Poetry.

FOREWARNED. BY THE LATE THOMAS D'ARCY M'GEE.

In the time of my boyhood I had a strange feeling... That I was to die in the noon of my day; Not quietly into the silent grave sleeping, But torn, like a blasted oak, sudden away.

Remember me, Myles, when I am departed, Brood o'er those moments, when they told you, 'are gone, Be kind to your Minstrel, the soft and kind-hearted, And drop o'er the marble where he lies alone.

My triumphs I viewed, from the least to the brightest, As gay flowers plucked from the fingers of Death; And whenever joy's garlands lurked rich on the cheek, I looked for the skeleton lurking beneath.

My friend of my youth! if that doom should fall on me, And thou shouldst live on to remember my love; Come off to the tomb where the turf lies, And list to the evening wind mourning above.

Lie down on the bank where the river is full of me, Ah! tearfully under the still autumn tree, When each leaf in sunset is silently sleeping, And sigh for departed days—thinking of me.

Selection Literature. The Ahbi. A REAL EXPERIENCE.

I wholly disbelieve in spirit-rapping, table-turning, and all supernatural ecstasies of that nature. I refuse credence to the best authenticated ghost story (mind your ghost story pur & imp).

Agents for Nova Scotia, Halifax. Taylor & Boutlier.

however, the heat an insuperable obstacle to closing my eyes. I got up, put on my dressing gown, and lighting a cigar, sat down at the open window, dreading grimly on the garden in front of the cottage; Before me several low flat meadows stretched down to the river, which separated us from the town.

I was gradually getting asleep, and beginning to think of turning in, when I heard soft, clear, voice, proceeding apparently from some one just beneath my window, saying, 'George, George, be quick! You are wanted in the lower court.'

'George, be quick! You are wanted in the lower court.' I immediately looked from the window, and although the moon still shone brightly, some friend of my surprise I could see nothing. However, I saw that I was some friend of the landlord's, who was begging him to come into the town on important business, I turned from the window, and getting into bed, in a few minutes was fast asleep.

I must have slept about three hours, when I awoke with a sudden start, and with a shivering 'goose-flesh' feeling over me. Fancying that this was caused by the morning air from the open window, I was getting out of bed to close it, when I heard the same voice proceeding from the very window itself.

'George, be quick! You are wanted in the lower court.' These words produced an indescribable effect upon me. I trembled from head to foot, and with a curious creeping about the room, I was unable to find anything. Hearing nothing more, I walked quickly to the window, and looked out. As before, nothing was to be seen. I stood in the room for some minutes, uncertainly watching for the speaker to show himself, and then laughing at my own nervousness, closed the window and returned to bed.

The judge, before passing sentence, asked the prisoner, as usual, if he had anything further to urge why sentence of death should not be passed upon him. The unfortunate man, in an eager excitement, emphatically denied his guilt, and declared that he was an honest, hard-working, travelling glazier—that he was at Bristol, many miles from the scene of the crime, at the day of its commission; and that he knew no more about it than a babe unborn.

Some half-hour had elapsed, when again I fell into a dead sleep, and in the morning, the perspiration standing on my forehead, I started up in bed and listened with all my might. An instant of silence, and the mysterious voice followed: 'George, be quick! You are wanted in the lower court.'

'George, be quick! You are wanted in the lower court.' I had a horrible sort of notion that some one was looking at me, and that it would never do to let them see that I was the least uneasy.

then taking myself back to the cottage, in spite of the mysterious voice. The cheerful and noisy bustle of the market had indeed partly dissipated the morbid fancies which my mind had taken. After I had breakfasted I lit my cigar, and strolled into the bar, where I talked for ten minutes with the landlord without elucidating anything of greater moment than it was his (the landlord's) opinion that things were very bad—very; that Squire Thornbury was going to give a great ball on the occasion of his daughter's approaching marriage; and that Mr. Weston's ox was certain to carry off the prize at the next Agricultural Meeting.

