The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The practice now is, when a judgment is rendered in the Exchequer Court, to allow interest. We have strenuously contended at all times that the crown is not liable for interest; but the practice has been to allow interest, not owing to a judgment, but to the intimation given by the court that it was proper for the crown to pay interest; and since that time interest has been paid.

Mr. GOURLEY. Was interest paid from the time the suit was instituted, or from the time of the breach of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. From December 31, 1896, the date of the estimate, to June 30, 1903.

Murray canal—to purchase house from W. H. Johnson, $750.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to draw the minister's attention to this item, which I think is worthy of his serious consideration. I would like to ask him how the department arrived at that amount. I speak feelingly in regard to this matter, because it was one of the most cruel things that any government could have done to an official on the canal, and it requires the minister's sympathetic consideration. There were two gentlemen on this canal, who built houses on the canal with the consent of the previous government, and with the understanding that they should be allowed the same rent if they built the houses as they paid when their houses were rented. When this government came into power, they turned these men off the canal, although there was no accusation or complaint against them of any kind, political or otherwise. This man Johnson got a position on the canal because he was delicate. He had a piece of land, but he was so delicate that he could not make a living from it; and he sold the land and put the proceeds into this house. There was another case, that of a man named Goodrich, who also built a house on the canal. He was removed out of his own house and placed on a bridge and another man was put into his house. This man, although he was allowed $5 a month for rent, only paid the owner $3 a month. Mr. Goodrich remained on the bridge for one year until the local election was over. He was told that if he would vote for the Liberal candidate—there is no hearsay about this, for I heard it from the gentleman's own mouth—he would be retained on the canal. But after he had sold his birthright, and after the election, he was turned off too, and was treated in a most cruel manner. The government said they would purchase the house for what it was worth, and he obtained an estimate of its value from a contractor in that part of the country; but Mr. Goodrich was refused the amount that gentleman decided he should have for the house. The matter was dilly-dallied along until last summer, he took $300 or $400 less than he should have got for it. This house has been kept in first-class repair, and could not be built for double the amount of money the owner was paid. That man should have the full value of that house. I think the minister will see that it is his duty to see that he is paid the full value of that house, because he was allowed to put it up on the understanding that I have stated. I want to ask the minister if he got the information in reference to the superintendent of that canal and the salary he receives ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I obtained the information, but I cannot find it at the moment. I will give it to the hon. gentleman later.

Mr. COCHRANE. I gave the minister notice, so that he could be prepared to give some reason why the superintendent was teated in such a partial manner. The old superintendent was turned off, and a gentleman was appointed whom I knew very well. I have nothing to say against him, only he is a cheese-maker, and does not know anything about the canal. There was a W. Bensley appointed superintendent of that canal from the back part of the riding. He gets a liberal salary, $1,000 a year, and he has $5 a month for house rent and $5 a month for office rent. Perhaps the minister does not know what the salaries are, but I think I am safe in saying that there is not a high school teacher in the riding who gets an equal salary. I see that Mr. Bensley went twice to Cornwall and charged $5.50 a trip. He went down to the canal, 255 trips, for which he charged $1.50 a trip. Why should we pay a man $1,000 a year and give him besides $5 per month for house rent and his travelling expenses from Brighton ? He went three trips to Trenton, which is just at the eastern end of the Murray canal, and charged $3.50 per trip. Then he went six other trips to Trenton for which he got $2 per trip. Then he went down to Morrisburg nine times, and charged $8.25 per trip. He got $12 for postage, and for sundry expenses $7.75, amounting in all to $441 besides his salary. I am satisfied that that canal is not open the number of days he charged and that there is a fraud perpetrated all along, not only in connection with the superintendent, but with other gentlemen as well. We have 408 hours charged for Sabbath work. That work was never done. This water-way is between two inland waters, and is not used for anything other than pleasure trips in fine weather. Steamboats go through it on pleasure excursions. It was never intended to be used for navigation until the rough season in the fall, when vessels come to Presqu'ile harbour and take this inland water down to Kingston. We have also a charge for marine caps, five at $2.50 and four at $2. Why should these gentlemen be given marine caps and why should we pay for these caps ? I am satisfied that not half a dozen vessels went through that canal this summer on a Sunday. I trust that the hon. minister will investigate these matters, and also that he will see the justice of allowing Mr. Johnson a fair amount for his house, more especially as Mr. Johnson was dismissed from the canal without rhyme or reason. There was no accusation against him of having taken part in politics. But on the bridge now there is one of the worst heelers in that riding. There was not a man more offensive, or who spent more time canvassing against me, than the bridge-tender on that bridge. Under the late government there never was an official turned out in that riding that I remember. The riding was represented alternately by Liberals and Conservatives, until I had the honour to be elected. Under Mr. Keeler or Mr. Bigger there never was a man dismissed. There were men there who had been appointed by the Mackenzie administration, and kept their positions until their death. In fact, there never was a man turned out until this government came into power, and they acted most inhumanly towards one man. Owing to infirmity in his limbs, he was unable to do any other work, and yet they dismissed him from the canal, and to-day he is almost dependent on his wife for his living. He was put on that work just because he was weakly, and could not earn his living in any other way. I am confident that Mr. Johnson's house could not be built for double the amount in the estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not prepared to discuss the matter with the hon. gentleman; because I have not a knowledge of the facts. So far as the hon. gentleman's remarks go to show that certain officers of the government receive pay and do not render any service, that should be inquired into. I will have it inquired into ; and, as for the other portion of the hon. gentleman's address, I cannot answer it, not knowing the facts.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the hon. minister compel the man to pay back what he illegally obtained ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will find out.

Mr. COCHRANE. It does not depend on my saying so. It is all here in the Auditor General's Report, other than the value of the house, and what was paid for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. No superintendent of this canal is required. Yet, this man draws $1,615 for salary, rent and trips. This is all in the Auditor General's Report, and it is idle to take the people's money and have an investigation of what is already known. As I say, the canal does not require a superintendent. This officer has no duties except to draw his salary.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is no objection on this side of the House to the item going through. But, as to the statement made by the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), surely the government would not be unfair, but would give the man actually at least what this house cost. Could not the minister agree to have the actual cost of the property ascertained by satisfactory evidence, and would not the minister agree to recompense the man for his actual expenditure ? I do not think the people of this country want to take advantage of one in the position stated by the hon. member for East Northumberland. Could not the minister assure the hon. member that the amount will be paid if the owner will produce satisfactory evidence as to the cost of the property ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we take the man's house, of course, we ought to pay a fair amount for it. The question is what is a fair valuation. Our information is that this is a frame house, 18 x 30, in good repair, and the officer who made the valuation put it at about $700 or $750.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who is the officer ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Stewart.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He is superintendent. Of course, the minister will agree that Mr. Stewart has no experience to enable him to estimate the value of this property. The government should have a valuation made by Mr. George Pope. He valued all the properties in our vicinity and settled with the people for the properties taken over by the government. Will the hon. minister allow Mr. Pope to place a fair valuation on this property ? Even if it means that a little more has to be paid, it cannot amount to much. I am satisfied that Mr. Stewart is not at all qualified. As I mentioned the other night, when he was given this important position, one of the most important positions on the river, a position the occupant of which should know the marine interest thoroughly, he was a school teacher in Glengarry. I do not believe he ever saw a canal before he was placed in this important position—he was the financial agent —I will put it mildly—of the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no reason to doubt the correctness of the valuation made by Mr. Stewart. If he was a school teacher that is evidence of intelligence, and if he was financial agent for the hon. member for Glegarry, that is further evidence of intelligence. Of course, as I say, we should pay a fair value for the house. I will not say that I will make arrangements for a valuator, but I will have inquiry made, and, if the value is not a fair and reasonable one we can have another vote at a future session. But we can only pay what is put down here.

Mr. COCHRANE. Let the hon. minister go to any contractor or builder whose opinion on such subjects is worth having. The hon. gentleman has not stated the size of the house. A part of it may be 18 x 30, but the house is built in the shape of an L. And I will venture my reputation that no contractor will undertake to build such a house for double the amount of money that this is valued at. But, is there no consideration outside of that ? When this poor delicate man was turned off that canal, without any charge against him, he was compelled to walk from this house and to go to Trenton, where he has work which does not call for great physical exertion. Is there not reason for a good liberal allowance ? One thousand dollars for the house would be $500 less than it could be built for. It would be a shame to have this man's house taken away from him for $750.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it built on government land ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, on the canal reserve. When the man was appointed on the canal he supposed, of course, that he would be allowed to remain in the position so long as he behaved himself. I think it is the duty of the minister to see that this man is not harassed as Mr. Goderich was harassed in collecting his rents. Does the minister think it is right to pay the superintendent a dollar and a half every time he goes down to that canal, when he gets a salary of $1,000 a year ? Why should we pay him for travelling from Brighton ? If he wants to live in an aristocratic style in the village of Brighton, let him go there and attend to his business at his own expense. That man is getting more than he could earn in any other position that he is qualified to fill. He wants to live in Brighton, and he wants the electors of this country to pay him for living there, and then pay him for driving down to the canal to attend to his business. He does not want an office on the canal any more than I do. What has he to do with an office down there, for which you are to pay $5 a month rent, besides $5 a month for house rent, and then give him $1.50 a day to drive down from Brighton to his business on the canal, and $5 or $6 for every trip when he goes around the country ? Why did the government want to send him down to Cornwall and Trenton ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). At the last debate on these estimates the minister promised to bring down a return of the amount the canal tolls would have yielded if they had been collected at Cardinal from the 1st of May last up to the present month.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that he has not got the information, but I will bring it down.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to find out, because this gentleman's duties are simply to drive up to his office once a month and draw a salary. I do not think that he ever keeps any return. It is absurd to keep this man in that position. I hope the acting minister, if he continues to occupy that position for some time, will look into that matter thoroughly.

Welland canal—to deepen portions of long level (or summit level), $50,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That matter was also mentioned in a previous discussion on the main estimates. The deepening already done has proved a great benefit to vessels using the canal. Dredging will have to be continued until all the shallow places are deepened. This work is necessitated by fluctuations in the level of the water in Lake Erie. It is to provide a 14-foot navigation at all stages of low water in Lake Erie. The total estimated cost of the work is $400,000. It will be completed in the next fiscal year.

To complete rock cut, Port Colborne to Humberston, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to continue the blasting and dredging in the rock cut. The deepening is necessary for the purpose already explained. The work is under contract to Messrs. Hogan and Macdonald. Total estimated cost, $85,000.

To provide electric lighting plant, $45,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is for lighting the Welland canal. The total cost will be $100,000. In the main estimate we had $55,000, and we are asking for $45,000 more.

To lower mitre sills of guard-gate, $11,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that work under con-contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not yet. It will be let by contract and public tender.

To provide elevator foundations at Port Colborne, $40,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a work the necessity of which I am sure everybody will recognize. The operations at Port Colborne are now advancing, and we are looking forward to the necessity for an immediate construction of elevators so that the trade which is now going to Buffalo may be diverted to that place. As the committee is aware, two elevators have been constructed at the entrance to the canal. While for ordinary purposes they are sufficient, the foundations are not sufficient. This is a proposal to make the foundations upon which to construct elevators. It is contemplated that these piers will be leased to the transportation companies, under conditions which will properly protect public interests, and they will themselves erect the elevators. The work will be done by tender.

Williamsburg canals—to provide a gate-lifter, $10,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is a gate-lifter there now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, there is no gate-lifter on these canals now. There is one at Cornwall, but there is none on the Williamsburg canal, and never was one.

Mr. REID (Grenvillle). That is news to me, because I know there has been one there all the time, and it has always been used.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is stated here positively that there is no gate-lifter on these canals. It is the Cornwall lifter just moved up.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I know there is one there and always has been one there, entirely separate from the Cornwall gate-lifter. I want to know what has become of that gate-lifter ? There is what is called a buoy boat, which is used for lifting these gates, taking them up and putting them in. The steamer 'Scout' was intended to be used as a gate-lifter. It is now in the possession of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman says there is a gate-lifter, the deputy minister says positively that it is an error. The gate-lifter for Cornwall is the only one which, to the knowledge of the department, has been there.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Williamsburg canals always were operated separately from the Cornwall canal. There was a working scow and there was a buoy boat with what is called a gin for lifting gates and putting them in place. For twenty years the former buoy boat and the present one were in charge of Robert Armstrong. He had his crew living on the boat. I have seen this buoy boat there for years. I have seen it lift up gates and put gates in, and I know this gate-lifter was built specially for this purpose. I know exactly what I am talking about. I have lived at Cardinal for twenty-five years and I have seen this gate-lifter moored at Cardinal every night unless it was taken away to put a gate in or lift one out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In view of the hon. gentleman's statement the item might stand because it is a positive statement on his own personal knowledge.

Item allowed to stand.

Williamsburg canal — to build overseer's house, $3,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If a house costing $750 on the Murray canal is sufficient, this house costing $3,000, is rather luxurious.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is for a man of somewhat different rank. This is to build a brick house 30 by 40 feet, two stories high. We will let it stand as I have not the information.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I may not be here when this item comes up again I would ask the hon. minister where this house is to be built ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not sufficient information about it. I want the item to stand.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. acting minister will know that there is a nice brick house on the canal at Cardinal that was taken by the government when it expropriated the property for the canal. This house is nicely situated, and in the right place for an overseer's house. I would like to know if that could not be used instead of building another house ? Is this item to stand ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Stands.

Item allowed to stand.

Farran's Point—enlargment (revote), $6,700.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the balance due to the Canadian Construction Company.

Rideau canal—to provide for a swing bridge over canal on line of Concession street, Ottawa, $8,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is in the city ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will you let the work by contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be done by contract.

Murray canal—to provide for a wire fencing and land plan, $3,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Explain that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This canal was not fenced when it was built. People have been complaining of the absence of fences, and this vote is to provide for fences, and to provide for the engineer's time spent in making a plan of the land.

Mr. TAYLOR. How long is the canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Five miles.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is $600 a mile for fencing ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work is to be done by the staff. Nothing is yet expended.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the farmers had to put up fences at such a cost as this they would not put up many.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who furnishes the estimate—the superintendent of the canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would the hon. minister give us any information as to what style of fence it is going to be ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The report says wire fencing, but it does not give any further particulars.

Mr. COCHRANE. Of course the superintendent of the canal may not know any more about wire fencing than the rest of us. If it is necessary to have along the canal as expensive a fence as some farmers put up where they want to keep pigs from getting through, a very close wire fence, I do not think the estimate is too high. I know some residents about there were complaining because the property was not fenced. I sent a letter myself to the hon. minister regarding the fencing of the canal.

Chambly canal—to macadamize two and a quarter miles of road, providing the municipality undertakes to maintain it afterwards, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the main estimates there was an item that was held over, and I desire that we should strike it out and that this one should be substituted for it, I therefore move :

That item No. 103 in the main estimates, 'Macadamizing tow path, $6,000,' be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Now we have the item :

To macadamize two and a quarter miles of road, providing the municipality undertakes to maintain it afterwards, $3,000.

This road is almost impassable during wet weather. During the construction of the canal, the earth was removed from the site of the road and used in building the tow path, with the result that in some parts there is often a foot or two of water on the road. The highway is on government property.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the minister utilizing cement in building culverts ? I think the department has found that cement is much cheaper than ordinary stone.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes ; we are using concrete.

Mr. WILSON. Does the government maintain all the bridges over the canals ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The general rule is that the government keep up the highway bridges over the canals.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I understand the rules to be, that if the bridge is over a river which had been navigated before the canal was built, the municipality has to maintain the bridge, and if not the government maintain it. In my own county the municipality of Fenelon has to maintain an enormous bridge.

Mr. WILSON. I know that on our own river we have to maintain a swing bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of a canal the government creates the water-way and disturbs the natural condition, and I think there is much to be said in favour of the government maintaining the bridge.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am delighted to hear that, because it will be very handy in Victoria county.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Again I speak without prejudice, but that is the rule.

Mr. WILSON. I asked this question some years ago, and the Minister of Finance was not quite so clear.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). At Kirkfield the government built and maintain the swings, and the government maintains the swing on the Rosedale bridge, but the rest of the bridge which was there before the canal was constructed, has to be maintained by the municipality. The Bobcaygeon bridge is maintained by the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was there before the canal was constructed, and the construction of the canal imposed no obligation upon the municipality.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is the very principle I laid down.

Lake St. Francis—to complete dam, $2,200.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The dyke extends a distance of three miles along the shore of Lake St. Francis, and it is intended to prevent the flooding of lands.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are the floods caused by government work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes ; the water of the lake was raised by government work.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I cannot understand that. Lake St. Francis is a natural extension of the River St. Lawrence ; it is not a canal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government work created the danger of flooding the neighbouring lands.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Were there any claims for damages ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to prevent claims for damages.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Beauharnois canal has been built for many years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This work was begun years ago.

Mr. LOY. In explanation of this item, I may say that after the Beauharnois canal was built, it was found that the water at the entrance of the canal was not as deep for navigation as before the canal was built. They found afterwards that they were obliged to build a dam between what is known as the Grand Isle on the mainland, which had the effect of raising the water about four feet. This caused the flooding of the dam, and this dyke is built along the south shore of the St. Lawrence in order to protect the land on that side and prevent the water overflowing the land.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did the farmers never apply for damages ?

Mr. LOY. I think they were paid some damages. However, it has taken away the natural drainage of the land.

Mr. WILSON. How much of a dyke is there now, and how far does it extend ?

Mr. LOY. I think this will likely complete it. It is nine or ten miles long altogether.

Mr. WILSON. Is any portion of this for repairs, or is it all for extension ?

Mr. LOY. I presume it is all for extension.

Lachine canal—to complete work of paving Mill street, $33,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mill street, Montreal, is a part of the canal property, but has been used as a public street. It is owned by the government, and there have been negotiations respecting the transfer of this street to the city. The government are not prepared to give the city an absolute transfer of the property. We propose to give them a lease during pleasure. The city say that under these conditions it should be put in good condition before they take it over, after which they agree to maintain it in good order.

Soulanges canal—to repair breach in bank between locks 1 and 2, $15,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will this be done by contract or by government supervision ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work is now being done. It had to be done on a rush, and is being done by day labour.

Williamsburg canals—to build a working scow, $2,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There has always been a scow for the repairs on these canals, and the total amount that used to be spent every year was $8,000, which included keeping the scow. Now the annual vote is $14,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is only a small scow there now of 18 feet by 55 feet. It is too small for the work. This is for a new and larger one, 70 feet long, which will be equipped with a steam hoist and derrick.

St. Ours canal—to complete landing wharfs, $4,400.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that the state of New York is spending some $13,000,000 in improving what they call the Champlain canal leading up to Lake Champlain and on down by Fort George ? I do not know whether there is any danger of it lowering the level of the water of Lake Champlain so that it will flow down the Hudson river the same as Lake Michigan now flows down the Illinois. There is no harm in the department taking it up. I believe the enlargement and betterment of the American canal would aid the St. Lawrence.

To provide for expenses in connection with investigations into railway accidents in Canada, $10,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it intended to appoint a permanent officer ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I question whether I should press this item now or leave it to be dealt with by the Railway Commission. It is desirable that a permanent officer should be appointed, for we find it difficult to get a capable man to undertake the work when we need one. In the case of an accident recently, we applied to the gentleman who had previously performed similar work, but he was not able to attend. This work will come under the control of the Railway Commission, and more than one man may have to be employed. He will require to be a railway official of good standing.

Mr. FOWLER. I quite agree on the necessity of such an appointment. The investigations, so far as they have come under my attention, have been perfect farces. Take the investigation into the Belmont disaster, in which five or six people were killed, the inquiry was perfectly ridiculous. It is very necessary to have some competent man make a complete investigation and fix the blame on the persons really responsible.

To pay salaries and expenses in connection with the railway commission of Canada, in addition to statutory provisions, $40,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have the commissioners been appointed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many will compose the staff, what will be their salaries, and who is likely to be appointed chairman ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid my hon. friend is too curious. No appointments have yet been made. It would be necessary to have a capable staff, and we have not yet worked out a plan as to how many officials will be required. The ex-Minister of Railways said he thought not less than $100,000 would cover the cost, but we are asking less as we do not want to begin too liberally.

Mr. WILSON. Is the salary of the secretary fixed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is fixed by statute at $4,000.

To pay to the widow of the late W. P. Brown, a gratuity equal to two months' salary, $140.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have no objection to the widow being compensated, but there must be other widows who have an equal claim on the Intercolonial, and I want all to be treated alike.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is quite a number of votes to be found in the estimates for others.

Farran's Point—to equip with an acetylene gas plant, $4,050.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this a new plant ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is to light the canal. This is the total estimated cost, and the work will be let by contract.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the old country harbours, they have gas buoys and acetylene gas plants to light up the channels, and it would be a good idea to have the St. Lawrence lighted all through.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is being lighted by gas buoys.

Compensation to George Heath for clothing destroyed, $15 ; medical attendance, $15, and time lost in connection with injuries received in discharge of his duties as lockman, from May 25 to July 20, 1903, 56 days at $1.50—$84, $114.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This man was injured while on duty.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me you are treating this man much better than the victims of the Belmont disaster. These men not only had their clothing destroyed, but were seriously injured. I pointed out the case of one man a brakeman, who was laid up for eight months unable to work, and received neither pay nor compensation—was not even paid in full for that day because he did not make the full trip. I press upon the minister the desirability of giving these men some compensation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was not the case covered to some extent by the insurance fund ?

Mr. FOWLER. To the extent of $3 a week. But the man had to pay for that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the government contribute $8,000 a year to that fund.

Mr. FOWLER. But the man himself would pay about $1.30 a month.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It may be argued that the insurance fund is not the best way to compensate. But, if you have the insurance it would hardly do to have other compensation beside.

Mr. FOWLER. But what the man gets is very little. Take a man with a wife and five or six children, as every man who is doing his duty to his country ought to have, and this is a very small amount for their support. There is nothing for it but the man must run in debt, and, in eight months he would accumulate debts which would be a burden upon him for years. He was injured through no fault of his own. I have no objection to paying this man Heath, but if he is paid, much more should the sufferers in this Belmont case be paid. The accident was due to the gross carelessness in the Truro yard. I state that, and I state also that the investigation held into the case was a pure farce. The pilot of the engine became loosened and fell off at Belmont, derailed the engine, the result being that the train was telescoped. This was the cause of the accident.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is that not disputed ?

Mr. FOWLER. It may be disputed as many truths are. The engine was supposed to be examined at Truro, where the engines are changed. But the pilot was defective before it went out of the engine shed, or it became defective before it went on its journey. That must be absolutely clear to any man. There were, I believe, seven people killed in that accident, and this man to whom I refer was severly injured. The accident arose from some cause to which he did not contribute and over which he had no control. He is a far more deserving case for compensation than this we are now discussing. I hope the hon. minister will not merely give a formal promise but will actually look into the matter and see to it that this man is compensated.

Carillon and Grenville canal—to pay Henry Tucker services as commissioner re charges against Superintendent Simpson in February, March and April, 1898, $600.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why was this not paid in 1898 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He thought we were not paying him enough and refused our previous offer.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who is Mr. Henry Tucker ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was a commissioner appointed to investigate.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is his business, is he a labourer or a lawyer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A lawyer.

Mr. FOWLER. What was Mr. Simpson charged with ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Political partisanship.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And found guilty ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No—a Scotch verdict.

Mr. FOWLER. He must have been an honest commissioner.

Lachine canal—to pay a gratuity equal to two months' salary to the family of the late Mr. Edward Guilbault, paymaster Quebec canals, $216.66.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In connection with this item, would the minister say if the widows of the men who were killed in the railway accident at Belmont have been given a gratuity ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, all claims in connection with the Belmont accident are still under consideration.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I trust the minister will see that not only the relatives of the men in high positions are compensated, but that also the widows of every employee, every labouring man, who was injured shall also be compensated.

Canals generally—to provide for an increase of 25 cents per diem to the wages of lockmasters, lockmen, bridgemen and ferrymen of the various canals, $37,000.

Mr. GALLERY. Are the motormen on the various bridges included among the recipients of this increase ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If they are now receiving less than $1.50 per day, they will be increased to $1.50. This applies to all canals except the Welland and the Sault Ste. Marie canals, the men on which had previously received an advance.

Mr. GALLERY. The motormen are labourers, and are entitled to an increase to $1.50 a day.

Mr. WILSON. Would the minister tell us at what rate of wages per day these people are paid ? What is the maximum and minimum of their salaries ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This applies to men whose wages, as a rule, on these canals have been $1.25, and they will hereafter be $1.50, except on the two canals I have mentioned.

Mr. GALLERY. These men receive 12½ cents an hour, and work 12 hours a day. Would the minister say what he is going to do with the motormen ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If this does not provide for an increase to the motormen, we cannot give it to them under this item. We will have to take them into consideration separately.

Mr. GALLERY. The merchants and manufacturers in Montreal are not well pleased with the Wellington street bridge, commonly called the Curran bridge, and it is their intention later on to ask the government to put a tunnel there. If I am here next session the government may hear from me about it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would direct the attention of the minister to the fact that the system of letting water in and out of locks is very tedious, speaking of the minor canals, and not of the main water-ways. It is very easy to adopt a much more expeditious mode of opening and shutting the gates than is now in force.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will continue Supply, various items that may be left on the Order paper. I understand there will be a motion made on going into Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. When will the railway resolutions be taken up ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like to be able to give some time to them. I should think on Monday.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, October 17, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

SUPPLY—FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I want to bring to the attention of the House the question of establishing a fast Atlantic service, which has been before this country for a great many years past. I think no one of us is inclined to minimize the importance to the country of this service. Its importance has been recognized by both political parties for many years, and I believe—though I have not verified the record—that the resolution upon which the Bill was founded for the establishment of this service, and which gave to it an aid of $750,000 a year, so commended itself to the judgment of this House that there was no division taken upon it. That the service at the present time is not what the requirements of the age demand must be apparent to us all. It has been stated by members of the government, in reply to questions from this side of the House, that the greater part of the Canadian mail is sent to and from New York, for the simple reason that it can accomplish the journey via New York in about two-thirds of the time which it would take if sent by way of a Canadian port. The same is true as regards passengers, although to a lesser degree. We have had it stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce during the present session that the average time which mails occupy in the journey from a Canadian port to a port in the United Kingdom is something like 9½, 10 or 11 days. I have under my hand a record of the length of time occupied in the voyage between Halifax and the motherland some forty years ago, and I have no doubt that the House and the country have perhaps forgotten what has been pointed out many times, that the average length of the voyage from Canada to England to-day is practically what it was forty years ago. I have a comparison between the logs of the Royal Mail steamship 'Asia' of nearly forty years ago and the length of the present day voyages. I shall take the liberty of reading to the House a statement taken from a public journal published in the city of Halifax, based upon a communication made by a gentleman who had gone to the pains of verifying the records, by examining the logs of these steamships of forty years ago. I may say that the journal to which I refer is non-partisan; it is a mercantile journal published in the city of Halifax, and, commenting on the letter addressed to it by this gentleman, it says:

> After showing that the 'Unicorn,' made her first voyage from Liverpool to Halifax,—away back in 1840,—in 16 days, which was even then complained of as three or four days longer than was expected, he proceeds to show how very little better the service is to-day. The 'Mongolian,' the first weekly boat to come here this season, took somewhat over eleven days to make the voyage! In other words she only developed about the same rate of speed that was expected of the 'Unicorn' in 1840.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The statement made by this gentleman is:

> Let us pass on now a generation to 1866. Here is the log of the R. M. S. 'Asia' hence to Liverpool in that year, the year previous to confederation. Left Halifax 3 a.m. Friday, 2nd February, 1866, runs 70, 230, 233, 241, 251, 252, 252, 278, 287, 241, to Queenstown, arriving Sunday, 11th February, 11 a.m., say 9½ days. Take a western voyage the same spring, R. M. S. 'China' left Queenstown 18th March, 4 p.m., arrived Halifax, Tuesday, 27 March, 6 a.m., say about the same time 9 days, i.e., for mail time in both cases. These are not specially selected voyages but simply the ordinary passages of 30 years ago.

This gentleman wrote in 1896, so that instead of being thirty years ago, it is now nearly forty years ago. The newspaper comments:

> So that we now actually have a much slower service than we had 30 years ago! Since 1866 the length of the voyage between Liverpool and New York has been practically cut down one-half. Between Liverpool and Halifax it has not been reduced a particle, rather lengthened!

The record is no better now than it was in 1896, as is shown by the figures given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce this session. This writer proceeds to make the following comparison:

> Take the record of the first winter mail boat from Moville to Halifax this season, the year of grace 1896. The R. M. S. 'Mongolian' left Moville at 5 p.m. Friday, 13th November, 1896, with Her Majesty's mails, presuming everything was about as usual, delivered them at the Halifax post office at daylight on Wednesday, 25th November, 1896. An almost identical parallel mail transfer occurred with the 'Germanic' leaving Liverpool one day earlier, and Queenstown 12th November, 1896, embarking mails about 2 p.m., arriving at New York early on Friday, 20th November, her mail bags reaching Halifax at midnight Saturday, 21st November. Note the difference in round figures, the 'Mongolian's' mail covered 2,300 miles in a little over 11 days, say 11. The mails bags on the 'Germanic' travelled 2,800 miles to Sandy Hook and about 1,000 miles to Halifax, in about 9½ days. Compare the results—2,300 miles in 11 days, means say nearly 9 miles per hour; 3,800 miles in 9½ days represents nearly 17 miles per hour. The 'Germanic' is 16 years old and is looked upon as a back number on the route between Liverpool and New York, while the 'Mongolian' is a comparatively new vessel.

It will therefore be seen that a mail or a passenger can leave Liverpool by one of these New York boats two days later than by a Canadian steamer and can arrive in Halifax, or Montreal, or St. John, or Toronto, perhaps a day and a half earlier than the mail or the passenger which left Liverpool by the Canadian route two days before. We cannot regard this as a very desirable condition of affairs. As I have said, both parties are committed to the project of a fast line, by legislation and by their attitude in the House. In 1896 the government of Sir Charles Tupper called for tenders, and tenders were received from the Messrs. Allan. The present administration came into power early in July, 1896, and it refused to submit to His Excellency, for his approval, the contract which had been prepared by the government of Sir Charles Tupper. That contract never was submitted to His Excellency, and nothing further was done with regard to the fast Atlantic service until the present administration brought down their own proposal to the House, under which they expected that the fast Atlantic steamship service would be established by Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company. The present administration declined to entertain the proposal of the Messrs. Allan, for reasons which have been stated by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister during the present session. His reasons are to be found on page 7092 of the revised 'Hansard':

> The government did not find in 1896, on assuming office, in any of the public departments that a contract had been signed by the government or by any minister on its behalf, and the Messrs. Allan for a 20 or 21-knot service between Canada and Great Britain; nor had any Order in Council been approved authorizing such a contract. A tender for a mail service had been made by the Messrs. Allan, but they placed a construction upon the terms and conditions of the tender inconsistent with the public advertisement, as follows:—
> 1. That steamers are to be provided capable of performing voyages at an average speed of 20 knots per hour, and that the voyages of each vessel are to be completed within the shortest possible time consistent with prudent navigation; but that penalties will not be exacted for reduction of speed during fog, snowstorms or heavy gales, when slowed to avoid danger in the vicinity of ice or land.
> 2. That temporary delay or disturbance to sailings due to such causes, or to serious marine disaster, strikes of workmen, or other causes which contractors could not avert or control, shall not involve the contractor in penalties, nor be regarded as breaches of contract.

There was a further reason suggested in the debate of 1896, that is, that the Allans required a variation in the conditions. Now, whether or not the tender of the Allans was in accordance with the advertisement, it was something so reasonable that it seems to me the government should not have put it to one side simply for the reasons which have been stated by the Prime Minister. I say that in view of the contract with Messrs. Tate, Petersen & Company, which the government afterwards brought down; because, when you look at that contract, which is to be found in 'Hansard' of 1897, at page 3976 and following pages, you find that more latitude was to be given to the Messrs. Tate, Petersen & Company with regard to speed than the Allans wanted. If you look at clause 14, subclause (f) of that contract you will find the following provision:

> Provided always that should any failure or default for which the payment of damages are herein stipulated, or provided for, happen or be occasioned, or occur from any circumstance or accident beyond the control of the contractors, and not due in any way to the default or neglect on their part or on the part of any officer, agent or servant of theirs (the burden of proof of which shall be on the contractors), then and in that event the damages stipulated for, or the sum or amount forfeited shall not be payable or be forfeited notwithstanding the apparent fault.

So that the government put aside the tender of the Messrs. Allan in 1896 because they did not want to be responsible in respect to the speed to be attained by their vessels under circumstances beyond their control, such as ice or fog or storms in the vicinity of land. The government, putting aside that contract on that ground, entered into a contract in the following year with Messrs. Tate, Petersen & Company, and put in not only that stipulation, but the much wider stipulation which I have just read to the House. And that was hailed by the administration as a wonderful achievement; and we were assured over and over again, not only by my right hon. friend, but by other ministers of the crown, that the fast Atlantic steamship service had been assured to the country at a cost very much less than that which was proposed to be incurred by the government of Sir Charles Tupper. Why, my right hon. friend went to Toronto, and in his speech there he led the people of this country to believe that the fast Atlantic service was an accomplished fact—there could not possibly be any further doubt about it. His words have already been quoted to the House during the present session; but I think it might not be amiss for me to let the people of the country see on this occasion how certain my right hon. friend was that there could not be possibly any further doubt in regard to the matter. It is also useful in connection with another portion of the resolution which I am about to propose to the House, to show that my right hon. friend, speaking for the Liberal party, regarded this project as one of immense importance to the people of Canada. My right hon. friend was speaking at a banquet in the city of Toronto on the 6th of October, 1897, and his language was as follows:

> If I find anything good in the programme of my predecessors—I hope Sir Frank Smith will not accuse me of any theft if I say so, I am quite willing to put on the clothes of Sir Frank Smith, and they would be a good fit, I am sure. The government of which Sir Frank Smith was an honoured member had determined to have the fast Atlantic service, that is to say, the service to carry passengers especially, and to carry the mails. But, you know, I must say, though it be in the presence of Sir Frank Smith, that we are above all things an economical government.

That was the language of my right hon. friend in 1897. I do not wonder that he smiles at it now.

Mr. CLARKE. It is enough to make anybody smile.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know but that it would make even the proverbial horse smile :

That is a compliment which I cannot pay to the government of which Sir Frank Smith was a member.

Well, I do not know whether my right hon. friend would pay that compliment to his own government at the present time or not :

I wish I could ; but the truth, you know, must be the truth upon all occasions.

Well, I would like my right hon. friend, if the session were not so late, to discuss the economy of the present government, and above all things to tell the truth about it :

Sir Frank Smith's government had undertaken to give to that service a bonus, a subsidy, of $750,000 a year. We thought it was too much. We thought we could do it for less, and we succeeded in making a contract with a firm for a subsidy of $500,000 saving to the country therefore the sum of $250,000.

You will notice that there was no doubt about it. It was sent to the country that the Allan contract would cost the country $750,000, and that the government, within a few months after coming to office, had accomplished the fast Atlantic service, and saved $250,000 a year. And this was reported all over the country. How much will that amount to in twenty years ? $5,000,000. It was heralded throughout the country as an absolute saving of $5,000,000 :

We contracted with the firm of Petersen, Tate & Co., a Newcastle firm, a firm composed as we ascertained, of men of the highest honour, of the highest integrity, and the highest competency in their profession. Mr. Petersen and Mr. Tate have had a good many obstacles to overcome, as is always the case with men who launch a new idea into the world. Their idea was a new one, and therefore it met with objections and with discouragement from more than one class of people ; and not later than a few weeks ago, or a few days ago only, it was stated that the scheme of Mr. Petersen had fallen down, that it must be considered as absolutely a thing of the past. Mr. Petersen and Mr. Tate were at work. They work as men always work when they want to succeed. They said nothing ; they answered no accusations ; but to-day I have a telegram from my friend and colleague, Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, to this effect : 'Petersen has made today the deposit required by the contract.' (Loud cheering and great enthusiasm).

And only a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, we had the pleasure in this House of returning to Mr. Petersen his deposit with interest at three per cent. But I did not observe on the part of my hon. friend's sitting to the right of the Speaker the same loud cheering and great enthusiasm as were manifested on this occasion at Toronto. Then he continued as follows :

It is with joy indeed that I welcome this explosion of satisfaction at the announcement that this scheme had not failed, but that it is to be carried through.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

We did not have any explosion of satisfaction from hon. gentlemen opposite the other day when the deposit was returned. Yet the one event was as important as the other. If the deposit of Messrs. Tate, Petersen & Company was worthy of an explosion by the great Liberal party of this country, surely we might have expected from these hon. gentlemen a similar explosion when that deposit with 3 per cent interest was returned. But no doubt the explosion in the latter event was at the other end of the line. I have no doubt that when the news of the return of the deposit reached Messrs. Tate, Petersen & Company on the other side of the Atlantic, there was the same loud cheering, the same great enthusiasm, the same explosion from them, as heralded the announcement of this deposit which was so happily timed as to reach my right hon. friend when he was on the public platform. He thus continued to dilate on the news he had received from the Finance Minister :

I know that in some quarters this idea of having this passenger traffic amongst us was not popular ; but, Sir, let me say to you that if there is a patriotic idea in the land it is the idea that we should not only carry the freight, but carry the passengers between America and Europe. (Hear, hear, and applause.) We can do it, we ought to do it, and now it is no longer in doubt.

Let me pause here for a moment to say to my right hon. friend that while he refers to certain quarters in 1897, where this idea of a fast Atlantic service was not popular, he does not seem to have to go very far at present to find quarters in which that idea is equally unwelcome, because during the present session we have had expressions of opinion, which indicate that this project of a fast Atlantic service is not very popular in the mind of an hon. gentleman who has the honour and pleasure of a seat at the right of my right hon. friend. That hon. gentleman has told us, in so many words, that it was rather a good thing this contract and scheme, which was heralded with that explosion of satisfaction in 1897, amounted after all to nothing, and that we have had during the past seven years practically a slower service between Canada and the mother country than that which this country enjoyed in the years previous to confederation. My right hon. friend continuing said :

This line of steamers shall be completed probably within two years, certainly within three years.

There is no uncertain note in that announcement.

And when we have this class of steamers afloat on the ocean I have no hesitation, such is my confidence in the scheme—and it is a confidence which must be borne by every man who has looked into the subject—that we shall have the great bulk not only of Canadian traffic, but of American traffic as well.

My right hon. friend was not modest in his expectations. We were to have the line in operation within two, or at the outside three years, and it was to carry, not only Canadian traffic, but a very large portion of American traffic as well. Well, six years have elapsed and we still have precisely the same condition of affairs as has existed for so many years. We still have practically all our mails and many of our passengers carried, not by Canadian routes, not via Canadian harbours on the St. Lawrence and Atlantic coasts, but by American lines from American seaports.

Sir, remember this, what I say is no idle boasting. Remember that the St. Lawrence route is the shortest of all routes. Now, as you know, all men have an aversion to the sea —I know I have—(laughter)—and my experience is not exceptional in this respect ; all men have a terror of the sea ; but when tourists know and are aware that upon the Canadian line, with a class of steamers having a speed of twenty knots an hour, equal in comfort to the best afloat on the ocean, there will be no more than four days between land and land—(applause)—the Canadian line will be patronized as no other. (Great cheering.) What will be the case when this line is in operation ?

My right hon. friend could afford to indulge in prophecy with regard to the results of the scheme, because no one can tell us to the present what might happen, and the prophecy is still a very safe one, under present conditions.

The case will be this : that a passenger taking the steamer at Moville, say, if Moville is to be the Irish port, within less than four days will be in the strait of Belle Isle, and then within less than one day, or twenty-four hours, will be in the harbour of Quebec, and one day's sailing on the beautiful St. Lawrence with its magic scenery and free from all discomforts of the sea. (Applause.) When we have this line with us we shall not only have the entire Canadian traffic, but we must as a necessity have the larger proportions of the American traffic. This that I say may perhaps seem presumptuous. It is not. At all events, if it is, I have such an unbounded faith in my country that I believe every word that I say now and I am sure it will come out to be true also.

There is not one of us who will not concur in the closing remark of my right hon. friend, if he applies it to the fast Atlantic service as a whole. But what a travesty on the actual facts is the whole speech of my right hon. friend. We were told over and over again that this deposit and bank guarantee furnished the most absolute security that the fast line would be completed. Years ago we gave up the bank guarantee, and we lately returned the deposit with interest, and we are not one whit nearer the establishment of a fast Atlantic service than we were seven years ago ; and that in spite of the fact that we had from a Canadian firm, one of the foremost shipping firms of this country, a contract which, if this government had seen fit to carry it out, would, in all human probability, have resulted in giving us a fast Atlantic service of 21 knots an hour, and we would have been enjoying that service during the last three or four years at least. We are told, from time to time, that we had better wait, that we had better put up with the service we have in order to get a really good service in the future. Why, we have been waiting for thirty years and have practically the same service as we had forty years ago. We had just as good a service from Canada to the mother country in 1866 as we have now. How much longer are we to wait ? Must we wait some thirty-four or thirty-five years longer, and then, at the end of that period, say to ourselves, it was not a bad thing after all that we did not make haste about the fast service, because when we do get one in the end it may be a better one than we could have expected had a contract been entered into some years ago.

Let me point out to my right hon. friend that, even if we had established an eighteen knot service twelve or fifteen years ago, it would have been better for us than to have done what we have done. And let me point out that if we had established that service fifteen or twenty years ago we could now improve it to a twenty-one or twenty-two knot service. And let us not say that a nine, ten, eleven or twelve knot service is good enough for us now and for many years to come, because it may result in giving us a better service when we eventually enter into a contract. For my part, I am not in sympathy with those who think we should establish a seventeen or eighteen knot service. I do not believe, that having been handicapped with a nine, ten, eleven or twelve knot service for so many years, there is any reason why we should now establish a second-class service.

Mr. GOURLEY. Or third-class.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Or, as my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) would call it, and very likely with correctness, a third-class service. A gentleman who has had great experience in transportation matters in this country said to me, about a year and a half ago, that the establishment of a seventeen or eighteen knot service between Canada and the mother country under the moderate subsidy which we should have to give for that service, might, and in his opinion would, result in this—in placing on the route between Canada and the mother country boats which are now regarded as second or third-class boats on the New York route, and the subsidy we would give for the purpose would be, in reality, a subsidy for supplying new boats on the route between New York and the mother country. Now, it is far better for us to give $750,000 or $800,000 a year, or even more, and have a fast service up to the best requirements of the time, than to give $400,000 or $500,000 a year and have only a second or third-class service, and have the subsidy which we would give apply in effect to the support of a first-class line of boats between New York and the mother country. We do not want to bring about that result. And I was glad that, when I brought this particular point to the attention of my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) he agreed at once in the view I had expressed, and said that the government were not unmindful that that result might be produced by granting a subsidy for a line of boats of the speed I have mentioned.

Now, as my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) has thrown a good deal of cold water on this proposal during the present session, and as an important journal, a journal which is supposed to be sometimes inspired, has used words of the very same character, we cannot but doubt the enthusiasm of the government or the establishment of a fast Atlantic service. An important journal supporting the government has recently said that it has :

> The best authority for stating that there is no movement in existence at the present time of which the government has cognizance aiming at the establishment of a fast Atlantic mail and steamship service between Great Britain and Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER. What paper is that ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Ottawa 'Free Press' of a recent date. I have not the exact date, but I will procure it for my right hon. friend if he desires it. The language is very significant. The journal says it has 'the best authority.' Well, the best authority would be the authority of the government. And, if this newspaper is to be believed we must arrive at the conclusion that some member of the government has seen fit to make a statement of that kind to this important journal for the purpose of making that announcement to the public. The article goes on in very circumstantial fashion as follows :

> Lord Strathcona has no special instructions to approach the imperial government on the question, for the reason that the Canadian administration has no proposition before it which would justify any action of that kind.

The statement is, in terms, very authoritative, and, in the concluding portion of it, somewhat circumstantial. Therefore, I think we should have from my right hon. friend a declaration to-day as to whether or not the attitude of the government towards this most important project is that which has been disclosed in the remarks of my hon. friend the Postmaster General during the present session.

On the 9th of March last, the government issued an invitation for tenders for a fast Atlantic steamship service, or, rather, for a fast and a slow Atlantic steamship service.

I suppose the advertisement appeared in some of the newspapers of that date, but I have not been able to lay my hand on any of the announcements. However, the tenders which were received in reply to some of these invitations have been brought down and laid upon the Table this session. The tenders are two in number. The first is a tender from the Allan Line, as follows :

> Allan Line of Royal Mail Steamships,
> Montreal, May 29.1903.
> Sir,—With reference to the invitation for tenders for a steamship service between Britain and Canada, issued by you on the 9th March, 1903, we now beg to offer to supply the service therein specified for a period of ten years from 1st May, 1905, in return for an annual subsidy of three hundred thousand pounds sterling (£300,000) payable half yearly.
> Routes to be as specified, except that we reserve the option of running the 21-knot steamers to Halifax all the year round instead of to Quebec in summer. Provision to be made for annual overhauls of the mail steamers. We inclose herewith accepted cheque for $48,666.66.
> Yours truly,
> (Sgd.) JAMES AND ALEXANDER ALLAN.
> H. & A. ALLAN.
> W. G. Parmelee,
> Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.
> Ottawa, Ont.

The other tender is from the British and North Atlantic Steamship Company, Limited, made through Mr. J. G. Wilding, the chairman. This letter is dated the 16th of May, and offers to perform the same service for £200,000 payable half yearly, subject to certain conditions, as follows :

> In making up our estimate we have assumed that in fixing a maximum rate of passage for immigrants going to Canada under arrangements with the Canadian government, such maximum rate of passage will permit of the steamer receiving five pounds (£5) per adult for the conveyance of such passengers.
> We also assume that the Imperial and Canadian governments would pay the ordinary sea postage rate for the carriage of mails forwarded by these steamers.
> We also assume that we should have the assistance of the Canadian government in making, and would be able to make satisfactory arrangements with the Canadian railroads for the securing and forwarding of freight and passengers from and to any Canadian port, and that these arrangements would secure to this service not less favourable treatment than any other, the most favoured steamers, using such port.

The invitations in answer to which these tenders were sent required the contractors to establish, not later than May 1st, 1905, and to maintain for ten years, a fortnightly service by steamers of twenty-one knots sea speed and a fortnightly service by steamers of sixteen knots sea speed. The steamers to be capable of averaging the speed stated on their best voyages across the Atlantic. The average actual speed of voyages, I suppose we might expect to be somewhat less than that. Now, this service has not, in some quarters at least, received very favourable consideration. And, for my own part, I should be inclined to think that a twenty-one knot service is the service which the government should call for.

And I would expect that the great development of our western country, the great development of agriculture in Canada, the great development of our dairying industry, the great development of our grain trade in Canada, would lead to the building up of a line of suitable freight boats between Canada and the mother country which would take care of the products of this country which require to be carried to Europe. If my expectations in this regard should not be fulfilled, I would be willing to give moderate assistance to a line of freight boats for that purpose, but it must be borne in mind in this connection that the steamships which we intended to establish in 1896 were to be capable of carrying from 1,500 to 1,800 tons of freight, and that this freight accommodation would have been extremely useful for the carriage of certain classes of our products which require quick transportation. In the debate on that question which took place in 1897 that subject was very fully discussed, and it was pointed out that the utilization of these proposed fast steamers to the extent of 1,500 to 1,800 tons on each voyage for certain classes of freight requiring quick transportation was of almost as great importance as the quick transportation of passengers and mails between Canadian ports and British ports. But in addition to these classes of freight we have, of course, grain and other similar products which could not be carried by boats of that kind, and as to which there is at the present time a fairly good steamship service, which will improve and develop from year to year as the great grain trade of our western country improves and develops, and as the agricultural products of the eastern portion of Canada increase. Whatever else we may say, I am sure we can all agree in one conclusion, that the efforts of the government up to the present time with regard to the establishment of a fast Atlantic steamship service have not been very successful. I do not know that any tenders have been called for by the government between the date of the failure of the Tate-Petersen contract and the 9th day of March of the present year. It is now four years since it was known that the Tate-Petersen contract was a failure, but from that day up to the 9th of March the government took no step at all, called for no tenders, made really no attempt at progress in this matter. It may be answered from the government standpoint that the cost of building steamships had increased in the meantime and that is one important result to this country of the fact that the government in 1896 refused to adopt and carry out the contract which Sir Charles Tupper had almost consummated with the Messrs. Allan, a contract which undoubtedly could have been carried out, and which would have resulted in an enormous saving to the people of this country over and above what any such contract would cost to the country if entered into at the present time, because I observe that the Messrs. Allan now ask for £300,000 a year for a service, not of 21 knots, but a service of 21 knots and of 16 knots alternately. In 1896 we would have been able to obtain from the Messrs. Allan, for a subsidy of $750,000 from the Canadian government, coupled with a subsidy of $375,000 from the imperial government each year, a 20-knot service at least —I am not sure whether the additional amount for a 21-knot service was stated in the tender, but a 20-knot service at least could have been procured for that amount—whereas now for a 21-knot and a 16-knot service the same firm asks an annual subsidy of £300,000. Therefore, we have not altered our position for the better by the delay which has taken place. The government took no step from the time of the failure of the Tate-Petersen contract up to the 9th of March of the present year, when they called for these tenders, and we have been informed by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the government do not feel disposed to enter into an agreement based on any one of these tenders, and that they regard the terms as excessive. We were told by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that although these tenders were not regarded as of so satisfactory a character as to justify the government in accepting them, nevertheless they might afford to the country and to the government a basis for further negotiations. We were told by the government organ to which I have already called attention, that these negotiations are not progressing at the present time; that the government is taking no steps and do not at present propose to take any steps in the premises. I regret the inaction of the government during so many years, and I regret their action at the present time, if it be true that they are taking no active steps for this purpose. We have heard of negotiations taking place for the establishment of such a service during a short period. Let me say that I do not believe it will be possible for the government to make a short term arrangement with any steamship company for a materially better service than we have at present. You cannot get a company either to take its boats off an established steamship line or to enter into the project of building boats for this service unless you give them a contract covering a substantial period, ten or fifteen years at least, and I believe that the government will make no material progress with these negotiations so long as they limit the contract to a short period. If you attempt to negotiate for three, four or five years, as a mere makeshift in the meantime, your negotiations will amount to nothing. Why should any company, for a period of three years or a period of four years, undertake to build boats or to take boats off an established line ? But if you make up your minds in the first place as to what it will pay this country to give annually for a fast Atlantic service, and if you induce the co-operation of the imperial government so that they will give a subsidy in the same proportion as they offered to give in 1896—and we have no information that their offer in that regard is withdrawn —then, by placing your project before the established lines of this country and of the mother country, I believe that you can, within a measurable period, establish that fast Atlantic service for which the very great majority of the people of this country have been so anxious during many years past. I regret that the record of the government with regard to this matter has shown so remarkable a degree of inefficiency. They had before them in 1896 a contract that would have resulted in the establishment of a fast Atlantic service; they declined to carry that contract out; they declined to submit it to His Excellency for approval; they took up the contract with Petersen, Tate & Co., and, in the face of strong criticism from this side of the House, in the face of the opinions largely quoted from this side of the House that that service never would be a success, they persisted in assuring parliament and the people of this country that there was absolutely no doubt on that subject. Over and over again I have heard taunts from the gentlemen who occupy the treasury benches and the gentlemen on the other side of the House to the effect that the Conservatives proposed to spend $750,000 a year for this purpose and that this government had accomplished the purpose equally well at a net saving to the country of $250,000 a year. Well, the country has saved nothing ; it has lost its fast Atlantic service during these years, and the country, if it proposes, as I believe it is in favour of proposing, to establish this service at the present time, will find it necessary to pay a very much larger sum per annum than the sum for which this service could have been established in 1896. In view of this, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:—

This House affirms its belief that great advantages would result to Canada as well as to the mother country from the establishment of a fast steamship service beween the two countries and expresses its regret that no effective steps have been been taken for that purpose by the present administration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, all through this session there has been from the other side of the House a running fire of criticism against what it has pleased hon. gentlemen opposite to call the lavish expenditure of the government. These criticisms have also found a place in their press as well, and it was only last week that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) when honoured and banquetted by his friends made the burden of the remarks which he addressed to the faithful on that occasion, the extravagance of the government. But, it is also to be noticed, that, concurrent with this criticism, every time that supplies are asked from parliament there is a remark made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the effect that we are not spending enough and we have always a demand for some more expenditure here, there, or elsewhere. You cannot take up the debates that have taken place in this House, especially for the last fortnight, from which you cannot quote speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the effect that we should spend more than we are spending upon some matter as to which these hon. gentlemen say we are not asking enough money from parliament. Again and again we have been asked to make larger appropriations and upon this occasion, as being an opposite commentary upon the speech delivered a few days ago by my hon. friend to his own party, we have a request made to spend no less a sum than a million and a half of dollars per annum for a fast Atlantic service. I do not propose to discuss the question upon this point. I simply leave it to hon. gentlemen opposite to reconcile these divergent lines of criticism and I leave it to the country to judge of the consistency of such criticism. I do not propose, as I say, to discuss the matter upon this point and for my part, though we have asked for pretty large appropriations from parliament this session, I still believe that wise expenditure is the best economy. But, to come to the subject which has been introduced by my hon. friend, the burden of his accusation and charge against the government is that he regrets that the policy followed by the government has not been efficient to procure for the country a fast Atlantic service. I have to admit that in this year, 1903, we have not yet in operation a fast Atlantic service such as has been contemplated and hoped for by us for a great many years past. I have to admit that this government have not been successful. I have to admit that in this matter our record does not compare any more favourably than the records of our predecessors, and I have this to say as an excuse not only for ourselves but for hon. gentlemen opposite as well that if we have not obtained a fast Atlantic service such as every one would like to have it is not on account of any deficiency on our part but it is simply on account of the inherent difficulties of the task. This government are not the first that have applied their energies to the task of obtaining such a fast Atlantic service as we should have between Canada and Great Britain. My hon. friend referred—I do not know if I understood him correctly—to the efforts which were made in 1896 by the efforts of Sir Charles Tupper, or to speak more correctly by the efforts of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, to obtain a fast Atlantic service and he rather created the impression upon my mind at all events, or it appeared as if he wanted to convey the impression, that this was the first effort that had been made in that direction. But, that was not the first effort that had been made by the Conservative government. That was only the third effort that had been made in that direction because the efforts in that direction go as far back as 1889. It was in 1888 that the idea of obtaining a fast Atlantic service, equal, in the language of the gentleman who was the first to give expression to the idea publicly, Mr. Foster, to the fastest and best steamships on the Atlantic ocean was mooted in Canada. In pursuance of that idea which was then expressed, a statute was passed by this House in the following words :

The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, making connection with a French port, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of five hundred thousand dollars a year.

This is the first offer that was made and it goes back to the year 1889. The government were authorized to negotiate for the establishment of a fast Atlantic service between Canada and the United Kingdom on the condition that a call was made at a French port and the sum which the government were authorized to give for the service was $500,000.

Mr. GOURLEY. What chapter is that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Chapter 2 of the statutes of 1889. This provision remained on the statute-book for five years, but nobody came forward to take advantage of the offer and it was thought advisable to make an amendment to the proposition. It was supposed that the sum which had been placed on the statute-book was insufficient and that it should be increased. It was increased accordingly. By the statute of 1894, chapter 8, this amendment was enacted :

1. Section 3 of chapter 2 of the statutes of 1889, intituled: An Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies, is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—

3. The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, making connection with a French port, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year.

By this the subsidy was increased by no less a sum than a quarter of a million dollars. Two years elapsed but nobody came forward to take advantage of this additional subsidy and in 1896 the law was again amended and new propositions were made. In the session of 1895, the following law was enacted as chapter 3 of the statutes of that year :

1. The section substituted by chapter 8 of the statutes of 1894, for section 3 of chapter 2 of the statutes of 1889 intituled: An Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies, is hereby repealed and the following sections substituted therefor:—

3. The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year: Provided that such contract shall not be binding upon Canada until it has been laid before the House of Commons and approved by a resolution of the said House.

The alteration which was made here was not in the amount. The amount was left the same as it was in the statutes of 1894 at $750,000 a year for the establishment of a fast Atlantic steamship service, but the change which was made was the leaving aside of the obligation on the part of such company as undertook the service to call at a port of France. But for all other purposes, the conditions remained as they were. Then invitations were issued for tenders. There had been an election in the interval, and the Conservative party had been defeated, and the present government installed in office. We found that in answer to the call for tenders, no tenders had been received. I emphasize the words 'no tenders had been received.' There was simply an offer made by the Messrs. Allan to undertake the service. It was an offer, not a tender ; and that offer was not in the terms of the specifications of the tender at all. The offer was from the Messrs. Allan to take the service upon conditions not mentioned in the invitation issued for tenders, but upon conditions made by themselves. One of the conditions was that they would not be bound to enter into the contract until four months had elapsed after they had signed the contract, so as to enable them to get out of it or into it just as they pleased. That would have been a minor matter, but generally speaking the conditions were very different from those stipulated, and the government did not feel justified in giving for that office such a large sum of money as was contemplated by the statute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there any condition which they made which was not substantially contained in the Petersen-Tate contract ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am coming to that. In the following year we issued advertisements for tenders and we received a tender from Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company. I may say at once to my hon. friend that the conditions offered by Peterson, Tate & Company were not very materially different from the conditions which had been offered by the Messrs. Allan, but there was all the difference in the world in the price asked for the service. The Messrs. Allan were demanding $750,000, whereas Petersen, Tate & Company were asking only $500,000. That was a consideration, and a valuable one which could not fail to make an impression on parliament and the government. I am bound to say, that in the light of events which have taken place since, Messrs. Petersen & Tate were oversanguine in offering to take the contract for $500,000. It has turned out that they were sadly off in their calculation. They were young, energetic, enterprising, and it is due to them to say that they were very near succeeding, relying on their activity and their enterprise. There is reason to believe that they would have brought the contract to a successful issue, but it is a matter of public notoriety that they met with tremendous opposition in some quarters, and they had to abandon the project. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) refers to a telegram sent to me by my friend (Mr. Fielding) to Toronto in the fall of 1897, in which he announced that Messrs. Petersen & Tate had deposited the sum of $50,000 as an earnest of their intention to perform their obligations. I announced that, and I was glad to announce it, to the audience in Toronto. The announcement perhaps was received with great joy, and there was reason that it should be so received. I cannot see the point in the joke of my hon. friend that the announcement that their deposit had been returned, should be received with vociferous applause on the other side of the Atlantic. On the contrary, if there would be any feeling about it at all, it should be a feeling of regret, and I would have expected that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) instead of indulging in harsh criticism, should have considered it a matter of deep regret that the Messrs. Petersen & Tate had not been able to implement their contract. It was in 1899, I think, that Messrs. Petersen & Tate abandoned their contract. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) says, that from that time until 1903 the government has done nothing, has called for no tenders, has entered into no negotiations to carry out the enterprise which had been set forth in a solemn compact before parliament and the country. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is mistaken, as I will show. I admit that from 1899 to 1902, the government of Canada did nothing to try to create this fast Atlantic service. But there was a very obvious reason for that. The paramount reason was, because of the existence of the Boer war for three years, 1900, 1901 and 1902. I would not say that that war demoralized the shipping world, but I do say that it so absorbed all the marine and naval resources of the British empire, that every one must acknowledge it would be absolutely impossible to launch the scheme then with any chance of success. It would have been folly to attempt to do anything towards the establishment of a fast Atlantic service under such circumstances. The Boer war came to an end in the middle of the summer of 1902. It so happened that in the summer of 1902, four of the Canadian ministers were in England for the coronation ceremony, and the ministers who were in England had several negotiations with different parties in order to secure this fast Atlantic service. We received a tender from the Canadian Pacific Railway, we received a tender, if I remember right, from the Messrs. Allan, from Sir Christopher Furness, and from Sir Alfred Jones. All of these tenders were of such an excessive character as regards the amount asked, that it was not deemed possible to ask parliament for their confirmation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask my right hon. friend if these tenders were laid before parliament ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot say at this moment. I am sorry my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here to answer that, but if they have not been laid before parliament there is not the slightest objection to bringing them down, and I shall be glad to do so immediately, if my hon. friend desires. But I may say that if my hon. friend had seen these tenders he would say that the amount which was asked for such a service was—I will not say excessive, but it was very large ; so large that we thought it advisable not to accept any of them, until we had made another effort to get another service. Therefore, in the month of March last, we again issued invitations to the public for tenders. On account of the excessive subsidy which had been previously asked, we thought that we would vary the character of the service, and so we asked for two boats of a very extreme speed, and for two boats of a moderate speed. We asked tenders for two boats of 21 knots and for two boats of 16 knots. We received two tenders—one of which may be dismissed at once because it did not comply with the terms—the other tender came from the Messrs. Allan. For such a service as that, limited as it was to two fast boats and to two boats of moderate speed, the Messrs. Allan asked no less a sum that $1,500,000. We did not think that we would ask parliament to ratify a contract for such an excessive amount. When I use the word 'excessive,' I do not mean to say that it is excessive as to the value of the service which was to be given, but it certainly is excessive in comparison with the appropriation for the purpose which was made by the Canadian parliament. The appropriation which was made by the Canadian parliament was for the sum of $750,000. The amount voted never went beyond that sum ; and we cannot have such a service as is contemplated by the motion of my hon. friend even for twice that amount. We can have only a service which is partly fast and partly not so fast—two boats of 21 knots and two boats of 16 knots. To obtain a service of four boats of 21 knots, I do not know how large a subsidy we would have to ask for ; but I think it would be very much larger than the sum asked for by the Messrs. Allan for the mixed service. Under these circumstances, I think nobody will blame us if we do not ask parliament for such an appropriation as would be necessary to carry out the tender of the Messrs. Allan.

Now, I have only this to say to my hon. friend. In my speech in Toronto I said that the service we contemplated would not be equally popular in all parts of the country. When I said that, I only uttered a truism. There are certain sections of Canada where the advantage of the service has not impressed itself so deeply as in other parts. But my position on this subject is what it has always been. I think a fast Atlantic service would be of extreme advantage to Canada ; it would advertise the country as few other things would ; it would develop our trade and procure us a trade which we have not at present, but which we ought to have. I do not know how popular such a service would be in winter time. It might or might not be popular on account of the speedy crossing of the Atlantic. As a rule, all men dread the sea ; as a rule, all men have good reason to dread the sea. From the moment a man puts his foot on board the ship, he wishes to reach the other side. The passage could be accomplished in five days instead of six of in four days instead of five, the line that would accomplish such a miracle as that would be the most popular of all lines. In summer time I have no doubt the route by the St. Lawrence would be most popular, and would be largely taken advantage of by people wishing to cross the Atlantic. Starting from Montreal or Quebec, you would have twenty-four hours or thirty-six hours on the waters of the St. Lawrence, which certainly would be a pleasure, and a good preparation for the rougher passage of the Atlantic. There is reason to believe that such a line would be patronized not only by Canadians, but by Americans, especially those from the western states. But the difficulty is to convince naval men of the profitableness of such a project. They are supposed to know the conditions of trade far better than any of us ; but even in the face of this project they have hesitated to invest their money without receiving a very large guarantee from the Canadian government.

My hon. friend has also referred to an article which has appeared in a newspaper of this city which is friendly to the government, but which is in no sense an organ of the government, because the government has no organ. The government speaks for itself, and that is the only way in which a government should be represented. There are, however, papers which are friendly to the government, and the one my hon. friend referred to is one of these. But there is no reason for saying that no project for the creation of a fast Atlantic service is in existence. On the contrary, this is a subject which is always present to the minds of the government, and is always engaging their attention. At this very moment they are negotiating with some companies which have tendered for the service ; but we have nothing tangible to present to parliament at this moment. But the project has not been abandoned, and in my opinion it should not be abandoned until it is carried to a successful conclusion. Though our efforts in the past have not been successful, there is reason to hope that at an early day we shall have a tender which we may be able to place before parliament.

There is one reason why naval men hesitate to engage in this enterprise except at the cost of a very heavy expenditure by the national government : That is, as my hon. friend knows, coming as he does from a maritime city, that there is perhaps no kind of industry which is to-day subject to greater changes than naval architecture. Almost every year some new methods are invented, some new designs brought forward, which tend to change naval architecture to such an extent that the ship of to-day may be obsolete five years hence. Even at this moment, the new ships for crossing the Atlantic are being built on what is known as the turbine system, a system from which great expectations are entertained. If this experiment proves successful, we may have a new development in naval architecture which may result in all the ships of to-day being discarded two or three years hence. For this reason the very naval men who might be expected to go into this enterprise have hesitated to do so except at a cost which I think the Dominion parliament would sustain the government in not incurring. When no less a sum than $1,500,000 is required to obtain a contract it is no wonder that the governmen should have hesitated, and should have asked for more information before coming to a conclusion. I think that is a sufficient reason, in the eyes of all men who believe in economy not only in words but in deeds, for holding the government free from the censure which my hon. friend endeavoured to cast upon it.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The right hon. gentleman has, I presume, made the best defence the government can offer for their conduct during the last nine years in connection with this feature of their policy; and it would be quite sufficient, I think, to allow it to go to the country alongside of the speech made by the hon. leader of the opposition, and leave the country to judge of the force of that defence. But I think it is important to draw attention to some of the observations made by the right hon. gentleman. He says we have reason to hope that we may have a tender at an early day. Well, all I can say, in reply, is that the country, like the government, have been living in hope, but they have been obliged to fall back in despair. Their first hope was that they could obtain the same service for the country as was proposed by the previous government, and that they could save to the country $250,000 a year. They were sure of that, if it were only taken hold of by competent men. They said that competent men had made an offer to make a contract to that effect; and with great exaltations and blowing of trumpets, it was said: See what business men can do compared with unbusiness men; we have secured for the country a service which was declared to be so desirable, so important and so advantageous, for $250,000 a year less than our predecessors contemplated. On the strength of that we have been living in hope ever since. Speaking of tenders recently received, the right hon. gentleman said the lowest tender of Messrs. Allan & Company was $750,000 above their tender of 1896. Does not that of itself show the folly of the government in not having accepted the tender made in 1896, and in declaring that it was entirely too high? Experience has proved that they were not men of foresight, wisdom or good judgment, or they would have accepted the offer of the Messrs. Allan, and we would have had the advantage of the fast service we all desire, and besides have had that advantage at $750,000 per year less than we can get the same service for to-day.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). What was the offer of Messrs. Allan & Company in 1896? What did they offer and stipulate to do?

Mr. SPROULE. They stipulated to give a fast Atlantic service, on practically the same lines as Messrs. Tate, Petersen & Company, for $750,000 per year paid by the Canadian government and a subsidy by the imperial government as well.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). They could not know that Tate, Petersen & Company were going to offer a few years later. Tell us what the Allan Company offered to do.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. member know the offer made by Tate, Petersen & Company? The offer made by the Allan Company was practically on the same lines. They made an offer in some respects slightly differing from the request made by the government for the service. It differed with regard to stormy weather and matters of that kind. They were not to be compelled to keep up the speed in case of snow storms or ice blockades, &c., and under certain conditions, they were not to be compelled to make the service as fast as the maximum rate. Practically their offer was on the same lines as were proposed by the government to Tate, Petersen & Company when the contract with that firm was entered into. But the government, for reasons best known to themselves, refused to recommend to the Governor General the carrying out of that contract, and defended their conduct by telling the Canadian people that they could get an equally good service for very much less money. Then they announced that they had secured an equally good service for $250,000 per year less money, and boasted that in this they were carrying out their principles of economy and showing their great ability as business men. They said that they had not only received an offer but had actually entered into a contract, because the forfeit which was to be put up as guaranty that the company would keep its engagements was put up. Experience has proved, however, that in their conduct of this business, they were anything but good business men.

In reply to the charge made by the leader of the opposition, that since 1898 no effort has been made by the government to obtain a fast service, the right hon. gentleman said that the government had received a tender from the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1902. Why was not that information given to parliament? Why was parliament left in the dark. Why was not this tender put upon the Table? We know that that attempt failed because if it had not, we would have had its success heralded by a great flourish of trumpets. The right hon. gentleman has told us that the South African war prevented anything being done because the steamships were all busy; but had the government ratified the contract which was made in 1896, what an advantage would not that have been to Canada during the South African war? These hon. gentlemen, however, refused to ratify that contract, and the result is that Canada has suffered very much and we have no fast service to-day.

The right hon. gentleman said that the Allan Company did not tender but made an offer. That seems to be a distinction without a difference. They offered to do the work for a certain sum. Is that not a tender? A tender is only an offer. They offered, upon certain conditions, to do the work, and had their conditions been accepted—and they were just as favourable as those entered into with Tate, Petersen & Company, we have reason to believe that Canada would have enjoyed the advantage of a fast Atlantic service during the last seven years at least. But the right hon. gentleman says: Oh, we are not the only parties who have failed; the Conservative party twice in six years endeavoured to secure that service. Yes, they did, and the first time they endeavoured to secure it for $500,000 per year. In this endeavour they failed, but when they tried to get it for $750,000 per year, they succeeded. Is my hon. friend like the Bourbons, who forget nothing and learn nothing. What is the best school in the world? It is that of experience. But the right hon. gentleman evidently is not disposed to profit by the lessons, otherwise he would have known that when his predecessors failed to get that service for $500,000 per year, he was not likely to get it for the same price. But his predecessors were wiser than he in this respect, that they were prepared to give $750,000 per year; and had the hon. gentleman ratified what they did, we would have had a fast service for a much cheaper rate than we can obtain it for to-day.

He began by saying that the opposition often complain that the government spend too much, but that now we complain that they are not spending enough. Our complaint has never been that the government have spent too much on a fast Atlantic service. We have backed up every effort the government has made; we have assented to everything that seemed at all reasonable or seemed to offer any hope of success. We have never found fault with their expenditure in carrying out this great project. But we have criticised, and justly criticised, this government, which came into power declaring to the people that economy was the main plank in their platform, when we found them wildly extravagant in lines which yield no return to the country.

Let me briefly refer to the various offers that have been made for a fast Atlantic service. The government of Sir Charles Tupper received a proposal from the Messrs. Allan in 1896 which they practically accepted. With regard to some details it was incomplete, but those details could easily have been arranged, and, in the main, the offer was practically accepted. The Allans agreed to furnish a twenty-knot service for a subsidy of $750,000 a year in addition to the subsidy offered by the imperial government. Had this government advised the Governor General to ratify that contract, I have no doubt that Canada would have been in the enjoyment of all the advantages which would accrue from a fast Atlantic service. But they did not see fit to do so. On March 24th, 1897, this government entered into a contract with Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company for a fast Atlantic servoce for $500,000 a year. One year later they had that contract amended. And what was the reason given for amending the contract? Of course, when the contract was not carried out, the opposition complained of delay; and, in answer to those complaints, the government said that they had secured the same benefits to Canada for $500,000 that their predecessors had proposed to pay $750,000. They said the fast Atlantic service was an accomplished fact. But a year elapsed and there was no evidence of the contract being fulfilled. Then the government came to parliament and said that the contractors had asked for delay, that there had been a great strike in the old country, an upheaval in the labour world, and the contractors had not been able to carry out their contract. It was only reasonable, they said, that we should give them greater latitude. And there was another reason. There had been a remarkable improvement, they told us, in the kind of ships likely to be used for a fast Atlantic service in the future, and this firm would take advantage of that improvement It was called the bottle-necked steamer. This was said to be the steamer of the future, and the government said they desired to take advantage of this latest improvement, so as to give to Canada the best that the progress of the world afforded. They said: Though there has been delay, that delay will result in benefit to the people, for we shall get what our predecessors could not get in their time. And the late Hon. Mr. Dobell expatiated on the great advantages of the bottle-necked steamers and what they would do for Canada, and told us that in comparison with the advantages to be gained, the delay of a year was nothing. On April 3rd, 1898, the contract with Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company was extended, and it was amended so as to provide for the payment of $750,000 a year—not $500,000 as in the first instance, but the same amount as was proposed to be paid by their predecessors. Against this increased amount, just as against the delay, they placed the advantage that would accrue to Canada from having in this service the bottle-necked steamer, 'the steamer of the future.' It was declared by Sir Charles Tupper, when that contract was announced, that it would never be carried out. The government asserted that it would be carried out; they said they knew these men, that they were men of great financial strength, men of great enterprise, ability and experience. And they said, moreover, that these people had put up a forfeit, which the government would not hesitate to take if the contractors failed to carry out their contract. This, Mr. Speaker, was in 1898. We have no fast Atlantic service yet. These contractors applied for the return of their forfeit, and it has been given back to them, with 3 per cent interest from the time it was placed in the hands of the government. The government failed to get the fast Atlantic service for $500,000; they failed to get it for $750,000; they failed to give us the new boats; and now we have to fall back upon the same service that has existed for the last thirty-five years, neither better nor worse. The government, in the face of these facts, have been obliged to acknowledge failure. And now some of their organs are saying that we do not need a fast Atlantic service, that a fast service is only needed for passengers, but that what we need is a freight service, and a freight service may be a slow one. Is it the fact that we do not need a fast Atlantic service to-day? We are living in a fast age. If two railways run from one great city to another, and one railway can land its passengers in two hours less than the other, the people will take the fast road, and freight will be sent by the fast road. In our age the individual, the firm or nation that succeeds is the one of life and enterprise, while the other must fail and admit failure. Compare us with the United States, and where are we? They have steamers crossing the Atlantic in four and a half and five days, while ours average nine days. Will not the people travel by the fast line? And will not freight follow the fast line? Canadian mails, Canadian freight and the travel to and from Canada go by the New York line. We need a fast Atlantic service as much as do the American people; and to the extent that parliament fails in securing it, we fail to do our duty as representatives of the Canadian people. What does it mean to us to-day? It means that every passenger coming to Canada is landed in the great metropolis of New York. Thousands who intend to come to Canada never reach this country at all. They drift across to San Francisco, and by that way to the Orient and never see Canada. But how would it be if we had a fast Atlantic service? That traffic would come to Canada, would cross our whole country, and would take the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers at Vancouver for the Orient. We should have benefits that we cannot possibly get to-day, because the people never reach our country at all. Our mails are carried by way of New York. And by whatever way the mails are carried the commerce will be carried. If a man in Toronto orders goods in England he asks to have them shipped by the first steamer. He wants the goods at once. Is it to be supposed that he will have them sent by a steamer that will cross in nine or ten days, when he can have them sent by a steamer that will cross in five days? Not at all. He is a live, enterprising man and he is going to have those goods on his shelves at the earliest possible moment. To do that he must take advantage of the steamer that will cross the Atlantic in the shortest possible time; therefore the goods will go by New York. It is the same with passengers and mails. To-day we are denied the advantages of a fast Atlantic service, which we believe we would have had if the present government had been capable, enterprising business men who would have been able to grasp the situation and who would have ratified, as they should have done, the contract that was made with Messrs. Allan & Company in 1896. Every man, whether he is a Conservative or a Reformer, admits that we require a national policy in Canada, that we have a national policy in Canada which while it may not be carried out in its entirety is still the policy that Canada wants, a policy that is keeping the market of Canada for the Canadians. We want to develop that national policy to its fullest extent. We will never have the full complement of that national policy until we extend it to our transportation system as we now apply it to keep the home market of our country for our own people. We want a fast Atlantic service to assist the national policy in enabling Canada to develop her trade to the fullest extent, to do her own trade and to provide conveniences for the travelling of her own people, to carry her own products from country to country, advertising her productiveness and doing everything to show the world that Canada can live within herself and is quite as enterprising as the United States or any other country. If we consider the case of a man coming from Europe deciding whether he should invest his money and settle in Canada or the United States, he will have submitted to him that one fact that the Americans supply a line of steamers that cross the Atlantic in five days while the Canadians take nine. What would this suggest to his mind? That the one are a live enterprising people and the other a slow people lagging behind in the race of life. That must be the inevitable consequence of our lethargy in this matter. It must lead to failure in competition with a more enterprising rival, and the result is that in nine cases out of ten such a man would decide to make his investment in the country that shows life, enterprise, ability and progressiveness. We are told that we do not want this service; I say we do want it. It is said that we may want it for passenger traffic and for mails, but not for transporting the produce of our country. The great difficulty we have to-day in transporting the perishable products of Canada so as to lay them down in a proper condition in the markets of England is the lack of an adequate transportation service. What is needed is a faster transportation service so that these products can be laid down in a shorter time and in better condition. That would mean a better trade, larger profits, more successful operations in life, to the producers of these goods and therefore this line is of as much importance, if not of more importance, to the farmer as to any other class of the community. They are to-day losing a profit which should accrue to them, on account of the lack of proper transportation facilities. Then the merchants of the country require this service. In order to compete in the race of life with the Americans they must be alive to the necessities of the situation, and they must be able to bring their goods as quickly to Canada as they can be brought to New York, and they must be able to send their mails by Canadian routes as quickly as the American mail can be sent. We must be able to give our trade to our own steamships, to live within ourselves as the Americans do. Our merchants require a fast Atlantic service just as much as do the American merchants. Then the travellers of the country require it: if we had such a service they would go by our routes instead of through the United States, and Canada would have the benefit of an advertisement which she could never secure in any other possible way. If we were able to compute the number of people who have started out with the intention of visiting Canada and looking into her resources with the hope of making Canada their homes, but who are to-day in the United States owing to the inadequacy of our steamship service, we would have a significant lesson as to the necessity of such an improvement, and that condition must obtain so long as we have the present inadequate service. The Canadian people must hold the government responsible for this failure. Why have they failed ? I am afraid the Canadian people will say it is because of incompetency, of inability or want of foresight and of good judgment, because if they were possessed of those qualifications we would not be without a proper service to-day. If two men started to do a piece of work and one said 'I cannot do it' and the other said 'I can do it,' the one who says, 'I can do it,' and succeeds where the other fails, shows that he has superior ability and intelligence. In this case one party made an effort and succeeded so far as it was possible for them to succeed up to the time that they left office. The other party declared that they could do better, they failed. First they made the attempt to do better, then they attempted to do it as well, now they have attempted to do it in any way and to-day Ichabod might well be written over every effort they made. They have acknowledged failure in life and it is time for the country to see it and know it and I am inclined to think that when the time comes for that great body to speak they will pronounce as their verdict, in no uncertain tones that the present government, has shown incompetence in regard to this transaction at least.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I regret that this question has been made to a less or greater extent a party question. I think the people of Canada are interested largely in this subject and that it ought not to be a stock subject of political argument between one party or another. I think that the subject of the fast line originated with the Liberal-Conservative party. It was used for a number of years as a sort of talisman at the elections, or before the elections, to persuade the inhabitants of the maritime provinces especially and of the rest of Canada generally to support the Liberal-Conservative party in order that they might inaugurate what they termed a fast line. They used that as a sort of a talisman, not that they had any practical scheme in view, not that they had anything definite in the construction of ships, but as something to look forward to as a result of returning the party of progress to power. This question was used to influence the public mind at an early time. I remember that previous to the election of 1887 it was alluded to in the terms to which I have referred and it was a strong factor in the election held that year. It was represented that if the government then in power were returned before the snow flew this line would be in practical operation. I ventured to predict in a somewhat iconoclastic way that probably ten years afterwards, if that party were returned to power, the same old magnificent castles of the Allan Line would be running and conveying the mails and I think I have reason to believe that I was a true prophet. As far back as 1887 the consummation of this scheme was declared to be immediately at hand. This party pledged to the consummation of the fast line, that they declared to be immediately in the foreground with such flattering prospects of its being carried out, allowed this magnificent project to remain literally glittering in the air until they went out in 1896. Then the subject came in very conveniently. At a public meeting the inevitable telegram came down that a contract had been entered into by the leader of the government with the firm of the Allans insuring the consummation of this scheme. That had its influence no doubt. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) who has preceded me, alluded to this contract. He referred to it as if it were a definite, well arranged contract entered into on both sides, binding, covering all the essential elements and one such as could have immediately been carried into effect by their successors who unhappily interrupted the even flow of all these benefits.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) would allow me, I did not represent it as a contract that was agreed upon by both sides, but an offer which that company had made, to do this service upon terms which were acceptable to the then government, and would have been entered into provided they had remained in power.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I understand perfectly what the hon. gentleman says. I also perfectly understand the difference between what he says and what actually existed. I also refer definitely to the fact that in the course of this hon. gentleman's argument he again and again returned to the assertion that there was a contract, that there was a proposal acceptable to both sides and such a contract as could immediately be carried into effect. Now, there was no contract covering the essential elements of a fast line and that is the question of maintaining a speed under penalties, but when the Allans entered into that proposal—not a contract—they claimed a period of four months to make up their minds whether or not they might afterwards enter into a definite contract to maintain the speed. Therefore, the argument which has been based upon the assertion of there being potentially or really a contract must fall to the ground because there was no definite proposal or contract founded upon it. Then the hon. gentleman, whether he saw the distinction or not, in the course of his argument always returned to the postulate that there was a contract, or that there was a tender, immature though it might be, yet sufficiently forwarded to be entered upon at once as a definite, binding proposition. There was nothing of the kind and no argument can be founded upon that to make this government blame-worthy or otherwise for a violation of the stipulations of a contract only awaiting a technicality to be a binding proposition on both sides. The essential element of speed was not contracted for by these gentlemen who made that tender. Therefore the government, having that immature proposal, were justified when a definite proposal was brought forward, to agree to it and to enter into a contract. That contract was entered into with the firm of Petersen, Tate & Co., of Newcastle-on-Tyne. I do not know but that I am the only person in this House except the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who knows Mr. Petersen and who knows who Mr. Tate is. I had the honour of making Capt. Petersen's acquaintance in 1881, or thereabouts, when he was the captain of a seagoing steamer. He associated himself with Mr. Tate who had been the business manager of the firm of Lindsay, Gracie & Company of Newcastle—a large ship-owning company. With their practical knowledge of business and navigation they thought they could enter into a contract with the money patronage they had secured to inaugurate and conduct this fast line. Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company were not the real substantial people at the back of this contract. The real substantial people were Charles Doxford & Sons, of Newcastle, who were the constructors of the bottle-necked steamers which have been so much derided in this House, and who originated that patent for the construction of those ships. This is not a novelty. They are a very extensive ship building firm in the north of England. They have built for Cayzer, Irvine & Company, the Clan Line, a line of steamships numbering twenty or thirty, and they are the much derided bottle-necked ships. They give the utmost satisfaction. They are economical vessels to operate and the company have shown their approval of the design by following the construction of one ship with another continuously with finer and larger and better ships designed upon that model. This firm are also the patentees and owners of the whale-backed cargo carrying ships. I am very well acquainted with the firm of Runciman & Company, a firm in the north of England, who own a number of these ships. I have conversed with the captains of their ships when they have come into the port of Halifax and I have been told by them that they have subjected them to the severest test that a ship could be subjected to at any time and that is the carrying of big cargoes of timber on the sides of the whale-backs. I have written to them and the captains have written back to me describing their voyages across the Atlantic, and they have told me that they did not lose one single stick of timber from the sides of these ships, so that this style of ships is entirely practicable both for carrying cargo and passengers. There is a great competition in the eastern trade. There are the Peninsula and Oriental Company and the Orient Line, and the fine ships of these lines enter into competition with the line I have described. Passengers go as freely by the bottle-necked ships as they do by the magnificent liners of these old shipping companies. Therefore, it is no novelty to enter into a contract with constructors like these for a service performed by the kind of ships that I have described. But, if a contract had been entered into at that time with the Allans, what would we have had? The fastest ships then on the Atlantic were 20-knot ships. The Atlantic service was then in its transition stage. The White Star Line were putting on the 'Majestic' and the 'Teutonic,' of about 10,000 tons; the Cunard boats were being increased in size, and the International Steamship Company was putting on the 'City of New York' and the 'City of Paris,' both of 10,000 tons and 20 knots. We possibly might have secured vessels of 20 knots then. Immediately after, the Hamburg-American Line put on fast steamers, and they are now operating the 'Deutschland,' which makes 23 knots. Their competitor, the North German Lloyds, have put on the 'Kaiser Wilhelm II.' and the 'Kronprinz,' which maintain about the same rate of speed, the latter being supposed to do 23 knots on the average at sea. These boats are of immense size and immense cost. The 'Kaiser Wilhelm II.' probably cost more than $3,000,000. The passage across the Atlantic has been accomplished by the 'Deutschland' in five days and seven hours, and by the 'Kaiser Wilhelm II.' in five days and nine hours; the average being about five days and seventeen hours. A steamer of like speed would make the passage from Halifax to either Cherbourg or Southampton in probably four days and five hours.

I designate Halifax because a vessel leaving that port is immediately upon the high seas and can maintain the highest rate of speed until she reaches the other side, a facility which does not exist, so far as I know, with respect to any other Canadian port. I believe that Petersen, Tate & Co. would have carried out their contract had they been able to raise the capital on the money market. The builders were ready, the operators were ready, but the money was not forthcoming. At the time they were endeavouring to raise the capital the money market became panicky, correspondence in the press alarmed the public mind as to the nature of this proposal, and investors held aloof and sought what they considered more attractive investments. Unfortunately there is in London and in England the reptile press. There are some gentlemen who write in monetary journals and in other papers for pay. They come to the promoter of an enterprise and say: Here is an article eulogistic of your enterprise and I want £2,000 for it or £5,000 for it; and here is another article which will be published for nothing if you do not come up with the money. People like that, operating upon the sensitive state of the money market, created an opposition which prevented Petersen, Tate & Co. from carrying out their proposal. I do not allude now to the influence of rival lines. Communications appeared in the press from practical men and steamship owners describing the route as impracticable and the scheme as Utopian, and pointing to the continental lines as an instance of how money could be lost by stockholders in having these costly advertisements; because these huge steamships which lose money are simply used by the different lines as an advertisement for the dozen freight carriers which may be owned by that same line. They can thus afford to support one or two of these fast greyhounds in order to advertise their other ships. During the pendency of the negotiations with Petersen, Tate & Co. the steamship business had made great progress, and what was considered a fast line before could be no longer classed as such. Twenty-knot boats became second-class boats, so that if we had had 20-knot steamers we still could not have entered into competition with the faster boats sailing from New York. Furthermore, the New York lines, in combination, were able to put on a fast steamer from New York every day. At the initiation of our enterprise it would be impossible for us to run a fast boat more frequently than once a week, and so the daily service from New York would afford immense advantages to the inhabitants of Canada who live west of Montreal and Quebec. I believe that now a favourable juncture has arisen for the carrying out of this proposal for a Canadian fast line. The Prime Minister to-day alluded to the turbine, which has been successfully used on yachts and the channel steamers. If the turbine could be made effective against the Atlantic waves, and if a high speed can be maintained with these turbine engines of less cost and occupying less space, the problem will be solved. If steamers of less size than the monsters now plying to New York can be built to attain the same rate of speed, then we will be able to get a line of boats not so costly and offering all the advantages we seek. The turbine engine is yet in its infancy, and probably from the fact that but few of them have been made, and that the plans and specifications and details of their economic working have not yet been wrought out, they are more costly than they will be in future. If far less space is taken up by the machinery, if the ships can be reduced to from 5,000 to 7,000 tons net and not over 10,000 tons gross, the scheme will not entail such an enormous outlay as would justify any economic man withholding his support. I do not venture to say that the turbine engines can be constructed at less cost than the ordinary engines. That has to be demonstrated. The patentees are sanguine that they will revolutionize the business upon the Atlantic. Now is the time, then, for Canadians to look for a fast line of steamers. The turbine may also solve another very important question, namely, the economic working of these ships. Not only will their first cost be reduced, but the working expenses will be curtailed as well. They will not have to carry so much coal, and consequently they will have greater cargo-carrying space, and more extensive accommodation for passengers. That will reduce the expenditure for stokers, and for crew, and for servants of all kinds, which tends so much to swell out the working expenses of these immense Atlantic liners.

I was surprised to-day to hear my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) deride the bottle-backs. I was also surprised to hear the gentlemen of the opposition endorse the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who derided the scheme of the late member for Quebec, who had a steamer with a propeller in the middle and a propeller at the stern, which between the two was supposed to attain a great rate of speed. Scientific men should not venture on subjects of this kind, especially if they do not understand them. Gentlemen who derided that principle ran foul of the great invention of the age, the turbine propeller. It was precisely that which was the object of derision by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and the hon. member for East Grey, who, I regret to say, has gone out of his usual course on this occasion, and has not engaged himself closely with the discoveries of modern science. It was something akin to the eminent British savant and philosopher. Gessner, who at the beginning of steam navigation on the Atlantic said it was an impossible feat, because the vessels would not be large enough to contain the coal that would be consumed in the voyage across the Atlantic.

Mr. GOURLEY. Would my hon. friend allow me to ask him, is there any ocean-going steamship to-day navigated by the turbine, or any building ?

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). It is on the channel steamers, and I am told that the Allan Line are building a steamer with turbine engines. The turbine is also used in torpedo-destroyers, which attain an immense rate of speed. The channel, of course, is an ocean passage, the roughest in the world.

Mr. GOURLEY. What I want to know is, has the turbine been exploited so as to be used on ships crossing the Atlantic ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The Allans are building a steamer to run to Halifax.

Mr. GOURLEY. It has not been tried yet ; it is an experiment.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I regret that the hon. member for East Grey did not confine this subject within its own limits, but incorporated with it the question of the national policy and other matters. The construction of such ships as I have outlined would probably solve the question he has in his mind, that is, the carriage of the more costly and delicate kinds of freight, which require the most rapid transportation. For most of the products of Canada, such as grain and cattle, the ordinary steamship would be sufficient. If we enlarge our horticultural operations so as to export grapes, plums and others of the more delicate fruits to England, fast boats would be useful ; and the simplification of their construction and the diminished space occupied by the engines would enable them to carry this high-class freight. On the large steamship lines running out of New York, the principle advocated by the hon. member for East Grey has been reversed. The large passenger steamers carry the higher classes of freight, called express freight. They do not attempt to carry the bulkier articles, such as are chiefly produced in Canada at the present time. I had an opportunity of conversing with one of the highest shipping authorities in America, Mr. Bonner, freight agent of the North German Lloyds. They own the fastest passenger ships, and a large fleet of freight-carrying steamers, and also handle the largest quantity of goods of any importing firm in America. He is an expert both in the running of ships, the kinds of cargoes, the values of goods and the possibilities of continental trade. As this subject was in agitation in the House last year, I had an opportunity of getting particulars from him on this subject which may be useful. He informed me that the American manufacturers had practically abandoned to the German and other continental manufacturers the production and sale of certain classes of goods in the United States ; that notwithstanding their development of machinery, their capital, their devotion to the production of these lines, and their patriotic sentiment, that nothing consumed in America should be produced outside of America, those manufacturers were compelled to abandon to the German and other continental manufacturers the production of a certain class of goods in the production of which they could not hope to rival them. Therefore they quit the field and directed their energies upon the production of those kinds of goods which they could produce to advantage, and allowed their exchange for the goods which they imported to pay them for the loss they sustained in consequence of those goods being produced abroad. That is the policy I would commend to my hon. friend from East Grey—to ascertain by observation, analysis and discrimination, just what goods we can produce to advantage, what goods can be better produced by the manufacturers of other countries, and how much we can advantage ourselves by the exchange of the commodities which we can produce to advantage for those in which we cannot hope to rival them. I say there are great possibilities before this fast line, and the attention of Canada should be directed towards it. Without recriminations between the two parties, and without using it as a political expedient, let us all devote our energies to its consummation, derive all the benefit we can from it, and utilize it for the development of the trade in Canada and for the attraction of passengers to Canadian routes. That we shall be able to capture the American passenger trade is very problematical. There is a great advantage in having the longer rail route and the shorter ocean route ; but for some time to come the advantage of the daily sailing of boats from New York will overcome the other advantages. I think, however, that the government are now very fortunately situated, with these advantages and the knowledge they have acquired, to take up the subject of the fast line, and to enter into a contract with a reputable firm, or otherwise to acquire the means of maintaining an Atlantic passenger service as a governmental off-shoot of the great line that is projected. We do not know how many passengers will be carried, or what facilities will be given for a transcontinental and transmarine passage. All these things are in the future. We enter upon the question now at a most favourable epoch. Looking back over the history of this question, looking back to our failures, looking back to the efforts that have been made, and keeping in view the resources of our country, which are now growing so rapidly, let us at this time acquire a line which will be equal in speed, if possible, to those other lines, and at this favourable juncture project this great facility upon the mind of Canada and the attention of the world.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I would not like, Mr. Speaker, that this debate should pass without the House giving the subject involved a full and fair consideration. It is unfortunate that it has been left to such a late period in the session, but the press of other very important matters will perhaps furnish a very satisfactory excuse for this delay. The question is perhaps, at first view, not of such great importance to all Canada as it is to the maritime provinces, and particularly Nova Scotia ; but still I think that if it were fully discussed, and all the advantages that would result to Canada from the successful establishment of a really fast line service between Canada and the great centres of population of Europe, fully realized and understood, we would find public opinion throughout Canada supporting the government in any endeavours to realize this great improvement. I do not know that there is much advantage to be derived now from a discussion of the reasons why the project has so far not been accomplished. In my opinion, this matter, which had been for at least eight years occupying the attention of the late government, was in 1896 brought to a point where it might be looked upon as having been reduced to a very practical form. Stress has been laid on the fact that there was not a contract in existence between the Allan Company and the government for the establishment of this service, when the present administration came into power. I do not think that anybody really affirms that there was a contract, but, we, on this side of the House, are inclined to take the view that when the administration of Sir Charles Tupper went out of office and was succeeded by the present, matters were in such a position that the new government could have had a contract completed. Objection is taken to the conditions of the tender made by the Messrs. Allan, upon which that contract would have had to be based ; but if that be put forward as an excuse for the failure of the present administration, it is not one that can be successfully maintained, because the very objections that are made to the proposition of the Allan Company apply to that of the Tate, Petersen Company. The Allan Company wished for a certain delay in which to complete their arrangements. If I mistake not, they wanted a delay of four months. They further desired to have a condition inserted, which is usual with every contract dealing with business on the high seas, namely that exceptional difficulties in the matter of weather, of fog or particular moments of peril in approaching the coast, should be taken into account in estimating the rate of speed the company had to maintain. That objection could not be successfully maintained against the Allan contract, because the same objection would apply to any contract made with any company for a fast line service. But when in 1897 this matter came to be discussed in the House of Commons and the opposition desired to know why the government had made no progress, the fact was made known that the gentlemen to whom the business had been entrusted by the present government, the late member for Quebec West (Hon. Mr. Dobell), at that time a member of the administration, to the great astonishment of the members of this House, gave it as his deliberate opinion—and we may assume that he was also speaking the opinion of the government as well—that what he wanted was not what might properly be called a fast line service, but what might rather be called a fast freight service. If I am not mistaken, he said that what Canada wanted was a service which would give a speed of some eighteen knots per hour. The moment that announcement was made, the people of the maritime provinces felt that any such service would absolutely fail to accomplish the object we all desire. We do not want an eighteen knot service, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition said to-day. We do not pretend to say that a fast line freight service, would be an injury to the country, but what we believe is that if any line of steamers were established with an average speed of only eighteen knots an hour, we would absolutely fail to realize the advantages of our geographical position, and to call such a line a fast steamship service would be an absolute misnomer. It would not represent properly the character of the line. Such a line would fail to realize the advantages which must be realized if we are to have a really fast steamship service on the Atlantic. On account of the difficulties of communication, particularly in the summer months to the end of August, there is a point some hundreds of miles south and south-east of Cape Race, at the south-eastern point of Newfoundland, which is more or less exposed to danger from floating ice and fog. Consequently at that point there is, as it were, a corner which must be turned by all steamships plying across the Atlantic, whether going to New York, Boston or Halifax, or some port in Cape Breton or somewhere on the St. Lawrence. If a vessel is not particularly anxious to maintain a great speed, she may venture to make her way through this portion of the Atlantic, which is more or less covered with fog, and in which floating ice may be encountered ; but if you are going to have a service of an average speed of 23 to 25 knots, it is clear that the one essential condition which must be complied with is to secure such a route across the Atlantic as may give almost absolute guarantee of security and avoid any danger of collision with ice or other vessels in the fog. To that corner, which must be turned by all steamers going across the Atlantic, the course is practically identical whether the steamers are going to Canadian or American ports The line is practically identical from that point in mid-Atlantic to the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland.

But from that point the courses of the steamers from New York, Halifax or Louisburg would diverge, and we would have from that point in the Atlantic, if we would secure the adoption of a line which would make its terminus at a maritime port of Canada, an advantage in distance which would be equal to 650 miles.

Now, 650 miles means at least a day, or considerably over a day, spent upon the Atlantic. And it is perfectly clear to the people of the maritime provinces who have looked into this matter closely that, if we have a line of steamers equally fast with the lines to the American ports in their passage across the Atlantic, the Canadian line will beat the American line by at least a day in every voyage westward or eastward. We find, then, that by utilizing the maritime ports of Canada you can land a passenger on the Canadian seaboard at least a day earlier than he can be landed at an American port. Fortunately, the port of Halifax, the port of Louisburg and the port of Sydney are so exceptionally free from hindrance at their entrance through fog or difficulties of a tidal nature, that delays such as constantly occur at New York need not be expected or allowed for. So, with a fairly good service maintained over the Intercolonial and other railway lines in Canada, a passenger coming by the Canadian line can be landed in Toronto as quickly as he can be landed in New York coming by the American route. But to realize this advantage we must have a Canadian line that is really a fast line. We cannot do anything to divert the great volume of travel to Canadian lines, unless the steamers that are subsidized by Canada are as fast as any that ply. If we have an advantage of one-fifth in distance, we can only realize that advantage by having steamers as fast as those of our rivals. But, if we have an advantage of one-fifth in distance and lose one-fifth in speed, it is quite evident that no outlay that the Canadian government may make will do anything to attract those for whom speed is any consideration, and so the advantage which we might hope to derive from a fast line will not be ours. Now, a fast line could not be a freight line. We cannot realize through it the advantages which the late Mr. Dobell, a member of this government, seemed to think would be realized by a line of steamers making a speed of eighteen knots. But, if we have a fast line of passenger steamers, those steamers will have a capacity of 1,000 to 1,500 tons or even more, which can be utilized for express freight and the rapid carriage of the perishable products of Canada, which are wanted in unlimited quantities in the mother country, and which, if carried across with sufficient speed, will reach the market in such a condition as to realize prices which will leave a margin for a high rate of freight. Our eggs, our butter, our fruit, and other products, if landed in Great Britain promptly and in such steady supply as could be secured by these steamers making proper arrangement with land transportation companies throughout Canada, would be able to pay a high rate for transit of the Atlantic.

It seems to me that, while this is of the highest importance to the people of the maritime provinces, this great project is one which affects every part of Canada. We have heard one gentleman speak here to-day of the advantage to be derived by Canada from this project in the mere matter of advertising. That is a point which should be considered carefully, for it is of the utmost importance. Canada is so situated to-day that the two great masses of population in the world are likely, as soon as the opportunity is afforded them, to use Canadian routes as a means of passing from one to the other. The teeming population of the Asian coasts with its great commercial centres especially in China and Japan, and the great and rapidly developing population on the continent of Europe—these being by far the greatest masses of population in the world—are so placed that the shortest line of communication between them lies through Canada. That cannot be used, its great results cannot be realized, with our present means of communication. The line is practically closed to these people who would naturally make use of it, for we have not at this moment a service upon the Atlantic such as we should have, affording the shortest, quickest and most comfortable mode of travel which modern conditions provide. Give us a fast line service from Europe to Halifax, Louisburg, or Quebec in summer, and you will put us in a position to attract to the Canadian Pacific Railway and such other transcontinental railways as we may have in Canada, the most important and lucrative travel the world affords. You will practically place Canada in a position to realize all the advantages which she ought to possess from being where she is, actually on the front street of the world, the most important and what ought to be the most used line of passenger travel. There can be no question that enormous advantages would result to this country from an expenditure of anything like a reasonable amount of money which would direct the first-class through travel of practically the whole civilized world through Canada. Who can dispute that? The advertisement to the country, the knowledge that will be acquired by those people of the highest intelligence and of the highest importance of our wealth producing capabilities in passing backwards and forwards through this country, will be of incalculable importance to us. It would be impossible for such travel to pass through Canada constantly without disseminating throughout the world, to our enormous advantage, full information as to the capabilities of our country and our sources of wealth. The two things that Canada needs, in order to overcome the disadvantage of a late start, and to place her at once in the front rank of worldpowers are population and capital. And what is more likely to give us population and capital than by placing Canada in the position to attract to herself, practically throughout her whole length, all the first-class travel from the east to the west. There can be no doubt as to the character of the advertisement we might get and as to the advantage to our country which would be made accessible to the people of the whole world in consequence of such movement. I think that, as a rule, the people of the maritime provinces were anxious to see this scheme realized and looked upon it as one of the works that the government must undertake and carry out at an early day. But I think that they realize now that no fast line that is not really a fast line would be acceptable. They do not want any substitute offered to them. We must have a line that is quite as fast and quite as good as anything to be found plying to the ports of the United States. With the work accomplished of giving Canada such a line of steamers as is to be found to-day plying between the ports of Europe and New York, we shall, no doubt, find that it has been the wisest and best expenditure this country has ever made.

Now, there has been a great deal of discussion as to the ports which should be used. It is held by a great many people that in summer the terminal point should be Quebec and that in winter Halifax or some port on the Atlantic coast should be used. That is a matter which it is not necessary at this moment to discuss, and it would be a great misfortune if the discussion of the relative advantages of the different ports should be permitted to delay a settlement of this question. The question of terminals is one that will settle itself as soon as we have the fast line. When that line has been in operation for one year the practice and experience of that year's operation will satisfactorily and forever settle the question of the right port to be used by such a line. What is wanted is that the government should endeavour to realize all the advantages which would accrue to Canada from such a service and should endeavour to procure them for Canada at the earliest possible moment. One argument which has been advanced here two or three times to-day has been of a most unsatisfactory character; that is, the attempt that has been made to show the advantages that come from delay, through not proceeding too quickly. It has been pointed out over and over again that if we had proceeded to complete the contract in 1896 as it was submitted to the government we would have had a service which, in view of what has been accomplished since that time and of what is now being done, would be an inferior service, that the 18 or 20-knot service which would have been established in 1896 would not be equal to the service of 23 knots which we see on the Atlantic to-day, and that we would be, to a certain extent, committed to and involved in a line of steamers which would be slower than the best, and therefore not exactly what we want. That is a line of argument which, if applied at all, would involve us in a constant course of delay, and would induce us to go on from year to year without action. It would induce the government and the people of Canada to delay forever coming to a conclusion on this matter because the advances of the next year might render the best that we could now obtain inferior, owing to the rapid progress that is constantly taking place in matters of this kind. We cannot afford to go on forever without progress because progress is being made all about us; we must have at once a service that will enable us to realize the advantages of our geographical position and the advantages that should come to us as a rapidly growing country. The right hon. the Prime Minister to-day seemed to think that he had given an answer which ought to be satisfactory to the House and to people of Canada and to justify the government in making no progress in this matter when he pointed out that the tender submitted to the government called for an expenditure of $1,500,000. In view of the fact that this House is this session voting estimates aggregating nearly $70,000,000, it strikes me that any one who knows the importance of the fast line project and the advantages that would accrue from such a line, would feel that in view of the general expenditure of Canada, an expenditure of $1,500,000 for this fast service would not be a wasteful expenditure. If we compare the present expenditure of this country with that of 1896, when the government of the day was quite ready to undertake the expenditure of $750,000 for the purpose of securing this fast line, we will find that the general expenditure has practically doubled, and that therefore the expenditure of $1,500,000 for this service to-day would bear precisely the same proportion to the general expenditure of the country as $750,000 bore to the general expenditure in 1896. Therefore, to my mind, the cost of the service is not a sufficient reason why the government should altogether refuse to entertain this proposal. I believe and agree that they should exercise caution, and I believe, with the Premier, that economy is a good thing. In fact, I often feel that that view is not as strongly present to the mind of the right hon. the Prime Minister as it might be to the country's advantage. After all, this is a matter of enormous importance, one which involves a great expenditure, but not an expenditure which is beyond the resources of the country. It is a matter which, if the government of the country were as wideawake as I hope to see them, and as I believe the opposition are, to the development of our industries, and particularly of our shipbuilding, they might very well utilize to induce the construction of large steamers in this country. I would like very much, when the time comes that this project is to be realized, that it should be so managed as to lay the foundation of a great shipbuilding industry somewhere in Canada, and if the government of the day were in a position to make a contract for the construction of two, or three, or four great steamships of the size and power and cost of such steamships as are now occupying the first place upon the Atlantic, they might be able, by calling for the construction of the steamers in Canada, to induce one of the great shipbuilding companies to transfer at least a portion of their shipbuilding plant from the mother country, and to establish in Canada a shipbuilding industry. It would be a most important thing to us if in addition to the fact that we have a line of steamers of the fastest speed, running over the shortest route and affording to the travelling public the greatest possible facilities in regard to comfort and speed, we could proclaim that this Canadian line of steamers, the finest and fastest on the ocean, were of Canadian construction. That would have great value as an advertisement for our country. We have had this matter threshed out in the maritime provinces. Last year a large and representative meeting was held in Halifax at which men of all shades of political opinion, men deeply interested in the commercial success of Halifax and the province, came together and in every way in their power endeavoured to impress on the government the fact that it was regarded as being of the utmost importance to the province of Nova Scotia that this project should be accomplished. They endeavoured to put their views in such a way as to show that this matter was of importance, not only to the province of Nova Scotia and to the cities by the sea, but to the whole people of Canada. We should not expect that such an outlay as is contemplated should be made in deference to the opinion of any locality. The people of the maritime provinces do not feel for a moment that they should come to the parliament of Canada and urge upon it the adoption of the scheme involving a large expenditure if it was of a local character, and if it affected merely sectional interests. Our opinion is that we have here the shortest line of communication between the greatest masses of population in the world; that we have, if we choose to realize it and to go to the expense necessary to realize it, a position that will place us in the forefront of the world's traffic, and will develop through our country the greatest amount of travel of the most wealthy people and give us all the advantages that must come from full and complete knowledge of our country by these people. No one who visits the western portions of our country can return from it without a feeling of amazement that the country is not making more rapid progress and development and receiving a larger population and without feeling that it is an undeveloped country. What is the cause of that? That there is as yet no knowledge of our country possessed by the people of the world. Even if the people of the older provinces in Canada to-day have no adequate knowledge of its resources, the extent and the possibilities of wealth to be found in Canada, and if no other advantage could be realized from the establishment of such a line of steamers as I am now advocating than the fact that it would communicate to the world knowledge of our possibilities, of our extent, of our capacity for producing wealth, then I maintain it would be scarcely possible to estimate the advantage that would be derived by this country from the expenditure we have in view.

But, if in addition to that, a mere calculation be made in the most commercial fashion, if we were to develop the commercial view to the utmost and look upon the extent to which shipping would be carried on by a fast line of steamers with the enormous outlay that would be made in connection with the operation of such a line of steamers, with the enormous amount of valuable supplies that would require to be purchased in Canadian ports for such a line of steamers and with the enormous aggregate of increased value which would be attached to all these products of an essentially perishable character of our Canadian farms and orchards which we are sending to the mother country in enormous quantities, and which we hope to send in increased quantities; then, even from the most commercial point of view which it is possible to take, it seems to me that it would be quite possible to prove conclusively that this expenditure of $1,500,000 would be repaid directly to the people of Canada in the increased wealth which would be brought about as the result of such an expenditure. There is another thing. I believe that Canada has derived in the past a great deal of credit and advantage from the fact that her conduct throughout has been, in view of her comparatively sparse population, progressive and courageous. There is no doubt that Canada has derived a great deal of advantage from the advertisement she has received the world over from the fact that though a young country, with a small population, she had the courage and ability to grapple with such enormous public works as the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to carry them to a magnificent and successful completion.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. BELL. The Grand Trunk Pacific may be, if all the hopes of hon. gentlemen are realized, a still further proof that this country is not lacking in those qualities of courage which she has shown herself to be possessed of in the past. This line of steamers across the Atlantic is simply another step in the same course of progress, another proof of the possession of the same courage which Canada has shown in assuming the expenditure necessary for the construction of the great public works of which she has every reason to be proud. To my mind, all the transcontinental railways will fail to realize for Canada or for themselves the advantages which they should possess from the moment they are completed unless there is the connecting link, a bridge, so to speak, across the north Atlantic, which would enable us on these lines of railway to realize all the advantages that could be derived from the carriage of commodities and persons by a short route. We cannot in Canada at all realize or hope to realize all the advantages and all the returns we ought to receive from these great works until we complete that connecting link which will place us in connection with the great mass of population which to-day in Europe practically dominates and controls the whole civilized world. Why should we hesitate? Why should we pause? Why should we consider that inventors here and there are making progress, or that if we take a step to-day the progress of to-morrow might prove that even in respect to that step we are left behind? If we are to regard matters from that point of view, manifestly we will never do anything. We have no reason to hesitate any longer. We do not want to confine all the advantages of our situation to such a course as will enable them only to be realized wholly by the men who are to follow us in the next generation. I think we ought to endeavour to realize some of the advantages that we possess to-day, and it seems to me that the government should approach this matter, not in a cowardly spirit, not in any too cautious spirit, but that they should approach it with a positive determination to make it an accomplished fact at an early day. I do not think there has been anything in connection with all the history of the present government which is less to their credit than their connection with the trans-Atlantic fast line. I am perfectly willing to give them every credit for care and for caution, but it is impossible to forget the utterance of a member of the government, who, when this matter was first discussed in this House, in 1897, by his advocacy of a slow line, or of a fast freight line, showed that, in so far as he was concerned, he did not realize what the aspirations of the people of Canada were, and that the people of Canada had no right to expect that their aspirations would ever be realized by a government holding such opinions as they seemed to hold. If the administration realized what the people of Canada hope to see accomplished in this matter, they would approach it with a determination to give it effect at once, and if they do so they will succeed in satisfying the opinion of the people. They cannot do so by approaching the subject with a spirit of too great caution. They must show some kind of determination to accomplish something that the people of Canada in the past have sought to accomplish by the great public works which have given Canada such a marked and advantageous position as that which she holds in the world to-day. I would suppose that possibly the thing to be avoided most of all in connection with this matter, and I have that feeling very strongly in my own mind, is the idea that this should be made a matter of political issue. I do not think it ought to be regarded in that light, but at the same time it is impossible for those who are in earnest in favour of a fast Atlantic line to look with very much patience upon the exceedingly slow, cautious and unsatisfactory manner in which the government have been moving in connection with this great project. We would like to see it accomplished within a reasonable time, not handled in this fashion, apparently dropped for months and years entirely out of sight, but some action taken to show that the government had this matter uppermost in their minds, were making progress and were anxious to accomplish what we look upon as a public work of the very highest importance to the people, not only of Canada, but a work of particular importance and value, I may say, to the people of the maritime provinces. The different excuses that have been advanced by the government in the past for their failure to accomplish this project are to a certain extent arguable and cogent. The great strike in the engineering trades, the enormous advance in the cost of iron and the cost of construction, together with the Boer war, have been satisfactory reasons, perhaps, why so little has been done. But these are things of the past. The price of iron is falling, the price of construction is falling, the Boer war is happily and gloriously ended and now, as we stand here to-day, in the closing months of the year 1903, I know of no reason which should prevent the government from appearing before this House at the next session in a position to give us an assurance of the early completion of a contract which would guarantee to Canada possession of a line that shall be a genuinely fast line, and in a position to assure the people that not only had they made progress in negotiations that would not only be an assurance to this House and to this country of the realization of this project, but would be an assurance of the realization of the hopes of the people in respect to this project in the course of a very few months. There have been great developments in marine construction. The turbine engine, which has been referred to two or three times in the course of this discussion, marks an epoch in the history of rapid ocean travel. All these things have been accomplished and in the course of a few months will be finally settled. If the Cunard Company, in the construction of two new steamers, adopts the turbine engine, it may be taken for granted that the turbine engine is no longer a matter of doubt. If the result of the adoption of the turbine engine system be, as it is expected it will be by these great Atlantic greyhounds, then these great steamers, with the tremendous speed which they will develop from this new motive power, will increase their earning capacity, and one after another of the objections which may have stood in the way of the government proceeding to deal with this matter will have been removed. No longer will there be strikes, or the interference of a great war with business ; or the anticipated introduction of some new and approved method which might, perhaps, outclass the steamers which we at the moment were proposing to build. The government is now in such a position, that they will be unable to approach parliament again with any excuse for inaction or for failure to accomplish the end we have in view. They will be clearly open to the charge of being half-hearted in dealing with this great measure, if they do not, at the next session of parliament, submit some tangible evidence that we will have a fast line in the near future. For my own part I feel that this is a matter of importance to the whole of Canada, but apart from that, I feel that it is of particular importance to the maritime provinces. I know that there is no idea quite so cherished in the minds of the active business men of Nova Scotia, as that they may hope at some early day to see Halifax, or some other port in the maritime provinces become the terminus of a steamship line, which will be of world-wide fame, and which will turn to the shores of our country the most enlightened, the most cultured, and the most enterprising and energetic of the people of this world.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Earlier in the session I had the opportunity of giving my views on this fast Atlantic service, so that to-day I need not occupy but a few moments of the time of the House. I congratulate the member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), upon the fairness of his speech. He has stated his recognition of the difficulties which lie in the way of the accomplishment in the immediate future, of the object which we have in view in reference to this fast Atlantic service. I regret that the motion before the House after expressing the opinion that we are in favour of this project, has gone further and proclaimed a want of confidence in the government. The first clause of the motion reads :

> This House affirms its belief that great advantages would result to Canada, as well as to the mother country from the establishment of a fast Atlantic service between the two countries.

Had the motion ended there, it would have been accorded the unanimous approval of this House, and it would have given strength and aid to this government in the furtherance of this difficult undertaking ; but unfortunately, the resolution goes further, and it makes a party question of a matter that ought to be above politics. Personally, I am firmly convinced of the vast benefits which would be derived from a Canadian fast Atlantic service ; but I cannot declare by my vote, that the government have been derelict in their duty when I believe that they have not been, and I know that they have encountered great difficulties, some of which have been enumerated by my hon. friend from Pictou. Let me say, Sir, that my opinion is, that if we cannot get a really fast Atlantic service, then we should not subsidize a so-called fast Atlantic servince. I am opposed to subsidizing steamers of less than twenty knots. We should have a fast line in every sense of the word. I believe that one great benefit to be attained will be the advertisement which Canada will get before the world. Any one who has travelled in the old land must recognize the dire ignorance of a great many people there, as to the capabilities, the resources, and the geography of Canada. I regret to say that 95 per cent of those who come from England to Canada, come through the United States. They receive their first impressions of this continent in that great and wealthy city of New York. They enter our Dominion through the backdoor of Canada, instead of by the front door, which is to be found in the maritime provinces. The traveller when he lands at a Canadian port in the east, as he travels to the Pacific coast, learns as never before what a magnificent heritage the British empire has in this Dominion. If we had a steamship service equal to the best running to New York, we would have the travel from England diverted through Canada, and we would afford to Englishmen who came to Canada an oportunity of realizing the great extent and great natural wealth of our country. I believe, that viewed from this aspect alone, it would fully recompense us, for the granting of even a large subsidy to this service. I promised that my remarks would be brief, and I shall not enter further into an argument in favour of this proposition. I repeat, that if we cannot get a real fast line of steamers, we should not enter into competition with the private companies which are now engaged in the Atlantic trade. Let us have a fast Atlantic service in the true sense of the word ; a fast Atlantic service which will be a world-wide advertisement for Canada ; a fast Atlantic service which will be able to compete with the very fastest steamers running to United States ports.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY (Colchester). It is unfortunate for Canada and for this parliament, that all great questions are relegated to a few moments discussion, whereas the little petty domestic questions are dilated on for weeks and weeks. That has been the misfortune of Canada ever since confederation. A trifling question, as to whether a little wharf should cost $5,000 or $10,000, receives days and days of discussion, but a great question which makes for the life of the nation, is thrown overboard in a few minutes. That has been the weakness of Canada, and so long as I am here I shall endeavour to correct that weakness. We want to discuss national affairs here. We want to make a nation of Canada, and we cannot make a nation of Canada by discussing, for days, five thousand dollar grants to wharfs. We cannot make a nation of Canada by taking weeks in discussing the question of binder twine. These questions may be discussed in the township council; this parliament is for the discussion of great national questions. It is for us to solve the problem of how we can lay the foundations of Canada, so that she may have a controlling and dominating influence in the whole world. When such a question is under discussion here, some people make excuses for the time that they occupy. I shall make no such excuse. The debate on the transcontinental railway, and the debate on this fast Atlantic line are the only two subjects which were worthy of the consideration of the Canadian parliament this session. These other petty questions, can be discussed by school trustees, and by county councils, whose members have no ideas beyond the mere parish in which they live.

Now, Sir, I want to say, that the conduct of the Canadian people with reference to the establishment of a fast Atlantic line, has been insignificant and mean beyond all compare. We have been pretending to make progress on this continent; we have been pretending to dispute the supremacy of the United States in commerce, and, yet we have been debating for ten of fifteen years, whether we are to establish a fast steamship line.

I was pleased with one remark of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). He said, what are we engaged in these internal developments for, what are we building lines of railway for, unless it is for the purpose of carrying the commerce of this country to the sea? And what is the use of carrying it there unless we have the most approved facilities for distributing it over the whole world? We are always beginning things in Canada at the wrong end. We are such a little, illogical people. We have been accustomed to look at public questions from such a narrow provincial standpoint that we have not an intelligent idea in our pates about the possibilities of Canada as a whole. The time is past for that kind of thing; and hereafter when I hear any man in this parliament endeavouring to bring the great public questions down to the low level of party politics, I will say he is not fit to be in this parliament. The question before us is whether Canada is to be a great commercial country. What man would ever think of party politics on a question like this? The man who would introduce politics on this question would want his mother-in-law's funeral to be run on political lines. This is a business question, and is to be discussed as such. If a great steamship or mercantile company, with the resources of Canada, wanted to establish a steamship line, it would have been established in two weeks. I think the Prime Minister ought to have blushed when he referred to the statute passed on this subject as far back as 1889; and I venture to say that that statute was not passed without a discussion for ten or twelve years previous. The people of Canada are so sleepy and so narrow that you have to talk about a question for years before it enters parliament; and although this question entered parliament in 1889, we find that statute after statute have been passed, and year after year has been wasted down to 1903, and we are not one step nearer to a fast Atlantic steamship line than we were on the day the first word was spoken on the subject. Is that creditable to the people of Canada? Does it look like the action of a dominating people? Can we ever hope, with such conduct as that, to become anything but a people who will receive the contempt of the whole world? I think the people of Canada deserve the contempt which the people of the United States have shown to us. The public men of this country should be spat upon for the mean, contemptible way in which they have treated the people of Canada. We look to them to lead the people. Instead of that, the people have had to drive them with a whip. Instead of leading, they have been, like cowards, listening to hear what this or that little man would say. The leader of a people should have at least twenty-five years of out-look beyond the ordinary man, and then he should beckon the people to come on and follow him. Instead of that, we have had the political leaders of this country, little fellows, holding back until they have been horsewhipped by the country and forced to go on. The people have been bigger than their leaders. That has been the position of affairs in this country. I for one protest in the name of Canada. I want to see this country great. I do not want to go down to the grave with this country but little greater than it was when it came from the Indians. We hear a great deal of talk, but we have been making little real progress. We have been for fourteen years talking about establishing a fast Atlantic steamship line, which a company of business men would have established in twenty-four hours. I want to refer to one remark of the Prime Minister, and in doing so I do not wish to be unkind. I think the Prime Minister made a great mistake in talking about this question of a subsidy, when he spoke of the difference between $750,000, which was the subsidy for which the Allans offered a steamship service some years ago, and the $500,000 for which the Tate people afterwards offered to establish a line. Has it come to this, that on a great national question of establishing a steamship line to dominate the trade and travel of this country, a public man tells this House that $250,000 is going to be considered for one moment? Further, the Prime Minister said, even now this House would consider very gravely this question. I undertake to say that the right hon. gentleman misstated the character of this House, or else this House ought to be dissolved to-morrow, and a better class of men brought into it. If that statement is true, this House ought not to be permitted to represent the public feeling of Canada one hour; because it is entirely beneath the public sentiment of Canada as it exists to-day, and the sooner it is thrown to the winds the better; and let an able, cultivated, broad-minded class of men come in who will represent the public opinion of Canada as it exists to-day. I was sorry when the Prime Minister said that even now this House could debate about $250,000 on the great question of establishing a steamship line which might mean the dominating of the commerce of the Atlantic by Canada, instead of it pouring into New York and making that city one of the great commercial centres of the world. I want to say a word to the people, not of Ontario—I know no Ontario on this question—but the middle west of Canada, which is around the great lakes; I want to refer also to the west of Canada, and then I want to refer to the Pacific coast of Canada. There are no provinces on a great national question of this kind; and any man who debates this question from a provincial point of view shows that he has not got above the narrow provincial education of former days. I am not a Nova Scotian; I am not a maritime province man. I am a Canadian, and it is my duty to advocate a harbour on Lake Superior just as strongly and ardently as I would a harbour in Nova Scotia. If I did not do so, I would not be worthy of a seat in this parliament. I want to say that this is not a Nova Scotia or maritime province matter. It is a Canadian matter, and the fame and reputation of Canada depends on the exploiting of her maritime powers. No nation in the history of the world has ever achieved greatness without being great on the sea. England was almost a barbarous country three hundred years ago, and she had to whip Spain and Holland and France in succession in order to triumph on the sea. When she did that she became the great wealthy power of the world. Spain was great when she was a commercial power. So was Holland. So was Venice when all the ships of the world sought her ports. Go back to the very dawn of time, and you will find that the nations that were great were great in commerce. We ought all to be students, and there is only one book from which men can learn anything worth learning; that is the book in which human experience is put down. That book is the book of all—history. It tells us, if we will learn, that our country, in order to be great, must master the commerce of this continent; and how can we pretend to do that unless we can establish a fast line of steamships of our own and capture the passenger traffic? Here is the Prime Minister going over this country talking about our being a young nation, when he cannot secure the travel, when we cannot get the men who are going to London from Canada to take a Canadian steamer. We talk about being a nation, we are nothing but scrubs, and the United States people will some day wipe us off the face of this continent. I hope that these unfortunate rumours that we hear about the corridors are not true; because if they are, all the Yankees will have to do is to make a claim for Canada and they will get every square mile of it by their boastfulness and dishonest methods in diplomacy. I refuse to believe these rumours; but if they be true, we may as well give up all commercial aspirations. But if we are to have a line of steamers, that service should be the very best. It should not be inferior to any steamship service on this continent. We should have a steamship service which will rival the great New York lines. What is the sense of talking to-day about an 18 knot service and a 20 knot service? Why not get a half a dozen of rafts and start them from Halifax? That would be just as good as an 18 knot service. I would just as lief jump into the Atlantic and swim across as take one of your 18 knot boats. Such a proposition is an insult to the Canadian people. If you establish a service inferior to any other that exists on this continent, you will hear from the maritime provinces. We have our power in this confederation, and are not to be imposed upon by any second or third-class steamship service. Let me tell the people of Ontario that they are a maritime people and they ought to exploit their great lakes and equip them in the very best fashion. In like manner should the people of the Province of Quebec look after their maritime opportunities. Let them equip the whole line of the St. Lawrence and the Bay des Chaleurs. That whole route should be covered with wharfs and furnished with the most improved system of securities to navigation, so that ships in distress could obtain shelter at any time and the world would know that the coast of Canada is the safest place on the north Atlantic in which to seek refuge. Then look at the humiliating position which we have been placed by the boastfulness of our Yankee friends. They have boasted us out of existence. What happened in London at the dinner of the Pilgrims Society the other day ? Our Commissioner, Mr. Aylesworth, had to get up and tell the British people that there was another country on this North American continent besides the United States. These Englishmen, these stupid Englishmen——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. GOURLEY. I speak of the Englishmen of the last sixty years. I am of English descent but of the great English breed before two generations ago. The last two generations are degenerates and cowards. They have had no leaders for sixty years. Since Pitt died, there has never been a great leader in England. But they have got Chamberlain to-day who is trying to galvanize and put life into the flesh and blood that is now going around in the old country in the form of human beings, and we will have a new breed of Englishmen, such as a generation ago roamed and dominated the whole world, to the glory of the British flag. That breed is coming back. We have it in Canada to perfection. The highest breed of the Saxon race to-day is in Canada. We have never become degenerate, but we have been overshadowed by the bluster and brag of the United States. I want to make ports in Halifax, St. John and Montreal that will overshadow New York, Boston and Portland, and we can do it. Talk about $250,000. Why, Mr. Speaker, if you are a wealthy man you should give a check and settle this thing in five minutes. Fancy the people of Canada haggling over a paltry $250,000, when considering the question of a national line of fast Atlantic steamers. No wonder we have been and will continue to be the laughing stock of this continent. One morning at breakfast last summer, I took up a newspaper and saw that a number of people had gathered to say good-by to the Countess of Minto, the beloved wife of the Governor General, and a lovely woman. But it was very humiliating to find that even the consort of our Governor General should have to leave our shores and go to a United States port to take passage for England. What could be more insulting to the high spirit and pride of the people of Canada than that the wife of our Governor General should have to go to New York to find her way to London ? I am imputing nothing or passing no criticism on that lady's conduct, but merely giving it as an illustration of the inferior position we occupy. I presume that the Governor General will do the same thing. My boy at the breakfast table asked me why this lady went by New York. That is the first question that suggests itself to the minds of the young people in this country. This kind of thing poisons the mind of the young. It tends to make them think little of their own country and to look upon Canadians as inferior to other people. Why should our Canadian merchants run to New York when they want to leave this country ? I have a letter from a young man, belonging to Truro, who crossed over to England, and he says he will never go to England again until we have a fast Atlantic line of steamers. He says that over at the Cecil Hotel in London there were a number of Canadians who appeared to view this thing in a different light; but the people of Ontario have never had the national pride that we feel in the maritime provinces, because if they had, we would never have had Portland made the terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway. There would have been a revolution first, but they had their spirits subjected and their souls depressed by subjection to the United States. We have never undergone that experience or occupied that position in the maritime provinces, and consequently we cannot understand why Canadians should submit to this inferiority. This young man was in London at the Cecil hotel a little while ago, and he found that every Canadian there intended crossing the Atlantic to New York. He was the only one who was taking a steamer to Halifax, and he said that he was reviled and laughed at by these Canadians from Ontario, just because they were in the presence of Americans. They thought it good form to laugh and sneer at the Nova Scotian who was sticking to the route by Halifax. He would have to leave two days earlier and arrive a day and a half later going by Canadian steamers, and he said : I will never go to the old country again until we have a fast line of steamers; and he begged me for heaven's sake to urge the parliament of the Dominion to remove this humiliation which the people of Canada have to suffer in the old country when they meet a lot of Yankees who boast of their splendid fast steamship service and ridicule Canadians.

I want to refer for a moment to the excuse which the right hon. the Prime Minister gave us for delay. The Boer war has been responsible for a lot of things. Just imagine the Premier giving the Boer war as an excuse for this long delay in establishing a fast steamship service ! Why, the Boer war started three years after he came into power. It did not start until October, 1899, and he had every chance during the preceding three years to establish that service. But what discourages me more than anything else is his statement that we must wait for naval changes. Why, from the earliest time naval changes have been going on from year to year, starting with the old Greek triremes. Suppose the Greeks had waited for modern steamers what progress would they have made ? The Prime Minister wants us to wait for two or three generations until we are all gone and will only be able to look down from a higher sphere at what is taking place here below. I know nothing that encourages me to think that this line of steamships is more to the front, than it was ten or fifteen years ago. As to naval changes we ought to establish our steamship line now, in the best fashion that the world's development in navigation will allow. Of course, naval changes will take place. When they take place, adopt them. That is what the steamship lines do, and why should we not do the same? To wait for naval changes, that might take place, is no way to meet this problem. That is but a weak excuse that the Prime Minister gives us. I hope the government will not wait for the turbine. Of course, we all hope to see the turbine developed, and made practically useful, for it will make the passage across the Atlantic a mere holiday trip, of two or three days. That is one of the splendid accomplishments we may hope for, in the future. But it is a good deal like the wireless telegraph—it will come in two or three years, perhaps five or ten years; but it will take time to perfect it. Do not, for heaven's sake, delay this line for any such chimera. It will come in good time, but, in the meantime, our fast Atlantic service will be established. Get the best line that can be attained, and get it at once. The question has been raised of an expenditure of $250,000, more or less. What is $250,000, in comparison with a scheme like this? Let us spend $5,000,000, if necessary. Why, you are giving subsidies to railways, half of which, no doubt, will be stolen. I have no doubt, that enough will be stolen out of the railway subsidies, given this year to give $5,000,000 for a fast Atlantic service. I have no interest in this mean economy. The people do not mind expending money. All we ask, is for you to keep it out of the hands of the boodlers. If it is spent honestly, let it pour out in a stream. We cannot do the work we are here to do, if we are to stop to consider a question of $250,000, in connection with a scheme to join the two continents, and give Canada a precedence throughout the world. Why, it is like a rich man talking about whether he will give ten cents or twenty-five cents to his valet—what does it matter which he gives? If you are going to get the service, you must pay for it. But what has happened? I do not want to blame the Prime Minister too much, but just think what this government of business men did. They found a contract with the Allans, when they came into power—or an offer from the Allans. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Roche) made a point about the difference between a contract and an offer. Why, even lawyers do not think of these differences. If two men meet and agree, that is a contract—a clerk can look after the matters of detail. All that was necessary, in this case, was for the government to say the word, and they could have had the fast line, at once. Then, if the Allans found that their subsidy was not enough, let them come back, and we could double it. If they still found it not enough, let them come back, and we could double it again. That is the way for men to deal with a great scheme like this, at the founding of a nation. We are not deputy reeves of a township. We stand at the creation and birth of a nation, and we must have bigger and broader ideas, if we are to prove ourselves statesmen equal to our opportunities. And what has this penny-wise-pound-foolish statesmanship led to? A few years ago we had an offer from the Allans for a line of steamships for $750,000. The government, inspired by Ontario politics—for I see the hand of Ontario in all this—wanted to cut this down. They wanted to go to the public and say: We have saved $250,000; two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! What great statesmen we are. Why in any reasonable country they would have been hooted from the political platform. But the Prime Minister—and, living so near the Atlantic as Quebec, he should have had a broader outlook and wider aspiration; but I believe he was speaking in Toronto and no doubt he felt the freezing influence of Toronto around him so his ideas contracted under the chilling influence—boasted of this saving of $250,000. It is greatly to his discredit that he introduced such an argument into the consideration of a great question like this. It was beneath the dignity of the Prime Minister of this country. I say to the Prime Minister that he should not have allowed his Ontario colleagues to interfere. He should have told them to stand by while he settled this question himself. He should have said: Go into another room and sit down until I get through with this business. But, instead of doing that he listened to them. And now, instead of accepting $750,000, the Allans come back and demand $1,500,000 for the same work. That is the result of this picayune policy of saving ten cents in connection with great national issues. It is something like our fellows—and I mention this to show that I have no sympathy with this kind of thing wherever it is found—who went down to Newfoundland to negotiate the bringing of that great island into confederation. They went there and they opened a bargain as if they were buying so much old junk. They thought that a great people like the people of Newfoundland should be content to deal with a matter of this kind on the basis of figuring out with the stub of a pencil and trying to cut off five cents here and ten cents there. Why, what would a proud province like Newfoundland do? They turned them out and have been laughing at them ever since. Why, in such a matter Canada's position was like that of a man courting a girl. He may cover her with diamonds but when he marries her they are all his own. Whatever we had given to Newfoundland would have been ours after the union. But these people had not outlook enough to see that. So are our dealings with this fast line subsidy.

Now, with reference to speed, I want first to know the speed to New York, and I want to have a line that will be one or two knots faster. It is idle for us to enter into a contract with steamers having the same speed as those to New York. That port has its advantages. It fills the mind, it fills the imagination of the world, and it will be attractive above the ports of Canada even with the same service. You have to establish in the public mind of England and Canada the fact that the service to Canada is faster than that to the United States. Therefore, I repudiate any service unless it is faster by one or two knots than that to New York. I want no more picayune, tu'penny-ha'penny bargains. Either throw the project up and say we are not equal to it, or establish it whatever it may cost. As to the port to which it is to run, let these competent steamship people determine where that is to be. We can control them, whether they go to Quebec, Halifax, Montreal or St. John. Pile on the subsidy; give them every help that they need ; let Canada settle this question, once for all, whatever it may cost. My hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) referred to the ignominy endured by the people of Canada, from the fact that the English parliamentary visitors coming to Canada, landed at New York. Of course, that is a back-handed slap at Canada. It is an advertisement to the people of Europe, and to the world, and an acknowledgment on the part of the people of Canada, that the people of the United States occupy a superior position, and we an inferior position. And that is the idea that prevails. There is no use talking about it, it prevails. The result is that to many of the English people, America is the United States. And we deserve that. Do not let us shirk our responsibility ; we are responsible for the opinion that exists in England because we have allowed the port of New York to be known all over the world. New York is in the United States and most people in the old world know of no port in America but the port of New York. That is America to them, and although we have ports here, we have stood by and let them remain unknown, and as a consequence Canada is unknown and we are responsible, we who are sitting here in parliament are responsible for the degradation of Canada, and we cannot escape that responsibility. I am determined, as far as I am concerned, to escape it ; if you want the degradation, you shall have it, but I shall have no part of it ; I shall declare to this House and to the country that we alone are responsible for the fact that Canada occupies the mean position on this continent she occupies to-day. Halifax, St. John and Montreal should be more than equal to Boston or New York if we had had men equal to Henry Clay and Daniel Webster who exploited the national resources and national fame of the United States. But we had a smaller class of men, or if we had some big men we had so many small men that they climbed on their backs and kept them from carrying out their ideas. Of course the Liberal party are more responsible for that ; the hon. gentlemen were chiefly concerned whether napkins should be washed once or twice a week, and whether a gentleman should have more than one champagne glass for each of his guests. These were the great questions that occupied the attention of parliament year by year, when these great topics to which I have referred should have been up for discussion. With regard to the term for which the contract should endure, some gentlemen say you should make this contract for ten years. That is too short. How can you expect a great company to invest millions of money on a contract that will run for only ten years ? You can scarcely get a great enterprise started inside of ten years. You should make your contract for a long period and in a liberal spirit, so that the company entering the contract would know from the start that they were in the hands of sympathetic friends, of people who desired to help them at every turn and not to worry and harass them. We should make a contract for twenty or thirty years in order that the company may feel sure of a safe and growing business and that no shortness of time would deprive them of the advantages they might expect from the exploitation of their business, and that no other company should be able to come in and for some little question of a million and a half dollars of subsidy cut their trade from under them. What a tremendous thing it would be for Canada to have a powerful company go into this business and exploit it ! Equip your ships with the greatest luxury and comfort so that they will be superior to anything in New York, and then if necessary, build one or two short lines from here to Halifax or St. John, and make your coaches and dining cars on these lines the finest in the world, so that every man from England or any European country returning from New York would say : The finest railway and steamship service in America is the Canadian service. Let us spread that idea abroad whether it costs one million dollars or ten million dollars and then we shall have done something for Canada. Would it not have been better fifteen or twenty years ago to have grasped that idea and to have borrowed $20,000,000 for this purpose? It might have given us thousands of millions of a return, given us population, given us fame and reputation and lifted us from the petty position of little provinces into a great nation. The only way in which we will ever get to be a nation is by adopting comprehensive measures of this kind. Sir, I am the smallest man in the county of Colchester, the man with the most limited vision, with the narrowest ideas ; my constituents are all my superiors in education, intellect, brain and everything of that kind, and therefore I am surprised when I find a number of members of parliament up here who seem not the equals of the average citizen of the province of Nova Scotia. I expected when I came to this parliament to see men of vast learning, and vast outlook, and vast research, and vast capacity for statesmanship. There are such men in Canada and perhaps there are such men in this House, but they have not exhibited that liberality and breadth of sentiment in this matter that I could have desired. I hope the time will come when in discussing matters of this kind men from Ontario and from Manitoba will be the first to rise and say: This is a maritime question, let us join together to further it. A maritime question is really more important to a man in Manitoba or the inland country than to the people near the sea, because what is the use of people in the inland provinces raising vast crops if they have not the easiest communication to the sea and the best communication across the sea to carry their products to the markets of the world? I hope that hereafter we will not see maritime province members indulging in these discussions; it is wrong—gentlemen from the west, from Ontario, should be the first on their feet to urge the claims I have been urging to-day. That I hope will be the character of the public men in this country in a few years. If the question under discussion has reference to a harbour at Midland or on Lake Superior it will be the men from the maritime provinces and the men from British Columbia who will support it. It will be these men who will urge the opening of communication with the western prairies via Hudson's bay in order that the grain of the west may reach Europe by that route instead of dribbling south through the United States. That should be the ambition and the hope of every man in this country, and, so far as I am concerned, I will never cease advocating these opinions because until we accept them we can never be anything but little, scattered and disjointed provinces.

Hon. Wm. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Mr. Speaker, I protest against the expression which my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has used in reference to the want of intelligence of the Englishmen.

Mr. GOURLEY. I meant those of the last sixty years; of the last two or three generations.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Let us take the House of Commons and the House of Lords in England to-day and you will find there representative men equal to any House in Europe or any other place, and it would be well for us, and well also for the hon. member for Colchester, if he had the intelligence and the logical acumen that these people possess. Certainly they would not wander from Dan to Beersheba as the hon. gentleman has done.

Mr. GOURLEY. That is the trouble with them; they have blinders on and never see anything between these blinders. God help my soul there is not one of them fit to drive a band of sheep across the country.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I am pretty well acquainted with the people of Colchester county of both parties, and I must say I do not know one man of either party in Colchester county capable of making the speech which we have listened to from the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) to-day. He and I agree on one thing, that the fast line should be kept out of politics, and that both parties should unite in securing the fastest and the best service, and I think it is a most fortunate thing for the Dominion of Canada that we did not engage in a fast line eight or nine or ten years ago, because if we had done so we would now be behind the age in every respect. While the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) condemns the bringing of this subject into party politics the resolution which he is going to support and for which he is going to vote makes it immediately a party question, because the resolution is brought to condemn the action of the government in not having established a fast line. I am with the hon. gentleman in his desire to keep this out of party politics, and I want to repeat that it is a fortunate thing that we did not establish a fast line before now, because now we do get it—and I think it is going to come perhaps sooner than some people expect—we will have the best and the fastest line, superior to anything that crosses from Europe to New York, and nothing else will satisfy us.

Mr. GOURLEY. If we get this fast line must we not improve it every hour and keep it up to date? If we had got it ten years ago we would have had to improve it every hour and keep it up to date. This will go on just the same. Changes will come and we will have to adopt them.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). The subject under discussion—a fast line steamship service—is one that has engaged the attention of parliament for some years, and one which has been looked upon with much favour by many Canadians interested in having ourselves as Canadians keep pace with our neighbours to the south of us.

When we consider that Halifax is 400 miles nearer old England—the world-centre of trade—than New York and that the port of Halifax is second to none in America for approach and safety when in it, I can see no reason why we should lack in enterprise, why we should not be equal to the emergency, act upon our impulses, and have a line of steamers to compete with our neighbours. It is humiliating to find Canadians, when taking a trip to England, leaving Canada and going to New York, away from the objective point, in order to find a fast line boat to accomplish such a voyage, and the same returning, when we can so readily have a service of our own. I want to see the condition of matters reversed, and we Canadians have a fast line of our own, with Halifax, so to speak, the New York of Canada, as well as the entrepot of trade, offering inducements for Americans to come to Halifax and embark for the old world, from that point, and vice versa, which we will find quite within our reach, if we set about it determined to have it.

If Halifax could only see herself as others see her, if she would free herself from that lethargy which has possessed her in the past, if she would think of the future which is hers, and bestir herself, with the determination to realize the duty she owes to herself and the country, with the great natural advantages within her grasp, she could be all she desires to be. She could be the chief depot of trade for Canada, and for enterprise and thrift a second New York.

But there is one thing that suggests itself to me, as a matter of vital importance, in connection with the protection of life and property, and that is the course these fast line boats should be required to take for the safety of the lives of fishermen engaged in the fisheries on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. The ocean track for steamers at present plying between Great Britain and Halifax is across the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, which means devastation, swift and sure, to any vessels found at anchor in the track of any of these boats moving along at a fast rate of speed. When the horizon is clear, danger from these boats can be seen and averted by signals, fog trumpets or guns, but when the fog shuts down and the storm king rides with fury on the blast, preventing the sound of the fog trumpet or gun from being heard, or when the fog prevents the discernment of the lights of an approaching ship in the distance, the ship, with her speed unabated in order to accomplish a quick passage, ruthlessly presses forward when crossing the banks, regardless of the lives of the poor fishermen. Then it is that death, swift and sure to all vessels' crews in their track is occasioned.

But for this risk, the life of the fisherman is a comparatively pleasant one. The fishermen often in conversation express themselves as being regardless of danger, feeling when at sea on board their vessels, which are seaworthy, staunch and strong, such as those composing the fleet from my county, as safe as if they were on land, and to emphasize this expression of feeling, they can truthfully and with a happy, right, good, loyal, hearty ring, sing the old familiar song :

A life on the ocean wave,
A home on the rolling deep.

Or the more pathetic one, 'Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep.' Or when the fisherman returns to his domesticated home, 'The Cottage by the Sea.'

On behalf of this class of hardy, brave fishermen, to whom much of the success of Nova Scotia depends, my county in particular, I must ask if it is not possible to have the attention of other countries called to the many risks attending fishermen on the Grand Banks when pursuing their calling, and have an arrangement made with the United States and the old world, through their respective boards of trade, and they with their respective governments, with the object of having all lines of steamers traversing the north Atlantic between America and the old world, excepting those going north of Newfoundland, take a course along the southern edge of the Grand Banks, and south of Sable island, which would carry them free of all the fogs of the banks, and the risks of icebergs, and better still, avoid the risk of the destruction, as I have stated, of the lives and property of fishermen.

I would ask the government to consider this matter very carefully, so important to our fishermen, and endeavour to effect an arrangement on the lines I have suggested.

House divided on amendment Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Amendment (Mr. Borden, Halifax) negatived.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I did not notice the absence of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), and as I am paired with him, I ask to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CALVERT. The hon. member for Queen's and Shelburne has not voted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am paired with the hon. the leader of the opposition, or otherwise I would have voted against the amendment.

THE USE OF MAIL BAGS.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). I wish to call the attention of the Postmaster General to a matter which is of sufficient importance to the Canadian public to merit the attention of this House for a few moments. During the last few days hon. members of this House will have noticed that the corridors have been flooded and covered up with an immense number of mail bags containing campaign literature. I would not object to that, if it did not interfere with the ordinary postal service of the country, but I am informed on reliable authority that the distribution of this matter through the mails is seriously interfering with our postal service. The post office of the House and the post office in the city are glutted with this matter; the railway postal cars are over-laden and, what is more serious still, newspaper publishers in Montreal have been unable to obtain mail bags in which their papers are sent to the post office for distribution to subscribers, the supply of mail bags having been 'cornered.' This is a serious state of affairs, and I would ask the Postmaster General if any complaint has come to him from newspaper publishers, or from any other citizens?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). It occurs to me, Sir, that this is no laughing matter at all. Several days ago I sent some correspondence through the mail to my home at Regina, and I received word last evening that it had never been delivered. I am informed that this has been caused by the congestion in the mail service throughout Canada, as a result of the flooding of the mails with tons, and car-loads, and cargoes of campaign literature, franked through this House, and samples of which we have seen for some days piled up in the corridors and incommoding the members generally. If the privilege that is given to members of this House to frank mail matter is to be so flagrantly abused, it seems to me that an amendment to the existing regulations has become imperative. It is rumoured also that one reason for the length of this session is to be found in the fact that the opposition have prolonged it purposely in order that they may have an opportunity of franking these car-loads of campaign literature during the session.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. SCOTT. This is not a laughing matter either, and the taxpayers of Canada will not consider it a laughing matter. One hon. gentleman on the other side of the House calculated that it costs no less than $28 a minute to keep the session of parliament going. When the taxpayers of Canada realize that it costs so much to keep this House in session, week after week and month after month, simply to allow the opposition to frank their campaign literature, these taxpayers will not consider it a laughing matter. We have evidence, day after day, of the purpose of gentlemen opposite to uselessly keep the House in session. It is true that such questions as the fast Atlantic service and provincial autonomy for the North-west Territories are questions of real importance ; but is it not a fact that for the three months, from the first of May to the end of July, our friends on the other side were simply marking time by pretending to criticise the estimates. Ever since I was a boy I have heard the members of an opposition described as being the watch-dogs of the treasury ; but surely never were there watch-dogs who could satisfy the appetite of contention propensities with such small bones as the members of this opposition were picking here for three months this summer. They took one whole night discussing, hour after hour, the matter of soft pork ; for hours on another occasion they devoted their whole time to discussing the price of two wheel-barrows, and on a third occasion they gave us their views for an entire evening on an alleged exorbitant charge of 25 cents in the cost of an axe. These may be matters of interest, but we have the Public Accounts Committee for the special purpose of considering such questions, and surely it is not meet to keep an august body, such as this House, in session week after week and month after month, discussing such picayune things. I repeat that this is no laughing matter to me, and I believe that the people of the country will not consider it a laughing matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure) has acted very properly in drawing the attention of the Postmaster General to the subject. I understand that the system followed by the Postal Department is that, as a matter of courtesy, the newspaper offices are allowed a certain number of these bags, which are the property of the Crown. They are taken to the office of publication and there utilized for the ordinary circulation of the newspaper. It seems that a newspapers publisher in Montreal, who is engaged in the laudable work of printing and publishing these tons and car-loads of campaign literature, has taken illegitimate advantage of the courtesy which is extended to newspaper publishers, and through their connivance this literature is sent in the bags to the members of the opposition here for the purpose of being franked, and we see it stacked around the corridors, and glutting the post office here and glutting the post office in the city. This is done to the detriment of other newspaper publishers who are deprived of the use of these bags which they need in their ordinary business. I trust that the Postmaster General will do his duty in this matter, and if it becomes necessary, that he shall confiscate these bags and their contents and allow each newspaper publisher to receive his fair proportion of them.

Mr. W. McCREARY (Selkirk). As a sample of the inconvenience to which the general public are put, I may state that the Winnipeg newspapers—the 'Free Press,' the 'Tribune' and the 'Telegram'—which should have been here two or three days ago, have not yet reached Ottawa. I made inquiry as to the cause of this, and I was informed that they had left Winnipeg all right, but they had failed to reach here on account of this undue over-crowding of the mail service of the country. The files have had to be put away without these copies of the Winnipeg papers, and members from the west find it a great inconvenience now, as it will be a great deprivation in the future when they have to consult these files. I trust that the Postmaster General will do something to remedy this.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). Complaint has been made to the department that certain newspaper publishers are not able to get their proportionate supply of these bags, because of the great numbers of them which are otherwise in use. I may explain to the House that for the convenience of the newspaper publishers it is the practice to allow them to have in their possession a number of these mail bags so as to enable them to forward their newspapers to the post offices in a convenient form. In that way, newspaper publishers of Canada are convenienced in the transmission of their papers to their ordinary subscribers. It appears that one leading publisher in the city of Montreal has improperly used these bags and diverted them to a purpose for which they were never intended. He has done that to the inconvenience of his fellow-publishers, and to the detriment of the rights of the public in general. The department is to-day unable to supply other publishers with bags for the transaction of their legitimate business.

Mr. CLARKE. How many bags has this Montreal publisher used in this way ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Thousands, I should say. My attention was called to the matter to-day by my officers, and I am informed that the deputy minister has been endeavouring to obtain possession of some of these bags. The publishers of 'La Presse' of Montreal cannot be supplied with bags.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are they sending out literature too ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what they are doing. They are engaged in the publication of a public journal, and they have their rights as well as other publishers. My hon. friends have asked for information, and I am giving it. This question has been brought to the attention of the department in the ordinary course of business. Yesterday the supply of bags available at Montreal was exhausted, and one publisher could not get a single bag because of the absorption of the supply by hundreds and thousands, I expect by the one publisher in question, who has diverted those bags from the proper use for which they were entrusted to him to this illegitimate and scandalous transaction. If the hon. gentlemen who control these bags would be good enough to remove their contents and let us have the bags, then the business of the post office could be carried on. But I am not prepared to go to thousands of dollars of expense to purchase additional bags—even the making of them would involve a considerable time—simply to enable a procedure of this kind to be carried out. It does seem to me that a very grave abuse has been made of the privileges of parliament in this procedure. I doubt if parliament ever intended that tons and tons and carloads and trainloads of printed matter should be printed in different places in this country and sent post free to the city of Ottawa, to a member of parliament, under the provisions of the Act which allows such matter to come free; and that this same privilege should be so abused in the method which is now being adopted. To-day the postmaster of the city of Ottawa has made a complaint to the department that he is unable to carry on the legitimate work of his office owing to the congestion of the building by the accumulations of mail matter there—this literature, as it is called, which has been dumped there in carloads every day. Moreover, the difficulty cannot be removed by any addition to the staff at the Ottawa post office or at the House of Commons post office. The cars have not the capacity to carry away this stuff. The postal cars are of limited capacity, and we have been filling them to accommodate hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Could not some of the private government cars be used ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And yet in spite of every effort that is being made, the accumulation is gaining upon us, and the public service is being prejudiced.

Mr. CLARKE. Mountains of information.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whatever may be in it, I do not know. I am told that hon. gentlemen themselves made a very excellent use of a large portion of this literature, having for some reason consigned it to the flames. I do not know whether the balance is intended to be so used; but perhaps it is about as good a use as it could be put to. On that I offer no opinion. Speaking from a party standpoint, I regret what has been destroyed, because the more freely it could be circulated the better it would be for the Liberal party. Speaking departmentally, which is the only way in which I speak now, I would say that hon. gentlemen opposite are as much concerned as the government in the proper management of the postal service, and I think it is inconsiderate on their part to deluge the service with this immense quantity of mail matter, which is treated as all other mail matter without any partiality. Every letter that goes through the post office receives the same treatment, without priority; and this literature, which everybody knows is of no very great importance, is for the time being inconveniencing the officers in the carrying on of the legitimate work of the post office, which is so directly concerned with the convenience of the public generally.

Mr. INGRAM. I infer from the remarks of the hon. Postmaster General that the opposition is sending out this literature. I know that my county is flooded with the speeches of the hon. Minister of Finance, and I would like to know what channel they come through.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not heard anything about the speeches of the Finance Minister. I am now alluding to these enormous accumulations that are seen in the corridors and passages of this building, that have blocked the business of the post offices and the railway mail service of Canada. I am speaking of that literature, be it from one side of the House or the other. But this accumulation arises from the particular class of literature to which I have alluded, which has been despatched in postal bags to the whip of the opposition, to be redistributed by him throughout Canada. I want these bags, as the property of the Crown, to be forthwith returned to the Post Office Department. Unless they are delivered there, I shall have to exercise the authority of a Minister of the Crown and take possession of them. I beg to say, in all seriousness, that we are to-day without mail bags for the proper convenience of the subscribers to the press of this country. We have sufficient of that class of property, but it is unfortunately at this moment out of the control of the government. Enormous numbers of these bags are under the control of an hon. member of this House, and I ask him here to return those bags forthwith——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Lay them on the Table ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Or I will take steps to take possession of them by force of law. We do not desire in the slightest degree to interfere with the use of the franking privilege.

Mr. GOURLEY. When does the hon. gentleman propose to take possession of them ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am giving notice now. If I am asked to specify a time, I will do so. I will give the hon. gentleman to-day to deliver those bags to the proper officers, and if they are not delivered by Monday morning, I will take steps to take possession of them.

Mr. COCHRANE. Don't get mad.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not at all. I propose to try to protect the crown in its own rights, and in doing that to protect the citizens of the country in their legitimate rights. I maintain that the public of Canada are not called upon to submit to the inconvenience and the injury to which they are now subject because of this gross violation of the privileges of parliament. When a member of this House finds himself in possession of mail bags which are marked the property of the crown, the property of the Post Office Department, it is his duty at the earliest moment to return them to the government to whom they belong; and when they come to him illegitimately, as they did in this case, that duty is a much more pressing one on his part. It was a gross violation of the privilege granted to the publisher of that newspaper to divert these bags from the purpose for which they were entrusted to him; and it is my intention not to allow that same publisher any more to be entrusted with bags until guarantees are given that they will not be diverted from the use to which they ought properly to be put.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. the Postmaster General has given us an exhibition which is hardly becoming his dignity and hardly worthy of the office he fills. He has spoken of that illegitimate and scandalous use of bags.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Illegal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it illegal or improper to do what the law provides may be done ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What does the law provide may be done ?

Mr. SPROULE. It provides that any matter may be sent free to any member of this House during the session of parliament, and any matter, franked by any member, shall go out free, whether it goes out in single papers or by the bag full.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would the hon. gentleman contend that it is legal for a publisher, who had possession of these bags, to make use of them in the way he is doing ?

Mr. SPROULE. The law provides that publishers of newspapers shall have the right to send here mail matter, and by regulation of the department, for the sake of convenience, bags are furnished for that purpose.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were not.

Mr. SPROULE. And he is not using them improperly or illegally.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is.

Mr. SPROULE. Mail matter going out of the post office franked by any member of this parliament, whether it goes out in single papers or by the dozen, or in mail bags, is going out in accordance with the law and is neither illegal nor scandalous. The members of the opposition are exercising their undoubted right in sending the matter through this post office, when franked as the law provides. That is all they are doing. Reference is made to the fact that in the corridors large piles of these bags are found, may they not as well be found there as in the Public Works Department, or some of the other departments, where civil servants, who are paid by the country, are employed to address and mail them ? I am informed that such is the case.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is not one iota of foundation for that statement. Not one bag nor one-half a bag has been sent out from the Public Works Department nor has any employee of that department been engaged in any such work.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman deny that there are not employees in some of the departments sending out these speeches ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot speak, any more than can the hon. gentleman, for other parts of the city. He mentioned the Public Works Department in particular, and I say here, in the presence of everybody, that not one bag nor one-half bag, nor any literature, has been mailed from that department, and no employee connected with that department has been engaged on any such work.

Mr. SPROULE. I was credibly informed——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SPROULE. I was creditably informed that such was the case, but of course I accept most unreservedly the denial of the hon. minister. I was told that in some of the departments this is being done, and the Department of Public Works was mentioned as one of them. However, whether they come from that department or not, we know for a fact that speeches of the leader of the government and the Minister of Finance and others were sent out by the thousands, franked by members of parliament. They are not sent through the post office in this building, and therefore are not to be found in the corridors, but they are sent out from elsewhere, and I think improperly, because they should go from this post office, if franked, which, I am told, they are. They should be sent from here, but they are not at present ; and the only difference is that in the one case you see the matter in these corridors and in the other you do not. I am told that while the Postmaster General says that these bags are being sent out by the thousand, there were only all told 140 bags in the corridors.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether there are more than 140 bags there at the one time, but I am told that there are large quantities in store at Ottawa waiting until this great mass in the corridors is removed, and then they will be set in their places. They are coming up in wagon loads at all hours of the day. The accumulation may be only 140 at this moment, but I expect that thousands of them have been taken away.

Mr. SPROULE. There is not a member of this House who would believe for one moment that these bags reached the number of one thousand.

Mr. SCOTT. There are several thousands.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) should be the last man in the world to object to the distribution of knowledge, because I do not know of anybody who needs it more. And hon. members should remember that the country requires information to-day more than anything else. Are these hon. gentlemen afraid to let their light shine before the world and their deeds be known ? It is because they dare not let what is taking place in this House be made known throughout the country, that they object to this so strenuously. The hon. gentleman has said that this thing has tended to lengthen the session a month. That is not the case. What has lengthened the session ? Why, the government business has not been down until quite lately. We have been in session over seven months and the government has not got its work all down yet. Only a few nights ago the last supplementary estimates came down and we were told that there are more coming down with regard to the Quebec bridge. When did the railway subsidies come down ? Only a few days ago. Supplementaries containing over $10,000,000 only came down the last two weeks. yet forsooth the opposition are to be held responsible for the length of the session. Surely the hon. gentleman could not expect the country to take any stock in such a statement. The hon. gentleman spoke of what the increased length of the session cost the country. It does not cost the country a dollar more. An amount is voted for the session and whether the session be long or short, it practically makes very little difference. It is the poor members of parliament who have to suffer.

Mr. BELCOURT. What about employees who are paid by the day ?

Mr. SPROULE. They are paid a very small sum.

Mr. BELCOURT. Does that not increase the cost of the session ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it true or not that the Postmaster General pays these men $25 a month at the post office for stamping and sending out that literature ?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no man in the service of the Post Office Department who is paid so small a sum as $25 per month.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. When you left the Chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, we were dealing with the question which was raised by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) with regard to what he was pleased to call, and what the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) afterwards termed, a scandalous and illegitimate use of the Post Office Department. No more ill-advised words could be spoken by a minister of the Crown. As members of parliament, we are here to do the work of the country, and what we are doing is within our undoubted right. The law provides that mail matter shall be sent free from this House to any portion of the country, when it is franked by a member of parliament and put in the custody of the Post Office Department. That done, the department is bound to take care of it until it is either delivered to the party to whom it is addressed or returned to the party from whom it is sent. In view of this, the statement made by the Postmaster General as to what he would do or would not do seemed to me rather unbecoming. I am glad that the Postmaster General, who was absent when I began to speak, is now present. I hope he is in better humour than he seemed to be before six o'clock. It was said—I think, by Mark Twain—that if you fill an Englishman up with roast beef and porter you may even venture to approach him with a subscription list. I hope that now that the Postmaster General has had a good dinner he has come here in a less belligerent and more amiable mood than he seemed to be in before recess.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am always amiable.

Mr. SPROULE. And I hope he has forgotten the threat he made that if, by Monday morning these bags are not away, he would do so and so. Any attempt on his part to carry out that threat might be attended with serious consequences. In the first place it might obstruct the corridors of the House of Commons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid it would.

Mr. SPROULE—because, as members of parliament we have certain rights. The government is bound to provide us with conveniences for doing the work of the people which we have been sent here to do. That was our stuff that is in those bags, and it has been duly franked and put in possession of the Post Office Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not franked yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes a good portion of it is franked and is there waiting for the Postmaster General's Department to take it away. But, because the hon. gentleman has not provided enough assistance in the office, it cannot be taken away. But it has been handed over to his department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it has not.

Mr. SPROULE. It is there to be taken away. Well, if the hon. gentleman's threat is carried out, what would be the result? These corridors would be blocked. We have not enough room. We have not the luxurious apartments of the Postmaster General and his friends taking up practically one-third of the room of the House of Commons. We have a little 7 x 9 room for our accommodation. Lazarus like, we are trying to subsist on the crumbs that drop from the rich man's table. If the Postmaster General should endeavour to carry out his threat, I have no doubt there would be resistence. There is too much of the Anglo-Saxon domination in this part of the country to allow that threat to be carried out without some effort to prevent it. Every man who is a man stands up for his rights. It is said that even a worm will turn if you tread upon it. Perhaps the Postmaster General feels that he can turn to his friend the Minister of Militia, and get the militia turned out to support him. But let me remind him that that would involve heavy expense which the city would have to pay, and they would hold him to serious account for it. It would hardly increase his popularity. So, I think that after serious consideration he will hardly carry out that threat. At any rate, we hope he will not.

One of the hon. members on the other side said that we had destroyed a lot of literature. We did dstroy a lot of literature—we are free to admit it. And why did we destroy it? Because, through some mistake, the figures were wrongly given, and to put those figures before the people would have been to mislead them. So, we destroyed that literature, every sheet of it. Would the Postmaster General desire that it should be sent out to mislead the people and give them a wrong impression. We thought it more honourable, more manly to destroy it.

Mr. SCOTT. Are there no mistatements in what is going out?

