arrangements hold out certain dangers for Canadian trade. These are the possibility of

- (a) More restrictive tariff barriers against a number of Canadian exports to Europe, particularly aluminum, chemicals, synthetic rubber and fish;
- (b) A more rigid system of discriminatory import restrictions;
- (c) A highly protective and regionalist trading arrangement for agriculture;
- (d) New preferential trading arrangements between the countries of the Community and some of their overseas territories which would adversely affect Canadian trade in certain non-ferrous metals and in tobacco.

12. It is recommended that the Canadian Delegation, in co-operation with the other countries concerned, and while indicating its sympathy with the objectives of the Rome Treaty, should continue to press for satisfactory safeguards and assurances and should not acquiesce in arrangements which would unjustifiably impair Canada's trade interests. The Canadian Delegation should, in addition, seek to ensure that the consultations now to be arranged regarding the problems caused by the association of overseas territories are made effective and meaningful. Where it would seem to serve Canadian interests, it should also be authorized to support the development of similar procedures for dealing with other issues created by the establishment of the EEC. In this connection, the Canadian Delegation should discourage suggestions for seeking bilateral arrangements with the EEC (such as those reported to be under consideration by Australia and New Zealand) and should urge the maintenance of a common front in the GATT.

D. Free Trade Area.

13. Representatives of the countries which would be members of the proposed FTA will be meeting in Paris during the early part of the GATT Session and will pursue their efforts to reach at least a preliminary agreement. It is recommended that the Canadian Delegation should, when the opportunity presents itself, emphasize in the GATT Forum the importance of outward-looking rules in the FTA. Reference should be made to the understandings reached at the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference on these matters.

E. Revision of the GATT Rules as They Apply to Agriculture.

14. In view of the widespread protectionism that prevails in the agricultural sector, and of the waivers of GATT obligations that have been accorded to various contracting parties, there has lately been some pressure, particularly from Australia, for an overall examination of the GATT rules as they apply to agriculture. At the Thirteenth Session, proposals will likely be made for general review of GATT rules on this subject.

15. Agreement was reached at the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference that Commonwealth Countries should participate in a review of GATT rules on agriculture with a view to strengthening them. It was also agreed that in surplus disposals care should be taken to avoid damage to the interests of other countries and that there should be adequate consultation between the countries affected. In the light of these understandings the Canadian Delegation should support proposals for strengthening GATT rules on agriculture and should participate constructively in the discussions. Emphasis should be placed on the worldwide nature of the problems and on the importance of insuring that such countries as the United States are prepared to take appropriate action to abide by strengthened GATT rules. At the same time, special care should be taken to minimize the danger that the general question of a review of agricultural rules may prejudice progress in the examination of the Rome Treaty or in the consideration of German import restrictions.

F. Review of Quantitative Import Restrictions.

16. Under the terms of the GATT, arrangements are to be made at the Thirteenth Session for regular consultations with all countries maintaining import restrictions for balance of payments reasons. This new procedure will give to contracting parties whose own trading interests are affected the opportunity to exert further pressure and to explore all possible means of reducing existing restrictions to a minimum.

17. In view of the importance to Canada of securing the widest possible removal of the quantitative import restrictions maintained by other contracting parties, and particularly of those applied on a discriminatory basis, it is recommended that the Canadian Representatives be instructed to co-operate actively in the preparations for these consultations. The Canadian Delegations should make special reference to the important initiatives taken by the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth Countries in removal of discriminatory restrictions and to the prospects for increased international liquidity which should facilitate speedy removal of discrimination by all countries.

G. German Import Restrictions.

18. The Federal Republic of Germany, though no longer in balance of payments difficulties, still maintains import restrictions which affect a number of important agricultural and primary products, including wheat. The Intersessional Committee in April requested the German Government to report to the Thirteenth Session on steps taken to remove the restrictions, recommending further that in default of satisfactory action by Germany the contracting parties should authorize the suspension of such obligations or concessions on the part of other contracting parties as appropriate.

19. It is reported that Germany will seek to obtain a waiver which would allow for the continuation of agricultural restrictions for an indefinite period and on a discriminatory basis. On industrial products it is reported they will seek a more limited waiver. The position taken by the majority of the contracting parties, including Canada, at the Intersessional Committee, was that Germany's action in continuing to maintain quantitative restrictions was not compatible with its GATT obligations and that the Germans should, therefore, either remove the restrictions at once or ask for a waiver of the "hard core" type, which has a time limit and does not permit discrimination. Our recent information suggests that various compromise proposals may be put forward and may receive substantial support. It is recommended that the Canadian Delegation should continue to press for the removal of quantitative restrictions but should, if necessary, agree to a waiver which would conform as closely as possible to the hard core conditions and should in no case agree to a waiver which would permit discrimination.

H. Accession of Poland.

20. The Government of Poland has signified that it wishes to accede to the GATT. The accession of a state-trading country such as Poland poses numerous and complex problems in the establishment of a satisfactory exchange of rights and obligations with other members. There are, however, political advantages in encouraging the association of Poland with western oriented institutions such as the GATT and at the last Intersessional Committee the Canadian Delegation was instructed to join sympathetically in efforts to explore these problems.

21. It is recommended that at the Thirteenth Session the Canadian Delegation should support arrangements to explore further Poland's request and also methods of solving any related problems.

I. Accession of Switzerland.

22. Tariff negotiations between Canada and Switzerland have recently been completed as part of the procedures for Switzerland's accession to the GATT. Swiss accession is complicated by the fact that Switzerland maintains agricultural restrictions which are inconsistent with GATT rules. It has, therefore, been proposed that special terms of accession should be devised for Switzerland which would take account of this situation and yet preserve the balance of the agreement from the point of view of other contracting parties. The Canadian Delegation should welcome the accession of Switzerland to the GATT and should support the formulation of appropriate terms of accession.

J. Time and Place of the Fourteenth Session.

23. The Government of Japan is likely to renew its invitation to the contracting parties to hold the next session in Tokyo. The Executive Secretary has made a personal visit to Tokyo and has reported favourably on the arrangements envisaged by the Japanese Government. When a similar invitation was extended for the Twelfth Session, the Canadian Government took the stand that it preferred, on administrative and financial grounds, to hold that session in Geneva. It was not, however, inclined to sustain this objection if the majority of the contracting parties favoured Tokyo.

24. In view of the Executive Secretary's report, it is not feasible to sustain the claim that the administrative and financial disadvantages of holding a session in Tokyo are decisive arguments against it. The Canadian Delegation should, therefore, as was the case at the Intersessional Committee of GATT in April this year, express appreciation of the Japanese Government's invitation and indicate that the Canadian Government is prepared to support the holding of the Fourteenth Session in Tokyo unless there are strong objections from a majority of countries.

D. CANADIAN PROBLEMS.

(1) Canadian position vis-à-vis the GATT in the light of the recently imposed agricultural import restrictions.

25. Import controls are now being applied by Canada on butter, cheddar cheese, turkeys and skim milk powder. The present restrictions are inconsistent with some of Canada's obligations under the GATT. Provision is made in the Agreement for countries to be granted waivers in exceptional circumstances from certain of their obligations; a number of such waivers have been granted, with the approval of a two-thirds majority, to meet the particular difficulties of several member countries. They have usually included terms and conditions which look to the development of remedial measures by the country concerned and contained provision for imports under quota from traditional suppliers. It is unlikely that Canada could succeed in obtaining a waiver unless we were prepared to modify our present policies to meet the normal requirements of such waivers (e.g. reasonable quotas).

26. It is, therefore, recommended that the Canadian Delegation at the Thirteenth Session, in conversation with other Delegations, or if necessary in a formal statement, outline Canada's position in the same terms as adopted at the last session of GATT, namely by giving:

- (a) An explanation of the special nature of the difficulties which have arisen;
- (b) An assurance that the Canadian Government is not inflexible and will, as in the past, be examining these restrictions in the light of changing circumstances.

(2) Position to be taken regarding the amendments to the Customs Act.

27. The effect of the recent amendments to the Customs Act is in part to revise (and furnish additional legal support to) existing valuation procedures, and in part to add new valuation provisions which may be invoked by the Governor in Council as a further safeguard against dumping.

28. A note, dated September 3, from the United States Ambassador stated that in the opinion of the Government of the United States some of the new provisions are inconsistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and some are contrary to commitments undertaken by the contracting parties to the GATT. Specific reference was made to Sections 36(2), 36(3), 38, 39(1) and 40. Concern has also been expressed informally by the Japanese, the Italians, the Australians and others. The United Kingdom have raised questions on the compatibility of these provisions with GATT but have indicated that they themselves will not be raising this in GATT.

29. On the other hand, Canadian Ministers have stated that the amendments to the Customs Act are fully consistent with the GATT.

30. It is suggested that the Canadian Delegation to the Thirteenth Session of the GATT should:

(a) Make every effort to dissuade other contracting parties from instituting formal complaints under Article XXIII; and

(b) To this end, Canadian Delegation should be authorized to explain the Customs Act informally if requested to do so;

(c) If a formal complaint is made, request that its consideration be delayed sufficiently to permit instructions to be obtained from Ottawa, and for a senior official of the Department of National Revenue to come to Geneva.

Text Ends.

161.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 969

Geneva, October 21, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Finance, Agriculture, Washington from Ottawa (Information).

GATDEL THIRTEENTH SESSION — TURKEYS

Last Friday Mr. Dillon spoke to Mr. Churchill privately about USA concern regarding the Canadian embargo on imports of turkeys.¹²³ Mr. Churchill replied that the establishment of a quota was under consideration in Ottawa.

2. The USA Delegation here today received a message from Washington reporting a decision in Ottawa that no quota will in fact be established at this time. The USA Delegation has been instructed to take the matter up with us. They say that in the absence of satisfactory Canadian assurances they expect to have to lodge a formal complaint against Canada during this session.

3. Please advise urgently what, if any, decision has been made regarding turkeys and what assurances we can give the USA Delegation on this sensitive issue.¹²⁴ We shall make every effort to avoid having the matter raised in open session.

¹²³ Pour un compte rendu des politiques canadiennes concernant l'importation de dindes, voir volume 25, Chapitre premier.

See Volume 25, Chapter 1, for an account of Canadian policies concerning turkey imports.

¹²⁴ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Decision sent by tel Oct 21. R.G[rey]

162.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to GATT Conference*

TELEGRAM E-1974

Ottawa, October 21, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 969 Oct 21.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Washington (Information).

IMPORTS OF TURKEYS INTO CANADA

We gather from your telegram under reference that the USA Delegation appears to have implied to you that the Canadian Government has decided not repeat not to take any action at all on the problem of turkey imports. This is not repeat not accurate. Cabinet considered this question last Thursday and on Friday we advised Americans here informally of substance of decision. The decision is as set out in the following operative paragraph of aide-mémoire which is going forward to the United States Embassy tomorrow: "In the present circumstances, however, and having particularly in mind the present market situation in Canada, the Canadian Government is not repeat not prepared to make any changes in the regulation affecting the import of turkeys during the current year. The Canadian Government wishes to advise the United States Government, however, that in 1959, barring unforeseen circumstances, it is the intention to introduce a quota for imports."

163.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to GATT Conference*

TELEGRAM E-2007

Ottawa, October 24, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 977 Oct 22.†

Repeat Washington, Trade & Commerce (Information).

CANADIAN EMBARGO ON IMPORTS OF TURKEYS

Cabinet today reconsidered the question of the Canadian embargo on turkeys and decided to authorize an import quota of 300,000 pounds between now and December 31, 1958. The new ruling is effective immediately, but there will be no repeat no public announcement and no repeat no advice to the trade until the import licencing machinery has been readied up, which is expected will be early next week. You may convey this information to the USA Delegation but should stress that it is not repeat not at present to be made public or released to the trade. You may also inform the USA Delegation that the Cabinet's decision to establish quotas for next year has been reaffirmed, although the quantities to be admitted are subject to further consideration.

164.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 991

Geneva, October 27, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Washington, London (Information).

13TH SESSION: TURKEYS AND CANADIAN CUSTOMS ACT

We informed Beale, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Department of State, and other members of USA Delegation of the decision to establish quotas for turkeys this year. This came as a welcome surprise and Beale asked us to transmit to ministers their appreciation of the government's decision. The USA Delegation agreed to withhold any announcement pending release of information by Ottawa. The only note of reservation came from USA agricultural representative who while gratified at decision questioned the adequacy of this years quota. We feel confident that as a result of this decision USA Delegation will not repeat not be raising this matter in GATT at this session.

2. At the same meeting USA Delegation inquired whether we had received instructions to make a statement in plenary regarding conformity of the Customs Act with the GATT. They referred to Mr. Churchill's talk with Mr. Dillon in which this matter had been raised. We told them we could see no reason for such a statement on our part. We found they had not yet been informed of our reply to Washington on this subject and we gave them a copy of our note. We indicated that we would be prepared to explain this legislation privately to them or to answer technical questions that might come up in Customs Working Party. We also pointed out that we were not asking them or other countries to make statements about their legislation unless there were specific GATT problems. We stated that in our view the Customs Act did not repeat not raise GATT problems. We added that even in cases of clear breach of GATT rules such as USA oil restrictions, they themselves had not yet brought the matter before GATT. The combination of this discussion and the information we were able to give on turkeys appear to have had the desired effect of countering the pressures on the Customs Act in GATT at least for the time being.

3. Please pass copy to Mr. Churchill.

165.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 994

Geneva, October 27, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat Finance, Agriculture, Trade & Commerce (Latimer & Paterson), Bank of Canada, Bonn, NATO Paris, Paris, London, Brussels, Washington, Hague, Rome (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

In private talks with Klein, Leader of German Delegation, and Emmel of German Foreign Ministry we referred to the somewhat disturbing tone of Luebke's remarks to Mr. Churchill while Mr. Churchill was in Bonn. We said that our attitude on German restrictions in GATT should not have come as a surprise since our general policy objectives towards all countries including Commonwealth have emphasized the removal of discriminatory restrictions. We also said it would be unfortunate if differences of view on commercial policy were to be construed as implying antagonism or unfriendliness between countries.

2. The Germans indicated that Luebke's comments to Mr. Churchill were unfortunate but they said "We should not over-estimate" Luebke's reactions. We were naturally glad to hear this although we appreciate that one should be cautious about these assurances in view of the differences that may exist among departments in Bonn. At no point in our discussions did the Germans hint at possibility that our exports might be threatened by direct measures if our attitude in GATT was unduly critical. They did say however that if German wheat imports were placed on a global quota basis they thought we might be worse off as a result of price competition from USA and other countries. This is a point on which guidance from Ottawa would be helpful.

3. The Germans said they would be asking for consideration of the German case to be deferred for a year in line with Luebke's speech. If however other countries pressed for a waiver Germany would have to insist on one which regularized their present policies including discrimination in favour of other European countries. They said the Common Market and Free Trade Area agricultural régime would inevitably develop into a "one-country" agricultural system with preferential quotas for agricultural products within Europe. However, they thought that pressures from outside countries and the Common Market's own export interests would within four or five years force the European group to enlarge quotas for outside suppliers. They emphasized that Germany was prepared at this time to guarantee "the status quo" for Canadian wheat imports into Germany and for major products from other countries and they urged us to accept this assured position as the best interim solution.

4. With respect to industrial products such as synthetic rubber and aluminum Germany was prepared to seek a hard core waiver permitting maintenance of restrictions for five years.

5. We told the Germans that while we appreciated their serious agricultural problems our position in GATT was still that Germany should remove her industrial restrictions; should also remove discrimination and where possible reduce its agricultural protection.

6. Pass to Mr. Churchill.

166.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1011

Geneva, October 31, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Finance, Agriculture, National Revenue, Bonn, Brussels, London, Washington, NATO Paris (Information).

13TH SESSION — GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We have had discussions with other delegations, with Executive Secretary and with members of the German Delegation on the subject of German import restrictions. It seems clear there is no possibility that the Germans will dismantle their restrictions and remove discrimination affecting imports of agricultural products. The stage has been reached where there appear to be only three ways in which the situation could develop:

(a) The Contracting Parties might delay consideration of the German case as proposed by Luebke, the German Minister of Agriculture, in his speech at the ministerial meeting;

(b) The Germans might secure a waiver from their GATT obligations to cover their restrictive system;

(c) The Germans might continue in breach of their GATT obligations with a new round of statements condemning the German position and pointing more directly than before to the threat of retaliatory action under Article XXIII.

2. We doubt if the proposal to delay consideration of the German case and refrain from discussing it at this session would be acceptable to the majority of delegations here. Many Contracting Parties would consider this course to be a major retreat. It would also carry the implication that the review of world agricultural trade following the Haberler report¹²⁵ will lead to a weakening of GATT rules to permit extensive protection of agriculture by industrial countries.

3. The German Delegation has prepared a waiver designed to cover the continuation of their present system of import restrictions and to permit discrimination. It is most unlikely that a waiver of this kind would be acceptable. On the other hand, the Germans would hardly accept a waiver containing the conditions the majority of Contracting Parties would demand, e.g. a time-limit on their restrictions or the abandonment of discrimination. The only concession which the Germans might make would be to include in a waiver some provision along the lines of Article XIII (2) of the GATT for quotas designed to safeguard the existing shares of outside suppliers in German imports of particular commodities. This arrangement might have its attractions for a number of Contracting Parties since it would give some assurance of stability to their existing level of exports to Germany. A waiver of this kind would have the effect of legitimatizing the current German restrictions. It would also involve the abandonment of important questions of principle and weaken the bargaining position of outside countries in negotiations with Germany on such questions as the use of quantitative restrictions under the Rome Treaty. Moreover a waiver for Germany would be regarded in Bonn as a personal victory for Luebke and add new strength to forces behind German protectionism.

¹²⁵ Voir/See General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, Trends in International Trade: Report by a Panel of Experts (Geneva, 1958).

4. The remaining alternative is the course which now seems most likely to be followed. There would be a round of strong statements by delegations mainly concerned which would contain pointed references to the possibility of resorting to Article XXIII in order to consult with Germany regarding damage and if necessary of taking retaliatory action. These statements would be reflected in the communiqué issued at the end of the session. It is a question of course whether any of Germany's trading partners would in fact be prepared to take action against Germany under Article XXIII. A few countries such as Australia and New Zealand might conceivably enter into negotiations under Article XXIII procedures but only with a view to seeking an improvement in exports of commodities of interest to them. If Article XXIII action were to be limited in this way to restrictions affecting particular products of only one or two countries, the principles involved would tend to fall into the background. Action could also conceivably be taken on a multilateral basis by a group of countries claiming that Germany's policies have had an adverse effect on their broad trading interests as well as on particular exports. Multilateral action of this kind, however, may be difficult to achieve and it seems unlikely that agreement for any such action could be reached at this session.

5. In our view this latter course may be the best available. It would mean

(a) The German restrictions are not legitimized and Germany remains in breach of GATT;

(b) There would be no retreat from the resolution of the Intersessional Committee last April calling on Germany to remove the restrictions and pointing the way to taking compensatory action against Germany under Article XXIII; and

(c) The Germans would remain under the same pressure as before. It is of course unlikely that there would in fact be a concerted approach to Germany under Article XXIII. However, the absence of acquiescence for the German restrictions will place the Germans under additional pressure in GATT consultations on agriculture of the kind suggested by the UK and which now seem likely to be developed at this session.

6. The debate on the German restrictions will probably take place early next week. We are sending you this message in order that you may be brought up to date on current thinking here on the subject.

167.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to GATT Conference*

TELEGRAM E-2057

Ottawa, November 4, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 994 Oct 27 and 1011 Oct 31.

Repeat Bonn, NATO Paris, London, Washington, Trade & Commerce (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We have considered the question of German import restrictions in the light of your messages under reference.

2. As regards the restrictions in the agricultural field, consideration has been given to the alternatives put before us in your telegram 1011 and we agree with the course of action you are proposing.

3. In reply to your specific question regarding effect of possible globalization of German restrictions on wheat (your No. 994 paragraph 2) our views are as follows. Canada's major interest in the agricultural field lies in wheat and coarse grains. These items come under state trading in Germany. The only imports authorized are those over and above production which are required to meet domestic needs. For imports under bilateral agreements with countries such as France, quotas are established in advance. For the remaining import needs tenders are issued on a country basis and not on a currency basis. A separate quota is provided for Canada. The Canadian quota is always taken up in full and first quality wheat is being supplied under it. It is understood that the US quota is also fully taken up. Accordingly, it is not possible on basis of experience under the quotas to assess whether or not under a globalized system Canada would obtain a larger or smaller share of the German market. There is no question, however, that there has been a strong demand for high quality Canadian wheat in Germany for milling purposes. In terms of price and quality Canada is fully competitive with all other suppliers. It occurs to us that the Germans may have in mind that price competition from subsidized exports of other countries might squeeze us out of the market. However, in such a situation our quarrel would be with countries subsidizing shipments and not necessarily with the importer. Accordingly, in the absence of unfair trade practices we see no immediate reason for concern over the globalization of imports for wheat in the manner mentioned by the Germans. You should discuss with our wheat people in Geneva their views on this aspect of the question. We assume that if the course of action you propose in your 1011 is followed the question of a global quota for non-European suppliers will not arise, at least for the time being.

4. On a point of detail it is not clear to us whether or not Germany is seeking accommodation which would permit her to discriminate in favour of her Common Market partners in the field of other agricultural products in which we have an interest such as canned fruits and vegetables and mild-cure salmon. We would appreciate clarification of this.

5. Concerning items of interest to Canada in the industrial field we note from paragraph 4 of your telegram 994 that Germany is suggesting a hard-core waiver permitting maintenance of restrictions for 5 years. The Germans undertook at the 12th Session to free from restrictions certain products of interest to us not later than January 1, 1960, and we would be concerned if this undertaking were not to be fulfilled. The items of interest to Canada were aluminum, synthetic rubber and products of relatively lesser interest such as polyethylene, leather, nickel-alloy steel and a number of paper items. There is no reason why the elimination of restrictions on these items should be delayed until 1960, and in our view, Germany should proceed immediately to the removal of restrictions on these products.

168.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1034

Geneva, November 7, 1958

RESTRICTED. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your Tel E-2057 Nov 4.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Bonn, Finance (Information).

13TH SESSION OF GATT: GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

German representative on November 5 announced liberalization to take place immediately of some of the industrial products which at the 12th Session of GATT the Germans announced would be liberalized before January 1, 1960. These products include some chemical items, certain paper products, sheep and goat leather, nickel-alloy steel and others which may be of interest to Canadian exporters.

2. The German representative said Germany would apply for a hard core waiver to cover restrictions on a small group of industrial products including synthetic rubber, unwrought aluminum and bovine leather.

3. The German representative presented a list of agricultural products subject to German marketing laws and stated that the Federal Government was not in a position to remove existing restrictions on imports of these products. He presented a further list of products in the agricultural sector subject to quotas on which quotas are to be maintained and another list of relatively minor products now subject to quotas which are to be liberalized by January 1, 1959. Some of these latter products may also be of interest to Canadian exporters.

4. We are sending by air mail today copies of the German statement and the lists directly to departments concerned. We are reporting more fully in a further telegram on the debate on the German case in plenary.

169.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1041

Geneva, November 10, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Finance, National Revenue, Agriculture, Washington from Ottawa (Information).

TURKEYS AND CUSTOMS ACT

Last night USA Delegation asked us to discuss above subjects in light of new instructions they had received from Washington.

2. With respect to turkeys de Felice of USA Department of Agriculture said they were disappointed in the size of this year's quota which they felt should have been at least one million pounds. He reviewed the history of the turkey restrictions and referred to the strong pressure in the USA for import restrictions against Canadian cattle. He said that Washington was also concerned about the lack of any attempt by Canada to justify the turkey restrictions under GATT. He said they now had instructions to secure a satisfactory commitment from us with respect to next year's quota for turkeys. Lacking such a commitment they proposed to place the matter on the agenda of the current session. He said Washington would like to see next year's quota set at seven million pounds of turkeys for the calendar year.

3. We said we had no authority to discuss details of next year's turkey quota and suggested this should be discussed in Ottawa. We indicated the turkey restrictions could probably be justified under Article XIX of GATT but that we were not so much concerned with procedural formalities as with the substance of policies. In this regard we suggested USA performance had not been exemplary. We promised to report the discussion to Ottawa and would appreciate your guidance.

4. Regarding the Customs Act the USA Delegation again referred to Mr. Dillon's discussions with Mr. Churchill. They asked whether we had now received instructions to make a statement containing assurances that the new provisions of the Customs Act will be administered consistently with GATT. We again indicated that we saw no need or reason for our making such a statement and that if the USA raised this we would merely take note. The USA Delegation said they would report this further clarification to Washington and await instructions. They said they may have to raise the matter formally at this session.

5. We told the USA that we were ready to discuss the Customs Act in detail informally with them. They showed little interest in such discussions, however, stating they were concerned with the broad principles involved and would prefer specialists to discuss the details in Ottawa.

6. Trade and Commerce please pass to Mr. Churchill.

170.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1060

Geneva, November 13, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Finance, Bonn, Washington, NATO Paris (Information).

GERMANY: HARD CORE WAIVER FOR ALUMINUM AND SYNTHETIC RUBBER

The German Delegation has submitted application for hard core waiver under the GATT decision of March 5, 1955 for a small number of products including aluminum and synthetic rubber for a period of 5 years from now. This German application states that the German restrictions do not apply to OEEC countries but apply to dollar imports. With respect to aluminum the document states "In the view of the Federal Republic the quota policy pursued in this field does not imply any discrimination." With respect to synthetic rubber the document states "The import controls had no discriminatory effect on any Contracting Parties." A further interesting comment with respect to aluminum is as follows: "The trade policies of the aluminum producing countries would lead to the result that the greater part of the surplus quantities increasing year by year will seek a market in the Federal Republic." Also "The limits set to imports from the dollar area must be maintained until a co-ordinated European trade policy will take account of developments."

2. From private talks with the Germans we understand that they are prepared to raise the issue whether discrimination in favour of other European countries is discrimination in the formal GATT sense.

3. Sonnenkampft, aluminum expert of German Ministry of Economic Affairs, told us if German dollar restrictions on aluminum are removed this would lead to increased USA sales and would result in pressure to suspend the duty-free quotas now being granted which are of particular benefit to our exports. He said that under the waiver licensing and duty-free quotas would continue to be granted to cover the Canadian aluminum contracts in force until 1961.

4. We made it clear to the Germans that we could not accept maintenance of discriminatory restrictions on these products and that such discrimination could not in any case be contemplated under the hard core waiver. We said we appreciated that German tariff and licensing treatment of Canadian aluminum was satisfactory in practice at present but we were seriously concerned at the implications of the German position.

5. We shall be taking an active part in opposing the German position with respect to industrial products.

171.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to GATT Conference*

TELEGRAM E-2126

Ottawa, November 14, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your message 1041 Nov 10.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Washington (Information).

TURKEYS

1. The USA proposal to place the question of Canadian restrictions on turkeys on the agenda of this session as reported in your message under reference has been drawn to the attention of Ministers of Trade & Commerce and Agriculture.

2. In the present circumstances it is not possible to give the USA any more specific assurance regarding the exact amount of the import quota for turkeys for the next calendar year. You are authorized (1) to advise the USA Delegation that the question of next year's turkey quota is under consideration, (2) that this is a complex problem and that it is not practical to decide at this stage the exact amount and (3) to suggest that a formal discussion of this question in the GATT might make it more difficult to reach a satisfactory decision.

3. We consider it preferable to avoid an open dispute between Canada and the USA in the GATT forum on this matter.

4. We have not thought it necessary to send you any new instructions on the Customs Act in the light of the further discussions you have had with the USA Delegation.

172.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1073

Geneva, November 19, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Finance, Bonn, NATO Paris (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

It has now been agreed among the countries most directly interested in the German case (USA, UK, Australia, NZ, South Africa, India, Denmark and Canada) that it would be undesirable to grant Germany any waivers at this session as these would inevitably mean condoning German discrimination. Thus the item of German import restrictions will remain for 14th Session next April. In the interim it is proposed to take up the German offer to provide additional information about the whole range of their restrictions. On Friday, November 21 the Contracting Parties will be asked to approve a procedure for joint consultations in which interested countries will conduct detailed factual examination of the German restrictions as a basis for further consideration of possible GATT solutions to the German problem at the 14th Session. It is possible that these consultations will start in January and they may take place in Bonn.

2. We have been closely involved in the private discussions that have been taking place under the direction of the Chairman of the Contracting Parties. We have sought to ensure that consultations on the German restrictions should not result in the affected countries (such as Australia and NZ) being drawn into bilateral deals. The formula for consultations as proposed endeavours to avoid this danger while maintaining a certain degree of pressure on Germany. We understand that in accepting this proposal in plenary the USA Delegation will state that unless solutions are found the USA will at the 14th Session "have no alternative but to consider whether it should not take action under Article XXIII."

3. The decision to hold these consultations if the present formula is accepted by Germany will probably become public about end of the week. A number of countries including USA, UK, Australia and NZ may be in a position to indicate by Friday that they will take part in these consultations. Provided we are sure that a significant number of countries will be announcing their decision to participate in these consultations we propose to add Canada's name to the list unless you advise us to the contrary by Friday noon local time.

173.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Delegation to GATT Conference*

TELEGRAM E-2162

Ottawa, November 20, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Message 1073 of November 19th.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Bonn, NATO Paris, Washington, London (Information).

GERMAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

1. The question of the procedures for dealing with the German import restrictions and the possibility of a Canadian statement along the lines of that which the United States intends to make has been discussed with the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and officials of the Department of Finance. With regard to the proposed procedures, provided the principal countries involved — including the United States and the United Kingdom — announce their decision to participate in the consultations, we would agree to Canada's name being added to the list.

2. As regards the United States reservation to the effect that unless solutions are found it will, at the 14th Session, have no alternative but to consider whether it should not take action under Article XXIII, consideration has been given to the desirability of your making a similar statement. For reasons of which you are well aware, we are anxious that you should not be out in front in dealing with the German question in the GATT, but we recognize the importance of supporting U.S. leadership in this matter. Accordingly, if the United States makes its reservations you are authorized to support its approach, and, if appropriate in the circumstances, to indicate that failing a satisfactory solution, Canada also might have to consider possible recourse to Article XXIII.

174.

DEA/14051-3-13-40

*La délégation à la Conférence sur le GATT
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to GATT Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1102

Geneva, November 26, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Repeat Trade & Commerce, Finance, Agriculture, National Revenue, Washington, London, NATO Paris, Paris, Brussels, Bonn, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Tokyo from London, Berlin from Geneva.

GATT 13TH SESSION: DELEGATION REPORT

The Haberler report was perhaps the main theme of the session with it as a basis for discussion and against the background of the Montreal Conference and the Delhi meetings, a three pronged GATT programme for expansion of world trade is planned. In the tariff field a round of negotiations in 1960 is proposed primarily to take advantage of new USA tariff negotiating authority and to engage the European Common Market countries in negotiations on their common external tariff. It seems clear, however, that major agricultural exporters and underdeveloped countries, which contend there already exists an imbalance in world trade favourable to industrialized countries, will be less interested in tariff reductions than in measures to reduce barriers of other kinds to their exports. The two other elements of the new programme will be concerned with (a) agricultural protectionism and (b) other barriers to exports of underdeveloped countries. It seems likely that agricultural exporters like Australia and NZ intend to use GATT as an instrument for obtaining greater access to markets in Western Europe and North America. (The Australians had a large and active delegation at this session.) The efforts to assist the trading relationships of underdeveloped countries may be concentrated not so much on commodity problems as on measures to open markets in North America and Western Europe to processed and finished products of developing industries in underdeveloped countries. The Indian Delegation here, for example, made a major statement attacking German restrictions in favour of its European neighbours on manufactured jute products; and the Indian and Pakistan Delegations took great exception to the German plan for continuing restrictions on low priced manufactured products from their countries (and Japan) while proceeding under the hard core waiver procedures to relax restrictions on industrial products such as aluminum and synthetic rubber.

2. Wyndham White sees this GATT programme for expansion of world trade as a challenging opportunity to NATO countries to develop new forms of assistance to underdeveloped countries based on expansion of trade, and generally to strengthen relationships among all countries of the non-communist world. He is pessimistic, however, about the role of the USA in this GATT programme, and considers Canada could play a special role in the light of the constructive initiatives we have taken at the Montreal Conference and elsewhere to reduce barriers to world trade.

3. Three committees have been established, with 18-20 members, to meet here in February and March on (a) tariffs, (b) agriculture and (c) other problems of trade of underdeveloped countries (GATT press release 429 of November 22). Canada is on all three committees. A separate committee on GATT activity relating to commodity problems has been set up to meet next fall.

Rome Treaty

4. The session achieved a much needed clarification of the issues involved and established a very satisfactory basis for the development of future relationship between GATT Contracting Parties and the Common Market countries. Although the USA Delegation played an entirely passive role, other non-Europeans appeared more than ever concerned about damaging effects on their interests. There was a round of complaints in plenary about the attitude displayed by the Six in the consultations which were initiated at this session on products affected by the association of French and other overseas territories with the Common Market (tobacco, coffee, cocoa, sugar, bananas, tea). Outside countries refused to accept the contention of the Six that measures to mitigate damage could not be considered unless actual damage or a threat of "imminent" damage could be demonstrated.

5. We took an active part in resisting the idea that any "truce" existed on the legal position of the treaties under GATT as a result of agreement by the Six to engage in consultations under Article 22. In the end it was possible to obtain agreement on a "statement of conclusions" (Document W. 13/49/Rev.1) the main points of which are:

(a) Because of insufficient information it is not possible or useful at this time to pursue the examination of the Rome Treaties under paragraph 7 of Article 24;

(b) The rights of Contracting Parties under Article 24 remain unprejudiced; and a Contracting Party can at any time invoke Article 24 and call in question any measures taken by any of the Six in the application of the Rome Treaties;

(c) The Six will continue to consult under Article 22. and furnish information about their plans as these evolve.

German Import Restrictions

6. The Germans came to the session hopeful to persuade the Contracting Parties to postpone formally consideration of their import restrictions on agricultural products pending a study of GATT rules relating to trade in agriculture. Failing this, they planned to apply for the broadest kind of waiver to cover these restrictions. They were going to apply for a hard core waiver for part of their industrial restrictions (except those on imports from Japan and other Asian countries). They pressed very hard both in Geneva and through diplomatic channels for support for these plans.

7. The Germans were unsuccessful in obtaining any accommodation of their proposals, although some delegations (i.e. Australia) were tempted by a German offer to negotiate quotas for particular products with individual countries. The hard core waiver on industrial products, when presented, had a very soft look. The USA Delegation and ourselves made it clear that our governments were most unlikely to consider a waiver so openly discriminatory in character.

8. The way ahead is not clear. However, the restrictions remain uncovered by any GATT sanction; Germany will be under continuing pressure as a result of the strong USA stand; and between now and the 14th Session there will be joint consultations with Germany under Article XXII. These consultations could we consider serve a most useful purpose in exposing the nature and extent of the German restrictions. Their effect could be salutary for other countries which will obtain a clearer picture of how their exports are being or could be affected as a result of German protectionism and bilateral trade policies. Also German opinion might well gain a better appreciation not only of the antagonism aroused abroad by German trade policies and the dangers of retaliation action against Germany's industrial exports, but also of the economic burden for German consumers resulting from excessive protection for an inefficient domestic agricultural industry. The consultations are due to open in Geneva on January 19 and might possibly continue in Bonn. They will be conducted under procedures similar to the procedures adopted at this session for Article 22 consultations with Rome Treaty countries (Doc. L/928).

Relations with Yugoslavia and Poland

9. Following a statement on October 30 in plenary by Popovic, Yugoslav Assistant Minister for Foreign Trade, regarding their application for associate membership, there were a number of statements by delegations on November 7 mostly of a noncommittal nature and on a USA proposal a working party was set up to consider the application. There has been little or no discussion of substance of the subject at the session, although there seems to be a body of support for the idea that any form of associate membership for Yugoslavia should be temporary and lead to full membership. We have taken the position that GATT should respond to Yugoslavia in a positive way and make constructive efforts to work out a form of association as approximate to full membership as possible, providing always that there should be a meaningful exchange of benefits and obligations.

10. Canada is a member of the Working Party on Relations with Yugoslavia. It will consider the terms on which the government of Yugoslavia might be brought into association with the Contracting Parties; and submit a report to the 14th Session including a report on "The advisability of further study on the possible development of such association into full participation in the General Agreement." The Working Party will have a Yugoslav representative attending and is scheduled to meet February 16-20 with further meetings during the 14th Session.

11. The Executive Secretary was approached by the Polish representative about the informal approach made by Poland in the summer of 1957 for membership in GATT. The Executive Secretary told the Polish representative that because of the fundamental differences between the economic system of Poland and that of other GATT members, the contracting parties would be unlikely to approve full membership for Poland at the present time, and that they would be unlikely to agree to a form of association much different from that which might be agreed for Yugoslavia. The Polish representative said his government would probably be putting forward formally an application for membership (possibly for associate membership) about next March. It was agreed at a meeting of Heads of Delegations that delegations should come to the 14th Session prepared to give serious consideration to Polish membership, and that representatives of countries on the Working Party on Yugoslavia should be prepared to give informal consideration to the question of Polish association with GATT.

Lead and Zinc

12. On the last day at our request the Contracting Parties approved an extension of the time limit in Article 19(3)a which permits compensatory action by affected Contracting Parties. The extension regarding USA action on lead and zinc is until the opening date of the 14th Session and can of course be further extended at that time. We made a brief statement including the following points:

- (a) USA restrictions were serious impairment of benefits.
- (b) Disappointment about results of recent UN meetings on lead and zinc.
- (c) Canada considered that there has not yet been consultations with the USA in the sense of Article 19.

Latin American Integration

13. At the final plenary meeting the delegations of Brazil and Chile circulated a joint statement (Doc. 1/921 of November 21), and these delegations and those of Peru and Uruguay made statements along expected lines in support of the concept of "a regional market" in Latin America. In the Brazil-Chile statement it was stated that "It might be admitted that the countries concerned would not be in the position to adopt at present any of the specific solutions indicated in the General Agreement."

14. No formal action or decision was called for or taken by the Contracting Parties. The USA, UK, Canada and other delegations indicated that concrete proposals for the economic integration of Latin America would be examined with sympathy and understanding, but that any arrangements proposed by Latin American countries should be outward looking and trade-creating, and not restrictive or trade-diverting.

15. The summary record contains a statement by the Chairman which optimistically says that the Contracting Parties: "Convinced that the countries concerned will develop their plans within the spirit and objectives of the General Agreement ... await with interest further information about the development of these plans and stand ready to extend to the countries concerned their assistance in this process."

Swiss Accession

16. The declaration for the provisional accession of Switzerland was approved and opened for signature on November 22, and a resolution was adopted by the Contracting Parties which established the basis for GATT relations between Switzerland and the countries which sign the declaration. The declaration will remain open for signature until June 30, 1959.

17. The Swiss Minister of Commerce, Schaffner, told the Contracting Parties that Switzerland was a world trading country, and wedded to the principle of non-discrimination. He made no mention of changes in Swiss trading policy aimed at permitting full GATT membership. Much of his statement concerned the failure of plans for the FTA. He said Switzerland was apprehensive of protectionist forces within the Common Market and urged the Six to cooperate in achieving the FTA which he said could be a bridge between the Six and the rest of the trading world. This is the first time that a direct appeal has been made in GATT aimed at securing the success of FTA negotiations.

Miscellaneous

18. It was decided to have two sessions next year, the 14th in Geneva in May and the 15th next October in Tokyo.

19. We were under some pressure throughout the session from USA Delegation about the Canadian Customs Act and on Canadian restrictions on turkey imports. We were able however to dissuade them from raising these matters formally in GATT.

Note

20. Further reporting on more routine items is being prepared by the Permanent Mission.

3^e PARTIE/PART 3FONDS MONÉTAIRE INTERNATIONAL INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

175.

PCO

*Note du ministre des Finances
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Finance
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 355-58

Ottawa, December 8, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

INCREASE IN RESOURCES OF INTERNATIONAL FUND AND BANK — CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Canada has been an active member of the International Monetary Fund and of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development ever since they were set up in 1946. Canada's quota in the Fund was established at $300 million and Canada's subscription to the Bank at $325 million; in both cases a certain amount was payable in cash (25 per cent and 2 per cent respectively) and the remainder was made up of contingent obligations of different sorts.

2. On July 25, 1958 the Prime Minister, speaking in Parliament, expressed strong support for an increase in the resources of the International Fund and Bank.¹²⁶ He spoke, in part, as follows:

“I believe that consideration must be given to an increase in quotas of the International Monetary Fund of 50 per cent ... which would substantially increase the liquid assets underpinning world trade ... All the uncommitted countries of the world today look to the international Bank for help in their development programmes. Action to double the guaranteed capital subscriptions would shore these countries up economically and give them new hope ...”

3. On September 7, in its instructions to the Canadian Delegation to the Commonwealth Trade and Economic Conference,¹²⁷ Cabinet approved Canadian support, at both the Montreal and New Delhi Conferences, for a general increase of 50 to 100% in the quotas of the Fund and up to 100% in subscriptions to the Bank.

4. The Commonwealth Conference, in its Report, supported the proposal for a substantial enlargement of the resources of the Fund and Bank.

5. At the Annual Meetings of the two institutions in New Delhi resolutions were passed instructing the Executive Directors to make specific recommendations for consideration by Governments.¹²⁸ As Canadian representative, I gave strong support to the proposal for increases. It now seems virtually certain that the Executive Directors will submit their reports before the end of this year. They are expected to propose a general increase of 50 per cent in Fund quotas and 100 per cent in Bank subscriptions.

6. Canada is clearly committed to proportionate increases in line with the general movements. But the question arises whether it would not be in our interest to go farther. A number of other countries, including Germany and Japan where (as in Canada) the recent economic growth has been exceptionally rapid, are requesting increases beyond the general level.

7. On the negative side it should be pointed out that any increase in our quota in the Fund will involve us (a) in an increased transfer of gold from our own Exchange Fund into the International Fund and (b) in an increased obligation to provide Canadian dollars to the Fund if these are requested by other countries. It should be added, however, that under the Fund rules we can get our gold back if we need it and, as for providing Canadian dollars, it is extremely unlikely that these will ever be requested in amounts larger than we are already committed to provide. Turning to our subscription to the Bank, the increase may be considered in two parts; first, our share of the general increase and, second, the amount by which we might go beyond the general increase. In respect of the first part, it is quite clear that our additional subscription would be solely in the form of a guarantee; this guarantee could only be called upon if the Bank made extremely heavy losses, and so far it has made none. The second part would be very largely — at least four-fifths — in the same form, and might be entirely in that form. However, judging from current discussions, it is possible that we might be expected to pay 2 per cent in gold; and a further 18 per cent might be ¹²⁶ Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, Volume III, 1958, pp. 2847 à 2853.

See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Volume III, 1958, pp. 2702-2708.

¹²⁷ Voir/See Document 370.

¹²⁸ Pour un compte rendu des treizièmes réunions annuelles du Fonds et de la Banque, voir ministère des Affaires extérieures, Le Canada et les Nations Unies, 1958 (Ottawa, 1959), pp. 67 à 72.

For an account of the thirteenth annual meetings of the Fund and the Bank, see Department of External Affairs, Canada and the United Nations, 1958 (Ottawa, 1959), pp. 66-72.

payable in Canadian dollars which, however, could only be used after Canadian concurrence and could be linked to exports of Canadian capital goods.

8. On the positive side, any increase in our quota in the Fund increases our right to draw on its resources in the event that we need to do so. Any increase in our capital subscription to the Bank increases its borrowing powers, and hence its ability to support economic expansion in underdeveloped areas.

9. A further reason for Canada to go beyond the general level of increases lies in our interest in maintaining our now well-established position of prestige and influence (including our voting rights) in these two important institutions.

10. I would propose increases in our contributions which would keep us slightly ahead of Japan, and slightly behind India. The latter country is particularly anxious to continue to be one of the "big five", which would, on the basis of currently proposed adjustments, comprise U.S., U.K., France, Germany and India. These five countries would be entitled to appoint Executive Directors without going through the process of elections. On the other hand our increases should be large enough to ensure that we would have no difficulty at any time in electing a Canadian. It is not possible at this stage of the negotiations to name absolutely precise figures, but we know enough to make a close estimate.

11. Accordingly I recommend¹²⁹ (subject to concurrence by the Prime Minister which I am requesting separately):

(a) that, in the current negotiations in Washington, Canada should request a quota of about $550 million in the Fund, compared with the present quota of $300 million; of the increase, about $62.5 million would be paid in gold from the Exchange Fund and the balance in non-interest bearing notes;

(b) that Canada should, in connection with that request, offer to increase its subscription to the Bank to about $750 million from the present $325 million, this subscription to be largely and, if possible, entirely in the form of a guarantee; however, if necessary to obtain general agreement, an amount not exceeding $2 million dollars may be made payable in gold from the Exchange Fund and a further amount not exceeding $18 million may be made payable in Canadian dollars subject to such terms and conditions as the Canadian Government may decide; and

(c) that final decisions on this matter be taken after the reports of the Executive Directors of the two institutions have been received.

12. Enlargement of our quota in the Fund and of our subscription to the Bank would require the approval of Parliament. If arrangements proceed along the lines set out in this memorandum I shall ask for authority to introduce the appropriate legislation. Neither of the proposed increases would appear as a Budgetary item; both would appear under the heading "Loans and Investments." Further, while these increases would be recorded in the Public Accounts, in the Statement of Assets and Liabilities, they would not be included in The Public Debt.

DONALD M. FLEMING

¹²⁹ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 9 décembre 1958./Approved by Cabinet on December 9, 1958.

4^e PARTIE/PART 4

DIX-NEUVIÈME CONFÉRENCE INTERNATIONALE DE LA CROIX ROUGE
 NEW DELHI, 24 OCTOBRE AU 7 NOVEMBRE 1957
 NINETEENTH INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE
 NEW DELHI, OCTOBER 24 TO NOVEMBER 7, 1957

176.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 19, 1957

Present

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the Chair,
 The Minister of Public Works and Acting Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Green), (for morning meeting only)
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks), (for morning meeting only)
 The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees), (for morning meeting only)
 The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer), (for morning meeting only)
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes),
 The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
 The Minister of Justice and Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton),
 The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness),
 The Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough),
 The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean),
 The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), (for morning meeting only),
 The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton), (for morning meeting only),
 The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
 The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Alvin Hamilton),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith),
 The Leader of the Government in the Senate (Senator Haig).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Assistant Secretaries to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier), (Mr. Martin).

. . .

THE INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS; OCTOBER 1957 CONFERENCE, NEW DELHI;
 CANADIAN DELEGATION

25. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that it would be necessary to change the status of and give instructions to the Canadian delegation to the XIXth International Red Cross Conference, which would be held in New Delhi between October 24th and November 7th. Heretofore, the delegations of the United Kingdom, the United States, and Canada had had observer status. Canada's decision to send a delegation with observer status to previous Red Cross conferences had been based on the non-diplomatic nature of the conference and a desire to recognize the independence of the Red Cross movement from government control. Discussions which had taken place in the N.A.T.O. Council had resulted, however, in the conclusion that the Canadian delegation should now have voting status.

The agenda for the New Delhi conference contained an item entitled "Draft Rules for the Limitation of the Dangers Incurred by the Civilian Population in Times of War." One of these rules called for acceptance of an unconditional ban of the use of nuclear weapons. This provision, which conflicted with the basic strategy of N.A.T.O., gave delegations from communist countries disturbing possibilities for propaganda exploitation at New Delhi. The appeal to neutral nations of the ban on the use of nuclear weapons proposed in the draft rules had raised doubts in the N.A.T.O. Council as to whether the Western Powers would have sufficient voting strength at New Delhi to defend their interest effectively. Accordingly, most of the N.A.T.O. members, including the U.K. and the U.S., had decided to depart from precedent and had given their delegations voting status.

The Minister, therefore, recommended that, the delegation should have voting status and be instructed to employ its vote when necessary to defend the vital interests of Canada and her allies.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated, (Minister's memorandum, October 11, 1957 — Cab. Doc. 256-57)†

26. The Cabinet noted the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the Canadian delegation to the XIXth International Red Cross Conference, and agreed that the delegation should have voting status and be instructed to employ its vote, when necessary, to defend the vital interests of Canada and her allies and to curtail propaganda debates.

...

177.

DEA/114-B-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], October 21, 1957

XIXTH INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE, NEW DELHI — VOTING BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT DELEGATION ON CREDENTIALS OF CHINESE, NORTH KOREAN, NORTH VIETNAMESE, OUTER MONGOLIAN AND EAST GERMAN REPRESENTATIVES

The International Red Cross Conference is the coordinating authority of the world wide Red Cross movement. Every four years it brings together representatives of National Red Cross Societies, the League of Red Cross Societies, the International Committee of the Red Cross and official delegates of states signatory to the Geneva Conventions to receive reports from the Red Cross Committees and Agencies, to consider proposals for extension and improvement of Red Cross services and to promote humanitarian and pacific ideals of the Red Cross movement with specific reference to the Geneva Conventions. Ninety-one governments (including Canada) party to the Geneva Conventions and 77 recognized National Red Cross Societies have been invited to attend the New Delhi Conference. The Communist Chinese are sending both Governmental and Society Delegations and it is possible that North Korea, North Vietnam and Outer Mongolia may send delegations, although this is as yet uncertain. The Nationalist Chinese have refused to attend because their invitation was addressed to the "Government of Formosa" rather than to the "Government of the Republic of China." Similar considerations prompted the Nationalist Chinese to withdraw from the 18th International Red Cross Conference held in Toronto in 1952.

Delegations of the National Red Cross Societies from countries signatory to the Geneva Conventions have voting status at the Conference. Delegations of governments which are parties to the Conventions can have either voting or observer status. The Delegation of the Canadian Government to the 18th Conference in Toronto, like those of the United States and United Kingdom Governments, had observer status but this time, in common with our NATO partners, we have sent a voting Delegation because certain items on the agenda conflict with basic NATO strategy and provide the Communist Delegations (which are invariably voting Delegations) with disturbing possibilities for propaganda exploitation.

3. At the XVIIIth International Red Cross Conference in Toronto there was considerable acrimonious debate on the accreditation of Communist Chinese and East German Delegations. This problem was disposed of by a vote in plenary session confirming "the action taken by the Standing Commission in extending invitations to both Governments and Societies and indicating the respective capacities in which they should attend."

4. We are considering the instructions for the Canadian Government Delegation at the Red Cross Conference in New Delhi in case a vote becomes necessary on the seating of Chinese, North Korean, North Vietnamese, Outer Mongolian and East German Delegations. We have in mind instructing the Delegation to make every effort to see that the precedent established at the previous conference in Toronto in 1952 is followed again this year. This approach has several advantages to commend it: it is favoured by a large number of countries (amongst which it may be expected that India and the United Kingdom will be numbered); it takes politics out of a conference which should be essentially non-political in nature; it permits the representatives of areas whose régimes we do not recognize to participate in the conference without the necessity of a direct vote on the accreditation of individual delegations.¹³⁰ Furthermore, it is in our interest to have the attendance at the conference as universal as possible since it enables us to bind (as far as it is possible to bind them) our potential enemies as well as our friends to Red Cross conventions of which we approve.

5. If the Canadian and other favourably disposed delegations are not successful in their endeavours to have the Conference follow the 1952 precedent and votes are forced on the seating of individual delegations, the Canadian Delegation has been instructed to vote against accreditation of an East German voting delegation in accordance with our NATO commitments. However, Communist China does not fit the East German pattern and we think there is a case for adopting a slightly different policy in the case of Communist China.

6. While there may be practical reasons for wanting to bind East Germany to Red Cross practices the fact is that we are committed by our NATO association with the Federal Republic of Germany to a very rigid policy with respect to East Germany. Any indication of flexibility on our part with regard to the recognition of the validity of the East German régime would be contrary to our understandings with the West Germans and with our NATO partners and would provoke very severe criticism. The situation with regard to Communist China, however, is different. The régime is recognized by some of our Commonwealth partners and other close friends and we have no international commitments on this subject to observe. The difference which might be made in this context between the Communist Chinese Government and the Governments of East Germany, North Korea, North Vietnam and Outer Mongolia is that the Chinese régime is clearly an independent authority with control over Mainland China whereas the other régimes are much more clearly puppet régimes in divided countries. When, as in this case, there are practical advantages in seeking to bind the Chinese Communists to the Geneva Conventions there are not the same legal arguments against doing so which exist in the case of these other régimes. The Chinese Communists did at an early stage in the Korean war undertake to abide by the Geneva Conventions on the handling of prisoners of war and did on the whole make reasonable efforts to carry out their undertaking. (It was the North Koreans rather than the Chinese who were guilty of most of the brutalities practised on prisoners during the Korean war.) There is therefore some point in trying to encourage Communist China to carry out its responsibilities under Red Cross Conventions in any future wars that might occur.

¹³⁰ Note marginale:/Marginal note:
OK S.E. S[mith]

7. The situation with reference to the Chinese Communist Delegation in this Conference is unique because of the nature of the Red Cross. It doesn't necessarily follow therefore that the Canadian position on Chinese representation need be exactly the same as it has been in the United Nations or in other official conferences. Our policy in accepting the Chinese Communists at the Toronto Conference in 1952 was not intended to set any precedent for subsequent policy at inter-governmental conferences. The Red Cross Conference includes a combination of governmental and non-governmental representatives and is directed towards practical and humanitarian objectives. There would be no valid legal argument that acceptance by Canada of a Communist Chinese Delegation at this Conference would imply recognition. Canada has in fact already participated in an inter-governmental conference with a Communist Chinese Delegation — the Geneva Conference on Korea in 1954.

8. Under these circumstances I would recommend that Canada might abstain on a vote in favour of Communist Chinese voting representation. There is an argument for our voting in favour but in view of our general policy vis-à-vis Communist China you might consider it wiser at this point to abstain. Even a decision to abstain, however, should be conditional on our being in good company in doing so. We have not yet been able to determine the attitude which will be adopted by our principal allies. The United States might be expected to vote against but the United Kingdom and other friendly countries may well vote in favour.

9. I should recommend for your approval that the Delegation be instructed in the first place to work for a continuation of the 1952 precedent of confirming invitations issued by the Standing Commission and, failing that, to abstain on a vote in favour of seating a voting Communist Chinese Delegation and to vote against seating voting Delegations from North Korea, North Vietnam and Outer Mongolia provided that we are not left in a position of isolation from other Western powers in our attitude to the Chinese Delegation.

J. L[ÉGER]

178.

