READING, a borough, and the capital of Berkshire, governed by a mayor; with a market on Wednesday. It has five churches, a chapel of ease and several meeting-houses. It sends two members to parliament. The Forbery is contained within the space formerly enclosed by the outer walls of the celebrated and once splendid abbey founded by Henry I., the remains of which show that it must have been a place of great extent and strength. The county jail was erected on its site in 1793. The other public buildings are the town hall, rebuilt in 1785; a new market house, theatre, &c; Saint Mary's Church, a very ancient foundation, said to be the first founded hereabout after the introduction of Christianity, and formerly called the minster. There are many schools, including a grammar school founded by Henry VII. The endowed charities are very numerous. Reading is not a manufacturing town, but is advantageously situated for trade, which is considerable in the rich produce of the surrounding country. It is a place of great antiquity: Parliaments were held here in 1263, 1440, 1451, and in consequence of the plague in 1452, and 1466.

any other sea of equal extent; and its disputed name most probably originates from its red corals. The channels are sufficiently clear and good to offer no obstruction to careful steam navigation, and it is now a great medium of communication between Europe and our Indian and Australasian possessions. The idea that the level of the Red sea is higher than that of the Mediterranean is probably chimerical, and it is still in prospect to unite, or rather reunite them by a canal across the isthmus of Suez. The chief ports on the E. or Arabian side, are Mokha, Hodeida, Zoheia, and Djidda; on the African side are Suez, Cosseir, Suakim, and Masuah.

RED RIVER, a large river of North America, the first considerable stream which enters the Mississippi about its mouth. It rises in the Rocky mountains near Santa Fé in Mexico, and forms, for a great distance, the boundary between Texas and the other United States. REUTLINGEN, a town of Germany, in Württemberg. In the town-house is preserved an ancient battering-ram; and in the vicinity are many paper and powder mills. It is seated on the Echetz, near the Neckar; 17 miles S. of Stutgard. Population in 1838, 11,509.

REVEL, a town of France, department of Upper Garonne, near the canal of Languedoc; 27 miles S.E. of Toulouse.

REVEL, a government of Russia. See ESTHONIA.

REVEL, or REVAL, a seaport of European Russia, capital of the government of Esthonia, and a bishop's see. It is surrounded by high walls and deep ditches, and defended by a castle and good bastions. The houses are well built, and have fine gardens. It is become a place of great trade, since the Russians obtained possession of it in 1710; and there are two great fairs, in May and September, frequented by English and Dutch merchants. It is one of the stations of the Russian fleet, and is now much resorted to as a watering-place. It is seated on the gulf of Finland, partly in a pleasant plain, and partly on a hill; 160 miles N. by E. of Riga, and 220 W. by S. of Petersburg. Population, 13,000. Long. 24. 44. E. lat. 59. 26. N.

REVELLO, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated near the Po, on the top of a mountain, fortified by nature and art; 3 miles N.W. of Saluzzo. Pop. 5000.

REVERO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Mantuan, seated on the Po, opposite Ostiglia; 10 miles S.E. of Mantua.

REVIN, a town of France, department of Ardennes, seated on the river Meuse; 6 miles E. of Rocroy.

REVOLUTION ISLES, a group of islands in the Pacific ocean, to the N.W. of the Marquesas, of which they may be deemed a continuation. They were discovered in 1791. The most considerable are Baux and Marchand. The latter is about 15 miles in circuit, and was taken possession of in the name of the French nation, by Captain Marchand. Long. 140. 5. W. lat. 9. 21. S.

REWALI, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Allahabad, the residence of a Hindoo chief, tributary to the British; 57 miles S.S.W. of Allahabad.

REWARI, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district in the province of Delhi. It is the residence of a chief tributary to the British, and is seated on the Sadi; 55 miles S.W. of Delhi. Long. 76. 52. E. lat. 28. 13. N.

RHAMANIE, a town and fort of Egypt, on the W. branch of the Nile, where the canal of Alexandria enters that river. It is 25 miles above Rosetta, and 58 E.S.E. of Alexandria.

RHAYADER, a town of Wales, in Radnorshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is situate on the Wye, where there was formerly a cataract, which is now destroyed, and a neat bridge erected, and on an eminence near it is the site of an ancient castle, of which no ruins remain. In the neighbourhood are lead and copper mines; 19 miles W.N.W. of New Radnor, and 178 of London.

RHEDA, a town of Prussian Westphalia; 10 miles N. of Lipstadt.

RHEIMS, a city of France, department of Marne; and an archbishop's see. The inhabitants are estimated at 38,000. The cathedral is one of the largest and most magnificent in Europe, and dates from 1212. The principal church, built before the year 406, is a very beautiful structure; and that of St. Nicaise is remarkable for its fine architecture. Behind the high altar of the church of St. Remy, the corpse of that archbishop is preserved in a magnificent shrine. The kings of France have been successively crowned at Rheims; probably because Clovis, the founder of the French monarchy, when converted from paganism, was baptized in the cathedral here, in the year 496. The remains of an amphitheatre, a castle, and a triumphal arch, are among the ancient monuments of the Romans. The streets are wide and straight, but the houses are low. Here are manufactures of flannel, coverlets and other woollen stuffs. This city was taken and retaken several times by the French and allied armies, in 1814. It is seated in a plain surrounded by hills that produce excellent wine, on the river Vesce; 62 miles N. of Troyes, and 75 N.E. of Paris. on the Paris and Strasburg Railway

RHEIN, a town of Prussia, with a large fortified castle, seated on a lake; 75 miles S.E. of Königsberg. Long. 21. 38. E. lat. 53. 48. N.

RHEINECK, a town of Germany, seated on the Rhine; 16 miles N.W. of Coblentz.

RHEINECK, a town of Franconia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle, on the river Sinn; 25 miles N. by W. of Wurtzburg.

RHEINECK, a town of Switzerland, capital of the Rheintal, in the canton of St. Gall, with a castle, seated on the Rhine; 25 miles S.E. of Constance.

RHEINFELDEN, a town of Germany, in Baden, the best of the four forest-towns, seated on the Rhine, over which is a bridge; 8 miles E. of Basel.

RHEINFELS, a strong fortress of Germany, in the Prussian states. It is one of the most important places on the Rhine, and stands on a stupendous craggy rock, at the foot of which is the fortified town of St. Goar. It was taken by the French in 1794; 16 miles S. of Coblentz.

RHEINMAGEN, a town of the Prussian states, in the government of Coblentz, situate on the Rhine; 19 miles N.W. of Coblentz.

RHEINTHAL, a district of Switzerland; in the canton of St. Gall, lying along the Rhine. It is a fertile valley, 30 miles long, and from 3 to 8 broad, and produces excellent wine. Rheineck is the capital.

RHEINZABURN, a town of France, department of Lower Rhine, seated on the Erlbach; 10 miles S.E. of Landau.

RHENA, a town of Germany in the duchy of Mecklenburg, on the river Radegast; 14 miles E.S.E. of Lubec.

RHENEN, a town of Belgium, in the province of Utrecht, seated on the Rhine; 20 miles S.E. of Utrecht.

RHINE, a great and remarkable river of Europe, which rises in Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons. It is formed of three streams—the Further Rhine, from the head of the valley of Disentis; the Middle Rhine, from the valley of Medelo, an appendage of St. Gothard; and the Hither, or Upper Rhine, from the mount Avicula. The first two currents united take the name of Lower Rhine, which receives the Upper Rhine at Riehenau, and the height is here about 6180 feet above the sea. Flowing by Coire, at the distance of a mile, the Rhine here becomes navigable for rafts. It is, soon after, the boundary between the Rheintal and a territory of Austria, and passes through the Lake of Constance from E. to W. Leaving this lake, it flows W. by Schaffhausen, below which it forms a celebrated cataract. It continues in a westerly course to Basle, when it returns to the N., and enters the Netherlands, in which course it waters many considerable cities and towns, and receives some large rivers. Below Emmerick, in the duchy of Cleves, it divides into two streams. That which bends to the W., and flows by Nimegen, is called the Waal, but loses that name on its junction with the Meuse at Woreum. Below Gorcum, it divides into four principal branches, forming the isles of Ysselmonde, Voorn, and Overflackee: the most northern branch is called the Merwe, and, passing by Rotterdam and Schiedam, is joined by the branch from the S. side of Ysselmonde and enters the German ocean below Briel: the other two branches make their exit at Helvoetsluys and Goree. The other stream, which had branched off to the N.W. below Emmerick, retains its name; but below Huessen, another branches off to the N., takes the name of Yssel, and enters the Zuyder Zee below Campen. The old river proceeds W. by Arnheim to Duerstede, when it again divides into two streams: that to the left is called the Leck, and enters the Merwe above Rotterdam. The branch to the right, which retains its name, passes on to Utrecht, when it divides once more into two streams: the smaller one is called the Vecht, which runs N. into the Zuyder Zee at Muyden; and the other the remains of the noble Rhine, flows W. by Woerden to Leyden, where it divides into several channels, and afterwards is lost among hills of sand near the village of Catwyck. Measured along the stream it is 950 miles in length.

RHINE, a province of the grand duchy of Hesse, to the N. of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine; comprising an area of 1000 square miles, with 155,000 inhabitants.

RHINE, CIRCLE OF, a province of Bavaria; situate to the W. of the Rhine, between Weissenburg and Worms. It was ceded to Bavaria in 1814. It contains an area of 1800 square miles, with 308,000 inhabitants.

RHINE, LOWER, PROVINCE OF THE, a province of Rhenish Prussia, being its south portion. It lies between Belgium and Holland, France and the German states. Area, 10,307 sq. miles. Pop. in 1837, 2,433,250, three fourths of whom are Roman catholics. Principal towns, Aix la Chapelle, Cologne, Coblentz, Dusseldorf, &c. It is divided into 5 regencies and 59 circles. It is traversed by the Rhine, and its decayed volcanic rocks afford excellent soil for the vine. Manufactures are extensive and flourishing, chiefly woollen, linen, and iron.

RHINE, LOWER, a department of France, containing the late province of Lower Alsace. It has an area of 1900 square miles, with 440,000 inhabitants. Strasburg is the capital.

RHINE, UPPER, a department of France, consisting of the late province of Upper Alsace, and containing an area of about 1700 square miles, with 320,000 inhabitants. Colmar is the capital.

RHIVANON OR RUANON an extensive parish in Denbighshire, N. Wales, 5 miles S.S.W. of Wrexham. It is a large mining district.

RHODE ISLAND, one of the United States of America, bounded on the N. and E. by Massachusetts, S. by the Atlantic, and W. by Connecticut. These limits comprehend what was originally called Rhode Island and Providence Plantations. It is divided into the counties of Newport, Providence, Washington, Bristol, and Kent. Area, 1350 square miles. Pop. in 1840, 108,830. The state is intersected in all directions by rivers, the chief of which are Pawtucket, Providence, and Taunton rivers, which flow into Narraganset bay. Iron-ore and limestone are found in great plenty in this state, which is principally a country for pasture. Providence and Newport are the chief towns.

RHODE ISLAND, an island in the above state; 15 miles long, and 4 broad. It is exceedingly fertile. This island is a noted resort of invalids from the southern climates, being exceedingly pleasant and healthful. At its S.W. extremity is the town of Newport.

RHODES, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, at the entrance of the gulf of Maeri; 40 miles long, and 15 broad. It is truly a delightful spot, and its climate is the finest in the Mediterranean. The soil is pretty fertile, but badly cultivated. This island is much celebrated in ancient history, having been frequently under the dominion of different masters. The Saracens became possessors of it in 665; and in 1309, it was taken from them by the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who afterwards took the name of Knights of Rhodes. They retained it till 1623, when it was taken by the Turks, after an obstinate resistance; and the small number of knights that remained were afterwards removed to Malta. Like the neighbouring islands, it has been reduced by the oppression of the Porte to a state of great poverty and wretchedness. Pop. about 20,000.

RHODES, the capital of the above island, and an archbishop's see, was anciently 9 miles in circumference, and was regarded by Alexander, who deposited his last will here, as the first city in the world; but the present town occupies only a quarter of the extent of the ancient city. It has a good harbour, with a narrow entrance between two rocks, on which are two towers to defend the passage. Pop. 6000. Here, in all probability, stood the famous Colossus, a statue of bronze, 70 cubits high, reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world: it was thrown down by an earthquake; and when the Saracens became masters of the island, they knocked it to pieces, and sold the fragments to a Jew of Edessa, nearly 900 years after its fall. Rhodes was deemed an impregnable fortress, being surrounded by triple walls and double ditches, which have long been in a state of dilapidation. Long. 28. 20. E. lat. 36. 27. N.

RHODEZ. See RODEZ.

RHONE, a large river that rises in Switzerland, in Mount Furca, 5780 feet above the sea, and soon joins a more considerable stream from an extensive glacier called that of the Rhone. After passing through the vale of Valais, it runs through the lake of Geneva, and, separating Savoy from Bresse, it flows W. to Lyons, then S. to Vienna, Tournon, Valence, Viviers, Pont St. Esprit, Avignon, Beaune, Tarascon, and Arles, and enters the Mediterranean by four mouths. It flows through a delightful country, but from its rapid current, it formerly was but of little service to navigation. These difficulties are now obviated by steam, and also by several canals which connect it with the other principal rivers of France. Between Châlons and Lyons a railroad runs along its W. bank, and thence to Avignon, Marseilles, &c., on the E. bank. The river is also crossed, as are its affluents, by a considerable number of elegant and substantial suspension bridges.

RHONE, a department of France, so named from the river Rhone, which flows on its E. border. It includes the late provinces of Beaujolois and Lyonnais, and contains an area of 1050 sq. m.; being the smallest in the empire next to that of the Seine, with (in 1836) 434,429 inhabitants. Lyons is the capital.

RHONE, MOUTHS OF THE, a department of France, on the coast of the Mediterranean, at the influx of the Rhone; containing the W. part of the late province of Provence. It comprises an area of 2000 square miles, with 362,000 inhabitants. Marseilles is the capital.

RHONHOUSE, a village of Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire. It is 8 miles N.N.W. of Newton Douglas.

RHUDDLAN, a town of Wales in Flintshire 3 miles N.N.W. of St Asaph, on the river Clwyd; an ancient town, now inconsiderable; with a noble castle.

RHUTHYN. See RUTHIN.

RHYNBECK, a town of New York, in Dutchess county, on the E. side of Hudson river, opposite Kingston, and 18 miles N. of Poughkeepsie.

RHYNBERG, or RHINSBERG, a town of Brandenburg, with a handsome palace, built by Frederic II., when hereditary prince. It is seated on the Rhyn; 10 miles N. of Ruppin.

RHYNEY. See RUMNEY.

RHYNOW, a town of Brandenburg, at the conflux of the Rhyn with the Havel; 9 miles S.E. of Havelberg.

RIAZAN, a government of European Russia, formerly a province of the government of Moscow. It comprises an area of 14,988 square miles, with (in 1838) 1,241,700 inhabitants, and had anciently its own princes. The soil is fertile in corn, hemp, and flax.

RIAZAN, the capital of the above government, and an archbishop's see, was formerly considerable for its extent and riches, but was almost ruined by the Tartars, in 1568. It has greatly increased in size and importance within the last 60 years. It is seated at the conflux of the Trubesh with the Oca; 100 miles S.E. of Moscow. Pop. 9000. Long. 39. 16. E. lat. 54. 38. N.

RIBA DE SELLA, a small seaport of Spain, in Asturias, on the bay of Biscay; 29 miles E. by S. of Gijon.

RICHMOND, a borough in North Yorkshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It was formerly surrounded by a wall, with three gates, and had a strong castle, (now in a ruinous condition,) on an inaccessible mount. It is the capital of a district called Richmondshire, (now included in the duchy of Lancaster,) which abounds in lead mines, and was formerly a county of itself. It has few manufactures of importance. It returns two members to parliament. It is seated on the Swale, and a branch of the N. E. railway. It is 48 miles N.W. of York, and 230 N.N.W. of London.

RICHMOND, a village in Surrey, with an elegant stone bridge over the Thames. It was anciently called Sheen; but Henry VII. called it Richmond, on account of his having been earl of Richmond in Yorkshire. Here was a palace, in which Edward III., Henry VII., and Queen Elizabeth expired. Here is an extensive royal park, called Richmond, or the New Park; surrounded by a brick wall, built by Charles I. It is 9 miles W.S.W. of London. The beautiful gardens of Kew, (which see) are in this parish. There is a branch of the South Western Railway to it.

RICHMOND, a town of New South Wales, in the county of Cumberland; 36 miles from Sydney. It is rapidly increasing. It is seated on the Nepean river, in an exceedingly fertile district.

RICHMOND, a county of New York, comprehending Staten island. Chief town, Richmond. Pop. in 1845, 13,673.

RICHMOND, a county in the N. of Georgia. Chief town, Augusta. Pop. 11,932.—Also, a county in N. Carolina. Pop. 8900.—And another county in Virginia. Pop. 5965.

RICHMOND, the capital of Virginia, in Henrico county, on the N. side of James river, at the foot of the Falls. It contains a state-house, and court-house, jail, almshouse, penitentiary, two market-houses, a public library, a museum, and places of worship for Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, and Jews. Here is a floating toll-bridge over the river; and the Falls above the bridge are 7 miles in length. Vessels of burden lie at City Point, 20 miles below, to which goods from Richmond are sent down in boats. It is 90 miles S.S.W. of Alexandria. Pop. in 1840, 20,153. Long. 77. 31. W. lat. 37. 30. N.

RIEZ, a town in the department of Lower Alps, seated in a plain abounding with wine and fruits; 20 miles S.S.W. of Digne. Population, 2900.

RIGA, a government of Russia. See LIVONIA.

RIGA, a strong town of Russia, capital of the government of Livonia, and, next to Petersburg, the most commercial place in the empire. It stands on the river Dwina, 5 miles from its mouth, in a gulf of the Baltic, called the gulf of Riga or Livonia. The trade is chiefly carried on by the foreign merchants resident here; those belonging to an English factory enjoy the greatest share of the commerce. The principal exports are corn, hemp, flax, iron, timber, masts, leather, and tallow. The population of Riga, including the garrison of 10,000 men, was in 1835 estimated at 67,338. Here is a floating wooden bridge, over the Dwina, 2600 feet long, and 40 broad; in winter, when the ice sets in, it is removed; and in spring it is replaced. In 1812, on the approach of the French army, under Marshal Macdonald, to besiege this place, the governor of the town set fire to the suburbs, which consumed upwards of 2000 houses. Riga is 220 miles N.E. of Königsberg, and 310 S.W. of Petersburg. Long. 24. 0. E. lat. 56. 57. N.

RIMINI, a town of Italy, in the Papal states, with an old castle, a strong tower, and many remains of antiquity. The sea having receded from this city for some centuries, its harbour will now admit only small vessels. It is seated in a fertile plain, at the mouth of the Marrecchia, on the gulf of Venice; 28 miles S.E. of Ravenna, and 145 N. by E. of Rome. Pop. 12,500, but including the suburban villages, about 27,000. Long. 12. 34. E. lat. 44. 4. N.

RINGKJÖPING, a seaport of Denmark, in N. Jutland. It has a considerable trade with Holland and Norway. It is seated on a gulf of the German ocean; 43 miles S.W. of Wihurg, and 55 N.N.W. of Ripen. Long. 8. 15. E. lat. 56. 8. N.

RINGLEBEN, a town of Germany, belonging to Saxe-Weimar; 6 miles N. of Erfurt, and 26 E.N.E. of Eisenach.

RINGSTED, a town of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand. It was formerly a city; and in the great church are interred several kings, and other persons of distinction. It is 30 miles S.W. of Copenhagen.

RINGWOOD, a small town in Hampshire, with a market on Wednesday. It has a manufacture of woollen cloths and stockings, and is famous for its strong beer and ale. It is seated on the Avon; 30 miles S.W. of Winchester, and 91 W. by S. of London.

RINTELN, a strong town of Germany, capital of the district of Schauenburg, with a university. It is seated on the Weser; 12 miles S.E. of Minden, and 35 W.S.W. of Hanover. Long. 9. 10. E. lat. 52. 12. N.

RIO DE LA MACILLA, a seaport of Colombia, in Venezuela, at the north of a river of the same name; 100 miles E. of St. Martha. Long. 72. 34. W. lat. 11. 30. N.

RIO DE LA PLATA. See PLATA.

RIO DE MIRANDO, a river of Spain, which rises in the mountains of Asturias, separates that province from Galicia, and enters the bay of Biscay at Ribadeo.

RIO DEL NORTE, a considerable river of North America, the source of which is unknown, but it flows from N. to S. through the whole country of New Mexico; and enters the gulf of Mexico on the N. border of New Leon.

RIO GRANDE DO NORTE, a province at the N.E. point of Brazil, between those of Parahyba and Ceara. Its coast is uniformly low and sandy, but inland it is undulating, and its forests afford the best Brazil wood, and many drugs. The soil is not generally fertile, but the climate is healthy. It produces cotton, sugar, rice, and cattle. Pop. in 1844, 40,000. Natal, an old town, but with few people, and with a strong fortress on the coast, is the capital.

RIO GRANDE DO SUL, a southern province of the empire of Brazil. It has been for a long time past involved in a rebellion, which bade fair to destroy its prosperity, and has almost entirely destroyed slavery within the state. In 1846-7, however, the alteration of the British customs greatly improved the commerce of its port, San Pedro. It is very extensive, and possesses many natural advantages, and numerous harbours. Pasturage is the general employment of the people. Cotton is largely grown and exported. In 1844 its population amounted to about 160,000.

RIO GRANDE, a river which rises in the Sierra Leone mountains, and flows through the kingdom of Biguba into the Atlantic. It is navigable for boats 400 miles.

RIO DE JANEIRO, one of the richest provinces of the empire of Brazil; lying near the tropic of Capricorn. This province derives its name from its port, falsely called Rio de Janeiro, which is not a river, but a magnificent inlet of the sea, affording one or rather several of the finest harbours in the world. It has, however, but a few insignificant streams flowing into it, which are nearly useless for navigable purposes. The province is bounded N. by Espiritu Santo and Minas Geraes, W. by Santo Paulo, and S. and E. by the Atlantic ocean, being from 50 to 60 leagues long E. and W., and 23 leagues medium breadth. The Sierra dos Orgaos, or Organ mountains divide it into two parts, northern and southern. The greater part of it is mountainous. Its chief products for export are coffee, cotton, and sugar. Its population in 1844 amounted to 196,926 free, and 239,557 slaves, total, 436,483.

RIPA TRANSONE, a town of Italy, in the Papal states; 8 miles S. of Fermo.

RIPEN, a seaport of Denmark, in North Jutland, capital of a diocese of the same name; with a castle, two colleges, and a public library. The tombs of several kings of Denmark are in the cathedral, which is a very handsome structure. The harbour is at a small distance, at the mouth of the Gram, in a country which supplies the best beeves in Denmark. It is 65 miles N.W. of Sleswick, and 78 S. by W. of Wiburg. Long. 8. 40. E. lat. 55. 23. N.

RIPLEY, a town of West Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday; principally noted for its castle, the ancient seat of the Ingilby family, and the production of liquorice; seated on the river Nyl, 23 miles W.N.W. of York, and 211 N. by W. of London.

RIPON, a city and borough in West Yorkshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Thursday. The new diocese of Ripon was instituted by an order in council, 5th Oct. 1836. It is subject to the metropolitan jurisdiction of York, and consists of that part of the county of York previously in the diocese of Chester. It contains the archdeaconries of Craven and Richmond, and the collegiate church, a venerable and extensive pile, has been made a cathedral. Ripon sends two members to parliament. In its neighbourhood is the celebrated park of Studley, including the venerable remains of Fountain abbey. Ripon was once famous for its religious houses; it has twelve district churches, four meeting-houses, a free-school, and some other excellent charitable institutions. Its noted manufacture of spurs has long since declined, and at present the principal manufactures are linens and saddle-trees, and a considerable varnish manufacture. The market-place is one of the finest squares of the kind in England. On July 12th, 1834, the town was shaken by a tremendous natural convulsion, which opened a large fissure at about a mile from the town. It is seated near the Ure, over which is a handsome bridge of 17 arches; 28 miles N.N.W. of York, and 209 N.N.W. of London; on the Leeds and Thirsk railway.

RIQUIER, Sr., a town of France, department of Somme, seated on the Cordon; 24 miles N.W. of Amiens.

RISBOROUGH, PRINCE'S, a town in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Saturday; 20 miles S. of Aylesbury, and 37 W.N.W. of London. It is called Prince's Risborough, because Edward the Black Prince is said to have had here a palace and large possessions.

ROBIN HOOD BAY, a bay on the coast of Yorkshire; between Scarborough and Whitby, about one mile broad. Here is a village of fishermen, who supply the city of York, and the adjacent country, with all sorts of fish in their season. It is 6 miles S.E. of Whitby. Long. 0. 10. W. lat. 54. 25. N.

ROCA CAPE, a cape of Portugal; the most western extremity of Europe. On its summit is a remarkable monastery, said to be 3000 feet above the sea; and on the E. of the mountain is a summer palace, of Moorish architecture. Here is also a small vineyard, that of Carcavella, yielding a peculiar grape; and the environs supply most of the fruits and greens used at Lisbon. This cape is called generally, by the English sailors, the Rock of Lisbon. Long. 9. 36. W. lat. 38. 42. N.

ROCAMADOUR, a town of France, department of Lot; 23 miles N. of Cahors.

ROCELLA, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, near which is a coral fishery; 10 miles N.E. of Gierace.

ROCHDALE, a borough in Lancashire, with markets on Monday and Saturday, and considerable manufactures of baize, flannels, serges, and other woollen goods; also calicoes, strong cotton goods, and hats. It has been greatly improved of late years, and has sixteen churches, eight meeting-houses, a free grammar-school, a free-school, and national and Sunday schools. A canal from Manchester passes hence to the Calder navigation, near Halifax. The manor of Rochdale was held for the last three centuries by the Byrons, but in 1823 was sold by Lord Byron, the celebrated poet, to James Dearden, Esq. The town is seated on the river Roch, at the foot of the Yorkshire hills; 11 miles N. by E. of Manchester, and 197 N.N.W. of London. It returns one member to parliament, and is on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway.

rendered it of great importance; and here also are some remains of a priory. Rochester is, next to Canterbury, the most ancient, and was the smallest bishopric in England, but the diocese has recently been greatly altered: the city and deanery of Rochester alone remain to the diocese, and the whole of the counties of Hertford and Essex have been added to it. The bishop's palace is now at Danbury, near Chelmsford. The cathedral, an ancient and interesting edifice, has been of late years restored. There are now two parish churches, formerly there were four, and some dissenters' meeting-houses. It is chiefly dependent for prosperity upon the adjoining military establishments at Chatham, and is the termination for the present of the North Kent railway, from London and Gravesend. The inhabitants are chiefly tradesmen and innkeepers, no sort of manufacture being now carried on here. It has two free-schools, one called the King's, and the other the City school; an hospital, liberally endowed for 12 poor people; and an alms-house for six poor travellers, who are supplied for one night with lodging, entertainment, and fourpence: an inscription over the door intimates that rogues and proctors are excepted. Rochester is united to the town of Stroud by a stone bridge of eleven arches over the river Medway, and is contiguous to Chatham on the E. It is 26 miles W.N.W. of Canterbury, and 29 E.S.E. of London.

ROCHESTER, a town in North America, United States, New Hampshire. Pop. 2431.—Also a town in Monroe county, New York; 7 miles from lake Ontario, at the falls of Genesee. Here are some very extensive flour mills, and the Erie canal passes, by an aqueduct, over the Genesee. Pop. 20,191.—Also a town in Plymouth county, Massachusetts; 48 miles S. of Boston. Pop. 864.

ROCHFORD, a town in Essex, with a market on Thursday; 16 miles S.E. of Chelmsford, and 40 E. by N. of London.

ROMANIA, a province or division of European Turkey, about 200 miles long, and 130 broad; bounded on the N. by Bulgaria, E. by the Black sea, S. by the sea of Marmora and the archipelago, and W. by Macedonia. The whole of this fine country, comprising Thrace and Macedon, is at present in a very backward state, owing to the oppression and arbitrary exactions of the Turks. Area, 120,000 square miles. Pop. 6,000,000.

ROMANO, a town of Austrian Italy, on a river that runs between the Oglio and Serio; 26 miles E. of Milan.

ROMANA, a town of France, in the department of Drome, on the Isere; 22 m. S.W. of Grenoble, and 30 S. of Vienna. Pop. 6500.

ROME, a celebrated city of Italy, the capital of the present Roman states. It is situate on the Tiber, over which it has four bridges. The walls are of brick, in which are 15 gates; and its whole circumference, including that part beyond the Tiber and all belonging to the Vatican, is upwards of 16 miles; but not more than a third of this space is occupied by the present city, which was almost entirely rebuilt on the ruins of the ancient city at the close of the 15th century, and is about 14 or 15 feet above the former level, in consequence of the accumulated rubbish occasioned by its destruction. The population, though greatly inferior to what it could boast in the days of its ancient power, is considerably more than it could number at some former periods since the fall of the empire. Some of the principal streets are of considerable length, and perfectly straight. That called the Corso is the most frequented. The shops on each side are three or four feet higher than the street, and there is a path for foot passengers on a level with the shops. The palaces, of which there are several in this street, range in a line with the houses, having no courts before them. The Strada Felice, and the Strada di Porta Pin, are also very long and noble streets. Rome exhibits a strange mixture of magnificent and interesting, and of common and beggarly objects; the former consist of palaces, churches, fountains, and the remains of antiquity; the latter comprehend all the rest of the city. The principal object of attraction is the church of St. Peter, which surpasses in size and magnificence the finest monuments of ancient architecture. It was begun to be built in 1506, finished in 1621, and is entirely covered, both within and without, with marble. Its length is 730 feet, the breadth 520, and the height, from the pavement to the top of the cross which crowns the cupola, 450. The high altar under the cupola is 90 feet in height, and of extraordinary magnificence. It is approached by a splendid double colonnade, enclosing an oval space, in which stands the noble Egyptian obelisk, and two fountains, upwards of 50 feet high. A complete description of this church, and of its statues, basso-relievor, columns, and various other ornaments, would fill volumes. The cathedral of St. John Lateran, the Romans say, is the most ancient of all the churches of Rome, and the mother of all the churches in Christendom. It contains the Scala Santa, of 28 white marble steps, brought from Jerusalem, by which Christ is said to have ascended to the palace of Caiaphas. To this church every new pope constantly goes first in a magnificent procession, to take possession of the holy see. The Pantheon, which, from its circular form, has obtained the name of the Rotunda, is the most perfect of the Roman temples which now remain, and, notwithstanding the deprecations it has sustained from Goths, Vandals, and popes, is still a beautiful monument of Roman taste. The pavilion of the great altar of St. Peter, and the four wreathed pillars of Corinthian brass which support it, were formed out of the spoils of the Pantheon, which, after nearly 2000 years, has still a probability of outliving its proud and capacious rival. Its height is 150 feet, and its width nearly the same. There are no pillars to support the roof, which is constructed in the manner of a cupola; neither has it any windows, a sufficiency of light being admitted through a central opening in the dome. As the Pantheon is the most entire, the amphitheatre of Vespasian is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. About one-half of the external circuit still remains, from which a pretty exact idea may be formed of the original structure; and, by computation, it could contain 85,000 spectators. But the antiquities of Rome are too numerous to be minutely described; so that the ancient Forum, now a cow-market, the beautiful column of Trajan, &c., must be passed over. The Campidoglio, built by Michael Angelo, is a beautiful structure, standing on the site of the ancient capitol, so long the centre of the empire of the world. The body of this palace is the residence of the senators of Rome, and the wings are inhabited by the conservators of the city. The pope has three superb palaces, of which the principal is the Vatican, near St. Peter's church. The library of this palace is the largest and most complete in the world; rich, especially in MSS. in all languages, and of all ages. In Rome the connoisseur will meet with innumerable paintings by the greatest masters, and with the finest works of sculpture, &c. Besides the university, which consists of several noble colleges, there are numerous academies and literary societies. The castle of St. Angelo serves more to keep the city in awe, than to repel any foreign attack. Rome was formerly the metropolis of one of the greatest empires that have ever existed, and may be regarded as the parent of all the cities, arts, and states of modern Europe. The ancient Romans were governed by seven kings, for about 220 years. During the next 488 years they were governed by consuls, tribunes, decemvirs, and dictators, in their turns. They were afterwards governed by 60 emperors, for the space of 518 years. Their wars with the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, Mithridates of Pontus, Parthians, and Jews, were the most noted. The Roman empire was afterwards much distracted by various commotions, and in 410 Rome was taken and burnt. In May, 1527, Rome was invested by the army of the emperor Charles V.; and the general, to prevent a mutiny, promised to enrich them with the spoils of this opulent city. The general, however, was himself killed, as he was planting a scaling ladder against the walls; but his soldiers, not discouraged by his death, mounted to the assault with the utmost valour, and entering the city, exercised all those brutalities that may be expected from ferocity, aggravated by resistance. In the wars which attended the French revolution, Rome was again a considerable sufferer. In 1848 an insurrection broke out, a republic was proclaimed, and the pope was declared divested of his temporal power; but the city was captured by French troops, and the pope restored: he is still kept on his throne with French arms. See POPEDOM. Rome is 110 miles N.W. of Naples, 410 S.S.W. of Vienna, and 600 S.E. of Paris.

ROME, a town of New York, in Oneida county, near which, to the E., is Fort Stanwix. It is seated at the head of Mohawk river, 8 miles W.N.W. of Whitestown. The Erie canal, and the Syracuse and Utica railroad, pass the place. Pop. 5680.

ROMENAY, a town of France, in the department of Saone-et-Loire; 15 miles N.N.E. of Maçon.

ROMERSTADT, a town of Moravia, in the neighbourhood of which are some iron-mines; 20 miles N.N.E. of Olmutz.

ROMFORD, a town in Essex, with a market on Tuesday for hogs, calves, and sheep, and on Wednesday for cattle, corn, &c. It is 12 miles E.N.E. of London, and recently derives considerable advantages from its proximity to the Eastern Counties railway.

ROMHILD, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe Meiningen, with a castle; 13 miles S. of Meiningen.

ROMKALA, a town of Syria, with the remains of an ancient and strong castle, and two churches. It is seated on the Euphrates, at the influx of the Simeren, and is used by the Turks as a place of banishment for great men in disgrace; 85 m. N.N.E. of Aleppo.

ROMNA, a town of Russia, in the government of Tchernigof; 88 m. E.S.E. of Tchernigof.

ROMNEY, a town of Virginia, chief of Hampshire county, seated on the S.W. branch of the Potomac; 50 miles W.N.W. of Winchester. Long. 5. W. lat. 39. 20. N.

ROMNEY, NEW, a town in Kent, with a market on Thursday. It is one of the cinqueports; but since the sea has retired, it is much reduced. It is seated on a hill in Romney Marsh. About a mile to the W. is Old Romney, the original port, which is now a small place; 22 miles S.W. of Dover, and 71 S.E. of London.

ROMNEY MARSH, a tract in the most southern part of Kent, between Dungeness and Rye haven, defended from the sea by a strong embankment, called Drychurch wall.

It is 20 miles long, and 8 broad, containing about 24,000 acres of firm land, and some of the richest pastures in England. Vast flocks of sheep and herds of cattle are fattened here for the London market. It has two towns and 27 parishes, which were incorporated in the reign of Edward IV., by the name of a bailiff, 24 jurats, and the commonalty of Romney Marsh.

ROMONT, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Friburg; seated on a mountain, 10 miles N.W. of Friburg.

ROMORENTIN, a town of France, in the department of Loire-et-Cher, with a castle and manufactures of serges and cloths; seated on the Sandre, 26 miles S.E. of Blois, and 40 S. by W. of Orleans. Pop. 6100.

ROSETTA (Raschid), a town of Egypt, one of the pleasantest in the country. It has a great manufacture of striped and other coarse linens; but its chief business is the carriage of goods to Cairo; for all European merchandise is brought hither from Alexandria by sea. The rice grown in its vicinity, called sultani, is chiefly sent to Constantinople, and its exportation to any other place is prohibited. Rosetta was taken by the French in 1798, and here the English were defeated by the Turks in 1807. It stands on an island formed by the W. branch of the Nile; 25 miles E.N.E. of Alexandria, and 100 N.N.W. of Cairo. It once had 25,000 inhabitants, but they have dwindled down to 4000. Long. 30. 23. E. lat. 31. 23. N.

ROSSOR, a town in the department of Seine-et-Marne, with a magnificent castle; 16 miles E.N.E. of Melun, and 30 S.E. of Paris.

ROSS, a town in Herefordshire, with a market on Thursday. It owes most of its improvements and charitable institutions to John Kyrie, commonly called the Man of Ross, whose benevolent character is so interestingly delineated by Pope. Four miles to the S.W. are the massive remains of Goodrich castle; and near it are the ruins of Flanesford priory, the chapel of which is converted into a barn. Ross is seated on an elevated rock, on the Wye; 12 miles S.E. of Hereford, and 120 W. by N. of London.

ROSS, a county of Ohio, watered by the Scioto river; capital, Chillicothe. Population, 27,460.

ROSS, or ROSS CABBERT, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Cork, and united to Cork as an episcopal see. The harbour was formerly famous, but has been gradually filled up with sand, so that the town is sunk from its former splendour. It is seated on a bay of the Atlantic, 20 miles S.W. of Kinsale. Long. 8. 58. W. lat. 51. 32. N.

ROSS, NEW TOWN, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, situate on the Barrow; which is navigable for large vessels up to the quay. The town has a considerable trade, and exports a great quantity of wool, butter, and beef. It returns one member to parliament. It is 12 miles N.E. of Waterford, and 19 W. of Wexford.

ROSSANO, a strong town of Naples, in Calabria Citra, an archbishop's see. The adjacent valleys yield oil, capers, saffron, and excellent pepper. It is seated on an eminence, surrounded by rocks; 3 miles from the gulf of Tarento, and 136 S.E. of Naples. Pop. 7000. Long. 16. 38. E. lat. 39. 48. N.

ROSSLAU, a town of Germany, in the principality of Anhalt, with a castle; seated at the conflux of the Rossiau with the Elbe; 10 miles S.S.E. of Zerbst.

ROSS-SHIRE, a county of Scotland; 80 miles long, and 50 broad; bounded on the N. by Sutherlandshire and the frith of Dornoch, W. by the Minch, S. by Inverness-shire, and E. by the frith of Moray and the county of Cromarty, which last it almost encloses. It is divided into 30 parishes. It sends, in conjunction with Cromarty, one member to parliament. The middle and N.W. parts are mountainous and dreary; the E. part is variegated with woods, lakes, and rivers. The hills feed horses, beeves, sheep, and goats, and abound with game; the rivers and lakes teem with fish and water-fowl; and the E. coast is visited regularly by a shoal of herrings. Agriculture has undergone great improvements within these few years, and large quantities of corn are grown. The island of Lewis is attached to this county. Tain is the capital.

ROSSWEIN, a town of Saxony, with a good trade in wool, flannel, and cloth, seated on the Muldau; 23 m. W. of Dresden. Pop. 2700.

ROSTAK, a town of Arabia, in the province of Oman, and the seat of a sovereign prince. It is 120 miles W. of Muscat. Long. 57. 30. E. lat. 23. 30. N.

ROSTOK, a fortified town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin; with a university, a good harbour, a strong citadel, an arsenal, and three churches. It is divided into three parts, the Old, the New, and the Middle town, and carries on a large trade. It was formerly one of the Hanse towns, but its privileges, till lately maintained, have been curtailed. It is one of the most active manufacturing towns in N. Germany, and has a pretty extensive trade. It has a railway to Hamburg, &c. The river is now in progress of deepening, and improvement. It is seated on the river Warnow, 10 miles from its entrance into the Baltic, and 32 E.N.E. of Wismar. Pop. in 1837, 18,067. Long. 12.20. E. lat. 54.10. N.

ROSTOF, a town of Russia, in the government of Jaroslaf, and an episcopal see. It is seated on the lake Nero, or Rostof, which communicates with the Volga by the river Kotorost; 95 m. N.E. of Moscow. Pop. 8000.

ROSTREMAN, a town of France, department of Côtes du Nord, near the Blavet; 35 miles S.W. of St. Brieux.

ROSTREVOE, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Down; with a considerable salt-work and a pottery. It is much frequented for sea-bathing, and the peculiar beauty of its situation renders it one of the most delightful summer retreats in the province. Adjoining the town is Rostrevor hill, a romantic mountain of extraordinary elevation and beauty. The town is seated on Carlingford bay; 9 miles S.E. of Newry.

ROTA, a town and castle of Spain, in Andalusia, and at the entrance of the bay of Cadiz; 9 miles N.N.W. of Cadiz. Pop. 6000.

ROTENBURG, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucerne; 4 miles N. of Lucern.

ROTENBURG, a town of Wirtemberg, in the county of Hohenburg, with a castle. Near it is a famous mineral spring. It stands on the Neckar; 6 miles W.S.W. of Tubingen.

ROTENBURG, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Verden, on the river Wumme; 15 miles N. by E. of Verden.

ROTENBURG, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, with a palace; seated on the Fulda; 24 m. S.S.E. of Cassel. Pop. 3000.

ROTENFELS, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Lower Maine, seated on the Maine; 13 miles N.W. of Wurtzburg.

ROTENBURG, a town and castle of Bavaria, in the district of Anspach; noted as the birthplace of the celebrated Geener. It stands at the conflux of the Roth with the Rednitz; 18 miles S. of Nuremberg.

ROTHBURY, a town in Northumberland, with a market on Friday; situated on the Coquet, in a sequestered and romantic glen, sheltered from the northern blasts by towering hills; on the S. an abrupt bank rises in a pyramidal form, the summit of which is crowned by a stately tower. The Duke of Northumberland is lord of the manor, though he possesses very little freehold property in the town; 12 miles S.W. of Alnwick, and 303 N. by W. of London.

ROTHENBURG, a town of Prussian Silesia, on the river Neissa; 15 miles N. of Gorlitz.

ROTHENBURG, a town of Bavarian Franconia, surrounded by moats and ramparts. It stands on a mountain, by the river Tauber, from which it is supplied with water by means of a machine; 15 miles W.N.W. of Anspach. Pop. 5700. Long. 10. 18. E. lat. 49. 22. N.

ROTHER, a river which rises in Sussex, forms the boundary between that county and Kent for a short space, and enters the English channel at Rye.

ROTHERHAM, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Monday, celebrated for the sale of cattle. It has a spacious church, four meeting-houses, a charity school, a free school, a subscription library, an extensive brewery, a central station for the North Midland railway, and the terminus of the Sheffield railway. It is famous for the extensive iron works in its vicinity at Masborough, and has an ancient castle on an eminence near the town. It is seated at the conflux of the Rother with the Don, 32 miles S. of Leeds, and 165 N. by W. of London.

ROTHERHITHE, a suburb of London, in Surrey, situate on the S. bank of the Thames, and communicates with the northern side by means of a tunnel, a magnificent work, commenced by Mr. Brunel in 1823, and completed in 1843. The principal trade is connected with the shipping and docks.

ROTHSAY, a burgh of Scotland, the capital of the isle of Bute. Here is an ancient castle, once a royal palace. The inhabitants are actively engaged in the herring fishery, and several cotton-works are also established. Rothsay joins with Ayr, Irvine, Campbeltown, and Inverary, in sending one member to parliament. It is situate on the E. side of the island, and has an excellent harbour and pier; 80 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh. Long. 4. 53. W. lat. 55. 48. N.

ROTHWELL, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, seated on the Neckar, near its source; 27 miles S.S.W. of Tubingen. Long. 8. 37. E. lat. 48. 8. N.

ROTHWELL, a parish in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, where there are extensive coal mines, and also a clothing manufacture; 5 miles N. by E. of Wakefield, on the Manchester and Leeds railway.

ROTTENMANN, a town of the Austrian states, in Styria, with a college of regular canons; 20 miles N.N.W. of Judenburg.

ROTTERDAM, a city of South Holland, with one of the finest harbours in the Netherlands. Next to Amsterdam, it is the most considerable place in Holland, for the beauty of its buildings, and for its trade. Pop. Jan. 1st, 1840, 78,098, having increased 10,000 in the previous 10 years. There are so many deep canals, that ships may unload at the very doors of the warehouses. On the E. side of the city is a large basin and dock, for the purpose of building and launching vessels employed in the service of the admiralty of the East India Company. This port is more frequented than Amsterdam, because the ice breaks up sooner, and the tide, in two or three hours, will carry a ship into the open sea. The town-house, the bank, and the arsenal, are magnificent. Some of the houses are built in the old Spanish style, with the gable ends embattled in front; but there is a great number of modern brick houses, which are lofty and spacious, particularly on that magnificent quay called the Boompjes. On this quay is a handsome Jewish synagogue. In an open place at the head of one of the canals is a bronze statue of Erasmus, who was born here in 1467. This city was in a very flourishing state previously to the admission of the French troops in January 1795, and the war with England, when the commerce of Holland was suspended. It had begun to recover in 1809, when it was again rapidly depressed by the renewal of war. After the fall of Napoleon, its prosperity greatly increased, and it is thought that the separation of Belgium from Holland will operate favourably on the commerce of this town. It is situated at the influx of the Rotte with the Murwe, (the most northern branch of the Meuse,) and is connected with Amsterdam and Haerlem, &c., readily by means of the railways; it is also a principal port for the transit of passengers by steam vessels; 36 miles S.S.W. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 29. E. lat. 51. 56. N.

ROTTERDAM, one of the Friendly islands, in the Pacific Ocean; discovered by Tasman in 1643. Long. 174. 30. W. lat. 20. 16. S.

ROTTINGEN, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Lower Maine, situate on the Tauber; 17 miles S. of Wurtzburg.

ROUAIH, or ROIIA. See ORFA.

ROUBAIX, a town of France, department of the North; 6 miles N. of Lisle. Manufactures cotton, woollens, camlets, and spinning thread. It has wonderfully increased of late years, in consequence of these manufactures. The chief manufacture is cotton goods. Like other Flemish towns, it suffered greatly for want of water, a deficiency lately remedied by sinking Artesian wells. Pop. in 1836, 13,426.

ROUEN, a city of France, capital of the department of Lower Seine, and an archbishop's see. It is 7 miles in circuit, and stands on the N. side of the Seine, over which is an elegant stone bridge. The streets are narrow and crooked, and many of the houses are built of wood; notwithstanding which, it is one of the most opulent and commercial places in France. Among the public buildings, the most distinguished are the magnificent cathedral, one of the finest in Europe, the great hall of the palace, in which the parliament of Rouen met, the old castle, &c. Near the cathedral, which is not the only remarkable church, is the public library. In one of the market-places, is a statue of the celebrated Maid of Orleans, who was burnt here by the English as a witch. The inhabitants have manufactures of woollen, linen, cotton, ironware, paper, and pottery; also sugar refineries and salt works. Rouen is the birthplace of the two Corneilles, and of Fontenelle. It is 50 miles S.W. of Amiens, and 70 N.W. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 92,083, but including the suburbs, not less than 100,000. Long. 1. 6. E. lat. 49. 26. N.

ROVERGUE, a former province of France, which now forms the department of AVELLON, (which see.)

ROULERS, a town of Belgium, in W. Flanders. It has a school, manufactures of linen, leather, soap, &c., and a trade in butter; 26 m. W. by S. of Ghent. Pop. in 1836, 9982.

 ROUSAY, one of the Orkneys, lying N.W. of the mainland. It is about 9 miles long, and 4 broad.

ROUSSELAERT, a town of the Netherlands, in West Flanders, seated on the Mandel; 10 miles N.E. of Ypres.

ROUSSILLON, a former province of France, now included in the department of Eastern Pyrenees. See PYRENEES, EASTERN.

ROVEREDO, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol; seated near the Adige, at the foot of a mountain, on the river Lens, over which is a bridge, defended by a strong citadel. It has a very considerable trade in silk, and a great quantity of tobacco is raised here. In 1796, the Austrians were defeated near this place by the French, who took possession of the town, but they were obliged to abandon it soon afterwards; 13 miles S. of Trent. Pop. 7300. Long. 10. 55. E. lat. 45. 50. N.

ROVIGNO, a seaport of Austrian Illyria, on the coast of Istria, with two good harbours. The inhabitants are estimated at 10,000, who are chiefly employed in the pilchard fishery, ship-building, and the sale of wood. Near it are quarries of fine stone. It is seated on a peninsula in the gulf of Venice; 36 miles S. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 13. 58. E. lat. 45. 11. N.

ROVIGO, a town of Austrian Italy; capital of a province or delegation of its name, and the residence of the bishop of Adria, to the decline of which town it owes its present prosperity. It is seated on the Adige; 37 miles S.W. of Venice. Pop. in 1837, 15,669. Long. 12. 4. E. lat. 45. 8. N.

ROWSLEY, a township in the par. of Bakewell, Derbyshire; on the Manchester and Midland Junction railway to Ambergate.

ROWLEY, a town of Massachusetts, in Essex county; 28 miles N.E. of Boston. Pop. 1203.

ROXBURGHSHIRE, a county of Scotland, sometimes called Teviotdale; bounded N by Berwickshire, E. and S. by Northumberland and Cumberland, and W. by the shires of Dumfries and Selkirk. It is of an irregular figure, and the greatest extent in every direction is about 30 miles. It is divided into 31 parishes, and returns one member to parliament. The principal rivers are the Tweed, Teviot, and Liddel. The face of the country exhibits a rough appearance of mosses, hills, and mountains, interspersed with narrow valleys, well watered, and fertile in corn. The hills feed great numbers of sheep and cattle. Some remains are still visible of the Catrail, or Piets-work ditch, a stupendous British work, probably constructed in the fifth century, as a line of defence against the Saxons. It appears to have been a vast fosse, 26 feet broad, with a rampart 8 or 10 feet high on either side. In many parts of the county, there are sepulchral tumuli, in which coffins and urns have been found. There are also Druidical circles, and other antiquities. The county had its name from the once magnificent city and castle of Roxburgh, situate between the Teviot and the Tweed, nearly opposite Kelso: of the city few traces are now evident, and the castle, near the mouth of the Teviot, is entirely a ruin. At this castle, in 1460, James II. of Scotland lost his life by the bursting of a cannon. About 2 miles from the castle, on the banks of the Teviot, is a village called Roxburgh. The present capital of the county is Jedburgh.

ROXBURGH, a town of Massachusetts, in Norfolk county; 2 miles S.S.W. of Boston, to which it is joined by a neck of land, constituting a broad avenue. Pop. 8089.

RUNCORN, a township in Cheshire. It is a place of some importance, from being the termination of the Duke of Bridgewater's canal, which here joins the Mersey, and is also frequented for sea-bathing. It has some extensive stone-quarries; 10 miles N.E. by N. of Chester.

RUNOOPUR, a town of Bengal, capital of a fertile district, governed by a judge, collector, &c., and subservient to the court of circuit and appeal of Dacca. The chief produce of the district is rice, but there is also much tobacco and some indigo. The inhabitants carry on considerable trade with Assam, Booter, and Calcutta. It is 124 miles N.N.E. of Moorshedabad. Pop. of the district, 2,735,000; of the town, 15,000. Long. 80. 4. E. lat. 25. 44. N.

RUNKEL, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, with a citadel on a high hill; formerly the residence of the counts of Wied-Runkel. It is seated on the Lahn; 14 miles E.N.E. of Nassau.

RUPELMONDE, a town of the Netherlands, in E. Flanders; 8 miles S.W. of Antwerp.

RUPERT, a river of the Hudson's bay territory, which issues from the lake Mistassin, and flows W. into the S.E. part of James bay. In its course it forms several small lakes; and at its mouth are the remains of Fort Rupert, formerly a settlement of the Hudson bay Company. Long. 76. 58. W. lat. 51. 3. N.

RUPPIN, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg. It stands on the W. side of a lake, formed by the river Rhin; and on the opposite side of the lake is Old Ruppın, with an ancient castle, the residence of its former counts, whose burial place is at New Ruppın. This town was entirely consumed by fire in 1787, but is rebuilt in a handsome manner, and greatly augmented. It has a considerable trade, a manufacture of cloth, and noted breweries. It is 33 miles N.N.W. of Berlin.

Pop. in 1837, 7925. Long. 13.0. E. lat. 52.56. N.

RUREMONDE, or ROERMONDE, a strong town of the Netherlands, in the province of Limburg; seated at the conflux of the Roer with the Meuse; 28 miles N.N.E. of Maastricht. Pop. 4600. Long. 6. 4. E. lat. 51. 11. N.

RUSSELVILLE a town of Kentucky, capital of Logan county; 85 miles S. of Louisville.

RUSSELSHEIM, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, situate on the Main; 6 miles E. of Mentz, and 13 N.W. of Darmstadt.

RUSSEY, a town of France, department of Doubs; 34 miles E. by S. of Besançon.