Mr. SPROULE. We believe not.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) pointed out——

Mr. SPROULE. To the best of our knowledge and belief, the statements made in the literature now going out are correct. But we would not send out literature containing errors which we knew to be errors. Now, I say that, as members of parliament, we have a right to send out this literature. It is now the property of the parties to whom the different pieces are addressed. It is franked and addressed and in the possession of the Post Office Department, and the Post Office Department is bound to deliver it or return it to us. Why is not that literature sent away? We are told, when we endeavour to get it away, that the Post Office Department has not a sufficient number of hands to do the work, and the Postmaster General will not allow them to engage more.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not true.

Mr. SPROULE. I believe it is absolutely true.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then the hon. gentleman believes something that is absolutely untrue. The staff of the department is ample. The trouble is that the cars are not sufficient and the train accommodation is over-taxed. It would take train after train to carry the stuff. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been sending away carloads every day.

Mr. SPROULE. I am only telling the hon. gentleman what is told us.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) often rises and says that he is credibly informed so and so. Just before six o'clock he said that he was informed something about the Public Works Department which turned out to be absolutely untrue. Yet he said he was 'credibly informed.' Now, he is 'credibly informed.' Will he give me the name of his informant?

Mr. SPROULE. That is a handsome request on the part of the Postmaster General. I wonder that he is not ashamed to ask it. Would he want to penalize one of his own employees because of a statement made by him that there were not enough hands in the Post Office Department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman name his informant?

Mr. SPROULE. I made a statement which I believed to be true, and where I am known I will match my reputation for veracity against that of the Postmaster General any day. I do not come here and make statements that I do not believe to be correct, and I deny the right of the Postmaster General to contradict me. I made the statement on the authority of the chief whip (Mr. Taylor) who sits beside me, made to me fifteen minutes before. So, was not I justified in repeating that statement? I have a character to maintain, and I will not allow any man to call my veracity in question even though he be called the Postmaster General.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. I am within my rights. I made a statement before six o'clock, that I was credibly informed that certain material was being sent through the mails from the Public Works Department. I have made inquiries since, and I find that the stuff is being sent out, but that I happened to be wrong about the department from which it was going. It is being sent out in large quantities, and I am told that it is being addressed by the civil servants who are paid by the country. On the other hand, we are paying for this work out of our own scanty means, and we are working night and day to send out this literature to the country. We are doing only what it is our right and our duty to do, and, instead of being abused, we ought to be commended for it. We are doing what is strictly within our legal right. But what did hon. gentlemen opposite do in this matter of abusing the franking privilege. Sir Richard Cartwright sent out, I was told, about a ton of matter. It was sent out between sessions. It was not in any sense an official document of this parliament, but a speech made on the public platform, printed here and sent out under the frank of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, sent out improperly, wrongfully, illegally. On the other hand, we are doing what the law gives us a perfect right to do, and no more. It is true we were mislead by the government. We began to send this literature out because we were mislead into believing that an election was coming on.

Mr. FRASER. Now we have it.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the right of the opposition to try to enlighten the people of the country. Are hon. gentlemen opposite afraid that the people will be too much enlightened, that the record of the government will be placed too plainly before the people. When we began to send out this literature the government got scared and backed out, and now we are told they are not going to the country. It is said that we have lengthened the session, adding greatly to the cost. Is that the case? What does the hon. gentleman know about it who made that statement? Is it not the fact that we are here practically by the job —we get $1,500 for the session, whether that session last thirty days, or nine months, or a year. We get no more and no less; it entails no additional charge on the country. The Speaker of the House gets the same salary whether the session is two months or twelve months; so do the Clerk and the Assistant Clerk and the other officials. Who gets what additional cost is imposed on the country by the increased length of the session? A few of these little pages, the messengers and the sessional clerks and writers, who are paid by the day, these poor people who are dependent upon their daily labour for their subsistence, and the government begrudges them even the few days of additional work they get by reason of the increased length of the session. The page boys get $1.50 a day, and the government would rather cut them off from that; the same thing applies to the messengers and the sessional writers. The allegation of increased cost is entirely incorrect and misleading. I said before and I say again that we should be rather commended for our industry. We are engaged in an onerous, arduous, honest and faithful work; we are distributing the records of parliament, which should be always acceptable, and no men should be more pleased to find them distributed to the electors of the country, who must after a while give their verdict, than the hon. gentlemen opposite. Is that an improper or a wrong work or one for which the opposition should be abused? I say it is not, and I only ask that the government should give us as an opposition fair-play. We are only exercising the rights to which we are entitled by virtue of our position as representatives of the people. We are doing no injustice to the government in exercising these rights. If they do not provide accommodation for us to do our work in any other place than the corridors of this building, we must do it in the corridors, and if the mail bags of the country will not hold these papers we will have to empty them in the corridors, because they must be handled by the Post Office Department whether the government likes it or not; that belongs to the people. It is unfair to blame the opposition for doing no more than what they are sent to do by the country and the stigma is cast on the electors rather than on the representatives. I can tell the Postmaster General and his colleagues that when the time comes the people will resent that stigma, and that they will have to settle with the people and not with us for the tirade of abuse they have heaped on us because we have endeavoured to enlighten the people on matters on which it is our duty to enlighten them.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Burrard). I do not think I can be charged with taking up much of the time of this House. As a representative of the west, a man who lives 3,000 miles from here, I protest at the way in which the business of the House is being kept back by people who certainly should know better. One hon. gentleman has sat in this House for five and twenty years; during this session I have sat in the House every day except three, and I have never heard any little question of business discussed that the hon. gentleman did not enlarge upon it. There is not a member in this House who took up as much time as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman talks only about what he knows, it is no wonder he does not talk much.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I do not think it is right or fair that we who live a long distance from here and have other things to look after should be kept here to hear the empty vapourings of people who want to air their views in which no one is interested. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to sit here as long as any good is being done, but I cannot see how any good is being done in a case of this kind. A statement was made a few minutes before six o'clock that there are 140 bags in the corridor. To my personal knowledge there are 735 bags around this House, all full of this literature. I do not object to this literature, but I do say that it is an abuse of the franking system. Perhaps, as a young member, I should not say that kind of thing, but I do not think the law was intended to cover a case of this kind, whether the literature is sent out either by the government or by the opposition. These bags average 90 pounds each, and if the postage on their contents was paid by the men who should pay for it out of their own pockets, it would cost $2,940 to pay for what is now being franked. I am told that for the last 40 days an average of 150 bags a day, filled with this literature, have gone out. That is some 6,000 bags, and taking five bushels to the bag, we have 30,000 bushels, and with 1,000 bushels to the carload we have 30 carloads of literature which have been sent out from here at the expense of the people of this country. I have heard hon. gentlemen denounce in unmeasured terms the small salaries paid to railway clerks and employees. I quite agree that the railway clerks should be well paid, for I know many railway clerks who have to go into a car piled to the ceiling with this literature; they are expected to do work in that car and are paid a small salary for doing it. Members should pay for the literature which they send out; if I have literature to send out, I will pay for it myself, and every man should do the same thing. The franking privilege is meant to extend only to the ordinary courtesy of sending parliamentary papers to constituents.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). We have heard a good deal about the mail bags, and now we have had a lesson from what I might call one of the wind-bags.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BOYD. I take it back, but I must say that when the hon. gentleman or any other new member of this House undertakes to belittle the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) he undertakes something that neither he nor any other man can do in this country. That hon. gentleman had a reputation in this House long before the hon. gentleman who has just spoken was ever heard of, and he will have a reputation after many who are now criticising him will have passed out of the public eye. Returning to the question, I understand that under the Act we have a right to send any parcel up to four pounds and the Post Office Department is bound to accept it and take care of it. We have not in any way exceeded the rights which we possess. If any one wishes to dispute what I am about to say, let it be submitted to the Committtee on Privileges and Elections or any other committee and see if we cannot prove that for every day almost of this session, or at least since literature commenced to be sent out, the Liberals have sent out from 25 to 50 bags. All of this has been stamped, and in every way the Liberals have been taking advantage of their rights; yet now, when our literature is being held back because we are not able to get it out on account of their literature, the hon. Postmaster General, forsooth, is going to take the bags and distribute them. We will wait until we see him. The Liberals have sent out a much larger quantity of literature than have the Conservatives. 250,000 copies of the Premier's speech on the transcontinental railway have been sent broadcast through this country, bearing the franks of hon. gentlemen opposite. We are sending out the speeches of our leader and of the hon. gentleman whom our friends opposite admired and still admire, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, so that the people of the country may have that side of the question also. Then, in addition to the speeches that are being sent out from Ottawa, I understand that the Montreal 'Herald' is having some hundreds of thousands of the speeches of the hon. gentlemen distributed amongst other Liberal papers through the country and inclosed as a supplement, thereby taking advantage of the mails in order to distribute these speeches among the people.

Do we hear the hon. Postmaster General arising and finding fault with that? No, not at all. These are things to be investigated, and while they are emptying the bags we will be there to see. Hon. gentlemen talk about a lengthy session, forsooth. We have had a session the like of which has never been known in the history of this country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have voted away more millions than has ever been voted away in any session in days gone by. It is hard to believe that it would be possible for men in their sound senses to think of voting away $120,000,000 for a railway. Then we have had a railway Bill that took up two months of the session, followed by a Redistribution Bill, some of these important measures being brought down three months after the House met. The House was called together months after it should have assembled. It was not called together until March 12 thus subjecting to inconvenience every man coming from the outlying districts of this country. If the government did not know that, they should have known it. They have taken advantage of the members of this House in bringing them here at the time they did, yet we hear hon. gentlemen getting up and making the statements that we have listened to to-day. The Conservative party will be prepared to justify before the public every action they have taken. Hon. gentlemen opposite may bring on the election to-morrow or the next day or the week after, and we will be prepared to go on any platform and before any public audience in this country and discuss every question, and we will also be round when they are emptying the mail bags.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will not be greatly surprised to have this question thrust upon you this afternoon by hon. gentlemen opposite who sit on the back benches, but you will be greatly surprised at the attitude assumed by the hon. Postmaster General and Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if, after reflection ; if, after he has had a few hours to think over this matter, he thinks that he has cut an unenviable figure ? I ask the hon. gentleman just where he is going to draw the line, where the franking privilege will be misused and where those using it will be within the limit ? Will the hon. gentleman be the judge as between the number of speeches that have been sent out upon this side of the House or upon that side of the House? Is there any limit that the hon. gentleman can fix, or any rule that he will submit ? I will sit down while he answers the question, because I think it would be very useful for the country to know. The hon. gentleman will not undertake to make a statement as to where the limit shall be drawn in order that one may not exceed it on one side or the other, or that there shall be no abuse of the privilege by members on either side of the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware that I have said to any hon. gentleman that he was not at liberty to exercise the franking privilege. Parliament leaves it to each hon. gentleman to exercise the franking privilege in accordance with the true spirit of the Act. That is not the real subject under discussion. The question came up as to the shortage of mail bags for the press, and I stated that the reason of the shortage was that the courtesy of the department had been disregarded by a leading paper, which had received a certain quantity of bags for the proper use of the publisher, but which had been improperly used. I say that again. I say that we have allowed this newspaper, bags for the purpose of inclosing their own papers to be sent to the post office for transmission amongst their subscribers, and that the publisher has abused that privilege, because, instead of using the bags for that purpose, he has diverted them to this other purpose, withdrawn them from circulation and thus interfered with the right of co-publishers, making it impossible for the department to supply bags to other publishers of papers for the purpose of distributing their papers. The use of bags for the purpose to which these have been put is contrary to the purpose for which they were loaned. These bags belong to the department, and unless they are returned the department will take steps to repossess itself of them.

Mr. CLANCY. We have heard the explanation of the hon. gentleman. This little piece of theatricals has all been over a few mail bags.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Thousands of them.

Mr. CLANCY. What kind of facilities is the hon. gentleman giving this country, when he has only a few mail bags ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The best it ever had ; far better than the Tories gave it.

Mr. CLANCY. He is telling us that they have a few mail bags.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Thousands.

Mr. CLANCY. He says a thousand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I say thousands.

Mr. CLANCY. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman is again wide of the mark. Even if it is 2,000, it does not affect the question. I ask the hon. gentleman if he, as Postmaster General, and his department are not bound to furnish all the facilities necessary to carry the mail matter from any newspaper office in this country that may be legitimate mail matter ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No ; there is nothing whatever in the law compelling us to take mail matter from the publishers. We carry it from the post office when it is delivered there.

Mr. CLANCY. That is what the hon. gentleman is doing now. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the franking privilege does not belong to the members of this House alone. During the session of parliament it belongs to every elector in Canada. He may send his mail matter within the limits prescribed by the regulations of the department to this House. What has been done by this publisher ? He has complied literally with the law. He has not violated a single particle of the law, and he has done this for the convenience of the Post Office Department. Is the hon. gentleman going to confess that he has run out of a few mail bags ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Thousands.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has run out of thousands ?

Mr. COCHRANE. No, he has not.

Mr. CLANCY. The country will know that the hon. gentleman's department is well equipped. If he is not prepared to cope with the Montreal 'Herald' and to carry the speeches of the right hon. First Minister and of the hon. Minister of Finance—all properly within the law, and no person is complaining of it—because he has a number of mail bags distributed over the country, the people of the country will understand how well equipped the hon. gentleman's department is. If these few mail bags are not returned to him, he says there will be a fuss over it.

Mr. CLARKE. Call in the police.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) says call in the police. I think the police might very well be called in to take charge of the hon. Postmaster General. I tell the hon. gentleman he has no more right to empty those mail bags than any other person has, and I do not think the hon. gentleman will undertake to empty them, notwithstanding his threat. The hon. gentleman is greatly disturbed over a few mail bags. Does the hon. gentleman know that two or three years ago in the Department of Agriculture the stamp of the hon. Minister of Agriculture was used improperly and illegally for the purpose of sending out literature? Does the hon. gentleman know that when some one stated that between 2,000 and 3,000 copies of the speech the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) had delivered at Massey Hall had been sent out, that the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce stated himself that it was more nearly 10,000 copies? Yet this was done right under the eye of the Postmaster General, and with his sanction and connivance the law was violated.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is wholly without foundation.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman had better not make that statement, or I will take occasion before this House adjourns to produce the frank of the hon. minister of whom I have mentioned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman said, that with my knowledge and contrivance—my knowledge and connivance——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And contrivance too.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman said that with my knowledge and connivance the Minister of Trade and Commerce had transmitted large numbers of copies of his speech at Massey Hall through the post office. I do not know what the Minister of Trade and Commerce may have done; he will answer for himself; but I do know that no minister has ever, with my knowledge or connivance violated the franking privilege.

Mr. CLANCY. I am glad that the Postmaster General made that qualification, and has found a means of escape. I will take his word for it, as I am bound to do; but I want to ask if the Postmaster General was not a little less vigilant in that case than in this. Did those who are now complaining call his attention to that matter?

Mr. CLARKE. Not a bit of it?

Mr. CLANCY. Not a bit of it. Will the Postmaster General be a little fair now. What is there wrong in this? Who has violated any law; who has violated even good taste, if it be a matter of taste? I want to tell the Postmaster General that it is not costing the country a dollar.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it is.

Mr. CLANCY. The taxpayers are not paying one cent extra for this. The Postmaster General has not increased his staff in the post office here; there has not been an additional employee brought into the service, and therefore it has cost the people nothing. The Postmaster General knows perfectly well that a rush of matter like this passing through the mails temporarily. costs the country nothing. Therefore it costs the people of Canada not one farthing for the distribution of that literature. Where is the complaint then? Is the Postmaster General or the leader of the House going to intercept that knowledge which is going to the country?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Knowledge?

Mr. CLANCY. Yes; knowledge on a great question is being sent out broadcast, and this is the first time in the history of Canada that any one has been told they are sending out worthless literature, when they are sending out the literature of which these gentlemen opposite themselves are guilty. The hon. gentleman cannot silence public opinion or public sentiment. Neither can he intervene, and shake out this mail matter from the mail bags into the corridors. If he does, his employees will have to pick it up again and send it to the people. The House has never witnessed such a scene as we have witnessed this afternoon. I hope the Postmaster General will profit by the exhibition he made here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Don't have any such hope.

Mr. CLANCY. He gave us an exhibition of bad taste and bad temper.

Mr. CLARKE. It was an abuse of the privileges of the House.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend says it is an abuse of the privileges of the House, and I say it is not becoming to the dignity of a minister, who only a few nights ago told us how well his department was managed, to now come down and announce that Canada has run short of mail bags, and that he cannot possibly furnish mail bags to a great newspaper in this country. Let me tell him that it is the duty of a Postmaster General, whether he be Liberal or Conservative, to meet the demands for distributing such literature, whether he may agree with it or not. If the Postmaster General is short of mail bags he had better get more. An apology is due from him at this moment; an apology is due from him, that with all the resources at his disposal, he is not able to meet the requirements of the mail service of the country, and I trust that he and his friends will not again precipitate such a scene in a hurry.

Mr. S. HUGHES (Victoria). The members on this side of the House were watching the countenance of the Postmaster General for an hour or two before he broke loose. We could not understande what was the m atter with him.

Mr. CLARKE. He was incubating.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Possibly he was. The whole House was admiring the genial countenance of the Prime Minister, but the Postmaster General looked dumb; there was something weighing him down, and at last we discovered what it was. He told us in his speech, that we were using thousands of mail bags, that it was scandalous, that it was an abuse of the privileges of the House, and then he stated that it would take a special train to carry these circulars up and down the country. Let me tell the Postmaster General, that these circulars were put into those mail bags for the convenience of his officers, and in doing so we were conferring a favour on this country, and doing work which his officials should have done. Not only was that done in the office of publication, but they were mailed as they had a perfect right to be mailed, to a member of this House, and that member was quite within his rights when he remailed them. He could have dumped them into the post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He could not get them in.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes, he could have piled these mountains of information up in the post office, and the Postmaster General dare not attempt to stop him. It was to relieve the hard worked and poorly paid post office officials of this country, that the Liberal-Conservative party went to the trouble of putting this mail matter into sacks. But the Postmaster General finds that this scheme to supplant the Prime Minister will not work. He finds that there is not going to be an election, in order that he may have a possible opportunity of becoming Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada. We have noticed it in him on the street; we have noticed it in him in the House, and we noticed it especially this afternoon. He has shown dissatisfaction with things around him, and it is easy for us to conjecture what the cause of it all is. Now, he seeks to make a little cheap popularity in the country by attacking the Conservative party, and stating that his mail cars are overcrowded. If he is run out of mail cars, why does he not turn out two or three of the minister's private cars, and use them as mail cars ? If he has no postal cars why doesn't he take the government private cars and put his officers in them to distribute this mail, and enlighten the people of the Dominion ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Sifton's car is not doing anything now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, yes it is.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Postmaster General complains of these mail bags being seen in the corridor. I want to tell him that the Liberal-Conservative party does not go at night to a back street office in the town, and take the Postmaster General's frank, or the frank of his deputy, and ship circulars without their going through the regular post office here. What the Liberal-Conservative party does is done in the broad light of day; right in the House of Commons and the people of the Dominion of Canada can see what is going on, and we are not ashamed of what we are doing. The Postmaster General says that he has no mail bags ? Where have they gone ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Several hundred of them are here now ?

Mr. COCHRANE. You got down from the thousands.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the Auditor General's Report I find a list of items for repairing these mail bags. Here is the Ottawa Supply Company, and that I believe, is a made up institution especially for the occasion. Here is the account of the Ottawa Supply Company : 900 bags at $1.70; 300 bags at $1.60; 15 bags at $1.50; 45 bags at $1.20; 1,850 bags at $1.35—that would be about enough for us, according to the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not half enough.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Well, here are some more : 230 bags at $1.05 ; 150 bags at $1. That is more than we have in the corridors now. Then I find : cotton duck pouches ; 140 at 30 cents, 477 at 30 cents, 114 at 25 cents. Cotton duck bags fitted with swivel, 18 at 35 cents ; cutting down jute sacks, 64 at 25 cents ; drag sacks, 6 at 95 cents ; 7,500 at 80 cents. Where have they all gone ? 4 at 85 cents ; 1 at 80 cents; 190 at 45 cents. Red striped linen bags : 48 at $1.65, 150 at $1.30, 24 at $1.25, 150 at $1.25, 150 at $1.15, 100 at $1.10. These are all from the Auditor General's Report for 1902, page S—11. If I had the report for this year, I am sure I could pile up a mountain of them. Then, here are yellow bags. I suppose these are for the twelfth of July. I wonder if the grand master saw any of them his way.

Mr. SPROULE. I must thank him very kindly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That shows how considerate I was. Are there any green ones ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suppose the Postmaster General handles all kinds ; it does not make any difference what colour they are. Here are 150 at 40 cents, 100 at 25 cents, 24 at $1.16. Then I find an item : C. Warner, Ottawa, repairing cotton duck bags, 338 at 42 cents ; fitting with bars and ring, 452 at 5 cents ; repairing jute newspaper sacks, 801 at 41 cents ; fitting with cords, cases and ferrules, 481 at 9 cents. These must be some of the old patched bags which he is giving the Tory party. Then, here is a firm called William Willis & Son, Aurora. It strikes me that Aurora is a little north of Toronto.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In North York, a fine place.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In North York, which the Hon. Postmaster General represents. I find these items for William Willis & Son, Aurora : brown duck satchels, 25 at $1.80, 200 at $1.80, cotton duck folders, 73 at 45 cents, repairing mail bags, 6,732 at 25 cents, seamless cotton bags, 300 at 38 cents, 100 at 35 cents, 50 at 33 cents. I see also this item : T. H. Winter, Aurora, extra trips with mail bags between railway station and post office, 242 trips, which this gentleman made to the railway station carrying these mail bags to be sent all over the country, and he charges 25 cents a trip. And yet the Postmaster General has the hardihood to stand up here and say that he is short of mail bags. I was surprised today to see the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) get up when the Postmaster General turned his head around as if he had touched a button. You talk about the independence of parliament. Where was the independent spirit of that hon. gentleman when he would let any minister touch a button as a signal for him to get up and make an attack on the people, as he did today ? And where was the independence of the wild and woolly west, when the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) arose when the Postmaster General touched the button to say that a letter had been delayed. We all knew that the Postmaster General was possessed of a tyrannical spirit when he broke loose, but I hardly thought he could go the length he has done to day. I tell him that the hon. gentleman who put this matter in the mail bags did a service to the Post Office Department, and if he dares to take these mail bags, he and his officials will have their work cut out for them in a different manner from what he expects. He may exercise his right to seize these mail bags ; he may be within his authority if he does so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Whether he is within his authority or not, he will not dare to do it. The hon. gentleman has made such an exhibition of himself to-day that it will take a lot of smiling and cajoling to put him in the estimation of this House and the country where he stood before.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

House of Commons—further amount required for sessional clerks, $2,330.

Mr. SPEAKER. This item is required on account of the length of the session. It provides for the payment of the sessional clerks to the 20th of this month. These estimates were prepared some time ago, when it was expected that this session would be over by that date.

Mr. CLARKE. Has any consideration been given to the representations that have been made to Mr. Speaker respecting increased remuneration for some of these men ? Are they being paid at the same rate, or is any increase being given to them ?

Mr. SPEAKER. No. The sessional clerks are divided into three classes : one class at $3 a day, another at $3.50, and those who know shorthand and typewriting, at $4.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How does the number compare with the number formerly employed ?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is just the same—25.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any provision in this item for any extra pay for messengers and the officials about the doors ? Are they to receive any additional remuneration besides their per diem allowance ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The longer the session, the better for them, because they are paid by the day and will receive more money.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Might I ask your consideration, Mr. Speaker, to the suggestion I dropped the other evening, to the effect that the members of the press gallery should be placed on the list of sessional clerks. Of course there are a few of the reporting staff who obtain more or less extra remuneration by reporting for the committees, but that is arduous work, and I am satisfied that they are entitled to all they earn in that way and that the country would endorse the action of Mr. Speaker, and the House in placing these gentlemen on the sessional staff. They do a great deal of work for the members and in this way save the increase of the sessional staff.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not had time to consider the matter very fully, but I find on inquiry from the officers of the House that no such remuneration was ever given in the past.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would it not be a very good precedent to lay down ?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a very important question and I would not like to offer an opinion just now. We would be paying persons who are not at all under the control of the House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They would be then.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presume that the members of the press gallery would prefer to be absolutely free as they are to-day.

Debates—amanuenses, $560.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is that for ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The amanuenses are the young men who do the type writing for the reporters of the debates.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are the debates not reported under contract ?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, the debates reporters are officers of the House. The contract system was given up some twenty years ago.

Sessional messengers, $2,500.

Mr. SPROULE. How many have we ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Forty-nine.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are they paid by the day ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Ottawa public buildings—further amount required for Victoria Memorial Museum and other buildings, $100,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asking a general vote in view of the fact that last session in the main estimates there were some votes for two or three public buildings at Ottawa. I have not had a satisfactory plan made out yet ; but if we had this vote, we might during recess be able to make more satisfactory arrangements for the acquisition of sites.

Mr. SPROULE. The intention is to go on with the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. minister any idea where it is to be located ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No definite arrangement has been made. If I were to express myself favourable to one site as against another, it would be very difficult for me to obtain satisfactory prices.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether it was this building which was meant, but I understood from the Finance Minister that it was impossible to locate it on government property, but there was some adjoining property which could be had. He did not wish to say where it was because the price might be raised.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is one of the matters under consideration. I shall have a further survey made to see whether or not the architect was mistaken. I am now having a survey of the property made. We may have to buy the adjoining property.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This system of voting the money without knowing the site is not the one which is followed in England. In this country the ministers contend that if it be known they intend purchasing property in any particular locality, they will have to pay two or three times as much for it ; but, after all we are entitled to know where the site is before voting the money, and the government have always the power to expropriate and have a fair valuation made. It seems very odd to vote large sums without knowing where the money is to be expended.

Mr. BIRKETT. I hope that this vote will meet with the approval of both sides. There is hardly a member of this House who has not, either by word or act, expressed his opinon that it is necessary we should have additional accommodation for our public buildings. I think that the hon. minister of Public Works is perfectly justified in asking for this amount in the way he has done. To have asked for a more definite vote would jeopardize whatever chance he may have for the purchase of a site at a reasonable price. There are two or three different sites in the city, which the owners would be very willing to sell, and for my part I would be perfectly satisfied to leave the matter in the hand of the minister, being convinced that he has the interests of the government and the department at heart and will choose the site best suited for the building. I hope that the vote will pass without further opposition.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this for the geological building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I may congratulate the minister. It is pretty nearly time Canada had a better Geological Museum and building generally. If he will proceed immediately with the purchase of the site and next year, if he should happen to be in office, go on with the immediate construction of the building, the House and the country will heartily endorse his action.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What progress is being made for the establishment of a mint?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The plans are being prepared and the question now is to obtain a site.

Public works—chargeable to income—public buildings, Quebec, Que., hospital for treatment of immigrants suffering from trachoma and kindred diseases, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Representations were made some time ago that this building was necessary. On further consideration the matter was allowed to stand. Again the request was renewed, and it has been urged as a matter of great public interest. It has been reported that some of the immigrants are troubled with this disease, and there is danger that it will spread throughout the country.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the hon. minister think it would be preferable to ship these immigrants back to their own country? It seems to me a very singular thing that we should be obliged to establish a hospital for immigrants coming into the country, to cure them of this disease. It is a most unheard of proposition, to my mind a most scandalous proposition. I am surprised that the Minister of Public Works should bring in an estimate of this sort.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are pretty well accustomed now to my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) using very extravagant language.

Mr. FOWLER. I am afraid I learned it from the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is learning pretty fast apparently, for a new member. I have no doubt my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and others will understand the need for this building better than I do. It is for the purpose of ascertaining whether these immigrants have this disease. I understand from the medical officer that there is no way known to medical science to learn whether this disease is present without a careful examination. Some have been passed as free from this disease and have entered the country when they could not be sent back, though they actually had trachoma, and their being at large endangered the health of others.

Mr. FOWLER. It says that the building is for the treatment of these immigrants, not for examination.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend knows all about it he can hardly need my explanation.

Mr. BELL. They are there on probation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and it may be—though I did not I confess, ask as to that point—that, in case they have the disease to some slight extent, they may be treated and cured. But the explanation given to me by the officers was that the object was to make a test of these immigrants.

Mr. COCHRANE. How do the American officials find out whether immigrants have this disease or not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Under the same system, I am informed; but I have no personal knowledge.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand that the American official at that port examines immigrants and excludes those suffering from disease.

The PRIME MINISTER. They have a house of their own in Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. If the explanation of the Minister of Public Works is correct, he is unfortunate in the choice of words in this estimate. It does not say a word about examining the immigrants to see if they are suffering from this disease, but it says 'hospital for treatment of immigrants suffering from trachoma and kindred diseases.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose the officials of the department are responsible for the wording, and it may not convey just the idea that the officials of the immigration branch of the Interior Department conveyed to me. I have not made the detailed inquiries, that, perhaps, I should have made, but I am sure they represented to me that the first and great object was to ascertain whether the immigrants have the disease or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. As I belong to Quebec, and am more familiar than is my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) with the circumstances, I may give some explanation. This building has been made necessary in consequence of a state of facts which we discovered last year. It was found by the medical experts that we had in Quebec some of these immigrants coming from some part of Europe, who, though suffering from this disease had escaped detection at Grosse Isle. At Quebec they were suspected of suffering from trachoma and were detained at St. Rochs, where there is quite a congested population. At one time we had the house visited and found twelve patients. There was great danger of this disease contaminating the neighbourhood. It was too important a matter to be neglected, and we thought it would be better to have a house properly fitted, so that these sick people could be isolated, and the community protected from infection.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that it was the intention to put up a building so that these people might be separated from the others until they can be sent back. This is a contagious disease, there is no doubt; and, while some cases are curable, the great majority are not curable. I frankly confess that I think the course proposed is the proper one to take. These people cannot be isolated too soon, because you intensify the evil by allowing the disease to spread.

Quebec military buildings—new iron foundry (revote), $4,800.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount was voted, but lapsed at the end of the fiscal year, the accounts not being in and ready for payment. I am asking for this revote so that the accounts may be paid. The same applies to the next item, which is for the new artillery workshop, $3,000.

Mr. BELL. Are these buildings completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think there is some more work to do in fitting them up.

Public buildings, Nova Scotia—Springhill public building, repairs, $7,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is necessary on account of the unfortunate accident by which the man who was responsible for it and one of his comrades were killed. The building was damaged and the heating apparatus wrecked.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the cause of the accident ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The man who was in charge was killed. The expert sent down to investigate reported that though everything was blown up, he found that two large valves which should have been opened were left closed, and the steam being unable to escape, had caused an explosion.

Public buildings, generally—immigrant buildings, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This has been applied for by the Department of the Interior, and it is said that the need of these buildings is urgent. One of them was so urgent that we have undertaken to go on with the work. This is to be provided where the Barr colony is settled. A number of immigrants have come in late and have not provided themselves with housing for the winter. It is proposed to put up a temporary building to shelter them.

Mr. GOURLEY. The utmost care should be taken and no expenditure spared to prevent any mishap occurring to these people this winter, because if there should be any mishap to them, no matter how improvident they may be, there would be a stream of misrepresentation against Canada in the spring.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite recognize this, but the departments in these matters always want things done in a hurry and want a great deal of money, so that some one has to keep the brakes on. I have kept the vote as small as possible, but I recognize the truth of what the hon. gentleman has said that even if there is some waste of money it would not do to have these people suffer.

Ville Marie wharf—Lake Temiscamingue, repairs, renewals, &c., $2,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The government have a small wharf at this place. There is quite a large settlement there, and the amount of trade growing up in that district is simply wonderful. I did not believe it myself until a deputation came down here and explained it to me. This is being done in order to enlarge the wharf so as to accommodate this growing trade.

Windsor harbour—sheer dams, training dykes and deepening River Avon (revote of lapsed amount), $700.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these all the votes that are to be taken for public works in Nova Scotia ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All that I know of.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have received a letter to-day asking for a permanent light at Bass river. The hon. Minister of Finance will know that there is at this point an important manufacturing concern headed by Messrs. Fulton. They are 15 or 20 miles from the railway, yet with the assistance of the summer shipping in the Bay of Fundy and by hauling to the station in winter, they are conducting a successful business in the manufacture of furniture, which is sent all over New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Although they have encountered many difficulties, such as fire, difficulties that would have discouraged most people, they have persevered and are doing a good deal of shipping on the Bay of Fundy. You built a wharf there a year or two ago, but Mr. Edward Fulton, who is a leading man in our county—unfortunately he is a Liberal, but in every other way he is a most distinguished man—writes me and complains that it is very difficult for the steamers to get into the wharf and that he has, in fact, to hold a lantern on the wharf in order to enable them to make it. They have to load the steamer whenever it can get in with the tide. Mr. Fulton thinks that $300 or $400 would be sufficient to put a permanent light there, which would enable the steamer to get in with less difficulty.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that this Liberal wants to hold a light up to them ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not wish to introduce any politics in the matter; Mr. Fulton is a very capable man, notwithstanding his politics, and a very good man. I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Works to see that in some way this accommodation is furnished.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, it is too late to put anything in these estimates. I know Mr. Fulton, the gentleman to whom my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) has referred, and I know that his industry is an important one, but whether or not this light should be provided by the department is a matter which my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will have to ascertain.

Mr. GOURLEY. What good is your harbour if the steamer cannot get into it on the tides? It cannot get in at regular hours.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think they need some light in Colchester county.

Mr. SPROULE. It takes such a trifle to provide a light of this kind that the government could take out a sufficient amount from the vote for lighthouses without having a special vote.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Minister of Finance has given a good reason; they want light in Colchester county; that is enough.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is right. I shall have to have a report made, and I will be glad to have this during the next week. There is a general vote out of which this light can be erected.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—steam service between Petit de Grat and the Intercolonial Railway terminus at Mulgrave, $3,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Explain this please.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an item for the purpose of establishing a service which will be a very important feeder to the Intercolonial Railway. It is to develop the fishing business of the eastern part of Nova Scotia, which has already been the subject of discussion on one or two occasions in this House. It is to develop the business of sending fresh fish from the eastern portion of Nova Scotia to the upper provinces and even to the western states. It is an important and growing business and it has given considerable traffic to the Intercolonial Railway already. This is for an extension of the steamship service in connection with this business. I have no doubt this will give a large amount of extra business to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOWLER. What steamer is going to be on this route ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know as that point has not been decided yet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely we must have some finality as to subsidies. If we are going to subsidize steamers to carry trade to the Intercolonial, I think it is carrying the principle of subsidies to an absurd length.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sure there is no subsidy that we have voted for generations which is better entitled to consideration than this one. We have had discussions in this House as to the importance of developing this fresh fish industry and perhaps we could take no step which would more directly aid that industry than by making connections between the central fishing communities and the railway terminus at Mulgrave. There is a large fishing industry at Cape Canso, which has given a great deal of business to the Intercolonial Railway. This is to bring a similar traffic from Cape Breton and I feel quite sure that there is no money that we will spend that is more likely to develop business than this subsidy.

Mr. BELL. Where is Petit de Grat ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in Richmond county, on the island Madame.

Mr. FOWLER. How large a place is it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a scattered fishing district. It is a community that has given a great deal of attention to the fresh fish business. The fresh fish business requires a very special organization. Where you have the ordinary fishing business, where the people cure their own fish that can be done in a small way, but if you establish a fresh fish business it needs a considerable amount of capital and organization. This subsidy is for the purpose of aiding a steamer to be put on the route for the purpose of gathering the fish and shipping it.

Mr. BELL. There are two steamers now plying in that vicinity. One of them runs from Canso to Arichat and the other one through the St. Lennox passage to St. Peters. I imagine one of them must pass Petit de Grat. I cannot at the moment recollect where Petit de Grat is. I think, though, that the steamer running through the St. Lennox passage must pass near to it.

Mr. KENDALL. This is on the other side of the island.

Mr. BELL. The Canso boat calls at Arichat.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Canso boat is so fully occupied that she cannot perform this service.

Mr. KENDALL. This business began seven or eight years ago, and the first year there was received by the Intercolonial Railway from the business furnished by the industry at Canso, between $4,000 and $5,000. During last year the Intercolonial Railway received $27,000 from this business, and from one firm in Canso. There are other firms, and we expect that before long the Intercolonial Railway will have from $75,000 to $100,000 of revenue from the transportation of fish from the Atlantic coast.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much will come from Petit de Grat ?

Mr. KENDALL. It is more than probable that within five years a far larger revenue will be derived from that place than is derived from the Canso business at the present time.

Mr. COPP. This is a very good thing and I heartily concur in it. I believe that the only way you can gather fish for shipment to the western market is by steamer. I am going to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) to go farther than he has gone. The same business is being developed in St. Mary's bay ports and in the Bay of Fundy. Fresh fish is being collected and taken to St. John for shipment over the Intercolonial Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal. We have a boat there now which has managed to keep going as well as it can but it has not been working to advantage. It is, however, an immense accommodation to the fishermen, and while I would not ask the hon. minister for anything this session, I am in hopes that this experiment will prove so successful that next session he will be able to give a subsidy for a small boat to run from St. Mary's bay ports and the Bay of Fundy to St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. Will anybody put on a special steamer for this purpose ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote is taken in the hope of inducing some parties to put on an extra boat, but no arrangement has as yet been made.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there fishermen who own steamers available for this purpose ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the arrangement will have to be made with the people who are in the steamship business.

Miscellaneous—to pay Wm. Perkins for extra copies of evidence in connection with the Lisgar election petition, $80.36.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Order in Council providing for copies of evidence taken at election trials makes provision for the payment of ten cents a folio for the first copy and three cents a folio for each additional copy. In this particular instance there was no copy required by the judges and the only copy taken was the copy furnished to Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General in construing the Order in Council came to the conclusion that Mr. Perkins was only entitled to three cents a folio. Strictly speaking that is correct. We have amended the Order in Council so as to make provision that if the stenographer is only required to make one copy he is entitled to ten cents a folio. In view of the fact that this work was done before the Order in Council was passed, it is necessary to get parliamentary authority to pay this sum.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How does it come that the Dominion ought to pay any sum at all for election trials ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Election courts are federal courts. All the expenditure at the trial of an election petition in connection with an election to the Dominion parliament is under our control, and we are absolutely responsible for it. The question was formerly raised in the case of Valin vs. Langlois, as to whether judges of the provincial courts can try election cases and the point was finally decided by the Privy Council to the effect that judges of the provincial courts sitting for the purpose of trying federal cases are federal judges.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely they would make the orders and rules sufficiently binding to provide themselves with a copy of the petition.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is not to provide for a copy of the petition. This is for a copy of the evidence taken at the trial. The stenographer took the notes of the evidence for which he was paid, but when the notes are extended, provision is made that they shall be paid for at so much per folio for each copy made. In this case the judge did not deem it necessary for the purpose of preparing their judgment to have the notes extended but it was necessary for the return to have a copy of the evidence sent here and it is for the copy of the evidence furnished to Mr. Speaker that we are asking for this vote.

Further amount required for printing Dominion notes, $30,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen have expressed the wish, that the notes should be as clean as possible, and as the circulation is increasing rapidly we find it necessary to come to the House and ask for this increased amount.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you take up the old note ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As rapidly as the bank sends us in old notes, we replace them with new ones ; it costs us a little more but I am sure the House will appreciate it.

To pay Lady Lafontaine a pension at the rate of $1,800 per annum from January 1, 1903, $2,700.

The PRIME MINISTER. This vote is required to pay a pension to the widow of Sir Louis Hippolyte Lafontaine, whose memory is revered in Canada. Sir Louis Lafontaine died in 1863, leaving a widow who was his second wife. When she married Sir Louis Lafontaine, she was the widow of an officer who had served in the garrison of Montreal. She was a Mrs. Kimpton ; her family name being Morrison. Lady Lafontaine was left, not in affluence, but in fairly comfortable circumstances ; and through reverses, she has been unfortunately reduced to a state of absolute penury. Lady Lafontaine is now 82 years of age, and I am sure everybody will agree that this is the right thing to do.

Mr. SPROULE. Carried.

Expenses in connection with the conversion of the public debt. Payments may be made to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service or Superannuation Acts, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have very large sums of old debts maturing this year, and to provide for their payment, and to make arrangements for replacing them with new loans so far as may be necessary, will involve some considerable negotiation in London, and probably several visits to that centre of the money market of the world. The deputy minister has been in England for some considerable time; he has left to return home, but no doubt it will be necessary later on for some one to go there again. A considerable part of this item will be necessary for travelling expenses. The balance is in order to make provision for a change in the Finance Department, which I can hardly say I desire to make, but which I will be obliged, to make. The deputy minister, who has occupied his position with great satisfaction to all parties for many years, has expressed a desire to retire, and I am making arrangements to supply his place. At the same time, in view of the very large financial operations which are to be undertaken during the current year and for the next year or two, I am anxious that we should retain Mr. Courtney's services in an advisory capacity. I deem it wise that we should have some such officer, and I shall have to take a portion of this money to apply it to the payment of Mr. Courtney in addition to the superannuation he would be entitled to receive. It is a mere temporary arrangement for a year or two, so that we may have the benefit of his services during this period when so much financing has to be done. Mr. Courtney is now on the ocean, and as it is a matter of arrangement with him I am not able to say how much we will pay him.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The law provides that you can take a superannuated officer back into the service at the same salary which he had when he retired; you will not pay him more than that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not expect we will allow him that much. We would not wish to recall Mr. Courtney back into the service to discharge the duties of a deputy; we do not want two deputies. He wishes to be relieved of the ordinary labour and responsibility of the department, but we want to retain him in an advisory capacity with regard to this special business and of course he will be valuable in instructing the new deputy minister on coming into office. The idea is to give Mr. Courtney something supplementary to his superannuation, for a year or two years.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This does not relieve him from the responsibility of having his accounts audited by the Auditor General; I think he got into some trouble with the Auditor General about his travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That trouble was based upon a difficulty which arose in the time of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) when exactly a similar case occurred, and we followed the precedent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There are some precedents you should avoid.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Auditor General, who above all things wishes to be consistent, thought that as he objected to a similar case under the administration of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart), he ought to do likewise in our case.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the aggregate of the sums falling due this year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have over £6,000,000 falling due in England, and in addition to that we have something over $2,000,000 maturing in Canada.

Mr. BELL. The amount is stated to be $33,512,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Minister of Finance any unused borrowing powers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have the standing power to renew existing loans.

Department of Secretary of State—to provide for three additional junior second-class clerkships, $2,100.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Two of these are now extra clerks, and it is proposed to put them on the permanent list. The work was largely increased in the department owing to the Naturalization Act. The Secretary of State has pointed out to me, that while the expenditure in 1893 was $50,160, the present expenditure is $48,560, which shows a substantial reduction. At the same time, the revenue has increased from $12,400 to $52,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If you promote these two clerks, you should strike out the vote for their salaries from the ordinary expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These extra clerks will be included in the contingencies, which have already been voted. It must be the intention that these items should not be used for the extra clerks.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you not strike it out of the other vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has been already voted, and this item is necessary in order to make these gentlemen permanent.

Department of Justice—to increase the salaries of A. Power, K.C., and G. L. B. Fraser, K.C., by $200 each, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $400.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this their annual increase ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No. These two gentlemen are both first-class clerks in the department. One has been there since 1874 and the other since 1879. They are now in receipt of salaries in excess of the statutory allowance. Each is receiving $2,600, and it is proposed to give them each $2,800. They are both very competent officials, and this is to give them some recognition for the valuable services they render.

To increase the salary of Miss M. Quain to $500, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $100.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Miss Quain is a stenographer. She gets a salary of $400, and is entitled to an annual increase of only $30. The result is that she says she will not remain at that salary. She is a very competent person, and I find that to retain competent officials you must pay them.

To increase the salary of A. J. McGillivray, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $50.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He is from the maritime provinces. He has been in the department, I think, since 1890, and has never been put on the permanent list. He gives great satisfaction. Two first-class clerks have left the department and I am not going to replace them now, and I think Mr. McGillivray is entitled to this increase. He now gets $700.

To provide for employment of Thomas Morris as temporary clerk at $600, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $600.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In what we call the docket office we had a first-class clerk in Mr. Blakadar, who died some time ago. Mr. Morris is a man who is over age to come under the Civil Service Act, but he had a long experience in a lawyer's office in town and came to me highly recommended. He is a man of considerable attainments as a managing clerk, and is just the sort of man I wanted.

Office of the Auditor General—to promote B. W. Sherwood, W. Tucker, S. S. Allen and E. S. Johnston to the second class, $800, less $512.50 available from total sum included in main estimates, $287.50.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did these parties pass the civil service examination ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think all the officials of the Auditor General have passed the civil service examination. He has the right of promotion under the statute.

Mr. FOWLER. I have no objection whatever to this vote, but I think there are other clerks in that office who should be included in this promotion. I have in mind one clerk in particular, who has performed very efficient and very faithful service—D. J. Wagner. I would suggest that the minister make inquiry and find out why he has not been included in the promotion granted to his fellow clerks ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is invading the holy of holies. That is a privilege which I would not presume to exercise. The Auditor General has the right under the statute to promote the clerks of his department. I would not dare to question his judgment. He may be right or he may be wrong ; but we must bow our heads submissive.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Notwithstanding the opinion of the hon. Minister of Finance that the Auditor General has power under the statute to promote, I know that some of the predecessors of the Minister of Justice held that notwithstanding the statute you could not interfere with the prerogative of the Crown—that the appointment is with the government, and that they are responsible for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In view of my hon. friend's statement as a public man of long experience, and in view of the fact that he quotes the authority of eminent Ministers of Justice, perhaps we shall have to consider the matter and see whether we have not the right.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suggest that a good opportunity for exercising that right would be the promotion of Mr. Wagner.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Auditor General to intimate that he was short of hands in his department. The complaint was made at the time the report was got out. I think he stated in the Public Accounts Committee that if he had more hands he could get it out earlier. Has the Minister of Finance looked into that at all ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I discussed that on a previous occasion. The Auditor General has been supplied with all the staff he needs. He has made no application for any increase except in connection with the transcontinental railway. He intimated that for the auditing of the accounts of that work he would need a larger staff. I discussed that with him. I intimated that the work of auditing would come later, but that if he thought the mere auditing of the surveyors' accounts, which will be all that will be required before parliament meets again, would require further help, I would be glad to give it to him.

With respect to possible work arising in connection with that new enterprise, the Auditor General has not sought any additional staff.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard complaints that his department is very cramped.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that respect I think he has some cause for complaint. The whole Finance Department is very much cramped. The other ministers have been more energetic and have got new buildings, but because of my modesty I have not succeeded in getting any.

Supreme Court—to provide salary of E. R. A. Taschereau, $1,200.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is in connection with the revision of the statutes. The ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was appointed chairman and he brought his secretary with him. During his absence Mr. Taschereau, son of the Chief Justice, acted as secretary.

Mr. FOWLER. The former secretary is not receiving any additional salary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

To assist L. W. Coutlee in publication of digest of judgments of Supreme Court of Canada, $500.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Mr. Coutlee is one of the reporters of the Supreme Court. He has taken upon himself the publication of a rather valuable work, and the practice has been to give assistance to those who publish books of that sort.

Further amount required for miscellaneous expenditure including North-west Territories, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In the main estimates we have asked for $37,000, and this will make the total $42,000. The expenses there have grown enormously in the last ten years. The number of criminal cases tried has increased from 353 in 1891 to 3,296. The fees for juries and witnesses have increased from $3,240 to $11,000. It will be soon time to consider whether or not we could not place the administration of criminal justice under control of the local authorities. By the Act we have made provision to hand over to them the administration of civil justice.

Mr. FOWLER. Give them provincial autonomy.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They will soon be ready for that.

To provide salary for an additional judge of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In the territories we are responsible entirely for the administration of justice, and the business has increased enormously. We have had demands from all over the territories, especially from the Macleod district, for additional judges. It was suggested that we should appoint two, but I made inquiry and found that one would be quite sufficient.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is going to fill the position, and where will he be stationed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have really never thought of that. In the amendments to the North-west Territoiries Act we are giving to the local assembly the division of the districts and the arrangements of the works.

To provide salary for a junior judge of the district of Nipissing, Ont., $2,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is one of the cases in which the Ontario legislature provide for the appointment. After making inquiries, I found that the district is a growing one and that one judge, even if he did not do much more than travel around, would have very little time to try the cases.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems an anomaly that this parliament could not have the fixing of the district and the number of judges when we have to provide the salaries.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The remedy is in our own hands. We need not give the salary. The reason for the appointment is that, under the Ontario statute, where there is a certain population in the district, they are entitled to a senior and junior judge. Does this come up to the population ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am assuming that the Ontario legislature has taken all these matters into account. I follow the principle laid down by the late Sir John A. Macdonald, and concurred in by the present Prime Minister, that the responsibility for the administration of civil justice is with the province, and, if the province in the exercise of its authority says that it is necessary in the interest of litigants that a judge should be appointed for a certain place we—though, in the abstract we have the power—are not to interfere with the discretion on the part of the province.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. minister say what the limit of population is.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think it is 80,000.

Mr. SPROULE. For 80,000 and over they might have a junior and senior judge, but for less than that only one.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this a junior judge ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. This comprises more than the district of Nipissing ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a group of constituencies.

Mr. SPROULE. The district, I think, is large enough.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And rather difficult for a judge to get about in, I should fancy.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the appointment is a proper one, as the district is large and an inconvenient one to cover. I was going to say, with regard to the other point, that the Ontario legislature some time ago, passed a law providing that where a district was below 80,000 it should be entitled to only one judge. That was when the Conservative party was in power at Ottawa, and it was said to be to prevent the appointment of more judges by that government. But when the Reform party came into power, the legislature repealed that law, and it is no longer in force.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I was under the impression that it still existed.

To raise the salary of the judge of the county court for district No. 7, Nova Scotia, to $3,000, $600.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) will understand this item. Judge Dodd is the judge of district No. 7, Nova Scotia, which includes Sydney. It appears that the business at Sydney has increased enormously of recent years, and I find, on examination, that the amount of business done at Sydney is even very much greater than at Halifax, and the intention is to provide a salary equal to that paid at Halifax.

Mr. FOWLER. What constituencies does this district No. 7 include ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Victoria, Cape Breton and Richmond.

Mr. FOWLER. The salary is the same as paid at St. John ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The same as paid at St. John, Halifax and Charlottetown.

Mr. COPP. I do not object to the judge of district No. 7 receiving an increase, but I believe very strongly that the other judges of the county court of Nova Scotia should be increased also. The reason alleged for the increase is that a great deal more work is done in district No. 7 than any other district. I do not wish to be understood as doubting the accuracy of that statement. But if the judge there performs more work, it is only within the last year or two. Up to the year 1900 he did not perform anything like the amount of work done in district No. 3, or district No. 5. This matter was brought up in the local legislature of Halifax, and I have here the record of the debate which took place at the time and the remarks of Hon. Mr. Pipes, who was the leader of the legislative council in that province. That record shows that Judge Morse, of district No. 5, performed nearly double the work done by Judge Dodd of district No. 7.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Copp) kindly give details ?

Mr. COPP. District No. 5 includes the constituencies of Cumberland and Pictou. In 1900 the fees collected in Cumberland alone amounted to $365.85, or more than those of the whole district composed of Cape Breton, Victoria and Richmond, which amounted to $361.25. Besides this the county of Pictou, which forms part of district No. 5, collected fees to the amount of $224.80. This made a total for district No. 5 of $590.65, against $361.25 for district No. 7. Now, take the next district, district No. 4. We find that Judge Chipman, of that district performed nearly three times as much work as the judge of district No. 7.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is, received three times as large fees ?

Mr. COPP. Yes, that is the only guide we can have. The clerks of the county courts in Nova Scotia make a yearly return of the business done in their offices, and the debate to which I refer shows the figures given by these returns. In district No. 4 which includes the constituencies of Colchester, Hants and King's the fees were much larger than those of district No. 7. The fees in Colchester alone amounted to $439.50 or nearly $100 more than in the whole of district No. 7. In Hants, the fees were $233, and in King's $173. This made a total for the district of $846, against $361.25 for district No. 7. I am quoting from the figures given by Hon. Mr. Pipes who opposed this matter in the local legislature where it was discussed, but not in the form in which it now comes before us. It was proposed to divide district No. 7 and make one district of Cape Breton alone, leaving Richmond and Victoria to form a separate district, and to appoint a new judge. I think it is only fair to the other county court judges of Nova Scotia that I should read what Hon. Mr. Pipes had to say in reference to this very matter in 1901 :

Hon. Mr. Pipes said a Bill had been before the Committee on Law and Amendments for some time to create an additional county clerk district. The committee was of the opinion that the necessity for this Bill had not been shown, and recommended that its further consideration be deferred for three months. At the present time there were seven county court districts in the province. This Bill proposed to make eight. District No. 6 comprised the counties of Antigonish, Guysborough and Inverness.

And I wish to show that in the counties of Antigonish, Guysborough and Inverness the business was a great deal more than in district No. 7; the fees were $478 in the one, whereas they were $361 in district No. 7, or $100 more in district No. 6 than in district No. 7.

No. 7 comprised Cape Breton, Victoria and Richmond. The Bill proposed to make these two districts into three. If it passed the county of Cape Breton would be one district. There was at present no county court district consisting of one county only, except district No. 1, the county of Halifax. It did not seem to him or to the committee that it could be argued that the county of Cape Breton, including Sydney, had reached the population of Halifax county, or that it was necessary to have a judge constantly sitting in the county of Cape Breton. As hon. members knew, returns were made to the provincial secretary's office every year of the amount of fees received by the county court clerks in each county. These returns afforded a fair test of the amount of business transacted by the courts in each county. The fees received by the county court clerks last year were: In Antigonish, $236.04 ; Guysborough, $82.35 ; Inverness, $154,20; altogether for district No. 6 $472.59. Cape Breton, the county proposed to be erected into a separate district, $288.05; Victoria, $21.90 ; Richmond, $51.30 ; altogether for the whole district No. 7, $361.25. Taking district No. 5, the fees received in Cumberland were $365.85, more than in the whole of district No. 7, and in Pictou, $224.80, in all $590.65. In district No. 4 the fees were, in Colchester, $439.50, more than in the whole of district No. 7 ; in Hants, $233.52 and in King's, $173.48, in all $846.50, more than districts Nos. 6 and 7 put together. If there should arise any pressure of business in district No. 7, it could easily be remedied by taking Richmond out of No. 7 and putting it in No. 6.

Last year an Act was passed requiring the clerks to make returns showing the amount of work done by the judge of the county courts throughout the province, with the idea, in view of possible changes and reforms in the judicial system of the country, of ascertaining the amount of work in the various districts.

That is what Hon. Mr. Pipes said in reference to this Bill in the Nova Scotia legislature. I do not object to the increase in salary at all. I consider that the county court judges of the province of Nova Scotia are entirely underpaid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What do they receive ?

Mr. COPP. They receive $2,400.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the same as in Ontario.

Mr. COPP. The judges were appointed in 1876, and the salary was then fixed. The jurisdiction was also fixed at that time, but since then there has been a decided change in that respect. In 1880 the Speedy Trials Act was passed, which adds most materially to the duties of county court judges in Nova Scotia, owing to the fact that they have, under certain circumstances and for certain offences the power of trying criminal cases. Again, they are now masters of the Supreme Court, and they have large duties to perform as judges of probate. The old judges of probate in Nova Scotia have been done away with and these duties fall on the shoulders of the county court judges.

Mr. FOWLER. Do they not get fees for this work ?

Mr. COPP. No. Owing to these changes the duties of the county court judges of Nova Scotia have been more than doubled since they were first appointed in 1876, but the salary has remained the same.

Mr. FOWLER. What becomes of the probate fees ?

Mr. COPP. They go to the registrar of the court, who is paid by fees. In Nova Scotia they used to have a judge and registrar both, but now the duties are performed by the county court judges. I am quite sure that the duties performed by Judge Savary, one of the ablest judges in the province of Nova Scotia, an ornament to the bench, a man of high legal attainments, although his duties were not referred to by Mr. Pipes, must be equal to the duties of Judge Morse or Judge Chipman, and I am quite positive that they are more onerous than the duties performed by the judge in district No. 7.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. How many cases did he try last year?

Mr. COPP. I do not know that, I have not the record. What I am asking is that this matter should be so dealt with that the cases of the other judges would also be considered by the minister. If this judge is entitled to an increase in salary, I say that Judge Morse in No. 5, Judge Chipman in No. 4, and Judge McGillivray, who succeeded the late Judge McIsaac in No. 6, should certainly have received larger salaries. The business in district No. 7 has not been anything like the business done by the other judges. While I do not object to this judge receiving an increase in his salary, I think it would be better if increases had been given to all the judges and not to this one alone. I have here the statistics up to 1900 of the amount of business done by the different judges. The minister states that the business of the judge for district No. 7 has increased, and that he performs more work than the judge of district No. 1. That may be true, but I would like to know what is the amount of business in Halifax. I am very doubtful if the judge in Halifax does anything like the amount of business done in Colchester, Hants and King's. What we want to know is this : Is the judge of district No. 7 at the present time performing more duties than are the judges of the other county courts; I am very doubtful if he is; I am quite positive in my own mind that he is not. Take the probate business in the large county of Cumberland and Pictou. Take the business done as master of the Supreme Court; take the criminal business or the civil business done by the judge of district No. 5 in these two large counties, and I think you will find it largely exceeds the amount of business done by the county court judge in district No. 1. The mere fact that he is performing more work than the judge of district No. 1, the city of Halifax, is no guide for us that he should receive an increase in salary in preference to Judge

Morse, Judge Savary, Judge Chipman, and the other two judges to whom I have referred.

Mr. FOWLER. How do the populations compare as between the different districts ?

Mr. COPP. The population of district No. 7, including the counties of Cape Breton, Victoria and Richmond, is 73,246 ; district No. 5, including the counties of Cumberland and Pictou, 69,627 ; district No. 6, including the counties of Inverness, Guysborough and Antigonish, 56,290 ; district No. 3, including the counties of Digby, Yarmouth and Annapolis, 62,033 ; district No. 4, including the counties of Colchester, King's and Hants, 66,893, showing that there is not much difference in population. To show that we cannot be guided altogether by population, I may say that the population of Halifax is 74,662, or nearly 10,000 more than the population of district No. 7. Mr. Pipes says that there is more business done in districts Nos. 4, 5 and 6 than in district No. 7. It is claimed that the duties of the judge of district No. 7 are largely increased. I want to say to the committee that the judge of district No. 7 is not performing more onerous duties than those which are performed by other judges, and it would appear to me to be only fair to the other judges that their salaries should be increased so as to bring them to the same level as that of the judge of district No. 7. Hon. gentlemen know perfectly well that the judge of the county court does not do all the business of the county. To-day there are a large number of criminals in the jail at Sydney who are going to be tried by the Supreme Court and not by the county court judge.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Why should they be ?

Mr. COPP. Because criminals can only be tried by the county judge who are actually in the custody of the sheriff, and then they have the right to elect. Therefore, the number of criminals to be tried cannot show us the extent of the business that is done by the county court judge. I think it would be well for the hon. minister to secure from the different county court clerks a statement of the amount of business performed in each district in Nova Scotia, and then he will have something reliable to go upon. It will be found that these other judges have been performing for the last twenty years double the amount of business that the judge of district No. 7 has been performing, for which they have not been paid extra, and still he has been receiving the same salary as they have. It does seem rather strange that he should receive an increase of salary and that the others should remain at the same salary.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) has made out such a strong case that the hon. Minister of Justice will move at once to strike out this item. I do not see how he can defend the item after the argument which has been so ably made by the hon. member for Digby. I think he has proved that several judges of the county court are performing more onerous duties than those which are performed by the judge of district No. 7. I do not see why this judge should be distinguished from the others, nor do I see why he should receive more salary than the county court judges in New Brunswick. There are no junior judges there. Each judge has to perform the duties of the district to which he is appointed, and the same argument which the hon. member for Digby has applied in respect to the increased duties that are thrust upon these judges applies to the judges of New Brunswick as well. So that if the salary is increased in Nova Scotia it must be increased in New Brunswick. Until some uniform scale is adopted in respect to the judges of these provinces, I think it would be well to leave Judge Dodd at his old salary of $2,400.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Copp) has made out quite a strong case. He has been content to make reference to something that Mr. Pipes said in the Nova Scotia legislature in 1900, about statistics but that does not seem to be very conclusive because he discussed the amount of fees received by the clerks of the court. I have something a little better than that, and I think a little more conclusive. In Halifax the judge gets $3,000 a year. I find that in Halifax last year there were 35 speedy trials, 31 civil cases, and 87 applications in chambers disposed of, whereas, in Sydney, the speedy trials numbered 21, civil cases, 158, and chamber applications disposed of 354. So that, you will see that there is three or four times more work done in Sydney than in Halifax. I have not taken the trouble to make inquiry in respect to the other districts that my hon. friend has referred to, but this is a comparative statement between Halifax, which I thought was the most important judicial centre of Nova Scotia, and Sydney. My hon. friend must not imagine that Sydney has remained stationary. Sydney has been increasing in population and importance and in the last few years, as business has increased, the judicial necessities of the place have also increased. I have given my hon. friend the result of the comparison between the two places showing that there is four times as much business done at Sydney as at Halifax.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know that that is a fair test to apply as to salary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If you start in and say it is fair to give a judge at Halifax $3,000 a year, surely you cannot dispute the correctness of the proposition that a judge who does four times the work is at least entitled to the same salary.

Mr. FOWLER. That may be true, but why should the judge at Halifax get more than the judges in the rural districts ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend must ask my predecessor that.

Mr. FOWLER. Your predecessor is not here. If he were here my hon. friend would not be occupying that position. The judge of a rural district has to devote all his time to the performance of his judicial duties. He can do nothing else. He has no other way of earning a living, except by acting as judge. He does all the business that is brought before him, and he should be entitled to the same remuneration for all his time as a judge who does more business. It seems to me that if I were a county court judge I should prefer, even at the same salary, to be a judge in one of those districts in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; they have all they can do to keep themselves out of mischief, or perhaps I should say, idleness. Their duties are not very heavy on the bench, and I think there should be a uniform scale of remuneration for judges whether the judge lives in the city or in the country. It may be that his living expenses would be greater by living in a city like Halifax than in Sydney, and I say that with all respect to my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall). Sydney, I fancy, is not as expensive a place to live in as Halifax.

Mr. KENDALL. Much more so.

Mr. FOWLER. Even if there should be a little more business in one place than another there should be no discrimination amongst the judges.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that is right.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the hon. minister will do well to strike out this item.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It will not prevent an increase to the other judges; on the contrary, the tendency always has been to level up the others, not to level down.

Mr. COPP. Will the minister promise to look into the business done by the other judges ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will not give any undertaking ; to depreciate one does not help the other.

Mr. GOURLEY. Although I have listened to the criticism with a great deal of interest, I think the proper view is that we had better let this $600 be voted because it will form a reason for increasing the salaries of the other judges. There is no doubt that the salaries of the county court judges are more deserving to be raised than the salaries of Supreme Court judges in Nova Scotia. A man is not badly off with a salary of $4,000, and travelling expenses, to the extent of $1,000, which practically means a salary of $4,800 or $5,000 a year. A county court judge in Nova Scotia does more work than most of the Supreme Court judges as a rule; and while $4,000 is a fair salary, with the addition of the circuit indemnity, the salary given to the county court judge is absolutely penurious. The salary of the Supreme Court judge will keep him in decency and enable him to show some moderate style of hospitality ; but a county court judge with a salary of $2,400, is required to maintain about the same social position, and while the one has a salary of $5,000 a year, the other has to skimp along with $2,400, and it becomes almost unendurable. I know Judge Dodd very well ; he is a very capable man.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I believe he is one of the most competent judges we have.

Mr. GOURLEY. He is a capable man all round. He was a member of this House; he belongs to a distinguished judicial family in Nova Scotia ; his father was an eminent judge in our province, and I do not begrudge him his addition to his salary. Take the case of Judge Morse, at Amherst. He refused a Supreme Court judgeship some years ago, because he had a large establishment in Cumberland county requiring his personal attention and did not wish to leave Amherst. He is a very eminent man in Nova Scotia, and to offer such a man $2,400 a year is an indignity. I say that the salary of the Nova Scotia county court judges ought to be raised, in preference to any other judicial salaries in Nova Scotia. I want to put myself on record on that score, because we have very capable men as county court judges. They were all good lawyers, enjoying a good practice, men of good ability ; men like Dodd and Morse, eminent men, far above the average lawyer we have in Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is saying a good deal.

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes it is. We have had quite a run of big fish down there. The breed is a little run out just now, but we hope to improve it. There is too much difference between the salary of a county court judge at $2,400, and a Supreme Court judge at $5,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Do they not act as local judges of the Supreme Court ?

Mr. GOURLEY. They are what we call masters. They take over the chamber business of the Supreme Court and make orders and foreclosures and so on. The county court judges are very useful officers, and they do their business thoroughly. I want to be on record as favouring an increase of their salaries, to $3,000 at least.

Mr. KENDALL. I am not of the legal profession, but I am able to say that during the last three or four years the work of Judge Dodd has been very onerous indeed. The population of the district over which he has jurisdiction is not 73,000, but probably 87,000. We have had come to us, amongst the great influx of population, a large element that gives rise to a considerable amount of legal work. To my knowledge, Judge Dodd spends the greater part of his time discharging his duties, and no man of his attainments should be expected to work continuously as he does, for a salary of $2,400. I certainly think that $3,000 is little enough for the position that he occupies.

Mr. COPP. I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to this increase of salary for Judge Dodd. I believe that he is entitled to it. But I contend that the county court judges should receive the same increase.

Mr. FOWLER. When you are taking into consideration the raising of the salaries of the Nova Scotia county court judges, you must not forget an equally able body of men: the county court judges of New Brunswick, who perform just as arduous duties as do their confreres in Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The salaries of all the judges throughout Canada will have to be considered together.

Yukon law library, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There was money voted for this last year.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Like the poor, we always have these expenditures with us.

M. FOWLER. Who buys these books ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The request is sent by the judges, to the department. It is checked over by us, and the order is given over by the deputy minister.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you have a central library at Dawson ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. When a judicial district in a territory is first established we provide the law library until the Bar Association is formed to take it over. Last year the Regina law library was taken over by the Regina Law Association, which will be responsible for it in the future. When the cost of freight is added, these books cost a very large sum in the Yukon. The judges have no access to public libraries, and as the cases are of considerable importance, we must supply them with law books. I hope that next year the Yukon Bar will be sufficiently important to take over the library. Including this vote we have spent altogether about $12,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Do the judges all reside at Dawson ?

Mr. GOURLEY.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, the only other place at which they occasionally hold court is at White Horse.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a large item coming year after year. It is doubtful if we use that much for the library here.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I ventured to suggest this year that we should send up the old editions of our text books which we have at the Supreme Court, where we are constantly renewing our library by putting in new editions. With a few exceptions, the old editions are as good as the new. Often a man issues a new edition simply to sell it. My suggestion was protested against, but I have made up my mind that we should do that.

Mr. LANCASTER. How much has been spent altogether on this library ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This will make $12,000.

To pay the account of the Prince Albert 'Advocate' for announcing the proclamation and notice of the Saskatchewan election of 1900, notwithstanding anything in the Dominion Elections Act, $297.48.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the payment of this account not refused by the Auditor General ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The point was that it did not come within the schedule of services specially authorized ; but the view was taken that the exceptional circumstances justified the returning officer in publishing these notices.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this complete the payment of all the election expenses of the election of 1900 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I think not. There have been some items standing for some time which have been the subject of negotiation with the Auditor General.

Mr. GOURLEY. This seems an enormous sum of money for advertising the ordinary proclamation. In an ordinary city it costs only $15.

Mr. OLIVER. This item does not concern my constituency. Prince Albert is in the constituency of Mr. Davis, the member for Saskatchewan, and I can merely tell the committee what he told me concerning this item when the supplementary estimates first came down. In order that the people may know the boundaries between the polling divisions, it is necessary that the proclamation setting forth the boundaries shall receive the fullest possible publication, because a man votes on residence, and is entitled to vote only in the polling division in which he resides. The population varying all the time by continual increase, the boundaries are different from time to time.

In the Prince Albert district there is a mixed population of French and English, and it was thought desirable by the returning officer that the proclamation setting forth the boundaries of the polling divisions should be printed in the newspaper in French and English. It was so done, and this is the bill. I believe the payment has been delayed some considerable time on the ground, I suppose, that the bill was large.

Mr. GOURLEY. The proclamation would be only three or four inches in length ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it sets forth every polling division. I do not know how many there were in Saskatchewan, but in Alberta there were over eighty.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not the proclamation put up also ?

Mr. OLIVER. The law provides that the proclamation shall be posted up, but in Saskatchewan it was thought that was not sufficient and that it would be desirable to put it in the newspaper. The returning officer thought it was desirable to have the boundaries of the polling divisions printed in the newspapers.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think the newspaper editor was kicking.

Mr. OLIVER. I could not tell anything about that ; but with regard to the amount charged, the description of from seventy to eighty polling divisions necessarily occupied a very large space, and when that was duplicated in French, it meant doubling the size of the newspaper. The advertisement would be as large as the newspaper in size ; and considering the number of issues from the time the writ was issued to the election, I suppose the charge would be all right at the usual advertising rates.

Mr. FOWLER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman why this should be necessary in the Saskatchewan county and not in his own ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that it was really more necessary in the one than in the other. It was just a matter of opinion on the part of the returning officer. He did not consider that the posting of the proclamation gave sufficiently accurate publicity, and he thought of supplementing it by this means. I may say that even in the district of Alberta, the posting of the proclamation is found rather insufficient, and for my own part, I publish the boundaries of the polling divisions in my own locality, but I do not publish the boundaries throughout the whole district. That would be altogether too much. But I considered that the posting of the proclamation was insufficient. I felt that there was the same lack of information as was felt in this case, and I published the actual boundaries in the few districts where my paper is circulated.

Mr. SPROULE. Did you charge it to the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I did not.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is this a Tory paper ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there an amount similar to this paid in connection with the election of 1896 ? I would suppose that if this was necessary in 1900, it would be more necessary in 1896, because the population would naturally then be less conversant with the boundaries of the different municipalities and the different polling sub-divisions. We should have some information why it is necessary to pay this amount in that one particular constituency when no such necessity exists anywhere else.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no personal knowledge of the matter and we will let the item stand until I can get information from the Secretary of State.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has said that as the population increases and becomes more established, the boundaries of the polling divisions will become better known. On the contrary, as the population increases the boundaries of the polling divisions have to be changed, and it is because of the continual changes from the increase of the population that it is desirable the fullest possible information should be given immediately before each election. It was for that reason I published the boundaries in my newspaper. The differences between the conditions in Alberta and Saskatchewan are these, Throughout Alberta there are a number of centres of settlements, each of which has its local paper. My paper, which is published in the north end of the constituency, does not circulate largely in the southern or central part. The papers published at Calgary have no large circulation at either end, and the southern papers have no large circulation at either the centre or the north ; but in the case of Prince Albert, that is the chief town of the Saskatchewan district, and the Prince Albert papers cover the whole district of the Saskatchewan. But the publisher of any paper in Alberta would not cover the whole district of Alberta.

Mr. SPROULE. Any one conversant with the Election Act must know that it gives no authority to the returning officer to do this. His duty is clearly set out, and the number of proclamations which shall be posted—three in each polling sub-division. These give all the information to which the voter is entitled, and it was a gratuitous act on the part of the returning officer to order this advertisement. I do not understand how the Attorney General allowed the item to pass. With regard to the charge, even though the publications were in French and English, $300 seems an exorbitant figure. I am afraid it was only a sop given some newspaper man, who perhaps either was a strong advocate of the member elected or one of these people who are always desirous to get as much as possible out of an election.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No objection was taken by the Auditor General to the price, as not being fair and reasonable. The only objection he took was that the returning officer had no authority to do this. But after all he was an officer of parliament and acted in good faith ; and, as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has explained, the posting of these publications does not give sufficient notice where so many new settlers are coming in, I am inclined to think that we should pass this item under the circumstance.

Mr. SPROULE. What the hon. minister has said would apply to every constituency in British Columbia, Manitoba and territories. They are all in a new country comparatively speaking, and the population is continually changing, but no returning officer, except in this constituency, has been so wanting in intelligence as not to keep within the law. It is just possible that between the returning officer and the proprietor of the paper, it was agreed that this advertisement should be put in on the chance of its being paid for.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am not too particular about accounts, but I have a suspicion that this claim is a pure after-thought. This gentleman was a warm supporter of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). They published this matter, probably, as campaign matter. I know I spend several hundred dollars for campaign work in my own constituency, and I neither know nor care what it is for.

Mr. OLIVER. Probably for the other fellow.

Mr. GOURLEY. I cannot bother with these things. But I am a little more frank in these matters than most people are. I do not see any use in being a hypocrite. Every one who runs an election knows what is done. It seems to me that in this case this was simply campaign work done in the interest of the candidate by the party paper.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It could not be campaign work. It was not partisan material.

Mr. GOURLEY. It is necessary in the interest of the candidate that there should be full knowledge on the part of the people of the constituency as to the boundaries of polling subdivisions, so that his voters may go to the right place.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Both parties would have the advantage of this advertisement.

Mr. GOURLEY. I know. But I can easily conceive circumstances under which this would be excellent campaign work. I do not think it should be paid for. It was probably published for the benefit of the party, and afterwards some ingenious fellow developed the idea of sending the account into the government to see if they could get it through. I would rather vote $1,000 that this man had honestly earned, than vote ten cents for an unjust claim.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let it stand.

Item allowed to stand.

To pay arrears of superannuation allowances to ex-lockmaster W. J. Casselman, Williamsburg canals, from January 1, 1902, to June 30, 1903, at $97.37 per annum, $146.05 ; to increased allowance for year ending June 30, 1904 to $296.63 at which sum it shall hereafter be paid, $97.37, total $243.42.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to correct an error in the superannuation. This gentleman had been a lockmaster and his services were dispensed with by his superior. He was afterwards restored to duty, but not classed as a lockmaster. When superannuated later on, he was superannuated at a lower salary than that of a lockmaster. On further investigation, it was found that, in dispensing with his services, no Order in Council had been passed, and technically he had not ceased to be a lockmaster, and so was entitled to superannuation on a lockmaster's salary.

Dominion lands—chargeable to income—further amount required for protection of timber and tree planting, $15,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Before I explain this item, I may say that I was asked by one of the hon. gentlemen on the other side a question with regard to the printing of maps. I have here the information about that. I am informed that with reference to the question in the House as to the purchase of maps by the Geological Survey, the usual course is pursued by the Geological Survey of forwarding all requisitions to the King's Printer, and the maps are purchased by that officer. I understand they are all supplied in Canada, some having been bought from the Burland Company, others from Mortimer & Co., Ottawa, the Federal Press Company, and also the Toronto Lithographing Company.

Mr. GOURLEY. None from the United States ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, we would not go to the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the prices are reasonable ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no reason to doubt it.

Mr. SPROULE. Were they produced in Canada or only purchased here ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I could not say. As to this item with regard to protection of timber and tree-planting, I was asked to give some information of what had been done by the department this year. I find that 22 forest fire rangers were employed during the dry weather; eight in the railway belt in British Columbia, six in the North-west Territories, and eight in Manitoba. Also 8,790 fire notices on parchment were posted along the routes of travel warning the public against careless use of fire. In addition to this, over 5,000 circulars were distributed and a large number of copies of the Bush Fires Act of British Columbia, the Prairies Fires Ordinance of the North-west Territories, and the Fire Prevention Act of Manitoba have been circulated. Fire-guards at Banff and on the west side of the Turtle Mountain timber reserve have been constructed. The Long lake timber reserve has been explored and set aside, also the Yoho park and the Rocky Mountains park greatly enlarged. Since the adoption of the fire-ranging system we have practically lost no timber in the railway belt in British Columbia, notwithstanding two very dry seasons.

As to tree-planting on the plains, the officers of the department advise me that, in co-operation with the settlers, 918,000 seedling trees and 564 pounds of tree seed were planted. These were given free to farmers last year, the average of trees to each farmer being about 1,450. The report of the inspector is that about 80 per cent of the trees sent out that have gone through the winter are still living, and that about 90 per cent of last year's planting were living last fall. This spring 630 settlers received trees, and the number of new applicants for trees for next season is 1,649. We have set apart a reserve for tree-planting at Indian Head, and the vote is to provide also for that. There is increased work in guarding timber. This item will include additional fire rangers at forestry station at Indian Head and additional buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. gentleman left the question of the maps unfinished. I would like to ask if the maps were printed in Canada. I am under the impression that they were printed in the United States, though I may be wrong. I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that some were supplied by the Burland Company. I take it that they would be lithographed in Canada. There were some also by an Ottawa firm.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mortimer & Co. They are engravers and lithographers, and have done work for the government for many years. They have done work also for the Post Office Department, and are very reliable officers. The firm in Toronto is also a very large lithographing firm. It is a house that would make such maps as this. I have no knowledge of this item, but I think we may fairly assume that this is their work. That company did some engraving for the Post Office Department, in making maps of some of the provinces, so that I know they do that class of work.

Mr. BLAIN. In the committee it came out that the small atlases that have been so generally circulated in Canada and the United States were produced in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the only thing we can do is to have reciprocity in this matter and to exact a promise from the Postmaster General that if we allow this to pass he will not be so belligerent in reference to our mail bags.

To compensate the Canadian Bank of Commerce for services in the Yukon, from May 1, 1902 to April 30, 1903, $19,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a vote to pay the Bank of Commerce a commission on the business they handle in the Yukon. We have been reducing the percentage from year to year and after a short time affairs in the Yukon will get down to the same order as affairs throughout Canada, and we will not have any commission to pay. We paid the bank in the first year three-fourths of one per cent, in the second year we reduced it to five-eighths of one per cent, and for this year we have reduced it to one-half of one per cent.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is based on the one-half of one per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this another case where Cox won't wait ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, in this case, so far as I know, they have enough faith to wait patiently.

To pay Charles Miller, $3,713.32 and Robert Miller, $3,339.05 for amounts deposited by them in the Post Office Savings Bank at St. Scholastique and fraudulently withdrawn by the assistant postmaster, $7,052.37.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Portions of moneys handed to the assistant postmaster of this town for deposit in the Post Office Savings Bank were appropriated by him for his own purposes.

Mr. GOURLEY. What evidence have you that the money was deposited ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The case went through the courts and the man is now serving his term in the penitentiary for it. The assistant postmaster who committed the thefts and forgeries had different methods of embezzling.

Mr. GOURLEY. Was nothing recovered from him ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He had nothing whatever. He was a member of a highly respectable family and his father, I think, had been the postmaster there for a great many years. It was a very sad case.

Mr. GOURLEY. Had he no bonds ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not for such a large amount as this ; he was, I think, covered by the insurance system but the largest amount insured is very much less than this.

Mr. GOURLEY. Was that paid ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The amount paid out of our own fund, would not cover $7,000. We have in the Post Office Department a system of insurance by assessment upon the staff. Each postmaster is assessed a certain sum and that assessment is put into a fund which is available to the extent that it is supposed to insure him. But we do not assess a man sufficiently to provide insurance to the amount of thousands of dollars. The amount of insurance for postmasters is comparatively small.

Mr. GOURLEY. This opens a grave difficulty. In Truro, for instance, there is an enormous amount deposited in the savings bank, and I would ask if there is no security for the public. Is not the custodian guaranteed by any security ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was explaining that there are a large number of the employees in the post office service, postmasters and persons in fiduciary positions, upon whom an assessment is levied. For instance, formerly when a man was appointed, he would give the bond of a trust company for $500 or $600, which was considered a large amount. He would pay this guarantee company an annual fee and they would issue a bond in his favour. In case of loss, if you could bring the loss within the terms of the bond, you would recover from that company the amount of that bond, but any shortage above this would of course be lost, unless he had property. Of late years the system has been changed and instead of taking the bond of a company or of a private citizen the department makes an assessment on the employees. For example, if a postmaster had to give bonds for $500, instead of his paying that assessment to a guarantee company and getting the bond of that guarantee company he would pay that amount to the government.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the limit in regard to a deposit in the post office savings bank for one depositor ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think any man can deposit $3,000 without a permit and above that he is obliged to have a permit.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That feature was considered in this case ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not recall that point.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I observe that in one case the amount was $3,713.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are very thrifty people. I think they are two brothers.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not my point. My point is as to the amount of money they can deposit.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the amount includes interest.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have heard that the limit is $1,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it is $3,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The excess is probably the interest added.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. $3,000 would meet my point. I think the hon. Postmaster General ought to be able to tell the committee the total amount that these depositors had at their credit because the House would naturally be required to vote the difference between that and the amount from that guarantee fund to which the hon. Postmaster General has referred out of which the defaulter would have a certain amount available to meet this defalcation and we should only be asked to vote the difference between that and the amount to which the depositor is entitled. What is that sum ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no information about that. If the hon. gentleman desires it the item can stand. This is a matter in the Finance Department in one sense. The officers of the Post Office Department act as agents for the Finance Department.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman has not all these particulars the item should stand because as a matter of business we ought to vote no more than the actual amount due.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This, I am assured, represents only the balance required after taking into account the sum received from the insurance fund.

Mr. FOWLER. I think this item should be allowed to stand.

Mr. GOURLEY. In answer to my hon. and learned friend from Pictou (Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) the hon. Postmaster General said that any one man could deposit $3,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The crime was not in respect to the $3,000. He cannot put in more than $1,000 in one year.

Mr. GOURLEY. He can put that in in one day. Could any number of people deposit $1,000 with the Postmaster General in one day ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then the hon. Postmaster General might be the recipient in one day of $100,000. How long does the postmaster keep that money ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If there is a bank in the town he is obliged to deposit with the bank to the credit of the receiver general every day before the close of banking hours.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then he issues a pass book to the person making the deposit ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the pass book is issued at Ottawa by the savings bank department here.

Mr. FOWLER. He gives a receipt ?

Mr. GOURLEY. It strikes me that the system is rather loose, because the postmaster, if he is only required to give a receipt or issue a pass book, might receive an enormous amount of money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He does not issue a pass book.

Mr. GOURLEY. The people in the country have the utmost confidence in the Post Office Savings Bank system and there should be no slip. There has been a slip in this matter and when there has been a slip in this case it might occur in other cases unless there is something very peculiar about this case. I want to find out how this man did this ?

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He forged the depositor's name.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In some instances he forged cheques and in other instances he simply embezzled money handed in for deposit. He would make an entry in the pass book, show it to these men then put it in his pocket and erase the entry. He carried on a system of frauds for a long time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we give too much information as to how this thing can be done we will make it easy.

Mr. GOURLEY. The hon. Postmaster General said that he made an entry in this pass book and then erased it. That would be detected when it reached Ottawa.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will get all the information in regard to the item.

Mr. GOURLEY. We might have a large deposit made every day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There need not be any want of confidence on the part of the public because the fact that we are voting this item shows that the public are protected.

Mr. GOURLEY. But this is a matter of grace. Suppose parliament did not vote this money what would these men do ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government would be responsible. There is no question about that.

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not suppose as a matter of law they could recover because this man has committed a crime.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, they could recover. If a depositor hands in money to the postmaster he is the agent of the government and the government are therefore responsible for the money.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think the hon. Minister of Justice would get up an ingenious defence and that he would take the ground that if an officer of the government did something outside of the government regulations the government could not be held responsible.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is a very exceptional case. The man who was postmaster at this place was also notary and he was acting as agent for these men and a part of his fraud consisted in representing that he was investing their money for them. In one case he forged a cheque on the department for a certain amount and the money was paid out by the department on this forged cheque. In so far as that money is concerned the government are responsible for it. If they part with money without any authority they are responsible. These men were ignorant people living in the country who had by their industry amassed a sum of money and hon. gentlemen know that a notary stands in the confidence of the country people in Quebec only second to the parish priest. He had the confidence of the people, and at the same time he was postmaster. It is a fraud that would not occur in many years. It had nothing to do with the system.

Mr. GOURLEY. The Minister of Justice has pointed out a new difficulty. If the Prime Minister were the agent for these people in investing their money, it is a question whether we are responsible. If he did not receive it in his capacity as agent for the government, we would not be responsible except as a very high act of grace.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose the government will make the information full enough to cover the point raised by the Minister of Justice, as to whether this man received the money as a government officer, or received it simply as the agent of these men to deposit.

Mr. CLANCY. I made a request to the Postmaster General early in the session, to bring down the correspondence and papers in relation to the dismissal of the postmistress at the village of Lambton. I would be glad if the Postmaster General would bring it down along with this other information. The hon. gentleman knows how little disposed I am to give him trouble, and he will appreciate my long suffering at the delay.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was much disappointed that the hon. gentleman was not present on Wednesday night, when I had the papers here. I will have them brought down again.

Mr. CLANCY. I will endeavour to be present when this item is up for consideration again.

To meet expenses in The King vs. British American Bank Note Company, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The British Bank Note Company had a contract with the government for the printing of bank bills, and for the engraving of stamps. The representation was, that instead of giving us steel engraving, as the contract called for, they gave us lithograph. The court of Exchequer determined that the claim of the Crown was good, and judgment was rendered for $97,000. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, and we made up our mind, that possibly it would be better to compromise, and we accepted $50,000 in cash from the British American Bank Note Company, and each party agreed to pay his own costs. The principle on which the court proceeded was that we were entitled to recover the difference in the cost between steel engraving and lithographing.

Mr. GOURLEY. Did you use the stamps?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We used the stamps, and got value, and it was not detected. It occurred to me that under the circumstances, if we received $50,000 in the way of damages, we were fairly well off.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—MARINE AND FISHERY OFFICE AT HALIFAX.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BELL. I wish to call the attention of the leader of the House to this telegram which has been placed in my hands :

The following resolution unanimously passed city council last night :—

Whereas, it is rumoured that the Department of Marine and Fisheries proposes removing their quarters from this city and whereas, this council believes that such a step is unnecessary and, if carried out, would be a decided injustice to this city. Therefore resolved that this council do protest against any such removal as outlined above and further that copies of this resolution be wired to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Minister of Finance and to our Dominion representatives Messrs. Roche and Borden.

(Sgd.) L. FRED. MONAGHEN,
City Clerk.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That arises from a misunderstanding. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has taken an appropriation for a wharf in Halifax harbour, but, as I stated in connection with that item, the chief purpose of that wharf is for storage, especially for some of the stores of the department which are of a character that they cannot be stored within the city limits. The wharf which the minister proposes to acquire will be necessary for storage, and as I have intimated it may be necessary that he will have to construct further accommodation for the terminal facilities of his department at Halifax.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the right hon. gentleman any definite information as to the award of the Alaskan Boundary Commission ? I heard it stated on the street that there has been a decision.

The PRIME MINISTER. There has been no decision yet ; it is expected on Tuesday.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. SPROULE. When will the resolutions referred to by the Prime Minister to-day, regarding the Quebec bridge, be laid before the House ? What business will be taken on Monday ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Notice of the resolution will be given, I think, not later than Monday. We will take up all the Bills that are on the programme for Monday's business.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, October 19, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

MOUNTED POLICE PENSIONS.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Mounted Police Pension Act, 1899. He said : Mr. Speaker, in moving for leave to introduce this Bill at this time I recognize that unless the government agree to put it on the Order paper as a government Bill, it is absolutely impossible to make any progress with it. I may explain that the intent of the amendment is to put the non-commissioned officers and men of the mounted police force in the same position as regards the calculation of their pensions as the officers are put in by the measure adopted by the House last session. At the present time the pensions of the non-commissioned officers and men of the force are calculated upon their average pay for three years preceding their retirement. By the Officers' Pension Act put through last year, the officers' pensions are now calculated upon their pay and allowances at the moment of their retirement.

Mr. GOURLEY. The same rule should apply to the men of the force.

Mr. SCOTT. I think so. I think the House will agree that the non-commissioned officers and men should occupy the same position in that respect as the officers. It is entirely unnecessary for me or anybody else to praise the mounted police force. Their services are recognized——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I rise to a point of order. This appears to be a Bill to amend the Pension Act of the Mounted Police Force. The hon. member has no right to introduce a Bill of that kind. It must be introduced by a member of the cabinet, by resolution and with the consent of the Crown.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is difficult for me to decide just now whether this is a money Bill or not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is, from the statement the hon. gentleman has made, to increase the pensions of the mounted police.

Mr. SCOTT. What I am really doing is urging that the government should take up this proposition.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member is moving to increase the pensions ?

Mr. SCOTT. That would certainly be the effect of the amendment.

The PRIME MINISTER. As my hon. friend has already stated, the object he has in view is that the government should take charge of this Bill. The point taken by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is certainly well taken. I may say to my hon. friend that at this late stage of the session it is impossible for us to take up any more legislation than we have ; but the point to which he has called the attention of the House is engaging the attention of the government at the present time.

The matter dropped.

CONTROL OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 269) respecting the management and control of public and other works. He said : By the statutes which we now have relating to the different departments, among others the Departments of Agriculture, Public Works, Marine and Fisheries and Secretary of State, it is provided that the Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the transfer of any duties from one department to another. It is intended to make this provision applicable to all the departments of the government.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, CAR NO. 001.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville)—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Is it true the government paid for certain improvements to the car No. 001, belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ?
2. If so, how much did the government pay for the flooring, curtains, bedding, tinting, carpets, sofas and other improvements ?
3. For whom and by whom was that car so fitted up ?
4. When and how were those expenditures authorized ?
5. Has the government been informed that the said car is still in the possession of or used by the Honourable Joseph Israel Tarte, one of the members of this House ?
6. Is it the intention of the government to reclaim the cost of the said improvements, either from the owner of the said car, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or from the Honourable Mr. Tarte, who has the use of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes.
2. I fear that the department is not in a position to give detailed information, but I am perfectly willing that this question should stand and be further looked into.
3. For the then Minister of Public Works.
4. By the then Minister of Public Works.
5. Yes.
6. It has not received the attention of the department.

MONTREAL HARBOUR—PERMANENT SHEDS.

Mr. BUREAU—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Have the plans been prepared outside of the Department of Public Works for the construction of permanent sheds in the port of Montreal, or for other works ?
2. If so, to whom has the preparation of these plans been given ; and why has an engineer not a permanent member of the staff been employed ?
3. What was the remuneration which this engineer was to receive ?
4. What account has been filed ?
5. What amount has he received ?
6. What is the claim pending in the Department of Public Works in reference to this work ?
7. What was the total estimate of the cost of this work ?
8. Have the harbour commissioners of Montreal, under whose control the port of Montreal is, been notified that the plans of the said permanent sheds were thus ordered ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes.
2. To Mr. H. E. Vautelet, by order of the then Minister of Public Works, who has left no record in the department of his reasons.

3. No arrangements as to remuneration appear to have been made.
4. $49,343.40.
5. Nothing has been paid Mr. Vautelet.
6. Mr. Vautelet has filed a petition of right for $49,343.40.
7. $2,565,400.
8. The harbour commissioners have recently been informed that plans were prepared.

DREDGE 'W. S. FIELDING.'

Mr. BUREAU—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Who has made the plans of the dredge 'W. S. Fielding,' now in course of construction at the Sorel shipyards ?
2. What has been the cost of the preparation of the plans ?
3. Why have they been prepared outside of the department, and by an engineer not belonging to the administration ?
4. What was the total estimate of the cost of the said dredge ?
5. At what exact date were the works commenced ?
6. What expenses have been incurred on the same dredge up to 1st of November, 1902 ?
7. What expenses have been incurred since ?
8. What will the dredge cost when completed ?
9. When will it be ready to commence work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Mr. A. W. Robinson.
2. Mr. Robinson is to receive 5 per cent on the total cost of dredge for preparation of plans and supervision ; up to date he has been paid the sum of $9,000.
3. By order of the then Minister of Public Works the preparation of the plans were entrusted to Mr. Robinson.
4. $350,000.
5. The 1st of June, 1901.
6 and 7. The total amount charged against the appropriation for dredge 'Fielding' was, on the 1st of November, 1902, $204,456.42.
8. About $520,000, less value of permanent plant and buildings remaining in shipyard after completion of dredge.
9. In the spring of 1905.

POSTAL NEWSPAPER BOXES.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. By whom are the boxes for the reception of newspapers which are placed on the streets manufactured ? And were tenders asked for the supply of the same ?
2. If tenders were asked, who were the tenderers ?
3. Are any of the same being supplied by Fleury & Sons, of Aurora, Ontario ?
4. Are the same being supplied by them under tender ?
5. If any are being supplied by Fleury & Sons, what price is being paid for each ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. By Butterworth & Company, Ottawa, and J. Fleury's Sons, Aurora. Tenders were asked for.
2. Answered by reply to question 1.
3. Yes.
4. Answered by reply to question 1.
5. $25 per box.

EXCISE TAXATION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What revenue per capita was derived from excise taxation for the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1896, and 30th June, 1903, respectively ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). The revenue derived from excise taxation for the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1896, was $7,836,407.26, and for the year ended 30th June, 1903, $11,940,702.77. As there is no definite information as to the population in 1896 and 1903, the excise revenue per capita for these two years cannot be accurately stated.

ST. ANDREWS RAPIDS.

Mr. McCREARY asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to send an engineer at an early date to make a report upon the works done at St. Andrews rapids, in Manitoba ?
2. Will that engineer have instructions and authority to report upon the advisability of such changes being made in the plans as to permit of the construction of a bridge, suitable for passenger and railway traffic ?
3. Will such engineer have authority to report as to the possibility of creating a water power at this point ?
4. In the event of the engineer reporting favourably for the construction of a bridge for passenger and railway traffic in connection with the works, is it the intention of the government to proceed at an early date in the construction of same ; and will the bridge be free of tolls for passenger and vehicle traffic ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4. On receipt of this report the matter will receive the prompt and earnest attention of the department.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY.

Mr. GRANT—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Is the government aware that during the investigation held on the administration of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in 1898, under and by virtue of a royal commission, it was proved that certain persons had profited by the irregularities committed by certain officials of this institution, to the extent of several hundred dollars ?
2. If so, have these persons offered to reimburse, or have they reimbursed the sums of which they have so benefited out of public property ?
3. If not, is it the intention of the government to take legal proceedings to force them to reimburse the value of the materials they so appropriated for their own use, or the value of the work performed for their benefit by the labourers paid out of public money?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). A report, which was the result of an investigation, was made and distributed to parliament.

STEAMER 'EUREKA.'

Mr. GRANT—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Is the government aware that the steamer 'Eureka,' belonging to the Department of Public Works, has been put at the disposal, or rented to some inventor, for the purpose of making an experiment of some invention, purporting to prevent collisions between steamers at sea ?
2. If so, to whom was said loan made, and upon the instructions of whom was it done ?
3. What has been the amount of expenditure made by the department, or occasioned by said experiment?
4. Is there any claim pending in the department in reference to work performed on said boat, at the request of the persons having the loan of the boat, for dockage, &c.?
5. For how many months, weeks or days was said steamer 'Eureka' kept at the expense of the government, not rendering the service assigned to her, whilst under the control of said inventor?
6. What amount was so expended by the department in keeping the boat at the disposal of the inventor?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes.
2. To Mr. A. Lacoste ; under instructions from late Minister of Public Works.
3. $11,776.
4. Yes.
5. One hundred and thirteen days.
6. Same as No. 3.

SUGAR ENTERED FOR HOME CONSUMPTION.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total amount of sugar above No. 16 D.S. in colour, and of all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards, entered for home consumption during the year ending 30th June, 1903, and what was the amount of the duty paid thereon?
2. What was the total amount of sugar, N.E.S., not above No. 16 D.S., in colour, entered for home consumption during the year ending 30th June, 1903, and what was the amount of the duty paid thereon?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson) :

1. The total amount of sugar above No. 16 D.S. in colour, and of all refined sugars of whatever kinds, grades or standards, as originally entered for home consumption during the year ending 30th June, 1903, was 26,672,033 pounds ; and the amount of duty paid thereon $330,652.03.

2. The total amount of sugar, N.E.S., not above No. 16 D.S. in colour (including sugar drainings or pumpings drained in transit, melado or concentrated melado, tank bottoms and sugar concrete) entered for home consumption during the year ending 30th June, 1903, was 361,698,799 pounds ; and the amount of duty paid thereon $2,316,622.61.

It may be explained that as a general rule sugar is originally entered for consumption at the maximum rate for its class ; subject to refund afterwards upon test ascertained by the polariscope.

FRANKING CAMPAIGN LITERATURE.

Mr. DAVIS asked :

1. Is the government aware that several car-loads of campaign literature have been shipped to Ottawa from the office of the Montreal 'Star,' and is being sent through the mails under the frank of George Taylor, M.P., and others?
2. Does the post office receive any revenue from the same?
3. Is there no limit to the franking privilege of members?
4. Can members of parliament send car-loads of literature through the mails free of charge?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. The facts are as stated in the first part of the question.
2. No.
3. The only apparent limit appears to be the capacity of the cars and the other transportation facilities.
4. I think I may say there is no limit except what I have given as answer to the third question.

Mr. TALBOT asked :

1. How many messengers and other sessional employees are occupied parcelling, stamping and addressing literature for Mr. George Taylor, M.P.?
2. How many wagon loads of such literature have been drawn from stations to parliament buildings ?
3. Who pays for these wagons ?
4. If these messengers or other employees were not busy at this work, would they be available for other parliamentary or ordinary duties ?
5. Have any additional employees been engaged for this purpose ?
6. What is their salary ?

Mr. SPEAKER :

1. No sessional employees are so occupied except in the post office, where each envelope is stamped.
2. No record has been kept of the number of wagon loads of mail matter brought to the House of Commons.
3. The cartage in question is not paid for by the House of Commons.
4. Yes.
5. and 6. No additional employees have been added to the House of Commons staff.

Mr. TALBOT asked :

1. Do the hundreds of mail bags now being used for the transmission of political literature, with the frank of Mr. George Taylor, M.P., and others, belong to the government Post Office Department?
2. If so, by whose authority are the said mail bags used for the above purpose?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock) :

1. They belong to the government.
2. By no one's authority. They are illegally in use.

CANADIAN SOUTH AFRICA CONSTABULARY —DISCHARGE.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria) asked :

1. Is the government aware that the members of the Canadian South African Constabulary had to purchase their discharge, if they wished of their own accord to leave that force? If so, why had they to so purchase their discharge?

2. Is the government aware that those returning to Canada had to pay their own expenses home again? And if so, why?

3. Is the government aware that these constabulary members were not duly attested as South African Constabulary in South Africa ?

4. Is the government aware that these members did not take the oath of allegiance, nor were attested in Canada before leaving for South Africa?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) :

1. The conditions under which men were invited to enlist, contain the following :

'A non-commissioned officer or man may be discharged at any time by order of the officer commanding the division with or without gratuity. Discharge may be purchased with consent of officer commanding division for $97.33 during first year, $73 during the second year, and $48.66 during third year.'

2. The conditions under which men were invited to enlist also provide for passage back to Canada only after a total of five years' service.

3. No attestation in South Africa was necessary, that in Canada being sufficient.

4. No ; on the contrary they did take the oath of allegiance and their enlistment in Canada has been held to be valid by the Department of Justice of Canada.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the government if there is any statement to make regarding the findings of the Alaskan commission ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have no official information, but it is expected that the award upon the reference will be made to-morrow by the commissioners.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 259) to amend the North-west Territories Act.—The Minister of Justice.

Mr. SCOTT moved to add the following clause to the Bill :

Notwithstanding anything in the North-west Territories Act, or any Act in amendment thereto, the legislative assembly may, by ordinance, repeal the provisions of sections 49, 51, 53, 55, 64, 88, 89 and 90 of the said North-west Territories Act as amended and re-enacted the said provisions or substitute other provisions in lieu thereof, but nothing in this section contained shall be construed as giving to the legislative assembly power to pass ordinances for the constitution, organization or maintenance of courts of criminal jurisdiction, or respecting procedure in criminal matters.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The effect would be to confer on the North-west assembly power to regulate all matters connected with the civil jurisdiction of the province. That is to say, they may determine the sittings of the court, the places where the court is to sit, how often it is to sit ; they may provide for the sittings of the court in banc or with a single judge; provide for the division of the territory into judicial districts ; define the territorial jurisdiction of the judges, and so on—all matters relating to the civil organization of the court. I think it is a step in the right direction.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT moved to add the following clause to the Bill :

Notwithstanding anything in the North-west Territories Act, or any Act in amendment thereof, the legislative assembly may, by ordinance, repeal the provisions of sections 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 of chapter 19 of the statutes of 1888, and section 18 of chapter 17 of the statutes of 1894, as that section is enacted by section 9 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1897, and re-enact the said provisions or substitute other provisions in lieu thereof.

Mr. GOURLEY. This amendment seems objectionable, not necessarily in the subject-matter, but in that it gives a local legislature power to repeal sections of a statute passed by this parliament. There must surely be some more logical way to get it than that. It would hardly be dignified for us to confer that power.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would draw to the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) the fact that paragraph 4, now under consideration, has reference to the organization of the North-west council itself, as the other paragraph we have been discussing has reference to the organization of the courts. Now, if we repeal the provisions and merely give authority to the North-west council to make others, we leave an interregnum during which some embarrassing conditions might arise. By this amendment we, in effect, say that in all matters affecting the North-west assembly, that body shall have the right either to adopt what we have done or to repeal the enactments which we have passed, and substitute others. My hon. friend will see the difficulty of adopting any other course.

Mr. GOURLEY. I see, but still it seems that there ought to be some other way than to give power to the local legislature to repeal our enactments.

The MINITSER OF JUSTICE. It is a little off the line, but my hon. friend will see that it is not unconstitutional.

Mr. GOURLEY. I take it for granted that we have the power to delegate our authority. It is not so much the thing itself as the mode of doing it that I call attention to——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The difficulty that my hon. friend suggests occurred to my mind also, but it seems there is no relief. Suppose that these provisions were repealed. The North-west council may not sit for months yet. Should a by-election occur in the meantime, how is it to be provided for ? It seemed to me better to maintain the statute in these matters and simply give the legislature power to provide for the changes necessary.

Mr. GOURLEY. Has the hon. minister's department considered this and come to the conclusion that this is the only way in which it can be done ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is our view—this is the only way to avoid a hiatus.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported; read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES' RETIRING ALLOWANCES—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House concur in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 243) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts. He said : There are two amendments to this Bill. As to the first of them, it relates to section 2 of the Bill as passed by this House. That section provided as follows :—

2. If any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of a Superior Court of any of the provinces of Canada resigns or has heretofore resigned his office as such judge to accept the office of lieutenant governor of a province, and if he serves or has served as such lieutenant governor, and is not otherwise eligible for any retiring annuity as such judge, His Majesty may, at any time after the expiration of the term of service of such judge as lieutenant governor, grant to such judge an annuity equal to two-thirds of the salary annexed to the judicial office which he held at the time of his resignation, to commence immediately upon the issue of such letters patent, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

This has been eliminated from the Bill.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the practical effect of the amendment ?

The PRIME MINISTER. At the present time, a judge can withdraw after fifteen years of service and is entitled to a pension. The present object of the Bill in addition to this was that, when a judge has reached a certain limit of age he should be entitled to a full pension. After fifteen years, he receives a pension of two-thirds of his salary, and after thirty years of service, he is entitled to withdraw with a pension equal to his whole salary. The amendment under this clause was that if the judge was appointed lieutenant governor before he became entitled to his full pension, at the expiration of his term of five years as lieutenant governor, he would be entitled to his pension as a judge. This has been eliminated by the Senate, as it was thought to be an interference with the independence of the judiciary, and we concur.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are there any judges whom it affects ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know of any now.

Mr. SPROULE. I would draw the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister to the fact that this is a money Bill. The right belongs to this House to initiate, by resolution, and with the consent of the Crown, all Bills that provide for granting or using money belonging to the country, or imposing taxes or duties. In accordance with their rights, this House passed this Bill. The Bill was sent to the Senate, and has been by them amended. As I understand the constitutional rights of the two branches of the legislature, the Senate has no right to amend a money Bill. In amending this Bill, they have assumed a right which constitutionally they do not possess to amend a money Bill. I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he is not prepared, with his government, to defend the rights of the Commons, the elective chamber, which, undoubtedly has the right to deal with money Bills. When that question was being discussed in the other House, the first question raised was whether this was or was not a money Bill. I think that was completely settled by the authorities that was cited. First, it is a Bill dealing with pensions, which pensions are to be paid out of consolidated revenue. It provides for the using of a certain portion of the public revenue. It is, therefore, clearly a money Bill. The next question was raised, what is a money Bill. Edwin Gordon Blackmore's 'Procedure of the Legislative Council of South Australia,' at pages 172 and 182, says :

A Bill introduced by a resolution of the House on the report of the Committee of the House, is a money Bill.

May says, speaking of this class of Bills :

It follows accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in Bills which they receive from the committees, dealing with the above mentioned subjects, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, the amount of a vote or charge.

Todd says :

Money Bills are of three kinds : tax Bills, Bills of supply and Bills of appropriation.

Bourinot says, on page 585 of his second edition :

As a general rule, public Bills may originate in either House, but whenever they grant supplies of any kind, or involve directly or indirectly the levying or appropriation of any tax upon the people, they must be initiated in the popular branch, in accordance with law and English constitutional practice. Section 53 of the British North America Act, 1867, expressly provides :

Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

And a standing order of the House of Commons declares explicitly :

All aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such Bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

But the Senate alters them here by striking out one important clause, which provides for the appropriating of a certain amount of money. I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to this matter, and ask him if he is prepared to abandon the undoubted constitutional right of the House of Commons to control these Bills, and if he is prepared to accept the position taken by the Senate that they have a right to amend these money Bills.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no doubt that under our constitution as it has come down to us through the ages during which it has been formed, the granting of supplies in any form whatever is exclusively the privilege of the Commons, and all legislation, whether to levy or expend revenue, has to be originated in the Commons and cannot be altered in the upper chamber. But the question is : What is a money Bill ? If does not follow that every Bill which leaves this House which provides either for levying or expending revenue, is a money Bill. A money Bill has no special meaning in parliamentary language, and there is very little legislation which leaves this House which does not indirectly involve the granting of money, and in which therefore the privilege of the other branch of the legislature to exercise its powers of supervision could not be exercised if the hon. gentleman's doctrine were to prevail. The practice has been well understood, and we look to that to find a definition of a money Bill. A money Bill is, in its more restricted sense, a Supply Bill. Todd, which my hon. friend quoted a moment ago, gives an answer to the very question the hon. gentleman brings up, for Todd says on page 815 of the last edition of the first volume :

We will now proceed to consider the subject of money Bills, which are of three kinds, viz., tax Bills, Bills of supply, and Bills of appropriation. All these Bills have a peculiar form of preamble, which intimates that the revenue or grant of money is the peculiar gift of the House of Commons, and such Bills are invariably presented for the royal assent by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPROULE.

This is what is understood by a money Bill, it is a Bill presented by parliament for the royal assent. To ascertain its character you have only to refer to an appropriation Act of any one year, and you will find that our practice conforms exactly to the rule laid down by Todd, namely, that the Supply Bill, which is a money Bill in the sense affirmed a moment ago by my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) is always preceded by a preamble which you do not find in any other Bills which go directly from the Table here to the Senate. But money Bills are presented by the Speaker, and here is the preamble which we find in the beginning of every appropriation Act which is a money Bill :

Most Gracious Sovereign :

Whereas it appears from a message from His Excellency the Right Hon. Sir Gilbert John Elliott, Earl of Minto, Governor General of Canada, and the estimates accompanying the said message, that the sums hereinafter mentioned are required to defray certain expenses of the public service of Canada, not otherwise provided for, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th day of June, 1902, and the 30th day of June, 1903, and for other purposes connected with the public service : may it therefore please your Majesty——

And so on. Here is the preamble which characterizes what is known in the restricted language of parliamentary law as a money Bill, to which no amendment can be offered by the Senate. But there are many Bills which are initiated here by the Crown and which the upper House has no power to introduce. We have in this question before us a grant or an appropriation of public money, but it is not a money Bill in the restricted sense to which I alluded, though it is on the border line between a money Bill and a Bill of a public character. It has always been allowed to the Senate under such circumstances to offer an amendment; but it does not follow that because the Senate may offer such an amendment the House of Commons are bound to accept it without inquiry or discussion. Perhaps it might be said that under such circumstances the Commons might exercise the right of refusing to accept the amendments of the Senate, not merely to reject an amendment, but to deny to the Senate the power to offer any amendment to this Bill. But that would be carrying the doctrine too far. We have innumerable precedents where legislation such as provided for in this Bill has been amended by the Senate. No longer ago than 1898 a Bill was introduced into this House : An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, an Act which involved the expenditure of money, and it was reported from the Senate with several amendments in which the Senate asked our concurrence. These amendments were considered by the House of Commons, some were accepted and others were rejected; at all events their amendments were not deemed an invasion of the privileges of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the clause of that Bill involve an expenditure of money directly connected with the revenue ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I could not say at this moment, because I have not had time to look into it, but there were Bills of this character, and I desire to make it perfectly clear that the point taken by my hon. friend is not absolute. May lays the practice down just as I have stated it, that the House may or may not, just as they please, consider the amendment of the Senate but that the Senate are not going beyond their privileges in offering amendments to Bills of this nature. This is what May says :

If otherwise unobjectionable, the Commons usually accept amendments by the Lords, which, though not strictly regular, do not materially infringe the privileges of the Commons; and they justify their conduct by an entry inserted in the 'Journal,' under direction from the Speaker, explaining the motives of the agreement, stating, for instance, that the amendments are verbal—further the intention of the House—carry out the intention of the Commons—make the provisions of the Bill uniform and consistent—are rendered necessary by several Acts recently passed—or that the amendment does not alter or otherwise affect any valuation or assessment of taxation.

But, May goes further, and I call the attention of my hon. friend to this authority:

Even when amendments by the Lords are an infringement of privilege, it is not the invariable practice of the Commons to assert their claim regarding amendments made to Bills that they have sent to the Lords, which dealt with the relief of the poor, or with municipal, county and local rates and assessments; more especially when those amendments affected charges upon the people incidentally only, and were made for the purpose of giving effect to the legislative intentions of the Commons. The difficulty also of separating those amendments from other legislative provisions or amendments, to which there was no objection, has frequently prompted their acceptance by the Commons.

Even if there is an infringement of the authority of the Commons by the lords, the Commons have sometimes accepted the amendments because they thought they were in the right direction, properly amending the legislation which they had sent to the House of Lords for their consideration. The position I take upon this is that the Senate in this matter have not abused their privilege. The Bill that is under consideration is not one of those money Bills which it is beyond their power to amend. They have not violated any principle and even if there has been an infringement of the privileges of the Commons it is a case in which the Commons should not insist upon their rights.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think this is an important matter and while I always listen with approval to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who is always industrious and thorough in his remarks he will excise me, I think, when I point out that the test of this matter is to determine whether it is a money Bill and what is the object of the Bill. I understand the object of the Bill is to settle the classes which shall enjoy a pension. I therefore do not regard it as a money Bill and the Senate have simply said : We do not wish lieutenant governors to be placed among those classes. Is it a money Bill or Bill which settles the classes who shall enjoy a pension ?

Mr. SPROULE. It provides for a pension.

Mr. GOURLEY. The Bill itself provides for a pension. The Senate amendments simply says among those who enjoy a pension we do not wish to include lieutenant governors. It is really an amendment relieving the treasury to the extent that lieutenant governors are removed from the classes of people who shall enjoy a pension.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Senate have no right to do that.

Mr. SPROULE. That would not make it any more right.

Mr. GOURLEY. This is a case that comes to my mind. Suppose we sent up a Bill increasing the number of judges in the Supreme Court to ten. It would clearly, in so far as the revenue would be concerned, be a charge upon the revenue to provide for the salaries of ten judges. Cannot the Senate amend that Bill by reducing the number to eight or nine ?

Mr. SPROULE. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They may take off taxes.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, they may not.

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not think that is the principle. I think there is a clearer principle than that. I have spoken of my learned and hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) as an hon. gentleman possessing an ecclesiastical mind. That is a very high compliment, but the hon. gentleman has not those nice distinctions that characterize the lay mind.

Mr. SPROULE. As this class of Bill provides for spending so much of the consolidated revenue during the life of the individual, it ought to be regarded as a money Bill and if the upper chamber have not the right either to increase or diminish the expenditure under any appropriation proposed by the House of Commons then I respectfully submit that they cannot alter this Bill even by cutting off one of the provisions whereby money shall be given by the force of statute afterwards.

Amendment agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg to move also that the third amendment be concurred in. I will explain what the amendment is. Section 3 of the Bill as passed by the House of Commons was as follows :

Every county court judge who has attained the age of eighty years shall be compulsorily retired; and to any judge who is so retired, or who, having attained the age of seventy-five years, resigns his office, and who in either case has continued in office for a period of twenty-five years or upwards, His Majesty may grant an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement, or, if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period than twenty-five years, equal to two-thirds of such salary; provided that to any such judge who is so compulsorily retired, or who so resigns, there may be granted an annuity equal to the full salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement or resignation, irrespective of the number of years he has continued in office.

I will now read the amendment made by the Senate and we will see where the change is :

Every county court judge who has attained the age of eighty years shall be compulsorily retired; and to any judge who is so retired, or who, having attained the age of seventy-five years, resigns his office, and in the latter case has continued in office for a period of twenty-five years or upwards, His Majesty may grant an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement, or resignation; or if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period than twenty-five years and become afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, an annuity equal to two-thirds of such salary ; the annuity in either of the above cases to commence immediately after his retirement or resignation, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

The alteration takes place by the elimination of these words from our section :

It was thought that such a provision might perhaps be an infringement of the independence of the judges. It was thought that if a judge were allowed to resign after fifteen years service, for instance, and be entitled to his pension it might lead to an abuse that the government of the day might ask a judge for his resignation as he would come within the rule entitling him to a pension. The Senate have very properly substituted these words :

Or if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period than twenty-five years and become afflicted with some permanent infirmity.

I therefore beg to move that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether a county court judge comes within the same category as all the other judges who are treated of in the British North America Act. If he does, I doubt very much our power to provide for his compulsory retirement at all. If we have the power of retiring judges there is only one way under the British North America Act and under the general law of doing it, and I doubt very much the power of this House to compel the retirement of a county judge.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no doubt that this matter has been carefully inquired into; judges of the county court are not in the same category as judges of the Supreme Court, and we recognize this in this very Act. In this Act we have not taken the power to compulsorily retire judges of the Supreme Court; we cannot do that. The opinion offered to us by the Department of Justice is that this inability does not apply to the case of the county court judges, and that we have the power to retire them.

Mr. GOURLEY. On what does the Minister of Justice base the distinction between the Supreme Court and county court judges?

The PRIME MINISTER. Upon the terms of the British North America Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am speaking off-hand now ; I have not had the matter brought to my attention for some weeks——

Mr. GOURLEY. The minister will admit that we could not compulsory retire a Supreme Court judge.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, no. We have always proceeded on the theory that there is a distinction between the position of high court judges and county court judges. In the Revised Statutes of Canada there is a provision that you may appoint a judge to examine into the conduct of a couty court judge, and thereupon proceed to remove him, the procedure differing in that respect from the procedure in the case of a high court judge, who can only be removed by Act of parliament except under the old provision of George III., which reserves to colonial governments the right to remove a judge under certain conditions. That is the theory upon which we have proceeded up to the present time, that the tenure of office of a county court judge is different from that of a high court judge. The British North America Act makes special reference to judges of the Superior Court and the Revised Statutes of Canada, proceeding on that assumption, makes provision for the investigation of the conduct and the removal of county court judges. My hon. friend will find in the Ontario reports, in re Sqiers, a very full discussion of this matter. One of the judges of Ontario, I think Vice-Chancellor Proudfoot, went into the subject very fully, and displayed a great deal of learning in his exposition of the subject. He came to the conclusion that a county court judge was removable at will by the Governor General in Council.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 3.

The PRIME MINISTER. I move that the third amendment be concurred in. The third amendment is purely verbal; it is substituting the word 'resignation' for the word 'retirement.'

Amendment agreed to.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA.

Bill (No. 265) respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada—(the Minister of Justice)—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Mr. GOURLEY. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that our statutes of Canada are not creditable; the clauses of statutes dealing with the same subject are different in language in almost every instance. That is not right, because it puts a counsel or an individual who wants to understand a statute to the necessity of interpreting each line of every statute, whereas if we had statutes divided into classes, and the sections of statutes dealing with the same subject couched in exactly the same language, this would be avoided. There ought not to be a comma different. Any one who is familiar with the construction of statutes knows that it is one of the nicest occupations to which a man can give his attention, requiring not only a clear comprehension of language, but also an appreciation of the niceties of grammatical construction and the construction of sentences. I may say that attention has been brought to this matter by Judge Weatherby in Nova Scotia, a man of splendid intellect, although he is rather erratic; he has one of the most perfectly analytical minds that you can meet with. It is a pleasure to hear him interpret a statute, I have been very often pained to hear him take one of our Dominion statutes and tear it all to pieces and express wonder if we have any law officer in Ottawa who knows anything about law or anything else. I must say that I concur in a great deal of what he says, and I believe we should attempt to do what they do in England, have every statute and every section of a statute dealing with the same subject couched in exactly the same language.

Mr. FRASER. I am afraid that my hon. friend is giving too high praise to English statutes. I notice that the judges there speak quite sarcastically of the English statutes.

Mr. GOURLEY. The late Lord Thring did a great deal to cure that. I am inclined to believe that there is more accuracy and nicety of expression in the English statutes than in our own, although the House will agree that I am not inclined to unduly praise the English.

Mr. GALLIHER. The Americans are your friends.

Mr. GOURLEY. They do not pretend to accuracy of language there. I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that in these acts of incorporation which we are constantly passing, clauses conferring certain powers should be kept exactly the same in every case and that no man drafting an Act should be permitted to alter the language to the extent of a comma. Therefore I think this is a very important section, that we should have good draughtsmen; we might have a very good lawyer who might not be a good draughtsman, as they are different gifts.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Absolutely.

Mr. GOURLEY. A man might be able to tear an Act to pieces but to have a Bill properly drafted requires the knack of using language to express an idea nicely. That is a gift, and if it does not appear in a statute it makes that statute hopeless of construction. I hope the Minister of Justice will impress on the commission the fact that the Acts of this parliament should be expressive of the very nicest intentions of parliament in the most apt English. I intend to assist the Minister of Justice as much as I can in having our statutes put in the fewest possible words. This habit of using many words is a loose, unscholarly habit. A man who is not a scholar is eternally using a lot of words when a few would be sufficient. If you make a long sentence in a statute, you only involve it, and you leave it doubtful how a court will interpret it. I saw a judge the other day take a section of a statute and re-write it to show the exact meaning of the language, and the meaning which the legislature evidently meant it to convey, and the two things were as different as night and day. The members of this House should be scholars enough to be able to express their meaning in the clearest and most concise language, so that no judge could have any doubt about it.

On section 12,

Mr. COCHRANE. What does that clause mean?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is taken from a corresponding section of the Act respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada, which was passed in connection with the revision of 1886. If we were to distribute the Revised Statutes, as we now distribute the ordinary statutes, that would entail very large expenditure. The statutes are now distributed to the members of this parliament and the local legislatures and to all the magistrates.

Mr. GOURLEY. When will they be distributed?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are 154 statutes for revision, of which 48 have been revised. Each commissioner is given several statutes to revise, then they meet every three or four months and revise the work of each, and the whole is subject to the control of the chairman, the ex-chief justice of the Supreme Court, who is probably the most competent man in Canada. I hope that within the next year all the work will be done.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

LIBRARIANS OF PARLIAMENT.

Bill (No. 267) respecting the Librarians of parliament, (the Minister of Justice) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this not a money Bill ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not in the strict sense of the word.

Mr. SPROULE. It provides for salaries to be paid out of consolidated revenue.

The PRIME MINISTER. According to Todd the term 'Money Bill' is very restricted. It applies only to Bills which have a peculiar form of preamble and are presented by the Speaker at the bar of the House as coming from the Commons and being its gift. The Supply Bill is of that character. But there are other Bills, which are money Bills in a certain sense but not in that particular sense. I refer my friend to page 815 of Todd.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the right hon. gentleman to hold that the Bill dealing with pensions for the North-west Mounted Police was a money Bill and could be introduced only by the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is one of those Bills which affect public money and must originate from the Crown, and should be introduced by resolution assented to by His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPROULE. Why should it require the consent of the Crown ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Because it was found in England before this rule was introduced and is found in other legislatures, where there is no such rule, that any member of parliament might introduce a resolution for the expenditure of public money. My hon. friend knows that a member of parliament has to go to a minister in order to get an appropriation for a wharf, and it would be an easier matter for him to introduce a resolution in the House. It was to prevent such an abuse that it has been decided that, although the granting of money is a special privilege of parliament, still it cannot be exercised except on the initiative of the Crown.

Mr. SPROULE. If it must have the consent of the Crown because it disposes of the public revenue, every Bill which disposes of public revenues, and which must be introduced by a resolution and a declaration that it has the assent of the Crown, must be regarded as a money Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is not a money Bill in the sense that it cannot be amended by the Senate. There has been a rule that the House of Lords shall not amend a Supply Bill—it has to accept it entire or reject it entire. But there are other Bills which are, in a sense, money Bills, but not in the strict sense, though they provide for the appropriation of public money, and these Bills, it has been always held, may be amended by the Lords. The rule was not very properly understood in the olden times, though I think it is clear now. But even under the circumstances, the Commons often would not insist on their privilege but would accept amendments of Bills of the class my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. SPROULE. I have at least the consolation of knowing that the present Speaker of the Senate ruled along the same lines that I have been contending for—that it was a money Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps the Speaker of the Senate has an ecclesiastical mind.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Prime Minister said a little while ago that a private member could not introduce a resolution asking for an appropriation for any special purpose. Could he not make a motion to the effect that it would be in the interest of Canada, for instance, to build a wharf at a certain place ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He could introduce a merely academic motion.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is what I mean.

On section 2—salaries of present librarians,

Mr. COCHRANE. What are these gentlemen receiving now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Their salary is $3,000 a year. They will rank hereafter as deputy heads. There are certain privileges of a purely social character connected with that rank.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is possible, under this Act, for the salaries of these officers to reach the highest limit of the salaries of the deputy heads ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Except the salary of three deputy heads—Justice, Finance and Railways and Canals, who may go as high as $5,000.

Bill reported ; read the third time, and passed.

REGISTRAR OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Bill (No. 268) respecting the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada (The Minister of Justice), was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1—rank and salary of registrar.

Mr. GOURLEY. What are you making Mr. Cameron's salary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is to be $3,500 with annual increases of $100 up to a maximum of $4,000.

Mr. GOURLEY. He is an excellent officer and ought to be well paid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Whenever the salary of any lawyer attached to any court is up for consideration, you will always find some other lawyers to rise in this House and say something complimentary. What are the requirements of this position of registrar of the Supreme Court ? Why should we have an officer who is to be paid so large a sum ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I have had considerable experience with that court, and may be in a position to say something in answer to the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Haggart). The registrar of the Supreme Court is not merely an officer of the court as that term is usually understood ; he is a judge. He is called upon, as registrar of the Supreme Court to sit in chambers, to hear and determine all applications of a routine character—with reference to printing of cases or dispensing with printing, with reference to applications for costs, for leave to appeal, and so on. He sits almost every day.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) allow me to ask him a question ? What is this officer's business ? What does he do outside of this ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I am only explaining what the nature of his business is, and tryinig to show that those duties are more than the duties of an ordinary clerk of an ordinary court. The salaries of prothonotaries and registrars of courts throughout the land are perhaps not equal to the salary provided for, except in one or two instances. The registrar of a court, as a rule, has no judicial duties to perform ; he is simply a clerk of process, signs papers in processes of court, but does not adjudicate upon matters. But the registrar of the Exchequer Court is really one of the judges of the court, hearing and determining applications in chambers. It is true there is an appeal from his decision to a judge and from the judge to the court. The fact remains, however, that the registrar performs judicial duties every day. He is also the custodian of the library, has the responsibility of the books there and——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We pay a librarian, whose salary I see is to be increased to a very handsome one.

Mr. BELCOURT. But the registrar has charge of and responsibility for a very large and very valuable library, probably the best legal library in Canada. Such a duty does not devolve upon the clerk of an ordinary court. I think this is the only court in the land which has a large library, the responsibility for which rests upon the registrar.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What has the librarian to do ?

Mr. BELCOURT. He furnishes books and has charge of the routine of the library, but the responsibility for the care of the library rests upon the registrar. He has to make recommendations from time to time as to additions to the library. I think I am in the judgment of every member of this House when I say that the present registrar of the Supreme Court is a very deserving officer, and, I think, fully entitled to the remuneration provided under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He may be a very deserving officer, but is it requisite for the administration of justice that such a deserving officer and a person of such ability should hold this position ? I do not say anything derogatory of the individual who occupies the office, I do not even know him. After all that, he says, his duties are not judicial, they are principally ministerial—applications for orders and things of that kind, which do not require a judicial mind at all. These applications do not require an intellect of the order that is required for the Supreme Court. You may have for registrar a gentleman of greater intelligence and ability than are needed for a registrar, but that is no reason why you should pay him so high a salary. We could get a man to fulfil what I might call these mechanical duties for a less salary. I have noticed continually in this country when you establish a court, that first of all we have the judges, a short time afterwards there is a library established, then soon after, three or four messengers, then a librarian, then a couple of officers of court, and every session demands for an increase of salary. There is no other country on the face of the globe that is so encumbered with a superfluity of the administration of justice. No other race but the Anglo-Saxon race would submit to it. They are improving it over in Great Britain, but on this side it is getting worse every year.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if the Minister of Trade and Commerce was consulted in this matter, or the leader of the House. These gentlemen sit complacently by and see these increases voted for every man high and low. The salary has been increased all over. How the Minister of Trade and Commerce used to sympathize with the ratepayers when he was sitting on this side of the House. We were told that the poor ratepayers and the poor farmers were being bled white by the Conservative government. Now, this government is voting millions upon millions, and every official in this country from Dan to Beersheba is getting an increase of salary, and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is sitting there complacently, listening to the explanation given by the Deputy Minister of Justice about this official being a very judicial man and being responsible for the library. Now, how does he reconcile that with what he told the electors of what he was going to do after his friends got into power.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Keep your face straight.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, I can't keep it any straighter than it is. I am speaking with conscientious motives, and if hon. gentlemen can smile under the present circumstances, why they can smile upon going to the gallows. They have broken every pledge they gave to the electors in reference to economy, and how they can smile at hearing these things told them is more than I can understand. I heard tell of a man who was going to the gallows, and he met a man running that way and asked him what he was running for and when he told him: Well, he said, you need not be in a hurry, there will be no fun until I get there. But this is a serious matter. Here are broken pledges. I am not accusing the Minister of Justice of breaking his pledges, because he was not in the House then, but he is just as much responsible for it as those hon. gentlemen, because he has become one of them. He is endorsing them while they are breaking every promise they ever made to the people. I challenge the hon. gentleman to point out to me one pledge they gave to the electors when they were in opposition that they have carried out since they have been in power. The Postmaster General——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, spare me.

Mr. COCHRANE—used to tell us about the iniquities of the Conservative party, he used to tell us how humiliating it was for members of parliament to be sitting in the House with promises of office and emoluments in their pockets, and he even brought in a Bill condemning the practice. Is that hon. gentleman now carrying out the pledges that he made in opposition? How many members of parliament have he and his friends appointed to office? The Minister of Customs used to make the roof of this building tremble with his sonorous voice denouncing the extravagance of the Conservative party. Now he thinks it is all right. He thinks this gentleman is entitled to a large increase because he is responsible for the library, and because he has got a judicial mind. I don't care what kind of a mind he has got. We don't require a man with such a mind. A man with a very ordinary mind would be sufficient to do that work, and have plenty of time to lark around the country besides.

Mr. COCHRANE.

Mr. GOURLEY. I always stand up for my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) when he is condemning the government for breaking their pledges. His evident sincerity certainly convinces me, and I fancy it must convince hon. gentlemen opposite. But in the meantime we are discussing the salary of the registrar of the Supreme Court, and I desire to say that I think the policy of Canada has always been wrong in demeaning the public service of this country by paying insignificant salaries. The Supreme Court, if it is to be such a court as it ought to be and entitled to the respect of the people, must be a dignified tribunal, and everybody connected with it must be paid a sufficient salary to give dignity to the court. Every man in this country desires to see the Supreme Court possessed of a good library, with good officers to look after it, men competent by their legal intelligence to answer questions that may be asked them. When a man in a hurry goes into the library he wants to find a man there competent to give him assistance. The policy of paying everybody in the highest court in the country, salaries befitting the position, is one that I am sorry to say has not been followed in the past as it should be. These hon. gentlemen did not have these views when they were in opposition. We are setting them an example now of what an opposition should be in Canada; and when you gentlemen get into our position, as you will in a short time, we hope you will follow our good example. I know Mr. Cameron very well, he is a man of ability, he is a lawyer. He wrote a book some time ago, and it was so well written that it completely deceived me, because I thought I was reading the memoirs of an old member of parliament, but it turned out to be the mere creation of the imagination of our friend Mr. Cameron and a very bright little book it is. I go the full length of saying that that gentleman's salary as proposed here is not any too much for his abilities. I do not very often have the opportunity of finding myself in agreement with the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) but in this academic matter I am very happy to agree with him that Mr. Cameron is deserving of this additional salary. I want to say a word also in regard to Mr. Bligh, the librarian of the Supreme Court. I am bound to say that his salary is utterly insignificant and that he should not be required to live in Ottawa and maintain his family for the tu'penny ha'penny salary he is getting.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is his salary?

Mr. GOURLEY. $1,200 or $1,300 a year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you call that a tu'penny ha'penny salary?

Mr. GOURLEY. If you had a good kennel of dogs you would require more money a year to keep them than that. If you want any politics the whole thing is to be blamed upon the Liberal party in this country who sat here for eighteen years and kept down the remuneration of the members of this House. The remuneration of the members ought either to be nothing or it ought to be more. It is an honourable proposition to come and serve your country freely and I will go in for that if you like, but when you come to discuss the question of indemnity and put it at $1,500 it demeans every man in this House by making him a cheap man. When I was coming up from Nova Scotia a short time ago I met a bright, intelligent young man from Massachusetts, a Harvard graduate who is taking a post graduate course in economics for the purpose of fitting himself for public life in the United States. He found out that I was a member of the House of Commons and in the course of the conversation he asked me what the indemnity of a member of the House was. I avoided the question. I refused to tell him because if I had I am persuaded he would have thought that I was coming to a fifth-class country debating society instead of to the parliament of my country. Therefore I am bound to say that everything is insignificant and mean in this country in reference to the remuneration paid to public men. If there is to be an indemnity it should be higher than it is. How can one of those civil servants who perhaps receives a salary of $4,000 or $5,000 a year have any respect for a member of parliament who is given $1,500 to put into his pocket. We should either abolish the indemnity or fix it at an amount which will be creditable to the people of this country. However, if we are going to treat ourselves meanly I do not want to treat anybody else meanly and therefore I support this increase to Mr. Cameron.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is rather invidious to discuss individual cases, but this officer, like a great many others in connection with the administration of justice, is well deserving of greater recognition at the hands of parliament than he receives now. I cannot help reminding my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) how things have changed. Of course we have a great deal more money nowadays owing to the features of the national policy that have remained, but the principle surely is not affected by the exuberance of the condition of things. When I was Minister of Justice it was pointed out, that, under a very old law that had been left on the statute-book, the exceedingly small salary of the chief justice of British Columbia would be diminished by about $900 a year and owing to many considerations and many strong reasons a Bill was introduced to prevent such a result, the general feeling being that the judiciary all over Canada was very much underpaid. A modest Bill came before the House to readjust salaries, so that the incoming chief Justice of British Columbia on the death of Sir Matthew Begby would not find that he had $900 less than the very small salary of is predecessor and my right hon. friend divided this House by opposing that measure and opposing it vehemently on the principle, that, while he quite agreed that the judiciary were not well paid, it was an outrageous thing to bring forward the case of an individual and to deal with it. He was opposed to even preventing an injustice being done in this case until the government were prepared to take up boldly the whole problem and deal with the different courts of the Dominion fairly and on the same principle. Of course at that time my right hon. friend knows we could not do it. We had not enough money to go around. But, to-day, every one knows that things have changed. Here we are going to pass invidious legislation. It is not the case of the present incumbent of the office receiving less than his predecessor, but this is only one of several cases in which the administration have taken up individual claims. In this very case in British Columbia, and I do not like to refer to it as I practise at the Bar in that province and my words may be misunderstood, it was proposed to increase the salary of the judge of the Vice Admiralty Court and to appoint the chief justice as judge of the Vice Admiralty Court. That would have left the chief justice with the same income as Sir Matthew Begby had and a very small one it was, something like $5,000 a year. Chief Justice McColl died and this House will be surprised to know that the present chief justice is receiving less than Chief Justice McColl or Sir Matthew Begby because Mr. Justice Martin was appointed to be judge of the Vice Admiralty Court. So, the reduction of the salary of the chief justice actually took place. I think this is the only case in Canada since the beginning of this movement in favour of increasing salaries in which a reduction of salary has actually taken place. While I do not begrudge a high officer like the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada receiving a salary somewhat adequate to the position, I do object to such cases as that which I have mentioned standing on the statute-books of our country. In a short time under this Bill the registrar of this high court will rank as far as salary goes very nearly as high as the chief justice of one of the provinces of Canada. While I do not object to what is proposed under the Bill, I say that the case that was proposed years ago was far stronger, and if I were disposed to follow that line of argument I would be obliged to oppose this act of justice. The case as it was then put by the right hon. gentleman in insisting upon a readjustment of the salaries of the judges generally was far stronger than the present argument in favour of dealing with individual cases. I am surprised at the course which the government have taken because I would have expected, in view of the opinion prevailing generally throughout the country that our judges are poorly paid, that a more comprehensive measure would have been introduced and that instead of dealing with this officer only many of these cases—and I dare say there are many more such cases as that which I have mentioned—would have received due consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) unfortunately, has been away a good deal and he has not evidently been made aware of what has taken place in regard to the civil service.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was dealing with the judiciary.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am speaking of the civil service. There was an agreement on both sides of the House that the salaries of the civil service ought to be increased, but the Civil Service Act is rather a complicated one and Mr. Cameron has been left out of the provisions of the Bill which was passed by this House some time ago. We thought it only fair that the Bill should be supplemented by this one so as to include Mr. Cameron in the benefits of the disposition which we have made of the matter.

With regard to the judiciary, I think that we will have to take up the subject at some time and to take it up sooner rather than later, and to increase the salaries which are not sufficient at present. The question is not without difficulty. Here is the opinion of the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) that we are cursed with too many judges.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That may be; too many judges too poorly paid.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that we could get on with fewer judges than we have. It may be said, in one sense, that we have too many governments in Canada, but that is the consequence of our system. On the whole, it is a good system. It has its inconveniences, but we have federal courts and we have provincial courts, and I do not think we have too many judges. We must necessarily have a large number of judges in proportion to the population, but if we consider that the population is scattered over a very large extent of territory in Canada, I think my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) will agree, on consideration, that it is impossible to have fewer judges than we have, although it may so happen that at some points there will be too many judges, at other points there may not be judges enough. That is a consequence of the condition of things that prevails at the present time, and which can be remedied only by the hand of time, when time shall have distributed population more equally over Canadian territory than it is at the present moment. On the whole, there are not too many courts, but we have this unavoidable feature of our system, that at some points the judges have too much to do while at other points they have not enough to do, and the question is always brought up when these questions are under discussion. The man who is able to devise a plan by which the work will be more equally divided between the judges will have brought about a system which the government will be only too glad to adopt.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to draw attention to one very ingenious feature of this Bill, and the same remark applies to the previous Bill. It provides that the party to whom it refers shall have the rank of a deputy head of a department, and that his salary shall be $3,500 per annum, with an annual increase of $100 up to the maximum of $4,000. It practically provides that he shall get $4,000 from the start, not that he gets $3,500. How much does the present occupant of the position get?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $3,200.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a raise of $800 at one jump.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, for it goes on to say that for the purpose of determining his salary he shall be credited with his period of service, and shall hereafter be paid such salary as he would by length of service be entitled to. If you assume that he was entitled to it from the start and if you credit him with his length of service, he is entitled to the maximum now, and the same thing applies in the case of the other Bill. It applies to the librarian and the assistant librarian of parliament also.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It applies in the same way as to the deputy head of a department under the Civil Service Act Amendment Act. If an officer had three years of service to his credit when this Bill goes into effect he would commence at $3,800 and would then receive $100 for each year; if he had four years to his credit he would get $3,900, and if he had five years he would commence, as the hon. gentleman says, at $4,000. That is working exactly in the same way as in the case of the salaries of deputy heads of departments under the Civil Service Amendment Act.

Mr. SPROULE. How long would it take a deputy head, starting at $3,500 to reach the maximum?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Five years.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the time of these officers count from the date of the passing of this Act or from a previous date?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As I understand the Act, it applies from the passing of this Act except, that where an officer has been a few years in office, it applies from the time of his appointment. The gentleman in question has been in office for five years, in which case he would now receive $4,000 a year. A new appointee would commence at $3,500, and his salary would raise $100 a year.

Mr. SPROULE. It seemed to me that the Act was so worded as to show that it was intended to conceal its purpose from the general public.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is drawn in the exact terms of the Civil Service Amendment Act as it applies to the deputy heads of departments, and it is intended to treat these gentlemen in exactly the same way as the deputy heads are treated.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will be his salary next year under this Act?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The salary of the registrar of the Supreme Court under this will be $4,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is an increase of $800 at once. I must protest against any such expenditure as that. Here is an officer of the Supreme Court, who has none of the qualifications of a judge, starting with a salary of $4,000 a year, nearly double the amount that a county court judge gets.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some of them have other allowances.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Some of them have not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think all of them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not the juniors and some of the others. They get no allowances whatever and here is an officer of the court with a salary of $4,000 a year and a rise from last year of $800. There is no justification for such an increase.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Exactly the same as the deputy heads under the Civil Service Act amendment.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What justification is there for a man who receives an ample salary getting an increase at once of $800 a year? This will give him $4,000 a year as registrar of the Supreme Court—a clerk. It is a monstrous salary.

The PRIME MINISTER. A monstrous salary for the position?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, for the registrar of any court.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am afraid my hon. friend has not been here while the hon. member for Ottawa has been asking for an increase for the whole civil service.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There are many of us who represent other opinions than those of the civil service. Any man representing the city of Ottawa would advocate an increase for the civil service.

Mr. SPROULE. The feature which seems to me to be entirely unreasonable is the giving of an increase of $800 in one year. I could understand an official getting an increase of $50 or $100 a year until he reached the maximum; but these last three cases together amount to an aggregate increase of $2,400 to three employees in one year.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The salary of the registrar of the Supreme Court originally fixed by statute was $2,600. Afterwards that was increased to $3,200. The object of the present amendment is to add $300 to that, making it $3,500. Then it goes up by annual increments of $100 until it reaches the maximum of $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. He gets $4,000 immediately, because you give him credit for his back time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. His five years of service are taken into account, just as was done a moment ago in the case of the librarians. The hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says it is absolutely unfair to pay the registrar of the Supreme Court such a salary as this. Why, the Master in Chambers at Osgoode Hall gets $4,000, though occupying a less important position. This gentleman sometimes sits as a judge, and there is an appeal from his judgment to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If he takes any responsibility upon himself, he consults the judges of the Supreme Court before venturing an opinion.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is a matter entirely discretionary with him.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. Minister of Justice answer this question: What is the immediate effect of this Bill upon his salary? What does he get this year?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At the present time he gets $3,200. By this Act he will be entitled to an increase of his salary up to $4,000. He will get $3,500 now and an annual increment of $100 a year. The Minister of Agriculture directs my attention to the fact that he gets the benefit of his accrued services to the extent of five years. At that rate he gets $4,000. My hon. friend must remember that the salary is not an extraordinary one, in view of the fact that the province of Ontario pays $4,000 a year and that the prothonotaries of Montreal and Quebec get $4,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But under this Bill it may be posible that this person will get $4,600 a year, because this Bill makes his salary $4,000 apart from $600 a year which he receives as editor and publisher of the Supreme Courts reports.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The payment to him as editor and publisher of the Supreme Court reports is not made by statute, but by Order in Council. I entertain no doubt that the statutory salary would supersede the salary paid to him by Order in Council. If the $600 is not voted each year in the appropriation Act, he does not get it ; but we will put a clause in the Bill to make that absolutely clear.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Even then it is too much. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that it would be better to have all these amounts put in the annual Appropriation Act. It seems strange that a registrar and a deputy head of a department should have a statutory right to their salaries, as have no other persons in the civil service.

Progress reported.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 266) further to amend the general Inspection Act, (The Minister of Trade and Commerce) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1—appointments of chief weighmaster and assistants east of Manitoba.

Mr. SPROULE. How many districts have we east of Manitoba ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There are only two.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended to make others and to appoint weighmasters in large cities like Toronto, Montreal and Quebec ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This has been asked for by the Board of Trade of Toronto and others. My hon. friend's question is answered by the section itself. The section reads :

The Governor in Council may appoint in and for any inspection district east of the inspection district of Manitoba, a chief weighmaster, whose duties and powers shall be defined by Order in Council, and may also, in any place where inspection of grain is authorized under this Act, or where is situate any public terminal elevator appoint a weighmaster and such assistants as are necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. Then at every place where there is an elevator you will appoint a weighmaster ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not necessarily.

Mr. SPROULE. For the purpose of carrying out this Act it would be essentially necessary, because the object is to have an independent weighmaster where the grain is handled. A great deal of this grain is taken out of the elevators at Owen Sound, Meaford, Midland, Collingwood and distributed to the millers. Would there be an independent weighmaster in each of these places ? I believe that would be the right thing to do, because we often find that in taking grain you are charged with more than it is found to weigh when weighed over again. Hence arises disputes sometimes troublesome to settle and occasionally the purchaser has to pay for more grain than he has received. If an independent weighmaster were appointed, that would avoid difficulty.

The PRIME MINISTER. The intention is to do what my hon. friend recommends.

Mr. SPROULE. I am convinced, from experience, that in every locality where stuff is received from the public or sold by the public, we should have an independent weighmaster, sworn to do his duty. A great deal of dissatisfaction exists because the people think they are not getting justice, and a great many disputes arise which cannot be satisfactorily settled. If we had at every country town some person authorized to weigh cattle, grain and other products, there would be very few disputes.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I think that the proposition of my hon. friend is theoretically correct, but it would entail a heavy tax. This Bill, however, is for the purpose of weighing grain at public terminals, and chiefly concerned the handling of grain by the railway people—grain brought from the west and handled at the terminals such as Owen Sound, Goderich, Sarnia and other points. The Board of Trade of Toronto has asked for the appointment of such officers, who will be sworn to do justice between the parties, and I consider it a reasonable request.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not opposing this, because I think it right. Disputes would always be settled satisfactorily if we had a weighmaster.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is proposed that Collingwood, Midland, Owen Sound and Port Huron should have weighmasters, and I presume Toronto. We could not have one at every station.

Mr. SPROULE. You could give a man that duty to attend to, but let him attend to other duties as well. Allow him something for that work, but let him attend to his other work also.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You have not inspectors at these small places. The inspectors are at the terminal points.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the terminal points ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, St. John——

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the grain never reaches one of these points. If I buy a carload of grain shipped from Owen Sound it never reaches——

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is weighed at Owen Sound.

Mr. SPROULE. If these inspectors are at every point where grain is given out, that is all right.

On section 114, powers and duties of weighmasters.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is a good deal of American corn, for instance, that comes into the terminals at Owen Sound, Port Huron and other places, and is consumed throughout Ontario. Then there is a good deal of grain such as rejected and No. 1 and No. 2, though Manitoba grain that probably is not inspected at all. This clause provides that all that grain will be weighed. I would suggest that it would be as well to drop out the words 'inspected, subject to inspection or otherwise, or,' and leave it to read: 'The weighing of grain received into or shipped out of, from public terminal elevators.'

The PRIME MINISTER. Let that stand in the meantime.

On section 3.

Mr. SPROULE. You have no penalties in this Act. Are they provided in the other Act?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Section 114 reconsidered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On further considering the clause, I think that, as it stands it will cover the case. I want to provide that the weighmaster shall be compelled to weigh all grain, tough, rejected or anything else that may be asked. I think that probably the section as it appears here will cover the case.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House in committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to certain railways:

On resolution 1,

The Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway, not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know if there is any change as between this and the law as it was?

The PRIME MINISTER. No change.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. None whatever?

The PRIME MINISTER. None whatever.

To the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from the present terminus at Ingersoll to Woodstock, not exceeding nine miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1899, item 26 of section 2.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. Finance Minister explain?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I lay on the Table copies of applications with respect to these subsidies, so that anybody who wishes may look at them.

The PRIME MINISTER. The first 29 items are merely renewals. No practical change is made in them, and when there is any change I will explain it.

To the Toronto, Lindsay and Pembroke Railway Company, for a line of railway from Golden lake to Bancroft, not exceeding fifty-one miles; in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, item 6, section 2.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is this to make a new road from Ottawa to Toronto, practically?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a revote.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is an extension of the line from Toronto north-westerly to meet the Pembroke and Golden Lake Railway. It will make a new road as far as Renfrew.

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near Caradoc station on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Strathroy and from Strathroy northerly to Forest, Thedford or Parkhill, not exceeding in all thirty-one miles, in lieu of subsidies granted by chapter 7, of 1899, item 4 of section 2, and chapter 8 of 1900, item 2 of section 2, respectively.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I move to change that so that it will read as follows:

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway for a line of railway from a point at Lambeth to Strathroy via the villages Delaware, Mount Brydges and Caradoc station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and from Strathroy northerly to Forest, Thedford or Parkhill, not exceeding in all thirty-one miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who applied for the change?

Mr. CALVERT. The company's solicitor applied to me for it recently—the solicitor of the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company.

Mr. HENDERSON. The acting Minister of Railways told us there would be no change in the mileage. I am not very sure of the geography of this locality, but I think that a line from Mount Brydges to Caradoc must of necessity increase the mileage.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We could not change the mileage without bringing down a new resolution. If this is not sufficient to cover the ground, then they can only get the miles authorized, and the addition will have to be a matter for subsequent approval. It may be that an additional mileage would be necessary to cover all the points, but the mileage would be limited to the number which the House passes.

Mr. CALVERT. We are not asking for any more miles at the present time.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the hon. gentleman is certainly asking for an increased subsidy, because he expects an additional mileage.

Mr. CALVERT. We are only asking for 31 miles, as we did in the first place, no more.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the name of the road which starts from London, and who has control of that road ?

Mr. CALVERT. I think it is called the London and Port Stanley Road, or the London and St. Thomas.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You say you start within a few miles of London. Is it the Grand Trunk who has control of that road ?

Mr. CALVERT. I am not sure.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member must see that he is here changing a subsidy from a point starting on the Canadian Pacific Railway to a point starting on the Grand Trunk Railway, or transferring it from a branch line that was intended to be of assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway and giving it to the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. CALVERT. This road from London to Lambeth is a private corporation. It does not belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway or to the Grand Trunk Railway, but it will connect with the Grand Trunk, that already has an entrance into the city of London. From Lambeth it will go to Delaware and thence to Mount Brydges, where it will cross the Grand Trunk.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member must know who controls or owns that road that is already built from Lambeth to London, of which this is an extension. Surely he should give us that information, or he should not ask for a subsidy. This is an extension of a road from Lambeth to London ; it is a subsidy that was granted from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was the initial point under the old subsidy Act. Now it is transferred to a point called Lambeth, which is connected by an electric railway with London. I want to know what company owns the road from Lambeth to London, and who will get this subsidy ?

Mr. CALVERT. It is an electric road from Lambeth to London instead of a steam railway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this going to be an electric road ?

Mr. CALVERT. No, it is a steam road.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then you go by a steam railway to Lambeth and from Lambeth to London by an electric railway ?

Mr. CALVERT. That is often done. The company will simply have running rights.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it the intention to use this as a steam road to get the subsidy and then to change into an electric road ?

Mr. CALVERT. No, the intention is to use it as a steam road.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this a Dominion or provincial charter ?

Mr. CALVERT. A Dominion charter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose these subsidies are only to be given to steam railways ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly, there is no subsidy given to an electric railway by any of these proposals.

Resolution, as amended, agreed to.

To the Montfort and Gatineau Colonization Railway Company to extend its railway from Arundel to a point in the municipality of the united townships of Preston and Hartwell, not exceeding thirty miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 8 of 1900, item 31 of section 2.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the committee will be good enough to turn to resolution No. 41, which is a continuation of the same vote, we can take the two together, because both refer to the same subsidy exactly. We have put it into two parts, because one is a revote of the mileage and the other is the additional mileage. Resolution No. 41 is as follows :

To the Montfort and Gatineau Colonization Railway Company for the extension of its line of railway from Morin Flats to St. Jérôme to connect with the Great Northern Railway, not exceeding twenty-two miles.

Resolutions agreed to.

For a line of railway from Jonquières to La Baie Ha Ha, not exceeding twenty miles, in lieu of subsidy of twelve miles granted by chapter 7 of 1899, item 21 of section 2.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where is this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is an extension of the Lake St. John Railway from Chicoutimi to Baie des Ha Ha.

For a line of railway from Lime Ridge northerly through the county of Wolfe into the county of Megantic, not exceeding fifty miles, being a revote of subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1894.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If hon. gentlemen will be good enough to turn to resolution No. 45 they will find the same condition. The additional mileage is given in resolution 45 which is as follows :

For a line of railway in extension of the line from Lime Ridge into the county of Megantic to the bridge over the St. Lawrence at or near Quebec, not exceeding thirty miles.

Resolutions agreed to.

For a line of railway from Joliette to or near Lake Manan, a distance not exceeding sixty miles, being a revote and in lieu of subsidies granted by chapter 4 of 1897 and chapter 8 of 1900.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does this make any change or is it simply a revote ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Simply a revote.

Mr. GOURLEY. Where is Joliette ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is in the county of Joliette, back from the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GOURLEY. On the north side ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, on the north side.

For a line of railway from St. Eustache to St. Placide in the county of Two Mountains, not to exceed eighteen miles ; from St. Eustache to Sault au Recollet, twelve miles ; and from St. Placide to St. Andrews, eight miles, not exceeding in all thirty-eight miles, being a revote of subsidies granted by chapter 24 of 1887 and chapter 5 of 1892, respectively.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. These ought to be electric lines. I do not know whether they are or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, these are steam roads.

For a line of railway from Roberval westward towards James bay, not exceeding sixty miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, item 25 of section 2.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will that not parallel the transcontinental ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. How many roads are we aiding in the direction of James bay by these subsidies ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think three.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would call the attention of the committee to resolution No. 52, to be read in conjunction with that, because the one is an extension of the other.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think it would be better to take them in order until we come to them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are two parts of the same road.

Mr. GOURLEY. I know, but if we pass this when we come to No. 52 the hon. gentleman can state that this is complementary to the previous item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection, but I thought the committee would like to have their attention called to the two items. They are related the one to the other.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, we want to know that.

Mr. GOURLEY. I would like some information in reference to this railway from Roberval westward towards James bay. Is it an extension of the Lake St. John Railway ?

The PRIME MINISTER. At Roberval the Lake St. John Railway goes to Chicoutimi. This goes directly north.

Mr. GOURLEY. This is part of the same system ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the distance from Roberval to James bay ?

Mr. GOURLEY. It will be about 250 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. Between 250 and 300 miles.

Mr. MACLEAN. This will be 100 miles altogther of this road ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

For a line of railway from Yamaska to Lotbinière, a distance not exceeding seventy miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1899, item 27 of section 2.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this an increase ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, this is for an extension of the road already in existence between Montreal and Sorel and which follows the shore of the St. Lawrence. The road has been constructed as far as the River St. Francis, and this is for an extension to Lotbinière. This is to accommodate the parishes along the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that the line between Doucet's Landing and Lévis ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Doucet's Landing line is a line running north and south between Three Rivers and Arthabaska. This line follows the shore of the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I mean from Doucet's Landing. I understand there is a road already between Montreal and Sorel.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It has been extended from Sorel to a point opposite Three Rivers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, to Lotbinière.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this an extension of the road from Sorel to Lévis ?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is partly correct, but not wholly so. The road has been extended from Sorel to the River St. Francis. It has been graded between the River St. Francis and the River Nicolet, and from the River Nicolet to Doucet's Landing, but it has not been completed to Doucet's Landing yet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a part of the original South Shore Railway between Montreal and Lévis ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, that is it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, we will have this new road, we will have the Intercolonial, we have the Grand Trunk Railway, and how many more ? The Canada Atlantic Railway, I suppose, must have a terminus somewhere near Quebec ?

The PRIME MINISTER. All of these railways will have terminals at the Quebec bridge, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Intercolonial Railway and the South Shore, but they all serve different sections of the country.

Mr. GOURLEY. Where is Yamaska ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Sorel is on the Richelieu river ; the Yamaska is another river at some distance from Sorel in the county of Yamaska. The province of Quebec is a province of large rivers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did not the Prime Minister, in advocating the purchase of the Drummond County Road, say that the road from Sorel to Lévis had been abandoned ? I am not objecting to the construction of the road.

The PRIME MINISTER. I said nothing of the kind ; the hon. gentleman is quite in error.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see that my friend Mr. Myers, of New York, is still interested in this piece of road from Sorel to Lévis and from Lévis to Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nobody knows yet.

To the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company for that portion of its line from a point at the east end of the Hull station yard of the Canadian Pacific Railway to a point of junction with the Interprovincial bridge approach in the city of Hull, not exceeding one mile; and for a line of railway to the boundary line of the city of Hull from a point on the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway, now the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway, not exceeding ¼ of a mile in lieu of any balance of mileage subsidized by chapter 7 of 1899, section 2, items 12 and 39 respectively, 1¼ miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose to substitute this vote for the one which appears on the Order Paper. We intend to ask for only a mile and a quarter. It is a question of balance of subsidy due for railway constructed in the vicinity of Hull. We find, on examination, that the length of line constructed by the company exceeds the length for which subsidy has been paid to them by a mile and a quarter, and we propose to redraft this so as to include only the mile and a quarter.

Mr. SPROULE. How did you come to overlook this amount. It seems to be in connection with the bridge, and this also seems to give a connection with the Ottawa and Northern.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a small balance of the subsidy granted. We find by actual calculation that the subsidies paid fell short by the amount of a mile and a half of what was voted, and of the length of line which they built.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why was this not paid out under the other subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I presume it has lapsed.

14. To the International Railway Company of New Brunswick (formerly the Restigouche and Western Railway Company) for a line of railway from the western end of the ten miles of its railway, as already constructed from Campbellton towards a point on the St. John river between Grand Falls and Edmundston, not exceeding 67 miles, being a revote, and in lieu of subsidies granted by chapter 4 of 1897, chapter 7 of 1899, item 42 of section 2 and chapter 8 of 1900, item 22 of section 2, 67 miles.

59. To the International Railway Company of New Brunswick for a line of railway, in addition to and in extension of the line of 67 miles mentioned in item 14 of this section, to a point on the St. John river between Grand Falls and Edmundston, not exceeding thirty-three miles, 33 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If hon. gentlemen will take items No. 14 and No. 59 together they will find that they refer to the same railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have you considered whether this will be a shorter line for the new transcontinental railway to Campbellton than to Moncton ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This will intersect the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. It will run right across the country.

Mr. BELL. Does this have the effect of reducing the mileage in this case ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no. The additional item (No. 59) to which I have referred, is in addition to the previous vote. I may say, generally, with regard to these votes, that they will be found to correspond almost exactly with the mileage. Where the difference has been very slight, a few miles, we have not put the additions in by special vote, but where the addition has been considerable, we have put in a separate vote to indicate it. So that the revote substantially corresponds with the mileage previously voted. There may be a difference to the extent of three or four miles in one case, but not beyond that.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the work been actually commenced in every case of a revote, or is this just hanging out the sign ? Surely we should not vote subsidies year after year unless there has been some earnestness shown by the parties getting these subsidies in going on with the work. I would like to ask if work has actually been commenced in each case, and surveys and estimates of the cost made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think in some cases the work has not actually commenced. But I do not think that should be a reason for refusing to subsidize a road. The work in many instances is slow, the promoters having difficulty in getting the necessary capital. We have to be patient, and give them time. If the promoters have a reasonable hope of carrying on the work, we should not refuse the subsidy, if the enterprise on its merits deserves it.

Mr. CLANCY. Is there any limit, or is it the intention to vote and revote the subsidies for all time ? There ought to be some evidence of good faith on the part of the promoters. I am not now criticising the character of the scheme at all ; but I think we should have some information as to the policy of the government in matters of that kind. I do not think the Minister of Finance would be prepared to say that this parliament should vote and revote these subsidies year after year as often as they lapse, unless something has occurred in the meantime.

Mr. EMMERSON. What harm does it do to revote them ?

Mr. CLANCY. In the first place, this parliament should only vote subsidies to the most deserving cases, and they should be bona fide cases in which men propose to go on with the work. Surely the hon. gentleman does not advocate our going on voting bonuses to parties who in many cases are endeavouring to sell them out. To vote and revote these bonuses has a tendency to give these promoters opportunities of making money out of these schemes. I do not think it is standing in the way of any proper enterprise to say that no subsidy should be voted to a railway project unless it has life in it, or unless its promoters are prepared to go on with it. I can understand cases in which unforeseen circumstances might arise ; but I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask us to pass any one of these revotes without giving us reasons for the delay in going on with the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not merely a question between the promoters and parliament. Even where the promoters might not exercise due diligence, as some might think, the community is interested in the railway ; and if one company has failed, perhaps others associated in the enterprise might make it a success. We must not forget that these enterprises are for the benefit of those portions of the country through which they run, and the people residing and owning property there ; and if the promoters do not make satisfactory progress, that is no reason for refusing to grant aid, not merely to the promoters, but to the people of the country through which the railway runs. I am sure my hon. friend would not want to do that.

Mr. CLANCY. No, I am too good-natured for that. The hon. gentleman has made the best possible argument in support of my contention, in saying that the people are chiefly interested. Why should persons get a charter for a railway, and get a subsidy voted, and then hold back the enterprise year after year instead of giving the service to the people ? The Minister of Finance should not ask this House to revote a single subsidy where there has been ample time to go on with the work, without giving some reason why it has not gone on.

Mr. EMMERSON. With respect to the railway described in this item, I may say that the first ten miles are completed, and the remainder are under construction. That is a line running from the Baie des Chaleurs to St. John river to connect with the Bangor and Aroostook Railway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I might point out further that a subsidy of $3,200 a mile will never tempt capitalists to build a railway unless there is good hope that the road when built will pay.

For a line of railway from Woodstock to the International boundary, not exceeding twenty-six miles, being a revote of the subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1894.

Mr. EMMERSON. This runs from Woodstock to Centreville and the American boundary. It is intended to tap the American trade and bring it down through Canadian territory.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there an American line from Centreville ?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, not to Centreville. This will run through a rich part of the country which has no railway at present.

Mr. CLANCY. Why was that road not gone on with ? Why the delay ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I think there has been some difficulty about the financial arrangements ; but the work has been gone on with to some extent, and the parties now feel that it can be put through.

Mr. CLANCY. Has any portion of the road been built ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I understand that a portion of it has been graded.

To the St. John Valley Railway Company for a line of railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Welford or Westfield or between said two points to Gagetown, not exceeding thirty miles, being a revote of the subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1887.

Mr. WILMOT. It is very desirable that this vote should pass.

Mr. CLANCY. How many miles have been constructed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No portion of it is under construction.

Mr. CLANCY. What are the prospects of its being constructed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Although the corporation which has charge of this enterprise is not making rapid progress, the people would not like to see the subsidy abandoned but very much desire that it be renewed.

Mr. CLANCY. Would not the people rather have somebody else take it up who will go on with the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If there be any discontent with the existing company or any reason to believe that anybody else would do the work better, that impression has not reached the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why not simply make the vote for the line of railway without mentioning any company and give the money to any company who will build it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the matter were in doubt, that course might be pursued, but no objection has been raised to this company.

Mr. MACLEAN. When parliament is asked to renew a subsidy, the people are entitled to an official explanation why the work has not been gone on with and what prospect there is of its being done.

Mr. WILMOT. Could the hon. minister give any idea of the personnel of the St. John Valley Railway Company ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think I have that information.