DEA/114-B-40

*Le chef de la délégation à la Conférence de la Croix rouge
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Delegation to Red Cross Conference,
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH NO. 1187

[New Delhi], November 8, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

XIXTH INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE, NEW DELHI,
OCTOBER 24 - NOVEMBER 7, 1957

Pending the submission of a formal report by the Canadian Government Delegation to the Conference, I wish to summarize briefly the main issues and developments.

2. The Conference was attended by approximately 400 delegates representing Governments and Red Cross Societies of 83 countries, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies. It was reported to have been the most representative International Conference held in Asia. Plenary Sessions of the Conference began with forceful appeals by the President of India and Prime Minister Nehru for a tolerant approach to differences which inevitably would arise. Before the Plenary Sessions ended, however, several of the current issues in the cold war had been debated vigorously and the Conference ended in collapse on the question of the seating of representatives from Nationalist China.

3. Until its dying moments the Conference gave promise of victory for the West in the cold war issues that had been foreseen in pre-Conference planning. The pre-Conference consultations at NATO on the atomic weapon issues contributed to success for the West on the agenda items on the "Draft Rules for Protection of Civilian Populations" and the Japanese Red Cross Society resolution on the banning of atomic weapons. The West scored a tactical victory at the outset on these controversial items by succeeding in having Mr. MacAulay¹³¹ elected Chairman of the Commission which was to deal with them. Although the item on the draft rules offered promising propaganda possibilities for the Communists, they failed to exploit them, perhaps partly in deference to the Indian Red Cross Society which was anxious to avoid political controversy. The item was disposed of effectively with the cooperation of the Indians with a resolution which effectively shelved the draft rules and eliminated the possibility of the calling of a diplomatic conference to consider them. Victory for the West on the Japanese Red Cross Society resolution on nuclear weapons was made possible by the initiative of the Indian Red Cross Society which proposed a resolution acceptable to delegations from NATO countries.

4. Another success for the West came with adoption by the Conference of a resolution proposed by the Canadian Red Cross Society on the reunion of families. The Canadian proposal, which eventually was adopted unanimously, countered a resolution proposed by the Hungarian Government delegate. This sought a one-way repatriation of Hungarian children abroad. The Canadian proposal covered two-way traffic — that is, it called for the reunion of families regardless of the place of residence of the head of the family. Adoption of the Canadian resolution may facilitate exit facilities for children in Communist countries wishing to join parents in Canada.

¹³¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

(of the Canadian Red Cross Society) [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

5. Texts of the interventions made by me during the debates on the draft rules and Japanese resolutions are attached.†

6. The final collapse of the Conference seemingly could not have been avoided by any initiative of the Canadian Government Delegation. The attitude of the U.S. Government Delegation on the seating of representatives of Formosa proved disastrous for the Conference.

6. It is difficult to explain briefly the complexities of the Formosan question at the Conference. Its origins echoed the dispute at the 18th International Red Cross Conference held in Toronto in 1952 which ended with the Government and Red Cross Delegations from Taipeh withdrawing because the Conference insisted on the Red Cross Society Delegation from Formosa being seated as an observer rather than a delegate. The justification for the "observer" designation was the inability of the Formosan Red Cross Society to claim to be operative on the Chinese mainland. At the Toronto Conference the Formosan Delegations had been accepted as representatives of the "Republic of China." The invitation sent to them by the Indian Red Cross Society to attend the 19th Conference was addressed to the Foreign Minister "Government of Formosa." The Taipeh authorities refused to accept the invitation on this basis; at the opening of the 19th Conference the United States Government Delegate proposed a resolution which if accepted would have permitted the Taipeh Delegation — against the will of the host Indian Red Cross Society — to be seated as representatives of the "Republic of China." As the debate developed and as it became clear that the United States Government Delegation was under instructions to withdraw from the Conference unless it succeeded in having the Government Delegation from Taipeh — which arrived on the scene hurriedly when it appeared it might be seated under its own nomenclature — the atmosphere became tense. In accordance with its instructions, the Canadian Government Delegation attempted to conciliate the dispute to prevent the Conference breaking up. It was known that the United States Ambassador in New Delhi and General Gruenther, the Head of the American Red Cross Society Delegation, were not in sympathy with their Government's attitude as, in addition to threatening the dissolution of the Conference, it was highly embarrassing to the Indian Red Cross Society and the Indian Government. Western and other delegations supporting the United States Government did so reluctantly. Most of the Red Cross Society Delegations — including that of the Canadian Red Cross Society — strongly resented the attitude of the United States Government which, in a propaganda sense, was determined to win a battle at the cost of losing the war.

8. The last minute compromise which involved agreement by the United States to the postponement of the debate on the Chinese representational question to enable it to become the final item on the agenda gave promise of a face-saving formula for all concerned, but the determination of the United States Government Delegation to achieve its objective, even in the dying moments of the Conference, proved costly.

9. As I reported in my telegram of November 7,† the Conference eventually came to a sorry conclusion with walk-outs in the final moments by Communist China followed by the Indian Red Cross Society, the U.S.S.R. and its satellites, and delegations representing Indonesia, Syria and Egypt. The walk-outs followed adoption of the United States Government resolution providing for the seating of the Taipeh Government Delegation as representatives of the "Republic of China." A vote on the United States Government resolution regarding seating the Formosan Delegation as representative of the "Republic of China," which at Russian request was taken by secret ballot, was 62 (including the Canadian Government Delegation) in favour; 44 (including the Canadian Red Cross Society Delegation) against; and 16 abstentions. Following announcement of the results the Chairman, Amrit Kaur of India, resigned and led the host Red Cross Society from the Conference Hall. Before leaving she announced from the chair that she considered the United States Government resolution "a grave discourtesy to the Indian Red Cross Society." The Delegation representing the Indian Government remained in the Conference which ended in an atmosphere of depression soon after the walk-outs. The seating of the Delegation from Taipeh with a "Republic of China" placard on its desk preceded the breakup of the Conference by only a few minutes. After the walk-outs routine business was proceeded with briefly to prevent the Delegations which had left from forcing an immediate termination of proceedings by their withdrawals.

10. In retrospect, it is clear that the United States Government Delegation depended upon the allegiance of its NATO allies to force its will on the Formosan issue on the Conference. None of the other Delegations with whom we were in contact was in favour of the United States Government resolution. Those that supported it did so under instructions from their governments. The discretion permitted the Canadian Government Delegation in the procedural moves that preceded the final vote on the United States Government resolution was responsible for the Indian Health Minister, who led the Indian Government Delegation, assuring me after the Conference had ended, that the Indian authorities held no resentment towards Canada as he realized the two Canadian delegations had done their best to prevent the collapse of the Conference.

11. The temperamental attitude of the Indian Red Cross Society Delegation, which as host might have been expected to exhibit a neutral attitude, was more than offset by the stubbornness of the United States Government Delegation in insisting on seating of the delegates from Taipeh on conditions other than those observed by the Indian Red Cross Society in inviting the Formosans to the Conference. There is no doubt the Indian Red Cross Society, perhaps deliberately, committed an error in addressing its invitation to the "Government of Formosa" but, in my opinion, the United States Government Delegation could have achieved its objective without rancour by making a statement of protest. Repeated efforts were made by friendly delegations to persuade the United States Government Delegation to refrain from pressing for a vote on its resolution, but the threat of a withdrawal by the United States Government Delegation if its resolution did not succeed rallied sufficient support to ensure its success. The cost of its success in the future relationships of India with the United States and the cooperation between West and East in the International Red Cross is difficult to assess.

12. From a diplomatic point of view, the United States Government Delegation has achieved the wonderful result of unseating about one fourth of the delegations for the sake of maintaining the principle that Formosa is the "Republic of China" and of seating its delegation as such.

PIERRE DUPUY

179.

DEA/114-B-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 27, 1957

THE QUESTION OF CHINA AT THE SIXTH INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE IN NEW DELHI

The attached despatch¹³² from our Ambassador to Rome, who led the Canadian Government delegation at the recent Red Cross Conference in New Delhi, summarizes the course of events at the Conference and is commended to your attention because you were absent from Ottawa during most of the time when the Conference was meeting. As Mr. Dupuy points out, the major successes scored by the Western powers, with the active cooperation of India, were over-shadowed by the controversy which developed over the seating of the Nationalist Chinese under the designation "Republic of China."

2. In retrospect, it is clear that only the Indians and Americans could have prevented the developments described by Mr. Dupuy which culminated in the withdrawal from the Conference of the delegations representing the Indian Red Cross Society, Egypt, Syria, Indonesia and the Sino-Soviet bloc. The following points stand out clearly from our analysis of these events:

(a) The Indian Red Cross Society which, as host for the Conference, might have been expected to seek every means of avoiding controversial issues, acted in a manner calculated to insult the Nationalist Chinese by addressing their invitation to the "Government of Formosa." It took this course in the face of the precedent of the 1952 Red Cross Conference, when the Nationalist Chinese were invited under their generally accepted title of the "Republic of China," and despite the fact that a majority of the states who are members of the International Red Cross recognize the Nationalists by this title. Furthermore, the invitations issued to all the divided countries — Germany, Korea, Vietnam and China — were correctly addressed with the exception of that to the Nationalist Chinese.

(b) The United States delegation, acting under strict instructions from Washington, adopted a rigid position over the Nationalist Chinese issue, although it did compromise to the extent of agreeing to have its motion to seat the Nationalists under their title of "Republic of China" voted on as the final item on the Conference agenda.

(c) It would appear that the United States governmental delegation was alone in insisting that the issue be pressed to its ultimate conclusion. (Even the American Red Cross Society delegation and the United States Ambassador to India were not in sympathy with their Government's attitude.) Only the threat of United States withdrawal from the Conference and the appeal to NATO solidarity enabled the United States delegation to rally the support necessary to pass its resolution, although it should be noted that, at Soviet insistence, the vote was by secret ballot.

3. It is worth noting that neither the United States Government delegation nor anybody else objected to the seating of representatives from Communist China. There was no question of substituting one set of Chinese representatives for another. The Communist ¹³² Voir le document précédent./See previous document.

Chinese, however, voluntarily withdrew from the Conference. It is worth remembering that in 1952 the Nationalist Chinese withdrew from the XVIIIth International Red Cross Conference in Toronto, although for a somewhat different reason. So far as we can recall, this is the first time outside the United Nations in which the Nationalist Chinese have scored a diplomatic victory over the Communist Chinese since 1949. We are taking steps to discover what interpretation has been placed on these events by the peoples of Asia.

J. L[ÉGER]

5° PARTIE/PART 5

ACCORD INTERNATIONAL SUR LE SUCRE
INTERNATIONAL SUGAR AGREEMENT

180.

PCO

*Note du ministre du Commerce et du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Trade and Commerce and Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 349-58

[Ottawa], November 28, 1958

SECRET

THE INTERNATIONAL SUGAR AGREEMENT OF 1958

Introduction

1. A United Nations Sugar Conference met in Geneva during September and October, and prepared the text of a new International Sugar Agreement. The new Agreement, which is open for signature between December 1st and 24th, is now submitted to Governments for approval. It is intended to come into force for a period of five years from January 1st 1959, when the I.S.A. of 1953 expires.

2. Canada is an importing member of the present I.S.A. in which 29 countries participate, including other large importers such as the United Kingdom, the United States, and Japan. The main sugar exporters also participate, including the West Indies and other British Colonies, Australia, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, China (Taiwan), and Indonesia. Members of the I.S.A. of 1953 are listed in an appendix,† which also indicates prospective new members.

3. The immediately following paragraphs summarize the considerations relevant for deciding whether Canada should sign the new Agreement, and set out specific recommendations. The second part of the Memorandum contains a more detailed explanation of the Agreement.

Summary of Main Considerations of Interest to Canada

4. The new I.S.A., like the present one, is an export quota type of Agreement. It is intended to stabilize raw sugar prices in world markets between 3.25 and 4.00 cents per lb. Main considerations of interest to Canada are:

(a) The price range appears satisfactory to Canada. Price stability is helpful to our sugar producers and consumers.

(b) Canada's adherence to the new I.S.A. would be helpful in our trade relations with exporters of sugar, including Commonwealth and non-Commonwealth countries. It would also demonstrate Canada's desire to support workable commodity arrangements.

(c) The new I.S.A. has been improved from the standpoint of importing countries.

(d) The new I.S.A. does not involve onerous obligations for the Government. Our participation would assist in the efficient administration of the Agreement from the importers' standpoint.

Recommendations

5. It is recommended¹³³ that Canada adhere to the new Agreement, and that the necessary authority to sign be granted by Cabinet. It is recommended that the new Agreement be brought into force provisionally on January 1st 1959, and that the Agreement be ratified as soon as possible, and if possible before June 1st 1959, in accordance with its provisions relating to accession.

DETAILED EXPLANATION OF THE I.S.A.

Objectives and General Operation

6. The objectives of the I.S.A. are to assure sugar supplies to importers and markets to exporters at equitable and stable prices, to facilitate increases in consumption and corresponding increases in supply, and to assist in the maintenance of the purchasing power of producing areas, especially those largely dependent upon the production or export of sugar.

7. The "free market" which the I.S.A. is intended to stabilize consists of that part of international trade in sugar which is not subject to exclusive or preferential arrangements; in recent years, it has accounted for about 40% of international trade in sugar, or for about 15% of world consumption. Sugar production and trade have for long been subject to special arrangements. For example, the U.K. and producers in Australia, South Africa, the British West Indies, Fiji, and Mauritius are parties to the Commonwealth Sugar Agreement under which the U.K. buys up to 1.8 million tons of raw sugar annually at a fixed price. The United States regulates its imports of sugar by means of quotas which divide the American market almost exclusively among U.S. producers, Cuba and the Philippines. The I.S.A. is not intended to replace existing regulations which control trade in sugar, but rather to restrain the intensification of exclusive arrangements, and thus to maintain the size of the free market. The free market is a residual source of supply to many countries which give priority to other sources of supply. Thus fluctuations in supply and demand fall mainly on the free market which is therefore particularly sensitive to changes in market conditions.

8. The I.S.A. aims at achieving price stabilization in the free market by adjusting supplies of sugar to market conditions. Exporting countries which participate in the I.S.A. share in agreed proportions an over-all annual quota for exports. The size of this "global" quota is determined by subtracting from total free market requirements the amount of sugar which is likely to be exported to the free market by non-participating countries. The quotas of participating exporters may be reduced, increased, or removed, during the course of a year so as to maintain free market prices within the range stated in the Agreement. The ¹³³ Approuvé par le Cabinet le 18 décembre 1958./Approved by Cabinet on December 18, 1958.

Agreement is administered by a Sugar Council, on which all participating countries are represented.

Main Changes in the New International Sugar Agreement

9. The I.S.A. of 1958 is patterned substantially along the lines of the I.S.A. of 1953, as amended in 1956.¹³⁴ A number of improvements have been made in the new Agreement, however, particularly from the viewpoint of importing countries. When the 1953 Agreement was concluded, there were in existence substantial surpluses of sugar held by exporting countries. These stocks, however, were reduced to more normal levels by 1956, and market conditions today therefore differ considerably from the conditions which existed in 1953.

10. The changes made in the new I.S.A. take into account these altered conditions, from the viewpoint of importers, as follows:

(a) Price and Export Quota Provisions. The price range of 3.25 cents to 4.00 cents per lb. f.a.s. Cuba remains unchanged. A feature of the new I.S.A., however, is a provision for increasing export quotas in effect by 2 1/2 per cent when the prevailing price exceeds 3.75 cents, unless the Sugar Council agrees otherwise.

(b) Obligation to Hold Greater Minimum Stocks—Exporters to the free market under the new I.S.A. are obligated to hold at least 12 1/2% of their basic export tonnage as a minimum stock reserve, as compared with 10% under the 1953 Agreement. In addition, exporting members of the Commonwealth Sugar Agreement have undertaken to hold reserve stocks of at least 50,000 tons in connection with the new I.S.A. These undertakings mean that exporters will be obligated to hold a minimum reserve of about 850,000 metric tons of raw sugar. Such stocks are earmarked for the free market for the purpose of relieving a tight market situation.

(c) Provisions for Earlier Reporting of Shortfalls. Exporters will be obligated to follow a more rigorous schedule for reporting whether they are unable to fill their quotas, under penalty of a reduction in their share of the market in succeeding years for non-compliance. Earlier reporting of shortfalls will enable other exporters to expand output in the same year to make up for the deficits.

11. The Agreement has also been improved from the viewpoint of exporters. Member countries which are both importers and exporters of sugar, but are not net importers, will be bound under the new Agreement by the general obligations of importing countries in respect of their import trade. It is also clear that a country which adheres to the Agreement as an importer is obligated to refrain from becoming a net exporter during the term of the Agreement.

12. In addition, the quota provisions of the Agreement have been adjusted so as to make the I.S.A. more attractive to new exporting members. As a result, it seems likely that all major exporting countries will adhere, including countries such as Brazil and India. A further number of importing countries, such as Norway, Morocco, and Malaya may also adhere.

13. The I.S.A. of 1958 also contains a new provision concerning voluntary arrangements for "multilateral options" which may be agreed upon between interested exporters and importers. If such arrangements were concluded, the interested importing countries would ¹³⁴ Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1954, N° 11; 1957, N° 5 et 1959, N° 3. Voir aussi volume 19, les documents 428 à 444.

See Canada, Treaty Series, 1954, No. 11; 1957, No. 5 and 1959, No. 3. See also Volume 19, Documents 428-444.

have the right to purchase specified quantities of sugar at the maximum price whenever the prevailing price exceeds the maximum; and the interested exporting countries would have the right to sell the same quantities at the minimum price whenever the prevailing price falls below the minimum. The scheme is reminiscent of the present International Wheat Agreement.

14. This provision of the new Agreement arose from the desire of a number of countries to achieve even greater stability in free market prices for sugar. A number of Delegations at the Conference, including Canada, considered the scheme impractical in countries where the sugar trade is conducted by private firms. There is no obligation on Canada or any other participant to enter such a scheme.

Appraisal of the New Agreement from Canada's Standpoint

15. Canada's interest in the new Agreement may be analyzed under the sub-headings of domestic considerations, obligations falling on the Government, and international relations.

16. Domestic Considerations. The price at which Canadians import sugar is largely determined in the free market, because our preferential tariffs encourage imports of Commonwealth sugar at a more or less fixed margin above the world price. Canada imports more than 80% of the sugar which is consumed in the country, and stability of import prices is therefore a matter of some concern. As a participant in the I.S.A., Canada has a substantial voice in administration and is in a position to contribute to the effective operation of the Agreement from the importers' standpoint.

17. Canadian refiners usually hold substantial stocks of raw sugar, and have an interest in stable prices at a reasonable level. For the growers of sugar beets a reasonable level of prices is also desirable, and the avoidance of sharply fluctuating prices facilitates crop planning. Canadian consumers fall into two categories. Industrial consumers account for more than 40% of sugar used in Canada, and since these industries must sell their products in a competitive market they are interested in stability and in avoiding excessive prices for sugar. Housewives also are sensitive to changes in the price of sugar.

18. Obligations Falling on the Government. If Canada adheres to the new I.S.A., the main obligation falling on the Government would be the same as under the old Agreement, that is to restrict imports of sugar from non-participating countries to the quantity imported in any one year 1951, 1952, or 1953. In Canada's case this quantity happens to be zero. This obligation could be readily accepted in 1953, because the Canadian preferential tariff ensures that our imports of sugar come mainly from Commonwealth countries which participate in the I.S.A., except for the special case of Cuba which is also a member of the I.S.A. Our preferential tariff operates today in the same way as in 1953. Thus the Government's obligation to restrict imports from non-members is not an onerous one. If, as seems likely, more exporting countries adhere to the new I.S.A. the scope of this obligation would be further limited. In any case, there are escape clauses which Canada might use if it were considered desirable to import sugar from a non-participating country.

19. International Relations. The main sugar exporting countries inside and outside of the Commonwealth, such as Australia, the West Indies, Cuba and the Dominican Republic are less developed or developing countries, and several of them depend upon selling sugar for the greater part of their income. These countries value Canada's co-operation in the I.S.A., since we are the world's fourth largest importer. The United Kingdom, on behalf of its colonial areas such as Fiji, Mauritius, and British Guinea, also values Canada's participation.

20. While the sugar exporting countries have a common interest in persuading importers such as Canada to adhere to the I.S.A., their interests naturally diverge over the matter of selling sugar directly to Canada. Before the I.S.A. of 1953 was concluded, Cuba had persuaded the Canadian Government to arrange for the importation of non-Commonwealth sugar. In effect, Canada by-passed the preferential tariff and facilitated entry of 150,000 tons annually of non-Commonwealth raw sugar during the years 1951-53 inclusive. When the I.S.A. of 1953 was negotiated, the United Kingdom, the West Indies, and Australia insisted on the insertion of Article 16 (2). This Article permits these countries, in effect, to withdraw from their I.S.A. obligations if a non-Commonwealth government makes a special arrangement with an importing Commonwealth country concerning the sale of sugar. As a result of this Commonwealth position, Cuba chose not to renew the special arrangement of 1951-53 with Canada. The Cuban Sugar Institute, however later concluded a private arrangement with Canadian refiners for the sale of 85,000 tons of sugar annually, beginning in 1954. Since this arrangement was non-governmental, it fell outside the letter of Article 16 (2) of the I.S.A., and the Commonwealth exporters did not protest.

21. The Dominican Republic, however, was not satisfied with the effect of these arrangements, since there was no provision for facilitating sales of Dominican raw sugar to Canada after 1953. At the United Nations Sugar Conference of 1958, therefore, the Dominican Republic desired to eliminate Article 16 (2) from the new I.S.A. The other Commonwealth countries concerned, and particularly the West Indies, desired to retain Article 16 (2). The Canadian position was that this Article did not in any way limit the freedom of action of Canada. Our Delegation was able to resolve the impasse between the Dominican Republic and the Commonwealth countries concerned by stating for the Conference record that Canada is not bound by the provision of Article 16 (2). This Article remains unchanged. (The statement of the Canadian Delegation is appended).†

22. The Dominicans no doubt will continue the efforts they have been making since 1954 to have the Canadian Government guarantee them a share of our market, employing their imports from Canada as a bargaining counter. Thus while the problem of trade relations with the Caribbean Sugar countries is not entirely resolved, it has nevertheless been understood that Article 16 (2) is not a matter for international controversy.

[GORDON CHURCHILL]

[S.E. SMITH]

CHAPITRE II/CHAPTER II
ORGANISATION DU TRAITÉ DE L'ATLANTIQUE NORD
NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART I
PLANIFICATION DE LA DÉFENSE À VENIR
FUTURE DEFENCE PLANNING

181.

PCO

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH No. 4206

Paris, October 15, 1957

TOP SECRET

THE PRESENT POSITION OF NATO

It is opportune to outline in one despatch the significant points in the situation now confronting NATO. Next month General Norstad, the Supreme Allied Commander Europe (SACEUR), is paying his first official visit to Canada since assuming his command last November. A month later three members of the present Canadian Government will be participating for the first time in a ministerial meeting of the NATO Council.

2. SACEUR on his visit to Ottawa will refrain from taking up any points of direct concern to Canada unless any of these points are raised by one of the Canadian Ministers. He will confine himself to sketching the broad outlines of NATO defence policy and the basic strategy for the defence of Europe. This is what he has done on each of the first official visits he has paid to the capitals of other countries contributing forces to his command.

3. At the ministerial meeting in December the Council will be asked to approve the recommendations arising out of the 1957 Annual Review. Mr. Spaak is preparing a paper on the main problems confronting the Alliance. These are likely to be mainly political and his purpose no doubt will be to focus attention on steps necessary to reinforce the Alliance. In addition Ministers will be afforded an opportunity of reviewing the current international situation in the light of recent Soviet moves. Finally, the Ministers will have before them a report of an important Committee concerned with civil emergency planning.

4. For some months NATO has been going through an "agonizing reappraisal" of its policy for the defence of Europe, such as seems to occur at regular intervals of every three years. These reappraisals are concerned with the best means of countering the overwhelming superiority in conventional forces possessed by the Soviet Union. In order to explain the present crisis in NATO defence policy, it is desirable first of all to give a brief account of previous reappraisals.

5. In the early days of NATO, following the signature of the Treaty in 1949, efforts in the military field were directed towards raising conventional forces that could withstand the shock of a Soviet attack. Even then defence was based on the line of the Rhine. This left a large part of the Netherlands undefended and gave rise to the suspicion in the minds of Frenchmen, Italians and others that the United States were contemplating a peripheral strategy based on withdrawal to behind the Pyrenees with the final stand on that line. They did not relish the prospect of Soviet occupation to be followed by liberation. These misgivings became more pronounced as it was seen that the requirements drawn up by the military were quite unrealistic in the light of political and economic capabilities.

6. In 1950, without previous diplomatic preparation, the United States proposed the participation of the Germans in European defence, pointing out that this alone would permit a forward strategy based on a line east of the Rhine. Since a forward strategy implied defence of German territory they argued it was right that Germans should participate in that defence. This proposal shocked and alarmed the French who were only brought around by the initiation of negotiations for a European army to which the six countries (Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands) comprising the European Defence Community (EDC) would contribute forces.

7. There still remained the problem of "the gap" or the difference between what the military considered necessary and what the nations could afford to contribute. An attack on this problem was begun at the Council meeting held in Ottawa in 1951, when the so-called TCC (Temporary Council Committee) exercise was initiated. This consisted of a thorough and comprehensive enquiry into the capabilities of each NATO country to contribute forces which would make possible the forward strategy. The result was the acceptance of force goals at the Lisbon meeting of the Council in February, 1952. These provided for a shield of approximately 65 first line divisions. At Lisbon the decision was also reached for a regular Annual Review which would seek to accomplish annually what the TCC had done on a shock basis, i.e. equate military requirements with national politico-economic capabilities.

8. In the following years it became apparent that even the more scientifically based Lisbon goals were beyond the capacity of the NATO nations. This led to another reappraisal and the adoption at the December, 1954 meeting of the Council of a new strategy based on the use of tactical nuclear weapons to counter an "all-out" attack by the Soviet Union. Under this new concept it was found possible to reduce the shield forces to the more manageable total of around thirty divisions.

9. In the period which has intervened between the 1954 decision and the present crisis, two developments occurred to delay the realization of the objective of 30 divisions for the shield forces. One of these was the progressive withdrawal of French forces to deal with the situation in Algeria. The other was the slowness in the build-up of German forces, although after the collapse of EDC in 1954 the Federal Republic of Germany had been admitted as a full member of NATO participating on an equal basis in its own right and not indirectly as a contributor to the European army under EDC. There was also an over-all relaxation of tension following the death of Stalin in 1953 and resulting from the cumulative effects of the Soviet peace campaign, a campaign which received a rude shock through the events in Hungary last November.

10. Overshadowing all these doubts about the ability of NATO to realize an adequate defence came a discussion over the basic strategy which had placed main reliance for the avoidance of a world war on the nuclear deterrent represented by the bombing capacities of the United States Strategic Air Force (SAC) and the United Kingdom Bomber Command. This arose out of growing concern that the Soviet Union may be catching up in the race for means of delivery of the "A" and "H" bombs. This concern can be traced back to the famous “massive retaliation” speech of Mr. Dulles in January, 1954.¹ Looked at in retrospect this statement did not announce a new doctrine but rather a return to a pre-1950 doctrine when the United States had a monopoly of the atomic weapon. An adviser to the former Democratic Administration, Mr. Paul Nitze, wrote in a recent article (The Reporter September 5th, 1957): “It was not a step forward; it was a step backward — a step back dictated not by new strategic considerations but by domestic political and budgetary considerations.” As we shall see later on this is not the only occasion when a NATO nation has sought to cover up domestic political and budgetary considerations by resort to strategic doctrine.

11. In the meantime the increasing threat of creeping inflation to the economies of all the NATO countries gave rise to a restlessness over the existing levels of defence expenditures. Throughout NATO defence expenditures were frozen at existing levels until in the United States and the United Kingdom efforts were made to reduce these expenditures below the current level. Since the gross national product of almost every NATO country has been increasing, this meant a progressive decline in the proportion of the gross national product devoted to defence.

12. There was a searching in some of the NATO countries for strategic justification of a reduced level of defence expenditures. The Dulles doctrine of massive retaliation began to take hold in the United Kingdom, where pressure on the balance of payments was compelling the choice between the continuation of nuclear armament and the maintenance of conventional forces for the traditional British world-wide police role. The “trip-wire” concept was conceived. Under this concept only a thin shield was necessary in Europe because an attack on the shield or a tripping of this wire would set off the massive retaliation which was the real deterrent to all-out war.

13. For economic reasons but under the influence of this trip-wire concept the United Kingdom Government introduced last winter their White Paper on Defence. At the same time they unilaterally announced their intention to reduce their forces on the Continent from a total of 77,000 to 50,000 men or in effect from four to three divisions. Since under the Paris Agreement of 1954 they had undertaken to maintain four divisions on the Continent, the concurrence of the Council of the Western European Union (WEU) (the Six EDC countries plus the United Kingdom) was necessary before the United Kingdom could give effect to this reduction. A most acrimonious debate ensued in WEU. The final result was a compromise, whereby the United Kingdom were permitted to effect half of the proposed reduction, or 13,500 men, in this fiscal year, largely in the form of non-combatant troops. The decision as to the other half was deferred until another meeting of the WEU Council, tentatively fixed for October of this year. In the meantime SACEUR was asked for his advice on the military aspects of the proposed reductions and the NATO Council for advice on certain economic and currency aspects. The countries on the Continent made it unmistakably clear that, unless more justification was forthcoming, they could not agree to the withdrawal of a further 13,500 United Kingdom troops from Germany.

14. The basic reasons for the United Kingdom White Paper were economic and financial. The country could no longer stand the strain of being a world power ready at all times to intervene wherever British interests were in jeopardy. When the United Kingdom Minister of Defence went to Washington he was advised by the American Chiefs of Staff to leave the nuclear role chiefly to the United States and to maintain their conventional forces with the financial savings that would thereby ensue. This the United Kingdom refused to do because they feared that in an emergency affecting vital British interests the United States might hesitate to entail the risk of using the ultimate weapon or might not use it in the manner best designed to protect vital British interests. In short they concluded that their position as a great power was more assured by being one of the nuclear powers than by having forces capable of policing large areas of the globe.

¹ Voir/See Volume 20, Documents 443-445.

15. If the United Kingdom had presented their case to their WEU and NATO partners solely in economic and financial terms, they might have obtained a better hearing, but they cloaked it with a strategic doctrine that was a thin disguise of the trip-wire concept. This doctrine happened to run counter to a political directive drawn up by NATO with United Kingdom concurrence and approved by the Council at the ministerial meeting last December. Briefly, the United Kingdom case is that there is no such thing as a limited nuclear war. Once resort is had to nuclear weapons of any kind an all-out war is inevitable. From this it follows that the size of the shield is not important. What is all important is the capability of immediate and devastating retaliation with the ultimate weapon, the "A" or the "H" bomb, delivered either by means of bomber aircraft or by guided missiles.

16. The reaction of the countries on the Continent of Europe to this doctrine has been profound. Unfortunately, this reaction is not well understood in the Anglo-Saxon countries, partly because it was slow to develop and partly because it has not always been correctly appraised by Anglo-Saxon writers on defence subjects, most of whom have their own preconceived ideas to propagate. The first factor to bear in mind is that these countries are wedded to the forward strategy. They are most sensitive to any moves that seem to represent a return to peripheral strategy. They refuse to contemplate the possibility of liberation after occupation. The second factor is their extreme dependence upon the United States as the possessor of the main deterrent to aggression. They see the gradual catching up by the Soviet Union in the nuclear delivery race, a development that has been demonstratively illustrated by the launching of the Soviet earth satellite.²

17. The European case has been well put in a recent report (prepared for the Sixth Bilderberg Conference at Fiuggi, Italy) by a retired French air force General, who was formerly at SHAPE, General Pierre M. Gallois. The following is a translation of an extract from that report:

"For each of the powers of the Alliance which do not possess nuclear weapons the question is this: might it find itself in such a situation that an incident of major importance for its own security or independence might be considered minor not only by guaranteeing atomic powers, but also by the other member countries of the Alliance? This assessment of the major or minor nature of a threat against Western countries must be estimated according to a new criterion — the size of the nuclear risk. Even if a vast airborne nuclear exchange appears improbable, or even impossible, and if everyone knows that they were being blackmailed with fear, it is clear that everyone would weigh the size of the stake and of the risk. And in such a calculation it is very likely that countries not directly and immediately threatened might consider some enemy intervention of major importance for the country against which it is directed to be only a minor incident."

² L'Union soviétique avait lancé le satellite Spoutnik le 4 octobre 1957, mettant ainsi en évidence l'état d'avancement du programme soviétique de missiles balistiques en particulier et des capacités scientifiques soviétiques en général.

The Soviet Union had launched the Sputnik satellite on October 4, 1957, demonstrating the advanced state of the Soviet ballistic missile program in particular and Soviet scientific capabilities in general.

18. The above quotation explains why France is continuing to spend large sums on its nuclear programme at a time when it is engaged in a costly local war in Algeria. It also makes it easy to appreciate the force behind the appeals of European countries to the United States for an amendment to the MacMahon Act which would permit that country to furnish its allies with nuclear weapons. Finally it explains why there has recently developed in some European countries an agitation for more conventional forces, notwithstanding the intolerable burdens this would place on the economies of the countries concerned.

19. The proposed United Kingdom reduction of forces in Germany has been described by writers on the Continent as "tip-toeing out of Europe." This reveals a deep-seated fear that the Anglo-Saxon countries may be disposed to leave their allies to their fate if the risk of defence on the Continent appears too great. The European countries have suspected all along that one of the motives the United States had in proposing German rearmament was that this eventually would permit the withdrawal of American forces from Europe. Throughout the discussions in NATO on the United Kingdom reduction of forces there were repeated references to the vital importance of maintaining the continued stationing of American, British and Canadian forces on the Continent of Europe. The Canadian contributions to SACEUR's forces are valued greatly because their quality is relatively superior to their quantity but above all they are valued for the psychological or political reason that they help to assure the continued presence of American and British forces.

20. The theory of reliance on the deterrence of the ultimate weapons was attacked in a book published last summer by a young American, Mr. Henry A. Kissinger. This book is entitled Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy and has attracted much attention. Kissinger's thesis is that resort to the ultimate weapon involves such mutual destruction that it is not feasible politically and that both sides will refrain from its use even if one or the other resorts to tactical nuclear weapons. He, therefore, propounds the doctrine of limited nuclear war. He spoils this thesis by padding his book with concrete examples of how such wars might be conducted, but there is no doubt that the appearance of this book has had an impact on thinking on both sides of the Atlantic.

21. That a change of thinking is taking place in Washington along the lines of Kissinger's thesis may be seen from an interesting article by Mr. Dulles which appeared in the October issue of Foreign Affairs.³ After pointing out that recent tests point to the possibility of possessing nuclear weapons the destructiveness and radiation effects of which can be confined substantially to predetermined targets, Mr. Dulles concludes that: "In the future it may thus be feasible to place less reliance upon deterrence of vast retaliatory power. It may be possible to defend countries by nuclear weapons so mobile, or so placed, as to make military invasion with conventional forces a hazardous attempt."

22. That some of Kissinger's ideas are shared on the Continent of Europe may be seen by quoting the following extracts from the report of General Gallois referred to above:

"Western Europe is still guaranteed by the airborne nuclear power of the United States. We think that the growth of Soviet nuclear capacity, the quality or even the superiority of this capacity over that of the West, is not of such a nature as to change fundamentally the military aspect of the permanent test of force, which is characteristic of this period. On the other hand, it seems that the political aspect of the problem of common defence may be completely changed. For as long as an airborne nuclear monopoly existed the concept of guarantee had some sense, the risk taken in granting this guarantee was a minor one. This is no longer true.”

³ Voir/See John Foster Dulles, "Challenge and Response in United States Policy," Foreign Affairs Vol. 36 No. 1 (1957), pp. 25-43.

“This reasoning could lead to the safety of Western continental European countries being based on the individual possession (or the possession by groups of nations with very closely connected interests) of quantitatively limited nuclear armament, and on their conventional contribution to a collective defence system. The first of these two categories of forces would bring the deterrent to the national level. The second would discourage minor action against one or several allies, and allow the level of the stake to be sufficiently raised to be able to pass gradually to the national, regional, or collective nuclear deterrent.”

23. It has been in this charged atmosphere that General Norstad has been preparing all summer his report that would respond to the request of the WEU Council for advice on the military aspects of the proposed United Kingdom reduction of forces on the Continent of Europe. He very wisely decided not to reply directly to the questions put to him by the WEU Council but to let the answers come out of another report he was preparing. This is a document known as MC 70 and is entitled “Minimum Force Requirements.”⁴ It covers the period up to the end of 1963. SACEUR’s contribution will be combined with those of the other two Supreme Commanders, SACLANT (Atlantic) and CINCHAN (English Channel), and then vetted by the Standing Group and the Military Committee before submission to the Council. Since both SACEUR’s and SACLANT’s contributions contain some revolutionary ideas it is not expected that this procedure can be completed in time for submission of the document to the ministerial meeting of the Council in December. There will, however, be a discussion at that meeting on the procedure for dealing with the document.

24. SACEUR’s contribution to MC 70 was given a preview first of all at a presentation to national Chiefs of Staff on September 18th and secondly at a presentation to the NATO Ambassadors on October 2nd. The latter presentation was rendered necessary by the exigencies of the WEU time-table. The presentation consisted of briefings by General Norstad and his senior officers. Normally nothing is revealed officially to the Council of papers prepared by the Supreme Commanders until they are approved by the Military Committee.

25. We have seen that there are three schools of thought. First that represented by the British who place main reliance on deterrence by the ultimate weapon and who advocate a thin shield. The second school is that of those who question reliance on the deterrent under existing conditions and favour a return to large conventional forces in order to assume the integrity of national territories against political blackmail or piecemeal nibbling. The third school is that which lies between the other two and is represented by the doctrine accepted by NATO since 1954.

26. In his contribution to MC 70 General Norstad has confirmed and further elaborated this accepted NATO doctrine. Without minimizing in any way the deterrent effect of the ultimate weapon he designates the shield as an essential part of the deterrent. He continues to require a shield of around 30 divisions. These shield forces are to have both nuclear and conventional capabilities. They have to be prepared to fight either type of warfare using ⁴ Le texte du MC-70, qui établissait les contributions minimales en main-d’oeuvre et en matériel pour les pays de l’OTAN entre 1958 et 1963, demeure classifié.

The text of MC-70, which mandated the minimum manpower and materiel contributions for NATO countries between 1958 and 1963, remains classified.

that degree of force required to deal with the situation. To make possible the provision of the forces he needs, General Norstad proposes economies through the abolition of forces he does not need. The emphasis is still on the first thirty days. Hence he proposes drastic cuts in second echelon forces that cannot be available within this period. He proposes reductions in the number of aircraft but this is more than compensated for by an overall increase in strike power.

27. It is becoming clear that with the complexity of modern weapons the emphasis is being placed more and more on highly trained regular troops. Field Marshal Montgomery has affirmed that the day of the levy en masse of men to fight a war is over. General Norstad says as much by relegating reserve forces to a very low priority and not requiring them to be assigned to him. He does not go so far, however, as to recommend the abolition of national service because this is the only way some NATO countries can raise forces economically. He puts forward the revolutionary suggestion of an international division under his command ready to be airborne to any part of the NATO area.

28. Hitherto SACLANT has been accused of preparing for war under a concept opposite to that on which SACEUR bases his strategy. His duty is to keep the sea-lanes open and this has presupposed a war of longer than thirty days duration. SACLANT's contribution to MC 70 is reported to be based on a forward defence. Under this strategic concept there would be concentration on keeping the Soviet submarines out of the Atlantic instead of concentrating on destroying them after they have got into the Atlantic. This would assume naval forces in being, whereas at present SACLANT has no forces assigned to him but only forces ear-marked for him. This revised concept would enable SACLANT to pay more attention to the early stages of a nuclear war. It is reported that the Standing Group are questioning the concept and this is one of the factors which will contribute to the delay in presenting MC 70 formally to the Council.

29. The United Kingdom Government are in a quandary as a result of SACEUR's presentation of his contribution to MC 70. General Norstad has confirmed the necessity for a strong shield and hence supports the arguments advanced by the countries on the Continent of Europe against the proposed withdrawal of further United Kingdom forces from Germany. There is now little hope that these countries will agree to the further withdrawal of 13,500 men in the next fiscal year. The United Kingdom wish to avoid another heated debate in the WEU Council with all the damage this would cause to their prestige. In particular, they fear the effect this might have on the difficult negotiations for the association of a Free Trade Area with the Common Market comprised of their six partners in WEU. General Norstad paid a private visit to London on October 9th and had talks with Mr. Selwyn Lloyd and Mr. Duncan Sandys. They asked him for his advice. He advised they adopt a proposal he made earlier in the year and agree to leave on the Continent the strategic reserve of 5,000 men. This would reduce the number of United Kingdom troops to be withdrawn in the next fiscal year to 8,500 men. At the same time the United Kingdom could point out that there remains unsolved the currency question relating to the strain on their balance of payments from maintaining troops in Germany. There is a clause in the Paris Agreement of 1954 pertaining to this question, but up to now the discussions on this subject have been abortive, partly due to the obduracy of the German Minister of Finance. It is probable that the questions which have arisen in WEU over the proposed withdrawal of part of the United Kingdom forces stationed in Germany will be settled out of court and that there will be no discussion of these questions at the ministerial meeting of the NATO Council in December.

30. We have seen that MC 70 will not be ready for formal presentation to the Council in time for the December ministerial meeting. Consequently Ministers will not have to take a stand on the proposals in this document until sometime in 1958. Enough, however, will be known, at least of SACEUR's proposals, to permit them to be reflected in a discussion of the defence problems facing the Alliance which is one of the items on the agenda. This may take the form of a sort of preliminary discussion of the main lines of MC 70 without leading to definite conclusions or decisions. Enough is known also of the broad lines of MC 70 to permit of an intelligent discussion of the procedures to be followed in giving effect to the proposals in the document, which is another item on the agenda for the December ministerial meeting. Here we have some concern that the NATO Secretariat may be harbouring the idea of a large scale multilateral exercise to give effect to MC 70. Fortunately for us, General Norstad has already made his views on this question known in an informal statement he made on October 2nd to some NATO Ambassadors. He said that in his view all that is required to give effect to MC 70 are bilateral conversations between the Supreme Commanders and each of the Governments plus the maximum possible use of the established Annual Review procedure. At the December meeting, however, Ministers will be asked to decide whether MC 70 should be discussed in the first instance at a meeting of Defence Ministers or at a meeting attended by Foreign, Finance and Defence Ministers. The United States are in favour of the latter course, but I should think a great deal will depend upon the degree of insight into these problems the Foreign and Finance Ministers acquire at the December meeting. A meeting of Defence Ministers only would be less unwieldy for the purpose in view. The only substantive decision in the military field Ministers will be asked to take at the December meeting will be to approve the Annual Review for 1957 which sets firm force goals for 1958, provisional goals for 1959 and goals for planning purposes for 1960.

31. The first part of the agenda for the ministerial meeting in December is mainly political. It is not known yet on what points Mr. Spaak will touch in his report on the Main Problems confronting the Alliance. It is thought his object will be to reinforce NATO solidarity. He may deal with such questions as a common policy for the Middle East, measures to bring about a settlement of the Cyprus dispute and steps to lessen the economic dependence of Iceland on the Soviet bloc. Mr. Spaak is a born integrator with much practical experience in European integration. It is possible that some of his suggestions may be designed to bring about the closer integration of the NATO countries. We should be afforded an inkling of Mr. Spaak's latest thinking in the addresses and broadcasts he is to deliver on his visit to the United States towards the end of this month.

32. The item on the agenda for the December meeting providing for a review of the current international situation is intended to provide an opportunity for an exchange of views. It is an item for information and not for action. No conclusions or decisions are intended to emerge from the discussion under this item, but it is hoped that the exchange of views will enable all NATO Governments to take into account in formulating their policies the views expressed by their NATO partners. In this way, if not common policies, at least policies consistent with NATO objectives can be followed by the Governments.

33. Finally, the agenda for the December ministerial meeting will contain an item relating to the report of the Senior Committee on Civil Emergency Planning. This Committee is chaired by Mr. Spaak and is composed of officials in national capitals primarily responsible for planning in this field. They are meeting in Paris this week to finalize the report which they will submit to the December ministerial meeting. It is possible that their report will contain recommendations entailing increased expenditures by governments for civilian planning for an emergency. If so, Ministers will want to consider these recommendations along with those in the purely defence field. It has not yet been worked out how the two sets of recommendations can best be co-related.

34. This completes the review of the principal points with which the Canadian Ministers will be brought in touch both during the visit of General Norstad to Ottawa on November 13th and 14th and as a result of the participation of three Canadian Ministers in the Ministerial meeting of the NATO Council on December 16th to 18th.

L.D. WILGRESS

182.

DEA/50030-AB-5-40

*Note du chef de la 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], October 30, 1957

PANEL ON ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF DEFENCE — FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1ST

The only item on the Agenda of this meeting is the following: "Procedure Used in the Preparation of MC70."

2. The questions for discussion under this item were raised initially with this department in General Foulkes' letter to you of October 3.† This letter, which is included in the Agenda documents sets out the views of General Foulkes in some detail.

3. The essence of the problem is as follows. SACEUR and SACLANT's contributions to MC70, the Minimum Forces Study, which is to be completed towards the end of December, contain force allotments broken down by countries. The allotments for Canada do not meet with General Foulkes' approval. He feels that the Commanders overstepped their authority in making these allotments by country and circulating them to all NATO countries. He considers that the Force requirements should have been shown on a regional basis pending council decision on the procedure for the implementation of MC70.

4. General Foulkes has assumed that, by including these country force allotments in their reports, the Commanders were attempting to nullify the Lisbon decision which provided that the Council should have "final determination of annual programs, including force targets and programs required for the supporting build up." This is the first point which might be cleared up.

5. It is quite evident that the Commanders had no intention of ignoring or circumventing the Lisbon decision. In chapter V of SACEUR's contribution (SHAPE/154/57) is the following sentence:

"Where the objectives established (i.e. the country force allotments) cannot be met, we are ready to discuss the problem bilaterally, to provide priority guidance and to consider how best to adjust individual national goals within the Minimum force."

General Norstad told Mr. Wilgress (NATO telegram no. 1677† paragraph 15) that "we could count on his unqualified opposition" to another TCC exercise as a procedure for dealing with MC70. In his view all that was necessary would be bilateral conversations between SACEUR and the governments plus the maximum use of established Annual Review Procedure. He reiterated this view when he appeared before Council on October 22 (NATO telegram 1787† paragraph 5). He said:

"With regard to the procedure for dealing with MC70 ... in the past National Authorities have had the responsibility for determining their force contributions with the benefit of advice from SHAPE. This could still be done but there must be the closest cooperation between the country, SHAPE, and the International Staff. After this step he felt that perhaps through the Annual Review organization if not specifically through the Annual Review Process, the result would have to be presented to Council."

These statements hardly support General Foulkes' contention that General Norstad's intention was to bypass the Lisbon decisions. General Foulkes has apparently assumed that the Force allotments by countries have the status of firm goals in the sense that firm goals were established by Council as a result of the Annual Review Process. General Norstad, however, is apparently submitting them as guidance just as he provides guidance in the first stages of the Annual Review each year. Thus his allotments are subject to negotiation with countries and processing via Annual Review procedures before Council takes decisions on the force goals.

6. The main bone of contention is that these country force allotments have been circulated to all members, while the Annual Review guidance is not circulated before the bilateral negotiations. This is a point on which General Norstad might be criticized. He has provided some justification for taking this action (paragraphs 13 and 14 of NATO telegram 1677). We would have thought, however, that while country allotments might have been necessary, they need not have been circulated.

7. General Foulkes will probably try to pin some of the responsibility for the circulation of the country force allotments on our NATO Delegation. Last May, the French Delegation submitted questions in addition to the WEU questions to be announced by SACEUR. One of these questions, if agreed by Council, required SACEUR to state the contribution which would be required of each country to arrive at the total number of forces. In our telegram DL-469† of May 3, we informed our Delegation of our view that none of the NATO military authorities should be asked to undertake to answer this question. Unfortunately for reasons which Mr. Wilgress cannot explain, no action was taken on this instruction and on May 16, Lord Coleridge sent a circular RDC/190/57 which said: "No Delegation has raised any objection to these French questions, and they have therefore today been communicated officially to General Norstad."

8. While we must accept some blame for not having noted this at the time, General Norstad has "denied emphatically that he had been influenced in any way by the French questions. He had ignored these questions and had so stated at the presentation on October 2." The decision to include country allotments was taken on General Norstad's own initiative "because it appeared to him to be the only way of accomplishing his objective. He had not been aware that he was transgressing any rule laid down at the Lisbon meeting, nor was he conscious that he was following the specific instructions of the Standing Group" (NATO telegram 1677, paragraph 13).

9. It would appear therefore that this dereliction on our part is not one which has influenced the course of events, but it is nevertheless embarrassing!

10. A third point which General Foulkes has raised is the misunderstanding that developed between him and SACEUR regarding the SHAPE Planning Guidance for the 1957 Annual Review (SHAPE 64/57 of April 3, 1957). This question is dealt with in paragraphs 2 to 8 of General Foulkes' letter of October 3. General Foulkes disagreed with the new force requirements for Canada which were outlined in the paper. He discussed the question with SHAPE and SACEUR agreed to withdraw the recommendations and substitute a statement that Canada agreed to carry out discussions with SHAPE at some later date on the future of the air division and to give consideration to the adoption of a suitable guided missile to support the Brigade Group. General Norstad assumed that his agreement related only to the 1957 Annual Review. General Foulkes thought it related to the Force Goals up to 1962 no matter what paper the recommendations might appear in. The fact that the same or nearly the same recommendations that he discussed with SACEUR have reappeared in SACEUR's contribution to MC70 has annoyed him considerably.

11. In our view there is some justification for both points of view, but it would not appear reasonable to suggest that SACEUR could not make recommendations in connection with MC70 which go beyond those made for the 1957 Annual Review. General Foulkes' military arguments against the specific recommendations seem rather sensible, but we do not have SACEUR's side of the story. These recommendations, as we have pointed out can be discussed again with SACEUR in the light of the broader recommendations of MC70 which were certainly not identical to those on which the 1957 Annual Review was based. They will then presumably be fed with the Annual Review process (or whatever procedure is decided by Council to implement MC70) before Council takes a decision on them.

12. Finally, there is the question of what the Panel should decide to do about this situation. General Foulkes wants the country allotments deleted from MC70, but Mr. Wilgress (NATO telegram 1677 of October 10) sees grave difficulties ahead if we were to raise this point in Council. He has pointed out that a proposal to delete them would require unanimity and he feels that we could not expect unanimity on this issue. On the contrary, he fears, that by raising this question in Council we would place ourselves in the position of standing out against the efforts of the Supreme Commanders to provide effective and adequate defence and this at a time when the USSR has demonstrated the possibility of a scientific break through upsetting the balance of force between the two sides. There would be attributed to us the motive that we are adverse even to examining the possibility of modernizing our defence contributions to NATO. He points out that the result of our raising this question might well be to stimulate a move for a new TCC exercise as a procedure which might be considered more effective than the present Annual Review procedures — a result which we would wish to avoid.

13. In our view we should not take this matter up in Council at present. MC70 is not completed and the Commanders' contributions are not officially before Council. MC70 will shortly be considered by the Military Committee and that would seem to be the proper place to voice any objections the Panel might agree should be raised. The line you might wish to take in the Panel might be based on the following considerations: As far as Canada is concerned, the harm or embarrassment caused by the circulation of the country force allotments has been done. It cannot be modified at this stage by suggesting the removal of the allotments and our motives might be questioned. Our attention might be directed in the first instance to discussing the Canadian allotments with SACEUR as he suggests in Chapter V on his paper. After the results of these discussions are known the Panel might consider at a later stage and in the light of better information on the views of other countries, whether we might propose in the Military Committee that the revised force allotments for each country be sent only to the country concerned pending a Council decision on procedure for implementing MC70.

PAUL TREMBLAY

183.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité
sur les aspects économiques des questions de la défense*

Minutes of Meeting of Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, November 1, 1957

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce, Secretary to the Cabinet (Chairman)
 Mr. J. Léger, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 General C. Foulkes, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff
 Mr. K.W. Taylor, Deputy Minister of Finance
 Mr. F.R. Miller, Deputy Minister of National Defence
 Dr. A.H. Zimmerman, Chairman, Defence Research Board
 Mr. A.F.W. Plumpton, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance
 Mr. F.A. Milligan, Department of Defence Production
 Mr. D.B. Dewar, Privy Council Office (Acting Secretary)

Also Present

Mr. R.G. MacNeill, Mr. E. Gallant, Department of Finance
 Mr. P. Tremblay, Mr. F.G. Hooton, Department of External Affairs.

I. SACEUR's Contribution to MC70

(The following documents had been circulated:

Document ED3-57, † Procedure used in the Preparation of MC70; Document ED4-57, † copies of Telegrams DL-469 of May 3, 1957 to Paris; DL-851 of October 8, 1957 † to Paris; 1677 of October 10 from Paris; and 1787 of October 24 from Paris.)

1. The Chairman invited General Foulkes to speak on the item before the Panel.

2. General Foulkes referred to the contribution of SACEUR to MC70, which had been circulated to member countries, and said that it contained recommended force goals for countries. The goals for Canada were the following: For the Army, it was recommended that Canada provide Honest John missiles in 1958 and Little Johns in 1961, at an estimated cost of one million dollars. For the Air Division, SACEUR has recommended that four squadrons of light bombers (100 aircraft) should be introduced, and four squadrons of day fighters should be eliminated. By 1960 the remaining four squadrons of day fighters should be replaced by four squadrons of all-weather fighters. Since the all-weather fighters required after 1960 would have to be of a newer model than the CF-100, the implementation of the recommendations for the Air Division would cost one billion dollars. The Navy recommendations called for an additional aircraft carrier, three more destroyer escorts and twelve more maritime patrol aircraft by 1960, at a total increased expenditure of $185 millions. Total increase in capital cost for the implementation of the recommendations to Canada would be approximately $1,186,000,000.

3. The Canadian government was entitled to take exception to these recommendations on grounds of both substance and procedure. The Chiefs of Staff would not have made similar recommendations to the government on military grounds, quite apart from considerations of cost. The Honest John missile was suitable for armies and corps, but not for brigades, and the recommendations in respect of the Air Division, which involved the stationing in Europe of three different types of aircraft within a relatively small total air strength, and provision of support for them, represented a serious deviation from the principle of balanced forces.