RUSSIA, a vast empire, partly in Asia and partly in Europe; bounded on the N. by the Frozen Ocean, E. by the Pacific, S by Great Tartary, the Caspian sea, Persia, Turkey in Asia, and the Black sea, and W. by Turkey in Europe, Poland, the Baltic sea, and Sweden. There were three countries that had the name of Russia: namely, Red Russia, which formed the S. part of Poland; White Russia, which comprehended the E. part of Lithuania; and Black Russia, which included the governments of Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, and Yaroslaf; and hence his Imperial majesty takes the title of emperor and autocrat of all the Russias. It is 11,000 miles in length, with an average breadth of 1500 miles; containing an area of 7,000,000 square miles, with a population of 66,000,000. This vast territory, forty-two times the extent of France, has not double its population, and the revenue of Great Britain is quadruple that of Russia. A great portion of the country may be considered as the waste land of Europe, and the Asiatic provinces are scarcely habitable. It is divided into 51 provinces; 41 and part of 4 are in Europe, and 6, and the remaining portions of the 4, are in Asia. A country of such vast extent must lie in different climates, and the soil and products must be as different. The most fertile part is near the frontiers of Poland, the inhabitants of which are able to supply their neighbours with corn. The N. part is not only colder, but very marshy, and overrun with forests, inhabited chiefly by wild beasts. The country affords a variety of commodities, which, being of great use to foreigners, produce a considerable annual balance of trade in favour of Russia. The home commodities are chiefly sable, black furs, the skins of black and white foxes, ermines, hyænas, lynxes, bears, panthers, wolves, martins, white hures, &c., red and black juchteor Russian leather, (which for colour, smell, and softness, is not equalled in the world), copper, iron, talc, tallow, wax, honey, porash, tar, linseed and train oil, castor, isinglass, hemp, flax, thread, sail-cloth, calimanco, Siberian musk, soap, feathers, timber, &c. To these commodities may also be added almost all the merchandise of China, India, Persia, Turkey, and some European countries. The principal towns are St. Petersburg, Moscow, Riga, Odessa, Tula, Wilna, &c. The religion is that of the Greek or Eastern Church, which is governed by a patriarch, under whom are the archbishops and bishops. Every priest is called a papa or pope, and of these there were formerly 4000 in Moscow alone; at present their number is about 68,000. A considerable number of the Russians profess the Mohammedan religion, and many are still pagans. The inhabitants of the Swedish provinces are Lutherans; and Protestants as well as Papists enjoy full liberty of conscience. There are many convents for both sexes, but it has been wisely ordained that no male can enter into a monastic life before he is 30 years of age, and that no female can take the veil till she is 50, and even then, not without the licence of the holy synod. The inhabitants in general are robust, well-shaped, and of pretty good complexions. They are great eaters, and very fond of brandy. They use bathing, but smoke no tobacco, lest the smoke should dishonour the images of the saints, which they keep in great veneration; however, they take a great deal of snuff, made of the tobacco brought from the Ukraine. The Russians were formerly wholly employed in agriculture, feeding of cattle, hunting, and fishing; and he was thought a learned man who could read and write. But Peter the Great undertook to introduce arts and sciences; and in 1724 the first university was founded that ever was in Russia; there is also an academy of sciences at Petersburg, supplied with eminent professors. With respect to dress, a long beard is in high estimation with the people of Russia, notwithstanding the efforts of their monarchs to root it out; and it is only those depending upon government, in the army and navy, who have yet complied with the custom and wish of the court. Those who retain their beards retain likewise the ancient dress; the long swaddling coat, either of skins, or of coarse cloth lined with skins, in winter, and in summer, with cloth only. About their middle they have a sash of any colour; but what they most affect is green or yellow. Their shirts are fashioned as women's; and their necks, being exposed to the cold, become very hard and impenetrable from this practice. Government continues to exert every nerve to compel the subjects to adopt the German dress. Tho clergy alone excepted, none can procure any place, or favour from court, upon other conditions than banishing the Asiatic sheep-skin robes. The worn-out veteran retires with a pension, upon the express terms of never again assuming the habit of his fathers. But so jealously attached are the multitude to former manners, and so honourable do they esteem them, that a Russian dressed in his beard and gown, acquires the greatest respect. The dress of the women is the reverse of that of the men, both in fashion and colour; every part of it being as short and tight as decency will allow, and very gaudy. It resembles that of the Highland women in Scotland. The Russian women are, however, far more rich in their attire; nor is gold lace wanting, any more than the art of painting, to complete the Russian belle. The rising generation are modernizing their antique vestments, the stiff embroidered napkin is supplanted by one of flowing silk; the jacket and petticoat are of muslin, or other fine stuffs; and the plaid is exchanged for a silk or satin cloak, in the cold season lined with fur. The richer class of females wear velvet boots. The dress of the higher ranks is after the French and English fashion; and all must have a covering of fur, six months of the year. Thus equipped, the prince and the peasant are drawn in their chaises and sledges through the dreary Scythian winter. The principal rivers are the Dnieper, Volga, Don, Duna or Dwina, and Obi. The sovereigns of Russia are absolute. They were formerly called Grand Dukes, which is still the title of the heir apparent. They afterwards assumed the title of czar, and, in the sequel, that of emperor. The first who bore the title of czar was Basil, son of John Basilides, who freed his country from its subjection to the Tartars, about the year 1470. The title of emperor was first assumed by Peter I, who, by his illustrious actions, justly acquired the surname of Great. He died in 1725; and perhaps no country ever exhibited, in so short a time, the wonders that may be effected by the genius and exertions of one man. Peter the Great at his accession to the throne, found his subjects of all ranks involved in the grossest ignorance and barbarism; his numerous armies ferocious and undisciplined; and he had neither merchant ships nor men-of-war; which, added to the remoteness of her situation, rendered the influence of Russia in the politics of Europe of little consideration. Peter civilized his barbarous subjects, disciplined his armies, built cities and fortresses, and created a navy. These national improvements have been still further prosecuted since his time, and Russia now holds a rank among the nations of the world, of which human foresight, at the commencement of the 18th century, could have formed no conception. An account of the invasion of this country, in 1812, will be found under the head of France. In 1854-6, Russia, through its designs on Turkey, was involved in a war with the Sultan, whose cause England and France espoused. The Emperor Nicholas died on March 2, 1855, and his son succeeded him as Alexander II. Upon the restoration of peace the new emperor applied himself to domestic reforms, the chief being the emancipation of the serfs throughout his empire; but his policy in some respects, as towards Poland, has been harsh and repressive.

RUTCHESTER, a village in Northumberland, (the Vindobala of the Romans), containing some remarkable ruins of its once considerable fort. Severus's wall runs on the middle of the E. rampart, and Adrian's vallum passes about the distance of a chain to the S. of it.

RUTHERFORD, a town of North Carolina, chief of a county of the same name; situate on a branch of Broad River; 30 miles S. by E. of Morgantown, and 60 W. of Charlotte. Pop. of the county, 19,202.

RUTHERGLEN, a burgh of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, once a place of considerable note, but now reduced to one principal street, and a few lanes. It sends, with Glasgow, Renfrew, &c., one member to parliament. It is seated near the Clyde, 3 miles S.E. of Glasgow.

RUTHIN, or RHUTHYN, a borough of Wales, in Denbighshire, with markets on Monday and Saturday. It had a strong castle now in ruins. It is pleasantly seated on an eminence, by the river Clwyd, 15 miles S.W. of Holywell, and 205 N.W. of London. In conjunction with Holt and Denbigh, it sends one member to parliament.

RUTIGLIANO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, 12 miles S.E. of Bari. Pop. 4300.

RUTLAM, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malwa, 48 miles W. of Ougein, and 136 E. of Amedabad. Pop. 10,000.

RUTLAND, a town of Vermont, chief of a county of the same name. It is seated on Otter Creek, 40 miles W. by N. of Windsor, and 57 N. of Bennington. Long. 73. 20. W. lat. 43. 30. N. Pop. 2708.

RUTLAND, a town of Massachusetts, in Worcester county, 14 miles N. of Worcester, and 56 W. of Boston. Pop. 1260.

RUTLANDSHIRE, the smallest county in England, 18 miles long and 15 broad; bounded on the W. and N. by Leicestershire, N. and N.E. by Lincolnshire, and S. and S.E. by Northamptonshire. It contains 97,500 acres, is divided into 5 hundreds and 49 parishes, has two market towns, and sends two members to parliament. The soil varies much, but in general is fertile, particularly the rich vale of Catmose; which runs from the W. side to the centre of the county. The principal rivers are the Welland and the Guash or Wash. Oakham is the county town.

RUTTUNPOUR, a city of Hindostan, in Orissa, and the capital of a small district of its name. It is 210 miles S. by W. of Benares, and 360 W. of Calcutta. Pop. 8000. Long. 82. 36. E. lat. 22. 16. N.

RUTZEN, a town of Prussian Silesia, principality of Wolau; 20 miles N. of Wolau.

RUVO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari 16 miles W. of Bari. Pop. 3300.

RUZA, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow; 48 miles W.N.W. of Moscow.

RYACORTA, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Mysore. It was taken in 1791 by the British, to whom it was afterwards ceded by Tippoo Sultan. It is 85 miles E. of Seringapatam, and 98 W.S.W. of Arcot. Long. 78. 6. E. lat. 12. 26. N.

RYAN, LOCII, a bay of Scotland, in the N.W. angle of Wigtonshire. The sea flows into it through a narrow pass, and it affords excellent anchorage.

RYDAL, a fertile valley in North Yorkshire, so called from the river Rye, which passes through it and falls into the Swale, near Richmond.

RYDAL-WATER, a lake in Westmoreland, a little to the W. of Ambleside. It is one mile in length, spotted with little islands, and communicates by a narrow channel with Grasmere-water to the W. and by the river Rothay, with Windermere-water, to the S.

RYDE, a town in the parish of New Church, on the N.E. coast of the isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton. It has become one of the principal watering-places in the S. of England. It stands on a declivity, and is delightfully situated. It has several handsome buildings, and a pier.

RYDROOG, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Mysore, on the river Hindenny, 60 miles N.N.E. of Chittledroog. Long. 76. 52. E. lat. 14. 40. N.

RYE, a borough and seaport in Sussex, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It is an appendage to the cinque ports; governed by a mayor and jurats. It returns one member to parliament. The church is a very large structure; and there are, besides, meeting-houses for Methodists, Baptists, Quakers, &c., and a chapel for the French refugees settled here during the last war. On the edge of the cliff is a small battery, and behind it Ipres tower, a square building, now a gaol. The old port was so choked up with sand, that it would admit only small vessels, and a new harbour was opened in 1726, but this has also choked up, and the present harbour is nearly on the site of the old one. The sea has made very curious changes in the approaches and harbour. The exports are corn, malt, hops, and other products of the county, and hence are sent considerable supplies of fish to the London markets. It is 10 miles N.E. of Hastings, and 63 S.E. of London. It has a railway to Ashford and London.

RYEGATE, or REIGATE, a borough in Surrey, market on Tuesday. It returns one member to parliament. The town is pleasantly seated on a rock of white sandstone, and watered by a branch of the river Mole. Fullers earth is found in its vicinity. It is elevated in importance by the proximity of the Brighton and South Coast, and the South Eastern railways, which here diverge from the main branch to London. Here was formerly a castle built in the time of the Saxons, and called Holmes Castle; some ruins of it are to be seen, particularly a long vault, with a room at the end, where, it is said, the barons who took up arms against king John held their private meetings. The market-house was formerly a chapel, dedicated to Thomas à Becket. It is seated in a valley, called Holmsdale, 16 miles E. of Guildford, and 21 S.W. of London.

RYMENAUT, a town of Belgium, in Brabant, on the Dyle, 5 miles E. of Mechlin.

RYSSEN, a town of the Netherlands, in Overysse, on the river Regge, 16 miles E.N. E. of Deventer.

SAGG HARBOUR, a seaport of New York, in Suffolk county, at the E. end of Long Island. The whale fishery from this place employs 41 ships; 12 miles N.W. of Southampton, and 87 E. of New York. Pop. 3500.

SAGHALIAN, or AMOUR, a river of Chinese Tartary, which rises near the Yablonoi mountains, where it is first known by the names of Kerlon and Argun, and forms part of the boundary between Siberia and Eastern Tartary, where it receives the Schilka, and takes its present name. It then takes a circuitous eastern course of 1850 miles, during which it receives many other rivers, and enters the sea of Okotsk, opposite the N. part of the island of Saghlian.

SAGHALIAN, or TCHOKA, a large island, or peninsula, in the sea of Okotsk, separated from the continent by the channel of Tartary on the W., and from the island Jesso by Perouse strait on the S. and is joined to the continent by a sandy neck, in lat. 52. N. It extends from lat. 46. to 54. or not less than 550 miles in length, by about 90 of medial breadth. The centre is mountainous, and well wooded with pine, willow, oak, and birch; but the shores are level, and well adapted for agriculture. The natives resemble the Tartars in form, and the upper lip is commonly tattooed blue. The dress is a loose robe of skins, or quilted nankeen, with a girdle. Their huts are of timber, thatched with grass, with a fire-place in the middle. In the S. are found some Japanese articles; and there is a little trade with the Mantchous and Russians.

SAGHALIAN OULA, a city of Eastern Tartary, in Mantchouria. It is rich and populous, and very important on account of its situation, as it secures to the Mantchou Tartars the possession of extensive deserts covered with woods, in which a great number of fables are found. SAID, or SAHID, a province of Upper Egypt, bordering on Nubia and the Red sea, (anciently called Thebaid (celebrated for having been the retreat of a great number of Christians, who lived here in a solitary manner. It is the least fertile and populous part of Egypt, being full of deserts.

SAIDA, a town of Syria, on the coast of the Mediterranean (the remains of the ancient Sidon); with a fort and castle. To the W. of the castle is a shoal 200 paces long, and the space between them is a road for vessels, but not safe in bad weather. The shoal, which extends along the town, has a basin enclosed by a decayed pier: this was the ancient port, but it is now so choked up by sands that boats only can enter its mouth, near the castle. Saida is a trading town, and the chief emporium of Damascus and the interior country. The manufacture of cotton is the principal employment of its inhabitants, who are estimated at from 4000 to 7000 or 8000 in number; 45 miles W.S.W. of Damascus. Long. 34. 22. E. lat. 33. 34. N.

Püngeh, the modern town; is about a mile from the old town, and contains a citadel built on European principles, a royal palace, and immense magazines of military and naval stores; the houses are of wood, and the town possesses some commerce. Pop. 180,000. Long. 107. 5. E. lat. 10. 47. N.

SAINT GEORGE. See GEORGE ST., and the same with all other similar articles.

SAINTEs, three of the Leeward Caribbee islands, in the West Indies, between Guadeloupe and Dominica. The middle one seems nothing more than a large barren rock, but contributes to form a good harbour. They produce coffee and cotton. Pop. 1139, including 569 negroes, who have been set free by the new French republic. Long. 61. 45. W. lat. 15. 52. N.

SAINTEs, a town of France, capital of the department of Lower Charente. Here are several monuments of antiquity, of which the most famous are the amphitheatre, the aqueducts, and the triumphal arch on the bridge over the Charente. The castle, built on a rock, is deemed impregnable; and the ancient cathedral has one of the largest steeples in France. It is seated on the Charente; 40 miles S.E. of Rochelle, and 76 S.W. of Poitiers. Pop. in 1836, 7823. Long. 0. 38. W. lat. 45. 45. N.

SAINTONGE, a former province of France, which now forms the greater part of the department of Lower Charente, and part of that of Charente.

SAL, one of the Cape Verd islands, 42 miles in circumference, lying to the E. of St. Nicholas. It has its name from the number of salt-ponds that from time to time are filled by the sea, where the water crystallizes into a beautiful salt, the chief production of the island. Long. 22. 56. W. lat. 16. 38. N.

SALA, or SALBERG, a town of Sweden, in the government of Westernas, near which is a silver mine; seated on a river, 30 miles W. of Upsal, and 50 N.W. of Stockholm.

SALAMANCA, a city of Spain, in Leon, and a bishop's see; with a famous university. Salamanca, the ancient Salmantica, was a large and ancient city of the Vettones; the piers of the Roman bridge still remain. It was ravaged by the Moors, and finally re-conquered in 1095. It abounds with early specimens of architecture, and contains some most superb specimens of Gothic and cinquecento, and some most absurd examples of depraved styles of building. The French, on their invasion prior to 1812, destroyed 13 out of 25 convents, and 20 of 25 colleges, which existed in the Oxford of Spain, but the Spaniards have not had riches enough to restore them. Of the Colegeos Mayores, the principal colleges, there were only 6 in Spain, 4 of which were at Salamanca; now, however, it is a desert. The largest colleges at present are San Bartolome; the oldest Cuenca de Santiago, or del Arzobispo, and del Rey. The structure, called the Schools, commenced in 1415, where the sciences are taught, is very large and curious. There were formerly 14,000, and afterwards 7000 students, when the Spanish monarchy was in a flourishing condition; but at present the number does not exceed 400. Here are 25 magnificent churches, a large public square, fine fountains, and every thing that can contribute to the beauty and commodiousness of the city. The cathedral is one of the handsomest in Spain, begun in 1513; and there are several fine convents, with churches belonging to them, adorned with images, and some with curious pictures. The town is seated partly on a plain, and partly on hills, and is surrounded by a wall. The river Tormes, which washes its walls, has a bridge over it 300 paces long. Salamanca is celebrated for a memorable victory obtained over the French by the allied army under Lord Wellington, on the 22nd of June, 1812; 85 miles S. by W. of Leon, and 120 N.W. of Madrid. Pop. 13,600. Long. 5. 48. W. lat. 41. 24. N.

SALEM, a seaport of Massachusetts, capital of Essex county. It carries on a large trade to the East Indies, has some ship-building, and the harbour is defended by a fort and citadel. Here are 16 edifices for public worship, and a bridge, 1500 feet long, which connects the town with Beverley. It is situate on a peninsula, formed by two small inlets of the sea, called North and South Rivers; 20 miles N.E. of Boston. To which it is connected by a railroad. Pop. 15,082. Long. 70. 50. W. lat. 42. 30. N.

SALEM, a town of New Jersey, capital of a county of the same name. It has 7 edifices for public worship. It is seated on a branch of Salem creek, 3 miles from its mouth in Delaware bay, and 37 S.S.W. of Philadelphia. Pop. 2007. Long. 75. 37. W. lat. 39. 37. N.

SALEM, a town of North Carolina, in Surry county, on the W. side of Wack Creek, a branch of the Cargalis, which flows into the Yadkin. It is the principal settlement of the Moravians in this state; 70 miles W. of Hillsborough. Pop. 1000. Long. 80. 21. W. lat. 36. 2. N.

SALEM, a town of New York, in Washington county; 46 miles N.E. of Albany. Pop. 2855.—There are also several inconsiderable townships of this name in the United States.

SALERNI, a considerable town of Sicily, in the intendency of Trapani. It is finely situate, but has a most abject appearance. Its inhabitants, 12,162 in number in 1831, are indolent; and the town has no trade, being only distinguished for filth and superstition; 20 miles E. of Marsala.

SALERNO, a fortified seaport of Naples, capital of Principato Citra, and an archbishop's see, with a castle and a university, principally for medicine. It is seated on a bay of the same name; 27 miles S.E. of Naples. Pop. 16,000. Long. 14. 46. E. lat. 40. 44. N.

SALEBS, a town of France, department of Cantal, seated among mountains; 9 miles N. of Aurillac.

SALFORD, a borough in Lancashire, adjoining to Manchester. It returns one member to parliament. Market on Saturday. The population is employed in the manufactures peculiar to Manchester. The principal attraction of Salford is the Crescent, commanding a rich view through which the Irwell meanders.

SALIES, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, where are springs from which fine salt is made; 7 miles W. of Orthes.

SALIGNAC, a town of the department of Upper Vienne; 10 miles S. of Limoges.

SALINA, a town of North America, state of New York; 130 miles W. of Albany. It is a collection of four villages, employed in the manufacture of salt, from the brine springs and Onondaga lake. Pop. 11,013.

SALINAS, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated on the Deva, at the foot of a mountain; 16 miles N.N.E. of Vittoria, and 28 S.S.E. of Bilbao.

SALINS, a town of France, department of Jura, with a strong fort and famous salt-works. In the neighbourhood are quarries of jasper, alabaster, and black marble. It is seated in a fertile valley; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. of Besançon. Pop. 8200.

SALISBURY, or NEW SARUM, a city and the capital of Wiltshire, and a bishop's see, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It is situated in a chalky soil, almost surrounded by the Avon, Willy, Nadder, and Bourn; and is rendered particularly clean by a small stream flowing through every street. It has a fine cathedral, the spire of which is the loftiest in the kingdom. The town-hall is a handsome building, and stands in a spacious market-place. Salisbury is governed by a mayor, returns two members to parliament, and formerly had some manufactures, but its trade is now confined chiefly to the supply of the city. It is 38 m. S.E. of Bath, and 81 W. by S. of London. Long. 1. 47. W. lat. 51. 4. N.

SALISBURY, a fertile district of North Carolina, comprehending the counties of Rockingham, Guilford, Montgomery, Stokes, Surry, Iredell, Rowan, Cabarras, and Mecklenburg.

SALISBURY CRAIG, a hill in Scotland on the E. side of Edinburgh, remarkable for a great precipice of solid rock, about one mile long, and in some parts 100 feet high, which passes with some regularity along its brow.

SALISBURY PLAIN, an open tract in England, which extends from the city of Salisbury, 25 miles E. to Winchester, and 25 W. to Shaftsbury, and is, in some places, from 35 to 40 miles in breadth. There were so many cross roads on it, and so few houses to take directions from, that Thomas, Earl of Pembroke, planted a tree at each mile-stone from Salisbury to Shaftsbury, as a guide for travellers. That part of it about the city is a chalky down; the other parts are noted for feeding numerous and large flocks of sheep. In this plain, beside the famous Stonehenge, are traces of many Roman and British antiquities.

SALLER, or SUA, a seaport of the kingdom of Fez, with several forts. The harbour is one of the best in the country; but on account of a bar, ships of 200 tons are forced to lighten their burden before they can enter. There are docks to build ships, but they are seldom used, for want of skill and materials. It is divided into the Old and New Town, or Rabat, by the river Guero, and was formerly noted for its pirates; 100 miles W. of Fez, and 150 S. of Gibraltar. Long. 6. 31. W. lat. 34. 0. N.

SALUZZO, a town of Piedmont, capital of a district of its name. It is seated on an eminence near the Po; 24 m. S. by W. of Turin.

SALVADOR, ST., one of the Bahama islands. See GUANAHANI.

SALVADOR, ST., the capital of Congo, stands on a large mountain, the summit of which forms a plain 10 miles in circuit, which is well cultivated. The city has 12 churches, besides the cathedral; also a large palace, in which the king and a Portuguese bishop reside. It is 230 miles E.S.E. of Loango. Long. $14. 20. E.$ lat. $5. 40. S.$

SALVADOR, ST., now called BAHIA, a city of Brazil; capital of the province of Bahia, and an archbishop's see, with several forts. The cathedral is large, but the most superb structure in the city is the grand church of the ex-jesuits, built of European marble, and the internal part exceedingly rich. The houses are two or three storeys high, and built of stone. The principal streets are good, but the generality are narrow and dirty. In the royal square are the governor's house, the mint, and the public offices; and along the beach are the custom-house, dockyard, storehouses, &c. The chief commodities are cotton, sugar, tobacco, coffee, gums, wood, hides, tallow, and train oil. The inhabitants are estimated at upwards of 100,000. It is seated on an eminence, in the bay of All-Saints; 120 miles S.W. of Sergipe. Long. $39. 30. W.$, lat. $13. 30. S.$

SALVADOR, SAN, a town of the Federal district in Guatemala, a republic of Central America. The district extends 26 miles from the town to the roadstead of Libertad. The inhabitants are industrious, and raise iron and cotton. Pop. 16,000. The volcano of St. Salvador is in this district.

SALVADOR DE JUJUI, ST., a city of Tucuman, republic of La Plata; situated at the foot of a high mountain, on a river of its name, which flows E. to the Vermejo. It is 280 miles N.N.E. of St. Jago del Estero. Long. $66. 20. W.$ lat. $24. 5. S.$

SALVAGES, small uninhabited islands, lying between the Canaries and Madeira; 27 leagues N. of Point Nago, in Teneriffe. Long. $15. 54. W.$ lat. $30. 0. N.$

SALVATERRA, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a royal palace, seated on the Tajo; 35 miles N.E. of Lisbon.

SALVATERRA, a strong town of Portugal, in Beira. It was taken by the French in 1704, and by the allies in 1705. It stands on the frontiers of Spain; 12 miles N.N.W. of Alcantara, and 37 E. by S. of Castle Branco.

SALVATIERRA, a town of Spain, in Galicia, seated on the Minho; 7 miles N.E. of Tuy.

SALVATIERRA, a town of Spain, in Leon, seated on the Tormes; 23 miles S. of Salamanca.

SALVATIERRA, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated at the foot of Mount St. Adrian; 12 miles E.N.E. of Vittoria. Pop. 1500.

SALZA, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg, famous for its salt-works. It is seated near the Elbe; 12 miles S.S.E. of Magdeburg.

SALZBURO, a province of the Austrian empire, bounded on the N. by Bavaria, E. by Styria, S. and W. by Tyrol and Bavaria. It is a mountainous country, but pretty fertile, and contains mines of copper, silver, and iron. It was formerly subject to an archbishop, who was a prince of the empire, and primate of Germany. In 1802 it was made an electorate, and given to the Grand Duke of Tuscany; incorporated with the Austrian states in 1806, and transferred in 1809 to Bavaria. On the fall of Napoleon it was restored, with the exception of a part of its territory, to Austria.

SALZBURG, the capital of the above province, has a strong castle on a mountain, and two noble palaces. The inhabitants are estimated at 13,000. The cathedral of St. Rupert is very fine, and contains five organs. The university, founded in 1623, was converted, in 1810, into a lyceum, with a theological and surgical school. Near Salzburg are some very productive salt-works. The French became masters of this city in 1800, and again in 1805. In 1818 upwards of 100 houses were destroyed by fire. It is situated between three mountains, on both sides the river Salza; 45 miles S. by W. of Passau, and 155 W. by S. of Vienna. Long. $13. 4. E.$ lat. $47. 46. N.$

SALZKOTEN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, with a good salt-mine; 7 miles S.W. of Paderborn.

SALZSTADT, a town of Germany, in the county of Lippe-Deimold, with a salt-mine; 12 miles N.W. of Detmold.

SALZUNGEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Meiningen, with a castle called Schnepfenburg, on an eminence, and several salt-works. It is seated on the Werra; 10 miles S. of Eisenach.

SALZWEDEL, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg, with manufactures of woollen, linen, and cotton, and a considerable trade in corn, cattle, and hops. It is seated on the Jeeetze; 72 miles E. of Hamburg. Pop. 6000.

SAMANA, a peninsula or island of the West Indies, on the N.E. side of St. Domingo, from which it is separated on the W. by a narrow channel. It is 33 miles long, and 8 broad, and has a town and bay of the same name on the coast. It was taken by the British in 1803. Long. 69. 20. W. lat. 19. 10. N.

SAMANDRAKI, or SAMONDRACHI, an island of the Grecian Archipelago; between Stalimeni and the coast of Romania, and to the N. of the isle of Imbro. It is 17 miles in circumference, and has a town of the same name, with a spacious harbour. Long. 25. 17. E. lat. 40. 34. N.

SAMAR, or TENDAY, one of the Philippine islands, S.E. of that of Luconia, from which it is separated by a strait. It is 320 miles in circumference, and is full of craggy mountains, among which are fertile valleys.

SAMARA, a town of Russia, in the government of Simbirsk, seated on the Volga; 95 miles S.S.E. of Simbirsk. Pop. 2600.

SAMARANG, a fortified town in the N.E. part of the island of Java, and, next to Batavia, the most considerable settlement in the island. It is tolerably well built, and is fortified, has several good public buildings, and numerous excellent houses, and is the seat of a great country trade. It is one of the three seats of the criminal and civil courts of Java, and the residence of a governor. It stands at the mouth of a river of the same name; 290 miles E. by S. of Batavia. Pop. 20,000. Long. 110. 27. E. lat. 6. 57. S.

SAMARAND, an ancient city of Asia, formerly the capital of Usbec Tartary, in Bokharia, with a castle and a university. It was the birthplace and seat of Tamerlane the Great, and afterwards the residence of a Tartar prince. The city falls short of its ancient splendour; yet it is still very large, and fortified with strong bulwarks of earth. The houses are mostly of hardened clay, but some are of stone, from quarries in the neighbourhood. The silk paper made here is in great request; and it has a considerable trade in excellent fruits. It is seated on the Sogd; 138 miles E. by N. of Bokhara. Pop. 10,000. Long. 68. 50. E. lat. 39. 30. N.

SAMAROF, a town of Siberia, in the government of Tobolsk; seated on the Irtysh, 135 miles N. of Tobolsk.

SAMATAN, a town of France, department of Gers, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the Save, 6 miles N. by E. of Lombez.

SAMBA, a seaport of Colombia, in the province of Cartagena; 33 miles N.E. of Cartagena. Long. 75. 16. W. lat. 10. 45. N.

SAMBALLAS, a multitude of small uninhabited islands, on the N. shore of the isthmus of Darien. Most of them are low, flat, and sandy, covered with a variety of trees, and abound with several kinds of shell-fish; some few afford springs of fresh water. Long. 73. 25. W. lat. 9. 26. N.

SAMBAU, a town of Borneo, near the W. coast; inhabited by pirates, against whom a British force was sent out in 1812 and 1813, which proved completely successful. In its vicinity diamonds are found. Long. 109. 0. E. lat. 2. 20. N.

SAMBOANGAR, a town and fort belonging to Spain on the west point of Mindanao, one of the Philippine islands. It is a place of punishment for criminals, but is a very lively, pleasant village, surrounded by cocoa-nut trees and fine wooded scenery.

SAMBOR, a town of Austrian Poland, capital of a circle of its name; seated on a large plain, on the Dniester, 46 miles S.W. of Lemberg. Pop. nearly 10,000.

SAMBRE, a river which rises in Picardy; flows by Landreay, Maubege, Thun, and Charleroy, and joins the Meuse at Namur.

SAMISAT, or SOMEISAT, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the sangiaunt of Marasch, on the Euphrates; 30 miles E. of Marasch.

SAMOGITIA, a country in the N.W. of Prussian Lithuania; bounded on the N. by Courland, S. by Russia Proper, and W. by the Baltic. It is full of forests and high mountains, which feed a great number of cattle, and produce abundance of honey. Here are also very active horses, in high esteem. The inhabitants are clownish, but honest; and they will not allow a young woman to go out in the night without a candle in her hand, and two bells at her girdle.

SAMOS, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, on the coast of Natolia; about 32 miles long and 22 broad, and extremely fertile. Pop. 60,000. It contains two ranges of lofty mountains, between which are rich and well cultivated plains, producing abundance of grain, melons, lentils, kidney-beans, and excellent muscadine grapes; also white figs, four times as big as the common sort, but not so well tasted. The silk is very fine, and the honey and wax admirable. The island abounds with partridges, woodcocks, snipes, thrushes, wood-pigeons, turtle-doves, wheatears, and excellent poultry. It has emery, stone, and iron mines, and most of the soil is of a rusty colour. All the mountains are of white marble. Their bishop resides at Khora. The principal harbour is that of Vathi.

persed; some of them are found in small detached bodies among the mountains to the W. of Lake Baikal; others are supposed to be within the Chinese frontiers; others are scattered among the deserts which extend along the Frozen ocean; and some nearly as far to the W. as Archangel. The Samoyedes have a large head, a flat face, high cheek-bones, small eyes, a wide mouth, a yellow complexion, straight black hair, and little or no beard; they still preserve the manners of a pastoral people, and retain the use of moveable habitations, with which they wander from place to place. They neither have, nor appear ever to have had, any kind of regular government. Their traditional songs mention only certain heroes, who, in better times, led their ancestors to battle. These songs form their principal amusements; but the exploits they celebrate are never likely to be renewed.

SAMSOE, an island of Denmark; on the E. coast of N. Jutland; 12 miles long and 3 broad, and very fertile. It has a town of the same name, and the inhabitants carry on some commerce in small vessels. Long. 10. 33. E. lat. 56. 2. N.

SAMSON, St., a town of France, department of Eure, on the Rille; 5 miles N. of Pont Audemer.

SAMSON, St., a town in the department of Maine-et-Loire; 4 miles N. E. of Angers.

SAN, a river of Austrian Poland, which rises in the Carpathian Mountains, in Hungary, and falls into the Vistula near Sandomir. It forms part of the boundary between Austrian Galicia and Russian Poland.

SANA, a city of Arabia, and the capital of Yemen. The city is walled, as is its suburb, and together they are about $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles in circuit. At each end of the city is a castle, but the town is poorly fortified. The streets are narrow, though not so much so as in other Arabian cities. The houses are chiefly of brick, and the palaces of hewn stone. There are about 20 mosques, richly adorned. A part of the city is appropriated to Jews. The public baths are numerous and good. The chief trade of the town is in coffee, the city being in the heart of the Yemen coffee country; other articles are also exported. The climate is too dry to be healthy. It stands near the head of the Ihab river, 4000 feet above the sea; 150 miles N.N.E. of Mecha. Pop. in 1836, 40,000, including 3000 Jews.

SANA, or ZANA, a town of Peru; capital of a province of its name. It is situate in a valley fertile in fruit and corn, and adorned with the most beautiful flowers; whence it has been sometimes called Miraflores. It is 90 miles N. of Truxillo. Long. 78. 30. W. lat. 40. 35. N.

SANASHYGOTTA, a flourishing town of Bengal seated on the Mahanaddy; 165 miles N. of Moorsshedabad.

SANCEBRE, a town of France, department of Cher, seated on a mountain, near the Loire; 22 miles N.W. of Nevers, and 110 N. of Paris.

SANCIAN, an island of China, on the coast of Quang-tong; 40 miles in circumference, famous for being the burying-place of Francis Xavier, whose tomb is to be seen on a small hill.

SANCOINS, a town of France, department of Cher, seated on the Argent; 15 miles S.W. of Nevers.

SANDA, or SANDAY, one of the Orkney islands, about 12 miles in length, but of an irregular form, and seldom above a mile in breadth. It lies N. of that of Stronsay, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. Much kelp is made here in summer, and it feeds many sheep and bees. On the Start Point is a lighthouse. Long. 2. 15. W. lat. 59. 21. N.

SANDA, a small island on the W. coast of Scotland, near the Mull of Cantyre; famed for having been the rendezvous of the Danish fleets during their expeditions to the western coasts. On it are the remains of a chapel, dedicated to St. Columba.

SANDBACIL, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Thursday; formerly famous for the manufacture of worsted yarn, the weaving of stuffs, and shoe-making, which have now given place to the manufacture of silk. It contains an ancient church, several-meeting houses, national and Sunday schools, &c. In the market-place are two stone square crosses, which were replaced in 1816, and their deficient ancient beauties supplied by modern art. It is seated on the Wheelock, and on the Manchester and Birmingham railway; 24 miles E. of Chester, and 162 N.N.W. of London.

SANDEE, New, a town of Austrian Galicia, capital of a circle of its name, which is covered with extensive forests; 44 miles S.W. of Cracow. Pop. 3700. Six miles farther N. is Old Sandee, which is now a small place.

SANDGATE, a chapelry and hamlet, partly in the parish of Folkestone, on the S. coast of Kent. It is a pleasant and much frequented watering place, and has some good modern houses; 15 miles S. by E. of Canterbury, and 2 S.W. of Folkestone.

SANDHAMN, a seaport of Sweden, in the province of Uppland, where all vessels to and from Stockholm are examined; 10 miles E. of Stockholm.

SANDO, an island of Japan, 87 miles in circumference, on the N. coast of Nippon with a town of the same name. Long. 139. 30. E. lat. 38. 35. N.

SANDOMIR, a strong town of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, with a castle on a steep rock, and several colleges. It is seated on a hill, on the Vistula; 75 miles E. by N. of Cracow, and 112 S. by E. of Warsaw. Pop. 2100. Long. 22. 0. E. lat. 50. 21. N.

SANDOMIR, a palatinate of Poland, bounded on one part by the Vistula, on another by the Pilica, and the palatinate of Cracow. It contains, according to the territorial division of 1815, 4700 square miles, with 448,000 inhabitants.

SANDAGAL, a town of Portugal, in Belra; seated on theCoa; 12 m. S.S.E. of Guarda.

SANDUSKY, a town and port of Ohio, on lake Erie. It stands on the South shore of Sandusky bay, fronting its opening into the lake, of which it has a beautiful view. The whole town is built upon an inexhaustible quarry of the finest building stone, which has been largely used in its erection. Its wharves are always thronged with steamers and other vessels, except during the three winter months. It has four fine churches, and about 1200 inhabitants; 110 miles N. of Columbus.

SANDVLIET, a town of Belgium, in the province of Antwerp, seated on the Scheldt; 12 miles N.W. of Antwerp.

SANDWICH, a borough in Kent, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It is one of the cinque-ports, governed by a mayor. It returns two members to parliament. It is walled round, but the walls are greatly decayed, and only one of the gates is standing. Its trade is much diminished, the river Stour, on which it is seated, being so choked up with sand as to admit only small vessels; 13 miles E. of Canterbury, and 68 E. by S. of London. Pop. 3719.

SANDWICH, a town of Massachusetts, in Barnstable county; 18 miles S.E. of Plymouth.

SANDWICH ISLAND, an island in the Pacific ocean, near the W. coast of New Ireland. Long. 149. 17. E. lat. 2. 53. S.

SANDWICH ISLAND, one of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific ocean. Long. 168. 33. E. lat. 17. 41. S.

SANDWICH ISLANDS, a group of islands in the North Pacific; discovered by Cook in 1778. They are eleven in number, extending from 18. 54. to 22. 15. N. lat., and from 150. 54. to 160. 24. W. long. They are called by the natives Hawaii, or Owhyee, Mowee, Ranai, Morotol, Tahoorowa, Woahoo, Atooi, Nechehon, Oueehoua, Morotinnee, and Takooro, all inhabited except the last two. The climate differs little from that of the West Indies in the same latitude; but there are no traces of those violent winds which render the stormy months in the West Indies so dreadful. There is also more rain at the Sandwich isles. The vegetable productions are nearly the same as those of the other islands in this ocean, but the taro root is here of a superior quality. The bread-fruit trees are not in such abundance as in the plains of Otaheite, but produce double the quantity of fruit. The sugar-canes are of a very unusual size, some of them measuring eleven inches in circumference, and having fourteen feet eatable. There is also a root of a brown colour, shaped like a yam, and from 6 to 10 pounds in weight, the juice of which is an excellent substitute for sugar. The quadrupeds are hogs, dogs, and rats. The fowls are of the common sort; the birds beautiful and numerous, though not various. Goats, pigs, and European seeds were left by Captain Cook; but the possession of the goats soon gave rise to a contest between two districts, in which the breed was destroyed. The inhabitants are of the same race with those of the islands S. of the equator, and in their persons, language, and manners, approach nearer to the New Zealanders than to their less distant neighbours, either of the Society or Friendly islands. They are in general above the middle size, and well made; they walk gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearing great fatigue. Many of both sexes have fine open countenances; and the women, in particular, have good eyes and teeth, with an engaging sweetness, and sensibility of look. There is one peculiarity characteristic of every part of the nation, that even in the handsomest faces there is a fulness of the nostril, without any flatness or spreading of the nose. The dress of both men and women nearly resembles those of New Zealand, and both sexes wear necklaces of small variegated shells. Tattooing the body was formerly practised by every colony of this nation. The hands and arms of the women were very neatly marked, and they had the singular custom of tattooing the tip of the tongue. They lived in villages, containing from 100 to 200 houses, built closely together, without any order, and having a winding path between them. Towards the sea they were generally flanked with detached walls, intended both for shelter and defence. Some of the houses were from 40 to 50 feet long, and from 20 to 30 broad; others were mere hovels. The food of the lower class still consists principally of fish and vegetables, to which the people of higher rank add the flesh of hogs and dogs. The making of canoes, mats, &c., form the occupations of the men; the women were employed in manufacturing cloth, and the servants principally engaged in the plantations and fishing. They had various amusements, such as dancing, boxing, wrestling, &c., all of which have now entirely ceased. The bottoms of their canoes are of a single piece of wood, hollowed out to the thickness of an inch, and brought to a point at each end; the sides consist of three boards, each about an inch thick, neatly fitted and lashed to the bottom part. Some of their double canoes measure 70 feet in length, three and a half in depth, and 12 in breadth. The government is monarchical and hereditary. The same system of subordination prevails here as at the other islands—absolute authority on the part of the chiefs, and unresisting submission on the part of the people. So long as idolatry prevailed here, human sacrifices were frequent; not only the commencement of a war, or a single enterprise, but the death of any considerable chief, called for a repetition of these horrid rites. From their intercourse with Christians, they had renounced idolatry before any missionaries were settled among them; and of late years they have made great advances in civilization. other; and in hospitality to strangers they are not exceeded even by the inhabitants of the Friendly Islands. Their natural capacity seems in no respect below the common standard of mankind. It was estimated by the discoverers that these islands contained a population of 400,000; but from the destructive wars between themselves, the effects of disease introduced by foreign shipping, and, till recently, the consequences of infanticide, the present number is not more than 150,000, of which 85,000 occupy Hawaii. They are now increasing in importance, in a mercantile view; and are visited by many vessels trading to China and India, as well as by the sperm whale fishers.

SANDWICH LAND, a desolate country in the Southern ocean, to the S.E. of the island of Georgia. The mountains are of a vast height, their summits wrapped in clouds, and their bases covered with snow to the water's edge. Thule, the southern extremity of Sandwich Land, seen by Cook in 1775, lies in 27. 45 W. long. and 59. 54. S. lat.

SANDY HOOK, a small island on the coast of New Jersey, formerly a peninsula; but in 1778 the sea broke through the isthmus, and formed it into an island, forming the S. side of the entrance to New York harbour. On its N. point are two important lighthouses, 7 miles S. of the W. end of Long Island. Long. 74. 2. W. lat. 40. 30. N.

SANDY LAKE, a lake of North America, about 25 miles in circuit; not far from the source of the Mississippi.

SANDY POINT, a seaport of St. Christopher, West Indies; on the N.W. side of the island, in Figtree bay; defended by two forts. Long. 63. 28. W. lat. 17. 20. N.

SANDY RIVER, a river in the state of Maine, which runs into the Kennebeck; 6 miles above Norridgewock.

SANDY RIVER, BIG, a river which rises in the Laurel mountains, and forms part of the boundary between Virginia and Kentucky. It falls into the Ohio; 140 miles above the Scioto.

SANEN, or GEBENAT, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, with a castle; situate on a river of the same name; 20 miles S.W. of Thun.

SANFORD, a town of the state of Maine, in York county; 15 miles N. of Berwick, and 20 N.N.W. of York. Pop. 2233.

SANGERHAUSEN, a town of Prussian Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle; seated near the Hartz mountains; 14 miles E.S.E. of Stolberg.

SANGUESA, a town of Spain, in Navarre; 32 miles S.E. of Pamplona.

SANORE, a district of Hindostan; lying to the S. of Visiapour, and N. of Mysore. It was ceded to the Maharrattas in 1792.

SANORE, a town and fortress of Hindostan, capital of the above district; seated on the left bank of the Toom, 15 miles before its junction with the Nigouden to form the Tungebadra. On the opposite bank is another town called Sanore Bancapour. It is 103 miles N. by W. of Chitteldrong, and 130 S. by E. of Visiapour.

SANPOO. See BURRAMPOOTER.

SANQUIAR, a burgh of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, with a ruined castle, once the residence of the Crichton family. It has a trade in coal, and manufactures of carpets and cottons. It is seated on the Nith; 27 miles N.W. of Dumfries, and 56 S.W. of Edinburgh. In conjunction with Dumfries, &c., it returns one member to parliament; and is on the Glasgow and Carlisle railway.

SANSANDING, a considerable town in Central Africa, kingdom of Bambarra, on the Niger. It has a great trade, especially in salt. It is 25 miles N.E. of Segou.

SANTAELLA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia; 24 miles S. of Cordova.

SANTANDER, a strong seaport of Spain, in Asturias; capital of a small district of its name, and a bishop's see. The harbour is good, and large enough to contain a numerous fleet; defended by two castles, and a mole that advances into the sea. It is 11 miles N.E. of Santillana. It is the ancient Portus Blendium, and is a thriving place, having risen at the expense of Bilbao. Pop. 18,716. It has little to interest the traveller. The cathedral is the most unimportant in Spain. Long. 3. 47. W. lat. 43. 27. N.

SANTAREM, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a citadel on a mountain; seated on the river Tajo, in a country fertile in wheat, wine, and oil; 55 miles N.E. of Lisbon. Pop. 8000. Long. 8. 20. W. lat. 39. 18. N.

SANTEE, a river of S. Carolina, the largest and longest in that state. It enters the ocean by two mouths, a little S. of Georgetown. About 120 miles from its mouth, it branches into the Congaree and Wateree; the latter, which is the N. branch, passes the Catawaw Indians, and bears the name of Catawaw river, from this settlement to its source.

SANTEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Cleves; seated on the Rhine. It is 15 miles S.E. of Cleves.

SANTIAGO, or SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELLA, a town of Galicia in Spain. It is so named after St. James the Elder, the tutelary saint of Spain, and Compostella (Campus Stellæ) because a star pointed out the place where his body was concealed. Santiago, although much shorn of its former religious and civil dignities, is still the see of an archbishop, with a cathedral, 2 collegiate and 15 parish churches. Its numerous convents were plundered and desecrated in 1809, and since have been suppressed, and now add to the melancholy appearance of this melancholy town. Another blow to its prosperity was the late uncalled for removal of the audiencia and Captain General to La Corunna. It is built on an uneven irregular site, and is very damp, cold, and gloomy-looking, but the situation is very picturesque. The university is much frequented and there are numerous interesting churches, but the cathedral is the grand object of every pilgrim to Compostella. It was commenced in the 9th century, but has been quite altered by subsequent additions. The interior is striking, and dark, and contains the sacred effigy of St. James, a painted and bedecked stone statue, under an immense canopy, in the worst style. The legend of the saint is, that after being beheaded at Jerusalem, the body in A.D. 42, was taken to Joppa and then floated miraculously into the river, some say in its stone coffin, to near the site of the present city, and was as miraculously rediscovered about 800 years after, and the body removed here in 829. Riches poured in from all quarters and a corn rent on the whole of the kingdom was granted to it in 846, which was only abolished in 1835. The ardour for pilgrimage is much diminished, and there are now but few manufactories conducted here, compared with former times. It is 45 miles from Lugo, and 29 from Corunna.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, more frequently called CUBA, a city on the south coast of the island of Cuba. It was founded by Velasquez, and is the capital of the eastern department of the island, the seat of an archbishop and a governor. It contains 9326 whites, 7494 free coloured, and 7933 slaves. Four leagues west of it is the village of Cobre, or Santiago del Prado, containing 2000 inhabitants, chiefly occupied in working the copper mines in the neighbourhood. There are but few British subjects established in the province of Santiago de Cuba, with the exception of those engaged in copper-ore mining, and, indeed, but few foreigners of any nation with the exception of French, who are found in considerable numbers around Santiago. Lat. 19. 57. N. long. 76. 11. W.

SANTIANES, a town of Spain, in Asturias; 17 miles S.S.W. of Oviedo.

SANTILLANA, a town of Spain, seated in a fruitful valley on the river Besaga, near the bay of Biscay. Its chief attractions have been given it by the novel of Gil Blas; 96 miles E. of Oviedo, and 200 N. of Madrid. Long. 3. 58. W. lat. 43. 23. N.

SANTONA, a seaport town of Spain, in Santander. It is the Gibraltar of Calabria, and stands under the Monte, which is severed from the land by the isthmus el Arenal de Berria. The corn of Castile and the iron of Biscay are largely exported from here. The storms off the coast are sometimes terrific, and in 1810 a British squadron was wrecked here. It was regularly fortified by the French; 21 miles from Santander, 31 from Bilbao.

SANTORIN, (the ancient Thera,) an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the S. of Nio. It is in the form of a crescent, 10 miles from N. to S. and from one to four in breadth. Between its two points, to complete the circle, are the small islands of Therasia and Aspronisi; and within these are three other islands, between which and Santorin is a road for ships; but it affords no anchorage, on account of its depth in some places, and rocky bottom in others. All these islands are of volcanic origin, but the three interior ones are evidently of much later date. Santorin, in proportion to its extent, is the richest and most populous island of the Archipelago. There are two bishops; the one Latin, whose see is Scauro, and the other Greek, whose residence is at Pirgos, near the middle of the island. The soil is very dry, and far from fertile; but it produces plenty of barley, cotton, and wine, in which, and the cotton manufactures, its trade consists. Fruit is scarce, except figs, and it has only cistern water. The inhabitants, about 12,000 in number, are almost all Greeks. Scauro is the capital.

SANTROS, a seaport of Brazil, on an island called Amiaz, on the W. side of the entrance into Santos bay. It is defended by a rampart and two castles. The town of S. Vincente stands on the same island, which is 18 miles in circuit. It is 10 miles from the sea, and 190 S.W. of St. Sebastian. Pop. 7000. Long. 46. 30. W. lat. 24. 15. S.

SAONE, a large navigable river of France, which rises in the Vosges mountains, and, after a course of about 200 miles, falls into the Rhone, at Lyons.

SAONE, UPPER, a department of France, including part of the former province of Franche Comté; bounded N. by the department of Vosges, and E. by that of Upper Rhine. It comprises an area of 2500 square miles, with 338,910 inhabitants, in 1836. The capital is Vesoul.

SAONE-ET-LOIRE, a department of France, including part of the former province of Burgundy; bounded by the departments of Jura, Rhone, and Allier, and comprising an area of 3500 square miles, with 524,180 inhabitants in 1836. It is named from two rivers, which flow through it in different directions. Maçon is the capital.

SAGGIO, a town of the Sardinian states, in the county of Nice; situate on the top of a rock, which is nearly enclosed by the Roia and the Bendola. On the opposite side of the Roia is a sharp rock, completely insulated, with an ancient fortress on the summit; and near the town is a strong fort. Saggio was taken by the French in 1794. Population 3100. It is 19 miles N.E. of Nice.

SAPIENZA, three small islands, and a cape, in the Mediterranean, near the S. coast of the Morea. The largest island was formerly called Sphacteria, and is famous in ancient history for a victory obtained by the Athenians over the Lacedemonians. Long. 21. 35. E. lat. 36. 50. N.

SARACENS, a people celebrated some centuries ago, who came from the deserts of Arabia; sarra, (or Sahara) in their language, signifying a desert. They were the first disciples of Mohammed, and within 40 years after his death conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europa. They kept possession of Spain till 1511, when they were expelled. long time they maintained a war in the Holy Land against the Western Christians, and at length drove them out of it. There are now no people known by this name, for the descendants of those who conquered Spain are called Moors.

SARAGOSSA, or ZARAGOZA, a city of Spain, capital of Arragon, and an archbishop's see; with a university. It is said to have been built by the Phœnicians and called Salduba, and the Romans sent a colony hither in the reign of Augustus; whence it had the name of Cæsarea Augusta, which by corruption has been changed into Zaragoza. The Ebro runs through the city, dividing it into two parts; and on its banks is a handsome quay, which serves for a public walk, and over it is a noble bridge built in 1437. Saragossa was captured by the Moors in the 8th century, who here built a mosque, and was recovered from them after a five years' siege, in 1118. It has been the see of an archbishop since 1318. Seen from the outside, with its slender towers and spires, it has an imposing character, but inside the streets are mostly tortuous lanes, ill paved and worse lighted. The houses are indeed castles, being built of solid masonry, but, as the town has been sacrificed for Madrid, the mansions of its nobility are either dilapidated or let to servile purposes. In some parts, the din, dirt, stench, and obstructions are almost intolerable. It has two cathedrals, at each of which the chapter reside for six months alternately. The one is an ancient severe church, dedicated to the Saviour; and the other is a renovated and unfinished edifice in bad taste, and called Nuestra Senora del Pilar, and a place of the greatest devotion in Spain. They tell us that the Virgin, while yet living, appeared to St. James, who was preaching the gospel, and left him her image, with a handsome pillar of jasper. This image stands on a marble pillar, with a little Jesus in her arms, ornamented with a profusion of gold and jewels. The chief street is called El Coso, and contains some fine houses. There are several fine churches, and an octangular clock tower, built in 1504, which leans considerably out of the perpendicular. The noble university and library was destroyed by the invaders, but is partly reconstructed. The grand hospital is one of the largest in Spain. There is also a Casa de Misericordia, a sort of hospital and poorhouse. The city gates are interesting. At the N.W. one, the Portilla, Agustina the maid of Saragossa fired at the French. Outside the Portilla is the Aljaferia, the old irregular Moorish citadel. The Arragon canal, which was to have connected the Atlantic with the Mediterranean, only connects Saragossa with Tudela. It was commenced in 1546, and stopped in 1770. Saragossa has no manufactures, and but little trade. It is seated in a large plain, (where the Ebro receives two other rivers,) which produces all kinds of fruit in great abundance.

A victory was obtained here over the French and Spaniards in 1710, but it was abandoned by the allies soon after. Saragossa is also celebrated for the brave defence it made under General Palafox, when besieged by the French, in 1808-9. It is 150 miles W. by N. of Barcelona, and 180 N.E. of Madrid. Pop. 65,000.

SARANSK, a town of Russia in Europe, government of Penza, on the Saranga. Most of its houses are of wood; it has two cathedrals, and numerous churches. The manufactures are various, and it has an annual fair. Pop. 8750; 70 miles N. by E. of Penza.

SARATOF, a government of Russia, lying along both sides of the Wolga, and having, on one side, the country of Astracan, and on the other, that of the Don Cossacks. The extent is estimated at 73,600 square miles, with a population in 1838, 1,564,400. The Volga intersects it from N. to S. It is divided into 12 districts, of which that of the same name is the principal.

SARATOF, the capital of the above government, is surrounded by a wall, and is neatly built, chiefly of wood. The inhabitants have been estimated, including military, at 35,000. It is seated on the side of a mountain near the Volga; 374 miles N. by W. of Astracan. It consists of an upper and lower town, but is not regularly laid out. It has some good houses, and a new and handsome archbishop's palace erected since 1833. There are several churches, a large bazaar, a gymnasium, and an ecclesiastical seminary. The inhabitants manufacture cottons, cloaks, and watches, leather, &c., and the town has a great trade.

SARAWAK. See BORNEO.

SARATOGA, a town of New York, in a county of the same name, memorable for the surrender of an army of British and Hessians, under General Burgoyne, to the Americans, in 1777. It is now the principal summer resort of the fashionable, for its mineral springs, the principal of which are the Saratoga and Ballston Spas. It may be called the American Cheltenham. The permanent population is about 2500. It stands on the E. side of Hudson river; 31 miles N. of Albany.

SARBRUCK, a town of Germany, capital of a county of its name, with a handsome palace, and a magnificent Lutheran church. It is seated on the W. side of the Sarre; 14 miles W. of Deux Ponts. Long. 7. 5. E. lat. 49. 16. N.

SARBUIG, a town of France, department of Meurthe; 40 miles E. by N. of Nancy.

SARDAM, or SAARDAM, a town of the Netherlands, in North Holland, where there are vast magazines of timber for ships and naval stores, and a great number of shipwrights. In this town Peter the Great resided for some time, and worked as a shipwright. It is seated on the Y, 7 miles N.W. of Amsterdam.

SARDINIA, a province, recently a kingdom, of Northern Italy; it used to contain the island of Sardinia, Piedmont, Savoy, the county of Nice, the duchy of Montferrat, part of that of Milan, and the territory of Genoa. Nice and Savoy have been ceded to France, and the rest is now embodied in the kingdom of Italy. Popery is the religion of the royal family and the state. The reigning family is descended from the ancient counts of Savoy, whose dominions became progressively extended by purchase, conquest, and donation. In the war of the French Revolution, in 1792, the Sardinians were aided by Austrian troops and a British subsidy; but, on Bonaparte assuming the command, the allied forces were speedily overthrown, all the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia were seized and incorporated with the French territory, and afterwards parcelled out anew into departments of the French empire. The changes of 1814 reinstated the king of Sardinia in all his continental dominions, except the duchy of Savoy; and in 1815 this also was restored, and the Genoese territory added to the kingdom. The total area comprises 27,000 square miles, and a population of 4,092,000. For an account of soil, agriculture, commerce, &c., see the several divisions of the country, and Appendix.

SARDINIA, an island in the Mediterranean, 160 miles from N. to S., and 70 from E. to W.; separated from Corsica on the N. by the strait of Bonifacio. This island has been neglected by the government; for, exclusive of the mountains, the chief part of the country may be regarded as waste, but where cultivated it is fertile in corn, wine, oranges, citrons, and olives. The frequent wastes abound with wild ducks, but the cattle and sheep are not numerous, and the morasses yield pernicious exhalations. On the coast is a fishery for anchovies and coral. Since 1836, however, a great change for the better has been made. The tenure of lands has been made secure, and all feudal customs abolished. Under these influences, this fine island produced but a small portion of what it is capable of doing. Its agriculture is exceedingly rude and primitive, and a large portion of the cultivable land is comparatively unproductive. The towns and villages are large and well situated, but meanly built and disfigured by dirt. It has valuable ores of silver, copper, lead, and iron, but the mining regulations preclude their being profitably worked. Salt, gunpowder, and tobacco, are royal monopolies; other branches of commerce and manufacture are inconsiderable. There were no good roads until those formed within these few years between Cagliari and Sassari, with some cross roads branching from it. All means of transit were therefore very rude. Sardinia is governed by a viceroy, and has a parliament consisting of three chambers, the ecclesiastical, the military comprising the nobles, and the royal chamber comprising deputies from the town. The island is subdivided into the divisions of Cagliari and Sas-sari, and these into 10 provinces, 32 districts and 368 communes. No religion but the Roman Catholic is tolerated. Public education has been much improved of late years, and the consequent improvement of the public morals. The language of the Sardis is a dialect of the Italian nearly approaching the Latin. This island has undergone various revolutions: in 1708 it was taken from the Spaniards by the English, and allotted to the emperor of Germany at the peace of Utrecht. The Spaniards recovered it in 1717, but were obliged to abandon it two years after; and in 1720 it was ceded to the duke of Savoy, as an equivalent for Sicily. In 1794 the inhabitants rose against their Piedmontese rulers, and caused the viceroy and others to be sent out of the island; but he was afterwards received, on the king pledging himself to assemble the cortes every ten years, and confirming all the ancient laws and privileges of the inhabitants. Area, 9250 square miles. Pop. in 1838, 524,633. Cagliari is the capital.

