The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden). Although, as you have been reminded by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan), we have been here for something like seven months, still I think that the importance of the question of defence is so great and the estimates for that purpose which are being asked this year are so considerable, that it is proper we should take up a short time at least in discussing the present position of our militia force, and the intentions of the government with regard to it. The two items 29 and 30, more especially item 30 will cover the ground upon which I propose to speak. I think it will be more convenient that the general question should be discussed in a single statement rather than divide it up into the different heads suggested by the items in the estimates. The objects for which the militia force was established were first to aid the civil power, to maintain order, and in the second place to repel invasion or attack from without. The militia is the force of Canada upon which the government rely for assistance in maintaining order, in carrying out the laws of the country, and in maintaining the integrity of our Dominion, if attacked or threatened. These are the purposes for which the militia force was originally established. These are the purposes for which it should be chiefly maintained. Occasions may arise in the future, as they have in the past, when temporarily the militia may be used for other purposes ; but as I have said, these are the main objects for which the militia was organized. I think there is no need of any argument to satisfy this House that a militia force is necessary. I am sure there is not a single man in this House who will not agree that such a force is necessary, and that the force we have has done good service in the past. It is true that peace and contentment reign everywhere in Canada at present, but we cannot forget that we have been threatened in the past from without, and even on more than one occasion raids have been made on the soil of Canada, and also on more than one occasion the hand of the rebel has been raised up within our own country against its government. We have enjoyed during recent years great prosperity in Canada. There has been extraordinary development of our resources and of our wealth. In fact the development since confederation to the present has on the average been most satisfactory, but with that development and growth our responsibilities have increased also. I propose, in the first place, to call your attention to what has been done in the way of expenditure on the militia since confederation, and I might premise by saying that at the time of confederation there was an understanding—although not a written bond—between this government and the imperial authorities who gave us our constitution, that there should be an annual expenditure of something like a million dollars a year on our militia. At that time our revenue amounted to about $13,000,000. To-day it is five or six times that amount, so that if a million dollars were a proper sum at the beginning of the confederation to spend on our militia, we can see that a very much larger sum might properly be expended now. Of course I do not mean to say that pari passu with the increase of revenue, the expenditure on the militia should increase.

But I do say we have no excuse for not expending all the money that may be necessary to make that force efficient. I have here a table showing the expenditure upon the militia since confederation, beginning first with the period of four years from 1868 to 1871, inclusive, and then going on by decennial periods. As will be seen, the table shows not only the total expenditure, but the expenditure provided under main heads, and also a column showing the average expenditure per head of the population per year. I have had an actuarial calculation made for each year since confederation down to the present time, based upon the censuses that have been taken. I have included last year and the current year, ending 30th June, 1904, estimating the expenditure on the basis of the best information available :

* Estimated.

It will be seen that during the first four years after confederation the expenditure varied from $761,000 in the first year to $1,400,000 in the last year, which was the year of the Fenian raid. During that period the expenditure per year per head of the population was 32 cents. For the next ten years, from 1872 to 1881 inclusive, the expenditure was something like $1,000,000 per year, and the per capita expenditure was 27 cents. The next decennial period included the North-west rebellion, but the expenditure amounted to about the same, 32 cents per head of the population. Of course, in the meantime the population had increased from about three and a half millions to about four and three-quarter millions. Then, for the next decade, from 1892 to 1901, inclusive, the expenditure reached 41 cents per head. For the last three years —1902, 1903 and 1904—the last estimated on the best information available—the average expenditure per capita is 55 cents per head of the population. These figures do not include the expenditure on account of public works devoted to militia purposes—drill halls, armouries and so on. But, including these amounts, I find that during the first four years there is practically no change, the expenditure still remains at 32 cents per head of the population; during the next ten years there is a slight increase from 27 cents per head to 29 cents per head; during the next decade, up to and including 1891, there is a further slight increase from 32 cents to 37 cents per head; during the next decade, up to and including 1901, there is an increase from 41 cents to 43 cents. But, during the last three years, the average expenditure per head of the population is brought up to 60 cents.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Does that include the cost of the South African war ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, this covers every dollar of expenditure, direct and ordinary, for the militia, including the expenditure on the Fenian raid, the North-west rebellion and the South African war. It also includes the expense of maintaining the garrison at Halifax. It will be seen that the estimated expenditure for this year, including expenditures upon public buildings for the militia, amount to 68 cents per head of the population of Canada.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That includes an expenditure of $1,200,000 on capital account?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, for the current year. I find that the expenditure for this year, 68 cents per head, has been exceeded only twice since confederation, viz. :—In the year 1900, when it was 70 cents per head—this, of course, including the expense of the South African contingents—and in 1886, when it was 92 cents per head, this being the year during which nearly the whole of the expenditure in connection with the North-west rebellion was made, when the expenditure for the year on ordinary account, including the North-west rebellion, amounted to $4,055,000. I thought that these figures would be interesting, and would enable us, perhaps, to see exactly where we are with reference to the expenditure which this country is making in connection with military matters. From my point of view, it is very gratifying to find that we have made this increase, that we are getting nearer to what I believe, and what I think the best citizens of the country believe, is our duty with reference to military matters and questions of defence. How much further we may be prepared to go, I cannot say. But I feel sure of this, that this parliament and this country will be ready to support the government in expenditures of this kind, so long as those expenditures are wise, and the development of the militia is carried on under wise rules and proper directions.

Now, I propose to discuss for a moment the expenditures which are now before the committee. I shall not now speak of the expenditures on account of public works for militia purposes, because these matters have already been discussed in the committee, when the estimates of the Minister of Public Works were under consideration. The expenditures are divided into ordinary and capital, and that division, I think is obviously correct. The ordinary expenditure, of course, should be taken out of consolidated revenue, as it is the expenditure for the ordinary maintenance of the militia. The capital expenditure is special. It is chiefly for new armament, to some extent for rifle ranges, and, perhaps, the acquisition of lands for military purposes. This particular vote of $1,300,000 will be chiefly for the purpose of purchasing arms and ordnance and for purchasing equipment and clothing as a reserve. At the present moment we are inadequately armed. There are less than 40,000 rifles in this country whereas we need at least 100,000, and I believe we should have many more than that in reserve. Our field artillery is inadequately armed ; we should exchange the present guns for up-to-date weapons. Our garrison artillery is inadequately armed ; in many cases the armament is absolutely worthless and useless. That should be changed and we propose to change it.

I may be asked : Is $1,300,000 going to do all this ? Certainly not, but it is going to make a commencement. I may be asked —and it would be a fair question—what appropriations do you propose to ask in the future ; what is your policy with reference to expenditure on capital account ? I propose to anticipate this question. I have no hesitation in saying that I think this vote will have to be repeated four or five times in order to place the militia in a proper and safe position particularly with respect to armament. When we come to vote the various items I will be able to state to the committee, at least approximately, the disposition which it is proposed to make of the money.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand that this present estimate covers an additional arsenal ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it does not. It includes an amount of $75,000 for reserve ammunition.

As I said a moment ago, I believe that the people of the country and this committee, while willing to give money freely for the benefit of the militia force, will be anxious as to its expenditure and will justify the granting of considerable sums such as we are asking only after being satisfied that the plan of expenditure is the wisest that could be adopted. This I think is the proper moment for explaining in a general way the scheme which we have in mind. One or two sessions ago I stated to the House that I looked forward to having in the near future a force of 100,000 men in Canada which might be called upon at any time and which would be ready within a brief period whenever its services might be required. I am happy to say that reflection and the experience of the last year or two lead me to believe more strongly than ever that such a force can be counted upon and that it can be counted upon without very much increase in the expenditure on consolidated revenue account. The scheme briefly and roughly outlined is this: That we shall proceed as we are doing now with an enlistment of say 40,000 or 50,000 of this 100,000 men, this enlistment to be called a peace establishment. Of that 40,000 or 45,000 probably at least fifty per cent, that is twenty-five per cent of the whole 100,000 of the establishment, shall be asked to do annual drill; that all the officers and non-commissioned officers for the total force of 100,000 men shall be required to do annual drill, and that the twenty-five per cent or less of the 100,000 men, say, 22,000 men who will be required to do annual drill, shall be selected men, men who will represent—if I am not making use of a term that is objectionable to some of my friends—the skeleton of the force of 100,000 men.

In connection with a force of this kind it will be absolutely necessary that you should have all the departments of an army properly represented. You cannot put an army into the field unless you have the means of supplying them with food, clothing, arms, transportation and everything that is necessary for their comfort in the field, and in order to do that you must have permanently established in time of peace all the departments which you would require in time of war. This is an essential not only at headquarters but in every one of the whole twelve military districts of the Dominion. We now have too, in this country, I am happy to say, an efficient permanent force, perhaps not as efficient as it ought to be, but a force which has done, and is doing excellent work. This force was created for the purpose of educating the active militia; it supplies the teaching power from which the officers who will have charge of this force of 100,000 men and also the non-commissioned officers and the selected men will get their training. Every man who reflects will realize that the most important point in order to bring about an efficient military force is to have the leaders, whether they be officers, non-commissoned officers, or selected men, thoroughly trained and ready for action at any moment. This is an important and vital part of our scheme. Then the question would be asked: What are you going to do with the other 60 per cent? You have some 40 per cent enlisted for what you may call a peace footing, but where are the 60 per cent and where are you going to find them when you may require them for active service? Our proposal in regard to the 60 per cent is that they shall be enlisted for the requirements in time of war, but that in the meantime they shall not be required to drill unless they choose to do so, but that they shall be taught the use of the rifle and shall be given rifles and ammunition to use at their homes or at convenient points, that they shall be enrolled so that when an emergency arises they can be brought in and incorporated with this 25 per cent which I have referred to, and which shall be the flesh and blood, so to speak, to be put on the skeleton which will go to make up the army. That is roughly an outline of the scheme. I may say, in passing, that we have done a good deal already towards looking after the 60 per cent, the 60,000 upon whom we have to call to make up our army to 100,000. We have already inaugurated a system of rifle associations. We require the men who join these rifle associations to sign a bond or agreement to serve if required in war. We are at present doing this and we are giving them an opportunity to learn the use of the rifle by giving to each association of forty the use of ten rifles. We have established first-class rifle ranges all over the country, and I am glad to say that we have something like 20,000 men now enrolled in these rifle associations. During the last four or five years we have constructed rifle ranges in nearly all of the important centres of Canada. We have in this city the Rockliffe Rifle Range, which is one of the best rifle ranges in the world. We have rifle ranges at London, Hamilton, Niagara, Toronto, Kingston, Montreal, Three Rivers, Sherbrooke, Lévis, St. John, N.B., Fredericton, Campbellton, Moncton, Bedford near Halifax and in British Columbia, and so I might go on.

Mr. GOURLEY. Any in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. Give us the points.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is one at Bear river, one at Aldershot, and there are one or two in Cumberland county. I am not quite sure whether there is one at Truro or not.

Mr. GOURLEY. I was just wondering.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, we must have one there.

Mr. GOURLEY. I hope so.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have also adopted the principle of issuing free ammunition. Six or seven years ago the annual consumption of ammunition was between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 rounds, last year it was between six and seven million rounds, and I am happy to say in this connection, that we have increased the capacity of our cartridge factory from a million and a half rounds a year, to something like thirteen million rounds.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). How much miniature ammunition was issued free?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000

rounds. In order to carry out the scheme of education and training which is the very groundwork of the efficiency of our militia force, it is proposed to establish a central camp at a convenient place in the interior, where all the officers of the force and certain representatives from every corps in Canada may be brought together, a ground large enough to enable military evolutions to be carried out to some extent as they would be in actual warfare, a camp ground which would probably embrace from 20,000 to 30,000 acres of land. To this central camp the permanent force would be brought, and there the plan of education which I have outlined and upon the importance of which I cannot too much insist, would be carried out in the best possible manner. It is not proposed to give up district camps. On the contrary, it is hoped that we shall be able to extend the ground for the camps in the different districts so that the officers and non-commissioned officers who have learned their work at this central school will be able to return to their own districts, and there have an opportunity of teaching the men with whom they are more immediately associated. It is intended I may say in this connection, to increase the number of mounted men. They should at least be trebled and probably quadrupled. There are certain districts of this country, the eastern townships, points along the frontier in different parts of Ontario, and in the North-west especially, where this force can be easily enlisted, and where you can get a class of men who will go into the cavalry who would not think of joining the infantry. It is proposed to utilize these men in this way.

Now, perhaps, this would be as convenient a moment as any to discuss the question of the pay of the militia. I have read some reports in the newspapers and I have heard some statements in this House as to the views of some of my hon. friends connected with the militia upon this question. This is not the first time it has been discussed. I have expressed my opinion in regard to it on more than one occasion, and I would say, while the pay may not be all that we would desire, that in view of the fact that our means are limited, and presuming a strong loyal feeling to exist among the young men of this country, it was not unfair to expect them to be prepared to accept what is only an indemnity, and was never intended to be anything more than an indemnity to go up to camp for twelve days, provided they are put in a position not to be subjected to a direct loss.

That is the idea upon which the pay of the force was established, and I think it is a sound idea, and I am bound to say it has worked fairly well up to the present moment. I have said, and I repeat it, that I think something in the way of an additional amount might be given to men who served well in camp, for the second and third years of their turning out, and so on up to five or six years of their service. I would be in favour of recognizing, by some such method as that, good conduct and zeal in acquiring military knowledge. At the present time, however, I may point out that we are not in a position to do this, because the militia law prescribes the pay, and we have no power to go beyond it I hope, when I have an opportunity of bringing down amendments to the Act, that some changes may be made in this regard. I wish to go a little further with regard to this question of pay. I have been at pains to examine the results of the training during the past year, under what is known as the skeleton system, the system of turning out only enough men to keep up the organization of the different companies and regiments. And while I find that only in one or two places was there a lamentable failure to respond to the call to camp, I find that upon the whole——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Nothing personal, I hope.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Oh, no, nothing. I speak of camps and not of individuals. I find that, taking the whole of the camps together, the result was about as good as the result, for instance, in the year 1900, when the whole of the militia was called out. I will go further, and I will be able to show that if the camp at Niagara is left out of the computation, then the average this year was very much above the average of the year 1900. Why it was that the battalions failed to turn out at the Niagara camp I do not know. I presume it was because labour was in such demand, and that people had so much to do at home that they could not take the time to go to camp. Just here let me make this observation. I am not at all sure, in fact, I doubt very much, if it is desirable that this parliament should vote money for the purpose of taking men away from the avocations which demand their attention. We know what a demand there has been for labour this last year, and how impossible it has been to get labourers. Would it be in the public interest that the government of Canada should enter the labour market as a rival to bid against the agricultural and other industries of the country. I doubt it very much, and I am not disposed to recommend such an extreme step. I go further, and I maintain that if the sum fixed by some of our friends as the proper amount of pay, namely, one dollar per day, had been offered this year in the province of Ontario, you would not have filled up your camp at Niagara much better than you did.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). May I ask if the minister has the figures for London district, No. 1 ; he mentions specifically the camp at Niagara ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am going to mention them all. I am going into these details only for the purpose of trying to learn some lessons, if possible, and not at all for the purpose of making any reflections on the Niagara camp. But I wish to point out the extraordinary fact that in the camp at Niagara 44 per cent of the officers who were called into camp, did not materialize. If the officers are not interested enough to go to camp, how can you expect the men to go ? Is it very much wonder that 48 per cent of the men did not turn out at Niagara ? Was it because the officers were not getting enough pay that they did not go ? I have heard no complaint of that kind. You cannot make the argument apply to the men and not apply to the officers. I have taken a good deal of pains to have a tabulated statement prepared, showing, first, the number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men who were called out for duty last year ; secondly, the number who actually trained ; and thirdly, the number who failed to respond to the call.

I find that in the London camp, district No. 1, 34 per cent of the officers failed to turn out; 4 per cent only of the non-commissioned officers failed to respond, and 26 per cent—which is only a little under the average—of the men failed to turn out.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Does the hon. gentleman show any distinction between the infantry and the cavalry in these figures ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. I have not been able to do that. In Niagara district, No. 2, 43⅔ per cent of of the officers failed to turn out ; 25 per cent of the non-commissioned officers failed to turn out ; and 48 per cent, or practically half, of the men failed to turn out.

At Barriefield, Kingston district, Nos. 3 and 4, 15 per cent of the officers failed to turn out ; 19 per cent of the non-commissioned officers failed to turn out, and 29 per cent of the men failed to turn out.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the camp at Deseronto, an artillery camp. What happened at Deseronto ? Every officer turned out, every non-commissioned officer turned out, and all the men but four turned out. Out of 574 men called, 570 turned out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Did they get any more than 50 cents a day ?

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). They got pay for their horses.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly they got pay for their horses, and nine-tenths of these men hired their horses and paid the full dollar, and some of them more than a dollar a day for the horses. There is an important lesson to be learned from this, and that lesson is, that the artillery is a technical branch of the service ; a branch of the service that requires education and application, or the men cannot get on in it. The officers are trained and educated men ; and the men, having been interested by their officers in their work, have turned out for precisely the same amount of pay that the 48 per cent of the Niagara camp would have got. There is no distinction as to the pay. While I do not wish to reflect on the infantry—because I know very well that both cavalry and artillery have greater attractions for officers, non-commissioned officers and men than has infantry—yet I wish to make this point, and I do it in all kindness and with every appreciation of the trouble which infantry officers have. I believe it would be possible for them to make the work of their men more interesting than they do. I believe that the scheme which I indicated the other day, of having constructed for every single unit of the force throughout the Dominion a good home, at a convenient place, where the officers and men could meet, where the men could come in the evening without interfering with their work, and where the officers could deliver lectures to the men and promote good fellowship and interest among them, would do ten times more for the force than voting to them a dollar or a dollar and a half a day.

But to continue this comparison. I find that at Three Rivers 25 per cent of the officers failed to turn out, that every non-commissioned officer turned out, that only 11¾ per cent of the men failed to turn out. That is to say, while at Niagara 48 per cent of the men failed to appear, at Three Rivers they all appeared except about 12 per cent.

Mr. MONET. Do I understand from these figures that the attendance in the province of Quebec has been better than in the other provinces ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe it is. Coming to the maritime provinces. I find that at Sussex 19 per cent of the officers were absent, all the non-commissioned officers attended and 43 per cent of the men failed to turn out.

Mr. HENDERSON. What percentage of those expected to come out actually came ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is exactly what I am giving. In No. 9, Aldershot camp, a little less than 5 per cent of the officers, 14 per cent of the non-commissioned officers and 29 per cent of the men failed to turn out. In the other camps, lumping the small camps together, 10 per cent of the officers, 21 per cent of the non-commissioned officers and 34 per cent of the men failed to turn out.

Now, I wish to call your attention to the last full camp that was held. I mean by full camp the camp where the whole enrolled militia were called out. That was in 1900, and I propose to make a comparison of the results this year, under the system of skeleton drill, with the results in 1900, under the old system of calling out the full regiment. I find that in 1900, of the whole rural militia of Canada, 25 per cent of the officers failed to turn out, and that non-commissioned officers and men put together —I have no means of separating them in this return—show 21 per cent absent.

Coming back to the return which I read a moment ago, I find that, taking these two together and making a general average, in these rural camps an average of twenty-six per cent of officers as compared with twenty-five per cent—only one per cent difference—failed to turn out. And taking the non-commissioned officers and men and adding them together, twenty-four per cent failed to turn out this year as compared with twenty-one per cent in 1900, only a difference of three per cent. If you omit from the calculation for this year the abnormal condition of things at Niagara, if you leave the Niagara camp out of the calculation altogether, you will find that only twenty per cent of the officers failed to attend and only nineteen per cent of the non-commissioned officers and men, which is a better showing than that of 1900. The figures are there to speak for themselves and I think they are unanswerable.

Some comparisons have been made between the city and rural militia. The city militia have been charged with the expenditure on their magnificent drill halls and armouries and we have been told that the rural militia have nothing to place against these. This was done, I think, in a debate to justify the argument that we should pay the rural militia a dollar a day and keep the pay of the city militia at the same rate. It was pointed out by my hon. friend that it was true the city militia gave every cent of their pay into a common fund.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Most of them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yet, notwithstanding that, it was argued that, in view of the splendid accommodation they got and of the fact that they had their drill at night, which did not interfere with their days work, we should discriminate by increasing the pay of the rural militia without increasing the pay of the city militia. I dissent from that view. I think we must treat all alike. While the city militia may have some advantages in the respects I have mentioned, they do give up their pay, they are always on hand, and are the first to be called upon in the case of any trouble.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Let me say one word of explanation. I urged very strongly that the pay of all the militia, including the city, should be increased, but that if the funds were not sufficient, then the increase should apply to the rural corps for the reasons I gave on that occasion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not see how we could discriminate. I wish to point out further to my hon. friend that the rural battalions are provided with tents and transportation and are fed, and I do not think it is fair to charge against the city battalions some of the extravagant expenditures of which both the late and the present government have been guilty, in the erection of armouries, which are altogether more expensive than were necessary. I do not know that I should go any further into this question of pay except to say this, that I am looking carefully into the subject and feel disposed to go upon the lines to which I have referred. I feel disposed to ask that increased pay be granted for good conduct to men who turn out regularly and show an intelligent and earnest interest in the force. One of our great troubles—and I am sure it would be just as great if it were a dollar a day—is that a man will attend one annual drill and then get a good job and you will never see him again. I want to do something if possible that will foster military ardour and encourage our young men to join the militia and complete their term of service, and I propose that encouragement should be given in the shape of a reward to those who have done continuous and faithful service.

The question of the pay of our permanent force has been mentioned, and I was to day asked a question with reference to it. I can only say that the position of the permanent force has been enormously improved within the past three years. A pension law has been passed, under which every man who serves in the permanent force will be taken care of in his old age. Formerly men who had served until they had become too old, men who had done good work and had risen to the rank of sergeant or sergeant-major had to retire without any pension. I have a case this very year, in which I am asking parliament to give a gratuity to a sergeant-major, who served the best of his days in the permanent force, who had gone beyond the age limit, and had to retire without any allowance. Thank heaven that disgraceful state of things is at an end; and now our permanent force men will be getting something more than forty cents a day and their clothing, lodging, rations, &c. If they are faithful to their duty and remain in the corps, they are certain of being taken care of, in some sort at any rate, in their old age. I would also like to point this out to the men of the permanent force, if they are sufficiently interested to read what I am saying. It is open to any man in our permanent force to rise to the highest position in the militia. I am happy to say that we have to-day officers in the force who began their military career as privates in the permanent force of this country.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Can the hon. minister give us a few names ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I could give one or two, but I do not think it worth while.

Mr. THOMPSON (Halidmand). Lieutenant Butcher, recently appointed, is one of them. Each one of these men carries his marshal's baton in his knapsack.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Are there a number of non-commissioned officers who have served in the regular army and are now employed in the permanent corps ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think there are. I would apply the principle in existence now in the North-west Mounted Police. Have a rate of pay for the first year and increase it every year of good service up to a proper point. That is the reform I would propose in connection with the permanent force. But, Sir, we have not only to consider the men, but we have to consider the non-commissioned officers and officers. I am prepared to admit at once that the pay of the non-commissioned officers is insufficient and should be increased, and must be increased. And the same is true with regard to the officers. We should give the officers at least as good pay as is given in the British army. I think we should give them better pay. That is a matter to be considered. But here, again, let me point out what has been done for the officers as well as for the non-commissioned officers and privates of the permanent force. We have established a pension law. It is true, we call upon the officers to contribute. They contribute five per cent of their pay. But upon retiring they get a most generous pension. And not only this, but if anything happens to them, if they are killed or die, their widows and their children are taken care of. So our officers of the permanent force are very much better treated than they were before.

I am sorry to find I am occupying so much time—I thought I should finish in half an hour. But I wish to proceed upon the line I have just mentioned and devote a short time to pointing out what has been done in the way of improving the condition of the militia, and what is about to be done. I will only name some of the changes which have been made. I have already mentioned the pension law. Let me refer to the limitation of the term of commission. Let me refer to the establishment of the reserve of officers. That was being done, I think, by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) my predecessor, about the time I came in. It had been arranged for, but I am happy to say that I have had the satisfaction of carrying it into force and insisting on its being done.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman is not now referring to the permanent force ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, but to the whole militia. The term of an officer in command of the militia to-day is limited to five years. When I came into office there were about fifty colonels who had been serving forty years more or less giving no opportunity whatever for a young man to rise, and taking away every inducement almost for a young man to enter the militia force at all. Now we have the enforcement of the age limit. We had colonels away beyond the age limit, we had captains away beyond the age limit, we had majors away beyond the age limit, and lieutenants—why I myself knew some lieutenants who were over sixty. It is now possible for us to get rid of these well-meaning gentlemen who, no doubt, have served their country very faithfully. The lieutenant who was sixty had no opportunity to rise, because his colonel, who was seventy, had been in command for thirty or forty years, and the major, who was sixty, had held his place for about as long. Of course, I am not finding fault, but simply pointing out the fact that this was the condition of things which actually existed and which, I am happy to say, has been absolutely changed, so that, to-day we have, as a result of these promotions, given the younger officers who enter the force the reasonable hope that, within eight or ten years they will be occupying high positions in their regiments if they deserve it.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask a question ? Is that change necessarily in the interest of the militia ? It is since that change was made that we find the complaints that we have only the skeleton of a militia turning out. May not this have been a detriment to the force ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I tried, in my opening remarks, to answer that question by pointing out the scheme. And I may say that this is a scheme which Lord Dundonald, who is a skilful soldier, absolutely approves, that we should reduce the nucleus down to the lowest possible point for the purposes of economy, perhaps, to some extent, to enable us to use the money for other purposes. Lord Dundonald maintains, and I agree with him, that it is absolutely possible to do the work necessary in order to provide the nucleus of a force of 100,000 with the skeleton system of sending out twenty-two or twenty-three men out of each company.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the term of office for a colonel is limited to five years ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, but there is a regulation by which, upon the recommendation of the district officer commanding and the further recommendation of the general, the tenure of office may be extended by one, two, or three years, the limit being three years. It may happen that there is no major—the second in command—qualified to take the colonel's place. And it may be in the interest of the force—and it must be shown to be in the interest of the force—to extend the term of command for not more than four years.

Mr. INGRAM. Military qualifications to be the only requisite ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The only requisite, so far as I know. Another reform effected under the present regime is to insist upon annual camps. We have had annual camps ever since 1896. In my opening remarks I spoke of the importance of an army having all the departments of a working force actually in existence in time of peace, and doing in time of peace the work that they would be required to do in time of war.

In this connection, we have inaugurated a system of medical service under the supervision first of Colonel Neilson, and now under Lieutenant-Colonel Fiset, who distinguished himself so greatly at Paardeburg. We have organized bearer companies. There was not one in Canada before. We have field hospitals. There was not one in Canada before. We have an army medical staff, which did not exist.

We have organized an intelligence branch of the service which did not exist before, for the purpose, as the committee knows, of collecting the information that might be necessary for the commanding officers to use in time of war. In connection with the intelligence branch, surveys are being made of the thickly-settled parts of the country, and I hope to be able to get the necessary funds to make an accurate military survey of the country, which will be most useful. This is a thing that is done in every other country. I hope to see maps prepared and placed on sale in the book-stores, which will be of immense benefit to the people of the country and to people visiting this country.

We have organized an army service corps which previously did not exist. This is under the supervision of Lieutenant Colonel Biggar, who had service in this connection in South Africa which has been of great advantage to him and who has taken a special course at Aldershot to fit him for the position. I believe he is a most efficient officer. In connection with the army service corps, instructions are being given in every military district, lectures are given before the camps and a small permanent staff has been established.

Then we have the ordnance branch, which is now being created for the first time in Canada. This is, of course, very largely the old stores' branch of the Militia Department, which has been under the direct control of the minister. For years and years, certainly for the last ten years, a change in this respect has been advocated. It was altogether an anomalous condition that the stores, rifles and articles of that kind should be under the control of the civil head of the department. I had not been very long in my position when I was impressed with the force of that statement. We have now adopted the English system; we are creating an ordnance branch, and have appointed Colonel Macdonald, the very able and worthy head of the old stores' branch, to the important post of head of the ordnance branch, placing him under the supervision of the general officer commanding. As under the British system, he is still under the control of the minister, but he is under the supervision of the general officer commanding.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Does that cover all the stores ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That covers everything.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. But he does not buy them ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the minister to say that the ordnance branch is under the supervision of the general officer commanding as well as of the hon. minister himself.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have adopted the phraseology of the English Order in Council, which says that certain departments shall be under the control of the general officer commanding and that certain others shall be under his supervision.

Mr. INGRAM. In case of a conflict with respect to the management of this department between the general officer commanding and the minister, what would occur ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a case that would scarcely arise. The Order in Council provides that the minister, if he chooses, may consult the head of a great department such as the ordnance department, the administration of which involves great expenditures of money and important questions of policy. In the English service this applies to the quartermaster general as well, and to one or two other similar positions in the War Office. I think it is convenient to follow, as far as possible, the course of the War Office in this, because it is desirable that our organization here should be as nearly as possible like that of the War Office.

We have also established an engineering branch, and I have been able to secure as the chief of the branch Major Weatherbee, a graduate of the Royal Military College at Kingston. Mr. Weatherbee has just returned after having taken a long course in England to fit him for this position. He has as his assistant Captain Maunsell, whom I found in the service, who was appointed by the hon. ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), and is one of the most efficient officers in the service.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with my statement, I wish to make a short explanation as to the percentage of the 100,000 which I said would be turned out in camps annually. I think I said that it would be somewhere between 22 and 25 per cent. I meant that statement to refer to the rural militia. Of course I think there are in the cities from 12,000 to 15,000 men enlisted in the ordinary way, and the 43 per Company will all drill in the cities.

To resume the consideration of the changes and improvements that have, or are about to be made in the state of the militia : before recess I concluded my reference to the engineer branch. I come now to that of military secretary. We have never had in this country a branch of that sort, although it has always existed in the war office in England. Lord Dundonald suggested to me some time ago that this would be advisable, and I found that we had what I believed to be a first-rate man here at Ottawa now at the head of the Medal Claims Board, whose employment as military secretary would not involve any additional charge upon the revenue, as he is already paid for doing the work as head of the Medal Claims Board, and is quite willing to take up the additional work involved in the discharge of the duties of military secretary. I simply mention this as a fact of some importance, and also as a departure not involving any additional charge upon the treasury. I refer to Lieutenant Colonel Smith, who was at one time district officer commanding No. 1 district, who has been here for some years, who has done very valuable work, and who is acknowledged on all hands to be a very able military man.

Mr. INGRAM. A first-class man.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The next thing I desire to mention is the establishment of a school of musketry, and I wish to give the credit for this to the general who preceded our present general, General O'Grady-Haly. It was at his suggestion that this school was started, and I can assure the committee that in my humble opinion it is one of the most valuable adjuncts to the militia of Canada that has ever been made. This school—I need not describe it—is going on here under the very shadow of this building. There have been this year two terms of the school already held at the ranges here, where there is every opportunity for the men and officers who are there to learn the art of rifle shoooting. These are the men brought together from all parts of the Dominion — officers, non-commissioned officers and men in each of the two schools—who are to be the teachers of the active militia force throughout Canada. You can easily understand how important a departure this is. I have already referred to the increase in the number of rifle ranges and to the large number of rifle associations which have been organized under the ægis or encouragement of this school, and under the direct superintendence of the commandant of the school, Lieutenant Colonel Cartwright, who has done, I am bound to say, magnificent work as the head of that school, and who deserves the highest consideration from the militia generally, and from the people of Canada.

Next I wish to refer to the establishment of a school of signalling. Signalling is something which has not been done to any extent worth mentioning in the militia of Canada. We have sent an officer to England who is to take a special course to fit him to take charge of the teaching of this school. Whether he will take command or not I do not know. I refer to Lieutenant Lister. I have a vote in the estimates which will come before the House shortly for the purpose of organizinig this most valuable school—the school of signalling—which I believe will be located here side by side with the school of musketry.

Before leaving this branch of the subject, I would like to refer to two important changes which have been made in the civil branch of my department. I refer to the establishment of a contract branch under the supervision of Major Benoit, an old officer of the department, one who has been private secretary to Sir Adolphe Caron, a man who has been in the department for 25 or 30 years, and who is a most valuable officer. He has been secretary of the department. He will be changed from that position to the position of head of the contract branch.

I wish to refer to another most important change, as I view it—the establishment of a central registry in the department. Hitherto we have had three or four or five different registries and confusion, as the business of the office has increased in magnitude, has continually arisen as the result of the great number of offices of registration. Those have all been done away with, and now we have one central registry where every document or letter or anything that comes into the department, whether on the military or civil side, is registered, and where, if any paper is wanted, it can be obtained at almost a moment's notice. This office is under the control of Mr. Jarvis, who has been for some time in the department, who is a most valuable officer, who, I think, was private secretary to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), and whoever brought him here deserves well from the people of this country, because whoever brought him brought one of the very best men that could possibly be found, a man who has done most valuable work in the department.

There is one more thing to mention in this connection, and that is the establishment of a library. If we are to have educated men up to date officers, we must have books for them to read, and I have asked for a small vote—it is a very small one—as a beginning in a small way to provide for the establishment of a military library here in connection with the headquarters staff, and the department generally.

Now, I come to another branch of the subject, the permanent force, and I wish to point out a few changes, or rather additions, which are to be made in the force. I have already pointed out that we are transferring the stores branch of the militia to the military side, and changing it into an ordnance branch. All the storemen and officers connected with the stores department in the different districts throughout the country will become members of the permanent force, will be enlisted and therefore will be directly under the control of the different officers of the department who are here at headquarters or in different districts.

We are to have two new depots in the permanent corps ; one in the city of Montreal where we will have one company of infantry and a section of garrison artillery ; probably 200 men in all. This is a most important departure, and I believe it will be of great use to the militia in that section of the country. Montreal is a great city ; perhaps it might be fairly called the commercial centre of the Dominion of Canada ; it has a very large population, and it is desirable that the military spirit should be cultivated in that city, and that we should establish there a branch of the permanent corps.

Another depot is to be established at Calgary, North-west Territories. The North-west Mounted Police is being moved gradually northward, and it is proposed that a mounted corps of the permanent force shall be established at Calgary to replace the North-west Mounted Police. This corps will be named after the Strathcona Horse, which distinguished itself in South Africa. We have at this moment in the permanent force in Canada, units representing all the different corps that served in South Africa, except the Strathcona Horse; and it is proposed now to do honour to the memory of the man who rendered that magnificent service for his country, in sending out at his own expense a regiment to South Africa, and to do honour to the memory of the corps itself by perpetuating their name and fame. Therefore, a depot of the permanent force, consisting of probably a hundred mounted men, will be located in the North-west Territories and will be called the Strathcona Horse.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I omitted to refer to the engineer branch of the permanent force. As we have made the ordnance a branch of the permanent force, and all the employees, soldiers of the permanent force and under military control ; so we propose to have in every military district, or rather as a part of every military depot of the permanent force, a small section of engineers. There is no engineer force to-day in the permanent militia force at all. We have a few scattered companies of engineers. It is a most important thing to have an up-to-date, educated and thoroughly trained engineer force, and we want a section of it in every one of the depots in the Dominion. The strength of this force will be about 100 ; so that we will have 100 ordnance corps, 100 engineer corps, 200 Montreal depot, and 100 Strathcona Horse, making in all 500. I cannot hope to have all of these established during the present year, but the ordnance corps and the engineer corps, and I hope the Strathcona Horse will be established within a very short time.

Now, Sir, I wish for a moment to speak of the state of the militia generally. Notwithstanding the criticisms which have been vouchsafed against the militia, and notwithstanding the failures, perhaps lamentable failures in some respects, I believe that as a whole, as a going concern, as a machine fit to do work if called upon ; the militia force is in fairly good condition to-day. I think that was pretty amply proven two or three years ago in the despatch of the contingents to South Africa ; in the preparation within a fortnight of a force of one thousand men scattered over 2,000 or 3,000 miles of territory ; and in the despatch later on, of artillery and cavalry within a space of perhaps three weeks. All this has shown that there is some vitality in the Canadian militia, and some power to do its work, notwithstanding that some of the camps have seemed to be lamentably small. I maintain that as a going concern the militia is in a far better shape than it was ever before, and is in a fairly satisfactory condition. But much more can be done ; much more must be done, and it must chiefly be done in the line of educating and training the leaders of this force. This is the direction in which I think we should chiefly expend our money. If we had an unlimited amount of money to train 100,000 men, I daresay it would be a better proposition to call them all out and spend our money, and have the force up to date in every particular. But we cannot do that. It is a question of doing the best we can with the money we have, and I think the amount of money we are asking from the people for the militia this year, is perhaps pretty near the top of what we should ask in the near future. If that be so, we must be content with perfecting the different departments of the militia ; we must be content with affording the very best possible means for the education of the officers, non-commissioned officers and selected men ; we must be content with supplying the sixty per cent whom we are not asking to turn out to drill, with rifles, with ammunition, with targets, with instructions in the art of shooting.

But I think that the idea which I have put forward—which is Lord Dundonald's idea, which is the idea his predecessor approved of—of having turned out annually to drill, all the officers and non-commissioned officers, and a skeleton of the men ; I believe that this means you will get a fairly effective skeleton upon which you can put the plastic material, the flesh and blood, out of which you could make an army. Some one has alluded to the shadow of a skeleton. Well, I beg to dissent from that view. It would have been more correct to have said a skeleton from which some of the smaller bones are absent—and a good many of the small bones seem to have been absent in one or two of the military districts in the western part of Ontario. As to the flesh and blood, as to the plastic material, the 60 per cent that we propose to utilize to fill out this skeleton, and make it strong and stalwart and able to defend ; I can point with confidence to the evidence that has been given by the militia men of former days ; the men who engaged in repelling the Fenian invasion ; the men who engaged in putting down the two North-west rebellions ; the men who volunteered for South Africa and won glory for their country ; the men who were second to none in heroism; the men who never turned their backs upon the foe——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have unbounded confidence in the capacity of these men, if we give them an opportunity of learning how to use a rifle, that they will fill up the ranks, and provide the flesh and blood, the plastic material, that round out this skeleton and make an army fit for duty whenever it is required.

I have already referred to the importance of housing the militia. If we want to make the infantry force of this country what it ought to be, we must provide for every single unit, every company, sufficient accommodation for at least 100 men, where they may meet together and spend their evenings, using it as a sort of club-room, and having blackboards and other means to educate themselves in the art of war. If you do that, you will excite renewed interest among the men, and you will get together and get the sympathy of the very best men in the community. You will not then have to worry over the question whether you are to pay them 75 cents or a dollar or fifty cents a day. It is not the money that brings that class of men out. It is the loyal spirit in them, and the desire to serve their country ; and all they will ask is the opportunity to acquire the necessary knowledge in order to do so.

I would like to say one word with regard to the Royal Military College. This is an institution of which we are all justly proud. It has sent men to fill prominent places in the British army. I think there were something like a hundred officers, graduates of the Military College, taking part in the South African war ; and one or two of them greatly distinguished themselves there, and are to-day occupying in that country positions of very great responsibility. In 1896 the Royal Military College was almost in the throes of dissolution. There were scarcely a baker's dozen in the college. There were not more than half a dozen graduates. To-day, instead of having to look around and ask for young men to come to the college, we have the agreeable fact staring us in the face that the young men have to compete to get into the college. Whereas formerly the classes were composed of ten or twelve or less, to-day every place in the college is filled, and each year at the examination there are half a dozen or a dozen more young men who are anxious to get in. Only a day or two ago I had a letter from a gentleman in Canada whose son has a commission in the British army, in which he sent me a quotation from a letter which he had just received from his son telling him in what high estimation this college was held in England and in the British army ; and well it might be.

I am happy to be able to say that whereas during the early years of my administration we could hardly induce a graduate of the college to come into our force, to-day we have a considerable number of graduates in the permanent force of this country. This is because they see that the force, to some extent at least, is being cared for, and that there is some future for it, and also because we have provided a generous pension fund which will insure the care of the men after they have passed the years prescribed as the limit of military age. We have to-day in the intelligence branch three or four graduates of the Royal Military College, which is most satisfactory to me. It is all very well, and we cannot regret very much, perhaps, to see our young men going into the British army and taking prominent places there ; but I must say I would very much prefer seeing them remain at home and endeavour to work out the problems which we have to solve in this country, the solution of which need their assistance.

I wish to refer to the recent establishment of a rifle factory in this country. I think hon. gentlemen will all agree with me that it is important that the militia force of this country should be as far as possible a self-contained as well as a self-reliant force, and that we should be able to manufacture our own rifles as we are manufacturing our own ammunition. Our rifle is not precisely the same as the service rifle in England ; but there is practically no difference, while the ammunition used is exactly the same. So that if a British force were fighting alongside of ours, or vice versa, no difficulty could possibly arise from the fact of their using two slightly different rifles.

Then, as I have stated, we have enlarged our arsenal. Formerly the cartridge factory at Quebec was turning out in the whole year as many cartridges as the Woolwich arsenal was turning out in one day. To-day we are able to turn out, or will be before this year is through, 13,000,000 rounds of cartridges, as against 1,500,000 seven years ago. We have established, in connection with the arsenal, a school of gunnery. We are not only making cartridges for rifles, but we have put in the necessary plant to make shells and all the projectiles required for the use of larger guns, and we are constructing a building at a cost of some $30,000 for the purpose of a Dominion school of gunnery.

We are devoting more attention also, as far as we can under the present condition of the law, to the encouragement of cadets. I am sorry that we are not able to do more; but we are prescribing systems of instruction, and we are sending drill-sergeants whenever requested to do so, and to some of the older classes we have been able to supply rifles. This is only a beginning. I recognize in the cadets, the young lads at school and college, the material which will make up the future army of this country if it should ever be required for serious work. That is the time to make the impression on the young mind. Three or four weeks of drill and training at that time will do more good, I was going to say, than an equal number of years after a man has reached the age of twenty-five or thirty.

In this connection perhaps I may say a single word as to the militia law. Early in the session I gave notice that I would introduce a Militia Bill. A Bill was prepared, but I was asked later on, through the colonial office, if I would go to England and discuss certain changes which I had made up my mind to introduce; and I might have gone if I had known that we were going to have such a long, interesting and pleasant session as this, and might have returned in time to introduce my Bill. But I did not know that and consequently thought better to leave the Bill over to another year.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the hon. minister not think he will be able to bring it up yet this session?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I shall consider that. I do not think it is desirable, perhaps, that I should go into the question of what I propose in the Bill, under the circumstances. When the time comes to introduce it it will be time enough to discuss its provisions. In conclusion, I have only to say that I hope the committee will not consider the programme which I have laid down as too ambitious. I believe it is a programme which can be carried out, and I have every confidence that if this or some similar line of action is proceeded with it will be possible for us to have within a measureable period—I would say five years at least—one of the best militia fighting organizations on the face of the earth.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Last year, when discussing militia matters, I used the following words, which I shall quote as expressing my feelings at present:

> I shall make my remarks on this subject entirely free from politics, and entirely free from any fault finding, even if there be room for finding fault. It is my opinion, as I have often said before, that the militia should be kept entirely out of politics. It is above and beyond all politics. Of course, it must to some extent have a political bearing because the minister who controls our militia for the time being must belong to one or other of the political parties, but so far as I am concerned I will exclude politics as much as possible from the consideration of this question. If I have any fault to find with the Minister of Militia, or with the manner in which the contingents were despatched to South Africa, I propose to do as the Liberals do in the old country: viz., keep my criticism until the war is over and then bring the minister to account. I intend to show to the people of the world that whatever our political disagreements may be in Canada, we are ready and willing to show a united front in defence of our country and of the empire, and to leave complaint and criticism until we have conquered the enemy.

I do not propose to bring any politics into the discussion to-day. At the same time, if I find it necessary or desirable to indulge in any criticism, I shall not be debarred from doing so through the fear that anybody would think I was moved by political reasons. I would just say one word about politics and then drop that subject altogether during this discussion. I want to warn my hon. friend the Minister of Militia that he will have to be very careful, very strong-minded and firm in order to keep politics out of this question. He will have to stiffen his backbone and make his will stronger if he is going to do that effectively, because I think, in spite of the glowing picture he has given us of the state of the militia to-day, there are some difficulties which require to be remedied. I do not propose just now to take up the propositions of the hon. gentleman, because that can be better done at a later stage in the few remarks which I propose to make in connection with this most important matter. We have had three very important events within the year, with which our military organization has some connection. We have had the South African difficulty ended, and we have had a Colonial Conference and a new Major General to take command of our forces. The South African peace having been accomplished, now is the time, as I said in my remarks last year, for criticism. Fortunately that war is over and we contemplate with pride and sorrow the lonely graves which mark the valour and endurance of our young men who gave up their lives for the maintenance of the empire and the credit of Canada. Our heroes who survive have returned and taken off their war paraphernalia, and you would scarcely know them now from the other individuals gathered throughout our country, but, in common with their dead comrades, they will ever live in the hearts and memories of Canadians for the valour they displayed and the evidence they gave the world that Britain no longer stands alone, but is surrounded by her children, ever prepared, when the call is sufficiently urgent, to unite and uphold British unity and the glorious principles that underlie the British constitution. Before proceeding to discuss the Colonial Conference, I wish to make some reference to the militia report. I think we may congratulate ourselves upon our good fortune in getting so distinguished and gallant a soldier as our present Major General to take command of the militia. He has been with us now sufficiently long to enable us to appreciate his work. Before coming here he had some experience of the militia of Canada, because he is one of the ablest soldiers which the great empire found it necessary to send to South Africa. I propose to read some extracts from his report, so as to show where we stand in connection with those very important matters to which my hon. friend the Minister of Militia has alluded. In his report he says :

I have proposed that in future the regimental establishments of the active militia shall be at war strength, each unit containing in addition within itself the germ of a reserve. These proposals have met with your general approval, and I am now drawing up the establishments which, when complete, I will submit to you

I may say that in his report he gives no explanation about the result, but my hon. friend has given us some insight into that. The Major General proceeds to say :

These camps of instruction covered a total period of twenty-five days, the whole of which I devoted to the personal supervision of the training, visiting each camp in turn.

As men who have only nine working days in the year to learn their duties as soldiers and non-commissioned officers cannot afford to spend any of that time on ceremonial, I arranged that instruction should be entirely devoted to practical work.

The officers and men under instruction worked with great zeal and intelligence, and though the system was in many cases quite new to them, they picked it up very quickly, and the tactical exercises engaged in towards the end of the training were useful in showing to all ranks how much they had still to learn before they could be considered efficient soldiers, let alone non-commissioned officers qualified to instruct and lead others.

Observation at these camps has shown me that the Canadian soldier takes the greatest interest in anything which his intelligence proves to him is of real practical benefit. Therefore, I propose in future to leave out marches past and ceremonial, and instead to convert the camps practically into schools of instruction for fitting the soldier to take the field, with not one item in the programme that does not make for fighting efficiency.

Though the rural militia contains a large proportion of earnest, self-sacrificing officers and men, it does not satisfy the requirements of a national defence force. Nominally it is a body of men who engage to serve for a period of three years. As a matter of fact it consists and always has consisted of a number of regiments which are almost recruited afresh every time they are called out for training. Large numbers of entirely raw men enlist before the particular training and are perhaps never seen afterwards, no real effort being made to compel them to fulfil their engagement, owing to powers of compulsion being quite inadequate for the purpose. Consequently it is impossible to carry instruction beyond the most elementary stages. Such a system is unduly expensive and ineffective from a military point of view. So small is the rate of pay, and so unsatisfactory have been the conditions of training, that the best men do not enter the militia as they might. From this it follows that the non-commissioned officers also are to a large extent insufficiently qualified for their posts, nor can they command ready obedience from the soldier when, as in many cases, they are quite ignorant of the very rudiments of their duties. Numbers of men go out to camp as non-commissioned officers without any previous training whatever, and the proportion of these men who are new to the rank on such occasions shows clearly that there is a want of continuity in the personnel of the units.

As with some of the non-commissioned officers, so it is with some of the officers. Many have evidently not studied their profession sufficiently to act as the leaders and instructors of their non-commissioned officers and men. I make suggestions, later, on this matter.

Self-instruction by means of books, lectures to their men in well-appointed comfortable armouries (when these are provided) during the winter, and thoroughly practical work in the summer months will, joined with the excellent spirit which pervades the officer class of the Canadian militia, soon, I anticipate, produce the required result.

Material.

There is a great deficiency of all kinds of military stores and material essential for active service. This deficiency should be made good in time of peace.

It is absolutely necessary that the regulation allowance of every article of equipment required for mobilization of companies should be at company headquarters, for regimental mobilization at regimental headquarters.

Though there appears to be almost a sufficient stock of camp equipment for the existing units at their present strength, there is certainly no reserve available for the large force which would have to be placed in the field in time of war.

City Corps.

The city regiments, under the present organization would as a whole be the easiest to mobilize, but even they cannot in any sense be said to approach a state of readiness to take the field. They labour under the greatest difficulties and disadvantages. They all suffer from want of field training, owing to the fact that they get practically no camp experience. The allowances for instruction are too small ; so, in the most efficient of the corps much of the necessary expense has to be undertaken by the officers and men instead of by the public. This unfair expense causes the loss of many good officers to the country. Many corps suffer from want of proper accommodation in the way of armouries, &c. Deficiencies of this kind have either to be made up by private effort or the corps must suffer.

Army Service Corps.

This branch of the service has been started this year. Of the four skeleton companies authorized, two are now complete and another is in process of organization. Lieutenant Colonel Biggar and two non-commissioned officers were sent to Aldershot where they were given every advantage by the authorities to gain information on army service corps work.

Since his return to Canada, Lieutenant Colonel Biggar has conducted a six weeks' course of instruction at Montreal with the company there, with satisfactory results

He goes on to speak very highly of the school of musketry, and I think I will read part of that, because I consider that one of the most important improvements that have been made :

School of Musketry.

Courses of instruction were held during the months of July and August at the Rockliffe Rifle Range. The number of officers and non-commissioned officers taking the course totalled sixty, this being double the number that attended the same term of the previous year. Of these 31 officers and 22 non-commissioned officers obtained certificates.

Under the able and energetic command of Lieutenant Colonel Cartwright, the inspector of musketry and commandant of the School of Musketry, great progress has been made in the past year in extending and popularizing the knowledge of rifle shooting throughout Canada. The history of the new rifle clubs shows a steady growth, and the value of the work done by the School of Musketry, not in the teaching of shooting, but in the teaching of instructors in shooting can hardly be overestimated, even though its work is as yet on a small scale

I read these things, not merely for the information of the House, but to get them on 'Hansard,' where they can be seen by the country. Because we get too little out of this report. A number of military gentlemen get it, but the country generally seem to get very little knowledege of it. He speaks of the cavalry thus :

I have issued a memorandum on the training of the mounted troops of Canada, and also a new syllabus of instruction. I have assimilated the equipment and training of all branches of mounted troops.

I am preparing instructions for the militia on their training, dealing in particular with musketry, field engineering and field work generally.

Referring to the cadet corps, he says :

This branch of the national defence system might easily be of the greatest value to the country, but from various causes it is at present of little account.

The results of the present system compare very unfavourably with what has been achieved in Australasia.

The whole cadet corps question requires to be considered and reorganized on workable lines, as the youth of the country are splendid material now lying waste from the military point of view.

Arrangements should be made to furnish every cadet corps of a certain strength with proper instruction.

These extracts give us knowledge not only of the condition of our militia, but of the capacity, industry and enthusiasm of the Major General Commanding. There is not a detail so small as to escape him, and there is no matter so difficult that he will not undertake its improvement. I say again we have to congratulate ourselves that we have in command a man whose record and reputation we have every reason to be proud of, and not only that, but a man of straightforward common sense, a man of capacity and indefatigable industry. It will be the fault of the department and of the people of Canada if he does not make a success of the militia, and I prophecy that with the proper assistance he will do so to a very large extent. Now, let me read an extract or two in connection with the Colonial Conference, which shows to what extent the government committed this country on the question of defence. Here is an extract from the report of the Canadian government to the Colonial Conference :

But while thus calling attention to the progress that has already been made by Canada in her militia organization, the ministers are far from claiming that perfection has been attained. If defects exist, there is every desire on the part of the Canadian government to remove them, and for this purpose the advice and assistance of experienced imperial officers will be welcomed and all reasonable efforts made to secure an efficient system.

In conclusion, the ministers repeat that, while the Canadian government are obliged to dissent from the measures proposed, they fully appreciate the obligation of the Dominion to make expenditures for the purposes of defence in proportion to the increasing population and wealth of the country. They are willing that these expenditures shall be so divested as to relieve the taxpayer of the mother country from some of the burdens which he now bears ; and they have the strongest desire to carry out their defence schemes in co-operation with the imperial authorities and under the advice of experienced imperial officers so far as this is consistent with the principle of local self-government which has proved so great a factor in the promotion of imperial unity

At that time also we had some important information showing the expenditure per capita of the different colonies, including Canada, in connection with defence, showing that Canada had the lowest rate of expenditure, per capita, and only about one-fourteenth that of the mother country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What did they give as the per capita expenditure of Canada ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Two shillings. That would be about the average up to this year, according to the figures given by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Pretty nearly.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I will not trouble the House with these figures. My object was simply to show the position that our government took with regard to this matter. I think that in these militia matters we should support any proposals emanating from the government unless we find in them something very wrong. If I find the government proceeding upon wrong principles, I am prepared to call attention to their errors. But the government represent the whole country for the time being, and they have committed the country, directly or indirectly, to the empire in regard to this matter. Therefore, I think both sides should support the government, except where the government is clearly and widely wrong ; and those who may not be quite satisfied can wait until they get into power to improve upon the government's proposals. I quite agree with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) when he said :

Taking all these quotations together we find an absolute pledge given by our representatives for militia betterment, a pledge given on an occasion of grave importance, reduced to writing, mistake or misunderstanding an impossibility.

That brings us to the main question, the state of the militia at the present time and the proposals made by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence for its betterment. I must say that his presentation of his request for increased expenditure and of his very broad and ambitious scheme for the improvement of the militia of Canada is of very great interest and requires a great deal of consideration. For my own part, I am prepared to join with parliament in approving of an expenditure even beyond what I might myself consider necessary if those in charge of the militia of this country considered it necessary for the advancement of our national defence. While this scheme is of such magnitude that it will startle some people, there is no question that if it is practicable and is properly and carefully carried out it will lay the foundation of a magnificent scheme of defence. On general lines I approve of the policy proposed, but, when I do so, it must be understood that we are not relying solely upon expenditure, and that this expenditure will be supplemented by successful work in other lines. If we are to have an effective system we must be prepared to face the expense, but my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence must not forget that, if we are to entrust him with this very large sum of money, the expenditure of that money must be supplemented by efficient instructions, work and results, so that we may have a proper and sufficient actual fighting force, supplemented with the same sort of reserve. Owing to the South African war and to other troubles which my hon. friend mentioned, he must remember that the expenditure on a peace footing has been very much less than the larger sum he now asks, as all of the present estimates for the militia are on a strictly peace footing, and I admired the courage and straightforwardness of the hon. minister when he said that we will have to stand this increased expenditure for three or four years.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Probably five years.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. My own opinion is that if we embark on this scheme and it can be made a success, it is probable that the annual grant required will never become less. I am not afraid of such an expenditure, especially if the country continues to make progress at its present rate. I believe that if such an expenditure as this is worth while, we should undertake it at once and with our eyes open. With the great development of our industries, production and population, with the prominence that is given to great imperial and colonial matters in the old country, I am most optimistic with regard to the future of this country for no country under heaven to-day offers the inducements to the immigrant that Canada does. We have seen a great colonial minister resign from the highest place that the ambition of man can contemplate in order to fight the battle of closer union between the various portions of the British empire. That battle is of the utmost importance to Canada for when it is won we will have an illimitable market, a market for more than we can produce for scores of years to come, and we will have flowing to our shores all the immigration we desire, and the best immigrants in the world. I do not agree with my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who the other day said that we will in a few years to come ship wheat from Port Arthur into the United States because the population of that country will increase in that time by 20,000,000. If this closer union between the empire and the colonies takes place we will be more likely to see immigrants coming in large numbers from the United States into Canada than to see immigration flowing into the United States from any other country in the world. We should do our share in promoting closer relation with the motherland. We should not halt at the tariff preference which has been granted by the Canadian government to the British people. but back up the efforts of the great Imperial statesman I have mentioned in his efforts for mutual preferential trade relations between the empire and the colonies. Back him up not only by sympathetic words but by acts as well. While this government declined to take up the question of defence on the lines submitted by the imperial authorities, they pledged themselves that they would see to it that our militia would be improved and we should not be deterred by the fear of expense from fulfilling that pledge. Therefore if the Minister of Militia and Defence goes on with this scheme on the lines suggested, carefully and with a view to the best interests of the militia, I should say that the scheme was a good one. If we are to have a militia force it must to some extent be commensurate with what would be required by the experiences of war. While the enlistment should be smaller than what would be necessary in case of war it is very wise to have all of these auxiliary services, munitions of war, clothing, medical supplies, and camp equipment, in an efficient condition. Not only must we have a full supply of materials but these must be supplemented by proper instruction of those who will have charge of and those who will use them in call of need. All of this will cost a great deal of money. Owing I presume to the large appropriations for which he has had to ask for other purposes, the hon. gentleman has not asked an appropriation for the additional arsenal which he promised us last year or the year before. The hon. gentleman is committed to it but we can wait for it a short time as it is one of the most important requirements of our system of defence.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think I should state, and I forgot to state this, that there is a company now which has approached the government with the view of establishing an arsenal at the city of Ottawa if they can make a contract for the supply of a considerable amount of ammunition.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I would not commit myself to the city of Ottawa, but I am glad to hear that it is to be in Ontario. The place it should be located would be a matter, I presume, that the hon. minister and the Major General would be largely responsible for, but it is a matter that requires very careful consideration and therefore I am not prepared to commit myself to any opinion upon it on short notice. I will say, however, that it should be somewhere well west in Ontario. I am very glad to hear that the hon. gentleman is making some progress in that regard. I do not propose to discuss the details of these different votes now because we will be able when we come to consider them in detail to procure any information which the hon. minister has not supplied in his remarks. The most serious matter of all to be considered is not the establishment of these auxiliaries. I want the hon. gentleman and the government to be seized fully of the responsibility which they are undertaking in asking for these very large sums. That parliament will grant them I have no doubt. The proposal of the government commits us to these expenditures for years. It is a new departure and it is a scheme which at every step should be most carefully considered because those who follow it will be committed to it, and if there are any mistakes in regard to it the country will be committed to them. This is a comparatively easy thing compared with what I am coming to presently; that is the providing of the material for the militia, and the question of how it is to be evolved and how the supply is to be maintained. You can establish all these auxiliary services without any trouble. Nearly all of them will be in the charge of paid men, because those who are in charge of them must be capable of discharging the duties of their positions. The great problem of the militia is in regard to what are called our citizen soldiers. I agree that you cannot make the militia force what it should be and what it is in most countries where it is efficient without establishing these auxiliary services. We have to pay out the money if we are going to have them. But, that is not the difficulty and that is not the hon. gentleman's difficulty now. I call attention to that because I am not satisfied with some features of the hon. gentleman's proposal for reasons which I will give the hon. gentleman presently. I am not saying that I am at all prepared to oppose this vote or to oppose this proposal. It is my hon. friend who takes the responsibility, but I want him to be seized of the difficulty of the problem which is to raise and keep up even the skeleton, if you call 40,000 men a skeleton, and to get the reserve and keep it. Without this we will simply be wasting the money. We had better accept the doctrine of the timid member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that we should only provide a police force and put ourselves at the mercy of any country that wishes to step in. I cannot accept that doctrine. I have been brought up in a different school. I believe that what is worth having is worth fighting for. You do not look to see what your chances are if you are a man. You will stand up any way and if you are going to lose your life you will do it in defence of what is worth fighting for. I congratulate the hon. minister on his courage at all events because it requires courage to come down and ask for this large expenditure. It requires still greater courage to admit that this is not for this year only. He has presented it in a way that is proper in such matters as this. I want to call his attention to the fact that this is laying down a wide foundation financially. The people will hold him and his colleagues accountable for it or they will give them credit for it, but the easiest part of the problem is to get the money and to spend it. The difficult problem I am coming to, and it is more than the question of the pay of the militia. Last year the hon. minister promised us a reserve sufficient to make a total of 100,000 men. I will come to that presently. He gave us to-day what I think was a rather optimistic statement of the result of this year's camp and of the state of the militia. The ranks of city regiments have always been and are filled. They have advantages in a way. At the same time you see what the Major General said; a good deal has to be learned to prepare them for the field. The difficulty with them is the counterpart of what it is with the rural corps. They can drill and assemble together in their drill halls as often as they please, but unless they go away and do some general work they would have a hard time of it if they were turned out suddenly. That can be mended without any great difficulty, but something or other is the matter with the rural militia or else figures and numbers do not speak correctly. My attention was called to this, though I had thought of it before, more strikingly by the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson). Let me say to him that it is very gratifying to find a young member of parliament, with our strong party affiliations, standing up in the way he did and expressing his views as a soldier and as a member of parliament at the same time. He stated what probably some persons might think very unpleasant truths in regard to the militia. I commend him for it and I paid more attention to what he said on that question under the circumstances than I might otherwise have done. He talks of the state of the camp. I have taken the trouble to prepare some general figures and whatever explanation the hon. Minister of Militia may have made in defence of the Niagara or any other camp I do not think the figures bear him out. The hon. member for Haldimand and Monck said :

> Am I not justified still further in the assumption that once let the cabinet be convinced that the militia is not even stationary but actually retrogressing this cabinet pledged to Britain for improvement, and it must and will gladly meet the situation and destroy the danger?
> Well Sir, in all seriousness, after due consideration and recognizing the importance of the assertion, I say here to-day in my place in parliament that the militia, so far as the rural part thereof is concerned, is in infinitely worse plight to-day than it was two years ago, and that in my opinion another year under present conditions will utterly demoralize it.
> The reason is not far to seek—it lies in the fifty cent daily wage.

I do not entirely agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) that the entire cause is attributable to the pay, but I do agree with him that the pay is too small. I approve of the suggestion of the minister that the pay should be graded by the number of years of service ; but in view of the condition the force is in at present, I think it would be wise to increase it at once to 75 cents a day for the first year, and then to scale it up according to the years of service. Like Colonel Thompson, I know the rural militia well. It is true that for some years they have not been turning out as they used to. These men do not want pay in the sense of being hired ; but, all the same, they do not like to be out of pocket. The first-class men, and that is the kind we want, will not put up with the camp fare, and as they supplement their rations out of their own pockets, they very often find that they are at a loss. It may be said that they should put up with the camp fare, but you will find that men who have the spirit that the minister refers to will not do so. Even members of parliament have looked for an increased indemnity, and so it is through all walks of life ; things have changed since the 50 cents a day rate was established. I have the figures here for 1896 and 1897, the last year before the minister came into power and his first year in office, and the difference is very startling.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The camp in 1896 was under my direction.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The report is signed by the Hon. Mr. Dickey.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know how that can be. The camp in 1896 was not held until September.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. However, that does not matter much, because the previous years to 1896 would make a still worse showing for the minister. The details of the establishment ordered out in 1896 are that the officers and men called out numbered 12,710, and there turned out 11,910, or 800 short. In 1897 there were 10,719 ordered out and 9,970 responded, or a deficit of 749. The rural and the urban battalions were not distinguished in the statement presented by the minister to-day.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The criticism of my hon. friend from Haldimand was directed to the rural battalions, and not to the city battalions.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Quite so. In 1902 the minister ordered out 22,897 and only 7,937 came out, and 14,960 failed to respond.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a mistake. The number ordered out in 1902 was much smaller than the number ordered out this year. There were only 15 per company, instead of 21. Only one officer per company was ordered out in 1902, and this year all the officers were ordered out.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I am taking these figures from the blue-book, which is headed 'Returns showing the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, men and horses trained during the year 1902 in district camps.' The total of officers called out was 1,905 ; the non-commissioned officers and men, 20,902 ; and the total number that received twelve days' training was : Officers, 881 ; non-commissioned officers and men, 6,932. Then there is a summary at the end.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What does the summary say ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It gives the same figures for the district camps, and it shows the turn out at local headquarters, which was a splendid one.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There must be something wrong in the heading of that statement. The fact is, no matter what the table shows, that in 1902 only 15 men out of 40 men per company were ordered out, and only one officer per company. Whoever made up that statement has made a mistake. I am very sorry that mistake has occurred ; but, as a matter of fact, less than half were called out in 1902 as compared with this year.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). If my hon. friend will permit me, I may say that in the camp at Niagara, which I think was the same as any other camp in that year, only one officer and all non-commissioned officers per company with the regimental staff, with twenty-one privates per regiment, the last named for fatigue duties only and not for drill, were called out, so the number could not possibly be as stated in the report.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. All I can say is that that is the statement, and it should be corrected if it is not correct.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is wrong, there is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Take the figures of this year; 15,904 officers and men were ordered out and 12,009 turned out; that is about three-fourths.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is the usual percentage.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Add to that, from the same table, the whole of the city regiments, numbering 11,754, and you have only 23,763 men out of our total force of 40,000. When you could not fill up the small call you made this year, it was because there were no more men that you could muster.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. But my hon. friend will see that we only called out 15,000 and 12,000 responded.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. It is my hon. friend who does not see. The fact that you called out only 15,904 shows that you had no more left or you would have filled up the ranks. If you are 25 per cent short of your number, are you going to count all those who are absent as if they were there? Suppose you want for active service a certain number of men, and you tell the commanding officers of the different regiments to bring out so many men; they make a call for as many men as they can get until they secure the required number.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Take the case of one company of 40 men. Of these 21 are called out. The captain of that company selects these 21 men. My hon. friend assumes that because all these did not turn out, none of the residue, if they had been asked, would have gone. That is the exception which I take to his argument.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I have been a captain and a colonel, and we do not do any such thing. In that statement Colonel Thompson will bear me out. We say we want so many men, and the word goes out. The necessary number do not turn out. Would we march away without seeing if we could get any others? Not at all.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Unfortunately, as a rule, the officers of the rural battalions, of one of which I have been a member for a quarter of a century, do not get their men until the morning they are starting for camp; and it might be that they would not have an opportunity at the last moment of replacing those who failed to turn out.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There is no use of our discussing this matter. I say that when you want 21 men out of 45, and you go away with 5 men short, it is conclusive proof that the officers either do not know what they are about or have no other men.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is conclusive proof that five men who promised to go do not go; that is all.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The trouble with us is always to get enough men. If there were trouble something different might occur, because you could recruit new men. I know that when the old battalion in Norfolk went to camp, the boys did not start without getting every possible man to make up the required number. The captains were humming around for ten days; and, as Colonel Thompson complained, and I sympathize with him, ten days is too short a time.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Another thing, which may be due to the shortage the hon. gentleman speaks of, is that very often the battalions go into camp with half the number made up of recruits. It was not so formerly. I remember that for years Colonel Davis, the hon. gentleman's predecessor in command of the 38th and 39th battalions, used to march to camp with 300 or 400 men, according to whether he had six or eight companies. I say you have only 12,000 men whom you can turn out in the rural districts on an ordinary call for a camp; and your reserve, which was to be 60,000, amounts to only 10,000. Colonel Thompson's figures—and I agree with them—show that the rifle associations would not amount to over 10,000, apart from those belonging to the force. I speak of them from knowledge of several clubs in my own riding. The hon. gentleman spoke moderately and temperately, as he always does, because he did not want to be unduly severe in his criticism.

I say that this is an unsatisfactory and alarming condition, and the minister ought to look into the organization of these rural battalions. I hear things which he may not, but he is responsible and should take timely warning. I tell you, Sir, that the politicians are busy to-day in our militia. When I was in the active militia, the colonels in command—and I have no doubt the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) follows the same course—were always careful to make each corps as non-partisan as possible and to give promotion to every man who deserved it without considering his politics. I was not a member of parliament then, and we did not care anything about members of parliament. If an officer went courting favours from a member of parliament, he was not allowed to stay very long in the force. There are evidently difficulties of some sort which embarrass our militia system, there is a lack of inducement to our young men to join the militia, as has been shown by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) in the very temperate and measured speech which he made on this subject some time ago, and which could only have been prompted by his sense of duty and his responsibility as commander of a regiment. Whether the trouble lies in the district headquarters or whether it is the politicians who are at the bottom of it, there is an alarming state of affairs, as the hon. member for Haldimand pointed out; and if the Militia Department cannot discover the cause at headquarters, the hon. minister cannot say that he has not been warned by commanding officers and also by one who, although his time of service has passed, still takes a keen interest in the service and is always anxious to promote its efficiency.

In the speech which he made last year the hon. Minister of Militia thus referred to the report of the Major General, for that year, to which I had previously called attention :

> Now, I will endeavour, very briefly to refer to some of the matters which the hon. member for South Norfolk has brought before us. In the first place, he has referred to the annual report of the Militia Department, and more particularly to the report of the Major General.
> I am sure those who will take the trouble to read that report will agree with him, as I do, that he has not spoken in too high terms of praise of it. While, perhaps, in some of its details, or, possibly, in some of the conclusions of the Major General, I cannot literally concur, I say that in the main I approve of all that he has said.
> I think it is a convenient thing that the Major General, the head of the militia for the time being, should always have a free hand in placing before the people of the country his own views as a professional soldier upon the question of defence, and therefore, during my term of office, and I think it has been the custom in the past, the Major General of the day has had a free hand to express his real and genuine views in reference to the condition of the militia of the country and in reference to what he thinks ought to be done to improve the condition of the militia.

But what I object to, and have protested against is the refusal of the hon. minister to submit to the House the special report by the general officer commanding to the minister himself. Last year the hon. minister committed himself upon the principle of giving the Major General a 'free hand to express his real and genuine views in reference to the condition of the militia and in reference to what he thinks ought to be done to improve the condition of the militia' as I have quoted above, and this year I find in the report of the Major General the following paragraph :

> With this report I have the honour also to forward another special report to which I have given a great deal of thought, and which contains a broad scheme for the improvement of the militia. If the proposals contained in it are carried out, they will in my opinion conduce to the greater efficiency of the militia.

I have twice before this session requested and insisted upon the minister giving the special report of Lord Dundonald, our new and distinguished Major General to the public.

Let me add that the last time I brought this matter up in the House my hon. friend the Minister of Militia offered to show that special report to me or to any member of the House, but I declined to look at it. The ground I took was that it was not a confidential report, that was not declared to be confidential, and the Minister of Militia has no right at his own sweet will to keep back from the members of this House or the people of this country or those associated with the force whatever propositions the Major General may have submitted. I felt indignant at the refusal to make this report public, and declined to look at what should by right be as public to the humblest individual as to any member of parliament. Here is what one of our great independent dailies, the Toronto 'News,' has to say :

> Militia reform is fairly active at present in Canada. Yet it seems to move in spasmodic fashion on uncertain lines, and to suffer from lack of prevision and careful planning. For some time the main activity has been in the organization of the highly necessary auxiliary services. Good work has been done. The army service corps scored a brilliant success at Niagara. The bearer companies and field hospitals are excellent troops. The intelligence department has made a good start, and the ordinance corps should prove successful. Much, of course, remains to be done. The engineer arm is almost altogether neglected, although every day of the South African war showed how indispensable it is. The general officer commanding has no engineer advice at headquarters, and there are no engineers in the permanent force, although an engineer establishment would be of the utmost value to the country for industrial as well as for militia purposes
> The provisicn of auxiliary services falls far short of achieving the organization which the Canadian militia needs.

I commend the hon. minister for having removed some of these deficiencies by the plan he has submitted :

> The unreadiness of the fighting services is appalling. For instance, it has been repeatedly pointed out that the proportions of the cavalry, artillery and infantry are absolutely wrong. One lesson of the South African war was the need for heavy guns and pom-poms. Have effective steps been taken to give our artillery these weapons ? The machine gun is indispensable in the field. When Canada sent an infantry battalion to South Africa, she provided it with two maxims. The second contingent had an automatic gun for each squadron. Yet we have not provided our militia infantry with one machine gun to each battalion. Worse than that—were our battalions to be called out at war strength, it is doubtful whether we could give our men a rifle apiece. We should have an ample supply of ammunition in the country. It is doubtful whether we have more than is needed for target practice.

Many of those defects will be removed by this comprehensive scheme which my hon. friend has brought down, but in this scheme the hon. minister points to something more which the Major General is considering, and what I protest against is that we are called on to vote three and three-quarter million dollars without being informed what the views of the Major General are. The 'News' proceeds to say:

The list of defects in our force could be prolonged at will. Definiteness and coherence of plan constitute the grand need. We do not wish our militia to find themselves ill-armed—or unarmed—and in hopeless confusion when mobilized. We should go about the work as methodically as we would about the building of a new railway. . . . . .

It is precisely in this respect that Canada has shown a singular lack of business method. We have an excellent expert. Lord Dundonald is by far the best general officer commanding Canada ever has had. His particular characteristic is the absence on his part of any desire to professionalize the militia. He has not the slightest wish to set up a little army of imitation regulars. He wishes to establish a system for turning out real citizen soldiers when the need comes. The great feature of all his suggestions which have been made public is their common sense and the way in which they fit into one another—that is, their coherence.

This expert has prepared a carefully thought-out scheme of organization. We may take it for granted that it is a coherent plan, each part depending on and fitting into the other parts. His propositions have been coolly suppressed. The people of Canada have employed Lord Dundonald and they are not allowed to learn what he recommends. The only excuse put forward is that his report is 'confidential.' That is nonsense. Strategical plans may be kept secret, organization cannot. Lord Dundonald's report, according to the portion which was published, deals with organization, not with strategical plans. It should be placed before the people.

Until we know what our expert has proposed, we are working and spending money in the dark. Piecemeal additions, the raising of new corps here and there, are not sufficient. Coherence of purpose and plan is needed. There is a short way to getting that. Let us know what Lord Dundonald recommended.

Then:

The 'Canadian Military Gazette,' after remarking that the Canadian soldier needs training, and is anxious to secure it, 'The Gazette' quotes Lord Dundonald's statement that the 'Canadian soldier takes the greatest interest in anything which his intelligence proves to him is of real practical benefit.' It goes on to say: 'This makes it all the more important that the special report of the General Officer Commanding should not be kept in the pigeon holes of the department at Ottawa. The intelligent Canadian soldier wants to digest it.' 'The Gazette' speaks in high terms of Lord Dundonald, and observes: 'If the special reports of experts like Lord Dundonald are to be suppressed, what is the use of placing an expert in the position of General Officer Commanding. We are simply wasting our money and making ourselves the laughing stock of intelligent people.'

This places the matter in a nutshell. We employ an excellent officer, we get him to draw up a scheme of organization, which, if tried, could not possibly be kept secret, and then we suppress it. For a democratic people we are getting fairly far on the road to autocracy.

Now, I commend these expressions to the minister. I hope he will publish this report. Let us see it; let the people understand it. The hon. gentleman is lessening his own usefulness as head of the force, as well as hurting the feelings of officers and men of the militia, by not letting them know what this report contains. Nor is it just to the general. It is not respectful to the intelligent people of this country that such a state of things should exist. If the report were confidential in anyway or could be considered so, the general would certainly have so stated.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) says that the report to which he refers says it was not confidential. It may not have been marked 'confidential' but I think I am the best judge whether it was confidential or not. The report was a scheme of defence, and was not, in my judgment, such a report as should be published to the world. When I referred to a former report it was to that of General O'Grady Haly, but the very nature of my observations shows that I referred to the ordinary report of the year reviewing the work of the militia of the year. We have done the same thing with Lord Dundonald in this case. He had a free hand. He said what he wanted to say. Not a word has been changed, not a 't' crossed or an 'i' dotted in change of his report. But, besides this, he made a special report, involving a very large expenditure. That report came into my hand twenty-four hours before the whole report had to go to the printer. I had not read it or submitted it to my colleagues, and it would have been out of the question that such a report as that should have been sent to the printer to be published to the world before the minister should have an opportunity of considering it. I have kept that report in my own hands. I have used it and am using it. It was an official report for the advantage of the government of the country. There are parts of it that will be published; I shall have great pleasure in publishing them. But so far as that report involves a heavy expenditure which the government had not decided to make I felt it would be highly improper to publish it, that it is a thing that would not be done in England or anywhere else.

Mr. INGRAM. What did the hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Frederick Borden) say was the nature of this report?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said it was practically a scheme of defence. We had a committee sitting here in 1898, for which we paid a very considerable sum of money, which made a report which has never seen the light of day. It was printed by the Defence Committee under the imperial government. It is something secret. Lord Dundonald's report was of a similar character, and one that at any rate for the time being should be treated as confidential.

Mr. INGRAM. Lord Dundonald said it was a broad scheme for the improvement of the militia. If it is this as well as the other, why not publish the part of it that can be published ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have said that that would be done, and I have given part of it to-day.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman used it in his own speech. But that is not very satisfactory to hon. gentlemen on this side who have had no opportunity to read this report. How can we discuss it when we have had no opportunity to read it ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No one on this side has had it.

Mr. INGRAM. Except the hon. minister himself.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Who ever heard of a minister not having the advantage, and, if he saw fit, the exclusive advantage at the outset, of the advice of his principal technical officer ? Who ever heard of the government not having that advantage ? And who ever heard of such an officer's report being published to the world before the government had had an opportunity of deciding whether they would adopt the suggestion set forth in it or not ?

Mr. INGRAM. I was pointing out the effect of this course. The Major General, who is the chief officer of the Militia Department, makes a certain report to the department. That report is treated as a strictly private matter. The minister may differ very materially from the Major General with respect to the contents of that report. But I think parliament should be in a position to say which, in our judgment, is right.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) thinks it is in accordance with the principles and practice of responsible government that an official of the Militia Department should have the right to put forward his views to the people before the minister has made up his mind whether he will adopt those views or not ?

Mr. INGRAM. I will go so far as to say that there is no use having an expert military man come to this country for the purpose of suggesting what would be in the interests of the militia if his recommendations are not carried out.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I take the responsibility.

Sir F. W. BORDEN.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). I would like to ask the hon. member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) a question if he will allow me. I did not quite understand his remarks regarding politics entering the militia. Did I understand him to say that this was one cause why the force was not in as good a condition as it might be ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. No. I said I thought it worth the minister's while to be careful, to make inquiries lest such a thing might exist; and that if it did exist it might explain some matters that we could not explain otherwise. Now, I would say just one word in reply to the minister. According to my idea the hon. gentleman was not quite correct in his reference to the Major General. The Major General is not an officer of the department; he is commander of the militia. The minister is responsible for his actions, and above him, but——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think he is an officer of the Canadian government.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. He is. But the hon. minister said he was an officer of the department——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, he is. He is certainly not controller of the department, not the 'boss' of the department—not now, at any rate.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The hon. minister told us to-day of his arrangement about the stores department. I said I commended the hon. gentleman for his arrangement for the ordnance stores department. But if the position of the Major General in regard to it is to be circumscribed, friction will arise, and the arrangement will be of little good. I laid it down before and I do it now that the general is under the minister. The minister is under our system responsible. His position is political.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is right.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. And the minister cannot divest himself of that responsibility.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is right.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. When we use the word 'political,' we use it in the sense in which the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck uses it. But this matter is different. I cannot be satisfied without an assurance from the hon. minister that the Major General would ever have put in his general report what he did about the special report unless he were perfectly willing that the hon. minister should show it anywhere, because, judging from what I have heard of him from all quarters, he is the last man who would do anything else. I believe the Major General put that in there not to decide whether it was to be used or not, but to let it be known that he did so. There was one thing that I forgot to mention in my remarks, and that was the singular absence from his report of any mention of the scheme in regard to the reserve, &c., outlined by the hon. minister. That is the reason I read that little clause where he made the single remark about putting every regimental establishment on a war footing and stating that within each unit there would be the germ of a reserve. I knew that the Major General had written something else about that, and it must have been in the report originally, because I saw a Major General's report so barren of reference to the strength of the different establishments and no mention at all of a reserve except in this one little paragraph, notwithstanding that this was the most fruitful of all subjects upon which he could have written. Of course, it is not for him to dictate to the hon. minister, nor will he attempt to do so. However, the hon. minister takes the responsibility, and if he sees fit, he has the might to do so, but in my opinion it is not a case where 'might will make right', but I think it is a great mistake if the Major General is to be made an automaton. If he has anything to suggest to the minister, let us know what he says when it comes to the regulation of the militia. We want a man, and we have got him for a Major General, and it is a grave step for the minister to repress his special report to which he says he has 'given a great deal of thought and which contains a broad scheme for the improvement of the militia. If the proposals contained in it are carried out they will in my opinion conduce to the greater efficiency of the militia.'

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the proper means of communication with this House and with the country from the Major General is through the mouth of the minister, particularly when there is a question of policy involved.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Certainly, it must be through the minister's mouth.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Chairman, while I am ready and willing to admit that there are many admirable features of this scheme which have been outlined by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to the committee, I must confess also that I feel great disappointment, as I am sure every other member of the militia force—at least, that portion of the militia force which is included in the infantry—will feel that the matter has not been dealt with that bravery that we would naturally expect from the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence. I refer to increased pay for the men. We hear a great deal from the hon. minister's side of the House about the growing times. We hear of every department of the public service benefiting by these growing times. Almost every branch of the militia service, according to the hon. minister's own statement, is feeling the benefit of these growing times, and yet what are the bone and sinew of the defence of this country to get from the great expenditure of money that these hon. gentlemen are indulging in?—not one dollar, not one cent. I propose, as far as I can, in my humble way, to bring to the attention of the hon. minister some matters which I venture to hope may at least change his opinions a little, though they may not change his actions. I would first refer to some of the comparisons which the hon. minister has made in his speech to the committee, and which, I think, are not exactly fair. In the first place, reference has been made by the hon. minister to the percentages of the attendance at the district camps, by way of comparison, in the years 1900 and 1903. I am sure the hon. minister must have forgotten that in 1900 the full strength of the different regiments was called into camp.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is just why I made the comparison. I said, to show that the system adopted this year has not been such a terrible failure, I will take a year when the full force was called out, and I will prove that the percentage of attendance this year of those called out is as good, if not better, than the percentage of the whole force when it was called out. That was the point.

Mr. WARD. I think the hon. minister's point is not well taken, because the percentage in 1900 was of the whole force of the militia which was called into camp, while the percentage taken for this present year is only based on the estimate that twenty-one men belonging to the different companies were called into camp. Therefore, the percentage, based on the whole force, would not have the same effect, it seems to me, as the percentage based on half the strength.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Oh, yes; just the same.

Mr. WARD. I will try and convince the hon. minister that it is not so.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The percentage in 1900 was calculated by me as the percentage of those who attended relatively to the total number of the militia called out. The percentage this year was the ratio of the number who attended to the number called out.

Mr. WARD. Certainly, that is exactly what I say. If it was so difficult in this present year to get even the same percentage of half the strength, surely there must be something wrong. It was not so difficult in 1900 and in the years preceding that to get the same percentage of the full strength as it is now we get the same percentage of half the strength. There must be something wrong if we cannot induce men to go to camp to make 25 per cent or 50 per cent of the strength with the number called out this year, which was only 21 men to a company. In regard to that, I simply want to give the hon. minister a little of the experience I have had in my own regiment. But, before I go into that, I wish to point out to the hon. minister how unfair I believe the comparison to be which he made. We will take, for instance, military districts Nos. 3 and 4, which assembled at Kingston. It is very well known that about one-third of the number of men at Kingston consisted of cavalrymen, and I think it is well known that nearly every troop or squadron of cavalry was full strength at Kingston. In instituting that comparison he should have left out the cavalry and taken into account the infantry alone. It is not a fair comparison when you take troops, each squadron of which had its full strength, and add that to the number of those who had suffered by reason of want of pay. In regard to cavalry, I wish to state that in my own county we have had a great deal of trouble in keeping up the full strength which is called for, that is, one-quarter of the strength of the regiment.

It is well known to every militiaman that the cavalry and artillery are more favourably treated by the Militia and Defence Department than the infantry. Take for instance the cavalry squadrons that were recruited in my own county. I know as a matter of fact that the officers of that cavalry regiment went through two townships in my county and secured all the horses they wanted for fifty cents per day. These horses were secured for the men of the cavalry squadrons who were not owners of horses and very few of the members were in this position. The consequence of this was that the men of that cavalry regiment almost to a man received a dollar a day and the horses were paid for at the rate of fifty cents per day. That is what I have to contend with in my county and there is no doubt that where men can secure one dollar a day by going into the cavalry they will always prefer it to serving in the infantry for 50 cents. I wish to point out to the minister what appears to me and to many others an absurdity, that one dollar a day should be allowed for a horse and only fifty cents for a man. The hon. minister has stated that he knows of men paying out one dollar and one dollar and a half a day for horses. That may be perfectly true in cities where wealthy gentlemen join the mounted infantry and will pay any price for a horse which will make a good appearance. I can assure the hon. minister that in the country—and I do not think my county an exception—any number of horses can be procured at fifty cents a day. It seems to me that the cavalry and artillery are placed on a higher basis altogether than the infantry and it is therefore impossible to secure men to fill up the different companies of infantry even if these companies are called upon to take only one-third of their strength into camp. I had almost persuaded two young men in the county to take two lieutenancies in my regment, but finally they refused altogether to go into the regiment simply because it was utterly impossible to get the men at fifty cents a day and they said it was a perfect farce for them to attempt to pose as officers when they could not have the men. I mention these facts only in order that the minister may take them into consideration. It may be too late to do anything this year but next year when we may have a Bill making some changes in the rate of pay of the militia the minister might consider this matter favourably. I can only say that the proposition of the minister to add five cents per year of service to the daily pay of the men who have served more than one year would be utterly inadequate.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not mention the sum; I certainly would not think of five cents being sufficient.

Mr. WARD. I think the minister has stated that on previous occasions.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Nothing less than ten cents I think.

Mr. WARD. Even with ten cents it would require three years to entitle a man to the pay of eighty cents per day. I can only say from my own experience in the county which I have the honour to represent and in which I command a regiment, that unless something is done this, as the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) has said, is only the beginning of the disintegration of the rural corps.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have listened with much interest to the debate that has taken place and to the statement of the Minister of Militia and Defence which contains many propositions that I think will meet with the hearty approval of the country at large. I believe that a careful investigation into the conditions of the rural corps will demonstrate that there is a manifest decadence in the military ardour of the young men of this country compared with that of fifteen, twenty or twenty-five years ago. There must be some cause for this. In the county where I live the officers of the various companies find it difficult to get a contingent of men to go to camp for the annual drill although in former years they had no difficulty. One of the causes, I presume, is the very insufficient pay given to the men. Fifty cents per day is so ridiculously small that it does not come up to what might be called an indemnity. Had it not been that the county council of the county in which I live have added to that rate of pay twenty-five cents per man, year after year, the corps would not be in as good condition as it now is. I have been a member of the county council for years and every time that question came up there was opposition to it on the ground that the municipal council having no authority or control over the volunteers, it was the duty of the federal government to pay the men, although it was generally admitted that the present rate is very far from being sufficient. There may be other causes. When the young men see the condition in which the drill halls erected twenty-five or thirty years ago are to-day, wrecks and ruins in all parts of the country, they must be impressed with the thought that the government have but little interest in the rural corps. They see that while large sums are spent in cities for building large and expensive armouries, the drill halls throughout the country are allowed to go to ruin. In the town where I live there is a large drill hall, and in connection with it a well fitted armoury in which arms and clothing could be well stored were it not for the fact that the roof is bad. The officers of the district have made appeals again and again for sufficient money to make the roof tight but without success so that the armoury is practically useless for purposes of storage.

The proposal of the minister that the pay of the men should be graded in proportion to the number of annual drills they have put in will meet with the hearty approval of the House and of the country at large. It is a fact that on many occasions when the officers of a company desire to make up a contingent they have to pick up a few loose men who happen to be out of employment. These men of course enlist for three years, but, when the next camp comes around they may not be in the country. That they should be paid at the same rate as men who have put in two, three, five or even ten annual drills is absurd and ridiculous. As it is now they receive the same rate as men who have learned their drill and who have had sufficient interest in military matters to go to camp year after year. An increase of ten or even twenty cents a day would be inadequate, and I think that this matter should be met in a fairly generous and liberal spirit. There is sufficient military spirit in this country to justify the additional expense that would be involved in paying a fair rate for the few days annual drill so as to give the men a reasonable indemnity and tend to arouse to some extent the military ardour of the young men of Canada. I think that something might perhaps be done with regard to the encouragement of rifle ranges throughout the country. The city corps have the advantage over the rural corps in this respect. It will be admitted by the minister also, that the armament of the rural corps cannot very well be dispensed with. You can get good companies in the city and have them turn out well, because they have better advantages for assembling and for constant drill. But yet, in the rural corps you have men who in wars such as the recent war in South Africa have already learned the art, or who from boyhood up, have handled a rifle and are naturally good shots. The members of the rural corps have also that resource which perhaps men accustomed to city life have not; they possess that initiative which is so necessary in military work at the present day. Therefore, in view of the decadence in the ardour and military spirit which characterized the rural corps in the past, I appeal to the minister that there should be a careful inquiry made into its causes.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). On the 30th of June last I made some rather extended remarks upon the Canadian militia, and on looking up that speech I find I prefaced it by saying :

> At this late date in the session I will not speak at any great length.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). If I had that feeling at that time, you can readily understand that since July, August and September have taken to themselves wings, and now that October is speedily following in their wake, I shall not ask this committee to listen to me at any length at all, and especially so in view of the very excellent and extended addresses of the Minister of Militia and of the gentlemen who spoke after him. I shall not attempt to touch in detail the many points which the minister raised, but I shall rather confine myself for five or ten minutes to a discussion of that, to my mind very important point, an increase of pay for the rural militia. I have the most excellent feeling of friendliness for the Minister of Militia, and I believe I am not altogether lacking in discipline in the party as in the army.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). I will say, however, that I have not got up to apologize for what I said with regard to the rural militia, nor yet to recant because I did not study that question so much from the books as I did from the actual camps themselves. I have been there; I have seen. Referring, in order, to what the minister said: First of all, as to this large expenditure of $1,300,000. I believe that this is an excellent thing, and, with the member for South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), I join in congratulating the minister upon his courage in making the announcement of this vote, not apologetically, as we are so accustomed to do when dealing with militia matters in this country, but bravely and boldly, as if he had something to be proud of—as I think he had in making that statement. I compliment the minister that he was further courageous enough to go on and say that this vote would not be for one year only, but might even be for five years in succession. The minister has told us to-day, what many of us knew before; he told us that we have in Canada something less than 40,000 arms of modern make—referring, of course, to the rifles. We all know that supply would be inadequate in case of serious trouble. We know that our militia is formed on the skeleton basis—that is a word that I did not coin myself; it is a well-known word in the militia—and that in case of war we would expect to increase our companies from a strength of 42 to 125 in all. What would be the use of increasing these companies to 125 men if you only had 42 rifles for the 125 men? The other fellows could not fight very well with pitchforks and clubs, and therefore you must furnish each of these men with a rifle. I therefore say that the minister is doing no more than his duty, and this government is doing no more than its duty, in voting even a considerable sum, such as this, towards furnishing this increased armament, which will put one rifle in the hands of one man for whatever force we may find it necessary to put in the field in case of trouble. The same thing applies to the armament of the artillery, with which, however, I am not quite so conversant. I believe, Sir, that every cent of this expenditure will be justified; that not one cent of it will be found fault with by the intelligent electors of Canada. It does seem to me rather a pity, however, that when we are expending this comparatively large sum, we cannot add just a little more to it. It would not look very much added on to the end of that $1,300,000—or to the end of $3,750,000, which I understood the member for South Norfolk to say will be the total expenditure of the Militia Department for all purposes this year——

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Including public works.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Including, of course, the drill sheds, which really are a militia expenditure as much as anything else. I gave figures to prove, and I believe that these figures are unquestioned, that by paying one dollar per day instead of fifty cents per day to all the militia men of Canada, it would only cost something like $225,000 additional; and that if the increase of pay applied only to the rural militia, it would cost about half that amount. I gave reasons why there might fairly be a difference made between the rural and city corps in regard to pay. I would not weary the House by repeating my argument at length on that point, but one of the main reasons which might commend itself to the common sense of every hon. gentleman here is that city soldiers all perform their drill at night, when their day's wage has been earned, whereas the country soldier leaves his home for twelve whole days in the year. The question of pay is much more important to the rural soldier than to the city soldier. More than that, one point which I made, and which cannot be satisfactorily answered, is this: The city soldier is not troubled about the question of pay, the best evidence of which is that he does not draw his pay. If you had your city regiments but half filled up, and if the men that did go into these regiments drew their pay, it might be fair to argue that the low pay was responsible for the depletion of the ranks of the city corps. But when you find these city corps full to overflowing, and the men in the ranks not even drawing their pay, but turning it into a central fund for the purpose of a holiday on Thanksgiving Day, or the 24th of May, or the 1st of July; then I say that the pay is not at all a question with the city men. My object is not to fill anybody's pocket, but to fill the regiments of this country with men, as they should be filled; and, therefore, if the city regiments are already filled by the pay they have got, I have enough respect for these city regiments, enough confidence in their loyalty to the militia, to hold the theory that they would be the first to say: If our country brethren must have half a dollar more than we, in order to have good country regiments, give them the half dollar a day, it does not affect us at all. I do not believe in there being any jealousy between the city corps and the country corps; I do believe in the esprit de corps of the whole force, and I have reason for my belief in a long personal experience. Now, Sir, there is more than one thing to consider in regard to the camps of instruction, when you come to the question of the men who attend them. It is always a dangerous thing simply to count noses; you have to look to the quality of the men, and I want to say that from the experience I had in two camps this year—and I think my brother officers will bear me out—not only were the regiments much under strength, but the physique of the men who did go into camp was so inferior that in actual active service, a very large percentage of these men would never be able to make a campaign. I do not believe that in this commercial country of Canada you can get a $1.50 man for 50 cents. It is all very well to talk about loyalty and patriotism calling the men into the ranks. Canada has just as much patriotism as any other country. Let a war, or a serious danger, menace this country, and you will find the fellows flocking to the colours. But we are talking now of a peace footing; a preparation in time of peace for a possible state of war, and I say that it is nothing against a man's patriotism that he does not want to go into camp for 50 cents a day when he earns $1.50 by remaining at home. I would like to ask: How many members of this hon. House hold His Majesty's commission? Not 3 per cent. And would any gentleman say that the members of this House, who are not members of the militia, are disloyal because they are not in the ranks ? Not at all. Being in the ranks of the active militia is no proof of loyalty, disloyalty, patriotism or the reverse.

But we are living in a commercial age. I understood the minister himself to say that he believed in indemnifying the soldiers. He did not believe that a young Canadian who went to camp should want to make money, but he believed he should be indemnified. As I understand the word 'indemnify,' it means to save from loss. How can a man who earns $1.50 a day be indemnified on 50 cents a day ? He is just a dollar short. Therefore I say that the present pay does not indemnify the men at all. I do not believe that we require to raise the pay of soldiers to an equality with that of men in commercial life ; but we have to approximate it. Give the boys a dollar a day, and the ranks will be filled, and not with the class of men we have at present, a considerable proportion of whom are unfit, but with the best young men that can be got in our country. The Major General Commanding has recommended, the minister has adopted the recommendation, and it has been decided, not to call out the full strength of our force each year, but only about one-half of it. One hundred thousand men, I believe, are to be the total militia force. Of these 60,000 are not to be called out at all, but are to be enrolled as a reserve subject to call in time of war ; and each man is to be given a rifle and trained in rifle shooting. Of the other 40,000 the minister proposes to call out all the city corps and about half the country corps. The remaining half of the country corps are I fear in limbo. They are betwixt and between. If only one-half are to be called out, what a bagatelle it would be to give them $1 a day. It would only amount to one-half the figures I have already given to the House. It would cut down the cost to 1¼ cents per head of the population of Canada. I estimated that it would cost four cents per head to give $1 a day to the whole force, or two and one-half cents per head to give $1 a day to the whole rural force. If you only call out half the rural force, one and one-fourth cents for every man woman and child in Canada, would give the men a fair wage, and would fill our regiments to overflowing with the best bone and sinew of the country. It is not much to ask. I know that the minister has it not in his power to increase the pay of the militia. That is regulated by the Militia Act. But we in this House have power to amend that Act, and I believe that next session a new Act is to be introduced. If so, one thing we should see to is that power is given to the minister of the day to regulate the pay of the soldiers, so that it will bear some proportion to the current rate of wages in commercial life. I am rather sorry that the whole force is not going to be called out every year. I am afraid speaking from experience, that such a turnout as is here indicated will not encourage that spirit in the officers which will bring good men into the officers' mess. The average captain does not want to have simply three or four men trailing behind him. He wants to have a fair company, and the colonel wants to have a regiment to command which is somewhat larger than a large company. You have to consider the effect this system will have on the men. The minister has very properly said that the militia officers must be educated men. That is true ; but you have first to have your militia officer before you can begin this process of education ; and unless you give the officer something to be proud of in his unit, you are not going to get him to join the force. I believe that is what this is coming to. Therefore, I regret that the whole force is not to be called out. But time will tell. There are those who say we can get along well enough on the present pay. I do not think so. I believe that if you took a poll of the present militia force, you would find 99 per cent of the officers in favour of paying at least 75 cents a day, and nearly as many preferring $1 per day. It is all very well to talk of grading the pay ; but even then you must give the men enough to get them in the first year before you can have them in the second or the third year. This is to be a kind of corps d'elite ; as the minister says, they are to be selected men. If we are to get rid of a certain percentage of men who are not by any means selected, and to get these selected men on the roll, I really think it will be necessary to pay $1 a day. If you just want ordinary men, 75 cents a day might do. But if you are going to get the class of men we should have, when you are cutting the number down one-half, they should be paid at least $1 a day. Now, I believe I have already transgressed the time limit. I understand that the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), whose speeches are always instructive, is to follow. I believe I misled him in saying that I was going to speak only a short time, and therefore I tender him my sincere apology.

Mr. HUGHES (North Victoria). I do not on this occasion intend to make any extended remarks. There were a number of questions which I desired during the session to bring before the minister and the House ; but with that usual fatality which characterizes such intentions, the remarks are put off to the end of the session, and the session closes, and there is nothing done. However, I have taken the liberty and the opportunity of conversing with the minister from time to time, and, although we are politically opposed, and he is a great warrior, none of us on this side of the House are afraid to approach him to lay suggestions before him for the benefit of the militia ; and I am glad to say that he is always ready to receive those suggestions in the kindest manner. I will just run over a few points which I propose discussing.

I want to supplement what my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) stated about the importance of having an esprit de corps in any camp. The various corps this year marched out from their quarters to the brigade camps, and there was scarcely a regiment headed by its band. The scattered few collected from each company fell in at the battalion headquarters, and took the back streets to the station, carrying their knapsacks and rifles, and got into the train as quietly as possible ; and they came back in the same way. That is not the way a regiment should go into camp.

Another thing I wish to speak of are the pensions to those who were seriously injured in the South African war. I have already had the honour of bringing this subject twice before the minister this session, and he promised to give it his consideration. There are many young men. It is not necessary for me to speak at length on this question, as we have had it up twice before this session. There are many young men in Canada whose claims should be considered in this connection, notably one who had both eyes shot out, and others with both arms shot off, another with his leg shot off. These young men, by reason of their wounds, have lost their positions, and have practically to depend on their pensions. I am satisfied that the country will endorse the Minister of Militia if he takes the same bold stand on this matter that he has taken on other matters, and insists on the Minister of Finance giving him a grant to supplement for all time to come the pensions which the British government is paying to these men. I am sure the hon. gentleman need not fear the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) in doing so, for the hon. gentleman's bark, as every one knows, is worse than his bite. I purposed discussing at considerable length the permanent corps and the basis on which it is established.

I withdrew a notice of motion which I had on the order paper regarding rifle practice in the schools of this Dominion, but nevertheless my opinion is that every boy of the age of eighteen should be trained in the use of the rifle. If Canada had her young men trained to-day in miniature rifle practice, not the long range—because as I have again and again pointed out those of us who learned shooting in the old days learned it, not with the long range rifle but with the old muzzle loading Lee-Enfield with a snap-cap—we would in ten years be invincible. There is a most excellent device in the department whereby one can test the accuracy of his aim. If these machines could be obtained cheaply enough, they would be capital things to have at the headquarters of every company in order that the boys might learn rifle shooting. If our youth were trained in this practice, the entire forces of the United States could not make an invasion of Canada which would be effective for twenty-four hours.

I purposed also discussing the position of the permanent officers of the force, such as the district officers commanding, and the district staff adjutants, and the functions they should perform. They are very excellent officers indeed, but in order to carry out to the letter the plan of the minister and the idea he has in forming his brigades and divisions, it is absolutely necessary that retired officers who have passed the age limit and have served five years in command of regiments—and who are the men who, in time of trouble, will command the army corps—should be given an opportunity of gaining experience in that service. The question of the pay of the officers and men I also purposed discussing at length.

I notice in the estimates that the hon. minister proposes to have monuments erected on some battle fields, including the battle field of Fort Erie. I commend this expenditure and would suggest that he should lose no time in placing these monuments on every battle field. We should have monuments at Chateauguay and Chrysler's Farm, and various other historic grounds. I do not know that Queenston Heights has any monument except that erected to General Brock. But that was not erected by the Canadian government. There is nothing better calculated to inspire in the youth of our country loyalty and love for their native land than these records of great deeds of valour. I have no doubt that the monument at the city hall in this city, commemorating the men who fell in South Africa stirs in the hearts of our rising population the throb of patriotism—the noblest sentiment that can actuate men.

I also purposed saying a few words in connection with the Ross rifle, and I did purpose drawing attention to some remarks contained in the report of the intercolonial conference on that subject. Although I am a Britisher and have endeavoured to prove myself so to the core, still I do not believe that the British war office should dictate to the people of the Dominion what rifle they should use. I believe that our people are perfectly qualified to select for themselves. The hon. minister has rightly taken the precaution that the bore of the rifle which we use shall be the same as that of the imperial rifle, and that the ammunition for the Ross rifle shall be the same as that used in the imperial army. I want to say this—and I have had the opportunity to obtain as good knowledge of rifles as most men of the community—that in so far as the action of the Ross rifle is concerned, I consider it much ahead of any other rifle yet manufactured. I had the privilege of meeting the inventor of this action just after the South African war, and in discussing the defects of the present

British rifle, I pointed out what I considered three serious defects. He asked me if I would be good enough to go and see the arm he invented. I did so and he showed me the Ross rifle of which I had hitherto heard nothing, and in that rifle each of the three defects that I pointed out have been removed. I therefore have no hesitation in endorsing the Ross rifle.

I also purposed saying a few words with reference to the military college and intended touching on the water suppply. I have learned, however, since that a new system of purifying the water supply is about to be introduced there, a similar plan to that adopted in Winnipeg. The Winnipeg water comes from Lake Manitoba underground and goes through a purifying process which rids it of alkali.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is the Philadelphia system which is adopted in the college.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is on the same principle, but the system used in the college would not suit at all. However, the hon. minister will no doubt succeed in getting pure water. I am satisfied that the best way would be to have a pump station on Garden Island and force the water over to the college.

I purposed discussing the advisability of having inland arsenals to be placed as far inland as convenient from the frontier, so that in case of war we would not be liable to have them cut off. We ought to have two or three establishments for the manufacture of ammunition, owing to the peculiar nature of our country and also owing to the fact that the new transcontinental road is not yet constructed. That would give a supply of ammunition to the great centres of the Dominion in case of trouble. Talk of your pom-poms and big guns, but after all it is the rifle and the Maxim guns that unman the enemy and empty the saddles.

I commend also the item in relation to the military survey and the establishment of the intelligence branch. I congratulate the hon. minister and the major general commanding on having secured an able officer, Colonel Dennison, to take command of that department. He has proved himself a most efficient officer, wherever he has been, especially in South Africa. The only fault I would find is with the smallness of the sum which the hon. minister is asking. In keeping up a militia system, we must always recognize that our neighbours to the south are an aggressive race, just as we are, and we must always bear in mind that the possibility may arise some time of war between Canada and the United States. I have a paper in my desk of a fire-eating nature, but not very dangerous, which was sent me from the wild and woolly west. This paper is published in Kansas. It suggests that the American government should settle this Alaska boundary business by simply gobbling up Canada.

Mr. GOURLEY. They would have a hot time doing it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Undoubtedly, the Nova Scotia and Ontario boys would give a good account of themselves. The point I wish to make is this—that every foot of land upon the border between Canada and the United States, as well as the country for a considerable distance this side of the border, should be surveyed, and maps should be made so as to be at the disposal of officers and men in case of war. I have before me the report of the military commission in Great Britain. Every one knows that at the beginning of the South African war Great Britain had no maps even of her own Cape Colony and Natal. We had to go through by pure guesswork. It was my privilege to be intelligence officer to two columns in that war. I never found a map that was of service. It was far better to take the data furnished by people who had travelled over the country, and of Kaffirs and others who lived in various localities. After a time we were able to get hold of a number of the Boer maps of the Transvaal, Orange Free State, and other parts. These were all scaled and made up with the greatest nicety. I commend the step that the minister proposes. But the amount will need to be greatly increased year by year in order that the country may be surveyed and these maps prepared.

I do not apologize to the House or to the country for saying that we should be ready to meet the United Staets. I believe in being friendly with our friends to the south. I have always been friendly with them and respected them. But there is no use in shutting our eyes to the fact that there is an element there, as there is in every country, that is antagonistic to their neighbours. That element very nearly asserted itself under President Cleveland. In carrying out the laws of this country, laws recognized by the government of the United States, a thieving Yankee ship was captured in British waters while engaged in taking fish that rightly belonged to our own fishermen. President Cleveland called upon the governors of the several states along the border to know how many men they could throw upon the Canadian border inside of a week.

An hon. MEMBER. Was that despatch published ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It was a private message. Nobody knew anything about it, it was entirely secret. They went from governor to governor of these states, and it was found that they could not put 50,000 men on the Canadian border inside of two weeks. Otherwise the chance is fifty to one that trouble would have been sprung upon us at that time without notice. We might as well let it be known frankly, as Palmerston did on one occasion, that we have rights and are prepared to defend them. We have boys who know how to use firearms, and I trust that in a short time we shall have officers in great numbers trained to take command of these lads. And, if once that status is arrived at, any enemy, I care not who, will hesitate long before they will set foot across the Canadian border.

I purposed also taking up a very delicate subject, a rule that has been promulgated that, for the future, no lieutenant in the permanent force shall marry without the permission of the head of the department. I would suggest that a better way of meeting this question would be for the Minister of Militia and Defence to increase the pay of these permanent corps officers, so that every one of them can support the little girl of his choice in, at all events, a fair degree of comfort. And as soon as any of these boys finds the young lady who, he thinks, would be fit to become his partner in life, he should be encouraged to take such a partner rather than debarred from doing so.

Another point that I purposed touching upon at some length, if opportunity had offered, was the question of medals to the first men of the fourth contingent who went to South Africa. I would just point out to the minister that these men had reached Cape Town harbour. They went to South Africa in full expectation of engaging actively in the war. Disaster had fallen on British arms and the hearts of all these men beat high in the hope of being able to serve their country in the field. They reached Table Bay; they were within the three-mile limit and would have landed had not orders been received sending them around to Durban. I maintain that the minister would be justified in insisting on the British government recognizing the claims of these men. It was while they were proceeding under orders to Durban peace was declared. If the rule is enforced as now proposed, these men will be deprived of the only recognition, the only remuneration, that many of them coveted for their services in South Africa.

I also purposed taking up the question of the permanent corps, as contrasted with the rural corps, and the rural corps as contrasted with the city corps. But time will not permit me to do so on this occasion, and so I shall defer it until another time.

The question of pay is an important one. As the hon. minister knows, this matter was brought up by me early in the session. I suggested that, in all fairness to the men, the pay should be increased and graded. I believe that 50 cents per day should be the pay for the first year and increased by 25 cents for the subsequent years. Suppose that that had been brought into force, in the coming year a man would receive 75 cents per day. In the third year he would receive $1 per day, with a corresponding increase for non-commissioned ranks. I do not think the country would mind the expenditure much, and I think the minister would do well to look at that aspect of the case. However, I will take that up at greater length on another occasion. For many years I have objected to a horse being paid $1 per day in camp and a man being paid only 50 cents per day in camp. If the minister is going to graduate the pay of a man, let him graduate the pay of a horse. Pay the horse that comes into camp for training 50 cents per day. The horse that comes in for a second year for training and is partly familiar with the bridle and knee-action, let it be paid 75 cents per day ; and the third year it will be worth $1 per day. In other words, let the man and the horse be graduated year by year. I am satisfied that it would not cost the country such a very great sum, and the force would be much benefited. On this question of pay, I desire to refer to the excellent speech of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson). I had not the pleasure of hearing that speech, but I have taken occasion to read it. That hon. gentleman says that the falling off in the percentage of attendance in the various camps is due entirely to the fact that the pay is so small. I have endeavoured to point out, as occasion offered, how the falling off in attendance was brought about, what the cause of the lack of energy is on the part of the officers, and why it is that the military spirit which was characteristic of this whole country and is still characteristic of parts of it has waned. It is due to the fact that we have no efficient system for training officers. As the minister knows, I gave my views on this question again and again to the House. And, if I have an opportunity, I will again point out to the House that if a proper plan be pursued in the training of officers it will have the effect of infusing a military spirit into the country. I do not believe in a great increase in the permanent force. Why should two hundred men be placed in the city of Montreal ? In the whole city of Chicago—and it is one of the toughest cities on earth—the United States government does not keep anything like that number. There are a number at Fort Sheridan, but that is twenty or thirty miles away, and they are kept there because it is a good place to drill. From a police standpoint they are entirely unnecessary in the Dominion of Canada. If we want police along the water stretches of the frontier, at the canals and at the Soo let us employ them as a permanent police, let us not enroll them as soldiers and then have them called out to preserve law and order. I have too high a respect for the people of Canada to think that it is necessary, in order to preserve order, to have men stationed over them with fixed bayonets. I believe in making the permanent corps an educational rather than a military institution. I would have our officers appointed to positions on the basis of knowledge rather than of military rank. I would have the men attending these classes graded according to their military education so that those of similar knowledge would be placed in the same squads and conducted from class to class until they would arrive at such a stage of instruction as would be desired. In regard to pay we all have read the famous lines of Bobby Burns which conclude with this stanza :

> Glory is the soldier's price
> The soldier's wealth is honour.

I am satisfied from the statements which have fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) when he pointed out that the city corps throughout Canada are kept to full strength and never draw one cent of pay——

Mr. INGRAM. They are not kept at anythink like full strength.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If they are not kept up at anything like full strength in a one horse town like St. Thomas it is because their officers and non-commissioned officers are not up to what they ought to be.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to stick up for the one horse town of St. Thomas ; it is equal to Lindsay at any rate. While the strength is kept up in St. Thomas there are other towns where it is not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Wherever you find a rural or city corps that is not kept up you will find a deficiency in the spirit of the officers and non-commissioned officers.

Mr. SPROULE. Would that apply to Haldimand ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Certainly, if the officers and non-commissioned officers in Col. Thompson's regiment were all living up to their duty, that regiment would have gone into camp with their full complement.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman has had a large experience ; will he kindly explain why so many rural corps are dropping out and disbanding ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I intend explaining it before the close of the session. We have had some experience in the South African war that should be instructive. For instance I have here the report of the royal commission and I have before me the evidence of Sir Thomas Kelly-Kenny, the present adjutant general of England and one of the best fighting officers in South Africa. Speaking of the pay of the men who went out like the first Canadian contingent and the yeomanry and imperial volunteers of England he says :

> Those are what I would call the men who went out through patriotism in the end of 1899 and the beginning of 1900. But as to the other lots the yeomanry and also the other lots of colonials—for I do not think there is very much difference—I think we have had to buy them, and rather dearly.

With the first lot it was not a question of buying and they went through patriotism ; after that it was a question of buying. The pay was raised from one shilling to five shillings and as Sir Thomas Kelly-Kenny says it really meant that they purchased these men for service in South Africa. The volunteer private did not see why he should get only one shilling a day in the volunteer service if he could go out at five shillings a day as a yeoman. The yeoman was receiving five shillings a day without qualification and the service companies one shilling a day for very high qualification. If the strength of volunteer regiments is declining it is owing to a lack of spirit on the part of the officers and non-commissioned officers. I have seen the same thing happen in volunteer regiments years ago. I remember one gentleman marching into camp with a company consisting of six sergeants, one private and himself, when every other company in the regiment had its full complement. Why was this ? Because that gentleman had never taken the trouble to qualify himself or to look after the interests of his company.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As it is almost six o'clock, we might if the committee is agreeable, take a few items and leave an item on which it would be understood we could have a full discussion of all these estimates.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have waited patiently since 11 o'clock this morning in order to make a twenty minute speech and before these items are passed I wish to say something further in reference to this matter.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are two items under civil government for my department which might be allowed to stand. We might put the others through and permit discussion on all of the items on these two votes.

Mr. HACKETT. The best way would be to discuss each item as it comes up. If you desire to adjourn now, I have no objection, but I have listened with much pleasure to the address of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) ; he made a splendid speech and he quoted from a military officer, Sir Thomas Kelly-Kenny. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if Sir Thomas Kelly-Kenny is Irish. There is an item here in connection with an armoury on Prince Edward Island, $500. I would ask the minister if the officers and men there, loyal and true men, who provided this armoury without any assistance from the government have been reimbursed for their expenditure.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have been unable to hear my hon. friend, but if he comes down to the front and repeats his question, I will try and answer it.

Mr. HACKETT. Between my bad voice and the hon. minister's bad ears, it is pretty hard for us to understand each other. I would like to ask the hon. minister, in regard to this $500 to reimburse the officers and men of Prince Edward Island, how long it is since they paid out their money for this work ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was three or four years ago. About three or four years ago the Militia Department was asked for a grant, and it was understood that $500 would be sufficient ; $500 was granted, but the officers were more ambitious and they spent something over $1,000. I took the ground at first that they had no authority to do it, but after carefully looking into the matter and finding that the expenditure was a proper one, I thought it was only fair that they should be reimbursed.

Mr. HACKETT. We voted two days ago $2,000 for the same kind of work. These are two votes of the same kind.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are extensive repairs going on. I understand that this vote is to reimburse the officers for providing an armoury in the drill hall, while the work that is going on now, I think, is an extension of the drill hall, an entirely different thing. This vote is simply to reimburse the officers for money which they paid out, for which we have vouchers in the department, and we are satisfied that the expenditure is bona fide.

Mr. HACKETT. Who had charge of the work ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I could not tell my hon. friend now.

Mr. HACKETT. That is very important.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will give my hon. friend all the information. I will undertake to satisfy him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose there would be no objection to passing this resolution, it being understood that anything in connection with the resolution can be discussed on any other item in the estimates ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly. There are two items in connection with civil government which will be left, and it will be understood that any question that any hon. member wishes to put in relation to these items may be put, and that I will give an explanation.

Mr. SPROULE. Or any discussion ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. When will these items be taken up—to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No ; I would prefer to leave them until next week.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As the items are very short, the hon. minister might let the House have some notice as to when they will be taken up, because there are other hon. gentlemen who would like to continue this discussion and who may not be present if the items are brought up unexpectedly.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If my hon. friend will suggest a day and let me know the day before, I am sure the right hon. leader of the government will be glad to agree to that day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very good.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) be good enough to tell us what business we may expect to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Public Works estimates, I think.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 6.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, October 9, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

ORDERS DISCHARGED.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the Order for :

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 217) respecting penitentiaries.—The Minister of Justice.

be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved that the Order for :

Second reading of Bill (No. 251) to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act.—The Minister of Finance.

be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION DROPPED.

The item on the Order paper for leave to introduce Bill to amend the Dominion Lands Act (the Minister of the Interior) was dropped.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Anse aux Gascons—extension of wharf, &c., $6,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to extend the existing wharf to reach 13 feet depth at low water spring tide, to permit the steamers plying on the Baie des Chaleurs, between Gaspé Basin and Dalhousie, to call at all times. This is in Bonaventure county, and the total cost will be $19,000.

Anse aux Gris Fonds—improvements at mouth of river, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the estimated cost. It is practically to give the fishermen a harbour of refuge.

Mr. MORIN. What county is that in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Gaspé.

Anse St. Jean—extension of wharf, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the total cost of the work, as estimated by the chief engineer. It is to give a depth of from 8 to 16 feet of water at low tide, and it is in Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Barachois de Malbaie—breakwater, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in the county of Gaspé, and the estimated cost of the work is $16,500. It is for the construction of a breakwater.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the first expenditure on a new work.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the size of that place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a very flourishing parish, with a population of 1,300. There is a sand bar there running parallel to the coast line which it is proposed to remove, so as to give boats access to the inner basin. It is a most important fishing centre, and we have had petitions from the inhabitants praying for this work.

Mr. HACKETT. Might I ask the hon. minister if he has considered the case of Skinner's Pond in Prince Edward Island ? He is very desirous of promoting the fishing industry, and I can tell him that in the vicinity of Skinner's Pond there is the most important fishing industry in Canada.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that Skinner's Pond item was passed a day or two ago.

Mr. HACKETT. I beg to differ. There is no item for Skinner's Pond, and I would like to ask the hon. minister if he will not do something to assist the fishermen there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This matter was brought to my attention, and instructions have already been given to the chief engineer of the department to report upon it.

Bonaventure East—breakwater, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to provide for the construction of a breakwater in Bonaventure county, 700 feet long, 20 feet wide, and to give six feet at low water, spring tide. The total estimated cost of the work is $20,000. It is a new work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the use of a breakwater which will give only six feet of water ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At the present time a sand bar forms at the mouth of the river, and prevents the fishermen getting into the river, which forms a harbour at that point. The construction of this breakwater will prevent the bar forming, and will give them six feet of water at low spring tide, so that they can take their vessels in.

Mr. MORIN. What is the population of that place ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). The population of the township of Bonaventure is 2,682. It is one of the largest parishes on the Baie des Chaleurs.

Mr. SPROULE. When we come to an item for a new work, I think the minister should tell us something about the size of the place, its requirements, why the work is needed, and what we are committing the country to in commencing the undertaking. In the province of Ontario a township is about ten miles square, and a harbour or dock usually accommodates two or three townships or more. There is no township in our part of the country with a population of less than 3,000 or 4,000 or 5,000. No one would contend that the fact that a townsip had a population of 2,000 or 3,000 would be any justification for the building of a breakwater. I take it that the people in this township are farmers. There may be a few who fish ; but, so far as I can judge from the information given, this breakwater is for fishing purposes, and not for commercial purposes.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I may say that this township extends wholly along the sea-shore. The townships in the county of Bonaventure are not as they are in Ontario; they are all along the sea-shore. All these 2,862 people practically will be benefited by this breakwater. It is true, some farming is carried on in the parish, but the main occupation of the people is fishing and lumbering. Probably one hundred fishermen will be benefited by this breakwater. The township of St. Bonaventure, by which name it is popularly known, or Hamilton township, as it is called in the census is one of the largest parishes of the district. At present there is no breakwater or wharf, and the fishermen there have never had any assistance of any kind. They are exposed to storms, especially in the fall, and have no protection whatever for their boats. The steamers that pass there have to land in open boats both people and goods at their inconvenience and sometimes loss. It sometimes happens that steamers pass without being able to stop, and the people have been asking for this improvement for the past thirty years. St. Bonaventure is bound to increase and the time has arrived when something has to be done. In rear of the parish of St. Bonaventure are the famous Robitaille limits, 40 square miles, given to the family of the late lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec, which are reckoned among the most valuable timber limits in the province. They are still held by the Robitaille family, but in a short time it is expected that they will pass into the hands of a lumber company and be exploited, thus furnishing considerable employment. All are unanimous in the opinion that this work should be done at once.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the size of the fishing fleet and to what extent is the industry prosecuted ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). There are about 100 to 125 fishermen in each parish. The importance of the locality was recognized by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he had built at St. Bonaventure the first bait freezing establishment erected in the province of Quebec. The local House passed a special law authorizing the fishermen of the parish to form a bait freezing association at this point.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member has not told us how many vessels there are in the fishing fleet. Here is a township with a population of 2,862, and we have $10 per head of that population spent at one place. There are 125 fishermen, which would mean $20 per head spent on one small hatchery, and we do not know to what extent the industry is prosecuted and whether there is any commerce carried on there or not. These things may not appear to necessitate a very heavy outlay at the time, but they must be kept up permanently in the future. There ought to be a pretty strong justification before we commence new undertakings of this kind. Here we are proposing to spend about $20,000 to build a breakwater for a harbour, which has not much of a village or town behind it, and only a few fishermen. I am not underestimating the value of the fishermen, because they are a very important class and deserve consideration as well as any other, but if along our shores or lakes—take Georgian bay if you like—in every village where there is a number of fishermen, a breakwater or a wharf is to be built, there will be no end to the expenditure. We are committing ourselves to a dangerous precedent.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). This is not an ordinary fishing station. It is a township with a population of 3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. They are not all fishermen.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). One of the chief industries is the fishing industry. The amount may seem high, but unfortunately the coasts of the Baie des Chaleurs are very shallow and wharfs have to be built much longer than they otherwise would. If we were to build a $5,000 wharf it would be carried away with the first storm, and the most economical plan is to make a substantial work which will last two or three generations.

Mr. HACKETT. How far is that from Gaspé ?

The PRIME MINISTER. 160 miles.

Mr. HACKETT. I have travelled up that river, the St. Lawrence, and I know that frequently the fishermen of that section labour under great difficulties in getting their products to the market, and any assistance this parliament can give those poor hard working men should be given freely and without comment.

Bois Brûlé—training pier, &c., $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for a pier 90 feet long and 15 feet wide. It is for the purpose of confining the water of the river into one channel in order to give sufficient water for the boats to come in.

Cacouna—extension of wharf, &c., $2,300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you require to extend it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To get into deep water. The extension will be 75 feet and this is to complete.

Caplan—breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. HACKETT. What county is this in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Bonaventure. It is to make provision for the construction of a breakwater 40 feet long and 20 feet wide. The estimated cost is $15,000. It is said in the report that there is no shelter of any kind for the fishing boats. This is also for the purpose of allowing a larger class of boats to engage in the fishing industry at this point. It is also stated in the report that there is at this point an extensive shipping of ties and shingles, and that twenty large vessels, including three barques, loaded there in 1902.

Mr. HACKETT. Is the work on the Baie des Chaleurs or on the gulf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the Baie des Chaleurs.

Mr. HACKETT. About what part of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Bonaventure county.

Mr. HACKETT. How big is that ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Perhaps I may be allowed to give a little further explanation with regard to the locality. I may say in answer to the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett) that Bonaventure is 150 miles long. Gaspé is about 300 miles long.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much of it is not covered with breakwaters ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Since confederation, on this Bonaventure coast-line of 150 miles, three small wharfs had been erected ; and out of 19 parishes practically 16 have been left for these 35 years without any protection whatever for the fishermen —no wharfs, no breakwaters, and nothing to facilitate the carrying on of their calling. The parish of St. Charles de Caplan adjoins that of Bonaventure. The census of 1901 shows that this has a population of 1,990. There is this remarkable about Caplan that, in the rear a new parish has sprung up, called St. Alphonse de Muselyville. This was founded by a Belgian priest, who brought out a Belgian colony and began the first extensive effort to settle the interior of that immense peninsula of 10,000 square miles. This parish of St. Alphonse de Muselyville has a population of 900, a resident parish priest, a church and all the facilities and advantages to become a growing and prosperous centre. This population will utilize this new wharf which is to be erected near the parish church in the middle of the parish coast-line. The fishermen there have now no protection whatever. When they return from fishing they have to get together fifteen or twenty men to haul their boats on the shore, on the approach of the storm, and this work has to be done sometimes in the day-time and sometimes at night. When the steamer passes, people coming ashore have to be landed on floats. St. Charles de Caplan is a centre and will be the outlet for a considerable trade. The Quebec government last year spent $1,000 in improving the road there, which will make this more a centre than ever. So, I think the expenditure is fully justified. It will have the effect, within the next four or five years, of greatly increasing the business which is done through this point.

Mr. SPROULE. I would be glad if the minister would make up a list of the new works he is commencing and the counties in which they are, together with an estimate of the cost of each work when concluded. I presume he has not such a list at hand, but he could probably have it prepared in a short time. We are commencing many new undertakings on grounds of very doubtful wisdom, if this may be taken as a sample. This work will cost $15,000 or $20,000, and it is to be built at a place where there are only a few fishing boats and about 1,000 people.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will allow me, the parish of St. Charles de Caplan has a population of over 1,900, and in the rear of it is the parish of St. Alphonse de Muselyville, with over 800. Both of these parishes will benefit by this wharf. If the amount seems to be large, it is because these wharfs must be built strongly enough to resist the action of the sea. If we were building wharfs on rivers or inland lakes a small expenditure would be sufficient ; but it is no use to erect a wharf at a cost of $4,000 or $5,000 in such a place as this. One storm would carry it away. There was a storm about a month ago at Port Daniel, and the wharf there, a substantial wharf, begun under the late administration, was damaged to the extent of $2,400 in one night.

Mr. SPROULE. The outlay would indicate a substantial wharf. I do not object to its being made substantial, because if the work is to be done at all, it should be done well. But what I complain of is that heavy expenditures are being undertaken, not only for the present, but for the future, upon grounds of questionable wisdom. I can only judge of this by comparing it with my own section of the country. I find important towns, the homes of large fishing fleets and the centres of fine agricultural districts, and with populations three times that mentioned by the hon. gentleman, yet, if it is proposed to spend even $10,000 on a new work, the answer is that the place is too small to justify such a work. Take, for instance, the town of Thornbury, which has a population of 3,000, and has adjacent townships with a population of 15,000 or 20,000. This place is one of the parts of the Georgian bay and the centre of an important commerce. Yet, it would be very difficult to get the government to grant $15,000 to commence a work there. And, even with the most urgent need of commerce and the fishing industry, it is difficult to get the government to grant even $4,000 or $5,000 to keep in proper repair works that may have been built at any of these points. It will be seen that it is not only the amount we are now voting, but the amount necessary to complete the work that must be considered. And, after that, the work must be maintained, so that we are committing ourselves to a never-ending expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule's) suggestion is a very proper and reasonable one. I thought I had a list such as he speaks of, for I desired to have it prepared myself. I do not think that these estimates cover more new works for the province of Quebec than for any other. It is true, as my hon. friend says, that there is no use in spending money on these works at all unless we endeavour to make them substantial. We ought also to understand thoroughly what we are undertaking. With that view I have given the estimates of the chief engineer, which I think are correct as to the total liability to be incurred in each case. My hon. friend will see that out of the ten votes that we have passed for the province of Quebec, only three incur any liability over the amount of the vote, and that the total liability in these cases is only $36,000. I will have a list prepared such as the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. MORIN. Let me ask the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) how it is that the names of the places that he has given in his county do not appear in the last census.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). When the county of Bonaventure was originally surveyed it was divided up into townships, and the names of the townships appear in the census. The ecclesiastical authorities have since subdivided these townships into parishes, giving them religious names. For instance, you have St. Bonaventure, representing the township of Hamilton; St. Charles, representing the township of Caplan. The member for Dorchester is aware of the system of parishes in Quebec. These divisions are made under the parochial system.

Mr. LENNOX. On several occasions, though not recently, I have expressed my opposition to this system of expending public money. I do not wish to take particular exception to this item more than to a large class of similar items that are constantly brought before us. We have necessarily to incur enormous expenditures of a national character. There may come a time when we can, better than now, apply public money to what may be denominated local purposes. I have endeavoured to think this matter out, and tried to see whether the propositions I have heretofore enunciated are fair, that is, whether a work which does not partake of a character which makes it for the general advantage of the Dominion as a whole, is one upon which we are justified in expending federal money. There may be works which cannot be said to affect the whole Dominion, on which the public money of the Dominion can legitimately be applied. But speaking as a rule, and it is a good rule for us to observe, I think that when a work cannot be regarded as a Dominion work distinct from a provincial work, as a Dominion work distinct from a county work or a purely local work, we are not justified in expending public money upon it. Down by the seashore I have noticed that a good deal of money is spent on harbours, and in procuring facilities for fishermen, and in that instance, when seeing that it will affect more than one province, we can justifiably expend money upon it. It may not be necessary in this case that the money has to be beneficial to more than one province before it can be justifiably spent by the federal parliament. For instance, if you have a public work to be done in some town in the province of Ontario, we might reply to the request of the county council and say: We won't give you a grant for this work. The county council says: It does not affect the county as a whole, therefore we cannot give any public money for it. Now these works, such as the improvement of harbours and small streams, the building of wharfs in places where there is practically no commerce, no interprovincial commerce at all events, are matters of local concern. I know of cases in which the county council would say: It is a good local work, it benefits the town where it is being expended, but it does not affect the county as a whole. In these instances I think there should not be a grant of one dollar by the county council, not one dollar by the township council either; yet they come to this parliament and obtain grants. On what ground? The only ground upon which they can possibly be justified is that they are a national work in some sense or form. Now I enter my protest against that principle. There may be some qualification of the doctrine, but whilst we have large public enterprises to the fore, whilst we have the necessity for a great expenditure on transportation and other great public works which affect Canada as a whole, whilst we have these and have not sufficient money to satisfy those demands—as we know we have not sufficient money—and when we are going into a large increased expenditure, this year mounting up by the millions, at a rate which is unprecedented, I say that the Minister of Public Works ought not to undertake this long list of new expenditures where it is absolutely certain that these matters cannot be said to be for the general advantage of Canada in any proper sense which would justify us in expending federal money upon them.

Now here we have a population, I understand, of some 1,900 in the two parishes. My hon. friend from East Grey has referred to the province of Ontario. I do not care whether it is the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec, neither does my hon. friend, except as an illustration. Take, for instance, the town of Barrie. There was difficulty in getting a grant of $3,000 for a wharf at the town of Barrie. The town of Barrie, now including Allandale, has a population of some 6,000, and is rapidly growing. New enterprises are being launched there this season, and we have difficulty in getting $3,000——

Mr. McCARTHY. On what does the hon. gentleman base his statement that there is difficulty in getting a vote ?

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. gentleman disclaims any effort in that behalf, I withdraw the statement entirely. Probably the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is perfectly right in suggesting that there was no difficulty in obtaining this vote, inasmuch as, though it was voted several years ago, it has not been implemented by any work done up to the present time. Probably I had better leave the town of Barrie and go a little further down to the new portion of the riding of the hon. member for North Simcoe, where there is a wharf spoken of as the Hawkestone wharf, in the township of Oro. That is another flagrant instance of an expenditure of public money for a purely local purpose. I venture to say that, except to satisfy a few men in that locality, there is no justification for the expenditure of one dollar of public money upon the Hawkestone wharf. There is no need for it unless it be for a few excursionists who land there from time to time, but very infrequently. This is another instance illustrating the fact that this government is squandering the people's money on wharfs, and what are denominated public works, here and there, for no other purpose, that is self-evident, except to influence the votes of the people in the neighbourhood.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not desire to start an acrimonious discussion but one statement of the hon. gentleman I cannot allow to go unchallenged. His statement about the difficulty of obtaining a grant for the wharf at Barrie of which he spoke is not a correct statement. It has been in the estimates since 1900 ; the difficulty was to decide upon the selection of a site. As soon as the situation was agreed upon the work was undertaken. The lumber is now being hauled there and the work is about to be commenced. In reference to the statement that there was no demand for the Oro wharf, I entirely repudiate that statement on behalf of the township recently added to North Simcoe. The hon. gentleman knows very well that his own town of Barrie profits very largely by that wharf. The few excursionists of whom he speaks are farmers who, owing to this cheap transportation come to Barrie more frequently than they otherwise would and sell and buy goods to the advantage of both the townspeople and the farmers.

Mr. LENNOX. I deny entirely that a reference to the Hawkestone wharf is in any sense out of order. It is perfectly in order in discussing these estimates to refer to the various works undertaken by the government as illustrations of the fact that we are not spending money on the works that are properly within the purview of this parliament. When the hon. member says that the people of Oro are very largely benefited by being able to bring produce to Barrie by the casual boats that call at that wharf from time to time during the excursion season, I can only say that he is not as well informed as perhaps he will be when he becomes more familiar with the people of Oro. There is a railway also passes through the hamlet of Hawkestone and the people who wish to go to market, who do not drive into Barrie, avail themselves of that railway and do not rely upon the fact that once or twice or three times a week an excursion boat may call at the Hawkestone wharf. In regard to Barrie wharf, I may say that the money has been voted for many years. I am not going to enter into the somewhat difficult question between the hon. member (Mr. McCarthy) and the mayor of Barrie as to the reasons why that money has not been expended. I leave these gentlemen to fight that out among themselves. We have, however, the fact that the money in the first instance was granted just previous to an election, and as it was intended to serve the purpose of another election the work was put off, but a change has come over the spirit of the dream of the hon. member for North Simcoe, who is no longer seeking to represent his native town of Barrie, and so it will no longer serve election purposes as effectively as was expected at the time.

Chambord wharf, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a new work, and if so, what is the estimated cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost of this work is estimated at $8,000. It is in the large district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and you must recognize that the situation there is somewhat different from that in ordinary parts of the Dominion and of Ontario. The country is settling up and these people have no railway accommodation ; this is the only means they have of getting out their produce ; their only means of transportation is by water. Several of these works are for the purpose of improving the means of transportation in order that the settlers may bring in materials they require and ship out their products.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it a village or a fishing station ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has a population of 1,020 people along the coast.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention of the government to have the works undertaken by public tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All of these new works, these large works, are undertaken by contract.

Château Richer—harbour improvements, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This item is for harbour improvements at Château Richer, which is in the county of Montmorency, Quebec. It is proposed to remove rocks and to improve the passage along the north shore so as to permit barges or batteaux of eight to ten feet to pass safely over the bar and also for the construction of a small crib-work.

Mr. MORIN. I really think it is outrageous to vote $4,000 for that work at Château Richer. I know that place thoroughly, and I can say that steamboats never stop there ; boats stop there only when they are forced to do so by a storm. It is a poor place for a boat to land at any time, because a bar extends out into the river for about two miles. The only boats that go there are those which are engaged in the hauling of cord-wood to Quebec. These boats ply between this point and Quebec and they draw four, five or sometimes six feet of water. This is the only purpose for which a wharf is required, and there are two wharfs there already.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hon. gentlemen sometimes insinuate that these works are assigned to different localities for political purposes. I do not suppose my hon. friend will say that the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has succeeded in having works given to his constituency as a personal favour. Strong representations have been made to me that this was a very important work. It is represented that most of the inhabitants of Château Richer are owners of sailing vessels which are engaged in carrying stone, fire-wood, lime and other materials from points below Quebec to that city, taking back supplies of all kinds from Quebec. It appears that there are there thirty-five boats of a total carrying capacity of 3,500 tons. I am not personally acquainted with the place, but it was on the representations that I brought down this estimate for the purpose of making this improvement. It appeared to me that it was very important in the interests of the population, which numbers between 2,000 and 3,000, and of this very considerable trade which is now going on I should think under the circumstances that this would be a very desirable improvement.

Mr. MORIN. I do not consider politics in dealing with these matters ; I know very well who represents that county in this House, but that makes no difference to me, I am not speaking from political motives. I do not know any place in the province of Quebec or in Canada that has better railway facilities than Château Richer. In summer street cars run through there every ten minutes and in the winter there are three or four trains a day. The settlement is only about twelve miles below Quebec, and I know well that the only boats which go there go to load stone or cord-wood. You cannot get steamboats to land there because the channel of the river is on the south side right along the Island of Orleans, and when a steamer passes this point it is three or four miles away from Château Richer.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) know that Château Richer is an exceedingly important point because of its important stone quarries and also as a centre for the distribution of cord-wood. A very large proportion of the cord-wood used in the city of Quebec comes from that locality. In additions to that, as I said, there are very large stone quarries there. I suppose that about 50 per cent of all the stone that is used on macadamized streets in Quebec comes from that locality. It is practically impossible, under existing conditions, for the boats that go there to get into the wharf on account of certain obstacles that exist at that particular point. My hon. friend says that there are good railway facilities there, but I do not think the hon. gentleman would imagine, that they can carry stone or lime or wood on an electric railway. There is no freighting done by the electric railway there, as a matter of fact. As to the steam railway, it is the old story of the competition between water and rail carriage, with the additional disadvantage in this case, that it is a very short haul. It is not twelve miles, but eight miles, to the Montmorency Falls, and Château Richer is the second parish below.

Mr. MORIN. How much more than eight miles is it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is nearer twenty miles to this wharf than it is twelve. With respect to the freighting of stone and wood by railway, there would be the additional disadvantage of the high terminal charges at Quebec. Château Richer has been a very important centre for a great many years. I have in my own county a place called Beauport at which there is less business done than at Château Richer, but the Conservative government built a wharf there, and this government has repaired it although Beauport is within a very few miles of the city of Quebec. If there is any expenditure justifiable in these estimates it is the expenditure for Château Richer. It is an important centre which serves a section of the country which is rapidly growing.

Mr. MORIN. I do not rise to prevent this vote passing. If you have a whole lot of money to waste, go ahead and do it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Thanks.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this complete the work.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is for the purpose of removing boulders and obstructions at the entrance to the harbour and in the harbour itself. Of course it is not a great harbour like Quebec; it is a bay on the north shore of the St. Lawrence and it affords very convenient shipping facilities to the people.

Mr. MORIN. Go ahead; it is all right.

Desjardins—Allumette wharf, $7,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a new work, and the total cost is estimated by the chief engineer at $10,000. There is a small pier there now, and this is for the purpose of giving improved landing and shipping facilities.

Desjardins—Allumette wharf, $7,500.

Mr. MORIN. In what county is this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Pontiac county.

Douglastown—isolated block, $6,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by an isolated block?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is quite a large and important work and it is in the county of Gaspé. It is to build an isolated block 450 feet long, 24 feet wide at the top and from 26 to 30 feet high, giving 12½ feet at low water springtide. The total cost of this work will be $30,000. This is the commencement.

Gatineau river—protection of east bank below Canadian Pacific Railway bridge including purchase of land, $3,500.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the nature of that work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The river was said to be diverted by some government works and an action was brought in the courts, and the Dominion was condemned to pay damages. This is to pay the balance of the claim and to purchase a certain amount of land to prevent further claims. It would save a great deal of money if the whole thing had been bought in the first place.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this cover the whole expense?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the whole expense estimated by the government engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. Including the cost of the land?

Grande Rivière wharf—new covering, $800.

Mr. MORIN. Where is the Grande Rivière?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Gaspé county.

Mr. MORIN. All right; go ahead. If it is not in Gaspé county it is pretty sure to be in Bonaventure.

Kamouraska—extension of pier, $4,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to extend the wharf at Kamouraska, so as to give a depth of 16 feet at high water.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What boats call at this wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry to say I have not the information.

Mr. MORIN. If the minister will allow me, I will tell him. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers) got the government to put on a boat from Malbaie to Kamouraska. That boat is of no use whatever. It only makes a few trips in the summer and none in the winter; and on the Kamouraska side of the river the governmen built a wharf only to please a few of their friends.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All I know is that this work was commenced in 1887, and there has been over $23,000 spent upon it. Therefore, I assume that the work is of some importance, and that it will be of great advantage to the local trade, which suffers at present great disadvantages for the want of a sufficient depth of water. This is the total expenditure. There is a petition from the people in favour of the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there really no definite information as to how often a boat calls?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that there is no regular line of boats.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the size of the place, and what kind of trade is done? If only a tramp boat calls there occasionally, it seems to be doubtful wisdom to make this expenditure.

The PRIME MINISTER. Kamouraska is a very important village. In the summer time it is a large watering place. It is the county town of Kamouraska, and up to a few years ago was the judicial seat of the district of Kamouraska, which covered a group of counties. Some years ago the judicial seat was removed to Rivière du Loup, which is a more growing place. The trade of Kamouraska is chiefly that of a summer resort.

Mr. COCHRANE. Hear, hear; we have to pay the expenses of people going in bathing.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are mail boats plying between this place and Quebec. My hon. friend will remember that this work was not commenced by the present government, but by a government of which he was a supporter.

Mr. COCHRANE. And I dare say the right hon. gentleman found fault with it.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I did not. I never found fault with any good expenditure.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is always the answer we get—that the other government did it. The right hon. gentleman got into power because he said we did wrong ; and now, when we criticise anything, he says it was done by us. I can understand that a place might be important enough to have a wharf in days gone by, when there might have been a large local trade in lumber or something of that kind ; but all the conditions may since have changed. The right hon. gentleman tells us that this work is principally for a summer watering place ; and we have to go back to our constituents and tell them that we are voting money from the public exchequer to enable people to go in bathing and to accommodate some boats which carry them food. It is not a work required for the commerce of the country, because we understand that a steamer calls there only once in a while.

The PRIME MINISTER. This work amounts to no more to-day than it did before. It was commenced, and it has to be completed or left in an unfinished condition.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. gentleman's own explanation might be a justification for the commencement of an expenditure years ago which it would not be wise to continue at the present time. He tells us that this place was once a county town and the centre of a judicial district, but that other places having arisen in the meantime, it is not now the county town nor the centre of a judicial centre. There may have been a very important trade done there when the expenditure was commenced, which is now transferred to other places. I notice by the census that the village of Kamouraska has a population of only 578. It may have had a couple of thousand when it was the county town, and there may have been a justification for the expenditure then; but that would be no justification for continuing it if the trade and population have left the place, and the only business now done is by casual excursionists or by people who make a summer resort of the place.

Lake St. John—dredging, $3,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the maintenance and operation of our dredge on Lake St. John.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you have a number of special items for dredges and also half a dozen general items ? What is the reason they cannot all be dealt with either as particular items or as general items ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think there is any good reason. It is inconvenient to both the House and the department to have the estimates prepared in this way, and I hope in future to have the items for dredging classified in such a way as to put them in one group, so that we can see at a glance what amount of money is voted for dredging.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this part of some general scheme of dredging to be carried out at lake St. John, and what public interest can be advanced by spending money for that purpose ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The settlement and development of trade around lake St. John have been increasing very rapidly. The dredging is done at the mouths of the rivers emptying into lake St. John in order to improve the approaches to the wharfs built there. A very large pulp industry has started in that district in which several hundred thousand dollars are invested. The only means the farmers have of transmitting their produce to Roberval is by the lake.

Lake Nominingue—wharfs, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in Portneuf county and is new work.

Laprairie ice piers and protection wall—additional amount for works of reconstruction and repair, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the purpose of rebuilding the ice piers. There was an amount in the main estimates, but after consultation with the engineer I came to the conclusion that that amount was not sufficient and that if we were to rebuild in wood it would be the same old story of large expense on maintenance and continual repairs. I concluded that it would be very much better to make a permanent work out of concrete. The total cost will be about $30,000, and we have a vote of $5,000 in the main estimates, which with this amount will make $15,000, about half that cost. We shall call for tenders and have the piers reconstructed with concrete work.

Lotbinière wharf—improvements, $7,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a block there and this is for the purpose of connecting that block with the shore. The total estimated cost is $12,000. Some $14,000 have been expended on this in the past.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the necessity of the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a village about forty miles above Quebec which has not railway accommodation and entirely depends on boats and market steamers to reach the market at Quebec. The block costs $15,000 and it is very inconvenient to have boats start from the shore to the block. The idea is to make connections with the block which is at deep water.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the population ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 1,800.

Mr. SPROULE. This will complete the repairs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the chief engineer informs me that the repairs could not be carried out by tender, but the building of the connection between the block and the shore will be done by tender.

Maguasha—landing pier, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the construction of a landing pier 200 feet long and 30 feet wide.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How large is Maguasha ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). This is situated in a town which has a population of 2,446. It is a place from which the farmers from the upper part of the county cross over to Dalhousie the market town. This item was brought in at the request of the commission of public works of New Brunswick in order that there might be a proper landing in connection with the ferry on the Quebec side as well as on the New Brunswick side.

Mistook (Delisle) wharf, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost is $4,500 and it is a new work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the population of the town ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are 1,880 inhabitants according to the census of 1901.

Mr. MORIN. What county ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the district of Saguenay and Chicoutimi.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will it be built by tender ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In this district it is very difficult to get these works done by tender. It is the rule to purchase the material under the direction of the chief engineer and have the work done under his supervision by day labour.

Mont Louis—wharf, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the total estimated cost of this work.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. What county ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Gaspé.

Mr. MORIN. Will this be let by tender ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. In this case the minister takes one vote for the whole estimated cost of the work. In the case we have just been dealing with he asks for only $2,000 for a wharf that is estimated to cost $4,500. Why does he make this distinction ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The reason is that in the case of Mont Louis, it is expected that the wharf can be completed in one season, but, in the other case we expect to purchase the material during the winter and complete the work during next season, and so, if we took the whole vote, a part of it should lapse—it would be of no use. These estimates are made up under the advice of the officials of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. Where can the place be where you cannot complete a job costing $4,500 in one season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend must remember that the fiscal year ends on the 30th of June. He must remember also that in some of these districts the work of building cannot go on during the long winter. The only work that can be done is the getting out of the timber and, perhaps the stone.

Mr. FOWLER. How far apart are these two places ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know exactly, but many hundreds of miles.

Mr. HACKETT. It appears to me that Gaspé county is being very well favoured in this regard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These votes do not go by counties. But, the county of Gaspé has a coast line of about 300 miles. It naturally requires more works of this kind than a county with a coast line very much less.

Mr. HACKETT. Is this to accommodate the fishermen of the locality ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is this on the St. Lawrence or on the Baie des Chaleurs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is on the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Newport breakwater—extension, $6,800.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Newport is in Gaspé county.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the hon. gentleman give us some explanation of the previous history of this work and what is to be done now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete works already under contract. The original work was commenced in 1900. The work now referred to in this vote is an extension of the breakwater, a distance of 200 feet and to a depth of 15 feet at low water. The amount of the contract is $13,338.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the population ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). The population is 1,357.

Mr. GOURLEY. And it is on the Baie des Chaleurs ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Yes.

Mr. HACKETT. Would the minister make an explanation in regard to it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is to pay the balance of the contract for the work that was let a year ago.

New Richmond—breakwater, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a new work, and is approved by the ratepayers of the township of New Richmond.

Mr. FOWLER. The mere fact that the ratepayers of the district approve of the work is not a sufficient cause for the government to do it. There must be some reason why this expenditure should be made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was proceeding to say that the trade at the port of New Richmond consists chiefly in the export of deals, shingles, railway ties and fish, and the imports, of general merchandise. Forty vessels are engaged in this traffic annually. There is extensive fishing.

Mr. HACKETT. How far is New Richmond from Dalhousie ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). About 40 miles. New Richmond is one of the most progressive towns on the whole Baie des Chaleurs. It is one of the few places inhabited by English speaking people, and is well known as a famous fishing resort. It used formerly to have a vice-regal residence during the summer time, but that is now in the hands of the fishing people. Apart from its natural advantages, it is a place of much importance. At present there is no wharf, breakwater, and nothing of any kind to show that there is even a Department of Public Works in existence. There is a population of 3,200 people, who have to land in mud, or in open boats, or in scows, as best they can. The government have realized that the time has come when something should be done for the people of New Richmond.

Mr. HACKETT. Carried.

Notre Dame du Portage—wharf, $4,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In accordance with the estimate of the chief engineer of the department, it is proposed to construct a wharf at this place 16½ feet above high water at spring tide. It will be 370 feet long and 20 feet wide. Total cost, $7,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is Notre Dame du Portage ?

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Temiscouata.

Paspebiac—landing pier, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will be 400 feet long and 30 feet wide, estimated to cost altogether by the engineer $17,000. Paspebiac is the chief shipping port of the county of Bonaventure, in fact of the whole Gaspesian peninsula. There are wharfs now, but they are private property and cannot be used by fishermen and others.

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the minister to state how far Paspebiac is from Quebec.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It is situated on the Baie des Chaleurs. It is the oldest shipping port on the Baie des Chaleurs, the headquarters of the firm of Chas. Robin, Collas, Cie., one of the largest fish-shipping firms in the world, doing business in South America and the West Indies. The aggregate trade at this port last year was $334,000, duty collected, $8,800, as compared with $5,000 two years ago. Strange to say, though Paspebiac has been used as a shipping port for more than 125 years, there has never been a dollar of public money expended at that port. There is a small wharf at present belonging to this shipping firm, from which the fishermen and the general public are excluded. The government has realized the importance of this port, which is open for ten months in the year, and which, at no distant date, I hope will be used by the Intercolonial as a shipping port. The government has thought fit to give this small amount, relatively small compared with the importance of the port. I think the committee will have no objection under the circumstances, in a port of that importance, to voting this sum for a public wharf there.

Mr. GOURLEY. I see there is a railway to this place. Is that a branch of the Intercolonial ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Yes. Unfortunately, the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway belongs to the creditors at present, but it is operated by trustees. It has been extended to Paspebiac, though trains only run to New Carlisle, two miles from Paspebiac ; but there is no doubt that the moment that road gets into the hands either of the Intercolonial or into the hands of a good company, this port of Paspebiac will be utilized. It is one of the most important ports on the whole gulf of the St. Lawrence. Last year I had the honour of producing before this House a statement from Commander Wakeham, of the government steamer 'La Canadienne,' showing that navigation was quite possible for ten months of the year. If the Intercolonial, when it reaches Matapedia, instead of going on through New Brunswick to St. John, or through Nova Scotia to Halifax, simply branched off down to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and along the shore to Paspebiac, they would have the shortest route from Montreal to Liverpool barring none, not even Sydney, Halifax, St. John, Portland, or any other seaport on the Atlantic.

Mr. HACKETT. In this item we have a landing pier costing $10,000 at Paspebiac. What is the meaning of that and what is that pier for ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). To land passengers and freight and to do the general business of the port. There is no landing there now except the company's wharf from which the fishermen are excluded. There are 200 fishermen at this place and they have to land in the mud.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the minister what revenue he expects to derive from this wharf and any others that we have passed ? The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has explained the very great amount of business that is done at this port and we might have some estimate as to the probable revenue.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My experience with these fishing stations is that generally the revenue is very small. I could not, with any degree of confidence, give an estimate of the revenue to be derived from this wharf ; I do not expect there would be a very large revenue, judging from our experience with other places.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is expected that this pier will be used almost altogether by fishing boats and it cannot be expected that very much of this commerce will come to it.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It would be used by the general public as well as by the fishermen. At present there is only one wharf there and it is owned by this firm and is used for the firm's own purposes. The general public is debarred from access to it, except when some special arrangement is made as with the steamer that now performs the mail service.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does the mail steamer stop there ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It does.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does that pay a fee ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It would pay a fee when it stopped at a public wharf certainly.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me that this vote is very objectionable. I quite understand that if there were no wharfs at all in this bay the people should be accommodated, but it appears that here that company has built a wharf and that it exacts only such tolls as it has a right to charge the public for the use of the wharf. In our section of the country the wharfs are all built by private enterprise and of course the owners could not maintain them if they did not charge wharfage. Here is a company that has invested money in the construction of a wharf, and we are told by the hon. gentleman representing that county (Mr. Marcil) that a large sum of money is brought into the country in return for the large exports from that section of the country. Why should we cripple the company that has built a wharf there, if all they want is legitimate fees for the use of that wharf by the public. The government, as I understand, propose to spend $10,000 to build a wharf to cripple the company that has already built a wharf there. If the government constructed a free wharf which would come into competition with the company's wharf it would certainly cripple the company.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I cannot allow the statements of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken to pass uncontradicted. The wharf now in existence at this point is a company's wharf used exclusively for the company's business. There is a population of 1,700 people at Paspebiac who have no wharf accommodation at all. As I have said the public can use the company's wharf only when a special arrangement is made as for example when a steamer should call there, but any schooner coming along is not permitted to land at this wharf.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Paspebiac—landing pier, $10,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. When the House rose I was speaking about this vote, and the minister did not give me any information. We have learned from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux), who represents the riding, that there is in the neighbourhood of $300,000 worth of business a year done at this point, and that the people needed a wharf. But the fishing company have a wharf there now, and why should the government enter into competition with it ? I am satisfied that no company will refuse wharfage privileges to fishermen or anybody else if they are willing to pay wharf dues. I don't blame the people for wanting the government to build them a wharf that they can use for nothing, but is it fair to the company who have already spent a large sum of money there in building a wharf. The government will have to borrow this $10,000 at 3½ per cent, say, and it will take at least 2½ per cent annually to repair this wharf, so that 6 per cent on the $10,000 expenditure would cost us $600 a year. I fancy that if the government wants to go into this business they can make an arrangement with the company to give these fishermen the use of their wharf for less than $600 a year. This expenditure is not justified under the circumstances.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken about the situation there. This is a large company, and they have no more wharf accommodation than is necessary for their own business, so that outside steamers and fishermen cannot use it. I should think that although the receipts from these wharfs are small, as a rule, that in this case they would pay the cost of maintenance. If there was a private wharf there that could be used for public purposes, the case would be different, but my information is that the company use this wharf for their own business, and that it does not afford accommodation for the general trade.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the minister must be mistaken about that. Along the shores of Lake Ontario, in incorporated and county towns, where they must have as much business as has Paspebiac, I never heard of a wharf that was not capable of handling all the business that came to it. This company makes its living out of the fishermen, and they are as much interested in accommodating them as in accommodating anybody else. It does not require such a great number of ships to carry away $300,000 worth of fish.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The statistics show that last year 32 vessels entered at that wharf from Great Britain, British West Indies, Brazil, Norway and Sweden, Spain and the United States; and 60 vessels cleared to Great Britain, British West Indies, Brazil, St. Pierre, Norway and Sweden and the United States. The total tonnage was over 35,000 tons, and the customs receipts alone for that place last year were $9,000. We certainly should give the people there some accommodation to carry on their business.

Mr. COCHRANE. Sixty vessels during 10 months' navigation would only mean six a month.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were 92 ocean-going vessels in all, not counting the fishing craft.

Mr. FRASER. And some large vessels might be there for quite a while.

Mr. COCHRANE. They might be in the sky. The wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot err in seeing that the government is spending this money simply because the people down there do not want to pay for the use of the wharf already in existence.

Perce—Extension of pier in north cove, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in Gaspé county, and the work is to afford protection to vessels in north-easterly gales, and to give additional landing and shipping facilities. The estimated cost is $27,000.

Mr. GOURLEY. How long has the present pier been built?

Mr. COCHRANE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The original pier was built in 1889.

Pierreville—wharf, $7,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in the county of Yamaska. It is a new work. The total cost is estimated at the amount we are asking for. It will be built by contract.

Pointe aux Trembles—wharf, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for the construction of a wharf on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, which will be available at all times for the use of steamers. It is in the county of Portneuf. The total cost of the work will be $12,000. It is a new work.

Pointe Fortune wharf—improvements, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is required to complete the renewal of the superstructure of the government wharf. The total cost of the work is $5,000. This will pay the balance.

Port Daniel—extension of wharf and approach to same, $7,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in Bonaventure county. It is to make provision for an estimate submitted by the acting engineer for extending the government wharf a distance of 600 feet to a depth of 25 feet at low water. The present wharf is 425 feet long, and reaches a depth of 13 feet at low water. The vote also includes some repairs to the approach to the wharf.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are we to understand by the approach? If it was possible to get on to the old wharf, it will be possible to get on to the extension.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is called the approach is not on the land, but is the portion of the wharf that runs from the land, which is in need of repair.

Repentigny—wharf, $6,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for a new wharf. It is on the St. Lawrence, in the county of L'Assomption. The total cost of the work is estimated to be the amount of the vote.

Rimouski—extension of pier and tidal basin, including repairs, $30,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is to make provision for repairing the present pier and for carrying on the works required for the formation of a tidal basin at the end of the pier. The vote is for the immediate repair of the present wharf, which is in danger of going down. The engineers have reported that there ought to be a tidal basin at this very important point with sixteen feet of water. At the present time, as hon. gentlemen know, tenders have to go from this port to the large boats to bring in the mails and passengers. There is a great deal of lumber and other freight shipped from this point, and there has been an application from all parts of the country for some kind of a port on the St. Lawrence. According to the estimates of the engineers, the works necessary to form a port for general navigation at Rimouski would cost about $240,000. The whole matter is being looked into by the engineers of the department. I may say that the Wolvin Line has now ten boats on the route from the lakes to the lower St. Lawrence. The company have procured large limits, and they have represented to me that they were cutting pulp wood in that part of the country, and shipping it over the Intercolonial Railway. If they had a good port where they could take all the wood that could be furnished to them, they would bring back to the west this wood as return freight. They are doing a very large business, and that is one reason why we have had a much lower rate on grain during the present season than we ever had before. If the company can bring down wheat, and take other freight back, they can lower the rates both ways very much. From Quebec east there does not seem to be a good natural harbour on the St. Lawrence, and representations have been made to me of the necessity of having a good port down there. Rimouski is a central point. It may be that before next session a report will be got with regard to this and other places which may be available as harbours on the lower St. Lawrence. In the meantime this vote is for the purpose of improving the wharf at Rimouski, which is reported to be in a very dangerous state. It would be disastrous to the commerce of the country if we had no wharf there. At the present time the Intercolonial runs a branch out on this wharf, and there is danger of it being, from neglect or decay, washed away altogether.

Mr. COCHRANE. What does the hon. minister mean by a tidal basin ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A tidal basin is where ordinary sea-going vessels can go at high tide.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has any contract been let for this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Rivière St. Maurice—dredging eastern channel, &c., $5,000.

Mr. BUREAU. This channel runs between the eastern shore and the island of St. Christophe. On this island there is a saw-mill, the owner of which, I may tell my hon. friend, to relieve his conscience, is a very good Tory.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not know this.

Mr. BUREAU. I do and I felt it. There is no other way by which they can ship lumber from this mill in barges and there is not enough water for the barges to get to the wharf so that the channel has to be deepened. A new mill has also been built opposite on the main shore, and the channel requires to be enlarged in order to allow boats coming up and down to cross each other.

Rivière Jesus—dredging, $6,000.

Mr. LEONARD. I understand that that work is going on now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. LEONARD. Who is doing it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is going on and applications have been made to me for a sum of $4,000 more to complete it. It is said to be doing a great deal of good, and urgent representations have been made to continue it. The work is being done by the Canadian Construction Company.

Mr. LEONARD. I am told that the work is going on only on the north side of the river, thus favouring the county of Terrebonne, and that none is being done in my county.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My chief engineer tells me that the work is going on in the natural channel of the river. Whether it is nearer one shore or the other would depend on the channel.

Mr. LEONARD. Is it the intention of the government to do dredging on both sides ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The intention is to dredge the channel, and I may have to ask for a further vote.

Rivière Ouelle pier—repairs, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for whatever repairs are required to the government pier at Pointe Aux Orignaux. The Intercolonial has extended its railway down to this point so as to connect with the steam ferry which crosses over to Murray Bay.

Rivière Verte—improvements at mouth of, $3,750.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since the construction of a dam there, there is a flooding each year which damages property.

Mr. LANCASTER. If this occurs every year, how have we managed in other years when there was no vote ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This dam causes the ice to jam and then the water overflows. The dredging will prevent that overflow.

Mr. COCHRANE. The same difficulty arises at the mouth of the Moira river, at Belleville. That city is flooded very often and a large amount of damages caused. Has anything been done to prevent that ? I always understood that the damages were due to the fact that the debris floating down the river accumulated where the water was shallow and caused it to overflow.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think that that matter has been brought to the attention of the department. My chief engineer says he has no knowledge of it. But of course that being a navigable river, I dare say we would be called upon to do the necessary works to prevent damage.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is on the bay that the difficulty is where the Moira river flows into it. The accumulation takes place there, not in the river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will agree to make the improvements if we have it within our jurisdiction. If the plan was approved by the department, there is no doubt liability on the part of the Dominion to make the improvement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has this dam been constructed by the government or by private parties ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a new dam approved of by the government, the building of which has created this need of repairs.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would think that if the nuisance were created by a dam constructed by private parties, any person aggrieved by that work should have a right of action to recover damages against the parties who constructed it. I can hardly see how the Crown would be called upon to relieve from liability the private individuals who constructed the dam.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was a suit of Graham against the King, which affirmed the liability of the government because the government had approved of the work which was constructed by private parties. That dam was constructed on the Ottawa river a few miles from the city, and the parties were allowed $3,500 in damages.

Mr. COCHRANE. The government allowed it to be done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was no liability. The department, and I suppose the Department of Justice as well, thought that the government were liable for allowing it to be done. But outside of legal liability, we have always acted upon the policy that when works were allowed to be done upon navigable rivers that caused any obstruction which did not exist before, it was our duty to make these improvements when such works required them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not aware of any decisions affecting the Crown for having approved of a public work or that rendered us liable for damages occasioned by the construction of such work. If there are any such decisions I would think it very advisable they should be carried to a court of appeal. If the court of appeal should determine that we are liable, it seems to me one of two things should be done : Either we should amend the law by providing that there shall be no liability by reason of approving the plans, that any liability shall be confined to the private individuals constructing the work, and that the action for damages shall not be taken away by the fact that the Crown approves the works. Otherwise in every case where works are approved by the government there should be great care taken to investigate the question as to whether those works are liable to lead to any damage for which action could be brought ; and in all cases a proper security should be taken from persons constructing the work that they will indemnify the Crown in respect of any such damages. But it seems to me manifestly absurd that the Crown, by reason of approving works which are constructed for the benefit of private individuals, should be liable in damages created by the construction of those works. There is an absolute flaw, either in the legislation or the administration of the department. If a private individual requires the sanction of the Crown for the construction of works to be operated for his private benefit, he certainly should assume all the liability that might accrue by reason of the construction of those works. The duty of the Crown should be confined, I think, to this : As the works are being constructed on navigable waters, the Crown should see to it that the erection of those works does not interfere with navigation—that is all the Crown is called upon to do. And I think the statute should be amended so as to provide that the remedy of a private individual against the person constructing the work is not taken away, and at the same time that the Crown, by reason of its approval, is not to be rendered liable for damages so occasioned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed by the deputy minister that in this case, to which I referred, of Graham against the King, I made a little mistake. The improvements were made by the Crown and not by private individuals. But our idea was that the liability where we approved of them would be the same as if we had done the work ourselves.

River Saguenay—dredging, $15,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a large development of trade on the Saguenay river at the present time. The pulp industry alone on that river amounts on an average to 120 tons per day. That is all for foreign shipment. Up to the present time they have carried that out in barges for a considerable distance, eight or nine miles, to a point where the water is deep enough to allow the vessels in which it is to be transhipped to approach the land. It was thought that the dredging should be undertaken at an early date. We hope to go on with it next spring, and we ask for this small vote in the meantime to start the work.

Mr. GOURLEY. I thought the river Saguenay was navigable for large steamers up to Chicoutimi.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Richelieu steamers go to the wharf at Chicoutimi at high tide. The great development of trade in that country will make it necessary, if possible, to get a channel that will allow them to reach the wharf at low tide. We intend to do this dredging with our own plant.

Mr. GOURLEY. To fourteen feet at low tide ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is what we aim at.

River St. Louis—improvements, $15,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for dredging a channel six miles long, and thirty feet wide and six feet deep at ordinary low water, from the intersection of the canal into Lake St. Francis, with a view to preventing the periodical overflow of lands adjoining the water-course. The total cost will be $25,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not quite see how the need for it arises.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is in connection with a long standing grievance with the people who live on the shore of the river. The government built a dike along the shore, and in that there is an opening. The proprietor of the mill at the other end of the stream claims this to be his property. I may say that this story is an old one. The difficulty dates as far back as 1837. The government have, at times, acknowledged the claim and at other times resisted it. The little stream is very shallow, and when the gate is open the lands on both sides are flooded, causing a serious grievance. The proprietor of the mill has taken suit against the Crown to have that gate declared to be his property, and that he has exclusive control of it. I do not wish to commit myself or say anything as to what the result of the suit is likely to be ; but I have advised that, in case the result of the suit should be in favour of this man, whose name is Robert, it would be wise to make provision to dredge the river. I do not mean to say we are going to lose, but it is wise to make provision.