Mr. CLANCY. Might I ask the hon. minister how these subsidies come to be renewed ? There must have been pressure brought upon him—I do not say improper pressure—to renew them; and such being the case he ought to be in possession of the information as to the personnel of this particular company and its ability to do the work. If not, it is a mere piece of mockery to go through the form of voting the subsidy. The hon. gentleman should explain why these revotes are asked and what are the circumstances which entitle the parties to them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can only say that gentlemen from New Brunswick represented to me that this road would serve a very useful purpose and would open up a section of the province. I do not think I could give a better reason. Even though the company be not making much progress, if the enterprise is in itself meritorious, we are doing right in giving the subsidy.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria. Is the charter Dominion or provincial ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Provincial.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is subsidized by the provincial government. I am not aware that the mind of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) was at all disturbed with respect to similar votes in the first five or six resolutions, and we had no reason to think that it would be any more disturbed with respect to this or any other item for the province of New Brunswick than it was with respect to the items for Ontario. Now, this railway company is a recognized institution. The demands of the district are certainly very strong. Of course, in the summer they can get along nicely with that great highway, the St. John river; but when the river is frozen over they have no communication with the outside world except with the old fashioned vehicles.

Mr. CLANCY. I am surprised that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) should have dealt in such small politics as to say that any hon. member in this House would make a distincton as between provinces in these matters. I certainly should not have thought of accusing the hon. gentleman ; but he himself has taken a good deal of trouble to make it plain to us that he is ready to deal in that style of politics. I hope that no other member in this House will be so small as to consider what province these votes are going to. If the scheme itself has merits, we need not inquire what particular province it is to benefit. Had I been in the House I would have raised the same question with regard to other subsidies that I ask in this case. I am disappointed in the information we have had, and I am afraid we shall have to insist upon better, whether the railway is one for Ontario, New Brunswick or any other province, for we have a right to information. A company that was voted a subsidy three or four years ago, not having earned that subsidy and desiring its renewal, would naturally be expected to place before the Minister of Finance a complete and detailed statement of the reasons for delay, the chances of going on, and the possibilities of carrying out the work in the future. If the prospects for the future were no better than they were when the subsidies were voted, I think the duty of the Minister of Finance would be to refuse a subsidy. Of course, it is a very ingenious argument to say that the people of the locality are anxious for this subsidy. But the people as a whole should be protected. There are persons so evil-minded as to say that these things answer a good purpose in an election. I do not know whether any such idea ever occurred to the Minister of Finance——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Never.

Mr. CLANCY. Of course, the hon. gentleman is innocent of these things, but he may suspect that some people have them in mind. Perhaps the hon. gentleman had better be frank and tell the House that that is the reason he decided to give this subsidy, and that he did not ask for any other reason.

Mr. MACLEAN. When the ministers come before the House to put their estimates through, they come with accurate information and attended by their deputies. They are able, in case of a public work, for instance, to tell us what the expenditure has been to date, how the work is proceeding and what expenditure will be required for its completion. But we are asked to revote railway subsidies without any explanation of what has been done or what it is proposed to do. It is high time we ceased to vote these subsidies unless we have definite explanations concerning them. All this is an instance of the reckless way in which millions of public money are voted by this House. I have made a rough estimate, and I find that subsidies are being voted for 1,500 miles of road. No explanations are given to us, not even encouragement held out to the people in the localities affected that these roads will be built. There is either a lack of earnestness, or something held in view that we do not know about. Certainly, no minister ought to propose in this House a vote of public money without an explanation as to how that money is to be applied. And, if the money has been voted before and not spent, we want to know why it was not expended before and whether it will be expended now.

To the Shediac and Coast Railway Company for a line of railway from Shediac to Shemogue and towards Cape Tormentine, in Westmoreland county, not exceeding thirty-eight miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 8 of 1900, item 25 of section 2.

Mr. CLANCY When was that subsidy voted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In 1900.

Mr. CLANCY. This is in the riding of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). If you will permit me to ask a question without charging that the only reason why I ask it is that this railway is not in Ontario, I would request an explanation of this vote.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is considered a strong company. They have spent a good deal of money in surveys, but, as is well known, there have been difficulties in the way of financing such enterprises during the last two or three years. The company are in earnest. This is a section of country that certainly is in need of a railway. It is a fishing section, and perhaps one of the richest agricultural sections of eastern New Brunswick. It is quite largely populated. The people raise large quantities of potatoes which they ship to Bermuda. They have to cart them to Shediac, where they are taken by the Intercolonial Railway. This long haul by road is a very great inconvenience, which would be overcome if the people had a railway. I do not know that it would be a very promising investment, but certainly the railway would be of great convenience to the people living along that shore.

To the Mabou and Gulf Railway Company, Limited, for a line of railway from Mabou Coal Mines to a point at or near Glendyer, thence to Orangedale on the Intercolonial Railway, not exceeding thirty-four miles, a revote of subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1894, and in substitution of the twenty-five miles subsidized thereby from Orangedale to Broad Cove.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would call attention to resolution 62, under which a subsidy is proposed for an additional four miles of this road. This railway is connected with a large coal-mining district in Mabou in the county of Inverness.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the work been commenced ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe the company are now engaged in the construction of the road. It is a very substantial company, chiefly of Americans who are developing the coal mines at Mabou.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. minister observe that this subsidy was granted in 1894 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not to the present company. The present company have only recently taken hold of it, and they are pushing forward the work energetically.

Mr. CLANCY. I imagine that one of the difficulties was that the former company held the charter and the subsidy until they could get their terms for disposing of both to the company that took it up. No doubt there is something in that, but after all it is not an isolated state of things. The hon. gentleman will agree that there ought to be some reasonable prospects on the part of those asking for the subsidy that the work will pay. The Minister of Finance is unable at present to give us that assurance. This business of exploiting the country in that way with the money of the people is one which we should not encourage, and I doubt whether parliament is in any case bound to make a revote to a new company, because the original promoters are bound to be benefited to some extent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a revote of the mileage of the road for that district, but it is not a revote to the same company. Whatever my hon. friend may suspect in other cases, he would be wrong in this case, because I happen to know that the old company has no connection with the new one. This is a new company and a different name; I do not think they even received the old charter. I think the one died and the other has come up as an entirely new venture.

19. To the Nova Scotia Eastern Railway Company, Limited, for a line of railway from New Glasgow to Cross Roads, Country Harbour, thence to the town of Guysborough, and thence to the strait of Canso; with a branch from Cross Roads, country Harbour, aforesaid, down the Country Harbour river to the deep waters thereof, not exceeding 116 miles; in lieu of the subsidies of 40 and 80 miles granted by chapter 7 of 1901, items 4 and 1, respectively, of section 2.

63. To the Nova Scotia Eastern Railway Company, Limited, for a line of railway from Dartmouth through the Musquodoboit valley to a point at or near Melrose to connect there with the railway mentioned in item 19 of this section, not exceeding 120 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolutions 19 and 63 should be read together.

These are two roads which are now being consolidated into one company. The one starts from Dartmouth, on Halifax harbour, traverses the valley of the Musquodoboit river through the county of Halifax, thence into the county of Guysborough and, passing a point called Melrose, goes to Guysborough and Mulgrave. Then there is a crossroad which leaves the town of New Glasgow and crosses this other railway at Melrose and goes on to Country Harbour. This enterprise serves the counties of Halifax, Guysborough and Pictou and runs close to Antigonish, if it does not touch it. It covers a large portion of the eastern section of Nova Scotia, which is at present without railway communication.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there any portion of this road built or being built?

Mr. FRASER. The surveys have all been made and the people are at work on it now. There is a subsidy granted by the Nova Scotia government and a contract made with this company. The company is composed largely of Canadians: Mr. Fitzpatrick, of New Glasgow; Mr. Stratton, the Provincial Secretary of Ontario; and Mr. McCormick, a member of this House. It is an excellent company. They have made all their financial arrangements and completed their surveys. The Nova Scotia government granted a subsidy of $5,000 a mile over the whole railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. member for Guysborough in the company himself?

Mr. FRASER. No, I am not.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is the Mr. Stratton the hon. gentleman from Guysborough refers to the gentleman of the name who is mixed up with the Gamey affair?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FRASER. The Hon. Mr. Stratton, Provincial Secretary of Ontario, is associated with these gentlemen that I have named.

Mr. GOURLEY. At what point has construction commenced on this road?

Mr. FRASER. Between New Glasgow and Country Harbour.

For a line of railway from Debert station on the Intercolonial Railway to Debert Coal Mine, not exceeding 4½ miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 8 of 1900, item 29 of section 2.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is in the county of Colchester. It is a new coal mine which is being opened up now.

Mr. GOURLEY. A short line like this should receive a larger subsidy. In Nova Scotia, unfortunately, the coal already discovered is north of the Cobequid Mountains; this mine in the county of Colchester is south of the Cobequid Mountains, and if we could once discover a coal mine there it would give to the southern part of the province a great advantage in giving us cheaper coal. What is the use of giving a company that is struggling to open a coal mine a little subsidy of $3,200 a mile to build a railway? You might as well send them down a pound of candy. If this parliament wants to command the respect of the people of Canada it ought to make a little vote like this at least $6,000. I supported a vote of $13,000 a mile for Mackenzie & Mann to build railways in the territories, at least we are giving them a guarantee of $13,000 a mile, and I would take that in preference to this. Down in Nova Scotia we have not the commercial development to make railways pay. What is the good of a coal mine that is ten miles away from a railway? I want to say that no railways in Canada should be more than eight miles apart, no man should be more than four miles away from a railway. If we who are members of parliament had to go four miles away to catch a train for Montreal we would think it a hardship. We want to have the trade brought to our doors. That is only a question of travel, but suppose one had sheep or cattle or other agricultural products to ship, and we had to go four miles away to ship those products. Yet members stand up in this House in opposition to the building of railways! If the members of this House want railways at their doors, what do you think of the case of a man in Nova Scotia, or in any other province, who has to go 20 miles to a railway? The thing is preposterous. You cannot expect a great province like Nova Scotia to be developed unless you give it ample railway facilities. If $3,200 a mile is not enough, give $6,000 a mile; and if $6,000 is not enough, make it $12,000 a mile. We want railway development, because, if we have railway development, we will have commercial development, and we will pay back tenfold every cent of money you have given us, but we want, in the first instance, the hand of assistance. This coal company have entered upon a large enterprise in a locality about which there is some doubt as to the financial outcome, and if we help this company we should grant aid to the extent of $6,000 or $8,000 a mile, and not the petty sum of $3,200.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) will read the first paragraph, he will see that these people can get $6,400 a mile.

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes, if the cost exceeds $15,000 a mile. You tell me to spend $10 and then you will give me one dollar.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would the company take $6,400 per mile rather than a guarantee of $13,000 per mile of their bonds ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I think they would rather take the guarantee. In this case, as this vote is intended to develop a large coal interest in that part of the country, I think it should be an exceptional vote, and I think the vote should be raised to double the amount.

For a line of railway from a point on the Joggins Railway near River Hebert Railway bridge to the village of Minudie, not exceeding six miles, being a revote, and in substitution of subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1894.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this the original Joggins Railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not the Joggins Railway. It is for a line from a point on the Joggins Railway.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this being voted to any company, or being voted generally ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is being voted generally for a line of railway.

Mr. CLANCY. And up to the present time no person has taken it up ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Apparently not.

Mr. CLANCY. Is there any prospect of the road being built ?

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will allow me to answer the question as I am familiar with the circumstances of the case. I think that about the year 1885 a subsidy was voted for this same line of railway, but the coal development in Nova Scotia was not then in a flourishing condition. Within the last two or three years a number of lines have been opened up. The River Hebert mines are being operated by some Montreal capitalists known as the Minudie Coal Company, by the Strathcona Coal Company, and by some American capitalists known as the Jubilee Coal Company. They are getting out a large quantity of coal, and the purpose of this railway is to give them an outlet on the water at Minudie.

Mr. CLANCY. Is there a charter for the road ?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, a charter has been obtained for the road, and these companies are all in active operation, but are seriously handicapped by the fact that they have not proper communication with deep water.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is to a point on the Joggins Railway.

Mr. LOGAN. No, from a point on the Joggins Railway to Minudie.

To the Middleton and Victoria Beach Railway Company, Limited, for a line of railway from Victoria Beach to Middleton, not exceeding forty-one miles, in lieu of subsidies granted by chapter 8 of 1900, section 2, item 28, and chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 21.

Mr. CLANCY. We want some explanation of this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This road starts from Middleton, in the Annapolis valley, and follows the Annapolis river down the Granville shore to Victoria Beach, which was the objective point of the original designs for railway construction in western Nova Scotia. At present this railway is being amalgamated—I do not know whether legislative proceedings have been taken—with the Mackenzie & Mann system of railways in the western part of Nova Scotia. It was originally undertaken by another company, but I understand that it is to be consolidated with the Mackenzie & Mann system. It will run through some of the finest farminig land, I think I may say, in the world, because the Annapolis valley is the garden of the world.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this part of the road projected to Yarmouth ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we will come to that later.

To the Halifax and South-western Railway Company for the following lines of railway:—

(a.) for a line of railway from a point at or near Halifax to a point on the Central Railway at or near Mahone bay, not exceeding sixty-eight miles.

(c.) for a line of railway from a point at or near New Germany on the Central Railway to a point at or near Caledonia, not exceeding 22 miles.

(d.) for a line of railway from a point at or near Caledonia to Liverpool, not exceeding 29 miles.

The subsidies to the said lines of railway being granted in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 7 of 1899, items 17, 18, 35 and 36 of section 2, by chapter 8 of 1900, items 26 and 40 of section 2, and also chapter 7 of 1901, items 5 and 23 of section 2, respectively.

To the Halifax and South-western Railway Company for a line of railway to Barrington Passage, in addition to and in continuation of the 77 miles mentioned in items 23 (b) of this section, not exceeding 35 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Subject to the addition of 35 miles, the vote for which you have just read, Mr. Chairman, these votes are a consolidation of a number of votes which have been given in past years for railway lines in the western section of Nova Scotia, westward of Halifax, running through the western part of Halifax county and the counties of Lunenburg, Queen's, Shelburne and Yarmouth. These roads have been chartered in times past by various companies, and subsidies have been granted from time to time to different companies. These various companies have not made very great progress. One of them built some part of one of these roads, but they were not able to carry it out. During the last year a consolidation of all these interests was effected by a company promoted by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. They have made a contract with the government of Nova Scotia for the greater part of this enterprise on the basis of a loan which the government of Nova Scotia are making to them on the credit of the road.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much is the loan ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Thirteen thousand per mile. Of course, they have proceeded on the assumption that they would get revotes of the Dominion subsidies. There are practically two lines, although there is a point at which they join. The main line will run from Halifax through the western part of that county, and through Lunenburg to Mahone bay. There it will form connection with the Central Railway of Nova Scotia, which is already owned by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann and their associates. It will use the Central Railway for a few miles, until it reaches Bridgewater. It then runs down the south shore of Nova Scotia to Barrington Passage, where it meets a road built from Yarmouth eastward. For the present this road is in different hands, but it is reasonable to expect that it will come into the possession of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. This vote, therefore, is to secure a road by the south shore of Nova Scotia from Halifax, passing through the western portion of that county, through Lunenburg, Queen's and Shelburne as far as Barrington, where it will meet a road already in existence running into Yarmouth. From Middleton, in the county of Annapolis, to Lunenburg the Central road has been in operation for a number of years. The second part of the new scheme leaves the Central road at New Germany, and runs to Caledonia. About 22 miles have been constructed, but not completed, under the charter known as the Hervey charter. That road has now been acquired by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, who are pushing it down to the town of Liverpool. This is a revote of various amounts for railways through these counties, with the addition of 35 miles necessary to complete the whole enterprise.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How do they intend to get into Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have no terminal facilities at Halifax as yet, but I presume they will approach the government and try to make arrangements for using the government facilities; but there is no understanding on that point yet.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the province of Nova Scotia given any subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have given a loan of $13,000 per mile to most of the line with a provision, I think, that in the event of the loan being repaid, the usual subsidy be deducted. For the present there is no subsidy, but if the enterprise is successful and the railway can repay the loan, then they may repay the loan less the subsidy.

Mr. KAULBACH. Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am pleased that the government has fully realized how essential the completion of the work on this railway so long delayed, is to the people residing in the near vicinity of this road, running from New Germany to Caledonia.

Northern Queen's—part of the country represented by my hon. friend the acting minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Fielding)—has come into prominence as an agricultural and mining centre, the latter so far being only in its infancy. The same may be said of Northern Lunenburg, taking in Pleasant river, Ninevah, Hempford, Ohio, and New Germany, places through which this road passes, abounding in farm, forest and mineral resources; interspersed with lakes and streams, presenting a perfect panorama, and unsurpassed in any part of Canada, and it is not confined I may say to this section alone, for after leaving New Germany—a railway centre—as well as a land of promise, and passing eastward we enter a still more beautiful country with rich and varied resources. I refer to Foster Settlement, New Burn, Woodstock and New Ross, admirably adapted for agriculture, with forests, lakes and streams and thickly settled by a progressive people but without the advantages of a railway, and in this connection I must here state, that I will never feel satisfied until I can see a road built from New Germany passing through this country to New Ross, and down the valley of the Gold river, connecting with the Halifax and South-western Railway at Chester Basin, now under construction, for the purpose of giving these places the same facilities as their neighbours. There was a railway subsidy granted east from New Germany some years ago but for some reason unknown to myself it lapsed, which was unfair to these people.

In connection with construction work between New Germany and Caledonia I desire to again bring to the notice of the acting Minister of Railways and Canals and the government, that there are quite a number of claims held by parties against the railway company for labour and material supplied on construction, and I would here ask what provision has been made for the liquidation or payment of these claims ? I contend the government have the right—nay they have the power, and they should exercise it—to see that provision is made for the payment of all such legitimate claims, and to see that they are deducted from the cash subsidies due by the government to the company, notwithstanding the company having sub-let the work of construction to others. In any case I hold the government should arrange for the payment of these bills.

The work of construction and the material supplied on the road represents the true value of the road, and the labourers and the party suppliers, as I view it, are really creditors in every sense of the term, and should have the first lien on the road for their bills, and anything short of this would be viewed by a reasonable mind as unjust.

We find the grocer or trader who supplied stores, and other commodities, to the labourers and sub-contractors during construction, remaining unpaid, as well as parties who furnished sleepers, mechanics who furnished cut stone, and numerous other commodities, remaining unpaid. I would ask, are they not to be recognized as creditors, and their claims paid before one dollar is paid over to the company, or the president of the road, by the government, in the way of subsidies ?

The law recognizes every mechanic and labourer employed in the construction of a ship as having an equitable lien on the vessel until all bills are paid, and in default of payment they can distrain or replevin the ship at will, the customs refuse a register and prevent her sailing until every bona fide claim is actually paid, or as an equivalent, a voucher shown of the claim being settled.

I contend that if claims such as I have described hold good against a ship, the same is applicable to a railway; the two are analogous, and the parties claiming bills for work performed and material furnished to this railway company, their contractors or sub-contractors, come under the same category, are creditors in every sense of the term, and entitled to the payment of all claims.

It has always been the policy of the Ontario government to withhold all subsidies for railway construction until all wages of workmen, in fact, every employee and supplier of material on construction have been fully paid, and I sincerely hope the same policy will hold and be observed by the government as respects the road from New Germany to Caledonia.

The advantage in this case as respects the New Germany and Caledonia road is that the federal and provincial governments have the matter of subsidies entirely in their own hands, in so far as the payment is concerned, and I here appeal most earnestly, on behalf of the creditors, that the government pay not a dollar to the company for construction, neither to the promoters nor contractors, nor any person else on this road, until a public notice is given by posters, and in all the county newspapers of Lunenburg and Queen's, asking that all bills unpaid be sent to an agent or adjuster, appointed by the government to receive such claims, and they to decide upon the merits or demerits of the same. The payments should be made by the government.

I may be told the government are dealing only with the present company, and have nothing to do with the original contractors. This would be unjust, as the road would really this day have no value had it not been for the hard labour bestowed by the operatives and the material and supplies, such as sleepers and cut stone, furnished by traders. Should these parties, as creditors, now be told that their claims cannot be recognized, when the government have it in their power to pay them ? I would consider it unjust. I know of some poor farmers and labourers who have had to sacrifice the little they possessed, and their families suffer, in consequence of the delay in payment of bills. I sincerely hope the government will realize the importance of this situation as respects these people, and see that the bills are paid after the manner I suggest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have been so long in Ottawa this session that some of us may be pardoned for being a little rusty on what is going on in our provinces. I am glad to say to my hon. friend that what he suggests has actually been done and that arrangements are being perfected at the present moment to carry it into effect. There is a full understanding between the Nova Scotia government and myself that the governments at Ottawa and Halifax will have to co-operate in the construction of these roads and that we shall jointly see that whoever undertakes to carry out the new enterprise, will have to provide for the payment of the honest claims of the workmen under the old contractors. I am glad to be able to assure the hon. gentleman that in carrying out this arrangement a commissioner was appointed by the local government some time ago. He is at this moment holding investigations in order to obtain correct statements of the amounts of money due, and I am satisfied that in every case in which a claim can be substantiated to the satisfaction of the commissioner, the money will be paid.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am glad to hear the statement of the hon. acting minister. If he had only given me an inkling that such was taking place, he would have saved me the necessity of occupying the time of the House.

Mr. GOURLEY. What amount of construction has been done on this south-western Railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The portion of the road from New Germany, in the county represented by my hon. friend, down to Caledonia was graded and the bridges built, but the rails were not laid. The new company is now laying the rails. The portion from Halifax towards Mahone Bay has been under construction, and considerable progress in that heavy section has been made. Workmen are now employed working westward from Bridgewater in the county of Lunenburg and on other sections. There is now more evidence of good faith in pushing on the work than has ever been shown before, to the great satisfaction of the people along the line ?

Mr. KAULBACH. I am pleased to hear the statement made by the acting minister. May I ask him if they have fully settled on the location of that portion of the road near Port Medway, whether it is to go east or west of Mill Village ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have not yet been called upon to approve officially of any of the plans of this road, because until the subsidy is granted, we are not in a position to demand any plans from the new company for approval, and, we have not taken any formal action in regard to the location of the road. My impression, however, is that the line that commends itself to the people goes below Mill Village towards Port Medway.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think that would be a mistake, because there is a valuable industry in the shape of a pulp mill two miles above Mill Village, which would be a source of traffic to this road which would not be the case if it went below that point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That matter I know has been engaging the attention of the engineers. All questions relating to location of roads are full of difficulties of that character. I think there is no finality in the location ; but the engineers have rather come to the conclusion that a line below Mill Village would be more in the general interest than one above. I am aware of the pulp mill industry to which my hon. friend refers, and will endeavour in some way to see that it gets proper accommodation.

Mr. GOURLEY. Has this road been located towards Barrington ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think there is any difference of opinion about the location of the Barrington end.

Mr. KAULBACH. Do I understand that a connection will be made with the pulp mill ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That remains to be seen. We may be able to do something in the way of providing communication by means of the river.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have contracts yet been entered into with the different companies ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, some contracts were entered into and some construction took place ; but these contracts have all expired, and the subsidies lapsed. Therefore they have to be revoted. There has been no payment of subsidies to this company for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has there been any payment to other companies for this portion of the road ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, none whatever. They never got to the point of earning the subsidy.

To the Inverness Railway and Coal Company, formerly the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, Limited, for eight miles of railway between Point Tupper and Broad Cove; and for a line of railway not exceeding thirty-seven miles from Cheticamp to a point on the line already built between Broad Cove and Point Tupper, being a revote and in substitution of the subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1897.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the change ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a road known as the Inverness and Richmond road, now called the Inverness Railway and Coal Company, running from Port Hastings on the Strait of Canso up to Broad Cove. A portion of the road is built, up to that point, and this revote is for the portion from the terminus up to Cheticamp. It also provides a rearrangement of the mileage, without any addition, which will afford a shipping point on the Strait of Canso.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I believe this road was originally surveyed from Broad Cove to a place called Chimney Corner and from there to Cheticamp. Is it proposed to extend the same railway from Broad Cove to Chimney Corner and thence to Cheticamp, or is it proposed to build it by way of Margaree Forks ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a question of location which I am not able to answer.

For a line of railway from a point at or near Wolfville on the Dominion Atlantic Railway to the government pier on the basin of Minas, not exceeding one mile, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 19.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an extension from the Dominion Atlantic Railway down to the public wharf at Wolfville. There is a corresponding vote for the other side of the bay, which will be reached later on.

Mr. CLANCY. For what purpose is this to be constructed down to the wharf ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a public wharf at Wolfville. Steamers cross the bay from Parrsborough to Wolfville, and it is proposed to make an extension on one side and on the other so that passengers may be brought direct to the wharf instead of having to travel some distance.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a public wharf ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is a government pier.

To the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near Spence's Bridge on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Nicola lake, not exceeding forty-five miles, being a revote of subsidies granted by chapter 5 of 1892 and chapter 4 of 1894.

Mr. CLANCY. Why is this not proceeded with ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The company now applying for this subsidy is not the original company. It has got a charter, and I understand it will get a provincial subsidy. I am informed that it is going right ahead. It goes through a good district, and will open up the Nicola valley which at present has no railway communications, also the coal deposits at the foot ofNicola lake.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the original company dispose of its charter to the other ?

Mr. GALLIHER. No, the new company applied and procured a new charter and a Dominion charter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What has become of the old company ?

Mr. GALLIHER. It is defunct.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the company which proposes to build this railway own the coal mine ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not positive, but I believe it does.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did not the original charter run from near Kamloops to Nicola valley ?

Mr. GALLIHER. This is to run right up to Kamloops as well. It goes from Spence's bridge to Nicola, and will go eventually to Kamloops.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The vote does not say anything about running to Kamloops. I think the old charter ran from Kamloops.

Mr. GALLIHER. So does this, but the vote is only for forty-five miles of that road.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to a coal company getting a subsidy. I do not know any good reason why a coal company should not have some assistance in building a railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The grant was originally given the Nicola Valley Railway Company, which failed to carry out its undertaking, and the petitions for this company asked that it be given the powers conferred by the charter to the old company, and that the subsidy granted to the old company should be continued to it. This is giving to a new company a grant which was given to a former company.

For a line of railway from Winnipeg Beach or Teulon to a point on Icelandic river by way of Gimli, not exceeding thirty-five miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 26.

Mr. McCREARY. The only reason for delay in the construction of this road, I may tell the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), has been the scarcity of labour. It has been absolutely impossible for the railway company to get labour. It might surprise hon. members to know that although we were told that probably 400 miles would be built on the Canadian Northern Railway this year, there will not be more than 100 built. Some of their teams are standing in the stables without men to manage them.

Mr. MACLEAN. How will you manage to build the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is no objection to this grant.

Mr. CLANCY. Have we a map showing that this road is not paralleling some other road, and that we are not giving grants to companies which may amalgamate ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A year or two ago, when the charter was being considered, the Canadian Pacific Railway were obliged to construct up to Winnipeg beach, a few miles north of Selkirk. The Canadian Pacfic Railway then had the option either of running from this place or Winnipeg beach, up north to the Icelandic settlement. I think the member was anxious to have them forced to build part of that road at once. This, I presume, is an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter along the west shore of Lake Winnipeg.

Mr. McCREARY. They were obliged to build this road before going on with the road to Lake Manitoba. The reason they did not is because they could not get labour.

Mr. MACLEAN. If what the hon. gentleman says be true, there is no prospect of the National Transcontinental Railway being built within the next twenty years. Some step will have to be taken. I do not know what they may be, because there is a scarcity of labour all over this country. The statement made by the hon. gentleman is well worthy the consideration of the government, and they ought to be prepared to do something in order to realize their prophecy that we will have a new transcontinental railway within five years.

Mr. EMMERSON. This is a subsidy for the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. EMMERSON. We have heard from an hon. member, who is a director of that company, that he entirely objects to anything of this kind. I thought then that he was expressinig the opinion of the company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway applied for this subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but they have applied for several others.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This session ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. This application came from the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), who thought there was a misunderstanding with regard to the previous vote. I do not think I have any application from the Canadian Pacific Railway for it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a subsidy forced upon the railway company without any application at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are not obliged to take it.

Mr. McCREARY. If any other company will build the road, the Canadian Pacific Railway will not get it.

Mr. CLANCY. Is there only one charter over that territory ?

Mr. McCREARY. I am not sure whether the Canadian Northern has a charter there or not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They have not.

Mr. CLANCY. Is there just one charter covering the territory ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is no charter covering the railway along the lake shore to Gimli. There is a charter extending up the middle of the tract of land lying between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis on the west and Lake Manitoba on the east.

Mr. McCREARY. Is there not a local charter passed last year ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know about that.

Mr. SPROULE. This is an extraordinary thing. When the granting of these subsidies was first begun, one of the principles laid down was that a subsidy should be given only when a company had satisfied the government that they were possessed, not only of the desire, but of the financial ability to build the road if they were aided, but that they were unable to build it without aid. But the minister tells us that no company has applied for this subsidy. And he tells us that the company holding the charter is the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is well able to build, and they have not asked for a dollar. He says that the hon. member for the riding has asked the government to assist in building the railway, and he is handing it over, I presume, as a free gift to the Canadian Pacific Railway. In many other parts of the country where companies desire to build roads, they have not been able to get the assistance of the government. But in this case we are so lavish with our money that we are ready to give it to a company whether they ask for it or not.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not know that we were here legislating for any particular corporation. There are 5,000 people in that section who have been settled there for twenty-five years on the promise made in this parliament that they should have a railway to enable them to ship their wood, and so clear their land. That promise has never been carried out. On behalf of these people I asked that a sum of money should be offered to any company that would give the desired railway accommodation. I am not speaking for the Canadian Northern Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other corporation.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not the principle upon which these subsidies were begun. As I say, the object of a subsidy was to assist a weak corporation to build a railway that it could build with a subsidy, but it could not build without a subsidy. It is not contended that this road is to be built by a weak corporation requiring assistance. The corporation that is expected to build it is known to be strong. We have not even an application from this company for the subsidy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have not any offer from the company to build it. It is not certain, I suppose, that they will build the road for the subsidy, but it seems reasonably certain that they will not build it without it. The fact that a company has not applied for a subsidy does not prove that one ought not to be offered. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Sproule) has confused the conditions. The principle is that before you enter into a contract with a company to build a road and receive the subsidy, you should have reasonable assurance that they are acting in good faith and have the resources to build the road. But it has not been said before that you shall not grant a subsidy until some company has shown itself able and willing to earn it. Again and again subsidies have been voted in order to try to find a company to build a road.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that the principle when we commenced the granting of railway subsidies was laid down in this House, and it was that when a company was prepared to build a road, but needed assistance, that assistance could be given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was as respects the making of the contract, but not as to the granting of the subsidy.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the general understanding under which subsidies like this are granted ? Does the first company coming and showing evidence of good faith and ability to build the road receive the bonus ? Or, as between companies, does the government make a choice ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government must be trusted with discretion, inasmuch as the object is to get the road built. We hold out the subsidy hoping that it will induce somebody to build the road. But the government must have discretion in selecting the company. In this case we do not expect to be obliged to select from half a dozen companies all ready to build the road. I fancy this road will be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway and nobody else.

To the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company for a line of railway from the town of South Edmonton, N.W.T., to North Edmonton, and thence westerly towards the Yellow Head Pass, a distance not exceeding fifty miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1899, section 2, item 41.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does this parallel the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is it an earnest effort to try to get into the Yukon from some point of connection with the Canadian system of railways ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will have to ask the company as to their earnestness.

Mr. MACLEAN. Is this to go rather to the Pacific than to the Yukon ? And if so, will it parallel the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I think the Grand Trunk Pacific leaving Edmonton will turn to the north, and my recollection is that this road runs west and south.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This must be a road that is going to the Pacific too, through the Yellow Head pass.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The charter is through to the Pacific ocean.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this is an extension of the Mackenzie & Mann system that runs from Winnipeg to Edmonton.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very likely, because I see the application is signed by Mr. Lash.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The road is built from Strathcona, or South Edmonton, to Edmonton. It is to extend from the city of Edmonton westerly and south-westerly through the Yellow Head pass to Butte Inlet or Port Simpson.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it would be well if some of the words in this resolution were changed. There are no such places as South Edmonton and North Edmonton. There is the town of Strathcona and the town of Edmonton. I would respectfully suggest that the wording be changed so as to make it read 'Strathcona' and 'Edmonton.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. Has not this piece of railway already received a subsidy ? Is this granting another subsidy to a road already subsidized ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This road has not been subsidized. I have not inquired into it especially, but I am sure that had it been subsidized my officials would have pointed out that fact to me.

Mr. OLIVER. This refers to a piece of road that is built from Strathcona to Edmonton.

Mr. SPROULE. Without getting a subsidy ?

Mr. OLIVER. It has earned a subsidy, but I do not know whether it got it or not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They would be entitled to the subsidy when they had built ten miles of the road and not before. Not having built that much, this is given them as a renewal of the subsidy.

To the St. John Valley and Rivière du Loup Railway Company for a line of railway from Fredericton, N.B., to Woodstock, not exceeding fifty-nine miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1899, item 5 of section 2.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that an extension of the Rivière du Loup Railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. From Fredericton to Woodstock it is an entirely different line.

Mr. EMMERSON. The company are composed of very good men, Mr. Manchester, Mr. Howard Troop, and several other gentlemen of equal prominence and financial ability in the city of St. John, are interested in this company. They have made a full survey, in fact, I think they have done some work. They propose now going on, as I am informed by their solicitor, and pushing the work through. If a revote of this subsidy is given them, they will be in a position to push the work through.

Mr. CLANCY. How far does that line run from the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is a great convenience to a section of country which is now without railway facilities. It is on the western side of the St. John river, following down the banks of the river. The Canadian Pacific Railway is on the eastern or northern side, some distance from the river.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the distance between them ?

Mr. GIBSON. Twelve miles.

Mr. CLANCY. One would naturally ask what necessity there is for the road. I understand that it runs near the American boundary.

Mr. EMMERSON. It runs from Woodstock to Fredericton on what is known as the southern side or western side of the St. John river, and along the banks of the river. The Canadian Pacific Railway is on the eastern side of the St. John river, but some distance back of it, with hills between.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The member for Sunbury (Mr. Wilmot), who is not in his seat at present, explained the necessity of this road to me, and pointed out that the company was a fine corporation, and the road would be a great benefit to a large section of that province.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This company is composed of some of the best men in the country—like Mr. James Manchester, a gentleman who communicated with me on the subject, and Mr. W. H. Thorne, a particularly worthy citizen of St. John, although wrong in his politics, and other gentlemen, very eminent citizens of St. John. This application is one of the best before us as regards the men who are behind it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a road at the present time from Fredericton to Woodstock. Will this road be any shorter? Although it is on the other side of the river, it starts from the same point. Will the distance be any shorter by the new road?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is a distance of 30 miles between the two roads according to the map.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The map of the country is all wrong.

Mr. GIBSON. This Canadian Pacific Railway road is 65 miles long. It runs along on the east side, and is from 5 to 20 miles from the valley route. This road will serve another part of the country altogether, and is badly needed by the people along the valley of the St. John river. It is a fine country along the route.

Mr. CLANCY. How far will this be from the proposed Grand Trunk Pacific?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Grand Trunk Pacific will be on the eastern side of the St. John river, this will be on the western side.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before we take up the new subsidies, I wish to make a few observations. We have been passing subdies for railways which come under the purview of the parliament of Canada for which subsidies have been granted and for which revotes are asked to-day.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) allow me to read the item?

For a line of railway from Hawkesbury, Ontario, to South Indian, not exceeding thirty-five miles, in lieu of subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1899, item 22 of section 2.

Mr. CLANCY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This has been placed under the wrong heading. This is a revote in lieu of another subsidy and item 31 would therefore be the first of the new votes.

Mr. CLANCY. We want some information about this. Surely the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) does not expect the chairman to declare this carried until we have some explanation of the item. It is intolerable that we should be expected to run through the items in this manner. The committee is entitled to some information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a revote of a subsidy granted in 1899 to connect Hawkesbury with the Canada Atlantic at South Indian. I am advised that the road passes through a very fine part of the country.

Mr. CLANCY. If it is a revote what is the reason for the delay?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot tell that.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The intention is to make a cut-off from the Canada Atlantic Railway to connect with the Great Northern at Hawkesbury.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They have a road from Hawkesbury to the Canada Atlantic Railway already subsidized by this parliament.

The PRIME MINISTER. At the present time there is a bridge across the Ottawa river at Hawkesbury. There is a road connecting with the Canada Atlantic Railway by way of Vankleek Hill. This is another line proposed from South Indian to Hawkesbury. It serves a large portion and shortens the connection between the Canada Atlantic and Hawkesbury by some thirty miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a road from Hawkesbury connecting with the Canada Atlantic Railway at Glen Robertson. That is intended of course to go southerly towards Montreal, while this, as I understand, is intended to give a more northerly connection between Hawkesbury and South Indian thus shortening the route to Ottawa.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The distance beween Hawkesbury and South Indian via Glen Robertson is a great deal more than the distance between Hawkesbury and South Indian via this cut-off.

Mr. CHRISTIE. This will shorten the present connection between Hawkesbury and the Canada Atlantic Railway by about 28 miles.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am sure that I will be happy to support this vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As it is almost six o'clock I will reserve my remarks until after recess.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

To the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company for a line of railway from Woodstock northerly to a point on the Grand Trunk Railway at Berlin, or from Ingersoll to Stratford, or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places, not exceeding thirty-five miles, being in addition to, and continuation of the nine miles mentioned in item one of this section.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it oportune at this point to offer a few remarks on the policy of subsidizing railways in the older provinces of Canada. We have just gone through a list of railways which are applying for renewals of subsidies, which I presume, in many cases, have lapsed, covering mileage of some 1,500 miles, aggregating in cost something like $6,000,000. We now come to the consideration of subsidies for new lines of railways, making a total mileage of some 4,000 miles, and aggregating in cost to this country in subsidies from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000. It is not necessary to make any remarks on the large amount that is here involved, but we may notice that this is altogether outside and independent of the huge scheme we are facing of building a transcontinental railway. In face of this, I think it is time that we should call a halt and consider whether it is in the best interests of this country that the policy which has been pursued in the past should be continued. Occasionally when we ask the question why we should continue the policy of subsidizing railways in the older provinces, we are sometimes told in reply: Well that has been the policy in the past; it has been in vogue for a great number of years, and we suppose it will have to go on. If there was ever a time when we should call a halt, in order to give this question a full and further consideration before we go further, this is the time. It is questionable whether it is good policy to build a railway anywhere that cannot be built without a government subsidy. It may be a fair proposition that any railway which requires a government subsidy in order that it may be built is not required by the business of the country, or in the interests of the country, and probably would not be a paying enterprise. At this time capital is seeking investment in any enterprise that will pay reasonably well in this country, and where there is really business to be done and a commercial need for the railway, there will be no need to go asking the various governments, federal, provincial and municipal, for subsidies to build railways. Any scheme of that kind that has a fair proposition to place before the capitalists of this country, is one which if brought under the consideration of men capable of looking into it, will not lack necessary capital for its construction. It may be argued that railways in the older provinces cannot be built without government subsidies; I thinik it is a question whether they should be built at all or not. I know that it is said that this is the old policy. It does not follow that because it is a policy that has obtained in the past that with the changed conditions of the country, with the growth and development of the country it should still continue. It was perhaps necessary to build railways when the country was new, in order to open up the country, and it may be that in opening up new territories and new sections of this country, the policy of subsidizing may still be a wise policy, but in the older provinces, which are already supplied with the necessary transportation facilities, there is no call for further building of railways; or if they are built, they should be built on such a sound business basis as would invite capital of its own accord to seek investment in them. It is not a sufficient defence to say that for many years we have subsidized railways. The changing conditions in this country remind us of a line of Lowell's that 'new occasions teach new duties,' and we might fairly consider whether it is not a proper time to depart from the old policy which has obtained in the past. The enormous amount involved in the subsidies we are asked to vote on this occasion, will only be added to from year after year; a new batch will come up next year. The business of railway promoting has become a distinct profession, and men enter upon it, not for the benefit of the country, and not even in the interests of capitalists, but as charter mongers, or promoters of railways in order that they may pull out of any scheme all they are able to get and leave the scheme to sink or float. We have had some notable examples of that in this country; railways have been exploited by the promoters, who secured subsidies from the federal, provincial and municipal governments, pulled all the money they could out of them, and then allowed the railways to become bankrupt enterprises, not needed by the country, and with not sufficient business tributary to them to make them paying enterprises. In this connection, respecting railways to which subsidies have been granted and those to which subsidies will be granted in the future, I think it well to call the attention of the government to the fact that the interests of the workingmen, the men who put their labour, time and money into schemes of this kinid, should be protected in every way. We have had examples during this session of parliament in which men have supplied materials, &c., for the building of railways and in one or two instances have been left without pay, while the men who exploited the railways made all they could out of them and went away, you might say, with the government subsidies in their pockets. I think it would be a good policy for the government to call a halt and grant no more subsidies to railways, at least in the older provinces, until they have had fuller and freer consideration, by a full parliament during the next session. A large number of the members have now gone to their homes, and the parliamentary representation of the country is at present very much depleted. A subject of the importance of this one should not be dealt with at this late period of the session, but should have a full and fair consideration. These estimates ought to be brought down for the opinion of the House earlier in the session. It is not fair to parliament to ask them to consider the expenditure of such enormous sums of money in the dying hours of the session, in order that they may be rushed through without that full discussion which all subjects of this kind should receive. I believe that the good common sense of this country is largely opposed to subsidy granting. I know that in the section which I represent, among the farmers, public opinion is opposed to the granting of subsidies even for railways that may be constructed through the country in which they are living, and I speak as representing them. The burdens of this country ought to be lightened, and not so enormously increased as they are being. It is a question whether the best interests of the country are considered or the interests of the government. It is government patronage which requires these enormous subsidies more than the requirements of the country. These railways are, perhaps, being exploited more for that purpose than for the benefit they will be to the country at large.

While I am on this subject I might refer for a moment to the question of giving charters to railways. We have now had a railway commission appointed which we may presume will be of a non-political character. It would be but fair that every company seeking a charter to build a railway should have their project submitted to that railway commission, and thoroughly examined by them before parliament meets, in order to see whether such a railway would be in the interests of the country, whether it was demanded by the requirements of the country, and whether there would be business tributary to it sufficient to make it pay. We might then have good, solid legislation along this line, and not have railway enterprises such as have been brought before this House during this and the last session. I do not intend to occupy the House any longer, but I throw out these few suggestions in the interest of my own constituency, and I believe that in doing so, I represent largely the good common sense of this country.

Mr. HENDERSON. This afternoon we somewhat hurriedly passed some thirty resolutions granting subsidies to railways, all of which, however, are revotes, renewing grants which had been made in former years, perhaps chiefly under the direction of the present government, but some of them extending back beyond their advent to power. Possibly the same exception could not be taken to the renewal of subsidies that can be taken to new subsidies. No doubt in many cases men have entered into large financial obligations under promises from the government of the day that they would be aided in the enterprises in which they had interested themselves, and consequently it might seem unfair for the government to refuse now to carry out in good faith what was promised to railway incorporators in days gone by, and on which they proceeded to invest their own money and the money of the shareholders they had secured throughout the country. Therefore, it may fairly be argued that the passing of these revotes is justifiable, and could not well be refused by the House. But when we come to the new subsidies, I think we can look at the matter in a very different light. It has been well said by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) that it is time that we called a halt in the granting of railway subsidies. Many of these railways which we are about to deal with pass through well settled sections of the country, and therefore ought to be self-sustaining. I fail to see that the country at large is called upon to supplement what the promoters of these railways may be able themselves to put into the enterprises in order to make them paying speculations. Some of them I have no doubt have merit. I do not for a moment say that we should in every instance refuse a subsidy to a railway. I think there are meritorious cases—roads which may be strictly called colonization roads, going into and opening up new sections of country. But to my mind the great bulk of them are roads which have no claims, and for which no subsidy should be granted by the government. It has now come to this, that you cannot build a mile of railway in this country without coming to the government for assistance. In this list of subsidies which we are to deal with to-night, we have railways down to one mile in length, two and a half miles, three miles, four miles. Surely it is not necessary for the promoters of these schemes to come to the government for assistance. These short lines of railway do not lead into new districts; they cannot be classed as colonization roads. One of them is referred to as a road leading to a wharf. Surely it is not necessary for the government of this country to be called upon to use the public money to assist enterprises of that kind. Therefore, whilst there may be meritorious cases to which aid may be granted, I think the great bulk of these cases which we are about to deal with should not receive aid. I think the principle of subsidizing railways should not be continued to the same extent as in the past. I think the time has arrived in this country when most railways can be constructed and made to pay without the intervention of the government. I therefore desire to place on record my protest against the passing of these resolutions. I do not suppose for moment that will prevail. The government have apparently adopted this policy, and have gone very far afield in widening it. It seems to me that they might have narrowed it down to cases of real merit. In saying this, I know I am voicing the sentiments of my constituents. The feeling is very strong, not only in the county I represent, but I believe throughout western Ontario. Some may say that it is a rather selfish view and that western Ontario, having been well provided with railways, should not complain if other sections of the country are aided in the same way. I do not say that every case is lacking in merit; but I think that the government should exercise a great deal more judgment in the promises they are making to the promoters of railways, and that the number should be very much limited. I hope and trust that the government will take this view of the matter, and will consider the sentiments of the people of this country. If they do that, I am quite sure that a good many of these resolutions which we have before us to-night will not receive the endorsation of the committee.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) has in a general way protested against the granting of railway subsidies for the older parts of the country—I suppose having in mind particularly the older parts of Ontario. I hold in my hand a petition from a number of the electors of the county of Grey asking for the construction of a railway through that county. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) also protests against the granting of subsidies. These two gentlemen have the distinguished honour of representing constituencies which have been eminently served by railways, and those railways have received pretty liberal public aid. I am not aware that these gentlemen ever recorded their opposition to the construction of any railways projected through or calculated to assist their particular constituencies; but their constituents having got all they think they can profitably use, their representatives arise in this House and protest against other constituencies receiving as equitable a measure of treatment. My hon. friend from Halton probably thinks he is discharging his full duty by uttering a general protest against these subsidies. May I be permitted to point out to him a much more effective way of recording his objection? If he is sincere, and I am sure he is, let him at the right time, before these subsidies are granted, arise in his place and point out by a distinct motion which subsidies in this list he objects to, and let him challenge the vote of this House, and place upon record by yeas and nays the views of those who are either against or for these subsidies. We then will know where we stand. There is scarcely a subsidy we have passed which has not been supported more or less by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I venture to say that of those which are to come we will see the same liberal action on the part of members of the opposition. Until they by their votes challenge a particular subsidy, they cannot escape responsibility by entering a general protest against all subsidies. There is only one way in which my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) can put himself properly on record, and I now await with great interest to see whether he will take that proceeding—there is only one way in which he and his friends can put themselves on record and that is by recording their votes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am certainly grateful to the hon. Postmaster General for the fatherly advice he has given me—I might almost call it a lecture. But after an experience of fifteen sessions in this House, I am inclined to doubt that I require the special counsel which the hon. gentleman has offered. I have my own opinion on the question. I am quite willing to name the resolutions I object to and which I consider have no merit, and I will undertake to move a resolution, if the hon. gentleman will second and support it. That is the position I take.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A very safe position.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. gentleman will support my resolution, I will be happy to vote with him. I fear, however, that I shall be obliged to limit very materially the number of resolutions condemning these subsidies, if I desire to get the hon. gentleman's support. With regard to the mode of entering my protest, I know of no stronger way in which a member of this House can declare himself than by making a speech. It is an old saying that an hon. member can very easily explain away a vote, but he cannot explain away a speech. I think the Postmaster General will agree with me on that point and perhaps regret having made some of the speeches he did in this House, particularly not later than Saturday last, which he will have a great deal more difficulty in explaining away than if he had given a vote. I consider that I have given the strongest protest I can against this wholesale granting of subsidies, even though I may not have the privilege of voting for a resolution condemning it. The hon. gentleman knows that all the resolutions I could move here would be voted down by himself and his friends, and it would be useless for me to propose resolutions which would not have the slightest chance of being accepted by the majority of this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman, for once in his life, manifests a desire to become an humble follower of the Postmaster General. I was not aware until this moment that he was ever prepared to take his views on public matters from any one on this side. He now says he is prepared to propose a motion to strike out all of these subsidies, if I will second it. But I am not of his opinion. I am in favour of these subsidies and am prepared by my vote to support them. If my hon. friend is opposed to them, let him make his motion. He does not require to seek me for a seconder. He has his friends, let him see if he can get a corporal's guard of his own people to support him. He would like to go before the people and point out that he had made a protest against these subsidies, but he dare not call for a vote on any of them. He asks what is the use of proposing a motion which will be voted down. Since when did the hon. gentleman become so modest? We have had vote after vote during these last seven months, called for by hon. gentlemen opposite, although they knew perfectly well that their propositions would be defeated. They regarded the taking of the yeas and nays as the proper way to place on record their views for or against any policy. How comes it now that my hon. friend changes his views and tactics? I tell him and every member of the opposition that each one of them is responsible for every one of these subsidy votes unless he challenges a division. Let each man stand up and record his vote for or against. They cannot escape responsibility under cover of a general disapproval. They cannot escape responsibility to their own constituents by simply giving utterance to an idle protest. Let them place themselves on record. Let them come out like men. Fancy my hon. friend apologizing to the people of Halton for not presenting a motion because the Postmaster General would not second it! Would he not be asked whether he was sent to parliament to do what the Postmaster General approved? He would be told that he was elected to oppose the Postmaster General. Yet to-night, under cover of a plea of that kind, he seeks to escape the responsibility which devolves upon him, as upon every other individual member of this House. I repeat that until he challenges by his vote any subsidy submitted to this House, he will be held responsible for having granted it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman has suggested that I wished to take him as my leader. I desire to disclaim any impeachment of that kind. What I did say was that I should become the leader of the Postmaster General, and I hope that before this debate closes I may find in him an humble follower.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Try me.

Mr. HENDERSON. I repeat again that the protest I have made is the strongest I can possibly make. The Postmaster General has instanced cases in which we on this side have challenged the policy of the government by moving resolutions. That I consider to be a very good plan, because it does not require every member to stand up in his place and enter a protest against the government policy when all of one mind, that can be done much more quickly by voting on the question. I do not know what is the policy of hon. gentlemen on this side on the question of railway subsidies. I do not know if they have any general policy, nor do I know whether hon. gentlemen opposite have such a policy. Perhaps there is not on that side behind the Postmaster General a united opinion. If he would test his own followers, he would find hon. gentlemen behind him who would much rather that we on this side did not move resolutions condemning these railway subsidies. If we did, some of his followers would be compelled to give a vote which they would much prefer not giving at this time. I desire to say nothing further. I desired merely to give expression to the sentiments of my constituents. My constituents know my sentiments and I know theirs, and so far as I am able, both by voice and by vote, if a vote should be taken, I am prepared without hesitation to put myself on record in favour of what I believe to be the sentiments of the people I represent.

Mr. BROCK. As one of the corporal's guard, to which the hon. the Postmaster General alluded in his somewhat magniloquent manner, also I am prepared to make a general protest.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. And I base that general protest upon the minute of council passed by these hon. gentlemen themselves appointing a responsible commission to investigate and pass upon the great transportation questions of this country. We should not touch the question of bonusing a single mile of new railway that should come within the purview of that commission until that commission has reported. And, as to any railways that do not come within the purview of that commission we have no right to deal with them at all. Our business here is to legislate with regard to matters for the general benefit of Canada, and local matters we should leave to local authority. Instead of that, we find ourselves called upon to deal with a variety of schemes about which even the government themselves know nothing. They are asked questions as to when charters were granted, why granted, to whom granted, and the hon. gentleman in charge of this measure knew nothing at all about these matters. And I do not think that the Postmaster General (Hon Sir William Mulock), with all due respect to him, knew any more. The government, so far as railway matters are concerned, is going merely at haphazard. I may be mistaken, and they may know more than they appear to know; but I do not believe that the government really know anything about the schemes they have placed before us. We have heard to-day of one railway that was projected in the province of New Brunswick on one side of a river. It turned out that there was another railway a short distance away on the other side of the river. And the members of the government did not know how many miles these railways would be apart and did not know where the new railway was going.

I take the government to task upon their dealing with these questions after the appointment of a transportation commission. They have talked a great deal about that commission. Why should not all these questions be placed before them for consideration ? But the course we are now taking is that we appoint respectable gentlemen as a commission and then give them nothing to do. During to-day's sitting, before six o'clock, we had passed, I believe $6,000,000 of railway subsidies; and we are asked to pass now somewhere in the neighbourhood of $7,000,000 more. This government have become so accustomed to dealing in large figures that $13,000,000 is a mere bagatelle to them. But I am sure that the country is taking a very different view of it. And if the government wish to make the impresssion they desire to make, they should be prepared, when proposing to give $3,200 a mile for a certain length of railway, to give full information as to what that money is being granted for and why the road should be built. Without such information, we do not know but that instead of subsidizing a railway we are subsidizing a constituency. We know very well that most of the votes this morning were revotes, some of them eight and ten years old. Do you mean to tell me that you are subsidizing railways in such cases as these ? I make the general statement, as my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) made it, that in many cases these are subsidies to constituencies and not to railways. These railways were subsidized years ago and never built, yet these subsidies are renewed. And the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) endeavoured to terrorize members into voting for these subsidies. 'Challenge the vote,' he said. What does that mean ? It means that members should place the government in a position to say : These miserable fellows in opposition are opposing a vote of $3,200 a mile for a railway to run through this constituency; they are opposing the spending of that money in the constituency; but the government is quite willing that that money should be spent : Glorify the government ! Why, it is mere child's play to deal with him in this matter, because we know his style of argument. Usually he is strong; but this evening he is remarkably weak. I think he was not himself at all in arguing this railway question.

Now, the government are face to face with another difficulty, a difficulty which they must feel. How are government debentures going in the financial market at the present day. Are governments, even endorsers of railway bonds, able to raise all the money they want ? And great railway systems, when they want to raise money, instead of paying 3 per cent, are they not obliged to go to New York and Great Britain and pay 5½ per cent ? And this country is going to spend $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 upon a railway and then rent it at 3 per cent for fifty years, when very likely we shall have to pay 5 per cent or 6 per cent for the money with which to build it. I do not think I am misleading the House or the country when I make the statement that the government are face to face with a very serious financial difficulty, and they are running their heads against it more and more every day. Take these votes that we are now passing—$13,000,000 of subsidies to railways. We are not going to give these people cash; you are going to give them the credit of the country, and they will go into the financial market and raise money upon that credit. Of course, you say $13,000,000 is only a small matter. But you have several times $13,000,000 that you are guaranteeing, and you have millions coming due that you have to provide for. I think it time to call a halt, as the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) says. We are here to criticise, but the government are here to act. Their actions at the present time are not creditable to themselves as managers of the financial affairs of this country. They have debts to meet, yet they are going on increasing their indebtedness for the sake of subsidizing constituencies and pleasing gentlemen who are going back for re-election. It is very, very serious; and I wish to say to this House through you, Mr. Chairman, that, as a business man, one not brought up to politics or in the atmosphere of politics, that I feel very seriously the position that the government are rushing this country into at the present time. I know that it is unpopular to go to the people, as we expect to have to go, and have it said that we have opposed the expenditure of money in their county. But I say that that is the most contemptible kind of politics. And I am astonished that a gentleman occupying the position before this country that the Postmaster General does, should be willing to make the reply he did to the hon. member for South Grey and the hon. member for Halton. Their remarks are such as have been called for, loudly called for, by the people for years past. The evidence that such words needed to be spoken is seen in the very votes that we have been passing. These subsidies were voted years ago, yet the promoters of these railways have not been able to raise the money, over and above the subsidies, to build roads. I know that from the province of British Columbia, and from what some Reform politicians at one time called the shreds and patches of confederation,' the cry comes for money. And we have ever been willing to grant that money, so long as it was to be spent solely in the public interest, to build up every part of the Dominion, including these shreds and patches. I do not call them that, for we on this side have always had sympathy with every part of the Dominion, from end to end. We are even in full sympathy with this 'rolling back of the map,' spoken of the other day by the opening up of the northern regions of Canada, if it can be shown that there is anything practical in what the government propose.

But why need they be afraid to put it off till the end of the session ? Why not have the surveys made and bring down a business system, not mountains of information, by which we are absolutely humbugged ? We want information by prominent engineers. By our course with regard to these transportation systems, we are making ourselves a laughing stock from one end of the country to the other in the financial markets of the world ; we are making ourselves ridiculous by proposing schemes without knowing anything about them, floating them on the market to the detriment of a great many schemes that would be beneficial to this country. Each one of these schemes has a certain bearing upon the others. If we go to the financial markets of the old country, or of this country, or of New York, and they ask us : What are you going to do with this eighty millions of money ? Why, we are going to build a railway from Moncton through to Quebec, and from Quebec to Winnipeg, on a line 200 or 300 miles north of civilization. Well, that is a big scheme, what kind of information have you to go upon ? Well, the Premier of the Dominion of Canada, a gentleman for whom we all have great respect, says that he has mountains of information, and he has brought them down. We find them in a little pamphlet that is perfectly ridiculous. Under these circumstances, I join with my hon. friends from South Grey (Mr. Richardson) and from Halton (Mr. Henderson) in appealing to the government on the general principle. The Postmaster General says : I bring down a vote for so much money that is going to Centre Toronto, and if you dare to vote against it I will leave you in the hands of your constituents. Mr. Chairman, he dares the wrong man. I will vote against anything that I consider is wrong. I may make mistakes, no doubt I have made a great many, but there is one mistake I won't make, I will not lay before the great financiers of Great Britain, of Canada and of the United States such a scheme as has been propounded by the government without one single particle of information. I say here advisedly that there is not one member of the government who knows anything at all about that country, not one who has any information from a man that does know anything about building a railway with a grade of four-tenths of one per cent per mile, and with this magnificent want of curves. All the grades and curves are in the imagination of the government, who want to discover something to save them from the contempt of this whole country. What have they done ? They have never, since they have been in power, done anything but to go back on their records. The Postmaster General knows they have no policy, and those hon. gentlemen whom they took to their bosoms seven years ago have finally become disgusted with them, and they know it. Therefore, I contend that when the Postmaster General gets up to lecture an old member of this House like my hon. friend from Halton, he makes one of the mistakes of his life. The hon. member for Halton is known to this House and to this country as a safe man. He has advocated no wild cat schemes in this country, but, as an old and prominent business man, he has asked the government to halt.

Now, with the old votes revoted and the new votes we are asked to pass, we are entering upon an expenditure of several millions of dollars. I have looked through these items and I do not see a vote for the Quebec bridge—another very important matter that should be discussed by this House. We are led up to these things little by little, not all at once ; we get them in small homeopathic doses, which gradually approach to allopathic doses ; and I think that by the time we get the big bonuses all through, the country will not put up with it. But the great mistake, I contend, is made in the Railway Committee of this House. We are all at fault on both sides. We give charters to individuals to whom we would not lend a dollar bill ; we give charters to a number of people because some genial member from British Columbia or somewhere else comes forward and jollies us into giving the charter. Now, that is altogether wrong. I contend that this great transportation commission that was heralded with such flourish of trumpets by the Finance Minister should pass upon every one of these charters before they come before the Railway Committee and see whether they are for the general advantage of Canada. Then again these charters should not be granted unless there is some reasonable financial ability behind them to carry them out. Before granting a charter we want to know what bonuses are being granted by the Dominion, by the provincial government and by the municipalities. These are matters so serious that I make no apology in taking up the time of the House in discussing them, even in these last days of the session. These are matters that should be discussed from one end of this country to the other. It is generally thought that politics is a very different thing from business. When we come here to transact the business of the country we should do it upon the same principles of honour that we transact our private business. I contend that the same principles of justice and right should guide us in the conduct of the affairs of the country as should guide us in the conduct of our individual affairs. What is there more important than drawing upon the revenues of this country, in taking money out of the pockets of the people and using it for public purposes ? In such a serious matter we should exercise the same prudent business principles, the same ideas of rectitude, that we desire to use in the conduct of our private business. We should not be deterred from so doing by the threats of the Postmaster General or anybody else, that we are flying in the face of our constituents if we vote against this or that railway subsidy. I say we must rise above that kind of consideration if we are going to fulfil the national destiny which has been so graphically described by the Prime Minister. I desire to place myself on record along with my hon. friends from South Grey and from Halton, on the general principle which they have advocated. Let us once settle down upon some safe and just general principle, and we cannot go far astray in details. But when we attempt to do what is fair and just, and dare to express our opinions on the floor of this House, are we to be told by the Postmaster General that we are opposing the interests of our constituents in holding back railway subsidies from them ? If I thought for one moment that I was sent here to advocate subsidies or anything else for my constituents that were coming out of the pockets of the rest of the people, I would not remain here. I think there is nothing so contemptible as to be continually scheming to get something for your constituents at the expense of other people. I contend there is too much of that kind of thing going on. We have voted this afternoon subsidies, I believe, covering in the vicinity of 4,000 miles of railway. Besides that, I am given to understand that we have got to make arrangements about the Quebec bridge. We have not got that before us yet, but I wish to include that in the protest I am making. Whatever is going to be done must be done above board, and in the face of the whole country. It must not be done seemingly for one interest when it is in reality for another. Mr. Chairman, I may not have another privilege of addressing you here. I wish now to enter my protest generally against the policy of this government, against the system upon which railway bonuses are granted, upon which bridges are built, railways are built and harbours are subsidized from one end of this country to the other. We are within a few days of the end of the session, when in all probability hon. gentlemen opposite are preparing to appeal to the country for support or for condemnation, and I desire to take this last opportunity of placing my views on record.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) addresses his remarks to a criticism of what he describes as the general system of bonusing. The general system of bonusing is not the question before the committee. The subject before the committee relates to a number of separate propositions to grant aid to certain railways, some in existence and some not yet in existence. He joins with the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) in protesting against these subsidies. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he objects to all of the subsidies that are proposed here ?

Mr. BROCK. I think I was pretty plain. I believe that every subsidy that comes before the House should first of all come before the transportation commission appointed by the right hon. leader of the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a very large committee. This is a Committee of the Whole House and supersedes all the other committees in Canada in dealing with these propositions at this stage. The hon. gentleman dare not answer that question categorically. He knows that he himself has been pressing the government to grant aid to a railway this session. He knows that he has a mandate from the city of Toronto to use his best endeavours to promote the granting of a subsidy to the James Bay Railway and other railways to aid the city of Toronto. The hon. gentleman will not deny that.

Mr. BROCK. I mean to say that I have no such mandate, and that I have made no such demand. I will always support the granting of a bonus to a railway through a new country, but I would never ask for a bonus for Toronto to secure the building of a railway into that city—never. The city of Toronto got a charter to build a railway. Their experts went up into the James Bay country, through which hon. gentlemen opposite talk of building a transcontinental railway, they found it an impossible country to build through and they dropped it. I know the threat. You need not be at all alarmed about that. I am prepared to say that I would oppose the granting of a subsidy for any railway to be built from Toronto up to the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman stated in this House on a certain occasion that he was one of a commission appointed by the city council to consider the scheme of constructing a railway from Toronto to James bay or in that vicinity. He made a mistake on that occasion, because he gave this House to understand that the commission's report was adverse to that scheme. A delegation composed of the city council and the leading citizens of Toronto to a very large number came down to Ottawa—interviewed the government and presented the correct version of what occurred——

Mr. BROCK. I——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not want to misrepresent the hon. gentleman, and he will correct me if I do. We were told by this committee composed of the mayor and the leading representatives of the city, the persons who were voicing the views of the city of Toronto, that the events in connection with the commission were not such as the hon. gentleman's recollection led him to think them to be, but that when the commission had presented their report to the city council, the city council were so enamoured of the proposition which had been made that they directed that steps should be taken to obtain an Act of incorporation and to proceed with the scheme of building the James Bay Railway. That is the statement which was made to the government by the mayor and the city council and the leading citizens in the city of Toronto.

Mr. BROCK. Why was it not built ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That delegation was heard about six months ago.

Mr. BROCK. This was three or four years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We cannot build a railway in six weeks. They pressed upon the government the advisability of aiding a railway from the city of Toronto northerly to intersect the Canadian Pacific Railway in the vicinity of Sudbury. That request from the hon. gentleman's constituents was made to this government, we have given effect to that view, and I ask the hon. gentleman if it is not fair that he should either join with us in supporting that proposition or put himself on record against it ?

Mr. BROCK. I put myself most positively on record against it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Against that proposal ?

Mr. BROCK. Against the proposal to build to James bay.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am speaking of the scheme before the committee. There is a proposition before the hon. gentleman and he may vote for or against it, and that is to build a railway which may be called the James Bay Railway, but which is to aid a railway to be constructed from the city of Toronto proceeding northerly to Sudbury, and a few miles north of it, perhaps a dozen or twenty miles north. It is in the direction of a line which will ultimately connect with the Grand Trunk Pacific. Is the hon. gentleman for or against the granting of a subsidy to the James Bay Railway or to some other railway from Toronto either to intersect the Canadian Pacific Railway in the vicinity of Sudbury, or to be continued northerly until it meets the Grand Trunk Pacific ? Would the hon. gentleman kindly give me his opinion on that question ?

Mr. BROCK. Go on and make your speech and I will reply.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well. Of course, if the hon. gentleman says that he does not again seek to represent the city of Toronto, that he has no regard for public opinion in Toronto, it does not matter.

Mr. BROCK. I did not say anything of the kind.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am asking whether we are to take the views of those citizens who came here claiming to represent the opinions of the people of Toronto, or whether we are to take his views.

Mr. BROCK. You can please yourself. You have your choice.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has told us his opinion of the proposition that is now before the committee. This is not a vague scheme. It is definite. It is not dealing with an abstract proposition. It is not dealing with a system, but it is dealing with a project to construct a railway from Toronto to Sudbury.

Mr. BROCK. The scheme is not before me.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will refer the hon. gentleman to item No. 39.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It is time to take it up when we come to it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (reading) :

To the James Bay Railway Company for a line of railway from Toronto, via the east side of Lake Simcoe, Parry Sound and Sudbury, towards James bay, not exceeding 265 miles, in lieu of two subsidies granted by chapter 8 of 1900, of 35 and 20 miles respectively, from Parry Sound towards James bay.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. Postmaster General is discussing a specific item which is on the paper, but which we have not yet reached, and concerning which the hon. Minister of Finance has made no explanation. I would like your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When the committee commenced deliberations after dinner, I stated that we were now entering upon the consideration of new subsidies, and that the hon. member who rose before six o'clock to engage in a general discussion upon them would be at liberty to do so. I regard this as a general discussion upon the principle of granting subsidies, and I take it that if any particular item is referred to it is simply referred to as an illustration of the general principle.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then, Mr. Chairman, prosecuting this inquiry a little further, permit me to say that the city of Toronto has expressed a desire that the government shall aid the Irondale and Bancroft Railway in the extension of its line westward. Is the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) in favour of our listening to the prayer of the city of Toronto in that respect? There are some others of a like nature that are in the interests of the city of Toronto, and which the city pointedly asked for. I think the city is interested in what is known as the Pembroke Railway, a railway that will ultimately connect the Pembroke Railway with the Toronto system. Toronto is also interested in what is known as the Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway, and Toronto is interested in several of these railways under consideration.

Mr. BROCK. In what way is the city of Toronto interested?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will help to bring traffic to the city of Toronto.

Mr. BROCK. Financially they are not interested in the building of these roads.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are desirous of having these roads prosecuted and built, and thus you will see that a very considerable portion, probably one-tenth of the mileage which is to be aided, is in respect of railways that are centering in Toronto or leading towards Toronto, and yet we have an hon. gentleman representing one of the ridings of that city making a general protest against subsidies. Are we not entitled to know where he stands in regard to those particular subsidies for which his constituency is asking?

Mr. BROCK. Just where I stand in regard to all other subsidies for railways which are not in the new sections of the country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose he will then be in the same position as the other members whose constituencies are sufficiently served with railways and who have become virtuous and economical; until his city is so situated, I presume he will support these particular subsidies. I will say to him that the government is in favour of the subsidies that are here mentioned and if the hon. gentleman is against these subsidies it is his duty in fairness, and in vindication of that declaration of courage which he says he possesses, to put himself on record, yes or no, for or against these particular subsidies. Until he has done that I say that he has failed to take the only effective course of putting himself on record. He will not find any support for such a resolution on his side of the House. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) for example, would differ from him. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) would differ from him; he is an enterprising gentleman, and so we could run the gamut of the members and they would all vote for the subsidies that are given to help their own constituencies. Perhaps they will not vote for others, but the country is entitled to know where they stand on each proposal. We are not discussing an abstract proposition here, but a particular proposal, to do or not to do something; it is not a mere academical discussion, but a question of contributing public moneys towards certain public enterprises. Each one of these proposals is separate and distinct from the others and it is quite competent for the hon. gentleman to support some and to vote against others. But the country is entitled to know which, if any, of these the hon. gentleman favours or opposes. Toronto particularly is entitled to know from him frankly and fairly whether he is supporting or opposing this scheme, and I will ask him now whether he will take the responsibility on behalf of the city of Toronto of standing up here in this House and requesting the government to strike out all the subsidies for which the city of Toronto has asked.

Mr. BROCK. I think that nothing more contemptible has ever been performed in this country than the speech which has just been made by the Postmaster General. He asks are all the subsidies in which Toronto has any interest whatever to be struck out. What do you mean? Toronto is interested in every subsidy that is granted to every railway from the North Pole to the American line. Toronto is cosmopolitan but Toronto is not prepared to advise the government or to advise itself to vote for subsidies for railways not only those in which Toronto has no interest, but simply those in which political knavery alone has an interest. The hon. Postmaster General is not doing himself any credit by the way in which he is attacking me in this matter. He knows what my opinion is in regard to the granting of subsidies and I have stated my opinion very positively to my constituents, that no grant of subsidies ought to be made in the thickly settled parts of this country. But when a grant is made to a railway in British Columbia, Toronto has to pay her share and a very large share it is. Do I object? No, I do not object to building railways through the sparsely settled districts and Toronto is ready to pay her share, but Toronto has not asked, at least not officially, to build a railway from Toronto north to Lake Simcoe. The hon. Postmaster General thinks that in a very clever and politic way he is going to force me into a corner. He is much mistaken; the country know him and know the petty means and petty kind of politics to which he is willing to descend in the effort to place a political opponent in a corner. I am not afraid of any corner into which hon. gentlemen opposite can shove. I went into Centre Toronto in the face of a very large adverse majority and of every influence that every member of the two governments, federal and provincial, could bring against me. I had a gentleman opposing me on the platform with a judgeship in his pocket, but the electors turned his majority into a majority for myself. The threat of the hon. Postmaster General has no influence with me at all, and I would be very glad indeed if he dared to come into Centre Toronto and meet me there. I will meet him and every argument he can advance in Centre Toronto in any constituency of Toronto. I do not go into York because I suppose that I would have to pose as a farmer there, but even so I would not be very much afraid of him, notwithstanding several great advantages which he possesses, financially and otherwise. In the attempt he has made this afternoon to corner me he has made a mistake. I stand where I stood before my constituents and say that I oppose subsidies to railways through thickly settled districts, but that I will support subsidies given to railways to open up new territories for Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the Postmaster General was hardly fair to the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson). He challenged the hon. member for South Grey to oppose his individual resolutions because there was an application or petition from Grey asking that a railway should be subsidized that was calculated to help that district. The hon. member for South Grey, as he had a perfect right to do, took exception to certain features of the government's policy. He complained of the lateness in the sesison of the bringing down of these resolutions. There are seventy-eight resolutions here, although there are not seventy-eight railways being subsidized, and the hon. member had a right to criticise the general policy without attacking any particular resolution. The contention of the hon. Postmaster General was that the hon. member for South Grey, or the hon. member for Halton, or the hon. member for Centre Toronto, had no right to oppose this in a general way, but could only successfully oppose the government's policy in this regard by opposing every individual resolution. The Postmaster General opposed the hon. member for South Grey because he said there was an application from his own county and answered him by saying that it is the case with him as with many others, after a constituency has been liberally supplied by railway subsidies, then the people of that constituency oppose other subsidies. Is that the case with the county of Grey, one of the largest and best settled districts in the province, with 78,000 inhabitants ? Is it a fact that it was liberally subsidized by this parliament ? All the subsidies which that county ever got from this parliament covered only twenty-eight miles of railway, at the rate of $3,200 a mile.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where did the rest come from ?

Mr. SPROULE. From the municipalities and the provincial government, chiefly from the municipalities. There were only two short sections subsidized by this parliament in that county ; 13½ miles from Owen Sound to Hepworth, and 14 or 15 miles of the Grand Trunk Railway from the county line of Simcoe to Meaford, which was built before confederation. Although the county of Grey is a large county, there is only one railway running through it, and two others touch it ; so that it has not been liberally supplied with railways, and it would not be unfair if the people of that county asked for a little additional aid. The hon. gentleman complained because the hon. member for South Grey took the position he did. That hon. gentleman represents an agricultural constituency, and I respectfully submit that it was eminently his duty to voice the sentiment of his constituents on this subject. His constituents are farmers. If you take up the 'Farmers Sun' for the past year, which fairly voices the sentiments of the agriculturists of this country, you will find that it has distinctly and consistently opposed the subsidizing of railways by the government. It is true, there is an application from the county of Grey for a subsidy for a railway—the very next item which we are to take up ; and I can only say that while in the main the people of the country are opposed to railway subsidies, it is a fact that certain localities have not yet been very liberally supplied with railways, and are quite willing to receive assistance from the government to build them ; and it would not be unnatural or unreasonable for the people of the county of Grey to entertain the same views as the people of other sections of the country that are not yet supplied. I may say that I intimated to the government that I was in favour of assistance being granted to that railway. I did so because I know the conditions and circumstances, and I believe it is proper that assistance should be given, in view of the fact that we are assisting railways all over the country, and that the county of Grey has not yet a good supply. Were I to voice the sentiments of the people of Ontario today, I would oppose entirely the granting of railway subsidies ; but I have never gone that far. I believe we ought to discriminate. I believe there are localities for which the government would be justified in subsidizing railways. But in many cases subsidies are given for localities which are already more than supplied. I have always held that the newer sections of the country and localities not already supplied with the conveniences of railways might properly receive government aid for the purpose of obtaining railway facilities. I have endeavoured to discriminate to that extent.

The Postmaster General contended that every member of the opposition who does not by a resolution and vote oppose every item he objects to, tacitly acquiesces in it. That is not a fact. Is an opposition expected to challenge every item in the estimates and have a vote upon it. If so, parliament instead of sitting six months, would sit twelve months in the year. That is not the duty of the opposition. Its duty is to crystallize its policy in an abstract resolution if you like, and vote on that. That conveys the policy of the opposition just as forcibly as though they opposed every single item to which they objected.

Mr. CLANCY. I cannot let this opportunity pass without calling the attention of the courageous Postmaster General to some of his attitudes in the past. The hon. gentleman has taken the very opposite courses on more than one occasion in this House. He is very courageous now when he wants to challenge the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) to tell just the precise number of miles of railway construction to which he is opposed. There was a time when the hon. gentleman and his leader had grave fears that the money voted for railway subsidies was stolen and went into an election fund. I want to ask the hon. gentleman if he will vote for a resolution that was proposed in this House in 1894, when a large batch of railway subsidies came down ? Did he ever protest against any railway grant ? The hon. gentleman, I am sure, will give a deaf ear to a suggestion of that kind. Does the hon. gentleman lay down a course of conduct for this side of the House which he himself refused to pursue in opposition ? Does the hon. gentleman think that a fair or manly game of politics ? I do not think he will say that it is. There is nothing more idle than for an hon. member on either side of the House to get up and challenge the other side to do what he himself refused over and over again to do. But that is what the Postmaster General does. I am coming now to the hon. gentleman's nightmare about the possible pillage of the public treasury by those who received railway subsidies in the past ; and, if he has not become more honest himself or if he does not regard others as more honest, if I propose the same resolution to-night, I would have his support. If it was a good proposition then, it is an equally good proposition now. This is the resolution that was proposed in this House by no less a person than the Prime Minister, and that was supported energetically by the Postmaster General with the ability he displays when he is wrong, though I will assume he was right on that occasion.

Mr. Laurier moved that the said resolutions be not now read the second time, but that they be referred back to committee to consider the following amendment :—

That within four days after the opening of each session, the Minister of Railways shall lay upon the Table of the House, copies of all agreements made by any of the companies with the government together with a statement of all payments made by the government up to date, for subsidies earned by any of the said companies, and the Orders in Council authorizing such payments.

That within a month after the payment to any company of any portion of the subsidies, the president and manager of said company shall furnish to the Auditor General a statement under oath showing if the whole of the subsidies so paid to the company have been applied in the manner herein intended, and that a similar statement shall be supplied by every contractor of the company who is to receive or has received the payment out of any such subsidies or out of the proceeds thereof, and that, within four days after the opening of each session, the Auditor General shall lay all such statements upon the Table of the House.

That all such documents thus laid upon the Table of the House shall be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts to be by them investigated in the same manner as the public accounts.

That every officer and director of the said companies and every person having a contract with any of the companies for the performance of any work, the doing of anything, or the furnishing of any goods, effects, or materials, and having or expecting to have any claim or demand against the company by reason of such contract, who either directly or indirectly, by himself or by any person on his behalf, subscribes, furnishes or gives, or promises to subscribe, furnish or give, any money or other valuable consideration for the purpose of promoting the election of any candidate to a legislature or to parliament, or with the intent in any way of influencing or affecting the result of a provincial or Dominion election—is guilty of a misdemeanour and liable to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and not exceeding one thousand dollars ; unless the value of the amount or thing paid, offered, given, loaned, promised, received or subscribed, as the case may be, exceed the last mentioned sum, in which case the fine may be raised to a sum not exceeding such value, and also to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one year and not less than one month, and in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a further term not exceeding six months.

My hon. friend the Postmaster General supported that in a very vigorous speech. I ask him now if he is prepared to characterize as a farce both the motion of the Prime Minister and my hon. friend's speech in support of it ? Would he support such a resolution now ? The hon. gentleman will not answer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the hon. gentleman takes his seat I will answer.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman would scarcely repeat the farce he acted on that occasion. He then pretended to believe and sought to make his friends believe, inside and outside of this House, that the money which was voted for railway subsidies during that period was diverted in part to other purposes, that a portion of it went into the hands of individuals for the purpose of controlling the elections and securing the return of government candidates. Will he say that the danger is less great now than it was then ? If not, I shall be curious to ascertain whether he would be prepared to support such a resolution coming from this side now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not hear the whole resolution. I tried to listen to it, but could not catch it all. The hon. gentleman asked me if I would endorse its leading principle, namely, that companies or directors should be prevented from using government bonuses or aid for election purposes. That is the point the hon. gentleman puts.

Mr. CLANCY. The point I put is the resolution.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not hear the whole of the resolution. When he came to that part of it, he asked me if I would vote for such a resolution. All I have to say is that since that time we have enacted a statute which covers that ground by making it penal for directors to contribute to election funds.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not all. The hon. gentleman has, when he likes, very acute hearing. And he must remember in any case what resolution he voted for.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I voted for so many.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman voted for so many absurd resolutions that he is now trying, not to remember them, but to forget them. One part of that resolution declared that the accounts should be audited by the Public Accounts Committee and investigated in every case.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What was the view of the government of that day on that point ?

Mr. CLANCY. The view was that the hon. gentleman had moved an absurd resolution.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then surely my hon. friend would not ask me to do an absurd thing and vote for an absurd resolution ?

Mr. CLANCY. I ask him to recall his absurdity or repeat it. I am not saying that the resolution should have been moved, but I am pointing to the part which the hon. gentleman then played. If my memory serves me right, a resolution was passed at the Liberal convention, held in this city in 1893, declaring that no bonuses or subsidies should be granted to railways.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There never was any such resolution passed.

Mr. CLANCY. I am speaking subject to correction. I think there were speeches made in that direction. But resolutions never did bind these hon. gentlemen. The very resolution I have just read does not bind him in any way, and I only read it for the purpose of calling his attention to the absurd course he took in the past. It was then urged that it would be very dangerous to mix up railway matters with the Criminal Code, and the then Minister of Justice pointed out that the resolution was an absurd one. Coming to the general railway resolutions before us, I desire to say that we have reached a time in the history of Canada when we may well consider whether we are to continue a policy of granting aid to every railway in Canada, long or short, no matter what the conditions may be. There is no hon. gentleman on either side who will not say that we are living under very different conditions now to those existing twenty years ago, and therefore a policy which might have been pursued in the past to advantage might be an unwise policy to-day. I am not prepared to say that it was at any time a proper policy to vote aid indiscriminately to every railway, whether meritorious or not. There may be some cases in which, in a growing country such as this, it would be very proper to give aid to railways, but the general principle ought to be just the other way. We should only provide for the exceptional cases, and not lay down a broad policy which, as my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) has pointed out, can have but this result, that not one mile of railway will ever be built without a subsidy. In my judgment, that is going entirely too far. I think we have come to the time when we may well call a halt, and treat the subsidizing of railways as the exception and not the rule. I have no doubt that some of the grants proposed in these resolutions will aid colonization roads and accomplish a very good purpose. I have not less doubt that there are other cases that are not sufficiently meritorious to justify us in assisting them from the public treasury. When the hon. gentleman tells us that we must point out the particular railway we are opposed to, and not only that, but how much we are opposed to it, he is laying down a rule that he would not follow himself ; and if any one shows a lack of courage, it is one who lays down for others a rule which he would shrink from having applied to his own conduct.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I listened with some astonishment to the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) in his cross-examination of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). I notice that his cross-examination took place in the absence of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Those who recollect the days of other Liberal leaders and other Liberal principles, I think, will share my astonishment at that cross-examination. Should the Postmaster General ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce such questions, or summon to his chamber Hon. Edward Blake, and subject him to a similar cross-examination, the answers they would give would be very interesting, I am sure, to the whole committee. If he should ask Mr. Blake what he thought of this policy of government subsidies to local railways, that gentleman would tell him—if he has not entirely gone back on his old principles—that they were absolutely unconstitutional, that it was contrary to the British North America Act to spend a dollar of federal money on local railways. And hon. gentlemen who followed Mr. Blake at that time agreed with him to a man; and they are recorded in the journals of this House as agreeing to that principle which he put in the form of a resolution and proposed as the Liberal view. That would be Mr. Blake's opinion. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has never recanted, so far as I am aware—except by his silence now giving consent to the government proposition—the very terse description he gave of this sort of policy. When dealing with votes for railway subsidies brought down by the government of the day, though for a good deal smaller amount than these, he stated that each and every one of these votes was a bribe to the constituencies, that these railway subsidies were mere rat holes for public money. I think that would have been a very interesting addition to the examination of the Postmaster General. And, perhaps, before these resolutions are carried we may be able to carry on the system of the Postmaster General and have the privilege of cross-examining the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the subject and see whether he maintains his former attitude. And this reminiscence is rather interesting too for another reason. I think a large number of gentlemen on this side of the House still favour the principle that was put in force by the Conservative government and bitterly opposed at the outset by the Liberal party. Many of these subsidies are for railways in districts already supplied with railway accommodation, and so not of such a nature as those proposed when the principle was introduced. It is interesting to observe these gentlemen coming down with such magnificent figures and such generosity, after the years that have elapsed and the work that has been done. I think there is a great deal of room for criticism in regard to the carrying out of that policy in certain portions of the province of Ontario. But I am sure that in other provinces on the Atlantic and the Pacific, the quarrel with the government will be—and I am frank to say it—that they have not been sufficiently generous. I do not think the people there would be opposed to this principle if it were applied properly. And, I think the contrast between the policy of the Liberal government and the policy of the Conservative government is that, under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, the outlying portions of the Dominion do not receive the consideration they should receive, consideration that, under the present policy, appears to be given to the older and more settled parts of the country.

Mr. BELL. I think it might not be amiss to call attention to the fact that there is a good deal of justification for the discussion that has taken place in connection with these railway subsidies. I entirely sympathize and agree with the opinion expressed by my hon. colleague (Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that, so far as some of the smaller and less developed provinces and parts of the Dominion are concerned, there is, to my mind, a demand for some system of railway subsidies. There can be no question about the value of railway construction, and there can be no question that many parts of the country are not supplied with railway facilities as they should be. Nor can there be any question as to the value to these localities and to Canada as a whole from the legitimate and proper expanding of our railway system. But while I believe, that, I believe also that there are objections to the mode in which these subsidies are voted. For instance, we are to-night voting subsidies to a sum the magnitude of which many hon. members do not seem to realize. Take $3,200 a mile as a basis, and allow five per cent additional for the fact that a larger sum is promised to such roads as cost over $15,000 a mile. The mileage here subsidized is 3,928 miles. At $3,200 a mile, this would be $12,569,600. Add to that five per cent, as I have suggested, $628,480, and you find that the total subsidies now before us is $13,198,080.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does that include revotes ?

Mr. BELL. Including everything. Here is a sum that we are voting in the course of one evening; and it is more than one-third of a sum which my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) declared not so many years ago was too large to be expended upon all the services of Canada. The time is not remote when the hon. gentleman pronounced $38,000,000 an extravagant sum to be expended on the services of Canada in every direction, and here to-night he and other hon. gentlemen who sympathized with him at that time, many of them associated with the government, are cheerfully and, apparently with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction, as evidenced by their laughter, voting more than one-third of that sum for railway construction alone, and that in a direction which they cannot fail to remember, they uniformly condemned when in opposition. I do not mean to say that the views of these gentlemen were right when they condemned that course. It seems that they themselves have come to the conclusion that they were mistaken. They have set themselves with great assiduity to reverse their position upon all subjects upon which they expressed themselves. Their conduct during the years they have had a chance to show how they would really act must convince us that their opinions when in opposition do not now meet with their approval. Their conduct now is entirely at variance with those opinions. But we cannot hope that any government or opposition will be altogether wise. The most that we can hope for is that they shall do their best to govern the country honestly and well, and that the opposition will criticise as honestly and capably as they can the conduct of the government in power. Therefore, I do not think there is great profit to be derived from pointing out the fact that the course hon. gentlemen opposite are entering upon with such satisfaction is at variance with their opinions of the past. But at the time when we were to vote railway subsidies to the amount of over $13,000,000, there was an opportunity for the government to consider whether or not this was a proper system and the proper way to aid in the construction of such railway works as are still necessary.

Now to my mind it is a very grave question whether the country gives a sufficient amount of attention to this large portion of our national outlay. It seems to me doubtful if the government has fully and carefully considered whether in following the old method in which the example has been set to them by their predecessors, they are not perhaps continuing a method which might be superseded by a better one. To my mind the great purpose of railway subsidies is the economical construction of railways in portions of the country where they are wanted, and the point that ought to be kept clearly in view is whether any return for the large outlay which the country is asked to make can be expected; and secondly, whether the localities in which the expenditures are being made will get as much benefit under this system as they might under a different one. Now there was an opportunity at this time, in view of the large extent of these subsidies, to have given a careful consideration to this matter. I think it is to be regretted that there is not evidence to show that the government has studied this subject. I am of the opinion that the government of Canada, instead of subsidizing by a cash bonus, roads at random, in great numbers, which are pressed upon their attention by interested corporations or even by prominent supporters, should have introduced a different method altogether, should have inquired carefully into these several propositions, and only given their support to such railway propositions as conveyed to them a reasonable assurance that they were likely to be carried out successfully at an early period, to all the rest turning for the time being a deaf ear.

I would further suggest that it would be to the advantage of the country if, instead of aiding these selected and favoured railways by a cash subsidy, the government should give their aid in the form of a guarantee upon a certain percentage of the bonds of the corporations which came to them and asked for support. That system has been to a certain extent adopted this year in the very extensive bonuses which have been promised to the Mackenzie & Mann system in the west, and those which are promised to the Grand Trunk Pacific. In these cases the government have entered upon that course; instead of giving the cash subsidy we have given a guarantee. To my mind the great point to be kept in view is what the burden upon the country is going to be that will be created by carrying out these railway propositions. If it can be proved, or if it appeared to the satisfaction of the government, that the capital required to complete these railways would be lessened by a government guarantee as compared with the system of giving a cash subsidy in aid of these roads. then I think it would be better for the country and better for the localities in which these roads are built that the former principle should be substituted. The great purpose that ought to be kept in view is to bring the cost of these public works down to the lowest possible point, and in that way the burden which they subsequently impose upon the locality for which they are constructed and which must be met from the tolls collected by these roads, would be reduced to the lowest point. The result would be that we would derive the benefit of railway construction at the least possible cost, and upon the most advantageous terms. Now here was a great opportunity, because we are spending a very large amount of money, we are bonusing nearly eighty different lines of road over every part of Canada; and here was a great opportunity for the government to give this matter full consideration, and if they were satisfied that a better system could be discovered, to have introduced that system. There is not, I regret to say, any evidence before us to show that the government has bestowed any great amount of study upon this question. Therefore, to my mind, they have lost a valuable opportunity for giving very full and careful consideration to this matter.

Then again there is this to be said. This vote, aggregating over $13,000,000, is introduced at a time of the session when it cannot receive the discussion which this kind of expenditure, with the burden which it is imposing upon the country, would seem to warrant. These resolutions might have been much better introduced at an earlier period of the session, when they could have been fully and carefully discussed. There is no question to-day of more importance to this country than that of railway construction. We know that we have to build in the course of a few years to come, a great many miles of road all over Canada. We know we must do that, therefore, it is to my mind, most important that if we are not proceeding upon the best possible course we should turn from that course and adopt a better one at the earliest moment. It is idle to expect this time to engage in a discussion extending over a week or two weeks of time that might be required in order to thresh this subject out thoroughly, to collect all the necessary information, and to arrive at a satisfactory and final decision upon this question. I say we cannot hope to have that at this stage of the session; therefore, I regret that these resolutions have been brought down at so late a period.

That brings to my mind what is perhaps the strongest objection, from all points of view, to such resolutions as we have before us to-day. I regretted very much the tone and substance of the speech made by the Postmaster General to-night. I regretted it, because I saw a manifest disposition on his part to make prominent a feature in this discussion that to my mind is not creditable to this parliament, and that is his assumption that members of parliament in voting upon these resolutions are not free agents, that they are not giving to this subject their best judgment, their independent judgment; that they are voting, on the other hand, entirely in the fear of their constituents in every case in which the constituents of any member are interested parties. That may well be the case. To be perfectly frank, in these railway subsidies there are votes in which my constituents are interested, and which I would, if necessity required, support with my vote. In respect of these matters, I feel that I have a mandate here to support these particular resolutions. Every other gentleman in this House whose constituents are interested in a particular vote, must feel the same stress. I do not like to see that, in this matter, the government are relying upon what can be called nothing else than log-rolling on a gigantic scale, in depending for support of hon. gentlemen in this House because each one of them is interested in one or more of the resolutions. It is practically organizing a log-rolling operation on a wholesale system for the government of the day to bring in seventy or eighty resolutions and rely for their passage upon the fact that individual members of the House on both sides are interested in one or more of these resolutions, and therefore, will vote for the whole lot because each one is interested in one or more. It is not seemly to make that idea prominent, and to my mind it is not fair. It is not to the advantage of the people that the independence of members of the House should be lost from the fact that their constituencies are interested in one or more of these resolutions. To my mind, if these resolutions cannot receive the sanction of the independent judgment of individual members, then that is a great reason why they should not be introduced at all. They should not be brought down in batches and voted through simply because individual members cannot oppose some of them and therefore have to accept them all. There is a further serious objection. There can be no question that, to a certain extent, while the objects for which these votes are made, while the purpose for which this money is being asked and received is laudable, nevertheless in the mode, and manner, and selection of these subsidies, the government in giving to the several corporations interested has a direct opportunity for the exercise of political interference in favour of the government. For instance, to-night we have nearly eighty railway resolutions brought down in one session; at the last session of parliament not one was introduced.

There cannot be any one in this House who would argue that there was absolutely no necessity for these railways last year and an overpowering necessity this year. It is perfectly clear that the voting of money in this particular fashion places it in the hands of the government of the day to bestow great largesses upon great corporations and people at such times as they think they can bestow those largesses to the best advantage to themselves. This to my mind gives an opportunity to the government of the day to exercise enormous political influence and therefore it is not to the advantage of the country that it should be done in that way. It may be to the advantage of this government but it is not to the advantage of the country. One may say that if the country were entirely opposed to that mode of doing business, it would show it, in the manner in which it would receive these votes or proposals and that until there is such a body of independent opinion among the electors who are not favourable to the exercise of political pressure by the government in this fashion we may expect to see things go on as they are going. But, that does not make the matter right. If by this system of giving subsidies at such times and in such a way and under such modes as the government of the day adopts, leads to political influence being exerted on a great scale, I believe that every hon. gentleman will agree with me in saying that it is a bad thing, that it is not in the interests of the people of the country, that it is not in the interest of the government and that it will not have a tendency to strengthen the parliament of Canada. Generally speaking we must be favourable to the development of our railway system and I am prepared to support the government of the day in extending our railway system. I maintain that there are large portions even of the older provinces where we must have a great and rapid extension of the railway system if we are going to have a rapidly developing population and a rapid increase in wealth but I think it is an unfortunate thing that successive governments should bestow large sums of money in the form of subsidies when the individual members of those governments while sitting on the opposite side of the House had previously opposed them all through. If expenditures that are wrong in the view of successive oppositions are going to be right in the view of successive governments, then I say that there can be no question in the mind of any reasonable man that our system is not such a system as we should adopt in a country like this. For that reason I would like very much if the government of the day had introduced these resolutions at an earlier period of the session and if they had brought them down and submitted them to parliament at such a time and with such information as to make parliament feel that a strong case might be made out for a better system of expenditure, one which would be more absolutely free from all suspicion of the desire to exert political influence. I would have welcomed it. I believe it would not be a difficult matter for parliament to devise a method by which we would have the most important work of railway construction carried on more successfully and more economically than it is to-day and at the same time eliminate from the work of carrying on railway construction those objectionable features from which this system should be altogether free. We do not want to have it in the mouths of successive oppositions in this House to say that the ministers of successive governments have been promoting their own ends by the aid of this system, either as individual members of the government or as a party. This is not attaining to the highest possible plane of statesmanship or politics in this country that we can attain to, and in the meantime it will always remain an open question as to whether the governments which do make these large expenditures in the hope of personal advantage are not therein deceived. I am pleased to see that the government is not going to lose sight of the important work of railway construction but it seems to me that I might also express my regret that this enormous expenditure has not been submitted to us at a time when we could discuss it fully with some possibility of arriving at a decision on the subject and with a chance of discovering perhaps some better way in which this expenditure could be made.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There can be no objection, as we are now in committee, that each of these items should be discussed on its merits and there is no reason for alleging that the committee should rise until there has been an ample opportunity given for that to be done. I only rose to point out to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bell) that if the committee approve of all these subsidies and they should be granted it is not only improbable, but it is not possible that the $13,000,000 which he says they will cost will have to be paid in any one year. Perhaps they will not be paid in one, two, three or four years. Long lines of railway will take some time to construct and as he knows it is only as construction proceeds that they are to be paid. Therefore, he must not look upon it in the light of our incurring a liability which during any given financial year will amount to $13,000,000 and which will have to be defrayed. We must proceed in a business-like way in developing the country and we are all anxious to see it developed, but, we must at the same time have regard to the revenues of the country and to the ability of the country to carry out these undertakings. There may be schemes other than those proposed which would be in the interest of the country, but you might not be able to accomplish everything in one year. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that some years ago, before the Liberal party came into power, some members of that party took exception to an expenditure of $38,000,000 and said it was time to cry a halt and that there should be economy practised. That is quite true and there was a reason for it. In those days the revenues of the country were not paying the ordinary expenditure and all the works on capital account that were being entered into were being undertaken with borrowed money. Therefore, under these circumstances it was a wise and prudent thing to say that we should be careful, and that we should not proceed as they were proceeding at that time. But what are the conditions now ? Hon. gentlemen opposite know what the position was then and they know what it is now. There have been a great many millions of expenditure made, but the revenue that came in and the revenue that came in under a lower rate of taxation than prevailed in those days——

Mr. GOURLEY. No, no.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A lower rate of taxation than prevailed in those days has sufficed not only to pay the ordinary expenditure of the government, but it has paid the capital expenditure of government and left a surplus over and above. Therefore, I would feel, such being the condition of things, when trade was stagnant and population not increasing, when the revenue was not sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditures of government, not to speak of doing nothing else, that it was desirable to call a halt, but now, under the changed conditions, when, under a lower rate of taxation, you have a revenue enough not only to pay your ordinary expenditure, but as I have said, to pay all of your capital expenditure, your bonuses for iron and for railway construction, your expenditure on capital account for canals and other works and something over that besides, hon. gentlemen will see, that, this being the state of things, this government while they are making generous expenditures, or rather proposing to parliament that the country is in a position to make generous expenditures, can do that without alarm on sound business principles and that it is a wise principle for parliament to proceed upon having regard for the resources of the country. They have regard to the development of the country, and they submit their opinions for the judgment of this committee ; they believe in the development of the country in the directions that are indicated that they can do this out of the revenue of the country without entailing burdens on the people, and if our friends opposite will consider the operations of the last few years they will arrive at the same conclusions as we do, and, therefore, I would ask them to look upon the expenditure proposed by the government in the light of the present condition of the country and of its prospective development and advancement. I think they will agree with the government, that while we are making these expenditures, looking towards the development, nevertheless we are proceeding in a wise, prudent, businesslike way, having regard to the needs and improvements of this country. As to whether the country is in a position to do this or not, for my own part I believe that the country can well afford to do it. I believe the country can meet the obligations parliament is assuming through the legislation of this session without unduly increasing the burdens of the people, and will be able to carry out the great schemes of development that parliament has so far sanctioned or may still sanction.

Mr. GOURLEY. The junior member for Pictou (Hon. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said there was a political stress upon members of this House. I agree with that, but I do not agree that the political stress is on this side of the House; the political stress is on the other side of the House. I am a supporter of subsidies. Ever since I entered this parliament and long before, I was a supporter of subsidies, because the Conservative party of this country adopted it as their policy to develop this country by encouraging the building of railways by subsidies. All that I have to complain of is that you gentlemen who adopted that policy along with all the Conservative policies, do not come frankly into this House and confess that you stole that policy. I think you should clothe yourselves with sackcloth and ashes and make a frank, open confession that you have stolen our policy on railways, as you have stolen the national policy and the bounty on iron. If you should frankly acknowledge this, you would escape the censures which people are now passing on you. The repentant sinner who turns in his way is always welcomed by good men, but it is on open and frank confession that he is forgiven. The same generosity would be extended to you here, but you insist upon stirring up ill-will in this House by claiming that you have adopted a policy and that it is your policy. I undertake to say that every dollar of money voted for subsidies in Colchester will inure to my support, because the electors will say : This is the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party which the Liberals dared not change when they came into power. If the Minister of Finance will give me two or three more subsidies I will get every vote in Colchester, Liberal or Conservative, because the Conservatives will claim for me, and the Liberals will admit it, that by advocating the policy of subsidies I am pursuing the old policy of the Conservative party, which the Liberals have been compelled by public opinion to adopt after attacking it for 18 years. I regard their conduct in doing that as the only satisfactory feature in their whole course. I congratulate them on being strong enough to admit that they were wrong. Some one should move in this House, for the sake of the history of this present generation, to strike out from the 'Hansard' of this country the speeches of gentlemen opposite for the 18 years from 1878 to 1896, because if these speeches are permitted to remain intact they will form the basis for the historian to write the history of this generation, and I am bound to say if he happens in his search for information to light upon the speech of the Minister of Customs, he will decide that in this day and generation we were incompetent imbeciles, because the speeches he made during these 18 years, instead of aiding the progress of Canada, instead of inspiring the young people of this country and creating a feeling favourable to the growth of Canada, were intended to cripple the people of this country, especially in the matter of railways. The Conservative party made Canada; they found four little scattered provinces; they united them; then they built the Intercolonial, which was the first link between the provinces; then they acquired British Columbia and the west, and pursued their great policy by building the Canadian Pacific Railway. But these were only preliminary steps, and the Conservative party, when they had consolidated Canada into one country went forward and said : We shall have a policy of railway development. They followed that policy continuously in the face of the most determined and unreasonable opposition that was ever offered to a political party in any country, and you gentlemen were the men responsible for that opposition. I in my humble way down in the country, was supporting railway development, supporting these subsidies when Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John A. Macdonald were advocating them, and the Conservative party also supported them. All I can say is that as you gentlemen have adopted our policy I am bound to go on and support that policy. My hon. friend who sits beside me (Hon. Mr. Haggart), when he was Minister of Railways again and again introduced railway subsidies, but he was met and fought step by step as if he were an enemy of the country instead of being one of its great developers and one of its great builders. When we pursued a different course in this parliament, I think it is ungenerous for gentlemen to get up and pursue the course that they have done. I for one will say that I support railway subsidies all over the country. Look at the map! I said a short time ago that we had not commenced the development of Canada. I said that we had a long fringe of development from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Look at that map! A little fringe of railways from the Atlantic to the Pacific. But the whole country is as absolutely undeveloped as when the Indians possessed it. There is the evidence that my knowledge was accurate; it is as utterly undeveloped as when the Indians roamed over it, except for a little fringe from ocean to ocean. It is our duty to go forward, developing year by year a vast system of railways, and that is in pursuance of the Conservative policy. I congratulate you, gentlemen, on pursuing that policy. Why do you not be more honest and frank and say: We adopted the Conservative policy of granting railway subsidies; our policy in opposing railway subsidies was all wrong. If you do, there will be no contention on our side. Why don't you tell the truth. You do not tell the truth, and therefore you provoke opposition. I say this because I am anxious to get on with the business of the country. I congratulate the Prime Minister upon having one very frank member of his cabinet; that is the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As soon as the iron bounties were called the Minister of Trade and Commerce gets up and goes out. I think he acted fairly in that; I am inclined now to believe that the Minister of Trade and Commerce believed in his contentions at the time he made them. I say that the Postmaster General and the Minister of Customs did not believe a word they said; they were evidently acting a part during these 18 years; they knew they were deceiving the people; they absolutely knew that for 18 years, but the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I am now commencing to believe, honestly believed the nonsense he talked, honestly believed that bounties were an improper policy to pursue in this country. Therefore, whenever the Minister of Finance undertakes to move his resolutions, the old gentleman hobbles out, greatly to his credit. I congratulate the Prime Minister on having one honest, trusty, faithful counsellor on whom he can rely. Even though the doctrines he preached are economically false, he believes them and will stick to them. If the Postmaster General and the Minister of Customs had gone out when these railway resolutions were introduced they would have done themselves a great compliment. They would have shown to us that they disapproved of this railway policy and believed in the policy they had preached for eighteen years. But by sitting here they openly flaunt their indecency, because, after having opposed railway subsidies in every shape and form for eighteen years, they now have the courage not only to support them, but to revile the gentlemen who pursued an honest course. We have the ignoble sight of the notorious sinner reviling the honest patriarch, the representative of truth and right in this country.

Mr. PUTTEE. Before this discussion is concluded, I wish to enter my protest against this whole bonusing system. I do not agree with the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley), who thinks the country can be built up by bolstering up private interests of one kind and another. A number of gentlemen who spoke to-day have stated that they would gladly support the bonusing system in those parts of the country which are not settled, but would object to it in the more settled parts of the Dominion; but I cannot find that principle included in the resolutions now before us. They seem to cover the whole country; they seem to make practically no difference between one province and another. In fact, the well-settled districts seem to be more favoured than the unsettled districts; and when we come down to bonusing railways of one mile in length, it seems to me that we carry the system to an absolute absurdity. There are here about eighty propositions, which I imagine include nearly all the propositions for railway construction in the country at the present time. It would appear to me to be very reasonable to suppose that this system, developed as it has been, actually retards the construction of railways where they are necessary. Where it is decided by a railway company that a line should be constructed as a business proposition, it is not constructed until such time as political influence can be brought to bear to obtain a subsidy; and therefore the construction of necessary lines is prevented. Now, I do not wish to discuss this matter at any length. I have protested against other bonusing Bills and I protest against this. I think the system is wrong. I look for a better system. It is useless for us to support in bulk or in detail a system that we would rather see abolished, and the country as a whole is opposed to this system. When a proposition is put before us in this way, affecting, as it does, almost every section of the country, it is not to be supposed that you can get a general sentiment expressed against it; but if the principle of bonusing railways could be put before the people of Canada, irrespective of any particular Bill, I do not think any of us could have any doubt what the verdict would be. I therefore oppose this bonusing Bill, not only in bulk, but in detail.

Mr. BLAIN. Where is this road to commence and where is it to finish?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an extension of the road referred to in the first item. A portion of the subsidy is revoted, and this is for an extension as described.

Mr. BLAIN. That does not answer the question. According to the resolution, if this subsidy is granted, the promoters of the railway will have the right to commence it at Ingersoll and take it to the city of Stratford, a distance of 35 miles. That is one proposition. But if they do not choose to do that, they have the right to commence it at Woodstock and take it to Berlin, which may be a distance of 35 miles; or they would have the right to commence at either Ingersoll or Woodstock and stop at any point between Berlin and Stratford. I object to this method of granting subsidies, without specifying the starting point or the ending point. It gives the promoters a chance to hold up the different municipalities for bonuses. Can the minister not specify where this company will have the right to commence the road and where they will have the right to finish it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say, for the information of the committee, that this company have a charter to build from Port Burwell, on Lake Erie, to Collingwood, on the Georgian bay. They represent that this would be a short and good road for bringing coal from Port Burwell to the various centres throughout the province of Ontario where there are large manufacturing industries, and for bringing grain from Collingwood to Port Burwell. A portion of the road has been subsidized in the past, and is now running from Port Burwell to Ingersoll. That portion of the subsidy which has not been earned, for about nine miles from Ingersoll to Woodstock, is revoted. The company say that they have not decided which is the best line to take to the Grand Trunk, whether by Stratford or by Berlin, continuing north to Collingwood. The subsidy has been petitioned for by almost all the growing towns throughout that part of Ontario, and the government thought that as that portion of the road from the lake to Ingersoll had been built and was in operation, it might be well to give the company this slight encouragement. While it will serve local needs to some extent, it is expected to be of more value as a through line.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this the road with which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is associated?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think he is now very considerably associated with the road.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Well, we had better pass that.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the Minister of Railways and Canals be good enough to tell the committee whether the petitions ask for a road from Ingersoll to Stratford or from Woodstock to Berlin? If this resolution be carried, this railway will have the right to construct the road from Woodstock to Berlin, or from Ingersoll to Stratford. It is only fair that the company should state from what point it intends to start, and where it intends to go, rather than have this choice, because this option will enable it to work the municipalities for subsidies by threatening to go in whatever direction it will obtain the largest subsidies. Did the citizens of Stratford petition the government to subsidize a road from Ingersoll to Stratford, and did the citizens of Berlin petition the government to subsidize a road from Woodstock to Berlin?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My recollection is that the petitions were in favour of the scheme in a general way. The municipalities to which my hon. friend refers are all very well supplied with railways, and they will get the advantage of this line, no matter in which section of the county it may run. The object is not so much to have a local road as to have coal distributed cheaply to the various manufacturing centres, for it is a matter of very material importance to the manufacturers throughout that section of the country to have their coal delivered as cheaply as possible. Then there is a great deal of the produce of the country originating on the Grand Trunk Railway and the Great Western which will be taken by this line, and in that way there will be competing rates from this lake port. The people will find a market they can serve and even have water during a part of the year from Port Burwell to Montreal. These are representations which were made by the company to the municipalities supporting it. As either of these two options will be through the same counties and municipalities, I do not think there will be much danger of any competition with regard to municipal bonuses. That is a matter any way about which we in this House need not have any particular care. If the municipalities are so anxious to have this road and think it will be so great a benefit that they are willing to vote assistance, that is their own business. But my hon. friend knows that in Ontario the people must be strongly in favour of a public enterprise of this description before they will grant it any bonus. It must be almost the unanimous wish of the electors of any village, town, township or county before any enterprise of this description will get municipal aid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a road which has been in existence for some time from Port Burwell to Ingersoll.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is just completed this year to Ingersoll.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, this is intended to be a through road from Port Burwell to Collingwood. You give the option to this road, but it ought to have its plan and it ought to have decided on its route. These parties must know what route they intend to take, and their object must be, in having this option, to go to the different municipalities and say: 'If you do not give us sufficient bonus and perhaps right of way or other conditions, we will take it to the other place.' You are giving this company the opportunity of holding up these municipalities for the purpose of getting bonuses. Here is an old road which was built from Port Burwell a number of years ago, now completed to the town of Ingersoll. The company propose to go to Collingwood. Surely they know the route. Why do they not come here and ask for a bonus from one particular point to another and not be allowed the opportunity of holding up the different towns and municipalities along the line by saying: 'The government have given us the option of going anyway we like between these two different points, and we will go in that direction which will give us the largest bonuses.'

Mr. BROCK. I would like very much if possible to have a change made and the original plan adopted. That is grant a bonus in a comprehensive way when you are about it for a railway from Lake Erie to Collingwood. I want to square myself with the Postmaster General and show him that I am not so narrow minded as to oppose all kinds of bonuses. But if we are going to give a bonus, it should be for some comprehensive scheme and not a little patch work such as this. This will be a bonus hunting road. We know who is behind this road, and in that respect it is unlike most of those other schemes that come before us. I believe that the promoters deserve well of the government and that it would be well to give a bonus of so much a mile right straight through from Ingersoll to Collingwood. In my opinion the country would support such a vote. I agree with the Minister of Public Works that the building of this road will have the effect of laying coal down in the central part of Ontario much cheaper than at present. It will bring coal directly across Lake Erie to Port Burwell and from Port Burwell it would be quite reasonable that we should build this road to a port on the Georgian bay. It has a charter to Collingwood. Then why not at once instead of aiding it in a half hearted way, give it a subsidy from Ingersoll to Collingwood. I would be very sorry that it should go past my hon. friend's home and town, but even if the road should run directly through Ingersoll to Collingwood and not touch at some of the other towns, they are well supplied with railway facilities by the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Canada Southern. Let this road run through to Collingwood. If a scheme of that kind were to be adopted, this parliament would be justified in granting a bonus all the way and I would ask that that change be made now if possible.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this road going to Collingwood, or is it not proposed to change it, and instead of going to Collingwood to make the terminus at some other point? I understand that, if they go from Woodstock the chances are they will run on to Collingwood, but if they run from Berlin they will go on to the shores of Lake Huron.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand—and I go simply by their own representations—that their terminus is Collingwood. My hon. friend (Mr. Brock) will see that, while I live in Woodstock and my interests are there to a great extent, I am not selfish in this matter. Their present subsidy takes them to Woodstock, but they represented to the government that it might be in the public interest as well as in the interest of the company that they should go north by Stratford, as being a somewhat shorter and, perhaps, a better route. I quite agree with that, because, if it is a good enterprise, the shorter the line they can make and the better the grades from Lake Erie to Georgian bay, the better it would be in the interests of the whole country. Therefore, I did not object nor do I now, to their proposal to change their course. If they run ten miles from the town I live in and where my interests lie, I am sure the hon. gentleman will exonerate me from any personal interest or feeling. If I had told them that they had already intimated that it was their intention to go through Woodstock, that they had been subsidized to that point, and I would not agree to a change, I might then be accused of selfishness. But I frankly told them that, if it were in the general interest and in the interest of the company to go the other way I was satisfied. I can see the force of what the hon. gentleman says that it would be a good thing if encouragement were offered to the whole scheme from water to water. But the hon. gentleman must remember that this is a very large country, and there are a great many districts that have no railway facilities. And I must say that I, for one, have always supported with a better heart the granting of assistance to a road that was opening up a new section of the country than to one running through a territory already fairly provided with railway facilities. But I am satisfied that, no matter which of these routes the company take, if they can go on delivering coal at the prices at which they are now delivering it, it would be of as great advantage to the manufacturers of Woodstock as though the road ran directly through the town. If I remember well, they got a subsidy from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg, where they connected with the Michigan Central and with a branch of the Grand Trunk. Then they came back to secure powers to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The great roads are interested in lending their assistance and endorsing this proposition, because, as represented to me, they are interested in getting coal for their own use at this point. They are a long distance from the coal fields, and can bring it better in this way than by a route upon which we spent considerable money—bringing coal by boat to Port Dover and connecting with a branch of the Grand Trunk. But the navigation was not found very satisfactory. If the ideas of the present company are successful, the road will be one of great advantage to the whole of that district of Ontario. If it is merely a local road I should not be here advocating a subsidy for it.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no denying the importance of the road, if it is completed, and I agree with the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) that, if the whole road were subsidized, it would be better, as we should have it completed at an earlier date. But if we cannot get a subsidy for the whole, it is at least well to get a subsidy for a portion of it.

Mr. BROCK. Why not for the whole? There is an overflowing treasury.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit we should be better pleased to have all subsidized, but, if the government see proper to subsidize only a part, that will still be useful. But I want to endorse what the hon. member of Peel (Mr. Blain) said, that the proposition now, so far as I can see, will lead to the holding up of the municipalities. I do not say that I object to the change of route. If you build to Woodstock, you build along side of two other railways; but, if you go to Stratford, you will go through a section that has no railway just now. It is true, you are not very far from a railway in either case, but the route to Stratford will do more to afford facilities to a new section than will Woodstock. But it is a wrong principle to give a railway company power to hold up the municipalities. We all know what railway corporations are—they have neither souls nor bowels of compassion. They take every dollar they can get, and play one municipality off against the other for all they are worth. They should not be allowed an opportunity to do so. This company should not be allowed an opportunity to do so. This company should choose as direct a route as possible to Collingwood and receive a subsidy for that road.

Mr. BROCK. If it would be in order I would like to move an amendment:

That all the words after 'Ingersoll' be struck out and the following be substituted: 'to Collingwood, crossing the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway in the most convenient places and in the most direct way.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I take it that that amendment is in order, because it does not propose to increase the amount of the subsidy as I understand it. There is no person here that I know of representing the company. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) I had expected to see in the House. I had the information as to this road from him. The solicitor of the company was here at one time during the session. I fear that the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) would defeat the object the company have in view. Personally, I would have no particular objection to the amount, but I fear the company could not secure the payment of the subsidy under this wording. I think that every hon. gentleman who has had experience in these matters knows of the difficulties that companies have under the wording of the resolutions, even after they have earned their money, in getting payment through the Auditor General. I doubt very much whether that is definite enough. I would have no particular objection to a change, speaking for myself, but I cannot speak for the company. I know they have built the road now as far as Ingersoll. I know the manager of the road, and it has always been represented to me that they had good financial backing. That is proved by the fact that they have completed a somewhat expensive road and equipped it from the lake as far north as Ingersoll. I did not make any particular inquiry with regard to it. I think the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is financially interested in it. They represented to me that if they built as far as the Grand Trunk they would then be able to supply the Grand Trunk system with a lot of coal. I would be afraid, in changing this without consultation with the solicitor, that we might defeat the object we have in view.

Mr. BROCK. My suggestion was to give them a free hand, but with the distinct understanding that they were to make for Collingwood, and not build to Collingwood, because that is going to be a very different road from the road that is now laid out. A through road of that kind with the prospect of a subsidy is much easier to finance than these little patches of eight or nine miles at a time. If the government could see its way to grant a bonus to this road from Ingersoll through to Collingwood, it would be a great benefit to that country. If it passed by Guelph, or Galt, or Berlin, where there are large factories, it could carry large quantities of coal to these towns. But that should be done with the understanding that the promoters should build it to Collingwood.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the resolution as drawn could carry out that object.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the acting Minister of Railways to say that the aim of the promoters is to construct it from Ingersoll to Collingwood, with a view of serving that manufacturing section of Ontario with cheaper coal. Now one proposition is to take the line from Ingersoll to Stratford. I want to ask the hon. gentleman if, when it gets to Stratford, it will be as near to Collingwood as when it gets to Ingersoll.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend means Berlin or Stratford.

Mr. BLAIN. Is Ingersoll closer to Collingwood than Stratford is ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not prepared to say, but looking at the map, there is very little difference. By bearing east in the first place they are going in the direction of Collingwood. If they went due north instead of going to Stratford, they would have to bear east to some other point to reach Collingwood. It would not make any difference in the total mileage.

Mr. BLAIN. Ingersoll is nearer to Collingwood than Stratford. If the aim of the promoters of this road is to run a line from Ingersoll to Collingwood, then they are going out of their way when they go to Stratford. A line from Ingersoll to Collingwood in anything like a direct line would not touch Stratford at all. I want to ask the acting Minister of Railways another question with regard to coal. We all know that a line of railway was subsidized by this government from Port Dover through the central part of Ontario with a view of bringing soft coal from the United States across in boats, connecting at Port Dover with a line of railway running through the province of Ontario to reach these manufacturing points. If I am correctly informed, that venture has proved a dead failure. They have not been able to bring coal across the lake and make connections at Port Dover and serve the central part of Ontario in that way. Now if that be the case, how is it possible to bring coal across Lake Erie to Port Burwell and serve the central part of Ontario with this road, when they cannot do it with the other ? This road has been constructed for many years from Port Burwell up to Ingersoll, and for a much longer time from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg. Tilsonburg is connected with railways running through all that section of Ontario. What amount of coal has been brought over across Lake Erie to Port Burwell and along this line of railway to Tilsonburg, and then distributed to manufacturers in that part of Ontario ? If my information is correct, I think very little.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is somewhat mistaken. The road was only completed this season to Ingersoll. My hon. friend must know that the improvements to the harbour are not completed yet. To do this business properly this company had to have a harbour on this side of the lake, they had to put on large boats to establish the coal trade. He asks me to say whether they have made a success of the coal trade. I am only able to give the reasons that were given to me. First, the water is not deep enough, notwithstandinig that over $100,000 have been spent on that port; secondly, the coal mines are controlled by the American railways. The coal this road will bring would come from another district altogether. They would not ship their coal in that way, but they send it round by Buffalo. For some time they did carry coal that way for the use of the railroad companies. They are supplying coal at Port Burwell from a different district on the other side from that which it was originally intended to connect with the Grand Trunk at Port Dover.

Mr. HENDERSON. The wording of this resolution is not such as to meet my approval, even were I in favour of subsidizing a road through this country. This is one of the roads that I would not consider meritorious. It runs through a rich agricultural country from Lake Erie to Georgian bay, and passes through large manufacturing towns. If any railway can be constructed and made self-sustaining without government aid, it is surely this road. The country through which this road passes would be able to afford abundance of traffic and enable its promoters to pay dividends. However, we have already, in a resolution that we have adopted, granted a subsidy to this road from Ingersoll to Woodstock. That we have disposed of. That is not before us now. Now, we are asked to grant a further subsidy :

> For a line of railway from Woodstock northerly to a point on the Grand Trunk Railway at Berlin.

That is one proposition. The other proposition is to go back to Ingersoll and grant a subsidy :

> From Ingersoll to Stratford, or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places.

Or between Stratford and Berlin. It seems to me that a roving commission like this is not altogether what I may call fair-play. This company will be able to go to the city of Stratford, and say : We have a subsidy granted from Ingersoll to Stratford. If you elect a representative in North Perth to support the government the road will be conducted along that route, because we understand from the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir Wm. Mulock), in his categorical examination of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), that the purport of these bonuses is largely to secure political support. If the city of Stratford does not concede what the promoter, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) desires, or what the government desires, and if they do not grant a municipal bonus the company are in a position to go elsewhere. They may say : We will go to Woodstock and see what they are prepared to do. If Woodstock gives a good municipal bonus in support of this road they will run the road from Ingersoll to Woodstock and thence to Berlin, providing that Berlin will grant a bonus and representatives in favour of the government are elected in North and South Waterloo. The roving commission that this subsidy gives to this company is such as is utterly unfair to the various counties through which the road passes, because it simply places power in the hands of the company which no railway company should be given. We have gone as far as Woodstock with the subsidy. The road is built to Ingersoll. Let the road continue from Ingersoll to Woodstock. I think that is the proper route. Then from Woodstock let it go north to Berlin, passing possibly through Galt, and on north from Berlin through a section of the country that is not now supplied with railway facilities, towards Collingwood. If you subsidize this road allowing it to be constructed from Ingersoll to Stratford, and thence from Stratford northward, you are simply paralleling another road which runs to the Georgian bay. You can get on a railway train at Stratford and go direct to Wiarton or Owen Sound. Why should we subsidize a road paralleling that existing road? Surely the government are not so profuse of money that they can afford to subsidize one railway to parallel another through a well settled country such as the counties of Perth, Huron, Bruce and Grey. I do not think it is called for. I think the other is the proper route.

Mr. SPROULE. If you go the other way, you are paralleling the two roads to Woodstock direct.

Mr. HENDERSON. I admit that, but it would only be for a distance of about nine miles. These two roads are practically through roads. Any one living near these two roads may see the trains go past upon them at a very high rate of speed. They make stops at large places. These two roads are not local roads, and as far as the distance between Woodstock and Berlin is concerned, they are practically through roads. The conditions are the same as those in the Niagara peninsula. When you go across the Niagara peninsula you are bound to parallel other roads, because the peninsula is so narrow. Still if you want to reach the United States you have to parallel roads, but in this case you would only be obliged to parallel existing roads for a distance of about nine miles. The moment you strike Woodstock you have an opportunity of going north towards Berlin. I dare say you will pass through such towns as Berlin, Hespeler, Galt and Waterloo, and thence on to Collingwood, so that the road will go through a country which abounds in manufacturing towns which would require the coal that the railway could supply them with. I think this bonus ought to be limited to one route, and that no roving commission should be granted. I do not think it is fair that the different municipalities should be placed in opposition to one another, or that one should be held up against the other, so that whichever bids the highest in the shape of a municipal bonus will get the road, or that the constituency which elects a representative of a certain stripe of politics will get the road. I think that the government should lay down a certain line. Let this committee amend this resolution in the way which I suggest. It would be an absurd thing to parallel a road which already runs to the Georgian bay rather than going to Woodstock, where we have already given a bonus, because we have already granted a subsidy from Ingersoll to Woodstock. Let us continue the road from Woodstock north and go through the important towns to which I have referred on the way to the Georgian bay.

Mr. SPROULE. It would appear that my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) does not understand the geography of the country very well, because he says that if you go from Stratford north to the Georgian bay you would be paralleling another road. You are not paralleling another road. There is no road being paralleled by going from Stratford, but if you go to Woodstock and then back to Galt, you would make a snake fence of it and render the project impracticable. The proposition would be neither feasible nor useful. I understand that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) desires, with the permission of the committee, to withdraw the resolution that he proposed.

Mr. BROCK. I withdraw the resolution.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very much in sympathy with my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) in the general sentiments that he expresses, and I shall make representations to the company by telegram acquainting them with the views which have been expressed, so that we may amend the resolution before the third reading. I can assure the committee that there is no localism about this matter. It was on the representations of the company, who had obtained a charter from Ingersoll to Woodstock, that the route was described in the way in which it appears here. As the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) points out, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is rather mistaken as to the conditions which at present exist. There are two first-class roads between Woodstock and Ingersoll. Besides that, there is a first-class electric road, the cars upon which go up and down every half hour, so that there is no object from the local standpoint in adopting the route which is here proposed. I think the idea of the company was that they should be in a position to adopt whichever their survey showed to be the better route. I had no idea whatever that there was any desire on the part of the company to hold up the municipalities, because these municipalities are so well supplied with railways that they could not, as a matter of fact, be held up. It never occurred to me that there was any such idea in the mind of anybody. These counties are so well supplied with railway facilities that it would be impossible to get anything like a unanimous vote in the community on the question. The resolution was only drawn in this way because the company asked it with the view of selecting the best and shortest route as disclosed by the survey.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That portion of the road between Ingersoll and Tilsonburg would not be immediately paralleling any line, excepting for a few miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. You mean from Ingersoll to Stratford.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes, from Ingersoll to Stratford.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a splendid country there.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is a good country there, and if it ran directly from Stratford to Collingwood it would not parallel any road. But I do not think that a road to Woodstock should be bonused as there are already three roads there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This has been voted for some years.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Then to go from Woodstock to either Galt or Guelph, as has been said, would be to make a snake fence of it. I can certainly see very serious objection to the way this bonus is given; it is encouraging each town to vote a bonus to the railway. I think the minister should either hold this over, or word it so as to remove the objectionable features.

Mr. SPROULE. I beg to move that all the words after the word 'from' in the second line be struck out and the following be substituted therefor :—

'Ingersoll towards Collingwood in the most direct and practicable route not exceeding 35 miles.'

I think that gives a starting point with the other objective point at Collingwood.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We might let this stand until we hear from the company any objections they may have to that wording; personally I have no objection to it.

To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company for a line of railway from the present terminus of its railway, near Bancroft, easterly to a point at or near Renfrew, not exceeding seventy-five miles.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to this resolution with respect to the Irondale and Bancroft road I would say that this aid has been pressed upon this government by a number of municipalities, including the city of Toronto, the town of Lindsay, the Board of Trade of the city of Ottawa, the Board of Trade of Lindsay, and the Board of Trade of Renfrew. Various other municipalities have pressed this upon the government, but as some sort of objection to it seeems to be manifested I would suggest that it stand over till to-morrow. I may inform my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) that my object in doing this with reference to this and the James bay resolution, which is farther down on the Order Paper, is that perhaps my hon. friend would like to take advantage of the presence here to-morrow of a deputation from the Toronto city council. Perhaps he desires to consult them with regard to these two subsidies. I can assure him that they have been pressed upon us very strongly by the city of Toronto. If the hon. gentleman desires it I would suggest that they stand over until that deputation arrives.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Anything the city of Toronto could have to say about this would be well said, and I am sure that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) will not object to it because it is carrying out his policy of opening up a new district and when completed it will give to the city of Toronto another through line to the city of Ottawa. This road was pressed forward for a number of years by Mr. Pusey, who came in here giving his time and energy to this project and he fought an up hill fight such as few men in Canada have fought and succeeded in building the road a considerable distance. Mr. Howland is now managing the road to the best of his ability. It opens up a country which is somewhat rugged but one which I am sure will be in a few years rich in mining. The famous corundum mines were opened up owing to the fact of this railway bringing settlers to the region. I would like to see this vote passed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The objection to this proposed vote would be that it is diverting the line from the route originally intended. Mr. Pusey did not intend to go to Renfrew but to make connection with the road from Brockville to Westport. It was his intention to work down in that direction and as evidence of that he commenced to build a bridge from Brockville across the St. Lawrence. You will see there one or two of the piers partly built and there should be some serious reason why the road is being diverted from its original line towards Renfrew.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The original intention was to build the road to Ottawa. It starts from Kinmount and runs through Irondale and Bancroft, so that this is returning to the original intention. Some years later when the Brockville and Westport railway got into difficulties, Mr. Pusey abandoned the original route and intended to divert the road to connect with the Brockville and Westport, intending to cross the St. Lawrence at Brockville and to have a through route to the west. I know his intentions because I had the privilege of being consulted by him in every move he made. That scheme has been dropped for a number of years past and the intention has been to make a connection with Ottawa, in other words to go back to the original intention of the projector of the railway.

Mr. WRIGHT. This road has been built a distance of forty-five or fifty miles and has received and earned government aid. It has now been bonused by the Ontario government for a distance of seventy-five miles at $3,000 a mile, and we expect to get assistance from this government and then the road will be completed because financial arrangements have been made with the Knickerbocker Company of New York to complete it. With reference to the possibilities of this road you must understand that with the Madawaska river near where the York branch unites there is situated one of the finest corundum mines in the world. They are spending this year nearly a quarter of a million dollars and this mine will practically control the corundum market of the world. For the information of the House I would like to lay upon the Table a picture of this corundum mine, also a cut of the buildings, which are now being erected and which along with the machinery will cost as I said a quarter of a million dollars. I would also like to submit a sample of the corundum crystal which perhaps none of you have ever seen and also some of the manufactured article. It is an abrasive mineral and the samples which I show you embrace the finest and also the coarsest grades, from No. 12 to No. 200. We expect that they will do an immense business in corundum which is wanted in every iron manufacturing establishment in the world. The company are now shipping their produce all over Canada, carloads are being sent to the great manufactories in the United States and the corundum is also being shipped in great quantities to Great Britain and other countries of Europe. The great difficulty hitherto has been that the road was so far from any railway that the cost of shipping these goods has been almost prohibitive. But you must bear in mind that this corundum mine is not the only mine in this country that this railway will open up.

If you go about twenty-five miles further down the Madawaska, you come to the finest molybdenite mine in the world. This mineral is so extensive that one of the farmers has actually fenced his whole farm with it. It is used in the manufacture of the very highest grade of steel. This mine, which is already started, will be put in such a shape that this material can be shipped, and it will be of inestimable value to this country. In the same vicinity there have been opened up magnificent iron mines of the highest grade of ore for the manufacture of steel. So you have these two elements lying side by side. The difficulty at present is that the ore has to be drawn thirty or forty miles, and it is almost impossible to do it. If this road is built, it will be possible to ship that ore. Twelve miles still further down the river, in the township of Brougham, you come to the Ontario Graphite Company's mine, one of the finest mines in the Dominion of Canada. This company has already spent about $75,000 in opening up this mine. Only last week they shipped a carload of manufactured goods to Berlin in Germany. Those who visited the Pan-American Exposition must have seen the magnificent exhibit of this company there. Theirs is the only mine of its kind now being operated anywhere in the Dominion of Canada. The material is of the highest grade. The Ontario government has purchased the exhibit which was at the Pan-American for the purpose of sending it to the St. Louis Exposition, next year. In view of the prospects of this railway in opening up all these magnificent mines, I cannot understand why anybody should oppose this grant.

Mr. BROCK. In reply to the remarks of the Postmaster General in regard to this Bancroft Railway, I would like the House to understand that I am not an opponent of granting assistance to every railway, but I am oposed to granting public money to undesirable railways. Not only do I support a grant to this particular railway, but I have put a large amount of money into it myself. That money has been sunk for several years, and I shall not get a cent of it back again. Therefore I am not selfish in supporting or opposing any particular railway. With regard to the veiled threat which the hon. gentleman has thrown across to me, that I may meet some citizens of Toronto who are coming here, and may delight his heart by getting up a wrangle with them, he need not be alarmed. They know my opinions. I may not be a municipal officer coming down here to urge the interests of any railway company ; I represent the city of Toronto, and I am positively opposed to the granting of subsidies to railways through well settled parts of the country, particularly when those railways are going to parallel others. I have supported one from a harbour on Lake Erie, where we are spending a large amount of money, for the purpose of having coal brought into this country more cheaply than it is now. But the Postmaster General need not fancy for one moment that I object to meet people with whom I have lived all my life, even though it should be in a committee on a matter of this kind. I am anxious to promote the welfare of this country, and I believe that in opposinig the granting of bonuses in the omnibus way in which they are being put through this House, I am acting in the best interests of this country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that the delegation from the city of Toronto are coming here to-morrow in the interests of any railway company, as the hon. gentleman seems to suggest. The only reason that I know of why they are coming is contained in a telegram which I received from the head of the city, stating that they were coming down to urge the government and parliament to acquiesce in an amendment made by the Senate to the Railway Commission Bill.

Mr. BROCK. Why should you invite me to meet them on that account ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not ask the hon. gentleman to take any course. But when in the early part of this discussion he expressed himself so strongly against railway bonuses generally, I told him that he would not oppose certain bonuses in this list, and now I am sustained in that view. I understand that he acquiesces in the bonus to the Bancroft Railway. I told him that I thought he would consider that a good bonus.

Mr. BROCK. I want to use common sense.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad to hear it ; and since the hon. gentleman expresses himself in favour of this bonus, I have no desire to postpone the consideration of it. We put it in the list because this was pressed upon us as a meritorious enterprise. The road will open up a country rich not only in minerals, but in agriculture, and will ultimately connect the west with the Ottawa district. The bonus has been pressed on the government by the city of Toronto, the city of Ottawa, the town of Lindsay, the town of Renfrew, and all the municipalities through which the line will pass. Several deputations from these municipalities have waited on the government, and have represented that the railway will open up and develop valuable resources in the district to be served. So that it would seem to be a very useful road, and I am glad to know that our action in aiding it has the unanimous approval apparently of hon. gentlemen of this committee.

To the Nepigon Railway Company, for a line of railway from Lake Superior to Lake Nepigon, and from a point on the north shore of Lake Nepigon northerly, not exceeding eighty miles.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is that railway expected to go ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is proposed to be built from Lake Superior to Lake Nepigon, about forty miles Then, I understand that Lake Nepigon is about 100 miles long ; and I believe the idea is to connect the lake with a through line.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister explain where the Grand Trunk Pacific is to come in ? Only a short time ago we saw some gentlemen down here doing some engineering, and the next day we saw an item to the effect that the Grand Trunk Pacific was going to run a branch to Nepigon bay. This railway is to go there too. Is it the intention to have two railways from Nepigon north ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This would hardly serve that purpose. There is a large territory there which has no railway at all.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It never will have.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is mistaken. There is a splendid country there, with plenty of resources. I am not able to tell you the location of the Grand Trunk Pacific, but I hope that some day or other there will be one or two roads running through there, and this may connect with it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is there a charter for this road across Lake Nepigon ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the scheme is to build from Lake Superior to Lake Nepigon, and then from Lake Nepigon about 40 miles north.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is not the charter for a continuous railway?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why not build around the lake. To build a road up to Lake Nepigon and then take a canoe or steamer across the lake, and then build a railway on, would be nonsense. A road that will go around the lake will have to keep a slight distance to the west, and there you would get a very good valley.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The road will be forty miles to Lake Nepigon, and I think it is eighty miles from the south to the north of Lake Nepigon. Then the road will be forty miles north from Lake Nepigon, or eighty miles of railway or thereabouts plus the navigable waters of the lake, which will furnish communications between the outside world and the Grand Trunk Pacific in the course of construction, and provide means of getting in supplies and material. Perhaps later on the owners may connect the two pieces.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this to be a colonization road ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For the present it will certainly be, pure and simple, because after building from Lake Superior to Lake Nepigon, they propose to use the lake, which is between 90 and 100 miles long. It is represented that there are large pulpwood limits there, and it is intended to establish there pulp and fishing industries. The parties are putting their own money into it, and are prepared to build next season if they receive assistance.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that the object is to construct a road from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Lake Nepigon, but I understand that that road has also a subsidy from the Ontario government for the first ten miles. Then they are supposed to navigate Lake Nepigon for the purpose of bringing up pulpwood and other material down, and it is to be a colonization road as well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Those are the representations made to me.

Mr. BROCK. It can only be a summer road. In the winter time the lake is not navigable.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The road will be used in the winter time for taking in supplies and you can drive across the lake.

To the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company for a line of railway from Little Current, on its present line, to Sudbury and thence towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not exceeding thirty miles, in lieu of the subsidy of twenty-one miles granted by chapter 7 of 1899, item 38 of section 2.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a revote of 21 miles and nine miles new. It is to run into the nickel mines and will connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that ultimately supposed to go to James' bay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the Manitoulin and North Shore line runs south of the Canadian Pacific Railway across the Manitoulin islands. Its charter carries it back to Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this part of the Clergue system of railway. bonused already by the Ontario government and for which we voted a bonus before ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. This is part of the railway that was to go down to Manitoulin across to Tobermory and further down by Wiarton and from Wiarton to Meaford. I said some years ago that I never believed it was seriously intended to build the Manitoulin part of it. However, Mr. Clergue was ingenious enough to get nearly all southwestern Ontario to join with him in an application for a subsidy to build this railway, and the bonuses he got he used in order to build back into the woods to his own pulp lands and mines. I would be much better pleased if this had been spent for the purpose of building the Manitoulin part down to Tobermory and from there by way of Wiarton to Meaford. That would have given us a short road across that section to the Soo, to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I imagine this must be dropped. Who is behind this now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is somewhat mistaken as to the roads. Mr. Clergue and those associated with him had two charters—one the Manitoulin and North Shore and the other the Algoma Central. They were granted subsidies by parliament for both roads, but there are some twenty-one miles on which the subsidies are still good for another year, granted to the Manitoulin and North Shore Company. The subsidy Mr. Clergue used on the Algoma Central, which he built up to the mines and north towards the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was a different organization, although under the control of Mr. Clergue and his associates.

Mr. SPROULE. But this road was to go to Little Current and from there to extend on to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. However, there are two separate oragnizations. Mr. Clergue has built more of the Algoma Central—a hundred and odd miles—and of this only twelve or thirteen miles starting from Sudbury and running out into the mining country ; and this nine miles extension is in a different direction and was not subsidized before. We will admit that the enterprises with which Mr. Clergue was associated are not at the moment successful. Still, many of us would regard them as great undertakings, and we all must admit that he has succeeded in spending a great deal of money in that district. No doubt those enterprises are in difficulties by all reports, but I have still confidence that many of these industries will be established and become successful. And he represents that he has still the expectation——

Mr. SPROULE. Who represents ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Clergue. He is, so far as I know the representative of these railway propositions. He says he has financial arrangements pending to put these roads through, if he is given the support. He has done wonderful things in the past, and it seems to me we might take the risk of this small renewal. We want to see the road built, there is no doubt about that. A great deal of money has been spent in that district, and, for my part, I have still confidence that many of the industries will be carried on there. And I hope that Mr. Clergue will reap some reward for the work he has done and the enterprise he has shown. The first investors in some of these industries may lose. We shall be sorry if that is the case, but I believe that the country will be developed and many of these enterprises will be successful in the end.

Mr. SPROULE. I believe that too. But I must say that I think Mr. Clergue is considerable of a fakir in railway promoting. That is my opinion from the experience we have had of him so far. He is an able man no doubt. He has started many industries which, if continued, will be of a most valuable character, and I am sure every one will be glad to see him rewarded for his enterprise. But I think his greatest cause of failure is that, as soon as he starts one enterprise, instead of prosecuting it to successful end, he branches out into something else in which he sees millions, follows it a certain distance, starts something else and so on. With regard to his railway schemes, let me give the committee an idea of them. He got western Ontario to support his scheme for a bonus. He was going to build from Mea-ford up to Tobermory, reach Manitoulin, cross to Little Current, thence to the north shore and so north. This scheme his friends used two or three times during the elections. In North Grey he had the announcement made in the 'Monitor' calling for the building of the whole road. I had left Ottawa, but a short time before, and, up to that time, he had not his plans filed with the government when the statement was made that he was calling for tenders for the construction of the road. I wrote to Ottawa to ask if he had his plans filed then, and the answer I received was that no maps or plans had been filed. Yet, though he had not laid his plans before the government or received their consent, he called for tenders for the building of the whole road, seeking to convince the people that the road was to be built at once. After the election was over, of course, there was a quietus for a time. There was a protest, the sitting member was unseated and a new election was called. Then, the same game was gone over with. It served the same purpose two or three times, and I do not know how many more times it will be used. I am satisfied there was no serious intention of commencing the road. Yet, Mr. Clergue sent out surveyors, of two different routes. Those people who wanted the road to go by the north route were told to support the government candidate and they would get what they wanted; and those who wanted the south route were told the same thing. We would not have complained so much about all this had he gone on and built the railway. But the aim seems to be the same as from the first. He mapped out a large scheme to secure support from a large number of municipalities, including towns and cities, so as to secure a bonus to enable him to complete that portion of the railway back into his mining and pulpwood areas, and he has used that for the purpose of building back in that direction. I do not say this is objectionable, for even the building of that road would be valuable; but he has led a lot of people into the belief that he seriously intended to build the Manitoulin and North Shore, which I do not think he ever did. Now, we are proposing to give him a little help, for his railway back into the mining district. If he seriously intends to build it and will prosecute it, I do not say that it is objectionable, because it would do good to the locality.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would not this pass near the Spanish River Pulp Company, and their large works going on at the present time?

Mr. DYMENT. Yes, they have a mile and a half built from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Spanish River Pulp Company.

Mr. BROCK. I desire to make a suggestion. It is hardly likely that we can pass all these items to-night. When charters are applied for large maps are brought before the Railway Committee, showing where the road is to be built, the location of parallel roads, and so on. Would it be possible for the department, in view of these bonuses, to have these maps laid before the Committee of the Whole? In that way we could have a better idea of the situation than we can have from the small maps. For myself, I am very much at sea without this information, and I think a great many of us are in the same position.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course the charters of some of the roads to be subsidized were passed, not this session, but years ago. The maps may not be available. But, any that are available I will endeavour to bring down.

Mr. HENDERSON. Surely there must be something very wrong in the wording of this resolution. It is not intelligible to me. It says:

To the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company for a line of railway from Little Current, on its present line, to Sudbury, and thence towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

When you are at Sudbury you are on the main line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have just had my attention drawn to that. It does seem somewhat unintelligible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is being asked for by the solicitor of the company, and, I suppose, it is put in as he worded it. It would be as well, perhaps, to have it looked into to learn what the explanation is. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) have any objection to this being passed, with the understanding that it would be explained or amended on the third reading?

Mr. HENDERSON. I object to the passing of it on general principles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But now that the hon. gentleman's conscience is eased, and he knows that these votes are going through anyway, I would suggest that it is hardly worth while holding over a small item like this when we can pass it with the understanding that on the third reading it can be passed or explained.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is, give the government a roving commission to change the resolution, and they might make it apply to a railway to run to the moon. I would not like to say I would vote for a subsidy and leave it to the government——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Very well, let the item stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What the Minister of Public Works means is that when the Bill comes to its final stage in committee, we can make the correction, That is what my hon. friend proposes, not that the government should make it.

To the Thunder Bay, Nepigon and St. Joe Railway Company for a line of railway from Port Arthur north-easterly, not exceeding fifty miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This road will pass through a good farming district. I think Mr. Burke, of Port Arthur, is the leading promoter. We have telegrams from a number of representative persons in that neighbourhood asking for this subsidy. I have an application from the Board of Trade of Port Arthur in support of this subsidy.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This is the best agricultural land in that whole region. The road runs away up north-east of Port Arthur. The people of that town deserve more credit than the people of any other town in the Dominion of Canada. At a time when the town was under the weather, and property was not paying half the interest on its value, the people stuck to their guns ; and now that they have put themselves into a good position they are anxious to get the northern part of that country opened up. Any assistance given to that locality will be money well spent.

Mr. HENDERSON. What subsidy or bonus has the provincial government given to this road ?

Mr. DYMENT. $2,000 a mile.

Mr. CLANCY. $2,000 in cash subsidy is given for the first 10 miles and a land grant of 5,000 acres per mile for the whole distance of 225 miles. Is this subsidy to be applied on the first 10 miles, for which the cash subsidy is given by the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The information furnished to me does not state the number of miles. It states the government of Ontario have granted a subsidy, and I presume that our subsidy will cover the same mileage as far as it goes.

Mr. CLANCY. The subsidy granted by the province covers the first ten miles and the land grant the whole distance. This subsidy does not seem to be in conformity with one of the objects of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which was to be a colonization road from Quebec to Winnipeg. The hon. gentlemen are now opening up colonization roads running from Lake Superior northward into that country, and when we have voted these subsidies for five or six roads penetrating northward, we will convince the country that we are doing colonization business, and doing it in a more effective way than by the Grand Trunk Pacific. These roads running northward will furnish a better means of colonization than could a road running from Quebec to Winnipeg and which would only have an outlet at either end. I was glad to hear the Minister of Public Works declare that this was for colonization purposes, and for the purpose of taking out the products of that country. Now, in view of this policy of the government in promoting colonization by railroads running from the south northward, do they propose to abandon that feature of the transcontinental scheme, that feature which was to make it a colonization road ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid we cannot agree to abandon any part of that excellent scheme.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. Minister of Finance tell us what business we will take up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are some Bills and orders standing on the Paper which we desire to take up which will not likely occupy much time, and then we will proceed with the railway subsidies.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. minister state when we may expect the resolution in regard to the Quebec bridge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will find that on the notice paper in the morning. It was sent upstairs some time ago, and it will appear in the Votes and Proceedings in the morning.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the government any further information to convey to the House relating to the Alaskan boundary ? It was announced that they would likely come to a decision this afternoon or to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While it is Tuesday in London, it is hardly Tuesday here. We have no official information to give to my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, October 20, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would draw the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to a despatch from New York stating that the Canadian commissioners refused to sign the award and that a cable message was sent from the right hon. gentleman to England approving of their conduct. Has he any information to give the House ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have information that the award is to be signed to-day at noon, and that it will not be unanimous. More than that I have none. It goes without saying nobody will suppose that I would presume to communicate with the commissioners regarding their line of conduct.

Mr. SPROULE. In view of the despatch, I brought the matter to the notice of the right hon. gentleman.

REGISTRAR OF THE SUPREME COURT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 268) respecting the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada. (The Minister of Justice.)

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). I propose that we reconsider clause 3, in order to meet the difficulty suggested by my hon. friend from Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) with respect to the salary of the registrar. He suggested that the registrar might, under clause 3, continue to receive the $600 now paid to him. for editing the Supreme Court Report. In order to avoid that, I would suggest that section 3 be struck out, and another substituted in its place. I beg to move, therefore :

That section 3 of the said Bill be struck out and the following substituted :—

3. The registrar shall, subject to the direction of the Minister of Justice oversee and direct the officers, clerks and employees appointed to the Supreme Court. He shall give his full time to the public service and shall not receive any pay, fee or allowance in any form of excess of the amount provided in this Act.

4. The provisions with respect to his salary and the receipt of any pay, fee or allowance contained in the preceding sections shall not apply to the present registrar until the conclusion of his engagement as one of the commissioners for the revision of the statutes of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the registrar not getting the $600 now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He gets $2,600 as salary, and $600 on Order in Council for reporting the judgments of the court. This $600 is voted in the Appropriation Act. The present Bill will not come into force until such time as the revision of the statutes is completed and his salary will remain as it is, namely $2,600 and $600. He is now in receipt besides of a salary of $1,200 for his work as one of the commissioners for revising the statutes. When that revision is completed, he will get the salary provided by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will he continue to perform the same duties when he gets the increase as he is paid $600 now for doing?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, he will perform all the duties.

Amendment agreed to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect of section 2 ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is the same provision as exists with respect to deputy ministers. His salary begins at $3,500, with an increase of $100 every year until it reaches $4,000. But every year he has been in office up to the present time counts. For instance, if he had been five years in office, when this Act comes into force, he will start at a maximum of $4,000. If he has been only four years in office he will start with $3,900, and so on. As he was appointed in 1898, he has served the five years, and he will be entitled at once to the $4,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought that under the Bill he was entitled to $3,500 now, his salary to be increased by $100 a year until he had reached a maximum of $4,000. But I find that under the hon. minister's interpretation he commences with $4,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let me try to make the position clear. He is entitled to $3,500 as salary to begin with, and he is entitled to annual increases of $100 a year until he reaches the maximum of $4,000. But, if he has served one, two, three or five years, that service will count for the purpose of increasing his salary. So, if he has served for two years his salary will be $3,700, if three years his salary will be $3,800 and so on. This is the general principle. But it is provided also that the Bill shall not become applicable to the registrar of the Supreme Court until such time as he shall cease to act as one of the commissioners for the revision of the statutes. So, until he has ceased to act in that capacity he will remain as at present, in receipt of a salary of $3,200.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, this revision of the statute will be finished in about six months or a year.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. A year, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, he goes at once to the maximum of this Bill ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well, I protest against this multiplying of offices and this making of deputy heads where there is no need for it. And, as to the position of registrar of the Supreme Court, I do not think that the qualification required for such an officer justifies the paying of such a salary as that which is paid in this case.

On section 4,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What does this officer get paid for revising the statutes ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Twelve hundred dollars.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. So, he is in receipt of $4,000 now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. A little more than $4,000.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 3) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

On section 2,

2. The Dominion Elections Act, 1900, is amended by inserting the following immediately after section 9 :—

Compulsory Voting.

9a. Any person who does not vote at an election at which he is qualified to vote shall be disfranchised for a term of six years from the date of such election.

2. No person shall, however, be disfranchised if he has been prevented from voting by illness or by absence from the electoral district, if he did not absent himself therefrom in order that he might avoid voting, or if more than one election was being held at the same time and such person voted in some other electoral district where he was qualified to vote : Provided always that a judge of any court of record, upon being satisfied that any person entitled to vote had any other good and sufficient reason for not voting, may grant such person a certificate of enfranchisement annulling the disenfranchisement, which certificate may be in the form KK.

3. Any person who, while disfranchised under the provisions of this section, votes or attempts to vote in any electoral district, shall be guilty of an indictable offence and shall be liable to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and costs and not exceeding two hundred dollars and costs, or, in default of payment of such fine and costs, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months and not less than three months, with or without hard labour.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). That is a section that it will be almost impossible to have adopted at the present time. I think it is far in advance of public opinion, and I see no reason why we should make the exercise of the franchise compulsory. It is a privilege which may be exercised by an individual according to what he considers right or wrong, and I do not see why we should compel a man to vote.

Mr. FOWLER. The same argument would apply to any offence. A man may have so elastic a conscience that he would want to take money for his vote, but I suppose the hon. minister would not make the man's conscience the guide and final appeal in such a matter, nor would he relieve him from punishment because the man's conscience cleared him of offence against that particular law. As to this section being in advance of public opinion, I do not know that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) has brought forward any argument to show that. It seems to me that it is the most direct and most effective way of arriving at what the whole House professes to be anxious to arrive at—greater purity in elections.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. While it is considered very desirable that every elector should cast his vote at election time, I believe that the principle of compulsory voting is altogether undesirable. At the same time, I must call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that we manage to protect the elector who, because of conscientious scruple, does not wish to cast his vote. In Manitoba, in the preparation of the voters' list, every voter has to apply to register his name on the list, and only those whose names are registered are entitled to vote. We have a large class of people in Manitoba and also a number in the North-west who, because of conscientious scruple, will not vote. These people do not register their names, and, therefore, are not called upon to vote. Notwithstanding we attain the object in Manitoba, by the preparation of our voters' lists, of protecting those who on account of religious scruples do not wish to vote or cannot vote. But if we adopt the principle of compulsory voting we would put those people in a very awkward position, because they cannot vote.

Mr. FOWLER. This does not affect those people. If they do not want to vote they are simply struck off the list. There is no punishment inflicted upon them.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But the same circumstances do not exist in the other provinces. Those who are entitled to vote, whether they wish to do so or not, are put on the list, and if they are put on the list against their wish they would be compelled to vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice says that the exercise of voting is a privilege. It is more than that. The man who votes is a trustee, he has to exercise a trust, not only for himself, but for a great many others in the community who have no votes. They ought, therefore, to exercise it one way or the other. It is not a privilege conferred upon a person that he may exercise as he pleases ; it is a duty that he owes to the rest of the community, it is a trust with which he is clothed. He not only exercises it for himself, but he exercises it for others in the community who have no vote. The franchise may be a limited one. There is a certain class of females in the community who have no votes ; he has to exercise that trust for them, and why should he not be forced to exercise it ? If, when he comes to the poll, he finds there is no difference between the two parties or between the two candidates, if he has no choice between them, he may put in a blank ballot. But surely it is his duty when he is entrusted with the franchise, not only for himself, but for others, to exercise that franchise.

Mr. FRASER. He is acting like a hypocrite if he puts in a blank ballot.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No such a thing. There may be no difference between the two candidates. But there is a better plan than that. The Minister of Finance, in speaking upon this Bill, drew attention to the prevalence of corrupt practices in this country. We want to do away with those corrupt practices. One of the chief modes of exercising corrupt practices is the expenditure of money to get parties to vote, to use that trust with which the community have entrusted them—not the exercise of a privilege, as the Minister of Justice says, but the fulfilment of a duty. We want to bring them to the polls, and in order to do that, what is the best plan ? I have thought over the subject for the last twenty years. I have been opposed to the principle which has been advocated in this House again and again in favour of compulsory voting, but I have come to the conclusion that there are only two methods of doing away with corruption, of doing away with the frauds that are practiced in elections, and which are too prevalent at the present day, and those two modes are compulsory voting and open voting.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Open voting is all right.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am in favour of open voting. I am in favour of compelling a man who has a trust to exercise it one way or the other in favour of one candidate or the other ; and if he has no choice between them, let him go to the polls and declare, by putting in a blank ballot, that neither of the candidates are satisfactory to him.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a purely academic question to discuss whether the franchise is a right or a privilege. Whether it be a right or a privilege it can be exercised in two ways, by abstention as well as by casting a vote. The system of government which we enjoy, and which we all recognize is the very best that can be devised by man for the government of man, is the party system. It is impossible to carry on the government of the country except by party organizations. What has been our universal experience ? We know it happens sometimes that a man is not satisfied with the conduct of the party which he has usually supported ; still he has no confidence in the other party. His conscience will not allow him to go with his own party, because he is not satisfied with certain acts they have committed ; he wants to mark his disapproval, he has a right to mark his disapproval, of those acts, and the best and most effective method by which he can do so is to refuse to vote. There is not a gentleman in this House who has not seen examples of that kind. A party candidate cannot bring to the polls to support him some members of his own party because they think their party has been guilty of some action of which they disapprove, which was not in line with the general policy of that party. Under such circumstances may not one, or three, or four, or twenty, of the most respectable citizens in a community openly mark their dissent from their own party by abstaining from voting ? They have a right to say, we will not vote for you, neither can we vote for the other side, for we do not believe in them ; therefore, we do not propose to vote at all on this occasion. Now is that not a legitimate manner of exercising the right of franchise? Is that not one of the highest, most moral and most effective methods of asserting his independence under the circumstances ? More than that, it has been found to be effective upon every occasion that it has been exercised. Under such circumstances you cannot say that you will compel a man to give his vote, compel him to commit a hypocritical action, in going to the polls and casting a blank ballot. I believe that under the circumstances a man has a right to say : I will not vote on this occasion, I say so openly and above-board, I will not vote, neither will I vote for the other side, because I do not believe in their policy ; therefore, I will stay at home. I appeal to the conscience of every man opposite, I appeal particularly to the conscience of my hon. friend from King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), who has taken a warm part in the discussion of this question, I appeal to him whether he thinks it is right to force a man to vote under these circumstances. True it is that if we allow this privilege of abstention we may not reach a certain class of electors who want to be bribed. Well, let me say that so far as my experience goes—I will not speak of cities of which I have not much experience—but so far as the rural part of the community is concerned the number of electors who are accessible to bribes is very small, is infinitesimal. You will always find a certain proportion of the electors who are ready to take bribes, but the great mass of the electors vote according to their conscience, according to their sense of duty, according to their usual party affiliations. Of course, there are exceptions, there are always a certain number who will wait to the last moment to vote. We have the five o'clock man, we have the four and a half o'clock man, who will hold back his vote to the last moment, waiting for the highest bidder. If you were to have compulsory voting, and this class of men had to go to the polls, do you think they would be any the less ready to take a bribe ? They would take it a little earlier, that is all. They would not wait for the highest bidder, but they would take the first one that offered. For my part, I think the method we have at present is the best and the most manly that we can devise.

Mr. FOWLER. I agree with what the right hon. gentleman has said as to the small number of persons in rural constituencies who can be approached by the briber, but unfortunately there are enough of them in most of the constituencies to make the difference between victory and defeat. They hold the balance of power. There are honest men in both parties, and they are the great mass. The very great mass of the electorate, I believe, are honest voters, who cannot be approached in that way. But unfortunately there are a number in almost every constituency that can be handled, and when they all go one way, or the majority of them go one way, that way is apt to be the way that decides the election. That is the class we want to get at. Now the difficulty with the argument of the Premier is that he does not seem to perceive the principle which I think is the true principle, that the right to vote is a trust. As the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has pointed out, it is not only a trust for himself, but for others who are not voters, for minors and for females who have not the franchise. No trustee can exercise a trust by abstaining from fulfilling its terms; that is entirely contrary to the doctrine of trusts. What right has any man to decide at a mere whim of his own whether he shall exercise his trust or not? We have in this country the system of party government, and the voter has the right to select from either one of these parties, but I cannot agree with the doctrine laid down by the Prime Minister that an abstention from voting is an exercise of the trust vested in the elector.

Mr. EMMERSON. Elections are frequently held on Saturday. There is a large body of Christians in the maritime provinces, and particularly in the county of Albert, which I represented for a number of years in the local house, who, when elections are held on Saturday, absolutely refuse to vote, owing to religious scruples. These are the Adventists, who are to be found in large numbers in Albert and in Carleton and a great many other counties throughout New Brunswick. This is a country of religious liberty, and however much we may disagree with their views they are entitled to recognition, they are entitled to liberty of conscience, and it seems to me that it would be manifestly unfair if we were to impose upon these people penalties for not voting.

Mr. FOWLER. Why could this difficulty not be obviated by not holding elections on Saturday?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would be simply absurd.

Mr. FOWLER. Thursday would do as well.

Mr. EMMERSON. Elections may be held on Saturday; there is no statute preventing elections being held on that day, and in selecting a day these matters are not always borne in mind. It may be more convenient, in fact it frequently is more convenient, in the interests of the lumbermen, especially in New Brunswick, to hold elections on Saturday, because on other days they are in the woods and are unable to get out until Saturday. The fishermen also are away all week, but come home on Saturday in time to vote and are able to spend Sunday at home.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) read section 2, which gives the judge power to excuse a man for his non-voting? The reason advanced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) would be an excellent reason, and the judge would excuse him.

Mr. EMMERSON. I recognize what is in the law as well as does my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler), but I recognize also that it would be a manifest injustice to impose on each of these men the duty of appearing before the judge, with the expense it would involve and the unfair position in which you place him by compelling him to go to a judge and make excuses for the exercise of his religious scruples. Such a law would be unfair in every respect, and not in accord with the constitutional rights we enjoy in this Dominion.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville.) (Translation). I fear, Mr. Speaker, that in discussing this question in the manner we are doing now, we are somewhat losing too much sight of the real interests of the country. It should not be forgotten that electors who abstain from voting because there is no law to compel them to do so, are not a desirable class of voters. Considered in that light, the question is an easy one to solve. To my mind, voters who do not think it worth while to go to the polling booth are not, as a rule, enlightened people, well informed as regards the matters upon which they are expected to express an opinion, or else they are not honest people. Now, while the present system may not give the best results as regards the number of votes registered, it ensures, on the other hand, better quality. What we lose in numbers is made up by the better quality. I believe that the general interests of the country would be better served by those painstaking and honest voters who go to the polling booth of their own free will, than they could possibly be by those ignorant or dishonest voters whom it is the purpose to compel to vote under penalty of law. What would be the value of a popular verdict with a majority of voters lacking in education or honesty, a sort of compulsory universal suffrage? By means of the system in force to-day what we lose in numbers we make up in quality.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It seems to me that this House has forgotten the premises on which we started to frame this election Act. The question of drafting an Act of this kind was submitted to a committee on the advice of the Minister of Finance. In recommending this course to the House the hon. the Minister of Finance stated that unfortunately corrupt practices prevailed extensively throughout the community, and he invited all parties in the House to join together for the purpose of doing away with such practices; that was the premise upon which we started. If the premise is not correct, if, as the right hon. gentleman who leads the House stated, corrupt practices do not extensively prevail, especially in rural districts, what was the object of the statement of the hon. the Finance Minister, or why was the Bill introduced? The very suggestion which we are now considering was made by the hon. Minister of Finance to do away with corrupt practices. He said that perhaps one of the most effective means of doing away with such practices was compulsory voting. We agree with him and we have joined with the government for the purpose of drafting a Bill to the best of our ability and of presenting an acceptable Bill to the House. If these practices prevail in the community, as the hon. Minister of Finance states, and as I believe they do, I am with him in stating that one of the most effective means of preventing these practices is compulsory voting, and I believe, as I stated before, that the committee should have gone a step further and recommended open voting. If a man is bribed, you can then ascertain that fact, because you know what his convictions were up to the moment of his voting. If he votes contrary to what he has been stating and talking in the past you become suspicious. Open voting is an effective means of bringing corruption and bribery home to the individual. It would also avoid the enormous expense to which every one of us is put in bringing to the polls those whom the people of the country entrusted with a trust, and who ought to be there without our having to expend money to bring them there. Most of the corrupt practices that are committed are not in the form of direct bribery of a voter, but in the expenditure of money to convey him to the polls to exercise his trust. And why should he not exercise it? As my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) says, it is a trust which the voter exercises for a number of persons in the community. If it is a trust he ought to exercise it in some manner or give an excuse for not exercising it, just as any other person invested with the trust would have to do. For these reasons, I think the Minister of Justice and the government ought to support the Bill or show some other means of accomplishing the same purpose of doing away with these corrupt practices which the Finance Minister stated extensively prevail in a community, and to prevent which he suggested this conference between the two parties. Surely these practices have not ceased in the community since his statement. And why was there not an agreement in the statements of the Finance Minister and of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government? Why did not the Prime Minister say that the Finance Minister was mistaken, and that it was his experience that corrupt practices did not prevail extensively in Canada? We took it as voicing the opinion, not only of the government, but of the members on that side of the House, that there should be an agreement between both parties that an end should be put to the practices which every one of us knows extensively prevail in the community. If this is not a remedy, it is for the government to suggest one. What remedy do the government propose for these corrupt practices if they do not accept the recommendation of the committee? Let them do something to prevent these corrupt practices, the existence of which is notorious.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If these corrupt practices to which the hon. gentleman has referred really exist in the community, I venture to suggest that this proposal is no remedy at all for that evil. It is not a remedy for an existing evil to substitute another evil in its place, and I would consider it a very great evil indeed to enact any legislation that would have the effect of invading in any respect the conscientious convictions of any element in this community. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says that the evil exists, in the fact that men are paid to keep away from the polls.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For bringing them to the polls.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. And he suggests as a remedy for that evil that men should be forced to go to the polls.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In what respect is that a remedy? If a man is paid not to go to the poll, he may be forced to come to the poll under this Bill, and when he goes there he can deposit his blank ballot, or he can spoil the ballot. You might know that he had gone to the poll, and so far had given you consideration for the price you have given; but if he spoiled his ballot or did not mark it, he would not have voted all the same. Whether he stays away and does not vote, or whether he goes to the poll and deposits a blank ballot, he has not voted in either case. In what respect then is this compulsory voting a remedy. I maintain that this proposal is in advance of public opinion in this country. This is not the only country where constitutional freedom exists and where the people have the right of franchise; but of all other countries, only in Belgium does compulsory voting exist. Why have they not adopted it in England, why have they not adopted it in the United States, why have they not adopted it in any of these countries where a free franchise exists. I contend that this is no remedy for the evil.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What remedy do you suggest ?