SARECO, a town of North Carolina chief of Dublin county; 80 miles N. of Wilmington.

SAREPTA, a town of European Russia, on the frontiers of the government of Saratoff. It was founded in 1765 by a colony of Heralters in Moravia, and is well built, clean, and fortified against the nomadic neighbouring tribes. It stands on the Sarpa, near its confluence with the Volga. Pop. above 3000.

SARGANS, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, with a castle on a rock. Near the town are mineral springs and a productive iron mine. It stands on the summit of a hill, near the Rhine; 14 miles N. of Coire, and 47 S.E. of Zurich.

SARGEL, a seaport of Algier, in the province of Mascara, with a castle. Near this town Andrew Doria was defeated by Barbarossa. It is 25 miles S.S.W. of Algier. Long. 2. 15. E. lat. 36. 30. N.

SARQUEMINES, a town of France, department of Moselle. It was formerly one of the strongest towns in Lorraine, when it was called Guenmond, but no portion of its fortifications remains but its ruined citadel. The ancient Capuchin convent is now used for public purposes. It has manufactures of cotton, earthenware of a superior quality, and has considerable trade in papier mache snuff boxes, made in the surrounding country; 41 miles E. by N. of Metz. Pop. in 1836, 4113.

SARI, a town of Persia, capital of Mazanderan, the residence of one of the Persian princes, situate in a country abounding in rice, oranges, cotton, sugar, and silk. It is a very ancient city, and prior to 1836 is said to have had 30,000 to 40,000 inhabitants, but about that time was nearly depopulated by the plague. It is frequently mentioned by the poet Ferdousi; 25 miles S.W. of Ferabad.

SARLAT, a town of France, department of Dordogne; 27 miles S.E. of Perigueux.

SARLOUIS, a strong town in the department of Moselle, seated on the isthmus of a peninsula formed by the river Sarre; 32 miles N.E. of Metz.

SARNEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Underwalden, near a lake to which it gives name. It is 9 miles S. of Lucerne. Pop. 2000. Long. 8. 14. E. lat. 46. 52. N.

SARNO, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra; seated near the source of a river of its name; 12 miles N.N.W. of Salerno, and 20 E.S.E. of Naples. It is celebrated for the desperate battle in 553, in which the Gothic kingdom in Italy was overthrown by the defeat of Teias by the troops of Justinian under Narses. Pop. 12,000.

SAROS, a strong castle of Hungary, in a county of the same name; seated on the Tariza, at the foot of Mount Krapach; 5 miles N.N.W. of Eperies.

SARP, or SARPEN, a town of Norway, in the province of Christiansand. Near it is a great cataract, the noise of which may be heard at the distance of 20 miles. It is 10 miles W.S.W. of Frederickstadt.

SARREAL, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, near which are quarries of alabaster, so transparent that it is used for windows. It is seated on the Francoli; 11 miles N. of Tarragona.

SARSANA, a town of the Sardinian states, in Genoa, with a fortress, and near it is a fort in the mountains, called Sarsanello. It stands on the river Magra, 5 miles from its mouth, and 45 E.S.E. of Genoa. Pop. 3500. Long. 9. 58. E. lat. 44. 9. N.

SARSINA, a town of Italy, in Romagna; on the river Savio. It is 21 miles W.S.W. of Rimini.

SART, a town of Asia Minor. It was the ancient Sardis, capital of Lydia, and, under the Romans, was a large city, but was almost destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Tiberius. Here are many remains of massive buildings, a mosque (which was formerly a Christian church), and a large caravanserai. The inhabitants are chiefly shepherds, who feed their flocks in the adjacent plains. It is 35 miles E.N.E. of Smyrna.

SARTE, or SARTHE, a department of France, including part of the ancient province of Maine, and containing an area of 2400 square miles, with 457,372 inhabitants, in 1836. The climate is mild and salubrious, and the soil in general fertile. The manufactures are hardware, woollens, paper, leather, &c. It takes its name from a river which flows by Mans to Angers, where it joins the Mayenne. The capital is Le Mans.

SARVAR, a town and fortress of Hungary, at the conflux of the Guntz with the Raab; 40 miles S.S.E. of Presburg.

SARUM, OLD, Wiltshire, now without a single house, and scarcely any thing remains to indicate its former importance, though it formerly sent two members to parliament. It is 2 miles N. of New Sarum, or Salisbury.

SARUN, an extensive district of Hindostan, in the province of Bahar, one of the most prosperous in the British territories. It is situated on the N. side of the Ganges, in lat. 26. N. Area, 5760 square miles. Pop. in 1822, 1,464,075.

SAUWERDEN, a town of France, department of Moselle; seated on the Sarre, 33 miles W.N.W. of Haguenau, and 45 E.N.E. of Nancy.

SAS VAN GHENT, a town and fortress of the Netherlands, in Flanders, situated on the canal from Ghent to the river Scheldt, and fortified with sluices, by means of which the country can be laid under water. It was built by the inhabitants of Ghent as a bulwark to that city, but was taken in 1664 by the Dutch, from whom the French took it in 1747, and again in 1794. It is 10 miles N. of Ghent, on the borders of Belgium.

SASKATCHAWINE, a large river of North America, rising in the Rocky mountains. The two principal streams unite about 60 miles E. of Hudson's house, after which it flows into lake Winnepeg, in lat. 51. 45. N.

SASCRAM, a town of Hindostan, in Bahar; seated at the foot of a mountain, near a lake, 64 m. S.E. of Benares, and 88 S.W. of Patna.

SASSARI, a city of the island of Sardinia, and an archbishop's see, with a castle and a university. Here is a fountain called Rosello, said to be more magnificent than the best at Rome; and in the neighbourhood are mines of gold and silver. It is seated on the river Torres, 6 miles from the sea, and 64 N. of Oristagni. Its port, Torres, 10 miles distant, can only accommodate small vessels. Agriculture is better conducted here than in other parts of this island, and it has considerable trade. Pop. in 1838, 24,408. Long. 8. 35. E. lat. 39. 20. N.

SASSBACH, or SALTZBACH, a village of the grand duchy of Baden, 17 miles E.N.E. of Strasburg. It has a great historical interest from being the place where Marshal Turenne was killed by a random shot, July 27th, 1675. A monument marks the spot, but his remains now lie in the church of the Invalids at Paris.

SASSUOLO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena, with a place, seated on the Secchia; 10 miles S.W. of Modena. Pop. 3100.

SATALIA, or ADALIA, a strong seaport of Asia Minor, in Karamania. It is divided into three towns, and is so situated, that from the harbour the streets appear to rise behind each other like an amphitheatre. The country around is very fertile, and the citrons and oranges are extremely fine. The chief trade is in wool, cotton, goats' hair, agarie, tragacanth, opium, and bees'-wax. It is seated on a gulf of the Mediterranean, to which it gives name; 150 miles S.W. of Konieh. Pop. 8000. Long. 31. 21. E. lat. 37. 1. N.

SAGOONG, or SATAGONG, a village of Bengal, formerly an important city, in which the European traders in Bengal had their factories. It is seated on a creek of Hoogly river, 4 miles N.W. of Hoogly.

SATHMAR, a town of Hungary, on the Szamos river, consisting of two towns on the opposite sides of the river Sathmar on the N., and Nemethi on the S. The principal trade is in wine; and in the neighbourhood are salt mines; 225 miles E. of Presburg. Pop. 10,000.

SATIMANGALAM, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a large stone fort, and a considerable temple. It has manufactures of cotton cloths, and a great trade to Seringapatam. In its vicinity the troops of Tippoo Sultan maintained a severe conflict with the British. It is 30 miles W. of Bhanikudal, and 75 S.S.E. of Seringapatam.

SATRIANO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra; 8 miles S. of Squillace.

SATTARAH, a town and fort of Hindostan, in the province of Bejapoor. The fort stands on a scarpd hill, at the foot of which is the town, built of mud or unburnt bricks, but comprising no edifice of note except a new palace, built within the last 30 years. The fort was taken by the British in 1818, when the rajah was invested with a limited authority over a portion of the dominions of his ancestors. The Sattarah territories then comprised about 8000 square miles, and a population of $1\frac{1}{2}$ million. The government was a good example of native management. The state was subsidiary to the British until 1839, when the rajah, having been detected in a conspiracy against the British authority, was dethroned, and his dominions amalgamated with those of the British. This event has occasioned much discussion and animadversion. It is situated near the source of the Kistnah; 60 miles S.S.E. of Poonah, and 77 W. of Visiapor. Long. 74. 12. E. lat. 17. 42. N.

SATTEGALA, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a fort of considerable size. It stands near the Cavery, which, 3 miles below, forms an island 9 miles in length, with noble cataracts on each side. It is 36 miles S.E. of Seringapatam.

SZUCUDA, a town of Mexico, in New Biscay, on a river of the same name, which joins the Nassas, to form the Palmas. It is 100 miles N.N.W. of Durango. Long. 105. 36. W. lat. 25. 18. N.

SAUGUR ISLAND, an island of Hindostan, well known as a place of pilgrimage. The temple of Kapila Muni, on the S. coast of Gunga Saugur, is under the alternate charge of a Byragee and Sunyasee, who levy a tax of 4 annas on each person visiting the temple, the amount of which is divided among five different establishments of Ramanandi Byra-gees in the vicinity of Calcutta. In 1802, during the administration of the Marquis Wellesley, the horrid practice of infanticide was abolished on this island. It is seated at the mouth of the Hoogly river, 100 miles from Calcutta, to which it is intended to be connected by a railway.

SAULGEN, or SAULGAY, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg; 5 miles S.W. of Buchau.

SAULIEU, a town of France, department of Côte d'Or, noted as the birthplace of the celebrated Vauban. Here was anciently a college of the Druids, and in a wood where they performed their sacrifices the ruins of a druidical temple are still visible. It is seated on an eminence, 38 miles W. of Dijon, and 46 S.E. of Auxerre. Pop. 3000.

SAUMUR, a town in the department of Maine-et-Loire, with an ancient castle, and manufactures of woollen, linen, and leather, and some trade in wine and brandy. Here is a famous bridge over the Loire, consisting of 12 elliptical arches, each 60 feet in diameter. Pop. in 1836, 11,576. It is 27 miles S.E. of Angers, and 38 W.S.W. of Tonra.

SAUNDER'S ISLAND, one of the Society Islands, in the South Pacific, called by the natives Tapooamanoo. It is about 6 miles long, and has in the centre a mountain of considerable height. Long. 150. 40. W. lat. 17. 30. S.

SAURUNGPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malwa; 42 miles N.N.E. of Indore, and 43 N.E. of Ougein.

SAUVE, a town of France, department of Gard, on the Vidouire; 12 miles S.W. of Alais.

SAUVETERRE, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, with an old ruined castle; seated on the Gave d'Oleron, 20 miles W.N. W. of Pau.

SAUVETERRE, a town in the department of Aveiron; 15 miles S.W. of Rodez.

SAUVETERRE, a town in the department of Gironde; 26 miles S.E. of Bordeaux.

SAVA, a town of Persia, in Irak, surrounded by walls of earth. The environs produce exquisite fruits, particularly pomegranates and almonds, and a considerable quantity of rice and cotton. It is 60 miles S. of Casbin, and 110 E. of Amadan. Long. 52. 15. E. lat. 34. 30. N.

SAVAGE ISLE, an island in the South Pacific, about 35 miles in circumference, discovered by Cook in 1774. It received this name from the rude and inhospitable behaviour of the inhabitants, who were stout well-made men, naked except round the waists; some of them had their face, breast, and thighs painted. It is of a round form, and covered with trees, shrubs, &c. Long. 169. 30. W. lat. 19. 2. S.

SAVANNA, a river of the United States, which separates Georgia from South Carolina. It is navigable for boats of 100 feet keel, from Augusta to Savanna, and thence for large vessels to its entrance into the Atlantic ocean, at Tybe island.

SAVE, (German, SAU), a river of the Austrian empire, which has its source on the N.W. confines of Carniola, runs E. through that country, separates Slavonia from Croatia, Bosnia, and Servia, and joins the Danube near Belgrade.

SAVENAY, a town of France, department of Lower Loire; 18 miles N.W. of Nantes.

SAVENDROOG, or SEVERNDROOG, a strong fortress of Hindostan, in Mysore, situate on the top of a vast rock, rising half a mile in perpendicular height, from a base of above 8 miles in circumference, and divided at the summit by a chasm that forms it into two hills; these, having each its particular defences, serve as two citadels, capable of being maintained, independently of the lower works, which are also wonderfully strong. Notwithstanding this, it was taken by the English, in 1791, after a siege of seven days; 85 miles N.E. of Seringapatam.

SAVERDUN, a town of France, department of Arriège, with a castle; seated on the Arriège, 25 miles S.S.E. of Toulouse. Pop. 3000.

SAVERNE, a town in the department of Lower Rhine, seated at the foot of Mount Vosges, in a country which produces plenty of wine; 20 miles W.N.W. of Strasburg. Pop. in 1836, 5118.

SAVIGLIANO, a town of the Sardinian states in Piedmont, with a rich Benedictine abbey. Here the French were repulsed in 1799 by the Austrians. It is seated in a fertile plain, on the river Maira, 30 miles S. of Turin.

SAVOLAX, a district of the Russian empire, in the province of Finland, 200 miles long, and 100 broad; consisting mostly of woods, lakes, rivers, and morasses, and abounding in elks and reindeer. The inhabitants are thinly dispersed, and subsist by cultivating buck-wheat, breeding cattle, hunting, fishing, and making wooden ware. Kuopis is the capital.

SAVONA, a strong town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, with a citadel on a rock, and several fine churches. The Genoese, fearing that it would hurt their trade, ruined the harbour, and rendered it unfit for large vessels. It was taken by the king of Sardinia in 1746, restored to the republic of Genoa in 1748, and taken in 1795 by the French, who surrendered it to the Austrians in 1800, through famine. In 1810 and 1811 it was the residence of the Pope, during his dispute with Bonaparte. By the congress of Vienna it was ceded, with the whole Genoese territory, to the king of Sardinia. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 24 miles W.S.W. of Genoa. Pop. in 1838, 16,211. Long. 8. 20. E. lat. 44. 18. N.

SAVONIERS, a town of France, department of Indre-et-Loire, near which are caverns, famous for their petrifications; 8 miles S.W. of Tours.

SAVOY, a duchy of Europe, ceded by Sardinia to France in 1860; 85 miles long, and 67 broad, bounded on the N. by the lake of Geneva, which separates it from Switzerland; E. by the Alps, which divide it from Vallais and Piedmont; S. by the latter and France; and W. by France. The air is cold, on account of high mountains, which are almost always covered with snow; but the valleys are fertile in corn and wine, and many of the mountains abound with pastures that feed a great number of cattle. The principal rivers are the Isere, Arc, and Arve. The Savoyards, from the nature of their country, are generally very poor, and great numbers of them seek a livelihood in France, England, and other countries, in quality of showmen, &c. The French subdued this country in 1792, and made it a department of France, by the name of Mont Blanc, which was confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris in 1814; but in 1815 it was restored to Sardinia, with the exception of a small district (the commune of St. Julian) ceded to the Swiss canton of Geneva. Chambery is the capital.

SAVU, an island in the Indian ocean, to which the Dutch have a kind of exclusive trade, having entered into an agreement with the rajahs that their subjects shall trade with no other ships. It is 26 miles in length, and very fertile. Pop. 5000. Long. 122. 30. E. lat. 10. 35. S.

SAX, a town and district of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, with a castle; 16 miles S. of Rheineck. Pop. 3000.

SAXENBURG, a town of the Austrian states, in Carinthia, near which are three forts and a strong pass. It is situate on the Drave, 38 miles W. of Clagenfurt. Long. 13. 12. E. lat. 46. 44. N.

SAXMUNDHAM, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Thursday, seated on a hill, 20 miles N.E. of Ipswich, and 89 of London.

SAXONY, in its most comprehensive sense, denotes a vast tract of country in the N. of Germany, extending from the Weser on the W. to the frontier of Poland on the E., but in consequence of the territorial changes to which it has been subject, the name has been used with great latitude of signification. The division of Germany into circles took place towards the close of the 15th century, and the large tract of country known vaguely by the name of Saxony was formed into three circles, Westphalia, Upper Saxony, and Lower Saxony. Upper Saxony comprised the electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg, the duchy of Pomerania, and a number of small principalities, forming an extent of about 43,000 square miles, with nearly 4,000,000 of inhabitants. It was bounded E. by Poland, Silesia, and Lusatia, and S. by Bohemia and Franconia. Lower Saxony was bounded N. by the duchy of Sleswick and the Baltic, and W. by Westphalia and the Rhine. It comprised the electorate of Hanover, the duchies of Brunswick, Mecklenburg, and Holstein, the free towns of Hamburg, Bremen, and Lubeck, with a number of small states, forming an extent of 26,000 square miles. In 1806 the distinction of circles was finally abolished, and the names of Upper and Lower Saxony are now of use only for the elucidation of history.

SAXONY, a modern kingdom of Europe, situate towards the N.E. of Germany, and bounded S. by Bohemia, and N. by the Prussian states. Its area is 4,349 sq. miles. Pop. 1,836,433; previously to 1814 it was of much greater extent, having been greatly reduced by the congress of Vienna. No part of Europe, in the same latitude, enjoys a milder climate. The mountainous districts in the S. contain extensive forests, which are kept up with care, as the chief supply of fuel for the mines. In the southern and mountainous parts of Saxony the valleys only are well cultivated, but in the level districts in the N., particularly the circles of Meissen and Leipsic, tillage is general: the products are wheat, barley, oats, and other grain; also some tobacco and hops. Hogs and sheep are very numerous, and the greatest care has been bestowed on the Merino rams, first imported about 1768. Few countries equal Saxony in mineral riches, and in none has this department of natural history been more fully described. The principal are silver, iron, copper, lead, limestone, coal, arsenic, cobalt, antimony, zinc, alum, &c. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the two Elsters, the two Muldas, and the Queiss. The manufactures are of considerable extent, and consist principally of linen, cotton, silk, and leather. The machinery used, though inferior to the English, has of late years been much improved. The position of Saxony is not favourable for commercial intercourse. The exports consist of wool (which has long been considered the best in Germany), minerals, linen, yarn, woollens, and lace. The imports are silk, flax, cotton, coffee, sugar, wine, and, in certain seasons, corn. A great majority of the inhabitants are Lutherans, but the reigning family have been Catholics since 1697. The institutions for education are numerous and well conducted, and the lower classes are generally taught to read and write. In no country of equal extent is the number of printing and book establishments so great. Of the universities, Halle now belongs to Prussia, but Leipsic remains to Saxony, and retains all its former reputation. Saxony was for many centuries an electorate, but in consequence of the occupancy of Prussia by Bonaparte in 1806, it was formed into a kingdom. This change of title was not, however, accompanied by any extension of prerogative, the sovereign continuing to share the legislative functions with the states, and imposing no tax without their concurrence. The states are divided into two houses—viz, the prelates and nobles in one, and the country gentry and deputies of the towns in the other. The higher offices of administration are intrusted to a cabinet council, a board of finance, a military board, a high court of appeal for judicial questions, and an upper consistory for ecclesiastical. The country is divided into the circles of Meissen, Leipsic, Erzgebirge, and Voigtland, with part of Merseburg, and Upper Lusatia. Each circle has a court of justice, and offices for the transaction of provincial business; and the peasantry are here in the enjoyment of complete personal freedom. The king, as a member of the Germanic confederation, has the fourth rank in the smaller and four votes at the larger assembly. The army amounts to 12,000 men; the revenue exceeds 1,000,000*l.* sterling; and the national debt is 3,700,000*l.* The Saxons are first mentioned in history by Ptolemy, who describes them about the year 160 as a rude tribe, inhabiting Holstein and part of Jutland. Soon after, they appear to have advanced to the S. and W., acquiring an extension of territory. In the 5th century, on the migration of a part of the Franks into Gaul, the Saxons acquired a further extension of territory—viz, the country now forming the grand duchy of Oldenburg, with part of Hanover and Prussian Westphalia. When the Britons were forsaken by their Roman defenders, they applied and obtained assistance from the Saxons against the Scots and Picts. After maintaining, during many years, a firm resistance to the arms of Charlemagne, the Saxons were at last obliged to submit to his conditions, which involved the payment of an annual tribute and their conversion to Christianity. The title of Duke of Saxony was conferred on Wittkind, their chief, whose family, after ruling some time, was succeeded by that of Billung, and afterwards by a branch of that of Guelf, which ruled in Bavaria. The electoral dignity was subsequently conferred on the Witttemberg line of the House of Ascania, and, on its extinction, on the Margraves of Meissen, with the title of elector. The first elector, surnamed Frederick the Warlike, began his reign in 1422; he was the founder of the university of Leipsic. The next memorable event in the history of Saxony was the reformation, in the beginning of the 16th century. The prince did not openly espouse the cause of Luther, but by protecting him from persecution, he contributed much to the establishment of his doctrines. His successor, John Frederick, styled "the magnanimous," being defeated by Charles V., was stripped of his states and dignity, which the Emperor conferred on Maurice, margrave of Meissen, the cousin of the elector, and the ancestor of the present house of Saxony. Maurice, putting himself at the head of the Protestant interest, proved a full match for the artful Charles, who, in 1552, had almost fallen into his hands, and was compelled to sign the convention of Passau, since considered the bulwark of the religious freedom of Germany. The Saxons took an active part in the thirty years' war, which terminated in the peace of Westphalia, in 1648. In 1697 the temptation of the crown of Poland, vacant by the death of Sobieski, induced the reigning elector, Augustus I., to profess himself a Catholic, a change which, however, did not prosper. The Swedes, under Charles XII., not only conquered Poland, but invaded Saxony, bringing great distress upon the country, until 1708, when relief was obtained by the march of Charles into Russia, and its disastrous issue; after which the crown of Poland was resumed by Augustus. In the war of 1740, between Prussia and Austria, Saxony remained neutral. In that of 1756, the elector was tempted to take a part by the flattering promises of Austria; but, instead of an accession of territory, his dominions were ravaged, and many of his subjects ruined in this dreadful contest. In the war against France no decided part was taken by Saxony, until 1806, when the elector sent all his troops to the field, in support of the King of Prussia, whose subsequent overthrow enabled Bonaparte to attach the Saxons to his cause. The title of elector was changed to that of king. Prussian Poland was afterwards added to the Saxon dominions, and in 1809 was nearly doubled by cessions obtained from Austria. But these acquisitions, disproportioned to the inherent strength of Saxony, led, as formerly, to disastrous results. The Russians re-occupied Poland in the beginning of 1813, and, joined by the Prussians, made Saxony the scene of the great continental struggle against Bonaparte. The battles of Lutzen and Bautzen, the attacks on Dresden, and the decisive engagements at Leipsic, were followed by the retreat of Bonaparte to the Rhine, and his too faithful ally, the king of Saxony, was deprived of the government of his territories. By the decision of the congress of Vienna, the northern and eastern part, containing no fewer than 850,000 inhabitants.

was separated from the kingdom, and transferred to Prussia. The king of Saxony protested against this dismemberment, but, dreading insurrection and bloodshed, he at length acquiesced. Dresden is the capital.

SAXONY, a province of the Prussian states; comprising almost the whole of the cessions made by the king of Saxony at the congress of Vienna, and the principalities lying to the N. of the duchy of Anhalt, and to the W. of the rivers Elbe and Havel. It contains an area of 9765 square miles, with, in 1844, 1,781,297 inhabitants, and is divided into the regencies of Magdeburg, Merseburg, and Erfurt. The surface is in general level; but the soil varies greatly, being in some places dry and sandy, and in others a heavy loam. The principal productions are corn, hemp, flax, and chicory. The inhabitants, except in the small district called Eichsfeld, are almost all Protestants, and are in general active and industrious. Magdeburg is the chief town. See Appendix.

SAXTON'S RIVER, a river in the state of Vermont, which joins the Connecticut at Westminster.

SAYBROOK, a town of Connecticut, in Middlesex county. It is the most ancient in the state, and situate near the mouth of Connecticut river; 18 miles W. by S. of New London. Pop. 3417. Long. 72. 25. W. lat. 41. 20. N.

SAYCOCK, one of the islands of Japan; divided from Nippon by a narrow channel. The Dutch factors are permitted to reside in the little island of Disnig, which is on the W. side of this. Long. 132. 28. E. lat. 34. 0. N.

SAYN, a town and castle of the Prussian state, in the duchy of Nassau, which gives name to a small county. It is 6 miles N. of Coblenz, and 50 N.W. of Frankfort.

SCARBOROUGH, a seaport and borough in N. Yorkshire. It has a market on Thursday, and sends two members to parliament. It is seated on the declivity of a high rock, which has such craggy sides that it is almost inaccessible. On the top of this rock is a large green plain, with a little well of fresh water, and the remains of a castle, built by Henry II. This town is greatly frequented on account of its mineral waters, and also for sea-bathing, on which account it is much improved in the number and beauty of its buildings. The new buildings on the cliff stand almost unrivalled in extent of prospect, having in front a beautiful terrace, elevated nearly 100 feet above the level of the sands. Amongst other improvements are the formation of a reservoir, covered with a dome, capable of containing 4000 hogsheads of water, for the supply of the town; and the erection of an elegant iron bridge over the wide chasm through which the stream called the Millbeck flows, and connecting two lofty dis-severed cliffs. Scarborough had formerly four churches, all of which are now demolished, except St. Mary's, and even this has sustained considerable injury. A new church has been erected; and here are meeting-houses for Independents, Baptists, Catholics, Quakers, and Methodists, a free grammar-school, a Lancasterian school, several hospitals, almshouses, and other charitable institutions. The harbour has a commodious quay, and a strong battery. It is 40 miles N.E. of York, and 216 N. of London. It is connected with the North Eastern railway. Long. 0. 23. W. lat. 54. 17. N.

SCARBOROUGH, a town and fort on the S. E. side of the island of Tobago. It was taken by the English in 1793. Long. 60. 30. W. lat. 11. 6. N.

SCARDONA, a town of Austrian Dalmatia, and a bishop's see, seated on the Cherca; 8 miles N. of Sebenico. Long. 17. 1. E. lat. 44. 29. N.

SCARLINO, a town of Tuscany, with a castle, seated on the sea coast; 7 miles S. of Massa.

SCARPANTO, an island in the Mediterranean; 18 miles long, and 6 broad; lying S.W. of Rhodes. It is mountainous and rocky, abounds in cattle and game, and has quarries of marble. The principal town on the W. coast has a good harbour. Long. 27. 40. E. lat. 35. 45. N.

SCARPE, a river of France, which rises near Aubigny, in the department of Pas de Calais, passes by Arras, Douay, and St. Amand, and enters the Scheldt at Mortagne.

SCARPERIA, a town of Tuscany, celebrated for its steel manufactures; seated at the foot of the Apennines; 13 miles N. of Florence.

SCAURO, the capital of the island of Santorin, and the see of a Latin bishop. It stands on a lofty volcanic rock, which projects into the roadstead, on the W. coast of the island. Long. 25. 26. E. lat. 16. 28. N.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, a canton of Switzerland; 15 miles long, and 10 broad, with, in 1837, 31,125 inhabitants. The reformation was introduced here in 1529, and the religion is Calvinism. The principal article of trade is wine, and the manufactures are inconsiderable.

SCHAFFHAUSEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of the above canton, is seated on the Rhine, and owes its origin to the interruption of the navigation of that river by the cataract at Lauffen; huts being at first constructed for the convenience of unloading the merchandise from the boats, which by degrees increased to a large town. Though a frontier town, it has no garrison, and the fortifications are weak. The Rhine, which is here nearly 400 feet wide, is crossed by a kind of hanging bridge; the road not passing over the arch, but being suspended from it, and almost level. It was burnt by the French, when they evacuated the town after being defeated by the Austrians in 1799, but has since been rebuilt, nearly in the same state as before. It is 22 m. N. by E. of Zurich, and 39 E. of Basel. Pop. 7500. Long. 3. 41. E. lat. 47. 39. N.

SCHALHOLT, or SKALHOLT, a town of Ireland, and a bishop's see, with a college. Long. 22. 20. W. lat. 64. 40. N.

SCHAMACHI, a town of Caucasia, capital of Schirvan. It was formerly very large, but is now decayed, above 6000 houses having been thrown down by an earthquake. It stands in a valley, between two mountains; 24 miles W. of the Caspian sea, and 250 N. E. of Tauris. Long. 51. 5. E. lat. 40. 50. N.

SCHARDING, a town of Bavaria, with a fortified castle, seated on the Inn; 7 miles S. of Passau.

SCHARNITZ, a fortified town of Germany, in Tyrol, which defends a pass over the mountains, of considerable importance. It surrendered to the French and Bavarians in 1805. It stands on the confines of Bavaria; 12 miles N. of Inspruck.

SCHAUBENBERG, a principality of Germany, in Westphalia. It is mountainous and woody, but contains much fertile land, quarries of limestone and freestone, and mines of alum, coal, copper, and iron. Area, 172 square miles. Pop. 25,000. The line of its ancient counts was extinct in 1640, and in 1647 it became the property of the landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, of whom the count of Lippe holds a part as fief. Rintel is the capital.

SCHAUSENSTEIN, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Bayreuth; 18 miles N.E. of Culmbach.

SCHAUMBURG-LIPPE, PRINCIPALITY OF, one of the minor states of N.W. Germany, surrounded by the territories of Hesse-Schaumburg, Hanover, and Westphalia. Area, 217 square miles. Pop. in 1838, 27,600 chiefly Lutherans, and engaged in rural pursuits. The constitution, which dates from 1816 is a limited monarchy, and a chamber of nobles and representatives. See Appendix.

SCHERR, a town and castle of Wirtemberg, capital of a lordship of its name, seated on the Danube; 36 miles S.W. of Ulm. Long. 9. 24. E. lat. 48. 5. N.

SCHIEBENBERG, a town of Saxony; near which are mines of silver and iron; 22 miles S. of Chemnitz.

SCHELD (L'ESCAUT), a river which rises in France, in the department of Aisne; passes by Cambrai, Bouchain, Valenciennes, Condé, Tournay, Oudenard, Ghent, Dendermond, Antwerp, and Fort Lillo, below which it divides into two branches. One of these, called the Eastern Scheldt, flows by Bergen-op-Zoom; the other, the Western Scheldt, proceeds to Flushing, and, both forming several islands, enter the German ocean, after a course of 200 miles.

SCHLESTAT, or SCHLETSTAT, a fortified town of France, department of Lower Rhine, on the river Ille; 20 miles S.W. of Strasburg. Population in 1836, 9353.

SHELLA, a town of Hungary, seated on the Wang; 25 miles N.E. of Presburg.

SHELLENBERG, a town of Saxony, frequently called Augustsburg, from a castle of that name standing on the mountain of Schellenberg, close by the town. It is seated on the Zschopa; 8 miles E. of Chemnitz.

SCHOLLENBURG, a town of Bavaria, where a victory was obtained by the allies over the French and Bavarians, in 1704; 12 miles W. of Neuburg.

SCHELLING, an island of the Netherlands; 12 miles long, and 3 broad, lying at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee. It was taken by the British in 1799. Long. 5. 0. E. lat. 53. 20. N.

SCHENNITZ, a town of Hungary, one of the seven mountain towns, with three castles. It is famous for mines of silver and other metals; as also for its hot-baths. The mines have been wrought for several centuries, and now consist of 12 royal mines besides several private ones, the produce of which is disposed of to the royal smelting works at a fixed rate. These mines all communicate with the emperor Francis's adit or shaft, at the depth of 1200 feet. At a still greater depth is a more magnificent work yet unfinished, the adit of Joseph II., which is 10 English miles in length. The Hungarian mines are superior in their construction to any in the world, but as profit is disregarded, this is not surprising. Silver is the chief metal produced, and from it some gold is procured; besides these, are lead, iron, copper, zinc, and arsenic. The pop. of the town and suburbs in 1837 was 17,028, and about 20,000 miners are employed in the district.

SCHENCK, a fortress of the Netherlands, in Guelderland, seated in the angle where the Rhine divides into two branches, the Rhine and the Wahal. It is now in ruins; 13 miles E. of Nimeguen.

SCHENECTADY. See SKENECTADY.

SCHENING, a town of Sweden, in East Gothland, seated in a fertile country; 10 miles S.E. of Wastana.

SCHENINGEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick, near which is a Lutheran convent, and a salt mine; 18 miles E. of Wolfenbittel.

SCHIPPENSTADT, a town in the duchy of Brunswick; 12 miles E. of Wolfenbittel.

SCHIFFENHEUL. See MONTAIGUE.

SCHESBURG, a fortified town of Transylvania, with a castle; 60 miles N.E. of Weissenburg.

SCHIEDAM, a town and harbour of the Netherlands, in South Holland, noted for its numerous distilleries of gin (Hollands). It is seated on a canal, called the Schie, which communicates with the Meuse; 6 miles W. by S. of Rotterdam. Pop. in 1837, 11,815.

SCHIERLING, a village of Bavaria, noted as the scene of an obstinate conflict, generally called the battle of Abensberg, in 1809, between Bonaparte and the archduke Charles. It is 11 miles S. of Ratisbon.

SCHIEVELBEIN, a town of Prussian Pomerania; with a castle, seated on the Rega; 17 miles N. of Dramburg.

SCHILTACH, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg, on the river Schiltach; 14 miles N.N.W. of Rotlwell.

SCHINTA, a town of Hungary, on the river Waag; 28 miles E. of Presburg.

SCHINTZACH, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Aargau. Here are some tepid mineral waters; and near it, on a lofty eminence, are the ruins of the famous castle of Hapsburg. It is seated on the Aar; 10 miles W. of Baden, and 20 S.E. of Basel.

SCHIRAZ. See SCHIRAZ.

SCHIRVAN, a province of Caucasia; 150 miles long, and 90 broad, bounded on the N. by Daghestan, E. and S.E. by the Caspian sea, S.W. by Erivan, and W. by Georgia. The soil is very fertile, producing abundance of rice, wheat, and barley; and the pastures feed numerous cattle. Vines are planted along the hedges, and fastened to the trees. Here are vast quantities of wild fowls, particularly pheasants; also hares in abundance. It formed part of the Persian dominions from 1500 till the decline of the Sefi dynasty, when it asserted its independence; it has, however, become nominally subject to Russia. Schamachi is the capital.

SCHWARTZBURG-SONDERSHAUSEN, another principality of central Germany, enclosed by the Prussian territories, and traversed by several tributaries of the Unstrut. Timber, potash, and iron are produced and manufactured, and some corn for exportation is grown. The government is an unlimited monarchy. Area, 358 square miles. Pop. in 1834, 54,080.

SCHWARTZENBERG, a town of Bavarian Franconia, in a principality of the same name, with a castle; seated on the Leck, 24 miles E. S.E. of Wurtsburg.

SCHWARTZENBERG, a town of Saxony, with wire and lace manufactures. In the vicinity are iron-forges, and mines of tin and lead. It is 10 miles S.W. of Annaberg.

SCHWARTZENBURG, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick, in the canton of Bern; 10 miles S.E. of Friburg, and 17 S.S.W. of Bern.

SCHWATZ, a town of Austria, in Tyrol, with a silver and copper mine; seated on the river Inn, 14 miles N.E. of Innsbruck. Pop. 4000.

SCHWEDT, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, with a magnificent castle; seated on the Oder, 24 miles S.E. of Prenzlau. Pop. 4700.

SCHWEIDNITZ, a strong city of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Reichenbach; capital of a principality of the same name; with a castle. Half of the magistrates are Catholics, but most of the inhabitants are Protestants, who have a church without the town, as also a public school. All kinds of leather, particularly cordovan, are manufactured here. In 1716 the greatest part of this city was burnt down, but it was rebuilt in an elegant manner. The Austrians took it in 1757, from the Prussians, who retook it the next year. In 1807 it surrendered to the French. It is finely seated on the Reisingebirge mountains and on the river Weistritz; 22 miles S.W. of Breslau. Pop. 9500. Long. 16. 32. E. lat. 50. 44. N.

SCHWEINFURT, a town of Bavarian Franconia; with a palace. The inhabitants carry on a large trade in wine, woollen and linen cloth, goose quills and feathers. This town was taken by the French in 1796, and was given to Bavaria in 1802. It is seated on the Maine; 21 miles N.E. of Wurtzburg. Pop. 5200. Long. 10. 35. E. lat. 50. 6. N.

SCHWEINITZ, a town of Saxony, on the river Elster; 14 miles S.E. of Wittenberg.

SCHWEINSBERG, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, on the river Ohm; 7 miles S. E. of Marburg.

SCHWITZ, a canton of Switzerland, containing an area of 338 square miles, and a population of 40,650, in 1837; bounded on the W. by the Waldstadter See, S. by the canton of Uri, E. by that of Glarus, and N. by those of Zurich and Zug. This canton with that of Uri and Underwalden, threw off the yoke of Austria in 1308, and formed a perpetual alliance in 1315, which was the grand foundation of the Helvetic confederacy. The name of Schweitzerland, Swisserland, or Switzerland, originally comprehended only these three cantons, but was afterwards extended to all Helvetia. The whole country, being rugged and mountainous, consists chiefly of pasture, raises little corn, and has no wine; but this soil, naturally barren, has been improved by the natives to a great degree of fertility. The inhabitants made a spirited but unavailing resistance to the French in 1798, and they suffered severely in 1799, when Switzerland became the scene of military operations. The government is a pure democracy, and the Roman Catholic is the established religion.

SCHWITZ, the capital of the above canton, is seated near the Waldstadter See; on the slope of a hill, at the bottom of two high and rugged rocks, called the Schweitzer Haken. The church is a large magnificent building; 18 miles E. by S. of Lucern. Pop. 5000. Long. 8. 31. E. lat. 46. 56. N.

SCHWITZ, LAKE OF. See WALDSTADTER SEE.

SCHWELM, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, near which are some medicinal springs; 26 miles E. of Dusseldorf.

SCHWERIN, a town of Germany, capital of the grand duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. It is divided into four parts; namely, Schwerin, the New Town, the island of Schelf, and the Moor, which are all nearly encircled by beautiful lake. The principal church is a fine Gothic pile, with a lofty spire. The ducal palace and gardens are on an island in the lake and have a communication with the town by a drawbridge. This town was taken by the Prussians in 1759, and in 1806 it was occupied by the French. It is 35 miles W.S.W. of Gustrow, on the railway between Rostock and Hamburg. Pop. 8500. Long. 11. 33. E. lat. 53. 56. N.

SCHWERTE, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, on the river Roer; 7 miles S. of Dortmund.

SCHWETZ, a town and castle of Prussia, on the Vistula; 7 miles N. of Culm.

SCHWIEBUSSEN, a town of Prussia, in the principality of Glogau. It has a castle, a Catholic parish church, a Protestant church good cloth manufactures, and fertile gardens and vineyards; 13 miles N. of Zullichau. Long. 15. 47. E. lat. 52. 21. N.

SCHWINBURG, a town of Denmark, on the S. coast of the island of Funen; with the best harbour in the island, and manufactures of woollen and linen; 23 miles S.S.E. of Odensee. Long. 10. 30. E. lat. 55. 10. N.

SCIACCA. See XACCA.

SCIATI, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 14 miles N.N.E. of Negropont, and almost at the entrance of the gulf of Salonichi. It is 10 miles long, and 4 broad. Long. 23. 40. E. lat. 39. 24. N.

SCIGLIO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra; on the side of a rocky promontory, called Scylla, or Cape Sciglio. In the terrible earthquake in 1783, the sea was thrown furiously 3 miles inland, and on its return swept off about 2500 of its inhabitants, with the prince of Sciglio, who, hoping to find security, were then on the Scylla strand, or in boats near the shore. It is 10 m. N. by E. of Reggio.

SCILLY, a cluster of isles and rocks, at the entrance of the English and Bristol Channels; lying almost 10 leagues W. of the Land's-end, in Cornwall. They are 17 in number. Of these only five or six are inhabited. They are a resort for seaweed, and feed many sheep and rabbits. The inhabitants principally subsist by fishing, burning kelp, and acting as pilots. The chief isle is that of St. Mary, nearly 3 miles long and 2 broad, which has a good port, is well fortified, and contains more inhabitants than all the rest put together. In this isle, and in two or three others, are various antiquities, particularly the remains of a temple of the Druids, and ancient sepulchres. On that of St. Agnes is a lighthouse, which, with the gallery, is 51 feet high, and is a very fine column. At the outermost extremity of the isle of St. Martin is a seamark, built with rockstone, and as conspicuous by day as the lighthouse on St. Agnes, but not so high and large. The Scilly rocks have been fatal to numbers of ships entering the English Channel. One of the most disastrous events of this kind happened in 1707 on the Bishop Rock, when three men-of-war perished, with Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel and all their crews. St. Agnes lighthouse is in long. 6. 20½ W. lat. 49. 53½ N.

SCILLY, a group of isles or shoals, in the South Pacific; discovered by Captain Wallis in 1767, and described as extremely dangerous. Long. 155. 30. W. lat. 16. 30. S.

Scio, (anciently called Chios,) an island of the Grecian Archipelago, near the coast of Natolia; 36 miles long, and 13 broad. It is a mountainous country; but fruits of various kinds grow in the fields, such as oranges, citrons, olives, mulberries, and pomegranates, interspersed with myrtles and jasmines. The wine of Scio, so celebrated by the ancients, is still in great esteem; but the island is now principally distinguished by the profitable culture of mastic; it has also some trade in silk, cotton, and figs. Besides the town, of the same name, it contains 68 villages, all inhabited by Greeks; and those which furnish mastic are the most rich and populous. In 1822 this island became the scene of unparalleled barbarity, in consequence of the Greek population having joined their countrymen in their struggle for liberty. The Turks landed several thousand men, and massacred all the men, and the male children above 12 years of age; the women and young children were sent into captivity, and the male children were circumcised in token of conversion to Mohammedism. From the 11th of April to the 10th of May, the number of slain amounted to 25,000, and that of captives to 30,000. But the sanguinary proceedings of the Ottoman power were at length arrested, the oppressed Greeks liberated, and Turkish despotism effectually chastised.

Scio, the capital of the above island, and a bishop's see. It is the best built town in the Archipelago; the houses being commodious, some of them terraced, and others covered with tiles. The castle, an old citadel built by the Genoese, is now in ruins. The harbour is a rendezvous for ships that go to or come from Constantinople: it will contain 80 vessels, is protected by a low mole, and has two light-houses. It stands on the E. side of the island; 67 miles W. of Smyrna. Long. 26. 2. E. lat. 38. 28. N.

Sciroto, a county of the United States; lying on both sides of a river of its name, which rises in the state of Ohio, near the sources of the Sandusky, and falls into the Ohio at Portsmouth, in lat. 38. 34. N. Pop. 11,192. Portsmouth is the chief town.

Sciroto, a town of New York, in Cayuga county; seated on the E. side of Cayuga lake; 95 miles W. of Cooperstown.

Sciro, or Sciros, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the W. of Metelin; 15 miles long, and 8 broad. The country is mountainous, but has no mines. The vines make the beauty of the island, and the wine is excellent, nor do the natives want corn or wood. It contains only the village and convent of St. George, both built on a conical rock; 10 miles from the harbour of St. George. Long. 24. 38. E. lat. 38. 54. N.

Scituate, a town of Massachusetts, in Plymouth county, situate on an inlet of the sea, which forms a harbour; 16 miles N. of Plymouth, and 28 S.E. of Boston. Pop. 3886.

Scituate, a town of Rhode island, in Providence county; near which is a foundry for cannon and bells; 11 miles S.S.W. of Providence, and 27 N.W. of Newport. Population 4090.

SLAVONIA, or SLAVONIA, a province of Austria, situate between the rivers Drave and Danube on the N., and the Save on the S.; bounded on the W. by Croatia, from which, to the conflux of the Save with the Danube, it contains an area of 3600 square miles, and a population of 315,000. A chain of lofty mountains, covered with forests, extends from E. to W. nearly through its whole length; but the remainder is a fertile level country, producing wheat, barley, maize, flax, hemp, madder and a variety of fruits. The eastern part is called Ratzia, and the inhabitants Rascians. These form a particular nation, and are of the Greek church. The ancient Slavonia contained many large countries: some have extended it from the Adriatic to the Euxine sea, and say that it had its name from the Slavi, a Scythian nation, who conquered Greece and this country in the reign of the emperor Justinian. The language of Slavonia is the mother of four others; namely, those of Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia.

SCORELO, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 10 miles long and 5 broad. It is very fertile, produces plenty of good wine, and contains 12,000 inhabitants; 5 miles S. of Scial. Long. 23. 50. E. lat. 39. 24. N.

SCOFIA, or USKUP, a town of Macedonia, in European Turkey, and an archbishop's see. It is seated on the Vardar, over which is a bridge of 12 arches; 150 miles N.N.W. of Salonica. Pop. 8000. Long. 21. 45. E. lat. 42. 40. N.

SCOTLAND, the northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic ocean, N. by the North sea, E. by the German ocean, S.E. by England, and S. by the Irish sea. To Scotland also appertain the islands on its western coast, called the Hebrides, or Western islands, and those to the N.E. called the Orkney and Shetland islands. From N. to S. it extends 270 miles, and its greatest breadth is 150, but in some places not above 30, and no part is distant above 40 miles from the coast. It contains about 20,000,000 acres, of which only 2,500,000 are arable, and about the same quantity is meadow-land, and the remainder is barren, or uncultivated. Scotland is divided into two districts, the Highlands and the Lowlands; the former comprising the mountainous part to the N. and N.W., and the latter the more level district on the E. and S.E. But nature seems to have pointed out three grand divisions in Scotland. The first or N. division, is formed by a chain of lakes, which crosses the country from the frith of Moray to the island of Mull, in a S.W. direction; the second, or middle division, is bounded on the S. by the friths of Forth and Clyde, and the great Canal by which they are united; and on the S. side of this boundary is the third, or S. division. The N. division is chiefly an assemblage of vast dreary mountains; not, however, without some fertile valleys on the northern and eastern shores. The middle division is traversed, in different directions, by several ranges of mountains; and though cultivation here is also found chiefly on the eastern shore, yet of this division, as well as of the former, the arable land bears a small proportion to the mountainous and barren tracts. The S. division has a great resemblance to England, and, with respect both to the general aspect of the country, and to the progress of cultivation, exhibits every kind of rural variety. The civil division of the country is into 33 counties; namely,

The principal rivers are the Spey, Don, Tay, Tweed, Clyde, Forth, Northern Dec, Esk, Annan, Nith, and Southern Dec. The lochs, or lakes, are numerous, and some of them extensive. The climate is very various. The northern extremity, which is in the same latitude with some parts of Norway, is extremely cold; but, from its insular situation, the frosts are far from being so intense as in parts of the continent equally as far to the N. Its W. coast is subject to frequent rains in the summer, and to sudden changes of weather. In many places on the eastern shore, and in the whole S. division, the climate is not inferior to the N. part of England. The products of the country are grain, flax, woods of oak and fir, coal, lead, iron, freestone, limestone, slate, the most beautiful marble, fine rock-crystals, pearls, variegated pebbles, &c. It feeds vast herds of cattle, and flocks of sheep, which are much valued for the delicacy of their flesh; and the fleece of the latter emulates the finest Spanish wool. On the high grounds the cattle are very diminutive; but in many parts of the country, the horses and cows are not excelled in size and beauty by those of the English breed. Among the wild animals are the roe, stag, fox, badger, otter, hedge-hog, rabbit, weasel, mole, and other small quadrupeds. Among the feathered race are the capercaillie, or the cock of the wood, the eagle, falcon, partridge, quail, snipe, plover, black game, &c. Scotland was governed by a king before the Romans visited England, and continued an independent kingdom till the death of the English queen Elizabeth, when James VI. of Scotland, the most immediate heir, was called to the throne of England, and constantly resided in the latter; he and his successors culling themselves kings of England and Scotland, and each country having a separate parliament, till the year 1707, in the reign of queen Anne, when both kingdoms were united under the general name of Great Britain. The counties send one member each to parliament, except Bute and Caithness, Cromarty and Nairn, Kinross and Clackmannan, which send members in conjunction; so that the counties send 30 members, which, with 23 sent by the cities and boroughs, make the 53 commoners sent by Scotland; and 16 peers are elected to represent the nobility. The established religion is the Presbyterian, which is modelled principally after the Calvinistic plan settled at Geneva, and on a general principle of ecclesiastical authority among its presbyters. There are few Roman Catholics, but the Protestant dissenters are numerous. With respect to the trade and manufactures, they are noticed under the respective cities and towns. Edinburgh is the capital.

SCOTT, a county of the United States, at the N. part of Kentucky. Pop. 13,668. Georgetown is the capital.—Also, a county in the S.W. part of Virginia, formed out of the counties of Russel, Lee, and Washington, in 1814. Pop. 5702.

SCULCOATES, a parish adjoining to Kingston-upon-Hull, and contains the best houses of that town, which see.

SCUTARI, or ISKENDERJE, a strong town of Albania, and a bishop's see; seated on the lake Zeta, near its outlet, the river Boiana; 70 miles N. by W. of Durazzo. Pop. 12,000. Long. 19. 16. E. lat. 42. 33. N.

SCUTARI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Naxos, which may be considered as a suburb of Constantinople. It stands on the strait opposite that city; and presents itself in the form of an amphitheatre, affording a very picturesque view, from the mixture of trees, houses, mosques, and minarets. This town serves as an emporium and a rendezvous to the caravans of Asia. Its hospital was occupied by the Anglo-French wounded in the Crimean war, and hundreds of our brave men lie buried there. The rich Turks of Constantinople prefer being interred here; for they consider Asia as a land belonging to the true believers, and believe that the land of Europe will one day fall into the hands of Christians, and be trodden on by infidels. Scutari is one mile E. of Constantinople. It is the ancient Chrysolis, and its present population is variously estimated at from 30,000 to 60,000.

SCYLLA, a rock near the entrance of the strait of Messina, on the coast of Calabria, opposite the celebrated Charybdis. It forms a small promontory in the narrowest part of the strait, and is the famous Scylla of the ancient poets. It does not come up to the formidable description given by Homer, nor is the passage so narrow and difficult as he represents it; but it is probable that its breadth is greatly increased since his time. The rock is nearly 200 feet high; and on the side of it stands the town of Sciglio, whence the promontory is sometimes called Capo Sciglio.

SEAFORD, a town in Sussex, and one of the cinque ports. Its trade and harbour are now of little consequence. It was formerly a borough, and has recently been much frequented for bathing. An extensive breakwater has been proposed here, for the formation of a harbour of refuge. It is 10 miles S.E. of Lewes, and 61 S. by E. of London.

SEARA, or CEARA, a province of South America, empire of Brazil, at the N.E. part. It contains a population of 180,000. Seara the capital, is in long. 38.34. W. lat. 3.43. S., and contains 1200 inhabitants. It is a good seaport.

SEATON, a town of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire. Here is a ruinous palace, in which Mary Queen of Scots occasionally kept her court after her return from France. It has a considerable trade in salt and coal. It is situate on the frith of Forth; 9 miles E. of Edinburgh.

SEBASTE, a town of Palestine, the remains of the ancient city of Samaria; 34 miles N.N.E. of Jerusalem.

SEBASTIAN, ST., a seaport of Spain, in Guipuzcoa, seated at the foot of a hill, on the top of which is a strong citadel. The harbour is secured by two moles, and a narrow entrance for the ships. The town is surrounded by a double wall, and fortified towards the sea. It is in iron, st of Madrid province, to Tolosa French in On the 31 storm, by Graham, sustained laid near since beer and 50 N Long. 1.4

Formerly it was the capital of its province, but this honour has been removed to Tolosa. St. Sebastian was taken by the French in 1719, in 1794, and again in 1808. On the 31st of August, 1813, it was taken by storm, by the allied forces, under General Graham, after a short siege, during which it sustained a most heavy bombardment, which laid nearly the whole town in ruins. It has since been rebuilt. It is 50 miles E. of Bilbao, and 50 N.W. of Pamplona. Pop. 13,000. Long. 1. 56. W. lat. 43. 24. N.

SEBASTIAN, ST., RIO, or RIO JANEIRO, the capital of the province of Rio Janeiro, and of all Brazil; with a citadel on a hill, and numerous forts. The city stands 4 miles W. of the harbour, (one of the finest in the world,) and behind it are high hills crowned with woods, convents, houses, and churches. It is 3 miles in circumference; the streets are straight, and most of them narrow, intersecting each other at right angles; and the houses in general are of stone, and two storeys high. The churches are very fine, and there is more religious parade in this city, than in almost any town of Europe. The harbour is very commodious, with a narrow entrance defended by two forts. Here are manufactures of sugar, rum, and cochineal. The different mechanics carry on their business in distinct parts of the town, particular streets being set apart for particular trades. On the S. side of a spacious square is a palace; and there are several other squares, in which are fountains, supplied with water by an aqueduct of considerable length, brought over a valley by a double tier of arches. The mint is one of the finest buildings existing, and furnished with all the conveniences necessary for coining with the greatest expedition. A benedictine convent, and a fort, are on the extreme point, jutting into the harbour, opposite which is Serpent island, where there are a dockyard, magazines, and naval store-houses. In another part of the harbour, at a place called Val Longo, are warehouses, formerly appropriated for the reception and preparation for sale of slaves imported from Africa. It is the principal emporium of South Brazil, and of the mining districts, but is considered unhealthy, from its low situation, and the adjacent marshes, and also from the filthiness of the streets and inhabitants, who are devoted to pleasure and indolence, and have the character of being more immoral than any European capital. The population consists of about two-thirds mulattoes and negroes, the remainder of a great mixture of nations, and amounted to 180,000 in 1844. It was founded by the Portuguese in 1565, and was made the capital of Brazil in 1763. It was the residence of the Portuguese court till 1821, and in 1831 was the scene of a revolution, in consequence of which the emperor Pedro abdicated in favour of his son, Pedro II. The present Emperor of Brazil resides at Petropolis, to the N. of Rio Janeiro, to which it is connected by a railroad. St. Sebastian is a bishop's see: seated near the mouth of the Rio Janeiro, in the Atlantic. Long. 43. 9. W. lat. 22. 54. S.

SEBASTOPOL, or SEVASTOPOL, or AKTIAR, a seaport of Russia, and the first maritime town of the Crimea. It has one of the finest and most secure harbours in the world, capable of containing all the Russian fleets; and was the chief station of the Black Sea fleet. It will be celebrated in modern times for the siege it withstood against the English, French, Sardinian, and Turkish armies, which was commenced Sept. 26, 1854, and vigorously pursued till the town was taken, March 1856. During the bombardment most of the fine buildings were destroyed, and afterwards the fine naval docks, &c., were blown up. It stands on part of the site of the ancient Greek city of Cherson, where was the famous temple of Diana Taurica; and considerable ruins of them are yet discoverable. It is 40 miles S.S.W. of Simferopol, and 350 N.E. of Constantinople. Long. 33. 30. E. lat. 44. 36. N.

