The Spanish peace commissioners, it is generally believed, will be the Duke of Almodovar, the minister of foreign affairs, Mr. Merry del Val, the Spanish ambassador to the Vatican, and Senor Leon y Castillo, the Spanish ambassador to Paris.

The Madrid Government's response to the ultimatum was sanctioned in substance by the queen regent yesterday, and the first draft of it, as submitted to her by Premier Sagasta, was approved by the cabinet last night. It then was referred to the foreign minister, Mr. Merry del Val, and the Spanish ambassador to the Vatican, and Senor Leon y Castillo, the Spanish ambassador to Paris.

LONDON STILL LEADS.

Saturday's game was almost perfection from a spectator's standpoint. The batting on both sides was sensational, and fielding, considering the amount of work thrust on the men behind the pitcher, was first-class. The match was full of life and uncertainty right up to the last. The crowd was large and well pleased. The Londoners had a decided advantage for six innings. They pounded the ball harder. Keib was being touched freely, but not to a damaging extent. In the seventh there was a change. With the score 10 to four against them, the Saints went in with a forlorn hope, but a well developed batting streak pulled them out of the hole. Buss's home run was a good starter, and Keib was banged all over the lot for five runs. In the eighth Crowe was put in to save off impending disaster. In the ninth Ward singled, stole second, and was on third, when Lohman pushed the ball under the center field fence for a home run. It was a beautiful drive, and apparently clinched the game. The Saints, however, began to touch up Crowe, and a ten innings nerve wracker seemed imminent. With two runs, two men out, and one man on second base, it only needed a hit to do the trick, but it did not come. The score:

LONDON'S NEW PITCHER.

London has signed Hagerman, another pitcher, and he arrived on the grounds Saturday while the game was in progress. Hagerman will be remembered as a pitcher for the Yankees. He played right field in the games when not occupying the box. St. Thomas and Chatham were also after him. It is the intention of the home team to carry four pitchers.

Foreman will be suspended by London. After accepting terms and a ticket being sent him, he engaged with the Lancaster team of the Atlantic League, where he is no longer needed.

BN A HURRY.

Hamilton Herald: A blocked ball play similar to that which caused all the disturbance at Guelph, happened in one of Wednesday's games at London.

The farmer is supposed to be about as healthy as it is possible for a man to be. People smile at the idea that a farmer can ever be ill. His occupation is supposed to be an assurance of good health. The contrary is frequently the case. He is the most hard worked of men, and the hardest working man in the country. Above all others he needs to take care of his health. Frequently the farmer is in a malarial district. The result is malarial troubles, liver complaint, rheumatism or neuralgia.

The best of all medicines for hard-working men and women is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It invigorates the liver and purifies the blood, driving out the poisons that are responsible for malarial and the acids that are responsible for rheumatism. It is the greatest of all blood-makers, flesh-builders and nerve tonics. It strengthens the muscles and vitalizes every organ. It brings sweet slumber at night and mental and physical activity during the day. It gives zest to the appetite and makes the digestion perfect. The man or woman who resorts to this wonderful medicine whenever the body is out of sorts will be able to do almost any amount of work without danger to the constitution. Thousands have testified to its marvelous merits. Medicine dealers sell it.

Your "Golden Medical Discovery" cured me of a severe case of poisoning of the blood," writes Mrs. S. J. R. of St. Catharines, Ont. "I had one after another woman break out on my arms, and were very painful. I have tried the locally prepared Sarsaparilla without any benefit whatever, and not a word of it. For a paper-covered copy sent me. It was two years ago, and I had not had a boil or sore of any kind since."

The wise mother looks after the health of every member of the family. In this she cannot have a better ally than a copy of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It contains 100 pages and over 300 illustrations. It tells all about the home-treatment of ordinary diseases. It used to cost $3.50 a copy, now it is free. For a paper-covered copy sent at one-cent stamps to cover customs and mailing only, or 50 stamps for cloth binding. Address: The World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

but the Hams knew what to do, and they did it in a hurry. Yes, they did it in such a hurry that it was not done correctly. Friske should have taken the ball and assumed a standing position on the rubber instead of running, and touching the open space outside of the rubber with his right toe only. This was the reason why London became disheartened and played for darkness.

NEARLY A WHITEWASH.