Mr. LANCASTER. I quite understand that the hon. minister would not care to discuss the merits of the case, but would it not be well to wait until it is decided before we authorized the expenditure ? Would it not make a difference in the case itself how we view this matter ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There have been interlocutory proceedings that are indicative of what is likely to happen. The case has not proceeded because it happens that the judge is on the Pacific coast at this time. If the gate is opened this autumn the results will be very serious. The lands are hay lands, and, if water spreads out and the frost comes, there would be very serious damage to the farmer and very serious cases of damages against the government. The overflow would be by the canal which we built for which we are responsible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps I do not quite understand the facts. The gate to which the hon. gentleman refers is some distance away from the property of the owner of the mill ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The gate is on the side of the river, and then there is a highway and then the land affected.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why does he want to open the gate and let the water in upon the lands ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The mill is immediately below the lands affected, and the water to reach the mill must come down by the stream. He claims that he cannot operate the mill successfully because we keep the gate closed and deprive him of a certain portion of the water.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the better way would be to buy the mill.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is a rather important mill and I need not say to a gentleman of the experience of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) how this importance grows when it comes to a question of the government exercising any claim with regard to any property.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not like to commit ourselves without information, and the most important information would be the decision in the suit that the hon. minister was speaking about. It cannot be many months until that will be decided. We have got along without this expenditure all these years, and I do not understand that the state of facts has changed. There may be, perhaps, an increasing damage to the people, but still, that must go on at a very slow rate, as I understand the minister. I do not understand why we should be in such a hurry to vote this money for these improvements until the suit has been decided.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Looking over the papers I find that, as far back as 1891 or 1892, application was made for a petition of right. We took possession of the gate forcibly and keep it closed, and the petition of right was persistently refused until last year, when it was granted. I cannot say what the result of the suit will be, but I know the opinions that have been expressed by previous judges. And, if the case goes against us, there may be serious damages against the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In my own province, under such conditions, the proprietor of a mill flooding the lands of other people would be liable to damages unless he had acquired the right by grant or by prescription.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If the stream continued in its natural course, the lands as they stand would be flooded. As I understand—and, no doubt the principle is the same in my hon. friend's province—the proprietor of the mill below would have the right to the flow of water in its natural condition. But the flow has not been in its natural condition for a good many years, and the result is that the proprietors abutting on the river have reclaimed lands on either side. They would have no claim against the mill below if the water flowed in its natural course and flooded lands as it did originally before anything was done.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is this the first item of expenditure for this work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I notice there is an expenditure of $900 last year in this locality.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are considerable public works there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I do not know the length of the flow of the water before it reaches the mill. One would think that if proprietors reclaim land along the bed of a navigable stream they would not have much to complain of, because any man who reclaims land along the stream is bound to raise dikes of some kind to keep the water off the land. Would it not be cheaper, if liability is assumed, to do it that way—building a dike on either side ? Has any investigation been made ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, the Railway Department have large works and have built a big dike in connection with their works. I do not know whether it is the result of the building of that dike, but that is what is claimed at any rate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officers of the Public Works Department deny that this is the result of our work. I had a report made by the engineer of the department and the remedy suggested is the dredging for which I am now asking a vote.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

River du Loup (Fraserville)—harbour improvements, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a very important point and $250,000 have been spent on this harbour previous to and since confederation. The trade is increasing very much. One of the items in the report of the engineer is that over 20,000,000 feet of lumber was shipped from this wharf during the past year. I am now having an investigation made by the engineers of the department for a large extension of this work, an extension which will probably cost a considerable amount of money under all the conditions. The present vote we are taking for the purpose of making such improvements as we can at the present time. In addition to the 20,000,000 feet of lumber shipped last year there is a considerable general trade.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who owns the wharf there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The government.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there any revenue from it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a very considerable revenue but I have not the figures here. From my own recollection of the returns of the department I can say that there is a very large revenue.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman explain the nature of the improvements ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineers are now making a general investigation. In a report which my hon. friend may have seen reference is made to the growing trade on the St. Lawrence and the desirability of important improvements being made at one or more ports on that river to afford sufficient facilities for this growing trade. Perhaps my hon. friend did not hear me state that the engineer mentions the shipment of 20,000,000 feet of lumber from that port last year. The Intercolonial road is extended to this wharf and in addition to the lumber trade there is a very large general trade. Until I get the report of the engineers with regard to the whole question of establishing better accommodation on the St. Lawrence, I could not say whether we will go on with these works or not ; that will be for consideration at a future session of parliament. But I may say that the reports, so far as I have seen them, indicate that the estimated cost of the improvements at Rivière du Loup is between $200,000 and $250,000. However, I am asking for this vote in connection with the improvements that are required at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what will the improvements consist ; in giving an increased depth of water or the erection of wharfs and accommodation of that kind ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for increasing the depth of water, but some of it will be used in improving the basin and general improvements to the works we have there now.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will there be dredging ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there would be a good deal of dredging if we went on and made the protected basin or artificial harbour of which I spoke. A very large proportion of the estimate I have taken will be used in dredging this artificial basin or harbour. The present purpose is to improve the accommodation for vessels that come to the wharf and to extend the deepwater.

Mr. LANCASTER. What proportion of the $20,000 would be used in that way ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry to say that I cannot give that information exactly. It is a large general work in which a great deal of money has to be spent and the work is not divided.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is this under contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for improvements and repairs which will be done by our own plant.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there any contract in relation to any part of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If we went on with all the work there would be, but repairs and dredging immediately necessary we will do with our own plant.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The export is chiefly lumber ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Chiefly lumber.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the lumber sawn at Rivière du Loup or is it brought down the river, or it brought there by railway ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is brought there by railway.

Mr. GAUVREAU. Rivière du Loup is a prosperous town which has a very important trade. It is the first divisional point on the Intercolonial Railway below Quebec.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the population ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. Six thousand. A great quantity of lumber is brought there over the Intercolonial Railway, and especially over the Temiscouata Railway from New Brunswick. The counties of Temiscouata and Kamouraska are tributary to Rivière du Loup, and there are in the neighbourhood important lumbering operations. We have Mr. Fraser at Cabano, who exported last year over 20,000,000 feet of lumber, and we expect that if these improvements are made at Rivière du Loup many firms will send their lumber by the Temiscouata Railway and by the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial Railway has a branch down to the wharf. At the present time there is no accommodation for the vessels coming there and we have to first load the lumber on barges and tow these barges quite a distance from the shore in order to load the vessels. As soon as they have accommodation the vessels can come alongside the wharf, which will save time and money and increase the traffic at Rivière du Loup to a large extent.

Mr. GOURLEY. What depth of water is there at the present time ?

Mr. GAUVREAU. About six or eight feet.

Mr. GOURLEY. What depth will there be when the improvements are made ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are supposed to give twenty-five feet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Every hon. member who goes to and from the maritime provinces via the Intercolonial Railway knows that Rivière du Loup is a very important point. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works rather misled me about it, as in the estimate he gives the first half of the name in English and the second half in French, and on behalf of my friends from the province of Quebec, I am going to object to that. I would like to know whether or not the lumber trade is likely to increase ? Are there limits there to supply that trade for a great many years to come ; is it a trade that will develop ? If it is, I think this expenditure would be amply justified.

Mr. GAUVREAU. A large area of timber limits will be developed by this accommodation, and if we had time to look over the report made last year by the board of trade of Rivière du Loup, we would see that it is anticipated that 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 feet of lumber will be exported from this same port.

Mr. GOURLEY. Why is the word 'Fraserville' inserted in the item ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is really the same thing. Fraserville is the name under which the old parish and Rivière du Loup had been incorporated. Rivière du Loup is now a town and the name 'Fraserville' is taken from the old seigneurs who were named Fraser and who were descendants of Colonel Fraser, who was a well-known Hudson bay man in our country.

Sacré-Coeur—wharf, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in the district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it a new wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is for a new wharf 210 feet long and 25 feet wide. The intention was to get out the timber this winter and the total cost of this work when completed will be $8,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the population ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the population, but it is in the district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, which is being settled very fast. There has been a cheese factory erected there, and there is considerable business. The people now have to team their produce to Tadousac over a very bad road.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is this work to be let by tender and public advertisement ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Shegawake—harbour improvements, $4,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the nature of these improvements ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in Bonaventure, and we have had a petition from the inhabitants. It is undertaken on the report of the resident engineer who reports that a small wharf there would cost $7,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. This $4,000 is a vote on account.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). This is situated in the township of Hope, which has a population of 2,411. This township runs along the Baie des Chaleurs for fifteen miles, and the people have no accommodation of any kind in the shape of a landing pier at which to do their business.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the nature of the business ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It is a general lumbering, farming and fishing business, and Shegawake is the most important settlement in that township. It is largely populated by the descendants of United Empire Loyalists.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a wonder they didn't build a wharf themselves long ago.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). The only wharf in that locality is Port Daniel, ten miles east, or New Carlisle, twenty miles to the west.

Seven Islands—wharf, $25,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is that for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for the construction of a deepwater pier on the west side of Bay of Seven Islands. The pier will run out in a northerly direction, nearly at right angles to the shore, and it will have a total length of 1,325 feet, reaching a depth of 48 feet at low water spring tide. The estimated cost is $65,000. The reason for the work is that there is a most important development going on at that place, and there are now large pulp mills in that district which was up to a year or so ago almost unknown.

Mr. GOURLEY. Where is it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Opposite the west side of Anticosti Island, almost due north.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have been led to understand that this property is entirely in the hands of a private corporation which has monopolized the whole business, and that they alone will be benefited by the expenditure of this money. A full explanation is necessary, as to how the public interest will be served by this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I know something of the Bay of Seven Islands, and of this wharf—partly built by a private company. The deputy minister has just informed me that this bay is six miles long and two and a half miles wide, but it looked to me even more extensive than that, when I was there. The north shore of the St. Lawrence in this locality is now experiencing a wonderful development. As we know, our pine timber in Quebec has practically become exhausted, and our spruce limits are now being exploited. There are no spruce limits in Canada equal to those of the Lower St. Lawrence and the Gaspé peninsula.

Mr. GOURLEY. Nova Scotia comes first.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will let my hon. friend have his opinion as regards that, but we will still retain ours. There is no objection to a man standing up for his own province. There is only one place suitable for trans-Atlantic shipment from Tadousac down to the Bay of Seven Islands.

Mr. GOURLEY. Where is it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is a place which is very well known to the people of the province of Quebec, and which is fast becoming known all over Canada. It is immediately at the entrance to the gulf, opposite Anticosti.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are building a railway there now.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I was going to refer to that. There are very extensive establishments now at the Bay of Seven Islands, but there is no shipping point in the whole of that district. Nature has done more than human ingenuity could possibly devise, to make the Bay of Seven Islands a splendid harbour, and with a comparatively small outlay it can be made perfect for shipping purposes. The entrance is from the west ; it is protected from easterly gales so that it affords perfect accommodation for shipping. The harbour is absolutely landlocked. I do not think I need say more, than that the people who have gone in there have sufficient confidence in the future of the place, to invest over a million dollars in the erection of important pulp works. When my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Richardson) says that only one private company will be benefited, I have no doubt he has in mind the Seven Islands Pulp Company, of which Messrs. Meaney and Clarke of New York and Toronto, are the chief shareholders. But in addition to that there are the Boyds, who I think come from Bobcaygeon, Ont., and who have large limits in the neighbourhood, and they, to my knowledge own a portion of this bay. I may say that they have applied for a charter for a railway to connect their limits with the Bay of Seven Islands, and in order to accommodate this locality, it is absolutely necessary that we should make this expenditure.

Mr. GOURLEY. The limits are on the north side ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, all on the north side. There are very important rivers there, with very important water-powers. I would ask my hon. friends simply to look at the map and realize that the whole of the north shore of the St. Lawrence from Tadousac down to Labrador is without a single harbour. As they know, the island of Anticosti has for many years borne the name of the graveyard of the St. Lawrence, so numerous have been the wrecks in the neighbourhood of that island. If a vessel is wrecked on the lower St. Lawrence, there is nothing to be done but to take her to Quebec or to Halifax. It is of the greatest importance to the navigation of the St. Lawrence that there should be a port in the Bay of Seven Islands, which would be a place of refuge for the vessels, and where they could be repaired. It would be in the public interest to have a wrecking plant and a dry-dock there. It is really more central than Quebec, where there is a wrecking plant now. When a vessel gets aground, it is of the utmost importance that she should be taken off at the earliest possible moment, so as to be saved the consequences of the terrible battering she would get if a storm came on. If a vessel happens to be stranded and is allowed to remain on the rocks for a week, and one of those terrific storms which we have down there comes on, she will, as the saying is, practically pound the bottom out of herself. This place is not in my constituency, but is in the constituency of my hon. friend (Mr. Girard); but it is the only point on the lower St. Lawrence where there is a harbour, and it is important that we should have at that central point conveniences for enabling us to go to the help of vessels which may be wrecked in the locality. This work is not for the benefit of one firm only. All those American firms which come in there for the purpose of exploiting our spruce limits will use this port as a port of shipment. How can you ship pulp from the lower St. Lawrence if you cannot get vessels into a harbour whence it can be shipped ? You have to put it on lighters and send it to some harbour elsewhere; and you cannot ship it in stormy weather at all. If you look at the map, you will see that from the entrance to the harbour of the Bay of Seven Islands there is an absolutely straight line to the other side of the ocean, with nothing intervening; and this port is equally convenient if you want to ship the products south to the United States. So that it has all the natural advantages that a port should have. You cannot expect to have any great agricultural development on the lower St. Lawrence. You may have some mineral development in the future; but there is nothing that I know of in the immediate future except the development of pulp and lumber, and the only harbour from which these can be shipped is the Bay of Seven Islands.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the distance from there to Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It must be 300 miles.

Mr. GOURLEY. I concur in the view that all these harbours in the St. Lawrence river should be thoroughly exploited. Our whole sea-coast has, in fact, been sadly neglected. But there is a suspicion over here that this is done for the benefit of some private company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not deny that there is one private company, the Seven Islands Company, that is going to benefit very largely. But it will not be benefited to any greater extent than other companies which are in the course of development.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two years ago I do not suppose there was any person living at that point, while now there are 300 families; and the general development will go on.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am not concerned about the country not being an agricultural country. The poorest country in the world is an agricultural country, while the country that turns out to be the most valuable is the rocky country. There are parts of Nova Scotia where there is nothing but rock, but it is full of gold. If this is an honest vote for the purpose of serving the trade of the country and promoting its development, then it is desirable; but we do not want any of the public money of this country to be exploited for the benefit of private associations or people with a political pull. The great danger of Canada is that our public money, instead of being used for the benefit of the country, should be pulled away for political purposes; and that must have been the case in the past, for the enormous sums of money we have voted in the last twenty years ought to have given us many navigation facilities; yet, so far as

Nova Scotia is concerned, we have scarcely begun to get our seaports into proper condition.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friends from Ontario know the Boyds, of Bobcaygeon, as one of the largest and most respectable firms in that province; and they know that they are not political partisans of ours.

Mr. SPROULE. I know the Mossom, Boyd firm, and I know that, like all other firms of lumbermen, they are quite willing that the government should spend money for their needs in any part of the country. It may be that a harbour of refuge is required at this point. If so, that would be a strong argument for spending the money. But if it is only for the purpose of helping one, two or even three firms that have made investments there in pulp or timber, then I do not think it is altogether defensible. We have a great many men engaged in that line of business in Ontario, and it is a very rare occasion when they apply to the government for a harbour or a dock to enable them to carry on their business. If the hon. Minister of Justice will go along Georgian bay and the Manitoulin islands, he can count the docks by the dozen which have been built by lumbermen for their own needs and in very few instances did they get any aid from the government. Years ago I applied on behalf of some of these to get a small expenditure made, and I was told that it was not the object of the government, nor did they intend to make expenditure for the purpose of helping private individuals. In cases where there is a harbour or a large town, and where considerable business is done by water, the government may consider themselves justified in spending public money in the general interests, but not for the purpose of helping some one to get out timber who had acquired large lumber limits in the district. There is one instance down here in Quebec, Grand river, where there was an expenditure made for no other purpose than to help a lumbering firm which had acquired timber limits there. After the timber is gone, after the pulp wood has disappeared, what will become of this harbour?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I look upon this particular item as of vital importance. We should develop as much as we can industries in the lower St. Lawrence. The harbour of refuge is the first consideration, and this is the only natural harbour on the whole of that coast.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the water very deep?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, you can float any vessel in it. The deputy minister says it is fifty feet deep. I have gone in there on the 'King Edward,' which is not a very large boat, but it looked like a small sail boat when we got within the harbour. As a harbour of refuge it is an ideal place. The industry established at that place is not an ordinary saw-mill, but a manufactory of pulp, and it seems to me most desirable that we should encourage people to come in and manufacture pulp in our own country. In order to get them to do that, we must provide them with shipping facilities.

Mr. VROOMAN. After listening to the explanation of the hon. Ministetr of Justice, I am convinced that this vote will do considerable good. The firm mentioned are constituents of mine, and are men of very considerable repute.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Supporters of yours?

Mr. VROOMAN. Yes, and this assistance which is given to a large industry is one that should commend itself to the House, more particulalrly as it will also operate to the advantage of shipping by providing a safe harbour of refuge.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was evidently mistaken when he spoke of Grand river as being a place where some public money has been wasted. I presume that he alluded to Grande Vallée, in the county of Gaspé. In Grand river there is only an expenditure of $800 provided in the estimates. But regarding Grande Vallée, I may tell my hon. friend that he is completely in error. The money spent there will be well spent. It is the only harbour on that side of the coast, and I may tell him further that I had no political advantage to gain by this expenditure, because there are no voters of mine there. Although there is a population of 800, these people do not vote, because they are not erected into a municipality.

Mr. SPROULE. I know nothing about that; but I know that at Grande Vallée, the government did not own a foot of land, and had to buy the road to the wharf. There is no settlement there, no village, no shipping interests. But there is a firm which has large timber limits there and which wanted this expenditure to be done for its own purposes. Go to the Manitoulin islands, where there are large limits; go to Providence bay or to Michael's bay, and take the other bays along the coast where large firms are carring on their operations, and not a dollar of public money has been expended to enable them to carry on their business. But at Grande Vallée we find the very reverse. We find the public money expended there for no other purpose than to enable private individuals to prosecute their own enterprises. So far as the present vote is concerned, if this is a suitable harbour of refuge, it is justifiable in my opinion to spend money in order to improve it, and if there are great industries there, that will be additional reasons, but what we desire on this side is information which will justify us for voting this money.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that a company have gone in there to exploit this pulp wood industry and the government is making a grant to them, and to that extent adding value to their property—adding much more value than probably the Minister of Finance understood. The need for a harbour of refuge existed before this company came there, but it was not until this company came to exploit this business that this need for a harbour of refuge began to be felt, and we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that in the estimates the government are making a handsome grant to private enterprise.

Sabrevois wharf—improvements, $1,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I notice last year that there was expenditure to complete this wharf for $898. How is it we have another vote this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is on the report of the engineer, and in a great many of these cases we thought that a certain amount would complete the works. Seven thousand five hundred dollars have been spent on this work already. Where there are large public works, there will be something for repairs from time to time, but wherever work is going on, I am most anxious that we should know exactly the amount. My desire is to change the system so as to inform the committee of the exact amount.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Of course, the engineer could make an estimate showing practically just what the repairs would cost when the expenditure is only about $1,000. I suppose there is only one wharf there, and I suppose that the expenditure of a year ago was made on an estimate showing what it would cost to put the wharf in good repair. The Auditor General's Report shows that the expenditure was $998.07 to complete the work. But now again we are asked for a similar amount. The minister will find about the same with regard to these other small wharfs in this list.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is mainly for a stone embankment to protect the work.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why was this not included in the first place ? It appears to me there is a good deal of force in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid, Grenville) has said. This way of spending money is very misleading to the committee. Last year we voted money supposing that it was all that was required to complete this work. This year we find a call for a further appropriation. To say the least of it, it looks a little suspicious. I suppose the minister acts upon the advice of his engineer, but why should the engineer report in this way? If there is any explanation for making these expenditures in this fashion, we should have it. I am sure that you, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Macdonald), remember how, in years gone by, when the party I support was in power, we heard it often said that the government was spending the people's money to buy the constituencies. I suppose the Minister of Public Works remembers that also. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), I am sure, remembers it well. If the late government spent the money to buy up the constituencies, what is this government doing ?

Mr. GOURLEY. The Minister of Trade and Commerce does not hear you.

Mr. COCHRANE. Oh, yes he does. He cannot stay in the House long at a time discussing these estimates, and I attribute that to the fact that they remind him of the days gone by, when he used to harass the Conservative government.

Mr. GOURLEY. Get the Prime Minister to work him up.

Mr. COCHRANE. No ; I am not speaking in that way at all. I do not want to harass the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Prime Minister. I know that in their sober moments——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am sorry that hon. members on this side of the House take it so lightly. For my part, I take it very seriously. I feel very much as the Minister of Trade and Commerce felt, no doubt, when he sympathized with the farmers, and said that under an expenditure of $35,000,000 they were being bled white. I would like to hear from the hon. gentleman what the complexion of the farmers is now, when we are voting between $80,000,000 and $100,000,000 for one year. And I do not understand how you can be so pleasant about this matter, Mr. Chairman. But I can understand why you say 'carried' so quickly over every item. These things must harass your mind, and you do not want to think of how the money is being squandered. When hon. gentlemen opposite used to charge the government that I support with spending the people's money to buy up the constituencies, I sometimes really thought that they believed there was something in it. But now I see that they must have known that it was a statement made to mislead the public, for we see them supporting a government that has far more than doubled the expenditure. We find one hon. gentleman opposite, one who has attained a venerable age, who gets more money spent in his constituency than any other member in Nova Scotia. I would urge the Prime Minister to consider the result of this lavish expenditure of the public money. If it goes on, the government will have to borrow to meet the obligations they are entering into this year. I wish the Minister of Public Works would tell us what he means when he speaks of the report of the engineer. The engineer does not go to a place of his own volition. He goes because he is sent. And, no doubt, he goes with instructions that certain things are to be done and he is to report on them. I wish to repeat what I have said time and again. Neither I nor any other member from Ontario will object to public expenditure on the ground that it is not in our own province. I do not care where the money is spent, so long as it is spent in the best interest of the Dominion as a whole. But I do not think that we are being justly dealt by when wharfs are being built, not only on the Atlantic coast—where, I suppose, there would be a good claim for them—but on every little river in the maritime provinces and in the province of Quebec. We think we have a right to complain when in a riding like mine, facing on Lake Ontario, which is often boisterous, there are six or seven wharfs, and not a single dollar of public money has been spent on any of them. Why, the government is spending $10,000 to supplement the expenditure of a wharf built by a private company. I can understand that the Dominion government is bound to keep in repair wharfs taken over at the time of confederation, but I say, and no fair-minded man will contradict me, that if these new wharfs are to be built, the people I represent have as good a claim upon the Dominion exchequer for expenditure upon their wharfs as have the residents along the rivers in the maritime provinces and Quebec.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see that nearly all the other items following this are in the same position as this one—Sorel, Ste. Anne du Saguenay, Ste. Geneviève piers and others. If you turn up the Auditor General's Report, you will find that on these same works small amounts were spent last year, stated to be for the completion of repairs. I cannot believe that in each and every one of these cases the engineer would make the mistake of estimating just about half what the repairs would cost. It looks as if this was merely an annual expenditure in some of these constituencies.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not believe the member for the constituency ever knew this vote was to be asked. It is simply recommended by the department, in accordance with the report of the resident engineer, to complete this work.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Last year we voted $1,000 to repair the wharf, and we were told that would be sufficient. This year we are asked for a similar amount. In looking up the Auditor General's Report I see that planking and iron and everything else was purchased for that work. Where the amount is so small we have a right to expect that the department will make a closer estimate. In every case, the repairs should be completely finished by the first vote where the amount is so small.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think there must be something wrong in the engineer's department. I do not see how he could have reported last year that the vote was needed to complete the work, and then make a report this year that the amount was too small, though it is not small in comparison with the amount of work done there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only answer I have to make is that last year I had not sufficient money to complete the work.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then, how do these improvements become necessary?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are a continuation of the same work. We are raising the structure.

Ste. Anne du Saguenay wharf—improvements, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The purpose of this vote is to substitute a movable slip for the present stairway, which can only be used half the time. This wharf is right opposite Chicoutimi, on the Saguenay.

Ste. Anne de la Pérade—repairs to river bank protection works, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to protect a portion of the bank of the river against further erosions from the action of the water.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This protection was put on the shore of the Ste. Anne river after that terrible disaster that occurred a few years ago, by which the channel of the river was altered and the river rose to such an extent that it practically carried away the shore at this particular place. It is quite close to the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, and any one who passes along on the Canadian Pacific Railway can see the situation. In a little more time the action of the river would carry away a part of the shore at that place. This is a navigable river, and is therefore under the control of the Dominion parliament.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is the Ste. Anne river navigable?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, at the point where this occurs. I am speaking of Ste. Anne above Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. Should not the province of Quebec look after this work?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The province of Quebec has no control over it. It is where the Ste. Anne enters the River St. Lawrence. It is practically a basin of the Ste. Anne river.

Ste. Famille—extension of pier, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This pier will be 60 by 60 feet and 30 feet high. It is in the county of Montmorency.

This is estimated to be the total cost of the work. It is an extension to deeper water.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is on the Island of Orleans, below Quebec.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has this been done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer tells me this will be under the supervision of the local engineer there.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why is it not done by contract ? An extension is not like repairing. I can quite understand why repairing might be done by the engineer, but the extension is new work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If, as my hon. friend says, it is an additional work and specifications can be drawn and contracts let, I would very much rather do it that way.

Ste. Anne de la Pocatière—reconstruction of pier destroyed by ice shoves, $5,400.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to restore the pier which was destroyed by the ice almost entirely. This vote will cover the total amount of the cost.

Ste. Anne de Sorel—repairs to ice piers, $3,800.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are repairs to the resistance works or ice piers made on the report of the engineer, and are being done under his direction.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are they situated in relation to Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Just below Sorel on the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. FOWLER. It is near Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, quite near Sorel on the St. Lawrence river.

St. Alphonse—Baie des Ha ! Ha !—repairs to wharf, additional amount required, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for general repairs to the wharf which has been found to be in a deficient state of repair. It is principally for sheeting and planking. There was an appropriation for 1902-3 of $1,500, and this amount is required in addition to that, the total amount of the repairs being $3,500.

St. Godefroi de Nouvelle—breakwater, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is an entirely new work. It makes provision for a breakwater of cribwork, 700 feet long and 18 feet wide.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it in Bonaventure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is in Bonaventure ; the total estimated cost of the work when finished is $22,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this at the mouth of the Nouvelle river ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I may say that the citizens of the whole township who are mostly fishermen, have asked for this work. They sent in a large petition at the head of which appeared the name of the Rev. Mr. Léonard, parish priest, an uncle of Mr. Léonard, the hon. member for Laval, and that reverend gentleman asked me to secure the support of that hon. gentleman in regard to this vote. I regret that the hon. gentleman is not at present in the House. This is situated in the township of Hope, in which there is a population of about 2,400. There are in that place probably 100 fishermen with absolutely no protection. Their only protection is in the Nouvelle river, but that is now almost filled up with sand, so the parish have asked to have this breakwater built one-half mile east of the Nouvelle river. The work is not an expensive one, and it is badly needed by the fishermen who have no protection. This reverend gentleman, Mr. Léonard, mentioned to me the case of three fishermen who had to spend a whole night in open water during a storm, because, having no protection whatever, they were unable to land.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there any fishing vessels beyond small boats ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). They are all small boats.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it seem to be necessary to build so extensive and expensive a work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It appears from the report of the engineer that owing to the formation of the coast, they have to go out a considerable distance, and the work has to be substantially done, so that it will not wash away with the storms.

Mr. FOWLER. If it is only a shelter for small vessels, I do not see why it is necessary to have it of such great length. I can see that it may be necessary to have it very substantially built.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). There is an attendance at the church at St. Godefroi of about 1,200 or 1,400 people. The province of Quebec are opening up townships in the rear of this settlement, and the population is bound to increase. It increased 50 per cent during the last census decade. There is no wharf there now. They have to go out to the open sea in open boats to meet the passing steamers, and they have no way of landing boats or shipping lumber ; in fact there is nothing but what nature has put there. It is hoped that this breakwater will serve the purpose of a landing wharf, where a boat can call, as well as a protection to small boats.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. One hon. gentleman asked why it was necessary to go out so far. I think that even with this length of breakwater there will be only between five and six feet of water.

St. Gédéon Islands—wharf, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to make provision for improvements at St. Gédéon, which is near Chicoutimi, in the district of Saguenay and Chicoutimi The total cost is $6,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it proposed to do this by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a petition for this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the petition was addressed to the hon. member for that locality (Mr. Girard), and by him forwarded to the department. I see that it was prayed for by the inhabitants. There were three petitions during 1902, and two during 1903, altogether five petitions from the locality.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister if there are any districts in Canada from which the government have received petitions to which they have not given heed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry to say that there are a great number. In fact I have stated, and I state now that nearly all of these works are being undertaken on the reports of the engineers of the department in places where they were found to be most urgently needed

St. Fulgence wharf, $1,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in the district of Chicoutimi and Saugenay. The total cost will be $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How far away from the other wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Seventy miles.

Mr. FOWLER. This has been petitioned for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

St. Maurice river—dam at Grand Piles, $10,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the explanation of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the construction of a dam 940 feet long at the head of Grand Piles Falls. A large deputation from the district waited upon me, and I had an investigation made by our engineer, and we came to the conclusion that by building this dam we would avoid a large expenditure for dredging, and that the cost of maintenance of booms, &c., might be reduced at least $20,000 a year. The total cost of this work will be about $65,000. If the engineer is right in saying that this dam will save the necessity for dredging, and will reduce the cost of maintenance $20,000 a year it will be one of the best investments we have made for a long time.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should this government maintain these booms ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For bringing down logs and for the navigation of the river.

Mr. FOWLER. The government are not bringing down logs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, but we have expended over $1,500,000 on these works.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you get any revenue ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We get a revenue of $29,000, which is considerable, but which is nothing in comparison with the cost of the works.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not see why the government should object so strongly to government ownership of railways, when they go in for the government ownership of lumber slides. They seem to be very cheerful about voting large sums of money for this purpose.

St. Andre de Kamouraska—extension of pier and additional repairs, $3,700.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to repair damage done by the ice in the spring of 1903, and for the construction of an addition to the pier.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it to be done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it would be done under the supervision of the local engineer.

Mr. FOWLER. What steamers call there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told that it is principally for schooners.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they building schooners to draw a greater depth of water than formerly ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The explanation is that at present they can only come in at high tide and with an extension of 75 feet they can get in at low tide.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are we to understand by the 'local engineer.' These wharfs are 100 miles apart, and we are always told that they will be repaired under the direction of the local engineer. Are we to understand that there is an engineer in every one of these places ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should perhaps have said the resident engineer. There is a resident engineer of the department who lives at a central point, and who has supervision over the work in the district. For instance, we have four engineers who reside at Toronto, but they are in charge of the works in different districts of Ontario.

Mr. COCHRANE. I suppose it is another job like the one we discussed this session; where you have a foreman, and a deputy foreman, and a man to buy material, and about as many officials as you have workmen. These works should not be done by the resident engineer when that can be avoided. There are always a lot of men employed who get large salaries and do very little work. I fancy that the same thing takes place wherever work is done under that rule. Instead of letting a contract for the timber, of which an engineer ought to know how much he wants and have it got out in winter, we generally have a man to buy timber on commission, a superintendent, a deputy superintendent and a lot of other men putting in their time and drawing a large amount of money, and not doing much work for their pay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Generally speaking, we are endeavouring as much as possible to let these works by contract. When the engineers do the work, very often a foreman has to be put on, and sometimes better value is obtained in that way than by doing it by contract. But I agree with the hon. gentleman as to the general policy, and we are doing as much work by contract as possible.

St. Fidele—wharf, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in Charlevoix county. It is for the construction of a wharf for general landing and shipping purposes. It is a new work. The estimated cost is $10,000. It will be let by contract.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there not a private wharf near there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

St. Simeon wharf—extension, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the purpose of connecting the present block with the shore, so that boats can land.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you build a block at a distance from the shore?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The water is shallow for a long distance from the shore, and a block is built which serves to accommodate the people. A steamer can tie up at the block, and the people can take their goods to and from it in small boats.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the business increased ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the statement. I have not the statistics here.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you the petition there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that we ought to have some information about this. For some years the people seem to have got along very well with this block system. Now my hon. friend proposes to connect the block with the land, and he should give some reason for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The reason we have these blocks is to provide accommodation without a large expenditure of money. Even if there were no increase of business, I think it would be perfectly justifiable to spend this reasonable sum of money in so important a section of the country to connect the block with the land, so that the people will not have to row out in their boats.

Mr. FOWLER. That would be a good argument if there were not so many applications for wharfs where there is now no accommodation at all. These expenditures can only be justified on one of two grounds —either that there has been or that there will be a large increase of business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This block was built in 1889, and the people have been petitioning and complaining ever since.

Mr. FOWLER. This is on the principle that if you give them an inch they will take an ell. The minister has not given us either of the reasons I have mentioned to justify this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My information is that there has been an increase of trade; but even if there had not been, I think we would be justified in providing this accommodation.

Mr. FOWLER. But in order to do so you have to deprive others who have no accommodation at all, while these people are partially accommodated.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think we are doing pretty well.

Ste. Michel de Bellechasse—repairs to pier, $2,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This block was sinking, and the vote is taken on the report of the engineer to protect our work. The total cost of the work will be $2,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there a petition for this, and was each of the names on it certified ?

St. Jean des Chaillons—wharf, $6,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the construction of a wharf about three-eighths of a mile below the present ferry wharf. The Lotbinière and Megantic Railway has a terminal there.

Mr. LANCASTER. You are evidently making a terminus for a railway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost is $28,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. For the benefit of this railway ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the only point where a deep water wharf can be built on that section of the St. Lawrence. It is a terminus of a railway and there is a large trade being done there.

Mr. FOWLER. But you have a steamer wharf within three-eighths of a mile, at the end of which there must be deep water.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that that ferry wharf is owned by a private party and does not meet the requirements of the shipping and the railway.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should not the railway look after its own requirements ? There is a wharf within three-eighths of a mile, which is a public wharf owned by private parties, if that wharf is not good enough, the railway ought to build its own wharf. Is this new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. The ferry only draws six feet of water, and this is for the purpose of giving fourteen feet of water at this point.

Mr. FOWLER. The Grand Trunk Pacific is supposed to supply its own terminal facilities. Why should not this railway ? Between what points does it run ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. From Lyster it extends down to the shores of the St. Lawrence. It was formerly known as the King road, and was practically built for the purpose of enabling the King Brothers to exploit their large timber limits. The intention is to build this wharf in order to enable the people in that locality to have communication with Quebec and Montreal. It will serve practically four large parishes. There are very large brick yards there from which the city of Quebec gets practically its whole supply. In addition there is a large mill at that point. Comparisons have been frequently made, with reference to these wharfs, between Quebec and the other provinces, but let me say that to a very large extent the parishes on the river St. Lawrence are deprived entirely of railway communication. Take the parishes in question. With the exception of that little road which runs back a few miles to Lyster, they are about forty miles from the line of railway, and the river front is the most thickly settled part of our country. The people have to depend absolutely on the river for communication. These people are not asking for much assistance in the way of railway subsidies, and in this locality we have all these parishes absolutely helpless for communication except by water.

Mr. FOWLER. We have parishes along the St. John river without railway communication, and depending entirely upon the river to carry their products to market. They have no wharfs built by this government. In some places, I believe, the government has contributed a portion of the cost, the balance being made up by the provincial government. Now, I contend that New Brunswick should be treated in the same way as Quebec, where, as in this case, the circumstances are exactly the same.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) can compare the two rivers. However, both are important. My recollection is that the Dominion has contributed to a great many wharfs along the St. John. I think I put through a vote this year myself to assist the building of a wharf on that river. I think the people on the St. John are better accommodated than those on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. FOWLER. Since the present Minister of Public Works came into office there have been no contributions by the Dominion to wharfs on the St. John. Well, there may have been one. As to comparing the two rivers, I think there will be the same trade on one as on the other.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This part of the St. Lawrence is the most thickly populated part of our province and the most prosperous from an agricultural point of view. And the river is absolutely the only outlet for the trade, unless the people go forty miles back to the railway.

Mr. FOWLER. Who owns the railway now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know. After James King died it passed into other hands.

Mr. FOWLER. Does it not belong to the Grand Trunk ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, that runs farther back.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the hon. minister think that, as the railway is as much interested as anybody in having the wharf there, they should contribute to the cost ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The railway, apparently is very little interested. They regard the competition by water as very serious. If the products of that country could not be exported by water the rate charged by the railway would be prohibitive. The brick yards would then be dependent exclusively on the road. The hon. gentleman can see what the rates would be running over this road to Lyster and on to Montreal or Quebec.

Mr. LANCASTER. The road must have been built for some purpose, and no doubt, it was to tranship the lumber. The government, in making this expenditure will benefit the railway. Of course, others will get benefit from it also, but it is to the special benefit of the railway to have a wharf there. Surely the railway ought to pay a part of the expense.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think the railway company will look upon this as a detriment to them, because it will relieve the people of the locality from the monopoly which the railway would have but for the means provided to use the water transportation. If there is no wharf there, the people are at the mercy of the railway.

Mr. COCHRANE. Unless I misunderstood the Minister of Public Works there is a wharf there about three-quarters of a mile away.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is no good, and never can be made of use.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am a little bit afraid that, if it were not for the government proposing to make this expenditure, the present wharf would be considered very good.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) simply wants to learn the facts as they are.

Mr. COCHRANE. Let me state my case—

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I want to say just one word. We on the St. Lawrence are in an unfortunate position because of the rise and fall of the tide. We have these shoals stretching far out from the shore, so that it is difficult to make wharfs. There is a wharf there built by Mr. King, but it is practically useless and cannot be made useful at any reasonable expense.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understood that the wharf was not a deep-water wharf. But the minister said the principal industry was the manufacture of brick. I do not think the Minister of Justice will say that it would require a deep-water wharf to ship brick, because, I am satisfied those brick would be carried in barges. Here in Ottawa during the present session I have seen them again and again unloading brick from barges. Let me draw the minister's attention to the case of another wharf which I have in mind. The Central Ontario Railway runs back into the country, in Hastings county, and when a terminal wharf was wanted for that road the company built it at their own expense. I am satisfied that the brick will be carried in barges and not in steamers. Is not that correct ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. I sympathize with the people there, if they are without facilities to ship their products, and, I am willing to give my vote for the expenditure of public money to provide these facilities where necessary. But I do not want to vote money to build a deep-water wharf for the accommodation of an industry if there is a wharf already there at which the products can be shipped.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) that we are spending a good deal of money in the province of Ontario to help to provide terminals for railways.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the absence of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Calvin) I wish to make one more appeal to the hon. minister on behalf of the residents of Wolfe Island and Howe Island. There we have two municipalities situated at the foot of Lake Ontario. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) knows all about them and can verify all I say. These two municipalities include a large population, yet the people have no opportunity to leave the island except by ferry, and I do not think the government have ever spent a dollar in building or maintaining a wharf in either of them. I think it quite time the Minister of Public Works should look into this matter, and I trust he will send his engineer to inquire, and that next year we shall find a sum in the estmates for a wharf there. I think that Ontario is entitled to something and the inhabitants of these islands should receive attention.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Is this where we are doing the dredging ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will take a note of it and have the inquiry made.

Yamaska lock—dredging below lock, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This estimate is asked for by the resident engineer, for dredging the River Yamaska below the Yamaska locks, to a depth of six feet. This river takes its rise in the county of Brome, and after a course of about 90 miles, empties into the St. Lawrence eight miles above the town of Sorel. It is a navigable river.

Department of Public Works—to provide for arrears of salary due to the chief architect, November 1, 1897 to June 30, 1903, at $3,200 per annum, together with $200 short-estimated in his salary for 1903-4, $1,333.33.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay arrears of salary due to the chief architect between the dates mentioned. The chief architect, Mr. Ewart, has been employed in the department since 1871. On the superannuation of Mr. Fuller he was appointed to the position at a salary of $3,200 per year, but he was never paid the full amount of his salary up to the present year.

Mr. FOWLER. Why.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know why. It has been going on, and never was made right. This is to pay the balance due him.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not usual for men to let their salaries remain unpaid like that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This gentleman is one of those peculiar men who do not look carefully after their own interests, for he did let it lie all these years. He is entitled to it as a matter of law, and he never got his increase. He is a very fine old gentleman.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman think it is a sign that he is a very good servant if he does not look after his own interests better than that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It means that he was looking after public business more carefully than after his own.

Mr. SPROULE. To say that he has been neglecting for six years to draw $200 a year coming to him is more than I can understand. It is strange that the department knew nothing about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. I said that as a matter of fact he only drew $3,000 a year, whereas he was entitled to $3,200 a year from the time he was appointed chief architect up to date.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am afraid he is not a very good architect of his own fortunes.

Mr. SPROULE. It is so extraordinary that one can scarcely consider it with patience. It looks so absurd that a man should allow this to be going on for six years and did not know enough to ask for it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not say that he did not know it. All I can say is that, as a matter of fact, the books show that he never drew his full salary.

Mr. FOWLER. I think his action is highly commendable. It strikes me you ought to pay him interest on the arrears that he has allowed to accumulate.

Mr. FRASER. He ought to suffer the loss of interest for his mistake.

Department of Public Works—salaries—to promote Mr. J. B. Hunter to a first-class clerkship notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $300.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Hunter is private secretary to the minister, and has proved a very hardworking, capable man, as every person admits. His present salary is $1,100.

Mr. FOWLER. How many private secretaries has the minister?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry to say I have only one.

Mr. FOWLER. I must commiserate the minister if he has only one secretary. Evidently he is more modest than the Minister of Inland Revenue, who, I believe, has now three and an assistant.

Mr. COCHRANE. What has been done with the others?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will have a private conference with the hon. gentleman if he wants to know further.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No. 146, the Yukon.

Mr. SPROULE. We want to know what the salaries are before that is called.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will see that from the increased amount of work done in the department there must necessarily be a greatly increased expenditure for printing. All these specifications have to be printed; this is not for newspapers.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood the hon. gentleman to refer to newspapers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The subscriptions to newspapers have not increased. I understood my hon. friend to ask what had increased, and I was giving the principal items of increase. Printing, stationery and telegraph charges have increased owing to the increased number of works, and the greater number of men in the employment of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will have to ask this other Yukon item to stand; the hon. leader of the opposition is not present, and he will have something to say on this question. My hon. friend behind me will also have a statement that he will have to make either now or on concurrence, and I think it would be well to have the item stand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend has made out a rather bad case, for I would rather put this through when these gentlemen are away. While I was anxious to get through, I must say that the opposition have treated me with a great deal of courtesy, and at their request I shall certainly allow the item to stand.

Some resolutions reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved that the House again go into Committee of supply.

Mr. SPROULE. Owing to the absence of some members who wish to discuss the matter, the motion which it was intended to move from this side of the House, will not be moved until a later date.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee.

To provide for a grant to the Toronto Industrial Exhibition Association, to assist in the holding of a National Canadian Exhibition, in Toronto during the present year, 1903, $50,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was not this amount voted last year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. It was agreed to by the government at an early period of the session, that it would be put into the supplementary estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not decided last year to give this money ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, but there was never any vote taken for it. The exhibition took place within this fiscal year.

Mr. SPROULE. Were there any conditions attached to this vote ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the Order in Council explains the conditions. This is a letter which was written to the exhibition authorities under date of March 31st :

I have the honour by direction of the acting minister to inform you that an Order in Council has been passed, granting an amount to the Toronto Industrial Exhibition to assist in the holding of an all-Canadian exhibition in Toronto during the present year; such grant to be applied to the following purposes; first, to equalize freight rates for exhibitors. Second, special and extraordinary prizes. Third, advertising outside the province of Ontario. Fourth, the cause of securing and maintaining an educational exhibit, and fifth, the increased cost in the management.

After the exhibition, I wrote to the authorities and asked them to give me some information as to the manner in which they had arranged to apply this money. I received the following details from Mr. Orr, manager and secretary of the exhibition company :

The estimate under the headings named which was given to the government at the time the application was made will be approximately correct and is as follows :

Equalization of freight rates for exhibitors $15,000 ; special and extraordinary prizes, $14,000; advertising outside Ontario, $9,000 ; securing and maintaining educational exhibits, $8,000; increased cost of management due to the increased length of time the exhibition was held, and fine arts exhibit, $4,000, total, $50,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The reason I made the inquiry was, that one of the Toronto papers stated that this grant had not all been used, and that it was intended to return about $13,000 to the government. I was surprised. It displayed a magnanimity and an honesty that most corporations usually do not get credit for. However, I fully endorse this grant. It did a great deal of good, and I believe the exhibition was a great deal better than usual. I am sure it would be much appreciated if the grant were continued from year to year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hardly think we could promise that, because the Dominion government has not been in the habit, for a number of years back, of granting any help to local institutions, but this was an extraordinary occasion. The exhibition was very much better, I believe, than it had been for many years, or perhaps ever before. I think the grant accomplished the object aimed at.

Further amount required for fumigating stations, $500.

Mr. SPROULE. Why are we not able to estimate the cost of this in your main estimates, without spreading it over two or three votes ? It would require no very high degree of discernment on the part of the medical health officer, to calculate the amount he would need for this purpose.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is for the fumigation of nursery stock.

Mr. SPROULE. Why are you not able to make your calculation in the main estimates ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Last year we found our estimates had been exceeded, and we had to ask a supplementary estimate. We have to make provision for the same increase in expenditure this year. It has been found that in British Columbia they can import nursery stock all through the winter, and as they have asked that their stations should be kept open for a longer period in the year than is the custom in the east, this increase is almost entirely due to that reason. In other stations we have had to pay a little higher for labour.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been the success of this system in keeping out the San José scale ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The prohibition of the importation of nursery stock has kept the San José scale out of Canada, and the fumigation stations were a concession to the trade, so as to allow the importation of nursery stock at certain designated ports. I do not think there is any doubt that fumigation as carried on at these stations has been completely successful.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw a statement to the contrary some time ago in a paper. I forget what paper it was. It stated that some of the stock showed evidences of being affected after it was growing.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No such statement has been brought to my attention, and no complaint of that kind has ever come to the department. In the agricultural and horticultural press, where

I suppose we might expect to see such statements, nothing of the kind ever appeared.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these stations have we to-day, at how many places is stock allowed to be brought in, and what is the aggregate cost of this work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The aggregate cost, with this supplementary vote, will be $3,000 a year. The stations are at Vancouver, B.C., Winnipeg, Man., Windsor and Niagara Falls, Ont., St. Johns, P.Q. and St. John, N.B. At each of these places we have a small house for fumigating purposes and a man in charge. He has to employ day labour occasionally when a large consignment comes in.

Further amount required for archives, $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is an addition to what we have already had for the archives in years gone by. It is required to provide for an entirely new arrangement of the work. Some four years ago a report was made to council by a commission of officials who were appointed to investigate the condition of our records and our state papers. That commission reported that there was an immense mass of historical and other records of various kinds scattered through the various departments, that they were in a dangerous condition, and that a new arrangement ought to be made for their collection, care, classification and cataloguing. For one reason and another, chiefly because it was quite impossible to ask the late archivist, Mr. Douglas Brymner, at his time of life, to undertake a new work of that kind and reorganize the department, nothing was done ; but on the occasion of his demise and the consequent vacancy in the position of archivist, I drew up a memorandum to council recommending certain changes in the archives branch. These would involve a considerable addition to the work and the responsibility of the officer in charge, and would involve his having some assistance.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is in charge ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nobody is in charge. No appointment has been made to the vacant position. The change would necessitate considerable work in the way of collecting these documents and records which are scattered through the different departments, and which we wish to bring together under a responsible officer, whose duty it will be to care for them, watch over them, study them, make extracts from them, and compile them for the report on the archives. I have no hesitation in saying that in the interest not only of the history of our country, but the safety of our records, this work is necessary. To show the danger and the necessity of some such work, I may mention that some years ago, by the order of a certain officer of the Militia Department, a number of boxes which appeared to contain waste paper were taken out of a room in the Militia Department and put in the furnace. It was afterwards found that in these boxes were a large number of important military plans and other papers of the greatest value from a historical and departmental point of view; and they had all been destroyed by people who were really not responsible, and had no right to act in that way. There has been abundant opportunity for that kind of thing to occur at any time in a number of our departments, and I think it is quite time that these important documents should be brought together and classified and catalogued and put into the charge of a responsible officer of sufficient standing.

Mr. SPROULE. It would not be amiss if you extended the same protection to the ballots in Ontario.

Mr. HACKETT. Who is the chief clerk now at the head of that department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The branch is under the charge of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, along with all the other branches of the department. The clerk who has charge of the documents at present is a Mr. Duff, who has been for many years under the archivist.

Mr. HACKETT. I noticed a few days ago in one of the papers published in Ottawa that Mr. Casey, the late member for West Elgin, was to be appointed to that position.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No appointment has yet been made, and no decision has been come to in regard to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that in 1892-93 we voted $8,000 for the archives ; in 1893-94 we increased the vote to $9,000 ; and now it is proposed to further increase it to $12,000. I cannot understand why it should be necessary to have a part of this item in the main estimates and a part of it in the supplementary estimates. It is not a matter in regard to which there can be any unusual demand created which could not be known at the time the main estimates are prepared. To divide the item in this way doubles the work in the House, and makes the matter less understandable. We have to make an inquiry into two items instead of one, thus virtually doing the work twice over.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, but in this particular instance the circumstances are different. The item in the main estimates was sufficient for the old work, but there has been a change made. It was only since I came back from Japan that I secured the consent of my colleagues to the change or the whole amount would have been in the main estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the hon. gentleman got this new idea in Japan.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. I see there is a vacancy, Mr. Brymner having died. Is it intended to fill that vacancy ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope so, but I did not wish to fill it until I had the assurance that these changes would be agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the position reserved for our late colleague, Mr. Casey ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not reserved for anybody.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that if Mr. Casey is qualified—and I have no doubt he is—I would be glad, and I have no doubt that a great many other hon. members would be glad, to see him get it. I think many less deserving men have got positions. In my opinion, our late colleague, Mr. Casey, would be eminently fitted for the position, both on account of his literary qualifications and general ability.

Further amount required for Archives, $3,000.

Mr. HACKETT. What progress has been made with this work ? It is a very interesting subject to us in the maritime provinces to trace the families who came from France.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only say that Mr. Gaudet, who is in charge of the work, reports that he is making steady progress. He has been travelling in the maritime provinces to secure data and lately he has been working at Ottawa compiling that data for the volume to be issued. It is a work in connection with the Acadian families, somewhat similar to the work of the late Abbé Tanguay with regard to the French Canadian families of the province of Quebec. It will give information with regard to the lineage, genealogy and origin of the Acadian families in the maritime provinces. This item would not have been in the supplementary estimates had it not been inadvertently omitted from the main estimates.

Mr. COPP. I take great interest in this matter. Mr. Gaudet has got all the information necessary to have the first volume issued with the exception of some information regarding a couple of censuses, which cannot be obtained in this country and which he is securing in Paris. Upon receipt of this information from Paris, the first volume will be completed, and be shortly in the possession of the public. Mr. Gaudet has assured me that he thinks he will be able, between this and next spring, to have the first volume published. The first volume is the most difficult. He has all the material and data prepared for the issue of the second and third volumes. There will be in all probability about four volumes, and each will follow the other very rapidly as soon as the first is published.

Mr. SPROULE. While I have no special objection to this work, I fail to see why we should collect information about the Acadian families any more than about the English, Irish, Scotch, German or any other nationality. I do not see why parliament should vote money for keeping a work of that kind going on which will practically go on for ever, because when you start a work of that kind it rarely ever stops. It is like a pension, the recipient of which lives a very long time. Why this work should be done for one nationality any more than another is what I cannot understand.

Mr. HACKETT. I must object to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman and myself are both descendants of the old Irish race and we are proud of it.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you want a record of your genealogy ?

Mr. HACKETT. We have a record. What we are seeking to obtain is a genealogy of the old Acadian people, the first settlers of the eastern provinces, and it seems to me that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is not exhibiting that broadness of mind which should distinguish a descendant of the race to which he and I belong when he objects to this work. I would like to ask the hon. minister if Mr. Gaudet is still in charge of that work and has he made any report ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, Mr. Gaudet is in charge of the work, and he has reported verbally from time to time, but there is no published report.

Mr. GALLERY. Do I understand from the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hackett) that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is an Irishman. That is something new to me. I always understood that the hon. gentleman from East Grey came from Scotland.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a strange coincidence but the hon. member for East Grey had the same impression with regard to the hon. member for Montreal. But I have to say in reply to my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, who complains that a man is not very broad in his views who objects to this expenditure, that I think the breadth of view of the hon. member for East Grey will compare favourably with that of the hon. member from Prince Edward Island, as regards anything pertaining to the welfare of the country. If it be the aim of parliament to set apart a portion of money for the purpose of tracing the history and the record of the different nationalities of this country, I have no objection. But I ask, why select the Acadians in preference to the others ? While

I have no objection to the Acadians—on the contrary my acquaintance with them leads me to the conclusion that they are a very estimable people—I fail to see why this work should be done for them any more than for the U. E. Loyalists, who came to this country and who are reputed to be the pioneers of this continent, and whose name stands so high in the history of the world to-day.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Why not do it for the U. E. Loyalists ?

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I say. If it is desirable to do it for one nationality, why not for the other, and to make a selection of one seems to me like partiality. I am not objecting to this, provided it is thought desirable to carry it out with regard to any celebrated class in the country who have a notable history. But what I object to is the fact that one nationality is selected and all others ignored. That is what I cannot understand or regard as just.

Mr. BLAIN. When may we expect the first volume of the work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it is expected about next spring.

Mr. BLAIN. How much has been expended on it up to date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This item of $1,400, being $1,200 for salary and $200 for travelling expenses for the gentleman in charge, has been voted for three years.

Mr. BRUCE. With regard to the remarks that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Anne (Mr. Gallery) made. I may say that if he wished to discover a Scotchman in the House he has only to look in this direction. I am at a loss to understand why a distinction should be made between nationalities in such a grant, as is being done.

Mr. GALLERY. As that point has come up again, I would like to correct the hon member from West Prince (Mr. Hackett). I distinctly state that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is not an Irishman. If I understood him aright, the hon. member for West Prince said that the hon. member for East Grey was an Irishman.

Mr. HACKETT. I insist on the fact that the hon. member for East Grey is an Irishman, and just as good an Irishman as the hon. member for Montreal, St. Anne.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I understand the meaning of the word 'Irish' as used in the north of Ireland, I would say that the hon. member for East Grey is not Irish, according to the strict use of the word. And so I think the hon. member for Montreal, St. Anne, is quite correct. If in Ireland to-day, the hon. member for East Grey would repudiate the designation of 'Irish' as applied to him.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. SPROULE. I think, since this seems to be a disputed question, that we had better have another branch of this inquiry to determine the genealogy of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Anne, and myself, and determine to what nationality we belong.

Further amount required for renewing and improving Canadian exhibit at Imperial Institute, London, $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this item is discussed, I have a matter I wish to bring before the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. It is not quite apropos of the item, but there was a matter brought to my attention in a letter which I handed to the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn). That hon. gentleman is not in his seat and I have not the letter, so I can only give the information I have. First I would inquire if Mr. J. G. Anderson is an inspector of fruit in the Department of Agriculture ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is. I answered that question yesterday.

Mr. TAYLOR. The information I have is to this effect—that this gentleman who is inspector of fruit and drawing pay from the government, is also an apple buyer and speculator, and ships apples every day to the market at Ottawa. These are facts I know. The statement is made that he will go to a farmer to purchase his fruit, and, if the farmer does not sell to him at his own price but sells to another speculator, Mr. Anderson is brought in to inspect the fruit and cuts him down to the last point. And so the farmers of Prince Edward are under compulsion to sell to Mr. Anderson. That is the statement made in this letter from one of the large dealers in Ottawa, and now in possession of my hon. friend from Prince Edward.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is the first I have heard of such a charge. I know nothing about it. Mr. Anderson was a dealer in fruit before he was appointed inspector. When he was appointed he had to close out his business and cease carrying on any trade of that kind. If he is dealing in fruit he must either cease doing so or cease to be inspector. My inspectors cannot for a moment be allowed to deal in fruit or to have anything to do with the trade.

Mr. TAYLOR. The writer of this letter says that Mr. Anderson is shipping apples to Ottawa every day in the week, and he is his own inspector.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will inquire into that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Of course, Mr. Anderson is a very strong supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite and an electioneering agent through the country, and he must draw a salary in order to keep in the field. Yet, he is making his profits out of purchasing apples.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All I can say is what I have already said—that this is the first I have heard of this allegation, and with all due deference to my hon. friend's informant, I do not believe it. But I will make inquiries. And, as I said a moment ago, no inspector in my department is, or can be, allowed to deal in fruit. I will investigate the matter and secure the information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the object aimed at in this Canadian exhibit at the Imperial Institute in London ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The older members of the House will remember that a good many years ago, at the time of the Queen's jubilee, the Imperial Institute was established in London, specially for the purpose of having an exhibit of colonial industrial products. Propositions were made to the Dominion government to secure their co-operation. The institution was then under the patronage and presidency of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the present King. The arrangement come to at that time was that the provincial governments should deal with their respective exhibits in the Imperial Institute in London, the Dominion government taking no part. This went on for many years, but complaints began to arise and were voiced in this House by hon. members on both sides who said that the Canadian exhibits in the institute were not at all creditable to the country. The High Commissioner in London made very strong representations to the government on the question, and asked that some thing should be done to improve the character of the exhibit there. I was over in London some few years ago and visited the institute. On so doing, I fully concurred in the view that the exhibits of Canada's products there were entirely inadequate and not creditable to Canada. After a good deal of discussion, I asked for a small item in the estimates to improve those exhibits. That was granted me to the extent of $3,000. Almost immediately after the vote was given the imperial authorities undertook to reorganize the Imperial Institute. It had been under the control of a royal commission of eminent people of the old country who were specially interested in it and who had been invited to take part in its management by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and joined with them were colonial representatives, including the High Commissioner for Canada, at first Sir Charles Tupper and afterwards his successor Lord Strathcona. The different Canadian provinces have had each a representative. Speaking from memory, I think that three of the provinces asked Lord Strathcona to act as their representative, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and perhaps some other provinces had their local representative in England. The institute, I may say, had been getting into disrepute and had almost failed of its object, and the imperial authorities, after consultation with the various representatives of Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Canada, decided on a change. It took a long time to carry that change through, and for two years back the fate of the Imperial Institute has been hanging in the balance. This last winter, after the main estimates were submitted to this House, Lord Strathcona sent out a communication to us explaining that at last the institute has been taken over by the Imperial Board of Trade, which is the department corresponding to our Department of Trade and Commerce, and that in the future the Imperial Institute was to be managed as a branch of the Board of Trade, but with the concurrence and co-operation of the different colonies. They proposed some additional work in the shape of a city branch. I ought to say perhaps for the information of those who are not familiar with it, that the Imperial Institute is located at South Kensington, in the part of London where the great exhibition of 1862 took place, quite out of the business part of the city, although it is a place where there is a large number of museums and educational establishments. The new organization and management propose to have a city office with show-rooms and accommodation for a library and reading rooms. In addition to that they have asked the various colonies to fit up the exhibits in the institute proper in South Kensington, on a grander and better scale, and completely to renovate the exhibit.

Now, this work seems to fall naturally into the exhibition work of my own department, and when Lord Strathcona's communication was received by the government here, after careful consideration, we concluded it was in the interest of Canada to be worthily and properly represented in that institute, and we propose to carry out the scheme as submitted by Lord Strathcona, after discussion with the authorities of the institute. That scheme involves a slight increase in the expenditure of the ordinary work of the institute, and an increased subscription to the city office, and the employment in addition of a caretaker, of a stenographer or clerk, who will be able to reply to correspondents and to be present, either at the west end institute building or in the city alternately with the curator himself. This office expenditure which we are asked to agree to by the imperial authorities involves an expenditure of about $6,000 a year. I propose to ask altogether for $8,000, $2,000 to be devoted to preparing, sending and installing the characteristic exhibits of Canadian products. Six thousand dollars will not be all, because Lord Strathcona, as the representative of the different provinces, is asking them to continue their contribution to the general expenditure of the exhibition, and in that case there will be a sum of money available out of the sum I am asking, to arrange for the permanent exhibits, and also to arrange for the temporary exhibits of a particular character. The main estimates for the current year included a sum of $3,000 for this Imperial Institute, the same as we have had for two or three years back, and I ask this $5,000 additional to make the $8,000 which will be necessary to carry out the scheme outlined by Lord Strathcona.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). What will be the nature of these exhibits ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have a memorandum which Lord Strathcona sent out here in which he says in regard to that :

The scheme is for the arrangement and reorganization of the exhibits in the South Kensington building of the institute. Visitors will in future be assisted in getting information by special demonstrations in the courts, by means of pamphlets and other printed information systematically distributed, and also by public lectures.

6. It is understood that a number of the colonies are in favour of placing the responsibility for the care, maintenance and renewal of their collections—at the expense of the colonies—on the authorities of the Imperial Institute, who would of course be in close communication with the respective colonial governments on these subjects. The Canadian collections now need complete renewal and numerous additions to make them thoroughly representative of the country, and no doubt the Imperial Institute will if desired, be prepared (in conjunction with the curator) submit a scheme for this work, and to explain how it is proposed to carry it out.

He goes on to explain what has been in the past, and then he says :

I understand that a special staff is to be appointed by the board of trade, in connection with the collections, so that their care and maintenance shall be continually attended to. This arrangement would set the Canadian officer (now termed the curator) free from much of the routine work, and would enable him to devote himself almost exclusively to answering the inquiries addressed to the Canadian section, and to supplying information to intending emigrants and commercial men. The collections at the Imperial Institute might be further utilized with great advantage by our own emigration department for the purpose of illustrating the general natural resources and industries of the Dominion. The board of trade propose to amalgamate their own commercial intelligence department now at Whitehall, with the office established by the Imperial Institute in the city of London, where additional premises will be taken.

Then he goes on to say that the colonies will have an opportunity to occupy offices in that building. One part of the exhibit will be in the commercial city of London and the other in this west end place.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is it desirable to have two ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To accommodate the larger exhibit in the city would require an enormous expenditure to get sufficient room. The building is a very large one, and it would require an enormous expenditure to transfer that to the city and to procure the accommodation required for these exhibits. They wish to have what may be called a business branch in the city, at which information may be given and temporary and partial exhibits can be made of particular articles at particular times. It is taken from the west end branch or part of that supplied temporarily. I would suggest that we in Canada could very properly take one of the rooms in the city branch and from time to time make exhibits of different Canadian products. For instance, at one time we could have an exhibit of dairy products, butter and cheese, another time an exhibit of bacon, at another time of dressed poultry, at another time of minerals, or of some particular mineral with which Canada is particularly favoured. Then we might make an exhibiit of certain manufactured goods which we thought we might be able to induce the British people to buy. These exhibits would be temporary, lasting perhaps a week or two weeks. These exhibits could be especially advertised and special invitations could be sent to those engaged in trade in the particular product which might be on exhibition. That is the object in keeping the city office in addition to maintaining the reading rooms and supplying information to business men in the city who have not time and who would not take the trouble to go to South Kensington to make inquiries, but who would call at a room or building in the city of London.

Mr. SPROULE. That would mean a dual set of officers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically it would mean an assistant to our curator so that when the curator was in the city the assistant would be in South Kensington and vice versa. Lord Strathcona has given the following suggested list of payments. A payment to the Imperial Institute of £600 a year ; a payment to the city office of £200 a year ; and the salary of the present curator, Mr. Watson, and his assistant and some slight office contingencies, £400 a year ; making a total payment of £1,200, or in round numbers, about $6,000 a year. If we were to adhere to this arrangement and fall in with the plans and proposals of the Imperial Institute of London, we would be definitely committed to the payment of about that amount, $6,000. I am asking for about $2,000 more to carry out the suggestion I made a moment ago in regard to the Canadian exhibits there, that they should be completely renovated and put on a creditable basis.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Has the hon. gentleman seen the building ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have seen the Kensington building, but not the city offices, I do not think they are yet taken. When Lord Strathcona was here, about a month or two ago, they had not yet engaged or acquired any city office.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). In what part of Whitehall will the building be ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It will not be in Whitehall ; it will be down in the city in the neighbourhood of the Royal Exchange. Last year, or the year before, we had a temporary city office in Eastcheap, which is a little east of the Royal Exchange, but I understand from Lord Strathcona that they have given that up and are going to get larger and better rooms.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Then I understand that these exhibits will consist of the natural products of the soil, the forest and the mine ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And industrial products as well.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Have you provided for large maps to be displayed in these buildings, so that the people may understand the geography of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not yet made any definite plan in that respect. We have to-day in my department a large map which was exhibited at Paris, and which I think is now in London, and that map could be utilized. In fact I gave orders a little while ago that that map should be kept in London for the purposes of the Imperial Institute. It is a very fine map of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). It would be a good plan to show on that map the unoccupied lands in Canada adapted for cultivation and settlement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the minister if there is anything in this exhibit to demonstrate what progress Canada is making in the fine arts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not any fine art exhibit there ; it is an exhibit purely of what I might call the natural and industrial arts of the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to offer a few remarks on a subject that is perhaps germane to this question. We have in this city a gallery of fine arts, so-called. It is entirely unworthy of this country, and of this city, and some provision ought to be made with the view to procuring a better exhibit of the works of Canadian artists. Canada has already found a place in the appreciation of the artistic world beyond the confines of this country. Canadian art is recognized in the United States, and has had very favourable notice from American critics, while we at home seem to be less appreciative than we should be of what our artists are doing and struggling to do. The fine arts can make progress in any country only by having some reasonable patronage, either from the wealthy people of the country or from the government. Art has made the greatest progress where it has had the support and patronage and recognition of governments. I notice that several new pictures have been added to the collection at the old rookery in Ottawa which we call an art gallery, and on inquiry, I have been informed that some $7,000 have been expended in the purchase of pictures, the culls of the studios of the old world, which could not be disposed of there and which have been sold through some medium to the Canadian government. I am not an art critic, but I have been privileged to see some of the rarest collections of art in the old world, and I am bound to say that we have in the gallery some work of Canadian artists which is worthy of a place in any art gallery in the world. But there are some very meritricious works in our gallery, and I fear that some works have recently been added at a large expense which could have been bought from some picture dealers by people who know how to go about it, for perhaps from $10 to $20 each. How they have added to the collection in this city to the extent of $7,000, I fail to see, while the works of Canadian artists have been passed over without recognition or notice. I am sure that we have occasion to be proud that we have in this young country—for we are still a young country—such a development of artistic taste and ability as has taken place in Canada in the last eight, ten or fifteen years. We have in Canada men who have made for themselves a place in the old world ; a picture by Paul Peel in our gallery is worthy of a place in any art gallery in the world. We have such names as Homer, Watson, Coté, Verner, Harris, Krieghoff, Gauthier, Forbes, Brownell, Sherwood, Bell, Smith, in Ontario and Quebec, while in British Columbia we have working Mower Martin, a man who has contributed a great deal to Canadian art. In Nova Scotia we have Mr. Miles, and then in New Brunswick we have an artist whose name I cannot now recall, of whom a well known art critic in America has said that if he were selecting the three greatest artists in America he would not omit his name. I think the time has come when these men should have some fair consideration. It is thought by some that in the rural districts, among the toilers of the country, there is not that recognition of art there should be ; it is felt that they do not consider art and attach importance to it. I can tell the House that this is not so, and that importance is attached to art in this country, and there is a budding and steady growth and development of artistic taste. In this connection I will relate a little incident that came in my own experience. I was looking over some fine Christmas cards in a shop just before Christmas, when a man came in with whom I entered into conversation. I said something about their being beautiful, and he said: Well, there is great waste of money in these things. I said: Do you think so; have you no love for pictures? He replied—None at all; I suppose there are hundreds of dollars spent on these things, I told them that there were tens of thousands of dollars spent on them, and he said that it was a terrible waste of money. And I said to him: You have no appreciation of pictures or of the beautiful; I have never seen where you live, but still I can tell you what it is like; if you come to it on a June day you will see thistles and weeds growing in the fields and between the fences; you will see no avenue of shade trees, leading from the roadway to your house, and if they were there you would cut them down for firewood; you will see no flower beds ornamenting your garden; nothing of the beautiful; if your buildings have any paint at all the colours are inharmonious and incongruous; your farm is cultivated in a slovenly manner; your fence corners are filled with weeds, and your outbuildings are in a ruinous condition. He said: That will do, I do not want to hear any more. I had the fortune to be passing by his place some time afterwards, and when my companion told me who lived there, I said: Turn in, I want to have a look at it. I went up to the door of his house and he met me, and he recollected the picture I had drawn. It was too true. Nature has placed us in a grand country. We have the means of making Canada a place of paradisiacal beauty. It only needs the development of the artistic faculty to make our roads, our fields, our homes and everything about us beautiful. There are no more beautiful trees in the world than the Canadian maple, which we have chosen as our national emblem. No one can travel through Canada at this season of the year without feeling that it is a constant panorama of beauty, unequalled in any part of the world. We only need a recognition of the artistic taste which I believe we have in this country. We need our fellow countrymen who have sufficiently advanced their artistic taste to be genuine critics in this respect, should bring into our art galleries these Canadian paintings which are worthy to be in any art gallery in the world. We should have art centres in every large city in Canada, and we should make our native art accessible to our young Canadians. It is not a useless expenditure; it is an expenditure which will redound immensely to the credit of all Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot refrain from thanking the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) for his appropriate and eloquent address. Unfortunately I cannot act upon the suggestions he has made, but I will draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works, in whose department the matter is, to the remarks of my hon. friend. I appreciate very highly what he has said with reference to our Canadian artists. We have a group of men, and I may say of women too, whose art works exhibited in the art centres of the old country, would attract attention even amongst the best. The hon. gentleman has given us a list of the greatest Canadian artists, and I have no doubt there are others whose art will confer credit on this country. I endorse what the hon. gentleman has said with reference to the art gallery in Ottawa. We have pictures there worthy of any gallery. I recognized a picture there the other day by Paul Peel to which this remark would apply, and right alongside it is a picture of a young Canadian, by Mr. Robert Harris, which was presented by a lady of Ottawa, and which shows the true characteristics of the young Canadian of whom we are all so proud. There have been one or two pictures added to the gallery lately which are certainly most creditable. The picture by Ten Kate is a splendid specimen of Dutch art, and friends of mine who are art critics have praised very much the work of Challener, which has recently been added to the gallery. We have lately increased the amount to be devoted to this work, and we have provided that these works are to be purchased under the advice of a committee of artists to be chosen from the members of the Royal Canadian Academy. I have no doubt that by this means there will be added to the gallery in the future, works of merit. I trust that before long we will have a building worthy of Canadian art, and that there will be a national museum in this capital city, which will include a picture gallery in which will be exhibited the finest works of our country. I would not, however, like to have these confined entirely to the works of Canadian artists, because I feel that we should have accessible there, for the inspiration and study of Canadian artists, paintings, by the masters of the old country. I must confess that I would advise the purchase of first-class works of foreign schools. We are young in art but we are making progress. As an encouragement to my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) I would say that I have made arrangements with the Royal Canadian Academy to assist them out of the funds which parliament has voted, to secure a representative and creditable exhibition of Canadian art at St. Louis exhibition. At the Pan-American exhibition the Canadian academy made a most creditable showing, and I believe that at the greater exhibition which is to be held in St. Louis, Canadian artists will be able to achieve even greater success than at Buffalo. I again thank my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) for the patriotic words he has uttered on behalf of Canadian art, and I trust they will sink into the minds of all who hear them and of all who will read them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In mentioning a few names of Canadian artists, I might have included Coté, and Forbes, and Knowles, and Sherwood, and others of great ability. As to the suggestion of the hon. minister that the selection of paintings should be left entirely to artists, I must say that is an open question. There are no more jealous men in the world than artists, they all admit it themselves. We have in the history of English art the name of the celebrated portrait painter Romney, one of the grandest that British art has ever produced; and yet he had to struggle on and be kept out of recognition from the very first, by the jealousy of men like Sir Joshua Reynolds, though he was far superior to them all. Therefore we should not lose sight of the fact that artists as a class are very jealous of each other, and good art critics who have the means of possessing themselves of specimens of art should have some recognition.

Mr. HACKETT. I am very much pleased indeed to find that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is endeavouring to encourage art in this country. I desire to state in this connection that one of the gentlemen he has named, Mr. Harris, of Montreal, is a native of Prince Edward Island. In the encouragement of art and learning, our small province has not been neglected. We have given you Harris, one of the chief artists of Montreal; Shurman, the president of Cornell University, and Archbishop O'Brien, of the city of Halifax. The progress of art shows the highest advancement of civilization, and I trust that my hon. friend will see his way clear to bestow on the artists of this country every possible recognition.

Grant to assist the Canadian Association for the prevention of tuberculosis, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is that for? Is that in connection with cattle?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is in connection with the association which was formed in Ottawa two or three years ago under the patronage of His Excellency, following the lead of the association which was formed in Great Britain under the patronage of His Majesty the King, for the purpose of spreading information amongst the people at large as to how the spread of the dread disease of tuberculosis could be prevented and lessened by ordinary means independent of medical practice. I have here a memorandum from the secretary of the association, in which he states that a large amount of literature is being sent out. The secretary himself is devoting his whole time to the work. He goes about the country at the request of medical associations and gives lectures and explanations with regard to it. The association holds an annual meeting in Ottawa, at which papers are read by eminent medical gentlemen, and these are printed and distributed throughout the country. The money is used chiefly in paying the secretary and in defraying the cost of distributing the literature.

Mr. SPROULE. I was at the annual meeting of the association, which I think will be productive of good; but it occurred to me that additional benefit might result if articles were written and sent periodically for publication in local papers, giving directions regarding the prevention of the disease. It must take more than this amount of money to keep the association up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a subscription for membership in the association. I do not think any fee is exacted, but a large number of people have subscribed various sums, some of them quite handsome sums, towards its expenses.

Further amount required for repairs to government steamers 'Stanley and Lansdowne,' $27-000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. With regard to the 'Stanley,' public tenders were called for by advertisements in the press of Montreal, Quebec, St. John, Halifax, Charlottetown and Pictou for removing indentations from plating and reinforcing the plates. The tender of the Pictou Foundry and Machine Company being the lowest, their tender was accepted for $3,975. Extensive repairs are now being made to the engines and boilers by Bruce Stewart & Company, Charlottetown, by day's labour. The boilers are fourteen years old, and, owing to the severe test these parts are exposed to and the nature of the work, the boilers and machinery require to be kept in the best condition possible. Besides the repairs to the engines and boilers the deck-houses became loose and are being thoroughly and strongly repaired. These repairs will be the means of putting the ship in excellent condition for the winter ice work. The department considers that the repairs to the 'Stanley' to make her fit for the winter work will not exceed $15,000. If the ship had been sent to England to her builders to be repaired, the cost would be in the vicinity of $40,000, if not more, as the expenses of the taking the vessel to England and keeping a crew would be considerable.

In regard to the repairs to the 'Lansdowne' tenders were invited for placing a new main boiler and funnel mountings. The tender of the estate of James Fleming of St. John being the lowest, for $8,820, was accepted. This is considered a very low figure.

In addition, tenders were invited for six fresh-water tanks, and the tender of the estate of James Fleming was accepted for this work for $2,135. Tenders were also asked for the painting, according to specification. These tanks are fitted in the hold for the purpose of carrying fresh-water for the use of the boiler and ship's service, as well as for the fog alarms which the 'Lansdowne' visits, such as Gannet Rock and other isolated places.

The amount asked for is considered ample to make the extensive and necessary expenses required.

In addition to the repairs to the 'Stanley' and the 'Lansdowne,' I may say that when the 'Minto' and the 'Stanley' were icebound last winter, there was a possibility of both steamers being pushed ashore by the ice, and, in that event these valuable ships would certainly have been lost.

The department had arranged with the owners of the sealing steamer 'Newfoundland' to go to the assistance of the disabled ships, and although the 'Newfoundland' did not succeed in reaching the 'Minto' and 'Stanley,' still there is a claim for services rendered by that vessel which amount will be paid out of the above vote.

Mr. HACKETT. Where are those repairs going on ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the Pictou Foundry and Machine Company, who were the lowest tenderers, and the amount is $3,975. The other repairs are made by Bruce Stewart and Company, of Charlottetown.

Mr. HACKETT. What are the other repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The repairs to the machinery and engine are made by Bruce, Stewart & Company.

Mr. HACKETT. When will this work be completed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Towards the end of this month.

Mr. HACKETT. Where does the hon gentleman intend placing the 'Stanley' ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not yet decided. I intend to visit Prince Edward Island myself, if the session does not last too long. Otherwise I will consult the officials of the department.

Mr. HACKETT. I trust the hon. minister will see his way clear to placing the 'Stanley' on the route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside. Does it require a visit from the hon. minister to decide this ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I trust that the session will not last so long that the hon. gentleman will get lost in the ice when he does get down. Did we not have some vote for the repairs on those steamers last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, we have votes every year to repair these boats.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was voted last year and what was the nature of the repairs ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The total vote in 1902-3 was $273,000, and the expenditure was $275,000. In 1903-4, including the present vote, the amount was $277,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was voted last year for repairs on these steamers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The amount this year is not an extraordinary one. It is only $2,000 more than the previous year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have evidently not made myself quite clear. Here we have a special vote of $27,000 for repairs to the 'Stanley' and 'Lansdowne.' I suppose there are repairs every year but not anything like that amount. My recollection is that a very considerable vote for repairs on these two steamers was given last year, and I want to ascertain just what that was. It seems to me that $27,000 is beyond the normal amount which should be expended each year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Most of the expenditures last year for repairs were on the 'Stanley' and 'Aberdeen.' This year they are on the 'Stanley' and the 'Lansdowne.'

Mr. HACKETT. It is very important to the island that communication should be maintained winter and summer between it and the mainland. This government has undertaken to keep up that communication, and what I am insisting upon is that we should have the 'Stanley' on the route between Cape Tormentine and Summerside. But the minister will not give any definite reply. I ask again if that is the intention of the government ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall not declare anything of the sort, because if I were to decide one way or the other I would be sure to arouse the hostility of one section of the island, besides I do not know at present what is the best line and shall have to wait for information.

Mr. HACKETT. I presume that the hon. gentleman desires to do what is right, and I hope therefore he will see his way clear to placing the 'Stanley' on the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine. There is another question of great importance and that is the building of a third boat for the island. We have during the session voted away millions of dollars to other provinces, and I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that there is no province in this Dominion more deserving of consideration than the province of Prince Edward Island. I insist that the third boat shall be constructed for the purpose of maintaining that communication. Yesterday we had a question on the Order paper by my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) with regard to the loss sustained by the shippers of frozen fish and other products from that province. I would like to have the minister tell us if he intends to compensate these people for the loss sustained.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The question was put yesterday, and I answered that the claims had been received and that the matter was under consideration.

Mr. HACKETT. That is a very plausible answer, but I insist on having something more definite. Is it the intention of the government to compensate the young men of Prince Edward Island for the losses they sustained?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Every legitimate claim, of course, will be entertained. But all have to be looked into, and the Department of Justice has to be consulted as to whether we are responsible or not. It is a very serious question, as the hon. gentleman knows, and we have to take the necessary precautions.

Mr. HACKETT. The minister is very cautious. He wants to be advised by the Minister of Justice. I insist that this is a case for the consideration of the government. We have no legal claim against them at all. But the loss arose through the failure of the government boat to carry the freight from Georgetown to Pictou. Will not the minister himself, as having charge of these boats and knowing the circumstances through which the loss arose, grant the young men of Prince Edward Island compensation for the loss which they have sustained ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall certainly not come to a decision without consulting the Department of Justice, for our decision involves immediately a very large amount. Then there is the question of law to be decided, for it may be that this case would establish a precedent. Under the circumstances, my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) must see that the question cannot be decided offhand. It may be necessary to appoint experts to ascertain the amounts, and also whether the interruption to navigation was inevitable, or whether it was caused by the officers of the department. These things have to be looked into, but the hon. gentleman knows very well that we have been busy with the session of parliament ever since the claims have been presented, so that, whatever my desire to do justice to these people, there has been no opportunity to adjust the claims.

Mr. HACKETT. I allege no legal claim against any officer of the department or against the minister. But I would like to have the minister consider the fact that the young men of Prince Edward Island had their products ready for the market, and those products were delayed at Georgetown on account of the absence of the government steamer. This is not a legal case. Our young men are not going to go to law with the government. What we insist upon is that the government, in their own way, shall grant to the people of Prince Edward Island compensation for the losses sustained.

Mr. LEFURGEY. This matter is of the utmost importance to the people of Prince Edward Island. Early in the session I reviewed the history of the boats engaged in the work of maintaining communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland last winter. We certainly do not want a recurrence of the disastrous events of that season, events due, as I pointed out, to neglect on the part of the department and bad administration at the island end of the winter boat service. The minister, on that occasion, said that he intended to take a trip to the island to look into the question of placing the boats so as to prevent a recurrence of what took place last winter. As we all know, the session has kept the minister here, and he will not have time to go to the island this year. The session is likely to go on for four or five weeks yet, and, by that time, the 'Stanley' and 'Minto' should be placed and shippers should know exactly where the boats are going to ply. Last year, after the 'Northumberland,' the summer boat, stopped at Summerside, it was over a fortnight before the 'Stanley' was put on the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and even then it was after much telegraphing and humbugging between the department here and the agent of the department at Prince Edward Island. Anybody who looks over the correspondence of that time will be appalled at the humbugging that went on before that boat was put upon the route from Cape Tormentine to Summerside. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows that that is not a desirable state of affairs; and, while he will not be able to visit Prince Edward Island to look into the facts himself, he knows that shippers to and from the island need to be informed in good time as to the arrangements to be made. There are goods coming through from the United Kingdom, from the United States and from the upper provinces, and shippers must know how they are to send their goods. They want to know whether the 'Stanley' will be on the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine immediately after the summer boat is withdrawn. That is the vital point. The matter should not be delayed until the summer boats stop, and then have a repetition of the humbugging that went on last year, when shippers could not get freight rates and could not learn where the boats would ply. And even when we did get the 'Stanley,' she was in Georgetown cutting boats out of the ice instead of rendering the service she should have rendered at the beginning of the winter. This is a most vital question to the commercial interests of Prince Edward Island. The neglect of last year in carrying out the compact by not arranging for these boats in good time, and using the 'Minto' to cut the 'Stanley' free when she was caught in the ice at Summerside—these things are responsible for the condition of affairs from which we suffered last winter. My hon. friend from West Prince (Mr. Hackett) has called attention to the way in which the shippers suffered loss because the 'Minto' was taken off her legitimate course and taken to the relief of the 'Stanley,' which had been caught in the ice, where she remained for two months and had finally to be taken out by the government of Prince Edward Island, assisted by the board of trade. I pointed out the legal aspect of the question when I brought it before the House. If the question is to be decided on the legal merits of the claim, there are strong facts bearing on the case to be considered. But, as the hon. member for West Prince said, we do not want to compel these men to take legal action against the government. It is the duty of the government, under the circumstances, to consider more than the legal aspects of the case. The goods were waiting at Georgetown to be transported across to Pictou, and they were not transported because the government, whose duty it was to provide the means of transportation, had failed to do so. It is the duty of the government to compensate the people for the loss they sustained on that occasion. Before I sit down I would like to have an assurance from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that this matter will not be left until the last moment, and that the people of Prince Edward Island will be notified that the boat 'Stanley' will be put on the route from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, at least as long as there is open navigation to those points, and that the 'Minto' will be placed on the Charlottetown and Georgetown to Pictou route.

Mr. HACKETT. Will the minister state what is the intention of the government this year in connection with maintaining communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We intend to maintain the communication.

Mr. HACKETT. Where will you place the boats ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said the question had not been decided. We have two months yet to decide.

Mr. HACKETT. We must insist that a boat shall run between Tormentine and Summerside. Is it the intention of the government to build a third boat to maintain this communication ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have not yet considered the construction of a third boat.

Mr. HACKETT. Well, if the government desire to maintain that communication they must build a third boat. We are a small province, but our rights rank side by side with the rights of the other provinces. Now, I would like to ask the minister again, does he intend building this third boat to maintain that communication ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have told the hon. gentleman that that question has not yet been considered.

Further amount required for examination of masters and mates, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have replaced Captain Smith, deceased, by Captain Reginald Salmon, at a salary of $2,000. There has been a necessary increase in the expenditure, and the former amount of $5,000 has been increased to $7,000. This department is being thoroughly reorganized under a very able officer, and we try to make it as effective as possible. Captain Salmon is an officer of the Royal Naval Reserve, holding the rank of lieutenant.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is his salary larger than that enjoyed by Captain Smith ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is $200 more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Even so, why do you require $2,000 additional ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On account of salary and travelling expenses. Last year we inaugurated a system of holding investigations into every casualty that occurred, and the expenses connected with the travelling of Captain Salmon are a good deal more than they used to be when we held examinations only in special cases. The members of the committee will recollect that this has been done at the special request of the Board of Trade in England, in order to render the service as effective as possible.

Mr. FOWLER. But what has the investigation into wrecks to do with the examination of masters and mates ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has to travel to hold these examinations.

Mr. FOWLER. There is an item just below, 'further amount required for investigation of wrecks.' The minister is looking in the wrong place. The minister shakes his head. Does he mean this committee to understand that this first item, 'further amount required for examination of masters and mates,' is required by the expenses of investigations into wrecks covered by the item below ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Besides the salary of Captain Salmon, the department has to provide for the salaries of the examiners at several shipping ports in British Columbia, Quebec, and the maritime provinces. The late Captain Smith also travelled in connection with the examination of masters and mates, and some of his expenses had to be specially voted. Now, instead of leaving them behind, we thought it was better to provide for them along with the travelling expenses for this officer.

Mr. FOWLER. How much was in arrears at the time of Captain Smith's death, and how many years do these arrears cover ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. About seven years. There are four new examiners appointed.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there more captains and mates to be examined to-day, since the shipping has fallen off ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is aware that all of these services, like all other business in the country, have increased, and we have to provide for that increase.

Mr. SPROULE. How many examiners do you require ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Four more have been appointed.

Mr. SPROULE. How many have you now ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give the list. It is as follows :

Names and Addresses of Examiners of Masters and Mates.

Lieutenant Reginald Salmon, R.N.R., Chairman, salary $2,000, Ottawa, Ont.
Captain Bloomfield Douglas, R.N.R., Halifax, N.S.
Mr. A. E. H. Gilpin, assistant to Captain Douglas, Halifax, N.S.
Captain David Hunter, Halifax, N.S.
Captain A. J. Wolff, Lunenburg, N.S.
Captain John E. Murphy, Yarmouth. N.S.
Com. P.H. Morgan, R.N., Sydney, N.S.
Mr. W. C. Seaton, Quebec, Que.
Captain M. P. McElhinney, Ottawa, Ont.
Captain R. C. W. MacCuaig, Ottawa, Ont.
Mr. W. L. Magee, Ottawa, Ont.
Captain Thos. Donnelly, Kingston, Ont.
Captain Wm. McIlwain, St. Catharines, Ont.
Mr. Geo. P. Phillips, Rat Portage
Captain E. B. Tingling, Winnipeg, Manitoba.
Captain James Gaudin, Victoria, B.C.
Captain L. H. Fraser, Nelson, B.C.
Captain H. A. Mellon, Vancouver, B.C.
Captain Alex. Cameron, Charlottetown, N.B.

And all collectors of customs are authorized to examine candidates for freight boats under 100 tons or for tug boat certificates.

All examiners are allowed $4 for each candidate examined, and $1 for renewals, with the following exceptions :—

The chairman of the board who is paid a salary, does not receive any fee.
Mr. Gilpin does not receive any fee ; he is paid a salary.
Captain McElhinney, no remuneration.
Mr. W. L. Magee, no remuneration.
G. P. Phillips, no remuneration.
Captain J. Gaudin, $300 per annum.
Collectors of customs, no remuneration.

During the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1902, 12 masters and 28 mates of foreign sea-going vessels, received certificates, and 275 masters and 110 mates received certificates for coasting and inland vessels. Thirty-one renewed certificates were issued.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are the additional men under salary stationed ? Those who are paid by fees are no charge upon the public treasury, and I would ask what additional salaries have to be paid ? The minister has read us a list of items which do not at all refer to the question at issue.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am informed by the officers of the department that four examiners have been appointed in order to render the service more efficient.

Mr. FOWLER. Why is it necessary to appoint these additional officers by salary ? Why not continue the present system of having them paid by fees ? The fee does not involve any expense upon Canada, and it would seem to be the preferable system.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The additional examiners will have to travel, and I do not know whether they will be willing to be paid by fee or will desire to have the salary.

Mr. FOWLER. Where do they travel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To the different places where they hold examinations.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not appoint examiners at these different points ? Why send the government examiner around to the candidate to examine him ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman will understand that if you are to have an examiner in every place it would be necessary to appoint 100 more.

Mr. FOWLER. You have these examining officers only at the great seaports, and they are residents of these cities. It is not necessary for them to travel, that I can see ; let the candidate travel to them. Why should the country pay ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are trying to do the best that is possible in the interests of the people, and we are trying to lessen the cost. We should afford to those who desire to take the examination every facility for doing so. Last summer, for instance, many complaints came to me that the examiners were not able to go from place to place in time to hold these examinations, and the vessels were delayed by the certificates not being given promptly. Under these circumstances I thought it was better to increase the number of examiners and to provide for the examinations in order to give better satisfaction to those who were engaged in navigation.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should a vessel be delayed because certificates are not given to masters or mates who were up for examination ? The minister apparently does not understand the question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman does not understand the question ; if the vessels are not provided with captains and mates duly certificated the vessels cannot go to sea.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think there is any particular dearth of captains or mates throughout the country. I do not see why the country should pay the cost of sending around to all the different inland ports or the different maritime ports if you will, to examine these candidates who wish to become captains or mates. Why should the candidate not pay any reasonable expense in connection with the examination ? It seems to me that the system of fees is the proper system, and you are making a very wrong departure if you depart from that and establish the system of payment by the country and of sending the examiners around to any port where there might be the captain of a fishing schooner who wanted a certificate. By doing this you are converting the whole thing into a screaming farce. The minister has not given us any explanation whatever of why this additional charge on the public treasury is to be made. The explanation he has given is worse than none at all, and it looks as if he did not know much about the matter. I think that he should move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again in order that he may acquaint himself with the facts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is very clever.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister says that is very clever, and says it sarcastically. I think the exhibition the minister has made of his lack of knowledge in respect to this matter should convince the members of the committee that we should not be called upon to vote an additional $2,000 in order to make these examining boards a sort of travelling show that will go around like a pedlar's cart to every candidate who wishes to be made a captain or mate. The thing is so absurd that the minister should take my suggestion in good part as being kindly meant —for it was kindly meant. There are only two examining boards that I know of in the maritime provinces, one in St. John, N.B., and the other in Halifax.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman does not seem to have listened to what I have said. I have given the names and addresses of the examiners.

Mr. KENDALL. There has been one at Sydney for years.

Mr. COPP. They have one in Yarmouth and always had one.

Mr. FOWLER. Have they not one in Digby ? There should be one to examine the new wharf which the hon. gentleman is to get a $5,000 grant for.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Holmes). Order.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the matter ?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Holmes.) You have no right to make an insinuation about an hon. member.

Mr. COPP. I beg your pardon, I said nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman said there were only two in the maritime provinces, and I thought he had forgotten the others.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. I have no right to be spoken to in that way by the chairman. I made no remark whatever.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Holmes). I made no reference to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood you said I called his attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Holmes). I did not refer to you at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. COCHRANE. No it isn't. A candidate for the civil service has to go to the place where the examinations are held and why have the examiners to go from place to place after these captains who want to be examined. I never heard of such a thing in my life as to pay men to run about the country to meet captains who want to pass an examination. We all know that these officials of the government, when they are travelling around the country, want all the luxuries of life ; probably those examiners will want down quilts, and things like that. But if they were travelling at their own expense they would not be so extravagant.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the duty of the minister to give a detailed explanation of what he wants the vote for. We want a detailed explanation of this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I stated that last year the vote was for $5,000 and we require $2,000 more this year, because we intend to have four more examiners. Capt Salmon will be obliged to go to the different ports and organize for these examinations to see that they are carried out properly. You must pay his travelling expenses and you must pay the four examiners who will be required. Capt. Salmon was obliged to go to British Columbia to look after the service there. We have had a great deal of difficulty in finding a man qualified as Capt. Salmon is to take the position at $2,000. It was only after a good deal of inquiry in Canada and England that we succeeded in getting Capt. Salmon. He had been employed in Canada on the surveys by the British government, and he became attached to Canada, and accepted the position. We will have to pay his salary and travelling expenses, and also the travelling expenses of the four extra examiners.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister has as yet given no detailed explanation. He says he will spend this money in sending men trotting around the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never said anything of the sort, and the hon. gentleman has no right to put words in my mouth that I did not use. I did not say that I would send the examiners trotting around the country, but I said that the chairman of the board would have to travel, and that some of the examiners would be obliged to travel, and we must pay their expenses.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the minister should tell us how much he will spend on these travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How can I tell this in advance. How can I tell whether Capt. Salmon will have to make two or three trips to British Columbia ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister should have a detailed estimate from his officials of what he is going to do with this money. He is asking for a blind vote of $2,000, but he will not get his estimates through unless he tells us in detail what he is going to spend this money for.

Mr. LEFURGEY. At what points in the maritime provinces are there standing boards where masters and mates can take their certificates ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Halifax, Lunenburg, Yarmouth and Sydney, N.S.; St. John, N.B., and Charlottetown, P.E.I., and Quebec.

Mr. LEFURGEY. At what points will those four new examiners be stationed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Capt. Salmon has recommended that we should provide for four additional examiners.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is extraordinary to submit a vote without any more definite information than that four new examiners are required and that the man who recommends them does not know where they are to be stationed. Are they required in the maritime provinces ? If there are four examiners in Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick, one in Prince Edward Island, within a distance of a few hundred miles of each other, I cannot understand why we need more examiners down there. Are these to be travelling examiners ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are no travelling examiners. Only the chairman of the board travels around and sees that the various boards are properly organized and the examinations properly held. He has ascertained that there will be required in the course of the year four more examiners to be placed at Victoria, B.C., St. John, N.B., Halifax, Charlottetown, and he has asked me to provide for their remuneration and their travelling expenses as well as his own. His own travelling expenses will be considerable.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What is Mr. Salmon's salary ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $2,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is he a recent appointment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was appointed in February or March.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Who held the position before him ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain Bloomfield Douglas was doing the work in the meantime.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Then the hon. minister cannot state how this $1,000 will be expended.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said it would cover extra travelling expenses not only of the four men, but other necessary expenses. As I have pointed out, in three or four instances last season there were complaints of very serious delays, owing to the examiners not being able to hold the examinations in time. The hon. gentleman must know that I have no interest whatever except in getting the best service possible. I do not know anything about it personally. I have to take the recommendation of the head officer, who is supposed to know all the details, and if it is reasonable, I submit it to the House.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am only asking for information, because I have had something to do with the shipping business for a number of years, and I cannot understand why there should be any delay to the shipping interests of the maritime provinces to necessitate four additional examiners being appointed. The candidates go up for examination at either St. John or Halifax, and their examination is simply a matter of a day or two. Yet it appears from the hon. minister's language that these men have to travel around to meet the exigencies of any particular person who wants to take an examination as master or mate. I would like to know if it is customary to bring down estimates with the small amount of information which we have regarding this item ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there any use of having members of parliament here to vote money ? The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Salmon states that two examiners will be required; but he refuses to state where these gentlemen are to be placed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One is going to be at Charlottetown—Mr. Alexander Cameron.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman wishes us to vote this money without knowing where these gentlemen are to be placed. The House should know as well or better than Mr. Salmon whether two more examiners are required or not. The hon. gentleman volunteers a little information, saying that one of them is going to be at Charlottetown. It is probably for the representatives of Prince Edward Island to say whether he is required there or not. I understood the hon. minister to say a few moments ago that there was a board for Prince Edward Island. Where is the other to be, and what is the salary of each ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have already mentioned the locations.

Mr. TAYLOR. The House ought to know before we vote the salary.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not salary. There may be a little remuneration paid to them, but the most important item is the travelling expenses.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this a new system ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. What is new about it is improvement. Formerly the president of the board did not follow up the business as closely as Mr. Salmon is doing at present; and of course it stands to reason that if he wants the work to be done properly, and he has to visit the different places, he will incur more expenses than formerly. I do not want the certificates to be delayed, and whatever travelling expenses may be deemed necessary will be taken out of this sum of $2,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How many examiners are there at present ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are nineteen, with the new one appointed at Charlottetown.

Mr. BLAIN. In the discussion of this item last year the hon. minister gave the names of the examiners, and I think there were not more than seven or eight. When were these new ones appointed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Some of them are officers of the department, and they have no salary as examiners.

Mr. KAULBACH. How many boards of examiners are there in the province of Nova Scotia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are four places in Nova Scotia where examinations are held. There are three officers in Halifax, one in Lunenburg, one in Yarmouth, and one in Sydney.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Was the additional appointment at Charlottetown made on the recommendation of Mr. Salmon ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is it because more business is being done there by the shipping interests ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It is a strange thing if more help is required by the examining board at Charlottetown than was required twenty years ago, when there was three or four times the amount of shipping that there is at the present time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman is not satisfied that we should have this examiner at Charlottetown, we will cancel the appointment. That is very easily done. The appointment was made on the recommendation of Mr. Salmon, to accommodate the shipping interest of Prince Edward Island. They used to go to Halifax before and if the hon. gentleman wants the old system restored, I shall do it with pleasure.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. minister may think that that is good political talk, but it will not go down to the people of the Island. We are here to ask for information, and I want to know why he is appointing an examining officer there ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To accommodate the people of Prince Edward Island, who are always ready to claim their rights. I wish to save their travelling from Charlottetown to Halifax in order to get an examiner. We have appointed one at Charlottetown.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understood that there had been one there right along.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, this is a new appointment.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When I asked the hon. minister to give me the examiners in the maritime provinces, he said there was one at St. John and one at Charlottetown.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I read the names of those I have in this return, and I read the name of Mr. Cameron, at Charlottetown, because he has been appointed.

Mr. LEFURGEY. At the same time he said that he did not know that there were new appointments at the time, and I therefore understood it was an old appointment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said I did not know either of the four. I read the name of Cameron as one of the examiners, and he has been appointed. I gave the information as I got it from my deputy.

Mr. FOWLER. When the Minister of Public Works comes down with his estimates he has the information all before him, and can give it, and it seems to me that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been long enough in the department to explain his expenditure. The shipping owned in Canada has declined within the last twenty years notwithstanding the boast of the hon. gentleman a few minutes ago. There is not as much tonnage owned in Canada as there was twenty years ago, yet we are to have a great many additional examiners to examine candidates for masters and mates. Why should this be necessary? These hon. gentlemen seem to be so anxious to spend the public money that they are looking all around for opportunities to do it. Where will these examiners have to travel to hold examinations? Will any examiner go beyond the county where he lives?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That will depend entirely on circumstances.

Mr. FOWLER. By what section of the law, of what regulations of the department is an examiner bound to travel at the request of some candidate for a master's certificate? There is no examination point at Digby. Suppose some one at Digby wants to be examined for a certificate as a master, will he write to the examining officer at Sydney to go down and be examined? Under what circumstances are those examining officers at the different points obliged to stop?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot say under what section. Their travelling expenses may be very trivial.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should they amount to anything?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Most of this travelling will be done by Mr. Salmon himself.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the hon. minister say that $1,000 of this $2,000 is for Mr. Salmon's travelling expenses? What do you do with the other thousand dollars?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said that the $2,000 provides partly for the salary of Mr. Salmon and partly for travelling expenses, and there might be some travelling expenses for the other.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman now says that Mr. Salmon's salary is $2,000, $200 in excess of his former salary. Now he says that his travelling expenses will be $1,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps more.

Mr. FOWLER. That will be a very large amount, $3 a day for the whole 365 days. Surely he would not travel twelve months in the year. The hon. minister has now $800 to account for, how is he going to account for that? It cannot be for the salaries of the examiners, because they are paid by fees. He has appointed Mr. Cameron resident examiner in Charlottetown, and there is another one to be appointed on the recommendation of Mr. Salmon. Why is it necessary that this second man should be appointed? This man does not get a salary and the hon. minister cannot say why one of these examining officers should travel from one point of the country to the other at the expense of the country. These men who are candidates for certificates as masters and mates are obliged to go to these examining stations and the government has been very generous in establishing so many excellent stations. The government has done more than its duty by these men. A man who reaches such a position is perfectly able to travel, besides these candidates can sail in the vessels in which they are engaged to these various points where the examiners are to be found, and pass his examination when he reaches any one of these points. Therefore it is absolutely unnecessary that any travelling expenses should be charged up by these examining officers, and the committee would be derelict in its duty if it passed this vote of $8,000 which the hon. minister is absolutely unable to account for.

Mr. HACKETT. Is Mr. Salmon a resident of Charlottetown?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. HACKETT. He is a very good man. What is he to be given as compensation for his services?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not yet decided what the salary is to be.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. minister could not appoint a better man.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am very anxious indeed to see our mercantile marine a success, and I think the Minister of Marine has the same object in view as myself. In order to accomplish what we both desire, it is necessary that our young men who desire to follow the sea for a livelihood should be given every opportunity to prepare themselves for their calling by a suitable education. It would be therefore, advisable to open marine schools in some of the most important ports in the maritime provinces. And I would ask for one in my own town, which represents an amount of shipping beyond that of any other county. There are more vessels belonging to Lunenburg, I believe, than to all the other counties combined. I would suggest that a school be opened in that place in order that we should be able to advance our young men as far as possible in preparation for their work in connection with navigation. I am sure that the effect will be to advance the interests of the whole country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is another item in the supplementary estimates providing for the special study of schools of navigation. At present I am only following what has been done by my predecessors and voting enough money to maintain existing services. But I intend, under the advice of Captain Salmon, who is a very efficient officer, to have this matter gone into thoroughly and have efficient schools of navigation established at the proper ports. The matter will be brought before the parliament next session.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. minister will not forget, then, the county I represent, the centre of a very large class who are deserving of a great deal of attention in this respect.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) will see that Lunenburg is not neglected. There is an officer there already.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am aware of that, but we are deserving of a little more.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) is somewhat sarcastic when he speaks of establishing a marine school in Lunenburg. There is already a school in St. John, and one school, it strikes me, is enough for the maritime provinces. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) is poking fun at the minister and the examining stations and suggesting schools. There are examining points. I understand, in other places than the maritime provinces. At what points in Ontario does the hon. minister intend to have officers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In Ontario there is Captain Donnelly, at Kingston, who is one of the examiners, and, one at St. Catharines, and of course, these at Ottawa.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) makes reference to Lunenburg. I want him to understand that Lunenburg is a centre. It is half way between Cape Sable and Cape North, and immediately on the coast, where most of the sailors concentrate. I think the appeal I have made should be favourably considered.

Mr. BOYD. Is the hon. minister establishing examining boards on the Lake of the Woods ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is an officer at Rat Portage and one at Winnipeg.

Mr. BOYD. Who are they ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Phillips at Rat Portage and Capt. Tingling at Winnipeg.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these officers paid by salary or by fees ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The two I have just named are paid by fee, but not all are so paid.

Mr. FOWLER. How is Captain Cameron, who was appointed at Charlottetown, paid ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By fees ; only foreign going deep sea examiners are paid salaries.

Mr. FOWLER. What is his salary ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No salary. He is not paid a fixed salary.

Mr. FOWLER. And is the officer at Sydney paid by fees ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. And at Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain Douglas, who is the officer there, is paid by salary, $300 I think.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the officer at St. John paid by salary ? I think Mr. Stammers was the officer there, but he has since died.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain Cole has been appointed at St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. How long is it since the officer at St. John died ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain Murphy of Yarmouth, used to hold the examinations at St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. No officer at St. John ? No officer at the leading port of the maritime provinces and the great winter port of Canada. And you are appointing officers at Charlottetown, Lunenburg, Yarmouth, Halifax, and these other small towns ? I am surprised. Why, the hon. minister must know that it is the natural point for many of these people to go for their examination. As the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) knows, St. John is the natural centre of Bay of Fundy ports ; it is the place where the vessels go with their loads and for their loads. The hon. minister could appoint an officer there and pay him by fee, and he would make enough to remunerate him.

Mr. COPP. I was going to ask about St. John. I do not see why there should not be an officer there. I desire to say also that I think the observations of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) deserve consideration. There should be schools in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where the candidates can be prepared for these examinations. I was under the impression that there was a school in St. John and one in Yarmouth.

Mr. FOWLER. There used to be one in St. John, presided over by a gentleman named Stammers. But I think he has since died, and I do not know whether the school was kept up or not. It is a very proper thing that there should be a marine school. I would be willing to support any grant for that purpose. But, of course, it should be at St. John. That is the only point for a school.

Mr. BLAIN. What revenue is there from this department ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year it was $5,292.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the charges upon the country greater than that amount ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year they were about the same.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is there any examiner between Kingston and St. Catharines ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Though there is no examiner in Toronto, an officer goes to that city when an examination is to be held there.

Mr. SPROULE. What constitutes a board, one examiner or a number ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It depends upon the circumstances. Sometimes it is only one, sometimes two or three.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that if you have examinations where you have officers, travelling expenses will be saved.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I have said, the travelling expenses of the examiners, other than Mr. Salmon, are very small. An examiner goes from Kingston to Toronto and his expenses have to be paid ; in the same way with an examiner going from Ottawa to Toronto to hold an examination. They may be two or three holding examinations at the same time for masters and mates. Mr. Salmon is nearly all the time on the road, either as an examiner, or as controller of the other examiners, or as holding investigations into casualties.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we to understand that Mr. Salmon has to go round and organize a board where it only consists of one person ? What kind of an organization does he require to make where there is only one examiner ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has to visit most of the stations where these examiners are placed in order to instruct them how to perform their duties.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be quite proper. I understood the minister to say there was one at Kingston, one at St. Catharines and one at Rat Portage. Are these the only three in the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are supplemented by our own officers here in Ottawa, where we have Capt. McElhinney, Capt. McCuaig and Capt. Magee.

Mr. SPROULE. Should there not be one at Sault Ste. Marie, or Port Arthur, or Owen Sound, somewhere on the upper lakes, where there is a great deal of shipping ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have taken the service just as I found it when I came into office. There was no head to it, no officer in charge, and I appointed Capt. Salmon as the head. Capt. Salmon, after entering upon the office, investigated the whole system to see if any improvements could be made, and he recommended the improvements which we are now trying to carry out by appointing four more examiners this year. Probably it will be necessary to change or to increase the number of places where examinations may be held.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister is making a reflection upon the gentleman who preceded him in the office. He says he found the service all out of shape, disorganized.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is distorting the words I used. I did not say the department was disorganized, I said there was no head to this particular service, because there was no officer holding the position which I found it necessary to fill by Mr. Salmon. I did not reflect upon my predecessors at all.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not intend to make a reflection, but his words could be easily construed as having that meaning. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman did not intend to cast any reflection upon his predecessor. Still, I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman has not shown us any reason why an official appointed at Charlottetown should be given a salary. He does not expect a salary, because he accepted the appointment with the understanding that he should only receive the fees. If a man in Sydney has only the fees which he earns, why should the man in Charlottetown be placed on a different footing? He does not perform any work. If he performs work, pay him for it; if he does not, why should he receive any salary? As a matter of fact, it seems to me that instead of increasing the examinations there might very well be less, by concentrating them in a few places. You have two examiners in some places and in other places only one. Now, is a certificate granted by one examiner just as good as a certificate granted by three? There should be some system. I really think this whole department requires a very severe shaking up. There is no reason why at Sydney, for instance, a man should go before one examiner and be granted a certificate, whereas at another place he requires to go before three examiners to get a certificate. The thing is absurd on the face of it. Instead of having examiners at a number of little places like Sydney, you should have a board of examiners at the great ports of the country.

Mr. KENDALL. Oh, you had better go and make butter and cheese and not talk about shipping.

Mr. FOWLER. I know more about shipping than the hon. member does, although he does come from a little place where they dig coal. So far as butter and cheese are concerned, I understood the hon. gentleman was a connoisseur, an adept in that line; he looks as if he had been milk-fed. I say that if the hon. minister wished to do his duty he would change this whole system and establish some principle with respect to the examination of masters and mates; he would establish at the ports like St. John, Halifax and Montreal, where all these vessels come at some time or other, boards of examiners of three men each, and then let these candidates come before these boards and pass a thorough examination, for nothing is more important than that these men should have a complete and thorough training. Then, he should establish schools. He should re-establish a school at St. John and should establish schools at these other points, and in that way something would really be done to benefit the sailor and the mercantile marine of this country.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there a uniform qualification for these masters and mates? How long has a man to be in the service before he can obtain a certificate to become the master of a vessel?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These regulations are published in the report of the department, but I will lay them on the Table of the House.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. BLAIN. I will not press that question further. Might I ask the hon. minister if it is possible for a person to get a certificate as master without first having served as mate?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. COPP. I think he has to serve before the mast for five years as what is called an able seaman, and then serve two years as mate.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it a uniform qualification throughout Canada?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister has told us that Mr. Salmon has double duties to perform, first to inspect the boards of examiners, and second, to investigate wrecks. There is another item of $2,000 for that purpose. Then he says that the cost of Mr. Salmon's travelling expenses will amount to about $1,000. Is he taking the whole of that $1,000 out of this $2,000, or is most of it for travelling in connection with the service of investigating wrecks?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is perfectly independent of whatever may be expended on the other item.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is perfectly independent. He has double duties to perform, will the general travelling expenses be charged against this item, or only a portion of them?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The travelling expenses for this service will be charged against this vote.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will his travelling expenses in this connection be $1,000 independent of the other?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot say.

Mr. TAYLOR. What estimate have your officers made of it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is the estimate of the officers and of Mr. Salmon.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the salary is $2,000; will the hon. minister tell us what he is going to do with the other $800.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no $800.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the estimate last year there was $1,800, including the services of the officer who was to do this work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That went back into the treasury because there was no officer to be paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. The estimate was there; we voted the money, and if it went back to the treasury it was not spent. It is only increased by $200 this year. There is $1,000 for travelling expenses which is Mr. Salmon's estimate. Now, that is $1,200, and what is to be done with the other $800? Surely the hon. minister knows that no other minister asks in this way for a sum of money without stating exactly how he intends to disburse it. We want the details of every expenditure, and the Minister of Finance will at once acknowledge that it is the duty of the opposition to ascertain these particulars and of the government to furnish them to the House. The minister cannot expect us to vote money blindly to his or any other department. We ought to know the minister's explanation and his statements should be on record; then if he exceeds the appropriation made for that service he would come down for a supplementary estimate next year and the House would vote it, but the House should be put in possession of all the facts when the money is first asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to make some further inquiry about British Columbia and Quebec, which were not spoken of by the minister. He did not tell us what stations there are in Quebec or British Columbia.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For British Columbia we have provided for an extra expenditure of $300, which is not to be taken out of the $2,000 for Captain Gaudet, who performs these services. He is an old officer of the department. The officer in charge at Quebec city is Mr. Seaton.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you have no officer at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, there is none in Montreal, but this whole matter is being studied at the present time in order to arrive at a complete reorganization of this department and to decide where it would be most advantageous to hold these examinations.

Mr. FOWLER. As a matter of fact, then, you have an examining board at Rat Portage and not at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that not the fact?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What do you mean by a fact? You need not point your finger at me in that way.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister need not get excited. I was not pointing my finger at you.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are excited.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister is very sensitive, he should not get so excited. I asked if there is an examining board at Rat Portage and none at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never said anything of the sort, I said there was an officer at Rat Portage; I never said it was an examining point.

Mr. FOWLER. What kind of an officer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. An examining officer.

Mr. FOWLER. If Rat Portage is not an examining point, where is the examining done?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The officer examines at Rat Portage or elsewhere.

Mr. FOWLER. Then he does examine, as a matter of fact, at Rat Portage?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Suppose he does?

Mr. FOWLER. Does that officer come from Rat Portage, or any other point, to Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is not serious.

Mr. FOWLER. I am.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No member of the committee thinks he is serious, when he asks if I would bring an officer from Rat Portage to Montreal. It is absurd; it is ridiculous.

Mr. FOWLER. I said from Rat Portage or any other point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are officers at Ottawa and Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. Do they hold examinations at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, when necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it not be more necessary to have an examiner at Montreal than at Rat Portage; Montreal being the greatest port in Canada?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand the Minister of Justice to say that Montreal is not the greatest port in Canada?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Nearly, but not quite.

Mr. FOWLER. I can understand why the Minister of Justice should stand up for Quebec as I do for St. John. I was speaking in all kindness to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but he seemed to get enraged, and if he chooses to do so he has a perfect right. I say that the whole system is rotten. I say that these examinations should be held by a board and not by a single person ; I say that the examiners should be stationed at the great ports in Canada. I say the present system is ridiculous and whether it has existed from confederation or not, if it is a bad system it should be abolished.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister bring down a detailed statement, so that we may have it on 'Hansard,' of how much of this $2,000 is for travelling expenses, how much for salary, and how much for other things. If he promises to do that we will let the item pass.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no objection whatever to give full details of the proposed expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say one or two words regarding this vote—that unseemly noise and slamming of desks will not facilitate the passage of these items, and that may as well be understood early as late. We are here to do our duty according to our judgment, and we do not wish to delay, but such votes as this must be accompanied by detailed information. The minister is comparatively new in his department, and he may not know the details, but the opposition will not discharge its duty in passing these votes unless we have the information at some time.

Marine biological station, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1898 a vote was taken for this purpose, and as the terms of the Order in Council expired in May of this year, the amount for maintenance was not placed in the main estimates. It was found that the $2,000 for maintenance was not sufficient, and university professors and others called on me and asked that it should be increased.

Further amount required for cattle inspection, $300.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where is this required ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A large number of cattle have recently been shipped from St. John, N.B., and as the inspector there had only a salary of $500, and the officers at other ports had from $1,000 to $1,200, we thought that $500 was not sufficient for him.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the officer at St. John ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Buckley.

Further amount required for awards for saving of life ; for life-saving stations, and for wages of crews and drill, clothing, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The department has twenty-nine life-saving stations ; fourteen in Ontario ; thirteen in Nova Scotia ; one at Grand Manan and one at Cape Tormentine. The men are required to sign articles to attend to drill or active service whenever called upon by the coxswain. They are supposed to put in fourteen drills during the season. It is important to secure the services of good boatmen. It is proposed to increase the drill allowance of the men from $1.50 to $2. They are doing very good work, and it has been represented that $1.50 is not sufficient.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the coxswain drill the crew ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Will it take all the $2,000 to give that increase ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there anything for this life-saving station on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, with reference to which the Prime Minister told us to-day the government would make a harbour of refuge, and where a life-saving station was needed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not yet.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister give us the names of the life-saving stations in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On the great Lakes, Cobourg, Collingwood, Goderich, Pelee Island, Poplar Point, Port Hope, Port Colborne, Port Rowan, Port Stanley, Toronto, Wellington, Consecon, Long Point (Lake Erie) Kincardine.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to draw the minister's attention to a very important place on Lake Ontario, in the county which I have the honour to represent—Port Credit. There is a volunteer crew there at the present time, which has been organized for several years. It has rescued several vessels that have been driven out on their way to the city of Toronto. I think it is a place which should be made a permanent station.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will call the attention of my officers to it, and have a report made upon it.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister do that soon ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As soon as possible.

Mr. BLAIN. If the department make the examination and find what services have been rendered by this volunteer crew, I think they will feel it to be their duty to establish a service at that point.

Further amount required for investigation into wrecks, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is on the recommendation of Captain Salmon. This board is completely organized under him at the present time. Of course, it does not entail as much work as the organization of the examiners. But it was found that the amount of $2,000 was not sufficient to hold the examination asked for by the insurance companies and the British Board of Trade. We have adopted the rule in the department of holding an investigation into every casualty to ascertain who is responsible, whether it is the channel, the men in charge of the boats, or the boats. The results of all these investigations have been transmitted to the British Board of Trade.

Mr. FOWLER. How many were there last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Fifteen. This year, I think, we have already held twelve.

Mr. FOWLER. How much did you expend altogether last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year we had not enough money. We spent $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand it correctly, Mr. Salmon is practically a commissioner to make all these inquiries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He is a commissioner of investigation under the law, and he has associated with him two expert assessors.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the same men do the work all through ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. Two assessors are taken from each place where he holds an investigation.

For expenses of inquiry into the subject of a Naval Militia and School of Navigation, $7,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this something new—a naval-militia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was originally asked $5,000, and the amount has been increased by $2,500 in order to enable us to study the system of establishing this naval reserve, of which so much has been said. It may be necessary to send an officer to some other countries in order to see how the same thing is organized in these countries. It may be necessary to send this officer to some other country to see how that is organized elsewhere. The school of navigation established last winter in Montreal gave very good satisfaction and I shall have a copy of the report made and put before the House. It is very interesting and shows that Captain Salmon knows the subject very well. These schools should be encouraged and the amount of $5,000 should not be considered too much.

Mr. KAULBACH. What is the number of the staff ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In Montreal they had four professors and the school was attended by about fifty pupils. There were lectures given on thirty-two subjects.

Gratuity to Alfred Couillard second mate of steamer 'Druid' for injuries while on duty, $600.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This poor fellow lost an eye while on duty. He claimed $1,000, and consented to accept $600.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to commend the action of the hon. minister in granting this gratuity to this officer and I desire to take this opportunity to point out the different treatment accorded to officials on the Intercolonial when any accident occurs to them. Last year an accident took place near Belmont on the line of the Intercolonial. Several persons were killed in the accident and one brakesman severely injured. It was a miracle he was not killed. He had several ribs and a leg broken. He was laid up and unable to work some six or eight months. During that time all that he received was three dollars a week, which he got as a member of an insurance association. To show how differently he was treated from this man, let me point to this fact. His run was to Moncton, and as he was unable to get into Moncton on account of the wreck, he was only paid half a day for that day. That sort of treatment cannot be too severely condemned. It is not the treatment which would be accorded by any private firm or corporation to its employees. There is not a man in business who would use an employee in that way, when that employee was injured in his service, without any fault on the employee's part. This man was injured in the service of the Intercolonial, and they would not pay him his full day's wage on the day of his accident because he was unable to reach Moncton where his day's run ended. I am glad to see that the Department of Marine and Fisheries treats its employees in a different manner. I would ask the hon. minister to look into this case—the case of Brakeman Crandall—who was injured in the Belmont disaster. He has a wife and large family, and all he got was $3 per week from an insurance company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not had that particular case before me, but I promise to look into it. I would remind my hon. friend that this insurance fund to which he refers is supported to a considerable extent by the government and that fact may have been taken into consideration. However, I do not offer an opinion as to whether the compensation was adequate and will inquire into the matter.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to suggest that if the hon. gentleman who is leading the House would consult with the right hon. the Prime Minister as to what items on the paper shall be dropped and what gone on with, we could estimate better how long we are likely to be kept here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister will make such a statement probably to-morrow, certainly not later than Monday. The Bill which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has in charge, and which is being transferred to government Orders, with respect to the election law, will be taken up to-morrow. If that be disposed of, we will proceed with the estimates at the point where we left off to-night.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, October 10, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

NOTICES FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

On motion of Mr. Demers (St. John and Iberville), House went into committee to consider the report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons for the purpose of revising Rule 51 of the House of Commons and Rule 49 of the Senate, and making them agree. (Votes and Proceedings of House of Commons, August 18, 1903.)

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). I beg to move:

That the report of the Select Committee appointed to confer with a similar committee of the Senate, for the purpose of revising Rule 51 of the House of Commons and Rule 49 of the Senate, be amended by striking out the words 'over the name and address of the solicitor for the applicant,' in the 8th and 9th lines, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:—'signed by or on behalf of the applicant, with the address of the party signing the same.'

This will make rule 51 read as follows:

All applications to parliament for private Bills of any nature whatsoever shall be advertised by a notice published in the 'Canada Gazette.' Such notice shall clearly and distinctly state the nature and object of the application, and shall be signed by or on behalf of the applicant with the address of the party signing the same. And when the application is for an Act of incorporation, the name of the proposed company shall be stated in the notice.

This has the consent of the Senate.

Amendment agreed to.

On section (a), subsection 4,

In addition to the notice in the 'Canada Gazette' aforesaid, a similar notice shall also be published in some leading newspeper, when the application is for an Act to incorporate a railway or canal company. In the principal city and town or village in each county through which the proposed railway or canal is to be constructed.

Mr. SPROULE. On behalf of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), I beg to move the following amendment:

That at the end of the first paragraph thereof the following words be added:—

And if the works of any company (incorporated, or to be incorporated) are to be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, such intention shall be specifically mentioned in the notice; and the applicants shall cause a copy of such notice to be sent by registered letter to the clerk of each municipality which may be specially affected by the construction or operation of such works, and also to the secretary of the province in which such works are, or may be located; and proof of compliance with this requirement by the applicants shall be established by statutory declaration.

That is for the purpose of giving notice to municipalities interested when in any Bill it is declared that the work is for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). I understand that this has also been agreed to by the Senate.

Amendment agreed to.

On section (b),

(b.) When the application is for the purpose of amending an existing Act:

1. For the extension of any line of railway, or of any canal; or for the construction of branches thereto:—In the principal city, town or village in each county or district through which such extension or branch is to be constructed.

2. For the extension of the time for the construction or completion of any line or railway, or of any canal, or of any telegraph or telephone line, or of any other works already authorized:—In the place where the head office of the company is, or is authorized to be.

3. For the extension of the power of a company (when not involving the granting of any exclusive rights); or for the increase or reduction of the capital stock of any company; or for increasing or altering its bonding or other borrowing powers, or for any amendment which would in any way affect the rights or interests of the shareholders or creditors of the company:—In the place where the head office of the company is situated.

All such notices, whether inserted in the 'Canada Gazette' or in a newspaper, shall be published at least once a week, for a period of five consecutive weeks; and when published in the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, shall be in both the English and French languages ; and marked copies of each issue of all newspapers containing such notice shall be sent to the Clerk of the House, endorsed 'Private Bill Notice' ; or a statutory declaration as to due publication may be sent in lieu thereof.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not have that private Bill notice in duplicate ? The notice must be considered by the Senate as well as by the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Senate have the same rule.

Mr. SPROULE. These are rules agreed to by the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, but they are to be rules of the House of Commons. They are not rules of the Senate, though the Senate will have the same rule.

On proposed rule 51c,

No petition praying for the incorporation of a railway company, or of a canal company, or for the extension of the line of any existing or authorized railway or canal, shall be considered by the Standing Orders Committee, until there has been filed with the committee a map or plan, showing the proposed location of the works, and each county or district, through which the proposed railway or canal, or any branch or extension thereof, is to be constructed.

Mr. DEMERS (Iberville). The applicants are obliged to furnish the Railway Committee with a map. We want to have a map before the Standing Orders Committee, in order that we may know that the notices have been given where they should be given. Of course, the same map can be used before the Railway Committee.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House do on Monday next go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions :

That it is expedient to enact as follows :—

1. The Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway, not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile, such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile:—

RENEWALS OF SUBSIDIES PREVIOUSLY VOTED.

2. Towards the construction of the steel superstructure of a railway bridge on the St. Francis river, in the county of Yamaska, in lieu of a grant under chapter 8 of 63-64 Victoria, item 38 of section 2, but subject to the same conditions as expressed therein, payable to the Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville, as their claim may appear for work already done on said bridge..	50,000 00
3. To the Canadian Bridge Company of Walkerville. To strengthen and complete the foundation and approaches to the bridge over the St. Francis river subsidized to the South Shore Railway Company by section 3, chapter 7, Victoria 62-63, a sum of $35,000, which amount shall remain the first charge on the road, and to be recouped to the treasury out of subsidies earned or to be earned..	35,000 00
4. To the Chateauguay and Northern Railway Company. In addition to the subsidy for the Bout de L'Ile bridge granted by chapter 8, section 33, Victoria 63-64.. ..	50,000 00

3. In these resolutions, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'cost' means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of terminals and right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway

4. The subsidies hereby authorized towards the construction of any railway or bridge shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and may, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Act, at the option of the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be paid as follows:—

(a.) upon the completion of the work subsidized; or

(b.) by instalments, on the completion of each ten-mile section of the railway, in the proportion which the cost of such completed section bears to that of the whole work undertaken; or

(c.) upon the progress estimates on the certificates of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, that, in his opinion, having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted, the progress made justifies the payment of a sum not less than sixty thousand dollars; or (d.) with respect to (b) and (c), part one way, part the other.

5. The subsidies hereinbefore authorized to be granted to companies named shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as establish to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively ; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August, 1903, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in each case in a contract between the company and the said minister, which contract the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make. The location also of such subsidized lines shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

6. The granting of such subsidies, and the receipt thereof by the respective companies, shall be subject to the condition that the Governor in Council may at all times provide and secure to other companies such running powers, traffic arrangements and other rights, as will afford to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running powers, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies, and equal mileage rates between all such connecting railways ; and the Governor in Council shall have absolute control, at all times, over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or upon any of the railways hereby subsidized.

7. Every company receiving a subsidy under this Act, its successors and assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway subsidized under this Act, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, materials and mails over the portion of the line in respect of which it has received such subsidy, and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service ; and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed, and the company performing it, and, in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Governor in Council ; and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to three per cent per annum on the amount of the subsidy received by the company under this Act.

8. As respects all railways for which subsidies are granted by this Act, the company at any time owning or operating any of the railways shall, when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers, showing the cost of constructing the railway, the cost of operating it, and the earnings thereof.

9. The Governor in Council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidies herein provided, or any heretofore authorized by any Act of parliament as to which a contract has not yet been entered into with the company for the construction of the railway, that the company shall lay its road with new steel rails, made in Canada, if they are procurable in Canada of suitable quality, upon terms as favourable as other rails can be obtained, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to say that on Monday next I will make a statement to the House as to the further business of the government to be introduced during the present session.

PETITIONS AGAINST NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if any action is being taken with respect to the motion passed a day or two ago concerning alleged irregularities in petitions presented to the House ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not conferred with the Chairman on Privileges and elections in this matter. Nothing has been done so far.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 263) to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I have looked over the memorandum furnished me through the kindness of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with respect to the provisions of this Bill. I find that my hon. friend was not exactly accurate in the statement he made to the House that this Bill is introduced in accordance with suggestions of the British Board of Trade. I find, however, that the amendments have been made and are introduced upon the recommendation of Captain Salmon, a newly appointed officer of the department, who takes the place of the late Captain W. H. Smith. If I had not supposed that these amendments were in accordance with the suggestions of the British Board of Trade, I perhaps, would have scrutinized them a little more carefully. However, as they have been made upon the suggestion of an officer who is said to be a very capable and efficient man, and as, of course, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the government as a whole take full responsibility for the introduction of this measure, I shall not detain the House at the present time with any further criticism of the provisions of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 3) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question of coping with the tendency to increase the electoral corruption in Canada is one the importance of which I need not dilate upon. Such corruption does exist to some extent, and to the extent to which it does exist it is detrimental to the interest of our country, and threatens the integrity of our institutions. The Bill with reference to this question was referred to a special committee some weeks ago. That committee was composed of five members of the government side and four of the opposition side, and it entered upon its labours with a sincere desire to report a Bill which would be serviceable to Canada and in the public interest. Such a thing as political feeling was not manifested in this committee in the slightest degree. Every member of the committee gave his best efforts to perfecting a Bill which we had reason to believe would be acceptable to the House and in the interest of the country. The committee had the aid in its labours of the Department of Justice. One of the officials of that department attended the meetings of that committee regularly, and acted as counsel in every legal matter. It had also the assistance of the law clerk of the House of Commons. The members of the committee were unanimous in their approval of the provisions of the Bill now submitted to the committee except on the one point, that one with regard to compulsory voting.

The provisions of the Bill as now submitted received the unanimous approval of the special committee, with the exception of the clause with reference to compulsory voting. We had the benefit during some of the sittings of this committee of the services of the Minister of Finance, and they were invaluable to us; and the feeling that characterized the members of the committee in their labours and at the conclusion of their labours, was most agreeable, pleasant and satisfactory, and gave augury, I trust, of the acceptance of this Bill by the House. The Bill we now proceed to commend to the consideration and the judgment of this House. If it is the opinion of the House that any other provisions of the Bill should be dropped, of course the committee is in the hands of the House in that respect, and it may be, from the fact that there was not unanimous concurrence on the part of the special committee with regard to the provision about compulsory voting, that it will be prudent and desirable to drop that provision. I leave the House to consider that question. I will now describe very briefly the provisions of the Bill. The first provision is with regard to compulsory voting, or penalty for non-voting. By a provision of the Bill, an elector failing to vote is disfranchised for a period of six years; but if he is absent from the riding, if he is ill——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How do you disfranchise him?

Mr. CHARLTON. Prevent his voting for six years, he is not eligible to cast a vote for six years.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. By what mode or manner?

Mr. CHARLTON. By the fact that he refrains from voting, and his name does not appear on the list. But as I was saying, if he shows that his failure to vote was due to absence, and that absence was not by design for the purpose of abstaining from voting, if it was due to illness, if it was due to having voted in some other riding, then he is exonerated from the provision of the Bill. This provision, as I say, did not receive the unanimous approval of the committee, and that is the only provision which did not receive unanimous approval. Section 11 of the Election Act of 1900, is amended. The section as it stands on the statutes provides that:

> The person to whom a writ is addressed, as hereinbefore provided, shall be the returning officer at the election to which such writ relates; provided always, that if the person to whom the writ has been addressed refuses, or is disqualified or unable to act, the Governor General may appoint another person to be such returning officer.

This section is repealed, and the following substituted for the same:

> Section 11. The writ shall be addressed to the sheriff or the registrar of deeds, or to one of the sheriffs or one of the registrars of deeds, for the electoral district or some portion of the electoral district for which the election is to take place, and he shall be the returning officer at the election.
> 2. If, from any reason, there is no sheriff or registrar to whom the writ can be addressed, or if the sheriff or registrar is disqualified or unable to act, or if any other person to whom the writ has been addressed refuses or is disqualified or unable to act, the Governor in Council may appoint another person to be such returning officer.

No more than one writ shall be addressed to the same returning officer at one time. The object of this provision is to place the office of returning officer in the hands of sheriffs and registrars so far as that may be possible, and I think this is a provision which will commend itself to the judgment of the House. These are officers of high standing, not likely to be influenced by political considerations, and corrupt motives in making their appointments will of course be absent. The next change in the Bill is an amendment of section 13. A subsection is added to this as follows:

> Any person who, when he is disqualified under the provisions of this or of any other Act, acts as returning officer, election clerk, deputy returning officer or poll clerk, shall be disfranchised for a period of seven years, and shall be guilty of an indictable offence, and shall be liable to imprisonment, without the alternative of a fine, for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months, with or without hard labour.

A section is added to section 12 as subsection (i):

> Persons other than sheriffs or registrars of deeds holding any public office either Dominion or provincial——

Are also debarred from acting as returning officers. Section 21 of the Act is amended by inserting after the word 'lists' in the third line thereof, the words 'and of an abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.' This is the result of a previous

Bill which requires that an abstract of all the penalties under this Act shall be sent to the returning officers to be posted up at two polling places, as notices of election are, and a subsequent provision also provides that an abstract of the offences and penalties under the Act shall be sent to the returning officer and mailed to each elector in the division of which he is returning officer, and shall pass through the mails free of postage. There is added to the provision about the lists, a provision for distributing this copy of penalties and offences under the Act. Section 26 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'proclamation' the same provision as in the first line thereof the words 'and the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.' The Act as it now stands reads thus :

The returning officer shall cause such proclamation and writ——

Simply adding to that provision the list of the offences and penalties under the Act. Then section 26 has a subsection added to it which is as follows :

Within the shortest possible time after the reception of the writ, the returning officer shall send by mail to each elector upon the voters' list a copy of the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act, which abstract shall be carried in the mails post free ; and in the province of Prince Edward Island the returning officer shall send a sufficient number of copies of the said abstract to each postmaster within the electoral district, and it shall be the duty of the postmaster to deliver a copy to each elector to whom any mail matter is delivered.

This provision with regard to Prince Edward Island is in consequence of there not being any voters' lists in that province. In section 41, section 1, subsection 1 is repealed and another is substituted therefor. Paragraph (f) as it stands at present relates to the directions for voters. The paragraph substituted for it is as follows ;

(f.) Furnish each deputy returning officer with at least ten copies of printed directions in the form L, for the guidance of voters in voting, and at least ten copies of the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act, which printed directions and abstract the deputy returning officer shall, before or at the opening of the poll, on the day of polling, cause to be posted up in some conspicuous places outside of the polling stations, and also in each compartment of the polling station.

The object being to have posted up in different places the law in reference to penalties and offences. There is a provision in connection with section 26 as to the mailing of these abstracts of offences and penalties to voters as follows :

2. Any postmaster who wilfully neglects or refuses promptly to deliver to the electors any such abstracts shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and costs to any person who sues therefor: provided, however, that this penalty shall not be imposed more than once for each election at which such neglect takes place.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Subsection 8 of section 96 provides that no ballot paper shall be displayed, that voters shall not be induced to display ballot papers, that the numbers on ballot papers shall not be disclosed, that the votes shall not be disclosed and that secrecy shall be maintained in respect to the counting of votes

Subsection 8 of section 96 is as follows :

Every one who violates any of the provisions of this section shall be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding $200 and to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, in default of payment of such penalty.

The subsection substituted for this is as follows :

8. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this section shall be disfranchised for a period of seven years and shall be guilty of an indictable offence, and shall be liable, if he is a returning officer, election clerk, deputy returning officer, poll clerk or other officer engaged at the election, to imprisonment, without the alternative of a fine, for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months, with or without hard labour, and if he is any other person, to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and costs and not exceeding two hundred dollars and costs, or, in default of payment of such fine and costs, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months and not less than three months, with or without hard labour.

Paragraph (i) of section 108 is repealed and another paragraph substituted for it. Paragraph (a) of section 108 refers to giving money, &c., to procure votes, paragraph (b) to giving or promising employment, paragraph (c) to gifts or promises in order to obtain money of any person, paragraph (d) to procuring return in consequence, paragraph (e) to advancing money to be used in bribery, paragraph (f) to demanding bribe of candidate or agent, paragraph (g) to receiving money, &c., before or during an election and paragraph (h) to receiving money after an election. Paragraph (i) which refers to bribery of candidates which is repealed is as follows :

(i.) Every person who, to induce a person to allow himself to be nominated as a candidate, or to refrain from becoming a candidate, or to withdraw, if he has become a candidate, gives or procures any office, place or employment, or agrees to give or procure, or offers or promises to procure, or endeavours to procure any office, place or employment for such person or any other person.

The following lines are also repealed :—

And every person so offending is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months and shall also forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor with costs.

Provided always, that the actual personal expenses of any candidate, his expenses for actual professional services performed, and bona fide payments for the fair costs of printing and advertising, shall be held to be expenses lawfully incurred, and the payment thereof shall not be a violation of this Act.

Paragraph (i) and these lines are repealed and the following substituted for the same :

(i.) Every person who offers, promises, gives, or procures or agrees to offer, promise, give or procure, or endeavours to procure any money, office, place, employment or other valuable consideration to induce any person to allow himself to be nominated as a candidate, or to refrain from becoming a candidate, or to withdraw if he has become a candidate, and any person receiving or agreeing to receive any such offer, promise or gift for the purposes aforesaid.

Then two new subsections are added :

(k.) Every person who, being an officer or employee of Canada or of any province thereof, directly or indirectly pays or promises to pay, or induces or compels, or attempts to induce or compel any other person to pay or promise to pay, or who receives from any other person, any subscription, contribution, or assessment for political purposes, or who prepares or makes, or takes any part in preparing or making, any political assessment, subscription or contribution ;

And every person so offending shall be disfranchised for a period of seven years and shall be guilty of an indictable offence, and shall be liable, if he is a returning officer, election clerk, deputy returning officer, poll clerk or other officer engaged at the election, to imprisonment, without the alternative of a fine, for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months, with or without hard labour, and, if he is any other person, to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and costs and not exceeding two hundred dollars and costs, to any person who sues therefor, or, in default of payment of such fine and costs, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months and not less than three months, with or without hard labour.

The next and last provision of this section is one which will be of interest to the members of this House and to the country :

Provided always, that the actual personal expenses of any candidate, his expenses for actual professional services performed, and bona fide payments for the fair cost of printing, advertising, bill posting and rent of halls or rooms for public meetings, or for meetings of committees, or for expenses for speakers at public meetings, or for canvassers or organizers—which canvassers and organizers in electoral districts situate wholly or in part in cities shall not exceed ten, and in other electoral districts shall not exceed three—shall be held to be expenses lawfully incurred, and the payment thereof shall not be a violation of this Act.

Section 108 has added to it the following as section 108a, in addition to the provisions preceding.

108a. A person offending against any provision of the next preceding section shall be a competent witness against any other person so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify on any trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation : provided that if such person has answered truly all questions which he is required by the court to answer, he shall be entitled to receive a certificate of indemnity from the court, which may be in the form FF, and the testimony so given shall not thereafter be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against him.

2. A person testifying and obtaining a certificate of indemnity shall not thereafter be liable to any action, indictment, prosecution or punishment for the offence with reference to which his testimony was given, and may plead the said certificate of indemnity accordingly, in bar of such action, indictment or prosecution.

This provision is, of course, one of very great importance, and the friends of this measure rely largely on it to stamp out the evil of electoral corruption. It places the briber at the mercy of the person with whom he tampers ; it makes the business of bribing eminently unsafe. It is not a mere experiment for it has been tried in some of the United States and found to be effective. The objection was raised and discussed that there was a probability of blackmail being levied, but it is impossible to avoid the chance of blackmail where prosecutions may be made by a private person. In practice the plan has been found to be satisfactory and efficient. And the evil of electoral corruption by the purchase of votes at the poles has been stamped out.

Section 113 is also amended. Section 113 relates to the conveying of voters to the polls and the penalty and the disqualification of voters offending in this regard. The provision that follows is also one of great interest and one which will meet the approval of the House. It was fully discussed and it is admitted that it has been found impossible in practice to prevent the doing of that which this provision makes legal.

Section 113 is amended by adding the following proviso :—

Provided, however, that nothing in this section shall be held to make it illegal for any candidate or other person to hire bona fide for any purpose and for the ordinary and reasonable price, any horse, team, carriage, wagon, cab, sleigh or other vehicle belonging to, or in the usual and ordinary employment of, any regular cabman or livery man.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is in section 113 ?

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall read section 113. It is as follows :

The hiring or promising to pay or paying for any horse, team, carriage, cab, or other vehicle, by any candidate or by any person on his behalf, to convey any voter or voters to or from the poll, or to or from the neighbourhood thereof, at any election, or the payment, by any candidate or by any person on his behalf, of the travelling and other expenses of any voter, in going to or returning from any election, are unlawful acts ; and every candidate or other person so offending shall forfeit the sum of one hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor ; and any voter hiring any horse, cab, cart, wagon, sleigh, carriage or other conveyance for any candidate, or for any agent of a candidate, for the purpose of conveying any voter or voters to or from the polling place or places, shall, ipso facto, be disqualified from voting at such election, and shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of one hundred dollars to any person who sues therefor.

With this amended provision applying only to conveyances belonging to regular cabmen or liverymen, the committee were unable to see, after a full discussion of this matter, where any criminal intent or any consequences that would be corrupt in its character would follow the hiring on election day of the conveyances of a liveryman or cabman for the purpose for which they are uniformly and universally employed at every election. This simply makes legal what has been done with a great degree of impunity without such legislation.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does this legalize the hiring of cabmen or liverymen during an election day ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, but it does not legalize the hiring of farmers' rigs or others than those of liverymen.

Mr. DAVIS. What happens in the case of a rural constituency where there are no cabmen and no liverymen ?

Mr. CHARLTON. In such a case no rigs can be hired. If they could be hired you would have all of the farmers wanting to have their rigs hired.

Mr. DAVIS. That legislation is for cities.

Mr. CHARLTON. This legislation is for cities. It is in the judgment of the House whether it is proper legislation or not ; it is in the knowledge of the House that in cities it is the universal custom to employ cabmen and this cannot be avoided.

Section 117 is also amended. Section 117 relates to voting by persons who are not qualified. The amendment is as follows :

Any alien or any other person, not being a voter, who resides outside of Canada, who canvasses for votes or works in any way to secure the election of any candidate, shall be guilty of an indictable offence and shall be liable to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and costs and not exceeding two hundred dollars and costs, or, in default of payment of such fine and costs, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months and not less than three months, with or without hard labour.

We have had in elections in Canada the evil of touters and election workers from the United States who are brought into Canada and who travel up and down violating the election law. But the day after the election or the night of the election they are gone beyond the jurisdiction of the Canadian courts. Under the provisions of this law they are prohibited from doing this, and by a provision to which I will refer later they can be arrested.

Then we have :

Form U in schedule 1 to the said Act, as enacted by section 12 of chapter 16 of the Statutes of 1901, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

This is a provision with regard to compulsory voting. If the provision for compulsory voting is retained this will be retained ; if it is not this will be dropped. I do not know whether it will be necessary to read it. It is merely a provision for the person who is disfranchised in consequence of having failed to vote, securing his vote if his absence is unavoidable or for sufficient reason.

Section 131 makes provisions with regard to civil and criminal procedure ; with regard to the recovery of penalties and forfeitures and a new section, which is added to is as 131a, is as follows :

If a person is charged with any indictable offence under this Act, and it is feared that he will endeavour to avoid arrest, it shall be sufficient to charge generally that he has committed an offence under 'The Dominion Elections Act,' without specifying the nature of such offence. The information in that case may be in the form GG, and the justice receiving any such information shall thereupon issue a warrant in the form HH. Upon such person being arrested and brought before a justice, the justice shall state to him the particular offence with which he is charged and thereafter the case shall be proceeded with in the usual manner.

This provision enables a summary arrest to be made without specifying the nature of the charge for which the prisoner is arrested. These specifications will be made when the case comes before the justice of the peace. This law will enable the authorities to arrest such people as these workers from the United States or any person who is suspected of transgressing the provisions of this law. The mere fact that there is power to make such arrests, or the making of two or three arrests will have a deterrent and salutary influence and will also enable the prompt administration of justice in the case of such offences. These are the changes and provisions in this amended Bill, and I repeat what I said at the outset, that with the exception of that referring to compulsory voting, they received the unanimous approval of the special committee. The gentlemen on that committee were thoroughly competent for the work they had to perform ; they were men who took a broad and critical view of all the questions discussed. These questions were discussed fully, with the utmost freedom and the greatest particularity. I do not suppose that a discussion of the character held by that committee could be excelled by a discussion in Committee of the Whole, or perhaps equalled; because the members of the committee sat down quietly to the discharge of their duties, with a sincere desire to arrive at the facts and at a proper conclusion. They had no political purpose to serve; they had no such thought in their minds. Their object was to perfect a Bill which would be beneficial and salutary to the Dominion of Canada, which would tend to cure evils of a growing and threatening character; and I commend this Bill to the judgment of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As the promoter of the Bill has gone over its salient points, as proposed, we had better now take it up section by section.

Mr. HACKETT. What protection is provided for the ballot boxes after the voting has taken place?

Mr. CHARLTON. The same protection that exists at present. The election law of 1900 is not superseded.

Mr. HACKETT. There is no change, then, in that respect.

Mr. CHARLTON. No.

Mr. HACKETT. Then, I want to state that I was subject to great difficulty at one time by the stealing of a ballot box, and I would like to have in this Bill some protection for the ballot box after it leaves the returning officer's hands until it reaches the place where the boxes are to be opened, in case of a recount. The ballot box I speak of was actually stolen from the train in transit between Alberton and Summerside. I would ask the hon. gentleman to insert a clause in the Bill protecting the ballot boxes from the time they are opened until the recount takes place before the judge.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sure that the members of the committee would be delighted to accept any suggestion to further perfect the Bill. However, at this stage of the session, perhaps it would be wise to accept the Bill if it is good as far as it goes. We shall have another session—at least, I venture the supposition that we shall—and there will then be time to add other provisions which my hon. friend and other members may suggest. If we accept the Bill as it is presented to-day, I think we shall make a long step in advance, and shall be in a better position to consider other proposed amendments than we should be if no action were taken with regard to the Bill at the present time.

Mr. HACKETT. I think that in the Act referring to Prince Edward Island the postmaster is required to place in the post office a list, or something of that kind.

Mr. CHARLTON. He receives a bundle of lists, which he is required to hand out to the electors who come for their mail.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would again suggest to the committee that we now take up the different sections, and hon. members can discuss these points under the respective sections to which they refer. Otherwise we shall not make any progress.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not see why this Bill should be handled differently from any other. The custom is to have a general discussion first, and I do not think that is a waste of time. I fancy that men say what they have to say in a general discussion, so that when we get down to the particular sections they go through quickly. It strikes me that the chairman, by taking the step he proposes, will cause more obstruction than there would be if he allowed the Bill to take the usual course.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is just the usual course which I wish to take. We commence the discussion of a public Bill with the first section. In the case of a private Bill, the principle of it is discussed on the preamble. As the promoter of the Bill wished to make a general exposition of the changes proposed, I allowed him to go on. We can now deal with the Bill better by taking it up section by section.

Mr. SPROULE. The only difficulty is this, that the promoter of the Bill is allowed to explain it in a general discussion, and then others are not allowed the same right.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If it is the general wish of the committee to have a general discussion on the first clause, I am perfectly willing.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We can have a discussion on the adoption of the preamble at the close.

Mr. HOLMES. As I understand, the idea of bringing this Bill forward at this time is to take the sense of the House upon it, and I think you would arrive at that better by means of a general discussion than by taking the Bill up clause by clause. I have no idea that a Bill of this importance should be placed on the statute-book at this period of the session. There are several contentious clauses in it which will provoke discussion, and if it is not the intention to press the Bill at this time, I think it would be better to allow a general discussion of its various features.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am willing to be governed by the wishes of the committee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You should be governed by the rules of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am governed by the rules of the House, and I think if we follow them, we shall make better progress.

On section 2,

The Dominion Elections Act, 1900, is amended by inserting the following immediately after section 9 :—

9. Any person who does not vote at an election at which he is qualified to vote shall be disfranchised for a term of six years from the date of such election.

2. Reasons sufficient for not voting.

3. Penalty for disfranchised person voting.

M. DEMERS (Saint-Jean et Iberville): M. le président, je crois de mon devoir de dire quelques mots sur la présente clause. Quand cette question est venue devant le comité spécial,—comme l'a dit le président de ce comité (M. Charlton), il y a un instant,—les membres de cette commission ont différé sur l'opportunité d'adopter le vote obligatoire, depuis cette époque, nous avons eu l'occasion d'en conférer avec nos collègues, et je crois que le sentiment, dans la province de Québec du moins, est opposé à l'adoption de cette loi pour le moment.

J'ai aussi examiné les commentaires de la presse anglaise et je crois, qu'en général, elle s'est prononcé contre l'adoption de cette mesure. On a fait observer que c'était une punition toute particulière qui serait infligée à l'électeur en le privant de son droit de vote pour l'espace de six ans, parce qu'il n'avait pas voté lors d'une élection.

La question qui se pose maintenant est de savoir quand et comment cet électeur sera remis sur la liste et aux frais de qui ? Voilà des questions auxquelles les députés doivent réfléchir avant d'adopter une mesure semblable parce que, s'il y a des faux frais à faire, ils retomberont sur les candidats ou les députés actuels. Je crois que cette clause ne devrait pas être adoptée.

Mr. SPROULE. As the Gaelic of my hon. friend from Iberville was rather imperfect, I appeal to him to use the tongue we are accustomed to.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). I shall be happy to oblige my hon. friend, although I am afraid I will be still more imperfect in my English than in what the hon. gentleman describes as my Gaelic. Some of the members of the special committee appointed to consider this Bill were of opinion that we should not adopt this clause providing for compulsory voting. Since then I have had occasion to consult my colleagues, and I believe that public opinion, in the province of Quebec at least, is opposed, at the present, to any such law. As some of the newspapers have justly pointed out, we are, by this clause, taking a very peculiar position. Because a man did not vote at one election we are going to punish him by disfranchising him for six years. We say : Because you did not vote this year, you will not vote for six years to come. That is not the proper way to teach people to do their duty, if we consider it is their duty to vote. The question then presents itself : How and when is this man to be put back on the list after he has been disfranchised, and at whose expense ? If a man has not had the right to vote during six years, the probability is he will for ever be precluded from voting. I consider this a very harsh measure to adopt. In my opinion, a man should not be obliged to vote. There may be many reasons why he should not. The candidate who represents his opinions may be opposed by one of his relatives, and so on, and there may be delicate reasons, which everybody will approve, why a man should not vote. And if he went to the polls he would be suspected. It is not allowed to an English jury to refuse to say whether a man is guilty or not, but I am told that a Scotch jury may do so by returning the verdict 'not proven.' In many cases people should be at liberty to say that they do not know for whom they should vote. We are told that a man may be obliged to go to the polls, but he need not vote, because he can throw a blank ballot into the box. In my opinion, no one should be obliged to resort to such a subterfuge. No man should be compelled to make the pretense of doing a certain thing. If a man goes to the polls he should vote, but he should have the right of deciding for himself whether he shall go or not.

Mr. PUTTEE. This section is no doubt the most material in the whole Bill. I can see a good many things in it which should lead the majority of the committee to report favourably on it. It is probably a fairly good compromise with compulsory voting. I do not think it is properly called 'compulsory voting,' but it is a pretty fair compromise. To that extent I endorse it. We have the right to insist that a man should vote when able to do so ; and if he does not take sufficient interest in public affairs to vote, in all probability he would not be much damaged by having his franchise taken from him ; and those who refrain from voting for corrupt purposes, as is frequently the case, should be disfranchised. It would appear to me that the committee have not studied this matter as deeply as they might. For instance, there is no extension of the hours in which the polls are to be kept open, as there should be, if you are going to make voting compulsory. At present the hours are too restricted. Either you should lengthen the hours or make the polling day a holiday. Nor should it be a sufficient reason to take before a judge that a man did not poll his vote because he was at work or that he had not time during dinner to cross the city to cast his ballot. When we make compulsory voting a law, we should not allow it to be evaded by trivial excuses. There are, no doubt, many excuses which, while they would not appeal to those interested in elections, would be sufficient to prevent those who are not keenly interested from going to any extra trouble. Take the city of Winnipeg during an election in the middle of January. It is quite a feat for a man to go and cast a vote in the middle of the day, or between nine and five. The only time the workingmen really have is after six o'clock at night. Men living a quarter of a mile away from their work, with the temperature twenty to forty degrees below zero, are not very much disposed to lose time in going to the polls; and if we are going to make voting compulsory, we will have to extend the hours. I am decidedly in favour of the principle of compulsory voting, but I am not in favour of it with the restricted hours of voting that we have at the present time.

Mr. DAVIS. I cannot see my way to support the proposition. I think the people themselves are the best judges as to whether they should vote or not. The amendment provides that a man who does not want to vote shall go to a judge and show that judge that he has 'good and sufficient reasons' for not wanting to vote. If you carry that out, then, so far as the North-west is concerned, you will need to employ a good many more judges. And what are 'good and sufficient reasons'? Supposing one member of a man's family is sick is that a reason that he could give before a judge to relieve him from the penalty of being disfranchised. Suppose a man is quarantined with his family on account of contagious diseases would that be 'a good and sufficient reason'? Suppose a man has religious convictions against voting——

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, there are hundreds of men who do not vote on account of their religious convictions. And among them are first-class citizens. There are many of them in my own constituency. They are among the best citizens we have.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) allow me to ask him a question? If these persons are disfranchised on account of religious conviction, why should they want to get on the list?

Mr. DAVIS. The list in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fowler's) part of the country is not the same as in ours. In his province they have a printed list prepared at a certain time by a revising officer. But in our country we have nothing of that kind, but lists made up by enumerators about ten days before the election. And these enumerators put on the list every person who is a citizen and entitled to vote.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is the way the lists are made in Ontario.

Mr. DAVIS. A man's name may be on the list but he exercises his own judgment about voting. Our election laws seem to have worked very well for the last thirty years or so, and I do not think any good reason has been given for disfranchising a man at one election because he did not think it well to vote at a previous election or because, for any reason, he did not go before a judge and give 'good and sufficient reasons.' It either disfranchises him or puts him to a lot of expense and trouble.

Mr. FOWLER. As a member of the committee to whom this Bill was referred, I may say that there was no clause of it to which we gave more attention than to this one. The committee tried to do their duty in the amendment of our election law as well as they could at the time at their disposal. It was late in the session before we got to work on this Bill, but when the matter was placed in our charge we worked faithfully and did our best to make such a Bill as would commend itself to the House. On the subject of compulsory voting we took a different view from that of some hon. gentlemen with regard to the fundamental question of the right to vote. While the right to vote is a privilege, it carries certain responsibilities, and one of these responsibilities is that the man shall exercise the franchise that is given him. It is not for the man who enjoys his privilege to say whether he shall exercise it or not. The committee felt that he should be obliged to fulfil the duties and accept the responsibilities of citizenship. Moreover, we felt that to make such a law as is here proposed would be to take a long step towards putting down the bribery which, we must all admit, is altogether too prevalent throughout this country. That is the object. And we made the period of disfranchisement six years so as to cover the next election. What the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) has said with respect to lengthening the hours of voting might be necessary in cities, I can quite understand that. But it would not be necessary in rural constituencies, which of course, are the great majority of constituencies throughout Canada. That is a matter for this committee and the House to provide for by any further amendment which they may deem necessary. I think that subject was referred to in our committee, but we did not feel that we had much time to consider the distinction. The provision might easily be made covering the city constituencies, so that workmen would not be prejudiced by this clause. It seems to me that this could be very easily worked out. If a man does not vote there is no necessity to take any steps. If his name is upon the list it is the right of any person at the time of tendering his vote to object to the vote, and then he must take the oath. The point is covered by the oath and a penalty is imposed by this section. Any person representing either political party at the arranging and making up of the lists can object to a man's name being put on the list on the ground that he had not voted the previous election. There is no difficulty in arranging the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are not the lists arranged by the provincial authorities ?

Mr. FOWLER. I admit that that is a point to be considered. We ran up against that contention in the committee.

Mr. HEYD. That is the knock-out.

Mr. FOWLER. It is a difficulty so far as the making up of the list is concerned, but not so far as voting is concerned. Any one can object to a man voting. The hon. gentleman from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) does not know what a knock-out is. So far as the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) is concerned, he tells us that there may be persons whose religious convictions may prevent them from voting. Well, how are they injured by being left off the list or refused the right to vote ? Unless we assume that these persons are going to change their convictions between one election and the next.

Mr. DAVIS. Something might arise to cause them to change.

Mr. FOWLER. If so, then let them wait a little longer, until the next election, and then they will be able to vote. The principal idea that governed the committee with regard to the matter was to get at bribery and corruption, and we thought that if men were compelled to go to the poll there would be less object in attempting the bribery that is sometimes attempted. We felt that the privilege of voting carried with it the duties of citizenship, and that it was right to compel these persons to vote who, from indifference or any other cause refused to take part in the public work of the community.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) a question. Provision has been made in the case of illness on the part of a voter. But suppose that some member of a man's family is sick ; suppose that one of them is dead. Must the man then be disfranchised ?

Mr. FOWLER. That can be explained to the judge.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, he will have to go to the judge and explain ?

Mr. CHARLTON. It will cost him nothing ?

Mr. DAVIS. It will cost him his time.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, suppose a man's name is left off the list, he has to go to the judge to get it on. This is not a singular hardship. You cannot make any general rule about anything without having individual cases in which the law seems to operate harshly.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is legislation run wild. That may be thought too strong language. If the franchise is a privilege I cannot quite understand how you can compel a man to use his privilege. But this compulsory voting does not seem to me to be consistent with British right and liberty, and I for one am against bringing in legislation of this kind. I may be too young a member of this House to be quite justified in declaring my opinion so bluntly, but it seems to me that legislative bodies sometimes forget that there is a possibility of over-legislating. I think that if a Bill were brought in to stop such a thing as canvassing in an election, you might do some good. But merely to make laws against corruption that are easily broken will not put a stop to corruption in our politics. When it is possible for men to be coerced into voting for individuals and at the same time, the voting is compulsory, I think it is legislation run wild, and, I for one strongly object to such a proposition. I think it is one that should be struck out, and let us go on with some other work that will be more advantageous to the country.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman talks about liberty, yet he is willing to restrict men from canvassing. I do not think that compelling a man to vote is half as much a restriction of his personal liberty as to refuse him the privilege of canvassing. Yet the hon. gentleman talks about legislation running wild. He forgets that while we have the privilege of voting, that privilege carries with it duties and responsibilities.

The PRIME MINISTER. The privilege of canvassing also.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I merely made that suggestion, without intending to lay it down as a principle.

Mr. HOLMES. The committee endeavoured to overcome a difficulty that prevails in all election campaigns. The idea no doubt was to compel a man who holds back his vote to about five minutes to five, to go and poll his vote in good time. At the same time, I think the thing is practically impossible ; you cannot carry out compulsory voting. It is an ideal system, over which there has been considerable discussion, yet I think any one who has had experience in election matters will know that it is utterly impossible to carry that out. Take for illustration the case of two candidates, both of whom we will suppose happen to be undesirable men. A man may say to his friends, or he may say to himself : I am not going to cast my vote for either of these men ; they do not come up to my standpoint of what a candidate ought to be, and I am not going to vote for either one of them. But this law compels him to go to the polls and vote ; if he does not, he becomes a criminal. Further than that, reference has been made to the fact that in the North-west Territories, and the same may be said of other parts of the country, there are in certain places men of peculiar religious convictions who do not desire to poll their vote. We know also that there are the Brethren who hold religious scruples against voting, and some of them do not vote. I understand that in the North-west there are also a number of Mennonites who hold that it is wrong to vote. Now, I think, as men have a right of individual action, this parliament has no right and has no power to compel a man to go forward and record his vote. I think every citizen of this Dominion, or anywhere else, has the individual right to do as he likes to a certain extent. I do not agree with the idea that the right of citizenship carries with it the duty of voting. I agree to some extent with what has been said by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson), that this is a privilege offered to a man to exercise if he desires, or to refrain from exercising if he feels so disposed. But I do not think it is within the province of this parliament to compel a man to go forward and record his vote against his will. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in this respect the less we interfere with what might be called a man's privileges, so far as election matters are concerned, the better will we be consulting the interests of the community at large. There is such a thing as legislating too much. It is all right to legislate against improper practices in any respect that will be detrimental to the welfare of the community, but in respect to this particular form of legislation, I am satisfied that it will do infinitely more harm than good. You cannot imagine, if you were to carry out this principle, what might be the consequences in a community where, we will say, 40, or 50, or 100 men do not choose to go to the polls and record their votes. I do not know whether the Liberal party, I am very doubtful whether the Conservative party, would feel disposed to prosecute those men because they did not vote. If they did prosecute them, you can easily imagine the dismay that would exist in that community. I am satisfied that the outcome would be infinitely worse than if you left them to do as they please.

Mr. FOWLER. There is no penalty except the loss of the right to vote, they are not prosecuted.

Mr. HOLMES. Very true, but in the eye of the law a citizen becomes a criminal if he does not vote, and is punished by being disfranchised.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Macpherson) and the hon. member for West Huron, both misconceive the legislation, as I understand it. The effect of this legislation is that if any voter, entitled to vote in Canada, chooses to say: I do not want the privilege of voting, and therefore I wont't vote—you disfranchise him for six years. Now this man who refrains from exercising his right to vote is not being punished at all, he is only being told: Since you have said that you do not want to vote in this election, we won't let you vote for six years to come; but if you change your opinion within the six years, you will be allowed then to vote. There is no punishment about it, there is nothing except an enforcement of the man's own exercise of his privilege to refrain from voting. He has now the privilege of voting and he says he does not care for that privilege.

Mr. HOLMES. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? He says he is not punishing the individual. Now is it not doing a great wrong to the individual who, on one occasion, will not vote, if the government compels him for six years after to refrain from voting?

Mr. LANCASTER. Well, if this man whom my hon. friend is so anxious to protect wants to exercise the privilege of voting, he has it in his own power to decide whether he wants to vote or not for six years. He knows the law, everybody in Canada is presumed to know the law; and if a voter knowing that law does not vote, and knows that he cannot vote again for six years, why, he decides his own case, and you are practically confirming him in his decision. He decides his status for six years, decides it deliberately, with all the knowledge of the consequences. He says to the government: I declare, by staying away from the polls, that I do not want to vote for six years. You allow him to decide his own case, and what harm are you doing him? You cannot say to the Speaker of this House that you do not want to vote on such and such a measure, when you are present. Every man here has to vote unless he is paired. It is a duty to the state, here as in a political election. I am not so sure, however—and I do not want to be misunderstood—that the section as drawn will carry out the object in view. But I think that we can agree upon the principle that when a voter who declares by not voting that he does not want to vote, when he knows that by so doing he cannot vote for six years, we are not depriving that individual of a privilege by disfranchising him, we are in fact giving him the highest privilege we can give to any man, and that is the privilege of deciding the extent of his own rights for the next six years.

Mr. DAVIS. Supposing two undesirable candidates are before the electors, and that a clergyman, for instance, did not choose to cast his vote for either of them, thinking they were both undesirable, would the hon. gentleman disfranchise him for six years?

Mr. LANCASTER. I have always found that when there were two candidates there was one who was less undesirable than the other—if the hon. gentleman can understand that—and I say it is the duty of the clergyman, or of any other elector, to select the least undesirable and to vote for him, that is, if he desires to vote at all. In my own county we have had to select between men neither of whom would be our choice if we had the right of nomination. The voter has got to come to a conclusion as to which of the two men, on all the evidence that he can procure, is the least desirable, or the most desirable, and he has to give the best decision he can. I think anything that will increase the responsibility of a voter will by so much advance the welfare of the general community ; and if we teach voters that a responsibility attaches to them, that they are under an obligation to inquire into the qualifications of the candidates and to vote for the least unfit—that is if they deside to vote at all—we will be legislating in the right direction. Let the voter pause before he decides not to vote, let him inquire a little further into the qualifications of the candidates, and perhaps a day or two later he will come to the conclusion that he does see a distinction between the two men, and that he will vote for the one he thinks the better man. I think a provision of this kind will cause the elector to be more careful, to search into the qualifications of the candidates with more care, and in that way the effect will be beneficial.

Mr. FRASER. I agree with what the hon. member for King's, N. B. (Mr. Fowler) has said that voting is a privilege or duty. But who is to be the supreme judge of the exercise of that privilege or duty—is it the parliament or the individual ?

Mr. LANCASTER. The individual.

Mr. FRASER. Then you cannot prevent him. I believe that he ought to be the judge of the exercise of that privilege and duty, and if he should be the judge of both, he ought to be allowed to stay at home if he thinks he is performing his duty thereby better than, under the compulsion of this parliament, going out and voting. Who is to be the final judge of privilege and duty ? There is such a thing as parliament taking legislation into its own hands that it has no right to take, and I think it would be a grave mistake for this parliament to say that a man, who perhaps has studied a question just as much perhaps as this parliament has, shall exercise his franchise although he says that by refraining from exercising the privilege of voting he is serving his conscience better than if he went out and voted for one or other of the parties. He should be the supreme and final judge of that. A question may come up which may be a political question. It may be a direct party question. On one side we may take one view and on the other side there may be a different view. There may be an hon. gentleman on the opposition side who says that he agrees with the view which the government take, and there may be an hon. gentleman on the government side who may say that he does not agree with it. What are these men to do ?

Mr. COCHRANE. They will be whipped into line.

Mr. FRASER. Not at all. A time comes in parliament on one side or the other when a man simply says : I will abstain from voting. I cannot vote against my party, but the fact that I disagree with my party in regard to the view which has been enunciated by it does not make it necessary that I shall sever my connection with my party.

Mr. FOWLER. Then the hon. gentleman's argument is that a member representing the people is doing his duty by refraining from voting ?

Mr. FRASER. That gentleman as a representative of the people, must be the judge of what his duty is. I would like to see you introduce an Act into this parliament to provide that every man who is in Ottawa must vote or otherwise he cannot be a member of this parliament. There would be no difference between that and saying that a man who did not vote at an election should be deprived of his vote for six years. I remember a vote not long ago when a number of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were glad to go out of this House and refrain from voting. They had a right to do it. I have known occasions on this side when hon. gentlemen felt it their duty not to vote. In any case it would be dangerous to say to a member of parliament : You must vote. If he is in his seat he accepts the responsibility of doing so, but he may abstain from voting. If you say to a man, you must vote or you lose your privilege, I venture to make the assertion that you will make a number of people in this country worse citizens than they are to-day. You cannot drive men. There is nothing like individual liberty in the world. It is the only thing that makes for stable government that a man shall be the judge as to whether he shall vote or not.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that increasing the responsibility of the citizen degrades citizenship ?

Mr. FRASER. You can degrade it by increasing it in this way. That is where the hon. gentleman and I part company. I say that it degrades a man if parliament steps in and says that it shall be the final arbiter of your ideas of duty of privilege and of conscience. A man may be far more conscientious on a given occasion in not voting than hundreds of thousands of men are in voting. He may be all right in abstaining from voting, but the individual must be the judge of that. I would not interfere with any man's liberty, as I believe liberty full and free is best in the interest of stable and independent government, and I would like to——

Mr. FOWLER. Quotation.