SEBENICO, a strong seaport of Anstrian Dalmatia, and a bishop's see; with four citadels. The cathedral is a magnificent fabric, and its roof is composed of large flat pieces of marble. The Turks have often attempted in vain to take this town. It is seated near the mouth of the Cherca, in the gulf of Venice; 30 miles S.E. of Zara. Pop. 6300. Long. 16. 46. E. lat. 44. 17. N.

SECHURA, a town of Peru, inhabited by Indians who are chiefly employed in fishing or driving of mules. Here commences a sandy desert, which extends southward about 80 miles. The town stands on a river of the same name; 3 miles from the ocean, and 180 N.N.W. of Truxillo. Long. 81. 10. E. lat. 5. 55. S.

SECKAU, a town of the Austrian states, in Styria; seated on the Gayle. It is 9 miles N. of Judenburg.

SECKINGEN, a town of Baden; the smallest of the four Forest Towns. Here is a convent of noble nuns, whose abbess was a princess of the empire. It is seated on an island, formed by the Rhine, over which is a bridge. It is 11 miles W. of Basel.

SEDAN, a strong town of France, capital of the department of Ardennes, and formerly the seat of a Protestant university. It is deemed one of the keys of the country, and has a strong castle, an arsenal, a cannon foundry, and a manufacture of fine cloth. The famous marshal Turenne was born in the castle. Sedan is seated on the Meuse; 30 miles S.E. of Charlemont. Pop. 12,000. Long. 4. 58. E. lat. 49. 42. N.

SEDASIVAGUR, a town of Hindostan, the most northern on the coast of Canara. It is seated on the N. side of the estuary of a river, which enters into a deep bay, sheltered by three islands, one of them fortified, and the entrance defended by a fort on a lofty hill. Three miles up the river, on the opposite bank, are the remains of Carwar, formerly a noted place of European commerce, but totally ruined during the reign of Tippoo Sultan. It is 50 miles E. of Goa, and 95 N.N.W. of Kundapura. Long. 74. 15. E. lat. 14. 51. N.

SEDBERGH, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a manufacture of cotton. It has a parish church, two meeting houses for Methodists, and one for Quakers, and an amply endowed free grammar-school. It is seated near the Rother, which abounds with trout; 10 miles E. of Kendal, and 269 N.W. of London.

SEDFIELD, a town in the county of Durham; 251 miles from London.

SEDFLEY, a parish in Staffordshire, three miles S.S.E. of Wolverhampton, and eleven W.N.W. of Birmingham, near the grand-junction Railway. The population, rapidly increasing, is engaged in the working and manufacturing of coal and iron.

SEELOW, a town of Brandenburg, 10 miles S.W. of Castrin.

SEER, a seaport of Arabia, capital of a principality in the province of Oman. It has a good harbour, and the navy of the prince is one of the most considerable in the gulf of Persia. It is 108 miles W.S.W. of Julfar. Long. 54. 58. E. lat. 25. 10. N.

SESEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick; 14 miles S.W. of Goslar.

SEEZ, a town of France, department of Orne, and a bishop's see. It is seated in a fine country, near the source of the Orne; 14 miles N. of Alençon, and 120 W. by S. of Paris. Pop. 5500. Long. 0. 11. E. lat. 48. 36. N.

SEGEBERG, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein; with a castle on a high mountain, consisting of limestone, large quantities of which are carried to Hamburg and Lubeck. It is seated on the Trave; 15 miles W.N.W. of Lubeck.

SEGEDIN, or SZEGEDIN, a strong town of Hungary, with a castle; taken from the Turks in 1686. It is a disagreeable town, with a good deal of trade in corn, soda, soap, and tobacco, and is seated near the Teiss, opposite the influx of the Maros; 105 miles S.S.E. of Pesth, to which it has a railway. Pop. 32,000. Long. 20. 35. E. lat. 46. 18. N.

SEGESWAR, a town of Transylvania, capital of a county of the same name. It is built in the form of an amphitheatre on the side of a hill, near the river Kokel; 47 miles N. of Hermanstadt. Long. 24. 55. E. lat. 47. 4. N.

SEGNA, a seaport of Morlachia; capital of Hungarian Dalmatia, with a fort. It was declared a free port, and erected into a bishopric, in 1785. It is seated on the gulf of Venice; 100 miles N.W. of Spoleto. Long. 15. 21. E. lat. 45. 22. N.

SEGNÉ, a town of the papal states, in Campagna di Roma, and a bishop's see. Organs are said to have been invented here. It is seated on a mountain, thirty miles S.E. of Rome.

SEGO, a city of Negroland, the capital of Bambarra. It consists of four walled towns, two on each side of the river Niger, which contain about 30,000 inhabitants; and, as the Moors form a considerable proportion, their mosques appear in every quarter. The houses are built of clay, of a square form, with flat roofs; some of them have two storeys, and many of them are whitewashed. The current money consists of cowries. It is 296 miles W.S.W. of Timbuctoo. Long. 2. 46. W. lat. 14. 15. N.

SEGORBE, a city of Spain, in Valencia, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the side of a hill, by the river Marvedre, 35 miles N. by W. of Valencia. Pop. 6500.

SEGOVIA, a city of Spain, in Old Castile; capital of the province of its name, and a bishop's see; with a castle. It stands on two hills, and the valley by which they are separated, on the S.W. side of the Erasma. It is surrounded by a strong wall, flanked with towers and ramparts. It is sadly decayed and decaying, the population once exceeding 30,000 have dwindled down to less than 9000. The climate is miserably cold, and the environs bleak and uninteresting. It is now supplied with water by the ancient Roman aqueduct, probably erected by Trujan. It is tortuous and 2540 feet long, and the three centre arches are 102 feet high. It was broken down by the Moors in 1071, but was repaired in 1483 and is a noble granite erection. The city has never recovered the fatal day of June 7, 1808, when it was invaded and sacked by the French. The former prosperity of Segovia depended on its wool trade, but now only a few poor manufacturers languish in the suburb of San Lorenzo. In 1829 improved machinery was introduced, but was destroyed by the hand-loom weavers. The cathedral stands on one side of the great square, and is one of the handsomest Gothic structures in Spain; besides which there are 27 other churches. The castle, the alcazar, is seated in the highest part of the town. The royal chapel is magnificently gilded and embellished with very fine paintings. The mint, for some years the only one in Spain, is surrounded by the river, is now only employed in the copper coinage. Segovia was occupied by the French in 1808, but was evacuated in 1813. It is 43 miles N.N.W. of Madrid. The area of the province is 3650 square miles, with a population of 171,000. Long. 4. 12. W. lat. 41. 3. N.

SEIKS, or SIKHS, a powerful nation in the N.W. part of Hindostan, consisting of several small independent states, that have formed a kind of federal union, inhabiting the Punjab. The founder of their sect was Nanock, who lived in the beginning of the 15th century; and they are the descendants of his disciples, the word seiks, in the Sanscrit language, signifying disciples. They are in general strong and well made, accustomed from their infancy to the most laborious life and hardest fare. A pair of long blue drawers, and a kind of chequered plaid, a part of which is fastened round the waist, and the other thrown over the shoulder, form their clothing and equipage. The chiefs are distinguished by wearing some heavy gold bracelets on their wrists, and sometimes a chain of the same metal round their turbans, and by being mounted on better horses; otherwise no distinction appears among them. The government of the Seiks is a military aristocracy. Their army consists almost entirely of horse, of which a Seik will boast they can bring 300,000 into the field; and it is supposed they might bring 200,000. They have commonly two, some of them three horses each. They indeed consider this animal as necessary to their existence; and, while it is customary with them to make merry on the demise of one of their brethren, they mourn for the death of a horse. The Seiks are tolerant in matters of faith, and require only a conformity in certain signs and ceremonies; but, unlike the Hindoos, they admit proselytes, although those from among the Mahomedans are not much esteemed. The capital is Lahore. See PUNJAB.

SEMIGALLIA, a duchy of European Russia, about 100 miles long, and 20 broad, forming the E. part of the government of Courland. Mittan is the capital.

SEMINARI, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, with an abbey belonging to the united Greek church. It suffered severely from an earthquake in 1783, but now contains 2000 inhabitants. It is 22 miles N. E. of Reggio.

SEMLEN, a town of Slavonia, in the Austrian empire, on the south side of the Danube; the principal place for carrying on the transit trade between Turkey and Slavonia. Pop. 9000. It is 4 miles W. of Belgrade.

SEMPEACH, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucerne; celebrated for its battle in 1386, which established the liberty of the Swiss, and in which Leopold, duke of Austria, was defeated and slain. It is seated on a small lake of the same name; 7 miles N.W. of Lucerne.

SEMPUR EN AUCOIS, a town of France, in the department of Côtes d'Or, with a castle on a rock. It has a manufacture of cloth. It is seated on the Armançon; 34 miles W. by N. of Dijon, and 135 S.E. of Paris. Pop. 6000.

SEMPUR EN BATAIGNOIS, a town in the department of Saone-et-Loire; 33 miles W. by S. of Mignon, and 45 S. of Autun.

SENA, or MARZALI, a town of Mocaranga, in East Africa; on the river Zambeze, where the Portuguese have a factory. Pop. 2000. Long. 35. 3. E. lat. 7. 40. S.

SENECA, a lake and river of New York, in Onondaga county. The lake is 30 miles long, and 2 broad, and lies N. and S. between those of Canadagua and Cayuga. At the N. end is the town of Geneva, and on the E. side, between it and Cayuga lake, are the military townships of Romulus, Ovid, Hector, and Ulysses. The river rises to the W. of Geneva, passes by that town, and receives the waters of the lake. It afterwards receives the waters of Cayuga lake, Canadagua creek, and Salt lake, and then flows into Onondaga river.

SENECA, a county in the state of New York, with 24,874 inhabitants. Waterloo and Ovid are the chief towns.

SENECA, a town of New York, in Onondaga county, situate on the N. side of the falls in Seneca river, 14 miles from its mouth, and 28 S. of Oswego. Pop. 4281.

SENEGAL, a large river which rises in the mountains of Kong, in Negroland, and flows W. on the southern confines of Zahara, into the Atlantic ocean; 120 miles N.E. of Cape Verd. Its course is flexuous, till it arrives within 6 miles of the sea, when it takes a sudden turn to the S., and for 75 miles is separated from the sea only by a ridge of sand. Its mouth, not more than half a league over, is incommoded by a shifting bar, which renders the passage difficult and dangerous. It divides two regions very dissimilar in aspect: that to the N. is the great desert of Sahara, inhabited by a few Moors; that to the S. is the fertile plains of Nigritia and its population of negroes.

SENEGAL, a country on the W. coast of Africa, lying on a river of the same name. See FOUTA. The French have a fort and factory in an island at the mouth of the river, and are masters of the gum trade. It is called Fort Louis, was taken by the English in 1758, confirmed to them by the peace of 1763, but restored in 1783. The other French settlement is at Gorée. Pop. in 1836, 18,010. Long. 16. 31. W. lat. 15. 53. N.

SENEGAMMA, a name applied to the countries on the W. coast of Africa, between the parallels of 8. and 18. N. latitude, and through which the rivers Senegal, Gambia, and Rio Grande flow. It comprises many districts, inhabited by negroes of different languages, and part of it abounds with metals, especially gold. The actual limits are undefined.

SENEZ, a town of France, in the department of Lower Alps, seated in a rough barren country; 15 miles S.S.E. of Digne.

SENFTENBURG, a town of Prussia, in Lower Lusatia, with a castle; 35 miles N.N.E. of Meissen.

SENLIS, a town of France, in the department of Oise, seated on the river Nonette, and almost surrounded by a forest; 20 miles N.W. of Meaux, and 27 N.E. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 5016.

SENNAAR, a kingdom of Eastern Africa, bounded E. and S. by Abyssinia, W. by Darbar, and N. by Dongola and the independent districts of Nubia. The Nile flows through this immense plain above a mile broad, full to the very brim, but never overflowing. For several miles from the banks of this river, the soil is of very remarkable fertility; and at the time of the rains, about the end of August and beginning of September, the country assumes a most delightful appearance, resembling the pleasantest parts of Holland. Soon after the rains cease, the dhourra ripens, the leaves turn yellow and rot, the lakes putrefy, smell, and are full of vermin, all the beauty disappears, and bare scorched Nubia returns, with all its terrors of poisonous winds and moving sands, glowing and ventilated with antry blasts. The trade consists chiefly in exchanging the various productions of interior Africa with those of Egypt and Arabia. The kingdom of Sennaar was founded by a body of Shilluk negroes in 1505. The government is despotic, but the king may lawfully be put to death whenever the chief officers decide that his reign is no longer a public benefit.

SENNAAR, a city of Nubia, and capital of the above kingdom, is 5 miles in circumference, and very populous. It is said to contain 100,000 inhabitants. The houses are chiefly of one story, with flat roofs; but the suburbs contain only cottages covered with reeds. The palace is surrounded by high walls, and is a confused heap of buildings. The heats are almost insupportable in the day-time, except in the rainy season, at which time the air is unwholesome. The commodities are elephants' teeth, tamarinds, civet, tobacco, and gold dust. There is a market near the palace, where slaves are sold; the females sit on one side, and the males on another; the Egyptians buy great numbers of them every year. The merchandise required here, consists of spices, paper, brass, hardware, glass beads, and a black drug which is used to colour the eyebrows. The women of quality have slight garments of silk, and wear rings of various metals on their hair, arms, legs, ears, and fingers. Women of a low rank, and girls, have clothes wrapped round them from the waist to the knees. The men go almost naked. Sennaar is seated on an eminence, near the river Nile. Long. 33. 6. E. lat. 13. 4. N.

SENS, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, and an archbishop's see, with a handsome Gothic cathedral. Several ecclesiastical councils have been held here; in that of 1140 the well-known Abelard was condemned. Sens was taken by the allies in 1814, but soon after evacuated. It is seated in a fertile country, at the conflux of the Yonne with the Yonne; 25 miles N. of Auxerre, and 80 S.E. of Paris. Long. 3. 17. E. lat. 48. 12. N. Pop. in 1836, 9929.

SEFULVERDA, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 30 miles N.E. of Segovia.

SICRA, or SINA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a stone fort of a good size. It is the principal place in the central division of the rajah's dominions N. of the Cavery, and carries on a considerable inland commerce. The whole of the cloth made here is used in the neighbourhood. Since the restoration of the rajah, in 1799, the fort has been garrisoned by British troops. It is 48 miles S.E. of Chittledroog, and 84 N. of Seringapatam. Long. 76. 53. E. lat. 13. 56. N.

SENAL, a town of European Turkey, capital of Bosnia, and the see of a Catholic bishop, appointed by the king of Hungary. It is a large commercial place, and is seated on the river Bosna; 130 miles W.S.W. of Belgrade. Long. 19. 15. E. lat. 44. 14. N.

SERAMPOR, a town of Bengal, belonging to the Danes. The houses are of brick, plastered with mortar, and have flat roofs, with balconies and Venetian windows. The inhabitants carry on some trade with Europe, China, &c. But the town is principally distinguished as the early seat of the Protestant missions in India, and as the residence of British subjects who take refuge here from their creditors. It is seated on the W. bank of the Hoogly; 12 miles N. of Calcutta. Pop. about 15,000.

SERDOL, a town of Russia, in the government of Wiburg, on the lake Ladoga; 60 miles N.N.E. of Wiburg.

SERED, or SZERED, a town of Hungary, on the river Waag; 30 m. E.N.E. of Presburg.

SERES, a town of European Turkey, province of Macedonia, 45 miles N.E. of Salonica. It has a number of mosques, and other public edifices, and a manufacture of cotton and linen stuffs. Pop. 30,000.

SEFAO, or SERFANTE, an island of the Grecian archipelago, 8 miles long, and 5 broad, and full of mountains and rocks, in which are mines of iron and copper. The inhabitants are all Greeks, and live but one town, called St. Nicholo; which is a poor place. It is 50 miles N.W. of Naxia. Long. 25. 10. E. lat. 37. 19. N.

SERGAO, a town of Russia, in the government of Niznei Novogorod; 48 miles S.E. of Niznei Novogorod.

SERGIPPE DEL REY, a province on the coast of Brazil, to the S. of Pernambuco. It produces sugar and tobacco in considerable quantities, and has some silver mines. Pop. 120,000 in 1846.

SERGIPPE, or S. CIRISTOVAO, a seaport of Brazil, capital of the above province, seated at the mouth of the Sergippe; 120 miles N.E. of St. Salvador. Long. 37. 9. W. lat. 11. 10. S.

SERIGNAN, a town of France, department of Herault, at the mouth of the Ombre, in the gulf of Lyon; 8 miles S.E. of Beziers.

SERINAGUR, or GUWAL, a province of Hindostan, situated chiefly between 30. and 32. of N. lat., and between 77. and 79. of E. long. It is estimated at 140 miles in length, by 60 in breadth. It is governed by a rajah, under the protection of the British.

SERINAGUR, the capital of the above province, is about three-quarters of a mile long, the houses built of rough stone and mud, and covered with slate, but seldom more than two storeys high. The streets are narrow and dirty, but there are some good shops. It is situate in a valley on the river Aleamanda, which is crossed by a bridge of ropes. On the opposite side of the river, at the village of Ranihit, is a temple sacred to Rajah Ishwara, principally inhabited by dancing women, whose lives are devoted to prostitution, as a religious service. Serinagur is 38 miles from Hardwar. Long. 79. 18. E. lat. 30. 10. N.

SERINGAPATAM, a city of Hindostan, the modern capital of Mysore, is situate in an island 3 miles long, and 1 broad, formed by the Cavery, which is here a large and rapid river, with a wide and rocky channel. The streets are narrow and confused, and the ge-nerality of the houses mean. The city is strongly fortified; notwithstanding which, Lord Cornwallis in 1792, here compelled Tippoo to sign a treaty, by which he ceded half of his dominions, and agreed to pay a vast sum of money to the English and their allies; and, a new war taking place in 1799, the British troops carried the fort by an assault, in which Tippoo was killed. The city and the island have since been retained by the English, towards the support of the late Sultan's family. The palace is very large, and surrounded by a massy wall of stone and mud: it is now the residence of a surgeon. The seraglio of Hyder has been converted into a European hospital, that of Tippoo into a barrack for artillery; the private apartments of the latter are occupied by the resident, and the public ones by European troops. Without the walls of the city are two gardens and palaces; and near to one of them is the mausoleum of Hyder, where rests all that was mortal of this Mohammedan dynasty, consisting of Hyder and his wife, and Tippoo Sultan. The town is much decayed, and, as a capital, must always have been mean. In the space between the city and the two gardens, is the suburb called Shahar Ganjam, which is rapidly increasing on a regular plan. Seringapatam is 10 miles N. of Mysore, and 290 W. by S. of Madras. Pop. 10,000. Long. 76. 50. E. lat. 12. 24. N.

SERINGHAM, an island in the S. of India, in the district of Trichinopoly; celebrated for its Hindoo temple, to which pilgrims from all parts of Hindostan resort for absolution; and here, as in all great pagodas, the Brahmins live in a subordination that knows no resistance, and slumber in voluptuousness that feels no want. At present the allowance made by the British government, for the support of the temple and its establishment, amounts to about 6240l. sterling.

SERONGE, a town of Hindostan in Malwa, celebrated for its manufacture of painted cottons and chintzes. It is situate on the river Cavery; half a mile N. of the fortress of Trichinopoly, and 140 miles E.N.E. of Ougain. Long. 78. 4. E. lat. 24. 5. N.

SERPA, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, with a castle, seated on a rugged eminence, near the Guadiana; 38 miles S. by E. of Evora. Pop. 4000.

SERRAVALLE, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice, with a castle. It has cloth, woollen, and silk manufactures, and a trade in corn, wine, and honey. The cathedral contains some fine paintings, and the church of St. Augusta is a noble edifice. It is situate between two mountains, and at the source of the Maschio; 22 m. N. of Treviso.

SERRES, a town of France department of Upper Alps; 23 miles S.W. of Gap.

at the mouth of the river Rance, about a mile S. of St. Malo, from which it is separated by a narrow arm of the sea, dry at low water.

SERVIA, a state of Europe, lying on the Danube, which within a few years has assumed the character of an independent principality, from that of a dependence on the Turkish empire, 190 miles long, and 95 broad; bounded N. by the Danube and Save, which separate it from Hungary; E. by Bulgaria; S. by Macedonia and Albania; and W. by Bosnia. The climate is less mild than might be expected in 43. and 44. of N. lat., the winter being of considerable length, and spring not beginning till April. This is owing partly to the height of the great ridge of the Argentario or Glubotin mountains, extending along its southern boundary; partly to the number of forests, and the general neglect of cultivation in its interior. The soil is in general fertile, but a small proportion of the country is as yet under tillage. The products are wheat, barley, oats, rice, hemp, flax, and tobacco; also vines, and fruit of various kinds; and in the valleys, and other warm spots, cotton is raised. Mines of iron have been discovered, in several parts; but they are almost entirely neglected. The only manufactures are of woollen, cotton, and hardware, for home consumption. The geographical position of Servia, between Turkey and Austria, and forming with the neighbouring countries, Bosnia, Bulgaria, Wallachia, and Moldavia, a border land between two great empires of opposite creeds, has made this country the seat of a protracted struggle between European civilization, and Oriental despotism. The religion of the Servians, a branch of the Slavonian race, is that of the Greek church, and as Christians the Mohammedan yoke has sat heavily on them. They became subject, from defeat, to the Turks in 1389, from which they raised an insurrection in 1737, but were completely subjugated by the Turks. But before 1806, they made a successful revolt under their general Czerni, or Kara George, who afterwards totally defeated the Turks, and established himself in the government; but in 1814, he deserted the country to the Turks, who placed Milosch over the state, who afterwards raised a successful insurrection in 1815; after this Kara George returned, who was assassinated. Milosch fell from power in 1838, and was exiled in favour of his son Michael; and in 1843, the Servians unanimously chose Kara Georgewitsch as their prince, and the power of the Porte is thus made merely nominal. Pop. in 1842, 1,043,250. Belgrade is the capital.

SESSLACH, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia; 16 miles N. of Bamberg.

SESTO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Milanese; seated on the Ticino, where it issues from the lake Maggiore; 25 miles W.N.W. of Milan.

SESTRE, GRAND, or GREAT PARIS a town of Guinea, on the Grain coast; near which is Petit Sestre. It is one of the largest and most commercial towns in the country. Long. 17. W. lat. 4. 50. N.

SESTRI DI LEVANTE, a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa; 30 miles E.S.E. of Genoa.

SE-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Koei-tcheou. It is situated among mountains, which yield cinnabar and quicksilver; 980 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 108. 25. E. lat. 27. 10. N.

SE-TCHUEN, a province of China, bounded on the N. by Chen-si, E. by Houquang, S. by Koei-tcheou, and W. by Tibet. It is watered by the Kian-ku, and is rich, not only on account of the great quantity of silk it produces, but also in iron, tin, lead, amber, sugar-canes, lapis lazuli, musk, rhubarb, &c. Tching-tou is the capital.

SETEEF, a town of Algier, in the province of Constantina. It was the ancient Sitipha, capital of a part of Mauritania; but scarcely a fragment is left of its former greatness, except the fountains. It is 50 miles S.W. of Constantina. Long. 5. 36. E. lat. 35. 58. N.

SETIMO, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; seated on the Po, 8 miles N. of Turin.

SETLEGE. See SUTLUG.

SETTE, a town of Western Africa, in a district of its name, lying between Loango and Benin. It has a great trade in logwood, sent in vessels to Mayamba; and stands on a river of the same name, 60 miles from its mouth, and 110 N.N.E. of Mayamba. Long. 10. 20. E. lat. 20. S.

SETTILIL, a town of Spain, in Granada. It is situate 8 miles N. of Ronda, and 38 N.W. of Malaga.

SEVENDERGEN, a town of the Netherlands, in N. Brabant; 8 miles W.N.W. of Breda.

SEVENOAKS, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday. It is pleasantly situated on a ridge of hills, and has two churches a meeting-house for Baptists, an hospital, and a free-school, first erected by Sir William Sevenoaks, lord mayor of London in 1418, who is said to have been a foundling, charitably educated by a person of this town. Queen Elizabeth having augmented its revenues, it was called Queen Elizabeth's School; and the whole was rebuilt in 1727. There are also some other houses attached to the charity given by Multon Lambard, Esq. in 1833. Near this town is Kuole, a fine and ancient palace of the see of Canterbury, which archbishop Cranmer exchanged with the Crown for other lands, and which was given by Queen Elizabeth to Thomas lord Buckhurst, afterwards earl of Dorset. In 1450 John Cade defeated the royal army near this town; 16 miles N.W. of Maidstone, and 23 S.E.E. of London.

SEVER, ST., a town of France, in the department of Landes, seated on the Adour; 20 miles E. of Dax, and 69 S. by E. of Bordeaux. Pop. 9000.

SEVERAC, a small town in the department of Aveyron, on the river Aveyron; 23 miles E. of Rodez.

SEVERIN, a town of European Turkey, in Walachia, on the Danube; 6 miles W. of Czernetz.

SEVERINA, ST., a fortified town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, and an archbishop's see. It is seated on a craggy rock, on the river Neto; 8 miles from the sea, and 45 S.E. of Rossano. Pop. 6000. Long. 17. 14. E. lat. 39. 15. N.

SEVERINA, ST., a town of Italy, in the papal states; thirteen miles W.S.W. of Macerata.

SEVERINA, ST., a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, on the river Sarno; 10 miles W.S.W. of Policastro.

SEVERN, a river which has its rise in the mountain of Plynlimmon, in Wales. Flowing first across Montgomeryshire, it enters Shropshire above the Brythen hills, and is navigable in its whole course through this country. It then enters Worcestershire, and runs through its whole length into Gloucestershire. In its course it waters Llanydlos, Newton, Welshpool, Shrewsbury, Bridgenorth, Bewdley, Worcester, Upton, Tewkesbury, Gloucester, and Newnham, where it begins to widen considerably; and, entering the sea, its mouth is called the Bristol Channel. This river has a communication with the Thames, the Trent, the Dee, and the Mersey, by different canals.

SEVERN, a river of Maryland, which waters Annapolis, and enters by a broad estuary into Chesapeake bay.

SEVENDROOG. See SAVENDROOG.

SEVERO, ST., a town of Naples, in Capitanata; seated in a plain, 26 miles W. by N. of Manfredonia, and 75 N.E. of Naples.

SEVERUS'S WALL, commonly called Graham's Dyke, in the W. of Scotland. It is a work of the Romans, supposed to be done by the emperor whose name it bears, to prevent the incursions of the Picts and Scots. It began at Abercorn, on the frith of Forth, 4 miles N.E. of Linlithgow, and ran W. to the frith of Clyde, ending at Kirkpatrick, near Dumbarton.

SEVIQNY, a town of France, in the department of Ardennes; 12 miles N.W. of Retiel.

SEVILLE, a province of Spain, forming the western half of Andalusia, and still retaining the title of kingdom. It has an area of 9500 square miles, with 800,000 inhabitants. The surface is diversified with beautiful plains and hills, covered with vines and fruit trees. Agriculture is in a very backward state, and the manufactures are all on a small scale. The chief towns are Seville (the capital), Cadiz, Ecija, Xeres, Ossuna, and St. Mary's, near Cadiz.

SEVILLE, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, and an archbishop's see; seated on the Guadalquivir. It is fortified by strong walls flanked with high towers, and takes up more ground than Madrid, although it now has not above 100,000 inhabitants. The Phœnicians called it Hispalis, and it is the Julia of the Romans, who embellished it with many magnificent buildings. The Moors built an aqueduct, still to be seen, 6 miles in length. The cathedral is by some supposed to be the largest church in the world next to St. Peter's at Rome; the steeple is of curious workmanship, and extremely high, consisting of three towers, one above another, with galleries and balconies. The churches and convents are opulent and beautiful; of the latter, that of St. Francis is adorned with a handsome public square, in the midst of which is a fine fountain. The university consists of many colleges; and the professors enjoy rich pensions. The royal palace, called Alcazar, was partly built after the antique, by the Moors, and partly in the modern taste, and flanked by large square towers, built with stones taken from the ancient temple of Hercules. Here is a foundry, and one of the largest depôts for artillery in the kingdom. The principal manufactures are silk; and behind the Alcazar is a royal snuff manufacture, which is strictly examined and guarded. The exchange is a square building of the Tuscan order, each front 100 feet in length, and three storeys high. The town-house is adorned with a great number of statues, and there is a large square before it, with a fine fountain in the middle. There are 120 hospitals richly endowed. The suburb of Triano stands on the other side of the river, over which is a long bridge of boats. In this suburb stood the house of the Inquisition; and there are public walks, where most of the inhabitants go to take the air. The country around is extremely fertile in corn, wine, &c., and there is abundance of oil; for, to the W. of the river is a grove of olive-trees, 30 miles in length. Seville was taken by the French in 1810, but they evacuated it after the battle of Salamanca, in 1812. It is 45 miles from the Atlantic, and 212 S.S.W. of Madrid. Pop. 100,000. Long. 5. 59. W. lat. 37. 14. N.

SEVRES, DEUX, a department of France, including part of the ancient province of Poitou. It is so named from two rivers that rise here; one, called Sevre Niortois, flowing W. by St. Maixent, Niort, and Marans, into the bay of Biscay, opposite the isle of Re; and the other named Sevre Nantaise, which takes a N.W. direction, passes by Clisson, and enters the river Loire, opposite Nantes. The department comprises an area of 2500 square miles, with 294,850 inhabitants, in 1836, about one-eighth of whom are Protestants. Niort is the capital.

SEVRES, a town of France, 4 miles W. by S. of Paris; celebrated for its royal glass works and potteries, which are said to produce the finest porcelain in the world.

SEWALICK, a chain of mountains in Hindostan, bordering on the country of Serinagur and the province of Delhi.

SEZSEL, a town of France, in the department of Ain, divided into two parts by the Rhone, which here begins to be navigable; 14 miles N. by E. of Bellay.

SEZANNE, a town in the department of Marne; 27 miles N.W. of Troyes, and 65 S.E. of Paris. Pop. 4200.

SEZZA, or SESSA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; 14 miles N.W. of Capua. Pop. 3800.

SHABUR, a town of Egypt, on the W. branch of the Nile; 48 miles S.E. of Alexandria, and 50 N.N.W. of Cairo.

SHAFESBURY, a borough in Dorsetshire, with a market on Saturday. It returns one member to parliament. It stands on a hill, where water is so scarce that the poor get a living by fetching it from a great distance. It had formerly 10 parish churches, now reduced to four. The other places of worship are meeting-houses for Methodists, Quakers, and Presbyterians; 30 miles N.N.E. of Dorchester, and 100 W. by S. of London.

SHAFESBURY, a town of Vermont, in Bennington county; 10 miles N. of Bennington. Pop. 1885.

SHAHAR, or SAHAR, a seaport of Arabia, in Hadramaut; 110 miles S.S.W. of Shibam. Long. 48. 40. E. lat. 13. 50. N.

SHARJEHANPORE, a town in the province of Delhi, district of Bareilly, seated on the Gura. Long. 79. 50. E. lat. 27. 52. N.

SHANG-HAE, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-su. It stands upon the Woosung river, at about 25 miles from its mouth, and also about 43 miles from the mouth of the great river Yang-tsze-kiang. It is one of the most celebrated seats of commerce of any age, and is one of the four ports to which access has been acquired to Europeans in the late war; and, from its situation, will maintain the most importance in regard to European commerce. The city is approached by the Woosung river, traversed by a prodigious number of vessels of all classes, and navigable for large European vessels. Thus the city has all the advantages of a seaport. The city—that is, the space surrounded by the walls—is separated from the river by a vast suburb, the only one of the city, and busy with every species of commerce. On the other sides extends a cultivated plain, covered with rice fields and villages. Shang-hae has five gates; the walls are high and thick, built of stone and brick, and about four or five miles in circuit; but it is not so densely inhabited as the suburb. It contains no remarkable monument; there is only a public garden, known to Europeans as the Tea Garden, which is much resorted to. This is the most northerly port opened by the treaty of Nankin to European trade, and is now the connecting point between Europe and a large part of China, and consequently it will usurp a large proportion of the commerce formerly distributed among other ports less favourably situated. The Europeans, contrary to the usual practice in China, dwell indiscriminately in any part of the city; but the English have purchased an ancient cemetery, a large space, upon which noble buildings have already risen and are increasing. It is in lat. 31. 22. N. long. 120. 40. E.

SHANNON, the largest river of Ireland, which issues from Lough Allen, in the county of Leitrim, and, running S., divides the provinces of Leinster and Connaught; it then turns S.W., passes by the city of Limerick, and enters the Atlantic ocean between the counties of Clare and Limerick.

SHAP, a village in Westmoreland, at the source of the Loder, between Orton and Penrith. It has become a place of some business, from the visitors to Shap Well, a mineral spring in the vicinity. It had once a famous abbey, which stood about a mile W. from the church, of which little remains, except the tower of its church, and the ruins of a bridge. In the vicinity are some Druidical remains, great stones, like pyramids, from 10 to 12 yards apart, placed almost in a direct line for a mile together, of such immense weight that carriages now in use could not support them; on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, SHAPINSEA, one of the Orkney islands, lying 3 miles from the N.E. part of Pomona. It is 7 miles long and 5 broad. The coasts are level and produce grass and corn, but the middle part is high, and fit only for sheep pasture.

SHARPSBURG, a town of Maryland, in Washington county; 2 miles from the Potomac, and 60 N.W. of Washington.

SHEERNESS, a ville and seaport in the parish of Minster, in Sheppy, county of Kent, on the N.W. point of the isle of Sheppy, and comprises three towns, Bluctown, Bankstown, and Milltown. It is a much frequented and convenient watering-place, and up to the close of the last century suffered greatly from the want of water. The principal feature of Sheerness is its dockyard, one of the most splendid establishments in Europe. It occupies a space of 59½ acres, and has cost 3,000,000*l*. The facilities for the refitment of the navy are of the first order. It is 45 miles E. by S. of London.

SHELBY, a county of Alabama; capital, Raleigh. Pop. 14,721, including 7043 slaves.—Also a county in Kentucky; capital, Shelbyville. Pop. 17,768.—Also a county of Ohio; capital Sidney. Pop. 12,154.—Also a county of Indiana; capital, Shelbyville. Pop. 6659.—Also a county of Missouri; capital, Shelbyville. Pop. 3056.

SHEFFIELD, a borough in West Yorkshire, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday, and returns two members to parliament; situate on an eminence surrounded by a beautiful valley, with a range of romantic hills in the perspective. It has 6 churches, 15 meeting-houses, a Romish chapel, a large infirmary, and numerous charitable foundations. Here are also a large theatre and an assembly room. The houses are well built, and many of them elegant; and few places can boast of more handsome or regular streets, which are well lighted with gas, introduced here in 1819. This town has been long celebrated for its various hardware manufactures, which consist particularly of cutlery ware, plated goods, buttons, &c., immense quantities of which are now exported to all parts of the habitable globe. In the town and neighbourhood are foundries for iron, brass, and white metal; and numerous works are established on the banks of the rivers, for the purpose of preparing the iron and steel for the manufactures, and the neighbourhood abounds in coal. It has received a royal charter for a mayor and corporation. The master cutlers are about 600, incorporated by the style of the Cutlers of Hallamshire. Sheffield is seated at the conflux of the Sheaf with the Don, which is now rendered navigable up to the town. The Manchester and Sheffield, the Rotherham and Sheffield, and also the North Midland railways communicate with it; 53 miles S.S.W. of York, and 163 N.N.W. of London. Long. 1. 29. W. lat. 53. 20. N.

SHEFFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, in Berkshire county; 145 miles W. by S. of Boston. Pop. 2322.

SHELBEVILLE, a town of Kentucky, capital, of Shelby county, seated on Brashan's creek, 12 miles above its junction with Salt river.

SHELburne, a town of Nova Scotia, at the head of a bay called Port Roseway. It extends two miles on the water side, and one mile backward, with wide streets crossing each other at right angles. The harbour is deep, capacious, and secure. About a mile from Shelburne, and separated from it by a small river is the Black town, peopled by about 1200 free blacks, who served on the royal side during the American war. Shelburne is 100 miles S.W. of Halifax. Long. 65. 0. W. lat. 43. 46. N.

SHELLA, a decayed town of Morocco, which none but Mohammedans are allowed to enter; 4 miles E. of Salle.

SHELLIF, the largest river of Algier, which takes its rise in the desert, flows N. through the Lake Titeri, then turns to the W. and enters the Mediterranean to the N. of Mustagam.

SHELTON, a chapelry in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire. It lies on the Grand Junction railway, and the Grand Trunk canal, and encloses the village of Etruria. It has an elegant new church, and is indebted for its existence and prosperity to the Potteries; 2 miles E.N.E. of Newcastle-under-Lyne.

SHEPHERD'S ISLES, a cluster of islands, part of the New Hebrides, in the South Pacific, to the S. of Malicollii. Long. 168. 42. E. lat. 16. 58. S.

SHEPHERDSTOWN, a town of Virginia, in Jefferson county, seated on the Potomac, at the influx of the Shenandoah; 60 miles N.W. of Alexandria.

SHEPPY, an island in Kent, at the mouth of the Thames, separated from the main land by a branch of the Medway, called the East Swale. It yields plenty of corn, and feeds numerous flocks of sheep. It contains the borough of Queensborough and the fort of Sheerness.

SHEPTON MALLET, a town in Somersetshire; with a market on Friday, and a considerable manufacture in silks, crape, and velvet, and formerly of woollen cloth. It has a large handsome church, and meeting-houses for Methodists, Quakers, and Presbyterians, and a Roman Catholic chapel and convent. The town is seated under the Mendip hills; 17 miles S.W. of Bath, and 116 W. of London.

SHERBORNE, a town in Dorsetshire; with markets on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and manufactures of linen and silk. It was formerly a bishop's see, and the parish church, which was the cathedral, and in which are interred the Saxon kings Ethelbald and Ethelbert, is a magnificent pile of building. Formerly here were two other churches, a castle, and an abbey, of which scarcely a vestige remains. Here are meeting-houses for dissenters, a free-school, founded by Edward VI., and other charitable institutions. It is seated on the Parret; 16 miles N. by W. of Dorchester, and 116 W. by S. of London. Long. 2. 41. W. lat. 50. 54. N.

SHERBURN, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Friday, seated in a well cultivated and fertile district, famous for its fine orchards; 15 miles S.W. of York, and 184 N. by W. of London.

SHERBROOKE, a town of Upper Canada, on the St. Francis river, and on the railway connecting Portland with Quebec and Montre 1. 80 miles S. by W. of Quebec.

SHERIFF-MUIR, a heath of Scotland, in Perthshire, near Dunblane, famous for a bloody but indecisive battle in 1715, between the royal army under the duke of Argyle, and the rebel forces under the earl of Mar.

SHERSEL, or CHERCHELLE, a town of Algier, in the province of Mascara, formerly of great importance. It is said to have been anciently destroyed by an earthquake, when the arsenal and many other buildings were precipitated into the harbour, the ruins being still visible at low water. It is built after the Moorish manner, and is famous for its pottery, and steel and iron manufactures; 60 miles W. by S. of Algier. Long. 2. 48. E. lat. 32. 42. N.

SHETLAND, or ZETLAND, the general name of about forty islands, besides a number of small holms or rocky islets used only for pasturage, lying 100 miles N.N.E. of Caithness-shire, in Scotland, between 59. 43. and 60. 52. N. lat. The names of the principal are Mainland, Yell, Unst, Bressay, and Fula. The description given of the largest, or MAINLAND, will give an idea of the others; and the particulars of the climate, inhabitants, &c., are much the same as in the ORKNEYS. Shetland unites with Orkney in forming one of the counties of Scotland.

SHEVAGUNGA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore; 25 miles N.W. of Bangalore.

SHIBAM, a city of Arabia, capital of the province of Hadramaut, and the residence of a powerful sheik; 300 miles E. of Sana. Long. 49. 40. E. lat. 15. 25. N.

SHIELDS, NORTH, a seaport in Northumberland, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable trade in coal and salt. The town extends to Tynemouth on the E., and many elegant detached mansions are erected in the neighbourhood. It has wide and airy streets in every direction, well paved, and lighted with gas. Besides the church, which is the parochial church of Tynemouth, here are 12 meeting-houses for dissenters and Catholics, and a Jews' synagogue; also several valuable charities, libraries, a mechanics' institute, and a theatre. This town, together with South Shields, may be deemed the port of Newcastle; for the largest vessels are stationed here to take in their lading, which is brought down in barges and lighters. It is seated on the N. of the Tyne, near its mouth, and is connected with Carlisle, &c., by a railway; 6 miles E. by N. of Newcastle, and 279 N. by W. of London, Long. 1. 4. W. lat. 54. 58. N.

SHIELDS, SOUTH, a borough in the county of Durham, with a market on Wednesday, seated on the river Tyne, opposite North Shields, with which place it enjoys all the advantages of trade and commerce, in common with Newcastle. It consists principally of one narrow street, two miles in length, with an open square in the middle. Many trading vessels are built here, and it has several salt-works and glass-works. The church, situated on the S. side of the market-place, was rebuilt, except the steeple, in the years 1810-11, at an expense of more than 4000*l*. The other places of worship are four district churches, and also a handsome Scotch chapel, united secession chapel, and meeting-houses for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan, New Connexion, and Primitive Methodists. The societies and institutions, several of which are of recent establishment, reflect great honour upon the inhabitants. It is to a society of gentlemen belonging to this town that the life-boat owed its origin. A large dock has been constructed, and also the Stanhope and Tyne Railway for the convenience of the coal trade. It returns one member to parliament, and is connected with Gateshead by the Brandling Junction railway; 22 miles N.N.W. of Durham, and 281 N. by W. of London.

SHIFFNAL, a town in Shropshire; with a market on Friday. It has a handsome church, two meeting-houses, a grammar-school, a national-school, and a subscription library; 11 miles N.E. of Bridgenorth, and 136 N.W. of London.

SHIN, LOCH, a lake of Scotland; in the S part of Sutherlandshire; 15 miles long, and 2 broad. At its S.E. extremity issues the rapid river Shin, which flows into the head of the frith of Dornoch.

SHIPPENSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania; in Cumberland county, on a branch of Conodogwinnet creek, which flows into the Susquehanna; 21 miles W.S.W. of Carlisle.

SHIPSTON-ON-STOUR, a town in a detached part of Worcestershire; surrounded by Warwickshire, with a market on Friday, seated on the Stour; 14 miles W. of Banbury, and 83 N.W. of London.

SHIRAS, or SHIRAUZ, a city of Persia; capital of Farsistan, seated at the end of a spacious plain, bounded on all sides by lofty mountains. It is surrounded by a wall 5 miles in circuit, with round towers at the distance of 80 paces. The city is built of brick, and adorned with many fine mosques and noble edifices. Here are many good bazars and caravanserais; also a manufacture of swords. This city was the seat of government under Kerim Khan, who erected many of the fine buildings in and near this place. In its vicinity are numerous summer-houses, with gardens; and the rich wines of Shiras are deemed the best in all Persia. The tomb of the celebrated poet Hafiz is in a large garden on the N.E. side of the city, about 2 miles from the wall; and at the foot of the mountains, in the same direction, is the tomb of Sadi; 175 miles S. by E. of Ispuhan. Pop. 40,000. Long. 52. 40. E. lat. 29. 37. N.

SHIRE, a large navigable river of S. E. Africa, a tributary of the Zambezi. It is at present the object of the explorations of the great traveller, Livingstone.

SHIRVAN. See SCHIRVAN.

SUOGR, DJISSR, a town of Syria, with an excellent caravaniserai, seated on the Asi; 18 m. S. by E. of Antioch, and 45 S.W. of Aleppo.

SUOOMSKA, one of the Kurile islands, three leagues S. of Cape Lopatku, in Kamstchatka. Its inhabitants consist of a mixture of natives and Kamstchadales.

SUOTER'S HILL, a village in Kent, situate on a hill so called, which affords a very extensive and delightful prospect. On the W. part of the hill is a tower, erected to commemorate the reduction, in 1756, of Severndroog, a strong fort in Hindostan: it is called Severndroog castle, and contains some of the arms, ornaments, &c., taken from the enemy; 8 miles E.S.E. of London.

SHOREHAM, a borough in Sussex; with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. It is commonly called New Shoreham, to distinguish it from the Old, which lies near it, and is now of little account. It stands on an arm of the sea, the mouth of the Adur, which has been formed into a secure harbour, into which vessels can enter with the tide; and many small vessels are built here. It has a railroad to Brighton; 19 miles W.N. W. of Newhaven, and 56 S. by W. of London.

SHREWSBURY, a borough and the capital of Shropshire, governed by a mayor; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. It is seated on a peninsula formed by the Severn, over which are two bridges, and is surrounded by a wall. Her were formerly a castle and abbey, both now in ruins. It contains 6 churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and meeting-houses for the various sects of dissenters. Here are 16 incorporated trading companies. It is connected by railway with Chester, Hereford, Birmingham, London, &c. Shrewsbury is the chief mart for a coarse kind of woollen cloth, made in Montgomeryshire, called Welsh webs; and for all sorts of Welsh commodities, which are generally bought in a rough state at Welshpool, and finished here. It is also famous for its excellent brawn and delicate cakes; and in the environs is a large manufacture of coarse linens. Here is a free school founded by Edward VI., and afterwards rebuilt and more largely endowed by queen Elizabeth; also several charity-schools, and other benevolent institutions. In 1283, Edward I. held a parliament here, when the lords sat in the castle, and the commons in a barn. Another parliament was held here in 1397, by Richard II. In 1403 a battle was fought in the vicinity between Henry V. (then prince of Wales) and Henry Percy, nick-named Hotspur, in which the latter was defeated and slain. James II. held his court here in 1687; 40 miles S.S.E. of Chester, and 158 N.W. of London. Long. 2. 41. W. lat. 52. 43. N.

SHREWSBURY, a town of New Jersey, in Monmouth county, with two edifices for public worship. It is a place of genteel resort in the summer months, seated near the sea-coast; 45 miles E. by N. of Trenton. Pop. 5917.

SHROPSHIRE, or SALOP, a county of England; 48 miles long, and 40 broad, bounded N. by Cheshire, and a detached part of Flintshire, E. by Staffordshire, S. E. by Worcestershire, S. by Herefordshire, S.W. by Radnorshire, and W. by the counties of Montgomery and Denbigh. It contains 858,240 acres, is divided into 15 hundreds and 170 parishes, has 4 boroughs and 14 other market-towns, and sends four members to parliament for the northern and southern divisions of the county. The soil is generally fruitful, especially in the N. and E. parts, which produce plenty of wheat and barley; the S. and W. being mountainous, are less fertile, but yield sufficient pasture for sheep and cattle. This county abounds with lead, copper, iron, limestone, free-stone, pipe-clay, bitumen, and coal; it has also some salt-springs numerous iron-works, and manufactures of porcelain and flannel. The principal rivers are the Severn and the Temc. The capital is Shrewsbury.

SHUMLA, or SCHOUMLA, a strong town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria. It commands the pass over the mountains, and is 120 miles N.N.W. of Constantinople. It may be considered as a vast entrenched camp, which, if well defended, would be impregnable. The Russians have attempted to take it in 1774, 1810 and in 1823, but failed on every occasion. Pop. 20,000.

SHUSA, a town of European Russia, capital of the province of Karabegh, with 2000 inhabitants, 500 of whom are Armenians, and the remainder Tartars; 225 miles S.E. of Tiflis.

SHUSTER, a city of Persia; once capital of Khuzistan, with a considerable manufacture of woollen stuffs, which are exported to Bassorah, in return for Indian commodities. The streets are narrow and dirty, but the houses are good, and it contains ruins which testify it to have been formerly of great extent and magnificence. It was, before it was depopulated by the plague in 1832, the capital of Khuzistan, but since that it has been removed to Disful. Shuster may now contain about 15,000 inhabitants. It is situate at the foot of a range of mountains, on an eminence which overlooks the rapid course of the Karoon. Long. 49. 2. E. lat. 32. 5. N.

SHUTESBURY, a town of Massachusetts, in Franklin county. After an earthquake, in 1815, a medicinal spring appeared, which is now much resorted to; 80 miles W. of Boston.

and Cambodia, S. by a gulf of its name, and W. by the bay of Bengal. The frontiers of the kingdom have varied considerably at different periods, and its inland boundaries cannot be very accurately defined. At present it extends from lat. 4° to 21° N., or nearly 1200 miles, and from long. 96° to 102° E., or about 350 miles. It is composed of forty-one provinces, each governed by a phaja, or functionary of the highest rank. The Snowy Mountains descend from the Chinese province of Yunnan, and separate into two divisions, between which lies the fertile valley of Siam. The peaks rise to the height of 5000 or 6000 feet. Siam proper is a vast and fertile plain, chiefly watered by the Meinam river, which, like the Egyptian Nile, has its annual inundations, spreading fertility on its banks; but sometimes its floods cause great injury. According to the reports of travellers there are numerous towns and villages on its banks, N. of Bangkok, inhabited by different races of men. The river falls into the gulf, below Bangkok, 800 miles from its source. Ayuthia, or Juthia, the old capital, founded in 1351, was destroyed in 1751, when Bangkok became the royal residence. Ayuthia is now a region of ruins, hidden in the jungle; but a modern town, the second in the kingdom, has lately sprung up around it in a very fertile region, and contains 20,000 or 30,000 inhabitants. The chief port of Siam is Paknam, at the mouth of the Meinam, 18 miles from Bangkok. Chantaburi is the second port. Bangkok is 30 miles from the sea by the windings of the river, and contains 300,000 to 400,000 inhabitants. The population of the kingdom is estimated at about 6,000,000; the Siamese proper amounting to only about 1,900,000, and the Chinese to 1,500,000. The soil produces rice, cotton, and a variety of fruits. There are mines of gold, silver, tin, and copper; and abundance of pepper, aloes, benzoin, and musk. The inhabitants have large foreheads, little noses, plump lips, and black sparkling eyes. The temples and priests are very numerous; the latter are distinguished from the laity by an orange-coloured garment, and by keeping their heads, beards, and eyebrows closely shaved. They have schools for the education of their children, and scarcely any are found among them who cannot read and write. This country has been much oppressed by the Birmans, to whom the king of Siam ceded the W. maritime towns on the bay of Bengal, in 1793.

SIAM, or JUTHIA, or AYUTHIA, a city, the former capital of the foregoing kingdom. It contains a great number of Buddhist temples, convents, columns, and other decorations. It is situate on an island in the river Meinam, 50 miles N. of its mouth, in the gulf of Siam, and 360 S.E. of Pegu. Long. 100. 50. E., lat. 14. 18. N.

SIANG-YANG, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Hou-quang, on the river Han; 530 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 111. 40. E. lat. 32. 5. N.

SIASKOI, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, near the Lake Ladoga; 24 miles N.E. of New Ladoga. Long. 30. 47 E. lat. 60. 16. N.

SIBERIA, a large country, comprehending the northern part of the Russian empire in Asia. It is bounded on the E. by the Pacific ocean, S. by Great Tartary, W. by European Russia, and N. by the Frozen ocean. It extends 3500 miles in length, from E. to W., and 1200 in breadth, from N. to S. Area, 5,000,000 square miles, with a population of 2,000,000. The S. part produces all the necessaries of life, but the N. is extremely cold, almost uncultivated, and thin of people. The principal riches of this country consist of fine skins and furs; but there are also rich mines of iron and copper, and several kinds of precious stones, particularly topazes of a beautiful lustre, magnets of an extraordinary size, and even whole mountains of loadstone. The inhabitants are of three sorts, Pagans, or the natives of the country, Mohammedans, and Russians. The former dwell in the forests in winter, and in summer on the banks of rivers. Their garments are the skins of wild beasts. All their riches are comprised in their bows, arrows, a knife, and a kettle. They make use of reindeer and dogs, instead of horses, to draw their sledges, and live in huts, which they remove from place to place. Those in the southern parts are somewhat more civilized. They have horses with which they go hunting, and their houses, though poor, are not shifted from place to place. The Russians settled here are much the same as in their native country. It is through this vast tract of land that the Russian caravans travel every year, when they carry their merchandise to China. The principal rivers are the Oby, Lena, Irtysh, Yenisei, and Okota. The western part of Siberia is comprised in the Russian government of Tobolsk, and is divided into the circles of Tobolsk Proper, Tomsk, Yeniceisk, and Kolyvan; all the eastern part is contained in the government of Irkutsk, and divided into the circles of Irkutsk Proper, Nertschink, Yakoutsk, and Okhotsk, which last includes Kamstchatka and the islands. Siberia is the place to which criminals, as well as persons under the displeasure of the court, are commonly banished from Russia. Christianity has at present made little progress in this country, though considerable efforts have of late years been made by the Russian government as well as by the British Missionary Societies. Tobolsk is the capital, and the residence of the viceroy.

SICAL, a town of Mexico, on the N. coast of Yucatan; 70 miles N.W. of Merida. Long. 90. 30. W. lat. 39. 30. N.

SICHEM, a town of Belgium, in South Brabant; to the S. of which is a celebrated monastery. It is seated on the Demer; 18 miles E. of Mechlin.

SICILY, an island of the Mediterranean sea, about 165 miles long, and 112 broad, forming part of the kingdom of Naples or of the two Sicilies. Its form is that of a triangle, terminating in three capes; that which is nearest Italy is called Capo del Faro; that next the Morea, Capo Passaro; and the third, which points to Africa, Capo di Boco. Sicily is separated from the kingdom of Naples by a narrow strait, called the Faro; but, as Messina is situated on it, it is called the Faro of Messina. The two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily have nearly the same climate, and the productions are much the same; but Sicily abounds much more in corn, particularly in the valleys of Noto and Mazara. The Val di Demona has more forests and fruit-trees than the two others. The three great divisions of Sicily are named from those valleys; but since 1815 it has been divided into seven intendances: viz. Palermo, Messina, Catania, Girgenti, Syracuse, Trapani, and Calatanissetta. The pop. of each is as follows:—

DISTRICTS.	Pop. in 1798.	Pop. in 1852.
Palermo.....	408,228	468,241
Messina.....	236,532	312,463
Catania.....	289,501	245,967
Girgenti.....	217,877	228,032
Syracuse.....	192,730	239,488
Trapani.....	163,284	173,287
Calatanissetta.....	155,025	168,529
TOTAL.....	1,600,267	1,936,033

The chief towns in the Val di Mazara are Palermo, Marsala, Trapani, Termini, and Mazara; in the Val di Noto, Modica, Ragusa, Noto, Syracuse, and Castro Giovanna; in the Val di Demona, Messina, Catania, and Nicotia. This country produces corn, wine, oil, silk, excellent fruits, and almost every necessary of life in wonderful abundance. The only manufacturing establishments of extent are Palermo, Messina, and Catania; they consist of silk, cotton, and linen, and some woollens, though the wool of the island is of a different quality; to which we may add a few articles, such as hats, cutlery, harness, carriages, and household furniture, made at the principal towns. The commerce of Sicily is comparatively trifling, though, from the variety of its products, the excellence of several of its harbours, and the general safety of its coast for navigation, it might, under an enlightened government, become very extensive. In the darkness of their complexion, and the indolence of their habits, the Sicilians resemble the Italians and Spaniards; and education is in a very backward state, but the new plan of teaching (of Bell and Lancaster) is beginning to be employed with some success. The religion is the Catholic; and the number of ecclesiastics is said to amount to 70,000, exclusive of the monks and nuns. The assembly long dignified with the name of parliament was, until 1810, merely a feudal institution, possessing hardly any marks of the elective franchise. Sicily was successively occupied by the Phœnicians, the Carthaginians, and Romans. In the 8th and 9th centuries it was conquered by the Saracens, who retained possession of the island about 200 years. They gave way to the Normans, who, attracted to Sicily on their progress to the crusades, made the conquest of the island in the 11th century. It passed successively into the possession of France, Germany, and Spain. By the peace of Utrecht, in 1713, it was given to the duke of Savoy, with the title of king; but in 1720 the Austrians prevailed on the new possessor of Sicily to exchange it for Sardinia, and added the former to the kingdom of Naples. The war carried on by France and Spain against Austria, in 1734, transferred the crown of Naples to a branch of the royal family of Spain, in whose hands it remained until the progress of the French revolutionists, in 1799, led to the expulsion of the royal family from Naples. They took refuge in Sicily, where they remained till 1815, when they were restored to the throne of Naples. Revolutionary disturbances occurred in Palermo in 1848; and in May, 1860, Garibaldi, with 2200 volunteers, landed at Messin and assumed the dictatorship of the island. Palermo was soon after stormed, and Sicily embraced his cause. In the following August he passed over to the mainland, and subsequently resigned his dictatorship and the island of Sicily to Victor Emmanuel, who is now king of Italy. Palermo is the capital.