4. On the procedural side, Canada had obtained agreement from SACEUR early in the 1957 Annual Review process that the recommendations for the Army and the Air Division now appearing in MC70 would not be pressed in the 1957 Annual Review. It was surprising, therefore, that the same recommendations were now appearing in MC70. More serious was the assumption by a NATO commander of the right to make recommendations on force goals to countries, to give the opinion that countries were economically capable of meeting the designated goals, and to circulate the document containing these recommendations and opinions throughout the Alliance before they had been studied by the Council or even by the Military Committee. General Foulkes said that such a procedure seemed to be in violation of the decision taken at Lisbon by the Ministerial Council that force goal allocations should be made only by the Council and after discussions had taken place in the Annual Review process with the countries involved. Canada was probably placed in a worse position than any other member country as a result of the procedure which had been followed, because we had made a practice of living up to the force goals which had been carefully worked out in the Annual Reviews, and, unlike other countries, we did not accept mutual aid from the United States and would therefore have to meet the capital expenditures involved from our own defence budgets.

5. Mr. Léger said that although the procedure used in circulating the country force allotments was perhaps objectionable, the harm or embarrassment caused by this procedure had already been done, and nothing would be accomplished at this stage by suggesting the removal of the allotments. Indeed our motives in making such a suggestion might be questioned. It might be better to wait until the Canadian allotments had been discussed with SACEUR and the views of other countries were known, at which time we might propose in the Military Committee that the revised force allotments for each country be sent only to the country concerned pending a Council decision on procedure for implementing MC70.

6. In the course of discussion, the following main points emerged:

(a) Force goals for Canada had actually been increased only in the case of the Navy. The changed goals for the Army and the RCAF involved costly new equipment and fewer aircraft of a more expensive type and increased support costs.

(b) The apparent intention of the Council to ask for comments on MC70 from the Standing Group prior to the Ministerial meeting in December was objectionable because the views expressed by the Standing Group would not reflect the positions of Canada or the other non-Standing Group countries. For example, there was a danger that the proposal that SACLAN should have forces allotted to him prior to the outbreak of war for the purposes of countering the Soviet missile-bearing submarine threat, which was favoured by Canada, might be opposed by the Standing Group as a result of United Kingdom objections;

(c) The contents of MC70 were an example of the difficulties which arise as a result of the close association of SACEUR, as opposed to other NATO commanders, with the NATO Council in Paris. His easy accessibility for the purpose of advising the Council, and his position as military adviser to the WEU as well as to NATO, resulted in the Council being given a view of the military objectives of the Alliance that disproportionately emphasized the defence of Western Europe. Whereas it was true that the concentration of defensive strength in Western Europe had resulted in preventing Soviet encroachments there, the political-strategic situation had so changed that more attention should be given to the air defence of North America as a major concern of the Alliance. NATO should also pay more attention to the dangers of Western Europe being outflanked by Soviet Russia in the Middle East, North Africa and Iceland, and to the methods of meeting these dangers, particularly by political and economic measures.

(d) The procedure for dealing with MC70 would likely be discussed at the Ministerial meeting in December, but the document itself would not be before the Ministers for discussion in detail or for approval. It might be advisable for the Ministerial meeting to decide that it should be further considered at a meeting of Defence Ministers early in 1958. Although there was little merit in objecting at length at the December meeting to the procedure which had been followed in the preparation of MC70, Ministers should be briefed on the procedural problem, and consideration should be given to the desirability of Ministers putting on record their disapproval of the distribution of country force requirements by commanders prior to their negotiation with the countries concerned.

(e) The position of Canada in dealing with the recommendations in MC70 would be very much strengthened if the defence estimates for the forthcoming fiscal year were not reduced, since a reduction from the level of previous years would lend credence to the contention of SACEUR that this country was capable of a greater effort. If the same order of magnitude as in previous years were maintained, the need for considering a reduction of commitments overseas in order to improve continental defence at home could also be pressed more effectively.

(f) Ministers should be made aware of the impossibility of maintaining the defence effort planned in 1951 even within the budgetary limits decided upon in that year, as a result of rising costs. In particular, it should be pointed out that within present ceilings and programmes, re-equipment of the Air Division overseas would not be possible.

(g) It was possible that Canada might have to reconsider her position of refusing to accept mutual aid from the United States, at least in respect of our forces overseas. An alternative and perhaps preferable means of relieving the burdens of equipment costs would be to inaugurate a programme of reciprocal orders for equipment with the United States along the lines of the programmes adopted in the Second World War and the Korean War.

7. The Panel noted that SACEUR would be meeting with Ministers in Ottawa on November 13, and considered that Ministers should be briefed generally on the background of the MC70 problem and on the present state of the Alliance prior to that meeting.

8. The Panel:

(a) Noted the points which had been made in the course of the discussion;

(b) Agreed that documents should be prepared by the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff and by the Department of External Affairs to be used at a briefing on November 12 at 3:15 p.m. of the Ministers who would be meeting with SACEUR on November 13.

D.B. DEWAR
Acting Secretary

184.

DEA/50102-5-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 95

Paris, January 15, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your Tel DL-38 Jan 14.†

COUNCIL MEETING JANUARY 15 — ITEM I — DOC C-M(58)5 — MINISTERIAL MEETING, POSSIBLE FOLLOW-UP ACTION IN DEFENCE FIELD

Referring to section on NATO Defence Points III A(1-9 inclusive) Spaak intimated that this presented a more complex problem than the other sections. It is his contention that preparation of a conference, at ministerial level, to discuss overall defence problems early in the year is almost impossible of realization since we are still lacking MC70, which document, in his opinion, must of necessity form the basis of all considerations.

2. With regard to MC70 Spaak inferred that the news was not good and that there was little the Council could do to hasten completion and distribution of this document. He advised that Standing Group had been informed of Council's concern in this matter and had been requested to have MC70 in hands of Council by February 15 at latest. He went on to point out that ministerial meeting to study MC70 had been planned for period 5 to 6 weeks after document had been placed in hands of Council, namely around end of March. This time phasing was necessary in order that all preliminary work might be completed and definitive results ready for spring meeting of foreign ministers. He suggested that if above time schedule could not be met it might be necessary to postpone foreign ministers meeting, and seemed, by implication, to suggest that it might also be necessary to postpone March meeting at least until end of March.

3. Spaak went on to say that Standing Group had been asked to request Supreme Allied Commanders to commence providing, as soon as possible, opinions on certain of the suggestions made at December meeting, since this procedure could help to shorten delays which might arise during discussion of MC70, which delays would stem from lack of prior consultation. Netherlands representative agreed with this procedure and stressed the urgency of all action necessary to implement military decisions being taken with least possible delay, regardless of progress on MC70.

4. UK representative, while agreeing that military guidance must be provided, expressed it as his view that governmental guidance was also a requisite. It was his government's view that MC70 would not be ready for the March conference, but it was felt that this conference need not be postponed for this reason, since the Council would have conducted extensive discussions both in Council and with other groups such as, for example, the Defence Production Committee, the military authorities, etc. The results of all these discussions should, in the UK view, provide an adequate basis for consultations at a ministerial meeting in March.

5. In discussion of the four points contained in section III B of Document C-M(58)5 the following thinking emerged. With regard to B(1) the French Delegate considered that there was a requirement here for decisions by governments to be obtained in certain fields and, consequently, there must be opportunity for the military authorities to consult with governments. Spaak agreed that this section meant that the Council would ask the military authorities to make recommendations. However, he stated that no final decision or stand had been taken here, and it was his contention that the submission of recommendations from the military authorities would infer that discussions with, and an expression of intent by, the countries concerned had been achieved. The Standing Group representative indicated it would be difficult to say when the recommendations would be available.

6. The Netherlands representative suggested that section III B(2) be deleted in deference to the good sense of the Standing Group. The Standing Group representative pointed out that Annex B to RCD 428 (Final) would produce the answers to this section from the military point of view and he therefore suggested that B(2) should be deleted.

7. The UK representative, in the context of B(2), urged that the Council set appropriate groups to work in the matter of logistics. He referred to the Council briefing at CINCENT in early December, at which time General Valley had made some most pertinent remarks on the question of standardization and integration, and suggested that CINCENT, and perhaps SACEUR, might be invited to provide the Council with more detailed views on these topics. Decision on this proposal is to be deferred until next week.

8. It was agreed to delete section B(2) which fact prompted the Netherlands representative to query the disposition of item A(8) which was originally contained in B(2). His proposal that A(8) should be included in section B(4) evoked from the Belgian representative the opinion that this was not the appropriate place since some confusion might arise out of the fact that A(8) dealt with the past and section B(4) dealt with the future. After further discussion the disposition of A(8) was deferred for consideration until next weeks meeting. It was suggested that A(8) could well be included in section B(3) and we would appreciate your comments on this point.

9. Spaak opened the discussion on section III B(3) in a most pessimistic vein. He drew the analogy between MC70 and the expectant mother who had been nurturing her embryo for over nine months, and suggested that we were undergoing a prolonged period of prenatal agony. In somewhat wistful manner he disclaimed any knowledge of the contents of MC70 and, in consequence, asserted that he was not competent to ask the Secretariat to draw up clear and concise procedures for a conference, nor did he consider it feasible to draw up an agenda for the conference until the form and content of MC70 were known.

10. In response to a question posed by the UK as to the latest timing for the placing of MC70 into the hands of the Council the Standing Group representative stated that the information given by the Standing Group in December to the effect that mid-February was the best estimate is still the only authoritative guess available.

11. We admitted that this question of a ministerial meeting in March posed a most complex problem and agreed that it was important to obtain the views of the military authorities in order that we might be able competently to solve the procedural aspects of the conference. We emphasized, however, that in our opinion this was a most important and urgent task and, whilst no decision could be reached at to-day's meeting, we felt this point must be followed up as a matter of urgency.

12. We would appreciate receiving prior to the 22 January meeting any comments or proposals relative to the above which you may wish to forward to us.

[PAUL] BRIDLE

185.

DEA/50102-U-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-64

Ottawa, January 21, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 95 of Jan 15.

NATO MINISTERIAL MEETING — FOLLOW-UP ACTION IN DEFENCE FIELD

We are very much concerned at the inconclusive and somewhat jumbled discussion in Council (your reference telegram) on procedures for handling MC-70 and the preparation for the meeting of Defence Ministers to consider this question. It is our understanding that MC-70 will be forwarded to national authorities by the end of January and that a meeting of the Military Committee (Chiefs of Staff Level) could consider it on March 6. In our view it would be worth considering whether this meeting of the Military Committee should not be transformed into a joint meeting of the Military Committee and Council which could if necessary meet for a week. Its main purpose would be to prepare for the meeting of Defence Ministers. National documentation which would have in any case been prepared for the Military Committee could be provided concurrently to the Council for the joint meeting.

2. If this could be agreed the Defence Ministers Meeting could be held toward the end of March provided that ministers were not required to take any decision of substance. The Defence Ministers Meeting should be primarily a briefing meeting.

3. What we have in mind can be seen more clearly in the light of the contents of MC-70. It is our understanding that MC-70 will be divided into two parts. The first part will include an intelligence section, a section on the concept, a section on military planning and a section on overall force requirements. Part two, we understand will include the national forces contributions based on the Supreme Commander's papers.

4. The Defence Ministers could receive a general briefing on Part One and take note of Part Two. Defence Ministers might also take a decision on the procedure to implement Part Two. It would be our hope that this decision would be to have the implementation of Part Two undertaken in the 1958 Annual Review. The Annual Review Committee could then get started immediately after the Defence Ministers Meeting. There would be no new requirement for Supreme Commanders guidance since this would be provided in Part Two of MC-70.

5. The Defence Ministers Meeting could also review the question of the division of new infrastructure expenditure with particular reference to missile infrastructure.

6. If a procedure along these lines could be agreed, we can see two tasks which should be undertaken immediately by the Council. Firstly, the Annual Review Committee should be instructed to work out a time table and amended procedures for dealing with Part Two of MC-70. Secondly, the Infrastructure Committee should be instructed to undertake preparatory work on the financing of new infrastructure requirements relating to missiles.

7. With regard to the spring meeting in which we assume Defence and Finance Ministers would participate along with Foreign Ministers, we would envisage decisions being taken on Part One of MC-70 in the light of governmental positions worked out subsequent to the Defence Ministers briefings. In addition, the later spring meeting might, if adequate preparation were undertaken, take financial decisions on the division of new infrastructure expenditure. Decisions on Part Two of MC-70 could not be taken until the next December meeting and on the basis of the 1958 Annual Review.

8. With regard to paragraph 5 of your reference telegram and section III B (1) of CM(58)5 it is our understanding that procedures regarding IRBM will have to follow the following sequence: (1) SACEUR will have to suggest in which countries IRBMs should be stationed (2) he will then have to discuss his recommendations with individual governments. (3) following SACEUR's discussions bilateral arrangements between the US and the country concerned will have to take place. We would hope that Council would be kept fully informed on the progress of these negotiations and perhaps you might suggest that such progress reports be made from time to time in the Council. The sequence of negotiations for the stockpiling of nuclear warheads should we think be very similar and equally Council should be kept informed of the progress of negotiations.

9. With regard to section III B (2), we see no reason for deleting this instruction to the military authorities.

10. With regard to section III B (3), we feel that in the light of the suggestions made in this telegram, it should be possible for the Secretary General to prepare a general outline of the procedure for and the tasks to be undertaken by the conference at ministerial level (Defence Ministers). We feel that this item should be kept on the agenda of the Council and that the Secretary General should be asked to prepare a paper on it as soon as possible to clarify various government views on what should be accomplished at this meeting and also if possible on the later spring meeting.

186.

DEA/50102-U-40

*Le président du Comité des chefs d'état-major
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 22, 1958

FUTURE MINISTERIAL MEETINGS

1. I would refer to the telegram No. 95 of 15 January 1958 from the NATO Delegation in Paris and your reply DL-64 of 21 January 1958.

2. I was only shown a copy of this telegram No. 95 of 15 January 1958 from Mr. Bridle late yesterday afternoon and therefore only had an opportunity to give our preliminary views on this problem of the next series of Ministerial meetings. While I was able to give Mr. Hooton our tentative views, which he has outlined in DL-64, I now feel that I should elaborate on our views on future ministerial meetings.

3. At the outset I would like to point out that, from a military point of view, the December meeting⁵ was most unsatisfactory and I would hope that we would never again be asked to participate in a meeting dealing with such important military problems with so little advance information and preparation as faced us in the December meeting.

4. While the problems of intermediate ballistic missiles and the provision of warheads was not one of vital concern to Canada, the future discussions on MC 70 are not in this class, but of vital importance to this country. Therefore, I cannot speak too strongly regarding the necessity for adequate military preparation before these problems are discussed by the political and economic bodies of NATO.

5. As you are aware, the Military Committee's advice was not sought on the military problems facing the alliance last December, nor were the Chiefs of Staff of the NATO countries briefed on the characteristics, implications and use of these new weapons. Therefore, the Chiefs of Staff were not in any position to advise their Governments on the action to be taken regarding these recommendations. In this telegram from Mr. Bridle, it appears to me that the Council are again trying to meet dead lines without regard to the need for proper study of the problems which are to be faced at this next series of meetings. I am sure the experience of the last December meeting makes it abundantly clear that our future policy regarding NATO meetings should be to insist that the preparatory work is completed well in advance of the meeting and the subjects on which decisions are sought have been thoroughly examined prior to presentation to the Ministerial meeting. I feel that we should make it quite clear to our Delegation in Paris that we are more concerned in securing the right answer to the problems of MC 70 than to meet any particular dead line required for a meeting.

6. There has been further pressure from the Secretary General for the draft MC 70 papers to be forwarded for Council consideration before these papers have been studied by the Chiefs of Staff of the countries concerned and before the Military Committee has had a chance to take action on this paper. This procedure is considered unsound. It may well happen that the intelligence on which these papers are based is now out of date and may require further revision by the Military Committee. Furthermore, it is already known that the question of limited war and the problem of the creation of an anti-submarine barrier in peacetime is included in the Supreme Allied Commanders' studies. These two questions alone will require careful consideration by the Chiefs of Staff.

7. It appears to me that there is very little value and considerable danger in the attempts of the Council to by-pass the Military Committee and deal with these papers before they have secured the advice of the Military Committee. It is quite likely that the implications of MC 70 to Canada may be of considerable magnitude. Therefore, we should insist on adequate time for study of this paper by national authorities before the Council start to deal with the economic and infrastructure problems that may arise.

8. In discussion with Mr. Hooton yesterday, I suggested a procedure based on our knowledge of what MC 70 is likely to contain. We hope to be able to have a look at the first draft of the paper towards the end of this month and it is our understanding that the paper will be in two parts. Part 1 dealing with the intelligence, the concept and the military plan leading to the overall requirements and there will be a further Part 2 which will be a summation of

⁵ Pour un compte rendu de la réunion des chefs de gouvernement de l'OTAN de décembre 1957, qui a remplacé la traditionnelle rencontre ministérielle de décembre de l'OTAN, voir la quatrième partie du présent chapitre.

For an account of the December 1957 NATO Heads of Government Meeting, which replaced the traditional December NATO Ministerial Meeting, see Part 4 of this chapter.

the requirements of SACEUR, SACLANC and the Channel Commands but no attempt will be made to reconcile the conflicting requirements of the Supreme Allied Commanders nor would their requirements be placed in order of priority. It is understood that the recommendations will be similar to those which appear in the Supreme Allied Commanders' studies but with no indications from the Standing Group of any priorities between these recommendations to countries.

9. General Sparling has reported that the first draft of the paper has not included anything regarding the Canada-U.S. Regional Group. I have instructed General Sparling to discuss with the U.S. authorities the inclusion of a suitable paragraph on the Canada-U.S. Regional Group particularly with reference to the establishment of the Joint Air Defence Command. It may not be possible to include in Part 2 of this paper force requirements and at this stage I think perhaps it is advisable not to include requirements up to 1963 as has been the case in the Supreme Allied Commanders.

10. The Standing Group have informed us that the earliest date on which they will be able to hold a meeting of the Military Committee is March 6, 1958. I would suggest that when MC 70 is in final form for the Military Committee that it should also be sent to the Council and that the Military Committee and the Permanent Council should meet in Paris sometime after March 6 and have briefings from the Supreme Allied Commanders on the papers and decide a procedure for the meeting of Defence Ministers which can take place towards the end of March or the beginning of April.

11. Tentatively I consider that the meeting of the Defence Ministers should be mainly exploratory and informative. They should be briefed thoroughly on Part 1 of the paper and have an opportunity to cross-examine the Supreme Allied Commanders regarding the intelligence, the concept and the total force requirements. Similarly, they would be able to question the Supreme Allied Commanders on Part 2 but not make any attempt to approve Part 2 of the paper. It is suggested that the Defence Ministers should work out the procedures for the Ministerial meeting to be held in April or May for the approval of Part 1 and action to be taken on Part 2. We consider that it would be appropriate to suggest to the Defence Ministers that as Part 2 will require considerable consultation between the Supreme Allied Commanders and other NATO bodies that the implementation of Part 2 should be undertaken by the Annual Review Committee as a normal function of the Annual Review for 1958/59.

12. The Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, should also be asked to make a preliminary report to the Defence Ministers on the implementation of the recommendations made at the December meeting for the siting of intercontinental ballistic missiles and the stockpiling of warheads in Europe. It is anticipated that the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, will discuss with the countries concerned the siting of the intercontinental ballistic missiles and after reaching agreement on the siting of these weapons that bilateral agreements will be made between the country concerned and the United States for the acceptance of these missiles under the normal mutual defence assistance arrangements. Similarly it is expected that the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, will make recommendations on the locations of the stockpiles for atomic weapons. It will then be necessary for the Council to consider what part of the installation of the ballistic missiles will be bilateral financial arrangements and what part will be a multilateral infrastructure charge. The same will apply to the creation of storage for warheads.

13. It is considered that the Council should be in a position to have a preliminary discussion along these lines with Defence Ministers so that action can be taken at the Ministerial meeting in May to establish the criteria for multilateral financing of these two new projects.

14. As the question of the future meetings of ministers will affect the Department of Finance as well as this Department, I would suggest that after you have had time to consider the suggestions in this letter it might be advisable to have a short meeting of the panel in order to clarify our views and send quite definite instructions to Mr. Wilgress regarding the future meetings. Because of the uncertainty of ministerial movements during the next few months it would be useful if these matters could be decided as early as possible.

CHARLES FOULKES

187.

DEA/50102-U-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 177

Paris, January 25, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

COUNCIL MEETING JANUARY 29 — PREPARATIONS FOR DEFENCE CONFERENCE

The Secretariat have circulated as Document C-M(58)13 a note by the Secretary General setting out suggestions for arrangements and terms of reference for the defence conference at the ministerial level in the spring of this year. The text of this document follows. Begins: "The communiqué issued at the conclusion of the Ministerial Meeting in December 1957 recorded the decision of the Heads of Governments to hold a defence conference at ministerial level in the early months of 1958 'To discuss progress made in these fields (as regards defence) in the light, in particular, of the results of the 1957 Annual Review.'"

The purpose of this paper is to define the character and scope of this conference, to suggest a provisional agenda, to make proposals for the conduct of the necessary preparatory work, and finally to consider the date on which the conference should be held.

Character and Scope of Defence Conference

2. This conference, which would be wholly devoted to the study of defence problems, should I feel bring together the National Defence Ministers of member countries of the Alliance. The ministers would be assisted by their permanent representatives to the Council and also by their national representatives on the Military Committee. The Chairman of the Military Committee and the Standing Group, together with the Supreme Commanders, and, as necessary, the principal subordinate commanders, would be closely associated with the work of the conference. Only thus will it be possible to ensure that the views of the military authorities and the positions of the various governments are discussed concurrently throughout, and so to expedite the work of the conference by enabling replies to be given without delay on the military aspects of any questions raised in the course of debate.

At the same time, the defence conference would be essentially preparatory in character. It would provide for the exploration of all aspects of current defence problems, both military and non-military, and for the ground to be prepared for decisions to be taken at the normal Ministerial Meeting to be held a few weeks later.

3. The political directive adopted by the Council on December 13, 1956 (C-M(56)138) drew attention in general terms — to draw up the necessary recommendations, taking into account the financial status of existing programmes.

6. [sic] Furthermore, it is understood that the defence conference would be given progress reports:

(i) By the military authorities, on the present state of planning with regard to the introduction of IRBMs into the defence system of Allied Command Europe, the storage and deployment of nuclear warheads for modern weapons systems, and the integration of air defence;

(ii) By the international staff, on the state of progress achieved in co-ordination of research development and production of weapons.

While these various points can of course be discussed by the Permanent Council at any time, it seems to me that in view of their close relationship with the defence problems already on the agenda of the ministerial conference, the state of progress achieved should be brought to the attention of ministers.

Preparatory Work

7. In order to prepare the ground for ministerial discussion, certain action has been or should be initiated, but it is not possible at the present juncture to make more than an initial appreciation of the work required. The following proposals may therefore serve as a general framework within which to proceed.

A. MC70

8. Until such time as the content of MC70 is known, it is hardly feasible to lay down a detailed procedure for handling. It is nevertheless clear that governments should come to the conference prepared to discuss at least in general terms the implications of MC70 on their defence plans, and to report on their ability to provide and equip the forces required of them. Governments should therefore submit their preliminary comments before the conference in sufficient time to allow them to be distributed to and studied by other NATO governments as well as by the military authorities, and by the international staff.

9. The question arises whether it would be possible or desirable to arrange, in the interval between the distribution of MC70 in its final form and the beginning of the conference, for a multilateral study of its implications in the financial, economic and production fields; or whether it be sufficient to arrange for a summary study of such implications to be carried out jointly by the military authorities and the international staff, preferably, of course, in co-operation with the national authorities concerned. The choice between these two courses which might be discussed by the Annual Review Committee and form the subject of a report by the latter to the Council depends on a number of unknown factors, in particular, the date of the ministerial conference.

B. Further Co-ordination and/or Integration of NATO Forces

10. The NATO military authorities have already been invited to express their views on the various proposals submitted by delegations, both written and oral, before and during the Heads of Governments conference. Certain delegations will perhaps have further suggestions or amplifications of their original proposals to submit, which will likewise be passed to the NATO military authorities for their views as the occasion arises.

11. I suggest that the Annual Review Committee should be invited to study any proposals worthy of further consideration and submission for discussion by the defence conference, as and when the comments and views of the military authorities become available. In order to assist the Annual Review Committee in drawing up its report, special task forces might be set up as required to examine particular problems, comprising, in addition to those national delegations wishing to participate, representatives of the appropriate military authorities including the headquarters concerned, and of the international staff.

C. Infrastructure

12. The international staff have invited the Standing Group to furnish them as soon as possible with the elements of future infrastructure requirements with a view to ascertaining the impact of these new requirements on present day programmed infrastructure work. When this information is available, the Infrastructure Committee will draw up a report covering the financial status of the infrastructure programme, the progress of existing infrastructure projects, and future requirements.

Date of Spring Defence Conference

13. In determining the date on which the defence conference should be held, there are two possible approaches. The first is that the conference should meet as soon as possible after the issue of MC70 in final form, and the preparatory nature of the conference might be held to justify this view. The second is that any meeting of Defence Ministers which was not in a position to undertake a useful study of governments' reaction to the measures required for each of them to implement MC70, and to the financial, economic and production implications thereof, would be too restricted in scope. It would therefore be preferable to allow a sufficient interval between the issue of MC70 and the Ministerial Meeting in order to enable a multilateral study to be made of the financial, economic and production implications of MC70, in line with the suggestions in paragraph 9 above.

14. To judge by past experience, and given the complexity of the various factors to be examined, the second approach seems to me the better one. I would therefore propose the following programme of work. This programme is based on the assumption that MC70 will be issued in final form on March 6, having already been distributed to NATO capitals and to the Military Committee on about February 15.

(a) The defence conference should meet about April 15. This would allow about six weeks for governments, the military authorities and the international staff respectively to undertake the necessary preparatory work. This represents, I maintain, the absolute minimum time to deal properly with the studies and other work involved.

(b) As indicated above, no final decisions would be taken by the defence conference.

(c) An interval, I suggest, of about one month will be necessary for negotiations and discussions to be held between governments, the military authorities and the international staff in the light of the discussions which have taken place at the defence conference, in order to enable final recommendations to be prepared for submission to the normal Ministerial Spring Meeting.

(d) In addition to its traditional agenda, the Spring Ministerial Meeting will have to reach final decisions on the conditions and measures required to give effect to MC70, as well as on other questions considered by the Defence Ministers. The meeting should therefore take place between May 19 and May 24 (i.e. between Ascension Day and Whitsun). It is most desirable that the latter date should not be exceeded, bearing in mind the serious repercussions which this would have on the conduct of the 1958 Annual Review, and the delays which it would entail in the application by member countries of the joint military plans of the Alliance. Ends.

188.

DEA/50102-U-40

*Le chef de la 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

[Ottawa], January 30, 1958

MINISTERIAL DEFENCE CONFERENCE

Panel discussion on this item will be centred on a draft telegram to the NATO Delegation which was prepared by the Department of Finance. It is intended to provide instructions for the Delegation on the Secretary General's proposals for the Defence Conference (C-M(58)13) contained in NATO Telegram 177 of January 25. Council had a preliminary discussion on this paper on Wednesday of this week (reported in NATO telegram 219 of January 29†).

The Secretary General's paper proposes that the Defence Ministers Conference should be held about April 15 and that it should explore all aspects of current defence problems both military and non military and for the ground to be prepared for decisions to be taken at the normal Ministerial Meeting to be held a few weeks later. Prior to the Defence Ministers Meeting, the Secretary General suggests that it would be desirable to have prepared, for the Defence Ministers, a study of the financial, economic, and production implications of MC-70.

The Department of Finance telegram takes the line that the Defence Ministers should not come to grips with the financial, economic and other implications of MC-70 and that their agenda should be limited generally to purely military aspects of MC-70 and related questions. The Department of Finance do not envisage decisions being taken on MC-70 by the Defence Ministers. They envisage part II of MC-70 and other basic problems arising from it should be turned over to the Annual Review Committee and other specialized committees of the Council. Since they feel it is highly unlikely that preparatory work could be completed in time for a full Ministerial Meeting in May, their suggestion is that the Permanent Council should take final decisions on Part I and that the Permanent Council would direct the activities of the Annual Review and other committees concerned in preparation for a full meeting in December — or possibly in the fall in the pre-negotiation stage of the Annual Review process.

In our view, the Department of Finance suggestions are open to question. We agree that the Defence Ministers Meeting should be preparatory but we feel that the general principles involved in Part I of MC-70 are of sufficient importance to warrant careful consideration of the desirability of holding a full Ministerial Meeting. For such a meeting it would be important to have some indications of the costs involved in implementing MC-70. National Governments could be expected to have some idea of the costs involved in meeting their own force recommendations in Part II and estimates of the cost of new infrastructure requirements could also be prepared. While no specific commitments could be taken at a Spring Ministerial Meeting, it would seem to be essential that Ministers should approve Part I as a general basis on which the implementation of National Defence programs and the common infrastructure programs could be undertaken.

There is also a possibility that the basic strategic principles underlying MC-70 will be re-examined. The US is seeking to avoid this, but there are indications that the UK intend to reopen the discussion. The UK are still presumably not in agreement with the concept of the shield forces as set out in MC-70. Apart from the purely military aspects of the shield versus the trip-wire concept⁶ it is possible to envisage a discussion on the political developments since December 1956 which would involve amendments to the Political Directive and consequently have implications for NATO Defence Planning.

It is too soon to see clearly what a full Spring Ministerial Meeting could accomplish, but for this reason also it is too early to suggest that such a meeting can be rejected. We would therefore suggest that in our instructions to the Delegation, we do not take a firm position on procedures following the Defence Ministers Meeting.

The Secretary General raises the question of the date for the Defence Minister Meeting. The draft telegram does not provide instructions on this point. It might be implied, however, in view of the nature of the meeting envisaged by the Department of Finance, that it would take place at the end of March or the beginning of April. We would have no firm views about this and feel the decision should be largely influenced by the views of General Foulkes in the light of whatever agreement is reached on the nature of the meeting.

PAUL TREMBLAY

189.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité
sur les aspects économiques des questions de la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, January 31, 1958

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce, Secretary to the Cabinet (Chairman)
Mr. F.R. Miller, Deputy Minister of National Defence
Mr. J. Léger, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
General C. Foulkes, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff
Dr. A.H. Zimmerman, Chairman, Defence Research Board
Mr. A.F.W. Plumptre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance
Mr. G.W. Hunter, Assistant Deputy Minister of Defence Production
Mr. W.R. Martin, Privy Council Office (Secretary)
Mr. D.B. Dewar, Privy Council Office (Assistant Secretary)

Also Present

Mr. N.A. Robertson, Ambassador of Canada to the United States
Mr. F.A. Milligan, Department of Defence Production
Mr. P. Tremblay, Mr. F.G. Hooton, Mr. D.B. Wilson, Department of External Affairs
Mr. R.G. MacNeill, Mr. C.L. Read, Mr. E. Gallant, Department of Finance.

...

⁶ Pour un exposé sur les doctrines du bouclier et du fil-piège au sein de l'OTAN, voir le document 181.
For a discussion of the shield and trip-wire doctrines within NATO, see Document 181.

II. Preparation for Future Ministerial Meetings.

(Documents: NATO Document MC-70 had been given restricted circulation from the office of the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff; ED2-58, letter of 22 January, 1958, from the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, had been circulated; ED3-58, Telegram No. 177 of 25 January, 1958, from the Canadian Delegation to NATO, had been circulated; ED4-58,† draft message to the Canadian Delegation to NATO, had been circulated; ED6-58,† Suggested Programme for dealing with MC70, from the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, was circulated at the meeting).

5. General Foulkes referred to the procedure suggested by the Secretary-General for the consideration of MC 70 in NATO, which was contained in Document ED3-58. The Secretary-General had proposed that a Defence Ministers Conference should be held about April 15 and that it should explore all aspects of current defence problems — both military and non-military — and prepare the ground for decisions on all the issues arising from MC70 to be taken at a Ministerial Meeting which he suggested might be held in the second half of May. The Ministerial Meeting in May would be expected to reach final decisions regarding the measures required to give effect to MC70.

6. General Foulkes believed that national officials would not find it difficult to accept Part I of MC70 which discussed future force requirements in general terms. The real difficulty for countries would arise from Part II of the document which contained the reports of the Supreme Allied Commanders on country contributions. It would be unrealistic to expect a Ministerial Council so early as May to take decisions on Part II. A preferable procedure to that suggested by the Secretary-General would be for the Defence Ministers Meeting in April to consider the defence aspects in Part I of MC70 and to note Part II of the document. The detailed negotiations which would be required on Part II could not, and need not, be dealt with hurriedly and should probably be referred by Ministers to the Annual Review Committee which would be asked to report to Council in December or possibly earlier on the progress made in implementing MC70.

7. Mr. Plumpton said he fully agreed with the procedure suggested by General Foulkes whereby the broader implications in Part II of MC70 would be dealt with through the machinery of the 1958 Annual Review. It would be quite unrealistic to expect countries to make decisions on these implications in the few weeks between the Defence Ministers Meeting and the proposed plenary Ministerial Council.

8. General Foulkes said that the 1958 Annual Review process could perhaps be advanced by about two months if the contents of MC70 were regarded as the recommendations of the Supreme Allied Commanders which were normally drawn up only after visits to countries. The more deliberate timetable imposed by the Annual Review procedure would be more appropriate to the handling of MC70 because some countries including Canada had to take into consideration that their defence role might be changed as a result of events in the next few months. The position of our forces in Germany was a case in point. General Foulkes said he would like to stress again that we should have no difficulty in accepting Part I of MC70 in which force requirements were not discussed in quantitative terms.

9. Mr. Léger said that he agreed with the procedure outlined by General Foulkes but thought we should keep in mind that the Annual Review process in past years had not been very effective. He also wondered whether it would be necessary to hold a Ministerial Meeting in the spring if that meeting would be expected only to refer the really fundamental issues in the document to the Annual Review Committee.

10. General Foulkes replied that the contents of Part I of MC70 with which the Conference would deal were indeed fundamental; Part II, which could not very well be dealt with by Ministers in the spring, dealt with problems of detailed implementation which were more appropriate to the Annual Review process.

11. Mr. Plumptre commented that the shortcomings of the Annual Review in past years might not have been due so much to faults in the procedure as to the lack of a sense of urgency on the part of countries. A major advantage in the procedure suggested by General Foulkes was that it was far more orderly than that suggested by the Secretary-General.

12. Mr. Léger said that in accepting this timetable we should keep in mind the possibility, which indeed amounted almost to a certainty, that a Summit Meeting would be held this year. Any NATO Ministerial Meeting which would be held in the spring might be preoccupied with issues different from those contained in MC70. One item which would almost certainly be discussed at a Summit Meeting was the problem of Germany, and although it was quite probable that no agreement on Germany could be reached, some agreement might be obtained on the types of weapons to be deployed in Central Europe.

13. General Foulkes said that the probability of a Summit Meeting reinforced the need to use regular Annual Review procedures for dealing with MC70. He did not think that the consideration of MC70 need be upset by the prospect of a Summit Meeting. The main effect of any agreements reached at the Summit would likely be on the scale of forces or the nationality of forces in Germany, not on the general concept for the defence of Europe.

14. Mr. Léger said that even without a Summit Meeting consideration of MC70 was likely to be affected by the difference of opinion within NATO as to the desirability of a "shield" or "trip-wire" defence in Europe. It might be expected that the U.K. would continue to press the trip-wire thesis.

15. General Foulkes said that the U.K. had accepted with some reservations the principles contained in MC70 and he did not see how they could insist upon the trip-wire thesis without reopening the question at the Defence Ministers Meeting and thereby requiring a revision of MC70.

16. Mr. Léger said there was a possibility that if a Summit Conference were called for early in the summer, the timetable which the Panel had been considering might be disrupted by a Foreign Ministers Meeting being called before May. It would be necessary to retain a certain flexibility in our approach.

17. General Foulkes, in reply to a question from Mr. Bryce, said that in accepting Part I of MC70 Canada would be contemplating to a certain degree increases in defence costs for re-equipment of our forces in Europe during the same period when re-equipment of our forces at home would be a major expenditure. Canada had a special problem which was different from the European NATO countries in this respect; one alternative to our present policy which might have to be considered was whether we should change our view in respect of accepting United States mutual aid. A problem which we shared with European NATO members was the prospect of increasingly expensive infrastructure programmes. These programmes would be fraught with difficulties such as, for example, the attitude of Norway to sharing the cost of infrastructure for modern weapons which the Norwegians did not want to accept but which were going to be placed in other countries.

18. The Panel:

(a) approved the procedure for dealing with MC70 which had been proposed by General Foulkes and, in particular, agreed that:

- (i) Part I only should be dealt with at the Defence Ministers Meeting;
- (ii) Part II should be dealt with through the machinery of the Annual Review;

(b) agreed that the Department of Finance, in co-operation with National Defence and External Affairs, should re-draft document ED4-58 along the lines of the discussion for the instruction of our NATO Delegation.

...

190.

DEA/50102-U-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-104

Ottawa, February 3, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 219 of Jan 29.†

MINISTERIAL DEFENCE CONFERENCE

On January 31 the Panel reviewed the comments sent to you in our telegram 64 of January 21 in the light of CM(58)13 and your telegram 219 of January 29. The Panel also had before it the following tentative timetable prepared by CCOS for consideration of MC-70.

2 Feb	MC-70 arrives in Ottawa (we already have first draft)
2-16 Feb	Discussions in Chiefs of Staff, etc.
16 Feb	Comments forwarded to Washington
18-28 Feb	Military Committee in Permanent Session revise MC-70
3 Mar	Revised paper produced
6 Mar	Military Committee Meeting in Paris
10 Mar-15 Apr	Consideration by national authorities in preparation for Defence Ministers Meeting
15 Apr	Defence Ministers Meeting.

2. The Panel agreed with the US view that the Defence Ministers' Meeting should concentrate on MC-70, however, we realize that it would not be realistic to insist on too restricted an agenda if other governments wish to discuss related subjects which were mentioned in the communiqué. We doubt however whether the subjects mentioned in paragraph 1 of your telegram 219 will be sufficiently prepared to permit a very useful discussion. In any event, these other subjects are of more immediate concern to the European members than to us.

3. The Panel agreed that the Defence Ministers' Meeting should be exploratory and informative and that it should not take decisions of substance on MC-70. Even though this is agreed, we consider that the meeting should not be held before April 15 as we would require at least a month following the Military Committee Meeting in Paris to formulate government views on MC-70.

4. With regard to the preparation for the Defence Ministers Meeting, we are concerned at the implications in the proposals of the Secretary General. His proposal that a multilateral study of the financial, economic and production implications of MC-70 should be prepared for the Defence Ministers in order that the Spring Ministerial Meeting can reach "final decisions" on the conditions and measures required to give effect to it, goes far beyond our own ideas of what can or should be undertaken by the Spring Meeting.

5. The approach suggested by the Secretary General seems to be premised on two assumptions which we feel are probably unrealistic and accordingly could lead to undesirable developments in the handling of the whole problem. In the first place, the Secretary General seems to assume that there will be little of substance for the Defence Ministers to deal with on part one of MC-70, i.e. the strategic concept itself, the intelligence on which it is based and the size and structure of the overall force requirements, and that the conference would be ready to plunge immediately into the financial, economic, and other implications of these concepts. We are doubtful that approval in principle can be so readily reached, and envisage the conference more as a forum for briefings and general consideration by the ministers, in consultation with their own military advisors and those of NATO on these basic military premises, and in preparation for governmental decisions on the basic military concepts from which the financial, economic and other implications will be derived. This in itself will be a considerable achievement.

6. Secondly, the Secretary General appears to assume that a conference of Defence Ministers alone could and should come to grips with the financial, economic and other implications. These are matters which have an aspect falling normally outside the jurisdiction of Defence Ministers. If such matters were to be considered, presumably it would be appropriate for Finance Ministers and other ministers to attend. Furthermore, we feel it would be inadvisable, in any event, to attempt to come to grips with the financial and economic implications, including those on part two of MC-70, before a firm common position has been reached on the basic concepts involved.

7. We are doubtful that Defence Ministers would be prepared to declare the final position of their governments on part one of MC-70 before they have returned to their capitals. We accordingly agree that final decision should be taken at a later date. Whether the final decision on part one should be taken at the Spring Ministerial Meeting or left to the Permanent Council could be considered at a later stage. We would see no difficulty in assigning this task to the Permanent Council.

8. In our view, neither the Defence Ministers Meeting nor the subsequent Spring Ministerial Meeting should be required to do more than take note of the basic financial, economic and production problems arising from MC-70, including part two. These should be dealt with, at least initially through the Annual Review Machinery and other Specialized Committees of the Council (e.g. production and infrastructure), following approval of Part I. It is unrealistic in our view to expect that preparatory work could be completed in time for a full Ministerial Meeting in May.

9. We would envisage the Annual Review Committee adopting a procedure and timetable leading to final decisions at the normal Ministerial Meeting. This might be as usual in December, but we have also considered the possibility of suggesting as we have in the past a full Ministerial Meeting in the autumn. This might be in the pre-negotiation stages of the Annual Review and after adequate preparation, or the review, if pressed forward, might be completed at that time.

10. From the foregoing, you will appreciate that we wish to avoid any procedure which would necessitate precipitate decisions on MC-70 or involve NATO in a new version of the TCC exercise. We are more concerned with securing the right answers to the problems raised by MC-70 than with meeting any particular deadline. The Annual Review machinery would permit adequate consultation with military authorities on the form of national contributions and their timing over a period of three or four years. It would also allow smaller countries to point out their requirements for mutual aid in accepting new commitments. It would also have advantages for us as it would allow us an opportunity to bring out the increased requirements for defence of the Canada/US region. In this connection, we have introduced in MC-70 a paragraph on the Canada/US region with particular reference to NORAD. Force requirements for this region will however probably not be included in part two.

11. With regard to the draft agenda for the Defence Ministers Meeting, we feel that paragraph 5(a) of CM(58)13 should be worded so as to permit a full discussion of MC-70 including basic principles of strategy. We agree with the Secretary General that the attitudes of member governments should not be prejudged at this stage by providing too limited a wording for this item.

12. We are not so directly concerned with paragraph 5(b) and would accept the paragraph as amended in your telegram 219. With regard to paragraph 5(c), you will note from our letter DL-18 † that we are concerned about the difficulties which might soon face the Alliance in the field of infrastructure. Our letter DL-18 and the memorandum attached to it were prepared and considered prior to our discussion about the Defence Ministers Meeting. We are now doubtful that a separate agenda item on infrastructure at the defence conference will result in any useful developments, and certainly we would not envisage any decisions being taken nor recommendations being made by Defence Ministers and consider that this task, because of its financial and technical implications should be dealt with by the Permanent Council. We are still inclined to feel that the best approach to this problem may be along the lines outlined in our letter DL-18 subject to further refinements of detail. We are holding any further action on this, however, pending the completion by Standing Group of its study on infrastructure requirements in connection with MC70 which you indicate in paragraph 4 of your telegram 219 should be available any day.

13. We agree that the Defence Ministers should be provided with progress reports as outlined in paragraph 6(1) of CM(58)13.

14. We do not envisage too much difficulty in Council over the agenda for the Defence Ministers Meeting, but we hope that you will be able to clarify the Secretary General's views on what should be accomplished subsequent to it. We would hope that the Council would now cease focusing its attention on the Spring Ministerial Meeting as the forum for taking decisions on MC-70 — with the possible exception of agreeing on part one — and that it would agree to making the fullest use of the 1958 Annual Review for this purpose. You might stress our view that final decisions on part two of MC-70 should only be taken after examination and discussion within the Annual Review machinery and that these final decisions should be envisaged at the December meeting. You might also mention our suggestion that a full ministerial meeting in the autumn might be desirable in the pre-negotiation stages of the Annual Review. In the light of our views, you should also play down the Secretary General's suggestions for a multilateral study of the financial, production and economic implications of MC-70 prior to the Defence Ministers Meeting. This in our view should not be undertaken precipitately, but in the course of the 1958 Annual Review on the basis of established procedure and timetable. You may indicate that our ministers would not be in a position to take decisions of substance on part two of MC-70 at a meeting held in May.

191.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 694

Paris, March 17, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 689 Mar 17.†

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW AND MC70

Following is text of C-M(58)49 which contains report by Annual Review Committee to Council on handling of MC70 through 1958 Annual Review, as revised following March 14 meeting of Annual Review Committee. Begins:

As instructed by Council February 5, Annual Review Committee have studied possibility of utilizing annual review procedure for the implementation of MC70 in accordance with proposal made by Canadian Delegation. Subject to certain conditions as set out below, and bearing in mind that MC70 lays down minimum forces requirements for the years 1958-1963, Committee considers it feasible to adapt 1958 Annual Review for implementation of MC70.

2. In a preliminary report to Council (C-M(58)27) of February 18, Committee drew attention to desirability of securing early adoption of MC70 as a basis for defence planning of the Alliance. But Council reached no definite decision when it discussed this point February 19.

3. It must be emphasised that present report has been drafted for submission to Council at a time when status of MC70, including general recommendations which form a part of it, have still not been finalized nor will be before March 15, and when the outcome of the discussions which will take place at meeting of Council with Military Committee and at Defence Conference of April 15 cannot be foreseen. Subject therefore to any limitations which may be imposed by these prevailing uncertainties, Committee have worked out following proposals.

4. Annual Review process would begin, as usual, with the issue to countries of commanders' guidance, followed by Annual Review questionnaire.

(a) Commanders' guidance, which would be based on military requirements contained in MC70, will be issued in accordance with arrangements to be made by military authorities.

(b) Annual Review questionnaire, on which work is already in progress, will be adapted to take account of special features of MC70 and notably of fact that the latter sets out requirements for period 1958-1963. Countries will therefore be invited in usual way to supply full data relating to conventional three year covered by annual reviews but at same time they will be invited as far as it may be practicable to give military, economic and financial information of a tentative and general nature, as well as information about their equipment plans, for fourth and fifth years of military planning contained in MC70.

The questionnaire will also cover plans for introduction of new weapons and other information necessary to enable 1958 Annual Review to serve as an instrument for implementation of MC70.

The questionnaire will be completed and issued as soon as possible and in any case not later than May 1.

5. Visiting teams would proceed to capitals during June and July. They would be accompanied, as on previous occasions, by members of international staff (but this year the international staff representatives would hope in particular to discuss with national experts the basic assumptions being used by countries in assessment of implications of MC70 in financial, economic and production fields).

6. Subject to timely arrival of replies to Annual Review questionnaire — these should reach Secretariat as early as possible in August — the preparation of military comments, recommendations and country studies would take place in accordance with normal practice during September and October. Country studies would set out to draw a comparison between defence programmes declared by countries and requirements of MC70 and to highlight such major problems as may arise for individual countries. To these studies there would be appended the provisional recommendations of international staff and recommendations of NATO military authorities covering both plans and qualitative improvements desired by NATO military authorities. Country studies and recommendations would serve as the main basis for country examinations, in order to pave the way for multilateral discussions both at these examinations and at the December ministerial meeting and as occasion may arise, for reconciliation between military authorities' requirements and national capabilities.

7. Examining sessions would be followed by preparation, on their sole responsibility, by international staff and NATO military authorities of a summary report (or country chapter) on each country, with recommendations finalized, if necessary, in light of examining sessions. Countries would be able to submit written comments on the chapter of which they are the subject. At same time, a general report (general chapter) would be prepared by international staff in cooperation with delegations and NATO military authorities, reviewing overall defence situation of the Alliance and recapitulating the main problems facing NATO countries within the framework of MC70.

8. During interval between examining sessions and normal ministerial meetings, governments would consider what further action, if any, they were able to take in the sense of the recommendations.

9. Annual Review report for 1958 would be considered at traditional Ministerial Meeting in December. Ministers would be invited to review the major implications of the report, to state further views of their governments vis-à-vis the major recommendations addressed to them, to establish force goals and finally to consider whether additional steps were required to deal with outstanding issues too urgent to await the 1959 Annual Review.

10. Committee also considered possibility of a meeting of Defence Ministers shortly before normal Ministerial Meeting with a view to preparing the ground for plenary session, especially where problems of reconciliation might be involved. Committee did not think it possible at present stage to decide whether such a meeting would be opportune, but considered that the matter should be kept open for decision in light of future developments.

11. Process of implementing of MC70 through 1958 Annual Review will place a considerable burden of work on countries, international staff and military authorities alike. It follows that only by strictest observation of timetable would it be possible to achieve timely completion of various stages which have been described above.

12. It is also highly desirable this year that there should be a more flexible approach to country examinations and a greater readiness on part of governments to make adjustments in light of discussions at examining sessions. Changes which have been proposed in proce-ture are directed to this end, and with a view to giving greater vitality to Annual Review and to opening the way for a greater degree of genuine multilateral discussion, and as required, of negotiation, than it has been possible to achieve in the past. Ends.

192.

DEA/50030-E-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 744

Paris, March 20, 1958

TOP SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 743 Mar 20.†

MEETING OF COUNCIL WITH MILITARY COMMITTEE — ITEM III

Item III, "Discussion of the Recommendations set out in MC70", gave rise to the sort of broadly based discussion on the paper as a whole which we had sought and in this respect exceeded our hopes. We were also gratified that, except for cursory statements by one or two representatives, e.g. the Greek and the Turk, no country sought to discuss its country breakdowns. In this telegram we will report schematically on the highlights of a wide-ranging discussion marked by both spontaneity and a sense of responsibility.

2. General — All representatives expressed appreciation to the military authorities for MC70 and congratulated the Military Committee on resolving differences in a businesslike manner and on presenting an agreed document to Council.

3. The Strategic Concept — The UK representative said MC70 was a faithful translation of the political directive; he was confident that his government would agree with the strategic concept. We noted with satisfaction that we have an agreed view on this from the military authorities; we were hopeful that there would now be no disagreement in the Alliance about it or about the forces needed to implement it. The Turks and Belgian representatives explicitly agreed with the general parts of MC70. No representative questioned the strategic concept in MC70 as presented to Council.

4. The Question of Limited War — As reported in our telegram 743 disagreement in the Military Committee over definition of "local hostile actions" etc. was circumvented by deleting the relevant paragraph (paragraph 9 of Section IV) and turning the problem back to the Standing Group; similarly, the opening part of paragraph 10 was cut so as to remove any suggestion of interpretation of such phrases as "local attacks."

5. Nevertheless this debate was carried on in Council. The Norwegian representative predicted the Standing Group would have the greatest difficulty in defining the phrases and thought this just as well. The German representative asked why the disputed paragraph had been deleted; the Chairman of the Standing Group replied that the definitions attempted came perilously close to "limited war," and that there is no concept of limited war in NATO.

6. The Turkish representative wanted the phrases defined. Evidently referring to paragraph 13 of Section II, he thought the references to "hostile local actions" etc. should not be under the heading "actions other than general war" because they might entail general war. No country should be asked to have faith in such nebulous terms. Does NATO intend to countenance a situation in which an aggressor, having gained a local objective, could arrange an end to hostilities?

7. The Italian representative asked whether the military authorities excluded the possibility of local war or whether they thought that it would automatically lead to total war. The Chairman of the Standing Group replied that the military posture of NATO was such that if a local incident occurred, defensive arrangements would at once be brought into play to contain it. If it were contained, it was possible that the incident might be localised. However, if the USSR brought into action further forces in support of the initial local incident and/or took aggressive military measures elsewhere, it was likely that the incident would develop into all-out war.

8. The Italian representative said his authorities were alarmed at the financial burden which MC70 was likely to impose. He did not believe governments would be willing to increase their defence budgets materially and considered it advisable for the Council to undertake an early study of the financial implications.

9. The German representative envisaged higher expenditures both direct and indirect, the latter arising from the need for greater mobility and readiness. Had the Military Committee any ideas on the financing of MC70? What were their views on common financing? Did they envisage economies through priorities?

10. The Standing Group representative denied the military authorities' competence with respect to how to finance MC70. They had simply come up with minimum requirements, bearing in mind the need for "austerity." They admit their requirements will place a greater burden on national budgets (and?) Council would have to decide about common financing.

11. SACEUR intervened to stress that savings in manpower offset increased equipment costs and to suggest that MC70 would cost less than simple implementation of MC48 would have cost. He did not pretend, however, that he could discharge his task at cheap cost. When pressed for an estimate of the increase over present costs he recalled his "educated guess" in relation to his own force requirements study, of a 10-15 percent increase in national defence budgets by 1963 over 1957-58.

12. The UK representative commended the military authorities for producing a plan which, while "it was not distorted by introduction of economic and financial factors," should allow NATO a reasonable balance between armed strength and economic health. He remarked pointedly that economic disaster in NATO would suit the Soviets much better than open war.

13. Listing the Heavy Tasks Imposed by MC70 — Maintaining the nuclear deterrent, guarding against both accidental and pre-meditated war, matching the submarine threat, countering massive Soviet armies, keeping up aircraft while developing missiles, etc, guarding against local hostile actions near the frontiers, and maintaining a flexible supply system to survive a nuclear bombardment — he agreed this was a minimum demand but asked what it would cost. He personally thought an Italian estimate of a 25 percent increase might be low.

14. The UK representative thought the Defence Ministers needed to study priorities among the requirements of MC70. They should also seek economies through the proposals on integration and standardization, especially balance of forces, and through arms cooperation. They should examine the financial problem posed by keeping forces at full readiness. Without attempting to reach decisions on matters affecting governments as a whole, they should produce guidance along these lines for the Annual Review Committee in working out implementation of MC70 in the course of the year.

15. We said generally that we hoped the Defence Ministers would have a useful and productive preliminary exchange of views which would afford guidance for the Annual Review process looking toward the Ministerial Meeting. We warned, however, that priorities sometimes involve low-priority items going by the board and we thought ministers should not address themselves substantially to force requirements until there had been a thorough examination of financial and economic implications. This should be done first in the Annual Review.

16. We said the military authorities could usefully examine areas where economies could be effected without militating against the force requirements — e.g. balanced collective forces (important for Canada), rationalization of higher command, and simplification of the command and command reporting systems, which are still based on the Lisbon goals.

17. The French representation expressed views on costs in the context of the recommendation that Council accept the country breakdowns as guidance for the 1958 Annual Review. Asserting that some delegations had expressed reserves on the recommendations addressed to them, he said the French defence budget is limited and carries burdens which cannot be reduced or forecast. The French government will want, before taking a stand on the role assigned it, to make a detailed study and participate in multilateral discussion designed to decide, by the end of the year, the tasks to be taken on by all. The French representative agreed that the Defence Ministers should study such matters as common production and standardization and integration with a view to seeking economies and thought priorities, at least in the sense of speed of implementation, should be considered.