Mr. MONET. Good example ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We followed the example of the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Educate the public up to understand the franchise and the privilege of the franchise ; allow the education that is going on now to continue for a few years more, and then you will have a remedy. The whole world knows that the corruption that was so rampant years ago is fast disappearing. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) knows that his friends on that side of the House are no more unanimous than we are on this subject; of that we have had evidence this morning. This is not a party question ; it is a question on which men are free to express their opinions, independently altogether of party considerations. I said that we were proceeding on a wrong principle ; we are proceeding on the principle that the franchise is a duty, when it is nothing of the sort. No one of the books that discuss this question look on it in any such light.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Every one of them.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Every one of them is a vague statement, but I have some of them here.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let the hon. gentleman bear with me a moment. My hon. friend must not make a broad statement as to 'every one of them,' and then run away from the answer. Woolsey, on 'Political Science' (page 388, vol. 1, pars. 5 to 127), discusses this question, and he says :

> Voting is a privilege, it involves for the most part a duty ; to enforce it by penalty would not comport with the nature of a privilege.

I also refer the hon. gentleman to the 'Forum,' vol. 14, page 176 : 'Venal Voting; Methods and Remedies,' where we find the same principle; and also to Leckny on 'Democracy and Liberty,' vol. 1, page 226, where we find the same principle laid down. In any event, independently altogether of considerations of political ethics, I say that it is an infringement of the principle of personal liberty to enact compulsory voting, and on that ground I oppose it.

Mr. FOWLER. If Mr. Woolsey or any other man says that it does not comport with a duty to enforce it by a penalty, he is talking utter rot and utter nonsense.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOWLER. He is talking something that is against the views accepted by the whole world.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) ought not to make rash statements of that sort. Woolsey did not say it was a duty; he said it was a privilege.

Mr. FOWLER. If the minister will read the quotation again, he will find that Woolsey says : It is a privilege which carries with it a duty. These are the words of Dr. Woolsey, as the minister read them, and Woolsey goes further, according to the quotation read and says : that to enforce a duty——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He does not say anything of the sort ; he says : to enforce a privilege.

Mr. FOWLER. Then read it again, please.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) ought not to be too severe on Mr. Woolsey. This is what he says :

> To enforce it by penalty would not comport with the nature of a privilege.

And he says :

> That voting is a privilege which involves for the most part a duty.

Mr. FOWLER. That is just exactly what I said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, I said that it was a privilege which involved a duty, and the absurdity of Woolsey's contention is that it was wrong to enforce a duty because a privilege was involved in it. The very foundation of a franchise is that it is a duty as well as a privilege. All cannot exercise the franchise, but some must, and therefore it is the privilege of those who are selected to exercise it. Therefore, some enjoy the privilege of the franchise, but coupled with that privilege is the highest duty of citizenship, which is to exercise that privilege, and to exercise it properly and conscientiously. Therefore, a man has not the natural right to the franchise, but enjoying that privilege, being selected to exercise the franchise, not only for himself but for all others in the community who have not the right of the franchise, it carries with it the highest duty to the state, viz.: that he shall actually exercise it, not abstain from exercising it according to his own will, but that he shall be absolutely compelled to exercise it. No matter what party he votes for, he is fully and completely bound to discharge that duty which he owes to the state. As the Minister of Justice has said :

this is not a party question. Members on both sides of the House are divided in opinion as to the wisdom of the amendment. The special committee was divided on this particular question; some of us felt that while this proposal did not perhaps fully answer the purpose we were striving for, yet it would go some way in that direction, and others of the committee thought that it would be found unworkable. That seems to be the idea which prevails in this Committee of the Whole—the difference being that the majority here are apparently opposed to it, while the majority in the special committee were in favour of it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. How did you divide?

Mr. FOWLER. I think there was a majority of one; we didn't have any very serious dispute over it. At the same time, while I am of opinion that this will be beneficial in its working, yet I am not so anxious about it that I would detain the House at this very late stage of the session in advocating at length this principle.

Mr. GALLIHER. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that whatever duty may be involved in this privilege is a moral duty and that it is repugnant to all principles of law to enforce by a penalty a moral obligation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Minister of Justice has just stated that it appertains to the functions of government to educate the public mind to the value of their privileges in this connection. I cannot conceive of any better or more forcible method of educating the public mind to their great privilege in the use of the franchise than the legislation embodied in this Bill. It cannot be a penalty to deprive any man of a right which he possesses, simply because he refuses to exercise that right. The man who refuses to exercise the right to vote, practically disfranchises himself by his own free act. It has been argued that neither Great Britain nor the United States have adopted legislation of this kind. Are we always, as a young, virile nation, to go in leading strings? Are we never to make a beginning, to lead the world in anything? I look forward to the time when Canada will be one of the leading nations of the world, when it will be leading the thought of the world, in the direction of the greater progress and higher civilization than has ever before been realized; and I look upon this measure as a step in the right direction.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). In order to avoid corrupt practices at an election, all we have to do is to pass a law making it a criminal offence to contribute one cent towards an election fund. If there were no money there would be no bribery. Consequently all you have to do is to make it so that no man shall have a fund to purchase votes or to keep men from voting. Then every man will go and vote as he pleases. We find that governments are under the control of large corporations. These corporations supply a large amount of funds —what for? For the purpose of bribing the electors, so that they may carry their point; and the government acquiesce in this, I tell you, and I tell you emphatically, it is time we put this thing down; and the only way it can be done is by making it a criminal offence to contribute towards an election fund. There would be no difficulty about compulsory voting if men did not get money to go and vote. But while we have only two parties in the state, and men have to vote for one or the other, they hesitate about voting at all, it some times happens that both parties stink in their nostrils, and they are disgusted to have to vote for them. If they had an opportunity to vote for some independent man of their own feelings and sympathies, they would not need to be urged to vote. We had better start right now. Let the Minister of Justice insert a clause in this Bill that any man who contributes a dollar to an election fund shall get six months in jail and a fine of $1,000. With regard to what my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says about going back to the old system of open voting I think that is played out. It would not do at all in this country. We must have a ballot, not to protect me or the hon. member for South Lanark, because we do not care who knows how we vote. But there are thousands of men in this country whose bread and butter depend on their employer not knowing how they vote, and we must protect these men. With regard to registration, if you make it compulsory on every man to go to a notary public or a registrar and register his name, his age and his place of residence, just as you compel him to register the birth of his child, the death of his father or a marriage ceremony, there will be nothing arbitrary about it. Then make it penal if he does not vote; at least disfranchise him for the next election which is penalty enough. Then, make it a penal offence for any man to contribute money to an election fund. I could give you some of my experience.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Give it.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). It is not necessary. I tell you it is sadder than anything you can think of at the time of an election to see thousands of dollars brought into a constituency to bribe the electors. Everybody knows it is done, and why don't you try to stop it? You can do it by preventing the fund being created.

Mr. BARKER. As a member of the committee to which this Bill was referred, I have been very much struck by the somewhat remarkable change in the temper with which the measure was received when first introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and that with which it is received to-day. At that time a good deal was made by the hon. member for North Norfolk of the evil, of which we all hear so much during election times, of men holding back their votes until the last minute, in the desire to sell them to the highest bidder. I do not recollect that any hon. gentleman on either side of the House at that time disputed the existence of that evil. It seemed to be generally assented to that such an evil existed, that it was a serious one, and that if possible some remedy should be found for it. To-day we find quite a different attitude taken towards it especially by hon. gentlemen opposite. We have one gentleman who feels that this clause of the Bill would do a great injustice, because it happened in one province of this Dominion that an election was held upon a Saturday, and the Adventists refused to vote on that day. Well, the hon. gentleman supports that by saying that it may be convenient in that province to hold elections upon a Saturday. I am under the impression that the elections are held throughout the Dominion on the same day, and I think it would not be convenient for all the rest of the Dominion to hold the election upon a Saturday, and therefore it is a very remote possibility indeed that we shall ever have one election for the Dominion held upon a Saturday, or that the Adventists will suffer on that account. Another hon. gentleman minimizes the number of people who hold back for the purpose of selling their votes. He thinks there are very few, and points out that the great mass of the people are honest and give their votes honestly. I do not dispute that; but I think every gentleman in this House will admit that there are quite sufficient of those who hold back their votes to overbalance the majority in almost every constituency of the Dominion. I do not refer to the cases where very large majorities are obtained. But in the large mass of cases there is a comparatively small majority, and I think it is the general experience that a sufficient number of people hold back until nearly five o'clock to turn that majority in the one direction or the other. Then another great objection which is urged to the clause is that it is an outrage to compel a man to vote against his convictions. For instance, a man might be opposed to both candidates, and it would be wrong to punish him because he did not vote for either. But there is nothing to prevent such a man from depositing a blank ballot. The hon. the Minister of Justice tells us that this is an infringement upon civil liberty. But where is the harm of saying to a man who refuses to turn out and vote or even deposit a blank ballot, that if he does not perform that duty which he owes to the public he shall be left off the list for a certain number of years? Then we had a learned discussion as to whether the right to vote was a mere privilege or a trust or a duty. I doubt whether any one will dispute that it is a duty incumbent on every man, who is protected in his civil rights by society and the laws of the land, to vote for the proper men to represent the people in parliament; and I say if he will not perform that obligation, which he owes to society, the right should be taken from him unless he has some reasonable excuse for not exercising it. While I do not believe it possible to provide a complete remedy, this will provide a remedy to some extent and ought to be given at least a trial.

Mr. BELCOURT. No doubt the evil of bribery and corruption is more or less prevalent in Canada, though possibly it may be less prevalent in the rural parts than in the city constituencies, and we would no doubt all welcome a substantial and effective remedy. I do not believe, however, that the remedy proposed by section A is a remedy at all. In my opinion we ought only to impose penalties when dealing with offences per se, things which are of themselves criminal, immoral, unjust or dishonest, and we should not impose a penalty for the mere omission to perform a duty, however necessary the performance of that duty may be. The legislation now proposed is on a line with that kind of legislation by which you try to make people sober, temperate, religious, patriotic, or honest, by Act of parliament. The hon. member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Fowler), when dealing with the objection that there is quite a number of people, if we are to believe the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), who have conscientious scruples against voting, compared the refusal to vote to the taking of a bribe. But there is a very great difference between the two. The taking of a bribe is an offence against honesty and conscience and quite another matter from the non-performance of a duty, especially when there are conscientious scruples against its performance. Parliament has never questioned the right or the propriety of proposing penalties for the taking of a bribe, but I do not think that even the most ardent advocate of compulsory voting ever proposed that a man should be sent to jail for not going to the polls. My idea of the only solution is the one indicated by the hon. the Minister of Justice, and that is education. The only way in which you can awaken the public conscience to the performance of a duty is to enlighten that conscience, and you can only do that by constantly putting before the electors the great importance and the sacred obligations of casting their ballot at election time. But, if you deprive a man for any number of years of his franchise because at any election he has not cast his vote, you might as well make a law providing that any one who has been asked to become a candidate for parliament shall not have the privilege of refusing, under penalty of being debarred during a term of years from coming forward as a candidate. If a man is to be punished for not casting his vote, he should equally be punished for refusing to become a candidate. Then the remedy which section 9a provides is a very peculiar remedy. You declare that it is an offence not to vote, and in order to punish the man who has committed that offence, you compel him to go on committing it during six years longer. That seems to me very contradictory. It is a very poor way of curing one to compel him to remain in his offence for another six years.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ? Does the hon. gentleman think the law against crime does not prevent crime ?

Mr. BELCOURT. You have a law against bribery, and my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson)——

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). We want to make that law strong.

Mr. BELCOURT. But I am pointing out that the measure proposed will not have that effect, that it is not a remedy for the evil, the existence of which we all admit. If my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) has a remedy, let us have it.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I have given you my remedy.

Mr. BELCOURT. I repeat that, in my opinion, the solution of this question is education. And I think it devolves upon all of us who are engaged in public affairs constantly to educate the people on the subject. During election time particularly, every member of this House should do what he can to make the people appreciate the franchise and the sacred obligations devolving upon those who enjoy it. If we do our duty in this regard, we shall prevent a great deal of the bribery that now prevails, at any rate we shall do a great deal more than by a provision of this kind which, it seems to me, means absolutely nothing.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Belcourt) says it is a very strange thing to provide that, because a man refuses to vote or abstains from voting you should take away from him the privilege of voting and so continue him in his crime. If we accept the doctrine, which is the doctrine of the schools, that the vote is a privilege and a duty, and that the voter is a trustee not only for himself but for all the people, the Bill is logical and perfectly proper. For, if a trustee neglects to perform his trust what do you do ? Do you continue him in his trust ? No, you remove him. The answer to the hon. gentleman's argument is so patent that I wonder it did not strike him.

Mr. SCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) allow me to ask him a question ? Is the voter a trustee for any one except himself ?

Mr. BELCOURT.

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly. The body of voters are trustees for all the rest of the community. The voting privilege is not for the voters themselves alone, but for all the non-voters in the community as well. That is the true principle, that is the only principle that is contended for by any person. Any one who has given any study to the subject will not attempt to deny that the voter is a trustee for the non-voters. So, the committee were perfectly logical in providing to have the trustee removed for a portion of the time because of his——

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). Will my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) permit me ? He removes a trustee. But who is to replace the trustee during these six years ? If nobody replaces him the parties are abandoned and their interests are no more represented.

Mr. FOWLER. He is not sole trustee.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). The mandate of the trustee is revoked. Who, then is to take his place ?

Mr. FOWLER. He is not the sole trustee; there are all the other voters. Why, the principle is recognized every day. If you have three trustees and one of them defaults, will not he be removed from the trust ? And if he is removed does it necessarily follow that another will be put in his place ? Suppose there are three executors; one dies and the other two continue in their places; a second dies and one remains as sole executor.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). I suppose the voter represents the interests of his family. If he is removed, who is to represent them ?

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend (Mr. Demers) loses the point entirely. The voter is the trustee not for his particular family or friends, but he is the joint trustee, with all the other voters in the community, for the community.

Mr. MONET. What about different parties then ?

Mr. FOWLER. The trustee has the right to exercise his trust as seems to him best, of course. My hon. friend betrays an absolute ignorance of the whole subject by his question.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the legal gentlemen in the House discussing this question mainly from a legal standpoint. I thought that, perhaps, I might contribute a little from the layman's standpoint. I think there is no hon. member in this House who would approach any measure designed to remove from the community the slur that is cast upon it, through the existence of bribery in any other spirit than that of regard for the public interest. And it is in that spirit that I approach the discussion of this measure. The trend of legislation in the province of Ontario, from which I come, has been in the direction of extending the franchise. I well remember when no one could vote for a member of the House of Commons unless he had what is called a stake in the community. Now, we have municipal voters who vote on property only, we have also the manhood franchise, which extends the suffrage practically to everyone over twenty-one years of age who is a British subject. This has been done during a series of years, and during that time there have been great struggles for the extension of the franchise. It has come to this perfection; and now it is sought by this Bill, to restrict the franchise to a certain extent. I am sure that every hon. gentleman here would hail with gladness legislation wisely framed to prevent bribery and ensure a free and fair expression of public opinion. But, as against this proposal of compulsory voting, we have heard of people who have conscientious scruples against voting. These scruples may arise in the course of one election to prevent a man from voting, while, in the next election, the difficulty being removed, he would feel himself free to vote. The Prime Minister gave one case in illustration. I have one in mind that came within my own experience some years ago. I was working in a certain election, and, about an hour before the closing of the poll, it was reported to me that a certain prominent Liberal had not voted. I went to him to ask his reason for remaining away from the polls. He said to me: 'William, I cannot vote in this election.' He had been my school teacher and was an old and very highly respected member of the community, a man concerning whom nobody would for a moment think that any illicit means had been used to keep him from the polls. I asked his reasons for not voting, and he said: 'On one question I cannot agree with the party——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Temperance.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). No, not temperance. 'On one question I cannot agree with the party, and for that reason I cannot see my way to vote in this election.' That man had a conscientious scruple about using his franchise in that particular election. Surely under these circumstances, you would not disfranchise a man for six years. For my part I would not think of it. This is only one instance, and I think every member will recall similar instances in his own experience. I agree with the Minister of Justice that this legislation is rather in advance of public opinion, and the best thing would be to drop it from the Bill. While there may be some things to commend it—and I must say that some of the things that have been repeated here in its support commend themselves to my judgment—still, I think public opinion is not ready for this legislation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Inasmuch as the Finance Minister took a strong stand on the other side, and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) also, I think the House is entitled to know why both of these gentlemen are absent.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The motion is that this clause do stand as part of the Bill.

Motion negatived.

On section 3,

Mr. EMMERSON. There are no great objections to this section from the standpoint of the province of New Brunswick, but I can understand that there are objections from some of the other provinces. There would be technical objections as well. I think it may be that where there are constituencies consisting of two counties, it would be necessary to explain as to which sheriff or registrar should be selected.

Section not agreed to.

On section 6,

6. Section 21 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'lists' in the third line thereof the words 'and of an abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.'

2. Section 26 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'proclamation' in the first line thereof the words 'and the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.'

3. Paragraph (f) of subsection 1 of section 41 of the said Act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:—

'(f.) furnish each deputy returning officer with at least ten copies of printed directions in the form L, for the guidance of voters in voting, and at least ten copies of the abstract of the printed directions and abstract the deputy returning officer shall, before or at the opening of the poll, on the day of polling, cause to be posted up in some conspicuous places outside of the polling stations, and also in each compartment of the polling station.'

4. The following section is inserted immediately after section 26 of the said Act:—

26a. Within the shortest possible time after the reception of the writ, the returning officer shall send by mail to each elector upon the voters' list a copy of the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act, which abstract shall be carried in the mails post free; and in the province of Prince Edward Island the returning officer shall send a sufficient number of copies of the said abstract to each postmaster within the electoral district and it shall be the duty of each postmaster to deliver a copy to each elector to whom any mail matter is delivered.

2. Any postmaster who wilfully neglects or refuses promptly to deliver to the electors any such abstracts shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and costs to any person who sues therefor: Provided however that this penalty shall not be imposed more than once for each election at which such neglect takes place.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I move that paragraph 4 of section 6 be struck out. I have consulted the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and the King's Printer, and they both tell me that it is absolutely impossible to apply that section, that it would be out of the question for the returning officer to send to all the electors on the electoral list a copy of these offences, or an abstract of the same. There are districts in which there are eight, or ten, or twenty thousand electors, and to attempt to do such a thing would take up all the time the returning officer has at his disposal.

Mr. FOWLER. He does not do this work by himself, he has a clerk to do it.

Mr. BARKER. I think subclause (f) should be struck out.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think subclause (f) is a useful clause, and it would be an improvement on the Bill if we were to adopt it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think there is any need for furnishing each deputy returning officer with ten copies of the printed directions as clause (f) requires him to do. What is the use of sending each deputy returning officer ten copies ? I think the thing is absurd, and we ought to strike out the whole clause. I move in amendment that the whole clause be struck out.

Mr. FOWLER. The idea of sending ten copies was that they might be well circulated throughout the polling district.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think this is exceedingly useful for the purpose of bringing to the notice of the electors when they go to the polls for the purpose of registering their votes, the penalties to which they are subjected, and also the general requirements of the election law. I think it is very desirable.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think the Minister of Justice is perfectly right. There should be some instructions to guide the voters when they go to the polls.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Campbell) negatived.

Amendment (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I drew the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that I thought there was something wrong in the wording of this first amendment. I would ask the Minister of Justice if he has ascertained how these words would fit in with the statute as it now exists ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Would the hon. gentleman repeat the objection he made the other day ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not before me the Act we are amending, but my recollection is that I found some error in the drafting of this Bill, in fact it was admitted by the Minister of Finance the other day when we had this Bill up. The section we are amending reads :

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Immediately after the issue of the writ of election the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of the voters' list.

Now after that we are to add :

And an abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.

The section would then read thus :

A sufficient number of copies of the voters' list and of an abstract of offences and penalties under this Act if there are any.

Now it looked to me as if the words 'if there be any' certainly applied not to the voters' list but to the abstract of offences.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think that is intended to apply to the province of Prince Edward Island, where they do not have voters' lists and of course the clerk of the Crown in Chancery could not furnish the deputy returning officer with the voters' list.

Mr. BARKER. The amendment might come in the fourth line of section 21 after the word 'Act' so that it would read :

Immediately after the issue of the writ of election the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of the voters' list, if there are any, one copy of this Act and of the abstract of offences and penalties under this Act and of such instructions, and so on.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I moved in amendment that section 6 be struck out and I would like to know what has become of the motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) must have been speaking to some motion. The members of the committee will remember that I put Mr. Campbell's motion that the whole of section 6 be struck out and that motion was lost.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the clause as amended be struck out.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman surely does not require me to tell him two or three times that when a motion is made to strike out an amendment and the committee reject it he cannot repeat the same motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) moved that part of section 21 of clause 6 be struck out and in amendment to that I move that the whole section as amended be struck out. It is not the same motion as I made before, because the clause has been amended.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In my opinion it is substantially the same thing. The committee have accepted these words proposed by Mr. Barker. They have rejected your amendment, you are asking that the committee shall reverse the decision they arrived at a few moments ago, which is contrary to the rules of order.

On section 7,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The effect of this amendment is to make a distinction between officials who commit offences and the ordinary voter. The penalty for officials is most severe. It is a very severe penalty and it may make it difficult to get men to accept the office, but if a man does accept, I suppose that no penalty is too severe which will keep him straight.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think there will be any difficulty in getting good men to take the office. I believe in the principle that officials who commit offences should be more severely punished than others.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a provision here which carries with it disfranchisement for a period of seven years. I am rather opposed to the idea of disfranchising people unless the offence is very serious ; but it is for the committee to decide.

Mr. CLANCY. I have known men to have voted twice who had absolutely no idea they were committing an offence against the law. To disfranchise a person who commits an offence unwittingly might be too severe a penalty.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). A clause should be added to this in the following words :

The deputy returning officer shall be a resident of the polling division in which an election takes place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Impossible.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). You can laugh, but if you saw the trouble about it I saw, you would not laugh.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. I agree very strongly with the Minister of Justice as to the disfranchisement penalty under this clause. We ought to be slow to impose the penalty of disfranchisement on an elector. In this section it would cover cases in which the offence would not be commensurate with the penalty. We ought not to disfranchise a citizen unless he commits an act which shows that he is absolutely unfit to exercise the franchise. Many of the offences under this Act are not of that gravity, and I would agree with the suggestion of the Minister of Justice to omit the part of the clause which provides for disfranchisement.

Mr. CLANCY. Would this apply to voters generally as well as to officials ?

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. When you make them liable to an indictable offence, I think you go far enough.

Mr. CLANCY. Not in the case of officers.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps not, but I do not think it should apply to the voters generally.

Mr. BARKER. Would the Minister of Justice state what are the offences which would bring about this penalty?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If I read the marginal notes perhaps that would be sufficient to describe them. The first offence is interfering with the voter marking his ballot paper by the candidate, officer, clerk, agent or other person. The second provision is that the ballot paper when given to the voters is not to be shown to any one for the purpose of giving information as to the manner in which he has voted, nor is it to be shown by the deputy returning officer or any person, so that those present may know how the voter has voted.

Mr. COCHRANE. We have had some considerable difficulty over this in my riding, and this is a good time to know what the law is. If I mark my ballot and show the returning officer the initials on the ballot paper, who has the right to deposit that ballot in the box; is it the voter or the deputy returning officer ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The deputy returning officer.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are you sure ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not, but I will look it up.

Mr. FRASER. It is the universal custom that after the officer sees his initials, he puts the paper in the box.

Mr. COCHRANE. I don't want the custom; I want the law. The ballot belongs to the elector, and the officials should have nothing to do with it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am never sure of anything until I have seen the text, and I find now that I was right. It is the deputy returning officer who should place the ballot in the box. Then, in reference to the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Barker), paragraph 4 provides for the punishment of those who induce the voter to display his ballot paper. Any one who has arranged with the voter that when he comes to hand his ballot paper over to the deputy returning officer, or arranges that an elector shall show how he has marked his paper, is liable to the penalty provided for here. Cases have come to my knowledge in the election courts in which, by the aid of a window in the secret chamber where the ballot is marked, the voter puts his ballot on the glass so that a person outside may see how he has voted.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). When we were asking the minister to amend this Bill, I suggested that each scrutineer or agent of a candidate should be allowed to place his initials or any distinguishing mark on the counterfoil, so that when the ballot was brought back by the voter each officer could see that it was the ballot which had been given to him.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a stamp put on the back of the ballot.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That does not amount to a hill of beans. It is duplicated in many different ways, as the minister knows. I put that suggestion in writing at the time. I do not know whether it was brought before the committee or not.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think section 5 is absolutely without effect, because there is no number on our ballot paper after the counterfoil has been detached. This has probably been adopted from the Ontario Act.

Mr. BARKER. All these are questions affecting the secrecy of the ballot, and any person who interferes with that ought to receive all the punishment provided for here.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to follow the Minister of Justice in objecting to the penalty of disfranchisement. Provision is made for the punishment of a person who commits the offence, under the ordinary procedure of the court. The punishment which deprives the individual of his vote for seven years does not leave any latitude in regard to the nature of the offence. It is a minimum punishment, and it seems to me that if we consider that the offence is subject to a lighter or a heavier punishment, in the discretion of the court, it is hardly logical to make a minimum punishment of seven years' disfranchisement. For my own part, I object altogether to disfranchising the individual for any except the most grave reasons. If his punishment can be achieved by any other means, I would say certainly do not disfranchise him.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Suppose a voter marks his ballot and, without any intention of doing wrong, takes it without folding it and hands it to the returning officer to put it in the box. Under this clause he would be disfranchised for seven years without intending to do any wrong. That is done hundreds of times. The voter goes and marks his ballot paper and forgets his instructions to fold it up, and hands it to the returning officer to fold it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In a case of that kind actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea would apply, and there would be no offence.

Mr. BARKER. If what is done in that way were made legal, there would be no good in the Bill at all; any sort of fraud could be committed. A man who had sold his vote could simply, as has been said, open his ballot so that everybody could see it. If the ballot is to be of any effect at all, it must be secret. If we are to fritter the whole system away by allowing men to show how they voted, we had better at once go back to open voting.

Progress reported.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House again in committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to certain railway companies.

To the Timagami Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near Sturgeon Falls in a north-westerly direction to a point on the westerly shore of Lake Timagami in the district of Nipissing, not exceeding fifty miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What railway company is that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My recollection is that the charter is a provincial one. This has to do with the development of large pulp mills in the Nipissing district.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman know whether any subsidies were given by the provincial government to this line?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. HENDERSON. How long will this road be when completed? I understand we are only giving a subsidy to the extent of fifty miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is from Sturgeon Falls, a station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Lake Timagami. It is for the purpose of opening up that district and bringing pulp wood to the large mills erected there by the Imperial Paper Company. These people recently invested a couple of million dollars in large pulp and paper mills and the government thinks this encouragement might be given them.

Mr. CLANCY. Where are the pulp mills situated?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At Sturgeon Falls on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose that it is intended that road is to extend for some considerable distance to the north of that country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The application is for fifty miles only.

Mr. CLANCY. To what distance is the road chartered?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am perfectly confident that the capitalists are putting their own money into this enterprise. They have taken over the large works, and these English people are capable of carrying out their undertaking.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this the company which had some difficulty with its agents in Canada?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was some difficulty between the local people and the English company, but that has been settled and a new company organized. A son of the late Lord Russell is one of the principal men in connection with it and other wealthy capitalists in England, and they have applied to the government to subsidize this piece of road.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the application for this subsidy was made by the solicitor of the railway company and he makes no reference whatever to these pulp mills. All he says is that this road will be a valuable aid to colonization. It does not appear that they desire particularly to aid the pulp enterprise.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Sturgeon Falls Pulp and Lumber Company own a very large tract of territory north of Sturgeon Falls and have a very extensive water-power at that place. They negotiated for a sale of their limits and powers to the Lloyds Paper Company of London, England. These negotiations culminated in a sale, but then certain difficulties arose between the two companies which were referrred to arbitration. The result of the arbitration was that the limits and the power were handed back to the Sturgeon Falls Company besides a large payment and the Lloyds went out. After the original owners came again in possession, a new company was organized, the Imperial Paper Company, which took over the limits and built a large pulp mill at Sturgeon Falls. This pulp mill was built by Peter Lyall, of Montreal. The area of territory is very large and the power is said to be one of the best powers in that part of the country. Lake Timagami is a lake on one of the branches of the Sturgeon Fallls river and at the beginning of the pulp limits. The intention is to penetrate into the pulp concession by this road for the purpose of bringing down principally pulp wood and also promoting settlement. In addition to the pulp concession, they have got a large tract of territory in fee simple. I know something about this as I acted myself as arbitrator between the companies, but with respect to this particular application I know very little.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then practically the object of granting this subsidy is to benefit a private company which has bought up the whole of the territory in that section.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not all of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not sure that we are doing wisely in aiding a private enterprise of that kind, if the general public are not going to participate in the advantages.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In that locality Mr. Booth and Mr. Lumsden and other lumbermen also own limits.

Mr. McCOOL. I may say that this railway passes through a very good agricultural country. It touches the townships of Springer, Field, Grant, Bastedo, Gibbons, Dana, MacWilliams and Pardo, every one as good land as there is in the province of Ontario. There is settlement for a distance of thirty miles along the proposed route of this railway, many of the settlers having been there a number of years. The company who are asking for this are virtually the Imperial Paper Mills Company. Hon. members will see in the Toronto 'News' a report of the starting of the mill on Thanksgiving Day. The capacity of the works is forty tons of paper a day, and they intend developing further power at Smoky Falls, about fifteen or sixteen miles above Sturgeon Falls, and to double the capacity of their mills inside of a year. I had the curiosity to inquire as to the amount of duties the company have paid in to the treasury on their machinery, and I found they had paid within the last year no less than $7,000. This was on machinery that could not be had in this country. They have as complete a paper mill as there is in America—that is the way they put it. And if hon. members will refer to the Toronto 'News' of yesterday they will see quite an item about it. There is no question about the benefit this railway will be not merely to the company but to that section of this country which is a very desirable section to open up.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There were two parties here during part of the session advocating different lines of road in this section. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCool) tell us the merits of the rival schemes ?

Mr. McCOOL. This is another company altogether. The companies to which the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) refers were two local companies. I have here the names of a few of the parties interested in this company, and from these names it will be seen that the company is a strong one :

	Commercial Rating.
D. Sinclair, Esq., (Messrs. Tillie & Henderson)..	$2,500,000
Edward Lloyd, Esq. (Messrs. Bucknall Bros.)..	1,250,000
G. Lawson Johnston, Esq. (vice-chairman, Bovril, Limited).. ..	7,500,000
Robert Jardine, Esq. (Messrs. Ker, Boulton & Co.)..	2,500,000
R. H. Hedderwick, Esq. (Messrs. Hedderwick & Schultz)..	500,000
J. C. Bayldon, Esq. (Messrs. J. C. Bayldon & Co.)..	1,250,000
D. W. Bell, Esq..	1,500,000
J. G. Paterson, Esq. (Messrs. Paterson, Laing & Bruce)..	1,250,000
Sir Jas. Fairfax & Co..	2,500,000
M. H. Barnet, Esq..	1,250,000
F. Lazenby, Esq. (Messrs. E. Lazenby & Sons)..	2,500,000

So it will be seen that this is not a small company. They have the means behind them to carry out the enterprise, and I am sure the work will be started early next spring.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the hon. Minister of Justice said that Mr. Lloyd had dropped out of the company.

Mr. McCOOL. I think this must be another Lloyd. This is Mr. Lloyd, of Messrs. Bucknall Bros.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to oppose this subsidy, but merely to say that I do not take much stock in the item one sees in the papers about the time railway subsidies are about to be voted or charters given, as showing the merits of the schemes. One who has watched these things from year to year for any length of time must come to the conclusion that if their insertion in the paper is not paid for, at least the publication is for some specific purpose, and it is not always a guarantee with reference to the company. I noticed the item in the 'News' to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will the companies who are about to receive these bonuses recoup the government at any time for the money paid to them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a clause in these resolutions which corresponds with that in existing railway subsidies to the effect that if these companies render services to the government they shall not charge for them, but that these services shall be credited on account of the subsidy. Except as we may in time—and I think it is not likely to realize very rapidly—recover a portion of that subsidy in that way, there is no provision for repayment.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. minister would say whether anything has been earned in this way, what the amount and whence it came ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give the source, but I will learn that later if the hon. gentleman desires. My hon. friend (Mr. Robinson, Elgin) will have to remember that this wise provision was put in only recently. In the former days of extravagance this was not done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, you are mistaken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have put this provision in recently and must not expect to accomplish great things in a short time. In 1902 there was received in the way of refunds of that character—I think altogether from the Post Office Department—$1,057.14 ; in 1903, $1,346 ; and for the present year up to date, $676.90. These are deductions from the Post Office subsidies.

Mr. HENDERSON. I fear the memory of the acting Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is somewhat at fault. I have a recollection that, many years ago, when the railway from Calgary to Edmonton was given a subsidy and, I think also the railway from Regina to Prince Albert, concessions of this very kind were demanded of the companies, and that the companies did recoup the government in the way that was prescribed. This policy for which he claims credit is not a new policy ; but, as in so many other cases, hon. gentlemen opposite have adopted the policy of their predecessors and now parade them as theirs, thinking that, perhaps, the memories of the people of the country are as defective as their own. I am sure that my recollection in this matter is correct, and I think the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) who was Minister of Railways and Canals at the time, will bear me out that this is an old provision adopted many years ago at a time when the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) was not in this House, and with the parliamentary history of which he may not be so familiar as with that of his own time here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) is wrong in the impression he would leave on the minds of the House. He is right in saying that in one or two cases some such provision was inserted in railway measures. But one swallow does not make a summer, and a condition inserted in ont contract does not make a whole system of railway subsidies. As applied to railway subsidies generally this principle is new, and whatever merit is in it must be credited to this government. The return is not very large, but small as it is, I am not willing to have hon. members opposite claim the credit which belongs to this side of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I have no complaint to make against either government. It is not politics that I speak of. But what I wish to say is that when the government give privileges to any class of people, railways or any other, they should see to it that they get something in return. The people expect this from the government. My hon. friend from Nipissing (Mr. McCool) stated that, in some of these townships the land is as good as in any part of Ontario. Well, if that is the case, I do not see why a company should want a bonus to build a railway or develop any other enterprise. The people are quite competent to do it. The way I feel is this : The government are quite justified in helping any new enterprise. But whenever that enterprise becomes a success they should get their money back—just the same as when a man starts his boy on a farm and helps him to put up buildings and improve the property, when that boy becomes able to lay up money and make a success, he has a right to pay the old man back some time and keep him out of the poorhouse. That is what I want these people to do with us. We are giving them money and making them rich at the expense of the taxpayers. I am glad to hear from the acting Minister of Railways that there is a provision to compel these people at some time or other to refund the money, or to do some service for the government.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, as a result of what is called the new and wise policy under which these subsidies are given, how many millions have been granted that have produced $1,000 a year to the revenues of this country ? Can the hon. gentleman give us that information ? It would be useful information now, because the hon. gentleman has laid great stress on this new, wise and progressive policy that was giving a return to the people. We had one return given to us to-day, it is alarming, but it is alarming because it is so small. Will the hon. gentleman say off-hand ? I would not care to exact too much of him. Speaking for myself, I think it is about time the hon. gentleman stopped parading the results of their new and wise policy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid that the hon. gentlemen opposite are hard to please. They ask for information, and when the information is furnished then we are accused of parading it. They complain if we try to be obliging. I am not able to give my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) the details of this large sum he asks for. If it is considered important I would be glad to get it at a later stage. I happened to have my attention drawn to this when these resolutions were being prepared, and I gave directions to ascertain what amount was received, and I feel justified in saying that these sums have been received, under the policy which has been adopted in recent legislation, in the form of interest on the subsidies. But I have not attached as much importance to it as the hon. gentleman thinks we do. If he attaches importance to it, I will get a subdivision of this large sum of money at a later stage.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think if there is any subsidy that has been proposed to this House in late years that is defensible, it is this one. While we would all appreciate any policy that would bring more direct revenue to the treasury of the country, we must not forget that in this particular case at any rate the country will derive great direct and indirect benefit from the building of this road.

Mr. CLANCY. No one is opposing it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Robinson) seems to be under the impression that we are giving away a privilege. I am not so sure that it will not become a privilege to the Dominion. It is a benefit to the Dominion when men with capital are prepared to go in and establish works, as these gentlemen have done at Sturgeon Falls, giving direct employment to at least 500 men, taking the timber from the farmers in the district, while the settlers get their land free, and get a market, and get started on their farms. That district is a good farming country. Every gentleman who has visited that section knows that there is good farming land there. We have the fact that even during the present season this company has paid $75,000 into the treasury as duties upon the machinery they have brought in, and perhaps will pay $100,000 more in duty during the coming season, to say nothing of the other business they will work up and which will contribute indirectly to the treasury. I think that the subsidies given to these companies to open up colonization roads so-called ought to meet the hearty support of this country. The great thing is to see that the subsidies are used profitably, that the work actually goes on and that we get value for it. I do not know of any grant made by this government from which we will reap greater benefit almost at once, or in the near future, from the development of the country, than from this subsidy properly applied, because it will do much to develop the resources of the country as well as to open up land now unoccupied.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it this company who are the beneficiaries of this grant ? Because the question was asked, and the acting Minister of Railways did not give us that information. It would be interesting to know whether this railway is owned and promoted, or whether this charter is owned and promoted, by this company of which so much is said, or whether it is owned by some private individual.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only gentleman who approached me, I think, was Mr. Russell, son of the late Chief Justice of England, and he said that these parties who were interested in establishing paper and pulp mills had this charter, and would undertake to build the road if they got assistance from the government.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it a Dominion or a provincial charter ?

Mr. McCOOL. I think it is a Dominion charter. The incorporators are really those men whose names I gave a few minutes ago, calling themselves the Imperial Paper Company. Their intention is to develop further power at Smoky Falls, and to increase their capacity to more than double what it is at present. Their expectation is that next year they will carry on a much larger volume of business than they are doing at the present time. It may be some satisfaction to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Robinson) to know that they expect to pay into the treasury of duties at least $75,000 on further extensions to their plant which they have in view.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The acting Minister of Railways, comparing the benefit received from the new policy of the government with that received from the old policy, says that the amount of subsidy granted during the last couple of years has yielded something like $1,000 a year. He must be entirely mistaken. There must be something received from the subsidies given to the Edmonton road, from the road down to the boundary near Lethbridge, the Galt road, and from the Hudson Bay Railway, which has been transferred to the Northern Pacific Company. The government have not only the right to have their mails carried, and the company gets credit for it on the amount they owe to the government, but the company are obliged to transport the mounted police and their supplies, and all that kind of thing. The minister must find that the revenue is greatly in excess of the amount he mentions. The only change in reference to that is that when a railway or a portion of a railway thus subsidized carries the mail, the amount to which they are entitled for carrying the mails is credited. Under the old system under which so much a year was granted to the railroads in the west, or they were given a guarantee of the amount, they not only had to carry the mails, but they had to carry all government supplies for the mounted police or military stores, and this was credited on the amount of the guarantee given by the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend has made a slight mistake. The Calgary and Edmonton road received a subsidy in land as to which I think there was no provision for a return in any shape or form. A contract was made in addition to that subsidy whereby there was an arrangement for $80,000 a year for transportation. The road was subsidized in land and as respects that land subsidy there is no compensation whatever, but the figures which I gave have reference principally to subsequent returns made under the recent legislation. I did not go into the other question at all but had reference to subsidies voted in recent years.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister should be able to get the information from his deputy who ought to remember that we gave so much a year for a number of years, independent of the land grant altogether.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, that is not a subsidy. The only thing that constitutes a subsidy then is land. That was one of the provisions of the guarantee of so much a year for a number of years by the government; we were to get our mails and government supplies carried free.

To the Bay of Quinte Railway Company for further extension of its line of railway, from the northern terminus thereof, commencing from a point at or near Actinolite, thence in a north-westerly direction via the villages of Queensborough and Bannockburn to a point in the township of Marmora or lake in Hastings county, not exceeding 20 miles in all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a further extension of the Bay of Quinte road. I suppose that every member of this committee is familiar with the experience of that road. It is opening up, I believe, some very fair agricultural districts but chiefly districts which are especially rich in mining and timber resources. This is for an extension in the county of Hastings. I believe the road is doing good work in opening up that district of the country and we have from time to time been granting them, on their application, subsidies for small extensions. This is what is known as the Rathbun system of railways in eastern Ontario.

Mr. HENDERSON. What particular industry will this give access to?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The mining industry at Actinolite and I believe that there are mines of importance of different descriptions in that section of the country. There is also a fair farming country in the district of Tweed and there is some timber as well.

To the Bruce Mines and Algoma Railway Company for a line of railway from the end of its line, as subsidized by chapter 7 of 1901, northerly, not exceeding nineteen miles; and for a line of railway from Bruce Mines to Bruce Mines junction, not exceeding two miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This line is projected from the town of Bruce Mines, from Lake Huron, north west, a distance of one hundred miles to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway near Woman River Station. It will open up a number of mines there and will furnish railway facilities to several copper mines in which about $1,000,000 have been invested by American and English capitalists. This information is furnished to us by the promoters and we have no reason to believe that it is incorrect.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is not two miles of this finished? and has it not been finished for two or three years?

Mr. DYMENT. That two miles was finished this spring.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was there not a grant from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway down to Bruce Mines to take the tailings from the mines?

Mr. DYMENT. It was not finished until last spring. There is a piece of road built from there by the old Bruce Mines Copper Company, but it has nothing to do with this at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I notice that that section of the Canadian Pacific Railway was ballasted with the debris of the mines and the tailings of the copper works there. How did they get to them unless there was a railway or branch down ? That has been done for three or four years.

Mr. DYMENT. That has been done for twelve years, but this road was not in existence then. Until about two or three years ago this ballast was hauled out there over the Canadian Pacific Railway siding.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In 1901 we subsidized twenty-one miles, of which nine miles have been already built and subsidy thereon paid to the amount of $28,800.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is this two miles from Bruce Mines that I am asking about.

Mr. DYMENT. That has only been finished this spring.

Mr. SPROULE. What company gets this? Is it the English company tnat has been spoken of ?

Mr. DYMENT. This company is principally composed of Americans, a different company altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they own copper mines in Bruce Mines or some others outside ?

Mr. DYMENT. They have nothing to do with this organization at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Then this is an independent organization, or a new one ?

Mr. DYMENT. It is a new one.

Mr. SPROULE. What interests have they that require a railway there ?

Mr. DYMENT. They have a mine at Rock Lake, about seventeen miles from Bruce Mines, and that portion of it is built. Now they want to extend that further up towards the Copper Queen mine which is about fifteen miles north of the Rock Lake Mine and on towards the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. Just for mining purposes ?

Mr. DYMENT. No, partly for colonization ; it runs through a fine tract of agricultural land and hardwood timber which is not accessible at all without a railway, and they have arranged with one company to build a mill on the line of this road for the working up of the hard wood as soon as about twelve miles more of the railway is completed. They will go to the end of the road where there is a large tract of fine hardwood timber. They have also arranged for a large furniture factory to be put in there.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has this particular part of the railway from Bruce Mines Junction anything to do with the Canadian Pacific Railway ? Is it a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. DYMENT. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It does not belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. DYMENT. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well, the Canadian Pacific Railway had a branch from their main line down to Bruce Mines.

Mr. DYMENT. Yes, but it has nothing to do with this at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This must parallel it.

Mr. DYMENT. The rails have all been taken off some years ago and the road has been abandoned.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that these two miles referred to in this resolution have already been constructed ?

Mr. DYMENT. Yes, finished this spring.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the policy of the government is to allow a company to survey and construct a line of railway, and after it has been constructed for two years to come forward and secure a subsidy from this government for that line of railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think, there have been cases where railways have been subsidized after the time of their completion. Sometimes there have been understandings in advance that the road would be aided and I think there have been cases where a subsidy has been granted after the completion of a section of road.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been an application before the government during the last two years for the subsidy which we are now voting ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Why was it left for two years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Last year there were no subsidies.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On a previous occasion the application was for the whole of this road.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In 1901 we subsidized twenty-one miles of this road.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When this reorganized company took hold of the mines they applied for assistance to build this railway. They were granted nine miles at first, which was afterwards increased to 21, and perhaps part of this is a revote.

Mr. FOWLER. If it is a revote, it should not appear here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in addition to the previous grant.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This two miles is the total length of the road.

Mr. DYMENT. Oh, no ; it is an extension of the 19 miles.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the province of Ontario has already subsidized this road, and it is important in every case that we should be informed as to what subsidy has been granted by a province. It may be that the province thought that their subsidy was sufficient to promote the construction of this road. We hear a great deal at present about provincial rights, and it may be that the province of Ontario would be jealous of our subsidizing a road which they have already aided. Can the Finance Minister tell me what subsidy was granted by the province ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The application of the company says they have received a provincial subsidy for 17 miles, but it does not state the amount.

Mr. CLANCY. We certainly should know what subsidy has been granted by the provincial government in every case. If the province gave a large subsidy in land and cash, it does not strengthen their claim to come here and ask for a further subsidy. There is a limit to the extent to which we can aid even deserving schemes, and we might be disposed to take into account the subsidy granted by a province when we are giving aid. We should not proceed in utter disregard of the fact as to whether the province has granted a subsidy or not.

Mr. DYMENT. There was no land grant given by the province. It was a subsidy of $3,000 per mile in cash for 17 miles.

Mr. FOWLER. For the same road as we are asked to subsidize here ?

Mr. DYMENT. No, for about 11 miles of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. We are groping in the dark. We are granting a subsidy to a road, 17 miles of which has been built, and built with the aid of a provincial subsidy. Why should we, in addition to the ample provision which has been made by the province of Ontario, grant another subsidy for a road that has been already constructed ? The government should see that we are not throwing away the people's money on enterprises that are already provided for by the provincial legislature. I would feel very much disposed to move that this item be not agreed to. I shall investigate it further, because I now think that it is one of those subsidies which should not receive the sanction of this committee.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid we are a little mixed with regard to this. Some years ago the company made an application for a subsidy and nine miles were subsidized. They built the road and made the property a success. Last year no subsidies were granted, but they went ahead and nearly completed 17 miles, and the total subsidy will be for 30 miles of road through that important section of the country. They have established their works successfully, and are now carrying the products of other mines as well as of their own. This application has been pressed very strongly and very energetically by the citizens of the district. It is not as if the road were built by a company without any application on their part, or without any reason for them to believe that if they went on and spent their own money and developed the country and established their enterprise, they would not receive assistance. I believe that a great development has taken place in that part of the country because of the little assistance we gave in the past, and which we are now supplementing, by aiding in the construction of this 30 miles of road.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this two miles from Bruce Mines to Bruce Mines Junction between the same two points that the Canadian Pacific Railway formerly had a branch ?

Mr. DYMENT. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they utilizing the old road ?

Mr. DYMENT. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a subsidy granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway for that ?

Mr. DYMENT. I don't think so. The two miles built by the Canadian Pacific Railway were merely for their own convenience, the same as they would run a line into a gravel pit. The Minister of Public Works is quite right in saying that these people were led to believe that if they went on with the work they could look for favourable consideration. The people insisted that the railway company should build into the town of Bruce Mines, feeling perfectly satisfied that the government would supplement what they had already done, and I think every hon. member will agree that this was much better than that the road should have stopped half way.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They are building on the old road of the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. DYMENT. No ; they have taken another route altogether.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. A remark was made a moment ago by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) to which I would like to refer. He appeared to think that it would be an extraordinary thing for this parliament to supplement a subsidy given by a provincial legislature. Ever since I have had any knowledge of the Department of Railways, and prior thereto, from the time subsidies were first given, it has been customary for the Dominion government to give a subsidy to a meritorious undertaking which had been given or been promised aid by the provincial government. The very fact that the provincial government had aided a railway very much improved its chances of receiving Dominion assistance. One of the things which the government have required at the hands of each company has been that it should satisfy them of its ability to construct the line ; for we know that a subsidy of $3,200 a mile does not at all furnish sufficient means for that purpose. For this particular road I should say that it would be quite inadequate. My information with regard to this road is that it is a much more extensive one than the ordinary railways which we aid, that it passes through a rough and irregular country, and that it will require a good deal of heavy work in its construction. The object which the government have had in view in requiring each company to advise them whether any subsidy had already been given or promised by the provincial government, was not to furnish a ground for objection to the Dominion giving aid, but to justify the application, and to assure the government that if they granted aid, the undertaking would probably be carried through. The information which the acting minister has furnished is as full information as we have ever required from a railway company. With reference to these two miles which have been referred to, I may say that what has been stated by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment) is quite correct, that the company had good reason to expect if they went on with their undertaking and completed these two miles, the government, when considering the subject of giving subsidies at any future time, would give this subject as favourable consideration as they felt they could, and the few days gained, I think, ought not to be any reason why this assistance should not be given.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am not aware that any person on this side of the House made any objection to a grant being made to any particular railway on account of its having received aid from the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. I so understood the hon. member for Halton.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought the ex-minister was directing his attention to me ; because I am of the same opinion as he, that unless the combined subsidies would be largely in excess of the requirements for the purpose of building the road, we could have no better evidence of faith in the scheme than the fact that it had received aid from the provincial government. I never heard any objection raised on that ground. Nor have I any objection to a subsidy having an ex post facto effect ; because if the parties have gone on in good faith and built a road which tends to the development of the country, I think they are as much entitled to the money as if the undertaking were in prospect.

Mr. HENDERSON. I fear that I did not make myself plain to the ex-Minister of Railways. What I intended to elicit by asking whether this road had received a provincial subsidy or not was such information as would warrant us in granting the vote asked for. We are asked to vote $3,200 a mile to assist this enterprise ; but that may be increased to $6,400 a mile, depending altogether on the cost of the construction of the road. We might consider that a fair subsidy ; and to my mind it should be quite sufficient for the construction of a road into that country, which is referred to by the promoters as one which will produce an enormous amount of traffic, a comparatively rich section, especially in timber and in mines. If that is the case, and the road has already received a subsidy of $3,000 per mile from the local legislature, the combined subsidies will amount to $9,400 per mile, which seems to me to be a very large subsidy for a road into that section. Under these circumstances, I think we ought to be informed whether or not some provision has already been made for the construction of this road. If so, possibly it would be wise on our part not to grant the full subsidy given to roads aided by the province, but to limit the amount and bring it within reason. I rather approve of the policy laid down last night by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock), who suggested that we should have the fullest information, and that all these matters should be referred to the transportation commission for full and ample reports regarding them. At any rate, we should be put in possession of information as to the probable cost of these roads and the character and value of the country through which they run, so that we could vote intelligently on these matters. While I do not consider the fact of a provincial bonus having been granted an objection to our granting aid in a meritorious case, a knowledge of how much the province has given would enable us to decide on what we should do here. Therefore in every case we should be put in possession of these facts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let me point out to my hon. friend that before this road could receive the subsidy of $6,400 per mile, it would have to cost $21,400 per mile. If it were to receive $6,400 from the Dominion and $3,000 from the province, it would then have $9,400 for a road costing upwards of $21,000 per mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. Don't you think that is a pretty good bonus ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A good deal would depend on the conditions. There are portions of the country where you could not get a road built with that. At the same time, I agree with my hon. friend that it is always desirable to know what the province contributes. Having regard to the conditions of the country through which this railway is to run. I do not think the promoters, even if they get all the subsidies which my hon. friend mentions, will make very much out of it.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. member for Algoma if the subsidy from the Ontario government has already been paid to the company ?

Mr. DYMENT. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman that.

Mr. BLAIN. I noticed, when the hon. member from Algoma made the statement that this road had already been constructed and was completed almost two years ago, the acting Minister of Railways seemed surprised.

Mr. DYMENT. This part, which is only a portion of the whole line, was finished last spring.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said that we had subsidized twenty-one miles, and have paid a subsidy on nine miles as completed. I did not make any statement with regard to these two particular miles.

Mr. BLAIN. But the hon. gentleman understood why this subsidy was applied for, the two miles had not been completed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was not clear on that point.

Mr. BLAIN. It is evident that when these people applied for a subsidy, they held back from the government the most important information. The fact is the hon. Minister of Finance asked the committee to vote a subsidy when he had not the information as to whether this road was completed or not. I think it is a wrong policy for any government to allow any set of contractors to go on constructing a portion of road, whether two miles or twenty miles, and then, after it is constructed, seek and obtain a subsidy. When promoters require a subsidy, they should ask for it before beginning the road.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not quite clear about the extent of this road. I understood the acting Minister of Railways to say that the first subsidy in 1901 was for twenty-one miles, and if this is also for twenty-one miles, that would make forty-two miles.

Mr. DYMENT. Only nine miles were subsidized two years ago, which, with these twenty-one miles, makes a total of thirty miles.

To the James Bay Railway Company for a line of railway from Toronto, via the east side of Lake Simcoe, Parry Sound, and Sudbury, towards James Bay, not exceeding 265 miles, in lieu of two subsidies granted by chapter 8 of 1900, of 35 and 20 miles respectively, from Parry Sound towards James Bay.

Mr. BROCK. Might I ask an explanation of this particular subsidy ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This was the subject of some reference last evening. It will connect the city of Toronto with the northern portion of Ontario. Several deputations waited on the government urging that this line should be subsidized.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is it intended to be a connection of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Toronto to Sudbury ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will cross the Canadian Pacific Railway at Sudbury, and connect ultimately with the new transcontinental.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who constitute the James Bay Railway Company ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mackenzie & Mann.

Mr. BROCK. This runs half a mile from the Northern Railway at many points.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Northern Railway runs west of Lake Simcoe, while this runs east of Lake Simcoe.

Mr. CLANCY. Has this company a Dominion or a provincial charter ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A Dominion charter.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the length of the road ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have forgotten. This charter has been in existence some years, and the first real work was commenced two or three years ago, when they started to build north from Parry Sound on the subsidy now being revoted. The total mileage now being subsidized is 265 miles. I think this is perhaps the most important subsidy we are asked to grant. It will bring the whole western section of northern Ontario into direct communication not only with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and will afford a through route to the west. Moreover, it will develop a splendid country north from Parry Sound. Of course, close to Toronto, there is already railway communication, but this, which is really a transcontinental line, will do more to benefit western Ontario than any other scheme dealt with in these subsidy resolutions.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is this road intended to go on to James Bay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. It should be pushed through there then ; that is a great country.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company for one mile of railway from Roberval to the government wharf at Lake St. John.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there any explanation of this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought the modesty of this item would so commend it that it would be at once approved. The object is to carry the present terminus of the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway to the wharf at Roberval, that is about a mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. At least, a scheme of this kind does not call for 'mountains of information' to convince the House of the propriety of it. But it seems strange to apply for a subsidy to build a road to a government wharf. Anyhow it seems a very small matter to trouble the government with. Of course, the information is very meagre, but I apprehend that it would be cheaper to allow the item to pass than to occupy the time of the House in discussing it.

To the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company on a line of railway from Lake Timiskaming at the present terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway line, in a northerly direction, not to exceed 50 miles.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the same company as the one to which the subsidy has been given for 265 miles ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a company to build an extension of a railway that now runs from Mattawa northward in the direction of Lake Timiskaming, on the Quebec side. It is proposed to build a road to the village of Ville Marie. As everybody knows, this is an excellent agricultural country, which is rapidly being colonized and developed.

Mr. CLANCY. This is simply an extension from the end of the Canadian Pacific Railway line. What is this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The incorporators are mostly gentlemen in Ottawa and in the locality of Timiskaming.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this a different company from the James Bay Railway Company ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would it not be better to offer this subsidy to a line of railway from Lake Timiskaming, running in a northern direction fifty miles, instead of confining it to this Interprovincial and James Bay Company ? The only possible way to get the extension of the line is to induce the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend their line which now runs from Mattawa up along the shore of the Lake Timiskaming. To put it in the form I suggest, gives the government the opportunity to make arrangements, and not give a special status to parties who are mere intermediaries between the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The PRIME MINISTER. The company applied for the subsidy. We inquired about them, and as the company is one of thorough respectability, I see no reasons why we should not grant the subsidy.

Mr. CLANCY. The respectability of the company is not in question. But the fact is that this piece of route will be absolutely of no use unless the company make some arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The PRIME MINISTER. I dare say.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, as suggested by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart), it ought to be left an open question. I care not what the respectability of the company may be, they should not be made the intermediary between the government and the railway company that will actually build the line. The question is simply how the country is to be served, and not what is to be the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway or of the promoters of this scheme. I think the proposition of the hon. member for South Lanark is a very fair one.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not see that it is fair. It did not strike us so at all events. The company made an application, and I am sure that the considerations which now present themselves did not occur to us. We wished to see the road built, and, it seemed apparent that the company would build it.

Mr. CLANCY. But the company will be unable to do anything unless they make arrangements with the other company to complete the road.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, they will have to make the arrangements.

Mr. CLANCY. But we should make provisions designed to secure the building of this road for the people, and not depend upon any haphazard arrangement. It is not unreasonable, in a case like this, to ask that the subsidy be given to a line of railway rather than to a particular company.

Mr. McCOOL. The Canadian Pacific Railway were approached times without number asking for this extension of their road from Kippewa lake, or the foot of Lake Timiskaming—Timiskaming station, as they call it—northward. That road was built some years ago and the extension has been greatly needed, but the people were unable to get any satisfactory assurance from the Canadian Pacific Railway that the road would be built. Men living in Ville Marie, who have been settled there for the last twenty years, went to the trouble of organizing a company, and these men are the promoters of the Interprovincial and James Bay road. They are all men of substance, and I think it would be most unfair if, after they have gone to all this trouble, they should be cut out. I do not think the Canadian Pacific Railway are opposed to it at all. The Canadian Pacific Railway were in sympathy with their application in the first place, and said : We are not prepared to go on, but you go on and get a charter and build a road, and we will help you. I do not think the Canadian Pacific Railway would ask that this subsidy should be changed from the company named to another company not named.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). On what side of Lake Timiskaming does this road run ?

Mr. McCOOL. On the Quebec side. It is opening up a large and important section near the head of Lake Timiskaming. I suppose there are 3,000 or 4,000 people in there at the present time.

Mr. CLANCY. We are not questioning the necessity of a road at all, but we want to know who is going to get the benefit of it. The hon. gentleman told us it would be too bad to refuse a grant to these gentlemen who had spent their money. For what purpose ? To make something out of it.

Mr. McCOOL. They want to get a road.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this an enterprise in which these gentlemen have large vested interests themselves, or is it merely an enterprise that they have set on foot for the purpose of making money out of it ? Who are the parties interested ? I am not defending the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they have no rights that I know of. It is the public rights I am looking after. Here is a case where it is proposed to put a link at the end of a railway belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway, extending their line and depending upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to give them an outlet. Now, who are the parties who made the application, and who are spending the money ?

Mr. McCOOL. I cannot give you from memory the names of the parties. I know that one of the promoters is a resident of Ville Marie, Mr. A. E. Guay, a very respectable and responsible citizen of that place, a gentleman worth probably $100,000 or $150,000. I think Mr. Ranger is another. I accompanied these gentlemen down here on a deputation asking for a subsidy, though I cannot give their names from memory. I also remember when they got their charter the winter before last, when I attended with them a meeting of the Railway Committee. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the charter he will find the names of the promoters, and they are all men of substance.

Mr. CLANCY. When a proposal is made to make a grant to a line of railway without stating any particular company, I do not see any objection, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, to the proposition made by the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart).

Mr. McCOOL. I am satisfied there is not one man interested in this enterprise who desires to make a dollar of profit out of it, except as an indirect consequence of this road helping settlers in that section of the country, and benefiting any of the promoters who happen to live there. I cannot understand why the hon. member for Bothwell should object to granting this subsidy to a named company, a company who have gone to the trouble of getting their charter, when there is no opposition to it from anybody. There is no opposition by the Canadian Pacific Railway, at least I do not think there is ; and I cannot see any reason why they should not be granted a subsidy under the name of an incorporated company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to say a word of explanation respecting the Bruce Mines and Algoma Railway. I find that my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dyment) was correct, and that the former vote was for nine miles. How the memorandum given to me said 27 miles I cannot explain.

For a line of railway from Waltham station to Ferguson Point in the county of Pontiac not exceeding 20 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is for an extension westward of the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway from its present terminus to Ferguson, on the Ottawa river.

Mr. CLANCY. Why is a distinction made in this case ? This is for a line of railway, the other was for a railway company. Who are the promoters of this road ?

Mr. McCOOL. I think the reason for the distinction is that the Canadian Pacific Railway, who now own the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway, would not make application for the subsidy, although I think they are anxious to get the extension. The Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway hold a charter covering that ground. The road has been built to Waltham for the last ten or twelve years or more. I ought to know a good deal about it, because I was born about half way between the two points on this road. I am quite satisfied that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will make the extension. If they do not, then I think they will make no objection to another company building.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company got a charter ?

Mr. McCOOL. They have got a charter covering this ground.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it not the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build a bridge across there ?

Mr. McCOOL. I presume it is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is with the expectation that the Canadian Pacific Railway will really build it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there a bonus to this particular road already from this government ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There was a bonus.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has lapsed.

To the Quebec Central Railway Company for an extension of its line of railway from St. François to St. George, not exceeding nine miles; also for a railway from Scott junction to the Quebec bridge, not exceeding 22 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is an extension of the Quebec Central Railway along the valley of the Chaudière river. At present the Quebec Central Railway starts from Quebec, or to speak more correctly, from Lévis and enters the valley of the Chaudière river.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It enters the valley of the Etchemin river first.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it does not, it goes down by the Intercolonial Railway to Harlaka Junction and then goes south into the valley of the Chaudière river. This is to extend the present terminus from the valley of the Chaudière nine miles to the valley of the St. George. At Scott Junction there is a duplication of the railway. One section goes along the valley of the Chaudière to St. Francis and the other section crosses the railway and goes to Sherbrooke and the Eastern Townships. This is required in order that there may be a railway built directly to the Quebec bridge, a distance of twenty-two miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no railway there now ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a railway going eastward to the Intercolonial Railway near St. Charles. This would cut off all that section, giving a straight line to the Quebec bridge.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is not built ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is to be built.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to inform the government that in building this road they are taking one step towards the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific. It was stated in the House some time ago that one reason why they would not build the Grand Trunk Pacific through the county of Dorchester was that it would give a longer route. Let me tell the House that by building this road from the Quebec bridge to Scott Junction you are building a road twenty miles exactly on the line that I have proposed. I may say, further, that in the case you build the Grand Trunk Pacific here you will by this be killing two birds with the one stone, and in places you will be killing three birds with one stone. You must remember that the road would be built from St. George, in the county of Beauce. St. George lies exactly west of a parish in the county of Dorchester called Ste. Justine. Ste. Justine is the natural gap, or the place for a railway to go through there. It is a very level piece of farming land. If the government build this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway it will start from the Quebec bridge, and if the government should send the man who is sitting there beside the minister, Mr. Schrieber, in whom I and every person else have the utmost confidence, to that district and tell him to locate a railway line, he will undoubtedly locate it through the places I have mentioned. Then, besides that, if you build a railway where I am asking it, you will serve the demands made by my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B. (Hon. Mr. Costigan), who has a charter, as we all know, from River St. Francis to Quebec, and by building this line you run a road exactly where he wants it. Then the Quebec Central Railway Company has a charter from St. George up the valley of the Famine river about eighteen miles to Ste. Justine, from Ste. Justine then to this Lake Pohenagamook you would be running on the same line again, from that lake in the county of Temiscouata there you would serve the Quebec Central, the road asked by my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B., and you would serve the government road. You would need to build only one road where there are three applications for roads, and therefore I say that you would be killing three birds with one stone.

Mr. COCHRANE. You would not be killing Costigan, though.

Mr. MORIN. Then, from Quebec through to St. Isidore, in Dorchester county, this one road would do for all. The Quebec Central in building from Quebec bridge, will have to go through St. Isidore and then go straight south to Scott Junction. If the government builds the road they will have to build in the exact place I am now mentioning. It would be wise for the government before dabbling into all these things to send my friend Mr. Schreiber there and let him look at the country and the location; he will undoubtedly say that I am perfectly right. It makes no difference who says I am wrong; I say I am right and I know it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. CLANCY. No, it is not carried.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Surely no further explanation is required after the speech to which we have just listened.

Mr. CLANCY. The explanation which has just been given demands a further explanation. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin) has stated that if the government carried out their contemplated scheme of a National Transcontinental Railway, it would traverse practically the same territory and serve the same purpose as the road to which it is now proposed to give a subsidy. If that be true—and the hon. gentleman no doubt speaks with very definite information —it seems to me that that puts an end to any argument that the railway will serve a country that cannot be otherwise served. If the statement be true it is an alarming one, that when we have passed an Act giving the government power to build a railway over this same territory, to serve the same purpose, that some gentleman makes an application for a subsidy and we grant it, knowing all these facts. Unless there is some explanation following the statement of the hon. member for Dorchester, this committee should make inquiry and have definite information before consenting to this vote.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are two branches of railway now asked to be subsidized under this item. One is an extension of the existing railway along the Chaudière valley from St. Francis to St. George, and my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin) will say to my hon. friend behind him (Mr. Clancy) that the Transcontinental Railway can have nothing whatever to do with that railway; one goes west whereas the Transcontinental Railway is going east. That settles that point. In regard to the other section of railway from Scott Junction to the Quebec bridge is a distance of twenty-two miles. That is all there is and how far the new railway will parallel this railway, I cannot at present say. That will depend very much on the route to be taken by the new railway. I think that if the railway which is to be built is to follow the Etchemin river it would to some extent parallel this railway. If it does not follow the Etchemin river, after leaving the Quebec bridge, it must go east and would not come in contact with this railway except for a few miles. There are several railways which must in the future come to the Quebec bridge. Already there are the Grand Trunk Railway, the Intercolonial Railway, and probably another road, the South Shore Railway will come to the Quebec bridge. The Transcontinental Railway must leave the Quebec bridge and go south and east and will parallel this for a few miles only.

Mr. MORIN. If you want to build a road from the Quebec bridge south you have to go to the west of St. Jean Chrysostôme church and then east of the St. Lambert de Lévis church, and then right through the parsonage of the St. Isidore church. You cannot help doing this owing to the nature of the country and then from there my hon. friend says the line will follow the valley of the Etchemin river. You must not follow the Etchemin valley at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. For a transcontinental railway?

Mr. MORIN. No, Sir. What I am saying is right, and if Mr. Schreiber and I go on the road, as I have gone with him before, I believe we will agree as to that point. You start from the Quebec bridge, and you go straight south through the parish of St. Isidore, which is about eighteen miles from the bridge. Then you go two miles beyond that, and then the Grand Trunk Pacific will still follow a straight course south or south-east. Then the road of the Quebec Central, a little beyond St. Isidore, would turn to the right on account of a hill there, and go to Scott junction. You must go through the village in which I live, although the people do not want a road there because it is not necessary. Then you go on through the parishes of Ste. Marguerite, St. Malachie and St. Clair, striking the corners of these four parishes. Then you strike the Etchemin river at St. Malachie, and you follow the river clear through to the outlet of lake Etchemin, whence you go to St. Germain. Then you go four miles beyond, when you strike the waters of the Famine river which flows into the Chaudière river; you then turn to the left a few degrees, and you strike the summit of the Chaudière river and the Etchemin river, and then you go eastward through all the other counties. You will thus serve every county on the south side of the mountains. But if you adopt the line that has been spoken of by my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) from the Quebec bridge to the mouth of the Abenakis river, you would only be a mile or a mile and a half apart. After you leave the Quebec bridge, you would commence to ascend the mountains for about fifty miles, until you get probably a thousand feet high. The ascent is not very great from the Quebec bridge until you get to the Abenakis river, but then you strike a very heavy grade for about eight miles until you get to the Pine river, when you turn to your right. If you adopt the route which I have suggested, you follow the natural course of the valley the whole way. As I have already stated in this House, the only two rivers in the province of Quebec which cross the Alleghany Mountains are the Richelieu river and the Etchemin river and we all know that when you have a stream to cut the mountain for you, you are at a great advantage in railway construction.

Mr. CLANCY. For the first nine miles we grant a subsidy to the Quebec Central Railway Company, and the subsidy for the other two miles is granted to any railway company.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, even suppose it is granted to the Quebec Central Company, what purpose is served by this road, which will not be served by the Trans-continental railway if it is built?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that the Transcontinental Railway has anything to do with the present vote. This subsidy here will go to the Quebec Central Railway, and will accommodate three or four parishes which have no rail connection now. It will shorten the entrance of the Quebec Central Railway from the United States into Quebec city.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). From Scott Junction to Quebec, the Quebec Central will have two roads: One to Lévis and one to the Quebec bridge. It is the intention that the National Transcontinental Railway will take over the present line of the Quebec Central up as far as St. Anselme.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know what will be done with the Transcontinental Railway. At the present it is the intention to give a subsidy to the Quebec Central Railway.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). From Scott Junction to the St. Lawrence, the Quebec Central would have two railways.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Are we going to lay down the principle that we are to give subsidies to a road paralleling the road of the same company for four or five miles. It may shorten the distance, but it is a mere convenience to the railway company. We must have money very plentiful when we do that.

Mr. MORIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is labouring under a mistake. This is not to make the Quebec Central line any shorter, but instead of going to Lévis it enables them to aim for the Quebec bridge. Owing to the construction of the Quebec bridge every road on the south side of the river will want to get to it now. Circumstances alter cases. The Quebec Central cannot handle heavy freight from Lévis for about thirty-five miles. From Harlaka Junction they have a very heavy grade, and ten miles further on they strike another almost impossible grade of a mile and a half. Passenger trains find it very difficult to clinch that grade. That prevents them handling heavy freight, but the route which they now propose will avoid all that, and it does not come to the same point as the old road at all. At Lévis the two roads will be probably nine miles apart, and this new road will enable them to handle heavy freight from the north to the south.

Mr. CLANCY. As I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Morin), all the roads are now aiming to get to the Quebec bridge, and I can quite understand that. But are we going to start out on the principle of subsidizing all the railways to reach that bridge, instead of subsidizing lines to serve the public in a wider sense? I may not have grasped the situation properly, but so far as I am able to judge, we are subsidizing a railway now to reach the Quebec bridge, which is hardly in the proper sense of the word a national undertaking at all: it is a private enterprise. Instead of having in view the serving of the public generally, we are subsidizing railways all tending to that bridge. If my information is correct, this is not justifiable.

The PRIME MINISTER. The answer which my hon. friend asks for has already been given by my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin). He has stated reasons which ought to satisfy my hon. friend that while this new railway goes to the Quebec bridge, it will serve a section of country which is at present devoid of railways, and is entitled to the same help that we give to other sections.

Mr. CLANCY. I understood the hon. member for Dorchester to say that the transcontinental railway, if built, will serve the same purpose.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not at all. It is on a different side of the river.

Mr. TALBOT. Might I give a few words of information on this matter? The Quebec Central Railway, leaving Scott Junction, the terminus of the line which is proposed to be subsidized, runs in a north-easterly direction to Harlaka Junction, which is a station on the Intercolonial Railway, about five miles east of Lévis. The proposed line will run due south from the Quebec bridge to Scott Junction. The Quebec bridge will be the terminus of all these different lines of railway; but the Grand Trunk Pacific line will run in a south-easterly direction, while the proposed line will run due south, along the valley of the Chaudière river. The Etchemin river flows into the St. Lawrence about three miles east of the Chaudière river and takes a south-easterly course, and that is the course which the Grand Trunk Pacific will eventually take in that part of the country. The hon. member for Dorchester knows very well that if the Grand Trunk Pacific were to follow the Chaudière river through the parishes he has named to Scott Junction, it would have to run in a southerly direction. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that the two railways would follow a similar route. My hon. friend knows very well that if the Grand Trunk Pacific were to follow that direction, it would have to be forced out of its course to take a southerly direction, to follow the valley of the Chaudière river, instead of following the valley of the Etchemin river, and then striking eastward through Bellechasse, Montmagany, and so on. If it followed the course my hon. friend suggests, it would be forced to go to Lake Etchemin and then on to the boundary line and through the state of Maine.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before this is carried, I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the way in which this matter has come before the government. I think it has been brought to the attention of the government in a way that we cannot entirely approve of. The only application made was for a portion of the subsidy, and that comes from the hon. member for Beauce

(Mr. Beland). He applied for a subsidy for the Quebec Central Railway from St. Francois to St. George, a distance of nine miles, and stated that the district to be served by the extension was very large, comprising nine towns, with no water communication and no railway communication whatever, and that a population of 10,000 people would be immediately and directly benefited by the extension. This recommendation applied entirely to the nine miles. We have no reference whatever to the twenty-two miles. I wonder who made the application for the subsidy for that portion. There seems to be something in the dark, something hidden. The impression of hon. members on this side is that this subsidy for the twenty-two miles is for some secret purpose, and the government so far has not disclosed who is to benefit by it. Is it recommended by anybody at all, or is it to assist a road for which a charter has been obtained by some other hon. member of this House who does not desire his name to come before the committee ? I think we are entitled to more information with respect to these twenty-two miles, because the manner in which the application has come before the government and the committee indicates that there is something kept back which ought to be disclosed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The line of the Quebec Central Railway extends from the city of Sherbrooke up the valley of the Chaudière river, crosses the river, runs through Dorchester and on to Harlaka Junction. If my hon. friend will look at the map, he will see that this road, once it leaves the Chaudière river, runs north and easterly. The intention is to extend the railway from Scott Junction, the point on the Chaudière river where it starts to run in an easterly direction, beginning in Beauce, passing through Dorchester and on into Lévis, and ending at the Quebec bridge. It seems desirable to extend this road for the purpose of its business from Scott Junction to the bridge, because at the present time to reach the bridge it describes the two sides of a triangle, one of the sides being the Intercolonial Railway ; and recently the Minister of Railways had the pleasure of listening to a complaint which the manager of the Quebec Central Railway made of excessive charges on the part of the Intercolonial. It is to avoid the necessity of using the Intercolonial from Harlaka Junction to Lévis that this extension is asked for. I do not know how the application came to be made, but there were certainly several interviews in which the general manager and traffic manager applied for this extension. With respect to the nine miles, that is at the other end of the Quebec Central. At present it runs from Beauce Junction to St. François, from which point the intention is to extend it to St. George. The valley of the Chaudière, which will be served by this extension, is probably one of the most fertile portions of the whole province of Quebec. Last season ten million pounds of butter and cheese were taken out of that valley and four million pounds of maple sugar by this Quebec Central Railway, but owing to the lack of facilities to reach Quebec, these goods had to be sent to Montreal for export. This will all be remedied when this line is extended down to the bridge. It will cross the bridge to the harbour at Quebec and the freight will be deposited alongside the steamers.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman has not told us who applied for this subsidy.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Mr. Grundy, the general manager of the company, and Mr. Walsh, the assistant traffic manager, both in my presence, applied for it, but I could not say whether any formal application was made in writing.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is there a charter for the road from Scott Junction to the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is it a good farming country ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

For a line of railway from the station of Lac Bouchette on the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway to St. André, not exceeding 13 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a line from the present line in the valley of the Lake St. John from a station called Lac Bouchette, on the present line in the valley of the Lake St. John extending to a new parish where there is a large pulp establishment and other industries.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was rather amused at the reasons advanced by the gentleman who applied for this subsidy. He says that the government has already subsidized lines of less importance than ours, and hopes that they will give personal attention to the matter. To my mind that is a very poor reason indeed.

For a line of railway from Quebec towards Seven Islands, including branches to Murray Bay and Baie St. Paul, not exceeding 200 miles.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Seven Islands is on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, opposite the western end of the Island of Anticosti. The intention is to build from Quebec to Seven Islands. Whether or not that is possible is a question for the engineers. A great deal of work has been done at Seven Islands by the capitalists interested in this project, and they are under the impression that the line is feasible. While the whole of the north shore of the St. Lawrence looks from the river like a sea of mountains, it appears that behind these mountains there is a level valley through which a road can be built. The intention is to build branches from the main line to Baie St. Paul, and also to Murray Bay, which is a very important point, especially during the summer season.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should be glad if the hon. Minister of Justice who, no doubt, is familiar with this section of country, would tell us the probable cost of the road ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am speaking absolutely without any accurate information. But the preliminary surveys or, I should say, the explorations that have been made from the Bay of Seven Islands up towards Chicoutimi would indicate that the expenditure would be in the neighbourhood of $30,000 per mile. As to the road from Chicoutimi to Quebec, I cannot say anything, except that the country through which the road will run is in some respects similar to the country through which the Lake St. John Railway runs. And I understand that that road cost $20,000 or $25,000 a mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that this is a very mountainous country, and that is one of the reasons why the company applied for a larger subsidy than is asked for by any other company. Their application is for a minimum subsidy of $6,400 a mile.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is not granted.

Mr. HENDERSON. The reasons given why that subsidy should be greater than to other companies are that it is to pass through a mountainous country and that the country is almost wholly uninhabited. What object can there be in granting a subsidy of $6,400 a mile for a railway into a mountainous country almost uninhabited ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, no.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is what the applicants say.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That may be from Chicoutimi east, but not from Chicoutimi west.

Mr. HENDERSON. The reasons given for granting a subsidy are as follows : Mountainous country, almost wholly uninhabited; open up extensive agricultural, timber and mining areas ; will cost in excess of $25,000 a mile ; and make Bay of Seven Islands a great national port. Now, I am not sure that it is desirable that we should commence, at this hour, to open up any more national ports. Our ports at Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax require a good deal of money to equip them, and I fail to see that there could be any great advantage in encouraging this enterprise, if one of the most important objects is to establish a national port at the Bay of Seven Islands. However, I think we can console ourselves with the thought that there is very little danger of the subsidy ever being called for.

For a branch line from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near St. Philippe d'Argenteuil, thence in a northerly direction, passing through the village of Brownsburg, not exceeding three miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This description is not very accurate, so I move that the resolution be amended to read :

For a branch line from a point at or near the intersection of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Great Northern Railway between St. Phillippe d'Argenteuil and Lachute, thence in a northerly direction passing through the village of Brownsburg a distance not exceeding three miles.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is this in order to run to the cartridge factory ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The main industries to be accommodated are the factory at Brownsburg and a very extensive quarry beyond that village.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is another of the class of applications that come before this House in very objectionable form. I do not think that it is in keeping with the dignity of this House that one member of the government should write to another member of the government asking for a subsidy for a railway in which he or his friends may be interested. It would be much better if the application came from some other source. The only application I find for a subsidy for this road is a letter from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) addressed to Hon. Mr. Fielding, acting Minister of Railways. That looks very much like a family compact concern. I wonder who owns the granite quarry that this road is to reach, for which we are to give a subsidy of about $10,000.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I had much pleasure in supporting this application for a subsidy. I was approached on the subject by the president of the Dominion Cartridge Factory, which company, as the committee are aware, has extensive works at Brownsburg. This road will be of great benefit to that industry, as well as to the quarry already mentioned. So far as the quarry is concerned, the supply is unlimited, the only difficulty in the way of developing the quarry being the transportation difficulties the company have been obliged to contend with. The company already employ seventy hands, and I am informed that the amount of their pay-roll is $5,000 a month. In these figures I am speaking from memory, but I think they are accurate. I am also informed that if this road is built the amount of business will probably be quadrupled : in fact, that there is no limit to the amount of business which can be done, if the transportation difficulty is overcome. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson), who asked the question, will do me the honour of a visit at my home, I shall have great pleasure in driving him, not only to the Cartridge Company's works, but to the quarry. I will make his visit as pleasant for him as possible, and when he has seen what is going on there I think he will agree that this subsidy will result in benefit to the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Christie) for his invitation, which I gladly accept. I am informed by some of my friends who have visited him that he is a very hospitable entertainer, and so I shall be glad, as soon as I can make it convenient, to go down and spend a day with him. He has told us that this quarry is a very valuable one, that the supply is almost inexhaustible, that they employ so many men and pay so much money—in fact he has told us almost everything that we had not inquired about. We on this side were interested in knowing who were the owners of this quarry. I am not so much interested in knowing the great value of the property. I have no doubt it is valuable, otherwise they would not ask the government to subsidize a road leading to it.

An hon. MEMBER. How many miles ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Three miles.

Mr. CHRISTIE. The president of the company is Mr. Brunet, not the gentleman of that name who was formerly a member of this House.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). He is a large stone and marble dealer in the city of Montreal.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the cartridge company now any railway communication to this place ?

Mr. CHRISTIE. The nearest point is St. Phillippe. The company have spent large sums of money on this road, but owing to the heavy freight carried over it the road is in constant need of repair. I have several letters from the president of the company and other gentlemen who are anxious to see this branch line constructed.

To the Orford Mountain Railway Company for a line of railway from a point on its main line between Lawrenceville and Eastman to Lake Bonella, five miles; from Kingsbury to Windsor Mills, ten miles; and from Eastman to the town line between township of Bolton, east part, and township of Potton, 12 miles, not exceeding in the whole 27 miles.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is a small road in the eastern townships under a Quebec charter.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did this company get their charter amended here, and obtain a Dominion charter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think this was a Quebec charter that had very extensive privileges, and the promoters came to this House and endeavoured to get a Bill passed with all these privileges granted by the Quebec charter, and they failed. I would like to know how much of it is built ?

Mr. CHRISTIE.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This road happens to be in my neighbourhood, and I am well acquainted with the circumstances. It is a small road in the eastern townships, constructed by the Orford Mountain Railway Company, composed of local men entirely. It starts at present from the village of Eastman and runs northward to a place called Kingsbury. They are now seeking to build a branch line from a point between Lawrenceville and Eastman on their main line to Lake Bonella, where there are large lumbering operations carried on, and they wish to extend it from Kingsbury to Windsor Mills, on the main line of the Grand Trunk, between Montreal and Portland. They also wish to extend their line southwards from the village of Eastman, about six miles, in the hope of carrying it further at some future time to touch the International boundary line, where they can connect with American lines.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was not a part of this road abandoned once ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, not under the name of the Orford Mountain Railway. There was a railway company called the Missisquoi and Black River Valley Railway Company, that is now defunct. They built a few miles, but the rails have been taken up and the road has been abandoned. The Orford Mountain Railway desires to construct the portion from Eastman southwards partly on the old embankment of that road. But practically it is a new construction entirely.

To the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company for a line of railway from Gaspé to a point at or near Causapscal on the Intercolonial Railway, and from that point to Edmundston, N.B., not exceeding 260 miles; and for a line of railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé as near the shore as practicable, not exceeding 102 miles. Total, 362 miles.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As the House is aware, this charter was granted at the beginning of this session. The road starts from Paspebiac, in the county of Bonaventure, and will run along the shore as far as Gaspé Basin. Thence the road will go into the interior of the peninsula and reach Causapscal, on the Intercolonial, and from there will go as far as Edmundston, in New Brunswick, where it will tap the American system. On the shores of the Baie des Chaleurs from Paspebiac to Gaspé bay, there are from 20,000 to 25,000 people, who have hitherto been deprived of railway communication. This company has agreed to build that line at the urgent request of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), and at my own request. They intended at first to build a railway only into the interior of the peninsula, where they have large interests. I may say at once that the Gaspé coast is a very fine agricultural country, and the interior of the peninsula is very rich in natural resources of all kinds. To show the bona fides of the company, I may say that before they procured this charter—because they were incorporated under a local charter—they made all the preliminary surveys, and during last winter they expended a least $60,000 or $75,000. I will read to the Committee a letter which I have just received from the manager of the road, Mr. Carpenter. Some gentlemen from London, England, are interested in this construction. Mr. Carpenter writes as follows :

Montreal, October 16, 1903.

Dear Sir,—Now that our company has been assured they will receive a cash subsidy from the Dominion government, the directors feel justified in instructing their engineers to push forward the work with all despatch. Our engineer in chief is Mr. Henry O'Sullivan——

Who is well known to some hon. gentlemen in this House.

—who informed me last week that the preliminary or location survey was quite complete, and the draughtsman would have the plans and reports of the same from the Intercolonial to Gaspé Basin ready for us in the course of a week or ten days. In the meantime I have instructed Mr. O'Sullivan to get together the necessary staff of engineers, transit men, labourers, &c., ready to proceed to Gaspé and start the final survey for construction. Owing to the lateness of the season we do not contemplate being able to survey and complete the plan of more than three sections of the road before winter sets in, two in the county of Bonaventure and one from Gaspé, in all thirty miles. If we are not prevented by inclement weather we shall have these plans completed and be in a position to start construction on the above sections early next spring.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many miles?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Thirty miles at present, because, as the hon. gentleman will notice by looking at the report, the company has had imposed upon it very stringent conditions. For instance, the company is obliged to build concurrently the shore line and the interior line, and if the company does not build ten miles within a year, dating from the 21st of June, on which day the Bill was sanctioned by the Governor General in the Senate, their charter will lapse, not only for the shore line, but for the interior line as well.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We will extend it ; all you have to do is to come and ask for an extension of time and we will grant it to you.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad to receive the endorsation of my hon. friend and his promise of an extension. I thank my hon. friend for his support and I will say so to the electors of Gaspé.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suppose that the old C. N. Armstrong charter is abolished ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Armstrong charter covering all that ground as far as Gaspé Basin has lapsed. This is a new company and has nothing whatever to do with Mr. Armstrong. In fact it was fought by Mr. Armstrong.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will this road touch all the improvements we have been making in Bonaventure and Gaspé ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It will improve the improvements.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there any better prospects of this company building that road than there was of the Armstrong company building it ? The hon. gentleman has vigorously fought the old company for years and I would like to know if he is substituting anything better.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think so ; I can assure my hon. friend that the government and the two members most interested, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and myself, have taken all the precautions that were possible. In fact, I am positive that within the year we will have at least ten or twenty miles built. The gentlemen are quite in earnest and have the financial ability to carry out the project.

Mr. SPROULE. Who are the gentlemen ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The gentlemen concerned are all well known in London. The directors are Mr. William Griffiths, Mr. Mellowes and Mr. Sydney Lee. Mr. Elvey is the secretary, Sir Douglas Fox and partners are the engineers. The bankers are the Bank of Montreal.

For a branch line from a point near the bridge at River Trois Pistoles on the Intercolonial Railway in a south-easterly direction to Mackenzie and Renouf Falls, River Trois Pistoles, not exceeding 2½ miles.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the object of this ? I understand that it is running out to a mill owned by an hon. member of this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If an hon. member of this House is fortunate enough to own a mill I think we ought to be glad of it. We do not expect the members of this House to be dummies, but energetic business men.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The rule with us is that when you want a siding you build it yourself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a spur at a point near River Trois Pistoles on the Intercolonial Railway to Mackenzie and Renouf Falls, Rivière Trois Pistoles. A large pulp mill is being built there and there are also large timber limits.

Mr. BLAIN. In what county is that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In Temiscouata.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the owner of this large pulp mill that is to be built there ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a joint stock company of which Mr. Tobin, member for Richmond and Wolfe is president.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard this as a very improper way to use public money. A year or two ago a subsidy was proposed for the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway, which goes through my county, and a portion of that goes through the township of St. Vincent and town of Meaford. It was proposed to build the Grand Trunk Railway down into the town of Meaford which would be probably two and a half miles and although a subsidy was given from that town to build around to Owen Sound and one end of this road would start practically at the wharf and the other extend towards Owen Sound, and although I did my best to get the government to allow a portion of that subsidy to apply to the building of the road down to the wharf, about one and a half or two miles from the end of the Grand Trunk Railway I was answered that the government was not subsidizing or using public money in that way, that this was only a short spur down to the wharf and that the people of the town should build it or that it should be built between them and the railway company. The people were obliged, notwithstanding the fact that a subsidy was given professedly to build a railway from that point, to raise the money to build it themselves. The government would not allow a dollar of the subsidy to be applied in that way and now we are asked to vote a subsidy to assist in building a spur or siding into a man's mill. Because that man happens to be a member of this House he is treated in this way. If these subsidies were given alike in all cases I would not have the same ground for complaint, but where it is emphatically denied in other cases upon grounds which if applied to this case would exclude this gentleman from such benefits, then I think it is unfair and that we have a right to object to it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not remember the other case to which my hon. friend refers, but, it is a mistake to refer to this as a siding; this is not a siding; it is a line that runs off almost at right angles with the Intercolonial Railway at a place where it is believed there will be a considerable development of business. Whether it is a proper subsidy to grant is a debatable matter, but it is not right to describe this line as a siding.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In our country if a man wants a siding or spur into his mill he has to go to the cost of constructing it and the company charges him interest on the rails, besides which he has to maintain the spur. Here the government is to build a road which is really a part of the Intercolonial Railway and is paying a subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. It is practically a man building a railway into his mill and getting $7,000 to do it. If you would apply the same principle all over the country I would not have the same objection to it.

The PRIME MINISTER. In what year was the application of which my hon. friend has spoken, made ?

Mr. SPROULE. In 1901.

Mr. COCHRANE. There is a principle involved in this case. Why should we, the ratepayers as a whole, be called upon to build two and a half miles of a spur or siding, whatever you call it, for the benefit of a member of this House ? Why should we vote public money for the benefit of a private individual or company. If a railway is developing a country, I would not oppose a subsidy for it no matter in what province it may be, but the government has practically gone insane in voting subsidies this year for little dabs of railways one mile and two miles long, to serve private individuals. The Prime Minister himself must see that this is absurd. Why don't these people do as we have to do in our section of the country, where these railways are built by the private individuals who want them. When these gentlemen on the other side of the House were in opposition, they objected to the name of a member of parliament appearing as an applicant for a charter, but now they sit complacently by and vote this money when a member of the government makes an application to the Minister of Finance for a subsidy. It looks to me a little fishy, and it is time we called a halt. We have gone so far to-day as to subsidize local roads that are chartered by the provincial government, and now we are subsidizing roads which serve the purposes only of some private corporation. How can the members for Ontario go home and justify themselves in voting subsidies for these little tramp railways down in the provinces, when in our own province private individuals have to build their own roads ? If this were a colonization road I could understand it ; but there is no reason on earth why a man should not build his own siding to his mill.

Mr. TAYLOR. As I understand it, this is a branch of the Intercolonial Railway which runs into some industrial establishments lying along that line. Is it the intention of the government to loan them the rails in addition to giving them this subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no arrangement whatever between the Intercolonial Railway and this company. This is treated as an ordinary subsidy.

Mr. TAYLOR. To whom ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To the company.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will this road be operated by that independent company or by the Intercolonial Railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been no arrangement yet on the subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. The acting Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Fielding) objected to this road being called a siding, but I find that in the application which was made by the company themselves, they designated it both as a siding and a spur line. Here is what they say :

Application to construct a spur line near the Trois Pistoles bridge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. And here is the letter written to the engineer of the Intercolonial Railway by the government engineer who was sent to inspect it.

As per instructions received from you, I went to Trois Pistoles to go over ground and make report on what is to be a siding or branch from the Intercolonial Railway to a point up stream, where a company own timber limits and water privileges on the main River Trois Pistoles. I found a preliminary location survey has been made by an engineer, sent there by Mr. Tobin and his company. I walked over ground in company with their engineer. The proposed branch or siding is about two and a half miles in length and begins at a point on the Intercolonial Railway about 700 feet east of Trois Pistoles bridge ; running south, crossing the public highway at about grade point, keeping the side hill, passing two large grist mills.

There is one feature of this subsidy which I dislike very much. The general public are not allowed to participate in the advantages of this railway at all ; they will get no benefit from the construction of this railway ; the private company will receive all the benefit. I object to these subsidies for a line simply to run into a granite quarry, to satisfy the desires of a minister of the Crown or any other persons with whom he may be associated. This company tells the government that they have acquired all the water privileges and all the land within a very considerable distance, so that everybody else except the company is excluded from participating in the benefits of this expenditure. This letter is a lengthy one, and I shall not detain the House by reading more than a portion of it. It says :

The company of which Mr. Tobin is promoter proposes building at once at terminus of branch, a large pulp mill, a shingle mill, and an electric power house. And at McKenzie's Falls, about 1,000 feet below, erecting a large paper mill. The electric power house is for the purpose of lighting all the mills on stream below, two large grist mills, and Messrs. Price Bros. large saw mill, and also to light the town of Trois Pistoles by electricity. The company here have acquired all water privileges up this river for a distance of ten mies and have also control of 100,000 acres of timber limits situated on both sides of Trois Pistoles river and extending back in country considerable distance and have control of all available timber lands for some miles back.

Mr. SPROULE. They have everything in sight.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the great objection. This company has obtained possession of everything in sight ; no other person can go in there and acquire water privileges or piece of land, without dealing with this company. All the benefits which accrue from this subsidy must of necessity go to the company. It is a close corporation, and all the benefits the public get from it is what may be doled out to the workingman in the shape of wages. It is altogether a wrong principle to subsidize such a road as this. No doubt these 100,000 acres of land, and this long stretch of water-power privilege was obtained before there was a railway there, and at a cheap price because of the difficulty of access ; but when this company became possessed of everything in sight, they go to the government and ask them to spend $10,000 or $15,000 to make this property more valuable. They bought it at a cheap price because there was no railway connection, and now they want the government to give them railway connection, so as to enhance its value. Had the subsidy been granted before this company acquired all the property there would be some fair play in it, because then others would have an opportunity of going in there and acquiring property on the same basis. This is undoubtedly a case which has no merit in it whatever. If these people want a siding two and a half miles long, let them do as we have to do in the province of Ontario. I know very well that in the province of Ontario when we want a siding on the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have to make the embankment, put on the ties, and pay a considerable rental for the iron.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Any rebate allowed ?

Mr. HENDERSON. No rebate at all. We pay the regular freight all the same. I am not finding fault with this. I cannot expect the Canadian Pacific Railway to provide special privileges without being compensated for them. But we do not come to the government and ask them to give us these facilities. In the constituency I have the honour to represent, I know of a spur line which was built from the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway to a paper mill. The hon. member for Nipissing has been pleading here all afternoon in favour of supporting grants to paper and pulp mills. There is a very large and old paper mill in the constituency I have the honour to represent, and I do not think it ever secured aid for the construction of railway facilities for bringing out its output. A few years ago a spur line was built from the Grand Trunk to the mill. I cannot say whether it was done at the expense of the proprietors or at the expense of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I am inclined to think that the proprietor had to assist ; but I am quite sure that the government were not asked to contribute one cent, although that was as meritorious a case as the one we have before us now. The proprietor of that mill and his predecessors for the last forty or fifty years have employed a great deal of labour ; their output is very considerable ; and if a paper or pulp mill is entitled to consideration, that one is as much entitled to it as those in newer sections of the country. I disapprove altogether of aiding private enterprises of this kind where the general public are excluded from taking any advantage of the investment. I do not think this case has any merit at all.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CLANCY. With regard to the item 53, now before the committee, for a branch line to Mackenzie and Renouf Falls, river Trois Pistoles, not exceeding 2½ miles, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked what arrangement was made with the Intercolonial regarding the rails to be laid on that siding. It is surely not proposed to hand over to a private company—not a railway company at all—all these compensations. As pointed out by my hon. friend, they have grabbed everything in sight. They have secured the water-power and the timber limits and every concession possible before investing a dollar in the way of plant, and they ask the country now to construct a railway for them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no arrangement whatever between the government and this company with respect to the operation of the road. The subsidy is the same as any other subsidy and in no different position.

Mr. CLANCY. It is in a very different position from all others.

Mr. GAUVREAU. Does the hon. gentleman say that the company have not spent anything at Trois Pistoles ?

Mr. CLANCY. There is no plant there.

Mr. GAUVREAU. In my constituency, Temiscouata, $250,000 have been spent. There are three shingle mills in operation.

Mr. CLANCY. How long have the mills been in operation ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. Two months. We expect to have five shingle mills at work, and in one year will export 1,200 cars of lumber by the Intercolonial.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this Mr. Tobin's company ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. It is an American company. The promoters are French Canadians from the States, and Mr. Tobin is the president. Those who have invested the most money are French Americans.

Mr. CLANCY. We are very glad to welcome them back to this country, and to welcome the investment of capital in Canada, but there is no reason why the Canadian tax-payer should build sidings for Mr. Tobin or anybody else. We might as well build the mills for his company. This siding is essentially a part of the plant of the company, in which the public are not interested. This company want the government to build a road for them and at the same time loan them the rails and give them the balance of the outfit. We ought to know on what arrangement they are to get these other advantages apart from the subsidy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is making much ado about something which he considers entirely novel. I can assure him that he is mistaken. The grant of a subsidy for a small road—call it a siding if you will, but it is not a siding—two or three miles long, is by no means a novelty either under the present or former administrations. This company cannot do everything, and there will be a large population gathered around their industries which will give business to the railway. As to how the Intercolonial will arrange with the company later on, that is a matter for future adjustment.

Mr. CLANCY. There is a wide distinction between this and other grants to railways. This is not a road which the public can use. It is a private road in every sense of the word. If we are to take this subsidy as a precedent, there is not a mill-owner in Canada who is not entitled to have a siding built to his mill by the government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why do you not move to strike it out ?

Mr. CLANCY. That is just the kind of suggestion I would expect from the hon. gentleman. He always throws a stone from behind the hedge and never comes out in the open. Did he ever move to strike out an item of that kind when contending against it ? If he did not, why does he ask me to move ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I never whined for a couple of hours over an item.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has whined over matters of much less importance, and the hilarity which his interruption excites, particularly on the part of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert), who had lame men in his riding employed as census enumerators, who had to be carried around in the villages to do the work, is very amusing. The fact that this is a small matter does not at all improve the quality of it. Members cannot come to this House and make demands for votes of public money for the benefit of concerns in which they are personally interested without violating a well recognized principle of our parliamentary system.

This is the feature of it that it seems to me without a single redeeming side. I do not expect to get better information than we have had, but I suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite will have to deal with the public later on.

Mr. SPROULE. We have been voting railway subsidies pretty freely, and very seldom have we on this side offered any serious objection to what was proposed, if there was anything like a justification for the vote. But in the multiplicity of these proposals, it cannot be wondered at that some do not meet with our approval. If we are to support the expenditure of public money it must be upon the basis of some reasonable belief that the expenditure will benefit the public, not an individual or a corporation alone, but the people. It never was proposed, so far as I know, that a subsidy should be given to a private firm or company to build a siding into their mill. Some years ago I applied to the government for some assistance by way of subsidy to build a line from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to an important village in our county. The distance would be about two or two and a half miles. We had the assurance of parties who were well able to carry out the work that if the government would give the usual subsidy of $3,200 a mile they would build the line to the village. It was an important village, a place that had been settled for forty years or so ; it contained a grist mill, a saw mill, a woollen mill and the usual other industries of a thriving village, as well as stores of all kinds. With all these, its trade was a very considerable trade indeed. I applied to the government for the subsidy and submitted the best arguments I could. But I was quietly told that such a subsidy would not be justified by the House, and that the minister would not feel justified in recommending it to the Council, for the reason that this was only a spur line. I was told that if I could show that the line would connect two railway systems, so that cars could be transferred from one to the other, it might be regarded as worthy of a subsidy. But, though the village might be an important one and its trade large and growing, the conditions were not such as to justify the subsidy being granted. In view of that, I do not know how I am to go back to the same people and justify such a proposition as is made here, for this has far less merit in it in many respects. In this instance, practically everything in sight, the water-powers, the timber lands, the mill sites and everything else, is owned by a company, and the public have no substantial interest. We are not even told that this is a thickly settled country or that there are industries there in which the public are interested. But it would seem that this company has secured everything it can from the local government and, being still unsatisfied, it comes to the Dominion for further assistance. For the purpose of carrying on their business they desire sidings to be built into their property, and they come to the government and ask for assistance to the extent of $7,000 or $8,000 for this purpose. It can well be admitted that this will be more profitable to the company, but I do not understand that it is even claimed that it is of any substantial benefit to the public. It seems to me that the government have wholly failed to make out a case in favour of this vote. They have not even told us that this railway is owned by a regularly chartered railway company, or whether this road is to be built by the Intercolonial under the general provision of the Railway Act, which gives a company the right to build branches not more than six miles in length without special charter. The hon. member (Mr. Gauvreau), who seems to be familiar with the locality, speaks of a company—Mr. Tobin's company. I did not understand whether it was a railway company, a general commercial company or a lumber company.

Mr. GAUVREAU. It is a lumber company.

Mr. SPROULE. So, no railway company wants this, but merely an association of capitalists engaged in the lumber business. Let me tell the acting Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Fielding) that if he adopts this principle to-night and we vote this railway subsidy, he can have at once a thousand applications equally meritorious from all parts of the country. And if he grants this, how can he refuse the others ? It seems to me that this is establishing a very bad precedent a precedent that the government of this country will find very troublesome in the future.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says that we are establishing a bad precedent in this case. Now, I do not know the merits of this case very well, but I contend that the precedent for it was established long years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. When ?

Mr. CAMPBELL. By the late government. And the hon. member for East Grey has, over and over again, supported propositions just the same as this.

Mr. SPROULE. Give an instance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Cape Tormentine Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. I emphatically deny that I ever supported a proposition of this kind, knowing it to be such.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me say one word in explanation. Many of these railway subsidies were voted, the exact locality and merits of which we could not know. I may have supported such a proposition under these circumstances, but not under any other.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the hon. gentleman supported it just the same ; and if he did not know what he was supporting, he was not fit to occupy——

Mr. SPROULE. Tell me an instance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the hon. gentleman will look over the subsidies granted by the late government, he will find many cases of grants in cases such as this.

Mr. BROCK. Mention one.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I may say to the hon. gentleman for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) that I have already mentioned one. It was for Mr. Wood, who now occupies a position in the other House. He was supporting the government, and it was at his instance that the subsidy was granted. It seems strange, therefore, that these men, when similar precedents have been established, and when they have over and over again voted bonuses to similar enterprises, should now rise in their righteous indignation and oppose this justifiable grant. The member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) will support bonuses where he is interested for $100,000 or $200,000, yet he will stick, and haggle and whine about a little tu'penny-ha'penny thing of two miles and a half that is in the public interest.

Mr. BROCK. The hon. gentleman is putting his foot in it now. I am not whining about this at all, and I defy him to mention a case where I supported a bonus that I am interested in myself. He is making a statement that he must know to be not according to the facts.

Mr. CAMPBELL. When hon. members sit in this House and allow subsidies to go through without a protest, without raising their voice against them, we may rightly conclude that they are in favour of them. Therefore, when they advocate certain bonuses, and do not vote against others, they are responsible for their passage. The proper way for a member of this House to do, if he is opposed to a grant and has the courage of his convictions, is to rise in the House and move that the item be struck out. That would be the duty of those hon. gentlemen who oppose this grant as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) does so strongly ; he should rise in his place and move that the item be struck out, then he will be acting according to his convictions.

Mr. EMMERSON. We are asked to name a case. I will give the case of what is known as the Harvey branch, which connects the Albert Railway, now known as the Salisbury and Harvey, with a private wharf which was owned by the late Hon. J. J. S. Turner. He owned this branch, and he owned the wharf, and the parliament of Canada, somewhere in the 80's, under a Conservative administration, not only subsidized that siding down to the wharf, but gave assistance to a bridge.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the length of the branch ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Between two and three miles, about the same length as the branch in question. But he was a Tory, he was a member of a Tory government.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member has not made good his statement that it was a similar case, because in that instance the grant was given to a railway company, whereas this is being given to a commercial company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not being given to any company.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman explained it as being given to the Tobin Company, which he admits is not a railway company. Who applied for it ? Is it not the Tobin Company ?

Mr. EMMERSON. The Harvey branch was owned by one man, the gentleman I referred to, and it was no more of a public railway than this is to be.

Mr. SPROULE. There are many railways owned by only one man, and we have already voted subsidies to connect railways with a wharf——

Mr. EMMERSON. Not a private wharf.

Mr. SPROULE. We have wharfs by the dozen that are private wharfs, but the public use them all the time to ship their produce. Though this railway may have been owned by one man, it was for the public convenience to connect a water route and land route. Therefore it is not a similar case.

Mr. EMMERSON. That branch was built for the purpose of permitting the gentleman who owned this wharf to ship his lumber down to that wharf over this branch or siding.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the public use it as well as himself, both for incoming and outgoing freight ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I presume the public will use this in the same way.

Mr. SPROULE. Well it is not very likely. Now, the member for West York (Mr. Campbell), with his usual inaccuracy and braggadocio, says, I am going to give a case, and he cites the case of Senator Wood. Well, did Senator Wood get a subsidy either as a private individual or as a corporation ? I deny it, and the hon. gentleman cannot confirm his statement. It was given to a railway company for the convenience of the public, and not to a private individual or a private corporation.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I want to say that the Cape Tormentine Railway has nothing to do with the item which we are discussing. That railway received a charter becasue it goes for 18 or 20 miles through a very populous district, and serves a great number of people, while the instance under discussion is a private corporation which controls the whole river, which controls the whole area of timber limits, and the whole situation. It is simply a private individual. The Cape Tormentine Railway was also built to connect the winter service of Prince Edward Island with Cape Tormentine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The case I refer to is several years old. The railway, as I remember, was a siding that went into Mr. Wood's sawmill, and was about a mile and a half long.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I do not know anything about Mr. Wood's sawmill. The hon. gentleman referred to the Cape Tormentine Railway, and I think there is no fair comparison with this item. While I am on this subject, and as I see the leader of the government in his seat, I would like to refer to the need of branch lines in Prince Edward Island. While we are giving subsidies to hundreds of branch lines throughout this Dominion, we have been unsuccessfully asking in Prince Edward Island for branch lines through populous districts, to serve the farming community, to serve cheese factories, and butter factories, and manufacturing industries throughout the Island. I have instanced a number of cases, and I have presented petition after petition in this House, with no result. During the three years I have been here I have presented petitions for a branch line from North Wiltshire to the southern coast, through a populous district, a line about twenty miles long, a line that will serve a great number of persons. I have also brought to the attention of the acting Minister of Railways and Canals another branch that was needed down to Elmira, and a branch from O'Leary to the western part of the Island. These branches are all much needed by a great number of people. I would like the leader of the government to take these matters in hand. The main line is a government line, and if we are going to get any railway accommodation at all we must get it through branch lines built by the government. While on the subject of short branch lines, I would also mention that I have brought to the attention of the acting Minister of Railways this year, as the board of trade of the maritime provinces have also done, the need of a spur running from the main line at Charlottetown down to the wharf front, which would serve not one private individual, but the whole commercial community of Charlottetown. And during the season of navigation, when the goods are brought into Charlottetown to private wharfs, every bit of that merchandise has to be carted across the town to the station at Charlottetown at a greatly increased cost and at great inconvenience to the shippers. We have been asking for a spur that would not be two and a half miles long and possibly would not be over one mile in length, and yet we have been put off from year to year with the explanation that 'we will look into the case.' I wish that the acting minister would look into it with some seriousness.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no relevancy at all in the observations of my hon. friend.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There is a great deal of relevancy in them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are dealing with railway subsidies, we are not dealing with the construction of railways by the government. There has been no application from anybody in Prince Edward Island to my knowledge for the privileges which are proposed to be conferred on railway companies or other parties by these votes, and any discussion of the construction of branches by the Intercolonial Railway has no relevancy to this. These gentlemen would be very pleased indeed if we would build then a branch line of railway; but the government do not propose to build them a branch line, simply to offer them the usual facilities in the way of subsidies and for the rest they must pay the money themselves. If any one in Prince Edward Island wants the same privileges on the same conditions I fancy that the government would be ready to grant it, but, there is no such proposal from Prince Edward Island and there is no relevancy in the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey). If the hon. gentleman wants to advocate the building of a branch line in Prince Edward Island it would be a very proper subject at the proper time. If he wants to convey the impression that this government has not been dealing liberally with the province of Prince Edword Island, I am satisfied that there is too much common sense among the people of that island, in view of the appropriations contained in the estimates for that province, to permit the people to treat his remarks seriously.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We are dealing with the public money of this country, and it makes no difference whether it is being expended for subsidies or for the building of lines. We do not ask for subsidies in Prince Edward Island; we do not build branch lines in Prince Edward Island because the whole system is owned by the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So is the Intercolonial Railway in this case.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We want the government to build a line there, as they own the whole system and for that reason the subject is perfectly relevant; it is the expenditure of public money to suit the convenience of the people in the locality and to assist them in carrying on the enterprise in which they are engaged. This spur line in Charlottetown would not only be a convenience to the shippers of produce, &c., in Charlottetown, but would benefit the Prince Edward Island Railway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is trying to convey the impression that by these subsidy resolutions some privilege is being granted to other provinces that is not granted to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LEFURGEY. They certainly are.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They certainly are not, because no one in Prince Edward Island has sought the privileges that are granted by this.

Mr. LEFURGEY. They cannot.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They can; there is nothing to prevent them.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is impracticable.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is no more impracticable for them than for people living along the line of the Intercolonial Railway. If the hon. gentleman says that subsidies are refused to his province, he is wrong; but if he is not seking railway subsidies how can he complain if he does not get them.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. Minister of Finance seems to be worked up on the question of irrelevancy. He did not seem to be so much concerned about irrelevancy when the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) got up and referred to something done many years ago by another government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. By a subsidy I understood.

Mr. BARKER. We might infer from the words of the hon. member for West York that if a minister twenty years ago had picked a man's pocket that would justify the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government in committing a burglary. That seems to be his argument. The Minister of Finance says this is not a matter affecting the Intercolonial Railway; it is a matter of public concern, a subsidy to be granted by this Dominion. I think the facts are just the reverse of what the Minister of Finance states. This is particularly a matter affecting the Intercolonial Railway, and I think it is absolutely ridiculous for an hon. gentleman to stand up in this House and say that a two and a half mile side track on the Intercolonial Railway is a matter affecting the Dominion, for which a Dominion subsidy ought to be granted. If this is a siding or a spur track that is useful to the Intercolonial Railway why has not the Minister of Railways and Canals dealt with it? If that hon. gentleman, as acting Minister of Railways and Canals, thinks that this two and a half mile track is a necessity for the Intercolonial Railway, surely he could have dealt with that subject as a railway manager deals with every application of the kind. The very fact that it has not been brought up in that way, that the Minister of Railways and Canals has not so dealt with this two and a half spur track to a timber limit, owned by a private individual, is the strongest possible evidence that we can have that this is not a matter that ought to be paid for by the Dominion at large. The hon. gentleman could, if he had chosen, have dealt with this as he has dealt with many other cases where the Intercolonial Railway is interested in a side-track for a spur track or anything of that kind. If he thought the business with this private commercial enterprise justified the Intercolonial Railway in connecting its line with that enterprise by a side track; he could have dealt with it by agreement. The people interested in that enterprise would have entered into a contract with the government and would have undertaken to pay to the government the cost of that siding. Probably there has been some side influence in this case which leads the government not to deal with it, as the Grand Trunk Railway or Canadian Pacific Railway or any other large railway company would deal with such a case; the hon. gentleman has not dealt with it as a departmental matter but has turned it over to the Dominion, and he gravely asks parliament to grant a subsidy for two and a half miles of railway as if a connection with this private timber limit were in the interests of the whole of the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the immortal feature of this transaction should command the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals. The law governing the independence of parliament provides that no member of parliament can receive money from the country and the only way in which he can evade the consequences of the law is by being connected with a company. The principle we have laid down is that we will assist railways, but in this case we are departing from the salutary principle and now we are going to help commercial companies to build railways into their own premises. I want to submit this feature: How can Mr. Tobin, who is a member of this House, be an independent member of parliament and vote against any government measure during this session when he is a suppliant at the door of the government for this subsidy? How can he be expected to do so? It is not in human nature to expect it. It is unreasonable, and while Mr. Tobin may not deliberately violate the independence of parliament Act he is actually violating the spirit of it if not the letter. No member of parliament can be as independent as he should be when he is here seeking a subsidy of money from which he himself will be the principle beneficiary and the largest share of which will go into his own pocket. It seems to me that the government should refrain from doing that kind of thing and that this is a very bad precedent and an improper thing to do.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) worries his soul over the morals of the members in this respect. How does he justify one of his colleagues who sits usually immediately behind him and who is a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, although we are voting subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railway? My hon. friend does not worry over that member's morals in the slightest degree.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has ever known the hon. gentleman to whom he refers to sit in this House and vote upon the question of a bonus to the railway to which he refers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not discuss that question. Mr. Tobin, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe is not sitting in this House, voting on this question, yet his name has been used freely, more freely than I have used the name of the hon. the junior member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler). It seems to make a great difference whose ox is gored. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is very much worried because some of these votes are not expressly to railway companies. It would be a dreadful thing if we should vote money to any company that is not a railway company. This is not a vote to any company, it is a vote for a line of railway. It is in the same position as any other line of railway where no company is mentioned. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) was not always so squeamish about these things as he is now. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) says that if some one picked some one else's pocket years ago, that would not justify another person in committing a burglary now. No, but if a person who committed a burglary years ago, suddenly becomes virtuous, and howls when another person commits a burglary, there is something very suspicious about it.

Mr. SPROULE. We are not looking for virtue from that side.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman expects all the virtue to be on this side of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. We are complaining that there is no virtue on that side of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are just ordinary plain people over here, and we do not profess to have that high degree of morality, which enables us to single out the member for Richmond and Wolfe, to lecture him on morals, without looking at the vacant seat behind the hon. member for East Grey. But if there is any degree in morals, we suspect strongly that the member for Richmond and Wolfe is not the bigger sinner in these transactions. I find that in 1888, a vote was made of rails and fastenings; which are money; which stood in the public accounts as an asset for $4,335; these were voted, not to assist a railway company, but to assist a cotton company in the city of Halifax. That is commonly known in my city as the cotton factory siding, and this line was built for the special advantage of the Halifax Cotton Company. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) told us the other night that he was here for a quarter of a century, and we were all glad to congratulate him——

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. minister if that was not an arrangement made with the Intercolonial Railway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Intercolonial Railway is the government of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a different thing altogether.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It does not make it any better or any worse, whether it was an arrangement made with the Intercolonial Railway or not, and I have a pretty strong suspicion—but I do not like to mention names without having an opportunity to verify the record—I have a pretty strong suspicion that some of the members of parliament who sat here when that subsidy was voted, were members of the Halifax Cotton Company. But right alongside that last vote, I find that another appropriation is made of rails and fastenings, which are money, which stood in the public acounts as an asset representing $11,964.56. Was that voted in blank to someone else with the possibility of getting it taken up by an incorporated railway company? No, it was voted to a company which was not a railway company, but which was known as the Steel Company of Canada. This grant was given for a branch, or a siding to their factory.

Mr. CLANCY. What were the general conditions in connection with that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only general condition is, that they would put down a certain quantity of rails themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. And all for the benefit of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This proposed vote will be for the benefit of the Intercolonial Railway; this is a branch of the Intercolonial Railway. What is the difference?

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. minister allow me to ask him a question? Will the hon. gentleman say that the rails he refers to there are not to-day the property of the Intercolonial Railway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot tell, but I can tell that these resolutions granted the rails to the Halifax Cotton Company, and to the Steel Company of Canada. Here is what it says:

> To the Halifax Cotton Company of Nova Scotia, a grant as subsidy—the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 pounds per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorizing their transfer to the company—of 233 tons of used iron rails and fastenings, loaned to the company——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hold on: they first loaned them, and that was not bad enough as a matter of morals, but they went further and then gave them afterwards.

—two hundred and thirty-three tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the company, which rails and fastenings stand in the public accounts as an asset for $4,335.

This is a grant to the Halifax Cotton Company.

Mr. BARKER. It is a loan.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; it says they have already been loaned, but this is a grant.

Mr. BARKER. Could the Steel Company or the Cotton Company dispose of these rails as being their property?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a grant given to them here. If there is a grant of anything given to the hon. gentleman by vote of this parliament, he can do as he likes with it. We have it plainly stated:

To the Halifax Cotton Company of Nova Scotia a grant as subsidy, &c.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, that what he has read is the ordinary transaction whereby a railway company issues its old second-hand rails as a loan to an enterprise that it wants to assist, by allowing a siding. They lend their rails, but the rails belong to the company lending them, and the siding cannot be used for any other purpose than for connection with the railway that lends the rails. Does the hon. gentleman suppose, that in addition to that resolution which he has read, there is not a contract with the Intercolonial Railway, that the Intercolonial Railway does not control that siding as any railway company controls the sidings that are made to connect with its main line? The hon. gentleman knows that is probably the case. But what is the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) doing by this resolution which we are considering? He is giving a subsidy in hard cash to a private individual who is building two and a half miles of track, and that individual, whoever he may be, will receive that money in his own pocket.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman does no credit to his professional ingenuity when he makes such a weak argument as that. This is a grant to the Halifax Cotton Company and the Canada Steel Company. It is not anything but a grant. We have to take it just as we find it; as my hon. friend has just to take what he finds in the present resolution. We are proposing to grant certain aid to this road down at Trois Pistoles. In these resolutions I have quoted, the government of the day brought to parliament a proposal to grant aid, and whether they granted it in rails or cash it made no difference, because the rails represented cash, and it is stated here that they stood in the assets of Canada as so much cash, and they must be brought down to the basis of hard pan in cash value.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman knows that the Railway Department of that day had no power whatever to lend these rails, without coming to parliament and getting authority. They came here and they got authority to lend these rails for the purpose of that siding. If the hon. gentleman will undertake to state that that was an absolute gift of these rails, I have nothing further to say. But the hon. minister has admitted that he cannot say that. The langauge he has read from the resolution does not show more than that parliament had authorized the granting a loan of rails to that company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is mistaken. The resolution distinctly states that these rails are granted to the company. These rails had already been loaned to the company, and it did not need an Act of parliament to loan them.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly it did.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then they had loaned them before, and whether they had loaned them by an Act of parliament or not I do not know.

Mr. BARKER. They loaned them without authority, and they had to come to parliament to get the authority.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) is standing here to abuse the late government, by saying that it did these things without authority.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I protest against this attempt of the hon. gentleman to escape responsibility by attacking the late government. I do not believe the late government would do such thing. I do not believe they would lend the property of the Crown without authority. I am bound to believe that the minister of that day, who, I think, was the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) was a man who observed the law and in his absence to-night I want to defend him against this calumny.

Mr. COCHRANE. He does'nt want your defence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolution distinctly states that it is to be a grant of 233 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the company. They already had them. They were in their possession; they were loaned to them ,and this resolution gives them a free gift, and it gives that gift to them at the net cash price in which it stood in the assets of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to draw attention to the comparison that the acting minister (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has made between this case and the case of the member for Toronto (Mr. Osler), who is a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let me point out that the Canadian Pacific Railway is a railway which is over 4,000 miles long.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How does that affect the question of morals ?

Mr. SPROULE. It affects the question of morals a great deal. This is a railway of 4,000 miles, which has its ramifications all over Canada, supplying the needs of the people, and handling the commerce of the country whether it be the product of the farm or the product of the manufacturer. That company which is engaged in building a highway of commerce for the people of every part of Canada, deserves assistance from this government. There is an hon. member of this House who happens to be a member of that corporation, and because a subsidy is given to that great international railway enterprise, the Minister of Finance thinks that member is as guilty as the member who receives a subsidy for no railway corporation whatever, and a subsidy which is not given for the benefit of the public, but for the private benefit of that member. It does not ask a dollar of it for the accommodation of the public. The public have no interest there, because this corporation owns the land, the timber, the water-power and everything else in the locality.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is what the Canadian Pacific Railway does when it gets a chance.

Mr. SPROULE. It is begging the question to cite that as a parallel case. It is a very unfair comparison to say that the hon. member for West Toronto is doing an equally immoral act to sit in this House when a subsidy is being voted the Canadian Pacific Railway, as the member who represents this company, and who goes to the government and asks for this bonus. It goes largely, you might almost say solely, into his own pocket, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway is building railroads all over the country.

Mr. BARKER. What year was it in which that loan of rails was made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot say in what year the loan was made, but the year from which I quoted was 1888.

Mr. BARKER. I desire to call the attention of the House to the rather peculiar circumstance that the acting Minister of Railways and Canals justifies this grant for two and a half miles of railway by a precedent of fifteen years ago. The hon. gentleman has been looking up the records. He has felt that this subsidy is something very unusual; he has been conscious that he had to justify it, and he has looked back fifteen years to find a case which would justify what he is doing ; and what has he found? He has come here with a report of 1888, and he has taken very good care not to look into the agreement entered into then to ascertain whether it was a loan or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Act fixes that.

Mr. LOGAN. In reference to this loan of rails to the Steel Company of Canada, having some knowledge of the matter, I wish to state that these rails were taken by the steel company, put on their own land, treated as their own property, the company went into liquidation, its assets were sold, and among the assets sold were these same rails.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were not loaned ; they were granted, and the company had a right to sell them.

Mr. CLANCY. The acting Minister of Railways gave my hon. friend from Prince a distinct challenge, and I understood him to say that if application were made from Prince Edward Island under similar conditions, it would be granted. I want to ask the hon. gentleman now if he has dealt with every case of a siding along the Intercolonial Railway in the same manner in which this is being dealt with. If the hon. gentleman is following out a rule that has obtained for many years, whether it is a good rule or a bad one, he will have some excuse for the course he is taking.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let me first note the remark of the hon. gentleman that I said that if an application were made from Prince Edward Island, the same privilege would be granted. I did not say that. I said it would be time enough to consider an application from Prince Edward Island when the application came. So far we have not had any.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is not so generous as I thought he was.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not want to be generous ; I want to be reasonable. I want to point out that I have no right to promise in the name of the government that these things will be done. When applications come forward each one will be dealt with on its merits, and one province will be treated as well as another. The hon. gentleman wants to know if we are dealing with all these cases alike. Yes, where subsidies have been granted for small branch roads, they are granted in the same way ; and my hon. friend sat in this House yesterday and voted—and I am glad he did—for the following item :

For a line of railway from Debert station on the Intercolonial Railway to Coal Mine, not exceeding 4½ miles.

A difference of a mile or two makes no difference, and if I had time to go through the books I could find a number of cases in which small branch lines have received subsidies. I think I have answered the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not answered it at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not in the way the hon. gentleman wanted.

Mr. CLANCY. The way I want is a direct answer to a direct question. The hon. gentleman has so far evaded it. I shall repeat the question again. There are constant applications for sidings or branch lines ; you may call them either. Has it been the policy in the past and is it still the policy of the government of the day to treat all these applications alike ? If the hon. gentleman is prepared to admit that that is not the case, he is out of court.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not been dealing with the question of sidings. I am confining myself to branches, and I am pointing out that in granting a subsidy to aid a road two and a half miles in length, we are not doing anything that is new.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, if after the railway is finished, this company which owns this timber and this land, exercises the privilege of selling the railroad as well as the land, will it become their property ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This appropriation does not go to any particular company. It stands exactly in the same position as any other railway subsidy, and arrangements would have to be made to have a contract as far as possible under the same terms and conditions as in the case of other subsidies. We have not made any arrangement which enables me to answer my hon. friend's question, except to state the general policy in relation to all roads of a like character.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Will this branch belong to the country or to this company, and will the subsidy raise the value of their property provided they want to sell it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will stand in exactly the same position as all these other appropriations to companies. These roads will belong to the respective companies subject to the terms and conditions of the Railway Act.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I am asking the minister a very plain question, and I would like a plain answer. If this timber company sell the property shortly after the road is completed, will they sell the bonus which this country is giving them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will stand in exactly the same position as any other railway company. It will be in the same condition as respects this bonus as the Canadian Pacific Railway will be with respect to the $3,300,000 which we gave it for the Crow's Nest Railway. The principle is the same, the amount is nothing.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid that the next thing will be an application for money to buy out this branch of the Intercolonial. We will pay the subsidy and then buy the road back.

To the Matane and Gaspé Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near St. Octave on the Intercolonial Railway to Matane, not exceeding 30 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is for a railway from the Intercolonial at Metis down to the St. Lawrence at Matane. The distance is thirty miles. There is no communication at all for these people after navigation is closed.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there a company chartered for this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, it has had a charter for several years.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to find out how many lines of railway are subsidized by these resolutions in each of the provinces, and what is the aggregate of the money voted for each of the provinces respectively in these railway subsidies ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not made any statement from a provincial point of view.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not the hon. gentleman get that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is it necessary ? Why should we be provincial ?

Mr. SPROULE. It is not for the hon. gentleman to say whether it is necessary or not, if I desire the information. I am asking what is reasonable. There may be nothing wrong, and I am not saying there is ; but if it were only to satisfy ordinary curiosity, the question is a reasonable one to ask.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid that if I make out a statement by provinces, my own province will not look well, and I will be accused of having been unfair to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to get the information in some way or other and in other lines as well. We are entitled to it, so as to be able to make comparisons. It will not take much work for the hon. minister to get it if he desires to be agreeable.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I like to be agreeable.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the hon. gentleman will agree to give it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I had rather my hon. friend would make it himself. I might make a mistake and I want him to be responsible.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a little lower than we would expect from the hon. gentleman, to treat a member of the House in that way. I do not think it is proper treatment. The question is a reasonable one and he can get the information in a short time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to consider it and not ask me to make a promise ?

Mr. SPROULE. I want to know if I can get it. If I do not get it I will have to analyse these subsidies.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Do not stop, go on, we have not heard from the hon. gentleman this session.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman awakened ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are in the eighth month of the session. The hon. gentleman has spoken several times every day these eight months. Do not deprive us of the pleasure of hearing him again in the dying moments. Let him continue to make himself a standing nuisance until the end of the session.

Mr. SPROULE. That statement is absolutely untrue. I tell the Postmaster General that to his face. He should be the last man to make such a statement. I am asking for what I regard as proper information and I desire to know whether I shall get it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it is a very proper question, but I am not refusing the request. I cannot prevent his getting the information because he can make out the statement himself. Therefore my answer does not prevent his getting it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not treating hon. members with even ordinary courtesy. If the hon. gentleman had been asked something very unreasonable, I might be met with such a reply ; but I am not, and I respectfully submit that the 'put-off' style of the hon. minister is not what we might expect from him. He has granted many more requests much more difficult to comply with. I want to know whether he is prepared to give this information, which he might easily get ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We can both easily get it. My hon. friend and I and anybody else can get it in half an hour, but what I do not like is the hon. gentleman insisting on looking at these things from a provincial point of view. I know that he can take larger views. I do not refuse to give him the information, and he can get it even if I did refuse.

Mr. SPROULE. Only a few years ago we had a very lengthy discussion in which the right hon. the First Minister took part. The right hon. gentleman then showed conclusively to my judgment, that in the distribution of money for public works he had made what I regarded as a very fair distribution among the provinces—much fairer than the Conservative party did when they were in power. In my own campaign I admitted that I believed it was a fair distribution. It was quite proper for the hon. gentleman to do that, and I do not see why it should be improper for me to go into the same inquiry. I am not contending that there is anything wrong, but I desire to ascertain how far the distribution of these subsidies complies with the principle laid down by the right hon. gentleman some years ago, which I thought perfectly defensible in every particular. Surely if I can point to so high an authority for dealing with the question in the manner I suggest, I am not making an unreasonable request.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In view of the very handsome manner in which my hon. friend has acknowledged that this government has made a very fair and equitable distribution of the public funds as regards the different provinces, I will give him the information he requires.

To the Chateauguay and Northern Railway Company for a line of railway from a point on its main line at or near L'Epiphanie, passing by way of the parish of St. Jacques d'Achigan to the village of Rawdon, not exceeding 16 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. At this moment there is a railway being built from Montreal to Joliette to join Montreal to the Great Northern at Joliette by way of the Bout de l'Ile bridge, which is intended to provide for a branch from l'Epiphanie up to the village of Rawdon in the county of Montcalm, which section of country is not provided at all with railways.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a company prepared to build this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The company is described in the resolution—the Chateauguay and Northern.

Mr. SPROULE. Is any of the road built now ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The road is now under construction. This is a new branch.

For a line of railway from the line of the Montreal and Atlantic Railway Company at St. Guillaume to the River Yamaska to join with the South Shore Railway, a distance not exceeding 12 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a railway to connect two railways. There is a railway passing St. Guillaume, the name of which I have forgotten at the moment and another road, the South Shore Railway, and a bridge on the Yamaska to connect the two and serve this section of country. The distance is 12 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. The company has a portion of the road built ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, this is an independent road. The South Shore skirts the St. Lawrence, but St. Guillaume is inland.

For a line of railway from La Tuque on the St. Maurice river to a point on the Lake St. John Railway near the River Jeannotte, not exceeding 35 miles.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Lake St. John Railway, as I explained on a previous vote, runs from Quebec to Lake St. John. This proposed railway is a branch westward, from a point on the Lake St. John road to the St. Maurice river, opening up a new section of country. It will be a good colonization road.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a charter for the road ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am informed that there is.

Mr. SPROULE. A provincial charter ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand so, but I have no personal knowledge.

To the Montreal Northern Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near Ste. Agathe des Monts station towards the township of Howard, in the county of Argenteuil, passing near Lake St. Joseph.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is a colonization road entirely.

Mr. SPROULE. Starting from Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, but from Ste. Agathe des Monts, 63 miles from Montreal. It opens up a country that has neither railway nor water communication. Half the road is already built, having begun early in the spring. The charter is a local one.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Has the local government given assistance to this road ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not a cent as yet.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). If the local government gives the charter, and a subsidy is needed, the local government should begin the subsidizing. If a further subsidy is needed this government may be appealed to. But it is not a good condition of things to have the charter granted by the local government and then the company come here for assistance. If this is a local line, it should not get a Dominion subsidy. It certainly should not receive a subsidy unless the province gives one.

To the Beersville Coal and Railway Company for a line of railway from Adamsville on the Intercolonial Railway to a point at or near Brown's Landing or Beersville, not exceeding seven miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This line is intended to open up a new coal district. There have been some operations in coal mining in New Brunswick in recent years, and it is represented that there is a deposit of coal near Adamsville, in the county of Kent. This is to assist the line to develop the mining.

Mr. FOWLER. This is one subsidy that is justified by the circumstances.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to see that that brings a smile to the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite. The fact is that this railway will enable the Intercolonial to obtain coal much more cheaply than at present. They must now haul coal from Nova Scotia, but, with this road built, they will be able to get coal of a superior quality and much more conveniently. Of course, it would be much better if the Intercolonial would build this road themselves. That would be my choice by all means. I believe that the Intercolonial should own all these branches. They should own the Central Railway, the Albert Railway, the Kent Northern and all these different branches. These roads could be operated much more cheaply than at present, for one staff would do for all, and they could be operated much more beneficially to the people of the district. As to this proposed road, I believe it will be a saving to the Intercolonial to build it.

To the York and Carleton Railway Company for a line of railway from its present terminus westerly, not exceeding five miles.

Mr. GIBSON. This line runs from a point in the county of York to the St. John river. It runs in a westerly direction. The total proposed line is about 40 miles in length. The company have six miles built and running, and this will assist them to extend it five miles.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this owned by a railway company ?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, the York and Carleton Railway Company.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the one the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) himself owns ?

Mr. GIBSON. No, I have no interest in it at all.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the one that is generally called——

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. gentleman is thinking of the Canada Eastern. This is another company altogether.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this run from a point on the Canada Eastern ?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, Cross Creek.

Mr. FOWLER. And runs to what point ?

Mr. GIBSON. Perth.

To the Midland Railway Company, Limited, for a line of railway from Truro northerly towards Brule, not exceeding 34 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a line of railway, the promoters of which anticipate, I think, making Brule the point of another crossing to Prince Edward Island. Many years ago Brule was a point for crossing to Prince Edward Island. However, of late years other points have been used. The promoters, I think, will attempt to re-establish a line from Brule to Prince Edward Island.

For a line of railway from St. Peters to Louisburg, not exceeding 50 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a road on the south side of Cape Breton island. Hon. gentlemen who were in the House many years ago may recollect that there was what was called a battle of the routes as to which side of the island the railway should run. The government line was constructed by the central route. At the southern portion of Cape Breton island, quite a large territory, was for some years without any railway communication. Some years ago a company composed chiefly of Americans obtained a charter for a road down that coast. They have built from the Strait of Canso as far as St. Peters. The line has recently been put into operation. This will give them a right to extend the line from St. Peters down on the south side of Cape Breton island to Louisburg.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that in their application they request a subsidy for bridges. Do the government propose to do anything in respect of bridges ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The company's application covered considerably more than we are giving them, and I am afraid that can be said of a good number of applications—we have not given all they have asked. As they have now built as far as St. Peters, we have given them this grant down to Louisburg.

Mr. CLANCY. Is not a portion of this to be used for the construction of bridges ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, this is for an ordinary railway appropriation.

To the Kootenay Central Railway Company for a line of railway from Golden to the international boundary line, via Windermere and Fort Steele, and crossing the Crow's Nest Railway at or near Elko, not exceeding 106 miles.

Mr. GALLIHER. In connection with this subsidy, I may say that the company have a charter for a line from the international boundary to Golden, which was this year extended to Fort George, on the Fraser river. That line starting at the international boundary line, crossing the Crow's nest line at Elko, passing through what is known as the Wigwam river country, a rich district of the south-east Kootenay, goes up to Fort Steele, passes along the valley of the Kootenay river through a rich mineral district where we have mines in an initial stage only waiting for transportation. It also passes through a ranching country, and a country where there are some very fair timber limits. Then it continues on from Windermere and goes down the valley of the Columbia river to Golden, passing also through a country where we have the rich Paradise mine, and the Ptarmigan mine, both producing and shipping mines ; also through a country settled by ranchers, from the town of Golden to the town of Windermere. That will open up a district which is now entirely without railway communication, and will connect it with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In fact it will be within easy reach of the Great Northern Railway on the south, which runs now from Jennings, Montana, up to Morrisey mines, in British Columbia, also connecting with the Crow's nest line at Elko, and with the Canadian Pacific Railway line at Golden. I speak of these two mines as being in the producing stage. There are a number of valuable properties there only waiting for transportation facilities.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any lumber there?

Mr. GALLIHER. There is lumber all along the valleys of both the Columbia and the Kootenay rivers. The Columbia Lumber Company have lumber interests all through both valleys.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any portion of this built ?

Mr. GALLIHER. None as yet. We got our Dominion charter this year. Surveys have been made over a portion of the road. The parties connected with this railway have strong financial backing in London. Mr. Pollen is one of the chief men in the transaction, the others are mostly local people, Fort Steele people. An application was made to the provincial government of British Columbia during the last sesion. The session lasted a very short time, and a number of railway subsidies that had been applied for were cut off, they did not come up. But I am told that they have reasonable assurance of aid from the provincial government.

To the Kettle River Valley Railway Company for a line of railway from Grand Forks to a point fifty miles up the north fork and west fork of the north fork of Kettle river, not exceeding 50 miles.

Mr. GALLIHER. This is also in my district. It is what is called the Hot Air Line. We are asking for a subsidy to continue that line further into the country. We hope to be able to make use of it in exploiting the mountains of mineral up in the North Fork district. This company, in the first place, have already built a road from Republic, in the state of Washington, crossing the boundary at Cascade, and continuing on to Grand Forks, in British territory. It is about sixty miles to Grand Forks. A portion of that is in Canadian territory. They have received no aid so far, but they are now asking for aid to continue that line from Grand Forks up the North Fork of the Kettle river, to the confluence of what is known as the West Fork of the North Fork, and then to continue up that West Fork, in all a distance of fifty miles from Grand Forks. That also taps a rich mineral country, rich in gold, copper and silver. Further, it taps a fine coaking coal district, a necessary item in southern British Columbia for smelting purposes. They are asking for this bonus to aid in the construction of this proposed line of road for fifty miles. It is an expensive line to build.

For a line of railway from Wellington to Union Bay, not exceeding 55 miles.

Mr. MORRISON. That line is in the northern part of Vancouver Island. It is an extension of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway and connects the important coal fields of Comox and the mines at Alberni on the west coast of Vancouver Island with the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway system and Victoria and Vancouver.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That line is at Wellington now.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway extends from Victoria and Nanaimo to Wellington and this is an extension north.

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that just the same number of miles of road would give to the county of Colchester great satisfaction. I do not wish to oppose this item excepting in order to solicit the sympathy of the gentlemen who are pressing this item for the county of Colchester. I received a letter a few days ago from a leading Liberal in my county. The Liberals there have such confidence in me that if they want any solace they write me. The Minister of Finance will know the name of this gentleman and will communicate it to him in confidence, but as his letter is a private one I cannot mention the name publicly. This gentleman says :

I am sorry to say we are going to lose some more of our good citizens. I. B. Morrison, Mr. Finley Corbett, Silas Corbett and son leave shortly for the west, probably California. Never in the history of West Colchester has there been any such exodus and disgust that exists along the shore as has taken place in the last two years. If this thing goes on for five years more the west end of the county will contain nothing but a few old men.

Now, I do not like to read what follows, coming from a Liberal, because it is sad.

If a change of government will accomplish anything the sooner it comes the better.

That is the opinion of a very fine Liberal who is forced to say that I have no doubt, owing to the bitter fact that he has seen his neighbours leaving the country. This man lives on Cobequid bay, an arm of the Bay of Fundy which separates Cumberland from my own constituency. Formerly the coach line ran along there and all of the roads went down this bay and this was then the centre of population. People depended on the water for their transportation. When the Intercolonial Railway was built it was swung about fifteen or twenty miles to the east of these people and they soon found themselves side tracked. All the business formerly done along the shore of the bay is now done along the line of the Intercolonial Railway and the result is now as this gentleman tells me, that these people are emigrating and that in four or five years there will be nothing but old men in as fine a section of country as there is in Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How far are they from a railway ?

Mr. GOURLEY. We want a road from Truro to Parrsboro. Near Truro the Intercolonial Railway will not be more than two miles away, but as you get down eight or twelve miles from Truro it is perhaps ten miles away, and down near the shore the average distance would be fifteen or twenty miles. The shore country in the old days was most fertile. At a railway meeting there last year, one farmer, a very fine gentleman, assured the meeting that twenty two years ago he had inherited an estate from his father which was valued by the executors at $6,000. It is a large estate containing marsh, and it was on the through road and he said that now he could not get $2,000 for it because there was no railway near; all the trade had gone back twenty miles to the line of the Intercolonial Railway so that the property along the line of that railway which was formerly considered of no value is now worth more than his fine marsh farm. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) must be interested in this matter because when the railway gets to Parrsboro it will enter his county and ultimately be extended along the shore so as to make a continuous connection with the Intercolonial Railway. It is only fifty-five miles and is through a very level country, in fact the Intercolonial Railway was originally surveyed over this route going south of the Cobequid mountains. The interest of the iron mine at Londonderry and the Springhill mines at that time required the railway to be taken across the Cobequid mountains and as the people on the shore at that time had the water communication it was thought better to take the Intercolonial Railway over its present line ; but these people have found that the value of their property has dwindled away. I may say of the gentlemen who are referred to here that Mr. Morrison was a leading Liberal, Mr. Corbett, I think, is a Conservative. These men are middle aged, forty or fifty, and they are taking their families away from what were formerly beautiful farms. This extraordinary state of affairs exists simply because we are backward in building railways. Young people will not stay now ten or fifteen miles from a railway. They want the mails and want the brightness of the trains and they want to have travellers going through. A railway brings brightness and lightness to a community. Owing to the absence of railways this is now almost a deserted country although it was formerly one of the finest countries in the world.

Mr. McCREARY. Why does not your local legislature subsidize a railway ?

Mr. GOURLEY. The local legislature will, but I want this Dominion government to set the example and then we will force the local to follow suit. I know that the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) will agree with me that this proposal is most meritorious in every particular and one which will aid a number of lumber industries. The road will go straight past the furniture factory of which I spoke the other night as needing a light on the wharf and the whole country would then be restored to prosperity. Then if we had another short line from Brookfield to Stewiacke, thirty or forty miles, it would open up a great country. The minister will recollect that Stewiacke is in a fine country but it is to-day thirty or forty miles from a railway and the young people are leaving it. The county of Colchester, during the census decade 1890-1900, lost over 4,000 population although it is one of the best counties in Nova Scotia. If the people will not stay in a country like that owing to the want of railways they will not stay anywhere where there are not railways. Therefore I have taken the position in this parliament that the time has come when we must have railways. The railway is the modern highway and is to-day as necessary to the community as the old high road was thirty or forty years ago. We must come to that view and adapt ourselves to the situation. I would ask the hon. minister to give some consideration to this Stewiacke railway. I am in the awkward position of not supporting the hon. gentleman politically and therefore I am not as much in touch with him as I should otherwise be, and I do not know that I have any other way of approaching him or if he would care to have me approach him in any other way, but I would like him to consider my application and to insert something like reasonable subsidies. We should be liberal in these matters. Some people think that $3,200 a mile is a great temptation to build a railway. Unless the railway has an immediate commercial outlook, $3,200 is a trifling inducement and I would urge upon the minister to consider that the railways to which I have referred would serve our part of the country and would make the population there happy and contented, would induce them to stay at home and would lead to an increase in the population and the subsidy ought to be at least doubled. That is what this country wants.

I thank the minister for granting the subsidy for the Midland line. And I hope it will succeed in getting that railway started. But these two railways to which I have referred are equally important, and I think I may say for my colleagues surrounding me, that they would have no objection if the Minister of Finance would agree to insert two subsidies for them in these resolutions. I have calculated that we will probably have $10,000,000 more next year than we had this year, giving us a total revenue of $75,000,000 or $76,000,000, and consequently we need not be penurious in these matters. These railways would be of the utmost importance to this large section of the country. They are both in the Stewiacke section and the Londonderry section, in which the stalward Liberals of the county reside. I would therefore ask the Finance Minister to include in these subsidies a double subsidy for thirty-four miles and another double subsidy for fifty-five miles, which subsidies would result in great advantage to the Dominion of Canada, because they would result in making that part of Nova Scotia happy, and contented, and cause it to enter on a career of prosperity.

Mr. LOGAN. I endorse what the hon. gentleman has said as to the need of a railway between Truro and Parrsboro, running from Truro through Economy and Five Islands to Parrsboro. This important part of the country is very badly in need of a railway. It is not only a long distance from any existing railway, but it is separated from that railway by a chain of mountains.

Mr. GOURLEY. Yes; I forgot to mention that.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know any part of Canada that is in more need of railway facilities than that which the hon. gentleman has just mentioned. I endorse what he has said, and I urge upon the government the importance of providing better railway accommodation for the people of this section of the country.

Mr. McCREARY. It is a reflection upon the agricultural capabilities of Nova Scotia, to say that men will leave that province because they have not a railway within ten or twelve miles of them. How did we settle the province of Manitoba and the prairies, when the people had to carry their wheat seventy and eighty miles to a railway station ? It is not until within the last four or five years, when the province of Manitoba itself bonused roads, that the majority of settlers have been able to get a railway within ten or twelve miles of them. Yet here is the province of Nova Scotia, settled for a hundred years before Manitoba was known, and it comes to the Dominion and asks for subsidies when the inhabitants already have railways not more than ten or twelve miles away. I was told by one of the ministers this session, that the reason why there were such large grants to the maritime provinces for wharfs and breakwaters, was because the means of locomotion in the maritime provinces was by water. Now I see that they come here and ask us for large grants for railways as well. In the province of Manitoba, which is to-day yielding more revenue to the Dominion of Canada than any other province in confederation per head of population——

Mr. GALLIHER. No.

Mr. McCREARY. I am making the statement, and I know what I am saying. Take our bank returns, post office returns, inland revenue returns, customs returns, and they are ahead of any other province per capita.

Mr. GALLIHER. Except British Columbia.

Mr. McCREARY. We exceed British Columbia by $100,000, according to population.

Mr. GALLIHER. No you don't.

Mr. McCREARY. I will leave it to the Minister of Customs, the Minister of Inland Revenue or the Postmaster General. Our post office revenue to-day is nearly as much as for the entire province of British Columbia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McCREARY. I know what I am saying, and notwithstanding that, all that is voted for the province of Manitoba here is practically thirty-six miles of railway. I will ask the minister next year to seriously consider relieving the province of Manitoba from the large obligations which they have undertaken to build railways. If they do it for other provinces, there is no reason why they should not do it for Manitoba.

Mr. TALBOT. How many miles of railway did you say were subsidized in Manitoba this year ?

Mr. McCREARY. Thirty-six.

Mr. TALBOT. Look at the list and you will find 139 miles.

Mr. McCREARY. You are talking about the Territories. There are only 36 miles for Manitoba, and that is a re-vote.

Mr. LOGAN. You can scarcely throw a stone in the province of Manitoba without hitting a railway.

Mr. McCREARY. We built them ourselves.

Mr. LOGAN. I will guarantee that my hon. friend from Colchester and myself will be perfectly satisfied if we get one-quarter the railways in Nova Scotia that you have in Manitoba.

Mr. GALLIHER. I desire to correct my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) and to state that the province of British Columbia contributes more money to the Dominion treasury per capita than does any other province in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. McCREARY.

For a line of railway from Midway to Vernon, not exceeding 150 miles.

Mr. GALLIHER. This railway runs from Midway in the Boundary country ; or rather the charter is from Midway to the town of Vernon. It starts from Midway, goes up the west fork of the Kettle river, thence east of the Okanagan lake to the Okanagan falls, five miles from Vernon, where it will join with what is now known as the Shuswap and Okanagan road, running from that point to join the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Sicamous Junction. That will connect the great farming, ranching, and fruit growing district of the Okanagan around Vernon, Armstrong, Kelowna, Enderby, Peachland and White Valley, with the mineral districts of the south, thus affording these districts access to their natural market. The government could not possibly give a subsidy which will produce better results, than this very subsidy under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any company ready to undertake this work ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Oh, yes ; the Midway and Vernon Railway Company have applied for this.

Mr. SPROULE. They have not built yet ?

Mr. GALLIHER. No. I may state that there is a provincial subsidy for this line amounting to $4,500 per mile, payable in provincial bonds.

To the St. Mary's River Railway Company for a line of railway from Spring Coulee, crossing St. Mary's river to Cardston, sixteen miles, and from a point on this line to or near the intake of the Irrigation canal, about sixteen miles, in all not exceeding 32 miles. Total, 48.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is what is known as the Galt road.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did they get a charter this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, they have built a considerable portion of the road. This country is being settled up a great deal and splendid results have followed the irrigation works established by the company. I am satisfied that this road is worthy of every assistance we can give it.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not quite understand about mileage here. In the margin it says forty-eight miles, but in the resolution it says : In all not exceeding thirty-two miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there is an error there. We will make it thirty-two miles.

Resolution, as amended, agreed to.

For a line of railway from Dawson city to Stewart river, passing at or near Grand Forks, not exceeding 84 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a proposal to build a road as described in the item. Application is made on behalf of the Klondike Mines Railway Company, by its solicitor at Ottawa. I understand that it is a very substantial company. This road, if constructed, will be the most northern road on the continent of America. I think we are all anxious to develop the Yukon country, and if we can give the people internal railway communication, even though we have not yet a connection with the Yukon, I think it will be very desirable.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the object of the road ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a general railway to provide communication between different sections there.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In view of the fact that Canada has no entrance to the Yukon and no port to the Yukon on the Pacific ocean, are the government taking into their serious consideration the advisability of building a railway to the Yukon through Canadian territory ? I wanted the Prime Minister a year ago to pledge himself that he would build a road from Kitimat Arm.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will have to do that now since the award.

To the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for a branch line from a point on the main line between Moosomin and Elkhorn, north-westerly to a point in the neighbourhood of the Pheasant Hills, not exceeding 136 miles.

Mr. SCOTT. I am going to ask the minister if he will let this item stand. I fear there are some questions which I shall have to ask concerning the proposal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will have a chance later on when the Bill is in committee.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the minister who is the applicant for this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. SCOTT. Like my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) last night, I am to a considerable degree surprised to hear that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been an applicant for a subsidy, in view of the fact that we have been told by a prominent director of that company in recent years that it opposes the principle of parliament granting railway subsidies. Was the company the only applicant ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For this particular road, yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not satisfied that this item should be adopted. Yesterday evening the hon. Postmaster General gave a piece of very god advice to the House. He said that if any hon. member objected to the policy of subsidies in general or to any particular subsidy in particular, he should move against it, and I fear that it will be necessary for me to make such a motion in regard to this particular proposition, which I am bound to say does not meet with my approval. I am not opposed in general to the policy of granting subsidies ; but there are certain conditions which I think are necessary to make the granting of subsidies justifiable. I am willing in all cases to vote for proper and reasonable assistance for railways in districts where people require railway accommodation and cannot obtain it in any other way. My information concerning this particular proposition may not be full or precisely accurate ; but my impression is that the greater part of the line for which this subsidy is proposed to be voted is already constructed. This is for a branch line of the Canadian Pacific Railway commencing at a point called Kirkella between Elkhorn and Moosomin, just on the boundary line between Manitoba and Assiniboia, which runs northwesterly from the main line of the Pacific. The construction of the road was commenced eighteen or nineteen months ago, and my impression is that practically the whole of the 136 miles mentioned here have been graded and nearly 100 miles have been ironed. My recollection also is that we have been told in the Railway Committee on more than one occasion by representatives of the company that this particular line was being constructed without any aid and that they did not propose to ask for aid.

Mr. CLANCY. Was the charter for that road applied for during the present session ?

Mr. SCOTT. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Then it surely did not come up during the present session.

Mr. SCOTT. This particular road has been mentioned in connection with other charters applied for by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and by other companies, and my recollection is that the representatives of the company stated on more than one occasion that this road was being built without any aid. It does seem to me a strange proposition to grant a subsidy to procure the construction of a road for the benefit of the people when in fact the road is already constructed. It does not seem to be necessary to aid it ; and, with my present information, I am bound to say that this proposition does not appeal to me as being a proper one.

Mr. CLANCY. Has not the hon. gentleman voted for several schemes of the same kind ?

Mr. SCOTT. Not to my knowledge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I am supporting a subsidy, speaking for myself, I do not take into consideration so much the company which is to be benefited as the interest of the public in the section of country which is to be served by the railway. I do not think we should lay too much stress on statements made by individuals in the course of their arguments in the Railway Committee or even in this House ; because they have no authority to speak for the company or for the public in that particular district. No member of this House, I suppose, is particularly anxious to grant a subsidy to any railway company, even the Canadian Pacific Railway; but some years ago there was a great demand by the settlers in this district for further railway accommodation. As the House well knows, no subsidies were granted a year ago, and when the people of this district were asking for further railway facilities, they were probably told that they would receive the same consideration from parliament and the same recommendation from the government as other sections of the country where the government felt that further railway facilities should be provided. They proceeded with the construction of this road, believing that they would receive the same treatment as any other responsible company, the road is opening up a good district of country, and I do not think my hon. friend should press his objection.

Mr. INGRAM. I take it that this railway is to run through the constituency of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). When he reads 'Hansard,' the hon. gentleman will find that the remarks he has made with regard to it were very guarded. If he will subtract what he thinks and his impressions and recollections, there will be very little left. Before he attempts to furnish us with information, he should be more definite and state the actual facts. I do not think it is any argument that because a director of any company is opposed to subsidies, we should not give his company a subsidy to which it is entitled. One of the directors may be opposed to subsidies and the others may be in favour of it, and the public also, and we must not consider simply the one dissenting director. The hon. gentleman to whom the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) referred, is not present. He may have no personal knowledge of this subsidy or anything in connection with it, and it is hardly fair to make his presumed dissent a reason for opposing the grant, if it be a deserving one.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I to understand that the railway is already built ?

Mr. SCOTT. It is a matter of common knowledge that its construction was begun in the early part of last year. My information is that the line for this distance is all graded, and that the greater portion of it is already ironed. In fact the people in the districts along this route were assured a year ago that the line would, by the end of this fall, be constructed to a much greater distance than these 136 miles. Hon. members must recollect that this particular line was the subject of very considerable discussion in years gone by. Two years ago it occupied a considerable portion of the time of this House. Three years ago a contract or agreement was entered into by the company to build year by year a certain portion—twenty-one miles, if not more. It appears to me that the fact that such an agreement was entered into without any stipulation that aid should be granted in the way of a subsidy, ought to weigh very considerably with this committee. The idea that aid is to be granted for the construction of this road will be a matter of very great surprise to everybody in the district. Three or four years ago, when the people had been waiting for years and appealing for years to the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway to take some steps which would secure the building of this line, the proposition to grant it a subsidy would then have been understood, but the appeals of the people did not have much weight with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the government until now. After more encouragement in the way of business, I suppose, had been offered to the company, they decided over a year ago to begin the construction of this railway, and this particular mileage has been, to all intents and purposes, completed. To the people along the route, it will be a matter of very great surprise to learn that parliament, at this late day, determines to grant aid to a proposition which is practically completed. If the proposition were to grant aid to 136 miles of road from Pheasant Hills westward, and thus give railway facilities to communities which are still without the means of transportation, it would be one we could understand, but no reason has been advanced yet which leads me to consider that the proposition before us is in any sense justifiable.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is quite true that this railway was commenced last year and is nearly completed. It would have been subsidized last year, but no subsidies were then granted, and the company went on in the expectation of getting a subsidy as soon as subsidies would be granted.

Mr. CLANCY. Had the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), when we heard the resolution to subsidize a road going through the St. John district, given attention to what was going on, he would have seen that the committee regarded the fact that the road was under construction as rather a favourable indication that the project would be carried out, and were all the more disposed to grant the subsidy. I know nothing about the merits of the road in question, but the best security which the country can have that the promoters are in earnest, when asking for a subsidy, is the fact that they committee regarded the fact that the road will open up a new district to colonization, and is deserving of a subsidy, the fact that it is partially or wholly constructed does not detract from its claim.

Mr. BLAIN. I might remind the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia that we have granted a subsidy to a short line of railway which was completed last spring.

Mr. SPROULE. From my personal knowledge of the people living out along this line, this road is very much needed. We have been trying to get a road built through that district for the last twenty years. Twice a portion of that road has been built, but somehow or other the company burst up, and the enterprise failed. There are many farmers, with whom I am well acquainted, who went out there some sixteen or twenty years ago, and who, up to last fall, have been without any railway convenience, and I do think, from my knowledge of the country, that this railway will certainly be of great advantage to the people and is deserving of aid.

Mr. SCOTT. In view of the chorus of disapproval which came from the opposite side last evening in general against the policy of granting subsidies to railway companies, it is rather surprising that when an hon. gentleman gets up and submits practical objections against some particular item, he is greeted from the other side with a chorus of commendation of the whole policy of granting subsidies and especially of the particular item under consideration. I feel impelled to accept the advice given by the Postmaster General last evening. This proposition is not one which I can conscientiously support, and I beg to move that this item be struck out.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The only thing I see to criticise in this subsidy is that the road runs from a point between Moosomin and Elkhorn. Why not say Kirkella ? The railway is necessary, and I do not object to the bonus. In fact, I think it is a very proper and necessary road to assist. But I do not like this coming down and deceiving the committee. The road starts from Kirkella.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is what it means.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Then why not say so ? The road is already built. We all know that.

Mr. FOWLER. I enter my protest against this vote. I agree with what has been said by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). This road, I understand, is built through an important part of the western country. I believe that it will pay its running expenses and interest upon the investment. It has already been built without subsidy or promise of a subsidy. And yet this House, in its generosity, proposes to grant a subsidy for 136 miles through a country so rich and of such promise that the company has begun the work and practically completed it before even asking for a subsidy. We do not it seems confine ourselves to granting subsidies to encourage the building of roads, but we grant subsidies for roads already built. I am sorry the motion of the hon. member for West Assiniboia did not carry, for it seems plain to me that this subsidy should not be granted.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Here is an opportunity for the government to control rates under an actual agreement, not the visionary control of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or the still more visionary control of this less effective and far more corruptible body, the proposed commission, but a genuine control under agreement. I do not agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) who sits beside me. I believe this bonus should be given, but I believe also that some control of rates should go with it. I happened to have an instance of what can be done brought before me the other day. A young man came from the North-west who was proposing to open a route to connect with the Pasqua branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Dakota. A part of the route would be covered by steamer transportation on a long lake that crosses the boundary. It was estimated that it would cost only three cents a bushel to bring the grain from the district to be served by this route to the Pasqua branch. At present they have to haul the grain twenty miles to the Canadian Pacific Railway. By the new route they figured they would save from four cents to seven cents a bushel. The matter was brought before the Minister of Customs, and it was decided that it would not be possible to allow the arrangement. But it was pointed out that if the farmers in that district gave the seven cents per bushel that they would save on three season's crop, they could build a road to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, this road that we are bonusing runs through a farming section, and I take it to be the government's business to see to it that the farmers of that country get the benefit of this $3,200 a mile that we vote ; and the way to secure that benefit for them is to properly regulate the rates. If that is not done, what is the use of voting this money ? If the farmers pay as high rates as ever, we might as well withhold our assistance. Every road that receives a subsidy should have its rates controlled, not, as I say, by this visionary organization, the railway commission, or by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, but by a hard and fast agreement under the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that section 6 of these resolutions provides that 'the Governor in Council shall have absolute control at all times over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or by any of the railways, hereby subsidized.'

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Governor in Council doesn't amount to a hill of beans, so far as the controlling of these rates is concerned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) is not loyal to the Crown.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not if the Crown is supposed to mean the Prime Minister and the fellows behind him, who are pulling on all sides. The Mackenzie & Mann road, the Canadian Northern, affords an illustration of what I want. They have an agreement with the Manitoba government that the rates shall be controlled thus and so. The people are behind the agreement, and no matter how much the government might like to please the railway company by allowing the rates to remain high, the voice of the people controls and the law has to be observed.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is the law also, and the voice of the people is behind it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The right hon. Prime Minister knows well that the moment you mention 'Governor in Council' the people bow. They demand nothing; they are afraid.

The PRIME MINISTER. The people, including Colonel Hughes?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am only one of the people, and I am not in the Northwest.

Mr. SCOTT. As the House is apparently unanimous in favour of this grant, it may be superfluous for me to say anything further. But I feel that notwithstanding that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) did not give me any support, I ought to support his contention in this case. This session a very considerable amount of aid was granted to another company, the Canadian Northern, to extend their present line to Prince Albert and Edmonton, and a hard and fast contract was demanded of that company, was forced upon them, providing that they should haul North-west wheat on a ten-cent basis from Winnipeg to the lakes. It seems to me it is not fair to make fowl of one company and flesh of another. If it is fair to compel the Canadian Northern to give a contract for maximum rates, then aid granted to this other company should carry with it a similar condition. In this case we should make a contract with the company with regard to the rates to be charged to the people in the district.