SICLOS, a town of Hungary, with a castle on a mountain, in which the emperor Sigismund was imprisoned; 12 miles S. of Funfkirchen.

SICULIANA, a town in the S. of Sicily. It has a harbour, and a trade in sulphur and wheat. Pop. 6,000. It is 8 miles N. by W. of Girgenti.

SIDAYE, a strong town on the N. coast of the island of Java, with a harbour.

SIDEROCAPO, a town of Macedonia, famous for a gold mine in its neighbourhood. It is 5 miles from the gulf of Contessa, and 40 E.S.E. of Salonichi.

SIDMOUTH, a town in Devonshire, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It is much frequented in the bathing season, and was formerly a seaport, but its harbour is now choked up. It is pleasantly seated on the English Channel, at the mouth of the Sid; 13½ miles S.E. of Exeter, and 158 W. by S. of London.

SIDRA, or SYDRA, a spacious gulf of the Mediterranean, on the coast of Tripoli, anciently called Syrtis.

SIEDENBERG, a town of Hanover, in the county of Hoya; 9 miles S.W. of Hoya.

SIEGBERG, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg, on the river Sieg; 15 miles S.E. of Cologne.

SIBOEN, a town and castle of Prussian Westphalia, formerly the capital of a principality belonging to the House of Nassau. In the neighbourhood are iron-mines, forges, and foundries. It is seated on the Sieg; 24 miles N.W. of Wetzlar. Long. 8. 12. E. lat 50. 47. N.

SIENNA, or SIENNESE, a province of the grand duchy of Tuscany, bounded by the Florentine and the territory of Piza. The soil is pretty fertile, especially in mulberry-trees, which feed a great number of silkworms; and there are several mineral springs. It is 62 miles long, and nearly the same broad, and has an area of 3000 square miles.

SIENNA, a city of Tuscany, capital of the foregoing province, and an archbishop's see, with a university and a citadel. It is surrounded by a wall above 4 miles in circumference. The Gothic metropolitan church is built with black and white marble, and the pavement is of Mosaic work. Sienna is not very populous; it once contained 85,000 inhabitants, but it has declined to 18,975, in 1836. It is adorned with a great number of palaces, fountains, and superb churches. The great area is round, and the houses about it are of the same height, supported by piazzas, under which people may walk in all weathers. The Italian language is spoken in Sienna in its greatest purity. It is seated on three eminences, 26 miles S. of Florence, and 120 N.N.W. of Rome, having railways to Florence and Leghorn. Long. 11. 11. E. lat. 43. 24 N.

SIERK, a town of France, in the department of Moselle, near the river Moselle; 10 miles N.N.E. of Thionville.

SIERRA LEONE, a country of Africa, in the W. part of Guinea; so named from being mountainous, and the mountains abounding in lions. It is situated on the Atlantic, and is distinguished for the colony formed there by the British nation, from motives of generosity and philanthropy. This country is traversed by a considerable river, derived from the interior, called the Mitomba, or Sierra Leone. Its limits are from the Grain coast on the S.E. to Cape Verga on the N.W.; that is, between 7. and 10. N. lat. In the open and plain parts, on the banks of the river, the heat of the sun, before any breeze arises, is almost intolerable; but a refreshing gale constantly springs up about noon, which renders the country supportable. The principal characteristic of the climate is its extreme humidity, no less than 314 inches of rain having fallen during three months of 1838. The seasons are divided into the wet and the dry; during the former, fever and dysentery make sad havoc with human life, and from 1819 to 1836, one half the military force stationed here perished annually. The wet season, from May to October, is ushered in and terminated by stormy weather. The whole tract, on each side of the river, is rich in rice and millet, which is the chief sustenance of the inhabitants; and, upon the whole, it is one of the best countries on the coast. The natives are in general of mild external manners, and noted for their hospitality; but they possess a great share of pride, and are easily affected by an insult. Of all the tribes, those who have embraced Mohammedanism are the most civilized and respectable; and those on the coast are much inferior in every thing, except the art of making a bargain, to those who reside higher up the country. In 1791 an act of parliament was obtained, incorporating a company, called the Sierra Leone Company, for the purpose of cultivating West India and other tropical productions on the banks of the river. The first settlers amounted to 200 white persons, besides a number of free blacks from Nova Scotia. In 1793 the colonists were all put into possession of small lots of land, and a new town, on a regular and extended scale, was begun to be built. The next year a French squadron destroyed the settlement, and captured several of the company's ships: from this disaster they recovered, and a factory was established in the Rio Pongos in 1795. The colony, however, still continued to languish, and in 1808 it was transferred from the company to his majesty. It was soon after placed under the management of the African Institution; and, notwithstanding all its disadvantages, the colony has been rapidly advancing in prosperity, and the population is continually augmenting by the capture of negroes, on their way to the West Indies, by vessels employed to put a stop to the slave trade. The settlement, as regards its original objects, may be said to have been signally unsuccessful; the immense sacrifice of human life, in the pursuit of an unattainable object, has met with no adequate return. It is now the seat of a mixed commission court, for the adjudication of captured slavers. The exports are comparatively inconsiderable, consisting chiefly of ivory, palm-oil, gums, &c. The colony is divided into 6 districts, and about 16 parishes. St. George, or Freetown, on the S. side of the estuary of the Sierra Leone river, is the capital. The pop. in 1839 amounted to about 42,000, all black or coloured, except about 100 Europeans.

SIERRA MORENA, mountains of Spain, dividing Andalusia from Estremadura and New Castile, rendered famous by the wars of the Christians and Mohammedans, and for being the scene where Cervantes has placed the most entertaining adventures of his hero.

SIGETH. See ZIGET.

SIGLMESSA. See SUGULMESSA.

SIGMARINGEN, a town of Germany, with a castle, which gives name to a branch of the House of Hohenzollern. It is seated on the Danube; 18 miles E.S.E. of Hohenzollern.

SIGNAU, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern; 12 miles S.E. of Bern.

SIGLUNA, a town of Sweden, in Upland; 10 miles N. of Stockholm.

SIGUENZA, a town of Spain, in Guadaluara, New Castile, and a bishop's see, with a castle, in which is an arsenal. It had formerly a university, consisting of several colleges. The most considerable structure is the cathedral. It is seated on a hill, at the foot of Mount Atienza; 65 miles N.E. of Madrid. Pop. 5000. Long. 2. 51. W. lat. 40. 53. N.

SIRON, a river. See SIRR.

SIKOK, a large and important island of Japan, 150 miles long, 70 miles broad, with a computed area of 20,000 square miles.

SILAGUTTA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, celebrated for its kitchen-gardens. Coarse cotton cloths are made here, and some tobacco grows in the neighbourhood. It is 20 miles N.W. of Colar.

SILBERBERG, a strong town of Prussian Silesia, 11 miles N.N.E. of Glatz.

SILCHESTER, a village in Hampshire, once a celebrated city, and said to have been the place where Arthur was crowned. There are considerable remains of its walls and ditches, enclosing an area of 80 acres; and two military roads from the S. gate, one to Winchester, and the other to Old Sarum. It is 4 miles N. of Basingstoke.

SILESIA, a province of the Prussian states, formerly belonging to the kingdom of Bohemia. It is 200 miles long, and 170 broad; bounded on the N. by Brandenburg, E. by Poland, S. by Moravia, and W. by Bohemia, from which it is separated by a long chain of mountains: the highest, called Zotenburg, is in the principality of Schweidnitz. There are mines of coal, lead, copper, and iron, and quarries of various stones, besides antimony, saltpetre, sulphur, alum, vitriol, quicksilver, agate, jasper, and even some gems. The principal rivers are the Oder, Bober, Neisse, Queis, and Oppa. The chief manufacture is linen cloth; there are also some woollen manufactures, potteries, iron-foundries, and glass-houses. In this country are a great number of cattle, large studs of horses, and plenty of game in the woods; also a few lynxes, bears, foxes, otters, and beavers. There are many lakes, full of pike, carp, and other good fish; also plenty of bees, which produce much honey and wax. Wheat, maize, barley, oats, millet, and in some places saffron, are cultivated; but its wine is bad, and chiefly used for vinegar. Silesia was formerly divided into Upper and Lower: the former comprising the S. part, where the inhabitants are generally Roman Catholics, and speak the Polish language; in the latter they are almost all Protestants, and speak their mother tongue. The country of Glatz, and a portion of Lusatia, are now annexed to this province, which forms a military division along with Posen, and is divided into the governments of Breslau, Liegnitz, Oppeln, and Reichenbach; containing together an area of 15,711 square miles, and a population of 2,645,166. This country was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the treaty of Breslau. In 1807 it was overrun by the French, but was restored to Prussia at the peace of Tilsit. Breslau is the capital.

SILHET, a town of Bengal, capital of a district of the same name, seated on the Soorma, 120 miles from Dacca. The district is separated from Assam by a range of mountains, and is bounded on the other sides by Muneepoor, Burmah, and Tipperah. Coal has been found in the lower hills, and it exports rice, oranges, and lemons. It belongs to the British, and contains an area of 2861 square miles, and a population of 492,945. The town is agreeably situated, and, from its cool situation, has been used as a sanative station by the inhabitants of Calcutta; 325 travelling miles distant.

SILISTRIA, or DRISTRA, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see, with a citadel. It is seated on the Danube, at the influx of the Missovo, 155 miles N.N.E. of Adrianople. Pop. 20,000. Long. 27. 6. E. lat. 44. 15. N.

SILKENBURG, a town of Denmark, in N. Jutland, with a castle, 18 miles W. of Arhusen.

SILLA, a town of Neground, in Bambara, on the right bank of the Niger; remarkable as the place where Park was obliged to terminate his first journey, after having penetrated 1090 miles in a direct line E. from Cape Verd. It is 75 miles N.E. of Sego.

SILLABAR, a seaport on the W. coast of Sumatra, with a good and safe harbour, 30 miles S.S.E. of Bencoolen. Long. 102. 10. E. lat. 4. 0. S.

SILLE LE GUILLAUME, a town of France, department of Sarthe; 19 miles N.W. of Mans.

SILLEE, a town of Bengal, seated on the Subanrecka, 173 miles W.N.W. of Calcutta.

SILVIS, a town of Portugal, in Algarve, on a river of the same name, 35 miles W.N.W. of Tivira.

SIMANCAS, a town of Spain, in Valladolid, with a strong castle, in which Philip II. ordered the archives of the kingdom to be kept: It is still most interesting on this account, but sad havoc was made among them by the French in 1809. It is situated on the Douro; 6 miles S.W. of Valladolid, and 60 N.E. of Salamanca.

SIMBIRSK, a government of Russia, formerly a province of the kingdom of Kasan. It has an area of 30,000 square miles, with 1,200,000 inhabitants in 1836, the greater part of whom profess the religion of the Greek church. The capital, of the same name, is seated on the Volga; 100 miles S. by W. of Kasan. Pop. above 13,000. Long. 48 22. E. lat. 54. 19. N.

SIMI, or SYMI, (the ancient Syme,) an island in the Mediterranean, between the island of Rhodes and the continent, in a bay of its name. It has a town containing about 2000 houses, built near the summit of a high rocky mountain; 2 miles N.W. of Rhodes. Long. 27. 23. E. lat. 36. 35. N.

SIMMERN, a town of Prussia, in the pro-

SIMOGAY, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, district of Bednore, with a manufacture of coarse cotton cloth; 34 m. E. by N. of Nagara.

SIMON, St., an island of the United States, on the coast of Georgia, at the mouth of the Altamaha. It is 15 miles long, and 3 broad.

SIMONTHURN, or SIMONTORNYA, a town of Hungary, with a strong castle, taken from the Turks in 1686. It is seated on the Sarvita; 32 miles S.S.W. of Buda. Long. 18.52. E. lat. 46.45. N.

SIMPLON, a celebrated pass leading from Valais into Piedmont, over the Alps. It was formed by Bonaparte, and has been considered his greatest work. It commences at Brieg, and terminates at Duomo D'Ossola.

SINAI, a mountain of Arabia Petrea, in a peninsula formed by the two arms of the Red sea. The Mohammedans hold it in great veneration; and here the Greek Christians have a monastery, surrounded by a high wall; and those who go in and out are drawn up and let down in baskets. Long. 34.15. E. lat. 29.2. N.

SINGAPORE, or SINGAPORE, an island at the southern extremity of the peninsula of Malaya, from which it is separated by a narrow channel; and, to the S., it gives name to the narrow sea called the strait of Sincapour. It has a town of the same name. It was ceded to the British in 1824, and was made a depôt for ships passing to China, &c., and in 5 years became a seat of commerce and population almost unexampled for increase. It is inhabited by Chinese emigrants, and has a safe harbour. Long. 103.15. E. lat. 1.10. N.

SINDE, a river of Asia. See INDUS.

SINDE, a province of Hindostan, bounded on the W. by Persia, N. by the territories of the king of Kandahar, N.E. by those of the Sciks, E. by a sandy desert, and S. by Cutch. It extends along the course of the Indus, from its mouth to the frontiers of Moultan, 300 miles; and its breadth in the widest part is 160. In soil and climate, and the general appearance of the surface, it resembles Egypt—the country being an extended valley, confined on one side by a ridge of mountains, and on the other by a desert, and the Indus, equal at least to the Nile, winding through the midst of this level valley, and enriching it by its annual inundations. During great part of the S.W. monsoon, or at least in July, August, and part of September, (the rainy season in most other parts of India,) the atmosphere is here generally clouded; but no rain falls, except near the sea. Owing to this, and the neighbourhood of the sandy deserts on the E. and on the N.W., the heats are so violent, and the winds from those quarters so pernicious, that the houses are contrived so as to be occasionally ventilated by apertures on the top, resembling the funnels of small chimneys. When the hot winds prevail, the windows are closely shut, excluding the hottest current of air, and a cooler part descends into the house through the funnels. By this means are also excluded vast clouds of dust, the entrance of which would alone be sufficient to render the houses uninhabitable. The roofs are composed of thick layers of earth instead of terraces. Few countries are more unwholesome to European constitutions, particularly the lower part, called the Delta. The Hindoos, who were the original inhabitants of Sinde, have been treated with great rigour by the Mohammedan governors, and vast numbers have in consequence retired into other countries. The inland parts of Sinde produce salt petre, sal ammoniac, borax, bezoar, lapis lazuli, and raw silk. Here are manufactures of cotton and silk of various kinds; and also of fine cabinets, inlaid with ivory, and finely lacquered. Great quantities of butter are exported, which is clarified and wrapt up in duppas, made of the hides of cattle. Here are large beeves, fine sheep, and small hardy horses. The wild game are deer, hares, antelopes, and foxes, which are hunted with dogs; also leopards, and a small fierce creature called a shiahgush. This province was governed by three chiefs, called amcers, tributary to the sultan of Kundahar. But these were dethroned by the British under Sir Charles Napier, when the whole country became subject to British domination. The area is about 24,000 square miles, with a population of not above 1,000,000.

SINDELFINGEN, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg, 10 miles S.S.W. of Stutgard.

SINES, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on a cape to which it gives name; 74 miles S.W. of Evora. Long. 8.46. W. lat. 37.58. N.

SING, a strong town of Austrian Dalmatia; built by the Turks in opposition to Clissa, and taken by the Venetians, in 1686. It is 8 miles N. of Clissa, and 14 of Spalatro.

SING-RING, a town of Westchester county, state of New York. It stands on elevated uneven ground, with four landing places for steamboats. The Croton aqueduct bridge is an object of great interest. There are large quarries of fine marble, which are chiefly worked by the convicts in the state prison which is located here. It is considered as a model for such structures, and has 1000 cells. A separate building of marble is set apart for female convicts.

SIN-GAN, a city of China, in the province of Chen-si, and one of the largest and most beautiful in the empire. The walls are twelve miles in circuit, nearly a square, and surrounded by a deep ditch; they are well fortified with towers, and some of the gates are very lofty and magnificent. It has a great trade, especially in mules, which are bred up in great numbers and sent to Peking. Here is a strong garrison of Tartars in a separate part of the city, from which it is parted by a strong wall. It is 540 miles S.W. of Peking. Long. 108. 44. E. lat. 35. 16. N.

SINGLIEF, a town of Russia, in the government of Simbirsk, situate on the Volga; 24 miles S. of Simbirsk.

SINGOR, a town in the peninsula of Malacca, seated at the mouth of a small river, in the bay of Patani. Long. 101. 25. E. lat. 6. 40. N.

SINIGAGLIA, a strong seaport of Italy; in the duchy of Urbino, with a castle and two harbours. It is the see of a bishop, and contains several fine churches and convents, and a mint. An annual fair is held here from the middle to the end of July, frequented by merchants from distant parts. It stands at the mouth of the Nigola, in the gulf of Venice; 17 miles S.E. of Pesaro. Pop. 7000. Long. 13. 15. E. lat. 43. 43. N.

SINING, a city of China, of the second rank, in the western extremity of the province of Chen-si. It has a considerable trade with the Tibetians, particularly in tea. It is 450 miles W.N.W. of Singan. Long. 101. 35. E. lat. 36. 45. N.

SINUB, or SINOPE, a seaport of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia; surrounded by walls and double ramparts, but the castle is much neglected. Diogenes, the cynic philosopher, was born here. It is seated on the isthmus of a peninsula, in the Black Sea; 280 m. E. of Constantinople. During the Russian war, 1854, a Turkish squadron was attacked and destroyed here by the Russian fleet, in a cruel and wanton manner. Long. 33. 55. E. lat. 41. 5. N.

SION, a mountain of Palestine, on the S. side of Jerusalem; of great celebrity in sacred history. See JERUSALEM.

SION, or SITTEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of Valais, and an episcopal see. It is situate on the river Sitten, near the Rhone, at the foot of three insulated rocks, which rise immediately from the plain. On the highest, called Tourbillon, is the old deserted episcopal palace; on the second, denominated Valeria, are the remains of the old cathedral, and a few houses belonging to the canons; on Majoria, the third rock, stands the present episcopal palace. Sion was formerly the capital of the Seduni, and some Roman inscriptions still remain. It is 56 miles E. of Geneva. Pop. 5000. Long. 7. 22. E. lat. 46. 9. N.

SIOUT, or ES SIOUT, a town of Egypt, which has several mosques, and is the see of a Coptic bishop. It is surrounded by fine gardens, and palm-trees that bear the best dates in Egypt. Here are the ruins of an amphitheatre, and some sepulchres, of the Romans. The place is the rendezvous of those who go in the caravan to Sennaar, in Nubia. It stands on an artificial mound; 2 miles from the Nile, and 185 S. of Cairo. Long. 31. 24. E. lat. 27. 25. N.

SIPHANTO, the ancient Siphnos, one of the best cultivated islands of the Grecian Archipelago, situate W. of Paros. It is 36 miles in circumference, and, though covered with marble and granite, produces corn sufficient for its inhabitants; also olives, vines, figs, cotton, and excellent silk, but not in any considerable quantity. The chief articles of commerce are calicoes, straw hats, figs, onions, honey, wax, oil, and capers. Long. 25. 15. E. lat. 37. 9. N.

SMOLENSKO, a government of Russia, on the frontiers of Lithuania. After having been an object of contention, and reciprocally possessed by Poland and Russia, it was conquered by Alexny Michaelovitch, in 1654, and ceded to Russia by the peace of Moscow, in 1666. It contains an area of 21,400 square miles, with 1,050,000 inhabitants; and is fertile in corn, hemp, and flax. Horses, black cattle, and sheep are numerous. The principal rivers are the Duna, Dnieper, Desna, Sosha, Kasplia, and Viasma.

SMOLENSK, a city of Russia, capital of the foregoing government, is situate on the Dnieper, and extends over two mountains and the valley between them. It is surrounded by walls 30 feet high, and 15 thick, the lower part of stone, the upper of brick, and their circumference 4 miles and three quarters. The houses are mostly of wood, and only one storey high, except a few, scattered here and there, which are dignified with the title of palaces. The city is divided, through its whole length, by one straight paved street; the others are circular, and floored with planks. The cathedral stands on an eminence, where there is a view of the whole city. Notwithstanding its extent, it contains only about 10,000 inhabitants, and has no considerable manufactures, but carries on, with Dantzic, Riga, and the Ukraine, a traffic in linen, hemp, honey, wax, leather, furs, &c. In 1812 several severe engagements were fought in the neighbourhood of this city, between the French and Russian armies, in one of which it sustained a bombardment, which destroyed most of the buildings. It is 197 miles S.E. of Novogorod, and 235 W.S.W. of Moscow. Long. 32. 13. E. lat. 54. 47. N.

SMYNNHUSEN, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein; 16 miles W. of Reris-burg.

SMYRNA, a seaport of Asia Minor, and one of the largest and richest cities of the Levant. The goodness of the harbour has caused it to be rebuilt several times, after having been destroyed by earthquakes. It is the rendezvous of merchants from almost all parts of the world, and the magazine of their merchandise. The population is computed at from 120,000 to 150,000 persons. The streets are more open, better paved, and the houses better built, than in any other towns on the continent. The street of the Franks is the finest in Smyrna, and lies all along the harbour. The imports from England consist of woollen cloths, camlets, lead, tin, and hardware; these are exchanged for cotton, coffee, mohair, drugs, galls, raisins, figs, &c. The English and Dutch consuls have Protestant chapels, and taverns are as open here as in Europe. The fortifications consist of a fort, a castle, a mountain, and an old citadel. Smyrna is eight days' journey from Constantinople by land; 25 days from Aleppo by the caravans; six from Konieh, seven from Cataya, and six from Satalia. It is seated at the head of a large bay; 190 miles S.S.W. of Constantinople. Long. 27. 7. E. lat. 38. 23. N.

SNOWDEN, a mountain of Wales, in the centre of Caernarvonshire, and the most noted in the whole region of the Welsh hills. It has several craggy summits, deep dells, moors, and chasms; also two lakes that abound with fish, particularly the char and the guinard. The height of this mountain, from the quay of Caernarvon to its highest peak, is 3658 feet. It was held sacred by the ancient Britons, as Parnassus was by the Greeks. Pieces of lava, and groups of columnar stones of vast size, have been found lying in all directions on the summit of this mountain, which commands a delightful and extensive view. In a clear day, and when the mountain is free from clouds, a part of Ireland and of Scotland, the isle of Man, the mountains of Westmoreland and Cumberland, parts of Lancashire and Cheshire, and all North Wales, the Irish and British seas, and a vast number of lakes, may be seen from its summit.

SNOWHILL, a town of Maryland, capital of Worcester county, which has considerable trade, situate on the Pokoinoke, which enters 12 miles below into the Chesapeake; 30 miles S.E. of Vienna. Long. 75. 40. W. lat. 38. 8. N.

SOCIETY ISLES, islands in the South Pacific ocean, discovered by Cook in 1769; situate between 150. 57. and 152. 0. W. long, and 16. 10. and 16. 55. S. lat. They are seven in number; namely, Huabeine, Raiatea, Tahaa, Borabora, Maurua, Tubuai, and Sir C. Saunders' island. The soil, productions, &c., are nearly the same as at Otahete.

Nature has been equally bountiful in uncultivated plenty, and the inhabitants are as luxurious and as indolent. They are generally above the middle stature; but their limbs are less muscular and firm than those of the Sandwich islanders, whom in many respects they resemble. Though more robust than the Marquesans, they are inferior in size and physical power to the New Zealanders. In person they resemble the Friendly islanders as much as any others in the Pacific. Their limbs are well formed, and they are generally active in their movements, graceful and stately in their gait, and perfectly unembarrassed in their address. They are remarkably curious and inquisitive, and, compared with other Polynesian nations, may be said to possess considerable ingenuity and mechanical skill. Totally unacquainted, till recently, with the use of letters, their minds could not be improved by any regular or continued culture; yet the distinguishing features of their civil polity, the imposing nature, numerous observances, and diversified ramifications of their mythology, the legends of their gods, the historical songs of their bards, the beautiful, figurative, and impassioned eloquence sometimes displayed in their national assemblies, and above all, the copiousness, variety, precision, and purity of their language, together with their extensive use of numbers, warranted the conclusion that they possessed no contemptible mental capacities. This conclusion has been abundantly confirmed since the establishment of schools and the introduction of letters. Multitudes, who were upwards of 30 or 40 years of age when they commenced with the alphabet, have in 12 months learned to read distinctly in the New Testament, large portions of which some of them have in a short period committed to memory. The missionaries, who for a long time laboured in these islands amidst discouragements and disappointments, have at length witnessed the complete abandonment of idolatry. Christianity is now universally professed, and the moral character of the people has been raised by it to a high degree of excellence. It is stated that in 1829 not fewer than 10,000 persons had learned to read the scriptures.

SOCONUSCO, a province of Guatimala, 88 miles long, and nearly as many broad; bounded on the N. by Chiapas, E. by Guatimala, S. by the Pacific ocean, and W. by Guaxaca. The soil is not very fertile, and, being sheltered from the N. winds by high mountains, the air is exceedingly hot and unhealthy.

SOHO, a village in Staffordshire, 2 miles N. W. of Birmingham. It was founded by Mr. Boulton, for the manufacture of every article common to the Birmingham trade, the plated ware, usually made at Sheffield, and of elegant pieces of silver, both light and massive. Here are also made the improved steam-engines now adopted in numerous concerns throughout the kingdom. In 1797 an apparatus for the coinage of copper was employed here by government, and the Bank of England dollars were also stamped at this mint.

SOIONIES, a town of Belgium, in Hainault, near a forest of its name, on the river Sennec; 8 miles N.N.E. of Mons. Pop. 4700.

SOISSONNOIS, a territory of France, in the isle of France, which, with that of Vermandois, now forms the department of Aisne. It abounds in corn, wood, and pastures.

SOISSONS, a city of France, in the department of Aisne, anciently the capital of a kingdom of its name. It is a bishop's see; and the cathedral has one of the most considerable chapters in the kingdom. Here St. Louis, Philip the Bold, and Louis XIV. were crowned. The castle, though ancient, is not that in which the kings of the first race resided. The inhabitants carry on manufactures of coarse linen, stockings, thread, leather, ropes, &c., and some trade in corn. Soissons was repeatedly taken and retaken by the allied and French armies in 1814, when the town sustained considerable injury. It is seated in a fertile valley, on the river Aisne; 30 miles W. by N. of Rheims, and 60 N.E. of Paris. Pop. 7500. Long. 3. 19. E. lat. 49. 23. N.

SOLDIN, a town of Prussia, in the New Mark of Brandenburg, of which it was formerly the capital. It has cloth and woollen manufactures, and a trade in hops. It stands on a lake of the same name; 26 miles N. by E. of Custrin. Long. 15. 7. E. lat. 53. 2. N.

SOLENOF, a salt-water lake of Independent Tartary; 80 miles long, and 20 broad, lying midway between the Caspian sea and Lake Aral.

SOLEURE, or SOLOTHURN, a canton of Switzerland, which stretches partly through the plain and partly along the chains of the Jura; 36 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. Pop. in 1836, 63,196. The soil, for the most part, is fertile in corn; and the districts within the Jura abound in excellent pastures. In the mountainous parts are iron, lead, alabaster, marble, and coal. The inhabitants are nearly all Roman Catholics.

SOLEURE, the capital of the above canton, is surrounded by regular fortifications. The church of St. Urs is a noble edifice of a whitish-grey stone, which is a species of rude marbledrawn from the neighbouring quarries. The arsenal and the town-house, which has two towers, make a good appearance. Soleure stands in a delightful plain on the river Aar; 18 miles N. of Bern, and 30 S.S.W. of Basel. Pop. 4200. Long. 7. 30. E. lat. 47. 9. N.

SOLFATARA, or LAGO DI BAGNI, a lake of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, near Tivoli, formerly called Lacus Albulus. In this lake are several floating islands, formed of matted serge and herbage, with a soil of dust and sand blown from the adjacent ground, and glued together by the bitumen and sulphur with which its waters are impregnated. Some of these islands are 15 yards long, and will bear five or six people, who, by means of a pole, may move to different parts of the lake. From this lake issues a whitish stream, which emits vapour of a sulphureous smell, till it reaches the Teverone. The water of this rivulet has a petrifying quality, which increases in strength the further it has flowed from the lake. Fish are found in the Teverone, both above and below Tivoli, till it receives this lake; after which, during the rest of its course to the Tiber, there are none.

SOLFATARA, a mountain of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, surrounded by other mountains, in the form of an amphitheatre. It has a kind of cavity, above a mile in diameter, which was no doubt the crater of a volcano now extinct. The earth here is warm and white, and, if opened to some depth, is insupportable from the heat and exhalation. The ground is almost every where hollow, and is supposed to have a subterraneous communication with Mount Vesuvius.

SOLFERINO, a village of Mantua, Italy, 18 miles N.W. of Mantua. In 1796, the Austrians were here defeated by the French; and, on June 23, 1859, the famous victory was gained over the Austrians, by the French and Sardinians, which terminated the Austro-Italian war.

SOLIHULL, a town in Warwickshire, 13 miles N.W. of Warwick, and 7 S.W. of Birmingham, near the London and Birmingham railway. Pleasantly situated, and well built.

SOLIMONS, a vast territory on the N.W. part of Brazil, W. of the river Madeira, and S. of the Amazon. It is but little known.

SOLINGEN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Berg, with manufactures of cutlery and all kinds of iron-work, seated near the Wipper; 15 miles E.S.E. of Dusseldorf.

SOLKAMSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Perin; famous for its salt-pits and good horses, seated on the Ussolka, which flows into the Kama; 430 miles N.E. of Kasan. Long. 57. 26. E. lat. 59. 16. N.

SOLLAPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in Visiapour, capital of a district celebrated for mines of diamonds. It is seated near the Kistna; 130 miles S.E. of Visiapour. Long. 77. 10. E. lat. 16. 23. N.

SOLMS, or SALMS, a county of Germany, in Wetteravin, formerly a principality, but deprived of that rank in 1815. It is subject in part to Hesse-Darmstadt, and in part to Prussia. The decayed castle of Solms, the seat of the ancient counts, is seated on a hill, one mile E. of Braunfels, the present capital.

SOLOMON ISLANDS. See DANGER, ISLES OF.

SOLOR, an island of the East Indies; 70 miles in circuit, to the S. of Celebes, and W. of Flores. Long. 123. 53. E. lat. 9. 0. S.

SOLRE LE CHATEAU, a town of France, department of Nord; 7 miles S.E. of Maupeuge.

SOLSERINA, a town of Italy, in the province of Mantua; 17 miles N.W. of Mantua.

SOLSONA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see; seated at the foot of a mountain, 51 miles N.N.W. of Barcelona. Pop. 3000.

SOLTAU, a town of Hanover, on the river Bohme; 28 miles N.N.W. of Zell.

SOLTCAMP, a town of the Netherlands, in Groningen, with a large fort, at the mouth of the river Hunse, which is called Groningen Deep; 17 miles N.W. of Groningen.

SOLWAY FRITH, an arm of the sea, between Cumberland in England, and Dumfries-shire and Kirkcudbrightshire in Scotland. It is navigable for vessels of 100 tons, within 6 miles of its extremity; and the fisheries, especially of salmon, are very considerable. At its head on the Cumberland side, near the river Esk, is Solway Moss. This was a level tract, about 2 miles long, and 1 broad; but in 1771, being swollen by rains, it burst out at the eastern extremity, and spread over a neighbouring valley; by this means the surface of the moss was reduced 24 feet, and sunk into its present hollow form. It was soon afterwards reclaimed.

SOMBRERE, one of the Nicobar islands, in the Indian ocean; 30 miles N. of Nicobar. It gives name to a channel nearly in the middle of those islands.

SOMBRERO, a cluster of uninhabited islands in the West Indies, belonging to the English. The most remarkable of them is a league long, and consists of an eminence, to which the Spanish discoverers, finding some resemblance to a hat, gave the name of Sombrero. It is 80 miles N.W. of St. Christopher. Long. 62. 37. W. lat. 18. 38. N.

SOMERSET, a county of Maryland, to the E. of Chesapeake. Pop. 19,508. Chief town, Princess Anne.

maugh river; 35 miles W. of Bedford. Pop. 649.

SOMERSET, a town of Massachusetts, in Bristol county, seated on Taunton river; 50 miles S. by W. of Boston. Pop. 1005.

SOMERSET, a town of New Jersey, chief of a county of its name, seated on Millstone River; 23 miles N. of Trenton.

SOMERSETSHIRE, a county of England, 65 miles long, and 45 broad; bounded on the N. W. by the British Channel, N. by Gloucestershire, E. by Wiltshire, S.E. by Dorsetshire, and S.W. by Devonshire. It contains 1,050,880 acres; is divided into 40 hundreds and 482 parishes; has two cities, five boroughs, and 27 other market towns, and sends 4 members to parliament, for the eastern and western divisions of the county. The soil in the N.E. quarter is in general stony, and possesses a lofty mineral tract, called Mendip Hills. Towards the centre, where its principal rivers unite, were formerly fens and marshy moors of vast extent, a large portion of which has been divided, drained, and brought under cultivation. On the W. side are the Quantock Hills, with many downs and open heaths; and in the N.W. corner is the sterile region of Exmoor. The S. part, towards Dorsetshire, is high, but well cultivated; and throughout the county, especially in its S.W. quarter, are vales of the greatest fertility. The principal rivers are the Parret, Ivel, Thone, Brue, and Avon. Cattle, nearly equal in size to the Lincolnshire, are fed in fine meadows, about the head of the Parret. The cider of this county is a purer and stronger liquor than that of Herefordshire. It is the universal beverage of the working classes, and the consumption of it within the county is very considerable; some is also sent to distant parts. The chief manufactures are those of woollen, coarse linen, stockings, &c. It is traversed by the Great Western railway, which has a branch to Weston-super-Mare. The county forms the diocese of Bath and Wells, and comprehends the deaneries of Bath, Taunton, and Wells. The assizes are held in the spring at Taunton, and in the summer alternately at Wells and Bridgewater.

SOMERSHAM, a town in Huntingdon, 9 miles N.E. by E. of Huntingdon, in a pleasant and fertile district, with a noble church. Here was anciently a splendid seat of the bishops of Ely.

SOMERTON, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Tuesday. It was formerly a considerable place, and gave name to the county; some of the ruins of its ancient castle now form a part of the Bear Inn. Between this town and Bridgewater is a tract of land, called Sedgmoor, memorable for the defeat of the duke of Monmouth in 1685; 13 miles S. of Wells, and 123 W. by S. of London.

SOMMA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a castle. The vicinity annually produces above 7000 pounds of silk of the best quality. It is seated at the foot of Mount Vesuvius; 10 miles E. of Naples.

SOMME, a department of France, including part of the ancient province of Picardy. Its extent is 2380 square miles. Pop. in 1836, 545,924. It takes its name from a river which rises in the department of Aisne, flows by St. Quentin, Peronne, Amiens, Abbeville, and St. Valery, and enters the English Channel. Amiens is the capital.

SOMMELSDYCK, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland; chief place of the island of Overflakke. It is situate 5 miles E.S.E. of Helvoetsluys.

SOMMERFELD, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, with manufactures of fine cloths, seated on the Lupa; 15 miles S.S.W. of Crossen.

SOMMERGHEM, a town of Belgium, in the province of East Flanders, with a manufacture of lace; 8 miles N.W. of Ghent. Pop. 6400.

SOMMIERES, a town of France, in the department of Gard, with a manufacture of thick serges, seated on the Vidourle; 14 miles W. by S. of Nismes. Pop. 3400.

SOMONOSTRO, a district of Spain, in Biscay, which has been immemorably celebrated for its iron, but the mining and smithies are primitively rude. The steel for swords, for which the Spaniards have ever been famous, is procured from the hill Triano; 11 miles from Bilbao.

SONCINO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Cremonese; 20 miles N. by W. of Cremona. Pop. 4000.

SONDERBORG, a seaport of Denmark, in the island of Alsens, with one of the best harbours in Denmark, and a royal palace, in which Christian II. was confined as a prisoner for 13 years. It is 16 miles E.N.E. of Flensburg. Pop. 2700. Long. 9. 49. E. lat. 54. 57. N.

SONDERSHAUSEN, a town of Germany, capital of the lower county of Schwartzburg, with a fine castle on a mountain. It is situate on the Wipper; 24 miles N. of Erfurt.

SONDRIO, a town of Switzerland, capital of a district in the Valteline. It stands in a romantic situation, at the extremity of a narrow valley, and occupies both sides of the Malenco, a furious torrent, which runs into the Adda; 10 miles N.E. of Morbegno, and 14 S.W. of Tirano.

SONEPOUR, a town of Hindostan in Orissa, seated on the Mahanuddy; 45 miles S. of Sumbulpour.

SONG-KIANG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan. It has a large trade in cotton cloth, which is sent to different parts of the empire. It is situate amid several canals near the sea; 500 miles S. of Peking. Long. 120. 45. E. lat. 31. 0. N.

SONNEBERG, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Meiningen, with a great trade in looking-glasses, nails, whet-stones, &c.; 11 miles N. N.E. of Coburg.

SONNEBERG, or SONNENBURG, a town of Prussia, in the New Mark of Brandenburg, with a castle. It stands on the Lenze, 9 miles E. of Castrin.

SONNEWALD, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, on the river Dober. It is situate 12 miles S. W. of Luckau.

SONORA, a province of Mexico, on the E. side of the gulf of California. It comprises an area of 19,143 square leagues, with about 123,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the districts of Sonora, Sinaloa, and Ostimury. Rich mines of gold were discovered by the Spaniards in 1771, in an expedition against some tribes of Indians. Arispo is the capital.

SONZONATE, a seaport of the republic of Guatemala, or Central America, on the Pacific, situated on the banks of the Rio Grande. It is regularly built, and has seven superb churches, but these and the best houses are deserted in consequence of the anarchy which has prevailed. The inhabitants make and export fancy shell-work. The surrounding district is one of the richest tracts of the state of Salvador, and much sugar is grown and exported. The volcano of Izalco is in the neighbourhood. Pop. 10,000.

SOOLOO, a chain of islands in the Eastern Indian ocean, lying S.W. of Mindanao, almost midway between that island and Borneo. They are said to be 60 in number, and are named from the principal island, which is 36 miles long and 12 broad, and contains about 60,000 inhabitants, who are Mohammedans. It is governed by a sultan, but the legislative power resides in an assembly composed of the sultan and 15 nobles, the former having two votes. The sultan of Sooloo is the ruler of the Archipelago, and is also the legitimate ruler of part of the N.E. coast of Borneo, Banguay, and islands adjacent. The city of Sooloo is similar to that of Bruni or Borneo, built upon piles, and running out in three lines into the sea as far as the depth of 4 fathoms. It is well defended by its forts, and stands on the N.W. side of the island. There are few places in the world more agreeable than Sooloo. The land is fertile and partially cultivated, the scenery beautiful, and the climate warm, but pleasant and equable. The situation of Sooloo renders it a great mart, particularly for pearls, sago, and edible birds'-nests. Long. 121. 15. E. lat. 5. 57. N.

SOONDA, or SUDHA, a town of Hindostan, in Canara, capital of a district of its name. It was formerly an extensive and populous place. The space within the inner wall was 3 miles square, and fully occupied by houses. When Hyder took possession there still remained 10,000 houses, but the subsequent wars have reduced them under 100. It is seated above the Gauts, on the Gangawali; 60 miles N. by W. of Nagara, and 75 N. by S. of Kundapura. See SOFIA.

SOPHIANA, a town of Persia, in Aderbeizan; seated in a valley, 25 miles N.W. of Tarris.

SOPHIENBERG, a town of Denmark, in Zealand, with a royal palace, near the coast of the Sound, 13 miles N. of Copenhagen.

SORA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavo-ro, with a castle, seated on the Garigliano, 46 miles E. by S. of Rome. Pop. 10,000. Long. 14. 4. E. lat. 41. 54. N.

SOHAU, a town of Prussian Silesia, 21 miles E. of Ratibor.

SORAU, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, with manufactures of cloth, and a trade in yarn and linen; 8 miles W. of Sagau.

SORNOZ, or SORNONNE, a village of France, in the department of Ardennes, 6 miles N. of Rethel; famous for being the birthplace of Robert Sorbon, confessor to St. Louis, who founded the celebrated college at Paris called after his name.

SOREL, a river of Lower Canada, which issues from Lake Champlain, and flows N. to the St. Lawrence, which it enters at the town of William Henry.

SORIA, a province of Spain, in Old Castile, bounded on the E. by Navarre and Arragon. Its extent is about 4300 square miles. The breeding of sheep forms a principal object of attention, and there are a few manufactures of linen, woollen, paper, and leather.

SORIA, the capital of the foregoing province, stands on the site of the ancient Numantia; near the source of the Donro; 74 miles E.S. E. of Burgos; it is a dull place. Pop. 5500, chiefly agriculturists. Long. 2. 18. W. lat. 41. 50. N.

SORIANO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra; 17 miles E.N.E. of Nicotera. Pop. 3600.

SOROE, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, with a royal college, endowed with the revenues of a once rich convent; 37 miles W.S.W. of Copenhagen.

SORRENTO, a seaport of Naples, in Principato Citra, and an archbishop's see. It is the birthplace of Torquato Tasso, and stands on a peninsula in the Bay of Naples, at the foot of a mountain of its name; 17 miles S. by E. of Naples. Pop. 8000. Long. 14. 24. E. lat. 40. 36. N.

SOSILA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a large fort; 25 miles S.E. of Seringapatam.

SOSPETTO, a town of the Sardinian states, in the county of Nice, with a trade in dried fruits, particularly figs, seated at the foot of three high mountains on the river Bever; 13 miles N.E. of Nice. Pop. 3200.

SOUTICE, a town of France, in the department of Lower Charente; 23 miles W.N.W. of Saintes.

SOUdak, a town of the Crimen, with the remains of an old fort on a mountain close by the shore. It was formerly a considerable seaport, and stands at the end of a valley, which produces the best grapes and wine in the whole peninsula; 26 miles S.W. of Caffa.

SOUdan. See NEGROLAND.

SOUILLAC, a town of France, in the department of Lot; seated on the Borese, 32 miles N. of Cahors.

SOUND, a strait between Sweden and Denmark, through which ships usually sail from the Categat into the Baltic. It is about 4 miles broad, all merchant ships channel. See SOUND.

SOUR, a river of the Netherlands, which flows from N. to S. through Luxemburg, and enters the Moselle, a little above Treves.

SOURABAYA, a town of Java, capital of a district of the same name, on the N.E. coast. It is situate within the narrow strait formed by the islands of Java and Madura, and is defended by batteries. The houses are good, and some are elegant, particularly the country seats of private individuals. There is a fine arsenal, with other extensive works, calculated for equipments on a very large scale. Vessels also, with their various appointments, are built and equipped at Sourabaya. The French, when in possession of the island of Java, intended to have erected Sourabaya into a port of consequence; large sums were expended in the construction of works for the defence of the harbour, and General Daendels was proceeding in his plans, when the island was taken by the British. The Europeans are few, but more ships are built here than in any other port of the Eastern Archipelago. It is seated on a river which separates the European part of the town from the Chinese and the native quarter. Pop. 24,574. Long. 112. 55. E. lat. 7. 14. S.

SOURI, a town of Persia, in Laristan, situate on the Persian gulf; 115 miles S.W. of Ormus. Long. 55. 30. E. lat. 26. 18. N.

SOSA. See SUSA.

SOU-TCHOU, a city of China of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan. It is so intersected by canals of fresh water, that Europeans compare it to Venice. The country round it is almost unequalled in point of fertility; in consequence of which the Chinese call this city the paradise of the world. The brocades and embroideries made here are esteemed throughout the whole empire. The population is prodigious, and the commercial intercourse with strangers so great, that the trade of all the provinces might be supposed to centre here. It is seated on the Grand Canal, and on a river which communicates with the lake Tai; 560 miles S. by E. of Peking. Long. 120. 0. E. lat. 31. 22. N.

SOUTERRAINE, a town of France, in the department of Creuse; 24 miles N. of Limoges.

SOUTH SEA. See PACIFIC OCEAN.

SOUTHAM, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Monday. The church is a handsome edifice, with a lofty spire. Charles I. slept in this town the night before the battle of Edge Hill. It is situate on a branch of the river Watergall, 10 miles S. of Coventry, and 82 N.W. of London.

SOUTHAMPTON, a borough and county of itself, and the chief town of Hampshire, governed by a mayor, with markets on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. It stands between the Itchen and the Test, at the head of an inlet of the sea, called Southampton water. The great feature of the place is the lines of noble docks, 30 acres in extent, which admit the largest steamers. It is also the station of the Royal Mail Steam-packet Company. This and the railway have greatly added to the opulence of the place. It contains 13 churches, several meeting-houses for dissenters free grammar, national, and Lancasterian schools, Sunday schools, almshouses for 18 poor widows, an asylum for the orphans of soldiers, &c. Southampton is a fashionable place of resort for sea-bathing, and has manufactures of silks and carpets. Three miles S.E. are the picturesque remains of Netley Abbey. Southampton is the birthplace of the celebrated Dr. Isaac Watts. It is 12 miles S. by W. of Winchester, and 71 W.S.W. of London. Long. 1. 24. W., lat. 50. 54. N.

SOUTHAMPTON, a town of New York, on the S. side of Long Island. Pop. 6205.

SOUTHURRY, a town of Connecticut, in New Haven county; 21 miles N.W. of New Haven. Pop. 1142.

SOUTHEND, a village in the Parish of Prittlewell, in Essex, at the mouth of the Thames, nearly opposite Sheerness; much resorted to for sea-bathing, and containing handsome accommodation for visitors. It is 44 miles E. of London by railway.

SOUTHFLEET, a village in Kent, 3 miles S. W. of Gravesend. Some stone coffins, urns, &c., have been dug up here since the commencement of the present century, which evince it to have been a Roman station; probably the Vagniaea of Antoninus.

SOUTHPORT, a chapelry in North Meols parish, Lancashire, at the mouth of the Ribble, and much frequented for sea-bathing, 19½ miles by railway N. of Liverpool; it is connected by railway also with Manchester, Preston, and other principal towns. It has increased immensely within the last 7 years, being adopted as a permanent residence by many merchants and others. The town is excellently arranged, and has many public institutions of interest and utility. It contains 3 churches, a pile jetty 3-4ths of a mile long, a handsome town-hall, markets, &c.

SOUTHWARK, a borough in Surrey, sending two members to parliament; which may be considered as part of the metropolis, being seated on the opposite side of the Thames, and under the jurisdiction of the corporation of London. It is called the Borough, by way of distinction, and contains six parish churches, several chapels of ease, a Roman Catholic chapel, and many places of worship for dissenters, amongst which is that called Surrey chapel, capable of containing 5000 persons. Here are several charitable foundations, particularly the hospitals of St. Thomas and Guy; also the Queen's Bench and Marshalsea prisons, a county gaol, and the terminus of the South Eastern and South Coast railways, &c. See LONDON.

SOUTHWARK, a suburb of Philadelphia, United States, from which it was separated in 1762. It is $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile long, and about the same in breadth. The navy yard, the ship yards, and a marine railway are on the Schuylkill river. Pop. in 1840, 27,548. See PHILADELPHIA.

SOUTHWELL, a town in Nottinghamshire, with a market on Saturday. It is an ancient place, enjoying several privileges different from the county, and has a noble collegiate church. Here are the ruins of a grand palace, demolished in the civil wars of the 17th century. The principal trade is in malt and hops. The town is seated on a gentle eminence, on the small river Greet, and in the midst of an amphitheatre of hills, which are fertile, well-wooded, and picturesque. It is 13 miles N.E. of Nottingham, and 132 N.N.W. of London. It has a railway to Newark.

SOUTHWOLD, a seaport in Suffolk, with a market on Thursday. It is seated on a cliff, near a fine bay, with a harbour to the south, and the Blyth on the W., so that it is almost surrounded by water. A much esteemed salt was once made, and it has also a trade in corn, beer, and herrings. It is sometimes called Sowle, or Sole, and its bay is named Solebay. In this bay was the great sea-fight in 1672, between the Dutch admiral, De Ruyter, and James, duke of York, in which the victory was undecided. It is 26 miles S. of Yarmouth, and 105 S.E. of London. Long. 1. 54. W. lat. 52. 24. N.

SOUTO MAJOR, a town of Portugal in Beira; 14 miles N.W. of Pinhel.

SOUVIGNY, a town of France, in the department of Allier; seated on the river Quesne, 10 miles W. by S. of Moulins.

SOVANO, a town of Italy in the grand duchy of Tuscany; 45 miles N.N.W. of Rome.

Sow, a river in Staffordshire, which rises in the W. part of the county, flows by Eccleshall to Stafford, below which it receives the Peak, and soon afterwards joins the Trent.—Also, a river in Warwickshire, which runs into the Avon near Stoneleigh Abbey.

SPA, a town of Belgium, in the province of Liege; famous for its mineral waters. That called the Old Spa consists of miserable cottages, and is properly nothing but the suburb to the other. The houses of the New Spa are mostly of wood and plaster; but the more modern ones are of brick and stone. The church of the Capuchins, and the parish church, are both seated upon eminences. The names of the five principal wells are Pounhon, Veronfiert, Saviniere, Watpotz, and Tunnélet. The inhabitants are employed in making toys for strangers. Spa was taken by the French in 1794, and afterwards annexed to France; but in 1814 they delivered it up to the allies. It is seated in a valley surrounded by mountains; 17 miles S.E. of Liege, and 91 n. by railway from Brussels.

SPAIN, a kingdom of Europe, 700 miles long, and 500 broad; bounded on the N. by the bay of Biscay, N.E. by the Pyrenees, which separate it from France, E. and S. by the Mediterranean, S.W. by the Atlantic, and W. by Portugal and the Atlantic; with an area of 176,372 square miles, and a population of 12,386,841. It contains the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Estremadura, Galicia, Leon, Catalonia, Granada, Valencia, Biscay, Asturias, Murcia, and Navarre, some of which have been separate kingdoms, and still retain the title. The air is dry and serene, except during the equinoctial rains; but excessively hot in the southern provinces in June, July, and August. The vast mountains, however, that run through Spain, are beneficial to the inhabitants by the refreshing breezes that come from them in the S. parts; though those in the N. and the N.E. are in the winter very cold. The soil is very fertile, but there are large tracts of uncultivated ground; and the superior attention paid to the large flocks of sheep greatly impedes the progress of agriculture. The produce of the country consists in wheat, barley, saffron, honey, silk, salt, saltpetre, hemp, barilla, and ever sugar-canes, with the richest and most delicious fruits that are to be found in France and Italy; and its wines are in high esteem. Wolves are the chief beasts of prey that infest Spain. The wild bulls have so much ferocity, that bull-fights were the most magnificent spectacle the court of Spain could exhibit. The domestic animals are horses (which are remarkably swift), mules, asses, beeves, and sheep. Spain abounds in minerals and metals. Carnelian, agate, jacinth, loadstone, turquois stones, quicksilver, iron, copper, lead, sulphur, gypsum, calamine, crystal, marbles of several kinds, porphyry, the finest jasper, and even diamonds, emeralds, and amethysts are found here. Anciently it was celebrated for gold and silver mines; but since the discovery of America no attention has been paid to them. The principal rivers are the Douro, Tagus, Guadiana, Guadalquivir, and Ebro. Spain, formerly the most populous kingdom in Europe, is now very thinly inhabited; to which various causes have contributed, as the expulsion of the Moors, the emigration to the colonies, the vast numbers and celibacy of the clergy, the indolence of the natives, and the late desolating war. Here are some considerable manufactures, especially of silk and woollen, but these are far short of that flourishing condition which they might attain, being checked by the royal monopolies, which extend to broad cloth, china, glass, pottery, paper, saltpetre, salt, sulphur, tobacco, and some others. The Spaniards in general are tall, their complexion swarthy, their countenances expressive. The beauty of the ladies reigns chiefly in their novels and romances: in their persons they are small and slender. Jealousy is no longer the characteristic of a Spanish husband: the married ladies have here their cortejo, or male attendant, in the same manner. same manner as the Italians have their cleisheo. The established religion is popery; and that execrable tribunal the Inquisition has reigned here in all its horrors, but has been abolished. There are 8 archbishoprics, 46 episcopal sees, and 24 universities, or rather academies. The Spanish language springs from the Roman, but many of the words are derived from the Arabic used by the Moors, who for seven centuries held dominion in the country: their speech is grave, sonorous, and very melodious. In 1808 Spain executed the interest of all Europe by the rapid and extraordinary revolution which it underwent, in consequence of the domineering influence and intrigues of the court of France. The king of Spain, as the ally of the French emperor, in the war with Great Britain, was required, in the beginning of 1807, to furnish a body of troops to assist in the campaign then going on against Russia and Prussia. For that purpose the flower of the Spanish army was placed at the disposal of France, and marched to the N. of Germany, to take possession of the newly acquired territories of that power. However, the war being soon after terminated by the peace of Tilsit, these troops were still detained in garrison at a great distance from their country; and the views of the French emperor towards Spain and Portugal began now to develop themselves. Towards the close of this year, he prevailed on the court of Spain to acquiesce in his projects against the House of Braganza, and to allow a free passage for his troops through Spain, to take possession of Portugal. A large force, therefore, entered Spain on the 18th of October, and proceeded to that country. In the meantime, the agents of France were not idle at Madrid; and, in the beginning of 1808, that city was thrown into the greatest confusion, in consequence of the prince of Asturias assuming the sovereignty, by the title of Ferdinand VII., and Charles IV. his father treating it as an act of rebellion. But as the prince was very popular, and had a numerous party to support his pretensions, the French ambassador urged both parties to refer their disputes to the mediation of Napoleon. While this was going forward, the French armies kept pouring into Spain; and on the 23rd of March they entered Madrid, under prince Murat. The French having thus obtained possession of Portugal, and a great part of Spain, succeeded in persuading the royal family to repair to Bayonne, to lay their case personally before the emperor; but they had not been there many days before they were compelled to sign a renunciation of the crown of Spain in favour of Bonaparte. On the 13th of May they were sent into the interior of France, to the places assigned them by the French government, as their future residence; and the throne of Spain was transferred to Joseph Bonaparte, the brother of Napoleon. The French emperor having now the royal family in his power, and a formidable army in the heart of the country, thought he had acquired quiet possession of this vast peninsula: but in this he soon found himself deceived; for the storm, which had been long gathering, was about to burst forth in all its fury. The Spaniards could not but view with a jealous eye the entry of so many foreign troops into their country, without any reasonable cause having been assigned; and no sooner did they hear of the captivity of their monarch, and the appointment of a new one, than their indignation was roused to the highest pitch. All Spain rose, as if by one consent, on their invaders. Madrid setting the example, notwithstanding the presence of the enemy. A Supreme Junta of Government was established by the people at Seville, who formally declared war against France, in the name of Ferdinand VII. The military force, being small, was augmented by new levies; and their arms were successful, at the commencement, in several instances, particularly on the 20th of July, when General Dupont surrendered with nearly 20,000 men to the Spanish general Castanos. The new government lost no time in seeking the aid of Great Britain, who generously sent them both arms and money. The British likewise sent an army into Portugal, which, by the decisive battle of Vimiera, cleared that country entirely of the French forces under Junot. After these successes, the French army in Spain were under the necessity of retreating towards the Ebro, where they acted on the defensive for some time; and the Spaniards entered Madrid in triumph. About this time also 10,000 Spanish troops, who were in the N. of Germany, effected their escape on board a British fleet which conveyed them to Corunna, whence they proceeded to join their countrymen in arms. Bonaparte, perceiving that his affairs were in a bad state in the peninsula, drew a large portion of his forces from Germany and Italy, at the head of which he put himself on the third of November; and such was his progress, that, after defeating and dispersing the Spanish armies of Generals Blako and Castanos, he pushed on to Madrid, without further opposition, and entered it on the 4th of December following. The British general Moore also, who had been sent from Portugal with an army to assist the Spaniards, was forced to make a precipitate retreat to Corunna, and the army compelled to embark, after sustaining a severe action with the enemy, in which their brave commander was killed. In all probability Spain must now have fallen beneath the power of Napoleon, had not his attention been drawn off by the war with Austria. The French emperor, in consequence, quitted Spain in order to conduct the war in person against that power; and in the meantime exertions were made by the Spanish and British governments to make head against the enemy. The British sent another army into the peninsula, who distiguished themselves in the hard-fought battle of Talavera, on the 27th of July, 1809; but from the exhausted state of the country, and a want of energy in the Spanish government, affairs continued in a languishing state till 1810, when, the war being closed with Austria, the French began to collect a formidable army on the frontiers of Portugal, under the command of Marshal Massena, for the avowed purpose of driving the British army out of that kingdom. But finding it hopeless to attack them in a formidable position which Lord Wellington had chosen, and being unable to furnish subsistence for his army any longer, from the wretched state of the country, Massena at length commenced a retreat, on the 5th of March, 1811, followed by the British and Portuguese army. From this time it may be said, that the British nation, from auxiliaries, became principals in the war, as the Spanish forces, notwithstanding their numbers, were by no means able to stand against the superior discipline of their adversaries. The government now underwent several changes, in the last of which the cortes were assembled, and proceeded to form a new constitution, by which the executive government was placed in the hands of a regency; the Inquisition was abolished; the liberty of the press established, and several excellent laws, tending to meliorate the condition of the people, were recognised. In 1812 the British army once more ventured to pursue active operations in Spain; and the glorious victory of Salamanca, on the 22nd of July, was followed by the most important advantages. Cadiz, which had been besieged by the French for more than two years, was abandoned, and Joseph Bonaparte expelled from Madrid. But, towards the close of this campaign, the allied army was again compelled to retire into Portugal, through the negligence of the Spanish general Ballasteros, and the failure of the attack on the castle of Burgos. In the following year the British general opened the campaign with a most formidable army, consisting of British, Portuguese, and Spaniards, and amounting to nearly 120,000 men. The progress of the allied army was unusually rapid, and on the 21st of June they defeated the enemy's army, of about 70,000 men, in the vicinity of Vittoria, which was followed by the loss of all their artillery, baggage, &c. This battle decided the fate of Spain; and Bonaparte, finding his armies driven from the country, and the war carried into France, thought proper to release Ferdinand; and send him back to his dominions. The war, nevertheless, continued; and the allied army, under their illustrious commander, gained immortal fame in the battles of the Pyrenees, and those of Orthez and Toulouse. After the capture of Toulouse, on the 12th of April, 1814, their victorious arms were arrested by news being brought them of the capture of Paris, and the consequent conclusion of the war. Ferdinnand arrived at Madrid on the 14th of May; but the first acts of his government were to revive the Inquisition, with all the other abuses against which the new constitution had provided, and banish and imprison those men who, to the best of their power, had contributed to his re-establishment. The dissatisfaction and indignation which this conduct excited, produced in 1820-21 a revolution, by which the constitution of the cortes, as established in 1812, was restored. Madrid is the capital. SPIRE, a city of Bavaria, capital of the province of Rhine, and formerly of a bishopric of its name. In ancient times the emperors held many diets at Spire, and it was the seat of the imperial chamber till 1689, when the city was burnt by the French; and it was not rebuilt till after the peace of Ryswick, in 1697. Most of the citizens are Lutherans; but there are 15 Catholic churches and convents, among which the college, formerly belonging to the jesuits, claims the first place. Spire was taken by the French in 1734; and in 1792 it surrendered to the republican troops of France, who evacuated it the next year, but re-entered it in 1794. In 1814 it was ceded to Bavaria. It is seated on the W. side of the Rhine, at the influx of the Spirebach; 54 miles S. by E. of Mentz. Pop. 4000. Long. 8. 29. E. lat. 49. 19. N.