18. The Belgian representative, as reported elsewhere, wanted a Secretariat cost estimate before the Defence Ministers' Meeting.

19. The USA representative opposed this proposal for the same reasons we object to it. He did not rule out priorities but thought economic growth would help to solve some economic and financial problems.

20. Asked for his opinion on priorities, the Standing Group representative said they would not make much difference in the force tables and was generally not in favour of them. They would cause commanders to have to rework their studies. He would prefer the practice in national governments whereby, if the civil side decline to provide the full resources required by the military to carry out their assigned task, the latter advise on the defence posture possible and point out the risks involved. (We imagined SACEUR was set to intervene again at this juncture but, if so, he restrained himself.)

21. Acceptance of Recommendations — The Netherlands representative urged that the recommendations be accepted at an early date, preferably before the Defence Ministers Conference. He was supported by the Greek representative and, in principle, by the Turkish, Belgian and USA representatives. Both the latter, however, were doubtful of the proposed timing. The USA representative stressed that, in adopting the principles of MC70, it should not be necessary to go behind its philosophy which is firmly rooted in the political directive. The Secretary General thought that, when Council accepts the philosophy of MC70, it should understand what would be involved in putting the philosophy into practice.

22. Defence Ministers Conference — General Foulkes said we consider that the defence ministers should thoroughly discuss MC70 and give agreement to the military concept. This would ensure that the Defence Ministers would all speak with the same voice on this at home. He thought that, if the Defence Ministers are thus persuaded of the value of MC70, they will be assisted in obtaining support from governments and parliaments. While the country breakdowns are to be dealt with through the Annual Review, the Defence Ministers should agree on the strategic concept and the overall force requirements.

23. The Secretary General felt the Council should continue the discussion with a view to preparing for the Defence Ministers Meeting.

24. Stockpiling — In the course of our main intervention we lent support to the new emphasis on stockpiling in MC70 and in SACLANT's briefing. We said that for about three years the Agricultural Supplies and Industrial Raw Materials Committees have been conducting useful studies but, now that North American ports might be put out of action at the outset of war, stockpiling should be considered again in Council. We asked that the staff prepare a paper.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

193.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 749

Paris, March 20, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your Tel DL-280 Mar 19.†

NATO COUNCIL MEETING: ANNUAL REVIEW AND MC70

The Standing Group representative said that the Standing Group had examined CM(58)49, the report to Council on the handling of MC70 through the 1958 Annual Review, and considered it feasible to use the Annual Review procedure for implementing MC70. Consequently the Standing Group agrees with the main conclusions in the paper. At the same time they would not wish at this stage to take a definite stand on the detailed procedure outlined in paragraphs 5 to 10; on these aspects they would prefer to wait until after the Defence Ministers Meeting. This, however, would not hold up the Annual Review procedure because this could go ahead commencing with the issuance of the provisional guidance and the questionnaire.

2. The Chairman of the Annual Review Committee said that the Committee had conducted an extensive examination of the Canadian proposal and that, after discussion and as a result of the flexible attitude of the Canadian Delegation with regard to one aspect of its proposal relating to a fall ministerial meeting, the Committee had drawn up CM(58)49 which recognizes that the 1958 Annual Review, with certain modifications, can be used to implement MC70. Commenting on the statement by the Standing Group representative, he pointed out that the document had had to be drawn up at a time when the military authorities had not fully considered all the details. He noted, however, that the details are not of immediate importance and can easily be finalized following the Defence Ministers Meeting. (He identified these parts as paragraphs 6 and 7). He proposed that Council accept the document in principle, leaving aside questions of detail in the part of the paper on which the military authorities have not yet firm views. This would provide the Committee with a solid basis for getting on with its work.

3. This proposal was accepted by Council.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

194.

PCO

Rapport du ministre de la Défense nationale Report by Minister of National Defence

CDC DOCUMENT NO. 1-58

[Ottawa], April 23, 1958

TOP SECRET

REPORT OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE ON NATO DEFENCE MINISTERS'
MEETING 15-16-17 APRIL 1958

1. The atmosphere of the conference was cordial and friendly. One of its chief benefits was that it gave Ministers of Defence an opportunity to meet and exchange views both in the meetings and outside them. Several ministers expressed satisfaction with this aspect of the conference.

2. Although there was an agreement on one point of substance, the agenda called for no substantive decisions and it seemed to be well understood that the main objectives were to exchange views on MC 70 — “Minimum Essential Force Requirements 1958-63” — and give impetus to it, as well as to review progress in related defence fields while laying the ground for further co-operative measures. These objectives were achieved and while no major problems were tackled, neither did any serious difficulties come to a head.

3. A substantial achievement was the unanimous support given under Item I — “Minimum Essential Force Requirements 1958-63” — MC 70 — to basic NATO strategy, and the declared readiness of ministers to accept for planning purposes the total force requirements of MC 70 and the MC 70 country breakdowns as guidance for the 1958 annual review, although a few raised questions or made observations with respect to the breakdowns applying to their particular countries. It is assumed that the recommendations in MC 70 will now come before Council for approval at an early date.⁷

4. The one agreement on a point of substance was reached under Item II — “Co-ordination of Defence.” The Ministers approved a proposal introduced on behalf of Western European Union by Mr. Sandys, that “any group of nations in NATO, such as the Western European Union, should be encouraged to formulate collective plans for cooperation in defence research, development and production; that such plans should be presented to NATO through the Secretary-General; and that proper provision should be made to give any interested NATO country, which can make a positive contribution, the opportunity to associate itself with any such plans.” In order to facilitate further immediate discussions within the Standing Armaments Committee of Western European Union, the ministers approved this proposal.

5. The briefings on MC 70 which opened the conference were of high quality. These briefings gave ministers an opportunity to listen to General Lauris Norstad, Supreme Allied Commander Europe (SACEUR) and to Admiral Jerauld Wright, Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic (SACLANT), and to discuss points with them.

⁷ Le Conseil de l'OTAN a approuvé les recommandations contenues dans le MC-70 le 1^{er} mai 1958. NATO Council approved the recommendations contained in MC70 on May 1, 1958.

6. The highlight of SACEUR's briefing was his quiet but forceful plea for the fullest possible implementation of MC 70. He warned that any significant deficiencies might mean that commanders would have to assess their assigned tasks to see if they can carry them out with the forces likely to be available. He praised what NATO had done so far and complimented governments on the degree of co-operation they have achieved in building NATO defence but went on to say frankly that he hoped this conference would not be marked, as have others in the past, by a series of caveats and reservations.

7. Another aspect of SACEUR's briefing, on which he placed great emphasis was his cogent and reasonable presentation of the case for a strong shield. He developed at some length his thesis that the shield is important as completing the deterrent. Assuming that the retaliatory forces will continue to be capable of performing their function, he believes that resort to a general war as the result of a deliberate decision to provoke it is most unlikely and that the great danger of a World War III springs from a possible mistake in judgment. An incident on NATO's eastern border (either as the result of an accident or as the result of a deliberate decision to provoke) would face NATO with the painful need to decide to use force first in order to redress the situation, if the incident took place where NATO forces were non-existent or weak. If, on the other hand, NATO forces are strong, there must be some period of delay, some decision to use force against NATO by the other side. Since this would involve consideration of the effects of the whole deterrent, the shield strongly discourages such dangerous incidents and at the same time gives NATO some military and political flexibility with regard to actual use of the ultimate deterrent. At the same time SACEUR warned that he was not suggesting that limited war is a likelihood in this critical period — or even that it is a possibility; indeed, he thought limiting a war highly unlikely under present conditions. But his conviction is that, if we do not have the means of dealing with a less than ultimate incident with less than ultimate force, we invite the occurrence of such incidents.

8. When advocating more closely integrated air defences SACEUR stated that, in the future, the military authorities would also be making recommendations for some Allied control and responsibility in peacetime in other fields. He wished to avoid, in certain fields, the need for passing from national to allied control at the time when forces have to be engaged.

9. Admiral Wright delivered a long and impressive lecture on the importance of sea power to NATO in the age of nuclear warfare, and argued vigorously for implementation of MC 70 as it affects naval forces in particular and the alliance in general. One point he developed in greater detail than in previous briefings was the "tremendous destruction" which both European and North American ports will face in the event of war. This, he said, meant scaling convoy schedules down from what we consider is the maximum. Also, reduction of available supplies in North America consequent on nuclear bombing and curtailed distribution facilities in Europe requires flexibility in K-Day (the day convoys start); this will probably be between thirty and sixty days after D-Day, perhaps later, depending on the effect of the nuclear exchange.

10. In the discussion with the Commanders, Mr. Sandys was persistent in seeking clarification from SACLANT regarding his assumption of a relatively prolonged war at sea, and from SACEUR regarding the usefulness, in relation to a short, sharp land war, of forces other than D-Day forces. SACLANT offered no further remarks on the questions.

SACEUR, after recalling the agreed assumptions in MC 14/2 regarding the two phases of a war; namely:

(a) a period of violent large-scale organized fighting of a comparatively short duration, not likely to exceed thirty days, the first few days of which would be characterized by the greatest intensity of nuclear exchange;

(b) a longer period of indeterminate duration for reorganization, resupply and the accomplishment of necessary military tasks leading to a conclusion of the war;

said that the force requirements of MC 70 would be the same even if one could assume the war would be over in less than thirty days. Mr. Sandys found SACEUR's answer somewhat more convincing than SACLANT's theory that the war at sea may last several months after a decision had been reached on land.

11. Surprisingly, Mr. Sandys directed a question to General Norstad about disengagement. He asked for his views as to the purely military aspects of disengagement in the centre of Europe. The reply was to the effect that any substantial thinning out of forces could destroy NATO's defensive strength, unless there were some proper and enforceable system of control and inspection that would guarantee that the security balance remained the same. Without this it would be possible for the other side to return in force in a matter of hours or days, while our troops would take considerably longer, perhaps eternity if they were across the Atlantic. Moreover, history shows that in any sensitive region, whenever there is disengagement there is almost immediately a battle as a consequence of the vacuum and some situation being created in it and someone moving in. He would only wish to look at disengagement in the context of the guarantee he had mentioned, that is, of "a proper political form" and adequate inspection and control. His concluding remarks left the clear impression that he felt the weight of argument was against "thinning out" as a practicable form of disengagement at this time.

12. I asked SACLANT if he could provide information regarding Soviet guided missile submarines and specifically whether he considered they would be deployed into the Atlantic before the land war began. SACLANT gave a very general summary of Soviet guided missile submarine capabilities but did not produce any firm figures.

13. Mr. Spaak introduced the item on MC 70 with a statement strongly urging the need for effective, modernized NATO forces in the face of Soviet military progress and continued refusal to reach a general agreement on disarmament. He recognized that the financial cost would be high and said the financial and economic implications of MC 70 should be examined very carefully in the course of the annual review. Also, co-ordination of NATO defences should be examined as a possible means of partly off-setting the need for higher defence expenditures.

14. Mr. Staf of the Netherlands spoke most vigorously in favour of early adoption and full implementation of MC 70. He also thought that an ad hoc group of experts or the international staff, or the two in concert, might analyse data on modern weapons and personnel requirements and examine the economic and financial implications of MC 70, as a means of assisting governments in adopting and implementing MC 70. Mr. Spaak indicated this proposal should be considered by Council in due course.

15. Mr. McElroy (USA) supported MC 70 as a sound basis for NATO planning and believed the forces the United States would indicate in the annual review would basically meet MC 70 requirements for 1959, 1960 and 1961. He spoke in favour of balanced collective forces being worked out through the annual review process and said that, within the scope of what MC 70 asks, his government would be prepared to consider specific recommendations from the NATO military authorities for adjustments in the number and types of units to be committed by the United States to NATO in future years. The object would be to permit other nations to make a more effective contribution by specializing. He indicated United States mutual aid would remain at about the same level as last year.

16. Mr. Sandys' statement was generally constructive. As expected, he gave general support to NATO strategy but drew attention to the probable cost of implementing MC 70 and urged the establishing of priorities.

17. All other ministers gave general support to MC 70. The observations on country breakdowns were briefly as follows. France could determine only at the end of the year what her contribution would be and her undertakings would be subject to possible modifications resulting from "the political and military situation." Norway doubted if she could improve both quality and quantity and she shared the United Kingdom in desire for priorities but went a step further by suggesting that "the extent and on what conditions the force goals of MC 70 can be met by member countries" should first be examined. Denmark frankly doubted that the defence budget could be increased by the amount necessary to reach MC 70 force goals.

18. Germany, a rather special case, seems to have special problems. Mr. Strauss gave broad support to MC 70 and NATO strategy, in particular the emphasis on modern weapons. However, he thought the equipment of certain German forces with these weapons, as called for in MC 70, would raise manpower and financial problems. He proposed for future discussion:

(a) What is the most rational form for developing and producing the requirement of missiles and equipment? and

(b) What new methods of common financing can be found in order to enable the individual states to fulfil requirements placed upon them?

He said the provision of certain missiles such as Matador on German territory would also raise manpower and financial problems, and technical problems as well. He indicated Germany would do its best to bring its planning in line with MC 70 but might have modifications to propose.

19. On a number of occasions Mr. Zorlu of Turkey raised the question of definition of "local hostile actions" which appeared in MC 70. In his view this could be interpreted as a form of limited war where Turkey might be left by herself. He referred to the common border with the USSR and the difficulties with Syria.

20. The briefing on missiles covered all important types, including Intermediate Range Ballistic Missiles. It was noteworthy that one was left with an impression of the high cost and large numbers of trained personnel involved in their production. However, the ostensible object was to interest European governments in joint production of missiles.

21. Under Item III the most important progress report was that of General Norstad on Intermediate Range Ballistic Missile sites and stockpiles of nuclear warheads. Because of the recent security leaks, General Norstad made only a general report on progress in negotiations with France and other interested NATO nations.

22. In the matter of stockpiles of atomic warheads, General Norstad reported that a general overall plan had been worked out and transmitted to the subordinate Allied Commanders for them to fill in the details. These Commanders had had preliminary discussions with authorities in several of the NATO countries. Details which the subordinate commanders had to provide related particularly to the number of the stockpiles required and their specific locations. They were required to report by the end of April. No formal action will be taken by SACEUR until these reports are received.

[GEORGE PEARKES]

195.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 28, 1958

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW: CANADIAN MEMORANDUM

Each year NATO undertakes an extensive "Annual Review" of the defence efforts of member countries based on replies to a questionnaire drawn up by the Annual Review Committee. The purpose of the Annual Review is to enable the force recommendations made by the military authorities to each country to be considered in the light of financial and economic factors so that force goals can be agreed at the December meeting of the Council.

This year the Annual Review has assumed a particular importance due to the Council's decision last May to use it as a vehicle for implementing the Military Committee's Minimum Essential Forces report (MC70). This report contains far reaching recommendations which would involve quite substantial revisions in the national defence plans of member countries.

The attached memorandum which constitutes our reply to the Annual Review Questionnaire and which was approved by the Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions on July 25, is in five parts. The first part contains a General Statement of Canadian Defence Policy which summarizes the other parts of the memorandum. You may therefore feel that it is not necessary to read Parts 2 to 5† which are voluminous and which are in line with the General Statement.

There are three important recommendations in the Military Guidance to Canada this year. These involve equipping our brigade in Germany with tactical missiles, the provision of an additional aircraft carrier and the acceptance of new "strike" role for our Air Division in Europe which would involve equipping it with a new aircraft. Paragraph 7 of the General Statement implies Canadian acceptance of the first recommendation; paragraph 11 on the other hand indicates that we will not provide an additional carrier; paragraph 13 indicates that the question of re-equipping the Air Division together with its serious financial implications is being given further study. I am satisfied that it is not possible or wise to be more forthcoming in our reply to the Questionnaire pending Cabinet decisions on these important questions.

I should be grateful if you would indicate whether you approve the General Statement contained in Part 1 of the attached memorandum and agree that the Canadian reply may be submitted to the Annual Review Committee.⁸ Your Colleagues, the Ministers of National

⁸ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
OK SE S[mith]

Defence, Finance and Defence Production, are also being asked for their approval of the Canadian memorandum.⁹

D.V. LEP[AN]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

Memorandum

TOP SECRET

CANADIAN REPLY TO ARQ(58)
PART I — GENERAL STATEMENT

1. The constant aim of Canada's defence policy has been to provide for the security of Canada by means of collective arrangements within the NATO Alliance and support of the objectives of the United Nations organization.

2. As the primary objective recognized by Canada and her Allies is to prevent the outbreak of a third world war, Canada's defence forces have been designed to form an effective part in the combination of forces of NATO constituting the best possible deterrent under present conditions. Canada has always recognized that the inherent advantage in collective defence within the framework of the NATO Alliance is that the best combination of forces can be provided along the most economical lines, and therefore smaller countries in the Alliance such as Canada are not required to strive for complete and balanced forces but rather can concentrate on the provision of those elements which constitute their particular needs and which can be most effectively built up and maintained.

3. As a member in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Canada will continue to contribute and steer her defence programme towards producing a practical realization of the aims of this organization in close cooperation with other partners of this Alliance.

4. At the end of 1958 Canada's M-Day Land Forces contribution will, in accordance with the force goals of the 1957 Annual Review, remain at one infantry brigade group in Europe and two infantry brigade groups in Canada which, together, comprise the 1st Canadian Division. A third armoured regiment has now been activated and an armoured regiment has been included in each brigade group.

5. NATO strategy has as its primary aim the prevention of war and to this end the allies have concentrated on building up deterrent forces of such magnitude that a potential aggressor will pause in reflection of the outcome of certain retaliatory measures that would be taken against him in the event of all-out-war. The United States Strategic Air Command is the primary deterrent of these forces and as a result of cooperation between Canada and the United States, the air defence for this deterrent or retaliatory force will continue to be a primary objective of the joint North American Air Defence Command. Canada has programmed the development of a new interceptor aircraft and is considering the procure-

⁹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

31 July DND Mr. Pearkes agrees with minor amendments to para. 7 of general statement ie replace "in the next few months" by "in the near future." He does not insist on final paragraph on Food Bank if others do not wish it (telephone call from Rothschild). PCO Fin DDP & we don't want it. 31 July DDP Mr. Green approves (telephone call from Milligan). [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

ment of a semi-automatic ground environment and ground-to-air missiles as a further contribution to the protection of the deterrent forces based on North America.

6. In regard to the recommendations resulting from the 1957 Annual Review, Canada has not accepted the recommendation to provide an Honest John launcher; however Canada is giving consideration to providing a ground-to-ground missile suitable to the support of its land forces, and it is expected that a decision on the type of missile to be provided will be made in the next few months.

7. The RCN, in studying the methods of achieving mobile support for the maintenance of RCN forces, is giving consideration to the provision of one ocean-going tanker/supply ship by 1962 and some mobile repair facilities by 1961. Consideration will also be given to the provision of an additional two tanker/supply ships at a later date. Further provision is being made for the dispersal of stocks for main bases.

8. It is planned to accelerate the introduction of helicopters into A[nti-]S[ubmarine] W[arfare] forces and to this end the RCN is conducting trials to determine the feasibility and worth of operating helicopters from small ships.

9. SACEUR's combat effectiveness report, 1957, continues to emphasize the fact that the concentration of aircraft on most airfields is still too great and it takes too long to react to an alert. In view of the decision of the North Atlantic Council to improve the location of air units and thus disperse these profitable atomic targets, dispersal airfields have been allotted in Europe for use by the RCAF and the Canadian Government has recently completed negotiations for the use of these airfields.

10. As it is planned to eventually change the Air Division role from the present air defence task, it is not Canada's intention to increase the all-weather forces but to maintain the present strength of four squadrons as long as they have an operational capability. The future role of the Air Division is now under active consideration.

11. In line with the outcome of the review of the Canadian defence programme outlined in the Canadian reply to ARQ 57, it is noted that Canada's naval expansion programme has resulted in further replacement of obsolescent ships in the Canadian Navy by the new construction anti-submarine escort and it is also noted that during 1957 a new type Canadian-built maritime patrol aircraft, the Argus, has been introduced into the Royal Canadian Air Force. These forces have greatly improved the quality of D-Day anti-submarine force effectiveness.

12. With regard to logistic support of Canadian forces in Europe, Canada has accepted a sixty-day war reserve for the brigade in Europe and a thirty-day war reserve for the balance of the 1st Canadian Infantry Division plus a thirty-day formation operational reserve for the entire division. Arrangements have been completed with the United Kingdom for the storage in continental Europe for the first thirty-day war reserves of the brigade group assigned to SACEUR and these reserves are now in position.

13. The Canadian Government has reviewed the recommendations of the 1957 Annual Review regarding the most expeditious movement of the balance of the 1st Canadian Infantry Division to Europe after M-day. Negotiations have commenced with U.S. authorities to determine what assistance can be provided to carry out this movement.

196.

DEA/50104-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 28, 1958

NATO COMMON INFRASTRUCTURE REQUIREMENTS 1958-63

Attached is a memorandum drawn up by the Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence Questions which outlines current NATO infrastructure problems and recommends general Canadian policy guidance. It was agreed in the Panel that this memorandum should be submitted to you and your colleagues of the Departments of Finance and National Defence for approval.

Infrastructure is a word taken over from the French who use it to describe the fixed equipment of railroads, i.e.: the track and right of way, in order to differentiate it from the mobile units, i.e.: rolling equipment. In NATO the term is used in the same way to distinguish between the fixed installations required by armed forces and their mobile equipment. NATO common infrastructure refers to those fixed installations which, because they are used by the forces of more than one country, are financed in common by the Alliance as a whole, according to a cost sharing formula.

Up to now NATO common infrastructure has consisted mainly of airfields, pipelines, and communications systems. Now there is a further requirement for installations of the missile age, such as missile launching sites and nuclear storage facilities, which must be constructed soon to enable the deployment of missiles delivered by the United States. There is, therefore, some urgency about taking decisions on the common financing of these installations.

Obviously there are complications in this subject which cannot be summarized completely in a short paper but the attached memorandum is, I think, clear and self-explanatory. I am in full agreement with the suggested Canadian policy outlined in paragraph 13 for the guidance of our delegation and I recommend it for your approval.¹⁰

D.V. LEP[AN]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

NoteMemorandum

SECRET

NATO INFRASTRUCTURE REQUIREMENTS 1958-63

The acceptance of MC-70 (The Minimum Essential Forces Requirements 1958-63) for planning purposes by the NATO Council last May has faced member countries with

¹⁰ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
OK SE S[mith]

difficult and costly problems of implementing its recommendations. The new Force requirements have given rise to extensive new capital or "infrastructure" requirements, many of which will be proposed for common financing. Since 1951 NATO has had a common infrastructure programme under which fixed installations such as airfields, pipelines, communications systems, etc., which are used in common by a number of NATO Allies, have been financed in common. Canada has contributed to these programmes according to cost sharing formulas which differed from slice (annual programme) to slice, but averaged about 6%.

2. The total funds committed by member countries for common infrastructure from 1951 up to and including 1960 amounts to $2,600 million, of which Canada's obligation amounts to $158.5 million. Of the total amount, $2,360 million has been programmed to the end of 1958 and $138 million has been set aside for contingencies, leaving unallocated some $101 million for 1959 and 1960.

3. The unallocated amount of $101 million left in the Four Year Programme must be compared to the Military Committee's estimate (MC32/11) of the cost of new infrastructure requirements for 1958/63 which is of the order of $1,176 million. Even this large estimate could be substantially increased when more detailed costing takes place. Also, a review of 1962/63 force requirements could involve additional infrastructure requirements. The possibility of improved types of IRBM's in 1960 and an anti-missile missile becoming operational in 1963, and the extension of common financing (favoured by several governments) to air defence, logistic support, the standardization in production of weapons, etc., could also increase the cost of commonly financed infrastructure.

4. On the other hand the infrastructure programmes already approved could well be curtailed to some extent, releasing funds to meet the new requirements. SACEUR has stated that 29 programmed airfields in the Central Region alone are excess to 1958-63 requirements.

5. Although for the above reasons, the Military Committee's estimate of $1176 millions as the amount of additional funds required can only be regarded as a tentative one, it serves to illustrate the potential financial implications for Canada of agreeing on the basis of our present percentage share to the common financing of the new requirements. If new commitments of this magnitude are ultimately approved, and the unexpended portion of our present commitments taken into account, Canada's total outstanding commitments would amount to $161 million. This figure is almost the same as our total commitments since the inception of infrastructure in 1951 of which only 40% have been discharged at an average annual rate of $10 million as detailed at Annex I.† If the rate of physical implementation of the projects is doubled, the annual Canadian expenditure could reach $20 million for both the now approved programmes and the new proposals. The inclusion of completely new items in programmes, or even more rapid progress in completion would increase the demands on Canada. Experience suggests, however, that there is little possibility of annual expenditures exceeding $20 million a year unless, of course, Canada's rate of contribution was significantly increased.

6. In presenting the new infrastructure requirements, the Military Committee distinguished between the two classes of facilities. In one class are conventional facilities already eligible for common financing under the current definition of the term, required for the further development or completion of conventional infrastructure projects already programmed. The other class is detailed at Annex II and includes facilities for new categories of weapons not previously programmed, such as nuclear storage facilities, surface-to-air missile sites and IRBM sites. These facilities are not now eligible for common financing and the council must decide whether or not the principle of common financing is to be extended to them. The requirements are summarized by broad class as follows:

	1959-1960	1961-1963 (Million dollars)	Total
Eligible for common financing as now defined.	215.6	112.0	327.6
Eligibility for common financing not yet determined	364.0	366.8	730.8
Contingencies	64.4	53.2	117.6
Total	644.0	532.0	1176.0

7. To implement any portion of this programme, additional funds beyond the amounts already committed by member governments for the period to 1960 will be required. However, before there has been an opportunity to examine thoroughly, and set precise limits on the new programme and to arrive at an agreed basis for funding it, member governments are being asked to decide in principle on the eligibility for common financing of a number of the new items scheduled for completion prior to 1960. A positive decision in this regard will, in turn, set the pattern for completing and further developing these facilities subsequent to 1960. It would also have a bearing on the decision which must be taken in future on the proposals put forward at the meeting of NATO Heads of Governments in Paris, December, 1957, to extend the common financing of European defence requirements beyond present confines into such areas as logistic support and an integrated air defence which so far have been national responsibilities.

8. On the basis of statements made by various countries, it has been the view of Canadian officials, that additional funds to meet the new requirements under the present concepts and cost sharing principles of common financing, would not be too readily forthcoming from European NATO members.

9. When Council is ultimately confronted with the need to seek additional commitments from member governments to finance the new requirements, a number of these countries can be expected to seek a reduction in their percentage cost share of contributions on the grounds that the rising costs of the non-infrastructure elements of the new weapons systems (i.e. the operations and maintenance expenditures and the cost of the weapons themselves), which under present concepts are borne nationally, have placed heavy competing demands on their defence budgets. Similar arguments may be put forward to justify the extension of common financing to the more costly aspects of the new weapons systems which, under present concepts, would not qualify as infrastructure.

SUGGESTED CANADIAN ATTITUDE

10. The Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence Questions considered the position which Canada might adopt towards this complex infrastructure problem.

11. It was considered that it would not be feasible for Canada to take an inflexible stand against expanding the common infrastructure programme to include the new requirements. An attitude of this kind would indicate a reluctance on Canada's part to assist in the implementation of the concepts in MC-70, and would be interpreted by other member countries as evidence that Canada was seeking to withdraw from her commitments in Europe and would, as a result, give rise to irritation with Canada out of all proportion to the financial obligation involved.

12. On the other hand, for Canada to promote actively the implementation of the new military concepts in Europe through common financing, would imply a willingness to participate liberally in the financing of an expanded programme and would probably result in Canada having to accept a substantially increased cost share of the programme. This was regarded as an unacceptable course to pursue at a time when Canada will, within its defence budget, have to assume increasing responsibilities for implementing the new concepts in the Canada-United States region.

13. In the circumstances the Panel recommends that our Delegation should be instructed to adopt a relatively passive role on the size of the programme to be financed in common, leaving the onus of the negotiations to the United States and the European nations. At the same time, our Delegation would be instructed, if Ministers approve:

(a) to make it known that, while Canada is prepared to agree to include the new requirements in the infrastructure programme insofar as they can be regarded as falling within the present definition and criteria of NATO Common Infrastructure, Canada's percentage contribution to future programmes would not be raised above the present 6.16%.

(b) to agree to the programming of the new requirements only on the assurance that the host and user countries are prepared to finance the non-infrastructure elements of the projects concerned. This would involve assurances (1) that user nations will have the weapons to deploy on the facilities concerned and will also assume the usual financial responsibilities for the operation and maintenance of the facilities and (2) that host European countries will assume the ordinary host country responsibilities, i.e. the provision of land, local utilities, access roads, etc.

14. By following this course we would be limiting our financial commitments to reasonable proportions without taking a position which could be interpreted as a withdrawal of support for European defence or obstructing the implementation of the concepts set out in MC-70.

197.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2511

Paris, October 18, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2510 Oct 18.†

Repeat CIS(L) (Information).

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW — QUESTIONS ON CANADA

Following is final list of prepared questions on Canada which we have just received in advance copy form from International Staff:

Question 1 — Comment: International Staff has made a study of defence expenditures needed by Canada to meet NATO military authorities' requirements for period covered by Annual Review, on assumption that mutual aid will be continued to Canada's allies at its present level. This study suggests that an increase in defence expenditures of the general magnitude of 5 percent over level of expenditures in 1958/59 will probably be necessary in 1959/60 and beyond. International Staff estimates that for 1959/60 this would involve an increase in defence appropriations of roughly 10 percent over level of appropriations for 1958/59, since special account resources have been used up this year.

Canadian economy is strong and prospects for further expansion seem good. Share of defence in total output, though still fairly high, has declined significantly in recent years and the defence effort does not seem to place an undue burden on the economy.

Questions: (a) Does Canada agree with International Staff's estimate of increase in defence appropriations and expenditures required in 1959/60 to meet NATO military authorities' requirements and to continue provision of aid at its present level?

(b) If so, is Canadian government willing to consider incurring these larger outlays in 1959/60 and subsequent years?

Question 2 — Comment: No information on mutual aid is given in Canadian reply beyond current fiscal year.

Questions: (a) Can any information yet be given by Canadian Delegation on total value and components of 1959/60 programme?

(b) What possibility is there of increasing amount of materiel directly procured?

(c) Does Canadian government consider that it will be possible to give general indications of programmes 2-3 years ahead, to assist recipient countries' planning?

Question 3 — Comment: The value of materiel delivered from Canadian mutual aid over the last four years and estimated for current year, compares to total of equipment deliveries and NATO aircrew training as follows:

	1954/55	1955/56	1956/57	1957/58	1958/59
	MILLIONS OF CANADIAN DOLLARS
Total of this,	248.0	164.5	119.5	107.9	108.5
direct procurement	25.1	15.8	8.1	3.1	1.5
Transfers from	170.0	97.7	63.7	78.5	98.0
Service stocks

According to these figures, the proportion of procurement of new material has been diminishing steadily from 10 percent in 1954/55 to 1 percent estimated for 1958/59. Proportion of equipment transferred from service stocks is planned to increase during same period from 69 percent to an estimated 90 percent. Questions of definition and valuation may however have obscured the real position: in particular the decision to change valuation of equipment taken from service stocks constituted before March 31, 1950 from its replacement value to cost of reconditioning, which took place with effect from 1956-57; and inclusion of new materiel, or materiel unused by Canadian forces, in category "transfers from service stocks," since some of this equipment seems to be held for a time in service stores.

Questions — (i) What is value of equipment from pre-1950 stocks at its present assessment included in 1956/57 1957/58 and 1958/59 totals?

(ii) What would be value of this equipment at replacement costs?

(iii) Within category "transfers from service stocks," what is proportion of up to date materiel, which having been stored with service stocks, may be categorised as materiel obtained from new procurement?

II. Army

Question 4 — Comment: In MC70 there is a requirement for one Honest John battalion (two launchers) in 1958 and one Little John battalion in 1961. In its memorandum Canada states: "... that the Honest John is not repeat not necessarily the best missile for Canadian land forces ... it is expected that a decision on type of missile to be provided will be made in near future."

Question — (a) Is Canadian delegation in a position to give information on type and number of missile units they intend to introduce in their M-day brigade in Europe?

(b) If so, can delegation provide dates at which it is estimated these missile units will become operational?

(c) Will these missiles be procured abroad or produced in Canada?

Question 5 — In view of the rather serious shortage of non-organic combat support units required for forces in centre region of Europe, do Canadian authorities have any plans for future provision of such non-organic support units for M-Day brigade in Europe?

Question 6 — Comment: In AR(57) recommendations the NATO military authorities recommended arranging the most expeditious movement of the balance of 1st Canadian Infantry Division to Europe after M-Day. It is noted that Canada has commenced negotiations with USA authorities to determine what transportation assistance can be provided. NATO military authorities are concerned that no repeat no firm plan has yet resulted from these negotiations.

Questions — (a) Can Canadian delegation furnish information on status of negotiations with USA regarding completion of arrangements to move balance of 1st Canadian Division to Europe promptly after M-Day?

(b) When do they expect such arrangements to be finalized?

Question 7 — Comment: Manning level of M-Day brigade group in Europe is planned to be maintained at 88 percent of war establishment instead of 100 percent recommended by NATO military authorities.

NATO military authorities are concerned with possible failure of a timely arrival of balance of 100 percent in an emergency due to disruption of transport and communications.

Question — Since balance of 100 percent manning is only about 700 men, would Canada comment on feasibility of remedying this deficiency?

III. Navy

Question 8 — Comment: In her memorandum (paragraph 13d of Navy section), Canada states that an allowance has been made of about one-sixth of total operational escorts under category B to provide for those ships undergoing refit and docking.

The number of escorts planned for 1961 earmarked for assignment to SACLANT is 24 in category A and 5 in category [unintelligible] which will be retained under national command these figures are 12 and 2 respectively. From this it appears that the number of category A escorts can hardly be increased without increasing total number of escorts.

Question — Do Canadian authorities contemplate any measures to increase number of ocean-going escorts in category A, earmarked for assignment to SACLANT, in order to meet 1963 requirement of 29 in MC70?

Question 9 — Comment: In her reply Canada states that since Canada is increasing category A availability of escorts and maritime aircraft, it is not repeat not possible to meet requirements of a second carrier. NATO military authorities note with regret this shortfall in a class of highly important ships. Moreover, there will be times when even the one carrier will not repeat not be available, such as during overhaul and maintenance. Since the same situation also occurs in other countries, the consequent reduction in anti-submarine warfare carrier strength actually available to SACLANT is a serious one.

Question — Can Canadian delegation say whether Canadian government is willing to reconsider provision of a second anti-submarine warfare carrier?

IV. Air Force

Question 10 — Comment: Expenditure on aircraft for last two years has been below estimates. In current year an increase is foreseen:

MILLION DOLLARS
1956/57		1957/58		1958/59
Estimate	Actual	Estimate	Actual	Estimate
234.1	217.5	244.1	223.1	278.7

It is not yet known what types of aircraft will be chosen for RCAF. It is nevertheless likely that RCAF will have to be extensively re-equipped in next few years. Aircraft (e.g. AWX for IDF) may be much more expensive.

Question — What developments does Canadian delegation foresee in costs of procurement for aircraft over next few years and what impact is this increase in cost likely to have on aircraft procurement programme and Air Force expenditures?

Question 11 — Comment: In AR(57) recommendations the NATO military authorities recommended: "Proceed at an early date to discuss with SHAPE future contribution of RCAF to Allied Command Europe, particularly as to their roles and mission."

In their memorandum Canadian authorities state that re-equipment of Air Division in Europe is being given further study.

Questions — (a) Could Canadian Delegation give an idea when this study will be completed?

(b) Is it possible to give now an indication as to Canada's intentions regarding modernizing present equipment and increasing the all-weather capability of the First Canadian Division?

(c) Would the decision of Canadian government to equip the Air Defence System of Canada with "BOMARC" missiles¹¹ have any effect on Canada's plans for modernization of RCAF units committed to Allied Command Europe?

¹¹ Voir le volume 25 (à paraître), chapitre premier./See Volume 25 (forthcoming), Chapter I.

198.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-846

Ottawa, October 24, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel No. 2511 of Oct 18.

Repeat CJS London, CJS Washington; CCOS, DM/DND (Information).

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW

We are setting out below for your guidance suggested replies to the prepared questions listed in your telegram under reference which were considered yesterday by the Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence Questions. We shall deal with some of the general considerations arising out of these questions in a separate telegram† to follow.

Questions 1(a) and 1(b): The level of defence appropriations in Canada is not fixed by direct reference to an arbitrary proportion of the gross national product. Rather, it is determined in relation to a considered judgment of the military requirements to be met. At the present time, as has already been stated, it is not possible to come to a firm conclusion on the extent and nature of these requirements. In determining the level of appropriations consistent with accepted defence needs, Canada has endeavoured in the past to achieve all economies possible within the limitations of defence commitments, and it is intended that, once the future defence requirements can be more clearly defined, the same considerations will apply.

The Canadian authorities are, at the present time, unable to agree with the International Staff's estimate that Canada's defence expenditures should be increased by about 5% in order to meet the requirements of the NATO military authorities and to continue our mutual aid programme at its present level. Before any indication can be given of even a rough order of magnitude of the defence expenditures necessary for 1959/60 and following years, it will be necessary to have more precise knowledge of the requirements; yet detailed requirements cannot be established until the present unresolved issues are settled. The re-equipment of the Canadian Air Division in Europe is still under study; the final decision on the development and production programme of the Arrow aircraft is yet to be taken; and the cost of installation of BOMARC, SAGE and reinforcements to the radar system are not known. The final outcome in financial terms in these and similar cases cannot fail to have a significant impact on the level of defence expenditures required in future years to provide for Canada's contributions to the defence of the Canada-United States region and of NATO-Europe. We feel that question 1(a) is perhaps premature in that there is not sufficient information at the present time to judge the accuracy of the conclusions reached by the International Staff on the future cost of our defence expenditures.

Question 2(a): Since the mutual aid programme for 1959-60 has not yet been developed we cannot indicate its total value or its components at this time. We can say, however, that the value of the programme will probably be somewhat below that of the current year.

Question 2(b): For the reasons stated in answer to question 2(a) it is not possible to forecast the content of next year's programme. However, it must be recognized that the category "direct procurement" has not been, in recent years, the main category under which directly procured equipment has appeared in the Canadian mutual aid programme. As the International Staff have recognized in framing question 3, an important proportion of the equipment included in the category "transfers from service stocks" has been equipment procured on order by the Canadian services but transferred as mutual aid. Further, any equipment in this category which is in effect drawn from service stocks is completely reconditioned to bring it up to the standard of new equipment.

Question 2(c): The position of Canada with regard to our inability to provide forecasts of defence appropriations beyond the present fiscal year is well known. Because of the interaction of content and the level of appropriations in determining the annual mutual aid programmes, we regret that we are unable to give any general indication of the content of future programmes.

Question 3: The mutual aid charges for pre-1950 stocks included in the 1956-57, 1957-58 and 1958-59 totals are as follows:

	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59
Navy	14,437	1,040,924	500,000
Army	9,359,098	17,816,784	4,000,000
Air Force	963,735	4,785,261	500,000
	10,337,270	23,642,969	5,000,000

An estimate of the original cost of the above equipment is as follows:

	1956-57	1957-58	1958-59
Navy	57,748	4,163,696	2,000,000
Army	37,436,392	71,267,136	16,000,000
Air Force	3,854,940	19,141,044	2,000,000
	41,349,080	94,571,876	20,000,000

It is difficult to be precise in answering the question on the proportion of service stocks classified as materiel obtained from new procurement, but we would consider the materiel procured subsequent to March 31, 1950 as being the equivalent of new equipment. (A rough estimate showing the proportion of used (reconditioned) to new equipment will be provided separately by the Department of National Defence, and will follow later.)

Question 4(a): A decision has been taken for the initial purchase of one battery composed of 4 Lacrosse launchers and associated fire control equipment and 12 missiles. One half of this battery will be provided for the support of the Canadian brigade group in Europe and the remainder used for training at the artillery school in Canada.

Question 4(b): No dates can be specified, but it is hoped that these missiles will be available to the brigade in Europe by 1961.

Question 4(c): It is intended that these weapons will be initially procured from United States sources.

Question 5: The army is now reviewing the plans for combat support of the brigade group in Europe in the light of the changes in organization of other NATO powers and the introduction of new weapons. Further reference to re-organization of the brigade group is shown in the answer to Question 7.

Question 6: Negotiations with the United States of America are being pursued actively regarding arrangements to move the balance of 1 Canadian Infantry Division to Europe promptly after M-Day.

It would be premature at this stage to set a date for the completion of these arrangements.

Question 7: The manning level of the brigade group was reduced two years ago from one hundred to ninety per cent, when the armoured squadron was increased to a full armoured regiment. This increase of armoured support greatly increased the combat effectiveness of the brigade group. It should be emphasized that the establishments of the units in the brigade group were laid down prior to 1951 on the basis of the units in the British war establishment for the large infantry division of 20,000. It will be realized that the discussions which have been held with the Commander-in-Chief Central Europe will produce in the near future a new organization for the basic division and the brigade group, especially tailored for operations in Europe. It is expected that, because of the introduction of many new weapons such as missiles, armoured carriers, etc., the manpower requirements as visualized in the old establishments of the division will be considerably revised. It is therefore not considered prudent to increase the number of other ranks now in the brigade group in Europe until this review of establishment has taken place. It is pointed out that the strength of the brigade group, even at ninety per cent, compares most favourably with other comparable NATO formations.

Question 8: It is intended to have all frigates and destroyers in commission by the end of 1959 and earmarked for NATO. A ship construction programme commencing in 1959 at the rate of two ships per year will provide anti-submarine warfare ships for commissioning in 1962-63. The older destroyers will be reaching the end of their useful life by 1962, having been in operational use over 20 years. As the new construction will be replacing them, the category "A" force goals are not expected to increase. It is suggested as the anti-submarine warfare capability of the fleet will be improved that it will have the effect of increasing category "A" forces. In any case, it should be noted that the deployment of anti-submarine warfare ships, all earmarked for NATO, to the east or west coasts is reviewed annually by the Chiefs of Staff Committee and it may be possible to meet the 1963 requirement of 29 category "A" escorts as recommended in MC 70.

Question 9: The provision of a second carrier for SACLANT does not carry the military judgment of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff. The question of a second carrier has already been discussed between the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff and SACLANT and between naval authorities and SACLANT's travelling team and they are well aware of our views in this regard. No further consideration will be given to SACLANT's request for a second carrier.

Present and Past Commitments to SACLANT:

As background information to support the Canadian case for not giving sympathetic consideration to SACLANT's ardent plea for Canada to provide a second carrier the following is a brief outline of our immediate past and present commitments to SACLANT.

D-Day availability of escort forces has steadily increased over the last five years from a total of 6 in 1953 to 24 category "A" ships in 1959. These latter ships include a number of new construction escorts which have improved the anti-submarine warfare capability of our forces immeasurably. Two fighter anti-submarine carrier aircraft squadrons have been replaced with new aircraft during the past five years.

In regard to our improved shore and sea-going facilities for the support of our forces earmarked for SACLANT, the RCN has provided mobile repair maintenance ships, improved and dispersed dockyard facilities, built new ammunition and stores depots, improved training and expanded communication facilities. These improved facilities, together with the cost of our new construction DDE and carrier aircraft, have resulted in an expenditure of over 1 1/2 billion dollars during the past five years.

SACLANT force goals for maritime aircraft have remained at 28 aircraft since 1954, but during this period the Lancaster aircraft has been progressively phased out and replaced by the Neptune and the new Argus aircraft. To support these new type aircraft at Greenwood and Summerside in the form of hangar construction, runway improvements, and bulk fuel storage, has resulted in an expenditure of $8,102,000 and to this figure should be added the cost of Neptune and Argus aircraft of 185 million dollars making a grand total of $193,102,000.

It should be emphasized that the modernization of the forces earmarked for SACLANT has involved a total expenditure over the past 6 years of 1.7 billion dollars, which would appear by any comparison to be a most important contribution.

Question 10: In line with the considerations outlined under question 1 above, and until more precise information is known regarding the type and quantity of the equipment with which the RCAF is to be re-equipped, it is not possible to estimate their future level of aircraft procurement outlays and RCAF expenditures in general.

Question 11(a): It is not expected that a decision regarding the re-equipment of the 1 Canadian Air Division will be taken in time to affect the present Annual Review.

Question 11(b): Canada does not intend to modernize present equipment nor increase the all-weather capability of 1 Air Division.

Question 11(c): This will depend entirely on the outcome of the study now being undertaken to determine the future role of the Air Division in Europe. Therefore, it would be premature at this time to state whether the government's revised air defence policy would affect Canada's plans for modernization of RCAF units overseas.

199.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2618

Paris, November 3, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat CJS(1) (Priority) (Information).

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW — EXAMINATION OF CANADA

Following is summary report.

We were represented by our Annual Review team and General Kitching and Lt/Col Tackaberry from London.

2. With one exception our prepared replies were those in your DL-846. Supplementary answers were drawn mainly from your background telegrams.

3. Gregh opened by reminding the Committee of the exceptional importance of this year's Annual Review as the instrument for implementing MC70 and of the role which Canada had played in this regard. Only the results would show if the Annual Review procedure had been an effective mechanism; a very serious effort was demanded of all to ensure that the Review did not simply degenerate into a rubber stamping of deficiencies. It was his hope that there would be full ministerial discussion in December with concessions being made in a sincere attempt to close gaps and only then could firm force goals be set. It was useless to end up with the classical conclusion of noting fixed positions. We responded with the opening statement we had prepared as modified by your DL-868,† with one additional sentence within the intent of your instructions.

4. Gregh's comments on our reply to Question (1), though we refused to be drawn on some issues he raised, involved the Committee in a discussion which lasted about an hour. We had anticipated most of his arguments and were able to reply with some effect. His main points were the following. The costs of NATO defence are clearly going up, mainly due to the cost of new equipment. Canada's replies, both to A[nnu]al R[ev]iew Q[uest]ionnaire 58 and in the examination, are vague as to future expenditures. Moreover, a substantial part of this year's expenditure is from special account. Also, the Canadian authorities are now finalizing their "budget provisions" for the next fiscal year. If the Canadian authorities are going to wait until the cost of new commitments can be determined to the last cent, this might be too late. He was less concerned that the Canadian authorities have not accepted the staff's estimate of the additional expenditures which would be needed than with our apparent unwillingness to say whether or not we would consider incurring larger outlays, if these should prove necessary. Canada, he said, should be able to afford this and he rehearsed the usual arguments about GNP and the proportion of budgetary expenditures devoted to civilian and military purposes. He was waiting to hear that Canada was prepared to meet MC70 requirements even if this meant an increase in defence expenditures. There were also interventions by General Parker and the UK representative.

5. Our replies were on these lines. We had explained the unresolved issues which make it impossible for us to estimate costs with any degree of accuracy at the present time. General Parker had pointed to MC70 requirements being minimum and having taken account of financial factors. We did not dispute this nor did we object to the staff making their own estimates if they wish to do so. But the Canadian government must make its own cost estimates and a large number of the unknowns lie outside MC70 and in the realm of Canada-USA defence. These are very complicated factors involving large sums of money, and the margin for error is great. In response to a query from the UK representative as to whether Canada was holding back on commitments for NATO-Europe in the fear of some possible big and unknown factor relating to the Canada-USA region, we said we were not holding back but were merely endeavouring to appraise the situation in the light of both savings and new expenditures which would flow from decisions many of which are yet to be taken. On Gregh's other points we said no conclusions should be drawn from our use of the special account this year: the money was there and we decided to spend it. We refrained from comment on his reference to "budget provisions" now under preparation, not feeling equipped to speak with authority on the actual relationship which will exist this year between the main estimates and the final budgetary provisions for defence. We dealt firmly with his renewed reference to economic factors and asserted, further, that we did not believe the Canadian government would wish to commit itself to any particular level of defence expenditures until it was clear what the actual cost would be.

6. The USA representative intervened helpfully and remarked that, while he did not wish to detract in any way from the vigour of the Annual Review examination, he nevertheless felt it necessary to point out that there are real difficulties in projecting defence expenditures. An explanation of these difficulties should not be interpreted as in any way indicating an unwillingness to meet the requirements. He felt that the Canadian statement showed a determination to carry through and to tackle problems which must first be resolved in order to meet the requirements as defined in MC70.

7. No comments of substance were made on our replies to Question 2, although Gregh said that the probable decline forecast in our reply to Question 2A was bad news. At Gregh's suggestion the Committee did not discuss our answers to Question 3, so as to avoid getting entangled in technicalities. He intimated, however, that the staff would take up with us directly certain points arising from our answers.

8. Our reply to Question 4 drew expression of satisfaction from the Standing Group representative but he went on to recall that, under MC70, the first battalion of missiles is a 1958 requirement. He wondered whether Canada might not adopt an interim solution of, for example, the Honest John, to improve on the date of 1961. We emphasized that we had said "by 1961" rather than "in 1961" and recalled that we did not think the Honest John to be a suitable weapon for a brigade group. When probed further as to what our intentions were about the provision of a second Lacrosse battalion, we said that our statement had referred to an "initial" purchase. We mentioned that Canadian personnel have already been trained in use of the Lacrosse.¹²

9. Questions 5 and 7 were taken together. The Standing Group representative pointed out that the former relates to non-organic support. Provision by other nations was not proving satisfactory and he wondered whether Canada would consider undertaking the responsibility from her own resources. We stated that the question of non-organic support was being looked into with the UK authorities and we believed that the situation was better than SHAPE reports implied. In response to a specific query from the Standing Group representative on question 7 as to whether or not we were prepared to meet the standards of MC55/1 if certain adjustments were made to the brigade we replied in the affirmative. We added that with about 800 actual battalion strength our units at 88 percent of establishment were currently fully combat worthy. The Standing Group representative said that he understood that the remaining 12 percent were available in Canada and he wondered if they could not be brought to Europe. We said that we did not intend to increase the overall strength of the brigade group beyond its present level of some 5,500 men. The 12 percent were needed in Canada in connection with such matters as missile training and the introduction of armoured personnel carriers. However, in an emergency they would be flown to Europe.

10. On Question 6 the Standing Group representative expressed the hope that the negotiations would soon be terminated successfully as the problem went back as far as 1953.

11. In our prepared reply to Question 8 we stated: "By 1963 Canada will have in commission and deployed on its east and west coasts sufficient ocean-going escorts to meet MC70 requirements. In this aspect it should be noted that the deployment to the east and west coasts of anti-submarine warfare ships earmarked for NATO is reviewed annually by the Chiefs of Staff Committee and it may, therefore, be possible to meet the 1963 requirement of 29 category "A" escorts as recommended in MC70." In answer to supplementary questions we took the same general line but, when pressed regarding the redeployment to be completed by the end of 1959, we based ourselves on paragraph 4 of your DL-864. When asked if this meant that there would be 24 category "A" ships based on the east coast by this period we replied in the affirmative.

¹² Le Cabinet a approuvé l'achat d'une batterie de missiles sol-sol Lacrosse le 1^{er} octobre 1958.

Cabinet approved the purchase of one Lacrosse battery of surface to surface missiles on October 1, 1958.

12. After noting our reply to Question 9 the Standing Group representative said that the overall requirement for the carrier still remained in MC70. He was aware of our plans for a tanker replenishment ship. He wanted to know with reference to military recommendation (8), if Canada would envisage it having a dual role, also that of helicopter carrier. We undertook to draw the recommendation to your attention. Admiral Woods said that he understood Canada's reluctance to have a second carrier, but, if SACLANT had been persistent, it was because of the serious shortfall in total carrier availability in the Atlantic command. Furthermore, with refits, our first carrier would not always be operational. After we had given some of the background of our progressive contributions to SACLANT and their cost Gregh threw in an idea of his own. He noted that the practice of ships in reserve in one country being loaned to other countries in need of them had been adopted in NATO in recent years. He understood that the USA had a reserve carrier and its loan to Canada might be an acceptable solution. He had not discussed this with the USA delegation in advance.

13. No comment was made specifically on our reply to Question 10. We had had a word with the staff before the meeting about Questions 10 and 11, indicating it would be best not to press us too hard. Also, sensing a possible misinterpretation of our reply to 11(b) — because of the slightly ambiguous wording of the question itself — we prefaced our answer with an interpretive comment designed to prevent misunderstanding. In spite of these precautions we were questioned quite closely. We eventually made the staff and the Committee understand that, in giving a negative answer to 11(b), we were simply stating our attitude toward proposals relating to interim period of 1958 Annual Review; further, that by modernization we understood modifications of existing equipment, and that by increase in all-weather capability we understood a proposed increase during interim period. Question of re-equipment of Air Division, we emphasized, is still under study. To make this clear we found it necessary to outline, without prejudice to the study, current Canadian thinking on relative suitability of proposed roles for Air Division. At one point in discussion Standing Group representative asked if military authorities could do more to assist Canadian military authorities in assessing technical problem and reaching decision. He was told they had done all necessary at present and he did not repeat not press his point. However Gregh asked point blank if Canadian military authorities would be prepared to discuss problem again with SHAPE and we felt bound to reply in affirmative.

14. Gregh said that he had one supplementary question to put to us. It was relatively minor and related to SACLANT's comment on Canadian reply to ARQ(58) reading "It is noted with satisfaction that it is intended to construct a maritime headquarters outside Halifax target area." He asked us to let him know what progress is being made.

15. In his summing up Gregh drew attention to Canada's excellent past record and to good intentions expressed in our general memorandum this year and in our opening statement. Nevertheless, examination had created a very unsatisfactory impression in his mind. In his opinion our reply to Question 1 had virtually been negative. No repeat no specific information had been given in answer to Question 2. To Question 4 we had only said "by 1961." Question 5 was still under study. No new information had been furnished on Question 6 and to Questions 9 and 11 we had replied negatively — thus giving flat rejections to two of the military recommendations. Canadian attitude in examination had not repeat not allowed that full discussion be expected this year. Canadian contribution was far too important to be allowed to slip; he could only hope that Canadian authorities would reflect further and adopt a flexible attitude during balance of review. At the moment his views were provisional, but, on basis of our present replies, he would have to tell facts bluntly in the Canadian Country Chapter. It was the apparent gap which caused him so much concern and he specifically requested that his conclusions be drawn to your attention.

16. We told Gregh in no repeat no uncertain terms that his conclusions were exaggerated in their pessimism and, in certain respects, entirely unwarranted. It was dangerous to attempt to summarize answers as he had done. We had given negative replies on two specific points — aircraft carrier and modernization and increased AWX capability of Air Division in interim period. On Question 1 and main part of Question 11 it was not repeat not true that we had responded negatively. We had simply explained that these important matters are still under study and reasons for this, we hope for mutually satisfactory solutions; these would not repeat not be aided by too hasty conclusions. In this we once again received support of USA delegation; on balance they considered that we had adopted an affirmative position. There was no repeat no comment from rest of Committee.