Mr. FRASER. We never say very much that is new, and if some hon. gentlemen understood that, they would not be so proud of what they do say. Feeling that, I would be very loath to say that because a man did not conscientiously think that on a given occasion he should vote he should therefore be told that he is not a good citizen, and that he cannot exercise that privilege. We do not cease visiting our friends because they may do something that we think they ought not to do. I do not think we should interfere with the liberty of the individual to decide for himself whether he is best discharging the duties of citizenship by voting or refraining from voting.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) seems to have forgotten the object of the Bill which is now before the committee. The statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and admittedly of every person in this House is that corrupt practices have been committed in the different ridings of this country, which both parties have resolved to stamp out. What principle is it most necessary to apply for the purpose of doing this? The committee have applied, as a first principle, that of compulsory voting. That will do something to prevent the crime of corruption, if it does nothing else. But, I think they would have made it more effective if they had added another clause to the Bill—I know I differ from the great mass of the members of this House in reference to this—and that is a clause providing for open voting. If a man receives a bribe for depositing his vote his neighbours know what his convictions are, and he is ear-marked if he votes against his convictions. This would be a means of preventing that crime. There are only two ways of preventing bribery and corruption, and they are by adopting the principle of open voting and compulsory voting. Talk about the liberty of the individual! How is it infringing upon the rights of conscience to say that a man shall go up to the poll and deposit his vote? There are lots of people who do not exercise their franchise, and who have not the right to do it. The party who has the right is the delegate of all the others, and if that right is delegated to him, he should exercise it. If no candidate is acceptable to him, he has the right to nominate a man who is acceptable to him. He has the right to vote, and the community have the right to expect that he will exercise the power which they have given him, because where there is power given to him it is his duty to exercise it. I have heard that principle advocated by perhaps the ablest Liberal who ever sat in this House—Hon. Edward Blake. It has been advocated by Liberals in every section of the world. I think it is the correct principle, and I think the time has arrived in this country to compel every man, for the sake of decency in elections, for the sake of preventing bribery and corruption to exercise the right which parliament has conferred upon him. If the system of enfranchisement under the Act is not correct, let us have a correct one, but let us adopt the principle of compulsory voting, because it is one of those principles that will do more than anything else to prevent the crime of bribery and corruption.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). There is just one point in favour of the motion under discussion to which I wish to refer, and that is that more people are bribed to stay at home and refrain from voting than are bribed to vote. If they were compelled to vote then they would not stay at home, and if they went to the polls they would naturally vote as they felt. That is why I think that this clause is a step in the right direction. As for the charge that a man is injured by being compelled to vote it seems to me that he is only doing his duty by voting. Every man who is enlisted as a soldier is compelled to take arms to fight his country's battles and here is a duty, the duty of preventing bribery, corruption and bad government, more serious than any that a soldier was ever compelled to perform. We want to turn out bad governments, we want to put down any bad thing in the government. We want to destroy everything that is bad in this country and it can be done only through the ballot box. I think it is right that every man should be compelled to vote and to register his name personally previous to the election in the section where he lives. It costs the municipalities hundreds of thousands of dollars to get people on the voters' lists. I heard it said only yesterday in the House that the lists were not prepared. The lists should be ready every moment. Every man should be compelled, as I have said, to register his vote just as he is compelled to register the birth of his child, the death of his father or a marriage ceremony. If the man is capable of walking he should be compelled to register himself; if he cannot walk he is able to talk and he should depute some one else to register for him. The enormous expenditure of putting people on the lists should be undertaken by this government. Not only should it be a duty to vote but there should be some one of the right sort for the people to vote for. It so often occurs that we have not the right men before us and so we are obliged to vote for a poor Liberal or Tory when we otherwise would not. You are obliged to vote either for a Grit or a Conservative when in nine cases out of ten, if you had your will, you would not do so. You are obliged to vote for one of them simply because you have put a barrier in the way of an honest man being a candidate. You fine him $200 if he does not get one-half as many votes as the highest candidate at the election. This is what you should remedy, that $200 fine if the candidate does not get half as many votes as the highest number polled by a candidate. Then you would more often have candidates of the right sort in the field; you would have a great many working men and you would have more men in the House of my stamp. I tell you it would be no injury to this country to have more men of my stamp here and everybody in this country knows that. But the Grits and Tories will bring out their candidates and the old man will be left at home.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). That is nothing to me. It is the people who will suffer, not me. Now Sir, I do not wish to make a burlesque of this, but I do hope that you will not amend this in the direction proposed but that you will add another clause providing that no man will be allowed to contribute any money whatever to an election fund. That will do away with the bribery in this country.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

The PRIME MINISTER. As section 2 involves considerable discussion, and the House is very thin, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it be suspended, and that we pass to another.

On section 3—returning officers,

Mr. DAVIS. What is the object of having sheriffs and registrars act as returning officers ? ?

Mr. FOWLER. The object is to have some official person who would be absolutely responsible.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). Somebody as far as possible removed from the political struggle that is going on.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am afraid that whoever drew this section did not consider the matter very carefully, for there is no sheriff for an electoral district nor a registrar of deeds for an electoral district.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). The second subsection covers that objection. It provides that if there is no sheriff or registrar to whom the writ can be addressed, or if the sheriff or registrar is disqualified or unable to act, another person may be appointed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Every word in a section of a statute has to have a meaning, and there is no sheriff for an electoral district nor a registrar of deeds for an electoral district.

Mr. ROBINSON (West Elgin).

Mr. FOWLER. That can easily be amended by making it read : ' for the county in which the electoral district is situated.'

Mr. DAVIS. In the North-west Territories one sheriff would have jurisdiction over perhaps three ridings. For which would he be appointed ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He could be appointed for any one of them. There is nothing more than a technical objection to any part of this section. The Minister of Justice is perfectly right in saying that you do not appoint a sheriff or a registrar of deeds for any area as an electoral district. But in the province of Nova Scotia there are seventeen counties which are electoral districts, and for each of which the sheriff is appointed. Therefore, you have the substance of the provision, although it may be necessary to make some slight correction in the words themselves.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In my own district there are four sheriffs and four registrars of deeds. I think this Bill ought to have received more consideration than it has, and more perhaps than there is time to give to it. Perhaps it might be amended so as to read in this way : ' The writ shall be addressed to one of the sheriffs or one of the registrars of deeds for the county, district or territory served by him and comprised in the electoral district.' I am not sure but that would meet the case of the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIS. No, it would not. This provision would necessitate the sheriff leaving his office to attend to this business, and no ordinary person could fill his position.

Mr. FOWLER. Does he never leave his office for a day ?

Mr. DAVIS. It would take more than a day ; it would take three or four weeks. Suppose you addressed the writ either to the sheriff or the registrar of deeds, and he was not able to act. That would necessitate his notifying the government of that fact, and it would be necessary to issue another writ addressed to somebody else, and by that time it would be too late.

Mr. FOWLER. You have to find out in the first place whether the sheriff or the registrar can act.

Mr. DAVIS. For instance, in the county of Huntingdon, in the province of Quebec, the writ was issued to a gentleman, who held it for some time, when it occurred to him that he wanted to become a candidate himself, and he sent the writ back.

Mr. SPROULE. The objection raised is overcome at the present time by the fact that every returning officer has an election clerk, who does most of the work. It very often happens that the returning officer does not leave his home, while the election clerk puts up the notices and distributes the other necessary papers.

Mr. HOLMES. What would be the advantage of appointing a sheriff in my county, for instance, where there are three ridings ? The sheriff would have one writ, and in the others the writs would be sent to reputable citizens. If you also had a registrar, one of the writs would be sent to him, which would still leave one to be sent to a reputable citizen ; and if you sent one to a reputable citizen, why not send the whole three to reputable citizens ?

Mr. DAVIS. In a very large constituency, 500 or 600 miles long, it is absolutely necessary to have the returning officer as near as possible to the centre of the constituency. If the sheriff or registrar happened to be in one corner of it, he would not be a fit person to act as returning officer.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose you had no suitable person in the centre of your riding, what would you do ? Would you get the nearest man to the centre ?

Mr. DAVIS. We will assume that within a riding there are people sufficiently intelligent to act as returning officer.

Mr. HOLMES. I know a case in which it became necessary for the sheriff to leave his own riding and become returning officer of the adjoining riding. There was apparently no impropriety in this, but it gave rise to a good deal of acrimonious discussion.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose you had a sheriff living in Saskatchewan and you appoint him as returning officer in another riding. If the election resulted in a tie, the people would not like the casting vote to be given by one who was not a voter there.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) inquired why, if it is necessary in any case to appoint some reputable citizen as returning officer, such citizens, not office-holders, should not be appointed in every case. The committee took the view that it would be in the public interest to appoint registrars and sheriffs, because they are removed from political influences and have the confidence of the public. instead of appointing gentlemen directly interested in the contest and who, in some instances, might not be as acceptable and as well fitted for the position.

Mr. HENDERSON. I fail to agree with the hon. gentleman with regard to the non-partisanship of sheriffs and registrars. In Ontario, at any rate, these men are as a rule active partisans. No man is likely to be appointed sheriff or registrar in Ontario unless he has been a strong, active politician, and he is not apt to forget his political prejudices even after he has assumed office. We have had experience in Ontario, in connection with Dominion elections, of the law requiring the sheriff or registrar of deeds to act as returning officer, and we have also had that position given to other reputable citizens. To my mind the elections were just as fairly conducted in the one case as in the other. Besides, why should a man receive an appointment of this kind simply because he happens to be the custodian of an office ? I would prefer distributing the perquisites of the government more widely rather than have them go to the fortunate men who chance to have been appointed sheriffs or registrars. It seems to me we are proposing to give away too many of our powers. We have already adopted the franchise of Ontario and its voters' list. We practically have nothing to say now as to how our lists shall be made up and who shall be put on or struck off. We have gone further. Under the Redistribution Bill we have practically handed over to the Ontario government the formation of our constituencies, because if, in any instance the Ontario government should choose to organize a new county, that becomes an electoral district of the Dominion. Now we are proposing to hand over to the provincial government the appointment of our returning officers. Very soon we will have nothing left. Everything will be done by the provincial government. I think we should keep some of these powers in our own hands and have something more to say as to the constitution of the House of Commons than we appear willing to do in this Bill. Although I take no exception to the sheriffs and registrars, I think we should allow the government to name whomever they like, whether sheriffs or registrars or private individuals.

Mr. OLIVER. I should think that the registrar would be the last man in the county to name as returning officer. If he has any duties, they call for his presence in his office all the time. If he has not, he has no business to be the registrar. The duties of the sheriff may leave him more free but, as far as my knowledge goes, in the west the duties of the returning officers are such as to take up the whole of their time and attention ; and if the sheriff has any duties to perform as such, he cannot at the same time act as returning officer. If there are exceptional circumstances or conditions, it is quite in order for the government to appoint a sheriff as returning officer, but to say he must be appointed is simply to say that, if he has any business to do as sheriff, he will have to neglect it while he is returning officer. In the constituency which I represent there are three sheriffs and two registrars. This constituency is to be divided into four, so that there will not be sufficient registrars or sheriffs to meet the requirements. In any case, therefore, somebody else will have to be returning officer in place of the sheriff. It would be very much better to leave the matter entirely in the hands of the government and let them appoint the sheriff where suitable, and somebody else where it is not suitable.

Mr. CHARLTON. I should judge from the discussion and the opinion expressed by the Minister of Justice that this section does not receive that unanimity of approval which is desirable if it is to become law, and I am quite willing to drop it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not consent to drop it at all. No reason has been advanced which should defeat the object of this section. That object is to take your returning officer from a class of persons in whom the people have confidence. If you do not have some provision of that kind, you will subject the government to the temptation of appointing ward heelers, and when irregularities take place they will be charged against the person who was selected as returning officer. The sheriffs in Nova Scotia are appointed by the local government and are Liberals for the most part, and they discharge the duties of returning officers fairly well. One or two have been charged with certain offences, and I am inclined to think that in one case the charge is well founded, but that was only one out of many instances. I believe it would be far better to name some class of persons from whom these returning officers are to be selected. So far as sheriffs are concerned, they have been doing this work in the province of Nova Scotia without any inconvenience so far as the public is concerned. I do not know about the registrars of deeds in the North-west Territories. But I do not think there would be any great difficulty in the province of Nova Scotia about having the registrar of deeds perform these duties. Because, in most cases, I believe, if not in all, they have some assistance in their offices and they could readily spare the time necessary to perform these duties. But it seems to me that in any case the intention of the committee is safeguarded perfectly well by subsection 2, which gives power to the Governor in Council in this matter. Wherever it is undesirable or inconvenient to appoint one of these officers the government must appoint some one else. But the government would have to make its choice from this class of officers or take a certain responsibility in going outside of their ranks, and it would be expected that if they did so, they would appoint men of similar character and men in whom the public would have confidence. That is the main point—that both political parties should have good reason to believe that the men selected will do what is right and just. You can do that better, it seems to me, by selecting your class, and then appointing, as far as possible, from that class.

Mr. DAVIS. I would draw the attention of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to the fact that if you are going to confine the selection to the sheriffs and registrars of deeds, then, as has been pointed out there would be a shortage in the North-west Territories; there are not enough of these officers to go round. If it is necessary to have public officials you might include the land agent, the homestead inspector, the fishery inspector and the forest ranger.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You might do a great many things which do not seem to be at all necessary. If an officer cannot be found among those specified in the Bill, the Governor in Council has power to appoint some other person. There is no need to make an exhaustive list such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) has referred to. It is not even necessary that the appointment should be confined to government officers. But it is not only desirable but necessary that the person appointed should be one in whose fairness and impartiality all the people would have confidence.

Mr. DAVIS. So far as our part of the country is concerned it would be better to insert the name of the land agent instead of the registrar of deeds because the land agent can get out at any time while the registrar of deeds in many cases cannot leave his office.

The PRIME MINISTER. Stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The section will stand.

On section 4,

Section 12 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph :—

(i.) Persons, other than sheriffs or registrars of deeds, holding any public office, either Dominion or provincial.

Mr. DAVIS. What does this mean ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Section 12 of the Dominion Elections Act provides :

12. None of the persons following shall be appointed returning officers or deputy returning officers, election clerks or poll clerks ;

(a.) Members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada or of the Executive Council of any province ;

(b.) Members of the Senate or members of the legislative council of any province ;

(c.) Members of the House of Commons or members of the legislative assembly of any province ;

(d.) Ministers, priests or ecclesiastics of any religious faith or worship ;

(e.) Judges of the courts of superior, civil or criminal jurisdiction, or judges of any county or district court, insolvent court or admiralty court ;

(f.) Persons who have served in the parliament of Canada in the session immediately preceding the election, or in the then present session of parliament ;

(g.) Persons who have been found guilty by the House of Commons, or by any court for the trial of controverted elections, or other competent tribunal of any offence or dereliction of duty in violation of this Act, or of an offence in violation of a provincial Act relating to elections, or of the Act to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes, being chapter 14 of the Statutes of 1894 ;

(h.) Persons who have been convicted of an indictable offence.

And to this will be added subsection I as given in this section 4.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This seems to depend on the previous section.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I was just about to suggest that. If the Bill goes through it will be necessary to amend the previous section by adding 'prothonotary' as suggested for the province of Quebec. The prothonotary with us is the clerk of the court. In a district such as the district of Quebec where we have one sheriff, you would have a prothonotary selected for one of the constituencies. That is the law with us. Thus, the government is limited to the sheriff, the prothonotary and the registrar of deeds, and it might be as well to extend the list of officers from which the choice can be made. If section 3 is to be amended this one will need to be amended also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have in our province an officer called the prothonotary. I do not know whther he is the same as the officer of that name in the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He is the chief clerk of the court. I think it is the same office as in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes. I would not object to having the word 'prothonotary' apply also to the province of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We could make it general. Of course it would only apply where there is a prothonotary.

The PRIME MINISTER. Stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 6,

Section 21 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'lists' in the third line thereof the words 'and of an abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.'

2. Section 26 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'proclamation' in the first line thereof the words 'and the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.'

3. Paragraph((f) of subsection 1 of section 41 of the said Act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :--

(f.) Furnish each deputy returning officer with at least ten copies of printed directions in the form L for the guidance of voters in voting, and at least ten copies of the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act, which printed directions and abstract the deputy returning officer shall, before or at the opening of the poll, on the day of polling, cause to be posted up in some conspicuous places outside of the polling stations and also in each compartment of the polling station.

4. The following section is inserted immediately after section 26 of the said Act :—

26a. Within the shortest possible time after the reception of the writ, the returning officer shall send by mail to each elector upon the voters' list a copy of the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act, which abstract shall be carried in the mails post free ; and in the province of Prince Edward Island the returning officer shall send a sufficient number of copies of the said abstract to each postmaster within the electoral district, and it shall be the duty of the postmaster to deliver a copy to each elector to whom any mail matter is delivered.

2. Any postmaster who wilfully neglects or refuses promptly to deliver to the electors any such abstracts shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and costs to any person who sues therefor : provided however that this penalty shall not be imposed more than once for each election at which such neglect takes place.

Mr. DAVIS. Section 26a says :

Within the shortest possible time after the reception of the writ, the returning officer shall send by mail to each elector upon the voters' list a copy of the abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.

Now, who is to pay the returning officer, who has the trouble of sending out letters to each elector in the whole district ? For instance, is he going to have them printed himself ? Suppose you have 10,000 names on the list, you are in the throes of an election, and the returning officer is called upon to send out circulars to every elector on that list. I want to point out another thing that relates to the North-west Territories, to show how this provision will not work up there. We have a system whereby we make up our lists ten or twelve days before the election, and three days before the election the lists must be posted up ; afterwards any person who wishes can get his name on, or can get other people to have their names put on, or he can get any name struck off the list. But who is going to furnish the returning officer with copies of these lists all over a big constituency, four or five hundred miles long, by three hundred miles wide ? In some polling districts the enumerator has had to go 300 miles away from a railway. How is he going to get back that list and give it to the returning officer so that the returning officer may send an abstract to each of the electors ? In our part of the country it is absolute nonsense to try to put this into application.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P. E. I.) I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice and of the committee to that section referring to Prince Edward Island. We have no voters' lists there at all, we have open voting in provincial elections, consequently there are no voters' lists for Dominion elections. It would be very difficult, I think, to tell whether a man votes or not in a Dominion election, and therefore to tell whether he could be penalized. I see a provision here that in the province of Prince Edward Island :

The returning officer shall send a sufficient number of copies of the said abstract to each postmaster within the electoral district, and it shall be the duty of the postmaster to deliver a copy to each elector to whom any mail matter is sent.

What does that abstract mean ?

Any postmaster who wilfully neglects or refuses promptly to deliver to the electors any such abstracts shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $50 and costs to any person who sues therefor : provided, however, that this penalty shall not be imposed more than once for each election at which such neglect takes place.

Now that returning officer gets those abstracts ; suppose that ten days have elapsed —there are only 30 days, I understand, between the issue of the writ and the election—supposing a week or ten days have elapsed before the returning officer sends out his abstract to the postmasters. Well, the postmasters in the rural districts get them, but the people may not come very often to the post office, and very often it is the younger members of the family who are sent for the mail matter. Therefore the postmaster will have no opportunity of delivering to the elector this abstract, whatever it means, and then he will be fined if he does not do it. There might be an elector in the district who did not receive any mail matter regularly, or a fisherman who seldom receives any mail. I see a great deal of difficulty so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, and I imagine that no representative from that province could have been consulted by this committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to know who is to pay the returning officer ? I think he receives the magnificent sum of $50 or $60 for his services. If you are going to impose this duty on him of sending out circulars to 10,000 electors, where is his pay to come from ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think hon. gentlemen are magnifying the difficulties in the way. Whether the wording of the Bill is sufficient to carry out the objects we have in view, may be a matter of debate, but the object is that every elector in Canada shall, immediately before the election, have his attention called to the provisions of the election law, so that he may not remain in ignorance of it. It is useless for us to pretend that people understand all about the election law ; there are thousands of honest electors in Canada who really do not understand the provisions of the election law, and who would not wilfully violate it, but who do violate it because of lack of information. The object of this proposal, even if it costs a little money, even if you have to pay the returning officer more—the object is to make the electors acquainted with the law under which they are to cast their votes, and that is the whole object. If it has not been effectually accomplished by the wording of this Bill, then let us try to amend it in some way, let us try and cause the distribution of this abstract containing in brief the chief provisions of the election law under which a man is going to cast his vote ; I cannot see any difficulty in doing it.

Mr. DAVIS. I would ask the Minister of Finance to answer me this question : In the North-west Territories there are no printed lists in some places, and how is the returning officer to get possession of those lists so that he may carry out the law ? What is he going to do when some of the electors are 400 miles away, and there is no mail ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I assume at once that under the peculiar conditions in the North-west Territories you cannot address this abstract. I assume that in the case of Prince Edward Island you cannot address it. But surely we can find some way by which to secure the public distribution of the abstract. That is what we are driving at, and if it cannot be done in this way, then take the best way available, in the North-west and in Prince Edward Island, for distributing this abstract.

Mr. HOLMES. Technically the position of the Minister of Finance is correct. But when he comes to the practical application of the provision he will realize the difficulty. Take for instance a riding where there may be 8,000 or 10,000 electors, in a rural constituency. You impose upon the returning officer the necessity of sending out circulars, putting them into an envelope and mailing them to 10,000 electors. Speaking from my own observation, I know that as a general rule the returning officer has all that he can attend to in the short time at his disposal to see that the ordinary duties imposed upon him are properly carried out.

Mr. GOURLEY. He may employ a clerk.

Mr. HOLMES. But suppose he does employ a clerk, as they do in the majority of cases, even then they find it very difficult to carry out the work imposed upon them. I would call the attention of the government to a feature that is not in the Bill, but that we should consider, because it is the outcome of the last election. There were two or three additional duties imposed upon the returning officer last year, for which no provision whatever was made for their remuneration. They were required to see that every ballot was numbered consecutively, and in my county they found it necessary in a number of instances to send thousands of those ballots from the town of Goderich to Stratford, in order to have them run through a numbering machine. The local office had not the equipment to do that work. When they put in their bill for this work it was disallowed by the Auditor General, because there was no provision in the Election Act for paying work of that kind. There were two or three instances wherein the additional work and expenditure had been imposed upon returning officers for which no compensation was provided. I think the government ought to take that into consideration, and to provide that where additional work is put upon the returning officer some further remuneration should be given him. The Auditor General himself told me in conversation at the time that there were a number of instances wherein the returning officers did not get what they should get for their services in doing extra work.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Apropos of what the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) has said about the payment of returning officers, I have this remark to make: I look askance at all kinds of legislation which attempts to make me good, or attempts to make the public good. I do not think we can legislate along that line. But I want to call attention to this fact, that in our country we were obliged to send a deputy returning officer from Vancouver to Atlin, a distance of 1,500 miles, in the dead of winter last year. The personal travelling expenses of the returning officer were over $500, when he put in his bill to the Auditor General, after having paid this money out of his own pocket, the Auditor General refused to allow him any more than the $500 altogether. He was away two months. To my personal knowledge he is a straightforward man. He had to break the trail for 80 miles when the thermometer was from 50 to 60 degrees below zero, and he had to remain in the hospital for two weeks after as a result of the exposure to which he had been subjected. Yet, the Auditor General, sitting in his well-furnished office, would only pay him the same rate that he pays men for serving in a similar capacity in the old settled ridings in Ontario. This matter has come under my own personal observation. I will not stand up for any man who is trying to loot the country, nor will I stand up for any man who makes use of his official position to keep back from a person that which rightly belongs to him.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is proper in considering any proposition before the House that all features of it should be taken into account. While it may be said that this question of expense is only a detail in my humble estimation it is a detail that comes very close to the principle and certainly should be attended to. It seems to me that when the principle is being established the committee should be thoroughly aware as to what is involved in giving effect to the principle. The expenses being what they will be and the difficulties in giving effect to the proposition being what they will be, they should be provided for. In regard to the requirement of sending information around to the electors to tell them how to cast their votes on election day, while I agree that it is very desirable that there should be the fullest degree of information, I think most of us will admit that in elections in the past there has been a fair amount of information current amongst the electors, that they have been fairly well informed as to how to cast their votes, and although they have not always marked their ballots, so the judges say, in the way in which they should have marked them, I think in many such cases the judges were rather in fault than the electors. The main reason for requiring this great expense to be undertaken is, first, the provision in the Bill providing for compulsory voting, and second, providing for the disfranchisement of any person who does not vote. That is the chief reason for the great expenditure which will be incurred in sending this information around and if that proposition is not adopted I thing there is no necessity for this clause at all.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I do not think there is very much necessity for sending that information to the electors because the newspapers usually print all the proceedings of the elections and nearly always tell every elector how to cast his ballot. They even mark it for him and they mark it for the candidate for whom they wish the elector to vote. But, there is one point I wish to make. We have discussed the question as to the personnel of the returning officer. I do not think the deputy returning officer has been mentioned and I think there should be a clause in this Bill saying who the deputy returning officer shall be and providing that he shall reside not only in the electoral district in which the election takes place, but in the polling division. We had a great deal of trouble in the county where I live owing to a clause of this kind not being in the Ontario Act at that time. But the Ontario Act now provides that the returning officer must be a resident not only of the electoral district in which the election takes place, but in the polling division. Then no stranger can be brought into the section to manipulate the ballots or to commit any wrong which neither party are willing to see carried out but which when committed they are willing to palliate. I want the law so changed that a man cannot act as a deputy returning officer unless he is a respectable man and unless every man who comes to vote shall know who he is.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that would prevent an election being held in some constituencies.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree with the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) on this question. I am of the opinion that any money expended by the parliament of this country to more fully educate the electors upon the law governing voting would be money well expended. It can not be very well argued, as my hon. friend from the west has said, that because this law will not be able to reach every elector that therefore the great mass of the people should suffer. I do not think that is a good argument. I think that in a large number of counties, in fact in all of the counties of old Ontario, it would be possible to carry out this law and I think that if a copy of the Election Act in so far as it may be obtained in a short, concise form, were placed in the hands of every elector it would be in the interests of the purity of elections. I think the clause should go still farther. I think that 200 or 300 extra copies of the law should be given to the candidates. In the election trials in Ontario, when the courts have investigated elections, many cases have been found in which the candidates themselves are entirely unfamiliar with the law of elections. If that be the case in many parts of Canada how can we expect the electors who are not taking such an active part in politics to be familiar with the law? I agree with this clause and I approve of the expenditure of money for that purpose. I believe that the effect will be to purify the elections.

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) had a difficulty about this question because he was unable to see from what source the expenses were to be met for the circulation of the abstract of the law, to furnish the returning officer with copies to send to the electors and with copies to be posted up. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to section 21 of the Act, which says that:

> Immediately after the issue of the writ of election the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of the voters' lists, &c.

In the Bill we have a provision that:

> Section 21 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'lists' in the third line thereof the words 'and of an abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act.'

So that it will be the duty of the clerk of the Crown in Chancery to send the lists to the returning officer and to send him the requisite number of copies of the abstract of the law for circulation. That difficulty then is overcome.

Mr. BLAIN. Does it say that the candidates themselves shall have a specified number?

Mr. CHARLTON. No, the provision is that the returning officer shall have a sufficient number to post up ten at each polling place and to furnish each voter on the list with a copy. It would be his duty to have these copies mailed and they shall pass through the mails free of postage. The only failure to provide fully for the requirements of carrying this provision into effect, perhaps, is the lack of a provision as to the remuneration of a returning officer. It was held during the discussion of this matter in the committee that this would be an incidental expense which the returning officer would be entitled to charge, that he would be entitled to charge clerical expenses, and for the directing and furnishing of the envelopes if they were not sent by the department. As far as the objection raised by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Holmes) is concerned that it will be a job so difficult that the difficulties will be insurmountable, I do not think there is anything in that contention. It is a plain simple matter to receive a sufficient number of abstracts of the law and to mail these abstracts of the law to the persons whose names are on the lists. It is a simple question of clerical force and clerical work. It can be accomplished in a very short period. There is no difficulty about it and as the Minister of Finance has forcibly said this is a provision of the utmost importance. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says that there is among the electors a fair amount of information regarding the law. I venture to say that at this moment not one-tenth of the members of the House would be able to tell us the provisions of the Election Law in regard to corrupt practices, practices prescribed by law; and the amount of information on such subjects current in the country at large is very meagre. In multitudes of instances voters transgress and violate the law through ignorance; they do it innocently and if just before an election, when they would be most likely to read it, they had placed in their hands an abstract of the Election Law, the infractions of the law would not be so frequent as they now are. If this provision of the present Bill passes, the elector would see that the benefits of infringing the law by corrupt practices would be very small indeed. I am surprised that there has been any opposition to this feature of the Bill. It semed to me and to the other members of the committee that if there was one provision of the Bill which would meet with universal concurrence it would be this provision for bringing to the attention of the electors of this country the actual provisions of the law. Whatever might be the difficulties, great or small, that stand in the way of putting this feature into operation these difficulties should not be allowed to prevent the accomplishment of the object in view. The difficulty of addressing 7,000 or 8,000 or 10,000 of these abstracts to electors is one that could be easily overcome, and if a returning officer is not entitled to charge to incidental expenses the cost of doing this, then all that is required is an amendment to this Bill which shall provide for his reimbursement for this service.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman has not had the same experience with the Auditor General as we have had in the west or he would not propose to charge this to incidental expenses. In a case in my riding he actually refused to pay for sending out the proclamation and the gentleman who published the proclamation in the newspapers for the benefit of the people at large, in order that they might have the information, has not yet been paid. The hon. gentleman has not taken up the North-west Territory view of the case at all. I have shown that it is impossible to carry out this provision in the North-west Territories. If you want to scatter information broadcast among the electors, to my mind the proper way would be to provide for the employment of men at each poll on election day whose duty it would be to hand a circular containing this information to each elector before he entered the polling place.

Mr. HEYD. Supposing the elector could not read ?

Mr. DAVIS. Then what would be the good of sending it to him by mail ? If he received the circular three or four weeks before the election he would perhaps open it and throw it away and never look at it again. But if it was handed to him at the booth he would look at it and see what it was.

Mr. GOURLEY. He has probably got his money before that.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member seems to know more about the money part of the business than I do.

Mr. GOURLEY. We all do, be honest. We all do.

Mr. DAVIS. We are discussing a proposition now to place information into the hands and into the heads of the people with reference to the election law and the best mode of doing that. The hon. member who has charge of the Bill suggests that the returning officer shall send out a circular letter to every man whose name appears on the voters' list at a certain time. I take the ground that the better way to disseminate that information would be to hand out the circular at the polling booth on election day. So far as our part of the country is concerned, that is all you can do.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if there are no municipal lists in his part of the country ?

Mr. DAVIS. No, there are no municipalities.

Mr. LANCASTER. What kind of voters' lists have you ?

Mr. DAVIS. In our country we make up the voters' lists ten or fifteen days before the election. The returning officer appoints enumerators. These go into each polling sub-division and enumerate the names of the people whom they find there who are, according to their judgment, entitled to vote. The enumerator has to post up in three conspicuous parts of the polling sub-division a copy of that list three days before the election. Then any person can object to any name that appears on the list or have his name added to the list if he is entitled to a vote. In that way the returning officer has no lists; some polling sub-divisions are 300 miles inland with no railway communication and how is the returning officer to obtain the voters' lists in order to carry out the provision now under discussion ? It cannot be done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the preparation of this abstract is concerned, the amendment proposed to section 21 makes provision for that, because the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is obliged to send a copy to each returning officer and it will therefore be his duty to prepare and print this abstract. That is an answer to one objection which has been urged. As to the expense of sending them out I believe that you can have envelopes addressed at the rate of about $2 per thousand and if you had in a constituency say 5,000 electors the expense for that purpose would be $10. I do not think that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) would feel himself oppressed with an expenditure of that kind even in each electoral division of Canada, because with 215 electoral districts, even if you expended $15 in each of them you would have a total expenditure of only about $3,500. That would be a trifling expenditure if the good results that are expected from the distribution of this information would be at all accomplished. Then, so far as the North-west Territories are concerned, it seems to me a very simple matter to deal with them in the same way as we are dealing with Prince Edward Island, and probably the same rule might have to be applied to Ontario cities, where lists are made up a short time before election day. You could send the abstracts to the post office and have a copy delivered to any man receiving mail matter and I would add to that an amendment that the abstract should be also delivered to any elector demanding a copy. I am sure that by that method you will get information into the hands not of every elector in Canada but into the hands of the greater part of them. It would be too expensive to undertake to put a copy into the hands of every man but you would accomplish substantially the object aimed at by doing something of the kind suggested. I regard it as important that the people should have in their hands an abstract of this kind. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said that not one-half the members in the House are fully acquainted with the portions of the election law dealing with corrupt practices. He might have gone further and said that not ten per cent of the members and not fifty per cent of the lawyers in the House could tell you, without reference to the law what its provisions are. Under these conditions you can understand what an extremely vague idea of the provisions of the law exists in the minds of the electorate at large. I believe that this will be money well spent and that the proposal should receive the support of this House.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection to the distribution of information about the election law; we all agree that that is quite desirable, provided the expense is reasonable. The objection is that the provision which has been made for the distribution is not practicable and it requirts to be amended so as to make it practicable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What would the hon. gentleman think as to the suggestion I made with regard to distribution in the North-west Territories ?

Mr. OLIVER. What is suggested for Prince Edward Island would very likely measurably meet the case. Any means that will tend to a general distribution of knowledge in regard to the election law is quite acceptable ; but it is not desirable that the provisions of that law should be such as in the nature of things cannot be carried out. This fact, which is evident to every one in the House with regard to this particular provision, has been shown to exist with regard to every section of the Bill which has come before the House so far ; and I submit that it is not fair to the House at this stage of the session to place before it a Bill which, however good the intentions of its promoters may be, evidently has not been carefully thought out in its practical application. The time we have lost on this Bill so far is something that we cannot very well afford at this stage of the session, and we are not getting any closer to a decision with regard to it. For my part, I would be bound to fight the provision with regard to compulsory voting to a finish. I would respectfully ask the House and the mover of the Bill to consider the situation, and to consider whether any good object is to be attained by forcing on the discussion on the Bill, which, with all due respect, has not been carefully thought out in all its details. With regard to the distribution of knowledge on the election law, it is not the man who does not know who transgresses the law ; it is the man who does know. That is no reason why everybody should not be informed ; but the danger to the state is from the man who knows too much rather than from the man who is not thoroughly learned in the law. It is the man who knows all about the election law who burns the ballots and makes trouble, not the man who does not know anything about it. He is likely to keep within what he does know.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). There is another consideration with regard to Prince Edward Island. At the present time we find it difficult to get men to act as rural postmasters, the remuneration is so small ; and if you put greater obligations upon them and render them subject to a possible fine, I am inclined to think that you will find it more difficult still. If a postmaster fails to deliver the notices promptly, he is subject to a fine of $50. So far as the province of Prince Edward Island is concerned, I protest against that provision. I know that there will be trouble over it.

Mr. BLAIN. He would only have to deliver the notices in the polling subdivision once every four or five years.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Well, as he is paid only about $12 a year, if he were fined $50 and costs, he would not have much left. That is one objection, but it is not the only one. There are many other objections.

Mr. HENDERSON. I presume that it is scarcely expected that this Bill will become law this session. Perhaps the object of this discussion is to point out the difficulties which confront any member who undertakes to draft a Bill of this kind. A good deal has been said about the clause requiring an abstract of the law to be distributed. Allow me to read the law as it will be in that respect if this Bill passes. Section 21 will read :

> Immediately after the issue of the writ for election the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall transmit to the returning officer a sufficient number of copies of voters' lists and of an abstract of the offences and penalties under this Act if there are any.

It seems to me there is something very much wanting there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The expression ' if there are any,' must have reference to voters' lists. I am afraid that is bad drafting.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the attention of the Minister of Justice should be drawn to this. With reference to the distribution in Prince Edward Island, it seems to me there should be no difficulty at all. The abstract is to be given to the elector by the postmaster. But I would draw the attention of the promoter of the Bill to another difficulty, which may, however, be arranged. In the province of Manitoba the post office addresses of the electors are not given in the lists, and consequently it would be impracticable there to deliver these documents through the post.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). It is surprising what an amount of trouble we can surround ourselves with in dealing with matters of this kind. It would be much better to direct our attention to removing any objections that appear in this Bill, so as to make it practicable and useful. To give the notices out on the day of election appears to me to be most absurd. If you want to have information given to the electors, it should be in their possession for at least a week before. This Bill has been prepared by some of the ablest and best minds in the House, who have devoted a great deal of time and attention to it, and I do not see any reason why it cannot be put into operation even this session.

Mr. ERB. I agree with those who claim that it is very desirable that the electors should be made acquainted with the election law. To do this will entail a certain amount of expense, which I claim should be paid out of the revenue of the country. To my mind the best way of distributing this information is to have it printed at Ottawa, where it would be printed in very large quantities, and therefore more cheaply than it could be in each constituency. These extracts could be printed here, placed in envelopes by clerks, and held here in readiness until the election. I understand that the lists used throughout the country are printed here, and these envelopes could be addressed from here to the electors, at any rate, in those parts of the country where the addresses of the electors are given. In this way a considerable saving in the expense could be effected. Special provision would of course have to be made for constituencies in the North-west and Prince Edward Island, where there are no voters' lists.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 7 :

Subsection 8 of section 96 of the said Act is repealed, and the following substituted therefor :—

Any person who violates any of the provisions of this section shall be disfranchised for a period of seven years and shall be guilty of an indictable offence, and shall be liable, if he is a returning officer, election clerk, deputy returning officer, poll clerk or other officer engaged at the election, to imprisonment without the alternative of a fine, for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than six months, with or without hard labour, and if he is any other person, to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and costs and not exceeding two hundred dollars and costs, or, in default of payment of such fines and costs, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months and not less than three months, with or without hard labour.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. I think it is well worth the consideration of the committee whether a clause of this kind should be adopted, when so many of the previous clauses, which involve important principles, have not been approved. It would appear to me also that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is entitled to a great deal of weight. We have before us some novel propositions, involving principles which are not, judging by the discussion so far, agreed upon ; and I am bound to say that in my opinion, even if we should affirm these principles, there is scarcely a clause of this Bill which will not require important amendment in order that it may adequately give effect to the objects we are seeking to attain. We are told that the Bill has been very carefully considered by some of the ablest men of this House, who are on the special committee. I am afraid that these gentlemen have not given it as close attention as it required, or perhaps as it has been alleged they have given it, because the legislation—I say it with all due respect—is in many respects very lame and weak indeed, and in some very unmeaning. Why should the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), at this period of the session, ask the House to revise work of such an extensive character, involving so many considerations, and which has to be dealt with by experienced persons ? In my view, it would be only fair that the committee should be asked to rise and let the Bill stand over for further consideration. There are some features of this measure which ought not to pass, and which I am prepared to oppose as far as I can ; and everybody knows that opposition at this period must be fatal. I would have preferred myself that a general discussion had taken place on the general statement of the hon. member for North Norfolk. Then we would have had the views of the various members of the committee ; and if, at a later period, this question should be taken up again, we would be able to profit by the discussion which has taken place.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the condition of affairs in this country is as was stated by the hon. Minister of Finance, when he made the motion for this committee, I do not think that we should delay passing this Bill if we have to remain here six weeks or two months longer. I do not see that the fact that we are now in the seventh month of the session is any justification for delaying an important measure of this kind. It is not too late to pass a law, and this law, or some similar law, if the statements of the hon. Minister of Finance are to be believed, is most absolutely necessary. It is true that we have been here nearly seven months, and that the special committee appointed to deal with this Bill has made some delay in reporting it, and it is also true that for some weeks no steps were taken by the government to place it on the Order paper ; but even as it is, I think the time of the House could not be better employed than in dealing with the election law, and endeavouring to have our elections conducted on a purer basis and with less scandal than during several years past.

Mr. OLIVER. I must say while no member of this House admires more thoroughly the devotion to duty shown by the hon. the leader of the opposition, I cannot enthuse over his proposition to still further delay this session possibly three or four weeks for the purpose of discussing this or any other Bill. In this case he is right in theory, but I cannot agree that he is right in practice. Members of parliament are only human, and, speaking for myself and others, we do not belong to the leisured class. We have to either divide our parliamentary duties with our personal duties, or give up the one or the other. This session has lasted so long that it has come practically to be a question with some of us whether we shall give up our business or our parliamentary duties. I do not think that it would be for the good of this country that men of business should be debarred from taking part in its legislation, but that is what it will amount to if the session is further prolonged. True, the legislation is important, but there is a great deal of other important legislation that will necessarily have to be done some time in the future. We do not do everything to-day in any line of life or business. We have been here nearly seven months ; and while I have no desire to become controversial and indicate who is to blame, the conviction as to who are to blame is very deeply imprinted in my mind, and I am looking in the direction of the offenders. But at the risk of being controversial, I propose to say this, that an opposition which can keep this House in session, through the efforts of some seven to fourteen members, week in and week out, is not doing its duty by the country in still further declaring its willingness to keep the House still longer in session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As far as any delay is attributable to the opposition, I think they have a very clear conscience. There has not been any disposition on our part to unduly protract the session. A measure of the very highest importance was brought down by the Prime Minister on the 30th of July, after the House had been in session nearly five monthe, and since that time we have been mainly occupied discussing that measure. And outside of one evening, when some difficulty arose between gentlemen on the opposite side, I believe there has never been one hour of the discussion wasted, from the standpoint of fair, honest criticism. If that measure had been introduced at the beginning of the session the time occupied in this discussion would have been regarded as extremely moderate.

The PRIME MINISTER. What about the time in which the House was busy discussing something else ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What else ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The estimates, for instance. We spent four months discussing the estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And the estimates amount to about $70,000,000. And I think that, if we contrast the time that was taken up in discussing those estimates with the time taken up years ago in discussing estimates amounting to about half as much, even my right hon. friend must come to the conclusion that no undue time has been occupied in dealing with the estimates this session. I do not pretend to any extreme devotion to duty, nor do I claim for a moment to belong to any leisured class. If my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) referred to me——

Mr. OLIVER. I certainly did not.

Mr. COCHRANE. Whom did the hon. member refer to ?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say to my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that I think I have been absent from my home and business a good deal longer than he has. I have not seen my home since the 20th of Februray last—a week and a few days less than eight months of absence. Well, I am willing to remain even longer, if necessary, to put through legislation which I regard as of very great importance to this country. And I would not claim to be exhibiting any great devotion to duty by offering to take that course.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are evidently many clauses in the Bill that will have to be recast. What I suggest—and I think it will be the sense of the committee—is to go on with the Bill and see how far we can agree. And when we have seen the points involved in each clause, perhaps we can come to a better understanding.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is a pity that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) was not named a member of the committee on this Bill. As one of the law officers of the Crown, he is responsible in great measure for the form in which legislation comes to the House. As some of the paragraphs do not seem to meet his view—and I think, perhaps his view is in some instances correct—it is not too late for him to devote time to the consideration of the ideas that are sought to be expressed, and put them in shape to be laid before the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to say, in explanation, that, if in my remarks I was understood to make allusion direct or indirect to the leader of the opposition as a member of a leisured class, or to say anything suggesting a failure on his part in attendance upon his duties or willingness to do his duty, I beg to say that such was not my intention. Nobody—even in his own party—honours the leader of the opposition more than I do for his ability, shown in his profession, and his devotion to his duties, shown as a member of parliament and the leader of a party. But what I do want to point out, and what I take the liberty of emphasizing, if I may have that liberty, is that when he speaks of his willingness to stay here three weeks to pass this legislation, he speaks on behalf of from ten to fourteen of his followers, and not on behalf of the party he leads.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When this Bill was referred to the committee, it was suggested by the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) that I should be a member of that committee. Unfortunately, I was engaged in arduous duties connected with the redistribution, and I did not think I could be an effective member of both committees. I have, however, gone over the Bill very carefully, have prepared a memorandum on every clause, and have formed my own conclusions with respect to all the clauses. I was anxious to hear what the members of the committee had to say before I expressed any opinion whatever on the Bill. I may say that, in my opinion, with the exception of two clauses in the Bill—clause 2, which relates to compulsory voting, and clause 9—the Bill might be amended in such a way as to be of some value in connection with the Election Act. But to the first of these clauses, clause 2, relating to compulsory voting, I am opposed. I am absolutely opposed to anything in the Bill designed to make the exercise of the franchise compulsory—I am opposed to that on principle. Now, with respect to the other clause, clause 9, that seems to be absolutely unnecessary in view of the Canada Evidence Act, for that Act contains provisions of general application that meet the case much more effectively than the clause here proposed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As to clause 2, that relating to compulsory voting, I would point out the difficulty at which that clause is aimed. There are many people in this country who do not vote. They may be broadly divided into two classes. There are those who are indifferent, who do not take enough interest in public affairs to vote. The other class comprises those who, probably for corrupt reasons, do not go to the poll. There may be a few outside of these two classes, but, broadly speaking, these two comprise the people who do not vote. You may talk as much as you like about conscience and duty, about having control of one's duty and one's privilege. But when you bring it down to the real conditions that we have in practice, it amounts to what I have stated. Well, how are you going to deal with these men who do not vote? It is desirable that the indifferent should have some stimulant to cause them to take part in the public life of the country. Our institutions are based upon the idea of representative government, government by the people; and it is undoubtedly an evil if any portion of the people, from mere indifference, refuse to discharge the duties of citizenship which the law imposes upon them. Then, we have the other class to which I have referred, those people who from corrupt motives do not go to the poll. There ought to be some means, by legislation, of reaching at least some of these people; and I cannot see any better way than the way suggested by what I understand to have been a very large majority of the committee. If a better way is suggested, I am willing to consider it; but until that better way is suggested, I am prepared to advocate this. I have an open mind as to the best course to be taken, but I am clear that something should be done, and that we should not leave untouched the condition of affairs that exists at this time. In parliamentary elections some times not half the vote is polled. We know that death, absence, illness and sometimes other causes may account for some of the absentees; but, even allowing for these, there is a very large portion of the people who do not go to the poll and vote, and it seems to me that legislation of some kind ought to be devised by this parliament to meet that condition.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) must not forget that we are practically groping in the dark in proposing such legislation as this. There is no such law in existence, as far as I know, except in Belgium. It has been brought in under the new constitution of Belgium, and I am not quite sure that it has been found to work very effectively. I do not like to make a new departure without having thought the matter out very carefully. Such new departures should receive careful attention and should be seriously thought out and discussed. I have had occasion to look into the books dealing with such questions. For instance, there is the work of Mr. Lecky, on 'Democracy and Liberty,' which does not favour the principle. There is an article in the 'Forum,' on the same subject. As my hon. friend, no doubt, would like to read it, I give the reference—vol. 14, page 176. I have not been able—one simply cannot with the limited time at one's disposal during the session of parliament—come to a very satisfactory conclusion on matters of this sort. I am not sure that in a country where we have constitutional government and the people are divided into two political parties, as is the case to-day in Canada, that if I did not belong to a political party I should be obliged to go to the poll and, because two men happen to have been selected by my neighbours, vote for one or other of them. I may not want to vote for either. I may have conscientious objections to both.

Mr. SPROULE. What is to hinder you putting in a blank ballot?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Why should I be compelled to go to the poll and indulge in that hollow sham and hypocrisy? So far as that is concerned, as I see the matter at the present, I stand for those who have conscientious objections to being put under compulsion to do these things. I do not think I ought to be put under compulsion. The vote is a privilege. There is a corresponding duty, it is true, but still the vote is a privilege. I cannot see, at the present time, that I should be compelled to exercise a privilege against, it may be, my conscientious convictions.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If we come down to abstract theories of citizenship as a privilege, whether in this country or in any other, it is certainly a privilege which involves responsibilities. Some of those responsibilities are imposed compulsorily. For example, the obligation of taking up arms in defence of one's country is one of the responsibilities of citizenship, and I do not know that we go any further in saying that a man is under obligation to vote at elections if he is entitled so to do by law. I read Mr. Lecky's book some years ago. It takes rather a pessimistic view of the success of representative institutions. I do not think the condition of affairs in the countries which have parliamentary government is quite so bad as Mr. Lecky is inclined to imagine. I think he has looked on the worst side of democracy in the English speaking countries at least. Further than that, if I am not mistaken, when he was elected to parliament shortly after the publication of that book, he enunciated certain views in parliament which were not in accordance with the views promulgated in the volume to which my hon. friend refers. Now I do not minimize for a moment the objections which hon. gentlemen, more especially those on the other side of the House, have urged against this principle. I know that some of them have devoted a good deal of thought to this question. But I want them on the other hand to look at the conditions we have to face, and to ask them to say in all candor whether they do not thing that there is some reason why we should endeavour to apply legislation to these conditions. It seems to me there is grave reason why we should do so. I could not express the condition better than by repeating, if it were not taking up too much time, the language of the Minister of Finance when he spoke on this question before this committee was appointed. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, when he comes to consider the clauses of this Bill, to see whether he cannot devise some legislation, either in the form of section 2 or in some other form, which will meet the unfortunate condition of affairs to which I have referred. It is beyond doubt, as hon. gentlemen have pointed out, that the power to bribe an elector to remain at home and not to cast his vote at all, is one which lends itself to a great extent to the continuance of corruption in this country. If an elector goes to the poll you cannot, except by means of certain fraudulent devices, or by means of some connivance on the part of the officers, tell how he votes. But if that man remains at home you know he has not voted. If he is a man who is likely to vote for a particular candidate, then by bribing him to remain at home, you make sure that that vote has not been cast against the candidate for whom this act is done. So the fact that electors are permitted with impunity to refrain from voting, helps or lends itself to a continuance of corruption, which I think demands the intervention of this parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In this very clause the evil which we seek to deal with is practically sanctioned by this Bill. For instance, if an elector desires to stay at home, all he has to do is to absent himself from the electoral district, and he remains scot free.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend will not understand me as speaking of the details of section 2. That is one thing, and I can see many respects in which section 2 would have to be improved, even if carried out according to the literal idea which inspired the gentlemen who drafted it. But so far as the principle of it is concerned, an elector will know that by deliberately abstaining, either from indifference or from some corrupt influence, from exercising his franchise, the country will say to him: Having taken that course you shall not be permitted to exercise your franchise for a certain number of years. It seems to me that you put a responsibility upon him which would lead him to think twice before he took that course. Let us take in the first place the man who is indifferent, and who says he will not vote. Well, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, says he should not be obliged to vote because he may not think that either one of the two candidates who have been nominated is a proper man to represent the constituency. Well, I may say to the Minister of Justice and to other hon. gentlemen who have advanced that argument, that if there are twenty-five men in a constituency who are of that opinion, they can nominate another candidate, because all you require is the signatures of twenty-five men, and if necessary parliament can reduce that number, to allow them to nominate another candidate. So there cannot be an evil of that kind imposed upon any great portion of a community. Then a man who is simply indifferent and does not regard the exercise of the franchise as a matter of conscience, what shall we say to him? We say to him: If you are so indifferent to your duty as a citizen of this country, whose laws protect you, that you decline to take the part which every honest citizen ought to take in the government of this country, why, then shall you not be permitted, for a certain time, to take any part in that government which you appreciate so little, and we will deprive you of the right of voting for a candidate to represent you in the House of Commons. As to the man who is staying at home for corrupt motives, there cannot be any doubt, I am sure; no hon. gentleman in this House would say that too great a punishment is being inflicted upon him if we say to him that for a period of six years he shall not have the privilege of voting for a candidate to represent him in parliament. That does not seem to me as a very extreme course, though I appreciate the arguments made against it. I appreciate that in some individual instances it may operate possibly a little hardly. But you cannot, owing to the complexity of human affairs, pass any law in this parliament that will not in some individual instances do what might strictly be called a certain amount of injustice. It is absolutely impossible to make any law that does not in its operation work harshly in individual instances. But we have to look to the greatest possible good to the country, and it seems to me it would be in the public interest to place some such restraining influence upon those men who at the present time are inclined to stand aloof and not to vote when they are called upon to do so for their representative in parliament.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. It appears to me that there is a want of harmony between the argument which my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) presents, and the object which he seeks to attain. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) threw out this morning a hint which struck me at the time as a powerful condemnation of that feature of this Bill. Now the hon. member for Halifax contends there is a duty resting upon every citizen of this country to exercise his franchise, and that that duty is of so paramount a character that the law ought to be appealed to in order to compel him to discharge that duty. Well, then my hon. friend comes to parliament for that purpose, and because there may be some influences existing which may affect the result of the elections improperly and corruptly, he asks parliament to say by legislation that you shall prolong and emphasize that evil condition of affairs ; that is to say, that while it is a grievous injury to the state, if a citizen does not always feel it his duty to exercise his franchise, still if he fails in one instance to exercise his franchise, he shall be prevented from exercising it at all times during a certain number of years. If it is of such vital importance that every citizen should see his duty in that light we ought rather to remove the obstacles in the way of his exercising that right in the future than to create them. We should seek to compel him to exercise his franchise then by some other method than to say : You shall exercise your franchise and if you do not we will not allow you to exercise it. I cannot see any harmony between the argument upon which my hon. friend bases the necessity for this legislation and the legislation itself. It is an unpleasant thing for any man to take any exception at all to legislation that is promoted for the purpose of putting down alleged corruption, and I have no doubt the actual corruption, which exists to a great extent in our country. No one likes to do it because I think I am not overstating the case when I say that the great majority of public men would like to see measures passed which would prevent the continuance of this condition of affairs. If you could give us some proposed means by which corruption could be prevented in this country I think there would not be a discordant voice in regard to it, but that all members of this House would be in its favour. But we know that as long as human conditions, human inclinations and human passions are as they are you can place all the obstacles you like in the way of these things and they will still continue. You can legislate session after session but some method will be found whereby the legislation will be evaded. You cannot bring about a perfect condition. You cannot prevent men from running risks who are sordid and degraded in their inclinations and no penalties that you can impose will achieve any such result. But you are running a risk, if you start in upon a proposition that is made simply in the hope that it will promote the purity of elections in the country without examination and consideration, of doing more harm than good while you are absolutely failing to accomplish the purpose that you have in view. Coming to this particular clause that we have before us I may say that I do not believe it is possible to compel people who do not want to vote to go to the poll and vote. You cannot compel them. They can go to the poll, acting the part of frauds, and they can put in a ballot which is not a vote. But my hon. friend says : Look at the frightful conditions which result from the possibility of men remaining away from the poll and declining to exercise their franchise, what opportunities it affords for the use of those corrupt practises. But, let me ask my hon. friend this : Has he knowledge—and he has run elections—of the existence of any such corruption to any very large extent or to even any extent ? I have run as many elections as any man in this House and I cannot at this moment call to mind any considerable number of instances, nor can I call to mind any occasion which I was able to say that a great many people abstained from voting because corrupt means had been employed. They abstained from voting perhaps for fear of offending somebody or for some reason of that sort, but the buying of men to stay at home has not been very generally resorted to, as a means of exercising a corrupt influence. Even granting that it was a proper remedy. We have no very considerable evidence of the existence of corruption of that character to any great extent. How are you going to prevent corruption by that means ? It strikes me that men who are open to influences of that sort will be likely to go to the poll if compelled to, accept the bribe and pocket the benefits. I do not think you are going to stop corruption by any such expedient as that. This is only a theory, as the hon. Minister of Justice says, and his view corresponds with the result of my own examination of the subject, this is a theory that has not been applied anywhere for a sufficient time to enable us from our experience of it to judge as to whether it will be effective in any such direction.

Mr. SPROULE. Is my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Blair) not aware that a good deal of the corruption exists in hiring rigs to take electors to the polls and would compulsory voting not be the means of doing away with that means of corruption to a large extent ?

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. While I do believe that there is a great deal of money improperly spent at elections I am not one of those who believe that the money spent exercises any marked influence upon the electorate of the country. I do not believe that a very large percentage of the electors of this country, while they will accept money when they see it is going, will vote differently from the way they would have voted if there had not been a dollar placed in their hands.

Mr. GOURLEY. I quite agree if the same amount is used by both sides. If the same amount is used it does not make a bit of difference.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) not know that it does not require a very large percentage in most of the constituencies in Canada to control the election ?

Hon. Mr. BLAIR. I will grant that it does not require a very large percentage where the parties are so equally divided. There is one remarkable fact that I think must have come home to the knowledge of every man who has been contesting elections in this country and that is that the careful canvasses that are made before the elections take place almost always are borne out by the results when the votes are counted. I know that in my own province I have seen calculations based on the result of the work of the canvassers and it has been perfectly amazing to see how accurately these calculations were made. If that is the fact what does it prove ? It proves that many influences which are exercised are vainly or ineffectively used and I do not think the case has been or can be made out to the great extent to which some hon. gentlemen think it has been made out or to an extent which calls upon us to adopt an entirely new theory untried and unknown and the application of which would be to put a man who innocently, who for good reasons to his own conscience and interpreting his own sense of duty to his country, abstained from going to the poll on the same footing as a corrupt individual who had remained away because he had been paid to do so. To deprive him of his franchise for six years who is innocent, absolutely innocent, mark me, and you cannot discriminate between the two, and to put him on the same basis as the other is to act in defiance of all principles of fairplay and I am decidedly opposed to the principle of the clause. While I am opposed to it I want to say with all sincerity that I am prepared to aid and support in any way in my power, any legislation which I believe would be effective to prevent spread of corruption or its continuation to the extent that now exists. But I will not vote for what I think would do more harm than good, for a clause which is indefensible or for measures which I am satisfied would be wholly inadequate and ineffective if passed. Like every man in this House I am entitled to exercise my judgment as to the efficacy of the remedies suggested, without being subject to the implication that I am not in sympathy with every proper and legitimate and honest means to put down what corruption does exist in the elections of this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one point upon which perhaps, the committee have not been very happy in the discharge of their duties, although in the main they have done much good work. I can praise them in this way the more readily because although I am a member of the committee I was not able to be at any of the meetings except the initial meetings and was not present when the Bill was drafted. However, as a member of the committee I take my full share of the responsibility for its actions. I think they were not happy when they described the clause as one for compulsory voting. They thereby antagonized many persons who on a fair consideration may have been disposed to support this principle. It is not compulsory voting in the ordinary sense of the word. I can well understand a man not being willing to have a penalty of fine or imprisonment in connection with compulsory voting, but the clause in this Bill is so mildly worded that it does not seem open to as broad criticism as it would otherwise receive. It is advanced legislation it is true, but we should not shirk from legislation because it is advanced. I do not think it is open to as much criticism and objection as has been raised by some hon. gentlemen. As to the general manner in which the Bill was drafted, there is one remark which I am led to make by my regard for the chairman of that committee (Mr. Charlton). It would be supposed from the criticisms offered that this Bill is very badly drafted. If that is the fact we had better withdraw it from the present committee and refer it to a committee of laymen headed by the hon. gentleman from West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) because this Bill was drafted by a committee composed chiefly of members of the legal profession. They were eminent lawyers, and being wise lawyers they realized that they did not know all about it—it is the man who does not know anything who thinks he knows all—but these gentlemen knew enough to know that they did not know all and they sent to the Department of Justice for the assistance of one of the officials of that department. So you will see that if this Bill is not all that it should be in the matter of drafting, it is certainly not for want of good legal advice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. You must not forget that after all the Department of Justice is only there for the purpose of giving effect to the instructions received. The gentleman from the Department of Justice—I have his notes here—simply had to give effect to the instructions received from the gentlemen of the committee. I had no connection with this compulsory voting, but I think the Minister of Finance had something to say about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am quite responsible, but I never saw the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. If clause 2 is under discussion, and that clause is placed there avowedly as a means of preventing the corruption of the electorate at present existing, I would say that the objections that I had to it before are intensified by the introduction of that idea. I did not know that the electorate of Canada was as corrupt as some hon. members seem to think. I presume they draw from their own experience. I have been before the electors for twenty years, and as far as my experience goes I have never paid a dollar directly or indirectly to secure a vote in my election, and so far——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OLIVER. Hon. gentlemen are speaking for themselves, that is their privilege, I am speaking for myself. I do not know of a dollar having been paid either directly or indirectly to secure votes for, and I have been almost as uniformly successful as any member of the House. Therefore, I do not know from my own experience and knowledge that there is necessity for such drastic legislation to overcome an alleged existing condition amongst the electorate of this country. I object to the implication, I say that so far as my experience goes it is not true and I do not believe it is true. If it is true, representative government in this country is a mistake; we need a despotism and not government by the electorate. In regard to the adoption of compulsory voting as a means of preventing corruption, I should say from my standpoint that what we want is an intelligent election; it is not so much the number of men who go to the polls as it is the intelligence exercised by those who do go.

Mr. ROSS (Victoria). What about the intelligence of those who do not go.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not saying anything about their intelligence. Judging by some of the representatives in this House—I do not wish to speak for myself—I should probably say they use more intelligence by staying at home than by voting. When we undertake to compel a man to go to the polls, we do not thereby put into his mind that intelligence or that good judgment or that freedom from corrupt influences which will ensure to us that he casts an intelligent and an unbiased vote. The effect of a biased vote cast at the polls is worse than the results from the bias which compels a man to stay at home. As to the general result if you compel a man to go to the poll and provide a penalty if he does not go. The provision is drastic and unreasonable and it is bound to meet the same fate, if embodied in legislation, as all other unreasonable legislation does meet. The present law in regard to corrupt practices at elections is an instance. It is drastic and unreasonable in its present form and as a result it is not enforced and there is corruption in elections to-day, so every one here seems to say, just as there was twenty or thirty years ago, and the results and penalties are avoided by the principle of saw-off. I maintain that if this provision were enacted, the penalty proposed to be enforced against those who did not go to the polls would simply be settled by the principle of saw-off and there would be no penalty enforced on any one, the law would be in disrepute and the parliament which passed it would be discredited. The hon. member for Guysboro (Mr. Fraser) drew a comparison between the position of a member of the House and an elector in the country, and he said it would not be very satisfactory to have a law which would compel members of parliament to vote on every occasion and that therefore it was not desireable to have a law which will compel electors to vote on every occasion. His argument was good as far as it went, but it was hardly fair because the conditions as between members of parliament and those who elect them are not the same in the matter of voting. A member of parliament is elected for the purpose of voting. He assumes an obligation when he stands for election in regard to that vote.

Mr. TALBOT. Is not the elector created for the same purpose ?

Mr. OLIVER. No ; an elector is not created for the same purpose. The vote is a privilege, if you like ; it is a duty, if you like ; but it should not be a penalty, as it is proposed to be made by this Bill. The true condition is absolutely reversed when you provide that the privilege of voting shall become a penalty which shall be attached to the qualification of voting.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the penalty ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is disfranchisement for six years.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that a penalty for the man who does not want to vote ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes ; the penalty is an extreme penalty, and is improperly applied. The sufferer from that penalty is the general electorate more than the individual ; and the same fault is to be found with the present election law; that is to say, instead of the man who casts a corrupt vote being punished, it is the electorate generally who are punished. In this case Mr. A is disfranchised for six years because, for one reason or another, he did not cast his vote, and the general electorate of the country is at the loss of the weight of his influence and opinion for six years in consequence. This is putting the punishment on the wrong shoulders. But in regard to members of parliament, they are elected for the purpose of casting votes. Their business is to vote on every question that comes up. That is the undertaking which they made with their constituents when they were elected; and it would be the height of absurdity, it would be one of the most ridiculous things that ever occurred in the history of any country, it would make this parliament a laughing stock of every elector in the Dominion of Canada, if this parliament, which, on the most important question that came before the parliament of Canada for twenty years, showed a voting strength of only, I think, 36 on one side and 74 on the other—it did not even do that, but that is the best construction we can put upon it—if this parliament, which was not present in half its numbers on that occasion, should turn around to the electorate and say: Whether you are willing or able or not, you must go to the poll and vote or you will be disfranchised. Surely we have not taken leave of our senses altogether to put ourselves in such a position before the people who sent us here? If the electors who sent us here are under obligations to vote for or against us at the polls, surely we are under ten thousand times greater obligations to vote for or against the measures which come up for consideration in this parliament. When we have so mended our ways, when we have so advanced, if you will call it an advance, that we have passed a law that every member of parliament shall vote on every question that comes up or be penalized, then we may discuss, with some measure of reason, a proposition that will compel the electorate to go to the polls; but, I submit, not till then.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have listened with great pleasure to the debate up to this time. I think it is well to have a little mild hypocrisy in life, as long as it injures no one——

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member speaks for himself, I presume.

Mr. GOURLEY. And we have had not an unfair amount of it displayed in this discussion. My experience is that we have ample laws in the country at the present time to give us a perfectly pure election if the electorate and the candidates observe them. Therefore, I have listened with great amusement to this discussion, because I do not think it makes a fig of difference whether we pass this law or a thousand others; it would not help the purity of elections a particle. So long as the candidates agree to suspend all ideas of morality during an election and go in for a general picnic, we shall continue to have all the expenditure of money that we have at the present time. Down in my part of the country we have the most moral people to be found in the world; but when an election comes around, they regard it as a splendid holiday, and the result is that while the candidates agree not to spend a dollar, the electors go in for a general picnic. They size up each candidate for what they can get out of him, and they generally run it up to the limit. We might as well be honest in this matter. I will tell you of a little experience I had which sickened me of the election law. Two or three years ago I was standing at a polling place during an election of a friend of mine. By and by I saw a young man who belonged to a strong Conservative family coming across the way. I waited for him. As he came his attention was attracted by a large poster containing a proclamation setting forth all the provisions of the law forbidding any man to take a bribe or do a corrupt act. This young man, in the full flush of youth and with all the ingenuousness of youth, was coming to cast probably his first or his second vote; and as I saw him reading this proclamation I was delighted, because I had heard men around me talking in mysterious words about 'stuff,' and about not being able to get along in this election without 'stuff.' When he had finished reading the proclamation he came over to me apparently filled with the enthusiasm and purity of youth, and I expected to have a satisfactory talk with him. When he came he said: 'Who gets up all these laws about elections?' I immediately fell into the trap, and endeavoured to insinuate that it was the Tory party who had got them up. 'Well,' he said, 'that is all I want of the darned Tory party. I got into a scrape the other day, and I cannot get any help from them if they make laws like this—I will go over to the Grits, who have always lots of 'stuff.' Then he went and voted. From that time I gave up any confidence in election laws. I have listened to this debate with pleasure as an academic discussion. If the electorate do not want money spent, it will not be spent; if they do want money spent, it will be spent in spite of all the laws you like to make. That is the honest truth in this matter.

Mr. CHARLTON. It may be that my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) takes the proper view of the case. He informs us that laws are of no use, that you might just as well leave the door wide open and make no attempt to control except by appealing to the individual conscience of the elector. Be a good boy and do right. However, that is not the general impression in the public. It has not been the view accepted by our law-givers in the past, and our statute-book is proof of the fact that the legislatures of this country have realized that such an evil exists, and have tried to cope with it. Some little time ago we determined to allow section 2 to stand, and discuss the other sections of this Bill ; but the temper and disposition of the House seems to be to revert to section 2, and discuss the question of compulsory voting to the exclusion of everything else in the Bill. I had hoped that we would go through this Bill, and pass such portions of it as we consider right, and I think if the disposition of the House were to perfect this legislation, if there be anything lacking in it, we could make good progress. But the House seems disposed to question even the fundamental principles of an electoral purity, to challenge every feature of this Bill, to challenge the competency of the committee, to challenge the character of its provisions, to belittle the matter from beginning to end. This Bill, as the hon. Minister of Finance has said, was referred to a special committee, upon which were able men and eminent lawyers. As a layman and member of that committee, I can bear evidence to the truth of that statement. There were men of the most acute minds on that committee, and we had there a representative of the Department of Justice, who did not confine his functions to registering the decisions of the committee, but participated freely in its discussions, and gave shape to the action of the committee in many essential respects. He was very conscientious and painstaking in trying to keep the committee from making mistakes or entering upon courses that would have been inconvenient, improper, unconstitutional, illegal or unworkable. We went on with this work to the best of our ability. The committee has presented to the House a Bill. Certain circumstances prevented that committee from making its report at as early a date as could have been desired. There was some delay in naming the members of the committee, there was some delay in having the committee called together and organized, and what would have been a late date in an ordinary question, was reached before the committee met. But the committee did not proceed in a hasty manner with its work. It went through the work carefully in a painstaking manner. We had not the advantage of the presence of the Minister of Finance for a great length of time, but we had every valuable assistance from that gentleman. We had a representative of the Department of Justice always able to cope with the questions, and we reported a Bill which, in my opinion, requires but slight modifications, if at all, to make it workable. Many of the criticisms, I think, are not well placed. For instance, with regard to compulsory voting, the Minister of Justice says that the provisions of the Bill will defeat its own purpose, because a person can simply leave the riding, and thus become exempt from the provisions of the law. But the provision of the law is that if he absent himself in order to avoid voting, or left the riding for any cause not sufficient, he was liable to the consequences imposed by clause two.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Who is going to determine the reasons for his leaving ?

Mr. CHARLTON. That will be a matter to be determined on examination, like every other. With regard to the propriety of interfering with what some of our friends deem a right of conscience, which compels an individual to abstain from voting, what is the privilege of the franchise ? What is the right of the franchise ? What is the possession of the franchise ? It is the freeman's safety ; it is the freeman's weapon by which he can maintain his liberty and the free institutions bequeathed by his fathers, and which his fathers gained with great difficulties and struggles, for which men have gone to the stake, for which men have been decapitated, which has caused bloody wars and untold miseries. That is the heritage which has come down to him and which he scarcely prizes at its cost, but which it is his great duty to preserve. A great poet has said :

> The crowning fact, the kingliest act
> Of freedom is a freeman's vote.

We want to impress on the elector the gravity, the magnitude of the trust imposed on him. We want to arrest his tendency to carelessness or unconcern by saying to him : If you do not think enough of the great privilege of voting, you will be deprived of that privilege for six years. That will attract the attention of the elector to the importance of exercising the franchise. It will impress upon him the fact that this is a privilege, a great, inestimable, precious right, which he ought to exercise, and if he is so indifferent to the character of this privilege as to refuse to exercise it, in my opinion it is proper that for six years he should be debarred from exercising it, in order that he may be brought to a consciousness of its importance. And once he realizes its importance he will be careful not to commit an offence which would deprive him of that privilege. Hon. gentlemen say that voting is a discharge of a duty. Well, if a duty rests on a man, there is no impropriety in making some provision to induce him to perform it. If duty rests on a man, obligation goes with it ; and if the duty is not discharged, it is proper to impose a penalty of some kind in consequence of his failure to discharge it. If a very large majority of the electors of Canada were so indifferent to the franchise privilege as to abstain from voting, we might be governed by a minority. As it is, with the proportion that abstains from the polls, we are not governed by the majority. There has not been an election held in the Dominion during the last three or four years, in which the party elected had a majority of the whole electorate. A sufficient number of voters have abstained from voting to put the control of our affairs into the hands of an actual minority on the voters' lists. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Demers) says that we ought to remove the obstacles that prevent voting. That is what we are doing. One obstacle is indifference, another is the corrupt practice of hiring voters to stay at home. These are the two obstacles we want to remove, and there is no way of removing them except by the adoption of some such measure as this. The hon. gentleman tells us that if a remedy could be found, everybody would be happy. How are we to find a remedy ? If there is an evil, are we to declare that it is not proper to attempt to apply a remedy ?

Mr. GOURLEY. Get your preachers to preach good sermons.

Mr. CHARLTON. Preaching ? Yes, that is a good thing. I like to hear preachers preach morality and patriotism and the obligations resting upon the citizen to discharge his duty. But I like also to see his duty discharged by the citizen, and, if he does not discharge it I am in favour of applying some remedy, some penalty, for not having done so. The hon. member for St. John (Hon. Mr. Blair) tells us that, so far as he is aware, money does not influence elections to any great extent, that it is a matter of very small consequence, indeed, that, in fact, there is a great cry raised about this matter and very little in the cry. I cannot agree with the hon. member for St. John. I know of ridings in this Dominion that are thoroughly debauched by the use of money. I know ridings where electors have lost all sense of honour, all sense of the sacredness of the trust reposed in them, who hold their votes for sale.

Mr. HACKETT. Name them.

Mr. GOURLEY. North Norfolk.

Mr. CHARLTON. North Norfolk is a remarkably pure riding. No influences of that kind have been used in North Norfolk. But I am patriotically desirous of doing good to other ridings.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I desire, Mr. Chairman, to ask what section of the Bill we are considering at the present time ?

Mr. CHARLTON. There seemed to be a general discussion, Mr. Chairman. I am ready to drop at once any reply to criticisms of compulsory voting if——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The opinion of the committee has been expressed two or three times that they would like a general discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that there is a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is a motion, I believe, always subject to discussion. Now, Sir, I do not think we are likely, at this stage of the session, with the temper that the House manifests, to accomplish very much with this Bill. I remember an old adage, in use among housewives when I was a boy, that the proper time to set a hen is when she is ready. The House does not seem to be ready to incubate the provisions of this Bill at the present time. That I fear is quite evident. But that being the case, while I am sincerely desirous of promoting this Bill and believe it is essential to the interests of the country that its provisions should be incorporated in our statutes, and while I believe that the Bill contains provisions that will tend very largely to correct the irregularities and corruptions that exist, perhaps it would be too much to expect to see this Bill put upon the statute-book this session. I am in the hands of the government. Through the courtesy of the leader of the government this Bill has been placed on the government Orders. Without the exercise of that courtesy it could not have been reached this session. Under these conditions, feeling that I am indebted as promoter of the Bill and chairman of the committee exclusively to the courstesy of the leader of the government, I will allow my own wishes and feelings in this matter to stand aside, if the leader of the government has any wishes or views to express as to whether we shall continue to press the Bill or be content with the general discussion we have had, and let the Bill stand over for consideration at some future period—probably another session, which, I think we are certain to have before we have another election. Of course, my own individual desire is to press the consideration of the Bill. I am ready to stay here to that end and press it to the last. It will suit me to do so. But I am not in the position to ask that that shall be done under the circumstances under which I have the privilege of discussing the Bill to-day. I am not in a position to ask that privilege from the leader of the government at this stage. Expressing my unbounded confidence in the provisions of the Bill and my sincere desire to see these provisions enacted and become law, I must realize that, in the present temper of the House, it would take some time to do that ; and I can do no less than return the courtesy of the leader of the government in placing the Bill on the government Orders, and leave the matter in his hands.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are in this Bill certain dispositions with which, for my part, I altogether agree, and which I think would be very valuable parts of our law. For instance, section 8, which is the next one, we would take up 'bribery of candidates,' 'bribery of employees by employers,' 'bribery by an officer of Canada, or any province'—all these, I think, are provisions as to which there can be no objection and that would improve the law. There can be no contention, possible, so far as I can see, with regard to some of these sections. The only part as to which there is a difference of opinion—and it seems to be a very radical difference of opinion—is as to what has been called and has even been called in the Bill, 'compulsory voting.' It has been remarked that this expression 'compulsory voting,' is not, perhaps, very accurate. What is proposed here is not, perhaps, compulsory voting, as we have understood it here, but, even this rather lenient disposition seems to be the subject of a very radical difference of opinion, not as between the two sides of the House, but as between hon. gentlemen on either side. We have had a very valuable discussion, and the time has not been lost. I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. And I would ask the Minister of Justice to give this matter his attention, so as to keep the clauses which we think ought to be part of the Bill. Then, with regard to the second section, which is the most contentious one, perhaps we can think it over and have a further discussion upon it at a later day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that would be the best course for the committee to adopt. And, in this connection, I would make one or two further observations with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John (Hon. Mr. Blair). That hon. gentleman seems to think that this Bill excludes from voting for all time those who do not see fit to exercise the right of voting. While this Bill is intended as a deterrent, it is not intended to take away the right of voting from the people as a general rule. It is thought, rightly or wrongly, by those who have framed the provision that the very fact that a man will lose his right to vote unless he exercises that right, will cause him to go to the poll. The observations of my hon. friend from St. John seem to be illogical in that regard. He made some reflections upon the gentlemen responsible for the drafting of the Bill. I think these gentlemen have done their duty very well. It would be impossible in the time at their disposal, to frame a Bill that would not be open to criticism. But my hon. friend from St. John and any members of the government who criticise this drafting may recall the fact that the railway commission Bill was, in the first place, drafted by a gentleman who was paid $2,500 for his work, and it then underwent the supervision of the law clerks of the Department of Railways and Canals. Yet, in Committee of the Whole there were 1,500 or 2,000 amendments made in it, besides a number made in the Senate. Had the hon. member thought of this, surely he would not have found fault, because the Bill now before us requires a few amendments. I desire to make an observation with regard to what the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) suggested. He suggested that the hon. gentlemen who desired to see a law passed against corruption were making a charge against the electors of Canada. He seems to have been singularly free from any knowledge of conditions of that kind. The hon. gentleman is very fortunate. Without the slightest intention of saying anything offensive to the hon. gentleman, I may remind him of the words of the poet, 'The Lady doth protest too much, methinks.' Be that as it may, we are not making a charge against the electors of Canada by seeking to make provisions of this kind. Provisions for this purpose are already on the statute-book.

When we pass laws against murder, we do not charge the people of Canada as a whole with being murderers; when we pass laws against various indictable offences we do not charge the people of Canada with being criminals; when we pass laws against electoral corruption we do not charge the electorate of Canada as a whole with being corrupt. Every one knows there are constituencies in which a certain number of people are capable of being influenced corruptly. In many of the constituencies I believe the number is very small, in others the number is greater. The Minister of Trade and Commerce some years ago said that in some constituencies which he named he, knew the people could be bought because he said he had bought them twice. There are testimonies of this kind found, not only in the mouths of public men, but in the court records, which show that in some constituencies there are a certain number of men who are capable of being influenced by unworthy considerations. When we pass laws seeking to minimize conditions of that kind, we are not charging the people as a whole with being corrupt. I believe in that regard Canadians hold as high a place as any people in the world who have representative institutions such as we enjoy. There is one observation I might make with regard to what is almost a precedent for this clause 2; namely, that in one of the branches of this legislature a member who does not attend to his duties for two sessions, ceases to be capable of performing those duties. That is very much in line with the principle of clause 2 of the Bill. As my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) very well pointed out while my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) was speaking, you create an electorate for the purpose of enabling them to exercise their franchise, just as you create a Senate or a House of Commons for the purpose of enabling them to perform the duties which devolve upon them. I would have been glad to see this Bill go a little further, I would have been glad to see some provision dealing with what is called 'saw-offs' in election petitions. It is a very simple thing to saw-off election petitions to use a common phrase; it is a simple matter, because, under the provisions of the Election Act all you have to do to get rid of a petition is to leave it for six months, do nothing with it, and the petition lapses of itself. Certain other provisions of the Act declare that you cannot withdraw a petition unless you go before a court and make an affidavit that there has been no collusion. The result is that no one goes before a court to make such an affidavit. You can get rid of it in a much easier way by not taking any step for six months, then the petition drops of itself. I think it would have been wise to make some amendment in that regard. I agree with what has been said by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) as to the appointment of deputy returning officers, I think some provision of that kind might be well included. However, as my right hon. friend says there are certain provisions about which there seems to be no great difference of opinion. These will be put into a form more acceptable to the government, and the other clauses as I understand will remain open for consideration by the House. I think that is the best course to pursue under the circumstances, and I acquiesce in his suggestion that that course be adopted.

Progress reported.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT, 1900—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

Amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 232) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900, (the Minister of the Interior) read the second time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) has an amendment to make, and in order to make his amendment better understood, I will read the section which has been amended, together with the amendment made thereto by the Senate. This is the original section of the Bill :

4. Any applicant who fails to load a car so ordered by him within twenty-four hours from the time the car is furnished by the railway company, shall lose his right so far as concerns that car ; and the railway agent shall thereupon cancel the order, by writing the word 'cancelled' in the remarks column of the car order book, and award the car to the next applicant entitled to it. If the applicant fails or is unable to commence loading a car awarded to him within the twenty-four hours specified herein, he shall, personally or by agent duly appointed in writing, so notify the railway agent in writing, who shall thereupon cancel the order in like manner as aforesaid, and award the car to the next applicant entitled to it. Any applicant who fails to so notify the agent as herein directed shall pay car rental at the rate of twenty-five cents per hour for each hour that the car is held for him by the railway agent, and the railway company may decline to furnish further cars to such applicant until such car rental is paid to the railway agent.

That is to say, that the Bill which passed this House provided that if an applicant failed to avail himself of his privilege, he should lose his turn and pay a penalty. This was amended by the Senate, which struck out the section and substituted the following :

4. Each applicant, or an agent of the applicant duly appointed in writing (such agent to be a resident in the vicinity of the shipping point), on being informed by the railway agent of the allotment to him of a car, in good order and condition, shall at once declare his intention and ability to load the said car within the next ensuing twenty-four hours.

In the event of such applicant being unable to so declare his intention and ability to load the car allotted to him, the railway agent shall thereupon cancel the order by writing the word 'cancelled' in the remarks column of the car order book, and shall award the car to the next applicant entitled to it.

If the applicant, after declaring his intention to load the car, fails to commence loading such car within the twenty-four hours aforesaid, the agent shall thereupon cancel the order in like manner as aforesaid, and award the car to the next applicant entitled to it, and the applicant who so fails to load such car shall pay car rental at the rate of twenty-five cents (25c.) per hour for each hour that the car is held for him by the railway agent.

If the applicant, having commenced the loading of a car, is unable to complete the same within twenty-four hours as aforesaid, he shall pay car rental at the rate of twenty-five cents (25c.) per hour for each hour over the twenty-four hours aforesaid that the car is held for him to complete the loading. The railway company may decline to furnish further cars to such applicant until the car rental hereinbefore referred to is paid to the railway agent.

This amendment does not differ materially from the disposition of the Bill as it passed this House, but it has been put into four paragraphs. The burden of the amendment made by the Senate is to relieve the applicant who is in default of the penalty imposed upon him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would seem to me to be desirable, if these amendments from the Senate are of any importance, that we should have some notice of them upon our files.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will find them at page 965 of the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In that case it would meet to a very considerable extent what I have said, although I think it would be wise to put amendments of this character on the files in the same way as our Bills are filed.

The PRIME MINISTER. The amendments appear in the Votes and Proceedings. The suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) might be a good one to be adopted next session; that is, that these amendments should appear on the file with the Bills.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Since this amendment was made in the Senate a good deal of discussion has taken place in the city of Winnipeg and at other points in the west as to the nature of this penalty which is imposed upon the defaulter under these peculiar circumstances. I would like to point out to the House that the change we propose to make is one which we think is reasonable and right. The individual who has been notified by the agent of the railway company, either in person or by the agent who has been appointed to act for him, has to signify his intention to the railway company to make use of the car within twenty-four hours, but in that country it is quite possible that even under these circumstances, and with the best of intentions, he may be prevented from taking hold of the car at such a time as will enable him to finish the loading of it within twenty-four hours. If he exceeds the twenty-four hours he is liable to a penalty of $6 per day. The North-west members are in unison with me in making the statement that we object that a man living at a distance from the railway station should have this heavy penalty imposed upon him. It is a penalty largely in excess of that imposed on any person using a railway car under similar circumstances. Instead of 25 cents per hour, to be in keeping with the penalty imposed on other individuals using a car under similar circumstances, it should be something like 5 cents per hour. We think, however, that if he commences within twenty-four hours to load the car and he does not succeed in loading it within twenty-four hours he should be permitted by the railway company to complete the loading, subject to the general Railway Act of Canada in the matter of demurrage, and that the railway company should, instead of having it provided for in this Act, fall back upon the law as laid down in the general Railway Act of Canada, without imposing this extreme penalty. We are anxious to preserve for the railway companies the full benefit of their rolling stock, but at the same time we wish to protect the interests of those who may be prevented by the intervention of Providence, by a storm or a blizzard, or by distance, from being on the ground in time to finish within the allotted period given. There are men who live twenty miles away from a railway station. Then there is the consideration of the mail. In some places there is only a weekly, or a bi-weekly, or a tri-weekly mail, and these conditions might give rise to circumstances that would prevent him from being on the ground within twenty-four hours. The amendment which we propose simply contemplates leaving the matter under the general Railway Act of Canada, and we propose to strike out this penalty and allow the railway companies to apply the general Act in reference to demurrage in all such cases.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Suppose he does not commence to load at all, what means have you for collecting the demurrage?

Mr. DOUGLAS. If he does not commence at all he loses his car and it passes to the next applicant. His order is cancelled.

Mr. GOURLEY. And there is no claim for demurrage?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; in that case there is no demurrage. Then there is another hardship in connection with the matter. It may be said that this is not in the interests of the railway company. But we have to look at this point: Under the present condition of things, with an insufficient supply of rolling stock, many of these farmers are perhaps obliged to drive into town fifteen or twenty miles four or five times in order to secure a car. These men should be compensated for their loss of time when they are promised a car and it has not been placed on the ground, because they are sufferers to a great extent on that account. We think, under these circumstances, that where a farmer is prevented from completing his work within twenty-four hours on account of a storm or otherwise, he should not be obliged to pay such a large sum as $6 per day, when other people engaged in other businesses are only asked to pay $1 or $2 per day. We think that the amendment which we propose is in the interest, not only of the railway companies, but of the people of the country generally. I therefore beg to move that:

The House do not agree with the amendment to subsection 4 of new section 58, in section 21 of the Bill 232; but do alter the subsection by striking out all the words after the words 'entitled to it,' in the ninth line, to the end of the subsection, and substitute therefor the words 'and if the applicant, after declaring his intention and ability as aforesaid, shall not have commenced loading the car within the period of twenty-four hours from the time of the notice to himself or his agent, as herein directed, the railway agent shall thereupon cancel the order in like manner as aforesaid.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the demurrage now on a car?

Mr. DOUGLAS. From $1 to $2 per day, and in this case they propose to make it $6 per day.

Mr. GOURLEY. You do not object to the demurrage of $1 or $2 per day, as provided by the Railway Act?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No. This amendment provides for the usual demurrage under the general Railway Act of Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I rise to a point of order. A Bill has been sent from this House to the Senate, the Senate makes amendments to it, and it comes down to this House. Then this House may not concur in these amendments or may move an amendment to the Bill reaffirming the same thing as was contained in the Bill which was originally sent to the Senate. Can we then introduce entirely new matter ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not read very carefully the amendments or the Bill, but I understand that we passed subsection 4 of section 21 of the Bill. This subsection 4 has been struck out by the Senate, and the Bill has now come back to the House as amended. It is now proposed to accept a part of that amendment made by the Senate and that is in order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is the position.

Amendment agreed to.

On motion of the Prime Minister, the second amendment made by the Senate was concurred in.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENTS.

Bill (No. 261) respecting the Pilotage District of Montreal and the Port and Pilotage District of Quebec was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BLAIN. This Bill, I understand, is to divide the pilotage system between Quebec and Montreal from that between Quebec and the gulf.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine). It is purely and simply to put the pilotage system between Montreal and Quebec under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, in accordance with the request made by the board of trade, the shipping conference, the corn exchange and the harbour commissioners themselves, who have had these pilots under their control, and also, strange to say, with the consent and at the request of the pilots themselves. The second clause of the Bill provides that the Department of Marine and Fisheries will take control of the pilotage on the Saguenay river. The pilotage on the Saguenay river is at present under the control of the harbour commissioners of Quebec. For one reason and another the harbour commissioners at Quebec have not been willing that the pilotage system on the St. Lawrence below Quebec should be under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but they do not object to the department taking charge of the pilotage system on the Saguenay river, because they have not been able to grapple with the situation. During the last two seasons there have been very serious accidents on that river, due entirely to the fact that there has been no understanding and organization between the pilots and the harbour commissioners of Quebec. Therefore, the harbour commissioners of Quebec are disposed to allow the control of these pilots to be handed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the department will see that pilots properly qualified to pilot on the Saguenay river will be chosen for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not take the control of the whole pilotage system at Quebec as well as at Montreal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These things must all be done by degrees; we cannot do this as rapidly as we would like, we have convinced the pilots from Montreal and Quebec that they will get fair justice from the Marine and Fisheries Department, but the others are not yet satisfied that they would get such justice, and we do not intend to force them. We had better make this experiment, and if it goes on well, I have no doubt that, in view of the result, the others will come around. If they do not we will then have good reasons to force the matter, but for the present we think it is better to take half a loaf than to have nothing.

Mr. BLAIN. Do we understand that the pilots as well as the commissioners at the city of Quebec oppose the government taking entire control ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I submitted this proposition to the pilots, as well as the harbour commission and shipping interests of Quebec. Unfortunately, they could not come to an agreement. I think the shipping interest would have been satisfied; but in the face of the opposition of the harbour commissioners and the pilots themselves, who constiute a corporation in Quebec, they came to the conclusion that it was better to defer action. In the meantime, this is satisfactory to every one concerned.

Mr. BLAIN. It seems to be a step in the right direction; but I am not sure that it would not have been better to wait until the whole system was ready to come under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is quite mistaken. What we are doing now meets with the approval of the corporation in question, and also the approval of the British Board of Trade, who have from time to time recommended this improvement. If this is adopted I am sure that we shall be able to devise regulations which will be so satisfactory not only to the shipping trade, but to the pilots themselves, that they will be willing in a year or two to come under the control of the department.

On section 2—Saguenay not included in port or pilotage district of Quebec.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of the pilots will that take in ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There should not be more than three or four pilots assigned to the River Saguenay. As the corporation of pilots of Quebec and the harbour commissioners of Quebec could not agree among themselves, the pilotage of the Saugenay river was assigned to six or ten pilots. Some of them did not know anything about the river at all, and very serious accidents happened. That is the reason they do not object to this provision, because they think that the Department of Marine and Fisheries will make the proper choice among the pilots of Quebec, and have the pilotage of the Saguenay river as safe as any other. Until about three years ago the pilotage in the Saguenay river was done by pilots who had no special knowledge, most of whom did not know how to read or write, but who knew the river well and scarcely any accident had happened during the time they were doing the work. But the harbour commissioners of Quebec and the pilots of Quebec represented that these people were not qualified as pilots, and asked that the pilotage of the Saguenay river should be put under the control of the harbour commissioners of Quebec. This was done, and only qualified pilots now perform the duty on the Saguenay river. It is now proposed, with the consent of the harbour commissioners of Quebec and the corporation of pilots, to make regulations for the special examination of pilots for the Saguenay river. When that is done, we hope that river will be piloted very safely.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that under a system which allowed a man who was not scientifically educated to act as a pilot, there were fewer accidents than there have been after the change took place and a scientific examination was imposed on the pilots.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To my personal knowledge, as regards Montreal, where I was on the board of harbour commissioners for four years when I had the honour of being mayor—and I think that Quebec is no better off in this respect—the examinations of the pilots are not at present what they should be; so that what we are doing now is in the right direction. We want to have the pilots well educated, both technically and generally, and we intend to have better examinations than we have had in the past. It is also our intention to have the apprentices examined before they enter upon their apprenticeship, so that they will not lose five or six or seven years of apprenticeship and at the end be unable to pass the examination owing to bad hearing or bad eyesight or some other physical defect.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always thought the pilots ought to be under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and it seems to me that this measure will fail to accomplish as much as it would if the whole pilotage of the St. Lawrence were taken under the control of the deparment. We shall try this as an experiment, but I expect it will not be successful. I would suggest that you should take charge of the pilots from Quebec down, as well.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Really, I think we had better confine ourselves to the pilots between Quebec and Montreal for the present, and see how that works. If that experiment proves satisfactory, we may then take hold of the pilots from Quebec down.

Mr. SPROULE. You may find a conflict between the Quebec pilots and the Montreal pilots.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, because they are not in the same district.

Mr. SPROULE. You might as well go the full length at once, and have them all under the one control, and then lay down qualification examinations, length of employment, &c., which would apply to them all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is rather a difficult question to deal with. When I was head of the Marine Department, I found great differences of opinion, and I think my hon. friend is taking the right way.

Mr. SPROULE. How many pilots in the three districts ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Between Montreal and Quebec, 65 ; but the limit is 75, and they complain that they are too numerous. In Quebec there are over 100, and they are too numerous. That is where the difficulty lies. The Quebec pilots cover the Saguenay at the same time, and they have appointed more pilots to the Saguenay river than they should have done. They sent to the Saguenay river some pilots who showed themselves perfectly ignorant of the currents and channels of that river. That was the cause of the accident there.

Mr. COCHRANE. Who controls the pilots now ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Harbour Commissioners of Quebec control the Quebec pilots. The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal control the pilots from Montreal to Quebec.

By this Bill we are taking control of the latter.

Mr. SPROULE. In the aggregate there are 175 pilots. I see no reason why the Marine Department should not take these 175 pilots under its control and allot them according to the requirements of each locality, and bring them up to a certain standard of efficiency. It seems to me that that would not be a very difficult task. All that is required is moral courage.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no lack of moral courage, but we are not dealing only with one special interest. And when the shipping interests of Quebec, those who are most interested in having good, safe pilotage between Quebec and the gulf, say that we had better not disturb the present arrangement for a year or two, I think I am perfectly justified in acting as I am doing.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard a good deal about pilotage for many years. I had the same opinion many years ago that I have to-day, that if the government had been equal to the occasion and had taken control of these men and made the regulations for pilotage, and distributed the pilots according to the need of the service, the conditions would have been much better than they are to-day. This Bill is very well, but my complaint is that it does not go far enough ; and I confess that I cannot see any reason to deter the hon. minister, if it is not a lack of moral courage. That may not be the reason, but it looks to me very like it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand that when a pilot goes aboard in the gulf and takes charge of a vessel, he only brings it to Quebec and then another pilot has to be employed ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that that is too much of a tax to impose on the shipping interest, and that is the interest we are bound to protect. As has been suggested, the whole thing looks to me a case of lack of moral courage on the part of the minister. It looks to me like a case of the tail wagging the dog. I feel sure that the minister will find himself in a better position if he will show himself strong enough to deal with the whole question at once, instead of piecemeal as under this Bill. The minister is not showing himself in a favourable light. I believe he is strong enough, if he would but use his influence with these people to deal with this whole question at once, and it is in the interest of shipping, of marine insurance and everything connected with the shipping interest that there should be one system, and that system controlled by the government of the country.

Bill, as amended, reported.

Hon. Mr. PREFONTAINE.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the right hon. Prime Minister to say that we would go on with the Railway Bill. I am not objecting——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was not aware that the Prime Minister had made that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. He did, but it is all right so far as we are concerned.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Lighthouse and coast service—further amount required for agencies, rents and contingencies, including the establishment of a new agency at Montreal, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What makes necessary the change in Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Strange to say the most important port in the Dominion has no station and no marine agency. It has been thought proper that the engineer in charge of the buoy service between Montreal and Quebec should have an office where he could meet the representatives of the shipping interests, and where those engaged in shipping could gain necessary information regarding the matters that concern them. Hitherto in Montreal there have been several officers scattered in the different parts of the city. The place, for instance, where the pilots meet was in one part. The cattle inspectors had a certain office. The inspectors of hulls were in another place. And so on. We have thought proper to concentrate these offices, so that the officer in charge of the lights and buoys between Montreal and Quebec should have an office where he would meet people connected with that shipping interest. We concentrate the other office in the same place, and we have there a place where investigations can be held. Hitherto they have been held sometimes in one place, sometimes in another. The amount provided, $5,000, is not at all extraordinary. In some other places, for instance, in Quebec, the cost of the employees of the Department of Marine and Fisheries exceeds this amount.

Further amount required for maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, owing to the proposed establishment of gas lights and buoys above Montreal $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What condition is the St. Lawrence in now with regard to lights ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is being improved every day. We shall have it in such a condition that I think it will follow that the rate of insurance will have to be decreased. This extra amount of $15,000 is to cover expenses connected with the buoys on the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Kingston, including gas buoys for Collingwood, Georgian bay and Parry Sound districts, maintenance of new buoy depot, and lighting the river navigation. We propose to provide for the maintenance of additional gas buoys on the Georgian bay, also the maintenance of gas plant for Lake Erie and the Georgian bay. At the present time we are dependent on the courtesy of the United States government for keeping lights in Canadian waters. I think it is not creditable to the Canadian government that we should be dependent on the Americans for lighting our channels. We notified them that we were going to install these lights for our channel. The navigation companies have thanked us for these efforts to make business safer.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood some time ago there were some lights needed in the Parry Sound district.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are providing them as fast as possible, that is why we want $15,000 more. We intend to put the whole system in such a shape that within the next two or three years there will be very little required except perhaps additional lights in some small ports. We are meeting all the demands made by the transportation companies.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you supplying all the lights asked for ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, we are providing for all the demands which have been made.

Further amount required for construction and aids to navigation, including the purchase and equipment of boats for sweeping channels between Platon and Montreal and Montreal and Kingston ; and the substitution of compressed gas for oil as illuminant for lighthouses, increasing the power of the lights below Montreal, and the establishment of a buoy depot for the upper lakes, $180,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is a large amount, and the committee will pardon me if I give a lengthy explanation.

The extensive improvements authorized in the lighting of the upper St. Lawrence comprise the introduction of compressed acetylene instead of oil in the lighthouses, and the use of acetylene for the buoy service instead of oil or Pintsch gas ; and furthermore, the use, as far as possible, of range lights instead of single lights and gas buoys.

The re-arrangement of the existing system of lighting will be considered as soon as possible by commissioners. The present lights were inaugurated for nine-foot navigation, and it is considered that they can be changed in places with advantage.

The following estimate of cost of converting the lighting of the river is given. The apparatus needed is not made in Canada, and it is procured from the Safety Car Heating and Lighting Company, of New York :

42 storeholders	$35,000
40 gas lanterns	12,000
3 gas lanterns with automatic bell attachments for Lake St. Louis lightships	3,000
Cost of piping, lights, labour	6,000
	$56,000

Estimate is made provisionally for ten new range lights at a cost of $3,000 each, although it may be found that to thoroughly light the river a larger number is required ; total, $30,000.

There is pressing need for a suitable buoy depot at a central point on the river between Dickinson's Landing and Prescott, where there should be ample storehouse space, dock room for buoy steamer, and land for storing gas, can, and spare buoys. The need of a suitable depot is more apparent when it is considered that it will be the centre for distributing charged gas buoys to isolated points and receiving and recharging the spent buoys. The Montreal-Kingston depot will also be the headquarters for assembling apparatus for the marine gas-lighting service, and, if desired, the gas lanterns may be repaired at this point. The sum of $35,000 should be provided for this purpose, total, $35,000.

To provide for additional gas buoys to replace those removed from this division to Quebec and Halifax (12, at $1,600 each), $20,000, and five additional gas buoys, $8,000; and moorings, below Montreal, $2,000, total $30,000.

To provide for generators, compressors and sundry gas apparatus for ' Scout,' $5,000.

Summary.

Storeholders	$ 35,000
Gas lanterns	12,000
Gas and bell attachments	3,000
Labour and piping, &c	6,000
New range lights	30,000
Buoy depot	35,000
Gas buoys and moorings	30,000
Gas apparatus for ' Scout '	5,000
	$156,000
Scows and appliances for sweeping channels below Quebec and between Montreal and Kingston	24,000

The ten new ranges of gas lights will require no keepers, saving an annual charge of $3,000, and the proposed conversion of the lights from an oil to a gas basis will enable the keepers to be dispensed with as opportunity offers, at a saving of $7,500 per year, or a total saving in cost of maintenance of $10,500 per year. It will also eliminate the cost of maintaining the keepers' dwellings, repairs to lighthouses, boat-houses and boats. The steamer 'Scout' can serve and look after all the lights, and must be maintained for the buoy service alone. When a lighthouse is in a bad state of repair a gas-holder can be up-ended, and with a light iron superstructure and gas lantern a new lighthouse tower made. As the committee will see, on the recommendation of one of the most prominent officers of the department, Mr. Fraser, we have neglected nothing to make the channel between Montreal and Kingston as safe as it is possible to make it. Of course, this end has not been attained yet, but we are providing for it, and I think from the testimonials we have received from different trusted parties, we are on the right way as regards doing what should be done in the interest of the shipping trade. As regards the channel from Montreal to Quebec, I may say that we hope that before the 1st of November the portion of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Sorel, covering a distance of 45 miles will be navigable by night as well as by day, and that it will be perfectly safe. Of course, we will not rest there. We hope to be able, within a short time, to make navigation as safe between Sorel and Quebec during the night as we think it will be between Montreal and Sorel. Of course, all this means a large expenditure of money, but I think it is money well spent and if we get the approval of those who are specially interested it is the testimonial that we require.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any intimation from the underwriters that after doing all this you can effect a reduction in the insurance rates ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The shipping companies in the different interviews we have had with them have intimated to us that if these improvements are made, because all these improvements are made on their recommendation, they will be in a position, not to dictate probably, but to suggest to the representatives of the underwriters that something must be done to reduce the rate of insurance, and if it is not done it will be shown that an injustice exists, and some other means will have to be taken. As the committee will understand, the St. Lawrence has been labouring under difficulties for a number of years, not due, I am quite sure, to any want of exertion on the part of my predecessors, but due to the fact that these improvements cannot be accomplished in a day. Everybody knows there has been a great change in the tonnage of the vessels within the last few years, and this fact, combined with the difficulty that we have experienced in providing the necessary aids to navigation in the channel, has contributed to give a very bad reputation to the St. Lawrence. We hope that the good reputation of the channel will be restored.

Hon. Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Have any calculations been made as to what it will cost to place electric lights along the channel ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That question has been studied. Experiments have been conducted, which have shown that electric light is not a very safe light. It is not a continuous light. It is apt at certain moments to go out, and the consequences may be very serious. Up to the present time, it has not been found that electric light would offer the same security as gas light. At certain points it may be used, but it cannot be used generally. The Americans, who have tried it, have abandoned it, because their experience shows that gas light, and even oil light, offers more security.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Where have the Americans tried it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At many places.

Mr. SPROULE. You depend upon acetylene gas for all these lights ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Some of them.

Mr. SPROULE. Has acetylene gas been sufficiently tested to make it sure that it is a preparation that can be used ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have had acetylene gas under test for a whole year on certain portions of the channel, and the system which we have used has given very good satisfaction, so much so that the engineer of the department recommends that Pintsch gas be replaced by acetylene gas at points where he thinks it will be advantageous to make the change.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice you are providing for some sweeping boats. What is their nature ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have provided for the sweeping boats. We could not wait for the vote. It does not involve a very large expenditure. We have bought a boat and we are fitting it up with the necessary apparatus to sweep the channel. These sweeping boats have been recommended by the shipping interests and by the underwriters. There are two of them, one for the channel between Montreal and Kingston and the other for the channel between Montreal and Quebec and below Quebec. The boats are ordinary boats fitted with a frame which goes down to the depth of the channel and which extends to the width of the channel. It is an iron frame, and as the boat steams down or up it gauges the channel, and if it encounters any obstacle which should not be there, it is immediately noticed, a buoy is placed at the spot, and then the necessary dredge or rock-lifter is sent to remove the obstacle.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it proposed to do that several times in a year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, it is proposed to do that as soon as possible after the opening of navigation, and then probably once during the summer or as often as it may be necessary to do so. Suppose there should be a heavy storm or something like that, it would be necessary, in the interests of navigation, to see that that was done.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any accurate knowledge as to the present depth of the channel between Kingston and Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are safe in saying it is fourteen feet. I must say, as regards the channel between Montreal and Kingston, that there are still some difficulties to settle between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Railways and Canals. We have taken over from the department about fifty lights that used to be kept by the Department of Railways and Canals at the entrance to canals, but there are still a few kept by the Department of Railways and Canals and we are in treaty to take them over so that the whole system would be under the control of the same department and people would make inquiries only from the one department.

Mr. SPROULE. You are proposing to establish a plant in Montreal for the manufacture of some of these lights ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not in Montreal. We intend to establish a buoy depot at some central point between Montreal and the lakes, but of course we could not say just where it is to be established or we would not be able to get property on reasonable terms. We will provide a depot of this kind and have competent mechanics to manufacture or repair much of this apparatus, holders, &c., so as to have them ready at any time when they are required.

Mr. SPROULE. You do not propose to absolutely manufacture them ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will manufacture some things that we are now obliged to buy and we will keep on hand a supply of spare machines so that if one is dragged away we can replace it. This I think is a commendable plan and one that will meet the approval of the navigation companies in addition to reducing the cost of keeping up these lights.

Mr. SPROULE. Will you import experts for this work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think we will be able to get suitable men here. I may say that our Canadian mechanics are as good as any in the world if they are properly directed.

Further amount required for signal service for telephonic communication between Port Atkinson lighthouse, British Columbia and the city of Vancouver, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has been represented that it would be a great convenience to shippers and to the travelling public to have this telephonic communication made but there is not sufficient inducement for the telephone company to make this connection as there would be no business except government business.

To provide for the purchase of land and a wharf for buoy service in Halifax harbour, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This matter has been under the consideration of the department for quite a while and we have now come to a point where we must get this extra appropriation in order to have our depot in Nova Scotia at a proper point where we can have dockage for our steamers. We are obliged to leave the wharf we are at present using. The department has been very much cramped for dockage at Halifax. We require dockage accommodation for three ships, the 'Lady Laurier,' the 'Lansdowne' and a fishery cruiser as well as storage accommodation for buoys, &c. Our present wharf is the property of the Railway Department and is required by them as terminal facilities for the Intercolonial Railway and we have received official notice to vacate the property. This, of course, will not be a public wharf at all; it is a wharf purely and simply for the use of the department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They really have no wharf at present. They are using a wharf in connection with the Intercolonial Railway terminals, and the Railway Department for two or three years have been warning them to get out as they require the wharf for their business. But it has not been found convenient hitherto, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is now endeavouring to get independent accommodation. My own judgment is that the accommodation he is getting by this vote will only be partial, and that he will have to get more later. However, this will give him relief in the meantime.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there no government wharf at Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, except the wharfs at the railway terminus. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been using one of these for several years at considerable inconvenience to the Railway Department.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this vote to buy a wharf or to construct one ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The design of my hon. friend is to buy an independent property.

Mr. BLAIN. Has he any property in view ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have an offer.

Mr. BLAIN. From whom ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I have not accepted the offer, I think I had better not mention the name.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I know the property which has been offered to my hon. friend. Were he to announce the name he would rather tie his hands in purchasing, and I think he had better be free.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there an item in the estimates for commencing the wharf ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The property which my hon. friend has in view has a wharf on it, though I do not think it is sufficient for his purposes. I think he would have to enlarge it.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the wharf in good repair, or will a further amount be required to put it in proper condition ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The property, from the description and plans which I have of it, is susceptible of very great enlargement and improvement. The present wharf will not be sufficient for the dockage of all our boats, but it will be possible to improve and enlarge it to give all the accommodation we require.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this amount of money do it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not want to divulge the secrets of the department, but I think we shall be able to buy the property for $15,000, and $5,000 will be available for improvements.

For the equipment of wireless stations at Point Amour, Heath Point, Anticosti, Fame Point, Cape Race, Belle Isle, and Sable Island, $25,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is a very important vote. It does not mean only $25,000. As the members of the committee are aware, there have been for some years interesting experiments made in wireless telegraphy. The present government have spent about $80,000 in establishing one or two stations. The experiment has proved satisfactory, not only in Canada, but almost all over the world. It is proposed, on the recommendation of the shipping interest, to establish four stations in the interest of navigation. There is already one at Belle Isle. We intend to make the necessary arrangements with either the Marconi Company or the DeForest Company to establish these stations, paying them a certain proportion, whatever is necessary to provide the machinery, and then to wait till the stations are completed and satisfactory to the shipping interest before paying the balance. We estimate that each station will cost from $10,000 to $15,000. Sable Island will be for further consideration. We do not provide for it at present.

Mr. SPROULE. The other night, when a somewhat similar question was under consideration, I asked what information the government had regarding the success of this system ; because it seems to me the House has never been given much information yet of a reliable character as to whether the system is a success or not. We see a great deal about it in the papers, but it is not definite.

Mr. RICHARDSON. From what information any of us who are watching the developments in connection with wireless telegraphy can gather, it seems to be yet in its experimental stage. It would be well for the government to make haste slowly in the expenditure of public money while this invention is in its present stage. It is found to be fairly successful for short distances, but, even for comparatively short distances, it is meeting with some unexpected difficulties, owing to the interruption of messages. I understand that there is a difficulty experienced in connection with the direction in which messages are sent. It is much more difficult to get satisfactory results for messages sent westward than for despatches sent eastward. It is commonly believed that the Marconi Company have got about as far as they can unless there should be further discoveries made that will enable them to overcome the difficulties with which they are meeting at present.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are moving in the line advised by hon. gentlemen. Had we come to the conclusion that this system was perfect, we would have asked for a larger amount, but we think proper to recommend that four stations only be constructed for the present, and these stations will only be established on condition that if they do not give satisfaction there will be no pay.

Mr. POPE. Are these experiments being made by other nations ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, in the States the navigation companies are installing the apparatus throughout their steamers as fast as they can be manufactured. At present the invention is not a complete success, generally speaking, but it has been a fair success in many instances. For fair distances, such as between these points and the steamers. I believe it will work successfully.

Mr. SPROULE. What would you call a fair distance ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Fifty miles.

Mr. BLAIN. I remember that when we voted the $80,000 in the session of 1900-1 the Minister of Finance stated that, as far as he knew, the experiment was not satisfactory. If I remember correctly the $80,000 has been all expended, and the works constructed out of that money we handed over last session to a private corporation, the government only retaining some instruments purchased by it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the main station ?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is hardly correct to say that it was handed over to a private corporation, because it was always in the hands of a private corporation, and the work was constructed by that company. Certainly up to this time, the station has not proved the success we hoped, but Mr. Marconi was here quite recently and is still full of hope and confidence. There is no doubt that for short distances the Marconi and other systems have proved successful, but for ocean telegraphy they have so far failed. Mr. Marconi claims that he can send signals one way, and he says occasionally he has sent them both ways, but not with the regularity necessary to commercial success. Although commercially it has not yet proved a success, I do not abandon it as hopeless. In the meantime we need not regret that we put that amount into the encouragement of a great invention which has gained Canada a great deal of credit and will give us still more credit if it should prove the success anticipated.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not complaining of the investment. I think the expenditure was one which received the endorsation of both sides, but I doubt whether it is in the best interests of the country that the government should appropriate $25,000 more for work of a purely experimental character.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not an experiment, because they have offered to put the system up and not receive any pay unless it works properly. To show that this expenditure meets with the approval of the large business bodies, let me read a letter sent to the department by the Montreal Board of Trade, on July 30th :

> I have the honour to communicate the following resolution adopted by the council of this board with regard to the desirability of the government installing the wireless telegraph stations in the gulf and to ask for it your favourable consideration :—
> The council especially urges on the government, in the interests of the safe navigation of our national waterway, the great importance of providing for a speedy installation of wireless telegraph stations at the various lighthouse points in the gulf and the River St. Lawrence.

This is addressed to the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, First Minister. I have also a letter from the shipping federation of Canada, dated July 29th, strongly urging the establishment of these stations. It is upon these recommendations, and many others that I might read, that the department has acted.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the vessels require to be equipped with a plant before they can communicate with the station ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the present time, I am informed, there are sixty vessels on the St. St. Lawrence route equipped with the necessary apparatus for receiving messages.

Mr. SPROULE Are ocean vessels equipped generally ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Many are equipped and the number is being increased as fast as possible. The British navy are adopting this system, and forty vessels are provided with the apparatus. I believe that about 200 steamships of the British merchant navy are equipped.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am glad hon. gentlemen on this side are discussing this matter, because this is the class of information that should be brought out. I regard this discovery of Marconi as the most important, for Canada, of the last fifty years, or one hundred years, if it is workable. I believe that, for a distance of 150 miles, it is absolutely workable. I was aboard a British man of war, in Halifax, last year, that was equipped with this system. The apparatus did not look expensive. One of the masts is used, and, at the top, is the station, with the apparatus. The officer in charge told me that it was simply invaluable ; that they could easily speak with a vessel distant 150 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. In all kinds of weather ?

Mr. GOURLEY. He said that a storm made no difference. I had in mind a much more important case than that of the 'Kaiser Wilhelm.' An English man of war, operating in the north sea, probably in the same storm referred to by the hon. gentleman, was some 200 miles out. In the storm, she spoke to the people on shore, assuring them that everything was well, though the report had gone abroad that she was stranded. Now, if this is good for 200 miles in a storm, it must be invaluable on the St. Lawrence, where no distance greater than 100 miles will need to be covered. This discovery is of the greatest importance to this Dominion. The people of Canada must be a great sea people. We must get that into our minds. Unless we are a sea people we can never be a dominant people. Therefore, we must adopt every means to aid navigation. Now, it is a matter of the greatest regret that, for some years past, Lloyds, of England, have treated the St. Lawrence route as dangerous. And, what is more unfortunate, the British papers, following the lead of Lloyds, have indicated that the St. Lawrence route is unsafe for commerce. That is a tremendous attack upon Canada. My province does not contribute to a very large extent, to the St. Lawrence, but, I feel this attack as keenly as though it had been made on the port of Halifax. The St. Lawrence is one of the great water-ways of Canada, and we should not allow it to be unsafe. In what I say, I am not seeking to lead the minister. I simply promise him my support, in any expenditure necessary to make the St. Lawrence one of the safest navigation routes in the world, I care not what it costs. The St. Lawrence route must be equipped with everything necessary to secure the safety of ships, so that the shipping companies in England and throughout the world, will have absolute confidence that this route is safe. I have no doubt that Canada has suffered enormously for many years from the ideas abroad that the St. Lawrence is an unsafe route. That must be got over. Last year we had before the Railway Committee a Bill for the purpose of forming a Lloyds Company for Canada. That was a measure of self-defence, because the Lloyds Company in England were going to drop the St. Lawrence, which would have been a fatal attack on Canada. I presume that the introduction of that Bill brought our English friends to something like reasonable terms. But there is no doubt that they have had reasonable ground for complaints. Ship after ship has grounded, and been destroyed in the St. Lawrence. That should not be. Speaking with a shipowner the other day, I was upbraiding him with the character inflicted on that St. Lawrence route, and asked why the shipping interests of Canada did not attempt to correct the view held in England? He told me that there was too much truth in their criticisms. We in Canada are strong enough to get over this system of making little trifling grants for such a purpose as this. When we had only a small revenue, little dribbling grants here and there, for lighthouses and other means of security, were the best we could do. We should grapple with the St. Lawrence as a system. Whether it takes $500,000 or $1,000,000, or $2,000,000, we should put that route in a condition of safety, to attract the commerce of the world. I am prepared to support the minister in wide expenditures of money for this purpose. The trouble hitherto has been that the political parties in Canada have suspected each other. Each has feared that money spent under the direction of the other would be directed into improper channels. That is the bane of our public life. Let us get rid of that. We should vote money generously, in sufficient sums to actually provide the services that are needed in a legitimate way. It is idle to spend $20,000 or $30,000 where $200,000 is required. The result of that is that we do not obtain the end desired. Accidents happen, in spite of these half-hearted expenditures; and, so, not only is our money lost, but the reputation of the country suffers. What I want, is to have this system of Marconi tested. We ought not to be left in doubt as to whether the system is workable, for the question can be tested and settled in a week.

Now if there is no doubt about the matter, that discovery is one of the most valuable discoveries that has been made for two or three hundred years in affecting a great seafaring country like Canada. We have splendid facilities for shipping, though we have a boisterous climate and tempestous weather. But all that can be got over, and a vessel can be just as safe in tempestous weather in the St. Lawrence river and gulf, as in a summer day. Mariners will tell you that a ship is just as safe in a storm, if the pilot knows where he is, as she is in a summer day. Therefore we can overcome these dangers and unfavourable circumstances of nature by spending money, and I want the minister to feel free to enter upon the new life of Canada as regards navigation, and to spend all the money that is required to put our navigation in the forefront on this continent, and he will be supported by every man in this House. We criticise his items but we criticise them as Canadians to find out whether they are going to be useful. If we can dominate the trade of this country, why we can make Halifax and St. John like Boston and New York, and we will find the United States dwindling as did the old world empires. I think that is possible, it is within our capacity, and we mean to do it by means of the sea. But we cannot do it by votes of $10,000 where we ought to have votes of $500,000. We are no longer children in Canada. Let our ministers come down here with the requisite votes to investigate this whole St. Lawrence route and to put it in perfect order, so that the Lloyds may have no more reason to complain. We have been going on in a niggardly way, and the consequence is that we have a poor protective service for navigation in the river and gulf of the St. Lawrence. Therefore, I sympathize to some extent with the Lloyds in their complaint, they are not so wrong as they generally are in regard to Canadian affairs. Let us therefore look this matter squarely in the face, and establish a system by which we will light the St. Lawrence in a most perfect manner, and if necessary establish these Marconi stations every five miles so that a ship may navigate the St. Lawrence just as safely throughout its entire extent as if she were being towed by a rope. I ask the minister to be sure he is right with regard to these Marconi stations, to employ the best men he can get to handle them, and I will do my best to assist the minister in accomplishing these results. If we can capture the trade of the north Atlantic we shall then be able to dominate the trade of North America and become the imperial power on this continent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have been accustomed to hear wonderful tales about wireless telegraphy. I believe that it is yet in its experimental stage, and that the government has already made libeal contributions in aid of these experiments. Still, wireless telegraphy is at pesent little better than a scientific toy, and unless very important improvements are made in the Marconi system before long, it will be relegated to the toy department. However, wireless telegraphy is engaging the attention of electricians all over the world today, and it may be that before long important developments will be made which will materially change the present system. Therefore it would be wise for the government to go a little slow in expenditures in this direction. I am informed that application has been made during the present week for a patent to protect some important discovery in the direction of improving the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy. It may be that in two or three years these difficulties which at present exist may be overcome. At present I am informed that an attempt to communicate between one vessel and another on the ocean has been interrupted, showing that the vibrations may be intercepted by some unknown vessel which may have a responsive receiving apparatus, and that the message will not be carried to its destination. That is an important difficulty which must be overcome.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understood the minister to say that this vote was not going to be expended unless the plans proved satisfactory. He read a communication, but I did not find that it proved that the money was not to be expended unless the plans proved satisfactory. What company is going to put the apparatus into operation, and if successful, is going to get this money ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the present time there are two systems competing for public favour in Canada, the De Forest system and the Marconi system. I have sent Capt. Salmon to investivate these systems. I think it is established now that wireless telegraphy, for a distance of 50 or 100 miles, is just as safe and certain as commercial telegraphy. The two systems have been installed on several steamers, and are in working condition. The intention of the department is to have stations established at certain points, according to the recommendation of the shipping interests ; but we will not undertake to pay anything unless these stations prove perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is the government going to establish these stations ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but we have made a c ntract by which it is stipulated that unless the stations prove perfectly satisfactory to the shipping interests we will not pay for them. That is well understood.

Mr. KENDALL. Has any provision been made to erect Marconi stations at Sable Island, Cape Race, and other well known points ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We contemplate establishing one at Sable Island and at some other points. But before these are established we will make a special study of the most favourable points, and have a conference with the shipping interests so as to make the stations as useful as possible.

Mr. GOURLEY. Have you one at Cape Sable ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The minister proposes to have one at Sable Island, but not at Cape Sable.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that it would cost us $15,000. What percentage of the cost are we to pay ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are two propositions before the department at the present time, coming from De Forest and the Marconi companies of wireless telegraphy. They have proposed to the government to establish a station, and not to ask a penny until they have demonstrated that their system works perfectly well. That is why the department does not ask for a larger sum than $25,000. With that we think we can do the preliminary work necessary to have a contract made with the proper company, but there will be no money spent by the officials of the department except what may be necessary and no money will be spent in connection with the establishment of these stations unless they prove perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. If they do prove perfectly satisfactory how much are we committed to by the contract ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will be liable for whatever amount each station may cost. It is calculated that each station may cost $5,000 to $10,000. There will be besides that the cost of maintenance which will amount to $2,500 a year.

Mr. KAULBACH. The three most important points on the Atlantic coast are Cape Sable, Sable Island and Cape Race. I think it will be admitted by everyone that these are points at which it is most important that the Marconi system should be established, in order to avert the shipwrecks that are occurring from year to year. There should be no hesitancy in providing sufficient money to make these three points satisfactory to the mariner. In doing so you provide a complete guide for the fishermen in the summer time in foggy weather. Fishermen are a class who venture a very great deal. They have been very successful in moving around Sable Island. The water for a great distance around Sable Island is very shallow. At the north east there is something like thirty miles with only twenty fathoms of water, and the same condition exists at the opposite end. I certainly would urge in the strongest manner that an effort should be made to place stations at these three points.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is providing for two of the places that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) has mentioned. These are Cape Race, which is in Newfoundland but which is in charge of the Canadian government, and Sable Island. The third place mentioned by the hon. gentleman is Cape Sable, which is sometimes confused with Sable Island but which is a long way from it. Cape Sable is the south-western point of Nova Scotia and forms a part of my own constituency. I hope that as this system is developed it will be found possible to have a station at Cape Sable, but the urgent need now is for the improvement of the St. Lawrence route and of the signalling stations on the St. Lawrence. Cape Sable and Scatarie, which have been mentioned, are good objective points but the need at these places is not so immediate as in the case of the St. Lawrence. Sable Island, though not connected with the St. Lawrence route, is a place which is particularly dangerous, and we have great difficulty in communicating with it. Sometimes in winter, vessels are wrecked there, and some weeks elapse before we can obtain any communication at all. Cases of wrecks have occurred in which a long time has elapsed before any knowledge of the wreck reached the mainland. The situation is so dangerous at certain seasons of the year that steamers are unwilling to approach the shore. Even the government vessels have to lie off and on waiting a favourable opportunity of landing. If there is any place where this system should be established I think it is Sable Island and I am very glad to know that even though the hon. minister is not providing at present for Scatarie and Cape Sable he is providing for the other points where the need is the greatest. The others, I am sure, will come in due course.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am very glad to hear the hon. Minister of Finance express himself in the way he does. I think it is in keeping for me to make a reference to Newfoundland. Newfoundland should be very grateful to Canada for the efforts she —Canada—has put forward from year to year in providing aids to navigation in the way of lighthouses, fog horns, and fog trumpets for the guidance of vessels around that island. In the past Newfoundland has not been as grateful as she might have been towards her sister colony, Canada. It is known that although we spend a large amount of money in keeping up these lighthouses on the island for the benefit of shipping, not particularly our own but for other shipping as well, we do not get that adequate return from Newfoundland which we should have. I will refer to it here and perhaps I will in a day or two refer to it at greater length. Our fishermen are compelled to pay heavy light dues in Newfoundland ports while they come into our ports and pay nothing except twenty-five cents for entry and clearance. They even charge us a duty on barrels. When our fishermen take empty barrels for fish, not landing them but returned to the port from which they took their departure, they charge them a duty of twenty-four cents each. This I consider an iniquitous thing.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). In the event of Sable Island being connected with the Nova Scotia shore where would the station be—at Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At Halifax.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). In the event of a large passenger steamer going ashore on the island with a large number of passengers there will be no accommodation and it will be of the utmost advantage that the Nova Scotia shore could be communicated with immediately.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not wish to undertake to speak as an expert, but living down by the ocean and like most maritime men being more or less acquainted with the wrecks that occur on our coast, I endorse what the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) says as to the very great importance of having one of these stations placed at the entrance to the Bay of Fundy. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway have made the port of St. John the Canadian winter port for the purpose of the heavy freight traffic, and the steamers of the North Atlantic trade that come to Canada during the winter come into St. John. We know that that locality during the last three or four years has become unenviably notorious for wrecks. We have had a great many wrecks there and if by establishing one of these stations at this point we can do anything to reduce the number of wrecks, I think we might ask the hon. minister to consider the matter at once and to make provision for one of these stations at that port.

Steamboat inspection, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It has been reported to me that the work has so increased in the Toronto district that a boiler inspector requires to be appointed there immediately. For a number of years attention has been called to the very small salaries paid to inspectors, a number of whom were receiving less than engineers. It is proposed to have another inspector in Quebec. Out of this amount of $6,000, the salary of two inspectors, one in the Quebec district and one at Collingwood will be provided, and in addition to that I intend to look into the salary of each inspector now on the staff. I may say candidly to the members of the committee that some of the inspectors have tendered their resignations, because they thought that if they were to engage as steamboat engineers they would get better salaries than what they are getting from the department. As they were good officials, most of them were appointed by my immediate predecessors, who had done their duty carefully, I thought they deserved to be paid on the same scale as other men of equal ability would be treated, even if they were employed by the government.

Mr. LANCASTER. What salaries do they get now ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The salaries range from $1,900, which is paid the chairman of the board, down to $1,000 per year. The majority receive from $1,100 to $1,200 per year. This inspection service has been the source of a handsome revenue to this country, but the government has decided, during this session, that the inspection fees should be abolished. The revenue which we collected from steamboat inspection amounted to $38,000, and the total expenditure was about $27,000. The services will still have to be performed, but the fees have been abolished along with the tolls on the canals, because it was the unanimous opinion on both sides of the House that it would be in the interest of navigation to do so. The expenditure last year was $27,493, so that the revenue exceeded the expenditure by over $10,000. I may say that the two boiler inspectors at Toronto last year inspected 411 vessels in western Ontario. In eastern Ontario, one inspector at Kingston examined 167 vessels ; at Montreal two inspectors examined 183 vessels, and also inspected 436 vessels as regards tackles, loading, &c. At Quebec one inspector examined 159 vessels. He is also a hull inspector, and inspects at Montreal as well. In Prince Edward Island one inspector examined 109 vessels, in New Brunswick one inspector examined 116 vessels, in British Columbia one inspector examined 102, in the Yukon territory 144 were examined, and in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, 105.

To investigate matters respecting sardine, herring and oyster fisheries and coast close season, $10,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What are the objects of this investigation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This vote is to meet the travelling and other expenses of the five commissioners who will be engaged in visiting the various points in the Bay of Fundy during 1903-4 to study and take evidence from fishermen, packers and others in the maritime provinces in regard to the matters which are mentioned in the item. They will finally make a report and recommendations regarding the best methods of preserving the herring and oyster fisheries, the best means of dealing with the waste of fish due to seals, the steps necessary to promote oyster breeding, the proper close seasons, and similar matters. I should say that this is not a new venture on the part of the present minister. For years past the Department of Marine and Fisheries have been inquiring into this matter, and I may say that if the lobster industry has been saved to this country it is owing to the work of a commission which was appointed a couple of years ago, and which made a thorough investigation and a complete study of this whole question. At the present time the lobster industry in the maritime provinces is improving very greatly and its improvement we may consider due to the methods that have been adopted in consequence of the recommendation of the commissioners, which have proved very satisfactory. We intend to do the same thing with regard to the other branches as has been done in regard to the lobster fishery.

Mr. POPE. What is the object of the investigation in regard to the herring and sardine fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To ascertain the best regulations to be adopted in regard to close seasons, &c. It is a pretty difficult question to decide, and there are only a few people who can give to the department the information which will enable the country to reap the greatest advantage from this industry.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I wish to call the attention of the minister to the condition of the fishing on the south shore of Nova Scotia. I have had letters in which it is stated that the sword fish and the dog fish have almost destroyed the fishing there; and I would ask the minister to take the matter into his consideration, and try to devise some plan by which these raiders on the fisheries may be exterminated or diminished. If something is not done, the nets and appliances of the fishermen which are put out will be destroyed. These pests seem to have multiplied at a great rate during this year, and the legitimate fishing along the coast is imperilled. Perhaps some bounty for the destruction of these pests in large numbers could be given ; or if some plan could be devised for utilizing the oil from them in some way, it would be of great advantage to the fishermen.

Mr. KAULBACH. I referred to this matter a few evenings ago and was asked to allow it to remain over until the estimates for the fisheries came up. In the early part of this last winter petitions, numerously signed, were sent in asking the Minister of Marine and Fsheries to see what could be done to remove this terrible nuisance, dog fish, that is increasing in numbers every year on the deep seas. It is only some two or three years that these pests have been a menace to the deep-sea fishing. Formerly they frequented shallow water, and only the shore fishermen suffered; but now both the shore fishermen and the deep-sea fishermen suffer inconveniences. They are really a tax on the fishermen, for they suffer the loss of their nets, head lines and other appliances. They are of the shark species which eat and destroy twine. Instead of being a tax on the fishermen, these fish could be made a source of revenue, for they are worth something like $16 a ton if utilized as a fertilizer. In the memorials or petitions sent to the government reference was made to the various ways in which they could be destroyed. Dynamite would not do, for the reason that it would destroy the other fish mingling with them in the waters. The only plan which I think would be feasible and practicable, and of benefit to the fishermen, would be to offer a bounty. It could be made a small one, and it would be some compensation to the fishermen for being deprived during a certain season of the opportunity of catching any other fish than dog fish; and the latter could be utilized, not only as a fertilizer, but as food for cattle. Cattle are very fond of these fish when dried. The fish are thrown into pickle, as the fishermen say, and afterwards dried and put into bundles and fed to young cattle in the winter time.

Mr. POPE. Wouldn't the bones bother the cattle?

Mr. KAULBACH. Not a mite. They eat everything; there is no need of separating the bone at all. The fish are chopped up by the cattle as finely as if put through a bait-cutter. A great deal of loss is also occasioned in the deep-sea fisheries by the offal or the trimmings of the fish. The fishermen will anchor in the deep seas or the grand banks or where the fish are found and will lie there for a day or two fishing, when they have to leave good fishing to get clear of their debris or garbage by throwing it overboard. As this becomes the food for the fish and impairs the fishing and polutes the water, it should be disposed of in a different way. I suggest that it could be disposed of in this manner. Let a steamer be subsidized, with bait on board, to supply the fishermen who would rendezvous on these waters, and bring in return the fresh fish that are caught and place them in cold storage for transfer to the west, which is greatly in need of that description of fish, and the trimmings as well can be preserved in lime and sand as a fertiliser. I also suggest that the oil, which is now dried out by the action of heat, and under a system of decomposition, which renders it worth little more than 25 cents a gallon, would, if brought in a fresh state and put through a certain process, bring $2.50 a gallon, which would be a great advantage to the fishermen. This, I think, could be accomplished by giving a bounty to a steamer which would be a medium for the supply of bait to the fishermen and also for the transmission of the freshly-caught fish to some point of shipment. For instance, Canso is one point. The fish, when caught and kept in bulk for a number of months or even weeks, suffer very considerably in quality, and are not worth as much in the market as they would be if promptly transferred by a steamer. The fishermen could then sell them fresh, and the purchaser could ship them fresh, or prepare them as shredded or boneless fish, and pack them in neat and clean boxes to be sent to any part of the world; or they could be shipped in cold storage. I therefore urge very strongly that the system of cold storage be adopted, and that Canso be made a centre of distribution, as it is midway between Cape North and Cape Sable, and is of easy access. Then, again, we want to make the fishing a success in the maritime provinces, and we want all the encouragement we can get for the fishermen. Unless they get that encouragement their industry must necessarily suffer. This year we suffered very materially for the want of bait. Had the deep-sea fishermen been able to obtain bait they would have secured valuable returns. Instead of that many of the fishermen, I am sorry to say, will be deprived of the valuable living they have hitherto been enjoying. The bait supply is a matter of very serious consequence, and I am satisfied that the government could aid our fishermen very considerably by assistance in the establishing a system of chemical freezers. Not only would the government thus serve the fishermen, but indirectly serve the treasury as well. Our fishermen like to live well, and when they have a good catch of fish they are prepared to live on the luxuries of the land, and would therefore consume articles on which the government would receive a large customs revenue. With regard to the dog fish, which is a menace to the whole of the fisheries, I would suggest that a bounty be given the fishermen for the capture of these fish, which are indeed a nuisance.

Mr. POPE. How much?

Mr. KAULBACH. I would say $4 per ton, that would not be a very great deal, and be a benefit to all concerned.

Mr. POPE. How much would that amount to?

Mr. KAULBACH. It depends entirely on what they capture.

Mr. KENDALL. What proportion would the fishermen be able to catch of dog-fish in the sea ?

Mr. KAULBACH. A large quantity. If they were to go out in the morning when the fish are plentiful, they could capture a couple of tons a day. They only last but a very short time, and everything depends on the weather. As we are on this matter, you will pardon me, Mr. Chairman, if I refer to the lobster question. A few days ago I showed how the lobsters were being depleted on the Canadian Atlantic as well as on the American coast. In consequence of their depletion, a shell fish, known as the 'sea urchin,' which is the favourite food of the lobster has largely increased. They have become so numerous that they cover the whole shore, which formerly was covered by a coating of vegetable matter that supplied food for the other fish, and also gave an excellent growth of kelp or sea-weed. This kelp or sea-weed was for the shelter of small fish what a forest is for birds. It gave them shelter and protection from the larger fish. But now kelp has all disappeared. These shell fish or little urchins, deposit a sort of saliva which covers the whole bed of the shore and becomes petrified matter, so that no vegetable matter will grow upon it. As a result the farmer must necessarily suffer. What I would suggest is to substitute the debris from the catch of the deep-sea fishermen, being the trimmings of the fish, which could be utilized as a fertilizer, and be worth about $16 per ton, when placed in a proper position as an article of merchandise, and I would strongly recommend that the government seriously consider this matter. I feel satisfied that in coming to the rescue of the fishermen they will not only benefit the fishing, but the farming industry in the utilizing of that debris, because it will then be removed from polluting the waters of the deep-sea to another sphere, so to speak, where it can be utilized as a fertilizer for the farmers, so that the farmers and fishermen may receive a benefit which otherwise they would not be the recipients of at all. Therefore I would urge very strongly on the government to give this matter its serious consideration, but by all means I ask, what I requested some three years ago, and have been asking for every year since, that a commission be sent to the shores of the Canadian Atlantic to investigate and see what can be done in the interest of the fishermen.

Mr. COPP. This matter is of great importance to the fishermen of Nova Scotia. We have not in Canada any sardine industry such as they have on the west coast of France. We have, it is true, what we call a sardine industry, but that is really a herring industry. You are aware of the fact, Sir, no doubt, that the fishermen, in order to fish, must have bait, and that question of bait is one which requires to be investigated. The fishermen of Nova Scotia, particularly of St. Mary's bay and the Bay of Fundy, secure the most of their bait from Grand Manan, Campobello and Passamaquoddy bay. A very peculiar state of affairs exists there. Looking at our reports, you will see that the sardine or herring industry of Canada is a very small one, whereas as a matter of fact, the herring industry, which is the sardine industry referred to in this item, should be worth millions of dollars to the Dominion. But instead every dollar of that or the large portion of it goes to the United States. The herring industry of the United States is wholly in Canadian waters. To-day at Lubec, a seaport right on the American border, between New Brunswick and the United States, there are invested between one and two million dollars in machinery and factories owned by Americans for the manufacture of sardines. These sardines are caught in Canadian waters, taken over to the American shores, and there sold to the American canners. They are nothing more or less than the small herring. The sardines or small herrings canned, measure from four to six inches. Any one who has studied the herring industry knows that it takes three years for a herring to mature in order to bear young. The value of the sardines put up in these cans amounts to something like $3,000,000, from which Canada gets no benefit, except what it realizes from the sale of these small herrings which are less than three years of age.

The fishermen are sending tens of thousands of casks of herring out of Canadian waters across to the American side to be manufactured and sent throughout the world. And they are nothing more or less than the small herring which belong to us and ought to be secured as bait for our fishermen. Now, the question of bait is becoming a very serious one. If you are going to deplete the Canadian waters of bait, our fishermen cannot carry on their business. A few years ago I brought to the attention of the government the fact that our fishermen are actually prevented from buying herring in Canada by a syndicate of American canners. The ordinary price for bait is from $2 to $4 a hogshead. But certain factories in the United States wanted all the herrings that were caught. They formed a syndicate and bound the weir fishermen of New Brunswick not to sell a single hogshead of bait or herring to any one except themselves, and they would take all that were offered. The consequence was that, when one of our vessels went to get bait, the weir fisherman said he was not selling any. Why ? 'Well, I have sold it all to Mr. So and So, of Lubec, and he is going to buy all we offer ; but, if we should sell you a hogshead of bait he would take none from us.' Therefore, though they had been offered as high as $60 a hogshead and were getting only $4 from the American canners, our vessels could not get a single hogshead of bait. This is one of the conditions that the government, I am glad to see, are spending $10,000 to investigate.

These fish are caught in weirs. The government licenses these fishing sites and charges a license fee of $5 a year. I know of people living in New York who pay $5 a year license fee, and then sublet the site so secured for $2,500 a year. These weir sites are worth all the way from $1,000 to $4,000 a year, and they are nearly all in the possession of a few gentlemen—and I know of one lady, she being the one to whom I have just referred, as receiving $2,500 for the sublease—who do not reside on Grand Manan or near the fisheries, who are not interested in the fisheries except as holders of these licenses, which they sublet to parties who fish on these islands. This thing has been going on for years.

Mr. KAULBACH. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that these licenses are all held by Americans ?

Mr. COPP. Oh, no. But I do say that the parties do not reside where the weir fishing is going on.

Mr. HENDERSON. How long is one of these licenses good for ?

Mr. COPP. For a year, and the charge is $5 a year. Something should be done, and I am glad that the minister is investigating this matter in order that the license fee may be increased and the arrangement made different from what it is at the present time.

Now, the situation in regard to bait is becoming so acute with us that we have asked the government to erect bait freezers. I am glad to say that the government have voted the money to erect these freezers in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. These have proved of tremendous benefit to our fishermen. We have in the province of Nova Scotia, I think, something like 40,000 men engaged in the fisheries. For a period generally of about six weeks in the summer they are unable to procure any bait at all. And, the season when this condition exists is the very best fishing season. The government, by erecting these bait freezers, have placed the fishermen in such a position that they can store bait when it is plentiful, and take it out during the season when bait cannot otherwise be procured, and so continue their fishing, as they have not been able to do for some years past. The bait has to come from Grand Manan, where the sardines are caught. I congratulate the minister on deciding to have this question investigated.

The dog fish referred to by one hon gentleman has become a serious menace to our fisheries in Nova Scotia. If the problem is not dealt with in some way, it is going to seriously affect the fishery industry of the Dominion. I have here a copy of the Halifax 'Herald,' of October 3rd, which shows how the dog fish is helping to destroy this industry in Nova Scotia. This newspaper tells of 'Half a million shortage in our western fisheries.' 'It is estimated that west of Halifax'—that is, in the five counties of Lunenburg, Shelburne, Queen's, Yarmouth and Digby—'the fishing catch is $400,000 to $600,000 below the average this year.'

Mr. KAULBACH. It is all of that.

Mr. COPP. And this newspaper says that the dog fish and the scarcity of bait are the chief causes. If, in one year we lost in five counties a sum equal to $400,000 to $600,000 through the dog fish and the scarcity of bait, hon. gentlemen can see what this means to the whole fishing industry of the maritime provinces. The bait question, I am glad to say, is one with which the government is dealing. And I believe that they are dealing with it in the right way, and in such a way that, in a short time it will be satisfactorily dealt with.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the size of this fish ?

Mr. COPP. From a foot to two feet in length.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why are they called dog fish ?

Mr. COPP. I do not know. They are a species of shark. They are very pugnacious and destroy everything that comes in their way.

Mr. KAULBACH. They are the most aggressive fish in the water.

Mr. COPP. By long odds. Formerly they visited us annually, but remained for only a week or ten days. They struck in about May and would remain in the Bay of Fundy St. Mary's Bay and adjacent waters for about a week or ten days and then would disappear. While they were with us, of course, no fishing was done. The moment they struck in, the fishermen came ashore and remained idle. Of late years they are remaining the whole year round. If they are to remain with us in the future the fishing industry will become almost a thing of the past. Last year, strange to say, they made their appearance on the banks for the first time in the history of the bank fishery.

Mr. KAULBACH. They appeared three or four years ago.

Mr. KENDALL. Fourteen years ago—in 1889.

Mr. KAULBACH. Not in any number, I think.

Mr. COPP. The suggestion I have to make is in line with that of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). The only way in which to deal with this question of the dog fish is by a bounty from the government Whether it should be a bounty to reduction works or to the fishermen is a question we have to consider. Of course, I am in favour of a bounty to the fishermen. I think that a bounty direct to the fishermen would stimulate the fishermen to catch the fish, whereas, if the bounty were given to the reduction works they might take advantage of it, and the fishermen would get no benefit from it. In the county of Digby last year, I had the representatives of a Philadelphia firm come down and they went to Tiverton and Briar Island with a view to erecting reduction works. The only thing they were afraid of was that they could not secure sufficient fish to keep the works going. They told us that if the government would agree to give a bounty on the dog fish, so that the fishermen would catch them, they would at once talk business with us as to establishing the reduction works. If we had reduction works situated at three or four places in the province where they catch these fish and could sell them, it would be a profit to the fishermen and they would engage in that kind of fishing. As it is, dog fish does not seem to be worth anything. There is nothing we can get out of it unless we cut the liver out and extract the oil. But the oil that is taken from the fish is not sufficient to justify the fishermen in engaging in that fishery. I am going to ask the minister if it is not possible for him to add to the item now under discussion a clause that will enable the commission to investigate and report upon the dog fish nuisance. The sum of $10,000 is more than enough to pay all the expenses of investigation that is required in the Bay of Fundy, and all that is needed is to give the commissioners power to investigate the dog fish nuisance. Now, the lobster industry is referred to by the minister, and I must congratulate this government on taking that up and appointing a commission which has done this country immense benefit in the report they have made. It almost solves the lobster problem. Everyone knows that the lobster industry to-day is worth in the province of Nova Scotia alone $3,000,000, whereas thirty years ago there was nothing in it. I believe the same result in regard to dog fish can be accomplished through this commission that the minister now provides if it is properly conducted. Another thing I wish to refer to is the license taken out by American fishermen. Americans are taking fish in our waters, and before they can do so they have to procure a license and pay so much a ton. But they ton their vessels in the United States, and when they come to Canadian ports they pay a tonnage on the American register, that is not one-half as high as the Canadian register. Therefore a vessel that measures eighty tons by the Canadian register would only measure forty tons by the American register, and when they come into Canada and take out this license to fish they purchase their license on the American register, which only shows forty tons whereas they should pay a license on our own Canadian tonnage. I think the minister should make a regulation which will compel them to pay this license on the Canadian register.

Mr. KAULBACH. I feel satisfied that it is better to give the bounty to the fishermen than to give it to reduction works. Let the bounty be given to fishermen as an inducement to them to engage in catching this fish. The reduction works can then come in and receive their profit by utilizing the dog fish as a fertilizer. The difficulty is to bring the dog fish in to shore in a proper condition to be utilized, but that difficulty can be overcome by using lime. They can take out a few barrels of lime with them, and by its use prevent the fish from decomposing or becoming offensive to the sense of smell. They can do the same with the debris that is taken from the trimmings of fish. It can be cured in such a way that it will not be offensive, and become solid matter by placing with it quantities of lime. In that way the reduction works will get the benefit in the end without any bonus being given to them by this government. But let the bounty be given as I already stated, to the fishermen directly.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the intention to look into this question, and I propose to amend the item by adding the words 'dog fish nuisance and settlement of the close season' as matters to be investigated.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

To pay His Majesty's government balance of divisible expenses in the Behring Sea arbitration, $629.46.

Mr. KAULBACH. What has been the expenditure so far in the Behring Sea matter ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1901-2 the expenditure was $2,956; last year it was only $87. The whole expenditure is somewhat between $50,000 and $60,000.

Towards providing for a steamer to replace the 'Acadia,' and one to replace the 'Petrel' on the great lakes, $75,000.

Mr. KAULBACH. The Acadia was offered for sale some time ago, was she sold ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, she was sold by tender, after all her fittings had been taken out of her, anything that was of any value. There were two tenders, one for $6,050 from St. John, and one for $6,000 from Halifax, the latter of which we accepted. She was sold about two months ago.

Mr. BLAIN. Was any money expended on her last year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, to repair and put her in commission, but the vessel was perfectly useless. The vessel was condemned, and none of the officers would risk their lives on her. She had been kept up from year to year by repairs, until finally she became so old and useless that we thought we would get rid of her. I think what we took out of her was worth $5,000 or $6,000.

Mr. KAULBACH. I did not catch the hon. gentleman's remark with regard to the amount that was realized on her.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $6,015.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the 'Petrel'?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 'Petrel' will be put to the service of the buoys. She is not considered fit for the service which she has been doing for the last two or three years. She is not fast enough. We are the laughing stock of the Americans and our fishermen complain that she does not afford the protection that is necessary. We want to replace her with a 15 or 16 knot boat so that we can catch those Americans who are poaching in our waters.

Mr. SPROULE. You are going to use her for another purpose?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you bought any new boats to replace these?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, the 'Acadia' has not been replaced. The 'Petrel' is doing service. We are asking for $75,000, but this is only a preliminary expenditure. To replace the 'Acadia' by a 16-knot steamer we will require from $150,000 to $175,000. We can replace the 'Petrel' with a boat constructed in some of the ship-yards in Canada at a cost of from $50,000 to $75,000.

Mr. GOURLEY. Why do you not get a turbine?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope we may some day.

Mr. KAULBACH. Will the boat to replace the 'Acadia' be of steel?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and she will be armed as well.

Mr. KAULBACH. Don't you think wood would suit as well to traverse the shore?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you are buying one and building the other?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do not intend to buy either. We intend to have the boat to replace the 'Petrel' constructed here according to plans made by the department, and for which we will get tenders from Canadian firms.

Mr. SPROULE. And the other?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will have it constructed on plans prepared by the officers of the department.

Mr. KAULBACH. Is it under the consideration of the government to grant a bounty to encourage steel ship-building in Canada?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That has been talked of a good deal, but I am not in a position to state whether the government has considered the question or not.

Further amount required for building and maintenance of fish breeding establishments and lobster hatcheries and securing seed lobsters during the fish season for distribution in depleted localities, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has come to any decision regarding the application made last year for the establishment of a fish hatchery on the Beaver river in the county of Grey near the Georgian bay. It is in close proximity to where the fish ova are caught and would in my judgment be a splendid place for a hatchery. I mentioned it last year to the hon. gentleman's predecessor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We propose to establish eight new hatcheries which will be provided for out of this sum, and the one to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) makes allusion is provided for. The exact site has not yet been decided by the department. The conditions of the place mentioned by the hon. gentleman as far as they have been ascertained by the officials entirely meet the requirements.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sure the people of that section will be grateful for it as they have thought for a long time that this place was a very suitable one and a fish hatchery will be very useful there.

Mr. COPP. I wish to ask the hon. minister if it is the intention to establish a hatchery in the Bay of Fundy?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. There are demands for thirteen new hatcheries, but. as I have stated, provision is made this year for eight.

Mr. KAULBACH. How many are there for Lunenburg

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is one for the district combining the counties of Digby, Annapolis and Yarmouth, but the exact situation has not yet been decided on.

Mr. KAULBACH. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. minister does not think it is fair that the county of Lunenburg should have one? It excels any other county in the industry of fishing. We have a number of canneries in the county and I think we certainly should have a hatchery. Would the hon. minister reconsider and give us one ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not an expert in these matters, because I am a new hand at it, and when you ask me about sites for hatcheries I will have to depend a great deal on the officers of my department unless I can go myself and visit the places. It is very hard for me to fix on one place or the other unless my officials advise me.

Mr. KAULBACH. If my hon. friend will consider the record we hold in regard to fisheries I think he will see that it warrants him in giving one at least to the county of Lunenburg. I think I have a knowledge of the matter equal to that of any commissioner or of any one else he can send to make inquiry.

Mr. GOURLEY. I would support my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). He has succeeded in taking the fishing industry away from Halifax to Lunenburg and it is the head centre of the fishing industry in Nova Scotia to-day. Besides, it is near the county of the hon. Minister of Finance and some benefit might overflow into Queen's But. I think in deference to the fishing industry, there should be a station in Lunenburg.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In regard to the remark of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) that Lunenburg is the centre of the fishing industry I would say that in one sense only that is correct. Lunenburg is the centre of the deep-sea fishery, but it is not the centre of the lobster fishery which is the subject under discussion. I think I represent more lobsters than any body else in this House.

Mr. HENDERSON. We think so on this side of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And I do not mean to call my constituents in all cases lobsters either. The lobster industry is a very important one in the counties that I represent. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been too modest in his statement. He has recently made some experiments in the eastern part of Nova Scotia in regard to the propagation of lobsters which have been remarkably successful, so much so that I question whether in the future it will be necessary for us to do as much in the matter of lobster hatcheries as in the past. The experiments that have recently been made by Mr. Barker at Fourchu in Richmond county have been remarkably successful.

Mr. GOURLEY. What is the nature of them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the creation of the lobster pound into which seed lobsters purchased from the fishermen are thrown, and then, as the Irishman says, they let nature take its course. There were no special arrangements for conserving the seed lobsters and the fishermen were very apt to destroy them. Although the law forbids that, still you cannot always enforce these laws. The action recently taken by the minister was to offer a price for the preserving of the seed lobster. That was then taken to the pond and placed under proper supervision and the development has been very remarkable. Of course this work may be said to be yet experimental, but it has been so successful that I should think that in most parts of the country they would prefer this natural development of the lobster to the creation of lobster hatcheries. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is to be congratulated upon the great success that has crowned his efforts in that direction.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have been urging that suggestion for years, the use of natural pounds where there is a flow of clear fresh salt water at every tide. We have several of these in my county, one east of Chester—where there is now a cannery at the town of Chester—and one at the mouth of the La Have river, and both are admirably placed for the purpose. I am satisfied to allow the minister to have a claw on a portion of the claim, but I would rather not see him obtain the whole of it. I want him to be as a friend generous in this matter, and I think my request is reasonable, and one which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see to be in the interest of the fishermen of my county. It is right for the fishermen there to have a claim to at least a portion of such benefits. The county of Lunenburg, from Queen's to the border of Halifax county is one continuous line of shore fishermen, and I will ask the hon. minister to look carefully into this matter and give me at least a hatchery for one of these pounds.

Mr. COPP. I am perfectly satisfied that Lunenburg should have the credit of representing the largest fishing county in Nova Scotia, but I wish to warn him of one thing, that he has so little advantage in this respect that it is not very much to brag about. In Digby last year the total catch was $1,438,942, whereas in Lunenburg it was $1,484,000, or a difference of only $45,000 in favour of Lunenburg. I wish to draw his attention to this, that while the yield in Digby has been going forward by leaps and bounds, Lunenburg has gone behind. Therefore, unless there is a change in Lunenburg very soon, I shall have the proud distinction of representing the largest fishing county in Nova Scotia.

Mr. KAULBACH. I can easily explain that and show very clearly the position with regard to the catch of lobsters in my county. The lobsters captured in my county are largely taken from my county into the adjoining counties of Queen's and Halifax and are counted as a catch for these counties, when in reality Lunenburg is deserving of all that credit.

To increase the salaries of R. N. Venning, $150 ; F. H. Cunningham, $100 ; D. H. Fraser, $150 ; J. F. Fraser, $450 ; F. Anderson, $150 ; J. M. Lalonde, $150 ; C. W. White, $100 ; J. M. McCharles, $200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,450.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you require all these increases ? Have these men not been getting any increase in salary for some years ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Most of them have not got the ordinary increase, some of them for four years and some of them for less. I will enumerate the different officers. Take Mr. Venning. His salary is $2,050, and this increase makes it $2,200. He joined the service in 1869, and has been strongly recommended for the maximum of $2,400 for his special services in connection with the Behring sea arbitration and other international as well as intercolonial affairs. He is one of our most capable officers in the Fisheries Department. He has assisted at these different commissions and rendered most valuable services, and I do not know how it was that he remained at such a low salary, and it has been thought proper to increase his salary by $150. As regards Mr. Cunningham, I may say that his duties have been increased very largely. He is a first-class clerk in the department, and is also inspector of fish hatcheries throughout the Dominion, a very important and growing work, which keeps him travelling a great deal. He has perfected a device for carrying fish long distances which has been successfully employed, for instance, in stocking the waters of British Columbia with bass, where the fish were carried 2,800 miles. He has been twenty years in the service in all kinds of work, in connection with commissions and special inquiries, and I consider him deserving of the increase.

Mr. SPROULE. His present salary is how much ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One thousand six hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. B. H. Fraser is a graduate and medallist of the Royal Military College and has been in the department since 1889. He was employed in the office of the chief engineer, and in 1885 he was appointed assistant engineer in the absence of the chief engineer. I may say in regard to some of these officers, that if they were in other departments in the outside service they could get much larger salaries than they are getting, and some of them have tendered their resignations, because, as the members of the committee are perfectly aware, engineers or experts, men with a certain technical knowledge, are at present being looked for, and it is in view of this fact that I have thought proper to make these increases. Mr. J. F. Fraser is in a similar position. He has charge of all the buoys and lights on the upper St. Lawrence and the lakes, and down as far as the gulf. He is a capable engineer and we cannot really keep him at a salary of $1,550. He will leave the service if he does not receive a larger salary. He is also a medalist of the university.

Mr. Anderson is a graduate of the Royal Military College. He has been engaged in the hydrographic survey since his appointment, in October, 1893. He is receiving $1,050, and it is proposed to place him at $1,200. He has charge of the survey in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Mr. Lalonde has been receiving $850 and it is proposed to place him at the head of his class. He has been highly recommended by the deputy minister and accountant for his increase. He received no increase for years and years, and is a very capable officer in the department. He is one of those who would certainly leave the service if he did not get better remuneration for his services. Mr. White joined the service in 1893. It is proposed to increase his salary to $900. For the past year he has had very important work to do in connection with the revenue, and is a very painstaking clerk. Mr. McCharles joined the service in 1893 and is receiving $700. It is now proposed to raise him to $900. He is a good stenographer and typewriter, and at present has charge of the work of despatching all mail matter, which was formerly done by a first-class clerk. He was strongly recommended for an increase by the deputy minister.

To promote Jules d'E. Clement from a second-class to a first-class clerkship, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $300.

To promote M. C. Doyle from a junior second to a second-class clerkship, $100.

To provide salary for A. M. Ross as a junior second class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $900.

To provide for the salary of F. H. Houde as a junior second-class clerk, $600.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As regards Mr. Clement, I may say that he is my private secretary. He had been in the service as private secretary to the Minister of Public Works before he became my private secretary. It is proposed to make him a first-class clerk, which is the rank of nearly every one of the private secretaries to the ministers. He writes both English and French.

Mr. SPROULE. What salary would that give him ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $1,400 and the amount which is allowed to him as private secretary, $600. He is a stenographer in French and English, so that I save the salary of an English stenographer. Miss Doyle is an old employee of the department, appointed in 1892—I mean she has been employed for a long time. She is assistant private secretary, being an expert stenographer, and typewriter, and I think an increase of $100 to her is not too much.

Mr. SPROULE. What is her salary now ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $1,000. Mr. Ross has been in charge of the fisheries museum, and has also been employed in connection with fish-breeding. It is now proposed to put him in the inside service at a salary of $900, being the amount he now receives in the outside service. Mr. Houde is a young clerk who enters at the foot of the ladder at $600. He is a stenographer, and a useful young man.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two new clerks appointed, then ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To fill vacancies. There was one pensioned and one transferred. The private secretary of the former Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Hunter, was transferred to the Department of Public Works. That is the only appointment that was made.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister did not tell us when these employees got the last increase.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. McCharles was kept out of his increase for four years. Mr. Venning was kept out of his increase for three years. Mr. Cunningham has $50 besides the regular increase. As I have stated, he is a technical officer.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you regard him as having technical knowledge, if he has been a clerk in the department steadily getting the regular increase ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Cunningham is from the old country. He has special work to perform, and the experience he has acquired in the department entitles him to a larger salary. He is inspector of fish-breeding establishments, having made a special study of that branch of the work. What I say for one is applicable to the others ; that is, that these increases are either to correct an injustice that has been done or to render justice to officials who, in any other department of the public service, would be entitled to the salaries that I have thought proper to allow them. I do not know them personally, except those with whom I come in contact, like Mr. Venning, Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Clement. The others have been recommended by the deputy minister ; and, after considering their cases, I came to the conclusion to recommend the increases.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to these increases ; but I rise for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that we contended that great injustice had been done to many members of the civil service for several years after the hon. gentleman's friends came in, by depriving them of the statutory increases to which they were entitled ; and now the hon. gentleman proposes to make those increases up. We have had sharp arguments on this subject in previous years, and I am glad that the ministers now recognize that they were wrong in the past. If they had followed the practice of their predecessors, it would not have been necessary to make such large increases at the present time. Most of these employees would have reached the salaries they are getting by means of the ordinary annual increases instead of getting these increases in a lump sum.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not cast any blame on anybody. I found the cases to be as I have stated, and I tried to deal with them to the best of my knowledge and judgment.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman will not try to fix the blame on anybody, but it is our duty to fix it on the parties who are blameworthy, and that is the hon. gentleman's friends.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I would ask my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), if he considers that the Liberal party have neglected certain officials for five years, what would he think of the former party, who neglected to give certain officials their statutory increases for eighteen years ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know of any such cases. I think the hon. gentleman is drawing on his imagination for his alleged facts.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I beg to correct the hon. gentleman. I can give the names of the individuals. I know them perfectly well.

Mr. HENDERSON. Keep them till next week.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What work are we to take up on Monday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We may take up first one or two Bills which stand in the name of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and then go into Committee of Supply. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in his place we will give his estimates priority, as he is not able to be present in the evening. I would like to be free, however, from this time to take anything in the estimates, because they are narrowed down to small limits. I shall be glad to indicate those we prefer.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, October 12, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

REVISED STATUTES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 265) respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). What progress has been made with the revision of the statutes and is it expected that the revision will be so far completed as to enable the law to be enacted by parliament next session ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am not quite sure that it will have progressed that far, but very substantial progress has been made. Over forty statutes have been completely revised and thirty-seven adopted. I expect that in December, more than one-third will be completed. I am not sure that the revision will be completed for next session but it will be in the interval between next session and the session after.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NORTH ATLANTIC TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask my right hon. friend whether or not the contract with the North Atlantic Transportation Company has been laid on the Table ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not yet. There has been no formal contract, but correspondence which we have assumed to amount to a contract will be placed on the Table perhaps to-morrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman promised to make an announcement with respect to further government measures.

The PRIME MINISTER. I shall make it to-morrow.

ALASKA BOUNDARY.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask my right hon. friend the Prime Minister whether or not he has taken any steps to verify the accuracy of the alleged interview with Mr. Aylesworth, one of the commissioners on the Alaska boundary question. I have not the telegraphic report at hand, but it contains rather extraordinary observations with regard to his duties as commissioner and also with regard to his views on matters now the subject of political controversy in the United Kingdom. It seems to me rather unusual, and I decline to believe that Mr. Aylesworth could have used the language attributed to him ; but inasmuch as the interview has been cabled cross the Atlantic—I am not sure whether by the New Canada Press Association or not—and has been commented on throughout the country to a considerable extent, it seems to me desirable that the government should ascertain whether or not it is accurate, and if not, inform the public and the country.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government have taken no steps to ascertain whether this alleged interview has taken place or not. We assume that this interview had not the character attributed to it. Mr. Aylesworth is a counsel of very great eminence, and I would hestitate to believe—and I think my hon. friend would have equal hesitation—that he would have expressed any opinion on a matter which is sub-judice and in which he himself is one of the judges. The language attributed to him is very improbable and until I hear to the contrary and have some better ground for believing that Mr. Aylesworth has so expressed himself, I shall believe that this interview, like many others, was not an expression of the views of Mr. Aylesworth.

QUESTIONS.

THE CLERGUE WORKS.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario)—by Mr. Heyd—asked :

1. Did the government grant a contract to the Clergue works at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, for the supply of steel rails for the use of the Intercolonial Railway ?
2. What quantity of rails was contracted for?
3. What quantity of rails was delivered ?
4. Why were not the full quantities contracted for taken ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

1. Yes, to the Lake Superior Power Company.

2. An Order in Council was passed authorizing the taking of 25,000 tons per annum for a period of five years on terms therein stated. A contract was entered into for the first year for 25,000 tons. The company were not able to supply any rails under this contract.

3. Subsequently it was agreed that the company should supply 10,000 tons, but all that they were able to deliver were 5,768 tons.

4. The full quantities authorized were not taken because the company were unable to supply them. The government took all that were offered.

IMPERIAL SERVICE DECORATIONS AND MEDALS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. What system was followed by the government in selecting the members of the civil service who recently had the honour of receiving the Imperial Service decoration and medals ?

2. What are the names of the officials who have been recommended by the government, and on whom the decoration will be conferred ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand that my hon. friend is asking what recommendations have been made and what appointments are to be made. I can only give information regarding past appointments.

Mr. CLARKE. Will not the right hon. gentleman answer the second question, and give the list of names ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The second question refers to future appointments : 'What are the names of the officials who have been recommended by the government, and on whom the decoration will be conferred.'

Mr. CLARKE. The second question refers to the names of those who 'have been recommended,' and on whom the decoration will be conferred. The announcement has been made that it is the intention to confer this decoration on the day of prorogation, on those who have been recommended.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would ask my hon. friend not to rely on such information.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY--MANAGEMENT OF THE HOSPITAL.

Mr. LEMIEUX by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Is the honourable the Minister of Justice aware that the grand jury summoned for the September criminal term of the Court of King's Bench, for the district of Montreal, made a report blaming the management of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary for the manner in which the hospital of that institution is kept ?

2. Is it true that the hospital of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary is conducted in a manner that conflicts with every law of hygiene ?

3. Has the inspector of the penitentiary made a special report to that effect ?

4. What is the nature of that report ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) :

1. No, but the minister has read the report as published in the newspapers.

2. No, quite the contrary. The hospital contains three wards. One isolated on the upper story for contagious diseases, one for ordinary patients, and one for convalescents to exercise in. All are well lighted, by large windows during the day, and by electric light at night. They are thoroughly ventilated, comfortably heated and scrupulously clean. There is not a trace of damp. The floors are of hardwood, the bedsteads of iron, white enamelled, with spring and fibre mattresses. None of the patients sleep on the floor, as stated in the report referred to.

3. No.

4. The hospital was renovated in 1900. That year the warden reported :

The old hospital, as improved, affords to-day the accommodation so much needed in the past by patients, and if they have not the conveniences accessible in the Kingston penitentiary, they have at least improvements which afford them the hygienic means necessary to the recovery of their health. The isolating hospital for contagious diseases has already rendered important services in preventing contagion. A convict has passed through the phases of typhoid fever of an adynamic type. The state of this patient has caused the physician great uneasiness, but, thanks to isolation, the contagion has not, so far, claimed any other victims. (Page 19, report of Minister of Justice, 1900).

The surgeon reported :

At last our old hospital has been repaired and improved, and has been at the service of the sick since the middle of May. (Page 40, same report).

In 1901 the inspector reported :

The hospital is inconveniently located, but has been improved by the addition of a ward that doubles its original capacity.

LIBRARIANS OF PARLIAMENT. REGISTRARS OF THE SUPREME COURT—SALARIES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions :

1. Resolved, that the salaries of the general librarian and the parliamentary librarian of the library of parliament, and the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada shall each be $3,500 per annum ; with an annual increase of $100, up to a maximum of $4,000 per annum.

2. Resolved, that for the purpose of determining the salary of the officers at present occupying the said positions, each shall be credited with his period of service ; and shall hereafter be paid such salary as he would by length of service have become entitled to, had the provision of the next preceding resolution been in force at the time of his appointment.

3. Resolved, that during the financial year ending June 30th, 1904, there may be paid, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, such sums as are required for payment of the foregoing increases.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General approves of these resolutions, and recommends them to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—ALASKA BOUNDARY COMMISSION—OPINION OF BRITISH COMMISSIONER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the government to a statement which I see in several of the morning papers with regard to the Alaska arbitration now proceeding in Great Britain. The item is as follows:

Toronto, Oct. 10.—The 'News' special cable from London says: 'I am informed on what may be accepted as high authority that a majority of the Alaskan commission will shortly give judgment adverse to the Canadian contention. It is understood that Great Britain's representative on the commission, Lord Alverstone, has privately intimated to diplomatic and colonial office officials that he is convinced that a stronger case is made out by the United States, and that he intends to give judgment accordingly. A majority of the commission will thus agree upon a verdict and the two Canadian commissioners will, if they register in the issue, be unable to affect the result.'

I have quoted from the Ottawa 'Morning Citizen,' but I have seen the same item in one or two other newspapers. I am sure that the House and the country will be very glad to learn if there is any information that the government can communicate to the House on the subject.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I think this so antecedently improbable and almost impossible, that it does not require the slightest consideration at the hands of the government or any member of this House. I cannot conceive it possible that a person in the position of Lord Alverston could have committed himself in advance to delivering judgment in any such way as is stated in this despatch.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—PETITIONS AGAINST NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion for supply is carried, I would ask whether or not the Committee on Privileges and Elections has been summoned to meet. I mentioned this matter to the right hon. Prime Minister on Saturday. He said that he would have some intimation to make later on, after—I think he said—having consulted with the chairman of the committee. It is usual, I understand, to have the Committee on Privileges and Elections summoned immediately after any matter has been referred to them. That course does not seem to have been pursued in this case.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I will call the attention of the Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to the matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is absent from the city.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I understand that Mr. Wade, the chairman of the committee is absent, but I will call attention to the matter. I am not aware of the circumstances that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has alluded to. I supposed it was with reference to the petitions.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion for Committee of Supply is carried, I would like to say that there is a matter to be brought up by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) on going into supply. But I understand that it is more convenient for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) to proceed with his estimates this morning. We have every disposition to meet the right hon. gentleman's convenience, with the understanding, of course, that the House will be moved into supply later on.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I believe it will be agreeable to bring the matter up on going into Committee of Supply, at three o'clock.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—additional to service between Great Britain and Canada, $25,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). This is for the purpose of meeting any possible additional subsidy that may be required under our contract with the Allans. We pay by steamer, and the rates vary, therefore, it is not always possible to ascertain in advance exactly how much will be paid. Of late, I may say the service has considerably improved. The 'Tunisian' and the 'Bavarian' have been making, during the last three or four months, very fair rates of speed from Rimouski to Moville and back.

Mr. SPROULE. What is their general rate of speed?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The general rate of speed by the steamers I have referred to is about 14 knots; the others about 12½ knots.

Mr. SPROULE. The contract seems to be on a sort of sliding scale. Is it according to the number of trips made?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. According to the quality of the vessels employed. The 'Bavarian' and 'Tunisian' receives £750 in summer and £1,000 in winter. For the other steamers it is about £500 each way. The subsidy, as the hon. gentleman can see, varies a good deal according to the number of trips made by the superior class of vessels. For a considerable time we had only one. Now we have the 'Tunisian,' the 'Bavarian' and the 'Parisian'—the last named having been much improved and now able to make better passage than heretofore.