Hamilton, Aug. 2.—With eight innings over and one man out in the ninth, and not a run scored, it looked very much like a whitewash for Chatham on Saturday. But the Babes braced up, and before the side was retired it looked as if they might win out. A single, a double, a triple, a base on balls and an error gave them three runs, and still left two on bases, with two out. A sharp ground hit, cleverly fielded by Hagerty, saved the game. The score:

FLYS.

It would be a revelation to some of the Hamilton scribes to come here and see a game between London and Hamilton. The following is clipped from the Herald: "If the Hams were to blame for the disturbance at London, they should be promptly and effectually punished. Dear Hagerty, the Hams could enlighten the Herald on the origin of the row."

For the information of the Hamilton Herald it may be stated that Schraff did not make a home run in the first game played here on Wednesday. His only hit was a slow grounder to Ward, which he beat out.

London played three errorless games last week. One was played at Chatham on Tuesday, one with Hamilton here on Wednesday and one on Friday with St. Thomas.

London won four out of the six games last week.

St. Thomas did not steal a base in the two games here with London last week. The London team used the Reach ball on Saturday instead of the Spalding.

McGrawwell, the Chatham pitcher, has joined his team and gone to Fretella with his brother.

President Hart is raising an insurance against long baseball seasons. The long drawn-out contest for the pennant, he claims, has had more to do with the poor attendance than the war.

The Chicago baseball club is already on a still hunt for material with which to win the pennant of 1899. All the surplus cash in the club's coffers is to be used in strengthening the shaky places.

President Hart intends to make the team very strong in pitchers, and they will be obtained by purchase or trade from the Western and major organizations.

Earl Wagner says that Rosey Weber could not pitch aces with loaded dice. The sudden termination of Weber's career as a Senator recalls the incident of Charles Connelley and the pitcher.

The twirler came in the morning, and during the afternoon hits rained all over the west end of St. Paul. That night the pitcher pitched Tommy, and said: "I was away off today."

"Yes," said Tommy, as he shoved out a railroad ticket, "and you'll be a whole lot further off by tomorrow night."

Chicago Tribune.

The leading batter of each National League club is Farrell, Washington; Keeler, Baltimore; Hamilton, Boston; Lange, Chicago; Burkett, Cleveland; Lajole, Philadelphia; Smith, Cincinnati; Seymour, New York; Donovan, Pittsburgh; Nance, Louisville; Dunn, Brooklyn; Cross, St. Louis.

Providence has relinquished its claim on News of Pawtucket, and he will join the New York club at once.

Donohue's feat of pitching the champions out without a run or hit seems to have taken all his effectiveness away, as he has won but one game since.

Carney Flynn has finally received a check for $385 from Andrew Freedman, it being the amount of the judgment the catcher secured against the New York magnate, who unjustly suspended him in the spring of 1887.

President Freedman, of the New Yorks has a knack of getting into tight corners. John I. Jones, of the Philadelphia, has a case again the New York magnate involving $1,000, which it is claimed was offered for Catcher Jack Doyle.

ATHLETICS.

FOUL FIGHTING.

New York, Aug. 2.—The twenty-round contest between Tommy Sullivan, of Brooklyn, and Frank Patterson, of New York, at the Palace, ended on Saturday night, wound up in the fourth round after a series of fouls by both.

Sullivan got the decision. Patterson, son striking him while the referee was trying to separate the men.

KNOCKED OUT.

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 2.—Tom Tracy, of Australia, and Frank Connelley, of Oakland, Cal., met Friday night before the Olympic Athletic Club, of this city, in the presence of 3,000 spectators.

Tracy landed a lightning right-hand swing on the point of the jaw in the 17th round, which fairly lifted McConnell off his feet, and, falling to the floor, he was prescribed a rest of ten days.

Second round, the Australian was awarded the decision. The blow was a clean knock-out delivery. McConnell was a ten to six favorite. The fight prior to its rather sudden termination, was much in favor of the local lad.

NOTES.

Jimmie Barry will meet John Ritchie for eight round in Chicago on Aug. 12.

John Duffy, the famous prize fight referee, is dying of consumption in New York. He has been referee of the Corbett and Sullivan fight, Meyer and Carrol, McAuliffe and Meyer, and Fitzsimmons' fights with Maher, Hall, Creedon, and Campbell.

Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., is to have a new professor of athletics. Dr. C. M. Hester, who has been at Beloit College for the past eight years. His specialty is football.

W. C. Bryan, the former trainer, was a specialist in teaching box ball, and brought out Jones and other fast sprinters.

Billy Rothford has left Chicago en route to England, where he will meet Ed. Palmer on Oct. 10 for the banquet championship of the world.