17. We will comment in a subsequent telegram. You are, of course, aware of special reasons for a tough line on staff's part this year. We are therefore hopeful that no repeat no untoward conclusions will be drawn.

200.

DEA/50309-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 5, 1958

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW — CANADIAN COUNTRY CHAPTER

The attached paper is a draft of the General Summary of the Country Chapter on Canada incorporating those amendments (parts underlined) which will probably appear in the final version to be circulated shortly before the Ministerial meeting in Paris. The amendments have been proposed by the International Staff following the Canadian examination which was held on October 30. The comments of the various Departments concerned which were forwarded to our Delegation for discussion with International Staff are indicated where appropriate below the amendments.

2. The examination of Canada and the other member countries was a particular stiff one this year. The Annual Review has rightly been regarded as an important exercise this year. You may recall that it was agreed (largely at Canada's suggestion) that the Annual Review should not only study as usual the defence effort of the Alliance for the coming 3 years but should also obtain the reaction of the member countries to the financial, economic and military implications of MC 70, the estimated minimum force requirements during the period 1959-63. The results of the examination have shown that a number of countries expect they will be unable to meet MC 70 requirements. From this the Secretariat has drawn a number of pessimistic observations in its general assessment of the examination and has recommended that Ministers should be made aware of the situation and the need for a serious reassessment of their national defence efforts if the requirements of MC 70 are to be met.

3. Because of a number of unresolved issues in the field of North American defence it was not possible for our Delegation to be as forthcoming in their replies as they have been in previous examinations. In the circumstances, the Chairman of the Annual Review Committee made a number of critical comments regarding our general attitude and what appeared to be an unwillingness to be more forthcoming. In particular, he drew attention to our Delegation's inability to give any indication of the future level of Canadian defence expenditures or the value of the components of the 1959-60 Mutual Aid Programme. The Chairman noted with regret from the Canadian replies that the value of our mutual aid for 1959-60 might be less than that of the current year. A separate memorandum† is going forward to you on this subject.

4. Generally speaking, the Departments concerned have been reasonably satisfied with the draft summary in its present form. The proposed amendments are for the most part less critical than we expected, and in some cases they represent an improvement on the earlier text. However, it is significant that the recommendations of the International Staff refer to two areas where the Delegation were unable to be forthcoming: the future level of defence expenditures and mutual aid.

5. The purpose of submitting the draft summaries to the Ministers attending the Paris meeting is two-fold. The officials concerned would like to acquaint you and your colleagues with the document which will form the basis for the final Country Chapter to be circulated shortly before the Ministerial meeting. Second, they are hopeful that it may be possible to come to some understanding with respect to the extent to which Ministers may be able to give some indication in Paris as to the expected level of our defence expenditures in 1959-60. In this connection, a separate letter† to Mr. Pearkes and Mr. Fleming on this subject has been prepared for your signature, if you agree.¹³

N.A. R[OBERTSON]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet de note

Draft Note

TOP SECRET

CANADIAN COUNTRY CHAPTER
GENERAL SUMMARY

Military Considerations

The Canadian forces contribution to NATO continues to be maintained at a high level of effectiveness, and continuous efforts are being deployed to furnish them with the most modern weapons and equipment. The Canadian mutual aid equipment and training programmes also represent an important contribution to the military strength of the Alliance. Canada's military commitments include the provision of forces not only for SACEUR and SACLANT, but also for the joint air and sea defence of the Canada-United States region. Subject to differences of opinion on the role, and hence equipment, of certain Canadian forces, which have yet to be resolved in consultation with the NATO military authorities, Canada accepts the requirements of MC 70 in most respects.

¹³ Voir la 3^e partie en ce qui concerne le projet de programme d'aide mutuelle pour 1959-1960. See Part 3 for Canada's proposed mutual aid programme for 1959-1960.

ARMY

2. The Canadian contribution throughout the period of the Review will be one M-day infantry brigade group in Germany, and the balance of the 1st infantry division, kept as an M-day force in Canada, as part of SACEUR's strategic reserve to arrive in Europe by M-day plus movement time. This meets MC 70 requirements.

[Le texte souligné indique les révisions proposées par le personnel international au document AR(58) Canada D/3 / Underlining of text indicates revisions proposed by International Staff to AR(58) Canada D/3.]

3. MC 70 requires one Honest John battalion (two launchers) by the end of 1958 and one Little John battalion by the end of 1961. Canada will provide half a battery (2 out of 4 launchers) Lacrosse missiles for the support of the Canadian brigade in Europe by 1961. No information could be given whether the requirements of a Little John type missile unit could be met.

Comment: On the instructions of the Office of the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, we have asked the Delegation to press for deletion of the last sentence, and to explain to the International Staff that the Canadian military authorities do not consider that Little John type missile units meet Canadian requirements.

4. The Canadian land forces are generally ready to accomplish their wartime mission. The M-day brigade in Europe consists entirely of regulars, but its manning level is only 88% as against the 100% level recommended by MC 55/1. These forces are entirely dependent on other nations for combat support: since M-day non-divisional combat support in the centre region is limited, this tends to aggravate an already difficult situation. Plans for the transport to Europe of the balance of the 1st Canadian division have not yet been completed.

NAVY

5. Aircraft carriers: The Royal Canadian Navy plans to provide one light aircraft carrier through 1961. MC 70 requires a second (helicopter) carrier by 1963. Since Canada is increasing the category "A" availability of other units, she does not consider it possible to meet this requirement. At the same time, to increase the ASW capabilities, Canada is now considering the selection of suitable helicopters for escort vessels; however, the ASW potential of a helicopter cannot be exploited fully if the size of the helicopter is limited by the need to operate from an escort.

6. In escort vessels Canada has earmarked for assignment to NATO in 1958 nineteen category "A" (Category A: those available between D-day and D+2; Category B: those available between D+2 and D+30; Category C: those available after D+30) and thirteen category "B" ships; this contribution, compared to the 1958 requirements of MC 70, means a shortfall of ten category "A", but a surplus of thirteen category "B" ships. It is noted from the reply that by 1959 a redeployment of escort vessels between the east and west coasts will result in an allocation to NATO of twenty-four category "A" and five category "B" vessels, which contribution remains the same throughout 1961. As far as 1963 MC 70 requirements are concerned, deployment to east or west coasts of anti-submarine escorts earmarked for NATO is reviewed annually by Chiefs of Staff Committee; it may therefore be possible to meet MC 70 1963 requirement of 29 category escorts.

7. The maritime patrol aircraft situation is very good. The replacement of existing aircraft by modern aircraft began this year, and the re-equipment of two complete squadrons of fourteen aircraft each will be completed by 1960.

8. Although certain measures have been taken for the provision of fleet support units, the mobile logistic support is insufficient to ensure the full mobility of Canadian fleet units.

The dispersal of operational stocks and of ashore maintenance and repair facilities is considered to be inadequate.

9. Except for a shortage of submarines for ASW training, a high and satisfactory state of training is maintained.

AIR FORCE

10. A very high standard of aircraft combat readiness and efficiency has been maintained by the Canadian Air Division.

11. Comparison is made between the Canadian Air Force contribution for 1958 and SACEUR's requirements for 1963, as laid down in MC 70:

1958		1963
AWX/F	4 squadrons	AWX/F	8 squadrons
IDF	8 squadrons	IDF	Nil
		LB/FB	attack 1 squadron
		LB/FB	strike 3 squadrons

Canada plans to maintain this contribution in the coming years, and is of the opinion that it is not in keeping with the concept of balanced collective forces for the Air Division to be asked to carry out varied roles which require different types of aircraft. It is the Canadian military view that an air defence system requires complete integration of all air forces; air defence of Europe therefore should be a national and European responsibility. Question of equipment of the Air Division, together with its serious financial implications, is being given further study. It is however not the intention to modify present equipment or to increase all-weather capability of Air Division while this study is not yet completed. A speedy decision is strongly urged by NATO military authorities.

Comment: We have advised our Delegation that we support the deletion of the word "therefore" and the inclusion of the word "essentially" before "a national and European responsibility."

In the revised sentences beginning "It is the Canadian military view ...," we have also agreed with our Delegation's suggestion that the word "equipment" in the third to last sentence should be deleted and the phrase "re-equipment and future role" substituted.

12. The concentration of aircraft on the main airfields of the First Canadian Air Division is still too great. Canada has taken steps to correct this weakness by obtaining the allotment of four dispersal airfields. Since the dispersal is not on a permanent basis, this solution does not fully meet MC 60 standards.

13. The control and reporting system of the First Canadian Air Division conforms to SHAPE standards and is fully effective.

Other Considerations

EQUIPMENT AND PRODUCTION

14. The large and diversified resources of Canadian industry, supported by a growing defence research and development programme, can continue without difficulty to supply the Canadian armed forces, and other NATO countries, through Mutual Aid. In general, Canadian industry can supply all the equipment required by MC 70 forces for Canada. There has, however, been some delay in providing a ground nuclear delivery system.

Comment: The last part of the final sentence in paragraph 14 of the original copy has been deleted by the International Staff: "and the delay may be extended if missiles are to be procured from Canadian production."

15. While most production is planned well ahead for all services, the important question of the new aircraft for the First Canadian Air Division has not yet been decided, and the Canadian reply gives no information.

Comment: The following sentence has been deleted from the original by the International Staff: "A strategic question has to be solved — as to the role of the aircraft in Europe — which will need further discussion between Canada and the NMA, before the considerable production problems are considered; and it is to be feared that delay in re-equipping the Division may result."

16. Canada has for some time maintained a substantial programme of defence research and development. The recently announced modifications in the plans for the air defence of Canada have led to certain changes in this programme. Thus, while the development of the CF 105 Arrow and its Iroquois engine, which was one of Canada's major projects, will continue temporarily, the decision as to whether to put them into production has been postponed until March 1959. Development of the accompanying missile and fire control system has been stopped all together.

Comment: We have supported our Delegation's suggestion that the word "temporarily" should not be included on the grounds that nothing was said at the Examination which would support its insertion.

We have asked the Delegation to press for the deletion of the words "air defence of Canada" and the substitution of the phrase "air defence of the Canada — U.S. region of the Alliance," on the grounds that the words "air defence of Canada" suggest it is our primary concern at the moment.

17. There is unused capacity in several sectors of Canadian arms industry and production to meet army requirements can readily be expanded. It seems possible that aircraft and ships may be made available for transfer to other countries when new types are introduced for the Canadian forces.

DEFENCE FINANCE

18. Up to present, Canada has not allowed financial considerations seriously to impede the maintenance of an effective forces contribution to NATO. Such shortfalls as appear in Canadian forces during coming years in relation to requirements of NATO military authorities are primarily due to differences of appreciation on technical or strategic factors; but some at least seem to be due to financial limitations. Cost of these forces is however likely to rise: although Canadian navy does not intend to provide a second aircraft carrier, there is need for helicopters and supply vessels; air force faces a major reconversion programme and army has to introduce missiles for which no financial provision has yet been made. The general tendency of operating costs is to rise — a tendency which will be enhanced by introduction of new equipment.

Comment: We are in agreement with the Delegation's proposal that the word "seriously" in the first sentence should be replaced by the phrase "to any significant extent."

19. It thus seems likely that maintenance of Canadian forces in their present high state of efficiency and continuance of Mutual Aid at its existing level would, in the next few years, involve a considerable increase on existing levels of expenditure. Canadian authorities acknowledge that new defence programme cannot fail to have a significant impact on level of defence expenditures required in future years, but do not consider it possible to make accurate forecasts at present time. Such increase as might be necessary would mean a more than equivalent rise in defence appropriations in 1959/60, since budgetary resources have been swelled this year by a once for all drawing of $240 million from special account for Mutual Aid equipment and other sources.

Comment: We have requested the Delegation to press for the insertion of the words "assigned or earmarked for assignment to SACEUR and SACLANT" between the words "Canadian forces" and "in their present," in the first sentence. We have also asked for the inclusion of the words "for these forces" at the end of the first sentence.

We have requested that the second sentence be deleted and the following substituted: "Basic decisions in regard to Canada's contribution to the defence of the Canada - U.S. region have yet to be taken by the Canadian Government and for this reason the Canadian authorities are unable at the present time to estimate the future level of Canada's overall defence budget."

We consider that the last sentence is meaningless, and only reflects the Secretariat's inability to understand Canadian budgetary procedures. If they insist on maintaining this sentence, we have instructed the Delegation to press for the deletion of the last three words.

20. The part to be played by Canadian Mutual Aid in equipping NATO forces will be at least as important during MC 70 period as it has been in the past. But the value of Mutual Aid has been reduced by more than half over the past four years and is expected to decline further, though slightly, in 1959/60; though the decline by volume is rather less, as pre-1950 equipment has been written down in value by about 80% since 1956/57. The components of the Aid have also changed; direct procurement has almost ceased, the air training scheme — its work nearly complete — is costing little, and a very large part now consists of equipment transferred from Service stocks. This equipment is in new condition and of great value to the recipient countries; but though about half of it is actually unused, the remainder has been in service with Canadian forces, and a considerable amount dates from earlier than March 31, 1950. Provision of these categories of equipment is undoubtedly a smaller claim on Canada's resources than the equivalent in direct purchases.

Comment: We have proposed that the fourth sentence beginning "This equipment ..." should be deleted and replaced by the following: "This equipment is in new condition and of great value to the recipient countries. Half of this equipment is unused and some of it has been transferred directly from the manufacturer. A very small amount is transferred from pre-1950 stocks."

21. Defence expenditures, as a percentage of gross national products, dropped from a peak of 9% in 1953 to 6.6% in 1957. Allowing for price increases, national product rose by about 13% while real value of defence expenditures declined by about 20% from 1953 to 1957. In 1958 share of defence in national product is expected to diminish slightly, given a small increase in total output and little change in level of defence expenditures.

22. The Canadian economy appears able to carry the current defence effort without undue strain. There are indications that a resumption of economic expansion has just begun, following a period of moderate recession, but manufacturing capacity remains under-utilised. Prices generally have ceased to rise, and there is no shortage of skilled or unskilled manpower. The action of the federal government in sharply increasing their expenditures has had a favourable effect on the economy and, within the framework of this expansionary policy, there is room for some increase in defence expenditures.

23. Over period covered by MC 70, further economic growth can reasonably be expected. With extensive natural resources and relatively high living standards, a rise in level of defence expenditures throughout the period in order to meet military requirements and to maintain Mutual Aid programme, is well within the capacity of the economy.

INTERNATIONAL STAFF RECOMMENDATIONS

(The Chairman of the Annual Review Committee has indicated that the recommendations will probably be distributed separately and a little later than the Country Chapter.)

Given the extensive economic resources of Canada and the high standard of living, International Staff recommend that Canadian Government should: (1) Raise Defence expenditures during period 1959-63 as may be necessary to maintain the forces required by MC 70; (2) Maintain at least the present value of Mutual Aid and give consideration to increasing amount of materiel directly procured.

Comment: In our instructions to the Delegation we expressed our view that it would be most unfortunate if the references in the recommendations to "extensive national resources" and "high standard of living" should appear in the final recommendations to Canada and not in the recommendations directed to other countries, particularly the United States. We asked the Delegation to make this point to the International Staff and to express our hope that the final recommendations will be comparable in tone and substance to the recommendations made to other countries.

201.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2905

Paris, December 6, 1958

TOP SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2888 Dec 4.†

Repeat CCOS, DM/DND (Priority), CJS (London) (Information).

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW — CANADIAN COUNTRY CHAPTER

We received the draft Country Chapter on Canada yesterday, shortly before it was considered in committee in the afternoon. Copies went forward in yesterday's bag.

2. As in the case of all other chapters paragraphs have been added in the sections on the army, navy and air force containing tables showing "the contribution to NATO for the years 58 and 61, and the MC 70 requirements for 61 and 63."

3. Again as in other Country Chapters, the military recommendations have been inserted as a separate paragraph but without the table included in AR(58)CDA-D/4 which, minus the footnotes, has been covered as indicated above. The military recommendations in the Country Chapter are prefaced as follows: "In view of the military considerations detailed above, the NATO military authorities recommend that Canada should attain the force requirements in 59, 60 and 61 at Annex and the standards of readiness laid down in MC-55/1 and to that end should implement the following recommendations." Substantially the same preface is contained in all the Country Chapters.

4. The summary of Canadian force plans for end-59 and of the NATO military authorities' forces recommendations for end-59, 60 and 61, which is to be annexed to our Country Chapter, had not repeat not been printed in time to forward it in yesterday's bag. We are therefore sending substance in a following telegram.† It follows the same pattern as the summaries annexed to the Country Chapters of other countries. The annexes also contain summaries of the countries' force plans for end-59 and of the NATO military authorities forces recommendations for 63.

5. You will recall that the above procedure insofar as it relates to the country's force plans and the NATO military authorities' recommendations was reported in paragraph 1 of our telegram 2832.† We consider that this change and the others reported above are in themselves unobjectionable. We will pay particular attention to the terms of the draft resolution, which is expected on Tuesday, insofar as it relates to force goals but see no repeat no problem at this stage and doubt if there will be one. The above changes in Country Chapters have given rise to no repeat no comment from other delegations.

6. The revisions reported in our reference telegram have been made in the Chapter. With regard to paragraphs 19 and 20 which are now numbered 23 and 24, the Staff have taken account of our proposals but have only partially reflected them. The revised paragraphs read as follows: Text begins:

23. Basic decisions in regard to the Canadian contribution to the defence of the Canada/USA region have yet to be taken by the Canadian government and for this reason the Canadian authorities are unable at the present time to estimate the future level of Canada's overall defence budget, but they acknowledge that the whole of the future defence programme cannot fail to have a significant impact on the level of defence expenditures required for future years. In any case it seems likely that the maintenance of Canadian forces, assigned or earmarked for assignment to SACEUR and SACLANT, in their present high state of efficiency and the continuance of mutual aid at its existing level would, in the next few years, involve a considerable increase in current levels of expenditure. Such increase as might be necessary would mean a more than equivalent rise in defence appropriations in 59/60, since budgetary resources have been swelled this year by a once for all drawing of some $200M from the defence equipment replacement account.

24. The part to be played by Canadian Mutual Aid in equipping NATO forces will be at least as important during the MC70 period as it has been in the past. But the value of Mutual Aid has been reduced by more than half over the past four years and is expected to decline further, though slightly, in 59/60; however, the decline by volume is rather less, as the pre-1950 equipment has been written down in value by about 80 percent since 56/57. The components of the Aid have also changed; direct procurement has almost ceased, the air training scheme — its work nearly complete — is costing little, and a very large part now consists of equipment transferred from service stocks. This equipment is in new condition, and of great value to the recipient countries. About half of it is actually unused: the remainder, although fully reconditioned, has been in service with the Canadian forces, and some dates from earlier than March 31/50. Provision of these categories of equipment is undoubtedly a smaller claim on Canadian resources than the equivalent in direct purchases. Text Ends.

7. You will see that, with regard to the first of these paragraphs, the Staff have altered the order of the sentences and have, in effect: included both your revised sentence 2 and their old sentence 2 as a new sentence 1. In sentence 2 (previously 1) they have included your phrase "assigned or earmarked for assignment to SACEUR and SACLANT" but have not repeat not added the words "for these forces" at the end of the sentence. We hope that the new sentence 1, though not repeat not perfect, will be acceptable. We felt it would be unwise to press in committee for addition of "of these forces" to sentence 2 because this would probably raise the question of additional wording to take care of the reference to Mutual Aid in the sentence. This would clearly be undesirable in the context of the sentence. Consequently, in committee we limited ourselves to indicating that we thought the second sentence could be regarded by our authorities as reflecting the opinion of the International Staff more than their own, and reviewed reasons briefly. We suggested that substitution of "possible" for "likely" might be an improvement. We made no repeat no comment in the last sentence which, though imperfect, we hope will be acceptable in its present form.

8. The revision of the fourth sentence of the paragraph on Mutual Aid only meets us part way. The reason the Staff had given us for not repeat not accepting "a very small amount" was that they appraise volume as well as value. However, "some" is better than the old wording. We felt it inappropriate to seek any further changes in committee.

9. When talking to the Staff we spoke briefly along the lines of the first sentence of paragraph 7 of your reference telegram and, in the most general terms and without mentioning specifics, indicated three or four lines along which we are working in the Mutual Aid and services spheres, basing ourselves on what General Foulkes told us on November 25 (our telegram 2834 November 28†).

10. In committee we made a few appropriate general remarks designed to ensure that no repeat no untoward conclusions were drawn from the late distribution of our Chapter. In the course of these remarks, apart from the paragraphs on defence finance and Mutual Aid quoted above, we indicated general satisfaction with the objectivity and balance of the Chapter.

11. It would be our hope that any further comment you might wish to make on the above paragraph on defence finance might be of an indirect nature and consist of whatever the Minister of Finance may say generally on this subject at the Ministerial meeting.

12. The Annual Review report will probably go to Council on December 10.

202.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-1019

Ottawa, December 9, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel No. 2905.

Repeat CCOS(5), DM/DND (Information).

NATO ANNUAL REVIEW — CANADIAN COUNTRY CHAPTER

On the whole we are satisfied that the military section of the Country Chapter on Canada reflect a fair assessment of the situation as it exists. Unfortunately, however, our satisfaction does not encompass the section on defence finance. We are very much concerned by the attitude of the International Staff and consider as regrettable their refusal to amend the Chapter on Canada to reflect better the true situation. While the amendment contained in your 2922† represents an improvement we think it would be desirable to have in the minutes of tomorrow's meeting of the Council, a statement explaining our situation as it is. Subsequent statements by ministers could thus concentrate on issues of substance.

2. You could explain to Council that the Canadian defence programme comprises two sectors: (a) Canada's contribution to NATO forces under SACEUR and SACLANT and (b) Canada's contribution to the defence of the Canada - U.S. region. Under (a) we provide land, air and sea forces to NATO commanders and, in addition, Mutual Aid to our European Allies. Under (b), in cooperation with the United States, we provide military installations and forces for the defence of the U.S. deterrent forces (Strategic Air Command) and for the defence of the Canada - U.S. region.

3. Basic decisions in regard to (b) above have yet to be taken. Until such decisions are made it is not possible to estimate the cost of this most important sector of Canada's defence programme. With respect to (a) the maintenance of Canada's defence contribution at its present state of efficiency and the continuance of Mutual Aid at its present level would involve, in the next few years, an increase in defence expenditures in this particular sector of our defence programme. Such an increase, however, might or might not affect the overall level of our defence budget, depending on what decisions are taken in regard to the other and larger sector of our defence programme and depending also on the extent to which we have been successful in cutting down overhead costs and in eliminating unnecessary items in our defence programme so as to increase the defence value of our budget.

4. As far as the paragraph on Mutual Aid is concerned we feel that Council should be told that the word "some" in the second last sentence of new paragraph 24 in fact means $5 million in 1957 - 58 out of a total programme of $120 million, less than $5 million in 1958 - 59 out of a programme of $130 million, and, as far as we can see, practically nil in 1959 - 60.

5. In addition to the above you might indicate, in reference to the old paragraph 22, that we do not of course share the views of the International Staff. The summary appraisal of the Secretariat appears to ignore the basic difficulties arising from financial as opposed to physical considerations, hence their conclusion about the ability of the Canadian economy to shoulder a large defence effort. For a full appraisal of the Canadian economic situation member countries should refer to our examination in the OEEC where these financial problems and difficulties were discussed. Financial policy considerations are of the utmost importance for the immediate and long term future of the Canadian economy.

6. For your own information we might mention that the Minister of Finance is deeply concerned about the present threat of inflation resulting from excessively large budgetary deficits and considers it essential that there should be restrictions of government spending wherever possible. National Defence is the one area where it may be possible to hold the line or make some minor cut-backs without reducing essential programmes. In the circumstances the estimates which will be presented some time in January probably will be framed in the light of the pressing need for economies. However, since the estimates will not contain provision for expenditures should the government decide to go ahead with the CF-105 or alternatively purchase interceptors from the U.S., it would be unfortunate if they were interpreted as heralding a slackening of our defence contributions to NATO. In the circumstances it is important that an effort be made to expose clearly the faulty reasoning employed by the Secretariat in new paragraph 23.

203.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2941

Paris, December 9, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our immediately preceding tel.†

Repeat CCOS Ott, DM/DND Ott (OpImmediate), CJS(L) (Information).

DRAFT RESOLUTION ON THE 1958 ANNUAL REVIEW

We set out below the text which was proposed at today's meeting of the Annual Review Committee for submission to the Council in permanent session on "December 12". It may be subject to a few minor editorial changes, but the substance will remain essentially the same. Begins:

"The North Atlantic Council having considered the report on the 1958 Annual Review and document MC 39/10 containing the Military Committee's comments thereon, having noted:

That the Review has been directed not repeat not only towards a critical examination of the status of forces of member countries and the indication of the improvements which can be worked into each country's defence programme for the period beginning in 1959, but also to the analysis and to the preparation of comments on the first reaction of NATO countries to the minimum forces requirements of MC 70 for the period 1959-1963, that the 1958 Annual Review cannot repeat not be considered as having produced final decisions as regards countries' intentions on the full implementation of the requirements of MC 70 and of MC 55/1; but that the NATO military authorities consider that unless present unfavourable trends in the building up of NATO forces and support structure are corrected, the military posture of the North Atlantic Organisation will, by 1961, be deficient to the extent that the NATO area will be in serious jeopardy and that the overall defence planning of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation will require major review. Brings to the attention of the NATO nations the serious impact of the shortfall of the forces reflected in the 1958 Annual Review on the capability of major NATO Commanders to carry out their assigned missions and tasks through the period 1961. Having noted: The firm goals for 1959, provisional goals for 1960 and planning goals for 1961, as they have been submitted by countries in reply to the 1958 Annual Review Questionnaire.

(1) Notes as agreed firm goals the force plans given by each country for 1959, these goals representing the minimum initial basis for implementing the force requirements of MC 70;

(2) Recommends that countries should make every effort to meet the force levels laid down for 1959, 1960 and 1961 by NATO military authorities (these goals for the army and air force are shown in the annexes to Country Chapters. Since no repeat no naval force requirements are given in MC 70 for the years 1959, 1960 and 1961, countries should direct their naval planning in such a way as to ensure that the force recommendations shown are met not repeat not later than 1963).

(3) Urges governments -

- (a) To meet at least their firm commitments with respect to the 1959 goals;
- (b) To give earnest consideration individually and by reinforcing co-operation between member countries to the recommendations of the NATO military authorities and of the International Staff contained in the Country Chapters, in order to remedy present deficiencies in the military posture of NATO and to correct the serious deficiencies and adverse trends reported in MC 39/10;
- (c) To make known as soon as possible their clear intentions for the period through 1961 with regard to the implementation of recommendations made above and their general intentions with respect to the 1963 MC 70 minimum essential force requirements;
- (d) To maintain close consultation with the NATO military authorities for the purpose of implementing the above recommendations and before making any changes in their NATO forces." Ends.

204.

DEA/50107-H-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2952

Paris, December 10, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel DL-1021 Dec 9.†

Repeat DM/DND from Ottawa, CCOS, CJS London (Information).

NATO: REPORT ON THE 1958 ANNUAL REVIEW

Your telegram DL-1019 has not yet been received. In the light of your telegram, under reference we made no comment when the report on the 1958 Annual Review came up in Council this morning.

2. Caught between a long and inconclusive discussion on infrastructure and the Chairman's desire to proceed to consideration of Berlin in private session, the item on the Annual Review received perfunctory treatment. The Chairman wrongly stated at the beginning that Council was being asked to consider the General Chapter but we feel sure that all delegations, in the light of the agenda item and the documentation as given on the agenda, fully understood that it was the full report which was being considered for forwarding to Ministers.

3. The USA representative made a general comment to the effect that the report on the Annual Review is of first importance, particularly in the light of the military authorities' comments on it in MC39/10. The UK representative remarked that he assumed that Ministers might comment on the General Chapter at the Ministerial meeting. There was no comment from any other permanent representative. We are inclined to think that, if any permanent representative had been under instructions to comment on his Country Chapter, he would have done so in spite of the pressure of time.

4. The draft resolution was circulated in working paper form. It is substantially as in our telegram 2941 December 9, except that the second operative part reads slightly differently, i.e. "Takes note, as agreed goals, of the force plans for 1959 given by each country, which represent the minimum initial level for the implementation of the force requirements of MC70.”

5. The UK representative said he had no views to express on the draft resolution but that his authorities would wish to examine it and that he looked forward to Council having an opportunity to pass on it at a later date. This was agreed. We expect that the resolution will be considered when Council next meets to complete consideration of the balance of today's agenda. No decision was taken today as to when such a meeting should take place; presumably it will be some time before the end of this week.¹⁴

2^e PARTIE/PART 2

POLITIQUE DES ARMES NUCLÉAIRES NUCLEAR WEAPONS POLICY

205.

DEA/50219-AM-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
au président des chefs d'état-major*

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Chiefs of Staff

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 29, 1957

Dear General Foulkes:

I wish to thank you for referring to this department a copy of your notes† on certain aspects of the recent United States proposal for NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons. The department was also interested in Mr. Dulles' recent statement on this matter,¹⁵ and did in fact prepare a paper on the subject for the Prime Minister on the occasion of Mr. Dulles' visit to Ottawa.¹⁶ A copy of this department's paper is attached for your information. Unfortunately, your notes reached us too late to be incorporated in our paper, but I have brought them to the attention of our Minister, so that he may have a fuller understanding of the implications of the U.S. proposal from Canada's point of view.

2. In this connection, your department and ours will presumably wish, in a not too distant future, to have the U.S. proposal discussed on some interdepartmental basis, since it would appear from President Eisenhower's¹⁷ and Mr. Dulles' recent statements that the United States authorities are seriously considering developing further the idea of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons.

¹⁴ Cette résolution a fait l'objet de discussions et a été approuvée le 17 décembre 1958 à la rencontre ministérielle de l'OTAN à Paris. Voir United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1958-1960, Volume VII, Part 1, Washington: Government Printing Office, 1993, pp. 386 à 398.

This resolution was discussed and approved on December 17, 1958 at the NATO Ministerial Meeting in Paris. See United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1958-1960, Volume VII, Part 1, Washington: Government Printing Office, 1993, pp. 386-398.

¹⁵ Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXVII, No. 945, 5 August 1957, pp. 233-234.

¹⁶ Dulles a visité Ottawa du 26 au 28 juillet 1957. Voir le volume 25 (à paraître), chapitre premier. Dulles visited Ottawa from July 26 to 28, 1957. See Volume 25 (forthcoming), Chapter I.

¹⁷ Voir/See Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1957, Washington: Government Printing Office, 1958, pp. 550, 555.

3. Any comments therefore which you may have on the various considerations outlined in our paper would be welcome, as an initial step towards interdepartmental consultations.

Yours sincerely,
J.W. HOLMES

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note
Memorandum

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 26, 1957

NATO STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

The United States Proposal

There has been, in recent years, considerable pressure on the part of the smaller NATO members for a share of the nuclear weapons which have now become available, and with which some of the United States troops stationed in Europe are equipped. Numerous suggestions have been made in the past for the establishment of some NATO pool of nuclear weapons, from which member nations could draw their requirements. The United States government now appears to have accepted, for the first time publicly, the possibility of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons.

2. At his press conference in Washington on July 16, Mr. Dulles revealed that the United States defence authorities had been giving serious thought to the creation of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons, through which such weapons could be made available to the members of the Alliance. The following day, on July 17, President Eisenhower endorsed publicly the principle of NATO stockpiling of nuclear weapons, and confirmed generally the information given by Mr. Dulles concerning the United States study of plans for the creation of such stockpiles. The text of Mr. Dulles' remarks at his press conference is attached as annex "A"† to this paper.

3. The United States Secretary of State has explained that the United States had at present no specific programme for carrying out the proposal, and indicated that in any case Congressional sanction would probably be necessary before one could be worked out and implemented. The United States Atomic Energy Act might also require amendments, since it permits at present supply of nuclear weapons to allies of the United States only after war has broken out. Both the President and Mr. Dulles have said enough, however, to suggest that the United States authorities are now prepared to take concrete steps towards the establishment of such NATO stockpiles.

NATO Stockpiling and Disarmament

4. The publicly announced United States proposal for NATO stockpiling of nuclear weapons is in harmony with U.S. policy in the current disarmament negotiations in London. In their latest proposals on disarmament, the United States has indicated the intention to reserve the privilege of deciding, in case of a disarmament agreement, to station their stockpiles of nuclear weapons outside the borders of the United States, and further the privilege of training other than United States troops in the use of nuclear weapons. The United States proposal for NATO stockpiling of nuclear weapons gives therefore a practical significance to the recent United States reservations in the Disarmament Subcommittee.

5. It is probably also designed to alleviate the fears of some of their partners in the Sub-Committee, especially the United Kingdom and France, to the effect that agreement on the suspension of nuclear tests, with an eventual halt in the production of nuclear weapons, might leave these countries without real means of modern defence. If the temporary suspension of nuclear tests were linked not only with the cut-off of production for weapons purposes, as the U.S. plans envisage, but also with a prohibition of deliveries to allies, then such countries as the United Kingdom, which is actually producing materials for nuclear weapons, and France, which apparently is considering such production, might indeed be left in a position of having means for the delivery of nuclear warheads, but inadequate supplies of such warheads. This is particularly important for the United Kingdom which has just recast most of its defence policy on a basis of nuclear as opposed to conventional armaments.

6. It remains to be seen, however, how the Soviet government will react in the Disarmament Sub-Committee to this United States proposal for NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons. The Russians are known to fear any dispersal of nuclear weapons among the NATO countries, especially Germany. Discussion of the distribution of missiles (without atomic warheads) by the United States to some Western European allies was sufficient, a few months ago, to prompt the Soviet government to despatch to these NATO governments, at the risk of being charged with interference in internal affairs of other states, letters of dire warning about accepting the stationing of such weapons on their respective territories. A strong Russian reaction in the Sub-Committee to the publicly announced United States proposal for NATO stockpiles should not therefore be unexpected, and the course of the disarmament negotiations might in turn well suffer.

NATO Stockpiling and the "Fourth Power" Problem

7. The Bermuda conference earlier this year underlined the concern of both the United States and the United Kingdom over the problem of production and of possession of nuclear weapons by "fourth" powers.¹⁸ The disarmament discussions have shown that the Soviet Union was no less concerned with the "Fourth Power" problem, although their position might be somewhat simpler, as they wish above all to ensure, for their own security reasons, that no fourth country could secure possession of nuclear weapons either by transfer or manufacture. One of the main conclusions which have emerged so far from Canadian inter-departmental consideration of the "Fourth Power" problem is that renunciation of manufacture of nuclear weapons could only be acceptable to countries which have the capacity to produce them, if in turn they can be assured of the availability of such weapons in case of serious threat to their security. Canadian officials have thus tended to view the question of "attractiveness of renunciation" of manufacture of nuclear weapons as the more promising basis of a satisfactory solution to the "Fourth Power" problem.

8. Mr. Dulles' proposal for NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons would, it seems, go a long way towards making renunciation of nuclear weapons manufacture and of individual possession a more acceptable proposition. The establishment of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons, under an appropriate system of control, would undoubtedly tend to save other NATO countries the economic burden of developing themselves these expensive weapons. It would strengthen NATO defence arrangements, underline the collective character of the military side of the Alliance, and promote generally the feeling of solidarity within the Alliance. It would offer within NATO, to every member government, including those which have been hoping to achieve it through the production of their own nuclear weapons, the kind of "nuclear protection" every NATO country has been seeking. It could well therefore constitute ultimately an important step towards a limitation in nuclear weapons production, and perhaps strengthen the bargaining position of the Western world in disarmament negotiations.

¹⁸ Voir/See Volume 22, Document 735.

NATO Stockpiling and Canada's Defence Policy

9. The President of the United States, in endorsing the plan for NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons, remarked at his press conference that such a move would be "exactly logical" and that to defend themselves against nuclear attacks, the countries of the Atlantic Alliance "ought to have the right, the opportunity and the capacity of responding in kind." Mr. Dulles pointed out that such stockpiles would assure allied countries that if war came, they would not be in a position of supplicants for the use of atomic weapons. It would not be a healthy relationship, he said, to have allied nations wholly dependent on the United States in this respect. The United States leaders seem also to have recognized the desirability of approaching the problem in the NATO forum, rather than attempting to draw a distinction between individual allies. Mr. Dulles saw the possible concentration of nuclear weapons in Europe as an act of confidence which would strengthen the fellowship of the North Atlantic Community. Canadian officials concerned with defence matters and who have been following NATO developments would generally agree that on the whole, implementation of the United States proposal for NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons would carry these advantages, and be beneficial to the security of the Atlantic Community.

10. Implementation of the proposal would nonetheless present the Canadian government with important problems. As the proposal, in its latest context, is really new, it would seem premature to talk in terms of a Canadian policy. A number of considerations of direct interest to Canada can however be advanced at this stage.

11. It is assumed that, in the event of the creation of NATO stockpiles, under conditions permitting access to them by the NATO members, its supplies would be available to Canadian forces on a basis of equality with forces from all other NATO countries. It is also assumed that such stockpiles would be located, at least at the outset, in Europe. In theory, the ability of Canadian contingents in Europe to use these weapons should not give rise to serious difficulties. Most of the agreements which Canada has with countries such as France and Belgium for the use of airfields provide that Canadian contingents stationed at those bases would only be armed with conventional weapons. These governments, however, would presumably agree, in the event of the establishment of stockpiles of nuclear weapons, to the working out of appropriate agreements permitting Canadian forces equipped with such nuclear weapons to be stationed on their territory.

12. Canadian officials have been inclined however, so far, to consider that Canada's armed forces in Europe, as well as in North America, did not, in practice, have any immediate requirement for nuclear weapons, although within a few years, would require certain specific modern defensive weapons, sometimes referred to as tactical weapons. The United States Air Force is already using one such "small" weapon in the air defence of North America, and has been given authority to use it over Canada. For technical reasons, the R.C.A.F. does not at present wish to adopt this particular weapon.

13. Although there has been no reference to this possibility so far, the United States proposal could also of course envisage the establishment of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons in Canada. Canada, like the United States, is in principle an integral part of the NATO area. Most of the agreement negotiated with the United States regarding the use of bases in Canadian territory by United States forces took place at a time when nuclear weapons meant only mass nuclear deterrent, and when defensive weapons were still at the planning stage. There are therefore in the United States Leased Bases Agreements no reference to U.S. forces being equipped with nuclear weapons, and in fact no distinction between conventional weapons and others. Recent agreements with certain European countries concerning the use of airfields by Canadian forces contain however clauses stipulating specifically that Canadian forces stationed there would be armed only with conventional weapons. Although there are, strictly speaking, no provisions in the U.S. Leased Bases Agreements preventing U.S. forces to be equipped with nuclear weapons, it is evident, in the light of recent precedents, that fresh agreements would have to be negotiated before NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons could be established on Canadian territory, as would be the case for most western Europe countries.

Control over NATO Stockpiles of Nuclear Weapons

14. The question of control over stockpiles of nuclear weapons constitutes the most important aspect of the United States proposal. It is desirable that the NATO Alliance be permitted to develop its full military potential by arming itself with the most modern weapons. But it is unlikely that this objective could be successfully and effectively reached unless it is done under a control system which could minimize the "Fourth Power" problem while, at the same time, reducing and softening the differences in status between the two "nuclear powers" in NATO and the other members of the Alliance.

15. It will seem equally essential to ensure that the establishment of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons will not enable any NATO power to embark unilaterally on a war against any other power, or accidentally to provoke a situation which could lead to preventive or retaliatory action by a major power. We can be certain in any event that the Scandinavians, for instance, would look with the greatest concern upon a situation where the Greeks and the Turks could, in a moment of over-estimated danger, and ensuing national panic, let go an atomic attack, thereby bringing into the fray the whole of the NATO Alliance. Likewise however, the small members of NATO would see little advantage in the creation of NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons if the control over them were left exclusively to SACEUR and to the President of the United States. Such arrangements would, in any case, likely defeat the purpose behind the proposal of cementing NATO's solidarity, and of decreasing the dependence of each of the NATO members upon the present United States monopoly of the nuclear deterrent.

16. An initial form of control, therefore, might well consist in having the proposed stockpiles under the formal custody of SACEUR. They would be used only in accordance with the specific military directions of SACEUR, which in turn would be given only in accordance with general directives of the NATO Council regarding the use of such weapons. This policy would be in line with the interpretation made by the NATO Foreign Ministers, including Mr. Dulles, and by General Gruenther, of "MC-48", the report of the Military Committee of NATO on the most effective pattern of NATO military strength over the next few years. This report was approved by NATO at its ministerial meeting in December 1954, and the so-called principle of "civilian control" reaffirmed at the last December ministerial meeting.¹⁹ Its interpretation left to member governments through the NATO Council rather than to the military authorities the decision as to when the NATO nuclear weapons would be used.²⁰

¹⁹ Voir volume 22, la 5^e partie, chapitre III.

See Volume 22, Chapter III, Part 5.

²⁰ Pour un exposé sur la réaction du Canada au MC-48, voir volume 20, la 5^e partie, chapitre III.

For an account of the Canadian response to MC 48, see Volume 20, Chapter III, Part 5.

17. As a result, it would seem that the practices of NATO might need to be reconsidered in the light of such increase in the military advantages and responsibilities of NATO partnership. At a moment when the central contribution of NATO to a nation's military potential is being increased, it is an opportune moment to improve the means for guaranteeing that this increased military potential is used in conformity with NATO's objectives. Furthermore, the establishment of stockpiles of nuclear weapons without an adequate system of control might well affect adversely the balance of power within NATO, as existing deterrents to unilateral action (such as the threat of U.S. and U.K. abandonment of the continental land-mass to the Soviet Union) might no longer be as efficient as before. The Canadian approach, therefore, could be that with the establishment of NATO's stockpiles of nuclear weapons, it would become necessary to strengthen the political consultation and control machinery of the NATO Council over the disposition and use of these weapons.

206.

DEA/50219-AM-40

Le président des chefs d'état-major au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], August 8, 1957

Dear Mr. Holmes:

I have your letter of 29 July, with which you forwarded a copy of a memorandum which you prepared for the Prime Minister on the subject of NATO stockpiling of nuclear weapons. I agree with you that it is perhaps timely that we have a discussion on an interdepartmental basis on this question of the effect upon Canadian defence plans of NATO stockpiling of nuclear weapons. I had already suggested to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs that we should prepare a joint paper and I had understood from discussion with Mr. Léger that he would show us this paper before it was presented to the Prime Minister. I feel it is regrettable that this paper was not referred to this Department before it was sent to the Prime Minister. I understand that there may not have been time for this procedure but I do feel that there are grave dangers in presenting to the Prime Minister a paper which involves the policies of another department without giving that other department an opportunity to at least check whether the facts and the quotations attributed to that department are correct or are in their proper context.

I am particularly concerned with the discussions in para. 9 to 16, headed "NATO Stockpiling and Canada's Defence Policy." These paragraphs quote Canadian officials concerned with defence matters and refer to certain alleged Service opinion. Surely matters of defence policy and statements of officials concerned with defence matters and Service opinions are matters of primary concern to this Department and should not be quoted without reference to this Department.

My main concern, however, is in regard to para. 16. This paragraph is very similar to para. 15 of the External Affairs amendments to the paper on "Atomic Weapons Policy and the Fourth Power Problem," which was submitted to a special group studying the Fourth Power Problem by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, on 29 May.²¹ You may recall that at a meeting of this special committee on 10 June, I raised the question of the authority to use nuclear weapons and challenged the statements made in para. 15 of External Affairs amendments. I made certain quotations from NATO documents and I was given the impression from the Under-Secretary that this matter would be given further study by the Department of External Affairs as there was no doubt some conflict of opinion regarding the interpretation of the NATO documents. I am greatly surprised to find that after the credibility of the statement made at that time had been challenged, this same statement should appear in this document going to the Prime Minister.

I have searched all the military and Council documents and failed to find any justification for the statement that the NATO Council rather than the military authorities will decide as and²² when NATO nuclear weapons will be used; nor can I find any statement made by General Gruenther which in any way supports this claim. Furthermore, while in Paris in July, I discussed this matter with the Supreme Allied Commander, and the Supreme Allied Commander has no illusions as to what his responsibilities are. I would refer you to a discussion which was held at SHAPE for the Permanent Council. A copy of the transcript† of this discussion was forwarded to you under file CSC 1750-3 of 5 June. You will note that the Secretary-General is certainly not as definite on this matter as you have indicated the Council to be in your para. 16. You will also note in para. 10 of the Council transcript that "The Netherlands Representative has also posed the constitutional question as it affected the use of nuclear weapons even before a declaration of war." In addition, in para. 14 the Secretary-General asked for clarification of our position with respect to the use of atomic weapons. SACEUR answered that it was not decided beyond the provisions of MC.48, which provided authority for planning on the use of atomic weapons at the outset.

Therefore the only effective authority which is available is MC.48, and the conclusion of MC.48 agreed to by the Council is as follows: "approved the Military Committee's report MC.48 (Final) as a basis for defence planning and the preparations by the NATO military authorities, noting that this approval did not involve the delegation of the responsibilities of governments for putting plans into action in the event of hostilities." I would point out the significance of the phrase "putting plans into action." There is no suggestion here that plans will be changed. The conclusions of MC.48 are quite specific, as follows: "It is militarily essential that the NATO forces should be able to use atomic and thermonuclear weapons in their defence and that the NATO military authorities should be authorized to plan and make preparations on the assumption that atomic and thermonuclear weapons will be used at the outset." I am afraid that the confusion which exists is in the interpretation of the words "for putting plans into action in the event of hostilities," which actually means a decision as to whether NATO will go to war or will not go to war.

You have quoted General Gruenther making a statement in the Military Committee. As I have attended all the meetings of the Military Committee since its inception, I am well aware of the statements which have been made at that Committee. However for your information I will quote what General Gruenther said, as reported in the minutes of the Military ²¹ Pour un compte rendu des discussions interministérielles sur le problème de la quatrième puissance, voir volume 23, la 3^e partie, chapitre VII.

For an account of the inter-departmental discussions on the Fourth Power Problem, see Volume 23, Chapter VII, Part 3.

²² Note marginale :/Marginal note:

To: we said to not and [Auteur inconnu/Author unknown]

Committee meeting of 13 December, 1954. General Gruenther was discussing the question as to whether there could be two strategies, whether he could be prepared to defend Western Europe using only conventional weapons, or whether he could defend Europe using both conventional weapons and atomic weapons. General Gruenther pointed out at that time that if there was a question of a decision not to use atomic weapons being taken at a time when an attack was imminent, he would require to have available a sufficient number of divisions armed with conventional weapons to fight that kind of a war, and that would mean he would have to have 100 divisions. If a decision was taken that he could have only 30 divisions and be allowed to use nuclear weapons, he would have to fight with those 30 divisions and the nuclear weapons when a decision to fight was taken. However he made it quite clear that he could not defend the NATO area with 30 divisions unless they were armed with nuclear material, and therefore the decision was being taken now as to the way in which he was going to fight in future. This is actually what he said:

“While he was not the one who made the policy, he would like to make it clear as to what had been asked of the Standing Group and which, he thought, had been faithfully reproduced in M.C. 48. He had said this: ‘It is unquestionably a political decision to decide whether or not there is an act of war, and there is no thought in our Headquarters that that should be a military decision — and certainly not one that our Headquarters should make.’

“But, it having been decided that there was an act of war, and that it was an all-out act of war, and not simply a local war, he felt it was not feasible to go to this or that strategy, that the political authorities would have to make up their minds in advance as to whether it was this or that, and it could not be changed at the last minute.”

You will notice that General Gruenther emphasized that “it is not feasible to go to this or that strategy,” and “this or that” referred to atomic or conventional strategy.

I recall very vividly the discussions surrounding the decision on M.C.48 which was taken by the Council. You may recall there was a difference of opinion between the United Kingdom and the United States, and there was a special meeting held of the Foreign Ministers of Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom and their Defence Ministers before the final meeting of the Council. Mr. Campney attended this meeting and gave me a clear account of the meeting as soon as he had returned from this discussion. He stated that Mr. Dulles had a direction from the President making it quite clear that the United States intended to press for approval of the Military Committee’s M.C.48, and the wording of the last phrase in the Council approval was, to use Mr. Dulles’ term, “left fuzzy” to avoid a discussion as to how the Council or governments would give their approval, mainly based on the fact that if the pattern of war was anything like it is being forecast there would be no time to get Council approval; it would mean actually going to war.

I would also invite you to study the statement made by Mr. Dulles at the Council meeting on 17 December, 1954, in which he emphasized that under modern conditions of war, atomic weapons could almost be regarded as a new form of conventional weapons and the free world would find it difficult to develop two separate strategies or two separate capabilities.

In another part of para. 16 you refer to the “so-called principle of civilian control, reaffirmed at the last December ministerial meeting” and its interpretation that member governments through the NATO Council rather than the military authorities would take the decision as to when nuclear weapons would be used. I attended every session of this meeting of the Council and I fail to find even any discussion recorded in the minutes which could be interpreted as leaving to the Council the decision as to whether nuclear weapons would be used or not. I would refer you to the directive issued by the Council, which clearly states in para. 4(d): "To deal with armed aggression other than that referred to in (b) above (border incidents) in accordance with the concept of forward strategy, counting on the use of nuclear weapons at the outset." Further, para. 6 of the directive states: "The responsibility of governments to make decisions for putting NATO plans into action in the event of hostilities is not affected by this directive." I would emphasize again what this para. 6 means to the military: it is a decision to put into effect existing plans, and existing plans call for the use of nuclear weapons for the defence of the NATO area with the exception that they will not be used for border incidents. Nowhere is there any suggestion that if the NATO area is attacked the Supreme Allied Commander is required to get permission from the Council before he can use thermonuclear weapons.

The reason I am so worried about this interpretation is that it would be completely impracticable to put into effect. I would draw your attention to para. 8 of the political directive which lays down that "in any case the consequences of attack on NATO without warning are such that the NATO forces and facilities directly related to early warning and nuclear retaliatory action must be kept in constant readiness at all times." This indicates that the nuclear forces must be ready to react immediately when an attack is made without warning, but in accordance with your interpretation the Supreme Allied Commander would be required to go to the Council and secure authority from the Council to use these retaliatory weapons. If such were the case, as far as I know there is no procedure in our instructions given to Mr. Wilgress as to what he will do if such a request is made. From my knowledge of the Government War Book, there is no provision in that book or indication that the Government will have to take a decision on such a point very rapidly. As I am unaware of any instructions that Mr. Wilgress has regarding action he would take if SACEUR made such a request, I presume that all Mr. Wilgress could do would be to send a wire and get authority from Ottawa. As this could arrive on any day, including a Sunday, I would see interminable delay in finding anyone who would take that kind of authority and therefore even under our own procedures it might be several hours or days before a decision could be taken. Under conditions of modern war the war would be lost and quite likely the whole of the NATO area destroyed.

This is not in line with reality. The NATO Council has no, repeat, no control over the Strategic Air Force,²³ which is the main retaliatory power of the West. This retaliatory power can be released by an order from the President and there is no hope that Congress would ever agree that the NATO Council would have any veto on the actions of the President to defend the United States. If we were to slavishly follow the suggestion in your para. 16, we might find the Supreme Allied Commander striving to get the agreement of fourteen countries for the use of nuclear weapons, with the Strategic Air Forces of the Soviet Union and the United States in full operation long before authority was given to SACEUR in Europe.

I would further point out that if any such matter were taken to the Council and the Council decided that nuclear weapons would not be used, this would spell complete defeat for the western forces in Europe, as the number of divisions available to General Norstad are only just sufficient provided they can count on the full use of thermonuclear weapons. It is the view of the military side of NATO that the decision to use thermonuclear weapons in any all-out war of the future in Western Europe was taken in 1954 and it cannot be changed unless the NATO nations are prepared to provide the necessary additional 70 divisions. The decision which is left for the political authorities to take is the decision as to whether NATO goes to war, and that has always been, and always will remain, a political decision.

²³ Foulkes fait allusion ici au Commandement aérien stratégique.
Foulkes is referring here to the Strategic Air Command.

As there is this considerable difference of opinion, I feel very strongly that we should settle this matter in our own minds and not make any further reference to this subject of Council authority to use or not to use thermonuclear weapons until this matter is thoroughly thrashed out and thoroughly documented. From discussions with Mr. Bryce, I understood that he proposed to reconvene this committee which was operating on the Fourth Power Problem. If that is the case, then perhaps this Committee would be the best place to straighten away this present matter. However, in the meantime I would suggest that perhaps your Department would like to prepare the documentation to support the statements you have made in para. 16.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES FOULKES

207.

DEA/50219-AM-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au président des Chefs d'état major*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Chiefs of Staff

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 6, 1957

Dear General Foulkes:

I have received your letter of August 8 concerning the United States proposal for NATO stockpiles of nuclear weapons, and I note with satisfaction your concurrence in our suggestion that this question should be in due time the subject of interdepartmental consultation. I see no difficulty in having this subject form part of the current study of the "Fourth Power Problem," and agree that the Committee mentioned in your letter should be the forum in which to examine the United States proposal.

2. In view of the considerable importance which you attach, in this context, to the related problem of "control" over the use of nuclear weapons, this department would also readily agree to have this particular issue considered in the Committee at the same time as the others.

3. I might say at this stage that the principle of civilian control over the use of nuclear weapons does not appear to this department to raise the apparently controversial issues which your letter under reference would seem to suggest. Our department's position, which we also understand to have been the Government's position, has always been that of General Gruenther, which you quote with approval in paragraph 6 of your letter: the implementation of MC(48) and the use of nuclear weapons must await a political decision: namely, that "there was an act of war, and that it was an all-out act of war, and not simply a local war." We know of course that NATO is committed to a strategy involving the use of nuclear weapons but the actual implementation of this strategy presupposes the political decision by the NATO governments that they are faced with an all-out act of war.

4. Perhaps it is not necessary to elaborate this principle that (in Mr. Dulles' words) "the authority to push the button... is vested in the civilian heads of government." In the case of NATO, this can evidently only mean the Council, which speaks and speaks alone for the NATO governments. Paragraphs 6 and 12 of your own letter seem thoroughly to approve the principle that only the political authorities can send NATO to war; and it can assuredly be taken for granted that the Council will not send NATO to war until the momentous consequences of thermo-nuclear retaliation have been taken into account.