Mr. SPROULE. According to this, I assume that the minister has not made provision for the maximum outlay ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Heretofore there has been a sum which has been available for this service—about $25,000, under the head of service from St. John to Liverpool. That has been dropped. So, this is practically no increase, because, in the past we were able to use this $25,000 in addition to the $150,000 voted for this service.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we correct in understanding that the vote heretofore given to vessels by St. John via. Newfoundland to the old country has been dropped ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, there was no vote for exactly that service. There was another vote. That vote to which my hon. friend refers is a vote of $20,000, not from St. John's, if my memory serves me, but from Halifax to St. John's, Newfoundland, and thence to Liverpool. That vote remains. When that was originally granted there was no calling at St. John's. It remained for a considerable time, and was not nearly used, except for the purpose of supplementing the vote to the Allan service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose it is through not clearly understanding the circumstances that I do not comprehend the necessity of the additional $25,000. Is it occasioned by putting on another boat, or is it occasioned by the fact that the sum paid to the Messrs. Allan is on a sliding scale ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, on a sliding scale, dependent on the speed and quality of the boat. Two of their boats receive a much better sum than the other. The 'Bavarian' and the 'Tunisian' are paid very much more than the inferior vessels employed. But of late they have been employing better vessels. The close of the South African war released a number of those craft, and we are now getting a better service.

Additional for steam service between St. John, N.B., and Glasgow, during winter of 1903-4, $7,500.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Hon. gentlemen will observe that a similar sum is in the main estimates for the service heretofore run. We propose to double that service, and give a corresponding sum, the total of which will be about $15,000. That service has been of considerable use in bringing us into communication with Glasgow and the population round about.

Mr. SPROULE. How many vessels are they giving ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have a fortnightly service instead of a monthly service. They carry mails if any are tendered by the post office, but, of course, the mail service is not a very important portion. To all intents and purposes they are freight boats.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they cold storage apparatus ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They have summer accommodation. But the hon. gentleman will observe that this is a winter service. There is not much of a perishable nature carried by them during winter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the character of the freight, and is there any return freight ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is of a very mixed character, all sorts of general cargo. They fill up with deals if they can get nothing else. They also carry large quantities of produce of various kinds. The return cargo is not large. It consists chiefly I am told of articles of iron and things of that kind. But the great difficulty we have to contend with, and the reason for giving more money in these subsidies, lies in the fact that the return cargo is generally very small. Still this service is of use in that it brings us into direct communication with a large and important centre of population in Scotland. In Glasgow and the surrounding district there is a population of a million and a quarter. It is a matter of considerable moment to us to have direct communication with these people for the purpose of facilitating the sale of Canadian products. I think the money has been pretty well spent.

Mr. CLARKE. Do American exporters make use of these ships to send their produce in competition with our own ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is chiefly in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am sorry to say they are not very much overburdened with cargoes. They take what they can get.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any contract made with this company which prevents them from discriminating in freight rates ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is some regulation of that kind.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any provision made by which the exporters of Chicago, for instance, shall not get better rates than those of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton or any other points ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a provision that they shall not discriminate against Canadian shippers.

Mr. CLARKE. Can we see that provision before we adopt the item ? It is a matter of importance to the people of Canada, who are subsidizing these vessels, that greater facilities shall not be given American exporters by means of lower freight rates than are given to our own people.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will send for the provision.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like the item to stand until we get it.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the regulation should provide that not only should there be no discrimination, but that we should have a preference. What is the good of Canada paying out subsidies to steamship lines if we do not get any preference in rates ? If the Americans can come in here and compete with us in using these lines, what is the use of paying out Canadian money to subsidize these vessels to carry American freight ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is difficult to get a cargo as it is. It would not help Canadian freighters if you prevented discrimination.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am talking about giving a preference. If we give a large subvention, why should we not have a preference ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is not a large subvention, it is an extremely small subsidy.

Mr. CLARKE. I think it would be better to give even a larger subsidy and to get a discrimination in favour of our own exporters.

Item allowed to stand.

Additional for steam communication during the season of 1903, between the mainland and the Magdalen Islands, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is a provision to double the accommodation heretofore afforded to these islands. The service for a long time was run weekly, and we paid $9,000 for it. They are now running semi-weekly, and they receive this additional remuneration. The boats are the 'Amelia' and the 'Lunenburg.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the mainland ports ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Pictou and Souris.

Mr. SPROULE. Are we doing much trade with the Magdalen Islands ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. A fair amount. Of course, with a double service we may expect to do more trade.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the nature of the imports and exports ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Magdalen Islands belong to us. They send their fish down, and whatever is required for the use of the Magdalen population goes to them by this route. They have no other means of communication whatever.

Mr. CLARKE. It is only fair that assistance should be given to the islands.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the population of the island ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. About 7,000 altogether.

Steam communication between Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton and Newfoundland, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is for the purpose of encouraging communication from Sydney to Prince Edward Island and incidentally to Newfoundland. I may observe that this vote, which is for $8,000 is granted partly in consideration of the reduction of the subsidy voted for a service between Prince Edward Island and Great Britain. We were giving them $10,000 but it was found very difficult to get a sufficient number of steamers. The vote has been reduced to $5,000 and in lieu of that we are proposing a service between Sydney and Prince Edward Island. That will be practically $3,000 of an increase on the two votes.

Mr. HACKETT. From what points in Prince Edward Island will this service be maintained ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Between Charlottetown and Sydney.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How frequent a service is proposed between these two ports ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Our intention is to have a weekly service when the new contract is made.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the steamer been selected ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, we have not been able to conclude our arrangements until we got the money.

Mr. HACKETT. Would it not be possible to include Summerside in this arrangement ? The steamers that will perform this service will likely belong to some lines running between Montreal and Newfoundland. They pass Summerside and why not include Summerside ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall be very pleased to do so if I can obtain the service. This, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) will observe is a new vote and we have not as yet been able to come to close quarters on the subject as to the number of places to be called at, but I will be very glad to include Summerside if I can possibly manage it.

Additional for steam service during the season of 1903 between Sydney, C.B., and Bay St. Lawrence and way ports, $500.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This service is being a little enlarged. We have a service at present and we now propose to run it as far as St. Anne's bay. The steamer is the 'Weymouth.'

Mr. SPROULE. How do you come to put that item in here? When does your financial year end?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is for the season. They have been giving the service on the understanding that we will put in the item.

Mr. SPROULE. It should be in the supplementary estimates for the year ending 1903.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, it is for the season and the season will not end until December.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How frequent will this service be?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is a weekly service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is Bay St. Lawrence?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is in Victoria county.

Steam service between Canada and Australia, $194,666.66.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any provision made in this contract that as a condition of our giving this subsidy there shall be no discrimination in rates in favour of American exporters as to the goods which they send to Australia?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it not be well to supply the committee with that provision or arrangement?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think I brought it down. This is a repetition of the former vote we passed in the supplementary estimates for 1903, and I think, if the hon. gentleman will refer back, he will see that information was given.

Mr. CLARKE. The right hon. gentleman may be correct, but if there is a provision of that kind, it can easily be brought down.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, there is no objection. This formerly was a statutory vote, but the statute has expired and in place of making it statutory we are now putting it in the ordinary estimates.

Mr. CLARKE. What will be the amount of our contribution?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There was an addition made last year, partly paid by ourselves and partly paid by Australia and Fiji.

Mr. CLARKE. How much of the addition are we contributing?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. About £10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Do these boats carry the mail?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any arrangement for cold storage or for special freight storage?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There are arrangements for cold storage.

Mr. SPROULE. In how many of the boats?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think in all. The boats are the 'Aorangi,' the 'Miowera,' and the 'Moana.'

Mr. SPROULE. There are three vessels. How many trips do they make in the season?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There are sailings once every four weeks. A pretty considerable trade is being developed with Australia and it is an increasing trade as far as our exports are concerned. The imports are not so large.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the trade of any considerable importance or is it increasing?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The total amount of our exports was $2,586,554 to Australia.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And our imports?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are very small. They amount to some $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I drew the attention of the minister some years ago to the fact, that while our Canadian commissioners in these countries are promoting the question of Canadian manufactures and products, they might devote some time to the question of getting imports from these countries for Canada. For instance, in the matter of hides, Australia is a large exporter, and I believe we could profitably import hides direct from our sister colony. We should, I think, have a monthly freight service established from eastern Canada —the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John—and I am satisfied that if we did so, millions of dollars worth of hides could be imported from these colonies rather than from foreign countries which have antagonistic tariffs against us. These hides are now taken largely to Holland and are then distributed to England and to Canada. I understand that at the present time, the Canadian service goes monthly, and the American service monthly also from the Pacific coast to Australia.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The American service goes tri-monthly from San Francisco.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am satisfied that a large and profitable trade could be developed between Canada and Australia, even if we had sailing vessels plying from eastern Canadian to Australian ports. At present our exports have to be shipped across the continent to Vancouver, and the rail rates for such a long haul are absolutely prohibitive. If we could send vessels around the Horn from our eastern ports to Australia, it would be a great benefit to both countries. Has the minister given that his consideration ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have ; but I am afraid any subsidy it would be within our power to give, would hardly produce the results which the hon. gentleman desires. We are doing a very decent export trade with Australia, but our import trade is very small ; only $152,000 last year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A profitable trade could be done in furniture, if we could ship it direct to Australia, but it is impossible to send it by rail to Vancouver.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The journey from eastern Canada to Australia is nearly half around the globe; about 12,000 miles.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am aware of that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It would be a very long journey, and would require, I am afraid, a very steep subsidy.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The distance from Australia to eastern Canada is not so great as from Australia and New Zealand to German ports, and yet I was able to give figures some time ago to show, that the rates from Sydney, Australia, to Hamburg, on hides were less than the rates on the same articles from Chicago to Bracebridge, or other ports in Ontario by rail. I should think that the rates from Australia to eastern Canada would be less than from Australia to German ports.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. When the Australian commonwealth begins to find its feet a little more, they may join with us.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Of course I do not expect it to come about in a minute.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would expect more assistance from them than they have been hitherto giving, because that trade which the hon. gentleman speaks of would be to their advantage as well as ours.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Certainly.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have directed the attention of our agents to this matter, and possibly something may come of it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). The great drawback is that our export trade has to be sent across the continent to Vancouver for shipment, and the railway freights must necessarily prevent anything like a large trade being done. You have either to send by rail to Vancouver or ship to New York, and when you ship to New York you cannot compete with the American exporters. If we had monthly steamers from Montreal, Quebec, St. John or Halifax, as the case may be, our trade with the commonwealth would be immense. I know of one firm that is ready to take a shipment of 3,000 tons of paper right away if they could only get it shipped direct from Canada. Ordinary furniture could be exported in what is called 'knock-down' shape to be painted and put together when it arrives in Australia. Carriages of different descriptions, window sashes and doors, and other Canadian manufactures would find a ready market in Australia, because the tariff on most of the articles which we could export to that country is only 15 per cent. This is a question which is worthy of all consideration. I should hope that the Australian government would supplement our grants to steamers. I am happy to say that the condition of Australia is improving very rapidly at present. The recent rains there have been most beneficial, and the reports are that there will be very large and profitable crops in the commonwealth this year.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the minister aware of the policy of the United States in respect to subsidizing vessels to different ports ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think they grant any subsidies to the lines to Australia.

Mr. BLAIN. What is their general policy with respect to subsidies.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That matter has been under consideration in congress a good deal, but I do not think they have as yet formulated any policy. They have talked a good deal about granting subsidies, but unless it be to the Philippines, or some of their own possessions, I do not think they have granted them in the fashion we have granted them.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister any information with respect to the trade between the United States and Australia ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is considerably larger than ours ; it is perhaps $8,000,000 or $10,000,000. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asked what were the provisions as to discrimination. The terms are as follows :

All passengers or freight that may be offered, or that can reasonably be procured, at rates which shall not be in excess of such maximum rates as are fixed by the minister, should it be advisable so to fix such maximum rates. And in no case shall any discrimination be made as regards rates, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, against Canadian merchants, or shippers who shall always have precedence for their freight and goods over all other merchants and shippers.

And it is agreed and understood that the freight rates on eastbound trips sailing from St. John, N.B., as hereinbefore provided on bills of lading through to Glasgow, Scotland, from any place in the province of Ontario, or Quebec or from any Canadian points further west, shall in no case be greater than from the same place to Glasgow via any United States route or port; and on west bound trips the rates from Glasgow to any point in Ontario or Quebec or other Canadian points further west, shall be as favourable as by any United States route or port to the same place.

Mr. CLARKE. If I apprehend the meaning of what the minister has read that makes provision that the rate collected from any point in Canada via this route shall not be greater than via New York or Boston.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Or any other United States port.

Mr. CLARKE. What we are aiming at is to prevent discrimination as between Toronto or Hamilton or London or Stratford and Chicago or Detroit or any points west of these cities.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think that can be met under this contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Complaints have been made again and again that rates are given via Montreal, Quebec or St. John from Chicago——

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. By this line ?

Mr. CLARKE. By lines running from Montreal and St. John—that rates are given from Chicago to Liverpool that are much lower than the rates charged from Stratford, Hamilton, Toronto, or other great industrial exporting points in Canada, and there is no provision in this contract, if I apprehend the meaning of the words, to prevent such a condition of things. In the item which we are discussing, the steamship service to Australia, it is an indisputable fact, and the United States returns will establish it, that the exports of American products to Australia are increasing by leaps and bounds. It would surely be bad policy on our part to give these enormous subsidies to establish a line of steamers from Vancouver to Australia if it is found that the owners of these ships make better rates for goods going from American points, Chicago and points in the eastern states, than are given to our exports from Quebec and Ontario ? We are actually paying a bonus to these companies to give an advantage to our competitors.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will send me any detailed instance in which that has occurred, I will inquire into it at once.

Mr. CLARKE. I think it is the duty of the right hon. gentleman to see that this is not done.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not know that anything of the kind has occurred.

Mr. CLARKE. I believe it can be established.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Well, then establish it.

Mr. CLARKE. I am not prepared to establish it at the present time, but I think that we should be sympathized with instead of being attacked for asking for information.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman has a perfect right to ask for information.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the right hon. minister, in asking this $200,000, prepared to say what the rates are from any New England point, say Boston or New York, as compared with those from Toronto or Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have not that information with me but I can get it.

Mr. CLARKE. Perhaps it would be well to let the item stand until the right hon. gentleman is prepared to give that information. I have heard again and again that goods from Boston are shipped at a lower rate via this route to Australia than goods from Montreal or Toronto.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman will produce any evidence on that point we will have the matter investigated at once.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely if the right hon. gentleman is as jealous and zealous as he should be to guard the trade of Canada he should have all these particulars at his finger ends.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is the business of parties who have complaints to make, to make them and to give their evidence. They have not done so in this case.

Mr. CLARKE. The right hon. gentleman admits that he has no information on the matter and is not prepared to say what the freight rates are between these points ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I did not say that.

Mr. CLARKE. He made that admission a moment ago.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have repeatedly in this House, even during this session, called attention to this matter and the right hon. gentleman promised across the floor of the House that he would look into it. I did not bring up the Australian case but I did bring up the fact that goods are shipped via Canadian steamboat lines to Liverpool at cheaper rates from western United States points than from the town in which I live and other Ontario points. The minister promised to look into these rates, to have them printed and laid before the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman had nothing to say about the Australian rates.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I brought up the rates to England from Canada and the fact that the American farmer, who has never contributed one cent in bonuses to these railways and steamship lines, sends his freight by them to England and lands his grain there at a cost of five to ten cents a bushel less than what it costs the people of the county from which I come, who have taxed themselves hundreds of thousands of dollars to pay for these railway and steamship lines.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The agreement which the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been good enough to place in my hand provides that the steamship line is to handle :

All passengers or freight that may be offered, or that can reasonably be procured, at rates which shall not be in excess of such maximum rates as are fixed by the minister should he deem it advisable so to fix such maximum rates ; and in no case shall any discrimination be made as regards rates, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, against Canadian merchants, or shippers who shall always have precedence for their freight and goods over all other merchants and shippers.

I would suggest that the difficulty raised by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) would hardly be met by that clause, for it simply deals with discrimination against Canadian merchants or shippers and not with rates from points in Canada as distinguished from the United States.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Read a little further.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then the contract proceeds as follows :

And it is agreed and understood that freight rates on eastbound trips sailing from St. John, N.B., as hereinbefore provided on bills of lading through to Glasgow, Scotland, from any place in the province of Ontario, or Quebec or from any Canadian points further west, shall in no case be greater than from the same place to Glasgow via any United States route or port; and on west bound trips the rates from Glasgow to any point in Ontario or Quebec or other Canadian points further west, shall be as favourable as by any United States route or port to the same place.

The remaining portion of the clause relates altogether to cargoes of lumber or timber and prescribes the proportion which can be carried. So, it seems to me, that this portion of the clause will hardly cover what my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has spoken of, because it merely provides that the rate from any place in Ontario or Quebec shall not be greater by this route than by a United States route. What my hon. friend from Toronto is dealing with is this. He alleges that he has been credibly informed that rates from Chicago or other United States points in the west via these lines are lower than from corresponding points in Ontario and the west via the same lines. That is quite different from anything specially provided for in the contract. Do I make myself clear ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Quite clear.

Mr. CLARKE. When the question of transportation was discussed whole pages of rates were presented to the House by hon. gentlemen who were familiar with the question. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Maclaren) gave the schedules of rates from his own district points, Stratford, and, I think, Listowel.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I rather misunderstood the point my hon. friend is taking. The point he is now taking, I understand, is that in fixing through-rates from Chicago the railway or steamship company might charge less than from Canadian points. He is aware that that is an excessively difficult question to deal with. He is also aware that these vessels, as a rule, go out of St. John scarcely ever with full cargoes. They are obliged to fill up with deals and other commodities of that kind. How far it would benefit us to interfere it is a very difficult question to answer.

Mr. CLARKE. I admit that, but I submit that the situation is a peculiar one, to say the least. The people of Ontario are willing that we should vote reasonable subsidies to assist the shipping trade in the maritime provinces, but we are being handicaped in the matter of exports, if the allegations I have made are correct. If we desire to transport cattle, cheese or butter by these subsidized vessels, we have to pay greater freight rates from points in Ontario to Liverpool than are given to our competitors who reside in the United States and bill their products from Chicago. In the clause which the right hon. gentleman read to us, there is no provision to guard against this discrimination. We not only pay a subsidy, but higher rates are charged our shippers than are charged our competitors in Chicago. The same condition applies with regard to exports from the New England states to Australia and the east. Lower rates are charged than our Canadian shippers have to pay. This should be remedied. If we subsidize these lines, Canadian exporters should not have to pay higher rates, but should be treated with at least equal consideration with those of the United States.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is quite right. The point he makes is one worthy of serious consideration, but I would point this out to him as a business man. Here we are endeavouring to build up this export trade from the maritime provinces. These people complain of the low subsidies given. They state with truth that a great deal of this trade from St. John is carried with a loss. If there was the slightest disposition to give a preference to American goods over ours, we have taken power in the contract to prevent that. But does the hon. gentleman think that we would benefit by prohibiting the shipping of American goods by that route and sending them to United States ports instead of St. John or Halifax ? We can easily prohibit the export of American stuff through our lines and over our railways, but I fail to see how that would benefit us.

Mr. CLARKE. According to the hon. gentleman these ships do not take full cargoes, so that there is room in them for Canadian and other exports. It is an anomalous condition that we should subsidize steamers, and then find these steamers utilized by our American competitors at lower freight rates. That condition should not be continued.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What would you suggest ?

Mr. CLARKE. I would suggest a larger subsidy and prevent discrimination in rates, or cut off the subsidy.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That might be done, but the House would have to go to a far heavier expenditure than we are now making. Take a steamer 2,000 tons, and suppose she has 1,200 tons of cargo from Canadian shippers. If she has not more than the 1,200 she will be obliged to charge the Canadian exporter with heavier rates in proportion than if she were filled up from other quarters. And while you can compel American products to be sent by their own ports if you like, still, I am bound to say, unless we undertake a very much larger expenditure than we have undertaken, and larger, I think, than my hon. friend contemplates or would approve, we shall find it very difficult to deal with that particular question. He knows that the matter of the through-freight from competitive points—Chicago, for instance—is one of the greatest problems that are presented for consideration in connection with this whole transportation question. Now, if we desire that our people shall have the preference if they have stuff to sell, I am not clear, though the matter deserves consideration, that we can well help ourselves.

Mr. CLARKE. If we have a steamer of 2,000 tons burden and only 1,200 tons of Canadian produce offers for her cargo, surely the people of Canada are paying the subsidy to have that 1,200 tons carried to market. If the vessel carries a full cargo what is the balance made up of ? It is made up of products which are to enter into competition in the common market with the Canadian products. And this American freight is sent to our ports only because the rate is lower than the rate by American ports. Surely this is an anomalous condition of things—that the people of Canada should pay, in the first place, a subsidy to a vessel to take our products across the Atlantic, and then pay a higher rate than those who have products to sell in competition with ours, and who are not called upon to pay any share of the subsidy.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Well, to continue the illustration of my hon. friend, how would the people of Canada benefit if we compel this 800 tons of American products to go by New York ? They would enter into competition with Canadian products just as much as they do now, and the shipmaster would be obliged to charge a higher rate on the Canadian products than he now charges. I do not deny that the position is awkward and anomalous. But I point out the very great difficulties in the way of solving the problem which the hon. gentleman speaks of unless by undertaking a very heavy expenditure, and, in any case, preventing competition.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce has misunderstood the position of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). The hon. member does not want to prohibit the carrying of American freight, but I think he desires that the freight rates on the American goods shall not be less than on the same class of goods sent from Canada. In other words, we should not bonus the steamer to take Canadian goods to foreign ports and then allow that steamer to call at American ports and take similar commodities at lower rates.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. None of these steamers call at American ports.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would be well for the minister, I think, to look into this matter of the freight rates. I believe there is a good deal in the contention that our subsidized lines are carrying American products at lower rates than they give to Canadians. Of course, they say that when they take freight at Chicago to be carried through, they have to take it at what rates they can get, and that it does not hurt the Canadian shipper whatever those rates may be. But, at the same time, if they can carry American products at 20 cents per hundred pounds I do not see any reason why they should carry Canadian products at 30 cents per 100 pounds for the same class of freight. I find also that subsidized lines running from Canadian to other ports are very loath to meet competition. I would instance the Pickford & Black lines from Halifax to the West Indies. They are obliged to meet competition from New York, but they do not meet it until the last protest is entered. They do meet it finally, but they are a long while about it, and as soon as an excuse offers, they raise the rates again. They may carry flour for the Americans for 20 cents a barrel and there is no reason why they should not do the same for Canadians. If they receive a subsidy from this parliament, then, we shoud make it a condition that they shall carry Canadian produce at as low rates as those they give to the Americans. If the minister would inquire into this and see that such a condition is carried out, I believe it will be only fair and would be in the interest of Canadian trade. But I advise him that it takes a good deal of vigilance, to have such a condition carried into effect. They are very wary and you have to be constantly ascertaining what the freight rates are at Chicago and you have to be always on the alert.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The rate is made by rail and water. The steamships themselves do not carry freight for the round rate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They 'divvy up' with the railways. There is an understanding between the railways and the steamship companies. This would be a matter well worthy of the minister's careful consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. The discrimination in freight rates does not necessarily affect the Canadian shipper in the market to which the goods are sent. Of course, if the American shipper undersells the Canadian by reason of the discrimination, then of course the discrimination is a matter that very injuriously affects the Canadian. But if that is not so, I do not see how the Canadian shipper is very much injured by reason of American freight going through the Canadian channels. On the other hand, it helps us to get the service of a less subsidy than we should get it for if American freights were not allowed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) has hit the exact difficulty of the situation. I have made inquiries and, so far as I can learn, competition on the other side of the water is not affected by what goes through by these steamers. Everybody knows that the amount of American produce which goes to England is enormous; and it is so enormous that the comparative trifle that goes by those lines does not affect the prices.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is another point that should not be lost sight of, and which goes to benefit our friends in the maritime provinces. There is, for instance, a rate from a western Canadian point to St. John. There is a through-rate from that western Canadian point to Liverpool. In that case, the through railway rate to St. John would be less than the direct railway rate to St. John. On reaching St. John, an arrangement is made with the agent of the steamship company by which, for some trifle, these goods are not taken across the water but are taken out and disposed of to the merchants of St. John and other places. In that way the merchant profits by the difference between the through-rate and the local rate to St. John, which amounts to something considerable. I understand that this practice is carried on to a very considerable extent not only in our Canadian seaports but in American seaports as well. I think the minister could make his department, if he intends remaining in it, one of the most beneficial in the whole service to the public, if he would take hold of these freight rates, both through-rates and rates in bond and make comparisons, and publish them to the shippers of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in the contract which was read that the minister has the right to make a maximum freight rate. Has he done so?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As a rule these people have all been complaining that the route is not a profitable one, and that the rates they maintain are so low that they can hardly make the two ends meet. From inquiries I have made I think that for some time, until a trade is built up, it will hardly be advisable to exercise that power. I have made careful inquiry into the question. Hon. gentlemen will understand, without dwelling on the subject, which is one of some delicacy, that to attempt to build up our winter ports has its difficulties. They are at a longer distance from the Canadian centres of production than the American ports, and we must make some considerable concessions in order to draw trade of that nature. Take the case of goods going from Montreal. If they go to Portland, it is scarcely 300 miles; if they go to St. John by the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is 500 miles; if they go from Halifax I think it is about 750 miles by the shortest possible route from Montreal. These are geological difficulties, and can be palliated by legislation but cannot be removed. Up to the present time I think there has been a gratifying increase in trade from the maritime provinces, particularly from St. John. Still, trade has to be conducted under a good many difficulties, some of which we hope to remove. Some of those difficulties are discrimination in the matter of insurance, which is higher than it ought to be. Still we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that we are working to some extent, I must say, against natural obstacles, and therefore we have not attempted to cut down the rates that they can obtain.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that if it be found that less rates are charged to American shippers than to Canadian shippers the government would be justified in making a maximum rate above which they should not charge Canadian shippers, because we pay a portion of the cost of running those lines, whereas the Americans pay no portion.

Mr. CLARKE. I make bold to say that if the right hon. gentleman will instruct the officers of his department to make inquiry as to through-rates from the New England states, and the through-rates from Chicago to Liverpool and Glasgow, he will find that the statements made here are fully borne out by his officers. If that is found to be the case, I think it deserves the serious attention of the right hon. gentleman and that he should see that such discrimination no longer continues against Canadian shippers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That will be a matter for the House seriously to consider. But absolutely to refuse American goods coming to our various ports is a thing I would hesitate to recommend to the House.

Mr. CLARKE. I point out the anomaly, that we continue to pay these subsidies when they are practically used against us.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is quite true that from such points as Chicago, where there is a vigorous competition for European trade, the anomaly does exist.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The question is not without difficulties, some of which have been pointed out by the right hon. gentleman. But I should hardly think they point to the necessity of a prohibition of the vessels from carrying American goods at those rates. The position of the right hon. gentleman seems to be this, that if you fix rates from Chicago equal to those which are paid from corresponding Canadian points, the result would be that having strong competition from Chicago, you would not get the cargo which is now procured. That would seem to be the position of the right hon. gentleman. No doubt many complicated matters have to be considered, to some of which he has alluded, that is to say, that if you do not take this freight which is offered from Chicago you increase the cost, it may be argued, to Canadian shippers, because you take that much away from the net earnings of the vessels crossing the Atlantic. However that may be, it certainly does seem an anomaly that while the Canadian government is paying a certain subsidy to these steamships—in this case it happens to be about $15,000 a year, but the same principle would apply to cases where the subsidy is much greater—it does seem to me an anomaly at least, whether it can be corrected to the advantage of the country or not, that Canadian shippers should pay on that line subsidized by their own money a higher rate of freight than that which is paid from corresponding points in the United States. I think my right hon. friend recognizes that as an anomaly.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I admit it, but my hon. friend will also recognize the difficulties that I have pointed out. You are between Scylla and Charybdis, very often, in matters of this kind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Something like it is presented in the transportation problem which has been investigated by the United States Railway Commissioners. This subject has also evidently been under the consideration of this government in drafting the Railway Commission Bill which we had this year, because it is obvious that certain provisions in that Bill contemplated circumstances of this kind. I think the right hon. gentleman should take the representations of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) into careful consideration, and ascertain whether it is possible to remove this great anomaly, one which must be considered a grievance by Canadian shippers, because they naturally feel that there is no reason why they should pay higher rates on these lines subsidized by their own money than are paid by United States exporters.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is quite true, and the matter deserves consideration. But my hon. friend has incidentally struck on the real difficulty which besets, both the Interstate Commission in the United States, and which will beset our own commissioners when they come to deal with the question of deciding what is to be done with the rates charged from competitive points. You see at Chicago you are within 800 miles of the ocean via New York, and a little longer to Boston, and not much longer to Baltimore. You are at the same time, if I recollect right, at a distance of 1,250 miles to St. John. I am not quite certain of the distance, but it is several hundred miles longer to St. John; and if you turn away the freight which you can get from that quarter, you produce results which I have pointed out to my hon. friend from Toronto—we will have to pay a much larger subsidy if we deprive ourselves of the chance of getting a certain amount of freight from competitive points.

Mr. SPROULE. Coming back now to item 95—steam service between Canada and Australia—is that subsidy practically payable to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a separate company which runs these vessels. The New Zealand Steamship Company is subsidized by the New Zealand government and by the Fiji government as well as by ourselves.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to be a new item.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The reason is that heretofore it has been in the statute, but the statute expired last year, and we have not renewed the statutory provision.

Mr. CLARKE. You are making an increase of $50,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Why ? Are you getting any improvement in the service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We are getting a little better service, but the fact is that we could not have the service performed for the amount formerly given. The parties refused to perform the service for the old subsidy.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the improvement in the service which justifies the addition of $50,000 to the subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are giving us a better class of vessels than formerly, but the chief reason is that they distinctly declined to go on with the service for the old subsidy. We had either to pay more or to drop the whole thing. As the trade is increasing very largely, I did not feel justified in refusing, particularly as the Australian government, who are in favour of maintaining amicable relations, strongly advised us to pay a little more, and intimated their willingness to pay more.

Mr. CLARKE. What portion did the Australian government pay before and what do they pay now?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are paying £4,000 additional and we are paying £10,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What does Fiji pay ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Fiji pays some £2,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that a new subsidy to the line ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, they always paid a little.

Mr. CLARKE. Is their contribution increased ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a trifling increase.

Mr. CLARKE. Does New Zealand pay anything ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. New Zealand was paying something, but we dropped that subsidy, because the New Zealand service added a very considerable length of time to the trips.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are the boats not calling at New Zealand ports ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not at present.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why not ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Because they were not willing to pay the subsidy.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If they were getting no advantage out of it, I do not see why they should pay, but if we were getting any benefit out of it we should have the boats call at New Zealand ports.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Calling at New Zealand ports added considerably to the length of the trip.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have had the privilege of travelling over the route two or three times, I know all about the distance, and I know that it would not take very much time to call at New Zealand ports. Do boats call at Brisbane ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I venture to say that the extra distance would not be so great that it would add very much to the length of the trip. A very large trade can be worked up with New Zealand. New Zealand is going to be in the near future the British island of the southern hemisphere and I would be very sorry if any action were taken on the part of this government, even if the New Zealand government do not see their way clear to contributing towards this subsidy, which would result in taking these steamers off the New Zealand line.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It would take a couple of days to go to New Zealand, and that is a matter of considerable importance.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it that this subsidy is not payable to the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Because they do not own the boats.

Mr. SPROULE. I see here in their statement the 'Empress of India, the 'Empress of China,' &c., for the service of which steamers they receive a subsidy.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is the Japan subsidy. That is under the statute. It has nothing to do with this service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What boats perform this service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The 'Aorangi,' the 'Miowera' and the 'Moana.'

Mr. SPROULE. What number of trips do they make? Do they make a trip every month ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Every four weeks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are they provided with cold storage

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN Halifax). Of an efficient character ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am told so.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The right hon. minister said a moment ago that they were going to provide newer and better steamers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They have some better steamers than they had before.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What ones ? They have the same old steamers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The 'Warimoo' was on before, and they have put another vessel in her place.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The right hon. minister told us a moment ago that the 'Warrimoo' was still on.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I said the 'Moana.'

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Would the right hon. minister read the names over ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The 'Aorangi, the 'Miowera' and the 'Moana.' The 'Warrimoo' was withdrawn, and a larger vessel took her place.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see a report in the papers that the Canadian Pacific Railway were proposing to take off the Japan steamers, the 'Empress of Japan' and the others, that they were going to put a larger class of boats on that route and that they were going to place the present Japan boats on the Australian route.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think so. Unless they make some agreement with the New Zealand Steamship Company they cannot very well do that.

Mr. CLARKE. Two of the three vessels named by the right hon. minister have been performing that service for years. There has only been one vessel put on.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, it was simply because they refused to perform this service unless we increased the subsidy that we have made this addition.

Mr. CLARKE. We had to increase the subsidy or the service would be dropped—is that the situation ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Steamer service between Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin during the months of December, 1903 and January, 1904, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is an attempt to give a winter service to that section of the country for a couple of months longer. The original grant is $12,500, but we only paid $11,500 to the end of November, so that now, although I am asking for $3,000 more, it will only really cost us $2,000 more. It will give an additional service during December and January.

Mr. CLARKE. The experience in navigating these waters in November and December will be of some value in determining whether it is possible to navigate the lower St. Lawrence during the entire winter ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, this is a tentative vote, and I hope it will prove useful in that respect.

Additional for steam service between Victoria and west coast of Vancouver Island, $2,500.

Mr. CLARKE. What about this ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is a service which we are giving along the west coast of the island of Vancouver. We are getting a larger and better steamer and we are proposing to give the company $2,500 more for it.

Mr. SPROULE. How much do they get now?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. $2,500. They go along the west coast as far north as Cape Scott, and call at a variety of ports along the coast. The people have no other means of communication except by steamers.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the right hon. minister recollect the name of the new steamer?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have not the name of it, but they have agreed to have a larger steamer placed on the service.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the aggregate subsidy will be $5,000?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Additional for steam service during the year 1903 between St. Stephen, N.B., Ste. Croix river points, Deer Island, Campbello, Passamaquoddy bay and L'Etete or Black bay, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have heretofore been paying $2,000 for this service, but it has been represented to me very strongly for some years back that it cannot be done at that rate, and we have agreed to give $3,000 in the future.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any improvement in the service or in the frequency of the service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, the service will not be increased in frequency, although the steamer will call at two or three more places. But they really could not perform the service for the sum that was provided before.

Mr. FOWLER. You are increasing the subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, from $2,000 to $3,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there going to be a more frequent service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I cannot say it will be much more frequent, although they have done more than their contract provides for.

Mr. CLARKE. How many trips does the contract provide for?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are semi-weekly.

Mr. FOWLER. Is a better steamer being put on ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They have a somewhat better steamer, but the real fact is that they were going behind all the time. We could not expect them to perform the service for the same subsidy. They represented to me that they have been running the steamer for the last three years at a dead loss, and, from the best evidence I could obtain, I found that their statement was true.

Steam service between St. Catherine's bay and Tadousac during the winter of 1903-1904, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a good deal of settlement going on now along the north shore of the St. Lawrence, and heretofore they have had nothing but a canoe service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is St. Catherine's Bay ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is on the St. Lawrence, on the eastern entrance to the Saguenay river.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this an experimental vote ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the distance between St. Catherine's bay and Tadousac ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The distance is not very great. Quite a number of new industries have been established and quite a number of complaints have been made as to the means of communication, and it is said that this ferry across the mouth of the Saguenay is indispensable.

Mr. CLARKE. How many trips will be made ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They will make as many trips as they can in a day. The distance is about a mile or a mile and a half.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What county is St. Catherine's bay in ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Chicoutimi and Saguenay. The people who are on the east side of the Saguenay, when going to Quebec, have to drive up on one shore to St. Alphonse, cross on the ice there, and come down the other shore when they are going to Quebec. It is hoped that this ferry will save about 70 miles of a journey. Messrs. Price Brothers have an important lumber industry at St. Catherine's bay, and they are willing to make the experiment this winter with their steamer, in consideration of this subsidy.

Mr. FOWLER. It would seem that this is a service which should be performed by the government. The ferries are not run by the Dominion government.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Ferry licenses are under the control of the federal government on navigable waters.

Mr. FOWLER. On the St. John river, the ferries are subsidized not by the Dominion government but by the local government. There is a ferry in my own constituency at Milledgeville and that is entirely kept up by the local government. It does seem to me that the province which the Minister of Justice represents, is singularly favoured inasmuch as these services are performed by the Dominion government in that province, which have to be performed by the provincial governments in other provinces. I quite understand how important it is to the people of this section to have this ferry; I have no fault to find with that, but it does seem to me that it is a service that should be performed by the provincial government of Quebec rather than by the federal government.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The question of the ferry at Quebec was under the consideration of our courts and it was decided—and no one has disputed it—that that service was strictly under the control of the federal government, and that we could give licenses for ferries to cross the St. Lawrence on the same principle that we give authority to construct a bridge. Quite recently the question has come up in Ontario—

Mr. CLARKE. With regard to Sault Ste. Marie.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The provincial government issued a license, and it was found to be of no value.

Mr. SPROULE. That was an international matter, and there is no comparison.

Mr. FOWLER. I should certainly think that no ferry, such as this at St. Catherine's should have a subsidy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The ferryman has as good a right as any one else to use navigable waters as a public highway, and the only question remaining is, who should assist him. The ferry from Halifax to Dartmouth, crossing navigable waters, is established altogether under provincial enactments. We have various ferries throughout our province, over navigable waters, and those that are assisted at all are assisted by the provincial government.

For services of the steamer 'Lord Strathcona' and wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence for the year ending June 30, 1904, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This is for the maintenance of a steamer which is held in readiness to be called to the assistance of any vessel that gets into trouble on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. CLARKE. In how many cases were steamers assisted ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Some four or five vessels were assisted.

Mr. CLARKE. How does the record of the present season compare with the previous season, so far as accidents are concerned ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Within the last two or three months it has been better, but in the early part of the season the number was quite up to the average, I am sorry to say.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the right hon. minister, what steps are being taken to improve the situation ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been exerting himself in that direction, in the way of better lighting, better telegraph communication and other things which I hope will have a beneficial effect.

Mr. CLARKE. Have there been any reductions in insurance rates as a result of these exertions ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not as yet. Unfortunately this spring there were a considerable number of disasters in the lower St. Lawrence and they have made that an excuse for keeping the rates up.

Mr. CLARKE. I notice considerable correspondence in the London 'Times' from Lloyds and others, respecting the St. Lawrence route, and suggesting that it is not at all satisfactory. It is rather humiliating to Canadians to read such statements, and I am quite sure that if any reasonable expenditure were asked by the government, to improve the system of pilotage, and lighting, and for wrecking apparatus, it would be most cheerfully granted by this parliament.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. All these things are being attended to at the present time by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He is extremely anxious to make the navigation of the St. Lawrence as perfect as it can be, and I hope he will succeed in doing that to a very great extent; but it cannot be done at once.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say that he had some information from Lloyds, that if the aids to navigation were improved they were likely to consider a reduction in the insurance rates.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would be in hopes, that result would come.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the minister taking any steps to have pilots who know their business, placed on these steamers ? I have no hesitation in saying, that as a rule these pilots do not know their business, and I think that is the universal verdict of shippers and every one else.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has taken over the pilots between Montreal and Quebec, but not between Quebec and below.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And below too.

Additional for salaries of inspectors, deputy inspectors and other employees under the General Inspection and Manitoba Grain Acts, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMI may state briefly that this demand arises simply from the fact that the business of inspection has increased very largely, but, on the other hand, the receipts have also increased. We had an expenditure of $66,000 but collected fees to the extent of $88,000 so that the revenue will not be any the worse for the additional expenditure which is now asked for.

Mr. CLARKE. Have the official weighers been appointed and the grain standards decided for the year ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We have now before the House a Bill for extending the provisions of the Inspection Act and providing official weighers for the district east of Manitoba. We cannot appoint any weighers in Ontario until that Bill is passed.

Mr. CLARKE. But action has been taken in the matter.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a Bill on the Order paper which I introduced.

Mr. CLARKE. The grain standards have been fixed before this.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

SUPPLY—COST OF CENSUS.

The PRIME MINISTER moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN. (Peel). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to move an amendment which reads as follows :

That all the words after 'that' to the end of the question be left out and the following substituted therefor :—The expenditure in connection with the taking of the census for the year 1881 was $511,550 for a population of 4,324,810 ; that the expenditure in connection with the taking of the census for the year 1891 was $549,991.76 for a population of 4,833,239 ; that the expenditure in connection with the taking of the census for the year 1901 is $1,198,268.99 for a population of 5,371,315 and the accounts for the census year 1901 have not all been paid.

That in the opinion of this House the said expenditure for the year 1901 is excessive and extravagant.

You will notice by the figures contained in the resolution that the increase in the population, as shown by the census of 1901 over that of 1891, was 538,076 and the increase of the cost of taking the census for 1901 over that of 1891 was $648,277.23. You will observe by these figures, Mr. Speaker, that it cost considerably more than twice as much to take the census in 1901 as in 1891. In looking over the debates of parliament I see that when the items for the payment of the accounts of the census of 1881 were up for discussion the Reform party, who were in opposition at that time, strongly condemned the Liberal-Conservative government then in power because of what they called the extravagant expenditure. In 1891 when the census of that year was up before parliament for discussion the same thing occurred. Some hon. gentlemen who now occupy government positions were then sitting on this side of the House and they used very strong language in condemning the Conservative government for the extraordinary expenditure and the inaccuracy of the census taken in that year. On looking over that debate we would naturally expect that if the time should arrive when these gentlemen should come into office, as they did in 1896, a new condition of things would prevail. We naturally expected that when they came into office some of the pledges they gave to the people of Canada in respect to economy of administration would certainly be put in operation. In so far as expenditure in taking the census of 1901 is concerned the manner in which the promises were fulfilled was very disappointing to the people of Canada and it is for that reason and some others, that I propose to move the resolution that I now place in your hands. We would naturally expect, Mr. Speaker, that some advancement would be made by the Parliament of Canada during ten years of Canada's prosperity. We would naturally expect that this government in 1901 would be able to apply some new rules in advance of those adopted by the Liberal-Conservative government in 1891. As you know, a great many changes have taken place during these ten years and it would be expected that the Minister of Agriculture would be able to take advantage of some of the municipal advancement that has taken place in the different provinces and apply these rules to the taking of the census in 1901. I wish to give an illustration in this respect. In the county I have the honour to represent there is a township called Toronto township. It was assessed by the municipal corporation in 1901 at a cost of $135 which was paid by the municipal council. Two assessors were appointed for that municipality in the year 1901, and I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, what the assessors' duties are in the province of Ontario—I am not so familiar with the other provinces—the instructions are very complete the assessor on entering a house enumerates everything that is there. Let me read for illustration some of the schedules in the assessors' roll for the municipalities in Ontario. In column 22 he takes down the number of cattle upon the farm ; in column 23, the number of sheep ; in column 24, the number of hogs ; in column 25, the number of horses ; in column 26, the number of births.

I could go through a large number of colmuns put into the assessor's hands as he commences his duties in the spring of each year. If you look over the schedules placed in the hands of the enumerators, when the census was taken in 1901, you would see a very large number of columns like those I have read. When I remember that in that very spring of the year 1901, the people in every municipality of Ontario were called upon to pay their assessors for taking down these items, I find it strange that the hon. Minister of Agriculture did not take advantage of their services, and thus cheapen the cost of taking the Dominion census. I would not venture so far as to say that a complete copy of the assessment rolls would be sufficient for the Dominion census ; but what I do say is that if every ten years the Dominion government were to place the additional schedules in the hands of each of the assessors in Ontario, each assessor would be able to give the government a complete and accurate census of every municipality in that province for a great deal less money than was spent in 1901. I repeat that it cost the municipality $135 to assess the township I refer to in 1901. That assessment was done by two assessors; but when the Minister of Agriculture went to take the census in that township he put on nine enumerators, where two did the work for the municipality, and it cost this government, not $135, but $433.45. The increase in the number of enumerators was seven, and the increase in the cost was $298.45, and the population in each was the same, 5,208. I throw out the suggestion for the benefit of whoever may fill the position of Minister of Agriculture when the time comes to take another census. I think that some of the assessor's work, in the province of Ontario at least, should be utilized in the taking of our census. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture made a statement, during the discussion of these census items last session, that a great many more questions were asked in 1901 than at the previous census. That may be true, but many of those questions were altogether unnecessary. There were questions that did not bring out any valuable information, and some very important questions were omitted. For instance, in the columns which the enumerators had placed in their hands, there was no column for fallow land I asked the hon. minister why there was no such column, and he replied because there is not much fallow land in Canada. Surely that must have been a reply made in haste, for if he is at all conversant with the agricultural interests in Ontario, if he knows anything of that interest in other parts of this country, he must know that there is a very large quantity of fallow land. You cannot travel through any part of the province of Ontario, but you will find that on almost every hundred acres there are from ten to fifteen acres of fallow land each year. Let me ask my hon. friends from Ontario, who belong to the legal profession, what they find when drawing up leases. They will say that there is generally a clause providing that the tenant, when the lease expires, must have ten or fifteen acres fallow land. Why is that put in? Is it because there is no fallow land in Ontario? No, but because there is a large quantity of fallow land in that province. I asked my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) the other day what about fallow land in Manitoba and the Territories. He said: We fallow a great deal of land in Manitoba and the Territories; it would be difficult for us to seed it down, because we do not want hay, as we have more than we can use, and no market particularly for it. Therefore the only possible way by which we can clean our land from weeds is to leave it fallow. Any gentleman who has travelled through Manitoba and the Territories will see thousands of acres which are under fallow. Yet, notwithstanding that, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture tells us that the reason he put no column for fallow land in the census of 1901 was because there is very little fallow land in Canada. He may say that is not important, but to my mind it is. If it is important to put a schedule in the hands of the enumerators, showing the number of acres of wheat and oats, why is it not equally important that we should have a record of the number of acres in fallow? If a gentleman who wished to engage in agricultural pursuits in Canada were to take up the census returns, and if he were an advanced agriculturist, he would ask whether the farmers of the Dominion were forgetting what is the best means of cleaning the soil of weeds, not finding any fallow land in the census columns, he would conclude that the Canadian agriculturist did not know his business. Everybody knows that it is important for the farmer who wants to keep his farm in good condition and clean from weeds to have some fallow land. I wish now very briefly to give a table of counties in Ontario, so as to make a comparison between the cost of taking the census of 1891 and that of taking the census in 1901. I take six counties in the well-settled portion of the province. In 1891, the figures with regard to these counties were as follows:

SIX COUNTIES—CENSUS OF 1891.

County.	Population.	Cost.	Number of Enumerators.
Halton..	21,982	$1,444 98	16
South Perth ..	19,400	1,332 40	24
Peel..	15,466	1,102 03	18
Cardwell	15,382	1,102 94	16
Prince Edward.	18,889	1,390 25	23
Bothwell	25,593	1,767 74	27
	116,712	$8,140 34	124

In 1901 the figures were as follows:

SIX COUNTIES—CENSUS OF 1901.

County.	Population.	Cost.	Number of Enumerators.
Halton..	19,545	$2,488 94	32
South Perth ..	17,861	2,469 30	33
Peel..	13,687	1,967 31	24
Cardwell	13,060	1,956 88	27
Prince Edward.	17,864	2,402 16	36
Bothwell	25,223	3,539 81	48
	107,240	$14,824 40	200

A comparison of these figures will show that in every case there has been a decrease of population, and yet an increase of cost of taking the census and an increase in the number of enumerators employed:

SIX COUNTIES—COMPARISON OF 1891 AND 1901.

County.	Decrease in Population.	Increased Cost.	Increased Enumerators.
Halton..	2,437	$1,043 96	16
South Perth ..	1,539	1,136 90	9
Peel..	1,779	865 28	6
Cardwell	2,322	853 94	11
Prince Edward.	1,025	1,011 91	13
Bothwell	370	1,772 07	21
	9,472	$6,684 06	76

So it will be seen that under the Liberal-Conservative government, the wickedness of which, in always finding offices for its supporters, hon. gentlemen opposite are never tired of dwelling upon, offices to the number of 124 were filled in connection with the taking of the census of 1891 in these six counties. But under the present government, and in connection with the census of 1901, the offices were increased to 200, or 76 more than under the Liberal-Conservative government. I see my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) in his place. Let me give the figures with regard to his riding. In 1901 the cost of taking the census there was $2,683.52, the population being 26,707. In 1891 the expenditure was $1,488.78, and the population 23,357. It will be observed that in this case the population increased by 3,348 and the cost of taking the census by $1,194.74. I am one of those who believe and expect that the cost of taking the census in 1901 would be more than it was in 1891. But I do not quite understand that any of these central counties in the province of Ontario—and the same applies to almost every county in Canada—where there are fewer people, it should cost so much more, in some cases nearly double, to take the census. I am a little suspicious that there has been some political influence at work. This is not always charged against my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, but I rather think that in this case he is guilty. In looking over the returns for the county of my hon. friend from East Peterborough (Mr. Lang), I notice some explanatory correspondence. We would naturally expect that a business government, proposing to take a census, would carefully prepare a statement of the enumerators' duties, have it put in the form of a circular and sent to all the parties interested; and that, having made a careful arrangement as regards the duties of the enumerators, they would be able to decide the basis on which those enumerators should be paid. But this is not the case in the county of my hon. friend. The commissioner in East Peterborough put in his account and payment was refused. Some vouchers were not forthcoming. They were not very particular about vouchers in many cases, I must say. There was some little difficulty about the items in East Peterborough, and my hon. friend (Mr. Lang) wrote some letters to the department. And in the statement given by the department of the Minister of Agriculture the following memorandum appeared: 'In view of the letter from Mr. Lang, a revision of the account has been made. The accountant has used his discretion in allowing board items, and this might be explained to Mr. Lang in writing to him.' That looks like political influence, does it not? The Minister of Agriculture says: I discharge my duties without regard to political parties. Yet, when an account comes into the hon. gentleman's department and the payment of it is refused, my hon. friend (Mr. Lang) writes on behalf of his supporter, and, as soon as the letter is received, the word goes, 'pay the account.' Why? Because it was a just account? Was that the reason? If so, why was it not paid without my hon. friend's intervention? The Department of Agriculture prepared the statement laying down the duties of the enumerators and giving full instructions, so that accounts might be put in correct. But my hon. friend interceded, all that was necessary was some political interference, and as soon as my hon. friend wrote a letter to the department it was all right, and the account was paid.

Mr. COCHRANE. That was for board.

Mr. BLAIN. In looking over the items, I find one for over $2,000 for telegrams sent out to the enumerators. Why was it necessary, within a month after the instructions were given, to pay $2,000 for telegrams? Was it because the minister had taken pains to prepare and issue correct instructions? No, it was because the instructions that were sent out were in some cases incorrect, and the minister had to telegraph all through the country to the commissioners in the different counties, at a cost to the people of Canada of over $2,000, in less than six weeks. But that was not all, for when these enumerators were called together they were in some cases kept from two and three and five days awaiting their instructions from the government under this hon. gentleman. Let me read a paragraph that will throw some light upon it. In the county of East Peterborough, John Kerr, was commissioner. In writing to the department about his account, he makes this statement over his own signature:

> You will see that considerable expense has been incurred for which neither the enumerators or myself were responsible, on account of the necessary books and papers not being received on time.

Who would be responsible for that? Surely that could not be blamed upon the hon. gentleman who represents the county, nor upon the enumerators or commissioners. These men were called together at central points from different parts of the county, and when they got there they were kept in the leading hotels at the cost to the country because the papers had not been sent out on time. Another item in that letter says :

James Pengelby and Charles O'Reilly of Norwood should each be allowed six days. They were both here for three days the first week. But as the papers had not been received and they had to return the next week for two days.

That is, they waited for three days for instructions after being called together. I wish to make the statement that in my opinion there has been some negligence—shall I say some political interference ? I leave the House to judge on that point. Now, I wish to refer to the county of North Hastings. Mr. Kelly was commissioner for that county, and he had a very large bill, amounting to $653.14. He put in his bill, but there was some little dispute about it, and it was not paid at the moment. So Mr. Kelly says : 'I will get after this government.' Of course he understood what kind of ammunition was required to reach the minister, and he says : 'My plan would be to get a leading Reformer in my county.' And he sought out the nominee of the Reform party for the local legislature in that county, Mr. Lott, and Mr. Kelly and Mr. Lott came down to Ottawa after payment of the account had been refused, Mr. Speaker—these gentlemen came down, and Mr. Lott used his local political influence with the Minister of Agriculture. The two gentlemen came down together, and interviewed the minister. Here is Mr. Kelly's letter to the Minister of Agriculture, I will only read one paragraph :

When I met you in the House of Commons on Thursday last in company with Mr. Lott.

It is proved over this gentleman's own signature that he came down to Ottawa in company with the Reform nominee for the local legislature for that county, and they interviewed the Minister of Agriculture. With what result ? That is the important point. No one can complain of that gentleman coming down to interview the Minister of Agriculture, that of course would be part of his political duty ; but when the country has to pay for this interview, then the opposition have a right to complain. Now what was the result? Listen to the letter written after he went home to the Minister of Agriculture, dated at Marmora, 24th March, in which he says :

The Ontario elections are coming off the end of May or the beginning of June. Mr. B. O. Lott is the unanimous choice of the Liberal convention. I have made up my mind to do some hard work in this north riding of Hastings. Mr. Lott is the best canvasser and the hardest worker ever went into a political contest.

I have the honour to remain, your old servant,

WM. KELLY.

He seems to have had a good deal of political familiarity with the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Now what was the result of the interview ? As soon as the minister gets that letter from Mr. Kelly, the account is rectified, and a letter goes forward from the department to pay him. When was it rectified ? is the question I would like to have answered. If the account was a correct one put in by Mr. Kelly for $653.14, the commissioner for the county, if that account was in accordance with the schedule of prices laid down by the minister in giving his instructions to the commissioner and the enumerators, then my hon. friend should have paid the account at once, there should have been no dispute, Mr. Kelly had a right to his money. But let the House take note—just as soon as they brought this political influence to bear, indeed, almost before that hon. gentleman reached his home, a letter went out from the department to pay the account and Mr. Kelly got his money.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Agriculture threw up his hands.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, he threw up the purse of Canada for the amount I have mentioned. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is about all I have to say. I could go on and give many more instances, because I have made an extended investigation of the different counties. What I have to say is, in the first place, that the people of Canada expected better things from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. COCHRANE. They don't know him as well as we do.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, they will know him better soon, I suppose. The complaint we make is that when these hon. gentlemen were sitting on this side of the House in 1881 and 1891, they strongly denounced the Liberal-Conservative government for taking the census at such an extravagant cost, and we are surprised now, as the people of Canada must be surprised, to find that after these economical gentlemen get into office and come to take the census, they pay for it double the price that the Conservative government paid, although there is but a small increase in the population. We complain that the census taken by this government, so far as the agricultural interests are concerned, is an incomplete census, and it does not come up to the requirements of the country. We make this charge moreover against the hon. gentleman, that in regard to some of these accounts at least, the hon. gentleman has weakened, and has yielded to political influence, and has done what otherwise he would not have done, and should not have done in the interests of the country. We charge that political influence has been exercised upon the department, I do not know how far it has been carried. But we have found some instances where political influence was brought to bear, and I suppose if we carried our investigations further we would find many other instances. We say that we condemn this government for this excessive expenditure. We say further that some more advanced methods should be adopted, that these hon.

gentlemen should have learned something during the ten years from 1891 to 1901, that they should have profited by the advanced methods that have been adopted by the different municipalities in Canada and that they should have applied them to the taking of the census. In this country the functions of government overlap. Assessors are employed in every municipality in the province of Ontario, and they take the municipal census. This government came forward and they increase the number of men employed even in those counties where the population has decreased, but the time has come when the people expect the government shall make some advance in the matter of the taking of the census. I am not quite sure that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will occupy that position at the end of the next decennial period.

Mr. HOLMES. Oh, yes, he will.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) says 'yes he will.'

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). And he is quite correct.

Mr. BLAIN. I congratulate these hon. gentlemen upon their opinion. Well, we differ about that. I would like my hon. friend from Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) and my hon. friend from West Huron to go back to their counties and try to give an explanation to the electors how it is that this so-called economical government found it necessary to expend so much more money to take the census in 1901 than was expended in 1891.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). We will be there.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. gentleman applies the test of municipal government to his county he will find that the methods of this government will meet with general condemnation from the electors. I would expect that hon. gentlemen opposite would vote for this resolution. It is a mild condemnation of the extravagance of the government in connection with the taking of the census in 1901 as compared with the cost of the taking of the census of 1891. I beg therefore, Mr. Speaker, to move the amendment which I have read.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). Mr. Speaker, I must compliment my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) on the shortness of his speech at all events and I will try and emulate him in that respect. At this late date of the session, I do not think it is necessary for us to thresh out and repeat the discussion that took place in the earlier part of the session on this question. My hon. friend has made a serious reflection upon this government on the ground that the expenses in connection with taking the census of 1901 is excessive in comparison especially with the cost of taking the census of 1891. In general terms I would have to very shortly state that if the expense was very much greater the work of taking the census was also very much greater in consequence of two or three facts which nobody can dispute. The expense of doing the same amount of work in the year 1901 was more than in the year 1891, because, in the former year, the cost of labour, the cost of living and of everything in connection with all kinds of work in Canada was decidedly greater. I am not able at the moment, speaking from memory, to say what the proportionate cost of labour and living would be in each of these respective years, but, without going into the details, I am safe, I think, in saying that the tariff of rates established for the payment of the census workers in 1901 was fixed on a basis which was comparatively fair in order to give the people employment in taking the census, a fair amount of pay for the same amount of work they performed in 1891. In 1891, the enumerators of the census were paid at the rate of three cents for each name they took, three cents for each death they enumerated, fifteen cents for each farm the details of which they enumerated, and twenty cents for each factory, the details of which they enumerated. In 1901, we established the following rates: Five cents for each person enumerated, five cents for each death enumerated, twenty-five cents for each farm and thirty cents for each factory.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much for each farm?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twenty-five cents.

Mr. CLARKE. That is an increase of 60 per cent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Roughly speaking, between 70 and 60 per cent. I may say that this schedule of rates was carefully considered before the work of taking the census was commenced. It was discussed with those who seemed to have knowledge in such matters and it was agreed upon as a fair rate to be paid for the work to be done. It was agreed upon without any reference as to how it would work out or as to what the totals might be when the census work in toto was paid for. It was established on the ground that a fair day's work should be got and a fair day's wages should be earned by the person doing the work for the country, and, I may say here, at once, that to a large extent the increased cost of enumeration was due to the increase in the schedule of rates.

Mr. CLARKE. What proportion of the total cost does the cost of enumeration amount to?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The enumeration of the census of 1901 up to the present time has cost $878,000. Had the rates of pay been the same in 1891 as the tariff in 1901, the census of 1891 would have cost $767,000 making allowance for the increase of population or only $111,000, while the information obtained in 1901 through the 657 questions as compared with the 216 questions in 1891 is infinitely greater and well worth this $111,000 extra expense.

Mr. CLARKE. What about the other expenditures ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was in the schedule of rates, but in addition to that we found it was necessary to make an allowance for horse-hire and days of instruction. We paid for the days of instruction, which was entirely apart from the pay under the schedule rates, and which was exclusive of the time occupied in the direct taking of the census. The horse-hire was due almost entirely to the desire to have the census taken more rapidly, and the work put through so as to get the returns in with greater speed. That object was also aimed at by the rule that we should take a census enumerator for each polling sub-division instead of for a larger area. That of course involved a greater number of persons to be instructed, and consequent increased cost. The result was a much more rapid taking of the census and we believe it was worth some sacrifice to attain that end.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the work of the census completed yet ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am speaking now altogether of the enumeration, and that was completed long ago. We had also the fact that certain unorganized districts were enumerated in 1901, and were not taken into the count at all in 1891. That is not only the case with regard to the far off Yukon and the northern parts of our territory, but it also refers to districts in organized territories, and even in the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which were counted in 1901, but which in 1891 were simply estimated in the office here at Ottawa. In the census of 1901, the whole country, whether thickly or sparsely settled, was taken into the actual count, and the census of 1901 is a de jure count of the population of the Dominion, whereas the census of 1891, with respect to a large area of our North-west Territories, a considerable area of partially organized territory, and a considerable area of the province of Ontario, was merely an estimate made in Ottawa, and was no census at all. This added materially to the cost of the enumeration in 1901.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say exactly how much, but the hon. gentleman will understand that the taking of the census in the older portions of Canada was easy and inexpensive, compared with the counting of the population in these remote districts. The fishery enumeration in 1891 cost $2,245, and in 1901 it cost nearly $14,000. As a matter of fact the fishery enumeration in 1891 was so inefficient that the figures were thrown aside and no compilation made of them, whereas in 1901 the information is carefully compiled and will be valuable for future reference to the people of Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the minister tell the difference between the cost of taking the census in Prince Edward Island in 1891 and in 1901 ? There are no remote or sparsely settled districts in that province ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures at hand with regard to Prince Edward Island, separately. In consequence of the desire to get earlier returns we had to employ a larger number of enumerators which involved, of course, greater expense.

Mr. SPROULE. What urgency was there for an earlier return than in the case of the previous census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The answer is obvious, that the sooner we can get these statistics the more valuable they are. If we are to drag along for nearly the whole time between the two censuses without getting these returns, they are of comparatively little value.

Mr. SPROULE. Were the returns available for the public use earlier than they were in the case of the previous census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. If the hon. gentleman has patience I will give him that information. The enumeration was to be completed within thirty days from the 31st of March. It was the duty of the commissioner to revise all schedules before transmitting them to the central office. Ten per cent of all the schedules were in before the end of April ; fifty-eight per cent before the end of May; eighty-three per cent before the end of June and ninety-five per cent before the end of July, and those that were not received before that date were in connection with the most remote districts of Canada. In 1891 only one per cent of the schedules was received before the end of April; forty-one per cent before the end of May; eighty-three per cent before the end of June and ninety-six per cent before the end of July. This shows a very considerably increased efficiency and a quicker return of the large bulk of the schedules in 1901 over 1891.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister repeat what percentage was returned at the end of July in 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The return in July in both cases was practically the same, but that includes the ones that were sent in almost immediately, as well as those that were sent in in July, and if you take the earlier months you will find a much larger percentage in 1901 than in 1891. Naturally, at the end there are always a large number that cannot be brought in earlier, those dealing with the outlying parts of the country, but in both cases the ones that could be brought in early were brought in earlier; they were brought in early in 1901 and not so early in 1891.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the minister if the schedules containing the statistics respecting manufactures are included in the schedules, the date of the return of which he has just given?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No; in all cases, both in this and the other census, there was a special enumeration with respect to manufactures.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you the dates there when the schedules with respect to manufactures were finally received by your department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTCRE. I will inquire about that. The first volume of the census of 1891 was issued March 26th, 1893, or two years later; it comprised 424 pages. The first volume of the census of 1901 was issued in December, 1902 and comprised 561 pages, including a great deal more information and a larger number of tables than were included in the first volume of the census of 1891. The second volume of the census of 1891 was issued on November 25, 1893; the third, dealing with manufactures, on February 20th, 1895, and the fourth, including agriculture, forest products and miscellaneous, appeared February 11, 1897. Now, the second and third volumes of the census of 1901, dealing with agriculture, which was included only in the fourth volume of the census of 1891, with forest products, which was also the fourth volume of the census of 1891, and with fisheries, manufactures and mining, are now just about complete and will be in the hands of the printer next month. They include all the information that was in the second, third and fourth volumes of the census of 1891. The second volume of the census of 1891 was issued in November, 1893, about the same period as the second volume in the present census, but the third volume did not come out until two years after that, in 1895, and the fourth, dealing with agriculture, forest products and miscellaneous, not until 1897.

Now, as to bulletins. The first bulletin of the census of 1901, containing the population of some cities and towns, and also the populations of census districts for the years 1881 and 1891, is dated in August of 1891. The first bulletin of 1901, which is dated August also, gave the population by census districts, and in addition to what was given in the census of 1891, contained the number of families and the number of dwellings in each census district, together with the population of towns and cities according to their municipal boundaries. It appeared about the same date as the first bulletin in the other census, but it contained double the amount of information.

Mr. CLARKE. The first bulletin was issued about the same date?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was issued about the same date, but it contained double the amount of information.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the census return for 1891 did not give the families at all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The families were not included in the bulletins; they were in the subsequent volume, which was not issued until much later.

Mr. CLARKE. The first information received was issued about the same date?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A certain proportion, about one-half of it. The bulletins of 1901 stated that in a few districts the records were incomplete.

Mr. CLARKE. You changed some figures?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Some figures were changed in both cases; the bulletins were never absolutely complete when they were issued in either case. They were compiled and issued for the information of the public from time to time, subject to revision, and in some cases subject to change. It was stated in the bulletin that they were not complete, because there were outlying districts of which the population and details were not contained in the bulletins, but that was the case in the bulletins both of 1901 and of 1891.

Mr. CLARKE. Several bulletins were issued, if my memory serves me?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Several bulletins were issued. The first bulletin of the census of 1891 was issued in August; the second, which was issued in October, gave the population of Ontario; the third, which was issued in November, gave the population of the maritime provinces by districts and sub-districts; the fourth, which was issued in December, gave the population of Quebec by districts and sub-districts; the fifth, which was issued in February, 1892, gave, by districts and sub-districts, the population of Manitoba and the North-west Territories; and the sixth, issued in February, contained a summary of the dwellings of the people.

In 1901 the first bulletin of the census was issued in August and gave the population, the number of families and the number of dwellings by census districts, together with the population of cities and towns. It contained information which was included in the sixth bulletin of the former census. The second bulletin, issued on January 20th, 1902, was delayed a little while for the full details of the information from the outlying territory.

Mr. CLARKE. When was the second bulletin issued in 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In October.

Mr. CLARKE. Two months after the first ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How many months elapsed between the first and second bulletins in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From August to January—six months.

The second bulletin of the census of 1891 gave the population of Ontario by sub-districts, just the population of Ontario. The bulletin of the census of 1901 gave the whole population of Ontario and Manitoba, classed as rural and urban ; the population of all incorporated cities, towns and villages, situated in one census district, together with the details of population of all cities, towns and villages situated in two or more census districts.

Mr. CLARKE. Repeating what is in the first bulletin.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it does not. The third bulletin was issued January 22nd, and gave the same details of population as the second, but gave them for Quebec and the maritime provinces.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the date of the issue of the third bulletin ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Several days later than that of the second bulletin, practically they were issued at the same time, the one dealing with Ontario and Manitoba and the other dealing with Quebec and the maritime provinces. They were issued a week apart, giving information which was not contained in any of the bulletins that were issued in the census of ten years before.

Mr. CLARKE. You struck a new line ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Quite a new line ; we struck quite a number of new lines ; if we had not, our census would have been a poor one.

The fourth gave the same information for British Columbia and the North-west Territories and the unorganized districts ; it was issued one week later. Practically those three bulletins were issued together, although they were a week apart.

Mr. CLARKE. How do the dates compare with the bulletins of 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 the date of those bulletins were October, November and December, but they did not contain the information to be found in the bulletins of 1901.

Mr. CLARKE. What were the dates in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. December and January, but containing information which the other did not. No. 5 was issued on February the 21st and another two weeks later, giving the religion of the people by provinces and territories, including 142 different specified religions, together with a comparative table of the two censuses. That was not given in any of the bulletins of the former census. The seventh issued in March gave the population of the Dominion by origin, which is not to be found in any of the bulletins of the former census. Bulletin eight issued on the 30th of April, gave the immigration and birth place, which was not included in any of the bulletins of the former census. Number six gave the population of the Dominion by sex and coniugal conditions on the 24th of February. These bulletins were issued one after the other as rapidly as they could be obtained from the printer. Number seven was issued on the 12th of March, and number eight on the 30th of April. Number nine, issued on the 16th of April, gave the infirmities, also not given in any of the bulletins of the last census. Number ten, issued on the 25th of July, gave the census of the people by ages, which is not given in any of the bulletins of the former census. Number eleven, issued 24th of November, gave the agricultural statistics of Prince Edward Island—information which did not reach the people, in the census of 1891, until 1897, when four volumes of the census were issued, or six years after the information was obtained. But in the last census this information was given to the people by the bulletin of the 24th of November, 1902, or only eighteen months after it was got from the people. On the 20th of December, the bulletin was issued giving the agricultural statistics of British Columbia. The bulletin of the 13th of December gave the agricultural statistics of Nova Scotia. On the 14th of December was issued the bulletin giving the agricultural statistics of the North-west Territories. On the 15th of December we had the agricultural statistics of Manitoba, and on the 16th those of New Brunswick. We now have ready the agricultural statistics of the whole Dominion.

Mr. CLARKE. Are those of Ontario issued yet ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, nor of Quebec, but they are just going to the printer. This information was not given until after the issue of the fourth volume of the census of 1891, which was issued in 1897, or six years after the census was taken, whereas in the present instance we are giving the agricultural statistics of the Dominion within a little over two years from the time of taking the census.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman gave us the date on which a certain number of the first bulletins of the census of 1901 were issued. He did not give the dates of the others.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave you all. There were six. The hon. gentleman has spoken about a compilation. A few months ago, in discussing this matter, I said that there was a considerable amount of money spent in both these census on the fishery schedules. In the census of 1891 there was a considerable amount of money spent in taking information of that character, but when it was brought into the office here, it was found so incomplete and inaccurate that it was thrown aside and never compiled. We, however, compiled the information we got. While the census of 1901 has cost double as much as that of 1891, in the census of 1901 we have got information which is valuable and accurate, whereas in 1891 we did not get much information, and what we did get was largely inaccurate, owing to the careless and cheap way in which it was taken and compiled. Those things have to be taken into consideration when we make a comparison between the two censuses.

Mr. CLARKE. Did not the hon. gentleman invite the officer who had charge of the census of 1891 to assist in the completion of the census of 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, because I found that the results of the census of 1891 were so inaccurate and incomplete that I did not want the census of 1901 under the charge of that officer. Let me give an instance in confirmation of what I say. It is well known that in the province of Quebec, they use the measure of the arpent and not the acre, a difference of about one-sixth, five acres being equal to about six arpents. It is also well known that in the province of Quebec the farmers measure their grain and other products by the minot and not the bushel. The minot is thirty-six pounds, while the standard bushel is thirty-four pounds. Well, in the taking of the agricultural census in the province of Quebec in 1891, the enumerators were instructed to take their information from the people as given in arpents and minots, and the change would be made in the office here, but I found that the figures of the census were exactly those given by the enumerators. What is the result ? It is that a farmer of the province of Quebec, who had say 100 arpents of oats which would give say about 5,000 minots at 50 minots to the arpent was credited with 100 acres giving only 5,000 bushels, thus losing both ways for he had only 83 acres which gave nearly 5,300 bushels or nearly 64 bushels to the acre. Our farmers in the province of Quebec are thus discredited before the world, and it is shown that their crops are smaller though the area is larger; that their land is poorer, and so that they are but indifferent farmers. And that is a specimen of the way in which the compilation of the census of 1891 was made in the statistical bureau of my department. This was before I became Minister of Agriculture. I did not wish to see that repeated in the census of 1901. I took care that the officer who allowed that to be done was not in charge of the census of 1901. Let me give but one or two items to show that the details in the schedules of 1891 did not correspond with the tables issued to the world. We have found many such cases, but I have not the details at my fingers' ends. Nor do I wish to occupy the time of the House in giving a mass of details when a few citations will suffice. The first case to which I would refer is in the county of Addington in Ontario. The statistics with regard to this district show products in 1891 largely in excess of those shown by the schedule of 1901. In this, as in so many other cases, we were obliged to go into details in order to account for an extraordinary comparison and to learn why the figures showed lack of progress in parts of the country where we knew the progress had been phenomenal between the last census and this one. We first revised our own figures to see if errors had been made there. Finding no error, we went back to the schedules of 1891. And what did we find ? We found the case of one flour mill alone credited with an output of $560,000 in 1891. This was one single flour mill. We found that, whereas the schedule of the enumerators showed that this mill had two employees, the table made in the department showed six. The amount paid in wages, according to the enumerator's schedule, was $750, but this had been changed to $3,750 in the office here in Ottawa. The value of raw material was changed from $45,000 to $420,000—a trifle of nearly ten times. The value of the product was given as $600,000, the product being entered in the enumerator's schedule in written numbers as three million pounds. Now, three million pounds of mill products, as everybody knows, is not worth $600,000. The value of it could not reasonably exceed $60,000. No doubt, a larger sum was given by error of the enumerator. The owner of the mill states in a letter that for eighteen years his product has been about 60 barrels of flour per day. The revision failed there in not going back to the original source of information. We did go to the original source of information and made corrections in the case of manifest and obvious inaccuracies of the schedules. Now here was another case. In 1891, Montreal Centre is credited—at page 88, vol. 3 of the census of 1891—with a cartridge factory having a working capital of $175,000, employing 90 persons, paying $30,000 in wages per year, using $100,000 worth of raw material, and having a total output of $200,000. Now, there never was a cartridge factory in Montreal Centre. A certain cartridge factory, situated in Brownsburg, in the county of Argenteuil, has its office in the city of Montreal. But that office was credited with the factory and all the details, and all were repeated in Argenteuil county, all counted double.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. And all paid for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And paid for double. Now, I will not go at greater length into these matters, but I will say a few words as to the accusation of my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that we have departed from the rate of pay and the rules of payment.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister will excuse me, I think he has forgotten to show the number employed in compiling the census in 1891 and 1901.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can give that now——

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be better; the comparison can be given with greater convenience.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not certain that I have the number employed, but I have the cost of compilation for the two years. The salaries which were paid, independent of the enumerators, for the census of 1901 amounted to $236,731. That includes not only the compilers, but the chief officers of the census and all the salary connected with the census apart from the enumeration in the country. For the census of 1891 the same items amounted to $121,000—here again a little over half what it was in 1901. I think I have already given evidence how it was that it could be done for that amount at that time. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) spoke about the expense of telegraphing. I have not the figures in sufficient detail to show the expense of telegraphing by itself. But I have the figures of 'sundries,' which includes telegrams, travelling expenses of the head office staff, and things of that kind. In the census of 1901 this item cost $9,300, and in the census of 1891 the same item cost $17,000, or nearly double. So, in that respect, at all events, we were not extravagant.

Now, I wish to say a few words on the subject on which I had begun to speak when the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) interrupted me. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has accused me of departing from the schedule of rates and making payments extraneous to the proper payments. I plead guilty to that quite frankly. I say freely that the schedule of rates was fixed for ordinary circumstances, there were cases in which the circumstances were extraordinary and called for special consideration, and which were given special consideration, and in which an exception was made in order to make payments larger than the ordinary schedule of rates would permit.

Such conditions as the peculiar enlargement of the work which a man had to do, and over a greater territory; peculiar conditions where he had to do the work over again in consequence of something for which he was in no wise at fault; peculiar conditions such as the one mentioned in the House before, where the papers in a whole district were lost by accident to a ship, and the work had to be done all over again; other peculiar conditions where the increased expenditure was vouched for as being proper and legitimate, and it was shown clearly by vouchers that the officer had really expended the money. In this connection I would like to draw attention to the fact that the Auditor General has not objected to the passing of a single account coming from my department. I think therefore we may fairly conclude that the accounts were subjected to a proper audit and a proper scrutiny. Now my hon. friend would leave the House and the country to suppose that in the other census the schedule of rates was absolutely adhered to, whereas we have departed from it. He has assumed that it was impossible, under the holy and good Conservative party, that anything of that kind could have been done, but that as soon as the horrible Grits came into office we were guilty of all these naughty things. Well, Sir, I am charitable, I wish to believe that my predecessors in office found the same kind of difficulties that I found, and found that there were peculiar conditions and circumstances——

Mr. POPE. Not so many of them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps not, but I have found that while the schedule of rates under my predecessors applied to the whole work, there were a great many exceptions, and there were cases where, in justice to an efficient officer, they had to make allowance and give greater pay. I plead guilty to having done that thing in a good many cases. But I want to give a few instances in which my predecessors did the same thing in the census of 1891, and I think my hon. friend will acknowledge that if they were justified in departing from the schedule of rates in 1891, I may have been actuated by equally proper motives in desiring to do justice to the employees of the government. I will take the county of Addington, Ontario, as being first on the list. I find that out of twenty enumerators, there were no less than five who were paid considerably higher than the schedule of rates would allow. For instance, there was one man who was entitled by the schedule to $37.15, and who was paid $54, a flat rate of $3 a day for eighteen days, contrary to the law, and contrary to the schedule of rates. But I have no doubt that some good reason for that expenditure appeared which justified the department. By the next item I find that where the schedule of rates would have given a man $12.72, he was paid $27, a little more than double. Another man should have got $51.30, he was paid $69. Another man should have got $24.75, he was paid $42.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister give us the cost of taking the census of Addington on the two occassions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speaking roughly, I suppose it was about double on the last occasion, I will assume that for the sake of argument, and plead guilty to it. In the county of North Bruce, for which I have the list here, I find that, contrary to the schedule of rates, men were paid by the flat rate of $3 a day, contrary to law, contrary to the accounts they ought to have supplied and sworn to. The first case I find is where a man should have been paid $28.64 by the schedule of rates and he was paid $45; in another case he should have been paid $41.58 and he was paid $54. So on down the list every one of them was paid contrary to the law and more than the schedule of rates allowed. Now take the county of Frontenac here I find the same thing. One man ought to have got $48.31, and he was paid $3 a day for eighteen days, $54. Another man ought to have got $21.45, and he was paid for eight days at $3 a day, $24. Another man ought to have got $5.45, and he was paid for eight days at $3 a day, $24. In the county of Peterborough East I find the same kind of thing. Ten of the enumerators were paid more than the tariff of rates allowed them, were paid contrary to law, for so many days at $3 a day. The same was true, to a certain extent, in North Renfrew. Also I find that in Simcoe East—where is my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) ?—all the enumerators in 1891 were paid a flat rate of $3 a day, contrary to law and contrary to the tariff of rates which was then issued. In North Renfrew nearly all of them were paid in the same way. The hon. member who then represented South Renfrew seems to have had a little more influence with the minister than the hon. member for Simcoe, because he not only got $3 a day for twenty-five days for the enumerators of his county, but he also got an extra five cents on every farm they enumerated, an extra ten cents over the schedule of rates on every factory and industrial establishment they enumerated. The same is true of South Waterloo, where every one of the enumerators, contrary to the law, contrary to the tariff of rates, was paid $3 for more days than the tariff would have allowed them to get. The same in North Waterloo.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I need not go further into details, as I could if I had time. While I admit that the census this time has cost double as much, I believe we have got returns for the money spent. I believe we have got an accurate census, giving information that will be much more valuable to students of economics in Canada. I believe that we can show a census by which every part of the Dominion is fairly represented, unlike the census of 1891 where the province of Quebec was misrepresented, to the detriment of that province, to the discredit of the people of that province, to the discredit of a large number of industrious agriculturists and inhabitants throughout this Dominion. We have got reliable information, and I venture to say that the information which is given in the census of 1901 will be found accurately to tally with the totals and the compilations which have been made up from it, because in addition to the compilers, we have had a staff of revisers who have been going over the work once, twice and in many cases three times, so as to insure perfect accuracy. My hon. friend has complained of the increased number of employees engaged on this census. It is true we have had more employees, it is true we have been spending more in the compilation, but, as I have shown, when our compilation is finished it is correct, it is absolutely right and complete, instead of being left incomplete and unfinished as is was in 1891.

Mr. POPE. It was because your work was badly done.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, my hon. friend (Mr. Pope) is entirely mistaken. If he would go to the schedule of 1891 and compare them as we have been comparing them with the compilations he would find that the schedules of 1891 did not tally with the compilations in many instances and that the work was done in a slovenly and incomplete manner; whereas, under our arrangement the work has been revised and checked and gone over so as to make it absolutely accurate and correct. I venture to say that in statistical work there is one thing that is absolutely necessary and that is accuracy. Statistical work without accuracy is absolutely useless and unfortunately the statistical work of this census will lose to a certain extent its value by reason of the fact that comparisons between the results of the census of 1891 and the results of the census of 1901 are not fair or proper comparisons because the census of 1891 was so inaccurate and incomplete. I venture to think that in the census of 1901 we have made a new departure, that we have done some new thing, that we have done a thing which I hope and believe will be the beginning of accurate statistics in the Dominion of Canada and that as a result of the taking of this census the people will be able when the time comes to take further statistics to make proper and accurate comparisons with this census, the deductions from which will be of value in the economic study of the condition of the country. Believing this and believing that I have made out a case which cannot be impugned in any way I will rest satisfied that the House will vote down the resolution of my hon. friend.

Mr. THOS. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I only desire to occupy a few moments to consider the question which has been handled by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) and I want to take up the last statement that he made first. He said: We got thorough and reliable information while the census of 1891 was entirely unreliable and inaccurate. What evidence have we of the statement that we have reliable information? We have simply his bare statement unsupported by any proofs. We might just as well believe from the knowledge we have that the census of 1891 is correct as that the census of 1901 is correct. If the hon. Minister of Agriculture cannot support his statement by any better proof than that which he has presented then I say the country can fairly be allowed to judge how far it should give credence to such a statement. In reference to the census of 1901 he admits that the same work cost more than double what it did in 1891. What explanation does he give of that additional cost and what justification has he given for it? We know that as a party economy was always their cry but as a government extravagance was always their practice. This is another illustration of it and it is as good a one as we have had for quite a length of time. To what does he attribute the increased cost? First, the increased cost is attributed to the increased cost of labour and secondly to the increase in the amount of work done. He says that the census of 1891 did not entail as much work as the census of 1901, that labour was higher, that the cost of living was greater; therefore it is natural that the census would cost more. First then in regard to the cost of labour, what evidence have we of it? I endeavoured to satisfy myself upon that and I took up the figures which the labour bureau has compiled in regard to the cost of wages in 1901. It is true that you cannot very readily make a comparison as to the cost of this class of labour because it does not give a statement regarding the cost of labour in this line, but one line that would serve as a comparison is the cost of labour. The cost would be proportionately about the same in the two lines. I take the cost of labour according to the 'Labour Gazette' in 1901, and I will compare the wage of the ordinary labourer in 1901 with what it was in 1891 because that is the only class of labour for which I can find a statement in both years. I find that the ordinary labourer in 1901 got from $1 to $1.25 per day. The average of that would be $1.12½ a day. I take up the report of the Bureau of Statistics for the province of Ontario and I find that the ordinary farm labourer received in 1891, boarding himself, $25.81 a month throughout the whole province. The farm labourer cannot work every day in the month so that $25.81 is really more than $1 a day for every day he worked, so that if we credit him with the additional earnings he would have received, he must have got at least $1.12½ a day, while the average rate of wages in 1901 was $1.12½ a day. Is that an evidence that there was much difference in the price of labour in both decades? It is an evidence that the price of labour was comparatively the same, that there was very little difference and that therefore the increased cost of labour could not account for the increased expense of taking the census. Then, in the next place the hon. minister says: We did a great deal more work. Well, it is true that there was a little more work done but I find that in giving an answer to the hon. member for Peel as to how much more work was done the hon. minister said that the number of questions that were asked in 1891 was 2,111,136, while the number of questions asked in 1901 was 3,034,000, or practically not quite one-third more questions asked while there was double the expense. The wages were practically the same in both decades but the work was done by one set of men in 1891 and by another in 1901. Is there evidence that the increased cost of labour or the increase in the amount of work can fairly account for the increased cost? I say that neither accounts for it. While we would naturally expect that the census of 1901 would cost a fraction more than the census of 1891, I say that the additional expense is out of all proportion to the additional work that was done. That cannot account for it, and I say that nothing does account for it except extravagance and blundering as far as I can see. The hon. Minister of Agriculture says: We have done this work over two or three times. It was only because they were not satisfied in the first place that it was correct, which compelled them to do their work over and over again in order to make it presentable to the public. It required to be examined and checked by some independent authority and therefore I would not be disposed to take the hon. minister's statement as satisfactory evidence of its accuracy without examining it itself. I will take the work that was done in my county. In two ridings of Grey there was a decrease in population as between 1891 and 1901. Take the east riding of Grey which I have the honour to represent. In 1891 there was a population of 26,225 and in 1901 a population of 25,387 or a decrease of 838. In the first instance 26 enumerators, the commissioner and all, were required to take the census while in the second instance 59 were required to do the same work; or in other words 29 more men were employed in 1901 to do the work that was done in 1891.

In 1891 the census in that riding cost $1,834, and in 1901 it cost $3,592, or nearly double. That shows that the men employed by this government in 1901 were incompetent, or extravagant, or unbusinesslike, and perhaps all three combined. They can impale themselves on which horn of the dilemma they like. The officials in 1891 did the work as accurately as the officials in 1891, and they did it for $1,659 less money. In 1891, in North Grey, twenty-six men were employed, at a cost of $1,665, to take the census, and in 1901, with a population of 1,000 more than 1891, fifty-one men were employed, at a cost of $3,000, or again nearly double. In South Grey, in 1891, twenty-three men took the census of a population of 23,672 people at a cost of $1,647, but in 1901 it took thirty-nine men to take the census of 22,171, or 1,500 fewer of a population, and it cost $2,591, or $844 more than in 1891. This shows that the same work was done much more economically in 1891, than in 1901, and in every respect the work was as well done. It is true that perhaps one-third more questions were asked in 1901 than in 1891, and if the increased cost had only been one-third more, there perhaps would be no serious objection ; but the fact remains that the cost of the census in 1901 was nearly double the cost of the census of 1891 in every instance. The Minister of Agriculture told us, that he wanted more men employed because he wanted the returns within a shorter time, but the truth is, that in the main the census figures of 1891, were got out as early as those of 1901. The minister did not supply the census to the people of the country very much earlier in 1901 than they were supplied in 1891. I asked the Minister of Agriculture for a comparison between the number employed in compiling the census in 1891 with the number employed in 1901. He dare not give the figures, because the difference in number is so much greater in 1901 that he was ashamed of it. Although I honestly believe that he had the information under his hand, he dared not give it to the House notwithstanding that I asked him three times for it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I am perfectly in order.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Mr. SPROULE. I said that the hon. minister dare not make a comparison between the number employed in compiling the census in 1891 and the number employed in 1901, because the difference was so great in the latter year that he was ashamed of it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave the hon. gentleman the cost. The numbers vary from time to time. There was a certain staff in the beginning on both compilations, and that staff was reduced from time to time. So that it would be very difficult to give any figures.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it be difficult to give the number of days they were employed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would have to make a calculation as to that, and that calculation I have not under my hand, and the hon. gentleman has no right to say I have.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not desire to make any charge against the minister that I cannot prove, but I do say, that if he wanted to make a fair comparison he could have given us the number of days of work. Although I have asked for this information several times during the session, I have never been able to get it, and I have the right to assume that for some reason or other unknown to me, he desires to keep that information to himself. I say that from the first to the last, an examination of this census proves that the government have done the work in an extravagant fashion. I shall not say that it was done incompetently, because I would require more detailed information to justify that statement, but I do say that no reason has been given to this House, to show that the census of 1901 is any more correct than the census of 1891. I do know for a fact, with regard to my own locality, that the census was not accurately taken in 1901.

Mr. HEYD. Give us the facts.

Mr. SPROULE. I am stating the fact from my own personal knowledge, as to my own locality, and I may fairly draw the inference that the same remark applies to other localities. I therefore say that the minister cannot justify the claim that he has given us an accurate census. When we endeavoured to bring these schedules before the Public Accounts Committee, the minister dared not allow them to be presented before that committee. I leave the country to draw the inference why that was the case. The Minister of Agriculture took the responsibility of instructing his officers to keep from the committee the information which the committee was entitled to by precedent and practice, and I can only reach the conclusion that that was done to prevent us from making the facts known to the people of the country. The hon. gentleman has no reason to congratulate himself upon the magnificent work he has done in taking the census. He has done the same work as his predecessors, but it has cost the country twice as much money and the country has secured nothing that will compensate it for a fraction of the difference in cost.

Mr. C. B. HEYD (South Brant). One would have thought that after seven months our friends on the other side would have been able to make out a stronger case than they have done. They have been endeavouring to deceive the people, not only in this House, but throughout the length and breadth of the country, on this great question of the census. They have been issuing from the parliament buildings here, franked to all parts of the country, charges against the government with respect to the census which convinces me that they will try to make this an issue before the people. A document with respect to the census which they have circulated, and which has come into my hands, is absolutely misleading and untrue in almost every particular. I have looked over it with a considerable degree of care and have put on the Order Paper three questions in order to give the census authorities an opportunity of answering three charges which are made in the paper. I will read them to show the House the character of the matter they are supplying to the people, and that absolute worthlessness of what is contained in their literature. It says :

> At one time a staff of thirty men worked for months on enumerators' accounts. Then a new basis was applied and all their work thrown away.

The answer of the Census Department to this is :

> The statement is absolutely untrue in every particular.

They make a further statement :

> A year's work was done by a large staff on mortality tables which were all condemned and burned ; after which the work was done over again. The same thing happened to other compilations.

The Census Department say, in answer to this :

> The work on the mortality tables has been done by four clerks and no part of the work has been condemned or burnt. The statement is wholly untrue.

And I will say what the commissioner would not dare to say, that it is an absolutely false statement, calculated to deceive the people. The third statement contained in this sheet, and these are specimens of the work, is this :

> For about two years a staff of about thirty persons have been engaged in altering and amending enumerators' returns, changing forest land to pasture land, fallow land to pasture, and making other alterations.

The reply to this statement is that it is absolutely untrue in every particular. The word 'fallow' brings to my mind the fact that the only charge against the census that is made here to-day, after seven months' work, is that there is not a column in the schedules for fallow land. I think the opposition ought to have prepared a better attack. We have had two or three fallow years in which these gentlemen could have prepared themselves to make some real attack against the government and the quality of this census. We have the work, we can analyse it for ourselves, and we can see whether the census for 1901 was a good census and whether it was an improvement on the census of 1891, yet the only suggestion that our friend from Peel threw out was that the municipal assessors should make this census. This, he said, would be a great saving to the people. In the city of Brantford we have two assessors and it takes them six months to make an assessment of the city of Brantford. How long would it take the two assessors of the city of Brantford to take the census, when it took twenty-two men thirty days ? It would take them two years at the least, and the whole advantage of a census is that it is taken quickly and covers a great deal of ground.

But the principal charge is that this census is too expensive, and they try to prove that by the statement that the census of 1891 cost less than that of 1901. The fact that the census of 1901 cost nearly $1,200,000, is no evidence at all of extravagance, nor is there any evidence of economy in the census of 1891, because it cost only $550,000. If I was to say that I built a house in 1891 for $1,000, and that I built another in 1901 and it cost me $3,000, and then claimed that there was economy in the building of 1891 and extravagance in 1901, every one would see the absurdity of the position. If a man said : I ran my factory in 1891 for $500 per annum, and last year it cost me three times as much, the first question the ordinary man would ask is : Have you the same character of work and the same quantity of work in 1901 as you had in 1891 ? For purpose of comparison we must have things that are similar. A man who would compare the census of 1891 with the census of 1901 would thereby show that he had not looked into the character of the census. There is no comparison in the completeness of the two, or the amount of labour involved in securing the information. Let us take the number of men engaged. In 1891 there were only 4,324 while in 1901 there were 8,800, more than double the number of men to take census. But it is not the same census. It is a much more complete census involving a great deal more labour, and for that very reason——

Mr. BLAIN. Wherein is the census of 1901 more complete in respect to Ontario than that of 1891 ?

Mr. HEYD. I understand that the remuneration per name was 3 cents in 1891 and 5 cents in 1901. It seems to me that 5 cents is very cheap for the work done. It has been said in this House that it cost a certain newspaper in Montreal more than 5 cents a head to get the signatures attached to certain petitions to this House. Now whether they got 3 cents or 5 cents does not prove anything.

Mr. POPE. Do you know that ?

Mr. HEYD. There are a good many things I know that I cannot say here, and there are certain things I ought to say which, being what I consider myself, a gentleman, I would not say. Now let us compare the work that the enumerator was expected to do for 3 cents in 1891 with what he was expected to do for 5 cents in 1901. We have the evidence of that in the number of questions there were asked. I have certain schedules here; I took them up indiscriminately, and they do not cover the whole work, but they will illustrate my point. We have the great factor that the enumerators in 1901 had eleven schedules besides four specials, while in 1891 there were only nine. The population has also increased, so that there is a greater amount of work. But leaving that aside, let us take the schedules dealing with land and farms, one of which would be in the hands of almost every enumerator. The number of questions asked in 1891 was seventy-five, while in 1901 it was 127. We could hardly expect one man to take as many names when he had to ask 127 questions as he would take when he had to ask only seventy-five. Let us take the schedules dealing with manufactures of clay. In those the number of questions is not so material as the statistical work that is afterwards involved. In 1891 there were ten columns, while in 1901 there were thirty-one columns, and the necessary clerical work of classifying this additional number involved the expenditure of an exceedingly large sum of money.

Take the question of minerals, which is a very important part of the exports of this country and deserves exceptional treatment. In 1891, the exports of our mineral products only amounted to $5,748,000, while in 1901, they amounted to $40,000,000. That certainly justifies the hon. Minister of Agriculture in spending a little more money to secure a proper return upon the mineral resources of the country. In the census of 1891, there were only twenty-three questions on this subject, while there were 224 in 1901. How could you expect the census enumerators in British Columbia to take down for the same price the answers to 224 questions which their predecessors charged, who only had to answer 23. Could you expect the department to compile, separate, analyse and compute the figures and put them in suitable shape in the case of the returns to 224 questions as you would in the case of the replies to 23. Yet we have the government charged with extravagance because the work in each case was not done at the same price. Take the question of manufactures; manufacturing in Canada has grown to enormous proportions. In the schedule of 1891, there were only 23 questions, whereas in that of 1901 there were 63. How could you expect the work to be done in both cases for the same price, more especially when you consider the additional work involved in the collation and compilation of the returns and the additional number of enumerators who had to be employed. In 1891 our exports only amounted to $6,000,000 whereas in 1901 they amounted to $18,000,000. Any information that shows the development of our agricultural, mineral and manufacturing resources, the people will not begrudge paying for; and if the census of 1901 has cost $1,250,000, as compared with $500,000 for 1891, the people have got good value for their money. Take the articles of butter and cheese; in 1891 the exports of cheese amounted to $9,000,000, and in 1901 to $19,886,000. Butter in 1891 was exported to the value of $602,000, and in 1901, the export amounted to $5,600,000. In 1891 very few questions were asked regarding this industry, whereas a great many were asked in 1901. Take the schedule on population, there are on it thirty-four questions compared with sixteen in 1891, or eighteen new ones. That involves additional work in compiling the returns and the engaging of additional clerks. Take clay, thirty-one questions were asked in 1901 against ten in 1891. Then take minerals, in 1891 the questions were twenty-eight, and in 1901, 200. I need scarcely allude to the subject of fisheries, concerning which there are over 200 questions. There are over 100 more in 1901 than in 1891. And the fishery industry is an important one in this country, one in which a large number of men find a livelihood, and the government, in spending money to gain information for the people with regard to that industry, did just what they ought to have done under the circumstances. Hon. gentlemen on the other side are comparing two things that are entirely dissimilar, the census of 1891 and the census of 1901. I have here two books, one the first volume of the census of 1891, and the other the first volume of the census of 1901. An examination of these two will show that hon. gentlemen opposite are not properly informed and are simply indulging in a little captious criticism. There is no comparison of the quality of the information contained in the two volumes. If you take the first volume of the census of 1891, you will find 105 pages taken up with this class of information, as shown by the headings:

Houses—wood, brick, stone; houses—1 story, 2 stories, 3 stories, 4 stories and over; houses—1 room, 2 rooms, 3 rooms, 4 rooms, 5 rooms, 6 to 10 rooms, 11 to 15 rooms, 16 rooms and over, uninhabited, in construction.

The last two are of importance. But for 105 pages out of 375 we have information of the class indicated by the headings I have read. What do the people of this country care how many houses of one storey, or two stories, or three stories there are? What do they care how many houses there are of one, two, six or fifteen rooms? That is not information of any particular value to the people. When you come to the heading 'civil condition of the people,' they use 104 pages, but the information is woefully incomplete as compared with the census of 1901. Then when you take religion, you find 105 pages devoted to it. A great many of our people attach a great deal of importance to religion, and in this volume of 1901 there are 140 pages devoted to the subject. Then take the division 'place of birth.' We take a great deal of interest in the question of where our people come from, and are spending large amounts of money every year to bring into our country the best class of people. The census of 1891 has 31 pages devoted to origin and nationality, while in 1901 we have 190 pages. And yet our friends on the other side say that this 190 pages of high class statistical work is to be done at the same rate as the 31 pages of the census of 1891. Why, the thing is absurd on the face of it. In the first volume of the census of 1891 there were only 89 subjects dealt with, while in 1901 there were 201, or nearly three times as many. There is exactly three times as much information, judging from the number of columns. Then take the matter of quality. There are seven schedules here or heads covered in 1891, while in 1901 there were 18. There are about only 215 questions to answer in 1891, while in 1901 there are over 523 questions. And yet our friends accuse us of extravagance because we cannot get up such an elaborate census as this at the same cost as that of the census of 1891. If you show that a man spent $3,000 in running his factory in 1891 and $10,000 in 1901, you do not show that he has necessarily failed in economical management. It may be that he has more employees and is turning out more work. The only fault I find with the Minister of Agriculture is that he did not pay the claims of these men who put in good hard work and did not get enough for it. I say that at 5 cents per name it was impossible to get that information and cover long distances and earn fair wages. And while the census of 1901 did cost more, the men were not as well paid and did not earn as much money as ten years before. If the Auditor General's Report shows that they got $3 a day, they never received it. Those in my constituency were not paid $3 a day. The number of names they took was divided by 60 and that gave the number of days, and each of them were short from two to as high as fifteen or twenty days. That is where the trouble comes in for us, and trouble in which our hon. friends opposite are not interested. We will have to settle that with our enumerators. Some of them grumble, but they are too loyal to the country to be seduced from allegiance to their own party, though they were not so well paid as those who were appointed ten years before. When you look at the quantity of work, as shown by the two volumes I have here, you will see that the census for 1901 might as well have cost three times as much as that of 1891. In the census of 1891 there are only 83 columns, while in that of 1901 there are over 200 devoted to statistical work. If hon. gentlemen opposite have more to say on the census, let them adduce facts. It is no argument to tell us that the cost is greater or that more men were employed. The question is what did the men do in 1901 and what did they do ten years before? Let them compare the result, and we shall be in a position to judge whether there has been any unwise expenditure or not. It does not prove anything for the hon. member for Peel to show that it cost more to take the census in his county in 1901 than it did in 1891. It cost more to run a hundred-acre farm in his county in 1901 than it did to run a fifty-acre farm ten years ago. You must compare things that are similar. Having given some attention to the question of the census, and having studied the American census, I devoted a little of my time since Saturday to looking into this matter, and I have found facts that satisfied me that the government were not extravagant in taking this census; while, on the other hand, I find that the census will answer the requirements of the people and give useful information. The charges made are not in accordance with the facts. And that is true of the charges contained in the campaign document of hon. gentlemen opposite which has been sent out from this House by the carload, by the train load. And I hope that those gentlemen of honour and respectability who sit on the other side—and there are many of them—instead of allowing such documents to go out by hundreds of thousands—and some destroyed because they are not untruthful enough—will take only ten minutes to look into the matter, and that will convince them that nearly every statement made in this campaign literature with regard to the census of 1901 is absolutely untrue.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). I shall not detain the House long. The case has been so well presented by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), who has given a good deal of consideration to the question, and who, I think, has made out a very strong case for the resolution he has placed in your hands, that I need not dwell upon the matter at length. With reference to the leading argument of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd), I find that he does not agree with the Minister of Agriculture. The minister was candid enough to tell us at the outset that the main reason for the increase in the expense of taking the census was the higher cost of living. But the hon. member for South Brant, not being satisfied with that, endeavoured to show by a series of quotations from the various schedules of the census that there was an increase in the amount of work, that the volumes issued were larger and contained more information, and that this was the cause of the increase in the cost of taking the census. I will leave these two hon. gentlemen to settle this matter between themselves. The hon. member for South Brant instances the taking of the censuses in cheese factories as a reason why there should be an increase in the expenditure. Now, if I understand it right, the mode of taking the census of a factory requires the manager of the factory to be supplied, with schedules that he fills up, and practically the enumerator would not be employed for three minutes, much less for one day, in taking that census.

Mr. HEYD. Would it not involve more expense in the statistical branch ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I will explain that. If a cheese factory turned out 100,000 pounds of cheese in 1891, and in 1901 it turned out 200,000 pounds, I would like to know by what course of reasoning my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Heyd) arrives at the conclusion that the cost of taking a census of 200,000 pounds should be double that of taking the census of 100,000 pounds. I fail to see that the cost even of making the totals, of adding up these various reports of the cheese factories, would be any more in 1901 than it was in 1891. Possibly there might be a few more factories, but that would not account for doubling the cost of taking the census, which the Minister of Agriculture has confessed to.

The Minister of Agriculture tells us that one reason for the increased cost of taking the census on this last occasion was the employment of a larger number of enumerators, and consequently there was a larger number to be instructed. I think he is quite correct, and that is just what we complain of. He employs two or three times the number of people to take the census, these men all have to be instructed, and every one has to be paid his day's wage during the course of instruction—not only his day's wage, but I find, in some instances, that he is actually paid for his board. Some enumerators are given lunches when they meet together, as they were in Verchères and Chambly, down in the province of Quebec. Why were not the enumerators treated to lunches in my county as well ? I do not know why there should be any partiality shown. It goes to show the extreme carelessness with which these accounts are made up, when I found that in one county a man is allowed for an item that in another county another man is not allowed for.

Now, the Minister of Agriculture complains that in the census of 1891 the law was not complied with, and that enumerators were paid on a flat rate instead of by the day. I want to draw attention to this, because I think that in making that argument the minister was not as fair as he generally attempts to be. He took for example the county of Addington, the county of North Bruce, the county of North Renfrew, and the county of Frontenac. Now, we all know that these are counties where the population is sparse, where the enumerator in many instances would have to travel long distances between settlements in order to find the people living in that section of the country. But the Minister of Agriculture did not mention a county like Peel, which is more thickly populated; like the county of Halton, which is well populated ; he made his reference entirely to counties that are sparsely settled, and where it would be an absolute necessity, to be fair to his enumerator, that some other plan should be adopted than that which would apply to counties with more dense population. I would not be surprised, if he analysed his own pay-sheets, if he found the figures to bear out my contention. Therefore, I think his argument in that respect was somewhat misleading. However, I fail to see that there is much in it, because he has told us that the cost of taking this census is practically double that of taking the former census, and I presume that it was doubled in those counties that he mentioned as well as in other counties.

Now, the Minister of Agriculture tells us that the cost of taking the census per name was three cents in 1891 and that was not enough. In 1901 he allows his enumerators five cents, an increase of 66⅔ per cent for taking names. For taking farms, in 1891, the cost was 15 cents, and in 1901, 25 cents, still maintaining the same rate of increase, 66 per cent. Then, for taking the census of a factory, 20 cents was paid in 1891, and 30 cents in 1901, an increase of 50 per cent.

Now, he tells us that this increase was all owing to the extra cost of living. I wondered, when I heard him say that, where the boasted preferential tariff came in. Why, these hon. gentlemen were going to make everything cheap, they were making this a cheap country to live in, giving us cheap clothing, cheap food, cheap boots and shoes, everything the people have to buy was going to be cheap on account of this preferential tariff. Yet they tell us that they have had to pay their census enumerators more because the cost of living has been increased. What is the increase ? Did the Minister of Agriculture, before he made that statement, look at the facts ? I doubt very much if he has; I think he has just spoken in a random sort of way. The Minister of Justice told us the other day that the salaries of the judges had to be increased because the cost of living had increased, and they had to pay more for clothing and other requisites. But this preferential tariff, they told us, would make clothing cheap, that it would make boots and shoes in this country cheap to the consumer. I cannot reconcile the two arguments. Let me take some particular item and ask where the cost of living has been increased. Let me take as a basis of the whole thing the price of what. I look upon wheat as being a fair index of the respective cost of living in 1891 and 1901, because, to my mind, as the price of wheat varies so would the price of butter, so would the price of eggs and other articles that we consume. If the cost of wheat was less in 1891 than 1901 than would be in 1901, and there would be something in the argument of the hon. gentleman. But what do I find? Since the hon. gentleman made that statement about the cost of living being increased within the decade, a statement that almost staggered me, I went into the library and looked up the 'Globe' newspaper to see what wheat sold for under the Conservative regime of 1891, when the farmers of this country enjoyed good government, when their interests were carefully looked after by the government of the day. I find that in 1891 wheat was selling for $1.08 per bushel, whereas in 1901 it is selling for the miserable price of 77 cents, 30 cents less. Yet the hon. gentleman tells us that he has had to pay his enumerators more because of the increased cost of living, a difference of 60 per cent, while the cost of wheat was reduced by 30 per cent. Does that not mean extravagance? Is that not evidence sufficient to condemn the hon. gentleman out of his own mouth for the large amount that the census has cost? I contend that the facts do not at all bear out his contention that the increased cost of living is the reason for the increased cost of taking the census. We may take other articles just as well as wheat. Take woollen goods. Under the preferential tariff hon. gentlemen opposite told us that the people were going to get their woollen goods cheaper. The complaint of the woollen manufacturers is that their industry has been destroyed by reason of the preferential tariff, which makes clothing cheaper, but it appears that the preferential tariff does not give the benefit to the consumer at all. It must give it to the importer or middleman. I do not think they have reduced the cost to the consumer, because, the Minister of Agriculture tells us, the cost of living has increased. Therefore, the preferential tariff is not at all what the people expected it would be and does not result in the benefits that we hoped would accrue from it. Until the hon. minister has given us a better reason than the increased cost of living to justify this enormous increase in the cost of taking the census, this extravagant cost of taking the census, I shall be compelled, for one, to vote condemnation of his action, of the policy that he adopted and of the result of what he did in 1901.

Mr. R. HOLMES (West Huron). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) who has just taken his seat has made a somewhat laboured argument to try and prove that the cost of living has not increased and that there should be no additional expense connected with the cost of taking the census. Whether the cost of living has kept up to the price of wheat or not, I think that the hon. gentleman will admit that the cost of labour has increased. I venture to make the assertion, that, taking his own personal expenses as a criterion he will admit in private conversation, if not publicly, that the cost of living has very materially increased. If he will take up the volume of the census he will find an explanation of some of the reasons for the increased cost of taking it. The explanation was given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), and it was enlarged upon by him, so that it is not necessary to go into that. But, I simply want to allude to the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite can be all things to all men. They can adapt themselves to any condition of circumstances. It is not necessary to bring the tariff question into the discussion at the present; but we have heard a good deal in this House in the past from hon. gentlemen opposite as to there being no advantage under the preferential tariff. We have been told by hon. gentlemen opposite that the preference was a delusion and a snare, and that we were imposing upon the people of the motherland as well as upon our own people in trying to convince them that there was some advantage in the preference. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), by his extravagant language, and extravagant manner has admitted what the Liberals believe and have always contended, that the preference has been a decided advantage to the people. However, that is neither here nor there, as far as the census is concerned. We, on this side of the House, are prepared to admit that the cost of the census of 1901 has been greater than the cost of the census of 1891, and that was the only point made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). Without being disrespectful to him at all, I would like to say that I think the mountain has conceived and brought forth a mouse. The charges which he has made against the government do not amount to very much. I should also like to refer to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Our friends opposite are willing to swear to the accuracy of the census of 1891. They say that there were no inaccuracies in connection with them, and the hon. gentleman made the statement——

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say that I made no such statement at all?

Mr. HOLMES. I did not say you did. I said that hon. gentlemen opposite said so, that they said this upon the other side of the House. However, the hon. member for East Grey said that he knew——

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Holmes) says that it was not the hon. member for East Grey who said that, but it was some other hon. members on this side of the House. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to say who it was?

Mr. HOLMES. I alluded to the hon. member for East Grey as referring to his own riding and as stating that the census of 1891 in that riding is much more accurate than the census of 1901, but I said that hon. members on the other side of the House were willing to swear that the census of 1891 was fairly accurate. However, I happen to have before me the report of the Bureau of Industries of Ontario, in which is given, of course, the results of the census in every municipality, and I find, that, taking the Dominion census of 1901 and comparing it with the municipal census of the same year, and taking the Dominion census of 1891 and comparing it with the municipal census of that year, the last census is much more accurate than the previous one. For instance in the township of Glenelg, in Grey county, I find the difference between the municipal census of 1901 and the Dominion census to be 53, while in 1891, the difference between the local census and the Dominion census is 281. In Osprey, I find the difference in the first instance 44, and in the second instance 133. Do hon. gentleman opposite consider that the census of 1891 was an accurate census when there is such a disparity? Do they not agree with me that the census of 1901 is much more accurate? I do not want to weary the House with too many details. The hon. member for Peel is the mover of this resolution, and I propose to devote a little attention to a series of questions which were asked by him in the House some time ago as to the questions asked by the enumerators and the information returned in connection with the present census. One of the hon. members on the other side of the House, in the course of this discussion, has stated that the cost of the census of 1901 is double that of the census of 1891 for the same work. This has been contradicted time and again, and merely to show that our contention is the correct one, I will quote a few figures for the benefit of the hon. member for Peel. The hon. member for Peel asked certain questions in the House in reference to the questions that were asked in Cardwell, Halton and Peel. In 1891 the number of questions asked in Cardwell, as far as population is concerned, was 384,000, in round numbers, in 1901, 444,000; Halton, 1891, 549,000, 1901, 664,000; Peel, 1891, 386,000, 1901, 465,000. In the matter of agriculture, taking real estate, orchard products, nurseries, vineyards and market-gardens, the number of questions asked in Cardwell in 1891 was 66,000, in 1901, 88,000; Halton in 1891, 96,000, in 1901, 111,000; Peel in 1891, 70,000, in 1901, 71,000; the total number of questions asked in the three counties in 1891 was 1,320,000, while in 1901 it was 1,500,000. The number of questions was much greater in 1901 than in 1891, and this is conclusive evidence of the number of questions asked. Continual reference has been made to the accuracy of the census of 1901. The hon. minister dwelt upon the desirability of having accurate statistics in the census. In order to show that the census of 1891 was not as accurately taken as it should be let me call the attention of the House to one or two points.

For example, in 1891, the area of land in crops as published in the second volume of the census (Table XVI) was ascertained, not by addition of areas under crops as recorded in the schedule, but by an abstracting process which consisted in taking from the area of improved land the areas of land in forest, in pasture and in orchard and garden—the remainder being land in crops. The total area of the land under crops is in this way shown by volume II of the census, to be 19,904,826 acres; but when the area is reckoned up by the details of crops as given in volume IV (published in 1897) it is found to be only 16,139,295 acres, which is 3,765,531 acres less than the area shown in volume II. The excess in the maritime provinces is 627,522 acres, in Quebec, 966,894 acres; in Ontario, 2,233,957 acres; and in the North-west Territories, 4,421 acres; but in Manitoba there is a deficiency of 2,270 acres and in British Columbia 64,993 acres. Our friends opposite are convicted out of their own mouths as to the inaccuracies in the census of 1891, and I only give these facts in order to show that while they charge that the present census is inaccurate and unreliable, there is no doubt at all that the census of 1891 in which they place so much confidence is without question inaccurate. In order to show the difference in the number of questions, I may point out that in the census of 1891 there were only 216 questions asked, while in the census of 1901 there were over 600 questions asked or nearly three times as many. I have under my hand here the schedule relating to farm values upon which there are a series of twenty-seven questions. A good many of these questions involve considerable labour in getting information with respect to them, and that schedule was not used at all in the census of 1891. The department showed its wisdom in taking these statistics in connection with the last census, because I need hardly point out that information as regards our agricultural standing amongst the nations of the world, is of very great importance indeed to the community. It is apparent on the face of it, that a great deal more work was required from the enumerators in 1901 than from the enumerators in 1891, and that additional work is a complete explanation for the extra cost. If gentlemen on the other side of the House have no greater grievance against the government than they have charged in this campaign, or, than they have charged in this House to-day in connection with the census; then the Liberal party has nothing to fear when they appeal to the electors of Canada. I am satisfied that when the intelligent electors of the Dominion look at the importance of the census of 1901, and its superiority over the census of 1891, they will conceive that the additional money has been spent wisely and well. I may say in conclusion sir, that the Liberals are quite willing to go to the people of the country on this issue, as on any other issue which has been raised by the Conservative party.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN SHERRITT (North Middlesex). Mr. Speaker, I do not purpose at this late stage of the session detaining the House very long, but I feel that it is my duty to make some comparisons of the expenditure of the census of 1901 as compared with that of 1891. Before recess the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) was reading from a newspaper which he claimed had made some erroneous statements and had misrepresented the expenditures of the government in this matter. I was somewhat amused when listening to him reading from that paper; I thought that the man who printed that paper was putting himself in the position of the boy who would tell a lie although the truth would serve a great deal better. My own opinion is that there was enough that could be truthfully said in criticism of this expenditure without resorting to any false statement. Like any other business men we on this side of the House would not expect that the census of 1901 would be taken as cheaply as that of ten years ago. We all know that new parts of the country have been settled, that there are difficulties in taking the census in certain localities that would entail more expense than was required ten years ago. Some progress has been made by the country. When listening to the statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) I did think that he had a bad case. Notwithstanding his ability to handle such a question the only excuse that he could advance for this enormous expenditure, compared with the expenditure under the Conservative rule, was that the cost of living had increased. It has been argued by the hon. member for Huron that the extra expenditure would be accounted for by the fact that there were more questions to answer, and that there were one-third more questions to answer, and that therefore it should cost one-third more money. I do not agree with that; I should think that in taking a census the most difficult and tedious part would be getting from house to house, as we have to-day very large farms and a good deal of time is lost in this way. However, for argument sake we will allow that it is good logic to say that because there are one-third more questions to answer we should except an expenditure one-third larger. That and the argument advanced by the hon. minister as to the additional cost of living are the only two arguments that have been put forth to justify the fact that this census cost twice as much as the other. I will take for illustration my own riding of North Middlesex. In 1891 East Middlesex had a population of 25,569 and the cost of taking the census in that year was $1,646.85. In 1901 we had a population of 26,609 and the cost of taking the census was $3,380.09. You will notice that there is an increase in population of 1,040, but it would not be fair to assume that that would be sufficient to offset the additional cost entailed by the one-third extra questions. That being the case the only argument that is left is that of the increased cost of living which my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) has exploded fairly well. But the difference in the cost of the two in this census riding is $1,733.24. As the hon. gentlemen from Brant and from Huron have failed to advance any argument to justify this fact it will be necessary to put forward some one else, and they may have to call on the hon. member from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who could possibly advance the best excuse in defence of this expenditure. Allowing that there are one-third more questions to answer and that this should entail an expense one-third greater, and allowing the extra cost of living, on which the Minister of Agriculture has based his argument, there is still a discrepancy which, as I have said, the hon. member for North Norfolk might be able to explain, but I do think he will have a difficult task. We have in North Middlesex a number of independent men. Prior to the election of 1896 the hon. gentleman who leads the House and his colleagues went up and down this country decrying the Conservative party and declaring that an expenditure of $38,000,000 was bleeding the people white, and that Canada could not stand it. So much was said about this expenditure that the people in my riding really came to the conclusion that there must be something wrong with the Conservative party, and in the election of 1896 they returned a supporter of the government. But, Sir, what did they find? As soon as the present government got into power it was found that none of the pledges which the people conscientiously believed would be carried were carried out, and they found that the expenditure was not $38,000,000 alone, but it went up and up and up, and the result was that when they came to cast their ballots again in 1900 they sent your humble servant to represent them. That I think is sufficient evidence to show that you cannot hoodwink the people of North Middlesex, so I think that we must have a better explanation of what has become of that extra amount of money that has been expended.

Then let us look at South Middlesex. In 1891 South Middlesex had a population of 18,806, and the cost of the census under Conservative rule was $1,389.53. In 1901 South Middlesex had a population of 18,803, practically the same population, a difference of only three; but what was the cost of the census under Reform economy? It was $2,982.84, or in other words $203.78 more than double what it cost under Conservative rule. I do think that this is a state of affairs which requires some explanation; and although the hon. member is not in his place to-night some other hon. minister, I hope, will get up and explain how the expense came to be so heavy in this instance. I notice that the arguments have been chiefly of a rather lame character, and I should like to have some hon. member on the opposite side get up and endeavour to make some kind of a frank explanation. When looking into the Auditor General's Report, I did expect some explanation from the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, to account for this increase of $1,593.31, or more than double what the taking of the census cost in the particular riding under Conservative rule, other than the extra cost of living. I have no doubt that the cost of taking the census was big enough under Conservative rule, but it has been doubled by hon. gentlemen opposite. Next I come to North Middlesex, which, in 1891 had a population of 19,090. Under Conservative rule the census there cost $1,299.92, whereas in 1901, when the population was 17,455, it cost $2,428.55. In other words, there was a decrease in population of 1,535, and an increase of expenditure of $1,128.63, or almost double that under Conservative rule. That certainly demands explanation. Then in West Middlesex, which in 1891 had a population of 17,288, the cost under Conservative rule was $1,302.31; and in 1901, when it had a population of 15,843, the cost under the Reform regime was $3,113.37, being a decrease in population of 1,445 and an increase in expenditure of $1,811.06. In other words, the cost was more than double under the present regime what it was under Conservative rule. No doubt the majority of us in this House are men who had a good deal of experience in municipal life, and I ask those hon. gentlemen how long would they expect to be returned by the different municipalities if, once they got into office, they were to raise the salaries and increase the expenditure more than double and have nothing more to show for the increase except the rise in the cost of living? How many hon. gentlemen have known of an assessor in a rural municipality, whose salary has gone up in the last ten years 20 pen cent? I do not know of any such case. How many directors of insurance companies are there whose salaries have been increased, or school teachers or other men in public employ? I do not know of any increases corresponding to those in the taking of the census. I do not intend to take up much more time, but I have here the figures from South Huron, the riding in which I now live. The cost of taking the census in South Huron, under Conservative rule in 1891, when it had a population of 19,144, was $1,255.59, and in 1901, when it had a population of 17,448, the cost was $2,090.41. So that there was a decrease in population of 1,696—an increase in the expenditure of $838.82. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite will find it hard to justify that increased expenditure in the county of South Huron. In that county the people are getting a little awake to the condition of things, for they have had the extravagance of this government brought home pretty closely to them in the matter of the dock as well as in the taking of the census. I have no doubt that they will insist on more satisfactory explanation than that we have had here before they will condone these items of expenditure by a party which they have looked upon so long as the champions of economy, working in the interests of the country. I think it is due to some of the members belonging to rural municipalities to offer some explanation on these particular items, and I have not selected any particular counties. I took the ones that first caught my eye, and I find by the statements of other gentlemen that in the other counties we have a similar record. We should have something else to justify this extravagance besides the increase in the cost of living. Some time ago the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked why there was no record of summer fallowing in the census records, and the Minister of Agriculture replied that that was a thing of the past. Surely he could not have been sincere in such a statement? I must say that in our part of the country the farmer who does not summer-fallow is not considered up-to-date.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). This question of the census, Mr. Speaker, has naturally attracted particular attention, both because it has proved very expensive and because a great many opinions have been expressed reflecting on its accuracy. The public have certainly not that confidence in its results which the Minister of Agriculture has sought to prove to exist. In the first place, as to the cost of the census, it has been very much larger than that of any previous census in Canada. I find that, according to the resolution submitted, the census of 1881 cost $450,000, that of 1891 almost exactly $550,000, and that of 1901, though not yet completed, $1,200,000. How much more work is to be done upon it, of course, the House cannot learn at this time. The fact remains that the last two censuses, those of 1881 and 1891, together cost $1,000,000 completed, and the census of 1901 has cost $200,000 more than the two censuses that preceded it, and it is not yet completed. It will be clear at once to any one who looks at the census returns that the increase in the population does not account for this increase of cost. The population of Canada has increased at the rate of about 10 per cent for each decade. Therefore, while the increased cost of the census of 1891 over that of 1881 was just about in agreement with the increase of population, that is, about 10 per cent,—it really was 20 per cent more. In the case of this last census, where there was an increase of 10 per cent in the population—there has been an increase in the cost, of considerably over 100 per cent. Now, it is natural, it is inevitable, that the members of this House and the people of this country would seek to learn why the census has cost so much. The Minister of Agriculture has set up a plea that is not, in one respect, an unfair one—that the census has cost more because it is necessary to pay more to employees now than before. He has argued that the cost of living has increased in Canada to such an extent as to account for the increased remuneration, and I presume that the concluding part of his argument would be that this would account for the enormous increase in the cost of the census. As the increase in the cost of the census has been over 100 per cent, if the hon. minister is right in his argument, the cost of living must have increased over 100 per cent in Canada. If that were precisely correct, I suppose we should find an increase of 100 per cent in the wage or remuneration paid to employees by persons, corporations and governments over what was paid ten years ago. But, as a matter of fact, even with the employees of the government themselves, there is nothing to show that those outside the census bureau are receiving 100 per cent higher salaries than they did ten years ago. If it be true that in the Census Bureau they are receiving 100 per cent increase that Bureau must be the envy of all the departments in Ottawa. I know that the men employed on railways in Canada are receiving 15 or 20 per cent more than they were receiving in 1891. I think the employees of the post office are not receiving, in many cases, any more than they were in 1891. Of course, it must be remembered that, in some cases, these employees are complaining that they are not paid enough. But the government of which the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is a member, for many years did not act at all upon this principle that we should give increases of remuneration to employees of the government. He, with the others, is responsible for the fact that for many years they persisted in refusing to give the civil servants even the statutory increases which, I think, might be properly looked upon as part of the salaries of those officers. So, it seems to me, the minister will need to suggest to the House some better argument than the increased cost of living and the increase of salary that is being paid, and justly being paid, by the departments of the government to civil servants, in order to account for the increased cost of the census which we are now considering. That argument, to a certain extent, is an ingenious one ; I think that even on a cursory examination it will be found to break down completely.

Now, it is very evident that, while the Minister of Agriculture has some ground for saying that there is an increase in the wage rate being paid for work in Canada, and that he could not get enumerators to work for the department if he did not give an increased wage rate, yet, taking the figures, he fails to account for the increased cost by developing that idea and showing that he had paid more for the enumerators. I took down the figures given by the hon. gentleman as to the cost of enumerators. Those figures show that the enumeration in 1891 cost $682,000, while that for 1901 cost $878,000. Of course, there must be some mistake, because the whole cost of the census for 1891 was only $549,000. I must have taken the figures down wrongly or the minister must have read them incorrectly from his notes. It is not necessary to labour the point. There is evidently some discrepancy. The great increase in the cost of the census is, to a certain extent, accounted for by the increased number of the enumerators employed. That would come about in this way : It is true that two men ought to do in half the time what one man did before. But if the government pays, and pays so liberally as I think we can show they did, for the time occupied in instructing the enumerators—fairly enough—every additional enumerator would add to the cost of the census. If gentlemen are paid $2 or $3 a day during the time they are receiving instruction, and the number in 1901 is double the number in 1891, that portion of the cost will be doubled. It is not hard to show that the cost of instructing the enumerators has been very considerable. I think it has been unjustifiably large. We find, from the testimony given before the committee of this House, that enumerators who came to meet the commissioner of their census districts were allowed $3 a day during the time they were receiving instruction from the commissioner. Moreover they were allowed their expenses, though the testimony given may show that they were at home at the very time they were receiving instructions. They received $3 a day though the sworn testimony of an officer of the government shows that in some cases they spent only one hour on some of the days they were receiving instructions. So, a man running away from his office or the factory in which he was employed to meet the commissioner appointed by this generous, large-hearted, large-souled administration, received for his well-spent time of one hour, $3 as remuneration and $1.50 or $2 for 'expenses.' Now, if you multiply that by the 8,888 enumerators who were employed by the government in making up this census, I think it will be seen that I have got at a very much more satisfactory reason to account for the enormous increase in the cost of the census than the suggestion made by the Minister of Agriculture that it is owing to the increased cost of living in Canada, or to any increased rate paid to the enumerators for doing their work.

But not only are the enumerators paid very handsomely, paid for almost nothing, but in some cases in which they failed to receive a sufficient amount of information in the course of the days spent in the company of the commissioner and were unable to do their work at a later period, they were allowed to visit the commissioner at his home or in the neighbourhood; and these gentlemen who had been paid at the rate of $4 or $5 for one hour on the days on which the commissioner was giving the enumerators information, were paid at the same rate with expenses at an enormous advance over the actual cost, for attending the commissioner again at his home. So that it is quite easy to see that this practice of allowing unreasonable prices, unreasonable remuneration, to the enumerators during the period in which they were receiving their instructions, would account for a great part of the cost of this census. Now, who is responsible for this increase ? Clearly I think the Minister of Agriculture must be held to be entirely responsible. The Minister of Agriculture had ample time in which to prepare his work, he had ample time in which to arrange all these details, he had ample time in which to provide for everything that might transpire ; and if the result goes to show that the Minister of Agriculture, or the gentleman to whom he entrusted this work, did not anticipate all possible sources of loss, all possible chances of increasing unduly the cost of this census, then clearly, to my mind, the Minister of Agriculture must devise some far better defence than suggesting flaws in the preceding census before the people of Canada will acquit him of responsibility for the unduly increased cost of the census of 1901.

But the enumerators are not the only persons who have been paid very liberally. We have it on the sworn testimony of an official of the government that a commissioner who was a particularly favoured gentleman—I do not know that all the commissioners who were employed in taking the census were equally favoured—but we know that in the case of one gentleman at least he was allowed to make an addition of $50 to the bill of costs which he prepared to submit to the department, and that account was passed. There was no audit in the case at all of a satisfactory character, and there was no warrant, no justification, for the increased expenditure. After the commissioner in question had charged for every day upon which he had been employed, even in writing a letter, or sending a telegraphic message, or receiving a parcel, it could only be shown that he had been employed some fifty days. But he was a generous man, and he added fifty per cent to the fifty days and charged the government for seventy-five days. He made up his bill, and having made it up, on subsequent consultation with some other commissioners appointed by the government, he discovered that he had failed to realize all the advantages that might be derived from his position. He realized that he was far in the rear of what had been attained by some others of his brother commissioners, and he coolly added to that bill $50 more. He charges in the first place for every hall he had occupied, he charges for every moment of horse-hire, and he deliberately adds a lump sum to this bill later on. Charges for hall rent, for horse-hire, and for stationery, by which he adds something like $50 to that which was already a most liberal bill, and the whole amount is paid.

Now, if the people of Canada want to find out how the census has cost so much, all they have to do is to take the few occasions in which it has been possible to get at these accounts, and they will see why this census has cost so much. It is simply because the only limit to the size of the bills rendered by the commissioners and paid by the government, was the idea of what the government would stand on the part of the commissioners. The measure of the bite was the appetite of the man, and there is no evidence to show that in any case was there any restriction or control exercised, but throughout all the census accounts, so far as they can be understood by a cursory glance, and particularly so far as they can be better understood in view of the evidence taken before the committee, the man asked and received what he pleased. That accounts very easily for the enormously increased cost of the census, and it goes to show that the government did not exercise any particular control. They certainly started off in the most liberal fashion; they increased the cost of taking the census by their own act, in the first place, by advancing the remuneration from three cents per name to five cents per name; from fifteen cents per farm to twenty-five cents per farm; from twenty cents per factory to thirty cents per factory. There is an increase all round averaging over fifty per cent; and still, in addition to these enormous charges, all the accounts throughout, in the eyes of men who were familar with the locality and with the circumstances, go to show that after being paid these enormously high rates, the enumerators and the commissioners as well, were allowed to make irregular additions to their bills and these bills were honoured.

Now, a good part of the census commissioners may not have been quite as highly favoured as was the gentleman whose conduct was investigated before the committee. The facts were brought out that he was already an official of the government, employed, but I do not think very busily employed, in a different class of work altogether under different departments. In the case of Mr. Hurley, of East Hastings, it is seen that during the period in which he was engaged in taking the census he drew from his work under the Fishery Department, $441, and for his work under the census commissioner, $330 more, or a total payment of $771. Now, why was this gentleman favoured so much ? I suppose the reason was that he was a defeated candidate. He had been a candidate at the preceding election, and although defeated by the people, not only is the whole patronage of his riding placed in his hands, but he is also appointed to supervise the officials of the provincial government in connection with the fisheries, and on top of that he is appointed a census commissioner, and above all he is allowed to pass accounts of the liberal character described, in which he is paying a man $3 a day for one hour's attendance, and is allowed to add fifty per cent to the lump sum claimed on his own account, and the whole thing is paid by the government. Under these circumstances, if it is necessary for the minister to raise the question of increased cost, of increased remuneration, of increased wages, the whole thing is, it seems to me, quite clear, it is an occasion in which the spoils system was in full operation. No man need apply for a position who was not a good staunch party supporter, and having become a good staunch party supporter, he could depend upon getting the most favoured nation treatment when he came to do business with the government. There was no question whatever as to his account—simply present it and have it paid. I find in my own county, the county of Pictou, in one comparatively small polling section, a compact section in which the houses are all along the main roads, one man is allowed twenty-four and a half days horse-hire for taking the farms in that one polling section. There were no factories, simply a farm settlement. Well, I would think it a very pleasant pastime to visit on foot every house in that polling section in two or three days; still a man is allowed to get twenty-four days and horse-hire.

Now, the criticism which has been addressed by this side of the House generally against the census, has been to the effect that it has been enormously costly, unreasonably costly; and, in the second place, we are inclined to believe that it will prove to be not only a very costly census, but when the whole matter is completed and all the accounts are closed, it will be found to be not a very satisfactory census. In reply to that the minister goes on to show that there were some errors in the census of 1891. He says that in some cases in 1891 the enumerators' schedules were not very carefully made out. He refers in particular to the schedules in connection with the fisheries, which he says were not available and which were not produced by the compilers. That may be. A further statement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture is that in some cases in 1891 exceptions were made by the commissioners in favour of the enumerators. That may be. The hon. minister read a list in which he said that in North and South Waterloo, Frontenac, East Simcoe and elsewhere, the commissioners, or managers, in 1891 departed from their rule of paying three cents per name and allowed $3 per day. It struck me while listening to that statement that in most cases where this had occurred, the sections were comparatively small, and the probability was that it was impossible to get any men to do the work of enumerating the census in these districts for three cents a name. It was likely that the population was so small that it was necessary to make some concessions. But admitting that there were irregularities in 1891, that simply increases our surprise at, or perhaps our admiration of, the fact that in the case of the census of 1901 the Minister of Agriculture is enabled to distance the performances of the bureau in 1891 by over 100 per cent. But admitting that there was a possibility of some irregularity in that case, we are led to believe, from the very statement made by the hon. minister, that there must be some enormous irregularities connected with the census of 1891. There is one difficulty about the form of criticism that the hon. gentleman has employed. It will be remembered that last year this same matter was brought up in the House in connection with the discussion on the budget, and a great many different parcels of census returns were laid upon the Table. It was charged that irregularities had occurred, and in fact it was insinuated that worse than irregularities had occurred. It was practically stated that the census of 1891 was padded. The impropriety of introducing any such evidence into this House lay in the fact that it was an ex-parte statement. It was a statement made by the parties who had possession of all the documents, which were withheld from those who were opposed to them, and there was no possibility for those thus opposed availing themselves of that evidence. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has referred to some persons in different counties in Quebec, a lot of schedules to have them examined there by persons who were friendly to the census of 1901 and hostile to the census of 1891. This was giving an unfair advantage, and there could be no satisfactory outcome from such a decision unless the government were prepared to grant our request that there should be a full inquiry made into the position of the census of 1891 and the census of 1901 by some disinterested and competent party.

Mr. SPROULE. They would not allow the Public Accounts Committee to see the schedules, but they would cart them all over the country for others to examine.

Mr. BELL. That being the case, it is very clear that the hon. Minister of Agriculture cannot expect to secure the assent of this House to the course which he has followed. He cannot expect to bring conviction to the mind of any hon. member on this side of the House by the criticism to which he has resorted. It is very evident from the defence which the hon. minister has put up that he has devoted a certain portion of the staff which is employed by him in the census staff not to the work of making the census of 1901 as perfect and complete as possible, but to the work of criticising, examining and seeking to find flaws in a census that is ten years old.

Mr. CLARKE. Trying to discredit it.

Mr. BELL. Trying to discredit the census of 1891. That is the work to which the officers of the census bureau have been devoted, and it is not so hard to understand how a considerable addition has been made to the cost of the census of 1901. Not only has the hon. Minister of Agriculture engaged in taking a census, but, recognizing the fact that his census does not have the confidence of the people of Canada, recognizing the fact that it has been exposed to a great deal of hostile criticism, and realizing that he must make some defence, it is very clear that a great deal of industry has been devoted, not to perfecting the census of 1901, but to an endeavour to make it appear better by pointing out defects in the one that preceded it. That would be a perfectly fair and legitimate comparison if it could be made from both sides. If the friends of the census of 1891 were in the position to join the hon. minister in the investigation and compare these two censuses. If we were in a position to go and see what was good and what bad and to judge for ourselves, then it would be perfectly fair, but the hon. minister comes forward and produces this evidence which has been collected by him, but which—and I do not assume that he has not been perfectly honest in the matter, or that he is making statements that he does not believe true—is entirely ex-parte. He is simply playing the game with loaded dice, and he cannot expect that any such defence as he is making is going to satisfy the House or the country as to the merits of the census of 1901. The hon. minister has said a good deal about the comparative time in which the work of compilation and enumeration has been completed. He has drawn a great many comparisons very much to the advantage of the census of 1901 and very much to the disadvantage of the census of 1891. This all comes under the same category as that to which I have referred. We must leave these matters for full and satisfactory consideration until the time has arrived when the two censuses have been completed and can be compared as completed. It is impossible to judge them any sooner than that. If the hon. minister has succeeded in having a perfectly satisfactory census made in 1901, we will be glad to know it when we have had time to study it fully. At this moment, after two and a half years have elapsed, only the first volume of the census has been published, and the schedules which relate to the industries of Canada, and the schedules for which the hon. minister claims a great deal of credit as having been taken in addition to those prepared in 1891, have not been compiled or submitted to this parliament, and we are not in a position to judge of the advantages of the census in that respect. It appears from the claim made by the hon. minister that a great many more questions were asked in the census of 1901 than in the census of 1891. That is, I suppose, up to a certain point, in the right direction, but, when the census bureau undertakes to collect more information than can be reduced within a reasonable time into tabulated form, it is submitting the country to an expenditure from which the country is not likely to derive any substantial benefit whatever. Although the questions in the schedules have been increased from 216 in 1891 to 561 in 1901, the fact apparently remains that we have not at this moment derived any more advantage whatever from this large number of additional questions, because they have not been compiled, and if the answers are permitted to remain in the forms of schedules uncompleted and uncompiled and inaccessible to the public, of what value is this large number of questions? It would have been better far for the country, if the government had been satisfied with a smaller number of questions, and if they had collected the information in such a manner as to enable them to have it in tabulated form at the earliest possible moment. We are at a disadvantage in not having the two censuses completed, because we cannot compare them. I was rather amused at the criticism of my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd), who apparently found a great deal to excite his criticism in the fact that the census-takers of 1891 had devoted a good deal of time to ascertaining how many rooms were in the homes which were occupied by the people of Canada, and particularly when he came to tell the House about the statistics relating to those who only occupied one room, he seemed to look upon that as the most idle and improvident, and ridiculous thing that could be imagined. The idea of spending time over these poor people who could only afford to live in one room. Was that the idea he had in his mind?

Mr. HEYD. No.

Mr. BELL. Then, I would like to know what was in that great mind possibly like the judge who shook his head, there was nothing in it. There is nothing more important in the census forms, as a portrayal of the condition of the country than a return showing how many families have to live in one room. There is no greater indication of the need of social reform, and occasionally of governmental and municipal interference, than that anything like a large percentage of the people of the country should have to live in one room. There is nothing that marks more distinctly the progress of the people and their advancement, than that the number who live in one room is diminishing. There is perhaps no feature in that census to which the reformer of a future day, who is trying to get an idea of what Canada was in 1891, would attach more importance than to that very statement. He would want to know how many of the people of Canada were obliged to live in such a poor condition, that they were compelled to live in a dwelling of one room. These facts relating to our population, are to my mind of high importance. They give us a picture of our country as it is ; they show what the requirements of our country are at a given date, and they measure the progress of the people more correctly even, than the statistics relating to the creation of wealth and its development in industrial pursuits. I cannot understand why my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Heyd) should criticise the census of 1891 on the ground that it had devoted a great deal of attention to the humbler classes of the people. It seems to me that a census could not be better employed, than in that very work. We have the fact remaining then, that the census of 1901 has been an enormously expensive census ; that it has cost us at least $500,000 more than it should have cost, and so far as I can judge, there is no prospect of its being completed within the very near future. An enormous part of the figures secured by the enumerators have not been compiled yet, and judging by the amount of money voted this year, it is not unreasonable to say that it looks as though that census would never be completed. I believe that when two or three years have passed, and we have ascertained more closely what the census of 1901 have brought forth, we will be able to say that it has not only been a most costly census, but a most defective one as well. My hon. friend (Mr. Heyd) treated with a great deal of scorn, certain criticisms which he found in a broad sheet, on the compilation of this census in the department. The hon. gentleman ought not to be too quick to pledge his word and his standing in this House, in the positive assertion that these statements are absolutely unfounded. He may have to swallow a good many of these statements before he is much older. So far, it has not been possible to secure evidence on some of these points. But the day is not far distant when evidence will be secured.

Mr. HEYD. Why make the statement before you secure evidence ?

Mr. GOURLEY. You would never make any statement if you followed that rule.

Mr. BELL. The time will come when these statements will be verified.

Mr. HEYD. There are three deliberate statements made in that sheet, which on the authority of the census commissioner are absolutely untrue. What are you going to do about it ?

Mr. BELL. We are going to prove it.

Mr. HEYD. Go on and prove it. I would rather take the word of the census commissioner.

Mr. BELL. We know, although we cannot prove it to a demonstration yet, that the schedules, in the Census Department have been changed ; that in some cases figures have been altered by the compilers ; that the returns as compiled are not the returns as received in the census office from the enumerators ; that the census compilers have corrected what they thought to be errors, and in some cases they committed errors in altering what was actually correct. I do not know exactly to what extent this has gone. We did not know until recently to what extent the government had gone in allowing enumerators and commissioners to pay themselves. We only succeeded in getting one or two witnesses before the committee but so far as it went, I never heard of any lead or vein that seem to give better promise of great returns, if it could be worked out. There can be no doubt that it will be worked out. The manner in which the government have tried to discredit the census taken ten years ago ; the manner in which they have done it in the dark to a certain extent ; the manner in which they have made use of their position to take census documents out of the custody of the department and to distribute them in the hands of partisans in order to discredit the census of ten years ago, is a sufficient warrant that the moment the opportunity arises a complete investigation into the census of 1901 will have to be made in order to satisfy the people of the country. The cost of this census, let it be borne in mind, is not paid by the members of this House alone, but by the people of Canada, and if the census is not satisfactory, the people of the country will demand an investigation. They will want to understand how it is possible, that whereas the census of 1891 contained a large number of questions in excess of those asked in 1881, it entailed a comparatively small increase of cost. They will want to know how it is that the census of 1901, containing in the same way an increased number of questions no man can possibly account for the increased cost. A large number of these questions apply only to those engaged in certain trades and avocations, like the fishermen, and the enumerators are not required to visit every man in the country in order to get these questions answered. All the factories in Canada are comparatively few, and all the fishermen of Canada are few compared with the whole population. The great cost of enumeration must manifestly be in visiting, individually, the people who are enumerated. You may increase questions by the hundred and not add much to the labour of an enumerator.

The addition of 100 per cent to the number of questions could not possibly, under a fair and honest management, add anything like 100 per cent to the cost. It might add only a very limited amount to the cost of the census. All these things being taken into consideration, the fact remains that the census has been enormously costly and there is a grave suspicion on the part of those who looked into it most carefully that it will prove to be an unsatisfactory census. The government refused to employ a man of recognized ability, I might say of eminence, as a statistician ; they passed him over to take into their employment a man whom they selected, simply on the ground of his party allegiance. They passed over a trained statistician, a man who has a continental, a world-wide reputation, and they took an untried man, with the result that might have been expected. Then in regard to the work of enumeration, instead of employing the old enumerators who had had experience, they employed an altogether untrained and inexperienced body of enumerators. No man who was employed in the previous census was employed in this one.

An hon. MEMBER. Shame.

Mr. BELL. My hon. friend says shame. He is pleased with that act and why is he so gratified with the fact that not one of the men employed in 1891 was employed in 1901 ?

Mr. HEYD. We wanted a better quality.

Mr. BELL. Wanted a better quality ; if the measure of quality has been the cost of the service, then evidently the qualifications were very high. Not one of the old enumerators was employed, no matter how competent he might be, because he was of the wrong party stripe. Members of the House of Commons who are saying to me across the House that this was quite right are simply proclaiming that they took advantage of their position here to make a present to their party supporters throughout Canada of $750,000, on the good and satisfactory ground that they were good party supporters and would vote the Liberal ticket. The result goes to show the people what it costs them to have in power a government that views matters in this way. If the government had taken the experienced census manager whom they had at their call and had employed the experienced census enumerators whom they could have found throughout the country, there can be no doubt that the census would have been better taken and taken at a much reduced cost. I would not have thought it proper on my part to enter into any defence of the Dominion statistician from the charges that were made against him by his minister to-day ; I thought that when the Minister of Agriculture said so positively that the officer who took the census of 1891 had committed such blunders and done such bad work in that census that he would not allow him to take this one, it was no part of mine or of any member on this side of the House to say a word in condemnation of the minister's action. However, the very errors in the census of 1891 which the minister was using and advancing as the reason why he should not employ the statistician to take this census were discovered by him after the present census had been taken. He could have had no knowledge of these errors up to the time and until long after the time he commenced taking the census of 1901.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman forgets the errors that were pointed out in this House in 1893 and 1894.

Mr. BELL. Those were not the errors cited by the hon. minister on this occasion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were quite sufficient.

Mr. BELL. The only errors pointed out on that occasion were errors not on the part of the head of the census bureau, but on the part of some enumerators, particularly I think of one in the county of King's, N.S.; no charge was made against the head of the statistical department. I think it would be admitted that a very much better and more satisfactory defence will have to be made by the Minister of Agriculture and his supporters before they will convince the people of Canada that this has been a cheap or economical census. And yet we are perfectly willing to be reasonable and fair and wait until time gives us the opportunity to know exactly what the present census is. I think they will require to produce some very valuable volumes and excellent results before they can persuade the people that it is a good and well-taken census. There is one little fact by which we can judge of the comparative merit and ability of the men managing the two censuses ; that is the fact that while the first results were given to the people of Canada by the census bureau at about the same length of time after the enumeration in 1891 and 1901, I think in the month of August in each case, the census department in 1891 gave the population exactly almost, with an error of only 560, less than 600, while in the case of the census taken in 1901, the first returns of population, made about the same period, were in error to the extent of 44,000 ; the error in the census of 1901 was nearly one hundred times as great as that of the census of 1891. We know that ; we can only guess at what may be revealed by the publication of the later volumes of the census. But we know that so far as the census returns of the population of Canada are concerned, the head of the census bureau in 1891 came within less than 600 of what was found in the end to be the exact population, and that in the present census the error is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 40,000 or 50,000. That is a simple fact, but it is a test case, and goes to show that there was more accuracy and speed in compiling the returns in 1891 than in 1901, and I will be agreeably surprised if it does not prove true as to all the succeeding volumes that there is the same measure of inaccuracy to be found in 1901 as compared with the census of 1891, in every other respect as there was evidenced in that first estimate of the population made in the two successive censuses. I think enough has been proved to show that in every part of the census work there has been an enormous increase of cost, and it has not been shown, so far as I can discover—and I am sure I approached the subject with an open mind—that there was any increased efficiency to compensate the country for the increased cost. Therefore it strikes me that Canada has every reason to be dissatisfied with a census whose only merit is that it has put an enormously large sum of money into the hands of the good supporters of the party now in power.

Mr. G. McEWEN (South Huron). I had no intention, Mr. Speaker, of addressing the House on this subject, and consequently have not followed the example of hon. gentlemen opposite and collected material for a speech, I shall not trespass on your patience to any great extent. The only reason why I do obtrude myself into this debate is because the county which I have the honour to represent has been referred to by the member for North Middlesex (Mr. Sherritt), in such a way that I can hardly afford to allow his remarks to go unchallenged. The hon. gentleman, in comparing the labour of taking the census of 1901 with the work done in 1891, argued that as the population was less in the later period, the work of taking the census must have been correspondingly decreased. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that does not follow at all. I find, on looking at the census of 1901, that in some cases over 400 more questions were asked than in the previous census. In the farmers' schedules 127 questions were asked in 1901 as compared with 75 in 1891. In those of the latter are included four questions relating to farm buildings, twelve to classified areas of farm land, twenty-two to orchard trees, vines and fruits, thirty-seven to field crops, twenty-six to live stock and animal products, and twenty-three to values of lands, buildings, field and fruit crops and labour. And no system of agricultural enumeration is satisfactory which does not take account of the areas devoted to agricultural purposes, the schedules are framed to procure as far as practicable the acreage as well as the production of every crop. That shows that the work done in 1901, in this particular item, is over three-quarters more than what was done in 1891. To my mind, that certainly, supposing the cost is more than double, fully justifies that expenditure. I find also that with reference to the forest industry, fifty questions were asked in each case in the census of 1901 as compared with twenty-two in the census of 1891, or more than double. There was more than double the work done in 1901, than was performed in 1891. It has been suggested that the enumerators had only to take down the replies to these different questions when they were at the house when making each visit. Besides not only did this entail extra work at each house visited, but it also entailed a great deal of labour, and that where the extra work came in was not in travelling the distances between those different places. Well, with regard more particularly to the section to which I belong, the distances between the houses are very trifling. The concessions are all occupied, and when you go up one and down the other, you do not have to go more than one-quarter of a mile between each house on the same side, and when you cross from one house to the other opposite, the distance is not more than forty rods, consequently the travelling between the houses does not amount to nearly as much work as taking down the answers. I find that there are three inquiries in the special form for obtaining the record of persons temporarily absent, twenty-nine in the one for manufactures of clay products, and thirty in the one for manufacture of butter and cheese. These, added to the inquiries contained in the regular schedules, make a total of 623 or 407 more than the number of inquiries contained in the schedules employed in taking the census of 1891. That I think shows good justification for the extra expense. Again in the unorganized territories in the west, 129 questions were asked in 1891, as compared with 192 in 1901, or a difference of 63, or just about double. Now I may say that there has been a large increase in the last decade as I can testify by experience with the labour I employ, it costs me twenty five per cent more now than it did ten years ago. So you will see that there was good ground for the extra expense.

The hon. member for North Middlesex made reference to a harbour which was erected in my part of the country, and which has been pretty well discussed in this House. I am afraid that hon. gentlemen opposite will not get very much comfort out of that harbour, for it was well known that it was the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) who was the cause of its being built. It was he who came up there and ordered the expenditure. For my part, I am very much pleased that he has gone over to the other side, where these hon. gentlemen are now harbouring him in their arms, and I think in him they will find a kindred soul. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) says that the census will never be completed. That remark hardly comes with good grace from the other side, and it would have been just as well for them had my hon. friend left it unsaid. I find that the late government did not complete its census until this parliament was elected, in 1896. The last volume was published in 1897, so that we on this side have got a few years yet to wait before we will have reached the length of time taken by hon. gentlemen opposite to complete their census. They are therefore a little premature in saying that our census will never be completed. As regards the total cost of the census, I think any increase in the expenditure is amply justified by the much more complete and accurate information obtained and by the greatly increased work that had to be done at headquarters to compile and collate all that information, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that we have a census upon which we can rely, and not, as in the case of the last one, a census in which much of the information given was absolutely unreliable. And we have, in addition to that, the fact that the population has increased very much, which, of course, added to the cost as compared with 1891, not only in the enumeration, but in the work of compilation here at Ottawa.

Mr. J. CLANCY (Bothwell). I should at any stage of the session despair of bringing hon. gentlemen to vote for the motion of my hon. friend from Peel——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY—and I still further despair of convincing my hon. friend who says: 'Hear, hear'—but I especially despair on this occasion of hon. gentlemen opposite doing what is right. I am not going into the discussion of this question generally——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY—and I am glad to have the approval in advance of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Campbell). I promise the hon. gentleman I will be only a few minutes. I want to deal mainly with one constituency, and I choose that of the whip of the Liberal party (Mr. Calvert) certainly a distinguished gentleman to occupy so distinguished a position. I think that constituency would be a fair sample of Liberal morality. It would be an abomination to suppose that there was anything worse in the riding of the whip of the Liberal party in connection with the taking of the census than in any other constituency. That hon. gentleman recommended all the officers and knew all about them, and I say that no one would imagine that any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House could maintain a higher standing with regard to these appointments than the whip of the party. I need hardly say that every hon. gentleman on the other side who recommended the commissioner in his riding and even went so far as to recommend that every one of the enumerators must be held responsible. Now, the constituency represented by the whip of the Liberal party is West Middlesex. The population of that riding in 1891 was 17,288, and it costs $1,302.21 to take the census that year. In 1901, the riding did not have so large a population. It will be remembered that the Liberal party were in opposition during a very considerable part of the decade, and it will be remembered also that they were among the most active immigration agents of the United States during that period and lost no opportunity of assuring the people that Canada was not a country fit to live in. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) made the statement in this House a session or two ago that the London 'Advertiser' had within that period some 900 subscribers in the United States, all of whom had left Canada. This kind of thing may account for the population of the riding having shrunk from 17,288 in 1891 to 15,543 in 1901. But what does the House suppose it cost to take the census during this year of lower population? Instead of $1,302.31, the cost was $3,113.37. Let me give you some instances of Liberal economy. I am not quoting from mere hearsay. We had an examination into this matter before the Public Accounts Committee and I have before me the evidence taken in that examination. Take the case of the village of Glencoe, a little place of about 1,000 inhabitants. The recording in that village cost $57.40 and the horse-hire was $63. Then, take the little village of Newbury, the population of which is about three or four hundred. The recording there cost $29.50 while the horse-hire in the village cost $27. Then, take the town of Strathroy, the town in which the Liberal whip resides. The recording in the town of Strathroy cost $173.50 and the horse-hire $186. Putting it all together the recording cost $260.15, and the horse-hire $276 of these places. Let me give you some of the evidence. I am sorry that my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) is not in his place. But, as I have said, I shall not give mere hearsay, but shall quote from the evidence given before the Public Accounts Committee. Of course, it will be understood that we have merely touched the fringe when we have investigated West Middlesex. Here is the evidence of Mr. McDougal, the commissioner for the riding:

Q. Do you know Mr. Alex. Leach of Strathroy?
A. I do.
Q. What does he do?
A. I do not know what he does.
Q. Never inquired I suppose. Does he live in the town?
A. He lives in the town.
Q. How old is he? Seventy?
A. I would judge that he was probably more, he is a good age, an old gray-haired man.
Q. Is he a delicate man?
A. He is.

My hon. friend from South Brant said they had selected the best men.

Q. Do you think he would be able to walk from house to house to take the census?
A. I could not say, although he is very crippled.
Q. Does he use crutches?
A. No sir, not that I am aware of.
Q. But would you feel bound to allow him horse-hire on account of his age?

A. If he put it in his account I certainly would allow it.

Q. Well, you seem to have allowed Mr. Leach twenty-two days' horse-hire ?

A. Yes.

Q. Aggregating $33 ? and you say if he put it in, you would have allowed it to him on account of his age ?

A. Not altogether on that account ; I would have allowed it because he had it in his account.

Q. All you had to do was to find it in his account and you allowed it ?

A. I allowed that part of it.

Q. Is Mr. Duncan Patterson an old gentleman seventy years of age?

A. He is quite an old man.

Q. Does he reside in Strathroy ?

A. I think he does, or very near it on the town line.

Q. What is he—a healthy rugged man ?

A. I would not call him so.

Q. He is able to go about from house to house?

A. I would judge so.

Q. Is he old enough now to elicit your sympathies ?

A. I did not have any sympathies.

Q. You have none. ?

A. No, sir.

Q. If he put in horse-hire, you allowed it because it was in there ?

A. Yes, sir, because it was in there.

Q. Do you know Mr. John R. Clarke ?

You see, Mr. Speaker, I take them in consecutive order.

A. I do, sir.

Q. How old a man is he ?

A. I could not say, probably more than sixty.

Q. Is he a vigourous man ?

A. I would not call him so.

Q. Delicate is he ?—A. Fairly healthy I think, although he has a delicate appearance, but I could not say whether he is delicate or not.

Q. You would think he was able to go about at sixty taking the census in a place like Strathroy?—A. In part of it.

Q. Now he is allowed fourteen days' horse-hire, $21. You allowed the others partly on account of age ?—A. I beg pardon, I did not say so.

Q. Well, because Mr. Clarke was fortunate enough to put it in there ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the reason ?—A. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I could read pages of that kind of history in West Middlesex. I shall not detain the House further than to say that Mr. McDougal—and I take it as a fair sample—declares in his evidence that he did not make any declaration nor did he receive any declarations as to the accuracy of his accounts ; all he had to do in every instance was to put in the account and it was paid.

Mr. BROCK. And to vote right.

Mr. CLANCY. And to vote right. We have there in evidence that whatever account was put in it was paid, although the law requires that a declaration should be made in every case, the commissioner stated upon oath that he took no declarations, contrary to law, and contrary to a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture who, in his place in this House, when he was defending the cost of the census, declared that in every instance the solemn declaration of the parties was taken in regard to the matter. Yet we find in that single sample selected, that the commissioner states that in no case did he take any declarations from the parties who had been employed on the census. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough to make it perfectly clear that the most wretched conduct prevailed throughout the whole of Canada in the taking of this census, and one evidence is the fact that the census of 1891 cost $449,991, while that of 1901 cost $1,198,268. I have given you a fair sample in the only case which I had occasion to examine, and it was a fair sample of the system that pervaded the whole thing from start to finish. Is it any wonder that this alarming cost should be saddled upon the people of Canada for useless purposes ? Why, Sir, the census in many cases are utterly useless, they are crowded with the most useless tables, and these are given as a reason for having such an enormously increased cost. But you can see the folly at once. These are mere pretexts for that condition of things. I have given you a fair sample of how the accounts have been padded out. It was stated by some gentlemen that the census have been altered. If any hon. gentleman now is prepared to dispute that I will read from the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, that they were altered, that the schedules were changed, that slips were put in, and that this was of general occurrence. There is no use for hon. gentlemen to deny these facts, they are here in evidence and can be produced, and they know it perfectly well. Now I have nothing more to say in conclusion but this——

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, I know my hon. friend is impatient. I sympathize with my hon. friend. I am astonished at his moderation, under such circumstances, that he did not say ' hear, hear ' long ago.

Mr. BOYD. Read him the evidence.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, I will not weary the hon. gentleman, I will not put such a strain upon him. I can only tell him that the record of the government in taking this census is a perfectly scandalous one, it is one over which the hon. gentlemen opposite should hang their heads in shame. I shall have much pleasure in supporting the amendment of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), and I shall expect that our friends opposite will do the same. If there ever was a motion brought up in this House that invited the courage of hon. gentlemen, it is the motion of my hon. friend to censure the conduct of the government in making this census. Not only have they cost this enormous sum, but they are of little value in many respects. They were made in some cases by men declared to be so old that they could not walk about the streets, men as stated by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr.

Bell) who were mere voters and were nearly past the voting age. I repeat that I shall be astonished if hon. gentlemen opposite do not support my hon. friend's motion.

Amendment negatived, motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

To cover cost of the extension of the coast service and surveys on the northern coast of Canada, $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that the government are still carrying on their expedition to ascertain the navigability of Hudson bay and straits?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is going on.

Department of Indian Affairs—contingencies—further amount required, $3,500.

The PRIME MINISTER. This item of $3,500 is divided under two heads. The sum of $2,500 is required for printing the treaties which we have made with the several bands of Indians. These treaties have been collected in book form, but the edition is exhausted, and it is for the purpose of supplying a new issue of these treaties that this vote is required. Then there is the sum of $1,000 for printing and stationery generally. The amount provided for it at the present time is insufficient, and this additional amount has become indispensable.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that the right hon. gentleman proposes to collate all the treaties in book form?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that would be a very convenient and a very proper thing to do.

North-west Mounted Police—salaries—to pay A. V. Joyce, junior second-class clerk, for one optional subject, $50.

The PRIME MINISTER. This Mr. Joyce has passed the examination in one optional subject, and is therefore entitled to an increase of $50.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is he paid a certain sum for one optional subject ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Under the Civil Service Act, if one of the clerks passes an examination for a subject which is optional, such as typewriting or stenography, he becomes entitled, not as a matter of course, but in the discretion of the government, to an increase of $50.

To provide for the salary of a second-class clerk, E. F. Drake, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,200.

The PRIME MINISTER. The circumstances under which this vote is required are as follows : Mr. Drake is a staff sergeant in the mounted police. He enlisted on the 14th August, 1888. He has done work in the inside service, and is a very good officer. At the present time he receives $1,131.50, and it is proposed to give him an additional salary, which will raise his salary to $1,200.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What service is he now in ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He is in the inside service. He enlisted formerly as a constable and then became a sergeant, after which he was transferred to the inside service at Ottawa. He performs clerical work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does he take the place of any other clerk in the inside service, or is he an additional clerk ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, he is taking nobody's place. He has been transferred. At the present time he is not permanent. We intend to make him a permanent officer and give him a salary of $1,200. The increase will be the difference between $1,131.50 and $1,200.

Mr. SPROULE. Where did he get $1,131 ?

The PRIME MINISTER. At Ottawa. He has been in Ottawa for seven years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not the appointment of an additional officer at all ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And only a trifling addition in salary ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Department of the Interior—salaries—amount underestimated in two junior class clerkships, $212.50.

The PRIME MINISTER. This $212.50 is to provide for increases in the salaries of Mr. Beauchamp and Miss Mary Guthrie. Mr. Beauchamp was appointed a junior second-class clerk on the 1st July, 1902, at a salary of $600 per annum. He had passed, prior to his appointment, in two optional subjects, stenography and typewriting, and therefore it was decided to grant him $50 for each optional, in accordance with the rule of the service. That will raise his salary from $600 to $700. Then, the same explanation applies to the case of Miss Guthrie. Miss Guthrie was appointed by Order in Council on the 1st April, 1903, as a junior second-class clerk, vice J. P. Dunne, promoted, and as she then had passed in two optional subjects, stenography and typewriting, her salary was fixed at $700 per annum. When preparing the main estimates for the next fiscal year provision was made to fill the position left vacant by the promotion of Mr. Dunne by a second-class clerk at a salary of $600, and it is necessary to ask for $100 to be voted to cover the amount of her salary. Miss Guthrie will, on the 1st April, 1904, be entitled to the statutory increment of her class, and in three months from the 30th June, 1904, she will be entitled to an extra amount of $12.50. This makes up the amount of $212.50.

Mr. SPROULE. You are starting with pretty good salaries.

The PRIME MINISTER. The statute provides that the initial salary should be $600, and the statute gives her $700, she having passed two optional subjects. It is a statutory right.

Four additional second-class clerks, one at $650, and three at $600 each, $2,450.

The PRIME MINISTER. This amount is required as follows : S. W. Hobart, who has been on the temporary staff since January, 1900, and who has passed in one optional subject, $650 ; J. B. Duhamel, employed as temporary messenger and clerk since September, 1903, $600 ; M. P. Morris, appointed February, 1900, $600 ; Wm. Bailey, new appointment, $600.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these are new appointments ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is only one who now comes into the department.

Mr. SPROULE. But the rest have been appointed quite recently ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose as the business of the department increases the number of clerks will have to be increased, but it is desirable that we should know exactly what additions have been made during the past six or seven years.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will allow the item to stand for a moment, and perhaps the deputy minister will be able to furnish me the information.

Item allowed to stand.

Salaries and expenses of mines branch, $10,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. The general and immediate object of the work of this branch to be the collection and publication of data regarding the economic minerals of the country, and of the processes and activities connected with their utilization. This to be accomplished under the following heads: (A.) statistics, covering the investigations into: The production, consumption, exports and imports of the economic minerals of the country, the collecting of figures, relating to cost, freight, markets, and so forth. These tabulated on a proper system of classification, the discussions as to the causes of variation of production, exports and imports, fluctuations of markets, &c., to be published annually, or at any such frequent intervals as may be found practicable.

(B.) Technological: Covering the preparation and publication of the bulletins and monographs giving information in a concise form regarding: 1. The location, mode of occurrence, extent and character of the various economic mineral deposits. 2. Assays, analyses of ores, and in the case of building material, tests of strength and endurance of pressure, &c. 3. Description of the method of exploitation, treatment for extraction of metallic contents, for resultant products. The information to be obtained from material already published, but scattered in a great measure inaccessible, to be supplemented wherever necessary by visit of officer in charge to the respective localities. A separate monogram for each mineral, as coal, iron, copper, nickel, gold, &c. (except building materials which may be written up as a class). To be published, giving all available information in reference to them. the publications specially framed to meet the needs of the public commercially interested in these matters and annually bound in one volume, entitled 'The mineral resources of Canada.' The separate monograms to be distributed as widely and freely as possible to bring the mineral wealth of Canada prominently before the investing public and thus aid in bringing capital into the country, necessary for the development of its resources. To accomplish this object it will require a staff of experts to collect data, make reports, and furnish reliable assays, analyses, of the economic minerals of the country. The staff will consist of technical officers (mining geologists). In other words this is to establish a mining bureau on the pattern of a similar bureau in Washington.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it proposed to avail of the present staff of the department for this branch?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think it is to be an annex of the Geological Department. This is the memo. placed in my hand by the minister before he left for England. To accomplish this object we require a staff of experts to collect data, make reports, and furnish reliable assays and analyses of the economic minerals of the country. I presume the staff would assist the technical officers, but I also presume it will require some addition to the present staff.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this branch to be under the head of the Geological Survey?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, Dr. Haanel, superintendent of mines, will be at the head of this branch.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the creation of a new branch. Will the right hon. gentleman tell us how many will be employed in that branch and the salaries they will get?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not more than two or three besides the superintendent, all experts.

Mr. SPROULE. And next year you will require two or three more.

The PRIME MINISTER. Possibly, but although this is a growing time, it is our intention at present to limit it to the superintendent and not more than two or three experts.

Mr. SPROULE. What salaries do you propose to pay these experts?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know, but it is calculated that the whole expenditure should not exceed $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Who will be the man in charge?

The PRIME MINISTER. Dr. Haanel, the superintendent of mining.

Mr. SPROULE. What is his salary to be?

The PRIME MINISTER. The vote now asked will not go to pay his salary. He is already employed in the department, but it is proposed, in addition to the duties he now has to perform, that we shall establish such a bureau and place under him two, and perhaps three experts and no more.

Mr. SPROULE. What is his salary now?

The PRIME MINISTER. $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How far is it permissible to establish a branch like that without any amendment to the law? Have you the right to establish all the branches you think it wise to establish without the authority of law, simply making it a departmental matter?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no doubt that with this amount of money voted by parliament the government has perfect authority to create such a work, but it will last only one year. Unless it is provided next year it will lapse, ipso facto; it cannot be continued from year to year as it could if it were established by statute.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the more proper way would be to establish a branch by statute.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think it would be preferable to establish it this way. It is experimental and may not prove conclusively satisfactory and therefore I think it better to do it in this way. If it works well perhaps the idea of my hon. friend will then be adopted but at the present time I think my hon. friend will agree that it is better to have it as it is.

Mr. SPROULE. We already have a statistical branch and as this is simply collecting statistics along another line I do not see why this should not be added to the statistical branch.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is collecting statistics on another line of a very special character, and as it is stated in the memorial I presented to the House it is proposed to issue a volume to be entitled : 'The Mineral Resources of Canada.' I doubt very much if we would have in the Department of Agriculture a staff of such special knowledge and competence as to collect the information which is to be included in this volume. It will require the services of expert mineralogists to perform this work.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me it would be the easiest matter in the world to appoint an expert on this subject to the statistical branch.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not say my hon. friend may not be right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that if you are to create a sub-department of the Department of the Interior called the mines branch, it would be necessary to have a statute eventually; I think the hon. member for East Grey is perfectly correct about that. I would like to know what Dr. Haanel's position is at present; what are his duties in the Department of the Interior, how long has he been in the department and what have been his duties up to the present time ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Dr. Haanel has been in the employment of the government as superintendent of mining for three or four years, my impression is four years. He has been performing duties, an account of which will be found in the report of the Minister of the Interior, he has been collecting material, looking after the different interests in mining, looking after the establishment of an assay office in Vancouver and cognate subjects. He has made an annual report of his work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As far as mining in my own province is concerned I have not heard of any efforts on his part; it may be that he has done something about the assay office at Vancouver. My hon. friend's description of his duties seems to be rather vague; the mere fact that he is superintendent of mining does not convey much information unless we know his duties and what he has accomplished. Has he superintended the construction of the assay office or what has he done in connection with it ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He established the assay office, bought the machinery, had charge of the work of construction and has carried on everything in regard to the establishment of the office. I am sorry to say that I am not as familiar with his report as I might be.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I quite understand that it is very hard to become familiar with the work of the assay office at Vancouver. I tried to gain admission to it, and although I disclosed my identity as a member of this House I was refused admission.