SPIZBERGEN, a group of dreary islands, lying between 9. and 20. E. long., and 76. 46. and 80. 30. N. lat.; having Greenland to the W. and Nova Zembla to the E. The Mainland, or principal island, is 300 miles in length. It was discovered in 1533, by Sir Hugh Wiloughby, who called it East Greenland, supposing it to be a part of the western continent. In 1595 it was visited by Barentz and Cornelius, two Dutchmen, who pretended to be the original discoverers, and called it Spitzbergen, or sharp mountains, from the many sharp-pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounds. The glaciers on the N.E. present a singular appearance, being high cliffs of an emerald colour, impendent over the sea, with cataacts of melted snow, and a background of black conic hills, streaked with white. In the winter it is continual night for four months. The animals are deer, bears, and foxes. To the N.E. of this group are small isles called the Seven Sisters, the most arctic land yet discovered.

SPLUGEN, a town of Switzerland, in the Grisons, seated near the source of the Rhine; 16 miles N.W. of Chiavenna.

SPOLETO, a duchy of Italy, in the Ecclesiastical states, 55 miles long, and 40 broad; bounded on the N. by Ancona and Urbino, E. by Naples, S. by Sabina, and W. by Orvieto and Perugia. It comprises the greatest part of the ancient Umbria, and contains 105,000 inhabitants.

SPOLETO, the capital of the foregoing duchy, and a bishop's see. The houses are in general well built, but the only edifices that have any claim to distinction are the castle, which stands on a hill, and is connected with the town by a bridge, and the cathedral, which is certainly a fine structure. Spoleto suffered greatly from earthquakes in 1793 and 1767. Here are the ruins of an amphitheatre, a triumphal arch, and an aqueduct. It is seated in a country noted for good wine, near the river Tessino; 40 miles E. of Orvieto, and 60 N. by E. of Rome. Pop. 8000. Long. 13. 6. E. lat. 42. 45. N.

It is seated on the river Sow; and at the junction of the Trent Valley and Shropshire Union railways, with the Liverpool and Birmingham portion of the London and North Western railway. Distant from London 132½ miles.

STAFFORDSHIRE, a county of England, 55 miles long, and 35 broad, bounded on the W. by Shropshire, N. W. by Cheshire, N. E. and E. by Derbyshire, S. E. by Warwickshire, and S. by Worcestershire. It contains 791,000 acres, is divided into five hundreds and 145 parishes, has one city and 19 market towns, and sends four members to parliament for the N. and S. divisions of the county. The principal rivers are the Trent, Dove, Sow, Churnet, Stour, Penk, and Manyfold. The soil in the S. part is good and rich, though not without heaths, which take up a large tract of ground: it abounds in coal and iron. The middle is level and plain, the N. hilly and barren, of which much is now cultivated. There are good stone quarries, plenty of alabaster, and limestone. Tin and brass are among the productions in Staffordshire, and there are several smelting and brass-works near the copper mines. Within the last half century material improvements have been introduced into the agriculture of this county; whilst on the rich lands bordering the Trent the dairy has become a source of considerable profit. The trade and manufactures have been greatly extended by the inland navigation, which connects this county, not only with the metropolis, but with the Severn, the Mersey, and the Humber, and the three corresponding ports of Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull. The iron-foundries, blast furnaces, slitting-mills, and other branches of the iron trade, employ great numbers of people. The cotton manufactures are very considerable, and the silk trade is carried on to some extent. The S. parts of the county are distinguished for the manufactures of locks, buckles, steel toys, (particularly watch chains,) and a variety of plated, lacquered, japanned, and enamelled goods. In the vicinity of Stoarbridge the manufacture of glass is considerable. There are also manufactures of tobacco and snuff-boxes, shoes, hats, &c. But the chief manufacture of the county is that of earthenware, for which it has been long and deservedly celebrated, and which may now be ranked among the most important manufactures of the kingdom. The county altogether exhibits one of the greatest examples of British industry. It is intersected by the Grand Junction railway, which passes through the towns of Walsall, Bilston, Wolverhampton, and Stafford. The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway crosses the eastern portion of the county. The canals are more extensive and better ramified in proportion to the area of the county, than in any other district in the world, and are altogether above 250 miles in length; the principal are the Grand Trunk, the Staffordshire and Worcestershire, the Coventry and Oxford, and numerous others. Among its antiquities may be enumerated Druids' Heath near Aldridge, several Roman stations and remains. The Roman roads of Watling and Icknield streets cross the county, and some Saxon and Danish remains.

STAGIRA, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, celebrated for being the birth-place of Aristotle; whence he is called the Stagirite. It is now called Stavros. It is seated on the gulf of Contessa; 16 miles W. N. W. of Contessa.

STAGNO, a seaport of Austrian Dalmatia, and a bishop's see, seated on a peninsula, in the gulf of Venice; 30 miles N. W. of Ragusa. Long. 17. 50. E. lat. 43. 12. N.

STAINPROP, a town in Durham, with a market, lately revived, on Saturday. It is a very ancient town, and contains the remains of Roby castle, one of the most perfect feudal baronial mansions in the kingdom. There are also some extensive lead smelting works at Langley Dale; 11 miles W. N. W. of Darlington.

STAINES, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Friday, seated on the Thames, over which is a new stone bridge. At some distance above the bridge, at Coln Ditch, is the London Mark stone, which is the ancient boundary to the jurisdiction of the city of London on the Thames, and bears the date of 1280; which has probably given the name to the town. The town has of late years been greatly improved. It has a spacious church, meeting-houses for Methodists, Baptists, and Quakers, and a Lancasterian school. It is 16 miles W. by S. of London.

STALBRIDGE, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Tuesday, and a considerable manufacture of stockings. Here is an ancient cross of one stone, 21 feet high, on a base of eight feet. It is seated near the Stour; 20 miles N. by E. of Dorchester, and 112 W. by S. of London.

STALEYBRIDGE, a town partly in the parish of Ashton-under-Lyne, and partly in that of Stockport, Lancashire. The Huddersfield canal passes the town, and it has a station connected with several of the principal railways. The town stands on the banks of the Tame, and derives its name from the family of Staveleights, and from the bridge uniting the counties palatine of Lancaster and Chester. Extensive factories for cotton spinning, and manufactories for various cotton goods, have been established here; 7 miles N.N.E. of Stockport.

STALIMENE. See LEMNOS.

STAMFORD, a borough in Lincolnshire, sending two members to parliament, governed by a mayor, with markets on Monday and Friday, and a good trade, particularly in malt and freestone. One of its parishes, St. Martin's, is situate in Northamptonshire, but the greater part is built on the side of a hill in Lincolnshire, and, when approached from the S. presents an interesting and picturesque appearance. The notable custom of Borough English prevails here, by which the younger sons inherit the lands and tenements of the father dying intestate. Here are eight parish churches, places of worship for Roman Catholics and several denominations of Protestant dissenters, three free-schools, and several charitable institutions. Stamford had formerly a college, whose students removed to Brazen Nose College, in Oxford. It is seated on the Welland, which is navigable hence. It is 44 miles S. of Lincoln, and 89 N. by W. of London. Long. 0. 31. W. lat. 52. 42. N.

STIRIA. See STYRIA.

STIRLING, a burgh of Scotland, capital of Stirlingshire; seated on the river Forth, on a hill which terminates abruptly in a steep basaltic rock. On this rock is an ancient castle, once a place of great strength, and often the scene of bloody contention. The palace, erected by James V., is a stately building, the outside curiously ornamented with grotesque figures. Here are two churches, and a famous grammar-school. In the town and its neighbourhood are manufactures of carpets, shalloons, and other woollen stuffs, and the cotton trade is flourishing. A salmon-fishery, belonging to the town, is let to a company, who send the fish chiefly to the London and Edinburgh markets. Stirling has undergone considerable improvement within the last few years; several new streets have been built on a modern and improved plan on the N. side of the town, and, in the old part of the town, numbers of houses have been rebuilt. From its commodious situation, Stirling commands the pass between the N. and S. part of Scotland. It returns one member to parliament. It is 35 miles W.N.W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 50. W. lat. 56. 12. STOCKHOLM, a province of Sweden, comprising the eastern parts of Upland and Sudermania, or the districts of Roslagen and Sodertern. It has an area of 2736 square miles, with 100,000 inhabitants.

STOCKHOLM, the capital of Sweden, lies in a situation remarkable for its romantic scenery. It is very long, irregular, and occupies, besides two peninsulas, three rocky islands, situate in the Maeler, in the streams which issue from that lake, and in a bay of the Baltic. There are four smaller islands, or rather islets, on which are situate forts or buildings for naval purposes. A variety of contrasted and beautiful views are formed by numerous rocks of granite, rising boldly from the surface of the water, partly bare and craggy, and partly dotted with houses, or feathered with wood. The harbour is an inlet of the Baltic: the water is of such depth, that ships of the largest burden can approach the quay. At the extremity of the harbour, several streets rise one above another in the form of an amphitheatre, and the palace, a magnificent building, crowns the summit. Except in the suburbs, where several houses are of wood, painted red, the generality of the buildings are of stone, or of brick whitened with stucco. There is a royal academy of science, instituted by the celebrated Linnæus, and a few other learned men, in 1741; and also a royal academy of arts. The arsenal contains an immense number of trophies and standards taken from different nations. Stockholm, with a small territory surrounding it, forms a separate government, has its own magistrates, and contained in 1839, 83,885 inhabitants, who manufacture glass, china, silk, woollen, &c. It is 320 miles N.E. of Copenhagen, 1000 N.E. of Paris, and 900 N.E. of London. Long. 17. 54. E. lat. 59. 20. N.

STOCKPORT, a borough in Cheshire, market on Friday; and one of the principal seats of the cotton manufacture, and also printed goods and hats. It returns two members to parliament. The present parish church was erected on the site of the ancient church, in 1813. The other places of worship are a church erected in 1822, a chapel erected and endowed by W. Wright, Esq., and twelve district churches, a Catholic chapel, and nine meeting-houses. Here is a free grammar-school founded in 1487, and also a national school erected in 1826. From its contiguity to Manchester, and the facilities of its canal and railways, Stockport partakes of the same class of trade as that place. It has of late years reached a high rank of commercial importance, though it bears the usual appearance of a dense manufacturing town. It is seated on the Mersey, 7 miles S.E. of Manchester, on the Manchester and Birmingham railway, and 179 N.N.W. of London.

STOCKPORT, a town of Pennsylvania, in Northampton county, on the W. side of the Popaxtunk branch of Delaware river. It stands on Susquehanna river; 18 miles E.S.E. of Harmony.

STOCKTON-UPON-TEES, a borough in the county of Durham, markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. Here are two docks for ship-building; manufactures of canvass and ropes to a considerable extent; also of diapers, huckabacks, checks, &c.; and a trade in lead, corn, pork, butter, sail-cloth, leather, &c. Besides two churches, which are both handsome buildings, the town contains meeting-houses for Presbyterians, Quakers, and Methodists, a Roman Catholic chapel, and several schools and almshouses. It has considerably benefited by the railways, being the terminus of the Hartlepool railway, and also of that to Darlington; has a branch to the Clarence, and also to the town of Middlesborough. It is seated on the river Tees, not far from its mouth; 18 miles S.S.E. of Durham, and 243 N. by W. of London.

STOKE FERRY, a small town in Norfolk, market on Friday. It has considerable corn trade; 36 miles W. by S. of Norwich.

STOKE, or STOKE POGES, a village in Buckinghamshire; 4 miles N.N.E. of Windsor. Its churchyard is the scene of Gray's celebrated Elegy.

STOKE-UPON-TRENT, a borough in Staffordshire, near Newcastle. It returns two members to parliament. It is the principal seat of the potteries in this county. The borough is a peculiar one, consisting not of one principal town and its suburbs, but of a number of scattered townships, market towns and villages, extending $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, by above 3 in breadth, the whole district generally known as "The Potteries." The name implies the general occupation. In the centre of the town is the principal and extensive manufactory of Messrs. Spode & Co. The borough comprehends the market towns of Burslem, Hanley, Lane-end, Stoke, and Tunstall court. It is $\frac{1}{2}$ mile W. of Newcastle-under-Lyne, and 150 N.N.W. of London.

STOKES, a county of North Carolina; capital, Germantown. Pop. 16,265.

STONEHAVEN, or STONEHIVE, a seaport of Scotland, and the county town of Kincardineshire. It consists of the old and new towns, the latter of which is the principal, and is regular, spacious, and well built. The harbour is secured by a high rock and stone pier. Near it are the ruins of the castle of Dunnottar, on a lofty perpendicular rock, almost surrounded by the sea. The town has a manufacture of brown linen, and some trade in dried fish and oil. It is situated 23 miles N.N.E. of Montrose; on the Aberdeen railway.

STONEHENGE, a remarkable monument of antiquity in Wiltshire, on Salisbury plain; consisting of several very large stones, some placed upright, and others horizontally across them. Most antiquarians suppose this work to have been a temple of the Druids, because it is in a circular form, and seems to have been much more regular than it appears to be at present. It has puzzled many diligent inquirers to account for the bringing and placing of those enormous stones; for it is thought no method now known is sufficient to have raised those that lie across to that height. It is 6 miles N. of Salisbury.

STONEHOUSE, a town in Devonshire, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It contains two episcopal chapels, two meeting-houses, a national school, very extensive barracks, a royal naval hospital, &c. It is situated about half way between Plymouth and Devonport.

of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, with considerable manufactures of cotton and linen. Vessels employed in the coasting trade and herring-fishery frequent this place, and some ships sail hence to the Baltic and Ireland with corn. It is situate at the head of Loch Ryan; 26 miles W. by N. of Wigton, to which, with Whithorn and New Galloway, it unites in sending a member to parliament. Long. 4. 57. W. lat. 55. O. N.

STRASBOURG, a city of France, capital of the department of Lower Rhine, and a bishop's sec. It is situate near the Rhine, and the river Ill runs through it, and forms many canals, over which there are several bridges. It has railways to Paris (312 m.), Bale, Mayence, &c. It is a place of considerable commerce, and has manufactures of tobacco porcelain, steel, lace, carpets, cloth, leather, &c. The inhabitants were computed at 50,233, exclusive of the garrison. The principal structures are built of a red stone, dug from the quarries which are along the Rhine. This town, formerly imperial, was taken by Louis XIV. in 1681. The citadel and fortifications which he constructed have been so much augmented, that Strasburg may be considered one of the strongest places in Europe. It was confirmed to France by the peace of Ryswick in 1697. The university, which had been curtailed of its classes during the French revolution, was replaced on its former footing in 1803. The town is entered by six gates. In the cathedral is a clock, which showed the motions of the constellations, the revolutions of the sun and moon, the days of the week, the hours, &c., but which has stood still for some years. Another remarkable circumstance in this cathedral is its magnificent spire, which is 465½ feet high, the highest building in the world. In the church of St. Thomas is the magnificent tomb of the famous Marshal Saxe. It is 65 miles N. of Basil, and 75 E. of Nancy. Long. 7. 45. E. lat. 48. 35. N.

SUDERMANTA, a province of Sweden Proper, 62 miles long, and 42 broad; containing an area of 3470 square miles, and 156,000 inhabitants; bounded by Upland, Westmania, Nericia, and the Baltic. It is the most populous part of Sweden, and abounds in corn, and mines of divers metals. Nykoping is the capital.

SUDERTELGE, a town of Sweden, in Sudermania, with a manufacture of worsted and silk stockings; 16 m. W.S.W. of Stockholm.

SUDROE, one of the Feroe islands, in the Northern ocean; remarkable for a dangerous whirlpool near it, which is occasioned by a crater, 61 fathoms deep in the centre. The danger, especially in storms, is very great; but at the reflux, and in very still weather, the inhabitants venture in boats, for the sake of fishing.

SUEN-HOAI, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li, seated amid mountains, near the Great Wall; 77 miles N.N.W. of Peking. Long. 114. 39. E. lat. 40. 38. N.

SUEZ, a seaport of Egypt, with a castle; seated at the N. end of the W. arm of the Red sea, called the Gulf of Suez. This gulf is separated from the Mediterranean by an isthmus, between 70 and 80 miles over, which joins Asia to Africa, in which are still to be seen remains of the ancient canal which united the two seas. A French speculator, M. Lesseps, is attempting, with the consent of the government, to cut a canal across the isthmus.

The town is situated on a hill, and is without walls, and unhealthy in the summer. It was of considerable importance, as vessels are employed between this port and the Indies; the modities are particularly the coffee of Arabia, which is sent to Suez with Suez is to await the arrival of the vessels, thence to be sent to Alexandria, and in the course of the merchandise consist of lead, wool, cloth of Cairo. The town is surrounded by a sandy country, and is without water. It is now a wretched and unhealthy place; but in the 16th century was of considerable importance. Several vessels are employed in the navigation between this port and Jidda, where the commodities are bartered for Indian goods and the coffee of Arabia. The commerce of Cairo with Suez is carried on by caravans, which wait the arrival, and set out on the departure of the vessels, that is, about the end of April, and in the course of July and August. The merchandise consists in corn, wood, iron, lead, wool, cloth, cordage, &c.; 65 miles E. of Cairo. Long. 30. 0. E. lat. 30. 15. N.

SUFFIELD, a town of Connecticut, in Hartford county; 17 m. N. of Hartford. Pop. 2669.

SUFFOLK, a county of England, 58 miles long, and 28 broad; bounded on the S. by Essex, W. by Cambridgeshire, N. by Norfolk, and E. by the German ocean. It contains 969,600 acres, is divided into 22 hundreds, and 480 parishes, has 24 market towns, and sends four members to parliament for the Eastern and Western divisions. The soil is of various qualities, but the country, in general, is level. Near the shore it is sandy and full of heaths, but abounds in rye, pease, turnips, carrots, and hemp, with numerous flocks of sheep. Copious beds of petrified shells, called crag, which are found in various parts between Woodbridge and Orford, have for many years been made use of for improving light land. High Suffolk, or the woodlands, which is in the inland parts, yields good pasture, which feeds abundance of cattle. That part on the confines of Essex and Cambridgeshire affords also excellent pasture; and to the N. and N.W. it is fruitful in corn. Its chief produce is butter and cheese; but the latter has gained, almost proverbially, the character of the worst in England. The principal rivers are the Store, Waveney, Little Ouse, Lark, Deben, Gipping, and Orwell. It is traversed by the Eastern Counties railway, which goes to Ipswich and Eye, and then enters Norfolk. Ipswich is the principal town; but the assizes are held at Bury St. Edmund.

SUFFOLK, a county of New York, comprising about two-thirds of Long island. Pop. in 1845, 34,579. Chief towns, Riverhead, Sagharbour, Satauket, Huntington, and Greenport.

SUFFOLK, a county of Massachusetts; capital, Boston. Pop. 95,773.

SUMATRA, the most western island of the oriental archipelago, in the Indian ocean. Its general direction is nearly N.W. and S.E. The equator divides it into almost equal parts; the one extremity being in 5. 53. N., the other in 5. 56. S. lat., and the Acheen Head, its N. extremity, is in long. 95. 34. N. It is 1050 miles in length, and from 150 to 200 in breadth; and is separated from Malacca by the strait of that name, and from Java by the strait of Sunda. A chain of mountains runs through its whole extent, the ranges, in many parts, being double and treble; yet their altitude, though sometimes 14,000 and 15,000 feet, is not sufficient to occasion their being covered with snow during any part of the year. Between these ridges are extensive plains, considerably elevated above the surface of the maritime lands. In these the air is cool; and, from this advantage, they are esteemed the most eligible portion of the country, are the best inhabited, and the most cleared from woods, which elsewhere, in general, cover both hills and valleys with an eternal shade. Here, too, are found many lakes and rivers, which facilitate the communication between the different parts. The climate, generally, is not so hot as it might be expected from its geographical situation. Fogs, thunderstorms, and tornadoes are frequent off the coasts. Sumatra is divided into a number of native states, the principal being Menong-kabowe, Acheen, Siak, Palembang, and Lampong. Of these the first, which occupies the central parts of the island, appears to be the chief, but of its history we know but little. The European settlements, Bencoolen, Padang, &c., on the S.W. coast is in the country of the Rejangs. The nation may be taken as a standard of description, with respect to the person, manners, and customs of the Sumatrans. They are rather below the middle stature, their bulk in proportion; their limbs, for the most part, slight, but well-shaped, and particularly small at the wrists and ankles. Their hair is strong, and of a shining black. The men are beardless, great pains being taken to render them so, when boys, by rubbing their chins with a kind of quicklime. Their complexion is properly yellow, wanting the red tinge that constitutes a copper or tawny colour. Those of the superior class, who are not exposed to the rays of the sun, and particularly the women of rank, approach to a considerable degree of fairness, but the major part of the females are ugly. The rites of marriage among the Sumatrans consist simply in joining the hands of the parties, and pronouncing them man and wife, without much ceremony, excepting the entertainment which is given upon the occasion. But little apparent courtship precedes their marriages. Polygamy is allowed; but it is extremely rare that an instance occurs of a man having more than one wife, and that only among a few of the chiefs. This continence they owe in some measure, to their poverty. Mothers carry their children straddling on the hip, and usually supported by a cloth tied in a knot on the opposite shoulder. The children are nursed but little, and are not confined by any swathing or bandages. The original natives of Sumatra are pagans; but it is to be observed, that when the Sumatrans, or any of the natives of the eastern islands, learn to read the Arabic character, and submit to circumcision, they are said to become Mussulmen. The wild beasts of Sumatra are tigers, elephants, rhinoceroses, bears, and monkeys. The tigers prove to the inhabitants, both in their journeys, and even their domestic occupations, most destructive enemies, yet, from a superstitious prejudice, it is with difficulty they are prevailed upon to use methods for destroying them, till they have sustained some particular injury in their own family or kindred. Alligators likewise occasion the loss of many inhabitants; and yet a superstitious idea of their sanctity also preserves them from molestation. The other animals of Sumatra are buffaloes, a small kind of horses, goats, hogs, deer, bullocks, and hog-deer. This last is an animal somewhat larger than a rabbit, the head resembling that of a hog, and its shanks and feet those of the deer; the bezoar stone found on this animal has been valued at ten times its weight in gold. Of birds there is a greater variety than of beasts. The coo-ow, or Sumatran pheasant, is a bird of uncommon beauty. The reptiles are lizards, and flying lizards. The island swarms with insects, and their varieties are no less extraordinary than their numbers. Here, also, are the cabbage-tree and silk cotton-tree; and the forests contain a great variety of valuable species of wood, as ebony, pine, sandal, eagle or aloes, teak, manchineel, and iron-wood, and also the banyan tree. The productions of Sumatra are important. Gold dust, which is very abundant in the interior, copper, iron, sulphur, saltpetre, inferior coal, and naphtha are the principal mineral products. The most important of its vegetable growth is pepper, the average annual produce of which may be taken at 30 million lbs., principally from the W. coast, and is a greater amount than all the rest of the world besides. Nearly all the trade is in the hands of the Dutch, English and Americans. Nutmegs and cloves are other articles largely produced, but as they are of inferior quality, it is probable that the recent alterations in the commercial restriction of the Asiatic archipelago may considerably influence this branch of commerce. Camphor is one of the most valuable of its productions, and being only in the principal grain, kinds, the up-land; but agriculture most advantaged the crops are rice and betel nuts, sugar. Buffaloes are the. productions, and is of excellent quality, growing only in the northern part. Rice is the principal grain, and is of two very different kinds, the up-land, the best, and the low-land; but agriculture is not followed in the most advantageous manner, though some of the crops are immense. Sago, millet, cocoa, and betel nuts, sugar-cane, &c., are all grown. Buffaloes are the most important live stock. Around its shores are extensive coral reefs; and these also furnish a considerable article of export. Sumatra was first visited by the Portuguese in 1509; by the Dutch in 1600, and by the English two years after. The English formed factories here during the 17th century, chiefly in 1685-86; but they were ceded to the Dutch in 1825, in exchange for Malacca. The total population is very vaguely estimated at about 7,000,000; area, 122,500.

SUMBAWA, an island in the Eastern seas, about 200 miles long and 40 broad. It is divided into the districts of Beema, Dompoo, Tambora, Sangar, Pekat, and Sumbawa, all governed by their respective chiefs. The island furnishes sapan-wood, rice, horses, saltpetre, sulphur, wax, birds'-nests, tobacco, &c., though but little trade is at present carried on. In the W. part of the island is a town of the same name, with a good harbour.

SUNDA ISLANDS, islands in the S.E. part of the Indian ocean. The chief of them are Borneo, Sumatra, and Java; the two latter separated by a channel, called the strait of Sunda.

SUNDERBUNDS, a tract of country in Bengal, consisting of that part of the delta of the Ganges which borders on the sea. In extent it is equal to the principality of Wales. It is completely enveloped in wood, infested with tigers, and composed of a labyrinth of rivers and creeks, all of which are salt, except those that immediately communicate with the principal arm of the Ganges. Here salt, in quantities equal to the whole consumption of Bengal and its dependencies, is made and transported with equal facility; and here also is found an inexhaustible store of timber for boat-building.

SUNDERBURG, a town of Denmark, in the island of Alsen, with a castle. It is seated on a strait called Sunderburg Sound; 12 miles E. of Flensburg. Pop. 2700. Long. 10. 0. E. lat. 54. 51. N.

SUNDERDOO, a fortified island and seaport of Hindostan, in Concan; reduced by Commodore James in 1756. It is 36 miles N.N.W. of Goa. Long. 73. 20. E. lat. 16. 3. N.

SUNDERLAND, a borough and seaport in the county of Durham, governed by a mayor; with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. For the exportation of coal, it is next in consequence to Newcastle. Its port, at the mouth of the Wear, will admit vessels of 400 tons; the entrance is defended by a battery, and a pier, on which, is a light-house. Here are several small dock-yards, manufactures of salt, glass, coppers, and earthenware, and a trade in lime, grindstones, and other articles. The commerce and population of this port have been gradually increasing during the last century, the general appearance of the town has been greatly improved, and a new southern entrance to the port opened in 1856. The parish church is a handsome brick building; besides which are St. John's chapel, and the church in John Street. There are also in the town and suburbs 19 chapels not belonging to the establishment, besides several licensed meeting-rooms, and a Jews' synagogue. Sunderland is much frequented during the bathing season; and the neighbourhood, for several SURINAM, a country of Guiana, extending 75 miles along a river of the same name. It abounds with game, and singular animals of different kinds; the toad, in particular, being remarkable for its enormous size and ugly form. The products are coffee, fruits, indigo, sugar, cotton, tobacco, gums, and wood for dyeing. The woods are full of monkeys, and it is said there are serpents 30 feet long. This country was ceded by the English to the Dutch for the province of New York, in 1774. It was taken by the British in 1799, and again in 1804, but restored in 1814. The capital is Paramaribo.

SUMINGIA, a seaport of Japan, in the island of Nippon, capital of a province of the same name, with a castle, where the emperors formerly resided. It is 170 miles E. of Meaco. Long. 139. 5. E. lat. 39. 30. N.

SURREY, a county of England, 37 miles long and 27 broad; bounded on the N. by Middlesex, E. by Kent, S. by Sussex, and W. by Hampshire and Berkshire. It contains 485,120 acres, is divided into 14 hundreds and 140 parishes, has five boroughs, and eight other market-towns, and sends four members to parliament for the E. and W. divisions of the county. The soil is very different in the extreme parts from that in the middle, whence it has been compared to a coarse cloth with a fine border; for the edge of the county on all sides has a rich soil, extremely fruitful in corn and grass, particularly on the N. and W. towards the Thames; but it is far otherwise in the heart of the county, where are wide tracts of sandy ground and barren heath, and in some places long ridges of hills. It produces corn, boxwood, walnuts, hops, and fullers'-earth. Medicinal herbs are raised to a considerable extent, and about 3500 acres of land consist of gardens for the supply of the London market. There are several railways in operation in the county; the earliest, called the Smitham Bottom, was for the purpose of bringing the produce of some quarries near Reigate to Wandsworth by horse power; this has been disused for some years. The Croydon railway is the next in order and has been extended to Epsom. The atmospheric principle was tried on it, but failed. The Brighton and South Coast railway and the South Eastern railway use it as a trunk line, and proceed together as far as Reigate where they diverge. The largest line in the county is the South Western railway which has also a branch to Guildford. The principal rivers, besides the Thames (which is the boundary of this county on the N.) are the Mole, Wey, and Wandle. The spring assizes are held at Kingston, and the summer at Guildford and Croydon alternately.

SURSEE, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucerne, seated on the river Sur, near the lake of Sempach; 12 miles N.W. of Lucerne.

Sus, a river of Morocco, which rises in Mount Atlas, flows through the kingdom of Sus, and enters the Atlantic at Messa. Its annual inundations enrich the country.

Sus, Suz, ZAHARA-SUZ, or SUSE, an independent province of western Africa, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, N. by Morocco Proper, E. by Tafilet, and S. by Darah. It is a flat country, abounding in corn, sugar-canes, and dates. The inhabitants, who are chiefly Berbers, or ancient natives, are distinguished by their industry, and many of them who live in towns become opulent, and are much more polite than the natives of Fez and Morocco. In the mountainous part they are entirely free, and are governed by their own chiefs. It is represented as affording a great field for European commerce, and some attention has recently been drawn to this quarter. The principal town is Tarudant.

SUSA, or SOUS, a seaport of Tunis, the chief mart of the kingdom for oil and linen, and formerly a place of some repute; near it are considerable remains of ancient buildings. It stands on the E. coast, 75 miles S.E. of Tunis. Long. 11. 15. E. lat. 35. 40. N.

SUSA, a province of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, consisting of a broad valley interspersed with steep rocks. It has an area of 700 square miles, with 65,000 inhabitants.

SUSA, a town of Piedmont, with a strong fort, called Brunette. Here are four churches and several religious houses, and near it is a triumphal arch to the honour of Augustus Cæsar. It is seated on the Doria, among pleasant mountains, and is the principal passage out of France into Italy. It was taken by the French in 1799, but was restored in 1814; 23 miles W.N.W. of Turin. Pop. 1700. Long. 7. 16. E. lat. 45. 10. N.

SUSDAL, a town of Russia, in the government of Volodimir, and a bishop's see. It is built of wood. It is seated on the Nerl, 90 miles N.E. of Moscow. Long. 40. 25. E. lat. 56. 26. N.

SUSQUEHANNA, a river of the United States, which issues from the lake Otsego. It crosses three times the line that divides the state of New York from Pennsylvania, after which it flows S.E. to Wilkesbarre, and then S.W. to Sunbury, where it meets the W. branch of the Susquehanna. It then flows by Harrisburg to Havre de Grace, where it enters the head of Chesapeake bay, after a course of 450 miles.

SUSSAC, a town of France, department of Upper Vienne, 15 miles S.E. of Limoges.

SUSSEX, a county of England, 70 miles long, and 28 where broadest; bounded on the N. by Surrey, N.E. and E. by Kent, S. by the English Channel, and W. by Hampshire. It contains 935,040 acres, is divided into six rapes, subdivided into 65 small hundreds, and 342 parishes. It sends four members to parliament for the eastern and western divisions of the county. The soil is various; that of the downs, and thence to the sea, is fertile in corn and grass, the latter feeding sheep, whose wool is remarkably fine; the middle abounds with meadows and rich arable ground, and the N. side is shaded with extensive woods, that used to supply fuel for the iron-works when they were in a flourishing state. The chief commodities are corn, malt, cattle, wool, wood, iron, chalk, and glass. Sussex is not distinguished for any manufacture but that of gunpowder, at Battle, and of needles, at Chichester. It communicates with the metropolis, and the general railway system by means of the Brighton and South Coast railways and their branches. These extend to Hastings and Rye on the east, and to Portsmouth on the west. The principal rivers are the Arun, Adar, Ouse, and Rother. Chichester is the capital, but the spring assizes are held at Horsham, and the summer at Lewes.

SUSSEX, a county of New Jersey; capital, Newton. Pop. in 1840, 21,770.—Also a county in Delaware; capital, George-town. Pop. 25,093.—Also a county in Virginia; capital, Sussex Court House. Pop. 11,229.

SUSTER. See TOSTAR.

SUTREEN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Limburg; 2 miles from the river Meuse, and 10 S. of Ruremonde.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE, a county of Scotland, 52 miles long, and 50 broad; bounded on the N. by the North sea, E. by Caithness-shire and the German ocean, S. by the frith of Dornoch and Ross-shire, and W. by the Minch. It is divided into 14 parishes. It returns one member to parliament. Some parts of this county, called forests, are trackless deserts, destitute of trees; or bleak mountains, abounding with wild roes. In these parts there are few inhabitants, and no villages; but along the frith of Dornoch the country is populous and well cultivated. It has abundance of ironstone, limestone, and slate, and many veins of lead-ore. Within the last 30 years the most important improvements have been effected in this county. New roads have been formed and bridges erected to facilitate the communication with other parts of the country; the feudal system, which had been tenaciously preserved here, long after it had been banished from other parts of the country, has at length been superseded, and almost all the lands, having been disencumbered of the superfluous tenants by whom they were held under the tenure of military service, are now occupied by active improvers. Dornoch is the county town.

SUTLEJ, or SETLEGE, (ancient Hyphasis,) a large river of N.W. India, tributary to the Indus, and scarcely inferior to it in magnitude. It rises in Chinese Tartary; but the true source is unknown. It has been traced as far as Shipkee, on the Chinese frontier, at an elevation of 9267 feet. Flowing to the southwest, it forms the eastern boundary of Lahore, and is the eastern stream of the Punjab. It receives the Chunaub (Acesines,) the Behoot (Hydaspes,) and the Ravee (Hydraotes,) and falls into the Indus. The rapidity of its course prevents it from being used for navigation.

SURAT, a town of the Papal states, in the patrimony of St. Peter, seated on the Puzzola; 22 miles N.W. of Rome.

SUTTON, a town of Massachusetts, in Worcester county; 10 miles S. by E. of Worcester, and 46 W.S.W. of Boston. Pop. 2370.

SUTTON COLEFIELD, a corporate town in Warwickshire, with a market on Monday. It is situate in the N.W. part of the county, on a bleak eminence, surrounded by a rather barren soil; but the air is excellent, and the prospects from the high lands extensive and picturesque. Here is a stately Gothic church, and a neat Baptist meeting-house. In 1826 corporation schools were established, and almshouses have since been erected for five poor widows and as many widowers. The inhabitants have the privilege of free pasturage in a large well-wooded tract of land, called Sutton Park. Hardware forms the principal article of trade; 26 miles N.W. by W. of Warwick, and 110 N.W. of London.

SUTTON-UPON-TRENT, a small town in Nottinghamshire, seated on the Trent; 6 miles S. E. of Tuxford.

SUZANNE, St., a town of France, in the department of Mayenne; with a considerable pepper manufacture; 24 miles W. of Mans.

SVEABORO, a strong fortress of Sweden, built on several rocky islets in the gulf of Finland. In 1808 it surrendered to the Russians. It is 3 miles S. of Helsingfors.

SVENBORG, a seaport of Denmark, in the island of Funen, with the best harbour in the island. Here are manufactures of woolen and linen; 22 miles S. of Odensee. Long. 10. 37. E. lat. 55. 9. N.

SWAFFHAM, a town of Norfolk, with a market on Saturday, noted for butter. The church is handsome, and in the form of a cathedral. The other places of worship are meeting-houses for Baptists and Quakers. It is seated on a hill; 27 miles W. of Norwich, and 93 N.E. of London.

SWALE, a river in Yorkshire, which rises on the confines of Westmoreland, flows E. by Richmond, and then S.E. to its junction with the Ure, a little below Aldborough, where their united stream forms the Ouse. This river was held sacred by the Saxons, from the circumstance of upwards of 10,000 persons having been baptized in it by Paulinus, archbishop of York, upon their conversion to Christianity.

SWALLY, a town of Hindostan, in Guzerat, with a harbour, where ships receive and deliver their cargoes for the merchants of Surat. It is seated near the gulf of Cambay; 15 miles W. of Surat. Long. 72. 33. E. lat. 21. 10. N.

SWANSBOROUGH, a town of North Carolina; chief of Onslow county, to the N.E. of Wilmington; 40 miles S.S.W. of Newbern.

SWANSEA, a thriving seaport of Glamorganshire, on the western bank of the river Tawy, and on the line of the Swansea canal and the Oystermouth railway; there is another railway to the Mumbles; markets on Wednesday and Saturday. The town, finely situated on the beautiful semicircular bay of Swansea, has a handsome appearance. The town hall, an elegant modern edifice is erected within the enclosure of the ancient castle, of which only a massive and lofty tower now exists. The harbour is one of the most beautiful and secure in the kingdom, and will receive vessels of 300 tons at the quays. The principal business carried on here is the smelting of copper, which is brought here from all parts of the world, Cornwall, Ireland, Cuba, Chili, and South Australia. Ship-building is also carried on, and there is a trade in corn, coal, timber, and other articles. It has become of some note as a watering place, and has good accommodation for visitors. There are two churches, dissenting chapels are numerous, a free grammar-school, a house of correction, a new and commodious market-place. In conjunction with Neath, Llonghor, Aberavon, and Kenfig, it returns one member to parliament. It is 23 miles W.S.W. of Merthyr-Tydvil. Lat. 51. 37. N. Long. 3. 56. W.

SWARTREBERG, a town of Sweden, in West Gothland; 18 miles N.W. of Uddevalla.

SWARTSLUYS, a town and fortress of the Netherlands, in Overysse, seated on the Vecht, 4 miles from its mouth, and 8 N. of Zwoll.

SWEDEN, a kingdom of Europe, extending 1000 miles from N. to S., and 300 from E. to W., bounded on the N. by Norwegian Lapland, E. by Russia, S. by the gulf of Finland and the Baltic, and W. by the Sound, the Categat, and Norway. It was formerly divided into five general parts; Sweden Proper, Gothland, Nordland, Lapland, and Finland, and each of these subdivided into provinces. Sweden Proper contained Upland, Sudermania, Nericia, Westmania, and Dalecarlia. Gothland included East Gothland, Smaland, West Gothland, Wermeland, Bahus, Dalia, Schönon, Halland, Blekingen, and the Isles of Gothland and Oeland. Nordland contained Gesticia, Helsingia, Medelpadia, Jemtia, Angermania, and W. Bothnia. Swedish Lapland comprised Umea, Piten, Lulea, Tornea, and Kemijoki; these have no towns, and take their names from rivers that rise near the borders of Norway and flow into the gulf of Bothnia. Finland contained Finland Proper, E. Bothnia, Tavasteland, Nyland, Savolax, and part of Kymene, and Carolia. The greater part of Finland, however, was ceded to Russia in 1808, but in 1814, on ceding the small province of Swedish Pomerania, it acquired Norway, including which, and Norwegian Lapland, the total extent of surface may be computed at 343,000 square miles, with a population scarcely exceeding 3,300,000. The whole country is now divided into 23 governments; Umea, Hernosand, Gefleborg, Upsal, Stockholm, Westeras, Nyköping, Örebro, Stora Kopparberg or Fahlun, Carlstadt, Lindköping, Jonköping, Kronoborg or Vexico, Calmar, Carlserona, Senaraborg, Elfsborg, Gottenburg, Halmstadt, Christianstadt, Malmohus, and Wisby. Though enclosed by mountains on the W. and N., it is in general a very flat country; and it is remarkable, that along the whole road from Gottenburg in the W. to Stockholm in the E. there is not a single acclivity of consequence, till within a few miles of the latter. It is well watered by rivers, (though not a single navigable one worth mentioning,) numerous lakes, and inland pieces of water, on the banks of which the palaces and villas are usually built. At Stockholm, spring and autumn are scarcely to be perceived; for winter continues nine months, and summer during the remaining three. In winter the cold is excessive, and the heat in summer is considerable, the air being serene all that time. During this season, all the rocks are quite covered with flowers, and the gardens have plenty of fruits. The trees are early in blossoming, the soil being fat and sulphureous; but the fruits have not so good a taste as in more southern countries. The animals are horses, cows, hogs, goats, sheep, elks, reindeer, bears, wolves, foxes, wild cats, and squirrels. The horses are so little and feeble that seven are put to a travelling carriage, four a-breast in the first line, and three in the second; but a lame or foundered horse is seldom to be seen, which is attributed, in a great degree, to the manner of stabling them on perforated boards, without litter. Here are several sorts of fowls; and partridges, woodcocks, and falcons in great plenty. In some parts are rich silver, copper, and iron mines, and vast forests of timber trees. The articles of export are boards, gunpowder, leather, iron, copper, tallow, skins, pitch, resin, and masts; and the imports, salt, brandy, wine, linen cloth, stuffs, tobacco, sugar, spice, and paper. The inhabitants are of a robust constitution, and able to sustain the hardest labour. They are, however, more polished than formerly, and have several public schools and colleges, where the arts and sciences are taught. The houses are generally of wood, with very little art in their construction. The roofs in many places are covered with turf, on which their goats often feed. The form of the Swedish government has frequently varied. Before the accession of Gustavus I. it was an elective monarchy. By the union of Calmar in 1397, it was stipulated that the same monarch should rule over Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; and hence Sweden became merely a tributary kingdom to Denmark. From this state of subjection to a tyrannical foreign yoke it was rescued by Gustavus Vasa, on whom the Swedes, in 1523, conferred the sovereignty, and made the crown hereditary in his male issue. He was intrusted with great prerogatives; and these were augmented by Gustavus Adolphus, the right of succession being extended, at the same time, to the female line. In the minority of his daughter Christina, the regal powers were greatly circumscribed, and the nobles acquired such an exorbitant authority as gave great umbrage to the clergy, citizens, and peasants. This proved a favourable opportunity for Charles XI. to obtain from the states a formal cession of absolute sovereignty, which quietly devolved upon his son Charles XII. Upon the death of the latter, the Swedes conferred the crown upon Ulrica Eleonora, his youngest sister, stipulating, at the same time, great limits to the prerogative. Ulrica resigned the crown to her consort Frederic I. From this period, the Swedish monarchy was the most limited one in Europe, till 1772, when Gustavus III. effected a revolution, by which he regained the most essential royal prerogatives, without, however, being an absolute monarch. He was assassinated in 1792, leaving his son Gustavus Adolphus a minor, who attained his majority in 1796. This prince was deposed on the 1st of May, 1809, and his uncle, the duke of Sudermania, was called to the throne. But soon after his accession, in consequence of the sudden death of his son, the crown prince, he assembled the diet of the kingdom, in order to choose a successor to the throne. This Swedish diet met for this purpose at Orebro, on the 8th of August 1810, and, after a short speech from the king, they elected the late French marshal, Bernadotte, prince of Ponte Corvo, to the dignity of crown prince of Sweden. This person, though a Frenchman, and raised to rank and eminence under Bonaparte, greatly distinguished himself in the service of the allies in 1813, at the head of the Swedish army, and in 1814 secured Norway to Sweden by the treaty of Kiel. The established religion is the Lutheran, and they have one archbishop and 13 bishops. Stockholm is the capital.

SWEDEEN PROPER, formerly one of the five grand divisions of Sweden; bounded on the S. by Gothland, W. by Norway, N. by Nordland, and E. by the Baltic sea. It comprehended five provinces, and Stockholm, the capital of all Sweden.

SWEDESBOROUGH, a town of New Jersey, in Gloucester county, on Rariton creek: 20 miles S. by W. of Philadelphia.

SWEINY, a town of the kingdom of Dar-foor, and a place of general resort for merchants trading to Egypt. It is 45 miles N. of Cobbe.

SWIFT, a river of England, in the counties of Leicester and Warwick. It runs into the Avon, above Rugby.

SWINDON, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Monday, situate on an eminence, on the line of the Great Western railway, which has here a principal station; 28 miles N. of Salisbury, and 77 W. of London.

SWINEMUNDE, a town of the Prussian states, in Pomerania, in the isle of Usedom, situate at the mouth of the river Swine; 13 miles E. by N. of Usedom. Long. 14. 12. E. lat. 53. 56. N.

SWINESHEAD, a town in Lincolnshire, with a neglected market on Thursday. The sea formerly came up to the town, and there was a haven near the present market-place. It is 6 miles E. of Boston, and 110 N. of London.

SWINNA, a small island of Scotland, one of the Orkneys; situate near the middle of the Pentland frith. Here are two whirlpools that are dangerous to mariners, particularly in a calm.

SWITZERLAND, a country of Europe, bounded on the N. and E. by Germany, S. by Italy, and W. by France. It is 220 miles long, and 140 broad, and is separated from the adjacent countries by high mountains, called the Alps. Area, 18,681 square miles. Switzerland has been divided, since 1815, into 22 cantons, namely, Lucerne, Uri, Schwitz, Unterwalden, Zug, Friburg, Soleure, Ticino, Valais, Bern, Basel, Schaffhausen, Zurich, Vaud, Neuchatel, Geneva, Appenzel, Glarus, Grisons, St. Gall, Thurgau, and Aargau. The first nine are Catholics, the next seven are Calvinists, and the others contain both religions. Each canton has its distinct internal government. Switzerland is therefore a collection of separate and independent republics, differing from each other in size, population, government, religion, and language. Each republic legislates exclusively for itself; but is joined to the rest in a pact or alliance for mutual help against dangers from without, and for making common cause for the well-being of the whole; the rights and liberties of each state are, or ought to be, respected as much as possible. The diet, or general government, is the assembly of the twenty-two representatives of the states, and every state has a vote in the diet however small its importance. The cantons of Bale and Appenzel have divided themselves into half cantons, and each having only two half votes in the diet, and these generally opposed to each other, the voice of these cantons has been thus absurdly neutralized. All the acts which the diet is competent to decide upon, are voted by a majority of 12 states out of the 22, except on the question of war, for which 16 out of the 22 votes are necessary. The diet meets successively in the three great central cantons; two years at Berne, two at Lucerne, and two at Zurich. The diet is convened for the time or Vorort, by the diet. The Alps into Italy beyond the mountains, which lie in the county of St. Bernard, in Piedmont. The tic amongs nes; the d

Lucerne, and two at Zurich; and the government of the canton where it sits, becomes, for the time being, the federal government, or Vorort, which is the executive power of the diet. There are four passages over the Alps into Italy from Switzerland; the first is beyond the lake of Geneva, over mount Cenis, which leads to Savoy; the second begins in the country of the Grisons, crosses mount St. Bernard, and leads to the valley of Aosta, in Piedmont; the third, the celebrated Simplon pass, begins in the country of the Grisons, crosses mount Simplon, and leads to the duchy of Milan; the fourth crosses mount St. Gothard, and the bailiwicks of Italy, and terminates in the Milanese. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucerne, Zurich, and Neufchatel. The most considerable rivers are the Rhine, Rhone, Aar, Arve, Reuss, and Limmat. Switzerland exceeds every country in the world in diversity of appearance: the vast chain of Alps, with enormous precipices, extensive regions of perpetual snow, and glaciers that resemble seas of ice, are contrasted by the vineyard and cultivated field, the richly wooded brow, and the verdant valley with its crystal stream. Agriculture cannot, of course, be carried to great extent, but the grain produced is sufficient for domestic consumption. The chief riches consist of excellent pastures, in which many cattle are bred and fattened, and the goats and chamois feed on the mountains and in the woods. The men are strong and robust. The women are tolerably handsome, and are in general very industrious. The peasants retain their old manner of dress, and are content to live upon milk, butter, and cheese; and there are some of the mountaineers who never have any bread. In 1797, the partisans of France having excited disturbances in Switzerland, the French entered the country; and, after defeating the troops and the peasants who opposed them in several battles, they abolished the constitutions of the principal cantons, erected what was termed the Helvetic republic, and vested the government in two councils and a directory. This constitution was abolished in 1802, by the first consul of France, and another was presented for their acceptance, but rejected; he offered them a new one in 1803, which they consented to accept. In December 1813, the allied armies traversed the country, for the purpose of invading France, when some partial changes again took place in the administration of Switzerland, which was the cause of violent commotions amongst several of the cantons; but in 1814, on the meeting of the diet, these disturbances were appeased, and on the 8th of September, a federal compact was signed at Zurich. The twenty-two little Swiss republics lived tolerably peaceably under the protection of the federal pact from 1815 till 1830. The only republics entirely democratic amongst them, were the four primitive ones; the other 18 were either more or less aristocratic: But between 1830 and 1832, revolutions took place in all the cantons, except the forest ones, the Valais, Neufchatel, the Grisons, Bâle, and Geneva, who all stood firm, and this was the rise of radicalism in Switzerland, which has lamentably subverted all order, good feeling, and unanimity. From a balance of the conflicting parties prior to 1841, the radical party increased in strength in the diet, and in that year commenced a system of aggressions upon the Catholic party, beginning with the suppression of the convents, and the confiscation of their property in Argovie. A series of systematic oppression led to the coalition of the 7 Catholic cantons, in 1845, into a Sonderbund, for defensive purposes; their numbers, however, were much smaller than that of their opponents, the Sonderbund states numbering about 400,000, and the rest about 2,000,000, and thus was a religious war commenced. Fribourg surrendered to the radicals in Nov. 1847, and Lucerne and the four cantons soon afterwards. A new constitution was framed and accepted by the federal diet Sept. 12, 1848. The federal assembly consists of two divisions—the national council, and senate. The city of Berne was chosen by this assembly as the federal city, Nov. 28, 1848.

SWITZERLAND, NEW, a settlement of Indiana; commenced in 1805 by emigrants from the Pays de Vaud, for the purpose of cultivating the vine. Pop. 7111.

SWORDS, a town of Ireland, in the county of Dublin, 9 miles from Dublin. It has a spacious church, a Catholic chapel, and infantry barracks. Here are the ruins of a monastery, an archiepiscopal palace, and a pillar tower.

SYA, a town of Sweden, in West Gothland; 13 miles S.W. of Lindköping.

SYDNEY BAY, a bay on the South side of Norfolk island, in the South Pacific. Long. 168. 12. E. lat. 29. 4. S.

SYDNEY, the capital of New South Wales, founded by Governor Philip in 1788, as a British settlement for the colony of convicts originally intended for Botany Bay. It is now a corporate city, and the principal seat of government, has three Episcopal churches, with a cathedral (in course of erection,) two Catholic chapels, an extensive gaol, military barracks, hospitals (for military and convicts,) a naval yard, an excellent market, &c. The governor's residence, which fronts the harbour, is of recent erection, and presents a very striking appearance. Sydney has also chapels for dissenters; 7 banking companies, insurance offices, benevolent and literary institutions. It is situate on the S. side of the harbour of Port Jackson, on the E. of an inlet called Darling harbour. Long. 151. 23. E. lat. 33. 48. S. Pop. in 1856, 80,000.