5. It is true that varying circumstances, such as the case you raise of an all-out nuclear attack, would make the implementation of this principle more or less difficult; and no one, as far as we know, has refused to accept the resulting qualifications of the principle which circumstances might conceivably impose. But it would be wrong to suggest that, because the principle of civilian control was not elaborately articulated in the December 1954 meeting, agreement on this crucial point had not been reached. You refer to the American desire at this time for a vague formula; you will of course also recall the misgivings of European partners about a formula in which the principle of civilian control was not also expressed. Subsequently, Mr. Dulles, when approving MC(48) for the purpose of planning by the military authorities, agreed that such approval did not involve the delegation of the responsibility (which, as he pointed out, rested "in the civilian heads of government") "for putting plans into action in the event of hostilities." (C-VR(54)50 p.23) Subsequent discussion pointed to the importance attached to this qualification, which was incorporated both in the Council Resolution on M.C.48(C-R(54)50 para. 42(1)) and in the final Communiqué which was released. (C-M(54)123 para. 6) We have attached an annex which indicates some of the highlights of these discussions and of the circumstances under which they took place; but perhaps the best documentation is the Verbatim Record of the 50th Meeting of the NATO Council (C-VR(54)50, pp. 21ff). I would draw your attention particularly to the statement of the French representative, M. Temple:

"La délégation française approuve la proposition qui a été faite par le Secrétariat International et est prête à voter en sa faveur. Nous pensons en effet que ce texte répond bien aux deux préoccupations que nous avons en vue:

1. laisser les Autorités militaires poursuivre leurs études sur les transformations des forces armées rendues nécessaires par l'emploi éventuel de l'arme atomique:
2. laisser aux pouvoirs politiques la décision d'employer ou non en cas de nécessité cette arme atomique." (loc.cil.,p.23)

6. There is also the other consideration which you have yourself mentioned, that NATO finds itself in this ambiguous position of having a strategy based on the concept of nuclear deterrents, while its main retaliatory force is actually to be found in the United States Strategic Air Command. The United States Strategic Air Command does not only serve as the nuclear retaliatory force of NATO, but constitutes as well the main defence of the United States, in any case of all-out aggression, whether or not this aggression is within the NATO area. No one would suggest that the NATO Council has either the right or the power to veto the directives which the President of the United States may give directly to his Strategic Air Command. The United States, however, have not shown any desire to "go it alone," should it come to an all-out nuclear conflict in Europe; and it is reasonable to expect, given the tremendous political importance of following such a course, that they will wish, if humanly possible, to consult their closest allies before releasing the power of the Strategic Air Force. It is obviously for these considerations that the United States representatives in NATO have always been reluctant to define the application of the principle of collective civilian control over the use of nuclear weapons, and it is because the other NATO members appreciated and understood the United States position that none has ever pressed in the NATO Council for anything more than the wording used by the Council on December 17, 1954 in approving MC-48.

7. In short, the principle that the civilian heads of government would not delegate the authority "to push the button" was unanimously reaffirmed in December 1954 with the clear implication that such decisions, insofar as they were taken by NATO, would be taken in the Council and not by the military authorities. To suggest otherwise would, I am sure, give rise to the strongest objections from several NATO governments, and might well in fact induce these governments to press for an even more rigid formula of civilian control than that which exists at present. This is only plain political realism, which was again more than confirmed recently when the question arose of stationing atomic weapons in certain European NATO countries.

8. Since 1954, however, there have been new developments which may call for a re-assessment of the conditions under which the principle of civilian control ought to be exercised. On the one hand, a wider range of nuclear weapons have been developed, from the so-called "tactical weapons" to H-bombs of unpredictable capacity. On the other hand, governments have now come to realize that the implications of a declaration of war may not be as precise, in terms of weapons to be used, as they have been in the past. It was in part to meet these changing circumstances that NATO members considered it necessary last year to undertake a military reappraisal and to formulate at the December ministerial meeting a new Political Directive. This directive has confirmed that aggression against the NATO area could assume several forms, not all of which would necessarily call for the use of nuclear weapons at the outset. The emergence of the possibility of "minor outbreaks," to use Mr. Dulles' expression, means in effect that NATO member governments may no longer have only the task of declaring whether or not an all-out act of aggression has been committed, but they may also have the responsibility for determining the actual nature and degree of the "aggression" in case of any acts of apparent hostility such as those mentioned in para 4(b) Part II of the Political Directive.

9. Document M.C.70 entitled "Minimum Essential Force Requirements" now under preparation by SACEUR will probably throw some light on the possibility of graduated defence, including or excluding nuclear weapons, and civilian and military responsibilities may have to be reconsidered in the light of that document. Moreover, the fact that it is now planned to provide forward troops with tactical nuclear weapons will give a fresh impetus to reviewing the problem of the implementation of political control over the use of these weapons and to the development of procedures to render this implementation as effective as possible.

Yours sincerely,
JULES LÉGER

208.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Note pour le Comité sur les aspects économiques
des questions de la défense*

Memorandum to Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions

DOCUMENT ED 6-57

[Ottawa], November 18, 1957

TOP SECRET

STOCKPILING OF ATOMIC WARHEADS FOR TACTICAL WEAPONS IN EUROPE

The Council has already approved in principle of the equipment of the shield forces with atomic weapons. MC/48 adopted at the 1954 December Meeting of Council approved a new NATO strategy based on the use of tactical nuclear weapons to counter an all-out attack by the Soviet Union. The Political Directive (CM(56)138 Final) approved at the December 1956 Meeting states that: "The shield forces must include the capability to respond quickly, should the situation so require, with nuclear weapons to any type of aggression. They must, of course, also have the capability to deal with the situations envisaged in 4(6) (Local actions) without necessarily having recourse to nuclear weapons." MC/48/2 confirms this agreement. The implementation of this agreed strategy by the stockpiling of atomic warheads for tactical weapons in Europe will be raised for the first time in December. It involves a number of problems for NATO, not all of which can be decided at the December meeting. The main problems would appear to be the following:

The Problem of Control

The Political Directive sets out The Principle of Civilian Control: "The responsibility of governments to make decisions for putting NATO military plans into action in the event of hostilities is not affected by this directive." It is clear that the SAC, which is not only the nuclear deterrent for NATO, but also for the U.S., would be governed by decisions of the President of the U.S. The principle is not clear for tactical nuclear weapons. We understand that the U.S. intention is to stockpile the nuclear warheads in Europe but to retain ownership and control in U.S. hands through an American logistic chain. SACEUR would have operational control under the NATO Council. The real question at issue is whether a declaration of war by NATO governments would imply that SACEUR would have full control over the use of nuclear weapons under his command or whether Council should retain a degree of control over the use of tactical atomic weapons. The Political Directive recognizes the possibility of localized hostilities. It is evident that an important element in ensuring that localized hostilities do not turn into all-out nuclear warfare may involve the decision as to whether or not to use nuclear weapons. Many governments will feel that this decision should rest with the Council. In practice, however, this might prove a most difficult responsibility for Council as presently constituted and might involve unacceptable delays for countries whose forces are directly involved.

Before a decision to stockpile atomic warheads is taken, some countries may feel that the Political Directive should be modified to make more explicit the manner in which the decision to use them could be taken. In our view, this would be a most difficult subject to take up at the Heads of Government Meeting and we feel that the Canadian Delegation should support the view that it should be considered at the Ministerial Meeting which will be called to consider MC/70.

The Problem of Acceptance

It would appear that the European countries will be primarily concerned with the problem of acceptance and the terms under which they would accept the stockpiling of nuclear warheads on their territories. In order to restrict the Fourth Power Problem, the Canadian Delegation should support the present U.S. plan for stockpiling under U.S. control in European countries. Under present U.S. law, no other plan could be implemented.

It would not appear that there will be any immediate decision necessary on the provision of atomic warheads for the use of our Brigade in Germany. Our agreement to the stockpiling scheme would, however, pave the way for eventual equipment of the Brigade with atomic weapons should this meet the requirements of the military authorities and the agreement of the Canadian government. The same considerations would apply to the Air Division.

The Political Problem

While there is an obvious and accepted requirement for strengthening the shield forces, a decision to provide atomic stockpiles in Europe is certain to give rise to violent reactions for the Communist countries, particularly if Germany is involved. The reaction from India and other uncommitted countries is likely to be unfavourable and there are already indications that the announcement will have a mixed reception in Europe.

It will therefore be necessary to consider very carefully the context in which these and other announcements (missiles) will be presented.

To meet this problem, the United States have in mind:

- (1) A widening of the knowledge of the total capabilities of security that are in being or in prospect.
- (2) An assurance that this power will in fact be available in case of need for common security.
- (3) An assurance that it will not be used for purposes other than individual or collective self defence as authorized by the United Nations.

We have made a proposal in the Council that a Declaration should be drawn up for the Heads of Government with a view to meeting this political problem in a wider context. Our views on what this Declaration might contain are considered in a separate paper.

209.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité
sur les aspects économiques des questions de la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 22, 1957

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce, Secretary to the Cabinet.
 General C. Foulkes, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff.
 Mr. F.R. Miller, Deputy Minister of National Defence.
 Mr. D.A. Golden, Deputy Minister of Defence Production.
 Dr. A.H. Zimmerman, Chairman, Defence Research Board.
 Dr. E.W.R. Steacie, President, National Research Council.
 Mr. L. Rasminsky, Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada.
 Mr. J.B.C. Watkins, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 Mr. A.F.W. Plumpre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance.
 Mr. W.R. Martin, Privy Council Office. (Secretary)
 Mr. D.B. Dewar, Privy Council Office. (Assistant Secretary)

Also Present

Mr. P. Tremblay, Mr. F.H. Hooton, Department of External Affairs.
 Mr. R.G. MacNeill, Mr. E. Gallant, Department of Finance.
 Mr. F.A. Milligan, Department of Defence Production.
 Dr. J.D. Babbitt, National Research Council.

II. STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS IN NATO COUNTRIES

(Document ED6-57 had been circulated.)

(Document ED6(a)-57, dated November 21, 1957,† from the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, was circulated at the Meeting.)

5. Mr. Tremblay said there were indications that some European countries might be reluctant to accept the stockpiling of nuclear weapons on their territories. Moreover, the position of France would likely be that although the weapons would be accepted, such acceptance should not be considered prejudicial to the future possibility of France manufacturing nuclear weapons herself.

6. Dr. Steacie said that complete freedom of exchange of information might persuade the French not to undertake the making of nuclear weapons, which was very expensive, because such an exchange would satisfy prestige considerations.

7. General Foulkes agreed and said that if France were convinced that the nuclear stockpile and the missile bases in France satisfied her security needs she might not undertake manufacture of nuclear weapons. Under the United States plan, SACEUR would be in possession of the nuclear weapons in his capacity as a United States officer and they would be released to NATO forces only at the direction of the President. This was a good system of control over the use of the weapons and merited the support of Canada. The quantity of weapons in question was not large and they were of tactical range only; they could be considered as defensive weapons which lent strength to the shield. The provision of Intermediate Range Ballistic Missiles in Europe was another matter. Because these missiles had a range of about 1500 miles, they formed part of the retaliatory force rather than the shield.

8. Mr. Tremblay said the new element in the situation was that the European countries would for the first time have tactical nuclear weapons on their territory. It was to be expected that in the case of small wars, which did not call forth full nuclear retaliation, these countries would want to have some control over the use of these weapons. If a formula were devised to give the European countries more control over the use of these tactical weapons, the question would arise whether Canada should also use this formula.

9. General Foulkes said that it had already been decided that Canadian and United States forces could use defensive nuclear weapons over Canada in war. Since our forces in Europe made up only a small part of the shield, Canada should not become too deeply involved in suggestions as to how best the defence of Western Europe should be conducted.

10. Mr. Bryce said that since Canada would not be threatened except in a major war our real interest was in ensuring that SACEUR did not make a wrong judgment between a general attack and a small border incident in Europe.

11. General Foulkes said that the political directive was clear in saying that SACEUR must deal with border incidents without using nuclear weapons. At the same time it was unrealistic to expect a military commander to wait for authority from the Permanent Council or from governments to use nuclear weapons should a small incident develop quickly into general war. The decision must be taken now at the political level as to what general instructions were to be given to the military commanders. However, no commander could be expected to forego the use of all the weapons with which he had been supplied to repel an attack. Nuclear tactical weapons were replacing army and corps artillery. The decision as to whether NATO was faced with a border incident or a "limited attack" would be made by SACEUR, and in making this decision he would at the same time be deciding whether to use tactical nuclear weapons. Should a border incident show signs of developing into a larger attack, SACEUR would of course use whatever time was available to him for consulting with his political superiors.

12. Mr. Bryce said that the distinction between the two types of attack could not, strictly speaking, be said to be of direct Canadian concern, but it was a very serious matter for the Europeans. Would they be willing to let SACEUR make the decision, and if not what sort of political decision-making procedure would be acceptable? If this problem were raised at the NATO meeting, Canada would have to take a position on it.

13. Mr. Miller said he thought the distinction between a border incident and a "limited attack" would be quite easy to make.

14. General Foulkes commented that since the question related to the defence of Europe and did not directly affect Canada our Ministers should be advised not to intervene in it.²⁴ Ministers should be briefed, however, on the implications for Canada of the United States proposal to stockpile atomic warheads in NATO countries. The Canadian requirements for such warheads were quite small. The Canadian Infantry Brigade group assigned to SACEUR would not [likely be equipped with] a ground-to-ground missile of the close support type until about 1960. The RCN and perhaps the RCAF Maritime forces would probably require nuclear depth bombs and torpedoes which could be kept in United States installations on the Canadian east coast for transfer to Canadian forces on the out-break of ²⁴ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

It does directly affect Canada: if the U.S. are involved we are. We also have troops in the field. We are surely more committed than Portugal. [Jules Léger] war. No decision would be required in the immediate future on the provision of nuclear weapons for the Canadian Air Defence Forces.

15. Mr. Bryce suggested that although an immediate decision on acceptance of nuclear warhead stockpiles in Canada did not seem to be necessary, it might be desirable for this country to indicate willingness to accept them in order to help overcome the reluctance of other NATO countries to accept. If the government agreed, consultations could be held with the United States on this subject and an announcement made in Parliament before the NATO meeting of a Canadian decision to accept stockpiles in Canada of defensive tactical weapons from the United States. There would be no question of storing offensive nuclear weapons in Canada and it could be pointed out that the defensive weapons would be used only in accordance with NATO plans to repel a major attack on the NATO area.

16. General Foulkes, in reply to a question from Mr. Bryce, said that he saw no advantage to Canada in obtaining nuclear weapons for our own use (as opposed to accepting nuclear warhead stockpiles) even if the McMahon Act were amended to allow it.²⁵ Canada would have no need for the weapons unless the United States were at war also, and it would be more economical to accept them from American control only on the outbreak of war. Purchase of nuclear weapons from the United States would be disadvantageous also because it might weaken the system of control over the use of the weapons which we were attempting to establish in NATO.

17. The Panel agreed -

(a) to recommend to Ministers that, after consultation with the United States, Canada should publically announce, prior to the Heads of Government Meeting, that for defensive purposes it would accept the stockpiling of nuclear warheads in Canada;

(b) to recommend to Ministers that Canada should not take an active part in discussions about the problem of political control over the use of tactical nuclear weapons in Europe; and

(c) that External Affairs and National Defence should revise the background paper for Ministers on this subject.

...

²⁵ La loi de McMahon, appelée officiellement la Loi sur le contrôle de l'énergie atomique, a été initialement promulguée en 1946 et a permis d'empêcher que des armes nucléaires américaines soient contrôlées ou utilisées par un autre pays.

The McMahon Act, officially termed the Atomic Energy Act, was originally enacted in 1946 and prevented American nuclear weapons from being controlled or employed by another country.

210.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM DL-1042

Ottawa, November 26, 1957

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

YOUR MEETING WITH MR. DULLES

With reference to your conversation with the Minister, we are sending by separate telegram† sections of the Minister's statement relating to NATO which he will deliver tomorrow in the House.²⁶

2. We are most concerned at the almost total lack of official information on the proposals which the U.S. government will make to the NATO meeting. When you talk to Mr. Dulles, it would be helpful if you could secure from him some more definite information on what U.S. has in mind. As you know we have some information which has never been confirmed on stock-piling, missiles and scientific and technical cooperation but it is important that we should have something more definite if we are to prepare adequately for the NATO meeting.

3. Apart from these three subjects, we should like to know whether the U.S. will have any proposals on the question of balanced forces. We would also like to know what content they intend to give to the principle of interdependence, i.e. will this be related only to missile production and to scientific and technical cooperation or will there be other proposals.

4. Any information you can secure on these points would be most helpful. We should also like to know what sorts of decision the U.S. envisages at the meeting. We would assume that in view of the shortness of time available before the meeting the decisions to be taken would have to be in general terms leaving details to be worked out later.

211.

DEA/50370-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2514

Washington, November 26, 1957

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 2508 Nov 26.†

Repeat London, NATO Paris (Information).

²⁶ Voir Chambre des Communes, Débats, volume II, 1957-1958, pp. 1590 à 1599.
See House of Commons, Debates, Volume II, 1957-58, pp. 1511-1520.

DISCUSSION CONCERNING NATO MEETING WITH SECRETARY OF STATE
(MISSILE PROGRAMME)

In view of the news with regard to the President,²⁷ and the pressure of preparatory meetings on the Secretary, we have not yet been able to cover all the points mentioned in your telegram DL-1042 November 26. With regard to the missile programme, however, the Secretary had some interesting things to say which should be reported. He began by indicating that intelligence forecasts, going back over the period of recent years, had indicated the likelihood that the Soviets would have in operational form the IRBM and the ICBM by 1960. Until that date, long range bombers would continue to be the main strategic USA weapon, and it had been anticipated that this would remain true for a period after 1960. By and large, the USA had shaped its programme on the assumption that its long range bombers would be supplemented by operational missiles by about 1960. The Secretary said that even after a review of recent events, the view here was that there was nothing seriously wrong with that assumption and the production programme based upon it. Although he thought it was possible that the Soviets had perhaps gained a year in the development of operational missiles, he doubted whether enough of these could be produced to advance the date of the anticipated missile threat from the USSR ahead of 1960.

2. The USA expected to have an operational IRBM in production by the end of 1958 or the beginning of 1959, and while there were no grounds for complacency, programmes with respect to missile development were already in hand. The big question facing the USA authorities was whether action should be taken to accelerate present programmes at considerable additional cost in order to meet the present psychological demand for a "crash programme," or alternatively whether it would not be preferable, both from a military and financial point of view, to delay going into accelerated production until an improved and better weapon is available. The Secretary made it clear that this question had not yet been settled within the Administration, and indeed that he was about to participate in a meeting with military officials to see what the answer should be. So far as the military judgment was concerned, there was no desire to embark on a crash programme, mainly for the reason that a more effective weapon could be developed, with the acceptance of some delay, to meet anticipated missile requirements. While Mr. Dulles did not commit himself on his view, or on the final outcome, he said that his personal feeling was against yielding to the current crisis psychology and to support an orderly and planned programme of production in this field.

3. In addition to these internal problems of production which had not yet been settled, the Secretary said that the "reception" of missiles by other NATO countries presented a series of complicated problems. There had, for example, to be a determination of whether these new weapons were wanted, and where they should be located. There was the problem of establishing appropriate conditions of use, and the related problem of authority and command. There was the additional question of providing training, and the need for reaching agreement with recipient governments as to the complicated and expensive launching sites required. The Secretary added that, although the arrangements for the reception of the IRBM in the UK had been discussed before Bermuda, a number of these questions had not yet been settled between the two governments. He thought, therefore, that even if the new weapons were not to reach full production for a period of about 18 months, a period of this order would be needed in order to settle questions of this sort between the USA and recipient countries, and there would in fact be no delay due to production factors.

²⁷ Le 25 novembre 1957, le président Dwight Eisenhower a eu un léger accident cérébrovasculaire. On November 25, 1957, President Eisenhower suffered a mild stroke.

4. I told the Secretary that I thought the problem of control was of central importance, and raised with him the prospects for a possible pooling of production in the missile field involving the European NATO members. It was clear from his comments that they are envisaging some form of pooling of production in the weapons field, but it is difficult to say on the basis of our brief discussion how far and how fast this aspect can be advanced by December. Quite apart from the legislative problem affecting the warheads, with which you are familiar, the Secretary anticipated other technical and security problems which would have to be ironed out before any substantial progress could be made in this direction.

212.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Projet de note du Comité sur les aspects économiques
des questions de la défense pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Draft Memorandum from Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions to Cabinet Defence Committee

DOCUMENT ED 10-57

[Ottawa], November 26, 1957

TOP SECRET

DEPLOYMENT, PRODUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT OF INTERMEDIATE RANGE BALLISTIC MISSILES IN EUROPE

Apart from the stockpiling in Europe of atomic warheads for tactical weapons, we have learned unofficially that the U.S. government is preparing a broad scheme for announcement at the December Meeting for dividing the responsibility for future production of missiles between North America and Europe. Under this scheme, North America (i.e. the United States) would concentrate on missiles of the ICBM type and Europe on IRBM. In application of this policy, the U.S. would divide the intermediate range missiles into three categories:

(i) Missiles which have been tested and which are already on production lines in the United States.

(ii) Missiles which have not been tested but which they are sure will be successful and are near the production stage.

(iii) Missiles which are in the research and early development stage.

According to our unofficial information, missiles in the first category would be supplied to some European countries from production lines in the United States. With regard to the second category, a Missile Production Authority would be set up under the NATO Defence Production Committee which would arrange for European production of IRBM's. With regard to the third category, a Missile Research Institute would be set up under NATO for the future development of missiles.

It is the U.S. intention that IRBM's stationed in Europe should remain completely under the control of SACEUR and not under national military organizations.

IRBM's with a range of 1500 miles would have little or no operational value if based in North America and are therefore of no direct interest to the Canadian forces. If stationed in Europe and armed with nuclear warheads, they could penetrate into the heart of European Russia.

The IRBM is a strategic weapon. Up to the present, all strategic weapons have been held outside the control of NATO viz U.S. Strategic Air Command and U.K. Long Range Bomber Force. The introduction of IRBM's under SACEUR will involve a new and direct interest for NATO in the launching of the strategic offensive. Accordingly, a decision to station IRBM's in EUROPE should be regarded as a deployment of the deterrent rather than as a strengthening of the shield forces. This will involve some revision of the NATO strategic concept, but this aspect is not expected to be considered in detail at the December meeting.

It would appear only logical to station IRBM's in an area where they would be effective. They would be a very valuable addition to the deterrent strength of the Alliance. The provision of IRBM's to European countries and the arrangements under which they would develop and produce them would provide important new strength for the continent of EUROPE besides developing the concept of interdependence within NATO. The Panel, therefore, recommends that the Canadian Delegation should support a decision to base, develop and produce IRBM's in Europe. Canada is not, however, directly involved in such a decision. This is a problem for the European countries and one which will involve a number of them in serious political difficulties.

We have no information on how missiles might be produced under a NATO Missile Authority nor any further indications regarding the establishment of a Missile Research Institute. The implications are that they would be developed and produced under multilateral schemes, probably involving multilateral financing. It is too early to say whether and to what extent Canada might become involved, but it would appear that this is largely a European responsibility since there would be no foreseeable Canadian requirement for missiles of the IRBM type.

The production of missiles by Germany involves a special problem. Under the London Agreements which provided for the entry of Germany into NATO, the Federal Republic agreed to refrain from the production of missiles. These agreements provide, however, that this prohibition can be amended or canceled on the request of the Federal Republic and the competent NATO Supreme Commander by a two-thirds majority of the W.E.U. Council of Ministers. There are indications that neither Germany nor France would wish to amend or cancel this prohibition at the present time. The alternative would be to have Germany participate in some multilateral scheme for developing and producing missiles. In this case, the provisions of the London Agreements are considered not to apply.

Conclusions and Recommendations:

(1) The provision, development and production of IRBM's for European NATO countries would provide important new strength for the continent of Europe besides developing the concept of interdependence within NATO.

(2) There is no requirement for IRBM's for Canada or for our forces stationed in Europe. Decisions regarding the stationing of IRBM's and their production and development in Europe are primarily the concern of the European members of the Alliance.

(3) The Panel recommends that the Canadian Delegation should give general approval to the proposals for stationing, developing and producing IRBM's in Europe under appropriate control arrangements.

213.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Projet de note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures et du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le Cabinet*

*Draft Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs and Minister of National Defence
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. ED 9-57

[Ottawa], November 27, 1957

TOP SECRET

STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN NATO COUNTRIES

1. Recent Soviet developments emphasize the significance of public statements by the President of the United States and Mr. Dulles in July 1957,²⁸ and again by Mr. Dulles in November 1957,²⁹ to the effect that the United States government is considering the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in NATO countries. Under such a programme it is understood that nuclear warheads would be kept under the control and custody of United States officers to avoid amendment to the United States Atomic Energy Act. It is expected that a proposal to this effect will be made by the United States at the forthcoming NATO heads of governments meeting in Paris.

NATO and Nuclear Weapons

2. NATO strategy depends upon the possession of nuclear weapons in two principal components of its military structure, that is, the national retaliatory forces of the United States and the United Kingdom and the collective shield forces of the NATO countries. In the case of the retaliatory forces the stockpiling of nuclear weapons has had in the past little direct implication to other NATO countries. However, with the proposed introduction of Intermediate Range Ballistic Missiles (IRBM) to be located in some of the NATO countries in Europe this will have a significant implication to such countries because of their involvement in the launching of a strategic nuclear offensive although such missiles would be under the direct control of SACEUR. In the case of the NATO shield forces the possibility of United States stockpiles abroad is significant as a measure to implement the decision in the current NATO Political Directive that "The shield forces must include the capability to respond quickly, should the situation so require, with nuclear weapons to any type of aggression."

3. It has been recognized that the shield forces are only effective as a deterrent against numerically superior Soviet forces if equipped with nuclear weapons. The alternative would be to raise much larger conventional forces, a course unacceptable to the NATO countries. As a result shield forces are being developed with weapon delivery on the assumption that nuclear warheads will be available on the outbreak of war. It is understood that tactical missiles and delivery systems would be incorporated in National forces, and the custody and control of the atomic warheads wherever located, would be vested in the Supreme Allied Commanders in their capacities as United States officers.

²⁸ Voir le document 205, note 17./See Document 205, 17n.

²⁹ Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXVII, No. 963, December 9, 1957, pp. 916-922.

Canadian Nuclear Weapons Requirements

4. (a) Canadian requirements for nuclear weapons under present plans are limited:

(i) The Canadian Infantry Brigade Group assigned to the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe require a ground-to-ground missile of the close support type (Little John rocket) from about 1960.

(ii) Royal Canadian Navy and possibly Royal Canadian Air Force maritime forces earmarked for the Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic require nuclear depth bombs and torpedoes.

(iii) Canadian air defence forces will not be equipped for nuclear weapons unless a decision is reached on the adoption of the MB1 air-to-air missile or a successor by the Royal Canadian Air Force.

(b) As the Intermediate Range Ballistic Missile is a strategic weapon there is no requirement for this weapon in the Canadian forces and in view of its range it would have no operational use based in North America.

Implications to Canada

5. The main problems arising from the stockpiling of nuclear warheads appear to be associated with storage, maintenance and control. As far as Canada is concerned these problems would be negligible in Europe where Canadian requirements could be met from stockpiles in other NATO countries under the custody and control of SACEUR as a United States officer.

6. The needs of the Royal Canadian Navy and Royal Canadian Air Force maritime forces could be provided from stocks at a United States base in the United States or in Canada which could be under the custody and control of SACLANT also a United States officer. If however nuclear warheads should be required by Canadian air defence forces they would have to be stored at each RCAF fighter base in Canada under the nominal custody of a United States officer.

7. Discussions with government departments concerned has revealed that no change in Canadian legislation would be required, but that minor modifications to regulations would be needed, to permit stockpiling of nuclear warheads in Canada for the use of Canadian forces, or for the use of United States air defence forces at Goose Bay, Labrador and Ernest Harmon Air Force Base, Newfoundland.

Recommendations

8. This proposal has been considered by the Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence Questions and it is recommended that Canada should support such a proposal for the stockpiling of nuclear warheads in NATO countries and that consideration be given to the advisability of informing Parliament of the government's intention to concur in such a proposal.

9. We concur in the above recommendation.

Secretary of State for External Affairs

Minister of National Defence

214.

DEA/50030-K-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité
sur les aspects économiques des questions de la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 4, 1957

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce, Secretary to the Cabinet.
 Mr. F.R. Miller, Deputy Minister of National Defence.
 Mr. J. Léger, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
 General Charles Foulkes, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff.
 Dr. A.H. Zimmerman, Chairman, Defence Research Board.
 Mr. D.A. Golden, Deputy Minister of Defence Production.
 Mr. L. Rasminsky, Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada.
 Mr. A.F.W. Plumptre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance.
 Dr. J.D. Babbitt, National Research Council.
 Mr. W.R. Martin, Privy Council Office. (Secretary)
 Mr. D.B. Dewar, Privy Council Office. (Assistant Secretary)

Also Present

Mr. R.G. MacNeill, Department of Finance.
 Mr. F.H. Hooton, Department of External Affairs.
 Mr. F.A. Milligan, Department of Defence Production.

. . .

II. STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS IN NATO COUNTRIES.

(Documents ED9-57 and ED12-57† had been circulated.)

3. Mr. Bryce referred to the discussion at the previous meeting of the Panel, when it had been agreed to recommend to Ministers that after consultation with the United States, Canada should publicly announce prior to the Heads of Governments Meeting, that for defensive purposes it would accept the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in Canada. Such an announcement would give Parliament an opportunity to discuss the decision before the meeting, and might assist the United States in its efforts to overcome the reluctance of some NATO countries to accept nuclear weapon stockpiles on their territories.

4. General Foulkes commented that in raising the matter with the United States, we should want to find out whether they thought such an announcement would in fact be helpful to them.

5. Mr. Léger said that it was difficult to estimate the effect of such an announcement prior to the Ministerial Meeting on the attitude of the European countries. Apart from France, most of the European member countries had so far shown little interest in the United States stockpiling plan. It was doubtful whether an announcement that Canada had decided to accept the plan would have very much influence with those countries, who felt that their position was quite different from ours. Would Canada announce at the same time that she was willing, when necessary, to arm her forces in Europe with weapons capable of using nuclear warheads stockpiled on the territories of European member countries? The deployment of such stockpiles and the procedure by which they would be released for use raised very difficult political problems, among them the problems of consultation and of political control over the decision to go to war.

6. Mr. Bryce agreed that the problems raised were very difficult, but suggested that their solution should not be made a precondition to a decision on stockpiling of nuclear weapons being taken by NATO.

7. The Panel:

(a) considered and agreed to certain revisions in the document on Stockpiling of Nuclear Weapons in NATO Countries;

(b) agreed to recommend to Ministers that Canada should support a proposal for the stockpiling of nuclear warheads in NATO countries, and that the Government should give consideration now to the advisability of informing Parliament of Government policy in regard to the principle of stockpiling defensive nuclear weapons in Canada and arming Canadian forces in Europe with defensive nuclear weapons if NATO and the countries concerned should decide that these shield forces should be so armed.

III. ARMING NATO FORCES WITH MODERN WEAPONS.

(Document ED10-57 had been circulated.)

8. Mr. Bryce asked whether the recommendations in the document should be taken to mean that strategic weapons would be given to European NATO countries, or that U.S. strategic weapons would be placed in Europe as well as elsewhere.

9. General Foulkes said that SACEUR had indicated during his visit to Ottawa that Intermediate Range Ballistic Missiles would not be given to the national forces of European member countries. Although more satisfactory from the point of view of control over the IRBMs, such a restriction would place the United States and the United Kingdom in a special position in NATO, and might be difficult for the European member countries to accept.

10. Mr. Léger noted that Canada had no requirement for IRBMs either at home or for our forces in Europe, and suggested that the document be rewritten in the form of an information brief with the recommendation only that Canada had no direct concern in the matter.

11. The Panel agreed:

(a) that the subject of arming NATO Forces with Intermediate Range Ballistic Missiles did not properly fall within its field; and

(b) that External Affairs and National Defence should submit the paper to Ministers as an information brief after making whatever revisions were necessary.

W.R. MARTIN
Secretary

D.B. DEWAR
Assistant Secretary

215.

DEA/50219-AL-1-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
et du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs and Minister of National Defence
to Cabinet*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 3, 1957

STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN NATO COUNTRIES

1. Recent Soviet developments emphasize the significance of public statements by the President of the United States and Mr. Dulles in July 1957, and again by Mr. Dulles in November 1957, to the effect that the United States government is considering the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in NATO countries. Under such a programme it is understood that nuclear warheads would be kept under the control and custody of United States officers to avoid amendment to the United States Atomic Energy Act. It is expected that a proposal to this effect will be made by the United States at the forthcoming NATO heads of governments meeting in Paris.

NATO and Nuclear Weapons

2. NATO strategy depends upon the possession of nuclear weapons in two principal components of its military structure, that is, the national retaliatory forces of the United States and the United Kingdom and the collective shield forces of the NATO countries. In the case of the retaliatory forces the stockpiling of nuclear weapons has had in the past little direct implication to other NATO countries. However, with the proposed introduction of Intermediate Range Ballistic Missiles (IRBM) to be located in some of the NATO countries in Europe this will have a significant implication to such countries because of their involvement in the launching of a strategic nuclear offensive although such missiles would be under the direct control of SACEUR. In the case of the NATO shield forces the possibility of United States stockpiles abroad is significant as a measure to implement the decision in the current NATO Political Directive that "The shield forces must include the capability to respond quickly, should the situation so require, with nuclear weapons to any type of aggression."

3. It has been recognized that the shield forces are only effective as a deterrent against numerically superior Soviet forces if equipped with nuclear weapons. As a result shield forces are being developed with weapon delivery systems on the assumption that nuclear warheads will be available on the outbreak of war. It is understood that tactical missiles and delivery systems would be incorporated in National forces, and the custody and control of the atomic warheads wherever located, would be vested in the Supreme Allied Commanders in their capacities as United States officers.

Canadian Nuclear Weapons Requirements

4. (a) The Chiefs of Staff envisage future Canadian requirements for nuclear weapons as presently planned as follows:

- (i) The Canadian Infantry Brigade Group assigned to the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe require a ground-to-ground missile of the close support type (Little John rocket) from about 1960.

(ii) Royal Canadian Navy and possibly Royal Canadian Air Force maritime forces earmarked for the Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic require nuclear depth bombs and torpedoes.

(iii) Although it seems likely that Canadian air defence forces, at least in North America, will eventually require air-to-air missiles with atomic warheads, no decision has yet been reached to adopt either the MB1, which is used now by the U.S.A.F., or any alternative defensive weapon.

(b) As the Intermediate Range Ballistic Missile is a strategic weapon there is no requirement for this weapon in the Canadian forces and in view of its range it would have no operational use based in North America.

Implications to Canada

5. The main problems arising from the stockpiling of nuclear warheads appear to be associated with storage, maintenance and control. As far as Canada is concerned these problems would be negligible in Europe where Canadian requirements could be met from stockpiles in other NATO countries under the custody and control of SACEUR as a United States officer.

6. The needs of the Royal Canadian Navy and Royal Canadian Air Force maritime forces could be provided from stocks at a United States base in the United States or in Canada which could be under the custody and control of SACLANT also a United States officer. If however nuclear warheads should be required by Canadian air defence forces they would have to be stored at each RCAF fighter base in Canada under the nominal custody of a United States officer.

7. Discussions with government departments concerned has revealed that no change in Canadian legislation would be required, but that minor modifications to regulations would be needed, to permit stockpiling of nuclear warheads in Canada for the use of Canadian forces, or for the use of United States air defence forces at Goose Bay, Labrador and Ernest Harmon Air Force Base, Newfoundland.

8. Heretofore the problem of civilian control over the use of nuclear weapons has been purely American and, more latterly, British. With the arming of the shield forces of other nations in Europe with such weapons, decisions will have to be reached as to the authority necessary to commit such forces to war. As yet no real resolution of this problem within the NATO context has been found. Undoubtedly a proposal to stockpile and use nuclear warheads for the shield forces will raise this problem, and thought will have to be given to a practical arrangement that will meet both the political and military necessities of the NATO partners.

Recommendation

9. The Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence Questions, which has considered this problem, recommends that Canada should support a proposal for the stockpiling of nuclear warheads in NATO countries, and arming Canadian forces in Europe with defensive nuclear weapons if NATO and the countries concerned should decide that these shield forces should be so armed.

10. We concur in this recommendation.³⁰

216.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 467

Paris, February 20, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, Paris, Bonn (Information)

USA-UK IRBM AGREEMENT

Burgess and Roberts gave the Council advance notice this morning that the USA-UK agreement on IRBM's would be made public early next week,³¹ probably Monday, and would then be circulated in the Council. Roberts explained that four squadrons, each of fifteen USA missiles and related equipment, would be located in the UK, to be manned and operated by RAF command personnel, who would be trained in the USA. The UK would provide sites and facilities. Warheads would remain in USA custody. Launching of the weapons would require joint decision of both governments in the light of circumstances at the time and having regard to the obligations of both governments under Article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty.

³⁰ Ce document n'a pas été présenté au Cabinet. Les décisions du Cabinet de la réunion du 12 décembre 1957 indiquent simplement que le ministre de la Défense, George Pearkes, « outlined the problems arising from the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in NATO countries and Canadian policy relating thereto ». On peut supposer que Pearkes a basé ses commentaires sur un mémoire au Cabinet qui a été approuvé officiellement par le Comité le 6 décembre 1957. H. Basil Robinson signale que ce document est l'un des documents « discussed informally » entre les responsables avant que n'ait lieu la réunion des chefs de gouvernement de l'OTAN à Paris en décembre 1957. (Voir H. B. Robinson, Diefenbaker's World: A Populist in Foreign Affairs [Toronto, 1989], p. 29.) Robinson déclare que le discours formulé avec soin que le premier ministre, John Diefenbaker, a prononcé à la réunion des chefs de gouvernement du 16 décembre 1957 représentait la position canadienne officielle sur la question des stocks d'armes nucléaires et du déploiement des missiles balistiques en Europe. Ce discours est publié en tant que document 254. Voir la quatrième partie du présent chapitre pour un compte rendu des décisions prises au cours de cette réunion au sujet des armes nucléaires.

This document was not submitted to Cabinet. At the December 12, 1957 Cabinet meeting, the Cabinet Conclusions simply record that Defence Minister George Pearkes "outlined the problems arising from the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in NATO countries and Canadian policy relating thereto." Presumably, Pearkes based his comments on the memorandum to Cabinet which had been officially approved by the Panel on December 6, 1957. H. Basil Robinson notes that this document was one of several papers "discussed informally" among officials prior to the NATO Heads of Government meeting in Paris in December 1957. (See H.B. Robinson, Diefenbaker's World: A Populist in Foreign Affairs [Toronto, 1989], p. 29.) Robinson states that Prime Minister Diefenbaker's carefully worded speech at the Heads of Government meeting on December 16, 1957 represented the official Canadian position on the issue of nuclear weapons stockpiles and ballistic missile deployment in Europe. This speech is printed as Document 254. See Part 4 of this chapter for an account of the decisions taken at this meeting concerning nuclear weapons.

³¹ Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXVIII, No. 977, March 17, 1958, pp. 418-419.

2. The Norwegian representative asked whether this agreement should be considered as within the framework of the December Ministerial decision that NATO military authorities should recommend to Council re the IRBM needs of the Alliance and that Council should then consider the various questions involved. Roberts replied quickly that the USA-UK agreement was an extension of bilateral arrangements of several years standing and had been agreed in principle at Bermuda last spring.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

217.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-209

Ottawa, February 27, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference; Your telegram 467 of February 20.
Repeat London, Washington (Information).

USA-UK IRBM AGREEMENT

We are somewhat concerned over the implications of the statement made by Roberts in Council concerning this matter.

2. In paragraph 8 of our telegram DL-64 of January 21³² we outlined what we thought would be a logical procedure to follow in order to implement the December Ministerial decision regarding the introduction and deployment of stocks of nuclear warheads and IRBMs. After reading Mr. Roberts' statement we are not sure that the validity of these views is recognized. We are prepared of course to agree that factually the US-UK agreement on IRBMs is an extension of the principles agreed upon at Bermuda but we find it difficult to understand why the UK should wish to emphasize that their current agreement with the US ought not to be considered in a NATO context.

3. Quite apart from the well known sensitivity of the French over the Bermuda agreement which Mr. Roberts' statement certainly did nothing to allay, it seems to us that the UK statement may give some encouragement to other NATO countries to bypass NATO when they enter into similar bilateral agreements. This would be unfortunate as we believe that the political implications of the decisions to be eventually reached over the stationing of IRBMs and storage of nuclear warheads in Europe are such that the Council should be kept fully informed of these negotiations in order to ensure that the political as well as the military factors involved are given due consideration.

4. We may have read more into Mr. Roberts' statement than he wished to convey to the Council but would be grateful for any further information you may be able to give us regarding the manner in which the Council envisages implementing Section III B(1) of document C-M(58)5.

³² Voir/See Document 185.

218.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 565

Paris, March 3, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY

Reference: Your Tel DL-209 Feb 27.

Repeat London, Washington (Information).

USA-UK IRBM AGREEMENT

USA-UK IRBM agreement stems from Macmillan-Eisenhower discussion in Bermuda last March and subsequent discussion Mr. Sandys had when he visited Washington later in the year. In this sense agreement does not derive from decision taken at December meeting of Heads of Government.

2. It is true, as you mention, that statement of Sir Frank Roberts in Council did nothing to allay well-known sensitivity of French over Bermuda agreement. I understand from Norstad that French are making difficulties. They want to have any USA-France IRBM agreement to be on all fours with USA-UK agreement.

3. In UK view role of IRBMs is equivalent to that of UK Bomber Command. That is why they are to be manned by UK bomber squadrons. As you know, UK Bomber Command is not subject to jurisdiction of SACEUR. From this it follows that SACEUR will not have jurisdiction over IRBM squadrons in UK. They will, however, coordinate plans with him in same way as SAC and UK Bomber Command have been coordinating plans with SACEUR.

4. SHAPE view is that when we come to the Continent we are in what is clearly recognized as being area of Allied Command Europe. SHAPE therefore feels that IRBM squadrons located on Continent should be subject to jurisdiction of SACEUR. They consider this particularly desirable because they wish IRBMs stationed on Continent to be used not only for strategic purposes but also to support SACEUR's tactical plans by knocking out airfield and assembly points which can be used by Russians for an all-out attack on Central Europe.

5. In this way we find a direct conflict developing between French sensitivity and desire to be treated in all respects the same as another member of Standing Group, namely UK, and SACEUR's desire to have complete jurisdiction over all IRBM squadrons located within area of Allied Command Europe. The situation is further complicated by desire of SACEUR to extend air defence to UK and to this degree coordinate British Isles with rest of area of Allied Command Europe.

6. It follows from this that attitude of Council towards implementation of Section III B(1) of document C-M(58)5 will depend upon how USA is able to overcome difficulties presented by present French attitude. It is intention of NATO military authorities fully to carry out provisions of December decisions. USA-UK IRBM agreement is not necessarily a precedent because it stems from an earlier bilateral understanding reached between the two countries prior to December meeting.

[L.D.] WILGROSS

219.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Note du chef de la 1^{re} Direction de liaison avec la Défense
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 9, 1958

ESTABLISHING OF TACTICAL ATOMIC WEAPONS AND IRBM'S IN EUROPE

In your note to me you asked the following questions; "Has SACEUR the sole responsibility in deciding (a) where tactical atomic weapons are to be stockpiled? (B) where IRBM launching sites are to be built? Does he have to report to Council?"

You will recall that decisions relating to IRBM and stocks of nuclear warheads were set out in the communiqué of the Heads of Government Meeting last December as follows:

(20) To this end, NATO has decided to establish stocks of nuclear warheads, which will be readily available for the defence of the Alliance in case of need. In view of the present Soviet policies in the field of new weapons, the Council has also decided that intermediate range ballistic missiles will have to be put at the disposal of the Supreme Allied Commander Europe.

(21) The deployment of these stocks and missiles and arrangements for their use will accordingly be decided in conformity with NATO defence plans and in agreement with the states directly concerned. The NATO military authorities have been requested to submit to the Council at an early date their recommendations on the introduction of these weapons in the common defence. The Council in permanent session will consider the various questions involved.

In conformity with the Council decisions outlined in these two paragraphs, SACEUR is undertaking negotiations at the military level with chiefs of staff of the countries in which he wishes to establish stocks of nuclear warheads and IRBM launching sites. The Standing Group on the advice of SACEUR has provided guidance on the introduction of tactical weapons units which can be armed with nuclear warheads. This guidance is contained in the country annexes to MC70. It is expected that, following the Defence Ministers Conference, Council will have to accept MC70 for planning purposes. While the acceptance for planning purposes will probably not include multilateral acceptance of the country guidance, it is nevertheless the case that if no objections are raised to the guidance, this will be an indication of at least multilateral political approval of the establishing of tactical nuclear weapons in the countries, including Germany, for which they are recommended.

The Defence Ministers in April will also be "invited to take note of the progress reports by the military authorities on the present state of planning with regard to:

- (1) the introduction of IRBMs into the defence system of allied command Europe, and,
- (2) the storage and deployment of nuclear warheads in modern weapons systems."

While SACEUR may make further progress reports to Council, we would think that the final stamp of approval on the introduction of these weapons would be given at the next December Ministerial Meeting, when the 1958 Annual Review is approved. By this time, it would be extremely difficult for any individual country to object.

As we see it, SACEUR is proceeding on the assumption that multilateral approval for the introduction of both IRBMs and tactical nuclear weapons has been given by the Heads of Government meeting and that the political problem now is limited to that of securing the acceptance of these recommendations by individual national governments directly involved. It is obvious that once national authorities, after bilateral negotiations with SACEUR, have decided to accept IRBMs or tactical nuclear weapons and this information is given to Council, it would be extremely difficult and delicate for any member to question the desirability of establishing these weapons in the countries concerned for other than military reasons. The only practical opportunity for doing so in our view would be in conjunction with a proposal relating to disarmament and/or disengagement.

PAUL TREMBLAY

220.

DEA/50154-40

Note du chef de la 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures³³

Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs³³

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 11, 1958

TACTICAL NUCLEAR WEAPONS FOR FEDERAL REPUBLIC

Following the foreign policy debate in the Bundestag last month, the position of the Government of the Federal Republic on tactical nuclear weapons has been clearly defined. The Government considers that it must accept the arming of its forces with tactical nuclear weapons if NATO requires it since a refusal would place in jeopardy the Federal Republic status in NATO and its political influence in Europe. The SPD opposition on the other hand, although it lost its struggle against nuclear weapons in the Bundestag, is continuing its campaign outside parliament and there are signs that it is having at least temporary success in organizing a large body of public opinion which is opposed to the Government's position.

2. In the country table for Germany in MC70, it is recommended that in 1959 the land forces of the Federal Republic should include 6 Honest John missile units, 1 Corporal or Sergeant missile unit and 1 Lacrosse unit. It is to be expected that the Federal Republic will, during the course of the 1958 Annual Review, negotiate with SACEUR on the basis of these recommendations and that, if Government policy is maintained, firm force goals for 1959 which will include nuclear missile units, will come up for multilateral approval at the December Ministerial Meeting. At this time, it will probably be too late to avoid the arming of the Federal Republic forces with nuclear weapons. Even in the course of the Annual Review, it would be difficult, if not impossible to question the desirability of arming the Germans with nuclear weapons without very substantial and broadly based reasons which could be expected to carry the judgement of the Federal Republic.

3. Nevertheless, the implications of arming the Federal Republic forces with nuclear weapons are sufficiently serious to warrant some reconsideration of this question in the light of current exchanges with the Soviet Union. In the first place, a definite NATO decision to introduce nuclear weapons into the German forces might seriously hinder agreement at a Summit Meeting. The prospects of German reunification, once the decision is taken, will certainly be much reduced and the reactions both military and political in the

³³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Mr. Tremblay: could we discuss? J. L[éger]

Satellites will be in the direction of increased tension. Politically and militarily, the Satellites may be wedged more firmly back into the arms of the Soviet Union.

4. The timing of the decision to arm German forces with tactical nuclear weapons is of considerable importance. The fact that this move is of very great interest to the Soviet Union and the Satellites may account for some of the recent flexibility in their pronouncements. The Rapacki proposal is a good indication of their fears of German nuclear forces. If it becomes obvious in the next few weeks that NATO will press on with its plans, the Soviet position may harden considerably. On the other hand, if some indication could be given that NATO might postpone the decision to arm the German forces with nuclear weapons in return for Soviet concessions (i.e. progress toward German reunification), the West would be placed in a very favourable bargaining position and the Soviet Bear, besides finding itself under pressure from the Satellites, would have a tempting carrot dangling in front of its nose during the preparations for the Summit meeting and for a limited period thereafter.

5. In addition, the Adenauer régime could be expected to have a more quiescent time in Germany as the most controversial policy decision with which it has yet been confronted would be postponed through NATO action. The postponement of this aspect of the implementation of NATO nuclear strategy would probably not involve any very great military risks since planning and training of German forces in missile warfare could continue and serve as an added incentive to the Russians to make whatever concessions might be necessary to prevent the ultimate nuclearization of the German forces.

6. In addition, the announcement of a decision by NATO to postpone the arming of German forces with nuclear weapons for a year would be of considerable propaganda value to the West at a time when we are greatly in need of this asset.

7. Although a postponement of the arming of German forces with nuclear weapons would not necessarily be a prelude to political decisions regarding disengagement, it would nevertheless constitute a step which would make a move in that direction possible. For that reason it is important to know to what extent our concern over the introduction of nuclear weapons in the German forces is shared by the United States authorities. In this connection, we thought that the Minister might wish to discuss these ideas with Mr. Dulles when he sees him next Monday.

PAUL TREMBLAY

221.

DEA/50154-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM G-75

Ottawa, April 22, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

Following for Robertson:

If general lines of following communication are in accord with your own thoughts I should be glad if you were to convey this letter to Mr. Dulles on my behalf. Text begins:

I very much appreciated your courtesy in arranging a meeting between us last Monday. Personal discussions of this kind are of great value and I am looking forward to seeing you again in Copenhagen next month.

Although we were able to cover a good deal of ground in Washington, there were several subjects which I would have liked to have raised had there been time. One of these relates to the question of the arming of the forces of the Federal Republic with nuclear weapons.

In our consideration here of the various suggestions which have been put forward concerning the problem of Central Europe, we have constantly been confronted with the inevitable political repercussions of the arming of German troops with nuclear weapons. While I am of course aware that, following the decisions taken at the December meeting, the Military Committee in its minimum forces paper (MC70) has, in the Country Guidance to the Federal Republic, recommended the acceptance of a number of tactical missile units in 1959, little consideration has been given to the political advisability of arming German troops with these weapons.

Quite apart from the military considerations involved which are supported by the Canadian government, the political implications of providing the German forces with tactical nuclear weapons are sufficiently important and far-reaching to give us serious concern. In the first place, the implementation of the decision by NATO to introduce these weapons into the German forces might seriously hinder some of the discussions which could be held with the Soviet Union. The prospects of German reunification, once the decision is taken, will certainly be much reduced and reactions both political and military in the satellites will be in the direction of increased tension. Politically and militarily the satellites may be wedged more firmly in the Soviet camp. There have, as you know, been indications from both Poland and Czechoslovakia that these countries may be forced to move toward some form of nuclear armament if the German forces are so armed and if this were done, they would inevitably become more dependent than ever on the USSR.

I feel that the timing of delivery of atomic weapons to the German forces will be of the greatest importance. The fact that such a move is of such concern to the Soviet Union and satellites may account for their recent pronouncements. The Rapacki proposal is, for example, a good indication of their fears of German nuclear armament. If it becomes obvious before long that NATO will press on with its plans, the Soviet position can be expected to harden considerably. On the other hand, if it were possible to delay this decision in return for Soviet concessions with the understanding that the decision would be implemented if progress were not made within a year or possibly two years on the solution of outstanding problems, the West might find itself in a very favourable bargaining position.

I, of course, realize the implications that a decision to postpone the arming of German forces with nuclear weapons might be interpreted as discrimination by the Germans. On the other hand, the Government of the Federal Republic, as we know, is confronted with considerable popular pressure against this move and it might view a NATO decision to postpone equipping their forces with nuclear weapons at least with mixed feelings. The stated position of the German government on this issue, I understand, is that it must accept the views of its NATO partners on this matter.

The postponement of the German aspect of the implementation of the NATO nuclear strategy would probably not involve any undue military risks since the weapons, according to MC70 are not to be introduced until 1959. The training of the German forces in missile warfare would of course continue and serve as an added incentive to the Russians to make whatever concession may be necessary to prevent the ultimate nuclearization of the German forces.

What I am most concerned about is that some political review should be undertaken of this matter and that it should not be left to the military authorities alone to determine which countries should receive weapons. Once the German forces are armed with nuclear weapons, I would expect that rigidities, which would be most difficult to overcome, would be introduced into any negotiations with the Russians.

Mr. Robertson, a week or so ago, discussed with your officials some very tentative ideas we have been formulating on this general question. These ideas were influenced by some of the considerations which I have outlined in this letter.

Your Government is, of course, in a much better position than we are to weigh the various military and political factors involved in issues of this kind. I can only stress that I consider the issue, which must be uppermost in your mind, an extremely grave one and thought I would share my anxieties with you. I regret that we did not have a chance to discuss it together this week.

With very best personal wishes,
Sincerely,
SIDNEY SMITH

Ends.

222.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 997

Paris, April 17, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 565 Mar 3.†

STATIONING OF IRBMS AND NUCLEAR WARHEADS IN EUROPE

Under Item 111(a) of agenda of Defence Ministers Meeting, General Norstad made an oral report on (i) the introduction of IRBMs into defence system of Allied Command Europe and (ii) storage and deployment of nuclear warheads in modern weapons systems.

2. He prefaced his remarks by referring to number of leaks concerning deliberations at Defence Ministers Meeting which had already got into press. Since subject he was about to deal with was of a very sensitive character, both from the military as well as from the domestic political standpoint, he would speak only in general terms. He would, however, be glad to give any Defence Minister more detailed info if he approached him direct.

3. Concerning stationing of IRBMs in area of Allied Command Europe, General Norstad stated that technical information had been made available to French authorities. Experts had come to Paris from US for this purpose and French experts had visited USA. He anticipated that before very long necessary technical agreements would be concluded for French manned IRBM units. Exploratory conversations were also taking place with several other NATO countries. He could assure the Defence Ministers that requirements of Alliance in this respect will be met by countries of the Alliance.