The PRIME MINISTER. That I suppose was under regulations.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I do not know that there should be any such regulations.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the condition of your office at present, is it in operation ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It has been in operation about two years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What has Dr. Haanel been doing during the two years since the office was completed ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He has full charge of it and superintends its management. The duties of Dr. Haanel are certainly more important than my hon. friends opposite are disposed to believe. The mining development of this country is increasing very fast and Dr. Haanel, as I am informed, is very often communicated with by people from all parts of the country to examine samples and mines, and his labours I understand, have been of great value and assistance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not finding fault with his labours ; I am trying to find out what he really has done, and I realize that my right hon. friend is not familiar with the department as the Minister of the Interior would be, but he has the information at his hand and possibly we can succeed in getting at something. I have not heard anything that this gentleman has done in my province, but he may have done a great deal somewhere else, and I would like to know what it is. The work which my hon. friend has described has, so far as I am aware, hitherto been done by the officers of the Geological Survey, and I do not know that this gentleman had taken any part in it. Will my right hon. friend tell us what the qualifications of Dr. Haanel are for the work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He was at first professor in the University of Victoria at Cobourg and then at Syracuse, N.Y. The report of Dr. Haanel will be found on page 17 of the Sessional Papers of 1902, No. 25.

Mr. SPROULE. What impresses me is the fact that you have no authority for the organization of this branch.

The PRIME MINISTER. The office of superintendent of the mining branch was established three or four years ago, and we are not creating a new office.

Mr. SPROULE. If I remember correctly, the office established was that of superintendent of the mines, which has no connection with this.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am informed by my deputy that Mr. Pearce was for many years superintendent of mines. It is not a new office. Mr. Pearce, who has a very wide range of knowledge of the geology of the territories, has been made chief inspector of the surveys there, and Dr. Haanel was appointed in his place.

Mr. SPROULE. I know Mr. Pearce very well and he appears to be a sort of itinerant in his duties, as he has held many offices. He has now assumed the dignity of head of a branch office, and no doubt he will soon be surrounded by a dozen clerks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that the head of a branch of this kind should have practical knowledge. I would ask my right hon. friend what practical experience or training Dr. Haanel has had ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection of Dr. Haanel is that he is a distinguished graduate of a university in Germany and was professor of mineralogy and geology in Victoria University, when that university became affiliated with Toronto University, it ceased to maintain the chair of mineralogy and geology, and in that way it lost the services of Dr. Haanel. I have heard the late Chancellor Nellis of Victoria University speak in the highest terms of Professor Haanel.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know anything thing about Dr. Haanel. I do not think I have ever heard of him before, and that was why I was anxious to find out what were his qualifications to preside over this mines branch. What you require in that position is a man that has not only theoretical but practical knowledge, and a man, in the prime of life at least, and I would prefer a young man. We should not be satisfied with selecting some gentleman who has occupied a theoretical chair at some university, but who would not be likely to give the practical service which a branch of this kind demands. If we are to spend money for this very important service, it is, of course, desirable, as my right hon. friend will recognize, that we should have the very best man we can procure at the head of it. It is of no use to establish it otherwise. This is the reason I make these inquiries. I shall be very glad to recognize Dr. Haanel's ability when I understand that he possesses the qualifications necessary for the office. But it is our duty to find out something about him as this vote contemplates a very important addition to the service, and that is the reason why I think we should have a little more knowledge as to his qualifications than has been given to us this evening.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am obliged to my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) for giving information which I had not myself. I know Dr. Haanel, having met him once or twice. As things go, he is in the prime of life—I think about fifty-five or thereabouts. According to the Postmaster General, he has a good record. All the information I have of him is that he is an excellent man for the place, that none better could be found.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that he was not even a British subject, but a naturalized citizen of the United States.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. He has been in the United States a long time.

The PRIME MINISTER. He is a Canadian.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He lived here for many years.

Mr. SPROULE. But he lived in the United States afterwards.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know nothing about his career since he separated from the University of Victoria. But for many years he was one of their strong professors, as I have stated.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose my hon. friend (Hon. Sir William Mulock) is a graduate of the University of Victoria ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I graduated from that university, but I never heard of Dr. Haanel. Of course, that was many years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) suggests the flight of years.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the employees in this branch come under the provisions of the Civil Service Act ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. That is just where the trouble comes in. It seems to me that when you establish an additional branch, it ought to be established under the law, and its employees should come under the Civil Service Act, and be in every sense a branch of the civil service.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) knows that in the Railway Department and in the Public Works Department there are officers, engineers especially, who have been in the department for fifteen or twenty years and do not come under the Civil Service Rule. We know Mr. Douglas, engineer of the Railway Department is one of these. Such officers do not contribute to the pension fund, and do not belong to the civil service regularly.

Mr. SPROULE. The Civil Service Act provides for technical branches.

The PRIME MINISTER. These officers are provided for from year to year.

Mr. SPROULE. My recollection is that such officers are included under the Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I am satisfied that more than half the engineers of the department are appointed from year to year or from half year to half year.

Mr. COCHRANE. When was the report made from which the Prime Minister quoted ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This report was submitted to the minister on the 1st of December, 1902.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is this the first report he has made ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Four additional junior second-class clerks, one at $650 and three at $600 each, $2,450.

The PRIME MINISTER. With regard to the question put by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), I am informed by the deputy minister that the number of permanent appointments made to the service in the Department of the Interior during the last four years is between fifteen and twenty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the duties of the officers appointed—are they entirely clerical ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Entirely clerical.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the cause of so great an increase in the mere clerical work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am informed that the work has doubled up in the last three years. I am satisfied that in the lands branch alone the business has more than trebled, more than quadrupled.

Mr. COCHRANE. Where has the Prime Minister located his new officers ? He used to tell us years ago that the departments were full.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am very sorry to say that we have been obliged to rent a great many buildings in the city.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, unfortunately—we know that.

Geological Survey—to provide for the salary of one second-class clerk, $1,100.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to provide a salary for a second-class clerk, Mr. McKinnon. He has been fourteten years in the department and was engaged until three years ago in a clerical capacity, though officially of lower rank. He was promoted to second-class clerk, July, 1900. For the last three seasons he has been assistant to Mr. Hugh Fletcher in surveys in Nova Scotia, and during the winter compiled the work done in the field. Mr. Fletcher recommends him as a good surveyor and draughtsman. This item is to provide his salary.

Mr. SPROULE. This is promotion for him. Who takes his place ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Some greenhorn, I suppose.

The PRIME MINISTER. Nobody, that I know of—unless some greenhorn, as the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume his place will be filled. What was his salary before ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He was at the maximum of his class, and was receiving $1,000. This will give him an additional $100. He is transferred from one class to another which necessitates the voting of his salary. I am glad to say it will not be necessary to put even a greenhorn in his place, as he simply continues with a higher salary.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the office he occupied abolished ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He is not abolished.

Mr. SPROULE. But the government have already provided in the estimates a salary for this position. The Prime Minister says that is not to be filled, yet another salary is being provided.

The PRIME MINISTER. The salary will not be paid if the place is not filled.

Mr. SPROULE. But why vote money that is not wanted ? That is not a business-like way of making up the estimates.

The PRIME MINISTER. I admit that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). According to the facts given by the Prime Minister, we should be asked to vote only $100.

The PRIME MINISTER. That seems a fair objection. Let the item stand.

Item allowed to stand.

To pay A. P. Low, a technical officer, 12 months from July 1st, $2,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Low was formerly attached to the Geological Survey, and resigned some years ago. He has recently been reengaged, but his engagement was subsequent to the date that the main estimates were approved of, and his salary could not then be provided for. He was for twenty years employed in the Geological Survey, and resigned in June, 1901. In February last he returned to the Survey in order to take charge of the Hudson bay expedition.

Mr. SPROULE. I have here the Civil Service Act, and I am inclined to think that the First Minister puts a strained interpretation on it. It says that the 'Civil Service Act shall include and consist of all classes of employees in or under the several branches of the executive government and in the office of the Auditor General,' and included in subsections A and B. Subsection A mentions deputy heads and officers who have special qualifications, including in that term, I suppose, draughtsmen and civil engineers. But I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that half the men employed in the public works do not come under the Civil Service Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. They can come under it, undoubtedly, but what I had in my mind was the regular service, in which all the officers are admitted to the responsibilities and advantages of the Act, participating for instance in the retirement fund. I repeat that there are many officers, engineers, in the Public Works Department and in the Railways Department, who do not contribute to the pension fund, and who properly do not come under the terms of the Civil Service Act. A good many do, but quite a number do not.

Mr. SPROULE. They come under it so far as promotion and salaries go, though they do not participate in the retirement allowance. But as I always understood the Act, it does not say they 'may.' It says that all classes of the employees in the government of Canada or in the office of the Auditor General, appointed by Order in Council, 'shall' come under it. Schedule A mentions the deputy heads and officers who have special technical qualifications, chief clerks, first, second and third-class clerks, and messengers. Then, going on, schedule B mentions the officers in the Customs and Inland Revenue. I always understood that not only they must come under it, but all the promotions must be made under the Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the Civil Service Act, as my hon. friend knows, is full of mysteries, and for my part I have never had time to undertake to master it. There are a certain number of engineers who do not come under the terms of this Act so far as salaries, promotions, and pensions are concerned. They are technical officers so-called, who have been appointed long ago, some of whom to my knowledge have been in the service for more than 35 years, and are still there, and have to be appointed every six months.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the reason my right hon. friend put in so many of these expressions 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,' is that he has always regarded that Act as a mystery. That is an explanation of it that I never quite appreciated before. In regard to this item for Mr. Low, was not provision made for these technical officers in the vote for the Geological Survey?

The PRIME MINISTER. No. The estimates were prepared before Mr. Low returned to the service. He came back to the service for a special object, that is, to take charge of the expedition to the Hudson bay. His salary was not provided for in the main estimates, and that is the reason we ask for it now. As to this there is no mystery.

Additional amount required to meet the salary of one technical officer, $350.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is Mr. Joseph Kelly, who has been employed in the department since 1897. This increase, with the $50 voted in the main estimates, raises his salary to $1,500.

Office of the High Commissioner for Canada in England—to increase the salary of C. J. Taylor to $1,700, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $100.

To pay E. Churchouse, a junior second-class clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $750.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to carry out a recommendation made to me by the High Commissioner. One of the officers, Mr. Reynolds, has been superannuated, and this is to promote Mr. Taylor. The High Commissioner writes me that Mr. Taylor's salary last year was $1,550, and Mr. Colmer, before his resignation, recommended him for an addition of $50, making his pay $1,600 for 1903-4. But in consideration of his becoming assistant secretary, the High Commissioner recommends that his salary be made $1,700. He also recommends that Mr. Churchouse be appointed. Mr. Churchouse has been in the office for eleven years, and is expert at shorthand and typewriting. The government think it well to carry out these recommendations of the High Commissioner. We could not do so unless we made use of this expression 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' If we followed the Civil Service Act, we could not give an increase to Mr. Taylor of more than $50.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you use the same expression in regard to Mr. Churchouse?

The PRIME MINISTER. Because he has passed the age of 35, at which he could be appointed under the Civil Service Act. He is now 36 years of age. We appoint him on the recommendation of the High Commissioner.

Dominion lands chargeable to income—further amount required for salaries for outside service, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you doing in the Dominion lands service this year? Is it intended to send out as many surveyors as last year or more ?

The PRIME MINISTER. More. When the estimates for the next fiscal year 1903-4 were framed in October last it was thought, according to the then existing condition, that the sum of $105,900 would be sufficient to pay the salaries of the Dominion lands outside service officers for the fiscal year 1903.

Since then a great many changes have taken place owing to the large number of settlers coming into the North-west. New clerks were appointed to the several land offices to enable them to keep pace with the increased work and sub-agents were placed at the different points to facilitate government transactions with settlers. I can give the detailed information, but perhaps I shall not be required to do so. I have a statement here showing the amount that is required to pay salaries of the Dominion lands outside and inside service for the fiscal year 1903-4 according to the pay-list as it existed on the 25th June last. It is as follows :

J. G. Turriff, commissioner.. ..	$3,000 00
T. R. Burpee, chief clerk.. ..	2,300 00
F. F. Dixon, clerk..	1,500 00
S. Maber..	1,200 00
A. Kemeys-Tynte..	800 00
A. C. Kelly..	480 00
Miss L. May..	527 00
Miss J. Orme..	467 50
Mrs. M. E. Mullhall	497 50
Miss Mabel Campbell..	467 50
Dr. E. Haanel..	3,000 00

Mr. SPROULE. Is not that the gentleman we have been taking the vote for in connection with the mines branch ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the salaries of all these officers have been voted in the main estimates, but I am giving the details in order to show that beyond the amount in the main estimates we require $10,000 which is necessitated by the increased work in the department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is the outside service ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is all outside service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My right hon. friend was reading the salaries of a number of ladies. What have they to do with the outside service ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I was giving to my hon. friend the salaries which had been already voted in the estimates, but to give a full explanation of what is required I would have to read about three pages of statistics showing item by item all that is required for the inside and outside service. What we require now for the outside service is $10,000 more, but I was giving the total expenditure which is to be made in the department for both inside and outside service. The outside and inside service will require this year $115,000 instead of $105,000 which was at first estimated. This is necessitated by the additional work that has to be performed in the Department of the Interior chiefly on account of the increased development in the lands branch.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. Prime Minister in reading that list gave us the name of Dr. Haanel who is provided for as the head of the mines branch. I drew attention to the fact that in the mines branch we voted his salary but the right hon. gentleman said 'no.' I understood the list of salaries which the hon. gentleman read was for the lands branch.

The PRIME MINISTER. The salaries, the list of which I was reading are not at all salaries to be voted. I was giving the salaries which had been voted in the main estimates. In order to make this letter intelligible I commenced to read the list but it would take too long to give all the details of the expenditure which is to be made in the Department of the Interior upon this special branch of work. The amount which was estimated for this branch was $105,000 but it is now found that the branch will require $115,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. Prime Minister mentioned amongst those that are in that branch the name of Dr. Haanel and his salary is voted in the main estimates. Now, he is transferred to the mining branch and we have voted his salary again.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. We voted $10,000 for the mines branch and Dr. Haanel is at the head of the mines branch for which we voted salaries.

The PRIME MINISTER. That $10,000 is to cover the salaries and expenses in connection with the mines branch, but it does not provide for the salary of Dr. Haanel. Dr. Haanel is already provided for.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the right hon. gentleman must be a little in error in his figures. We have an increase of $10,000 for the outside service. It would not be unreasonable to ask for information as to how this money will be applied. I think we should know for what purpose this money is to be expended. I would gather from what the right hon. gentleman said that the vote this year is to be only $10,000 more this year than last year. If my right hon. friend will look at the main estimates he will see that there is an increase of $12,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Possibly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So that by adding that to his further $10,000 we have an increase of $22,000 for this service of the Department of the Interior. If you go back to last year you will find that the amount voted was $168,782, and you have increases aggregating $53,000 for Dominion lands chargeable to income. I am not including Dominion lands chargeable to capital. It seems to me that an increase of $53,000 upon an expenditure of $168,782 is one that demands more explanation.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to say that I cannot give more information than I have given already as to why this amount is required. I am informed by the department that the increase of business has been such as to require this additional service. I am sorry that the information which has been placed in my hand has not been placed perhaps in such a manner as I would have liked to have had it. I have here information with respect to the total vote of $115,000, whereas I should have had the detailed information with regard to this $10,000. I can give the names of the gentlemen and all the details.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would not afford much information, because we would not know whether these gentlemen were additional officers or whether their salaries are increased. What we want to know is: To what purpose are you going to apply the $12,000 that has already been voted in addition to the vote of last year, and also details as to the additional vote of $10,000? My right hon. friend would not add anything to the information given by the Minister of the Interior on the previous vote. The officers of the department must know what they are going to do with the money.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no fault to find; we will let the item stand and I will get the information.

Item allowed to stand.

Further amount required for protection of timber and tree planting, $15,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We have already voted this year an additional sum of $10,000. Last year the total vote was $15,000; this year we have already voted $25,000, and we are now asked for $15,000 more. The purpose of this vote commends itself to most hon. gentlemen in the House, but we would like to have details of the increased expenditure. I saw some of the work which is being done in the west last year, and I was much impressed with it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will let the item stand to get the information.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad that the right hon. the Prime Minister is disposed to give the details. On Friday night one of the ministers refused to give us any details as regards the expenditure of a vote. I claim that the minister should tell us what he expected to do with the money, but he absolutely refused.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think he was so much to blame, because I think he did not know.

Item allowed to stand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax),

Further amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, &c., $320,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would remind the right hon. gentleman that we have already voted $430,000, and now we are asked for $320,000 more. The vote last year was $360,000, so that the total increase this year is $390,000, or about 110 per cent more than was voted last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the main estimates were prepared last fall, it was thought that $430,000 would be sufficient, but the great influx of settlers from the United States and Europe, has made it imperative upon us to provide homesteads, and it was decided that this $320,000 should be inserted in the supplementary estimates, to sub-divide a sufficient number of townships to meet the wants of immigration. It is proposed to survey 500 new townships during the next fiscal year. At present, in south-eastern Manitoba there is one party under daily pay; in the Yorkton district, one party under daily pay, renewing surveys; between Lake Winnipeg and Manitoba one party under daily pay; north of Battleford, two parties under daily pay; in the Edmonton district, one party renewing surveys; in the Red Deer district, one party; McLeod district, one party; Rocky mountains, one party; in British Columbia, two parties; and on unforeseen surveys, five parties. In the division of townships between Fort Perry and eastern Assiniboia and Edmonton, there are 60 contracts at $8,000 each, making $612,000 in all. The balance is for the following purposes: Inspection of surveys, $10,000; irrigation surveys, $20,000; Yukon surveys, $45,000; employees at Ottawa, $60,000; miscellaneous, $10,000. The total, $750,000. During the last twelve months 120,000 immigrants have gone in, and I think all will agree that this expenditure is absolutely imperative.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many immigrants did the right hon. gentleman say have gone in?

The PRIME MINISTER. Over 120,000 during the past fiscal year.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these sixty contracts let on schedule prices.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they subdividing, or just blocking out townships?

The PRIME MINISTER. Subdividing. The pay varies according to the country, from $7 to $25.

Mr. SPROULE. You have raised the minimum pay $2.

The PRIME MINISTER. I dare say, but it is a growing time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that immigration which the right hon. gentleman speaks of in the territories alone, or in Manitoba and the territories, or in the whole of Canada ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is for the whole of Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any estimate by the officers of the department as to how much of this immigration went to the territories ?

The PRIME MINISTER. About and over 110,000 for Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is no estimate, I suppose, as between Manitoba and the North-west Territories ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a very distinct recollection of some animated discussions in this House with regard to the extravagance of using less than $300,000 for surveys. It was then said that lands were being surveyed that were not occupied and that it would be necessary later on to hunt up the lines; yet now we are doing exactly the same thing. The salaries are apparently higher than those then paid and there are now sixteen government parties out and sixty contracts, seventy-six all told.

Mr. SCOTT. And more are called for.

Mr. SPROULE. And more are called for; well, it is a very good thing the hon. gentleman is so well satisfied now; his friends were not so easily satisfied a few years ago.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend would admit that we would be liable to be accused of being remiss in our duty if we did not provide facilities for incoming immigrants so that they may at once locate on homesteads. It may be that we have some divided lands that are not occupied, but I do not think we can very well cease surveying. All of the lots divided are not fit for settlement and the immigrants have a right to choose their land ; but on the whole we cannot go back on this work and I think my hon. friend will admit on reflection that it is a work of imperative necessity.

Mr. SPROULE. We have practically no information with regard to the salary or as to the value of the contracts. They are from $7 to $27. That is a sliding scale which is practically equivalent to no information at all and on which you cannot make any calculation. What do you give your surveyors now for a day's work ?

The PRIME MINISTER. $6.50.

Mr. SPROULE. And found ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I noticed in a western paper the other day an allegation that the iron stakes which are used to mark the corners of the lots for settlement were being used for certain culinary purposes by parties who are camping out; they were being used for the purpose of hanging camp kettles and things of that kind and, if as my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) says, the stakes are sometimes pulled up, attention should be given to this by the department. I do not know that the officers of the department have had information or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. They have had information and have been obliged to give notice of prosecution if this is not stopped.

To provide for engraving, lithographing, printing, &c., to bring out maps of work already done, $10,500.

The PRIME MINISTER. This item is explained by the words of the resolution; it is to cover the cost of engraving and lithographing maps, some of which are now in the hands of the engraver and others yet to be sent. These maps are chiefly of the Haliburton district, the country around Pembroke, Brockville, Sudbury, Copper Cliff, Boundary, the Klondike, and so on, different parts of the country of which maps are prepared.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are your maps made ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They are lithographed here by the Federal Press Company.

Mr. SPROULE. Are any of these made in the United States ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware of any and I do not think so, but I can inquire.

Mr. SPROULE. I heard a remark to that effect; I know the Minister of the Interior got out some of his maps in Chicago and it seems to me we should have brains enough to get them out here in Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think so, and this vote, so far as I know, contemplates Canadian and not American work.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the right hon. Prime Minister be good enough to ascertain whether it will be so ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will.

To pay for metallurgical, petrographical and clerical assistance. (Salaries greater than $400 per annum may be paid from this vote, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act), $5,300.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to pay the salaries of the metallurgist and the assayer, Mr. Connor, and Mr. O. E. Leroy, the petographer. Both of these gentlemen do technical work. The balance of the vote is to meet sundry clerical work in connection with the department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is the assayer employed ?

The PRIME MINISTER. He is here in the Geological Survey.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has he anything to do with the assay office ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who is in charge of the assay office at Victoria ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. McCaffrey.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. The next item is $600, to pay the expenses of an inquiry into the cause of the disaster at Frank. Messrs. Connell and Brock made this inquiry.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec—to provide an amount for the repair of roads, $2,100.

Mr. SPROULE. Why are these roads being built ?

The PRIME MINISTER. To explain that, I must explain also the next vote :

To provide an amount for squatters' improvements, Doncaster reserve, $11,325.

The township of Doncaster, in the county of Montcalm, district of Terrebonne, was set apart as an Indian reserve in 1853, for the Iroquois, of Oka and Caughnawaga. But, strange to say, the Indians never took possession of the reserve. They have never lived there, never made any settlement—have not even exercised the right of hunting there. As the country developed, squatters settled on the lands. These squatters applied for a title to the government at Quebec. When the matter was looked into the government at Quebec were obliged to inform these applicants that they could not give them a title, as the township was an Indian reserve. So, the squatters applied to the government at Ottawa for a title. We applied to the Indians at Caughnawaga and Oka to see if they would surrender their rights and take another reserve. But the Indians would not grant a transfer of the land. They insisted upon their rights, even to the extent of the dislodging of the whites. We made several applications to the Indians and the question was the subject of several conferences. We offered them land in some other parts of the country. Still, they insisted that the land belonged to them and would not surrender it, but called upon the Indian Department to dislodge the white settlers. We came to the conclusion that we were helpless in the matter, and would have to dislodge the whites. We could not do so without compensating the settlers. That is why we ask this appropriation of $11,325—to compensate the settlers for their improvements. This item with regard to the building of roads arises out of the same difficulty. The condition of things is particularly unfortunate, because there is a settlement all around the reserve as well as in the reserve itself. To keep faith with the Indians we must dislodge the white settlers in the township and to do that we must compensate the settlers, and also we must cut roads across the reserve for the benefit of the people around the reserve.

Mr. SPROULE. Who valued these improvements ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We sent first an officer of the department who made a valuation ; then sent another officer to review the work of the first. The second officer we sent was Mr. Samuel Bray, chief surveyor. I have here a total statement of the valuation as follows :

Israel Thouin.—Lives at the north-west angle of the reserve. The boundary line is indefinite. It is quite probable that all the buildings and a great portion of the clearings are not on the reserve. Log house on stone foundation, clapboarded in front and one side plastered and well finished ; driving shed. House and shed together..	$1,000
Barn 65 x 42..	400
Butter factory building	100
Sixty-two acres cleared and well fenced.	930
Orchard..	75
Clearing on range 5..	100
Allowed for moving butter-making machinery..	150
Allowed for water conduit and special fencing..	245
	$3,000

This is the amount Mr. Israel Thouin gave Mr. McKenna, and it appears to be a very fair valuation.

Isidore Legault.—This claim is now occupied by ex-Councillor Frank Tirez from Caughnawaga. The owner was absent. He has returned ; Tirez refused to let him have the building. The improvements are on lots 33 and 34, range 5 :

Log house and small outbuildings.	$130
Barn and shed..	100
42 acres cleared..	570
Total..	$800

This is the same valuation given to Mr. McKenna.

Napoleon Constantineau.—Improvements are on lot 36, range 6 :

Log house and small addition.. ..	$100
Barn..	100
Land, 15 acres, well cleared.. ..	180
12 acres, clearing..	320
Small clearing at the rear of lot..	40
Total..	540

The valuation given to Mr. McKenna was $700.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think we get a great deal of information from that. The valuation for clearing land would be about so much and the buildings would be valued according to their quality.

The PRIME MINISTER. I was giving this information to show that the department has taken every precaution, the first valuation having been confirmed with very slight variations by the second valuator. As I said a moment ago, there is nothing else that we can do but what we are doing. We have to keep faith with the Indians. The land is theirs. On the other hand the settlers have gone in on good faith, and, if they have to be removed, we have to ask for an appropriation to compensate them.

Mr. SPROULE. Could you charge anything to the Indian Department for the improvements made ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am afraid not. these Indians have but a very small fund.

Mr. SPROULE. The Prime Minister told us that the Oka Indians were interested in this land. Are these the Indians of Oka, whom the government have been removing to another locality for the last twenty years ?

The PRIME MINISTER. A number of them were removed to a reserve on the Georgian bay, but they have all returned to Oka.

Contribution on behalf of the Rama Indians towards expenses on roads and bridges in the township of Rama, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the old settled municipality—it has been settled for forty or fifty years. Does the government still keep up roads there ?

The PRIME MINISTER. This is one of the cases where we have to keep up roads. It so happens that the reserve is not a compact block, but separate blocks, with intervening blocks settled by white men. Where alternate parcels of land are occupied by white settlers and Indians, the municipality have no control over the reserve, and it is found impossible to maintain the regular system of roads. The same influence operates against a regular school system, as the children of the whites have to cross part of the reserve to reach the school, and this makes it difficult, practically impossible to maintain the schools on account of the inconvenience and extra expense.

Mr. SPROULE. I know the locality very well, and, no doubt, the difficulty with regard to the road is very considerable.

Nova Scotia—to provide an amount for the purchase of lands for reserves, $800.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is for the purchase of 76 acres of wood land in Colchester county which the Indians require for cultivation and for fuel.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think more attention might be given to some of these matters in Nova Scotia. I informed the department two years ago that certain lands reserved for Indians in the county of Halifax, and which were not used by the Indians, could be disposed of for a fair sum, but in the meantime they were being cut over by lumbermen and no precautions were being taken to prevent it. It seems to me that it would be better for the department to look after lands of that kind and see that they are not used for lumbering operations by other people. If it is considered too expensive to provide safeguards for that purpose, it would be better to sell the lands. For example, you are buying land in Colchester county and paying a certain sum of money for it, and if I am correctly informed, there is land in the county of Halifax reserved for the Indians but which is not used by them, and the value of which is being materially depreciated. It is better to do something with it, exchange it, sell it, dispose of it, but do not let it be ruined.

The PRIME MINISTER. The department would like to follow the suggestion of my hon. friend, but he knows that the first condition is to obtain a surrender of the land from the Indians. They are always averse to surrendering anything they have. I understand they are scattered all over the territory, and it is difficult to get them to agree. The question has been taken up several times by the department and they find that difficulty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that the case with regard to the lands that are not occupied by the Indians, and are not actually in use ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It applies to all reserves. The land cannot be disposed of without their consent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is an awkward state of affairs, because in the meantime the land is useless and is deteriorating.

Indians—New Brunswick—to provide an additional amount for salaries, $100.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to provide an increase of salary for Mr. W. B. Carter, who has charge of a large number of Indians. He is an active and competent officer.

To pay for damages by fire on the Indian reserve, Edmundston, $100.

The PRIME MINISTER. While clearing lands the Indians started fires on three occasions, in 1893, in 1894 and in 1895, which spread on to the property of Mr. Bernier, and destroyed his farm-house and fences.

Indians—Manitoba and North-west Territories—to provide an additional amount for implements, $1,500.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to purchase seed drills for the Touchwood Hills agency, and one threshing machine for the Duck Lake agency.

Mr. SPROULE. In the main estimates that vote was reduced by $4,288 and there was some jubilation in consequence. The amount of agricultural implements there was $7,540, instead of $12,237 the year before. Now you come again in the supplementary estimates and ask for an additional amount. This has occurred so many times that I think a little more common sense and business methods might be exercised in the preparation of the main estimates. We have to take a vote over twice, both in the main estimates and the supplementary estimates, that ought to appear in the main estimates alone, and then we would know the full amount we are giving. It would save time and make the book-keeping much more simple.

The PRIME MINISTER. I agree with what the hon. gentleman says, and I shall report it to the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. What I am complaining of is that we make the work double for ourselves. The main estimates ought to contain all that is required for the year. The main estimates this year must have been made up from the experience of last year, they were all submitted to council some time last winter. Surely it ought to be known from the experience of last year about what was required in every one of these lines? I could understand that accidentally something might be overlooked. But I find with regard to these items in Manitoba and the North-west Territories that the very same lines, agricultural implements, seed, livestock, clothing, cattle, surveys and schools, all appear in the main estimates.

The PRIME MINISTER. The explanation is that the demands come early in the fall when the main estimates are prepared, but other demands come in afterwards. In the case of these agencies at Touchwood Hills and Duck Lake, I understand the applications came in too late for the main estimates. But we cannot leave them unprovided for, and hence the necessity for the supplementary estimates.

Additional amount for triennial clothing, $1,200.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is provided for under treaty No. 8. This estimate came after the main estimates had been prepared. They were made after the inspector's return and could not have been provided for earlier.

Mr. SPROULE. You give the Indians a supply of clothing every three years. Can the minister say what Indians have been supplied each year, because they are not all supplied the same year? Surely it would have been as easy to take those who have not been supplied and send them in altogether?

The PRIME MINISTER. The deputy commissioner informs me that it would be impossible to know the number of outfits that have to be provided until the inspector makes his report.

Mr. SPROULE. But he makes two reports.

The PRIME MINISTER. The inspector leaves in the spring and does not return to civilization until late in the fall. That is the reason why we cannot obtain his report earlier.

Mr. SPROULE.

To provide an additional amount for surveys, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. For surveys?

The PRIME MINISTER. Owing to the large amount of survey work being done in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, the vote in the main estimates, $5,000, will be completely exhausted at the close of the year's operations. It is proposed to use the $2,000 to get the surveyors into the field early in the spring of 1904, so as to make the best possible use of their services.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are not the reservations all surveyed before this?

The PRIME MINISTER. The reserve is set aside in a general way and we may not be required to make a survey for a long time until approaching settlement makes it necessary. That is the reason why surveys have been made from time to time.

To provide an additional amount for schools, $3,736.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these schools that require an additional amount?

The PRIME MINISTER. To provide an amount to build a laundry at Rupert's Land Industrial School to replace the one destroyed by fire, one thousand dollars is required. To provide for the rebuilding of the laundry at the Battleford Industrial School lately destroyed by fire, $1,500 is required. To provide a grant towards the maintenance of a boarding school at Albany, on James' bay, $300. To provide for eight extra pupils at $75 at the Isle a la Crosse boarding school. $576; and to provide for five extra pupils at Thunder Child boarding school, $360, making altogether $3,736.

To provide an additional amount for general expenses (from which payments may be made to Dr. C. H. West, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $2,200.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you put it in that way? Dr. West does not come under the Civil Service Act, does he?

The PRIME MINISTER. Dr. West is an inspector of the North-west Mounted Police in charge of the Athabasca district, and as such receives a salary of $1,000 per annum. It is proposed to continue his services as medical attendant to the Indians of Treaty No. 8, and to pay him a salary of $1,200 therefor. Dr. West accompanies Inspector Conroy on his trips and gives medical relief to the Indians attending the treaty payment. Being a resident of the district he also attends all cases of sickness which are brought to his attention amongst those Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that cover medicines as well as attendance?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, the $1,200 covers all services.

British Columbia—to provide an additional amount for salaries, $200.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is this necessary ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Vowell was appointed Indian superintendent on the 4th November, 1899, but before that date he had long been in the service of the provincial government in the province of British Columbia, which renders his knowledge of the country especially valuable to this department. Since his appointment he has received no increase of salary and as there has been during the past few years a very considerable increase in the volume of work at the Victoria office it is thought that the proposed increase is merited.

To provide an additional amount for medical attendance and medicines, $9,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Medical attendance and medicines are provided for Indians who cannot afford to pay for it themselves. The physicians are either on salaries which represent a fair remuneration for their services and the medicine supplied, or when paid by accounts, they are allowed the lowest possible charges made to poor white patients. Medicines are supplied to medical missionaries to distribute them to Indians under their charge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There has been $11,000 voted for medicines already. It seems a curious thing that you nearly double that amount by a supplementary estimate.

The PRIME MINISTER. The sum which has been voted already is for medicines only.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, it is for both. If my right hon. friend will turn to page 67 of the main estimates, he will see that the item is :

Medical attendance and medicines, $11,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How many medical attendants have you employed, and what do you pay them ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have medical men in different parts of the province. British Columbia is a very large province and the Indian population of British Columbia is larger than that of any other province. In the Babine agency there is a medical attendant at Hazleton, Kishfyak and Hagincyet. In the Comox agency, Chemainus, Nanaimo, Cowichan ; Fraser agency, Vancouver, Harrison, Hot Springs and New Westminster ; Kamloops and Okanagan, Fair View, Yale and Cariboo district, Kefowun and Cariboo district, Vernon and Cariboo district, Spallumcheen, Nicola, Kamloops, Dead men's Crest, Thompson and Shushwap. In the Kootenay : St. Mary's and Tobacco Plains ; on the west coast, Uculelet, Clayoquot ; on the north-west coast, Bella Bella, Port Simpson and vicinity, Port Essington, Williams Lake, Quesnelle and Alexandria, Alkali Lake, Kenim, Soda Creek, Clinton.

Mr. SPROULE. What salaries do you pay ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They vary ; $300, $500, $400, $700, $1,200 at Westminster and Vancouver.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Two months ago we voted $11,000 as sufficient for this purpose, and why should we require $9,000 more now ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The estimates were prepared last fall on the reports in the department at that time, but new demands have been since made.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That does not seem to be a very satisfactory explanation. Unless there is some sudden outbreak of disease amongst Indians, surely the officers know the number of Indians in British Columbia, and they ought to be able to calculate within 20 per cent of what medical attendance they will require ; but this is double the vote of last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am informed that the total vote last year was $20,000, the same as this year.

Mr. SPROULE. In the main estimates it says that last year's vote was $11,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps it would be better to set out the total amount voted, but as a rule you will find that was only the amount voted in the main estimates last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Under what kind of a contract are these medical men working ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There are 1,000 reserves in British Columbia, and as we have not a doctor for each reserve some of the doctors have to travel a good deal. They are appointed on a salary which is calculated upon the probable amount of work they will have to discharge.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard it said out there that if a doctor wanted a holiday trip, he goes round with the parties distributing the money and vaccinate some of these Indians, and makes a charge for it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, that was in the olden times.

Mr. SPROULE. I heard it last fall, and I do not think it is so very ancient.

To provide additional amount for schools, $12,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This vote is distributed as follows : Grant for rebuilding and equipping of the girls home, Metlakahtla, destroyed by fire $3,200 ; to provide for an increase in the per capita grant to the Clayoquot school, $3,500 ; grant towards the erection of boarding school at Ahonsaht, $1,500; to provide for repairs and addition to St. Mary's boarding school, $3,200.

Additional amount for steam launch, $2,500.

The PRIME MINISTER. This agency includes 91 reserves, and to visit these the agent has to travel from 1,000 to 1,400 miles by canoe. If provided with a launch, the time at his disposal for visiting the Indians would be more than doubled, and his transportation expenses would not be materially increased.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they confine the use of the launch to that purpose, or do they make a ferry boat of it?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know what he does with it, but I presume it remains idle when it is not being used for the purpose indicated. I do not think it would be used as a ferry boat.

Grant towards hospital at Hazelton, $1,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Methodist mission board, which has applied for this grant, states the cost of the building will be about $6,500. It is proposed to apportion it as follows: Local subscriptions, $1,000; grant from Methodist mission board, $2,500; provincial government, $2,000; Indian Department, $1,000.

Government of the North-west Territories, $255,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of this is voted under circumstances with which the House is already familiar. The other $5,000 is required for registrars consequent upon the increased immigration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What further facilities are to be provided?

The PRIME MINISTER. It simply provides for more clerical work and more assistance in the different registry offices.

Mr. SPROULE. It says:

Additional grant for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c.

Why is the grant for schools made?

The PRIME MINISTER. That item of $250,000 has been discussed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This was discussed in connection with the Bill to make an advance to the North-west Territories. In connection with that Bill it was pointed out that we had increased the ordinary grant last year by $250,000 and this item is to make corresponding increase this year.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think you gave any detailed information as to how this money was to be spent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a general increase, equivalent to an increased subsidy to the North-west Territories.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the vote in regard to which there was some discussion as to whether it should be on capital or revenue account?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is on account of ordinary revenue. We added a quarter of a million last year under precisely the same conditions and we are now adding a quarter of a million dollars. The advance on capital account was made by a special Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it that everything has to be doubled? There has been no material increase in the population that would necessitate additional schools or anything in the last year. In fact there has been a great reduction in the population?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the North-west Territories?

Mr. SPROULE. I was thinking of the Yukon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this to be expended by the government of the North-west Territories?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the right hon. gentleman what business will be taken up to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. To-morrow we will take up the Civil Service Bill and some other Bills and then go into Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When we go into Supply I will move the resolution with regard to granting provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories of which I have given notice.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.25 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, October 13, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

REPORT OF INSPECTOR OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. JAMES M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia) moved:

That the House do concur in the eighth and final report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization and especially that 40,000 copies of the evidence of the inspector of binder twine be printed forthwith in pamphlet form in the usual numerical proportions of English and French as advance sheets of the committee's final report for distribution to members of parliament, less 100 copies for the use of the committee.

He said: I may remark that this number is in excess of what has been asked on other subjects, but the report of the Dominion inspector has been of special interest. He provides information of vast moment in protecting the farmers against fraud in the quantity and quality of the twine they purchased as indicated in the consumption of the year 1902, valued at $3,500,000. The inspector stated in his evidence that in fourteen cases he imposed fines amounting to $518 for shortage in the quantity indicated by the labels, and had $275,000 worth deported to the manufacturer in the United States, and that a quantity was confiscated to the Crown. These violations of the Binder Twine Act of 1902 were almost wholly found with the imported article. The consumption of binder twine in Canada for 1902 is estimated at 14,000 tons, of which 6,500 was of home manufacture, making over 50 per cent supplied by importation. Here again is evidence of the large expansion awaiting the output of twine factories in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. May I call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Douglas) to the fact that this motion cannot be adopted without suspending rule 94, which provides that a motion for printing any paper shall first be presented to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move that rule 94 be suspended.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not actually oppose the adoption of the motion, but this report has been but a short time before the House and many of us have had no opportunity of seeing it. I do not know what the statement read by the Chairman of the committee purports to be, whether it is a report from the committee or part of the general report, or observations of his own. In any case, I must take exception to it because I think it is somewhat out of place or, at least, that the conclusions are still the subject of controversy. My judgment in connection with the discharge of his duties by the inspector of binder twine is that there was very strong evidence before the committee that the inspector misunderstood his duties and acted a part he was not justified in playing either by the statute under which he acted or any other authority, I think it would be well to allow this to remain for a day until we look into it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. This report was presented last Friday, and notice of motion was given to the House that to-day I would move concurrence. Besides, the body of the report is in the Votes and Proceedings, and, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has not seen it, that is not the fault of the convener of the committee or the committee itself. I may say that I have voiced the consensus of opinion of the committee in making the remarks I have made. The report was adopted by the unanimous consent of the committee and we thought it would be well to made a few remarks in connection with the presentation of the motion for concurrence so that it might be fully before the House.

Mr. SPROULE. This report has been before the House since Friday. On Saturday we sat all day, and the same yesterday. So, it is very hard to keep up with every portion of the work. Consequently I for one, have had no opportunity to see the report. I do not know whether the observations made by the hon. member (Mr. Douglas) were the result of the deliberations of the committee or not. If they were it seems to me they were improper. I think this should be allowed to remain over to another day to give us an opportunity to examine it. Surely there can be no such urgent demand for forcing it through. Saturday is an unusual day for the sitting of the House, so that this is pressing the matter through at practically one day's notice To allow it to remain for another day will not prevent the work being done, and will be quite in keeping with the needs of the House and of the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will then go to Public Bills and Orders.

The PRIME MINISTER. Better withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman have leave to withdraw his motion?

Motion agreed to, and motion withdrawn.

THANKSGIVING DAY ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER moved:

That when this House adjourns to-morrow it shall stand adjourned till Friday next.

He said: I take advantage of this opportunity to say that the business that the government intends to present to the House yet is as follows: Some resolutions regarding the Quebec bridge, some further supplementary estimates, chiefly relating to the Transcontinental Railway; and, perhaps, a purely departmental Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I assume from that statement that the other items appearing on the Order paper are intended to be pushed through by the government?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think so.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON TERRITORY—DOMINION LANDS —APPROVAL OF REGULATIONS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that the regulations made by the Governor in Council, under the authority of section 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, applicable or relating to the Yukon Territory, and set forth in the Orders in Council of which the dates are respectively as follows, and of which copies have been laid before this House, are approved by this House, in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of chapter 34 of the Statutes of 1902 :—

Order dated the 15th April, 1902, P. C. No. 633 ; Orders dated the 19th May, 1902, P. C. Nos. 573, 597, 749, and 825 ; Orders dated the 21st May, 1902, P. C. Nos. 898, and 899 ; Orders dated the 31st May, 1902, P. C. Nos. 938, 941, and 960 ; Order dated 4th June, 1902, P. C. No. 619 ; Order dated the 31st October, 1902, P. C. No. 1606 ; Orders dated the 22nd December, 1902, P. C. Nos. 1890, and 1899 ; Orders dated the 7th March, 1903, P. C. Nos. 323, and 325 ; and Orders dated the 31st March, 1903, P. C. Nos. 472, 473, 474, and 475.

He said : The reason for this motion is to be found in the Act passed last session to amend the Yukon Territory Act. Section 5 of that Act provides as follows :

Every regulation made by the Governor in Council under the authority of section 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, applicable or relating to the Yukon Territory, shall remain in force until the day immediately succeeding the day of prorogation of the then next session of parliament, and no longer, unless during such session of parliament such regulation is approved by resolution of both Houses of parliament.

Then section 47 of the Dominion Lands Act reads as follows :

Lands containing coal or other minerals, whether in surveyed or unsurveyed territory, shall not be subject to the provisions of this Act respecting sale or homestead entries, but shall be disposed of in such manner and on such terms and conditions as are, from time to time, fixed by the Governor in Council, by regulations made in that behalf.

Several regulations have been made which were laid on the Table of the House a few days ago, in terms of that section 47. I need not perhaps go into the details of each one of them ; a synopsis of the details of some of them will give a general character of the whole. The first Order in Council which was passed on the 15th of April, 1902, provides in substance that three miners owning adjoining claims, may unite to work one claim. The reason of that is that under the old regulation, every miner owning a claim is bound to do a certain quantity of work on it, under penalty of forfeiture, and it has been found convenient to permit a group of miners to work together ; that is to say, when their claims are adjoining each other it might be advantageous to allow them to club together and put their work upon one claim instead of distributing it upon all, and by so doing they would avoid forfeiture. Another Order in Council passed on the 19th of May, defines a miner's inch. The miner's inch is a new expression with which we in the east are not familiar, but which in mining territories is now well known, and we propose simply to make it legal and give it a proper definition. Another Order in Council of the same date enacts that all applications for mining locations and for work by the hydraulic mining process, shall be filed with the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, and recommended by him, and so on.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). In connection with that, I presume it would be necessary to bring up the whole subject of the controversy and investigation into the Treadgold concessions, because some of those Orders in Council affect the situation there. One which the Prime Minister just read would apply to that, namely, that one giving them the privilege to group together a number of claims, of which they become possessed perhaps through the abandonment of others, or through taking up others and jointly working them. I see they have had a public meeting out there and protested against the mode of the inquiry that was conducted by the commission, and are memorializing, it seems, the Governor in Council against the way the inquiry was conducted. Could the Prime Minister give us any information regarding the situation, and has he any report from the commissioners on the work they have undertaken ?

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend will look again at these resolutions he will see that they do not in any way affect the Treadgold concessions. With regard to the subject of the commission itself, I have seen what my hon. friend has seen in the public press, but I may say that the government have received no official communication upon the subject from any one. The government has not yet received any report from the commissioners.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the right hon. gentleman any idea as to when the report will be received? With respect to the hearing, of course, we do not know anything officially, but a majority of the public and press in the Yukon seem to find fault with the inquiry, because they think it was unduly restricted, even under the terms of the commission. One grave circumstance is the allegation in more than one newspaper that the commissioners directed the stenographers not to take down certain portions of the evidence, certain things that were said. If that is the case, all that it would be proper to say at present, is that such a matter demands careful consideration, and might make necessary a commission to investigate the conduct of the commissioners; because, while the commission was restricted very much, more restricted than a good many gentlemen in this House thought it should have been, inasmuch as it denied the people of that country an opportunity to investigate the circumstances under which those concessions were granted—nevertheless in the restricted form in which it was issued there was no reason why the commissioners or any one of them should have interfered in the slightest way to prevent the taking down of the testimony which was given. I do not admit this to be the fact at present, for the commissioners have not yet been heard. Nevertheless this particular circumstance is openly stated in more than one newspaper in the Yukon, newspapers which I have received myself.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will admit himself, interested as he is in the subject, that it would be very unfair to the commissioners, until their report is before the House, to accept any statements of that nature that may appear in the press. The commissioners have not made their report yet, I have no information when it will be made, I suppose it cannot be long delayed, for I think they are at work on it at this moment. But in the meantime I think there is no reason to suppose that the commissioners did not discharge their duties in an able, satisfactory and impartial manner.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the resolutions.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the right hon. gentleman should go further and give a little explanation in regard to each one of the orders mentioned in the resolution.

The PRIME MINISTER. The first order, of the 15th of April, 1902, as I have explained, allows three miners owning adjoining claims to club together and put their work on one claim. That is the tenor of the order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think there should be no objection to that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then the second order, of the 19th of May, 1902, defines a miner's inch as being an orifice which shall discharge one and a half cubic feet of water per minute. This is a purely mechanical order. Then the third order, of the 19th May, is that:

The Governor in Council is pleased to order that the Order in Council of 31st day of October, 1901, authorizing the Minister of the Interior to dispose of any mining claim which may be forfeited under the provisions of section 41 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory, established by Order in Council on the 13th day of March, 1901, shall be and is hereby rescinded.

Mr. SPROULE. That is just one of the orders that come in under the Treadgold concession. It is contended that once claims were abandoned and the government had power to dispose of them, the persons interested in the Treadgold concession had arranged their affairs so that they could either by themselves or by others get hold of these claims, in order that they might be corralled under one management. While they might not be under one name, they would still practically be under the Treadgold concession. That was one of the claims set forth by one gentleman who wrote to me from Dawson in regard to this matter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the right hon. gentleman has not stated the effect of this order. It provides that the Order in Council, the effect of which he has already mentioned, is rescinded.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, I see I was mistaken. It provides that it shall be rescinded.

Mr. SPROULE. We cannot object to that.

The PRIME MINISTER. If we cannot object to that, let us pass on.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the next is 597.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is 749, and I now pass to No. 825. That order provides that:

Section 7 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory, established by Order in Council dated 13th March, 1901, which provides that a person or joint stock company, and every person in his or its employment, except house servants, shall have a free miner's certificate unexpired, was amended by leaving out the words 'and every person in his or its employment, except house servants.'

The effect is to restrict the application of the regulation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before we pass from this, it seems to me that the existence of such an Order in Council as is now rescinded is the best possible reason why the statute should have been enacted. I cannot conceive any possible reason why the mere fact that a person was in the clerical employment of a joint stock company should entitle him to a free miner's certificate in competition with actual miners, who have to pay a fee for the purpose and who have to devote their attention to the occupation of mining. It would be well to know the reason why this Order in Council should have been passed in the first instance.

The PRIME MINISTER. I could not give this information to my hon. friend at this moment, but I will get it later on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my right hon. friend will recognize that it is a very strange regulation that any person in the employ of a joint stock company should be entitled to a free miner's certificate. It is time it should be repealed, and it is strange that such a regulation should ever have been enacted.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is repealed as far as my hon. friend has any objection to it.

Mr. SPROULE. The dangerous feature that suggests itself to my mind is that a regulation was made some years ago to provide for people getting control of timber lands, and after a certain individual had got control of a very important section of timber land the Order in Council was immediately rescinded.

The PRIME MINISTER. At all events, if we have rescinded it, so far so good.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). While it was not rescinded, so far so good.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order No. 973 provides that:

> The Governor in Council is pleased to order that clause 3 of the regulations for the disposal of mining locations in the Yukon Territory to be worked by hydraulic mining process made and established by the Governor in Council on the 3rd of December, 1898, as amended by Order in Council of 2nd March, 1900, which provides that an application for a location shall be filed in the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, was amended so as to provide that the application shall be filed with the commissioner of the Yukon Territory at Dawson; and that no lease be issued for a location unless it is recommended by him.
> And further, the exemption of royalty on $25,000 of the annual output of a location, provided for in section 5 of the aforesaid regulations, was rescinded on, from and after the date hereof.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of the provision that no lease shall be issued for a location unless recommended by the commissioner?

The PRIME MINISTER. It was to avoid a conflict, as far as I remember, between the applications which might be made at Dawson and the applications which might be made here, under which circumstances the same location might be granted to two different parties. The department came to the conclusion that all applications should be made at Dawson to the commissioner and forwarded by him for approval to the department here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to go a great deal beyond that. It seems to vest in the commissioner of the Yukon an absolute discretion as to whether a location shall be granted or not. I do not regard that as a fair provision of the law. In the province of Nova Scotia we have certain laws governing this matter. A man who applies for a gold or a coal area is entitled to it as a matter of right. If it is open, if no other person has covered it by his application, and if he has made his application in the usual way, he is entitled to certain rights under the law over the area. But here you do not have that. You have an applicant going to the Commissioner of the Yukon, and finding that it is absolutely necessary that the commissioner should recommend his application before he can have it granted. I do not understand why a discretion of that kind should be conferred upon the Commissioner of the Yukon or on any one else. It seems to me there should be a mode of defining the rights of public property so that any citizen of this country, conforming to the regulations, should have the right to make an application in respect to lands not already covered by some one else. Neither the Commissioner of the Yukon, nor the Minister of the Interior, nor any one else, should have the right to say: You shall not receive this, because I do not see fit to recommend it. I cannot attach any other meaning to the language of this Order in Council than that which I have just expressed.

Mr. BELCOURT. The reason of this is that in the case of these applications, the applicant has to submit for consideration evidence of certain facts; for instance, the fact that the ground for which he applies is capable of being worked in the manner which he describes, that he has a sufficient dumping ground on which to deposit his tailings, and that there is a sufficient supply of water to provide for the working of the claim in the manner applied for. These matters have all to be verified by affidavit or evidence sufficient to satisfy the Commissioner of the Yukon. Evidence having been submitted to him, it became necessary under the old regulation to have the evidence sent down here, though the commissioner had, in his discretion, to decide these matters. That is the reason the regulation was passed some time ago. As everything has now to be decided there, the regulation has no longer any raison d'être. The case would be entirely different in regard to an application for coal lands in the province of Nova Scotia, where the applicant is entitled to the land from the simple fact of having prospected, located and made application. In the Yukon something else is required. Not only must he have discovered the ground, prospected and located it, but he must have satisfied the commissioner as to the conditions as to water, dumping ground and so on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why should he be obliged to do so? Are not these matters as to which he must take the risk? If there is no water, he perhaps cannot work the area, but that is his own matter. If there is no dumping ground, perhaps he cannot work the area. Why this paternal care on the part of the Department of the Interior with regard to these matters? In the province of Nova Scotia you might have the government interfering with a gold mining area, and pointing out that there are certain conditions which render it impossible, perhaps, to work it at a profit. These are matters as to which the applicant takes his own risk, and, provided he pays his fee, he is entitled to take that risk.

Mr. BELCOURT. The complaints which we have heard in this House would be sufficient reason for the enactment of this legislation. I have not discussed the matter with the minister, but I would imagine that it is felt that in order to entitle the person to get a larger area than the area fixed for the ordinary placer claim, and, to facilitate his working it by hydraulic means, this regulation is necessary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But this is dealing with an application for an ordinary location, and not an application for a large territory.

The PRIME MINISTER. This refers to hydraulic process mining alone.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is an ordinary application to work by hydraulic process. There is nothing in this Order in Council about a large location.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hydraulic process requires capital to carry it on, and everybody cannot procure the means; but in the case of an ordinary location you require nothing but strong arms to work it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know; but all that can be covered in an entirely different way. In our Nova Scotia mining laws we have the provision that unless the person works his claim in a particular, effective way it will be forfeited. You could cover everything my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has said, by making a provision, that unless effective work of a certain character is done within a specified time, the location shall become forfeited. Thus you get rid of the disagreeable feature of having the right to this location depend upon the opinion of an officer of the department, which I regard as a very vicious kind of legislation, which should be avoided, because it will always give rise to more or less suspicion on the part of those whose locations have been denied. It is not desirable that power of that kind should be vested even in the most capable and upright officer of the government.

Mr. BELCOURT. There are regulations in the Department of the Interior with reference to placer mining, hydraulic mining and dredging, and these regulations differ one from the other. The placer mining regulations require nothing but staking, and an application for the grant; dredging leases require certain conditions and the payment of a certain rental, and in the case of hydraulic leases, the regulations provide that the applicant must satisfy the commissioner that the ground applied for is suitable for the work, on a large scale; that it has sufficient water to enable it to be worked, and that there is sufficient dumping ground. These conditions are imposed for the protection of the miners generally. If my hon. friend's suggestion were adopted, any one could go to the commissioner and make an application for one mile, or two miles, or more, and though he would not be able to work it, this large area would be tied up. In the meantime the prospecting miner would complain that this large area was tied up without any advantage to the community, or even to the applicant himself. It is to prevent the tying up of large areas of land, to the alleged detriment of the miners, that these regulations were passed, and they are still in force. It was no doubt felt by the department, that it would be more in the public interest for the commissioner himself to have the whole discretion, and that the matter should not be brought to Ottawa to be pronounced upon by the department here. It is no doubt easier for the officer who is on the ground to verify the accuracy of the facts and to pronounce upon the matter. I take it, that there is no other reason for the cancellation of the Order in Council, than to leave it for the proper officer in the Yukon to decide. I would again point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that the regulation itself is not abolished. It may be that the hon. gentleman thinks that the regulation itself should be changed, but I am of opinion that the granting of hydraulic concessions on a large scale should be subject to the conditions which are at present imposed. However, the only effect of the cancellation of the Order in Council is to leave the decision under the regulations in the hands of the commissioner, rather than in the hands of the officer here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the Order in Council provide that no lease shall be issued for a location unless it is recommended by the commissioner ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is in the hydraulic mining regulations.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But on whose recommendation is it ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I think it is the gold commissioner, but I am not quite sure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman himself is not sure about that.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am not sure whether it is the gold commissioner or the commissioner of the Yukon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a substantive condition, that no lease shall be issued for a location unless it be recommended by the commissioner of the Yukon Territory. What my hon. friend from Ottawa has suggested as the meaning of this, may be a better provision, but it is not what is stated in the regulation at all. It does not provide that the commissioner shall not issue a location until he is satisfied that there is sufficient dumping ground and sufficient water for working the location; it simply states, baldly, that no lease be isssued for a location unless it be recommended by him, leaving it absolutely in the discretion of the commissioner. That is what I object to. I think that everything my right hon. friend has mentioned could be covered by some such provision as I have suggested. You could make your regulations as to dumping ground and as to sufficiency of water, and you could provide that unless the regulations were complied with within a reasonable time, the location should revert to the Crown. That would cover everything that my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has said, and would remove this objectionable element of testing this absolute jurisdiction in an officer of the department, however capable and upright.

The PRIME MINISTER. The next two orders are Nos. 898 and 899. They refer to the same subject, namely, the royalty to be paid upon gold. Instead of the former royalty of 10 per cent, they substitute a royalty of 2½ per cent. No. 898 contains the ordinance fixing the royalty at 2½ per cent, and No. 899 summarizes this, and proclaims the ordinance. No. 938 is as follows :

The Governor in Council, in virtue of the provisions of clause 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, as enacted by section 5 of chapter 15 of 55-56 Victoria, and of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as enacted by section 3 of chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., is pleased to order and doth order that clause (a) of section 41 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory established by Order in Council dated 13th March, 1901, shall be amended by adding the following paragraph thereto :—

If a claim is not rerecorded within three months subsequent to the date up to which it was recorded, the claim shall then be deemed to be abandoned and open for occupation and entry by a free miner, even although the required amount of work may have been done within the year for which the claim was recorded or the commutation fee paid in lieu thereof, and the certificate called for by the regulations obtained.

No. 941 enacts :

That clause 38 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory, established by Order in Council dated 27th November, 1901, be amended by providing that the fee of $2 therein mentioned be the fee for the registration of the instrument therein referred to for one claim, and $1 for each additional claim or fraction of a claim described in said instrument.

The next Order, No. 960, enacts as follows:

That the third paragraph of clause (d) of section 6 of the Order in Council of 8th July, 1898, be cancelled, and that the following be substituted therefor :—

Every entry made in any of the mining recorder's books shall show the date upon which such entry is made. A fee of twenty-five cents shall be charged for obtaining information, either verbally or in writing, from the mining recorder with respect to each claim, and documents filed shall be open to public inspection upon payment of a fee of fifty cents; but for copies of any documents the fee shall be two dollars and fifty cents up to two hundred and fifty words, and fifty cents for each extra one hundred words.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To whom do these fees belong ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They belong to the government. The next Order, dated the 4th of June, 1902, No. 619, is as follows :

Whereas section 75 of the regulations for the disposal of quartz mining claims on Dominion Lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories and the Yukon Territory, made and established by Order in Council dated 21st March, 1898, as amended by subsequent Orders in Council, provides as follows :—

'If the mining recorder or gold commissioner decides that it is necessary to a proper decision of the matter in issue, to have an investigation on the ground, or, in cases of disputed boundaries or measurements, to employ a Dominion land surveyor to measure or survey the land in question, the expense of the inspection or remeasurement or resurvey, as the case may be, shall be borne by the litigants, who shall pay into the hands of the mining recorder or gold commissioner, in equal parts, such sum as he may think sufficient for the same before it takes place ; otherwise it shall not proceed, and the party who refuses to pay such sum shall be adjudged in default. The said mining recorder or gold commissioner shall subsequently decide in what proportion the said expense should be borne by the parties respectively, and the surplusage, if any, shall then be returned to the parties, as he may order ;' and

Whereas the question has been raised as to whether or not this section may be acted upon in the case of placer mining claims, and it is deemed advisable to settle this question ;

Therefore, the Governor General in Council is pleased to order and doth order that the Ordinance governing the hearing and decision of disputes in relation to mining lands in the Yukon Territory, made by the Governor General in Council on the 18th of March, 1901, shall be and the same is hereby amended by adding thereto section 75 above quoted of the regulation for the disposal of quartz mining claims on Dominion Lands in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory.

The next Order, dated the 31st October, 1902, No. 1,606, is as follows :

The Governor General in Council is pleased, in virtue of clause 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, as enacted by section 5, of the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 15, and of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as enacted by section 3 of the Act 2 Edward VII., chapter 34, to order that the Order in Council of the 15th April, 1902, amending sub-clause (d) of clause 41 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory, established by Order in Council of the 13th of March, 1901, be amended by adding the following paragraph :—

The same provision may also apply to any number of claims which can be worked by dredging, or by any other extensive method satisfactory to the government mining engineer, and this provision may cover any claims worked in this manner on and after the 1st of July, 1902.

The next Order, dated the 22nd December, 1902, No. 1,890, enacts :

On a memorandum dated 12th December, 1902, from the Minister of the Interior, stating that by an Order in Council dated the 20th of July, 1900, provision was made that a free miner may renew his certificate within ninety days from the date of its expiry by paying an additional fee of $5, and such renewal shall be in force for one year from the date the certificate expired, and the holder of such renewal shall be entitled to all the rights of a free miner holding a certificate unexpired.

The minister further states that on the 11th of June, 1902, the free miner's certificate issued in favour of Mr. J. Bigelow expired, but as he was engaged in prospecting on Sulphur creek at a distance from any mining recorder's office, he decided to take advantage of the provisions of the above Order, but failing to note the difference between ninety days and three months, he did not appear at the office of the mining recorder to obtain a renewal of his certificate until the 11th September last, which was after the prescribed period of ninety days had expired, but it was decided by the officers of the Department of the Interior at Dawson, in view of the circumstances, to date his certificate back to the 11th of June, 1902.

This is to confirm his certificate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On the very highest authority in the empire, the House of Lords and Privy Council, I would be prepared to say that that Order in Council is absolutely ultra vires. Where you have a statute, the Governor in Council or any one else can only act within the terms of the statute ; and if the statute says that application must be made within a particular time, and it is not made within that time, neither the Governor in Council nor the officers of the department have the slightest power to make it a good application by affidavit and certificate.

The PRIME MINISTER. The concession ought to be granted unless in the interval somebody has made application himself. If a third party had come in and made application for the same lot, then I have no doubt the point would have been decided in favour of the new application, but if no application had been made I think we could very well waive the technical point.

The next one, of the 22nd of December, 1902, No. 1899, provides :

1. All unappropriated Dominion lands in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and within the Yukon Territory shall be open to prospecting for petroleum by an individual or company desiring to do so. In case there should arise any dispute as to whether lands are or are not unappropriated, the question shall be decided by the Minister of the Interior whose decision shall be final. Provided, however, that the minister may reserve for an individual or company who have machinery on the land to be prospected, an area of 640 acres of such shape as the minister may approve of, and that the reservation may be made for such period as he may decide.

2. Should oil in paying quantities be discovered by a prospector on any vacant lands of the Crown, and should such discovery be established to the satisfaction of the Minister of the Interior, an area not exceeding 640 acres of land, including the oil well and such other land as may be determined by the Minister of the Interior, will be sold to the person or company making such discovery at the rate of $1 per acre.

The next one, dated the 7th day of March, 1903, Order No. 323, provides that :

Whereas section 1 of the regulations governing the administration of Dominion lands in the Yukon Territory containing coal, established by the Order in Council of the 21st January, 1901, provides for the collection of a royalty on the gross output of the mine at such rate per ton as may from time to time be specified by the Governor General in Council.

Therefore the Governor in Council is pleased to order the amount of the royalty to be collected shall be and the same is hereby fixed for a period of ten years from the date hereof at the rate of 10 cents per ton of two thousand pounds and that the right of altering said rate after the expiration of such period of ten years be reserved.

The next one provides for a special case, and I shall read it in full. It is as follows :

Extract from a report of a committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on the 7th March, 1903.

On a report dated 23rd February, 1903, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting that a deep shaft was sunk by Mr. A. R. Thompson, of Dawson, on placer mining claim No. 3a, on Eldorado Creek, in the Yukon Territory, with a view of ascertaining whether or not a second strata of gold-bearing gravel existed at a considerable depth below what has generally been supposed to be bed rock ; that at the depth of about 220 feet a very considerable flow of water was struck which filled the shaft and overflowed to the extent of from 900 to 1,000 gallons per minute ; that owing to the very low temperature this water formed a vast glacier which threatened to envelop the town of Bonnaza and all mining claims below the mouth of Eldorado Creek ; and that your government incurred very considerable expenditure in successfully capping this flow and so insuring the safety of the property situated below it on Eldorado and Bonanza Creeks.

The minister states that Mr. Thompson has now applied to the Department of the Interior for the right to the water from this shaft together with the right to dispose of the same for mining and other purposes. That by an Order in Council of the 3rd of August, 1898, provision was made for the diversion and use of water for mining purposes in the Yukon Territory, but the right to dispose of the water acquired under the provisions of these regulations was rescinded by Order in Council, dated the 7th of December, 1901.

The minister, however, recommends that he be authorized to grant to Mr. Thompson the right to the water flowing from the shaft referred to, in accordance with the provisions of the regulations established by the Order in Council dated the 3rd August, 1898, and the amendments thereto, together with the right to dispose of the whole or any portion thereof upon such terms and under such conditions as may be approved by the commissioner of the Yukon Territory.

The minister further recommends, as the government, however, has incurred very considerable expenditure in arresting the flow of water from this shaft, and as it would appear to be reasonable that a certain portion of the revenue which may be derived from the sale of the water should be paid to the Crown on account of such expenditure, that the grant to Mr. Thompson be made subject to the payment to the Crown of a royalty of not less than ten per cent of the gross amount received for the sale or use of the water, until the royalty collected equals the amount of such expenditure, together with interest on such amount at the rate of five per cent per annum. Sworn returns on a form to be furnished by the commissioner to be made monthly by the grantee to the gold commissioner showing the quantities of water sold or disposed of, and the amounts realized therefrom, and payment at the same time to be made of the royalty thereon at the rate fixed. The grantee shall keep a book in which shall be entered all sales and which shall be submitted for the inspection of the gold commissioner or other officer of the Crown for the purpose of verifying his returns aforesaid. Default in making the said returns, in producing the said book, and in payment of the royalty, if continued for thirty days after notice has been posted to that effect in the vicinity of the shaft by the gold commissioner, or by his direction, to be followed by the cancellation of the grant, in which case the works shall be taken possession of and operated by the Crown and the revenue derived from the sale of the water shall be applied to the repayment of the amount expended by the Crown in capping the flow and operating the works until the whole amount, with interest, has been repaid.

The next order, which is dated 31st March, 1903, Order No. 472, provides :

Whereas section 6 of the regulations governing the issue of leases to dredge for minerals in the beds of rivers in the Yukon Territory, established by the Order in Council of the 18th day of January, 1898, provides that the lessees shall pay to the Crown a royalty of 10 per cent on the output in excess of $15,000 as shown by sworn returns to be furnished monthly by the lessee to the gold commissioner during the period that dredging operations are being carried on; such royalty, if any, to be paid with each return ;

And whereas at the time these regulations were approved the royalty on gold mined under the provisions of the placer mining regulations was 10 per cent of the gross output, but it has since been reduced to 2½ per cent on the value of the gold exported without any exemption ;

Therefore the Governor General in Council is pleased, in virtue of the provisions of clause 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, as enacted by section 5 of chapter 15 of 55-56 Victoria, and of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as enacted by section 3 of chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., to order that the portion of section 6 of the regulations governing the issue of leases to dredge for minerals in the rivers of the Yukon Territory, above quoted, and also section 6a of the said regulations shall be, and the same are hereby rescinded and the following substituted therefor :—

The same royalty shall be paid upon the output of gold as is provided, or may hereafter be provided, in the case of placer mining claims, such royalty to be paid in the maner provided in the regulations governing placer mining.

The next one of the same date, No. 473, provides that :

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Whereas section 41 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory, established by the Order in Council of the 13th March, 1901, provides that any free miner having duly located and recorded a claim shall be entitled to hold it for the period for which he received entry, and thence from year to year by re-recording the same, provided, however, that during each year and each succeeding year such free miner shall do or cause to be done work on the claim itself to the value of $200, or he may at his option in lieu of the work required to be done thereon each year pay to the mining recorder in whose office the claim is recorded the sum of $200 for each of the first three years, but for the fourth and succeeding years the sum of $400 must be paid in lieu of work done on the location or in connection therewith ;

And whereas the commissioner of the Yukon Territory reports that it would be in the public interest if the amount of work done in each year on a placer mining claim could not be commuted by payment of a fee in lieu thereof ;

Therefore the Governor General in Council is pleased, in virtue of clause 47 of the Dominion Lands Act, as enacted by section 5 of the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 15, and of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as enacted by section 3 of the Act 2 Edward VII., chapter 34 to order, and it is hereby ordered, that the provisions contained in the several sub-clauses of section 41 of the regulations established by Order in Council of the 13th of March, 1901, for payment at the option of the free miner, in lieu of assessment work shall be rescinded on and after the 1st day of August, 1903.

The next order is also of the same date, No. 474. It provides :

Whereas section 2 of the regulations governing placer mining in the Yukon Territory, established by the Order in Council of the 13th March, 1901, provides that for a free miner's certificate issued in favour of an individual the fee shall be $10 and sections 20 and 34 of the regulations in question provide for the payment of a fee of $15 for entry for a placer mining claim, and the payment of a like amount for renewal thereof each year ;

And whereas the commissioner of the Yukon Territory now recommends that the charge for a free miner's certificate be reduced to $7.50 and that the fee for a grant of renewal of a placer mining claim be reduced to $10 ;

Therefore the Governor in Council is pleased, in virtue of clause 47 of the Dominions Lands Act, as enacted by section 5 of the Act, chapter 15 of 55-56 Victoria, and of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as enacted by section 3 of the Act, chapter 34 of 2 Edward VII., to order that section 2 of the regulations established by the Order in Council of the 13th of March, 1901, above referred to, shall be and the same is hereby amended by striking out the fee of $10 for which provision is made therein as the charge for a free miner's certificate to an individual and substituting therefor $7.50 ; and that sections 29 and 34 of the said regulations shall be, and the same are hereby amended, by substituting a charge of $10 for entry or for renewal of a placer mining claim in the place of the present charge of $15.

Then, another order of the same date, No. 475, enacts :

The Governor General in Council is pleased, in virtue of the provisions of clause 47 of the Dominions Lands Act, as enacted by section 5 of the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 15, and of section 8 of the Yukon Territory Act, as enacted by section 3 of the Act 2 Edward VII., chapter 34, to order that Form 'N' of the regulations for the disposal of the right to divert and use water from any stream or lake and the right of way through and entry upon any mining ground for the purpose of constructing ditches and flumes to convey such water for mining purposes in the Yukon Territory established by the Order in Council of the 3rd August, 1898, shall be, and the same is hereby rescinded, and the following form substituted therefor.

Form N is then printed, but I presume it is not necessary for me to read it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the resolution is adopted, I would like to suggest to the Prime Minister that it would be advisable to have all the regulations relating to the Dominion lands and matters of that kind in the Yukon revised and put in intelligible shape, and printed, so that members of the House and others interested might be able thoroughly to understand the meaning and scope of the regulations.

The PRIME MINISTER. And laid before parliament at the beginning of the session—issued as a Blue-book ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think so.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think so. I shall make that recommendation.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

OFFER OF JUDGESHIP—POLITICAL REPORT.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the government to a paragraph in the Montreal 'Star' of last evening. It read as follows :

Rumours that would seem strange to the uninitiated came from Ottawa this morning. It seems the Liberals have become somewhat disturbed about the apparent reaction in public sentiment. It is said, on authority that seldom errs in statements of fact that the Liberals have offered through Mr. Dansereau, a judgeship to a somewhat prominent Conservative politician in the province of Quebec, if he will carry out a programme arranged by Mr. Dansereau to create and perpetuate a split in the Conservative ranks.

I desire to ask if there is any truth in the rumour contained in the Montreal 'Star.'

The PRIME MINISTER. I have been in the city of Ottawa pretty constantly for eight months, and I must say that I never heard such a rumour ; nor do I believe that anybody in this House ever heard it. I do not know what may be reported in Montreal, but I am sure that this is news to every body in this House. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) that there is no truth in the statement. No judgeship has been offered to any body, especially to the hon. gentleman who is not named but well indicated. The whole thing is a pure fabrication.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And there is no truth in the rumour of a split.

ALASKA BOUNDARY ARBITRATION—CABLEGRAM FROM LORD ALVERSTONE.

The PRIME MINISTER. The subject we have just discussed is another illustration that we must not always take what the newspapers tell us as gospel truth. And, on that point I may say that I have received a telegram from Lord Alverstone, Chief Justice of England :

London, October 13, 1903.

There is not the slightest foundation for statement attributed to me in Reuter telegram from Ottawa dated 12th October, as to question in House of Comomns on that date. I have made no communication of any kind to any diplomatic or colonial officials, or to any person respecting the case. The report is an absolute fabrication.

(Sgd.) ALVERSTONE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am sure this is what might have been expected from Lord Alverstone. I suppose the right hon. gentleman has no telegram from Mr. Aylesworth with regard to——

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

Mr. EDWARD HACKETT (West Prince). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Postmaster General to a statement which appears in the editorial column of the Charlottetown 'Patriot,' of the 9th instant :

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

As soon as the consolidated school is established at Hazelbrook, we understand it is the intention of the government to inaugurate a rural mail delivery service in that part of Prince Edward Island. Mr. D. A. MacKinnon, M.P., brought this matter to the notice of the department and suggested that the mails could be carried by the same vans to the houses, when conveying the pupils to and from school. In this way the service could be performed very economically and satisfactorily. Thus a rural mail delivery will have its initial movement in this province. In the event of its proving a success the system could be extended to other parts of the country.

I desire to ask the hon. Minister if there is any truth in that statement, and, if, while he is considering the question of mail delivery in Prince Edward Island, he will establish mail delivery in the city of Charlottetown, the town of Summerside and other urban centres, instead of commencing in a rural district.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Sir William Mulock). The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. McKinnon) has, from time to time, pressed upon me the advisability of establishing rural mail deliveries. But, up to this moment, the department has arrived at no conclusion upon the subject. I may say that many other members have made similar demands, in fact, they are constantly being made from all parts of this Dominion. But this is a subject of very serious moment, one that the government could not undertake except after the most careful consideration ; and, for my part, I think that Canada is not ripe for any such movement. I am quite satisfied that the people of Canada would not bear the cost that such a service would involve. It is at present beyond the resources of the people of Canada to attempt to establish a rural mail delivery over a country so sparsely inhabited as ours and as large as all Europe, for Europe even with its four hundred millions of people, has not yet, to any great extent, adopted the system.

INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT—GRAIN INSPECTION EAST OF MANITOBA DISTRICT.

House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolutions :

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the General Inspection Act, and to provide for the appointment of weigh-masters for the weighing of grain in any inspection district east of the inspection district of Manitoba, and for their remuneration by fees or otherwise.—The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I would say to the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that this resolution is introduced merely for the purpose of submitting a Bill which I have here in detail. The object of the measure is to extend the inspection law applying to grain in the district of Manitoba to the country east of Manitoba. Of course, every discussion can be had on the Bill that can be had on the resolution. If hon. gentlemen wish to discuss the resolution I will withdraw it, as I do not want to interfere with the business to be proposed by my hon. friend the Postmaster General.

Mr. TAYLOR. What territory does the Bill include ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwrigt) informs me that there is some other matter which the government desires to go on with, and I agree that it would be convenient to reserve any discussion with regard to the measure now proposed until the Bill is introduced. I do not think there is any objection, if it meets the approval of my hon. friends on this side.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 266), further to amend the General Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 257) to amend the Civil Service Act.--The Postmaster General.

On section 1,

Mr. BARKER. I would like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to another officer who, I think, might well be provided for under this section. There are provisions here for three of our deputy heads, the Deputy Minister of Justice, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. There is a provision by which their salaries may be increased to $5,000, in certain events. The Deputy Minister of Justice, when appointed, must have had ten years' service at the bar. I can hardly imagine any man obtaining the position of Deputy Minister of Justice if he had served less than ten years at the bar, it would be very unusual ; and it looks to me as if this were rather a means of enabling this gentleman, and in the same manner these other two gentlemen, to get an exceptional allowance. Now I do not object, but I wish to bring forward the case of another official, the Auditor General. I am aware that there has been friction between the gentleman who holds that position and some of the other departments, but it seems to me that we should deal with the office, and that there should be no distinction made between the salary of a deputy minister of one of the departments and the salary of the Auditor General, at all events to the disadvantage of the Auditor General. I do not think there is any deputy head in the whole service whose position is so important and so valuable to the country as that of the Auditor General. I cannot imagine that there is any sufficient reason why there should be any distinction between the salaries of the deputy heads I have named and that of an officer so important in the interests of the whole Dominion as the Auditor General. As I said before, I know there has been friction between the present incumbent of that office and other departments, probably I might more correctly say with the deputy heads of other departments. Well, I can only say that I doubt whether you will ever have an Auditor General, who attempts to do his duty, who will not have friction with the various departments. It is inevitable that it should be so. He is the criticiser, he is to a certain extent a fault-finder, and every time he attempts to scrutinize the acts of the department he will meet with resistance ; if he persists there will be more than resistance, there will be opposition. Now those of us who have read the correspondence in the Auditor General's Report know that he has come into conflict with deputy heads on matters that were likely to cause serious friction between them. Under those circumstances I think it is the duty of the government, instead of giving exceptional treatment to the deputy heads which will put him in a somewhat unfair position as regards rank, that they should protect the department of the Auditor General, whatever view they may take of the gentleman who occupies that office for the moment. I therefore suggest to the hon. the Postmaster General that it would be only proper, now that the salaries are being dealt with, to make provision in this section for the department of the Auditor General. He is not a deputy head, he has not by statute the rank of deputy head, and he is apparently to be left out simply because he has not D. H. after his name.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I appreciate what my hon. friend has said as to its being the duty of the government to strengthen the hands of the Auditor General, to stand by him in the proper discharge of his duties, and to give proper weight and dignity to his high and responsible position I do not controvert anything the hon. gentleman has said as to the salary that should attach to the office, and if to-day I am not able to include his name in this list, it is not because of any decision to the contrary, either by the government or in my own mind. It may be that his case was not presented when the cases of the deputy heads were under consideration. This Bill has grown, it has assumed proportions in excess of those that were contemplated when I introduced it. Therefore if the Auditor General is not being included with the others who are being given extra salaries, it is not because of any adverse conclusion we have come to, and no inference of that kind should be entertained. Perhaps my hon. friend would be good enough not to press the subject at this late date in the session. I think I can say on behalf of the government that, notwithstanding the supposed friction that has been referred to, the Auditor General enjoys the confidence and respect of the government, and we would be quite as ready as any hon. gentleman in the House to recognize his claims, both for increased emoluments and for support at the hands of the government in the discharge of his very embarrassing and responsible duties. Leaving the matter over for future consideration will not in any wise prejudice his claim. If we do not include him to-day it is simply because his case has not been under consideration. The Bill has grown, as I say, new clauses have been introduced from time to time. Under the circumstances this case might very properly come up for consideration at a later date.

Mr. BARKER. I should be quite content with that decision, speaking for myself. But I would be better pleased if the Postmaster General would say that the case will be taken into consideration at an early date rather than at some future date. Some future date might be very far away. If it be that the Auditor General's case has been overlooked, I hope the hon. gentleman will promise the House that it will be taken up at an early date, for consideration at all events. I am very glad to hear that the Auditor General has the confidence of the government. I believe the Auditor General has the confidence of the whole country and I am glad to hear now that the government do not disagree with the country in regard to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In asking that the matter be not pressed at this point, it was not for the purpose of shelving it indefinitely, but simply out of regard for the manifest desire of hon. members for an early prorogation. I wished to avoid anything that might interfere with that much desired end.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I see that the clause in regard to a civil engineer says that he must be a civil engineer of ten years' standing. What is the qualification of a civil engineer under that clause ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The title of 'civil engineer' may be acquired, I suppose without one having the diploma of an educational institution, but I think the construction that would be placed upon these words 'civil engineer' in this case would be that they would apply to some person who had acquired the legal status of a civil engineer in a technical sense.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the legal status.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps it may be necessary that any one who sets himself up as a civil engineer is required to have a diploma from some college or university in civil engineering. There is a department of civil engineering in McGill and one at the School of Practical Science, Toronto. No government would consider a man as coming within the meaning of this section and being a civil engineer simply because he chose to call himself a civil engineer and sought to work in that way. He would have to be a civil engineer of standing and professionnal qualification evidenced either by the practice of his profession or by the diplomas of educational institutions. It seems to me there would be no difficulty in determining the meaning of the words 'civil engineer.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Of course, I can understand that if he gets the diploma of a college or institution, such as the School of Science, he would come under this clause, but the great majority of those who are practising their professsion in this country have no diploma or anything beyond the fact that they are working at this profession. I think it ought to be defined.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that any government would recognize a man as a civil engineer under this section unless he had professional attainments and education to entitle him to such recognition.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is making the government the interpreter of what a civil engineer is. The standard should be defined.

Mr. BELL. In reference to the matter raised by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) as to the position of the Auditor General, I really feel as if the hon. minister in charge of this Bill has not given any satisfactory reason why the question should not be dealt with at this time. The hon. minister stated that this Bill had very largely developed in the course of its passage through the different stages.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say so for the purpose of provoking discussion, but the very contrary. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) will reserve his observations to a later stage, I will let the Bill stand after the second reading, and then I will have an opportunity of consulting the government and perhaps be able to make an announcement.

Mr. BELL. All right.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish to add a few words to subsection (b) of section 2 of the Civil Service Act. The Clerk of the Privy Council is Mr. McGee. He is supposed to be the deputy head. He is called the deputy head, and he was supposed to come within the meaning of this section, but I cannot find any place in which he has been made deputy head by the statute. He is always included as a deputy head in the Civil Service list. Therefore, I propose to make the Civil Service Act meet the case by adding to this the following :

Subsection (b) of section 2 of the Civil Service Act is amended by inserting in the third line after the word 'department' the words 'also the Clerk of the Privy Council.'

The committee will find by reference to subsection (b) of section 2 of the Civil Service Act, which I am now proposing to amend, that it says :

The expression 'deputy,' 'deputy head,' or 'deputy head of the department,' means the deputy of the minister of the Crown presiding over such department, and also includes the 'Auditor General,' in all cases in which such meaning is not inconsistent with his powers and duties under the 'Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART

I propose to add after the words 'head of the department,' a provision that it also includes the clerk of the Privy Council.

Mr. BELL. I would suggest that there are other officers, not perhaps of the government, but of this parliament, who fill positions apparently very similar to that of the Clerk of the Privy Council. I refer to the Chief Clerk of the House of Commons and to the Chief Clerk of the Senate. There are also the Librarians of Parliament.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are going to be dealt with in another way.

Mr. BELL. I observe that, but it seems to me that provision should be made when we are passing this measure to see that the officers of the House of Commons do not receive worse treatment than those who fill other positions in the civil service. Since the hon. minister is making the amendment he is now making in favour of the Clerk of the Privy Council it would seem a simple and easy matter to include the Clerks of the House of Commons and the Senate.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that the fact that the Clerks of the House of Commons and Senate are officers of parliament should be a reason for their not being embraced in the Civil Service Act. They are outside of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BIRKETT. I understand the hon. minister to say that the Chief Clerk of the Senate and the Chief Clerk of the House of Commons are to be dealt with in another way. Will other officers of parliament be dealt with in the same way ? Is it the intention to deal only with the Chief Clerks of the two Houses or is it the intention to deal generally with the officers of the House of Commons ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a section dealing with deputy heads. Would it not be advisable to dispose of this before we embark upon a general discussion upon another question ? I think we would make more progress.

Mr. BIRKETT. I understand that this does not deal with the members of the staff of the House of Commons, but the hon. minister having referred to the Chief Clerk, I thought it was an opportune time to inquire about the balance of the staff of the House of Commons.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My remarks in reference to the Clerk of the House of Commons would apply to all officers of parliament. They are under the control of parliament in a different way from members of the civil service. They are not members of the civil service. This is a Bill to deal with the civil service, and if it is proposed to deal with the officers of parliament it should be done in a measure independently of the civil service.

Amendment agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Chairman, I move:

That section 2 be amended by striking out the words 'at the time of the coming into force of this Act' in the 29th and 30th lines.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the meaning of the words in this section :

Either as deputy or in some other with capacity in the department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The word 'with' is a typographical error.

Mr. LANCASTER. It must mean 'such' capacity, or 'like' capacity.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. It is only dealing with those in the public service at present, and if you strike out the word 'with' it is all right.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This clause refers more particularly to the case of Mr. Gerald. He was for many years assistant commissioner, and for five or six years he discharged the duties of commissioner, Mr. Miall being ill. This is inserted in the Bill in order that Mr. Gerald may have the benefit of the increase the same as other deputy ministers.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is retroactive ; giving him the benefit of the salary for five years past.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why didn't you come out and say so straight ?

Mr. BIRKETT. In future, Mr. Gerald instead of being known as the commissioner, will be known as the deputy ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It only affects the salary henceforth.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He will be entitled to rank as deputy minister for five or six years past, so that he may get the increase of $100 a year, as the other deputy ministers get.

Mr. COCHRANE. This clause is put in to give this gentleman a salary that he was not entitled to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it gives him a record. He was acting practically as deputy minister during the illness of Mr. Miall for several years, and this is in order that his service for such should count.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then you are paying two deputy ministers for some years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We could have superannuated Mr. Miall.

Mr. COCHRANE. You could fly if you had wings. You appear to have more consideration for these gentlemen than for the tax-payers. If any of these ministers were running their own business they would not do such a thing. This deputy minister was ill, and we all sympathize with him, and this other gentleman was not hurt at all by doing his work, but four or five years afterwards we have this kind of legislation coming down. The ministers do not give us an explanation that any ordinary mortal can understand, and we have to ply questions at them in order to grasp the situation. Now we are to pay two deputy ministers concurrently.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are you doing then ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman wish me to answer ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, if you give us some straight information and not mystify it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will try not to do that. We are not paying any back salary at all. We have here the case of one deputy who has been in the service for a great many years, but prior to his appointment as deputy he had been performing the duties of the office, though not occupying the legal status of a deputy. It is now proposed to recognize his services to the extent of allowing his increase to commence at such amount as his length of service will entitle him to, instead of postponing it for some length of time.

Mr. BARKER. He does not get any arrears ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. His increase will come in the future. If this session should ever come to an end, and this Bill becomes law, then this deputy minister will be eligible for this increase, so that every day we are protracting the session we are keeping that increase back.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would suggest to the ministers that they should give plain explanations and not be constantly mystifying what they say.

Mr. BARKER. The word 'with' in the clause has no meaning.

Mr. SPROULE. It must have been intended for the word 'such,' so as to read, 'some other such capacity.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think that is necessary at all.

Mr. SPROULE. It certainly is necessary if you read the context.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid the Auditor General might hold that although acting as deputy and not having the status of a deputy, it would not be such capacity as would entitle this officer to come in under the terms of the section. So far as I know, there is only one deputy in the service to whom these words apply; the whole section is limited to men who are in the service and who are well known. Therefore no great grievance can grow out of it. Every person who has now the legal status of a deputy will come in under this section, if you pass it.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot see how anyone would be affected injuriously if you added the words, 'or some such capacity.' Under the Bill, a man might act in some other capacity. He might be a messenger.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no such case.

Mr. SPROULE. But if there were such a case, this would apply to it, and it would make it absurd, because service in such a capacity would certainly be of no value in determining the man's salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose we adopted the hon. gentleman's suggestion, the Auditor General might say that as a matter of law he could not recognize that Mr. Gerald, who was serving in the capacity of assistant commissioner, was taking the place of the deputy; and therefore he would not come within this provision.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 4—certain salaries not affected.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved that after the word 'salary' in the first line, the words 'or emolument' be inserted.

Mr. COCHRANE. What does that mean?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It happens that some of the deputies receive something outside of their salaries. For example, Mr. Parmelee, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, gets an allowance as controller of Chinese, and Mr. McDougald, Commissioner of Customs, besides his salary of $2,800, receives $800 as Chairman of the Board of Appraisers. These extra fees may be considered as emoluments, and it is not proposed to take them away. We want to allow the officers to retain whatever they have now.

Mr. COCHRANE. We have here an example of legislation brought down by a minister of the crown in such a crude state that the time of this committee has to be taken up whipping it into shape. There has hardly been a Bill introduced by the government this session that has not had to be amended over and over again before it has been in a shape to carry out the intention. This proves to me as a layman that the legislation is not properly considered before it is brought to this House. I think the country might better pay a competent draftsman to find out what the ministers mean, and then to put their legislation in such a shape as to carry out their intention. We have a provision here in regard to Mr. Parmelee, an official in a department which the minister who presides over it used to say was a sinecure and should never have been created. The hon. minister's soul is not now harassed by the fact that the farmers are being bled white. The hon. gentleman's deputy minister is receiving the same salary as he did in those days and now the minister proposes to increase it or rather to have the obnoxious word 'emolument' or 'allowance' removed and have it made a salary so that when the minister leaves his present position the deputy will have the full salary. The hon. minister we know is idle and the deputy must be idle too and he wishes to leave him in a secure position.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that my hon. friend wants to have a law clerk appointed to do this work. That is a subject worthy of consideration but we would not care to add to the burdens of the taxpayers now.

Mr. COCHRANE. I know how much you are concerned about the taxpayers, when you have all the offices loaded with officials and the taxpayers are not considered at all. If you had officials that had some brains to do this work that would be a benefit and we would not be detained here as we have been. The hon. gentleman brings down a measure and the moment a section is read he says he will have to amend it. How could a layman like myself understand that Bill?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. COCHRANE. I am serious about it. I do not think it is anything to laugh at that we are here from day to day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope that 'Hansard' will not include the speech of my hon. friends as part of my own.

Mr. COCHRANE. They have been deceived enough, with what you said in parliament without transferring anything I said to your credit.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think it would be fair to take away the allowances which these old officers have had and to reduce them; that is the point. We want to protect them in their rights. Whether it was right or not in days gone by to make these allowances is another matter, but I think the committee will agree that we should protect them in their rights.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have no objection to protecting them in their rights. I said nothing about their rights. The Postmaster General should not put in my mouth words that I did not use. This would not excuse the Postmaster General for what he said year after year when we proposed to give anything to the civil service. He was one of the first on his feet with the Minister of Customs denouncing the extravagance of the Tory party. The Minister of Trade and Commerce used to wax eloquent and his soul was torn with the burden we were placing on the farmers and now we are voting millions of money.

Sections as amended, agreed to.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock, Committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

On section 5,

This Act shall not apply to the present Deputy of the Minister of Justice until the conclusion of his present engagement as one of the commissioners for the revision of the Statutes of Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is because the Deputy Minister of Justice gets an allowance in connection with the revision of the statutes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Besides his salary as deputy minister and the allowance in connection with this revision of the statutes, I think he has another allowance, though I have forgotten what it is.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know as to that. At all events he has recently been appointed commissioner for revising the statutes for which he will get an allowance. It is not intended to give him the benefit of this Act until his commissionership ends.

On section 6,

Section 13 of the Civil Service Act is repealed and the following section is substituted therefor :—

13. The deputy head of each department shall, subject to the directions of the head of the department, oversee and direct the officers, clerks and employees in the department, and shall have general control of the business thereof, and shall perform such other duties as are assigned to him by the Governor in Council. He shall give his full time to the public service and shall discharge all duties required by the head of the department, or by the Governor in Council, whether such duty is in his own department or not ; and no deputy head shall receive any pay, fee or allowance in any form in excess of the amount provided for him in section 12 of this Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This section is to exclude claims for any other service.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The preceding section makes it clear, I suppose, without any exception being mentioned in this section, that the Deputy Minister of Justice is not included ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

On section 7,

7. In addition to the class of chief clerkships referred to in sections 15 and 16 of the said Act, another class, to be known as that of 'chief clerkship, grade A,' is hereby created.

2. The minimum salary paid to a chief clerk, grade A, shall be two thousand four hundred dollars per annum, with annual increases of one hundred dollars up to a maximum of two thousand eight hundred dollars per annum.

3. A chief clerk in any department may be promoted to grade A, by an Order in Council passed after—

(a.) The deputy head has reported that the duties devolving upon such officer are of special importance, and that the officer recommended for such promotion is specially qualified for their performance ;

(b.) The concurrence of the head of the department in such report ; and

(c.) The salary has been voted by parliament.

(d.) If a person on appointment to a chief clerkship, grade A, is at the time of such appointment in receipt of a salary greater than the minimum salary of such chief clerkship as above provided, he may be appointed to such chief clerkships at the salary he is then in receipt of, provided it does not exceed the maximum salary of such chief clerkship as above provided.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I move to amend subsection 3 so as to read: 'A chief clerk in any department may, without being required to undergo any special or other examination be promoted to grade A' &c.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BARKER. Is a clerk promoted to a chief clerkship, grade A., to have his salary increased over whatever he may be receiving ? For example, if his class entitled him to a maximum of $1,800, but his actual salary is $2,000, would you make the increases to $2,100, $2,200 and so on ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This section is limited solely to chief clerks in grade A, and does not cover all chief clerks. A man promoted to grade A enters the class at a minimum salary of $2,400. If he had been in receipt of $2,400 for a year before that promotion, he would be eligible for an increase of $100. But if he had been in receipt of $2,400 for less than a year, his increase would not begin until the expiry of a year from his last increase.

Mr. BARKER. Suppose he had been receiving $2,600 instead of $2,400. Would he then receive $2,700, being an increase of $100 over his then salary, or $2,500, being an increase of $100 over the minimum of his class ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Such a case could not arise. A man will be transferred from a lower class to grade A, and at promotion he would receive $2,400 as a minimum.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many did you intend this to apply to ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing has been settled in that way. I do not think the ministers have gone through their departments with that view. I have not gone through mine. When a law like this is to apply generally, it is impossible in advance to go through and make your selection.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It cannot apply until next session, because parliament has to vote the money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is not arranged in that way. If you would allow me, Mr. Chairman, to direct the attention of my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Haggart) for purposes of explanation to section 26, he will find that after referring to moneys voted by parliament, it provides :

> And during the financial year ending on the thirtieth day of June, 1904, there may be paid from out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada such sums of money as have been voted by parliament but are required for payment of such salaries and increases of salaries as are authorized by this Act.

There are conditions in the Bill such as are found in the Civil Service Act, that, before a chief clerkship can be created, there must be an Order in Council, a recommendation by the deputy head and concurrence by the head of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the government ought to be prepared to give the House some information as to the number who will be affected by this reorganization. Some one must have gone through and made some sort of calculation. If we have not that information, we do not know what expense the country is being committed to by this change. I assume that every one of these will want to be promoted at the earliest possible moment after this Act passes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are not all at their maximum, comparatively few are at their maximum now. I have no doubt that there will be a certain number of promotions, and they will be made prizes to be sought after. Instead of dumping the whole number into the higher class, all who might by law be put there, the government will exercise a careful discretion. They are treated as privates, and this is simply an intermediate step between the chief clerk and a deputy.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose it is because the deputy heads do not die quick enough.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, but it makes a smaller step. It is an incentive to service, so that a man should not feel that he has got to the end of his career because he has got to the maximum of a chief clerk, and that there is still a prize beyond that point.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What sum of money is available from the votes of parliament for this purpose ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not possible to say, because at present there are eligible cases all through the service, and unless we have an omnibus clause such as clause 26, it will be necessary to revote the whole salary for every man who is promoted from a chief clerkship to grade A. Under the section, any payment of salary to a man as chief clerk should be available to pay that same man if he is transferred to the higher class. Otherwise you would have to go through the whole service and revote all that is voted for the chief clerkships.

Mr. BARKER. I understood there was to be a provision inserted in section 7 to apply the same rule to the Auditor General's Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have an amendment for that purpose now. I move to add this subsection to section 7 :

> The provisions of subsection 3, section 24, of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, as that section is enacted by section 1 of chapter 16 of the statutes of 1891, shall apply to promotions to chief clerkships in grade A in the office of the Auditor General.

That is in order that the Auditor General should have the same control over promotions to grade A as he has in regard to promotions of other members of his staff. Since we are speaking of the Auditor General, I find it won't be possible for me to settle that particular question in time for the present measure. The session is so far advanced that I find it impossible to take up anything new, or to indulge in any departure or amendment that will involve any delay. So I think it will be wiser to leave the matter as it is with the expressions that have fallen from hon. gentlemen, until next session.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister leave all the promotions to the Auditor General ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whatever they are under the Audit Act ; we do not propose any change.

Mr. BARKER. This section which is proposed will give him the same power precisely with respect to grade A that he already has with clerks in his department, neither more nor less.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Precisely.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section (a),

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This clause merely re-echoes the resolutions that passed, increasing the minimum and maximum by $100. Section 16 fixes the minimum of a chief clerkship at $1,800 and the maximum at $2,400. This adds $100 at each end.

On section 14,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved to amend by adding as subsection 2 the following :

Subsection 2 of section 39 of the Civil Service Act is amended by striking out the word 'only' in the second line and by inserting the following words: 'and at such other time as may be from time to time fixed by the Governor in Council.'

Section 39 of the Civil Service Act provides that promotion examinations shall be held only once a year, in the month of May. It is rather inconvenient to have only one time in the year at which to hold promotion examinations, therefore it is proposed, not to dispense with the promotion examination in May, but to hold promotion examinations at other times in addition, when desirable.

Mr. SPROULE. Can a supplemental examination be held at any time by one member of the board or must it be held by the whole board?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is held by Order in Council. It is really a departmental, technical examination. It is not an examination for the public, but for those actually in the service.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It gives the government power to hold a special examination between times.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, more than once a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You can order a special examination for any candidate for a position?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Had you not that power before?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the statute says only once a year.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 17,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that a substitute clause for the one that is at present in the Civil Service Act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At present there are no third-class clerks except those who are appointed before the repeal of the provision for third-class clerks. I think that under the Act they were eligible for $50 a year increase. We are restoring the old annual increase of $50. The class that took the place of the third-class, the temporary writers, began at $400, and they had only an annual increase of $30 a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But my point is this: The parties who were appointed to be third-class clerks before that class was abolished claim that they had the right to their increment of $50 a year. Of course that question was threshed out in the House and Sir Charles Tupper, while leader of the opposition, took strong ground that it was a statutory right they obtained upon appointment. This does not make it a statutory right but leaves it optional with the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This does not alter the law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is just a doubtful point whether it alters the law or not.

On section 19,

Any person who is now, or hereafter may be, writer, clerk, packer, sorter, or messenger, temporary or otherwise, in the service of the government of Canada, employed in one of the departments at Ottawa, or in the office of the Auditor General, may, under Order in Council, be appointed a third-class clerk at a salary not less than the salary of which he was in receipt or to which he would be entitled at the time of such appointment (but limited always to a sum not exceeding to maximum salary of the third class); provided always that any such person, who in the capacity aforesaid, or in any other capacity, has been continuously in the said service for two years prior to the passing of this Act, may be so appointed without regard to his age and without passing the qualifying examination, and the said Order in Council shall be held to create the third-class clerkship in respect of which such appointment is made, and the Governor in Council may, in the case of any such person whose salary is at the time of his appointment as third-class clerk less than five hundred dollars a year, increase such salary to five hundred dollars a year, but no such increase shall take effect from a date prior to the date of the coming into force of this Act, nor shall it be made except on the report of the deputy head of the department, concurred in by the head of the department, that such clerk is deserving thereof.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved that:

Section 19 be amended by inserting after the word 'who' in the first line the words 'either before or after the passing of this Act was or who thereafter' and striking out the words 'is now or hereafter'; also to insert the letter (a) after the word 'be' on the first line; and in the 30th and following lines to strike out the words 'but no such increase shall take effect from a date prior to the date of the coming into force of this Act, nor shall it be made except.'

He said: This does not change the legal effect. The Act will come into operation when it receives the royal assent, and these words are therefore unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This virtually does away with the civil service examination for third-class clerks, because it allows anyone who has been in the service to be appointed to that grade without examination.

Mr. BELCOURT. It provides that those who have been in the service for two years in a temporary capacity as packers, sorters, messengers, &c., shall not have to undergo an examination.

Mr. CLARKE. After this amendment has been passed, who will be required to pass the examination?

Mr. BELCOURT. Those who have been in the service for two years prior to the first of July, 1903, as packers, sorters or messengers in a temporary capacity may be promoted to the third-class without regard to age, and without having to pass an examination.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does this give power to make a third-class clerk, even if there is no vacancy ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No question of a vacancy would arise in the beginning, and this does not dispense with the examination for any person who is hereafter appointed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It only applies to those who have been two years in the service ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Or who hereafter may be in the service as temporaries for two or three years. The temporaries can look forward to being transferred to the third-class as a reward. The question of vacancies would not arise at the beginning, because there will be no third-class clerkships in existence when this Act goes into effect. The old third-class clerkship has been merged into the junior second, so that to-day we have to start by promoting the temporaries into the third class. My own opinion is that we ought to make a liberal use of this provision, and transfer the temporaries into the third class clerkships as they show themselves deserving. A temporary position, with from $500 to $600 a year, is not a satisfactory position to hold in the service of the Dominion, and so far as my department is concerned I would look forward with pleasure to being able to go through the department, and to select all who are deserving of being made permanent. That is the spirit in which I would feel myself bound to interpret it.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you, by Order in Council, create the third-class clerkships ? That was the question of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for Lanark spoke of vacancies, and I explained to him that the question of vacancies would arise. My own department is constantly expanding, and it is impossible to tell parliament with any accurate detail, the number of temporary writers you will require throughout the year ; you have to feel your way into it. Probably in one month you will find your staff inadequate to cope with the increased number of post office savings bank acccounts and other work, and you have to make a temporary appointment under the law. I would look forward to that temporary appointee becoming permanent, if he were fit for the position. We may consider that most positions in the service are of a permanent character; they certainly are in the Post Office Department. When a man is employed temporarily and proves himself deserving, he ought to be put on the permanent list and have a chance to rise in the service.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Under the present Act it requires the deputy minister to report as to the necessities of the department, and the minister to concur in that report, and the council to approve of the organization set out in that report, before parliament is asked to vote the sums necessary to provide for the organization of that department. This clause would appear to give power to the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the minister, to appoint any number of third-class clerks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not after this fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It certainly interferes with the existing Act in that respect. After all, I look upon our civil service examination as at present conducted as a sort of farce, and especially the examination for promotion from one class to another. A man who is at the maximum of the second class for thirteen or fourteen years, cannot be promoted to the first-class because he cannot pass some technical examination which is not pertinent at all to his office. I place very little faith in the civil service examination, but I think the minister should go through the form with regard to the organization as required by the existing Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The observations of my hon. friend, if applied generally, are very fair, but he will see that the promotion to the third class is limited to the number we have at present in a temporary capacity, and I hope the government will make a liberal use of this power.

Mr. BELCOURT. Section 40 of the Civil Service Act provides :

> Once in each year, and not later than the 15th day of March, the deputy head of each department shall make and lay before the board, through the Department of the Secretary of State, an estimate of the number of vacancies likely to occur during the ensuing year.

Then it names certain grades in reference to which this report is to be made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This clause does away with that altogether, so that that is not applicable to this clause.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is applicable in this sense, that the only time when an estimate can be made of the number of clerks required in the department is once a year, on the report prepared under the provisions of section 40.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire to bring to the notice of the hon. Minister of Labour the case of Mr. H. W. Mutch, who has been a messenger for the Marine and Fisheries Department, in Mr. Lord's office at Charlottetown for the last ten years, at $20 a month. If the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries were in his place, I might get some information from him in that regard. We are all proud of the civil service of Canada. In every department, from the deputy head down to the lowest clerk, they are a credit to Canada, and are equal to any body of civil servants in any other part of the world.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would my hon. friend allow me to make a suggestion ? I am not familiar with the case to which he refers, but there will be an item in the estimates connected with the Department of Marine and Fisheries when the minister of that department will be present. If my hon. friend will bring the matter up then, it would be more satisfactory.

Mr. GALLERY. I would like to ask the hon. minister what examination the old employees will have to undergo ; for instance, men who have been working for the government for fifteen or twenty years ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is referring to the Department of Customs. His question will be answered by subsection 3 of section 37, which provides that the examination hereafter shall be upon the duties of the office, and be departmental rather than the ordinary civil service examination.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I agree that in certain departments, such as the Customs Department, a civil service examination is out of the question. Take landing waiters, lockers and checkers, who check goods passing from steamers into cars ; these men have special training for special work, and I think it would be very unfair and ridiculous to ask them to pass a civil service examination.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the effect of section 6 of the Civil Service Act provided this passes ? That section says :

> The Governor in Council shall, from time to time, determine the number of officers, chief clerks, clerks, messengers and other employees required for the working of the several departments.

Then it goes on to provide that all others shall be supernumerary clerks without being eligible for increase of salary. That is practically the skeleton of your service. I do not see any clause in this Bill which repeals that ; and if it is not repealed, it seems to me that you cannot by Order in Council add the third-class clerkship again.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This Act must prevail over all prior Acts. When it says the Governor in Council can create an additional third-class clerkship, it must take the place of any prior legislation that clashes with it.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that is a very proper way to pass legislation. It seems to me that section 6 will have some force and effect if it is not specifically repealed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not say that section 6 of the Civil Service Act is repealed entirely and actually ; but it is repealed pro tanto, so far as those now in the service are concerned. This is to start the new class going, but when this fiscal year runs out the full force of section 6 will apply.

Mr. SPROULE. If it only applied to those now in the service I could understand it, but you provide for those who may come in in the future.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There can be no appointment without a vote of money. This Bill does not dispense with the voting of money specifically, except for the remainder of this year and with respect to those now in the service. When this fiscal year expires there will be so many third-class clerkships, and the estimates for future years must be voted in the same way as heretofore.

Mr. SPROULE. But you are practically creating another class by Order in Council.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A government would not create a clerkship if it had not money to pay the clerk. There can be practically no appointment made until parliament votes the money.

On section 20,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect of this ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This section does not alter the Civil Service Act of 1887. It classifies the employees under three classes, while now they are all enumerated in one list.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does it increase the salaries ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it does not make any change in that way; it simply puts them in groups.

On section 21,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In section 37 of the Act of 1887 there was a subclause B ; that is left out.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is the clause providing that an appointment shall be made from outside the service only if no person in the civil service has the qualifications for the office.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We left that out for this reason : Suppose that in the Customs Department you want an appraiser, a techincal officer, and you have a man in the customs service who is possessed of the qualifications required ; you cannot appoint him, because the deputy has to certify that the requisite qualifications are not possessed by any person then in the service, and it may be a preventive officer, who has the qualifications and he cannot give that certificate. Therefore we have left out the words :

Said appointments shall be made from the civil service if any person therein shall be found available.

Subsection 3 is entirely new, and is added to section 37. This is to meet a difficulty that was discussed when the customs estimates were under consideration, and I think the provision now made meets the wishes of members on both sides of the House. We have a great many old officers in the outside department of the service who have been engaged in the work for years and years, but who hesitate to attempt the literary examination, if I may call it so, that the Civil Service Act requires, and yet we consider that they are very competent officers in the discharge of their duties. But still, as they have not passed the examination, we have either to appoint them preventive officers, which is too general, or they have to remain on the temporary list. It is desirable I think in the public interest and in their interest, that they should be made permanent officers, and by this section you dispense with the literary examination pre scribed by the Civil Service Act so far as the outside service is concerned, and substitute therefor a technical practical examination on the duties of their office which they will be able to pass.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What changes does this make? The Minister of Customs said a moment ago that this would not affect salaries, but was simply putting them into classes ; but I see that it increases the salaries of a number of classes. Perhaps the Minister of Customs will explain that when he returns to the House.

On section 22,

So much of schedule (b) to the Civil Service Act as is included under the heading 'Inland Revenue,' as enacted by section 3 of chapter 12 of the statutes of 1889, is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor :—

Inland Revenue.

Inspectors, salary from..	$1,600 to $2,500
Collectors, salary from..	500 " 2,400
Deputy collectors, salary from...	400 " 1,700
Accountants, salary from..	600 " 1,500
Special class excisemen (chief officers in charge of distilleries), salary from..	1,400 " 1,800
Special class excisemen, other than as above, salary from.. ..	1,200 " 1,400
First, second and third-class excisemen, salary from..	600 " 1,200
Probationary excisemen, salary from	500
Stenographers and typewriters, salary from..	400 " 600
Messengers, salary from..	400 " 750

To which may be added for surveys of important manufactories an additional salary, for the special class excisemen and other officers connected with the survey, not exceeding in any one case two hundred dollars per annum.

Hon. Mr. PATERSON.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this clause intended to apply in the future as in the past ? It seems to me that you are extra liberal to these people.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will explain that. With regard to the special class excisemen, we have been in the habit of paying additional salary because the hours of work are longer and because the work is special and highly technical. The clause remains the same with regard to that addition of salary to which may be added for service of important manufactories an additional salary for the special class excisemen, who perform that duty, not exceeding $100 per annum. But, as very often the work cannot be performed by one man, who is the chief officer in the distillery, we have had it revised so that the class will be :

To which may be added for surveys of important manufactories an additional salary for the special excisemen class and other officers connected with such survey, not exceeding in any one case two hundred dollars per annum.

But I have similar officers to these in distilleries, one man cannot perform the duties alone, and he has what is called an assistant, who may not be a special class officer, but an officer of the first or second class, which is next to the rank of first officer, he should receive an additional salary of not over $200 when he is in charge of these distilleries. But this salary is paid only to those officers who work in those distilleries and serve long hours.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you think they are of more importance than the deputy collectors, who only get $1,700, that you give these men $2,000 ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes. The responsibility is very much greater. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) knows that the most important part of the revenue is derived from the distilleries, and we must have a special class of men, men of technical knowledge. I regard the special class officers as the most important in the service—even more important than the collector or inspector of the division. They must possess technical knowledge which cannot be learned in a few years, and they must work for years, besides passing an examination of two or three classes before they reach that position.

Mr. SPROULE. Do not the deputy collectors require the same knowledge ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Oh, no. The position of deputy collector is open for almost everybody. They do not have to pass any examination, and their responsibility is not great, because the collector is responsible. Of course, he may take charge in case of the collector's sickness or absence, but he is not otherwise responsible. And he need not have technical skill equal to that of the special class excise officer.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understood that the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) had called attention, while I was out for a moment, to a mistake I had made in saying that there had been no increase in salary. I did not allow for the effect of the classification. For instance, under this Bill tide surveyors are classed with chief landing waiters and chief lockers. The old Bill being chief landing waiters and chief lockers, $1,200, that being voted, and tide surveyors being credited with that, gives them the same, and to that extent I was wrong. And the messengers get $100 increase to the maximum. That is a change, I think, since I gave the Bill consideration. When I spoke I was under the impression that it made no change and hon. members will see that the change is very slight.

Mr. SPROULE. The Bill does not make any difference between deputies in the first-class divisions and other divisions.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The salary is not mentioned here, but it is fixed by the minister himself. The minimum is $500 and the maximum $1,700, according to the importance of the division.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister thinks the duty of the deputy collector in a first-class division is almost equal to the duty of a special excise officer attending a distillery ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I always considered the duties of a special officer unique. They are quite different from any other service performed by any other officer in the department. Of course, the salary of $1,700 is paid only in large divisions like Montreal and Toronto, on account of the responsibility upon the collector and upon his assistant. It has always been left to the minister to determine what shall be the salaries of the deputy collectors. There are two classes, classes A and B, and each man is paid according to the importance of the work he has under his charge.

On section 23,

The Governor in Council may grant such increases of salary in the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue as are by this Act authorized, but no such increase shall take effect from a date prior to the date of the coming into force of this Act, nor shall it be made except upon the report of the deputy head of the department, concurred in by the head of the department, that the person recommended for such increase is deserving thereof.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved to amend by striking out the words 'but no such increase shall take effect from a date prior to the date of the coming into force of this Act, nor shall it be made except'.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If you have a vote for the salary, and you are not limited to the date of the passage of this Act, why would it not be good for the current year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That will be for the Department of Justice to determine. But if we pass the Act now and it goes into effect on a certain date, I do not know how you can make it retroactive.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of striking out these words ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Section 27 of the Bill says the Act shall go into effect on the 1st of July, 1903, and unless these words in section 23 had been inserted, it would have been possible, with section 27 standing, to have made the salary commence at the date when the Act came into force. But by striking out section 27 you must also strike out the corresponding safeguard that runs through the Bill. By not saying that the Act shall come into effect on the 1st of July but only allowing it to come into effect when it becomes law, then it is necessary to provide that the salary shall not begin at an anterior date.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am of the opinion the hon. gentleman is right as to his conclusion, but you would require either express words or necessary implication in order to give the Act retroactive effect. But I do not follow the line of his argument exactly. It does not seem to me these words are any less necessary now than they were before—I refer to the words which are being struck out. I do not see that striking out section 27 affects this either one way or the other. All you say in section 23 is that no increase shall take effect from a date prior to the date of the coming into force of this Act. It does not seem to me to make any difference.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To make the point I had in my mind I should have said 'Prior to the passing of the Act.' However, what I intended was to prevent a retroactive effect of the law and to let it take effect when it receives the royal assent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to think that the hon. Postmaster General is right about that, and I think the original words in section 23 were introduced because of a possibly erroneous idea of section 27.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 26,

All sums of money voted by parliament for the financial year ending on the thirtieth day of June, 1904, for the payment of the salaries or the increases to the salaries of any persons now in the public service, shall, in the event of the promotion of any such persons to higher classes or grades, or on their transfer to other positions in the public service, or their becoming entitled to, or being granted, increases of salary under the provisions of this Act, be applicable in or towards payment of the salaries or increases to the salaries of such persons so promoted or transferred, or becoming entitled to or being granted increases as aforesaid; and during the financial year ending on the thirtieth day of June, 1904, there may be paid from and out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada such sums of money as have been voted by parliament but are required for payment of such salaries and increases of salaries as are authorized by this Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved:

That section 26 be amended by inserting after the words 'nineteen hundred and four' in the second line the words 'and applicable'; also by striking out the word 'now' in the 4th line and by inserting the word 'not' after the word 'have' in the 3rd line from the last of the clause.

Mr. SPROULE. That gives you an opportunity of going into the treasury when you had no authority to go into it before. You can only deal with what has been voted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This allows the government to apply the moneys which have been voted and are now applicable to the payment of the salaries of officers although they are transferred to a higher class. Take for example the case of a chief clerk. If a chief clerk were promoted to grade A the money that we have already voted to pay the salary as a chief clerk would be available to pay him although he was transferred to a higher class. Take the class of temporary writers. There are in the service of the Post Office Department alone about one hundred of this class. The sums for this class have been voted heretofore in bulk simply under the heading of contingencies and they will be available for this class for the present fiscal year although the temporary class have ceased to be temporaries and have become third-class clerks. At the end of this year, when we enter upon a new fiscal year, they will appear in the ordinary way under the old practice and hereafter a vote will be taken for them as clerks and not as a part of the contingencies of the department.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved:

That section 27 be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

SALARIES OF PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARIANS AND REGISTRAR OF SUPREME COURT.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, that the salaries of the general librarian and the parliamentary librarian of the library of parliament, and the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada shall each be $3,500 per annum; with an annual increase of $100, up to a maximum of $4,000 per annum.

2. Resolved, that for the purpose of determining the salary of the officers at present occupying the said positions, each shall be credited with his period of service; and shall hereafter be paid such salary as he would by length of service have become entitled to, had the provision of the next preceding resolution been in force at the time of his appointment.

3. Resolved, that during the financial year ending June 30, 1904, there may be paid, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, such sums as are required for payment of the foregoing increases. —The Minister of Justice.

Mr. SPROULE. What are their salaries now?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Chapter 15 of the Revised Statutes, 'an Act respecting the Library of Parliament,' section 4 provides that there shall be two officers, one of whom shall be called the general librarian and the other of whom shall be called the parliamentary librarian, which officers shall be appointed by joint commission, under the Great Seal, as librarians of parliament, and shall have equal powers as respects the control and management of the library. Section 5 provides that the salary of each officer so appointed shall be such sum not exceeding $3,000 as the Governor in Council directs. Under section 6 it is provided that:

The general librarian, parliamentary librarian, and other officers and servants of the library of parliament, shall be responsible for the faithful discharge of their official duties, as the same are defined by regulations agreed upon by the Speakers of the two Houses, and concurred in by the said joint committee on the library.

These gentlemen are really officers of parliament and do not come under the Civil Service Act properly so-called.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will bring each of the librarians up to the limit of the statute?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is in accordance with suggestions which, I think, were made at the time when the Bill providing for the increase of certain salaries was before the Committee of the House, that the librarians of parliament had some right to be considered in connection with it.

Mr. SPROULE. Then that brings them up at once to $4,000?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Those that have been in the position for a sufficient length of time go to $3,500 and then they go up by annual increments of $100 a year to $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they start at $3,500 now or would they only be entitled to $3,500 at a certain time and then go up?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be just as well to say in plain English that they will get $4,000 a year?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As a matter of fact, so far as the present librarians are concerned, it is a proposal to give them $4,000 a year so long as they hold office. The difference is that a new appointee would begin at $3,500.

Mr. CLARKE. Has anything been done for the rest of the library staff ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. 48 and 49 Victoria, provides that the other officers and servants of the library of parliament come under the operation of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BELL. I wish to call attention to the fact that the clerks of the House of Commons and the staff of the House of Commons generally, are, so far as I can understand, not included at all in the legislation that has passed this House, and are not going to derive any advantage through it. I would suppose that it would be advisable that the officers of the House of Commons should participate in the benefits of the present movement to increase the salaries generally speaking of the servants of the country. It would seem somewhat extraordinary if the House of Comons were providing for every one else to the exclusion of those who are more particularly their own officials. I understand that the Senate is much more liberal in dealing with its staff than is the House of Commons, but I would like to know from the Minister of Justice, if it is necessary to pass legislation in order that the staff of the House of Commons, and the staff of the Senate may participate in these advantages ? If so, this would be an opportune time to add to this resolution, so as to include the members of the House of Commons staff. I am sure that generally speaking, the members of the House of Commons would like to see the legislation so extended as to include the officers of this House.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This no doubt is a matter of very considerable importance, and ought to be dealt with at an early date, but I presume it ought to be dealt with in the estimates. I do not presume it is possible to deal with it in the way we are dealing with those who are affected by the Civil Service Act.

Resolutions reported ; read the first and second times, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 267) respecting the Librarians of Parliament, and Bill (No. 268) respecting the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bills read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 257) to amend the Civil Service Act.—The Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As this Bill is confined simply to the civil service, it is thought not advisable to add the class which the Minister of Justice has dealt with, by resolution. I would therefore move that the Bill be reported.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a peculiar situation that the librarians shall not be under the Civil Service Act, but that all the other officials of the library are under that Act ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is one of the mysteries of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. SPROULE. It certainly is.

On the question : When shall the Bill be read the third time :

Mr. SPROULE. Leave it until to-morrow.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Better let it go to the Senate now.

Mr. SPROULE. I have had some letters in reference to this Bill which I have not been able to attend to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman presses it, I will let the third reading stand.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I should like to have an opportunity of looking at these letters.

Order allowed to stand.

THE RAILWAY ACT, 1903—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 21) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate, acquainting their honours, that this House agrees to Nos. 1, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, of their amendments to the Bill intituled:

An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.

And amendments Nos. 52 and 53 as follows:

Amendments to 51.

So that the clause as amended by them will read :—Without leave therefor having been obtained from the board.

And disagrees to Nos. 2, 3, 4, 6, 11, 31, 33, 40, 45, 46, 60, 70, of their amendments for the following reasons :—

Reasons for disagreeing to their amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 70.

(a.) Because the amendment made by the Senate refers to all railways, the construction and operation of which are authorized by special Acts of the legislature of any province whether the said railways have subsequently been declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada by this parliament, or not.

(b.) That the said amendment is ultra vires as declaring a railway to be a work for the general advantage of Canada only with respect of certain matters instead of declaring the whole railway to be such a work.

(c.) That the subject matters within the jurisdiction of this parliament should be made applicable.

(d.) Because it declares a railway to be a work for the general advantage of Canada in respect to provisions of an Act.

(e.) That the second subsection of their amendment depends upon the rest.

Reasons for disagreeing to their amendment No. 6 :

Because the amendment is inconsistent with the provisions of the Bill with respect to the tenure of office of a commissioner.

Because such Acts as in the amendment stated would be a cause for removal.

Reasons for disagreeing to amendment No. 11:

Because their amendment is inconsistent with other provisions of the Bill and with the spirit in which the Bill is framed.

Because a conflict of opinion between the Governor in Council and the Supreme Court of Canada might result.

Reasons for disagreeing with their amendment No. 31 :—

Because their amendment is inconsistent with the section which it is proposed to amend.

Because their amendment is not a complete sentence.

Reasons for disagreeing with their amendment No. 33 :—

Because their amendment unduly limits the discretion of the board of commissioners.

Reasons for disagreeing to their amendment No. 40 :—

Because their amendment is ultra vires.

Reasons for disagreeing with their amendment No. 45 :—

Because their amendment does not remedy the evil existing under the present law.

Reasons for disagreeing to their amendment No. 46 :—

Because their amendment is ultra vires of this parliament.

Reasons for disagreeing to their amendment No. 60 :—

Because their amendment either limits the meaning of the word 'traffic' or is unnecessary.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a difficult matter to bring any consideration to bear on these amendments, as we do not know what their effect is.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am moving with regard to the amendments, and it is for hon. gentlemen to say whether they agree with my motion or not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). After my hon. friend has spoken, we are just as wise as before. If the House is to give any intelligent consideration to the amendments, one of two courses will have to be adopted; either my hon. friend will have to take up each amendment and explain what it is, or else it will be necessary to adjourn the debate on his motion so as to give hon. members a chance to look into the amendments for themselves.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am entirely in the hands of the House. I am prepared to deal with the whole matter immediately, or, if it is more convenient to hon. members, I am willing to put off the matter.

I was under the impression that we had all considered these amendments, because they have been before us for some time. Of course, this motion must go to the Senate, and if they fail to agree, we must have a conference.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would suggest that the amendments be taken up one by one.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. Minister of Justice has no objection, we would like to have an explanation of each amendment, and we might afterwards take time to consider them.

On amendment 1,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The first amendment is to section 2, subsection (b). At present it reads as follows :

The expression 'by-law' includes a resolution.

The suggested amendment is :

The expression 'by-law,' when referring to the Act of the company, includes a resolution.

This amendment I think we ought to accept, because it is an improvement on the phraseology.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 2,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The second amendment is to section 5, for which the Senate proposes to substitute the following :

Every railway, steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, now or hereinafter connecting with or crossing a railway which, at the time of such connection or crossing, is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada in respect only to such connection or crossing or to through-traffic thereon or anything appertaining thereto, and also to the provisions set forth in this Act relating to offences and penalties, navigable waters and criminal matters, and this Act shall apply to that extent only.

2. This section shall not, however, operate as regards through-traffic on railways owned by any provincial government, without the consent of such government.

Then, they leave out sections 6 and 7 altogether. That is to say, we are to depart from the principle which we have adopted and which has been in force for many years, that parliament declares a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, and not simply a piece of the work. I can see no good reason why we should adopt a new principle which it seems to me would be of doubtful legality and a very serious inconvenience in the operation of the road.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the object of the amendment ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The object of the amendment, as I understand it, is that instead of declaring the whole work to be for the general advantage of Canada, and as a result of that declaration bringing the whole railway within our jurisdiction, we should exercise our jurisdiction only with respect to that particular portion of the railway which is connected with the crossing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman does not propose to concur in this amendment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, no.

Amendment not agreed to.

On amendment 3,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. By the third amendment it is proposed to leave out section 6, and by the fourth amendment to leave out section 7. These two sections are necessary if section 5 is retained, and therefore I propose to disagree with respect to those two for the same reason as in the case of the second amendment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I quite concur in the view of the hon. Minister of Justice and I might have some other reasons in addition to those which he has already pointed out, although these reasons are, perhaps, more a question of legislative wisdom than of constitutional validity. I do not see how you could work out the provision that a railway in respect to its connection with or crossing by another railway should be a work for the general advantage of Canada and in respect to other things should not be a work for the general advantage of Canada; and I do not see how a railway shall be a provincial railway, that is not for the general advantage of Canada with respect to all local traffic, but for the general advantage of Canada as to through-traffic. I think that, in addition to what the Minister of Justice has suggested, it would be absolutely impracticable to work out the provision suggested in the Senate. I have not had the advantage, however, of hearing or reading the arguments that has been adduced in support of their views.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I read with some care what was said in the Senate and I think the object the Senate had in view was to prevent the parliament of Canada extending its jurisdiction to local railways. The intention was to limit our jurisdiction as far as possible. Now, that intention may be very good but it seems to me that with respect to this particular class of enterprise it is most desirable that railways which connect together should be under the same jurisdiction.

Amendment not agreed to.

On amendment 5,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I agree to number 5; the section amended is section 11. The words there added are in the second paragraph:

No commissioner shall, directly or indirectly, hold, purchase, take or become interested in, for his own behalf.

I agree to the addition of these words: 'directly or indirectly.'

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 6,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I disagree with amendment number 6, which amends section 11, because the amendment is inconsistent with the provisions of the Bill with respect to the tenure of office of the commissioner because such an Act as is referred to in the amendment would be cause for removal. The amendment reads as follows:

Any member of the board accepting any gift or favour for himself or for any other person, or exercising his influence on behalf of any person with any railway company or officer for any position or favour shall thereby forfeit his seat as a member of the board.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under what provision of the law or of this statute would that be cause for removal?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will allow that amendment to stand; I cannot put my finger upon the clause at the present time. On general principles, of course, they would be removaable for any act of corruption.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the provision that any such commissioner shall thereby forfeit his seat as here proposed would necessarily mean that legal proceedings would have to be taken so it would not be very different after all from what the hon. Minister of Justice suggests. As far as the substance of the clause is concerned it does not seem to me out of place. The objection of the hon. Minister of Justice is that it is inconsistent with the tenure of office of the commissioner. While in one sense it is, in another sense it is not. The tenure of office is for a term of years, but that tenure of office is coupled with certain provisions contained in this subsection, that the commissioners shall not under pain of forfeiture be guilty of certain acts. If this is provided for anywhere else in the statute I would agree with the Minister of Justice; but if it is not provided for anywhere else in the Act I would be inclined to think that the amendment of the Senate is a very wise one.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In any event we could not accept the amendment in its present form.

If any member of the board accepts any gift or favour——

Why, the giving of a cigar would be sufficient to disqualify a commissioner and in addition to that my hon. friend will mark the words:

—shall thereby forfeit his seat as a member of the board.

Forfeiture of a seat might be construed to mean the vacating of a seat and that might render all subsequent acts of the commissioner void; there is that embarrassment about the clause as drawn.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister will observe that I was referring to the policy of the subsection. I do not at all overlook the difficulty my hon. friend suggests as to the precise wording of this clause. However, perhaps we can let this stand my hon. friend the Minister of Justice can point out later the provision to which he referred.

Amendment allowed to stand.

On amendment 7,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This amendment I agree to. It is an amendment to section 25. It provides for inserting the words 'company or' before the word 'person.' The object of the amendment is to make the section apply to companies as well as to persons.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 8,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This also is an amendment to section 25, and is for the addition of the words 'company or' in another line. It has the same effect as the previous one.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 9,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is an amendment to section 43, and it is one to which I agree. The object is to add, after the word 'may,' the words 'of its own motion or.' The section now reads that the board may upon the application of any parties state a case to the Supreme Court of Canada. This extends it so that the board may take this action upon its own motion. That, I think, is a good amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 10,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This also is an amendment to section 43, and it provides for the addition of the words 'like reference may also be made on the request of the Governor in Council.' I think that is a useful amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 11,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is an amendment to section 44, and is one with which I disagree. The amendment is proposed to the second paragraph of section 3. That paragraph reads :

An appeal also shall lie from the board to such court upon any question which, in the opinion of the board is a question of law, upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board.

It is proposed to substitute for this the following :

An appeal shall also lie from the board to such court, upon any question of law, upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board or, in the event of their refusal from two judges of such court.

I propose that this amendment be not concurred in, the reason for disagreeing being because the amendment is inconsistent with other provisions of the Bill and the spirit in which the Bill is framed, and conflict of opinion between the Governor in Council and the Supreme Court of Canada might result. The intention of the Bill is to endeavour to have grievances that exist speedily remedied, and, to that end, that the finding of the board may be final and appeal to the courts excluded, except as the board may, of its own motion, determine to refer questions of law to the court.

Amendment not agreed to.

On amendment 12,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is an amendment to section 52, and proposes to insert, after the word 'Canada,' the words 'notice thereof to be given to the secretary of the board, who shall keep a register for the purpose.' Section 52 provides that the head office of the company shall be in a place designated by the special Act of the company, but that the company may by by-law change it from time to time. The intention of the amendment is to provide that notice of any change of head office shall be given to the board, so that the board may know where the head office of every company is. This amendment I agree to.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 13,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is an amendment to section 111, and to this also I agree. The proposal is, in the first line of subsection 4 to substitute for 'bonds' the word 'securities.' That is a better word, as having more general application.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 14,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This also is an amendment to section 111, and provides for the substitution of 'and' for 'but' in the third line of subsection 4. The subsection reads : 'The power of issuing bonds conferred on the company hereby or under the special Act shall not be construed as being exhausted by such issue ; but,' and so on. 'And' is substituted for 'but.'

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 15,

Mr. BARKER. Ought not the word 'securities' to be put in place of 'bonds' on the fourth line of subsection 4, seeing it has been substituted in the other case?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) will see that this will be unnecessary if we agree to amendment No. 15. The effect of No. 15 is to strike out the words 'upon the bonds constituting such issue being withdrawn or paid off and duly cancelled.' The whole clause reads: 'But such power may be exercised from time to time upon the bonds constituting such issue being withdrawn or paid off and duly cancelled.' The latter part of the clause is struck out. I agree to the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 16,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The object of this is to amend section 122 by inserting before the beginning of the present subsection provisions with regard to the preparation of a map showing the proposed location of the railroad. To this amendment I agree.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 17,

In the province of Quebec the portion of the railway comprised in each municipality shall be indicated on the plan and in the book of reference by separate number or numbers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is done as a result of the cadastral system we have in that province, in which each property is numbered. I think the amendment is useful, and I agree to it.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendment 18 agreed to.

On amendment 19,

In the fifth line of subsection 3, section 139, leave out from 'certified' to 'an' in the seventh line and substitute 'as provided in section 129 of this Act.'

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The effect is merely verbal. It is to amend paragraph 3 of section 129 by omitting the words: 'Certified correct by the president, general manager or one of the directors of the company, and also by its engineer.' I move concurrence in the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendment 20 agreed to.

On amendment 21,

In the third line of subsection 2 after the word 'Act' where it first occurs, insert 'excepting paragraph (c) of subsection 1 thereof.'

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I also agree to that. The paragraph will then read:

Such arbitrator or arbitrators shall have and may exercise with respect to such arbitration all the powers mentioned in section 49 of this Act excepting paragraph (c) of subsection 1 thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendment 22 agreed to.

On amendment 23,

For subsection 3 substitute:

3. Where the lands are situated in the province of Quebec, the notice shall be published as is required in cases of confirmation of title, and the registrar's certificate shall be procured and filed as in such cases.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I accept that amendment. It is another amendment to section 124, by which we substitute another new section to subsection 3, because of certain conditions existing in the province of Quebec, for which we made an amendment some time ago.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 24,

In the second and third lines of subsection 4 leave out 'or judgment of confirmation.'

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I accept the amendment. It is also applicable to the same section.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments 25, 26, 27, 28 and 29 agreed to.

On amendment 30,

Leave out paragraph (g) and substitute:

Whenever any city, town or incorporated village is desirous of having lines of telegraph, telephone, or for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, placed under ground the board may, on the application of such city, town or incorporated village, require the company to thus place its lines or wires under ground, and abrogate the right given by this section or by the special Act to carry lines on poles, in such city, town, or incorporated village, the whole on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the actual change made?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Paragraph (g) in the Act reads:

In case efficient means are devised for carrying any such lines or wires underground, no Act of parliament requiring the company to adopt such means, and abrogating the right given by this section to carry lines on poles, shall be deemed an infringement of the privileges granted by this Act, nor shall the company be entitled to damages in respect thereof.

This is clearer and more effective, and gives more complete control to the municipalities.

Amendment agreed to.

On amendment 31,

Add as subsection 3:

3. Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to authorize the company exercising the powers therein mentioned for the purpose of selling or distributing light, heat, power or electricity in cities, towns or villages, without the company having first obtained the consent therefor by a by-law of the municipality.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I disagree with this amendment. It would make the company subject to absolute control of the municipalities, and make it impossible to exercise the powers conferred by parliament. I move that the amendment be not concurred in for the following reason :

Because their amendment is inconsistent with the section which it is proposed to amend, and because their amendment is not a complete sentence. I move non-concurrence with the amendment.

Amendment not agreed to.

Amendment 32 agreed to.

On amendment 33,

Add to the end of subsection 2 :

Having regard as to whether the right to one or more crossings or to take away or withhold rights of crossing formed part of the consideration paid by the company to the landowner, or of the bargain by which the company acquired the land.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The amendment of the Senate would have the effect of unduly limiting the discretion of the board while we contend that it is proper that the board should have absolute discretion in the premises to determine whether an additional farm crossing is necessary. I therefore beg to move :

That the said amendment be not concurred in for the reason that the amendment unduly limits the discretion of the board of commissioners.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you propose to leave it entirely in the hands of the commissioners as to whether they shall give an additional crossing to a portion of a farm ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, in case a farm is subdivided.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the farmer should have that right without being obliged to apply to the board for it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Section 198 provides that :

Every company shall make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried, convenient and proper for the crossing of the railway for farm purposes. In crossing with live stock, the same shall be in charge of some competent person, who shall use all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents.

That is the law as we have it at the present time, but when the farm is subdivided the question arises as to whether each subdivision of the farm is entitled to a crossing. In a case in the Supreme Court against the Grand Trunk Railway Company it was decided that the original crossing was the only crossing that was binding on the company and that the subdivision of the farm afterwards did not entitle the man who got the subdivided farm to an additional crosssing. This provision of the new Bill is to enable the man who has acquired the subdivided farm to go before the board and let the board decide whether an additional crossing is necessary or not. The intention of the Senate is to limit the authority of the board by providing that the board shall be obliged to take into account all the conditions existing at the time the right to the farm crossing was acquired. We think it proper not to bind it in this respect but to allow the board to determine what shall be done under the existing conditions at the time the application is made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Senate amendment means, that, where a party sells his land to a railway company and makes a bargain with the railway company that he shall not have more than one crossing, or that he shall not have any crossing, notwithstanding that bargain, he may apply to the board for the purpose of securing a crossing.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is just the other way about. Subsection 2 of the Bill reads as follows :

The board may, upon the application of any landowner, order the company to provide and construct a suitable farm crossing across the railway, wherever in any case the board deems it necessary for the proper enjoyment of his land, on either side of the railway, and safe in the public interest ; and may order and direct how, when, where, by whom, and upon what terms and conditions, such farm crossing shall be constructed and maintained.

This leaves it absolutely under the control of the commissioners to determine whether or not an additional farm crossing is advisable. The Senate leave these words I have just read as they were originally, but they add this paragraph :

Having regard as to whether the right to one or more crossings or to take away or withhold rights of crossings formed part of the consideration paid by the company to the landowner, or of the bargain by which the company acquired the land.

Under this amendment the commissioners are obliged, in determining whether or not they shall grant an additional farm crossing, to consider the terms of the contract under which the railway company acquired the land from the original landowner in connection with which land application for a farm crossing is being made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is exactly as I said it was. The Bill, as we passed it, gave the board, notwithstanding any bargain that was made with the landowner in reference to a crossing, the right to determine whether a crossing should be given or not, whereas, the Senate amendment directs that the commissioners, if a bargain has been made that there shall be no crossing, to inquire into the circumstances of that bargain in considering the application. If a railway company in order to be relieved from the necessity of making a railway crossing, are obliged to buy a whole farm and sell it off in sections, after making that bargain with the individuals. why should they be obliged afterwards to provide a crossing if the railway commissioners decide that it is necessary ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I can answer my hon. friend's question. I think there would be good reason. The conditions may have changed as years have gone on. The situation of the land may be different. The reasons which originally made the crossing unnecessary might not then exist and would not be at all applicable to the matters that come before the board. As the amendment of the Senate limits the jurisdiction of the board I agree with the hon. Minister of Justice that we should not concur in it.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought our original Bill went farther. I thought it gave a farmer the right to a crossing upon any unsold land that he had. The old Railway Act provided that a farmer was entitled to a crossing, but I think that was only one crossing to every lot. That lot might be 100 acres in extent. The case I have in mind is where a man sells the half of his lot. He has one crossing for the whole lot but that crossing happens to be on one of the fifty acre subdivisions. He sells the one which has the railway crossing. The railway runs through the centre of the farm and he wants another crossing but because the original crossing happened to be on the other fifty acres and although he is willing to bear all the expense of making a second crossing he is not allowed the right to another crossing so as to get the use of his land which he owned before the railway was put through the farm at all. It seems to me that is a very hard case, but many cases of that kind occur and I thought that in the Bill which we passed we had provided a fair means of redress for a farmer under such circumstances as those.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Under the law provision was made for farm crossings. Supposing a farmer has 100 acres. He subsequently subdivides the property. The case I have in my mind at the present moment is a case with which I was connected, the case of a father who owned 100 acres of land. He subdivided his farm so as to give one part of his property on his right to one son and another part on his left to another son, he himself reserving the middle farm. After a time the sons wanted to get a farm crossing for themselves. Application was made to the railway company, the company refused, suit was brought in the province of Quebec, it was held that they were entitled to a farm crossing for each farm, but the case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in the Supreme Court it was decided that in view of the original purchase of the property, a provision being made for only one crossing, they were entitled to no more. Under the Bill as we passed it the board can authorize as many crossings as under the circumstances they think necessary. But the amendment passed by the Senate would oblige the board when application is made to take into consideration the circumstances connected with the original purchase and limit their authority to deal with it. Under these conditions we think it better that the board should be absolutely free to exercise their own judgment in regard to the conditions which exist at the time the application is made.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the farmer is entitled to that right. While the board is free to say that a crossing shall be provided it is equally free to say that it cannot be made and if it says that there shall be no crossing the farmer is deprived of the right of using his land.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That would be a very good criticism of the Bill as we sent it to the Senate, but it is an absolute criticism of the amendment of the Senate which goes much further in the direction of doing what my hon. friend wants to prevent this Bill from doing.

Mr. SPROULE. I am entirely opposed to the amendment of the Senate. I think it is an absurdity. I thought the Act as we sent it contained a complete provision.

Mr. WILSON. What would the probable cost be of taking this before the Railway Commission ? I think there should be very little trouble for a farmer to get across a railway, because we know the very great inconvenience the farmers are often put to by railways being built across their farms. The case which the Minister of Justice cited, would show that if a farmer divided his farm among his sons, they might have a great deal of difficulty in getting across it. I would be strongly in favour of making it as easy as possible for a farmer to get across a railway without going to any great expense.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, agreed to.

On amendment 40,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I propose that we disagree to this amendment. It is an amendment to section 211, which is called the contracting out clause. Subsection 4, of section 211, provides that the company shall be liable for damages to the individual who has suffered injury, or to his representatives, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary with regard to any such person. That is to say, no agreement can be entered into between the company and the individual, which will save the company from liability in the case of an accident; that if the company is liable to the individual, and if for any consideration which they choose to give, for instance by way of insurance, they make a contract with him by which he will waive all claims against the company for the damage he may suffer, accepting in lieu of the claim such indemnity as the company may fix or determine in advance; such an agreement as that is invalid. So far as I am personally concerned, I would like to make this statement: As to whether or not such a provision as that can be contained in a railway Act passed by the federal parliament, I am doubtful. I would like to protect myself on that score.

Mr. SPROULE. Doubtful whether it would invalidate the contract?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect of the Senate amendment?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Under the English workman's Compensation Act, or the Employer's Liability Act, I forget which, for the moment; an employee can contract himself out, provided the form of contract is prepared beforehand and submitted to an official who is called the registrar of friendly societies. If it is approved of by that official, the contract is binding, and there are certain conditions as to what this agreement must contain. It seems to me that the attempt of the Senate, was to some extent, to adopt that provision, but the Senate failed entirely in that object. Their amendment was:

> That after the words 'notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary with regard to any such person,' the following should be added—
> Unless such agreement shall have been first approved by order or regulation of the board.

The idea would be that each time an agreement which would have for effect to restrict the liability of the company, would be entered into with a particular individual, that agreement, if submitted to the board and sanctioned by the board, should be binding. I presume the object they had in view was to substitute the board for the registrar of friendly societies in England. My difficulty is, and I will not do more than merely state it; a contract of lease and hire is essentially a civil contract under the control of the provincial legislature, and if the contract is made in the province, it is made subject to the law of that particular province, and how far we have the right to say, that an individual in a province can not enter into a contract, which is in my judgment an ordinary civil contract, is to say the least doubtful. I do not enter any dissent against this, but I wish to express my personal view, and I do so for my protection if the matter is considered hereafter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If we reject the amendment of the Senate, will not the effect be to do away with the present insurance companies, to which the largest amount is contributed by the railway companies?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It seems to me that will be the effect. At present each railway company contributes to the employees' liability insurance company a certain amount, and when each individual is hired by the company he signs an agreement by which he becomes a member of the insurance society, and by which he binds himself and his representatives not to claim more than a certain amount from the company. That means, that the liability of the company is limited. The consideration given by the company is a contribution towards the insurance fund. If that contract be not binding, it is presumable that the companies would not continue their contribution. However, I will not discuss that matter now. I have my individual opinion about it, but it is a matter which after all the employees who are interested in this legislation are most concerned about. If they consider it desirable to set aside these insurance benefits, that is a matter that concerns them, and I think after all they ought to be the best judges.

Amendment 40 not agreed to.

On amendment 41,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I move to concur in that.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why do you consent to strike out these words? I think it is a good provision that these bells should be rung.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are two amendments to the same section, and if my hon. friend has the original section before him, and will follow me, he will see the reason.

Section 224 at present reads:

> When any train is approaching a highway crossing at rail level, the engine whistle shall be sounded and the bell rung at least eighty rods before reaching such crossing, and at short intervals, until the engine has crossed such highway.

Instead of saying 'at short intervals' the amendment provides that the Bill shall be be rung continuously, so that it affords a greater protection for the public.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments 42, 43 and 44 agreed to.

On amendment 45,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is the cattle-guard amendment. I propose to dissent from this and I put my reason very briefly. I believe I am expressing the view of the great majority of the House when I say that the amendment does not remedy the evil existing under the present law.

Amendment not agreed to.

On amendment 46,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This amendment proposes to add as subsection 5 of section 237 the following :

5. In all actions under this section where a judgment shall be obtained in which the amount thereof does not exceed two hundred dollars, there shall be no appeal from the court of competent jurisdiction.

I dissent from this, because I contend that it is ultra vires of this parliament.

Amendment not agreed to.

Amendments 47, 48, 49, 50 and 51 agreed to.

On amendments 52 and 53,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. These two amendments require to be taken up together, as they both deal with section 253. They would practically make the section inoperative. It would read, beginning at line 40 :

Nor shall any company so distribute or allot its freight cars as to discriminate unjustly against any locality or industry, or against any traffic which may originate on its railway destined to a point on another railway in Canada with which it connects.

The words originally were, 'with which it may be connected.' 'Connects' means immediate contact; 'may be connected' suggests the possibility of an intervening space or road. While I do not absolutely disagree with the amendments, I propose that the clause be amended so as to read as follows :

Nor shall any company so distribute or allot its freight cars as to discriminate unjustly against any person, railway, locality, industry or traffic.

Amendment (the Minister of Justice) agreed to.

Mr. BARKER. What objection is there to section 252 as amended by the Senate, with the saving words which they have inserted :

The board shall not grant such leave unless satisfied that granting the same is not contrary to the public interest.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I strike that out altogether.

Mr. BARKER. I do not see that there can be objection to this clause with these words in. There may be cases where it will be a great convenience to railway companies to have power to divide their earnings in a particular manner, that is, as between each other, in an arbitratory manner ; division on a mileage basis may not be a fair division.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend is perhaps right so far as the first words are concerned :

Without leave therefore having been first obtained from the board.

That would give the board power to interfere; but I do not like the other words, which seem to be absolutely superfluous :

The board shall not grant such leave unless satisfied that granting the same is not contrary to the public interest.

It does not seem to me that it should be necessary to tell them that they are not to do what is not in the public interest. I was perhaps going too far in my proposed amendment, and perhaps had better restrict myself to eliminating the last words of the amendment of the Senate. I shall consider the matter.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

On amendment 51,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This amendment purports to amend section 252. I suggest that we accept part of the amendment. The clause as amended will then read : 'Without any leave therefor having been first obtained from the board.' I move that this amendment be not agreed to but that it be amended by striking out all the words except those I have quoted.

Amendment, as amended, agreed to.

Amendments Nos. 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, agreed to.

On amendment 60,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This amendment purports to amend section 275 of the Bill, inserting after the word 'traffic' in the 27th line the words 'to which this Act applies.' I disagree with this amendment and move that it be not agreed to for the reason that it either limits the meaning of the word 'traffic' or is unnecessary.

Amendment not agreed to.

Amendments Nos. 61, 62 and 63, agreed to.

On amendment 64,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. From No. 60 to No. 64 these are all amendments to the same section, No. 275. The last is an amendment with respect to free transportation. Subsection 5 of this section provides that 'the company shall furnish free transportation upon any of its trains for members of the House of Commons of Canada and for any members of the board,' and so on. The amendment makes it read : 'The company shall furnish free transportation upon any of its trains, for members of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada with their baggage, and also for members of the board.'

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments 65, 66, 67, 68 and 69, agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With respect to section 284, as to traffic agreements, is there any conflict between that and one of the sections we have already passed—I do not recall the number at the moment—providing that consent must be obtained for the pooling of receipts. This section No. 284 provides for 'division and apportionment' of tolls under certain circumstances. That does not seem to be very different from the pooling of receipts.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The section as it left the House of Commons provided :

284. The directors of any company may, at any time, make and enter into any agreement or arrangement not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act, with any other company, either in Canada or elsewhere, for the regulation and interchange of traffic passing to and from the company's railways, and for the working of the traffic over the said railways respectively, or for either of those objects separately, and for the running of the trains over the tracks of another company, and for the division and apportionment of tolls in respect of such traffic.

The Senate amendment proposes :

The directors may at any time make and enter into any agreement or arrangement not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act, with any other company, either in Canada or elsewhere, for the interchange of traffic between their railways or vessels and for the division and apportionment of tolls in respect of such traffic.

The hon. member will see this expresses all that appears in the first paragraph of section 284 in fewer words and more general terms. I think perhaps that it is an improvement, because when you elaborate the statute you are apt to forget something and so get into trouble. And the second paragraph of the amendment :

2. The directors may also make and enter into any agreement or arrangements, not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act, for.

Then, the present subsection 2 becomes subsection 3. Subsection 2 provides that the making of any such arrangement or agreement shall not restrict, limit or affect any power by this Act vested in the board. That leaves all the power to the board intact. Subsection 2 of the Bill as we sent it to the Senate becomes subsection 3 under the new drafting.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This section seems to be perfectly consistent, so far as its own terms are concerned. But what I had in mind was a previous section.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That would be section 252, would it not ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, that seems to be it. Subsection 4 of that section provides :

No company shall, except in accordance with the provisions of this Act, directly or indirectly, pool its freights or tolls with the freights or tolls of any other railway company or common carrier, nor divide its earnings or any portion thereof with any other railway company, or common carrier nor enter into any contract, arrangement, agreement, or combination to effect, or which may effect any such result.

Without leave therefor having been obtained from the board. This section 284 provides that the directors may make any such arrangements 'not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the Special Act.' I suppose that possibly those words to which my hon. friend has called attention might control.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think they do control.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very likely that is the case. I suppose there may be some distinction to railway men between pooling receipts and a division and apportionment of tolls respecting traffic.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am told there is a great distinction, and I endeavoured to get an explanation of it, and the explanation embarrassed me. A pretended railway expert attempted to explain it to me, but I must admit that probably owing to my obtuseness I did not understand it. With respect to amendment 70, I dissent from it. This Senate amendment to section 310 would be admissible if we had adopted their amendments to sections 6 and 7 ; but having refused to concur in their amendments to sections 6 and 7, I cannot accept the amendment No. 70. I move non-concurrence for the same reasons as given in amendments 6 and 7.

Mr. BARKER. There may have been reason for the Senate striking that out. An examination of the statutes would probably lead the Minister of Justice to see it was a reasonable amendment. I think all these railways have been expressly made works for the general advantage of Canada. I think there is not a railway there which has not been converted into a Dominion railway by express enactment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think there are one or two exceptions.

Mr. BARKER. I doubt whether there is any one of these that has not become a Dominion railway now by express enactment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What would you suggest ?

Mr. BARKER. I think the reservation of these in the general Railway Act may be altogether unnecessary if they are Dominion railways, and if so it is useless to retain such a provision.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Would the section do any harm ?

Mr. BARKER. No harm at all.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Then, if the hon. gentleman does not mind, I would prefer to leave it.

Amendment not agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours with the reasons for non-concurrence with the foregoing amendments.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT AMENDMENTS.

Bill (No. 259) to amend the North-west Territories Act, read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

2. Except where a question has been reserved and stated for the opinion of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories as a court of appeal under section 743 of the Criminal Code, 1892, the judge by or before whom the judgment, order or decision then in question was rendered or made, shall not sit as one of the judges composing the court unless his presence is necessary to compose a quorum.

2. The proviso added to section 50 of the said Act by section 4 of chapter 17 of the Statutes of 1894 is repealed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). This amendment has been suggested by Mr. Justice Wetmore, who has considerable experience in criminal cases in that part of the country, and who thinks it is desirable that the judge should reserve a case for the full court.

Mr. SCOTT. With the consent of the House and of the minister, I beg leave to propose two additional clauses to the Bill, as follows :

3. Notwithstanding anything in the North-west Territories Act, or any Act in amendment thereof, the legislative assembly may, by ordinance, repeal the provisions of sections 49, 51, 53, 55, 64, 88, 89 and 90 of the said North-west Territories Act as amended, and re-enact the said provisions or substitute other provisions in lieu thereof, but nothing in this section contained shall be construed as giving to the legislative assembly power to pass ordinances for the constitution, organization or maintenance of courts of criminal jurisdiction, or respecting procedure in criminal matters.

4. Notwithstanding anything in the North-west Territories Act, or any Act in amendment thereto, the legislative assembly may, by ordinance, repeal the provisions of sections 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 of chapter 19 of the statutes of 1888, and section 18 of chapter 17 of the Statutes of 1894 as that section is enacted by section 9 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1897, and re-enact the said provisions or substitute other provisions in lieu thereof.

I may explain the purport of these various sections of the North-west Territories Act under which it is proposed to give power to the legislative assembly.

Section 49 has reference to times and places of sittings of the Supreme Court in banc.

Section 51 empowers the Governor in Council to divide the territories into judicial districts. The amendment will give power to the assembly to make provision for determining the boundaries of judicial districts.

Section 53 makes a Supreme Court judge the instrument of authority in any matter which the law specifies shall be dealt with by a court or judge, in the absence of other specific provision.

Section 64 deals with justices of the peace, as to appointment, qualifications, &c., and with police magistrates.

Section 88 deals with the jurisdiction of judges in civil matters, and the class of matters in which either party may demand a jury trial, together with various other provisions relating to civil trials and cases.

Sections 89 and 90 also deal with judgments and procedure in civil cases.

The sections mentioned in No. 4 are 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 of chapter 19 of 1888. All refer to the constitution of the legislative assembly.

Section 7 prescribes the qualifications of voters.

Section 8 the qualifications of candidates for election.

Section 9 specifies the oath to be subscribed and taken by members.

Section 11 deals with the election and duties of the Speaker.

Section 12 names the occasions when the Speaker may vote in the legislative assembly.

Section 9 of chapter 28, of 1897, which repealed and was substituted for section 18 of chapter 17 of 1894, prohibits members of the legislative assembly from holding positions of emolument, making the exception as regards members of the executive council who have procured election after appointment to such office.

In this latter important particular what I am proposing to do by the amendment is to give the legislative assembly power to define the qualifications or limitations and to regulate the conduct of its own members, a right and power which is possessed and exercised by this parliament and by every provincial parliament. I may say that in every discussion of the question of provincial autonomy by Premier Haultain, the lack of this power has been a matter of serious complaint. The proposal as a whole, while perhaps not very urgent or important, will have the effect of narrowing down still further the difference between the present position of the territories as territories, and the position of a province in confederation. I may explain that when Premier Haultain was on his last visit to Ottawa, in February or March, a tacit understanding was arrived at, not, of course, with his willing consent, because, as a matter of fact, Premier Haultain believes that the question of provincial establishment should not be delayed at all, that the whole question of autonomy should not be dealt with and could not be dealt with at this session of parliament, and as a result of this understandig he suggested a number of intermediate changes in the existing powers of the legislative assembly. He proposed one important change by which the entire land titles system should be transferred to the local authority as well as a number of additional minor changes of which these I am proposing form a part. I believe, that, but for the long absence during this session of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton), all of these changes which have been asked for by Premier Haultain, would have been introduced and put through at this session, but on account of the pressure on his time, and perhaps partly because of the opinion which I think the hon. Minister of the Interior has formed that the question of provincial establishment cannot wisely be delayed beyond next year, he decided not to take up any of these points at this session, but to leave them over until next session, and then finally dispose of the whole subject by giving the territories a complete provincial status. On account of provision being made at this session for an additional judge of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, and a consequent necessary amendment of the North-west Territories Act, Premier Haultain, some time ago, wrote to me suggesting that even if the change respecting the transfer of the land titles system could not be made this year it would be a distinct advantage to the practical carrying on of the business of his government if certain of these minor changes were made. It perhaps would be only right for me to state further that Premier Haultain's proposals to the hon. Minister of the Interior included half a dozen other sections in addition to those that I have gone over. I have omitted a number of sections at the suggestion of the Department of Justice, which holds that these other sections deal with criminal jurisdiction over which for the present this parliament's authority had better be maintained. With that view of the department, I do not express agreement or disagreement. At this stage of the session it is perhaps wise not to attempt to introduce anything controversial, and I have therefore left out half a dozen sections which Premier Haultain desired to have added to this amendment. These various sections which I have added to this proposed amendment are not of very great moment. I do not imagine that they can raise any controversy at all. I trust they will meet with the unanimous approval of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is nothing in that germane to the Bill ?

Mr. SCOTT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, the Bill is intended to provide for the constitution of the Supreme Court, and also for appeals to the court. The intention of the amendment that my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) proposes is merely to give to the council of the North-west Territories control over the court as to the time, place and sittings of the court, as to the dividing the territories into judicial districts, as to defining the territorial jurisdiction and other provisions of that sort. They also asked that they should have control over the administration of criminal justice, but I was not prepared to give it to them, and they did not get it. We are responsible for the administration of criminal justice in these territories, and we want to keep control over its administration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would be better if the committee could have some notice of amendments of this kind. It is almost impossible to understand them on the spur of the moment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think it is fair to take my hon. friend by surprise, and I have no objection at all that the committee should rise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott), who has introduced the amendments, they are in the direction of giving greater powers to the legislature of the North-west Territories with respect to civil matters.

Mr. SCOTT. And the constitution of the assembly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If that be the case, and when I have the opportunity to look them over, there will not be the slightest objection to them, and I will do everything to expedite their passage.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—AUTONOMY OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a matter which is of some importance not only to the people of the North-west Territories of Canada, but to the people of the entire Dominion. Early this session I called attention to the fact that the speech from the Throne made no reference to the granting of a provincial status to the North-west Territories, and I expressed the hope that before the end of this session—which at that time we thought would have been ended before this—the government would introduce some legislation for that purpose. According to the census of 1901, there were 158,000 inhabitants in the North-west Territories; according to the report of the department of immigration there came into this country in the year 1901 49,149 people; in 1902, 67,379 people; and the Prime Minister stated only last evening that, according to the information received from the department of immigration, no less than 110,000 immigrants came to Canada during the present year. That makes a total for these three years of 227,528, and we may fairly assume that at least 175,000 of that number have gone to the North-west Territories. If that computation is fair, and I believe it is, then we have in the North-west Territories at the present time a population of 330,000 people.

It is not contemplated by the government, apparently, to take any steps for the purpose of granting, during the present session, provincial autonomy to the people of these territories. It seems to me that, having regard to the very large population, the great territorial area, the magnificent country which we have in the west, the government of Canada should immediately give its attention to the granting of a provincial status to the people of the North-west Territories. It was asserted in this House by the Prime Minister the other day that the people in the North-west Territories have in effect at the present time all the powers which the people of the other provinces possess, with the possible exception of the power of borrowing money. The right hon. gentleman said :

> What are the powers which the territories have not to-day, which they would have if they were a province ? If I mistake not, speaking at first blush, the legislature of the territories has all the powers enjoyed by a province with the exception of borrowing money.

The right hon. gentleman greatly minimized the difference which exists between the powers possessed by the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories and the powers possessed by the respective legislatures of the different provinces. In the first place, the people of the North-west Territories have not the same full rights of citizenship as are enjoyed by the inhabitants of the older provinces, inasmuch as they have not the control of their public lands, which are controlled by the government of Canada, and which are administered, to a very great extent, from Ottawa. In the second place, the people of the North-west Territories have not the control of their minerals, which is possessed by the people of the older provinces of Canada. In the third place, they have not the power to charter railways and certain other companies. That power is taken from them by an exception to subsection 7 of section 13 of the North-west Territories Act, as amended by section 6 of chapter 22 of the Acts of 1891. That exception is as follows :—

> The legislative assembly shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, or of any other Act of the parliament of Canada at any time in force in the territories, have power to make ordinances for the government of the territories in relation to the class of subjects next hereinafter mentioned ; that is to say : the incorporation of companies with territorial objects, with the following exceptions :—
> Such companies as cannot be incorporated by provincial legislatures : railway, steamboat, canal, tranportation, telegraph, and irrigation companies.

Therefore, in respect to these six classes of companies, the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories has at the present time no power whatever to enact legislation. This exception deprives them of the power to incorporate a railway company and the power to deal with irrigation; it deprives them of the power to incorporate transportation, telephone or telegraph companies. I am not aware of any amendment to that section, but if there is any such amendment, I shall be glad to have my attention called to it. Then, in the next place, the North-west Territories have no power to borrow money for necessary purposes; they have not the same powers in connection with the administration of justice as the older provinces have, and they have no power to amend their own constitution. The Prime Minister of the North-west Territories, in a speech which he delivered in 1900, summarized the differences between the powers of the legislature of the North-west Territories and the powers of the legislatures of the provinces in the following words, which I will take the liberty of reading to the House. His words are as follows :

> Where we fall short of provincial powers is in these points : we have not the power to amend the constitution outside of the power to deal with certain phases in our election law ; we have not the power to borrow money ; we have not the power to deal with the public domain ; we have not the power to establish certain institutions, such as hospitals, asylums, charities—' eleemosynary institutions ' as they are called in the British North America Act ; we have not the power to take cognizance of public undertakings other than such as may be carried on by certain sorts of joint stock companies ; and our powers are limited to the extent that we have not the administration of the criminal law in the territories. That, I think, will suffice for any reference which it is necessary to make to the eighth recital.

Now this question has excited a good deal of interest in the North-west Territories during the past six or seven years ; and, although the documents which have been brought down at the present session of parliament are in a somewhat confused condition, I shall endeavour as well as I can to run very briefly over the correspondence and the proceedings respecting this question, and to point out to the House in what way the matter has been brought up in the legislature of the territories, and in what manner it has been brought to the attention of this government since the year 1897, when, so far as I know, the question first became a living issue in the territories. I may say, however, in the beginning, that my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), as far back as the year 1895, gave a very strong expression of opinion in this behalf. Referring to the grant of $277,000 then voted to the North-west Territories, that hon. gentleman said :

We could save the whole of that expense by allowing the North-west Territories people to manage their own concerns. Give them self-government, do not lead them around as infants with a string, but let them manage their own business like free British subjects.

I do not agree with the hon. member for North Norfolk that there would be any saving at all to the country as a whole by granting provincial autonomy ; but in the last part of the hon. gentleman's remarks I thoroughly concur, and I think he has there very aptly expressed the idea in a few words.

Now, there was a memorial from the territorial legislature to this government on the 9th of December, 1897, which is to be found in sessional paper 116, at page 32. That memorial reads as follows :

Resolved, that in the opinion of this House the North-west Territories as they are at present composed should be maintained intact for administrative purposes until the time has arrived for their entrance into confederation as a province.

That was when a question first seems to have been raised in the North-west Territories in regard to this matter. It was more directly raised, however, in a memorial passed in 1900, which is to be found in sessional paper 116, at pages 2 and 4. I will not read the whole of the memorial, which deals with other matters ; but one paragraph, found at page 3, referring to the previous address, says :

That in the said address it was represented to Her Majesty, as a reason for the extension of the Dominion of Canada westward, that the welfare of the population of these territories would be materially enhanced by the formation therein of political institutions bearing analogy, as far as circumstances will admit, to those which existed in the several provinces then forming the Dominion.

Another paragraph proceeds as follows :

That under the several authorities so given the parliament of Canada has created political institutions in these territories bearing a close analogy to those which exist in the several provinces of the Dominion.

The two concluding paragraphs of the address are as follows :

That we do therefore most humbly pray that Your Excellency will be graciously pleased to cause the fullest inquiry to be made into the position of the territories, financial and otherwise, and to cause such action to be taken as will provide for their present and immediate welfare and good government, as well as the due fulfilment of the duties and obligations of government and legislation, assumed, with respect to these territories, by the parliament of Canada ;

And furthermore that, by the British North America Act, 1871, it was (amongst other things) enacted that the parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of . . . . such province, we do therefore most humbly pray that Your Excellency will be also graciously pleased to order inquiries to be made and accounts taken with a view to the settlement of the terms and conditions upon which the territories or any part thereof shall be established as a province, and that, before any such province is established, opportunity should be given to the people of the territories, through their accredited representatives, of considering and discussing such terms and conditions.

All which we humbly pray Your Excellency to take into Your Excellency's most gracious and favourable consideration.

That memorial was forwarded, and subsequent correspondence took place. The first letter to which I will refer is a letter from the Prime Minister of the Territories, Mr. Haultain, to the Minister of the Interior, dated the 30th of January, 1901. It is to be found in sessional paper 116a, at page 1. I will not read the whole of this letter, but certain paragraphs of it are as follows :

While financial embarrassments rather than constitutional aspirations have led the North-west government and legislature to discuss the provincial status, I think that sufficient practical reasons can be given for the early establishment of provincial institutions in the west. We have a rapidly growing population, much larger, as the census will show, than that of British Columbia ten years ago, and than that of Prince Edward Island to-day ; a population trained to the exercise of powers of self-government falling a little short only of those enjoyed by the provinces. For nearly thirteen years the North-west legislative assembly has been occupied with founding local institutions and a body of laws suitable to the condition and circumstances of the country.

Further on, the memorial, referring to the anomalous constitution of the territories, uses these words :

The territories have arrived at a point, where by reason of their population and material development, the larger powers and larger income of a province have become necessary. I have already in former communications pointed out to you how our limited powers are still more limited by the reservation of subjects such as the Land Titles law, the administration of the criminal law and the control of the public domain. It is undoubtedly in the interest of any province or provinces herafter to be established, that the important questions surrounding the subject of the public domain should be settled at once, and before any more of the public lands of the territories are alienated from the Crown.

On the 21st of March, 1901, Mr. Sifton replied to Mr. Haultain, and his letter is to be found in sessional paper 116a, at page

4. In that letter, which I will not quote in full, Mr. Sifton used the following language :

It is the view of the government that it will not be wise at the present time to pass legislation forming the North-west Territories into a province or provinces. Some of the reasons leading to this view may be found in the fact that the population of the territories is yet sparse ; that the rapid increase in population now taking place will in a short time alter the conditions to be dealt with very materially and that there is a considerable divergence of opinion respecting the question whether there should be one province only, or more than one province. Holding this view, therefore, it will not be necessary for me to discuss the details of the draft Bill which you presented as embodying your views.

I may say, in connection with this matter, which I think has been alluded to also by my hon. friend the Prime Minister during the present session, that the difference of opinion as to whether there should be one province or two provinces does not seem a sufficient reason for withholding provincial status from the North-west Territories. Are the people of those territories to be for ever deprived of the status enjoyed by the people of the provinces of Canada, merely because there may not be absolute unanimity as to whether there shall be one province or two provinces or three provinces? It is not likely at any time in the future that you will have absolute unanimity in the North-west Territories with regard to a matter of that kind. It is only a detail after you have once settled the principle that the time has arrived when the people of the North-west Territories should be entrusted with the same rights of self-government as those enjoyed by the people of the various provinces.