In the Net.

The woman did not resist, but she talked incessantly, her rather handsome face very red, her bright black eyes wandering about. "Do you know where St. Peter was crucified? A Roman! Do you know where St. Peter was murdered? A Roman! That Roman would have won applause for a tragic actress. Her restless eyes fell on Valeria, who stood at the door.

"Who are you?" she cried. "Are you the superior?"

"No! I am a patient like you," Valeria said, going to the bedside. "Only I'm not so silly as to try to starve myself."

"Can't eat!" the woman replied. "Oh, yes, you can. And you will grow worse every day if you don't try. Here is some soup. Try to eat it. Don't be a baby."

"I'll try it for your sake, but I don't want it," she said; and she swallowed a little when the sister brought it to her, but pushed the rest away. "I cannot eat."

"This is the place where people who are nervous come to live tranquilly," Valeria said to herself, as she went downstairs with her letters, remembering the promises with which she had been enticed there.

When she went back, the Signora Agnese had been left alone. The door was locked and the slide open. She looked in and saw the woman lying there bound. She was singing at the top of her voice, palms and parts of the Catholic service, all in Latin, her tongue lying with inconceivable rapidity. She sang prayers and responses, parts of the mass, the preface, the pontifical benediction, and dwelt with particular unction on the high feast, the mass est, which she drew out in the long and rather cranky movement of a priest who has more music in his soul than in his voice.

Valeria heard someone laugh, and turned to see Sister Agnes. It was impossible not to laugh; for the woman lay shouting out this melody as if she were in the height of comfort and contentment.

The next morning, when the doctors made their daily visit, the director came to the villa with them. He was always very welcome, for though strict in discipline, he was kind and always courteous.

"You were at the bank yesterday," he said to Valeria, with a certain staidness.

"No, signore," she replied, looking at him in surprise.

"You were at the bank and took out some money," he repeated in a measured voice.

"No."

"You have taken no money from the bank?"

"No; who has said I have?"

"Mrs. Harwood."

Valeria smiled. "You see what kind of people are running this Signora Cavaliere. I went to Mrs. Harwood yesterday almost on purpose to tell her that I would not accept the money if she offered it to me. I told her so plainly."

The director uttered an exclamation of annoyance. "What kind of women are these? They run about making mischief for you in every way."

"If I had taken the money I should have had a right to do so, should I not?" she asked.

"Yes, you would."

Mrs. Harwood had written her story to the superior directly after Valeria left her. She had, in fact, fallen into one of her trances while listening, and the idea had entered her darkened mind inverted, like the images of outward objects into a camera obscura. She had also complained that Valeria had been allowed to give the shawl to Fidelia.

"Signor Direttore," Valeria said later, "do you think it necessary to examine my letters?"

"Certainly not; and I never have!"

"Did not I give you the check I received from my serial last month, when I might have concealed it from you?" she pursued.

"You did."

"Well, here is another letter from the same publisher. I have not opened it; I wish to open it in your presence, so that you may be sure that I do not steal nor hide anything out of it."

"You did."

"Well, here is another letter from the same publisher. I have not opened it; I wish to open it in your presence, so that you may be sure that I do not steal nor hide anything out of it."

"Well, here is another letter from the same publisher. I have not opened it; I wish to open it in your presence, so that you may be sure that I do not steal nor hide anything out of it."

"You did."

She opened the letter, shook the sheet wide, and gave him the check it contained.

"I have a right to receive and keep my own money," she said; "but when I tell you that I will not take any without your consent, I expect you to depend upon my word. When I choose to take my own money without your consent I shall take it; but I will give you fair warning. Here is a letter which has been opened to make sure, I presume, that there was no money in it. Yet the money that I received before from the same person, as well as that from an American publisher, I put voluntarily into Miss Pendleton's hands. Honestly is thrown away on such a day Valeria."

With an elegantly courteous bow, the director tendered her the check that she had given him.

"Madamella, keep the money, and whatever may come to you in future," he said.

He had such a fine, noble nature! One could not speak a generous word to him without receiving a generous response.

"And by the way," Valeria added, "Mr. Harwood says that the count will not release me without the consent of the doctors who placed me here. Have they any jurisdiction?"

"Not in the least. Their work is done. It is for us to judge of the persons in our care," the director replied.