4. Stockpiles of atomic warheads — General Norstad reported that a general overall plan had been worked out and transmitted to the subordinate allied commanders for them to fill in the details. These commanders had had preliminary discussions with authorities in several of the NATO countries. Details which the subordinate commanders had to provide related particularly to the number of the stockpiles required and their specific locations. They were required to report by the end of this month. No repeat no formal action will be taken by SACEUR until these reports are received.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

2.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-377

Ottawa, April 22, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 997 of Apr 17.

Repeat London, Washington (Information).

STATIONING OF IRBMS AND NUCLEAR WARHEADS IN EUROPE

From your reference telegram which summarizes Norstad's report to Defence Ministers on IRBMs and stockpiles of nuclear weapons, we gather that SACEUR is negotiating bilaterally with various European countries on the assumption that multilateral approval for the introduction of both IRBMs and warheads has been given by the December meeting (paragraphs 20 and 21 of the communiqué). It would appear that he assumes that the residuary political problems are now limited to securing the acceptance of these weapons by individual national governments.

2. As you know, we are concerned about the implications of a NATO decision to supply troops of the Federal Republic with nuclear weapons and feel that the political considerations in relation to a summit meeting, east-west relations, disengagement, European security and German reunification should be reviewed before any final decisions are taken. We realize the delicacy of this subject but this is offset by the serious political implications of a broader nature.

3. We should be grateful for information on how and at which stage SACEUR will report to Council in accordance with paragraph 21 of the communiqué, and how you envisage Council dealing with his recommendations.

224.

DEA/50030-AG-1-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1052

Paris, April 23, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, Washington, Permis New York, Paris, Bonn (Information).
By Bag Oslo from London.

ARMING THE GERMAN FORCES WITH MODERN WEAPONS

There has been, both in telegrams from missions and in press comments, a certain amount of confusion about the role of NATO in requiring the German forces to be armed with tactical nuclear weapons or more correctly weapons capable of delivering nuclear warheads. This confusion stems from the fact that Chancellor Adenauer during the foreign affairs debate in the Bundestag last month sought refuge in the argument that NATO required the German forces to be equipped with these weapons.

2. In order to examine the actual legal basis for what Chancellor Adenauer said, it is necessary to review once again the gradual evolution of present NATO strategy.

3. At the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in December 1954, the decision was taken that NATO forces should be able to use nuclear weapons in their defence from the outset. This was considered to be the only way of offsetting the overwhelming Soviet superiority in conventional forces because experience had shown that the force goals established at Lisbon in 1952 were beyond the political and economic capabilities of the NATO countries.

4. The 1954 decision was approved by Council as a basis for defence planning and preparations by the NATO military authorities. But it is clear that once plans are based on the use of certain weapons there can be no going back and resort must be had to these weapons if aggression takes place.

5. The next step was the adoption of the political directive at the Ministerial Meeting of the Council held in December 1956. This directive confirmed the concept of the "forward strategy" based on the use of nuclear weapons from the outset. At the same Ministerial Meeting Mr. Wilson, the USA Secretary of Defence, announced that the USA was prepared to supply to other NATO countries tactical weapons which could be married to nuclear warheads in the event of hostilities. The USA also undertook to train personnel of other NATO countries in the maintenance, operation and employment of these weapon systems.

6. Following upon the adoption of the political directive, the NATO military authorities revised the basic strategy concept to conform to the directive. After this had been done the Supreme Commanders were asked to draw up their minimum force requirements in accordance with the strategic concept based upon the political directive.

7. It is these minimum force requirements that have recently received the attention of the NATO military authorities and the Council. They were considered by the Military Committee at its meeting in March and immediately thereafter at a joint meeting of the Council with the Military Committee. They then were explained and discussed at the meeting of the Defence Ministers held April 15 to 17 but that meeting did not take decisions on these requirements. Following the meeting, the Permanent Council is to take note of the overall minimum force requirements, to approve their use for planning purposes and to accept the country breakdowns as guidance for the 1958 Annual Review. This means that during the course of the year military recommendations will be submitted to governments based on these minimum force requirements.

8. One feature of the minimum force requirements was that it broke down the forces required by countries. In the case of practically every NATO country the requirements included tactical weapons that could be used with nuclear warheads, although in most cases these weapons are also adapted for use with conventional warheads. Since the requirements indicated that German forces should be equipped with these weapons, Chancellor Adenauer was justified in saying that NATO required the German forces to be equipped with these weapons. On the other hand, the meeting of Defence Ministers did not take a decision on this question nor is it coming up for decision at the meeting of Foreign Ministers in Copenhagen next month because it has been agreed that defence questions will not be on the agenda of that meeting.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

225.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1064

Paris, April 23, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel DL-377 Apr 22.

Repeat London, Washington (Information).

STATIONING OF IRBMS AND NUCLEAR WARHEADS IN EUROPE

The impression I have is that those concerned in NATO regard the approval of paragraphs 20 and 21 of communiqué at December meeting as approval in principle of stationing of IRBMs and nuclear warheads in Europe. From conversations I have had with General Norstad I gather that this is his understanding and that he is operating on basis of second sentence of paragraph 21 of communiqué where it is stated "The NATO Military Authorities have been requested to submit to Council at an early date their recommendations on introduction of these weapons in the common defence."

2. Before General Norstad can submit his recommendations to Military Committee for them to forward to Council he has to complete his negotiations "with the states directly concerned."

3. Accordingly, I would envisage that early in the summer we shall have the report of NATO military authorities giving details regarding stationing of IRBMs and nuclear warheads in Europe and that these details would have previously been agreed with "the states directly concerned." It would then be up to Council in permanent session to act upon last sentence of paragraph 21 but this will be within framework of general approval implied through acceptance of paragraphs 20 and 21 of communiqué at December meeting.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

226.

DEA/50154-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 933

Washington, May 1, 1958

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Mr. Dulles' reply to Minister's Let Apr 22.

Repeat London (for the Minister) (Information).

Timmons, Head of European Regional Affairs, today informed us that the Secretary has signed a reply to Minister's letter of April 22 and that original signed letter would be handed to the Minister in Copenhagen on Saturday. Meanwhile, for advance information, we were provided with copy of the letter which we are repeating to London for the Minister. Begins:

Dear Mr. Secretary of State:

I appreciated receiving your letter of April 22, referring to our recent discussions here in Washington. I fully agree that personal talks of that kind are of very great value, and I hope we shall soon have an occasion for a further exchange of views.

I only regret that we were not repeat not able to cover, during our discussions, the subject of your letter to me of April 22. I have read your letter with great interest and I am glad of this opportunity to outline to you in turn my thinking on the question of arming the forces of the German Federal Republic with modern weapons. Some of the considerations I will touch on have already been discussed in talks which Ambassador Robertson and members of his staff have recently had with some of my associates in the department, but I should like to summarize the entire situation as I see it.

As you indicate, the question of the arming of the Federal Republic's forces with nuclear weapons is now being much discussed publicly and in the press. I have been struck by the fact that in this discussion little attention has been paid to the actual NATO proposals and procedures in this field. There has been no repeat no suggestion that nuclear warheads and bombs should be placed in the custody of German forces, or that of any of the other continental members of NATO. It was and is the aim of the NATO atomic stockpile plan, first suggested by the French Foreign Minister last May, to assure the availability of nuclear warheads and bombs to NATO forces in time of emergency, without having control and custody of such nuclear components pass into additional hands. I have the impression that the Alliance as a whole felt this was a desirable solution of an admittedly difficult problem, and the Germans in particular have indicated their satisfaction with it. It is important, I think, for the NATO countries to stress, both to their own publics and to the Soviets, the carefully worked out arrangements that are envisaged, and the assurance that such arrangements offer against any use of nuclear weapons except to repel aggression in accordance with agreed NATO strategy.

The Germans have indicated of course that they do wish to equip their forces with modern weapons, including those which have the capability of being fitted with nuclear warheads or bombs as well as conventional warheads or bombs — the so called “dual-capable” delivery vehicles. Such vehicles cover a wide range of equipment, including for example modern fighter-bombers, which can carry atomic bombs. Thus, as a practical matter, if the armed forces of a country were to be deprived of the capability of delivering nuclear warheads and bombs, such a prohibition would have to cut deep into the field of conventional weapons in order to include all “dual-capable” vehicles. This would seem to us to be impracticable and to pose unacceptable military risks. For Germany to possess dual-capable weapons but to be denied access to elements of the NATO atomic stockpile in Germany, thus placing the Federal Republic’s forces in the position of being the only forces in Germany without access to nuclear weapons in the event of emergency, would seem equally impractical.

I thought it useful to review these general considerations as a background to a discussion of the political problem you raise, since use of the term “arming Germany with nuclear weapons” does not repeat not clearly bring out several pertinent and important factors, particularly the safeguards that NATO planning offers against the possibility of any aggression from our side.

The question has been raised as to the consideration given in NATO to the political advisability of including Germany within the arrangements being worked out to give an atomic capability to other NATO forces. It is my impression that there has been extensive consideration of this matter from the political as well as from the military point of view. It has been generally accepted that members of the Alliance have equal rights and obligations, and that discrimination against one country in a basic matter of defense could well seriously weaken the principle of collective security in NATO. To review only the recent past, last May, at the Ministerial Meeting in Bonn, the North Atlantic Council noted that the USSR had launched a campaign designed to induce public opinion in various member countries to oppose the modernization of defense forces. The Council agreed that one of the objects of this campaign was to ensure for Soviet forces a monopoly of nuclear weapons on the European continent, and that no repeat no power can claim the right to deny to the Alliance the possession of the modern arms needed for its defense. The recent statements of Mr. Mikoyan, during his visit to the Federal Republic, seem to leave no repeat no doubt that it remains one of the prime aims of Soviet policy, in its efforts to divide and weaken the Alliance, to attempt to prevent Germany from playing its full part in NATO’s defensive plans.

In view of Germany’s importance in NATO defensive strategy, it was evident that a policy of modernizing NATO defense forces could not repeat not, in practice or logic, exclude Germany. The Heads of Government meeting last December reemphasized the views expressed by the Council in May and initiated several specific steps in the modernization process. Thus, I think it fair to say that NATO’s military planning, in MC-70 and other documents, regarding the modernization of all NATO forces including those of Germany, has been carried out pursuant to a clear political directive.

It is against this political background that Chancellor Adenauer obtained last month a majority vote in parliament for the proposition that the armed forces of the Federal Republic must be so equipped with the most modern weapons that they are in a position to meet the obligations which the Federal Republic has taken upon itself in the framework of NATO. The Bundestag again stressed Germany’s interest in achieving general controlled disarmament.

I should like now to turn to the specific suggestion you discuss in your letter, the possibility that the West might offer to delay Germany's participation in the process of ensuring that the most modern weapons are available to NATO forces, in return for Soviet concessions, on the understanding that Germany would so participate if progress were not repeat not made in a year or so on the solution of outstanding problems.

The foremost practical consideration I see is that the Chancellor has already engaged the prestige of his government on the question of modern weapons. It seems evident that the German government has now concluded that German forces must have a nuclear capability and that they should not repeat not be in an inferior position to the forces of other countries in Germany. In these circumstances it would seem that, even if such action were desirable, it would not repeat not be politically feasible for him to modify that stand without serious weakening of his position and that of NATO in Germany.

Secondly, and more important from the standpoint of policy, I should not repeat not think that any important aspect of NATO's defensive plans should be treated as something to be speeded up or slowed down depending upon Soviet tactics at any particular time. NATO has charted for itself what I conceive to be the only possible course — to maintain and modernize its defenses at the fastest practicable rate, and simultaneously to seek to negotiate with the USSR a general controlled and inspected disarmament agreement. If the suggestion under discussion were put to the Soviets, the result might well be not repeat not Soviet concessions but rather intensified Soviet propaganda designed to bring about unilateral measures by the West which would weaken our position. Further, it would be extraordinarily difficult to define the time and circumstances under which the arming of German forces with modern weapons, once suspended, would be resumed — how the "lack of progress on the solution of outstanding problems" would be measured. Such a process of delay and then resumption might imply that the West believed the international situation had suddenly sharply deteriorated at the time of resumption and thus might seriously heighten tensions at that time.

It is also suggested that postponement of Germany's participation in NATO's plans for developing a nuclear capability would not repeat not involve any undue military risks. While it is true that certain German missile units are not repeat not to come into being until 1959, it is my understanding that the buildup of the German forces has already approached the point where a large number of planning decisions cannot repeat not be delayed. It seems that if the modern weapons units required by NATO military plans in 1959 and subsequent years are to come into being, the German government must begin to contract now in other countries for the necessary equipment, since the production "lead-time" is usually a lengthy one. Thus, deferring these planning decisions could in fact introduce a delay that would not repeat not be made good in the future.

Finally, I doubt that any action by Germany or the West of the nature contemplated would have the effect of hardening the already rigid Soviet position on German reunification and European security. They have as yet shown no repeat no disposition to examine seriously the positions put forward by the West at Geneva in 1955, which offer the Soviets a genuine measure of security against the possibility of future aggression by Germany. Instead, the only schemes that the Soviets advocate are those which could fatally weaken the western defences, such as "atom-free" zones and the linking of outer space control with the liquidation of overseas bases.

I fully recognize that the Soviets, at a time when they feel it necessary to tighten their political control over Eastern Europe, are using the spectre of a Germany armed with nuclear weapons as a propaganda weapon to this end. I think NATO can and should do more to make known the purely defensive nature of its military planning and the safeguards that NATO offers against any possibility of misuse by one of its members of nuclear weapons. But I do not repeat not feel that this should deflect us from the course of action that NATO has chosen. Even if the forces of the Federal Republic were not repeat not equipped with modern weapons, the Soviets would undoubtedly concentrate their propaganda upon the existence of any German forces at all, or on the presence of other NATO forces in Germany. This is in fact the process we are now witnessing, with the Soviets simultaneously propagandizing against the presence of British, Canadian and USA forces in Europe, NATO bases in other countries, the rearmament of Germany, and so on. To delay or give up any important element of NATO's defences would, I fear, invite still further Soviet pressures in these directions.

I think I need not repeat not assure you of the determination of the USA to continue to seek the reunification of Germany, a dependable system of European security, and a controlled disarmament agreement. If Germany should be reunified in conjunction with a system of forces and arms limitations in Europe, it seems clear that a large part of the burden of defending the German area, whether or not repeat not she is a member of NATO, would have to fall on German forces. In the absence of general disarmament arrangements of some significance, the USSR would continue to be in a position to maintain a nuclear-equipped striking force of massive proportions against central Europe, and it does not repeat not seem that to deprive German forces of the means of effective retaliation against a Soviet attack would be in the West's interest.

I apologize for having written at such length, but I believe the importance of the subject justifies it. I appreciated the frank expression of views contained in your letter, and I have attempted to reply in the same fashion. I hope we shall have an early opportunity to resume the discussion of this and related matters.

With warmest good wishes,

Sincerely yours,
(SIGNED) JOHN FOSTER DULLES

Ends.

227.

DEA/50154-40

*L'ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 247

Bonn, May 20, 1958

CONFIDENTIAL

Repeat NATO Paris, Paris, London, Washington (Information).

ADENAUER ON ATOMIC WEAPONS

Last Sunday, May 18, Adenauer made an address in Dortmund as part of his contribution to the CDU campaign in North-Rhine-Westphalia. He took the opportunity to attack the Social Democrat attitude towards the proposed equipment of the Bundeswehr with tactical nuclear weapons. He is quoted as saying: "We consider that a shift of the military balance in favour of Soviet Russia such as would result from not repeat not equipping the Bundeswehr with tactical atomic weapons would mean the end of all efforts for general, controlled disarmament." This rather large but confidently expressed statement was followed by a declaration that disarmament was the most urgent topic on which progress must be made at a summit conference. He then called upon the Great Powers to make every effort to ensure that a summit conference took place.

2. Of perhaps greater interest was the Chancellor's comment on present plans for German atomic weapons. He said it was "fairly certain" that long-range or intermediate-range missiles would not be based in the Federal Republic. More-over, the six launching ramps and 24 Matador missiles bought from the USA by Germany would remain in the USA where German soldiers would be trained in their use. He said that the training period for these men would be from 18 to 24 months.

3. We asked Baudissin of the Foreign Office today whether the statement by the Chancellor that the Matadors would not be brought to Germany for 18 months at any rate was a planned part of the speech or whether it was impromptu. He said he understood that the Chancellor had included this part intentionally to reassure the anxious that these controversial dual-capacity weapons would not be in the hands of German soldiers on German soil for many months to come.

4. The German press has commented that Adenauer did not mention dual-capacity anti-aircraft weapons (the Germans are considering purchase of the NIKE Hercules, it is understood) although Dortmund as a typical Ruhr industrial city would have provided a suitable forum. It seems rather curious that the Christian Democrats have not repeat not publicly exploited the natural concern of the people of the Ruhr to achieve effective defense against air attack in order to popularize at least this type of tactical dual-capacity weapon. We know from Social Democrat sources that the SPD are nervous that the North Rhine-Westphalia elections could be lost if the CDU could make it appear that the SPD stand on tactical weapons would make the Ruhr more vulnerable to air attack

[ESCOTT] REID

228.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Note du chef de la 1^{ere} Direction de liaison avec la Défense
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 9, 1958

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM NUCLEAR STOCKPILING AND TACTICAL WEAPONS
PROJECTS³⁴

I am attaching a paper prepared in this Division on the present status of the arrangements governing the deployment and use of IRBM nuclear stockpiles and tactical atomic weapons in NATO European countries other than the United Kingdom.

2. While the conditions attached to the United States offer of these weapons at the December 1957 Heads of Government meeting are known and their implications reasonably clear, we have no firm information to indicate whether European countries are prepared to accept these weapons on these terms, or whether they may be seeking additional safeguards which would permit them, as host countries, to exercise some measure of control over the use of the weapons on their territory in the event of hostilities. It is certainly premature at this stage to regard the terms of the United States offer as an established NATO Pattern for the siting and use of these weapons in Europe.

³⁴ Note marginale /:Marginal note:

Some of this (particularly para. 3) came as a surprise to me, but after speaking to Mr. Tremblay, I am convinced that it is accurate. D.V. L[e]P[an]. 14 Oct. '58.

3. Because it is purely a strategic weapon, the problem of control must present itself most acutely to European governments in respect of the IRBM. The United States has offered this weapon to NATO in the first instance on the understanding that it will be turned over, under an agreement between SACEUR and the host government, only to the national forces under direct NATO operational command in peacetime. This condition, together with United States custody of the warheads, effectively eliminates any possibility that the host country could utilize the weapon on its own initiative. On the other hand, the host country is provided with no veto powers over their use and presumably, without additional safeguards, situations could arise in which SACEUR would have the authority to fire an IRBM contrary to the will of the host country concerned. Similarly we are unaware of any arrangement at this stage, between SACEUR or the United States and host countries whereby the host country has the right to veto the use of tactical nuclear warheads on their territory.

4. Since December, 1957, SACEUR has been negotiating with European governments the details of arrangements for siting the IRBM and nuclear stockpiles on their territory. The brief reports SACEUR has made to Council on the progress of his negotiations have included nothing of substance on the question of control, and we have no firm indication from other sources of the position which the various European countries concerned have taken up on this question. However, in the context of the current discussions in the Infrastructure Committee and at SHAPE on the eligibility for common financing of the infrastructure requirements related to nuclear weapons, the French have indicated that they are opposed to common financing for "political reasons." Common financing is related to the control problem in that all national forces, together with their weapons utilizing commonly financed facilities, fall under SACEUR's operational command in peacetime. In view of this relationship we would infer that the "political reasons" for French opposition to the common financing of these projects refer primarily to the control problem, and that the French may well be seeking arrangements which would afford them more national control over the deployment and use of the weapons concerned.

5. We have prepared for your signature, if you approve, a telegram to our NATO Delegation asking for their comments and for any information they may have which would throw some light on the attitude of European governments towards the control problem in relation to both strategic and tactical nuclear weapons.³⁵

PAUL TREMBLAY

³⁵ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

P.S. These memos have been prepared in accordance with your suggestion that we look into the matter of control over A[dvanced] W[eapons] within NATO. P[aul Tremblay]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du chef de la 1^{re} Direction de liaison avec la Défense
Memorandum by Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 9, 1958

THE IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM, NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
 AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECTS

During the recent series of discussions in the Infrastructure Committee on the principle of eligibility for common financing of the infrastructure requirements for IRBMs, nuclear stockpiles and other new weapons, the French representative has repeatedly asserted that his government favoured the national financing of IRBM infrastructure. However, he refused to be drawn into providing any indication of the reasoning on which this position was based.

2. The most recent indication of the French position on this question came at a meeting at SHAPE in Paris, September 2nd to 5th, when the French representative placed on record the following statement.

“Ministry of Defence France deems it necessary to inform SHAPE officially of the French Government’s position with regard to these installations, in order to avoid any misconceptions and to prevent SHAPE from embarking upon a programme which might be a failure, for political reasons.

The French Government has expressed its intention of installing the infrastructure for IRBM launching sites, and surface-to-surface missile launching sites, including Matadors, on French soil by national financing.

Accordingly, and for the same political reasons, France plans the national financing of the stockpiles of atomic weapons for IRBM and surface-to-surface missiles (including Matadors) on French soil. However, she recalls that, from the technical standpoint and subject to previous political agreement, she has agreed to common financing of airfield depots, some NIKE depots, and, on a scale to be determined, the corresponding reserve and maintenance depots.”

3. SACEUR and the Standing Group, with the firm support of the United States, have recommended and continue to press for the common financing of the new infrastructure requirements basing their position on the following considerations:

(a) The necessity for SACEUR and SACLANT to have complete control of these weapons in peacetime as well as in wartime.

(b) The desirability of having the projects identified as NATO installations.

(c) The high degree of common interest embodied in the individual projects.

The problem of control is unquestionably the most important of these three considerations. It is related to common financing in that commonly financed installations may be utilized only by forces assigned in peacetime to SACEUR’s operational control. It would, therefore, follow that if all the fixed installations for weapons employing nuclear warheads in Europe were to be commonly financed, SACEUR would then retain control over them not only through his custody of the warheads, but also through his operational command over the national forces utilizing the commonly financed facilities. In view of this relationship we would infer that the “political reasons” for French opposition to the common financing of these projects refer primarily to the control problem and that the French are seeking arrangements which would afford them more national control over the deployment and, in the event of hostilities, the use of weapons concerned.

4. The offers³⁶ by the United States to provide European NATO countries with IRBMs, nuclear stockpiles and tactical nuclear weapons delivery systems had different conditions attached to each of them. In the case of IRBMs, the United States has offered to supply the delivery systems and missiles, minus warheads, to NATO in the first instance. They would then be assigned, on the basis of a bilateral agreement negotiated by SACEUR with the host country, to those forces of the host country which come under SACEUR's operational command, with SACEUR retaining full and direct operational command over the weapons in both peacetime and wartime.

5. The United States offer to provide stockpiles of nuclear warheads for IRBMs as well as air defence and ground-to-ground missiles is conditioned by their reservation of custodial rights. A further condition is that in the event of hostilities, the warheads would, on the authorization of the President of the United States, be released to the custody of the appropriate NATO Supreme Allied Commander for employment by the nuclear capable forces of NATO under his command (and not to European Governments or national forces directly).

6. We have no indication of any specific conditions attached to the United States offer to supply NATO governments with ground-to-ground and ground-to-air missile delivery systems as in the case of IRBMs. Presumably the United States is prepared to turn over these delivery systems to national governments for deployment with their forces under either national or NATO command. However, control over their nuclear capacity would be exercised through SACEUR's custody of the nuclear warheads. Furthermore, if the infrastructure requirements for these weapons were to be commonly financed it would ensure SACEUR's operational command in peacetime over those of the host country forces utilizing the weapons deployed on the commonly financed facilities.

7. At the December, 1957, Heads of Government meeting Mr. Pineau voiced his concern that the arrangements envisaged by the United States for the provision of IRBMs to Europe, while ensuring that no European host country could use an IRBM on its own initiative, did not necessarily provide the host country itself with a veto over the use of any IRBM stationed on its territory. Although we have received no report of the course of negotiations between SACEUR and France on the deployment of IRBMs on French territory, we would assume that French fears in this respect have not yet been removed.

8. Although SACEUR has been negotiating with European governments, since the Heads of Government meeting in December, 1957, on the deployment of IRBMs and nuclear stockpiles on their territory, we have received no report of the progress he has been making in respect of the detailed arrangements which would presumably form the basis of any agreement in this regard. We are completely in the dark as to the position he may be taking up with regard to the form of control which the host country might exercise over the actual use of the weapon in the event of hostilities. We are similarly unaware of the position held by SACEUR and the host countries concerned on this aspect of the control problem in relation to nuclear stockpiles and tactical weapons delivery systems.

9. In the case of ground-to-ground missiles, there is one aspect of the control problem in which Canada has an interest now that the decision to provide the Canadian Brigade with a LACROSSE battery has been taken. The question arises as to the control by the host country over the use of nuclear weapons by NATO forces from other countries in the event of hostilities. Should the Germans insist upon some form of veto over the use of nuclear weapons deployed on German soil, it is a matter for speculation whether this would or could be extended to affect the use of nuclear warheads by Canadian forces in Germany in the event of hostilities. Presumably Canada would wish to participate in any discussions between the Germans and SACEUR which might touch on this possibility.

³⁶ La note de bas de page dactylographiée suivante figure dans l'original :/The following typed footnote appears in the original:

Presented at the Heads of Government Meeting in December, 1957, Doc. RDC/57/428 (General).

10. While the terms and conditions of the United States offer of nuclear weapons and delivery systems to the European members of NATO are reasonably clear, it is by no means clear whether the European governments are prepared to accept these weapons on these terms or, at least, without additional safeguards which would have the effect of giving to these governments some form of veto power over the use of the weapons concerned. It is, therefore, premature to suggest that the conditions attached to the United States offer of these weapons form the substance of a "NATO pattern" for their use. There are, to the contrary, indications that the French are holding out for more national control over the use of nuclear weapons and that the control pattern which eventually will emerge could be substantially different from that envisaged by the United States when making their offer to provide the weapons.

PAUL TREMBLAY

Note: Attached is NATO telegram 2263 of Dec. 11,³⁷ reporting SACEUR's briefing to Council of Dec. 11/57 on the terms of the U.S. IRBM offer. See particularly paragraphs 4, 7 and 8.

229.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-796

Ottawa, October 15, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Repeat DM/DND, CCOS (Information).

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECTS

We have noted in Document AG 6100/IP-140/58 program the record of discussions at the SHAPE meeting September 2-5 on Slice X,³⁸ the French representative's statements that his government intends, for political reasons, to nationally finance the infrastructure for IRBM launching sites, ground-to-ground missiles and nuclear stockpiles and is therefore opposed to the policy of common financing this infrastructure.

2. Our understanding is that the major consideration, on which SACEUR's insistence on the common financing of these installations is based, is that he must have operational command in peacetime over all strategic and tactical nuclear forces in peacetime. We would infer from the French position on common financing that they are concerned primarily with its relation to the question of control and that they are seeking arrangements which would afford them more national control over the deployment and use of the weapons concerned.

³⁷ Voir/See Document 253.

³⁸ Les diverses composantes du programme d'infrastructure commune de l'OTAN appuyées financièrement par les États membres ont été appelées des « Slices » (tranches).

Various components of the NATO common infrastructure program supported financially by member nations were designated as "Slices."

3. Since December 1957 SACEUR has been negotiating with European governments the details of arrangements for siting the IRBM and nuclear stockpiles on their territory. The brief reports SACEUR has made to Council on the progress of his negotiations have included nothing of substance on the question of control, and we have no firm indication from other sources of the position which the various European countries concerned have taken up on this question.

4. It seems clear that the arrangement SACEUR is negotiating with European countries, and from all indications particularly France, for the siting of IRBM and nuclear stockpiles on their territory will have a direct bearing on the decision ultimately taken with regard to the eligibility of the new infrastructure items for common financing. In addition any information available to you on the headway SACEUR is making in his negotiations would be of immediate interest to us in the context of our forthcoming negotiations with the United States on the terms of our use of BOMARC and Lacrosse missiles. Another aspect of the control problem in Europe in which we have a direct interest now that the decision to provide the Canadian Brigade in Germany with a Lacrosse battery has been taken,³⁹ is the question of the control by a host country over the use of nuclear weapons on its territory by NATO forces from other countries in the event of hostilities. We would be particularly interested to know, therefore, whether the Germans might be seeking some form of veto over the use of nuclear weapons deployed on German soil.

230.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2479

Paris, October 16, 1958

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel DL-796 Oct 15.

Repeat DM/DND, CCOS from Ottawa (Information).

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECTS

In considering the arrangements for the operational control of weapons capable of delivering nuclear warheads it is necessary to distinguish between those relating to IRBMs and those relating to tactical weapons. SACEUR has made no repeat no headway in his negotiations with the French for the location of IRBM launching sites on French territory. The French have been insisting on an arrangement not repeat not less favourable than that ³⁹ Le Cabinet a approuvé l'achat d'une batterie de missiles sol-sol Lacrosse le 1^{er} octobre 1958.

Cabinet approved the purchase of one Lacrosse battery of surface to surface missiles on October 1, 1958.

concluded with the UK as a result of the Bermuda agreement negotiated in the spring of 1957. Under this agreement, IRBMs have been made available to Bomber Command and control over their use is a national responsibility. Until such time, however, as the UK is able to manufacture warheads they will have to depend upon nuclear warheads provided by the USA who will maintain stockpiles near the launching sites. The President of the USA will have to grant authority for use of the warheads but the operational control of the IRBMs will be a UK responsibility.

2. The negotiations with France have been conducted on the basis of the decision reached at the Heads of Government Meeting in December 1957. Under this decision, IRBMs are to be supplied to the national forces under the command of SACEUR and are to remain under his operational control. This means that national units will be trained in the use of the IRBMs but they will operate under the command of SACEUR and the nuclear warheads can only be used on the authority of the President of the USA.

3. The justification for this distinction between IRBMs stationed in the UK and those stationed on the Continent is that up to now the UK has been outside the area of Allied Command Europe whereas France and the other countries on the Continent are within that area.

4. SACEUR does not repeat not consider French territory to be of the highest priority for the stationing of IRBMs. He has accordingly proceeded to negotiate with other countries although he would have preferred first of all to conclude the negotiations with France because it was French request for these missiles following the Bermuda agreement that led to the proposal being made by the USA at the Heads of Government Meeting last December. Negotiations with Italy have been concluded to the satisfaction of SACEUR and we understand that negotiations are also likely to be concluded soon with Turkey. Discussions have also taken place with The Netherlands but we are not repeat not certain as to their present status.

5. The French position is very extreme and they are even pressing for control over the warheads stationed on French territory. In order partly to overcome their objections, SACEUR has been considering the elaboration of a set of conditions under which nuclear warheads could be used without the necessity of seeking the express authority of the President of the USA. These conditions would be the clear indication that total aggression had taken place. While this would overcome one of the misgivings of the French, it would be open to the objection of broadening the area of possible miscalculation and therefore it is not repeat not likely to be agreed to by the USA.

6. The situation with regard to other weapons capable of delivering nuclear warheads is less complicated. These are being provided by the USA outright to the national forces under the command of SACEUR. They may be used in the same way as any other weapon assigned to these forces. They cannot, however, use a nuclear warhead without the express authority of the President of the USA. The stockpiles of nuclear warheads will be controlled exclusively by USA units under SACEUR in his dual capacity of Commander of the USA Forces in Europe as well as Supreme Commander of Allied Forces.

7. Another factor behind the requirement for the common financing of infrastructure required for the use of weapons with a nuclear capability and for the common financing of nuclear stockpiles is that these are to be concentrated very largely on German territory. Since they are for the common protection of NATO, it is considered equitable that they should be commonly financed under infrastructure rather than nationally financed.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

231.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2505

Paris, October 17, 1956

TOP SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY. OPIIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2479 Oct 16.

Repeat DM/DND, CCOS from Ottawa (Information).

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECTS

During course of a farewell visit I paid this p.m. on General Norstad I took advantage of opportunity to ask him what sort of agreement had been concluded with Italian government concerning location of IRBM launching sites on Italian territory.⁴⁰ In particular, I asked him if he could tell me whether or not Italians had retained a veto over launching of these missiles. His first reply was to state that a veto was inherent in the fact that Italians would actually have possession of the missiles. They would be provided by USA government to units manned exclusively by Italians who would be trained by USA. Two squadrons were envisaged for Italy and each of these squadrons would be under Italian command. Over the two squadrons there would be an Italian Major-General in charge of missile units. He in turn would come under NATO command through regular military hierarchy.

2. Norstad then illustrated his point by showing me a match folder containing only one match. He took off the match and held it in his hand asking me to retain the folder. He said the folder could not repeat not be moved but the match could. The only way I could strike a match would be if he would give it to me but there was no repeat no power that could compel me to strike the match if I did not repeat not wish to do so.

3. I then took the liberty of enquiring what was nature of agreements between the two governments and whether they were similar to agreements concluded for supply of tactical weapons capable of delivering nuclear warheads. He said that the essential difference between IRBMs and tactical weapons was that SACEUR insisted on retaining operational control over IRBM units both in peace and war whereas in case of tactical weapons the units would come under operational control of SACEUR only in the event of war.

4. He then rang for an officer and asked him to bring two documents which he read over to me. First was a letter from General Norstad [to] Minister of Defence outlining basis of understanding reached. He said that he had drafted this with some care in consultation with one of the Italian officers on his staff and had sent the officer to Rome with drafts to which Italian Prime Minister and Minister of Defence had made some minor changes before the ⁴⁰ L'accord officiel entre les États-Unis et l'Italie concernant le déploiement de missiles balistiques sur le sol italien a été signé le 30 mars 1959. Voir United States, Department of State, FRUS, 1958-1960, Volume VII, Part 1, Washington: Government Printing office, 1993, p. 453.

The official agreement between the United States and Italy concerning the deployment of ballistic missiles on Italian soil was signed on March 30, 1959. See United States, Department of State, FRUS, 1958-1960, Volume VII, Part 1, Washington: Government Printing office, 1993, p. 453.

letter was finally sent off. The letter covered the points which one would have expected but it included a significant sentence reading as follows: "The decision to launch the missiles will be taken by SACEUR upon agreement with governments of Italy and USA." There was a paragraph devoted to atomic stockpile which made it clear that this would remain in USA custody as required by USA law.

5. The other document was draft basis for an agreement between governments of Italy and USA now being negotiated in Rome by USA Embassy. It repeated much of what was in the letter Norstad had sent to Minister of Defence except that naturally the details for providing missiles to Italy were elaborated at greater length. It repeated the sentence about launching missiles which I have quoted in paragraph 4.

6. Norstad concluded that if it would be of help to General Foulkes he could send him a model draft of agreement with name of country left blank. This would be substantially the same as draft agreement to be concluded with Italian government although naturally we would understand that he could not repeat not let us have copies of either of the two documents he had read to me. If it would be of help to General Foulkes to have a draft model agreement I suggest that he take this up with General Norstad through the usual military channels.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

232.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-817

Ottawa, October 17, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your Tel 2479 Oct 16.

Repeat DM/DND, CCOS (Information).

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECTS

SACEUR Standing Group and now the Military Committee have recommended and continue to support the common financing of tactical nuclear weapons infrastructure on the grounds that it is necessary in order to enable SACEUR's operational control over these weapons in peacetime. We had inferred from this argument that SACEUR's operational control over these weapons in peacetime would not be secured through any restrictions placed by the USA on the disposition of the tactical nuclear delivery systems to be turned over to NATO countries.

2. However in paragraph 6 of your telegram under reference you state that the USA are providing these weapons "outright to national forces under the command of SACEUR." We should be interested to learn whether you can confirm the interference to be drawn from this statement that the USA is not providing these weapons to national governments directly for possible use (with conventional warheads) by forces under national command. If this is so then it would appear to us, conversely, that the question of operational control is not relevant to the common financing issue.

233.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2542

Paris, October 23, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Repeat DM/DND, CCOS from Ottawa (Information).

As you have noted Mr. Wilgress, in paragraph 6 of our telegram 2479, states that tactical nuclear weapons are being provided by the USA outright to the national forces under the command of SACEUR. In this respect we agree with the inference you have drawn in your telegram DL-817 to the effect that the USA is not repeat not providing these weapons to national governments for use by forces under national command.

2. In view of the reasons set forth by SACEUR, the Standing Group and the military, as defined in document SG137/54, in support of their contention that common funding is desirable as a means of increasing integration and centralized operational control, we are inclined to think that these reasons must be considered in relation to NATO forces and that they have, therefore, some validity.

3. If there should be any further points on which you require elucidation you might wish to discuss this matter with Mr. Wilgress in Ottawa.

234.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-926

Ottawa, November 14, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Repeat DM/DND, CCOS (Information).

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO IRBM NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECT

Several aspects of the arrangements covering the deployment and use in Europe of IRBM and tactical weapons being provided by the USA remain unclear to us. The first concerns the precise distinction between the control arrangements envisaged for IRBMs and those applicable to tactical nuclear weapons. Paragraph 3 of telegram 2505 of October 17 reports SACEUR as stating that "The essential difference between IRBM and tactical weapons was that SACEUR insisted on retaining operational control over IRBM units in both peace and war, whereas in the case of tactical weapons, the units would come under operational control of SACEUR only in the event of war." However, paragraph 6 of telegram 2479 of October 16 indicates that "tactical weapons are being provided by the USA outright to the national forces under the command of SACEUR." These two statements taken together would imply that while the national forces possessing tactical weapons would be under SACEUR's command in peacetime, the weapons themselves would not come under his operational control. Any information you could let us have which would clarify this apparent anomaly would be appreciated. We are also confused by the term "outright to NATO forces." This could be read to mean that the weapons are being supplied direct to national forces without any covering agreement between the USA and national governments concerned; but this seems improbable.

2. Our second question refers to the original terms of the USA offer of IRBMs to NATO. According to our understanding of this offer, the USA was to turn IRBMs over to NATO in the first instance and then agreements covering their deployment and use were to be negotiated on behalf of NATO by SACEUR with the host countries concerned. However, there has been no indication that the USA government proposes to enter into an agreement with NATO as a whole governing the use of IRBMs, and paragraph 5 of telegram 2505 indicates that in addition to an exchange of letters between SACEUR and the Italian authorities, the deployment of IRBMs in Italy is to be covered by an intergovernmental agreement between the USA and Italy. It would seem to us at first glance that these arrangements depart somewhat from those which we might have envisaged would flow from the terms of the original USA offer. We would be interested to have your further appreciation of the situation.

235.

DEA/50030-AG-2-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2883

Paris, November 28, 1958

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 2763 Nov 20.†

Repeat CCOS, CM/DND (Information).

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO NUCLEAR STOCKPILING
AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECT

Following is an interim report based on a conversation we were able to have at a social function with General Norstad and General Schuyler.

2. The nuclear weapons over which SACEUR insists on having control in peacetime are major weapons such as IRBM's and weapons of a similar order which would be probable targets in the event of aggression, and ground-to-air weapons which would have to be brought into action immediately in the event of hostilities. These two categories do not repeat not include tactical nuclear weapons in the sense in which this term is normally understood. Tactical weapons in the hands of national forces would be at the disposal of those forces as are any other weapons in their possession, while at the same time the forces themselves would be under SACEUR's command.

3. Stockpiles of nuclear warheads would of course be under SACEUR's control in peacetime.

4. In your telegram DL-817 you mentioned that SACEUR, Standing Group and the Military Committee have recommended common financing of tactical nuclear weapons infrastructure on the grounds that it is necessary in order to ensure SACEUR control over these weapons in peacetime. We think that, if you examine the list of weapons to which this recommendation applies, you may conclude that it is limited to weapons of the type we have cited as those over which SACEUR desires to have control in peacetime.

5. We believe you are right in assuming that the term "outright to national forces" in paragraph 6 of telegram 2479 does not repeat not mean that the weapons are being supplied direct to national forces without any covering agreement between the USA and the national governments concerned. However, we will do our best to check further on this, particularly with reference to weapons to be supplied to German forces.

6. With regard to your second question, we assume that the terms under which IRBM's are to be made available are covered by the statement made by Mr. Dulles at the Heads of Government Meeting and the relevant paragraphs of the communiqué issued following that meeting. There is nothing in these documents which seems to provide specifically for an agreement between the USA government and NATO as a whole governing the use of IRBMs, and we did not repeat not have the impression from our conversation with General Norstad that he anticipates such an agreement. What SACEUR insists on is control by him over IRBM's.

7. Mr. Dulles told the December meeting: "If this Council so desires, and in order to strengthen NATO's deterrent power, the USA is prepared to make available to other NATO countries intermediate range ballistic missiles for deployment in accordance with the plans of SACEUR. Nuclear warheads for these intermediate missiles would become a part of the NATO atomic stockpile system. Such intermediate ballistic missiles' deployment would be subject to agreement between each such country and the USA with respect to materiel, training and other necessary arrangements."

8. The relevant parts of the communiqué are: "NATO has decided to establish stock of nuclear warheads, which will be readily available for the defence of the Alliance in case of need. In view of the present Soviet policies in the field of new weapons the Council has also decided that intermediate range ballistic missiles will have to be put at the disposal of the Supreme Allied Commander Europe." "The deployment of these stocks and missiles and arrangements for their use will accordingly be decided in conformity with NATO's defence plans and in agreement with the states directly concerned. The NATO military authorities have been requested to submit to the Council at an early date their recommendations on the introduction of these weapons in the common defence. The Council in permanent session will consider the various questions involved."

9. It is our understanding that SACEUR and the USA government are proceeding in accordance with these provisions of the communiqué in seeking or working out agreements with certain governments. It is clear that SACEUR's arrangements are to be subject to consideration and approval by Council, and it must be admitted that the progress reports so far made both on stockpiles and on IRBM's have told the Council very little. At least in the case of negotiations with France there are good reasons for this. We nevertheless assume that Council will be told more when SACEUR considers this appropriate, and that Council will have an opportunity to consider the arrangements before they are finalized.

10. There is another question which you raised in your telegram DL-796 on which we can now shed a little light. We discussed with the UK delegation here the question whether the Germans might be seeking some form of veto over the use of nuclear weapons deployed on German soil. The UK have been having some difficulty in arranging for the equipment of certain of their forces with sergeants and corporals. This difficulty, however, stems from the attitude of certain local authorities with whom the German government is discussing this matter. The UK delegation seem confident that these difficulties will be ironed out fairly shortly. In their experience there has been no repeat no suggestion of any desire on the part of the German government to exercise any sort of control over tactical nuclear weapons to be provided to foreign forces stationed in Germany. They cannot repeat not make any prediction as to the future. With regard to weapons requiring fixed sites, it is relevant that the German government is having difficulty acquiring and assigning land of NIKE sites.

11. On the points raised in your ref telegram we are writing to General Norstad with the object of obtaining his views more precisely. When I have his reply I may discuss the matter with him before reporting further.

236.

DEA/50219-AL-1-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 694

Paris, February 6, 1959

SECRET

Reference: Our telegrams No. 2883 of November 28 and No. 182 of January 26.†

IMPLEMENTATION OF NATO STOCKPILING AND TACTICAL WEAPONS PROJECT

I enclose a copy of a letter which I have received from General Norstad in reply to my letter to him of December 1† on the above subject.

2. General Norstad's letter generally bears out the analysis in our telegram No. 2883 and will, I think, be of value to you as an authoritative statement of the official SHAPE point of view on the questions raised in your earlier telegrams.

3. We have noted the following points with respect to which General Norstad gives either an additional explanation or a somewhat different interpretation from that in our telegram No. 2883:

(1) General Norstad's interpretation of the provisions with respect to the role of the NATO Council in the implementation of the nuclear stockpiling and IRBM projects, is of interest. He states "I have made periodic statements to the Military Committee and to the North Atlantic Council concerning the progress of both the IRBM and NATO special ammunitions storage programs. I am proceeding on the assumption that these constitute reports on the progress of approved projects and that the North Atlantic Council can at any time make special inquiries or observations with respect to the arrangements that are being developed."

(2) You will note General Norstad's reply to the question about whether or not the Federal German Government might be seeking some form of veto over the use of nuclear weapons deployed on German soil. Before writing General Norstad we had not discussed this point with him but thought it might be worth raising in a tentative way. His reply is not very enlightening but is of some value as clearly stating SHAPE's stand on this whole question.

4. It was at the suggestion of General Norstad that I used the method of writing him a letter in order to obtain his considered views on the questions raised in your telegram. Considering the fundamental nature of some of these questions, it is gratifying that he has seen fit to answer them as fully as he has. I would therefore be grateful if you would give this letter only such restricted circulation as you think necessary. I assume that you will of course refer a copy of it, and of the enclosure, to the Chairman Chiefs of Staff.

JULES LÉGER

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le commandant suprême des Forces alliées en Europe
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Supreme Allied Commander in Europe
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

NATO SECRET

February 3, 1959

Dear Mr. Ambassador:

Your letter concerning the deployment and use in Allied Command Europe of IRBMs and tactical nuclear weapons poses a number of questions of fundamental importance.

You have asked for clarification on the differentiation between IRBMs and tactical nuclear weapons from the point of view of control. The restrictions which limit my exercise of control over conventional forces in peacetime cannot, I feel, be applied to my control of such a weapons system as the IRBM which with its capacity for immediate reaction and its great flexibility in target assignment will play a most important role in the initial stages of an emergency. Therefore, while I do not need to control directly in peacetime those atomic delivery means which have a more limited range and which are in a supporting role, I consider that units manning IRBMs must be instantly responsive to SHAPE direction. In this regard I have consistently maintained that IRBM units must be under NATO operational control (as defined in paragraph 18a(3), Section II, MC 57/1) in peace as well as in war.

The extensive capabilities of IRBMs make it mandatory that they not only be available for immediate use but also that units so equipped be responsive to a centralized authority which would direct their employment. In view of these requirements I intend to negotiate special command arrangements for IRBMs with the Ministers of Defense who have agreed to provide units, equipment and sites for these weapons.

As you have pointed out stockpiles of nuclear warheads of U.S. source but allocated to Allied Command Europe will remain under U.S. custody. Thus, while I may not have direct peacetime operational control of all atomic-capable units or delivery systems, I will nevertheless control the atomic capability of most of these forces.

With respect to the meaning of Mr. Wilgress' phrase "tactical weapons are being provided by the U.S. outright to the national forces under the command of SACEUR," one must distinguish between nuclear warheads on the one hand and delivery systems on the other. The delivery systems, such as aircraft, HONEST JOHN equipment or the delivery elements of IRBMs, are furnished outright to national forces for their manning and inclusion within their defense establishments. These systems normally are furnished by the United States under military assistance programs and become the property of the recipient nation. As noted above, this is not true in the case of nuclear warheads, either for the so-called tactical weapons or for the IRBMs.

It is of course true that common infrastructure financing of certain nuclear weapons systems as well as storage sites would tend to provide a measure of Allied control over them in peacetime. This is not the only reason, however, for my belief that these items should be supported by common funding. I feel that the infrastructure for any weapons system which is located and constructed with a view to serving the common defense, as distinguished from the defense of a single nation, could in fairness be paid for by the Alliance, particularly where the cost may otherwise fall disproportionately on a NATO country.

Your third question pertains to procedural arrangements for providing nuclear warheads and IRBMs and the role of the Council with respect to such arrangements. Nuclear warheads are furnished by the United States in accordance with its undertakings at the Heads of Government Meeting in December 1957 for the defense of the NATO area. They are intended for use by the Alliance only in case of need. Separate bilateral agreements are negotiated between the United States and the NATO nations concerned regarding the specific arrangements for storing the warheads on national territories. I exercise centralized control over the use of nuclear warheads through specific implementing procedures developed at SHAPE for the forces of ACE.

In the case of IRBMs, arrangements are being developed in accordance with the heads of government communiqué. The IRBM delivery vehicle is provided upon my recommendation directly to the country concerned. The United States makes arrangements with these countries to carry out their respective spheres of responsibility. Additionally, I make arrangements with the same nations with respect to my sphere of responsibility.

I have made periodic statements to the Military Committee and to the North Atlantic Council concerning the progress of both the IRBM and NATO special ammunitions storage programs. I am proceeding on the assumption that these constitute reports on the progress of approved projects and that the North Atlantic Council can at any time make special inquiries or observations with respect to the arrangements that are being developed.

In answer to your last question, as SACEUR, I can only say that the NATO plans for the use of any nuclear warheads which might be located in Germany provide for their release under standard NATO procedures,⁴¹ and no exception has been made for the Federal Republic of Germany or any other NATO nation. You will understand, of course, that any information concerning the other arrangements which are worked out between the United States and the recipient governments should be obtained from the governments concerned.

I trust that this information will be helpful to you in answering the inquiries of your government.

Sincerely,

LAURIS NORSTAD

⁴¹ Note marginale :/Marginal note:
What are they? [auteur inconnu/author unknown]

3^e PARTIE/PART 3
 AIDE MUTUELLE
 MUTUAL AID

237.

PCO

*Note du ministre de la Défense nationale
 pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*
Memorandum from Minister of National Defence to Cabinet Defence Committee

CDC DOCUMENT NO. 4-58

[Ottawa], April 23, 1958

SECRET

CANADIAN MUTUAL AID PROGRAMME 1958-59

The proposed Canadian Mutual Aid Programme for 1958-59 introduces no new principles in programme planning. It is designed to fit into the Canadian defence and production pattern as well as to supply important European NATO defence needs. The $130,000,000 programme is of the same value as the programme for 1957-58 and provision has been included in this amount in the 1958-59 Estimates.

The proposed 1958-59 Mutual Aid Programme totalling $130,000,000 provides for;

(a) the NATO aircrew training programme at an estimated cost of $9,000,000, which is based on the completion of the Canadian commitment for NATO aircrew training in 1958, together with the estimated costs of training aircrew for Norway, Holland and Denmark less token payments which will be made by these countries for this training. No cost is included for training German pilots as the extra costs in this connection will be met by payments from Germany;

(b) carryover of $1,500,000 on previously approved items of direct production for Mutual Aid including transportation costs on shipments to Turkey, no amount is provided for new items;

(c) equipment that can be made available from Canadian Service stocks estimated at $98,000,000;

(d) estimated contributions of $21,500,000 for NATO infrastructure and military budgets.

Some of the main items included in the 1958-59 Programme are as follows:

Item	No.	Value
(a) T33 aircraft and spares	50	$10,516,012
(b) Sabre V aircraft and spares	40	20,622,000

The only countries likely to bid for these aircraft are Turkey and Greece to which Canada has already transferred earlier models with U.S. engines which have been maintained by the U.S. The Sabre V's have orenda engines and Canada would have to assume responsibility for their support. This would involve additional administrative problems and a continuing cost of approximately $500,000 per year. It is not proposed to offer these aircraft until further exploratory talks are held with SHAPE to clarify the need for them.

Frigates	3	15,000,000
----------	---	------------

To cover the transfer to Norway of ships which have been on loan to that country.

(d) Algerine minesweepers	4	8,000,000
---------------------------	---	-----------

These ships are no longer required by the RCN. The valuation used includes refit costs to make the ships available for Mutual Aid at an estimated expenditure in the order of $500,000 per ship if done by outside contract. In addition there would be an outlay of approximately $33,000 per ship to make up deficiencies in stores and equipment. Preliminary enquiries indicate that Belgium and Denmark would be interested in two ships each.

The cash expenditures involved in the implementation of this programme are approximately $45,000,000 and cover (a) expenditures on Infrastructure and Military Budgets; (b) expenditures by the Services in the overhaul, etc., and shipment of equipment to seaboard; and (c) NATO Aircrew Training.

A more detailed list of the main items included in the programme is attached.†

I recommend approval of this programme.⁴²

[G. PEARKES]

238.

DEA/50030-L-40

*Note du chef de la 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures*⁴³

*Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division, to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*⁴³

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 22, 1958

CANADIAN MUTUAL AID PROGRAMME 1959/60

I have been advised that there will be a meeting in Mr. F. Miller's office on Monday, Nov. 24, at 10:00 a.m. which will take the form of a preliminary screening of the Defence Budget Estimates for 1959/60. Mr. MacNeill, General Foulkes and the Chiefs of Staff will be in attendance. Mr. Miller has suggested that this Department be represented at the meeting, particularly in view of our interest in the Mutual Aid section of the estimates which will be up for consideration.

2. We have heard that the Defence Budget Estimates, as now constituted, may include only between 24 to 50 million dollars for Mutual Aid. Of this amount approximately 20 million will be required to cover infrastructure and military budget commitments, the remainder is to be set aside for the provision of T-33 jet trainers and naval aircraft. However, we are informed that it is doubtful whether the RCAF will agree to release any ⁴² Approuvé par le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense le 28 avril 1958. Après un exposé oral fait par le ministre de la Défense nationale, George Pearkes, le 8 mai 1958, le Cabinet prend note avec approbation du programme d'aide mutuelle pour 1958-1959.

Approved by the Cabinet Defence Committee on April 28, 1958. After an oral presentation by National Defence Minister George Pearkes on May 8, 1958, Cabinet noted with approval the Mutual Aid program for 1958-1959.

⁴³ Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I found this memorandum very useful for this morning's meeting (on which I have prepared a brief memo) 24 Nov '58. D.V. LeP[an]

T-33 aircraft, which are expected to be in short supply during the fiscal year, and also whether the only countries which could make use of the naval aircraft involved, France and the Netherlands, would be interested in acquiring them. Under present plans, at worst, our Mutual Aid Programme might be effectively terminated and, at best, would represent a very sharp curtailment of the amount of aid provided during this fiscal year. The following is a table showing our Mutual Aid contributions since the inception of the programme in 1950:

Year	Expenditure (Thousand of Dollars)
1950-51	195,417
1951-52	126,416
1952-53	235,053
1953-54	289,707
1954-55	253,380
1955-56	174,966
1956-57	133,553
1957-58	118,464
1958-59 (Estimate)	130,000

3. In addition to the decline in the total amount of our programme in recent years, the proportion of the total representing direct procurement (inclusive of the NATO Air Training Scheme) has fallen drastically from a high of 136 million in 1952-53 to approximately 30 million dollars in 1957-58.

4. This decline reflects both the gradual phasing out of the NATO Air Training Scheme and the conclusion reached some time ago by the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production that direct procurement of materials for Mutual Aid is not of real assistance to Canada in maintaining our defence production facilities. In this connection it is explained that the concept of "immediate readiness" has rendered a philosophy of maintaining standby production facilities available for post D-Day expansion obsolete. Now, with service stocks of old, dispensable equipment depleted; with no apparent advantage accruing to the Services from direct procurement for Mutual Aid; and with other requirements for North American defence competing for funds in a strictly limited Defence Budget, the Department of National Defence would seem to have lost the vested interest it once had in supporting a Mutual Aid programme of any magnitude.