Mr. Haultain replied to that letter on the 30th of March, 1901. His reply is to be found in sessional paper 116a, at page 2. I shall quote only portions of his reply. In the first place he quotes from Mr. Sifton's letter of March 21st, from which I have just read extracts. Perhaps as some of the letters from which he quoted have not been brought to the attention of the House, and as it would take too much time to read them all, I had better read his quotations from the previous correspondence with Mr. Sifton. Mr. Haultain's words are as follows:

So far from your conclusions not coming as a surprise as you suggest, I must say quite frankly that the decision of the government has come not only as a surprise, but as a deep disappointment as well. In your letter of March 21, 1901, you say :

He then quotes Mr. Sifton's language as follows :

I may say that I realize very fully the difficulties of the position in which the government and legislative assembly of the North-west Territories is placed, and I admit that there is very much in the suggestions which are made in your letter and in the memorial regarding the necessity of a change in the constitutional and financial position of the territories.

That language of Mr. Sifton is very significant because, so far back as March, 1901, he said there was very much in the suggestion that it was necessary there should be a change in the constitutional and financial conditions of the territories. We have now reached a period two years and a half later in the history of the territories than the day on which this letter was written, but we seem to be no nearer to any solution of the question by the present government than we were at that time. Continuing, Mr. Haultain quotes from Mr. Sifton's letter as follows :

Without at the present moment committing myself to any positive statement I am prepared to say that the time has arrived when the question of organizing the territories on the provincial basis ought to be the subject of full consideration. It would appear to me that the better way of bringing the matter to a more definite position would be to arrange for a conference upon the subject between the representatives of your government and a committee of council representing the federal government.

Now, if the time had arrived two and a half years ago, when the population of the territories was not one-half what it is to-day, when that question ought to be the subject of full consideration, how is it that, after the expiration of those two and a half years, when greatly increased importance has been added to the territories owing to the impetus which that country has received by the influx of a very great number of people, we are still told that the time for action has not yet arrived and we are still met with exactly the same objections which were advanced to Mr. Haultain by Mr. Sifton in the correspondence to which I am now referring.

Mr. Haultain in this same letter refers to a further letter from Mr. Sifton of April 5th, 1901, from which he quotes as follows :

The latter portion of the session of parliament here finds all the members of the government extremely busy, and it would be hopeless to expect from them that mature and careful consideration of the various and important subjects which will require to be debated and settled in connection with the establishment of the territories as a province or upon the provincial basis. I think I shall therefore be compelled to ask you to defer the discussion until after parliament has prorogued.

Mr. Haultain then proceeds to deal with the objections raised by Mr. Sifton, and I quote one or two paragraphs from his letter. One of these paragraphs is as follows :

Another reason advanced is : 'That the rapid increase in population now taking place will in a short time alter the conditions to be dealt with very materially. This rapid increase in population is one of the principal reasons why we are asking to be formed into a province, in order that we may be able to deal with the new conditions that it brings about. The longer it goes on without the change the more aggravated the present difficulties will become.

I think there is not one of us in the House who will not realize that there is great truth and force in that statement of Mr. Haultain's. Are we to expect that the population of the North-west Territories is to stand still at any time within the next fifteen or twenty years? We have there a country which is capable of supporting many millions of population; we have there the best undeveloped country in the world, and I see no reason to anticipate that population will flow into the North-west of Canada less rapidly during the next fifteen or twenty years than it is flowing into that country at present. Therefore as Mr. Haultain forcibly points out in the letter to which I have referred, the difficulties in that regard will not be obviated by mere delay; there will always be difficulties of that kind and the only way in which we can do justice to the people of the North-west Territories in this matter is by dealing with these difficulties at the present time and by giving them, after proper consultation, after meeting their wishes as far as it is proper and reasonable and possible, that provincial status which the people of the eastern provinces now enjoy.

Mr. Haultain's letter continues as follows:

With regard to a divergence of opinion as to one or more provinces I might say that that is a difficulty that will always exist and any postponment of action will not remove.

I say again that those words of Mr. Haultain's are reasonable and forcible and there is no man in this House who does not, I think, realize the justice of his answer to Mr. Sifton.

Mr. Haultain's letter continues:

I must also say, on behalf of the North-west government, that after having been asked to meet a sub-committee of the Privy Council, and to state our case not only verbally but in writing, it is extremely unsatisfactory that the government has come to the conclusion: 'That it will not be necessary to discuss the details of the draft Bill which embodied our views.' This is a conclusion to the negotiations which have been held which we could hardly have expected considering the importance of the subject discussed and the formal manner in which the discussion has taken place.

I shall not refer especially to the draft Bill which was proposed by Mr. Haultain as a scheme for the government of the North-west Territories; I shall refer, however, to one or two passages in the memorandum which accompanied that Bill. In the memorandum accompanying the draft Bill, which is to be found in sessional paper 116, on page 19, Mr. Haultain, dealing with the question as to whether or not the people of the North-west Territories are entitled to their own lands, uses the following language:

As Great Britain has divested herself, for the benefit of her colonies, of all her proprietary rights in the public domain within those colonies, so, it is thought, Canada should do with respect to any claim that may be preferred on behalf of the Dominion to the beneficiary interest in the public domain within that part of the North-west Territories to be included in any province to be established.

It may be that the government of Canada will admit the principle contended for above on behalf of the people of the North-west Territories who may be included within the limits of any province to be created, but will argue that it will not be in accord with established public policy for the Dominion to divest itself of the ability, largely advertised abroad, to grant lands to actual settlers upon almost nominal conditions. Such appears to have been the view adopted in 1884 by the government of the day with respect to certain similar representations then made by the province of Manitoba. The validity of the claim was admitted by the agreement to recompense the province for the loss of its public property. It is not deemed necessary, here, at this stage, to discuss any such proposition further than to point out the one fact that, should the Dominion withhold from the province, for the benefit of Canada at large, the right to administer the public domain within its boundaries and to enjoy the revenues therefrom, the addition of each new settler, or—what experience has shown to practically almost amount to the same thing—the opening up of each new settlement, will impose a burden and financial strain upon the revenues of the province altogether out of proportion to any revenue derivable on account of such settler or settlement, and one that can only be met by an early appeal to extensive direct taxation.

Then he proceeds to deal with the expenditure per head in the different provinces and to compare that expenditure with the expenditure in the North-west Territories. He continues as follows:

Without extravagance and in order to provide for urgent public necessities, the per capita rate of expenditure in the territories, had the money been available, would have been between $6 and $7. This large rate of public expenditure in the territories, as compared with the rates of the eastern provinces, is entirely attributable to the extraordinary increase in expenditure due to the energy displayed by the immigration branch of the Interior Department. While such energy is commendable from the view point of Dominion interests, yet its results place a great strain upon the finances of the country, and it is, with all respect, urged that the exploitation of the public domain within the province to be established, in the interests of the Dominion solely and entirely, will place upon the province a burden too onerous to bear, and one which should properly fall where the benefits go.

On the 22nd of January, 1902, there was an acknowledgment by the private secretary of the right hon. Prime Minister of several copies of this draft Bill for the use of his colleagues. On the 22nd of March, 1902, there was a letter from Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain, which is found in sessional paper No. 116a, at page 4. I have already referred to that in substance, so I need not deal with it further. The next document is a telegram from Mr. Sifton to Mr. Haultain appointing a meeting between representatives of the two governments, which is found in sessional paper No. 116a, page 7. And on the 11th of February, in a letter which is found in the same document, page 7, Mr. Haultain again urges the question of provincial autonomy upon the attention of the Minister of the Interior. He says, after referring to the correspondence and the various reasons why conferences have not been held : 'I should like to ask the consideration by the sub-committee of Council of our provincial proposition.' On the 19th of March, 1903, in a letter, which is found in this same sessional paper, page 13, Mr. Haultain, who had come to Ottawa with his colleagues for the purpose of a conference, had had a conference, and was waiting an answer, wrote the Minister of the Interior as follows :

Rideau Club, Ottawa, March 19, 1903.

The Honourable Clifford Sifton,
Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

As I have remained here for some days since I last saw you, you may have written to me to Regina with reference to the result of the recent interview of Mr. Bulyea and myself with the sub-committee of Council regarding North-west affairs. In case no decision has yet been arrived at or communicated to me, may I ask you to let me have (addressed to Regina) a final reply on behalf of the government to our request for the creation of a province and for larger financial assistance in the meantime.

F. W. G. HAULTAIN.

In answer to that, Mr. Sifton, on the 27th of March telegraphed to Mr. Haultain at Regina, as follows :

Ottawa, March 21, 1903.

Hon. F. W. G. Haultain,
Regina, Assa.

I sent a note over to the Rideau Club but found you were gone. The question of your financial arrangements was up for discussion to-day, and Mr. Fielding will communicate with you. The arrangement suggested will, I think, prove reasonably satisfactory.

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

You will observe in Mr. Haultain's letter a demand for an answer as to the important question of provincial autonomy which had been discussed by representatives of his government with the representatives of this government. In fact this question had, so to speak, been made a matter of state by the appointment of a subcommittee of the Privy Council for the purpose of considering the status of the North-west Territories; and, in reply to the demand of Mr. Haultain of the 19th of March for a final answer—and he puts the question of provincial autonomy first—he receives a telegram addressed to him at Regina making some reference to important financial arrangements, but containing not a single word of reply to the demand of the North-west Territories, presented through their government, that a provincial status should be accorded to the people of that great western country. That, to say the least of it, Mr. Speaker, seems a somewhat casual and indifferent way of dealing with a great question of this kind, which, although, apparently considered a small and trifling matter by this government, is of some importance to nearly 350,000 people who at present inhabit our great west. Now, the next letter is one from Mr. Haultain to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which is not printed at all in the correspondence brought down, but a copy of which I have procured from a document printed by the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories. I am sorry that this return brought down to this House is so very incomplete that hon. members who desire to consider this question must refer to documents brought down to the legislature of the North-west Territories in order to find a complete record. Mr. Haultain, not satisfied with this somewhat casual and supercilious response from the Minister of the Interior, wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the 15th of April, 1903, after his return to Regina. The letter is too long to quote in full, but I will read one or two paragraphs :

I am inclosing a copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Sifton for the information of the government to which I referred in my interview with the sub-committee, and which, no doubt, you have already seen. It deals exclusively with the question of provincial institutions in the territories, and I will again, on behalf of my colleagues, earnestly ask your consideration of our request.

Then, after dealing with the question of finance, he concludes his letter with the following words :

To sum up, I beg to ask for an early reply to our requests, first for the granting of provincial institutions to the territories ; secondly, for a vote supplementary to the North-west grant for the current year, and, thirdly, for a largely increased vote for the year 1903-4.

I have not observed in the correspondence any reply by my right hon. friend to that letter of Mr. Haultain's, unless we find it in a letter dated the 8th of June. The next communication in connection with the North-west government is to be found in sessional paper No. 116a, at page 13. It is in the form of a telegram from the Minister of Finance to Mr. Haultain, the Premier of the North-west Territories, and is as follows :

Ottawa, April 16, 1903.

To the Hon. Mr. F. W. G. Haultain, Regina.

Government will place in supplementary estimates for coming year two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to cover the over-expenditure of the territories, and also recommend to parliament an advance on capital account up to $500,000 from time to time for approved public works. The two bridges which have been specially arranged for to be charged to the capital advance. It will be better that all bridges in the territories be left to the territorial government. Please treat this as confidential for a day or two until I can arrange to have it dealt with by Order in Council.

W. S. FIELDING.

You will observe here again that there is not a single word of response to the demand of Mr. Haultain made to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of the Interior over and over again, that the demand of the North-west Territories for a provincial status should be considered by the government and an answer given forthwith. I might say, in passing, that I have not been able to find in the correspondence brought down the letter from Mr. Haultain to the Minister of the Interior, which is referred to in Mr. Haultain's letter to the Prime Minister of the 15th of April, 1903. It may be that on account of the confused condition in which this correspondence has been brought down I have overlooked it. The next letter to which I invite the attention of the House is that of Mr. Haultain to the Minister of Finance, of the 20th of April, 1903, which is found in sessional paper 116a, page 14. I will have to trouble the House with a couple of paragraphs of this letter, which is a very long one. After quoting certain correspondence which had taken place, Mr. Haultain proceeds as follows :

It is with much satisfaction that I note that the government has so far appreciated the position of affairs in the territories as to approve, in the most practical manner possible, of our methods of administration by providing for the expenditures we found it necessary to incur in the public interest during the year 1902. It would appear, however, to have escaped your observation that the placing of the appropriation to cover our expenditures of last year in the supplementary estimates for the coming Dominion fiscal year will have the effect of keeping the money from the territorial revenue until after the first day of July next. All the representations we have made —both written and oral--have been to the effect that the supplementary appropriation is desired to the current fiscal year's appropriations, so that the money may be rendered available at the earliest possible moment. To do otherwise can only embarrass us still further, and I would submit that with a prospective surplus of thirteen million dollars, to a very large extent due to the present flourishing condition of these territories, the Dominion will not be put to any very serious inconvenience by granting us the money it has been agreed to give us during the month of May instead of July. I trust that upon further consideration of the subject you will see your way clear to recommending the government to grant our request that the $250,000 referred to in your telegram be provided for through the supplementary estimates for 1902-3.

Your telegram makes no mention whatever of any proposal to increase our grant for the coming fiscal year. I take it that the suggested advance on capital account has no connection whatever with that subject. In discussing the various phases of the question of territorial finances, it has been found necessary at times to point out that our limited and inadequate revenues were more restricted, and rendered only more inadequate, by the necessity for making expenditures out of current income which in themselves were more properly chargeable to a capital account. That is to say, we have occasionally found it necessary to incur heavy expenditures for the construction of bridges the cost of which has been a heavy drain upon our revenues, and which should have been spread over a series of years instead of being provided for out of the revenue of one year, to the exclusion of other and equally important works. But we have never asked for the establishment of a capital account, and we do not wish for the establishment of such an account until a more satisfactory subsidy or annual grant is provided. We would even prefer, if possible, to postpone all discussion of the question until the details of the financial position of the territories under the provincial status are settled. Whilst the Dominion retains to itself the control and beneficiary interest in our revenue producing property it seems but fair to us that the Dominion should provide all needed funds for the proper carrying on of our business. Further, we cannot assent to any proposition that our expenditures shall be subject to approval at Ottawa. The legislative assembly of the territories has for a number of years been providing for the administration of public affairs in the territories. What has been done in that regard has met with the approval of the people of the territories, and this government cannot consent, at this date to any such proposal as that made in your telegram. In one sense, I quite agree with you that 'it will be better that all bridges in territories be left to the territorial government,' but that proposition must be coupled with another, namely, that adequate financial provision therefor be made by parliament. The Dominion government in the first place built the two bridges at Macleod and Lethbridge without reference to the government of the territories. It was possible that at the time they were built it was not practicable to do so, but the fact remains that, in pursuance of its general public works policy, the Dominion government built the two bridges in question and has undertaken to replace them. Under existing conditions, which the Dominion government does not appear to wish to remedy, we are content to leave that matter as it stands at present.

Then he deals with similar matters at great length, and he concludes his letter with the following paragraph :

I trust that the further consideration of this whole subject, promised in your telegram of this date, will result in some more definite recognition of our necessities than has hitherto been evidenced. The one, and the best solution of all these difficulties has, on several occasions of late, been suggested to the Dominion government, and it seems to me that I might well close this communication by an expression of the opinion that just so long as the provincial status is withheld from the territories will it be necessary for the government of the territories to direct attention with increasing force and emphasis to the present unsatisfactory manner of making financial provision for the public requirements of the country.

Now, that was followed up by a resolution of the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories. But before dealing with that, I might say that on the 20th of April, 1903, the Prime Minister replied to Mr. Haultain's letter of the 15th of April, in the following terms :

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 15th instant, as Mr. Fielding has communicated with you already by wire on the subject therein mentioned, I do not suppose that it requires any further reply.

So the House will observe that not only did the Minister of Finance ignore absolutely the demands of Mr. Haultain for an answer to the request of the territories for provincial institutions, but my right hon. friend, by referring to the Finance Minister's answer, expressed himself in exactly the same way. On the 24th of April, 1903, by resolution found in sessional paper 116a, pages 20 and 21, the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories again passed a resolution in almost exactly similar terms to their resolution of 1900. They declare in paragraphs 8 to 10 :

8. And whereas under the several authorities so given the parliament of Canada has created political institutions in these territories bearing a close analogy to those which exist in the several provinces of the Dominion ;

9. And whereas by the confederation compact the province which formed the Dominion on the fifteenth day of July, 1870, were furnished with the means of carrying on local self-government upon certain well defined bases ;

10. And whereas the territories, being an integral part of the Dominion, and having had imposed upon them the duties and obligations incidental to the political institutions which have been given to them and said duties and obligations the parliament of Canada has declared its willingness to assume, are entitled to such federal assistance for their maintenance as will bear due proportion and analogy to that given to other portions of the Dominion for similar purposes.

Then a further paragraph deals with the question of finances, and paragraphs 14 and 15, concluding this memorial, are in the same terms as those I have already read to the House as part of the resolution of 1900. On the 2nd of June Mr. Haultain addressed a further letter to the right hon. Prime Minister which will be found in sessional paper 116a page 16. After referring to the correspondence which had passed between them he proceeds as follows :

In further reference to your letter of April 20, I beg to point out that Mr. Fielding's telegram does not deal with the most important part of my letter of April 16, namely our request for provincial institutions, and I would most respectfully urge that our representations on this important question merit some further reply than can be gathered by implication from the fact that Mr. Fielding does not refer to them.

Mr. Haultain had been pressing for some definite answer in regard to this matter from the month of March of that year. During that period he had written a great many times to the Minister of the Interior, he had written to the hon. Minister of Finance, he had written to the right hon. Prime Minister himself, and the only answer he ever got from any of these hon. gentlemen was a reference to some other gentleman, or a telegram of a somewhat casual character in which he was told that certain financial arrangements with the North-west Territories would be provided for by a grant during the present year. It does seem to me that the Premier of the North-west Territories, a gentleman representing a constituency of something over 350,000 people, might have been answered by any one of these three gentlemen to whom I have referred in a somewhat more formal manner than that which characterized the correspondence that I have read. On the 8th June Sir Wilfrid Laurier wrote to Mr. Haultain. The letter has not been printed at all as far as I can ascertain, but I have secured a typewritten copy of it. I repeat again my deep regret that the returns to which I have referred have come down in so incomplete a condition as to impose an enormous amount of labour on any man who desires to trace the sequence of this correspondence. I had better read the whole of the letter as it is important :

Privy Council, Canada,
Ottawa, June 8, 1903.

Hon. F. W. G. Haultain,
Regina,

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst. The Minister of Finance has, by this time, communicated with you respecting the financial grant to be given to the North-west legislature.

With regard to your further request that legislation be introduced this session conferring on the territories full provincial organization. I have had the honour to discuss the matter with the members of the House of Commons from the territories. I have asked them to consider whether it would be advisable to have such legislation introduced this year. We are, as you know, introducing a redistribution measure at the present session, and we are giving to the territories a much larger representation in the House of Commons than they would be entitled to, were they to become a province. In fact the Bill which we have introduced allows to the territories a representation in the House of Commons of ten members. Were they to be admitted at once as a province they would be entitled to only six members. It would be a question of extreme difficulty and complications to give to the territories at the same time all the advantages of full provincial organization without the corresponding disadvantages.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Yours truly,
(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

Well, my right hon. friend has at last given a reply to the Prime Minister of the territories and it does not seem to me to be a reply which ought to carry very great weight. He does not take up any of the reasons for delay which have been urged during the past two sessions by the hon. Minister of the Interior. The right hon. Prime Minister in this letter confines himself almost entirely to the fact that under the Redistribution Bill which was introduced during the present session the territories are to receive a representation of ten members, whereas, if we went strictly on population, they would be entitled to only six members. Is that really an answer to the demand of these people that they should be accorded a provincial status ? It is not an answer, certainly, even if the contention could be supported for a moment. It could not be supported for a moment, because, the right hon. gentleman only yesterday admitted that it would be fair to regard the territories as having a population of over 300,000 and as the unit of population for Canada is something less than 25,000, if the territories were created into a province today they would be entitled to twelve members instead of ten members. Therefore, I do not think there is very much force in the suggestion that my right hon. friend has made. I want to point out to my right hon. friend and to the House, that, if you create the North-west Territories into a province or provinces, you are not bound by the census of 1901. The very fact of your giving them ten members is evidence that you are not bound by the census of 1901. If you are bound by the census of 1901 the Territories would receive only six members, but you have a perfect right under the legislation that exists at the present time to give them twelve members. I believe from the statement of the Prime Minister himself that the North-west Territories have now a population which entitles them to twelve members instead of ten members. Therefore, if you organize them into a province they would not be under a disadvantage such as my right hon. friend has suggested. Ou the contrary, if you do justice to them and create them into a province to-morrow, you will be obliged from the facts that are patent to the government and to the people, to give to the North-west Territories twelve representatives in parliament instead of ten. Premier Haultain replied to that letter of the 15th of June, and as I have read the whole of the letter to the Prime Minister, I had better read the whole of Mr. Haultain's letter in reply:

Regina, June 15, 1903.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the eighth instant, relating to the question of provincial institutions in the territories, and to express regret on the part of the North-west government that that question has again been put on one side for a reason which seems quite foreign to the subject.

With all deference to the opinion expressed by you, I cannot see that the representation proposed to be given to the territories under the Redistribution Bill could be in any way affected by the passing of concurrent legislation granting the provincial status to the territories.

The provisions of the British North America Act relating to representation would not, I submit, apply to a province which, at the earliest, could only come into existence at the same time as the Redistribution Bill became law. Even if legislation creating a province were introduced at the present session of parliament, the actual coming into existence of the province would necessarily be postponed for some months to enable territorial affairs to be wound up, and thus any question with regard to representation and the effect of the British North America Act would be removed. I might also remind you that upon the admission of British Columbia into the confederation and upon the creation of the province of Manitoba larger representation was given than these two provinces were respectively entitled to under the British North America Act.

You say that you have discussed the question of provincial organization with the members of the House of Commons from the territories and asked them to consider whether it would be advisable to have such legislation introduced this year. Your letter does not make it clear what the opinion of these gentlemen is, but I feel justified in asserting that that opinion was not in accord with the wishes of the people they represent unless it supported the claims made by us which are unanimously endorsed by the North-west Legislature, and were practically unanimously endorsed by the people of the North-west Territories, at the general elections in May, 1902. The question of larger representation in the federal parliament is without doubt an important one, but the infinitely more urgent question of provincial organization should not be subordinated to it. The two questions are quite separate and independent, and cannot, I think I have shown, affect one another. Under any circumstances, however, the obtaining of provincial powers is in our opinion of much greater importance to the people of the territories than additional representation in a parliament whose failure to fulfil the duties and obligations it has assumed with regard to the North-west is one of our strongest reasons for demanding home rule.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) F. W. G. HAULTAIN.

I forgot to mention in connection with the reply of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that he did also adduce as a reason why the provincial status should not be given to the people of the North-west Territories the fact that the members from territories, who are all supporters of the government, were opposed to doing anything with regard to that matter during the present session. That may or may not be a good reason, and I offer no opinion as to Mr. Haultain's comments upon that, except to say——

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will my hon. friend let me finish the sentence?

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman to read from the letter of the Prime Minister in which he made that statement?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will read it later. I am dealing with it as Mr. Haultain interpreted it. I make no comment on that, except to say that if Mr. Haultain is to be believed—and he gives reasons why he should be believed—the opinion of these gentlemen, if it is their opinion, does not seem to be in accord with the opinion of the majority of the people of the North-west Territories. I do not presume to have the same knowledge of political matters in the North-west which is possessed by my hon. friends who represent the territories in this House, but I know that in 1900 a resolution demanding that this question should be taken up at once, was passed by the territorial legislature. I have understood—if I am wrong in this I would like to be corrected—that Mr. Haultain went to the people of the North-west Territories in 1902 upon the platform that provincial autonomy and a provincial status should be granted forthwith, that going to the people upon that platform, he practically swept the constituencies, and that very few of those who were opposed to this government on that question were returned to the assembly. I have understood that the legislature of the North-west Territories to-day is practically unanimous upon that point. I have been so informed by those who profess to know the views of the members of the legislature. However, I have not the same acquaintance with political matters there as have the gentlemen who represent the territories in this House, and if I am wrong on that point I shall be glad indeed that these gentlemen shall set me right. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) desired me to read again a paragraph from the letter of the Prime Minister, and I will gladly do so.

With regard to your further request that legislation be introduced this session conferring on the territories full provincial organization, I have had the honour to discuss the matter with the members of the House of Commons from the territories. I have asked them to consider whether it would be advisable to have such legislation introduced this year. We are as you know introducing a redistribution measure at the present session and we are giving to the territories a much larger representation in the House of Commons than they would be entitled to were they to become a province. In fact the Bill which we have introduced, allows to the territories a representation in the House of Commons of 10 members. Were they to be admitted at once as a province they would be entitled only to six members. It would be a question of extreme difficulty and complications to give to the territories at the same time all the advantages of full provincial organization without the corresponding disadvantages.

My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) is quite right in suggesting—if he intended to make that suggestion—that there is no direct statement in the letter of the Prime Minister that it was the opinion of the hon. members from the territories that such legislation should not be introduced this year, but the inference that has been drawn by Mr. Haultain is the only possible inference. It is this; that the Prime Minister, having consulted with these gentlemen, and having come to the conclusion that it would not be advisable to introduce legislation this year, they must have been of the opinion which the Prime Minister expresses in this letter.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Otherwise, of course, the Prime Minister would be consulting these hon. gentlemen as a matter of form, and knowing that these are gentlemen of strong opinions, and quite capable of pressing on the Prime Minister of Canada or any one else the opinions which they strongly hold, we can hardly believe that the Prime Minister would conclude not to introduce a measure this year, unless their opinion had practically coincided with his own on that point. The only other letter to which I will refer, is a letter from Mr. Bulyea, one of the ministers of the North-west Territories government, to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, dated the 16th of June, 1903 ; it is found at page 18, sessional paper 116a, and is as follows :

You will please excuse the liberty I take in addressing you, if it is a liberty to lay before you facts that I consider will be of material influence on the welfare of the Liberal party in the North-west Territories.

You are, of course, cognizant of all the representations that the territorial government have made in reference to increase of the financial assistance that is voted to us from time to time, and the arguments that have been advanced why a material increase is absolutely necessary, if the alternative of provincial autonomy were not granted to us. I have had considerable correspondence with the federal members representing the territories, who were kind enough to apprize me of the general representations they had made to your government, and I advised them that I consider that if such were adopted it would reasonably satisfy the general public in the territories, and would put your candidates and your supporters in the coming election in a position in which they could fight with zeal and, I am pleased to say, with every prospect of success.

The supplementary grant, and the addition to the main vote, while not as much as we asked for, will be of very material assistance to me in the work of my department as Commissioner of Public Works. The capital advance tendered is also needed for the construction of the large and permanent structures that must be completed to meet the requirements of the large influx of settlers into the country.

I regret to say, however, that not only as a member of the territorial government, but as a citizen of the North-west Territories, I must dissent most strongly from the proposition to charge up against this vote the large expenditure of $84,000 which is purely and simply for the reconstruction of two federal public works, viz:—the bridges over the Old Man's and Belly rivers, erected by the late Conservative government.

Then he deals with certain details as to these two bridges, and he concludes his letter with the following paragraph :

I trust, therefore, that you will see the necessity of meeting the reasonable views not only of the North-west government but of your friends who are members of the territorial assembly, and who uphold unanimously our government in claiming that the territories are entitled to have these federal structures replaced at the general expense of the Dominion of Canada.

GEO. H. V. BULYEA.

A number of members of the legislative assembly sign an approval of that letter in the following words :—

The undersigned members of the legislative assembly strongly approve of the tenor of the above letter :—

I have detained the House with the correspondence at this length principally for these reasons: In the first place, to show that this has been a live question in the North-west Territories since the year 1900 at least; in the second place, to show that it has been the subject of considerable correspondence between the territorial government and this government, that a sub-committee of the Privy Council has been appointed to deal with it, and that representatives of the territorial government have conferred with that committee; in the third place, to show the reasons on account of which this government has declined to act upon the memorial twice forwarded to His Excellency by the legislature of the North-west Territories, urging upon this government that provincial status should be granted; and in the fourth place, to prove by the statement of the Prime Minister of the North-west Territories and by the resolution passed by its legislature that the people of the North-west Territories are almost unanimous in their demand that the provincial status should be granted to them.

I shall deal very briefly—because I have taken up the time of the House longer than I intended—I shall deal very briefly with some of the objections which have been raised against granting a provincial status to the territories. In the first place, there is the objection which has been already adverted to in the letters of Mr. Haultain, that the population of the territories is increasing at a more rapid rate than the population of the older provinces. I say, as I have several times before said in this House, and as Mr. Haultain has said in his correspondence, that if this is to debar the North-west Territories from obtaining a provincial status, then we must deprive them of provincial status during the next ten or fifteen years. That reason would deprive them of a provincial status after they have a population of a million people—after they have a population three or four times, possibly five or six times, that of some of the provinces of Canada which have enjoyed representative institutions for many years.

In the next place, the objection was made—it was made by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior last year, and I think also in some of the correspondence—that with a continually increasing population it will be difficult to arrange a permanent financial basis. So far as that is concerned, it is one of the difficulties which you must meet in granting a provincial status to the people of the North-west Territories. It is impossible to believe that the population of those territories will not increase at an enormously rapid rate during the next ten, or fifteen, or twenty years; and if that fact is to afford an insuperable difficulty in arranging a permanent financial basis, then we shall have the people of the North-west Territories treated, to a certain extent, as wards of this county for a great many years to come. I do not believe the difficulty is insuperable. After you have arrived at a conclusion that the people of that country are entitled to a provincial status, why cannot this government, as demanded by the government of the territories, at once appoint a committee for conference with that government? And what reason is there for saying that it is impossible to find a basis which, on the one hand, will be just and fair so far as Canada is concerned, and, on the other hand, will give the people of the North-west Territories such an increase in the financial assistance to be obtained from the Dominion as the needs of their rapidly increasing population will from time to time demand at our hands? I do not conceal from myself that the question is attended with difficulties; but I suppose that almost every question of this kind is attended with some difficulties. The confederation of this Dominion was not unattended with difficulties. On the contrary, it was accompanied with difficulties tenfold greater than any of those which in the present case are considered so formidable. Those difficulties were overcome, and we have to-day a great Dominion as a result of the courage and the wisdom of the men who undertook to grapple with those difficulties; and all we require, it seems to me, is a certain amount of courage and capacity to be devoted to this question, and some means can be found by which justice can be done to the territories in that regard, and at the same time no injustice will be done to the people of Canada as a whole.

The next point which has been made has been referred to by my right hon. friend during the present session. If I may be permitted to refer to his language, in speaking a few days ago of the powers which are possessed by the people of the North-west Territories, and overlooking for the moment many of the differences which exist between their status and the status of the provinces, he used this language:

> They are as free as any of us, but have not the power to borrow money, and perhaps it is as well to keep that power in abeyance in a young country like that.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, during the past session, used somewhat similar language ('Hansard,' page 3110):

> If they had the power to mortgage that territory for all time to come, which they would have if they were granted provincial powers, it might be mortgaged for very unwise and very unnecessary purposes. In saying this, I wish to guard against the imputation of saying that the people of the North-west Territories are not as capable of taking care of themselves and doing their own business as any others.

I do not share the apprehensions of my right hon. friend and of the Minister of the Interior with regard to these people. In the first place, although I have not the knowledge of them which is possessed by my hon. friends from that country who sit in this House, nevertheless I have some acquaintance with many of them from having made a tour through that country during the past year ; and I am prepared to say that if there is any body of people in Canada who would wisely administer a public domain entrusted to them, it is the people of the North-west Territories ; because I found in every meeting which I addressed in that country that the people were strongly imbued with the idea that the public domain should be conserved for public purposes, and not handed over to corporations and promoters. I believe that feeling is very deep and very widespread in the North-west Territories ; and a feeling of that kind is absolutely inconsistent with the possibility that if the public domain were entrusted to them, and they were granted the power to incur debt, they would be likely to use either the one power or the other in such a way as would not inure to the public interest of that country or of Canada as a whole. Who are those people who inhabit the North-west ? Why, up to the present year, they have been largely the same people who have been sending representatives from the older provinces of Canada—people of exactly the same type, having the same political training, accustomed to the same representative institutions ; and why is it that Mr. John Smith, living in the eastern provinces of Canada, is to be entrusted with the right to borrow money for public purposes, and the same gentleman, when he removes to the North-west Territories, finds himself classed in a different category ? I do not understand any such argument as that : and I do not believe any ordinary citizen of this country, going from eastern Canada to the north-west of Canada, will be so influenced by the fact that there is a great public domain in that country that he will be induced either to borrow money or to alienate the public domain to any unwise extent or for any unwise purpose.

Then, we have now another element coming into the North-west Territories—an element from the great country to the south of us. Are we to have any apprehension with regard to the attitude of these people on a question of that kind ? They are people who are accustomed to practically the same representative institutions as those enjoyed by the people of Canada. They are people who, I believe, for the most part, take a deep interest in public affairs ; and I believe that any one of those people will take at once as deep an interest in the proper administration of the public affairs of this country as any citizen of Canada in the east or the west. I was particularly struck with the interest which some of these people took in the country. I was struck with the fact that before they emigrated to this country they took the pains, some of them at least, to ascertain what were the laws with regard to the schools. They wished to know whether their children would have the advantage of public schools or not ; and they evinced an interest in the administration of the public affairs of the country which, I think, indicates that we might safely entrust to them, as well as to our own people from the east, who, with their descendants, are in that country, the management of their own local affairs. Under these circumstances, it does not seem to me that the reason that has been suggested is a good reason. And where are we to draw the limit ? If 350,000 people in the North-west Territories cannot be entrusted to borrow money, are you to entrust that power to half a million or to a million ? What number will afford any reasonable degree of safety ? I see no reason for withholding that power from 350,000 people and granting it to half a million or a million.

It is within the bounds of extreme probability that the North-west Territories of Canada will have well nigh one-half a million people before provincial autonomy can be accomplished if it is undertaken at once. Therefore there is no good reason why the government should stay its hand ; there is no good reason, I believe why during this present session the government should have stayed its hand. Is there any objection to granting to the people of the North-west Territories the power to charter railway companies, telegraph companies, telephone companies and steamship lines ? That power is possessed by the people of Manitoba who dwell alongside of them ; in what respect are the people of Manitoba better able to say whether or not a railway company shall be chartered than are the people of the North-west Territories who are separated from them only by an imaginary line ? I see no force in any suggestion that in respect of powers of that kind the people of the North-west Territories should not be placed on exactly the same plane as the people of eastern Canada.

The people of the North-west Territories contend, and it seems to me they fairly contend, that upon the conceding of a provincial status they should be given control of their lands and minerals. Objections have been raised to this ; I shall refer to one of them. The Premier of the North-west Territories touched upon this subject in his speech to which I have already referred and before concluding I shall trouble the House with a quotation from his remarks. I believe the argument against granting to the people of the North-west Territories the right to control their own lands is based on the theory that Canada as a whole and not the people of the North-west Teritories are entitled to a proprietary interest in those lands, and that, therefore those lands should be reserved for the people of Canada, including the eastern provinces, and should not be committed to the people of the North-west Territories to be administered by them. I have already considered the wisdom or unwisdom of conceding this power to the people of the North-west Territories so far as the likelihood of their making an unwise use of that power is concerned and I shall not repeat my argument as to that; but I say that the arguments used to-day in Canada with regard to lands in the North-west Territories are precisely the arguments used by English statesmen of forty or fifty years ago with regard to the public lands of Canada as a whole, and of the colonies generally. I had occasion to look carefully into this question some two or three years ago and I went into it somewhat fully in an address which I delivered in the town of Lindsay in this province. I pointed out on that occasion, what I believe to be the fact, that if the policy of certain British statesmen had been persevered in, and if the lands of Canada and of the other colonies had been administered from Downing Street instead of by the colonies, such friction and dissatisfaction would have been created that it is more than probable that Canada and some of the other colonies would before this have severed their connection with the mother country, I see no reason why the views which prevailed eventually and which reseulted in giving to Canada the absolute control of her own public lands are not just as forcible arguments to-day in the mouths of the people of the North-west Territories. I have under my hand in the speech of Mr. Haultain, the arguments of British statesmen of days gone by. Let me refer to one or two of them and you will see that they are exactly in line with the views of those who hold that the public lands in the North-west Territories should be retained by Canada. Lord Durham in his report said:

> The country which has founded and maintained these colonies at a vast expenditure of blood and treasure may justly expect its compensation in turning their unappropriated resources to the account of its own redundant population; they are the rightful patrimony of the English people, the ample appanage, which God and nature have set aside in the new world, for those whose lot has assigned them an insufficient portion in the old. . . . . Under wise and free institutions these great advantages may yet be secured to Your Majesty's subjects, and a connection, secured by the link of kindred origin and mutual benefits, may continue to bind to the British empire the ample territories of its North American provinces, and the large and flourishing population by which they will assuredly be filled.

Then Lord Grey, later on, used the following language:

> The waste lands of the vast colonial possessions of the British empire are held by the Crown, as trustee for the inhabitants of that empire at large, and not for the inhabitants of the particular province, divided by arbitrary geographical limits, in which any such waste land happens to be situate. Otherwise the consequence would follow that the other inhabitants of these vast provinces (if possessing these representative institutions which arise as of right in ordinary British colonies) are indefeasibly entitled to administer all the lands and land revenue of the great unexplored tract called a province and of which they may occupy an extremity, wholly without regard to the nation which has founded the settlement, perhaps at great expense, in order to serve as a home for her own emigrants and a market for her own industry.

Mr. Haultain also referred to a very valuable work, which is in the library here, the work of Mr. Egerton. He quoted from Mr. Egerton as follows:

> It was, however, when it became necessary to translate these admirable theories into practice that the real difficulties began. In the case of Canada these difficulties proved insurmountable.

And later on Mr. Egerton says:

> We have already seen that all English statesmen started with the firm intention to control the Crown lands in the hands of the mother country, but the practical difficulties in the way proved insurmountable.

Mr. Haultain, in his speech, referred to the policy of the mother country in later years and particularly to what was done when a constitution was given to the colony of West Australia in 1890. The policy of the British government in later years, where representative institutions have been conferred on a colony, is to give to the colony absolute control of its own lands and not to seek to administer those lands from London. The same policy was pursued by those who prepared the Canadian Confederation Act. The provinces were given the control of their own public lands in almost every respect. The province of Nova Scotia has control of its Crown lands and of its mines and minerals. The same rule prevails in Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. In the province of Manitoba the lands are still administered, I believe, by the Dominion, but some compensation was made to that province when it received a constitution and I believe that since the erection of the province—although my friend from Manitoba will know this better than I do—the swamp lands have been entrusted to the administration of the province and I am under the impression, although am not sure, that any revenue derived from the administration of these swamp lands belongs to the province. I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any more reason why a man in the North-west Territories who desires to apply for a grant of land, should have to deal with the government at Ottawa than a citizen of the province of Nova Scotia should be required to come to Ottawa when he desires to make an application for a mining lease ? Is there any reason why matters of this kind should not be under the control of the local government ? Has any danger or any injury accrued to the public interest in the province of Ontario, in the province of Quebec, or in the maritime provinces on account of the powers of self-government which have been granted to those provinces in this respect ? The North-west Territories are not the only part of Canada containing great areas of surplus lands that may be filled with an enormous population in the future.

I am told by a gentleman holding a high position in the public affairs of the province of Quebec that in that great province there are 75,000,000 of acres of the best land in the world, which will be settled and will support an enormous population one day. The province of Quebec administers these lands. Immigration from foreign countries promoted by this government may come to settle on these lands. And yet, while the lands are controlled absolutely by the province of Quebec under their own local powers of self-government, the lands of the North-west Territories are controlled by this government through the Department of the Interior. We have heard a great deal lately of New Ontario, and no one can doubt that there is a splendid country in Ontario that will be filled up with a fine population one of these days, or that immigration will be brought from foreign countries to new Ontario. The lands of that country are administered by the people of Ontario through their local government, while, in contrast with that, the people of the North-west Territories have their lands administered at Ottawa by this government, through the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SCOTT. And the same with Manitoba.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think I stated that, except that I pointed out, as Mr. Haultain has pointed out, that the people of Manitoba received a certain compensation, I believe for their lands at the time the province was constituted. Further than that, a portion of the lands at least have been handed over to the control of the province since it was organized. And, so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, I know of no good reason why any lands that remain to be administered in that province should not be administered by the local government instead of by this government. If the principle is good for the North-west Territories, I admit it is also good for the province of Manitoba. In matters of this kind, I do not think we should shrink from going the full length. If the people of Ontario, of Quebec and of the maritime provinces can properly administer their lands through their own local government, I say the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories are just as capable of administering their lands through their own local government, and they can better administer them than can this central government at Ottawa. Now, Mr. Haultain refers to some difficulties that might be suggested, with regard to immigration. I suppose he refers to homestead entries and matters of that kind. These questions would have to be dealt with between this government and the government of the territories. I believe that reasonable provisions could be made with the people of the North-west Territories which would ensure to the people of the country as a whole that there would be no restriction of immigration by reason of any dealing by the North-west Territories, with their own lands. The people of the North-west Territories are more interested than any one else in Canada in having these lands taken up and occupied, in having the country settled, and in the prosperity that would follow a great flood of immigration into that country. So far as that question is concerned, it has been suggested by Mr. Haultain, I believe, that it would not be incapable of solution, and that it could be settled satisfactorily not only to the people as a whole, but to the people of the North-west Territories.

I think I have dealt, though very briefly, with the principal objections which have been pointed out in the correspondence and in the speeches of the right hon. the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior in dealing with this question. I say in conclusion that, the people of the North-west Territories are practically unanimous on this question, that their government is urgent on this question, and as the matter has had the consideration of this government for at least two years and a half, there seems no good reason why active steps should not be taken for the purpose of giving to these people the rights of local self-government to which they are, I believe, justly entitled. I apprehend no injury, no danger, to the people of this country from taking that course. On the other hand, I believe the adoption of that course will tend to remove and obviate friction and dissatisfaction among these people which, however, will prevail and continue if we longer withhold from them those complete rights which the people of the eastern provinces enjoy, and which the people of the west, I believe, could exercise just as prudently and as well as the people of any province in Canada. Therefore, I move :

That all the words after the word 'That' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor :—

'By humble addresses of the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories of Canada to His Excellency the Governor General, in the year 1900 and again in the year 1903, the said legislative assembly did humbly represent and pray (inter alia) to His Excellency as follows :—

'14. Therefore, be it resolved, that an humble address to His Excellency the Governor

General be adopted by this House praying him that he will be pleased to cause the fullest inquiry to be made into the position of the territories, financial and otherwise, and to cause such action to be taken as will provide for their present and immediate welfare and good government, as well as the due fulfilment of the duties and obligations of government and legislation assumed, with respect to these territories, by the parliament of Canada.

'15. And be it further resolved, that, whereas by the British North America Act, 1871, it was (amongst other things) enacted that the parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of . . . . such province, His Excellency be also prayed to order inquiries to be made and accounts taken with a view to the settlement of the terms and conditions upon which the territories or any part thereof shall be established as a province, and that before any such province is established opportunity should be given to the people of the territories through their accredited representatives of considering and discussing such terms and conditions.'

That under the provision of the British North America Act and amending Acts the people of the several provinces of Canada enjoy large powers of local self-government committed to and exercised by the executive and the legislature of each province.

That the time has arrived when the same powers of local self-government should be granted to the people of the North-west Territories of Canada and to this end the said representations and prayer contained in the said humble addresses should be taken into immediate consideration and acted upon forthwith.

I know that there are many matters of detail which will have to be dealt with when this question comes to be considered. These matters of detail will have to be arranged by conference between representatives of this government and representatives of the people of the North-west Territories. For the present, the proposition which I desire to place before the House and the country is this—that the time has arrived when the same power of local self-government should be granted to the people of the North-west Territories as that enjoyed by the people of the older provinces of Canada, and that this government, in compliance with the prayer of the legislature of the North-west Territories twice repeated, should take immediately, without any further delay whatever, such steps as may be necessary to accomplish that purpose, which I believe, to be not only a wise but a just one.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). The North-west Territories are certainly to be congratulated on having received so much recognition from the leader of the opposition on this occasion, and from his followers. The people of the west will no doubt with great satisfaction hear of the interest he has taken and of the arguments he has made in their behalf. As one of the representatives of the territories in parliament, I can assure the House that it is with great pleasure and satisfaction I heard him take the stand he has taken to-night. I hope he is not alone, and that the gentlemen who sit behind him take as great a degree of interest as he has taken on this occasion. It has struck me however, and I think it will strike the people of the territories as well, that possibly there would have been a more definite and satisfactory result from the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite had the leader of the opposition spoken sooner. This is not a new question ; as he has intimated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would my hon. friend permit me to make a statement in regard to that ? It was not until after we began the debate on the Transcontinental Railway Bill that the papers to which I have been referring to-night were printed, and since that debate has concluded I have spent a good deal of time in endeavouring to get this correspondence brought down, and now we have it in a very confused shape. But I can assure my hon. friend that it was only for that reason I had delayed until now in speaking on this matter. My hon. friend will do me the justice, I am sure, to remember that I brought the matter to the attention of the government in speaking in the debate on the address at the commencement of the session.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly I do not wish to do the leader of the opposition any injustice under the circumstances, and I was not alluding to that particular feature of the case. I was about to say that the question is even older than he suggested in his opening remarks. It is not a question which arose in 1896, or in 1897, or in 1900. Having been a member of the North-west Assembly myself, I am perhaps more familiar with the matter than he is, and I can assure him that the question is of much more ancient date ; that it has been claiming the attention of the people of the territories for many years, and that the position has remained substantially the same all these years. That is to say, there has been a demand, either for terms which would go with provincial organization, or equally good terms without provincial organization. For the people of the North-west Territories the question has been one of finance and not of authority ; it has been a material question and not a theoretical question. The question in 1896, in 1897, and in 1900, was with them how to best govern the territories, how to meet the financial requirements of that government, and how best to bring to the notice and favourable attention of this government the requirements of that country. The financial needs of the territories are the same to-day as they have always been, except that they are greater to-day than they have ever been. Although my hon. friend has said that he did not have in his possession the particular correspondence that has been laid upon the Table, and upon which he made such lengthy remarks this evening, still, as a member of this House since 1896, he must have known that there was a continual conflict of opinion between the government of the territories and the government here as to the amount of money that should be placed at the disposal of that government by this government. If he had been as enthusiastic ever since 1896 as he has expressed himself to-night, the people of the territories would have benefited thereby in the years which have intervened, and would have benefited substantially even this year. It is no secret that the opposition have a great deal to do with shaping the policy of the government, and that the government, in considering the demands of the territories from time to time, have had to consider the possibility of opposition from the opposition. It has been the somewhat thankless place of members of this House from the territories supporting the government, to bring before the attention of the House and of the country, year after year, the financial requirements of the territories. I do not recall that up to the present moment we have received any assistance from the leader of the opposition or from his supporters on the other side of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend is mistaken in that.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, I am willing to be corrected, but I do not remember anything of that kind at this moment. I may say that this is a subject that has taken my attention very strongly from year to year, and while I would not wish at all to question the statement, still, as I said, it does not come to my memory that we ever did receive any assistance. I would like to say that had that interest been taken by the members of the opposition in the early part of the session that was taken later on and to-night, the territories would no doubt have gained a very considerable financial benefit and would have been still better able to meet the requirements that they are called upon to meet. The point I wish to make is that the people of the territories want money and not talk. That is the question at issue, and the closer we keep to it the better will be the understanding, and the better the results that we will have. While I do not wish to go into anything very controversial at this particular time, I will take the opportunity of pointing out that a proposition which involves the placing before the people of the North-west Territories of the idea that they have been very badly used both financially and otherwise, that their premier, in fact, has been insulted by this government, and yet that does not offer in any degree or in any way any substantial suggestion for immediate or future relief, is not a proposition that is likely to meet with very much favour at their hands. Had it been intended to actually benefit the people of the North-west and had the address which we have listened to to-night contained propositions definitely tending to result in financial benefit to the territories, we could appreciate the action taken, but when action has not been taken until the last days of a session which already has lasted over seven months——

An hon. MEMBERS. How do you know they are the last days of the session ?

Mr. OLIVER. We hope they are. When action has not been taken until the last days of a session which has already lasted over seven months, and when brought forward no practical suggestion for meeting the present difficulty is contained in it, there is only one conclusion to be drawn, and that is that the remarks of the hon. gentleman are chiefly made to be added to the tons of printed matter already lying franked in stacks outside and inside of this building for distribution throughout the territories. Talk is cheap, but it is money that counts.

We are more than pleased to hear the expression of confidence by the hon. leader of the opposition in the intelligence and honesty of the people of the North-west Territories. I was not aware that they needed any particular certificate in that regard, but at any rate, we are pleased to have it from such a good authority. We believe that all his kind words are fully deserved, although the modesty of the people of the North-west Territories and of their representatives would prevent them claiming any special advantage in that regard. The hon. gentleman has been very willing to concede to us the control of the public lands in the territories, and of the public resources of the territories, and he has been willing to concede us the right to incur debt on our own behalf. As he said, I do not know why the people of the North-west Territories are not just as able to control their own land satisfactorily and just as worthy of being allowed to contract debt for public purposes as the people of any other part of the country. But, that is not the point. The point is this : What subsidy is to be given to the people of the North-west Territories as the basis of their provincial organization, so that they will not need to sell their public lands and so that they will not need to go in debt ? The hon. gentleman was very generous with us in permitting us to do as we like with our own. What we want to know is what share he is going to give us in the general financial arrangements of the Dominion. That is a matter which he proposed to leave to a commission or to arbitration. That is not the way in which the Premier of the North-west Territories left it. He made certain definite financial propositions. He said : Give us these as the essential part of provincial organization. But, the hon. leader of the opposition does not say that he will give them these. He says : We will leave it to a committee or to a commission. As a representative of the North-west Territories, and believing that the proposition made by the Premier would be a good proposition for the territories if acceded to, we want to know what the hon. leader of the opposition and his followers on the floor of parliament are prepared to give towards meeting the demands of the Premier of the North-west Territories. That is a definite proposition. It is not something that is in the clouds. It is not misty. Upon the acceptance of that proposition depends the whole question. Provincial autonomy is only a name, but the amount of subsidy which the proposed province will receive is an important fact, and that is the point we want settled or approximately settled before we go into a provincial organization.

Mr. CLANCY. By whom ?

Mr. OLIVER. By the Dominion government, and we want to know when we get offers of help from our hon. friends opposite what those offers of help mean. We want to know the measure of their sympathy in dollars and not in words.

Mr. POPE. You are ingenious but not clever.

Mr. OLIVER. I may return the compliment. It is of no advantage to the people of the territories that they should be permitted to sell the lands of the territories. If they sell the lands, settlement is thereby deterred ; if they do not sell them, they derive no revenue from them, and in so far as that is concerned, they might as well be administered by the Dominion government as by themselves. It is, I may say, a rather cool proposition that political credit should be claimed for an offer to permit the North-west Territories to control their own lands, when such a large portion of those lands have already passed out of the control of either government, and when the balance of these lands are not being sold and no revenue is being derived from them by the government which has them in hand.

The proposition, as it has been laid down, simply amounts to this : We will give you provincial autonomy ; we will give you the lands that at present are not being sold, and that the general good of the country requires shall not be sold ; we will allow you to go into debt to any extent you like; but we will not say what we will give you to run your government on; we will keep away from that subject altogether. It seems to me most unfair that an attempt should be made to create a feeling of dissatisfaction in the North-west Territories, without any steps whatever being taken to allay the dissatisfaction thus created, without saying in any shape or form, how far the desires of the people of the North-west in regard to financial assistance are to be acceded to. Just what these desires are it may be well to inform the House, and perhaps some gentleman on the other side will be able to tell us how far they will go towards acceding to these desires. I may point out that in the printed papers that have been placed before the House the financial question is the essential point in every one of the arguments of Premier Haultain and of his government. In his memorial of April 4th, 1903, the complaint is :

> That no sufficient response has been given to the repeated demands for financial assistance necessary for the proper and effective administration of the territories.

In the memorial which follows the complaint is that there are not sufficient additions to the annual grant. In Mr. Haultain's letter to the Prime Minister he draws particular attention—

> To the necessities, financial and otherwise, of the territories.

And all through the correspondence the great question is the financial question, the question of the amount of money that is to be derived by the territories from the national treasury as a condition of entering into the provincial status. It has been said that the people of the North-west Territories are unanimously in favour of this provincial organization. I believe they are unanimously in favour of it if they can get it on the terms proposed, but I am just as certain that they are just as unanimously against it unless they get it on these terms, or on some similar terms. I am perfectly satisfied that they are unanimously against it if they are only to get it on the same terms as it has been granted to the other provinces of the Dominion, and I will take the liberty of reading from the definite proposition made by Mr. Haultain in support of my statement. He submitted a draft Bill for the establishment of the territories as a province, and in that Bill he suggested the measure of subsidies which the territories should receive :

> The following amounts shall be allowed and paid by Canada by half yearly payments in advance as an annual subsidy to the province, that is to say :—
> (a.) For the support of the government and legislature, fifty thousand dollars.
> (b.) On an estimated population of two hundred and fifty thousand at eighty cents per head, two hundred thousand dollars, subject to be increased, as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say :—A census of the province shall be taken in every fifth year reckoning from the general decennial census of one thonsand nine hundred and one and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made at equal intervals of time between such quinquennial census and such decennial census, and whenever the population by any such census or estimate exceeds two hundred and fifty thousand, which shall be the minimum on which the said allowance shall be calculated, the amount of the said allowance shall be increased in accordance therewith until the population reaches one million three hundred and ninety six thousand and ninety-one, after which there shall be no further increase.

The words 'one million' are not contained on that page, but a telegram on a subsequent page states they should be inserted. The next demand is in the following terms:

The province shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada by half yearly payments in advance, interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, on the excess over the sum of of a sum to be ascertained by multiplying the population of the province by 32·46, and for the purpose of this section the population of the province shall until after the next decennial census be deemed to be two hundred and fifty thousand: provided that immediately after the census of there shall be a readjustment under this section on the basis of the population as ascertained by such census.

Now, the proposition which the Premier of the territories asks this parliament to agree to, and to which inferentially the leader of the opposition has asked parliament to agree—but which he has been very careful not to definitely ask anybody to agree to—is that there shall be a continual readjustment of the per capita grant and of the debt account on the basis of the continually increasing population. I am here to say that no other arrangement can or would be satisfactory. No arrangement would be satisfactory that would not provide for an increase in the per capita grant and in the debt allowance according to increase of population. It is a play upon words, or it is a misuse of words to call an arrangement entered into under those conditions, acquiring the rights of the other provinces of Canada. It is acquiring rights which the other provinces do not possess. I will be very glad if the other provinces will agree to it, but I, as a representative of the North-west Territories, do not propose to go into a sort of blind pool, not knowing how we are going to come out when a conclusion has been reached on this very momentous question. As the members of the House know, in the case of the other provinces the per capita grant is paid on the actual or estimated population at the date of confederation, and that population is not continually increased.

Mr. SCOTT. The other provinces are going to ask for that to be changed.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly so, but I am speaking of the condition as it exists. I am not finding fault with the proposition of Premier Haultain, but what I am finding fault with is that when the words 'provincial organization' or 'provincial autonomy' are used, the inference should be given out that we are asking for the same terms that the provinces now have. We are not asking for these terms; we would not accept these terms; we could not afford to accept these terms; we must get different terms, and the question is: Will the opposition, which is in such generous mood, accept those terms. The leader of the opposition had this document before him, and he was careful not to say that he would accept these terms. He was careful to convey the idea that this question was a mere matter of detail, and that it could be arranged by a committee. I want to say that it is not a matter of detail. I say that it is an essential question, and that upon this question hinges the willingness of the people to enter into the status of a province, or to remain outside of that status. I was somewhat astonished to hear the hon. member (Mr. Borden, Halifax) indicate that the question as to whether there should be one province or two was a mere question of detail. The question of the number of provinces, and the question of the subsidies which these provinces shall receive are the essential questions; other questions are matters of detail.

The question whether the territories, as they are at present, have all the powers which a province has, is a question of detail; because, if they have not those powers, they can be given to them in their present condition as well as they could if they were a province. The hon. leader of the opposition questioned the previous statement of the Premier, that the only important right belonging to a province which the territories did not hold was the right to incur debt. That statement stands, and stands correct in all essential particulars. If the territories lack any other power than that, it can be given to them without provincial organization; and provincial organization, with the power to incur debt, rests, not upon a legislative enactment in itself, but upon a fixed subsidy being granted. Until there is a fixed subsidy, the province, if the territories were created or called a province to-morrow, could not incur debt. Though this parliament were to pass a thousand Acts allowing it to incur debt, its credit would not be good until it had a fixed subsidy. Therefore, the question of incurring debt depends entirely upon the terms upon which the subsidy for the province to be created is granted. Given a permanent, fixed subsidy, the province or the territories, if you like to call them such, could incur debt, because their credit would be good.

I have said that the difference between the powers of the territories as they exist and the powers of a province are not important. They are not of chief importance. The chief purpose of a local government is to attend to local interests, of which the greater are the needs of education, the taking care of municipal legislation and the providing of the smaller public works. If these needs are attended to, it matters not whether it is under the name of a province or a territory. The needs and requirements of the people are met; and if they are fully met the people are better satisfied than they would be with an empty offer to allow them to sell their public lands and to incur debt on their own account, which, as far as the proposition has been laid before us, might have to be met by local taxation.

I will just draw attention again to the difference in the status of the provinces and the status of the territories in the matter of subsidy, which, as I said before, is the main matter. The total subsidy per head amounts, in Ontario, to 66⅔ cents, in Quebec to 66 cents, in Nova Scotia to 94¼ cents, in New Brunswick to $1.40, in British Columbia to $1.72, in Manitoba to $2.08½, in Prince Edward Island to $2.05½, and in the North-west Territories, on the grant of this year, to $4.47⅝. Now, unless our hon. friends are prepared to give us some definite assurance that we are not going to be placed in an inferior position financially to that which we occupy at the present time, I certainly cannot say that we are in favour of provincial autonomy, especially when it is held out to us that provincial autonomy means giving us provincial organization on the same footing as the provinces. We do not want it on those terms; we cannot afford to take it on those terms.

There has been put up the argument that the territories should have control of their public lands and of their own resources in all ways, in order that they might be able to aid railways. I do not know just where this idea emanated from at present; but I take the liberty of calling the attention of the House to the fact that as a result of the proceedings of this session, as far as it has gone, the North-west is not doing badly in the matter of aid to railways. It stands at present to benefit by the credit of the country at large to the extent of some $9,000,000 in regard to the Canadian Northern Railway and some $12,000,000 in regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific. It might be, if the North-west Territories had control of their own lands, they would be required to pledge those lands to give aid to railways. I am in a position to say that it was for the definite purpose of being able to do so in years gone by that the demand was made for control of the lands at a time when there was no railway extension in the territories, when railway extension was very greatly needed, and when the lands of the territories had been given and were being given to aid in the construction of railways not in the territories at all. At that time the territories did demand and require the control of their own lands for the purpose of aiding railways; but to-day, I submit, the position is very considerably different. To-day there are no lands in the territories being sold to speculators; to-day there are no lands in the territories being granted to railways, but railways are being provided in the territories as they never were provided before—liberally and under satisfactory conditions. That reason, then, for the control of lands certainly does not exist.

In regard to the question whether there should be one province or two, I may point out that the Bill which the Premier has submitted provides for only one province. For my own part, considering the territories in their present condition, with their present population, I have no hesitation in declaring myself in favour of only one province. But the comparison which the hon. leader of the opposition has made between the territories and the other parts of the Dominion does not hold. There is no other equal area of the Dominion which offers the same prospect of an early settlement of an immense population as does the territories; and it is fair matter for consideration whether such a large area, if fully populated, might not be better divided into two or more provinces rather than be held as only one. I submit that at this moment, when there is a prospect of the early construction of two lines of railway across the territories, through the most fertile part and the prospect of an early and very large increase of population in that particular part of the country, which has until recent years been almost uninhabited, it is hardly opportune to decide on all questions relating to the manner of a final organization of the territories. I beg to assure hon. gentlemen that the territories are not in the state of excitement in regard to provincial organization which they seem to imagine. They will find that with fair treatment in the matter of subsidy, the people will be satisfied, whatever the politicians may be, or whatever may be those who would desire to exploit the resources of the country if placed in other than the present hands. In regard to the treatment accorded the Premier of the territories by the members of this government, I may say that I have had a long acquaintance with Mr. Haultain, and I am quite satisfied that he is able to protect himself; and from my more brief acquaintance with the members of the present government, I believe they are able to take their own part, and that we can leave that matter to be settled between them. In regard to the people of the North-west Territories, it is a different matter. The questions at issue are questions concerning them and interesting to them, and I am bound to say that the answer to the people of the North-west Territories has been fairly satisfactory. It is contained in the main and supplementary estimates of the present session, totalling something like $1,040,000. This is the answer we wanted; this is the answer for which we asked; this is the answer we received, and I beg to assure the House that, so far as it goes, it is entirely satisfactory, very much more so than would be any possible interchange of civilities that might have gone on between the representatives of the two governments. I might say also, in answer to the question as to the attitude of the representatives of the North-west Territories, that we are here to support and to advance the interests of the people of the North-west Territories. Speaking for myself—as I am entitled to speak for myself only—I support the government so long as I consider it is supporting the interests of the North-west Territories. In this particular instance I am bound to say that I believe the North-west Territories has this year received a response to its demand and to its requirements which comes nearer being satisfactory than any which it has heretofore received. So far, then, we are entitled to congratulate ourselves upon the results achieved, and I believe the people of the North-west Territories will give due credit both to the government and to their representatives.

Mr. SPROULE. If the people of the west are satisfied with what has been done this year, why does Premier Haultain say that they have never asked for the establishment of a capital account, and refuse to accept the money on that basis ?

Mr. DAVIS. He called a special meeting of the assembly to vote $250,000, and they were in a hurry to vote it ; they did not let the grass grow.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glad my hon. friend interrupted me on this point, because I had nearly missed it. As I said before, the power which goes with provincial organization is the power of borrowing money. This is the power which the hon. leader of the opposition is most anxious to give to the people of the North-west Territories. It and the power to sell the lands are apparently the only powers he is willing to give the territories. In the memorandum which Mr. Haultain submitted to the government it will be found that one of the grounds of complaint is that we are not permitted to draw on the future. He points out that extensive works are needed, and he complains that under their present status they are not permitted to draw on the future—to borrow money. That is his strong ground in demanding provincial organization, and now, when the government offers to advance and does advance, a matter of $250,000, the opposition want to know why it is done, and say that nobody asked for it and that it will not be spent. Surely, this money is just as useful to the people of the territories when advanced from the Dominion treasury as it would be if borrowed in the outside market. Surely, it is as much use to them and will build as many public works. Besides that, if they had borrowed it in the ordinary market, they would have had to pay interest, but by the present arrangement they are not required to pay interest, and indeed it is not at all certain, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, that they will ever have to account for the principal ; that is a matter which will be settled when a final provincial organization is arrived at.

Mr. HACKETT. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he supported the resolution for home rule for Ireland ?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not happen to be here when that vote was taken ; I had not arrived in parliament, but if it is of any interest to the hon. member or to the House, I would say that if I had been here I would not have supported it.

Mr. HACKETT. The majority of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House did support it, and I think it is strange that, after supporting that resolution for home rule for Ireland, they should now oppose home rule for the west.

Mr. OLIVER. It does not concern me what the other members of the House did on that occasion or on any other occasion, as possibly members on both sides very well know. However, I do not see what that has to do with the question, and I would wish to point out to the hon. member, and to the gentlemen on both sides, that it is not we who are objecting to provincial autonomy ; we are asking provincial autonomy, but we want it on certain terms. It is hon. gentlemen opposite who are talking provincial autonomy, but are not willing to give it. They will not give the terms that alone make provincial autonomy a practical and reasonable proposition.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be a proper thing to settle whether parliament is prepared to give it or not, and then arrange the details ?

Mr. OLIVER. We understand that exactly. That is a view hon. gentlemen opposite take, but that is not the view we take.

Mr. SPROULE. You take the view that it should not be given on any terms.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. I said in this House last session, and this session, and I take the liberty of repeating it, that if the House will give the North-west Territories the terms asked for in the draft Bill contained in these papers, I will certainly support it most strongly. We will all support it. These are the terms we want.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not wish to do the hon. gentleman personally any injustice. In making the statement I did, I referred to the government he supports. They are not prepared to give the autonomy on any terms.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not discussing what the government have done. The terms of this draft Bill are what we want. That is what we want the government to do and that is what we want the opposition to say they will do—but they won't ; they are very careful not to. The leader of the opposition spoke for two hours, but was careful to go around this point, and that gives us to understand that he does not mean to concede these terms. We do not expect we can get the terms unless we get some support from the other side of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You put through the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill without any support from this side.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) must have forgotten that over half his followers did not vote against the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). All who were here did.

Mr. OLIVER. There were a great many who were not here. And the hon. gentleman will remember that it was stated in the debate last Saturday—if I may have the privilege of referring to it—that keeping away from the polls was an evidence of opinion as well as going to the polls. Therefore, we are entitled to claim that those of the hon. gentleman's following who remained away——

Mr. LANCASTER. They were all paired with gentlemen on the other side of the House. Every member of the opposition either voted or was paired.

Mr. OLIVER. I was discussing this question of debt, the condition which has allowed the territories an advance of $250,000. I point out that this is strictly in accordance with the request which has been made by the government of the North-west Territories from time to time, and which was introduced in the resolution before the House. And, in regard to the expenditure of the money, Mr. Haultain says that an advance on capital account is nothing more or less than a loan on which, eventually they would have to pay 5 per cent per annum. Naturally he would like to get out of paying five per cent interest, and I think that having got out of it—that is the government having given a loan without interest—he naturally accepts the money and prepares to spend it—and it will do the territories that amount of good. I refer to this because of the way the matter was alluded to by hon. gentlemen opposite in a recent debate. They seemed to think there was an intention to take advantage of the territories in some way by compelling—or impelling—them to take a loan which they either did not want or did not require. I wish to point out that it was strictly in accordance with the wishes expressed by the North-west government, that it was placing them in the same financial position exactly as if they were a provincial government, except that they were able to borrow money without paying interest, while if the territories had provincial autonomy, they would have to pay interest on borrowed money.

I repeat that what the territories want at the present time is adequate financial assistance with which to conduct their schools construct their public works, and generally care for the interests of government which have been entrusted to their care. We are glad of any assistance that we receive from hon. members of the opposition in pressing these interests upon the government. We hope that the coolness with which the opposition have viewed these matters in the past has given place now and for the future to deep interest, and that, therefore, we shall be able to depend upon the members of the opposition to aid us in impressing upon the government the needs of the North-west Territories in their present or future condition. But if our hon. friends expect to make political capital with the people of the North-west Territories, or with the people outside of the North-west Territories, by telling us they are in favour of provincial autonomy, but without providing means for carrying on that organization, I am afraid they will make a mistake.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). As the hour is late, I do not intend to take up much time in discussing this question. The leader of the opposition, in the long speech he delivered and the resolution he read, asked this House to vote in favour of granting provincial autonomy to the territories. It seems to me that in doing so he should have put some facts before us on which we could vote intelligently. As far as I could understand his speech, he seemed simply to be reading statements from the letters Mr. Haultain had written to the government, and part of the replies. As representing a constituency in the North-west Territories I have always been opposed to the proposition of Premier Haultain. In this connection, I may say that Premier Haultain in one of his letters said that the members here do not know the public opinion in the territories. I say I know as much about public opinion in the territories as Premier Haultain does, and I say a majority of people are opposed to this scheme, and for good and substantial reasons, as I can show. The leader of the opposition should have informed himself as to the revenue the people of the North-west Territories at this stage of the proceedings would be entitled to draw from the federal treasury, and show why it would be better for us to have autonomy. The hon. gentleman quoted a great deal from this sessional paper, No. 116, and in one case, I notice, he read only half a paragraph, and left the other half which did not suit his purpose. Mr. Haultain has made certain demands upon this country. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has said he laid before the House a full statement of what he wants. I have taken the liberty of boiling down the demands, and I think I can give in brief just what Mr. Haultain asks this House to give him, if we are prepared to give provincial autonomy. He wants first, all the public lands. The leader of the opposition said he was prepared to support that part of the proposition. I am glad to see that he has approached the matter in that spirit. We in the west would like to see the lands given to the government of the North-west Territories provided that government made a proper use of them, and did not undertake to shut off settlement. He wants to grant payment for all the lands that were given as bonuses to railway companies in years gone by. But hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were running the governmental machine, gave away a great many millions of acres of land in the North-west Territories, and I am sorry to say that they were not at all times given for the purpose of subsidizing railways in the North-west Territories, but most of them were given to subsidize railways in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. McCREARY. I suppose Manitoba would also be entitled to the same payment for all her lands given away ?

Mr. DAVIS. I fancy so. Mr. Haultain asked for the payment of lands given as bonuses to build railways. Now, the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) who is leading the opposition, would probably inform us whether he is prepared to pay us at a reasonable rate for the 50,000,000 acres of land he and his friends gave away in the North-west Territories to subsidize railways. At a reasonable price per acre, say $3, it would amount to something like $150,000,000. Well, we will accept it, we would like to get it, because it would put us on a good footing, a little better footing than the province of Ontario. Now, he goes on further, and if the leader of the opposition had read that portion at the bottom instead of reading only one portion of the document, he would have found that Mr. Haultain wants compensation for all the lands that are given as homesteads in the North-west Territories; in other words, he wants the federal government to spend a certain amount of money to put the people into the territories, and then the North-west government would like to be compensated for those lands given to those people as homesteads. Whether that is a reasonable demand to make, I will leave to the judgment of the leader of the opposition who seems to be quite friendly to Mr. Haultain, and who wants to have this thing carried out. Another thing which will interest my hon. friend from Grey, I know—because he is one of the old guard and sat in this House when that monstrous piece of legislation was put through which foisted a monopoly on the people of the west in the way of exemptions from taxation on the Canadian Pacific Railway roadbed, and all its stations for ever and lands for twenty years—he will be happy to know that Mr. Haultain asks that legislation be now passed to have that removed, so that the people of the North-west Territories, in forming a province, will not labour under the disability of having this road exempted from taxation. I do not know what it will cost the people of Canada. I leave the leader of the opposition to figure that out. But I would like to see him get the Canadian Pacific Railway to give up the privilege which was given them by his friends twenty years ago, the privilege of exemption from taxation on lands for twenty years, as we always supposed, but as it now turns out to be, for forty years, exempting them from taxation on their roadbed, rolling stock and everything else for ever.

Mr. McCREARY. That will apply to Manitoba also.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose so. Now, the leader of the opposition has figured out that the population of the North-west Territories at the present time is something like 375,000. He goes Mr. Haultain one better.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not say 375,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I took down his figures. He said there was 158,000 in round numbers, according to the census, and that 170 odd thousand appear to have gone into the territories since then.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That makes 330,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, he has gone the Premier of the North-west Territories one better. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that the Premier of the North-west Territories is not unduly modest in his demands, and if he thought he was entitled to it he would ask for it. He said that the population was 250,000, and he wants a grant of eighty cents per head to start with. He wants to draw eighty cents per head until the population reaches 1,396,091. Now, with reference to the debt account. The present population on which that debt account is to be based is 250,000. Now, he is more modest in that respect than the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the date of that ?

Mr. DAVIS. You took it out of your own return you have been reading from.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the date to which the hon. gentleman refers ?

Mr. DAVIS. I am talking about this return brought down here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am asking the date of that document.

Mr. DAVIS. It is in the Bill, it is 1901. I must say that if the leader of the opposition were consulting the Premier of the North-west Territories now he would be prepared to ask for $600,000, and I would not blame him at all. I am just taking what is in that Bill, the draft of the Bill that was presented to this House, and that is what he expects if you give him provincial autonomy. Now, we will take the figures of the leader of the opposition, 330,000. He wants the debt account based on 330,000, and a revision every five years—which is a perfectly legitimate thing, and I think he is entitled to it. But I want to point out now to the leader of the opposition—I think it was three years ago that Mr. Haultain started this agitation for provincial autonomy—I want to point out to the leader of the opposition at this stage that every man, woman and child that goes into the North-west Territories is worth to us, on capital account, $33, or close to it. Mr. Haultain puts it at $32.40. Now, taking the statement made by the leader of the opposition that 170,000 people have gone in there since the census was taken—I think Mr. Haultain started his agitation before the census was taken—I think the leader of the opposition will see that by not having provincial autonomy we have added to our capital account something in the neighbourhood of between five and six million dollars, taking his own figures as to the population. Now he wants the census taken every five years—I do not know whether the leader of the opposition and the gentlemen supporting him would agree to that. I think it would be a good thing, but I do not know what hon. gentlemen opposite would say to it.

Now the leader of the opposition is more generous than the Premier of the North-west Territories, who asked for ten members in this House to start with. The leader of the opposition, in addressing the House to-night, said that they were entitled to twelve. But when there was a proposition before this House to grant ten members to the North-west Territories, I did not see that the leader of the opposition exercised any haste in getting on to his feet and advocating twelve members. He was a member of the Redistribution Committee, and I never heard that he asked for twelve members. But to-night, at the end of the session, when we are getting ready to return home, and when the idea is abroad that possibly there may be an election in the near future, and possibly with the idea of gaining a little kudos out in the west on account of this thing, he tells us that the territories ought to have twelve members. Well, why did not the leader of the opposition take that stand when there was a proposition before this House to give them ten members? I am positive that if the leader of the opposition had got up and said that we ought to have twelve members, the government would have granted us twelve. But after the Bill has passed, after it has practically become law, it is rather late for the leader of the opposition to advocate giving us twelve members.

Mr. BROCK. Are you speaking for the government just now?

Mr. DAVIS. I am speaking for myself. Now, the Prime Minister of the North-west Territories made the statement that we should have only one province and that the legislative assembly of the Territories should have the power to locate the capital. I think perhaps there might be some milk in that cocoanut, there must be some reason why the Premier of the North-west Territories is so anxious to have provincial autonomy. I want to say to the leader of the opposition that if he had gone out into my part of the country last year—and his own political friends up there felt sore that he did not go and see them—he would have found a fine country up there, a lot of fine people, and have heard from those people that they were not very anxious for political autonomy at the present time. I would like to call the attention of the leader of the opposition to what one of the leading papers in Saskatchewan says about it, to let him see what the people up there think about provincial autonomy. This is the Alberta 'Advocate' of October 5th—not very long ago. It is a Liberal paper.

> It is a God-send for the country in general at the present time that provincial autonomy has been withheld.

That goes to show that the people in that part of the country are not thirsting very much for provincial autonomy. I would be very glad if the hon. leader of the opposition and the gentlemen supporting him in this House were prepared to grant all these terms, to pay for the lands that had been given away to railways, to pay for the homestead lands that have been taken and to give all that Mr. Haultain is asking for. But I do not think there is any use of getting up and making the statement that we should have provincial autonomy without going into the question and letting us know what the hon. gentleman is prepared to do. He has brought this proposition before the House, and if he is in favour of accepting Mr. Haultain's demand in its entirety we would be happy to support it. I am sure that every member of the House who represents the territories would support it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that it was an excessive demand.

Mr. DAVIS. No, I did not say anything of the kind. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is just getting wakened up. I have taken the trouble, Mr. Speaker, to make some comparisons and to see what, under the proposition laid down by Mr. Haultain, we would be fairly entitled to if the North-west Territories were to become a province. We do not know exactly what we should get. I have a statement here, first, of what we would get if we were organized into a province, and, second, of what we do get under the present arrangement, which is as follows:

Provincial Basis.

For government	$ 50,000
Eighty cents a head on 250,000 people	200,000
Debt acount, 250,000 people at $33 a head $8.250,000 at 5 per cent	412,000
In lieu of public lands	300,000
Total	$ 962,000

Territorial Basis.

Grant from Dominion government this year	$ 457,979
To pay off debt	250,000
Additional grant made	250,000
To pay for two bridges	84,000
Total	1,041,979
Advance on capital account	250,000

So that, taking the statement that I have made, we would be entitled, if we had provincial autonomy, to receive from the Dominion government $969,000 a year, while we are drawing at the present time over a million dollars, showing that we are fairly well-off at the present time. There was a time in the history of the North-west Territories, as my hon. friend from Alberta has pointed out when we were not so well-off, and when we did not get as much as we were entitled to for the purpose of building roads and bridges. Yet the hon. leader of the opposition talks about what Mr. Haultain did a couple of years ago, when serious storms swept away the bridges. Mr. Haultain went around to the people and told them that he had no money, but that if they had provincial autonomy they could have the bridges rebuilt. If the people of the North-west are in a position to get $250,000, and $250,000 more without being called upon to pay interest on capital account, they are in a better position than if they had to pay interest on that money. Another advantage of the present position of the North-west Territories is that they have not to maintain the extravagant form of government which is kept up in all the other provinces. I would like to call the attention of the House to some of the services that we would have to maintain ourselves if the territories were put upon a provincial basis that are now performed by the Dominion government. There is, in the first place, the police force. If the North-west Territories were formed into a province, I suppose the hon. leader opposite would admit that the province would have to pay for the maintenance of the police force. The mounted police is paid for at the present time out of the federal treasury and it performs police duty in the territories. The territories would have to assume this expense. I do not know what the force costs, but I am satisfied that for the territories that Mr. Haultain proposes to bring in Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, Alberta and a portion of Athabasca, it would not cost less than $200,000 a year. The registry offices are self-supporting, so that it is not necessary to say anything about them. But, in addition to the mounted police, they would have to pay for the administration of justice, and for the maintenance of asylums. Any money that is paid out for these institutions now is paid by the federal government. Then, there are the public works that are constructed by the Dominion government, such as the building of court houses, and the only way in which the money could be obtained for these works would be by borrowing it, and reducing our revenue every year by having to pay interest on that amount of money. We would have the increased cost of the provincial system of government, because we would have a lot of the paraphernalia that we do not have at the present time. Then, there would be more officials. If all these services were paid for out of the revenue of the territories, you would find that the people there would have a grievance. In my part of the country I do not see that many persons are thirsting for this change. I think the trouble lies more with the politicians than with the people. If you give us enough money so that we can build our bridges and maintain our roads that is all we want, and we will not trouble you for the present. I am glad to know that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are prepared to vote whatever we want from time to time, but I do not think the people of the North-west will trouble them very much about provincial autonomy, so long as they do that. The hon. gentleman also alluded to railway subsidies. The government is guaranteeing bonds to an amount of something like $20,000,000 for the construction of railways in the North-west Territories, but if Mr. Haultain had been allowed to carry out his propaganda two or three years ago, we would have been obliged to mortgage the resources of the territories for this work. Gentlemen from the province of Manitoba will tell you that they have no debt, but if hon. gentlemen opposite will look at the Year-book, they will find that Manitoba has a debt of $16,664,647, charged up against it. The people of the North-west Territories have no debt at all, because the railways are subsidized by the federal government, and if they get enough money to carry on the business of the country it is not very likely that they will be thirsting to change their system of government. I have a statement here of the subsidy per head of the different provinces in the Dominion and also of that of the North-west Territories, which is as follows:

Ontario	61½
Quebec	66
Nova Scotia	94½
British Columbia	1·72
Manitoba	2·05
North-west Territories	4·47

An hon. MEMBER. You are getting too much.

Mr. DAVIS. We are not getting too much, but I think we have been fairly well treated. I want to point out one feature of the case, and it is this : The hon. leader of the opposition thinks that provincial autonomy is a new proposition in the territories. There was a meeting held in my own town 13 years ago, and a committee was appointed and money collected to agitate for provincial autonomy, but that agitation soon died out. It is, therefore, an old scheme. Four or five years ago, when Mr. Haultain started his agitation we had a population of 100,000 ; to-day we have a population of 330,000, we are told, and if we are entitled to have $33 per head placed to our credit on capital account, we are $7,590,000 better off to-day than we would have been if Mr. Haultain had succeeded when he first commenced. It is all very well to say that we could get a re-arrangement, but I notice that the other provinces have not been successful in their attempt in that respect. When we do form a province, we want it formed on such terms and conditions that we will not have to ask for better terms from year to year. We see the province of Manitoba loaded up with a big debt. We may call it a guarantee of bonds and say that the people will not have to pay the interest, but nevertheless it is a liability against the province which they may be called upon to pay. The North-west Territories is getting all that work done by the federal government, and I think they are better off as they are to-day. The leader of the opposition told us that he considered the question of the number of provinces into which we are to be divided as a secondary consideration. If he went to my district he would find out what a mistake he makes in that. The southern belt of the North-west Territories has had the advantages of a transcontinental railway for 22 years, but the northern belt has been without railways until the last few years. There were a couple of railways there, but they might as well have been built to the moon, for they were of no use whatever to colonization. It is only now that the northern portion of the district is getting immigration, and as a member of the district I will say that the people there are not prepared to go in with the people of the southern portion to form one province. We think there should be two provinces, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) were leading the government he would not coerce us unless he wanted to have another rebellion on his hands like that which the Conservatives fomented in 1885. All that has to be taken into consideration. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) goes to Calgary, which is the centre of this agitation, he will find that the people there want three provinces, and some of them want four provinces. If he told the people of Calgary that he wanted one province, the first question they would put to him was : Would he have the capital in Calgary, and if he proposed to leave it to the legislative assembly to decide, as Mr. Haultain proposes, they would tell him that they would prefer waiting until something else turned up. The leader of the opposition has perhaps approached this subject in a fair spirit, and I am glad to know that he is prepared to lend his assistance at all times, and to sympathize with us. We would be much better satisfied if he would tell us that he is prepared to sympathize with us to the extent of demands made by Premier Haultain. They are modest demands in a way, and the people of the North-west would be glad to know that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) endorses them. If the hon. gentleman only gets up and states that it is a good thing to have provincial autonomy he might as well say that it would be a good thing if the sun would shine to-morrow, or that it would rain next summer, but the people of the territories want something more definite than that. They have been educated by—I was going to say my friend Mr. Haultain—they have been educated by the friend of the leader of the opposition up to considering that they were entitled to the conditions laid down in his proposition, and the leader of the opposition will find it hard to satisfy public opinion without going as far as Mr. Haultain proposes. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) stated that in 1902 Mr. Haultain swept the country for provincial autonomy. Everybody knows that Mr. Haultain adopted the tactics of the wily politician, and that he took a snap verdict. I fancy that if sufficient time were given to have threshed out the question of political autonomy and other questions, Mr. Haultain would not have a majority at all. But, when the people were putting their crops in, and could not get to the polls, he brought on the elections and got a snap verdict, and he claims it as a verdict in favour of provincial autonomy. I want to say that the people took no stock at all in that question. The leader of the opposition might as well say that when Mr. Roblin was returned to power the people of Manitoba pronounced in favour of a high tarfff, because Mr. Roblin mentioned it on the platform. Mr. Haultain is in the same position. The people did not take any stock in the question of provincial autonomy, because they knew it had to come from Ottawa and not from him, and as a matter of fact Mr. Haultain got several in my district. I supported him myself, and I helped him to the best of my ability to carry some seats, and I never considered the question of provincial autonomy at all. I want to say as one of the representatives from that country, that the people whom I represent are opposed to provincial autonomy at present. I think we are well off as we are. We have been treated very generously, and with the help of the leader of the opposition, we will be treated more generously in the future in getting sufficient subsidies to run the affairs of the country without going into debt, and without putting taxation on the people. There is no part of Canada where a taxation is lighter at present than in the territories. I have had some intimation that Mr. Haultain intended to introduce the municipal system. If he does, he will grant the municipalities power to borrow money, because, although he cannot borrow money himself he has power to give the municipalities authority to borrow. I understand he intends to submit a Bill of that kind. I do not know how true it is, or how it will be received by the people, but I believe that taking everything into consideration, we are doing very well as we are and we had better adopt the old saying: Let well enough alone. I believe the people of the North-west Territories are of that opinion.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I have listened to some curiosities in the way of speech-making in this House during the past seven years, but the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has surpassed even himself tonight in the matter of exhibiting curiosities in the speech-making line. I sympathize with him, because his position must be very embarrassing in having to make a speech for autonomy and against autonomy. He is in favour of the details being settled immediately and he is against the details being settled unless they are settled in advance, not by the leader of the government, but by the leader of the opposition, forsooth. He is for an increased subsidy, but he is against the motion of the leader of the opposition, which asks that this question shall be taken up at once, and the details referred to the representatives of the people before autonomy is granted and before it is accepted by them. The hon. gentleman, therefore, finds himself in a most embarrassing position, and he feels at heart that he is speaking against the sentiment of the people he represents when he, in a faint-hearted manner, I admit, opposes autonomy. He told us that he would be in favour of autonomy if autonomy were granted on the terms asked by Premier Haultain in the Bill as submitted, but that without that, he would not be in favour of it. Surely he has read some speeches made by Premier Haultain since that Bill was submitted to parliament by the government, in which he stated that while he asked only what he considered was right and what the territories were entitled to, still he would not refuse to discuss the question and to accept terms less favourable for the sake of getting territorial autonomy for his people. He does not state in so many words, hard and fast, that unless he can get territorial autonomy on those terms he is not willing to accept it on any other terms. He says: This is what we are entitled to, these terms should be complied with; but, as he has stated in public speeches delivered since that time, he is willing to enter into a conference with this government and make the best terms possible.

The hon. gentleman has directed his remarks largely to the leader of the opposition. I can understand his position as a subservient supporter of the present government. He knows that the government are opposed to the granting of autonomy, and he did not wish to place them in an embarrassing position. He rather fears that his own supporters may rally to the support of the leader of the opposition, because he has struck a responsive chord in the North-west Territories; and instead of directing his remarks to the government of which he is so strong a supporter, he has directed them wholly to the leader of the opposition, as if it were his part to offer a policy on this question. He says that this is an old question, that it is not just of this year's growth, that it was discussed in years gone by when he occupied a seat in the territorial assembly. Yes, and he forgot to tell this House that when he occupied that seat, he himself favoured local autonomy; but to-day he opposes it. The hon. gentleman rather blamed the leader of the opposition because this question was not brought up earlier. But the leader of the opposition has brought this question up, not only this session, in an early part of the session, but last year, when he urged immediate action on the part of the government of the day. So I think the refefence of the hon. member for Alberta to the hon. leader of the opposition was ill-timed and not at all deserved.

The hon. gentleman says it is money they want, and not talk. It is sometimes necessary to have a good deal of talk to this government to get a little money for a certain portion of the country; but that is not the case when they propose to vote $125,000,000 for a railway between Winnipeg and Moncton, which is of little use for relieving the congestion of the west; and, by the way, our North-west lands are designed by the Minister of the Interior to pay for that railway.

Mr. McCREARY. No.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). No other impression was possible from the statement of the Minister of the Interior in this House, that he was going to bring in a Bill to get authority to dispose of 50,000,000 acres of land which he stated had been liberated to the Crown, and which by the construction of this railway would be made very much more valuable and would realize a better price. The Toronto 'Globe' took up the statement and said in so many words that this was the intention of the government; and it was only lately, since public opinion was aroused, that an inspired article appeared in the Regina 'Leader,' edited by the hon. member for Western Assinibioa (Mr. Scott), stating that there had been a misapprehension on that point, that such was not the intention of the government, and that they would not introduce legislation on this question this session, though he would not vouch for the future. The granting of provincial autonomy has been the subject of debate, not only this session, but last session. The hon. Minister of Finance, in some remarks he made, left the impression on this House that in the very near future, possibly within the next year, local self-government will be afforded to the people of that portion of Canada. Unfortunately, however, the gentleman who is supposed to mould the policy of the government, the Prime Minister, threw cold water on this assertion, and left the House in no doubt whatever as to his proposition on the question. He stated distinctly, in almost so many words, that so long as this government were in power, the people of the territories need not expect local autonomy for many years to come; and the Minister of the Interior took the same ground last year, pointing out that it would not be right to grant autonomy to the North-west Territories until 600,000 or 700,000 people were in that country. Therefore I cannot understand the hon. member for Western Assiniboia when he states to-night that the Minister of the Interior has as much as promised that within the next year we would have autonomy, whereas the Minister of the Interior, not only in public documents, but in speeches delivered in this House last session, stated the direct opposite.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me remind the hon. gentleman that the Minister of Finance made a statement practically to that effect in this House this session.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). And what did the Prime Minister say immediately afterwards, when I placed his views before the House? I stated that I was putting the Prime Minister's sentiments correctly before the House to the effect that for many years to come the territories need not expect autonomy at the hands of this government, and the Prime Minister said 'hear, hear.'

The PRIME MINISTER. If I said 'hear, hear,' it was not affirmation. On the contrary, it was negation.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). But the right hon. gentleman's speech bore out my contention.

The PRIME MINISTER. Quote my speech, then.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). If I am allowed to refer to a past debate, I will do it with pleasure, as I have 'Hansard' under my hand. He pointed out that it was not an unmixed evil to prevent the people of the North-west having power to mortgage their patrimony, to borrow money on their property; and his whole argument was directed against granting autonomy for many years to come. I regret that on this most important question, for the welfare of the people of the west, there should be a diversity of opinion amongst the representatives of the west who are supporters of this government. I think I am not misrepresenting these hon. gentlemen when I state that they are not a unit on this question, unless the hon. member for Western Assiniboia has changed his mind remarkably since last session.

Mr. SCOTT. There is a new condition this year.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). When I was speaking on this question before, I said:

> But the Prime Minister adduced arguments that were strong, no doubt, from his point of view, that the North-west Territories should not be granted local self-government for many years to come.
>
> The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.
> Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The Prime Minister says 'hear, hear,' so I am not misstating the case from his viewpoint.

I think the right hon. gentleman will see that I was perfectly correct in my statement. The hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), who is not in his place to-night took the ground that it would be wiser to defer the granting of autonomy to the territories for many years, as he believed that they were much better off in their present condition. He stated that in his own opinion the majority of the men in his riding were opposed to local autonomy, whereas his colleague, the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, took the contrary view. He stated distinctly that even with an increased subsidy—and I commend that remark to the hon. member for Alberta—the people of the territories would not be satisfied with anything short of local autonomy. This was the view of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia last session, although I will admit that he was rather faint-hearted, lest he might embarrass the government of which he is a supporter. On the other hand, the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) was rather more canny last session than this, and did not commit himself so much against autonomy; but still he stated that the great majority of the people were opposed to it, and he himself thought it would be better not to have it until there was a larger population in that country, and they would draw a larger per capita allowance; whereas the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has both in this House and out of it taken such strong grounds that he has been taken to task not only by the press of western Canada, but by the independent press of eastern Canada for his opposition to provincial autonomy. So here we have a House divided against itself on this most important question, on which unanimity is required, at least on the part of the supporters of the government. It is not surprising, that the government should deny the people local autonomy when we have this diversity of opinion expressed in this House by their own supporters. The hon. member for Alberta, when speaking on this question on one occasion before, stated that the overwhelming sentiment—I believe these were his words—of the people of the North-west was in his opinion opposed to the granting of provincial autonomy. Now, I do not believe he gauged public opinion on that question when he made use of that expression.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman has repeatedly said that I was against provincial autonomy. I have always said that I was in favour of provincial autonomy on the terms asked for by Mr. Haultain.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Of course, the hon. gentleman may well say that; I suppose there is not a single member present who would not be. But does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Mr. Haultain would not accept provincial autonomy at the hands of this government unless the exact terms which he submitted were granted?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say what Mr. Haultain would do; I simply take his terms and say that they are acceptable to me. When discussing this he simply stated that he would be in favour of provincial autonomy only on the basis of more population.

Mr. SCOTT. Premier Haultain is on record as saying that he would rather do without provincial autonomy for ever than accept Manitoba's terms.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). That has nothing to do with the question at issue. We are not demanding Manitoba terms or limiting the discussion to any terms; we are asking that the matter be immediately taken up in accordance with the prayers and petitions of the legislative assembly and to have these dealt with by this government. The hon. member for Alberta said:

> Speaking for myself and for those who think with me, who I believe constitute the overwhelming majority of the people of the North-west Territories, I believe it is better to wait until we can be sure of a more satisfactory arrangement, based on increased population, than we can possibly expect to get to-day.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I point out that what I said there had reference, not to what Mr. Haultain proposed, but to what I expected we could get, quite a different matter.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Haultain himself did not ask exactly what the hon. gentleman asks; he asked a per capita allowance on a stated population.

Mr. OLIVER. No; he asked a per capita allowance on an increasing population.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman has blown hot and cold on this question over and over again. He gave me the impression, in fact he explicitely stated, that it would be better to wait until there was a larger population, so that they could draw a larger per capita allowance. From the interviews which I have had with prominent citizens in that part of Canada, from newspaper comments not including, however, the Edmonton 'Bulletin', but from newspaper comments independent of politics, and from the representatives in the territorial assembly, I had formed an opinion quite contrary to that formed by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). That there may not be a perfect unanimity of opinion I grant you, but as the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), in his terse language last session, said, if the government wait for that they will wait for Kingdom come, and certainly they will do so upon this or on any other great public question; there will always be a certain divergence of public opinion, but if the expressions of the territorial representative are any gauge of public opinion on that question, it is overwhelmingly in favour of provincial autonomy at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. OLIVER. On what terms?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). If you vote for the amendment of the leader of the opposition you will see upon what terms. That is exactly what they are asking a conference to fix terms and I do not see how the hon. gentleman can consistently with his duty—although I do not want to lecture him, as he knows his own duty—oppose the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition, when it is asking something so very reasonable and moderate. There may be a difference of opinion in regard to the number of provinces which should be created; I admit that, but that is a question that must be faced sooner or later. It will have to be faced five or ten years from now just in the same way as it will to-day, and at the most it is a question of detail which the people of the territories themselves, if you give them an opportunity, will be only too glad to decide for you. In the speech from the Throne in the local assembly, at the last session of the territorial assembly, it was distinctly declared that it was a national necessity to have more power, more revenue and provincial institutions, and Mr. Haultain, in his opening address on that speech, stated that the territorial government had resorted to almost everything short of force to gain their rights from the present government, and had failed. That is strong language to emanate from the premier of the territories, but it only goes to show the friction and the irritation that is caused by the treatment accorded these people by the government of the day. Mr. Haultain, in that speech, stated:

> 'Every thing possible has been done that could be done,' he said, 'to procure the necessary money and powers. These representations have been backed up by resolutions, memorials and addresses by the legislative assembly. Now, the question is, what more can be done? He spoke of the $13,000,000 surplus and the 'lavish expenditure in eastern Canada,' and said that 'if the comfort and prosperity of the new settlers is not more important than breakwaters, drill halls, &c., are we then not forced to the conclusion that the present dependency of the territories on the Dominion should be put to an end immediately ?' Immediate provincial institutions in the territories must be the demand.

Mr. Haultain discussed certain means of temporary relief, such as having resort to municipal administration and increased local taxation. This latter must come with the growing needs of the country, he said. But, above all, they must have provincial institutions. 'The provincial question is, after all, the one solution to our constitutional difficulties and our financial difficulties. It is the one solution because we shall have not only the revenues to meet them, but the powers to do the work which it is necessary this legislature should do to meet the necessities of this great and growing country.

Manitoba, which lies alongside the territories on the eastern side, has been in the enjoyment of provincial institutions to its own advantage and to the great benefit of its inhabitants for a great many years. This autonomy was granted the province of Manitoba at a time when the population was about 17,000. British Columbia also enjoys that advantage with a much less population than the territories have at the present day. The territories of the present day have a considerably larger population than Prince Edward Island, and yet some 250,000 or 300,000 of the population are denied the right afforded to Canadians in the other provinces of the Dominion.

The House is surely aware that this condition of affairs cannot exist much longer. It is causing a great deal of trouble and a great deal of unrest amongst the newcomers who are entering that country, and sooner or later he will find that unless this question is dealt with the government will be piling up for themselves a heap of trouble. The longer they put off dealing with it the greater the difficulties will be. People are flocking into that country year after year, settlement is becoming more compact, new school districts must be organized and new schools provided in order to meet the wants of the rising generation. All of this will cause great demands on the territorial exchequer, and the territorial government has not means of recouping itself except a small tax on land ; it has come here to this parliament, asking for the amount that may be doled out to it, large or small. It galls the people there to feel that they are dependent on this parliament, and makes them feel that they are being kept in leading strings. Two years ago, and I believe, again a year ago, that country was visited by very severe floods which swept away, according to the correspondence laid on the Table, upwards of 140 bridges ; and because the government of the territories had to anticipate for a few months the revenues which they would receive, the hon. Minister of the Interior, when bringing down a supplementary of $100,000 to meet this contingency, said in an apologetic manner that the government of the territories had anticipated their revenue, and had rushed into this expenditure six months in advance, perhaps unwisely, as he put it.

What else could the territorial government do ? Here were new people coming into that country, and here were the rivers from which the bridges had been washed away. The people must reach their markets, they must have the bridges. The government had not the money to provide the bridges, and sooner than cause dissatisfaction, and even distress, among the people, they anticipated their revenue. And the Minister of the Interior thought fit to refer to this as 'perhaps being an unwise expenditure.' In my opinion, the people of the North-west Territories are as capable of managing their own affairs as those of any other portion of Canada, notwithstanding the distrust that the present government seems to have of them. And why should they not be as capable as others ? Whence come these people ? Many of them come from south of the American boundary line, as has been pointed out. These are people accustomed to representative institutions, and they look for them in Canada, and will not be satisfied without them. Many were residents of eastern Canada, who enjoyed local autonomy in the provinces from which they came ; and they will look for the same autonomy on the part of the community among whom they have settled, and will not be satisfied without it. We all know that the best immigration agent is the contented settler. And, unless we make these people feel that they are not dependent upon others, unless they are free to elect representatives to manage their affairs who will be directly responsible to them, I think you will find considerable irritation arising in the future. We have heard in the past eulogies heaped upon the succession of governments headed by Mr. Haultain. And properly so. I believe that the management of territorial affairs under his direction has been wise and judicious ; otherwise he would not have received the public endorsation on numerous occasions as he has done. And when he and his associates show such capacity, what is there to lead us to suppose that they would not show as great capacity if the territories were granted the powers of autonomy that they have been claiming ? Why, what was the course followed in making up the present cabinet ? The Prime Minister did not confine himself in his choice of colleagues to men who had stood behind him in opposition for eighteen years. He went far outside the ranks of members of this House. He went to the provinces to secure the provincial premiers to make up his cabinet. He took one premier from Nova Scotia, he took one from New Brunswick, he went to Ontario for another, and he went to Manitoba for their attorney general. Here were four of these gentlemen taken from provincial governments. And what surprises me is that, now that these provincial cabinet ministers are elevated to positions of ministers in the Dominion cabinet, in their egotism they say : We are the heaven-born legislators, and those who do not happen to have been taken, but were left outside, are not to be trusted with the management even of their own local affairs. It all depends upon the terms, as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) states, whether local autonomy will be accepted or not. This parliament can well afford to deal, not only justly, but liberally with the people of the North-west ; and, in doing so, as I say, they will take the very best step to encourage immigration to go into that country. We are to-day spending upwards of half a million dollars a year for the purpose of bringing in immigrants. I think it is the duty of parliament rather to try to provide for the protection of the settlers we have and make them contented with their lot than to favour an enormous expenditure in order to import people, some of whom may not be so desirable as we would wish.

In the return brought down, we have resolutions from the North-west in favour of provincial autonomy. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) read from a certain paper, I think from his own town, a few lines to show that the people were not in favour of local autonomy. There is no great expression of opinion there in favour of autonomy, according to the hon. gentleman. But, in looking over the return that has been brought down. I find that the hon. gentleman himself, in a letter dated April 14th, 1903, sent to the Prime Minister a resolution passed by the board of trade of his own town. The resolution reads as follows :

> Resolved by the Prince Albert Board of Trade, that in the opinion of this board the time has now fully arrived when action should be taken towards the erection of this portion of the Dominion of Canada, known as the North-west Territories, into provinces, each of these with all provincial rights and privileges. The enormous number of settlers pouring into the Saskatchewan district, not only from other parts of Canada, but virtually from all over the world, necessitates largely augmented grants for the improvement of roads, building of bridges and for public works, schools, &c.. Our board feel fully convinced that the only way by which we can meet our yearly increasing indebtedness, is by having the power in our own hands to deal with the matter.
> The board of trade, while cognizant of the fact that this matter has previously been brought to the attention of the government, feel that this is a most opportune time to urge that the matter should be taken up at once, as we feel assured that the present and future prosperity of this large and important part of the Dominion of Canada largely depends upon our request being acceded to.

Here is the board of trade, composed of the business men of Prince Albert, of both political parties, I presume, as in other places ; and they, through their representatives, send a request for the grant to the North-west of provincial institutions. And yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis), on the strength of a few words that he reads in a newspaper, and entirely ignoring the board of trade, says that there is no public opinion in favour of autonomy. There were other resolutions presented from other places in the territories, as, for instance, Calgary, Lethbridge, Glenfel and others, resolutions, not only from boards of trade, but from city councils and town councils.

The hon. member (Mr. Davis) states that this is a political move. He says that the last election was not won on the question of provincial autonomy at all. The result, he says, was a snap verdict. Yet he takes credit to himself for having helped to obtain that snap verdict, because he says his influence was brought into requisition to carry three or four constituencies for the territorial government. There is a gentleman in that territorial government, Minister of Public Works, I believe, Hon. Mr. Bulyea, who is a Liberal. That hon. gentleman was in the city of Winnipeg last October, and while there he was interviewed by a representative of the press. And here are the opinions that are attributed to him :

> Winnipeg, October 5.—Hon. G. H. V. Bulyea, Commissioner of Public Works in the territorial government has been in Winnipeg, and while here talked with your correspondent on the question of territorial autonomy. Mr. Bulyea seemed to think that the matter was a simple one. The last territorial elections were fought out on the question of attaining provincial powers, and for one province in the area covered by the present territory. The result was unmistakable, thirty out of the thirty-five members of the assembly being returned on the territorial autonomy platform.

Here is this member of the territorial government, this Liberal and supporter of the government at Ottawa, who has, I believe, urged this government, even on grounds of political expediency, to grant provincial autonomy to the territories. Surely the hon. member for Saskatchewan cannot repudiate Mr. Haultain's Liberal colleague. Without wearying the House, I simply state my opinion that it should be the desire, not only of those from western Canada, but those from eastern Canada as well, to have this question disposed of once for all, and in a manner satisfactory to the people of the west. And that desire can be expressed by voting for the amendment of the leader of the opposition, which calls for immediate action to add to the powers of the territorial legislature, and to have terms decided upon which must be referred to the territories to see if they are satisfactory before they are agreed upon.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). It is to me, as it was to my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) a matter of regret that the leader of the opposition did not raise this very important question at an earlier stage in the session. He makes the excuse that the printed return was not brought down until the end of July, but if my recollection serves me, he informed the House that the printed return had been received by him from the legislative assembly at Regina at a much earlier date in the session. It is regrettable that this important discussion should have been delayed until this late stage of the session, when, for about three months, from the beginning of May to the end of July, this House was simply marking time. However, I am gratified to hear the expressions from the leader of the opposition and from my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) following so closely the expressions which I gave voice here two years ago at the first opportunity I had, and again last year. I think, however, that the people of the North-west Territories would have more confidence in our hon. friends opposite if their anxiety and keenness were not made so open to suspicion. It is plain that the opposition is best pleased when the welfare of the North-west appears to be threatened. Why the hon. member for Marquette a few moments ago endeavoured to throw doubt upon a denial that was made here less than a month ago by the Minister of Finance with regard to the policy of this government, when that hon. gentleman was represented as holding out a threat that the North-west lands were to be sold and that this government was to continue the insane and iniquitous policy pursued by previous governments, and that they were going to continue to dispose of the North-west lands for federal purposes. The Minister of Finance a couple of weeks ago stated distinctly that no such policy was contemplated.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. The Finance Minister made no such statement in this House, and I say that in the presence of the Finance Minister himself.

Mr. SCOTT. The Finance Minister can speak for himself. I listened to what he said, and I understood him to say that no such policy was contemplated and no such legislation was going to be brought down. The hon. member for Marquette seems to be anxious to believe that the opposite is the case and anxious to believe that autonomy is to be long withheld, for less than fifteen minutes ago he quoted an expression of the Prime Minister made a couple of weeks ago, and tried to give it a distorted meaning as if the Prime Minister had said that provincial autonomy would not be granted for many years to come. The Prime Minister states to-night that he did not mean that the people of the North-west Territories were to be left for years without provincial autonomy, but the member for Marquette is keen to believe the opposite. So, I think hon. gentlemen opposite are evincing that kind of anxiety which will lead the people of the North-west Territories to doubt whether they are really interested in their welfare. Further, I have to say that, in my opinion, it is very regrettable that this question of so much concern to the territories, this question of our local government, should be made a party issue. Until this year it was kept free from this position. A few months ago in the North-west Terrritories an attempt was made to drag this question of provincial autonomy down to the plane of party politics. I regret that the leader of the oppositon, the leader of the Conservative party in this country, has shown to-night a willingness to aid in the attempt to make this a party question, moving his amendment on a motion to go into Supply and so making the question one of want of confidence in the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is merely a motion asking the government to comply with the demand of the legislature of the North-west Territories, and is no more a motion of want of confidence, unless the government desire to make it so, than was the motion of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Russell) two or three years ago in regard to preferential trade, and which was moved in exactly the same way.

Mr. SCOTT. If we take the words of the leader of the opposition and the words of the hon. member for Marquette and couple them with other words which have been used within the last few months, I think we are bound to believe that an attempt is being made, with the assistance of the leader of the Conservative party of Canada, to make the granting of provincial autonomy for the territories a party question. If my hon. friends are willing to take that responsibility, then it becomes the duty of the citizens of the North-west to view the question from that standpoint, and I propose, even though the session is late and the hour is late, to spend a few minutes in looking at this question from the point of view of its treatment by the two great parties in this country. As my hon. friend from Alberta truly said, this is chiefly a financial question. If the North-west Assembly is put in a position financially to carry out its duties, then there is no complaint to be made on behalf of the people of that country, and very little complaint would be made by the legislature of that country. Speech after speech made by Mr. Haultain could be quoted to that effect. Therefore, if we are able to show that in this present year the financial needs of the North-west Territories are being met we will go far to show that the urgency for provincial autonomy is removed for the time being. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) raised a query respecting the attitude of the North-west government with regard to the capital advance of $250,000 voted by parliament. It would be a matter of great surprise to me to learn that the North-west government had refused to accept that capital advance, as I understand they have called a special session for the purpose of voting this money which is being put at their disposal.

Mr. SPROULE. They say they do not want it if it is regarded as an advance on capital account.

Mr. SCOTT. I will read my hon. friend a quotation from the Budget speech of the Prime Minister of the Territories at the last session of the legislature. I quote the report from an independent paper, the Regina 'Standard'?

I would say with regard to capital advance that if such were offered to us on what we consider reasonable terms, it is a question whether we should not take advantage of it.

If a capital advance could be obtained on reasonable terms, we would then be justified in meeting capital expenditures out of it, for example in connection with these large steel bridges we are building and the surveys, roads, &c., which are properly chargeable to capital.

There were certain objections made by Mr. Haultain to some of the conditions which the government proposed to attach to the capital advance in the first instance, but those conditions were removed and I have been informed that Mr. Haultain is quite willing to accept this capital advance and is very pleased to make use of the money. If the opposite were the fact I would be exceedingly surprised, because, on April 18, the Prime Minister, Mr. Haultain, wired me himself as follows:

Capital advance satisfactory if unconditional and if not charged with Belly and Old Man bridges.

Mr. SPROULE. When was that?

Mr. SCOTT. On the 18th of April, 1903.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Haultain says on the 20th April:

But we have never asked for the establishment of a capital account and I do not wish for the establishment of such an account until a more satisfactory subsidy or annual grant is provided.

He did not want it.

Mr. SCOTT. My hon. friend is merely quoting a fact that was stated to the House by the hon. Minister of Finance when the capital advance was going through.

Mr. SPROULE. I am stating it in answer to the contention of the hon. gentleman that the provision that has been made is comparatively satisfactory to Mr. Haultain.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not making the contention myself. I am quoting from a telegram from Mr. Haultain who says on the 18th of April:

Capital advance satisfactory if unconditional and not charged with Belly and Old Man bridges.

Mr. SPROULE. I have quoted what Mr. Haultain said on the 20th of April.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, Sir, in the same message, Mr. Haultain stated that Mr. Fielding's telegraphed proposal to pay $250,000 deficit and to provide $457,979 for current year's services was not satisfactory and that an additional $200,000 to the grant was absolutely necessary. The vote which has been made this year includes not only $200,000 which was stated to be absolutely necessary but $250,000 additional to the current revenue vote. In an earlier message, Mr. Haultain had advised me—and this no doubt explains the point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that he was unwilling to consider the capital advanced until the current revenue vote was made larger and on the 18th April he wired me that the last addition to the current vote that would be acceptable would be $200,000. The government of the North-west Territories gets not $200,000, but $250,000 additional and the objectionable conditions attached to the advance against which Mr. Haultain complained are removed. If he is still unsatisfied I would be bound to say, as one who in a sense acted as Mr. Haultain's agent in pressing these proposals on the hon. Finance Minister, that I misapprehended the instructions given by him. I will go a little further and state that the provision made this year for the North-west government is fully and entirely what we Northwest members asked for from the Finance Minister and his colleagues and our proposition—I state it upon my responsibility as a member of this House—was made in accordance with what we had been led to understand by Mr. Haultain and his colleagues would be reasonably satisfactory to them.

Mr. SPROULE. He says further:

We cannot assent to any proposition that our expenditure shall be subject to the approval of Ottawa.

Yet it was granted specifically on that condition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no condition existing in regard to the expenditure of the North-west government on capital account that does not apply to every province in the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. Minister of Finance deny that when the matter was before the House and when we asked the question specifically as to whether this was subject to approval from Ottawa or whether the North-west government council would be allowed to expend the money as they saw fit the answer was: Of course it must be subject to the approval of the authorities at Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no distinction as between the capital account of the North-west Territories and that of any other province. Any sum which remains in the capital account of any of the provinces is credited and if it is taken for local purposes it is taken by the local authority. There is a nominal approval necessary by the Governor in Council but it is a purely formal proceeding, at all events the conditions are precisely the same as they will be in regard to capital account of the North-west Territories if the provinces are established.

Mr. SPROULE. Then why did Mr. Haultain object on the 20th of April ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not see why he did so, and I am quite sure that when he understands it he will not object to any feature of it.

Mr. SPROULE. He has done so.

Mr. SCOTT. It is perfectly clear. The members of the North-west government were under some misapprehension as to the measure of control that the Dominion government were going to exercise over the capital advance. But, when they read the words that the hon. Minister of Finance used here the other evening when the advance was being voted that practically the money will be entirely under the control of the local authorities they will have no further objection as indeed they cannot have. But, to proceed with what I was saying here, I go even farther and I will state that when we submitted our final proposal to the hon. Minister of Finance, a proposal which he has met in every particular this year, I communicated the effect of it to the members of the North-west government and I received a reply to the effect that the proposed provision would be considered reasonably satisfactory, and would fairly well meet their needs. I do not wish the hon. gentlemen to misunderstand me to mean that the North-west government indicated that they regarded this proposition as giving them everything that they were entitled to but they led us to believe that they would be reasonably able to carry on all the services for which they were responsible if this proposition were carried out.

Mr. CLANCY. For how long ?

Mr. SCOTT. For this year. In regard to the capital advance it is merely to enable the local government to borrow a quarter of a million dollars. The whole provincial autonomy demand is very largely the result of the feeling of the people of the North-west Territories that they should not be deprived of the power of borrowing money. In Mr. Haultain's last budget speech this sentence occurs :

> Throughout all the correspondence and argument concerning our financial and constitutional relations with Ottawa there has been a constant and strong reference to capital expenditure. We have said that not only have we been confined to a very slender income, but we have been compelled to make large expenditures which very properly might be charged to capital account.

I will quote a few words from Mr. Haultain's letter to the hon. Minister of Finance on the 20th April, 1903.

> It has been found necessary at times to point out that our limited and inadequate revenues were more restricted and rendered more inadequate by the necessity of making expenditures out of our current income which in themselves were more properly chargeable to capital account. That is to say we have occasionally found it necessary to incur heavy expenditures for construction of bridges, the cost of which have been a heavy drain upon our resources and which should have been spread over a series of years instead of being provided for out of the revenues of one year, to the exclusion of other and equally important works.

At this point I may read an extract from a letter which was sent to me a little more than a year ago by a gentleman closely connected with the North-west government. He said :

> Let me illustrate by saying that at the present time there are on file in the Public Works Department, Regina, applications for works in the way of improvements for this year (1902), resulting from the rapid development which has taken place in the country, to complete which would involve an expenditure of $400,000. I know from my own personal knowledge that a very large proportion of the work asked for in certain districts is urgently needed in connection with the development of such districts, and from present indications the answer to all such applications is gong to be ' No funds, and impossible to undertake such work,' because the Dominion government have neither increased the subsidy nor put the territories in a position to incur debt, so that they can meet these demands resulting from the ' growing time ' which we are now realizing in the territories.

The fact is that the lack of power to borrow money, to pledge the public credit, to undertake permanent works and spread the payment over a long period of years so as to permit the inhabitants ten or twenty years hence to assist in meeting the cost of works constructed now has been seriously complained of for years. This lack is one of the strong features of the gradual growth of public sentiment in the country in favour of provincial autonomy. As the hon. gentlemen from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) have shown, the grant made to the territorial government this year is a very much larger grant, taken proportionately or measured in any other way, than the grant given in any former year. Including the advance, it is actually more, than the North-west government stated in their estimates this year was necessary for their various purposes. The hon. the leader of the opposition will find in Mr. Haultain's budget speech, that he asked for $1,130,000, and he has received in all, on current revenue account, $957,979, which is apart altogether from the $84,000 grant for bridge construction, and apart altogether from the capital advance. The amount granted therefore, is 85 per cent of the estimates Mr.

Haultain submitted here last winter and I may say that a grant amounting to 85 per cent of the North-west government estimate, is better treatment than the North-west Territories ever got in any former year. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) read extensively from letters, and communications and documents, and records, of one kind or another, to prove that the Prime Minister of the North-west Territories was very much dissatisfied with the treatment meted out to him by this government. I do not know whether it would be proper to say that this state of dissatisfaction is chronic with the Prime Minister of the territories, but it is a fact that in former years and under other federal governments, his dissatisfaction was no less pronounced. Let me read to my hon. friend a letter which Mr. Haultain read in the assembly last spring, to prove that he has no more particular complaint to make against this government, than he had against former governments. This is a letter which Mr. Haultain wrote on November 8, 1895, to the government which was then in power in this Dominion :

I have the honour to make an additional statement on behalf of the executive committee of the territories with regard to the amount requird for the territories for the financial year 1896-7. The committee cannot refrain——

It will be noticed that at the time the North-west government was called 'a committee.'

The committee cannot refrain from expressing a feeling of great dissatisfaction over the fact that there is no substantial increase in the amount proposed to be voted for expenses of government in the North-west Territories. The estimates show clearly that the government do not intend to pay any attention to our financial recommendations, which have been made for four years consecutively, both in our written statements and on our personal interviews.

While the government are willing to take all credit for the growth and development of the territories, they do not consider that that growth and development mean a necessarily increased expenditure.

There was no very great development there in 1895, but the Conservative government failed to cope with even what there was.

Our local institutions and machinery have been created by parliament, but parliament does not supply the necessary money for working them.

A glance at the estimates of 1891-92, when our vote was itemized and administered by the lieutenant governor alone, will show that the government and parliament recognized the necessity of making provision for certain detailed services. These services recur annually and become more costly (for example, schools), yet the increase in our vote since that date does not bear any proportion to the increased expenditure under these heads alone. In a growing country new obligations arise and new objects of expenditure make themselves felt. Yet this self-evident fact is quite ignored at Ottawa, and year after year the services and amounts provided for in 1891 are made the basis of the new votes.

Mr. DAVIS. Did Mr. Haultain write that when the Conservatives were in power ?

Mr. SCOTT. He certainly did.

On the top of all this, demands for seed grain, for relief from starvation and other extraordinary and unforeseen contingencies, are referred to the local by the federal authorities with an unmeaning reference to the fact that matters of this sort are dealt with by the provincial authorities in Manitoba.

Mr. GALLIHER. He didn't write that about starvation when the Conservative' government were in power.

Mr. SCOTT. It was written in 1895.

No analogy exists between the territories and Manitoba, either as regards powers or income. When we ask for a larger grant in the nature of a subsidy, or for more powers, or for some legislation absolutely necessary to the performance of the duties imposed upon us, we are told: 'Oh, you are not a province, you cannot have provincial powers or a 'subsidy.' But when an extraordinary and unforeseen demand for expenditure in the territories is made we are asked to meet it out of an amount granted for entirely different purposes, and are referred with tantalizing inconsequence to the fact that 'in Manitoba the provincial government deals with these matters.'

In the matter of legislation, too, there seems to be a similar amount of indifference to our wants and our requests. We have for four years asked that the amount transferred to the assembly should be voted as a straight grant, by that means obviating the necessity of a double audit and account, a double system of books, a largely increased staff in our offices, and an amount of extra work altogether out of proportion to any benefits derivable from the system. This request was agreed to by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of the Interior in 1892, and has been approved by the Minister of the Interior every year since then. A simple clause in the Act would bring about this most desirable change, but the clause has not yet been proposed.

None of these matters belong to the arena of high politics or party questions.

As I have said, up to this present year the whole people of the territories endeavoured to keep this question out of party politics, and I repeat that it is a regrettable fact, that an effort has been made this year, assisted by the leader of one of the political parties in this country, to bring it down to a question of party politics.

They are matters which concern the domestic economy of the territories, who are still the wards of parliament, and of the legislative assembly, which is its creation.

The reasonableness of our request has avowedly been recognized by ministers from year to year but with no practical result. We now, for the last time during the life of this parliament, beg respectfully to call attention to our needs and trust that the result may be a fairer indication of the amount of attention the committee feel assured the territories may look for from the government.

The Prime Minister of the territories obtained no satisfaction in regard to that representation, until the change of government took place. I think it was in 1897, the first session that the present Minister of the Interior was here, that the representation which Mr. Haultain made in the letter was listened to, and given practical effect to. I shall place upon the records of the House, a table of figures that will go to prove that if there is any cause to-day for the North-west Territories being dissatisfied at the financial treatment meted out to them by this government; there was a great deal more cause in past years when another government was in power in this Dominion, and there was real reason then for the emphatic language put in the state papers by the Prime Minister of the territories. I shall give to the House, the demands made by the territories for the past ten years for financial aid, and the proportion in which these demands have been acceded to each year:

PERCENTAGE of Grant to Estimates presented.

—	Amount asked.	Amount granted.	Per-centage.
1892-93	368,723	195,700	53
1893	368,723	199,200	54
1894	403,640	225,534	55
1895	375,640	267,534	71
1896	387,800	242,879	62
1897	400,000	282,879	70
1898	438,000	282,879	64
1899	535,000	282,879	53

(Yukon liquor licensess yielded $160,000 spread over two years.)

1898 } $973,000 { Grants $565,758 } =$725,758 or 74 %
1899 } { Yukon $160,000 }

1900	600,000	424,879	70
1901	600,000	407,879	68
1902	600,000	457,979	75
1903	1,130,000	957,979	85

In the year 1899, the North-west government collected $160,000 on account of liquor licenses in the Yukon, and it was allowed to retain that money, which I believe it was entitled to. They spread the amount thus collected over two years, and the real sums available by the North-west government in 1898 and 1899 amounted to $725,758, being 74 per cent upon the amount which they asked in these two years, which was an aggregate of $973,000.

I have made a comparison also for periods of five years. We will call the first period five Conservative years, because the Conservative government was in power during those years, from 1892 to 1896, inclusive. The total estimates submitted here by the North-west government during those five years aggregated $1,904,526, and they were granted $1,130,847, being 59 per cent of their estimates. The Liberal government have been in power for seven years. In those seven years the estimates of the North-west government have amounted to $4,303,000, and they have been granted directly in cash $3,097,353, to which must be added the $160,000 of Yukon liquor licenses, making a total of $3,257,353, being 75 per cent, as against 59 per cent during the last five years the Conservative government were in power. Take the first five years that the Liberal government were in power, from 1897 to 1901, inclusive, the total requisitions amounted to $2,573,000, and the total grants amounted to $1,841,495, being 71 per cent. Or, take the last five years of the present government, from 1899 to 1903, inclusive, the estimates presented amounted to $3,465,000, and upon these estimates they have been given $2,691,595, being 77 per cent of the amounts asked for in those five years, as against 59 per cent in the last five years of the previous government.

In view of these figures, I think we are fairly well justified in stating that on the whole we have very much less to complain of this year than there was to be complained of in any former year. While I say that, I would not care to take the position that the grants are being made too large, because it is my belief that twice the amount of money that is being voted could be profitably and advantageously expended in the North-west Territories, and to Canada's general advantage. I say that there is no part of any country in the world which offers to-day such a good field for investments, with such an assurance of speedy and large returns. Still, I am bound to say that I think the government are this year fairly well meeting the financial demand. The comparisons which I have made with former years can lead to no other conclusion.

My own attitude in former years on the question of provincial autonomy has been referred to, and I am free to state that if no new condition had arisen, if the conditions were exactly the same at the present time that they have been in former years, I would be expressing the same view that I expressed two years ago on the question. But a new condition has arisen—the condition of the Canadian Pacific Railway tax exemption, to which I intend to refer a little later—which, in my opinion, furnishes a very strong reason why it is better to hesitate, why it is better not to have action taken at the present time. But, on the general question, apart from that condition, which I hope will be removed in a very short time, I would simply take the occasion to repeat the opinion which I have expressed in other years, that the people in the territories have the same right to full powers of local government as the people of any province.

Besides the question to which I have referred, that of the Canadian Pacific Railway land tax, there are one or two other factors which might suggest the advisability of a little delay. One of these is found in the joint request of the provincial premiers, made last fall, for a revision of the scheme of annual provincial subsidies. The details of their request involve questions which must and do form an important portion of the autonomy question as relates to the North-west Territories, and I fail to see how the autonomy question can be satisfactorily settled without parliament previously or simultaneously deciding as to the merits of the provincial statement of claim. The other factor is what, to be perfectly frank, I must term the lack of fair comprehension of the autonomy matter by this parliament and by the people of the provinces whose representatives form so great a majority in this parliament. Of the fact of this lack of comprehension, I need go no further than quote the statement of the hon. leader of the opposition last year, when he said :

With regard to the details of Mr. Haultain's Bill, with which I am not at all familiar, as I have not had an opportunity of seeing it, I do not think that these details have much to do with the matter.

It is fair to say that when the leader of one of the political parties is not well seized of a question—a live political question—it is too much to expect that the ordinary member or ordinary citizen is well informed regarding it. In my opinion, the admission was a confession of utter lack of comprehension of the matter. Mr. Haultain's draft Bill practically contains the whole question. The whole question is made up of details. Although there is a sentimental side to it, it is essentially a matter of business to the people of the North-west. When speaking of a province, we are not dealing with an empty name. When a province is formed, the people will assume serious and heavy responsibilities. Whereas at the present time this parliament is under the responsibility of meeting the cost of our local government, with a provincial establishment the people of the territories would themselves have to bear that responsibility ; and, as has been stated by the hon. member for Alberta, the measure of their duties and their ability to meet those responsibilities will depend upon the terms granted by this parliament when the province or provinces will be established. If the people have not adequate sources of revenue, they will be unable to enjoy the advantages of good government in its full sense. Now, in stating that I am really repeating what the Prime Minister of the territories says almost every time he speaks on the question. In the speech of 1900, from which the hon. leader of the opposition quoted, Mr. Haultain said :

I would like it to be understood very distinctly that when I have ever expressed an opinion in favour of the establishment of provincial institutions it was always coupled with a very strong proviso that the proper financial terms are attached. I would never consent for one moment, if my consent were necessary, to the establishment of a province or provinces even under the terms and conditions granted to the province of Manitoba. When I say that I believe the time has come for the establishment of provincial institutions it is always coupled with the statement that with these institutions there must be given means for carrying them on.

Thus as the hon. member for Alberta said, the details, the terms, are the essence of the whole question. On the trip which the hon. leader of the opposition made through the west last fall, a slight change of mind was worked on him with regard to the importance of matters of detail in relation to this question. On one very important detail then he expressed himself clearly in the North-west Territories, just as he has done here, and, on behalf of the North-west Territories, I wish to take occasion to thank the hon. leader of the opposition for the expression of opinion which he gave in favour of the view which we in that country unanimously take, that when a province is formed it is only fair, just and proper that the lands, timber and mineral resources in that province should be handed over to the people dwelling there to be managed and owned by them. This should be done in the North-west Territories in the same way as in every other part of the Dominion, except in the province of Manitoba which was formed when the Conservative party was in power. But on several of the other items of detail my hon. friend carefully avoided giving any expression of opinion when he was in the west last fall, as he has done on this occasion. I was in hopes when my hon. friend gave notice of this motion that he had made up his mind to give a definite opinion upon some of the details which he had failed to give in the west. At Qu'Appelle he was asked if he supported our claim to compensation for the lands which had been alienated for federal purposes and I can assure my hon. friend that the people in the audience went away without really knowing what his answer meant, whether the reply was that he would support them in their demands for compensation or not. These were the words of his reply :

In regard to the alienation of the lands, of course the question why they have been alienated should be asked and I answer that Manitoba and the North-west should receive compensation for such lands as had been alienated for exclusively Dominion purposes.

At Regina also he answered a similar question by stating in regard to compensation for lands :

In regard to the compensation for lands which had been alienated it would of course be necessary to consider the purpose for which they had been alienated.

Now, I venture to say that that was not a very clear statement and that in reality the people at Qu'Appelle and Regina went away without knowing exactly where the leader of the opposition stood on this exceedingly important item, this supremely important item in the demand made by the people of the west for provincial autonomy. My hon. friend wants to know why these lands were alienated. Surely it is a little late for my hon friend to be asking that question. Some of the new settlers in the west might ask this question without creating any surprise, but surely it is a late date for the leader of the Conservative party, the party which alienated the lands contrary to the interests and well-being of the people of the west and of the whole of Canada, to be asking in this year of grace why these lands in the west were alienated and given away to railway companies. We may differ as to the wisdom and policy pursued by the Conservative party, but the thing is done, there is no need to ask any questions about the lands being alienated, and is not my hon. friend able to say now whether he thinks they were alienated for federal purposes or for some other purpose? Surely the building of railways is a federal undertaking ; these railways were authorized to be built by parliament and the aid was voted by parliament, so that surely they are federal undertakings. The people in the west had the idea that my hon. friend was simply evading the question by a quibble. Let me explain to my hon. friend how serious this question is and why it is viewed so seriously by the people of the west. The total areas of lands which were voted away by the Conservative party to railway companies was 56,082,072 acres. Now the roads constructed with this in the North-west amounted to 1,606 miles and in Manitoba 1,217 miles. North-west land was taken to construct roads in Ontario and the mileage in Ontario is 650 miles and in British Columbia it is 253 miles. By these various items railway companies in the North-west Territories, Manitoba, Ontario and British Columbia have earned 29,-986,826 acres of land mostly in the North-west Territories. Part of this area of land is in Manitoba, but the North-west Territories furnish all the lands earned by the roads in the North-west Territories, British Columbia and Ontario and a portion of the land for the roads constructed in Manitoba. In Manitoba 2,699,230 acres are patented and perhaps another million of acres will be selected there, so that the Territories will have furnished more than 26,000,000 of the total 30,000,000 acres of land furnished by the public to these companies. The territories therefore furnish about 86 per cent of the land earned by railway companies, yet only 43 per cent of the land aided railways were built in the territories, 1,606 miles out of a total of 3,741 miles which were aided by land grants. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) at Regina said :

> The policy to the west ought to be one of generosity, and such is the policy of the Conservative party.

Generosity to the railway companies, generosity to Ontario, to British Columbia, to Manitoba if you like ; our lands were taken to build roads in all of these provinces, our lands were taken to make these railway corporations rich, but surely it is a little too much to ask the people of the North-west Territories to believe that the policy of the Conservative party in this respect has been one that can be properly classed as a generous policy towards the people of the North-west Territories. If the Conservative party had remained in power another five years and had continued that policy of generosity there would be practically no public lands in the North-west Territories at the present time to have any dispute about. Even as it is of our lands that may be said to be 'fairly fit for settlement, but little remains outside of the even-numbered sections, as was proved by the case of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Company. The company were going to enter a suit in the Exchequer Court against the government to avoid being compelled to take the only land that was available for the purposes of their land grants which they said was not fit for settlement. Mr. Haultain says, and I say, and I think every man of the North-west will say, that these lands voted to railway companies were lands voted for federal purposes and that there is no possibility of any real dispute with regard to the purposes for which the lands were voted.

When a railway is aided with a cash vote by the federal government, every person in the Dominion contributes to that vote. But when the land of the North-west is taken for this purpose, only the people of the North-west contribute to the aid so given. I repeat, let the leader of the opposition, the leader of the Conservative party in the Dominion, state, so that the people of this country and especially the people of the North-west Territories can understand what he means, that the 26,000,000 acres of the North-west Territories land given to railway companies, alienated for federal purposes, are to be taken into account and that the North-west Territories are to be compensated for these lands—a statement that he failed to make when in the west, that he does not make here and that is not contained in his amendment to this motion for supply. He must recognize that his general statement in favour of autonomy is not worth very much to the people of the North-west Territories unless he goes further, as he was pressed to do by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and makes it known to the public just what he means by autonomy, and what position we shall occupy with regard to financial ability to carry on our local government, if we get the autonomy to which he thinks we are entitled. The hon. gentleman cannot this year claim ignorance of details, because he has Mr. Haultain's draft Bill before him. I will ask the hon. gentleman as the hon. member for Alberta asked him, whether he is willing to support Mr. Haultain and the member for Alberta and myself in favour of the propositions of this draft Bill, propositions that, I believe, are supported by all the people of the North-west. For I do not agree with all my colleagues from the North-west on this point, but believe that Mr. Haultain's proposals are approved with practical unanimity by the people of the North-west. Until the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is willing to say that he will stand by these propositions, until he is prepared to say that if we are granted autonomy it will be by the assistance of his vote for these terms, he can hardly command the support of those of us from the North-west Territories, and he can hardly command the support of the voters of the North-west who approve the details of Mr. Haultain's draft Bill.

Now, I made reference a few minutes ago to a condition which had arisen and which made it wise, in my opinion to delay for this year, granting autonomy to the North-west. That new condition is the judgment given by the Supreme Court of Manitoba in March last upon the test case concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway land tax exemption. And, in my view this is a very important consideration. Even in the view of the Prime Minister of the North-west Territories at least a very short time ago this was a very important consideration. In the explanatory part of his draft Bill prepared less than two years ago he says :

> The effect of these exemptions is to prohibit any province which may be established, or any municipal corporation therein, from requiring the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to assist in the 'administration' of the country or the maintenance of 'peace, order and good government' within its bounds with respect to a part of its property for ever and with respect to another part for a limited period of time. This exemption falls hardly upon the people of the North-west Territories in a number of ways. The nature of the land grant to the company, in that it is spread over the whole country in small blocks of one mile square, alternating with those open for homesteads, causes every dollar spent by a settler in the improvement of his homestead, where it lies within the districts reserved for the selection of the land granted on account of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to enhance the value of the lands held for the company in its neighbourhood. All public expenditures made in such districts for roads, bridges and other works of a similar description improve the value of the lands still held by the company under its main line grant, the company contributing nothing on account of such lands towards the cost of the works by reason of which they are benefited.

Further down in the same document he speaks of these exemptions as making an extraordinary burden on the people of the North-west Territories. Until six months ago, when this judgment of the Manitoba Supreme Court was given, nobody had ever thought to question the right of the Canadian Pacific Railway to exemption from taxation in the territories, as respects its right of way and railway property, from the time the road was built and for ever, nor the right of the company to exemption from taxation as respects its lands for a period of twenty years. The date of commencement of the twenty years period was disputed, but not the right of exemption for twenty years.

The trial of the test case has brought to light an exceedingly important and entirely new contention in behalf of the North-west Territories, namely that so long as that area remains in its present position the company is entitled by law and under its contract with parliament to no exemption either as to its roadbed or lands, and that in reality it has never had a right to exemption from taxation in the territories, and never will until that area is given the status of a province.

And as concerns schools, the Supreme Court of Manitoba upheld the contention, and this year all the land and all other property of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-west Territories are held liable for school taxation.

The court did not express an opinon as to whether the company is equally liable to municipal or direct government taxation—the North-west Territories case before the court was the case of a school district only—but the judgment given on the school case leaves little room for doubt that the court would give the same judgment as regards municipal and government taxation.

Now, upon a legal question of this kind I speak with some hesitation, not being a lawyer, and I have been careful to put on paper just what I wish to say so that I may make no error. But, I followed closely the press reports of the argument at the trial in Winnipeg. I have also seen the judgment. And before judgment was given I met Mr. Howell, counsel for the government and for the North-west people, who kindly took the trouble to explain to me the contentions he advanced in behalf of the North west Territories. I believe I have grasped the main features, which are as I have described.

He contended that with respect of school taxation, before the Canadian Pacific Railway contract and Act were passed in 1881, granting exemption from taxation 'by the Dominion or by any province thereafter to be established, or by any municipal corporation therein,' an Act (North-west Territories Act, 43 Victoria, chapter 25) was in force, and under section 10 power to assess and collect school rates was conferred. Therefore, the Dominion government had already delegated taxing power to at least this extent, and, the Canadian Pacific Railway contract not providing for the abrogation of such power on the part of the North-west Territories the power and right to levy taxes was not cancelled by the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, which Act therefore must be considered, as far as exemption is concerned, as subject to the right already conferred upon the North-west Territories in this respect. The court upheld the contention, and the judgment means that the company enjoys no exemption from school taxation.

The feature that concerns this autonomy question is this—that upon the creation of a province parliament would become liable, under the contract, to secure and safeguard the company in the exemptions granted in the contract. The language of the contract means plainly that the Dominion government or parliament will not tax for twenty years the lands and for ever will not tax the other property of the company, nor permit such taxation to be levied in any province whenever such is created; in other words, parliament contracted with the company to restrict the taxing powers of any new province.

When new territory was added to Manitoba this provision of the contract was observed, and the company was safeguarded against taxation as agreed. The added portion was brought under provincial status, and specifically made subject to the exemption provision of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract.

It is true that the North-west Territories urge that when they made a province it shall not be subject to the Canadian Pacific Railway exemptions.

This feature of the autonomy problem tends to prove the wisdom of the words used by the Minister of the Interior last year respecting the advisability of taking time to develop a full, general and popular understanding of the question. If the settlement with the North-west Territories had been made last year I very much fear, in view of the lack of full comprehension by parliament of the details of the whole matter, that the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been left in enjoyment of its contract rights, no matter how unfair as against the people of the new province, and that the new province would have been in the same position as the added portion of Manitoba, which, by the Manitoba Supreme Court judgment, is left under the exemption handicap for twenty years as to lands and for ever as to roadbed. It is for this reason that I think it is extremely fortunate that autonomy was not granted us last year. I have not the slightest hesitation in declaring that it is vastly better for us to await autonomy two or three years, and finally obtain it free from these exemptions than to obtain it immediately with the heavy handicap of the exemptions.

I have already occupied so much time, and the hour is so late, at this late stage of the session, that I do not feel justified in going as fully into the question as otherwise I would feel it incumbent upon me to do. Let me say, in conclusion, that in face of the position of this Canadian Pacific Railway tax matter, in view of the millions of acres of land that are involved, of the millions of value in railway property of the company that are involved, it appears to me that the people of the North-west would be simply crazy at present to accept autonomy unless driven to it as a last resort—and we are not driven to the last resort this year because our immediate financial needs are fairly well met; the lack of the borrowing power remedied by the capital advance method; and little room for complaint is left us as regards railways. Such being the case, I certainly approve of delay until all doubts as to the Canadian Pacific Railway tax question is removed. I hope this doubt will not exist very long, I hope the case will soon be settled by a judgment of the Privy Council. Possibly it may be too much to hope that it may be settled before next year, because the law courts move slowly. But the position I take is that the government should obtain from the Privy Council a final decision upon this Canadian Pacific Railway tax exemption, and that as soon as it is obtained the people of the North-west should be granted provincial autonomy.

Amendment negatived ; motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will not forget the correspondence which he promised to lay on the Table in connection with the agreement between the Department of the Interior and the North Atlantic Transportation Company.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will keep it in mind. I have some correspondence here which may be a little late in regard to the autonomy of the provinces. I have had it recast and will now put it on the Table of the House, and perhaps it may be printed again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps it would be better with this belated additional material to repeat the debate to-morrow. I would like to ask my right hon. friend what business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to give notice that I intend to move a resolution in regard to Fast Atlantic Service, on going into Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.40 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, October 14, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. What amount of bonuses or subsidies have been voted by parliament each year to railways during the years 1900, 1901 and 1902 ?

2. How much of the said bonuses or subsidies has been paid during the said years, and up to 1st September, 1903 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The hon. gentleman's question is covered by a more comprehensive one which is on the Order paper, and to which I will reply in an answer which will contain all the information, except as respects the period from the 1st of July to the 1st of September in the current year. The question of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) deals with the years mentioned. But no payments were made between the 1st of July and the 1st of September.

Mr. WILSON. Out of that particular grant ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No payments for railway subsidies.

Mr. WILSON. From any source ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For railway subsidies, no payments have been made between the 1st of July and the 1st of September. All the other information asked for by the hon. gentleman is covered by another question which I will answer.

Mr. HEYD—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. What is the total amount per annum of railway subsidies granted for each of the past ten years ?

2. What is the total amount paid per annum on account of railway subsidies for each of the past ten years ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) :

IMPORTS FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1903.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total imports entered for consumption in the Dominion of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1903, and the duty collected thereon ?

2. How much of such imports came in under the preferential tariff ; and what was the total amount of duty paid thereon ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson) :

1. The total imports entered for consumption in the Dominion of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1903, were $136,796,065 dutiable, $96,994,451 free, and the duty collected thereon was $37,110,354.59.

2. $37,614,505 of such imports were entered under the preferential tariff, and the duty collected thereon was $7,069,692.42.

PER CAPITA REVENUE FROM CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What revenue per capita was derived from customs and excise taxation for the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1896, and 30th June, 1903, respectively ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson). The revenue derived from customs taxation for the year ending 30th June, 1896, was $20,219,037.32, and for the year ending 30th June, 1903, $37,109,675.72. The census of 1901 shows a population of 5,371,315 in Canada, but as the population has not been definitely ascertained in 1896 and 1903, the customs revenue per capita for these two years cannot be stated with accuracy.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) has not answered the portion of the question relating to excise.

Mr. SPEAKER. The portion of the question in regard to excise stands.

Question allowed to stand.

THE CENSUS, 1901.

Mr. HEYD—by Mr. Talbot—asked :

1. Was there at any time, in the preparation of the census, a new basis applied, so that the work of a staff of thirty men, who worked for months on enumerators' accounts, was thrown away ?

2. Was a year's work done by a large staff on mortality tables, condemned and burned ?

3. Has a staff of about thirty persons been engaged in altering and amending enumerators' returns, changing forest lands to pasture, and fallow lands to pasture, and in making other alterations ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

1. There was no new basis applied, there was not a staff of thirty men working for months on the enumerators' accounts and none of the work was thrown away.

2. There has not been a year's work by a large staff on mortality tables and none of the work has been condemned or burned.

3. There has not been a staff of about thirty persons, or any other number, engaged in altering or amending the enumerators' returns, changing forest lands to pasture and fallow lands to pasture, or in making other alterations.

IMPERIAL SERVICE DECORATION.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

What are the names of the officials who have been recommended by the government to receive the imperial service decoration and medals ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No recommendations are made by the government of Canada. Such recommendations are made by the Governor General in consultation with his ministers. I do not think it would be advisable or at all constitutional to bring down these names.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the government to the following cable which appeared in the Montreal 'Star' of last evening :

London, October 13.—Though the Canadian government has made no formal declaration regarding Mr. Chamberlain's proposals, Mr. Fielding is to-day reported in the 'Morning Post' as emphatically pledging the ministry to support Mr. Chamberlain on one condition. Arthur Gill, a correspondent of the 'Post,' declares that the minister who will probably be the next Liberal leader, that is, presumably Mr. Fielding, expressed himself thus verbatim : 'We are ready to go to the country in support of what I understand to be Mr. Chamberlain's scheme and carry the election on that platform, provided no rider is tacked on to it about a contribution to imperial defence. With such a rider added we could not defend it successfully.

I desire to ask the government if there is any truth in that statement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I am glad to be able to say that I gave no interview on the subject to any newspaper correspondent, and I have not used these words attributed to me in conversation with anybody whatsoever.

WITHDRAWAL OF ALLAN LINE STEAMSHIPS FROM ST. JOHN.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if the government is aware that any steps are being taken by the Allan Line Steamship Company, or by any person or persons on their behalf to reduce the number of sailings of the vessels of that line from the port of St. John during the coming season, and if so what is the intention of the government in respect to any such action if any such demand or request has been made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I think, perhaps, in the absence of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) who has charge of the arrangement, that it would be better that I should not make a full statement of the case at the present time. There have been some negotiations between the government and the Allan Line in regard to the winter business at St. John and if my right hon. friend is not in his place to-morrow I will endeavour to have the information.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought to-morrow was Thanksgiving Day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the following day. I have a general knowledge of the matter, but in the absence of my right hon. friend I prefer not to make a statement.

THE PILOTAGE ACT.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. Raymond Préfontaine) moved the third reading of the Bill (No. 261) respecting the pilotage district of Montreal and the port and pilotage district of Quebec.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Mr. Speaker, before this Bill is read the third time I would like to ask my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) if he still persists in taking from the pilots of Quebec the Saguenay river ? I am sorry that I was not here when the Bill came up for its second reading or when the Bill was referred to the committee. If I had been I would have moved that the clause of the Bill which takes the River Saguenay from the pilots for Quebec and below, be erased from the Bill. I cannot see how my hon. friend is going to make the Bill workable, because, as everybody knows, the pilots for the harbour of Quebec and below start their work at Bic in the county of Rimouski. Is it the object of the Bill, for instance to have one pilot to take a ship that is coming from Chicoutimi in the Saguenay river down to the mouth of the Saguenay, and then have another pilot take it from the Saguenay river to Bic ? The pilots will require to have a station at the mouth of the Saguenay if the assumption that I have just referred to is right. If not then the pilot who takes the ship from Chicoutimi or any other point in the Saguenay river down to Bic will have to be acquainted not only with the River Saguenay, but also with the part of the St. Lawrence river from the mouth of the Saguenay down to Bic. It seems to me that the plan proposed by the pilots is a sensible one and one which should have been adopted by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, namely, that pilots, if they are found not qualified now to navigate the River Saguenay, should be given a chance to qualify themselves ; but, as far as my information goes, the pilots without any exception are perfectly qualified to navigate the Saguenay river. It is true that this summer one accident has taken place at the mouth of the River Saguenay. But this as far as my information goes, is the only accident that has taken place in a considerable number of years that is attributable to the pilot. The accident which occurred to the steamer 'Carolina' could not be attributed to the pilots, because the pilots had nothing to do with it, but the accident which took place at the mouth of the Saguenay river is the only one that has occurred in a number of years that can be attributed to the pilot. In this case it was certainly an act of negligence on the part of the pilot. Under these circumstances I really believe that the hon. minister should drop that part of the Bill which relates to the Saguenay river. As has been pointed out by the pilots in their memorial which was read by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) the remuneration which they get is being reduced every year. Some time ago a decision was rendered in the vice-admiralty court in Quebec which was confirmed by the Exchequer Court by which barges in tow are not obliged to take pilots. This, of course, has also decreased the money earned by the pilots. Now, by taking away from the pilots the Saguenay river——

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do not intend to take away from the pilots of Quebec the pilotage in the Saguenay river. The intention is simply to regulate the pilots and to see that they are duly qualified.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I cannot understand when my hon. friend says he does not intend to take away from the pilots of Quebec the pilotage of the Saguenay river, but that he only intends to regulate them, how he is going to carry out that intention. I cannot understand how he is going to regulate the pilotage on the Saguenay river, apart from the pilotage between Quebec and Bic. Is he going to have one authority sitting in Ottawa, directing the pilots navigating the Saguenay, and another authority directing the pilots who navigate from Quebec down to Bic ? I call the attention of the minister to these facts, because I do not think that the Bill, as presented to the House, can be made workable.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before this Bill is read for the third time, I wish to lay before the House a memorandum submitted to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to its contents. That memorandum is dated Quebec, September 10, 1903, and reads as follows :—

Quebec, September 10, 1903.

James Woods, Esq.,
Secretary-Treasurer of the Harbour Commissioners,
Quebec.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the Board of directors of Pilots, held yesterday, the letter from the deputy minister of Marine and Fisheries, dated 24th ultimo, was duly considered, and I hasten to acquaint you with the conclusion arrived at by my colleagues and myself

In the first place, the right of the pilots, granted by law, to act in the river Saguenay is recognized.

Inquiry is made as to whether the pilots object to the Marine Department assuming control.

In answer to that question, it is a matter of serious doubt whether the shippers, agents, consignees, &c., would gain much by having to deal with a government, whoever they may be, in order to obtain, even in a general way, a thoroughly efficient pilotage service. In our humble opinion, the pilots should under no circumstances be the creatures of a government. What is required primarily from the sailor is a thorough knowledge of his craft, such as will render him altogether reliable. Now, where are these competent men to be found ? We hear it stated over and over again that the unlicensed pilots of the firm of Price & Co. have not met with serious accidents in the river Saguenay. That may be true ; but we should not lose sight of the fact that these men have had to pilot only sailing vessels drawn by a tug, the 'Thor,' under the command of an experienced sailor. Now, the trade on the Saguenay river is carried on mainly by steamboats. These unlicensed pilots, who have never been out at sea, who have never served as sailors, who cannot even use the compass, would not be of much use in any emergency, such as occurred in the case of the 'Mersey' or the 'Carolina,' &c. The Price men who act without a license are not liable in case of any accident, and do not come under the control of your board. We have already prepared a tariff, which was approved by your board, but it was pigeonholed at Ottawa. The members of the board respectfully suggest that the Department of Marine should place at the entrance of the Saguenay licensed pilots, known for their long experience of that river. There are, to say the least, about fifteen who are well qualified. As only two or three are required for that service, it is a very easy matter to attain the desired end. We have the pilot Boulanger, who keeps the Saguenay station, and who has already twenty-five years' experience and practice on that river. His ability cannot be denied by any one, and he has been requested more than once to replace those connected with the firm of Price & Co. See copy of letter attached as proof of this.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

I shall not read that letter, as it is not important.

Thus the corporation of pilots is prepared to enter into the following agreement : Two pilots, recognized as having a long experience on the river Saguenay, and whose ability nobody could deny, would have the exclusive charge of piloting vessels on that river. The licensed pilot Boulanger, who has already a practice of twenty-five years on that river, would train the pilots in turn for some time, in order to qualify them thoroughly, and put them in a position to replace later on those who would retire on account of old age or otherwise. The pilot Boulanger would, on board his yacht, survey the river from one end to the other, in all directions, with assistants, make soundings, and ascertain the best places for anchorage, &c.

No others but pilots appointed and salaried by the board of directors would have a right to pilot, or have a charge of any vessel on the river Saguenay.

Some coalers have been taken away from the pilots : but the company, be it said in passing, have lost more than they have gained owing to the great waste of time ; as might be easily shown. The pilots are anxious to retain the rights they enjoy under the law, and are especially desirous of showing that they are in a position to fully meet, in all respects, the requirements of the shipping trade.

I remain, sir,
Yours very truly,

LOUIS F. MORIN,
President of the Corporation of Pilots.

May I be allowed to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine, to the very wise suggestions contained in this memorandum. As this law is about to be passed, I wish the minister would defer its enforcement for some time in order to enable the pilots to put in practice what they suggest in this memorandum, and what will give to the trade and to the country as a whole all possible assurances as to safe navigation on the River Saguenay.

I hope that the hon. minister will consider my suggestions, which I submit in good faith, and though realizing the serious responsibility which rests on those who are entrusted with the safety of the travelling public on the rivers Saint Lawrence and Saguenay. But I must say that I would take exception to any discrimination being made as regards the River Saguenay, when the pilots are thus prepared to offer every guarantee with a view to ensuring public safety.

Mr. S. DELISLE (Portneuf). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the great majority of the pilots reside in the county of Portneuf, and for that reason, I take a particular interest in the legislation which is now introduced by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I must say that I do not know of a class more worthy of consideration than that of the pilots. They are leading and influential citizens, who qualify themselves by close application to carry on their work, and who, in the exercise of their functions, incur heavy responsibilities, since they are entrusted with the lives and property of individuals. When a pilot takes charge of a ship at Quebec or Montreal, he becomes responsible for the whole ship, for the lives of the passengers and crew, and for the rich cargo on board. It is obvious that a clear mind and great ability are required to lead safely ships of 10,000 tons, four or five hundred feet long through the channel, from Quebec to Montreal, a channel which is no where wide, and which, in places does not exceed 300 feet in breadth. It often occurs that the channel is only one or two feet deeper than the actual draught of the ship. So that the slightest sheering of the ship, the least mistake in steering, may bring about some fatal accident. Besides currents and winds are to be taken into account, and difficulties must be constantly overcome.

Mr. Speaker, if I make these observations on the life of the pilot, it is to show that all legislation relating to pilots and pilotage cannot be considered too seriously. The public should be protected by laws imposing on the pilots reasonable obligations; and on the other hand, the pilots should be duly protected when it comes to pass judgment on their conduct and liability.

The pilots in the province of Quebec are divided into two classes: Those who take charge of ships on the lower Saint Lawrence from Quebec to Pointe-au-Père, and those who do the same service between Quebec and Montreal. Those on the lower Saint Lawrence have long since secured the right of managing their own affairs, parliament having granted them an Act of incorporation.

The Bill under consideration refers to the pilots who are doing service between Quebec and Montreal. It is by far the most difficult part of the river. They have applied to parliament for an Act of incorporation, but that favour has been refused them. They have heretofore been under the control of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, and it is easy to understand, Sir, why that system has not given full satisfaction. That body is apt to change often, and is made up of members who are not all conversant with the art of navigation, and who, consequently, are not all qualified to lay down safe rules for the settlement of difficulties which may arise between the pilots and the steamship companies. I may add that several of the commissioners are directors of companies whose interests in some cases come in conflict with those of the pilots.

I am glad to see the Department of Marine assume the control of pilotage and of pilots, for several reasons, and the principal is that the change has been advocated by the pilots themselves. However, I venture to suggest a change which I consider essential; I think that two or three experienced pilots should be called upon to stay on duty, during the season of navigation, in the Department of Marine, here, in order to be in a position to supply the department with the necessary information and give them the benefit of their advice and their experience.

The government, in 1890, appointed a commission to inquire into matters relating to pilotage; and in going over the report of that commission, I find, at page 8, that the commissioners take the ground that in all questions concerning the pilots, their duly selected representatives should be heard.

At page 9 of the same report, I read the following:—

> As regards the grievances of pilots, set forth and detailed in the preceding pages, your commissioners beg to recommend the following:
>
> The pilots are not judged by a competent tribunal.
> We are of opinion that proceedings against pilots on account of accidents happening to ships when navigating the waters covered by the pilotage between Montreal and Quebec, under the care of pilots, should be taken before a maritime court, made up of three experts, one of whom would be appointed by the harbour commissioners, another by the pilots (although it may not be necessarily a pilot doing actual service between Montreal and Quebec), and the third appointed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But if later on an admiralty court was established in Montreal, then such proceedings should be taken before that judge, with the assistance of two nautical assessors.

That report of the pilotage commission contains, Sir, a fair statement of the position of the pilots, and some suggestions, which, I hope, will be given effect to by the department of Marine and Fisheries.

I entertain the hope that the interests of the pilots will be safeguarded and that the public will be benefited thereby.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Sir William Mulock) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 257) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (King's N.B.). Before this Bill is read a third time, there are one or two things to which I wish to call the attention of the House. Under the Bill, provision has been made for the promotion of, and increases of pay to certain clerks in the civil service; but other officials, namely, the officers of this House and certain others, have been singularly ignored. I wish to direct the attention of the Postmaster General to that fact.

For instance, the librarians of parliament, who are officers of parliament, who are not members of the civil service in the strict acceptation of the term, are to have their case attended to, while other officials of this House have been ignored. I do not think this is right, and I wish to call the attention of the promoter of the Bill to the fact. Officers who take precedence of deputy heads are left at their present salary, which is considerably below the salaries of the other gentlemen to whom I have referred. The clerk of this House, the clerk of the Senate, the clerk of the Privy Council, take precedence of deputy heads of departments. I understand that some provision is being made for the clerk of the Privy Council; his salary is being increased; but the salary of the clerk of this House has not been increased, nor have the salaries of the other officials of this House. As I pointed out when the Bill was in committee, the salaries of the officials of this House are very much less than those of the officials of the Senate, gentlemen who do not perform one-quarter and in some instances not one-tenth of the duty performed by the officials of this House of Commons. It seems to me that is a thing that should be remedied. If these gentlemen in the Senate are receiving too much, there should be some way of reducing their salaries. If they are receiving no more, and it is to be presumed that they are receiving no more than their services entitle them to receive, the honour and dignity of this House demands that its officials should be put on an equal footing with the officials of the other chamber. It seems to me that this is a matter of importance that ought to be considered, and that fair play and justice should be extended to all the officials in the service of the country. The same argument which the Postmaster General has used to justify an increase in the salaries of the officers who are affected by this Bill, can be used with equal force and effect in the case of the officers to whom I have referred. The office of clerk of this House is a very important position. It is necessary that the incumbent of that office should be possessed of very high qualifications. There is no position on the bench of this country that requires higher qualification in its incumbent than the clerk of this House. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to know that we have in the person of the gentleman who occupies that position today a worthy successor of the gentleman who so honourably and ably filled it in the past years. I see no reason why the clerk of this House should not receive equal consideration with the deputy heads of departments, particularly when the onerous duties he has to fulfil are considered—duties which are in excess of those performed by gentlemen who have already received consideration at the hands of this government. In saying this I am speaking for myself; I have had no consultation with any of my friends on this side of the House on this matter; but I believe I am voicing the sentiments of the greater proportion of them when I say that we are desirous of having the officials of this House and the officials of the country generally paid reasonable and proper salaries. We do not believe in cheese paring along these lines. We think there is extravagance in the public expenditures, but we do not think there is any extravagance in properly paying the officials in the service of the country. We should have good officials, and we should pay them good salaries. I hope the Postmaster General will take these matters into consideration, and refer this Bill back and have it so amended as to include all these officers from the highest to the lowest. From the messengers up, there should be an increase of pay. Even the 'Hansard' reporters should have an increase, this year at least, on account of the long session, which has been a great detriment to them.

Mr. S. HUGHES (Victoria). I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to an omission from the Bill of provision for the officers of the Militia Department who are not regarded as coming under the Superannuation Act or the Pension Act which applies to the militia. I do not know whether the minister's attention has been drawn to the matter or not, but I think, he should give it his consideration. Will he kindly look into it, or has he looked into it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the point raised by my hon. friend from King's, New Brunswick, (Mr. Fowler), no doubt the government have to plead guilty of the charge of being careful of the finances of the country in regard to increases of salary. I understand that we are accused of cheese paring. It is not an altogether unpardonable offence, although perhaps it is unwise to underpay any person. However, in accordance with the character which is assigned to us of being extremely careful in the administration of the public funds, we must go slowly even in dealing with salaries, because the expenditure on salaries is a very large item. My hon. friend will find that there is a measure before parliament dealing with the salaries of the librarians. Perhaps his absence from parliament accounts for that oversight.

Mr. FOWLER. I have attended this parliament more than the hon. gentleman has; and besides, I referred to what is proposed to be done for the librarians. The hon. gentleman must have been asleep, as he usually is when in this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the other point which the hon. gentleman raised, that this measure should embrace the employees of the two Houses, I may say that that question has been before this House and has been discussed; and I have already said that the government do not wish to interfere with the privileges of the two Houses. It is their privilege, we understand, to regulate the salaries of their officers, subject of course to the power, if the government choose to exercise it, of modifying or carrying out or not respecting their views. However, this is not a Bill dealing with the salaries of the officers of parliament; it is a Bill dealing with the salaries of those in the civil service. That is the reason that subject would not properly find a place in this Bill. As to the question raised by my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), that the Bill does not deal with the officers of the Militia Department, I would point out that the measure does not pretend to deal with the status or the salaries of all the officials of the government. It is less pretentious than that. It applies chiefly, almost exclusively, to those who are classified. There are some slight exceptions, as in the case of the outside service in the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments. The subject of the militia officers has not before been brought to the attention of the House, and it would be too late, I think, to reopen this question this session, if the measure now before the House awaiting its third reading is to become law this session. The subject is worthy of every consideration, and I have no doubt that my hon. friend having brought it to the attention of the House, it will in due time receive careful consideration.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for King's, New Brunswick (Mr. Fowler) with reference to the salaries of our public officials, and I cannot see why there should be any discrimination with reference to those who by chance do not come under this Bill. I refer particularly now to the clerk of the House. It is delicate for me to offer a remark in reference to that gentleman, he being in the chair. I may say I have known him for a number of years and consider that he is a very worthy successor to his predecessor; and in my opinion, although he does not come under the Civil Service Act, he and his staff should not be discriminated against as respects increase of salary but be given similar considerations as the others. I believe that my hon. friend the Postmaster General, who has charge of this Bill, has the same disposition as myself in this respect, and I hope that when the opportune time arrives he will look after the officials of this House and recognize their claims for services well rendered.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I concur in the remarks just made by my hon. friend and would like to have them apply to the assistant clerk of the House.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). I wish to endorse the remarks of the hon. member from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). The clerk of our House is well known to us all. He has been a member of parliament many years and is eminently well qualified to fill the responsible position he now holds. I would therefore urge on my hon. friend the Postmaster General that, in increasing the salaries of other civil servants, we should not leave out of sight the clerk of the House. My acquaintance with our worthy clerk has extended over forty years, and my experience of him is that he has creditably filled every position he has occupied and is most certainly, in his present position, the right man in the right place. He therefore should be treated as regards salary on an equality with other officials.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The other evening I drew attention to the fact that there were one or two classes in the outside service, concerning whom no provisions were made with regard to salary. I pointed out that the preventive officers in the Customs and Inland Revenue branches were not provided for. In reply the Postmaster General referred me to subsection 2 of section 37, but that only provides for their appointment without examination. It does not stipulate what their salaries will be. It seems to me that they are as much entitled to an increase, according to length of service and faithfulness in the discharge of their duties, as any other class.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). These are temporary officers not subject to examination, who can be removed at any moment.

Mr. SPROULE. But they are usually kept on permanently.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. These men may pass an examination and will then be subject for promotion, but at present they are not subject to any examination and they are not classified. I am simply following the custom which has been in force for years.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I did not quite apprehend the reason given by my hon. friend the Postmaster General why the salaries of the officers of the House have not been taken into consideration?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill before the House is one dealing with the civil service and not with the officers of the House of Commons and the Senate. It is the privilege of these two Houses to deal with the salaries of their officers and employees, and the government does not desire to encroach on that privilege. It is open to this House, through its committee, to bring up the question of salaries in a report presented to the House, and if that report should be adopted, of course the government would give proper respect to the decision of the House. No such procedure has been adopted and the government do not feel warranted in taking from the House that ancient privilege. The government are extremely pleased to hear the expressions of opinion on all sides as to the wisdom of the selection of the clerk of the House, which, I am positive, time will confirm. Although nothing is done on this occasion, the House will understand that the non-interference of the government is not to be regarded as in any way an indication that the government do not share the opinion of hon. members regarding the claims and merits of the gentleman selected for the high office of clerk of the House.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). As the Civil Service Bill must be the subject of the attention of the government at an early date, I would like to point out that in the commonwealth of Australia the officers of both Houses of parliament have been placed under the Civil Service Act and are treated in the same way as the other permanent employees. The reason which has been advanced by the Postmaster General may be a good one, but I might point out to him a recent instance where, under conditions very similar to those which prevail in this country, it has not been considered a sufficient reason, and the contrary course has been adopted ; the clerks of both houses in the commonwealth of Australia have been put under the civil service list and treated in the same way as the rest of the officers of the commonwealth. I should think that that was a proper course and I cannot see why the officers of this House and of the Senate should be treated differently from the officers of any other department, under the control of either the House or the executive. The same reasons apply for putting the officers of the House or Senate under the permanent list, for providing them with superannuation and the other advantages of permanency in the service that apply to the different departments of the service. I hope when the matter is again under consideration that the precedent which I have cited may receive the attention and consideration of the government.

Mr. E. HACKETT (West Prince). I desire to emphasize the remarks of the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler) as well as those of the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), that the servants of this House are deserving of the same consideration as any other branch of the civil service of Canada. The hon. gentlemen referred to the Clerk of the House, who has performed his duties in a very able manner ; he referred to the assistant clerk, to the messengers, to the pages ; we are all proud of them. But, Sir, there is one who is above and beyond all these in the importance of his duties, and that is yourself, Mr. Speaker, if I may refer to you. You have presided with the greatest dignity and with great ability over the deliberations of this House, and I trust that in considering matters of this kind, the government will take into consideration the right of the hon. the Speaker of this House to have an increase of salary. I say this, Mr. Speaker, with great delicacy and with great moderation ; but I cannot forget that during the three sessions that I have been in parliament you have presided over this House, not only with great ability but with great impartiality. We are proud of the fact that we have in Canada a young Frenchman who can take the Chair at the head of the House of Commons and ably preside over its deliberations, not only with tact but with firmness. When any of us have departed from the established rules of debate he has at all times been prompt to check us and to preserve the decorum of the House.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that it is not convenient for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be here to-day, and therefore I have arranged not to proceed with the motion respecting the Fast Atlantic Service, of which I gave notice last evening. I might say to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that I would like to proceed either on Saturday or on Wednesday. Believing that this session would have ended before this, I made an engagement for Monday, which will necessitate my absence on Monday and on Tuesday until ten o'clock in the evening ; therefore, I would be prepared to go on on Wednesday or on Saturday, as may be most convenient.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am exceedingly obliged to my hon. friend. I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who we all know has not very good health, is not able to be here to-day. But whether my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is absent or present, we will make it a point to give the hon. leader of the opposition an opportunity of moving this motion on Saturday.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I expect to have to leave on Saturday afternoon at four o'clock, I would like, if convenient, to have it fixed as early in the day as possible.

The PRIME MINISTER. We shall make it three o'clock.

SETTLERS' CLAIMS RE REBELLION OF 1885.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to bring to the attention of the government and of the House a matter which affects a large portion of the population of the community in which I reside, and which

I have the honour of representing in this House. I have had the honour of bringing this question before the House on other occasions, but up to the present time nothing has been done in the matter. I refer to the claims of a great many settlers in the Saskatchewan district arising out of the rebellion of 1885. After the rebellion, the government of the day appointed a claims commission who were sent up to the Saskatchewan district with the idea of settling the claims of the settlers for losses incurred in that rebellion. The government of that day, apparently in a fair spirit, saw fit to appoint on that commission a resident of the district who was well known in that part of the country. The commission was appointed on August 25th, 1885, and sat until January 6th, 1886, a period of 135 days. They brought in a report, which I have here, in which they recommended the payment of a certain number of claims. A short time after that, as the election of 1887 was coming on in the near future, and as there was a great deal of dissatisfaction with reference to the unsettled claims, the government saw fit to send the same commission to settle the balance of these claims. On March 15th, 1886, this commission resumed its labours and apparently was employed until August 9th, 1887. During the summer of 1886, this commission took evidence in a great many cases and reserved judgment as to what should be done in the matter of paying or not paying, and that is where the grievance comes in. One of these commissioners, a gentleman appointed from my district, came up to the Saskatchewan district in the fall previous to the election of 1887, and started to work as an agent in the interests of the government of the day. He attended public meetings and spoke at public meetings and worked among the people for nearly three months, until the election of March 15th, 1887.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Would the hon. gentleman give the name ?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Thomas McKay, now a member of the local legislature. He spoke at these meetings and canvassed and worked there until the election took place. At that time we had an open vote, and it was possible to know just how each elector voted. This gentleman, being in charge of the organization of the Conservative party in that district, was in a position to have access to the poll-books and everything of that kind and knew exactly how every man polled his vote at that election. When the election was over and the commission made its award, it was found that the gentlemen who had voted against the government of the day had received cold justice, while those who supported the government of the day were in some cases paid twice the amount that was legally due to them. The worst feature of the whole thing was—and I have the record under my hand—that during the three months that Mr. McKay canvassed and worked and addressed public meetings in the interest of the Conservative party, he was receiving from the Dominion government $15 a day as claims commissioner and $5 a day for living expenses, and in addition his travelling expenses from here to the scene of rebellion and back again.

Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it possible that justice could be rendered to these people in a case of that kind ? Here was a paid official of the Dominion government who was getting $20 a day as claims commissioner going up and attending political meetings, and after he had attended the meetings, after these people had refused to vote as he wanted them to, this man is authorized to sit as a judge on their claims ? Could they expect justice in a case of that kind ? They could not expect justice in a case of that kind ? They could not expect it, and they did not get it. These people have been agitating ever since, getting up petitions and sending letters, and they are not going to be satisfied until at least some steps are taken to investigate their grievance, and to see that the gross unfairness of the award of that commission has been rectified. Why, there are cases of men that we know of ourselves who were drawing $13,000 and $14,000 for losses of goods that one man could have carried on his back, while other men, bona fide settlers who did lose their all, got nothing or scarcely anything. I have all the reports here, the awards made, the amounts claimed, the amounts paid, and everything of that kind. I am not going into that, but I have briefly placed the facts before the House, and I would ask that some steps be taken to look into the mattter and see that these people get justice, because they certainly did not get justice at the hands of that commission; and every member on both sides of this House will agree with me that they could not expect to get justice from a gentleman who was paid $20 a day by the government for stumping up through Saskatchewan and who was afterwards sitting as a judge on the claims of these people.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me extraordinary that the hon. gentleman has sat in this House ever since he came here, and it is only at this late date that he brings this subject before parliament.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to draw attention to the fact that if the hon. gentleman goes through 'Hansard' he will find that I have brought the subject up several times in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. For several years there has not been a word from the hon. gentleman, but now he gets up, in the dying days of a long session, when it is expected there will be an election in the near future, and brings this subject to the attention of the House, without notice of any kind. Now, whether this Mr. McKay did or did not act as a political agent during that time, it is impossible for us to say, at least it is impossible for me to say.

Mr. DAVIS. I have made a speech here in parliament showing that the people in my district know well whether he acted as election agent or not, and here is a return from the department which goes to show that he was paid for the time during which he was acting as agent. I think the proof is absolutely clear that he did.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman, in my opinion, should have gone further, and he should have shown us from his records whether this gentleman did any work as a commissioner during that time, because if he had proven by the records which are in the possession of the department that he had not done any work at that time, then it might be assumed that he was acting only as a political agent, and was improperly paid for the time he was doing no work. But the hon. gentleman has not done that, and we are not in a position——

Mr. DAVIS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me for a moment I make this statement, if he wants to know, that for two or three months after this gentleman was appointed claims commissioner he acted as political agent of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan, that he spoke from platforms, and he canvassed, and he did everything that an organizer had to do in Saskatchewan and he was paid $20 and travelling expenses by the government of the day while he was doing all that.

Mr. POPE. Did he sit as a commissioner ?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly not.

Mr. POPE. Then sit down.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly he was not sitting on cases when he was electioneering.

Mr. SPROULE. Of course, we are obliged to accept the hon. gentleman's word, in the absence of any proof. I suspect, however, that if the records of the department were looked into it would be found that during the time the election campaign was going on he was acting as commissioner and not as a political agent, and doing his work as commissioner, and that from day to day.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that he is absolutely wrong. He was not in the district and I was.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, it is a very strange fact that for several years, he has said nothing about it, although this must have been known by the hon. gentleman, because he says he brought it to the attention of the House after the last election in 1900. Now, we are in 1903, and there has not been a single word heard from the hon. gentleman since his own friends were in power. They had it in their power to give redress, if redress was required. Why did they not attend to this ? They have remained all this time perfectly oblivious to the injustice done to these people, until we are supposedly upon the eve of a general election, and then he gets up and makes this plea and shows that nothing has been done for these poor people. It seems to me, to use the language of the street, a little too thin. It looks more like an election dodge than anything else.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman must not measure me from his own standpoint.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I have seen so many efforts from that hon. gentleman along the same lines that I can now catch on to them pretty rapidly. They are well known. Now, with regard to these claims having been often discussed in this House, from my personal remembrance they have not been discussed frequently, and in my judgment, there never was a single instance where a good case was made out where the government were not disposed to do justice. But if justice was not done while his own friends have been in power for the last nine years, and surely during that time——

The PRIME MINISTER. The time seems long to my hon. friend since he has been in opposition.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, nine years in the life of a government or in the life of a nation surely ought to be long enough to allow of these cases being brought to the attention of the government, and for them to do justice where injustice has been done. But the hon. member represented that constituency during all that time, and knew that injustice was done to these people—if his allegations be correct. Therefore, I say it is a strange fact that he has not secured justice for them during all this time that his own friends have been in control. They have done nothing but turn a deaf ear to his pleading ; so it does not seem to be exactly an appropriate time to bring it up now, but I suppose it answers the hon. gentleman's purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. Like provincial autonomy yesterday.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) is altogether astray in stating that my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has been tardy in bringing this question to the attention of the House and of the government. He has brought it more than once to the attention of the House, and he has brought it repeatedly to the atttention of the government. The circumstances with regard to these complaints are not new to me. I heard them when I was in opposition, and I have heard them since this government took office. The old government appointed a commission to look into the losses which had been experienced by a good many residents in the North-west, and they made compensation for those losses. I know that some parties complained that they had not been fairly dealt with by the commission. These complaints were brought to me several times when I was sitting on the other side of the House, and they have been brought to my attention since this government was formed —repeatedly brought to my attention by the present member for the Saskatchewan district (Mr. Davis). It is always difficult, however, to re-open a matter of this kind after it has been closed for so many years, and the government did not see their way clear to have a further investigation into the mattter. The only thing I can say is that the government will look into the matter, but I will not pledge myself to anything more than that at the present time.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker, the matter that has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), as has been stated by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), would indicate the expectation of an approaching election. That is the view I would take of it. When we see the way in which that hon. gentleman has attacked a gentleman outside of this House, and when we observe the method he has used in order to injure a gentleman, who, I understand, is spoken of as very likely to be his opponent, we can readily understand why he has brought this question so forcibly to the attention of the House. The hon. gentleman has been a supporter of this government for seven years, and if he was not able to use his influence to do something for the people, who, he claims, have been so badly treated, I think this little speech that he has made in this House will not have a tendency to further their case to any great extent. I would not expect any hon. member of this House to attack a man who has no opportunity of defending himself. Anything may be said in this House under the cover of the privilege of the House against a man outside of it.

Mr. DAVIS. I made this attack upon the public platform. Mr. McKay could have come to my meeting, but he took the other road and never came.

Mr. BOYD. The fact remains that if this gentleman has such a reputation as the hon. member for Saskatchewan would lead us to believe he is worthy of, it is a strange thing that he represents the people in the local assembly at Regina. Therefore, he cannot be so low in the estimation of his fellow citizens as the hon. gentleman would lead us to suppose he is. I can see pretty plainly what the intention of the hon. gentleman is, but if he is deceiving the people around Saskatchewan he is not deceiving the people around this House. I have had some experience in supporting a government and I always found that if I could not induce the government by my own personal persuasions, with the assistance of my friends, to do a certain thing, I was very much less likely to do it by getting up and making a stump speech in this House. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he bring his persuasive powers to bear upon the government, that he surround himself with the members from the North-west Territories, who are not backward in expressing their opinions, have an interview with the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and see if he cannot induce him to give a promise, and thus by his actions, which should speak much louder than his words in this House, show to the people of Saskatchewan that he is succeeding in doing something for their benefit, instead of getting up and attacking a gentleman outside of this House who has no opportunity of defending himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) that if he desires to have a matter of this kind intelligently discussed he should give some notice to the House, as I have no doubt he has given notice to the government, of his intention to bring it up. It is obvious that he could not have expected any very great benefit from the discussion, otherwise he would have adopted the course that is usual. I do not know whether we have really gathered very much of importance from my hon. friend's remarks, except a suggestion that my hon. friend's presence on the platform terrified Mr. McKay so much as to deter him from going near him.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is going a little astray in that statement. I was charged by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) with having attacked in this House a gentleman who did not have an opportunity of defending himself, and I stated that I had made the same attack on the platform, in the district where the parties were interested, and that Mr. McKay knew that I was going to do it, and that Mr. McKay did not turn up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman said that Mr. McKay immediately took the other road.

Mr. DAVIS. He was not there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He was not only supposed to have run away from the meeting, but to have immediately taken the most rapid means of transportation in an opposite direction, so that he might not be within range of my hon. friend's eloquence.

Mr. DAVIS. He has been within range of it more than once.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think he has not suffered from it. I am reminded of the fact that my hon. friend has sometimes had his suspectibilities wounded by attacks made upon gentlemen outside of this House. I think I have seen him displaying a great deal of feeling about references which have been made to officials of this government in the Yukon and elsewhere. But, in the remarks which my hon. friend has made to-day he seems to have entirely overlooked the considerations which influenced him at such times.

Mr. DAVIS. This gentleman is not an official ; he is a public man.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He is a public man, but my hon. friend has made the deliberate charge against this gentleman——

Mr. DAVIS. Which I am prepared to prove to this House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)—that he corruptly denied justice to these people. He said that being in receipt of some remuneration from the Conservative government, the people of the territory could not expect justice from him, and that they did not get it. This is a charge of a deliberate and corrupt denial of justice. Whether my hon. friend has proved it or not outside of this House it hardly seems to me to be a very courteous course to make the charge under the circumstances under which he has made it here. If there has been a corrupt denial of justice, it seems to me that it would have been the duty of this government upon coming into office, in 1896, to have investigated this matter, and I am surprised that my hon. friend, during the last seven years, has not brought it to the attention of the House in a more forcible way than he has to-day. There is no statute of limitations against a corrupt denial of justice, and if that has taken place it is a matter than should have been investigated long ago.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of supply.

Amount required for additional building at Banff, N.W.T., $10,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. At the National Park at Banff, we have several buildings which have been in existence for some years and which enable visitors to have the benefits of the mineral waters. This vote is to build a bath house to replace that which was destroyed by fire last spring.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any revenue derived from it ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, there is a fee charged to visitors, but I do not think the revenue is sufficient to maintain it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think that a very excellent bath-house could be built for a smaller sum.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have the report of the resident engineer at Calgary, and I see that it includes a cottage for the caretaker.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman was recently rather horrified at the idea of the government owning hotels and sending agents to canvas for freight throughout the country, but he seems to have no objection to the government undertaking to operate a bath-house. Will the right hon. gentleman point out the difference between the government operating an hotel and their operating a bath-house ?

Mr. COCHRANE. The bath is to wash away their iniquities.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is any difference between the government operating a bath-house and a government operating an hotel, I would like my right hon. friend to explain.

The PRIME MINISTER. I can only explain that we do not go into this undertaking for business purposes ; it is simply an expensive luxury.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I suppose it is on the principle that as you own the bath you must have a house over it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Is this building to be erected adjacent to the basin ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The bath-house itself is to be a special building.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the salary of the caretaker ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot tell what his salary is, but he has no revenue outside of it.

Mr. FOWLER. Has he any duties in addition to attending to the bath ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes ; the caretaker, Mr. Douglas, has a general supervision of the whole park and of the public buildings which we have there. What I would consider one of the most important of his duties is that he takes care of the animals. We have a valuable herd of buffalo, which now numbers forty head, and which is steadily increasing I am glad to say. We have some moose and some wapita, and he looks after these.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is this building to be erected by contract, and will it be given to the lowest tenderer ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a question which might be asked the Minister of Public Works, but I should think he will answer in the affirmative, because it will cost over $5,000, and that is the law.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will private circulars be sent around, or will it be advertised in the newspapers ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Not in the newspapers of Banff, but elsewhere.

Amount required for the expenses in connection with the Alaskan boundary commission, $140,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. $50,000 has been already voted, and this will make a total appropriation of $190,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How is the cost arrived at ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It will cost a large sum of money, because lawyers are expensive—my hon. friend belongs to the profession, and he knows that by experience. The class of lawyers we have had to employ must be paid high fees. Then we have had a very large staff in the preparation of the case, and my hon. friend will agree with me, if he has read the case, that it has been prepared with great care, and reflects credit on those who had charge of it. I do not yet know what will be the result of our efforts, but when the details are brought down I think it will be found that the money has been as economically expended as it could be.

Mr. FOWLER. There is no doubt that able counsel were selected on the Canadian side and that a good selection was made. I do not know that I am able to say so much for one, at least, of the commissioners, if the statements attributed to him have been correctly reported. I do not wish to say anything at this stage reflecting on this gentleman. I understand that he has made some sort of a denial of the report, but not such an absolute and emphatic denial as we would have expected. If that gentleman has been correctly reported, he certainly has given expression to very unwise utterances for a man occupying such a high judicial opinion. This is not a party question, and we do not want to make it a party question ; we are all alike interested that the honour and dignity of our country should be maintained to the highest degree. It is a matter of peculiar regret to me, as a member of the same profession to which that gentleman belongs, that the report should be sent broadcast through the world that he should so far forget his duties and responsibilities as a member of that very high tribunal ; perhaps no higher tribunal has ever been created in the world of a judicial character than the tribunal of which that gentleman is a member. It is a most unfortunate incident if that gentleman is correctly reported.

The PRIME MINISTER. For my part, I do not believe that Mr. Aylesworth has given any such interview as that which has been reported. The misfortune is that such a report should ever have got into the press, but my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) is aware that it would not be the first time that false reports have been published in the press, attributing statements to public men, and which reports had not the slightest foundation in fact. Not later than yesterday I had to give the negation of no less a person than the Lord Chief Justice of England, who stated that a certain report made about him was a pure fabrication. The undue liberty that has been taken with the name of the Chief Justice of England may well have been taken also with the name of Mr. Aylesworth ; but I am sure that my hon. friend will readily believe that Mr. Aylesworth would be unable to so far forget himself and his duty to his profession as to be guilty of such an indiscretion as that. When a man has been at the bar the length of time that Mr. Aylesworth has, even though he has not attained Mr. Aylesworth's eminence in his profession, he would not so comment on a matter before the judges, especially when he is one of the judges himself. For my part, therefore, I absolutely discredit the report.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The only thing that would seem to lend some possible credence to what has been suggested in the press is that the report of the proceedings of Monday seem to have been cabled to London; and, while the government have a telegram from Lord Alverstone denying the interview with him, Mr. Aylesworth has not seen fit to send any contradiction. Perhaps I should not attach too much importance to that, because it may be that the telegram to the London newspapers has not been brought to his attention. If it had been, and if the interview was not as reported, it would have been a prudent and wise thing for Mr. Aylesworth to have followed the example of Lord Alverstone and sent a telegram to this government denying what I would call the impropriety of granting an interview of that character, with regard to a subject which is not only under the consideration of a tribunal of which he is a member, but which is also a matter of political controversy in the mother country at the present time. I would like to ask the government what the arrangements are with regard to the British counsel to represent Canada, Sir Robert Finlay and Sir Edward Carson. Are these counsel paid by the government of Canada, or are their services given ex-officio as law officers of the crown ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Sir Robert Finlay has been selected by the British government, and, so far as my memory serves me, he is to be paid by the British government itself. I do not think this would apply to Sir Edward Carson, who was selected by us to replace Mr. Blake, who unfortunately became ill and had to give up his position.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the cases and counter cases submitted on behalf of the two governments have been laid on the Table of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think they have.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a claim and a counter claim and a case and a counter case, and there are appendices to these documents, and I think a set of atlases which accompany the case and the counter case. It seems to me that it would be well to have these laid on the Table of the House, and also a print of the proceedings of the committee from day to day, if my right hon. friend has it, either during the present session, or in another session, so that they will be available for reference by the members of the House. I do not know whether it is proposed to print any portion of the proceedings of this committee for distribution among the members of the House or to form a part of the sessional papers. I think that matter might well be taken into consideration by the government, as sometimes it is not convenient to get them in any other way. For example, I do not know where one can get at the proceedings of the Behring Sea tribunal except by referring to the one set of the proceedings which is in the library.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware that the proceedings of the Behring Sea commission were ever printed by this parliament. The only edition of these proceedings, so far as my memory goes, was that issued by the committee itself, a copy of which is in the library. I will take care that all the proceedings of the present tribunal be laid before the House. They will be too voluminous to print, but a good selection of them will be made for future reference, and will be referred to the committee on printing.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the Prime Minister had any communication from Mr. Aylesworth since these statements were made ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I have not had any.

Mr. FOWLER. That in itself would seem to lend some colour to this report. I am very loath to believe that a member of the bar, and so distinguished a member of the Canadian bar as Mr. Aylesworth, should make the statements which he is reported to have made. But the fact that these statements have been published, not only in the press of Canada but in the English press, must have called his attention to the fact of these statements having been circulated. Not only that, but I understand that a legal friend in Toronto, as soon as these statements appeared in the Canadian press, at once communicated them to him in England, assuming that they were not published there, so that a prompt and emphatic denial of them should be made by Mr. Aylesworth; and it has not been made. It seems to me that the First Minister should take some steps to ascertain from Mr. Aylesworth himself, by communicating with him, whether or not he made these statements. This matter concerns not only Mr. Aylesworth but the whole people of Canada, whose special representative he was on that committee. Therefore it does seem to me that we should at once, if the gentleman did make those statements, take some means of bestowing upon him censure for having so far forgotten himself.

The PRIME MINISTER. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to take the view of my hon. friend. My hon. friend himself, I think, would hesitate to take that view. He has been in public life for some years, and he knows that life is too short to give attention to everything that is published in the newspapers. If we were to do that, I suppose there would be nothing to do but to write items in the newspapers and give contradictions to them. I rather think that a man of Mr. Aylesworth's eminence knows his business, and knows it too well to have committed himself in that way.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not a case of ordinary misrepresentation—not that sort of misrepresentation which a man who is in public life is able to ignore. There is a class of misrepresentation which we do ignore. If we did not, we would be constantly defending ourselves from attacks which are unworthy of notice; but this is not a case of that character. I am loath to believe that these statements were ever made by Mr. Aylesworth but it was his duty, as representing Canada, to at once disclaim having made any such statements. Lord Alverstone considered the matter of sufficient importance to wire the right hon. the First Minister denying that he had ever said anything which would lead Mr. Aylesworth or anybody else to the conclusion that he proposed to sacrifice Canada on behalf of the United States. If Lord Alverstone deemed it necessary to send such a denial, was it not more important that Mr. Aylesworth should also send a disclaimer ? Nothing having been heard from Mr. Aylesworth would lead one to conclude that there might be only too much truth in the report. I am loath to believe it, because Mr. Aylesworth is a distinguished Canadian, and because I am an humble member of the same profession to which he belongs. But I cannot understand his silence

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can well understand the silence of Mr. Aylesworth. If he has any duty to perform at present it is to take no notice of the wild rumours published by the reporters in London. It is his only duty to stand by his own country and try to convince his fellow commissioners that our contention is right.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a reflection on Lord Alverstone, who is a much more distinguished man.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He referred to the matter because it was brought up in the House of Commons in England.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The telegram which was sent referred to the discussion in the House of Commons, not only with regard to Mr. Aylesworth, but to Lord Alverstone.

Mr. GOURLEY. These unfortunate telegrams give rise to the necessity for his House to question whether we have pursued a wise policy in giving $15,000 a year for our Canadian press service. The Yankee service is bad, but if it is always twisted it is clear. There is some sense in its telegrams. They have a Yankee colouring but are intelligible. Since we have had this new service, I have read with utter disgust the nonsense that is telegraphed—utter and absolute nonsense, and I was in no particular surprised that this despatch relating to Lord Alverstone and Mr. Aylesworth should have been sent. At the same time I think that Lord Alverstone did the correct thing. It would be very extraordinary indeed that a British chief justice, acting in a very high capacity, would say the things attributed to Lord Alverstone. However, while members of the House of Commons would not believe it, other people, who have not the same training, possibly would.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some members of the House of Commons seem to be the only ones who want to believe it.

Mr. GOURLEY. Undoubtedly there are hundreds of thousands in Canada who believe it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. Only a few members want to believe it, and nobody outside.

Mr. GOURLEY. There are many people in the United States who believe it. The chief justice did the correct thing. When this statement was given world-wide publicity there was no other course for him to take than the one he did. Mr. Aylesworth should follow his example more particularly because there was considerable circumstantiality in the nonsense attributed to him. It was circumstantial in every particular. While I regard the despatch as utterly unfounded, still I was amazed at the circumstantiality which the correspondent put into it. In ordinary matters, no doubt, Mr. Aylesworth's course would be the correct one, but this is not an ordinary matter. It involves national relations. The thing is world-wide, and it seems to me that the right hon. the First Minister would be well advised to suggest to Mr. Aylesworth to make a contradiction in equally wide terms as that of Lord Alverstone. I regard this Alaska boundary question as of great consequence to the future welfare of Canada and the British empire. If anything untoward or anything which would give rise to a suspicion of unfairness should occur, it will shake the confidence of the Canadian people in British jurists, diplomatists and statesmen for all time. Therefore I would like these men to put themselves right in the eyes of the public, in order that there should be no feeling of any kind in Canada, previous to the making of the award, which might lead to a charge of impropriety afterwards. Parliament voted $15,000 for a press association service, so that we are in a measure responsible for the cablegrams we get from England and ought to exercise control, and the man who sent that stuff should be summarily dismissed. He is not fit to be out of a lunatic asylum.

The PRIME MINISTER. I should certainly not feel inclined to follow the suggestion that I should wire Mr. Aylesworth for a denial of the words attributed to him. I want hon. gentlemen sitting here to remember that we should have some regard to what is the duty and the character of a public man. Public men to-day on whatever side of politics are simply the victims of the mad craving for sensational articles which characterizes modern journalism.

Mr. GOURLEY. I believe that.

The PRIME MINISTER. For my part, I refuse steadily to deny things attributed to me without foundation. A year ago when I left New York for England, I found that the New York papers were filled with interviews attributed to me with regard to the Alaska boundary, whereas, as a matter of fact, I always denied every interviewer who called on me. As I came on deck, these men waylaid me without any shame and asked me to give them an interview. And, although I said I would not be interviewed, still interviews with me were published. I would not take the trouble to deny such things. They were not true. It is time that public men should not be held responsible except for what they utter themselves otherwise some time or other they will have to take this position. They will have to deny responsibility for anything attributed to them in the papers unless it bears such a character as makes it sure it comes from them. The chief justice, in my opinion, in the abundance of his caution, went out of his way to deny the statement attributed to him. Nobody thinks more of him because of that denial; no one would have thought the less of him if he had not made it. Nobody would have thought him capable of such an indiscretion. He thought it worth while no doubt to make a denial because there had been persistent statements in the American press to the effect that he was going to give away the case. Even the Canadian papers have been indiscreet enough to repeat such statements which have been continually in the American press the last two months. Perhaps on that account he thought he should at once take this opportunity of nailing down such a calumny, but he had no call to do so for everybody knows the statement was false.

Mr. POPE. The right hon. the Prime Minister has said that no one believes Lord Alverstone was going to give away our case. He must have forgotten his Canadian history. He must have forgotten that practically every Canadian case was given away, and there is a very strong suspicion——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). What about the fishery award ?

Mr. POPE. In nearly all cases. My hon. friend knows his history as well as I do, because he began reading it a long time before I did. That is a fact, and when this appeared in the public press there was a great deal of anxiety in the minds of ordinary Canadian citizens far and wide, and it afforded pleasure to the people and showed great wisdom on his part that Lord Alverstone sent that message. Not that any one who knows Lord Alverstone, not that the Prime Minister of Canada or any citizen who really considers the position Lord Alverstone occupies, thinks that that message would make any difference in his decision, but if his decision were to be against Canada, it is fortunate that he sent that message, and if it is for Canada, it is fortunate he sent it, because it will help to allay that unfortunate feeling of unrest that exists in the minds of the public of Canada, when they think of the manner in which they have been used in the past in treaty matters.

At one o'clock, Committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When we rose at one o'clock, Mr. Chairman, we were discussing questions arising out of certain cablegrams respecting alleged utterances of Mr. Aylesworth. For my own part, I am still inclined to take the view that language of this kind could not be uttered by Mr. Aylesworth, although I appreciate the force of what has been said by some hon. gentlemen in this House that a little uncertainty is created by the fact that he has not followed the example of Lord Alverstone. I appreciate, of course, what my right hon. friend has said as to the impossibility of men in public life giving attention to every case in which they are misrepresented ; I have said twice during this session that any public man who would undertake to do that would not have much time for anything else. But a situation of this kind is a little out of the usual course. We are dealing with delicate international relations, and possibly it might be a case, in fact it is a case, where the rule to which my right hon. friend has referred might have been departed from by Mr. Aylesworth, if this telegram has been brought to his attention.

We must not, of course, overlook the fact that he possibly knows nothing about this telegram. Since we rose at one o'clock, I observe a telegram from London from which it appears that Lord Alverstone has made some reference to discussions in this House. The language of the telegram is as follows :

> Lord Chief Justice Alverstone in replying after referring to the death of Sir Michael Herbert, said that though the tribunal was not an illustration of arbitration it was 'an honest and patriotic attempt to solve by mutual discussion subjects which might become serious. I have no fault to find with anything that has been said and done. We have proceeded with great unanimity and I only wish that those who do not understand the motives of the tribunal would abstain from attributing motives to its members which do not exist.'
> This open reference to Canadian criticism of Lord Alverstone's supposed pre-disposition towards the American case caused no little sensation. It was followed by Lord Alvestone somewhat passionately declaring that in a long public career he had never objected to criticism after he had taken a certain course of action but he did bitterly resent criticism beforehand.

So far as this parliament is concerned—and the reference by Lord Alverstone seems to me to matters that have been mentioned in this parliament—I think that all the members of this House should agree with me that not the slightest attempt to criticise Lord Alverstone has been made here. The only reference to him was made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) who brought to the attention of the government a certain telegram which was sent out from a reputable source in London, and on being assured by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce that in his opinion no attention should be paid to a rumour of that kind, my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) made no further reference to the subject and accepted as absolutely satisfactory the view of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think it is perhaps right for us to say this lest there should be any impression in the mind of Lord Alverstone or any one else that there has been in this parliament the slightest suggestion of criticism upon any action which his Lordship has taken since he was appointed one of the commissioners to sit on this tribunal on behalf of Great Britain.

The PRIME MINISTER. I certainly endorse every word of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax). Nothing has been said which reflected in any way upon Lord Alverstone. For my own part, I still persist in believing that even the report which has just been read by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) of the remarks of Lord Alverstone have been highly coloured.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very likely.

The PRIME MINISTER. I repeat that I cannot believe Lord Alverstone could take offence at anything that has been said here.

Additional amount required to assist in defraying cost of the publication of documents issued by the Canadian Mining Institute, $2,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is a valuable publication to which for years past parliament has voted $1,000 annually. It is proposed this year to increase the appropriation by $2,000. The sum of $1,000 already placed in the main estimates for the fiscal year 1903-4, and this additional amount of $2,000 is to enable the Canadian Mining Institute to publish its transactions. The institute has now four hundred members scattered throughout the Dominion. The valuable contributions received for the members of that influential body have become so numerous that the income of the institute is not sufficient to cover the expenses connected with their publication. Canadian mining operations amounted to $70,000,000 last year, and the above sum is asked with a view to further promoting the mining interests of the country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask whether or not the proceedings of the institute are distributed ? Are they sent to members of parliament or to any public bodies ? It is a very desirable object, I believe, to assist this work, although the increase is a very substantial one. Possibly it would not be impossible to make some condition as to the distribution.

The PRIME MINISTER. Speaking under correction, but I am sure that I am right, I may say that these reports to which we are now contributing this sum are sent to all public libraries, and I think they are also sent abroad.

Amount required to cover expenses connected with land slide at Turtle Mountain, $8,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This grant is made necessary in order to undo the great damage which was caused by the flood at Frank. The House will remember that during the present session, I think it was in the month of May, in consequence of a very serious flood after great rains which took place at Dead Man's river, a part of Turtle mountain was thrown into the river, which accident threatened the collieries at Frank, and we had to send a force to that place in order to remove the debris and make a passage for the water. This is to cover that expenditure.

Additional amount required for expenses of the Assay office in British Columbia, $1,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a Dominion assay office at Vancouver, and the provincial authorities have established a provincial assay office at Victoria, which is maintained by a grant from the provincial legislature and by a fund subscribed by several citizens, and we are asked to subscribe $1,000 for the same purpose.

Geological Survey—to provide for the salary of one second-class clerk, $1,100.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the other items of this department were passed the other day I was asked for an explanation of this item and could not give it. It is to promote a junior second-class clerk to the second class. Instead of asking for an appropriation of $1,100 we only require $400, and I move to reduce the item by $700.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think I understood from the right hon. gentleman the other day that the real effect of this was to give an increase of $100.

The PRIME MINISTER. I was mistaken. It is an increase of $400.

Dominion Lands—chargeable to income—further amount required for salaries of the outside service, $10,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to provide for an increase in the outside service, and chiefly for clerical work in the different land offices in the North-west Territories. The clerical staff has to be increased on account of the great increase of work which has taken place in the various land offices. I was asked to give some information upon this subject the other day. During the first nine months of 1902 the number of free homestead entries was 15,983. For the same nine months of the present year the number of free homestead entries has risen to 36,882. The arrivals during the first nine months of 1902 were 68,802, and the arrivals during the first nine months of the present year were 108,014.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Last year I drew attention to the fact that a great many of the settlers coming in and taking up homesteads were unmarried men. You cannot force a man to marry, but you can encourage him to marry. I want to say that it is my opinion, based on careful observation, that a married man two years in that country is worth a single man half a dozen years

The PRIME MINISTER. So he is everywhere.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Much more so there than anywhere else, because in other localities the young fellows have an opportunity of brushing up, they are under the influence of women in the older settled districts more than they are in the remote regions of the North-west. I think the Prime Minister could do a good service to the country by giving a man his homestead after two years provided he is a married man, and making it five years if he is a single man.

Mr. McCREARY. Why does not my hon. friend go further, and say that spinsters may take up homesteads, the same as in the United States ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think that should be a law, too.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would go back to the practice in my own province and provide a free homestead for every man who has children.

Mr. POPE. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if there has been any provision made for the increase in the salary of Mr. Bennett at Strathcona ?

The PRIME MINISTER. There has been no increase.

Excise—salaries of officers and inspectors of excise, &c.—further amount required to provide increase in accordance with the proposed amendment, schedule B, Inland Revenue, Civil Service Act, $12,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) give us an explanation ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). Mr. Chairman, the main estimates were made up at the beginning of the year, and this sum is to meet the increases provided for by the Bill amending the Civil Service Act which was passed to-day. I propose, with the consent of the Committee, as four months of the current year have elapsed, to reduce the amount to $8,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Give us a list of the officials who have received the increases.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When the list was originally prepared provision was made for increases totalling $12,528.13. The collectors were to receive $2,205, the deputy collectors $1,467.50, accountants $460, special class excisemen $930, first-class excisemen $3,910.63, second-class excisemen $2,782.50, third-class excisemen $772.50. This money is divided by inland revenue districts as follows :

I ask that the amount shall be reduced from $12,000 to $8,000.

Mr. FOWLER. May I ask the hon. minister whether provision is made for raising the salary of his secretary ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. FOWLER. How many private secretaries has the hon. minister at the present time ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have one secretary—Mr. Bourgault. He will receive the same increase as the other officers of the inside service under the Bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Do I understand that the minister has only one private secretary, although the civil service list credits him with three ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is only one private secretary ; Mr. Bourgault, of St. Hyacinthe, at $600.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would the minister give me the names of those who received increases at Prescott, and their present salaries ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Subject to a deduction of one-third in the figures I give, the following are the increases : Mr. Keilty, collector, salary $1,600, increase $200. Mr. Gerald is a special officer and he will receive no increase. Mr. Melville, increase $100 ; Mr. Macdonald, increase $60 ; Mr. Keeler, increase $42.50. Mr. Johnston is asking for a superannuation, but he would be entitled to an increase of $30, and Mr. Marshall gets an increase of $30 also.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister give the increases in the office at Perth ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. McLenaghan, increase $70 ; Mr. Mason, increase $70 ; Mr. Goodman, increase $50.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are these increases given according to length of service, or on what are they based ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The increases of salary are based on the following plan : officers who have not yet reached the new minimum receive an increase that will bring their salaries up to that minimum as fixed by the new amendment to the Civil Service Act ; officers who have passed the new minimum and are receiving a regular increment of 5 per cent will receive an additional amount beyond that provided in the main estimates, which makes the annual increase 5 per cent on the new minimum.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is the present salary of Mr. Melville and Mr. Gerald ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Mr. Melville's present salary is $1,200, and Mr. Gerald's $1,600.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In so far as the increases of salary at Prescott are concerned, a more unfair proposition could not be submitted to this House. Personally, I am glad to see these officers getting an increase of salary, but here is Mr. Gerald, who has been in the department for twenty years and who is one of the best officers in the Dominion of Canada without doubt, and who has passed his civil service examination and he gets no increase, while Mr. Keilty, who is not capable of taking the position which Mr. Gerald occupies, gets an increase of $200. Mr. Melville, whom the minister only appointed a few days ago at a salary of $1,200, gets an increase of $100 per annum, and Mr. Gerald, who has been so long in the service, gets no increase. The best man in the service to-day is Mr. Gerald. He is the most competent man in the office. Working right alongside him is Mr. Macdonald, who gets an increase of $60, and Mr. Gerald gets none. The minister tries to get out of this by saying that Mr. Gerald is a special officer, but he has passed all examinations and he is the chief excise man there, and there is no question that he is one of the best men in the Dominion of Canad to-day. It may have been that Mr. Gerald's brother, who is the deputy minister, has hesitated in recommending an increase, but it is a most unfair thing that the other officers should get increases and that Mr. Gerald, who has been twenty years in the department, should get no increase. I do not object to these other gentlemen getting increases, and I am glad to see that they do, but there should be fair-play all round. While on this point, I wish to express regret that the Minister of Customs has not taken a vote to increase the salaries of his officers at Prescott, because they are all hard-working officials and they should have got increases. I appeal to the Minister of Inland Revenue, to add to this vote an increase of $200 for Mr. Gerald, and I may say that there is not a Liberal in the town of Prescott who would not recommend that being done.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am free to admit that Mr. Gerald is one of the best officers we have in the province of Ontario. He had an increase of $100 in his salary from the 1st of July, and he has received every year $150 of what we call duty pay in addition to his salary. Though Mr. Gerald is a very capable man, the law does not allow us to give him more. The list was prepared by the deputy of the department. He knows the law, and I am informed by him that we could not do better than we have done. With regard to the deputy collector, he is, of course, a new man ; but he has received the salary to which he is entitled under the law. There is a minimum, and maximum fixed, and it is the custom of the department to give a fair remuneration to the officers. These increases have been given in order to raise the minimum of each class as it is prescribed by the amended Act.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister is now leading us to believe that in giving the deputy collector this increase, he is doing what is fair all round. Why did he not deal with the officers entitled to an increase in the town of Prescott ? He had a deputy collector in the town of Prescott before he appointed the present one five or six days ago. Why was his salary not brought up to the salary of the present deputy collector ? This man is ahead of the other, so far as promotion is concerned; but the other was appointed to evade the Civil Service Act, and he has since passed the examination. One of these deputy collectors in the town of Prescott has received an increase of $100, though appointed less than a month ago, and has $1,300 per annum. Will the hon. minister explain why he discriminates between the two ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The hon. gentleman refers to Mr. White. He was appointed deputy collector class B. He has not passed his examination, and therefore it is not in our power to raise his salary. If I were to increase the salaries of all the deputy collectors in class B in one locality, I woud have to do the same all over the Dominion. I have tried to equalize the salaries as well as I could. It is no fault of the department if Mr. White had not taken the precaution to qualify himself. I have nothing to say against him ; he is a good officer ; but he is not in a position to perform the duties of deputy collector in class A, or those of Mr. Gerald.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When Mr. White was appointed two or three years ago, he was appointed deputy collector to evade the Civil Service Act, and at the present time he is filling the position of exciseman. In this way the law is evaded. Was the collector in class A when he was promoted ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, he was collector in class A, and he had passed the promotion examination.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In the list of increases which the hon. minister has read, is there any deputy collector in class B who has any increase?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, none.

Mr. FOWLER. I asked the minister a question respecting private secretaries. He stated that there was only one, Mr. Alphonse Bourgault. I see that the civil service list gives his name and two others, Napoleon Potvin and Robert Peter Yetts. Besides, I understand that the minister has an assistant secretary, Miss Chevrier, one of the famous Chevrier family who are so numerous in the civil service. Will the hon. minister say why he has these three private secretaries ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am not responsible for misprints. Mr. Alphonse Bourgault is my private secretary, but the others are messengers. Napoleon Potvin has never been my private secretary, and Mr. Yetts is a messenger. He has never been a private secretary.

Mr. FOWLER. It is strange that there should be any misprints. In the first place, I do not see why this office should require three messengers.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There were three in the department, and one was transferred to the laboratory branch.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman states that Mr. Johnston has applied for superannuation. Has that been granted yet ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, but I have prepared a recommendation for it at his own request.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Has any other gentleman been recommended for the position ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understood that another officer had applied for superannuation.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. Mr. Ferguson was superannuated at his own request about three months ago.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Has Mr. Bisset passed the examination ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, he is a temporary officer.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is he likely to hold that position permanently if he does not pass the examination ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. He has been told, like everybody else in the department who has not complied with the law, to present himself for examination in the month of November next.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Suppose he fails in the examination ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Then I suppose we shall have to keep him there for a certain time, and he will run his risk.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister is evading the Civil Service Act; and when I brought the fact to his attention, he tried to make out that there was nothing in it. He has appointed a man to that position who never passed the civil service examination and never will. The hon. minister admits that if he fails next November to pass, he will still be kept on. And if he should fail the following November, he will still be continued in office indefinitely. I have heard it discussed throughout the constituency that the hon. gentleman has agreed to appoint preventive officers and promote preventive officers to collectors without any examination whatever. That is unfair to those who have passed their examinations.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The hon. gentleman has gone a little too far. I have said already that there were two doors open by which appointments could be made without the applicants passing an examination. One is to appoint deputy collectors and the other temporary officers. These temporary officers are not appointed by Order in Council but by letter sent to the collector, telling him to employ a man temporarily at a stated salary. If my hon. friend is so anxious to have the law respected, he should go back some twenty years and he will find that almost every department had then and has still men who never passed their examination. This Mr. Bissell was appointed just the same as other temporary officers. He was not appointed to fill the position left vacant by Mr. Ferguson, but if he qualifies himself he will be entitled to take that position. If he does not do his duties properly or if he cannot pass the examination, he will have to resign; but if that rule be applied a great many officials, who are friends of the party opposite and who were appointed by them, would have to be dismissed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman asked me to go back twenty years, but we are dealing with the present, and I am not referring to any constituency but the one I represent. I challenge him to name one instance in the county of Grenville, while the Conservatives were in power, in which the law was evaded. What I am asking is not unfair. If he appoints any person to a vacant position and that person cannot pass the civil service examition, he ought to withdraw and give the place to someone who can pass it. The hon. minister proposes to let that man go on indefinitely, whether he passes or not. The hon. minister will have an Order in Council passed appointing the man as preventive officer. Will he say that if this man to whom I refer should fail in his examination, he will not continue in office ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If I were to apply the law the hon. gentleman would find it would hurt his own supporters more than anybody else. There are many gentlemen who support the party opposite who have been years in office but for one reason or another have never passed the examination; and if the hon. gentleman wants the rule to be applied to all departments he takes the responsibility of urging that perhaps 200 or more temporary officers, who have been in the service many years, will be dismissed. I am not not ready to say that there is one in the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman who has not complied with the law ; but should there be one, it would not be prudent, or in the interests of that gentleman, that we should bring his name forward, because he is exactly in the same position as many others who are not disturbed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister led us to believe that he was going to have a better staff and make improvements and have everything in better shape. Is it a sample of his improvements that he will appoint men to positions who cannot pass the examination ? Because that was done in the past is no excuse for doing it now. I understood from the hon. minister that he was going to stand by the Civil Service Act, and I think it is a very poor excuse to say that because his predecessors made appointments of this kind, he is going to continue the same thing. I am not asking for the dismissal of any officer who has been in the service for years, but I do not want him to appoint men on the staff whether they can pass the examination or not. There are plenty of men in my constituency who have passed the examination and who are just as good Liberals as the man you have appointed. If the hon. minister is going to continue a policy of this kind, there will be no object for young men to pass the civil service examination, because all they will need to get positions will be a recommendation from the Liberal committee, even if they cannot read or write.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Is the hon. gentleman able to give me the name of a man in Prescott who cannot sign his name ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not say that there was an officer in Prescott who could not write his name. I say that if any man in the county of Grenville can secure the recommendation of the Liberal committee to a vacancy in the Inland Revenue Department, whether he can write his name or not, the hon. minister will appoint him and evade the law.

To increase the salaries of the inspectors of distilleries, inspector of bonded factories, inspector of tobacco factories, and inspector of malt houses and breweries, not exceeding $300 in any one case, $1,200.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. As the Committee will see, no increase in salary was provided for the inspectors in the different divisions of the Dominion. We have eight of those divisions in the Dominion—one in British Columbia, one in Manitoba, three in Ontario, two in Quebec and one in the lower provinces. Before the position of assistant commissioner was abolished three years ago, the gentleman who held that position, the present deputy minister, acted at the same time as inspector of tobacco, manufactories, distilleries, breweries, &c. Since the positions of commissioner and assistant commissioner were abolished the duties of the deputy minister were such that he could not attend to the duties required from the inspector. Mr. Barrett, of Winnipeg, is inspector of breweries and malt houses ; Mr. Kenning, of Windsor, is inspector of distilleries ; Mr. Stratton is inspector of bonded factories. The inspector of tobacco factories has not yet been appointed, but he will be chosen from the best qualified district inspectors in the province of Quebec, and probably Mr. Lawlor will be appointed as such inspector. The jurisdiction of these inspectors will be over all Canada, and the increase will take effect from January or sooner. The present maximum salary of the inspectors is $2,500.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that these gentlemen are well provided for now with $2,500 and expenses. Why are the words added :

Not to exceed $300 in any one case ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We are not bound to give all of that increase in the same year, that will be the maximum of their salaries. We have among these gentlemen some who have not yet reached the present maximum of their salaries.

Mr. FOWLER. By this provision you are taking into the hands of the minister power to do just the thing to which objection has been taken, give increases on grounds of favouritism to men who have not fulfilled the conditions which, under the Act, entitles them to an increase. These increases should be statutory and should not be at the discretion of the minister, subject, I presume, to the recommendation of the deputy minister. I make no reflection upon the minister or his deputy. I assume that these gentlemen are the same as ordinary mortals, with the same infirmities, moved by the same impulses, and I say that you are putting that power into the hands of the minister of the deputy to discriminate between officers who may be equally worthy. It gives an opportunity for a great deal of unfairness, and should not be sanctioned.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. These officers, Mr. Kenning, Mr. Barrett, Mr. Stratton and Mr. Lawlor, are officers of long standing and capacity in the department.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not saying anything against the officers. I do not know anything about these gentlemen, I assume that they are worthy men.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I give this information, because some persons might suppose that undue favour was being shown to these officers. Mr. Lawlor has been in the service as collector at Montreal for fifteen or seventeen years. Last year he was promoted to the office of inspector, with a salary of $2,300, whereas he was only getting $2,200 as collector. The position of inspector may be transferred from one man to another man. The first gentleman appointed inspector was Mr. Gow. Some two years ago he retired and was superannuated, and was succeeded by Mr. Kenning who was collector at Windsor, and one of the oldest officers in the department. Mr. Stratton held a similar position for many years, as did also Mr. Barrett. When another man is appointed he will be entitled like these gentlemen to receive an additional $300. If any of these gentlemen were to retire or were to be replaced by some others, their salary would be reduced, because the salary is attached to the position and not to the person himself. This $300 is given to the gentlemen, whoever they are, who fulfil the duties of inspector of breweries, distilleries, tobacco manufactories and so forth.

Mr. FOWLER. If that be the case why does the hon. gentleman want power to make a distinction ? If the salary belongs to the office and not to the incumbent, why does he want to make a distinction ? You say these four men are to be selected from the eight officers who are now fulfilling certain duties. What additional service do these four men have to give in order to entitle them to receive an increase over the other four men who are left behind ? Is it because they are travelling inspectors that they require more salary ? That is a reason against it, because if you pay, this man's expenses, if he is travelling all the time you pay all his living expenses. He is not at the expense of living at home. If he were at home he would have to pay his own board. The person who remains at home really requires more salary than the officer who is constantly travelling. I can not see any justification in anything the minister has said in favour of this increase.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This practice has prevailed ever since I have been at the head of the department. These special inspectors will be chosen among the best officers, and we consider the best officers are those whose capacity and long training have fitted them for the first positions in the service, that is to say, district inspectors. Of course, there will be four men who will not benefit by this special allowance, but there has been no discrimination shown. I had to appoint two, Mr. Kennie and Mr. Lawlor, and they were chosen among the oldest officers on the staff. The other four will wait until these gentlemen disappear by death or otherwise. It may be said that it is not fair to choose between them. But we hold out an inducement for those who aspire to be district inspectors to qualify themselves to fulfil the duties of an inspector for a special industry. The hon. member must remember that these gentlemen must possess not only qualifications of a special character which enable them to fulfil the duties of inspector in their own division, but they must go all through the Dominion and inspect all these various manufactories, and inspect the books. There fore they must possess a technical knowledge. I do not see that there is any injustice in saying to these inspectors who are younger : Wait for a while until these gentlemen who are now your superiors disappear, and then, if the same salary is still provided by parliament, you will have your opportunity of rising and getting the $300 additional. This $300 is only a small reward for those who receive no increase of salary. I find by looking at the schedule of salaries that the salaries of the inspectors have not been increased, they remain at $2,500, while the other officers, the collectors and deputy collectors, accountants and so forth, are receiving increases.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister says it is not the intention to give the salary to the man but to the position. Supposing the inspector of a distillery was removed and went back to his old position, then he would lose the additional salary which is attached to the former position.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. He would lose a portion of the $300.

Mr. FOWLER. If it be the case that the salary goes to the office and not to the individual, why should there be that discrimination between the positions ? Is not the position of inspector of distilleries as important as that of inspector of bonded factories, of tobacco factories, or malt houses and breweries ? Why, make any distinction between the positions in respect to salaries ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is no discrimination with regard to salaries. I have stated that we can do one thing or another. The intention is to give these gentlemen $300, and we ask for that amount, but we are not bound to give it. I have explained that there is no discrimination, that in the case of Mr. Lawlor, for instance, he is inspector of the largest and most important districts in the whole Dominion. He is the inspector, but, as he is a new officer, he is only receiving $2,300. I said that we proposed to give him $300, which would make his salary $2,600, and the other gentlemen would be entitled to the same amount of increase ; that is to say, $300.

Mr. FOWLER. Then you are giving the salary to the particular incumbent and not to the office, unless you give each one occupying the same position $300 also. If you give $250 or $200 to two officers and $300 to another and $100 to another, you are making a discrimination between the four positions. The individuality of the incumbent should make no difference if the salary attaches to the office and not to the officer. If a salary attaches to the office and not to the officer you should give each one of these positions the same increase. If it attaches to the officer, then it is another matter. In this case you are making a discrimination between these different officers.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That is not what I propose. I say that we are not bound to give $300 to all of them. We might begin at $100, or $200, or we might make it $300, but if one receives $100 the others will receive $100, and there will be no discrimination.

Mr. FOWLER. And no more ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. And no more.

Mr. FOWLER. That is satisfactory. The hon. minister did not say that before.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We cannot change the scale of salaries now paid to those officers who are occupying positions as inspectors. We do not propose to change the salaries of those who receive $2,500. I have taken the case of Mr. Lawlor, because he is only receiving $2,300, as he was recently appointed, and if we give $100, $200 or $300 to one, the other three will receive the same increase.

Mr. FOWLER. As the hon. minister has made that statement, as far as the division of the money is concerned, it is perfectly satisfactory. At the same time, I protest against the increase at all, because I do not think there should be an increase. I do not think the fact that they are travelling men should entitle them to an increase.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As far as Prescott is concerned, I would make one more appeal to the hon. minister. Mr. Keilty receives $1,300 and Mr. Gerald $1,500. The hon. minister states that Mr. Gerald is to receive $1,600 and that Mr. Keilty will receive $1,600. Mr. Gerald is a special officer, he has a large family to support, it is very expensive living there, and as I think he should have an increase I would be very glad if the hon. minister could see his way clear to give him one. We could pass it now. He is a special officer, and there is no reason why he should not get an increase with the rest. He is really the head of the staff at Prescott. He is the main officer there and he is entitled to a little increase. If the hon. minister would consent to give him an increase I do not think it would be unfair, and I think every officer in Prescott would be glad to see him get an increase with the rest. I hope the hon. minister will see his way clear to grant him an increase.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I regret that I cannot change the law, although I am ready to appreciate that Mr. Gerald is one of the best officers in the service. Mr. Gerald is entitled to a $100 increase from the 1st of July. He received it. Next year he will be entitled to $100 more and he will receive it. I cannot change the schedule of the Act.

Mr. TAYLOR. And he has $150 from another source.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes. I think he is entirely satisfied. My authority for speaking in that way, is that the gentleman who applies the law is a brother of Mr. Gerald, of Prescott.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am very sorry, but I understood that the law was such that in the case of a special officer the department could give him any salary they wished. I think, if the hon. minister could see his way clear to evade the law in other instances, he could have seen his way clear to have got around it in this case.

Mr. HACKETT. What salary has Mr. Nash, the inspector of Inland Revenue in Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. One thousand two hundred dollars, and he will receive $60 of an increase according to the amended schedule that forms part of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire to bring to the notice of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue the fact that I spoke to him a few days ago in regard to the claim of Mr. O'Rielly, whose factory was burned and whose tobacco had to be supplied from the outside. Will the hon. minister state if Mr. O'Rielly is to be compensated ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am told by my deputy that this claim was discussed, and that there is no legal ground for entertaining the same.

Mr. HACKETT. There may be no legal grounds for it, but there are moral grounds. Mr. O'Rielly's tobacco factory was destroyed by fire after the place was stocked for the winter season. The hon. minister will find that the revenue derived from this factory this year was more than the previous year, and I trust that he will see that Mr. O'Rielly is compensated for the loss he sustained in the fire.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would not like to pass judgment on the case of Mr. O'Rielly. The facts are these : There was a certain quantity of tobacco destroyed by fire. I presume that this gentleman had some insurance on the premises and on the goods, but the law says that no refund can be made on goods destroyed by fire after the duty is paid. The goods were in store in Mr. O'Rielly's factory. They were destroyed, and we are not able, because the law prevents us, to give any refund to the gentleman. I presume this has been discussed somewhere, and although the department would be willing to help Mr. O'Rielly to the best of its ability, we cannot do it under the law as it is now.

Mr. HACKETT. Have you not already allowed Mr. O'Rielly a certain amount of compensation for this loss ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, but the cases are quite different. In one instance he was allowed to pass a free entry to cover goods destroyed in bond but when the goods have been entered and the duty paid we are not allowed to refund the money.

Mr. FOWLER. Were these goods destroyed in the bonded warehouse or in the factory ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. In his tobacco factory.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a bonded warehouse which is a part of each factory. Were these goods in that bonded warehouse or outside of the bonded warehouse in the factory ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If the goods are destroyed before duty is paid he has not to pay the duty ; but, when the goods were destroyed in his factory or warehouse as was the case in Prince Edward Island, they were his property and should have been insured.

Mr. FOWLER. They were not in the bonded warehouse ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. HACKETT.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in Canada—additional amount required for salaries (including pay for overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $100,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When the main estimates were under consideration I explained that the government would in future pay officers who are engaged for extra service at railway stations and such. This has been a charge on the transportation companies hitherto, and for many years past they have been representing that it should be a charge on the revenue of the Dominion.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister fully explained this before.

Mr. POPE. This vote is well worded when it speaks of working 'overtime' and the 'outside service.' Would it include the salary of H. L. Pelletier, who is employed in the customs house in Montreal, and who works overtime canvassing for 'Le Canada' ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is a gentleman named H. E. Pelletier in the Montreal office.

Mr. POPE. That is the gentleman. Does the minister know he is canvassing for 'Le Canada' in the country districts and that he has been spending some three weeks in the county of Chateauguay in that mission ? Would that come under the heading of 'overtime' or 'outside service'?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No. This is the first I have heard of that matter, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that Mr. Pelletier will not be paid out of this vote. I do not know whether Mr. Pelletier may have been doing some work during his holidays.

Mr. POPE. I understand that Mr. Latour, an officer of the Public Works Department, got six months leave of absence on account of ill health, his son taking his place, and that he is also an agent for 'Le Canada' through the province of Quebec. I have often heard the Minister of Customs in his eloquent and able and sometimes loud manner, denounce public officers for doing political work, and if Mr. Pelletier, who is drawing a salary from the government is canvassing for a political organ like 'Le Canada' will the Minister of Customs take his political head off and dismiss him?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know anything about the circumstances of the case, but they will be inquired into. He is a permanent officer and gets three weeks leave of absence.

Mr. POPE. When did he have his three weeks leave ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The collector arranges that, and we have no means of knowing. I do not think that the collector at Montreal would give Mr. Pelletier extra leave to go on a mission of that kind.

Mr. POPE. Do I understand that a permanent officer can devote himself to political work when he is on his holidays ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is canvassing for a newspaper 'political work' ?

Mr. POPE. Canvassing for a government party organ.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The interference of officials in politics is not favoured, but does canvassing for a regular established journal come under the head of political work ?

Mr. POPE. What is the opinion of the minister on that ? During the last seven years we have had a great many dismissals because some officers interfered but slightly in political matters, and there is no doubt that when a man is canvassing for a party organ he is probably making as much political capital as he can out of it. I know of no better introduction to a house for political work that the canvassing for a newspaper. I would like to know if the minister thinks this man has a right to do that work in his holidays ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would not like to express an opinion on what a man might or might not do in his holidays. As to a man being connected with a newspaper, I think complaints have been made of that in my department, and it has been recognized that we must not draw the line too strictly in that respect. As the hon. gentleman says he has done the work in his holidays, I would not like to say offhand that he had done wrong. I would like to inquire into the matter first.

Mr. POPE. Certainly, I would not ask the hon. minister to condemn him without inquiry. That he was canvassing there is no doubt. During his holidays he would be drawing his salary, as he is a permanent officer. Under these circumstances, how can the minister have any doubt as to his doing partisan work?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not putting it on the ground of partisan work. I am putting it on the ground that the hon. gentleman says he has been canvassing for subscriptions to a public journal. It seems to me that there is a distinction between a case of that kind and the case of an officer going out and canvassing to have votes cast for a political party. I think the hon. gentleman must see the distinction.

Mr. POPE. I would see a distinction if it were an ordinary magazine or paper that was not absolutely wrapped up in politics. But I think the minister must agree with me that a paper published as a mouthpiece of a political party is different. If a man takes that paper into his household, I think it is a pretty strong temptation for him to begin to canvass and talk politics for that paper. I think it is the strongest evidence that that gentleman has been working for a certain party through a certain journal ; and if it be found to be true that Mr. Pelletier was going through the country canvassing for 'Le Canada,' which is recognized in the province of Quebec as a political paper published in the interest of the Liberal party, the minister should tell us whether he considers that work political work or not, and whether he intends to investigate the case ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. All our papers, I suppose, might be called political papers, as they are supposed to represent the views of one party or the other. I do not want to say anything about the matter, as this is the first time that it has been brought to my notice; but the hon. gentleman having brought the matter up, I will ask the collector for a report upon it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Had not the hon. gentleman better allow this item to stand until he communicates with his officer in Montreal, and ascertain the facts ? My hon. friend says this man spent three weeks in Chateauguay county. If he has spent three weeks in every county in Quebec, he has used up all his holidays and more. The information is that he is travelling around the country doing this kind of work. The hon. minister had better ascertain when he took his leave of absence, to see whether it corresponds with the time that my hon. friend says he spent in the county of Chateauguay. Then, he brings up the case of Mr. Latour, an employee of the Public Works Department, who has been granted leave of absence and whose son has been put in his place, in order that he might become the head travelling agent for 'Le Canada.' It is said that he goes to every postmaster in the country and demands from him the names of all the subscribers to Conservative newspapers which go to that office and if the postmaster refuses to give the names, he threatens him with dismissal. The government gives this man six months' leave of absence to go out and do this work; and the hon. minister now wants this vote to give this man an extra allowance for doing this political work.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think my hon. friend is not serious in that. This vote has nothing to do with Mr. Pelletier. He is a regular officer on the Montreal staff, and is being paid out of appropriations already granted by parliament. As I have explained, the larger part of this vote is for the pay of extra officers who have previously been paid by the transportation companies.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is not Mr. Pelletier under the pay of the department?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. So this has nothing to do with the circumstance, because this vote does not appertain to his payment.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. His pay does not come out of this ; therefore, I think there would be no necessity of letting the item stand. I will make inquiries, and if he will bring the question up on concurrence, I will tell him then what I have learned about it. The estimates of the Department of Customs are generally prepared with that regard for economy which should meet the approval of the House, and they generally go through without any very disparaging comment.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is all very well to talk about the estimates being prepared with due regard to economy, but the hon. members on the back benches must laugh in their sleeves when they hear the ministers discourse in this strain. We were told by these gentlemen that they would not allow the civil servants to indulge in any active partisanship and they made that the excuse for dismissing a number of them without trial, yet here we have a case of an official going through the country doing party work, and when it is brought to the attention of the hon. minister he treats it very lightly. I should like very much to find one instance in which these hon. gentlemen opposite have kept their word. Here is a case of offensive partisanship, and I ask the hon. minister to treat it as the government did the cases of many Conservatives. They dismissed any number of officials, without even giving them an opportunity of defending themselves. Yet here is a flagrant case of political partisanship and they refuse to act. Here is an official who went around the country doing the political work of his party, and he is to be paid, not out of the pockets of hon. gentlemen opposite, but out of the revenues of the country. The farmers are bled white paying officials for running around doing work which the ministers ought to do themselves. We have the Minister of Customs now, a full fledged minister, although the party he supported said that the position he holds should not have been created, and that there were too many ministers. But no sooner did they secure office than they appointed more ministers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman who brought up the case is satisfied with the assurance that I have given that it was the first I heard of it and that I would inquire into it.

Mr. GOURLEY. I regret that I am not satisfied with the plea of the hon. minister. I would have thought that, from his long training in opposition, he would have had a very live mental apprehension of what political partisanship meant and would not have found it necessary to take time to ascertain whether a man who goes around canvassing for a political paper is a partisan or not. The hon. gentleman appears to be losing his mental intuition in these matters. I would regard it as a flagrant case of partisanship that an official should introduce among my electors a Liberal organ. What I find extraordinary is that the hon. minister could have any doubt about it. I would not mind an officer taking the stump for weeks during a violent political campaign because men's feelings are then aroused and you cannot then make a man change his political creed, but when you introduce, in times of peace, a political organ among the people, if it is intelligently written, you are introducing a very dangerous element against the party it is opposing, and I would regard the agent of that organ as a violent and a very astute political partisan. What I find extraordinary is that the minister should have any doubt.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is there in that $100,000 any increases in Prescott ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. The whole vote will be taken up with the payment of overtime and a little extra amount for the salaries of some officers we think are deserving.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand that many officers have been getting quite a little sum from the Canadian Pacific Railway for overtime at night. I think they average something between $30 and $40 which they divide amongst themselves. Has that been taken away now ? Does the government receive the revenue and then pay these officers ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will be paid by us and not the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway used to pay that sum to the collectors at the various ports who paid it to the officers for extra work. The House is now assuming the payment of these officers for overtime. We require the transportation companies still to pay something where we consider the work entirely for their own benefit. For instance we require the services of a customs officer outside of Canada at the request of the railway companies they are accommodating. They ask that for their own convenience. The Canadian Pacific Railway may ask for a Canadian customs officer at Boston, Portland or Chicago, because it is a convenience to parties passing over that road, and they can secure passengers by having that facility. We have officers in attendance on frontier highway bridges and ferries during certain seasons of the year, to be regulated by the collector, subject to the approval of the department, and then such other customs services of a special character or class as may be required on the approval of the minister himself and on the applications of the parties accommodated. When a company gets the services of an officer for its own special benefit and not for the benefit of Canada, we still require them to pay. In all other cases, if parliament consents to this vote, all extra services rendered by officers, which have hitherto been defrayed by the transportation companies, will be defrayed out of this vote.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I hope that the two officers who have been dividing the time and receiving about $40 a month will continue to receive that, either from the railway company or from the department. They are in receipt of small salaries, and that is quite an item to them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, that is the intention. In cases where officers' salaries have been supplemented by this extra service we will continue that, and they will be paid that amount, provided the hours of their day's duty before that has not been too long. We require the officers to give us the full day's time, and all services rendered after that will be paid for at 25 cents an hour. It may be that in some of the large ports which the commissioner has visited we may have to use some of this money to add an extra man or two, as it may be advisable to have night men, and we are asking for a little latitude in order that we may get this system into proper order.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is a collector of customs at a port supposed to be in his office a certain number of hours per day ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, certainly ; offices are generally open from nine till four ; but we require all our officers to be on duty from eight to six, if business calls for it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Customs tells us, in a somewhat soothing tone, that every one seems to be perfectly satisfied about the charge made with respect to Mr. Pelletier, but I hardly think we ought to be satisfied with the very vague remarks of my hon. friend with regard to that case. It seems to me a most extraordinary thing that an employee of the Department of Customs should, while drawing a salary from government, be engaged in canvassing for any newspaper, and I would think that my hon. friend himself would suggest that an item in his estimates referring to Mr. Pelletier should stand until an investigation had been held and definite and accurate information on the subject obtained and given to parliament and the people. My hon. friend seems to suggest that Mr. Pelletier had been canvassing while he was on a holiday. Would my hon. friend inform me whether or not this gentleman has any definite period for holidays ; and if so, at what season of the year ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, there is no definite three weeks in the year to which officers of the different ports are entitled. The collector arranges so that they may go away one by one, or two at a time, as he can spare them.

Mr. POPE. The hon. minister said that I was quite satisfied with what he said ; I am satisfied that he should investigate the question, and so far his reply was encouraging to me ; but I received no other information, and the balance of his reply gave me no satisfaction whatever. I still think that the minister should not permit such a violation of the proper conduct of an employee of his department. We know that many dismissals have taken place in the public service for alleged political actions by employees, and sometimes we can scarcely find a reason for dismissals that have taken place. Many of these men, some old and some young, have had to seek new ways for getting a living, and are suffering in consequence of either the high ideal of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, or of the meanest sort of political ambition. I think we are entitled to know on which of these principles such dismissals have taken place. Personally, while I do not believe in officers taking any part in politics, there have been instances in my own knowledge in which the government have gone a very long way in seeking a reason for the dismissal of employees. I think the hon. minister should hold an investigation in this case, and that we should know whether the government is going to permit the employees of the departments to use their energies, while they are receiving government pay, to canvass for political newspapers ; for we know that a man who thus sows the seeds of a particular political faith in families is doing the most telling work in promoting the interests of a party. The hon. gentleman would not like to be held to the statement that there is no election in sight. He is not himself yet positive whether or not there is an election in sight. He does not know whether the government can or can not afford to have an election in the near future. The ministers have vacillated in their opinions as to the holding of an election ever since we came here on March 12th. The man who goes about as a canvasser for a political paper is doing the real work of a political organizer.

I do not know what my hon. friend thinks of the work of a man who goes out on that business. Of course, it is not the work of a man who goes forth to buy votes. But I know of no better way of spending money, if you wish to prepare a constituency, than to see that the proper newspapers which preach your political doctrines are circulated among the people in the constituency. I am not alone in having discovered that. I think the Minister of Customs is possessed of that fact as well as I am. It is well known that every party makes a desperate effort to see that its own political organs take the place of others. Here we have a man going about for that purpose who is paid by the government—for I understand that Mr. Pelletier was in the permanent service—going about and asking the postmasters and others to give him a list of the people who get mail at their offices, and of those who take the opposition newspapers, in order to discourage the taking of the opposition papers and to encourage the taking of government organs. In my judgment this gentleman is doing most efficient political work. If he has been doing it he should be dismissed. I am satisfied the minister is going to investigate it. I wish I was going along with him, because I would be more certain how the investigation is going to be conducted. I trust he will make a complete investigation that will either clear Mr. Pelletier or put him where he belongs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know that any one has been dealt with by this government, certainly not in my own department, in a harsh way for doing nothing more serious than what the hon. gentleman alleges has been done in this case. The hon. gentleman surely would not ask me to pronounce judgment upon a man before he has been heard in his own defence. If there be something wrong in the matter—and I confess that canvassing for a great public journal, if he is doing it in his own time, is not a very serious matter—but if he has been guilty of any partisanship, he will be dealt with. Parties have been dealt with who had shown violent partisanship in using the power of their office in order to induce people to vote in an election. In my opinion a civil servant should abstain from anything like partisanship. But the hon. gentleman will allow that he should be heard in his own defence, he will allow that I ought to ask the collector at Montreal what the circumstances were. In cases of people dismissed from my own department for political reasons, there was in every instance an investigation, and when the report came it was dealt with. The rule was not stretched in any case in order to inculpate any one. It was more pleasing to me to find that there were reasons that might justify the retention of the accused officer. Simply because a man had perhaps inadvertently taken part in an election, did not appear to be sufficient reason for dismissing him. There have been cases where complaints were made that men were writing for the papers, and even editing papers, which the department were able to overlook when all the circumstances were inquired into. However, I recognize the fact that the hon. gentleman wished to bring this matter before the House and the public, and as it appears that there is another officer in another department against whom a charge is made, we might pass this item, and the subject can be brought up again. I am fully impressed with this case, and I will look into it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As relating to this subject, I may inform my hon. friend that a man in my own constituency, who was employed in the Department of Inland Revenue, was dismissed without investigation merely because he asked a question in a public meeting. I would consider that not a greater offence than canvassing for a public journal. It is desirable to have great public journals, of course, and those great journals can be conducted more economically if they are canvassed for by officers of the government. It is an advantage to the journal from its own standpoint, but from the standpoint of the public the arrangement might not be so advantageous as my hon. friend would seem inclined to regard it.

Mr. BELL. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to a matter which I may not have another opportunity of mentioning—a case in which the Bank of Nova Scotia was charged with the sum of $204 customs duty upon a safe which was made in Canada, exported to Newfoundland, and afterwards re-exported to Canada. The article was entirely of Canadian manufacture, but having been exported and having remained outside the country for a term exceeding three years, I think, upon its return to this country they were compelled to pay duty upon the whole of the original value. Possibly the minister has some remembrance of the case.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do remember it. I think it was out of the country more than three years, and the tariff law which parliament passed, and which we only administer, says that if goods the manufacture or produce of Canada are exported to a foreign country and return unimpaired and unaltered within three years, they may come in free. In this case the safe was more than three years out of the country, and parliament has passed a law which takes away from us the power to admit such an article free. In this case there was no desire to deal in an exceptional manner. Any one could have appealed to the treasury board, and if the appeal had been reported favourably upon by them and adopted by council, the duty could have been remitted. But as I say, the department only administers the law, parliament makes the law.

Mr. BELL. In this case it would appear that the safe which was in existence for a long time and which originally cost $680 was charged duty at the rate of 30 per cent upon the original value when it was returned to the country. It would appear as if it were a very extreme charge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was improved by the sea voyage.

Mr. BELL. I do not suppose that safes are like ale or beer that is supposed to be improved by a sea voyage or even like port wine which I understand occasionally is improved by a sea voyage. The safe went out of the country by sea and came back in a few years. I would suppose that there must be some authority or power in the Department of Customs to deal with such a case. I have been asked to bring it to the notice of the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It could only be dealt with in the way I have pointed out. It is beyond the power of the department to do it. All the department could do would be to submit a case to the treasury board of the Privy Council.

Mr. POPE. I want a little more information. I am sorry to be bothering the hon. minister but he is laying down the principle, in so far as I understand it, that he does not think it any violation of the privileges of a member of the civil service in his department, a man being paid in a public department, a permanent officer like Mr. Pelletier, or any other man, to engage in the circulation of newspapers. The hon. gentleman has no objection to his doing so. Do I understand that to be the hon. minister's view of the matter ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said that I was reserving judgment, until I knew the whole facts of the case.

Mr. POPE. I do not ask the hon. minister to judge the man. I have no positive evidence to produce before him. I recognize Mr. Pelletier's absolute right to be heard and to be dealt with most leniently, but providing that the hon. minister finds out that he has been employing himself in circulating the newspaper,' Le Canada,' I want to know whether the hon. minister thinks this is justifiable work ? In the hon. minister's department and throughout the country there are many political friends of my own and of others on this side of the House and if the hon. gentleman's friends have the right to circulate ' Le Canada ' our friends have the right to circulate some other papers. We are paying taxes and the hon. minister will realize that. Although we are not in power, although we are a minority as far as this House is concerned, I think, we have still our rights of citizenship. Hon. gentlemen are going forth now to prepare for an election which is going to take place at a more or less early date. I can understand that the supporters of the government as they return from different parts of the country after having visited their constituents are not very urgent for an early appeal and of course ministers of the Crown must listen to those people as they return from the different parts of Canada, they will not have any very great encouragement to give them to have an early election. However, circumstances must govern ministers irrespective of their supporters. Although they may imagine that they are making a very wonderful impression on the country, if circumstances compel an appeal to the people they will find that they have not made any impression at all. These are the conditions which the cabinet must deal with. The work is to be done. The distribution of party newspapers and literature is of great assistance in the organization of a party and I think the hon. minister should now decide that principle. He does not condemn Mr. Pelletier. If he has not been doing that work he is not punished by the hon. minister and if the hon. minister decides that he may do it he will not be punished. But, if he may do it at all the other officers in his department may also do it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I see that paper sometimes but I cannot read it as clearly as some others can. I judge that sometimes there are articles which favour the government but I do not wonder at that. But, to deal with the point that is put by the hon. gentleman, I think he is stretching the thing perhaps a little too far because he will remember that the Audit Act does not prohibit employees of the government from engaging in duties other than their own outside of office hours provided their salary is not over $1,000, and it is thus that you have civil servants outside of office hours engaging in the insurance business and in other kinds of work.

Mr. TAYLOR. What salary does Mr. Pelletier draw ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are not prevented from doing that by the Audit Act, and therefore, if this gentleman were, upon his own time, engaging in something which was remunerative, it would have to be considered. I think the hon. gentleman is pressing the point rather far when he says that a man shall not, during his holidays, engage in any other work. If the hon. gentleman wants my opinion as to whether an officer, paid out of public money and during the time of his service to the country, should engage in other work which interferes with his duties, of course, there is only one answer—he should not do it.

Mr. POPE. The question of salary does not arise at all. I know what the Audit Act is. A permanent officer is always under pay whether he has a holiday or not. His salary is always going on.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He cannot get his holiday unless the collector gives him permission. It is provided for under the statute, but I suppose the collectors try to oblige their officers. I suppose if this officer went upon his holidays and engaged in doing some other work he did it with the view of earning something beyond his salary not in the time of the government.

I do not know the facts but I suppose this official, during his holidays and upon his own time, has been endeavouring to supplement his salary and he may have been canvassing for other papers at the same time. But, as I said, I do not know anything about that. I do not think we need dwell upon the matter any longer. I cannot say anything more than I have said.

Mr. POPE. I am sorry the hon. minister has not seen fit to lay down some guiding principle in this matter, not that I expect him to get on his feet again because as he says perhaps we have discussed it enough. I have not much confidence in any investigation he is going to make. He has thought of one hundred and one excuses for Mr. Pelletier by which he can escape. He says that he may have been on his holidays and that he may have been canvassing for half a dozen papers. He should trot out one of these newspapers as evidence of the statement he makes. He has not, however, answered the question which I put to him.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the Audit Act prevents a man after office hours from going to a public meeting and making a speech or asking a question ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, the Audit Act would not come in then.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well then, why do you refer to it in connection with this gentleman ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was simply pointing out——

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, pointing out to evade the question. The hon. minister can not dismiss it with the bland smile which appears upon his countenance now. He never had that smile when he was in opposition ; he has assumed it since he got a big salary. I do not say that the Minister of Customs was particularly bad in dismissing Conservatives, and he may excuse himself because he has not been harsh, but he is part and parcel of the government that has been harsh, and he is responsible. I can tell him that the officials on the Murray canal were not accused of partisanship, but they were dismissed just because they voted Conservative in a gentlemanly fashion. I now want the few Conservatives who are left in the department to understand that they can go and canvass for 'La Patrie' or any other Tory paper.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. I had 'La Patrie' in my mind, but perhaps it is not a Conservative paper, it is 'Le Journal' I refer to. Is the principle laid down by the Minister of Customs that when a Conservative official is on his holidays, he can go and canvass for the 'Mail and Empire' or any other Tory paper ?

Hon. Mr. PATERSON.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do I understand that a Conservative official can canvass for the 'Mail and Empire,' and that he won't be dismissed ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If a gentleman like the member for Compton should report to me, that an officer in the public service was out canvassing for the 'Mail and Empire,' I would say that I would inquire into the matter.

Mr. COCHRANE. You would not dismiss him ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is very doubtful ; I have not dismissed many.

Mr. CLARKE. I was not present when the Minister of Customs gave an explanation with regard to the rights and immunities of public officials, after office hours. Do I understand that it is permissible for officers in the civil service, who do not receive a salary in excess of $1,000, to canvass for insurance, for example, after office hours or before office hours, or during their holidays ? I had a complaint made by a business concern in Toronto during the present session, that an officer in the civil service, was canvassing their customers against them for certain goods. I made a complaint to the department, because I thought that such conduct was not justified by the law. It would seem rather extraordinary that officials should be permitted to engage in outside business under such circumstances.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I dare say the hon. gentleman knows the Act as well as I do.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not, that is why I ask the question.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It does not forbid an officer who is in receipt of less than $1,000 a year from engaging in some work that does not interfere with his duties. If he is in receipt of $1,000 or over, it does absolutely prohibit him.

Mr. TAYLOR. What salary does Mr. Pelletier get ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. HACKETT. Why was Mr. James Currie, collector at Charlottetown, dismissed ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He was superannuated.

Mr. HACKETT. Why ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not remember, but I think it was on account of age.

Mr. HACKETT. That can not be possible, because the very same day that Mr. Currie was dismissed, a man of the same age was appointed in St. John, N.B. What is the explanation of that? Why was Mr. Geo. Conroy, sub-collector at Tignish dismissed?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have no recollection. When did that take place?

Mr. HACKETT. It took place immediately after the Grit government came to power.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That was a long time ago.

Mr. HACKETT. It is only about seven years ago, and we all have occasion to remember it with regret.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will look into the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was there an investigation in Mr. Conroy's case?

Mr. HACKETT. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. What did they dismiss him for?

Mr. HACKETT. Simply because he was a Conservative.

Miscellaneous—amount required to pay for services of Thomas Kilroy, acting customs officer at Windsor, Ont., 360 days ending March 29, 1894, at $1.50 per day, $540.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Kilroy was employed as a temporary empolyee at Windsor, prior to 1893, but at the close of that year his services were dispensed with, on the ground that the staff was sufficient without him. He was re-employed as temporary officer at that port during the months of March, February and April, 1893, by order of the then Controller of Customs, the Hon. N. C. Wallace. From the 1st of April, 1893, the collector of customs at Windsor was notified that Mr. Kilroy's services were to be discontinued, but it appears from an investigation made by Chief Inspector S. W. MacMichael, that the then collector, Mr. Geo. E. Martin, did not notify him of the action of the department. The chief inspector's report which is dated 17th of October, 1900, clearly says that Mr. Kilroy was actually on duty at the port of Windsor for 360 days after the collector was notified of the discontinuance of his employment. This case was exactly similar to that of Mr. Jas. Gibson, who was employed at the port of Windsor at the same time, under the same circumstances. Mr. Gibson's case was provided for in the supplementary estimates, 1901-2, but Mr. Kilroy's claim could not be disposed of then for the reason that the late collector at Windsor had during the time Mr. Kilroy was without pay from the department, paid out of his own money $691.04 for groceries and supplies to Mr. Kilroy, during the period covered by the claim.

Acting upon the advice of the Department of Justice, Mr. Kilroy, having made a petition of right to obtain payment for his services, the Department of Customs refused to ask parliament for a vote to pay the claim until such time as the late Mr. Martin's account had been properly adjusted. In the month of October, 1902, the executor of the estate of the late collector gave a release of all demands, discharging Mr. Kilroy from all claims; and on the same being submitted to the Department of Justice, they decided, in a letter of the 9th of May last, that the claim was one which the department might reasonably settle without reference to the courts. These are the circumstances of the case. The late collector sent word that he had dispensed with the services of these two men. The collector never notified them, and they went on and rendered the services for the whole year, and claimed that having rendered the services they should be paid. Parliament paid Mr. Gibson's claim two years ago, and Mr. Kilroy's claim would have been dealt with at the same time, but the collector had advanced him so much out of his own pocket and the department would not pay his claim until a settlement had been made with the collector. In May last he brought a release from the executors to the Department of Justice.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would it not have been fair to make the collector lose that money when he failed to give the notice?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The poor man is dead now and the matter is settled. However, these officers rendered the services and they claim that they should be paid. The mistake was on the collector's part.

Mr. HACKETT. I wish to ask why Mr. John P. Brennan was dismissed from his position as sub-collector at Alberton?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is some years ago, and I cannot remember what the cause was. No doubt it was deemed sufficient at the time.

Mr. HACKETT. It is not very many years ago. I regret that the hon. minister is not able to give me an explanation. I think the people of our province are bound to resent the action of the government in cutting off the heads of the best men because they are Conservatives and placing inferior men in their places.

Post Office Department—to transfer from the temporary to the permanent staff—nine messengers and packers, inside service, employed under the provisions of the amendment to the Post Office Act, 1902, $5,814.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Before we enter into the Post Office Department estimates, I want to know if now is the time for the hon. Postmaster General to give us some information with regard to the request of the accounting postmasters in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, as promised when these estimates would come before the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think this would be a very appropriate time for me to make the remarks which I intend to make in answer to my hon. friend's inquiry; but it is almost six o'clock, and perhaps it would be more convenient to pass this item, and I will make the explanation on the next item.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you a list of the gentlemen who are to be placed on the permanent staff ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The names are W. G. Smith, P. Green, A. Smith, P. Braceland, J. H. Jones, O. May, E. Butterworth, S. Dawson, P. S. Dodd. There are three messengers and six packers.

At six o'clock, Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

To pay provisional allowance at the rate of $10 per month to Mr. J. W. T. Dixon of the dead letter office, Winnipeg, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary, $120.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This officer is in Winnipeg and a provisional allowance is made to the officers of the department at Winnipeg. He is included in this. He is in the inside service but could not have the benefit of the provisional allowance except in this way. He has $400 per year. He was appointed temporary writer on the 1st of January, 1903, and was transferred to the Winnipeg dead letter office on the 13th of March, 1903. He was appointed to the inside service at Ottawa and was moved from Ottawa to Winnipeg.

Mr. POPE. Does the hon. gentleman not think that this sudden surprise will injure him ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think he will be able to stand it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Could nobody be found in Winnipeg to fill that office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Dead Letter Department is in the inside service. Until the last four or five years all dead letter matter was dealt with at Ottawa, but by the legislation of 1898 permission was granted to decentralize in order to save time, and dead letter branches of the main office at Ottawa were opened at Winnipeg and at other points remote from the centre here. But the officers appointed at the dead letter branch have always been men who have served here first and have become trained in the method.

To provide for eight additional junior second-class clerkships in the inside service, $5,800.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some years ago third-class clerkships were abolished and a large number of clerks entered the service as juniors in the capacity of temporary writers. Some sixty to seventy temporary clerks were appointed, some by the late and some by the present government, commencing at $400 and increasing at the rate of $30 per year. These are prizes which will be distributed wisely to those that are deserving.

Mr. TAYLOR. What salary do they start with ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The junior second clerks start with $600 and the maximum is $1,000. Under the Civil Service Bill which passed to-day, they will enter at $700 and the maximum is $1,100.

Mr. TAYLOR. $5,800 would give the eight clerks $725 each.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How many clerks are already employed in that office besides those six who are to be made permanent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The explanation of that $5,800 is this. There are some offices in connection with the international money-order branch who have a different status. It is intended to transfer them to the status of junior second class at the salary they now enjoy. There are five in that position and three new appointees at $600. The other five have gross salaries of $4,000. There are five transferred from one class to another and three new appointees. In fact this item is not large enough if the Civil Service Bill becomes law because the three new officers will begin at $700 and we are only providing for $600.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Were not these $4,000 voted in the main estimates ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That might be, but it would not be applicable to them under a technical construction of the vote. Money voted for the payment of the salary of a man filling one position is not available for the payment of the salary of that person if put in another position. These five were formerly engaged as clerks in connection with the money exchange office at Montreal. We had to make an international exchange at Montreal on account of our business with the United States. But owing to some changes being made in connection with our international business, those men are to be made junior second class clerks at their present salary. The money voted to pay them in their former position would not be available to pay them now, because the money is not voted to pay the individual as such but as the occupant of the office.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the hon. gentleman to fill the positions of those five ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the offices are abolished.

Mr. TAYLOR. A junior second-class clerk has been in the service for some time; he started at $600, and by statutory increases his salary has become $700 beginning on the 1st of July last. How will this Bill affect a junior second-class clerk who is in that position?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will not have any effect upon such officers, they will continue junior second-class clerks if they reach $700, which is the minimum, and at the expiration of each year they will be eligible to another increase of $50. A second-class clerk who, at the time this Bill goes into operation, is in receipt of a salary not less than the minimum is not affected by the Bill, except that when he reaches $1,000, the present maximum, he will still be eligible to go on to the $1,100.

Mr. POPE. I have been absent from the House for some time, and I am not conversant with the application of the Bill which has recently passed this House. I am interested in the welfare of the civil servants, and I would like to ask if by this Bill they will receive the annual increases which they were led to expect in joining the service? In many instances civil servants have not received these increases to the extent they were led to expect. I have in mind particularly some mail clerks who have served many years and who have not received their promotions from one class to another, nor the increases to which they are entitled. I would like to know if that would be remedied by this Bill?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend says that he is particularly interested in the welfare of the civil servants, and yet he was absent during the discussion of this Bill, which has now passed out of this House. I do not like to return to the discussion of a measure which has gone to the Senate. The Bill speaks for itself. I would remind the hon. gentleman that a measure which has been passed through this House and become law this session deals with the status of railway mail clerks, and I do not think he will find one railway mail clerk in Canada who will say he has been unjustly dealt with by the present government.

Mr. POPE. I am not speaking of the present government; I think I can find mail clerks who think they have not had the promotion to which their length of service entitled them and which they anticipated when they joined the service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The measure that passed in August last is of great advantage to the railway mail clerks of Canada, who have not hesitated to so express themselves. It has given them a much more satisfactory status than they ever before enjoyed, and they have expressed themselves to that effect in many ways to me.

Mr. CLARKE. How many officers of the service are eligible for promotion under this clause?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are sixty or seventy clerks who would be eligible. Others of these may be appointed from time to time if the number of junior seconds had increased.

Mr. CLARKE. You are now appointing three?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The hon. gentleman will remember that we have provided for the advancement of all these temporary clerks from the position they now occupy to be third-class clerks, and by the Bill which passed this House they can all be made third-class clerks, the minimum and maximum of which grade are $100 more than the minimum and maximum of the class to which they now belong.

Mr. CLARKE. Sixty or seventy are eligible for promotion to this junior second-class position, and the minister is now taking a vote to provide for eight additional junior second-class clerks. He has explained that five officers will be taken from the exchange branch at Montreal. Then there will be only three vacancies while sixty or seventy are eligible?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I told the hon. gentleman that it would be possible to appoint sixty or seventy. I suppose there are sixty or seventy temporary writers, and they have all passed a qualifying examination. I have stated that I trust that a liberal use will be made of the Bill which has passed this House in respect to these temporary writers. If that policy is adhered to, these temporary writers will receive a great advantage in being put into a class, the minimum and maximum of which are $100 more than that of the class to which they now belong.

To pay O. Higman for investigating the pneumatic tube service in the United States and reporting thereon, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $324.15.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The pneumatic tube service is a system that obtains in many cities of the United States for the rapid transmission of mail matter to different places in the city. It has been tried for some years in New York, Washington, Philadelphia and many other cities, and I hope that in the not distant future we will be able to adopt it in Canada. I sent Mr. Higman, who is an officer in the Inland Revenue Department, to the United States to examine and report upon this system, and he made a very valuable report, which will be useful when we come to consider the question of adopting the system to the Canadian post office.

Mr. POPE. Does the government expect to confer any advantage on the public by the adoption of that system?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing has been decided. The first step is to study the system and to consider whether it is applicable to Canada. I think that the report is a very valuable one. I have given some study to it, and I think that it might be usefully adopted for distributing mail matter in large cities. It affords a very excellent method of rapid delivery.

Mr. POPE. I suppose in a city like Montreal you would have a central office from which you would distribute the mail matter by this system. It does not mean that you are going to run a tube into every man's house.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The pneumatic tube system is this: You have underground steel pipes, perhaps 8 inches in diameter. In the United States they have three different sizes of 8, 10 and 12 inches in diameter. Then there is what is called a carrier which travels inside this tube, a cartridge shaped structure, perhaps 30 inches long, and as large as the tube will allow. This is filled with mail matter, closed up, and forced by pneumatic pressure from one place to another connected by the tube. The mail matter distributed by that system starts from the post office or from some central point, and thence is distributed throughout the city wherever the system reaches. Where the public thoroughfares are thronged with traffic which occasions delay in the transmission of mail matter by vehicles, this system is found to afford very rapid delivery.

Mr. POPE. It only carries mail matter from the central office to branch offices?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. POPE. It does not interfere with the ordinary mail carriers or distributors?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would not affect letter-carriers.

Mr. HACKETT. Over how great a distance would this pneumatic system be feasible?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid it would not go under the Straits. I think it would carry two or three miles. If you renewed the power at different points you might send it an indefinite distance, but I do not know how you would continue the pressure.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this the total cost of the investigation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the cost per mile?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say from memory. The cost of installation involves more than merely putting the pipe under ground. You have to have an engine, for instance, and in a large city like Toronto that would involve the acquisition of a site for operations, where you would need to build a station and an engine house. Then at other points there would need to be some more machinery.

To increase the salary of F. H. Smith, first-class clerk, to $1,750 from 1st July, 1903, and arrears from 1st July, 1901, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $150.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Smith was formerly assistant inspector at the Soo. He was transferred to the inside service on his former salary as an inspector. I think he was at the maximum of his class of assistant inspector. After a year or so it was suggested that he should be given a different status, and I made him a first-class clerk, and proposed to treat him as a first-class clerk from the time of his transfer, and that is the reason we are giving him this small increase. He is a very worthy officer indeed. He is a son of the late Postmaster General the Hon. Sydney Smith.

To provide for the appointment of an assistant post office inspector in the Vancouver division, $1,500.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That sum is to provide for the payment of Mr. J. R. N. Greenfield as first-class clerk, having a salary at the present time of $1,500 a year. He was appointed to the inside service here on the 1st of July, 1883. He was transferred to the post office inspector's office, Victoria, on the 6th of July, 1893. He was made first-class clerk on the 5th of October, 1894, and on the 19th of December, 1898, was transferred to the office of inspector at Vancouver. Formerly there was only one inspector for the province of British Columbia, stationed on the island at Victoria. That was found inconvenient, and I laid the foundation for the creation of another inspectorate at the city of Vancouver upon the mainland, and appointed Mr. Dormer to the office after he had been tried a while as to his qualifications. For a time he continued in Vancouver as first-class clerk, conducting his office as a branch of the Victoria office. But this involved delay, and it was deemed advisable to have an independent branch at Victoria, so he has been appointed an inspector. Mr. Greenfield is the chief clerk there. Mr. Greenfield is a most capable man and deserving of this promotion. He has been in the service for many years, he is thoroughly efficient and highly recommended as being well qualified for the position of an assistant inspector.

Mr. POPE. Have you only one inspector there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Only one on the mainland.

Mr. POPE. How many assistants?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the only assistant the inspector has in his office.

To provide for an additional senior class clerkship in the office of the post office inspector at Winnipeg, $900.

Mr. POPE. What is that for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is intended to promote Mr. E. R. A. Stevenson. He is a senior third-class clerk, and he has been at the maximum of his class since 1900. He was appointed on the 1st of July, 1887.

To provide for the appointment of the undermentioned temporary employees in city post offices as fourth-class clerks, from 1st July, 1903, at their present salaries, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary :

Montreal post office—C. Martin....	$	547
" " N. Nadou....		547
" " P. St. Jean		547
" " J. Lyons..		547
" " C. V. M. Murray..		547
" " J. A. Mayrand.. ..		547
Kingston post office—E. C. Hiscock.. ..		456
Winnipeg post office—N. Gouin..		580
		$4,318

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. By the Act of last August a new class, a class of fourth-class clerks, was created and these men occupying lower positions are now being placed on the permanent list as fourth-class clerks. They were temporaries before.

Increases of salary for post office inspectors, assistant post office inspectors and assistant post office inspectors and superintendents of the railway mail service, $2,950.

Mr. CLARKE. How is this money intended to be distributed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are increases authorized by the Act of last August and they go to various officers in the service, as follows :

Inspectors.—N. R. Colter, St. John ; A. Bolduc, Quebec ; J. W. Bain, Montreal ; F. Hawken, Ottawa ; J. Henderson, Toronto ; H. G. Hopkirk, London ; E. H. Fletcher, Victoria ; W. H. Dorman, Vancouver.

Assistant Inspectors.—D. Stewart and A. Costley, Halifax ; W. C. Whittaker, St. John ; S. T. Green, Quebec ; D. Nelligan and J. P. Chillas, Montreal ; C. P. LeSueur and J. Chamard, Ottawa ; P. H. Macarow, Kingston ; C. E. Fisher and D. Maloney, London ; A. W. Cairns and H. H. Phinney, Winnipeg.

Superintendents of the Railway Mail Service.—F. B. Bent, Hailfax ; G. M. Ryan, St. John ; O. Talbot, Quebec ; F. Briegel, Montreal ; C. Plumb, Ottawa ; J. E. McLeod, Toronto ; A. G. McWhinney, London ; C. E. Kavanagh, Winnipeg ; and J. Ó. McLeod, Vancouver.

They come in automatically under the measure.

Mr. HACKETT. Before this item is declared carried, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has heard from Prince Edward Island in regard to the illness of the Hon. Mr. Brecken, who is inspector there ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I am extremely sorry to say that it is worse than a case of illness. Mr. Brecken died this morning. At least I received a despatch early this morning announcing his death. Mr. Brecken was at one time a member of this House, and there are some present who will remember him. I am sure they have a very kindly recollection of him. He proved himself an admirable officer, faithful and efficient, and the country has lost a capable officer in the death of Mr. Brecken.

To provide for increases of $50 each to fourth-class clerks recently promoted from the class of stampers and sorters, such increases to date from the times when they would respectively become entitled to increases if they had remained in their former class, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary, $3,950.

Mr. POPE. Before we proceed with this item, as I see we are approaching the close of the supplementary estimates, if there is not another leaf to be attached which is not already down—possibly there may be—I would like to bring a question to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General in connection with certain reports which have come to me, I think fairly well-founded, that a Mr. Latour who was Postmaster in the Public Works Department in Ottawa, owing to ill-health, has received six months leave of absence. Is that correct ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I really do not know.

Mr. POPE. And that he has been replaced by his son, which is a matter of indifference to me. Whether he has been replaced by his son or by the son of some other son, does not make any particular difference to me. But, I understand that this gentleman has had a six months leave of absence. I suppose that would imply that his salary is continued ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I made some inquiry in my department, and I find we never had an officer of that name in the department.

Mr. POPE. He is postmaster of the Public Works Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not inquired throughout the service, but we never had an officer of that name in the Post Office Department. Thou canst not shake thy gory locks at me. Thou canst not say I did it.

Mr. POPE. I suppose that when a man was a postmaster he was connected with the postal service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, we have no such officer.

Mr. POPE. Do you mean to say that I will have to turn my attention to the hon. Minister of Public Works ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I heard the hon. gentleman say before six o'clock that he thought this officer was in my department and my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Customs desired to transfer the discussion to me. I made inquiry in the department, and I find that we have no such officer.

Mr. POPE. I am making the usual effort of gentlemen who are dealing with the government, and they are shifting from one position to another. The hon. Minister of Customs, the head of the collecting department of this government, this afternoon referred me to the hon. Postmaster General. But, of course, he did not know what he was talking about. I thought he did not know this afternoon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You should not let him escape.

Mr. POPE. I did not like to let him escape but he assured me he was not smiling and consequently I considered he might be serious when he said that when the hon. Postmaster General's estimates came up, I would have an opportunity of discussing the matter. However, the question I have to raise is that a public officer of the government has been granted leave of absence and is now in the employ of 'Le Canada,' newspaper, which is the leading Liberal organ in Quebec, and is travelling through that province being the head agent of that Liberal organ, seeking subscriptions for it. More than that, he is going about through the various post offices which do come under, I presume, the hon. Postmaster General. We find that he goes to the postmasters where he thinks he can frighten and control them and asks them to furnish him with a list of people who receive at these offices papers that are favourable in their editorial departments to the opposition members of this House.

Does the Postmaster General think it right that any government official should be guilty of such conduct? I have this information from a source which I do not feel at liberty to use, but it is a source from which the Postmaster General has no doubt got information, and I think he would acknowledge it as a reliable source. I do not think that the Postmaster General would take the same view, outside the cabinet of course, as his colleague the Minister of Customs, who stated this afternoon that it was not partisan work to disseminate the seeds of Liberalism by canvassing for a Liberal party organ. I look upon it as partisanship of the highest order, for there is nothing which can so much redound to the benefit of a political party as that the faithful should read daily the organ of that party. Seven years ago the Prime Minister decided that any official guilty of partisan conduct should leave the service. What is he going to do with Mr. Latour? I am informed that he is postmaster of the Public Works Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He cannot be postmaster of the Public Works; they have no postmaster.

Mr. POPE. That is his description. Of course, in the country parts our information may not be absolutely correct about these officers. They may come down and boast amongst us in order to make themselves out great men amongst the ignorant agricultural community, so that their partisan works may bear greater fruit than if they came down simply under their own name, without such a high-sounding description. But that is the way Mr. Latour represents himself in the country parts, and he is represented as having been replaced by his son, at a salary of $1,200 a year, and he is cut loose on the province of Quebec to spread 'Le Canada.'

Mr. TAYLOR. On sick leave.

Mr. POPE. Certainly, I said that at first. The climate here is not conducive to his health, and so he goes to a healthy climate in the province of Quebec, where he can travel day after day from house to house breathing in the invigorating atmosphere, inspired by 'Le Canada' in his pocket, and enjoying a sick leave salary while he spreads the policy of the Liberal party. And the Minister of Customs thinks there is nothing wrong in that! Now, Sir, such a high ideal has the Postmaster General of what is right and just, and so often has he decapitated postmasters—and a certain postmistress too, about which I have reminded him often—so often has he applied the cruel axe, which to these people seem cruel, although it seemed just to the just judge; such a high ideal has the Postmaster General of what is proper, that I am sure he will agree with me that the conduct of this official is most reprehensible. I am not surprised, after what we have seen for seven years, that Mr. Latour might go to the province of Quebec and represent himself as postmaster of the Public Works Department, when he does not occupy that position at all. But at the same time I would like to know if the Postmaster General is going to condone the action of this mischievous character, who is getting the addresses of the subscribers to Conservative papers from the different postmasters throughout the country? The Postmaster General should be careful to protect us poor innocent souls in the country against people who come down from Ottawa representing themselves or misrepresenting themselves as holding high office in the government. Take the country postmasters, who are getting from $15 to $20 a year, and you can gauge by the salary they get, how intimidated they would be when all the paraphernalia of a department at Ottawa is imposed upon them.

If a man goes down and knocks at their doors and says that he has been sent by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as the organizer of 'Le Canada,' to get a list of subscribers to Conservative papers, you can easily understand how frightened would be a man receiving $15 or $20 a year in the presence of such a high official. I do not believe the Postmaster General would countenance such a thing. I do not believe that he will shirk the responsibility thrown upon him by the Minister of Customs, who asked us to defer these remarks until this special item was brought up. Of course, we know that there has not been absolute unanimity in the government; we have had an exhibition of that during this session; we know that they are not so united as they were six or seven years ago. But one would have supposed that when the Postmaster General was sitting there in the presence of his colleague when that took place, he would have informed me what he knew of the matter. With regard to that part of my complaint that this man has been interfering with the postmasters of the country, the hon. Postmaster General must assume the responsibility, and no doubt he will inform me what he intends to do in the way of investigating the case of this man Latour, who is gradually degrading the department over which the hon. gentleman presides.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When my hon. friend was discussing the estimates of the Minister of Customs this afternoon, I was not giving very great attention to the discussion; but when I heard it stated that this man was an officer of the Post Office Department, I was not in a position either to affirm it or deny it; and when the House rose at six o'clock, I asked the officers of my department if there was such an officer, because if there had been, it would have been my duty to have looked into the case. I did not learn until eight o'clock that there was no such officer in the Post Office Department. In whatever branch of the service he is employed, my hon. friend says that he has been applying to the postmasters throughout this country for the names of subscribers to newspapers. My opinion is that the names of the addresses of mail matter, newspapers, and all other kinds, is confidential information, which no postmaster is warranted in revealing to any person. No postmaster will be allowed to do that with impunity, so long as I have anything to say in the matter; and if the hon. gentleman is aware of any postmaster having so far forgotten his duty as to disclose to any one the names on newspapers, or any other mail matter, without the authority of the addressees, it will be my duty to call that postmaster to account. If my hon. friend will furnish me with that information, I will at once proceed on the line I have mentioned. But it would be rather unfair to ask me to proceed to discipline or to find out who may have transgressed, among the large number of postmasters. I am sure my hon. friend would not ask that. I do not know what department the official is in.

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the Minister of Finance if there is not a man named Latour in the service of the government in Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have made inquiries with regard to a man named Latour. There is no postmaster in the Public Works Department that I know of, but there was a man named Latour in the temporary employ of the department. He has not been in the employ of the department for some considerable time.

Mr. TAYLOR. On sick leave perhaps.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS No, he is not drawing any pay from the department. This may be the man who is canvassing. I agree with my hon. friend the Postmaster General, that if he were in the employ of the government in any way, his conduct would be quite irregular and improper.

Mr. POPE. What salary was he getting.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two dollars a day, I think. That is all the information I can give.

Mr. POPE. I think that is the bird we are after.

Mr. HACKETT. I have no proof with regard to the conduct of Mr. Latour; but I can assure you that during the election of 1900 he was very active in the county of Prince, in the province of Prince Edward Island. When the judge of the county court called in, under the authority of the law, the ballot boxes from the different polling divisions, one was missing, and we alleged, and can substantiate the fact, that this Mr. Latour was the means of getting that ballot box out of the way. I tell you further that if this Mr. Latour places a foot on the soil of the province of Prince Edward Island, he will find himself in a very hot box.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), in discussing some of the other items of the Post Office Department, asked if any provision was being made in these estimates to pay the men who were deprived of their statutory increases for two or three years, the sums they were then deprived of?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman presents the question as if what were known as statutory increases were legal liabilities of the Crown to those officers. That is an erroneous view to take. It is discretionary with the government to pay these statutory increases or not. Therefore it cannot be said that if a man does not get the statutory increase, he has anything coming to him, or there can be any arrears owing to him.

Mr. POPE. We have often considered this matter in this House. We are not wrong in assuming that these people are entitled to a certain annual increase, according to the statutory arrangement of the department or the government. A man commences at $400, and he is entitled to an increase of $50 a year. It is plain that he is entitled to it, or you could not give it to him. The particular man is not named, but the inducement is held out to every young man who enters the service and who is worthy of being kept there. If he is not worthy of being kept there, dismiss him. But if he is an efficient officer, he is entitled to his increase. Were he in the employ of a private corporation or individual and did not get the increase to which he was entitled, he would go on strike and the Minister of Labour and the deputy would go down to see whether they could not induce his employer to give him the extra $50 or $60 which he had earned. When we have a Minister of Labour in the government itself, he ought to be able to exercise on the cabinet that authority which he sometimes exercises in private matters. The ministers tell us that it is not they but the deputy heads who select those they consider deserving of an increase. No doubt if we had the deputy heads here, they would shift the responsibility on to the chief clerks. It is very difficult to believe that in the selection, politics rather than merit have not an influence. It would be a great relief to members of parliament if our civil service were put into the hands of a commission, as it is done in England, and thus remove all opportunity for the exercise of political favouritism. That would be better for the public life of Canada and we would have more even handed justice dealt all around.

Mr. AVERY. Some weeks ago I asked the Postmaster General why the postmaster at the village of Enterprise was dismissed. This man kept his office in good condition, took no part in politics, and gave general satisfaction, and it is difficult to understand why he should be dismissed and another man put in his place. The right hon. gentleman who leads this House said he would dismiss anybody in the employ of the government who took part in politics. That was not the course adopted by the late Sir John A. Macdonald. I remember that when Mr. G. W. Dawson was postmaster in Addington, he stumped against the Conservative government and was not dismissed. He kept the office until he resigned to run as a candidate. He was elected and after he was subsequently defeated, he was appointed inspector of prisons. But this man at Enterprise took no part in politics, and I would like to have an explanation why he was dismissed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster at Enterprise was dismissed on account of his mismanagement of the office. He was charged, among other things, with sending out his own business letters through the post unpaid.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). By transmitting them through other offices than Enterprise ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot tell that, I shall read the memorandum which I have from the department and the hon. gentleman can satisfy himself.

With reference to the change of postmasters. There had been very great laxity in the conduct and management of the office. The postmaster made a practice of sending out book accounts to his customers through the post office in sealed envelopes not prepaid or stamped with the date stamp of the office, thus prejudicially affecting the revenue of the department. It was also shown that unauthorized persons were permitted to enter the inside compartment at any and all times and take out mail matter, presumably to their address. In consequence much dissatisfaction and complaint existed in the neighbourhood.

These were the reasons why the postmaster was changed.

Mr. AVERY. Who made the investigation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Inspector Merrick, who made a report on the 6th of October, 1902.

Mr. AVERY. What is the postmaster's explanation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The report states that the postmaster refused to make any statement unless he was compelled to do so in court.

Mr. AVERY. Who laid the information against the postmaster ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would not be proper for me to say who laid the information ; any information against a public officer is confidential information.

Mr. HACKETT. Will the hon. Postmaster General be good enough to inform me what he intends to do in regard to the opening of a post office in the settlement of Portage, West Prince, Prince Edward Island ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. An application was received for the establishment of a post office to be called Portage. That application, in due course, was transmitted to the inspector for his report and, on receipt of that report a post office was opened some weeks ago and it only awaits the appointment of a postmaster to go into operation.

Mr. HACKETT. Thank you.

To provide for promotions in city post offices—seven first-class clerkships, five senior second-class clerkships, 22 junior second-class clerkships, and 30 senior third-class clerkships, $3,900.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask if these officers have yet been selected ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the new Bill these are to be distributed about as follows : To the city of Toronto, three 1st class, four sr. 2nd, six jr. 2nd, six sr. 3rd ; to Montreal, one 1st class, four jr. 2nd, four sr. 3rd ; Winnipeg, three 1st class, one sr. second, one jr. 2nd, four sr. 3rd, four, jr. 3 ; to Hamilton, two sr. 2nd, two jr. 2nd ; to London, one jr. 2nd, two sr. 3rd ; to Ottawa, two jr. 2nd, two sr. 3rd ; to Halifax, two sr. 3rd ; to Quebec, one jr. 2nd, one sr. 3rd ; to Kingston, one sr. 3rd ; to Vancouver, one jr. 2nd, one jr. 3rd ; to Windsor, one sr. 3rd ; to Charlottetown, one sr. 3rd.

Mr. CLARKE. Have the officers yet been selected ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No choice has been made.

Mr. POPE. Why do you limit the number ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Ross of Toronto, the chief inspector of the city post offices, has made this request. He visits all of the city post offices in the Dominion and is at present in Vancouver. I am sure that any one who is at all familiar with his work will say that he is an excellent officer. He is assisting the leading city post offices with great zeal and encouraging them in every way and it is entirely on his recommendation that I am now acting.

Mr. CLARKE. Will he make the nomination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He will recommend, of course subject to the opinion of the postmaster ; he will consult the postmaster. I would not for a moment say that he would supersede the postmaster. The system will probably be that the postmasters will go through their lists and make their selections and recommendations. They will doubtless consult with Mr. Ross and I have no doubt that there will be concurrence of opinion. But I suppose that we will act really upon the recommendations of the postmasters. I would not wish to weaken the authority of the postmasters by allowing the staff to suppose that there was any person beyond the postmasters to deal with their merits and demerits, although I would think it very proper for the postmasters to consult with Mr. Ross.

Mr. HACKETT. Will the Postmaster General be good enough to inform me why Mr. Jerome Buote of Little Tignish was dismissed from his office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Could the hon. gentleman tell me when that event took place ?

Mr. HACKETT. About two years ago, and I would like to have some explanation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If my hon. friend will repeat the question on concurrence, I will give him the information then. My deputy has no recollection of it. I fancy it must have happened more than a year ago.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to ask why Mr. Thomas Keith, postmaster at Alberton, was dismissed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps my hon. friend will repeat that question on concurrence. We have no knowledge of it at present.

Mr. HACKETT. The Postmaster General should have all this information at his fingers' ends. Mr. Thomas Keith, the late postmaster at Alberton, is a gentleman we should be proud of, and he was dismissed because he happened to be a Conservative.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend from Toronto asked me what the increases under the new Act would amount to in my department. They may amount to a sum in the vicinity of $80,000.

Additional amount required for salaries and allowances in outside service, $50,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This item is to make provision for increasing the salaries of letter-carriers who may elect to accept positions under the amended Act of 1902, and also for increases to railway mail clerks who accept the provisions of the Act of the present session of parliament.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the minister intend to establish free delivery in the city of Charlottetown, P.E.I. ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no provision in the estimates for the establishment of a letter-carrier system in the city of Charlottetown. There are a number of centres of population throughout the Dominion that are desirous of having the system extended to them, but no conclusion has been reached.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire to call attention to the fact that Charlottetown is the capital of Prince Edward Island, and there should be some consideration given to it with regard to mail delivery. I trust the hon. gentleman will see his way clear to establish free mail delivery to the people of that town.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the population ?

Mr. HACKETT. About 12,000. I think that is a sufficient number.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I think the Postmaster General ought to try and give all towns of 12,000 inhabitants free mail delivery.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Has the hon. gentleman ever made an estimate as to what would be the cost to the post office service ?

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). The Postmaster General would have a better knowledge of that than I have.

Mr. McCREARY. Under this item I would like to make a remark with regard to one class that do not seem to have received any attention. The letter-carriers, the mail clerks, the accounting postmasters and town postmasters have all been assisted, their salaries have all been increased, and I am sure that during this growing time we all appreciate that fact. But a large majority of the postmasters, the men who render the best service for the smallest amount of money, the country postmasters, have received no increase whatever. I do not know how it is in the east, but in the western country they generally get from $12 to $50 a year. When a man or some member of his family has to stay at home for half a day to attend to one post office, and to keep it open for the convenience of the public, it becomes a hardship when labour is so expensive as it is during the summer months in our country. In the county I have the honour to represent I think there are from six to ten post offices that have been closed this year because the Postmaster General cannot get any one to accept them at the miserable salary offered. I spoke upon this subject last year, and I said that if the Postmaster General could not bring down some systematic measure to give these country postmasters more salary, in the new districts their salaries should be charged up to the immigration fund. One of the greatest drawbacks of keeping immigrants in the country is the want of postal facilities, next to schools. Last year I cited a case 28 miles from Swan river, in the Thunder Hill district, where a family had come from the north of Ireland with eleven children. They had neither school nor post office. Finally he wrote me saying that he would leave and go back home within three months unless he got some place where he could educate his children, and get some postal facilities. He was able to get a school, but a post office has only recently been established. That is a sample case of a good many others.

Mr. HACKETT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows of no case where a post office recommended by the inspector in Manitoba or the territories has not been opened.

Mr. McCREARY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I did not say it had not been opened, I said a post office had been opened now in the place I mentioned. That is not in my county, and it was when I was commissioner of immigration that the post office was opened. But I am explaining that the postmasters do not get sufficient salary to pay them for keeping the post offices open. There ought to be a minimum salary of $40 or $50 a year assured before a post office is established. I do not contend that the postal system should be a revenue producing branch of the department. I believe that the public convenience should be considered first, and then if it is afterwards self-supporting, well and good. I submit that the hon. minister, who always takes an interest in seeing that people are properly paid for their services, might seriously consider whether some new means cannot be devised by which, if a rural system cannot be made practicable, the country postmaster shall be paid for his services in a better manner than he is at the present time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps, since my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) has made this observation, I may make known now some views I have on this question, and also comply with the request made of me at an earlier stage in the session to make a statement as to the progress of the department, I think it will be agreed that one cannot in expenditure disregard the case of the taxpayers of this country. To comply with the request which was made of me I will very briefly give a few figures. The work of the department has proceeded in the last few years with the object of enlarging the organization, developing the service, increasing the number of post offices and improving the facilities for the transaction of post office work, so as to make the post office more available for the people. I know of no branch of the public service that is brought more directly into touch with the people than the post office, and it seemed to me that it would be in the public interest, as far as possible, to increase the number of post offices, to increase the frequency of the service and to enlarge those other functions of the post office service such as the transmission of money, providing post office savings banks and so on. The department has followed out that policy. I shall make a comparison now covering the period of seven years since the present government have been in office, or between the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1896, and the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1903 :

	1896.	1903.	Increase.	Increase per cent.
Post offices in existence	9,103	10,150	1,047	12
Number of miles mails carried	30,551,683	35,509,412	4,957,729	17
Money order and postal note offices in existence	1,310	6,184	4,874	372
Post office savings banks	755	934	179	24
Number of letters carried through Canadian post offices	116,028,000	234,991,000	118,963,000	1·02

I should say that there was no postal note system in 1896. The postal note system has since been established, and it has proved a very ready and cheap means for the transmission of sums of money up to $10. Thus far I have given the committee the increases. I have to break in upon this line of argument, and I now take up another branch, not dealing with increases. For many years prior to the 30th June, 1896, the revenue of the Post Office Department failed yearly to meet the expenditure by very large sums, and for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1896, the revenue of the department fell short by $781,142.19 of meeting the expenditure. There was a loss on the working of the department for that year of over three-quarters of a mililon dollars. As hon. gentlemen will remember, in 1898-9 there was a very material reduction in the revenue of the department caused by the reduction of the letter rates, both Canadian and imperial. On Christmas Day, 1898, the letter rate from Canada to the United Kingdom fell from 5 cents to 2 cents. Subsequently the same reduction took place on all letters from Canada to various parts of the empire, and to-day 2 cents takes a letter from Canada to every part of the British empire. That reduction in the rate of from 5 to 2 cents seemed to indicate a loss, unless followed by an increased volume of business, of a considerable amount of revenue. It will be recalled that on the 1st January, 1899, the rate on domestic letters was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents per ounce. On the same day we reduced the rate on letters from Canada to the United States from 3 cents to 2 cents per ounce. It is impossible to tell definitely what effect these great reductions have had upon the revenue of the department, but the late Minister of Finance, in speaking in the House a year or so before 1896, indicated that a very considerable loss of revenue would follow from a reduction of the domestic letter rate. The late leader of the opposition, Sir Charles Tupper, placed that amount of $1,000,000. The late Minister of Finance, Mr. Foster, I think, placed it in the vicinity of a million dollars. Whatever view you may attach to the effect of the reduction, it certainly is a fact that so far as it goes it leaves in the pockets of the people the percentage of the postage which they otherwise would have had to pay had they transmitted through the post office the volume of letters which we have carried since this reduction went into force. It is not unreasonable to say that these reductions have left in the pockets of the people at least $1,000,000.

We had a balancing up for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1902, and the result was that for that year, the revenue met all the expenditure of the department, with the exception of the cost of operating in the Yukon, and left us a surplus of $5,109.14.

Mr. GOURLEY. What was the deficit in the Yukon ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not remember it for that year, but I will give it to you for this year in a moment. The reason I omitted the Yukon service in the public accounts up to the present, has been, in order that it might be possible to institute a comparison. There was no Yukon mail service prior to the present government assuming office, and therefore we could not compare it with anything which had gone before. Taking the year that has just closed, I will give the figures both including the Yukon and excluding the Yukon, so that hon. gentlemen may draw their own deductions. There will always be a deficit in the post office service of the Yukon because they must have the same rate of postage in the Yukon as in the other parts of Canada, while there is no prospect of the cost of labour there coming down to the level of cost of labour in older Canada—there may be approaches to equalization, but that will be in the distant future. If we had had no Yukon expenditure and no Yukon deficit to pay, the working of the department this year would have resulted in our having a surplus of $395,316.31.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Omitting the deficit in the Yukon, I say that the Post Office Department to-day hands over to the treasury of Canada $395,316.31 for the year's work.

Mr. CLANCY. What was the deficit in the Yukon ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deficit in the Yukon was $102,614.31, and paying the deficit in the Yukon, and paying all the expenditure of the post office service in every part of Canada, and including and charging against us the deficit in the Yukon, we have to-day a net surplus of $292,702.23. of revenue over expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1903.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For the year ending the 30th of June, 1896, we had a loss of $781,162.19, and we have wiped out all that loss and we have to-day a surplus over and above our expenditure, amounting to over three quarters of a million dollars; and the people have in their pockets a million of dollars or so each year. in reduced rates which I presume they would not have had if the higher rates were charged.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But leaving aside the reduction of rates, then so far as the taxpayers of Canada are concerned, there is a change from a deficit of $781,152.19 in 1896, to a surplus of $292,-702.23, which means a total change in the accounts of $1,073,854.42.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister will not pretend to say that was all from revenue of the Post Office Department, because the money we voted a few years ago to wipe out that $700,000 did not come from the post office at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman evidently thinks that that $781,000 is a cumulative deficit.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then he is entirely in error. The sum of $781,-152.09 is the result of the operation simply of the one fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1896, taking all the revenue collected for that year and making the expenditure for that year within these twelve months only. There was a complete commencement and closing of accounts for that year, and to carry on the service for that fiscal year, without any part of any other year, and without any balance from any prior year, for that one year of 365 days, it cost Canada $781,152.09, more than the gross revenue, to carry on the service.

For this past year, we have paid the whole expenditure for the service from the first to the end of the year, and have on hand a surplus, excluding the Yukon, of $395,316, and paying the deficit of the Yukon we have a surplus of $292,702. It means a change from the deficit to the surplus in the ledgers of Canada, amounting for the year to a betterment of $1,073,-854.42 since 1896.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am asked, what it is proposed to do with this fund. I agree with hon. gentlemen that in a country like Canada we should not treat the post office service as a money making service. If it can be made to take care of itself, that I think would be satisfactory to the people of Canada, and it is but right that those who are engaged in the carrying on of the service, should, when circumstances will warrant it, be remembered. It is in view of that fact and in view of what seems to me to be the satisfactory position of the department. that I have been able of late to propose to parliament—and which parliament has been good enough to give effect to—recommendations having in view increases of salary to those in the service. Legislation has been passed during last year and this year, improving the salaries here and there. I shall not enumerate what has been done in that respect, as it is within the knowledge of hon. gentlemen. But my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Lariviere) and my hon. friends on this side of the House, have from time to time been pressing the department to consider the position of the country postmasters. I would be only too pleased if I were able to consider these gentlemen even more favourably than I now can, but so far as the present is concerned. I will give you the conclusion at which I have arrived. There are many postmasters throughout Canada whose offices may serve ten, or a dozen, or twenty immediate neighbours, and these postmasters are only paid a nominal sum for the trouble of keeping the office. That scale of payment did not originate with the present administration, and I am not aware that it originated with the prior administration, nor does it make any difference. It has been acquiesced in by both parties, and without any blame to either side. The exigencies of the country, our sparse population compared with our vast area, made it necessary to adopt some means to give postal facilities, and thus this system grew up in our broad Dominion. The question is, how can it be bettered ? At present, where the revenue is merely nominal, amounting to perhaps $10 or $20 a year, it has been the practice to pay postmasters a minimum fee of $10, going up to $12 or $15. I propose that from the first of July last all this class shall receive a minimum fee of $25.

A petition was presented to me last spring on behalf of a certain other class of postmasters, called accounting postmasters, asking for increases of pay and allowances. They asked that these allowances and increases should be made applicable to the territories and Manitoba. There is a great difficulty always in discriminating between one class and another, one locality and, another; and if what they asked for were granted, not merely to those in the western country, but to the same class in all Canada, it would involve increased expenditure exceeding $1,000,000 a year. I therefore shrank from meeting such a large demand. The system at present in Canada, which has been handed down to all succeeding governments ever since we have had a post office in Canada, and from pre-confederation days, has been to pay the postmasters a salary based upon the revenue of the office. There are a few exceptions to this scheme; but most of the postmasters of Canada to-day are being remunerated on the basis of the old system which has prevailed for so many years, namely, a percentage of the revenue. With regard to them, I propose to increase their remuneration by 10 per cent of the amounts that they would derive according to the existing scale, that 10 per cent to be paid to them, not only in respect of their salaries, but in respect of what are known as their forward allowances, which form a considerable item in the gross expenditures of the Post Office Department. These increases will make a substantial inroad upon the revenue of the department. Added to these the increases in salaries which are authorized by legislation will make a much greater demand upon the treasury. But I have no doubt that we shall be able to meet them successfully, and I trust without having to face parliament with the statement that the department, even for the current year, has been administered at a loss.

In referring to the organization and development of the department, I omitted to say that a little more than a year ago the department opened negotiations with the United States for the purpose of simplifying the money order system between Canada and that country, enabling the Canadian people to remit small sums of money through the post office to a very much larger number of places throughout the United States than the former arrangements made possible. Those negotiations were successful, and an international arrangement was made by which the number of money-order offices in the United States upon which we might remit was greatly increased. The actual increase amounts to over 28,000. Up to the time I speak of, we could only send money-orders payable, in the United States at, something like 5,900 post offices; but by the arrangement made, which was mutual, we are now able, for the convenience of the Canadian people, to remit money to no less than 34,000 post offices in the United States. A corresponding convenience is afforded to the people of the United States in remitting to Canada. The practical working of this, so far as the volume of business goes, is as follows. This system has been in force now two clear years. For the year prior to its going into force the total number of money-orders remitted by Canada to the United States was 204,653 for sums of money aggregating $2,118,295.33. For the year just closed the number of money-orders sent by Canada to the United States was 344,665, representing in money $3,682,189.96, being an increase of 72 per cent. The United States, in like manner, have remitted to Canada a much larger sum through the post office than under the former system. The figures of the return business are as follows: For the last year under the old system the number of money-orders sent from the United States to Canada through the post office in 1901 was 137,611, representing the sum of $1,-909,168.74, and the amount of the year ending the 30th of June, 1903, was 270,779, representing in money $3,783,925, or an increase of 98 per cent.

The department has had negotiations with the United Kingdom for an extension of our money-order system on the same basis with that part of the empire, but up to the present time we have not been able to make that arrangement. We have also extended that system lately to Newfoundland, and we have negotiations for its extension to many other parts of the empire and other countries. For example, negotiations are on foot at the present time to extend it to Bermuda, Barbadoes, Jamaica, the Leeward Islands, Tobique and British Guiana. We have also during the year completed arrangements for the extension of our money-order system to Norway, the Transvaal, Cape Colony and Trinidad; and negotiations are pending with Austria-Hungary and Sweden. These are all conveniences to the Canadian people for the transmission of small sums of money to the various parts of the world. I might also say that at the postal convention, held in London last July, the following resolution, on the motion of Canada, was adopted:

> That it is advisable to adopt the principle of cheap postage between the different parts of the British empire on all newspapers, and periodicals published therein, and the Prime Minister desires to draw the attention of His Majesty's government to the question of reduction in the outgoing rate. They consider that each government should be allowed to determine the amount to which they may reduce such rates and the time for such reduction going into effect.

Acting upon this resolution, the Canadian Post Office Department put itself in early communication with various parts of the empire in order to obtain permission for the public in Canada to forward their newspapers and periodicals to all parts of the empire at the domestic letter rate, and already that permission has been granted in respect of the following countries: The United Kingdom, Bahamas, the Barbadoes, Bermuda, British Honduras, Cyprus, Ceylon, Falkland Islands, Cambia, Hong Kong, Leeward Islands (including Antigua, &c.), New Zealand, Transvaal, Sarawak, Sierra Leone, Turk's Island and Zanzibar. To all those countries to-day Canadian publications pass at the same rates as are charged for their transmission throughout Canada itself. And considering the very cheap rate of transmission of newspapers, periodicals and other Canadian publications throughout our own country, I think it may be said that no country in the world enjoys to-day as cheap a rate for the transmission of its publications, dealing with our own life, giving people outside of our country the knowledge of our affairs, as does Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there not some corresponding increases? Has not the rate on parcels been increased and city deliveries?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was an increase in some of the parcel post regulations. In 1897 there was a rate imposed upon newspapers of a half a cent a pound, but even that rate has been almost cut in two by legislation this session. The legislation of this session has reduced the newspaper rate from half a cent per pound to one-quarter cent a pound on all newspapers to be carried 300 miles.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I have reason to thank the hon. the Postmaster General for small favours. Three sessions ago I urged on him an increase of pay to the rural postmasters, and he promised to look into it. The following session I brought the matter up again, and also this session, and on each occasion I was the first to bring that subject to his notice. I am pleased now that he has acceded to my request to some extent, though I would have preferred that he had made the increase $50 or thereabouts instead of $25. While I am on my feet, I would draw the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that there are two places in my county which have petitioned the government for two mails a day. They are important villages, the village of Alton has two carriage shops, a foundry, two woollen mills, and a great many other industries, and quite a large population. These people claim that they have lost a great deal of money at times by not being able to send out two mails a day to Toronto. It would be only reasonable to give this large village the accommodation it requiries. The village of Caledon East stands in the same position. It only has one mail a day, and there are two grain buyers there and quite a lot of business done. On Saturday night the mail that gets up on the Canadian Pacific Railway is not delivered until Monday at noon. We have been complaining and sending petitions to the government for a long time. I would ask the hon. gentleman to consider the request of these two important villages. Alton village has a train running through it, and I believe it would not cost the department anything for carrying the mail from the station to the post office. The Grand Trunk Railway runs through Caledon East twice a day, and I think the expense will be very small of providing these two villages with two mails a day. I do not know of any other two villages of the same size and importance and doing the same amount of business which have not better mail accommodation. In urging this request on the hon. gentleman, he must see that I am not doing so in order to get any political pull, because the government have wiped out the county of Cardwell. I speak solely in the interests of the people.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am glad that I have been persistent in advocating the cause of the postmasters, especially those of my province; and while I can congratulate the hon. Postmaster General on the generous way in which he has treated the postmasters of the small offices, I am afraid that he has not been sufficiently generous with the accounting postmasters, because an increase of 10 per cent on the actual revenue they receive is a very small increase indeed. The salaries of the postmasters are calculated at the rate of 40 per cent of the revenues of their offices, so that if the fees produce $100 revenue, the postmaster gets $40 of a salary, and 10 per cent on $40 is only $4. Therefore, while at first sight it may appear that an increase of 10 per cent is pretty generous, when we come to make the calculation, it is reduced to 4 per cent, or $4 on every $100 of revenue. Such a small increase is not sufficient for officers holding such responsible positions as the accounting postmaster. These officials have to deal with postal notes. They sell postal notes, they issue post office money-orders, and they pay out large amounts of money in some instances. They also receive large amounts to be transmitted to other offices, and some of them have post office savings bank branches to look after. So that I think that the small allowance they get, based on the revenues of their office, are not at all sufficient, compared with their responsible duties. I hope that instead of making it 10 per cent on the actual income, the Postmaster General will accept the suggestion made by the accounting postmasters of Manitoba, and make their allowance 50 per cent on the revenue of the office instead of 4 per cent. In that case I think it will be perfectly satisfactory, because it would be a material increase in their salaries while the present 4 per cent allowance is quite inadequate.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by 4 per cent; the increase is 10 per cent.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The hon. gentleman said 10 per cent on the actual salary they are getting. Supposing the income of an office is $100, then the postmaster would be entitled to 40 per cent of that, which would be $40. But you allow 10 per cent on the $40, which is $4. Well, it is only 4 per cent of an increase they are getting.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I say the emoluments of the postmasters will be increased by 10 per cent. I am not taking 10 per cent on other things. A postmaster who gets $1,000 will get $100 more under this scheme. He has 10 per cent on his original salary, which is increased by that much.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If he had $40 he would get $4 additional.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And if he had $1,000 he would get $100 more.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Will the Postmaster General say that he will look into the case of these villages I mentioned ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The deputy has made a note of the hon. gentleman's remarks, and the subject will be carefully looked into.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) I cannot allow the present opportunity to pass without complimenting the Postmaster General on the very excellent showing he has made this evening in the conduct of his department. It must be gratifying indeed to parliament and to the country to know that the management of the Post Office Department has produced such excellent results. Many of us, indeed all of us on this side of the House, have been pressing on the Postmaster General for the last few years the advisability of increasing the salaries or remuneration which the rural postmasters have been receiving. The Postmaster General promised to look into the matter, and that just as soon as the revenues would warrant him in doing so he would take that very deserving class of public servants into consideration. He has done so, and I consider that the minimum remuneration the Postmaster General now finds it in his power to give to the rural postmasters of $25 a year, is very satisfactory indeed, and I am sure this very deserving class of public servants, whose services are so useful in keeping these small post offices, will be well pleased and will appreciate this increase in their remuneration. So far as the accounting postmasters are concerned, to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), he has said that a man who has been receiving $40 a year, under this arrangement will receive $4 a year more. That is true, but a postmaster who has been receiving a salary of $1,000 a year will receive an increase of $100 a year.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But that does not affect a $40 affair.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) It must be a small office indeed where the salary is not more than $40. I know several accounting offices where the salaries range from $500 to $700 a year, and these men will receive $50, $60 or $70 increase per year, which is a very substantial increase, and will be much appreciated by these men. But the most satisfactory feature of the whole case is that after these increases are made the revenue will still meet the expenditure. I am sure the people of this country will congratulate the Postmaster General upon his management of that department for the last seven years.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think it is unfortunate that the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) should throw this note of discord into a happy family such as we are at this moment. I say it is unfortunate, because it makes me angry when I hear a man making false claims. Now, the Postmaster General made no claim to being a party to this prosperity in that particular, and I think he was wise. I think he followed the example of the young man we read of the other day in England, the young Marquis of Salisbury, who inherited his father's magnificent estate. Some American correspondent called upon him, and looked over this magnificent pile of buildings erected by his ancestors two or three hundred years ago, the old Cecils, who had won it for the modern Salisburys, who for the last 30 or 40 years had never put a brick to the castle or added an acre to the estate. But the Yankee blusterer commenced to congratulate the young man upon being the owner of this great estate. The fellow was abashed by the candour of the young man, who sat there clothed with humility and sorrow, and who replied : 'I am ashamed to inherit this magnificent estate, in building up which I have done nothing ; it is the work of the great Cecils of two or three hundred years ago.' The Yankee blusterer turned away, he had met an honest and noble-minded man, such as are many of the better classes in England. Now, I think the Postmaster General—or shall we call him the Minister of Labour ? Which title does the hon. gentleman prefer ? I do not know what to call him. I do not wish to hurt his feelings, because he may have a preference for one title over the other. I think he should be called the Postmaster General and not the Minister of Labour, because his ample proportions do not fulfil the poetical idea of a Minister of Labour. I think a Minister of Labour should be thin and lank, and show the evidences of a laborious life. He should be lean and hungry-looking like Cassius, rather than the robust gentleman he is, who seems to have been reared in the lap of luxury and to have lived there all his life. However, apart from that, I hope the Postmaster General is too modest to accept all this honour that has been thrust upon him by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island.

I am proud on behalf of Canada to see this splendid showing, to know that our post office pays. I assume that our post office pays $292,000 of surplus into the treasury of Canada. I understand from the hon. Postmaster General that we pay all the bills in connection with the post office for Canada and for the Yukon, and that we have then $292,000 to pay into the treasury of Canada. If that is the statement it is a creditable showing for Canada, but it is only what might have been expected. There never was a country the foundation of whose administration in every department of government was laid with such wisdom as that of the administration of Canada as laid in 1867 and from that time down to 1896. These hon. gentlemen have inherited one of the most perfect systems of government that was ever developed in the British world. All the great public works had been built. The post office system had been extended all through Canada, and these hon. gentlemen had only to sit down and see the revenues flow in. They had not to turn their hand in any department to help Canada, and until this scheme of the transcontinental railway was brought forth they never had added one thing to the public life of Canada or secured one dollar of revenue for Canada. They have been heirs to a magnificent estate, and I have never heard these hon. gentlemen in the course of this parliament attempt to claim credit for the great progress that Canada has made. They do not deserve it, and I will appeal to any hon. gentleman in this House to say whether in justice and fair-play, apart from political partisanship, he can wake any claim for this government, except that they had the luck to inherit a magnificent estate, at a very fortunate time, when the great public works had been constructed and when we had been waiting for the development which was bound to come in consequence of these great public works. We had settled the principles of government, we had constructed the great public works, and we had said to the people of Canada: Wait, the Intercolonial Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the canals cannot produce this great wealth and progress in a day. We said that this development would come. It came in due time, and it came when the great public men of Canada had pointed out that it should come. In the vicissitudes of fortune these hon. gentlemen opposite came into power and inherited the results of the splendid achievements of others. I was glad that the hon. Postmaster General did not make any claim to the credit for any of these great results. I always say in the country, of course, that Canada is prosperous and that Canada must become a great nation, because the party that had been in power for eighteen years had laid well and truly the foundations of national greatness. It was at the time that they had completed the work that these hon. gentlemen came into power. After they had been criticising the Conservative party for eighteen years, they came into power and they paid a splendid tribute to our policy by adopting it, because, as sensible men, they could do nothing else, although I believe there were some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who would have been reckless enough to have adopted some other policy had not public opinion been so strong. While I congratulate hon. gentlemen opposite on the progress that Canada is making, I would say that it is only the progress that I have been predicting for the last twenty years. I used to say: Wait, this country will be great; wait, the people's railway will pay an enormous revenue; wait, immigration will pour in; wait until we break down the prejudice against Canada; wait until we get the Liberal party to cease reviling and slandering Canada, and then her wealth will be increased. Whenever I made the declaration that this progress would come, the Grit party were howling that Canada would be broken. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) was reviling us down below, describing us as the shreds and patches of Canada and insulting every portion of Canada. I have no doubt this progress would have come years ago if, when our Finance Minister went to England a few years ago to float a loan, he had not been met by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and by the financial papers which the right hon. gentleman controlled, in an attempt to break down the credit of Canada by one of the meanest, the lowest political conspiracies that ever disgraced any country. Even in war there are honourable principles. A man must fight fairly even in war, if he is to be regarded as a generous and decent foe, and those same principles must be applied to political warfare. The Conservative party stood up for eighteen years and fought for Canada just as much as if a foe had invaded Canada, because the Liberal party were just as much an invading army as if Canada had been invaded by Americans or Mexicans. That was what always angered me. I have always taken the view that I have no right to oppose my political opponents by saying one word which will hurt Canada. If I differ with the party or the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite I will attack them as vigorously as I can, but I will never say a word against my country. It is my bounden duty, as a citizen of Canada, to say words of praise for my country or to hold my tongue. No man in this opposition, the only loyal opposition that ever stood out in defence of the whole country, in all the debate on the transcontinental railway, has uttered a word except in praise of Canada. Yet, when hon. gentlemen opposite were opposing the great Canadian Pacific Railway, the country rang with slander from end to end, until no man believed himself safe to live in this country for twenty-four hours. The hon. Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), with that sweet, low voice of his, charmed the people of Ontario with the most reckless slanders against the people of Canada that were ever uttered by any public man. There never was an occasion on which a more reckless stream of slander was ever poured from any human throat than that which flowed in a continuous stream from the hon. Minister of Customs. That party kept back the progress of Canada for twenty years by this continuous flow of slander. It is bad enough to see these men occupying the treasury benches. It is the irony of fate that the Conservative party should sit here after we have made this country, and see hon. gentlemen opposite occupying the treasury benches. They wear the robes that they never won ; they wear the chaplet to which they are not entitled. They never won the race, and yet they want the bay. They want the plume, and yet they never won the race. The Conservative party have always been anxious for the success of Canada. We want to see this country great. I feel that I want to be a Canadian in any part of the world. The old Roman used to say in every part of the world : 'Civis Romanus sum.' I want the magic wrds 'Civis Canadensis Sum' to be more attractive even than the old boast of the Roman. I can sit here at any time and see these hon. gentlemen go along with their estimates. I can help them to vote their estimates, until they claim that this progress is due to their party or to their policy. I commend the hon. gentleman for his modesty to-night, because I remember that in the earlier part of this session, when he was making a speech in regard to post office affairs, he took occasion to rake up some old matters that had better have been left alone at the present time. I noticed a change in his manner to-night, and I was delighted to see that he is improving. The improvement may not be very marked, but in him it is worthy of commendation. On this occasion the hon. Postmaster General has absolutely disclaimed any connection with the result which he has been able to show. So he says : I have had nothing to do with this, I am only a little pipe through which the water is running, and I take no credit for it. I have no fault to find, and I say it is a creditable showing on behalf of Canada. If hon. gentlemen opposite take that position, I have no fault to find, but whenever the Liberal party of Canada attempts to claim one iota of credit for the development of this country, they make a false claim, and they must be accused of false pretenses.

Mr. GALLERY. I understood from the Postmaster General that the minimum increase granted to postmasters would be $25. Now, if a postmaster receives $40 a year, would he get $65 now, or would he only get 10 per cent on the $40, which would make his salary $44.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I stated that a large number of postmasters in Canada now receive salaries amounting from $10 to $20 per year, and in future the minimum salary of these gentlemen will be $25. As to the postmasters who are paid by commission, they will hereafter receive an increase of 10 per cent on that commission, be their salaries small or large. On the revenue of the office they will receive 10 per cent more than they formerly received.

Mr. BOYD. I have sat in the House for some days listening to the increased votes which have been granted to the various departments, and in the interest of my constituents, I often felt like making a strenuous protest. If the Postmaster General, who had charge of the Bill granting increases to civil servants, and if many of his supporters were on this side of the House, I can imagine what protests they would have made in the interests of the farmers who in the days of adversity, they professed such an affection for. However that may be, let me point out that the country postmasters receive under this proposal the smallest increase of any of the civil servants whose salaries have been increased this year. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) has proved that to a demonstration. I was much amused that the member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) should expect any modesty from the ministers of the present government. My remark may not apply to the Prime Minister and it may, but, it certainly is a fact that all the other ministers from first to last, are anxious to avail of every possible occasion to make a stump speech to their own glorification. The Postmaster General to-night has claimed great credit for the success of his department, but he has failed to show that he has inaugurated anything which would bring about that success. We know that this prosperity of the department is largely, if not entirely, due to the prosperity which has prevailed of recent years throughout Canada, and for that matter throughout the civilized world. He told us that the number of post offices had increased during the Liberal regime at the rate of 149 per annum, but if he looks back to 1891, or even to 1871, he will find that each year up to the coming into power of the Liberals, there was an increase of 149 in the number of post offices, and possibly more. I rose more particularly to bring to the attention of the House the case of the accounting postmasters. I had the opportunity of meeting the Postmaster General in company with the deputation of accounting postmasters who waited upon him, and I shall read the memorial which they presented, and which shows that the decrease in postage from three cents to two cents has been largely taken out of their income. In order that I may quote their case properly, I propose to read their petition, so that it may be recorded on 'Hansard.'

Mr. SCOTT. It is on 'Hansard' twice already.

Mr. BOYD. Then I will put it on three times, so that you will not have to hunt so far back for it. Let me say in the first place, that some years ago the matter of an increase in the remuneration to these postmasters, was urged by the member for Cardwell (Mr. Johnston). To-night we have the member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) making a display, and no doubt he was advised as to what was coming from the Postmaster General.

Mr. GOURLEY. He was rehearsing.

Mr. BOYD. Certainly, but it is to the member for Cardwell (Mr. Johnston) that the postmasters have to be thankful for pressing their claims upon the government. Here is the petition to which I refer:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, February, 1903.

To the Right Hon. Sir William Mulock, Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Sir,—We, the undersigned, accounting postmasters of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, beg to bring to your attention the following statement of facts regarding our work which goes to show that the remuneration is most inadequate, in the hope that you may be able to grant us substantial and immediate relief. We do this the more hopefully in view of the stand you have taken on the question of the hours of labour, &c., of the workingman.

1. The postmaster is responsible for the safe handling of many important letters, and valuable parcels. In this country large amounts of money formerly sent by express are now sent by registered mail to wheat buyers to enable them to carry on their business. In many places the branch banks remit to, or receive from, the head office large sums of money. This increases the postmaster's responsibility and where help is employed necessitates care in the selection. The money-order business necessitates the handling of large sums of money for the miserable pittance of 25 cents per $100. The amount of stamps kept on hand must always be large with the source of supply so far away. In no other line of work would persons be held responsible for the proper handling of such large amounts, with the same possibilities of irregularities and losses, without remuneration at least from five to ten times greater than the postmaster receives for his money-order work. In many cases there is added responsibility through the handling of customs parcels for which there is practically no remuneration. The postmaster is expected to provide a roomy, centrally located office without any regard to the rental which that office would command if leased for other purposes. The necessity for the correct and prompt despatch of all mails regardless of hours of arrival and departure is in many instances a very grave responsibility. Understanding that the present basis of remuneration has been in vogue for a quarter of a century or more we would respectfully point out various increases in work which clearly show that, although it may have been sufficient then it is utterly inadequate now.

Mr. BOYD.

You see, they knew the Postmaster General was also Minister of Labour, and they thought they would appeal to him on that score.

Firstly. In connection with newspapers and periodicals we think it a conservative estimate to assume that a family will now receive an average of six to eight times as many periodicals as a family would be receiving twenty-five years ago.

Secondly. The use of the mails as a means of distributing advertising matter is a practice of recent years entirely and the quantity handled is simply enormous and constantly increasing. These increases affect both local distribution and the sorting of matter for forwarding to outside offices.

Thirdly. The recent reduction in the rate of letter postage necessitates (in the matter of Canadian and United States postage) an increase of fully fifty per cent in the number of letters handled before an increase of revenue can accrue, or an increase of salary be hoped for. In the case of British, and some other lines of foreign postage, the increase in the number of letters must be 150 per cent before we have established a basis for any possible increase in salary. A working out of the figures in this connection will establish that the postmasters are bearing from thirty to forty per cent of the expenses of the reduction so appreciated by the public. This appears to be an altogether undue proportion.

That proves what I have already said, that the reduction in the postal rate from three cents to two cents, has, to a very great extent, been borne by the postmasters, owing to the fact that a very large number of them are remunerated by way of commission.

The introduction of the postal note system has increased the amount of labour out of proportion to the revenue attached. This method of remitting small amounts (chiefly to the city offices) has largely curtailed the sale of stamps which were formerly used. At offices where customs parcels are handled and distributed by mail to smaller offices, stamps are usually sent in payment of duty and cash is remitted to port of entry, again curtailing the sale of stamps received from the department.

2. An examination into the method of handing customs parcels and the remuneration (even where any is allowed) will reveal the fact that the work actually required to be performed, which is considerable, is practically unpaid for. This is one of the points which we desire to bring to your attention, that unremunerative work of this sort is being multiplied while the revenue of the office is being held down by reduced rates of postage.

3. In a number of the offices, besides keeping the office open throughout the regulation hours, the postmasters are compelled to await the arrival of a late evening train and again in some instances have to get up at 5 or 6 o'clock in the morning to despatch a mail, thus imposing unduly long hours of service without any allowance for any class of assistance, to say nothing of a competent assistant. In some offices, owing to the arival of several different mails the public is entitled to call and demand individual attention several times during the day, whereas the basis of remuneration makes no special provision for this. In places where tri-weekly trains carry the mails, the postmaster is compelled to remain eleven hours a day for six days a week and provide (if he would give the public anything approaching satisfactory service) for a portion of three days a week, one or more duly qualified assistants. His allowance is inadequate for his own support at present cost of living, thus providing nothing for the payment of assistants.

4. In view of the amount of mail matter to be re-sorted and forwarded the forwarding allowances do not begin to pay for the work done or the extra office room required. Another department with a deficit.

5. The allowance for rent, fuel, and light is decidedly inadequate. In practically every town where the post office is kept in a separate compartment, the room occupied could be leased for a rental in excess of the full allowance for rent, for heating and for lighting. In the town of Morris, the postmaster is allowed $100 for rent, fuel and light. For less space in the same building he receives from the Merchants Bank, $350 a year for rent, alone. At Melita the postmaster cancelled a lease bringing him a net annual rental of $180 to use the building for post office purposes on an allowance of $125 for rent, fuel and light. Other similar examples could be cited. Fuel and light are costly here.

6. In the matter of securing proper assistants, we could point out that labour readily commands far larger remuneration in any market than it did a few years ago. To have experienced help available is a severe drain upon the limited exchequer of the postmaster who is unfortunate enough to require it as nearly all do. Even where help is not regularly required, competent assistance must be had if the postmaster is ever to seek recreation or relief from duty.

7. There is another matter which affects postmasters in the west more particularly, namely, the increased cost of living. This has frequently been brought to the attention of yourself and colleagues in various ways, and we note that already you have conceded the point as in the case of the 20 per cent increase allowed the letter-carriers of Winnipeg.

And I see that they get a greater increase by this new Act and the $50,000 which is voted in these estimates for the outside service.

In our opinion this does not represent the actual amount of difference, but is a recognition of that difference. In all lines the cost of living has advanced during the past few years, while the postmasters are receiving less pay for more work.

8. A comparison with salaries paid in other departments of the public service and even in other departments of the postal service give an idea of our disadvantages. For example. First class railway mail clerks receive $960 and mileage, second-class clerks, $800 and mileage. In the city of Winnipeg the assistant postmaster gets $2,000, first-class clerks, $1,500, second-class, $1,320, third-class, $880, and letter-carriers, $720. We do not think these are too highly paid, but an office with a revenue of $2,000 not only absorbs all of one person's time, but requires an additional clerk at least a portion of the year. The postmaster of such an office receives for salary, commissions and allowances an average of less than $700 or less than half the amount received by a first-class city clerk, $100 less than a second-class railway mail clerk, and a trifle less than is paid to the city letter-carriers, and out of this modest income he must employ whatever additional help is required and furnish a suitable office and office equipment. In most cases his hours are longer and his responsibilities greater than those of any of the officials referred to. In one town where the train arrived late and departed early, the postmaster until recently received $3.50 per month for overtime, while the railway agent received $19 a month extra.

In view of the conditions and facts set forth above, we would respectfully suggest the following changes as tending to bring about a redress of our grievances. 1st. That the straight salary allowance be based on 50 per cent on the first $1,000 worth of stamps sold, and 40 per cent on all additional sales. This would barely offset the loss resulting from the reduction of letter postage.

As I said before, these gentlemen understand how to properly make this calculation; and, instead of meeting that request, the Postmaster General gives them an increase of only ten per cent.

2nd. That in Manitoba a special increase of at least 20 per cent be allowed to cover extra cost of living. 3rd. That the allowance for rent, fuel and light be doubled so as to provide a reasonable rent for the office, and a provision for the cost of fuel and lignt in this country. 4th. That the money order system be simplified so as to lessen the amount of work performed for the small remuneration allowed and also to increase its popularity with the business public, who now object to the restrictions hedging it round. 5th. In addition to the regular and general scale of allowances we would request. That a special allowance be granted for each extra mail which tends to bring the public again before the wicket for individual attention during the day. That the forward allowance be materially increased to distributing offices. That a special allowance be given to postmasters who are compelled to work before 8 a.m., or after 7 p.m. Among the mechanical industries the special allowance for overtime is very marked. That in the case of offices where mails are so infrequent as to have large quantities of mail matter delivered at the office at one time, so that the public convenience really requires the employment of one or more assistants, an allowance be given towards the payment of such assistant or assistants.

I may say that in our western towns the express company to a very great extent is cutting into the business of the money-order office, almost doing the entire business, for the reason that a man can go to the express office, get his receipt and do the business in one-half the time that it takes the postmaster to accomplish the same business; and I think it is as cheap or possibly cheaper. This is a matter in which I hope the Postmaster General, when he next addresses the House, will be able to show that he has done something to better the system.

6th. In addition to the above we feel that there are a number of cases of special, minor grievances which we cannot enter into in detail, but in which we think that a little investigation would show that redress could be effected so as to relieve the postmasters concerned without in any way imparing the efficiency and safety of the public service, which grievances have probably continued to exist because they have not been brought to your honourable attention.

Now, they have been brought and placed on 'Hansard,' and the Postmaster General will have them before him, and the members of this House can refer to them.

And we would respectfully urge that the above matters be duly considered and that a large measure of redress be granted in the very near future.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

Here is another small paragraph :

Supplementary Suggestions Passed by Executive.

1. That all accounting offices be given an allowance for rent, fuel and light.

2. That twine, mucilage, pens, ink, pencils, &c., for post office use be furnished by the department and not at the expense of the postmaster as at present.

3. That the department make it more clear to all publishers that newspapers must be suitably folded and that they must be addressed plainly. That where labels are used they must be in large clear type, and that if possible uniformity of colour in labels be secured.

4. That a full list of 'Suggestions to the Public' be printed by the department and supplied to all postmasters for display in their offices as tending to make it clear that certain regulations are found necessary by the department and are not based on the caprice or convenience of the postmaster. For instance that stamps and moneys orders may not be purchased during the distribution of a newly arrived mail, and that money orders and postal notes are not available for purchase after the registered mail closes for an outgoing mail. Also some suggestions as to the age of children who are to be considered as proper persons to receive mail from the wicket.

5. That when instructions are sent out for the weighing of all mails that facilities for such weighing be afforded by the department.

6. That in view of the large sums of money at times in the mails in this country and hence often stored in the post office, and in view of the value of the stamps and the importance of the books now to be kept that safes be provided for accounting postmasters or an allowance be granted to pay for use of same when provided by the postmaster.

Now, I think these are very important suggestions which have been made by these accounting postmasters, and they should receive the close attention of the Postmaster General and his assistants. The hon. gentleman referred in his speech to the prosperity which has attended the department; but at the same time he failed to show us by what policy or by what changes, he has caused this improvement in the working of the department. Here even the postmasters make a number of practical suggestions to him which he might have thought of or acted upon. He gives $80,000 to officials, many of whom are well paid to-day, many of whom would not be able to earn the same amount of money in any other capacity in life many of whom thrown on their own resources would scarcely earn one-half of what they are getting; and yet these postmasters, the men who are bearing a great part of the burden and who have brought about this prosperity, are paid the small pittance of ten per cent. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) says that that matter has been on 'Hansard' before. Well, if it has, why was not something done before ? It was not because the hon. minister did not know that the country was prosperous. He could have satisfied those people and saved them the expense of coming here to lay their case before the House and demand redress. I think that I am within my rights in bringing to the attention of the hon. minister this matter, which he has failed to meet, although he has looked after a class which has not done anything to bring about the prosperity of his department. The men he has overlooked are the men who have brought about that increase, and they should have the support of the hon. minister, but instead, these other men, many of whom are now receiving more than they could in any other capacity, are looked after to the tune of $80,000.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure that the Committee listened with much attention to the statement of the Postmaster General. It is quite evident that the whole thing was very well arranged. As an hon. gentleman has said, there was a little rehearsal to-night, and an opportunity given the hon. minister of making the statement he did. He said that there are $292,000 to the credit of the Post Office Department after paying the whole service. That is not a difficult matter. If the hon. gentleman has additional receipts it is because he has increased the burdens of the people. True, there has been a decrease in the postage on letters, but there has been an increase on other mail matter, and therefore it is not difficult to see how the hon. gentleman, for the first time since he has been in office, has been able to show a surplus of $292,000. What is the history of the department during the six preceding years from 1897 to 1902 ? The hon. gentleman had a deficit every year during that period and a total deficit of $2,991,896.

Mr. GOURLEY. It will take some time to pay that up.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, the hon. gentleman has starved the service. He is not giving the supply of post offices to the rural districts and elsewhere which they should have had. Let me prove this. The number of post offices that were opened between 1890 and 1896, for a period of six years under Conservative rule, was 1,190. That was a period of great depression, but take this period of phenomenal expansion from 1896 to 1902, under the administration of the hon. gentleman, and we find that instead of the post offices being increased 1,190, the increase is only 855. Could you find more conclusive evidence that the hon. gentleman has increased the burdens of the people and starved the service at the same time? Under such conditions, it is not difficult for the hon. gentleman to have a surplus. What was the cost per head in 1896 for the postal service? It was 93 cents, and in 1902 the cost was 96 cents per head. I need not pursue the case any further. That conclusively proves that the hon. gentleman has not kept up with our increased prosperity by giving rural districts the postal service to which they are entitled. While the postage was lowered on certain classes of mail matter, it has been, on the other hand, increased to such an extent that the cost per head to the people is larger in 1901 than it was in 1896. The hon. gentleman seeks to impress upon the people the idea that he has given Canada a better service, but the fact that the post offices have not been increased in the same ratio during his regime as they did during the previous regime disposes of that claim. It is clear that the hon. gentleman has not met the wants of the people, and that being the case, he has not very much to boast of. But what he has proved is that he has taken more money from the people and given them worse service.

Mr. SPROULE. There are certain things one would require to know before determining whether it is to the good management of the Post Office Department that we owe this increased revenue. I see in the hon. gentleman's report, at the end of page 4, appendix A, the statement that for the year ending June 30th, 1902, the net revenue of the Post Office Department was $3,888,126.10 being an increase over the revenue of the previous year of $466,933,91, or 13·64 per cent. The increase in expenditure was $45,-640.78, equal to 1·19 per cent. There was evidently a process of starving going on there, because that increase of expenditure was not an increase commensurate with the development of the country. Evidently those who carried the mails and the postmasters were not paid very extravagantly for their work. There was an item last year, which I presume is the same this year, that is about the automobiles used in Toronto? Are they in use still?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood last year that they were not charged to the Post Office Department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are now, but the change does not amount to anything.

Mr. SPROULE. They are taken into account in the statement. There are steamship subsidies for mail service, are these taken into account?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are treated as they always were. I think most of our mails go to England by the United States. We have to pay the transit charges.

Mr. SPROULE. But we give large subsidies for mail service on the steamers. That is not, however, a matter of any great importance if treated in the same way as it was before. I see here, in the report which the Postmaster General has submitted to the House, that there was a surplus of revenue over expenditure up to 30th June, 1902 for the first time.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That was omitting the Yukon. There is a special reference to it in the report.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, you have both omitted and put it in in this instance, and with the cost of the Yukon taken out, there is still a surplus of $292,702. I do not know whether I took down the hon. gentleman's statement correctly, but I understood him to say that in 1896 there was a deficit of $781,-152. I think that was wiped out by an item put in the estimates.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The department, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1896, had a deficit, as I have already explained, on the operations of that year, of $781,000. They failed to take a vote from parliament for that year sufficient to pay the working expenses; and when I took office I found there were about three-quarters of a million dollars of unpaid accounts for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1896, for which there was no parliamentary appropriation. I reported the matter to the Finance Minister, and in the succeeding year I took an item wherewith to pay these accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. Then after everything was paid you started afresh?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the policy of the department to pay up everything each year, to have no arrears after the 30th of June. Last year there was a slight error, that policy was not lived up to as it ought to have been, and there was an error through the department having failed to estimate the amount correctly. They were $22,000 short, and that amount had to be carried over in the report of that year, and in the fiscal year of 1903 we paid that shortage of the preceding year. Therefore, by that amount our showing is that much worse this year. But with that exception, the policy I have mentioned has been lived up to, and we close up the year's accounts and take a vote from parliament each year, so that there can be no accumulated deficit, as was the practice for many years in former times. I say in frankness that that practice prevailed under both Liberal and Conservative governments down to 1896.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there must have been a much larger deficit than $781,000, because there was an overlapping that was brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is true there were a lot of errors, and two auditors were appointed to inquire into the accounts. In bringing out that deficit they ignored all those errors that had accumulated prior to the commencement of the fiscal year ending June, 1896. They cut those off, they were not taken into account. They simply ascertained the cost of maintaining the service during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1896. The difference between the revenue and expenditure for that year was $781,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say that the policy of the Postmaster General in increasing the salaries of the postmasters throughout the country is in my judgment in the right direction. The only complaint that I have to make is that he has not gone far enough. We are not now troubled so much in hunting up postmasters since the present government came into power, because they generally leave that responsibility upon others. But I do know that I have been obliged to hunt up postmasters many times, and it was difficult to get them to take the position at all for a salary ranging from $12 to $25. As they used to say, it did not pay them for scrubbing the floor. I said at one time that the minimum salary should be $25. I think now it should be higher, I do not think any one should be expected to keep a post office for less than $35 a year. What principle does the Postmaster General follow now in striking salaries above that ? I understood him to say that they get 10 per cent more than they got before.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are paid on the same scale, but we add on 10 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. Since there is a surplus now, I would suggest to make that increase about 20 per cent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman would land me in a deficit at once. The various increases already provided for are very near the surplus I have spoken of.

Mr. COCHRANE. When the hon. gentleman reduced the postage on letters, what effect did it have on the pay of the postmasters throughout the country ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No postmaster had his salary reduced, because of the reduction in the rate. The salaries were allowed to remain at the rate at which they stood before the reduction. Preceding governments had reduced the rate without regard to the compensation of the postmasters. Many in this House will remember when the letter postage was five cents, perhaps more than that. But the commissions were left the same.

Mr. COCHRANE. I still think that a great many rural postmasters are underpaid. Take the case of the postmaster in my own township of Edville. There is a daily mail, for it is a populous section of country. It is five or six miles from the villages of Colborne and Brighton. He is attentive to his duty, the office is kept open from morning till night, and the postmaster only gets $30. If he had not his daughter there to attend to the post office he could not keep it open. I have heard it stated here to-night that men often keep a post office to draw custom. Well, they must have a store for that purpose. But there are many post offices in our section that have no store in connection with them. I think these gentlemen should be paid something more. I am not an advocate of extravagance, but I am favourable to a reasonable expenditure where it is necessary to pay men for attending to an office like that. I am satisfied that the amount hardly pays that man. I am at the office frequently, and I am satisfied that the amount of money will hardly pay for the wood that is consumed in keeping the place warm. I think these are men who are underpaid. They are doing what is very beneficial to the rural districts. It is a great pleasure for men living in the rural districts to realize that they can get their mail and know that they are not circumscribed as to hours, but that they can get it any time in the day.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. minister was devising ways and means to make his revenue and expenditure he changed the system which before that time allowed all papers and parliamentary documents of the legislative assembly to go through the post office free.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, there has been no change.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite sure that I am not in error. I have evidence of it in my hand. Here is a letter from a clerk of the peace.

Office of the Clerk of the Peace for Leeds and Grenville,

Brockville, September 14, 1903.

Dear Sir,—I beg to inform you that I have received the Ontario Statutes, for 1903, for distribution. If you wish them sent to you by book post send me 33 cents in postage stamps to prepay postage and sign and return me the enclosed receipt.

(Sgd.) M. M. BROWN,
Clerk of the Peace.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There never was a time in the history of the country when provision was made by which clerks of the peace could transmit papers through the post office free. The Post Office Act says what may and what may not be mailed free. The Post Office Act says what local parliamentary papers may go free. The Act that was in force when we took office is in force to-day. There has been no change whatever in the application of the Act. Whatever went free then goes free to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. I am quite sure that there was a time, whether it was in the time of the Postmaster General or not, when these books went free. I am sure there was a change made. I remember it distinctly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If every official of the local government, or if clerks of the peace all over Canada, could frank matter where would be the end of the franking privilege ? It may be that in days gone by such a practice prevailed but it has not for many years or long before we came into office. The hon. gentleman surely would not urge a policy of that kind.

Mr. SPROULE. I am talking quite properly in connection with my rights. I am not urging the policy of that kind but I am drawing attention to a complaint that is made. I am not prepared to say that the fault, if fault there is, lies with the hon. Postmaster General or that there was free delivery of this matter before through the post office. But I know that my impression is that other papers used to go through the post office free which do not now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was no cutting off——

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Postmaster General may say that there was no cutting off but my memory is just as good as his and I make the statement that there was a cutting off. I have a distinct remembrance of having a controversy with the postmaster in our own locality in regard to what he should allow to go through the mails free and I know that in that case there was a cutting off.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not by me. If such a state of affairs existed in days gone by I know nothing about it. There has been no change in that respect under my administration.

Mr. SPROULE. I was about to say that in many of these lines the additional postage put on, such as for instance, the additional postage put on newspapers has helped to give the additional revenue that we have to-day, and I have no doubt a great deal was made up from the increased correspondence carried on on account of the larger amount of business done. For everything that the hon. Postmaster General has done he is entitled to credit, but I do not know whether it is in order to throw as many bouquets as the hon. member for King's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) desires to present to him because that hon. gentleman desires to give him credit for a great deal of what he did not accomplish as well as for a great deal that he did accomplish. For anything that he has accomplished he is entitled to credit. He is entitled to credit for increasing the number of post offices which I think is a step in the right direction. He has also increased the mail service. That, I think, is in the right direction as well, but I think there has not been that expansion that there should have been in the pay of the mail contractors and of the small postmasters throughout the country. I think the postmasters in the towns and cities did not fare so badly, but in the small villages throughout the country where postmasters are obliged to keep the offices for anywhere from $25 to $35 there is room for improvement.

Mr. KAULBACH. I must congratulate the hon. Postmaster General upon the generous heart he has shown towards the country postmasters in giving them an increase in their salaries. The amounts they have been receiving in the past have been very inadequate for the services they have rendered. I know several postmasters that I have had a great deal of difficulty in persuading to remain in office because of the small pittance they have been receiving, amounting to $12 a year. I am very glad to know that their salaries are now being increased. They are deserving of that increase and I would have liked if it had been still larger. I would like also if the hon. Postmaster General could see his way clear with the revenue that is now afforded to his department to allow newspapers to be distributed free. This is literature that should pass free as its distribution is advancing the knowledge of the country not only in political but in other matters. Whilst I am on my feet I may say that we have a post office on the Cornwall road at New Cornwall, with John E. Hallimore as postmaster. An application on behalf of the people in that district has been made for a tri-weekly instead of a weekly service. It is a very thickly settled district and one that is deserving of a more frequent mail service. I believe that the hon. Postmaster General, from what he said when I had an interview with him the other day, will make an arrangement to give a tri-weekly service to this parish from Mahone Bay. We have a railway passing through my county and I can see no reason why the mail could not be dropped at the different places along the line once a day instead of weekly. There is one office that is only receiving a weekly mail although the train passes by daily. Very often letters are delayed either in transit to or from the various points for want of a daily mail.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the name of the place to which the hon. gentleman refers ?

Mr. KAULBACH. Block House, between Mahone Bay and Bridgewater, on the main line. If a tri-weekly mail is granted to New Cornwell from Mahone Bay that office can be served tri-weekly by the courier that would serve the office at New Cornwall. This is a reasonable request and I feel satisfied that the hon. Postmaster General will see it in the same light and give it favourable consideration.

Mr. BLAIN. In looking over the report of the hon. Postmaster General, I see that the deficit for the first year of the hon. gentleman's administration ending the 30th June, 1897, was $586,540; in 1898, a deficit of $47,602; in 1899, a deficit of $457,420; in 1900, a deficit of $553,242; in 1901, a deficit of $512,014; in 1902, a deficit of $82,376. In these six years there was a total deficit of $2,239,194. The Postmaster General claims a surplus for the year ending June, 1903, of $292,702, so that this would leave a total deficit during the hon. gentleman's administration of $1,946,492. May I ask if that includes in each and every year the figures of the deficit with reference to the Yukon?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We commenced the Yukon mail service in 1897, I think, but of course it has developed very much since. In each annual report since we established the Yukon service, the hon. gentleman will find a special reference to that service. It has been the policy of the department up to the present to show separately the revenue and expenditure on the Yukon service, apart from the general service for the rest of Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister state the deficit in the Yukon postal service from its establishment up to the present?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give you that to-night.

Mr. KAULBACH. What increase does the minister purpose to give to the town postmasters, and how will he distinguish between the town and the village postmasters?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no distinction between town and village. All postmasters who are paid by commission will now receive an increase of 10 per cent over what they were receiving before.

Mr. POPE. I congratulate the Postmaster General upon realizing his ambition of having a surplus. I trust it will not become a fad with him to go on increasing these surpluses until he wipes out the deficits that have accumulated under his administration of seven years. If he attempted such a thing the post office service would be starved to death. I congratulate the Postmaster General on the prosperity of the country which has made it possible for him to realize that surplus. I have been spending a few weeks in the sparsely settled districts of the North-west, where the people are coming in so rapidly, and where for distances of over sixty and seventy miles which I have travelled, they have no mail service. I can quite understand that when the Postmaster General thought of the expense of carrying the mails into these outlying territories, and wishing to have a surplus, he would not venture to give them an adequate mail service. I would impress upon the Postmaster General, the absolute necessity of dispelling from his mind any idea of making the Post Office Department pay in the immediate future, seeing that we have so much development of that service before us. Those who have been used to living in closely settled communities in Europe or eastern Canada, find it very lonely when they settle on the western plains. Railway development has been very slow in that territory of recent years, and settlement is going long distances away from any centre of communication. The settlers are naturally desirous of being able to communicate with their people at home, and nothing stimulates immigration so much as the giving of facilities for that purpose. Any one who visits these communities and sees the anxiety with which the people await the coming of the mail, will appreciate that fact. In the district I refer to, there were only three settlers three years ago, but now there are more than fifty families. The mail is carried in by any one who happens to be able to take it by accident, and it is tumbled about from one house to another until a store is established, when that is made the central point of distribution. The Postmaster General must see how unsatisfactory such a system is. Let me say, that while I am perfectly satisfied that the Postmaster General should increase the salaries of country postmasters, I do not know that I am so very much wrapt up in that idea, as other hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, perhaps I am not so much dependent upon them. While I have no objection to the Postmaster General increasing the salaries of these gentlemen, yet I certainly would not desire that his doing so should lead to the starvation of the mail service in western Canada, because I look upon the development of the mail service in the west as being absolutely essential to the satisfactory settlement of that country. Believing as I do, that the development of the west is more important to us than the increasing of the salaries of country postmasters, so far as I am personally concerned, I hope that the Postmaster General will see that whatever increases in salaries he makes, they will not be taken from the mail service of the west. I trust that in the future the Postmaster General will not let a few hundred dollars expense interfere with the development of our postal service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I quite appreciate the importance of giving to the people who are coming into our North-west, the best possible mail service. When an application is made for a post office that application is referred to the inspector and he makes a report. I think I am strictly within the facts when I say, that in no instance has there been any refusal to establish a post office which has been recommended by the inspector. Indeed, in many instances I have established post offices where the inspector recommended they were not necessary. If the inspector recommends it, the office is established, and it may be relied upon that Mr. McLeod, the inspector in that territory, a capable and intelligent man will make recommendations wherever there is reasonable justification. I think no one can complain that we have not liberally extended the post offices throughout the territories.

To provide for an appointment of seven additional railway mail clerks—$3,500.

Mr. POPE. What is this for ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Telegraph lines, Yukon system—working expenses, $62,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is for the maintenance and operation of these lines.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the experience of the working of these lines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The operation costs $179,000 in round numbers, and the receipts this year, judging by the nine months, will amount to about $120,000, leaving a deficit of a little over $50,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the deficit growing smaller or larger every year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The construction account was closed only a few months ago. The revenue is increasing. Last month it was $14,000, which is a couple of thousand dollars larger than ever before. The rates had been perhaps prematurely lowered. The expenses can be cut down after this year, I think, to some extent, so that I imagine the deficit will decrease every year.

Mr. BOYD. What does the minister mean by the rates being prematurely lowered ? Last year the Minister of Public Works promised to test the question of lowering the rates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were lowered some months ago from $4.50, I think, to $3 for ten words, and the press rate has been reduced from 3 cents a word to ½ cent a word.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What means has the minister for repairing the lines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are linemen at stations along the lines. This expense increases the cost of operating these lines beyond the ordinary lines.

Mr. BOYD. I understand that the increase of revenue has come about since the reduction in rates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, the line was not completed. The large branches which have been added to the line contribute to the deficit, as they do not yield much revenue.

Mr. POPE. Where do these branches run ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The longest runs to Port Simpson. The prospect is that the revenue will improve and the expenditure will decrease.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the minister give us the figures of the total construction account to date ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a little less than $900,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Can he give us the amount paid on construction account during this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot tell my hon. friend. The construction account is now closed.

Some resolutions reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows :

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons Further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1904, and in accordance with the provisions of 'The British North America Act, 1867,' the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, 14th October, 1903.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, the Message and Supplementary Estimates were referred to the Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman give us any information as to when the resolution regarding the Quebec bridge will be brought down ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope the matter will be ready for presentation at the next sitting of the House on Friday.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the business on Friday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will proceed with the remaining supplementary estimates, probably with the railway estimates first.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, October 16, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE—BINDER TWINE.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia) moved :

That the House do concur in the eighth and final report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, and especially that 40,000 copies of the evidence of the inspector of binder twine be printed forthwith in pamphlet form, in the usual numerical proportions of English and French, as advance sheets of the committee's final report, for distribution to members of parliament less 100 copies for the use of the committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation to the printing of the evidence.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to entirely dissent from the motion, but it seems to have two distinct features, first, that the House concur in the report and, secondly, that it concur especially in a certain part of the report. It seems to me to be a very unique form of expression. We either concur in the report or we do not concur in it. If we only desire to concur in a portion of the report, that portion should be stated, and we should not say that we concur especially in a certain part of it. I do not admire the wisdom of concurring in that report, and for the following reasons : The portion of it which we are asked specially to concur in is the publication of 40,000 copies of the evidence given by Mr. Haycock as the inspector of binder twine, to be given to the people of the country. In so far as the information contained in the evidence would be valuable to the farmers, I have not the slightest objection in the world to having it distributed, but in so far as it discloses how imperfectly the work was performed and the shortcomings of that particular individual in allowing a thing to be done which I think should not have been done, I think it is very unwise that we should disseminate that information any farther than possible. What I refer to is the manner in which Mr. Haycock has discharged his duty.