I had him good morning, and turned my steps homeward. I was checked on my way down the High Street by a considerable crowd, and upon inquiring what was the matter, was told that the Assizes were being held, and that an 'interesting murder case' was going on. My curiosity was roused, I turned into the court-house, and meeting an acquaintance who fortunately happened to be a man in authority, was introduced into the court, and accommodated with a seat.

The prisoner at the bar, who was accused of robbing and murdering a poor country girl, was a man of low slight stature, with a coarse brutal cast of features, rudely peculiar striking by their strangely sinister expression. As his small black eyes wandered furtively around the court they met mine, and for an instant rested upon me. I shrank involuntarily from his gaze, as I would from that of some loadstone repelle, and kept my eyes steadily averted from him till the end of the trial, which had been nearly concluded the previous evening.

The evidence, as submitted by the judge, was principally circumstantial, though apparently overwhelming in its nature. In spite of the counsel's really excellent defence, the jury, unsatisfied, found him 'guilty.' The judge, before passing sentence, asked the prisoner, as usual, if he had anything further to urge why sentence of death should not be passed upon him.

The unfortunate man, in an eager excitement, emphatically denied his guilt, and declared that he was an honest, hard-working, travelling glazier—that he was at Bristol, many miles from the scene of the crime, at the day of its commission; and that he knew no more about it than a babe unborn. When asked why he had not brought forward this line of defence, he said he had wished his counsel to do so, but that the gentleman who had conducted his defence had refused to do so.

His counsel, in a few words of explanation, stated that, although he had every reason to believe the story told by the prisoner, he had been forced to confine his evidence to that which was admissible in the circumstantial evidence for the prosecution—that most minute and searching enquiries had been made at Bristol, but that he had been unable to find witnesses who had been in that town (some three or four hours), and from the lengthened period which had elapsed since the murder, he was unable to find witnesses who could satisfactorily have proved an alibi, and had therefore been forced to rely upon the weakness of the evidence produced by the prosecution. Sentence of death was passed upon the prisoner, who was removed from the bar loudly declaring his innocence.

I left the court painfully impressed with the conviction that he was innocent. The passionate earnestness with which he pleaded his own case, and that, in his earnestness, he expressed a just and noble indignation, which crossed his ill-omened features, when, finding his assertions entirely valueless, he exclaimed with an imprecation, 'Well, then, do your worst, but I am innocent. I never saw the poor girl in my life, much less murdered her, caused the whole court, at least the unprofessional part of it, to feel there was some doubt about the case, and that circumstantial evidence, however strong, should rarely be permitted to carry a verdict of guilty.' I am sure that the fervent though unsupported assertions made by the prisoner, affected the jury far more than any florid defence made for him by his counsel.

The painful scene I had just witnessed entirely put the thoughts of the morning out of my head, and I walked home with my thoughts fully occupied with the trial.

The earnest protestation of the unfortunate man, in my ear, and his face distorted with anxiety and passion, rose over before me. I passed the afternoon writing answers to several business letters, which I had found me out in my retreat, and soon after dinner retired to my room, weary with want of sleep the previous night and with the excitement of the day.

It has been my habit for many years to make every night short notes of the events of the day, and this evening, as usual, I sat down to write my journal. I had hardly opened the book when, to my horror, the deadly chill I had experienced in the morning again crept around me. I listened eagerly for the voice that had hitherto followed, but this time in vain, not a sound could I hear, but the feeling of my watch upon the table, and I fear must add, the beating of my own coward heart.

I got up and walked about, endeavoring to shake off my fear. The cold shadow, however, followed me about, impeding as it seemed, my very respiration. I hesitated a moment at the door, longing to call up the servant upon some pretext, but checking myself, I turned to the table, and resolutely sitting down, again opened my journal.

As I returned over the leaves of the book the word Bristol caught my eye. One glance at the page, and in an instant the following circumstances dashed across my memory. I had been in Bristol on that very day—the day on which the dreadful murder had been committed. I had been in Bristol on that very day—the day on which the dreadful murder had been committed. I had been in Bristol on that very day—the day on which the dreadful murder had been committed.

BRIDGETOWN, DECEMBER 4, 1878.