For a line of railway from a point at or near Medicine Hat on the Canadian Pacific Railway to the coal fields in or near townships 12 and 13, range 6, west of fourth principal meridian, not exceeding eight miles.

Mr. FOWLER. Let us have an explanation of this.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. SCOTT. This is an item which I think is entirely justifiable. The aid is being granted to a road from the town of Medicine Hat, in a southwesterly direction, to the coal fields about eight miles distant from the town. A land grant was voted for this road some years ago, but that has been cancelled.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) should know more about it than I do. But I thought this road ran northerly, that it was part of the old road intended to run to Buffalo lake and up to the coal lands. But the exact direction is immaterial. The road will open up large coal mines near Medicine Hat, the opening of which is very necessary for the people of that community.

Mr. FOWLER. Might I ask in what direction the road is to run? Does it run north or south?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The material point is that it runs to the coal fields.

Mr. INGRAM. This is opening up a new policy entirely. Is it the policy of the government to grant bonuses for the purpose of extending railways to coal fields?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not wise to adopt general policies in these things. This case may be taken on its merits. But the extension of railways to coal fields would not be a bad idea if it were made a general principle.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The coal mines are in townships 12 and 13, range 6, north of Medicine Hat, down the river.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend is mistaken about this. I am perfectly certain that the road runs in a southwesterly direction.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister says it might be a good policy for the government to adopt. I would like to draw attention to the fact that the press of Canada has been calling upon the government of the Dominion, as well as upon the territorial and provincial governments, to assist in building lines that will enable the people to procure fuel, which is not plentiful in that western country. I agree with the hon. gentleman when he says that it is an important thing to assist railways to these coal mines, because it is a well known fact that large portions of that new territory are so thinly populated that it would not pay a railway company to build a line to these coal fields without public assistance. I trust the government will take that matter into consideration, because it is in the interests of the people who are being sent in there. They have little or no wood, with which the people in the older provinces are well supplied. I believe the coal in the territories is well adapted for domestic use, but the mines are situated at a great distance from the railways.

To the Lake Superior, Long Lake and Albany Railway Company for a line of railway from Peninsula harbour in a northerly direction, not exceeding 10 miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is opening up a new district from Peninsula harbour, on Lake Superior, in a northerly direction. The provincial government, at its last session, granted a subsidy of $3,000 a mile for 10 miles. The road is chartered to run to Albany river north.

Mr. FOWLER. Who makes the application ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The application is signed by John W. Cheesewood, of Toronto. This gentleman signs himself on behalf of the syndicate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is the solicitor for the company.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the Minister of Public Works know who is the moving spirit ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. I am not sure whether the solicitor was introduced to me when these representations were made. A memorandum was given to me of the Act of incorporation, and of the grant by the provincial government. I know Mr. Cheesewood to meet him. I did not ask him who the directors of the company were. It is quite a large undertaking, and the provincial government thought it of sufficient importance in that new country to grant $3,000 a mile for 10 miles, and we duplicate the grant. I may say with regard to the great majority, if not all, the subsidies that are granted in Ontario, that we have been guided a great deal by the representations made by the municipalities and the provincial authorities. I do not believe there is a single subsidy granted that is not made to supplement a grant made by municipalities or by the provincial government. The people in the various localities who are more directly in touch with the local authorities, have succeeded in convincing them of the necessity and importance of these works, and we have thought well to be guided by that fact in supplementing local aid with Dominion subsidies. We have, therefore, good assurance that the railways will be proceeded with. I have no knowledge personally of the incorporators of this company, nor have any records been submitted to me.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the government may be congratulated upon having shown a disposition to colonize northern Ontario. This is the fifth or sixth line that has been granted a subsidy all leading from the Canadian Pacific Railway north into that country. They will all act as feeders for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and will all offer facilities for the colonization of that country, and for taking out the pulp wood and other timber products. We have the satisfaction of knowing at least that full provision has been made both for colonization and other railways in that country. I shall repeat what I said last night, that we have no longer any fear of that country not being abundantly supplied with railways for settlement and general trade, and there will now be no hurry for the line between Quebec and Winnipeg for the purposes of colonization. This is a very satisfactory feature, even at the close of the session, and it is a very great pity that this had not been considered before hon. gentlemen entered upon that unfortunate enterprise of constructing the road, where they are constructing it, from Quebec to Winnipeg.

To the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company for a line of railway from Parrsboro' station to Riverside wharf, not exceeding one mile.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to furnish a link between the water and rail communication at this point. The boat from Wolville on the other side of the bay lands at the government wharf. The Spring Hill and Parrsboro road ends at the private wharf of the company about a mile away, so that passengers have to walk that distance and it is thought advisable to avoid that interruption.

Mr. FOWLER. This will accommodate the coal company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, this will accommodate the travelling public ; the coal company would be quite content to have our people walk down a mile from the railway to the wharf.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose this will include the whole cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no, $3,000 will not build a mile of railway any where in Canada.

Mr. GOURLEY. This is a first class railway and I think from what I know of it that it is essential from the public standpoint.

Mr. LOGAN. This mile of railway is not a part of the National Transcontinental Railway but it is very important to Parrsboro which is a town of three thousand inhabitants. At present the railway from Springhill to Parrsboro does not run nearer than a mile to the public wharf, and all goods have to be trucked from that wharf a mile to the station at Parrsboro. The purpose of this is to have the road carried to the wharf so that goods will no longer have to be trucked.

Mr. COCHRANE. Here is a case of a wharf being built by the public and then to avoid the expense of hauling the goods for one mile the country is expected to build a railway for these people for that distance. I think, as I said before, that the government has gone mad on subsidizing railways. This is not in any sense a colonization road and it is most absurd. If the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce were here his heart would go faint and sick to see a vote of this kind.

Mr. SPROULE. I would draw attention to the fact that this is a parallel case to the one I mentioned before, the case of Meaford, where the people of the town had to raise $25,000 of their own money to build a railway two miles to their wharf.

Mr. GOURLEY. The coal company run a railway down to Parrsboro and that is all they want; they do not care for anything else. There is a mile between the terminus of that road and the shore of Minas Basin. The steamer goes there with passengers and the passengers have to walk one mile.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this company not ship coal by this wharf ?

Mr. GOURLEY. Not by the public wharf; they have a private wharf. I think it is demeaning to the province that strangers and tourists should have to walk a mile. The company have no object in building this railway, it is purely in the interest of the public.

Mr. SPROULE. It makes the case exactly parallel with the case I mentioned in Meaford, in which the government refused to grant any aid.

To the Indian River Railway Company for a line of railway from a point at or near the north end of Lake Megantic, thence southerly along said lake to a point on the international boundary, not exceeding 19 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The description of this in the vote gives about as much information as any one can give about it, describing the points between which it will run.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This road is intended to connect the Quebec Central Railway at the end of its Tring branch on Lake Megantic with the boundary line, at Rangeley with a railway that goes up from Rumford. This little extension to the State of Maine will enable the farmers in that district to communicate with the lumber camps in the State of Maine. It practically affords a straight line for the Quebec Central Railway into the United States.

Mr. FOWLER. This is an independent company is it not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it connects the Quebec Central with this company at Rangeley.

Towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge and approaches over the Nicolet river at Nicolet, in lieu of a grant under chapter 8 of 63-64 Victoria, item 39 of section 2, $15,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a revote of a subsidy which was granted in 1900, for the South Shore Railway bridge on the Nicolet river.

Mr. COCHRANE.

Mr. FOWLER. What has this bridge cost ?

The PRIME MINISTER. In the neighbourhood of $100,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suggested the other day that it would be a great advantage if these railway bridges were so constructed that they could be used for passenger and vehicular traffic. In all the bridges over the Mississippi river, they are so constructed that they can be used by the general public as well as by railways.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That cannot be done in this case, because the piers have already been constructed, and it has not been provided for.

Mr. SPROULE. Heretofore the principle has been laid down, that the government would grant about 15 per cent of the cost of these bridges. On what principle are we proceeding here ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The principle is that we generally give 15 per cent except when bridges are very expensive, and in such a case the subsidy is calculated on the cost of the bridge, and is an arbitrary one.

Towards the construction of the steel superstructure of a railway bridge on the St. Francis river, in the county of Yamaska, in lieu of a grant under chapter 8 of 63-64 Victoria, item 38 of section 2, but subject to the same conditions as expressed therein, payable to Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville, as their claim may appear for work already done on said bridge, $50,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This subsidy was voted three years ago, and a contract was entered into between the South Shore Railway Company, and the Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville, for the steel superstructure. The superstructure is there today, but there are no approaches to the bridge. The bridge will be of no use to anybody unless it is completed. We ask parliament simply to revote the item, so that the bridge company can receive its money.

Mr. SPROULE. We have not given them any money at all ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They have received no money yet.

Mr. SPROULE. In this resolution you speak of the superstructure only, and in the other resolution you speak of the bridge as a whole. What is the distinction ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Walkerville Bridge Company will receive $48,000 and the other $2,000 will be to pay some claims against the bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you are voting this to the bridge company, and not to the railway company ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We are voting it to pay the bridge company, because they are really the parties entitled to it.

Mr. SPROULE. How much has this bridge cost ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know what the masonry cost ; but the bridge must have cost considerably more than $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. If it cost $100,000 we are giving 50 per cent.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sure that it cost more than $100,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am safe in saying that it will cost over $200,000. It is a two-story bridge, providing for vehicles and passengers, as well as the railway, and it can be used by the municipalities on both sides of the river.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it free to the public ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this pay all the charges which the bridge company has against the bridge ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, except as is provided in the next resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the provincial government give any assistance to this bridge ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, the provincial government has given so much a year for ten or fifteen years.

Mr. SPROULE. It is only proper that the provincial government should aid such a bridge, especially as it affords facilities for the travelling public.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that this money will not be earned until all the work is done.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not the intention to pay until the approaches have been completed.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very proper that the Walkerville Bridge Company should be paid for the superstructure, but have we any assurance that the balance of the work will be done ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is exactly what we provide for in the next resolution.

To the Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville. To strengthen and complete the foundation and approaches to the bridge over the St. Francis river subsidized to the South Shore Railway Company by section 3, chapter 7, Victoria 62-63, a sum of $35,000, which amount shall remain the first charge on the road, and to be recouped to the treasury out of subsidies earned or to be earned, $35,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. As I have just stated that the Walkerville Bridge Company have put up the superstructure, but the bridge is in the river without any approaches. The railway company is insolvent, and we thought we should take some precaution to have the bridge completed, so that the public could have the benefit of it. We agreed with the Walkerville company to give them a subsidy of $25,000. First of all we provide that they shall strengthen the piers. Our engineers have reported that the piers would have to be strengthened, so as to provide against the ice. We then provided that for this amount of $25,000 they should complete the approaches. When they have built the approaches and strengthened the piers, then they will be paid the $25,000, and the $48,000 which is due for the superstructure.

Mr. CLANCY. Who is in possession of this road ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The railway company is still in possession of the road, but they are insolvent.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The railway has not reached there.

The PRIME MINISTER. It has.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have ten miles graded on the other side.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have provided this sum of money not as an extra subsidy but as a charge on the road to be recouped by the government.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not quite understand how this is to be returned by way of earned subsidy.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have just explained that the railway is completed to the bridge. There are between four and six miles of the railway for which the subsidy has been earned, but not paid, so that we have nearly $20,000 which we can apply to recoup ourselves for the further subsidy which we are giving for the completion of the bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that this bridge would cost over $100,000. We are giving $85,000 to build a bridge which is to cost a little over $100,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. We do not give $85,000. We give $50,000, and we advance $35,000, which is to be recouped.

To the Chateauguay and Northern Railway Company. In addition to the subsidy for the Bout de L'Ile bridge granted by chapter 8, section 33, Victoria 63-64, $50,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This bridge was also subsidized two years ago. It is now in process of construction, and is partly built, but it turns out to be far more expensive than was supposed. It was estimated to cost between $500,000 and $600,000. The report we have is that it will cost probably $700,000. The condition of the country has been found to be such as to make it much more expensive, and the plans had to be changed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What bridge is this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is at the eastern extremity of the Island of Montreal, connecting it with the main land on the north side, crossing the two branches of the Ottawa river.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the subsidy two years ago ?

The PRIME MINISTER. One hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

To the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company for a line of railway from Woodstock northerly to a point on the Grand Trunk Railway at Berlin, or from Ingersoll to Stratford, or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places, not exceeding 25 miles, being in addition to, and continuation of the nine miles mentioned in item one of this section.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This item was allowed to stand at the request of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). I telegraphed to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and he says that the wording here was adopted after full consideration by the directors of the company, and he does not like to authorize a change. I have consulted the hon. member for East Grey, and I believe it will meet the views of the committee to allow it to pass if the hon. gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Amendment of Mr. Sproule withdrawn, and item agreed to.

On resolution 4,

The subsidies hereby authorized towards the construction of any railway or bridge shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and may, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Act, at the option of the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be paid as follows :—

(a.) upon the completion of the work subsidized ; or

(b.) by instalments, on the completion of each ten-mile section of the railway, in the proportion which the cost of such completed section bears to that of the whole work undertaken ; or

(c.) upon the progress estimates on the certificate of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, that, in his opinion, having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted, the progress made justifies the payment of a sum not less than sixty thousand dollars ; or

(d.) with respect to (b) and (c), part one way, part the other.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I move that this resolution be amended by substituting in subsection C. $30,000 for $60,000. The object is to make the subsection correspond with the Act adopted this session. $60,000 would apply in the case of large enterprises, but in the case of a shorter road it would be a very large sum. There are times when you cannot certify that the road is completed, but the general progress made gives such assurance of completion that it would be quite legitimate to make payment on a progress estimate.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to the resolution we have just passed, resolution No. 3, relating to bridges, the hon. minister is aware no doubt that a dispute arose between the Auditor General and some company with regard to the cost of a bridge. Has the government made any additional provision for ascertaining accurately what the cost of any bridge is, because when we are paying a percentage the cost may be made out greater than it really is. That is what happened in the case I referred to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We could not put any legislation on the statute-book which would broaden the powers of the government in this respect. That is a matter for inquiry by the engineers.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you adopted any additional safeguards in these resolutions than are to be found in the others ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolutions are the same, but in the light of experience the department will adopt additional safeguards where the necessity arises. There is no legislation required to broaden the powers of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. It was suggested that there was a defect in the regulations or in the carrying out of them. When the attention of the government is drawn to it, I should think they would be more careful in the future.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The powers of the government seem to be sufficiently broad. The only thing that might be suggested is that parliament might impose a specific mode of inquiry on the officers of the department before they could act on the provisions of section 3. That may or may not be necessary, and I do not offer any opinion with regard to it. I do not know whether or not there is in these resolutions any provision to ensure the operation of the railway after it is constructed. I do not know that it is very easy to insert such a provision but its necessity was brought to the attention of the government this session by the fact that two railways which had received aid from this government and the provincial government, had not been in operation for several months, and one of them is not in operation yet. Under section 4 of these resolutions, a railway company may procure its subsidy in very small amounts from time to time, and there does not seem to be any stipulation which will ensure the final completion of the road. I do not know whether the form of contract and the safeguards therein provided give any assurance that a road, after receiving subsidies over a certain mileage, will be really completed. It is desirable that the country should have some assurance that any road which receives the assistance of the government should be operated after completion. The ex-Minister of Railways said at the time it was a matter for serious consideration but he did not know of any measure which could be adopted that would aid us in that regard. Has the subject received the consideration of the government, because it seems closely connected with the provisions of section 4 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has received some consideration. Although the statute does not deal with the matter particularly, the practice of the department has been to insert a clause in all the contracts, requiring the company to operate the road. Still while that clause is there, we have not always found it possible to discover the means of enforcing it. I have referred the form of contract to the Justice Department to see whether we cannot strengthen the clause in any way, and I am awaiting its opinion.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems that there is a very lax method of paying out the subsidies on bridges. They may be paid out on progress estimates, certified to by the chief engineer. This section provides that payment may be made of a sum not less than $30,000, but it does not say that this payment shall bear any proportion to the cost of the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineer will see to that.

Mr. SPROULE. I think he will be more likely to attend to it if he has something to guide him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The section says 'having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted.' That means a proportionate sum.

Mr. SPROULE. If they had $30,000 worth of work done in the judgment of the engineer, he would be justified in certifying to the progress estimates to that extent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not done. The practice is exactly what my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) wishes. It must be a reasonable proportion of the whole work.

Mr. SPROULE. No proposition is stated here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the engineer must be satisfied that it is a reasonable proportion of the whole work.

On section 5,

The subsidies hereinbefore authorized to be granted to companies named shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively ; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as establish to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively ; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August, 1903, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in each case in a contract between the company and the said minister, which contract the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make. The location also of such subsidized lines shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How is that carried out in practice ? Is any notice given to persons or communities interested ? Complaint has been made to me during the present session of unfair location of railway lines which are receiving aid from the government, and it is said that this is done without any notice whatever to the municipal body or to the people of a community where there is no municipal organization.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Complaint is likely to arise in matters of this kind where there are conflicting interests. But I have not had my attention called to any grievance as to lack of notice. My own observation is that wherever a road is being surveyed a very lively interest is taken in the location of the line, and if all parties are not satisfied, complaint is likely to be made. There is no special rule as to notifying any of the parties concerned, but, as I say, I do not think there is any grievance arising out of that lack of notice.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I refer to cases of this kind : Suppose a town situated practically upon the proposed line of railway, and the railway located in such a way that instead of running to the town, it runs at a distance of two or three miles, the result being that the property of persons in the town is much less valuable than it would otherwise be. In such a case the tendency is gradually to transfer the town to a point near the line of railway, and the people owning property in the town, rightly or wrongly, feel aggrieved. It may be that, in such cases, there is good reason for locating the line of railway as it is located ; I am not discussing that, but I am discussing the allegation which is said to be literally true. that lines are located in that way without notice to the municipal governments or the people of the town. Whatever may be said as to the merits of any particular case, the people of the town should be notified before the location is fixed by the government. I do not know whether the facts are as represented to me ; I am asking for information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the line were first located so as to run to a town and before construction the proposal were made to change it, that is a thing, it seems to me, that would interfere with vested rights on which the people should be heard. But where you are dealing with the first location the case would hardly be the same. But I think that, so far as notice is concerned, the first appearance of a surveyor in the region attracts attention and arouses interest, and if the location fails to meet the wishes of the community generally, we find that representations are very promptly and freely made through various channels. But I have never had any complaint made of lack of information.

On section 6,

The granting of such subsidies, and the receipt thereof by the respective companies, shall be subject to the condition that the Governor in Council may at all times provide and secure to other companies such running powers, traffic arrangements and other rights, as will afford to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running powers, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies, and equal mileage rates between all such connecting railways; and the Governor in Council shall have absolute control, at all times, over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or upon any of the railways hereby subsidized.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I observe that the Governor in Council is given control over rates. Is that intended to be in contradistinction to the powers to be exercised by the new Railway Commission? It strikes me that there is something a little inconsistent in this; at all events, we should have some definition as to when the rates are to be fixed by the Railway Commission and when by the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have followed the phraseology of the old Act in this respect, and I am inclined to think that before this Bill is finally passed we shall have to adapt it to the provisions of the Railway Commission Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I notice that the expression 'Governor in Council' is used throughout these resolutions. In some cases, no doubt, it is the proper expression, but in other cases it may be necessary to make an amendment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It may be that, in following the wording of the old Act, we have not made the changes made necessary by the new. Before the Bill is finally disposed of, I shall see to it that that shall be looked into.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Another point relates to the terms of the proposed covenant to be inserted in the contract, which is to be in addition to, or in substitution of, the powers conferred upon the Railway Commission. It seems to me that such matters are pretty well covered by the terms of the Railway Act passed during the present session. I do not say that it would be wrong to insert them in this Bill as well, but we should see to it that the language with regard to running powers, traffic arrangements, &c., is made absolutely to conform with the provisions of the Railway Act. And very probably it will be found that the Railway Act, having been altered in some respect, and this Bill having been founded on the former Act, the language is not exactly in conformity with the new law.

The PRIME MINISTER. I agree that the terms should correspond exactly with those of the Railway Act unless we find something to add. In this case, it may be agreed that, while we can take the exact provisions of the Railway Act, there is advantage sometimes in making them a matter of contract. They would be, in a sense, a matter of contract under the conditions of the statute. But sometimes it is an advantage to have them under the hand and seal of the company, as then the company is not in a position to contest them. At any rate, the language should conform to that of the Railway Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, a company may have successors, but I never knew it could have assigns, as we find in this section. Is there not a provision in an Act passed during the present session with regard to some matters dealt with in this section?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a matter really between the government and the company, that they will agree to make allowance to us in any business we have with them in matters of transportation. I do not think that is covered by the Railway Act, but it is worth looking into.

On section 8,

As respects all railways for which subsidies are granted by this Act, the company at any time owning or operating any of the railways shall, when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers, showing the cost of constructing the railway, the cost of operating it, and the earnings thereof.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think this section is covered by the Railway Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would there be any objection to an amendment or an additional clause by which the Auditor General could also have a perusal of the books of the company during construction?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think any practical difficulty could arise there.

Mr. SPROULE. There was the case of the bridge, where the Auditor General said the bridge did not cost the amount that was claimed, and he saved the country a considerable sum of money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no difficulty in the Auditor General getting all the information he desires. He employed experts in the particular case referred to, and there is no difficulty under the statutes in the Auditor General getting all the information he wishes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He can get such information as he thinks necessary. I think, after all the Auditor General is a law unto himself.

Mr. SPROULE. I think, if I remember right, the government were not giving him that assistance that he ought to have to ascertain the cost of the bridge, and he took the law into his own hands.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a difference between the Department of Railways and the Auditor General, but I think I am correct in stating that in that case there was no difficulty in the Auditor General getting all the information that he wanted.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not a fact that that department was quite willing to pay a bonus on the bridge at the exorbitant price that the company claimed it cost, and but for the fact that the Auditor General refused to pay and went into an inquiry himself, that bonus would have been paid and the consolidated revenue would have been that much worse off.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a difference of opinion between the Auditor General and the department, but I do not recall all the facts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not a power that a public officer would abuse, at least we could not presume that he would abuse it. While it can do no harm, there might possibly be a case where it could do good to give him that power, which would be of benefit to the country. I think we gave some power to the Auditor General in the Act relating to the transcontinental railway, which was somewhat analogous to the power I am asking for now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt that if the Auditor General were to say that he wished to get access to the books of a company for the purpose of examining into a claim, the Minister of Railways, I think, would be bound to give him authority to do so; I have no doubt he would. There has not been any difficulty of that kind that I know of. This provides that the Minister of Railways or any other person appointed by him may examine all the books. If the Auditor General were to say that in consequence of information he had he wished a person appointed to examine the books, I am sure that any Minister of Railways would authorize that person to represent him for that purpose. I do not think it needs any amendment.

Mr. CLANCY. I think I had incidentally brought to my notice during the present session, that the Auditor General did suggest something like that and that the minister, without mentioning who it was, took a very different view, and if it depended upon authorizing an examination of the books under such circumstances no examination would be made. It would be well to make it clear that it was the duty of the Auditor General to make such a demand, and the duty of the minister to accede to the demand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid I could not agree with my hon. friend as to the theory of the matter. I think responsibility in all these things is on the minister and not on the Auditor General. Theoretically I differ with my hon. friend; but there is no practical difference, because no difficulty on that score has occurred. I do not think the Auditor General complains that he could not get information. I think we all know he is pretty thorough in these things. So far as I am aware, he has always got all the information he desires.

Mr. CLANCY. I have had occasion to hold different views from the hon. gentleman as to what constitutes ministerial responsibility. Ministerial responsibility cannot go so far as to be of any advantage or security to the public in repairing harm after harm is done, or loss has occurred. I think I have stated before that ministerial responsibility does not always make restitution. The better way is to provide by statute against loss to the country through an officer whose duty it is to look after these things. To say that the minister is responsible is not enough. We might just as well say, and it would be carrying the argument to its legitimate conclusion, that each department over which a minister presides should take the responsibility therefor, and that there was no need of an auditor. A minister has a right to say, I am responsible for that, and I do not think an officer should interfere. I think, on the other hand, a safe and healthy course to take is to secure a scrutiny by an officer whose business it is to do that work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Chairman, before you report these resolutions I want to remind the committee that in connection with one of the items for a subsidy in British Columbia an error occurred and that we have a separate resolution to add to the item. We have dealt with the matter and discussed it, but we must correct the error. In order to do that we will have to formally report these other resolutions; I shall then ask the committee to sit again. This is in connection with the item for the Kootenay Central road.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

KOOTENAY CENTRAL RAILWAY—SUBSIDY.

On motion of the Minister of Finance House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to provide as follows :—

That the Governor in Council may, in addition to the mileage of railway proposed to be subsidized by item 66 of the resolutions respecting railway subsidies now before this House, grant a further subsidy to the Kootenay Central Railway Company, for the line of railway in the said item mentioned, not exceeding eighty miles, making the whole length not exceeding 186 miles, instead of 106 miles. (Correction of clerical error).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to correct the error to which attention has been called. As we have fully discussed the matter I move that this resolution be formally agreed to.

Resolution agreed to, reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 270) an Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a message from the Senate respecting amendments made by them to Bill (No. 21) an Act to consolidate and amend the laws respecting railways as follows :—

Tuesday, October 20, 1903.

Resolved, that a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Masters in Chancery, to inform that House, that the Senate doth accept the amendments made by the House of Commons to the Senate amendment No. 51 to Bill No. 21, intituled : 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways,' and that the Senate doth not insist upon their amendments Nos. 6, 33, 45, 46 and 60 to the said Bill ; but doth insist upon their amendments Nos. 2, 3 and 4, for the reason that the clauses 5, 6 and 7 of the said Bill were an interference with provincial and municipal rights which the Senate amendments minimized, while giving at the same time jurisdiction to the board on all subject matters essential to the satisfactory working of the purposes set forth in the original sections 5, 6 and 7 of the said Bill.

The Senate doth also insist on its amendment No. 11, for the reason that in all tribunals there should be an appeal on points of law. It is equally in the interests of the individual and the company, especially when the appeal can only be granted by leave of the board or of two judges of the Appellate Court.

The Senate doth insist upon its amendment No. 31, for the reason that the clause in its original form involves an interference with municipal rights.

The Senate doth also insist upon its amendment No. 40, for the reason that cases may arise where the agreement was fair and just to the employee. The Senate suggests as an alternative to the words proposed to be inserted by the following amendment :—

'Unless such agreement is conformable to the law of the province in which it is made and is authorized by the board.'

The Senate doth also insist upon its amendment No. 70, for the reasons set forth in the objections to Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

Attest.

SAM'L E. ST. O. CHAPLEAU,
Clerk of the Senate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that :

A select committee composed of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Mr. Fielding, Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick and Hon. Mr. Blair, be appointed to draw up reasons to be offered at a conference with the Senate for disagreeing to certain amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 21) entitled an Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume the desire of the government is to confine that committee to the members of the Privy Council in order that it may have the greater authority. I observe that all of the members of the committee are members of the Privy Council except the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He is a member of the Privy Council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would suggest the name of the hon. senior member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker).

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There can be no objection to this.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is quite unintentional that the hon. member (Mr. Barker) was omitted.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is my mistake. I drew the resolution up hurriedly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the leader of the opposition would be willing to act, we would be pleased to have his assistance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be glad if I could give any assistance. It may be that this being a government measure, it is the precedent that members of the government should represent members of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not a controversial matter, and I will be glad if the House will allow me to move to add the names of the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker).

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

QUEBEC BRIDGE—PAPERS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg to lay on the Table of the House certain papers with respect to the Quebec bridge. They are printed and will be distributed immediately.

ADJOURNMENT—ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to inquire whether the government has any official information as to the award that it is rumoured has been made respecting the Alaskan boundary? If so, I would like to know what are the terms of the award; whether there has been dissent by any of the commissioners, and by which of them, and whether any statement has been made public by any of the British commissioners in regard to the reasons on account of which they have dissented from the award of the majority of the members constituting that tribunal. I wish also to ask whether the correspondence and documents touching this question will be brought down immediately? In order to refresh the memory of my right hon. friend, I may recall his words in the debate of March 5th, 1902, on the motion made by my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) that certain documents relating to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty should be brought down to the House. My right hon. friend then said:

> I would recall to my hon. friend the well known fact, that the only references that were made by the Canadian government at any time with regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, were simply with the object of having the Alaskan boundary considered together with the Nicaraguan question. We made representations to that effect and though one branch of this subject has been disposed of, the other has not yet been disposed of, though it is still in a fair way towards settlement, and the negotiations are yet pending. My hon. friend will see that it would be impossible to bring down anything concerning the correspondence with regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty except such as concerns the Alaskan boundary question, and we could not bring down these papers unless we were to give at once to the public the negotiations which are still going on with regard to the Alaskan boundary. I now come to another branch of the argument made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk). The hon. gentleman has stated that whether negotiations as to the Alaskan boundary are pending or not, we should bring down the representations which had been made by one government to the other. The hon. gentleman will understand that it would be impossible to bring down that correspondence unless we were to bring down at the same time the protocols exchanged, and the propositions and counter propositions which have been made up to this very moment upon the subject. The hon. gentleman referred to the fact that the Joint High Commission which sat at Quebec and Washington has adjourned sine die, and he says that we should not withhold the correspondence until this commission resumed again. I will at once, relieve the apprehension of my hon. friend by telling him, as he knows—because the papers have been placed on the Table of the House two years ago—that the Alaskan boundary question has been removed from the commission, and referred by the commission itself to the British government and the United States government, the two interested parties. Since that time, that is to say, since the month of February, 1899, negotiations have been going on between the two governments. Protocols have been exchanged, propositions have been made, counter propositions have been submitted, other propositions have been made again, and the matter has been under consideration and is still under consideration.

I understand this language of the right hon. gentleman to refer to the questions relating to the Alaskan boundary. My right hon. friend continued:

> So that the very argument which my hon. friend has made cannot apply to this matter, for a very obvious reason; that we could not bring down the papers without submitting the very terms of the propositions and counter propositions that have been made. I cannot divulge these secrets to-day; but it is easy to suppose what has been going on. It is easy to suppose that certain propositions have been made by one government to the other; that these propositions have been referred to the Canadian government; that the government have made its comments upon these propositions; that it has either assented to them or dissented from them.

My right hon. friend was using that language for the purpose of conveying to the House, in a certain way, the fact that negotiations had been going on, that protocols and counter protocols had been exchanged, and that there had been a great deal of correspondence on the subject which he thought could not properly be brought before the House during the pendency of these negotiations. These negotiations have terminated, and if the award has now been made, there seems to be no reason why this correspondence should not be furnished at once to the House, especially as we are, I hope, in the closing days of the session. My right hon. friend in response to an inquiry from me during the present session said, on March 25th last:

> I am sorry to say that at this moment the government is not yet in a position to bring down the correspondence which has taken place upon this particular subject. It is all ready, and I am in hopes that at an early date it may be placed on the Table of the House. All I can say at present is, that if the correspondence is not already on the Table of the House it is not because of any fault of any authority on this side of the Atlantic. We hope, however, that very shortly, the whole of the correspondence which has taken place upon the making of the treaty itself, and the selection of the commissioners will be placed before parliament. We hope further, that all the correspondence which has taken place between the two governments since the adjournment of the High Commission, in 1899, will also be placed upon the Table of the House at an early date.

As nearly seven months have expired, perhaps the right hon. gentleman is now in a position to place this matter upon the Table. It is important that at this juncture the House should be made acquainted with the communication to which my right hon. friend has referred in the extracts which I have read. As the right hon. gentleman has stated that the correspondence is all ready, I presume there will be no objection to place it before the House to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. With regard to the several questions which my hon. friend has asked, I have to say that the only information I have at the present moment as to the award, is a telegram from Mr. Sifton which I will communicate to the House to-morrow. This telegram informs me that the award has been rendered, and gives me succinctly the terms of the award.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With regard to the dissent and the statement of the Canadian commissioners ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no information on that except that our commissioners have dissented. With regard to the correspondence which led to the treaty, there is no objection on the part of this government to laying that before the House. I am not sure that I shall be in a position to do so to-morrow, but I hope to do so before the end of the session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Several months have expired since my right hon. friend hoped to be able to lay that on the Table of the House at once. I hope he will be able to lay it on the Table so that we may have an opportunity of reading it and possibly discussing it before the end of the session. Will my right hon. friend also state what business is to be placed before us to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope to clear the paper of everything. We will commence by moving to go into Committee of Supply, when I understand my hon. friend from Pictou intends to move a motion.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, October 21, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUEBEC BRIDGE AGREEMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolutions :

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Resolved, that it is expedient to approve, ratify, and confirm the agreement made on the 19th of October, 1903, between the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, represented by the Hon. Simon Napoleon Parent, the president thereof, and His Majesty the King, represented by the Honourable William Stevens Fielding, acting Minister of Railways and Canals, a copy of which agreement is hereto annexed :—

Agreement made this Nineteenth Day of October, in the Year of Our Lord one Thousand Nine Hundred and Three.

Between

The Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, having its chief place of business in the said city of Quebec, and herein acting and represented by the Honourable Simon Napoleon Parent, president, duly and specially authorized for the purposes hereof under a resolution passed at a meeting of the board of directors of the said company on the first day of October, 1903, a copy of which said resolution remains annexed to the original of these presents, and is signed by the parties hereto, in order to identify the same (hereinafter called the company) of the one part ;

And His Majesty King Edward the Seventh, acting in respect of the Dominion of Canada, herein represented and acting by the Honourable William Stevens Fielding, His Majesty's acting Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada (hereinafter called the government) of the other part.

Whereas the company has by several Acts of the parliament of Canada been duly authorized and empowered to lay out, construct, maintain, work, manage and use a railway bridge, with the necessary approaches, over the St. Lawrence river at or near the city of Quebec, and also to lay out, construct and operate the following lines of railway :—

(a.) Commencing at or near the northern terminus of the bridge of the company at a point in the parish of St. Foye, in the county of Quebec, thence easterly following the general line of the St. Lawrence river to the city of Quebec ;

(b.) Commencing at a point at or near the southern terminus of the said bridge, in the county of Lévis, to a point at or near the intersection of the Grand Trunk Railway with the Intercolonial Railway at Chaudière curve, in the county of Lévis, or to some point on the Grand Trunk Railway, or on the Intercolonial Railway, near such point of intersection ;

And whereas it is the intention of the company to provide by the construction of the said bridge and works for the conveyance of traffic across the River St. Lawrence at or near the city of Quebec, and to provide terminal and other facilities for the interchange of traffic between the railways which are or may be hereafter constructed near the said bridge upon the north and south sides of the said river, and which may be desirous of making use of such facilities;

And whereas the company has been duly organized and has issued two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000) of its authorized capital stock of one million dollars ($1,000,000), upon which the shareholders have paid the sum of $65,585.70;

And whereas the government of the province of Quebec has granted a subsidy to aid in the construction of the said works to the amount of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) and has paid the whole amount thereof ;

And whereas the municipality of the city of Quebec has granted a subsidy to aid in the construction of the said bridge to the amount of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) and has paid the whole amount thereof;

And whereas the government has granted a subsidy towards the construction of the said bridge to an amount not exceeding one million dollars ($1,000,000) and has paid to the company on account of the said subsidy the sum of three hundred and seventy-four thousand three hundred and fifty-three dollars ($374,353);

And whereas the substructure and approaches of the said bridges have been completed, and a portion of the superstructure has been constructed;

And whereas the company has so far expended upon said works the sum of $914,862, and is indebted in respect of the same work in the sum of $779,550, including at par value bonds to the extent of $472,000, upon which was realized the sum of $283,270;

And whereas the amount necessary to complete the said bridge and the said lines of railway and to provide the necessary terminal and other facilities, as well as to pay off the aforesaid amount of the present indebtedness of the company, is estimated at the sum of $6,866,882;

And whereas the company is unable to proceed with the said work without further assistance from the government and it has applied to the government for such assistance, which the government has agreed to grant in the manner and form and upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth and declared;

Now, this agreement witnesseth that in pursuance of the said agreement and for the considerations herein appearing,

The said company and the government mutually covenant, promise and agree to and with each other in manner following, that is to say:—

1. In these presents the expression 'undertaking' shall mean and include the said bridge and approaches, the said lines of railway, and the terminal and other facilities to be constructed as aforesaid.

The expression 'the company' shall mean and include as well as the said company, their successors and assigns, and the expression 'the government' shall mean and include as well as His Majesty King Edward the Seventh, His heirs and successors.

2. The company releases and forgoes any claim which it may have upon the government for any balance now remaining unpaid of the said subsidy of $1,000,000 so granted by the government as aforesaid, and also any other rights or claims against the government other than such as are hereinafter set forth and expressly declared.

3. The company will forthwith arrange with the present subscribers of the capital stock of the company that such subscribers shall surrender such stock to the company, and in lieu thereof accept paid-up stock for the amount paid by them on their shares, the company relieving them from further liability upon the stock so surrendered.

4. The company will procure subscriptions for additional stock to the amount of $200,000, such new stock to be issued at a price not below par and to be immediately paid up in full, the proceeds to be applied in the first place in the payment of the discount at which the bonds of the company were issued as aforesaid, to wit, the sum of $188,721.

5. When and so soon as the company shall have completed all the arrangements mentioned in the two preceding clauses, and the proceeds of the said issue of $200,000 stock shall have been paid in full to the company, the company shall be at liberty to issue such bonds, debentures or other securities as hereinafter provided to an amount not exceeding $6,678,200.

6. The said bonds, debentures or other securities shall be issued by the company upon the credit of the company and upon the security of its undertaking and property, and upon the franchises, tolls, rents and revenues thereof, and shall form the first charge upon the same, and shall be secured by a mortgage thereon, as hereinafter provided. They shall be issued payable in fifty years from the date thereof, and shall bear interest at the rate of three per centum per annum, payable half-yearly, and shall be issued as hereinafter provided. The proceeds of such securities shall be applied in payment of the balance of the existing obligations and indebtedness of the company, including any bonds or mortgages issued in respect thereof and not herein otherwise provided for; in the construction and completion of the undertaking, and for the acquisition of the right of way, and other lands, which the company is authorized to acquire or expropriate for the purposes of the undertaking, and in the payment of land damages in connection therewith.

7. The government shall guarantee the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures or other securities of the company to an amount not exceeding $6,678,200. The said bonds, debentures or other securities shall be issued as to provide for monthly payments, as far as practicable, to the company, and they shall be issued, or the proceeds thereof paid to the company, as the construction of the undertaking is proceeded with to the satisfaction of the government, and in such sums as the chief engineer of the government railways or such other officer as the government may appoint may certify are justified.

8. The kind of securities to be so guaranteed and the form and denomination thereof, as well as the time and manner of their issue and the form and manner of guarantee, shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

9. The mortgage to secure such securities shall be made to a trustee or trustees approved by the Governor in Council, and the form and terms of the mortgage shall be subject to the like approval.

10. All moneys paid by the government under the said guarantee shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government, but not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities guaranteed or under the mortgage securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and mortgage, and the government shall be subrogated in all the rights of the holders of the securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall, in respect of all moneys so paid, be in all respects in the position of security holders in respect of whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

11. The company shall not create or issue any further stock, shares, bonds or interests in the company or its undertaking other than and except as provided for by and in these presents.

12. The plans and specifications for all the works of the undertaking shall be submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council before any work is constructed thereunder.

13. The continuation of the work of constructing the said undertaking shall be proceeded with so soon as the plans thereof are submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council, and the said undertaking shall be completed not later than the first day of December, 1906.

14. Upon the execution of this agreement, the Governor in Council shall have the right to appoint three directors of the company, the number of directors to be elected by the shareholders of the company being limited to eight, and the directors so appointed and elected shall constitute the board of directors of the company. The directors appointed by the Governor in Council need not be possessed of the qualifications required in the case of elected directors. They shall be entitled as such directors to the same fees or allowances from the company as are paid or allowed to the other directors.

15. The Governor in Council shall fix the tolls and further shall make regulations with regard to the use of the undertaking so as to secure the right to the use and enjoyment thereof to all railway companies which may desire to connect therewith, upon fair and equal terms, without preference to one railway over another.

16. From and after the first day of December, 1906, or the date of the completion of the undertaking, whichever shall first happen, the company shall, out of the net income of the undertaking, that is to say, after payment out of the income of the expense of operation and other charges for maintenance and repairs and for renewals of the said undertaking, or any part or parts thereof, and of the interest upon the bonded indebtedness, annually pay to the government for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the redemption of the bonded indebtedness of the company a sum equal to one-half of one per cent of the total amount of such bonded indebtedness.

17. If in any year or years the net income of the undertaking is insufficient to pay the amount required for the said sinking fund, the net income of any subsequent year or years shall be applied in the first place in reduction or payment of such deficiency, together with interest at the rate of three per centum per annum.

18. The company agrees that the government may exercise, and the government hereby reserves the right to take over the whole of the undertaking, assets, property and franchises of the company, at any time, on paying the shareholders the amount of their stock at the par value thereof, not exceeding the amount of $265,585.70, with simple interest at five per centum per annum upon such amount as from the date or dates of the payment or payments upon the original or any substituted stock, such interest, however, to be charged with and reduced by the amount of the dividends (if any) which shall have accrued and been paid to the said shareholders respectively, so that no more interest than five per centum per annum, after deducting all dividends, shall in any case be paid to the said shareholders. The government, in addition to interest ascertained in manner aforesaid, shall pay to the shareholders a premium of ten per centum upon the par value of the fully paid shares. Such right to take over the undertaking may be exercised at any time by the government upon giving one month's notice to the company, which shall thereupon, and upon payment by the government to the shareholders aforesaid, grant, surrender and release to the government all their right, title and interest in and to the said undertaking and to the franchises and all other assets and property of the company of whatsoever nature or kind, subject to the payment of such obligations of the Company as may have been contracted with the consent and approval of the government, if any, for construction, operation and maintenance, and to the said bonded indebtedness, which the government shall thereupon assume and pay, according to the terms of the said bonds or other securities and of the mortgage securing the same.

19. In the event of the government exercising the said right to take over the undertaking, assets, property and franchises of the company as aforesaid, the provisions contained in the following clauses, numbers 20 to 24, shall take effect and come into operation from and after the date of such acquisition.

20. For the purpose of the sinking fund for the redemption of the bonded indebtedness, a like sum as is in and by clause 16 hereof provided to be paid for such purposes by the company to the government shall be annually set aside by the government out of the net income of the undertaking, that is to say, after payment out of the income of the expenses of operation and other charges for maintenance, repairs and for renewals or improvements upon and additions to the said undertaking and any part or parts thereof, and of the interest upon the bonded indebtedness and of interest calculated at the rate of three per cent per annum on all moneys paid by the government, in accordance with the provisions of clause 18, for the acquisition of the undertaking, and of interest at the same rate on any other liability or expenditure incurred or made by the government in connection with the undertaking.

21. The government will, subject to the provision next hereinafter contained, annually pay to the government of the province of Quebec and to the corporation of the city of Quebec, respectively, a proportion of the balance of the net income after providing for the said charges, interest and expenses and the amount to be set aside for the sinking fund as aforesaid, such proportion being based upon the amount paid or contributed as a subsidy by each of the three parties, namely: the Dominion government, $374,353; the government of the province of Quebec, $250,000, and the city of Quebec, $300,000; not exceeding, however, as regards the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec, respectively, the sum of $7,500 and $9,000, being the amount of interest calculated at the rate of three per centum per annum on the said sum of $250,000 and $300,000.

22. If in any year or years subsequent to the acquisition of the undertaking by the government the income of the undertaking shall be insufficient to meet the charges and expenses and the provision for the sinking fund, more particularly set forth in clause 20 hereof, the net income of any subsequent year or years, after providing for the said charges, interest and expenses and the amount to be set aside for the sinking fund, shall be applied in reduction or payment of the amount of such deficiency before any such division of the net income and payment of part thereof to the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec, respectively, as provided for by the last preceding clause, is made.

23. If at any time, and with or without notice, the government shall pay or cause to be paid to the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec, or either of them, the amount of their respective subsidies of $250,000, and $300,000, all payments, whether in respect of capital or income, to be made under the foregoing provisions to the said government of the province of Quebec or the city of Quebec, respectively, shall as and from that time absolutely cease and determine.

24. Notwithstanding anything contained in the five next preceding clauses, the undertaking, assets, property and franchises of the company shall at all times be and remain the absolute property of the government, and the sole right of control and management shall be and continue absolutely vested in the government.

25. This agreement shall not come into force or effect unless and until it has been approved, ratified and confirmed by the parliament of Canada.

In testimony whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first herein written.

Motion agreed to.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I was going to give to the House a telegram I received yesterday from Mr. Sifton in respect to the award of the Alaska Boundary Convention. I may say that subsequently during the day His Excellency received from the Colonial Office a similar telegram. It reads as follows :

London, October 20, 1903.

Laurier,
Ottawa.

Award signed to day by chief justice and Commissioners Root, Lodge and Turner, being under treaty binding majority. Line commences at Cape Muzon, goes directly to southern entrance of channel between Wales and Sitklan Islands, proceeding northward between said islands, to Portland channel; thence along the middle of Portland channel to its head; from there line formed by going from peak to peak of mountains, distance from tidal water varying from ten to thirty miles, speaking generally. When opposite Thomas Bay, line stops undefined from there to point about fifteen miles north of head of Taku inlet; thence follows peaks of mountains about north-westward to White Pass, follows summits of White and Chilcoot Passes, thence by peaks of mountains to Mount Fairweather, passes close to police post situated near Klehini river. On this course, the line will be from eight to twenty miles north of the provisional boundary line; from Fairweather a short distance northward and then on a fairly direct course to the rear of Yakutat Bay, thence from peak to peak by somewhat circuitous route to Mount St. Elias. Marked map follows to-morrow.

(Sgd.) SIFTON.

This telegram would not give so much information as to the character of the boundary which is thus settled by the award of the boundary. But I have here two maps which may perhaps interest the House, and which give the boundary, one showing accurately the section of Portland Channel and the other the general outline of the boundary decided. These maps I lay on the Table of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I presume that there are some documents in connection with the Alaskan boundary which can be brought down at once, and there are some others with respect to which there may be some difficulty of that nature. I would suggest to my right hon. friend that those about which there is no difficulty should be brought down at once, and that the others should be brought down as soon as possible. I imagine there can be no difficulty in bringing down this forenoon, perhaps, a certain number of the documents.

USE OF MAIL BAGS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, there is another matter I would like to bring to your attention, and that is a question which has been raised during the last two or three days as to the use by members of certain rooms and corridors of this House. I would like to say that I think it is desirable, even at this late stage of the session, to have a statement made as to the uses to which the different rooms of this House are applied. It is a question which has some interest to myself on account of the extremely inadequate accommodation which is afforded for the work I am compelled to do from time to time. I have been under the impression that we could use the corridors, but judging from events that have taken place recently there appears to be some rule which prohibits using even the corridors opposite the small apartments in which we are allowed to carry on our work. I think it is extremely desirable that we should know exactly to what uses the rooms are put, and what authority you propose to exercise over members of the House in respect to documents brought into this House ; because as late as this morning I understand that certain parcels brought to this House for the purpose of being piled up in room No. 6, to the great inconvenience of members there, and for the reason that there was no other place to put them, have been ordered away by your authority from the precincts of the House. Under these conditions I think it is extremely desirable that we should know a little of the use to which the different rooms in the House are put, and of the rights which we have as members of this parliament to use those rooms. I have seen during the past session and during the present session a room downstairs opposite the telephone room, which does not seem to be occupied by any person, except that members on the other side of the House have used it during the past session for the distribution of literature, I know that because I have seen them doing it myself. I know something about the use which has been made of other apartments in this House for that purpose. While that has been going on, bags containing a certain amount of speeches and other documents which were required to be sent out by members on this side of the House for the purpose of affording desirable information to the public have been piled up in the corridors, not in corridors opposite rooms used by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, but in the corridors opposite rooms more particularly used by gentlemen on this side of the House, opposite my own room, opposite the room of my hon. friend from Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Taylor), the whip of the Liberal-Conservative party, opposite room No. 6. Now, no objection has been taken to this for many weeks, and I was not aware that any hon. gentleman in this House had been inconvenienced by that; and if it had been suggested in the House that any gentleman on the other side of the House objected to it or was inconvenienced by it, I am sure I would have been very glad to pile a portion of those bags up in my own room, small as it is, littered up as it is, for the purpose of removing that inconvenience. I am sure that would have been done by my hon. friend from Leeds and Grenville, who is also cooped up in a very small room, absolutely insufficient for his purpose. I am sure that every hon. gentleman on this side of the House would have been willing that the small apartment which we occupy known as No. 6 should also have been piled up by these bags rather than that any hon. gentleman on the other side, and particularly the Postmaster General, should have been inconvenienced in any way by these bags being placed in the corridors.

That is one thing, but it is another thing for the Speaker of this House or for any minister of the Crown to undertake to order away from the precincts of this House bags which are sent here to the address of a member of this House; and I for my part wish to say that I cannot, until I am better advised, recognize your authority Sir, or the authority of any man sitting in that Chair—because my remarks are not at all personal to yourself—the authority of any man occupying your chair, to take a course of that kind with regard to documents sent to a member of this House in the House of Commons. I recognize fully your right to see that good order is kept in the corridors, and I have already said that if you or any other gentleman in this House objects to the corridors being used for that purpose, these bags can be piled in my own room, or in a small number of apartments that are allotted to members on this side of the House. But I want to know at the same time something about the uses to which other rooms in this House are applied at present, and which so far as I am concerned do not seem to be occupied for any useful purpose, and might be occupied for that very purpose. It is not dignified for any Minister of the Crown to undertake to place difficulties in the way of sending out literature from this side of the House to people in this country; it is not a very dignified part for even a private member to undertake to play, and I am glad to say that no private member of this House, so far as I am aware, or at least very few, have raised any question about this; and it has been reserved for a minister of the Crown, who, it is said, aspires to the leadership of the great Liberal party of this country, to raise a question about so petty a matter as that. I do not know where that hon. gentleman is at present. I do not see him in his seat. We have a great many apartments in the Commons which are reserved for the use of members of the House of Commons, and if there is to be difficulty about matters of this kind, I think it will be desirable for us to ascertain whether these apartments are at the present time used for the wisest purpose. There are sleeping apartments provided for certain officials of the House of parliament, and if we are so crowded that it is impossible to give members on this side of the House an opportunity to arrange literature for distribution throughout the country, literature which is sent out by both political parties, then I think it may be desirable to inquire whether we could not better carry on the affairs of the country by using these apartments, which are practically dwellings at the present time, for some other purpose than that to which they are now put.

I have not been inclined to complain about my own inadequate accommodation. I have been content to do as I have done over and over again, go out into the corridor to hold conferences with gentlemen, by reason of the fact that my office was so small and was so littered up. I have had to sit in my office and have my secretary neglect his work because, when I desired to have private conferences, he had to go out and cool his heels in the corridors perhaps for an hour or even an hour and a half at a time, to the great neglect of his work which was going on. I have not said anything about this, I have been content to endure it; but if we are to have a tempest in a teapot created by the Postmaster General because certain bags have been piled up in these corridors opposite my own room and opposite the room of the Liberal-Conservative whip, I think it is high time that we should have from you Sir, and I would like to have it to-day, a statement of the use to which every room in this House is applied at the present time, and a consideration as to whether it is not possible to give to gentlemen in this House who have important duties to transact, a little more accommodation than they have at present.

We have had bags stored in these corridors all ready for mailing since the 25th of September, and the post office service of this country has been unable to take charge of them or to deal with them. I want to point out that the blocking up of the corridors, if they have been blocked up, is largely due to the fact that the post office service has not been able to take care of these bags which have been prepared for the mails. I assume that the post office has not been able to do so. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) suggests that it is not on account of inability but on account of unwillingness. I do not doubt that, but I make no suggestion of that kind. This is now the 21st of October and there are bags which have been ready for mailing since the 25th of September as I am informed by those who have charge of those bags. There has not been any very enormous quantity. I will venture to say that the speeches of my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) in regard to the transcontinental question have been sent out to the people in greater quantities than the documents which are to be sent out from the bags piled up in the corridors of this House. It is very well known that a very large number of the speeches to which I have referred have been sent out.

Another question to which I would like to have an answer from the government is this: Is the government prepared to say that rooms or places in departmental buildings or in buildings hired and paid for by this country have not been made use of during the present session or during past sessions for the purpose of distributing literature for the government campaign. The right hon. gentleman may be prepared or he may not be prepared to make a statement in regard to that. All I have to say is that if he will grant an inquiry into the subject I venture to think that I will be able to bring to his attention certain facts in regard to it that he may not be aware of at the present time and I think if there is any question of abuse of privileges an inquiry such as I have suggested would lead the right hon. gentleman to the conclusion that there are very much greater irregularities in connectioin with these matters than any irregularity which might be occasioned by the piling of certain bags in the corridors of this House. I thought it right to bring this matter to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because, without any desire to be disrespectful or to pass beyond the bounds of the most absolute courtesy towards yourself, it seems to me that it is beyond your jurisdiction and beyond your power, occupying even the high position which you do occupy, to direct that parcels addressed by hon. gentlemen in this House of Commons shall be removed from the premises or the grounds of parliament and shall not be delivered to the persons for whom they are intended. I have stated to you what I have heard in regard to that and what has been my information. I do not know whether this information be correct or not, but I thought it right to bring it to your attention. I trust I have been misinformed in regard to it. But, in saying what I have in regard to this matter, I of course recognize your right as Speaker of the House to preserve order in the House and in the corridors thereof. I would like to know also how it is that the documents to which I have referred are delayed so long in the corridors. They have been there for weeks ready for mailing and if they have not been mailed, I would like to know what disposition is at present made of the rooms which are at present available for the use of members of the House of Commons and to inquire whether there is not some room which might be available in view of the fact that in the lower part of this building there are rooms which are not used for any purpose in connection with the business of this House. Therefore, as I presume that my remarks have exceeded the measure which would be permitted to me in speaking merely on the Orders of the Day, I will conclude my remarks by moving that the House do now adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has brought up a motion which, I think, is very small in itself and he has spoken on it in a most unfortunate manner and in a manner which I think is unworthy of himself. The members of this House have to submit to some inconveniences. It is a pity but I do not see that this condition can be remedied. It is unfortunate that every member has not room enough in which to transact his business. It is to be regretted that the leader of the opposition has very small quarters. I can sympathize with my hon. friend in this respect. I occupied those quarters before he did but I never complained that they were too small. These rooms were occupied at one time by a man who is at least the equal of my hon. friend or of any of us—Mr. Blake, and Mr. Blake never made the smallest complaint about them. I know the quarters are very small and I know that they are inconvenient because I occupied them for a very long time. But, I occupy quarters today that are not very much larger in space. However, I think there are some things that could receive the attention of the House rather than such matters as these. Have an investigation. It is a small proposition on the part of my hon. friend to call upon the government to have an investigation as to how some of the rooms downstairs are occupied.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I did not ask for any investigation in regard to that matter. I said that great irregularities might be proved in respect to the departmental buildings upon an investigation being held.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will accept the correction. It is not much larger than the statement I have made. I think our time is too precious at this stage of the session to think of having an inquiry of that kind. If, at the opening of next session it is thought advisable to have a proper distribution of the rooms of the House I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) and his honour the Speaker who have charge of that matter will be only too glad to look into the matter and give as much room as possible to every member of this House. But all this trouble has arisen because of a condition of things which was brought to the attention of the House a few days ago. True it is for many years past, so long as parliament has been a parliament, members have distributed the literature of their own party and so long as parliament will be a parliament they will continue to do so, but this procedure which has been normal for some years has taken on proportions which involve an abuse if not a violation of the law. The whole trouble has come from the fact that a certain publisher in the city of Montreal to whom the privileges of the post office are extended and who gets certain bags for the distribution of his papers, instead of using the bags for the distribution of his papers, has used them to distribute the literature of the Conservative party. Since my hon. friend has brought this matter to the attention of the House let us see what the facts are. In order that the members of the opposition might distribute their literature not at their own cost but at the cost of the country they get this publisher in Montreal to send the literature which had been prepared by the Conservative party probably in this House and printed in the city of Montreal, in the office of a certain newspaper, to the party whip, here, not to the parties for which it was intended them to be distributed by the party whip to parties outside. So, His Majesty's mails, instead of being abused once, have been abused twice. This literature was prepared, I suppose, in Ottawa, printed in Montreal, sent back to the House of Commons in Ottawa and from the House of Commons scattered all over the country. This is an abuse of the privileges of this House; it is an abuse of the postal service. The publisher of that paper was within his right when he used the bags to circulate his own newspaper, but when he used those bags to distribute the literature of the Conservative party, thereby incommoding everybody in this House, and other newspapers throughout Canada, it was an improper use of the mail bags. I understand that in order to have free circulation through the corridors, instructions have had to be given to dispose of these bags so that members may not tumble over them. If that is all that has been done, I am at a loss to know in what way, Sir, you have infringed on the rules of the House. I am at a loss to know what there was to justify my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) in using the serio-comic language in which he brought this matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I am surprised that the right hon. gentleman should have chosen to use such strong language in expressing his opinion of the address of our leader, which to my mind was characterized by the greatest of moderation. The leader of the opposition used not one offensive word, when he got up in the House to assert his rights, and the rights of his followers. The right hon. gentleman has chosen to treat the matter as of extreme insignificance, and as being unworthy to be made the subject of a motion to adjourn. The Prime Minister apparently thinks that it is the business of the opposition to accept with complacency, if not with gratitude, any kind of treatment that may be meted out to them by the officers of the House, and by departmental officers, acting, I presume, under instructions. To my mind it was a very small piece of business on the part of some members of the cabinet which the right hon. gentleman leads. The right hon. gentleman has stated that some very eminent men—of whom he is not the least by any means—have used the narrow quarters in which the leader of the opposition now has to transact his business. But the leader of the opposition did not object to being confined to these narrow quarters, although he was compelled to draw attention to the inconvenience to which he is subjected, when he found that very rigid and strict regulation was placed upon certain portions of this building by the gentleman who directs the management of this House. The leader of the opposition has borne the inconvenience he suffers without complaint. Now, Sir, let me point out, that we do not enjoy the franking privilege as a privilege at all, nor do we receive it as a favour from the government or from any member supporting the government. It is our right to frank letters, and we are going to insist upon exercising that right to the full. That right has been curtailed by the action of the hon. gentleman who fills the position of Postmaster General, and who to my mind, fills it very inefficiently. Here is a gentleman who, with all the resources of his department, and with unlimited facilities for purchasing material and employing assistants, is unable to pass through the Ottawa post office more that forty or fifty bags of mail in the course of a day. We on this side of the House have had no difficulty in procuring three or four boys, who, without previous training, have been able to handle a hundred of these bags in a day, and yet the Postmaster General, the Minister of Labour, is so inefficient, that his whole department is unable to handle forty or fifty bags of this mail matter in the same time. Would we not be an extraordinary opposition if we were to submit quietly to such treatment? Even if the corridors have to be occupied to a certain extent, they have not at all been crowded to such an extent, as to prevent even so big a man as the Postmaster General from making his way along without any inconvenience. It has grown to be an outrage, that these bags of mail matter have had to remain there for over a month, without being despatched through the mails of this country. If the Postmaster General cannot manage the business of his department any better than he has done in this case, I would submit to the Prime Minister that he should look around for another Postmaster General, and I have no doubt that he will find one who can handle without the slightest trouble, all the mail matter that is despatched by members of the House of Commons. I presume that one single newspaper in Montreal, the 'Star,' for instance, has handled within the past week two or three thousand bags of mail, similar to those that are now lying in the corridors. One single and private institution is able to do that in the course of its ordinary business, and yet, the Postmaster General, at headquarters in Ottawa, where the work is done under his very eyes, is not able to get this mail despatched with promtitude. It is most disgraceful to the Postmaster General, that I am in a position to be able to get up here, and charge him to his face with being so inefficient, that this mail matter which has been stamped and prepared and addressed by the members of the opposition, has had to lie here for weeks without being transmitted. It is an extraordinary thing that the Postmaster General has not been able to transmit these mails from Ottawa, and has not been able to procure a sufficient supply of mail bags to accommodate the newspaper press of the city of Montreal. It is an absurd situation, which no man in the possession of his senses would have created for himself. I say that the Postmaster General is a very indiscreet man, so far as his reputation is concerned, when he seeks to immortalize himself by telling the country, that his department is unable to handle this very moderate amount of mail matter. If the Postmaster General devoted himself to the work of facilitating the transmission of these mails, not one of these bags would be lying in the corridors to-day.

A man of very moderate abilities could handle the 1,700 or 1,800 bags that have come here in the course of a month—for that is the full amount, say 60 a day—and there are now 700 of these bags not delivered. We had an opinion that the purpose of the mails was to receive from the public and to deliver to its destination matter that was regularly and properly placed in the hands of the post office. Apparently that is not the purpose of the mails; in some cases, the purpose is to delay and prevent the delivery of matter placed in the hands of the post office. The post office is a government monopoly, they have the exclusive right to transmit matter that comes regularly into the mails; we have no other person to whom to go if we want to distribute this matter, and therefore we have a right, as citizens of this country, as well as members of parliament, to demand that any matter that we put into the hands of the Postmaster General or any officer of his department should be dealt with promptly and satisfactorily to us—not to him, but to us. We perfectly understand his opinion on this subject; we know his rights and ours; we know his duties and are going to insist that he shall perform these duties. When he or any other man undertakes to deprive members of this House of their rights, then he must expect them to insist upon having their rights and nothing less. The whole matter is unworthy. I was not altogether surprised, from the course of the hon. gentleman who is now Postmaster General when in opposition, to find him acting in such a petty, silly, ridiculous spirit as he is doing, but I was much surprised to-day, I was never more surprised in my life, than to find that the Prime Minister of Canada was disposed to sustain that indiscreet and foolish Postmaster General in the undertaking upon which he has entered. If the Postmaster General chooses to make it patent to all Canada and to a great part of the world outside of Canada, that he is unable to handle 1,800 bags filled with 300 or 400 pieces each of mail matter of the easiest kind, resembling newspapers in character—if he is disposed to send out information that he is not able to organize his department so as to handle that amount of mail matter in thirty days, he has a perfect right to do it, and I congratulate him upon the result. I think he will go down to posterity not only as the man who devised the postage stamps and the motto of the vaster empire than has been, but will be looked upon as the vastest failure that has been as Postmaster General. That is the situation he has created for himself, that is the pillory on which he will be put and will be kept as long as he occupies a seat in this House. He has taken all this trouble out of a small desire to annoy and obstruct the proper conduct of the opposition in using their franking privilege. If the hon. gentleman wants to do that sort of thing he will get enough of it, and he may fry in it and he will fry. I want to know why it is that because the Postmaster General is either unable or unwilling to allow his officers in Ottawa to receive matter from us at a very moderate rate, to the extent of some 30,000 pieces a day, and chooses to create a glut in this building by refusing to take the matter, officials of this House should come to members of the opposition and instruct them that they are not to be allowed to use the corridors to store this mail matter. It is not the fault of the opposition that that matter is in the corridors. It is the fault of the Postmaster General. We have a post office in this House of Commons, established and maintained for the use of members, and it must be of such character and extent that it will discharge the business tendered to it by the members of this House. It must be large enough to receive every particle of mail which we may tender. If it cannot do this it is the business of the Postmaster General to find other accommodation; if he cannot find it anywhere else, he is responsible for the fact that this mail matter is lying in the corridors, and he it is who should be censured by the Speaker or the officers of the Speaker for having it there, not we. We are not at all anxious to have it about the corridors; we are anxious to get it out and have used every means in our power to get it out, but we have been unable to do so because the department of the hon. Postmaster General is either unable or unwilling to take it. It is a situation which is simply intolerable, and I think it is as well that the right hon. gentleman should understand that the members of the opposition are not going to be lectured in the manner in which he talked this morning. The right hon. gentleman may have his own opinion about the gravity of this subject, and he may choose to regard it as a very small matter, but we want him to understand that an invasion of the privilege of any British subject is a thing that will not be permitted. The invasion of the rights of the House of Commons, of the men who are sent here to discharge the business of the country, or the obstruction of these gentlemen in the discharge of anything that is their right and duty is something which we are not disposed to stand, and we will not be willing to allow this House to adjourn until this matter is satisfactorily settled. We want to have a distinct and clear understanding as to what our rights are; we want to get every jot and tittle of our rights, and we do not want it as a favour from any man. We simply say that we have a right to the franking privilege and we want to be permitted to use it. If the Postmaster General cannot manage the mail service of this country so as to be able to handle this matter, we will want the right hon. the Premier to get another Postmaster General, because it is his business as Premier to have the work of that department carried out in a satisfactory manner, and he is responsible if the gentleman occupying that position under him is not able to discharge the duties of that department. I might call the attention of my right hon. friend to this further fact: This is not a question merely for to-day or for this opposition; it is a question for all time in Canada and for all oppositions that may sit in this House for all time. If we have these rights we must exercise them. If when the right hon. gentleman was in opposition he had been refused this privilege I have too much respect for him to believe that he would not have protested. We have our rights and we do not want to be hindered in these rights; we are now asserting these rights as much for the men who will follow us as for ourselves, because we realize that the object of the Postmaster General is to cause us petty annoyance, and that his efforts must fail in causing us anything more than a mere temporary inconvenience. But it is a question of privilege and of right, and we are speaking for the men who may sit here at any time as an opposition. We have our rights and are determined to assert them, not only for ourselves but for the men who in time to come may exercise these rights.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I regret not having been in the chamber at the commencement of this discussion, and perhaps owing to my absence I may not deal with some points, if any have been made, which I did not hear. However, I have had the honour of listening to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), who has in this instance departed from his usual course of addressing the House with a certain measure of moderation and dignity. I on this occasion regret to find that he has departed from that role, and has, as all gentlemen do who are trying to uphold a bad case, indulged in rather violent and abusive language. Without dwelling upon the personal attack which he makes upon me or discussing the question of whether or not the general administration of the Post Office Department is satisfactory to the public, leaving that question to be determined by the public itself, I will give to the House the bare facts of the case without endeavouring to evade or to cloud the issue. This is not a question of the franking privilege at all, although that subject may fairly come up for consideration in view of the events that have taken place. Let me tell you frankly and exactly how the matter came to my attention and how the situation has grown to what it is. On Saturday last I received a communication from a leading publisher of the city of Montreal—not the Montreal 'Star,' but another leading journal in that city—complaining that his house had not been furnished, according to the usual custom, with bags for carrying their papers to the post office. I might say that the department, in order to accommodate newspaper publishers, inaugurated the practice of allowing them to receive from the post office, from time to time, sufficient mail sacks in which to bag their papers for transmission to the post office.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is that custom not for the purposes of accommodating, not the newspapers, but the post office authorities, by saving them the expense of sorting these mails ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Probably there are mutual advantages. It is doubtless for mutual convenience, and may have the advantage suggested by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes), but it also has the corresponding advantage of enabling the publishers to send their mails to the post office at the latest moment, and it is a great boon to newspaper publishers to have as much time as possible to get out their issue before the outgoing trains. If, however, as the hon. member for North Victoria suggests, this is no advantage to the newspapers, I do not understand what grievance the 'Star' newspaper may have, if it does not enjoy that privilege to-day. But to return to the history of the situation. On Saturday last I received the communication to which I have alluded. I had no idea then that any difficulty of this kind would occur. My attention had been called to the accumulation of bags of this kind in the corridors, and in private conversation I expressed my opinion.

Mr. CLARKE. Pretty vigorously.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, but it was a private conversation with a leading gentleman on the other side, and the matter then absolutely escaped my attention until I received the communication to which I have alluded. In desirinig that this work should proceed rapidly, and that no ground for complaint should exist, either here or at Montreal, through the department failing to issue bags to the publishers in sufficient quantities, I at once inquired into the cause of the congestion. I learned that the Montreal 'Star' had procured from the post office at Montreal an unusually large number of mail sacks, and had used them, not for the purpose for which they were issued, namely, the carryinig of the newspapers to the station, but to pack up this literature to be transmitted from the post office at Montreal to the Whip of the opposition at Ottawa, and we found bags full of mail matter accumulating at different places throughout the city. I at once caused an inquiry to be made at the post office in the House of Commons to ascertain why they had not been sending away this literature and getting these bags liberated. The answer I received was that the postmaster at Ottawa had refused to receive any more at the city post office. The course adopted for the transmission of the mails from the House is to send them to the city post office, where they are shipped by cars to the various stations and taken away for distribution throughout the country by the various postal cars that leave this city. When, therefore, I learnt that the city postmaster had refused to receive any more because he had no room, I deemed it my duty personally to inspect the post office, and see what justification there was for that explanation. I there was given ocular proof of the correctness of the statement. I was pointed to masses of accumulated bags, which blocked up the inside space. And as a considerable amount of general mail matter passes through the post office in and out, and the postmaster deemed it his duty to see that the general mail service was not unduly interfered with, he refused to receive any more mail bags. The postmaster, or one of his officers took me to the basement, which covers all the ground floor, and he there showed me hundreds of bags full of campaign literature which had been dumped on them, and to remove which they had not sufficient postal cars.

Mr. CLARKE. Who dumped the bags in ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were sent by the House of Commons postmaster to the city postmaster.

Mr. BELL. Is not that a perfectly regular proceeding ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly, that is the proper thing to do.

Mr. BELL. Why then characterize it as dumping ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Because the expression aptly describes what was done. I am trying to give the facts. The postmaster or rather his deputy then took me to the entrance of the building, where there is a very considerable lobby space, and he here pointed out to me the accumulation of bags and said : 'In our efforts to accommodate we have received all the bags we can find storage for inside the building,' and he pointed to me—may I use the word 'monuments.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Mountains.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He pointed to a mountain of bags, and said that there was not space for another bag. When he told me that the mail clerks on the cars had complained that they could not handle any more matter, and that the quantity forced on them was calculated to interfere with the general mail service of the country, I prosecuted the inquiry further.

Mr. GOURLEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly.

Mr. GOURLEY. I want to ask if he reprimanded this underling, this understrapper who undertook to interfere with the privilege of parliament ? He ought to have dismissed him at once, instead of listening to his impudence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know to what officer the hon. gentleman refers. The city postmaster informed me that they were sending out by train all that the trains could take. I made inquiry of another officer in order to learn the fact from him also.

Mr. CLARKE. Who was that officer ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The controller of the railway mail service. I asked him why they did not remove more of this matter by the trains, and he gave me this explanation : ' Most of this mail matter,' he said, ' was for Ontario.' There was some small proportion of it for the west, but the great and overwhelming bulk of it was for the province of Ontario. There are only four passenger trains a day carrying mails leaving Ottawa for the west. He told me that, considering the limited capacity of the postal cars—for every one knows that only a portion of a car, as a rule, is devoted to postal purposes, there being a compartment for express, and, perhaps one for baggage also—they were carrying all that they could possibly carry.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In four cars ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did you believe him ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did and I do believe him.

Mr. BRODER. Will the hon. minister allow me to ask him how it is that this matter can come here so quickly if it cannot get away ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that it came by post, by express, by baggage and in every way it could get here. But, when mail matter is being exported from the city, it cannot be sent away under conditions which allow of it being sent in carloads; it must be sent under such conditions that the bags may be opened the moment the train starts on its journey, and the separate pieces of mail matter which the bags contain sorted for their destination. Mr. Armstrong, the controller of the railway mail service, informed me that there is a very considerable volume of mail matter from the city, from the public generally, that must leave by every outgoing train, and an additional average of ten bags per postal car is all that can be accommodated. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) represented that it was only the question of the despatch of forty bags a day. It is not such a question, but a question of despatching a very large number of bags per day. But the whole of the mail service, from Ottawa westward cannot be assigned exclusively to any particular class of work. But if there must be a choice, I should think that we should be bound to give precedence to the general correspondence of the people dealing with trade and other matters, rather than allow it to be shut out by any other class of mail matter. For example, there are large quantities of goods sent by mail, as well as a great many newspapers and other pieces of printed matter. If the situation is such that there is not accommodation for everything in the mails, I think priority should be given to correspondence. But, whether that view is acquiesced in or not, Mr. Armstrong—and there is no better authority ; he is not one of my appointees ; I promoted him to his high office, but he is an old and experienced officer appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite and there is no more faithful official in the public service of Canada—Mr. Armstrong informed me that considering the demands upon the service of postal cars leaving Ottawa, they are not able to handle an average of more than ten bags per train in addition to the other demands upon the accommodation upon the cars.

Mr. CLANCY. A pretty bad service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The cars now in use are as large as are available. I did not build them or organize them ; they are the cars of the country, and the cars that have been used for the performance of this service year after year. If hon. gentlemen opposite say that we should supplement the service by subsidizing additional train service to carry away the mails and so prevent congestion by this class of literature, that is another question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question, if I may. I have been informed that one of the large newspapers in the city of Montreal was sending away 3,000 bags a week. The Postmaster General will observe that, according to the statement of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) that is twice as many bags as the whole number that have caused this congestion. Is it the case that one newspaper in Montreal send out over 3,000 bags a week.

Mr. CLARKE. Which go through the mails——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly, which go through the mails—and, if so, how is it possible that there should be so great congestion in this office because the department is called upon to handle sixty or seventy bags a week ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not familiar with all the details of the working of the post office. But I was explaining that, where mail matter has to go in a postal car, and the assorting of the pieces in the bags must go on while the car is on its journey, that is very different matter from a newspaper being able to ship away by post, by freight, by baggage, by express, by steamer, and in every way, thousands of bags a week. There are many ways for these thousands of bags which leave Montreal weekly to go. I am now speaking of the service that has to be performed by means of the postal cars on the four regular trains leaving here daily for the west. The situation is as I stated, so far as I know and so far as I believe it to be—that it is not possible, with the railway facilities now furnished this country, to take from this city, during the session, more than forty bags per day over and above the average output of the session. There is always a very considerable amount of franking going on during the session, and this adds to the volume of the mail matter leaving Ottawa in the regular and ordinary course.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Postmaster General mentioned forty bags in one case and ten bags in another. I suppose these figures apply to different conditions, but I do not know that I understood exactly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was speaking of what Mr. Armstrong, the controller of the railway mail service told me. He said they could not find accommodation in the car for the receipt of these bags and the handling of the matter they contained—there must be men in the car and they must have floor space to work in—for more than an average of ten additional bags to each car, which, with a car to each train and four trains a day, would make an everage of forty bags. I have urged Mr. Armstrong—I may tell my hon. friends in good faith—to do all that is possible. I address myself particularly to my hon. friend from Pictou. He is a gentleman to whose good opinion I attach some weight. I am sorry that he should have expressed himself as he has done. I am sure he spoke in ignorance of the facts, but he has, unintentionally, done me an injustice.

I am not asking him to recall or recant what he may have said in a moment of weakness. I concede to him and all hon. gentlemen the privilege of making the best they can out of a bad cause. But I am now dealing with this matter departmentally, and I say that Mr. Armstrong reported to me that if the regular train service only were available it would take nearly sixty days to carry off all the mail matter that is now here, this additional mail matter that we have to despatch. Therefore, if, as my hon. friend says, we are not to prorogue until this stuff is carried away, we might as well adjourn over the Christmas vacation. Now, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) charged me with acting in a high-handed manner in withholding from the Montreal 'Star' the privilege of receiving bags. Let me say that it was not a question of choice. When I gave the order not to give out to that paper any more bags until they had returned to us some 1,830 they had, I did so because of the department being unable to supply the other publishers with the quantity of bags they required, simply because the Montreal 'Star' had obtained so large a number. The Montreal 'Star' having obtained possession, for this illegitimate purpose, of such a large number of bags, over 1,830, in a short time, not only exhausted the supply that would have been available for that paper, but a considerable number that would have been available for other publishers. My deputy endeavoured in every possible way to meet the difficulty, telegraphing to Winnipeg and to other places to gather in these bags, if there were any that were available, in order that we might meet the shortage in Montreal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What supply of bags have you in the city of Montreal ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The supply of bags that go to newspapers is different from the supply of other bags. There are all sorts of bags, there are bags of different sizes and grades ; there are small bags for letters, there are waterproof bags for certain purposes, there are bags for the English mail, and there are these large sacks which are used for the newspapers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many was your deputy successful in finding ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We got 200 from Winnipeg. The public there have been inconvenienced beyond measure by the hundreds of bags that have been lying to the order of the whip of the opposition, by reason of the space being used for the storage of this Tory literature.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Was there not a very serious congestion at Winnipeg for some months before this Liberal-Conservative literature was being distributed ? Is it not true that members of this House from that region have complained that mail matter was being delayed there for want of accommodation long before this literature was distributed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It happens that owing to the great prosperity which is now blessing this country, the business of Winnipeg is to-day in a most flourishing condition, and the post office, which was erected by our predecessors, a post office of very diminutive proportions, which showed their conception of the future of this country, and which they thought was adequate to meet all the requirements of that district for many years to come, that post office, I say, owing to the beneficent influence of the present administration upon business, now proves wholly insufficient to meet the requirements of the business people of the west. That is a condition regrettable in itself, but not to be deplored in view of the cause. My officers have endeavoured in all possible ways to supplement the post office accommodation of that city and to get additional floor space for handling the mails. But so prosperous is that city that it is hardly possible to rent a single building for that purpose. If, therefore, the mail service in Winnipeg is taxed to its utmost capacity, it is only what may be said of the business people of Winnipeg generally, who find themselves scarcely able to carry on the great volume of business which comes to them. The market is so satisfactory that even the manufacturers and trades people of Winnipeg are not able to do the business which presents itself to them, owing to the lack of capacity in their premises. But coming back again to the subject we were discussing, I was explaining why I found it necessary to withhold from the Montreal 'Star' that issue of bags which it would have been otherwise the pleasure and the duty of the department to make to them. We did not issue to them all the bags that were asked for on Monday, simply because we did not have them available, simply because the Montreal 'Star' had got into its possession more than its fair share, some 1,800 bags odd, and was inconveniencing the rest of the service.

Mr. BRODER. Is it not a fact that the great majority of these bags were here in the custody of the Ottawa post office, and not in use by the Montreal 'Star'?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are sent here to the order of the chief whip of the opposition, and they are used for holding this accumulated tonnage of literature, some of it, I am sorry to say, of a very incendiary and seditious character. I hope I shall have the moral and physical support of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) in endeavouring to preserve the peace of this country in the event of its being disturbed by the dissemination of this inflammatory literature. However, I hope it will not be necessary, even after this appeal to arms which has been made, to call upon my hon. friend to render to this country the same gallant and valuable services which he has rendered on another occasion to the empire. Again I will endeavour to return to the Montreal 'Star.' The department did not feel it fair or right to the other publishers to continue to issue to the Montreal 'Star' the property of the department to be used for a purpose unauthorized and unwarranted, and the issue to the 'Star' was discontinued until it returned to the government the bags which it had obtained, and gave a guarantee or assurance—a word would be sufficient—that they would not hereafter be put to the uses to which they were then being put.

Mr. SPROULE. How could the 'Star' return them when they were in the possession of the Post Office Department here?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand there are some down in the express offices and stored around town. Are those in the possession of the government? When I last took stock of the bags in our possession——

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

Mr. CLARKE. We don't take much stock in it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At any rate, on Saturday a hundred odd additional sacks reached this city. I believe they came by post. Then I believe we got on Sunday 400 odd bags that arrived by train. At that time, as I was told by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson), he counted 735 sacks full of this literature scattered through the corridors of this building; at this particular time the whole basement of the post office building was also occupied with bags of this literature, several hundred in number, and the lobby of the city post office was also crowded to the ceiling with one or two hundred more. I do not remember how this totalled up, but I think it came up to the vicinity of 2,000 bags.

Mr. CLARKE. One thousand eight hundred and thirty, the hon. gentleman said.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not very far from 2,000.

Mr. CLARKE. That is the statement the hon. gentleman made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I said in the vicinity of 2,000. Call it 1,830 for short. I take the view that the diversion of these bags has been caused by the Montreal 'Star,' and that they are responsible for the return of these bags. Yesterday, when representatives of the 'Star' appealed to me on the subject I told them that I would be pleased to start the issue of them at once if they would make it possible to me to do so by returning those bags.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask the hon. gentleman upon whose information it is that he states that 400 bags came up on Sunday?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Upon the information of my deputy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can inform the hon. gentleman that the statement is absolutely inaccurate. The 400 pieces to which he refers were not conveyed in bags at all. They were bundles tied up and it was Saturday they came and not Sunday.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The assistant city postmaster pointed out to me a pile of mail bags containing this material which he said reached him on Saturday evening.

An hon. MEMBER. How many were there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not count them but hon. gentlemen may go down and count them for themselves. There would be over 100 bags in that lot.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not talking about bags at all. I am talking about the 400 pieces that were not in bags at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When did they come?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On Saturday.

Mr. TAYLOR. They did not come by the mail at all. They came by express.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then we are dealing with those that did not come by mail. I am dealing with the fact that the post office in Montreal isued at least 1,830 bags to the Montreal 'Star' and that they were used for this purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know they were. I have it on the authority of the head of the postal stores branch.

Mr. CLARKE. In what period of time ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Since this movement began.

Mr. TAYLOR. Six weeks ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I want to show how I have treated that company and I think that the House will admit that I have treated them fairly. I informed the representatives of the 'Star' yesterday that as fast as they could get any of these bags liberated and if they told me that they would not misuse them the courtesy would be restored to them. I said that I would speak to Mr. Speaker and see if he could assist them in that movement. Mr. Speaker was good enough to receive them and I understand that he assisted them to carry out the arrangement. Last night the manager of the 'Star' told me that about 100 bags had been emptied and would be returned to the department this morning. I then told him that I would give him an order and I did write a telegram last night and delivered it to the representative of the 'Star' giving instructions to the post office authorities in Montreal at once to give to the 'Star' 100 sacks if they had them available and if it did not inconvenience other publishers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, if it did not inconvenience other publishers because inconvenience has been occasioned by the Montreal 'Star' and other publishers have no right to be inconvenienced. I notified the representatives of the 'Star' this morning that as fast as we got any of the sacks back we would continue to enlarge the issue until we get back to the normal state of affairs when we would have no more trouble with the matter. I think they will not complain that the department has treated them unfairly. On the contrary I have reason to think that they do not attach any special blame to the Post Office Department. I think they know where the real responsibility rests.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They know where it rests.

Mr. COCHRANE. It rests with the hon. Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it does not rest with the Postmaster General and it does not attach to any of his officers. The congestion continues to-day and it cannot be relieved at once unless parliament is prepared to subsidize special trains for the particular purpose of carrying this mail matter at an enormous expense to the country. If it did it would be enlarging the service to an extent never before contemplated. The assistant city postmaster who has been for many years in that office and who has practically charge of it tells me that in his long experience he has never witnessed such a state of affairs as that which has taken place to-day. Yesterday I received a letter from a leading manufacturer in a town not far from this city who told me that it was his practice in the course of his business at certain times in the year to hand into the post office large quantities of circulars advertising his business to be transmitted through the mails and that when on Friday last he visited the post office in connection with this issue he was informed by the postmaster in that large town that there had come into the post office under the frank of a member of this House such an immense quantity of this literature and other literature, mentioning the character of it, being in the form of hand sheets issued by the Manufacturers Association, I think he said, that it would take him two or three days to clear off this avalanche of postal matter which had been thrown in upon him and that until it was cleared out he could not receive the mail matter that this business man was offering to him. This is but one illustration of the extent to which this has gone and therefore perhaps it is not unreasonable to come to the conclusion that no Post Office Department could very reasonably be expected to be called upon unexpectedly to perform such an extraordinary, and I may say, useless and expensive service as that which the Post Office Department is now being asked to perform.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds and Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I regret that when my hon. friend the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) rose in his place this morning for the purpose of drawing the attention of the government to some grievances that not only he himself, but——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will allow me, there is one point that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) referred to that I intended to speak upon. He discussed the franking privilege. The franking privilege does not come into this discussion at all. Every one has rights under the statute. There is no attempt or desire to curtail any one's rights in that regard. This is simply a question of administration, and while the hon. gentleman may argue it from the standpoint of the franking privilege that is not the issue here. The franking privilege remains as long as the statute remains as it is and any hon. gentleman is perfectly within his right in availing himself of the benefits of the statute. The department does not in the faintest degree desire to do anything to interfere with anybody's rights in that regard. It may be a question whether you are exercising that right within such reasonable limits as to make it possible to practically enjoy it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who is to be the judge in that matter ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. You.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have as good a right to be the judge as the hon. Postmaster General. I want to tell hon. gentlemen who are so ready to use their mouths without any sense——

Mr. TAYLOR. I was remarking when interrupted by the hon. Postmaster General and Minister of Labour that I regretted very much, that, when my hon. friend the leader of the opposition rose in his place for the purpose of drawing the attention of the government to a grievance that he, himself, was subjected to and not only himself but many of his supporters, the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should have answered him in the way he did. It is to be regretted that the Prime Minister, instead of promising to remove these grievances, should have attacked the Montreal 'Star,' declaring that it had abused its privilege by sending mail matter to the whip of the opposition. But the right hon. gentleman did not say that the Montreal 'Herald,' which is largely subsidized by his government, has done the same thing. The 'Herald' printed hundreds of thousands of copies of the Prime Minister's speech on the transcontinental railway, and sent them up here in mail bags——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say yes, and I know it. The supplements of the Montreal 'Herald' were franked all over the country by the supporters of the government, just in the same way as this was done by us. Why were we not told about this ?

Mr. CLARKE. He was not frank enough to say that.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to see that I am protected in my rights. The Prime Minister did not refer to the matter brought to his attention by the leader of the opposition, which was, that you, Mr. Speaker, acting, I presume, on instructions from the Postmaster General——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR—had refused to receive into this House——

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement which the hon. gentleman has made is incorrect.

Mr. TAYLOR. I take it back, but I have the right to say that you did this, and I have the right to suppose that you did it, acting on his instructions, because it is a post office matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. That statement is incorrect.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know that the Sergeant at Arms told me last night——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have taken it back. I ask the Speaker to keep the gang sitting across the House quiet. Hon. gentlemen will get prorogation in a very few days if they keep on like that. The Sergeant at Arms told me last night that he had instructions from the Speaker, not to allow the stuff that came to me by express to enter the House. I paid the express charges of $32.04 upon it, and when it came to the door it was not let in, and it was driven back to the express office.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. TAYLOR. By whose authority was that done ? I went to the express company this morning, and I told them to send it back again, and I would carry it into the House myself, if Mr. Sergeant at Arms or Mr. Chief Messenger should order it away again.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. It came up here and he refused to let it come into the House, and it was dumped on the ground, and I said : 'If you don't call out an army of messengers and carry it into the House, you will hear more about it.' Somebody gave the order then, and the messengers were put to work, and it was carried into the House. That is the kind of treatment we are subjected to. As every one knows, I leave for home on Saturday, but last Saturday I remained until the seven o'clock train on account of the absence of the leader of the opposition. As soon as I left the House the Postmaster General saw fit to make an attack upon me, and if he is correctly reported in the newspaper——

Mr. CLARKE. When your back was turned.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, when my back was turned. But I generally give a Roland for an Oliver, and I am going to draw the attention of the House to the undignified conduct of the Postmaster General——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw 'undignified.'

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). You don't have to ; that's all right.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is referring to a previous debate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am referring to what the Postmaster General said in my absence, if the newspaper report is correct.

Mr. SPEAKER. The report in the newspaper is stated to be a report of what took place in the House. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to a past debate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can read what I see in the newspaper as a statement made by the Postmaster General reflecting on me. Here is what——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to any previous debate.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He is not referring to a previous debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. If this were allowed, then we would have every day a repetition of what was said the previous day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is referring to a previous debate for the purpose of explaining an attack that has been made upon him.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a right to make a personal explanation, but I understand that he wants to make an argument.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He is rising to make a personal explanation.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I am attacked by a member in this House, I have a right to answer it. Here is what the Postmaster General is reported to have said :

I have alluded——

Mr. SPEAKER. A personal explanation is not an argument to meet an argument which has been made by some other member of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If an hon. member of this House has been charged in his absence with some conduct which is not regarded as proper, he has a right to explain his connection with that matter, and to deny that he acted in such a way as invited criticism.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a right to make a personal explanation, provided he does not enter into an argument.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General said certain things about me which I take exception to. Here is what he said :

This accumulation arises from the particular class of literature to which I have alluded, which has been despatched in postal bags to the whip of the opposition, to be redistributed by him throughout Canada. I want these bags, as the property of the Crown, to be forthwith returned to the Post Office Department. Unless they are delivered there, I shall have to exercise the authority of a minister of the Crown and take possession of them. I beg to say, in all seriousness, that we are to-day without mail bags for the proper convenience of the subscribers to the press of this country. We have sufficient of that class of property, but it is unfortunately at this moment out of the control of the government. Enormous numbers of these bags are under the control of an hon. member of this House, and I ask him here to return those bags forthwith, or I will take steps to take possession of them by force of law. We do not desire in the slightest degree to interfere with the use of the franking privilege. I am giving notice now. If I am asked to specify a time, I will do so. I will give the hon. gentleman to-day to deliver those bags to the proper officers, and if they are not delivered by Monday morning, I will take steps to take possession of them.

* * * * * * * *

If hon. gentlemen who control these bags would be good enough to remove their contents and let us have the bags, then the business of the post office could be carried on. But I am not prepared to go to thousands of dollars of expense to purchase additional bags—even the making of them would involve a considerable time—simply to enable a procedure of this kind to be carried out. It does seem to me that a very grave abuse has been made of the privileges of parliament in this procedure. I doubt if parliament ever intended that tons and tons and carloads and trainloads of printed matter should be printed in different places in this country and sent post free to the city of Ottawa, to a member of parliament, under the provisions of the Act which allows such matter to come free ; and that the same privilege should be so abused in the method which is now being adopted.

* * * * * * * *

When a member of this House finds himself in possession of mail bags which are marked the property of the Crown, the property of the Post Office Department, it is his duty at the earliest moment to return them to the government to whom they belong ; and when they come to him illegitimately, as they did in this case, that duty is a much more pressing one on his part. It was a gross violation of the privilege granted to the publisher of that newspaper to divert these bags from the purpose for which they were entrusted to him ; and it is my intention not to allow that same publisher any more to be entrusted with bags until guarantees are given that they will not be diverted from the use to which they ought properly to be put.

I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how I came into possession of these bags illegitimately and why I am holding them illegitimately. When he knew that I had left for home at 7 o'clock he made a demand upon me to have them returned by Monday morning, knowing that I did not get back here until 5 o'clock Monday afternoon. If he had not known that he would have sent a law officer of the Crown to take possession of them. Why these bags are now in the possession of a law officer of the Crown, one of his deputies, the postmaster of this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is not an officer of the Post Office Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is an officer of this House acting under the instruction of the Postmaster General. These bags commenced arriving here on the 20th of September. Every day as they came in here they were emptied and the contents were franked and they were sent to the post office. The post office took them in, put the stamp of the post office on them and threw them out into the corridor and to-day there are 300 bags lying there, stamped by the post office, blocking up the corridor around the front of the post office, in the lobbies, and extending down towards the telegraph offices. Each one of these has been through the post office and has been stamped by the officers of the department, but owing to instructions to receive only so many bags a day so as to prevent as far as possible the sending of this literature to the country, the city post office can take only forty bags a day while tons and tons of matter are going in from different departments for transmission through the mails. If, as the leader of the opposition asked this morning, a commission is appointed we will be able to prove that from every department mountains of literature, put up by servants and paid for by the people of this country are being sent. In one department last week there were six men sitting around a table putting up this blue-book upon the transcontinental railway and the speech of the right hon. the Prime Minister. They were folding them up and sending them out under a minister's frank, paid for by the people of this country, and because the postmaster would not allow our bags to be delivered to us from the post office, as it is our right to have them delivered, we have had to pay $32 of express and then we have been refused the right of admission for express parcels into the House. Is this not a grievance for the opposition? And yet when it is brought to the attention of the Prime Minister he laughs at it as if to say: You, the leader of the opposition, and the gentlemen supporting you have no rights in this House; you cannot have express parcels come here; our officers, the sergeant-at-arms, the chief messenger and the Speaker have forbidden it and it cannot come in. The sergeant-at-arms told me last night that it could not be delivered. I made up my mind that it would be if I had to walk through the sergeant-at-arms, the chief messenger, the Speaker and, back of them all, the Postmaster General. These gentlemen, like the coon in the tree, came down this morning and gave orders to carry it in and it is there and this House is not going to rise until the Postmaster General gets these bags through his post office, so the sooner the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition come to an agreement the sooner this House will prorogue. It will not prorogue a day before the opposition are satisfied that every package of literature that is in these buildings will be sent out, not that it will be held by the Postmaster General, who said a few minutes ago that we would be here until after Christmas if we waited until this was all sent out. We know what he will do; the moment the session is over, as soon as the gun is fired, the franking privilege will cease and the Postmaster General will order a bonfire to burn up this literature. We know that he is afraid, that the Prime Minister is afraid to have this literature go to the country; they are afraid to have the people of this country enlightened on this enormity of the transcontinental railway. We know that. The Postmaster General said that the whole system is blocked on account of the use of these mail bags. If a fire happened and these 1,830 mail bags were burnt would that block the post office system of this country? Altogether in the last six weeks only 1,830 bags of this literature have been sent from the 'Star' office addressed to me here and they have not been in my possession twenty-four hours until they were emptied, their contents franked, and handed to the post office here to take charge of them. I want to ask the Postmaster General now why a couple of hundred bags addressed to me have been held at the Ottawa city post office for the last eight or ten days?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Where is that?

Mr. TAYLOR. In the city post office, because Mr. Speaker gave his instructions to the sergeant-at-arms, and he to the chief messenger not to allow the bags to come into this building.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You say there are a quantity of bags addressed to you in the lobby of the post office at Ottawa.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are held in the post office at Ottawa; the men brought them up here but had to draw them back again by order of the Speaker through the sergeant-at-arms and the chief messenger. They are down there now and I went to the post office and asked the postmaster why they were not delivered.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman asks me a question but he himself gives the answer because he says the Speaker refused to permit these bags to enter the building. I must say that I have never for a moment taken the liberty of suggesting anything to the Speaker, who is responsible for the proper administration of the lobbies of this House, in respect to this matter. I have nothing whatever to do with the actions of either the Speaker or of the sergeant-at-arms or any other officer of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman said a while ago that the city post office is to blame. This stuff came in addressed to me at the House of Commons and why has it not been delivered?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not carry it around.

Mr. TAYLOR. The leader of the opposition brought this to the attention of the Prime Minister this morning and he paid no attention to it. Here are the bags addressed to me lying in the post office a week and not delivered. That is a nice state of affairs. One load was brought up here, but by orders of the officers of this House they were not admitted, and I am satisfied, I have that much confidence in the Speaker, that unless there was some intimation from the Postmaster General he would not of his own accord say: Do not admit literature addressed to Mr. Taylor into the precincts of this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is entirely in error; there has been no interference of any kind on my part or on the part of any one else to prevent the delivery of this mail matter. The only difficulty has arisen because of the state of the lobbies and halls of this House. The Speaker himself, of his own motion decided, that it was better not to allow any further accumulations. I requested the Speaker, if he could, to place a room at the disposal of the hon. gentleman that there might be no such difficulty and he informed me that he had placed at his disposal the Railway Committee room, the largest available room in this building, which it is thought will greatly relieve the congestion.

Mr. CLARKE. But how much floor space is there in it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Three thousand square feet. That room is at his disposal if he desires to use it. I may say that the mail service between the city post office and the House of Commons post office is not under the control of the Postmaster General or of the Post Office Department, but is under the control of the postmaster of the House of Commons, who is an officer of this House and therefore if there were facilities to receive this matter here the hon. gentleman could have it delivered at once.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General makes a very pleasant speech, but what are the facts? He says that he requested the Speaker to get rooms and the Speaker kindly placed at the disposal of the 'Star' men the Railway Committee room upstairs. I immediately went to the messenger department to know if I could have the stuff moved up there, but they could not give me a man to do it. Then we offered to hire six men, but that offer was not accepted nor were we allowed to use the elevator.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the House rose at one o'clock, I was trying, in my humble way, to refute the charge brought against me by the Postmaster General, when he said that I had in my possesssion an enormous quantity of mail bags, and that if I did not deliver them by Monday morning—and the hon. gentleman knew very well that I would not be here until five o'clock on Monday afternoon—that he would take forcible possession of them by law. I want to explain how these bags came to be in my possession. They came addresssed to me. The contents were taken out and franked, and, at the request of the postmaster of the House of Commons, instead of being carried into the post office and dumped on the floor there, they were put back into the mail bags. The postmaster took the bags into the post office, sorted out the contents, stamped them with the post office stamp, filled the bags again, and sent them out into the corridor, where they have been the last two or three days. How am I responsible? If I or any one else attempted to empty the bags and hand them over to the Postmaster General, the postmaster could have us arrested for tampering with His Majesty's mails. The Postmaster General charges me with improperly holding these bags when they were in the charge of the postmaster of this House. I want the hon. the Postmaster General to get up and apologize for having charged an hon. member with having in his possession improperly and refusing to return the bags belonging to His Majesty or the Post Office Department. I have sat in this House 22 sessions. During the 14 years I sat on that side, and the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues sat on this, and I challenge the right hon. gentleman or any member of his government or any of his supporters, to say that any one of them was ever refused delivery of any parcel or bag addressed to him and sent by express or mail. Neither the Prime Minister nor any of his supporters can say that during the 18 years they sat in opposition they were ever refused any franking privilege, and they sent out tons of literature franked all over the country. But they seem to think that they can ride over us roughshod. They even refuse to allow express parcels to be delivered to us. I call upon the Prime Minister to explain by what authority in law any officer of the government has the right to stop an express wagon at the door of parliament and refuse to allow it to deliver goods to a member of this House. The sergeant-at-arms knows that that has been done this session, and the Postmaster General should explain. That hon. gentleman made a statement a few moments ago which he knew was not correct. He said that 100 bags came for me on Saturday and 400 on Sunday. Where are they? Why does he or his officers deny me the right to have these bags here? Why are they not delivered? If the bags are there, I want them. The Postmaster General notified an official of the Canadian Express Company not to bring a bag into the city of Ottawa by express or he would have the company prosecuted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is wholly without foundation.

Mr. TAYLOR. The agent of the express company made that statement since noon. He said that he was notified by the Post Office Department not to carry mail bags by express. He explained that they had not carried a bag since they had received notice that they would be prosecuted if they did. Yet the Postmaster General says that 400 of these bags came in on Sunday. As a matter of fact, 400 parcels came by express, but delivery was refused to me through the interference of officers of the House, under instructions of the Postmaster General.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Perhaps the Postmaster General can explain whether 400 bags did come on Sunday ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General says they came, and we must assume that he would not make a misstatement in this House. Then, the hon. gentleman said that there were not only carloads but train loads of this literature. How many trains would it take to carry 1,800 postal bags ? This gentleman aspiring to be a statesman, occupying the position of Postmaster General, Minister of Labour, a man 'vaster than has been,' rises in this House and makes a statement that one of the little page boys here would know to be absurd. Why, there are hardly enough of these bags to make three or four good wagon loads. Yet, he told us of the trains that would be required to move these bags from this House. Eighteen hundred bags—and a man could take one on his shoulder, in fact he could carry one under each arm !

The Postmaster General accused us of abusing the franking privilege. Has he any idea of the conditions under which that privilege is to be exercised ? If so, why did he not call down his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) who went to Toronto, delivered a speech in Massey Hall, then had it printed and hundreds of thousands of copies sent out under his own frank as Minister of Trade and Commerce. Every man in my constituency got a copy of that document, franked by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. That was not only an improper but an illegal thing. Why did not the Postmaster General prevent that action on the part of his colleague, or why has he not since called upon him to contribute to the revenue the amount of postage that should have been paid upon these hundreds of thousands of documents sent through the mail. Ministers have the right to send out correspondence, departmental reports and so on ; but they have no right to send out copies of stump speeches, and particularly to have the wrapping, addressing and franking of that literature done by the officers of the public service.

Then I want the Postmaster General to explain the delay that takes place in the handling of the postal matter that has been placed in charge of the postmaster of this House. Some of these bags have been in there since the 25th of September. These bags commenced coming here on the 20th of September and they have been coming at the rate of fifty or one hundred bags a day ever since—a total of 1,800 bags. Nearly half of this literature is here yet. Is that the way for the Postmaster General to respect the law giving to members of parliament the franking privilege ? He will send out the literature franked by the supporters of the government of which he is a member. The literature is not left to clog up the corridors of this House, though the amount of it during the session has been as great as that of the opposition's. The literature of hon. gentlemen opposite can be sent out, but, no doubt, the Postmaster General has given the wink to his officers and, since the 25th of September, this literature has been left to lie there, because his officers acting under his instructions, I am sure, do not carry it away to be delivered to the parties to whom it is addressed. I suppose he has told the postmaster that this literature is incendiary, and has given his instructions not to receive more than forty bags a day of Tory literature, but to let the Grits send out what they please. No doubt he believes that as the House is to prorogue in a few days, this Tory literature will not get to the country. That is the intention of this beautiful specimen that we have in charge of postal affairs in this country.

Now, I think it is the duty of the right hon. Prime Minister to make an apology, an humble apology, to the leader of the opposition. If there is a man in this country whom the people admire and respect for his gentlemanly conduct in this House and out of it, that man is the leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition, in a gentlemanly way—he could not act otherwise than in a gentlemanly way—called the attention of the Prime Minister to the grievances the opposition were labouring under, through the abuse of his power by the Postmaster General in not handling this mail matter, and in some other matters, and how was he treated by the Prime Minister ? Was he treated respectfully ? Far from it. I say that it is the duty of the Prime Minister—and I know that there is enough of the gentleman in him to cause him to do his duty—to go down on his knees and apologize to the leader of the opposition for having been so insulting as he was this morning. If he is a gentleman, he will certainly do that. One of the reasons the Postmaster General gave for having given the instructions about handling this literature was that it was incendiary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I did not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not wonder that he is afraid that it will set the country on fire——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I made no such statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suppose he fears that it will arouse such feeling that the militia under my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) will have to be called out to quiet the people. Well, I have in my hand a copy of this literature, and I intend reading it, so as to put it on 'Hansard,' and I would ask the Postmaster General what part of it is incendiary and seditious ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The article headed 'To Arms.'

Mr. TAYLOR. This literature is in two sheets of newspaper form. One of them opens with the heading 'The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Project : Mr. Borden's Alternative Scheme—Mr. Blair's Sweeping Denunciation of the Cox Project.' Is that an incendiary part of this campaign literature ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Keep cool.

Mr. TAYLOR. A colleague of the hon. gentleman's makes a speech in this House that the people ought to read, and this is printed here side by side with the speech of the leader of the opposition, that the people may have the facts before them. And this, the Postmaster General says, is 'incendiary.' And the sub-heading of these speeches is 'Messrs. Borden and Blair on the Government's Railway Policy.' 'The Conservative leader brings forward a better plan.' Mr. Blair mercilessly scores the Cox can't wait plan.' Is that incendiary ? This document contains a fine illustration in the way of a photo of the leader of the opposition, also one of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), who made this 'incendiary' speech. Some of my friends purpose reading this whole document, and I have the other document, which I purpose reading, and I hope the Postmaster General will listen and point out what there is in these documents that is incendiary. I can well understand that he does not wish to have a wide circulation of this speech made by his own colleague the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), whom they fired out of the government because he held views opposed to theirs. But finding he was a power in the land, and that his speech was going throughout the country, they have been down on their knees ever since begging him to keep his mouth shut, because if he didn't they knew the country was going against them. What is the other campaign sheet ? I want the hon. gentleman to explain what there is incendiary about this :

Canada's indictment against the government.

I am sure Canada is practically up in arms against the government for their monstrous scheme. Here we have on this paper a map showing each one of the provinces holding a flag, while the figure representing Canada holds a banner on which is inscribed :

People vs. Government. Broken promises. Wasteful administration. Increasing expenditure. Temporizing with tariff. Legislating for franchise dealers.

On the other side is the leader of the opposition holding a banner on which is inscribed :

Clean politics. Protect Canadian labour, agricultural and industrial. Stop wasteful schemes. Redeem promises.

The indictment continues:

Broken pledges. A policy to benefit foreigners while Canadians are ignored. Committing the country to a $120,000,000 railway, without surveys, without estimates of cost, without proper knowledge of the country to be traversed, and in open defiance of the matured and sound views of the Minister of Railways. Sins of omission. Sins of commission. Increased taxation. Waste and extravagance. A bungled census, costing $648,277 more than the census of 1891.

What is there incendiary about that ? Not a word, unless it is these words uttered by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would my hon. friend permit me to interrupt him ? Perhaps the Postmaster General is ready to surrender and apologize for his misdeeds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do not deprive us of the benefit of hearing it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not intend to ask him to surrender. As an opposition we are entitled to our rights, and I give the Postmaster General notice that we intend to have them. Then the indictment continues on the next side :

Government by hypocrisy. Platform built to get in upon ; immediately afterwards destroyed. Public domains given over to speculators. Attempt to paralyze the sentinel whom Alexander Mackenzie left to guard the treasury. Burdening the Yukon, the Eldorado of Canada, with a water concession of bad repute, and a handicap on the mining industry of the nation.

What is there incendiary about that ? The Postmaster General must be overflowing with indignation when he charges the leader of the opposition and his supporters with sending out incendiary literature to the people of this country. On the next page I find : $120,000,000 railway.' That is the estimate placed upon it by his own colleague the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. Surely there is nothing incendiary about that.

To be built for a group of capitalists friendly to the government.

That is why the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals said that Cox could'nt wait, that there was a ring which could not wait.

Without surveys, without estimates, without information. A reckless scheme that drove the Minister of Railways from the cabinet. Will kill the Intercolonial and sidetrack the canals. 'Cox can't wait,' so the people must pay.

After keeping parliament sitting all summer without disclosing its policy on the transcontinental railway question, the government suddenly announced a scheme at the tail end of the session.

It was an entire surprise to all concerned, and no one knows yet why many of its most absurd features were adopted.

It proposes that the government shall build a railway through an unknown wilderness from Winnipeg to Quebec, and then through the unpeopled forests of New Brunswick to Moncton. The government know so little of the route that they will not attempt even to estimate the cost of the line. Hon. Mr. Blair, whom this scheme drove to resign the railway portfolio, and who ought to know more about it than any other man, says that it commits the government to an expenditure of $120,000,000.

Will the Postmaster General get up and explain now what there is incendiary in the remarks I have read thus far? I propose reading the document through, paragraph by paragraph and line by line, to show what there is incendiary about it. Surely the Postmaster General will withdraw that remark and not force me to read the whole document.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no desire to curtail the right of my hon. friend to read anything he pleases. But if he desires me to allude to that portion of that paper which I regard as incendiary I will do so, at the same time I would not like to prevent him from reading the intermediate part. The portion to which I alluded is that article headed 'To arms.' Will he kindly read that article?

Mr. TAYLOR. That article is an appeal to the people of this country to take their ballots in their hands and turn the hon. gentlemen out. Is there anything incendiary about that? The Postmaster General virtually said to-day: This is an incendiary document and ought not to be read by the people of this country, therefore I have a right, I, Sir William Mulock, Postmaster General, Minister of Labour, the vastest man in this country, the man who licks the postage stamps for the people of this country, who puts the mucilage on them—I say this is incendiary literature and I won't allow it to go through the post office, and whatever is left after parliament rises we will make a bonfire of it on parliament hill. That is what the minister has said in the argument he made. That is the treatment he is dealing out to the opposition, and he thinks they are weak and miserable enough to stand it. But he will find out before he gets through that every package of literature that is in these corridors, franked or unfranked, is going to go through the post office, and by his mails, because it is our right.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman permit me another remark? I have said, and I repeat it again, that this is not a question of the franking privilege. I have not the slightest desire to interfere, nor could I interfere, with any franking privilege possessed by members of this House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Now he is surrendering.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I am not surrendering. I told the hon. gentleman this morning that this was a matter affecting the department only, that special facilities had to be provided, that the ordinary facilities do not provide for the handling of such a mass of stuff as is now thrown in upon us. I hope the hon. gentleman will not again charge me with seeking to interfere with the franking right of any member.

Mr. TAYLOR. I absolve the minister from that, because he knows as well as any one what the law is, and he knows he cannot interfere with the franking privilege. But he knows that as soon as the House is closed that right ceases, and if he can only get along by dribbling out 40 bags a day while the end of the session is in sight and the literature is there, then after prorogation he will not receive any more of it, because the law says that the franking privilege only lasts while the House is in session, or so many days after. That is the scheme of the Postmaster General, and I challenge him to get up and deny it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly, I deny it. The hon. gentleman is romancing. Whatever is posted is in the hands of the post office, and is entitled to go.

Mr. CLARKE. Then why did you not take it out of there, and obey the Speaker's order?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Because there is no place to put it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the hon. gentleman sit down. I do not want my speech interfered with.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whatever is posted has a right to pass through the mails.

Mr. TAYLOR. But if the hon. gentleman instructs the Sergeant-at-Arms not to allow any mail matter to come in, how can it pass through the mails? I paid $22 express charges upon it, and the Sergeant-at-Arms would not allow it to come inside the House. How could I frank it? The hon. gentleman has given instructions to the city post office to impound a number of bags addressed to me at the House of Commons, with the result that mail matter which is sent to the city post office to be delivered to me at the House of Commons is not delivered.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When mail matter arrives at the city post office for delivery at the House of Commons the duty of the post office is completed, and it is prepared to hand over that matter to any officer from the House of Commons who is authorized to receive it. The House of Commons has always taken charge of the delivery of the mails between the House and the city post office. If mail matter is directed to an hon. gentleman it is only waiting his order or the officers of this House authorized to receive it. It is not withheld by the post office. On the contrary, we are most anxious to get rid of it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then why has not the rule been carried out ? Here is stuff which has been addressed to me at the House of Commons. It has arrived at the city post office. The gentleman who has the contract for carrying the mail between this House and the city post office brought a load up here, and he was notified by the hon. Postmaster General's officers——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know what I am speaking about—he was notified to take it back, and he took it back.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By whom ?

Mr. TAYLOR. By the chief messenger and the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would it have been done if you had not interfered ? Did you, Mr. Speaker, of your own authority, say to the express companies of this city : You cannot deliver any mail matter which is addressed to Mr. Taylor at the House of Commons, or any parcel addressed to Mr. Taylor to be delivered to him in his room in the House of Commons ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I have been asked to make a statement by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) as to the use of the corridors and of the room of the House of Commons. I do it willingly, because I am glad to have the occasion to remove the bad impression under which the hon. member laboured during his remarks towards the Speaker of this House, and with regard to some orders which I deemed it my duty to give. A few days ago my attention was called by some officers of the House to the fact that some of the corridors of the House of Commons were getting filled with mail bags, and without any permission from anybody authorized to give it. We then tried to find a room where those bags could be put, because we considered that the fact of those bags being in the corridors was not a nice sight for the numerous strangers who happened to visit our parliament buildings. We could not, however, find at first any available room. I then gave instructions to ship away those bags as soon as possible, and not to receive any more to be put in the corridors. I was, in doing that, following a precedent of some years ago, when the same question came up. The Speaker at that time ordered that the bags be removed from the sight of the strangers visiting the House. I consider that the corridors of the House of Commons are not available for warehouse or storage purposes. I may be wrong in that respect, but that is the view I entertain upon the question, and until the House decides to the contrary, I think that I am taking a reasonable view of the matter. It has never been my intention to prevent the members of the House who happen to have rooms at their disposal from using them the way they like, and I may say that I have never given any instructions which would deprive any of those members of their entire liberty in that respect. If some statements to the contrary have been made during the discussion, I may say that those statements have been made under an erroneous impression or erroneous information.

Yesterday the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and a representative of the 'Star' came to me and asked me whether they could have a room to empty those bags and release them for the use of that paper. We went over the whole ground and found that the only available room was the new Railway Committee room, which I was very glad to put at their disposal. They all seemed to be pretty well satisfied with that arrangement. At all events, the hon. member for South Leeds, who was then present, did not utter a word of dissent. On the contrary, I think he thanked me for what I was doing. I suggested at that interview that perhaps the bags could be put in No. 6, and that it would be more convenient for the members of the opposition. The hon. member for South Leeds went to inquire whether this could be done, and when he returned he said 'no.' Then it was agreed that the Railway Committee room would be at their disposal to empty those bags and remove the congestion in the corridors. Now, I have been charged with having given orders to prevent the express companies from carrying parcels into room No. 6. I may say that I have never given any instructions of the sort, and the Sergeant-at-Arms reports to me that the orders he has given referred, not to any rooms, but to the corridors, and the parcels addressed to the rooms, so far as he is aware, have not been interfered with. I have every reason to believe that his statement is correct.

A reference has been made also by the hon. leader of the opposition to the fact that there was a room available down stairs, which was used by some members for mailing parcels and literature. I think he is misinformed in that respect. Last year, or two years ago, I think that room was occupied by five or six members of this House, and they might have sent parcels or literature from there. Since that room has become a dining room, I am not aware that it has been used for any other purpose. The hon. leader of the opposition also states that he has a small room, but he will be good enough to render me the justice of saying that last year I offered him a larger room, and that he told me he could not very easily take it. I may repeat that I never did prevent any of the members who have rooms from doing what they like with these rooms, but what I did was simply to prevent the corridors being used for storage or warehouse purposes, and in doing that I intended to do only what I considered my duty.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker has read a statement and has also spoken on behalf of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I say most emphatically that I went to the Sergeant-at-Arms last night and asked him why this stuff was turned away, and he said by instructions. I said: This matter is coming up in the morning, and I am going to take it to my room if I have to carry it myself. He said: You cannot do it. Mr. Speaker did offer to the representatives of the 'Star' and myself the Railway Committee room, but I immediately asked how we were going to get the bags up there and could we get the messengers. No, we would have to hire our own men to carry it up there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Why not?

Mr. TAYLOR. Because the messengers are used by the members of the government and their supporters to carry their literature and to do their messages while we can hardly get one to do an errand for us. The stuff is impounded at the post office and it is impounded at the express office, although it is addressed to myself. That is the position we are placed in. Mr. Speaker makes the statement that the corridors are blocked. They are not being blocked by myself or by any other member of the opposition. These bags have been filled in the post office, carried out and stacked in the corridors for weeks. Why does not Mr. Speaker order the postmaster to remove them? Yet this is all charged against the opposition whip, who is held responsible for blocking the corridors. It is either the hon. Postmaster General or the postmaster of this House who is at fault in not having this stuff removed, because it has lain there for the past two or three weeks. We have emptied the bags that came in every day, franked them and put them back into the post office. Why should we be charged with causing the blockade? The Sergeant-at-Arms will not deny that it was by his orders that our stuff, which came by mail and by express, was turned away. He told me when I brought it up here this morning that I would not be allowed to take it in, but I came prepared to take it in even if I had to carry it in myself. I defy the Sergeant-at-Arms or anybody else to deprive me of my right as a member of this House of taking my express parcels into my room. Here is the position we are in: The hon. Postmaster General knows very well that if we did not get this stuff franked and into the post office before the gun fired, or within two or three days afterwards, because I understand there are two or three days of grace, it would not go out to the people of this country. He said it was incendiary, because the electors were called to arms, to vote against this government, and he knows that the people are up in arms against the government. I want to embellish the pages of 'Hansard' with this, so as to contradict the Postmaster General, who made a statement that he must know was not correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will take that back, Mr. Speaker. If he didn't know it was not correct, he ought to have known it. There is a lot of this stuff piled up on the green outside of the House, and if there comes a shower of rain it may be spoiled.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want you, Mr. Speaker, to instruct your officers to have that brought in and delivered to me in room No. 6. I want you to order your officers to take in the express matter which they refused to take. I want an order to the chief messenger that the stuff out on the green be brought in. Am I to understand that you do not answer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. If some stuff was brought for room No. 6 and has not been delivered to room No. 6, it is on account of some misunderstanding between the Sergeant-at-Arm and the hon. member. The Sergeant-at-Arms has just informed me that he has never refused to receive stuff coming to any room.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was a load of this literature came to me by express and the chief messenger refused to receive it.

Mr. SPEAKER. There must have been a misunderstanding.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Sergeant-at-Arms told me last night that he could not send down for the express matter which was refused the other night.

Mr. SPEAKER. As I have said, there must be a misunderstanding, and I trust the hon. gentleman will not pursue that matter further.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then somebody has backed down. I take the ground that neither the Speaker nor the Postmaster General, nor the Sergeant-at-Arms, nor the chief messenger will deprive me of my lawful rights of having my literature delivered to me. The Postmaster General now says that there are 500 bags addressed to me impounded down in the post office. Will the Postmaster General issue an order to have that sent to me at this House immediately ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There appear to be a great many misunderstandings. I did not say anything about 500 bags being impounded. It is not a fact that any mail matter addressed to the hon. member is impounded at the post office, and not available to him. I have been informed that there are a large number of sacks sent from the 'Star' office, Montreal, by post to the hon. gentleman, and as we have no storage accommodation for them in the post office proper, they are in the lobby of the post office. We are most anxious that the hon. gentleman should send for them and take them away. What I did state was that one of my officers informed me that there were 400 bags or packages of mail matter sent here on Sunday.

Mr. TAYLOR. They were not in the post office ; they were in the express office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know even that. I was informed that they came to Ottawa, but I do not know whether it is correct or not.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is none of your business anyway.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would be if the bags of the post office were used. If my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) would take away one or two hundred bags that are lying there now, he would accommodate the post office very much, because they are in the way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have made inquiry, and I find that 400 parcels, not 400 bags, have come by express, because the right to send them by mail under the franking privilege was denied. I am informed that after they came to Ottawa, an officer of the hon. gentleman's department called upon the express company, and threatened to prosecute because they did not come by mail.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure that is an entire mistake.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is my information.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to give me the name of the officer ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know the name of the officer, but I will give it to the Postmaster General before the day is over. I am informed that first we were denied the right of sending them by mail, and then, having sent them at our own cost, by express, the express company, our agent, was threatened with prosecution because he was violating the law in relation to the carriage of mail.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General says that there are at the post office one or two hundred bags of mail matter addressed to me at the House of Commons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I didn't say that.

Mr. TAYLOR. He told me that there were a number of bags addressed to me in the lobby of the post office, and he wished I would go down and take them. And he wished I would go and get them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So I do.

Mr. CLARKE. There is free delivery in this city; why do you not deliver them ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Under the franking privilege any parcel sent to me by post should be delivered to me at the post office in the House of Commons; that is the law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Where is that law ?

Mr. TAYLOR. And yet the Postmaster General calls on me to go to the city post office, to hire a cart and draw these bags up. Is that the way the hon. gentleman intends to treat the opposition ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Post Office Department delivers no mail matter for any member of this House, on this side or on that side. The House itself has always had its own arrangement for conveying this mail matter from the city post office to the House of Commons post office, and vice versa, and it is a matter for the committee of this House to deal with.

Mr. CLARKE. Who pays for its conveyance between the two post offices ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The House of Commons.

Mr. TAYLOR. The people of this country pay for it. The Postmaster General went to the post office and inspected this mail matter and knows that it is addressed to me at the House of Commons, yet it is not sent up here. Who is neglecting his duty ? Why has not that been sent here ? It was sent to the House, but was refused admittance, and was sent back to the post office. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is to become of this stuff which is at the city post office ? I desire an answer.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no further statement to make. I do not desire to take any part in the discussion, and I do not think it is becoming for the Speaker to take part in a discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want information ; is the gentleman who carries the mail from the city post office to the House of Commons post office under your jurisdiction ? Is the chief messenger of this House under your jurisdiction ? The gentleman who carries the mail from the city post office to this post office brought a load of that to the House ; your chief messenger ordered him to take it back, and would not receive it, and I wish to know who is at fault. I ask the Postmaster General who is at fault, and why I had not possession of the 100 bags which the Postmaster General says he saw at the post office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that my hon. friend will accept my opinion on the subject, but I am quite willing to give it. The whole trouble has arisen from the action of the hon. gentleman in deluging this House with more mail matter than there is accommodation for. The post office accommodation in this building is limited. The building is supplied with a post office room, but that is inadequate to hold the quantity of mail matter that the hon. gentleman desires to have put into it. Whoever approved of the plan of this building in years gone by are to blame, because they did not anticipate this extraordinary condition. However, the bringing of the mails up here is a matter entirely under the control of the House of Commons of Canada. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that the stuff is waiting at the city post office, and I certainly wish with all my heart that the hon. gentleman would make arrangements to remove it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will have to make an appeal to the Prime Minister. I have been in this House 21 years, 14 years supporting a government when he sat on this side of the House, and I would ask him if he ever saw the opposition treated by the Conservative party as the opposition is now being treated by the government ? This matter has been refused admittance to the House ; a load came this morning and is now out on the green. Is that the treatment that the Premier intends meting out to the members of the opposition ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not attach the same importance to this matter as my hon. friend does; perhaps because of the difference in the point of view. I sympathize, however, when he tells us that a lot of this stuff is on the green, and it would be worse if this stuff should be exposed to rain. Perhaps, however, it would extinguish the fire in it if it is incendiary. If my hon. friend had consulted me earlier, I have not much control over these matters, but I think the resources of the country are adequate to deal with the difficulty, to have the stuff removed from the green, and I think I could undertake to say more, to have it carried over and placed on the trains and disposed of.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Prime Minister is good at making evasive answers. He says the resources of the country are adequate to receive and despatch the mail. If he, as Prime Minister, had an officer at the head of the Post Office Department who would give instructions, it could be done, but the Postmaster General knows that the postmaster in this House has had bags in his possession for three weeks and has not sent them to the city post office; he has authorized the city post office to receive only 40 bags a day, and then he makes the statement that we are to go on at that rate, and that we will be kept here until after Christmas if all of these bags are to be sent out——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So we will.

The PRIME MINISTER. Will you allow me to have a moment's conference with my hon. friend the Postmaster General, and I think I can soften him ?

Mr. TAYLOR. While the conference is going on, I shall present to the House——

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not fair; my hon. friend is like the Boer, when we are in conference he prepares for war. Let me confer with the Postmaster General, and then perhaps we can solve this difficulty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say that, so far as using the corridors for warehouse purposes is concerned, I regard you, Mr. Speaker, as having absolute jurisdiction, but not as having jurisdiction to order away from the precincts of the House matters sent by mail or express to any member. From the statement which Mr. Speaker read to the House, we may arrive at the conclusion that he is of the same opinion and that any occurrence of the kind was due probably to some misunderstanding. As far as using the room down stairs is concerned, I may say that I did not know it was used as a dining room, but as I have not been accustomed to go into the lower precincts so much perhaps as other hon. members, I cannot speak with authority on that point. With respect to my own accommodation, I did not rise for the purpose of making any complaint, although I regard it as somewhat inadequate for the purposes of my work, but I owe apology to you Mr. Speaker, for having forgotten that last year you did offer me somewhat larger quarters, which I did not think I could use, because they were not conveniently situated. I did make an effort to have another room somewhat nearer mine but that did not seem practicable. In what I said this morning, I did not speak, Mr. Speaker, in any personal sense, but on a question of importance as to whether or not any man occupying the Chair of Mr. Speaker has the right to issue the orders which I understood, when I spoke yesterday, had been issued by you, Sir, in this regard. I do not wish to comment on the somewhat sneering terms in which the right hon. the Prime Minister referred to my remarks. He suggested that I desired to put myself on a higher plane than eminent men who have occupied my present position. I trust that my past course in this House is sufficient to justify me from that. If the right hon. gentleman did not enjoy more accommodation in this House than is now given me, the demands of one in my position are perhaps larger than they were years ago—larger because the business of the country is growing and more work has to be done. My right hon. friend speaks of some matters as trifling, for example, whether or not a mass of campaign literature has been addressed and circulated from departments of the government by servants employed and paid by the country. I am not inclined to regard that as so small a matter, and years ago the right hon. gentleman would have been inclined to speak in a different tone regarding it. But that was in the days when he was advocating greater efficiency and purity in the administration of public affairs. I wish to address myself to the practical difficulties of the situation. The Postmaster General says 1,830 bags have been used for this purpose.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At least.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that is an outside estimate, if I am correctly informed. But let me point out to the hon. gentleman that 1,830 bags are only a little more than one-half the number which one newspaper in Montreal uses every week. This work began as far back as the 25th of September. Twenty-six days have elapsed since then. If he had put these bags out at the small number of forty per day, he would have disposed of 1,040.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will allow me I did not say that 1,830 bags was the maximum. I said we had given at least 1,830 bags to the 'Star' people which were used for this purpose. That many we have track of, and my hon. friend will remember that his chief whip said that this stuff began on the 20th of September.

Mr. CLARKE. He did not say 'stuff.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He said that this stuff began to leave Montreal on the 20th of September and had come at the rate of from fifty to one hundred bags per day—not forty. That would make nearly 3,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have been informed as to the number of documents sent here from time to time, and according to that information 1,830 bags would cover absolutely everything that has come from Montreal from first to last. I have not counted them but have made some inquiry, and I believe that that is an outside estimate. I know that about 500,000 copies of these documents have been sent out and there are about 300 in each bag. That would be under the estimate which the Postmaster General made this afternoon of 1,830 bags. But if you can distribute 3,000 bags in the course of one week from one newspaper office how is it that from the 25th of September up to the present you have made so little progress in disposing of these bags ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend will allow me, I will give the reason. The bags that are sent by the 'Star' newspaper containing its own papers are made up and directed to the post office of each town where the matter is to be delivered. No sorting takes place. Those thousands of bags are not handled on the cars but go as freight or baggage. They do not go in the postal cars at all.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). But they go in the post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They do not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They do when they reach their destination.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is another matter. We are talking about sending them out.

Mr. BELL. Are they not in the possession and under the charge of the Post Office Department the moment they are put on the train ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly, but we are speaking of the work of handling the mail on the cars, and my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition desires to know the exact facts. A newspaper like the 'Star' delivers every day to the railways a large number of bags containing newspapers. Each of these bags is directed to a particular town, and there is no sortation on the cars of the contents. They are not handled in the postal cars at all. They are put into the baggage car so that there is no more difficulty in handling a bag containing 200 or 500 newspapers than in handling a trunk. But each bag of the mail matter to which we are now referring contains many separate pieces. These have to be sorted on the train. The bags of postal matter are put upon the car. When the train starts the clerks have to pour out the contents of the bags upon the table, examine the direction upon each separate piece and put it in the bag for its destination. A considerable space is required in the postal car for the convenience of the officers engaged in that sortation. Therefore, the matter cannot be handled wholesale, as in the case of newspapers going from the office of publication, but must be handled retail, each separate article being subject to separate treatment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am obliged to the Postmaster General for that explanation. But I understood that, so far as large cities are concerned, the bags have already been so made up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But still the bags have to be opened in the postal car and their contents examined, because in very few instances do the bags contain only matter for a particular post office.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that any difficulty as to that might have been obviated when the bags were filled. If the authorities in the Post Office Department or the post office authorities of the House of Commons had intimated to those engaged in this work that it would be more convenient if the mail matter for a particular place were put in a bag by itself, that would have been done, and that, very likely, would facilitate the work very much. The explanation of the Postmaster General seems to make it abundantly plain that there is no work at all for the Ottawa post office in all this; the work is on the mail car. So far as the Ottawa post office is concerned, it is simply a question of storage, and surely the resources of the government should have enabled them to overcome any difficulty as to storage room. Let me point out this fact to the Postmaster General—that if in Ottawa a paper were to commence publication having a circulation of 15,000 or 20,000, it would give His Majesty's mails more matter to handle than that caused by the distribution of this literature. Yet, I am sure, the Postmaster General would hardly likely stand up in this House and say that the whole mail service in Ottawa would be paralyzed by the mere fact of a newspaper of that magnitude beginning publication here. And let me say also that I am informed—I do not know with what truth, and perhaps we had better have a statement about it if any minister of the Crown is in a position to make known the facts—that the equivalent of twenty-five bags of mail matter has been sent out by my hon. friends on the other side as campaign literature every day for the last six or eight weeks. If that has been going on, let us attribute the congestion to that to which it is really due. Let the Postmaster General not send forward the twenty-five or thirty bags of literature on his side, and keep back ours, and then say that the congestion is due to the literature sent out from this side.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On that point, I would like to correct my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I have no control over the postmaster of the House of Commons. And, so far as I know, no person has sought in any way to direct or interfere with his actions. You, Mr. Speaker, who have jurisdiction on behalf of the House in these matters, I am sure, have not interfered with the postmaster in the proper discharge of his duties. The postmaster has discharged his duties as he thought best and if he is showing partiality, as an officer of the House he is amenable to the discipline of the House. But I am sure there is no foundation for the suggestion that literature from one side has received preference or priority over the other. There has been the utmost fairness, and no partiality has been shown.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not accusing any officer of partiality or unfairness. But I am credibly informed by those who profess to know what they speak about that mail matter equivalent to twenty-five bags a day has been sent out by my hon. friends opposite for the last six or eight weeks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And by my hon. friends on that side.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The result of that is a certain congestion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Caused by both sides.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is exactly what I am coming to. But, up to the present time, we have been told that it has been caused by the literature sent out by this side. And we have heard of the scandalous abuse of the franking privilege, and so on. Let us understand that both sides are engaged in the work of propagating their political views by sending out their campaign literature during the session of parliament under franks. But, when that occasions congestion, let us not have ministers standing up in the House and accusing members on this side of causing that congestion, and let us not have a stoppage, and the piling up of that literature in these corridors, the stoppage applying only to the literature from this side. That is all we ask. We simply desire that our rights in that regard shall be the same as those of others, that there shall not be all this comment and excitement because we are doing what is quite within our right to do, and what hon. gentlemen on the other side are doing in exactly the same way, and, as I believe on a very much larger scale.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, no. The hon. gentleman does not believe that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, I will take my hon. friend's word that it is not greater. There is another remark as to how this mail matter accumulates. It came in by mail up to the time we were driven to send it by express, which we did until the express company were threatened, as I am informed, with prosecution for carrying matter that should be sent by mail—it has come here in some way without great apparent difficulty ; but it is only when we try to send it away from here that the congestion is caused. The explanation of my hon. friend as to the necessity of sorting on the train accounts for it in part. But, even with that explanation, I do not see that there should be the congestion which is said to have resulted merely through our effort to send out what seems to me a very moderate amount of campaign literature. I do not think it is desirable to have this condition of affairs continue. It seems to me that means could be found to prevent this congestion. I am sure that my hon. friend the Postmaster General and the Prime Minister, if they should have this conference spoken of a little while ago, will devise some means by which a result will be arrived at satisfactory to all the members of the House. And I shall be glad if when my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has arrived at a conclusion with regard to it, he will give a statement as to what we may expect on this question which has already occupied a considerable length of time.

Mr. SEYMOUR E. GOURLEY (Colchester). The unfortunate thing about this debate is, that the employees of this House will be encouraged to treat members of parliament with disrespect. I think members of parliament, on both sides, should stand together, to preserve the respect due to this House. By so doing we maintain the honour of the people of Canada. I am persuaded, that the conduct of the Postmaster General will give the employees of the House the impression, that they can treat members of the opposition with less respect than they show to members supporting the government. It would be unworthy and dishonourable for members of this House to occupy that position, not because they are members of the government side of the opposition, but because they represent the constituencies of this country. So far as service is due by members of parliament, I do not make the slightest distinction between those who support the government and those who support the opposition.

Now, I want to say first that I think the Prime Minister should apologize to our leader. I am not inclined to make unkind remarks. In taking part in the debates of this House I have always endeavoured to exercise courtesy. If a man is not strong enough to say what he wants to say in measured language, then he is not a very strong man. Now, I think the Prime Minister should apologize to the leader of the opposition for saying, as he did this morning, that the language used by the leader of the opposition was unworthy of himself. I think the language of the leader of the opposition was mild and measured in the extreme. If we have any complaint to make on this side against the leader of the opposition it is that he always fights with gloves when he fights the hon. gentlemen opposite, that he is too courteous to the gentlemen who sit opposite. After that has been the leading feature of his conduct towards the government, it strikes me that the Prime Minister was not well advised when he made that remark. I think the language is peculiarly unworthy of the Prime Minister himself. It is cutting language, and I would not have blamed the leader of the opposition if he had resented it with much more fire and spirit than he did. But with his usual courtesy he permitted the Prime Minister to go almost scott free. I do not propose to do that, and I wish the Prime Minister to apologize to the leader of the opposition for departing from the traditional good manners that should characterize a Prime Minister of Canada.

Now, the Prime Minister said that he had occupied that room when in opposition and he never complained. He ought to have complained. If he, the leader of the opposition, was shut up in that little room, he ought to have had more respect for his position and he should have complained. I am going to complain, and I will never stop complaining until every member of this House is treated with proper respect. When I am at home—and I think it is the same with reference to every other gentleman—I have a house, I have an office, where, if a gentleman wishes to consult me privately, he can do so. I have typewriters, an office fitted up with the usual appliances to enable me to attend to the business of my clients. When I come here I come representing 25,000 people of the county of Colchester, whose business I have to attend to, and how am I treated here ? I have no room, I have not the slightest opportunity to do the business that is imposed upon me. But I do not wish to be a loafer, I wish to work and perform the duties that are cast upon me. But when I come here, I am encouraged to be a loafer and an idler. I am put into a large room which is more like a club-room, where there are eight, or ten, or twenty gentlemen smoking and talking together. How can I do the business of 25,000 people in such quarters as that ? Yet that is the accommodation that is furnished to me, and I am going to tell the people of Colchester that this government and this parliament are to blame for it, that this government treats myself and treats them with the utmost disrespect in neglecting to furnish me with a private apartment in which I can do the business of my county. Up in this part of country it appears that only the ministers are supposed to have any business to do. I am charged with responsibilities as well as they are, and I want some place assigned to me in which I can do the business of my constituents. As it is, I had to go into the library and crave from the librarian the courtesy of an alcove in which to do the business of a member of parliament. But it is far from being a place to do business in, because you are interrupted. A gentleman who is accustomed to work wants privacy. But we are deprived of all that and it is only the ministers who have apartments.

When we appoint a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada we assign him two or three rooms in which to do his business. It is not nearly as important that he should have two or three rooms as it is for a member of parliament. A judge of the Supreme Court does not deal with the interests of more than 200 or 300 suitors in a year. I have charged upon me the interests of 25,000 suitors in this parliament. Why should we give a judge a couple of rooms in which to do his business, and not assign one room to a member of parliament, who has vastly more important duties? I charge upon the members of this parliament, who have represented this country for the last thirty years, in having been derelict to their duty in allowing themselves to be treated with absolute disrespect. The members of this House should supply themselves first of all with accommodation. If we appoint a clerk he is at once given a room of his own. See what contumely is heaped upon the members of this House in treating them with less respect than a clerk. We appoint a man to a position and give him a salary of $1,200 or $1,500 a year. Do we ask him to sit out on the green to do his business? Do we ask him to sit on one of these bags? No, we do not, we assign him a room. Why, the very instant we employ the meanest clerk in the House of Commons we assign him a room. They have intelligence enough, but it is impossible for any one to do work without a room, therefore, we assign the meanest employee a room of his own. I blame the members of parliament for permitting this indignity to be heaped upon them—the members of parliament on both sides of the House, and not only of this parliament, but of all preceding parliaments.

I desire to say further that I think the Postmaster General has been led into this difficulty through listening to over zealous partisans. For my part I would be a long time in this House, I would be ten years in this House, going up and down these corridors, before I would make a complaint to anybody about these bags. They are piled up there, and if some gentleman in going home late at night feeling tired and sick, passing between those tiers of bags on each side of him, it would be an assistance to him, in case any accident happened, to find a soft bed on which to fall. There should not be very much complaint. Why should any gentleman going through those corridors object to these bags being there unless he were a partisan? I undertake to say that the hon. Postmaster General allowed himself to be used by some ungracious partisan on his side who went to him and represented to him that he should interfere with the opposition in the pursuit of their duty. He pulled his leg, as it were, and instead of telling this partisan that he did not want to interfere with the opposition, the hon. Postmaster General listened to him and became a partisan himself. I do not believe that hon. gentlemen opposite sympathize with the hon. Postmaster General. I believe there is too much courtesy and refinement amongst hon. gentlemen opposite to sympathize with anything like this mean partisanship which has been shown in connection with this matter. I regret this partisanship very much. There are partisans on both sides but the leading men of the party on both sides ought to be strong enough to teach them better manners. The hon. Postmaster General says that a complaint was made by a newspaper in Montreal. Then he is the victim of the mere jealousy of some newspaper in Montreal. Some newspaper is perhaps jealous of the 'Star' and wants to give the 'Star' some trouble in respect to its mail matter. The hon. Postmaster General should have told the newspapers to settle their jealousies between themselves, that the urgent need of more mail bags will pass away in two or three days, and he should not have permitted himself to have been drawn into the matter in the way in which he has been. That hon. gentleman represents the dignity of this House in some measure and in some measure the dignity of the country and he should not have permitted himself to have been dragged into a mere petty quarrel between some newspapers in Montreal. He should have been the first man to have stood up and fought for the dignity of this House. He should have said that the members of this House had privileges. I charge the hon. Postmaster General with not standing up for the dignity of this House. It is the duty of every member of this House to preserve the dignity of those on both sides. A minister ought not to be a partisan when it comes to preserving the respect of the people for this House. I will always stand up for the respect which is due to this House. We should have respect for ourselves. We should conduct our debates with courtesy and decency and we should stand together in the preservation of our rights in order that the country may respect us and respect parliament. I think the hon. Postmaster General forgot himself when this newspaper came to him and made the complaint to which he refers. When this newspaper complained to him that they had not sufficient bags, the hon. Postmaster General should have inquired into the matter and if he found out that members of parliament in the exercise of their franking privilege had used up the supply of bags he should have said to that newspaper: Wait, your business is private. You have a little private newspaper to run. The bags are being used by members of parliament for the dissemination of public information all over the country, which is more important than the dissemination of any private newspaper. If he had had any self respect he would have said on behalf of this House that the privileges of a member of parliament are superior to the privileges of a newspaper. The hon. Postmaster General said that a manufacturer in some small country town could not get his manufacturing circulars sent through the post office for three days because the post office was occupied by literature sent out by members of parliament. I undertake to say that such a statement is an insult to this parliament. He should have told that manufacturer that it was our duty to send out literature to the country rather than that the post office should be occupied with the literature that he desired to send out. I take the ground that it is our duty to send out literature. The people in my constituency are complaining because there is no literature sent out. They say that the members of parliament are lazy and that we are not performing our duty if we do not send out literature while we are here. The people pay the bills, they have a right to have literature sent to them and it is the first duty of the Post Office Department to send out literature from this House for the purpose of educating the people. If the government have a wise policy they should be the first to want literature sent out, because, if their policy is wise, the literature we send out will only exhibit that policy in a better light. Therefore, if I were supporting a government which I believed to be a strong government I would urge the opposition to send out literature, because, if the policy of the government were a desirable one, the opposition would make out a weak case. The people are just as competent to criticise an argument as we are and in many cases there are many more intelligent men outside of this House than there are inside of it. While there is a fair proportion of intelligence inside of this House there are many men outside of this House who are far in advance in the matter of intelligence than men inside of this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite should not interfere with political organization but they should rather encourage us.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. GOURLEY. One or two hon. gentlemen of ill manners can make a noise. They should encourage us in our organization. They should give us every facility for organization because this country is governed by parties and it is in the highest interests of the country that every bit of knowledge that can assist the electors in arriving at the verdict as to which party shall rule the country should be presented to their minds. Every bit of information should be scattered broadcast. That is the basis of the franking privilege. The franking privilege is the privilege of the people. It is not my privilege, it is not the privilege of any other hon. member, but it is the privilege of the people to get literature from this parliament free, because, if you charged the cost of sending out literature to an individual member, it would be impossible for him to send it out. Therefore, the people have wisely decreed that members of parliament shall have the liberty of sending out literature through the country free. Recollect you put into our hands the most powerful weapon when we can go to the country and say: You dare not allow us to exercise the privilege of sending out literature, because your crimes and misconduct are such that you do not want them to be known. Consequently I for one would say that the hon. Postmaster General should get up, recall every order that he has given and if necessary order 5,000 bags to-night. What is the cost of a few bags compared with this attack upon the privileges of parliament? And if necessary he should have a few extra postal cars. If the hon. Postmaster General were a business man rather than have this matter exploited he would have ordered 5,000 additional bags and hired some postal cars and had this literature removed from day to day. Surely the Post Office Department of Canada is strong enough to remove this literature. What a confession that after six years of administration by the hon. Postmaster General the post office service has become so inefficient, so impotent, so weak, that it is impossible to move a few bags of mail from the corridors of this House. I did not think that the Post Office Department had been so emaciated by the administration of the hon. Postmaster General as to leave it in this unhappy state. I think the hon. Postmaster General should give instructions at once, no matter what it costs, to have these corridors cleared and to have the stuff transmitted through the mails. I think also that the right hon. leader of the government should apologize to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and that the hon. Postmaster General should apologize to the House for this serious attack upon the privileges of every member of parliament.

The PRIME MINISTER. With the desire that we should endeavour to proceed with the business of the House, I have had a conference with my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), and he informs me that he has ordered 1,000 bags. They cannot be made in a day, but they will be made on short notice. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will allow me to proceed with the businesss of the House, I can confer with him, and I think we can come to a satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will be satisfactory.

Motion (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to adjourn the House negatived.

SUPPLY—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE BY MR. WALTER SCOTT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In one of these sheets of that campaign literature, which has been the subject of debate all day, I find that I am charged with the serious offence of lowering the tone of debate in this House. There is an article headed: 'Lowering the tone of debate; Liberal backbenchers resort to abusive tactics and barroom politics.' This sheet is gotten up in a form that might lead some people to believe that it was a veritable official document; it has the national coat of arms at its head, and it would almost remind one of the celebrated proclamation once isssued to the Indians instructing them how to cast their ballots.

Mr. EMMERSON. Or the bogus 'Globe.'

Mr. SCOTT. Or the bogus 'Globe,' as my hon. friend says. I and some other members of the House are charged with lowering the tone of debate and degrading this parliament—I presume that the exhibition we have seen to-day from gentlemen opposite is calculated to restore the tone of debate. Those of us who are charged with this offence have, according to this sheet, precipitated a crisis in this country, and the people are called to arms on account of that crisis in national politics. And why is this? It is because one hon. gentleman on this side called an official of a railway company 'a red-headed boy'; because another hon. gentleman applied the term 'a raw young person' to some one outside of the House; because it was said that one hon. gentleman 'displayed his ignorance'; and because the words 'intellectual paralysis' were used in another case. The fact that these epithets were applied has, according to this sheet, brought on a crisis in our national affairs, and in consequence the saving remnant of the people are called to arms. My own offence is that I made reference to certain railway companies, namely, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan and the Calgary and Edmonton Companies, in connection with which I made an allusion to my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler). I wish to explain my position, in face of this charge which must be considered somewhat serious. I wish to state that when I referred to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) I did not mean to reflect in the slightest degree upon his honesty or personal honour. I have some right to complain that a disposition has been shown on the part of some members of this House, and on the part of a section of the press, as well as in this campaign document, to read into the words I used a meaning which these words were not intended to convey, and which I do not believe they do convey. On the contrary, I would like to have permission to state, with regard to my hon. friend (Mr. Osler), that I believe he holds his public position in this country at a very considerable personal and financial sacrifice, as do many other members of this House. It is an encouraging thing that men of his calibre, men of very extensive business interests, are found willing to sacrifice their personal and financial convenience to hold public positions. I repeat that I did not make, and that I do not intend to make any reflection on the honour or honesty of my hon. friend from West Toronto. My reference to him was made in perfect good faith. Beyond having verified from the reports of the Department of Railways and Canals the figures on which my reference was based I had not, however, immediately before making the reference, looked very closely into these particular matters. I thought they were matters of common knowledge, and while the direct and absolute way in which my statement was challenged by my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) left me no recourse but to retract, it did surprise me exceedingly. Later I took occasion to examine into such of the facts as were available to me. The House has had some notice of this by the series of questions which some days ago I put upon the Order paper. I had, nevertheless, concluded to make no further reference to the matter until the serious charge against me in this campaign sheet was called to my attention. I think the House will agree with me that the very widespread accusation which is made in this sheet—stating that my personal conduct has been such as to degrade parliament—renders it incumbent on me to set myself right. I trust that the facts which I will endeavour very briefly to place before the House will lead my hon. friend from West Toronto to set me in the right with regard to his accusation that I had knowingly and wilfully made a false accusation against him. On looking further into the case, I found these facts: First, notwithstanding that by law railway bondholders' mortgages are required to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, no such document with respect to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan is in that office. I have, therefore, been unable to verify the assertions of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) with respect to that particular railroad. I find, however, that in the statutes of 1890 (chap. 82), confirming the agreement made between the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskachewan Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, subclause (E) of section 1 of this agreement, sets out:

> The company shall not issue any bonds, secured directly or indirectly on its land subsidies or any portion of such land subsidies.

My hon. friend (Mr. Osler) declared, if I understood him aright, that the $3,809,140 bond issue of that company, was only floated by the additional pledge of the total land subsidy. That statement of his, and the clause of the agreement, do not appear to harmonize, and some further explanation from the hon. gentleman would be in order. I may point out that there is another rather suspicious looking clause in the agreement, which is to be found in chapter 82 of the statutes of 1890. Subclause (C) of section 3 of the agreement sets out as follows :

It is understood and declared that the Qu'Appelle Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company may transfer one half of its land subsidy to any person or persons as it may deem proper.

However, as I said, the mortgage is not deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and I was able to find no particular facts with regard to that road or that company. But by chapter 84 of the statutes of 1890, in an Act to incorporate the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, I find that the name of my hon. friend the junior member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) appears amongst the names of those incorporated as the company to whom we voted 6,400 acres of land per mile for 340 miles of road, and to whom we granted $1,600,000 in cash, in twenty equal annual payments. Now, I find also, in the mortgage deed of the Calgary and Edmonton bondholders, this provision :

It is, however, expressly understood that the land grant from the government shall be excepted from the operation of the said mortgage and shall form no part of the security for the payment of the said bonds or the interest thereon.

Now, I appeal to my hon. friend if the discrepancies between these matters of record and what I understood him to state on a former occasion in this House are not sufficient to at least call for some further explanation from him. He stated, if I understood him accurately, that he was not one of those who obtained the new Calgary and Edmonton charter in 1890, but, on the contrary, I find that his name appears in the Act. I also understood him to state that in order to raise the amount of money—the exact sum was $5,474,513—which was the proceeds of the Calgary and Edmonton bonds, the land grant had to be pledged to form part of the security, or, as he put it, the land grant was sold with the bonds for the above sum. Now, the clause in the mortgage which I have read would seem to indicate that the contrary was the fact.

Let me give my hon. friend a very brief analysis of the figures of this contract. The proceeds of the bonds sale in connection with the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway were $3,809,140, while the cost of the road was $2,539,600. There is a balance there of $1,269,540, which my hon. friend explained was left in the hands of bankers to guarantee six years' interest. By my calculation six years' interest at 6 per cent upon the amount of the bonds would be $1,371,288. The surplus as between the proceeds of the bonds and the actual cost of the road was $1,269,540, so that upon the money raised by the bonds there would appear to be a shortage in this matter of interest for six years of $101,748. Does my hon. friend contend that it took a land grant of 1,619,200 acres to cover this deficiency of, roundly, $100,000, which appears to be the shortage in the six years' interest ?

The results with regard to the Calgary and Edmonton are very similar. The proceeds of the bonds were $5,474,513, while the actual cost of the road appears by the records in the Railway and Canals Department to have been $3,743,562. There is a surplus there of $1,730,951, which, as my hon. friend said, was left in the hands of bankers. At 6 per cent, six years' interest upon the total bond issue would amount to $1,970,820, and to cover that amount there was a surplus between the bond issue and the actual cost of the road of $1,730,951, so there would be a shortage there from the amount necessary to cover the interest of about $240,000 in round numbers. I ask, with regard to this, does my hon. friend contend that a land grant of 1,888,000 had all to be pledged to cover this $240,000 : and if so, what became of the paid-up capital stock, which on the Calgary and Edmonton road, is put at an amount of $1,000,000? I shall send these figures and calculations over to my hon. friend, and he will be able to see whether or not they are accurate.

It certainly appears to me to be almost impossible that it should have been found necessary to pledge the whole land grant to provide for these comparatively small amounts of money. If the land grant were not pledged, as appears to be indicated by the clause of the mortgage which I have read, then the question is, what became of the land grant ? On looking into this phase of the matter, I have found that of the land grant earned by the Calgary and Edmonton Company an area of 1,139,700 acres has already been patented, and to whom ? The railway company, of which my hon. friend, I believe, is a member, has secured patents on 215,816 acres. Nominees of the railway company have secured 57,576 acres. The firm of Osler, Hammond & Nanton have secured patents for 25,140 acres. Mr. James Ross has received patents for 41,130 acres. Assignees of Mr. Ross have received 105 acres. The Calgary and Edmonton Land Company has received the greatest amount, it has received patents for 792,799 acres, and assignees of the land company have been given patents for 12,510 acres. Now, as I pointed out, the land company has obtained the big slice, nearly 800,000 acres, which, in my opinion, is worth $2,500,000 to-day if it is worth a cent. I found further that my hon. friend is a member and a director of this Calgary and Edmonton Land Company, which is a different concern from the railway company. He appears to be a member of both the railway and the land company, both of which have participated, as I have shown, in the land grant.

Let me go over this ground again briefly. The Calgary and Edmonton Railway actually cost $3,743,572, which, I may remark, my hon. friend assured the House on a former occasion, was every bit paid in cash. The bond issue was $18,500 per mile for 300 miles; this appears in the mortgage deed. But the actual proceeds of the bonds seem to have been only $5,474,513, being roundly $75,000 less than their apparent par value. Between the proceeds and the cost of the road there is a difference of $1,730,951. This sum my hon. friend said—and I believe him implicitly—was left with the banks as a guarantee of the payment of interest—and I have shown that the annual interest at 6 per cent would amount to only $328,470—so that this surplus would evidently, with the exception of a shortage of only about $240,000, meet the total interest of 6 per cent for the whole period of six years.

Let me remark further that considering the fact that these bonds were put on the market with the virtual assurance to the purchasing public on the other side that the Canadian Pacific Railway would, in a certain number of years, take them up at the price of 110, and considering further that the full interest for six years was guaranteed, less only a matter of $240,000, these bonds must have been satisfactory to the purchasing public. Surely that guarantee ought to have been considered ample. In the last annual report of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I find the fact recorded that the total bond issue of the Calgary and Edmonton Company has been taken up by the Canadian Pacific Railway at par, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway has further paid $500,000 for the paid up capital stock of $1,000,000, which my hon. friend, on a former occasion, told the House was not all paid in cash originally; and at all events, both the bondholders and the railway company seem to have come out of the deal very successfully, wholly apart from the land grant. I have no wish to go further into the merits of this matter or to press it any further, but I would ask my hon. friend to do me the justice of admitting that these facts—which I believe are facts and which I only had in a general way in my mind when making my first allusion—go to show that I did not knowingly and wilfully make any false accusation against him.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I did not intend to make any reply to this renewed attack upon me, coming at this time of the session. I can hardly understand it. I have explained very fully my connection with this road. I have pointed out where the figures that have been quoted are wrong. I explained that the land was sold with the bonds to a syndicate, which is a very common way of doing these transactions, and that the whole money realized was expended on the construction of the road and in paying the interest. The only point I would make now in reply is regarding my previous statement, which might be misconstrued, from the fact that my name is on the directorate of the present Calgary Railway Company. I made the statement that I was not directly or indirectly connected with the inception of either the Saskatchewan and Long Lake or the Calgary and Edmonton Road. I was not a promoter, in any shape or form, of either of those roads. I came in after the original promoters had failed, and at the request of the late Sir John Macdonald. When I spoke on a previous occasion, I did not know thoroughly the history of the older incorporations; but Mr. Nicol Kingsmill, K.C., whose name is well known to this House, and who had been connected with those two roads long before I had anything to do with them, has given me the following memo concerning their origin and inception:—

October 19th, 1903.

E. B. Osler, Esq., M.P.,
Toronto Club,
Toronto, Ont.

My Dear Osler,—Re Qu'Appelle, Long Lake & Saskatchewan Railway Company.

This company was formed by an amalgamation with the South Saskatchewan Valley Railway Company, a list of the directors of which I now inclose also; a list of the incorporators of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company.

I was employed by the late Senator MacInnes and Mr. Andrew Onderdonk to endeavour to get the assistance of the government to this railway, after the first 25 miles had been built.

The affairs of the company were in a very low condition financially, and Mr. Onderdonk had been called in by the late Senator MacInnes to endeavour to undertake the construction of the railway. Mr. Onderdonk made an offer to the government, but no arrangement was made, and it was, if I mistake not, some time subsequent to this that you lent your assistance and carried the railway to completion. I was acting for the contractors who constructed the road, but in this you had no interest.

Re Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company:

As regards this company, as you are aware, I was one of the incorporators, and have been upon its board ever since until two or three months ago, when it was passed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and I am also aware of all the circumstances which preceded its construction.

The Calgary and Edmonton was preceded by a line called 'The Alberta and Athabasca Railway Company,' incorporated July 20, 1885. The name of this company was changed afterwards to 'The Northwestern Railway Company of Canada,' in 1889. The original incorporators are on the memorandum I inclose, and the directors added by the Act of 1899, you will also find on such memorandum. This company was brought before capitalists in England, and Praed's Bank were interested in it; one of the Lloyds was sent out to make an examination, and reported so favourably that it was supposed they would be able to finance the transaction; they had a large land subsidy, but no cash subsidy; the land subsidy was 10,000 acres a mile. After attempting to finance the matter, they finally failed; I know this personally, as I went and saw the Praed people in London, and received a letter from them stating that they had been unable to do anything and must withdraw.

After this occurred the government, who were exceedingly anxious that the line to Edmonton should be constructed, as a preventive to further troubles with the Indians, asked Mr. Ross to take up the project, and the Act incorporating this railway company was applied for and obtained at the instigation and request of the government of the Dominion; this I am personally aware of, as I had the conduct of the negotiations with the government at the time, and the making of the contract. It was, if I mistake not, at this juncture, that you first had anything to do with the transaction; and you and Mr. Ross went to England and raised the necessary money. The government were so anxious that this railway should be constructed that they passed the original Order in Council for the subsidy, subject to the sanction of parliament, before such sanction was obtained, and it was upon this order that the financial arrangements in England were commenced.

These facts are shown in the draft petition of right which we were about filing against the government, for the purpose of obtaining a settlement of the land grant, a settlement which was afterwards made. I inclose you a draft of the suggested petition of right, the value to you of which will be that you can absolutely depend upon any statement that is made in this draft being correct, it having been made up for the purpose of having the opinion of counsel. There is a good deal of it which is merely historical, and has relation to the land dispute with the government. Be good enough to send me back this printed draft petition of right in the Exchequer Court, as it is the only copy I have.

Trusting that this will supply the information you needed, believe me,

Yours very faithfully,

(Sgd.) VICAL KINGSMILL.

Mackworth Bulkley Praed, John Maurice Lloyd, John Dale and James Lloyd, all of London, Eng.; Charles T. Drummond, William White, and C. C. Colby.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House at present. The facts are as I have stated. My previous statements to my connection with these companies, and as to the disposition of the land and of the money received, is absolutely correct; and so far from being a company promoter, so far from my having had anything to do with the original conception of that road, that road was forced upon the attention of Mr. Ross and myself afterwards by the late Sir John Macdonald. I shall not weary the House with going into this long petition of rights, but I may say that it contains letters from Sir John Macdonald to Mr. Ross urging him to take the road up and to go forward at once on the Order in Council, and promising that a subsidy would be voted by parliament, and declaring that he would be perfectly justified in submitting his proposition to the capitalists in London. That was done, and the securities were disposed of as I have said, and the money realized from the securities provided for the construction of the railway and for the payment of the interest on the bonds and other debts. Two years ago, when this matter was brought up, I explained very fully my connection with the company. I have only to repeat that every statement I made with respect to that road is absolutely correct.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—PENSIONS.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Before leaving the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring a matter before the House which should have received the attention of the government before this time, the question of some additional pension to those who served in South Africa and suffered more or less disability. I am sorry to think that men in that position in this country have remained three years without receiving any consideration at the hands of the government. I do not at all advocate that the people of any country should be induced, by what may be offered in the sense of recognition of service, to enlist in the ranks of the army; but I think that the people's gratitude should be expressed towards those who have risked life and limb in defence of the common rights. I have in my own constituency a case which certainly is deserving of more recognition than it has so far been given by the government. I refer to Trooper Mulloy, blind Trooper Mulloy, a boy born and brought up in the county I have the honour to represent. I have known his family for years. They are in every sense respectable, deserving people; and this young man, who is a man of more than ordinary ability, ambitious, active and fairly well educated, went into the South African war and suffered total disability by loosing the sight of both eyes. He receives, from the British government a pension of 65 cents per day. That is altogether inadequate for the maintenance of an individual in this country. He is now pursuing his course at college, endeavouring to get an education, that he may be able so far as possible, to take care of himself in the world. I am sure I do not appeal to this House in the way of charity on behalf of this young man and others like him ; but I appeal to the sense of justice of those who took the post of danger at the time of the country's trial. When he returned to Liverpool he made what I may call that Spartan speech, that for him the past had no regrets. And that speech has gone around the world wherever the English language is spoken, and it is echoing and re-echoing through this country to-day. That young man is struggling without sight, endeavouring to get an education that he may put himself, even though he has lost his sight, upon an equal footing with other men. And the government have given no attention to these cases—nothing has been done. I bring this forward not to criticise the government, but to try to impress upon them the idea that this is a thing that should be attended to, and that the services of these young men should be recognized. We may talk as we please about this country abroad and in the eyes of the world, but the going of these young men from Canada did more to bring this country into prominence than any other thing that has been done in the last twenty-five years. I refer to Trooper Mulloy, not because I would single him out from among others who are also deserving, but because I am acquainted with all the circumstances of his case, and his case teaches me how deserving all these others are. I am quite aware that these men are not in the same position as the young men, for instance, who went out at the time of the rebellion of 1885, and who received pensions, some of them receiving special treatment at the hands of the government. But, though they are not in the same position towards the Canadian government, I say they are just as deserving. The South African question was a colonial question. It was a question involving the rights of the colonists which were invaded by those who had no right to invade them ; and those who went out to fight for Britain's cause in South Africa were fighting to maintain colonial interests as much as were the men who put down the rebellion in the North-west. I have here a return, brought down for the information of the House of Commons, showing those who received pensions because of disability resulting from services in 1885. I find that some received special treatment ; for instance, Captain Peters received $1,000 a year. That was away above and beyond the ordinary rule.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And he only lost an arm.