"It would be rather amusing to have these two men come and talk with me to test my sanity. Hamlet had but one Polonius; I should have two. Very like a whale! I can imagine them with their eyes fixed on me, one at either side, our three chairs making a right angled triangle. Dr. Kraus will look a little embarrassed. Dr. Laocoles will be full of a solemn feeling of responsibility. They will use the most elaborate diplomacy to introduce every possible subject, and will exchange glances at my replies. Do you know, Signor Cavaliere, I cannot promise you that I will not go in to see them with a crown of straw on my head and walk about declaiming like the Donna Claudia. May I? Will you stand by me if I do it?"

"Imbeciles!" pronounced the director, with an accent of superb scorn, as he slowly paced the room. "Imbeciles!"

That day Valeria was told that Mrs. Harwood had come and paid another three months for her.

"Don't let it trouble you," the superior said, when Valeria uttered her faint cry. "That does not mean that you are to stay three months, or even three weeks. It is the custom to pay three months in advance, and the money is returned afterward if the person goes away sooner. You are now on your fourth month, you know."

"Mrs. Harwood?" Valeria repeated.

"She wrote excusing herself for the length of her confinement as a result of her illness, but she would speak of the real cause of it. Any intimation of her condition had been dishonest, or even mistaken was to be expected. He would not speak of a Roman prostitute and her associates might go—most unsuspected, for everyone knew what they were—but without a word of warning."

(To be Continued.)

Our Guest.

"Come down, dear, next Thursday and spend a few days; we are longing to see you."

Who has not had scores of similar invitations and gnashed their teeth over the problem of what a few days' absence would mean to the world?

The Sunday, then, do they extend to a week or only till the Tuesday? Supposing you have another engagement for the Thursday, how convenient it would be to feel comfortably settled until then, and not be expected to turn up for the Thursday, when your hostess mean no unkindness; she merely lacked consideration for another's convenience. Remember, too, your attractive invitations carry a ray of promise: "We have you can stay till the 15th," or words to that effect.

The true art of hospitality springs from innate kindness of heart, inducing thought and care for a guest's comfort, since "will is wrought by want of thought as well as want of heart." The two are indivisible. Consider how utterly a visitor's comfort lies in your power, and, as you are strong, be merciful.

The utmost liberality secures the most through pleasure. Do not urge them to drive when they palpably long to remain in your house. Let them choose their own companions for the day. Let people sort themselves so readily, or let them stay in to write, or out to a valley of questions and demanded explanations. Excessive attention may be excessive kindness, but is certainly misplaced, since people hate to be watched like thieves, even with the best intentions. This point is where tact and discretion must come in. Never, however, let the fear of over-anxiety lead you into neglect, but steer clear of both pitfalls.

The father regarded the information as a joke, saying he invariably read them all. But it was tiresome for the girl to be thus spied upon, and she said: "Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest," is sometimes forgotten.

For though you should never appear to wish to get rid of visitors, yet when the time arrives how uncomfortable it is to be pressed inconveniently to remain! They must resort to shifts and excuses innumerable to get off; their friends are meeting them, and they are reduced to combat an imploring hostess with a faint chorus of noes. She certainly offends by excess of kindness.

A Pretty Garnish.

The fish course at recent dinners has been particularly ornamental, and appetizing from a new garnish, for want of a better name, called "lemon-cups."

The fruit is cut cross-ways in halves, the pulp and seeds removed, leaving the empty skin. These are filled with butter whipped to a cream with lemon juice, parsley cut very fine to give the mixture a green tinge, and a dash of red pepper. The fish is striped with cut parsley, and between fresh sprigs of it arranged like a border on the serving-platter, the lemon-cups are placed—one served with every portion of fish.

The Virtues of the Straight-Back Chair.

When our grandmothers were girls, and straight-back chairs instead of cushioned divans were the usual resting-places, says the Public Ledger, the young women held themselves with a straightness that was almost stiffness. Then when they grew old they still held themselves like duchesses.

For it is the way one sits rather than the exercise one takes that determines the rectitude of the figure. A prominent physician says that the proper sitting position requires that the spine should be kept straight, and that the support needed for the upper part of the body shall be felt in the right place.