SYENE, or ESSOUAN, a town of Egypt, with a small fort, on the right bank of the Nile. It was anciently a city, and celebrated for the first attempt to ascertain the circumfer-ence of the earth, by Eratosthenes, a native of Cyrene, about the year 275 B.C. The remains of the ancient town are on an eminence to the S., where columns and pillars of granite, scattered here and there, denote its situation. Near it, on a small island in the Nile, anciently called Elephantina, are the ruins of a temple of Cnuphis. It is 400 miles S. of Cairo. Long. 33. 20. E. lat. 24. 0. N.

SYLIET. See SILHET.

SYLT, an island of Denmark, on the West coast of Jutland, of an irregular form, about 40 miles in circumference, but in no part above 2 miles from the sea. Great quantities of oysters are found here. The chief town is Morsum. Long. 8. 26. E. lat. 54. 57. N.

SYMINGTON, a small parish in Lanarkshire, passed by the Caledonian railway to Edinburgh, &c.; 67 miles from Carlisle.

SYMI. See SIMI.

SYMPHEROPOL, or SIMFEROPOL, the capital of the Crimea, or Russian province of Taurida. The houses are built of stone, and roofed, in the ancient Greek style, with tiles. There are likewise numerous modern handsome buildings, for the residence of the governor, judges, and other civil officers. The old Tartar part of the town, called Achmet-shet, is dirty and ill-built. The environs are beautiful; and, 2 miles to the E. of the city, is the mountain Tchaitradagh, the highest in the Crimea, and the Mons Berosus of the ancients. Sympheropol is situate on the Salgir, the principal river of the province; 65 miles W. by S. of Caffa, and 90 S. by E. of Pocop. Long. 34. 0. E. lat. 44. 52. N.

SYRA, an island of the Grecian archipelago, and belonging to Greece. It is about 10 miles long, and 5 broad. It is rugged, but well cultivated, and is in a prosperous condition, from its possessing an excellent port, on the E. side of the island. The port of Syra is now a considerable commercial town, and most of the trade formerly carried on at Scio, is now centered here. Most European nations have consuls here, and it is the principal seat of the Protestant missions in the Levant. The town, which is for the most part old, has many new streets, and is an ancient place. Population of the island in 1825, about 4500, but in 1842, estimated at above 25,000. Lat. of the port, 37. 26. N. long. 24. 55. E.

SYRACUSE, a seaport of Sicily, in Val di Noto, and a bishop's see, with a fine harbour, defended by a castle. It was once the metropolis of all Sicily; but war, tyranny, and earthquakes have reduced it to less than one-fourth of its former size, when it was deemed one of the most famous cities in the world, and 22 miles in compass. Near this place, in 1718, there was a sea-fight between the Spaniards and English, in which the latter were victorious. It is seated near the sea; 72 miles S. by W. of Messina, and 110 S.E. of Palermo. Pop. in 1831, 16,805. Long. 15. 16. E. lat. 37. 2. N.

SYRACUSE, a town of Onondaga county, New York, at the junction of the Oswego with the Erie canal; this circumstance and being on the line of the Western railroad, have given it great importance. A large quantity of salt is made from the brine springs here; 131 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 6500.

SYRIA, (El Sham,) a province of Turkey in Asia, bounded on the N. by Natolia and Diarbeck, E. by the latter and the deserts of Arabia, S. by Arabia Petraea, and W. by the Mediterranean. Under the general name of Syria was included the ancient Phœnicia, lying S. of Syria Proper. This province abounds in oil, corn, and several sorts of fruits, as well as pease, beans, and all kinds of pulse, and garden stuff; but it would produce much more than it does, if it were well cultivated; for there are the finest valleys in the world between the mountains, whose sides are proper for the cultivation of tobacco, olives, and vines. The inhabitants have a trade in silk, camlets, and salt. Syria was possessed by a succession of foreign nations, before the time of Ptolemy, when it became a province of the Roman empire. Five centuries after, when the sons of Theodosius divided their immense patrimony, this country was annexed to the empire of Constantiople. In this situation it continued till the year 622, when the Arabian tribes, under the banners of Mahomet seized, or rather laid it waste. Since that period it has been torn to pieces by the civil wars of the Fatimites and Omniades; wrested from the khalifs by their rebellious governors; taken from them by the Turkoman soldiers; invaded by the European crusaders; retaken by the Mamelukes of Egypt; and ravaged by Tamerlane and his Tartars; it fell, at length, into the hands of the Ottoman Turks. In 1860, the Druses massacred the Christians throughout the country, but, through English and French intervention, the leaders were brought to punishment. A French force was sent out, and remained there till June, 1861, to protect the Christians. Aleppo is the capital.

SYRIAM, a seaport of Birmah, in Pegu, seated at the head of a river of the same name, opposite the mouth of Pegu river; 2 miles to the S. is the great pagoda of Syriam. It is 8 miles E. by N. of Rangoon, and 60 S. of Pegu. Long. 96. 17. E. lat. 16. 50. N.

SYRK, a town of France, in the department of Moselle; 14 m. S.E. of Luxemburg.

TABARCA, an island on the coast of Barbary, at the mouth of the Zaine. It was fortified, and had a populous city of the same name, when under the dominion of the Genoese, who had a coral-fishery here. But in 1757, on the Genoese attempting to transfer the island to France, the Tabarcans surrendered their city to Tunis; and they were cruelly deceived by the bey, for he razed the fortifications, and took away most of the inhabitants as slaves. It is 50 miles W.N.W. of Tunis. Long. 9. 16. E. lat. 36. 50. N.

TABARIA, (the ancient Tiberias), a town of Palestine, situate on the W. side of a lake, formerly called the sea of Tiberias; 50 miles N.N.E. of Jerusalem, and 70 S.S.W. of Damascus. Long. 35. 45. E. lat. 32. 40. N.

TABRIZ, or TAURIS, a city of Persia, the capital of the province of Azerbaijan. It stands in a fine plain, and surrounded by a forest of orchards, which apparently give it a magnitude it does not possess. The circuit of these gardens and orchards is, perhaps, 30 miles. The town itself is only about 3½ miles in circuit; it is surrounded by a brick wall and towers, and entered by seven gates. Within, it is stated to be one of the most wretched cities in Persia. Its population, once estimated at half a million, do not now exceed 30,000, a considerable portion of whom live in the suburbs, which straggle over the area of the ancient city, and are built of its ruins. It has few buildings of any note, the principal is the citadel, now converted into an arsenal. Its trade, formerly very extensive, has much declined. Few places have suffered so much from war and earthquakes. In 1724 it was terribly smitten by an earthquake, and nearly 100,000 persons perished. Soon after this calamity, the Turks laid siege to it, and they were driven away with great loss, but they took it the next year after a bloody contest, in which the Persians lost 30,000 men and the Turks 20,000. Of 250 mosques, mentioned by Chardin, only the ruins of three are visible. The climate is subject to sudden and great changes; in winter the cold is so intense, that people are sometimes frozen to death. The town stands on a small river, running into lake Urumca, 320 m. W.N.W. of Teheran. Long. 46. 37. E. lat. 38. 10. N.

TARTARY, or TATARY, a country of Asia, which, taken in its utmost limits, reaches from the Eastern ocean to the Caspian sea, and from Corea, China, Tibet, Hindostan, and Persia, to Russia and Siberia. It lies between 55. and 135. E. long., and between 35. and 55. N. lat., being 3600 miles in length, and 960 in extreme breadth, but not above 330 in the narrowest part. It may be considered under two grand divisions, namely Eastern and Western Tartary. The greatest part of the former belongs to the emperor of China, is tributary to him, or is under his protection. It is divided into three provinces, Teitcear, Kirin, and Leao-tong. A considerable part of Western Tartary has been conquered by the Russians; and that part of it E. from the mountains of Imaus, or Belur, to the Caspian sea, has for many ages been attached to Persia, and is called Independent Tartary. These vast countries include all the central parts of Asia, and are inhabited by Tartars of different denominations and different manners. For various particulars concerning them, see the articles CIRCASSIA, CRIMEA, COSSACS, GEORGIA, IMERITIA, KALMUCS, MANDSHARS, MINGRELIA, MONGOLIA, SAMOYEDS, and USBECS.

TARFAS, a town of France, in the department of Landes. The Midouse runs through it; and, on one side of this river, it rises in the form of an amphitheatre. It is 12 miles N.E. of Dax. Pop. 3200.

TARUDANT, a town of West Africa, capital of the province of Suse, and the residence of a governor, or some sheriff related to the emperor of Morocco. It is 120 miles S.W. of Morocco. Pop. 25,000. Long. 8. 35. W. lat. 29. 58. N.

Here are various manufactures of iron, and also a manufacture of ochre into pigments of a dark yellow colour. It is connected by railroads to Boston and to New Bedford. It is 36 miles S. of Boston. Pop. 6045.

TAUNTON, a borough in Somersetshire, governed by a mayor, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. It is situate in an extensive and fertile valley, called Taunton Dean, on the river Tone, which is navigable hence to the Parret. The silk trade furnishes the principal employment of the inhabitants, the manufacture of coarse woollen goods, which was formerly carried on here to a considerable extent, having been transferred to Wellington and other neighbouring towns. Here was once a strong castle, part of which still remains, and is converted to various uses. The town is well built, and has undergone great improvement of late years. It contains three parish churches, several meeting-houses, a free grammar-school, an hospital or infirmary, and other charitable institutions. It is in the line of the Bridgewater canal, and is a principal station of the Bristol and Exeter railway, a branch of the Great Western. The spring assizes are held here. Taunton was the scene of many bloody executions in the reign of James II., after the defeat of the Duke of Monmouth, at Sedgemoor, near this town. It is 31 miles N.E. of Exeter, and 141 W. by S. of London. Long. 3. 17. W. lat. 50. 59. N.

TAVISTOCK, a borough in Devonshire, returning two members to parliament; with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of serges. The town owes its origin to a magnificent abbey erected here in the 10th century, which was suppressed in 1539, and the princely revenues given to Lord John Russell, whose descendants, the Dukes of Bedford, still enjoy them. The church is an ancient edifice; there are 5 dissenting chapels, and several charitable institutions. The town stands on the N.W. bank of the Tavy, which river is here peculiarly beautiful, and gives its name to the town. It has one of the finest markets in England for corn. The environs are celebrated for its rich mines of tin, and copper, which afford employment to many in the town. In its vicinity was born the famous Sir Francis Drake. It is 34 miles W.S.W. of Exeter, and 207 of London.

TAVOY, a seaport on the W. coast of Siam, in a district of its name, which was wrested from the Siamese by the Birmans, and subsequently ceded to the British in 1824-5. Area, 15,000 square miles. Pop. 26,000. The town is 150 miles W.N.W. of Siam. Long. 98. 20. E. lat. 14. 45. N.

TCHIE KIANG, a province of China, one of the most considerable in extent, riches, and population. It is bounded on the N. and W. by King-han, S.W. by Kiang-ai, S. by Fo-kien, and E. by the ocean. In this province whole plains are covered with dwarf mulberry trees, purposely checked in their growth; and prodigious quantities of silk-worms are bred. The principal branch of trade consists in silk stuffs; and those in which gold and silver are intermixed are the most beautiful in China. The tallow tree grows here, and a species of mushrooms, which are transported to all the provinces of the empire; and here also are found the small gold-fish with which ponds are commonly stocked. In Tche-kiang are reckoned 11 cities of the first rank, 72 of the third, and 18 fortresses, which in Europe would be deemed large cities. The population, according to the statistics drawn up by the emperor Kieu-long, amounts to 26,000,000 —that of a kingdom. Han-chow, or Hang-tcheou is the capital.

TCHOU-CHIAN, an island near the W. coast of China, belonging to the province of Tche-kiang. It is about 24 miles long, and from 5 to 10 broad.

TCHERKASK, OLD and NEW, towns of European Russia, capital of the Don Cossacs. Old Tcherkask is seated on the Don, near the sea of Azof, and has a splendid cathedral, but has much decayed since the foundation of the New Town, in 1810. It is on high ground, free from inundations, and has much increased. It is 40 miles N.E. of Azof. Pop. together, 15,000.

TCHERNIGOF, a government of European Russia, formerly a part of the Ukraine. The country is flat and fertile, producing rye, barley, and oats. Flax and hemp are also grown. TEDSI, a town of Morocco, in the province of Sus, seated in a plain abounding in corn; 20 miles S.E. of Taridant.

TEEMBO, a city of Central Africa, capital of the kingdom of Foota Jalloo. The inhabitants, estimated at 8000, carry on manufactures of cloth, iron, silver, wood, leather, &c. It is 160 miles E. of Sierra Leone.

TEES, a river which rises on the confines of Cumberland, separates the counties of Durham and York, and enters the German ocean below Stockton. It is tidal to Yarm, and navigable for ships to Stockton.

TEFESSAD, a town of Algier, with mines of iron in its neighbourhood. It is 32 miles S.W. of Algier.

TEFFLIS, a city of Asia, the capital of Georgia, called by the inhabitants Thilis-Calm (Warm Town), from the warm baths in its neighbourhood. It contains 30,000 inhabitants, of whom more than one-half are Armenians. The streets seldom exceed seven feet in breadth, and the houses are of stone, with flat roofs, which serve as walks for the women. Here is a foundry for cannon, mortars, and balls; also a public school founded by the emperor Alexander. The most flourishing manufactures are those of silks and printed linens; but the chief trade is in furs, sent to Turkey and the S. of Persia. In 1723 it was taken by the Turks, and in 1734 retaken by Kouli Khan. It is seated on the Kur, a dirty river, at the foot of a hill; 300 miles S.S.W. of Astracan. Long. 45. 2. E. lat. 42. 30. N.

TEGUCIGALPA, a town of the republic of Guatemala, on the high table land of Honduras, containing 8000 or 10,000 inhabitants. In its neighbourhood are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron.

TEHRAN, or TEHERAN, a city of Persia, the present capital of the empire. It was an inconsiderable place, till Aga Mohammed, uncle to the late shah, made this his royal residence. It is about four miles in circumference, and surrounded by a strong wall, and strengthened with towers, &c. It is strikingly seated, at the foot of Mount Elburz, and N. of the ruins of the city of Rey. Though it has been much enlarged and adorned, it contains no public building, except the Ark, which combines the character of a fortress and a palace. Pop. 60,000.

TEHUANTEPEC, a town and gulf of the republic of Guatemala, on the shore of the Pacific. The isthmus of Tehuantepec is here about 110 English miles broad, and a project has been set on foot (1842-6) to connect the Atlantic with the Pacific ocean, by means of an artificial canal across it. This canal was to be made in connection with the river Coatzacoalcas, which running northwards from the moderately high land in the centre of the isthmus, falls into the Mexican gulf, and would afford excellent access for shipping, and to the canal. But from the disturbed state of society of the state through which it passes, it appeared unlikely that any foreign capital could be profitably and securely employed in the undertaking. Since the great influx of emigrants to the gold regions of California, the schemes have been in some degree revived, and the line proposed has become the site of a transit trade between the United States and Europe and the Pacific See PANAMA, and NICARAGUA.

TEIGN, a river in Devonshire, composed of two branches, which rise in the E. part of Dartmoor, and, uniting, enter the English Channel at Teignmouth.

TEIGNMOUTH, a seaport in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. At this place the Danes first landed, and committed several outrages. It was almost entirely destroyed by the French, who set fire to it in 1690. Since that period the town has become of more consequence, and it is now a fashionable watering-place. It sends a number of vessels to the Newfoundland fishery, and has a considerable trade in carrying fine clay to the potteries in Staffordshire, Liverpool, &c.; the South Devon Railway passes it. It is seated at the mouth of the Teign, 15 miles S. of Exeter, and 187 W. by S. of London. Long. 3. 29. W. Lat. 50. 32. N.

TEINITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen, with a castle and a convent, seated on the Radbuz, 30 miles W.S.W. of Pilsen.

TEIBENDORF, a town of Austria, in the province of Salzburg, 12 m. N.W. of Salzburg.

TEISSE. See TEISSRE.

TEJUCO, a district of Brazil, about 50 miles long, and 24 broad, particularly noted for its production of diamonds.

TEJUCO, the capital of the above district, is situate on the side of a hill, and is very irregularly built. The circulation of property created by the diamond-works renders it a flourishing town. British cottons, baizes, cloths, and other manufactured goods, are abundant; also cheese, butter, hams, porter, and other articles of consumption. But the inhabitants carry on no manufactures. Pop. 6000. Long. 42. 30. W. Lat. 18. 11. S.

TEKAX, one of the five departments of the republic of Yucatan, containing, in 1841, 58,217 men, and 64,697 women; together 122,914.

TEKAX, a city of Yucatan, 72 miles from Yalahau, on the north coast. It stands at the foot of the Sierra, and is really a fine, though isolated town.

TEKEN. See BENIGN.

TELESA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; 18 miles E.N.E. of Capua.

TELGEN, or TALGA, a town of Sweden, in Sudermania, on the lake Maeler; 12 miles S.W. of Stockholm.

TELGET, a town of Prussian Westphalia; 5 miles E.N.E. of Munster.

TELLES, a town of the kingdom of Fez; with a small harbour, on the Mediterranean; 100 miles E.S.E. of Tetuan.

TELLICHEURY, a town of Hindostan, in Malabar. It was the principal trading town of the British on the Malabar coast prior to 1800, when the East India Company transferred their business to Mahé, 6 miles to the S.E. It is seated at the mouth of a river, 42 miles N.N.W. of Calicut. Long. 75. 38. E. Lat. 11. 48. N.

TELTOW, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, on a lake of the same name; 7 miles S.S.W. of Berlin.

TELTSCHE, a town of Austria, in Moravia; 16 miles S. of Iglau.

TEME, a river which rises in Radnorshire, flows through Shropshire and Worcestershire, and falls into the Severn, one mile below Worcester.

TEMEDEFFUST, a town of the kingdom of Algier; 10 miles E. of Algier.

TEMESWAR, a strong town of Hungary, capital of a territory called the Banat of Temeswar, containing an area of 9450 square miles, and a population of 700,000. It stands on the river Bega, which forms a morass round it, and the fortress requires a garrison of 14,000 men. Its commerce has been considerably increased by the Bega canal, 73 miles long, connecting the Teiss and the Danube, and passing the town; this has also drained the marshes, and rendered the place more healthy. This place formerly passed for impregnable, but it was taken by Prince Eugene, in a dry season, in 1716. It is 80 miles N.N.E. of Belgrade, and 160 S.E. of Buda. Population, with its 4 suburbs, about 13,000.

TEMISSA, a town of Fezzan, where the caravans from Timbuctoo, Bornou, &c., which travel by way of Cairo to Mecca, usually provide the stores of corn, dates, dried meat, and other requisites for their dreary journey; 120 miles E.N.E. of Moutzook.

TEMPS, a valley and mountain gorge famous in antiquity in the N. part of Thessaly in Greece, near to the E. coast. It lies, from 6 to 8 miles long, between Olympus on the N. and Ossa on the S. resembling in a striking degree the pass of Killiecrankie in Scotland, but incomparably more magnificent. Livy's description of it has all the majesty of truth.

TEMPELNORO, a town of the Prussian states, in Pomerania; on the S. side of a lake, and on the frontiers of Poland; 43 miles E. by N. of New Stargard.

TEMPIO, a town of Sardinia. Pop. 5000. It is 32 miles E. of Sassari.

TEMPLEMORE, a town of Ireland, connty of Tipperary; 86 miles from Dublin; with a free-school on Erasmus Smith's foundation.

TEMPLIN, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, with a great trade in timber. It was totally consumed by fire in 1735, but has been rebuilt in a beautiful manner. It stands between the Bodensee and Dolgensee; 18 miles S.W. of Prenzlau, and 42 N. by E. of Berlin.

TENABERUM, a town of Birmanh, capital of a district of its name; situate on a large river 47 miles S.E. of Mergui. Long. 98. 50. W. lat. 11. 35. N.

TENHURY, a town in Worcestershire, with a market on Tuesday. It has a spacious parish church, a Baptist meeting-house, and a good national school. A mile S. of this town is a course where horse-races take place annually in July. A strongly saline spring, similar to those at Cheltenham, was discovered here in 1839. Here is a considerable trade in hops, cider, tanning, and glove making, and the town enjoys a good local trade. It is seated on the Temse, over which is a bridge of six arches, forming a communication with the county of Hereford; 11 miles W. by N. of Worcester, and 133 W.N.W. of London.

TENBY, a seaport of Wales, in Pembrokeshire; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. Its castle was demolished in the civil wars. The principal trade was in coal, but this has somewhat declined since a new railroad has connected the mines with Saundersfoot, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from this; it is a place of fashionable resort for bathing; 4 miles W.S. W., on the sea coast, are the massive remains of Manorbier castle; it contributes with Pembroke and Milford in sending one member to parliament. Tenby is seated on a narrow rock projecting into the sea; 12 miles E. of Pembroke, and 253 W. of London. Long. 4. 40. W. lat. 51. 44. N.

TENCH ISLAND, an island in the South Pacific, 2 miles in circumference; discovered by Lieutenant Bull in 1790. It is low, but entirely covered with cocoa-nut and other trees. Long. 151. 31. E. lat. 1. 39. S.

TENDA, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; with a fortified castle on a rock. It stands on the Roia, 55 miles S. of Turin.

TENDAY. See SASAR.

TENDON, an island of the Grecian archipelago, on the coast of Asia Minor; 14 miles S. of the strait of Gallipoli. It is 11 miles long, and 7 broad; is inhabited almost wholly by Greeks, and its muscadine wine is the best in all the Levant. On the E. side is the town, at the foot of a mountain; with a harbour, defended by a castle. Pop. 4000. Long. 26. 0. E. lat. 39. 50. N.

TENERIFFE, one of the Canary islands, and the most considerable of them for riches, trade, and population. It lies W. of the Grand Canary, is 70 miles long, and 22 broad, and abounds in wine, different sorts of fruits, cattle, and gum. One part of this island is surrounded by inaccessible mountains, of which one in particular, called the Peak of Teneriffe, is 12,072 feet above the level of the sea, and the distance to the Peak from the port of Orotava, at the base of the mountain, is above 11 miles. This island is subject to volcanic eruptions, and in 1704 one destroyed several towns and many thousand people. The laborious works in this island are chiefly performed by oxen and mules, horses being scarce, and reserved for the use of the officers. Hawks and parrots are natives of the island, as are swallows, seagulls, partridges, canary-birds, and blackbirds. There are also lizards, locusts, and dragon-flies. St. Cristophe de Laguna is the capital, but the governor resides at St. Cruz.

TENERIFFE, a town of the republic of Colombia, in the former vicereignty of New Granada; seated on the Madalenn; 100 miles S.S.W. of St. Martha.

TENEZ, or TENIS, a town of Algier, in the province of Maccari; capital of a district of its name, with a fort. It has a considerable trade in corn. It is seated on a river, 4 miles from the sea, and 85 W.S.W. of Algier.

TEN-NGAN, a city of China, of the first rank; in Hon-quang; 550 miles S. by W. of Peking. Long. 113. 21. E. lat. 31. 20. N.

TENNESSEE, one of the United States of America, situate between the parallels of 35. and 36 $\frac{1}{2}$. of N. lat.; bounded on the S. by Georgin, W. by the Mississippi, N. by Kentucky and Virginia, and E. by the Iron and Bald Mountains, which separate it from N. Carolina. It is 400 miles in length, and 114 in breadth; is divided into 72 counties, and has an area of 45,600 square miles, with a population, in 1840, of 829,210, including 183,059 slaves. The principal rivers are the Mississippi, Tennessee, Cumberland, and Holston; and it is watered by other rivers and creeks. The Cumberland mountains, a lofty ridge nearly 30 miles broad, cut this state into the eastern and western divisions, which were originally known by the names of the establishments of Holston and Cumberland; but the latter is much the larger part. The climate, soil, and produce of Tennessee are nearly the same as in the adjoining state of Kentucky; but West Tennessee, or Cumberland, is less salubrious, having a warmer and more humid temperature. A considerable portion of the territory rests on a bed of limestone. Gypsum, saltpetre, and sult are among its chief products. The soil is generally fertile; cotton and tobacco being the staple commodities. Medicinal plants are also grown. There are several railroads in the state; the Lagrange and Memphis, 50 miles, the Hiwassee railroad to Knoxville, 98½ miles, are the chief. The New Orleans and Nashville railroad is also designed to pass through it. Knoxville and Murfreesboro' were formerly the seats of government; at present Nashville is the capital.

TENNESSEE, a river of the United States, formerly called the Cherokee river, and the largest of all those which flow into the Ohio. Its commencement is formed in the state to which it gives name, by the junction of the Clinch with the Holston, 35 miles below Knoxville. It flows S.W. on the E. side of Cumberland mountains, into Georgia, where it makes a circuit to the W., called the Great Bend; it then re-enters the state of Tennessee, which it passes quite through into that of Kentucky, where it enters the Ohio, 50 m. above the conflux of that river with the Mississippi. The Tennessee is 600 yards broad at its mouth, and is thence navigable by vessels of great burden for 260 miles, to the Muscle Shoals in the Great Bend: here the river widens between 2 and 3 miles, for nearly 30 and these shoals can only be passed by small boats: hence it may be navigated, by boats of 40 tons burden, 400 miles further to its commencement.

TENNIS, a town of Egypt, situate on an island in a lake of the same name, sometimes called Lake Menzaleh; 28 miles S.E. of Damietta.

TENOS ISLAND, Grecian archipelago, between Andros and Myconi; 35 miles in circumference; producing silk, wine, and fruits, and but little corn. Pop. 25,000.

TENSTADT, a town of Prussian Saxony, 10 miles N.E. of Langensalza.

TEN-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Chang-tong; with a good port and a strong garrison. It is seated on the N. side of a peninsula of the Yellow sea; 250 miles S.E. of Peking. Long. 120.50. E. lat. 37.20. N.

TENTERDEN, a town in Kent, governed by a mayor; with a market on Friday. It has a handsome church, the steeple of which is very lofty, and, at the time of the Spanish invasion, in 1588, was made use of as a beacon. Here are also three meeting-houses and a free-school; 24 miles S.W. of Canterbury, and 56 E. by S. of London.

TENTUGAL, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 8 miles W.S.W. of Coimbra.

TERAMO, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra; 25 miles N.E. of Aquila.

TERCEIRA, one of the Azores, of a circular form, about 55 miles in circumference, and very fertile. It contains several towns and villages, with a number of forts. Pop. 50,000. Angra is the capital.

TERCHIZ, or TERSIZ, a town of Persia, in the province of Khorasan; situate on the borders of the Great Salt Desert; 160 miles W.N.W. of Herat. Long. 57.25. E. lat. 35.5. N.

TEREK, a river in Asiatic Russia, forming the boundary between that power and the Caucasus, over which the Russians hold an unacknowledged authority.

TEROA, a town of Morocco, seated on the Omirah; 90 miles N. of Morocco.

TERGOVIST, or TERVIS, a town of European Turkey, in Walachia. Here is a fine palace, belonging to the hospodar, or reigning prince; but he chiefly resides in Bucharest. It stands on the Jalonitz; 35 miles N.N.W. of Bucharest. Long. 25.48. E. lat. 45.28. N.

TERGOUW. See GOUDA.

TERMED, a town of Usbec Tartary, capital of a district in Bokharia, seated in an angle formed by the union of two rivers; 150 m. S. of Samarcand. Long. 65.35. E. lat. 37.15. N.

TERMINI, a town on the N. coast of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, with a strong castle. Its mineral waters are much celebrated, and it has a considerable trade. It is situate on a rocky eminence, near the mouth of a river of the same name; 20 miles S.E. of Palermo. Pop. 8700.

TERMOLI, a town of Naples, in Capitanata seated near the sea; 32 miles S.E. of Lanciano.

TERNATE, one of the Molucca Islands, lying to the W. of Gilolo, formerly the seat of sovereignty. It abounds in cocoa-nuts, bananas, citrons, oranges, almonds, and other fruits proper to the climate. There are also a great number of birds of paradise. It is a mountainous country, and contains a great number of woods, which furnish abundance of game. It is in the possession of the Dutch, from whom it was taken by the British in 1810, but restored, with their other Indian possessions, in 1814. The inhabitants are Mohammedans, and very indolent; 100 miles E. of Celebes. Long. 127.11. E. lat. 0.45. N.

TERNEUSE, a town and fort of the Netherlands, in Flanders, on the W. branch of the Scheldt, called the Hondt. It is 8 miles N. of Sas van Ghent, and 25 W.N.W. of Antwerp.

TERNI, a town in the ecclesiastical states, in the duchy of Spoleto, seated on the Neru, near the influx of the Velino, which has a famous cataract a mile from the town. Terni was the birthplace of Tacitus the historian. It is 15 miles S.S.W. of Spoleto, and 46 N. of Rome.

TERNOVA, a town of Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see. It was formerly the seat of the princes of Bulgaria, and a strong place, but the fortifications are ruined. It is seated on a mountain, near the Jenera; 88 miles N.W. of Adrianople, and 97 N.E. of Sofia. Long. 26.2. E. lat. 43.1. N.

TROUENS, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, seated on the Lis; 6 miles S. of St. Omer.

TERRA DI BARI, LAVORO, and OTRANTO. See BARI, &c.

TERRA DEL ESPIRITU SANTO, the largest and most western island of the New Hebrides, in the South Pacific, being 40 leagues in circuit. The land is exceedingly high and mountainous, and in many places the hills rise directly from the sea. Except the cliffs and beaches, every part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Besides the bay of St. Philip and St. Jago, on the N. side of it, the isles which lie along the S. and E. coast form several good bays and harbours. Long. 167. E. lat. 15. S.

TERRA FIRMA, a name applied sometimes to the provinces of Central America, or Darien, Panama, and Veragua.

TERRA DEL FUEGO, a large island, separated from the southern extremity of America by the strait of Magellan, and so called from the volcanoes observed on it. The sea intersects it into several islands, all of them barren and mountainous; but on the lower grounds are found several sorts of trees and plants, and a variety of birds. The natives are short in stature, not exceeding five feet six inches; their heads large, their faces broad, their cheek-bones prominent, and their noses flat. They have little brown eyes, without life; their hair is black and lank, hanging about their heads in disorder, and besmeared with train-oil. They wear no other clothing than a small piece of seal-skin, hanging from their shoulders to the middle of the back, being fastened round the neck with a string. They live chiefly on seals' flesh, of which they prefer the oily part. There is no appearance of any subordination among them, and their whole character is a strange compound of stupidity, indifference, and inactivity.

TERRACINA, a decayed town of the ecclesiastical states, in Campagna di Roma, with a castle on a rock. Formerly it was called Anxur, and was the capital of the Volsci, and its cathedral was originally a temple of Jupiter. It is seated near the sea, on the frontiers of Naples; 54 miles S.S.E. of Rome. Pop. 9000. Long. 13. 15. E. lat. 41. 24. N.

TERRANOVA, a seaport of Sicily, in Val di Noto, seated near the mouth of a river of the same name; 20 m. E.S.E. of Alicata. Long. 14. 10. E. lat. 37. 9. N. Pop. 9000.

TERRANOVA, a seaport of Sardinia, seated at the bottom of a bay on the N.E. coast; 62 miles E.N.E. of Sassari. Long. 9. 35. E. lat. 41. 3. N.

TERRASSON, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne, seated on the Vesere; 28 miles E. of Perigueux.

TERRIDON, LOCH, an inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, in Ross-shire; between Gairloch and Applecross. It has many creeks and bays.

TERRIONE, a strong town and fortress of Hindostan, in the Carnatic; 25 miles N. of Trichinopoly.

TENSOOS, a seaport of Asia Minor, on the coast of Karamania, and an archbishop's see. It was formerly called Tarsus, and was the capital of Cilicia, the literary rival of Athens and Alexandria, and the birthplace of the apostle Paul. It is seated on the Mediterranean; 100 miles W. by N. of Alexandretta. Long. 35. 15. E. lat. 37. 4. N.

TENUET, a town of Spain, in Arragon, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. It is 80 miles S.W. of Saragossa, and 112 E. of Madrid. Pop. 7500. Long. 1. 0. W. lat. 40. 25. N.

TERVERE, or VERE, a fortified seaport of the Netherlands, in Zealand, on the N.E. coast of the isle of Walcheren. It has a good harbour, and a fine arsenal; 4 miles N. by E. of Middleburg, with which it communicates by a canal. Long. 3. 42. E. lat. 51. 36. N.

TESCHEN, a town of Austrian Silesia, capital of a circle of the same name. It is surrounded by a wall, and at a little distance, on an eminence, is the old castle where the ancient dukes resided. The inhabitants carry on a trade in leather, woollen stuffs, and wine, and make excellent fire-arms. This town was taken by the Prussians in 1757, but restored in 1763. In 1779 a treaty of peace was concluded here, between the emperor of Germany and the king of Prussia. It is seated in a morass, near the river Elsa; 36 miles E.S.E. of Troppan, and 60 E. by N. of Olmutz. Pop. of circle 152,000; of town, 5400. Long. 18. 32. E. lat. 4. 43. N.

TESEGDELT, a town of Morocco, seated on a craggy rock, said to be impregnable, at the mouth of the Techubit; 140 miles W.N. W. of Morocco.

TESHOO LOOMNOO, the capital of Tibet, or of that part which is immediately subject to the Teshoo lama, who is sovereign of the country, during the minority of the grand lama. Its temples and mausoleums, with their numerous gilded canopies and turrets, and the palace of the lama, render it a magnificent place. It stands at the N. end of a plain, upon a rocky eminence; 220 miles S.W. of Lassa, and 470 N. by E. of Calcutta. Long. 89. 7. E. lat. 29. 4. N.

TESINO, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol; 25 miles E.N.E. of Trent.

TESSET, a town of Zahara, capital of a district of the same name. It is 350 miles S.S.W. of Tafilet. Long. 5. 45. W. lat. 25. 54. N.

TESSIN. See TICINO.

TEST, or TESE, a river in Hampshire, which rises near Whitechurch, flows by Stockbridge and Romsey, and enters the head of the bay of Southampton at Redbridge.

TETBURY, a town of Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday, and a trade in yarn and wool. The town which is large and respectable, is seated on rising ground, near the source of the Lower Avon, and is 25 miles E.N.E. of Bristol, and 99. W. of London.

TEBE, an inland district of South-east Africa, on the River Zambesi, rich in gold, iron, and coal.

TETSCHEN, or TETZEN, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutmeritz, with a castle, on the river Elbe; 29 miles S.E. of Dresden.

TETUAN, a city of the kingdom of Fez, with a castle. The houses have only small holes towards the street, which are very narrow; and a courtyard, which is surrounded by galleries, and in the middle is generally a fountain. The houses are two storeys high, flat at the top; and the women visit each other from the tops of them. The shops are very small, and without any door; the master sits cross-legged on a counter, with the goods disposed in drawers round him, and all the customers stand in the street. Several European consuls formerly resided in this city: the English are still allowed to touch here, and considerable communication is kept up with Gibraltar. It surrendered to the Spaniards on Feb. 4, 1860. It is 110 miles N.N.W. of Fez. Long. 3. 23. W., lat. 35. 37. N.

TEVERONE, a river of Italy, the ancient Anio, which rises in the Apennines, 50 miles above Tivoli, glides through a plain till it comes near that town, when it is confined for a short space between two hills, covered with groves. These were supposed to be the residence of the sibyl Albunea, to whom an elegant temple was here dedicated. The river moving with augmented rapidity, as its channel is confined, at last rushes over a lofty precipice, and the noise of its fall resounds through the hills and groves of Tivoli. Having gained the plain, it soon afterwards receives the waters of the lake Solfatara, and then joins the Tiber, near Rome.

TEURITZ, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, with a castle on a lake; 25 miles S. by E. of Berlin.

TEUSCHNITZ, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia; 17 miles N. of Culmbach.

TEVIOT, a river of Scotland, which rises in the mountains in the S.W. of Roxburghshire, and, passing N.W. through the county, unites with the Tweed a little above Kelso.

TEWSING, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen; 30 miles N.W. of Pilsen.

T EWKESBURY, a borough in Gloucestershire, returning two members to parliament. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday. Here is one of the noblest parish churches in the kingdom, which is almost the only remains of the celebrated monastery to which it formerly belonged. The other places of worship are meeting-houses for Roman Catholics, Methodists, Independents, Baptists, and Quakers. The principal manufacture is that of stockings and nails, and the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in malt. Here, in 1441, Edward IV. gained a decisive victory over the Lancastrians. Tewkesbury is seated on the Avon, near its union with the Severn, and on the Birmingham railway; 10 miles N. of Gloucester, and 103 W.N.W. of London. Pop. 5000.

TEXAS, the southernmost of the United States. It is bounded on the E. by the Sabine river, partly separating it from Louisiana and Arkansas; on the N. by the Red and Arkansas rivers, on the W. by the Rio Grande del Norte, and on the S. by the Mexican gulf. Its area is about 397,319 square miles, or 254,284,160 acres. It is at present divided into 8 judicial districts and 67 counties. The general aspect of the country is that of a vast inclined plane, gradually sloping from the mountains to the eastward to the sea, and intersected with numerous rivers flowing in a S.E. direction. The territory is naturally divided into three separate regions, which differ considerably from each other. The first, a level region of rich alluvium, along the coast, and from 30 to 100 miles broad, narrowest at the S.W.; between its rivers are rich and extensive pasture lands. The second division, the largest of the three, is the undulating prairie region, which extends for 150 or 200 miles farther inland—wide grassy tracts, alternating with others that are thickly timbered. The third or mountainous region, principally in the S. and S.W., forms part of the Sierra Madre or Mexican Alps, but little explored, and still unsettled. The principal rivers of the state are the Rio Grande del Norte, a noble stream of 1860 miles in length; the Rio Colorado, which may be made navigable to Austin city, 200 miles; the Neches, Trinidad, Nueces, and numerous others. The climate is salubrious, the seasons divided into the wet and dry, the former from December to March. The surface affords most excellent pasturage, and there is also abundance of fine timber. Cotton and the sugar-cane are the staple productions. The rearing of cattle and horses is the principal occupation of a large section of the inhabitants. Vast herds of buffaloes and wild horses roam over the prairies. Coal, silver, nitre, salt, bitumen, &c. are abundant in different places. Its population is estimated at about 200,000. Austin is the capital. On the separation of Mexico from Spain, in 1822, Iturbide, under the title of Augustin I., invited settlers from the United States into this tract, which was then a part of the Mexican territory; but, after his deposition and execution, and the consequent disturbances, General Santa Anna seized the government, and abolished the existing legislature of the states, and enforced the observance of the Roman Catholic religion. The Texans consequently revolted in 1835; a civil war ensued, which caused much bloodshed; in the conclusion of which, at the battle of San Jacinto, April 21, 1836, Santa Anna was taken prisoner, which led to a settlement of their affairs. It adopted the constitution, and was admitted (December, 1845) the 28th member of the United States.

TEXEL, an island of the Netherlands, separated from North Holland by a narrow channel of the same name, defended by a strong fort on the mainland, called the Helder. This channel is the best and most southern entrance into the Zuyder Zee, and through it most of the ships pass that are bound to Amsterdam. In 1799 the fort was taken by the English, and the whole of the Dutch fleet lying within the channel surrendered to them; but the English abandoned the fort soon afterwards. Pop. 5000. Long. 4. 59. E. lat. 53. 10. N.

TEZUCCO, a town of Mexico, once the capital of a rich kingdom. Here Cortez caused a canal to be dug, and built 18 brigantines, to carry on the siege of Mexico. It is seated near the lake of Mexico; 20 miles E. of Mexico. Pop. about 5000.

TEZELA, a town of Algier, in the province of Mascara, with a castle; 15 miles S.W. of Oran.

TEZOUT, a town of the kingdom of Fez, seated on the point of a rock; 15 miles S. of Melilla.

TEZZOUTE, an ancient town of Algier, in the province of Constantina. Its ruins extend 10 miles in circumference, among which are magnificent remains of city gates, an amphitheatre, a temple dedicated to Æsculapius, and other elegant structures. It is 90 miles S.S.W. of Constantina.

THAINEE, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, near the mouth of a river of the same name; 120 miles S. of Tunis. Long. 10. 15. E. lat. 34. 50. N.

THAME, or TAME, a river which rises near Tring, in Hertfordshire; crosses Buckinghamshire to the N. of Aylesbury, enters Oxfordshire at the town of Thame, whence it is navigable for barges to Dorchester, where it joins the Thames. This river has been erroneously supposed to give name to the Thames.

THAME, a town in Oxfordshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated on the river Thame; 12 miles E. of Oxford, and 44 W. by N. of London.

THAMES, the finest river in Great Britain, which takes its rise from a copious spring, called Thames Head, 2 miles S.W. of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire. It has been erroneously stated that its name is Isis till it arrives at Dorchester, 15 miles below Oxford, when, being joined by the Thame, or Tame, it assumes the name of Thames. But Camden says that the river was always called Thames, or Tems, before it came near the Thame; and in several ancient charters granted to the abbey of Malmesbury, as well as that of Ensham, and in the old deeds relating to Cricklade, it is never considered under any other name than that of Thames. All the historians who mention the incursions of Ethelwold, and of Canute, into Wiltshire, concur likewise in the same opinion, by declaring that they passed over the Thames at Cricklade in Wiltshire. About a mile below the source of the river, it is not more than nine feet wide in the summer, yet, in the winter, becomes such a torrent as to overflow the meadows for many miles. The stream proceeds to Cricklade, where it receives many other rivulets, which cause it to widen considerably in its way to Lechlade; and, being there joined by the Coln and Lech, at the distance of 138 miles from London, it becomes navigable for vessels of 90 tons. At Oxford (in whose academic groves its poetical name of Isis has been so often invoked) it is joined by the Cherwell, and, proceeding by Abingdon to Dorchester, it receives the Thame. Passing by Wallingford to Reading, and forming a boundary to Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Surrey, and Middlesex, it waters Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Staines, Chertsey, Kingston, and Brentford, in its course to London; during which it receives the Kennet, Loddon, Coln, Wey, Mole, Brent, and Wandie. From London the river proceeds to Greenwich, Woolwich, Grays-Thurrock, Gravesend and Leigh, into the German ocean, in which course it parts Essex from Kent, and receives the Lea, Roding, Darent, and Medway. The tide flows up the Thames as high as Kingston, which, following the winding of the river, is 70 miles from the ocean—a greater distance than the tide is carried by any other river in Europe. Though the Thames is said to be navigable 138 miles above London bridge, there are so many flats that in summer the navigation westward would be stopped, were it not for a number of locks; but the first lock is 52 miles above that bridge. The plan of new cuts has been adopted, in some places, to shorten the navigation; there is one near Lechlade, and another a mile from Abingdon. A still more important undertaking was effected in 1789—the junction of this river with the Severn. A canal had been made from the Severn to Stroud, which canal was afterwards continued to Lechlade, where it joins the Thames, a distance of above 30 miles. A communication between this river and the Trent and Mersey has likewise been effected, by a canal from Oxford to Coventry; and another canal extends from this, at Braunston, to the Thames at Brentford, called the Grand Junction Canal.

THAMES, a river of Connecticut, formed of two principal branches, the Shetucket and the Norwich, or Little river, which have their junction at Norwich. From this place the Thames is navigable 15 miles to Long Island Sound, which it enters below New London.

THIANET, an island comprising the E. angle of Kent, being separated from the mainland by the two branches of the Stour. It produces much corn, and the S. part is a rich tract of marsh land. It contains the towns of Margate, Ramsgate, and Broadstairs, and several villages.

THIANHAUSEN, a town of Bavaria, on the river Mindel; 14 miles N. of Mindelheim.

THASOS, an island of the Grecian archipelago, on the coast of Macedonia; at the entrance of the gulf of Contessa. It is 12 miles long, and 8 broad, and abounds in all the necessaries of life. The fruits and wine are very delicate; and there are some quarries of fine marble. The chief town, of the same name, has a harbour, frequented by merchants. Long. 24. 33. E. lat. 40. 59. N.

THAXTED, a town in Essex, with a market on Thursday. It has a beautiful and spacious church, two meeting-houses, almshouses, a school, and other charities. It is seated near the source of the Chelmer; 17 miles N.N.W. of Chelmsford, and 44 N.N.E. of London.

THEAKI, an island in the Mediterranean sea, 24 miles long, and 7 broad; separated from the N.E. part of that of Cefalonia by a narrow channel. It is the ancient Ithaca, celebrated as the birthplace and kingdom of Ulysses. The chief town is Vathi, which has a spacious harbour. Long. 20. 40. E. lat. 38. 25. N.

THEBAID, a country of Upper Egypt, now called SAID, which see.

THEBES, the ancient name of a city of Upper Egypt. It was celebrated for having 100 gates; and there are many tombs and magnificent remains of antiquity. Three villages, named Carnak, Luxor, and Gournou, are seated among its ruins, which extend 7 or 8 miles along the river, and are hence called the antiquities of Carnak and Luxor.

THEBES, in Greece. See THIVA.

THEISSE, a river of Hungary, which rises in the Carpathian mountains, flows above 1000 miles in a western direction to Tokay, when it turns to the S., passes by Tsongrand and Segeden, and, after receiving a great number of rivers, falls into the Danube, below Titul.

THEMAR, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Coburg, near the river Werra; 10 miles S.E. of Meiningen.

THEODOSIA. See CAFFA.

THERESIENSTADT, a town in the South of Hungary, 100 miles N. by W. of Belgrade. It is an assemblage of villages, and received its name, and the privileges of a royal free city, in 1779, from the empress Maria Theresa. Pop. 22,000.

THERMIA, an island of the Grecian archipelago, S. of the island of Zia, and near the gulf of Engia, 12 miles long, and 5 broad. The soil is good and well cultivated, and it has a great deal of silk. The principal town, of the same name, is the residence of a Greek bishop. Pop. 6000. Long. 24. 59. E. lat. 37. 31. N.

THERMOPYLÆ, a narrow passage in the N.E. of Greece, near mount Ceta; with high cliffs on one side, and an impassable marsh on the other. It is noted in history for the brave stand made by Leonidas with 300 Spartans against the army of Xerxes.

THESSALY. See JANNA.

THETFORD, a borough in Norfolk, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It is seated on the Little Ouse, which here divides Suffolk from Norfolk, and is navigable from Lynn. It has three parish churches, (one of which is on the Suffolk side of the river,) and a considerable manufacture of woollen cloth, and trade in coals and corn. The spring assizes for the county are held here. It is 30 miles S.S.E. of Lynn, and 80 N.E. of London. Long. 0. 50. E. lat. 52. 28. N.

THOLEN, a town of the Netherlands, in an island of its name belonging to the province of Zealand; 4 miles N.W. of Bergen-op-Zoom.

THOMAS, ST., an island of the Atlantic, lying under the equator, near the W. coast of Guinea; discovered in 1640 by the Portuguese. It is almost round, is about 30 miles in diameter, and consists chiefly of hills, intermixed with valleys, which are often filled with a thick fog. The soil is fertile, and produces plenty of sugar-canes, rice, and millet. On the same vines are the blossoms and green and ripe grapes, all the year round. The climate is unwholesome to the Portuguese, but agrees well with the original inhabitants, and also with the cattle, which are larger and finer here than on the coast of Guinea. In 1641 this island was taken by the Dutch; but they soon relinquished it in consequence of the insalubrity of the climate. Pavoacan is the capital.

THOMAS, ST., one of the Virgin islands in the West Indies, with a harbour, a town, and a fort. It was settled by the Danes in 1672; it is about 10 miles long, and 5 broad; area, 37 square miles. A chain of hills traverses the island from E. to W. The soil is generally poor; sugar and cotton are grown in moderate quantities. The town is well built, and fortified, commanding the excellent harbour. Its convenient situation makes it the entrepôt for the goods of all kinds imported for the supply of the other islands. It is a very active commercial place. It surrendered to the English in 1807, but was restored to the Danes in 1814. Pop. about 7000.

THOMAS, ST., a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, formerly a powerful city. It is inhabited by weavers and dyers, and noted for making the best coloured stuffs in India; 3 miles S. of Madras.

TIANO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a famous nunnery, and a mineral spring; 15 m. N.W. of Capua. Pop. 3100.

TIBER, a river of Italy, which rises in the Apennines; flows through the Pope's dominions by Borgo, St. Sepulchro, Citta di Castello, Orte, and Rome; 10 miles below which it enters the Mediterranean sea, between Ostia and Porta.

TIBET, or THIBET, a country of Asia, bounded on the N.W. and N. by the desert of Kobi, in Tartary, E. by China, S. by Assam and Birmah, and S.W. and W. from Hindostan and Bootan, by the Himalaya mountains. This country is one of the highest in Asia, being a part of that elevated tract which gives rise not only to the rivers of India and China, but also to those of Siberia and Tartary. Its length from E. to W. cannot be less than 2500 miles; its breadth about 500, but very unequal. It may be described as a vast plateau, or table-land, 15,000 feet above the sea, and from which rise the lofty summits of the Himalaya range to the height of 27,000 feet. The country is described as pleasant, and the climate and temperature delightful, though at a height that in other countries is uninhabitable; but vegetation is found on the northern slopes at the elevation of 17,500 feet. It is divided into four great provinces, and Lassa, Teshoo Lomboo, which are separated by a vast tract of unexplored country from Undes and Lahdak. The Indus and Sutluj have their sources in this region; but the principal river of Tibet is the Sampoo, or Burrampooter, of which little is known. The Irravaddy also rises here, and flows through Burmah and Pegu. The principal exports are gold-dust, diamonds, pearls, lamb-skins, shawls, woollen cloths, rock-salt, musk, and tincal or crude borax. The nature of the soil prohibits the progress of agriculture; but wheat, pease, and barley are cultivated. Here are many beasts of prey, and a great abundance and variety of wild fowl and game, with numerous flocks of sheep and goats, and herds of cattle of a diminutive size, as well as small horses. The religion is a modification of Buddhism, called Lamaism, and they are governed by the grand lama, who is not only submitted to and adored by them, but is also the great object of adoration for the various tribes of pagan Tartars who walk through the vast tract of continent which stretches from the river Volga to Corea. He is not only the sovereign pontiff, the vicegerent of the Deity on earth, but by the more remote Tartars is absolutely regarded as the Deity himself. Even the emperor of China, who is of a Tartar race, does not fail to acknowledge the lama, in his religious capacity, although, as a temporal sovereign, the lama himself is tributary to that emperor. The opinion of the most orthodox Tibetians is, that when the grand lama seems to die, either of old age or infirmity, his soul, in reality, only quits a crazy habitation, to animate another younger and better; and it is discovered again in the body of some child, by certain tokens known only to the lamas, or priests, in which order he always appears. The lamas, who form the greatest and most powerful body in the state, have the priesthood entirely in their hands. At the head of their hierarchy are three lamas: the Dalai lama, who resides at Lassa; the Teshoo lama, who lives at Teshoo Lomboo; and the Taranat lama, whose seat is Kharca, in the N. The priests constitute many monastic orders, which are held in great veneration among them. The most numerous sect are called Gylongs, or Buddhist monks, who are exempt from labour, enjoined temperance, and interdicted all intercourse with the female sex: they abound over all Tibet and Bootan, notwithstanding the severity of discipline; since every family consisting of more than four boys is obliged to contribute one of them to this order; and it is also encouraged by ambition, as the officers of state are usually selected from this sect. Besides the religious influence and authority of the grand lama, he is possessed of unlimited power throughout his dominions. His residence is at a vast palace on the mountain Putala, 7 miles from Lassa. The religion of Tibet, though in many respects it differs from that of the Indian brahmins, yet, in others, has a great affinity to it. The practice of polyandry is universally prevalent in Tibet; and one female associates with all the brothers of a family, without any restriction of age or number: the choice of a wife is the privilege of the elder brother. This extraordinary custom, and the celibacy of the priests, may have been intended to guard against too numerous a population in an unfertile country. The Tibetians preserve entire the mortal remains of their sovereign lamas only; every other corpse is either consumed by fire or exposed to be the promiscuous food of beasts and birds of prey. They have a great veneration for the cow, and highly respect the waters of the Ganges, the source of which they believe to be in heaven. The sunniasses, or Indian Pilgrims, often visit Tibet as a holy place; and the grand lama always maintains a body of nearly 300 of them in his pay. The country became subject to China in 1720, and has been tranquil under its government, except in 1790, when it was invaded by the Ghoorkas of Nepal; but they were repulsed with great loss. The population is estimated at 5,000,000. See PALTE.

TIBURON, a cape at the most western extremity of the island of St. Domingo; with a town and fort, on an open road, opposite Port Antonio in Jamaica. Long. 74. 32. W. lat. 18. 25. N.

TICINO, or TESSIN, a canton of Switzerland, to the W. of the canton of Grisons, on the S. side of the Alps, and almost encircled by Italy. It is rich in pastures and cattle, and has an area of 1130 square miles, with 90,000 inhabitants. Bellinzona is the capital.

TICINO, or TESSIN, a river which has its source in Switzerland, on the S. side of St. Gothard, flows through the canton of Ticino and the lake Maggiore, then passes to Pavia, in the Milanese, and a little after joins the Po.

TICKHILL, a town in West Yorkshire with a market on Friday. It was formerly much noted for its malting business, which is still the principal trade of the place. Here was formerly a castle, the ruins of which still bear ample testimony to its former strength and magnitude. The church is a handsome and spacious edifice, and here are two meeting-houses for dissenters, a free-school, and almshouses for 8 poor women; 7 miles S. of Doncaster, and 156 N. by W. of London.

TICONDEROGA, a fort of the state of New York, built by the French in 1756, on the narrow passage between the lakes George and Champlain. It was taken in 1759 by General Amherst, and in 1777 by General Burgoyne, but evacuated soon after the convention of Saratoga. It had all the advantages that art or nature could give it, but is now a heap of ruins, and forms an appendage to a farm. The town of Ticonderoga is on the W. shore of lake Champlain, and has a valuable iron-mine; 95 miles N. of Albany, and 14 S. of Crown Point. Pop. 2169.

TIDESWELL, a town in Derbyshire, on the S. confines of the Peak, with a market on Wednesday. The name of the town is derived from a well, in which it was said the water ebbed and flowed 2 feet, two or three times in an hour, after great rains, and was accounted one of the wonders of the Peak; but it has now ceased, and its site is now only pointed out by tradition; 22 miles N.W. of Derby, and 160 N.N.W. of London.

TIDORE, an island in the eastern seas, one of the Moluccas. It is 20 miles in circumference, and produces cloves and flax. The woods and the rocks that surround it render it a place of defence. It is governed by a sultan, who possesses also the S. part of Gilolo, and claims tribute from Mysol: 16 miles S. of Ternate. The Dutch have a factory here, first built in 1527. Long. 126. 40. E. lat. 1. 0. N.

TIEL. See THIE.

TIEN-TSIN, a city of China, in Pe-tche-li, noted for recent treaties, which the Chinese broke as soon as made; on the Pei-ho, 90 miles from its mouth, and 90 S.E. of Peking.

TIGRE, a province in the N.E. part of Abyssinia, 200 miles long, and 120 broad, through which passes all the merchandise of the kingdom destined to cross the Red sea for Arabia. Adowa is the capital; and the port of the Mosuab on the Red sea is in this province.

TIGRIS, (the Hiddekel of the sacred writings,) a river of Asia, which has its source in Diarbek. It flows by Diarbekir, Gezira, Mosul, and Teerit, in which course it separates Diarbek from Curdistan, then passes by Bagdad and Corna, and soon after joins the Euphrates, 35 miles above Bassora. It has been navigated by steam-boats as high as Mosul; but the current is swift, and above Bagdad it cannot be navigated, except by vessels of light draught. The ancient cities of Nineveh, Seleucia, and Ctesiphon were on this river, and which bounded, on the E., Mesopotamia (the modern Irak Arabi), having the Euphrates on the W. It may be considered as the boundary between the Ottomans and Persia.