Mr. BRODER. And, as the hon. member says, he only lost an arm, while Trooper Mulloy suffered total disability, and so deserves special treatment at the hands of the government. I am sure the country will bear out the Prime Minister in recognizing the claims of the men who served in South Africa, and I hope he will give this matter his attention at an early day. Three years, I am sure, is quite long enough for these young men to wait, querying whether or not they are to receive recognition from their country. An example has been set up by the people to the south of us. I do not say that we should follow that example. The American people are paying $138,000,000 a year now to men who were in the war of 1861-65. They say to the men who took part in that war : Even though you may have only served in the ranks, your country remembers your service ; and if you are injured or suffer disability even in the ordinary avocations of life, you shall receive a pension. I do not say that I would advocate a similar course in this country. But their example teaches us a lesson. That country is permeated with patriotism so far as American rights are concerned—and we have just had a lesson of that—and their soldiers know that the sympathy and help of their country can be depended upon. I want to say on behalf of these South African boys, that the people of this country, irrespective of party or race, I believe, are ready to support anything reasonable that the government may choose to do in recognition of their bravery.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I wish to support strongly every word that has been uttered by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Broder). Although he has spoken particularly of one case, he has included all cases. I am ready to support a special recognition of the particular case he mentioned, and I hope there will be a general willingness to support a recognition of all cases of disability suffered by our soldiers in South Africa. I do not know that I can say anything more than he has said, and I do not think I can say it as well as he has said it. But I wish to emphasize everything he has said, and the way he has said it. I can perhaps speak the more feelingly on this matter, because as I have already taken occasion to inform the House, the constituency which I represent sent more men to South Africa than any other in the Dominion of Canada. There are men throughout that constituency who have suffered serious disability because of their patriotism, patriotism of the highest type. I do not wish to imply that the men who served in the North-west in 1885 were anything but soldiers and patriots of the highest character, but if there is any difference it is in favour of the men who went around the world to carry the British flag to victory. Certainly we owe much to those who sacrificed everything for imperial sentiment. So far as we were concerned we were in no material danger. But there was danger to the empire which we uphold. These men did not stop to consider the cost to themselves, and we should not stop to consider the cost to ourselves now. When these men went out it was a matter of pride to Canada to pay their wages, and I think it should be ten times more a matter of pride to Canada to see that those soldiers who did her such honour on that occasion and rendered the empire such signal service, should not be dependent on the pittance of pension which is derivable under the British army regulations. That pension list is framed with regard to a certain class of people, to the ordinary soldiers of the British army. But the conditions of the Birtish army and of the class of people who serve in the ranks of the regular army, are different from those which prevail in this country, and amongst the men who served Canada and the empire so well in South Africa, and will be demeaning ourselves if we fail to recognize those fellow-countrymen of ours who did us such great credit; if we fail to recognize their service in some more liberal fashion than we have done so far in leaving them entirely to the support of the British pension list. That would be leaving them without any recognition at all on our part. I believe that without distinction of party, without distinction of race or creed, or anything else, the people of this country will be proud to grant a liberal compensation to every soldier who has suffered physical disability in performing military service in South Africa.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to say a few words merely to indicate my hearty concurrence in every word that has been uttered by the two hon. gentlemen (Mr. Broder) and (Mr. Oliver) who have spoken on this subject. Loyalty and defence of one's country are two of the highest qualities of citizenship, and those who are prepared in the hour of danger to expose and even give up their lives in defence of their country are in my judgment deserving of the highest recognition we can pay them. No reward is too high, no return too great that we can make for their services. It is a well known fact that all civilized countries deal generously with those who perform military service in defence of their flag, and those who have been maimed or have suffered physically while performing military duties have special claims upon our gratitude. The British empire is noted the world over for the care it takes of its defenders. In this country many lives of our valuable citizens have been sacrificed in our defence, many also have been sacrificed in defending the empire where our own country was not directly involved. In both cases I think our soldiers deserve the fullest gratitude of their countrymen. Those who were unfortunate enough to suffer as poor Trooper Mulloy suffered by losing his eyesight, should be especial objects of our commiseration, of our sympathy and our care, and our government should show substantial evidence of our gratitude for what Mr. Molloy has done. It seems to me that it is a crying shame that he should be allowed to go through life without a special compensation, with only the sixty-five cents a day allowed him by the British pension list, and nothing at all from Canada. Has it come to this, that in this enlightened age of the world the only proof we show of our admiration for loyalty, and for those who have endangered their lives and suffered physicial disability in the defence of their country, is the pittance allowed them by the British pension list, and that we in Canada are to do nothing more to mark our gratitude for our own fellow-citizens who have rendered us such signal service? To my mind every man who went out to South Africa, whether he took part in active hostilities or not, if he went out in defence of the empire and in the maintenance of its authority, should be dealt with by us in the most liberal fashion, and we should be prepared to show in some very substantial way our recognition of the very valuable services they have rendered to their country.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Yale and Cariboo). I also desire to add a few words to what has been said by the hon. members who have spoken on this subject. I heartily concur in the remarks they have made. A number of men went out from my own district to the South African war, some of whom have returned and some of whom have lost their lives in that country. Among those who have returned there is now living in the town of Rossland a young man who was a very able and efficient soldier and scout, and who went out both in the first and the second drafts. He has been practically disabled from the exercise of his ordinary calling in life by an accident in consequence of which the muscles of his left arm are withering. I think such a case deserves recognition at the hands of this government. The case mentioned by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) is an exceptional case, and should be dealt with with exceptional generosity by this government. There are others whose services should also be recognized, although perhaps not as liberally.

I have no doubt that our government are fully alive to this question, and that they will deal liberally with these men who were so unfortunate as to have suffered in consequence of their loyalty, which impelled them to go forth to battle for the empire. There is another matter to which I wish to refer, and I feel a little delicacy in doing so for the reason that I myself was a member of the contingent which went to Egypt and served in the campaign of 1884-5. While most of those who served in the rebellion of 1885 in Canada have received recognition by way of land grants from one or other of the governments in Canada, no attention has ever been paid to those who took part in the Soudan campaign of 1884-5. If I were the only one concerned, I certainly would never mention it, but there are scattered throughout Canada many men who took part in that campaign, and I may say that they took a part that was creditable to themselves and creditable to Canada. They formed a very efficient corps of the British army engaged in the campaign of the Soudan. I think that while this question of recognizing the services of Canadians in South Africa is being and has been taken up by the government we should not forget those boys who served in an equally dangerous position, as any one knows who has run the cataracts of any waters, while at the same time being exposed to attack from the enemy. Their claim, I think, is one that should also be taken into consideration by the government. This is the first time I have mentioned it, and I think the occasion an opportune one to draw the attention of the government to the claim of these men, who, I think, it will be admitted, are deserving of some recognition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that I can add anything to that which has been so well expressed by my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) and other gentlemen who have spoken, but I desire to say that, as far as I am concerned, I would heartily support any appropriation by the government for the purpose of doing what I think is no more than justice to these men who have suffered from the service which they have rendered to the country in South Africa. The case of Mr. Mulloy may be taken as an illustration. I have no doubt there are other cases that are equally deserving. I had an opportunity of meeting Mr. Mulloy when he came to Halifax for the purpose of receiving some instruction at a school for the blind in that city. I may say that I induced him to tell me the story of the occasion on which he lost his eyesight, and although it was told with a very great deal of modesty and not putting himself forward in any way, I felt very much impressed by the ability and gallantry which he displayed on that occasion, and I regard him as a man who is eminently deserving of consideration at the hands of the government for the way in which he served his country then. We hailed the departure of these men for South Africa with a great deal of satisfaction. They were acclaimed by crowds cheering them on their departure, and they were met with like receptions upon their return. Taking the case of Mr. Mulloy; he has been deprived of that blessing of sight, a loss which will render his life altogether different in the future from what it would have been. He is a man of great ability, a man who could have looked forward to a distinguished career in this country; he has lost that most precious boon of eyesight in the service of his country, he is now practically incapable of earning his livelihood, he is left in that condition by the country for several years, and not one single dollar has ever been contributed by the country for the purpose of supporting or maintaining him. I do not think this is a condition of affairs which ought to make us proud of this country, and the sooner it is remedied the better. I am aware that the question of pensions might open up a very wide scope if we do not proceed upon some definite principle, but the case of Mr. Mulloy and other men who have incurred disability in South Africa, it seems to me can be dealt with without any danger at all to the public interest. It will impose no great burden upon the country, and any precedent which is fixed by dealing generously with these men will not be a dangerous one. I would very heartily support any measure introduced by the government for the purpose of doing what, as I have said before, is no more than simple justice to these men.

The PRIME MINISTER. The case of Private Mulloy, which has been brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder), is one which can not but excite the sympathy of every man who is familiar with it. Private Mulloy not only showed himself to be a good soldier in the field, but he has borne the great misfortune which he sustained in the loss of his eyesight, with a courage and a fortitude which excites the admiration of every one who has been made aware of it. I think that the case of Private Mulloy should not be taken up separately. If we are to deal with this question we ought to deal with it as a whole instead of dealing with the case of one or other of those who have in a greater or less degree suffered in consequence of the discharge of their duty to their country. When the colonies were invited by the British authorities in October, 1899, to take their share in the war in South Africa, the British government undertook to defray certain expenses and undertook at the same time to deal with the matter of pensions. The British government have discharged their undertaking in that behalf, but, according to our notions on this side of the Atlantic, a pension which perhaps might be found adequate in England seems to us strangely inadequate. A pension of 65 cents a day in Canada is not at all what we would expect under similar circumstances. At the same time, I believe it is a fact that the patriotic fund which was raised in 1899-1900, and which, as I understand, reached a pretty high figure, has been made use of for the relief of those who, like Private Mulloy, have suffered in the South African war.

Mr. BRODER. I think he got $1,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know how much he got, but I am under the impression that he received something. I refer to this now, not by way of putting a bar against the application of my hon. friend, but simply as a circumstance taken into consideration at the proper time. I can only say to my hon. friend that on a previous occasion I stated, speaking for the government, that I thought the country would respond to any action which might be taken by us if we were to undertake to deal generously with those who had risked their lives in the war. The matter has been engaging the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). I am sorry he is not present to-day. In the rush of business of this long session, I am sorry to have to admit that for my part the matter has escaped my attention. I am sure it has not escaped the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence and probably at some day—I cannot say when——

Mr. BRODER. I intimated to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence that I would bring it up in the House, and he was therefore aware that I intended speaking upon it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not find fault with that. The Minister of Militia is absent to-day for a very good reason, but if he were present, he could have given the conclusion which he has reached on the subject. I shall make it my duty to call his attention to the matter, and to point out the sympathetic reception it has received from the members of this House.

Mr. S. HUGHES (Victoria). This is the third time this question has been brought before the House during the present session. It, however, was not in reference to this specific case of Private Mulloy, but with general reference to all those who have suffered disability in South Africa. I think the Prime Minister is right in saying that we cannot make Private Mulloy's case exceptional. I have had several interviews with the Minister of Militia and he has expressed himself as prepared to give a favourable consideration to the whole matter. I am pleased to hear the Prime Minister say that he endorses that idea. The approval of the hon. gentleman, of course guarantees its accomplishment. I would point out, that there are many who are partially disabled through the loss of an arm, a leg or one eye, and the money available from the patriotic fund is not at all sufficient to meet the requirements of these cases. I would remind the Prime Minister that, in addition to a moderate pension, these young gentlemen who are partially disabled could be employed in some suitable positions in the public service. In England, a society has been formed to get positions for army reserve men, and for those who have been partially disabled in war, and the employers of England are responding to the objects of the society in a very commendable manner. None of these young Canadians who are partially disabled wish to avoid work, and I suggest now to the Prime Minister that positions might be found for them in the government service. The question of pensions generally, has engaged the attention of various nations. New Zealand has an efficient pension system not only for those who are disabled in the service of the empire, but for those who on account of old age are not able to work longer. The highest statesmen in England have proposed a scheme of old age pensions to be paid from the national resources. I believe that the Prime Minister will be endorsed by every member of this House if before the session closes, he will bring down an appropriation in the estimates to pay a pension to the comparatively few men who have been seriously disabled in the South African war. I am delighted to know that my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) is one of the old Nile voyageurs, and I congratulate him on bringing the question of a land grant before the House. I trust that the government will give its careful attention to that matter. As an instance of the reasons which some people give for requiring a pension, I may say that an old gentleman came to me and told me that he was out in '37 and '38, and he asked me to advance his claim. As a matter of fact he did'nt fight at all, but he had turned out for two days, and he thought he was entitled to a pension. I asked him which side he fought on, and he said he was on the side of the Loyalists, but I told him that his chances were better for getting some recognition, if he had supported the other side: However that may be, this nation should now turn its attention to compensating in some way, the men who have been disabled in the loyal defence of the empire. Probably there are not more than forty or fifty Canadians who have been permanently disabled in the late war, and I do not believe that one-thousandth part of one per cent of the people of Canada would object to our granting these men pensions.

Mr. MONET. Could the hon. gentleman tell me whether any one of these soldiers who fought in South Africa has received compensation from the insurance fund that we heard so much about in the session of 1900 from Sir Charles Tupper, who then led the opposition ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I suppose at this date it is no harm to mention names, and I may state, that when I made an offer of troops for South Africa, Mr. Hugh Graham of the Montreal 'Star'—who has received so much attention to-day—wired me offering to pay an insurance of $1,000 on the life of each of the thousand men I was anxious to enrol. I understand, however, that this insurance was for loss of life ; I do not think it applied to disability.

Mr. MONET. I understand there was a scale of indemnity attached to it, which was to be granted for partial disablement.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not know about that. I was fortunately not compelled to draw upon any such fund, but even if this fund did give an indemnity to men who were disabled, I do not think any one in Canada would object to their receiving in addition some recognition from the state.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know of two cases quite near my own home, where this insurance referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monet) was paid.

Mr. MONET. Were these men disabled ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They were killed.

Hon. Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). In view of the general expression of opinion from all sides of this House, and the sincere sympathy expressed by the right hon. Prime Minister, it is unnecessary to add anything further to what has been said on the question. I listened, however, with regret, to the statement of the Prime Minister, that there was practically no hope of this question being solved this session, which I understand is rapidly drawing to a close. As the right hon. gentleman says the question is still in the hands of his ministers, and therefore not under the consideration of the government, it seems almost hopeless to expect that it will be brought to an end and that any mature plan will be evolved by the government. Now, I do not interject that for the purpose of attempting to make capital against the government, but I do suggest that in view of this very general feeling in the House something ought to be done; I do suggest that an effort should be made to mature a plan that will work out a solution at once, instead of having the matter thrown over to be dealt with at the next session of parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON. Reference has been made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) to the desirability of giving employment to the South African veterans in addition to any financial aid which may be given. I think it is but fair to say that the government have acted in that direction. I can bear testimony to the fact that the ex-Minister of Railways has given employment on the Intercolonial Railway in the maritime provinces to a very large number of these men.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE BY MR. SCHELL.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL (Glengarry). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. When the House was in Committee of Supply, on Thursday last, the 13th, the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), for the fourth time, I believe, this session, again coupled my name with that of the superintendent of the Williamsburg canal. He had previously stated several times that this gentleman was an appointee of mine, in the course of some remarks not reflecting very favourably on the superintendent of the canal. I have just noticed that as reported on page 14147 of 'Hansard' the hon. gentleman used these words :

> As I mentioned the other night, when he was given this important position, one of the most important positions on the river, a position the occupant of which should know the marine interest thoroughly, he was a school teacher in Glengarry. I do not believe he ever saw a canal before he was placed in this important position—he was the financial agent—I will put it mildly—of the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell).

I wish to state, Mr. Speaker,—and I wish to put it mildly—that this statement is absolutely and entirely and unqualifiedly untrue. As I stated before, this Mr. Stewart was at one time, as a young man, a school teacher in Glengarry. Later he was employed in Montreal, Ottawa, and I cannot tell what other places, but during the year 1900 and for I do not know how many years previous to that time, he was not a resident of Glengarry. He was not my financial agent, he was not an appointee of mine, I had no connection with Mr. Stewart. It is too bad, Mr. Speaker, that a member from his privileged position in this House, should go the length that the hon. member for Grenville did, even to attack a government employee. I know Mr. Stewart, and I understand from the department that he is a good and capable officer, and even if he does not suit the member for Grenville, it is not a fair thing that he should be attacked in this manner. I may say that Mr. Stewart is not one of the Glengarry Stewarts ; he was not born in Glengarry, and so far as I know, is not related to the Glengarry Stewarts.

Mr. BRODER. That is a good thing for them.

Mr. SCHELL. We have many Stewarts in Glengarry, and I do not think there is one of them who would descend to such a low moral or political level as to strike an enemy behind his back or to injure him from a privileged ambush as the hon. member for Grenville has undertaken to do on more than three occasions during this session. I am well acquainted with Mr. Stewart ; I may say that he is a friend of mine, but I have had no connection with him. I am not saying this to indicate that it would be any reflection on myself to be connected with him, but simply to state that there never was the slightest ground for any of the statements made by the hon. member for Grenville, and that Mr. Stewart has not been connected with me directly or indirectly, so far as being my political agent, or being appointed by me is concerned.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

FINANCIAL REVIEW.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, probably no one statement ever made in the House of Commons has attracted more attention than the historical one made in the year 1894 by the opposition of that day, that the revenue and expenditure of Canada should be kept at a point about $2,000,000 less than the $38,000,000 which was then the expenditure of the country. These gentlemen did not all agree as to the amount by which the $38,000,000 might be reduced. Some wanted a reduction of $2,000,000; others $3,000,000 or $4,000,000; some $5,000,000; and I think one gentleman would have applied the pruning knife to the extent of $6,000,000. However, if we take $2,000,000 as the more moderate estimate and the more likely to be the correct one and apply that to the expenditure of that day, then, in the opinion of those critics, the ordinary expenditure of Canada ought to be $36,000,000, and its total expenditure, including expenditure on capital account, about $41,000,000. Practically, the promise was made to the people by the gentlemen then representing the Liberal party that if elected they would carry on the affairs of the country for the sum I have just mentioned. No doubt the country did take these gentlemen seriously. No doubt the country understood that, if returned to office, they would reduce the expenditure of the country and the consequent taxation imposed on the people to something like the extent they promised. I need scarcely say that this promised economy has not been carried out. If we will regard the expenditure and income of Canada to-day from that point of view most readily understood, namely, the amount per capita, we will find that since 1896 the revenue, and consequently the taxation, of Canada has increased at a very rapid rate, and that the expenditure of the country has increased in proportion. Instead of the government realizing what the people expected, it has gone in the very opposite direction. Instead of practicing economy it has gone on steadily increasing the burdens of the people and the expenditure of the country. In 1896 the revenue per head was $7.20 and the expenditure $7.26. In 1902, which is the last year for which returns were submitted by the government, the revenue, instead of being $7.20, was $10.64 and the expenditure $9.30, instead of $7.26 per head.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The balance was on the right side.

Mr. BELL. Yes. Last year, taking the figures which we find in the 'Gazette,' the revenue was $11.94 and the expenditure $9.37. Again the balance is on the right side, but there is a very large increase over the figures of 1896. The increase per head since that time is in revenue $4.74 and in expenditure $2.11 per head, so that while this country has had an abundant revenue—and we will have opportunity before I conclude my remarks of tracing the sources of that revenue and showing the manner in which it has been collected and pressed upon the people—the promise of economy has been absolutely set at naught. Instead of maintaining the expenditure at the point fixed by these hon. gentlemen when in opposition, that expenditure has been increased by $2.11 per head. This increase of expenditure has been steady since 1896. The ordinary expenditure of Canada has increased from $37,000,000 in 1896 to $52,000,000 this last year. And the total expenditure has increased from $44,000,000 to $64,000,000. The expenditure has gone up every year since the present government has been in power. Even this last year, in which there was at one time some prospect of economy, the expenditure has increased by $500,000 over that of the preceding year, when it was abnormally large. By these figures we can determine the manner in which the expenditure affects the individual householder. Take the average family at five and a half persons, we find that in 1903 the revenue had risen to $65.67 per family, or $11.94 per head, and the expenditure to $51.54 per family, or $9.37 per head. A very large increase, I need scarcely say, over the figures which were recorded as altogether too excessive by the critics of 1893-4, when the Conservatives were administering our affairs. We would perhaps get a better idea of the steady manner in which the present government has kept increasing the expenditure by taking a series of years and contrasting the seven years from 1890 to 1896—the last seven years of Conservative administration—when the average ordinary expenditure was $37,000,000 and the average total expenditure was $42,000,000, with the subsequent seven years. When we contrast those years with the seven years of Liberal administration of this government, who have been endeavouring very unsuccessfully to carry out their pledges of economy, we find that in those seven years in which this government has been in power, the average ordinary expenditure has increased from $37,000,000 to $44,000,000, and the average total expenditure from $42,000,000 to $54,000,000, making an increase of $7,000,000 in the one case and $12,000,000 in the other. These increases are very large. In the case of ordinary expenditure they amount to about one-fifth of the sum fixed by the Liberal party as that required to carry on the business of the country. These gentlemen went so far as to say that there was absolutely no justification for a larger expenditure. But it is argued by these gentlemen, when they have been challenged from time to time for their failure to make good their promises, that there is something in the existing conditions which justifies this large expenditure. They say that if the expenditure is great so is the revenue, and that the country can afford an expenditure in 1903-4 which it could not afford seven years ago. They insisted in 1894, not only that the taxation was too high, but that it was oppressive. Well, if we are to judge the affairs of the country by the conditions of its finances, we will find that there is no reasonable ground for that contention. There was no failure, no difficulty whatever in acquiring the revenues required for the use of the country at that time. A very brief survey of the financial condition of Canada in 1894, when these gentlemen were most positive in expressing these strong views, will show that the country provided, without any excessive taxation or any very burdensome impost, all the money required to carry on its business.

For instance, in 1893 the expenditure on account of consolidated fund was $37,000,000 in round numbers, and the total expenditure $41,000,000. In that year the revenue was $38,000,000, or $1,000,000 in excess of the expenditure on account of consolidated fund. In 1894, the expenditure on account of consolidated revenue fund was $37,000,000, and the total expenditure $43,000,000. In that year the revenue was $36,000,000, or about $1,000,000 less than the expenditure on current account. This was a comparatively small deficiency, and one that could easily have been made up by slight additions to the taxation of the country. It was a deficiency moreover which was due to the fact that large deductions had been made, under the capable administration of the Finance Minister of that time, in the taxation imposed upon the country. On the whole, for the two years I have given there was a surplus of $180,000. So, evidently, expenditure and revenue were very nearly balanced in these years. The revenue per head in 1893 was $7.73, and in 1894, $7.29, while the expenditure was, for 1893, $7.46, and for 1894, $7.54. These figures show that under the system of financing at that time in vogue, matters were managed by the government so as to keep revenue and expenditure just about where they should be—that is at almost a perfect balance.

Now, it must further be observed that at that very time we had entered upon a period of depression, a depression which came to its climax in 1895. We were not, as now, in a period of expansion, of buoyant trade, but were approaching the lowest point in one of those depressions which periodically visit all countries. Furthermore, it must be borne in mind in making a comparison of that time and this, that the Finance Minister of that day had withdrawn the duties upon sugar and other articles, and so had relieved the people of taxation to an amount which was estimated, and I think accurately estimated to save to the people in a few years $19,000,000. The great relief afforded to the people of Canada by that immense reduction in taxation accounts very readily for the fact that there were at that time certain small deficits. At present we have an utterly different state of affairs. And, as I have been able to show the fallacy of the argument of the Minister of Customs that the country was in such a position, in the years I have referred to, that they were warranted in reducing taxation and the public debt and curtailing expenditure, so I think I can show that if the government is now in the enjoyment of large revenue, it is because we are not only enjoying all the advantages of a period of prosperity, one of those periods which we, in common with all the rest of the world enjoy from time to time; but because during all this period of expansion, of prosperity, of great volume of business and high prices, the government of the day has not followed a sound financial system, has not relieved the people of taxation that is unnecessary for the purposes of the country, but has maintained throughout this period of expansion taxes which could only be justified under some pressing necessity requiring the government to take from the citizen every dollar that he could spare for the purposes of the government. The present government has not diminished the duties as did the government of which Hon. George E. Foster was the Finance Minister during a period of expansion and great prosperity previous to 1893. On the contrary, coming into power as they did, in 1896, when we were entering upon the period of expansion, of buoyant financial conditions, that we have enjoyed since that time, they proceeded to add to the taxation which had been imposed by Mr. Foster in order to meet the requirements of the country during the hard years of depression. They not only retained the taxes imposed by Mr. Foster, but added to them, and added to them very largely, by imposing taxation upon articles which are of universal use, and, therefore, the articles which most readily respond to the call of the government for increased revenue. Since it came into power, this government, even at a time when the current of business was flowing strong, at a time when we were evidently entering upon a period of good times, increased the duties on sugar, increased the duties on tobacco and increased the duties on spirits, all articles which respond readily to the effort on the part of the government to secure increased revenue. And, not only did they impose those duties, but they have maintained them during their whole period of office, a period when the revenue of the country was sure to be large, trade being buoyant and the business resources of the country greater. During the last year, we find that from sugar, an article on which the people of Canada in the years when these hon. gentleman criticised the government paid a very small duty, this government has this year derived a revenue of $2,647,274 much greater than the average revenue from this source under the duties previously imposed. From tobacco higher duties have raised $1,642,830 of increased revenue. Thus the government have added to their revenue and their surplus during a period of prosperity, an enormous taxation which could only be justified if the country were in pressing need for an increase of revenue. The present government has refused to reduce these duties, though the necessary consequence of maintaining them is that the taxation of the people per head has been greatly increased. And why have they refused to reduce them ? I suppose it is unnecessary to say to hon. gentlemen who have occupied seats in this House during the last seven years that the government rely for their support in the country largely upon the fact that they are enabled to say to parliament and to the country, from year to year, that they have large revenues and large surpluses. But for this, in my opinion, they would not continue the taxation at the point at which it stands. But, apparently, to the minds of these hon. gentlemen, sound financing is the collection of large revenue, and the best title to the support and admiration of the people is to prove to the people that the government is exacting from them large sums which are not needed to carry on the business of the country during the current year. The large surpluses which the government have had, mean, of course, that large sums in excess of the ordinary expenditure of the country, and of the ordinary requirements of the country, are taken from the citizens by the government.

Now, that is not ordinarily held to be good financing. It has been held to be good financing that the government should pay its way, that the revenue of the country should equal its ordinary expenditure. But in order to maintain matters at a proper level, the capital expenditure of the country is the expedient which has been devised in order to relieve the citizens from an excessive burden of taxation and to prevent the necessity of the government taking from them a larger sum of money than is required to meet the ordinary expenditure of the country. Consequently, to my mind, and I think it ought to be evident to every one, sound financing consists in reducing the expenditure of the country to the lowest point consistent with an efficient administration of the affairs of the country, and at the same time reducing taxation to a point where the revenue will precisely equal ordinary expenditure. Ordinary expenditure should be economically made and kept at the lowest possible point, and the revenue of the country ought to be kept to a point which will precisely meet or slightly exceed that ordinary expenditure. Except living expenses, the ordinary expenses required to meet the administration of the government, to meet the regular everyday requirements of the people, all other works ought to be paid for, not out of the surpluses, which are only produced by excessive taxation, but ought to be paid for by a system of capital expenditure by which the cost of those works will be spread over, not one, two or three years, but over the whole period during which those works will be available, and they will be gradually paid for by the people during the years in which they have the advantage of those expenditures. In this way each year the country pays its ordinary expenses, and in addition, by means of sinking fund, it pays its proportion of the capital outlay for the extraordinary expenditure which the country is required to incur.

Now there is another reason which to my mind makes it clear that a system which enables a government to be in the possession of large surpluses, and to claim credit for them is a most objectionable system. The state, if it is economically and fairly well governed, can always procure money, can borrow money a great deal cheaper than even a rich citizen, and, of course, very much cheaper than a poorer citizen ; and if money is required for capital expenditure, it seems to me it is better financing, and better for the government, and better for the country that the moneys required for extraordinary expenses of the country should be procured by borrowing, and should be repaid by a system of judiciously applied sinking funds, rather than that this expenditure should be made out of surpluses which can only be in the possession of the government in consequence of the taxation of the country for the time, being excessive. There is another objection to surpluses, and one which was urged very strongly and effectively by a gentleman who sat upon this side of the House in the years in which the Conservative party were in power—for during many years when the Conservatives were in power, they did have surpluses to their credit—and that was the fact that the possession of large revenues, the possession of surpluses, the possession of excessive revenues, has a great tendency to lead to extravagance. I do not think we need go very far in considering the estimates, not only of this year, but of the years that are past, to discover that there are reasons to believe that the people of this country have not very far to look in the pages of these estimates to find that the result of large revenues in the hands of this government, has been to largely increase the expenditure, and to induce that extravagance which we had every reason to believe would result in the case of every government that has large surpluses in excess of its needs.

Now, there is another reason still, to my mind, why the taxation should be reduced to the point at which it would meet the ordinary expenditure of the country and no more. There are in the country a certain number of people who have wealth, who have money to spare, but it is a small class. There is a much larger class to whom money is of great value, who have no money to spare, and on the other hand are for the greatest part of the time in the market borrowing money. Under a system that, without any process of taxation, derives large revenues from that portion of the population which has surplus funds, which has money to spare, we find that in addition to other sums which the present government have borrowed, they have in their hands, and are using, nearly $100,000,000 which were loaned to them practically by the people of this country. They have nearly $40,000,000 of notes in circulation, pieces of paper with the endorsement and guarantee of the government upon them, which are accepted by the people as cash, and for which, of course, the government receives the equivalent of cash. To that extent the whole amount of the circulation of this country, which is nearly $40,000,000, is practically a loan made by the people to the government of the day. Then in the Dominion government savings bank and the postal savings bank of the country there are deposits of some $60,000,000 as well. From that class of people, from the business people who keep the money in circulation, and from the more wealthy people, who use the savings banks as banks of deposit—it is evident that the government to-day is receiving from that class, which has a superfluity and can spare, something like $100,000,000. They receive that at a very low rate of interest, the average interest upon that whole sum is only a fraction under 2 per cent; about 1·87 per cent, I think. Now from these facts it seems clear that the government having $100,000,000 practically in their hands, have already withdrawn from circulation and from the coffers of those who can spare, of those who have money which they do not require, as large a sum of money as can be safely and advantageously contributed to the government by the people. When the government of the day maintains taxation at such a point that it is in a position to point to surpluses such as we have this year, an enormous surplus, then to my mind, the government of the day has taken from the pockets of the people, who require it more than they do, and can use it to better advantage than they can, a large sum of money which would be far better in the pockets of the people than in the coffers of the government. Apart altogether from the fact that a large surplus at the hand of the government over and above what is required for ordinary expenditure, leads to extravagance, apart altogether from that, it is withdrawing from the pockets of the people a sum of $14,000,000 this year, which the country could use to much better advantage than can the government. A great part of the people of this country are borrowers, as a rule they have to pay 6 or 7 per cent for the money which they borrow. The government that requires money in an emergency can borrow money for 3 per cent or less, and to my mind it seems perfectly clear that a system of finance in which any large sum of money is left in the hands of the government in the form of a surplus, is simply a diversion of that money from the pockets of the people, where it would be most productive, to the coffers of the government, where it is not required at all. In fact it is the people who make the surplus. I think I have heard of some cases in which it would almost seem that the members of the government spoke in such a fashion as to lead you to infer that the government created the surplus, that the Finance Minister made the surplus, and deserved all the credit for it. A surplus is made by the people, and to my mind it is made by the people at a loss to their own pockets, a loss to their own interests. They make the surplus and they lose by making it.

Now I have said that these large surpluses mean large expenditures. We know very well that from the date on which this government came into power, the expenditures of the country have grown rapidly. We do not forget the now historic remark of one prominent member of the government, who, when the largely increased expenditure of the government was called to his notice, said: 'Oh, yes, but wait till you see us next year.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is not on this side now. He is on the other side.

Mr. BELL. He is not the Finance Minister on this side. If he is on this side I have not seen him. I am of the opinion that his spirit is evidently on the other side. He is apparently just as much as ever he was the master of the administration in so far as its expenditure is concerned.

Mr. MONET. The hon. ex-Minister of Public Works declared at his last meeting at St. Hugues in the county of Bagot that he had no more confidence in the present government, so that he has passed to the Tories.

Mr. BELL. I presume that no man in Canada is in a better position to judge of the merits of that government and to pronounce what I would fondly hope would be an unbiased opinion in reference to it. One of the instances that go clearly to prove what I have said that the fact is that large sums in the possession of the government tend to extravagance, is to be seen in connection with a very important event in the history of Canada that occurred in 1901. I refer to the late census. The last census taken of this country cost more than twice as much as the previous census under the administration of a government which did not aim at having surpluses, did not boast of having surpluses and did not make it its chief business to have surpluses. The last census has cost at least $100,000 more than twice as much as the previous census and yet the population of the country enumerated only increased by about ten per cent. There you have an instance of the result of these ideas of a growing and abounding prosperity, there you have an instance of the result of the government approaching a public work with an overflowing pocket, there you can very clearly see the results when those who are doing the business of the country turn to their paymaster with a full knowledge that the government are in possession of an income largely in excess of what is required for the necessities of the country and that they have an overflowing treasury. The census of 1901 has cost $100,000 more than twice as much as the census of 1891.

Mr. TALBOT. It is twice as well done.

Mr. BELL. If it is twice as well done there must be a great many bulletins and volumes to be issued that we have not yet seen to justify this large expenditure. In my opinion it is not half as well done. If it is twice as well done it must be in the province of the hon. member who interrupted me (Mr. Talbot) where there is a great advance in population which will require further investigation. It will be found that throughout all these expenditures the cost of enumeration is doubled not only in one county but in every county. Whether the population has increased or not the cost of the census has doubled. It is evident that if the cost of enumeration is twice as much as the cost of the previous one, then the compilation has cost more than $100,000 more than twice as much as the cost of the compilation in 1891. It has not yet been completed and from what I have been able to learn it is not likely to be completed. The cost of the census gives an admirable instance of what results from the government administering the affairs of the country in such a manner as to have a large surplus. It shows that not only in one county, one office, or one division of the country but that in every county, every office and every division of the country the cost of administering the affairs of the country has increased enormously and that it has more than doubled. In reference to the civil government of this country which has to do with the ordinary every day administration of affairs the same result is to a certain extent true. The estimates of this year show that the cost of civil government has increased about $40,000. Increases are given everywhere and in addition to that we have just passed through this House Bills for the purpose of increasing the remuneration of different officers, and the cost of civil government, which, it has been estimated by a speaker on the government side of the House, will require a further expenditure by the government of $80,000, so that practically we will see an increase of $120,000 in the cost of civil government for this present year. The cost of civil government in 1902—3 was $1,365,244 and next year it will approach $1,500,000. The increase in the cost of civil government is not an exception. It merely indicates what is the rule. In the Immigration Department we have an increase of $150,000 with no corresponding increase of immigrants. There is a large immigration coming into the country from the west but it is not coming in as a result of this large expenditure. The large expenditure made by the government of the country has not brought into the country any immigration of a valuable character. In fact there is a large movement out of the country. Not only has the exodus not been stopped by any acts of the government or by immigration work but the fact of the matter is that the exodus from the eastern part of Canada, as well as the volume of settlers' effects going into the United States, is increasing. I will give a few of the increases in expenditure since the year 1896:

Service.	Increase.	Per Cent of Increase.
Interest on the debt ..	$ 473,005	5
Administration of justice	191,960	25
Civil government	100,741	7
Miscellaneous and contingencies	973,757	566
Public works (capital).	2,921,948	225
Inspection of staples ..	10,933	420
Immigration..	374,643	311
Quarantine..	169,491	178
Ocean and river service.	314,739	174
Public works (revenue).	339,053	213

These are a few instances of what is the rule as may be found by reference to the columns showing the expenditure in the public accounts. The rule is that the expenditure of every department has increased excepting one, and that is the expenditure in reference to the census. The census column shows no increase whatever because the census figures have not been placed under the heading of census. They are mixed up with other items under the heading of Arts, Agriculture and Statistics. This is one of the particular cases in which the most glaring manifestation of extravagance is afforded and yet there is nothing to be seen in the public accounts at all relating to that expenditure. An enormous increase will be noticed in the item of miscellaneous which is a very comprehensive subject and a very convenient heading under which to include many items which it is not desirable should be too specifically treated in the accounts.

It is very natural to inquire as to how these immense increases have come about. We find the government guilty of some of the most amazing expenditures. We find a wharf at Grand Vallee, in the province of Quebec, which cost $50,000, built for a private individual and not for the public service—a present of $50,000 given to one man. Naturally a government with a surplus of $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 is not going to be too severe on a good supporter, and twenty good supporters at $50,000 each would only cost $1,000,000. We had another amazing expenditure of $50,000 for plugging a hole in the Yukon; for undoing work that never should have been done. In Ontario we have seen a wharf costing $10,000, built where there is no population, and where there is no necessity for a wharf. This government, with an overflowing treasury, cannot be too hard on men who approach them with a pull or with influence. We have evidence on the St. Lawrence canal works to show that, apparently, expenditures are going on of their own accord and beyond the control of the government. We see contracts carried on by the owners of a dredge at their own sweet will, and apparently the government could not stop it. There is lots of money in the treasury, and when contractors have a dredge, why should they not put it to work and present their bills to the government and collect the accounts. Hon. gentlemen who have watched the estimates this year know of many such cases as I have enumerated. Nine years ago these gentlemen on the treasury benches, when they sat in opposition, contended that an annual expenditure of $38,000,000 was $2,000,000 too much, and that an expenditure of $36,000,000 a year was an ample expenditure for the public services of Canada. But nine years afterwards they are in power and their main estimates for the financial year 1902-3 amounted to $59,061,934.90, and their supplementary estimates for the same financial year amounted to $5,390,968.27, or in all, for the year ending the 30th June last, this House voted $64,425,903. These gentlemen opposite advocated an expenditure of $36,000,000 nine years ago, and while they still seem wedded to the figures '3' and '6,' it unfortunately happens that they have reversed the order of these figures, and they have deliberately expended over $63,000,000. In the main estimates for the current year, we voted $57,109,974.35. These main estimates, when they were submitted, indicated an evidence of economy, as they were less than the main estimates of the previous year, but that was only the first chapter of the story, because later on during this session, we were presented with supplementary estimates amounting to $10,590,863.12, and just a few weeks ago we had a batch of further supplementary estimates amounting to $771,365.55. In the supplementary estimates there was an addition of 20 per cent to the expenditure in the main estimates. We, therefore, have estimates for the current year amounting to the enormous sum of $68,472,203.02. This year we voted 9·1 per cent to supply the deficit on the estimates of the previous year, and if next year we are called upon to vote the same proportion of 9·1 per cent to be added to the total estimates we have voted this year, then the total amount of the estimates for this year, 1903-4, will have amounted to $74,703,173.49.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). What will it be in five years ?

Mr. BELL. Five years hence a better, and a wiser, and a more economic government will be in power, and the expenditure will be reduced. Evidently the Minister of Finance has been unable to keep a check upon the treasury as effectively as he could have wished. In his budget speech, delivered last April, he estimated the expenditure for the coming financial year at $61,650,000. He apparently did not do justice to his government or to the appetite of his supporters, because the expenditure for the year has reached almost $64,000,000, an increase of nearly $3,000,000 over the estimate by the Minister of Finance in April last.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where does my hon. friend get these figures ?

Mr. BELL. From the budget speech.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, but the hon. gentleman is saying that the actual expenditure is $64,000,000.

Mr. BELL. I have added the regular estimates of last year and the supplementaries for the last year which have been passed this session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no need of taking estimates when the actual figures of the outlay have been given in the House.

Mr. BELL. Would the Minister of Finance be kind enough to give the exact expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is $62,074,000, which includes everything.

Mr. HENDERSON. When were those figures laid before the House ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some time ago; I do not know the exact date.

Mr. BELL. I was not able to find these figures anywhere. In that case, the Minister of Finance has exceeded, by about $424,000, the estimate made by him in April last.

Mr. MONET. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) estimated that the expenditure was $68,472,000.

Mr. BELL. No, I said it was $64,000,000. But when we consider the expenditures we are going to make next year, or that we have become liable for, then the situation becomes startling. Although the figures this year are enormously large, they are small in comparison with the possibilities of the expenditure which the government has provided for in the future. For instance, in the last week of this session, we have voted $13,500,000 for railway subsidies, and we are asked to vote nearly $7,000,000 for the Quebec bridge. $20,500,000 are voted in the last days of the session. Of course, it may be argued that all this money will not be spent in the course of the year, and that we will not be called upon to pay the whole of it, but it is added to our liabilities, and there is the possibility that we may be called upon to pay it. I have prepared a table to show the liabilities of this country as assumed by parliament this session, including the estimates, subsidies, proposed expenditures for railway construction, and guarantees, I find that we have voted :—

Supplementary Estimates, 1903	$ 300,000 00
Estimates, 1903....	5,090,968 27
Estimates, 1903-4....	54,109,974 35
Supplementary Estimates, 1903-4..	10,590,865 12
Supplementary Estimates, 1903-4..	771,365 55
	$70,863,173 29
Railway subsidies....	$13,300,000
Iron bounties....	1,248,359
Lead bounties....	300,000
Grand Trunk Pacific....	120,000,000
Guarantee G. T. Pacific....	31,000,000
Guarantee Canadian Northern bonds.	9,360,000
Guarantee Quebec bridge bonds....	6,900,000
Guarantee Civil Service increases..	80,000
	$253,051,532

We have voted railway subsidies amounting to $13,000,000.

For iron bounties we have a liability accruing, which if equal to what it was last year, will be $1,248,359.

We have for lead bounties a liability of $300,000.

We have for Grand Trunk construction, taking what I consider to be a perfectly conservative estimate, a liability of $120,000,000.

Then we guarantee the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, $31,000,000, assuming that the prairie section is 1,000 miles in length and the mountain section 600 miles in length.

We have guaranteed the Canadian Northern bonds to the amount of $9,360,000.

We will be asked in the course of the next few hours to guarantee for the Quebec bridge $6,900,000.

We have voted civil service increases which are estimated to cost the country $80,000 and the total sum of money voted, or for which the country is made liable in the course of the present year, reaches the enormous total of $253,051,532.

Then in addition to that there are several unconsidered trifles, there are a further increase to the iron and steel bounties, a bounty on binder twine, &c., all of which when put together may be expected to bring up the total liabilities to $253,100,000.

That seems to be a record which is not likely to be surpassed even by the present government for some time to come, no matter what opportunities they may have to spend money.

Mr. BELCOURT. Does my hon. friend object to the expenditure caused by the increase to the salaries of the civil servants which were recently passed ?

Mr. BELL. I suppose that as an opposition we are here to criticise and examine the expenditure of the government and while we are not indisposed to see the civil service increases made it is perfectly legitimate for us when we are examining the liabilities and obligations of the country to include this expenditure. I have no objection to making reasonable increases in the salaries of the civil servants.

Mr. BELCOURT. You do not object to it now ?

Mr. BELL. I am not objecting to it ; I am giving the results of the benevolence of the government. The government has a tremendous capacity for spending money and they justify that expenditure to the country always with the same story : Everything is prosperous, Canada has never been so prosperous as since we have been in power. 'Post hoc, ergo propter hoc' is not a very sound argument, but apparently it is thought by the government to be good enough for their purpose. But, after all, a very little examination will show that the surpluses of which they are boasting are partly derived by adopting a financial system different from that which existed when they came into power. For instance, under the preceding government and under this one up to a certain point, the iron bounties which we give in lieu of increased protection were paid out of current revenue; they are now paid out of capital account and the consequence is that every dollar paid out in iron bounties is a direct addition to the surplus of the year. Last year this country paid $1,242,218 for iron bounties and if this amount had been paid under the system of financing adopted by the late government the surplus would be less by $1,242,218. I presume that the increased bounties on iron and lead and binder twine and all expenditures of a similar character will be paid—in the case of the iron bounties they will certainly be paid—in the same way. Consequently you cannot fairly compare the surpluses of this government with those of the government that preceded it. The policy of the government is to keep taxation at the highest point at which the people will bear it, and to charge up to capital account every part of the ordinary expenditure of the country they possibly can. They have done that in the case of the iron bounties and in the case of a great deal of the expenditure on railways. It is undoubtedly a fair criticism of the administration that a large expenditure, aggregating nearly $1,000,000, upon the Intercolonial from year to year, which ought to be charged to revenue is charged to capital account. The government keeps up their surplus by maintaining taxation at a very high point and charging to capital account every dollar they can justify themselves in charging to capital account and a great many dollars which they cannot justify to any sound financier. In this way they make the surpluses appear much larger than they really are. The probability is that sound financing would reduce the surplus of the present government by nearly $3,000,000, and if you take off in addition to that the large increase in taxation which has been put on the necessaries of life, sugar, tobacco, and spirits, the surplus would be reduced by $1,500,000 more. Thus their boasted surpluses are not as large as they appear. A favourite argument of this government in defending itself from charges by the opposition in the House or the country is to assert that the members of the opposition have not challenged or divided the House upon the items in the estimates.

Mr. MONET. Hear, hear.

Mr. BELL. My hon. friend says hear, hear; he apparently concurs in that view. I am surprised to hear him say that in the House of Commons; if he was speaking on the stump in some of the more remote hamlets in his constituency it might be effective.

Mr. MONET. It was.

Mr. BELL. In this House where everyone is familiar with the manner in which the government is carried on, it is known that the opposition would keep parliament in session for ever by challenging every item; it is the business of the opposition to criticise and to let the government make the expenditure.

Mr. McCREARY. Why did my hon. friend not object to these very large sums which were voted in Nova Scotia last week for wharfs, railway subsidies, &c. He took all he could get.

Mr. GOURLEY. There were only $300,000.

Mr. BELL. What would be the result if we had to challenge every one of those items.

Mr. McCREARY. Perhaps some of the members on this side would have voted with you.

Mr. BELL. I have seen propositions submitted by gentlemen on this side of the House which were much more likely to induce support from hon. gentlemen opposite, yet, they received absolutely no support.

Mr. McCREARY. There was one subsidy challenged and only one member of the opposition voted with the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) against it.

Mr. BELL. Such criticism is perfectly idle. It is not possible for an opposition to call for a vote on every item. These items are submitted by the government, which has a majority at its back or it would not be in office, and that majority is bound to put every item through.

Mr. MONET. Would not some hon. gentleman opposite have voted with the government, and is not that the reason the vote is not challenged?

Mr. BELL. No, that is not the reason. There are many items in the estimates which could be challenged but it would be perfectly vain to challenge them. At all times it has been the practice of the opposition to criticise the items and allow them to pass. To challenge item by item would simply mean division after division and the result would be the same. No more idle and foolish criticism can be addressed to an opposition than to attack them because they do not challenge all the items. There may be from time to time some items which are challenged. But the usual course for the opposition is to criticise and leave the government to assume the responsibility. In this way I have reviewed all the evils of the government system—its exorbitant taxation and expenditure and its failure to implement the pledges it gave in opposition. So many members of the cabinet to-day were leaders of the late opposition that it is impossible for them to evade the responsibility for the pledges given by the Liberal party at that time. They made the most positive pledge to reduce the taxation and the debt and the expenditure. They have absolutely failed to keep any one of these promises. Instead they have gone to an enormous length in the very opposite direction, to such a length that apparently their great object is to emphasize their own disapproval of the opinions they expressed in the past. These very gentlemen who appeal to the people on the ground that they were economists, who would reduce taxation and expenditure and our national debt, now that they are in office, evidently have changed their opinions and are appealing to the same people to keep them in power because they have out-Heroded Herod in everything in the shape of increased taxation and expenditure and general extravagance. I maintain that it is not the duty of the opposition to challenge every item or even very many items of the expenditure. Such a course would hopelessly delay parliamentary business, with no satisfactory result. But I think it is imperative that we should from time to time, remind these hon. gentlemen of their utterances while in opposition, recall to the attention of the people the statements they made, and point out how far they have departed from those sound principles of government and finance which they laid down when out of office. Everybody must admit that economy is a good thing, that we should keep taxation at the lowest possible point, and that any taxation which takes a dollar more from the people than is required for the administration of public affairs is diverting money from a profitable to an unprofitable channel. Such a policy encourages extravagance, it increases the burdens of the country, and launches the country on a course of wild expenditure, from which it is exceedingly difficult to turn back. Therefore, I would move :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :—

The total expenditure during each fiscal year from 1891 to 1902, both inclusive, was as follows :—

1891	$40,793,208
1892	42,272,136
1893	40,353,728
1894	43,008,834
1895	42,872,338
1896	41,702,383
1897	42,972,756
1898	45,334,281
1899	51,542,635
1900	52,717,467
1901	57,982,866
1902	63,970,600

That the Finance Minister estimated that the expenditure for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, would be $61,650,000.

That the regular estimates and the supplementary estimates voted for the year ending June 30, 1903, amounted to $64,452,903.17.

That on this estimate of the Finance Minister the annual expenditure on both consolidated fund and capital account has increased between 1897 and 1903 by a sum of $18,677,244 or on basis of estimates voted by a sum of $21,480,147.

That during the period above named the revenues of the country have been unusually large, and yet the public debt has not been kept at the point where it stood in 1897, but at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, showed an increase of $13,331,651.85.

That the sums voted at the present session of parliament amount to $73,863,171.29 of which $68,472,203.02 are for the current year.

That in addition to the sums so voted large increases of the public expenditure have been made which are authorized by statute to be paid out of consolidated fund. Among these are railway subsidies over thirteen million dollars.

That this House desires to place on record the opinion that the expenditure for the year 1903 and the proposed expenditure for the year 1904 are excessive and extravagant, and that it views with alarm the course of the government towards ever-increasing expenditure, its failure to reduce the public debt by maintaining a high rate of taxation, and its adding to capital expenditure and to the obligations of the country enormous sums for which the country cannot receive adequate returns.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Whatever difficulties we may have with respect to economy in other matters, I think we have reached the stage in the business of the session when we can all agree that economy of speech is desirable. Therefore though my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) has covered a very considerable ground—I will not say at much length—and has referred to many questions which would tempt one to occupy time, I shall deem it necessary to condense my remarks as much as possible, and, for that reason, to deal only with what I regard as the chief points. I think my hon. friend labours under a great difficulty, which is common to all hon. gentlemen on that side. These hon. gentlemen seem to be utterly unable to appreciate the changes which have come over this country since the days of 1896 with which they make comparisons. Perhaps it is not unnatural that they should experience that difficulty. When we recall the predictions they made as to the dreadful things that would happen to this country if a Liberal government should come into power, and when we recall what has happened since that day ; when we contrast the reality with the predictions of my hon. friends : when we realize that the public appreciate the great change that has taken place, perhaps we should allow hon. gentlemen the privilege of still shutting their eyes to the great facts which are apparent to the public at large. I would like to say to my hon. friend that the speech he has made and the resolution he has moved would be alarming, if we had not had a number of such speeches and a number of such resolutions in previous years towards the close of the several sessions under Liberal rule. I remember that in the first session in which the Liberal government took charge of affairs, in 1896, the distinguished gentleman who then occupied the position of the leader of the opposition, in a very eloquent and vigorous address declared that it was a moral certainty that the government would come out at the end of the fiscal year with a most disastrous showing, that they would have a deficiency of some $3,000,000. At the end of the year the deficiency proved to be a very modest one—some five hundred odd thousand dollars if my memory serves me well. And every session since that time, we have had one of these alarmist speeches, and one of these alarmist resolutions, in which all the moneys we have voted have been rolled up into one great sum with a view to persuading the people that, under the financial legislation of the session, nothing but disaster could come upon this afflicted country. But somehow or other, when the end of the year has been reached and the accounts have been made up, the people have discovered that the finances of the country have prospered, that these dreadful things have not happened, that the world has moved on in a very nice and comfortable way, and that Canada, instead of being obliged to face deficits, as in the past has enjoyed an era of very comfortable surpluses. And so, I venture to say the citizens of Canada, reminded as they will be of these dreadful speeches and dreadful anticipations of former times, will understand that the speech made and the resolution moved to-night by my hon. friend from Pictou is only another one of these alarms which they are not justified in taking too seriously. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been crying out these alarms year after year and session after session, so they must not be surprised if the people no longer take much stock in them.

I do not attempt to deny the apparent fact that the expenditure of this country has grown very largely since 1896. But it has grown for good and proper purposes. Instead of apologizing for that expenditure, we are proud to refer to it, because that expenditure, we believe, has been one of the instrumentalities which have brought about the growth and the progress of the country since 1896. The growth and progress and prosperity of Canada for the last few years, undoubtedly, have come from the industry, intelligence, energy and thrift of the people. But all these qualities would have been vain if they had not beeen assisted by wise legislation; and we believe that this government and this Liberal party, by their financial legislation as well as by other measures, by the liberality and wisdom of their public expenditure, have been doing much to help the people to produce the splendid results which the records of the country place before them.

We have spent more money. Let me take a few of the principal classes of our expenditures as compared with 1896. We spent last year $846,345 more on militia than was spent in 1896. Is there any hon. gentleman opposite who objects to that expenditure? Do not we know that, far from opposing the militia expenditure, there has been a tendency on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to demand larger expenditures on this service? Do not we know that, again and again suggestions have been made by these hon. gentlemen with regard to the militia of the country which would involve us in very large expenditures? So, I may fairly ask my hon. friends opposite to agree with me that, in that great item where we have spent almost $1,000,000 more than in 1896, there is no room for criticism. We expended in 1903 on public works about $2,750,000 more than was spent in 1896. Sir, these expenditures have covered the whole face of the Dominion, and they have been wise and useful expenditures. It would be foolish for any of us to claim that, in the expenditure of so much money from ocean to ocean, employing a vast army of officials and servants, every man engaged has been absolutely faithful to a cent; it would be foolish to say that in no case had a mistake been made; it would be foolish to say of the men employed in public affairs, any more than of men employed in private affairs, that all are perfect. But, take it all in all, I do not hesitate to say in the light of all the inquiries that have been made, that these expenditures on public works have been wise and useful expenditures, and have been instrumental in helping on the progress and prosperity of the country. We spent on the lighthouse and ocean service of Canada $498,000 in 1903 more than was spent in 1896. Shall we apologize for that expenditure before the people of Canada today? No. Are we not a great maritime country? Have we not our great waterway, the St. Lawrence, which must be improved with buoys, lights and all the various aids to navigation? Have we not our coast line in Quebec and the maritime provinces, as well as in British Columbia, where we must have lighthouses and all the other improvements which protect the mariner? We have been expending money for these services; and, far from regretting it, far from apologizing for it, we say that in face of criticism such as hon. gentlemen have offered tonight that we are prepared to provide the money and do the work, and let the world know that our national highway is a highway of safety for the commerce of nations. We spent $100,000 more on the fishery service in 1903 than we spent in 1896. Shall we apologize for that? Is there a man in this House who does not recognize the importance of the great fishing industry of this country? Is there one who does not recognize the obligation resting upon us to nourish and encourage and protect that industry? We have spent more money, and, no doubt, as the days roll on, the minister in charge of that great department will find it necessary to spend still more; and, if he is able to spend it with the same justification as can be given for the expenditure in the past, we shall not need to apologize before the people of Canada for that use of their money. We spent on the service of immigration in 1903, $526,000 more than was expended in the year 1896. Shall we, in the face of what we have seen in the west, apologize before this House for that increased expenditure? The little that hon. gentlemen opposite spent in 1896 accomplished nothing. Every dollar that has been expended in the immigration service of this country under the present administration has brought a rich harvest for the present and will bring a richer harvest for the future of Canada.

My hon. friend from Pictou says that in that respect there is an exodus from the lower provinces. We have discussed that question before, and I say to my hon. friend that there is, there has been for a great many years, and I imagine there always will be, some movement of population from those provinces. They are an adventurous people who live by the seaside, their tendency is to go abroad, and I do not expect the time will ever arrive when that movement will not be found to some extent. But I do take the responsibility of saying to-day that throughout the lower provinces there is a better condition in that respect than there has been at any other time during the last quarter of a century. I say there are fewer people leaving the maritime provinces, and I say that in most parts of the maritime provinces the question to-day is not one of an exodus, the question is to find men to labour on the works which are opening up all over these provinces.

We have spent $565,000 more in connection with our sinking fund. That is a mere matter of book-keeping, it adds nothing to the burden of the country, it is an assistance to the redemption of the public debt, and whether it be large or small, it is practically a provision for redemption, and our obligations are not in any sense increased. We have spent more money on the administration of justice—my hon. friend called attention to that. I have not the figures he used, but it is a curious thing for my hon. friend to select that as the subject of complaint, when we have in our mind the fact that only a few days ago, when there was a discussion in this House with regard to the salary of judges, almost without exception every hon. gentleman who rose on the other side asked that the salaries of the judges be increased. What is the use of the hon. gentleman standing up and denouncing an expenditure when he knows that the general feeling of the men around him is rather in favour of increasing that expenditure than of reducing it ?

We spent last year on the item of the customs service, $332,000 more than in 1896. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite will go throughout the country and will point to the fact that under the administration of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs the expenditure has increased to that extent ; but they will forget to mention the fact that by means of that increased expenditure of $332,000, he is able to show an increase in the revenue of $17,170,000. There was an increase in the expenditure in connection with excise of a little more than $8,000 last year, as compared with 1896 ; but that slightly increased expenditure was incurred in the machinery for collecting a revenue which increased to the extent of $4,087,000. We spent last year on expenditure chargeable to the consolidated fund on account of the post office, $440,000 more than in 1896 ; but on the other side of the account, which hon. gentlemen are careful not to mention, the revenue was increased by $1,443,000. We increased the working expenses of the Intercolonial—practically they were doubled—we increased them about $3,184,000, but every dollar of that increased expenditure in the working of the Intercolonial, apart from the capital account, came back to us in something more than a dollar in the increased revenue which came from the road.

My hon. friend, in presenting his bill of alarm, magnified the figures of the railway subsidies as much as he could, and he made, not for the first time this session, the statement that these subsidies have been brought down at the end of the session when there is not time to consider them. I have taken the trouble to look into the record of the former government on that question, and I find that beginning with the year 1885, there never was a single occasion in the history of the Conservative government when these railway subsidies were brought down as early as they have been in the present session. These subsidies were placed on the notice paper of the House of Commons on October 6. I suppose, if things move prosperously, we may look forward to what the Prime Minister sometimes describes as the blessings of prorogation, at the end of the present week. Assuming that we shall close on Saturday next, though I hope it will be Friday, I want to point out that there will then be eighteen clear days from the time these subsidies were brought down until it is contemplated parliament will prorogue. Compare that with what happened in the days of the Conservative administration. I find that in 1894 they brought their railway subsidies down five days before the session closed ; in 1893, five days before the session closed ; in 1890, four days before the session closed ; in 1887, three days before the session closed ; and in the whole record of all these years, the longest period that they ever allowed for the consideration of the railway subsidies—and that was in one year only—was a period of twelve days. So I am able to say to my hon. friends that they have no cause of complaint with regard to the manner in which these subsidies have been brought before the House. This has been a busy session. It is not the business of the government to load down the Order Paper with a vast amount of business that cannot be digested by the House ; it is the business of the government to keep the House supplied fully with leading and important measures, and there never has been a session of parliament in which that duty has been better performed than it has been by this government during the present session.

My hon. friend deals with these railway subsidies as if they were to be expended all in one year. He does not say that, but the manner in which his speech is framed and his resolutions are framed, will convey the impression, I am afraid, as it has in the past, that the sums mentioned will all be expended in one year. Now my hon. friend knows and will admit that that would be a very erroneous impression.

Mr. BELL. I think I stated that these would not be all expended in one year. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not notice that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then the question arises, why they should be included in dealing with the expenditure for one year, for my hon. friend realizes that these subsidies in some cases will never be expended at all. The experience of the past is that some companies which come forward and induce the government to grant these subsidies, come forward in good faith, find that they cannot finance the undertaking. In some cases it has happened in the past, that the amounts have not been paid at all. That will no doubt happen in some cases in the present instance; but even in cases where these railways are undertaken it will take several years to construct them, and this vast sum of money which my hon friend includes in his bill to frighten the citizens of Canada, will, so far as it becomes payable at all, cover a number of years. In answer to a question put in the House a few days ago, I was able to state that in the term of ten years the subsidies granted to the various lines of railway, approximated—because as respects some of them, you cannot fix the exact amount to $27,000,000; yet the actual figures of expenditures show that during those ten years the payments for subsidies only amounted to $15,000,000. So if we follow the experience of the past and strike a fair average, what we shall probably have to pay, taking one year with another, will be about $1,500,000 each year in railway subsidies. That will not be an excessive sum when we consider the splendid territory it will develop, and the disposition that is manifest now from ocean to ocean to take up new enterprises with more courage and more hope than ever existed in former years.

But, Sir, I observe that my hon. friend, while contenting himself with these general denunciations, does not attempt to indicate any particular item, either in the railway subsidies or in any other portion of our public expenditure, with which he can find fault. I should perhaps make an exception, because he has mentioned one or two items—I do not remember the exact figures, I suppose altogether $15,000 or $20,000 for two public works. But at whatever sum my hon. friend may place them, where does he find himself then? We have appropriations which run up to, I think he said, $200,000,000 or more. My hon. friend has the figure, but, whatever it is, he has not ventured to move to strike out any of those items, but he stands up and denounces them generally. I think he said it is $200,000,000 or more.

Mr. BELL. More than that.

The FINANCE MINISTER. But, whatever it is, he has not ventured to move to strike out any of these items, but he stands up and denounces them all generally. He may say that as respects the transcontinental railway he did record his vote against it, but he did so at the same time that his leader brought forward another scheme that everybody knows was more expensive than the one that we proposed. If my hon. friend goes back to the grand old county of Pictou, talks as he has talked to-night and denounces these railway subsidies, one can imagine an old Scotchman standing up and saying: My friend, did you vote against them? No. Why didn't you? You moved a resolution that this expenditure was extravagant, that the country was alarmed—why did you not record your vote? My hon. friend will probably say: I could not very well do that, because some of these subsidies were going down into my own county. That would be all right, if my hon. friend would only take a broad-minded view of the matter. He knows that these subsidies are voted for his own county for useful and necessary works. In the vast territory which we have in Canada, no one man or set of men can have a knowledge of affairs from ocean to ocean which will enable them to judge of the requirements in the different provinces of Canada. But every section of this Dominion is represented in this House, and each group of members has its own local knowledge of its own province, so that it is possible for hon. gentlemen opposite to obtain a general idea of the wisdom or unwisdom of these expenditures. I feel quite sure, from what I know of the hon. member for Pictou, that if he thought that these expenditures were unwise, alarming, rash and extravagant, as he says in his resolution, he would not be content with vague denunication, but he would move to strike the objectionable items out. True, my hon. friend asks: What is the good of doing that since we will vote vote against it? Yet that does not prevent my hon. friend from moving this resolution that we are probably going to vote against it. We have this vain, indefinite, academic resolution, which means nothing and leads to nothing. Unless my hon. friend is prepared to move a practical resolution, which would strike out a railway appropriation, or the appropriation for some great public work, I am afraid that the House and the country will not attach very much importance to the resolution which he has moved. I am quite sure that the astute, intelligent people of Canada, not only in his province, but in all the other provinces, will say that when hon. gentlemen opposite take that ground they cannot be very serious in their denunciations of this lavish expenditure. But, Sir, if economy is desirable, and if it is not to be obtained from this government, where are the afflicted people of Canada to obtain it? From hon. gentlemen opposite? The wildest dream of the most unreasonable person in this Dominion would never expect a policy of economy from a Conservative government. From time immemorial they have declared for economy, but they have not practiced it and they do not even practice it now. Hon. gentlemen opposite know that I am calling their attention to a simple truth when I say that in nine cases out of ten when they rise to discuss some public expenditure, it is for the purpose of asking that the government do something on a more liberal scale than we have been doing in the past. We ask them, as we have done in the past, to point out anything that is wasteful or extravagant. They cannot do it. Usually the Public Accounts Committee is the body that investigates these things. I venture to say that never in the history of this Dominion was there such a farce as the meetings of the Public Accounts Committee during the present session. We could not get the hon. gentlemen to attend. They used to come and introduce a motion that somebody be summoned, they would give notice that they intended to move to inquire into something, but when the time came for them to make the motion, they would not be there, or they had not called the witness, or something else would happen, and really the thing became laughable in the end. The Public Accounts Committee adjourned, and there was practically no inquiry into the public accounts of the past year. Why ? Not because hon. gentlemen opposite were not able, not because they were too generous to avoid an inquiry in the expenditures of the government, but simply and solely because they found there was no ground for attacking the expenditures of the government. I have said that if economy is not to be expected on our side there is very little prospect of it from hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know a case in which hon. gentlemen opposite have advocated economy. We brought down what we thought to be a wise proposal in reference to a great transcontinental railway. Hon. gentlemen opposite were not content to simply negative that, but they had to bring forward a policy of their own, which certainly could not have the merit of being more economical than the one the government proposed. We have a provision on the statute-book authorizing us to spend $750,000 for a fast Atlantic line, and we have been looking for somebody to do the work for this appropriation. Hon. gentlemen opposite stand up and move a resolution scoffing at the idea of our being able to get a fast Atlantic service for $750,000 a year, and telling us that we must get a fast line, cost what it will. Then, in order to make the thing if possible a trifle more ridiculous than that, about three-quarters of the hon. gentlemen opposite have been complaining of this government because we have not sent our good friend Captain Bernier to hunt up the north pole.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is where you made a mistake.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a good consistent old Conservative. He is going to vote for this resolution declaring that the expenditures are alarming, and he is going to ask the government to spend a couple of hundred thousand dollars to send Captain Bernier to the north pole. Let him go through the record of the public service, and he will find that a suggestion of economy never comes from the side of hon. gentlemen opposite. Again and again we have heard complaints made that this government is not dealing with sufficient liberality. The words of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) are still ringing in our ears. My hon. friend from Pictou denounces as extravagant the railway subsidies which we brought down, and which we thought were fair and moderate. But the hon. member for Colchester made the declaration that they were paltry subsidies, and that if we had any respect for ourselves and for the country we would have brought down larger and more generous subsidies. My hon. friend simply expresses the general view of hon. gentlemen opposite. They move resolutions for economy, but they are vastly more extravagant than any hon. members who sit on this side of the House.

Let us look a little at the expenditures of the past. My hon. friend from Pictou has called attention to a fact, which we all know, that the expenditures during the years prior to 1896 were much lower than they are now. Therefore, he assumes, because the expenditures were lower than they are now that theirs is a policy of economy and that ours is a policy of extravagance. Well, I do not think that is good logic. I think it is quite possible that a small sum might be spent in such a way as to constitute extravagance and that a large sum may be so spent as to constitute wise economy. It depends on whether you have the money to expend. That is a very vital matter. In the years 1894-5-6, when the economical government that my hon. friend is so anxious to praise were in power, although they spent less money than we did, they spent more money than they had to spend, and they added to the public debt. In 1894 they spent 103 per cent of their revenues. I am confining myself to what is called consolidated revenue fund. In 1895 they spent 112 per cent, or 12 per cent more than they had to spend, and in 1896 they spent a little more than 100 per cent—about 101 per cent. My hon. friend thinks that is economy. The fact is that, though we spent a great deal more money, we have the excuse that we had the money to spend. In 1897 we spent 101 per cent. That was the year during which the Liberal government did not have full control over the finances of the country. They came into power after the fiscal year had begun. They had to deal with the estimates prepared by their predecessors, and they did not have that full grasp of the finances of the country which they were able to obtain in later years, so that their expenditure for that year was a little more than their income. But in the following year, when the Liberals began to get their hands on the helm, we find that in the year 1898 this government spent only 95 per cent of its revenue ; in the year 1899 this government spent only 89 per cent of its revenue ; in the year 1900 this government spent only 84 per cent of its revenue ; in the year 1901 this government spent 89 per cent of its revenue ; in the year 1902 this government spent 87 per cent of its revenue; and in the year 1903, which has just closed, we spent 78 per cent of our revenue, as against the 101 per cent that the Conservative party spent in 1896. And yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) would have the country believe that, compared with the expenditure in 1896, our expenditure for the year 1903 was extravagant.

There is another way of viewing this matter. Let us take the public debt. After all these resolutions year after year from the opposition, as to the enormous obligations we are assuming and the enormous additions we are making to the public debt; the country would be prepared I suppose for a moderate increase per capita in the public debt. If I had to acknowledge that we had added two or three dollars per head to the debt of the people of Canada, it would not be anything that one need be ashamed of in view of the tremendous improvements which have been carried on during the past few years. But what are the facts? In the year 1896 the net public debt stood at $50.96 per head; in the year 1902 under a Liberal government, the net debt had fallen to $49.97, and in the year 1903, just closed, the public debt had fallen to $47.37 per head. Now, part of this decrease in 1903 is due to the readjustment of the accounts between the provinces and the Dominion, and therefore I do not take credit for it all; but if you make allowance for that you will find that even deducting that, the net public debt of the Dominion stands to-day $47.97 per head as against $50.96 per head in the year 1896. That statement will surprise some of my hon. friends; it will surprise many people in this country who in consequence of such speeches as we have heard to-night, in consequence of such resolutions as the one now before the House, have been led into the impression that there is an enormous increase in the public debt of Canada.

I am glad to be able to say that as respects the year just closed, we have the most gratifying condition of affairs that it has ever fallen to the lot of a Finance Minister to announce. I have given the figures for the past year already, but I may be pardoned for giving them again. The revenue for the year 1903, ending June 30th last, was $66,034,108.32; the expenditure of the ordinary character chargeable to the consolidated fund, was $51,707,172.89 showing a surplus of $14,326,935.43.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I repeat that the expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund, what is called the ordinary expenditure was $51,707,172.89; the charges to capital account, including all things charged to capital, were $10,367,163.01, making the total expenditure for the year $62,074,335.90. Now, in connection with this surplus, my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) had something to say about our charging bounties to capital account, and he told us that in former times these bounties were charged to income. The fact is that in former times they were charged in such a mysterious way, that it was very hard to find them at all. They took the very curious form of a refund of duties. One would think that the common sense view is that a refund of duties is the paying back of money which has been paid, and how in the world the payment of a bounty which had never come into the treasury could properly be classified as a refund of duties, is one of these things which no fellow can understand. In former times, the Customs Department paid out of its receipts these bounties and thus reduced the customs revenue to that extent, which was a very curious method of bookkeeping.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it not after all paid out of consolidated fund, while the hon. gentleman charges it to capital?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes; it reduced the customs duties to that extent. That system continued because attention was not especially drawn to it, until the rearrangement of the Bounty Act, when we saw that we were going to pay very large sums in bounties. The sums that were paid by the late government for iron and steel bounties, in proportion to the gross business of the country, were not in reality large; they did not affect the question of revenue, or expenditure, or surplus in any large degree. When, under the new condition of things, we found that large sums, running into the millions, were going to be paid for these bounties, we came to the conclusion that the old method of dealing with them was a mistake. Every business man in the House will say now, that whether they were charged to income or capital, the method of deducting them from the customs duties and treating them as a refund of duties, was unbusiness-like and improper. But, inasmuch as the bounties were based upon a sliding scale, contemplating their extinction in a short time, it was deemed well to charge them to capital account. In every financial statement I have presented to this House, I have invariably called attention to that point so that there could be no misunderstanding. I want to say, and it is notably so in this case, that whether you charge that to income or to capital, it would not have affected the general result. It would not have affected it perceptibly last year, because the income which was collected last year was sufficient to pay, and did pay all the ordinary expenditure of the country chargeable to consolidated fund, all the expenditures for bounties, all the expenditures for railway subsidies, all the expenditures for railway construction, all the expenditures of every shape and form were paid for last year out of the revenue of the country, and there was a large reduction in the public debt besides.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a decrease of the public debt on the operations of last year of $6,580,360.88; there was a further decrease in connection with the readjustment of the provincial accounts—and I have purposely separated the two—amounting to $3,305,450.24; making a total decrease in the net public debt of Canada at the close of the year as compared with the previous year, of $9,885,811.12.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am glad to be able to say that the outlook for the business of the current year is in most respects entirely satisfactory. We do not want to rely too much on the future. I quite realize that the time may come when business may not be as brisk as it has been in the past, but for the present, the outlook is by no means discouraging. I am glad to be able to say that for the new fiscal year, from the first of July up to the twentieth of October (yesterday), the revenue for that period, as compared with the revenue of the corresponding period last year, shows a handsome increase of $2,620,000.

Mr. SPROULE. If my hon. friend's financial showing is so very good, why is it that he is unable to borrow money in London to-day at less than 4½ per cent, when we could borrow it a few years ago at 3 per cent ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government of Great Britain have paid, I am told, 4½ per cent for their money within the last month. My hon. friend is shutting his eyes to facts which the financial world understands, which the government of England understands and has to recognize. I have some difficulty in understanding the attitude of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) on the question of surpluses. For some years efforts have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite to prove that there were no surpluses, that they were a delusion, and indeed, before the hon. gentleman had concluded his speech, he got back to the old ground and began to argue that this surplus was not, after all, a real surplus. The bulk of his argument was that we have very large surpluses and we should not have them, that it is bad financing, and that we should reduce taxation. Will my hon. friend tell me on what articles he will reduce taxation ? The great policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is to increase taxation. Every motion that they have made on the fiscal policy has been in the direction of higher duties, and if called upon to reduce taxation they would find themselves in a difficult position to discover an article on which they are willing to have the duty reduced. Does the hon. gentleman want the duty on sugar reduced? I will not press the question.

Mr. BELL. I think, under the circumstances, with such a surplus as the government has, it would be quite warrantable to reduce the duty on articles of general consumption.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that my hon. friend, speaking in the name of the opposition, says that the duty should be reduced on sugar. But the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says the duty on sugar should be increased for the benefit of the beet sugar industry. Now, if hon. gentlemen opposite are protectionists, if they want to encourage home industry, if they want to help the beet sugar industry, why do they want to cut down the measure of protection which the beet sugar industry already enjoys ? The hon. member for East Grey, in a former debate, said that they did not want to increase the duty, but only to have a bounty, but since that we have had the declaration again and again by hon. gentlemen opposite that a bounty is not the right way to aid an industry, that the true and only way to aid a home industry is by increasing the customs duties. Thus, if my hon. friend from Pictou speaks in the name of the Conservative party when he advocates the reduction of the duty on sugar he will have a difficult account to settle with the constituents of some of my hon. friends who have sugar factories in their constituencies.

Mr. CLANCY. What is your attitude?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My attitude is disclosed in the budget speech and in the tariff as it stands. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) says we should not keep on these high taxes. Sir, this taxation is not so oppressively high. He falls into the error of assuming that because there is a great revenue there a great burden of taxation. The true way to look at that is that, so great has been the prosperity, so improved has been the purchasing power of the people, that they have been able to consume all the products of our industries and to import many millions' worth from abroad, and in that way the revenue from customs has been greatly increased. But the customs tariff of this country in regard to most of the great staples, in so far as there has been any change at all, has been reduced. That is what hon. gentlemen opposite complain of; they complain that we are reducing the duties, yet my hon. friend says we are increasing the taxation. At one moment we are told that we are cutting down the duties and destroying the industries of the country and the next moment we have my hon. friend declaring that we are keeping the duties at too high a point.

Then he said that we should not charge these great works which we are carrying on now to income; they should be charged to capital; that, he said, is the very purpose of a capital account; raise just enough money to pay ordinary expenditure, and charge the balance to capital account. That would be sound reasoning if you had a tariff which was a burden to the people; then if you raised money enough for ordinary expenditures and had to pay a great deal on capital account for great public works that course could be well justified. But why should you add to your capital account when it is not necessary? The complaint of hon. gentlemen opposite half the time is that we are adding to the capital account more than we should. Did not my hon. friend (Mr. Bell), even before he concluded his own speech, complain that we are adding and charging too much to our capital account? But, Sir, if you look at these figures you will find that the tariff and the taxation are not a burden. I will make the statement that the people of this country are not to-day complaining of undue taxation. I will state that, except perhaps on a few items the tariff is giving good satisfaction generally. The complaints we receive are not that the taxation is too high, but that the taxation is not high enough, and these complaints come from our friends opposite. Why should we go on charging things to capital account when we can provide for a large portion of them out of revenue under a tariff policy which is not burdensome? We can collect these large sums from year to year, and we have been able to provide for our ordinary expenditure and for a good portion of our capital account out of our income. We do not think we have charged anything to capital account which is not legitimate; but we were not prepared, in view of all that has been said for the last three or four sessions, for the sudden right about face which my hon. friend took to-night, when he spent fifteen minutes in condemning us because we did not charge more to capital account. What is the reason of our being able to charge these things to our income account? We have been able to avoid going into debt to a degree which would otherwise be necessary, and by avoiding going into debt we avoid also the increase of interest charges. My hon. friend made some references to the increased charges for the public debt. I have here a statement showing the outlook for the present year with regard to our interest on the public debt. I had prepared this statement in answer to a question put on the paper by my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), but I was not in the House to-day when questions were reached, and I shall take advantage of this opportunity to give the answer:

For the year 1902-3 we paid for interest on public debt	$11,068,139 17
And credited the province of Ontario for interest on trust funds pending settlement	167,288 14
Total	$11,235,427 31
When the main estimates for the present year, were prepared some months ago, before the adjustment of the provincial accounts, the probable sum required for interest was placed at	$11,133,407 52
A revised estimate to-day places it at	11,057,700 00
Showing a decrease as compared with last year's payments of	177,727 31
But in computing the actual interest we must take into account the increased sums on which interest will be received.
We will receive for interest on stock purchased for sinking funds during the year	105,000 00
For interest on new advances to the Montreal Harbour Commission	27,000 00
For interest on Debt accounts of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec now established—
Ontario	72,319 44
Quebec	58,944 38
	$ 263,263 82
Deducting this increased interest, which we will thus receive, from the amount of interest to be paid, the net result, approximately, will be a reduction of interest amounting to	$ 440,990 31

My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) laboured under the difficulty that he was unable to take into account the great changes that have come over this country since 1896.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman claims a saving from the adjustment of accounts between Ontario and the Dominion, but it is a mere book-keeping matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is an absolute sum placed to the credit of the Dominion. It is a readjustment of the provincial account, and it is so much money less to be paid by the Dominion. My hon. friend should take into account the great change which has come over this country since 1896. The Canada of that day was vastly different from the Canada of to-day. The population of the Canada of that day was 5,086,061. We have not the exact population of to-day, we have to take it approximately, but a proper approximate statement is 5,528,847. The increase in population is not so great as we would like, but in that respect we are making up for lost time, and the population is likely to increase much more rapidly than formerly. In 1896 we received 16,835 immigrants. In 1903 we received 128,364. In 1896 we had a revenue on consolidated fund of $36,618,590. In 1903 that revenue amounted to $66,034,108. In the year 1896, there were sales of public lands in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia, to the amount of $93,303. In 1903, the sale of these lands represented $313,960. The total imports in the year 1896 were $118,011,508. In 1903, under the great progress and prosperity of the country, at a time when our factories were busy and our people employed as never before in the history of the Dominion, the purchasing power of the people had so increased that they consumed more home produce and increased their imports from $118,011,508 to $241,214,961. The total exports in 1896 were $121,013,852, and in 1893 they amounted to $225,849,724. Our exports of home products, which perhaps is the better test of the prosperity and the activity of our people, amounted in 1896 to $109,915,337, and in 1903 they increased to $214,401,674. Our exports of products of the farm and animals and their products in 1896 amounted to $55,378,407, and in 1903 they were $114,441,863. Then take the article of manufacture, the very industry that hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to make themselves the special patrons of, which they claim the particular credit of nursing and nourishing. In 1896 our exports of manufactured products amounted to $10,222,877 and last year they amounted to $20,624,967. The total trade of this country, which in 1896 was only $239,025,360, increased last year to $467,064,685. But though my hon. friends opposite seem unable to open their eyes to this vast change, the people of this Dominion are not so blind. The great mass of the people see these things, not only by the evidence of statistics, but by the evidence of the hum of industry which prevails almost in all parts of the Dominion, and they know that in this changed condition a very liberal expenditure is necessary. I remember on one occasion when my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was on a tour through the province of Ontario, observing in one of the very beautiful villages which was decorated for the event, a streamer stretched across the main street showing these words: 'Wise expenditure is true economy.' There was philosophy in that. There is a misunderstanding in some quarters as to what this economy means. Parsimony is not economy. It was not economy in 1894-5 and 6 to spend more money than we had, and it is not extravagance to-day for this government to spend a great deal less money than they are collecting. There is a policy that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is a policy that withholdeth but tendeth to poverty.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I shall require to take only a few moments, Mr. Speaker, to prove that the hon. gentleman is giving us to-night an exhibition of the complete reversal of all the doctrines he preached in opposition. He tells us now that true economy consists in a large expenditure of money. Was that the doctrine of the Liberal party before 1896? Why, according to that party then, every dollar expended by the Conservative government of that day was wasted. The hon. gentleman opened his speech by telling us that certain predictions were made as to what would happen the country if the Liberal party came into power. Let me ask him if the Liberal party had carried out their policy, would these predictions not have come true? He knows that the only reasons these predictions were not fulfilled was because the government went back on their tariff policy. Not one of the pledges they made did they fulfil, and these hon. gentlemen, now, with their usual modesty, boast that they have not fulfilled them. The hon. gentleman has told us that liberal expenditure is true economy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Wise economy.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, I will accept the qualification which the hon. gentleman now makes. In 1896, when this government took office our expenditure was $44,334,000 and it now is $62,084,000. What is there to show in the country for that expenditure? What great public work has been constructed? What is there to show for this immense jump from $44,000,000 in 1896 to $62,000,000. I challenge the hon. gentleman to point to anything which stands out prominently as an asset to Canada for that large amount of money. He cannot do it. The money has been dribbled away in a wasteful manner in making works that are practically of no benefit to Canada.

I come now to the crucial point in the hon. gentleman's speech, the only strong point, it seems to me, the only other point requiring an answer. He stated and restated that the Conservatives had spent more than they had received, while the Liberals were justified in doing all they had, because they spent less than they received. Am I right in so interpreting the hon. gentleman's speech?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And I gave the figures for it.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, and I will give the hon. gentleman the figures now. The year 1898 was the first year when the hon. gentleman claimed a surplus. The receipts for that year were $40,556,510, and the expenditure was $45,334,281, or $4,777,771 more than the receipts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) knows that he is including the capital expenditure.

Mr. CLANCY. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Pictou complained that we were charging too much to capital. In my remarks I made a clear distinction, and where the expenditure was on consolidated fund account, I said so.

Mr. CLANCY. That makes no difference. I am giving the total receipts and total expenditure. Let us not deceive ourselves or the country. The figures I have given show that, in 1898, when the hon. gentleman claimed a surplus of $1,722,000 in round numbers, he had actually spent $4,777,771 more than he had received. I am taking the accounts as they are kept in England, in the United States—in fact in every civilized country except Canada. Now take the next year, in which the hon. gentleman said, he had spent only 95 per cent of the whole income. As a matter of fact, he had spent about four and three-quarter millions more than he had received. The income was $46,743,000, and the expenditure $51,542,000, or an excess of expenditure over receipts of $4,799,000. In 1900, the income of the Dominion of Canada was $51,031,000, and the expenditure $52,717,000, or an excess of expenditure over receipts of $1,186,000. Now in 1901 the receipts were $52,516,332, and the payments, $57,982,866, or an excess of expenditure of $5,466,000. Again, in 1902, the expenditure was $58,052,000 and the payments were $63,970,000—payments $5,918,000 more than the receipts. Yet the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) rises here and cooly and blandly tells the House and the country that during these years he spent less than he received. Does the hon. gentleman adhere to that statement ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman asks a question I have no hesitation in answering. I gave the figures with regard to the late government and the present government on precisely the same basis.

Mr. CLANCY. For the purpose of what I am now saying, it is not necessary to compare the present government with the former one. I am taking the hon. gentleman on his own statement with regard to the receipts and expenditures of the whole of Canada, and I tell him that in the year when he says he spent 95 per cent of the whole income, he spent four and three-quarter millions more than he received. The hon. gentleman cannot shelter himself behind the fact that he can take any sum he pleases and charge it up to capital account, and so declare a surplus of as many millions as he thinks will suit him. Will the hon. gentleman claim a surplus now for the period from 1897 to 1902 ? I am leaving out the last year, because I wish to deal with that separately. The hon. gentleman has claimed surpluses during that period to the amount of $27,971,000. To be perfectly fair, I am going to take the sinking fund that was applied on the public debt, although that was a statutory expenditure, and one made by former governments as well as by this one. If we take the six years before the present year, we find that the present government has paid about $14,000,000 to the sinking fund, while the former government paid something over $12,000,000. If we deduct the amount paid by this government on sinking fund, $14,459,000, during these years, from the total surpluses of the years, $27,791,000, there is still the sum of $13,331,000 to be accounted for. Now let me ask the hon. gentleman what has become of that surplus ? I think this would be a very proper time for him to account for it. On a former occasion I asked the hon. gentleman the same question, and now I ask him again. What has become of that money ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should ask me to explain a thing that is so easily understood. Each and every one of these surpluses was applied to the capital account, and so, to that amount, additions which otherwise would have been made to the debt were abolished.

Mr. CLANCY. Ah ! Now we have the solution. The hon. gentleman charged it up to capital account—that was a piece of book-keeping. But that did not prevent the increase of the public debt, so the hon. gentleman had no surplus at all. For the first time the hon. gentleman has made perfectly clear the fraud that has been perpetrated on the people in declaring these surpluses. Well, he has a surplus for the year 1903, not of $14,326,000, as he claimed, but of $4,949,770. His receipts for the year were $66,034,000, and his expenditure $62,084,000. These are the figures, yet the hon. gentleman declares that he has a surplus of $14,000,000. Will not the little boys in the schools laugh?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think they will.

Mr. CLANCY. They will laugh—and if they do not laugh they will sneer—at calculation which shows receipts of $66,000,000, expenditures of $62,000,000, and a surplus of receipts over expenditures of $14,326,000. Is it not about time that we put an end to that sort of farce ? Is it not about time that we should tell the tax-payers the whole truth ? Is it not about time we should cease to make appologies like that of the hon. gentleman, telling the people that there are surpluses, when, as a matter of fact, the expenditure exceeds the income ? I challenge the hon. gentleman to say that except the year that has just closed, that during the whole period the Liberal party has been in power, there has been a single year in which the expenditure did not exceed the receipts. Yet the hon. gentleman gives as a sole justification of the large expenditure of this country, that his receipts were larger than the expenditure. I have no hesitation in saying that he is practising deception on the people of this country. It is not a fair statement, and it is not an accurate statement. I challenge the hon. gentleman now to deny that during the period from 1897 to 1902 there was a single year in which the hon. gentleman did not expend a sum in excess of that received, and that during these years the excess did not aggregate $27,791,281. Yet that was the sole excuse the hon. gentleman gives for the increased expenditure. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word about the Public Accounts Committee. The hon. gentleman said that the Public Accounts Committee had become a farce.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not the Public Accounts, but the committee.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, the Public Accounts Committee of which the hon. gentleman was a distinguished member, became a farce, he says. Well, I am forced to agree that that is to some extent true. I know of more than one occasion on which that hon. gentleman turned it into a farce ; I know of occasions on which the hon. gentleman did not go there to assist the Public Accounts Committee in unravelling and detecting the wrongs that were committed under the government, but he went there to block the way, and by every means in his power to prevent an examination of that character. I remind him of one case when a witess was asked to state the truth with regard to an account, and the Finance Minister was the first to come to his assistance and tell the witness that he need not answer the question. The hon. gentleman knows the case I refer to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will the hon. gentleman state the case ?

Mr. CLANCY. It was the case of Mr. Rochester, when he was asked what sums of money he paid out other than appeared in his accounts. If he had answered that question there would have been no trouble in putting our finger upon the raid that had been made upon the public treasury. The Minister of Finance was the first to rise in the Public Accounts Committee and to tell that witness that he need not answer the question. Yet the hon. gentleman comes here and says that the Public Accounts Committee is a farce.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman not know that that incident—which he has not described I think correctly—had relation to his friend the ex-Minister of Public Works that he now takes to his bosom, and that it occurred a year ago, not in the recent committees which are referred to ?

Mr. CLANCY. Well, if the hon. gentleman means to insinuate that there was something wrong on the part of the ex-Minister of Public Works——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. I do not.

Mr. CLANCY. Then why does the hon. gentleman refer to it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I refer to it because it happened to be a fact.

Mr. CLANCY. Then it must have some meaning. I am not denying that it was a case in which the department of the ex-Minister of Public Works was concerned. The hon. gentleman is making reference to it now with the evident intent of casting some blame upon the ex-Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Then his reference has no meaning. Was he honest then when he told the witness not to answer the question ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not casting any reflection on the ex-Minister of Public Works. The hon. gentleman was casting a reflection upon him and I was defending him from what I thought was an aspersion. But all that was a matter of a year ago, and my remarks had reference to the Public Accounts Committee of the present session.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, now, the hon. gentleman wants to make the short memory plea. I am not dealing alone with the Public Accounts Committee of the present year. I think the hon. gentleman might have taken in past years. But let us look at the present year. This has been a busy session, there has been no time to give to the Public Accounts Committee, or very little. But what has been disclosed in that committee that the hon. gentleman calls a farce ? I wish the member for West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert) was in his place. What was disclosed there only a few days ago is a fair sample of the waste of public money that has gone on in this country with regard to the census. Why, Sir, one of the commissioners that was appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, came down here and was examined before the Public Accounts Committee, and what was he forced to tell ? He was forced to tell in every case where a man had put in an account that he never questioned it, but still he paid it. He was forced to admit that they had hired horses in little villages of 200 or 300 inhabitants to drive the enumerators around for the purpose of taking the census when everybody knows that there was no horse hire, everybody knows that, it was a stuffing of the accounts, everybody knows it was a pillaging of the public treasury, yet the hon. gentleman says the committee was a farce. That is only one case that was brought out where the public treasury was pillaged. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if time had permitted us to go into a large range of the public expenditures of this country, we would have discovered a great many cases of which the one I have just mentioned was only a sample. But there was not time, and the only case that we did examine was of the most frightful character ever disclosed before the Public Accounts Committee of this country.

Now, Sir, it is very amusing to see the hon. gentleman set up a defence of that kind. He says, we have been taunted about the Fast Atlantic Service. we are told by hon. members of the opposition that we should have a Fast Atlantic Service at any cost. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman threw away the only opportunity we ever had in Canada to have a Fast Atlantic Service at a fair and moderate price. The hon. gentleman declared that the price was too high, and now they have lost the chance, and they are unable to get a service at twice as much as they could have got it for. Yet he taunts the opposition with saying that we are bound to have a service at any cost. This country does require a service, and if the hon. gentlemen threw away the opportunities, and if they have to pay double the cost of a service now, I would like to know with what propriety he can taunt this side with being willing to give twice as much as it could have been obtained for before. How is he going to answer for throwing away the opportunities that were given him, and of which he was an advocate for a number of years past? The hon. gentleman threw away every chance they had of getting a service, so I do not think he takes the right position in blaming the opposition. Now, I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to one matter on which he laid great stress; and I see the Minister of Customs sitting beside him who once made a similar challege to the Conservative opposition. When we complain of the expenditure the Minister of Finance says: Why don't you rise in your place and move for a reduction. Did the Liberal party do anything of that kind during the 18 years they were in opposition? During that whole period these able and vigilant gentlemen sat in this House. I see before me now one of them who never lost an opportunity of making a point against the government of the day, who is now an able minister and who was not particularly wanting in his duty in courage or in knowledge. During that whole period of 18 years $603,000,000 in round numbers were expended. Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Paterson) how much of that was challenged during that whole period. Out of that sum of $603,000,000, but $447,000 was challenged. There were no votes against subsidies—not one. No hon. gentleman ever proposed to vote against a railway subsidy during that period. I think it is about time hon. gentlemen ceased making challenges of that kind. The Hon. Minister of Finance is unwittingly slandering the Hon. Minister of Customs because the hon. Minister of Customs was in the House before 1896 and was actively in opposition. I think I should come to the defence of those hon. gentlemen who were so derelict in their duty, who sat here while this country was being robbed, while $600,000,000 was being expended and who only had the courage to challenge a vote during that whole period in respect of less than half a million dollars. Now, I wish to say a word in regard to the prosperity of the country upon which the hon. minister has laid very great stress. He has told us what has been done for the country. He says that we have expended money for the purpose of facilitating the business of Canada. I purpose to make a comparison in regard to agricultural products which is the main feature of our exports. It will be seen that we stand exactly in the same relative position that we occupied in 1896. I challenge the hon. gentleman to deny the fact. In 1896 Great Britain imported horses, cattle, sheep, bacon, hams, beef, mutton, pork, meats all other, lard, poultry and game, butter, cheese, milk condensed, &c., margarine, eggs, hides raw, sheep pelts, tallow, bristles, wool, wheat, barley, oats, pease, beans, corn, flour wheat, oatmeal, corn meal, grain and meal other, seeds, clover and grass, flax seed, hops, apples, cherries, grapes, pears, plums, other fruits, onions, potatoes, tomatoes, other vegetables, oil seed cake, flax, and fish. The total imports into the United Kingdom of these articles were $827,352,902. This of course includes fish. During that period Canada exported to Great Britain $53,254,758 or 6·43 per cent. Taking the total imports of the same articles of animal produce into the United Kingdom, the value in 1901 was $976,582,901. Of this value the total amount imported from Canada was $66,446,101 or 6·80 per cent or less than ¼ of 1 per cent of an increase during that period. Notwithstanding this vast expenditure of money we stand relatively in the same position as in 1896. But the hon. gentleman opposite to-night stated that the people were so prosperous that they have not only produced a great deal but that they have largely imported. The fact of the matter is, as the hon. gentleman knows, that the people of Canada have imported a large number of articles which they should have produced. They have been consuming foreign goods and there is not much in the boast that we have largely increased our import of goods which should have been produced under a proper policy in this country. I do not propose to pursue this subject any further than to say that we have an enormous expenditure, an alarming expenditure, which, as stated by my hon. friend from Pictou, represents no less a sum than $62,000,000 in round numbers. I challenge the hon. gentleman now in conclusion to put his finger upon one great service which is being performed and to show what benefit Canada has from this increased expenditure. I say that it is impossible for the hon. gentleman or his friends to show that as a result of this enormously increased expenditure, nearly double what it was in 1896, anything has been done for the people that will stand to the credit of the government or that will confer some lasting benefit upon the country. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the expenditure has been dribbled out for the most useless purposes and that Canada has been called upon to pay immense sums for no substantial purpose. Just look at the sum which the taxpayer has to pay at the present time and which he had to pay in 1896. The taxpayer had to pay in 1896 $7.50 per head for each man, woman and child. In 1903 every man, woman and child has to pay $12.30 or $4.73 per head more than was paid in 1896. I repeat again that there is absolutely nothing to show by way of a return for this immense tax put upon the people of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that we did not challenge it. As has been stated by my hon. friend from Pictou the opposition cannot lengthen the session surely beyond what it is now by dividing the House. The best way to indicate dissent is for an hon. member upon his responsibility to stand in his place and condemn that expenditure. Hon. gentlemen opposite are not slow in quoting speeches against us. Hon. gentlemen, when they go to the country, do not require to have votes. They will say that Mr. so and so made this statement and that they are prepared to hold them to it. We have not complained that hon. gentlemen in the past did not give evidence of their opposition to expenditures because they did not divide the House. It was they who raised the question and not we. I have nothing to say beyond this that we will leave it to the people of the country to decide they will have before them a set of promises from hon. gentlemen opposite and a set of performances that would not do much credit to any government even of less pretensions.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House long but I want to refer to one case to show the reason why the Public Accounts Committee may have been somewhat of a farce. I refer to the case of an individual who is acting as private secretary for Mr. Charleson. What are the facts in connection with the conduct of this man whose name is Gobeil. The Auditor General reports that he refuses to give any vouchers for his expenditure. At page 333—323 of the Auditor General's Report for 1900, we find that this man sent $2,809.93 for sundries, supplies, &c., and that he absolutely refused to produce any vouchers. Why is this private secretary whose salary was raised from $700 a year to $2,400 without any examination, why is he allowed to go about the country and spend his time at Syracuse, N. Y., and elsewhere, and have his expenses paid by the government ? What is he doing there for Mr. Charleson ? In the Auditor General's Report for the year ending 30th June, 1899, the Auditor General complains that this private secretary is allowed to break all the rules governing his case. He goes to Vancouver or wherever he likes, he spends all the money he likes, and he produces no vouchers. And yet the Minister of Finance talks about the Public Accounts Committee being a farce. Of course it is a farce; what is the use of having a fire without wood; what is the use of having an investigation without vouchers ? The government want it to be a farce, and the greater farce it is the better they are pleased. Why is it that the private secretary of a contractor, paid out of the people's money, is allowed to go wherever he likes, and allowed to refuse giving vouchers ? Does he go to Syracuse for the good of his health, or for the good of the health of some hon. gentlemen connected with the department ? It would not be healthy to have him here while the Public Accounts Committee is in session. There is not the slightest doubt that the Minister of Public Works, who is not now in the House, but who ought to be, knows very well for whose health this man goes to Syracuse. This government does not want vouchers to be produced; they have a horror of them.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Bell).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Consolidation of Dominion statutes, which may be paid notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act or in the Act respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $16,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Who are the commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I gave the names of the commissioners a few days ago when this matter was up in another form. The commissioners are : Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice ; Mr. Power, another employee of the Department of Justice ; Mr. Cameron, Registrar of the Supreme Court; Sir Henry Strong, ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court ; Mr. Sirois, of Quebec; Mr. Roscoe, and Mr. St. Louis, secretary of the commission, the names of the others were given on a previous occasion.

Mr. BLAIN. How much is it expected that the revision will cost ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is very hard to say; the last revision took place in 1886, and cost, if I remember rightly, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $48,000. We have, up to the present, expended in connection with this consolidation the sum of $16,000. We expect to keep within the $48,000, notwithstanding the fact that we have to revise the statutes from 1886 down to the present time, 17 years. That vote of $20,000 has been in the estimates for the last four or five years. In 1902-3 we expended $12,722.38; in 1903-4 we expended $3,398.71, so that the total expenditure up to the present time is $16,121.09.

Mr. MONK. How far has the work advanced and what now remains to be done ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am now speaking from memory, and my hon. friend will find that I gave all of these details and that they are on 'Hansard.' My recollection is that there are about 154 statutes to be revised, and of that number 17 have been completely revised and 38 have been prepared and are ready now to be passed upon. They are partially revised, and the whole work is expected to be completed next year.

Mr. MONK. Why should it cost over $40,000 to revise 150 statutes ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I estimate that it will cost $40,000 odd, because the revision of 1886 cost $48,000.

Mr. MONK. We must do better than this.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We will do better than this.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that is a fair comparison, because you have now as a basis the Revised Statutes of 1886. That was the first revision and it naturally took a long time. I think that more than 150 statutes were revised in 1886.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not remember the exact number; at all events, this is equally important and equally expensive with the work done in 1886, if not more so. There are now seventeen years of statutes to be revised.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the other case there were 20 years of statutes to be revised, and that was the first revision; a great many of the statutes that are now being revised are mere amendments to particular chapters of the revised statutes. I think the work, while equally important, would be less laborious and would occupy less time than the work of 1886.

Galops rapids—to complete channel, $60,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This matter was discussed on a previous occasion. It is for some improvements in the Galops rapids, where we have spent a vast sum of money. One hon. member in this House expresssed the opinion that this was not a useful work, but the view taken by the department is that it is useful, and it does seem a pity that for the small sum still required we should abandon the work. We have spent $978,000 to improve the Galops rapids, and we are advised that this will complete the work.

Mr. CALVIN. Is any record kept in the department of the number of vessels using this channel? I am inclined to think it is neglected and not used at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have no record of vessels using it, but we have a report from the engineer of the department in charge of the St. Lawrence, who thinks it is very important that we should finish up the work by making this expenditure.

Trent canal—construction, $360,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to complete the work of construction on the different sections, comprising sections 2 and 3, and also the steel work for the hydraulic lock on the Peterborough section.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are there any new contracts this year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but very considerable operations are still going on.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the report of the engineer on the feasibility of connecting Rice lake and Port Hope instead of going down to Trenton?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall be glad to furnish the report. It is in substance favourable to the Trenton section rather than Port Hope. I shall see that the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ward) has access to it.

Trent canal—to build a new entrance pier at Peterborough, $1,600.
To build entrance pier at Burleigh, $1,200.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are small repairs connected with the old works.

To build entrance pier at Lovesick, $1,200.
To dredge shoals between Peterborough and Heeley's Falls, $2,800.
To dredge sheds at Ketchawana and Buckhorn lake, $2,800.
Rebuilding dam at Peterborough, $4,800.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would ask the hon. minister if he has any report about opening up the waters north of Balsam lake? I do not know of any part of Canada which would derive equal benefit from an expenditure of $100,000. Such an expenditure would open up 100 miles of waterway, by building four or five locks north of Balsam lake. We have voted cheerfully large sums for building docks, bonusing railways, to mills and all that sort of thing in the maritime provinces and the province of Quebec, but I do not know of any part of the Dominion, in which so large an area would be so materially benefited by the expenditure of this sum, as would the counties of Victoria and Haliburton by the construction of four or five small locks, at the outside seventy-five feet. I would ask the hon. minister to make a note of this, and another session bring in a vote for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What depth would you get?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the river there is lots of water. Five feet in the canal would be plenty. All we want is to get boats in and out to move down the cribs of hardwood timber. There would also be a tourist passenger traffic in that district. At the same time, I would ask him to make a note of this fact. The system of opening and closing those locks is not the most modern. The superintendent says they are improving the system, but at present it is very tedious.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Which locks?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). All the locks along the entire system. In the old days the Trent canal was rather pooh-poohed, but I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman from Ontario is a strong advocate of it today. He will find that Lake Skugog, that large lake in his own town, will be immensely benefited when this lock is opened up. I am glad to see that he is a strong supporter of the construction of this work.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Railways—Intercolonial—to dredge and ballast rock at deep water terminus at Halifax, $25,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is made necessary by the increasing draft of the steamers. There is a good wharf there, and what used to be a good depth of water. But with the increasing size of the Allan steamers it is necessary to dredge to a depth of 30 feet.

National Transcontinental Railway—to provide for surveys and other expenses, $500,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the first installment of the expenditure on the government's portion of the new railway. This amount is designed to cover only incidental expenses and surveys. Of course, there will be no work in construction until the House meets again. In the meantime it is intended to organize and send out survey parties.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I see by the Montreal 'Star' of this evening that Mr. Hays says he has survey parties all over the road. Is the government paying for these?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No arrangement has been made with respect to that. But if the Grand Trunk have made surveys which can be properly utilized, I think we should be glad to have the work advanced to that extent and to utilize the result. And if we utilize the work of the surveys, no doubt some arrangement will be made to bear our fair share of the expense.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The government have not selected the commissioners or the chief engineer ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The Deputy Minister and Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals has made an estimate of the probable cost of surveying parties for the railway, showing an estimated expenditure of $450,000. To be safe, and to cover other expenses, we make it $500,000.

Mr. MONK. Has the hon. minister that estimate here ? When does he propose commencing work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, construction cannot be commenced until we have the survey. I suppose that immediately after the enactment of the measure steps will be taken to push the surveys forward. No doubt something can be done this autumn and winter to make provision for numerous surveys. Whatever can be done will be pushed forward with all speed.

Mr. MORIN. Are the surveys below Quebec sent out by the government or by the Grand Trunk Pacific?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will be sent out on behalf of the government through the instrumentality of the commissioners.

Mr. MORIN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say there were some there already.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some between Winnipeg and Quebec. I am not aware that any have been sent out by the Grand Trunk east of Quebec.

Mr. MONK. I would like to see the estimate to which the hon. gentleman referred, to see how the work is to be divided. Of course, if this were a small sum I would not ask it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy minister in his estimate has not designated any particular points where the parties will be established. But he has estimated that twenty parties could be usefully employed between Winnipeg and Moncton—fourteen between Winnipeg and Quebec and six between Quebec and Moncton. He has not designated the places where they will commence work.

Mr. MONK. But it must be divided into sections.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the work will be arranged by sections under the chief engineer, just like any other railway work, and a large number of parties will be put in the field to push the work with all speed.

Mr. MONK. When will the work of survey begin ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As soon as we can have the surveyors appointed. There is every disposition to push the work. I should think that immediately after the session parties will be put in the field and the work proceeded with as long as the season will permit.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Montreal 'Star' says :

> Mr. C. M. Hays, general manager and second vice-president of the Grand Trunk Railway, has made the following statement regarding the company's plans for completing the Grand Trunk Pacific :—
>
> The reconnaisance survey is proceeding vigorously and, in fact, has been, ever since early last spring. We have between fifteen and twenty parties in the field, some of whom have about completed the work of their division ; others will keep on all through the winter. Great care has been taken with a view of obtaining a line with a minimum grade, not exceeding 4 per cent——

I presume that means 4-10ths per cent.

> —or twenty feet to the mile, about the same as the maximum grade between Toronto and Montreal, and with no greater than two or three degree curves.
>
> On some portions of the route where the country is comparatively unknown, for instance, in the Lake Nepigon district, owing to the lack of transportation facilities, supplies are difficult to obtain, and progress is not as great as otherwise would be the case.
> Plans for construction at the point at which a beginning will be made are dependent on the completion of surveys. We have now the territory pretty well covered. The first parties we sent out, which were started before the government policy as to the eastern division was developed, were located between Winnipeg and North Bay, the theory being that that was the section of country that was most in need of additional facilities, and while it is undoubtedly true that, for some years to come, a large proportion of the grain crop of the North-west will move out by water during the season of navigation, there is to-day a very considerable quantity moving by rail north of Lake Superior and this quantity will be increased in a constantly growing volume as rail facilities for the economical and expeditious movement of the traffic are provided. The new line with its 4 per cent grade——

Meaning, no doubt, 4-10ths per cent.

> —will have great advantages in this respect.
>
> Our surveying parties are also well distributed across the territory from Winnipeg west and construction on that portion of the line will be pushed as soon as the results of our surveys are known, as also the construction of the branches from a port on Lake Superior (which port is yet to be determined) to a junction with the eastern division and a line from North Bay, north also to intersect the eastern division.
>
> As to plans and intentions in connection with the work on the eastern division, I shall have to refer you to the government, that portion of the undertaking being, as you are aware, under their control.
> While it is dependent on conditions generally, the results of surveys, the situation as regards labour, movement of supplies, material, &c., it is not likely that the road will be completed short of five years.

So it would seem that the Grand Trunk Pacific are surveying the line to the north. This is a nice little piece of campaign literature, and I thought I would read it for the benefit of the minister.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. On which side ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Well, turn it either way. What I want to know is whether the government will instruct the chief engineer, when they appoint him, to take over these survey parties ? I understand that they are almost entirely American.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have no arrangement with the Grand Trunk in that respect. I understand their surveys are between North Bay and Winnipeg. Of course, only that part of their line which coincides with the contemplated line of the government can be used. But if bona fide surveys have been made which are found useful for the government's purposes, I think we should take them over and make a fair allowance for them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And take over the engineers, too ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not necessarily, but take over the surveys. However, this is speculative, as we have no arrangement.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman intend, when he appoints survey parties, that they shall enter upon the ground already surveyed by the Grand Trunk ? The hon. gentleman has just said that if a portion of these surveys turned out to be valuable the Grand Trunk people would be recouped for their outlay. That does not seem unreasonable, unless the hon. gentleman intends to put a staff over the same territory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think where competent engineers have covered the ground to the satisfaction of the chief engineer, after his appointment, I would not suppose it necessary to go over the same ground. That would be a matter in which we would take the advice of the chief engineer. After allowing for the work which the Grand Trunk have begun, there is still a large amount of work to be done which will require a number of parties. The estimate is made for the whole section. If it turns out that the Grand Trunk have completed the surveys for a reasonable distance, we would use a portion of this money to pay them for their surveys instead of organizing independent surveys.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the sum now asked for cover the whole cost of the surveys between Winnipeg and Moncton ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This estimate we think will be the cost of operations within the present year. I do not know that it will cover the whole cost of the surveys, I should think not.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman any idea as to what they will cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will cost very much more than that. These are the estimates for the first year's operations.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose if the Grand Trunk Pacific Company had made some surveys the hon. gentleman would be in possession of that information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We know they have made some surveys, but how far they may be adapted to the government's purpose and how far they relate to branches which belong to the Grand Trunk proper, will be a matter for investigation.

Mr. MONK. How much is allotted to each party of surveyors ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About $30,000 or $31,000 for each party for the year. But as a portion of this year is already past we are not taking a full year's appropriation.

Mr. MONK. When will they begin operations ? I understand that these operations can be carried on during the winter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, so far as the season will permit. They will begin immediately. After the passing of the legislation I presume the government will take the necessary steps to give effect to the intention of parliament. We desire to get the surveyors into the field with the least possible delay.

Mr. MONK. How many are employed in each party ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The chief engineer has made a report to me, but I have not it at hand. If my hon. friend wishes for the information before concurrence, I will get it to-morrow.

Mr. MONK. Is there a staff out already ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not on behalf of the government. The Grand Trunk people, according to current report, have some surveyors at work. But there has been no work on behalf of the government yet.

Mr. MONK. Have you any report from any staff working at present on these surveys ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we have no such reports. We have no communication with them on the subject whatever.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I noticed some time ago that a gentleman by the name of McGinnis, of the Geological Survey, returned home, and I saw interviews from some of the men who had been in his party, and one of them said that for upwards of 100 miles where this road was going, there was nothing but muskegs. Has the minister heard anything about it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Trent canal—to pay Messrs. Corry & Laverdure interest on increased prices awarded them by Messrs. Hobson, Surtees and Brophy, as arbitrators, from the dates the several quantities were returned in estimates and paid at original prices, up to July 1st, 1903, at 5 per cent per annum, $29,067.11. Interest on one-half cost of arbitration, $4,419, viz., $2,209.50 from date of payment of same by them, January 21, 1902, to July 1st, 1903, at 5 per cent, $159.20 ; also one-half cost of arbitration, $2,-209.50 (correction of item in previous estimates), $31,435.81.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish to make a change in the first item for interest, $29,067.11, and reduce it to $26,533.14. This is interest on the claim of Messrs. Corry & Laverdure in connection with the Trent canal, the principal sum of which was allowed to them some time ago. It was a case in which certain work was done by them for which no prices were fixed in the contract, and the matter of determining the prices was referred to the judgment of the three engineers here named. These gentlemen made an award, and the principal sum has been paid, and this is to pay interest. There was an item in the estimates at an earlier stage that I struck out, because there was a difficulty in fixing the date at which interest should begin. It is not so much as these gentlemen claim, but we think the vote now proposed is a fair adjustment of the matter. The total should be charged to $28,901.84.

Soulanges canal—to pay J. & M. O'Leary interest on $17,467.28, from March 1, 1900, to August 28, 1903, at 5 per cent, $3,050.79.

And interest on $3,943.50, from March 1, 1900, to August 13, 1903, at 5 per cent, $680.66.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why was that not settled before ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This claim has only recently been paid, although the work was done some time ago. The final estimates were not made up for a considerable time. The principal sum had been paid to them, and we are now proposing to pay them interest from the date at which it should begin, at five per cent. Where we pay interest at all I think there is much to be said in favour of taking the standard rate. Interest is a matter of grace, and we may not pay it at all, but in a case where these contractors have to borrow money from the banks, it is not unreasonable that they should be allowed five per cent for any delay on the part of the government.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any revenue received from the lease of water-power ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the deputy thinks it is about $3,000 a year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

Elections—to pay the account of the Prince Albert 'Advocate' for advertising the proclamation and notice of the Saskatchewan election of 1900, notwithstanding anything in the Dominion Elections Act, $297.48.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item is inserted at the request of the Auditor General who became satisfied that the charge is a fair one, but he is not certain that he has the authority to pay it and he therefore asks for a vote of the House.

Mr. BLAIN. How does it come that there is an item of $297 in connection with this election and nothing at all in connection with any other election in the west ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This was ordered without authority ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I am told it has been the custom to publish this advertisement and that it has been paid for on a previous occasion. The returning officer in his report says :

It has always been customary here (Saskatchewan) to publish proclamations and election notices in both English and French. The reason for this is the territory is so large and many settlers so isolated that it is impossible to cover the district thoroughly with postal notices of proclamation. If it were not for the circulation of newspapers undoubtedly many persons would be in ignorance on election day as to where they should vote or would have great inconvenience in finding out. . . . As an aid in distributing this information as it should be distributed the newspaper is invaluable and the necessity of its use is beyond question.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did the Conservative paper not get the advertisement too ?

The MINISTER OF FINACE. I do not know whether this is a Conservative or a Liberal paper.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why did the Conservative paper not get it ? I am surprised at the hon. minister pressing a matter of this kind. I hope that in future he will see that the Tory papers get it so that the poor Tories will know where to go and vote. Will the hon. Minister of Finance make a promise to that effect ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be taken into consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. What amount was paid in the general elections in 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the amount, but I am informed by one of my officers that he has discussed the matter with the Auditor General and he says it was paid on a previous occasion.

Mr. BLAIN. Was it paid by a special vote ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At that time it was paid without a special vote, but the Auditor General has become a little more critical and he likes to have votes.

Mr. BLAIN. This is to help the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) in his next election, I suppose ?

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that the returning officer has neglected his duty. Surely a notice in a newspaper is not the notice to be given to the electors by proclamation. There seems to be an irregularity in that explanation. It would appear that the returning officer did not post up the proclamations in order to give the people notice of the election, but that he paid the newspaper to do his duty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What I would understand from the information furnished is that the legal notices were given, but that they would be insufficient and that they were supplemented by this newspaper advertisement.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In the dual language ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I presume so.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he intends to take up any items that have been passed in connection with the Post Office Department ? The reason I ask is that there is an item standing which the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) was to give some information about. It will not take much discussion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What was that ?

Mr. CLANCY. In regard to a post office in the west. The hon. Postmaster General was to bring down certain petitions and letters in connection with it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. Postmaster General promised my hon. friend that certain information would be brought down I will see that he gets it, so as to have an opportunity of discussing it whether it is on this item or any other.

Mr. BLAIN. We did not get an explanation as to why it is necessary to publish the proclamation in this special newspaper in all western Canada and not necessary to do the same thing in any other constituency.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I noticed the other night when this matter was under discussion that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said that he recognized that the conditions of Saskatchewan were exceptional and that it might be quite reasonable and necessary to publish the notice there and not necessary elsewhere owing to the territory being so large and the difficulty of distributing the notices.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. minister should not add insult to injury by trying to stuff the committee. There is no reason for any such explanation. If the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) had stated that in his own constituency that there was some need for this same thing there would be some sense in it. In Saskatchewan there is no settlement east of Prince Albert, settlement to the north only extends for 21 miles and south and west this paper will not circulate. The hon. minister's explanation was that these poor people would not know where to go and vote but for the publication of this notice. If it is necessary to tell the Liberals how to vote, and I admit that they require a little more information than the Conservatives do, I insist that the Conservatives should also have an opportunity of knowing where to vote. Do I understand my hon. friend to promise that if one paper gets it next year the other paper will also get it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may not have control of it next year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the hon. minister give it serious consideration ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I will agree to that.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister states that a similar amount to this was paid in 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed by one of my officers that he learned from the Auditor General that an amount for the same purpose was paid after the general election of 1896.

Mr. BLAIN. Why did the Auditor General pay the amount in 1896 without a special vote of parliament, and why does he require a special vote now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are a number of things which the Auditor General has been doing for years, the legality of which he now questions, and asks that they be done in a different way.

Mr. CLANCY. He is getting suspicious.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps so ; he has written a letter asking that this vote be taken for the reason that the Election Act does not sanction this method of publication.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the hon. gentleman know what is the circulation of this paper, or does he know if it was done without the instruction of the returning officer ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is evident that the returning officer authorized it, judging from a reference in the letter of the Auditor General, who asks us to be good enough to include the amount in the supplementary estimates for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Auditor General asks for this vote.

To provide for expenses of investigation into trade combinations, Customs tariff Act, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to provide for any investigations which may be held under this Act. Mr. Justice Richards is now inquiring into the alleged lumber combine in Manitoba. We have had no report yet.

Contribution by Canada to Queen Victoria memorial, $146,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an appropriation which the ministers in London last year agreed with Mr. Chamberlain to recommend to the consideration of parliament, as a contribution to the national memorial to the late Queen. The different colonies of the empire have, I think, all contributed, and the ministers agreed to recommend to the Canadian parliament a vote of £30,000 sterling. This memorial is to be erected in London, near Buckingham palace. The idea is that the memorial shall include designs to represent the various portions of the empire, but it is not advanced far enough at present to go into details.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Carried.

To pay Charles Miller $3,713.32 and Robert Miller $3,339.05 for amounts deposited by them in the post office savings bank at St. Scholastique and fraudulently withdrawn by the assistant postmaster, $7,052.37.

Mr. BLAIN. This item stood over for some information. If there were any other depositors who lost money why were they not paid ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are the only persons who lost money.

Mr. CLANCY. One of the questions asked was that the principal and interest should be separated. It arose on the question of how large a sum might be deposited at one time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I find on inquiry from the superintendent of the savings bank that the rules admit of a deposit of $3.000 at one time.

Mr. BLAIN. There was also a point about the insurance fund. Would the hon. minister give us a statement in respect to the amount paid out of this fund and how the fund stands at the present moment ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Bonds are taken only from postmasters and not from subordinates. The person who did this embezzling was an employee of the postmaster. It has never been the practice of the department to require bonds or security from the subordinate officials in an office of this kind.

Mr. BLAIN. Were there no bonds to be attached and was there no responsibility resting upon the postmaster ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster himself gives bonds but the bonds taken from a postmaster at an office where the revenue is not very large are small in amount and quite inadequate to meet any loss that might happen. The postmaster himself has given bonds of a private character. This was an old appointment not occurring under our administration or under the modern system of security by assessment. Nothing has been recovered on it and it is not thought that anything will be recovered from the postmaster.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand that the postmaster appointed had bonds that were of no value to the department ? Are we to understand that the department were so, shall I say——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Say anything you like ; make it good and strong.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend I hope is not inviting special criticism. The statement he has now given to the committee is different from the statement which he made the other day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL I said that the general system adopted in the department to-day was to insure by the system of assessment and that I was under the impression that it was probable that this deputy postmaster was insured under that assessment system. On inquiry I find that the postmaster was an old officer who had given his security before the assessment system was adopted.

Mr. BLAIN. What steps were taken to find out whether these bonds were valueless or to recover from the sureties ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what steps were taken to recover : the Deputy Postmaster General states that nothing has been recovered.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that bonds are taken from a postmaster and not from a deputy postmaster ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The system is to take bonds from the postmaster. We have not an arbitrary rule although I encourage and favour the assessment system in preference to the private bond system. When the hon. gentleman is in a responsible position in a government, he will find that it is not always so easy to recover from private sureties. I have endeavoured to have the assessment system adopted in all new appointments, although even in the case of new appointments an option is given to the postmasters where the amount of security is comparatively trifling.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the minister what system he has of investigating and examining into the value of bonds given by postmasters in such a case as this. There seems to have been slackness on the part of the hon. gentleman.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No doubt the department took all the proper business steps to find out whether the bondholders were good or not. I presume that an inquiry was made by the inspector of the district. The bond was taken by our predecessors, and no doubt at that time the sureties made the usual affidavit of justification and the bond was assumed to be of good value. But when you try to recover on a bond, you will find it frequently impossible to get anything. Sometimes sureties will swear to their solvency, and yet when a loss occurs you cannot recover. Moreover people's conditions alter.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there a law suit in this case ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What does the hon. gentleman mean ?

Mr. BLAIN. What steps did the department take to recover the sum of $7,000 which we are asked to vote ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that the bonds were for $7,000. I am quite satisfied that they were for no such sum.

Mr. BLAIN. Nor did I say they were, but I am asking the hon. gentleman to state what steps were taken to recover from the bondsmen who went security to the amount of the loss.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend has misunderstood me. I did not say that there were bonds for $7,000. It is not the practice to exact security to that extent, and I have no doubt that in this case there was no departure from the rule and that the amount of the bond was comparatively small as compared with the loss. My officer informed me that nothing could be recovered and I did not see what could be gained by a suit. As to the real embezzler, he has no means, but his family are very well off, and it was thought at one time that they would, for the honour of the family, come forward and make some contribution. However, they have not done so.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman give me the information I asked for with regard to the dismissal at Port Lambton of a postmistress ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Are we through with this estimate ?

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman wishes to go on, I will not delay him.

Mr. CALVIN. Do I understand that it is within the power of any postmaster to name a deputy, and if that deputy has power to do all the work of the office and receive money on deposit and yet not give any bond ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster must give security and he is responsible for the official he engages to assist him. Those he engage are sworn in by the inspector, who is supposed to exercise some discretion and in that way there is some departmental supervision as to who shall assist the postmaster. But the postmaster himself is the only one the government knows. In this case the postmaster gave a bond but the securities were not good for the amount, so that it was not considered possible to recover anything from them. Neither the sureties nor the postmaster are worth anything. The postmaster is responsible for the defalcation of his agent and his bond would cover that defalcation. It would not be practicable to obtain security from everybody engaged to work under the postmaster in a small post office. The emoluments of any of those postmasters are comparatively trifling and the value of the business trivial, and yet it would be possible for them to embezzle considerable sums. The postmasters are men of standing and character, which is the best security one can have, although one must not disregard ordinary business precautions and the taking of proper security.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think that the hon. minister has given a satisfactory explanation. In the first place, under the rule only $3,000 can be deposited; but it seems that there were two depositors in this case and the amount was $7,000. How could $7,000 belonging to two individuals get into the hands of this deputy ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The man who committed these frauds got possession of the pass books of the depositors. In one instance he received $2,000 or $3,000 and only transmitted to the department a portion of that money, so that the superintendent of the money order branch was not aware that an attempt was being made to deposit more than the regulations allowed. It was not known by the department that that amount of money had been delivered to this man until the defalcation was discovered in the fall of 1892. The embezzler altered the entry in the pass book, and for a long time retained possession of it. It was only when the depositor insisted in getting possession of the pass book and not getting it communicated with the superintendent of the savings bank at Ottawa that the frauds came to light.

Mr. FOWLER. The depositor must certainly have known that he was exceeding the legal limit of the deposit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the difference was in the interest.

Mr. FOWLER. Then this thing must have lasted a long while to have accumulated all its interest.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It began in 1895 and lasted until 1902

Mr. FOWLER. Then for seven years this depositor never saw his pass book ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. The moment he saw it he must have known.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He was an illiterate man—could neither read nor write.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems strange that this could be carried on for seven years and nobody any the wiser. Would not the postmaster know what deposits were being made ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This man was the assistant.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems that the postmaster might as well——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It was a postmistress.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the postmistress still retain her position ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think so, but am not sure.

Mr. FOWLER. The Postmaster General does not seem to know more than the law allows about this matter. Of course, the amount is not very large, but this seems to be establishing a precedent, and the committee should have the facts so as to be able to judge whether the money should be voted or not. The information must be in the hon. gentleman's department, and the item was left over in order that he might inform himself. On the basis of the facts made known, it seems to me we are not legally bound to pay this money. There may be an equitable claim, and that, of course, we should recognize. But it seems to me that this assistant postmaster was simply the agent of the Millers. He was handling their money and investing it for them. Of course, he may have made a bad investment of a considerable portion. I suppose there were pass-books ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) was not present when I made the explanation before. The assistant postmaster received money to transmit, but did not transmit it all. In one instance, I think he received $3,000 and only deposited $1,000. Having the pass-book of these men, I think he forged the amount in the deposit book, or falsified the entries. He threw the men off their guard and retained custody of the pass-book. Another method of embezzlement was to forge the name of the depositor to applications for withdrawals, transmit the pass-book of which he had the custody, and, as it was easy to recognize the envelope in which it came, intercepted the pass-book when it was sent back addressed to the depositor. Then he would forge the endorsement on the cheques issued on the savings banks. I am not familiar with all the details, but the case was in the hands of the Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He retained some of the money, $2,000. Then he forged requisitions on the department and intercepted the cheques payable to the order of the Millers. Then he forged the endorsement of the Millers on the cheque, and so the money never legally left the custody of the government.

Mr. FOWLER. Did he take all the money ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He took the whole business—simply left the books.

Mr. MONK. Would not the banks be responsible when he forged the endorsation ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There was the forged requisition in the first place.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The government issued a cheque on the forged requisition ?

Mr. FOWLER. The forgery of the endorsation would not make the government liable, but the forgery of the requisition.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. Postmaster General would give me the information now on the item that was allowed to stand—the petitions and correspondence with regard to the Lambton post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sending to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) the papers he asked for.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to delay the consideration of this item to go over these papers. Do I understand that there are in these papers, which the hon. gentleman sent me, all the petitions and letters that passed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that everythinig the hon. gentleman asked for is there.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have a letter from the postmaster at Tatamagouche post office, in Colchester county, asking what is done with the money kept as a percentage from the postmasters.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the officer at Tatamagouche is insured under the assessment system, his assessment goes into the common fund. There is an insurance fund that is deposited in the post office savings bank as an insurance fund, and in the event of a defalcation on the part of any officer so insured, the amount for which he is insured in the fund is withdrawable from the fund by Order in Council. It is the same as with a corporation that issues fidelity bonds. They accept premiums from those insured, and these premiums are the means wherewith the company carries on its business and makes its profits and meets its losses. I think in a place of this size the postmaster would give a bond of perhaps $400 at the outside.

Mr. BLAIN. Where can we find a report of that insurance fund ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not entered in the public accounts, it is a trust fund. Under the Act there is a trust fund which is not handed over to the receiver general or to the Postmaster General, but it is deposited in the savings bank as a special trust fund to be drawn upon to meet any loss occasioned by the defalcation of an officer.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it in the report?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no statement of that in the report. I could get a statement from the savings bank. We have an officer who looks after that in the books of the department.

Amount required for compensation for price of islands and improvements to be made on islands in the St. Lawrence river, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The American authorities have several islands which have been kept as open parks with public landings. But there is no similar accommodation among the Canadian islands, and the purpose of this is to establish several public landings and to purchase sufficient grounds for the purpose, so that Canadians passing up and down may have some public landing places.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is in accordance with an arrangement entered into between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Public Works, with a deputation from the United States several years ago. The American government purchased and set apart a number of islands at certain points for public parks, both for Canadians and for Americans, and the Canadian government agreed to do the same. The islands that are set apart by the Canadian government belong to the Indian Department, and the government must vote the money and place it to the credit of the Indian Department in order to acquire the lands. I am glad to see that the government have acted on this arrangement after several years.

Mr. CLANCY. Before the committee rises, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance with regard to a petition to retain a post office where it was in the first instance, and where it had been for years, in a building belonging to a man by the name of McNulty, who was then postmaster. I do not see that petition among the papers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I brought down all the papers my hon. friend asked for. I told my deputy to go through the 'Hansard' and see all that my hon. friend asked for, and transmit all the papers asked for. He says he has sent me more than the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. CLANCY. I asked for all the letters, papers and petitions in connection with it. I am not saying the hon. gentleman is withholding anything. I am merely asking if he has complied as far as possible with my request.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have here a memorandum from my deputy in which he tells me he has sent me all that the hon. gentleman asked for, if not more. I have not looked at the 'Hansard' to see what my hon. friend asked for, but if he will go through the 'Hansard' he will find that what he asked for is there, or else my deputy has misinformed me.

Mr. CLANCY. I only wish to be sure that all that is in the department in connection with the matter has been brought down. Of course it may have been that the petition was not sent to the department, but I know it was intended to be sent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I find there is one small item of $1,300 which has been omitted in the estimates, and I have procured the consent of His Excellency for the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons further supplementary estimates of sums required for the public service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1904, and, in accordance with the provisions of 'the British North America Act, 1867,' the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House, Ottawa,
21st October, 1903.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the message of His Excellency together with the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I will anticipate the wish of the House if I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to again leave the Chair for the House to resolve itself into Committee of Supply to consider this estimate.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Administration of Justice—to supplement the retiring allowance of Mr. Justice Henry, $1,333.34.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is one of the judges of the province of Nova Scotia who has been laid aside by a very severe illness, and who is now about to retire. It has been agreed between himself and the government that for one year he shall be allowed his full salary. He is a comparatively young man who but for his illness would have many years of service on the bench. It has been agreed that the government shall recommend the payment of his full salary for one year after which he will receive the ordinary superannuation.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE presented a report from the special committee appointed to draw up reasons to be offered at a conference with the Senate for disagreeing with certain amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 21) entitled an Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting Railways.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved :

That a conference be desired with the Senate for the purpose of communicating the reasons which induce this House not to concur in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. (21) intituled : 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.'

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours therewith.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONK. What will be the order of business for to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolutions touching the Quebec bridge.

Mr. MONK. After that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Concurrence and any matters which remain on the paper generally.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.55 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, October 22, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

FIRE PROTECTION OF STATIONS, &c., INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. How many stations, freight sheds, and restaurants are there under control of the government on the Intercolonial Railway ?
2. What precautions have been taken to protect such properties from loss by fire ?
3. If any protection is provided for any of such buildings, what are the names of those so protected ?
4. What losses have there been by fire, and the cause of the same, in the past two years ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

1. Stations, 252 ; freight sheds, 76 ; restaurants, 1.

2. The railway takes usual and reasonable precautions according to the locality and the importance of the buildings to protect them from loss by fire. Some are protected by water pipes, fire hydrants and hose, others by tanks, and others by portable fire extinguishers, and some by wells.

3. Halifax, Wellington, Shubenacadie, Truro, Debert, Wentworth, Oxford Junction, Athol, Aulac, College Bridge, Moncton, Anagance, Norton, Lakeside, Quispamsis, Brookville, Canaan, Kent Junction, Derby Junction, Red Pine, Belledune, Eel River, Flat Lands, Assametquaghan, Sayabec, St. Flavie, St. Fabien, Isle Verte, St. Alexandre, St. Phillippe de Neri, Ste. INTEREST ON PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. BUREAU—by Mr. Calvert—asked:

By what amount will the interest on the public debt be decreased from June 30, 1903?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The information has already been furnished to the House, and the hon. gentleman will find it in another form.

JUDGES IN QUEBEC AND EXTRA LEGAL BUSINESS.

Mr. GRANT—by Mr. Calvert—asked:

1. Is the Minister of Justice aware that some of the judges of the court of King's bench and of the Superior Court, in the province of Quebec, occupy remunerative positions, such as directors of banks, financial and industrial corporations, which business and affairs may come within and under the jurisdiction of said judges?

2. Is the Minister of Justice aware that some of these judges are administrators, executors and trustees of estates, which are engaged in general pursuits, the affairs of said estates being liable to come under the jurisdiction of said judges?

3. If so, is it the intention of the government to amend the laws concerning provincial courts in the province of Quebec, so as to remedy the evils of which the public complains?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick):

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. It is not within our jurisdiction to do as suggested by the question.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS AND INCREASE OF SALARY.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked:

1. Did the honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries receive the following petition?

Quebec, December 2, 1902.

To the Honourable
Raymond Préfontaine,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Honourable Sir,—We, the undersigned, keepers of the floating lighthouses at l'Ile Rouge, Ile Blanche and Bas de la Traverse, most humbly request you to take into consideration the fact that we have been obliged to undergo, during the present season, heavy expenses for wages and food for the crews of the vessels under our control; and that during a full month more than in former seasons.

We commenced, last spring, fifteen days earlier than usual, and this fall we closed fifteen days later. When our salaries were established, they were fixed for seven months of service, and we have always been paid for that lapse of time. This year, the requirements of navigation demanded an additional month of service. We are always ready to do all in our power to be of service to navigation, both early in the spring and late in the fall. To do so it is necessary to keep a complete crew, and a greater amount of provisions, which costs a large amount.

We, therefore, beg of you to allow us an additional month of salary, pro rata, in order to indemnify us for such expenditure and for the services that we rendered. We also desire to draw your attention to the fact that early in the springtime navigation work is cold and hard; and in the fall it is not only cold and hard, but also dangerous. Hoping that you will take our petition into favourable consideration, we have the honur to be your very humble servants.

CAPT. JOHN IRVING,
Keeper of Ile Rouge Floating Lighthouse,
CAPT. REGIS LEBLANC,
Keeper of Ile Blanche Floating Lighthouse.
CAPT. ESDRAS LEBEL,
Keeper of Bas de la Traverse Floating Lighthouse.

2. If in the affirmative, what answer has been given by the department?

3. Is it the intention of the minister to grant to the signers of the said petition the allowances which they ask for and to grant them this year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. R. Préfontaine):

1. Yes.

2. Yes, an answer was sent stating that their petition would receive consideration.

3. All matters of increases will be considered after the session, and in this case the increases which I propose to give will date from 1st of July of this year.

THE SLATER SHOE COMPANY AND ALIEN LABOUR.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the attention of the government to a matter of some importance to the workingmen of the city of Montreal and throughout the country generally. I will read an extract from the minutes of a meeting of the members of the Canadian Federation of the United Shoemakers of Canada, held on the 9th of October instant, at the meeting hall of their society in Montreal:

Extract from the minutes of a meeting of the members of the Canadian Federation of United Shoemakers of Canada, held on the 9th of October instant, at the meeting hall of their society at Montreal.

The following resolution was proposed and unanimously carried:—

That the following facts be brought to the notice of the Dominion government:—

1. That the Canadian Federation of the United Shoemakers of Canada was founded, several years ago, for the purpose of bringing together Canadian shoemakers, with a view to improving their social conditions and ensuring fairer dealings between employers and employees in the shoemaking industry.

2. The said association is termed national, being purely Canadian, its membership wholly made up of Canadians, who select their officers in this country and keep their funds in Canada.

3. The said association has been endorsed by all the boot and shoe manufacturers in the district of Montreal, barring one. The said association has made rapid progress, and comprises at present over 1,700 members ; it has accomplished a great deal in the way of ensuring more equitable dealings between capital and labour, and has given satisfaction to the manufacturers and to employees in the boot and shoe industry.

4. On the 20th of July last, the Slater Shoe Company, Limited, boot and shoe manufacturers of Montreal, who employed largely members of the Canadian Federation, without reason or justification decided that its operatives should join the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, an international association, having its leaders and its funds in Boston, United States, and which exacts from its members a weekly contribution of twenty-five cents, the two-thirds of which are forwarded to the board of management in the United States, while the Canadian Federation requires from its members a contribution of only ten cents per week.

5. At the same time, the Slater Shoe Company stated that they had decided to adopt the national brand of that foreign association to be stamped on their goods, and had resolved to withdraw from the boot and shoemakers' union of the city of Montreal, who endorsed the Canadian Federation of Shoemakers.

6. The employees of the company who belong to the Canadian Federation, numbering 500, refused to submit to these tyrannical, unjust and arbitrary terms, and were obliged to leave the employ of the Slater Company on account of this refusal.

7. The Boot and Shoe Workers' Union aforementioned, whose membership in Montreal is limited to a few hundred, undertook, by all possible means, to supply the said company with hands to replace the members of the Canadian Federation, and tried to recruit men elsewhere.

8. The Slater Shoe Company, finding itself unable to carry on operations without the help of other operatives to replace those who had left their employ under the circumstances above mentioned, had recourse to the importation of shoemakers from the United States.

9. The said company despatched emissaries to the United States to recruit hands, and by advertising in various localities in that country and through the efforts and help of the foreign leaders of the international association and their agents, succeeded in bringing to Montreal to work in their factory, about forty or fifty foreign operatives imported from the United States.

10. Such importation of alien labour is in open violation of the Federal Act 60-61 Victoria, chapter 11, as amended by I Edward VII., chapter 13.

11. Such infringement of an Act, the object of which is to protect Canadian labour against the competition and importation of alien labour, is extremely hurtful to our workingmen. The aforementioned Act provides that the Dominion government may interfere in cases where foreign labour is imported contrary to the provisions of the above statute and may send back to their country of origin hands thus imported, at the expense of those who employ them.

12. The United States government are strictly enforcing a similar law in their own territory, whenever foreigners are imported to work there. Our government would not only be justifiable, but even should feel themselves in duty bound to act promptly towards the enforcement of the aforementioned statute, with a view to protecting Canadian labour, particularly in the case of a company such as the Slater Shoe Company, who, for several years past, got from the government heavy contracts for the supply of boots and shoes.

13. The Canadian Federation is prepared to prove all the facts herein stated, if the government are willing to make an investigation into the matter. The Federation wish to protest at the same time against the report which appeared in the 'Labour Gazette,' to the effect that the strike at the Slater Shoe Company's factory was over.

Therefore, the Canadian Federation requests that the Dominion government should interfere promptly in connection with this difficulty between the Slater Shoe Company and their former employees, members of the Canadian Federation of United Shoemakers of Canada ; that the government, in accordance with the powers conferred by the Act 60-61 Victoria, chapter 11, as amended, should oblige the Slater Shoe Company to send back to the United States the hands imported from that country who are employed in their factory, and that in the event of the company failing to do so, the Dominion government should send these operatives back at the expense of the said Slater Company. The Canadian Federation is ready to reveal the names of the workingmen so imported to persons designated for that purpose by the government to look into the circumstances and make inquiry.

In consequence, the Canadian Federation urgently appeals to the government to enforce the law and to duly protect Canadian labour ; and hopes that the government will do its duty.

That a copy of the present resolution be forwarded to the right honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister of Canada, and to Sir William Mulock, the Minister of Labour.

True copy of the minutes of the said meeting.

(Signed) T. BEAUPRE,
President.

(Signed) A. J. DIONNE,
Secretary.

My right hon. friend will see that this is a grave question in a factory which does a considerable quantity of government work. The authorities of the manufactory dismiss a large number of Canadian workingmen, and contrary to law, import from the United States, from Boston and vicinity a certain number of American workmen to replace those Canadian workmen, who, under coercion and contrary to their own interests, are obliged to quit the factory. I will not ask the hon. Minister of Labour (Hon. Sir William Mulock), because I am afraid he has not proved during this session that he has taken up the case of the workingmen with any desire to protect their interests, but I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister what is being done to put an immediate stop to this state of affairs ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Could my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) give me the date upon which the resolution was passed ?

Mr. MONK. The 9th October. I understand they communicated it immediately to the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not that I am aware of. I received on Friday a delegation of this very body of the Canadian Federation of United Shoemakers of Canada.

Mr. MONK. They brought it up with them, I suppose.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, they did not bring it up that I am aware of. They brought up a further subject but not this one. Of course, the moment the matter is brought to my attention it will be my duty to attend to it. I am not aware that the matter has been brought to my attention and this is the first intimation that I have received of it unless it came in the regular way in the correspondence and was transferred to the Department of Labour. At all events this is the first intimation I have had of the matter and I will make it my duty to give it my immediate attention.

NEWSPAPER AGENTS AND POSTMASTERS IN QUEBEC.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, although the hon. Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) is not in his seat it is my duty to call the attention of the government to a state of affairs that to my knowledge has never existed before. I intend to move the adjournment of the House to put myself in order, seconded by Mr. Bell. The agents of the government newspapers are going to every postmaster in the province of Quebec and insisting on getting from these public officers the names of the subscribers to all the newspapers which have not either the privilege or the disadvantage of being government organs. I speak from personal knowledge. I speak of facts that I am in a position to establish when I say that they get from nearly every postmaster in the province of Quebec the names of subscribers to newspapers—I say it again—who have not the privilege or the disadvantage of being government organs. I would like to know whether the same privilege would be extended to all the newspapers or if the privilege which has never been exercised to my knowledge during the last twenty-five years is to be confined to the agents of government newspapers. This is a very serious state of affairs. The postmasters do not any longer keep secret what is going on in their offices. Not only have government officers been allowed to canvass for government papers, but the postmaster of the Public Works Department, a gentleman whom I appointed myself, has been given a leave of absence under the pretext of illness.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is not an officer of my department.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It does not matter, I am addressing myself to this House and the country. I am placing before them a particular state of affairs which is a very serious one. A public officer, the postmaster of the Department of Public Works, has been given leave of absence under the pretext of illness and he has been acting as chief circulation agent of the government organ in Montreal. His son, who, I believe, is not of age, has been appointed to his place at $1,200 a year. The gentleman to whom leave of absence on account of illness has been given has not been sick at all. He was not sick and the hon. minister knew he was not sick. I state the fact ; he knew he was not sick. He has been canvassing as chief circulation agent of the government organ in Montreal and his son has been receiving his salary. In addition to that the postmasters of the province of Quebec have been forced to give the names of the subscribers of newsapers, which, in the estimation of some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, are not friendly to them, to the agents of government organs. I want to know whether the same privilege will be given to all the newspapers. For instance, will the agents of 'La Patrie' be allowed to go to the postmasters in the province of Quebec and ask for the names of the subscribers of the newspapers received in their locality ? I will not object at all if the rule is applied to everybody. I do not rise to personally complain. As far as the newspapers I am connected with is concerned we have not suffered in spite of what may have been said in the past. Our circulation is larger to-day than it was a year ago.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes, that is true to-day. I observe that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) says hear, hear. I am prepared to issue a challenge to him. I repeat that our circulation is larger to-day. The circulation of our two newspapers is larger to-day than it was a year ago, so that I do not complain personally, only I want to know whether such a state of affairs as that which I have described is to be allowed to continue. Will a postmaster in the province of Ontario be allowed to give the names of the subscribers of the 'Mail,' or the 'World,' or the 'Globe' and if so I want to know whether the same privilege will be extended to us in the province of Quebec. The hon. Postmaster General. I hope will give us a satisfactory answer on that point.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) what use this gentleman makes of the information he obtains from the postmaster ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not know that we should go farther on that point. I am only discussing the question of privilege. As to the use that is made of it, it is a very simple thing. Of course, the agents go to the subscribers of the papers that are supposed not to be friendly to my hon. friends on the treasury benches and offer their own newspapers. This is being done all over the province of Quebec. Provided the same laws apply to all I do not care.

The PRIME MINISTER (Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier)). It is evident that my hon. friend is proceeding under a delusion. He magnifies the work of a probably over-zealous agent into a government system. The hon. gentleman charges that the postmaster of the Public Works Department has obtained leave of absence from the minister under the pretense of illness, and he says the minister knew this official was not ill. I refuse to believe that the minister would give leave of absence, knowing that the official was not ill, but the minister will be here to speak for himself. I believe that if this official asked for leave of absence, he did it in the regular way, and I do not think that the minister had reason to suppose that he was imposed upon, if he was imposed upon.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is a question of fact. If the right hon. gentleman will apply to some of his friends in the House, they will tell him that the minister was approached and asked that Mr. Latour should be sent out as he was a very essentiai agent.

The PRIME MINISTER. We heard a similar statement in this House a few days ago, and I understand the Minister of Public Works did not admit its accuracy. At all events, if the minister has given an improper leave of absence, it will be for the House to deal with the minister who is responsible. It is also stated that this officer is now acting as a canvassing agent for certain newspapers, and that he goes to the postmasters in several parts of the country, and asks to see the lists of subscribers to different newspapers. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has made the charge in such a way as to imply, that the postmasters had received an order from the Post Office Department to allow an agent for papers friendly to the government, to have access to the list of subscribers to other papers. On that point, the hon. gentleman is absolutely under a delusion. No such order has been given by the Postmaster General's department. If any postmasters have done that, they have done it without authority, and on their own responsibility, and without being ordered by anybody to do it.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. My point is that I want to know if it is proper for postmasters to act in this way. I can tell my right hon. friend that not one but twenty men are doing the same thing now. Nearly all the postmasters in the province of Quebec—a great many of them are Liberals now—have been told that they have to do it, and they are doing it every day. I am prepared to prove to my hon. friend that it is actually a system now. If it is proper for the postmasters to do this, then I have nothing to say.

The PRIME MINISTER. As to that, I had better give the floor to the Postmaster General who will answer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand the hon. member (Hon. Mr. Tarte) to make three distinct statements. He states, that the postmaster of the Public Works Department has been engaged in canvassing for a newspaper, and that in the course of his canvass he has obtained information from the postmasters as to the names of persons to whom other newspapers were being sent.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not allude to him more than to any other agent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member further states that, the minister gave leave of absence to this officer, although the minister knew that the illness on which he obtained leave of absence did not exist.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman allude to me ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Not by any means.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then, the Minister of Public Works will deal with that, and he probably will be here before this discussion ends. I have no doubt that the Minister of Public Works will give a satisfactory explanation. The third statement of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) was, that postmasters were being forced to give information of this nature.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not say forced.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I took down the word 'forced' as it fell from the hon. gentleman's lips, but if he used it inadvertently he can modify the statement. Does the hon. gentleman say that the postmasters have acted under the direction of those who alone can give orders.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I say they have so acted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At whose instance ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I say that gentlemen acting for government organs in Montreal are going to these public officers telling them that they represent the Liberal party, the government, and asking them in that capacity for the names of subscribers to other papers. I say that in not one case, but in a hundred cases and perhaps more, this information is disclosed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) distinctly said that postmasters have been forced to give these names.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. They have been practically forced ; I repeat that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman desires to suggest by that statement that any pressure has been brought to bear upon postmasters by the responsible head of the department, or by any official of this department ; he has been misinformed. Further, I challenge him to make good that statement.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Let the Postmaster General keep cool as I do. What statement does he want me to make good.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman said that postmasters had been forced to give the names of subscribers. If he implies that the Postmaster General or any official in the employment of the Postmaster General, or any officer of the government, forced postmasters or brought pressure to bear upon the postmasters to disclose the confidential information they possess by giving the names of the addressees of mail matter, I say that he cannot make good any such charges as that.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I never said that the Postmaster General or any of his officers gave instructions to that effect, but I do say that nearly all the postmasters in the province of Quebec, and even in the province of Ontario are giving that information. I say that they have been approached by agents of the party in office, and told that they have to give that information, and they are giving it. Surely the Postmaster General will not shield himself behind words. If you give me a Committee of the House I will prove within twenty-four hours that the postmasters are giving that information, in not one case, but in one hundred cases. Is it permissible for the postmasters to do that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman has qualified his original statement.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. We will see; we will see.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps I may be permitted to present my view of it. We are winding up a session in a debate not of to-day only, but of several days, of misrepresentation. This is in keeping with the tenor of previous debates. The hon. gentleman has sought to convey the impression that the postmasters of this country were more or less, by reason of the authority of or pressure from the government——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I did not say that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman said that postmasters were being forced to disclose the names of subscribers of newspapers. I challenge my hon. friend to prove—we will give him a chance to do so if he can—that the government or any officer of the government, with any consent of the government, or with their acquiescence or knowledge, has invited, or pressed, or authorized, or in any way warranted, the postmasters to disclose the names of the addressees of newspapers in any part of Canada. If my hon. friend had been attending to his duties in parliament he would not have felt it necessary to raise this question to-day; because in Committee of Supply the other day it was raised by an hon. gentleman opposite, and I was asked to state my attitude in regard to the matter. The view I announced then is my view to-day, and it has been the attitude of the government ever since this government has been in existence. I stated then, and I state now, the information which postmasters possess as to the names of the addressees of mail matter of any kind, whether it consists of letters, parcels, newspapers or any other matter that may pass through the mails, is confidential; and they are not warranted in disclosing that information to any human being except the addressees themselves. I stated that in the most unqualified way. I stated then, and I state now, that if any hon. gentleman will specify the name of any officer of my department who has been guilty of any breach of confidence, I will feel it my duty to discipline that officer in a way appropriate to his offence. Is that a fair attitude ? Does my hon. friend take exception to it ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not take exception to that statement; very far from it. My hon. friend has made the right statement, and I congratulate him upon it. It is worthy of a Minister of the Crown. But I state again that over one hundred postmasters in the province of Quebec and in other provinces also have given freely the information which I have stated to the House. If my hon. friend wants me to make charges against them all in order that he may dismiss them, I am prepared to do it, although I do not wish any ill-luck to anybody; but these are the facts of the case. I will give him, with pleasure, the names of these officers, if he wishes to have them. What I meant to convey was this, that the postmasters, being approached by agents of the party in power, thought they were obliged to give that information, and they have given it freely. I am glad my hon. friend the Postmaster General has vindicated his position, and I congratulate him on the statement which he has just made and which I accept altogether.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then my hon. friend will see that it is only fair for him to modify his views. He overstated what he had in his mind.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have not.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will my hon. friend permit me to suggest that perhaps now he owes a duty to this House. He as a man of affairs knows that men enjoying the good will of a particular party, the party in power for the moment, may go about canvassing. Our supporters, our friends, our sympathizers are legion in number, and they perhaps act as agents to procure subscribers for newspapers. Men who are engaged in canvassing for anything are zealous, and these men may go to a postmaster, and may bring to bear whatever arguments may occur to them in order to obtain such assistance as will enable them to succeed in their enterprises; but that does not mean that they are agents for the government or have any authority from the government. There is no human being authorized by the government to exact such information as my hon. friend says has been imparted by postmasters. The postmasters themselves ought to be possessed of sufficient intelligence to know that any person who drops in and asks them for the names of the addressees of mail matter, have not any authority to demand it, simply because they choose to ask for it; and I would ask my hon. friend, since he says he can do so, to furnish me with the names of the postmasters who he says have been transgressors; and, as I stated before, these cases will be duly investigated, and the postmasters will be disciplined. The officers will of course be given an opportunity to explain what they have done, and steps will be taken to prevent any repetition of such action in the future.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Would it not be well for the hon. gentleman to issue instructions to the postmasters generally that they must keep confidential what my hon. friend wants to be kept confidential? I accept with pleasure the hon. gentleman's offer, and I undertake to give him the names of dozens and dozens of postmasters——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hundreds.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Dozens and dozens of names from hundreds of postmasters. I will undertake, with pleasure, to give the names to my hon. friend; and if he feels that the proper discipline would be dismissal, it is for him to say.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, I will undertake that the postmasters who he says have transgressed will never repeat the offence. Throughout the whole of this country there has been a practice for many years of postmasters acting as agents for newspapers, and they are not interfered with. Postmasters are permitted to act as agents to receive subscriptions for all papers, without regard to the politics of the papers. If the House desires that that practice should be put an end to, the government and the department will give every consideration to that view. It will cut both ways.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood that there was a charge made in this House, not only to-day, but some two weeks ago, that an officer of the government, while ostensibly absent on his vacation, had been engaged in canvassing for a newspaper, and had been obtaining from postmasters in the province of Quebec the names of subscribers to certain newspapers in that province.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I do not make the charge directly against that officer. I make the general charge that postmasters in the province of Quebec have given information to agents of government organs. I do not know whether Mr. Latour himself has gone to these postmasters.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know how that may be. The matter was discussed in the House some ten days ago, and I think it would have been very well for the Postmaster General then to have issued the circular which he now proposes to issue. The men who are engaged in this work are inducing the postmasters to commit a breach of the law. Is it not an offence under the Post Office Act, or a breach of the regulations of the department, for postmasters to communicate information of this kind? Would my hon. friend inform me as to that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say what the regulations are; but if there is no regulation covering the case, there ought to be one. I think I have made my view quite clear. Regulation or no regulation, the duty rests upon the postmaster to observe the strictest confidence as to the names of addressees. I would not think a regulation was necessary in order to impress that duty on a postmaster. And the other evening when the matter was brought up, no specific charge was made; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) made a statemen that this particular officer had been engaged in the work, and that night I asked the member for Compton to give me the information which I now ask from the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal (Mr. Tarte), to give me the names of the officers whom he says have offended. I promised to investigate the charge if that information was given me, but it has not yet been given, and again we have an indefinite charge made.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I will give the information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was in hopes that my hon. friend the Postmaster General could have told us what the law in regard to this is. I agree with him that if there is no regulation there should be one, and if there is a regulation then we have a provision in the statutes that any man who violates that regulation is guilty of a misdemeanour. The men who are going through the province of Quebec doing this work, are engaged in the work of inducing officers of the Crown to commit a violation of the law. It would be the duty of the government, upon the matter having been brought to their attention, to take legal proceedings against these men who are corrupting officers of the law, if the provisions of the law are sufficient for the purpose, and if the law is not sufficient I hope it will be amended so that this work will be stopped. The Postmaster General challenges us to show that his department or any officer of his department has been guilty of this conduct.

Mr. GALLIHER. I understood that the Postmaster General made this challenge to the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte); I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to say that the Postmaster General challenged the opposition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I presume that there is some point in my friend's observation, but I do not exactly see it at present. Whether the officers of the department are doing this or not—and I am bound to take the statement of the Postmaster General that they are not doing it—certain persons representing organs of the government, are going, with the pretended authority of this government, to postmasters in Quebec and by means of that false claim, however false it may be, are obtaining information to which they are not entitled. That is one point of the observations of the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and it is a matter which invites the attention of the government, because whether or not any officer of the department is guilty of these acts, they cannot shut their eyes to the fact that their own supporters are, by their false pretenses and claims, coercing the postmasters of Quebec. They urge the fact that they are supporting the party in power, and they claim to have the right to have these postmasters dismissed or otherwise dealt with in case they do not furnish that information. I say that this demands the immediate attention of the government, and that the government should take proceedings against the postmasters themselves, but more especially against the men who are urging the postmasters, by threats of poltical influence, to do that which it is improper to do, and which, as I understand the law, it is unlawful to do. My hon. friend may issue as many challenges as he likes about the officers of the department, but my understanding is that this is being done by supporters of the government under the claim that they have the force and power of the government behind them. An admittedly wrong thing is being done, even according to the statements of the Postmaster General, who says that he does not know whether there is such a regulation. But he admits that if there is not a regulation there ought to be one. Under these circumstances I think that some action should have been taken by the Postmaster General before this; action cannot be taken by him too promptly under the circumstances that have been disclosed to the House to-day. And let me tell my hon. friend the Postmaster General who spoke in a somewhat sneering way of the absence from the House of my hon. friend from St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte), that I do not think any member of the government is in a position to say very much about that, because we have now before us this matter involving the Department of Public Works, and the Minister of Public Works cannot be found to answer the statement of the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal. We have had ministers of the Crown very frequently absent from their places in this House when we were discussing estimates in regard to which they could have given information that was desired. I quite understand that this absence is sometimes necessary, but yet I might advert to the fact that the Solicitor General—I do not know for what reason—has hardly made an appearance in the House during the present session. If we come to investigate the absence of presence of members, the hon. member for St. Mary's division can at least say that he has been in his seat in the House during this session about as much as any minister of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I believe I have, yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do hope that the Postmaster General will give this matter the attention which its importance demands, and I am led to believe that he will give it that attention by the fact that he has to-day very properly and promptly said that if the names of these postmasters are furnished to him he will take steps to investigate. But I do not think he should stop there; he should take steps to punish the men who have been inciting postmasters in Quebec and in Ontario as well—if the statement of the hon. member for St. Mary's division can be substantiated—under the guise of the pretended authority of this government, to commit a breach of their duty and of the law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend says that I should immediately take steps to deal with this subject. Permit me to suggest that perhaps a duty is cast on those who say that they possess information as to the misconduct complained of. Some days ago it was stated by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) that certain postmasters had disclosed confidential information and had given the names of subscribers to newspapers. I then asked the hon. gentleman to furnish me with the names of the postmasters whom he said had transgressed, and that information was promised to me. Some days have elapsed, but that information has not yet been given to me. How could I investigate the cases when I did not know the names of the accused? I then pointed out that we have ten thousand and more postmasters.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not urging action with respect to names not furnished; I admit at once that it would be impossible to do that, but I say that the names have been promised to-day, and when these names are furnished he should proceed to punish not only the postmasters, but those who urged them to commit a breach of the law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I told the House that when the names, are furnished to me I will then, for the first time, be in a position to intelligently investigate this charge. Can my hon. friend give me the names of the officer of my department whom he stated in the House yesterday had made certain threats against an express company?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know the name of the officer; I promised to give it yesterday, but the matter escaped my mind. I will give it to my hon. friend to-day. The name of the officer can be procured, I think, because the information has been furnished to me by the express company which was threatened.

Mr. EMMERSON. The question raised by the Postmaster General as to whether it is proper for postmasters to act as agents for the newspapers is a very important question. I know, as a matter of fact, that in the constituency which I have the honour to represent there have been in the past, and there may be now, postmasters who are acting as agents for a very large and important newspaper in the city of Montreal. I consider such acts very reprehensible, as against public interests and against the other newspapers, for the simple reason that such postmasters know what is the circulation of every newspaper that goes through their office. It is very unfair to the general public that any postmaster should be permitted to act as the agent of any newspaper. I wish to emphasize the point raised by the Postmaster General, and trust he will take action to prevent any postmaster acting in any such capacity.

Mr. GALLIHER. I must disagree with my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). The salary of many postmasters throughout the country is very small, and I see no harm in a postmaster earning an honest dollar by acting as agent for a newspaper.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). This practice, to which our attention has been drawn by the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), is not confined at all to the province of Quebec. To my knowledge these agents of newspapers supporting the government are travelling through the country seeking to obtain from the postmasters information as to the subscribers to all newspapers not friendly to the government. The postmasters are not the real culprits. We can find the remedy right here. One remedy would be for the Postmaster General to advise the postmasters not to give this information. They may not view the matter seriously and may give information to one side or the other without thinking they are doing great harm, and they may readily yield to the pressure brought on them by the agents of newspapers supporting the government. Another remedy would be for members of the government, who are behind these newspapers, to call off these men who are seeking this information. The real evil is not so much the postmasters giving the information as the agents of the government demanding it from them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are not agents of the government.

Mr. CLANCY. They are in an indirect sense.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In no sense.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman and his friends profit by it. My hon. friend beside me suggests that each minister has a paper of his own. We have no objection to agents of government newspapers going around the country getting information, but we object to its being furnished by the postmasters. The Postmaster General need not wait for an inquiry. All he need do is inform the postmasters what is their duty.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I see an announcement in the 'Citizen' this morning which I would draw to the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General. It is to the effect that two special trains will leave the capital to-day with Conservative campaign literature.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is out of order. That has no connection with the question before the Chair.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). To my mind the difficulty brought up by the hon. member for Montreal (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has its origin in the defective regulations of the department. The regulation plainly conveys to any postmaster the idea that he is free to give every information respecting the subscribers to newspapers which go through his office. Here is the regulation:

Article 176. No information can be given respecting letters which pass through the post office except to the persons to whom they are addressed and the senders on inquiry respecting delivery. The postmasters are not permitted to furnish any information respecting the names and addresses of persons who receive correspondence at their respective offices.

There is nothing in that regulation regarding newspapers. It is entirely restricted to letters. An agent therefore could readily persuade the postmaster that the intention of the government was that he should give that information. I think that until these regulations are revised and reprinted in the postal guide, a special regulation should at once be sent out to all the postmasters, making this rule 176 applicable to newspapers as well as to letters.

Motion to adjourn (Hon. Mr. Tarte) negatived.

THE USE OF MAIL BAGS.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to ask if the hon. First Minister and the hon. Postmaster General have had a conference and what explanation he has to give the House ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I am pleased to inform my hon. friend that the difficulty to which he alludes has been successfully overcome. It involved considerable effort and a considerable expenditure of money, but we have done all that the resources of the country will permit. We ordered an additional supply of 1,000 mail bags, but I am sorry to say that that number was inadequate, and we have had to order 2,000. The delivery of these bags commences this afternoon and will continue rapidly, so that we hope soon to be able to place at the disposal of hon. gentlemen opposite all the bags now used in this very interesting and important public work. With reference to the dissemination of this literature, which my hon. friend characterized rather irreverently as 'stuff'——

Mr. TAYLOR. The right kind of stuff, too.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. I say with reference to this literature that we have made arrangements which I trust will successfully solve the difficulty. It is quite true that we have already chartered one special train, which will leave Ottawa as soon as the staff of special employees can be obtained to man it, I think, by to-night. You will observe a mountain of literature already adorning the front of the House of Commons, and that trainload is being conveyed to the station as rapidly as the available supply in this city will admit, and as fast as steam will carry it to its destination it will be despatched. I am sorry to say—no, I am not sorry, but the fact is that a second train, and perhaps a third train will be necessary. But our duty, we think, is first of all to clear the lobbies and halls of this building, as soon as that interesting task is performed, we will then proceed to try and clear out all the floor space that is occupied by this literature in the city post office. I hope that in the course of at least three days we will have despatched all these pieces to their destination, and they will afford, I am sure, most interesting reading to the addressees, and perhaps they will then consider, upon a careful perusal of them, whether the game has been worth the candle, whether the cost to which the country has been put is fully warranted by this very extraordinary procedure. However, it is probable that the country will demand some amendment of the franking privilege. It certainly has been grossly abused.