Therefore it is necessary to sit as far back in the chair as possible, so that the lower end of the spine shall be braced against the back of the seat. If this back is straight the shoulders will be level, and the spine will be found that they do not need it. When the back is curved, the spine is strained. This position makes no strain upon the ligaments of the spine. Every organ of the body is properly situated. The weight of the body should rest squarely upon the feet; thus perfect equilibrium and poise are maintained. The arms never be crossed, for that position causes a strain upon the spine, places a weight upon the stomach and diaphragm, and thus greatly increases the labor of digestion and respiration.

Banana Flour.

The next dietetic fad is going to be banana flour. Manufacturers are experimenting in this direction, and promise soon a meal that will keep as long as wheat flour and make a much more palatable food than wheat flour. This new meal will undoubtedly meet a quick welcome when it comes. The use of the banana has developed its great value as an article of food, and the great army of banana consumers are prepared to accept eagerly its future development.

Letters of Condolence.

In the life of Mrs. Elizabeth Prentiss one finds a great many letters to friends in affliction, some of them excellent examples of what such letters should be. In writing to one friend in great trouble she said: "Having long in an obscure, oftentimes dark valley, and then passed out into a bright place in life, I am full of tenderest yearning over other souls, and would gladly spend my whole time and strength for them. It seems to me that God must be preparing you for great usefulness by these fiery trials. What you want is to let your intellect go overboard, if need be, and take what God gives, just as a little child takes it, without money and without price. No process of reasoning can soothe the mother's empty, aching heart, but faith can. My dear friend, do not let this great tragedy of sorrow fail to do good to you. It is a dreadful thing to lose children; it is a loss more than the most fearful experience that life can bring. It has been said that the intensity of sorrow is to toss us into God's promises."

Every one has not Mrs. Prentiss' faith, nor has every one her gifted pen; but if we write a letter of condolence at all, it can be sincere and sympathetic.

SATURDAY SHOPPING

Mr. John Connor Protests Against the Saturday Night Work—Says the Fault Is With the Purchasers.

To the Editor of The Advertiser:

In these days of general philanthropy it should be only necessary to point out an abuse to have it immediately rectified. In fact, there are many good men and women, too, who devote considerable time to unearthing unsuspecting evils and dragging them to light. Under such circumstances, it seems strange to me that such a public and unnecessary evil as the long and wearisome shopping hours on Saturday should be countenanced in the city. That it is an evil, and a grave one, I have never heard anyone deny. Thirty years ago it was thought to be a necessary evil; now it is a customary one. "Everyone does it," and for that reason a bad practice that benefits no one is to be continued. Speaking for myself, I have little or no personal interest in the matter. During the 34 years I have been in London my Saturday has been done on Saturday shopping, and we are not disturbed often enough to make a great grievance of it by puzzled porters searching on a dark night for the retail purveyor. I may have something to say about our house-numbering at a future time. So that I may fairly claim to be disinterested in calling attention to what, to the least of it, is a very bad habit of our citizens. For it is the purchasers who are entirely responsible for the long hours on Saturday. The shopkeepers are not to blame in the matter. They would all be glad to see reasonable hours adopted, but it is not so easy to put this unanimous feeling into unimpaired practice. Competition is keen in every department, and as long as housekeepers delay their purchases to the last hours of the week, they will find shopkeepers willing and anxious to cater for them. The one excuse for the habit is that the majority of the mechanics and laborers are not paid until Saturday evening, and that in their cases shopping without money is impossible. But this is only an excuse. If the Saturday's shopping and Saturday night deliveries were confined to the hand-to-mouth customers, the evil would soon die out. But what of the offenders? It is merely a thoughtless habit—thoughtless, of course, they do not know. But they should remember that by a custom which outlasts every other, even if it were desirable or necessary, Saturday is the market day for the whole surrounding country; that a district with five times the population of the city has its wants supplied here on that day. This trade alone is sufficient to give the stores a full Saturday's work. As it is, with Friday nights preparing for this trade, and Saturday night's supplying and delivering, the stores are kept open late, and the clerks and their clerks have but a sorry preparation for the Sabbath. Empty pews and listless worshippers are the result of paid until Saturday evening, and that in their cases shopping without money is impossible. But this is only an excuse. If the Saturday's shopping and Saturday night deliveries were confined to the hand-to-mouth customers, the evil would soon die out. But what of the offenders? It is merely a thoughtless habit—thoughtless, of course, they do not know. But they should remember that by a custom which outlasts every other, even if it were desirable or necessary, Saturday is the market day for the whole surrounding country; that a district with five times the population of the city has its wants supplied here on that day. This trade alone is sufficient to give the stores a full Saturday's work.