Mr. Haycock was appointed as an inspector to carry out the provisions of the Act 2 Edward VII., chapter 32 : 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the packing and sale of certain staple commodities,' in which reference is made to binder twine. He was appointed for the purpose of examining binder twine and of seeing that the binder twine offered for sale complies with the requirements of the law. What are the requirements of the law ? The requirements of the law are that :

Every manfacturer, importer or dealer who neglects to comply with the provisions of this section shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty of not less than twenty-five cents per ball ; and every manufacturer, importer or dealer of binder twine which is not of the length per pound which is stamped upon the ball, shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty of not less than one dollar and not more than twenty-five dollars per ball, and all such twine deficient in quantity shall be confiscated to the Crown : provided that no deficiency in the number of feet contained in any bail shall be deemed a contravention of this section unless the deficiency exceeds five per cent of the length stated upon the stamp.

Any proceedings under this section shall be taken within six months from the sale of any such ball.

The word 'dealer' whenever it occurs in this section shall be held to mean the dealer who is the direct purchaser from the manufacturer.

There were two things that Mr. Haycock was bound to look after, first, that the balls should contain the name of the manufacturer, and, second, that they should have stamped upon them the number of feet per pound. Well, Mr. Haycock went out to discharge his duties, and he found twine that did not comply with the requirements of the law. He said in his evidence before the Committee on Agriculture :

I visited a large number of places and I may just say that the first place, the first point at which I got any bad twine was at Gretna. There I found a lot of twine that was not marked in accordance with the Act and I inflicted a penalty of $25 which was paid and deposited to the credit of the Receiver General of Canada.

By Mr. Gilmour:

Q. And do you say you inflicted a penalty ?
A. I did.

By Mr. Sproule :

Q. You inflicted a penalty without bringing the party before a magistrate ?
A. I did so. The party was satisfied and would sooner pay the penalty than go before a magistrate. However, it is a matter for you people to discuss.

You went on to state that :

By Mr. Blain :

Q. Do I understand that after the fine you had the twine re-marked and that the agent went and sold it ?
A. Yes.

We contended that he had no such authority.

Q. Do you consider you would have the right and power to do that ?

A. I find the Act says that every ball of binder twine that is offered for sale shall have attached to it a stamp with the name of the manufacturer, the importer or dealer, and the number of feet per pound. This twine had the name of the manufacturer but not the number of feet per pound and I had to fine this man. I told him that all he had to do was to put the number of feet per pound on that ball and that it would comply with the Act.

Q. Surely that man would not have the power, would he ?

A. I do not know why ?

Q. I can easily understand why.

A. Not if he marks it properly. If he marks it improperly, then he is liable to a penalty of $1 per ball.

Q. Suppose that any dealer in this city had ten tons of twine ?

A. Yes.

Q. And you went and inspected it and found it did not come up to the requirements of the Act ?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you think that the dealer had any right, under your instructions to mark the twine with the number of feet and then go and sell it ?

A. He could mark it anything he liked.

Q. Not after paying the penalty ?

A. Yes.

Q. Surely, the agent would not have that power ? I would have thought that twine ought to be put off the market entirely. . . .

A. . . . . I said to this man, 'If you had the number of feet per pound, neither I nor any one else could touch it, and if you put the number of feet on the twine that it actually measured, you would be perfectly safe.'

Here is a party who was selling twine that did not comply with the law, and yet he is authorized to measure and mark it himself. This was held by many members of the Committee on Agriculture to be an authority not given to the inspector under the Act.

Q. Supposing an agent in this city was to buy ten tons of twine and it had on a tag such as you have in your hand, and bore the name of the importer. If that is put on, then the agent having the twine could decide for himself the number of feet per ton and put it on himself ?

A. Yes, and if he does not do it correctly then he is liable to a fine of $1 per ball and confiscation.

Q. Then the Act has no value because it says it must bear the statement of the manufacturer ?

A. It says the manufacturer, importer or dealer.

Q. If you allow that to go, then each man would have the right to put the number of feet per pound on himself?

Further on he was asked :

Q. Do I understand you to say that this twine shall be confiscated to the Crown or not ?

A. No, it did not make any misrepresentation. The tag does not make any representation at all as to the number of feet.

Because there was no tag on it, and therefore he could not confiscate. He says :

I had instructions from the department that I have the power to collect the penalty.

He was asked again :

Q. You consider that under the statute you are authorized to impose the penalty and collect it ?

A. I do not impose the fine ; I simply collect the penalty.

It seems to me that is a distinction without a difference.

I do not convict the man. I simply collect the penalty.

Q. You persuade him that a fine will be imposed upon him, and that he had better pay you ? Is that the case ?

A. They simply prefer it that way ? Yes, that is the way.

He goes on further :

Q. Have you a tag that was taken off certain twine that did not comply with the law ?

A. Yes. That is improperly marked too ; the name of the manufacturer is not on it.

By Mr. Sproule :

Q. Do you fine according to the Act a dollar a ball for every ball ? What did you do with that case ?

A. The Act, if you will read it carefully, says that the dealer shall be held to be the direct purchaser from the manufacturer. The gentleman in whose possession I found this twine did not purchase it from the manufacturer, so, according to the Act, I could not treat with that man.

He finds the twine in the possession of a man who is selling twine not properly marked, and he says that because this dealer is not a direct purchaser from the manufacturer, he cannot fine him, as the law does not authorize him to do so. Then, that is a lamentable defect in the Act. Then in answer to Mr. Henderson, he says :

The Act says the word 'dealer,' whenever it occurs in this section, shall be held to mean the dealer who is the direct purchaser from the manufacturer.

Now, here are two features of the case to which I wish to direct attention. In the first place, the inspector assumes that he is to fine the party who has in his possession twine that is not properly marked, without lodging a complaint before a magistrate or before any tribunal that is authorized to try the case. He collects the fine and says he hands it over to the Receiver General. That is an authority which the Act does not give him. The Act says :

Every manufacturer, importer or dealer who neglects to comply with the provisions of this Act shall, upon summary conviction, be liable to a penalty of not less than twenty-five cents per ball, or $25.

Now, I draw attention to the fact that there was no conviction before a magistrate and no complaint made. The man had no opportunity to defend himself, but the inspector comes in, imposes a fine, collects the money, and deals with it as he sees fit. He says he passes it over to the Receiver General. That may or may not be correct. I am not calling that in question ; but I am drawing attention to the fact that he is exercising an authority which he does not possess under the Act. The other feature of the case is this, that where he finds twine in possession of the dealer, if the dealer is not prepared to say that he purchased it direct from the manufacturer, the inspector has no power to fine him. That is a defect in the Act as well as an excessive authority on the part of the inspector. I claim that he improperly exercised an authority which the Act does not give him. The authority of the inspector should be better defined or his instructions should be more explicit. I appeal to the Minister of Justice whether it is competent for any inspector to impose a fine without lodging a complaint before a competent tribunal, where the party alleged to have violated the law would have an opportunity to defend himself ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At first sight it would appear necessary for a man to lodge a complaint before a competent tribunal and have the man tried by a summary process. Unless there is something special in the Act, there would be no authority for the inspector to impose a penalty without that.

Mr. SPROULE. There is nothing in the Act which gives the inspector such authority. What I object to is publishing 40,000 copies of this evidence, and distributing them, containing evidence which only shows either the incompetency of parliament to pass a proper Act or the improper exercise of authority by the inspector in imposing the penalty.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Of course, I want to speak with some caution. It would appear to me that it would be necessary for the inspector to take proceedings before a competent tribunal before he could do anything. I would require to look into the matter and consider it, and would be quite willing to give an opinion to-morrow if the hon. gentleman will bring up the question then.

Mr. SPROULE. In that case, we had better postpone consideration of the motion until the Minister of Justice can look into it and give us the benefits of his judgment. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Committee on Agriculture and Colonization were unanimous in their opinion that this evidence should be printed, and desired that I should make some remarks on the matter in order to have the printing done as rapidly as possible and the report set before the country. I hope that the House will agree, in view of the unanimous decision of the committee, that no delay should be thrown in the way of publishing this report. If we were reviewing the Act, this discussion would be opportune, but under the circumstances I do not see that it is. If the powers of the inspector require to be more fully defined, that can be done by special legislation.

Mr. U. WILSON (Lennox). I have been a pretty constant attendant at the meetings of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, but I was absent at the particular one which adopted this report. There is one thing which pleases me in the evidence and that is that it fully establishes the fact that the only one of our Canadian manufacturers of twine was fined for shortage in measurement. All the other found short was American twine imported into this country. It is quite evident that putting twine on the free list does not tend to cheapen it or make the dealings more satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). If the motion to adjourn should carry, this report will go on Public Bills and Orders and not be reached this session. I would suggest that the report be adopted and any information required may be obtained in supply or in any other convenient form.

Mr. SPROULE. I question the wisdom of circulating 40,000 copies of evidence which is open to the objections I have just taken. We should first have an authoritative statement from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. S. HUGHES (Victoria). If this officer, Mr. Haycock, had no authority to levy these fines and if this evidence is to be printed, containing this statement that he believes he has authority, the farmers will possibly take what he says for granted, and he will be given the opportunity of exercising very improper powers.

Mr. E. COCHRANE (East Northumberland). I was at the meeting of the committee and asked this officer a question concerning his duties. He said that all he could do under the Act when the twine was not of proper length, was to confiscate it and to fine the parties. But if he found the twine without tags, he could not do anything under the Act. In that case the law should be amended. If we are satisfied that this man has no right to impose a fine and confiscate, this report should not be circulated. If no man should be fined without a trial, and if a magistrate only has the power to fine, this officer has been exceeding his duty and we should not send out a report which would give a false impression of his powers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I spoke to the inspector about the binder twine manufactured in American prisons, and he said it was not part of his duty to look after that, but it was for the Customs Department to deal with such twine. I do not see why that should not be part of his duties.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). If the law is defective and does not give authority to the inspector to impose a speedy remedy, it should be amended. But I approve of the printing of 40,000 copies of this special report and sending it broadcast throughout the country. It is evident, from the report, that the farmers have been imposed upon, and they should be made aware of it. According to the evidence, out of fourteen cases in which binder twine was found to be short in measurement, one came from Mexico, one from England, one from Canada and eleven from the States. Surely that should warn farmers against purchasing American binder twine. In order to get rid of this American twine and prevent our people being imposed upon, we should go back to the old principle and put a duty on the foreign article which will keep it out of the country.

It is quite evident that if encouragement were given to the manufacture of binder twine in this country, that all we want could be made in Canada. Nearly fifty per cent of our twine is manufactured in Canada now, even under the great difficulties that exist. The United States manufacturers have access to our market free of duty and they have their own market to sell their products, in which market Canadians are prohibited from entering by the tariff duties. All that our producers have is a portion of that Canadian market. I say that more encouragement should be given to men who produce an honest article and sell the farmers honest measure, and so prevent the twine from the United States being disposed of to our farmers who unwittingly buy it thinking that they are buying an honest article. I want the farmers to be educated on this point. I think that it will result in bringing about a far better state of things; that our farmers will be guarded against buying American twine and will see that it is to their interest to encourage this industry which, we believe can be doubled in extent, thus benefiting our workmen engaged in this industry as well as our farmers who buy the goods. I look upon the report as most important, and I believe that the greater currency that can be given to it the better in all interests.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I think the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) should not allow this report to be adopted in view of the information we have in that report that the government have authorized a man to go about practically compounding felony. He finds a man who has violated the law and says to him in effect: You are a violator of the law, but if you give me $25 we will say nothing about it. He has authority, apparently, to go about either blackmailing people or compounding felony. If we find a man who has violated the law why should he not be brought up and fined as provided by the law? I do not wonder at the chairman of the committee and other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House wanting a large number of copies of this report distributed. In my opinion, if ever there was a useless office, it is that to which Mr. Haycock has been appointed. These gentlemen opposite call Mr. Haycock here specially and get his evidence in such form that it can be printed in pamphlet and sent to the country. This is done in an attempt to show that this office is of some value and the holder of it is earning his money. Yet, by his own report and admission he is going around either blackmailing the parties whom he finds violating the law or compounding felony with them. The farmers of Canada are intelligent enough to know whether they are buying good twine or not, and they can see to it that they are getting full length, without paying Mr. Haycock $1,200 a year as a salary and $1,200 a year expenses to go about doing such work as he is doing. It is evident that this man has overstepped his duties and should be called down. He finds a man with twine that is not regular in his possession, and he says: You are violating the law, but I will let you go on and sell the balance of this if you will pay me $25. I can put it in my pocket and turn it into the revenue after. On a previous occasion I brought here a statement showing that men had paid fines for illegal fishing to one of the officers of this government, and there was no record of any return of that fine to the department. I do not say that Mr. Haycock would pocket the money, but I say that if the government send out this officer and he finds the law being violated it is the duty of the government to see that those who violate the law are punished, and not called upon to pay so much money to hush it up. It is the duty of the Minister of Justice to look into the matter immediately.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I conceive that my duty is to speak with considerable care and caution, and not to talk of men as blackmailers and compounders of felony without some knowledge of the facts.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I think the question raised by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the remarks of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) do not really cover the point at issue. That point is the adoption of the final report of the Committee on Agriculture, which sums up in general terms the work of the committee during the session, and gives valuable information as to the extension of the agricultural industry in Canada during the year.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister will allow me, I stated that I did not object to the adoption of the report of the Agricultural Committee, but I questioned the wisdom of the portion of the report which recommended the printing of 40,000 copies of the evidence referred to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the same time, the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule's) motion for the adjournment of the debate, if carried, practically means that this report will not be adopted, printed or disributed.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked if that would prevent the adoption of the report, and finding that that might be the effect, I asked that the motion be allowed to stand or be withdrawn until the Minister of Justice could look over the matter as he desired to do. I have no desire to prevent the report being considered and being finally dealt with by the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule's) object is to get the Minister of Justice's opinion on this question, that can be done without holding over this report. The legality of the inspector's conduct, and the general question of binder twine I do not propose to discuss. But I must say that I think it is very important that the information contained in this report should be put before the farmers.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the minister one question? Would he put before the farmers the statement made by the inspector that he was instructed by the department to act as he did?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think there is any objection to the evidence of the inspector going out. If it is correct, it can be remedied by the discussion which will arise when the information comes from the Department of Justice. But, for the House to interfere with the distribution of this report among the farmers, I think, would be an injury to agriculture. I coincide with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that this statement of the inspector showed that Canadian binder twine is up to the legal standard and that it was American binder twine almost entirely that suffered by the inspection. That is of the greatest importance to our farmers and to the binder twine industry. But in this report as it appears there is no statement as regards the legal point. That appears only in the evidence which will be printed. I do not think the statement is more important than hundreds of others which appear in the evidence which comes before the committee and which are dealt with and sifted by the inquiries of the committee at the time they are given. But I would point out to my hon. friend and to the House that this report, the adoption of which is here moved, was adopted unanimously by the committee, no objection being taken to it by any one. And that committee passed a unanimous resolution asking that this large number of the report should be printed for distribution. Under these circumstances, I think the House will be safe in adopting the report of the committee.

Mr. A. W. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). Before this vote is taken, I wish to say one word with reference to the inspection of twine and with regard to this report. Perhaps you are not aware, Mr. Speaker, that when this matter came up first in the committee they were exceedingly pleased with the evidence they had received from the inspector of binder twine, and anxious that the information which he had given should go to the farmers at large. Now in order that that might be done a motion was presented, which I had the honour to second, that 20,000 copies of this report should be printed and sent broadcast. But the member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), who understands the workinig of these things thoroughly well in his own part of the country, at once rose and said: No, we should have at least 40,000 copies printed. Then the question arose whether 40,000 was sufficient, whether we should not have 50,000 printed and distributed broadcast, and there was a unanimous opinion in the committee that there should be not less than 40,000 printed, and that is the motion which carried. The reason we wished these to go broadcast is this, among others: It is difficult for a farmer or dealer in binder twine to tell the difference between two balls of twine where there is no more than one cent a pound difference in the price. If any one were to take a ball of Plymouth Special, say, or a ball of Blue Ribbon, and take the tag off one ball and place it on the other, and send these out, no one will be able to say which brand it was. One may have more feet in length than another, but a farmer would not know the difference, because he has no way of measuring it. But the information which was given to us the other day by this inspector gives the farmers knowledge of a way by which they can test the length of these balls of twine, information which the farmers have not got to-day. I myself who have been selling twine ever since it was placed on the market, never knew how to do it; and if a dealer who has been in the business for years could not tell how, can you expect a farmer, who has nothing of the experience that a dealer has, to tell what kind of twine or what number of yards there are in a ball? For these reasons I think it is desirable that this report as it was introduced should pass this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a motion to adjourn the debate. Does the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) wish to press it?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not desire to press the motion. I desired to get an authoritative statement of the Minister of Justice regarding the question before we adopted the report. I withdraw my motion.

Motion (Mr. Douglas) agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE moved that this House do concur in the 7th and 8th Reports of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the Official Reports of the Debates of this House during the present session.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that this House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed railway resolutions (page 13549). His Excellency the Governor General has been made acquainted with the subject-matter of these resolutions, and recommends them to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT HIGH COMMISSION.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the government to the following despatch from Boston, under date of October 13th, which I find in the Toronto 'World' of October 15th:

Wm. E. Brigham, secretary of the New England Reciprocity League, has received a letter from a high official source in Canada of which the following is the most important part:

It is of course undeniable that the anxiety for reciprocity in Canada has diminished very greatly, and the country would not view the failure of negotiations in the same light as it would have done a few years ago, still I have every faith in the probability of securing the acceptance of a treaty if the Joint High Commission meets, as I think it will be likely to do, by the 1st of December. Our session is nearing a close.

So this must have come from a member of parliament.

We shall probably complete our labours some time this week. Prorogation probably will be followed by a communication between Laurier and Senator Fairbanks. If all goes well the date for the commission will then be arranged. We will then get together——

I take it this must be a member of the commission who is writing.

—and see what can be done. It will be a meeting of momentus importance, for we are either about to establish better trade relations between Canada and the United States or enter upon a career where we shall be governed exclusively by our belief as to what our own interests require. I feel anxious to see the end reached and to know which one of the roads that lead into a parting of the ways we shall enter.

I wish to ask if this statement has the authorization of the government, or their sanction, or is it made with their knowledge, or have they any information to give this House with regard to the subject?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid we cannot accept responsibility for the Toronto 'World's' editorials or correspondence, whether they be written in Boston or Ottawa. The attitude of the government on this important question was indicated at an earlier stage of the session, and that is the precise position of the government to-day.

CATTLE EMBARGO.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to refer to another question. I find the following telegraphic despatch in the Ottawa 'Citizen' of this morning:

CATTLE EMBARGO.

Lord Onslow, says Restrictions on Canadian Cattle Cannot be Removed.

London, October 15.—A deputation of Scotch farmers met Lord Onslow, President of the Board of Agriculture, at Edinburgh to-day and tried to induce him to promise the removal of the restriction on the importation of Canadian cattle into Great Britain. His lordship declared this to be impracticable. He approved of the government's policy of a general restriction of cattle importation and said it should be adhered to.

(Canadian Special Cable.)

London, October 15.—Lord Onslow to-day at Edinburgh received a large influential deputation of the local authorities, of the harbour trust and agriculturists. The deputation impressed the necessity of the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of Canadian cattle. Lord Onslow said that after the vote of the House of Commons it was an impracticable suggestion to ask members of the government to bring in a Bill to repeal the restrictions. It did not appear that there was any scarcity of cattle, nor had the price of store cattle seriously risen. He thought the government was correct in adhering to the policy of retaining the restriction.

I wish to inquire whether the Minister of Agriculture has joined this deputation, or taken any steps to assist them in their effort to get the restrictions removed since Lord Onslow has become President of the Board of Agriculture instead of the late president, Mr. Hanbury?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat, and I would have preferred that the answer should come from him. But I may say that a change of Colonial Secretary, or a change of a minister in England, without a change of government, does not always involve a change of policy; and the action of the imperial government as disclosed in the correspondence which was submitted to the House some time ago, indicates that Lord Onslow will adhere to the policy which the government have had on that question. I am not aware whether the Minister of Agriculture has had any important communication on the subject, but I am afraid that the report in the newspaper is well founded.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Department of Railways and Canals—salaries—to provide for an additional second-class clerk, $700.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This is a small item of civil government to provide for an additional clerk. It is simply to meet the growing needs of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is he to be employed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is to be employed in general clerical service in the inside service at Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman made the appointment yet ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nobody actually appointed. I have a gentleman in mind.

Railroads and canals—chargeable to capital—Intercolonial Railway, additional sidings along line, $63,500.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to provide for a number of new sidings and enlargement of new sidings at quite a number of points along the line.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Would the hon. Minister of Finance be good enough to say if there is to be something expended at Drummondville ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are some improvements contemplated at Drummondville, but they are not contemplated under this item.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is this money to be expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At quite a number of different places along the line. In some cases there are new sidings to be constructed and in many cases the sidings are to be lengthened owing to the longer trains that are used.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he declares that there is nothing to be spent at Drummondville for buying grounds, enlarging the yard and improving the sidings ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item does not include any appropriation for Drummondvillle, but there are improvements at Drummondville intended and covered by another item.

Mr. BARKER. Why is it not possible in these railway estimates to give more details than have been given ? We have one item of $63,500, another of $118,000, another of $5,000, another of $125,000, and so on. The information that is given is of very little use to us, and it does not in the least enable us in future years to see what has been done with these appropriations. In the other departments far more detail is given and it seems to be growing in the Railway Department as a custom to put the very largest sums of money down and to ask for a wholesale order. I do not think that it saves any time of the House. It certainly does not save money, because, over and over, we have been obliged to ask the minister to stand up in the House and give us details occupying the time of the House in giving these details that might have been given as well in the estimates themselves. If that course had feen followed a great many questions which have to be asked in the House would be saved.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Barker), on the best information I have, that there is no change whatever in the method of preparing these estimates and submitting them to the House. Take this item as an illustration ; although the aggregate is $63,500, it is made up of a number of small items. If you were to make a detailed estimate of each of these small items you would find yourself tied to the exact sum of each, and you would have a number of small items, which is not desirable. It is very desirable that the House should be informed of the class of work to be done, and if necessary, the places at which it is to be done, but I do not think it would be wise to make a special item of each of these works, because then you would be tied to the exact amount of each particular item.

Mr. BARKER. The explanation which the hon. minister has now given is the very best reason I could furnish for these particulars being given. It is notorious that in all departments, whether of a railway or of government, officials will endeavour to transpose money from one purpose to another. Sidings may be asked for at the beginning of the year for a particular place. During the year the departmental officials will have pressure brought to bear on them to spend the money somewhere else, and they simply cancel the appropriation as made and use it at another place. That is a kind of thing we object to. It is a thing that all railway companies have strictly stamped out, and it should be the same in parliament. If an appropriation is made to an officer of a railway company for a particular purpose the officer is not allowed to use it for any other purpose, and if the department has arranged for a certain sum of money to be expended on certain works, it is not right, though the hon. minister suggests it would be right, that there should be any transference of the money to another purpose. I therefore say again what I said last session and during the previous session, that there ought to be more particulars given in these cases, and the only remedy we have if they are not given in the printed estimate is to ask the minister to state in the House in detail what he is going to do with the money, so that it may go on 'Hansard.' It will be cheaper to the country to put the details in print and then we need not ask the minister to give elaborate statements to go on 'Hansard.'

Mr. COCHRANE. Am I to understand the hon. minister to say that he should not always be confined to spending money in the way in which he asks the committee to vote it? For instance, I might have no doubt in my mind about the propriety of voting $118,000 for double-tracking part of the line. If I understand the hon. minister's explanation rightly, he asks the committee to consent to the expenditure of $118,000 for double-tracking the line, but he does not wish to be confined to spending the money for that purpose, but he wishes to be in a position to spend it in any other way that he sees fit. Is that the right construction to put upon the hon. minister's explanation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly not.

Mr. COCHRANE. What did the hon. minister mean when he stated that he did not want to be confined to spending the money in a certain way?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If I conveyed that impression I was very unfortunate in my use of words. I can assure my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that there is nothing new in this appropriation. It is the precise method of appropriation that has been followed for generations, but I do not plead that as a reason why it should be continued, because if it were a bad method I would be quite prepared to have it reformed. I am aware of no difficulty that has arisen under it. I prefer to believe that it is a wise thing to do. But this is for a special class of work; it is for additional sidings. It cannot be devoted to anything else. The vote for the double track which my hon. friend refers to can only be applied to that purpose. I can give the names of the places where we contemplate building sidings; but I do not think it would be wise to confine us to a particular amount for a particular siding. Suppose, for instance, that one siding is estimated to cost $2,000 and another $3,000, and suppose it is found that they cost about $2,500 each; I do not think it would be wrong to apply the $5,000 for the two sidings in that way. All we say is that in giving this estimate we should not be obliged to specify the amount to be spent on each particular siding. Suppose we found during the year that a siding was urgently needed which was not contemplated at the time the estimates were presented, we think we should be able to meet that particular need. The engineer's estimates for sidings vary from $2,000 up to $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000; there is one estimate of $10,000 for a siding at Campbellton; but with that exception all the sums are comparatively small, none of them more than about $6,000. The places at which new sidings are contemplated are: Assametquaghan, Millstream, Clark's Brook, Cedar Hill, St. Moise, St. Anne, between Red Pine and Bartibogue, between Bartibogue and Beaver Brook, Chatham Junction, Sackville 'Y,' Milford, Windsor Junction, Pomquet, Campbellton, Jacquet River, Belledune, Iona, and a small amount for engineering.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). These works will all be done by the ordinary railway foremen and sectionmen?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, by the usual method.

Mr. BARKER. I will persist in the point which I have made. The very thing the hon. gentleman thinks is objectionable is done by every railway company which operates a large railway, perhaps more than double the length of the Intercolonial. In other departments of the government, we find the estimates detailed. Thus in the Public Works Department, there are items from $1,000 up to $10,000, each place being given. According to the hon. gentleman's view, all that would be necessary would be to take a lump sum appropriation, and let the government spend the money where they liked. Having put down in the list at the beginning of the year $5,000 for a siding at one place, and $10,000 for another, the officials of the government or the minister may in the course of the year vary the appropriations, and spend $10,000 where it was proposed to spend $5,000 and $5,000 where it was proposed to spend $10,000, and so on. That is not what is expected. I quite admit that if you got down to spending $4 or $5, there might be some reason in what the hon. gentleman says; but when he speaks of $10,000 for a siding at one particular place not being an item that should be mentioned in the estimates, I do not agree with him. When $10,000 is put down for a siding at Campbellton or anywhere else, it should not be possible for the minister to use any portion of that appropriation for another purpose.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid that I am obliged to disagree with my hon. friend. I think that the present system is the best, and that the system he proposes would be unworkable. I think it is far better to first give the House an intimation of the places at which these works are contemplated, and then leave the government with a free hand as to the details of the work. I must not contradict my hon. friend, but I am rather of opinion that no railway company would submit to its directors, certainly not to its shareholders, a detailed statement of all such expenditures. It would submit that a certain sum was needed for certain works, and leave the details to engineers.

Mr. BARKER. When the engineer makes up his estimate of what he requires during the season, he has to submit that in detail to the management, and he is held to the expenditure as authorized. Here we are acting somewhat in the position of the manager of a railway who is allotting to the engineer a certain sum of money for a certain purpose. I do not say that there might not be a reasonable sum set apart for emergency cases which might arise during the year ; but that does not justify the minister in taking a wholesale appropriation covering points that he knows about. He mentioned several cases where he wants appropriations of $10,000, $5,000 or $6,000. Why should we not have particulars of these ? Why should we not know that $10,000 is to be expended at a particular point for sidings ? Then, in a year or two from now, when parliament will be inquiring into the expenditure, the authority will be before us. Otherwise members will have to search 'Hansard' to see what the minister had said in regard to each case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman says that if an engineer of a great railway made his estimate of an amount required, he would have to give the details, and would be held strictly to those details. Again I must disagree with my hon. friend. What might occur is this, the engineer might make a report during the year that one of the sidings for which an appropriation was made was not pressing, but that he needed another ; or that two or three sidings would cost less than the amounts estimated, while others would cost more. It would be the duty of the chief engineer to report to the manager in these cases. I think the practice would be much the same in the case of a great railway as it is in the case of the government railway.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does the minister say that such a thing happens as that the engineer of a railway decides that he wants a siding at a certain place and makes an estimate of the cost, and that he is so far out that $2,000 or $3,000 would not be needed, and the money would be spent somewhere else ? Would the hon. minister tell the committee that there is an engineer on the railway who would make such a mistake ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not consider it a mistake. We vote so much for sidings, and instead of spending money on one particular siding we spent it on another. Suppose we were to follow the course suggested by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and vote $3,000 to be spent on one siding and $2,000 on another, making a total of $5,000 for the two, and suppose that on more careful examination it turns out that the sidings would cost $2,500 each, where would be the wrong in spending $2,500 on each instead of $3,000 on one and $2,500 on the other ?

Mr. BLAIN. The committee are asked to vote money for specific purposes and the department appropriates that to other purposes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of the same class.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the hon. minister tell us where the money was expended which was voted last year and whether the full amount was expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The appropriation for last year, according to the memorandum furnished me, was $50,000, and we expended $41,638.

Mr. BLAIN. But there was a revote of $135,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. According to the memo. given me, the appropriation in 1902-3 for additional sidings was $50,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I entirely agree with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that in asking parliament for money the government should specify the particular locality where it is to be expended and the purpose. That is what is done by the Minister of Public Works. There ought to be an estimate submitted for so much money to build a siding at such a place and so much at another place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In both departments we are following out the usual system. In many cases, these details in the estimates are embarrassing to the Public Works Department, and it is not always in the public interest that they should be adhered to closely. But there is a difference between a public work and a railway. These public works are far apart and not connected the one with the other whereas a railway is one continuous property.

Mr. SPROULE. The St. Lawrence river is one continuous highway yet we have a separate vote for each harbour upon it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And you have large sums voted for dredging without specifying the places.

Mr. SPROULE. There might be a specific amount voted to meet such a case as that, but not as a general rule. There might be an amount voted which would be available for any urgent work and which the minister could use without having the place specified.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice in the estimates of last year, that on April 29th, we voted $50,000 for additional sidings along the line, and on April the 12th there was a re-vote of $135,000, is the hon. minister correct when he says that less than $50,000 of that was expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would prefer, for my own satisfaction, to let the item stand until later in the day.

Mr. KEMP. Might I inquire from the minister what is the rule on the Intercolonial Railway when sidings are put in for a private individual or corporation ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government grants some aid temporarily, which is repaid through the freights.

Mr. KEMP. What are the conditions ? Are the conditions uniform ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the intention, and in all cases that have come under my notice the rule has been the same. The parties are required to grade the siding and prepare it for the rails, and the government usually loans them the rails or advances the price of the rails, and then a proportion is deducted from freights until the account is squared. I am not aware of any departure from that rule.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Does the government charge interest on the cost of the rails ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not.

Mr. KEMP. It is customary on other railroads to charge interest on the material that is not perishable. I was under the impression that the government exacted less onerous conditions from its patrons than other roads did.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that we do not exact the interest. The general complaint of people who come to me is that we are a little more exacting than are private corporations in the matter of sidings. I have not had an opportunity of investigating that, but I was told so quite recently.

Mr. KEMP. I do not know that the government railway should grant privileges to private individuals which it is not customary for other railways to grant. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway charge the parties for sidings to the extent of the grading and the ties and other perishable material. Then the party has to pay the interest at 6 per cent, I think, on the rails that are used.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In our case we do not collect the interest, but we do collect the capital.

Mr. KEMP. I fancy it is on perishable material only.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The practice on the Intercolonial Railway is that the party desiring a siding must practically make the road ready for the rails, and the government contributes to the extent of the value of the rails, either by loaning the rails or giving a cash equivalent. The interest is not charged, but the capital sum itself is charged, and is repaid by the parties from time to time through the adjustment of freight account. I know they say we are harder on them than are the companies.

Double tracking parts of line (revote, $18,000), $118,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is for a portion of the double tracking of the Intercolonial Railway between Halifax and Windsor junction. That part of the road carries not only the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, but, under an arrangement with the Dominion Atlantic Railway, which leases the Windsor branch, it carries also the whole traffic of western Nova Scotia. The department has been gradually double tracking that section, although it has possibly not been done as rapidly as we should have done it. However, it is rather an expensive work. There was appropriated for this service last year $30,000, of which we expended $11,918. That leaves an amount of $18,000 to be revoted, to which we are adding $100,000 for double tracking three or four miles between Rockingham and Windsor junction, making $118,000 for work which we propose to do during the present year. The whole work will be somewhat expensive, and we will have to ask votes for it in future years.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the government taken any steps to secure property along the Bedford basin for wharf accommodation ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have a vote in connection with terminal facilities at Halifax, but the particular place at which property may be taken has not been mentioned. It contemplates getting additional accommodation wherever we find property suitable and at a moderate price. Whether we should go to the Bedford basin or not we cannot at present determine.

Mr. BARKER. How many miles of double tracking are there between Halifax and Windsor junction ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The distance from Richmond—the outer portion of Halifax station—to Windsor junction is 13 miles. It is estimated that it will cost $23,000 a mile, making the total cost $299,000. It will necessitate the building of a bridge over the Sackville river, estimated to cost $50,000, so that the estimate for the whole work is $349,000. We have let a contract for a portion of the work at a more favourable price than the estimate.

Mr. BARKER. Were those contracts let in the ordinary way after tenders were called ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. The notes I have here indicate that the contractors are doing the work at reasonable prices; somewhat below the engineer's estimate.

Mr. BARKER. Although it is costing $23,000 a mile to double track ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimate of the engineer was that it might cost $23,000 a mile, but I find here that it will cost about $21,000 a mile for a distance of 2½ miles. When the rails are laid it will cost about $20,000 a mile. It is very rocky around the shore of the Bedford basin, and it is rather expensive work.

Mr. BARKER. What is the weight of the rails ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Eighty pounds.

Mr. KEMP. Is the government considering the propriety of double tracking the Intercolonial Railway to Truro ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has occasionally been mentioned, but it is a pretty serious undertaking. While I cannot say that the matter has not been considered, yet we have not attempted to do it.

Mr. KEMP. Is that single line still sufficient for the traffic ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. The business between Truro and Halifax is very considerable, and at times some persons might think double tracking desirable, but the chief engineer tells me that we are still able to handle the traffic with reasonable promptness.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman say that this line is to cost $23,000 a mile with rails ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineer's estimate was $23,000 a mile for the whole line. There is an error here in the figures, which says that the total cost of the line under contract will be $20,000. The contractors' figures for the portion under contract would represent about $21,000 per mile, to which will have to be added the cost of the rails.

Mr. BARKER. Then the portion under contract will exceed the estimate ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimate was for the whole distance, but this particular portion of the road is a very heavy section.

Increased accommodation at St. John, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is for the cost of a gantry or travelling crane.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this to be used for ?

Mr. BARKER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in connection with the construction of the new engine-house.

Mr. FOWLER. This vote is to provide increased facilities at the port of St. John, and in connection with it, I might perhaps properly ask the minister for some information in reference to the contract which the government has with the Allan Steamship Company. I wish to know, if it is contemplated that the number of sailings of the Allan steamers between St. John and Liverpool shall be reduced this winter ? As I understand it, the government have a contract with the Allans to run five ships on that route, and the Allans have asked that instead of five ships they shall run only three during the winter. The Allan Company receive a certain subsidy, in consideration of which they are to perform a certain number of sailings between St. John and Liverpool, and I am informed that they have applied to the government to be permitted to reduce this number of sailings. I am informed that in order to back up their application they, in a sort of clandestine way, prevailed upon certain individuals in the city of St. John to sign a petition to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in support of their request. The city council of St. John got word of the matter, and a special meeting was called, and strong resolutions were passed in condemnation of the proposal to make any alteration in the present contract with the Allan Company, on the ground that it would do serious damage to the trade of St. John. What is the state of affairs with respect to this matter, and how do negotiations stand at present ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I regret that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here, because, as the contract with the Allan Company is a matter affecting his department, I would prefer that he should answer. However, I quite realize that my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) is entitled to the information, and if he will permit me, I will endeavour to explain the situation, though I will have to do so by more than pronouncing a simple yea or nay. Let me say at the beginning, that no change is contemplated which is likely to materially reduce the volume of business at St. John. I think I am in a position to state that there will be more steamers loading at St. John during the present winter than during any past winter season ; certainly not less, and the indications are that there will be more. The contract of the government with the Allan Company is primarily a mail contract. Years ago the mails were taken from Portland, and after the completion of the Intercolonial Railway it was decided that mails should be taken from Halifax. There was no question then of going to St. John at all ; Halifax was the mail port. The steamers still went on to Portland and loaded or unloaded their cargoes, so that practically they continued to make Portland their winter port. Some years ago, the government came to the conclusion that that should be no longer permitted, and, that though the contract was only for mails, we could use it incidentally for the development of Canadian trade. The government, therefore, gave notice to the Allan Company, that if they wished to continue the mail service they must load their ships in Canada—not at any particular port in Canada; the government were not especially concerned in that—but that they must load wherever in Canada they were satisfied they could do so to the best advantage. The Allen Company thereupon arranged to load at St. John for the greater part of their cargoes, and to take some small part of their cargoes in Halifax in connection with the mail. That has been the arrangement for a number of years. In the existing contract with the Allan Steamship Company there is a condition, which they required—and which seemed a reasonable condition—that they would only be obliged to load at St. John when they could find cargo to load with. This year the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having acquired a line of steamers of their own, a new state of affairs arose. The Allan Line business at St. John has been carried out through an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, over whose railway line practically the whole of the cargo came. This year, the Canadian Pacific Railway, having acquired a fleet of steamers of its own, was not able to give the Allan Line the amount of cargo which was required. It is not contemplated that St. John shall have any less business or any less number of steamers, but what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company desired was, that they should load their own steamers instead of loading the Allan Line steamers. The Allan Line people, having communicated with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and having been assured by them that they were not able to give them the traffic, inasmuch as they would require to give the greater part of it to the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers—a very natural and reasonable conclusion—the Allan Line people then applied for permission to withdraw a portion of their fleet. They proposed that, instead of running five steamers to St. John, they would run three and for the remainder they would do their best to find cargoes elsewhere. I think it will be generally admitted that for the Canadian Pacific Railway to prefer to supply traffic to their own steamers could not be regarded as unreasonable. On the other hand, if they were not able to supply the trade to the Allans it would be unreasonable to expect the Allan steamers to go to St. John and come away empty. The government, knowing that St. John would do no less business and that no fewer steamers would be there than before, this being a mere transfer from the Allans to the Canadian Pacific Railway vessels loading at St. John, saw no reason why they should not meet the request of the Allan Company that they be allowed to send to St. John only as many steamers as they could arrange to have cargoes for. Under the arrangement they propose that three out of five steamers shall load at St. John as usual. The remainder of the traffic that has been carried by the Allan Line would go to St. John as usual, and would be carried by the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers, instead of by the Allans. The Allan Line came to ask the co-operation of the Intercolonial to get them increased cargoes at Halifax; and arrangements are in progress which we hope will result in two steamers out of the five, being without cargo at St. John, coming to load at Halifax. What success will be attained remains to be seen. We are glad, on the part of the Intercolonial, to do anything we can to meet the request of the Allans as regards these shipments, as we shall be glad to meet any request for the development of trade at any of our Canadian ports

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot understand why arrangements should be made to have the Allan steamships go to Halifax and co-operate with the Intercolonial, when the freight that they will get must come from the west. Because, this is not freight from Nova Scotia that is to go in these ships across the Atlantic, but it is freight developed in the west and carried by the Intercolonial. And, to load it on the steamships at Halifax it must be carried a much greater distance than to St. John. Why, then, would it be necessary to withdraw the steamships from St. John? There are facilities at St. John for all the trade that can be taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers, the Allan Line and the Donaldson or any other line that may go there. The Intercolonial has an elevator at St. John and other facilities provided by the government for the use of the road. I do not see why there should be this proposed discrimination against St. John. I do not see why steps should be taken by the Allan Steamship Line, evidently acting in collusion with the government, to get the signatures of the people of St. John for making this arrangement. These people were deceived, and many of them would be glad to have their names removed from the petition. They were asked, so I am instructed, when they signed that petition, to keep the matter secret for two days. That is a very strange proceeding on the part of the persons who circulated these petitions. I do not know who those persons were. The mere fact of being asked to keep the matter secret should have aroused suspicions that something was going to be done as against the port of St. John. I have failed to understand from the minister (Hon.

Mr. Fielding) why there should be a portion of the contract between the government and the Allans as to the sailings of their ships abrogated. If the Canadian Pacific Railway have agreed to provide freight to load three of their steamships, surely the Intercolonial, by virtue of its agreement with the Grand Trunk—and I suppose that still stands—will be able to secure freight at Montreal from the Grand Trunk, that being the very central idea of the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal. Surely the government can enforce that understanding to get enough freight to fill two ships at the port of St. John. It does not seem to me that the minister has given such an excuse as would warrant the government in undertaking the course it has pursued. It is rather singular that this change should be made so soon after the loss of a representative from New Brunswick from the ministry. It seems to me this is a very important reason why this loss should be made up as soon as possible, that the government should have the benefit of the counsel and advice of some member from the province of New Brunswick. If this sort of discrimination is made against us because of the loss of a minister the sooner we get a New Brunswick man in the cabinet the better for the province of New Brunswick.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. From the way the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) and many of his friends treated the representative of New Brunswinck when he was in the cabinet, this present sympathy with the ex-minister comes very badly from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler).

Mr. FOWLER. I am not sympathizing with him, but with the province.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman need not sympathize with the province or with the city of St. John, for the interests of both are being well looked after.

Mr. FOWLER. The people there do not think so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I know the people of St. John almost as well as does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler). Perhaps that may be a little strongly put, for the hon. gentleman lives in the vicinity, and I go there only occasionally. But I know the people of St. John to be a fair-minded, public-spirited and reasonable people, and I feel sure that the majority will not symphatize with the whine occasionally put up in this House and in the press about the injustice to St. John. There is no portion of the Dominion that has received fairer consideration from this government than has the city of St. John. It has received fair-play in the past, and I believe it will be content with fair-play in the future, and that is what it will receive. And if a few people here or there want something more than fair-play for any city, St. John, Halifax or any other, they may as well understand at once that they will be disappointed. There is no such violation of the contract the hon. gentleman suggests. While the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick to whom he refers was a member of the government, the condition was inserted in the contract—a reasonable condition—that these steamers should be obliged to load at St. John only when they could obtain business. Therefore, the condition under which we are acting existed in the contract before that hon. gentleman retired from the ministry.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the hon. minister allow me to ask a question? He says that there was no change in the contract by taking the two ships away. If that is so, why is it necessary to get the consent of the government to that? Why should the Allans find it necessary to go to the government if there has been no change in the conditions? According to the hon. minister, the Allans can simply send their ships where they please, to Canadian ports.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The answer to the hon. gentleman's question is, because the contract contained the condition that when there was no freight available at St. John for these steamers they were not obliged to go there. That condition is not changed in the contract. They come forward and tell us that they cannot obtain freight at St. John. That they have a right to do under the contract. The hon. gentleman speaks about some arrangement made in secret. I do not know anything about that. The Allans came to us and informed us that the Canadian Pacific Railway in future would not give them cargo for all their steamers at St. John. If St. John were losing traffic by the arrangement proposed, I could understand some complaint being made. But when the fact is that not a pound of freight that has been going to St. John will be taken away, and that she will have all the business she had before, I cannot see the ground for complaint. The hon. gentleman asks why we do not load these steamers from the Intercolonial at St. John. Because we were not asked to do it. If the Allan Line or any other and connecting railway companies—because they must co-operate—have a proposal to make the government looking to the supply of traffic for steamers over the Intercolonial, we will deal with them as readily and as liberally as we have done in the case of their proposal I have submitted. It is for the steamship companies to make the proposal. But the Allan Line, have come and asked us to facilitate the increased shipment of their cargoes at Halifax, for the reasons stated, that they cannot get a cargo at St. John because the Canadian Pacific Railway prefer to carry it themselves. We have met their application in the right spirit, and we will be prepared to meet a similar application in the same spirit, if it comes, as respects any other port in Canada with which the Intercolonial is connected.

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot understand why the hon. the Minister of Finance should complain of the people of St. John because this matter was brought up in the House. The hon. gentleman says there is a whine from the city of St. John——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say from the city of St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. They are not the sort of people that whine, they are prepared to stand up for their rights. They have made great sacrifices in order to establish a trade. The people of St. John have done what the people of no other portion of Canada has done, they have expended their own money. A large proportion of the money that is used for providing the facilities in the city of St. John has come out of the taxpayers. A million dollars has been expended in providing terminal facilities, and yet, because they resent the taking away of these ships, they are to be told by the acting Minister of Railways that they are whining. And that remark is applauded by some hon. members from Ontario, for instance, by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister did not say that the city of St. John was whining; it was some members who came from that province.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to tell the hon. member for West York that the minister made no such statement. There is no whine about it. Is it to be said that members of this House are whining because they are pointing out an injustice that is being done to the province from which they come; that they are whining because, being responsible for the rights of their province, they stand up and defend them? The hon. gentleman from West York himself whines on behalf of the market gardeners of West York. That is the sort of gentleman that he is. The member for West York was ready to whine very piteously the other day, when he was talking about freight rates on flour, because that is something that affected the hon. gentleman's own pocket. It struck him very hard then, and he was ready to whine louder than any cur that ever I heard.

Mr. TALBOT. Order.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not comparing the hon. gentleman to a cur. If the member for Bellechasse wants to take it that way, all right.

Mr. TALBOT. Judging from the language of the hon. gentleman, I think that he can take the cake over me. It fits his size.

Mr. FOWLER. In size I think I will compare favourably with the hon. gentleman from Bellechasse, certainly in physical size, and I trust that my mental size would be far beyond his.

Mr. TALBOT. In ability to bark.

Mr. FOWLER. But coming back to the subject we were discussing. The hon. gentleman made a discrimination——

Mr. TALBOT. I didn't say anything.

Mr. FOWLER. I was speaking to the minister, not to the member for Bellechasse. But the member for Bellechasse holds so important a place in his own imagination, that he thinks that if anybody makes a reference to any other member, he is referring to him. Now, let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the argument the hon. gentleman uses, that because no application was made by a steamship company to carry freight over the Intercolonial to St. John was a reason why they should not use the Intercolonial, and a reason why they should not carry freight there, is a very strange argument. Shall we never use the facilities we have at those ports, unless some steamship company makes an application to use them? The minister says: Oh, we cannot use them, because we have not been applied to by the Allan Steamship Line to give them freight at St. John over the Intercolonial. Well, under an arrangement between the government and the Grand Trunk, the latter is obliged to hand over to the Intercolonial Railway the western freight at Montreal intended for export abroad. Is there not an arrangement of that sort?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, freight bound to the maritime provinces, irrespective of where it is going.

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly, it would include freight intended for export abroad. If they are obliged to give you their freight at Montreal, it would include freight intended for export abroad, and freight for local consumption as well. Now, that being the case, surely it is within the power of the government and within the management of the Intercolonial to carry that freight over the Intercolonial to St. John. Then, why should this change take place? Why take away the sailings of these two ships from the port of St. John to Halifax? In order to give them freight at Halifax, you must carry it over the Intercolonial, and you are carrying it a hundred miles further by taking it to Halifax, than if you took it to St. John, and you are doing that at additional cost. If you were bringing that freight over a distance of a thousand miles, a difference of a hundred miles would not be so important; but when you carry that freight only a distance of four or five hundred miles, it makes a very material difference to carry it a hundred miles farther than you need to. You are carrying it a hundred miles farther for the same price as if you took it to the port of St. John. You have at the latter place your elevator, you have all the necessary facilities, and they are standing idle, and still you carry this freight a hundred miles further. Now, for what purpose I do not know. It would almost look as if the minister, being a minister from Nova Scotia, has made this discrimination against the port of St. John for the benefit of his own province. Let me say, that it is not only the people of St. John who are interested in this question, but the people of the surrounding counties. The people of the adjoining counties are interested in whatever makes for the welfare of the port of St. John. We are all interested, and, therefore, it is my right to speak on whatever interests my constituents. I do not think that because I am here attempting to defend the interests of the port of St. John and of my constituency, because I am asking why they are being discriminated against that I should be told either that the people of the city of St. John are whining, or that any one of the representatives of New Brunswick in this House is whining, because he is standing up for the interests of the people whom he represents. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the minister should give some better reason than he has given for making this change. When he says that there is nothing in the contract which compels them to take freight at St. John, that they can go wherever they please, it seems to me that is not consistent with the statement he has made, that they have come to the government and asked them to allow them to take freight elsewhere. But he says they cannot go to Halifax, except they find there is no freight at the port of St. John. How do they know there is no freight at the port of St. John ? What reason have they for knowing ? They have a guarantee that the three ships will be supplied by the Canadian Pacific Railway. They can get freight at the port of St. John as long as it comes from the west. If they can get it at Halifax, they can get it at St. John. I do not see any difference between the two, except that when you carry it to Halifax, you have to carry it a hundred miles further.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose I was discussing the withdrawal by the Allan Line Steamship Company of some of its boats from the St. John-Liverpool service. I was trying to point out that it was against the interests of St. John to have a lesser service for the ensuing season than during the past season and that it was in violation of the contract that had been made between the Allan Line Steamship Company and the government, the subsidy of which had been increased at this very session of parliament by $25,000. It occurred to me that when this increased subsidy was granted by this House it was certainly not contemplated that the service would be lessened in any way or the same justification could not have been made for the increased subsidy, because naturally, the Allan Line Company could run its service from Halifax to Liverpool much more cheaply than from St. John to Liverpool. This is not a political question nor is it so regarded by the people of St. John. This is a question that naturally affects the whole of the people and a protest has been made by the common council which is the immediate representative of the people of St. John. The common council is composed of members of both political parties as far as federal politics are concerned and it is unanimous in joining in the protest and has sent a telegraphic copy of the protesting resolution which it has passed to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). The government therefore is acquainted with its contents. The request of the common council is not an unreasonable one. It asks that no change in this contract shall be made without giving it an opportunity of being heard by the government. It seems to me that this is only reasonable. The common council is certainly an interested party and it seems to be an unfair thing for the government to make a change, as I understand from the hon. Minister of Finance, it has already made a change in the contract. Am I correct in so understanding the hon. gentleman ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) has given permission but as the minister is not present I speak subject to correction. I think, that is correct, however.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I understand from what the hon. minister said this morning that permission has already been given by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Allan Steamship Company to withdraw two of its ships. While the common council of St. John is not directly a party to the contract yet it is indirectly a party to the contract, because it is very closely interested in the matter. The people of St. John have made very great sacrifices in an effort to build up that port. They have done more proportionately to their population than any other port of Canada along this line, and it seems to me that they are deserving of a very great deal of consideration at the hands of the government, and that the very least that the government could have done would have been to have given them an opportunity to be heard before this change took place. My interest in the matter is almost as direct as that of the people of St. John themselves. The constituency which I represent lies directly adjoining that city and whatever makes for the benefit of St. John makes for the benefit of the county that I have the honour to represent. That is my justification, if any is needed, for bringing this matter up as I have. I trust that the permission which has already been given to the Allans will be withdrawn, and that the people of St. John will have an opportunity to be heard through their representatives in the common council, before this change is finally carried into effect.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I repeat the observation I made before the lunch hour with regard to the people of St. John. I said that I had some knowledge of the people of that city; that I believed they were a fair-minded and reasonable people; that when they found the government was dealing fairly and liberally with them they would be satisfied, and that I believed they would have no sympathy with the whine we sometimes hear in this house and sometimes in the press: that St. John was being treated unfairly by the government. Those were the words I used, and I repeat them now. I believe that the mass of the citizens of St. John who have been public spirited enough to contribute to the building up of their port, are fair and reasonable people, and when we can show that we are dealing fairly with them, they will have no sympathy with the cry that St. John is being unfairly treated by the present government. I repeat that. Now, I want to say that there has been no discrimination against St. John. There has been no interference with any privilege which St. John has ever possessed. There has been no change in the essential conditions of the contract; there has been no change in the contract such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) alleges. Let me repeat, that so far as this contract is concerned it is chiefly and primarily a mail contract. The arrangement originally was altogether with reference to the mails. St. John was never a mail port, and therefore it originally had no connection with this contract. When the mails were taken from Portland, a provision was made that they should instead be landed at Halifax and they have been so landed and taken away from Halifax ever since. At that time, Portland continued to be used by the steamship company for commercial purposes and a good deal of their freight was carried to Portland. The government determined that they would not permit that, and that though the contract was one for a mail service, they would require that contract to be used in order that they might build up Canadian trade. They therefore demanded that the Allan Company should load their steamers in Canada—not at St. John, not at Halifax, not at any particular port—but they were to have the ships loaded in Canada. The action of the government was taken for the upbuilding of Canadian trade, and not for a preference of one port over another. The Allan Company then arranged that they would take part of their cargo at Halifax, and the chief part of their cargo at St. John. That arrangement has continued for some years. This year the Allan Company came to us and stated that they could not continue, because cargo was not available for them at St. John. It is not because there is any less cargo at St. John—there is considerably more—but the situation has been changed by the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in acquiring a steamship fleet of their own. Very naturally the Canadian Pacific Railway want to use their own steamers, and so they have said to the Allans: We can not give you as much freight as we gave you before; we will make a division of the business; we will will take a portion of it for our own steamers, and we will give you the balance. The Allan Company has been obliged to accept that. They have shown the communications from the Canadian Pacific Railway setting out these conditions. As a matter of fact the Allan Company have gone to the leading citizens of St. John—many of the leading citizens of St. John; I do not say all—and they have obtained the concurrence of a number of those leading business men of St. John, who have the largest and the most vital interest in the city. These men have recognized that the position of the Allan Company is fair and reasonable, and they have concurred in the arrangement, and have communicated with the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that they are satisfied with the proposal of the Allan Company. Now, in doing that they are making no sacrifice, because there is not one whit less business to be done at St. John; all the business and more that was done last year at St. John will be done this year. The difference is that more of it will go out in the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers instead of in the Allan steamers. Therefore, St. John is absolutely losing nothing, and that is why I am satisfied that upon further inquiry the fair-minded citizens of St. John will understand the situation, and become as well satisfied as the leading citizens to whom I have referred and who have communicated to the Minister of Trade and Commerce their assent to the change being made. That is the whole story with regard to the contract.

The only other feature is that the Allan Company then come to the Intercolonial Railway, and say: 'We can only load a part of our ships at St. John; we have to get part of our cargo at Halifax; we ask you if you can facilitate arrangements so that we must get some more cargo at Halifax.' We will be very glad if we can do that. It is a matter to be arranged between the steamship companies and the various connecting lines of railway as to getting some additional cargo to go to Halifax. If they, or any steamship line will come forward with the same proposal for the loading of vessels by the Intercolonial Railway at St. John, and if they make the necessary connections and the necessary arrangements with the several companies concerned, we shall be only too glad to deal as fairly with St. John. The only reason why we have granted the Allan Line this arrangement is because they asked for it, and if they or any other company will come and ask it as respects St. John, we will be glad to give them every fair and reasonable consideration. I have so much faith in the fair-mindedness of the citizens of St. John, that I am quite willing to let the matter rest on that.

Mr. FOWLER. It is a very singular thing to see the government going to certain private persons in the city of St. John——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We did not go to any one.

Mr. FOWLER. Some one went ; the Allan Line went.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is their business.

Mr. FOWLER. The moment the government accept that petition as voicing the sentiments of the people of St. John, then it accepts these private individuals as the spokesmen for that city, rather than the elected representatives of the people. That is the point I make. Here are the elected representatives of the people of St. John in solemn session assembled, passing a resolution against this being done, and the only excuse the government can give for doing it is, because the Allan Line, forsooth, which are getting an increased subsidy this year, prefer not to call at the port of St. John as well as Halifax. They have to call at Halifax under their contract, and they had to call at St. John, but now two of these vessels out of the five which were engaged in the service are to be withdrawn from St. John altogether, and yet you have this year given the Allans an increased subsidy of $25,000 for performing a lesser sevice than they performed last year. What justification can there be for that ? Surely it cannot be seriously contended for a moment that any number of private citizens have the right to speak for the whole city against the protest of the elected representatives of the people. It seems to me that in disregarding and ignoring the representations made by the city council, and adopting a petition signed by private citizens, you are not carrying out what we have always understood to be Liberal doctrine. These gentlemen may not be personally affected by the change, and the city itself is affected by the change, and so far as the people of St. John being fair-minded enough to submit to this, perhaps the Minister of Finance may find himself mistaken. I do not think it is any reflection on their fair-mindedness that they should protest against this ; quite the contrary. The Minister of Finance says he is quite prepared to do the same thing for any other steamship line that he has done for the Allans. If they have a subsidy for sailing between St. John and European ports he is prepared to let them abandon the port of St. John if they request it. That is the only construction you can put upon the language of the Minister of Finance. He must have a very great deal of confidence in the people of St. John, if he thinks they will tamely submit to that kind of treatment. I say right here, that if there had been a representative from New Brunswick in the cabinet, this thing would not have been permitted ; it certainly would not have been done behind the backs of the people of St. John.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must repeat that there is no disadvantage to the city of St. John in any shape or form. The city of St. John will ship more freight this year, I believe, than it did last year, and more steamers will be running out of St. John this year than last year.

Mr. FOWLER. What additional lines ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Canadian Pacific Railway will be running a larger number of steamers. I am advised that two passenger steamers that are taken off the Allan Line will be replaced by more than two of the Canadian Pacific Railway ; and therefore the port of St. John will have more business and more steamers under this arrangement during the coming winter than it had before. That is the first point I want to emphasize, and that is the reason why I believe the people of St. John, who are fair and reasonable, when the matter is placed properly before them, will understand it. Then, the hon. gentleman said we went to the Allan Line, and did this, that, and the other. We did nothing of the sort. The Allan Line came, through its proper representatives, to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and stated that owing to the new arrangements at St. John they could not load all their steamers there, because they do not want any of their vessels to go to St. John and come away empty. This arrangement is good on its merits, no matter who supports it or who opposes it. I do not say that any of the citizens of St. John are to be taken as having better judgment than the common council. The council was called together in a great hurry, and passed the resolution, I venture to say, without being fully informed of all the circumstances. After the Allan Line have arranged for all the freight they can get at St. John, they will have to send their ships to Halifax and get the balance of their freight there.

Mr. COCHRANE. Under the contract do they not have to go to Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then they were not under any greater obligation than they contracted for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But they would have to go to Halifax and take the mails. They do not have to get a cargo there every week. Under the arrangement they only took part of their cargo to Halifax; they took the greater part of it to St. John.

Mr. COCHRANE. I suppose they took what they could. If they got a whole load at St. John, they would go to Halifax and get the mail?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But under the arrangement they could only load three out of the five steamers, and they thought it would be useless to compel them to take their vessels to St. John with a knowledge that there would be no freight there for them.

Mr. FOWLER. The argument of the hon. minister is unfair, for the reason that he ignores the fact that the Intercolonial runs to St. John, and that the steamers could be loaded there as well as at Halifax. There are no additional steamers put on there by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Their steamers are those of the Elder-Dempster Company, which have run there for years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will run more of them, I am told.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know of any increase in their fleet. It may be possible. But the hon. minister ignores the fact of the Intercolonial Railway carrying freight from Montreal, under the agreement with the Grand Trunk, or freight that might be obtained from the Canada Atlantic Railway, for shipment at St. John and Halifax. I do not wish to take away anything from the port of Halifax. We have heard the boast made that there will be such a tremendous amount of freight that even both ports cannot handle it. There is nothing in the argument of the hon. minister. The whole thing has been done to please the Allan Line and to render it unnecessary for that company to fulfil its contract by sending two ships to St. John. So that to-day they get $25,000 additional subsidy, and only send three of their ships to St. John, whereas last year they got $25,000 and sent the whole five ships to St. John, as well as to Halifax. That is the whole gist of the matter, and the arrangement has been made by the government against the protest and without having consulted the representatives of the people of St. John. I think they had a right to be consulted; and the mere fact that eighteen or twenty gentlemen of the city of St. John signed the petition was not sufficient to justify the government in making this departure from the contract. The hon. gentleman says there is no such thing as a contract to compel them to call at the port of St. John.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood the hon. gentleman to say it. He said it was not an essential condition of the contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. I think 'Hansard' will show that he did. Does he say that it is an essential condition of the contract that they shall call at St. John? If it is, then the argument is all the stronger against his contention, because the government changed an essential condition of this contract, and changed it without any consultation with the people of St. John, who are most interested in the change. It does not affect Halifax, because the vessels had to call there any way and take whatever freight was offering. Therefore in standing up for St. John, I am not reflecting on the port of Halifax or trying to injure it in any way; nor does it benefit the port of Halifax to allow the Allan Steamship Company to vary the terms of the contract entered into between them and the government. But it does directly benefit the Allan Steamship Company, because they are getting a larger subsidy for doing a less service than they performed last year for the old subsidy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is mixing up several things. When I used the words 'essential condition,' I was referring to negotiations which took place several years ago when the Allan Company wished to make Portland their terminal port, and when the government obliged them to make their terminal port in Canada. I said that it was not an essential condition that they should call at any particular port, so long as they loaded and unloaded at a Canadian port. It was an incident of that arrangement that they should call at St. John and Halifax; but we were not so much concerned in the quarrels of rival ports as we were that the ships should call at a Canadian port, and as long as they did that, we felt that we had no right to complain. That was a mail contract, and the commercial aspect of the question came up later, when the government decided that Portland should not have the business. The contract provides that they should not be obliged to go to St. John if they found that they could not get sufficient cargo there, and upon that point the Minister of Trade and Commerce was to be the judge. I am not familiar with all that passed between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Allan Line; but I know the substance, because I learned it from the minister and from the Allan Company. As they could not get their full cargo at St. John, they asked that that condition in their contract should be observed. If it were a question of taking away any business from St. John, I could understand that there would be need for consideration and consultation; but as it became clear that all the business done at St. John to continue to be done, and it was only a question whether it should be done by the Allan Line or the Canadian Pacific Railway Line, it made no difference to the people of St. John whether it was done by the one line or the other. But the Canadian Pacific Railway people have their own ends and interests to look after, not inconsistent with the interests of St. John, and prefer to take a large volume of the trade themselves and give the Allan Line only a limited amount, and it would be preposterous to ask Allans to send their boats there and have them come away empty. With regard to arrangements for taking freight to Halifax, the government have not any freight to give. They have not their line connecting with the west, and are not in a position to control the traffic of the continent. All they can do is to take what traffic they get from other lines. The Allans came to us and said: 'We have to call at Halifax for the mail; we get some cargo there, and we trust you will give us whatever facilities you can, and we hope to get more cargo there than usual this winter.' If the Allans or any other company come and say that they are making arrangements with roads in the west to bring goods over the Intercolonial to St. John, I shall be happy to deal with them in a fair way. But if they do not come to us, I do not see what we can do.

Mr. FOWLER. When the arrangement was made to bring the Intercolonial to Montreal, it was stated that it would get the traffic coming over the Grand Trunk Railway in the winter season. The right hon. gentleman says we have no connection with any of the western lines.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Grand Trunk Railway has no western line.

Mr. FOWLER. It has lines all through Ontario.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Ontario has ceased to be the west.

Mr. FOWLER. Down in the maritime provinces it is still the west. At the time the Intercolonial was extended to Montreal, one of the arguments used was that it would get sufficient valuable traffic to pay for the extension, but now the Minister of Railways says that there is no freight from the west.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister said that we have no connections at Montreal, and the government have no way of bringing in freight over its road.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. FOWLER. It is singular that the hon. gentleman should forget so soon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not so singular as that my hon. friend should misunderstand.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not trying to misrepresent the hon. gentleman, but am trying to reason out the matter on a fair basis. I want to have justice done. The Allan Company should not be allowed to vary their contract. They should continue to call at both ports, and there is no reason why there should be any rivalry between the two. When the hon. minister speaks of jealousy between the ports, he is not doing what he should in his responsible position. He is not endeavouring to allay jealousy, but rather to excite it. All I ask is that the Allans should go to St. John as well as to Halifax. Let them take whatever portion of cargo is offered at the port of St. John, brought over the Intercolonial, and fill up with cargo from Halifax, and when there is no new steamship line I cannot understand how by taking away the Allan steamships there will still be the same amount of freight carried.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). In connection with this debate, there is this singular circumstance, that though we have two representatives from the city of St. John supporting the government in this House, no representations have been made to them with regard to this grievance. There is another point which was overlooked, and that is that while from Moncton to St. John there are 98 miles in favour of St. John against Halifax, when you go to Halifax you can load your steamer night and day, tide in and tide out, and when she goes to sea she is 250 miles nearer London and Liverpool and 245 miles nearer Glasgow than she would be if sailing from the port of St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. The remarks of the hon. gentleman do not affect the case at all. We are not discussing which is the better port, but whether this contract with the Allans should be carried out, or whether, after receiving an additional subsidy, they should be allowed to ignore the port of St. John. I do not propose to argue the question of the advantages of Halifax over St. John. As regards the members for the city of St. John not having been consulted in this matter, I know nothing about that. Very likely they were consulted, but I do not see either of them here.

To increase accommodation at Halifax, $125,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item was discussed the other night in connection with the main estimates. And I repeat the explanation. A considerable amount of this is a revote. The appropriation last year was $143,000, of which we expended $75,174. There is a balance to be carried over, in the form of a revote, of $67,826. With the other works in Halifax, for which we have to provide in the supplementary estimates, we will have a total of $229,500.

Increased accommodation and facilities along line, $88,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had before us earlier in the day an item which was allowed to stand respecting additional sidings. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) said that the vote last year was much larger than the figures I had before me. I asked him particularly if the item he had in his book was for sidings, and I understood him to say it was. I think, however, on further examination it will be found that he was reading from another vote in which sidings might be included, but not the particular vote to which I refer. The information always applies to the expenditure under that particular head, and the expenditure which I gave under the head of 'additional sidings' was the correct sum charged against that item. But there is also the item 'increased accommodation and facilities along the line,' and, last year the word 'sidings' was included in that, so the two items are not as clearly separated as they should be. This item 'increased accommodation and facilities along the line' includes a large number of small items. There is only one large item, that referring to the extension of the engine house for locomotives and to provide an office at Pirate Harbour on the Strait of Canso. This was to make a twelve stall engine house, instead of a four stall, at that point. The cost of this was estimated at $25,000.

Mr. BARKER. Why should that be brought in as part of a general item ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am inclined to think the criticism is a fair one. This item is large enough to justify a special appropriation. I am bound to say that if I were revising the estimates, I would put it that way. The other items are small, including many places along the line and running from $300 or $400 up to $6,000, which is the largest I see, except that for Pirate Harbour.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Does that include a station at Drummondville ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount estimated for Drummondville is $6,000. I must say I cannot give my hon. friend the assurance he would like. The item for Drummondville—speaking from recollection, as I have not the facts at hand—include a freight shed, purchase of land and improvement of the yard. My hon. friend was anxious to have, besides that, a station. For the present, I am afraid we must ask my hon. friend to be patient and trust that to come in time.

Mr. LAVERGNE. The hon. minister knows perfectly well that at Drummondville there is no station fit to receive the passengers. I hope the government will see their way clear in the near future to build a new station at Drummondville.

Mr. BARKER. When the item for additional sidings was under discussion, the acting Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Fielding) claimed that he was justified in putting that in a bulk sum because of the inconvenience that would arise if the government were not allowed, from time to time, to expend money on unforeseen requirements. But it is quite clear that the item under consideration now, $88,000, is of a general character to provide for emergency items such as he refers to. 'Increased accommodation and facilities along the line' includes almost anything and everything required by the railway which has not been foreseen. If the hon. gentleman should find that, besides all the sidings he intended to build, cases arise during the year that had not been foreseen, he has quite enough under an item like that $88,000 to meet them. The very fact that an item of $25,000 for one work could be put into such an item as this shows how loose the system is. It has become the practice with the Railway Department—I do not say that it has been confined to this government—to lump a large number of items so as to make a sum anywhere from $50,000 to $150,000, and then spend it as they please. That is not in the interest of the public. It allows very loose methods to be adopted, and puts the control of the department beyond parliament. I remember that two years ago we had an item discussed in the Public Accounts Committee. It was under this heading of 'increased accommodation.' We found that stations were being built, and sidings constructed. There was a case where a specific grant of $8,000 had been given to build a station—at Westville, I think—and the government spent over $16,000, quietly taking the balance of $8,000 out of this item of 'increased accommodation.' If the hon. gentleman wishes to have a system under which parliament will have any control over the expenses of the railway, he must have a different system from this. Whether this was adopted thirty years ago or last year, matters not. A better system should be adopted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) that where there is an item for any considerable amount, whether for a station or anything else, that ought to be voted separately, and the expenditure should be limited to the amount set down in the item. Of course, I think it would hamper the working of the railway to attempt to carry out that system in the case of these small items.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why is it necessary to spend $88,000 in increased facilities along the line ? Has the business increased so rapidly, or has there been depreciation of the railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course the business has grown. I gave the figures the other day.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would the hon. minister say whether the business has grown in local business, or in through freight.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think both have grown to a considerable extent. I fancy the local trade is perhaps of more immediate importance. To meet the conditions of this local trade it is necessary to increase the sidings and enlarge the stations. Whenever I go over the road, I have constant representations made to me that the station buildings are not large enough. These buildings were erected many years ago, and ought to be enlarged.

Mr. GOURLEY. I notice that the minister mentioned Brookfield. What is to be done there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is for the enlargement of the station and extension of the plaform which requires additional land. The amount is small.

Mr. GOURLEY. It ought not to be small. That place has grown to be a leading business point ; it is the exporting centre of the whole trade of that region and the Stewiacke Valley, and ought to have the most ample facilities. Brookfield is an important trading point on the Intercolonial between Truro and Halifax, and ought to have a much larger station. I was there last year, and several persons complained of lack of room for the business, and said that accidents might happen any day in consequence. The place is crowded with timber and lumber, and I would suggest to the Minister to add $2,000 or $3,000 to the vote.

Mr. LAVERGNE. What amount is to be expended at St. Cyril ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The improvements at St. Cyril will cost $1,500.

Mr. GOURLEY. I am sorry that an amount has not been put in the estimates to raise the wages of the trackmen and all the men engaged on the Intercolonial. That is getting to be a great service, and the labouring men are paid far too little in comparison with the important services they render. I met a number of these men a short time ago, and inquired into their condition. It is impossible for a man receiving only $1.10, $1.20 and $1.30 a day to make a living. He requires to be an accurate man, he requires to go upon the railway in the morning, and walk over it, and exercise the highest human care in order to protect the safety of lives and property. The distinguished officials of this road are handsomely paid, the deputy minister and the managers. I do not begrudge it to them, but I am speaking for the poor trainmen who absolutely do the work to maintain the road and ensure the safety of the trains and passengers. These are the men whose care and diligence make it possible for the railway to be run successfully. The trainmen, the trackmen, the conductors, the drivers, the firemen, the brakemen, the station agents, the telegraphers and the gravel men—these are the men who should receive an increase of salary. The telegraphers, I think, did get an increase a short time ago, but I am told it is a very trifling thing. You add 15 or 20 cents a day to a man's wages, and what does it amount to ? It only enables him to buy a plate of apples or a pound of candy for his children. It is immediately dissipated. The whole scale of wages on the Intercolonial should be recast. In my community, the railway men, who were at one time not considered to be a very reliable class, are now highly considered. The Intercolonial Railway servants to-day, I am proud to tell the minister, so far as my community is concerned, are a splendid class of men, who occupy good positions, men of trust and men who are worthy of trust. Their families occupy good social positions. They go in for educating their children, and in the town of Truro there is no better class of citizens than the employees on the Intercolonial. How they manage to maintain their families on the wages they get is beyond my comprehension. I think every member of this House and every man in this country would be willing to see these men well remunerated. Every day large amounts of property are destroyed because we ask some of the men to work too long hours, to work when they should be asleep. A man gets worn out through long hours, and an accident takes place in consequence. These things should not be. Supposing some man is overworked whose business it is to look after the track, an accident takes place, and away the train goes. The travelling public are entirely in the hands of these people, and we should make it possible for them to give the best service they can. I ask the minister to increase the wages of these men in consonance with the growing time. I am bound to say that at the present time nothing would be more degrading to Canada than that workmen in the employ of the government should receive insufficient wages to maintain themselves and their families in respectable positions, and enable them to pay their debts. The minister would not like to hear that one of his officials was not paying his debts. It would be disgraceful for an employee on the Intercolonial not to be able to pay his debts. Yet it strikes me the government is asking from these officials more service and better service than they are paying for. These men cannot discharge their duties to their fellow men and pay their debts, and at the same time maintain their families in anything like suitable comfort, on the wages that they are now receiving. A conductor, a trackman, a fireman is just as much entitled to a remuneration that will enable him to maintain his family in a position of comfort as any man in this House. We sometimes do not think of it. We fancy that people other than labourers or mechanics have superior rights. I say, if there is any sacrifice made, we should make this sacrifice in parliament. We should give up our indemnity and sit here free rather than that our workmen should suffer.

An hon. MEMBER. For how long?

Mr. GOURLEY. All the time that the king requires our services. I urge the hon. minister to put $100,000 into these estimates to give to the railway men reasonable rates of wages. Give a workman 50 cents a day increase and you do him some good. Give him 5 or 10 cents a day and it does him no good at all. I urge it on behalf of the railway officials of Colchester in particular, but I want the hon. minister to apply it to the whole country. There are no people in the world more deserving of fair remuneration than railway operators. They should have shorter hours, and that is one thing that must be brought before this parliament. A railway operator should not be allowed to extend his hours in any way. He should be required to work three or four hours a day. His is very exacting work. I see them sitting in the railway offices at their instruments. I do not think I could stand the worry of the ticking for more than three or four hours at a time, and I cannot understand how these men can sit there with that incessant clatter of noise and perform their duty intelligently for 14 or 15 hours a day as they are required to do. One operator on the Intercolonial Railway told me that at the time he was performing his duty he was often thinking how he was going to pay the grocer next day for the supplies of his family. He was distracted. Yet, here is the hon. Minister of Finance enjoying a very handsome salary. Of course, he cannot appreciate the position of this poor operator, but the rest of us have sometimes had these bothers ourselves, and we have a fellow feeling. I, for instance, have a fellow feeling with the telegrapher. There is no better service that the members of the committee can do than to join with me in asking the hon. minister to extend fair consideration to all the Intercolonial Railway men. They are the basis of the life of this country. The great middle class is the one to which the country looks to purify and ennoble our social life. I ask the government to treat that great body of people, the workmen and the mechanics of the country with generosity. If there is going to be any saving or paring let it be taken off the salaries of the higher officials. Let us take $2,000 off the salary of a governor or a judge, but give the labouring man, the mechanic, and especially those telegraphers, a fair rate of remuneration. I for one am prepared to insert $1,000,000 in these estimates to give an increase of pay to the Intercolonial Railway men all round.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid $100,000 would not go very far. At a rough calculation, to pay 50 cents a day to each of the employees on the Intercolonial would require $1,250,000.

Mr. GOURLEY. Well then, vote it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The trouble is that there are hon. gentlemen who sit opposite who are not as broad-minded as the kind of people we raise in the maritime provinces and perhaps they would not be so ready to vote it as my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley). But, to be serious, a question was asked the other day regarding the workmen on the Intercolonial Railway, and I promised that upon the visit that I hope to be able to pay at an early date to the maritime provinces to make some inquiry into the matter? I would not like the idea to get abroad in this country that all of the officials on the Intercolonial Railway are to get an increase of pay. A great many of the men have had their wages increased during the past few years, and I think they are fairly well compensated now. Only those who are really underpaid and who have a good claim, should be given encouragement to hope that they may get an increase of pay. I want to guard against the idea getting abroad that it is the policy of any party to give these people an indiscriminate increase. If there be cases where they are not getting fair wages by all means let us try to make them right. I think they should have about the same wages as those which can be obtained in private employment. I do not think the idea should go abroad that government employment should pay better than private employment. People who are willing to serve His Majesty should certainly not expect to get more than they could get outside. I think the government service should pay about what is paid in ordinary employment. I do not adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that the great officers of the railway are too liberally paid. On the contrary, I believe they are not. I doubt if there is a large railway on the continent which pays its chief officers as little money as we pay to the chief officers of the Intercolonial Railway. The difficulty is that we are not able to deal with these gentlemen as liberally as we ought to do. When the Railway Bill was under consideration at this session of the House we had to fix the salaries of the members of the Railway Commission at a sum in excess of what we pay cabinet ministers or the higher professional men in the employment of the governent.

Therefore, while I am not willing to say that the men who are at the bottom of the ladder receive fair compensation, I cannot say that we are paying too much to the men higher up. The difficulty is to get men to fill these higher positions. Private corporations find that in order to get the services of good men to-day they have to pay them more money than we are able to pay them.

Mr. GOURLEY. I did not mean to say that the higher officials were getting too much. I do not go in for small salaries. I say that if there is to be niggardliness anywhere, I would rather have it in dealing with the higher officials than with the great body of the workingmen.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. Minister of Finance has referred to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and has suggested that we would not consent to the proposition of my hon. friend (Mr. Gourley). I firmly believe that if the government pursued the ordinary methods pursued by railway companies that are managed on commercial principles, if they avoided all possible waste and took every pains to administer the railway on business principles, they would be able to pay better salaries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no reason to suppose that the Intercolonial Railway is not well managed in every respect, or that it is not managed in a way that will compare with any other railway in the country. I have not had a personal opportunity of investigating the matter, but from my knowledge of the officers and of the minister who has had charge of the road, I have every reason to believe that they have been doing their best to run the road in a satisfactory way.

Mr. GOURLEY. Last year three or four lamentable accidents, involving a loss of $150,000 worth of property, besides loss of life, occurred on the Intercolonial Railway, within seven or eight months. Without desiring to impute any neglect on the part of the people connected with these accidents, I am bound to say that the impression which prevailed along the line of railway was that they were the result of neglect caused by the men being overworked. I do not blame anybody, because it is the system that is wrong. We started out in Canada a few years ago endeavoring to skimp in one way or another. Instead of setting an example of generosity and fair-play in the country, we have set an example of penuriousness. But, I am glad to say, we are getting over that. It is the system I blame and not the people who have been administering it. The system is bad, and we ought to be generous and bigminded enough to change the system, no matter what it will cost.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Increased accommodation at Pictou, $61,700.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There appears to have been a great deal of expenditure at this place for the last two or three years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In 1902-3 the appropriation was $70,000, of which only $12,155.10 was expended, leaving a balance of $57,844 to be carried forward. To that extent this is a re-vote.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman told us when we were discussing the main estimates, that he would bring down information with regard to the purchase of land.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an item of $25,000 for land which has not yet been paid. Negotiations are going forward for its purchase, and we can only give an approximate estimate. The details of the expenditure are as follows: Excavation, $1,650; Filling and grading, $5,000; Ballasting, $2,750; Sidings and tracks, $6,000; Piling and trestles, $10,000; Loading platform, $1,000; New station, $30,000; legal expenses, $1,500; Contingencies, advertising and inspection, $10,300.

Mr. BARKER. Will that complete everything?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This will complete the work at Pictou.

Mr. BELL. What area of land will be purchased there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The land has not yet been purchased. Probably the hon. gentleman's local knowledge will enable him to form an opinion as to the area of land that will be necessary. It is proposed to acquire some land close to the present station. A valuation has been put upon it, but we are not satisfied with the amount, and it is now a matter of negotiation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Could the hon. gentleman give us the amount of business that is transacted at that station?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, but Pictou is the point of crossing for Prince Edward Island in the winter, and the business is very considerable.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I call the attention of the minister to the very inadequate accommodation of the Prince Edward Island side at Georgetown, where the warehouse is about one-third the size of the warehouse at Pictou, and where the merchants have to pile up their goods in rain and snow. The minister should give his immediate attention to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) that that matter shall be immediately inquired into.

Mr. BELL. I suppose the intention is to remodel the entire yard at Pictou ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BELL. I may say to the House, that that work is very necessary because unquestionably the entrance to the Pictou yard is too narrow. The station building is a comparatively small one, and it is not at all suitable to a town of the importance of Pictou. While I would not be able to hold myself responsible for the economy with which the minister may be proceeding, I certainly have every reason to sustain him in asking a grant for the purpose of giving more extended accommodation at that point. Pictou has a very large traffic ; it is not only the terminus of the old Pictou branch, but it is also the point at which practically the Oxford line meets the main line of the Intercolonial Railway. It is really a junction, and a very important point to which a great deal of travel tends. I am sure that if the hon. gentlemen in this House saw the present accommodation at Pictou, they would be prepared to admit that it is necessary to improve it very considerably. At the same time, we must hope that in the course of time, the requirements of our friends on the Prince Edward Island side will be fully met. But one thing at a time ; I presume that having attended to Pictou, the shower of good things may be expected to fall on the opposite shore of the straits.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is about the only way we get anything.

Mr. COCHRANE. I see that it is to cost $10,000 for advertising and inspection. If that is a proof of the way the money is spent there will not be much economy about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That includes the payment of engineers.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are your own engineers doing along that railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the construction of new works the remuneration of the engineer is charged, in proportion, against each particular work. It is as broad as it is long, as far as the treasury is concerned.

Mr. COCHRANE. That puts the matter in a somewhat different light.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had that point discussed the other night.

Mr. CLANCY. Did you say you had a fight ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I used the word 'night.' I would not have a fight with anybody, and least of all with my hon. friend from Bothwell.

Improvements at North Sydney, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work contemplated by this vote is as follows : loading platform, $1,200; freight shed, $5,000 ; removal of freight shed, $500 ; removal of engine house, $500 ; additional sidings and rearrangement of yards, $12,000 ; advertising and other expenses, $800. Total $20,000, in addition to $13,000 in the main estimates, leaving $33,000 to be expended on this work for the present year.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Are they putting up a new building there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not a new station building, but a new freight shed.

Increased accommodation at Moncton, $14,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to erect a building for the express company's rooms, mails, conductors' outfit boxes and offices of the car service department—a wooden building, estimated to cost $14,000.

Mr. BARKER. We had in the main estimates a vote of $15,000 for additional work on the freight shed at Moncton. It is not fair to those who have to go over these items to take up a station two or three times during a session. It seems to me only reasonable that the officers of the department, when furnishing their requirements for the season, should give everything at once, and not in this piecemeal way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the last main estimates were before the House, I think I intimated that we would have to provide for these particular things in the supplementary estimates. The main estimates were prepared a long time ago, and, as the months roll on, our knowledge of what is required becomes greater ; so that it is not unreasonable for us to come down with an amended estimate.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the government are constructing some large locomotives at Moncton ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that we have lately undertaken to construct locomotives at Moncton. We are enlarging our shops for that purpose.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Has the minister given any contract for locomotives to the Montreal concern ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. We have a contract outstanding with the locomotive works at Kingston, which is not yet finished.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How many locomotives are being built there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have constructed two locomotives at Moncton, and are arranging to construct two more. There are fifteen remaining undelivered by the Kingston Locomotive Works. We have not given any contract yet to the Montreal works. I think they are just getting into operation.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Have they made any application to the government for any contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I think that I had a letter recently from the manager of the company, asking me to give them an order; but, as our orders at the Kingston Locomotive Works are not yet completed, we are not yet in a position to order any more. I have no doubt that as time passes we shall be able to give the Montreal works a share of our orders.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is it the minister's intention soon to advertise for tenders for more locomotives ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not advertising for contracts at present.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then there will be no contracts given until the next session of parliament ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that ; I am not going to bind myself as to the future.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the minister promise to give the Kingston works a chance of competing ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think both of these locomotive works should have a fair opportunity of bidding. I would give them both a chance.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand that this Montreal company put up their works because they claimed that they could get contracts from the government to keep them running.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have no contract with the government so far as I know ; and, beyond a simple letter written to me asking if we wanted locomotives, they have not made any effort to get any contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not doubt the hon. minister's statement. At the same time, I believe a great deal of pressure has been put upon the government—perhaps not on the Minister of Finance—to get contracts for these parties, and at good big prices too. If the minister will only leave these contracts for engines open to competition, so that the Kingston works and others can get a chance to tender, no person can complain ; but if these parties in Montreal claim they can get contracts from the Dominion to keep their works running practically without any tender, I think it is not a very nice state of affairs. I mention this now, because at the next session of parliament the matter will come up again. I would like the minister to be in a position to say that he will advertise for public tenders.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have never heard the rumours the hon. gentleman refers to. I do not think they have a shadow of foundation. If the gentlemen he refers to were desperately anxious about contracts with the government, then, in the few weeks during which I have been in the department, I would have heard something about it. They have made no proposal whatever beyond a simple letter asking for orders for locomotives. If I had desired locomotives, I would probably have asked these two concerns to compete. If the hon. gentleman wants me to say what I shall do in the future, I must decline to bind myself.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister knows well enough that these gentlemen would not approach him for the simple reason that they do not know whether he is to be the Minister of Railways or not. The general impression is that he is only holding the portfolio temporary. If he will state that he is to be the minister, he will have these gentlemen after him in a short time. Will he state now that he is going to retain the portfolio ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry that I cannot gratify my hon. friend's curiosity. But I think that if these gentlemen were breaking their necks about getting contracts, they would in all probability have come to see the minister who has to submit the estimates to parliament. If they have not done so, that indicates there is no foundation for what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I know that they are looking for contracts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not discreditable.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I admit that it is not, but the hon. gentleman is only acting as minister to pass these estimates. There is to be another Minister of Railways who will spend the money, and it would be useless for these men to try and make any arrangements with the acting minister. That is the reason they have not approached him. If he will only state now that he is to be the Minister of Railways, I will venture to say that within six days they will be applying for contracts for engines.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already told the hon. gentlemen that they have applied to me. They wrote a letter stating that they were prepared to do business and that was the beginning and end of the whole matter. As to who is to be the Minister of Railways for the next five or six years, my hon. friend should not expect me to give him any guarantee on that point.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the hon. minister is going to give any more contracts for engines, he should call for tenders and give these Kingston works an opportunity of tendering. If he will do that, nobody will have any fault to find. But if he simply writes a letter to a firm asking for a tender, and then awards the contract without giving any other firm an opportunity to tender, he will be acting most unfairly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Considering that the Kingston firm has large contracts and the Montreal establishment none, nobody need waste much sympathy on the Kingston firm.

Mr. BLAIN. What do the engines at Moncton cost compared with the prices at the Kingston locomotive works ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that the cost of these two locomotives is somewhat inside the prices we have been paying. I will get the figures and supply them at a later stage.

Mr. BLAIN. Are the works at Moncton completed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, they are in condition for the building of engines at present.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the item of $50,000, voted for a workshop, expended and is the workshop completed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no memo. of that here.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is the capacity of the engines built in the government shops the same as those built at Kingston ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the same class of engines but they cannot build so many.

Mr. COCHRANE. Could not the government increase the capacity of their shops and build all the engines they want themselves ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The suggestion is well worth looking into. As regards the question of cost, before answering definitely I would like to inquire into the particulars—for instance whether any duty was paid. A number of things have to be looked into, which enter into the cost, before I can give the information.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to have the power of those engines.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are the same class as we are getting in the locomotive works at Kingston.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year we voted $30,000 for a steam boiler for heating and electric light. Is that completed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have that information for the evening session.

Towards improving ferry service, strait of Canso, $66,400.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The dock on the Cape Breton side of the railway at the Strait of Canso, at Point Tupper, is very much exposed to the ice and there are difficulties on that account in operating the new ferry steamer. This vote is intended to pay for the extension of cribwork protection on the Point Tupper side in order to prevent the ice entering the dock and interfering with the entrance of the steamer.

Mr. LEFURGEY. How much does this make that we have expended on the ferry service there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have a statement of the total expenditure made out.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It will amount to upwards of $7,000 with the supplementary estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know it is a very large expenditure.

Mr. BARKER. In the main estimates the hon. gentleman asked for $11,000 for this purpose. And now in the supplementaries we are asked for six times as much.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are two different works. One is for an electric lighting plant and the other is for building an addition to the dock.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It must be a very big dock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is, and it must be very strong to resist the ice.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will the hon. gentleman give us the information later ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Let the item stand in the meantime.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will give the information to-night anyway.

Protection to Grand Narrows bridge, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have a large and expensive bridge across the Grand Narrows, Bras d'Or lake, and some difficulty is found because vessels passing through are apt to strike the piers on account of the strong tide which runs through obliquely. There is danger of the vessels being carried against the pier on which the swing span rests when closed. Some damage has already been done. To prevent further damage, and possibly, the destruction of the pier, which would cut off through railway traffic, it is proposed to construct a pier at both ends to prevent the vessels striking the pier. A large class of steamers is used carrying limestone to the works of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company. Clusters of piles will be driven, with a wide base, and they will be drawn together at the top and securely fastened, and stone will be placed around them. The depth of the water at this point is about sixty feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will this, and the work we have just dealt with be done under contract by public tender ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a large work and I think it would be done by contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Tenders publicly advertised for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where tenders are asked for there is always a public advertisement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And the lowest tender accepted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Always.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will that be the case here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can say that I do not know of any reason why tenders should not be called for. If they are called for the lowest will be accepted.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Of course the tenders are not publicly called for unless there is a public advertisement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is always done.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Not in my constituency. Letters are sent to friends of the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In works of this character ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, in similar works.

Mr. BARKER. The Public Works Act provides that for such a work done under the Public Works Department, tenders shall be publicly called for. Does the minister draw a distinction between a railway work, such as this and the work done under the Public Works Act ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not drawn any such distinction, and have no intention of doing so.

Mr. BARKER. The minister said 'if.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wish, at the moment, to commit myself too definitely. The general policy is that works of this character are to be let by tender.

Mr. BARKER. The Act says you must.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not sure that it is so under the Railway Act.

New Glasgow—extension to freight shed and crane for loading platform, $5.000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. New Glasgow is a growing and important place. Some months ago, a deputation of the board of trade waited upon me and represented that the need of such improvements there were very great, and this appropriation is to give some extension of the freight shed.

Mr. BELL. What is the length of this extension ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One hundred feet.

Mr. BELL. South end or north end ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The memorandum before me does not state. No doubt, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) will know.

Mr. BELL. The crane is on the opposite side of the track ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I suppose the minister will give us his word that in the case of these works of $5,000 or over, competition will be allowed after advertisement in the newspaper ? If not, I will draw attention to it next session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All the more reason why I should not promise.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman has stated this for a fact in one case. Will he agree to it generally ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say that it is the general policy and I have no desire to depart from it. But I do not want to be tied with regard to any particular item. It should not be pressed that far.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister wants to do what is right in the public interest. Why should not he allow the public to bid for these contracts ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know of any reason.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will he in this case ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I shall, in all probability. But if there is any good reason to state to the contrary, I want to be free. I do not anticipate there will be.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the hon. minister promise that this policy will be followed while he is acting Minister of Railways and Canals ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. The hon. gentleman had better rest on what I have promised him.

Matapedia—new station and other improvements, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an improvement to the well known station of Matapedia, the centre of the sportsmen's business. That present station is not at all creditable, especially when you consider the number of people who come there from all parts of the world.

New station at Windsor, N.S., provided that the railway companies using the station make arrangements satisfactory to the Governor in Council for payment by way of interest or rental of a reasonable proportion of the cost, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Windsor is a place about forty-five miles from Halifax, reached by branch of the Intercolonial running from Windsor Junction. This is leased to the Dominion Atlantic, whose own line begins at Windsor and runs westward to Yarmouth. We, as owners of the Intercolonial are interested from Windsor to Halifax, and a new road has been constructed from Windsor known as the Midland. We think we ought to provide a better station for the town, but we do not think we ought to do it entirely at the expense of the Dominion, but that these other companies should make some arrangement to contribute to the cost. If they will make a reasonable arrangement, the station will be built. If not, we will come to parliament for further instructions.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why should this be added to capital account? There is a station there now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a mere shed, built twenty years ago. Practically, there is no station of value at Windsor.

Steel rails and fastenings (revote), $580,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister give us some information about the old contract made by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) with the Clergues for steel rails?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I gave some information the other day, in answer to a question as to the quantity of rails furnished. It will be remembered that we made an arrangement with the Clergue Company to give them a contract for 25,000 tons immediately, and the assurance of similar contracts for a period of five years. They were not able to deliver any rails within the first year of the contract. Subsequently, they made a further arrangement and delivered about 5,700 tons out of 10,000 which they expressed the hope of being able to deliver. We have taken all from them that they have been able to supply. I believe that they are not manufacturing now—up to the date of their recent trouble and before they suspended operations.

Mr. TAYLOR. How are these rails as to quality?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were a few, I am told, open to some objection, but in the main, they were good.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that contract closed, or does the government intend to accept the fulfilment of the contract from the new company coming in?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is regarded as practically at an end, inasmuch as the company are not able to comply with the terms. At the same time, I am sure that if any company is able to come forward and make the rails, we will be glad to give them an order.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Has any one approached the government with a view to the reorganization of this company, within the last few weeks?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BELL. Is any guarantee required from this company with regard to the quality of the rails which are delivered to the government?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are subject to inspection, and have to come up to the recognized standard of good rails.

Mr. BELL. Are they required to stand a certain amount of use?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We pay on delivery, and of course we have to take the risk, providing the inspection certificate is satisfactory. They give a guarantee that they will stand for five years.

Mr. SPROULE. The rails that were delivered, have they been paid for and accepted?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were paid for, I think, at the rate of $25 per ton on account. There may be a small balance due. I know that the necessary papers were passed to pay them the money, quite recently; I do not know whether they have received it. Practically it is all settled. The $32.60 per ton, but they did not deliver any rails under that contract. The arrangement was that, while $32.60 was fixed as the price for that year, the price in future was to be governed by the market conditions, it was not a continuing price for five years. They had an assurance that an order would be given to them at the current price. They did not deliver any rails at $32.60. The subsequent arrangement was at $27.75.

Mr. BARKER. How many tons of rails is it proposed to provide with this money, where is it proposed to lay them, and what is the weight of the rail?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This money is taken to cover orders which have been given, and which are now being delivered. A portion of these, 1,872 tons, they have taken from the ship railway, that is a railway on which they were laid for some years but never used. That is a very heavy rail, 110 pounds. We received that at $21 per ton. The price is low. Then we have 15,244 tons of 80-pound rails, received from the Kidston firm, in Glasgow, at $25.25 per ton. Then, there is the 485 tons of this particular item, which is a part of the Sault Ste. Marie delivery, at $27.75. This estimate also includes plates, bolts, nuts, and so forth, that have been purchased in Canada.

Mr. BARKER. Where are they to be laid?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The 110-pound rails are to replace rails of 67 pounds, the 67-pound rails are to replace those of 58 pounds. The 80-pound rails will cover 211 miles, and are to be laid between Point Tupper and Sydney, and on the North Sydney branch, on the Drummond division, between Truro and Mulgrave, on the Oxford and New Glasgow, the Pugwash branch, the Pictou Town branch, Pictou Landing branch, and the Dartmouth branch.

Mr. SPROULE. Many of these are to replace the lighter rails. What do you propose doing with the others you take up ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The lighter ones are usually sold to other roads which do not require heavy rails.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think that any responsible Minister of Railways who would come down with items like these year after year, should be ashamed of himself. Here we are asked to pass a vote for renewing rails. I think the acting minister will admit that no railway manager in the world would ever go to his directors and say : I want so much money, to be charged to capital account. If the acting Minister of Railways were the responsible Minister, I would be inclined to censure him for coming down year after year and asking us to add to capital account amounts for railways and engines and for the renewal of those that have been worn out.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the management do with the old rails that have been taken up ? Are they piled up and kept for sale ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A price is put upon them, and many railways in Canada, wanting the lighter rails, come and buy them. The department has to fix a price which it regards as a fair selling value.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the minister credit to capital account the money that he gets for the old rails ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Mr. BARKER. What is the total number of tons ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total number of tons of rails represented in this item is 17,603.

Mr. BARKER. Was there not some mistake in saying that this quantity of 80-pound rails to the yard would cover 21 miles ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The figures which are given to me seem to show that these rails will lay 211 miles of track.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Although these estimates are very important we have to pass them without having a minister who will assume responsibility for them. I think the government should have appointed a minister who was prepared to do that. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is any possible chance of having a Minister of Railways and Canals appointed before the end of the session, so that we can ask him if he will assume responsibility for these estimates ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the session lasts for three or four months longer I think I can promise my hon. friend that the office will be filled.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is a reflection upon the government, because it shows that they are afraid to fill it now. I think the hon. minister will admit that if they had appointed a Minister of Railways when the office became vacant he could not have carried any constituency in this Dominion.

Mr. BARKER. I think the hon. minister's statement as to the mileage will have to be checked, and perhaps he will let us have it again, because I am sure it is not 211 miles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will. The figures as given to me imply that these rails will cover 211 miles. However, I will have the information possibly at eight.

Rolling stock (revote), $590,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What are you going to purchase with this vote ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This stock will be made at the several factories in Canada engaged in that line of work.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will you purchase any at the Montreal works ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, we have no contract with the Montreal company at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked what amount of rolling stock you intend to purchase for this amount of money ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A portion of this money is required to pay the balance due on fifteen locomotives and two shunting engines. We propose to purchase two hundred and seven box cars, nine auxiliary cars and one hundred and thirty ballast cars, which may be used also for coal. The locomotives have been ordered from Kingston, as already stated. The box cars are being made by Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Company, and the ballast cars have not yet been ordered.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This was voted last year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This was voted last year and not expended.

Mr. SPROULE. This is all the rolling stock you are going to purchase ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will this vote cover it all ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is estimated to cover it all.

Mr. BELL. How many cars are subject to repair and condemned as unfit at the present moment ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to get that information.

Mr. BELL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if there are any cars or engines belonging to the Intercolonial Railway at present leased to other roads ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one engine leased to the Baie des Chaleurs Road.

Mr. BELL. Any cars ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No cars. I have had several applications recently for the loan of cars, but we have not had any to spare.

Mr. BARKER. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he intends to put in running order the 500 cars that are out of service before he charges this to capital, or whether this is to replace the cars out of service ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Those cars will be repaired.

Mr. BARKER. During the current year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, as quickly as the work can be done.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister state the prices at which these locomotives, box cars and ballast cars were purchased ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the price of the locomotives, but the balance required on the contract is $204,886. The locomotives were purchased at Kingston. The box cars are to cost $999 each, and the ballast cars $950 each.

Mr. BELL. Are the latter flat cars ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are flat cars which will be used for ballast but they are constructed according to a new patent, so that they can be used as coal cars also.

Mr. BELL. The cost of box cars and ballast cars is almost the same. Ballast cars usually cost $600 or $700. These are to cost over $900.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not the ordinary flat car ; it is a car specially constructed for dumping ballast, and it can also be used for coal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). From whom were the box cars purchased ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. From Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Company, of Amherst, N.S.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Whose constituency is that in ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in Cumberland county.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Were tenders asked from other concerns ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. from everybody.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was this the lowest tender ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The lowest tender.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In the case of the engines, were tenders asked from any other parties than the Kingston Locomotive Company ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think at the time there was nobody making locomotives in Canada but the Kingston Company.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Were tenders asked from any person outside of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the minister of the day ascertained what they could be made for abroad, and having ascertained what the proper prices were, he fixed the price for the Kingston people, who were the only people manufacturing in Canada.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is the price less than the foreign price with the duty added ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could not answer that, but it is quite satisfactory to the company.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the engines were costing a great deal more than what they could be got for abroad with the duty added the department should know it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sure they are not.

Mr. COCHRANE. It might be satisfactory to the company and unsatisfactory to the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt that the Minister of Railways, in a desire to have these engines made in Canada, gave the company as liberal a contract as he could, but I take it that the price represents about what they could be purchased for abroad plus the duty.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister takes it for granted, but the deputy minister knows whether that is true or not. The deputy minister knows what the tenders from abroad, with the duty added, amounted to. The hon. minister should be able to give this committee the information as to whether the price is equal to or less than what these engines could have been purchased for in the foreign market, with the duty added.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman a comparison of the price paid with the foreign price, but I can now give the cost price of the locomotives. There was a contract dated 16th June, 1902, for twenty-five locomotives with the Canadian Locomotive Company, for $20,270 each.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Kingston locomotive works are doing a great deal of work for the government, and they are making an awful lot of money and that is the reason these Montreal works have started, because they claim, that with the government at their back, they can make an awful lot of money out of the government, and that they can get all the contracts they want to run these works for years, at almost any price they wish. I would like if the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) should remain Minister of Railways and Canals, because I have great confidence in him, and I believe he will do what is straight. He will have a say in the matter when it comes up in Council, and I would now draw his attention to the fact that these works in Montreal have been built simply because they expect, within two or three years to make enough money out of the government to pay for their whole works. That rumour is public property, and time will tell. If I have the honour of being in the House, I am going to draw the attention of the minister to this fact session after session, because I have impressed it upon him now before any work has been let. I am quite satisfied that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding), if he is minister, he will come out straight, but if he gets some of these other gentlemen that are mentioned for that portfolio, I would be a little doubtful of it myself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to accept that compliment and carry the item.

Dredging at Point Tupper—to pay M. Connolly interest on $61,429.07 and $16,624.09 at 6 per cent, $5,162,61.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Payment of this account was delayed because of some difference, between Mr. Connolly and the Auditor General regarding another claim. Mr. Connolly owed some money to the government arising out of some other work, and an understanding was come to that Mr. Connolly would pay the balance which he owed to the government, and the government pay the balance which they owed Mr. Connolly, interest being calculated on both sides of the account.

Mr. REID (Grenville). These accounts are pretty well mixed up. We have a dredge purchased that is pretty hard to explain; and then we have a mix-up in these accounts.

Mr. BARKER. Was the liability of the government referred to the law department?

Mr. REID (Grenville).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there was no question as to the liability of the government. The point was, that the Auditor General would not pay this account until the other account was paid by Mr. Connolly. There is an item in the Public Works estimates this year which represents the other side of the transaction.

Mr. BARKER. Does the Auditor General approve of this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So far as I know; I think there is no question about it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How is it that the minister votes interest to Mr. Connolly, whereas if any other poor unfortunate has a claim against the government he has to go to the Exchequer Court.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nothing to go to the Exchequer Court with in this case. The payment of interest, of course is an act of grace on the part of the Crown. As we get interest on one side of the account, we think it only fair to pay it on the other.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is right, but I have even a more just claim in my own county, and the government has refused to pay it. The government wanted some land belonging to a poor widow and they worried the life out of her for three or four years, at the end of which time they gave her $800 for her claim, although she was entitled to a great deal more. I refer to the case of Mrs. Morrison. They held the $800 for three or four years and they absolutely refused to pay interest on it from that day to this. They told the poor widow to go to the Exchequer Court, but in this case they pay exactly a similar claim without sending Mr. Connolly to the Exchequer Court. That is absolutely unfair.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nothing to refer to the Exchequer here. If parliament gives the money it gives it as a matter of grace.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why not extend your matter of grace to the case of the poor widow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know anything about the other case.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Of course, the hon. gentleman was not in the department at the time, but he is assuming responsibility for this vote, and I say it is an act of partiality and favouritism. Mrs. Morrison has asked me to appeal to the department, but I thought there was no use as they refused the claim before. But here the department is quite willing to pay Connolly and they refuse to pay the just claim of the poor widow. Will the minister give me an opportunity of putting the case before him, and I will leave it to his own sense of honour and fair-play to say whether it is just or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Each of these claims will have to stand on its own merits. I cannot express an opinion in advance.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This is a poor widow who cannot defend herself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. She has an excellent defender.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This is a case of hardship. If the minister gives me his word that he will consider the case, I will leave it to his own sense of fair-play.

Mr. BARKER. Has there been any dispute with regard to this credit to Connolly on the part of the Auditor General? If the Auditor General is satisfied with this vote we have nothing more to say, but if we pass it now, the Auditor General must pay it whether he thinks it right or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know whether the Auditor General has had before him the question of the payment of the interest, but there was no dispute whatever about the principal sum, as between the Auditor General and the department.

Mr. BARKER. Why didn't you pay it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because the Auditor General held an account (and I do not say he was wrong) against Mr. Connolly, and he would not pay it until all the accounts were settled together.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the hon. minister not allow the case of this widow woman to be appealed to him?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I have too many applications in the department already to invite others. All I can say is that each of these cases as it comes up will be dealt with on its merits.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there were two transactions, one in favour of the government and one in favour of Mr. Connolly. Which party stood to benefit the most?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The figures which I have before me have relation only to the Department of Railways. I know that the Minister of Public Works, as disclosed by his estimates, has had some transactions with Mr. Connolly, and it was in consequence of money claimed to be due from Mr. Connolly to that department that this payment was delayed.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the same rate of interest allowed on both sides?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is. I understand that the late Minister of Railways and Canals came to a settlement with Mr. Connolly on a basis of six per cent. I am not sure what rate of interest was computed in the transaction with the Public Works Department.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the other account for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A contract in connection with the Kingston graving dock.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister get that information for us and let us know, because I presume that to be fair, the interest should be the same on both sides. I assume that this transaction could not be settled unless Mr. Connolly got the best of it, or at any rate got generous fair-play.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think the hon. minister should be willing to give me time within the next six months, whenever it is convenient to him, to place the case of this widow woman before him, and depend upon his sense of justice.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise that I or somebody else will give time to every claim of any kind that is submitted to the department.

Engine house, &c., Chaudiere junction (revote), $33,500.

Mr. MORIN. On what side of the Chaudière river will this building be put up?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Prime Minister tells me that it is on the east side.

Mr. MORIN. Has the site been bought?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is being obtained at present.

Mr. MORIN. How many acres of land have you obtained for it, and how much have you paid for the site?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the information, but I will obtain it for the hon. gentleman.

New machinery for locomotive and car shops, $9,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this complete the machinery for the car shops?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think this will be all at Moncton.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the amount of $49,000 voted last year for the equipment of the machine shops there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I find that the appropriation for 1902-3 was $10,000 and the expenditure was $9,280; that is, for new machinery only.

Mr. BLAIN. What capacity have you now in the workshops at Moncton for manufacturing locomotives?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not more that half a dozen a year.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not the equipment for machinery, $50,000 or $60,000, pretty large for that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a great deal of repair work done there all the time.

To compensate the Anchor Line for salvage services to ss. 'Scotia,' $16,072.23.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The 'Scotia' is the ferry steamer in the Strait of Canso which got into difficulty on her way over from Great Britain. Assistance was given her by one of the Anchor Line steamers, and the question arose of what salvage should be paid. An action was brought by the owners of the Anchor Line steamers against the government, and the government were obliged to plead that the Crown is not liable—not because we were not willing to pay a fair amount for salvage, but because our relations with our underwriters were such that, for our own protection, we had to take advantage of any privilege we enjoyed. We, however, had no intention of not paying salvage, and the Deputy Minister of Justice, who looked into the claim, gave us the opinion that it would be wise and just to pay this amount, which the company have accepted.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The case was never tried in court?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, and judgment was given in our favour on the technical point that the Crown was not liable.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How much did the company claim ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They claimed a very considerable sum in excess of this.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We compromised with their agent, who came from New York. He agreed that the amount we offered was reasonable, and the company are perfectly satisfied. Our recourse against the underwriters still exists, and we are endeavouring to make them pay.

Additional sidings along line, $63,500.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an item we allowed to stand over. I find that the item mentioned by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) is not the same as this, although the wording is somewhat similar. The item he read was for additional sidings and increased accommodations and facilities along the line, $135,000. That is much broader and not confined entirely to sidings.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of that $135,000 was expended on sidings ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $71,727.26.

Mr. BARKER. As you have got through that item 31, I wish to say that, although no discussion has taken place on the system of charging to capital certain expenditures which should go against income, I desire once more to protest against the system adopted by the government in that respect. In the one item of steel rails and fastenings, $585,000, really not more than $100,000 should be charged against capital.

Prince Edward Island—Murray Bay harbour branch and Hillsborough bridge, $480,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item was wholly explained in the main estimates, when I informed the House that we would have to provide an additional sum in the supplementaries.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I find that this railway cost $28,000 per mile and more; why does it cost so much ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is on schedule prices, and as the quantity of work increases, the total cost is greater. The engineers say it is through a difficult country and the cost of construction is much larger than it would be in the case of a narrow gauge road, built through an easy country. The country is considerably rocky and rolling. The whole cost of the work is estimated at $2,795,113.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who are the contractors ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contractors for the construction of the road are Willard Kitchen, and for the bridge, M. J. Haney.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is the contract price for the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is on schedule prices. The cost is estimated at $1,494,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Did any other contractors tender ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bridge was let after public tender and competition.

Mr. BARKER. Do those figures include the superstructure ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The cost of the bridge would include the superstructure, which is to be removed from the Intercolonial and taken over to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BLAIN. In the discussion last year, page 2862 of 'Hansard,' the hon. minister stated that the cost of the bridge would be $1,100,000. Now he says it was let by contract at schedule prices, and the cost he estimates at $400,000 more than he did then. Would the hon. minister tell us how that comes ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There can be no change in prices but only in the quantities. Just why the engineer should have made an estimate of quantities last year, which moneyed out to $1,100,000, when now we find the estimate $1,400,000, I cannot explain. I will have to look into it and see how the discrepancy has occurred.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was there any change in the engineers ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, there was no change except in the quantities. In either one case or the other, they have not been estimated with sufficient accuracy.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It does seem strange that last year the engineers should have made an estimate of $1,100,000 and now they make an estimate of $1,400,000. The minister ought to allow the item to stand until he can explain it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did these estimates read by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) include the superstructure ?

Mr. BLAIN. I will read to the hon. gentleman what the Minister of Railways and Canals said last year. 'The bridge itself will cost $1,100,000.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That might or might not include the superstructure.

Mr. BLAIN. It would hardly be a bridge without a superstructure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineers do not always talk that way.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister would not say that the cost of the bridge without the superstructure would be $1,100,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can not say that. I will look into it.

Mr. BLAIN. This is the kind of thing that causes delay in passing the estimates. Will the hon. gentleman say that the bridge will be completed for not more than $1,460,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The figures given to me of the latest revised estimate is $1,494,137. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) asks me if I will guarantee, on my own responsibility, that the bridge will be finished for that. I will not. Nor would he if he were in my place. I am obliged to take the information that is given me by the engineers on such a subject as this.

Mr. BLAIN. I would not ask the minister to pledge his own word to the House for the completion of that work for that amount. But it does seem as if the engineers were at fault, or else, owing to hurried and incomplete explanations, it is impossible for members of the committee to understand what these works are and what they will cost. I could easily understand it, if it were a mere estimate. But here is a work under construction with a large amount of money already expended on it. And the minister, with so large an item as $500,000 before the committee, last year made the statement that the bridge would cost $1,100,000. It seems strange—and the hon. acting Minister of Railways and Canals will agree with me I am sure—that we should be told now that the bridge will cost nearly $1,500,000. I suppose the river has not got any wider, necessitating the building of a longer bridge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Perhaps the hon. minister will give us a statement of the estimates for the superstructure and for the other work—the original estimate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The original estimate of the bridge ought not to differ from that of to-day, because there has been no additional work, so far as I know. I cannot explain why my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals of last year gave an estimated cost of $1,100,000. I will have to learn, if I can, before the estimates are finally disposed of, what the explanation is. Sometimes, there are explanations of these things. Sometimes, two items which seem to relate to exactly the same work do not relate to exactly the same thing.

Mr. COCHRANE. The minister must see that this is not a satisfactory way to vote money. Last year the Minister of Railways and Canals asked the committee to grant a sum of money for the completion of this bridge. This year, we are asked to vote $300,000 more for the same work. And the acting Minister of Railways and Canals himself tells us that he is not going to pledge himself that this is all the bridge will cost. We cannot know what we are doing under these circumstances, we do not know where we are at. I do not know for one, and I cannot feel safe in coming to a conclusion in this matter unless the minister gives us better assurance than he has seen fit to do so far in his bland way. I do not hold the minister responsible for this increased estimate of $300,000 but the question naturally arises, how are we to know that we shall not be in the same position next year. The hon. minister tells us that when engineers speak of a bridge they do not always mean a bridge with the superstructure. If an engineer talked to me about a bridge, and I found out afterwards that he meant a bridge without a superstructure, I should think he was trying to deceive me. Surely the hon. minister was not in earnest when he spoke in that way. The minister tells us that this bridge will cost $300,000 more than the amount given last year——

Mr. BARKER. Three hundred and eighty thousand.

Mr. COCHRANE. It has gone up again. It seems to me that we are entitled to have this question treated with more seriousness by the minister. Of course we may laugh over these things and so let them go, but we can hardly do that and deal justly by the people we represent. If anything of this kind were to occur in a municipal council, there would be a general opinion that the councillors were trying to deceive the people. We are entitled to know just what money will be required to finish this bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Cochrane's) criticisms are quite fair. I say that when my attention was drawn to the fact that the engineer said last year that the bridge was to cost $1,100,000, I find now that it will cost $1,490,000. There is an explanation due, and I will endeavour to obtain it. I will let the item stand in the meantime.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) asked what the cost of this superstructure would be. That is provided for by the government and I think the government should know.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The cost of the superstructure which, of course, would include the transfer of the bridge from the Intercolonial, the carriage and construction is $275,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And the rest of the structure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the construction of the branch ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, I am talking of the bridge. I asked how much the superstructure of the bridge would cost, and also the other parts of the work, in order that we might get at the original estimate of the cost.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimated cost of the superstructure is $275,660 ; of the superstructure and approaches, $1,218,436, making in all $1,494,096.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Now give us the original estimate, I mean when the contract was given to Mr. Haney.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will find out what the original estimate was. There ought to be no difference in these estimates, because the price remains the same. It is merely a question of quantity. Mr. M. J. Haney was the contractor.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then the minister will allow this item to stand until we get full information ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Judging from the estimates since 1900 for the improvements at Hillsborough, one would think that Prince Edward Island was getting a lot of money. I find that in 1900, $700,000 was voted ; the next year, $450,000 ; the next year, $500,000 ; further supplementary estimates the same year, $450,000 ; for 1903-4, $750,000, with this present estimate of $480,000, making in all $3,330,000 voted since 1900. Now, there must be some mistake. This is certainly misleading to the people of Prince Edward Island, because they have not received all that money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is confusing two entirely different things. The votes for public works and the actual expenditure upon them are two different things. Large sums of money in these estimates are re-votes ; therefore one gets no intelligible idea of the cost of a particularly work by merely adding up the various items of appropriation.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister can bring down the total amount that has been paid out on the Prince Edward Island Railway since 1900.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can give that now. The total expenditure on this work for the last four years ending June 30th, 1903, is $1,492,525, on the Murray harbour branch and upon the bridge—the whole enterprise.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister having given us a statement of the supposed cost of the bridge, would he give us a statement of the cost of the railway ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimate of the railway to the point known as Murray river which was one contract, is $926,460.70. To that is to be added the cost of the line down to Murray Harbour, $104,600.32. These two items would make up the cost of the railway. In addition to that, there will be required a crib-work wharf at Murray Harbour which was estimated to cost $69,955. These three items will be the cost of the railway and the terminal facilities at Murray Harbour.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Legislation—House of Commons—to provide annual increment to ten clerks at $50 each, $500.

Mr. SPROULE. What clerks are these ?

Mr. SPEAKER (Hon. L. P. Brodeur). I have not the names with me, as I did not expect my estimates to come up, but they are all clerks who are entitled to increase of salary.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they get an increase last year ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Some of them must have had increases last year. We generally give increases so long as they do not reach the maximum of their class. I suppose that those who were not transferred from one class to another received increases last year, and are this year receiving increases.

Mr. SPROULE. All those who did not reach the maximum got increases last year ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they the year before ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Since I have been Speaker of the House of Commons I have always given increases to all those who have not reached the maximum of their class and who are entitled to them.

Mr. SPROULE. The Speaker is more generous to his employees than some members of the government are. We are not objecting to it, because I think he has done the right thing.

Mr. BELL. I understand that some officials of this House are not included here, and I understand that in many cases, on account of the length of the session, those who are not paid for their day's service, but who are paid by the year or the session, will be at a great disadvantage. In some cases gentlemen who are at the head and in charge are receiving remuneration which in amount is less than that received by their subordinates. An example of this is the gentleman at the head of the sessional writers. While the session has been protracted to such an extent that it is necessary to increase the pay of all the temporary employees and also of all those who are employed by the day, some recognition should be made of the length of time during which these older and annual employees are obliged to work. I find that a few are provided for, but very few, and it strikes me that while it might not be advisable at this time to touch the more expensive salaries, there are some gentlemen who are receiving very small salaries which it might be well to increase. I may mention the case of Mr. Stewart.

Mr. SPEAKER. I know the case to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) refers. The sessional writers are not on the permanent list. Those for whom provision is made in the estimates are all officers who are on the permanent list. The one to whom the hon. gentleman refers is not on the permanent list. I understand the difficulty in which those officers find themselves this year on account of the extraordinary length of the session, and probably some means will be taken by which these officers shall at least receive the same salary as those who are under them.

Mr. BELL. I suppose I am to understand that his honour the Speaker is making that definite statement, and that something will be done to put these gentlemen in a better position than that in which they are at present. I see that the further supplementary estimates contain some provision for officers of the House of Commons, but these gentlemen are not included.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say that it is not necessary that these amounts should be included in the estimates. I think that there is already enough money voted to provide for these increases. It will be a question for the board to determine, and we expect to have a meeting of the board very soon, and the matter will be looked into.

Mr. BELL. That is the Board of Internal Economy ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). A number of years ago the regular press representatives in the press gallery were placed on the list of sessional writers, but the practice has been discontinued for some years. Inasmuch as this has been a very long session, I am satisfied that the Speaker would be endorsed by the House and by the country if he would, at all events for this session, fall back upon the old custom and allow the representatives of the leading journals who have been here during the entire session to be again placed on the list of sessional writers.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter has never been brought to my attention. In fact, this is the first time that I ever heard that some years ago the members of the press gallery were also sessional writers. It may be so, but I have never heard of it. This is the first time also that I ever heard it proposed that something should be done in the way suggested by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will take the matter up and consider it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, there are some little courtesies which have always been extended to the gentlemen of the press, but do I understand that the hon. gentleman suggests that representatives of the press should be paid as if they were sessional clerks ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They do as much as the sessional clerks.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One is a public servant and the other is not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think the custom was that some years ago the members of the press gallery were on the list of sessional writers, and I think that those who have been here the entire session and given their entire time to the work of the House and of the country should be placed on the list of sessional writers. I should be pleased if the hon. Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) would go into the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The practice may have existed, but I have never heard that members of the press gallery were also sessional writers. I will inquire about it.

Mr. GOURLEY. I heard a young page boasting the other day in the Senate of the superiority of their House, because they pay their doorkeeper $1,000, while ours only gets $500. I want to know whether that is correct or not. I hope there is some explanation of that, because we hold the purse strings and we should see that our officers are properly paid.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question was brought to my attention some time ago, and I inquired the reason why they gave $1,000 a year, or $900, to the doorkeeper of the Senate. The reason given was that the officer they have there is a very old officer who was at one time doing something else. He became old or for some reason or other they decided to appoint him doorkeeper, and leave him at the same salary as he had received before. He wanted this position of doorkeeper, because he thought it would give him less work to do. He is a very old officer and this is why he receives more salary.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think this is a very ridiculous sum to pay our officer for a long session like this ; $500 seems to be really beneath contempt as a compensation for such an important officer as this one who preserves our House from intrusions at all times. I really think it is worthy of more serious consideration.

Tradesmen, and others, $1,000.

Mr. MORIN. There is one of the employees of the House who is only allowed $3 a day for himself and for the use of his horse. He has pointed out to me that the messengers receive $2.50 per day, and the extra 50 cents which he receives is not sufficient remuneration for the use of his horse.

Mr. SPEAKER. I will inquire into the matter.

Murray Harbour branch and Hillsborough bridge, $480,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Before six o'clock, my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) raised a question with regard to the estimated cost of the Hillsborough bridge and the Murray Harbour Branch Railway. The hon. gentleman pointed out that the minister stated last year that the cost of the bridge would be $1,100,000, while I have stated that the cost would be $1,494,096. As I then suggested, the difference arises from the fact that while the cost of the bridge itself was placed at $1,100,000, the contingencies and the superstructure would increase the estimate to the larger amount. It would have been better had the minister last year stated that his estimates did not include the superstructure, but it is quite evident that he did not intend to include it, because the sum he mentioned is almost exactly the engineer's estimate for the substructure, namely, $1,107,667. To this should be added 10 per cent for contingencies, amounting to $110,767, and for the superstructure $275,660, making the total cost of the bridge in its entirety $1,494,096.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are the contingencies in the case ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the practice with engineers to allow a margin for contingencies in connection with such works.

Mr. BARKER. I myself thought that might be the explanation of the difference, but I am bound to say that when a minister speaks of an estimate in this House, he should include contingencies. We have reason on this side of the House to complain that there is too much looseness in the answers given to questions of this kind, and I am sorry to say that very frequently we have reason to believe that an answer is given which may satisfy the House for the moment. I do not make any personal reflection now, but I have noticed frequently a desire on the part of a minister to say something which for the time being may satisfy the House. We are entitled to know the whole truth, and no matter who the minister is, or how much I may respect him personally, I shall never hesitate to speak my mind plainly, if he is guilty of such a thing. A minister is bound to give the fullest explanation to this side of the House, and to his own followers, on every item of these estimates. The contingencies are included by every engineer in an estimate for such a work, and it is absurd for any minister to give an estimate without including contingencies in it. I had no doubt when this $1,100,000 was spoken of as the probable expenditure required for this work, it meant that the actual estimate was $1,000,000 and that the $100,000 was the 10 per cent added to it. Still, I think it is quite possible that the Minister of Finance has told us just what occurred. I have no doubt that on that occasion, owing to the want of proper care, the care which we are entitled to expect from the government of the day, the $1,100,000 was taken as the full estimate, including the contingencies, when there ought perhaps to have been 10 per cent added to that. There is no doubt, however, in my mind that this contract requires on the part of the acting Minister of Railways a very careful investigation. Assuming that the hon. gentleman was correct in telling us that this narrow gauge railway is going to cost $28,000 a mile——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I did not say so. An hon. gentleman on the other side said that.

Mr. BARKER. I think the hon. gentleman said so, and he added that it did seem a very large amount for a narrow-gauge railway. I think 'Hansard' will show that I am correct in that. If $28,000 a mile is being spent by this government on a narrow-gauge railway in Prince Edward Island, with all the facilities which it has for completion, such as providing steel rails from the Intercolonial Railway at practically the cost of scrap, it is a monstrous thing to suppose that such a railway will cost any such money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that the road would cost $28,000 a mile. The figures came from an hon. gentleman opposite, I do not remember whom.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it was I who made the calculation. I said that according to that calculation the cost was $28,000 a mile—am I correct in that? And I think the hon. minister said that it was a big price for a narrow-gauge railway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman confirms the statement I made. I did not make the calculation per mile. I said the road was expensive, but I did not compare the figures, and they did not originate with me. As a matter of fact, the cost of the road to the point where it has reached, Murray river, not including the bridge, would be $21,056 a mile.

Mr. BARKER. No one ever heard of calculating the cost of a railway per mile and omitting all its bridges.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose that if we were to take a piece of the Grand Trunk, including the bridge at Montreal, and figure its cost per mile, it would amount to a great deal. This Hillsborough bridge is a large and costly one, and any attempt to figure out the cost of a narrow-gauge road associated with the cost of that bridge, would be so manifestly unfair that I cannot imagine the hon. member for Hamilton wanting the figures to be put in that way.

Mr. BARKER. I think the cost of a road ought in every case to include the cost of the bridges. It is quite open to the hon. gentleman, when he finds that the cost is exceptionally high, to point out that there is an unusually costly bridge; but no one ever heard of the cost of a railway being estimated per mile without including the cost of the bridges.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That may be correct in the case of a long railway with ordinary bridges. On the other hand, it would be equally absurd to take a short narrow gauge railway, containing one very long bridge, and add the cost of the two together to get at the cost per mile of the railway.

Mr. COCHRANE. You could not have the railway without the bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But a statement of that character would be very misleading unless you made an explanation as to the cost of the bridge.

Mr. BARKER. That is what I say, and it is open to the hon. gentleman to make that explanation. Even the railway without the bridge cost 50 per cent more than it ought.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman were doing the work as a contractor, perhaps he would not think so.

Mr. BARKER. As a government contractor I might not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is not quite prepared to say that any contractor would do it for less than the contractors are doing it for now. So far as I know, they are doing it at ordinary schedule prices. If that is so, the hon. gentleman's remark is uncalled for.

Mr. BARKER. I can probably give the reason why it is costing more than it ought to cost. This question was up last year or the year before. The fact is that the contractors got the contract for the first ten miles of this road on certain specifications at so much per yard, and the government, instead of calling for tenders for the remainder of the road, told the contractors that they could complete it at the same rates, without the least investigation as to whether the continuation of the road was of the same character or not. We complained at the time that no railway company in the world would ever think of letting contracts on such a basis. The minister at the time had to admit that he did not know the character of the work yet to be done; he had received no estimates or statements when he entered into the new contract. That is what this business government thought was the regular thing, and it was approved by every hon. gentleman opposite.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the contract had been taken for the first section at so much per mile, and if it had been extended at the same rate for a different class of work, then the hon. gentleman would have some reason to complain. But what is the fact? The first contract was made at schedule prices, and when the road was extended the contractor was allowed to continue the work at schedule prices for the same class of work, because there was no material difference in the work. It was a mere question of quantities.

Mr. BARKER. I said the first contract was let on the basis of so much per yard for the different qualities of work. But what I complained of then, and what I complain of now, is that the government, without ascertaining the nature of the work to be done, without knowing whether it was more expensive or less expensive than the part already done, simply told these contractors to go on and do the work. Did those gentlemen take it without investigation? I would like to ask any hon. gentleman in this House whether it is reasonable to suppose that the contractors would have taken the extension without ascertaining whether it was more profitable or less profitable for them to do the work. The minister of that day admitted that he had no reports whatever from his department as to the nature of the work yet to be done; and it is absolute folly for the hon. gentleman to tell me now that the government had ascertained that the work yet to be done was of the same character as the work already done. The minister of the day, a year ago, admitted that he did not know. He simply shut his eyes and told the contractors to go ahead.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not want to contradict my hon. friend, but I question if the minister used any such language. The general conditions of the country there are well known, and I am advised that they do not differ. As the rates were schedule rates, so much for every yard of earth removed and masonry constructed, it is simply a question of quantity. Unless the contractors did a larger quantity of work, they could not get a larger amount of money. If the general conditions of the country are the same and the schedule prices were fair in the first instance, I do not think there is anything to warrant the statement that the cost is excessive.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman, I fancy, has never had to pay for any work done on a railway or he would not use such an argument. It is quite possible that you may have to handle the same earth or rock or whatever it may be, but the value of that work depends on the haulage. If you have to take up a yard of earth in one place and haul it a mile, that will cost you considerably more than if you have to haul it half a mile or less. The government should have obtained from its engineer a report as to how far every yard of earth and rock would have to be hauled. You pay a man so much per yard, not merely for digging up the earth, but for hauling it, and the rate largely depends on the length of haulage. A contractor may excavate and haul a short distance at fifteen cents per yard and charge thirty cents a yard for double the distance. How can you tell by one ten miles of the road what the next ten miles will cost. The minister of the day admitted that he had made no inquiry. I venture to say that there is not a railway company in this country who would think of letting a contract to a contractor on ten miles of road simply on the basis of what they paid another contractor on another ten miles. They would have an estimate from their engineer of the distance every yard of earth had to be hauled, and every detail, before they would give out the contract.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the hon. minister the plans, cuttings, specifications and profiles? He should lay these on the table? We should know how much filling and cutting had to be done and what was the nature of the cutting on every mile of road. The price paid for building a road in that country seems most extravagant and perfectly abnormal. You could build a road through the Rocky Mountains for the same money.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These plans and specifications are not in Ottawa, but they were all submitted to the House when the matter was discussed on a previous occasion. The contract is not one which has been recently let. I do not recollect the precise words used by the minister at the time, but I am assured by the chief engineer that it was well understood that the general character of the work on that line was the same and we could properly take the prices given in the first contract as a very fair criterion of the value of the work.

Mr. BARKER. The matter may have been well understood but that is not the way business men enter into contracts. I asked the question at the time if the department had had reports showing the nature of the work, and the minister admitted he had not. The idea of any one entering into a contract involving large sums of money upon what was 'well understood' as to the nature of the country!

Mr. BLAIN. What is the length of this road?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Forty-four miles to Murray river and six and a half miles thence to Murray Harbour terminus, making fifty and a half miles.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the terminus been decided upon by the department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, but the last six and a half miles have not been constructed.

Mr. BLAIN. And the total cost of the road outside of the bridges?

Mr. BARKER. Is $1,400,000, which is nearly $28,000 per mile.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Including the bridge.

Mr. BARKER. No, excluding the bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost of the work down to Murray Harbour, which is the terminus, is placed in the revised estimates at $2,795,113. If from that you will deduct the estimated cost of the bridge, $1,494,097, the result will give the cost of the road without the bridge. That also includes $69,555 for terminal facilities at Murray Harbour.

Mr. BARKER. This particular harbour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, but if you use terminal facilities on a short road, the cost will be more per mile than on a long road. $2,795,113.17 is the estimated total cost of the work. The estimated cost of the bridge is $1,494,097.

Mr. BLAIN. That would make the total for the bridge and railway, how much ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bridge, railway, rolling stock, and wharf at Murray Harbour, all united, cost $2,795,113.17. That includes the bridge and rolling stock and $69,000 for the wharf at Murray Harbour.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Railways and Canals last year estimated the cost of the bridge at $1,000,000 and the cost of the road, including rolling stock, at $2,620,000. So that the hon. gentleman is under the estimates of the late minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have the same figures. They gave the cost down to Murray river, but, the road down to Murray Harbour is six miles and a half more, which could not have been included in that statement.

Mr. BLAIN. The estimate which the hon. gentleman is giving now is very much lower than that given by the Minister of Railways and Canals last year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not see how that can be.

Mr. BLAIN. The last minister gave the cost of the road, including rolling stock, at $2,620,000 and the cost of the bridge at $1,100,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The cost of the bridge was included in the cost of the road.

Mr. BLAIN. No, here are the exact words: 'The railway including the rolling stock, will cost in the neighbourhood of $2,620,000. The bridge itself will cost $1,100,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is included in the $2,620,000.

Mr. BARKER. Allow me to point out another fact. The late minister gave the figures last year at $2,620,000, omitting the last six and a half miles of railway. Now we have it up to $2,800,000 round numbers. That means an addition of $182,000 for six and a half miles of railway, which is $28,000 per mile.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend should mention that in that six and a half miles is included $70,000 for the wharf.

Mr. BARKER. I admit that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman admits it now but he did not state it.

Mr. BARKER. I am giving the average cost of the road. You can find some half miles on the road that will cost $50,000. But I am speaking of the average. The whole average is $26,000 to $28,000 per mile according to the hon. gentleman's own figures.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And in his estimate the hon. gentleman includes nearly $70,000 for a wharf. If that is understood and clearly stated, I do not object to his calculation.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman knows that you can find roads one hundred miles long with terminals worth a million. All that is included. You do not count only the cheapest or worst part of the road, but include the terminals also. You will spend sometimes on one station more than will build five miles of the road. All that is taken in in estimating the average. Taking this whole road without the bridge, the cost is $26,000. Take the last six and a half miles, the cost is $28,000, and I do not see how the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) was far wrong in his estimate. The hon. gentleman seemed to think this was an excessive amount for a narrow gauge railway and I think everybody will agree with him.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) can find terminal companies with only two or three miles of railway, and terminals worth immense sums, which would make the road cost on the average, perhaps, $100,000 a mile. In the case of this railway the hon. gentleman includes a great bridge and a wharf at the end of the road, and so figures out a very high average cost for this narrow gauge railway. He may be technically right, but the statement is a very misleading one.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. minister always wished to put in this bridge. Well, if he puts that in he makes the cost of his road $55,000 a mile, and, leaving out the bridge the road costs $26,000 to $28,000 a mile, and, judging by the differences in estimates that are given us at different times, we may probably add ten or fifteen per cent to that. It is perfectly fair to count in even the cost of an expensive terminal in averaging the cost of road per mile. You can find miles that may cost $75,000 to $100,000. But that is not the way you take it—you take the average of the whole.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is still leaving out $200,000 for rolling stock which is included in this. That adds to the cost per mile.

Mr. BARKER. All that is part of your railway system. And I am not sure that the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is going to spend $200,000. He has a good deal of rolling stock already in Prince Edward Island. But, assuming that he does, he has $28,000 a mile expended in Prince Edward Island for a narrow gauge railway. Why you would not spend that to-day for a first class railway in Ontario. And this road in Prince Edward Island is laid with second-hand rails from the Intercolonial, has a second-hand bridge from the Intercolonial and, no doubt, the rolling stock will be second-hand also. That is what Prince Edward Island gets, apparently. The government is transferring this bridge from the Intercolonial to this branch railway and charging $300,000 for it. And it is taking 67-pound rails that have been almost worn out on the Intercolonial——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who says so ?

Mr. BARKER. We have heard from time to time from everybody who has discussed these estimates that the rails that were taken off the Intercolonial were to be sent to Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But who said they were worn out ? That is the point.

Mr. BARKER. Well, I suppose the hon. gentleman is not taking up new rails ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But that is not the point. Who said they were worn out ?

Mr. BARKER. I suppose they are not absolutely useless, but still they are second-hand rails. The minister is putting down railways for which he charges what price he pleases, using rails and bridges from the Intercolonial. And the result is that he gets a narrow gauge road which costs about $55,000 a mile, or, excluding the bridge, $28,000 a mile.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) has made his speech still more remarkable by saying that the rolling stock will be old rolling stock from the Intercolonial. I think it will take his ingenuity to show how you are going to take broad gauge rolling stock and use it on the narrow gauge railway.

Mr. BARKER. Oh, that has been done over and over again.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know whether the minister answered my question as to the estimate of the cost of this bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not aware of any other estimate than this one. If there is any other I will get it later.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, let the item stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the item has stood long enough.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. minister is not prepared to give us any information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may be able to give it during the evening.

Mr. REID. Then, the item should stand until he gets it. As well as I can understand there is a deal in this for some person. I think we should be told exactly what increase there has been since the original estimate, and we should have that information before the item passes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have just received information which may meet the hon. gentleman's question. The original estimate of the substructure was $605,274 with ten per cent for contingencies, $60,527. The original estimate of the superstructure was $275,000, making a total estimate of $940,801 at the time the contract was first made. The explanation of the increase given to me is that the bridge was lengthened 630 feet, with an enlarged water-way, necessitating two abutments and one pier being added. The four pneumatic piers were increased in size, increasing the cost of dredging, iron concrete and rip-rap. The earth approaches were added to the concrete. Schedule prices remain the same as in the tender and contract.

Mr. BARKER. The minister expressed surprise when I spoke of the cost being increased by over 50 per cent above the estimates. The figure he has just given, showing the original estimate of this bridge at $940,000, as against the present estimate is a little more than 50 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not what my hon. friend said. He did not say it was 50 per cent more than the estimate, he said it was 50 per cent more than the thing should have cost.

Mr. BARKER. It should have cost according to the estimate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, if changes were afterwards made, it should cost its fair value.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that I know what the thing should have cost ? I have never been in Prince Edward Island. I was speaking of the estimates given by the Minister of Railways in this House, which were $940,000 for this bridge. To-day these estimates are up to $1,494,000, an increase of more than 50 per cent. That justifies what I said.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it does not. If he was only thinking of the estimates it is unfortunate he did not say so. He said it was 50 per cent more than it should have cost. That was a question as to the value of the work in comparison with the price that we were paying for it. If he had said that it was 50 per cent more than the first estimate, that would have been a matter for discussion.

Mr. COCHRANE. When the minister comes down and tells us that the cost of a bridge is going to be so much, an ordinary mortal like myself naturally believes him. I have seen so much of this thing that I think the time has come when it should be called by its right name, and I cannot term it anything else but deception used by the Minister of Railways. Of course, I am not accusing the minister I am now addressing. But he must see that when a minister comes down to the House and tells us that a bridge is going to cost $500,000, I have always been innocent enough to suppose that that was what it was going to cost. But I am being undeceived this last session or two. We were told, and I accepted the statement in my innocency, that this bridge was going to cost about $500,000; it has cost $1,400,000, and the end is not yet. I think the minister should have his estimates prepared with more care.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend must be mistaken when he speaks of the minister saying that this bridge was going to cost $500,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the 'Hansard' will show it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think so. From the beginning it has been known that this bridge would be expensive, and would cost very much more than that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister tells us to-night that the reason of this increase is that the bridge has been extended 630 feet. Now when this bridge was projected does the minister tell us that the engineer in charge of that work did not know how long that bridge was going to be within 630 feet? Now there is one reason I think why this bridge is costing a lot more money than we were told it was going to cost. I see by the estimates that the contractor for this bridge is getting $25 a cubic yard for taking out rock.

Mr. BARKER. That is three times what it ought to be.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If that is correct it refers to rock excavation in about 90 feet of water, which is very different from ordinary excavation.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But I am informed that they are paying $25 a cubic yard for concrete work with the same rock that they are taking out of that excavation for which they are paying $25 a cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that that is not true.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That the same rock is not being used?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am so informed. The prices were fixed by public tender and competition, but I cannot go into details.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman tell us that they are paying $25 a yard for taking rock out of 90 feet of water? What is the object of taking that rock out at 90 feet depth, if it is solid rock? If it is loose rock, why should it cost $25 a yard?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is an engineering question. It is possible the engineers would be right.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman will see that if there is no blasting or any other work, it is simply lifting up the loose rock, and $25 a yard is a magnificent sum.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract was given by public tender and competition, and $25 was the lowest price anybody would tender for it. I think probably the price would be a fair one.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I pointed out before recess that we had been paying on this Prince Edward Island Railway upwards of $3,000,000, and the minister replied that much of this consisted of revotes. Now I think some other explanation than revotes is required, because we find that in the estimated cost of this road by the Minister of Railways the substructure was to cost $375,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where does the hon. gentleman get his figures?

Mr. LEFURGEY. In the debates for 1901, page 4227. It reads:

> Murray Harbour branch and Hillsborough bridge, P.E.I., $450,000.
> The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost of the substructure is $375,000. The cost altogether will be $450,000. Eleven and a half miles of road are under construction, and thirty-two miles have yet to be constructed. The eleven and a half miles have cost close to $43,000, and we estimate that the total cost will be $170,000.

Now that 40 odd miles of railway that we figured out this year has cost $28,000 a mile.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does that say for 40 miles? I thought the hon. gentleman said eleven miles.

Mr. LEFURGEY (reading):

> The eleven and a half miles have cost close to $43,000, and we estimate that the total cost will be $170,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost of what?

Mr. LEFURGEY: (reading)

> Adding that to the estimated cost of the $450,000 will give $660,000. The $450,000 is what will suffice for the coming year.

There must be some grave discrepancy about this—$450,000 in 1901, $1,490,000 in 1903 and last year $1,100,000. I think there is some explanation due to this committee or we as well as the country will come to the conclusion that there is more engineering going on than the engineering being done by the engineers of the railway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot imagine that any such estimate as my hon. friend has quoted was given. There must be some misunderstanding. I prefer to look into the matter before accepting that statement.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman will see that the estimate for 11½ miles was about $16,000 a mile which is not unreasonable although high. But, this $16,000 a mile jumped up to $28,000 a mile including the 11 miles. That is the result of the unusual method adopted by the government in letting out the contracts. It was on the basis of the 11½ mile contract that they gave the contractors the next 32 miles and these contractors have managed by the yard measurements to get up the 43 miles to nearly $28,000 per mile. Then we have the bridge which was to cost, according to the minister, $375,000 costing three times that amount.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Surely the hon. minister must see at a glance that there must be something wrong. An estimate was made by the engineer, who I suppose is in charge of the work yet, that the bridge would cost $450,000, and that the railway would cost $170,000 more, making $600,000 and odd, and notwithstanding the fact that these works have cost $1,464,000 the hon. minister does not admit that this is sufficient to complete the bridge. Next year we will probably be asked to vote half a million more for this bridge and an additional amount for the railway. Surely this committee are entitled to some explanation. Surely the hon. minister cannot force the item through without giving us some explanation even though, being the acting minister, he does not understand the situation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The committee should fully understand it and the hon. minister should not try to force it through. This is a very important matter. There are rumours that there is something wrong about this whole deal. We have grave reasons to suppose that there is when the minister who was in charge of the department stated to this committee that the whole cost of the bridge and railway would not exceed six hundred thousand and some odd dollars, and when the hon. acting minister now declares that the bridge will cost $1,464,000 and that 43 miles of railway will cost $28,000 a mile. It is most unfair that we cannot get a reasonable explanation of the whole matter from the hon. acting minister or some other member of the government. Therefore, I for one protest against this item going through until the hon. minister gives us the information we are entitled to. If he has not got it to-night I think the item should stand until he can get it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sure the statement the hon. gentleman has made respecting the engineers estimate of this work at the figures he has named must be the result of a misunderstanding. I think it is simply preposterous that any engineer could have given us the figures that he has quoted as being the cost of this work. I have given the hon. gentleman all the information I have received respecting the estimates which are given by the engineers in regard to this work. I cannot undertake off-hand to answer questions as to what the minister may have said four years ago.

Mr. BARKER. Two years ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Two years ago. I can only state that on these points I will be very glad to get the information later on, but in the meantime I do not see that the public business will be advanced if we hold this item over. The work has to be done no matter what it costs. We are committed to it. The government and parliament have agreed to build that road and if mistakes were made by the minister or by the engineers, which I am not prepared to admit without further inquiry, it will not alter the fact that we have to build the road. The hon. gentleman says that there are rumours afloat. He is too prone to mention rumours. He should not do that. If he has any reason to believe that there is anything about the contracts that is not fair or honourable he has had a seven months session of this parliament in which to bring his charges before the House, and if he has failed to do so until this last hour I am bound to believe that the hon. gentleman does not attach very much importance to these rumours.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It has been stated by the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey) that the minister in charge of the department at the time made the statement in this House that the estimated cost of this work would be so much. The minister made that statement on the authority of his department and the hon. acting minister is in a position to say to-night whether that statement was true or not. He can find out whether that was a proper estimate or not and inform the committee whether the statement was true or not. The hon. minister states that we are bound to complete the railway. There is no hon. gentleman on either side of this House but would be glad to see the railway completed, and besides that I believe that every hon. member wants to do all he can in the interests of Prince Edward Island. The opposition are not trying to prevent the building of this road, but they are trying to prevent the government from making an estimate of $600,000 odd as the cost of building the bridge and railway and then coming down here two years afterwards and informing us that $1,464,000 has been spent on the bridge and that $28,000 per mile, or another $1,000,000, would be spent on the railway. This will give the public reason to suppose that there is something wrong in this transaction. I know and I can prove to the hon. minister that in other cases engineers have made estimates and that if the government had not given side issues to the contractors, the estimates would probably have been all right, but no sooner is a contract awarded than the whole thing is changed to suit the contractor as I believe it has been in this case and the contractor makes a good big pull out of it. I venture to say that if the acting minister will look into this contract as it was originally let and compare it with its present form he will see there is just as much difference between the two as there is between day and night. That is the reason this is costing so much. The hon. acting minister admits it when he states that this bridge is to be 630 feet longer than was originally intended. It is most unfair of the hon. acting minister to even hint that the opposition are objecting to this work. The opposition want to see this bridge and railway completed as they want to see any other necessary railway in Prince Edward Island built. While that is the case, they do not want to see three times as much paid for the work as there ought be paid, and I am sure the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) believes in his heart that this did cost three times more than it should.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I don't.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) has truly said, that the Conservative side of the House is willing that Prince Edward Island should get its full share of railway expenditure. We all know that the Island province has not had her share. From confederation up to the time of the building of this Murray Harbour branch, only a little over a million dollars was expended on our railways. We built the Prince Edward Island Railway in the first place, and it was charged to us at confederation in the sum of $3,144,000. That railway cost originally about $16,000 a mile; but according to the statement of the minister, this Murray Harbour branch is costing us $28,000 a mile. The people of Prince Edward Island should know why it is that this 42 miles of railway, through a country no more difficult to construct in than that through which the main line runs, should cost such an enormous sum, when railway construction ought to be 25 per cent cheaper now than when the main line was built. This money is all being charged against Prince Edward Island, and when we come to insist upon having these much needed branch lines on the Island, to which I have so often called the attention of the House, we will be pointed to the large expenditure which has already been made. We want railway facilities on the Island just as the other provinces have, but we want the work done economically. The very fact that the contract for the last half of this line was let to the contractors for the first half, without open competition, accounts, no doubt, for the largely increased cost. We were told in the first place that this would cost $450,000, but now we are told that it will cost $1,450,000, and it is due to the people of Prince Edward Island that they should have some explanation as to where the difference went.

Mr. REID (Grenville). We find now that the total amount to be spent on this bridge will be $2,610,000, although we were originally told that it would cost only $1,009,000. There must be something awfully wrong when any engineer could make an estimate three times less than the work would cost. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Fielding) were engaging in some work of this kind on his own account, and his engineer gave him such an estimate, I do not think he would keep that engineer long in his employment. I think this item should be allowed to stand until we get at the bottom of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But we want to build the road. Give us the bridge and we will give you the information afterwards.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman will not give us the information first.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course I will, we have to get the bridge any how.

Mr. REID (Grenville). We are only too glad to build necessary bridges and railways in Prince Edward Island, and while we are willing to give the contractors a fair profit, we don't want to make two or three millionaires out of a work like this. We realize the embarrassing position of the Minister of Finance in regard to these estimates, but at the same time there must be an explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will have to get another vote next year.

Mr. REID (Grenville). You will ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Most certainly. The hon. gentleman is mixing up the cost of the bridge with the appropriation of the present year.

Mr. BLAIN. When this item was first brought before the House, the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) made this statement :

> The construction of this work includes a bridge and the building of some 44 miles of railway, and the estimated cost of the railway and all permanent works in connection with it will cost $470,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is certainly a misunderstanding somewhere. I am justified in saying that no engineer of the department ever estimated the total work at $470,000. It is not possible the minister could have been correctly reported, or else, he was only referring to some portion of the work. Nobody ever supposed from the beginning that it could be done for $470,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I find that the Minister of Railways further said that the cost of the railway line was estimated at $470,000, and that in addition to that, the estimated cost of the bridge would be in the neighbourhood of $800,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The previous statement was supposed to have covered the whole cost, but we now find in the same sentence, that the bridge would cost over $800,000, and that the $470,000 was for the railway only.

Mr. BLAIN. What we complain of is that we have these varied estimates all through this appropriation, when it is being spoken of from year to year. When a bridge is to be built, I think the minister should be prepared to give us a reasonably close estimate of the total cost of the work. It is somewhat surprising to find the minister estimating a work at a certain amount, and afterwards to find it costing about three times that amount. Does the government of Prince Edward Island pay anything towards this work when it is completed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It pays between $9,000 and $10,000 per annum forever.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I think it would be well for the minister to inform the House of the reason of all these discrepancies. It will certainly cause the electors of the Dominion to look with suspicion on the government undertaking the construction of a transcontinental line of railway to find a work of this kind costing three times the estimated cost.

To increase accommodation at Charlottetown (revote, $24,800), $87,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What work does this vote contemplate?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are proposing to have a new station with covered platform, additional freight shed accommodation, additional land required for the purpose, re-arrangement of the yard, additional siding room, additional wharf accommodation, with dredging, and the usual allowance for engineering, inspection and advertising. The largest item is the new station and platform, $55,000 ; the next, the rearrangement of the yard, $11,000.

Mr. BARKER. What is the percentage for inspecting and advertising ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A little less than 5 per cent.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What is the station to be constructed of ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Brick.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has the contract been let for this yet ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Is it proposed to call for tenders at once.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As soon as we can make the necessary arrangements. There is a good deal to be done, and the season is far advanced. We will expedite it as much as possible.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to call attention to the need of additional wharf accommodation. It is impossible at present to get to the railway station without crossing the town, as the railway only extends to the railway wharf, and the private docks are scattered all the way along the water front beyond that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has been under consideration to some extent; but we think that with these improvements which we are making at Charlottetown this year, the people of that good city will be well content.

Mr. LEFURGEY. In other words, the hon. minister does not contemplate giving them any relief for their docks along the water front ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not contemplate the water front extension at present.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to call the hon. minister's attention very seriously to this matter, which has been a long-felt want to the people of Charlottetown. It would certainly facilitate their business and give the merchants and shippers an opportunity of utilizing the private docks.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It is certainly very unfortunate that the members on the Liberal side of the House are not here to try to obtain justice for Prince Edward Island, but the work is left to the members of the opposition. I would like to ask the hon. minister if this station is to be built by contract, if the tenders will be advertised in the papers, and if the lowest tender will receive the contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

New station at Alberton, $3,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has the contract for this been let ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, nothing done yet.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will this be proceeded with at once ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will do our best with all these works; but it takes a little time to get them going.

To provide for a survey to Montague bridge, $2,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There was an item in the first estimates for a station at Richmond and Northam. I would like to ask the minister if this station is going to be proceeded with at once, and if it is going to be made a booking station ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can only repeat the remark I made before concerning all these work, that we will do our best to have them constructed rapidly. It is not contemplated to have a booking station.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I called the attention of the minister last year to the need of a station at Kinkora, and he promised to put in an item for a station there, but I believe it is not contemplated to make it a booking station. It is a point on the railway between Emerald, on the main line, and Cape Traverse, or about midway on the branch line. They only have one train a day. That train leaves Cape Traverse at six a.m., and shippers, in order to get their goods on board, must be at the station at seven in the morning. The train connects with a train on the main line coming from Emerald at any time between twelve and two in the morning, and people receiving freight have to stand out without any shelter, and have no opportunity of getting their goods unless they stay there nearly all night. Often they cannot get their goods until they go to Emerald and make payment there, and the goods are sometimes two or three days late. This section of country, which is quite extensive, is without communication by telephone or telegraph, and the establishment of a booking station at Kinkora would be of immense advantage.

To straighten line at Blueshank, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This will complete.

Station and land at Albany, $600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This will complete.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These municipalities claimed that by changes made by legislation in this House their interests suffered and that they were entitled to be compensated. Some municipalities were compensated in previous years but others were not, and this is to carry out what seems to have been the acknowledged policy of the day.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This is in virtue of bonuses given by these municipalities to this Canada Central, and I am very glad that the hon. minister has established a precedent. Victoria county has given bonuses to the extent of from $350,000 to $400,000 for a system of railways and by legislation of this government, the competition which these bonuses produce was nullified and only one system of railway is now in control. I shall be pleased to ask the attention of the hon. minister to this, and I trust it is not too late—and we may prolong the session another week or two with new supplementary estimates coming down every day—for him to bring down a vote of $350,000 to recoup the municipalities of Victoria county for the sums they advanced to procure railway competition, which this House subsequently destroyed by legislation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We shall have to vote this amount without prejudice.

Mr. WRIGHT. As regards this vote I would say that originally the counties of Lanark and Renfrew gave $800,000 to construct a railway from Brockville to Pembroke. The railway got as far as Sand Point and went no further. In order that the road might be completed, the town of Renfrew gave $30,000, the township of Horton $6,500, and the township of Admaston $5,000 to the company. Then the road was completed. We had to give this in money as the company would not take our bond. This was in 1872. Finally in 1878, the Dominion Parliament passed an Act amalgamating the Brockville and Ottawa and Central Canada Railway Companies and reducing the stock. This legislation placed these municipalities in the same position as ordinary stockholders of the company, upon whose shares little over ten per cent had been paid ; and the stock held by them was by the said Act reduced so that the town of Renfrew lost the amount of $22,500 and the other municipalities in the same proportion, and we think that we should be recouped, as that loss was caused by adverse legislation.

Cornwall—to complete electrical equipment for operating lock-gates and workships, $56,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is with Mr. M. P. Davis. He put the same equipment on the new locks and the work on the old was given him at the same rates.

Mr. REID (Grenville). According to the hon. gentleman's report, there were two locks into which this electrical power was put a year ago. What was the cost of those two locks ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give information as to the cost of those locks.

Mr. REID (Grenville. What is the amount of the contract for lighting ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not for lighting but for equipment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman promised to bring down that information the last time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contractor for this light is Mr. M. P. Davis. He is also the contractor for electrical power. The lighting contract was given in 1900 and is for twenty-one years. I shall lay the contract on the Table. There was a previous contract fixing the rates for this service and this is the supplementary contract dealing wth the number of lights. The rate is thirty cents per light per night.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are they arc lights ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The annual payment on the basis of the present contract is $21,930.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does that include running the lights in winter when the canals are not used ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is for every night they are used. I suppose that would include 365 days in the year.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But in the winter the canals are frozen up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract calls for 250 lights during the season of navigation and 100 in winter. The nights of navigation are estimated at 244 and the winter at 121.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the hon. minister tell us what it cost to light the canal before the electric light was used ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no general system. Nothing but oil lamps at the locks.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The canals were all lit up previous to this. There is something wrong in this payment of $21,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think there is anything wrong. The rate per light was fixed some years ago—in 1896, I think.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the hon. minister know of any other place in Canada where these lights are 30 cents per night ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract fixing the rate is one we are not particularly responsible for——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The lights are a good deal cheaper now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are responsible for the number of the lights used, but not for the rates fixed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There are more lights used, and that ought to make them cheaper. Is this contract for twenty-one years for $21,000 a year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So much per light per night, which would be about equivalent to that.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would the hon. minister bring me down a memorandum before the further supplementary estimates come up as to the previous cost of lighting the Cornwall canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already stated that I believe the only lighting was with oil lamps at the locks. But if the information is available I will bring the statement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The superintendent passed the accounts. There is no question about the information being available. Is it the intention of the government to light up the Williamsburg canal between Morrisburg and Cardinal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no present arrangement.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the government undertake it, and will offer the same rate per night, I think they will have no difficulty in making a contract. But there is one thing about this lighting of the Cornwall canal. If the hon. gentleman would take a trip on the Grand Trunk at any time during the winter he would see the Cornwall canal lighted from end to end, even when it is covered with two feet of ice. I suppose we pay for these lights. There cannot possibly be use for 141 lights used on the canal during the winter time, and I defy the minister or anybody in his department to show any need for 141 lights in the winter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One hundred.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well one hundred. There is no use for them. Every light must be paid for, and I would like to know why one hundred and forty lights are used.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One hundred.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, one hundred lights.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are they used ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Except to keep the canal lit up all winter.

Mr. PRINGLE. I think the lights are quite properly used in the winter months. It is only right that we should understand the subject thoroughly. The Cornwall canal is twelve miles in length. We have large locks and water-power supplying the Canadian Coloured Cotton Mills Company, the Cornwall Woollen Manufacturing Company, one or two very large grist mills, and other plants on that canal. I think it could be shown that these lights are necessary during the winter months in order to enable those in charge to regulate the water supply. I agree that there is no use for lights apart from the locks, but there are a large number of locks on the canal. There are not less than three in the town of Cornwall, and these have to have lights during the winter and summer. West of these you have other locks, until you come to the guard lock. As to the contract, I do not know anything about the price. I understand that when the contract was entered into the price was reasonable, and was not higher than was charged in Montreal and other places for lights of a similar description. I know that the lighting of the canal has been an immense improvement to navigation. I think the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) was perfectly right in bringing this matter to the attention of the committee and bringing out the information he has done. But I think I am justified in saying that the light is a great improvement and that the government would be well advised to put the same class of lights on all our canals. Only the other day, I happened to be on the Cornwall canal. I got on one of the Wolvin steamers passing through to see how they would get through the locks under the present system. These steamers are so large that they leave only a few inches on either side going through those locks. I found the locks worked by electric power and worked easily and expeditiously.

In regard to the power, I think the government made a mistake in not putting in a complete new system instead of applying power to the old locks which were in the canal. If they had put in a system similar to that which they have now in the Soulanges canal it would have been a great improvement. But dealing with this item before us, for the expenditure of $56,000, I would like to know how much of that is for workshops and what is the necessity for these workshops. How much is for the improvement of the electrical apparatus on the canal? While I am speaking on this matter, I would like to ask the acting minister if they have ever considered the advisability of having a lock immediately east of what is known as the Sheik's Island dam, in the river St. Lawrence. I understand from those who are engaged in navigation that a saving of an hour or two could be made by having a lock immediately east of the Sheik's Island dam, which would let vessels into the St. Lawrence river without going down through three locks to the eastern end of the canal; and it would also permit all vessels to come up and enter the canal just at the foot of the dam and go through the Cornwall canal in a very short space of time. Vessel owners have told me that it would be an immense saving if that lock were put in, not only a saving of expense, but a great saving of time in passing through the canal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has not been presented to me, but I am informed a proposal of that character was made some years ago, but up to the present time it has not been deemed expedient to undertake the work.

Mr. WRIGHT. I may say with reference to the price of electric light, that we are engaged in that business in the town of Renfrew, and we charge 25 cents a light where they run to midnight, and 30 cents where they run all day and night—an arc light of 2,000 candle power.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think the government should pay for all the lights they use in the winter. Will the minister tell me where these hundred lights are situated? I do not believe there are a hundred lights used on the Cornwall canal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the exact points at which they are used. A portion of the canal lies alongside the public highway, and that would require lighting.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The public highway is entirely separate from the canal, and it was never lighted up before. These lights are away on the other side of the canal and have nothing to do with the main road. There cannot possibly be a hundred lights used on these locks.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me absurd that we should pay for lights along the canal if they are not necessary. If it is necessary, light a lock where there is a water-power, that is all right. But the minister must see that we should not be called upon to light the highway. I have travelled highways in our section of the country without any other light than the light of my countenance. I do not see why we should be required to pay for these lights unless they are used where water-power is developed.

Mr. PRINGLE. Perhaps I may be able to throw a little further light on the subject. Every one of these locks requires lights during winter and summer.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why?

Mr. PRINGLE. Because there is a constant change in the flow of the water occasioned by the usage of that water by the different manufacturing establishments. The water has got to be let from one level to another level of the canal. There are at several locks what is called a by-wash or sluice-way, and that has got to be regulated. Apart from that we have a bridge about the centre of the town which crosses the canal, and which requires to be lighted. The bridge leads to a number of manufacturing establishments. Then in the eastern portion of the town we have what we call a small canal. It is a large sluiceway which furnishes power for different mills. That also requires to be lighted both summer and winter. I do not know how many lights there are, but it does seem to to me that a hundred lights is not an unreasonable number to be used in the winter months.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It is strange that on other canals where the levels are being lowered and raised, lights are not required.

The lock-master is the only man in charge. He simply watches the water in the evening. He goes with his lantern and the level is there to be seen. But all the lights are kept going during the winter along this canal from Mille Roches to Dickenson's landing. The hon. minister has stated that this is for the purpose of lighting up the road, but the road is on one side of the canal and the lights are on the other. That is really an excuse, and it is an absurd one, as my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) says. Is it the intention of the government to continue the lighting up of this road, or is it the intention to keep these lights simply where they are really required ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to look into the matter. I could not give the hon. gentleman the information now.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria. Is it an ordinary operation to make a twenty-one year contract for any such thing as this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There have been such cases.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is there anything in the contract whereby it may be cancelled ?

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understand this matter correctly some years ago under the reign of the late government as it was the policy of the government to do all they could to aid navigation, the then Minister of Railways and Canals entered into this contract for lighting.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Not this contract at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. He made a contract with Mr. Davis for lighting the Cornwall canal. The number of lights were not specified. I have travelled through the canal before the lighting was commenced, and I have been on a vessel which had to lie in the canal all night. The canal is twelve miles long. On dark nights steamers had to lay to, but since the adoption of the system of lighting by electricity it is as clear as day from one end to the other. I think the late government deserves every credit for having inaugurated this system for the benefit of navigation. I do not know but what it was the intention of the late government to extend this system to all the canals but this canal, being twelve miles long, is quite different from any other canal on the St. Lawrence except the Lachine canal, and that has always been lighted. Passenger steamers going up on dark nights require to be lighted through. I understand that the late minister entered into a contract for the purpose of lighting this canal. The contract has been renewed and the number of lights specified, but the contract was originally made by the late government and I think they deserve praise for having inaugurated the system. I hope the present government will extend it to the other canals. All the marine men travelling the St. Lawrence are loud in their praise of the way in which these canals are lighted. I do not know whether it is necessary to have them lighted in winter time or not, but I should think that on a canal having as many water-powers as there are on this canal it would be absolutely necessary to have a certain number of lights kept going.

Mr. GALLERY. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) to state that the Lachine canal is not lighted. I would inform him that the Lachine canal is lighted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said that the Lachine canal was lighted.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the hon. gentleman tell us who has the contract for lighting the Lachine canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Canadian General Electric Company.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How much do you pay per annum for lighting the Lachine canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is for the supply of the machinery and the government provide the light themselves.

Mr. REID (Grenville). They furnish the dynamos ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is for the equipment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is the consideration of the contract with the Canadian General Electric Company ? I asked the hon. minister to get that information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I gathered a lot of information in answer to questions but I do not find that one, and I do not remember that my hon. friend asked it. I will have to bring the information down at a later day.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would the hon. minister tell us how many lights there are on the Lachine canal and how many on the Cornwall ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I have no vote for the Lachine canal and I have therefore no information about the lighting of that canal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does the hon. minister state that 250 lights are used during the summer on the Cornwall canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is what the contract provides for.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And 100 during the winter ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And it figures out to $21,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is it the intention of the hon. minister to keep the lights going in winter where they are not required ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the general tendency of the discussion is that they are required.

Galops canal—enlargement, $125,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to pay the final estimate of Messrs. Larkin & Sangster on their contract for the Iroquois section. The work is completed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How much has been voted this session for this canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was in the main estimates for the Galops canal an item of $128,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does that include the Iroquois canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. That item we have now is for the Iroquois canal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There have been items voted for the Cardinal section. Does this finish the whole work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I am advised that the estimates of the current year are expected to cover the whole expense.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I asked the hon minister to make inquiries about the employees of this canal. The work is finished as far as they are concerned and I know for a fact that some of these men are working in some other positions and yet they are being paid by the government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did have the information on that point, but I cannot find it for the moment.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Of course, the engineer and his assistants have to be employed to make the final estimates ; but there are a large number of men there who are drawing their salaries, and some of them are doing other work. The work is finished, and if you want to keep them on for charity's sake, I can understand it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the engineering staff ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is an engineer in charge and he has one or two assistants to prepare the final estimates, but in addition to that there are probably a dozen men who would be employed when the work was in progress in measuring the material excavated, or inspecting stone, but they have nothing to do now. The work was completed a year ago. They are paid from $60 to $85 a month, and they are simply drawing their salaries, although some of them are filling other positions. Is that fair ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It certainly is not right, and I shall get information about it promptly.

To complete north channel (revote), $20,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does that complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. I wish to amend that item by adding the words, 'And dam between Galops and Adams islands.'

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will this complete the Cleveland work on the north channel ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that is the report of the engineer.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And the dam, too ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, we are so advised.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I wish the minister would state now that he would abandon that other Galops work until next season.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot say that.

Installing electrical appliances for operating gates, weirs and bridges (revote), Lachine canal, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total expenditure on the electrical installation when completed will be $105,000. The amount already expended up to the first of July was $89,235.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The government will then own the whole lighting plant other than the power ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What does it cost to furnish the power ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We use our own power.

Mr. REID (Grenville). You also own the electric light system of the Soulanges canal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We own the apparatus.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why do you not do the same on the Cornwall canal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because we found a contract made many years ago by the late government giving the work to Mr. Davis.

Lachine canal, lock gate protection, $11,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to provide a protective device invented by Mr. E. A. Manny for protecting the lock gates against collision by vessels. The appliance was tested on the Beauharnois canal last year, and was found to be satisfactory. It is now proposed to apply it to the Lachine canal. There are ten locks at $900 each; cost of installation, $2,000 ; making in all $11,000.

To pay Geo. Goodwin for work in sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, Soulanges, $55,717.80.

To pay Geo. Goodwin interest at 5 per cent, $18,108.28.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The claim of Mr. Goodwin was delayed in payment for some considerable time, and ultimately he obtained a judgment, and this is to pay it.

Mr. BLAIN. Did this gentleman have a suit over this matter ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. As far as my recollection goes, this is an amount that was due to Mr. Goodwin as a balance on a contract entered into and executed previous to 1896. He took an action against the government for a portion of his claim, and it was resisted. The result was that judgment was obtained in his favour and he was paid. This item was deferred until such time as judgment was rendered in the case of Stewart, the payment of this amount being contingent on the settlement of the question that was raised in the Stewart case. After judgment was rendered in the Stewart case, the Department of Justice decided that this amount should be paid.

Mr. GOURLEY. Did the court allow interest in Stewart's case ?