Mr. CLARKE. By none more so than by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no case on record since Canada had an existence where such an abuse of the system has occurred as in the present instance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is a somewhat remarkable thing that a certain amount of mail matter which, as we were told yesterday, could not be forwarded to its destination inside of six weeks, is now to be forwarded in 24 hours.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I made no such statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That shows what my hon. friend the Postmaster General is capable of, under a little pressure ; and I would suggest to my right hon. friend that if he is ever met with difficulties of this kind put forward by the Postmaster General, all he has to do is to exercise a little pressure upon him such as was exercised by my hon. friend the member from Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Taylor) yesterday, and he will find him capable of almost any feat. Why, yesterday this mail matter paralyzed the Ottawa office, it was piled up in mountains, it would require six weeks of special exertion to forward it to its destination. But only last night an officer of the hon. gentleman's department said it could all be cleared out within 24 hours. My hon. friend himself has practically repeated the same thing to-day, and he desires to make a little political capital by talking of the expenditure of public money. But he has never contradicted the statement that the equivalent of 25 or 30 bags have been sent out daily by hon. gentlemen opposite during the past six, or seven, or eight weeks. He has never contradicted that statement, nor has any hon. gentleman on the other side contradicted the statement that practically during all these weeks the addressing of envelopes has been done by servants of this country, paid by the people of this country, for hon. gentlemen opposite. That charge was made some days ago in the House, and I have not heard up to this time any absolute denial of it, except that I believe it was denied by the gentleman in charge of the Department of Public Works. The Postmaster General thinks, under these circumstances, that he is making a little political capital by talking of the expenditure of public money in forwarding this literature, which I venture to say, does not amount to in bulk or in cost of transmission to one-half of the campaign literature which has been forwarded by hon. gentlemen themselves during the present session. I am here reminded of the fact that my right hon. friend the Miniter of Trade and Commerce, if we are to talk about the franking privileges, distributed I do not know how many hundred thousand copies of a speech of his some years ago, when the House was not in session, and in violation of the rules which were laid down by Order in Council with respect to transmission of documents of that kind out of session ; and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce was invited at that time to contribute the sum of $25,000 to the treasury of Canada, being the amount which he ought to have paid for the distribution of that literature. I do not know whether that is the exact amount. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will, no doubt, make it good in time, because I am sure he expects to pay it before he ends his public career. It may not be convenient for him to do it at present, but we all appreciate the fact that he intends to do it at some time or other, and I do not think the department will be disposed to charge him interest on it. However, I am very glad indeed that the Postmaster General has been able to cope with this difficulty, and that we shall have these mail bags removed that have so long remained here, owing, so far as we can judge, to the fact that his department was not disposed to make a reasonable and moderate effort to forward this matter to its destination.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. the leader of the opposition is developing, if he will permit me to say so, a disposition to present a case in a very unfair light. I explained to him, I think, and it was something he well knows, that there is a vast difference between the surplus space that is afforded in mail cars for the extra literature such as this, and the case of a whole train, or a special train, set apart exclusively for work of that kind. The regular trains of the country have to carry much mail matter for the general public. What I stated was that the service supposed to be available for the extra postal matter here would not admit of more than 40 bags per day being handled in these postal cars. But, under the special arrangements which have been made, we have engaged trains and set them apart exclusively for this service, and with these extra trains we expect to be able to solve this problem within the next three days.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if it is his intention to insist upon the Postmaster General refunding to me the $32 that he illegally and illegitimately forced me to pay——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR—as express charges on matter that he should carry through the mails free. I want to say this one word—if the hon. gentleman, having been fortunate enough in his youth to receive an education——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. If the hon. gentleman wants to ask a question he can do so in the usual way, that is to say, without any discussion and without any statement of facts, simply putting the question.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman just criticised the words I made use of yesterday and I think it is my duty——

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing before the Chair.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, it will come before the Chair. My statement is this—it will only take a minute—I think I have a right, in justice to myself, to make an explanation. The hon. gentleman referred yesterday to the fact, and did again to-day, that I used the word 'stuff.' Now, I can find that in the dictionary.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is not a personal explanation.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a personal explanation to myself. He accused me of using a word that can be found in the dictionary. But he used a word, 'sortation,' a word that cannot be found in any dictionary.

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope my hon. friend the Postmaster General will refund to my hon. friend from Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Taylor) any undue expenditure he may have had to make; in the same way as he has asked my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce to refund to the treasury a sum which may be due for a similar purpose. But, to proceed with the business of the House, my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) asked a question a moment ago of my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). My right hon. friend is now in his place if the hon. gentleman would repeat his question.

INSPECTION OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. ALCORN asked :

1. By what method does Joseph Haycock, inspector of binder twine, proceed to collect penalties from storekeepers or dealers whom he finds exposing for sale binder twine improperly marked or deficient in quantity ?

2. Has he collected such penalties without process, under the 'Summary Conviction Act,' or other proceedings, on information before a justice of the peace or other court ?

3. If so, from whom, when, where, and in what sums in each case has he so made such collections ?

4. Has he made a return of such moneys so collected to any and what authority, and when and by what means ?

5. If not what disposition has he made of such moneys so collected ?

6. What instructions were given to the said Joseph Haycock as to collections of penalties under 'An Act respecting the Packing and Sale of certain Staple Commodities ? '

7. Had he instructions from any and what department of the government, or any and what officer thereof, that he has the power, as inspector of binder twine, to collect such penalties any and how otherwise than by proceeding under the 'Summary Convictions Act' or than through a court ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) :

1. The methods of the inspector of binder twine in collecting penalties from parties whom he finds offering for sale twine improperly marked or deficient in quantity is to point out the requirements of the Inspection Act and the penalties therein imposed for its infraction. He has collected penalties without process under the 'Summary Conviction Act.' In no instance has the party subjected to penalty objected to the payment of the minimum penalty rather than have the matter brought up and prosecution entered under due process of law.

2. Answered, as above.

3. Total collected, $506.75.

4. The fines so collected have been regularly deposited to the credit of the receiver general.

5. Answered as above.

6. No special instructions were given to the inspector with reference to the collection of penalties. His instructions were to see that the terms of the Act were carried out.

7. When the question of the collection of penalties was submitted by the Department of Trade and Commerce to the Department of Justice, the reply was that 'Under subsection 2 of section 7, as amended by 2 Edward VII., chapter 32, it is provided that all binder twine deficient in quantity shall be confiscated to the Crown. The binder twine seized in this case appears to have been deficient in quantity and would, therefore, be liable to be confiscated to the Crown and could then be dealt with by your department (Trade and Commerce) in any way that it sees fit.' However, the deputy minister adds that he does not see anything in the Act that would authorize the confiscation of the twine upon view, and that it might be strictly necessary to take legal proceedings to enforce confiscation. That this, however, is scarcely worth while for such small quantity, 'and I see no objection to selling the twine back to the owners, as suggested.' The action taken in connection with this twine matter has been such as to cause the least possible annoyance to parties with whom twine not in compliance with the Act was found.

FISHERY OVERSEER AT BATHURST, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine), if he has received any complaint concerning the alleged misconduct of an officer of his at Bathurst, N.B., named William C. Robichaud, who is accused of using his office as a fishery overseer at Bathurst for the purpose of gaining votes for himself in an election in which he is a candidate ? The accusation is that this man is allowing persons who promise to support him to fish illegally and a complaint to that effect has been made to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and an investigation asked for. I would ask the hon. minister if he has received any such complaint and what is his intention in respect to an investigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I received such information this morning only.

CATTLE-GUARD COMMISSION.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Fielding) if the commission appointed to investigate the cattle-guard question, and for which we voted a large sum of money, have made a report and if we will have the report laid upon the Table before the House adjourns I think that last year we voted some $5,000 towards the expenses of the commission, and the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) assured us in committee from time to time that before the House rose the report would be forthcoming. This is a report in which the public are very much interested. I understand the report has been made but that it is not yet before the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The report has been submitted and there is no objection to it being laid on the Table. The cattle-guard question has been dealt with by legislation at the present session, and I did not suppose that there was any particular desire for the report, but there is no objection to it being laid on the Table, and I will have it placed on the Table before the House closes.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, may I ask the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) for a moment? I think he promised to give us a statement showing the number of miles of railway subsidized and the aggregate subsidies promised for each of the provinces. I would like to know if he is prepared to give that statement now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the statement has been made, and I am having it copied. I think that during the day I will be able to hand it to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell).

STEAMER 'EUREKA.'

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask to be allowed to put myself right in reference to a matter with which I was occupied in my capacity of Minister of Public Works. I have read some reflections in the press regarding the matter. I refer to the use by Mr. Lacoste of one of the boats of the Department of Public Works named the 'Eureka.' I agreed with Mr. Cantin to have an invention of Mr. Lacoste applied to the boat a year ago when the season's work was over. When I left office the installation of the invention was not completed. The boat was still in the dock. I resigned or withdrew from the government on the 20th of October last. A test of the invention was made this spring or during the first months of the summer. I never loaned the boat to Mr. Lacoste for the test. I simply made an arrangement with Mr. Lacoste that was carried out by Mr. Cantin to the effect that the department would pay $3,000 for the installation of the invention, the government taking the right of using the invention free of charge if it should be successful. The test which has been made since has not been made under instructions from me written or verbal. I do not blame the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) for having made the test. It is his business; it is not mine. I never loaned the boat, and I never made any arrangement with Mr. Lacoste that he should use the boat this spring. On the contrary my intention was to test the invention under the control and direction of the officers of the Public Works Department. That was my intention, and I did not make a bargain with Mr. Lacoste or any one else to the contrary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid I did not even read the answer which I gave to the question before I presented it to the House. The statement is made by the officers of the department who are responsible for giving the official information of the department in answer to questions. Several answers were prepared that day, and I submitted them as they had been prepared by the department, supposing that the officers were in possession of the information and knew the facts. I shall look into the matter.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The information is altogether incorrect.

CAMPAIGN LITERATURE AND SPECIAL TRAINS.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (Toronto). I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General as to the time the special trains conveying the Conservative literature are to leave, and from what depots? It will be an important departure; and we would also like to know how many bags there will be in each car, and what accommodation will be provided for the officials. There will be a crowd there to see them depart.

The PRIME MINISTER. The matter is under consideration.

EXPENSE INCURRED BY GLOUCESTER COUNTY, N.B., FOR CARE OF SMALL-POX PATIENTS.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if any application has been made from the county of Gloucester, N.B., for assistance in respect to paying an amount of $9,000 expenses incurred in that county on account of small-pox. Small-pox was introduced into the county by some person coming over the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec or some other part of the country in the west and considerable expense has been incurred. I would like to ask if any application has been made to the government for a contribution on the part of the government towards defraying that expense.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no recollection of it at this moment. Perhaps it may have been made. I will inquire in the Department of the Interior and give an answer to my hon. friend.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION—CORRESPONDENCE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I desire to lay on the Table of the House certain correspondence between the government of His Excelelncy the Governor General and the imperial authorities concerning negotiations which led to the treaty to refer the Alaskan boundary question to a tribunal composed of judicial experts and upon the appointment of experts. I may say that the correspondence is not complete. I expect to be able to lay on the Table some more correspondence on the same subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the correspondence which has been brought down afford the House any information as to whether the Canadian commissioners have published a so-called protest, which has been cabled and published in the Canadian newspapers? I understood yesterday that the Prime Minister had no information on the subject, but possibly he may have information to-day. I would also ask if the government have information as to what were Lord Alverstone's reasons for ceding the islands at the mouth of the Portland canal to the United States. The so-called protest of the Canadian commissioners to which I have referred, contains this statement:

A memorandum was prepared and read to the commissioners, embodying our views, and showing it to be beyond dispute that the Canadian contention in this branch of the case should prevail, and that the boundary should run to the northward of the four islands named, thus giving them to Canada. Notwithstanding these facts the members of the tribunal, other than ourselves, have now signed an award giving two of the islands, Kannaghunut and Sitklan, to the United States.

It seems to me that the exact facts with regard to that part of the award, should be laid on the Table of the House at the earliest possible moment. If necessary, the government should cable for the information, so that we may have it to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER. The only information which we have on that point is what is common property, and has been published in the newspapers. I do not suppose that we can expect to have authentic information upon that point until we are in possession of the official proceedings of the commission, which will no doubt contain the reasons of the commissioners, individually and collectively, as well as the dissent of our commissioners. It would be a good thing that at the earliest possible moment, the government should issue a blue-book—even during the recess—containing all the proceedings and negotiations, from the time the joint high commission parted at Washington, up to the very last paper we have on the subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the correspondence which has been laid upon the Table, and the correspondence which the Prime Minister proposes to lay on the Table during the day—does it include all the correspondence and proceedings up to this time, or are certain portions of it regarded as confidential, on account of some objection which I understand has been raised?

The PRIME MINISTER. The British authorities have not allowed the communication to parliament of certain portions of the correspondence. The matter is still under the consideration of the colonial authorities. As soon as permission is given, that correspondence will be made public during the recess, if not before.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The correspondence when it is brought down, will include all documents to the publication of which certain objections have been raised.

The PRIME MINISTER. Everything.

Mr. CLARKE. There has of course been no objection raised to the publication of the correspondence from this government to the imperial authorities?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, there has. The colonial authorities have objected to the publication of the correspondence which has taken place between them and us, both as to what has been sent from here and as to what we received from England. In the course of time, everything must certainly be published and will be published.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Borden (Halifax):

That twelve managers be appointed to meet the managers appointed by the Senate at the time and place fixed for the holding of the conference desired upon the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill entitled: An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved:

That the said managers be: Sir William Mulock, Mr. Fielding, Mr. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Haggart, Mr. Blair, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Mr. Monk, Mr. Barker, Mr. Emmerson, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Demers (Iberville) and Mr. Wade.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC BRIDGE AGREEMENT.

On the Order being called for the House to go into committee on certain resolutions respecting the granting of aid to the Quebec bridge:

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In moving that you do now leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of having the House consider in committee certain resolutions which have been submitted with respect to the granting of aid to the Quebec bridge, I wish to take advantage of the opportunity to make a brief statement. The importance of another bridge across the St. Lawrence, at or near the city of Quebec, has been recognized for many years by gentlemen on both sides of the House. Several years ago this government came to the conclusion that the time for action had arrived, anl it was authorized to assist the company which had undertaken to bring about the construction of that bridge. A company was formed in the city of Quebec, with a capital of $200,000, with power to issue bonds in the usual way in connection with such public undertakings. The movement was recognized as one of great importance in the city of Quebec, in the province of Quebec and in the Dominion generally. The city of Quebec manifested its substantial interest in the movement by contributing a subsidy to the bridge of $300,000 ; the government of the province of Quebec manifested its interest in the enterprise by contributing a subsidy of $250,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that an absolute gift ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, in both cases a free and absolute gift, and the money has been paid. The government of the Dominion also agreed to aid the undertaking by a guarantee of $1,000,000. The grants given by the city of Quebec, and by the government of Quebec have been paid, and of the grant offered by the parliament of Canada of $1,000,000, there has been paid the sum of $374,353. The company, with a capital of $200,000 nominally, have actually paid up and put into the treasury $65,585 of their private funds. With the capital of the company, with the aids granted by the city of Quebec, the province of Quebec and the Dominion of Canada, and with the power to issue bonds, the company proceeded to construct the bridge and they have made very considerable progress.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What has actually been paid by the government here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Three hundred and seventy-four thousand three hundred and fifty-three dollars. The company proceeded to let contracts and enter upon the undertaking. The substructure has been completed, and a portion of the superstructure. The work actually done by the company up to the present time represents an expenditure of $1,416,394. That expenditure has been made from private capital, from the gift of the province of Quebec, which has been paid in full, from the gift of the city of Quebec, which has also been paid in full, and from the gift of the Dominion government, which was $1,000,000, but which has been paid to the extent of only $374,353. The company have been obliged to issue bonds to assist the undertaking, and these bonds to the amount of $472,000 are outstanding. These bonds were given to the contractor in part payment, and he accepted them at 60 per cent of their face value ; so that while they represent a bonded indebtedness upon the enterprise of $472,000, the actual cash received from them was $283,279. There is now due to the contractors and others $779,551. This includes, however, the $472,000 of bonds at their par value.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. To whom is the balance of $779,000 due ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a cash balance due the contractors, besides the outstanding issue of bonds. There are some charges for engineering and other things, but it is substantially due to the contractors. The company find themselves unable to prosecute the undertaking further, although the commercial prospect of the bridge is fairly good. I think most people who have looked into it as a business enterprise will agree to that. But even when an enterprise has an excellent prospect of commercial success, it is not easy to raise capital for a very large undertaking. This is a very large undertaking. The total cost of the bridge is estimated by Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, at $7,503,725. That includes not merely the bridge proper, but the approaches, and the terminal facilities in the city of Quebec.

Now, inasmuch as the company are not likely to be able to prosecute the work successfully, the government have deemed it wise to come to the relief of the company and the enterprise, and to change their form of aid. As I have already stated, we have granted $1,000,000, of which only $374,353 has been paid. The remainder is still in the treasury of Canada. We propose to cancel that balance, and to say that the company shall receive no further aid in the way of a subsidy or a gift, but that instead we shall grant them aid in the form of a guarantee, which we think, from the information which we have, will not ultimately cost the Dominion one cent. We quite realize that in all guarantees there is a measure of risk ; but so far as information is obtainable from competent railway men, we think there is a fair ground for the statement that the earnings of this enterprise will meet all its obligations, and that in adopting the form of a guarantee instead of actually contributing anything more to the bridge, we are cancelling an obligation of some $600,000 or more, which we would otherwise be obliged to pay. Of course, we give the company more valuable assistance for the moment by the guarantee, because by that means the enterprise will be carried to a success. With our grant of $1,000,000, the company would not have been able to finance the enterprise so successfully as they will be with the guarantee. We propose, therefore, to guarantee a sum of money, in the form of bonds bearing 3 per cent interest and running fifty years, to a sufficient extent to meet the outstanding indebtedness and to complete the bridge.

But when we come to deal with the question of outstanding indebtedness, we find, as I have pointed out, that while as respects the bonds there is an indebtedness of $472,000, the actual value of the work which they represent is only $283,279, the difference representing a discount on the bonds, which the contractors were only willing to take on the basis of 60 cents on the dollar. We think we ought not to be called on to cover that discount or deficiency by a government guarantee. It is perhaps very common, in connection with the financing of an undertaking of this character, that bonds have to be sold at a discount. The discount in this case is perhaps larger than usual. However, the fact remains that there is outstanding in bonds secured by first mortgage on this bridge, the sum of $472,000, while the actual value represented in cash we have placed at $283,279. We think the difference, representing a discount of $188,000, should be met by the company themselves, and should not be covered by the government guarantee. We have, therefore, required them to subscribe for and pay up new capital to the amount of $200,000, which will practically all be applied to the payment of so much of these bonds as represent the discount. So that in applying our guarantee to the debts of the company, we shall be applying it only to that portion for which we have value received, while that portion which does not represent value received, but which represents a discount on the bonds, must be provided for by a further subscription and payment of private capital.

The company, as it stands now, has an actual paid-up capital stock of some $65,000, and it will issue a further sum of $200,000, making a total capital subscribed and paid up of $265,000 ; and we provide that no new stock of any kind shall be issued upon the undertaking, except the bonds which are to be guaranteed by the government, and that no liabilities can be incurred in the meantime except with the consent of the government ; so that the security which the government will have, will be, we think, very good.

The amount required to pay the outstanding debts and to complete the undertaking is estimated at $6,866,882. But that includes the payment of these bonds at par. We, therefore, deduct from that amount $188,721, which the private capitalists are obliged to provide for. That brings the balance required to pay the debts and complete the undertaking to $6,678,200. That amount we propose to guarantee in bonds bearing interest at 3 per cent for fifty years. We propose that the interest of the government shall be protected by having three directors on the board.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you repay the bonds themselves, or only guarantee the interest ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We guarantee both the principal and interest. On the question of the earning powers of the bridge, we have some information which has already been laid before the House in the document entitled : 'Papers relating to the Quebec Bridge.' We have had estimates as to the probable number of cars which will use the bridge, and as to the probable revenue from various sources. There are a number of railways which will use the bridge immediately, because they touch both sides of the river ; and undoubtedly, with the early development of trade, especially in connection with the new transcontinental railway, which will cross the Quebec bridge, there is no reason to doubt that any returns based on the present traffic will be sound and safe, because there is every prospect of a large increase at no distant date. We have information as to the probable earnings of the bridge from various sources. The late Mr. Walter Shanly, an eminent engineer, made an estimate as far back as 1885, in which he placed the earnings at $250,400. Mr. Walsh, the general passenger agent of the Quebec Central, in 1897 estimated the earnings at $259,164. Mr. J. G. Scott, the general manager of the Lake St. John Railway, in 1899, confirmed the estimate of Mr. Shanly, placing the figures at $250,000. And Mr. Grundy, of the Quebec Central, a gentleman of high standing, who still takes a very deep interest in this work, has estimated the earnings at substantially the same amount as Mr. Shanly and Mr. Walsh. Substantially therefore these gentlemen, the late Mr. Shanly, Mr. Walsh, of the Quebec Central, Mr. Scott, of the Quebec and Lake St. John, and Mr. Grundy, estimated some years ago that the earnings would be $250,000 per year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And we did not know anything then about the transcontinental.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; my hon. friend, with his natural sense of fairness, points out that at that time they knew nothing about the transcontinental project. Nor did they even know that the Great Northern was to be constructed. The conditions have therefore been changed since these reports were made, but whatever change has taken place is in favour of the enterprise, because the volume of business is increasing. We have had inquiries made very recently by officers of our own government, officers of the Intercolonial, into the probable earnings of the bridge. Mr. Tiffin, the general traffic manager of the Intercolonial, has made a report on the subject, the substance of which will be found in a letter addressed to me by Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer of government railways, dated Ottawa, September the 19th. Mr. Schreiber sums up as follows :

> With reference to the matter of the probable extent of traffic over the Quebec bridge, when constructed, as to which you desire some information. I have to state that, under date the 1st instant, Mr. Tiffin, the traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway, has furnished an estimate of the number of cars that, it may be anticipated, would cross the 'Quebec bridge' daily, not taking into consideration traffic that may arise from the construction of the proposed Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. This estimate is as follows :—

	Estimated number of cars daily.
Intercolonial Railway	130
Grand Trunk Railway	75
Quebec Central Railway..	71
Total..	276

Extended to a full year, the aggregate is 276 cars per day plus 313 days equal 86,388 cars, which at $4 each, amounts to $345,552 per annum.

As to the rate of $4 per car, I find that it is higher than the rates paid in Canada at some points, but lower than the rates paid on some of the large bridges in the United States.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did you take the working expenses into account ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not come to that. I am speaking of the possible earning powers. We have therefore, on the advice of the chief engineer of railways and canals, the probable earnings estimated at $345,552 per annum. Let us see now what our obligations are on the other side. Three per cent on the amount to be guaranteed will be $200,346. We are providing in addition that there shall be one-half per cent on the amount of guaranteed bonds set apart each year for the purpose of a sinking fund. That will not be sufficient to extinguish the loan in the fifty years. It will take about sixty-five years to extinguish the whole loan at that rate, but, in the common practice, we do not aim at extinguishing the whole loan but at having a very substantial sinking fund to assist in doing so. If this enterprise should continue in the hands of the company to the end of the fifty years, we shall have a sinking fund sufficient to extinguish about $3,750,000 of the debt, and there will be no difficulty whatever in financing the balance upon a new issue of bonds. However, I do not anticipate that that contingency will ever arise. No doubt long before that this bridge will be taken over and become the property of the government. We shall have annual interest, $200,346; the half per cent sinking fund, $33,391; or a total of $233,737 to pay every year. The working expenses are estimated by Mr. Frank Grundy of the Quebec Central at $85,000. Adding this to the $233,737 gives a total of $318,737, against which we shall have an income, which is estimated according to the estimates I have already given, confirmed by the chief engineer of railways and canals, at $345,552.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do the working expenses include repairs and depreciation ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under our contract repairs and renewals are considered as working expenses, and I take it for granted that these working expenses are included in the estimates I have given I am not sure whether Mr. Grundy did include working expenses, but I assume he did because he is a very capable railway man and would no doubt include them in his calculation.

Mr. BELL. I thought I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the interest would be about $200,000. But three per cent on $8,000,000 makes $240,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount we are guaranteeing is not $8,000,000 but $6,678,200. The whole cost is estimated at $7,500,000, but the amount we shall require to pay off existing indebtedness, not including discount on the bonds, and to complete the undertaking we estimate at $6,678,200. We have therefore a very safe margin on which to base our assurance that this bridge will, from the beginning, guarantee us against any loss; and while, by the step we are taking, we shall be giving aid in a better form and securing the completion of the bridge, we shall on the other hand not be adding to the obligations of the country ultimately, and be avoiding the payment of over $600,000, which otherwise we would be obliged to pay out of the million dollar grant already authorized and only partially paid.

My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) reminds me too that in this estimate of the cost we are including the customs duty to an amount approximating from $700,000 to $800,000, which will come back directly into the treasury. That is an additional fact to be taken into account.

While for the present we are assuming that it will be wise to allow this enterprise to remain in the hands of the company and let them complete the undertaking, we do not look forward to its remaining permanently in the company's hands. In view of the importance of the bridge and the number of railways which will pass over it and its relations to the new road we are about to construct, and for various other reasons, we think it is highly probable that, at no distant date, the government of Canada, no matter who may be in power, will desire to take possession of the road as a national work. Therefore, we are providing in the contract that we shall have power to take possession of the enterprise any time after completion, upon one month's notice. If we do, we shall then pay to the company the amount of net cash they put into the enterprise, which, according to the contract, will be $265,000, with interest at the rate of five per cent, less any dividend that may have been earned in the meantime. And we will pay them a premium of ten per cent on the par value of their stock, which is not an unusual thing in taking over an enterprise. That par value as fixed in the contract will be $265,000. Thus they will receive their money back with interest at five per cent, less any dividends which may be earned, and ten per cent advance on the money they have put in.

Mr. MONK. How soon does the hon. minister expect that the government will be obliged to take over the undertaking ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government will not be obliged to take it over at all.

Mr. MONK. But, as a matter of policy, my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Fielding) said that undoubtedly before long the undertaking will be taken over and become the property of the government. My hon. friend has touched on that point, and I would like to ask him if it is a matter of two or three years, or if it is to be taken over simultaneously with the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would be a matter for consideration. The company is allowed three years in which to complete the undertaking, and from the moment that the undertaking is completed we will have the right to take it over upon one month's notice. We can take it over at any time after 1906, whether the road is completed or not. On whichever event shall first happen, either the completion of the road or the arrival of that date three years hence, the government shall have the right to take over the undertaking, and I am inclined to think, as I said before, that any government which is in power will find at no distant date that it will be to the advantage of the Dominion to take over that bridge. However, there has been no arrangement in that form, but we have thought it wise to protect the people's right to acquire that bridge at any time after its completion or after 1906.

Mr. CLANCY. Is any time fixed in the contract at which that bridge is to be completed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is to be completed on the 1st December, 1906. In addition to that, the Minister of Justice calls my attention to the fact that if, during construction, we are not satisfied with the progress made, if the road is not being pushed forward to successful completion, the government shall have the right to take it over, apart from the general right they would possess afterwards. If we should take over the bridge at any time we would find ourselves in this position : The Quebec government would have contributed $250,000, the city of Quebec would have contributed $300,000; the government of Canada would have contributed in cash $374,000. So long as the enterprise remains in the hands of the company we treat these sums as free gifts, as they were intended to be, to the enterprise ; but if the Dominion takes over the bridge, we shall then become accountable to the government of the province of Quebec and to the city of Quebec to the extent of the money they have placed in the bridge.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why should you pay them for their advances ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because we think that if we take possession of the property as a national work, we should then be willing to account for these advances, but we become accountable to the province and the city of Quebec only for profits which the bridge may earn. We shall, under the contract which we have made with the company, have the right to take possession of the bridge, and the bridge becomes the property of the Dominion of Canada without any question as to title whatever. We do not recognize any title of the government of Quebec or of the city of Quebec in the bridge, but we do recognize the fact that they have contributed their respective sums of $250,000 and $300,000, and we will place these contributions in precisely the same position as the $374,000 which we have contributed. If the bridge earns anything beyond its working expenses and beyond the interest on its bonded indebtedness, if there are profits, we will divide these profits equitably among the contributors of the three amounts, but there shall not be paid to the government of Quebec or to the city of Quebec more than three per cent interest on the amount of their contributions. If the bridge does not earn anything beyond the working expenses and the interest on the bonded indebtedness, neither the city of Quebec nor the province of Quebec will receive a cent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have you fully provided for that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in the contract, section 21. If it becomes a profitable enterprise and we are making money out of it, we will account to the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec for three per cent on their money so long as we are making money out of it. If we do not earn money, neither the city nor the province of Quebec can receive a penny. They will have no title, but will have what I may call a deferred interest in the bridge to the extent of the amount they have contributed, and we may at any time extinguish that by paying the amount they have contributed to the bridge.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have they any lien on the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. None whatever.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why, then, do you create one ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not so long as the bridge remains in the hands of the company. They will give that as a free gift, but if we dispossess the company, take the bridge over and make money out of it, we think we should account to the city and province of Quebec for their share or pay off the indebtedness.

Mr. CLANCY. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the division of profits was to be made on the sum contributed by the government, the $374,000, as against the contributions of the city and province of Quebec, or as against the whole sum which the government will advance in taking over the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The $374,000 will be the only sum ; if we take the bridge over we will have the bonded indebtedness to carry, and that will be the first charge before any one can get any money other than the working expenses.

Mr. PRINGLE. Would it not be more advisable, in view of the government intending to take over this bridge, to simply guarantee the $472,000 bonds instead of contracting this issue of $200,000 of stock, which they may have to take over at a premium ? Would it not be better to simply guarantee the $472,000 at once and be done with it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No ; because in this case we will oblige the company to pay the $188,000 themselves out of their own pocket. No new stock can be created under this contract. The amount we will have to pay as premium on the stock will be one-tenth of the $265,000, or $26,500. That is the limit of the premium, and it is a small amount.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you think that you can get the stockholders to put their hands into their pockets and pay the $200,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They must pay the $200,000 more of their own money, every dollar of which must be paid up before they get this guarantee.

Mr. MONK. That is a good investment ; they get 5 per cent interest and 10 per cent premium.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a good investment, except that it might be fifty years before they can get it.

Mr. MONK. That is very doubtful.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say frankly that I think some of these days the bridge will be taken over. Of course, we cannot guarantee that a good government like the present will be here forever.

Mr. KAULBACH. Would it not be more advisable for the government to take it over at once as their own property and complete it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is something to be said in favour of that suggestion, but after full investigation we have concluded, since the company have made negotiations and have carried on some of the work, that we had better let them finish the work.

Mr. PRINGLE. Does the hon. minister consider the clause in this contract sufficient to guard the expenditure of this money ; that is, that the money shall be expended only in the construction of this bridge ? Are there sufficient guards thrown around the expenditure of the proceeds of these bonds ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We think we have sufficiently protected it in that respect. Money can only be paid for value put into the bridge upon the certificate of the government engineer.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I think it is a great pity that a matter of this importance has been brought to the attention of the House on the last day of the session ; I mean that to-day we are called upon to discuss a scheme of great magnitude, a very interesting scheme, and we have really not the time to bring to the consideration of that project its importance deserves. I see no necessity for such a wonderful and hasty proceeding. The condition of the Quebec bridge, its need of assistance, existed prior to the meeting of this House on the 12th of March last. It was fully discussed during the sitting of the Quebec legislature ; it formed the subject of a very careful investigation there, and of a lengthy discussion ; and it was stated during that discussion, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice knows, by the Prime Minister of Quebec himself, the president of this undertaking, that he would apply to the Dominion government for assistance. He was asked in the legislature if he contemplated seeking assistance from the city of Quebec and he said that he did not, neither did he contemplate seeking assistance from the legislature ; and if I am correctly informed, when asked whether he intended to apply for it here in Ottawa before the meeting of this legislature, he stated that he did. Under these circumstances, does it not appear rather unfair to the House that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice should, in the last hours, in the last minutes, one might almost say, of this session, come down with such a complicated plan as the one which he has presented to this House ? I mention this because I have always been favourable to that project, and the Conservative party, as members of this House are well aware, was committed to assisting the construction of the Quebec bridge before 1896. Circumstances of which I have little knowledge prevented the party then in power from carrying out its pledge. But the project was sanctioned, the necessity of that undertaking was admitted, and it was merely a question of knowing how best to help carry out that great enterprise. Therefore there is no difference of opinion in regard to the policy, at least that is the way I understand it ; the only difference of opinon is as to the way in which the thing can best be done.

Now, what I submit to this House, briefly, is that under the agreement of my hon. friend which he has submitted to the consideration of the House to-day, he confides the expenditure of a sum of over $6,500,000 to a company that has only put into that undertaking, so far as we can see, the sum of about $50,000, a company which is concentrated in the hands of a very few men, and they are charged with the expenditure of this sum of nearly $7,000,000 without any accountability to this House. According to the statement of my hon. friend, which of course we must take as well founded, it is the expectation that before long, if the transcontinental railway is going to be carried out, we shall take over that work, and it is going to become the property of the government. When I asked my hon. friend the acting Minister of Railways and Canals how soon he expected that would be done, he said that three years would be given to terminate the bridge. Under the expectation that the government are going to carry out that transcontinental railway as soon as possible, and if that bridge is terminated within three years, we will at that time, perhaps before, at any rate very soon after, under the general policy in connection with the transcontinental railway, be called upon to take up that work. So that we are confiding the construction of this bridge which we intend to make our own property, and the expenditure of a sum of over $6,500,000 to parties who are not responsible to the government. I say that we have no control over the spending of that money, no supervision, and that the interests of the city of Quebec and its vicinity, and the construction of that bridge and its approaches in such a way as to satisfy clearly the wants of the public at that point, are confided to a select few who form this company, without any accountability.

Clause 14, is the one under which this government is empowered to name three directors. But those directors are not obliged to make any report to the government, they are a minority in the board, and consequently that company that has a paid-up capital at the present moment of about $50,000—it is alleged $65,000—that company is going to have the spending of all this money and the carrying out of the work. Under these circumstances, the policy of the government being to see to the construction of that bridge, there being, as I understand it, no controversy about its utility, it seems to me it would have been far more proper for the government itself to undertake the construction of that bridge. My hon. friend may say that the government is only guaranteeing these bonds. But we must couple that statement with the statement made by the minister that we are going to take over that property, that it is a necessary link in the transcontinental railway, and I think—because I do not want to go into the details, the calculations have been placed before this House by my hon. friend—but I think there can be no doubt in the mind of any member in this House that we are going ultimately to take up that property and make it a Dominion government property. Under these circumstances are we right to confide the spending of this money and the conduct of this undertaking, with its approaches to Quebec on one side and to Lévis on the other, to a company concentrated in the hands of so few people, when it appears to be obvious that the control of that important undertaking and the progress of the work ought to be continually under the eyes of the government and under the eye of this parliament.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that that company has not given conclusive proof of its competency to carry out an undertaking of that magnitude. Here let me call attention to a very important motion which was made before the legislature of Quebec by the member for Dorchester, in which the history of the operations of this company is fully gone into. The facts connected with the working of that company are enumerated in that motion, which I will not read to the House, but only point out some of the facts, and if those facts are correct, I submit that this scheme has been prepared hastily, at the last moments of the session, and that if the proposition which I lay before you is correct, it would be the duty of the government themselves to carry out these important works rather than to confide them to this company. At least I think we ought to have in this measure some provision whereby, from time to time and regularly, we should know, in the interests of the public, exactly how this money is being applied and how the works are being carried out. Let me call your attention to the fact that an estimate was prepared for the use of the Quebec government which then had control over this bridge, of what the bridge would cost. That estimate was prepared under the instructions of the then Minister of Public Works of the province of Quebec, the late Mr. Duffy, and on the 6th of August, 1902, was placed before the Quebec government.

Under the estimate made by a very careful engineer the cost of the substructure of this bridge was placed at $819,450, and the cost of the superstructure, after having been very carefully gone into by Mr. Vallee, the government engineer, was placed at $2,800,000. The province of Quebec subscribed to that undertaking the sum of $250,000 to be payable in instalments. That amount was to be paid to the builders of the bridge as the work proceeded, 20 per cent according to the estimates of work done on both substructure and superstructure and never more than $30,000 in one year. The amount granted by the city of Quebec was payable at once, and it was so paid. Under the conditions of the subscription, although up to the present time the substructure alone is terminated, the province has already, as I understand it, paid $90,000 in cash, and Mr. Parent, the provincial premier, who is also mayor of the city of Quebec and president of the bridge company, in spite of the conditions of the subscription of the province of Quebec, has, as president of the bridge company, pledged the province of Quebec to a loan made by the Bank of Montreal of $160,000. So that, although the bridge is not advanced in degree sufficient to authorize the total payment of the provincial subsidy to the structure, the whole of the subsidy under the management of this company, has become pledged to the company, and the whole amount is practically paid already.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that in addition to the amount of subsidy already paid?

Mr. MONK. That is in addition to the $90,000 already paid. The contractor for the construction of the bridge is obliged, under the contract which he made with the bridge company, to pay for the construction of the bridge and for all contingencies and expenses of the company, whatever that may mean, with the federal subsidy, with the subsidy of the city of Quebec and also with the subsidy of the province, so that in reality it is he who has disbursed up to the present time all the amounts connected with the construction of this bridge. The substructure has been finished. The cost was estimated by a competent engineer at $819,000, and yet we find by a document produced before the legislative assembly of Quebec, bearing No. 37 of the documents filed during the last session, that the amount due to this contractor for construction as far as it has progressed is not $819,000, but $1,217,359.38. On the one hand, an estimate made by Mr. Vallee, a competent engineer, of a little over $800,000 for the work to be done; on the other hand, an amount of expense incurred for the bridge so far of over $1,200,000. This claim of $1,200,000 due to the contractor has been approved by the company. That is a fact which we know. The company has also approved of an account due to the contractor for the beginning of the work done upon the superstructure of $199,000. These two items united form a total amount of expenditure due now by the company of $1,416,394. That is the amount due now, although, as far as I know, there is no superstructure yet upon the substructure and the substructure was valued at $819,000. In the Quebec legislature an effort was made to obtain some light upon this extraordinary expenditure, and a motion was made there having for its object the placing before the legislature of the details of all these claims, and notably of the moneys which the contractor, being liable for all contingent expenses, had paid to the law firm in Quebec of which Mr. Parent, the Prime Minister, is a member, in connection with the construction of this bridge. The legislature denied that motion upon the supposed ground that in the Public Works Department at Quebec there could be found no information upon that important point, the object of the motion, which was made on 11th March last, being to find out how it could be possible that such a large indebtedness as an amount of over $1,400,000 could have been incurred upon the undertaking which had advanced to such a point only as would warrant the expenditure of say $1,000,000 or almost $500,000 more than this work was valued at. I mention this fact to give the House some idea of how the work was carried on. Up to the present we have an expenditure upon the substructure of $1,217,000, which should have cost, according to the estimate of the engineer, $819,000, and an expenditure of $199,035 on the superstructure, making $1,416,394, part of which has been paid with the discount obtained at the Bank of Montreal, of the amount which was payable by the province of Quebec, 20 per cent of which was to have been paid as the work progressed, and not more than $30,000 in any one year.

Of the debentures of the company, as I understand it, $533,594 have been issued in payment of part of this construction account. With half a million of debentures they have paid indebtedness due on construction account to the amount of $213,258. Surely there has been a profit to somebody upon these debentures? There was a sum of $213,258, or thereabouts, payable, and there was a sum of $188,721, which is the amount of the discount at the Bank of Montreal. At any rate, the debentures having been paid for at the rate of 60 per cent of their face value will yield a profit to somebody. At the present moment, the city of Quebec has paid $300,000, the province of Quebec has paid $250,000, and the Dominion government, on account of the $1,000,000 vote on account of this undertaking, has paid $374,533, or there has been a total on account of subsidies paid of $924,533.

When Mr. Vallee, the engineer of the provincial government, was commissioned by the Hon. Mr. Duffy, provincial treasurer, to make an accurate report upon the cost of these works, he reported the cost to be $819,000 for the substructure, and $2,800,000 for the superstructure. The estimate we have now before us and which was made in September last by Mr. Schreiber, brings the cost up to $4,767,500, or $1,148,050 more than Mr. Vallee said the cost would be. We have no accurate information as to the cost of the approaches beyond what is contained in the estimate of Mr. Schreiber, and that estimate is very unsatisfactory because we do not know on what it is based. For the south approach, the estimate is $21,000 for land and damages, and $459,800 for the construction of the double track and a yard (presumably at Lévis). The land and damages estimated for the north approach is much larger, being $414,000. We have no information as to what this estimate is based on, as to its details or as to whether it is correct. For the construction of the double tracks and the sidings the estimated sum is $533,060. The total amount in the estimate of Mr. Schreiber up to the 17th of September as to the amount necessary to completely finish the undertaking is $6,725,360. The debentures which will be issued by this company, and the control of the proceeds of which will be entirely in the hands of the company amount to $6,678,500. The estimated cost, as I have said is, $6,725,360. I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals or the Minister of Justice, if it is intended to repay the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec with the proceeds of these bonds. The amount of subsidies given so far is $900,000 and that has gone into the construction of the work.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend is omitting the duty.

Mr. MONK. I have omitted it purposely, because the steel rails may be made in Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not for the steel rails. It is for the superstructure of the bridge which is being made in the United States at the present moment.

Mr. MONK. Even so, I do not think the figures meet the amount paid by the Dominion government, by the provincial government, and by the city of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Absolutely.

Mr. MONK. I may say that so far the work has not been carried on by the company in a manner which would warrant us in believing that the company is more competent to carry out the work than is this government. From the papers submitted, to the House, it will be seen that probably four or five individuals control the whole company. What they have paid in so far they will have returned in paid up stock, and they are asked to invest a further sum of $200,000, but they will do so with a certain prospect that the government is going to take over the bridge, and they will receive five per cent upon the investment, plus ten per cent bonus, when the government takes over the whole undertaking. Under these circumstances, I feel that although the project is an excellent one; the people of the Dominion who are now interested in that work since it has become a national undertaking, and the people of the immediate district as well, would have far better security if the government had direct supervision over the expenditure of this six and a half million dollars. Since a commission is to be appointed for the express purpose of building the Transcontinental Railway, a part of which this bridge will become, it is my opinion that every interest would be far better safeguarded if the work were entrusted to that commission. I believe that the people in the vicinity of Quebec would prefer that this expenditure shall be under government control, through this commission of experienced men, so that they would have absolute knowledge of how every cent of this money would be spent. If we take the facts set forth in the motion made in the legislature, and the facts contained in the documents submitted to us here; there can be no controversy but that a great saving of money would be effected if the construction of this work were carried out by the commission, or under the direct supervision of the Dominion government. We would thus secure absolute control of a work which is ultimately going to fall into the assets of the Dominion, which is part of a railway which has been sanctioned by parliament. If it was deemed necessary and useful to commit the construction of that railway to an independent body or a quasi independent body, to a commission composed of competent men, why should an exception be made of the Quebec bridge ? Why should not that large sum of $6,500,000 which we are ultimately going to pay—we have that admission from the Minister of Finance, and there is no doubt about it in the mind of anybody—be confided to the same body, with such a control over the expenditure by this legislature as would ensure the money being spent in such a way as not to afford an opportunity for any company or individual to derive any profit from the carrying out of the undertaking, but to ensure the largest possible measure of public benefit.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Mr. Speaker, It is very pleasant indeed to hear my hon. friend admitting the absolute necessity of this undertaking. In fact, it would be impossible for any man with any knowledge of the local conditions existing at Quebec, to doubt, not merely the advisability, but the imperative necessity of the construction of such a work. For the last twenty-five years it has been the dream of every man in Quebec to see this work accomplished. We labour there under exceptional disadvantages. There are three important railways on the south side of the St. Lawrence—the Intercolonial, the Quebec Central and the Grand Trunk—none of which have connection with Quebec ; and a population of half a million people in a district tributary to Quebec are completely cut off from access to the city, except by means of a ferry, on which the rate in summer is two cents per 100 pounds, and in the winter four cents per 100 pounds. These rates are relatively prohibitive. It is gratifying to observe that the criticism of my hon. friend has reference not to the scheme, but to the method in which assistance is to be given to the company. His chief criticism is with respect to the organization of the company itself. I am sure that my hon. friend must be labouring under a complete misapprehension when he imagines for one moment that the men connected with this company are liable in any way to divert any of the money they receive, or to be parties to an expenditure that is not absolutely necessary in the interest of the enterprise. It will suffice for me to give the names of the gentlemen who are connected with it. Take, for instance, the names of Mr. Chateauvert, Mr. Lemoine, Mr. Audet, Mr. Garneau, Mr. Breaky, Mr. Boswell, Mr. Laliberté, Mr. Rioux, Mr. Price. These are the names of the most prominent citizens of the city of Quebec; and when my hon. friend learns that these men are directors of the company and are in control of it, he will realize the absolute impossibility of any such eventuality as that which he suggests occuring. My hon. friend will be glad to learn also that new capital is to be brought into this enterprise. I am sure that he will be pleased when I tell him that I am authorized to say that of this new stock of $200,000, Mr. John Sharples, of Quebec, takes $50,000, the Allan firm, Mr. Hearn and others, $25,000, the Grand Trunk Company, $25,000, and the Quebec Central Company, $25,000.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will allow me, I do not think these men are very heroic. If I had money to invest at 5 per cent, with a 10 per cent premium, I should be quite willing to put it into that company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am pointing out the absolute impossibility of such eventualities as my hon. friend suggests occuring, with such men at the head of the enterprise. My hon. friend practically says that the directors are not to be trusted. What benefit have they to derive from the enterprise? They are putting their own money into it, and what position do they occupy under this contract? Not one dollar's worth of work can be done without the approval of the government. Every plan and specification has to be submitted to the government.

Mr. MONK. Plans have to be approved of by the government, as in the case of every public work of that nature; but they make the contracts, and they have absolute powers in regard to the location and construction of the work.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let my hon. friend just read the last part of paragraph 6, of the contract, and he will find that the proceeds of the bonds are to remain in the possession of the government that the money is to be paid out on progress estimates, that the certificates of the work as it progresses must be made by the government engineer. What greater control could the government have? If my hon. friend will read this contract, he will see that the result of it is that this is a government work, carried on for the government through the agency of these men whose names I have mentioned. Not a dollar's worth of work can be done without the approval of the government, not a toll can be levied or a farthing charged except with the consent of the government. What more direct control could there be?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is the contract already let for the completion of the bridge and the approaches?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it was let years ago; and if my hon. friend will look at the contract, he will see that provision was made fixing the price of the iron at the time that it should be required—a very important provision; because as the result of that we have saved the consequences of fluctuations in the iron market, and are able to contract with the company under very favourable conditions. The contracts both for the superstructure and for the approaches have been submitted to the government engineer.

Mr. FOWLER. Were they submitted before they were signed?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, before they were executed.

Mr. PRINGLE. Has the Phœnix Bridge Company the contract for the superstructure?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of the contract for the superstructure?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Three million three hundred and eighty-eight thousand three hundred dollars for the steel part, $156,500 for the wooden part, and $4,800 for the track on the bridge.

Mr. MONK. Are all these contracts with the same company?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, they are all in the one contract.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the length of the bridge?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot give the length. I know that the centre span, the cantilever span, will be something like 1,800 feet in length. It will be close on 200 feet longer than the span of the bridge of the Frith of Forth, which at present is the largest span in the world.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is its length in miles, in a general way?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I imagine it would be a mile from the abutment on the north side to the shore abutment on the south side. Of course, the expensive part of the bridge will be the cantilever portion; the centre span.

Mr. PRINGLE. Does the hon. gentleman know whether the cost of the substructure exceeded the estimate, owing to the difficulty of finding a proper foundation ? I understand that the contractor had to go down a greater depth than he at first anticipated.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the cost of the superstructure already existing, but I would like to say that the estimate made by the provincial government engineer in that connection does not happen to agree with the estimate made by the Dominion government engineer. There was over $300,000 extra expenditure as the result of the discovery, when the south pier was put down, that it was practically on quicksand, which made it necessary to go down some 15 or 18 feet deeper than was originally contemplated. I may say that the estimate of the work done is not an approximate estimate, such as is made before a work is begun. The figures now submitted are based on the work actually done and approved by the Dominion government engineer. In so far as the subsidy granted by the Dominion government is concerned, it was necesssary that the progress estimates of the work done each month should be approved by the Dominion government engineer before any subsidy could be paid, so that the figures given here are not an estimate made by Mr. Vallee, who may or may not be a competent man, and who may or may not have seen works of this magnitude carried on before, but they are an estimate of the actual work done.

My hon. friend has referred to the estimate of the cost of the approaches. He says that we have not sufficient detail. But it is a very easy matter to make an estimate of the cost of the approaches. The first question to be considered is the question of land damages; and any one who has any knowledge of the conditions in the neighbourhood of Quebec can easily determine the probable cost of the land grants. The whole territory covered by the approaches on the north side of the river will not exceed six miles, and it is very easy to estimate within that distance what the cost of the land is likely to be. The next question is what is the cost of construction likely to be, that is to say, the embankment, the grading and the iron. But that is all very simple. There is no great trouble making an estimate of that description, and in any event we have the statement made by Mr. Schreiber, the government engineer, on whose experience we may safely rely.

Mr. MONK. How is the approach made on the north side of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The approach starts from the north abutment of the bridge and goes down along the river front, extending to the city of Quebec and ending in a place called Champlain market, at which point the existing railway systems —the Great Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Lake St. John—will connect with the contemplated terminus.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that near the dock which the government built ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. About a quarter of a mile from it. The point I speak of now is immediately below the Dufferin Terrace.

Mr. GOURLEY. Does it go around the bank of the river ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. The result will be you will not only have a bridge at Quebec, but material for the best harbour in the world. You will have six miles of river front served by this line of railway, and you will have 42 feet of water over the whole course, with a very small expenditure. Instead of being, as now, absolutely dependent upon the Princess Louise Basin, where you have got but two berths for steamers drawing 30 feet of water, you will have this whole river front covered by this line of railway. Not only are we now providing for a bridge to connect the north side of the St. Lawrence with the south, but also for the harbour improvements; because when you get down towards the city of Quebec to within about a mile of the terminus, you then run along the wharfs, and it will be necessary to build an embankment along the wharfs, which will afterwards serve as a magnificent embankment for sea-going vessels. You are not only providing this means of communication between the north and south shores, but further equipping the harbour of Quebec, so that you can have then a most commodious and complete harbour.

Mr. MONK. How is it contemplated to get down from the height of the abutment of the bridge on the north side to the level of Champlain market ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. According to the profile now in existence, it is intended to start from the upper level of Cap Rouge, then go along the cliff to get down to the lower level at Pointe à Pizeau, immediately below Sillery church. There you will reach the lower level, and from Pointe à Pizeau there will be an approach of three and a half miles into the city on absolutely level ground.

Mr. GOURLEY. I had an idea that the fortification went sheer down to the water.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, but the government property does. The natural fortification does. The basis of the citadel goes down to the water ; but at the base of the rock on which the citadel is built, there is a narrow piece of ground where the Allans wharf is situated.

Mr. GOURLEY. How broad ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. About 100 feet, and then you immediately come to the water.

Mr. GOURLEY. Sufficient for a harbour and the transaction of business ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, there is not a single house in that locality. My hon. friend will remember that that is where the landslide took place some years ago, and there have been no houses there since.

Mr. GOURLEY. That is what gave me the impression that there is no room for wharfs there.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, there is. That is where the Allans formerly brought their vessels to discharge and take on passengers. There are about 25 to 30 feet of water there, and out from the wharf we have 40 to 50 feet.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the railway track run along this narrow strip ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, the intention is to run by that place and down to the terminus, which is about a quarter mile further down. My hon. friend made reference to the contribution of the city of Quebec and that of the province, and asked how they ought to be dealt with ? When that enterprise was started, the city of Quebec voted $300,000 to aid it, and the provincial legislature, realizing that it was a work of provincial importance, voted it a sum of $250,000. With respect to that $250,000, my hon. friend made reference to something that occurred in the local legislature, and said that I probably knew all about it. Well, I know very little about what takes place there. We have as much as we can take care of here, without paying attention to what goes on in the legislature at Quebec. But I do know something of this transaction. The $200,000 was voted in aid of the construction of this bridge, payable at the rate of $30,000 per year, but if before the total amount of $200,000 would be paid at that rate, the work should be completed, then the total amount would become payable at once. As the work progressed rapidly, the money was earned very rapidly. The substructure was begun and completed within two years.

I am now speaking in the hearing of the chief engineer of the government, and I say it is acknowledged and admitted that there is no more perfect piece of work on this continent than the work which has been done in connection with the sub-structure. The work was all completed within two years, the provincial contribution of $250,000 was earned but was not available because, under the contract, the money payable by the provincial government and by the city of Quebec was payable pro rata on each progress estimate. The money was very rapidly earned but was not available because under the terms of the statute it was payable to the amount of only $30,000 a year. In order to enable them to meet their obligations and to pay their contractor, the company went to the bank of Montreal and the bank of Montreal advanced the money, taking as collateral security this $250,000 due from the province ; that is the whole transaction. The province agreed to pay $30,000 a year and instead of paying the contractor they pay the bank which advances the money. My hon. friend referred to the advances of the city and province. In so far as the city and province are concerned, I may say that the city is much interested in the construction of the bridge and that the $300,000 which they have contributed was contributed as a voluntary gift with the intention that the shareholders of this company should benefit to that extent. That is the intention. I have here the resolution of the city council of Quebec in which they say that this is intended as aid to the enterprise. They did not expect any part of this money to be returned. The province of Quebec gave their contribution as a subsidy absolutely, as the Dominion government agreed to give $1,000,000 and have paid $374,000. Thus you have the Dominion, the province and the city all realizing that this is an important work municipally, provincially and from a Dominion standpoint and they all contributed to the work. Now it comes to pass that possibly the work may be taken over, under this agreement, by the Dominion. That is to say that one of the parties who contributed to the construction of the enterprise may take the whole enterprise over at a certain time. If the Dominion should take it over and provide for the expenditure they are called upon to make under the existing contract, then this will happen : After the Dominion has been released of all obligations with respect to the bonded indebtedness or the sinking fund for the amount paid to the shareholders, on their stock, then you will have the Dominion interested in this enterprise to the extent of $370,000, the amount of the subsidy. You will have the province of Quebec interested to the extent of $250,000 and the city of Quebec to the extent of $300,000. Then the Dominion says : After we have been relieved from all liabilities under the new arrangement, and after we go back to the old condition of things, then we shall deal with this enterprise as an enterprise in which three parties are interested ; and after we get rid of all our obligations, if there is any profit, we do not want to take the profit, we are not entitled to it any more than the others who contributed to the enterprise. Then all of those who put money into the enterprise will receive their money back. The government will have the right either to pay back the capital or to keep the money in the enterprise and pay the province and city so much per cent per annum on their investment. It seems to me that that is a perfectly fair proposition and one which places all those who have put money into this project on the same footing. I do not know that there is any thing in what my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) would criticise.

Mr. MONK. I did not make any particular criticism of that, but if my hon. friend will allow me, I will read the resolution to which I referred. The resolution says :

On the 10th of August, Mr. Vallée, the engineer of the provincial government reported that out of the $250,000 to be paid by the province to the company, $56,600.45 would have to be allotted to the substructure and $195,399.55 to the superstructure. On the 21st of September following the Order in Council was passed adopting the conclusions of this report and in spite of the fact that the payment of the subsidy has been divided, although, the superstructure alone was constructed the province have paid already $90,000 instead of $56,000. Moreover, on the 4th of December following, the Minister of Public Works made a report the object of which was to contradict the Order in Council of September 21, 1900, in which report of the September 21st, it was declared that the whole $250,000 was then fully earned and that the government of the province of Quebec should bind and oblige itself to pay that sum of $250,000 to the Bank of Montreal in contradiction to the Premier's Order in Council and although the work was not completed and the conditions of the grant by the province had not been observed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend will look at the statute he will see that it has been literally complied with. I am not dealing with the motion, because motions can be so easily made to read so as to suit a particular purpose. I refer to the statute of the province which provides for the subsidy and my hon. friend will find that the transfer to the Bank of Montreal was made literally under the terms of that statute.

Another error into which my hon. friend has fallen is the statement that nothing has been done in connection with the superstructure. There has been expended on the superstructure the modest sum of $156,000 ; two short spans have been completed and are now in place and can be seen by any one who passes by the bridge. $156,640 have been expended in connection with the superstructure. The subsidy of the province of Quebec has simply been transferred. It is paid over to those who have earned it, and it has gone into the enterprise, there is no dispute about that and it has gone in on progress estimates certified by Mr. Vallée the government engineer who certifies to the payment of progress estimates by the province of Quebec. My hon. friend has referred to the motion of Mr. Pelletier, I would like to refer to something which occured in the city of Quebec about two nights ago when my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) and his leader (Mr. Borden, Halifax) were entertained in that city and it was a great pleasure to me to observe that when the gentleman went to Quebec that city maintained its reputation for hospitality and that a magnificent reception was given to him. I congratulate him. The gentleman who made that motion, speaking of the bridge at the banquet in the hearing of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) said :

The Quebec bridge has been promised to us by important Conservatives. That promise was not kept, and that was an error. The electors should always insist upon the accomplishment of any promises made and they should prefer that fewer promises he made and that those made be carried out.

Mr. Pelletier did not say that that promise was not kept by the present administration and like my hon. friend he approves of the building of the bridge.

Mr. MONK. Not of this proposition ; he did not know anything about this.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No ; that motion in the Quebec legislature to which my hon. friend refers was probably made for the purpose of making party capital, but I am glad to see that here we are broader and do not try to make political capital out of a public enterprise.

I do not know that there is anything more for me to say at this stage but when we are in committee if there are any questions which hon. gentlemen desire to ask and which I can answer I shall be glad to answer them. I may say to my hon. friend that I have a very great interest in this bridge.

Mr. GOURLEY. Not a financial one ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not to the extent of a farthing, direct or indirect and I do not think any one suspects me of having an interest.

Mr. GOURLEY. No, I did not say so. You have too much sense.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This goes into my constituency, into the heart of one of the most important parishes I represent, my native parish Sillery. It goes through a part of the county with which I am very familiar and runs down to the constituency of my hon. friend for Quebec West (Mr. Power) and both of us are much interested, for as I said, for a quarter of a century the dream of every man in Quebec was to see this bridge built. It was promised and promised to us but we never saw the realization of it. We have now come within, I think, measurable distance of the end. I have made myself familiar, as far as I could with the abilities I possess, with all the particulars of the enterprise and I assure this honourable House that any information I can give I shall be glad and delighted to give.

With respect to the discount on the bonds I may say that this is the position : When this contract was let the company had, as paid up capital, $50,000. It had available for the construction of this bridge, subsidies of the Dominion government, of the local 'government, and of the city of Quebec. That is to say, $300,000 from the city of Quebec, $250,000 from the provincial government, and $333,000 from the Dominion government, for there was then available out of the Dominion subsidy for the substructure only one-third, and more than that has been paid out of that Dominion subsidy in connection with the superstructure. That was the financial condition of the company at that time. Now, this contractor entered into a contract with this company to build that work, a most important undertaking. As I say, at that time no man knew what the result of this undertaking might be with respect to the foundation. They have been obliged to put in this foundation sixty feet below the bed of the St. Lawrence river, at a place where the tide rises eighteen feet. At times his men were working at a distance of thirty-two feet below the surface of the water.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the tide at that place ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It varies from fourteen to eighteen feet.

Mr. GOURLEY. The Shubenacadie bridge was built in forty feet of water.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The conditions under which the Shubenacadie bridge was built did not at all compare with those prevailing here. Those were the conditions under which the contract was taken, and this contractor agreed to take 80 per cent of his progress estimates in cash and 20 per cent in bonds of the company—one-fifth of the whole cost of the substructure in bonds of the company, and the company in the financial condition I have described. Now what was the outlook for him at that time ? Was the outlook such as that he could ever expect under these conditions, if he did not take considerable risk, even to receive the payment of 60 cents on the dollar ? There was large risk, and he took that risk, and the result has been that the enterprise has turned out a success. Now he says, I want a hundred cents on the dollar, that is the condition of the contract. Now what position does the government take ? The government says : This is a binding obligation on the company. The company undertook at that time to enter into a contract and to assume this binding obligation. They agreed to pay that 40 cents on the dollar, it is an obligation that can be enforced against the company at any time. The government say to the company : Very well——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the object of the company to pay the difference ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The position the government took was this : The government said : Very well, that is a binding obligation, a legal obligation that may be enforced against the company, and they must provide the means necessary to pay that obligation. Provide the means necessary to pay that obligation, subscribe an additional $200,000, which will be sufficient to pay that discount of $183,000, let the company pay that, and then when the company has liquidated that liability to its contractor and paid that discount, we will step in and guarantee their bonds, but we won't do it until the company have paid the difference. That is the position the government took. I do not see that there is anything wrong in that. It is merely providing that the company should liquidate its own liabilities with respect to that particular contractor. The company is asked to liquidate this liability, and in the result we have the additional guarantee that the construction of this enterprise will be properly looked after, because of the additional investment that these gentlemen are going to make in the enterprise, they are putting $200,000 more of their own capital into the enterprise. The hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has this in his mind, that if the government take this enterprise over, of course the shareholders will be paid the $200,000. But the government will not take this enterprise over if it is not a success, the government are under no obligation to take it over.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They can do it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But they are under no obligation to do it, and the government will see to it that this enterprise is not taken over if it becomes a financial disaster ; but if it becomes a success, and if the government do take it over, why should we not assume this liability as well as any other liability ? If it is a legal obligation, a fair and honest debt due by the company, why should it not be paid ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Can you do this without coming to this parliament and getting a grant of that money ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We could not get it of course without the sanction of parliament, and we make that provision.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Under the contract you are empowering the government to enter into an arrangement of that kind. If you have entered into an arrangement, the question is whether you will not be bound by that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We would have to come to parliament for the money to do it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But it may be obligatory upon the Crown.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is a provision which will enable the government as against the company to exercise its rights. But that does not mean that if parliament does not sanction the act of the government they can do it. If parliament does not give its sanction there is no obligation.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We are empowering the government to enter into an arrangement of that kind if they think proper.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let my hon. friend read section 23 :

If at any time, and with or without notice, the government shall pay or cause to be paid to the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec, or either of them, the amount of their respective subsidies of $250,000, and $300,000, all payments, whether in respect of capital or income, to be made under the foregoing provisions to the said government of the province of Quebec or the city of Quebec, respectively, shall at and from that time absolutely cease and determine.

We are under no obligation to pay them anything. This is a provision that if we do pay them that, in order to get rid of even a moral claim, they may possibly have, that we shall pay them this amount with the interest mentioned in the clause. There is no other obligation upon us to do it.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask if the government have considered the claim made by the city of Montreal for aid to the Longueuil bridge, in connection with this matter.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am under the impression that the company that was incorporated for the Longueuil bridge has no legal existence, I do not think that a company was ever formed. The incorporation Act was passed, but I do not think that the companay ever took any action under it. Let me remind the hon. gentleman that this is not a local matter. Let me also remind him that there are at Montreal and in the immediate vicinity three bridges across the St. Lawrence.

Mr. MONK. Private bridges.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Very private. Look at the estimates of what they have cost the country, and you will find that the country is largely interested in them. There is the Victoria bridge, the Lachine bridge and the bridge at Coteau, and now we are providing this session for the Bout be l'Ile bridge.

Mr. MONK. That does not cross the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). I think the House will agree that this is a very necessary work in carrying out the general transportation scheme. But while this is the case, there is certainly some difference of opinion as to the manner in which this scheme is being carried out. The hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) did not clear up all the difficulties which I discovered on looking through this contract as it appears before us. In the first place, there seems to be no accounting for the amount of stock, of which a great deal has been made, that is supposed to have been paid up by the company. In looking over the estimates as given us in the preamble of the agreement, and also in the letters of Premier Parent, in connection with this matter, I find that the amount paid out to the contractor on account of the work done is exactly equal, with the exception of a difference of $56, to the amount of the subsidies which have been received, so that no part of the capital stock of the company has gone into construction, and I fail to understand where the capital has gone.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There was a great deal of preliminary work before the contract was entered into at all. There was no more difficult engineering work to be done anywhere than in connection with the location of the bridge.

Mr. FOWLER. That is all taken into consideration in the estimates we have from the Department of Railways and Canals, and yet the amount paid out of the capital stock remains unaccounted for. I fail to see why the government should be called upon to guarantee or to make the company guarantee 100 cents on the dollar in the payment of these bonds. The contractor took them at 60 cents on the dollar in payment for work done. These bonds are drawing interest at their full face value of 100 cents on the dollar, so that the contractor has made a very good bargain with the company. The difference between $283,279, which the bonds realized, and the $472,000, which is the face value of the bonds, is $188,000. It would follow that $283,000, being the amount which the contractor gave the company credit for, this $188,000 is an amount which may be called the water of these bonds. The government by this process are performing a modern miracle ; they are turning water into gold instead of turning it into wine. It seems to me that this is a matter with which the government should have nothing to do, and that it is a matter which should be settled by the contractor and the bridge company. I notice that the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals estimates the total cost of this bridge at $6,725,360, and I must congratulate the deputy minister upon the way in which his estimate coincides with the amount of the contract. The hon. Minister of Justice tells us that the amount of the contract for the steel superstructure is $3,388,800. That is exactly the amount of the estimate of the deputy minister for that work. The hon. Minister of Justice tells us that the contract for the wooden floor beams is $156,500. That also coincides exactly with the estimate of the deputy minister. The hon. Minister of Justice tells us that the contract for the track on bridge is $4,800, exactly coinciding with the estimate of the deputy minister. We find then that $6,725,360 is the estimated cost of this work, an estimate which, as I say, agrees exactly with the contract. There has been paid for this work in cash, the proceeds of the subsidies, $914,862, which leaves a balance of $5,811,000, which, according to the estimate, will be the amount required to complete the bridge. But Mr. Parent, president of the Bridge Company, and Premier of the province of Quebec, has requested that $6,900,000 of the bonds be guaranteed in order to complete the bridge. The government have not seen fit to accede to the whole of his request, but they have agreed to guarantee bonds to the amount of $6,678,200. That leaves an apparent difference of something like $1,000,000. That is attempted to be accounted for by the duty on the steel superstructure. I presume that the contract is given for the steel superstructure. The estimate is placed at three and a half cents per pound, which is a fair price at the present time for heavy bridge material. If it were lighter bridge material, it would probably amount to three and three-quarter cents a pound. It is not proper to add the duty to the cost of construction of the bridge. That is already accounted for in the contract price, and at any rate the steel should be bought in Canada. There is a million of difference in that, and there is $188,000, the difference between the amount which the bonds realized on their face value, which have not been accounted for. The members of this House are all agreed as to the necessity for this bridge and that the work is one which should be done in carrying out the general transportation scheme of this country and providing the necessary transportation facilities for the great trade development which is going on. For anything which is going to a national undertaking I am perfectly willing to vote any necessary amount, but I do think that this scheme as proposed is not a proper one. We know something about these bridge matters in the province of New Brunswick, from which I come. There is just such another bridge, only a cheaper bridge, in the city of St. John, owned by a bridge company, and built by the bridge company just as this bridge is being built at Quebec. It was built under the old government. Almost the entire amount of the money used in construction was loaned by the government, as I understand it, and upon it they paid a certain rate of interest—I think 4 per cent or 4½ per cent. I am not sure as to the details of the undertaking, but the members of the government will know them. As a matter of fact, that bridge company have made a splendid revenue out of that bridge, although the amount of money they put into the bridge was very small. I am told on the best authority that every year the stockholders in that bridge company receive actually more than double the amount they put in. I have understood—I do not vouch for the accuracy of these figures—that the actual amount paid in by each stockholder was $700, and that each year they have an income from the bridge of $1,100 or $1,200. That is done at the expense of the general public. Certainly a handicap and a hindrance to trade are caused by allowing these people to charge a greater amount for the carriage of trade over this bridge than should be allowed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They cannot do it here.

Mr. FOWLER. The conditions in this case, I do not think, are different from the conditions of the other. I think the conditions in both cases are about alike. The government should build this bridge themselves. They are actually undertaking all the risk of this enterprise. They are guaranteeing, not only the interest, but they are absolutely guaranteeing the principal of the bonds; they are guaranteeing the whole amount, and if there is any profit the company will reap the benefit of it. It is shown here, if we are to believe the estimate of receipts, that there is going to be a fine thing in this for the company. The expectation is that they will be able to divide $56,000 a year on the lowest estimate of profit. After they pay interest on the bonds and after they provide for the wear and tear and other expenses of maintenance, they will still have a profit of $56,000. They actually pay in $200,000, and the amount of $65,000, which the hon. Minister of Justice says was put into preliminary work, or $265,000 in all, and they divide a profit of $56,000, which is a pretty nice income from an investment of $265,000. That is equal to 25 or 30 per cent.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The government has no liability at all.

Mr. FOWLER. It has been presented to us as an essential feature of the scheme, that it is a profitable scheme and that the government will not incur liability. There are contingencies which might throw liability on the government, and so far the government are incurring the only liability in the whole case. They are not only guaranteeing the bonds to be issued but they are actually guaranteeing at least sixty per cent of the bonds already issued by the company. There is no responsibility whatever upon the company; with them it is a case of heads I win tails you lose. Why do not the government do the work themselves, when they can do it better and more economically.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If it is not a success and the government does not take it over, what becomes of the $200,000 of new money that is to be invested?

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Justice quite understands that it would be a very easy matter to provide $200,000 without a cent being put up.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not say that it will be done in this case, but there are instances on record where it has been done and I could tell the hon. gentleman how it could be done.

The PRIME MINISTER. Don't.

Mr. FOWLER. I will not, because in case the Minister of Justice does not know, if I told him perhaps he would communicate it to the company and I want to avoid that. We are assuming all the responsibility, and if the bridge is not a success we are the losers. While I am very strongly in favour of the building of this bridge, and while I believe it will be as beneficial as the Minister of Justice thinks, and will enable the harbour of Quebec to get trade in increasing quantities which we would all be glad to see; yet I cannot but think that it would be much better for the government to build the bridge under the Railway Commission, or by a special commission, believing as I do that it would then be built in a more economic manner, and that the money of the country would not be wasted.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). I was one of the promoters of the Quebec Bridge Company years ago, and I have always taken a great interest in this work. The country is now invited to guarantee $6,678,000 in addition to what we have contributed in the past. The Dominion treasurer has paid $374,000, the province of Quebec, $250,000; the city of Quebec, $300,000; in all, $924,000. If I understand the position, the contract for the substructure is the only contract that has been awarded. I do not exactly know the amount of the contract entered into with Mr. Davis, but the amount estimated by the chief engineer for the substructure is $1,217,400 and the cost of the superstructure, for which a contract has not yet been given, is estimated at $3,388,000. That will make $4,600,000 for the substructure and the superstructure of the bridge itself. The balance of the money which we are asked to guarantee is for land damages, construction of double track, tracks on the bridge, wooden floor, &c., the whole reaching the large sum of $7,500,000. About $1,000,000 is going to be employed in land and damages, and the purchase of land. I lived for fifteen years very near the spot where the bridge is built, and I know the locality very well. The land on the north side belongs to private parties who will be very glad indeed to sell it. There is to be $414,000 for land and damages on the north side, and a little more for the south side. The Minister of Justice has said that the government is providing at the same time six miles of water front accommodation. Well, the new project, as it is placed before us to-day, will not provide for one foot of water front accommodation in Quebec. There is no money voted for deep water wharfs, and with the amount of money placed at the disposal of the company to purchase land, it cannot build one single foot of wharf. If the Minister of Justice will refer to the records of the Public Works Department he will find that it will cost about $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 to provide proper accommodation at the very place he has spoken of. There is a batture right opposite——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentleman must know the Mariners' Chapel at the immediate entrance to Diamond Harbour. From Diamond Harbour down to the Champlain Market there will be three-quarters of a mile where you are absolutely on the shore of the river. You have to go along on the wharfs with your railway, you cannot go anywhere else. There is no use talking about a batture.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I know that, but the Minister of Justice knows as well as I do, and perhaps better, that there is a batture there which prevents ships from coming to the shore.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not at all.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Why, the batture begins at the upper end of Lampson's cove and goes up to Sillery.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Surely the Minister of Justice knows that the bridge is being built at Cap Rouge, much further up than Sillery. The bridge is being built at Cap Rouge; and I say that to give proper water accommodation in those six miles would involve an expenditure of $10,000,000. There are reports in the Department of Public Works to show this.

Mr. BELL. What have the improvements at Montreal cost, and what length of water front is there ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. There is no possible comparison between the two. I speak of the Quebec case as I know it to be. My hon. friends have only to look at the expenditure provided for here. There is not one cent for wharf accommodation. The money is provided for the purchase of land, for the building of sheds, stations, and so on, for the bridge itself, and for the approaches on both sides of the river ; but not one foot of water accommodation is provided for. This point I think I have made very clear, and it cannot be disputed by anybody who knows.

As to the financial aspect of the project, it stands thus : This government at first agreed to give $1,000,000 of subsidy to the company, the Quebec government and the city of Quebec supplying the balance of the subsidies, which this very same company declared to be sufficient to carry out the undertaking. My hon. friends on both sides of the House have only to refer to the debates which have taken place in the Quebec House and also here, and to the reports of the company, as proof of that fact. Well, the company have been mistaken in their calculations. I do not blame them too much for that, because in the case of such large undertakings I quite admit that we are all liable to make mistakes. I know that Mr. Davis, in order to have safe foundations for his piers, has been obliged to go much deeper than he anticipated. Of course, he should have looked carefully into the nature of the soil at the bottom of the St. Lawrence before undertaking this contract. At the same time, not desiring to be unfair to him, I grant that that cost him a pretty large amount of money ; but it is only a detail. The two governments and the city of Quebec have already paid nearly $1,000,000. In my opinion, if the subsidies had been capitalized and if the undertaking had been floated in a business-like manner, there was enough money to carry out the work. Many able business men have expressed the same view. However, the project has not been carried out, and we have now to say whether or not we approve of the scheme placed before us. The government are to guarantee fifty-year bonds for over $6,000,000. If I understand the seventh clause of the contract, the government will issue these bonds as the company earn the money. In other words, the contractor will be paid by the company with the proceeds of the bonds as he earns the amounts so paid. I want to ask my hon. friends on the treasury benches whether this is a very good financial method. If the bonds were floated in one block——

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Look at paragraph 8. Provision is made first for getting the money. That is to be got in any way the government shall determine most advisable under the circumstances ; that is to say, by making one issue of the bonds at one time, or by making partial issues at different times. It would be premature to say now how that should be done.

Mr. GOURLEY. The government holds the money and pays it out on progress estimates ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I would like the point to be made clear. Suppose the bonds are issued in one block, how is the money to be disposed of ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It goes to the credit of the government, and will be paid out on monthly progress estimates as the money is earned.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The Minister of Justice said a moment ago that the contract for the superstructure has not been awarded. What interest have the contractors to do work as cheaply as they can when they know that the government will take over the work ? The Minister of Finance has said that very distinctly. In my humble opinion, the position in which we are placed is that we are giving without tender a contract to a contractor. The government have stated that the work is of a national character ; and having stated that, they will take it over, what is the use of our giving a guarantee of 3 per cent to a private company ? What is the use of leaving the whole thing in the dark ? Because we do not know whether the bonds will be floated in one block or in several small blocks ; that is a question to be decided. The only thing we are sure about is that we guarantee fifty-year debentures at 3 per cent interest. The money will be borrowed on our own credit at 3 per cent. Under the circumstances, as some hon. members who have preceded me have said, would it not be better for us to take over the work now ? I do not see any reason why we should guarantee bonds at 3 per cent for private parties, undertaking at the same time to take over the work ; because there is no possible doubt that the government will take it over. There is one very clear reason that will oblige them to take it over, and very soon. I say all success to the bridge, but I believe there is not much doubt that the work will not pay its working expenses and the 3 per cent at the beginning and for some years. This means that we will take over the work as soon as it is completed. Therefore I say again that we are only giving without tender a contract to the Quebec Bridge Company, and we are giving the guarantee of our national credit without having complete control over the work. In my humble opinion, the government would have done better if they had settled immediately with Mr. Davis and the company, and had taken over the work, and borrowed the money to complete it on the national credit, instead of borowing for the benefit of a private corporation. It is beyond question, and we cannot blame them, that the men expect to make a profit out of the transaction. If they were not expecting that, they would be fools indeed. They are in business to make money, and not for love ; but if it were not too late, and I do not think it is, and if the company were disposed to come to an agreement to that effect, I think it would be better for the government to carry out the work themselves. I am for the equipment of the port of Quebec, and I hope that this guarantee will not prevent the government from equipping that port at a later period. That is a greater necessity than the building of this bridge. The bridge will be a useful thing, works of that kind are always useful, but it will not bring to the city of Quebec one-tenth of the trade which would be brought by the proper equipment of the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers, Quebec and our lake and canal ports. In my humble opinion, the government should lose no time in making up their minds to complete the equipment of the St. Lawrence route.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Cornwall and Stormont). I agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that an important measure of this kind should be brought down earlier in the session instead of being presented to us a day or two before prorogation. However, there seems to be a consensus of opinion that the work would be of great benefit, not only to the province of Quebec, but to the Dominion of Canada. If I remember rightly, two or three years ago the Quebec Bridge Company was incorporated; and in the letters of incorporation the government reserved full powers to control rates, as is usually done in cases of the kind. As I understand it, the city of Quebec gave a bonus of $300,000 to this company, all of which has gone into the enterprise; the province of Quebec gave $250,000, and the Dominion government has agreed to give $1,000,000, on which it has paid $374,353. We find, therefore, that the company has received from the city, the province and the Dominion, $924,253. It has also received payments on capital stock amounting to $65,585.70, making total cash receipts of $889,938.70 already invested in the project, and the company now finds itself in this position, that it is not able to finance the balance of the scheme. It seems to me, Sir, that the position is such that the government has authority to come to the assistance of this company. If it should not, the company will not be able to go on with the construction of this work. I have listened attentively to what was said by a number of gentlemen who spoke on this question, and I quite understand the importance of having a bridge at that point. We find that there is no bridge east of Montreal, and there is a distance of 180 miles which is practically closed during five months in the year, between the south and north shores, from Montreal to Quebec. West of Montreal we have the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, the Canada Atlantic Railway bridge and the Ottawa and New York Railway bridge—three bridges spanning the St. Lawrence within a distance of some 67 miles. I can quite understand, therefore, the importance of having a bridge at the city of Quebec. The only question to my mind is whether this contract properly safeguards the public interest, and if I am wrong in any statement I may make, I should like to be corrected. I understand that on consideration of the government guaranteeing these bonds, amounting to $6,678,200, the company releases and foregoes all claim to the $625,647, being the balance due on the million dollar subsidy. Then, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) raised a question with regard to the stock. As I understand the condition, there is $65,000 worth of stock, or rather $55,000, paid up on the stock subscribed, and under section 3 the company agree with the subscribers to the capital stock, that they shall surrender such stock to the company, and in lieu thereof accept paid-up stock to that amount paid by them on their shares and be relieved from further liability on the stock so surrendered.

Section 4 provides for issue of stock to the extent of $200,000, the proceeds to be applied in payment of the discount at which the bonds of the company were issued.

So far as I am concerned, I quite conceive that the $472,000 are a legal liability, and shall have to be discharged, either by the company or by the government, if they assume this work, but it did seem to me that the wise and proper way would have been for the government simply to have guaranteed the bonds for an amount including the $472,000.

With regard to section 7, the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) raised an objection. As I understand that section, the bonds guaranteed by the government shall be issued and the proceeds thereon paid to the company as the construction is proceeded with, to the satisfaction of the government, and in such sums as the chief engineer of the government railways, or such other officer as the government may appoint, may certify or justify. How far do these words 'or justify' go? Would the engineer of the government have the right to inquire whether the amount paid was a proper one, having regard to the value of the work, and whether any contract was given at a greater amount than it should have been? Would the government engineer be justified in inquiring into the value of the work done? I think the public interest should be protected on that point. I do not wish to detain the House, but simply wish to understand thoroughly this matter, as it is important. I understand, of course, that under section 12 the plans and specifications have to be approved by the Governor in Council, and further, that the government will control the tolls. I understand it lies largely in the power of the government to fix the tolls.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Absolutely.

Mr. PRINGLE. In that case, the government can fix the tolls at such a rate that they may collect a revenue sufficient to pay 3 per cent interest on the $6,678,200, or $200,346. Judging by the reports we have, it appears to me that even at a moderate rate of tolls, there will be no difficulty in collecting an amount sufficient to pay the 3 per cent on the bonds guaranteed by the government. It seems to me that the position of the government is such, if it had to intervene and either take the works entirely out of the hands of the company or adopt some means such as the plan now submitted of seeing that the works were completed.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY (Colchester). I am glad to see that my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) supports this motion. The support should come from other provinces. We have been accustomed to seeing a fight between the provinces when any measure was proposed that benefited any one province and I am glad to see the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) supporting this scheme. I read the contract thoroughly and as far as the terms are concerned it is well enough, if there is nothing behind it. If the provisions here set forth are carried out there can be no harm in the transaction, but unfortunately the trouble with these schemes is that it so often happens that people suspect that some one is going to get boodle out of the project; that is the misfortune of our public life, the suspicion that there is some steal. In the past Canada has been divided into two parts by the River St. Lawrence, and in the old days had it been in Europe it would have been two countries; but now, with the construction of railways and the building of bridges, countries are united that in the old days would be separate and I say that this bridge should have been built years ago. Quebec should have been united and as a maritime province man I have always felt when I approached Lévis that it was a most awkward thing that there should be no bridge joining the south shore of the St. Lawrence with the north shore, because that river interrupted the whole communication from the north. The construction of this bridge has been my dream, as well as the dream of every man in Quebec. As far as I am concerned I have no objection to the building of this bridge if it is honestly carried out and I would have no objection to the amount involved.

I would like the Minister of Finance to have a little conference with his late colleague the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals with regard to a pension scheme on the Intercolonial Railway. This Quebec bridge and the pension scheme on the Intercolonial should go hand in hand; they are both in the interest of transportation. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals became very popular among the railway people in the maritime provinces; they had great confidence in him, and I think it will be very hard for any other Minister of Railways and Canals to get so thoroughly into the confidence of the railway people as did the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, chiefly because he was broad enough and liberal enough to propose a system of pensions for the Intercolonial Railway men. I am told that when a man has served on the Intercolonial, especially on the new large engines, for twenty or twenty-five years, he is unfit to continue in that business or any other. And are we going to turn our public servants out upon the street, after serving this country for twenty years, without the slightest care? In the interests of the transportation system of this country, we must look after the men who are engaged upon the Intercolonial Railway. Although I am opposed to the government and to the Minister of Railways and Canals, as far as politics are concerned, I do not hesitate to support that measure and justify it as a wise expenditure of the public money of Canada. I have received a communication from a number of railway employees in Nova Scotia, asking me to obtain information as to how far that scheme has progressed. I understand that a scheme was prepared by the men, revised by the officers of the department, that a workable scheme had been developed by the officers of the department, and that it awaited the approval of the Minister of Railways and Canals and the subsequent approval of parliament. Of course, I understand that with the change that has taken place in the Department of Railways and Canals there may be a little delay, there must necessarily be a hiatus. I know hundreds of employees of the Intercolonial Railway who are anxious to take advantage of such a system as this but who inform me that they are unable to retire as they have no means of support and therefore it becomes very important that action should be taken in this matter because otherwise you will have a number of men employed on the Intercolonial who know that they are not fit to be entrusted with the duties they are discharging. But these men have no choice, they must continue at their posts, and therefore, I commend highly the far-seeing, statesmanlike view of the late Minister of Railways and Canals. Of course, I have had no personal communication with him, but I understand from association with the railway men, that he had approved of the general system of pensions for the Intercolonial Railway employees, of course without committing himself to the details. I approve of that scheme and I am prepared to justify it at any time and at any place. I would like to learn from the hon. minister and the ex-minister just what position this matter is now in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am aware that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) had this subject under consideration, and had interviews with the railway officials about it. The matter was not pressed to a conclusion and since the change in the department nothing further has been done; therefore, I am unable to do more than to say that the matter is under consideration.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. I have to make suitable acknowledgments to my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley) for his kind and complimentary reference to myself personally.

Mr. GOURLEY. They were the truth, Sir.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. While I do that and may avow at once that I have very strong sympathy with the policy of providing a pension system for the employees on the Intercolonial, I confess that I do not at the moment see any very close relevancy between the subject of the Quebec bridge and the subject of a pension system for the Intercolonial.

Mr. GOURLEY. I made it the occasion; of course, I had finished my remarks on the Quebec bridge.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. I understood my hon. friend to convey the idea that they were associated together, and ought to be dealt with at the same time. That is rather in conformity with log-rolling ideas that are sometimes practiced. I have no doubt that the subject will receive the consideration which its claims merit. Before retiring from the department, officers, or experts, or actuaries were engaged making a report on the subject. They had inquired into the system which is in operation upon the Canadian Pacific Railway and upon the Grand Trunk Railway, and these two systems were placed alongside the proposals made by the men themselves. The men sent in a scheme, when they understood the subject was going to be taken up, which they desired the department to consider. I did not think it was comprehensive enough, for reasons which I need not go into. I think they were of the opinion that a much less sum would suffice than I thought was necessary. It always appeared to me that when you are adopting a system of that description it is necessary to deal with a considerable number of old employees, men who have been a long time in the service, and who could not hope by any system of contribution to derive any benefits from that system. They would have to be provided for, therefore, in some reasonable way, and would not come within the scope of that scheme. However, under the circumstances I thought it necessary to have this expert inquiry made. We had persons in our employ, and they are still in the employ of the department, I presume, who are engaged in making this inquiry, and when their work is completed, I have no doubt the minister will see the advisability of giving the subject his earnest consideration, and of calling the attention of his colleagues to it.

Passing from that matter to the subject immediately before us, I would like to say one word before I sit down. I am more than pleased to see that the proposal to ensure the construction of the bridge across the St. Lawrence river at Quebec, meets with such general favour on both sides of the House. I have been very warmly disposed towards the enterprise myself during all the time I was in the department, and my sympathy with it was owing to the fact that it meant a good deal for the advantage of the government railway system. I did not look beyond that at the moment, nor do I think it necessary to look beyond it now, to justify the adoption of a sound scheme. I presume, from all I have heard to the contrary, that there are no serious objections to this scheme to ensure the construction of the bridge. The extension of the government road to the Georgian bay, which hon. members know has been a pet idea of mine, is one which I think would be much strengthened by the construction of the bridge at Quebec. If we are to ensure over Canadian territory and by Canadian seaports the export of our western produce, it will always be necessary and important that this great water-way should be used. In using the water-ways of Canada, we must not lose sight of the port of Quebec as one of the most important to be found anywhere, standing as it does as compared with other important outlets through which this traffic will necessarily have to pass. The better and more adequately you equip that port, the more surely will you guarantee the future use of that port as a gateway for the imports and exports of Canada. As my hon. friend the Minister of Justice suggested, the port of Quebec is only accessible by one railway, but when this bridge is completed, with the splendid equipment with which it will be provided, in conjunction with the railway along the northern shores of the St. Lawrence, the port of Quebec will be second to none, in my opinion, upon this continent. When you provide an adequate and efficient equipment for a great port at the head of deep water navigation of the St. Lawrence, you guarantee that the people who have grain and other produce to ship will be able to do so speedily, and will be afforded economical means of getting their freight across the ocean.

Now there are one or two things which have been said in relation to this matter that I would like to allude to before sitting down. I think it desirable that the contract should contain a clause that, before the option which is referred to here, is exercised, the opinion of parliament should be taken upon it. I understood the Minister of Justice and the acting Minister of Railways to concur in the suggestion. If that suggestion meets with favour, it would be necessary to incorporate it in the agreement. I take it that the present contract is only provisional, and will be made more complete before it is finally signed. But in my judgment, it will be necessary to insert such a clause if the object be that parliament should have a further say upon the matter. The hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) said that under this arrangement opportunities would be possible for a great deal of private benefit to be realized out of the profits which would accrue from the operation of the bridge. He instanced the case of what is called the St. John Railway and Bridge Company. That bridge, which was constructed across the falls at the city of St. John, was built by a private and incorporated company, and largely built, as he has properly said, by means of a loan made to the company by the Dominion government. There should be in this contract a clause similar to that which was originally put into the agreement under which that loan was made to this railway and bridge company, namely, that it should be optional with the government at any time, I think also subject to the approval of parliament, to take over that bridge upon paying to the company, or the individual members of the company, the amount of the loan which had been made, with an additional percentage to cover any reasonable claim as probable benefits that would have accrued to those who entered into the contract and carried it out. Well, it so happened that after the lapse of some years, and while that option was a living option, which might be exercised at any time in the future, it was deemed advisable for some reason or other, which reason I cannot state, because I never heard what the reason was, to expunge that clause from the contract, and the result is, that, notwithstanding, as the hon. member for King's has said, individual persons who made small subscriptions have been reaping handsome profits out of the undertaking, the government has no power to retake the property except under the general expropriation power which it possesses. I would hope that if a clause of this kind is inserted in the present agreement, empowering the government at any time in the future, particularly if the property be a paying one, to take it over, it will be accepted.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, I am not as sure as the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) that the project which we are now discussing meets with the general favour of the country, as the hon. gentleman seems to think it does. Why? We have only been made acquainted within the last twenty-four hours of the particulars of this scheme. We have had no means of learning from the country at large what it thinks of the project, and I am very much inclined to agree with the opinion, after reading what has been put before the House, which was expressed this afternoon by an hon. member from the province of Quebec, when he said that the scheme looked very much better on paper than the project itself did. I must say that I am not in a position to give an intelligent opinion. I do regret very much that the government is called upon from time to time to come to the relief of projects of this kind. The city of Quebec, no doubt very anxious to secure the construction of this bridge, entered into certain obligations, at any rate the citizens of Quebec did so, and it seems to me a most remarkable thing that a company with a stock of only $200,000 and only $65,000 paid up, should undertake such a gigantic project as is now being considered by the government, a project that will ultimately cost seven millions of dollars. It seems to me that either the scheme has been gone into without any mature consideration or else those who were at the start of the undertaking must have had a very faint idea of what they were about to accomplish. I repeat that it is a matter of regret that from various parts of the country the government of the day is called upon to come to the rescue of schemes of this kind which have been entered upon without any serious or mature consideration. I am sure the bridge will be of very great importance to the city of Quebec. I am not going to doubt but what it will be of very great importance to the country at large, but I express the opinion which has been expressed before that it is a matter of great regret that we should not have known all about this several months ago and that we should not have been able to put ourselves in possession of all the facts and figures concerning it and been able to express an intelligent opinion in voting such a large sum of money. I am not going to-day to enter any special protest against this project. I am quite sure that such would be useless, because I have no doubt it is the intention of the government to carry through this scheme. I am sure it would have been better had the government made it known to the country months and months ago, because, if it is a good project, it should have been put before this House with the intelligent endorsement of the people instead of having to receive the sanction of the people's representatives without any real knowledge of what they are about to do. In regard to the money that is being contributed by the city of Quebec and the province of Quebec, I understand from the hon. acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Fielding) that the government may take over the whole project, and I have no doubt that will be done in a very few years. I have not the slightest doubt that the next demand to be made upon the government will be to take this whole scheme out of the hands of this company and assume all the burden. I question very much the propriety of giving back to the city of Quebec the $300,000 and to the province of Quebec the $250,000 that they have contributed towards this scheme. The city of Quebec is going to benefit a great deal more than any other part of the country by this bridge. The province of Quebec is going to benefit more largely than any other province. I think it is only fair that they should contribute something more than the rest of the Dominion should be called upon to do. Then there is another point: How are these stockholders to be dealt with? Are they to be given back their money? Are they to be repaid the money that they have put into it, or are they to be continued as partners of the government when the government takes over the whole scheme? If they are not to be continued as partners, and I do not suppose for a moment that the government would desire that they should continue as partners in this scheme, then the government of the day practically relieves not only the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec, but all the stockholders who put their small sums into it to start the undertaking from every bit of actual responsibility and liability and returns to them their money with a premium on account of it. I am not sure that it is a very good policy for us to adopt such a course. I think we are only holding out inducements to others in various parts of the country to start undertakings that they have no possible hope of carrying through, depending entirely upon the government to come to their rescue and bring their schemes to completion. I do not approve of the policy which has been adopted in this matter and I regret very much that more time has not been given for its proper consideration.

Mr. GOURLEY. I hope the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) did not understand me to suggest that there was much logical connection between the Quebec bridge and my suggestion in regard to pensions——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) has already spoken.

Mr. GOURLEY. I just want to make an explanation, and I will only take a minute. I would like now to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) whether he will at an early date undertake to consider the scheme which I have brought to his attention and give an answer ? The people who are concerned are in the very awkward position of not knowing what to do. There are fifteen or twenty men men living in my own town who are interested in it. I do not want to press the hon. Minister of Finance unduly, but if he would undertake to consider the matter and give an early answer, it would, I think, suit the purposes of those people on whose behalf I make this suggestion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would be very glad to consider the matter, but there would be no means of giving any answer. The matter would have to be taken up by parliament, and action on it could only be taken later.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the resolution.

Resolution reported.

On the order for the second reading of the resolution.

Mr. MONK. I saw a statement in 'Le Soleil,' that the government has given more than was asked for in this matter. Is that statement correct ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend will apply to the Minister of Finance, he will find, I think, that we have given less than was asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The statement which is attached to the papers shows that the request was in excess of our compliance.

Mr. MONK. I thought it was a strange statement, but 'Le Soleil' said that you have given more than was asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the habit of the Minister of Finance.

Resolution read a second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 272) to authorize aid to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company towards the completion of its undertaking, and to confirm an agreement between His Majesty and the said company with respect to such aid.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As the time has arrived for the conference with the Senate with respect to the amendments made to the Railway Act, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a message from the Senate informing this House that the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate would meet in the Senate Committee Room No. 8 at 8.30 o'clock this evening.

QUEBEC BRIDGE—AGREEMENT

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved second reading of Bill (No. 272) to authorize aid to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company towards the completion of its undertaking, and to confirm an agreement between His Majesty and the said company with respect to such aid. He said : Before the dinner hour, the House was disposed to proceed at once with the later stages of this Bill ; but it was reserved in order that an amendment might be made in it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was that the amendment suggested by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. It was claimed that after this contract was confirmed the government might possibly have the technical right to take over this property without the consent of parliament. That not being the intention, we have drafted a clause providing that that power shall not be exercised unless we have the consent of parliament previously obtained.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Bill (No. 270) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned, read the second time, the House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In this Bill the changes made, as compared with the resolution, consist in the inserting of the word 'bridges' in a number of cases. For instance, in section 5, where it is provided that the subsidies may be granted to such companies as established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council their abilities to construct and complete the said railways respectively, the word 'bridges' is added. In like manner the word 'bridge' is inserted wherever the word 'railway' occurs in a similar connection. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, asked very properly whether, in view of the provisions of the new Railway Act, we should adhere to the old drafting in the Subsidy Act. For example, where it requires that the rates be fixed by the Governor in Council, should we not replace the Governor in Council by 'the Railway Commission'? On reflection, we have concluded that it would be better to let the clause stand as it is, because we have a contractual obligation with the companies, by which their rates are subject to the supervision of the Governor in Council. There can be no harm possible, and good might come from leaving that clause as it is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The point I suggested was that you are retainnig the control of the Governor in Council while at the same time you have appointed a new tribunal to deal with the rates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It creates a double supervision of rates, which may not be necessary, but which can do no harm.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You are giving the Governor in Council co-ordinate power with the Railway Commissioners.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it will mean that they will both exercise the same power. If it were not a matter of contract, the general provision of the Railway Act would apply, that all railway rates must be fixed by the board. But in this instance, there is a special contract, and we think that the obligation is one which should be retained. I do not think it creates any new power. The most that can be said is that it may be perhaps not necessary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My recollection is that the resolutions bind the companies to fix their rates in accordance with the order of the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council fixes the rates through the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. You retain that in the Subsidy Act, but at the same time you establish a different tribunal and take away the powers of the Governor in Council. You are creating a co-ordinate jurisdiction, which may give rise to difficulties. I have not sufficiently considered the question to say that it will do so, but I remember curiously enough hearing exactly the same question debated in the Imperial House of Commons, some years ago, with regard to the government of Ireland Bill. They were establishing two jurisdictions, and the point raised was as to which jurisdiction was to prevail. Suppose the Railway Commission would fix one set of rates and the Governor in Council another, which is to prevail ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Bill providing for the establishment of a Railway Board has not yet got through the shoals of the Senate, and if any accident should happen there, we might fall back on the provisions of the Subsidy Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We dealt with that contingency in the National Transcontinental Bill by providing that the Governor in Council, or such other authority as for the time being has power to regulate railway rates, shall have jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a provision in the Railway Bill providing for the establishment of a Railway Commission to take the position of the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We might desire to have a more favourable rate than the average rate established by the board, and we might want to make it a matter of obligation that, in consideration of the subsidy, a railway company should charge a lower rate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman desires to accomplish that result, he should use plainer language than he does in this statute. You may have disputes as to which tribunal really should prevail.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would this clause in the Railway Act have any bearing on the question, subsection 2, of section 8 :

2. Whenever by an Act or document the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is given any power or authority, or any duty is cast upon it, in regard to any company, railway, matter or thing, the power or authority so given, or the duty so cast upon the said committee, may or shall, as the case may be, be exercised by the board.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Justice is of opinion that that would apply in this case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it apply to an Act passed this session ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think so. I do not think there can be any doubt about that. Both Acts will come into operation practically at the same time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have seen, but I cannot recollect the instance, declaration made in a statute that its general provisions shall apply to Acts passed during the same session. I do not know whether it is necessary, but I remember instances of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Except as to the amendments to which I have drawn attention, this Bill is an exact copy of the resolutions with which the House has already dealt, and unless hon. gentlemen wish the whole Bill read, we might safely adopt it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no desire to have the whole Bill read, but the hon. minister will remember that when we adopted resolution 31, namely :

To the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from Woodstock northerly to a point on the Grand Trunk Railway at Berlin, or from Ingersoll to Stratford, or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places, not exceeding 35 miles, being in addition to, and continuation of the 9 miles mentioned in item 1 of this section.

—it was on the distinct understanding that the wording of this resolution might be changed. The contention was that this was a double-barrelled resolution, that it gave this railway company the power to hold up Woodstock, Berlin or Stratford, and get the one to bid against the other. I think that is a scarcely fair way in which to treat those municipalities. In my opinion the company should be restricted to a particular route and not be given alternative routes. I still hold to the idea that a subsidy having been granted from Ingersoll to Woodstock, the new subsidy provided in this case should extend from Woodstock north to Berlin, instead of going back to Ingersoll and running a road from there to Stratford. I assume if this clause be adopted, that possibly the road may never be built from Ingersoll to Woodstock. I do not know what the intentions of the promoters may be, but it would be absurd to run nine miles out to Woodstock and stop there. We have granted a subsidy already from Ingersoll to Woodstock, and this clause should be so amended as to provide for the road going on from Woodstock to Berlin.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to recommend any change. The message I received from the hon. member who is much interested in this railway Act said that the wording, as it now stands in the Bill, had been submitted, after very careful consideration, on behalf of the company. My hon. friend from Grey moved in amendment that this subsidy should be given for 35 miles northward to the Grand Trunk Railway by the most direct route. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Seagram) showed me a message which he had from the board of trade, urging that the company should be compelled to go by Berlin. On the other hand, I have a message from the Board of Trade at Stratford urging the contrary. Under the circumstances, not having knowledge as to which is the best route in the public interest and in the interest of the company, I am not prepared to take the responsibility of deciding which should be adopted. I therefore hardly think that I can consider the rival interests of those who desire that this railway should go through their municipality, and I think we would be perfectly safe in standing by what we agreed to the other night. My hon. friend from Grey has had representations made to him as I have had to me, and on the whole we thought that we had better leave the resolution as it stands. I do not know who is going to choose between the rival municipalities. I do not like to assume, not having any information that I could submit as an argument, that it would be better in the public interest the company should go one way or the other. I imagine that each municipality will look at rather its own interest, and it is rather late now to propose a change.

Mr. INGRAM. I think that to meet the wishes of the company I could move an amendment which would be more acceptable to them than the present proposition, namely that the subsidy be granted from the town of Collingwood for the distance provided in the Subsidy Bill, and that it apply from Collingwood for the distance mentioned here. That would give them an opportunity of getting material more cheaply from Collingwood than they can now by extending the line to Ingersoll. I am satisfied the company would prefer that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no one here representing the company ; and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) having stated that this was submitted after careful consideration by the board and he himself being away ; I cannot support any change at present.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have never considered the question of applying this subsidy from Collingwood southward. Even from Berlin to Collingwood, it would be a distance of upwards of 100 miles. That is a portion of the road for which this company has asked no subsidy.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The company pressed very hard for a subsidy from the present terminus to Collingwood, but there are a great many applications for subsidies. They have succeeded in building forty or fifty miles by means of subsidies received from time to time, and I think it was felt that they might not get anything at all if they pressed for the whole this session.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg to move that the words in the third line of clause 31 'From Ingersoll to Stratford or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places be struck out.' The clause would then read :

To the Tilsonsburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from Woodstock northerly to a point on the Grand Trunk Railway at Berlin, not exceeding thirty-five miles, being in addition to and continuation of the nine miles mentioned in item 1 of this section.

That would make good English and common sense, because a subsidy has already been granted to Woodstock. It would be quite proper to say that this would be in addition to the nine miles mentioned in item 1 of this section. The object of the road is to supply a means of conveying coal from Port Burwell northward to the agricultural country through which it will pass, and the various manufacturing towns of Ingersoll, Woodstock and Berlin and other points between. To subsidize a road from Collingwood, with the idea of building from that end first, would not for years accomplish the purpose the promoters have in view, namely, to secure a cheap and speedy means of conveying coal from Port Burwell on Lake Erie into these manufacturing centres. I hold that it is certainly in the interests of the municipalities that the one should not be held up against the other. I still stand by what I said on a previous occasion, that to go to Stratford you would for a considerable distance parallel an existing line. You can get on board the train at Stratford and go to the Georgian bay and in so doing you would parallel the proposed road.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Seventy-five to a hundred miles apart.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps five or ten miles at some places and a great deal more at others. The distance widens as you proceed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. How far from Wiarton to Collingwood ? It must be over 100 miles.

Mr. HENDERSON. Probably about 50 miles, but at the Stratford end they would be close together. North of Waterloo and Berlin there is a section of country which has no railway running through it. This would supply a territory that is not provided with railways ; and I think would on the whole supply a town more deserving of a railway subsidy than even those further west.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must stand by the proposition, under all the circumstances, and ask my hon. friends to vote for the resolution as submitted. I have not sufficient information to say which route should be adopted.

RAILWAY ACT 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As there is urgent business of importance to be attended to, namely, our conference with the Senate, I must ask that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to do justice to the Minister of Public Works. I forgot entirely that Woodstock was his home and had no intention of making him vote against something that would be in the interests of his own town.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. The time fixed for holding a conference between the two Houses on the question of certain amendments to Bill (No. 21) intituled : 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways' having come, the Clerk will read the names of the managers on the part of this House.

The Clerk of the House read the names as follows :

Sir Wm. Mulock, Mr. Fielding, Mr. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Haggart, Mr. Blair, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Mr. Monk, Mr. Barker, Mr. Emmerson, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville), Mr. Wade.

Mr. SPEAKER. I declare the proceedings of the House suspended during the said conference.

And the sitting of the House was suspended accordingly.

And Mr. Speaker having resumed the Chair.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE, one of the managers of the conference on the part of the House of Commons reported that they had proceeded to the place of conference and had delivered to the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate the communication of the House, giving the reasons of the House for disagreeing to the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 21.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 270) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to strike out from section 3 of clause 2 the words, commencing in the third line :

Or from Ingersoll to Stratford or to any point on the Grand Trunk Railway between these places.

Amendment lost on division, and section 2 agreed to.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved to add the words 'and bridges' between the words 'railways' and 'respectively' and also between the words 'lines' and 'for' in line 43, and also after the word 'lines' in line 54.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 6,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved to strike out the word 'those' in line 6 and to insert in lieu thereof 'the railways and bridges,' and to add the words 'and bridges' between the words 'railways' and 'hereby' in the last line.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved to amend section 8, by adding the words 'and bridges' between the words 'railways' and 'for' in the thirtieth line and by adding the words 'or bridge' after the word 'railway' in the thirty-fifth line.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Bill (No. 269) respecting the management and control of public and other works—(the Minister of Justice)—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BARKER. I wish to call attention to what I regard as a very material alteration in the responsibility for public works as affected by this Bill. This Bill purports to authorize the government, by Order in Council, to transfer matters within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works, for instance, to any other department. Parliament has seen fit to prescribe certain regulations with regard to all works within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works and these are established for the protection of the public. For example, in section 13 of the Act respecting public works, the minister is compelled :

> To invite tenders by public advertisement, for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and staff of the department.

There are various other clauses in the Act passed in the year 49 Victoria, chapter 36, for the protection of the public in the administration of the public works of the Dominion. Now, what do we find here ? The Governor General in Council, if this Bill becomes law,

> May at any time transfer the management, charge and direction of any public work, or any power, duty, or function with respect to any work or class of works, whether public or private, which is assigned to, or vested by statute in, any minister or department, to any other minister or department ; and from the date appointed for that purpose by the Governor in Council, such power, duty, or function shall be transferred to, and vested in, such other minister or department.

Nearly all of the departments of the government are free from the restriction of any statutory provision, but it has been found necessary, or at all events expedient, in the interests of the public, that as regards the public works and as regards another department to which I need not refer here, but particularly as regards the Public Works Department, that there should be certain restrictions and certain provisions for the guidance and direction of those who administer that department. There are other departments which have no restrictions whatever. The Postmaster General, for example, has a free hand in almost everything he undertakes. The Minister of Inland Revenue has a free hand. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has a fairly free hand. And yet, by this Bill, the works pertaining to the Minister of Public Works may be transferred to any one of the ministers who have a free hand. The government may transfer the handling, the conduct of works involving millions of expenditure, without the provisions, without the restrictions, that would pertain to those works if they were administered under the department to which they properly belong.

Now, I think that this is a most material matter for the consideration of the House. I do not know why it should be found necessary at the present moment to bring in such a Bill as this ; I do not know any particular reason at the present moment why it should be necessary for the government to transfer from one department works that ordinarily belong to another department. But if it is necessary, if for any reason it is found that the minister administering one department of the government is unfit, or unable, or incapacitated from performing the functions relating to his department, and it is necessary to transfer some of his functions to another minister, I do not see why, in doing that, it should be necessary to deprive the public of the protection which has been deliberately and thoughtfully provided by parliament with respect to such works. I do not think that anybody will dispute that under this Bill, as it has been introduced, a minister to whom certain public works may be transferred, will be absolutely free from the restrictions which would affect that work if performed in the department to which it properly belongs. The Minister of Public Works may have authority to build canals and improve harbours, to do all works of that nature; but in letting out the contracts respecting those works he is bound by the restrictions and provisions of the Public Works Act. Apparently the government think that it will be convenient to transfer those works to some other department. But there is not a word in this Bill, now introduced, that would provide for the public the protection in the other department that has been provided as regards the administration by the Minister of Public Works. Without any personal allusion whatever, I may ask, why should the Minister of Public Works, who is bound by certain statutory provisions and restrictions, be enabled to transfer, for example, to the Minister of Justice the construction of enormous canal works, and that the Minister of Justice should thereby be enabled to let out those contracts, to accept tenders, to deal with the whole subject involving millions of dollars, perhaps without one restriction that would be applied to those works if they were carried out according to the statute I have referred to.

I do think, Mr. Chairman, that this Bill has been introduced without reflection, that it has been introduced for a particular purpose, to enable the government to transfer certain works from one department to another without the slightest sequence to the public. There is nothing in this Bill to indicate to what particular minister it is intended to transfer works or duties of the Minister of Public Works. We may have suspicions upon that point—I prefer not to deal with the suspicions—I do not care to what minister it is intended that the superintendence, or management, or whatever you may call it, of the Public Works Department shall be transferred, whether to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to the Minister of Inland Revenue, to the Minister of Justice, or any other one. I say that under this Bill, when these ministers get the management of the works, they will be absolutely free from every provision that has been made in the statutes of this Dominion for the protection of the public. Now, I would like to ask the First Minister whether he really intends that. Surely when the Public Works Act was passed putting in certain restrictions and provisions for the protection of the public, to provide against, I may say, fraud—I do not hesitate to say fraud—to provide against an unreasonable letting of contracts or anything of that kind, it was the intention of parliament to protect the public. There was no question then, there was no intention then, to discriminate between one minister and another; the intention was that whoever should have the control of the expenditure of the enormous amount of money that is under the control of the Public Works Department, that whoever should have the power to expend that money, to distribute it to friends or opponents, should come within the provisions and restrictions of this Act. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that these few innocent looking words, the short provision of this Act, is intended, or at least calculated, to operate in removing every protection the public has, and I protest earnestly against the passage of a Bill of this kind in its present form.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), I think, is somewhat in error when he assumes that this is a departure from the established principles such as we find them in the Acts affecting the different departments. Let me refer him to chapter 24 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, the Act respecting the Department of Agriculture, where he will find that section 5 provides absolutely for what may be done under the Bill introduced to-night :

> The Governor in Council may at any time, assign any other duty or power to the Minister of Agriculture and may also assign any of the duties or powers hereinbefore enumerated to any other member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

That is to say, by Order in Council it may be possible to take from the Minister of Agriculture some of the duties assigned to him by the Act repecting that department and hand them over to another minister. If my hon. friend will refer to the Act respecting the Secretary of State's Department, chapter 26 of the Revised Statutes, section 5, he will find a similar provision.

Mr. BARKER. I do not dispute that the duties of the Minister of Agriculture might safely be transferred to other ministers, but the Department of Public Works and the Department of Agriculture are very different things. There is no comparison. The hon. Minister of Justice cannnot argue from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Public Works. It may be reasonable to allow the Department of Agriculture to transfer the sowing of cabbage seeds or anything else to the Minister of Public Works or to the Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am afraid I would not be a success with the cabbages.

Mr. BARKER. But to transfer the enormous works of the Department of Public Works to the Department of Agriculture is a different thing.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend will observe that not only do we find that provision in the chapter which has reference to the Department of Agriculture but we find it also in the chapter which has reference to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BARKER. That is worse still.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would like to draw his attention to the words of section 8 chapter 36 which is an Act respecting the Department of Public Works, because he will find something similar there. Section 8 of chapter 36 reads as follows :

If at any time a doubt arises whether the management, charge and direction of any public work belongs to the Minister of Public Works or to the Minister of Railways and Canals, the question shall be decided by the Governor in Council, and the works and property which shall be under the management, charge and direction of either minister may, from time to time, be determined in like manner.

Then the Act goes on to say :

And the Governor in Council may determine by which minister any power vested in the Minister of Public Works on the fifteenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, shall be exercised.

Provision being thus made for the transference by Order in Council of any of the functions or duties performed by one minister to the other. My hon. friend will find in the Act relating to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, chapter 25, the Revised Statutes, section 3, that the same provision exists. Not only is that the case but if my hon. friend will read section 3 of the Act respecting the Department of Marine and Fisheries he will find that if this Bill is intended to be applied to the Department of Marine and Fisheries it is almost apparent that a transference can be made without new legislation at all by Order in Council. Section 3 reads as follows :

The duties, powers, and functions of the Department of Marine shall extend and apply to the subjects and boards and other public bodies, officers and other persons, and services of properties of the Crown, enumerated in the schedule to this Act, of which the said department shall have the control, regulation, management and supervision.

What are the provisions of the schedule ? Sub-section 24 of the schedule provides :

That the minister may have assigned to him any other duty or power which the Governor in Council may assign to him.

So that, generally, the terms of the Act respecting the Department of Marine and Fisheries authorize what my hon. friend says ought not to be done. Then my hon. friend objected to this legislation on the ground that public interest would be safeguarded by the provisions which are to be found in the Public Works Act in respect to tender. My hon. friend said that works which are now under the direction of the Department of Public Works ought to remain with the department because the provision of the law affording a safeguard in respect to tenders applicable to the Department of Public Works would not be applicable to any other department. If my hon. friend will turn again to the Act respecting the Department of Public Works, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes, section 13, he will find the following provision :

The minister shall invite tenders, by public advertisement, for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

That is the protection, as my hon. friend sees, that is contained in the Public Works Act. My hon. friend will see that the Act respecting the Department of Marine and Fisheries, section 5, is in terms similar to section 13 of the Public Works Act, so that the terrible calamity that my hon. friend imagines would result from a transference of a work belonging to the Department of Public Works to the Department of Marine and Fisheries would not take place because the same provision which exists in the Public Works Act in respect to tenders exists in the Act respecting the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. minister contend that every department of the government is subject to the same restrictions and provisions in regard to these various works that the Department of Public Works is subject to ? He may transfer under the operation of this Bill the operations of the Public Works Department to a department which is not subject to these restrictions. That is what I object to.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the object of this Bill is the object indicated by the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick). There is no doubt that in the definition given by the law of each of the departments of state, in so far as I recollect, at the end of each chapter defining the duties of each department it is stated that generally the Governor General can assign to the head of the department other duties.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not in all cases.

Mr. MONK. I think it is in nearly every definition of the duties of the departments.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think so.

Mr. MONK. I do not think there are many chapters defining the duties of the departments where that provision is not found. Nor is there any doubt that where doubt exists as to which department should be entrusted with certain works a special mode is provided in the law for defining the department which shall have charge of these works. That is not the object of this little Bill which appears to be a very innocent Bill, but it is intended to effect a very serious object. The object of this Bill is to take work which is clearly within the functions of one department and by Order in Council transfer it to another department. It is very different from the case as pointed out by the hon. Minister of Justice, and it is very different from the case where there is doubt and where the legislators provided a mode of solving that doubt. It is by Order in Council taking work which has been assigned to one department and transferring it to another. What is the reason ? This is the reason : When the present hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Prefontaine) came before the electors of the district of Maisonneuve it was charged against him that the department which he had undertaken was not as important a department as the one which was held by his predecessor and it was claimed before the electors of Maisonneuve that we had lost something and that some explanation should be given as to why a department less important than the other had been confided to that minister. He said at every public meeting that it was intended to transfer from the Department of Public Works to his department all the public works having reference to navigation—wharfs, bridges, in fact, according to the statement made by him to the electors, the Department of Public Works was virtually going to be transferred to his own department. He has not been able to cause that promise to materialize because the present hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) very properly has objected to breaking up his department. It is intended before the next general election to transfer all the works connected with navigation in and around Montreal to the Department of Marine and Fisheries by Order in Council and in face of the law which assigns these works to the Department of Public Works, in order to tell the electors that the government has broken up the Department of Public Works and has transferred all the works in and around Montreal and all the works connected with navigation from Montreal to Quebec, and as the hon. minister himself said, all the works connected with navigation from the Yukon to the Straits of Belle Isle, to his department. When the elections are over these works will, by Order in Council, be retransferred to the department of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. That is the object of this Bill clearly and evidently and we claim, as my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has claimed, that the law ought to be contrary to that. It is for the parliament of Canada to assign to each department the duties which shall appertain to it. The ministry is but a Committee of this House; it belongs to the House alone to decide what attributes shall be given to each department of government. This is an attempt to obtain from the House power to switch over by Order in Council certain works from one department to another, for the purposes of the election, and afterwards to re-transfer them again. That is why this Bill is introduced at the last moment.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) looks into the statute constituting the different departments of government, he will find several provisions to the effect that the attributes of one portfolio can be transferred to another, according to the judgment of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MONK. Then why do you want this ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the case in some instances but not in all. For instance, the mounted police are under the jurisdiction of the president of the council, but the very section which says that, enacts that the control of the mounted police can be transferred to any other minister as may be deemed advisable. There is therefore a good deal of latitude in that regard. It is not the object of this amendment to give to any minister the power to build and construct, which is now vested in the Minister of Public Works. The object is simply to enable another minister to manage and administer public works already in existence. I believe that to be a wise provision. If the departments were organized as I would wish, I would give to the Minister of Public Works the duty of building and constructing, but when the works have been constructed, I would transfer them to the different departments to which they belong. I would place wharfs under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries ; armouries under the Department of Militia and Defence, and post offices under the Postmaster General. But, I would not give to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or to the Postmaster General the power of building and constructing. I would reserve that exclusively for the Minister of Public Works. If it were thought advisable that contracts should be given, then there would be no necessity for introducing this Bill. Every one will agree that it is far better to allow a minister to administer the works which come within the purview of his department. My hon. friend has said that under this law you could transfer to the Minister of Justice all the works of the Department of Agriculture. Parliament has already trusted the Governor in Council that no such absurdity would be committed, and I think parliament can trust the Governor in Council in this case. These general powers are often taken, but they are subject to the discretion of the Governor in Council, and subject always to the superior jurisdiction of this parliament. It seems to me, therefore, that there is no reason to say there is anything extraordinary in this legislation, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) will, on reflection, agree with me.

Mr. BARKER. If the First Minister had in view the transference of certain works from one department to another concerned in similar works, this Bill would have been framed in very different words. This clause says :

> The Governor in Council may at any time transfer the management, charge, and direction of any public work, or any power, duty, or function with respect to any work, or any class of works.

If the right hon. gentleman can tell me any broader language that could be used for the transference of all the works of any class from the department of one minister to that of another, I would like him to tell me what those words are. If the hon. gentleman wishes power to transfer to the Department of Agriculture all the works concerning the harbours of Canada, he can use no better language. If the Governor in Council should see fit to transfer from the Railways and Canals Department the management of our canals, this Bill would authorize it. You can transfer any work from the Public Works Department to another department, and that without the restrictions which are provided in the statute for the guidance of the Department of Public Works. That is my point, and neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Justice has given an answer to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) that the words of this Bill are wide enough to transfer the entire jurisdiction with regard to any class of public works, from one department to another. The section provides that :

> Any power, duty or function, with respect to any class of works, whether public or private.

These words are ample to transfer all the wharfs under the control of the Department of Public Works to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and so on, I do not understand why this Bill should be necessary now. Is there likely to be any public emergency by which the delay between one session and another would be injurious to the public interest is such a matter ?

I submit that the proper course is to deal with each case by itself when the emergency arises, and to deal with it by legislation. If you desire, as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier states is the intention of the government, to transfer part of the works now under the control of the Minister of Public Works to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, bring in your Bill for that purpose. If you desire to make any other transfers from one department to another, bring in your legislation for that purpose, and let the House deal with it. Why should the House delegate this power to the Governor in Council ? There seems to be no good reason for that, and no emergency is likely to occur which would make a delay from one session to the commencement of another session in any way injurious to the public interest. It does not seem to me that this statute is necessary. For the more important departments there are provisions which have been found sufficient for the public interest up to the present time, and it seems to me that some explanation should be given as to the reason which induces the government at this time to bring in legislation of this character. What new feature is there in the transaction of public business which makes it desirable that legislation of this general character should be enacted ? No reason whatever has been given for it except that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice says that in respect of three or four departments legislation of an analogous character already exists. Well, has that legislation not been found sufficient ? What is the real reason for the introduction of this Bill, and what does the government propose to do under it ? If the government have nothing in mind which they propose to do under it, then the legislation should not be proceeded with. If they have any proposal before them with regard to the transfer of some works from one department to another, they should tell us the nature of their proposal. Unless they can assign some definite reason for such legislation, it seems to me to be unnecessary.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let me say to my hon. friend that the reason for this legislation is to be found in the statute which has already been quoted, but which I will take the liberty of reading again in more detail, with regard to the Department of Agriculture. Section 4 of chapter 24 says :

> The following subjects shall be under the control and direction of the Minister of Agriculture, that is to say :
> 1. Agriculture.
> 2. Immigration and emigration.
> 3. Public health and quarantine.
> 4. The marine and immigrant hospital at Quebec.
> 5. Arts and manufactories
> 6. The census, statistics and the registration of statistics.
> 7. Patents of invention.
> 8. Copyright.
> 9. Industrial designs and trade marks.
> 10. Experimental farm stations.

This vests in the Department of Agriculture certain very extensive powers ; but the Act goes on to provide that it shall be in the power of the Governor in Council to add to these duties of the Minister of Agriculture or to transfer to some other minister some of the duties assigned to him ; and this is the power proposed to be exercised under this legislation, if it becomes law. The subjects of immigration and emigration have been transferred by the Governor in Council from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior. Then, I think it would be more proper to have the Marine and Immigrant Hospital at Quebec transferred either to the Department of the Interior or to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. With regard to this Bill, my hon.

friend from Jacques Cartier says it is for the purpose of enlarging the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It will certainly be proper at some time or other to recast the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the Public Works Department and the Department of Railways and Canals. At present a steamer leaving say Fort William for Quebec or below Quebec, while on the great lakes, is under the jurisdiction of the Marine and Fisheries Department; when it reaches the canals it is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Railways and Canals; when it reaches the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, it is under the jurisdiction of the Public Works Department; below Quebec it is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries again. I think this is very absurd. That steamer throughout its whole journey ought to be under the control of one department. It might have an accident at one place and another at another place, in which case it would have to deal with two departments instead of one. For my part, I think we should make these laws more in accordance with common sense, to say nothing else. In my opinion the Department of Public Works ought to be a great building department. But when a public building is put up, if it be a lighthouse, for instance, it ought to go to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for administration; if a wharf, it ought to go to the same department; if a drill shed, it ought to go to the Department of Militia; if a post office, it ought to be put under the control of the Post Office Department. But to-day you have the absurdity of having the whole management of the post office building in the city of Toronto or in Charlottetown, or anywhere else, put under the Department of Public Works instead of the Post Office Department. All the caretakers and the menial officials are under the Department of Public Works. I would rather have the control of these buildings assigned to the respective departments to which they belong; and this is the object of this legislation.

Mr. BARKER. My right hon. friend refers to the statute relating to the Department of Agriculture. I hardly imagine the right hon. gentleman is serious in referring to that department as one to which we might transfer the public works of the country. Surely there is no analogy at all between the two departments. The provision in the Act relating to the Department of Agriculture, enabling the government to transfer to that department some other functions, means, I think, the transference of something analagous to the functions of the department. Surely he would not transfer to the Department of Agriculture the management of the railways of the country. No one would imagine that the Act respecting the Department of Agriculture would give the Governor in Council power to transfer to that department all the railways of the country. If you can transfer the Public Works, you may transfer the Railways and any other department to the hon. gentleman who, with the assistance of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell), manages the Department of Agriculture. The hon. gentleman refers to the Department of Railways as an analogous department. If the right hon. gentleman wishes to transfer from the Department of Public Works to the Railway Department, certain works, such as the harbours or anything of that kind, in some measure connected with railway work, let him bring in a Bill and it will receive respectful and careful consideration, and the right hon. gentleman may have some grounds for an argument in favour of the transference; at all events, that question will receive careful consideration from the House. What I object to, and what I think ought to be objected to by every member in this House, is giving to the Governor in Council the power to transfer important duties and functions at will from one department to another. I do not wish to expend time upon the subject, it seems to me so clear that it would be an offence to hon. gentlemen opposite—I am sure it would be an offence to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House—to argue the thing. If there is anything whatever in the Public Works Department that can be properly transferred to any other department, let the right hon. gentleman bring down his Bill to again define the functions of the respective departments, and the House will pass upon it. Those functions are defined in the statues of the country; they have not been left to the ministers to apportion. The right hon. gentleman wants to reverse all that parliament has, from time to time settled as to the functions of each department. The right hon. gentleman wants to take something, he does not tell us what, from one department and put it into another department. As parliament, when organizing these departments, said what the functions of each were to be, let us follow out that arrangement and when a change is needed let parliament make it, but the right hon. gentleman has no right to ask us to delegate that authority to the ministers of the day.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he has examined the Bill very closely, and if he has come to the conclusion that the words:

> The Governor in Council may at any time transfer the management, charge and direction of any public work—— would include the construction of a public work?

Mr. BARKER. But it goes on:

> —or any power, duty or function with respect to any work or class of works.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let me get down to that point. Would the words

I have just quoted include the building of a work? My own view is that they would not. They would mean to transfer the management and direction of a work after the work is completed.

Mr. MONK. It includes the wharfs in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. After their construction.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Suppose, as we find from the estimates is very often the case, one of these works is destroyed and we have to spend $40,000 or $50,000 in repairing it. Would not the words even so far as we have gone include that?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is a question whether it would or would not. I am not prepared to say whether it would or would not. What I mean to say is that it does not seem to me that these words would imply authority to carry on work of original construction.

Mr. BARKER. Would the construction of the eastern section of the transcontinental railway be a public work?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The eastern section of the transcontinental railway would be a public work; construction is another question. The question I put now is whether the management and control of a public work includes construction? It seems to me it does not. Then if you go on, you will see:

Or any power, duty or function with respect to any work or class of work whether public or private.

It seems to me that any power, duty or function would imply that sort of power, duty or function which the public works exercise, for instance, over public commissions like the Harbour Commission, at Montreal or Quebec. This does not include construction, but simply a sort of supervision or control over what is done by these particular corporations. I quite understand that if these words can be construed so as to mean original construction, it would be necessary to go further and to add a section which would protect these particular public works. If my hon. friend thinks there is any danger in that direction, and that the provisions I have already pointed out as existing in one of the Acts at all events, is not sufficient, you might add:

And the provisions of the Public Works Act shall so far as they are applicable apply to any work or property, the maintenance, control, or management of which is hereby transferred.

So as to protect the public in the way he has indicated.

Mr. BARKER. Does a public work mean a work completed?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I want my hon. friend to realize that what is being transferred is the management or direction of public works. What it is important for him to consider is the meaning of the words 'management, charge and direction.' Do either of these words include original construction?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Those are not the important words, because they are not carried down into the latter part of the clause, as the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) has just pointed out to me:

The Governor in Council may at any time transfer the management, charge and direction of any public work, or any power, duty, or function with respect to any work or class of works, whether public or private, which is assigned to, or vested by statute in, any minister or department, to any other minister or department; and from the date appointed for that purpose by the Governor in Council, such power, duty, or function shall be transferred to, and vested in, such other minster or department.

Leaving out altogether the words on which the Minister of Justice is laying so much stress, the important words are those which are repeated the second time in the section, and these it seems to me obviously include what is suggested by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) whether the Minister of Justice thinks so or not. I think the first expression might include it, they certainly would include repairs, but the words in the latter part of the section undoubtedly include construction. I do not think the Minister of Justice would venture to say they do not. How could you get wider words than the expression any power, duty or function with respect to any work or class of works.' I would defy any man in this House to get a broader form of expression, including construction and everything else, than these words. Beyond doubt, in my opinion, they include construction as well as management.

Mr. MONK. With all due respect to the Minister of Justice, I do not think it is possible to entertain any doubt on this point, that the management, charge or direction of any public work means the execution of that work. If my hon. friend has any doubt about that, if it is his intention to transfer a public work to another department, why not use the word 'maintenance'? But the Minister of Justice will not make that change, because the Prime Minister has let the cat out of the bag; he has stated in reply to my own observation that it would be advisable to transfer the works connected with navigation between Quebec and Montreal, for instance, where several departments are interested, to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That was the argument used in the Maisonneuve election, that is what is contemplated. But the Minister of Public Works will not consent to a legislative change such as was promised by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and as he won't consent, it is contemplated to do it by Order in Council in order to carry us over the period of the next election. Will my right hon. friend the Prime Minister state here upon his responsibility, that it is not intended within the next six months to transfer some of the powers of the Minister of Public Works to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries? If my right hon. friend will make that declaration, while I still consider that the Bill is useless and improvident, he would give me great satisfaction. My right hon. friend will not make that statement, because he has let the cat of the bag, and reveals that is what this Bill is for; and I think that on the question of principle, as well as because it is an election dodge, it ought to be opposed.

The PRIME MINISTER. I can say that if it is transferred, it will not be retransferred; it will remain transferred.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to know whether my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will say that these words do not include 'instruction'? And if they do include instruction, why do you put to one side the safeguards which now surround the public works of the country?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I certainly think that the safeguards which are now provided in the Public Works Act ought to be put in here, and for that purpose I move that the following words be added to the first clause:

And the provisions of the Public Works Act shall so far as they are applicable apply to any work or property, the maintenance, repair, control or management of which shall be transferred under this Act.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will the Minister of Justice tell us how much he is going to leave to the Minister of Public Works?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not my business.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MONK. I think it is very important that these changes should be made only after very careful consideration, and I move in amendment that this law shall come into force on the 1st day of September, 1904.

Mr. COCHRANE. Time can't wait.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries can't wait.

Amendment negatived.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again in Committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The determination of the government in relation to the tariff was announced at an early stage of the session, and in accordance with the established practice in Canada the changes then proposed took effect immediately. But it becomes necessary for us to give more formal effect to them, as usual at the close of the session, by having the resolutions adopted and included in a Bill. I therefore beg to invite the attention of the Committee to the resolution which is placed upon the Notice paper, and which will be found on page 194 of the Votes and Proceedings, bearing date the 16th of April. It will be found that this is a resolution, put in proper form, for enactment of the few changes that were then announced, and I now desire to move that the resolution therein set forth be agreed to, with one amendment to which I desire to invite the atttention of the Committee. In the resolution providing for the imposition of a surtax upon certain foreign goods we read as follows:

Such surtax shall not apply to any goods actually purchased on or before the 16th day of April, 1903, by any corporation, firm or person in Canada for immediate transportation to Canada.

It was subsequently determined and so announced in the press that the thought contained in these words 'for immediate transportation to Canada' should be expressed more definitely and therefore a circular was issued by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) and announced in parliament at the time that in respect to these words 'for immediate transportation to Canada' the privilege of importation without the surtax should be applied to all goods which were actually purchased prior to the date of the budget but which might not be imported into Canada until a later period, it being held that the orders having been given and the contracts made a reasonable time should be allowed to permit importers to bring in their goods. We made no change in the principle that all goods not actually purchased prior to that date should bear the surtax, but if they were actually purchased prior to the date that the duty was established the parties might have until the 30th of September to import their goods without the tax taking effect. That arrangement was carried out and I have reason to believe that it gave very general satisfaction to the trade which would otherwise have been very much embarrassed. I therefore propose to carry out the amendment by moving that the words 'for immediate transportation to Canada' be struck out and that the words 'if imported into Canada on or before September 30th, 1903,' be substituted. Otherwise the resolution stands as announced at the time of the budget.

Mr. GOURLEY. What was the date announced? My recollection was that it was the 15th September.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the 30th.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the position then—that the surtax would not apply to goods purchased at any time before the 30th September of this year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not purchased before but imported before. To obtain exemption from the surtax purchase must have been made before the date of the budget, but the actual importation was permitted until the 30th September. The date has since passed and the exemption is now practically at an end. The surtax applies to all goods that are imported.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. minister whether any Order in Council was passed and what date it bears ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. An Order in Council was not formally passed for the reason that we could not pass an Order in Council until this Act passed. But following the practice of Canada in these things immediate action was taken upon the announcement in the budget. The regulations which were made had the same effect but they were not based upon an Order in Council, because, until the passing of this Act, we had no legal power to make an Order in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course there is rather an anomaly in all these matters inasmuch as you have to pass an Act to indemnify yourself for an Act of illegality, and in this case there was a double illegality, because, in the first place, there is no statute and in the second place there is no Order in Council under the terms of a statute.

Mr. HENDERSON. I see a good deal of controversy in the papers as to who pays this surtax and I would like the hon. minister's opinion on that point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Just at the present moment it would be very convenient to accept my hon. friend's contention that the consumer does not pay the duty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has really no convictions on the subject.

Resolution, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the Act of last session a license fee was substituted, but that Act did not at once come in force, it having been reserved for the imperial approval. We did not repeal the old section of the tariff, but the Act having since been approved, we will now collect the duty in the form of a license. There is one other resolution, notice of which has been given. It has reference to the posters and handbills of an objectionable character. At present we can exclude such things when they are immoral, but it was represented to us by a deputation of gentlemen that it was not desirable to have the walls of our cities covered with pictures depicting crime. It was thought that easy familiarity with these scenes is not the best way of causing our youth to pursue the path of virtue, and we deemed it wise to provide for the exclusion of posters and handbills depicting scenes of crime or violence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this intended as a covert attack upon the Conservative campaign literature.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, although I am inclined to think that if one wanted to be critical, the literature referred to might be brought within the Criminal Code. However, we are in a generous frame of mind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend misunderstands me. The Conservative literature depicts scenes of crime and violence committed by the government.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does not pass through the customs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It may be comforting for my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) to know, that that home industry can still be carried on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, there is a very large factory on the other side of the House.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 273) to amend the Customs Tariff Act, 1897.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a first and second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CATTLE-GUARD COMMISSION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg to lay on the Table of the House the report of the Cattle-Guard Commission.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It's big enough to block a train.

Mr. CLANCY. Do you propose having it printed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter having been dealt with by legislation, I doubt that this very interesting report is so valuable now.

Mr. CLANCY. It might be interesting to have the experience of the one-eyed steer.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will it be published ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We lay it on the Table ; that is for the House to say.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

The House proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from the Committee of Supply.

On resolution No. 20,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before that is concurred in, I would like to bring to the attention of the government the fact that the employees of the Halifax post office forwarded to me some time ago a copy of a petition which they had presented to the Postmaster General, in which

> They humbly and respectfully beg leave to request that the salaries paid to the employees of the outside service of the Post Office Department be increased to the same rate as those at present paid to the employees of the inside service.

The petitioners mention two reasons on account of which they believe themselves to be justly entitled to the advance asked for, one the increased cost of living, the other the responsibility of post office work. They set forth in this petition that :

> All classes of labour have been compelled to ask for more wages to meet the increased cost of living; and in the case of post office officials whose duties require that they be at the office at a very early hour in the morning and also late at night, it is necessary that they reside near the office, and to make this possible a higher house rent has to be paid. Those who cannot afford to pay this rent and have to occupy houses at a great distance from the office, or in the suburbs find it arduous to maintain a necessarily punctual attendance.

They also set forth in the petition that the work is very irregular and strenuous, necessitating attendance at the office early in the morning and late at night the same day, that the responsibilities and duties of the office are very great and severe and for these reasons they ask the consideration of the government. This subject, I think, was discussed to some extent in connection with the measure which was introduced by the Postmaster General with respect to the officers of the inside service. The petition appears to give good ground for the consideration of the claims of these officers in the outside service; I know from my personal observation that their duties are in many cases very arduous, and I believe their salaries have not been increased, although the cost of living has greatly increased during the last eight or ten years. I therefore ask, on their behalf, the consideration of the government to the facts set forth in this petition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will call the attention of my hon. friend the Postmaster General to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax).

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the following message had been received from the Senate:

> The Senate on the 22nd of October, 1903, resolved that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that another conference is desired with the House of Commons for the purpose of communicating to them the further reasons which induced the Senate to insist on their amendments to the Bill entitled: 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting Railways,' and that the managers on the part of the Senate will meet in room No. 8 of the Senate at eleven o'clock to-night.

The PRIME MINISTER moved that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask, having regard to the peculiar formalities of these proceedings, whether it might not be necessary to take authority for what is called a free conference. It would appear from the ordinary procedure that one House simply submits resolutions adopted by that House to the other, and there appears to be some difficulty about any conference or discussion which might lead to some medium course. I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman who leads the House that it might be wise to give the managers of the conference some power for what is called a free discussion or free conference.

The PRIME MINISTER. The suggestion is a good one, but for my part I confess that I am rather ignorant of these formalities. I have had no time to look into the books to see what is to be done. But if we have power at this stage to move for a free conference, I would certainly add that to my motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The procedure, according to Bourinot, appears to be this : That when a Bill is sent from the House of Commons to the Senate and the Senate makes amendments to the Bill, in which they persist, then the House of Commons asks for a conference, and managers are appointed to go to the Senate to confer with the Senate and give reasons why they cannot consent to their amendments. If the first conference is unsuccessful, then the Senate has a right to ask for a new conference, and to give the reasons why they persist in their amendments. That is what they are doing now, they are now asking for another conference with the House of Commons in order to give the reasons why they persist in their amendment. After that, if there is no agreement, then a free conference can be held. Here is what Bourinot says :

> The report of the managers is then to be considered and disposed of by the House to which it is sent, which may take place immediately or be postponed to a future time. The result will be communicated to the other House by a message. Sometimes a second conference will be necessary, when the first has not led to an arrangement between the Houses. Or a free conference may be held when two conferences have been fruitless.

After two conferences have been held a free conference may take place.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That Hon. Sir William Mulock, Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, Hon. Mr. Fielding, Hon. Mr. Haggart, Hon. Mr. Blair, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Mr. Monk, Mr. Baker, Mr. Emmerson, Mr. Clark, Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville), and Mr. Wade be managers of the conference on the part of the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER. The time fixed for holding the second conference between the two Houses on the question of certain amendments to the Bill (No. 21) intituled an Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways,' having come, the Clerk of the House will read the names of the managers on the part of this House.

The Clerk read the names.

Mr. SPEAKER. The members named will proceed to the place of meeting, and in the meantime the sitting of the House will be suspended.

The sitting of the House was accordingly suspended.

The Speaker having resumed the Chair.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) on behalf of the managers of the conference presented the reasons of the Senate for insisting on their amendments made to Bill (No. 21) entitled an Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways, as follows :—

1st. Under section 3 of the Bill as passed by both Houses the Act is made to apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

2nd. Under section 4 as passed by the Commons and adopted by the Senate as section 6, the Act is also made to apply to all local railways which may be declared works for the general advantage of Canada.

3rd. The above two sections cover the whole field of the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada on the subject matter at issue.

4th. Section 7, as passed by the Senate, applies to all local railways the principle applied to street railways and tramways by the Commons under section 7 of the original Bill.

5th. Section 6 of the Bill, as passed by the Commons, is objectionable on the ground that it seeks to make once for all, as applying to all local railways happening to cross or connect with federal railways, the declaration which under section 92, subsection 10 of the British North America Act, 1867, should be made only as to individual cases as they arise.

6th. The same section is also objectionable on the ground that it brings under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada works owned and operated by corporations which remain creatures of provincial legislatures.

7th. The same section is objectionable on the further ground that the declaration in question would take permanent effect, although the crossing might be only temporary.

The Senate doth also insist on its amendment numbered 11 for the reason already assigned, and also for the following reasons :—

First : That the decisions of the Board of Railway Commissioners will from their nature apply to a multitude of cases and involve important interests.

Second : Because instead of being inconsistent with the spirit and with other provisions of the Bill, it merely extends the right of appeal provided for in the latter paragraph of sub-clause 3 of clause 44 of the original Bill to cases where leave is obtained from two judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, which right of appeal was limited in such original Bill to cases where leave was obtained from the board.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting a free conference on the proposed amendments to Bill (No. 21) entitled : An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting Railways.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That the managers of the conference on the part of the House be Sir Wm. Mulock, Hon. Mr. Fielding, Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick, Hon. Mr. Haggart, Hon. Mr. Blair, Mr. Borden (Halifax), Mr. Monk, Mr. Barker, Mr. Emmerson, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville) and Mr. Wade.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House again resumed consideration of resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Senate agree to a free conference, and that the managers on the part of the Senate will be the same as those who acted in the two former conferences.

The sitting of the House was accordingly suspended.

The SPEAKER having resumed the Chair.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps able to report what in substance occurred at the conference that was held in one of the rooms of the Senate. It was decided that amendments 5, 6, and 7 of the Bill, should be accepted, and that the amendment with respect to the right of appeal, section 11, should not be accepted. The Senate concurred therein, and that clause will remain as when it left this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The report of the conference will go on the Orders to-morrow, and I presume a motion will be made in accordance therewith.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. Lest there be any misapprehension, I may be permitted to say that the House of Commons managers agreed that amendments 5, 6, and 7, of the Senate should be accepted. There was a modification, however, agreed upon by the Senate, accepted by the managers on behalf of this House, that section 5 of the original Bill was to be restored with some slight verbal alterations. That will appear in the report which the Minister of Justice will submit to the House in writing.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It would be more satisfactory if a formal report would be made to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would be better, because it is desirable that it should be made to the Senate in exactly the same form in which it is made to this House, so as to prevent any misunderstanding hereafter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was fully expected that prorogation would be reached this afternoon, but because of an intimation given to us in the course of the conference with the Senate, it is not likely that we can have prorogation to-morrow, and that being the case, we may assume that it will take place on Saturday at an hour to be agreed upon at our next sitting. There is no object to be gained therefore by sitting later.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then my hon. friend expects prorogation some time on Saturday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 1 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, October 23, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ACT RESPECTING CERTAIN LOAN COMPANIES.

On the Orders of the Day being called,

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That item No. 35, consideration of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 24) An Act to extend the power of Loan Companies.—Mr. Thompson—be placed on government orders.

He said : The amendment made by the Senate to this Bill simply changes the title from 'An Act to extend the power of Loan Companies' to 'An Act respecting certain Loan Companies.' There is no other alteration.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That the amendment be read the second time and agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I think this House should not prorogue without giving a little consideration to the Alaskan boundary award.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) will allow me to interrupt him, I would say that I think it is quite a proper subject to be brought up, but I would suggest that we dispose of the formal business, which I think may be disposed of in a very short time, so that we can send all the procedure to the Senate, and the matter can be taken up again.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Post office—additional amount for outside service, $15,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to call the attention of the government to a complaint which has been made to me with regard to the postal service at Vankleek Hill. The complaint is as follows :

For the past year our mail service between Vankleek Hill and the following offices, viz.: Stardale, Barb, St. Eugéne and St. Anne de Prescott, Plantagenet, Alfred, Caledonia Springs, McAlpines, &c., has been simply exasperating and the government through its autocratic Postmaster General has declined to even see that the officials do their duty with the present fourteenth century service.

For example, Barb is eight miles from Vankleek Hill, St. Eugéne ten miles, Stardale, three miles, Caledonia Springs, eight miles, Alfred, fifteen miles and Plantagenet, twenty-two miles. It takes three days for letters to make these offices.

Here is a specific example. The Eastern Ontario 'Review' leaves Vankleek Hill every Friday morning at eight o'clock. This is Monday afternoon and these papers have not yet been delivered at Stardale or Ste. Anne de Prescott.

You will readily understand that in the country the farmers are greatly disappointed and annoyed if they fail to receive their weekly paper for Sunday reading.

Considering the very short distances, I would think that the correspondent who has communicated these facts to me was very much justified in asking me to bring the matter to the attention of the government, which I do in this brief way.

The PRIME MINISTER. Will you kindly send me the papers ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have only the letter which I have just read, and I will hand it to 'Hansard' so that the right hon. gentleman may be able to bring it to the attention of the Postmaster General.

WAYS AND MEANS—SURVEYS ON NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go again into Committee to consider the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, I would like to ask the government whether any report has been received from the surveying parties which have been sent out over the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and if so, what is the nature of the reports.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had that matter up in the House, yesterday, I think, and I stated we had no reports on the subject. We have no surveyors out in that section. The Grand Trunk Pacific have had some surveying done.

Mr. CLARKE. Where ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All my information comes from the public press. I understand they had surveying parties between North Bay and Winnipeg. Whatever their arrangements may be, however, we have no knowledge except that which is in the possession of the public. Any reports which may have been made are made to the company by their surveyors, and have not been communicated to the government.

ALASKA BOUNDARY COMMISSION

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I may mention to the Minister of Finance that I propose to make some remarks with regard to the Alaskan boundary award. So far as I am concerned, it would be convenient for me to do so now, but I see the Prime Minister is not in his place, and I will delay doing so at the convenience of hon. gentlemen opposite.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) rose for the purpose of making some observations on that question, and the Prime Minister requested that he should postpone doing so until the routine business was completed, as we desired to complete some measures in order to send them to the Senate, and then an opportunity would be afforded for discussion. I may inform my hon. friend that if he desires to bring up the question no objection will be taken, and an opportunity will be afforded during the day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will let the matter stand then until a more convenient time, on the understanding that an opportunity will be given for discussion during the day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

THE LUMBER TRADE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to bring to the attention of the government, on this motion, a telegram which has been received from a large manufacturing industry in British Columbia to the following effect :

> Cannot duty on lumber and shingles be imposed before close present session. Trades here will be ruined, as Washington state lumber trade badly demoralized, and large quantities American lumber and shingles being dumped into our markets. Our territory has been given away by Great Britain. Does our government intend continue giving away our trade ?

This telegram was addressed to another member of the opposition, not to myself. I am not personally aware of lumber dealers of Washington state bringing lumber into Canada at the present time, but I am informed by the gentleman to whom this telegram was addressed that one single contract to the extent of $276,000 has recently been awarded to an American lumber concern at prices slightly under Canadian prices, the price being fixed at such an amount as to preclude Canadians from supplying the demand ; and the suggestion is made that owing to the demoralized condition of trade in the state of Washington goods are being put in at these prices with the object of driving Canadians out of the business. Whether these allegations are true I do not know, but if they are true, it seems to me that the situation demands consideration by the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will cause surprise perhaps to some people to learn that there is a demoralized condition of trade in the United States in any branch, because I think we have been advised by many hon. gentlemen opposite that if we only had the tariff as high as the United States, there could be no demoralization of trade in Canada, and that everything would be lovely. It would seem, therefore, that a demoralization of trade may exist as well under a high tariff as under a low tariff. However, that is a large matter of controversy. I have received the same telegram as that which my hon. friend has read. Without discussing the merits of the question, I think he will agree with me that at the present stage of the session it would be impossible to take up the question, and perhaps it is not worth while to debate it. At all events, that is the view of the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as I am concerned, I have never taken the ground that there might not be demoralization of trade in the United States. On the contrary, I have pointed out that many industries in our country are being and will be injuriously affected by American goods being dumped into Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why do they want to dump them ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To get rid of their surplus.

Mr. F. OLIVER (Alta.) As this matter has been brought to the attention of the House, I would like to remind the House that there is at present an investigation being conducted by the government under an Act of Parliament, in regard to the existence of a lumber combine in British Columbia, the allegation being that this combine has unduly and improperly increased the price of lumber to Canadian consumers. If lumber is being dumped, as it is said, into Canada from the state of Washington, all I can say is that it is a very good thing for Canada that it is able to get lumber from the state of Washington at reasonable prices.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg to move the following resolution :

Resolved, that towards making good a supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1904, the sum of $29,385,-685.46 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

This, I may say, is the sum which is ascertained by the officers of the House as the result of the various votes which have been passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he has included the $32.04 that I have been forced to pay illegally for express matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I might say that in order to include that we should require to get a special message from His Excellency the Governor General and perhaps the hon. gentleman would not urge it for the present.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will allow it to stand over until next session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand this procedure. Why do we need a resolution of this kind when we have already voted these sums by resolutions which have been passed in Committee and concurred in by the House ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the usual procedure of the House. These sums are gathered into a total which can be expressed in the Supply Bill and these details are attached to the Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has this money been voted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been in the House for twenty-one years, and I do not remember of a resolution of this kind having been passed before.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. It is the universal practice.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it is always done.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 271) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1904.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved :

That order 19 'House again in committee on Bill (No. 215) to further amend the Criminel Code,' be discharged, and that the Bill be withdrawn.

He said : These amendments to the Criminal Code were prepared for the purpose of meeting certain grievances that existed in certain places and which have been complained of, but during the discussion I ascertained that the amendments did not go as far as it was considered they should. Since my attention has been brought to the matter it has not been within my power to give the amendments the consideration that they should have, and therefore, under these circumstances, I think I had better allow the amendments to remain over until next session, because we must have another session at an early date, when the whole matter will be considered.

Motion agreed to.

WORKS IN OR OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That order No. 20 'House again in committee on Bill (No. 206) to amend the Act respecting certain works constructing in or over navigable waters,' be discharged, and that the Bill be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That order No. 21 'House again in committee on Bill (No. 3) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900,' be discharged, and that the Bill be withdrawn.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the reason of altogether abandoning this Bill, which contains some very important provisions, provisions which were stated to be absolutely necessary by the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) in moving for the special committee. The hon. Minister of Finance, as the House will recollect, spoke of a very serious condition of things in connection with the election law and subsequently moved for a committee to which this Bill, originally introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), was referred. I was not present when the Bill was recently discussed. I was present during the first discussion, but I was under the impression that the principal portions of the Bill, outside of the clause which was called the compulsory voting clause, commended themselves to the judgment of the House, and the members of the government. I would consider it very unfortunate that the Bill should be withdrawn, because it is necessary that amendments should be made to the Election Act at the very earliest possible date. My only regret was that the report of the special committee did not go further and contain certain other provisions the necessity of which I have already pointed out.

The PRIME MINISTER. The principal feature of this Bill, viz., compulsory voting, failed to meet with favour in the House, because although it received some support there were very strong objections to it on both sides. There were other provisions of the Bill which personally I would have highly favoured, but when this Bill came up for discussion the second time, serious fault was found with the drafting of it, and the Minister of Justice undertook to supervise the redrafting. In the pressure of business the Minister of Justice has been unable to give it that attention which so important a matter required. I therefore think it is preferable to let the matter stand until another session, when the election Act should be revised.

Motion agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF EXCHEQUER COURT AS TO RAILWAY DEBTS—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 155) respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to railway debts.—The Prime Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Bill as it left the House gave permission to any creditor or person at the instance of the Minister of Railways and Canals, to exercise the power given under this Bill. The first amendment of the Senate adds the words :

Or with the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council at the instance——

This enacts that an ordinary creditor may not exercise the power under this Bill, except with the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does it mean that no person can take any proceedings under this Act for the sale of a railway in the Exchequer Court, without the consent of the railway commission.

The PRIME MINISTER. No ordinary creditor.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the words : 'Railway Committee of the Privy Council' will hereafter be interpreted to mean the Board of Railway Commissioners.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax.) I approve of this amendment ; in fact I suggested when the Bill passed this House, that it was an extraordinary power to give a creditor of the company.

Amendment concurred in.

The PRIME MINISTER. The second amendment provides that the company shall have failed for thirty days to operate the railway, instead of ten days, as in the original Bill.

Amendment concurred in.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Bill as it left this House read :

At the instance of a creditor of such person or company having a lien or charge upon the railway or section, or of a mortgagee of such railway or section, to order or decree a like sale of such railway, &c.

According to the amendments of the Senate it will read :

At the instance of a creditor of such person or company having a 'first' lien or charge upon the railway or section, or of 'a holder of a first mortgage.'

The word 'first' is inserted before the word 'lien' and the words 'holder of a first mortgage' are inserted instead of the words 'mortgagee.'

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). How is this going to affect the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway in my county ? This Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway has been transferred over to the trustees for the bondholders, and they represent a road on which some $300,000 is due to the people of my county. Are they to remain eternally in possession of this road, debarring all other creditors from being paid ? They are obliged by law to run two trains a day both ways, but for the past year they have only been running one train both ways. I have also a complaint from the municipal council of the township of Restigouche, that for the first thirty miles there are no fences on the road, and that it is altogether unsatisfactory. I wish to know if there is any process under the law, by which the ordinary creditors of the road; the labourers, those who furnish material, and those who furnish the right of way, can have any redress ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I regret that I cannot say what may be the effect of the law with regard to this particular road; that is a legal question on which I cannot express an opinion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. According to the Senate amendment, the action before the Exchequer Court to sell the road, can only be taken at the instance of a person having a first lien.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is what I understand. The Senate amends the 6th clause by striking out the last words :

But such transfers to trustees shall not exclude such railway from the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I draw the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Marcil) to the fact, that his railway is withdrawn altogether from the jurisdiction of the court by this amendment. The court can make no order for sale, if the road is in the hands of trustees.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). When this company found it was unable to carry out its undertaking, by a process of law which seems extraordinary to the ordinary layman, the road was handed over to trustees. These trustees are now in the enjoyment of the revenue from that road, and they absolutely refuse to pay one dollar of the debts due to the people of the county. When we ask them to pay anything we are met with the answer : These are Armstrong's debts and we are not responsible for them. The poor people of the county of Bonaventure remain unpaid, while the English bondholders so called, are in possession of the road. Under such circumstances, the law is very unjust to the people of Bonaventure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It appears to me that any person having a subsequent lien could take possession of the road, and deal with it as he sees fit.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). They are in possession of the road now, but they refuse to pay the debts.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think the leader of the opposition is quite right when he says that the unfortunate labourer whose daily wage is $1.50 a day, will have a chance of getting paid if he redeems the whole of the bonds.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Reference was made to a person having a subsequent lien, and the daily labourer, so far as this road is concerned, is, or ought be, in exactly the same position as he is with regard to all roads. I think his claim should be made a preferential claim.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is made a preferential claim.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood that it was. That is done under most contracts for the construction of railways, so far as I have been able to observe ; and if there has been any difference in that respect in regard to this railway, it is not only unfortunate but absolutely wrong. The men who put their work on the railway should be paid in the first instance ; but I do not say that on that account the bondholders who supply the money to build the road should be put aside. You can protect the interests of both if you deal with the matter properly in the first instance. The proper course in matters of this kind is very simple. You should make such a contract with the people who build the railway that the money they raise from the sale of the bonds must be applied to pay the labourers in the first place ; but when you have once taken the money from the bondholders and given them a lien on the road, there is no reason for disregarding the rights they have thus acquired. It is not their fault that the money has not been paid to the labourers. I do not know how the difficulty arose in this case ; I do not know anything of its history. All I say is that you cannot disregard the sanctity of contracts ; but you should have seen in the first place that the money was applied in payment of the labourers. Were not subsidies granted to this railway ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Subsidies were granted to build two roads there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax.) In your subsidy contract it should be a condition precedent to the payment of any subsidy by this country, that the men who construct the road must show that the people who put their labour upon it are paid. I do not know why the subsidy in this case was not dealt with in that manner. I am not suggesting, as the Minister of Justice implies, that the men are not entitled to be paid. I say they should have been paid. It should have been absolutely impossible for the people who built the road to receive the subsides until the men were paid. But I say that consistently with that the men who put their money into this road and obtained a mortgage upon it, must be allowed to exercise their right under their mortgage, because you cannot set aside a contract entered into between the bondholders and the company.

The PRIME MINISTER. All this occurred many years ago, at a time when we were not perhaps as cautious with these matters as we are at present. I do not myself see that there is any remedy for these poor people, because, after all, the bondholders have put their money into the road. It is very much to be regretted, but it is hard to see what remedy can be applied.

Amendment concurred in.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, as the House has disposed of the Orders of the Day, I will now proceed with the discussion of the question which I gave notice to the House I intended to bring up. I think it is most important that before we separate some of the real facts in regard to the Alaskan boundary question should be discussed in this House. I quite sympathize with the feelings of my colleagues who think that I might dispense with bringing the question up at this time ; but as there will be no other opportunity, I beg of them to stand the ordeal. In the newspapers of Canada, as well as in the private and public utterances of statesmen and important citizens, a good many things have been said on this question which might give birth to feelings between this country and the motherland as well as between this country and the United States which might just as well be avoided. In the first place, we must remember that the recent tribunal had nothing to do but to give a strictly legal interpretation of the treaty of 1825, concluded between Great Britain and Russia in regard to the line that should divide the Russian and British possessions in the North-west. The two questions which were raised before the tribunal were : What was the Portland channel through which the line had to pass before reaching the mainland ? and, what was the chain of mountains, or, in the absence of mountains, what was to be the line, dividing the British and the Russian possessions, and in what way would that affect access from the British possessions to the sea ? The Canadian claim was that if the line were drawn according to the real meaning of the treaty, we would be entitled to the ends of some of the deep inlets which penetrate through that strip of land, and which would give us access to the sea ; while the American contention was that the strip of territory which was acknowledged as being the Russian possession by the treaty of 1825, was to be uninterrupted, so that British subjects would be prevented from having access for the interior to the sea, except by river navigation through that strip of land. Of course, a good many contentions could be made, and have in fact been made, as to the interpretation of the treaty as it stands ; but the question put before this tribunal, as will be found in the correspondence which has been laid on the Table of the House, so far as that strip of land is concerned, was, not simply what the letter of the treaty meant, but what was the intention of the parties who concluded the treaty of 1825 ? Well, Sir, if one only takes the trouble to go through the British blue-books and read carefully the correspondence that was exchanged for three years from 1822 to 1825, between Mr. George Canning, who was then Foreign Secretary in England, and Sir Charles Bagot, who was British ambassador at St. Petersburg, and afterwards with Mr. Stratford Canning, who succeeded Sir Charles Bagot, and who concluded the treaty, I think no other conclusion can be drawn by any unbiased mind than that it was clearly the intention of the parties that the strip of land should be uninterrupted, and that Great Britain would not have any right whatever to the inlets that penetrated the coast.

Now, Sir, we must remember the facts of the case as it stood at that time. The intention of Great Britain in opening these negotiations was not to delimit territory ; it was to obtain from the Russian government the repeal of Ukase of 1821, of Emperor Alexander, who had excluded all foreign vessels from navigating within 100 Italian miles of the shore of all territories claimed by Russia, whether in islands or on the mainland. Of course, that pretention was preposterous, and in the following year, at the congress of Verona, Lord Wellington endeavoured to have the Ukase repealed, but did not succeed. Joint action was taken by the United States and Great Britain to bring about the repeal of the Ukase, and for two years negotiations were carried on jointly between the Russian, British and American governments. But the Americans were as clever then as they are to-day, and they succeeded, while still apparently acting in conjunction with the British ambassador, in concluding a treaty with the Russian government without the knowledge of the British government ; and in the treaty concluded in 1824, the United States government acknowledged to Russia the right to bring her posessions down to 54 degrees 40 minutes north latitude. Naturally Great Britain was left in an awkward position, because the question of delimitation was thereby forced upon her, and the discussion began. To show that the British government did not care much about territory or about that strip of land or its width, I will quote one sentence from the last despatch sent by George Canning to Sir Stratford Canning, in which he said :

> It remains only, in recapitulation, to remind you of the origin and principles of this whole negotiation.
> It is 'not' on our part, essentially a negotiation about limits. It is a demand of the repeal of an offensive and unjustifiable arrogation of exclusive jurisdiction over an ocean of unmeasured extent; but a demand qualified and mitigated in its manner, in order that its justice may be acknowledged and satisfied without soreness or humiliation on the part of Russia.

They were negotiating 'about territory to cover the remonstrance upon the principle.' This despatch was dated December 8, 1824. At the opening of the negotiations, Mr. Canning had written to Sir Charles Bagot, on the 15th of January, 1824 :

If Your Excellency can obtain the strait which separates the islands from the mainland as the boundary, the prolongation of the line drawn through that strait would strike the mainland near Mount Elias—the lowest point of unquestioned Russian discovery. But if that were too much to insist upon, the 135th degree of longitude, as suggested by Your Excellency, northward from the head of Lynn's arbour might suffice.

It would, however, in that case, be expedient to assign, with respect to the mainland southward of that point, a limit, say of 50 or 100 miles from the coast, beyond which the Russian posts should not be extended to the eastward.

Thus at the very opening of negotiations the British government were ready to grant a strip of land, from the 60th degree of north latitude to the North Pole, of 6 degrees of longitude wider than what was claimed by Russia ; that would have taken as Russian territory the whole Yukon territory. As for the strip of coast below this point, Canning was ready to grant a strip 100 miles wide, which would, of course, have taken in a good slice of the Rocky mountains. We must remember that the British interests on the mainland at that time were represented by the Hudson's Bay Company and the North-west Company alone ; and throughout that correspondence it will be found that at every new step in the negotiations, every time that new offers and counter-proposals were made, the British government consulted the Hudson's Bay Company ; and that suggestion of a strip of land 100 miles wide down to the 56th degree of latitude was approved of by the Hudson's Bay Company. But afterwards, as the negotiations went on, Russia insisted strictly upon coming down to 54 degrees 40 minutes north latitude, which had been acknowledged to her by the United States government as the southerly limit of her possessions. With the southern boundary coming down to that point, the Hudson's Bay Company objected to the strip of land being extended too far inland. Therefore, Sir Charles Bagot suggested different proposals : That the line should run through what is now Chatham strait, then through Clarence strait—and finally consented to the Russian proposal to have the line pass through the Portland canal ; and from the head of the Portland canal he himself suggested to the Russian government that a strip of land, ten marine leagues wide, without any reference to mountains whatever, should be taken as the Russian coast from the head of the Portland canal until it reached the 140th degree of longitude. Upon that proposal, the Russian government suggested that it would be better to take the mountains, because that would be a natural boundary. Some discussion followed, and the only objection that was raised by the British government or the British Ambassador as to the mountain limit was that it might carry that strip too far inland. They were ready to grant the whole strip of coast, but they did not like to have the Russian territory extend too far inland for fear it might come in contact with the establishments of the Hudson's Bay Company and the North-west Company. It was thereupon agreed that the mountain line should be chosen as the frontier, with the understanding that in case the mountains would go too far inland they would fall back on the ten marine leagues limit. The British government knew perfectly at that time that the limit as suggested by the Russians would exclude all British settlers from having access to the sea, as is clearly laid down in the first objection raised by Sir Charles Bagot against the Russian proposal. I quote from the memorandum, a copy of which was transmitted to Mr. Canning on the 17th of March, 1824 :

Comme il a été convenu de prendre pour base de négociation les convenances mutuelles des deux pays, il est à remarquer, en réponse à la proposition faite par les plénipotentiaires Russes, qu'une ligne de démarcation tracée de l'extrémité méridionale de l'Ile du Prince de Galles, jusqu'à l'embouchure du canal de Portland, de là par le milieu de ce canal jusqu'à ce qu'elle touche la terre ferme, de là jusqu'aux montagnes qui bordent la côte, et de là le long de ces montagnes jusqu'à la longitude du 139ème degré, etc., ôterait à Sa Majesté Britannique la souveraineté de toutes ces anses et de ces petites baies qui se trouvent entre les latitudes 56° et 54° 45′ dont plusieurs (à ce qu'il y a tout lieu à croire) communiquent directement aux établissements de la Compagnie de Hudson's-Bay.