GERMANY.

Perhaps in none of the principal European nationalities are internal affairs in a more perplexing condition than are those of Germany.

Four years, however, have elapsed since the peace just alluded to was entered into; and to-day the Republic of France is in a far more prosperous condition than is the German Empire.

Through the medium of the European Press, we receive alarming intimations from time to time that the German people are far from satisfied with the iron rule of Bismarck, and abominate his government policy.

The German mind has strong philosophical tendencies, and it naturally reverts to the elements of which national society is formed, and not only sneers at the "divine rights of kings," but it regards hereditary titles as nuisances in the earth.

"BERLIN, Nov. 27.—It is announced that on the Emperor's return he will declare Berlin in a state of siege under the provisions of the Socialist law."

The Capital of a great Empire "in a state of siege," not against foreign invasion, but against its own people, betokens anything but judiciously applied good government.

Ever since Abraham Lincoln's election to the presidency of the great American Republic, seventeen years ago, the republican party has had the ascendancy.

primal cause of the war was no doubt the irrepressible policy and determination of the southern slaveholders not only to maintain slavery in that portion of the Union where it already existed, but to force it into the new States that were being admitted as members of the Confederacy.

At the close of the war, however, four millions of enslaved Negroes were emancipated into the heaven-chartered enjoyment of personal liberty. This was a noble achievement, so far as the reputation of the United States in the eyes of the friends of civilization and christianity was concerned; but the internecine conflict had heaped up a mountain of national debt, had crippled the finances, and paralyzed the commercial activity of the country.

President Hayes has had to contend not only with the misdeeds of his predecessors, but the present financial depression is being used by blatant demagogues and wily politicians, who oppose him, to divide the ranks of the republican. A greenback currency party, (made up of both ambitious democrats and dissatisfied wily politicians) has recently sprung up, and assumed portentous proportions on the political arena.

In some mountainous countries there are often marvellous inequalities in the temperature of the atmosphere and in the general aspects of the weather. We are credibly informed by tourists and geographers that in the region of the Alps, especially in Switzerland, on some of the peaks it is severe winter, while only a few miles below it is delightful summer.

How different November must have been in Digby, which is only thirty-five miles distant, and the intervening country is quite level. The Courier does not say whether or not, during the unpleasant weather which he describes, the "phosphorated waters" of the Basin were much disturbed by the winds.

A SPLENDID OFFER! Read it!

The Monitor will be greatly improved during the ensuing year. It will furnish all the local news, notices of meetings, etc., etc., giving information that every resident of this County ought to have, and cannot deprive himself of without being likely to lose many times the cost of the paper.

Almost everybody knows the high value of the American Agriculturist, a journal that has just completed its 37th successful year. It is large, beautiful journal, full of plain, practical, reliable, most useful information, for every man, woman and child.

We are happy to announce that we have made arrangements to furnish to cash subscribers, both the Monitor and the American Agriculturist, for the small sum of only $2.30 a year, both post-paid which is but a trifle over four cents a week.

The publishers of the American Agriculturist have secured Marshall's new, large, magnificent STEEL PLATE, "THE FARMER'S PRIZE," one of the finest works of this great artist, whose pictures of Washington and Lincoln are of world wide reputation.

But the publishers of the American Agriculturist, have just secured the Plate and having large facilities for multiplying it, they proposed to present this splendid Engraving, on fine Plate Paper (22 x 28), delivered post-paid, to every subscriber for volume 38 of that journal, who sends 20 cents extra to cover cost of packing, mailing and postage on the engraving.

Subscribers can secure through this Office, the MONITOR and AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST both post paid for one year; and also (delivered free) a copy of the above-named Steel Plate Engraving that will be a great adornment to any home—ALL THREE for the small sum of only $2.50.

The Three would be CHEAP at $8 or $10.

MARRIED.—Suddenly, at Bear River, at the residence of the bride, Nov. 27th, at 3 o'clock, p.m., by the Rev. C. Jost, David Rice, Esq., of Bear River, one of the oldest and wealthiest men of the place, and Mrs. Elizabeth Jane Turnbull, were joined in the holy bands of matrimony.