5. To our knowledge the present Cabinet has never been asked to consider our Mutual Aid policy. In fact, a hurried search of our records indicates that the last discussion by Cabinet on the substance of our Mutual Aid policy took place on November 12, 1954.⁴⁴ At the time Cabinet approved the statement by the then Minister of Defence to the effect that a major factor affecting our programme was the manner in which it could be utilized to help the requirements of Canadian forces. However, out of the ensuing discussion, it was noted that another important dimension of our Mutual Aid policy was the general desire to co-operate in building up the strength of NATO forces and doing Canada's part in the burden-sharing exercise undertaken by all NATO nations.

6. This department has consistently supported the latter view and we would recommend that at the meeting on Monday morning, it be argued that no decision should be taken on the level of our Mutual Aid programme for the next fiscal year until the broader policy aspects of the question have been fully examined by the Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence and subsequently by Cabinet.

⁴⁴ Voir/See Volume 20, Document 264.

7. One of the factors which will have to be taken into account in such an examination is the political reaction we can expect of our NATO allies to an abrupt curtailment of our Mutual Aid programme and how this, in turn, might affect Canada's role in the Alliance as a staunch supporter of the European defence effort. Although we are not in a position to indicate at this stage how severely our NATO allies would react to the effective termination of our programme, it is pertinent that the Annual Review Committee, in examining the Canadian submission this year, chose to attack our failure to indicate a forecast of the magnitude of our programme for the forthcoming year. Apprehension was expressed as to the future level of our programme and the obvious decline in the direct procurement portion of it was sharply criticized. The Committee has now indicated that unless we provide more information to indicate that Canadian Mutual Aid is to be maintained at a relatively high level, the Canadian Country Chapter will include a critical analysis of our efforts in this regard.

8. It would also seem necessary to consider the level of our Mutual Aid programme very carefully in relation to intentions with regard to the Air Division in Europe. The termination of our Mutual Aid programme, together with the withdrawal of the Air Division, would clearly be regarded seriously by our European allies as well as by the NATO military authorities. Current discussions on production sharing with the United States offer another context in which our future Mutual Aid plans should be examined. In the absence of our clear knowledge of the outcome of these discussions, it may be premature to dismiss the possibility of developing new weapons or components in Canada for Canadian use and for distribution to our European allies as Mutual Aid. We are reminded, in this connection, of the situation which arose in 1953 when the Canadian forces had a requirement for "Walkie-Talkie" radio sets. A production run of this equipment in Canada became economically feasible only by arranging for the disposal of sufficient quantities through Mutual Aid.

9. Another thought which occurs to us is that an unfortunate comparison could be made by our European allies between our Colombo Plan efforts and our Mutual Aid efforts if the latter were allowed to drop to a value below that of our Colombo Plan contributions. Nor could this policy be represented as indicating a transfer of effort on the part of Canada from military aid to economic assistance in view of the fact that the recent increase in our Colombo Plan contributions would hardly offset significantly the decrease in our Mutual Aid Programme.

PAUL TREMBLAY

239.

DEA/50030-L-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour la 1^{ère} Direction de liaison avec la Défense

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Defence Liaison (1) Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 24, 1958

MUTUAL AID PROGRAMME

I was moderately encouraged by the discussion of the Canadian Mutual Aid Programme that took place at this morning's meeting of the Estimates Committee of the Department of National Defence in the office of the Deputy Minister. It now seems likely that the programme for 1959-60 will reach a respectable total, at least in notional terms; and work is being set on foot which holds out promise for a more soundly-based programme in subsequent years.

2. At the opening of the meeting a new draft of the Mutual Aid Programme for 1959-60 was circulated. I am attaching it† to this memorandum, and as you will see, it reaches a total of $88 million, which is substantially greater than the figure we had been considering on Saturday. Mr. Miller, who was in the chair, explained that efforts had been made by all three of the services to scrape together as many suitable items as they could. This process was not entirely complete, and when it was he thought that the estimate for next year would be very close to $100 million. After these few preliminary explanations, I was called on to give the views of this Department. I said that we found ourselves in some perplexity. General Foulkes had recently referred several times to the bad patch through which NATO was passing and to the difficulty which was being experienced in trying to use the Annual Review as a means of implementing M.C. 70. We were afraid that if we had shortly to announce a very substantial reduction in the Canadian Mutual Aid Programme, the effect on NATO would be highly dispiriting. On the other hand, we realized that the practicalities of the situation had altered radically. The Air Training Programme was now virtually complete; our stocks of obsolescent equipment were almost exhausted; NATO forces in Europe now had fairly adequate supplies of conventional arms and equipment; and it had recently been announced by the United States Permanent Representative in Paris that their mutual aid contribution would more and more take the form of unconventional weapons. In this situation it was by no means clear to us what the outlines of a sensible Canadian Mutual Aid Programme on a continuing basis should be. We thought, however, that study should be given to the possibility of supplying our NATO allies with some weapons and equipment from new production. We were aware, for example, of the anxiety of the Department of Defence Production to maintain the facilities of the Canadian electronics industry; and we wondered whether, as an outcome of the current discussions with the United States authorities on production sharing, it might not be possible to make arrangements for producing electronics equipment in Canada which would be shipped as mutual aid to other NATO countries. Returning to the point where I had begun, I said that we would be very concerned about the possible consequences of a decision to reduce sharply our programme of mutual aid. We hoped that these issues could be discussed in the Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence and then be referred to Cabinet.

3. At the part of the meeting that I attended there were representatives of the Department of Finance, and of the Department of Defence Production, as well as of the Department of National Defence; and no one seemed to quarrel with anything I had said. Mr. Golden added that, in his opinion, there was little that could be done about the programme for 1959-60. Our Mutual Aid Programme, as presently constituted, was grinding to a halt and it could not be restarted without new Cabinet decisions. He hoped that these would be taken in time to formulate a more respectable programme for 1960-61. What was needed was a Cabinet directive informing officials that the Government was prepared to contemplate a Mutual Aid Programme of so many million dollars annually, and was also prepared to authorize deliveries from new production. In the absence of such policy decisions, the best that could be done for the 1959-60 programme was to keep scraping the bottom of the barrel in an effort to put the best possible appearance on what was essentially an unsound situation.

4. The Vice-Chief of the General Staff, General Allard, intervened to suggest that there were quite a few items which, in his opinion, could sensibly be produced in Canada and which would be very welcome to our NATO allies. He mentioned specifically the V.C. 12 Radar (for communications between army formations), the new counter-mortar radar and the Bobcat (which is a new tracked vehicle developed by the Canadian Army). If these items were supplied in some quantity to the forces of other NATO countries as well as to Canadian forces, their unit costs would drop substantially. Indeed General Allard went so far as to say that unless a decision were taken by the Canadian Government to supply mutual aid from new production, the day might not be far off when the Canadian Army would be obliged to join the list of recipients for these, as well as other similar, items of equipment.

5. At the Chairman's suggestion, it was agreed that a paper should be prepared for consideration by the Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence. This would outline the policy that is being followed at present and the consequences to which it is leading. It would also make recommendations concerning the new policy decisions that seem to be required. After consideration by the Panel, it would be referred to the Cabinet, which, I gather, is now planning to hold a series of meetings on defence questions early in the new year.

DOUGLAS LEPAN

240.

DEA/50309-A-40

Note pour le Comité sur les aspects économiques des questions de la défense

Memorandum to Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence

DOCUMENT ED 41-58

Ottawa, December 1, 1958

CANADIAN MUTUAL AID PROGRAMME

The programme worked out for 1959-60 totals $90,000,000 compared to $130,000,000 in 1958-59. Under main headings it compares as follows:

	1959-60	1958-59
Infrastructure and Military Budgets	$ 21,500,000	$ 21,500,000
Direct Production and other direct items	550,000	1,500,000
Equipment from Service stocks	60,700,000	98,000,000
Aircrew Training	7,250,000	9,000,000
	$ 90,000,000	$130,000,000

The main items included are

Army	No.	Amount
90 MM Guns AA, fire control equipment, etc.	50	$ 5,179,000
Navy
CS2F Tracker aircraft and spares	17	$ 23,500,000
Air Force
CF 100 aircraft and initial spares (conditional on sale of an additional 10 to Belgium)	10	$ 10,000,000
Orenda Aero Engines MK 10	225	16,065,000
Nene 10 Aero Engines	75	2,125,000
F 86 Spares Support — Turkey and Greece		2,520,000

The programme level included in the annual estimates of National Defence and expenditures recorded since commencement are -

	Estimates	Expenditures
1950-51	300,000,000	195,417,216
1951-52	165,000,000	126,415,799
1952-53	324,000,000	235,953,327
1953-54	324,000,000	289,707,406
1954-55	300,000,000	253,379,789
1955-56	175,000,000	174,966,318
1956-57	143,000,000	133,552,637
1957-58	130,000,000	118,464,310

From the outset the major factors underlying programme planning were that it should meet NATO deficiencies and assist to develop and maintain military productive capacity in Canada of a kind to meet equipment needs of Canadian Forces.

The first needs were equipment for forces in being and the training of aircrew. To satisfy these requirements Canada transferred the equipment for several army divisions, held in Canada from World War II stocks, and inaugurated the NATO Aircrew Training scheme. The latter was not a continuing commitment but was for a period sufficient to enable the European countries to quickly obtain trained pilots, and set up their own continuing arrangements for training. Expenditures on Aircrew Training have totalled over $400 million, with a high in 1952-53 of $104 million.

The emphasis on direct production items was centred on electronic items, including Radar Sets No. 4 MK 6/2 and Walkie Talkie Sets CPRC-26, all of which were in short supply in NATO countries and were needed by the Canadian Forces in quantities that did not justify Canadian production. The combined programmes were used to establish a basic electronic defence industry. Other substantial contributions consisted of Wasp Aero Engines, 12D40 propellers, 155 MM Howitzers, and various types of explosives and ammunition. The heavy expenditures on direct production items were incurred in the fiscal years 1952-53 to 1955-56, by which time it had become apparent that the Mutual Aid programme could play only a small part in the overall problem of maintaining production facilities or of reducing the unit costs of equipment required for the Canadian forces.

World War II equipment from Service holdings which comprised a large part of earlier programmes and which satisfied immediate NATO deficiencies is of course no longer available in any significant quantity and it is in any case of doubtful value except to maintain equipments transferred earlier.

The transfer of current type equipment from Service holdings or contracts has varied from year to year, depending on the specific types that could be released. The F 86 aircraft programme for the United Kingdom resulted in expenditures of $40 million in 1952-53, $63 million in 1953-54 and 3.4 million in 1954-55. The F 86 programme to Turkey and Greece required $25 million in 1953-54, $83.1 million in 1954-55. The Navy's ship transfer programme reflected charges of $18.1 million in 1953-54, $8.4 million in 1954-55 and $27.3 million in 1957-58. The quantities of useful equipment available from Service stocks have declined and can no longer be relied on as a steady source of a substantial volume of Mutual Aid.

The specific reference to Mutual Aid in the Canadian chapter of the 1958 Annual Review is as follows;

The part to be played by Canadian Mutual Aid in equipping NATO forces will be at least as important during MC 70 period as it has been in the past. But the value of Mutual Aid has been reduced by more than half over the past four years and is expected to decline further, though slightly, in 1959/60; though the decline by volume is rather less, as pre-1950 equipment has been written down in value by about 80 percent since 1956/57. The components of the aid have also changed; direct procurement has almost ceased, the Air Training scheme — its work nearly complete, is costing little, and a very large part now consists of equipment transferred from Service stocks. This equipment is in new condition and of great value to the recipient countries; but though about half of it is actually unused, the remainder has been in service with Canadian Forces, and a considerable amount dates from earlier than March 31, 1950. Provision of these categories of equipment is undoubtedly a smaller claim on Canada's resources than the equivalent in direct purchases.

As the continuance of a Mutual Aid programme of significant levels in future would require decisions to be taken now, consideration should be given to the need to maintain a significant level of Mutual Aid in support of NATO from both the political and defence aspects. In addition the usefulness of Mutual Aid in Canadian defence industry should be considered.

Recommendations should be developed as to;

(1) whether Canada should restrict equipment transfers to Service equipment which is being replaced by more modern types for Canadian forces, without regard to varying levels of Mutual Aid that will result;

(2) whether unused capacity in Canadian industry is to be used for production for Mutual Aid transfer to sustain a level of Mutual Aid and, regardless of the ability of the likely recipients to produce or finance their own requirements;

(3) whether Canadian aid is to be undertaken on a selective basis taking into consideration the financial capability of countries to finance their own requirements,

(4) whether Mutual Aid should again be looked to for the support of Canadian production of items required by the Canadian forces in quantities too small to provide economic production runs.

241.

DEA/50030-K-2-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité
sur les aspects économiques des questions de la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, December 8, 1958

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce, Secretary to the Cabinet.
 Mr. F.R. Miller, Deputy Minister of National Defence.
 General Charles Foulkes, Chairman, Chiefs of Staff.
 Mr. N.A. Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
 Mr. D.A. Golden, Deputy Minister of Defence Production.
 Dr. A.H. Zimmerman, Chairman, Defence Research Board.
 Mr. A.F.W. Plumptre, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance.
 Mr. L. Rasminsky, Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada.
 Mr. D.V. LePan, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
 Mr. W.R. Martin, Privy Council Office. (Secretary)
 Mr. D.B. Dewar, Privy Council Office. (Assistant Secretary)

Also Present

Mr. P. Tremblay, Mr. J.J. McCardle, Mr. R.P. Cameron, Department of External Affairs.
 Mr. J.A. Macdonald, Mr. E. Gallant, Department of Finance.
 Mr. F.A. Milligan, Department of Defence Production.

. . .

III. CANADIAN MUTUAL AID PROGRAMMES

23. Mr. Miller said that the paper before the Panel indicated a downward trend for our mutual aid programme which would continue in future years unless a new sort of programme were agreed upon. Even the forecast level of $90 millions for 1959-60 might well be too high, because, for instance, the Aero Engines which were included might be sold to Germany instead of being given as mutual aid.

(Document ED41-58 had been circulated).

24. General Foulkes said that it was time to consider whether we should revise our procedures for allocating equipment under mutual aid. If Canada no longer made items available to the Standing Group for allocation, but rather arranged bilaterally for such aid, we would be free to take decisions on which countries most needed the equipment we gave away, and which were most likely to make good use of it. It was true that the procedure of allocation by the Standing Group had protected us from having to fend off numerous requests made bilaterally by countries, but if we took the compromise position in future that we would still seek Standing Group advice on allocations, some of the difficulties of a policy of bilateralism could perhaps be avoided.

25. Mr. LePan said that External Affairs would favour the maintenance of a fairly high level of mutual aid if such a programme made economic and military, as well as political, good sense. It was difficult for External Affairs to judge the economic and military merits of any particular size of programme, however. If, as had been suggested, the programme were to fall to a very low level in 1960 or 1961, External Affairs would be concerned about the political implications for NATO.

26. Mr. Macdonald said that the Department of Finance was anxious to know in advance whether a substantial programme, which would perhaps include a large degree of direct procurement items, was going to be adopted in 1960 or subsequent years. If External Affairs or National Defence foresaw the need for such a programme, the Department of Finance would need to know well in advance of their intention to propose it.

27. Mr. Miller said that it would be useful to examine the areas of production from which items for mutual aid might be drawn, and for a study to be made of the implications for NATO relations of a declining programme.

28. Mr. Tremblay said that there might be an increasing need for Canada to provide conventional armaments through mutual aid as the United States programme moved more and more into "unconventional" armaments.

29. The Panel agreed to draw the attention of Ministers to the declining mutual aid programme with a view to obtaining guidance as to future Canadian policy on mutual aid.

D.B. DEWAR
Assistant Secretary

242.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 9, 1958

Present

The Minister of Public Works and Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Green) in the Chair,
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming),
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Brooks),
 The Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes),
 The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton),
 The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan),
 The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean),
 The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) (for afternoon meeting only),
 The Postmaster General (Mr. William Hamilton),
 The Minister without portfolio (Mr. Macdonnell),
 The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith),
 The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Alvin Hamilton),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith),
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley),
 The Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) (for afternoon meeting only).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Assistant Secretaries to the Cabinet (Mr. Fournier), (Mr. Martin).

N.A.T.O. MUTUAL AID PROGRAMME, 1959-60

24. The Minister of National Defence said that the proposed N.A.T.O. mutual aid programme for 1959-60 amounted to $90 million as compared with $130 million for the current year. It involved a reduction of nearly $40 million in the amount of equipment for transfer to N.A.T.O. countries from service stocks and a small reduction in air crew training. The main items under the equipment heading included 90 mm guns at $5.2 million, naval tracker aircraft at $23.5 million, and aircraft engines, and spares from the R.C.A.F. totalling $30.7 million.

The principal factors underlying the programme since its inception had been that it should help meet N.A.T.O. deficiencies and at the same time assist in the maintenance of productive capacity in Canada of a kind needed to meet the equipment needs of Canadian forces. The transfer of equipment from World War II stocks for several army divisions and the N.A.T.O. aircrew training scheme formed the most significant elements in the programme during its early years. Subsequently, emphasis had been shifted to direct production items, particularly electronic equipment, which was in short supply in Europe and was also needed by Canadian forces, but not in sufficient quantity to justify Canadian production for Canadian use alone. The combined need had been used to establish a basic electronic defence industry. The heavy expenditures on direct production items occurred from 1952 to 1956. By then, however, it had become apparent that the mutual aid programme could only play a small part in the overall problems of maintaining production facilities or of reducing unit costs of equipment required for Canadian forces. World War II equipment was no longer available in any significant quantities and it was, in any case, of doubtful value now except to maintain equipment transferred earlier. Transfers of current types of equipment from service stocks, or from contracts, had been substantial. However, the amount available had now declined and could no longer be relied upon to supply a steady volume of mutual aid.

In the current annual review, the N.A.T.O. authorities had pointed out that continuance of a Canadian mutual aid programme at significant levels required decisions to be taken now, that Canada should bear in mind that such a programme was important to the alliance from both the political and defence points of view, and that the usefulness of mutual aid to Canadian industry should be borne in mind.

Decisions were required now on what the future mutual aid policy should be. Should the programme be fixed for next year at $90 million as he had described? Should plans be made to increase the size of the programme next year by the transfer of equipment from direct production? If this were the case, the policy had to be settled soon because it would take at least a year before any such equipment would be available. If it were decided not to do this and continue as at present, mutual aid would be lower than $90 million in 1960-61 because supplies of service equipment would be lower.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated, (Memorandum to Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Dec. 1 — Cab. Doc. 353-58).⁴⁵

26. Mr. Pearkes recommended a programme of $90 million for 1959-60, recognizing that, on the present basis, it would fall further in future years.

27. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said he had to agree, reluctantly, with this recommendation. However, the reduction and smaller programmes in the future could be defended on the ground that Canada had to undertake larger commitments for the defence of North America.

28. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) Canada's record in N.A.T.O. was a creditable one and would continue to be so. A reduction in mutual aid should not alarm the alliance in view of the fact that more had to be spent for defence in North America which was a contribution to the deterrent in which Europeans were vitally interested. Furthermore, the condition of many nations of the alliance had changed. Germany, which could probably put mutual aid equipment to the best use, should surely pay for its own armament and supplies.

⁴⁵ Voir/See Document 240.

(b) Of the $90 million in the proposed programme, approximately $22 million would appear as a direct charge against next year's budget. Replacement of the equipment for transfer from service stocks would increase this figure.

(c) There was something to be said for using mutual aid to support Canadian industry. However, this would mean embarking on a production programme of items to be given away. Was the government prepared to increase taxes for this purpose?

(d) It could be pointed out that an offer of $10 million worth of wheat for strategic stockpiles had been made and this was part of Canada's contribution to the alliance. So far, however, not much interest had been shown in the proposal. No provision had been made in the Main Estimates for 1959-60 for this item.

29. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of National Defence on the N.A.T.O. mutual aid programme for 1959-60 and agreed that, unless convincing arguments were made at the N.A.T.O. Ministerial Council meeting for increasing Canada's contribution over that which was contemplated, the programme be fixed at $90 million, as proposed by the Minister, recognizing that this figure would fall in the future as stocks of service equipment available for transfer were depleted.

...

4^e PARTIE/PART 4

RÉUNION DES CHEFS DU GOUVERNEMENT,
PARIS, 16-19 DÉCEMBRE 1957
HEADS OF GOVERNMENT MEETING,
PARIS, DECEMBER 16-19, 1957

243.

DEA/50359-A-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2282

Washington, October 28, 1957

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Repeat London, NATO Paris (Information).

EISENHOWER-MACMILLAN DECLARATION

The representatives of NATO countries in Washington were asked to attend a meeting in the State Department this afternoon at which Mr. Burke Elbrick, Assistant Under Secretary of State, presided. He did not take the meeting through the whole of the "Declaration of Common Purpose"⁴⁶ but went straight to the last two sentences of paragraph 5 of Part II.

2. He emphasized three points in this passage:

- (a) the need for a wider understanding of the nature and potentialities of "new weapons";
- (b) the rather cryptic reference to their availability in case of need meant that the USA would be ready to develop the concept of atomic stock piles in NATO countries;
- (c) the undertaking by the USA, and as relevant by the UK, that the "new weapons" would not be used "for purposes other than individual and collective self-defence, as authorized by the Charter of the UN."

These sentences contained propositions of policy on which the President and the UK Prime Minister had agreed and which they hoped would commend themselves to the other countries of the free world.

3. That was why the President and Mr. Macmillan, after discussion with M. Spaak, had felt that the December meeting of the Council of NATO would be the most appropriate place and occasion for examining and developing the implications of these policy positions on which the UK and the USA were already agreed.

4. I understood from Mr. Elbrick that the USA representative in the Permanent Council of NATO was today formally raising with his colleagues the desirability of making the December ministerial meeting one at which Heads of Governments would be expected to attend. It was assumed that members of NATO Council would wish to consult their governments on this point and it was hoped that replies will be received to permit the Council to take a definite decision in this sense on Wednesday.

5. The Netherlands representative (Van Roijen) said that his government cordially welcomed the Anglo-American "Declaration of Common Purpose" and wondered if the sentences in paragraph 5, Part II, of the declaration to which Elbrick had especially drawn our attention would, in fact, constitute the agenda for the special meeting of NATO that was in contemplation. He thought his government would also welcome a discussion at a high level of the possibilities of progress in weapons standardization. He thought too the December meeting should consider whether anything more could be done to improve diplomatic consultation between members of NATO. He thought his colleagues around the table appeared to agree that this summer's NATO discussion of disarmament policy had been the most effective exercise in consultation yet undertaken.

6. The Italian representative (M. Brosio) wondered whether in view of the importance of the questions to be discussed at the December meeting and of the fact that Heads of Governments were likely to attend, it might not be desirable to set up some special preparatory body quickly, to make sure that the policy implications of the questions on the agenda were fully studied in advance of the meeting so that the Heads of Governments would take the requisite decisions when they met in Paris.

7. Elbrick said that the USA was fully aware of the amount of homework which would have to be done between now and any useful meeting in Paris in December. He said the USA had assumed that the Permanent Council of NATO would be used to coordinate national preparations required for the special meeting but would see that Brosio's suggestion of an ad hoc preparatory body received consideration.

⁴⁶ Pour le texte de la Déclaration d'objectif commun, voir United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXVII, No. 959, November 11, 1957, pp. 739 à 741.

For the text of the Declaration of Common Purpose, see United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXVII, No. 959, November 11, 1957, pp. 739-741.

8. Brosio wondered whether the situation in the Mideast should be considered at the December meeting. In principle he thought it should, but he recognized that from a tactical point of view it might be undesirable to develop a public NATO position on Mideastern problems.

9. The German Ambassador took advantage of the meeting to convey to the USA government his government's grateful appreciation of the reaffirmation in the Anglo-American declaration of the NATO position on the reunification of Germany.

[N.A.] ROBERTSON

244.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM DL-959

Ottawa, November 5, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 1841 of Oct 30.†

Repeat London, Washington (Information).

DECEMBER MINISTERIAL MEETING

1. A new situation has been created by the decision that the December meeting be attended by Heads of Government. Their presence will enhance the importance of the meeting and this should be reflected in the agenda. The present agenda may well be considered to be inadequate for this purpose. You will recall that there was even some hesitation about holding the meeting in December when it became apparent that MC70⁴⁷ could not be prepared in time for submission to it.

2. It is not yet certain to what extent the Heads of Government will wish to deal with the items on the present draft agenda. They may wish to have their ministers discuss most of the regular items. It would appear from Washington telegram 2282 of October 28 that the U.S. and the U.K. intend to develop three points contained in the "Declaration of Common Purpose," namely:

- (a) the need for wider understanding of the nature and potentialities of new weapons;
- (b) arrangements for stocking atomic weapons in NATO countries; and
- (c) an understanding that the new weapons would not be used for purposes other than individual and collective defence as authorized by the Charter of the U.N.

While these points are important in themselves, they barely call for a meeting at the Head of Government level.

3. If the forthcoming meeting is to be successful — and the state of the Alliance is such that it can ill afford a failure at this time — some hard thinking will have to be done during the next few days. We realize that Mr. Spaak's absence from Paris may be delaying the ⁴⁷ Voir la première partie du présent chapitre pour les documents relatifs au MC-70 et à la planification stratégique de défense.

See Part 1 of this chapter for documents relating to MC-70 and NATO strategic defence planning.

preparations but this should not prevent the delegations from exchanging views during his absence.

4. We therefore share the view of the Netherlands representative (your telegram 1812 of October 28†) that there will have to be very careful preparation for this meeting. We are also aware that time is very short. We may at a later stage have more substantial comments to make but in order not to lose too much time, thought might be given immediately to the preparation of a declaration which could be issued by the Heads of Government at the meeting. Such a declaration might be issued in addition to the normal communiqué. We had in mind a declaration of inter-dependence which might give a much needed fillip to NATO and serve as a guide to future NATO and free world action. The principles of inter-dependence might be drawn up as a series of points on which agreement could be reached and serve the following purpose:

- (1) give new vigour to the Alliance in military and related fields;
- (2) reawaken interest in NATO countries to the concept of collective security and self-defence;
- (3) create a better understanding of NATO and its purpose in countries outside NATO and a feeling of co-partnership in the maintenance of freedom;
- (4) provide a new and better focussed military and political perspective for the recent Soviet successes in the field of missiles;
- (5) provide a stimulus for the "inexorable" evolutionary process through which the dictatorial Communist governments confronted with ever more insistent demands for freedom will be forced over a period of time to meet these demands (reference Section I Washington Declaration of Common Purpose);
- (6) provide a common statement on disarmament; (this will be particularly important as a result of the decision taken by the U.S.S.R. to withdraw from the Disarmament Subcommittee and the Disarmament Commission⁴⁸ of the General Assembly);
- (7) set the conditions under which the NATO countries conceived of a summit meeting between the major powers and the Soviet Union.

5. There are serious complications in drafting such agreed points; some might have to be discarded and others added. Point 7 for example is particularly difficult to handle at this stage. We must bear in mind, however, that this NATO Summit Meeting is a means to an end and not an end in itself.

6. The announcement of the intention to stockpile atomic weapons in NATO countries is bound to have serious and far-reaching repercussions throughout the whole of Europe and in uncommitted countries. Great care must therefore be taken to offset this announcement with a broad and forward-looking reaffirmation of the objectives of the Alliance in the context of current developments.

7. The preparation of a declaration of this nature should in our view begin at once. If necessary a drafting committee could be set up jointly to work with the Secretary General on this task. Prior to the Summit Meeting, the senior officials could meet in Paris early in December jointly with the permanent delegates to draw up a final draft declaration for submission to Heads of Government.

8. Please discuss these thoughts informally with your colleagues before your departure.

[JULES] LÉGER

⁴⁸ Voir/See Document 134.

245.

DEA/50219-AL-1-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council*

TELEGRAM V-697

Ottawa, November 7, 1957

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Repeat Candel New York, London, Washington, Paris, Bonn, Brussels, Hague, Rome (Information).

By Bag Ankara, Athens, Copenhagen, Lisbon, Oslo from London.

STOCKPILING OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN NATO COUNTRIES

It is now likely that a pronouncement concerning arrangements for the stockpiling of nuclear weapons in NATO countries might be made at the Ministerial Meeting in December. However desirable this move may be from a military point of view we must accept the fact that it will be poorly received by most of the world outside NATO and by some sections of public opinion within NATO countries. It is also a step which will be represented by the Soviet Union and probably also by some neutralists as contrary to efforts to achieve either disarmament or a reduction in world tension.

2. It would therefore be advantageous if the December meeting were to place some emphasis on disarmament and on the peaceful solution of international problems. Evidently it will not be easy to evolve a convincing and meaningful declaration especially as one of the logical central subjects would be restrictions on the use of nuclear weapons. A repetition of the usual NATO protestations in combination with reiteration of the sense of point three of the August 29 proposals⁴⁹ in this respect would be insufficient.

3. We have begun exploring what might be done and for the present are merely presenting the problem. We would be grateful for comments from all addressees and suggest that the question be discussed informally with other delegations at NATO and New York and raised with foreign offices in London, Paris and Washington.

4. For Washington only: With reference to your telegram 2308 of November 1† we would be especially interested in knowing whether this aspect has been considered by Elbrick and Gerard Smith.

[JULES] LÉGER

⁴⁹ Pour le texte officiel des propositions occidentales de désarmement du 29 août 1957, voir Débats sur le désarmement, 1957 (Ottawa, 1958), pp. 39 à 44.

For the official text of the August 29, 1957 Western disarmament proposals, see Report on Disarmament Discussions, 1957 (Ottawa, 1958), pp. 33-38.

246.

DEA/50105-G-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 8, 1957

NATO UNITY

One of the major aberrations of our time is the assumption that unity is an end in itself and that it is by nature an unquestionably good thing — unless, of course, it applies to Communists, Asians and Africans. No one could deny that there is a time and a place for unity, but we should be frank enough to recognize that there is also a time and a place for disunity. It seems to me that the forthcoming session of the NATO Council is the time and place for Canada to support unity for the right purposes but recognize, if not the virtue of disunity as such, at any rate the false importance which can be attached to unity. We Canadians have been preaching for a long time that the strength of the Commonwealth lies in this same paradox. Perhaps we should speak frankly about these things to our NATO colleagues before they allow the mystique of unity to enmesh us in proclamations and promises which, if taken seriously, would cripple our diplomacy and hasten us in the direction of a world split in two camps (and Armageddon shortly thereafter) or, if not taken seriously, (which is much more likely) would create frustration, misunderstanding and the debilitating consciousness of hypocrisy.

2. Certainly one of the purposes of the "Summit" meeting of NATO at this time should be to demonstrate a sense of unity among the members of NATO. Whether one believes that our diplomacy should be a tough continuation of cold war tactics or the seeking of settlements and peaceful co-existence, this is no time for us to look scattered and frightened. Neither kind of diplomacy can be pursued effectively or safely from weakness — or from apparent weakness. We must show that we are not intimidated by recent events, that we are not panicky, that we are more than ever anxious to pool our resources and improve our military strength. These gestures of unity will be much more effective, of course, if they are related to something substantive. We are not going to stagger the Kremlin with the rhetoric of "togetherness."

3. On matters of military defence there is no doubt that unity to a considerable extent is a good thing. It is on the political side that questions arise. It is tempting to say that the NATO countries should unite for strictly military purposes and leave it at that. This is, of course, not good enough to defend us and non-NATO countries against Soviet diplomacy. We cannot allow them to play one of us against the other. We must frustrate their knavish political tricks by coordinating our policies towards countries threatened by them. We must strive for political as well as military unity. The question is how much.

4. Because of the unquestionable virtue of unity in so many things, it is often assumed that the more we seek to promote joint policies on everything the better. Whatever lip service we have paid to such seductive principles, any tendency towards excessive unity has been resisted by Canada and other members on an ad hoc basis. This is healthy enough, but it has usually been accompanied with a guilty feeling that we were not fulfilling the mystic principle of unity. Should we not, however, recognize that unity on political and diplomatic matters is a good thing only to a limited extent and that to go beyond that extent is not even to be hankered after.

5. One reason we should not pursue the false god of unity too far is that it could lead us into uniting behind a wrong policy. We have talked too often as if the main cause of distress in the Middle East crisis last year was that the unity of NATO was broken, whereas the real cause for distress was that some of our members were pursuing a disastrous policy. (It doesn't matter for the purposes of this argument whether one considers that it was the French and British or the Americans who were wrong.) It was far better that NATO should be split than that we should all unite in error. If one of our members is pursuing a policy not conducive to our best interests, it is better for us to oppose it.

6. The argument against unity is particularly strong on "colonial matters." It would be one thing to unite in support of a wise French policy in Algeria, but it would be disastrous to stand behind the kind of policy which might be produced if an extremist Government came to power in Paris. If NATO is not to be discredited in the eyes of Asians, Africans, and Latin Americans, we must unite only in support of enlightened colonial policies. So long as there are wide variations in the policies of our colonial powers it is better that we exercise our independent judgment on such matters. There is no valid NATO reason why we should support Portugal over Goa which could not be translated into a valid Commonwealth reason for supporting India.

7. We have set our faces, in the words the Prime Minister used at the United Nations, against rigid blocs, although we favour group consultation.⁵⁰ There can be no objection to a good deal of consultation in NATO. The danger is that groups can turn into blocs without seeing where they are going. There may seem no reason at the time why the NATO members of FAO should not meet in Rome and consider what candidates they should support for the FAO Council, but it is in this way that we begin to establish conventions of bloc voting which are difficult to break when they are taken for granted. It may have seemed sensible to the Americans to ask the NATO Council members to intervene with the Director-General of UNESCO on a matter of UNESCO procedure, but this too would set a precedent of joint action which would lead us either into acting as a real power bloc or, what is more likely, leading the NATO Council into perpetual disunity over trivial matters. (It has always been a tacit principle of the Commonwealth that one preserves unity by not introducing too many causes of disunity.)

8. There are, furthermore, situations in which there are advantages in different members pursuing different policies. Take the question of arms for Tunisia. Because the French cannot supply arms for Tunisia, should the British and Americans follow suit and allow these arms to come from Czechoslovakia? Or consider the present position of Egypt. It is in the common interest to pull Egypt away from its too close association with the Communist powers. Britain and France, and also the United States, find it difficult for various reasons to assist this process. However, Turkey is making a determined effort to re-establish its relations and its influence in Cairo, and the Egyptians have not been unresponsive. The Norwegians and Canadians in the United Nations Assembly have been able to deal with the Egyptians during the recent crisis over Syria in a way that was impossible for some of our NATO allies but which undoubtedly served the purposes of the West. Egypt needs economic assistance to keep itself out of the Soviet orbit, and the Germans and Italians might be able to help. It would be far better for NATO to have Germans (Western variety) in Egypt than Russians. In situations like this our NATO diplomacy must be flexible; it is one advantage we have over the Communist bloc. If, however, we had, in response to appeals for "unity" agreed on a joint boycott of Egypt or otherwise inhibited individual national diplomacy we should be quite powerless to exploit many situations in our own interest. Would it have served any sensible purpose, for instance, if we had all pledged ourselves to break relations with Yugoslavia when the Germans did? Is it not a good thing that some of us have relations with and listening posts in Peking? Do we really want to hamstring the United States, our strongest champion, to a world policy tied too closely to the narrower interests of Western Europe?

⁵⁰ Voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, vol. 9, N° 10, octobre 1957, pp. 282 à 288.

See Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Vol. 9, No. 10, October 1957, pp. 282-288.

9. We must try to remember, even with all the emotions of December in Paris, that NATO is only one of several associations which are important to us. In the military field it is fundamental, but in the political field we have other essential interests as well. The problems of the world are not simply a matter of confronting the Communists with a United Western Europe and its overseas associates. Our concern to keep our links with our Commonwealth associates and to hold the affection of Asians and Africans in the United Nations is not just a sentimental frill. It is a thoroughly hard-boiled effort to prevent the Russians from turning our flanks and exposing NATO as a Maginot Line. Because NATO is of supreme military importance to us, we should not assume that it is of exclusive political importance. There is no point in arguing the relative importance to us of NATO, the Commonwealth, and the United Nations and to decide in principle which should take priority. Priorities will vary depending upon the situation. The fact is that each is an essential part of our effort by military and diplomatic means to keep the balance of power in the world on our side. We must maintain enough flexibility in our diplomacy to associate when necessary with non-NATO countries in the United Nations and elsewhere, to pursue policies with which other NATO countries do not agree, and even to support non-NATO countries in disputes with NATO countries. The NATO association implies an obligation to seek agreement with other members and to oppose them with special reluctance, but it does not involve any more than that.

10. It may well be argued that the theme of this memorandum is essentially a skirmish with a straw man because no one is really advocating NATO unity of the kind herein criticized. The trouble is that everybody keeps on talking as if we should. It is true that no member has ever yet supported this kind of unity in practice. No Great Power has seriously consulted its NATO partners through NATO machinery about any major issue or crisis, with the possible exception of disarmament (and that was largely because certain aspects applied specifically to certain NATO countries and their consent was necessary). Even small powers like Turkey refuse to talk in the Council when a crisis involves them. The Belgians forget to consult the Council when they put forward a U.N. resolution about disarmament, and the French, who wouldn't dream of consulting NATO about their policies in Israel or Algeria, read the Belgians a lecture on NATO unity. A cynic might well argue that NATO unity is merely a slogan produced in speeches, an argument produced by any member when he wants an automatic commitment from other members to support his policy, or the basis of a charge laid against a member who has done something someone else doesn't like.

11. The theme of this memorandum is not cynical, however, and it is in favour of rather than opposed to NATO consultation on political matters. It is opposed only to pretentious talk about NATO consultation and NATO unity and to demands for a "common foreign policy" for NATO members. The Council has been developing practical and sensible methods of exchanging views on such long-range questions clearly pertinent to NATO purposes as trends in Soviet policy, cultural exchanges with Communist countries, developments in Communist China. Consultations on disarmament are valuable, provided they are about long-range aims and not about day-to-day tactics. This pooling and exchange of views, and in some cases the coordination of policies, is all to the good and should be encouraged. Would it not be wiser to encourage this sort of thing rather than to proclaim the virtues of unrestrained unity by consultation of a kind that cannot exist, then lacerate our souls because we have not attained some higher concept of unity or call upon more wise men to point out the way. We should set fairly well understood bounds to our ambitions for consultation. Specifically, ought we not to recognize that the Great Powers are never going to bring their crises to us as a body or, if they do so, it will be not to ask our views in advance but to exploit the mysticism of unity in order to demand our support for decisions already irrevocably taken.

12. By our brave talk of unity we not only nourish our own neuroses; we also feed the delusions of the uncommitted countries whose good will we desperately need. Most of these countries view NATO with suspicion. They don't object so much to us in our 1949 guise as an essential defensive Alliance against an obvious danger, but they do object to us when we assume the appearance of Custer's last stand of Paleface privilege. We need not be intimidated by their misconceptions and at times deliberate misrepresentations of NATO, but we ought not to encourage these unnecessarily. It is our loud talk about unity, not our actual behaviour, which frightens them into thinking that we are united to promote our own interests and oppose theirs. If one considers it impossible that people on this earth should so misunderstand our intentions, consider in reverse the bogey of ferocious and militant unity many Westerners have conjured out of the factious fraternity of Africans and Asians in the United Nations. We cannot afford to tailor our NATO to the whims of the Asians and Africans, but it would be folly to ignore their feelings and extremely foolish to frighten them with a unity that doesn't exist.

13. Finally, there is the danger that we will be so beguiled in the next month by brave talk about girding up our loins, pulling up our socks, and standing shoulder to shoulder that we will imagine that NATO unity, if it were only attainable, would be the hundred per cent answer to intercontinental missiles and sputniks and Syria and Germany and every other problem. Huddling together to keep warm is a normal defensive reflex after shock, but it doesn't last long or achieve much on its own. It isn't very impressive either to critical onlookers. If the Council is going to create the impression required by present circumstances, then it should give a low priority to unity declarations and give its earnest attention to the policies on which it might be best to be united.

J.W. H[OLMES]

247.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1967

Paris, November 13, 1957

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Your Tel V-697 Nov 7 and our Tel 1902 Nov 8.†

Repeat London, Washington, Paris (Information).

NATO — DECEMBER MINISTERIAL MEETING

At Mr. Wilgress' suggestion, we have completed our sounding of the majority of the delegations on the proposal outlined in your telegram DL-959 November 5. We have also had a word with these same delegations about the views contained in your ref telegram.

2. As we have already indicated, you may take it that your main proposal, at least in general terms, has been well received. As you have anticipated, there will no doubt be a number of views regarding what the declaration should contain. Reactions to the possible list we put forward informally for consideration have been of a preliminary nature and some differences of view, particularly with regard to point of your telegram DL-959, have emerged. However, we have so far encountered no outright opposition to any of your tentative ideas, and we have found general sympathy with your main aims of framing a declaration which would give a lift to NATO, serve as a guide to future NATO and free world action, and reflect a conviction that the NATO Summit Meeting is a means to an end and not an end in itself. In a separate telegram† we report on a recent indication of a possible shift in the USA attitude toward a declaration.

3. With one or two exceptions, the preliminary reactions we have received to the news in your V-697 have been generally sympathetic. Burgess, with whom we had a word yesterday, had already expressed the opinion, when we talked to him about your DL-959, that it is important for NATO to emphasize peaceful purposes. Yesterday, he drew attention, as Mr. Robertson has, to passages in President Eisenhower's recent address.⁵¹ He also expressed the opinion that it should be possible for NATO to give some emphasis to its peaceful aspects through its consideration in December of scientific and economic matters.

4. Since our mission in London had already raised this question with the UK authorities and are awaiting their comments, we had only a casual word here with Cheetham, the Deputy Head of the UK delegation. His reaction was somewhat cool. He pointed out that the Russians parade their modern weapons in the Red Square and he sees no reason for NATO to feel under an obligation to offer any explanations of steps to defend itself by such measures as stockpiling atomic weapons. We pointed out that, at the same time as the Russians build their defences and show their strength, they also make much peaceful propaganda which is fairly effective in many parts of the world. Cheetham did not seem particularly moved.

5. Like the other delegations we have approached, the German and Italian delegations are well disposed toward your proposal for a joint declaration of interdependence. Blankenhorn, whom we saw yesterday following his return from Bonn where he had reported to Adenauer following Spaak's return, agreed wholeheartedly with the idea of a joint declaration. He thought it most important to give emphasis to NATO's peaceful purposes, for example in the field of disarmament, and stressed that the meeting should have the right impact in uncommitted countries. He asked if we had drawn something up. We said we had prepared a very tentative list of possible purposes to be covered and, at his request, are sending it to him. In another telegram we report briefly on Blankenhorn's main preoccupation — the substance of the meeting.

6. De Gasparini, the Italian Counselor, whom we saw yesterday, had few comments but was well disposed to our suggestions and undertook to get his government's reactions. He was very much aware of the political problem of presentation of the December decisions, especially as Italian public opinion might be affected.

⁵¹ Voir/See United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1957, Washington: Government Printing Office, 1958, pp. 789-799.

7. De Staercke, the Belgian representative, was fully in sympathy with the purpose expressed in your V-697 and attempted to formulate a number of points which the Prime Ministers could make to emphasize the defensive and peaceful intent of NATO. His formulations were conventional but this perhaps simply illustrates the difficulty of lifting such pronouncements out of the well worn rut.

8. You may take it that the Norwegian and Danish delegations share the views in your telegram. The reactions of the Netherlands delegation are also generally favourable as anticipated by our Embassy in the Hague (their telegram 437 November 12†).

9. Although governments' views have not, in most cases, been developed, it is our impression that the main resistance to your ideas for giving the December Council's decisions a peaceful Christmas wrapping will come from the French. We recently asked Millet (Head of the Asian department of the Quai and therefore presumably the protagonist of Asian sensibilities) what he thought of the suggestions outlined in V-697. He at first replied noncommittally but when pressed said he thought a NATO declaration should not go out of its way either to impress or to avoid offending opinion in the so-called uncommitted countries. He thought a disarmament reference should be included in the declaration or communiqué but strongly doubted that anything we could do to "dress up" NATO's decisions would have the least effect on, for example, Indian opinion.

248.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2004

Paris, November 18, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our Tel 2000 Nov 18.†

DECEMBER MINISTERIAL MEETING — DECLARATION OF COMMON PURPOSE

You will note from paragraphs 11-13 of our reference telegram that Council is to discuss the form and content of the proposed Declaration of Common Purpose at a meeting to be held on Tuesday morning November 26. I assume that you will wish me to outline the seven points set forth in paragraph 4 of your telegram DL-959 November 5. Of these we probably attach the most importance from the purely drafting point of view to points 6 and 7, dealing with disarmament and a Summit Meeting respectively. It would be of help if we could give the Council an exact text of the draft paragraphs dealing with these two subjects. In this way we can best convey what we would like the declaration to contain with respect to disarmament and a Summit Meeting.

2. The prevailing view expressed in the Council on November 16 was that the declaration should be short. Accordingly it would not be feasible to deal at length with either the subject of disarmament or that of a Summit Meeting but I believe we can make our points in a few sentences.

3. If you think well of the proposal that we should give the exact text of what we consider the declaration should contain respecting disarmament and a Summit Meeting I would be glad if this could be furnished to us by Monday, November 24.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

249.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to United Nations*

TELEGRAM DL-1038

Ottawa, November 22, 1957

SECRET. OPIMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Tel 2004 of Nov 18.

Repeat Washington, London, Paris, Brussels, The Hague, Oslo, Copenhagen, Bonn, Rome, Athens, Ankara (Information).

MINISTERIAL MEETING — DECLARATION

We are glad that Spaak has taken up with so much enthusiasm our proposal that a declaration should be drawn up in addition to the communiqué for the Heads of Government. We agree with his view that the communiqué should explain the decisions taken at the meeting. As we see it, the communiqué should in the light of the decisions taken (i.e. stockpiling, etc.) place emphasis on the growing strength, interdependence and unity of the Alliance. This underlying thought could be used in general terms in the declaration and would provide a link between these two documents. In the declaration, however, the strength, unity, and interdependence of the Alliance should be placed in a wider context.

2. We have given a great deal of thought to the wider context in which main military decisions might be placed in a declaration. We have come to the conclusion that it will be very difficult to break any new ground. In drafting the declaration, we feel that the main point of departure should be the Washington Declaration of Common Purpose especially section I and paragraphs 1, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9 of section II. By this we do not mean that all of the ideas contained in these sections need necessarily be included in a NATO declaration but they should be subjected to close scrutiny by the drafters and included if they meet the agreed purpose of the declaration.

3. In our view the declaration should present the military decisions of the meeting not as an end in themselves but as an obvious and vigorous defensive response to the Soviet threat, which, far from decreasing, has been reinforced by their development of long range missiles. The main objective is the search for peace. It should emphasize explicitly the main thoughts in the preamble of the treaty i.e. the desire to live in peace with all peoples and all governments coupled with the united determination to safeguard freedom.

4. It should contain a rededication to the principles of the United Nations and a declaration that the great strength of the Alliance will only be used for individual and collective self defence as authorized by the Charter of the United Nations. This part of the declaration should focus attention of the overall objective we wish to obtain, namely, the return to collective security arrangements under the United Nations. We have given careful thought to the suggestions contained in Washington telegram 2456† and other suggestions developed within the department along the same lines but have concluded that in the declaration it would not be possible to go further than to state the general principle enunciated above.

5. It should place the responsibility for the disruption of the disarmament negotiations squarely on the Soviet government and reemphasize the desire of all NATO governments and peoples to secure an agreement on disarmament which would put an end to the nuclear armaments race.

6. It should affirm the desire to decrease tensions between East and West. It might refer to the "peaceful coexistence" doctrine of the Communist countries and emphasize that the intent expressed by these words, which reflects the strong desire of all peoples and all governments, cannot be a reality until the Soviet government gives convincing evidence that it has abandoned its policies of domination and imperialistic expansion. Coexistence cannot be accepted as a cover for subversion in the free countries of the world.

7. It might include a paragraph along the lines of the Declaration of Common Purpose (section I paragraph 3) i.e. the suppression of liberty in the Communist countries will not last forever. Already in these countries there is evidence of the growing desire for intellectual and economic freedom. The Communist leaders will be forced to allow freedom to grow by an evolutionary process, or in time they will be faced with violent revolution. If the free nations are steadfast, the totalitarian menace that now confronts them will eventually recede.

8. It might include a reference to the satisfaction with which Heads of Government have viewed the arrival at independent international status of previously dependent territories. They, and other nations of the free world, are co-partners with the nations of the North Atlantic Alliance in the preservation of freedom as well as in the steady development of their economies.

9. It should include a reference to the necessity of continuing the search for opportunities to resolve differences between the Communist countries and free world, through the United Nations and at an appropriate time by meetings of world leaders.

10. We have not attempted to comment on the draft declaration prepared for Spaak contained in your telegram 2059.† We agree that a draft declaration might better be drafted and circulated after instead of before Council discusses the contents.

250.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2207

Paris, December 6, 1957

SECRET. PRIORITY.

Reference: Our Tel 2198 Dec 5.†

DECEMBER MINISTERIAL MEETING — DRAFT DECLARATION

Following is text of draft declaration drawn up as a result of Council discussions and referred to in my reference telegram. Text Begins:

"We, the representatives of 450 million free people, rededicate ourselves and our nations to principles and purposes of North Atlantic Treaty. This treaty, which has been in effect for nearly nine years, was founded to protect right of our peoples to live in peace and freedom under governments of their own choice. It has succeeded in protecting this precious right. Building on our experience and confident in success already obtained, we have agreed together upon means to give added strength to our Alliance.

2. At end of Second World War, arms of West were almost completely disbanded. USSR did not demobilize. Its policy of expansion impelled us to establish our treaty and to take steps to re-arm ourselves.

3. We are today an organization of fifteen free countries. We have learned to live and work together in the firm conviction that our close cooperation and our combined strength is essential to our security and to the peace of the world.

4. The meaning of our Alliance is clear. We have given a solemn guarantee, each to the other, to regard an attack upon one as an attack upon all. Staunchly faithful to Charter of UN we reaffirm that our Alliance will never be used for aggressive purposes. We are always ready to settle international problems by negotiation, taking into account the legitimate interests of all.

5. We continue firmly to stand for comprehensive and controlled disarmament which we believe can be reached by stages. In spite of disappointments we remain ready to discuss any reasonable proposal to reach this goal and to give a solid foundation for peace. Only thereby can we succeed in exorcising these natural fears which arise from the armaments race.

6. In our generation the free world is faced with an ever-increasing challenge, the challenge of Communist dogma backed by Soviet power. Only last month in Moscow the Communist rulers reaffirmed once again their determination to achieve world domination, if possible by subversion, if necessary by violence. In the principles of the North Atlantic Treaty there is no place for the concept of world domination. Firmly believing in peaceful change through democratic means, cherishing the character of our peoples and vigilant to safeguard their freedom, we will never yield to such a threat.

7. Established to defend the peace, our Alliance will also enable us to reach our objectives of economic prosperity and social progress. For this purpose we have agreed to cooperate closely to enable us to carry the necessary burden of defence without sacrificing individual liberties or the welfare of our peoples. We shall reach this goal only by recognizing our interdependence and by combining our efforts and skills in order to make better use of our resources. Such efforts will be applied particularly for peaceful use of atomic energy and for development and better organization of scientific cooperation.

8. We welcome the fact that so many peoples have gained their independence since end of Second World War. To these and to all other peoples who are dedicated to peace, as we are, we offer our cooperation on a basis of complete equality and in a spirit of fraternity.

9. Firmly convinced of value of our principles and of our way of life, with its intellectual and material wealth we have, without provocation but equally without fear, arrived at decisions which promote unity, strength and security, not only for our own nations, but also, we believe, for the whole world." Text Ends.

[L.D.] WILGRESS

251.

DEA/50102-S-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], December 7, 1957

NATO MINISTERIAL MEETING DECEMBER 16-18

The provisional agenda for the December Meeting contains five items:

- I Opening Ceremony (with press present)
- II The Principal Problems Facing the Alliance
- III Interdependence and the Better Utilization of NATO Resources
- IV Declaration by Heads of Government
- V Communiqué

Opening Ceremony

At the opening ceremony, which will take place at 12 o'clock Monday, December 16, Mr. Beck, the Honorary Chairman of the Council will make a speech of welcome to which Mr. Gaillard, representing the host country, will reply. It will be a short ceremony of approximately thirty minutes.

Principal Problems Facing the Alliance

The Secretary-General's Report on the Principal Problems Facing the Alliance will be the point of departure for discussion under this item, but Ministers will be free to raise any subjects they wish to discuss under this general umbrella. The report is divided into three sections:

- Political Cooperation
- Defence Problems
- Economic Cooperation

The section on Political Cooperation essentially comprises an exhortation to Member Governments to fulfill the recommendations of the Committee of Three Report.⁵² He ignores, however, the reservations which Mr. Dulles and others put on the acceptance of this report and accordingly his exhortation implies the desirability of a more rigid form of consultation than some member countries could agree to.

The section on Defence Problems draws attention to the "gap" between military requirements and availabilities. This gap has been papered over by the Annual Review Process which requires that the Military Commanders' recommendations be subject to modification in the light of politico-economic factors before firm force goals are set by Council. The Secretary-General proposes that this situation should be considered at a special Ministerial Conference in March. Such a conference would be prepared on the basis of MC-70, the Minimum Forces Study and would consider an overall Military Doctrine, the further integration of armed forces and the equitable sharing of the defence burden. Obligations of Member Governments, he thinks, should be specified and governments should bind themselves more strictly than at present. This would only be a preliminary conference and decisions would be taken at the next regular Ministerial Meeting.

⁵² Voir le volume 22, les documents 520 à 543 et 571 à 584./See Volume 22, Documents 520-543, 571-584.

The Panel, when it considered this section of the Report, was concerned at the Secretary-General's resurrection of the concept of the gap and the implication that he has in mind some modification of the Annual Review procedure. We feel strongly that the Council should only fix firm force goals in the light of economic and political considerations. There was also a feeling in the Panel that the Ministerial Conference which the Secretary General proposed should be attended by other Ministers as well as Defence Ministers in view of its importance and the wide range of subjects with which it will have to deal.

In the section on Economic Cooperation, the Report deals primarily with the problem of meeting the Soviet politico-economic penetration of countries outside the Alliance. He suggests that NATO should define a doctrine to counter the Soviet moves and implies that orthodox commercial and financial practice should be discarded in the light of political necessities. He proposes the establishment of an Agency either within or outside the NATO framework capable of applying the agreed doctrine in cases of emergency.