Therefore, from the start, the British ambassador knew that an acceptance of the Russian proposal would deprive British subjects of access to the sea, whereupon the Russian government offered to give free access to the sea through all the rivers that flowed from British territory and emptied their water through that strip of land. This was submitted by Canning to the Hudson's Bay Company and accepted by the Hudson's Bay Company as being a sufficient means of communication to the sea, and this was included in Article VI. of the treaty of which I shall give the authorized translation:

It is understood that the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, from whatever quarter they may arrive, whether from the ocean, or from the interior of the continent, shall for ever enjoy the right of navigating freely, and without any hindrance whatever, all the rivers and streams which, in their course towards the Pacific ocean, may cross the line of demarcation upon the line of coast described in article III. of the present convention.

Now, as I have said, this was submitted to the Hudson's Bay Company. And what was the reply ? I have it here. It is dated 9th April, 1824, and is signed by J. H. Pelly. I do not know what his official position was, but all the correspondence of the Hudson's Bay Company at that time was signed by him :

I am to state that if His Majesty's government consider it advisable in other respects to accede to the last proposition made by the Russian government for the arrangement of a line of demarcation between the possessions of Russia and Great Britain on the coast of North America, they see no reason to object to it, as it will affect their particular interests, and more especially as it appears to secure to them a free access to the sea for the purposes of their trade on the whole coast to the eastward of the 139th degree of longitude.

What meaning the Hudson's Bay Company—and afterwards the British government—attached to this was that the British secured free navigation of the rivers, notwithstanding the control by Russia of the inlets and small bays. Therefore, as to the intention of the British government and the Hudson's Bay Company, there is no question that they knew that they were excluded from the bays and inlets, but that they believed that free navigation of the rivers and streams was secured.

So far as the mountain boundary is concerned we must remember that the negotiators both in London and St. Petersburg had no knowledge of the country but had to rely upon such documents as were in existence at the time. The map that was most relied upon was the map of Vancouver. If any one will refer to that map he will find that the only mountains indicated was a chain of mountains along the strip of coast and around the inlets, the Taku inlet, the Lynn canal and others, and parallel with the windings of the coast. That Mr. Canning believed the mountains to go all around the coast, I find evidence in his last letter upon which the treaty was signed ; it is dated 8th December, 1824 :

The Russian plenipotentiaries propose to withdraw entirely the limit of the ' Lisière ' on the coast which they were themselves the first to propose, viz., the summit of the mountains which run parallel to the coast, and which appear, according to the map, to follow all its sinuosities and to substitute generally that which we only suggested as a corrective of their first proposition.

As Canning pointed out in other letters, it might happen—as has been proven—that the mountains might not be as they appeared on the map ; and, in case the mountains should reach too far inland and interfere with the establishments of the Hudson's Bay Company and the North-west Company, he suggested—and his suggestion was adopted by both parties—that a rider should be attached to this stipulation. Therefore, article 4 of the treaty was adopted, which reads :

With reference to the line of demarcation laid down in the preceding article it is understood :—

1st. That the island called the Prince of Wales island shall belong wholly to Russia.

2nd. That whenever the summit of the mountains which extend in a direction parallel to the coast, from the 56th degree of north latitude to the point of intersection of the 141st degree of west longitude, shall prove to be at the distance of more than ten marine leagues from the ocean, the limit between the British possessions and the line of coast which is to belong to Russia, as above mentioned, shall be formed by a line parallel to the windings of the coast, and which shall never exceed the distance of ten marine leagues therefrom.

A great deal of discussion has taken place upon this article of the treaty because of the word ' ocean ' being used there. I shall not deal at length with this part of the treaty. It is sufficient to go through all the proposals and counter proposals, and especially the comments upon them at that time, to show, as Lord Alverstone has very properly said, that the introducing of the word ' ocean ' there could not make obscure the intention of the parties. And, in any case, the word ' ocean ' related only to the mountains. But if you read the clause carefully, you will see that this portion of it which had in view the possible absence of mountains, and was intended to provide for a boundary line, stipulated that such line should be drawn parallel, not to the shore of the ocean, but to the sinuosities of the coast. We may discuss the technical meaning of the word ' ocean,' and the word ' coast,' but it is stated clearly in all the letters that the line shall follow the ' sinuosities ' of the coast and be parallel to them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman read then the section which, according to him, provides that it shall follow the sinuosities of the coast ?

Mr. BOURASSA. That is article 4, which I have just read. The words in the article seem clear enough, and, the letters and other documents make it clearer still. I do not wish to weary the House, but I could give a dozen quotations, from George Canning, Bagot and others representing the British government, and from representatives of the Russian government as well, to prove that, so far as the intentions of the parties are concerned, the object sought was to grant to Russia a strip ten marine leagues wide, not from the ocean, but from a line marking the sinuosities of the coast. The object of the portion of the treaty which I have read was only to prevent the Russian possessions from stretching too far inland.

Now, Sir, many facts have arisen since the signature of the treaty to prove what was the meaning the British authorities put upon the treaty, so far as that part of it is concerned. I can refer to official maps published by the British government which show that this reading of the treaty was recognized. I might refer to the case of a prisoner who was captured by the Canadian authorities in Cassiar district. He was brought through what was claimed American territory, but what we claimed to be our territory. He protested against being held as a prisoner while in American territory. He was tried at Victoria and was condemned. A protest was made by the Secretary of State of the United States to the Foreign Office in London, and an order came directly to the Canadian government to release this prisoner on the ground that he had been held as a prisoner by British officers on American territory. But, to my mind the strongest point of all, so far as posterior interpretation is concerned, is the one raised by the agreement entered into between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Russian American Company.

Mr. GOURLEY. How would that bind the British government ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I will show the House in a moment. Let my loyal friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) control his disloyal feeling for a little while.

Mr. GOURLEY. I wish you had such loyalty as mine.

Mr. BOURASSA. Not more than fourteen years after the signature of the treaty, the one body of men most deeply interested in that country—in fact the only body that represented British interests in the country—the Hudson's Bay Company (which company it must be remembered had political and military powers from the British government) made an agreement with the Russian American Company which also had political and military powers from the Russian government. These two companies signed an agreement in 1839, by which the Russian American Company leased to the Hudson's Bay Company most of that strip of coast for five years. The agreement was renewed for several periods of five years. And here is where the official part of it comes in.

When the Crimean war was declared, the two companies thought it advisable, in their mutual interest, to agree that a state of war should not exist in that part of the world. They renewed their lease and had it ratified officially by the British government and by the Russian government. After the war was over, as the members of this House know, there was a change of government in England, and the whole question of the Crimean war and its consequences were made the subject of inquiry. A committee of the House investigated this agreement between the Hudson Bay Company and the Russian-American Company. Sir George Simpson, governor of the Hudson Bay Company, appeared before that committee and was asked what he knew of the nature and purpose of that agreement. He said that the nature and purpose of this agreement was that the Russians, having very little business now upon that coast, and the Hudson Bay Company wishing to do some trade there the latter had leased the coast and got the lease ratified by the British government and by the Russian government, and agreed upon as being a neutral territory during the time of the war. He also produced a map before the House of Commons, and that map is still in the British archives, upon which he had painted in yellow the strip of coast granted by the Russian-American Company to the Hudson Bay Company. That strip of coast as painted upon that map is exactly the territory which is claimed by the American government and has been awarded to them by this tribunal. This is the map which was produced before the British House of Commons, accepted by the British government as showing the title of the Russian-American Company, and it was never contested by either the Canadian government or by the British government. I think this single fact should be sufficient to show that the line of demarcation between the strip of territory belonging to the Americans and the British territory, was acknowledged officially, and the territory outside of that line belonged to the Americans.

The next point I would like to touch upon refers to the Portland channel.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before I pass to the question of the Portland channel, I may add that a good deal of the misapprehension which has existed in this country concerning the respective rights of Great Britain and Russia and the United States over the strip of land, has arisen evidently from the fact that the exact phraseology of the treaty, as viewed in the light of the preceding correspondence as well as of the subsequent facts, was somewhat misunderstood even by some of the Canadian officials. For example, in a report sent to Sir Charles Tupper in February, 1888, Dr. Dawson, referring to that strip of land, spoke of the line as being parallel to the coast, and dropped these expressive words, 'sinuosities of the coast,' which appear in the treaty, and upon which the Russians had insisted all along during the negotiations. This fact shows, I think, a misapprehension on which, for example, Mr. Hodgins of Toronto, has based a very interesting article that was published last year, and that was considered in Canada as a valuable contribution to this question.

To show how far Canadian statesmen were ignorant of the real facts about this treaty, I may ask members of the House to read a couple of pages of the life of Sir John A. Macdonald, by Mr. Pope, in that chapter which relates to the negotiations for the Washington treaty of 1871. There it will be seen that at the suggestion of Sir Donald A. Smith, who had been and perhaps was then still governor of the Hudson Bay Company, Sir John A. Macdonald insisted and secured, or thought he had secured, a valuable right for Canada in putting article 26 in the Washington treaty, providing that British subjects should be free to navigate the Stikine river—forgetting that by the treaty of 1825 we already possessed the right of navigating all these rivers. Of course article 26 of the Washington treaty also added that we had the right to navigate the Yukon and Porcupine rivers. That was a useful right to acquire, but I think the stipulation including the Stikine, with the Porcupine and the Yukon rivers, shows conclusively that even the Prime Minister of Canada at that time, and the governor of the Hudson Bay Company, did not know that they already held under the treaty of 1825 more than they were asking for in respect to the navigation of the Stikine river. I may also add that in 1874, a report was presented to the Minister of the Interior of Canada, by Mr. J. F. Dennis, Surveyor General of Canada, with reference to the boundary that was to be traced according to the treaty of 1825. In that report Mr. Dennis mentioned as one of the results of the tracing of that boundary. . . . .

The crossing of the following rivers on the Pacific coast by the said boundary, that is to say: The rivers 'Skoot,' 'Stackeen,' 'Taku,' 'Isilcat,' 'Chilkaht.'

So it was considered at that time and was not contradicted, that the boundary crossed those rivers that traversed that strip of coast, and therefore we could not claim the heads of the inlets since we acknowledged ourselves that the boundary line had to cross the rivers which flow into those inlets.

I need not say that this boundary question is by far the most important of all the questions that were submitted to arbitration, because the answer to it was to decide whether we could have a free port on Canadian territory to reach the Yukon. The other part of the question submitted—that is to say: Where does the Portland channel begin and where should the line pass ?—is a much less important one. But so far as that part of the award is concerned, I am at sea to understand the decision that was reached by the majority of the commission. No one who has studied the map, who has read Vancouver's reports of his trips in that part of the continent, can come to any other conclusion than that the four islands, Kannaghunut, Sitklan, Pearse and Wales, either all belong to Canada or all belong to the United States. So I think, we must come to the conclusion that if Lord Alverstone acted strictly according to his judicial functions in regard to the former and most important question, in regard to the latter question, he played the role of a diplomat rather than that of a judge.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think you had better apply that remark to all of them.

Mr. BOURASSA. Of course, I admit, that a good many things can be said in favour of the American contention, and perhaps it is well——

Mr. GOURLEY. Has the hon. gentleman a brief from Washington ? Does he think that in this British parliament he is called upon to argue a case that has been ably argued from the American side by paid advocates from Washington ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not intend to be diverted from my argument. Perhaps it would be well for the Canadian people to acknowledge the facts before they indulge in such wild talk as we have seen in some of the newspapers and which perhaps we may hear from the lips of some hon. gentleman in this House.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am very proud of the newspapers in Canada for resenting this slur.

Mr. BOURASSA. I think it is just as well that we should study coolly the facts of this case, so that we may receive a decision like this with a knowledge of the facts, as well as with a certain amount of dignity. When we come to the time of placing the responsibility where we think it should lie, then, perhaps, I might come nearer to my hon. friend in my opinion of British diplomacy.

Mr. GOURLEY. Don't, for heaven's sake.

Mr. BOURASSA. I was going to say that the British Admiralty published a map, dated 15th December, 1896, and corrected in March, 1900—one year after the British plenipotentiaries had held at Washington and Quebec that we were entitled to the northern channel of the Portland canal—in which map the southern entrance, which the Canadian commissioners contended was the entrance to Observatory Inlet, is set down as 'Portland Inlet.' It is not surprising that Lord Alverstone came to the conclusion that the Portland canal was really to the south of the four islands when the British Admirality, even after we had laid claim publicly to the north channel, still published on their official chart the southern channel as being the Portland canal. As far as that is concerned, I leave my hon. friend from Colchester to address his reproaches to the British Admiralty.

Much has been said about the importance of these two little islands, Kannaghunut and Sitklan. As far as their intrinsic value is concerned, I think every body will agree that they are of no value whatever. To speak of their strategic value is to my mind going a little beyond the mark. If Canada should be at war with the United States, I think we would have enough to do, even if my hon. friend from Colchester went in the trenches, to defend other parts of Canada much more important than Sitklan and Kannaghunut islands. The hon. member from Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte), or his organ, 'La Patrie' of Montreal, has gone to the extent of declaring that the possession of these two islands by the United States threatened the security of Port Simpson. Of course, the hon. gentleman has probably based his opinion upon the fact that the Canadian commissioners, Sir Louis Jetté and Mr. Aylesworth, stated, in what we have seen of their report so far, that these two islands commanded the entrance to Portland canal; and probably the hon. gentleman has concluded therefrom that they were of great importance to the security of Port Simpson. But if my hon. friend had looked at the map he would have found out that Sitklan and Kannaghunut islands command the entrance of what we call Portland channel, but that they have nothing whatever to do with commanding the entrance to the southern channel or what we call Observatory Inlet, but what the British Admiralty and the American government call Portland canal. Wales island is the one that commands the entry to the channel.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. How many miles are there?

Mr. BOURASSA. I have not the scale of the map.

The PRIME MINISTER. Between what points?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Between Sitklan island and Port Simpson.

The PRIME MINISTER. Fifteen miles.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Between twelve and thirteen miles.

Mr. BOURASSA. Wales island is about half way between Sitklan island and Port Simpson——

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have looked at the map.

Mr. BOURASSA. Therefore, if by the possession of Wales island and Pearse island we are not able to protect Port Simpson against any fortifications that the Americans may erect on Sitklan island, we cannot protect it at all. Even with the possession of Sitklan island, Port Simpson would be no more protected than without it. Wales island is between the two. Suppose we possessed these two little rocks, how would we prevent the American government from fortifying the mainland? Therefore, I say that the possession of these islands could afford no valuable protection against attack upon Fort Simpson from the mainland.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know the area of these three islands?

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not know the area, but from looking at the map I should judge that Sitklan island is perhaps one mile in length or a little less, while Wales island is quite extensive and Pearse island still larger. Wales island gives more protection to the entrance to Port Simpson than Sitklan island, which is close to the mainland.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. Wales island is beside the channel and the two others are outside of it.

Mr. BOURASSA. Wales island is really at the dividing line between the two channels.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. But inside the channel.

Mr. BOURASSA. The southern point of Wales island is between Sitklan island and Port Simpson.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. It is something like that, but not quite. The other islands are outside of the mouth of the channel.

Mr. BOURASSA. But aside from the intrinsic value of these islands, there is one feature of this incident which I think we cannot too much deplore as representatives of the people of Canada. It is the spirit which has characterized the decision of the majority of the commissioners, in so far as that part of the question is concerned. To my mind, instead of concentrating all our ire and indignation upon the shoulders of a worthy and learned magistrate, who, in regard to four-fifths of his opinions, had certainly facts to justify his decision, we should go to the root of things and find out where lies the real responsibility which has forced upon the people and government of Canada this unfortunate decision. That, I think, would be much more statesmanlike, and would lead to a much clearer and better understanding in the future as to our rights towards the British government. There were two means of disposing of this question—one by diplomacy and the other by judicial arbitration. If there had been an effort to effect a diplomatic compromise of this question, one would have had to have offered something in compensation; and especially when dealing with a nation like the United States, I think it would have been a very dangerous thing to have gone to them and offered to compromise without having something to offer in compensation. We know too much about their appetite and disposition. Perhaps hon. members of this House will remember that at the time of the denunciation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, I stated in this House that the moment the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was abrogated without compensation to Canada our case in regard to the Alaskan boundary was very much compromised. I was violently attacked at that time by some people who are now very hard on the British government and even on the British Crown. I could not explain at that time the whole of my mind, because I could not give public expression to my opinion of the Alaskan boundary question.

I had been connected with the Anglo-American commission to which the question had been submitted, and I could not speak; but now that the Alaskan question is settled, I may say here what I had in my mind, and that is: That the moment Great Britain voluntarily decided not to set off the Alaskan boundary question against the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, our case was lost, because it was left for decision to judicial arbitration, and in my opinion, we had no case from a judicial point of view. That was the opinion of the Hon. David Mills, late Minister of Justice, who published articles in England, stating that the British government had no right to denounce the Clayton-Bulwer treaty without obtaining for Canada a settlement of the Alaskan boundary question. So far as I am concerned, I declare here and now that I would have been the last man to ask Great Britain to give a quid pro quo as between the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the Alaskan boundary treaty. I belong to that school of colonials who believe that we should ask nothing from the Motherland and give nothing to the Motherland, while at the same time we should preserve the very slight tie which has united us so far. But, Sir, I leave to my strong imperial friends; I leave it to those who declare from time to time that we must make voluntary sacrifices for Great Britain; I leave it to them to settle their account with the British government, and especially with Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, who, at that time, had in care the welfare of Canada. I may just point out en passant, that at a time when the sons of Canada were shedding their blood for the empire on the soil of Africa, Mr. Chamberlain was coldly sacrificing the interests of Canada, so far as they were involved in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the Alaskan boundary treaty. I repeat, that for my part I would not have asked the British Government to make the abrogation of one treaty dependent on the defining of the other. I think, Sir, that the British government should look to their own interests and that we should look to our own interests. But, as the same time, I point out this fact, to show those who think that the bond of empire should be an exchange of mutual services, that if they calmly study the history of the relations between Canada and the United States as affected by British diplomacy, they will find that the services have been very often on the one side, and the favours very seldom on the other.

Let me point out that the special London correspondent of the Montreal 'Star' published the following quotation from the London 'Morning Post,' a journal which is in close contact with the present British government:

> The 'Morning Post' asks, presumedly with some ulterior purpose: 'Has the British government evidence that Canada was anxious above all for a verdict, and also that the Canadian government approved of the selection of an Englishman as a commissioner.'

Within the last day or two, the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has published articles in his newspaper, blaming the Canadian government for having gone to this tribunal and for having consented to this sacrifice of our interests. Well, Sir, so far as the constitution of the tribunal is concerned, the correspondence has been brought down, and now is the time to apportion the responsibility. As hon. members know, when the Washington conference was adjourned, in 1899, it was decided to leave the settlement of this question to the British and American governments. It was not dealt with until last fall, and then Mr. Chamberlain informed the Canadian government that Sir Michael Herbert—whose death we all regret—had received an offer from Mr. Hay, the United States Secretary of State, to settle this Alaskan boundary question. A tribunal was proposed by the United States government of the very same kind that had been offered in 1899 and refused by the Canadian commissioners. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) has asked in his newspaper: 'Why did the Canadian government consent in 1903 to what they refused in 1899?' I am not here to speak for the Canadian government, but I can speak of what I find in the correspondence, and in that correspondence I find that the Canadian government urged upon the British government the great inconvenience of leaving the question to be decided by such a tribunal, and offered to have it submitted to the Hague tribunal. To this Mr. Chamberlain replied that this was impossible, as the United States government would not consent. The Canadian government then gave way to a certain extent, and they said: We will consent to have it submitted to this tribunal, provided that the tribunal be composed of jurists of repute, who will decide according to law. Everybody knows what happened. One day we were informed in the press that Secretary Root and Senators Lodge and Turner were to be chosen by the President of the United States as the American arbitrators. On the 18th of February, 1903, the anouncement came officially in a despatch from the Colonial Secretary to Lord Minto. Three days later Lord Minto cabled that his ministers protested strongly against the choice of these commissioners, because their appointment was certainly a breach of the treaty which provided for six eminent jurists. The protest of the Canadian government was couched in such terms that it left the door open for a refusal by the Canadian government to consent to appear before that tribunal.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman means that Lord Minto acted on the advice of his ministers?

Mr. BOURASSA. Of course. To that despatch the British government replied that it was useless to make any representations at Washington, and they urged most strongly upon the Canadian government the acceptance of that tribunal. I say 'urged': the language of the British government is polite—they are always polite in their language—but the meaning is there; and it is easy to see that the British government wanted to 'force' on us the acceptance of that tribunal. But there was more to follow. A draft of the treaty was signed and ratified by the British government before they had obtained the final consent of the Canadian government to the constitution of the tribunal, as it had been announced by the government of the United States. Therefore, if we have indignation to express; if we have sore feelings to give vent to; let those who are so anxious about the dignity of Canada, not vent them upon Lord Alverstone, who, once appointed, had nothing left but to give a judgment acording to what he thought to be a strict law; but let them go to the source of all the trouble; let them go to the responsible statesmen in England who concluded a treaty affecting the interests of Canada without waiting for the opinion of the Canadian government representing the Canadian people. After the tribunal had been organized, there was no recourse but to have the question judged according to law. Lord Alverstone has himself pointed out that in his opinion the line of frontier, as provided for by the treaty, is an absurd one; but he very properly added that he was not there to change treaties, but to interpret them. Then, Sir, so far as that is concerned, I must say that I believe Lord Alverstone has done his duty.

Now, on the broader question of British diplomacy, I want to be clearly understood. I do not say that the British government should take any risk in safe-guarding our interests at Washington. I do not belong to the school who would ask from Great Britain one iota of a sacrifice in order to protect Canadian interests; but I think I have the right to ask, and every member of this House and every Canadian citizen has the right to ask, that the British government, for the sole purpose of catching American favour, shall have no right to compromise Canadian interests without the will of the Canadian people. That is all I ask from the British government.

Sir, if the members of this House want to have an idea of the great services rendered to the Canadian people at the hands of British diplomacy, in our relations with the United States, I will refer them to a little episode which happened in 1888. One of the arguments made all through the American press and by American commissioners and American diplomats, is that before the discovery of gold in the Yukon, the Canadian government never raised any protest against the occupation of that strip of land, all along and without any interruption, by the American government. To this we have replied that we raised protests in 1888. But, Sir—and this is a very amusing illustration of British diplomacy—how did those protests reach Washington? The first document was a letter addressed by Mr. Burgess, Deputy Minister of the Interior, to Sir John Macdonald, dated the 19th of June, 1888, in which he said very precisely:

> Captain Moore, of Victoria, British Columbia, who was for some time a member of Ogilvie's expedition to the Yukon, has reported to the government of British Columbia that he believes certain persons are about to receive a charter from the Alaskan authorities to construct a trail from Lynn canal by way of White pass to the interior of Alaska. If our view of the case is correct, the entire route of this trail, as well as the trail by the Chilkoot pass, is in Canadian territory.

To that letter was added a memorandum giving a description of the country, and giving the contention of the Canadian government in regard to the exact location of the boundary. Sir John Macdonald, in a letter dated the 18th of July, 1888, sent Mr. Burgess' note to Sir Charles Tupper. The letter read as follows:

> Dalhousie, July 18, 1888.
> My dear Sir Charles,—I send you a note from Burgess, which speaks for itself. As Sir Lionel says that the foreign office disapproves of communications from Ottawa to Washington direct, perhaps you may think it well to call Lord Salisbury's attention to Burgess' suggestion.
>
> Yours faithfully,
> (Sgd.) JOHN A. MACDONALD.

On the first of August, Sir Charles Tupper transmitted these documents to the colonial office. On the 21st of August, the colonial office transmitted them to the foreign office. It had taken three weeks for them to go from the colonial office to the foreign office. Ten days later Lord Salisbury wrote to Sir Lionel Sackville-West, who, as the members of this House will remember, was at that time busy mixing himself up in the American elections, for which he got a clearance in short terms.

Mr. GOURLEY. Tricked by a low Yankee.

Mr. BOURASSA. Sir Lionel Sackville-West replied to the Marquis of Salisbury that he would lay the matter before the Secretary of State; and here is the letter sent by the British Ambassador to the Secretary of State:

> Beverly, Mass., September 10, 1888.
> Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Marquis of Salisbury has requested me to bring to your notice a rumour which has reached Her Majesty's government that a charter is about to be granted by the authorities of Alaska for certain privileges in a part of that country which is claimed by Great Britain.
>
> Her Majesty's government presume that this rumour is unfounded, as the territory in question is part of Her Majesty's dominions.
> I have, &c.,
> (Sgd.) L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

What was the territory that was claimed, and by what title did we claim that the territory was ours ? The British Ambassador forgot to tell. The result was that the Secretary of State replied that he had never heard anything of the kind. The British Ambassador sent the reply to the foreign office, the foreign office sent it to the colonial office, the colonial office sent it to Sir Charles Tupper, and Sir Charles Tupper sent it to Sir John Macdonald; so that after four months of correspondence and red tape there was nothing left of our claim, and it was never known officially to the United States government that we had once in our life protested against their interpretation of the Treaty of 1825.

My conclusion from all this is that instead of throwing stones at magistrates, instead of complaining in an undignified way of the result of this award, we should take the position as it is, coldly and firmly, and learn from it this lesson, which is not the first nor the last, that if we want to deal with the American government, we should deal directly through an agent at Washington appointed by the Canadian government. Then, instead of it taking three months to have our letters sent to Washington, they could be sent in three days. I do not think I need add any more on this question; but being free, as I have been since this award was given, to speak my mind, which I was prevented from doing for the last five years, I thought I would give a piece of information to the House and the country in regard to what I consider to be the real facts of this case, so that we may draw clear and practical conclusions from the whole history of this Alaska boundary question.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Burrard). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say very much on this question; but as this award affects my own constituency, and possibly takes away some of my voters, I can speak of it with a certain amount of feeling and possibly a certain degree of accuracy. The only reason why we should wish to have any frontier of Alaska, or any part of that country which is contiguous to our own, is because it is a gateway into the golden Yukon. We found in 1897, when gold was discovered in the Yukon, that we were in the position of a man attempting to do business in a store which had only a back door, the front door being closed. We could not get into our own store for the simple reason that somebody else commanded the entrance, and we were obliged to go around by the back way. Prior to the finding of gold in the Yukon, there was little or nothing known of that Alaskan frontier. Skagway and Dyea were not in existence, and they would not be in existence to-day had it not been for the discovery of gold in the Yukon country. The Lynn canal is useful only for ingress and egress for that country, though the navigation from Princess Royal Island up to the Lynn canal is decidedly dangerous on account of the icebergs which come out of Taku inlet and which are carried by the tide backwards and forwards. The terrible disaster which occurred two years ago south of Douglas island, causing the loss of the ill-fated 'Islander' and the drowning of sixty or seventy people, is within the memory of every man in this House. Had our people been alive to the fact, as this House was, that we had a very knotty question to settle when the Teslin Lake and Telegraph Creek Railway was brought before this House, and had they forgotten the ordinary differences that exist between the two great parties in Canada, and joined together to carry through the railroad that was contemplated—I do not say anything of the question of route—there would be none of the soreness that exists to-day.

There would have been no necessity for an Alaskan boundary award and there would be no feeling in the hearts of the people of Canada to-day that any injustice had been done to them by that award. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the merits of the case. I claim to be as loyal a Britisher as any man in the empire, but I also claim to be a Canadian and a business man, recognizing business principles as circumstances present themselves. We are face to face with a question, and we must meet it. We have a very rich country in the north, and are practically kept out of it to-day. The best thing we can do is not to question why we are placed in that position or the motives which led to the decision, but, recognizing the facts as they are, to take the best possible steps to improve our present position. One hundred miles below Port Simpson we have one of the finest harbours on the Pacific coast, Kittamaht harbour. During the present session I have had the pleasure of fathering a Bill granting a charter for what is called the Kittamaht harbour and Yukon railway. For the past four years many men in British Columbia whom I know, have recognized the difficulty presented to us as Canadians on account of being shut out from that country by the boundary award. We felt that such an award as has been given was bound to come, because we knew, as every man in this country knows, that whenever a question arose in which Canadian interests were at variance with American interests, Canadian interests were sacrificed to those of the American people, who, I might almost say are our hereditary enemies. I do not say that with any desire to be controversial, but we must recognize facts as they present themselves. We have seen this exemplified in the Ashburton treaty, the Oregon treaty, the San Juan Island affair, and now in the Alaskan boundary award—in every instance the interests of Canada were sacrificed. We know that there is no question about the San Juan treaty, and the Ashburton treaty, but the present decision may have some controversial features, and I do not wish to go into it. We in British Columbia have always felt, perhaps more strongly than the people of the other provinces, that our interests have been sacrificed. In view of that fact, in view of our being shut out of the country, it behooves our government to undertake the construction of a railway from some point which we are perfectly assured cannot be contiguous to American territory. We must be able to discover such a point, for they cannot take anything more from us; they have all that is coming to them. I do not think they should be permitted to take any more, and I would never be a party to giving any more Canadian territory to them. But as a loyal Britisher, I take the position that we must accept the situation as it is; we are practical men and must go to work and overcome the practical difficulties that present themselves. To-day we see the Americans standing at the entrance of our Yukon country exacting tolls, trying to bring trade to their own country, and, recognizing that fact, we must seek a route of our own and be independent of them. Within one year of the construction of a road from Vancouver or Kittamaht harbour, it is immaterial which, the towns of Skagway and Dyea will slumber; they will simply be a monument to the folly of the Americans in not doing the decent thing by us. There will be nothing in them, because there is nothing there to keep them except the trade going into the Yukon country. I would ask the government to consider the question very seriously; to take it up from a Canadian standpoint, and to subsidize or to build a road from Kittamaht harbour or from Vancouver, north into the Yukon in order that we may be able to say to the Americans that they can keep their front door, that we have a front door of our own.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not propose, under present conditions, to discuss very fully the fairness of this award. I agree with my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that until we get the official documents and have the exact reasons given by the arbitrators on each side, including the protest of the Canadian commissioners, we cannot properly discuss the terms of the award or consider the question whether or not that award is one which deserves censure at our hands. My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has undertaken to educate the Canadian people with regard to this matter as to which he says they have been in profound ignorance for some years until he himself saw fit to enlighten them. Possibly he may have got to the bottom of the question; I have in my possession six volumes comprising the British case and a portfolio of maps comprising something like 100 maps, and the argument of counsel from day to day occupying a great many hundred pages. I have had some twenty-five years experience in endeavouring to interpret legal documents, and to analyze facts, but I do not think that, in the short space of time during which these documents have been at my command, or in the short space that has elapsed since some of them have reached this country, I could have brought myself into quite so cock-sure an attitude as my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) has exhibited to-day. I do not think that he or any other gentleman in this House is prepared to say at the present time——

Mr. BOURASSA. Will my hon. friend permit me to say that I had occasion to study this question for five years, as I have been connected with the Anglo-American commission, and a good many documents that have now been made public, I have not mentioned before, because they form part of the case as brought before the Anglo-American commission. Therefore, I had acquired a good deal of information before these documents were made public.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I admit that my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) has had special opportunities to study the matter, yet with all of his opportunities and with the ability which my hon. friend undoubtedly possesses, I greatly doubt whether he is in a position to convince us that the Canadian case, which I believe was very ably presented, is so absolutely absurd and ridiculous as he would lead us to believe. Certainly his comments, if accepted seriously, place Messrs. Aylesworth and Jetté in an uncomfortable position. Mr. Aylesworth has delivered a dissenting judgment occupying three columns of the London 'Times' in support of the Canadian case, which according to my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) is absurd and ridiculous and to which, according to him, the people of this country should attach no importance whatever. Let us remember that Mr. Ayelsworth was sworn to give that question impartial consideration, that he is a lawyer of great eminence in the province of Ontario, and that Mr. Jetté is a lawyer of great eminence in the province of Quebec, and when my hon. friend, even with all the information he has on this subject, stands in this House and tells us that the arguments of these gentlemen, in their dissenting opinion, are unworthy of consideration——

Mr. BOURASSA. I think it would be fair of my hon. friend to admit that I stated at the very beginning of my remarks that as far as the strict legal interpretation of the letter of the treaty is concerned, I did not venture any opinion at all; I simply said that I was going to state the facts as to what were the intentions of Great Britain and Russia before the treaty was made. As far as the effect of these quotations which I have given are concerned, I do not pretend to judge, and therefore Mr. Aylesworth and Sir Louis Jetté may be right in their interpretation of the treaty without minimizing the force of the documents which I have read.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that Messrs. Aylesworth and Jetté were either dealing with the point at issue or they were not. I would understand that they were dealing with the point at issue. If my hon. friend from Labelle is not dealing with the point at issue, I do not see from what standpoint he is going to educate the people. Surely he knows enough to realize that it is the terms of the treaty with which we are concerned, and that the negotiations before and the actions of the parties afterwards can only be relied upon for the purpose of assisting us in a minor degree to place the proper interpretation upon this treaty. They are not the point at issue, they only illustrate and possibly explain the meaning of the treaty. Therefore my hon. friend, if dealing not with the terms of the treaty or its legal interpretation, but only with some subsidiary matters, was not in a position after all to throw much light on the subject or to educate the people of the country as to whether the contentions which were put forth on behalf of this country were right or wrong.

I am quite prepared to admit at the present time that we are not in a position to discuss the merits of this award, except possibly so far as the Portland channel is concerned. With respect to the line drawn from Cape Muzon, I am in the same position as my hon. friend from Labelle, I have not heard any explanation, nor do I see how any explanation is possible of the decision of the majority of the commissioners. Taking the line under the terms of the treaty, which is in French, but the effect of which I think I can give in English, it is to pass from the southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island in latitude 54° 40' north—which is used simply for purpose of identification—in a northerly direction along the length of Portland channel until you reach the mainland. Subject to any explanation which may be given, it does not seem reasonable to make that line pass in the circuitous way in which it does pass under the terms of the award, south of Kannaghunut Island and Sitklan Island, and then northerly through a passage between Pearce and Wales Island. But we have not all the reasons before us, as I say, and are not in a position to judge.

But there are one or two matters in connection with the negotiations and the circumstances under which this treaty has been negotiated to which, I think the attention of the House and country might well be called. We all remember, I am sure, that during the years of the Conservative administration, we were told over and over again that the sole difficulty in the way of arriving at a fair and just understanding between this country and the United States on all matters in controversy was that the Conservative government were indisposed to negotiate in a fair manner. We were told that they irritated the United States of America, but that every difficulty would disappear, that there should be peace, amity and concord and the immediate settlement of all difficulties, if my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister and his party were returned to power. And I think that almost one of the first things that my right hon. friends did after coming into power was, on the occasion of a journey made by him to the city of Chicago to explain in an interview with a newspaper reporter how well disposed this government was to the United States and how fully it was prepared to give to the United States, as a matter of concession almost anything the United States might ask, in return for almost anything the United States might offer. I am offering that merely as a compendious exposition of my right hon. friend's views as expressed at that time, and not as a literal statement of what he said. His words can be found at the commencement of the 'Hansard of 1896. Well, I think that my right hon. friend, after he had been a few years in power, discovered that these negotiations with the United States were a little more difficult to carry on than he had believed; in fact, I think he has frankly made that admission on more than one occasion in this House. and he has discovered that it is not always easy to secure what we believe to be the rights of Canada even at the expense of some concession. He undertook to secure reciprocity with the United States, and was engaged upon that work for several years. But, up to the present time, he has accomplished nothing—just as he has accomplished nothing with regard to preferential trade, just as he has accomplished nothing with regard to the fast Atlantic service. And now we have before us the question of what he has accomplished for Canada in connection with the Alaskan boundary. Whether the judgment of the tribunal to which this matter has been assigned be right or wrong, of one thing we are certain, that practically the United States have won on all sides under the award and that, even so far as the Portland canal is concerned, about which we thought there would be no doubt whatever, and as to which there does not seem to have been very great contention before the arbitrators, we are to be handicapped in the future by the fact that two islands, commanding an important strategic point at the mouth of what we call Dixon Entrance, and commanding the approach to Port Simpson, have been assigned to the United States of America.

Now, let us review for a moment what the position of the government has been in connection with this matter. The protocols passed at a meeting of the Anglo-American Commission were laid before this House on the 5th of June, 1899, and are to be found at page 4259 and succeeding pages of 'Hansard.' In the protocol No. 63, the British commissioners put forward the following proposal as a basis for framing a treaty with regard to the boundary between Alaska and Canada :

> The tribunal shall consist of three jurists of repute, one on the part of Great Britain, nominated by the members for the time being of the judicial committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, one on the part of the United States, nominated by the president, and of a third jurist to be selected by the two persons so nominated. In the event of their failure to agree within three months of the exchange of the ratification of the present treaty to be selected by——

The commissioners of the United States in opposition to that article put forward as Article 2, the following :

> The tribunal shall consist of six impartial jurists of repute three on the part of Great Britain, nominated by the members for the time being of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and three on the part of the United States nominated by the president.

Now, my right hon. friend, in laying these protocols before the House, said :

> The tribunal proposed by the British commissioners was a tribunal of three jurists of repute —one to be selected by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for Great Britain, the other to be selected by the President of the United States and the third to be selected by the two, or, in the event of a disagreement to be selected by a friendly power, the friendly power, however, not being named. With regard to the possible questions which might arise on account of arbitration, the British commissioners proposed to follow identically the rules laid down by the Venezuela treaty.

The United States commissioners, as appears by the statement of my right hon. friend, desired to know whether or not the appointment of a third arbitrator by one of the independent states of this continent would be satisfactory to the Canadian government. To this it was replied, as seen at page 4264, as follows :

> To this it was replied that they had considered it and thought it most objectionable in view of the policy long maintained and recently reasserted by the government of the United States towards the other countries on the said continent. The selection of an umpire by any such nation would not in their opinion offer a guarantee of impartiality which is the first qualification requisite for the discharge of the duties entrusted to him.

That is the way the matter was left by the protocol. On the 29th of May, 1899, the Prime Minister in the House used the following language :

> I have only to repeat that the position to-day on the 29th of May, is exactly what it was when the commission adjourned on the 1st of February last. There has been no change and, so far as this government is concerned there will be no change.

Therefore, the position of the matter up to that time was this : that in 1899 the Americans had proposed a tribunal of six jurists of repute, three to be selected by each country. The commissioners for Canada had proposed a reference to arbitration, one jurist being appointed by each country, and provision being made for the appointment of a third independent and impartial jurist. They had proposed that the rules laid down in the Venezuela treaty should apply to the consideration of the subject for arbitration. My right hon. friend had declared distinctly on the 29th of May, 1899, that there had been no change, and so far as this government was concerned, there would be no change. Now, that is not the only observation which my right hon. friend made on the subject, because on another occasion during the same year he used the following language :

> My mouth is closed on the subject and I cannot speak but there has been a statement made officially by the foreign office coming from the commission itself which has given to the public the reason why we could not agree. The American commissioners did not want to have an umpire. They wanted to have three commissioners on one side and three on the other side. To this we could not agree because such an arrangement would not give us a definite settlement of the question. They also wanted it agreed that if the establishments they made at the head of the Lynn canal were found to be in Canadian territory they would continue to remain part of their own territory. We could not agree to that.

And further on, in dealing with the same subject, he said :

> We came to the conclusion after giving the matter our best thought that the only rules which could be adopted in the position of things which existed in that distant part of the country were the rules so recently adopted for the settlement of the Venezuelan question.

And he also declared his intention to be firm by using further on the following language :

> I have only to say this, however, that the attitude which we have taken has the approbation of the people of Canada generally, and it is an attitude which must and will be maintained to the end.

Now, the attitude of the United States commissioners with regard to this question was sufficiently indicated by the protocols which they presented in reply to those which were laid before them by the British commissioners. The proposal presented by the British commissioners was exactly the same proposal as that which had practically been forced upon the mother country with respect to Venezuela, a country in which the United States had no direct interest other than that which arose by reason of the so-called Monroe doctrine. An arbitration in that case was forced upon the people of the mother country—I think I can reasonably use the words in view of what we know took place at that time—was forced upon the mother country with respect to certain territory in Venezuela in which the United States had no direct interest other than that which I have mentioned. The reply to that was that there must be a reference to six jurists, three upon each side, and that the rules referred to could not be accepted. Further, according to the informal negotiations, if there should be a reference to three arbitrators, the third arbitrator must be appointed by a country over which the United States exercised, or claimed at least to exercise a certain influence under the doctrine that I have already mentioned. That should have been sufficient notice to my right hon. friend of the attitude of the American government.

Now what took place after that? An agitation arose in the United States, or rather an agitation existed in the United States with respect to the control by that country of the Nicaraguan canal. It so happened that under a treaty known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that control which the United States desired could not be obtained by the United States unless the government of Great Britain would consent to a modification of that treaty. But in dealing with the question of the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which was pressed very strongly upon the mother country by the American government, Lord Lansdowne took a ground which might well have had and certainly should have had the support of the Canadian government. In a despatch which Lord Lansdowne addressed, on the 22nd of February, 1901, to the British ambassador at Washington, it will be seen that the British government at that time thoroughly recognized the fact that these two questions should be dealt with concurrently. The British government recognized the fact that Canada had an interest in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and in the control of a canal across the Isthmus, and it also recognized the necessity that the latter question should be dealt with only in connection with the Alaskan boundary question, that the Alaskan boundary question should not be left for future determination if that treaty were abrogated. Lord Lansdowne, in a despatch from which I shall have to quote at some length, used the following language:

So far as Her Majesty's government were concerned, there was no desire to procure a modification of that convention. Some of its provisions had, however, for a long time past been regarded with disfavour by the government of the United States, and in the President's message to congress of December, 1898, it was suggested with reference to a concession granted by the government of Nicaragua, that some definite action by congress was urgently required if the labours of the past were to be utilized, and the linking of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by a practical water-way to be realized. It was further urged that the construction of such a maritime highway was more than ever indispensable to that intimate and ready intercommunication between the eastern and western sea-boards of the United States demanded by the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands and the prospective expansion of American influence and commerce in the Pacific, and that the national policy called more imperatively than ever for the control of the projected highway by the government of the United States.

This passage in the message having excited comment, Your Excellency made inquiries of the Secretary of State in order to elicit some information as to the attitude of the President.

In reply, the views of the United States government were very frankly and openly explained. You were also most emphatically assured that the President had no intention whatever of ignoring the Clayton-Bulwer convention, and that he would loyally observe treaty stipulations. But in view of the strong national feeling in favour of the construction of the Nicaragua canal and of the improbability of the work being accomplished by private enterprise, the United States government were prepared to undertake it themselves upon obtaining the necessary powers from congress. For that purpose, however, they must endeavour, by friendly negotiation, to obtain the consent of Great Britain to such a modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as would, without affecting the general principle therein declared, enable the great object in view to be accomplished for the benefit of the commerce of the world. Although the time had hardly arrived for the institution of formal negotiations to that end, congress not having yet legislated, the United States government, nevertheless, were most anxious that Your Excellency should enter at once into pour-parlers with a view to preparing for consideration, a scheme of arrangement.

Her Majesty's government agreed to this proposal, and the discussion which took place in consequence resulted in the draft convention which Mr. Hay handed to Your Excellency on the 11th January, 1899.

At that time the Joint High Commission, over which the late Lord Herschell presided, was still sitting. That commission was appointed in July, 1898, to discuss various questions at issue between Great Britain and the United States, namely, the fur-seal fishery, the fisheries off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the Alaskan boundary, alien labour laws, reciprocity, transit of merchandise, mining rights, naval vessels on the great lakes, definition and marking of frontiers, and conveyance of persons in custody. But serious difficulties had arisen in the attempt to arrive at an understanding, and it had become doubtful whether any settlement would be effected.

In reply, therefore, to a request for a speedy answer with regard to the convention, the Marquess of Salisbury informed Mr. White, the American chargé d'affaires, that he could not help contrasting the precarious prospects and slowness of the negotiations which were being conducted by Lord Herschell with the rapidity of decision proposed in the matter of the convention. Her Majesty's government might be reproached with having come to a precipitate agreement on a proposal which was exclusively favourable to the United States, while they had come to no agreement at all on the controversy where there was something to be conceded on both sides.

Shortly afterwards Lord Herschell intimated that the difficulties in regard to the question of the Alaskan boundary seemed insuperable, and that he feared it might be necessary to break off the negotiations of which he had hitherto had the charge. Upon this Lord Salisbury informed Mr. White that he did not see how Her Majesty's government could sanction any convention for amending the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as the opinion of this country would hardly support them in making a concession which would be wholly to the benefit of the United States, at a time when they appeared to be so little inclined to come to a satisfactory settlement in regard to the Alaskan frontier.

The language is very significant and very cogent. The British government practically took the ground, in that despatch from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to the British Ambassador at Washington, that contemporaneously with the proposed amendment to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty there must be some satisfactory arrangement as to the Alaskan frontier. I think the House and the country are entitled to some intimation in addition to any that has already been given by the government, as to whether or not the imperial government in taking that stand not only had the hearty and vigorous support of this government but the energetic and forcible insistence by this government that the treaty should not be abrogated without some satisfactory arrangement being made as to the delimination of the Alaskan frontier. Have we seen the government taking that attitude in this House ? We have not seen anything of the kind, because, on the 5th March, 1902, when I referred to this question in the debate on the address, the right hon. First Minister took the astounding position that Canada had no direct interest whatever in the question as to whether or not the Clayton-Bulwer treaty should be abrogated. No direct interest in it ? I would like to know what part of this empire had any direct interest in the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty if Canada had not. Canada had a greater direct interest in the questions connected with that treaty than any other part of the British empire. What was the interest of the United States in the treaty ? The interest of the United States in the treaty was, that having great possessions on the Atlantic and the Pacific and desiring to develop their trade in the east particularly since the acquisition of certain territory in the far east, they were anxious to have control under certain conditions of the Isthmian canal for the purpose of its construction. Canada had precisely the same interest as the United States. Canada has great possessions on the Atlantic, Canada has great possessions on the Pacific and Canada desires to develop her trade on the Pacific and her trade with the far east. Therefore, if the United States were able to make out a strong case why the treaty should be denunciated, the case of Canada was such as to entitle her to say that before that treaty should be abrogated Canada must be consulted. What position did the right hon. First Minister take on this subject in the House ? He took this position in his speech on that occasion :

The hon. gentleman says that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is at an end ; that therefore there is nothing to conceal ; that the treaty negotiated between Lord Lytton and Mr. Clayton has been modified by a recent treaty, and that therefore the papers in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty can be brought down. That reasoning of my hon. friend is fallacious. Canada had no direct interest in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty ; Canada had no direct interest in the Nicaragua canal. Canada had no more interest in the negotiation of a treaty which affected the Nicaragua canal than she would have in a treaty in reference to the Suez canal, or in any other question between Great Britain and a foreign power in which she was not interested.

Well, it would thus seem, that, instead of supporting and not only supporting but insisting upon the position which was taken by Lord Lansdowne in the despatch to which I have referred, the government of Canada have taken an indefensible and unpatriotic position. They seem for some incomprehensible reason to have taken the position in regard to the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that Canada has no real, direct interest in it, and that it was perfectly competent for the Imperial government to abrogate that treaty without coming to any conclusion with the United States about the Alaskan boundary question as to which there was so much delay and so much uncertainty.

The right hon. First Minister has brought down the papers and I have looked through these papers from beginning to end without finding one single word of protest in regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I have looked in vain for one syllable, word, or communication which indicates that the government of this country declared or suggested that the Alaskan boundary dispute must be settled concurrently with the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty'.

Let us look for a moment at the documents which have been brought down. They are obviously very incomplete because one of the earliest, a despatch from His Excellency the Governor General to the Colonial Secretary, dated 18th November, 1902, refers to a despatch of November, 1901, which has not been brought down. This despatch is as follows :—

Ottawa, November 18, 1902.

Referring to your despatch of October 31st concerning the proposal of the United States for the appointment of a tribunal of jurists to record their reasoned opinions upon the Alaska boundary question, my ministers while declining to give final assent to such proposal, would be disposed to consider it favourably provided the reference to the tribunal should include all aspects of the question. They think that such a reference as was outlined in my despatch of last November, 1901, might be acceptable.

(Sgd.) MINTO.

We are still in the dark as to what this despatch means. It is preceded by a despatch on the 31st October, 1902, which is brought down and which is in the following words :

Despatch from Mr. Chamberlain to His Excellency the Governor General:—

London, October 31, 1902.

Proposal unofficially renewed by Secretary of State for United States for appointment of tribunal members of which should merely record their reasoned opinions. See my secret despatch of April 23, 1902. Does this suggestion which would at least afford opportunity to the public in the United States and Canada of comparing their respective cases, meet with the approval of your ministers ?

(Sgd.) CHAMBERLAIN.

On the 11th December, 1902, the Colonial Office replied to the despatch from Lord Minto dated the 18th November, 1902 :

Alaska Boundary.

London, December 11, 1902.

Referring to your cable of November 18th, presume that in event of majority of tribunal agreeing on answer to the reference submitted decision would be accepted as final by your ministers ? Please cable reply.

To which an answer was sent on the 15th December, 1902, which I will not quote in full as I understand this correspondence is to be printed but which expresses the view that : the government of Canada cannot give proper consideration to question submitted till the exact text of the proposed reference or the composition of the tribunal is before them. Then follow certain letters from the British Ambassador to Mr. Hay and from the British Ambassador to the Foreign Minister, Lord Lansdowne. Then follows the text of the treaty which has been entered into, and then the following communication :

London, January 6, 1903.

Secretary of State for the Colonies to Lord Minto.

Alaska—shall be glad to have as soon as possible views of your minsters on draft boundary treaty which was inclosed in Sir Michael Herbert's despatch No. 347 of the 19th December.

(Sgd.) S. of S.

To which the Governor General sent the following reply :

Ottawa, January 10, 1903.

Sir Michael Herbert,

Referring to your last proposed Alaska boundary treaty, a draft of which was submitted to me, my ministers are satisfied with the questions to be submitted to the tribunal, but they still have the same objection to the composition of the proposed tribunal, and before assenting to it, they would hope that another effort should be made to have the questions to be adjudicated upon submitted either to a board of arbitrators composed in part of independent jurists, not subjects of either state, as proposed in my despatch to Mr. Chamberlain of November, 1901, or to the Hague tribunal.

(Sgd.) MINTO.

I submit that is not an answer which this government should have returned. Nearly four years before, the right hon. First Minister had told the people of this country that the attitude which had been taken by the government before the Joint High Commission would be persevered in by this government to the end, and would not be departed from. It was the duty of the Prime Minister to have sumitted that treaty to parliament in pursuance of the pledge he had given. On the 12th of January, 1903, when parliament might have been expected to meet at an early date, why was it that the Prime Minister entered into a treaty of that kind without the consent of parliament, and without a provision for ratification by parliament ? Did not the right hon. gentleman state over and over again in 1899, that his attitude before the Joint High Commission would be persevered in to the end? Why did he depart from that course, especially when he had before him the statement of Sir Charles Tupper, then leader of the opposition, that as to this question there would be no two parties in Canada, and that the opposition would stand by the government in asserting the rights of Canada just as strongly as would their own supporters ? In spite of his own promise and in face of a united parliament, the Prime Minister, within a few weeks of the meeting of parliament, went back on his pledge and agreed that the question should be referred to this tribunal Let me further ask : why did the government, in respect to a treaty concerning the territorial interests of Canada agree that that treaty should not be subject to ratification by the Canadian parliament ? When the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald negotiated the Washington treaty in 1871, he insisted that it should be subject to ratification by the parliament of Canada, so that it might be considered in all its aspects by the Canadian people through their representatives, and be affirmed or not affirmed, as they saw fit. But this government after giving a direct pledge to the people of Canada to the contrary, turned around deliberately, abandoned their position and entered into a treaty which was not subject to ratification by parliament. This was Canadian territory ; it was territory in which the people of Canada were peculiarly interested, and yet the Premier of Canada, in response to a request from the Colonial Secretary and the British ambassador, put Canada's interests to one side and announced that his government was quite content to enter into this arrangement. There is a despatch here from the Secretary of State for the colonies, dated the 12th of January, 1903, in which he says :

Sir Michael Herbert advocates strongly three judges of the United States Supreme Court, with the Lord Chief Justice of England, the Chief Justice of Canada and the Judicial High Court of Great Britain on the one side as forming a tribunal which would command the highest confidence of all concerned.

On the 18th of January, the British ambassador telegraphed to His Excellency the Governor General as follows :

I have despatched the following to-day to the foreign office :—

Re Alaska boundary.

Secretary of State has again asked me for an answer to-day on the ground that present moment they might not be favourable.

I think there must be some mistake in the wording of this despatch, because the language does not seem intelligible. However, I will read it as it is :

Secretary of State has again asked me for an answer to-day on the ground that present moment they might not be favourable for ratification of treaty and if the question is further postponed senators' attitude may change.

I think there must be a clerical error here.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is quite right. That was a cipher despatch, and it was presumed that it should read :

On the ground that present moment might not be unfavourable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That makes it perfectly plain. Then, on the 19th of January, 1903, the British ambassador sent the following despatch to His Excellency :

Alaska Treaty ; Canadian reply.

Following sent to foreign office to-day. I am informed by Hay to-day that the Canadian government were satisfied as to terms of reference, but they objected to composition of tribunal and hoped that the United States government would agree to have the questions to be adjudicated upon submitted either to foreign arbitration or to the Hague tribunal. At the same time I pointed out that the Hague tribunal was especially intended to settle disputes regarding interpretation of treaties. Mr. Hay said in reply, that in view of the alterations he had made in regard to terms of reference he had hoped for the spontaneous acceptance of the treaty, and he regretted that the Canadian government still objected to the tribunal's composition. He could only repeat that he had often said before that the form of arbitration proposed was the only one acceptable to the President, and that a treaty involving submission of questions to foreign arbitration or to Hague tribunal would stand no chance of ratification by the United States senate.

Even if that were so, I do not exactly see what this country was supposed to gain from a reference such as that which the United States proposed. Was there any reasonable cause why this question should not have been disposed of under the same terms and upon the same basis as those upon which an exactly similar question with regard to the boundary between Venezuela and the British possessions in South America was disposed of. There was the question of possession in both cases ; the questions were of the same nature ; we were ready to adopt the same rule that was adopted with regard to Venezuela, and we were prepared to abide by it. But when we knew the attitude of the United States, and especially at a later stage, when we knew the gentlemen who were appointed as commissioners by the United States, what was there for us to hope or expect from the only tribunal to which they would agree ? As I stated in the debate on the address during the present session, the very best we could possibly hope from a tribunal of that kind was that it would be evenly divided in opinion, and would accomplish nothing. Was a tribunal of that kind one before which we should consent to appear ? Was it worth while for us to spend $300,000 or $400,000 for the purpose of presenting our case before such a tribunal, when we knew that the very best we could expect would be an even division of opinion ? The time for this government to have withdrawn was in the month of January last when they could very well have explained to the Imperial government that the Prime Minister of Canada had given his pledge to the people of Canada in parliament that he would not withdraw from the attitude which he had taken before the Joint High Commission, and when he could have further told the government of the mother country that in taking that attitude he had the support of both political parties in Canada, and that the people of Canada were united on that point. If my right hon. friend had then taken that position with firmness, if he had said that we must have an arrangement on the same basis as that upon which the Venezuelan boundary was delimited, or that we must have a treaty subject to ratification by the parliament of Canada, I have not the slightest doubt that the result must have been that this treaty would have been in a different form, or at least that it would have been made subject to ratification by the parliament of Canada.

In a despatch of the 19th of January, 1903, from the Colonial Secretary to His Excellency the Governor General, I find the following :

Referring to Sir Michael Herbert's telegram stating that the United States government is unable to agree to modification of tribunal, I trust that your responsible advisers will now agree to his being instructed to sign the draft treaty. Please reply by telegram as soon as possible.

Then follows the word 'secret' :

Should be glad to give an early answer to my telegram of 12th January as to British Ambassador Washington's proposal that Chief Justice of England, Chief Justice of Canada and Judicial High Court of Appeal of Great Britain, should be appointed as British members of the tribunal.

Next comes a despatch from the Colonial Office to Lord Minto, on the 20th of January, 1903, as follows —

Re British ambassador at Washington's cable stating that Mr. Hay would prefer London as place of meeting. I should be glad to receive early expression of your ministers' views as to this.

Then follows a despatch from Lord Minto to the Secretary of State for the Colonies of date the 21st of January, 1903, which is as follows :

My ministers, whilst still regretting that proposed tribunal will not be constituted so as to insure cerainty of a final decision being reached on the reference being satisfied with the terms of that reference will agree to accept treaty as contained in the draft submitted to them.

A complete and absolute withdrawal from the position laid down before the Joint High Commission, a position which, according to my right hon. friend's declaration at that time, was to be persevered in to the end, no matter what might come. Then the despatch proceeds as follows :

With regard to composition of tribunal my ministers are of opinion that it is premature to adopt any final arrangement ; it is sufficient now to have it clearly understood that members of the court to be appointed by His Majesty shall be jurists of repute and British subjects.

They will be quite satisfied if London is selected for sittings of the court.

On the 18th of February the Secretary of State for the Colonies addressed to Lord Minto the following despatch :

H.M.S. Ambassador, Washington, cables President will appoint Mr. Root, Secretary of State for War, and Senators Lodge and Turner as American members of commission Alaskan boundary. Should be glad to have views of your ministers as to British commission.

In the earlier part of the session I brought to the attention of the House—and I will not repeat them—certain views which had been expressed by these gentlemen with regard to the question with which they were to deal in a judicial capacity, and I think it was recognized in this House beyond doubt, if we could believe the statements of reputable journals in the United States, that two of these gentlemen at least, and perhaps three of them, had expressed the most firm and unalterable views respecting this boundary ; and it is needless to say that the views then expressed are in absolute consonance with the decision that has been reached by the tribunal of which they are members. On the 21st of February, Lord Minto addressed to the Colonial Office the following despatch :

Supplementing my last despatch, my ministers call attention to the fact that they agreed to a court of six members on the stipulation conveyed in the treaty that members of said court would be impartial jurists, and in the hope that judges of the highest courts in the United States would be appointed as American commissioners, my ministers also agreeing that British commissioners should be judges of the highest standing.

My ministers most strongly represent that this consideration having been material in causing their assent to the treaty, should be made good. Otherwise the ground upon which they based their assent would be changed and it is feared whole situation would require to be reconsidered.

My ministers would be ready to implement their part of the understanding as to the composition of British side of the commission, but do not think it advisable to submit their views until question raised about American commission is satisfactorily disposed of.

Then follows a long despatch of the 27th of February from the Colonial Secretary, the important part of which is as follows :

His Majesty's government have therefore to choose between breaking off negotiations altogether or accepting American nominations and appointing as their colleagues representatives who will meet the altered circumstances of the case. They would regard the first alternative as a grave misfortune to the interests of Canada and would prefer that the inquiry should proceed, in confident hope that Canadian or British interests would not be prejudiced thereby as, even in the event of failure, much important information upon controverted points would be collected, and placed before the public, and reasonable settlement at some future time thereby facilitated.

I am sorry to say that the somewhat optimistic view which the Secretary of State for the Colonies took has not been realized ; but it may be due to the fact that the very plain suggestion which was made in his despatch was not accepted by the government of this country. I have not the slightest doubt, in view of the language used in this despatch by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, that if this government had insisted upon appointing three Canadians upon that commission, their demand would have been complied with ; and could any one complain if three Canadians had been appointed—men who knew how important this question was to this country, and who realized how strongly the people of this country felt with regard to their rights in that connection ? There cannot be the slightest doubt that if the government of this country had taken that course, their suggestion would have been accepted by the government of the mother country, and we might at least have had a better condition of affairs than that which confronts us to-day, when we have practically lost everything we claimed.

On the 6th of March, 1903, this government addressed a despatch to the Imperial government, which, as it is an important despatch, I had better read in full. Before reading it, let me say in passing that in the debate on the Address on the 13th of March, of the present year, not knowing then that this despatch had passed, I suggested, as strongly as I thought it wise to do, that this government should carefully consider the question whether commissioners for Great Britain should be appointed at all under that treaty. It is true, the negotiations had progressed to a certain extent at that time ; I believe ratifications had been exchanged ; but a treaty of that kind could not result in anything, the tribunal could not be constituted, unless commissioners were appointed on behalf of Great Britain ; and, having regard to the character of the appointments made by the American government to this tribunal, I do not think that any reasonable complaint would have been made by the American government if the government of Great Britain had seen fit to stay its hand until the American government should reconsider those appointments, and should place upon that tribunal gentlemen who were in every sense of the word impartial jurists of repute, as called for by the terms of this treaty. I am not speaking of the ability of these gentlemen as jurists ; I am only speaking of the fact that two of them at least, and I believe three, had publicly expressed opinions, which it seemed to me rendered impossible their consideration of this question in a very judicial frame of mind. Well, this despatch of the 6th of March, 1903, is as follows :

Referring to your despatch of February 27, my ministers regard the situation with much anxiety. They desire to emphasize the fact that their assent to a treaty which provided for the creation of a tribunal so composed as not to insure finality, was obtained on the stipulation in the treaty that the members of the court would be impartial jurists of repute.

There are here, in the document from which I am quoting, certain asterisks, which indicate that a portion of this despatch has not yet been brought down. It may be brought down at a little later date, as I gather from my hon. friend. The despatch as brought down then proceeds as follows :

Their doubts as to the effectiveness of the contemplated arrangement as a means of settlement were in some degree modified by the assurance that the members of the tribunal would approach the subject with unbiassed minds and that a judicial interpretation of the treaty of 1825 would be obtained. The appointment to the tribunal by the United States government of gentlemen who are not judges and whose known views leave no room for exceptation of a judicial consideration of the question, changes the whole situation. If the whole question were now open to be dealt with entirely from the point of view of Canadian interests, my ministers would hesitate to advise any further participation in proceedings.

Then follow asterisks, indicating that a further portion of the despatch as brought down has been omitted.

My ministers have observed from the public press and have also been officially informed that while the matter is still under their consideration, the treaty has been confirmed by His Majesty's government and an exchange of ratifications has already taken place at Washington. It is presumed that this fact precludes further discussion and my ministers will therefore proceed to do whatever is necessary on their part to make good the engagements of His Majesty's government, but they must reserve the right to submit to the Canadian parliament the whole correspondence or such statement of the case as will fully explain the whole matter, and especially the manner in which the assent of Canada was obtained.

My ministers do not agree with the suggestion that the altered circumstances justify a departure on the British side from the disposition previously manifested respecting the composition of the tribunal. If members of the tribunal are to be appointed by His Majesty's government, my ministers are of opinion that only judges of the higher courts, who in the best sense of the words would be impartial jurists of repute, should be chosen.

My right hon. friend and his government perhaps were rather magnanimous in that. I think I expressed the view myself that if we appointed members to that tribunal we should at least appoint persons who had not expressed any opinion on the subject and who were jurists of repute, but I do not remember that we were confined to the judges and I believe that we could have found impartial jurists of repute in Canada whether judges or not, who certainly would have fulfilled that definition very much more completely than the three gentlemen who were appointed by the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What about the two who were appointed ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I hope that my hon. friend does not suppose that I am reflecting on the gentlemen who were appointed. If he had followed my remarks closely he would have seen that my point is that Canada should have appointed three instead of two of the jurists. I am not making any comment on the selection of the gentlemen appointed; it would hardly be becoming of me to do so, even if I entertained any doubts. I have never expressed any such views and I have nothing to suggest on the line my hon. friend has just now mentioned. I am only contending that if the government of this country had suggested three Canadians instead of two—and three Canadians, impartial jurists of repute, could easily have been found—I think the imperial government would have accepted them, and I think we would have been absolutely justified in taking that course.

The next despatch, on the 7th of March, to Lord Minto from the Secretary of the Colonies, declares that the ratifications of the Alaskan Boundary Treaty were exchanged on the third instant, and it goes on to say :

Time for the preparation of the case, article No. 2, has consequently begun to run against us and it is important that composition of British half of court, also appointment of British agent should be settled without delay.

Hope, therefore, your responsible advisers will favour us with their views on these appointments as early as possible.

To this despatch of the Colonial Secretary Lord Minto replied on the 2nd of March :

In view of the short time given for preparation of the case, my ministers desire to proceed immediately, and therefore suggest an early settlement of preliminaries.

As to the composition of tribunal, my ministers suggest Chief Justice of England and two Canadian judges, names to be telegraphed hereafter.

As to counsel, my ministers desire that Mr. Edward Blake, K.C., London, and Mr. Christopher Robinson, K.C., Toronto, be of counsel to uphold the British contention, and a junior counsel.

Under that clause of the treaty which provides for the appointment of an agent to represent each party before the tribunal, my ministers desire that Mr. Clifford Sifton, Canadian Minister of the Interior, be appointed to fill such position.

On the 17th of March Lord Minto telegraphed :

In addition to Chief Justice of England, my ministers propose Sir Louis Jetté, a retired judge of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec and now Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, and Justice Armour of the Supreme Court of Canada, as members of the court of impartial jurists under treaty for settlement of boundary of Alaska.

That closes the correspondence as brought down. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this government have not properly protected the interests of the country in the matter to which I have referred and which I will briefly summarize. In the first place, having declared their determination before the meeting of the Joint High Commission that this question would not be referred, on the part of Canada, to a tribunal the decision of which could not result in any settlement in favour of Canada and from which we could hope only a division of opinion, the government departed from that position without the consent of parliament or notice to parliament, and in doing so did not adequately protect the interests of Canada. I repeat that I cannot understand the reason which induced my right hon. friend, after he had given that pledge to the people of this country and to parliament, to consent to a treaty which was absolutely different from that arbitration which he insisted upon before the meeting of the Joint High Commission. What were the reasons that actuated my right hon. friend in taking that course, especially without notice to parliament, and in entering into a treaty dealing solely with Canadian interests without making that treaty subject to ratification by the parliament of Canada. By what right did this government, after pledging itself to parliament that a certain attitude would be maintained, depart altogether from that attitude to which they were thus solemnly pledged, and which they had adopted in the first instance and consistently maintained with the assent of the British government before the Joint High Commission ? Lord Herschell, representing the imperial government, had resolutely taken this position, and he never wavered from it.

In the second place, for what reason did this government take the attitude that this country had no direct interest in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and had no right to be heard in regard to the variation of that treaty ? Where is there a line of protest on that subject addressed by this government to the mother country? How comes it that without protest from this country the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty has been abrogated without any settlement of the Alaska boundary being coupled with it. How is it that my right hon. friend took the position that Canada was not interested in this treaty and that this government and the imperial government as well, departed from the position so distinctly laid down in the despatch of Lord Landsdowne to the British Ambassador at Washington when the United States was pressing on the British government the necessity for some modification in that treaty ? I could understand the reasons which might induce the British government to seek to depart from the position it then took, but I cannot conceive any possible reason which would lead the government of my right hon. friend to depart from that position and to assume the position which the right hon. gentleman assumed in this House in the debate of last year. My right hon. friend then earnestly argued that there was no connection between the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty amendment and the settlement of the Alaska boundary question; that it was quite a proper course for the imperial government to yield to the demands of the United States in the one case without insisting upon an equitable mode of settling the dispute which had arisen in the other case.

For the unfortunate result which this country has now to face, the government of my right hon. friend is responsible. My right hon. friend is responsible himself, because if on the occasion I have mentioned the proper attitude had been firmly taken we would at least be in no worse position to-day than we were before ; we would at least have had this matter open and we would not have been confronted with the absolute loss of practically everything for which Canada contended in this case. If the people of this country had been consulted in their parliament, if this treaty had been discussed by the representatives of the people in this parliament and if Canadians alone had been appointed on this tribunal, I believe that the feeling which has been engendered would have been very greatly minimized even in the case of the loss of our rights; and in questions of this kind, which touch the pride of the people, it is always desirable that if we are to lose, we shall lose in such a way that the people will feel that they have been consulted in the matter and that everything has been done to protect their rights which possibly could have been done by the government of this country. It does not seem to me that the situation will present itself to the people of this country in that way. I regret once more that, behind the back of parliament these proceedings were taken; that, without any consultation whatever with parliament my right hon. friend has seen fit to adopt a course, for which the government are absolutely responsible, and which has resulted so unfortunately for the best interests of Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and myself, however much we may disagree as to certain phases of this question, agree in this—that the time has not come to discuss the award which has been rendered in this matter. My hon. friend stated in his opening remarks that it was not advisable at this time—nor have we the information which would enable us —to comment upon the decision which has been given. But later on in his remarks my hon. friend stated that Canada would have probably have had more justice if three Canadians had been appointed commissioners, rather than two Canadians and the Chief Justice of England. Perhaps my hon. friend is right; and, perhaps, in selecting the Chief Justice of England, as a jurist of repute, to pass upon these questions pending between the Canadian government and people and the British Crown on the one side, and the United States on the other side, we made a mistake—perhaps we should not have confided our interest to the highest expert in England. But, up to the present time, I fail to accept this view. I do not come to such an opinion as that yet, and I do not think we are in a position to maintain against the Chief Justice such harsh language as that which my hon. friend has just uttered.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I hope the hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will acquit me of using any harsh language towards the Chief Justice. I said that, subject to the consideration of the official reasons which might modify my views, I could not at present imagine any reason for the course of the boundary around these islands. And if my right hon. friend can comprehend it, I shall be glad to hear his explanation.

The PRIME MINISTER. But my hon. friend said also that we had made a mistake in not securing the appointment of three Canadians on this tribunal; that we should have done better, that we should have had more justice, in that case, than we have had by the appointment of the Chief Justice of England. It is rather harsh to suggest that the Chief Justice of England has not treated us as justly as a Canadian would have done.

Mr. GOURLEY. Does not the right hon. gentleman's language seem harsh with respect to the two Canadians who decided differently from the Chief Justice?

The PRIME MINISTER. I pass no opinion upon the decision of any, but I say there is an implication in the language of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), when he says that, in agreeing to the appointment of the Chief Justice of England, we made a mistake—when he says that three Canadians would have done justice where two Canadians and the Chief Justice of England have not done justice. I say that there is in that an implication against the Chief Justice of England. It is harsh language to use toward that gentleman, and I refuse to accept that criticism until we have before us the reasoned opinion of the Chief Justice, so that we may know whether he is right or wrong. Much as I regret the decision, much as I am surprised at it, I will not pass criticism of that kind, nor suppose that the Chief Justice of England has given an opinion which would not have been given by a Canadian had that Canadian been in his place.

I have said that I did not rise to express an opinion as to the value of the award. In my opinion, our case on the Lynn canal was not so weak as my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) seems to think it, nor do I believe it to be as strong as has been represented by some hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House. So far as the Lynn canal is concerned, it seemed to me there was a case which was contentious, a case on which a good deal could be said on one side and a good deal on the other side. In reading the case, as it proceeded before the commission, I came to the conclusion that we had the best of the argument. Perhaps in that I was biassed; perhaps I was taking a view which was not absolutely justified; still, that was the opinion I formed. However, I never was free from doubt as to the strength of our case. I always admitted, in my own mind, that there was an argument to be made on the other side; and, perhaps, our case was such a one as all lawyers have sometimes had experience of—when, going into court, they know that they may expect a decision on either side. But on the Portland canal, it seemed to me we had not only a strong case, but one beyond doubt, one in which there was no argument on the other side. Therefore, it is with surprise, with wonder, with astonishment, I find that the award, instead of giving us the whole of our contention, which seemed clear beyond all doubt, takes from us two islands which belong to us. These islands, I believe, do not in themselves amount to much—they are simply rocks. But they have great importance from the position in which they are. It is a great blow to Canadian interests, as I see them, that we are to lose those islands. But this is not the time to discuss that question. I would advise people to be calm and quiet until we have the whole case before us, so that we, every one, can apply his judgment to the merits of the decision that has been rendered.

Nor is this the point dwelt upon by my hon. friend. The position he takes to-day is that we made a mistake in agreeing to refer this question to the tribunal which has settled it. I differ from him, and I think I can make good the position the government took in this matter. The hon. gentleman referred to the position I took in this House more than once, that we would not depart from the position insisted upon before the Anglo-American Commission at Washington with regard to the terms of reference, if they were to involve any surrender of territory. But what I want my hon. friend to agree to now is this—that he has failed to see the difference between this treaty and the treaty concerning the Venezuela arbitration case. That which the British side wanted to have was a reference on the lines of the Venezuela treaty. This treaty involved a possible surrender of territory. It was agreed between Venezuela and Great Britain that if the territory of one was found in possession of the other, the territory could be given to the party in whose possession it was, under terms of compensation. For instance, it was agreed that possession for fifty years was to constitute a title. Under such circumstances, there was to be compensation for the territory that had been taken possession of. We wished to have a similar provision in this treaty, and to provide that if the territory of one country was found to be in the possession of the other, the arbitrators would be at liberty to leave that territory in the hands that held it, subject to such compensation as might be found equitable. But this was not adopted. What would have been the consequence if it had been adopted ? Suppose that the town of Skagway had been found to be in British territory. That town is now in the possession of the Americans. It would have been in the power of the commissioners to allow this territory to remain in the hands of the Americans on such terms as seemed equitable to the commissioners.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would follow a certain term of possession under the rules of the Venezuela treaty ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, the term of fifty years. But, at all events, it was to involve a surrender of territory. Under the award that has been given, Canada is to obtain two islands, Pearse and Wales, which have been in possession of the Americans against our protest. Under the Venezuela treaty it would have been in the power of the commissioners to allow these islands to remain in possession of the Americans under such conditions as they deemed equitable. But the present treaty provided a different rule altogether ; the present treaty provided on the one side and on the other that there should be no surrender of territory—and this is the mistake which has been made by my hon. friend. I would advise him to look again at the terms of the treaty, article I. of which enacts as follows :

> A tribunal shall be immediately appointed to consider and decide the questions set forth in article 4 of this convention. The tribunal shall consist of six impartial jurists of repute who shall consider judicially the questions submitted to them, each of whom shall first subscribe an oath that he will impartially consider the arguments and evidence presented to the tribunal.

It was therefore a treaty which involved no surrender of territory. All that was referred to them was the duty of judicially interpreting the terms of the treaty. They were to sit as a court to determine, not what one party was entitled to and what the other party was entitled to—because under no circumstances could there be any surrender of territory by one side or the other—but to determine the meaning of the treaty. Under these circumstances, there was no necessity of referring such a treaty to parliament. If there had been any surrender of territory involved, it would have been not only important but essential that the treaty should have been referred to parliament, because parliament alone can dispose of territory. Even under a treaty of arbitration which involves the surrender of territory, parliament alone can give its sanction to such treaty. But the only thing that was provided for in this case was merely the creation of a court to determine judicially what was the boundary of Alaska by the treaty of 1885.

So far, therefore, our position is very different from what it was in 1899. What were we to do ? I have often regretted, Mr. Speaker, and never more than on the present occasion, that we are living beside a great neighbour who, I believe I can say without being deemed unfriendly to them, are very grasping in their national acts, and who are determined upon every occasion to get the best in any agreement which they make. I have often regretted also that while they are a great and powerful nation, we are only a small colony, a growing colony, but still a colony. I have often regretted also that we have not in our own hands the treaty-making power, which would enable us to dispose of our own affairs. But in this matter we were dealing with a position that was forced upon us—we have not the treaty-making power. I am sorry to say that the whole correspondence which we have had upon this question since 1899 has not yet been placed before parliament; I am sorry not only that we have not the treaty-making power, but that we are not in such an independent position that it is in my power to place before parliament the whole of the correspondence as it passed between the Canadian government and the British government. But we shall have that correspondence, and it will be placed before parliament at the next session—the whole of it, no matter what protest may come from abroad, we shall have the whole of it, and then this country may know exactly what has taken place, and what share of responsibility must rest upon each of the parties concerned in this matter. But we have no such power, our hands are tied to a large extent owing to the fact of our connection—which has its benefits, but which has also its disadvantages—the fact of our connection with the mother country making us not free agents, and obliging us to deal with questions affecting ourselves through the instrumentality of the British ambassador.

The question came before us, and what were we to do ? Were we to leave that question forever an open one ? Were we to leave that frontier forever a bone of contention ? Were we to leave a condition of things under which it might happen, in case of a discovery of gold being made in the disputed territory, that American miners and Canadian miners would rush in and a clash might occur which would eventuate in conflict and bloodshed, and difficulties which the mind shudders to contemplate ? We had to come to some conclusion, and after long negotiations which will be seen when the whole correspondence is brought down, we did decide upon this reference. The offer was made to us of accepting this treaty which implied a judicial interpretation of the treaty of 1825, the result of which could give nothing to our opponents and could take nothing away from us, but which would simply determine what were our rights under that treaty. I think it was the duty of the Canadian government to put an end to this unfortunate condition of things to which I have referred. That is the position which we took upon the case. We wanted to have the treaty judicially interpreted. We wanted no territory from the Americans, we wanted simply that which belonged to us. That was the proposition made to us, and we decided to accept it.

Now, after we had given our assent to this treaty, after we had consented to refer the question to this tribunal, which was to be composed of six impartial jurists, we were notified that the jurists which were to be appointed by the American government were gentlemen who, with all respect be it said, could not qualify as impartial jurists. They had expressed their opinions upon this question already with a good deal of emphasis. We protested against the appointment of these gentlemen, and we asked the British authorities to convey our protest to the president of the United States, representing that gentlemen who had expressed upon the floors of Congress opinions upon this question, could not come within the term 'impartial jurists,' such as were contemplated by the treaty. And, Sir, what took place ? Before our protest had been taken into consideration the treaty was ratified by the British authorities. Then another difficulty arose. What were we to do under those circumstances, the treaty having already been ratified ? His Majesty had given his assent to it, His Majesty, who is the only person in the British empire who has a right to sanction a treaty. Under such circumstances what were we to do ? I want to know what our friends on the other side would have done. I ask my hon. friend the leader of the opposition what would have been their conduct on that occasion. What would have been the consequences if we had declined to give our assent ? The consequences probably would have been that the American authorities would have planted the American flag upon the disputed territory, and we would have been obliged either to retire with disgrace, or to go to war to preserve our rights. That would have been the consequences. Therefore, we said : No, we will do the best we can in the condition of things in which we find ourselves. We confided our rights to the judgment of men who, we believed, were able to defend them before the tribunal. We thought that we could entrust our case to a commission of impartial jurists, who would judicially interpret that treaty. The proposition was made to us that the British government should appoint the Lord Chief Justice of England, Lord Alverstone, to represent the British side. Well, Sir, according to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) I made a mistake. I confess that when it was proposed to us that we should have at the head of that commission the Lord Chief Justice of England, I thought that in the hands of a gentleman of his distinction our interests would be secure. My hon. friend suggests that I made a mistake, that we should have insisted upon the appointment of three Canadians instead of two ; he suggests that Canadian interests would have been more secure in the hands of three Canadians than in the hands of the Lord Chief Justice of England, associated with two Canadians. Now, Sir, this means, if it means anything, that the Lord Chief Justice of England, who was charged with the judicial interpretation of that treaty, did not judicially interpret it, but allowed itself to be biassed by influences which it is a shame to mention or to suppose. If it means anything, it means that if the Lord Chief Justice of England could have judicially interpreted the terms of the treaty and apportioned the rights of the parties according to law and justice, then a Canadian would have gone against his conscience and reached a different conclusion.

Sir, I refuse to accept that proposition. But I believe, that, in submitting our rights to the Lord Chief Justice of England, we had every reason to suppose that our interests would be as safe as they could be in the hands of anybody, and that the government of Canada made no mistake in that respect. I would not be disposed to believe it at this moment. I shall wait until we have the reasoned opinion of the Lord Chief Justice of England. But, that is not the proposition ; that is not the remedy. It is not because we accepted one form of commission or another. I shall show a little later on where the remedy is. My hon. friend also made it a matter of reproach that we had accepted a tribunal of six instead of a tribunal of seven or of any odd number. It is true that we objected again and again to a tribunal composed of six members, but for what reason—not that there would not be as much justice in six as in seven, or nine, or five, or any other odd number, but because a tribunal consisting of six members, or of any even number, did not ensure to us that condition of finality which we thought ought to be a condition of such a reference. If there were six commissioners there might be three on one side and three on the other side. If you had seven you would have an opportunity to have finality, but that is not an argument to show that we would have had any more security with seven than with six. Suppose there had been four commissioners opposed to us. Suppose there had been a seventh commissioner appointed by the republic of France, or by the Emperor of Germany, or by the King of Sweden, or by any other friendly power, and suppose that the seventh arbitrator had stood between Sir Louis Jetté and Mr. Aylesworth, then the tribunal would have been composed of three commissioners on the one side and four on the other, and we would have been no more advanced than we are at this moment. Therefore there is nothing in that argument. The only thing that we feared in having a tribunal composed of six members was that there should not be the condition of finality, but there is the condition of finality as the tribunal has been composed. But the difficulty is not there. The difficulty, as I conceive it to be, is that so long as Canada remains a dependency of the British Crown the present powers that we have are not sufficient for the maintenance of our rights. It is important that we should ask the British parliament for more extensive power, so that if ever we have to deal with matters of a similar nature again we shall deal with them in our own way, in our own fashion, according to the best light that we have.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask my right hon. friend a question? Did he not state, in regard to the colonial conference, during the debate on the address in the present session that the political relations were absolutely satisfactory and that no modifications of any kind were required?

The PRIME MINISTER. I stated that in so far as the relations between Canada and the empire with the view to an imperial federation or matters of a similar character were concerned, our relations were perfectly satisfactory, but I never stated that we should not have any more power in regard to our own autonomy. I stated that our relations were perfectly satisfactory, but I certainly never intimated that our powers should not be augmented in regard to treaty making. But, the hon. gentleman should remember that we have gained something if we have lost something by the treaty. It is important that we should be calm in regard to this matter. We have lost something, but we have not lost every thing. The Americans have not gained every thing they wanted. They have not gained everything they wanted on the Lynn canal, because, if they had, the boundary would not have been fixed at the summit of the White pass, but it would have been extended to Lake Bennett. Moreover, on the Portland canal we have gained two islands. We have gained those parts of our contention if we have not gained everything. Such is the condition then that we have to deal with at this moment. It is not as bad as some parties are disposed to believe it is, but at all events it will be bad enough to cause us to look to the future to see what will be the condition and to try and remedy it. If there is a thing which I regret it is that in 1898 the Yukon Bill which was passed by this House was not permitted to become law. If the Yukon Bill had become law we would not have had this question confronting us at this moment. The White Pass Railway would in all probability not have been constructed and this Yukon Railway would have been extended to the Stikeen river, and from the Stikeen river to Observatory inlet, so that at this moment we would have had connection upon Canadian territory between Observatory inlet and the waters of the Yukon. But, that was not done. However, it is no use to look back to what is past. It behooves us at an early day to see what steps should be taken to establish communication upon Canadian territory between the rest of the Dominion and the Yukon. I am not prepared to say what we should advocate. I am not prepared to say what we should recommend. But it is a question for all Canadians and they should be prepared for some sacrifice in order to establish communication between that distant part of our country and the more settled parts of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask my right hon. friend if he did not say that he accepted as absolutely satisfactory the political relations existing between Canada and the mother country? Here is what he said:

> As to the political relations which exist between Canada and the colonies generally and the mother land, they are perfectly satisfactory, they could not be improved, and any attempt which has been made with a view of improving them has only led to Utopia.

Hon. J. I. TARTE (Montreal, St. Mary's). Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the government when in 1899 the question of the Alaskan boundary was discussed before the joint high commission. A memorandum was then prepared. I hold it in my hand. It contains a statement of the different propositions that were debated then. The government of the United States declined positively to consent to an arbitration. The right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who was, of course, the leading man on the Canadian side, in Washington, suggested an arbitration. Our United States friends suggested a commission of jurists. The right hon. Prime Minister, and the government, sided with him altogether, declined to accede to such a proposal. In point of fact I am within the memory of the House when I say that the negotiations of the joint high commission were broken off on that point. The right hon. gentleman, at the opening of parliament, informed the country that the two governments being unable to agree on the Alaskan boundary the negotiations were broken off. That was the position when I ceased to be a member of the administration. We had exhausted every posible means of coming to some understanding. The government of Canada had offered to the government of the United States to give up what we thought were our rights to the Lynn canal provided we got the harbour on the Lynn canal which is called Pyramid harbour. The memorandum which I hold in my hand contains that statement. They declined to accept that offer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where is it published that our government consented to give up our right to the Lynn canal ?

Hon. Mr. TARTE. During the negotiations that offer was made; it is a public offer. The government of Canada offered to renounce what they thought were our rights on the Lynn canal, provided they were given a harbour at Pyramid harbour. I believe I am responsible for that offer; I believe that under the circumstances it was a good offer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We have no evidence of that published.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am stating the facts. The United States government declined to accept our offer.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is all wrong there.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I am not wrong; I have the document here.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is referring to things which took place before the negotiations, and which resulted in nothing.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are these pourparlers published.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware that they have ever been published.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I thought they had been.

Mr. BELL. It was a matter of common knowledge at the time, that the proposition was made, that Dyea should remain United States territory, but that Pyramid Harbour should be given to the Canadians as a free port, and that the United States commissioners considered it for a time, but it was rejected on account of strong opposition from the Pacific coast.

The PRIME MINISTER. It was rumored that there was a compromise suggested between the two sides.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. The newspapers reported at the time that the possession of Pyramid Harbour was offered as a compromise, and that the United States refused to accept our proposal. They wanted a commission of jurists, and the Canadian government then broke off negotiations. In 1903, things took another turn. Negotiations for a reciprocity treaty were started—I do not say by this government officially—but by emissaries of this country——

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend means that we started any negotiations I dissent.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I have stated very distinctly that the government of this country did not start these negotiations but that emissaries from this country, important men from this country went to Washington——

Mr. PARMELEE. Name.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I shall. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) went to Washington and offered his good offices which were accepted, for a reunion of the Joint High Commission. The country has a right to know that at the very same time negotiations started again for the settlement of the Alaskan boundary question. Our American friends were so sure, that we were anxious for a treaty of reciprocity that they simply applied the screws. These are the facts of the case.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, they are not.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. These are the facts of the case.

The PRIME MINISTER. I say no. I say that before Sir Michael Herbert's time, negotiations for the settlement of the Alaskan boundary were going on up to the time of Lord Paunceforte's death, and Sir Michael Herbert simply took up the continuation of them.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. I say that the dates coincided exactly with the records of the case as we have them in our possession now. The negotiations started for a settlement in one way or another of the Alaskan boundary question. The right hon. gentleman has made a speech to-day which many of us are able to applaud. I cheerfully approve of some of his words. He has said that we have not been treated as we should have been. He is more than right in that. But he believed that when he consented to the appointment of the chief justice of England as one of these jurists, that our case was in safe hands. I fully appreciate his position. It is rather difficult for the Prime Minister of a British colony to say that our case was not safe in the hands of the chief justice of England; but we are confronted with the fact that the two agents appointed by the Prime Minister, men of high standing, Sir Louis Jetté and Mr. Aylesworth ; they have stated over their own signatures—with the consent and knowledge of the government of Canada I suppose—that the Chief Justice of England has not decided on judicial grounds. We are not making that statement here; it has been made in England over the signatures of the authorized agents of the Canadian government, and it has been circulated broadcast all over the world. Now, if the chief justice of England has not decided on judicial grounds, he has decided on some other grounds. The right hon. gentleman says that we have not ceded any territory. Permit me to ask him not to play on words. The contention of the Canadian government was that the boundary was to be thirty miles above the mouth of the Lynn canal, and they claimed the possession and ownership of the upper waters. But according to the decision of the tribunal, not only have we not the upper waters of the Lynn canal, but the frontier is thirty-five miles from the shore of these upper waters. If we are not losing and ceding territory by that, I do not know what we are doing. We are losing and ceding thirty-five miles, not of water, but of Canadian territory which we claimed to be ours. It has been said, and I believed it up to a few days ago, that this commission of jurists was not to decide finally. On that point the Prime Minister has not made himself clear. He stated at the opening of the session that the commission would not give any final judgment, but we are confronted to-day with the fact that the judgment is final. Our case is lost, the sentence is given, and it cannot be annulled. The right hon. gentleman also said that we have not enough power in these matters. Will he permit me to ask him what the consequences would have been, if when he found that the American government were in bad faith—because they were in bad faith—he and his colleagues had said: We will not be a party to that commission?

My right hon. friend says we have not sufficient powers. If instead of appointing commissioners, under the circumstances that have been known to us, the government of Canada had taken a firm stand and had simply said to the government of England: We cannot possibly do anything, at any rate before meeting parliament, I believe they would have occupied safe ground. It was a new condition of affairs, which nobody suspected would exist. There was not a member of parliament, not a minister of the Crown, who a year ago would have believed we could have been treated as we have been. It was inconceivable that the British ambassador at Washington could have signed a treaty in which we were after all the only parties interested, without waiting for the answer of the Canadian government; and, in my humble opinion, instead of saying to-day, when our case is lost, that our powers are not sufficient, the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues should have taken a firmer stand then, and should have told the English government: We cannot possibly take part in proceedings of that character. The Canadian people, and the British people themselves, would have applauded such a course. Of course, the Yukon, when it is looked at in the large map of the world in the Foreign Office or in the Colonial Office, in London, may not look very big. The English statesmen have to deal with large problems; they deal with the affairs of the world; and they are naturally anxious to remain at peace with all the friendly nations, perhaps especially with the United States. We all share in the desire to have peace with our neighbours; but we have lost a great deal in our desire for peace—for commercial peace, for peace of all kinds. When the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was denounced, for the sake of peace we did not say a word; we simply bowed our heads. A few weeks ago when Mr. Chamberlain started his campaign for preferential treatment with the colonies, some of the most important newspapers in the United States threatened us with the withdrawal of the bonding privilege if England would dare to give a preference to Canada. That is going a little too far. I beg to assure my right hon. friend that in the remarks I am making now, I am animated by no other desire than to make our position clear. I understand his position; it is a difficult one. I do not feel inclined to blame him too much. I know that he was in a tight corner. The British government were asking him to give his assent. I know it is rather difficult for a governor of a British colony under such circumstances, to say: I will not do it. But would it not have been better, in the interests of the British empire itself, if such a stand had been taken? Suppose that one of these mornings our American friends said, unless this or that is done, the bonding privilege shall be taken away from the Canadian people? The more we yield, the more we shall be asked to yield. In my humble opinion the government should have taken a firmer stand. But it is not too late, after all, to improve our position. I quite share the views of the right hon. gentleman on this point, that if we had had the railway which was not built, perhaps we might have been in a better position. The Americans would not have felt that we were dependent upon them. We can now build railways to the Yukon; but the position, commercially, will not of course be very good. If I remember well the distances, I think it would be necessary to build about 800 miles of railway through the mountains. It is a long distance. We have spent large amount of money in improving the Lewes and Yukon rivers. We are completely shut out from all those waters. Now, I do not share at all the view expressed a day or two ago by an important newspaper published in Ottawa, that we must go on our knees to the Americans, and ask them to give us back those two small islands. Let us try to find another harbour. If the government act energetically, I believe they will get the support of men of all shades of politics. Let the government make up their minds to build the railway. Let them make up their minds once for all to be independent of the Americans, and the Canadian nation will cheer them. If I have been a little hot in my remarks, I say again that I have no desire to blame my former colleagues, but I believe they should have taken a firmer stand, and I want to impress on them the desire of the Canadian people that the firm stand that ought to have been taken in the past should be taken now.

Let me conclude these few remarks by saying that what is true in this case is true commercially. The United States have been too much led to believe that we are dependent upon them commercially. They are selling to us millions and millions of dollars worth of merchandise, and they laugh at us. They simply take you by the throat every time they have a chance to do so. If we had grappled with them long ago, as we should have done, if we had raised the wall long ago, as we should have done, they would have been dealing with us in a different way. They would have been asking for concessions from us instead of taking us by the throat. Mr. Speaker, this incident which is a calamitous one, will have, I hope, good results. The Canadian people feel badly over that award. They feel badly at the Chief Justice of England. It is a pity indeed ; but, after all, if the Chief Justice of England has not dealt judiciously with our case—and that is the statement of two men in whose honour and calmness I have great confidence, Sir Louis Jetté and Mr. Aylesworth—then, we have a right to feel sore at the Chief Justice of England, and it is our duty to say so. The right hon. gentleman has gone very far to-day, farther perhaps than any other Prime Minister has gone before. The Canadian people will not perhaps reproach him for that, because, being six millions of people, energetic people, we feel that we are quite capable of holding our own. We do not desire to attack anybody, but we feel confident that we can live and grow bigger. If we want to grow bigger, let us profit by this lession. Let us make ourselves independent of our American friends. Let us equip our harbours in winter and summer, so as not to be afraid of the bonding privilege being taken away from us. Let us do it now. Let us arrange our tariff in such a way that they will understand that we can dispense with their markets. We are not selling much to them. They are simply selling to us things which we can buy elsewhere. Let us make ourselves independent of them in every possible way, and let us see that our influence is felt in England. The affairs of England are conducted in the ordinary way of business. I am not sure that my hon. friends on the treasury benches have done everything that might have been done in that respect. I say again it is not conceivable that the British ambassador at Washington would have dared to sign a treaty dealing with the interests of Canada without even waiting for the answer of the Canadian government. On that point the right hon. gentleman has not given the country the explanations that I believe we had a right to expect. He tells us that there is some correspondence which has not been yet published. Ministers of the Crown are, of course, not free to publish all the correspondence that passes under their eyes, but the country will feel more anxious than ever to see the papers that have not as yet been published.

Mr. SEYMOUR E. GOURLEY (Colchester). I have listened with much pleasure to the debate in many of its phases. I stand perhaps on a little different ground from a great many people in this House. I am an imperialist ; I love the British empire and I hope that Canada and all the colonies will remain together for ever. I therefore think that I am in a little different position from the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and I think he should not have interfered in this family quarrel. This is a family quarrel, and I will admit a Frenchman or a Dutchman or any other man who is loyal to this empire to interfere in this family quarrel. He himself is very civil and kindly, but while I have been in this House he has impressed me with the idea—it may be untrue and if it is I will be glad to retract it—that he does not stand for the empire, but that his ambition is that Canada shall be torn away from this empire and form a little insignificant community by itself. I am expressing my sentiments and I will express them everywhere ; if there were ten million people before me I would express my opinion. I speak with deference, but I do not think that in a matter of this kind the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) should intrude his opinions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is not a member of the family.

Mr. GOURLEY. He is but he has taken such a course with reference to the affairs of Canada that he ought not to intrude in this debate. I want to compliment the leader of the opposition on his speech. I think he has taken a strong, a patriotic and a national stand upon this question. I have often in this House attacked the imperial government. I did not attack the imperial government with a view to undermining that government, with a view of bringing about the separation of Canada and the other colonies from the empire, but because I believed in a household where brothers and sisters are growing up if they want a wholesome opinion they should at times sit down and criticise each other in order that the household may stand together before the world for weal or woe. Therefore when I have attacked the policy of the British government it has not been to undermine British sentiment in this country, but to call the attention of the British public to the fact that they must change their policy in order to make it world-wide and sufficient to meet the new conditions that are growing up in this empire. The hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson) says that he should intrude in this debate because the territory in dispute touches his constituency. I want to tell him that this territory touches my constituency; it touches the constituency of every man in Canada as much as the constituency of the gentleman who happens to locally represent it. It is Canadian territory, it is British territory and every man who owes allegiance to the flag is as much interested in that territory as the man who lives on its soil. I understand the doctrine of the hon. member for Labelle to be that Canada must not fight or serve the empire unless Canada is attacked. I say that Canada must serve the empire and stand for the empire if India or Australia is attacked, with the same energy and force as if Ottawa were attacked, and therefore I want the hon. member for Burrard to take a little broader view of this question than that it affects his constituency. I say that this affects deeply the interests of Canada and of the empire. It is the most vital question that has been settled in Canada for two centuries. We lost an enormous amount of territory in Maine and we know the difficulties which that loss has brought to Canada. Now on the Pacific coast we have lost 500 miles of the coast line of this country. Canada is only commencing her national career and already we are about to fling a line up to Port Simpson on the southern extremity of this territory which we have lost. But when we want to fling a railway line two hundred or three hundred miles further north to develop this country we find that we are shut out from the sea-coast for 500 miles of our coast line. Canada is a commercial and a maritime country and no misfortune ever fell upon the country of a more grave character than that which has fallen upon the people of Canada. Some people think it is bad enough to lose these islands, but what is that to losing 500 miles of the coast of your country which shuts you in?

The hon. gentleman talks about a railway. A railway will help us out of our difficulty to some extent, but it can never help us in our trade upon the ocean. When the Pacific ocean is exploited, as it soon will be, and bears to Canada, perhaps more trade than the Atlantic, we shall be shut out from that ocean for 400 miles of the most important part of our coast because to-day trade is going north and therefore the United States commands the strategical point in regard to Canadian trade on the Pacific. I do not wish the disaster that has happened to Canada to be minimized because it is a disaster which will grow in importance day by day; but in every misfortune there is some silver lining to the cloud. I see some idle papers in the United States are talking about this disaster which has happened to Canada creating in this country a feeling in favour of the United States. Thank God it will create a bitter feeling towards the United States. Thank heaven that from this moment no man who is a Canadian will cherish anything but the most fearful dislike to the people who have wronged us out of our territory; thank heaven the idea of trade relations with the United States, thank heaven the idea of reciprocity will be killed in the minds of every Canadian. I say unhesitatingly, and I know the question from top to bottom, that we have been wronged out of this territory, wronged absolutely wronged out of this territory. I believe that in my heart and therefore I see amid the difficulties that surround us, one good thing—that there will grow up in the hearts of the people of Canada a determination to have nothing to do with these people who have wronged us for one hundred years out of territory that justly belonged to this country and therefore I see in this award the destruction of all idea of a reciprocity treaty. I hope that now we will build up a tariff wall against these people and let them know we are Canadians.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am afraid that is the mercantile argument.

Mr. GOURLEY. I hope this disaster will bring us this compensation; that is the only hope there is in the situation. Now, I want to deal with one or two of the difficulties raised by the Prime Minister. I think it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister has started the doctrine he has to-day in the interests of Canada. I would not mind the hon. member for Labelle starting this doctrine, but I think it is unfortunate that it should have been started by the Prime Minister of Canada. He endeavours to show that our difficulties have arisen because of our not having the treaty-making power. I want to tell the right hon. gentleman that this correspondence which I have under my hand shows that Canada has had the treaty-making power in relation to this matter just as fully as the imperial government. That is shown in every line of this correspondence, throughout all these negotiations. Let us look at the matter constitutionally. In theory, the treaty-making power is in the hands of the King, but the King exercises that power under the advice of his ministers, where the empire is concerned, where there is no self-governing parliament. But where there is a self-governing parliament, as in this country, the King exercises that power in conjunction with the ministers of the Crown in Canada, because the ministers of the Crown here are as much ministers of the King of England as the Prime Minister of England is a minister of the King. This parliament is charged with territorial jurisdiction over this country, and we are as much a part of the treaty-making power of this empire, so far as Canada is concerned, as is the imperial government. That, Sir, is the doctrine we must lay down in Canada. Therefore, I take issue with the Prime Minister, and I say it would be a vicious doctrine to advance, that the British government may make a treaty affecting the territory of Canada, against our will and consent. This treaty was made with the consent of the government of Canada, as much as it was with the consent of the government of England. Let us be fair and square in this matter. I am willing to place the blame upon the English government if they deserve it, and I have shown that wherever they deserve blame I have not been slow to blame them.

But when I blame the English government, let no man think I am blaming the English people. I admire the English people, because in this country we are all sprung, those of us who speak English, from the English, the Scotch or the Irish race. But, thank God, the most of us are sprung from them as they were 150 years ago, when they were a dominant race. But in the last 60 years that race has decayed. But that does not destroy the love and reverence we have for the British empire, by any means. What we have to do is to assist Joseph Chamberlain and the other public men, in dumping the present breed into the sea, and starting another generation of Englishmen, who will restore the splendid traditions of the British empire. I have never ceased drawing attention to the fact that the government of England does not, and has not for 60 years represented the great traditions of the British race. The English people are governed by a decadent class, which has grown up weak and impoverished in will. It is the fault of Canada, it is the fault of Australia and, to some extent, of South Africa. We blame the imperial government, but you must recollect that up to within fifteen or twenty years Canada was regarded merely as a source of weakness to the British empire. There were stories told all over the world that we were drifting away from the empire, that we were drawing towards the United States. That being so, can we blame the British government for at times being weak in the presence of foreign powers ? Can we blame the empire, if, in the presence of her foes all over the world, when she was uncertain that her colonies would stand by her in the hour of danger, she should fail to exhibit some of her old-time vigour and boldness ? Therefore, it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. member for Labelle, who is opposed to Canada standing up for the empire, to blame Mr. Chamberlain or any other man for not standing up for Canada. If Canada is not going to stand up for the empire, by what right can we require the empire to stand up for Canada ? I am prepared to require that the English government should stand up for Canada, because I am prepared to stand by the English government and empire in all corners of the earth. Therefore, I have always felt free to criticise the imperial government, and I feel free to criticise them to-day, and also to criticise this government for their action, and to hold them responsible for its consequences. Where there is a wrong committed in a British country there must be responsibility for it. Now, I want to make some comments upon the British government—not that we have any power over that government, but I want to point out to the people of England that their government has gone wrong in this matter, in order that the people of England may deal with their government. I believe that when the people of England are aroused over this matter, as they are in Canada, they will deal with their government as we shall deal with our government, when the poeple sufficiently understand the pusillanimous course they, have pursued in this matter.

Now, let me proceed to say that the right hon. gentleman, in negotiating this treaty, was just as much responsible for it as Sir Michael Herbert or Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, or any other member of the British cabinet. The right hon. gentleman was a party to all of these negotiations from beginning to end, and at any moment he could have said : I will go no further with these negotiations—and there would have been an end of it. The British government says in this correspondence : If you don't agree, then all the negotiations must be broken off. They admitted the power of this government to determine these negotiations. Therefore, you not only had the treaty-making power, but you were the chief factor in the treaty-making power, so far as the boundary commission was concerned. Now, I think it is a little ungenerous for the Prime Minister to seek to arouse prejudice in this country by saying that we had not a right to change the complexion of this treaty. I say we had, and therefore it is that I point to this government as the occasion of the enormous humiliation to which the people of Canada have been subjected. I confess that I have been humiliated past endurance for a week, and I think every man in Canada must have felt the most bitter regret at the untoward and unfortunate events which have happened in this connection. But allow me to refer again to this correspondence and to another remark the Prime Minister made.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GOURLEY. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I was endeavouring to show that the treaty-making power nominally rests with the King, that in England it was exercised under the advice of his ministers there, and, so far as Canada was concerned, it was exercised upon the joint advice of his ministers in England and his ministers in Canada. I had proceeded to show that in this case the British cabinet had abdicated their right to advise the King, and had constituted themselves a medium to hand the correspondence from Washington to the cabinet at Ottawa. This being the case, the responsibility for this treaty, in every respect, rests with the right hon. the Prime Minister and his government. And I think it was unfair of the right hon. the Prime Minister to suggest that the unfortunate result in this case was due to the fact that Canada had not the treaty-making power. The government of Canada has the treaty-making power in reference to Canada, and the territorial jurisdiction over Canada as fully as the government in England has the treaty-making power and territorial jurisdiction over the mere affairs of the United Kingdom. I want to show that the government of England made this treaty, step by step, on the advice of the cabinet at Ottawa. There is not a detail that appears in this treaty, that was suggested by the cabinet in Canada, that was not incorporated in the treaty. The government in England admitted the right of the cabinet at Ottawa to advise completely, in regard to this matter. This is proven by the correspondence. In the second letter, in the correspondence brought down, which is from Lord Minto, and addressed to Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, dated November 18th, 1902, we find the following :

> Referring to your despatch of 31st October concerning the proposal of the United States for the appointment of a tribunal of jurists to record their reasoned opinion on the Alaska boundary question, my ministers will decline to give final assent to such proposal.

Why, these words are in themselves an acknowledgment on the part of the ministers that they have the whole negotiations in their own hands :

> My ministers would be disposed to consider it differently, provided reference to the tribunal should include all aspects of the question.

Then, we find, a few days afterwards, Sir Michael Herbert, in Washington, incorporated these identical words in his despatch to the Secretary of State in Washington. This despatch is dated the 18th of December, just a month following the other :

> My dear Mr. Secretary,—Since our interview this morning I have had time to examine the Alaska boundary treaty which you handed me. You will remember I told you that Lord Lansdowne was prepared to entertain favourably the idea of the tribunal, provided the terms of reference were so framed as to include all aspects of the question.

There is the identical language of the despatch by Lord Minto to the Colonial Office incorporated in the despatch to the British ambassador at Washington. This is only another proof that the British government admitted that, in reference to every aspect of this case, the ministry at Ottawa had the fullest rights. Therefore, I think it is very unfair, after the British government had treated our government not merely with courtesy, but with a full acknowledgment of their right to intervene in the negotiation of the treaty affecting the territory of Canada, for the right hon. Prime Minister to make the allusions he did. I do not wish to say anything unkind to any minister; but in a case so delicate as this one, a case in which the words of the Prime Minister will have very special weight in forming and guiding public opinion, I cannot but think his utterance was unfair to His Majesty's ministers in England.

I was astonished to hear the right hon. Prime Minister make the declaration that Canada had not the treaty-making power. While, of course, that power is nominally in the King, yet the King exercises it upon the advice of his ministers. The ministers in England might, I will admit, arbitrarily refuse to allow the advice of ministers of the Crown in Canada to have weight. But, if they did that for an instant, the whole organization of the empire would be upset, and this people would question that right before we took another step in connection with the empire. I had known always that the government of Canada was consulted fully in every matter with reference to treaty-making since confederation. Sir John Macdonald, when Prime Minister was not only consulted, but was made one of the high commissioners to negotiate the treaty of Washington. And that treaty was made subject to the ratification of this parliament —the most complete acknowledgment, on behalf of the Crown, that the treaty-making power, so far as it refers to the territory of Canada, rested as completely with the parliament of Canada as the treaty-making power in relation to the United Kingdom, rested with the imperial parliament. I appeal to any constitutional lawyer in Canada to say if that is not the correct interpretation of the constitution of the empire at the present time. Had any other interpretation been attempted, had the right of the Canadian ministry to advise on this subject been questioned the right hon. Prime Minister could have followed the lead of Cecil Rhodes. Twenty-five years ago the German empire laid hands upon a part of the British empire in British South Africa, trusting to the weakness of the British cabinet, and the hesitation of the ministry to meet these aggressions with an ultimatum, under which Germany would have backed down so quickly that there would have been no time to raise a question. But the British government weakly permitted Germany to appropriate a part of South-west Africa. Then, Germany advanced her posts and took Bechuanaland, the design being to cross and join hands with the Boers, which would have cut off the extension of British influence to the north, and would have confined British South Africa to a little strip around the cape. The ministers in England acted supinely. They set no particular value upon South Africa. The cabinet in South Africa spent days and days in cabling, endeavouring to get the British government to take direct and positive action to drive Germany out of Bechuanaland. Receiving no satisfaction, they acted. Under the inspiration and leadership of Cecil Rhodes, that government passed a minute of council and transmitted it to the ministers in England, telling them that if the British Crown would not defend South Africa to pull down their flag, Cape Colony would float its own flag, and would fight Germany alone and single-handed. In an hour came back the answer that fleets would sail and armies would move to save South Africa. Cecil Rhodes solved that question then and there, that, so far as a British colony is concerned, the government of the colony was supreme in power in dictating its policy.

That was twenty-five years ago and if it had not been for that splendid attitude of Cecil Rhodes, the Boers would have united with the Germans in South Africa and the whole domain that we own in South Africa would have been appropriated by the German Empire. Cecil Rhodes had to act the part of a hero and had to act the part of a man with a dominant mind in his dealings with the imperial government. In this instance how differently was the right hon. Prime Minister treated. The right hon. Prime Minister might have followed that distinguished precedent in the negotiations leading up to the composition of the tribunal, but it was not necessary, because, in these negotiations, the government of England only acted as an intermediary to hand the correspondence from Washington to the government at Ottawa. The government at Ottawa alone are responsible for the negotiations leading up to this treaty. As we come to understand the matter better the people know that, and no amount of misrepresentation will avail to colour the situation one jot or tittle. The people of Canada are intelligent and they will soon come to know the truth. They will read the correspondence and they will know exactly the position we are in. I must say that I was amazed when I heard the right hon. Prime Minister undertake to defend himself. Instead of guiding the hon. member for Labelle, instead of telling that young man that he was pursuing a wrong course in this country, a course that could not commend itself to the English or the French speaking people, he encouraged him in it. I believe that the feeling is growing so strong in Canada that there will not be the slightest distinction between French and English in their devotion to the empire. Occasionally they get a bad leader in the province of Quebec and a bad leader can perhaps work more evil there than a bad leader can in one of the English speaking provinces, but I believe the people of Quebec are sound at heart and that though they are misled by the hon. member for Labelle they will go in the right way. Instead of making himself strong in this empire that hon. gentleman will make himself a false guide of public sentiment everywhere and therefore the right hon. Prime Minister, to whom we must look to direct public sentiment in correct channels, should have repudiated the statement of that hon. gentleman that we had not the treaty-making right and that we had been sacrificed by Chamberlain. Chamberlain has done more for this empire in half an hour than a million of hon. members for Labelle could do in a million years. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is not sincerely interested in the welfare of Canada. I may be wrong, but we have a right to judge men's hearts by the conduct they exhibit and that is my conclusion in reference to the hon. member for Labelle. I hope I am wrong. I do not wish to say that there is any man in Canada who entertains any opinion that it is improper for him to entertain as a citizen of this country, but I am bound to come to a common sense conclusion in reference to a man's heart from the conduct which he manifests. That is my conclusion in reference to the hon. member for Labelle, and it must be the conclusion of the right hon. the Prime Minister, who has had more intimate associations with the hon. gentleman than I have had. Instead of encouraging him in that line of argument he should have depreciated it. He should have said: The government of England gave us the freest hand in reference to this treaty and if there is a mistake the government of Canada is prepared to shoulder it and to meet the people of this country on that issue. I am sorry to have to charge either the government of England or this government with dereliction in this respect but I am much more pleased to be able to charge this government than the imperial government with it, because, if we were to charge the imperial government with this matter, it would create a profoundly injurious feeling in the empire. But, this government, I find from reading this correspondence, are alone responsible for the whole difficulty that has occurred. The right hon. Prime Minister has sought to shield himself behind the name of Lord Chief Justice Alverstone as if that would help the situation. There have been many chief justices of England who have illustrated the genius of the English race and there have been many other chief justices of England who have illustrated the worst features of English character and life. There have been some very learned chief justices and there have been some—I speak as a lawyer familiar with the law courts of England—who are no more worthy of respect than any judge in Canada. In reference to the Lord Chief Justice of England I would rather have had the Chief Justice of Nova Scotia on that tribunal, or I would rather have had the Chief Justice of British Columbia than the Lord Chief Justice of England. I will frankly say that as a Canadian I believe that there is more will power and active business capacity about a Canadian than about any Englishman be he Lord Chief Justice or Prime Minister. I believe that the average intelligence of the Canadian is infinitely ahead of the average intelligence of the Englishmen in the same rank of life, and I believe that the ordinary lawyer in Canada is all round a much better man than the average lawyer in England. I say that with all respect to the British empire and as a devoted imperialist. We have the highest civilization that exists in the whole world and I believe that more general intelligence exists in Canada than exists in any other country in the world. I have said that the right hon. Prime Minister attempted to shield himself behind the name of the Lord Chief Justice of England. I am not concerned in defending the Lord Chief Justice of England nor am I concerned in attacking him. I think the proper course to take is the course which the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) took, to await the opinion which is said to have been delivered by the Lord Chief Justice. We have no right to condemn any man upon a general opinion until we know the reasons upon which it is founded. When I get the reasons upon which he founded that opinion I will criticise it with the same freedom as if it were the opinion of any mechanic or cabman in the city of Ottawa. I will not be deterred from criticising his opinion any more than I would be from criticising the opinion of any lawyer or judge in Canada. If the right hon. gentleman had consulted men like the Chief Justice of Nova Scotia, a highlander who would have faced these boasting Yankees and told them that they had enough of the territory of Canada and that they could not get another foot of it, the result might have been different. He would not have yielded and he would have brought as much intelligence and discrimination to bear upon the case as the Lord Chief Justice of England. As a Canadian I think that the hon. member for Labelle did not do justice to the position that our Canadian jurists occupy in this country. I am willing that Englishmen shall have all the credit they deserve but I want to put forth the claim that we have lawyers in Canada who occupy a position as high as that of any lawyer in the world. There is no divine superiority for any man because he happens to reside in England. This case is res judicata. On the side of Canada there were three arbitrators. Two of them decided in favour of Canada and therefore Lord Alverstone is the dissenting arbitrator. The majority of the court on Canada's side decided against Lord Alverstone and he should have accepted that decision on the part of Canada. The tribunal as far as Canada is concerned was composed of three members and the majority of the tribunal representing Canada decided in favour of Canada from the facts which they had heard. I shall not imitate the hon. member for Labelle and undertake to review the case. I do not know whether he is a lawyer or not, but I think he followed a very foolish course. This whole matter was left to the court, all the facts have been presented to it, and the members of the tribunal have rendered their judgment. I am bound to believe that Lord Alverstone was wrong and I am bound to accept the decision of the majority of the court composed of Canadians as being the proper one.

I am bound by the majority opinion of the court, and consequently, I must conclude that Lord Alverstone is wrong. I do not know either Sir Louis Jetté or Mr. Aylesworth, and I am not concerned to compliment or eulogize them, but they were chosen by the government of Canada for a very high judicial mission; they heard the full argument as well as Lord Alverstone, they decided in favour of Canada, and I believe that their decision is right. If two English judges had decided a question against a Canadian judge, fancy Englishmen having the slightest doubt as to who was right. So far as Lord Alverstone's opinion is concerned, the thing is res judicata; Canada was right and Lord Alverstone improperly decided against her interests. We must inferentially conclude that Lord Alverstone was wrong, but we have in addition the statement of Mr. Aylesworth, who knows all the facts, that the judgment was not come to upon judicial grounds. Lord Alverstone occupies the unenviable position therefore of being condemned twice over. Judges must submit to criticism, and Lord Alverstone, the Lord Chief Justice of England, must not escape criticism any more than if he were the Lord Chief Justice of Timbuctoo. I am bound as a Canadian, to accept the decision of the two eminent Canadians who were thought worthy to sit in this tribunal, and accepting their decision, I am bound to hold that Canada was not properly supported by Lord Alverstone. Mr. Aylesworth's dissenting opinion occupies three columns of the 'Times,' and in that opinion he says:

> I have merely to say that the course the majority of the tribunal has decided to take with regard to the islands at the entrance of the Portland canal is in my humble opinion so opposed to the plain requirements of justice.

If one of the judges was free to discuss Lord Alverstone, thus, surely, I am relieved from any qualms when I discuss his conduct here.

—is in my humble opinion so opposed to the plain requirements of justice and so absolutely irreconciliable with any disposition of any branch of the case, upon principles of a judicial character, that I respectfully decline to affix my signature to it.

For a lawyer, trained to use language in a constrained sense, that is a most powerful indictment of Lord Alverstone. I have never been in England, although some of my family live there. However, from knee-high, English papers flooded my home, and before I knew anything about Canadian papers, I became more or less saturated with English public opinion. I have read the diplomatic correspondence of this empire for seventy or eighty years, and I know that for sixty years the diplomacy of England has been chiefly marked by a desire to avoid war at any cost. Why, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries Englishmen would have shot off their guns and sent out their ships, and retribution would follow any who dared to touch part of the empire. Let me say incidentally, that the iniquitous free trade doctrine that Cobden introduced has degraded the public sentiment of England. It seems to strike the very heart of Englishmen and to degrade them. In the history of Great Britain there is a mark, as pronounced as if a mountain range had been erected, to divide the period between sixty years ago and afterwards. There has been evidence of a marked decadence of the great spirit, that once told the world : Don't touch our territory, or we will seek redress with our ships, our arms, and our men. With the era of free trade the most marked indications of decay set in. Germany could steal British territory, the United States could flout her in the face, France could do likewise, and England would bow. That is not the fault of the British empire, but it is the fault of the weak and impoverished race that is living in England at the present day. England has got vastly rich in the last sixty years, the merchants of England find their ships bearing them wealth from every corner of the earth, and the English government has got under the control of the rich merchants and the Jews of London, and whenever her territory is assailed, instead of being revenged these men of commerce say : Take the kicks and the jibes and the outrages of fortune, but don't declare war, because if you do, we may lose $100. And so, England that in the past was honoured the world over, lost her honour, because every nation in the world knew that she would not fight. Let it go abroad that a nation will not fight for her territory and her rights, and every nation in the world will attack her. But, let it be known that the smallest nation on earth will defend her territory, and she is honoured and respected. Look at the history of Switzerland, a little country with a million people, which for three hundred years has defied every power in Europe. She is honoured and respected by the great nations, because every nation knows that if Switzerland is attacked it will be a war of extermination. Switzerland maintains her independence to-day because of her pluck, and a daring and courage, while England with all her wealth, has been buffeted by every nation of the world. The Prime Minister knew the diplomacy of England, and especially her diplomacy in reference to the United States. I am a strong imperialist, but I have been trying to bring public opinion to bear upon the unworthy people of England to-day, to let them know that the time is past for subserviency, and that while the people of the old country may submit to humiliation, we in this young country never shall. No matter how degenerate men may be in England, when the race breathe the free air of Canada, they become regenerated. It is impossible for us to bow to humiliation. I want to find out who is responsible for the appointment of Lord Alverstone, and I am happy to say that this correspondence points out to me clearly that the whole error lies at the door of the government of Canada, so that I am pleased to find that the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was wrong in trying to mislead the people of Canada to think otherwise.

With reference to the treaty, I find that when it was sent out to Canada a very important alteration was made in it. That would have given the right hon. the Prime Minister ample opportunity to have said at once : This treaty does not preserve the rights of Canada which were given to us by the treaty made between England and Russia in 1825. In that treaty there was a clear boundary established. If the arbitrators had not been allowed to alter that boundary, there would have been no doubt as to the decision ; and I venture to say that when the opinion of Lord Alverstone comes to this country, it will be found that it is based upon the change that was made in the treaty with the consent of the Prime Minister of Canada. In the old treaty made between Russia and England in 1825 the boundary was set out as clearly as words could define it. The boundary was never at any time to exceed ten marine leagues, or thirty miles, from the coast. Mountains were referred to, but only in case they should be within ten marine leagues of the coast. But what happened ? The United States knew that if that question were submitted to a tribunal the decision would be against them, and what did they do ? When the treaty of arbitration was made, they had a clause put into it which enabled that tribunal to take into consideration matters which had happened before and after the treaty was committed to writing. Everybody knows that when nations get together to make a contract a number of discussions occur. One nation claims this or that ; but in the end, when the matter is committed to writing and the treaty is once ratified, you cannot go outside of the terms of that treaty. Everything is in it, and it is simply a matter of the interpretation of the words, unless there is found to be some latent ambiguity requiring explanations. In this case it is not pretended that there was any ambiguity. The language was clear and distinct, and if that treaty had been submitted to a judge, even to Lord Alverstone, and he had been bound down by the simple words of the treaty, we would never have lost the two islands, but would have preserved our rights intact. But when the treaty of arbitration was sent out this extraordinary clause was found in, which was no doubt cited by Lord Alverstone in coming to his decision. A draft of the treaty was sent to this government, and I have no doubt that this government must have acted in concert with the English government in order to help them out of this difficulty. The clause I refer to is as follows :

The tribunal shall also take into consideration any action of the several governments or their respective representatives preliminary or subsequent to the conclusion of said treaties, so far as the same tends to show the original and effective understanding of the parties in respect to the limits of their several territorial jurisdictions under and by virtue of the provisions of said treaties.

Under that clause of the treaty Lord Alverstone could throw away the treaty on which we had relied for our rights with regard to the boundary, and could listen to all the cock-and-bull stories set up by the Americans with reference to what had taken place before and after the treaty, and could found his decision upon them. The government of Canada could have insisted that our rights should be preserved in the fullest manner by the treaty, which fixed the boundary in such a way that no court could get over them. I went over this whole matter for a couple of months with the late Mr. Justice Mills. We happened to lodge together in the Russell House, and we went over this matter night after night, and I had the benefit of his vast information on the whole subject. I found him better informed on this question than any Canadian I have since met, and it was his opinion that under the terms of the old treaty the United States had not a leg to stand upon. I hold that the first mistake of the government of Canada was in permitting the introduction of a clause like that, which struck at the very foundation of the article in the treaty by which our rights were secured.

Then, in the appointment of the commissioners the Prime Minister was not taken by surprise. I find by this correspondence that as soon as the American commissioners were appointed he was informed of their appointment. He knew that the English government had departed entirely from their notion of having six jurists to deal with the matter ; and when the names of the United States jurists were submitted, the most ample opportunity was afforded to the government of Canada of stepping out and refusing to go any further. I am bound to say that the government of Canada did remonstrate against the American commissioners. But what happened ? Here is the most ample evidence that the government of England said at once : If you object to these people the negotiations will be abandoned. What more could the government of Canada want ? I understood the Prime Minister to allege to-day that the treaty had then been signed. No matter whether it had been signed or not. Here are the words of the British government :

His Majesty's government have therefore to choose between breaking off negotiations altogether or accepting American nominations and appointing as colleagues representatives who will meet the altered circumstances of the case.

His Majesty's government say that they have nothing to do but to break off the negotiations if the Canadian government object to the American commissioners. That was all that was necessary ; they would have had to say to the American government that if they did not keep their agreement with reference to the appointment of jurists the treaty was off, because that was the very basis of the negotiations. But there seems to have been some secret influence working from London on the government of Canada, because what they rejected by one mail they accepted by the next. We find that the Prime Minister withdrew his objection and suggested the name of Lord Alverstone as one of the British commissioners. I saw that by a paper in London it is made to appear that Lord Alverstone's appointment was forced on the government of Canada by the English government, and I inferred that from what the hon. member for Labelle said. I see that the matter is being discussed in England :

The 'Morning Post' recalls the earnest recommendation of Sir Richard Webb in March last that the British commissioners be all Canadians, arguing the appointment of a single Englishman to be unjust to Canada and impolitic for the empire. The 'Post' asks, presumably with some ulterior purpose : 'Has the British government evidence that Canada was anxious above all for a verdict, and also that the Canadian government approved of the selection of an Englishman as a commissioner ?'

The English 'Post' suggests that some people here were so anxious for a verdit that they were willing to sacrifice the interests of Canada for the purpose of getting a verdict, and willing to take anybody as a commissioner. It asks if there is evidence that the Canadian government nominated Lord Alverstone. I am bound to say that the evidence is here. Lord Alverstone is the nominee of Canada, he was our appointment. If he was our appointment, we should acknowledge that fact and should not leave any doubt about the matter in the English public mind. I find in a despatch of Lord Minto to the Colonial Office the following passage :—

In view of the short time given for the preparation of the case, my ministers desire to proceed immediately, and therefore suggest an early settlement of preliminaries. As to the composition of the tribunal my ministers suggest the Chief Justice of England and two Canadian judges, names to be telegraphed hereafter.

Then the despatch proceeds to name the counsel who are to carry on the arbitration for Canada. I want to know from the Prime Minister why three Canadians were not nominated. I observe that Sir Richard Webb, in the Colonial Office urged upon this government or the imperial government, that there should be three Canadian commissioners. Who is Sir Richard Webb ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know, and there is no foundation at all for this statement.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is he connected with the Colonial Office ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know him at all.

Mr. GOURLEY. Did you know of him in connection with the correspondence ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not.

Mr. GOURLEY. I see in this despatch :

The ' Post ' recalls the earnest recommendation of Sir Richard Webb, in March last, that the British commissioners be all Canadians, arguing the appointment of a single Englishman to be unjust to Canada and to the interests of the empire.

The PRIME MINISTER. If Sir Richard Webb made such a recommendation to the British authorities it was never conveyed to us.

Mr. GOURLEY. I cannot imagine why, in a case of this kind, three Canadians were not selected ; it is a reflection on the people of Canada that the three commissioners should not have been chosen from Canada. Had it been 500 miles of the coast of England along the channel or the North Sea, which had been claimed by France, do you suppose that England would agree to the appointment of two Englishmen and one Canadian as a board of arbitration ? I venture to say that not a man in England would consent to the appointment of any man not an Englishman. Territory should be in the keeping of men living on the soil and no other man should be permitted to dispose of it. Therefore I say that the government of Canada made an extraordinary mistake and a mistake which will become more apparent as it becomes more fully understood by the people of Canada. It is no use hiding from ourselves the fact that the diplomacy of England in North America for sixty years has been weak. I have heard the Prime Minister himself say that he was not in sympathy with the diplomacy of England on this continent. Therefore you were warned and notified that the British diplomacy was weak, and when you had the opportunity of removing it to Canadian diplomacy you should have done so. What is the use of being forewarned if you are not forearmed ? Why did you not insist ? Had I been more familiar with the procedure in this House the first year I was here I would have moved that three Canadians be appointed on the committee. However, when I heard the Prime Minister say that he was no lover of British diplomacy on this continent I thought that when he had the choice he would have had three Canadians and if he had had three Canadians we would not have had this difficulty to-day.

Another thing that has struck me is the fact that there was never any suspicion about the United States commissioners giving in or losing in this arbitration. There was not a word of that kind in their press or the press of England ; they all took it for granted that the United States commissioners would stick to their case. The just settlement of this question is the just settlement of the relations of England and this country and in the settlement of this question we must ascertain whether the English government has done us wrong in not looking after our territory or whether the fault lies at the door of the Canadian government. I would prefer that it should lie here, even if the right hon. gentleman should escape the anger of public opinion in order that it might not create feelings that might prejudice the existence of the empire. Therefore I want to know why it is that from the very moment Lord Alverstone's name was mentioned it was stated in the American papers, professedly inspired, that Lord Alverstone was to decide in favour of the United States. There must have been some agreement between the government of England and the government of Canada that the government of Canada was to consent to the sacrifice of Canada in order to serve some supposed imperial policy. It is clear to my mind that it was communicated from the Foreign Office in London to the Secretary of State in Washington that the United States had nothing to fear, to go on with the treaty that England would appoint a man who would decide the case in favour of the United States, as England wanted to get rid of the case and to preserve the friendship of the United States, and that England was willing to sacrifice the interests of Canada and had succeeded in getting the government of Canada to accede.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend say that seriously ?

Mr. GOURLEY. I believe that in some way or other the government of Canada was overcome by the government of England. The thing was rigged in this way. They said to the government of Canada : You can appoint two Canadians and let the Chief Justice of England be appointed as well; the Chief Justice of England will decide in favour of the United States, your two people can dissent, that will protect you in Canada and settle this question for the empire and relieve us of a great difficulty. However there is no doubt that the people will arrive at as correct a conclusion in this matter when it has been fully explained to them, as any logician. Public opinion invariably forms a conclusion better than a logician of the character of Goldwin Smith, who always goes wrong although he is a trained logician.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend pretend to say there was a secret agreement?

Mr. GOURLEY. I was reasoning from the facts.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is all wrong.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then how did the United States get the knowledge as soon as Lord Alverstone was appointed that he was going to decide for them? And now as a matter of fact after he has decided for them I undertake to say that the State Department at Washington had some information from some source, that he was to decide for them.

The PRIME MINISTER. That I do not know.

Mr. GOURLEY. We must understand the whole question from beginning to end and I do not believe that Lord Alverstone is to blame; I believe that he was appointed on that commission with instructions, in the interest of the empire, to give the award that he has given.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend know that Lord Alverstone had to take an oath that he would interpret the treaty judicially? And does he think that in the face of that——

Mr. GOURLEY. The Englishman's idea of 'judicial interpretation' would be to serve the interests of the empire. I want to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that he must have known—he did know—of the extraordinary opinion in England with regard to the importance of the good will of the United States to the empire. That opinion is incorrect. The people of England have more to gain by sticking to Canada than by kow-towing to the United States; yet, I do not find a single word in this correspondence calling the attention of the English government to that fact. There is the clearest evidence, on the contrary, that this government permitted that opinion in Great Britain to go on, and become stronger day by day. If this government wish to serve the empire, they should let the people of England know that they must look to Canada for their support on this continent, and not to the United States. Every time they sacrifice the interests of Canada, in order to conciliate the United States, the people of the United States become more greedy and grasping, and the people of this country become more alarmed and dissatisfied.

There must have been some understanding, somewhere and somehow, that the commission would uphold the contentions of the United States. Why, the determination of this tribunal was known in the United States three months before it was announced. And three, four or five days before Lord Alverstone had given his decision, the finding of this commission was announced accurately and in wonderful detail in the press of the United States. I intend to investigate this question. I intend to follow it 'secundum artem.' Three, four or five days before the decision, as soon as the argument was closed, announcements were made in the United States as to what the decision would be. How did the facts gets out of Lord Alverstone's head and into the heads of the Yankee newspaper men and the Yankee commissioners? Tell me that, if you can, There is only one conclusion—this was a triumph of the diplomacy of England over the government of Canada. The government of Canada had the matter in their own hands; and, if the interests of Canada have been sacrificed, they must bear the responsibility. They had full power to negotiate, and now that the interests of Canada have been sacrificed, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is put up, to charge that upon the British government, and the Prime Minister follows him, virtually in support of the same idea.

There is just one other remark of the Prime Minister to which I wish to refer. He said that the United States was a populous and powerful country, and that Canada was a small colony. If the government of England had attempted to thrust upon us a treaty that was not in accordance with Canada's rights the Prime Minister could have summoned this parliament and there would have been such an expression of public indignation that the government in England would have backed down. All he had to do was to summon this faithful Commons and we would soon teach the English government that they could not thrust upon this country any treaty made to suit the diplomacy of the United States. If this colony is treated in that way, let not the Prime Minister say that it is because it is a weak colony. England would have stuck to us, if we had asserted our rights and demanded the protection of the imperial parliament. We are not a weak colony. Six milions of free people would beat the United States single-handed in the contest. If we fought them as the Swiss people fought the power of Austria, we should beat them to a stand-still. We are a powerful people, and occupy the best strategic position on this continent.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). We beat them in 1812, when they were relatively forty times as populous as they are now.

Mr. GOURLEY. Of course. And we could do it again. It is not right for the Prime Minister to seek to weaken the great public sentiment of Canada by saying that we are not able to cope with the invader. If we had shown that we were prepared to fight for ourselves, England would have been at our back with her forces and the United States would never have dared to attempt to capture our territory. Therefore, notwithstanding all that has been said, I claim that the government of Canada alone are responsible in this matter. Mr. Chamberlain, in writing, made suggestions. He had a right, as a British statesman, to give his private opinion. Just as I might advise a client that it would be better to compromise rather than fight for his rights. But it would be the right of the client to refuse to compromise. Mr. Chamberlain had a right to make suggestions to the government, but the government were independent men and representatives of Canada, and they should have at once replied : We cannot stand for any sacrifice of the rights of Canada.

As to the Bulwer-Clayton treaty, I think my leader (Mr. Borden) put that matter in the right light. We had the opportunity to get the help of England and to have our rights maintained. But the right hon. Premier of this country took the unexampled course of saying that we had no interest in that treaty. That is a treaty affecting this continent; and, on whatever continent there is a British colony, any treaty affecting that continent affects that part of the British empire, and the colony should assert its rights as part of the British empire. And, when we told the English government that we had no interest in this matter, it showed that we had not the high appreciation of our rights that we ought to have.

I am glad of this debate. It would have been unfortunate if the people of England had been led to fancy that a decision like this could be given, and the people of Canada not resent it. I am glad that the press of Canada have shown to the world that our spirit is not daunted, that we are not weaklings, but that we are of a proud race, that we possess the daring qualities of that race in the highest degree, and that our strength is not sapped by luxury or decay. I am glad to see that the press of England are speaking out for Canada. And, in view of the temper of the people of England, as exhibited through their press, it would be a most unfortunate spectacle for the world had Canada remained silent. When this debate is reported in England to-morrow the press of England will assist, as far as possible, in educating the people of England with reference to the position we occupy in the British empire. I thank the House for the consideration they have given my remarks.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a communication from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General, as follows :

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, October 23, 1903.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber, on Saturday, the 24th instant, at 11 o'clock a.m., for the purpose of proroguing the session of the parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. S. MAUDE, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903—CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). On behalf of the managers appointed to confer with the Senate, a free conference was held last night, and I beg leave to offer the following report :

The Senate Committee Room, No. 8.
Friday, October 23, 1903.

The managers, on the part of the House of Commons have the honour to report that they met the managers, on the part of the Senate, at the free conference, which on their part was managed by the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell and others, for the purpose of further considering the amendments to the Bill No. 21, intituled ; 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting Railways.'

The managers on the part of the House of Commons withdrew their objections to the Senate amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 70 to sections 5, 6, 7 and 310 of the said Bill.

The managers on the part of the Senate agreed that the following be added to section 5, as 5-A in the reprinted Bill : —

5-A. All the provisions of this Act relating to railway crossing and junctions, through-traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not.

The managers on the part of the Senate did not insist on the Senate amendment No. 11, to section 44 of the said Bill.

As a result of this conference, I beg leave to move concurrence in the Senate section 7, instead of the Commons sections 5, 6 and 7.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I beg leave to move that we dispense with the proposed clause 5a, because that clause is covered by the Senate clause 7, and by the Commons clause 302.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I move to strike out from Commons clause 310 the words 'section 306.'

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Some doubts have been expressed as to whether amendments 31 and 40 of the Senate have been adopted. In view of that doubt, I move that amendment 31 to section 195 be formally concurred in, as well as amendments 40 and 210.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I move that the amendments of the Senate to Bill (No. 257) to amend the Civil Service Act be concurred in. The effect of these amendments is to confirm the right of the Auditor General to make promotions in his own department.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—PETITIONS AGAINST NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). As the House is about to adjourn, I would crave permission to draw attention to an article which appears in to-day's Montreal 'Star' and which reads as follows:

One of the privileges of a member of the House of Commons is that of saying anything he pleases on the floor of the House without being held to account for what he says before the courts of law.

He may say that which is grossly untrue and slanderous. He may be animated by envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness. He may be actuated by a desire for personal or party advantage, or simply by a desire for notoriety He may say just what he pleases without fear of the law.

Such a privilege would in itself serve as a restraint upon the tongue of a high principled man.

Unfortunately, all members of parliament are not high principled, and slanders are frequently uttered on the floor of the House with a recklessness, which is born of immunity from legal consequence.

Three weeks ago that eminent jurist, Mr. Talbot, of Bellechasse, declared on the floor of the House that two of the petitions against the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme were forged. Sir Wilfrid Laurier promptly followed this up by a declaration that the same charge would apply to most of the petitions. Mr. Talbot moved that two of the petitions should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation, and Mr. Borden suggested in amendment that all the petitions should be referred to the Committee. Sir Wilfrid, in a moment of weakness, accepted the amendment. There the matter rests. The Committee met once; formally passed a resolution asking permission to sit while the House was in session, and has never met again.

The whole thing was a bluff; the charges were a bluff; the reference to the committee was a bluff. The 'Star,' at the time, denounced the whole business as a bluff and expressed the opinion that the government would never dare to have the charges investigated.

The privileges of parliament were never intended to cover such infamous cowardice; and if used for such purposes the sooner they are abolished the better. The genuineness of the petitions is beyond question, beyond suspicion. If any names at all were forged, they were probably forged by friends of the government anxious to diminish the influence of the vast mass of genuine signatures sent in to parliament. The important and all-significent fact is that the government dared not allow an investigation of the charges it made with such reckless and splendid courage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be that when I made that motion I made a mistake.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman intend to make a motion?

Mr. TALBOT. I intend to move the adjournment of the House. It may be said at this late stage of the session I was wrong in bringinig that matter up, but I could not have made it any sooner, for you know as well as I do that these petitions were brought into the House at the very tail end of the discussion of the Transcontinental Railway. On the very day these petitions were read in the House, I drew attention to their character, expressing my doubt as to the authenticity of the signatures. Now, I have in my possession documents to prove that I was perfectly justified in making my motion, although it was so late in the session. I have now in my possession nine affidavits——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I object to my hon. friend going into a matter that is before a Committee of the House. I have not the slightest objection to the investigation going on before the committee, but to read affidavits in the House about a matter that has been referred to a committee, is, I submit, out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is quite new to me. I know there are some authorities upon it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It cannot be a matter that would require very much authority. A question respecting petitions presented to this House which has been raised as a question of privilege surely cannot be considered by this House while it is subject to the jurisdiction of a committee or until that committee has reported. Otherwise it would be competent for every hon. member in this House to bring in affidavits on one side or the other and to contest in this House the question which has been referred to the committee for the purpose of report. That would be a very elementary principle upon which to act.

Mr. TALBOT. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) should be the last man in the world to rise in this House and attempt to prevent a member who, in one of the most important papers in Canada, is called a coward and a slanderer from availing himself of the only opportunity he has of defending himself. I think I should be allowed that privilege.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not preventing my hon. friend from defending himself in any way. As soon as he made his motion in the House, I rose in my place and said, that, in view of the statements he made, I would unqualifiedly support a reference to the committee. The hon. gentleman has had the matter referred to the committee. It is now under the control of the committee. It has not been proceeded with. What I am objecting to is that my hon. friend should undertake to proceed to deal by means of affidavits with a matter which has been referred to a committee of the House for investigation and report.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. TALBOT. Perhaps we may settle this question which has been raised by the hon. leader of the opposition. I will not read the affidavits but I will give a personal explanation if I am allowed to do so. I have in my possession thirteen affidavits, nine of them proving that the signatures on these petitions were not authorized in any way by the persons whose names appear upon them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend——

Mr. TALBOT. And I have four of them showing that signatures were on the petitions of men who are living in the United States at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax. I do not think it is a very worthy course on the part of my hon. friend, when a point of order has been raised, to evade it by stating the substance of the affidavits instead of reading them. It seems to me a very plain point of order that when the matter raised by my hon. friend has been referred to a committee he should not endeavour by affidavits to deal with the very same question in the House, because to permit that, would be to permit every member of the House to bring in affidavits pro and con which would take away from the committee the functions which it was designed they should exercise under the reference thereto, and it is as much out of order to state the substance of the affidavits as to read them. To rise for the ostensible purpose of speaking on a point of order and then to endeavour to evade the point of order is not a worthy thing for a member of the House to do, and it is not respectful to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I find that the principle generally laid down is that when a question is referred to a committee, the House has no right to deal with the matter itself, but the hon. member (Mr. Talbot)—perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was not in when he read the statement—has read a statement from a paper reflecting upon his character and upon his reputation as a member of this House. I suppose, if the hon. gentleman wants simply to state the reasons why he brought this question up without entering into the merits of the petitions which have been referred to the committee, he may do so.

Mr. TALBOT. That is my intention. I merely want to state that when I brought this matter before the House, I was justified in doing so, because I have in my possession documents sworn to which justify me as a member of this House in stating that the privilege of this House was grossly abused, probably without the knowledge of hon. members at the time, and which go to prove the statement which I made at the time that half the names were forged. I have documents to prove it, and consequently I say that there is no foundation for the statements which the 'Star' has made, and that the position I took at the time was perfectly correct, according to the facts as disclosed in the documents. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. S. BARKER (Hamilton). As a member of the committee to which this matter was referred, I beg to inform you, Mr. Speaker, and the House, that the committee was called together many days ago, immediately after the reference. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) had the opportunity of bringing that matter up, but from the time the committee met to the present hour we have never heard one word in support of the charge. The hon. gentleman has made no effort to bring the matter forward. He has made no effort to have the committee take action upon it, and we have never heard a word from the hon. gentleman as to the evidence in support of these charges.

Mr. TALBOT. The article was only printed to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) will withdraw his motion, because we may have a motion to adjourn when there is nothing before the House.

Mr. TALBOT. I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion is withdrawn, I would like to say that my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) made his statement on the 7th of October, that he has had some fifteen days in which to prove his charges and that up to the present time they have not been proved. My hon. friend will recollect that when he made his motion, I rose and said that I concurred heartily in it. The right hon. Prime Minister then rose in his place and said:

But as there is an impression growing very strong in the country, that in fact there has been an attempt at a conspiracy to impose upon this House, I am perfectly willing to excuse my hon. friend's language.

I had referred to the hon. gentleman's language in presenting the motion. Then the right hon. First Minister further said :

He has referred to only two but I think he could refer to several and perhaps to all.

After my right hon. friend had made these remarks, I rose again and said :

Then I am perfectly willing to widen the motion and to enable an investigation to be made into every petition that has been presented.

They have stood there referred to the committee for fifteen days, and during that time no attempt has been made——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has not the right to refer to what has been done in the committee. I do not know whether anything has been done or not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am referring to the fact that nothing has been done in committee, and I submit that it is perfectly competent for me to refer to nothing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It will be difficult for Mr. Speaker to find any authority that contravenes that assertion. If there has been a conspiracy in the country to impose upon the House, I do think it a great pity that some proceedings have not been taken. Since the matter has been referred to the committee I have on two occasions at least pressed on the government to proceed with the investigation. I have done my whole duty in the matter.

Mr. BELCOURT. Order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am aware that my hon. friend (Mr. Belcourt) does not like to hear this. He is particularly disturbed in regard to it.

Mr. BELCOURT. My disturbance is because the hon. the leader of the opposition is breaking the rules of the House when he should set a good example.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. member for Ottawa is qualifying for a judgeship.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. member for Ottawa views with the utmost equanimity many breaches of the rules of the House, but he seems to be particularly sensitive with regard to this special subject. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain how it is that his feelings are so much pertrubed.

Mr. BELCOURT. I have regard for the rules of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend's anxiety for the observance of the rules is particularly apparent on this occasion. I will do my hon. friend the justice to think that he had very good reason for it. He is amply justified in calling 'Order,' when any reference is made to these matters. I do not blame him at all; if I were as unfortunately situated as he is, I would be tempted to take exactly the same course. My hon. friend from Bellechasse, is of course perfectly justified in repelling any attack made against him which he thinks is unfair. At the same time he must remember that when he makes a charge of this kind in parliament, and when after a lapse of fifteen days that charge has not been investigated, he must expect that there will be some reference made to it in the public press.

Motion to adjourn the House withdrawn.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. S. HUGHES (Victoria). I referred the other evening to Col. Denny who has been appointed as head of the Survey Department of the Militia, and in looking over 'Hansard' I find that it is reported that I mentioned the name of Col. Denison. I can understand how the reporter fell into that error knowing that Col. Denison belongs to a well-known military family. It was Col. Denny to whom I referred. Col. Denny is an imperial officer, whom the Minister of Militia has brought here, and I commend his action in that regard. Col. Denny has a wide experience in Asia and in Africa and he has been a most successful intelligence officer.

There is one other typographical error in 'Hansard' which my Scotch friends in the House are most anxious that I should correct. I quoted recently Burns' well-known lines :

Glory is the soldier's prize.

And the proof-reader had it :

Glory is the soldier's price.

My Scotch friends have insisted that I should apologize.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER. As there is nothing before the House I would suggest that the sitting be suspended for half an hour to await further business from the Senate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am informed that a Bill respecting the incorporation of mining companies has passed the Senate, and I would like to ask my right hon. friend if he knows whether it has been sent to this House or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have been informed that the Bill has passed the Senate, but I do not know that it has come to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The sitting of the House will be suspended for half an hour.

The sitting of the House was accordingly suspended.

The sitting of the House resumed.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That when the House adjourns this day it do stand adjourned until to-morrow at 10.30 a.m.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, October 24, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 10.30 a.m.

THE USE OF MAIL BAGS.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). I wish to inform the hon. leader of the opposition, that I have had an inquiry into the statement which the hon. gentleman made in the House a few days ago, that one of the officers of the Post Office Department had threatened the express company, that if it ventured to carry any mail matter such as was under discussion, the company would be prosecuted. I have a statement from the controller of the mail service to the effect that the hon. gentleman has been entirely misinformed. If the hon. gentleman wishes I will read that statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think it is necessary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Briefly, the facts are, that Mr. Plumb waited on the express company and pointed out that it would be illegal to use mail bags for the carriage of express matter. He made no reference whatever to their carrying express goods.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There seems to have been some suggestion of prosecution, but according to Mr. Plumb's version it related solely to the use of mail bags. The impression conveyed to the express people as communicated to me was that the suggested prosecution concerned the carriage of this matter by the express company from Montreal to Ottawa. I can understand how one thing may have been intended on one side and understood differently on the other, but certainly the statement was made to me in the most direct and circumstantial manner, that there had been the threat which I have mentioned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Plumb is in the service of the railway branch and Mr. Armstrong is his superior officer. Mr. Armstrong was instructed to examine 'Hansard' and send a reply. He reported to the deputy that he had examined 'Hansard' and had submitted the same to Mr. Plumb. Perhaps I had better read the reply, which is as follows :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Ottawa, October 22, 1903.

Memorandum for the Postmaster General.

In reference to the remarks made by Mr. Borden, M.P., in the House, to the effect that after 400 parcels of mail matter expressed from Montreal had arrived in Ottawa addressed to Mr. George Taylor, M.P., an officer of the Post Office Department called upon the express company and threatened to prosecute them because they did not come by mail ; the Postmaster General is informed that no officer of this department called upon the express company under such circumstances, and threatened them with prosecution. The facts are as follows :—

Having been informed that mail sacks were being illegally used by the Montreal 'Star' in the transmission by express of certain printed matter to Mr. Taylor, M.P., at Ottawa, I instructed Mr. Plumb, superintendent of railway mail service, to visit the Ottawa express office and ascertain the truth of the report and, if well founded, to point out to the agent that mail sacks were for the use of the Post Office Department, and could not, therefore be legally used for other purposes than the mail service of the country, through the post office and not through the express office, or otherwise and to make known to him that any one making illegal use of the sacks incurred liability to a fine. Subsequently Mr. Plumb reported to me that acting upon my instructions he had waited upon the express company's agent at Ottawa and made known to him the above view, and suggested that, in order to prevent any violation of the law, through inadvertence or otherwise, it might be well if the agent were to telegraph the express company at Montreal not to accept, for transmission by express, anything contained in post office bags.

Mr. Plumb assures me that in his interview with the express company's agent he confined his observations strictly within the foregoing instructions, and that he made no mention whatever of any prosecution because of the transmission of the political literature in question to Mr. Taylor by express, and said nothing whatever which could be so construed.

I have called Mr. Plumb's attention to the statement of Mr. Borden in the House, to the effect that the express agent reported him as threatening the company with prosecution for carrying this printed matter and he informs me that he made no such threat, and that he took no exception whatever to the company carrying the printed matter in question, but confined his remarks strictly to the subject of the illegal use of mail bags.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES IN SEVERAL PROVINCES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Some days ago, I was asked to prepare a statement showing the distribution of railway subsidies in reference to the several provinces. I have prepared the statement which, with the consent of the House I shall read. I may say that in regard to bridges, there was a special appropriation of $150,000, and since that we have had a special Act in relation to the Quebec bridge. These were all in the province of Quebec. The following is the statement in reference to the railways :

MILES of Railway provided for in the way of Government Construction, Subsidy, or Guarantee in the several Provinces during the present Session.

Province.	Subsidy Miles.	Guarantee Miles.	Government Construction.		Total.
			Miles.	$	Miles.	$
Ontario	842	Nil.	810		1,652
Quebec	1,366½	Nil.	620		1,986½
Nova Scotia	687½	Nil.	Nil.		687½
New Brunswick	265	Nil.	235		500
Prince Edward Island	Nil.	Nil.		$1,393,900		$1,393,900
Manitoba	59	Nil.	105		164
North-west Territories	202	1,945	Nil.		2,147
British Columbia	486	596	Nil.		1,082
Yukon	84	Nil.	Nil.		84
Total	3,992	*2,541	1,770	†$1,393,900	8,303	$1,393,900

* In the Guarantee Column, 1,225 miles are Grand Trunk Pacific and 720 Canadian Northern.

† In the column 'Government Construction,' the amount voted for Prince Edward Island is given. It is on account of improvement to the Prince Edward Island Railway and the building of a new line of 50½ miles now under construction.

DATE OF CONVENING PARLIAMENT.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker, once more I enter my very strong protest against the late date at which this session was called. It is most unfair to members of parliament, coming from British Columbia, Manitoba, the North-west Territories and the outlying portions of the eastern provinces, that the session should be so late in opening. I do not care what party may be in power, I enter my protest against it. I emphasize most strongly what I have already said: that in the interests of members of parliament coming from a long distance it is an outrage for any government to call parliament together at such a late date as the middle of March. Those of us who are engaged in agricultural pursuits have been here since before our crop was put in, and now it has been reaped, and threshed and sold. The most egregious part of it is that we will not be able to participate in the proceeds of the harvest; the money will be all gone. It is true, the government say that under the circumstances it was impossible for parliament to meet earlier owing to the illness of the Premier. That may be a very just cause in this particular instance; but delay has occurred before, and it may occur again. It is largely brought about through the officials of the departments, to a very great extent governing the actions of the government. The Minister of Justice smiles, but he knows that it is too true. He knows that this report cannot be got ready and that report cannot be got ready; but if the ministers would exercise the power which they possess and which they should exercise, and would say to those men that the reports must be got ready or some other person would get them ready, I think they would be ready. The government must have known the enormity of the business that was before them; if they did not know it, they were at fault. We were promised the Redistribution Bill, and we expected it, and we knew its contentious character.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. member intends to conclude with a motion.

Mr. BOYD. If I am not prevented, I shall. I wish to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the length of time we have been kept here. I also want to call your attention to the money voted and the liabilities incurred during this session:

Main estimates	$ 57,109,974 35
1st supplementary estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1903	300,000 00
2nd supplementary estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1903.	5,090,968 27
3rd supplementary estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1904.	10,590,863 12
4th supplementary estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1904.	771,365 55
5th supplementary estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1904.	1,333 34
	$73,864,504 63
Bounties on iron and steel, based on last year's appropriation	1,148,000 00
Bounties on lead	300,000 00
Railway subsides, minimum (maximum $18,000,000)	13,000,000 00
G. T. P. Railway (Mr. Blair's estimate)	120,000,000 00
Canadian Northern Railway	10,010,000 00
Subsidies to bridges in the province of Quebec	150,000 00
Quebec city bridge	6,678,200 00

Increase in civil service salaries.	80,000 00
Bounties on binder twine	50,000 00
	$256,280,704 63

Knowing all these things, and the other important items to which I have drawn your attention, is it not strange that the government should have deferred calling this parliament together until the 12th of March? If they decide to go to the country, I do not think we shall have the misfortune of having this government to call parliament together again ; but if they do not go to the country, I as a western man want to enter my strong protest against calling parliament to meet at such a very late date.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that this House was not called together sooner, and whatever government may be in power, I hope it will see its way clear to call the members together earlier in the year in future. I think, Mr. Speaker, that you more than any other member of the House will regret the length of the session, because I notice by the British North America Act that you are not allowed to leave this House for forty-eight hours at a time. Consequently you have been tied here while the rest of us have been able to go away. This is said to be the longest session on record in Canada. If this is a long session, I think the people of Canada are long-suffering in allowing us to remain here so long and to spend so much money as we have been doing. I have sat in my seat and listened to many of the eloquent speeches that have been made ; but when I have listened to some of village Hampdens talking for hours and saying so little, I felt like looking at the door for a prototype of the great protector to come in and order that mace to be taken away and the doors to be closed and us to be sent away about our business ; and I thought that if that happened, the country would not suffer a particle. I hope during the recess that members will think well of the subjects they are about to introduce, and so condense and boil down their speeches after this that they will not last longer than fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I desire to take advantage of the present opportunity to correct a misstatement in the press, occasioned, I think, by an inadvertence on the part of one of my colleagues from the North-west at the time the question of North-west autonomy was discussed a few days ago. That misstatement is, I think, calculated to prejudice the minds of people against the demands of the North-west with regard to provincial autonomy. It is to the effect that Mr. Haultain demands compensation for the lands which have been homesteaded. There is no such request in the draft Bill which was presented here about a year and a half ago by Mr. Haultain. The compensation requested was for lands which have been granted to railway companies. I think that was the whole request for compensation for lands.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I call the attention of my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) to the fact that the hon. member for West Assiniboia is referring to a past debate.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is after eleven o'clock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, he has been alluding to a statement in a newspaper.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He alluded to the debate on provincial autonomy.

Mr. SCOTT. My reference is to a mistaken press report which I have seen. I am going to refer to another statement in the press to the effect that Premier Haultain wishes to establish as a province an area of 2,500,000 square miles. That is even a worse mistake than the other. The territory which we in the North-west wish to establish as a province is an area of less than 400,000 square miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). 404,000.

Mr. SCOTT. The present organized territories, with the addition of the district of Athabasca.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). I wish to emphasize what the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) has said about bringing us here so late in the year. I think I know the feeling of business men in the west on both sides of politics. I speak especially for the city of Winnipeg. There are a number of men in Manitoba and the North-west who would like well enough to come to parliament, and who would be useful members of this House, but, when spoken to on the subject, they express themselves about in this way : We would be called to Ottawa in the middle of March and would get back in the month of November. That would be simply ruinous to our business. It is better for us to keep out of politics. I know men who really should be members of this House, but who positively refuse to run, for that reason. I submit that in the ordinary course of business, with our fiscal year ending with the end of June, it ought to be possible to make the returns so as to open the session in December. Then let us have, say, three weeks of sitting in December, adjourn for two weeks, and reassemble in January. By doing this, I believe we could get through the business of the session by the end of March. To have the session during that period would not be a great inconvenience to business men of the west. But as it is at present, it would be simply ruination.

I notice that, with the long distance telephone and the other facilities for communication and transportation a man from anywhere near Ottawa is practically able to carry on his business. I know of five or six lawyers in this House who go home on Friday night, and by means of this and the long-distance telephone, they are able to arrange so that their business scarcely suffers at all. Of course, I do not find fault with that. But the western man is shut out from his business entirely. Unlike by hon. friend from Macdonald, I am perfectly decided in my own mind that this government is going to call us here again before an election, and I am going to ask the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) to seriously consider if he could not call next session early in January.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. James Sutherland). Better start now.

Mr. McCREARY. Well, two weeks' rest might be given us anyhow. But, before this matter becomes a serious one in the west—and it is rapidly becoming so—I would ask that this be considered with a view to arranging to call us together earlier if possible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I thoroughly agree with all that my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) and my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) have said. As my hon. friend from Selkirk remarks, one serious thing about the lateness and length of the session is that it will have the effect of keeping men out of public life who ought to be here, simply because to enter public life would mean ruin to their business. But one point my hon. friends have not touched upon, which I think is of equal importance. It is important, not only that parliament should meet early, but that government measures should be brought down early in the session. You may call the session as early as you like, but if you keep the government measures back for three or four months, you must have a long session, you must have part of the summer taken up. I can realize—though perhaps not fully—that to accomplish this is not easy in all cases. But I think it should be the aim of the country to endeavour to so arrange the business that this can be done. In case you call your session early in January you might leave here at the end of April at the latest if the government business were brought down within two or three weeks of the opening of the session. It is the duty of the opposition, of course, to see to it that grievances are remedied before supply is granted. No government can expect to make great progress in supply until the opposition are sure that all important government measures have been brought down. When these are once before the House, reasonable progress is always assured, unless you have an opposition that is inclined to be unreasonable—and there has been no instance of that during the last seven years.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I am not quite certain that I can agree with the last statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) but I can entirely agree with him that it is very desirable that this House should meet early, that business should be ready, and that prorogation should take place within three or four months of the opening. It must be remembered of course, that we have now a very large country under our jurisdiction—about half a continent—and we cannot dispose of its business quite so expeditiously as we could many years ago. But I think I voice the opinion of hon. members on both sides when I say that it is very desirable that the session should be shortened and that there should be no repetition of this unprecedentedly long session. But I think I may add that the opinion of the great majority of the members of the House would be in favour, not merely of shortening the session, but, that as a help toward that desirable end, there should be a shortening of the speeches. Now, I have myself an opinion as to the cause of the lengthening of speeches, and so of the session. I have seen sessions—I think there are few members who can say the same—with and sessions without a 'Hansard'; and I am bound to say that if we want short sessions one of the most practical improvements that we can make—I am speaking for myself alone and under correction—would be to dispense with 'Hansard.' In other respects I agree with my hon. friend that it is most desirable to meet early, though I do not think it would be possible to meet in December. I think that the first of February is as early as we can hope to meet under our present system, with the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June. But I see no reason why, meeting on the first of February, we should not finish our business by the birthday of Her late lamented Majesty, provided we exercise discretion and speak at reasonable length.

PROROGATION.

To these Bills the Royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General, as follows :

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

An Act for granting to His Excellency certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 30th June, 1904.

to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the third session of the ninth parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from further attendance after an unusually long and laborious session of parliament, I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the assiduity you have shown in the discharge of your onerous duties.

The session now closing will long be remembered, not only for its great length, but also for the many useful and important measures that have been enacted, all tending to advance the prosperity of the country.

The unprecedented number of private and public Bills that have been passed during the present session may be taken as an evidence of the great industrial development that is going on throughout the Dominion.

A steadily expanding revenue has enabled my government not only to materially reduce the debt of the Dominion, but also to submit for your approval numerous grants for useful public works, in addition to liberal subsidies for the extension of our railway system, which contributes so largely to the development of our country.

In view of the flow of immigrants now seeking homes in Manitoba and the North-west Territories and of the rapid increase of products requiring facilities to reach the markets of Europe via Canadian ports, and in order to promote the settlement of the great areas of agricultural, mineral and forest lands still untouched in the older provinces, my ministers considered it essential to obtain authority from parliament for the construction of a second transcontinental railway, the eastern division of which should serve as a common railway highway from Winnipeg to the maritime ports of Canada. It will be the duty of my ministers to proceed immediately with the necessary surveys so that the work of construction of that portion of the line which extends from Moncton to Winnipeg, may be prosecuted with all possible speed.

The Act authorizing the transfer of the powers heretofore exercised by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to a permanent board of commissioners who will have supreme control over the administration of the railways of Canada, will, I have no doubt, be hailed with much satisfaction.

The difficult task of readjusting the representation of the people in the House of Commons, in accordance with the British North America Act on a basis not open to fair criticism has been accomplished in a manner that I trust will prove satisfactory to the electorate.

The subsidy granted by parliament for the establishment of a line of steamers affording direct connection with France will, I have every reason to believe, result in a largely increased trade with that country.

The amendments to the law relating to the naturalization of aliens will have the effect of removing the disadvantages under which Canadians desirous of returning to their native land have hitherto laboured, and will also materially facilitate the naturalization of the many settlers seeking homes in Manitoba and the territories.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In taking leave of you may I express the hope that the sacrifices you have been called on to make by an attendance on this protracted session may be rewarded by the reflection that your labours have been productive of great benefit to the Dominion.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Thursday, the third day of December next, to be here holden, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the third day of December next.