The Dutch Club in this place purpose having an entertainment in a few weeks in order to procure the necessary funds to enable them to buy an organ for the club-room. The cause of temperance is prospering. The Society now numbers some hundreds and yet there is room for more.

Our Hantsport correspondent sent us the following items last week; but they were accidentally overlooked:— "Messrs. Churchill launches to-day a fine ship of thirteen hundred tons called the Bristol.

There is much agitation about the claims of Mrs. Bruce (colored) in Washington society. She is a very handsome outdoor woman; and although Mr. Hayes out of Fred Douglas off from money, she has the Marshal at the White House, Mrs. Hayes presents in saying that she will invite Mrs. Bruce to attend her at the first Presidential reception. The colored ladies will call on her, without reserve. Senator Bruce himself is very dark, and is shaved in the chairs of the barbers of the Senate.

Thanksgiving day.

Work has again been suspended on the Nictaux and Atlantic Railway.

Missionary Meeting at Providence Church (Methodist) on Friday evening. Several big guns are to be present.

The Rev. John Cameron will preach in the Presbyterian Church, at this place, on Sabbath morning next, at 11 o'clock, a.m.

According to "Western Chronicle" diphtheria is raging on Baxter's Harbor Mountain. Fourteen cases in that vicinity.

As will be seen by notice in another column, the Merchant's Bank of P. E. I. is expected to resume operations in a few days.

The Government Grant will be paid to Teachers, or their Order, at the office of the Inspector of Schools, on and after Friday next, 6th inst.

Thanks to friend Alfred Marshall, of Clarence, for his donation to the sanction of this office, of a fine lot of Golden Drop Apples, some of which were thirteen inches in circumference.

COURT.—The December sitting of the County Court, for Annapolis County, will commence on Tuesday next, in the Court House in this town. O yes! O yes! All ye who have business with the same can govern yourselves accordingly.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of our correspondents.

[For the Monitor.] COMPLIMENTARY. MESSRS. EDITORS. There is not, I presume, any law on our statute books prohibiting a person from making complimentary allusions occasionally to the gentleness of the fourth estate. The remarkable infrequency of allusions of this kind has indeed almost led me to suspect the existence of such a law.

Society goes much to the pains-taking and ill-remunerated disciples of Faust. Our modern editor is greater than the ancient Archimedes. The old mathematician would undertake to do more the world if he had a fulcrum upon which to rest his lever. Our editor has found this fulcrum in the Press, and putting his hand on the lever, he has sent the world off spinning.

Periodical literature is fast becoming the dominant educative power in our land. The newspaper is the popular literature of the day, and is the principal channel through which the masses receive their general information, and the almost exclusive agency through which they become acquainted with the great events of the world. To render this agency as efficient as possible in exercising a salutary influence upon the popular mind should be the highest ambition of every respectable publisher; and an intelligent public should be magnanimous enough to heartily patronize such a publisher, and supply him liberally with the means necessary for the promotion of his worthy enterprise.

Your neatly-printed and well edited paper, allow me to say, Mr. Editor, deserves the utmost subscription and appreciation of its readers. Considering its limited circulation and the smallness of the remuneration, you must necessarily receive in its publication, and one year as second ladies or he must have been six and half years as, of which two and a half years must be second mate, during the last twelve months of which he must have been in possession of a first mate's certificate.

SUCCESS IN BREEDING. BY CHAS. P. LYMAN, V. S.

Breeding from unsound stock, especially horses, is a serious, yet common mistake of farmers.

What is this? This is a cat. Do you see the beautiful curve to his back? If you continue to be a good boy you shall soon have a thousand cats.

Does the fur of the cat contain electricity? Yes, and it is a great wonder why some of these scientific men did not make use of the fact in searching for the cause of the lightning.

DOES VIRTUE ALWAYS WIN. A brisk fight between two boys at the foot of Griswold Street yesterday was interrupted by a citizen, who, after releasing one of them made the other sit down on a salt barrel and be talked to.