TILBURY FORT, a fortress in Essex, situate on the Thames, opposite Gravesend. It has a double moat, the innermost of which is 180 feet broad, and its chief strength on the land side consists in its being able to lay the whole level under water. On the side next the river is a strong curtain, with a platform before it; on both which, and the bastions, are planted a great number of guns. It was made a regular fortification in 1667, after the attack of the Dutch fleet, when they burnt the shipping at Sheerness. It was originally a blockhouse built in the reign of Henry VIII. It is 28 miles E. by S. of London, by railway.

TILLIERS, a town of France, department of Eure; 6 miles N.E. of Verneuil.

TILSIT, a town of Prussian Lithuania, with a castle, and a considerable trade in corn, linseed, butter, cheese, and other provisions. In 1807 it was taken by the French; soon after which two treaties of peace were made between France and Prussia, and France and Russia, the three sovereigns being here in person. It is situate on the Memel; 50 miles N.E. of Konigsberg, and 95 S.S.W. of Mittau. Pop. 9000. Long. 22. 8. E. lat. 55. 8. N.

TIMANA, a town of Colombia, in Popayan, capital of a territory of the same name, which abounds in fruits and pastures. It is seated on a river, 130 miles E.S.E. of Popayan. Long. 74. 55. W. lat. 1. 35. N.

TIMBUCTOO, a city of Central Africa, and the great emporium of the interior trade of that continent. It was for many years enveloped in mystery, and the most extravagant ideas respecting its magnificence were formed, but have been dissipated by the reality. It was first visited by the unfortunate Major Laing, in 1826, but he was assassinated on his homeward route. M. Caillé was more fortunate, and it has since been visited by Dr. Barth. It is situated on an immense plain of white sand, having no vegetation but stunted trees and shrubs, such as the mimosa ferruginea, which grows no higher than three or four feet. The city is not closed by any barrier, and may be entered on any side. It forms a sort of triangle about three miles in circuit. The houses are large but not high, consisting entirely of a ground floor; they are built of bricks of a round form, rolled in the hands and baked in the sun. The streets are clean, and sufficiently wide for three horsemen to pass abreast. Both within and without the town there are many straw huts, which serve as dwellings for the poor, and for the slaves, who sell merchandise for their masters. The city contains seven mosques, two of which are large. The number of inhabitants is stated not to exceed 12,000, who are all engaged in trade; but the population is sometimes augmented by the Arabs, who arrive with the caravans and remain awhile in the city. In the plain several species of grass and thistle afford food for the camels. Fire-wood is very scarce, being all brought from the neighbourhood of Cabra, and camel-dung forms the only fuel of the poorer classes. The soil being totally unfit for cultivation, the inhabitants are obliged to procure from Jenné everything requisite for the supply of their wants, such as millet, rice, vegetable butter, honey, cotton, Soudan cloth, preserved provisions, candles, soap, allspice, onions, dried fish, pistachios, &c.; and, to prevent immediate famine, in case the vessels from Cabra should chance to be stopped by the Tooariks, the inhabitants take care to have their warehouses amply stored with every kind of provision. Water is also scarce, and is sold in the market-place, where a measure containing about half a pint is procured for a cowrie. To the W.S.W. of the town there are large excavations, from 30 to 40 feet deep, for preserving the rain-water. These reservoirs have no covering; and the water, being consequently exposed to the sun and the hot wind, though tolerably clear, has a disagreeable taste, and is very hot. Near the reservoirs are some small plantations of tobacco, the only plant which is here cultivated, and which grows no higher than five or six inches, and that only by dint of watering. All the native inhabitants of Timbuctoo are zealous Mohammedans. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors. They are represented as gentle and complaisant to strangers, industrious in their habits, and not wanting in intelligence. The men are of the ordinary size, generally well made, upright, and walk with a graceful step. Their colour is a fine deep black. Their noses are a little more aquiline than those of the Mandingoes, and like them they have thin lips and large eyes. The women attend to domestic occupations. They are not veiled, like those of Morocco, and are allowed to walk out when they please. Those of the richer class have always a great number of glass beads about their necks and in their ears. Like the women of Jenné they wear nose-rings; and the female who is not rich enough to procure a ring substitutes a piece of red silk for it: they wear silver bracelets, and ankle-rings of plated steel, the latter of which are made in the country. The female slaves of rich masters have gold ornaments about their necks, and instead of wearing ear-rings, as in the environs of the Senegal, they have little plates in the form of a necklace. The interior of the dwellings in Timbuctoo, as well as the dress of the inhabitants, is exceedingly neat. Their domestic articles consist of calabashes and wooden platters: knives and forks are unknown here, and the natives imagine that, like them, all people in the world eat with their fingers. Their furniture consists merely of mats for sitting on; and their beds are made by fixing four stakes in the ground at one end of the room, and stretching over them some mats or a cow hide. The rich have cotton mattresses and coverlets, which the neighbouring Moors manufacture from camel's hair and sheep's wool. The people are well fed. Their meals, of which they take two in a day, consist of rice, and cous-cous made of a small millet, dressed with meat or dried fish. Those negroes who are in easy circumstances breakfast on wheat bread, tea, and butter made from cow's milk; those of inferior circumstances use vegetable butter. Generally speaking, the negroes are not so well lodged as the Moors: the latter have great influence over them, and indeed consider themselves far their superiors. Cloth and other European merchandise, and salt, are brought to Timbuctoo by caravans from Barbary; these are exchanged for ivory, slaves, senna, gold-dust, dates, ostriches' feathers, &c., brought from the interior and more maritime parts of Africa. This city is subject to a well-regulated police, and many of the inhabitants are very rich. Cabra, its port, 3 miles N., is a narrow town of mud huts, containing about 1000 inhabitants, who are all employed either in landing the merchandise brought from Jenné, or in conveying it to Timbuctoo: it has a small mosque with a minaret, but is a dirty and miser-

TING-TCHOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Fo-kien; 980 miles S. of Peking. Long. 116. 30. E. lat. 25. 48. N.

TINIAN, an island in the North Pacific, one of the Ladrões, 12 miles long, and 6 broad. The soil is dry, and somewhat sandy, but produces abundance of cocoa-nuts, paupaus, guavas, limes, sour oranges, and bread-fruit; also much cotton and indigo. The road is dangerous, for the bottom consists of hard sand and large coral rocks. Long. 146. 0. E. lat. 15. 0. N.

TINO, the ancient Tenos, an island of the Grecian archipelago, to the S. of Andros, from which it is separated by a channel of a mile in width. It is 15 miles long, and 8 broad, and produces 16,000 pounds of silk yearly. The fortress stands on a rock; and here is a bishop's see of the Latin church, though the Greeks have 200 papas or priests. Pop. 25,000. The capital is St. Nicholo. Long. 25. 10. E. lat. 37. 40. N.

TINTAGEL, a village in Cornwall, noted for the splendid remains of a castle, on a bold promontory in the Bristol channel, said to have been the birth place of king Arthur, and the seat of the ancient dukes of Cornwall. It is one mile W. of Bossiney.

TINTERN, a hamlet in Chapel Hill parish, in Monmouthshire, noted for the venerable remains of an abbey, which is a beautiful specimen of Gothic architecture. It is seated on the river Wye, 5 miles N. by E. of Chepstow.

TINTO, a river of Spain, which rises in the province of Seville, and has its name from the water being tinged of a yellow colour. Near its springs it has a petrifying quality, no fish will live in it, nor any plants grow on its banks; these properties continue till other rivulets enter and alter its nature; for when it passes by Niebla it is not different from other rivers; and 18 miles below it enters the bay of Cadiz, at Huelva.

TINZEDA, a town of Barbary, in the county of Darn; on the river Dras. Long. 6. 13. W. lat. 27. 30. N.

TIOGA POINT. See ATHENS.

TIRON, an island on the W. coast of Sweden, 25 miles in circumference, and abounding in excellent pastures. Long. 11. 29. E. lat. 58. 0. N.

TIPERA, a district of Bengal, on the borders of Birmah. Pop. 750,000. The chief town is Comillah, which is the residence of the Rajah, and the seat of the British civil establishment.

TIPPECANOE, a county of Indiana, watered by the Wabash and its tributary the Tippecanoe river, and traversed by the Wabash and Erie canal. Capital, La Fayette. Pop. in 1840, 13,724.

TIPPERARY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster; 70 miles long, and 40 broad; bounded on the N. by King's county, E. by Queen's county and Kilkenny, S. by Waterford, and W. by Galway, Clare, Limerick, and Cork. It is divided into 147 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. The S. part is fertile; but the N. is rather barren, and terminates in a range of twelve mountains, the highest in Ireland, called Phelim-dhe-Madina. The river Suire runs through it from N. to S. Clonmel is the capital.

TIPPERARY, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name; 9 miles W.S.W. of Cashel, and 20 N.W. of Clonmel.

TIPSA. See TENESTA.

TIPTON, a parish in Staffordshire, of great importance in our iron manufactures, of which large quantities, and also coal, are raised from the neighbouring mines. There are a vast number of furnaces, forges, and mills employed in the works. It is 8 miles W.N.W. of Birmingham.

TIRANO, a town of Austrian Italy, capital of a district in the Valteline. It contains several handsome buildings, but from the narrowness of the streets, and many ruinous houses, its general appearance is desolate. Its staple commerce consists in the exportation of wine and silk. Near the town is the magnificent church of the Madonna, much visited by Catholic pilgrims. The massacre of the Protestants of the Valteline, in 1620, began in this town. It is seated on the Adda, 15 miles E. of Londris. Pop. 3700. Long. 9. 58. E. lat. 46. 20. N.

TIREH, a town of Asia Minor, in Natolia; situated on the Meinder; 32 miles S.S.E. of Smyrna.

TIRRE, an island of Scotland, one of the Hehrides; lying to the W. of Mull. It is 16 miles long and 3 broad. The surface in general is even, and it is noted for its marble quarry, and a handsome breed of little horses.

TIRLEMONT, a town of Belgium, in South Brabant; formerly one of the most considerable cities in that duchy, but ruined by the wars, and by a great fire in 1701. Near this place the Austrians were defeated in 1792 by the French, who, the year following, were routed by the former. It is seated on the river Greete, 10 miles E.S.E. of Louvain.

TIRNAU, a town of Hungary, in the country of Neitra, seated on the Tirna; 26 miles N.E. of Presburg.

TIRSCHENREID, a town of Bavaria, seated on a lake; 10 miles S. of Egra.

TISBURY, a parish in Wiltshire, in which is Wardour castle, a magnificent white stone structure, the seat of the Arunde. family. The ruins of the ancient castle still remain, near the modern building.

TITAN, or CABAROS, an island of France, the largest and most eastern of the Hieres, in the Mediterranean.

TITCHFIELD, a town in Hampshire, noted for the remains of a mansion where Charles I. was concealed, in his flight from Hampton Court, in 1647. It is seated on the river Air, 3 miles W. of Fareham.

TITERRI, the middle or southern province of the kingdom of Algier, in which is a lake of the same name, formed by the river Shellif, near its course. Towards the N. the country is mountainous and narrow, and to the S. it extends far into the desert. It contains some of the highest mountains in the kingdom, part of which are inhabited by the Cabyls, an independent tribe, who have never been subdued by the Algerines. The principal town of this province is Belida.

TITICACA, or CHUCUITO, a lake of South America, in the state of Peru. It is of an oval figure, with an inclination from N.W. to S.E., and 240 miles in circumference. Many streams enter into it, but its waters are so muddy and nauseous as to be unfit for drinking. One of the most splendid temples in the empire was erected on an island in this lake, by the Incas.

TITLISBERG, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, in the canton of Uri; 11 miles S.S.W. of Altorff.

TITSCHEN, NEW, a well built town of the Austrian states, in Moravia; defended by walls; 28 miles E. by N. of Preran.

TITTMANING, a town of Bavaria, in the duchy of Salzburg, seated on the Salza; 20 miles N. N.W. of Salzburg.

TITUL, a town of Hungary, seated on the Theisse; 23 miles E.S.E. of Peterwardein, and 24 N.N.W. of Belgrade.

TIUMEN, a town of Siberia, in the province of Tobolsk, on the river Tura, at the influx of the Pischma; 170 miles S.W. of Tobolsk.

TIVERTON, a borough in Devonshire, governed by a mayor; with a market on Tuesday. It returns two members to parliament.

It has long been noted for its woollen manufactures, particularly kerseys, but which do not flourish. Here are two churches, several meeting-houses, and a free school (founded by a clothier of the town), which has an endowment for the maintenance of four scholars at Balliol College, Oxford, and four at Sydney Sussex, Cambridge. Near the old church are the remains of a castle, part of which is converted into the offices of a farm. Tiverton has suffered very severely by fire, in 1612, 1731, 1785, and 1788. It is seated on the river Exe; united by a branch to the Bristol and Exeter railroad; 14 miles N.N.E. of Exeter, and 161 W. by S. of London. Long. 3. 38. W. lat. 50. 54. N.

TIVOLI, a town of the papal states, in Campagna di Roma; and a bishop's see. Though now poor, it boasts of greater antiquity than Rome, being the ancient Tibur, which was founded by a Grecian colony. It was the favourite country residence of the ancient Romans, as Frascati is of the moderns. The cathedral is built on the ruins of a temple of Hercules. In the market-place are two images of oriental granite, representing the Egyptian deity Isis. The adjacent country yields excellent oil. Near Tivoli are the ruins of the magnificent villa built by the emperor Adrian, a celebrated cascade, a temple of Vesta, and another of the sibyl Albunea, a famous villa called the Villa Esteme, and the remarkable lake of Solfatara. Tivoli is seated on an eminence, on the river Teverone; 16 miles E.N.E. of Rome. Pop. 14,000.

TIZZANO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma; 13 miles S. of Parma.

TLASCALA, a province of Mexico, bounded on the N. by Panuco, E. by the gulf of Mexico, S. by Guaxaca and the Pacific ocean, and W. by Mexico Proper. On the W. side there is a chain of mountains for the space of 55 miles, well cultivated; and on the N. is a great ridge of mountains, the neighbourhood of which exposes it to violent tempests and frequent inundation. It produces so much maize, that hence it had the name of Tlascala, the Land of Bread. Pop. 59,177. Puebla de los Angeles is the capital.

TLASCALA, a town of Mexico, formerly the capital of the province of the same name; seated on a river; 15 miles N. by E. of Puebla de los Angeles. Pop. 3400.

TLEMSAN. See TREMESAN.

TOBAGO, the most southern of the islands of the West Indies, and the most eastern except Barbadoes. It is 30 miles long, and 10 broad; and near its N.E. extremity is Little Tobago, an island 2 miles long and 1 broad. The climate is not so hot as might be expected from its situation so near the equator; nor is it visited by such dreadful hurricanes as frequently desolate the other islands. It is diversified with hills and vales, and is equal in richness of produce to any island in these seas. In 1748 it was declared a neutral island, but in 1763 it was ceded to the English. It was TOBERMORY, a town of Scotland, in the island of Mull, with a good harbour, and a custom-house; seated on a fine bay, near the N.W. end of the sound of Mull. Long. 5. 58. W. lat. 56. 46. N.

TODOLSK, a government of the Russian empire, which comprehends the greatest part of Western Siberia. It is divided into the two provinces of Tobolsk and Tomsk. Population, 622,422.

TODOLSK, a considerable and populous city of Russia, formerly capital of Siberia, and at present of the government of Tobolsk. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town: the former is properly the city, and stands very high, with a fort built of stone, in which are the governor's court, the governor's house, the archbishop's palace, the exchange, and two of the principal churches, all built of stone, but the houses in general are of wood, and are very low. The Tartars, who live round this town, for several miles, are all Mohammedans, and their mufti is an Arabian: in general they behave very quietly, and carry on some commerce, but practise no mechanic trades. There are also a great number of Calmuc Tartars, who serve as slaves. All the Chinese caravans pass through this town, and all the furs furnished by Siberia are brought here, and hence forwarded to Moscow. The Russians commonly send their state prisoners to this city. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Tobol and Irtysh; 1100 miles E. by N. of Moscow, and 1200 E. by S. of Petersburg. Pop. 16,200. Long. 68. 35. E. lat. 58. 12. N.

TOCANTIN, a large river of Brazil, which rises in lat. 18. S., and flows N.E. at the foot of a ridge of mountains for above 700 miles, then enters a more open country, and pursues its course 400 miles further to the Atlantic ocean, which it enters by a large estuary, below the city of Para. The estuary of this river has a communication with that of the Amazons to the W.; and the space included by them and the ocean is an island, 150 miles in diameter, called Maraso or Joanes.

TOCAT, a city of Asia Minor, in Sivas. The houses are handsomely built, and the streets paved, which is an uncommon thing in these parts; but the town makes a very odd appearance, being built on uneven ground. There are two rugged perpendicular rocks of marble, with an old castle upon each; and so many streams, that each house has a fountain. The inhabitants are computed at 60,000. The chief trade is in copper vessels, but much yellow leather and silk is manufactured. It is seated in a district which abounds in fruit and wine; 45 miles W.N.W. of Sivas, and 150 N. of Marash. Long. 36. 35. E. lat. 39. 10. N.

TOCAYMA, a town of Colombia, in a country abounding in fruit and sugar-canes. Here are hot baths between two cold springs; and near the town is a volcano. It is seated on the Pati, near its entrance into the Madalena; 34 miles W. of St. Fè de Bogota. Long. 74. 58. W. lat. 4. 5. N.

TOCRUR, a kingdom of Negroland, lying to the E. of Timbuctoo, on both sides the Niger. The capital is of the same name, seated on the S. side of the Niger; 320 miles E. of Timbuctoo. Long. 6. 18. W. lat. 16. 38. N.

TOCUYO, a town of the republic of Venezuela, near the source of the Tucuyo, famous for its excellent wheat and wool; it has also a trade in salt; 60 miles N. of Truxillo. Pop. 10,200.

TODI, a town of the Papal states, in the duchy of Spoleto, seated on a hill, near the Tiber; 22 miles E. of Spoleto.

TODMORDEN, a town in the parish of Rochdale, Lancashire, and partly in Yorkshire, 207 miles from London. It is seated in a picturesque valley, but is very irregularly built. The inhabitants are occupied in the manufacture of cotton, fustian, velveteen, &c. The Manchester and Leeds railway passes through the town, and here is the celebrated summit tunnel of the same line. Pop. in 1851, 7699.

TOISSEY, a town of France, in the department of Ain, with a college, seated near the conflux of the Saone and Chalarone; 15 miles N. of Trevoux.

TOKAT, a town of Hungary, with a castle. It is celebrated for its wine, which is preferred to all others in Hungary; and near it are large salt-works. It stands at the conflux of the Bodrog with the Theisse; 105 miles E.N.E. of Buda. Pop. 4200. Long. 21. 15. E. lat. 48. 8. N.

TOLEDO, a city of Spain, in New Castile, of which it was formerly the capital. It is seated on a conical hill on the river Tagus, which nearly surrounds it, and on the land side is an ancient wall, flanked with 100 towers. There are a great number of superb structures, besides 17 public squares, where the markets are kept. It is an archbishop's see, and the cathedral is the richest in Spain; the Segrario, or principal chapel, contains 15 large cabinets let into the wall, full of gold and silver vessels, and other works. Here are numerous religious houses and churches, with some hospitals; and formerly it had a university, which was suppressed in 1807. The inhabitants, once estimated at 200,000, are now reduced to 25,000. Without the town are the remains of an amphitheatre and other antiquities. It has a royal castle, and several manufactures of arms, silk, and wool. Toledo was occupied by the French in 1808; 37 miles S. of Madrid. Long. 3. 20. W. lat. 39. 50. N.

TOLEN, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Zealand, in an island of the same name, separated by a narrow channel from Brabant. On the Brabant side it has a fort, called Schlyckenburg; 5 miles N.W. of Bergen-op-Zoom. Long. 4. 20. E. lat. 51. 30. N.

TOLENTINO, a town of the Ecclesiastical states, in Ancona, where the relics of St. Nicholas are kept. A treaty of peace was concluded here between Bonaparte and the papal court in 1797. It is seated on the Chiento; 8 miles S.E. of St. Severino. Pop. 4000.

TOLSNORO, a seaport of Russia, in the government of Niga, seated on the gulf of Finland; 60 miles W. of Narva. Long. 26. 4. E. lat. 59. 38. N.

TOLFA, a town of Italy, in the states of the Church. In the environs are warm baths, mines of alum and iron, and quarries of alabaster and lapis lazuli. It is 6 miles N. E. of Civita Vecchia.

TOLHUIS, a town of the Netherlands, in Guelderland, seated on the Rhine; 8 miles E. of Nimeguen.

TOLLAND, a town of Connecticut, chief of a county of its name; 18 miles N.E. of Hartford. Pop. 1565.

TOMUCCROO. See TIMBUCCOO.

TOMINA, a province of Buenos Ayres, 72 miles long, and 210 in circuit. The surface is mountainous, but the valleys are fertile.

TOMINI, a town on the E. coast of the island of Celebes, on a bay to which it gives name. Long. 111. 0. E. lat. 0. 45. S.

TOMPKINS a county of New York. The S. part of the Cayuga and Seneca lakes are in it; capital, Ithaca. Pop. 37,948.

TOMPKINVILLE a town of New York, pleasantly seated on the N.E. part of Staten island, and connected by steam ferry-boats with New York. It contains a marine hospital or lazaretto for New York port, 6 miles S. of New York. Pop. 1400.

TOMSK, a town of Asiatic Russia, capital of a province of its name, in the government of Tobolsk. On the highest part stands a wooden castle, defended by 14 pieces of cannon; and in it are a cathedral built of wood, the chancery, and an arsenal. The inhabitants carry on a great trade, this town lying on the great road through all the E. and N. parts of Siberia. Here are all kinds of artificers and tradesmen, but they are extremely indolent and slothful. It contains above 2000 houses, with 12,000 inhabitants. It is seated on the river Tom; 590 miles E. by S. of Tobolsk. Long. 84. 19. E. lat. 57. 4. N.

TONBRIDGE. See TUNBRIDGE.

TONBERN, a well-built town of Denmark, capital of a district of its name, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a considerable trade in corn, cattle, silk, and fine lace. It is seated on the river Widaw, and on a bay of the German ocean; twenty-eight miles S. by E. of Ripen, and 40 N.W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 40. E. lat. 54. 58. N.

TONGATABOO, one of the Friendly islands, 20 leagues in circuit. It was discovered by Tasman, who called it New Amsterdam, and was visited in 1773 and 1777 by Cook, who lay at anchor on the W. part. It has the best harbour, or anchoring-place, to be found among these islands. The land is low, with many gentle risings, and very fertile, being wholly laid out in plantations, with roads or lanes for travelling. It is the seat of government for all the other islands, and the ordinary residence of all the principal chiefs. Long. 174. 46. W. lat. 21. 9. S.

TONGERON, or TONGNES, a town of Belgium, in the territory of Liege; formerly one of the most flourishing cities in the Roman province of Gallia Belgica. It is seated on the Jeckar; 13 miles N.W. of Liege.

TONO-TCHUEN, a fortified city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Se-tchuen. The inhabitants are all soldiers, who have followed the profession of arms from father to son. It is 1000 miles S.W. of Peking. Long. 102. 30. E. lat. 25. 56. N.

TONGUSIANS, or TONGUSES, a people who inhabit the E. part of Siberia, and are subject to the Russians. They are all pagans, and subsist chiefly by grazing, and hunting of sables. They live in huts, which they take down and remove with them from place to place. These huts are composed of wooden poles, covered all over with hair and rubbish, except a hole left at the top to let out the smoke. Their fire is made in the middle, and they all sit round it upon turfs. Both sexes are very strong, and broad-faced, and they all ride on horseback, not excepting the girls. Both men and women dress alike, in a sort of frock, with boots of skins on their legs, and their common drink is water. Their number is supposed not to exceed 45,000.

TONNA, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Gotha, 6 miles N. of Gotha.

TONNAY BOUTONNE, a town of France, department of Lower Charente, on the river Boutonne; 17 miles N. of Saintes.

TONNEINS, a town in the department of Lot-et-Garonne, seated on the Garonne; 7 miles E. of Marmande. Pop. 600.

TONNERRE, a town in the department of Yonne, famous for its good wines. It is seated on the Armançon; 27 miles S. of Troyes, and 102 E. of Paris.

TONNINGEN, a seaport of Denmark, in the luchy of Sleswick. The harbour is commodious, and defended by three batteries. It is seated on a peninsula, formed by the river Ryder; 25 miles W.S.W. of Sleswick, and 70 N.N.W. of Hamburg. It is connected by railway with Rendsburg and Flensburg. Long. 9. 10. E. lat. 54. 30. N.

TONQUIN, or TONGKING, a country of Asia; bounded on the N. by China, E. by China and the gulf of Tonquin, S. by Cochín-China, and W. by Laos. It is 1200 miles in length and 500 in breadth, and one of the finest countries of the East. It contains 18,000,000 of inhabitants. The commodities are gold, musk, silks, calicoes, drugs of many sorts, woods for dyeing, lacquered and earthen wares, salt, aniseed, and wormseed. The lacquered ware is not inferior to that of Japan, which is accounted the best in the world. The natives in general are of a middling stature, and clean limbed, with a tawny complexion; their faces oval and flatfish, and their hair black, long, and coarse, hanging down their shoulders. They dye their teeth black. They are dexterous, active, and ingenious in mechanic arts. Their garments are made either of silk or cotton; but the poor people and soldiers wear only cotton of a dark tawny colour. Their houses are small and low, and the walls either of mud, or hurdles daubed over with clay. They have only a ground floor, with two or three partitions, and each room has a square hole to let in the light. They have stools, benches, and chairs; and on the side of a table in every house is a little altar, on which are two incense-pots. The country abounds with villages, which consist of 30 or 40 houses, surrounded by trees; and in some places are banks to keep the water from overflowing their gardens, where they have oranges, betels, pumpkins, melons, and salad herbs. In the rainy season they cannot pass from one house to another without wading through the water, but sometimes they have boats. The Tonquinese, in general, are courteous to strangers; but the great men are haughty and ambitious, the soldiers insolent, and the poor thievish. They buy all their wives, of which the great men have several. The men are so addicted to gaming that, when every thing else is lost, they will stake their wives and children; and in hard times they will sell them to buy rice for themselves. When a man dies he is buried in his own ground; and, if he was a master of a family, they make a great feast. The first new moon that happens after the middle of January is a great festival, when they rejoice for ten days together; and they have another great feast in May or June, when their first harvest is got in. Their religion is paganism, but they own a Supreme Being. Their principal idols have human shapes; but they have likewise some resembling elephants and horses, placed in small low temples built of timber. The language is very guttural, and some of the words are pronounced through the teeth: it has a great resemblance to the Chinese. Tonquin became an independent kingdom in 1368, but it has been entirely subdued by Cochín-China, so that, with Cambodia, and all the countries between Siam and China, it is now united under the Chinese empire. Cachao, or Kestro, is the capital.

TONSBERG, a seaport of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuys. It has some commerce in timber; and near it is Walloe, the most considerable salt-work in the kingdom. It is 46 miles S. of Christiania. Long. 10. 14. E. lat. 58. 50. N.

TONURU, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, formerly a city of great extent, as appears by some ruins of the walls. Here are three temples, in good preservation, and near it is an immense tank, or reservoir of water, between two rocky hills. It is 10 miles N. of Seringapatam.

TOBOUAI, an island in the South Pacific ocean, one of the Society islands, discovered by Cook. It is not in any direction above 6 miles over, but there are hills in it of a considerable elevation, covered with herbage, except a few rocky cliffs, with patches of trees interspersed to their summits. It is plentifully stocked with hogs and fowls, and produces several kinds of fruits and roots. See SOCIETY ISLANDS. Long. 210. 23. W. lat. 23. 25. S.

TOPEL, or TOPL, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen, at the source of a rivulet of the same name; 25 miles N.W. of Pilsen.

TOPETINO, a town of Mexico, in the province of Mechoacan, at the mouth of a river, near the Pacific ocean; 55 miles N.W. of Zacatula.

TOPLITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutmeritz, celebrated for its warm baths. Near this place the Austrians defeated the Prussians in 1762, and here the allied sovereigns had their head-quarters a considerable time in 1813. It is 16 miles N.W. of Leutmeritz.

TOPOLTZAN, a town of Hungary, 60 miles N.E. of Presburg.

TOPSFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, on the Ipswich river. It has some handsome dwellings, and extensive manufactories of boots and shoes; 25 miles N. by E. of Boston. Pop. 1059.

TOPSHAM, a town of Maine, on the Androscoggin river, which affords great facilities for navigation and ship-building. Lumber is largely exported. It lies opposite to Brunswick; 29 miles S. by W. of Augusta. Pop. 1883.

TOPSHAM, a seaport of Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. Here is a spacious and convenient quay, belonging to the city of Exeter, of which this town is the port. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the shipping business. It is seated at the head of the estuary of the Exe, 5 miles S.E. of Exeter, and 170 S.W. of London.

TOR, a seaport of Arabia, with a good harbour, defended by a castle. Here is a Greek convent, in the garden of which are fountains of bitter water, pretended to be those which Moses rendered sweet by throwing in a piece of wood. It stands on the W. side of the peninsula formed by the two arms of the Red sea, 150 miles S.S.E. of Suez. Long. 33. 40. E. lat. 28. 10. N.

TORBAT, a bay of the English Channel, on the coast of Devonshire, to the E. of Dartmouth; formed by two canals, called Berry Head and Bob's Nose. Here the Prince of Orange landed in 1688, when he came over from Holland by the invitation of many principal persons, to preserve the country from popery and arbitrary power. The S. point, Berry Head, is in long. 3. 28. W. lat. 50. 24. N.

TORGAU, a strong town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseburg, with a castle. The inhabitants brew excellent beer, and have manufactories of woollens, leather, and soap. Here the king of Prussia obtained a great victory over the Austrians in 1760. The town was taken by the allies in 1814. It is seated among groves and lakes on the river Elbe, 26 miles N.N.W. of Meissen, and 46 N.W. of Dresden. Pop. 4500. Long. 13. 3. E. lat. 51. 32. N.

TORIGNY, a town of France, department of Manche, with a castle, 7 miles S.E. of St. Lo.

TORMES, a river of Spain, which rises in the mountains of Avila, in Castile, passes by Alva, Tormes, and Salamanca, and joins the Douro below Mirande de Douro. The battle of Salamanca, July, 1812, was fought on its banks.

TORNA, a town of Hungary, capital of a district of the same name, with a castle seated on an eminence on the river Sayo; 22 miles W. of Cassovia. Long. 20. 43. E. lat. 48. 50. N.

TORNEA, a river of Sweden, which rises on the borders of Norway, forms a lake of the same name, and flows S.E. into the gulf of Bothnia, below Tornea.

TORNEA, a seaport of European Russia, in the government of Finland, with a good harbour. It is a place of some trade, for the Laplanders in those parts come and exchange their skins and other articles for what they want. The houses are low, and the cold so severe, that sometimes people lose their fingers and toes. In its vicinity is an entire mountain of iron ore. It is seated on the river Tornea, at the N. extremity of the gulf of Bothnia, 165 miles N.E. of Uma. Long. 24. 12. E. lat. 65. 51. N.

TORRES VEDRAS, a town of Portugal in Estremadura, noted for the lines erected in its vicinity by Lord Wellington, in 1810. It has a castle, four churches, &c. It is seated near the Atlantic, 27 miles N. of Lisbon. Pop. 2300.

TORRIDOE, a river in Devonshire, which rises on the summit of a high moor, within a few yards of the source of the Tamar, not far from the Bristol channel. It flows S.E. to Hatherly, and then receiving the Oak, from Oakhampton, turns short to the N., and passing by Torrington and Biddeford, enters the Bristol channel at Barnstable bay.

TORRIGLIA, a town of the territory of Genoa, 14 miles N.E. of Genoa.

TORRINGTON, a town in Devonshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It has two churches, several meeting-houses, some almshouses, a charity school, a manufacture of stuffs, and some remains of a castle. It is seated on the Torridge, 11 miles S. by W. of Barnstaple, and 194 W. by S. of London.

TORRINGTON, a town of Connecticut on the Naugatuck river, 28 miles W. by N. of Hartford. Pop. 1707.

TORSUOK, a town of European Russia, in the government of Iver. It has several churches, a castle, and a manufacture of woollen and coarse linen. It is seated on the river Trglza, 45 miles W. of Iver. Pop. 10,000.

TOSILLA, a town of Sweden, in Sudermania, 43 miles W. of Stockholm.

TORTOLA, the principal of the Virgin Islands, in the W. Indies; 18 miles long, and 7 broad. It formerly belonged to the Dutch, who built a strong fort, from which they were expelled by the English in 1666. The town and harbour are at the E. end of the island. In 1802 it was made a free port, since which period the island has undergone great improvements. It produces excellent cotton, sugar, and rum. Long. 63. 0. W. lat. 18. 33. N.

TORTONA, a town of the Sardinian states, in a province of its name, with a good citadel on an eminence. It was formerly deemed a considerable frontier place; was taken by the allies in 1774, by the Spaniards in 1745, by the French in 1796, by the Russians and Austrians in 1799, regained by the French the same year, and by them delivered up to the Austrians in 1814. It is seated on the Scrivia, 27 miles S.W. of Milan. Population of the province, 40,000; of the town, 8000. Long. 8. 58. E. lat. 44. 54. N.

TORTORELLA, a town of Naples in Principato Citra; 5 miles N.E. of Policastro.

TORTOSA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. It is divided into the Old and New Town, both surrounded by fortifications. The entrance is over a large bridge of boats, on the river Ebro. The cathedral, the royal college of Dominicans, and the convent of the Carmelites, are the most remarkable edifices. Here is a great deal of silk and oil, and very fine potters'-ware, which resembles porcelain. Tortosa was taken by the French in 1810, after a short siege but restored in 1814. It is seated partly on a plain and partly on a hill, in a country fertile in corn and fruits, and abounding with quarries and mines of silver, iron, alabaster, jasper of divers colours, and stones with veins of gold. It is 48 miles S.W. of Tarragona, and 96 S.E. of Saragossa. Pop. 11,000. Long. 0. 35. E. lat. 40. 48. N.

TORTOSA (the ancient Orthosia), a town of Syria, with a castle. It is surrounded by lofty walls, and stands near the Mediterranean; 35 miles N.N.E. of Tripoli.

TORTUE, an island of the West Indies, near the N. coast of St. Domingo, so named from the great number of tortoises found on and near it. Here the French buccaneers used to fortify themselves. It is about 20 miles long, and 4 broad, and has a safe harbour, but difficult of access. Long. 73. 10. W. lat. 20. 10. N.

TORTUGA, or SAL TORTUGA, an uninhabited island near the coast of Columbia, 60 miles W. of the island of Margareta, and about 36

In circumference. There are a few goats on it; and the tortoises come upon the sandy banks to lay their eggs. At the E. end is a large salt-pond, where the salt begins to kern in April; and for some months after, ships come here to lade salt. At the W. end is a small harbour, with fresh water. Long. 64. 46. W. lat. 11. 16. N.

TOSA, a seaport of Spain, in Catalonia, on a bay which forms a good harbour. It is built partly on a plain, and partly on a steep hill, which projects into the sea. On the top of the hill is a strong citadel, with other fortifications. It is 57 miles N.E. of Barcelona. Long. 2. 54. E. lat. 41. 42. N.

TOSCANELLA, a town of Austrian Italy, 5 miles E.N.E. of Salo.

TOST, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Oppeln, with a castle; 25 miles E.S.E. of Oppeln.

TOTNESS, a borough in Devonshire; governed by a mayor, returning two members to parliament, with a weekly market on Saturday, and a monthly one on Tuesday; also a manufacture of serges, &c. It had formerly a castle and walls, and two gateways are yet standing. It is seated on the river Dart, on the side of a hill; and is connected with Exeter by railroad, a continuation of the Great Western line; 26 miles S.W. of Exeter, and 196 W. by S. of London.

TOTONICAPAN, a town of Guatemala or Central America, estimated to contain 12,000 inhabitants, nearly all aborigines; 80 miles N.N.W. of Guatemala.

TOTTENHAM, a village in Middlesex, 5 miles N. of London. Here are three almshouses; one of them founded in 1596, by Balthazar Zanches, who was confectioner to Philip II. of Spain, and the first that exercised that art in this country.

TOUL, a fortified town of France, department of Meurthe. The cathedral and episcopal palace are handsome structures. It is seated on the Moselle, in a plain almost surrounded by mountains; 13 miles W. by S. of Nancy, and 34 W.S.W. of Metz. Pop. 7000.

TOULON, a fortified city and seaport of France, capital of the department of Var. It is divided into the Old and New quarter; the former, which is ill-built, has nothing remarkable in it but the town-house, and a long street, shaded with trees, called the Rue aux Arbres; the other contains the magnificent works constructed by Louis XIV., many fine houses, and a grand oblong square, lined with trees, and serving as a parade. The old and New harbour communicate with each other by means of a canal. The old haven has a noble quay, and is protected by two moles, begun by Henry IV. The new haven was constructed by Louis XIV., as were the fortifications; it contains an arsenal, a ropewalk, a park of artillery, dockyards, basins, and every thing to be expected in the second port for men-of-war in this country. The galleys, transferred from Marseilles some years ago, occupy a basin in the new port. Many of the galley-slaves are artisans, and some merchants; they no longer sleep on board the galleys, but are provided with accommodations on shore, in a vast building erected for that purpose. Both the old and new port have an outlet into the outer road, or harbour, which is 10 miles in circuit, surrounded by hills, and the entrance defended on both sides by a fort and batteries. Toulon is the only mart in the Mediterranean for the re-exportation of the products of the East Indies. In 1706 it was bombarded by the allies, both by land and sea, by which almost the whole town was reduced to a heap of ruins, and several ships burned; but they were at last obliged to raise the siege. In 1721 it experienced the dreadful ravages of a pestilence. In 1793 it capitulated, in the name of Louis XVII., to the British, who, not finding the place tenable, evacuated it the same year, after having destroyed the arsenal, &c. Toulon is seated on a bay of the Mediterranean; 37 miles S.E. of Marseilles, and 517 S.S.E. of Paris. Pop. 30,000. Long. 5. 55. E. lat. 43. 7. N.

TOULOUSE, a city of France, capital of the department of Upper Garonne; and an archbishop's see. It contains 60,000 inhabitants, and is the most considerable city in France, next to Paris and Lyons, although its population bears no proportion to its extent. It was the capital of the Teutobages, who made so many conquests in Asia and Greece. It was next a Roman colony, and was successively the capital of the Visigoths, (who destroyed the suburb amphitheatre, of which there are still some remains, the capitol, and other Roman monuments,) and that of Aquitaine. The walls of the city, as well as the houses, are built with bricks. St. Stephen's, the metropolitan church, would be incomparable if the nave were equal to the choir; and the archbishop's palace is magnificent. The town-house forms a perfect square, 324 feet long, and 66 high: the principal front occupies an entire side of the grand square called the Place Royale. In the great hall called the Hall of Illustrious Men, is the statue of the Chevalier Isanre, with the busts of all the great men to whom Toulouse has given birth. Communicating with the Atlantic on one side by the river Garonne, and with the Mediterranean on the other by the canal of Languedoc, Toulouse might have been a very commercial city; but the taste of the inhabitants has been principally for the sciences and belles lettres. The little commerce they have, consists in leather, wool, drapery, blankets, mignonettes, oil, iron, mercury, hardware, and books. The bridge over the Garonne, equal to that of Tours, forms a communication with the suburb of St. Cyprian. The allied army entered this city on the 12th of April, 1814, after a severe action preceding day. Bordeaux, and 52,000. Long.

TRINO, a town in the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, 8 miles N.W. of Casal, and 35 N.E. of Turin. Pop. 5500.

TRIPATORE, a town of Hindostan, in Marwar, 36 miles E.N.E. of Madura, and 58 S.W. of Tanjore.

TRIPOLI, a country of Barbary, bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Barca, S. by Fezzan, and W. by Biledulgerid and Tunis. The fertile districts of Ghadian and Mesurata are in a mountainous tract to the S.E. of the town of Tripoli, and are inhabited by Arabs. In the immediate neighbourhood of the capital the tract called the Messeah is of exuberant fertility; but the supply of water is precarious, there being no rivers: it was anciently the granary of the Romans. To the E. is the Great Syrtis, a bay much dreaded by the ancient mariners for its supposed quicksands, &c., but which do not exist. It was colonized by the Greeks, and called by them Cyrene. The total population has been variously stated from 660,000 and 2,000,000. It is probably about 1,500,000. It is 925 miles along the coast, but the breadth is various. It is governed by a day, under the protection of the Turks.

TRIPOLI, a city and seaport of Barbary, capital of the foregoing country, with a castle and a fort. It contains some ruins, which mark its origin, particularly of a beautiful triumphal arch of marble, erected in honour of the emperor Antoninus. It was taken by the emperor Charles V., who settled the knights of Rhodes here; but they were expelled by the Turks in 1551. The Americans made an attempt upon the town in 1804, but without success. It was formerly very flourishing, and has now some trade in ashes, ostriches' feathers, and skins. The population is of a motley character, consisting of all nations; and some Europeans have had high situations in the government. It was famous for its piracies, and derived considerable revenues from the ransom and sale of the prisoners. The inhabitants amount to about 25,000, including 2000 Jews, who are better treated than in other Mohammedan states. The general character of the people is vicious and depraved, though they are not so bigoted as other Moslems. The common language is a bad Italian; but Arabic is that used by the court. Tripoli is seated on the Mediterranean, and surrounded by a wall; 275 miles S.E. of Tunis, and 570 E.S.E. of Algier. Long. 13.5. E. lat. 32.54. N.

TRIPOLI, a town of Syria, capital of the patriarchate of Tripoli, on the Mediterranean, defended by a citadel. There is one handsome mosque, and all the houses have fountains belonging to them. Before it is a sand-bank, which increases so much that it is expected to choke up the harbour, which is 2 miles W. of the town, and formed by a round piece of land, united to the mainland by an isthmus. On each side is a bulwark to defend the entrance. It is the residence of a bashaw, who also governs the territory about it, where there are great numbers of mulberry-trees, and other fruits. The commerce of Tripoli consists almost wholly in coarse silk, which is made use of for laces. It is 90 miles N.W. of Damascus, and 120 S. of Scanderon. Pop. 15,000. Long. 36.20. E. lat. 34.50. N.

TRIPOLITZA, or TRIPOLITZA, a town of Greece, in the Morea, of which it is the capital. It is a gloomy, dirty town, and badly situated. It was taken in 1821 by the exasperated Greeks, in their struggle for independence, when 6000 Turkish soldiers and inhabitants were barbarously massacred. Pop. 12,000.

TRIPSTADT, a town of Bavaria, in the province of the Rhine; 16 miles E.N.E. of Deux Ponts.

TROWBRIDGE, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Saturday, and considerable manufactures of broad cloth and kerseymeres. It is seated on a hill by the river Were, over which is a stone bridge, and has a branch to the Great Western railway; 23 miles S.W. of Marlborough, and 90 W. of London.

TROY, a flourishing city of New York, capital of Rensselaer county. It is pleasantly seated on the E. side of the Hudson river, at the head of tidewater. It extends for about three miles along the river, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from it, in an alluvial flat, bordered on the E. by hills of considerable elevation, from which two considerable streams the Poesten and Wyant's Kills descend with romantic cataracts. The city is laid out with great regularity; the main business street, River street, following the curve of the river; the fifteen others running N. and S. being straight and parallel, these are crossed by nineteen others E. and W. The houses are mostly of brick, and many of them elegant. The court-house is a fine marble edifice, and some of the churches and other public buildings are remarkable. A railroad connects it with Ballstonspa and the Schenectady railroad to Saratoga. The city was devastated by fire in 1820. West Troy on the opposite side of the river is properly a suburb of Troy, and has about 5000 inhabitants. Here is a United States' arsenal, and the opening of the Erie canal into the Hudson. Troy itself contained in 1845, a pop. of 21,709; 6 miles N. of Albany, 15 N. of New York. Long. 73. 40. W. lat. 42. 44. N.

TROYES, a city of France, capital of the department of Aube, and a bishop's see; with a castle, in which the ancient counts of Champagne resided. It is surrounded by good walls, but almost all the houses are of wood, and good water is wanting. Its commerce, once very flourishing, now consists only in some linens, dimities, fustians, wax-chandlery, candles, and wine. Troyes was captured and recaptured several times by the allied and French armies in 1814. It is seated on the Seine, 28 miles E. by N. of Sens, and 105 S. E. of Paris. Pop. 27,000. Long. 4. 5. E. lat. 48. 18. N.

TRONS, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, seated on the Rhine, 7 miles W. of Ilantz.

TRURO, a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It is a stannary town, and the chief business is in shipping tin and copper ore, found in abundance in its neighbourhood. It is one of our finest country towns, and has several important public edifices. A monument was erected here in 1835, to the brothers Richard and John Lander, the explorers of the Niger in Africa, who were natives of this place. Here, after the battle of Naseby, the forces of Charles I., under Lord Hopeton, surrendered to General Fairfax. Truro is seated between the rivers Kenwyn and St. Allen, at the head of Falmouth haven, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. of Falmouth, and 257 W. by S. of London.

TSONG-MING, an island of China, 50 miles long, and 10 broad; lying at the mouth of the Kiang-ku, and separated from the province of Kiang-nan by two channels, 13 miles broad. Its principal revenue arises from salt, which is made in such abundance on the N. side of the island, that it can supply most of the neighbouring countries. It contains only one city, but villages are very numerous. The country is delightful, and intersected by many canals. The city, of the same name, is of the third class. It is situate at its S.E. end. Long. 121. 55. E. lat. 30. 15. N.

TSONGRAD, a town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, seated on the Theisse, opposite the influx of the Koros; 26 miles N. of Segedin.

TUAM, a city of Ireland, in the county of Galway, and an archbishop's see, though now a small place. The cathedral serves as a parish church. It is 20 miles N.N.E. of Galway, and 25 W.S.W. of Roscommon.

TUARICK, a people of Central Africa, S. of Soudan. They are a remarkably fine race, and subsist in some measure on plunder. They are of various tribes and complexions. Some are Mohammedans and some Pagans. They are all, however, of the Berber race, and the language is still exclusively spoken by some tribes in Sockna, Augila, and Irwal.

TUBAN, one of the strongest towns, of Java, with a harbour, and a king of its own. It is seated on the N. coast of the island. Long. 111. 51. E. lat. 6. 0. S.

TUBINGEN, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg, with a celebrated university, and a fortified castle on a mountain. Here are good snuff manufactures, and in the townhouse is a very curious clock. It is seated on the Neckar, in a country abounding in corn and wine, 20 miles S. of Stutgard, and 59 E. by S. of Strasburg. Pop. 6000. Long. 9. 10. E. lat. 48. 32. N.

TUCUMAN, a province of South America, in the republic of La Plata, between Chili and Paraguay, to the E. of the Andes, and

W. of Rio de la Plata. This province, with the country S. of the river Plata, forms an extensive plain, almost without a tree. The soil is a deep fertile mould, watered by many streams from the Andes, and clothed in perpetual verdure. In this rich pasturage the horses and cattle imported from Europe have multiplied to an almost incredible degree. This has enabled the inhabitants not only to open a lucrative trade with Peru, by supplying it with cattle, horses, and mules, but to carry on a commerce equally beneficial, by the exportation of hides to Europe; notwithstanding which, the towns in this country are no better than paltry villages. The Spaniards endeavoured to add some dignity to these towns when in their possession, by erecting them into bishoprics.

TUCUMAN, or SAN MIGUEL DE TUCUMAN, the capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see, is situate in a pleasant plain, and has considerable trade in oxen and mules. It is 200 miles E. of Copiapo. Long. 64. 35. W. lat. 27. 2. S.

TUDELA, a town of Spain, in Navarre, with a castle. A battle was fought here, in 1808, between the Spaniards and French, in which the latter were victorious. It was raised to a see in 1783. It stands on the Ebro, and is a tidy town, but dull. Here the celebrated Jew, Benjamin, who flourished in the 12th century, was born. It is seated in a country that produces good wine, on the river Ebro; 44 miles S. of Pamplona, and 100 E. of Burgos. Pop. 7300. Long. 1. 38. W. lat. 41. 12. N.

TUFALLA, a town of Spain in Navarre, now much impoverished. Its ancient name was Tubalia, because it was founded by Tubal. It was once the court of kings; 75 miles from Zaragoza. Pop. under 5000.

TUGGURT, a town of Barbary, capital of a country lying S. of Algier. It is 310 miles S.S.E. of Algier. Long. 5. 50. E. lat. 32. 40. N.

TUNBRIDGE, or TONBRIDGE, a town in Kent, with a market on Friday. Here are the ruins of a large castle, erected by Richard, Earl of Clare, natural son of Richard I., Duke of Normandy; and here is a famous free-school, founded by Sir Andrew Judd, Lord Mayor of London, in 1551. It is seated on one of the branches into which the Medway here divides itself, its name being significant of its position, and on the South Eastern railway, which has here a branch diverging to Tunbridge Wells, &c. It is twelve miles W.S.W. of Maidstone, and 30 E.S.E. of London.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, a town in Kent, much resorted to on account of its chalybeate waters, discovered in 1606 by Dudley, Lord North, who recovered from a deep consumption by drinking them. The old town is seated at the bottom of three hills, called Mount Sion, Mount Ephraim, and Mount Pleasant. The town has increased much of late years, towards the S. and E., and contains some handsome churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and many fine ranges of building for the accommodation of its numerous visitors. It is built irregularly, and resembles an extended and romantic village, rather than a town. The surrounding country is picturesque, and abounds in a sandstone, of which many of the buildings are erected. On Rustall Common, about a mile and a half from the town, are some picturesque rocks of a singular form, and great height. The only manufacture is of inlaid turnery and toys, for which it is famous. The South Eastern railway has a branch to this place. It is 5 miles S. of Tunbridge, and 35 S.S.E. of London.

TUNEGOOSES. See TONGOUSI.

TUNIS, a country of Barbary, bounded on the N. and E. by the Mediterranean, S. by Tripoli and Biledulgerid, and W. by Algier. It extends 200 miles from N. to S., and 120 from E. to W. This country was formerly a monarchy, but in 1574 it became a republic, under the protection of the Turks, and pays a certain tribute to the bashaw that resides at Tunis. The soil in the E. part is but indifferent, for want of water. Towards the middle the mountains and valleys abound in fruits; but the W. part is the most fertile, being watered by rivers. The environs of Tunis are very dry, and corn is generally dear; but there are plenty of citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, grapes, and other fruits; also olive trees, roses, and odoriferous plants. In the woods and mountains are lions, bisons, ostriches, monkeys, roebucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The principal rivers are the Wad-el-Kebir, Magerida, Magerada, and Caps. The form of government is by a divan, or council, whose president is the bey. The members of the divan are chosen by the bey. The inhabitants are a mixture of Moors, Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christians, merchants and slaves; and they carry on a great trade in linen and woollen cloth, morocco leather, gold-dust, lead, horses, oil, soap, and ostriches' eggs and feathers. The established religion is Mohammedism. All public instruments are written in the Arabic tongue, but commerce is usually carried on by that of the Lingua Franca. Population, between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000.

TUNIS, the capital of the above country, stands on a point of the gulf of Goletta, surrounded by lakes and marshes. It is in the form of an oblong square, 5 miles in circumference, with a lofty wall, five gates, and 35 mosques. The houses are all built of stone, though but one storey high; and it has a citadel on an eminence, on the W. side of the city. Without the walls are two suburbs, which contain upwards of 100 houses. The divan, or council of state, assembles in an old palace, where the bey resides. The harbour has a very narrow entrance, which is well fortified. The Mohammedans here have 9 colleges for students, and a great number of smaller schools. Tunis is a place of great trade, and has manufactures of velvets, silks, linen, and red caps worn by the common people. It is 10 miles from the sea, 275 N. W. of Tripoli, and 380 E. of Algier. Pop. 130,000. Long. 10. 16. E. lat. 36. 45. N.

TUNJA, a town of New Granada, capital of TURCOIN, a town of France, department of Nord, where the allies, under the Duke of York, were defeated by the French in 1794. Pop. 11,000. It is 6 miles N.N.W. of Lille.

TURCOMANIA, a province of Turkey in Asia, now called ARMENIA, (which see.)

TURENNE, a town of France, department of Correze, with a castle; 16 miles S.S.W. of Tulle.

TURIN, a fortified city of Piedmont, capital pro tempore of the kingdom of Italy, and an archbishop's see, with a university founded in 1405 by Amadeo, duke of Savoy. There are many large squares, among which that of St. Charles is the most spacious; the buildings are handsome, and it has extensive arcades on each side. Most of the streets are well built, uniform, and straight, and terminate on some agreeable object; the Strada di Po, the finest and largest, leads to the royal palace, and is adorned with piazzas filled with shops, as are various others of the best streets; all of which are kept clean by means of a canal from the Doria, with sluices that flow through them into the Po. The palace consists of two magnificent structures, joined together by a gallery, in which are several pictures, statues, and antiquities of great value. The citadel, which was demolished by the French after the battle of Marengo, was a regular pentagon, comprehending an extensive and well-furnished arsenal, a cannon-foundry, a chemical laboratory, &c. There are fine walks on the ramparts and walls of the city, fine gardens on the side of the river Po, and a charming public place called the Corso, where many people assemble in an evening to exhibit themselves and their equipage. Near this city, on the banks of the Po, is the beautiful castle of Valentin, the garden of which is applied to botanical studies. It contains 110 churches, all richly endowed and decorated. In 1798 the French republican army took possession of this city, seized all the strong places and arsenals of Piedmont, and obliged the king and his family to remove to the island of Sardinia. In 1799 the French were driven out by the Austrians and Russians; but shortly afterwards the city and all Piedmont surrendered to the French. In 1814 it was delivered up to the allies, when they restored it to the king of Sardinia. It is seated in a fertile plain, at the confluence of the Doria with the Po; 68 miles North West of Genoa, and 80 South West of Milan. It is the centre of a system of railways from Genoa, Pinerolo, Susa, Como, Alessandria, &c. Pop. 125,000. Long. 7. 40. E. lat. 45. 4. N.

TURINSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, with a fort; 190 miles W. by S. of Tobolsk.

TURIVACARY, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, consisting of an outer and inner fort, strongly defended by a ditch and mud wall, and an open suburb at a little distance. Here are two small temples of curious workmanship; 34 miles S. of Sera, and 50 N. of Seringapatam.

TURKESTAN, a country of Western Tartary, bounded on the N. and E. by the country of the Kalmucs, S. by Bokharia, and W. by the Lake Aral. The chief of this country is generally called the khan of the Karakalpaks. The capital is Taraz.

TURKEY, a large empire, extending over part of Europe, Asia, and Africa. European Turkey formerly comprehended Moldavia, Bessarabia, Walachia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, part of Croatia and Dalmatia, Rumania, Macedonia, Albania, Janina, Livadia, and the Morea. Bessarabia and part of Moldavia were, however, ceded to Russia in 1812; and in 1830, the independence of Greece being established by the allied powers, the territory of the sultan in Europe became greatly contracted. See GREECE. Asiatic Turkey is bounded on the N. by the Black sea and Circassia, E. by Persia, S. by Arabia, and W. by the Mediterranean and the sea of Marmora. It lies between 27. and 46. E. long., and 28. and 45. N. lat., and contains the countries of Irak-Arabi, Diarbek, Kurdistan, Armenia, Caramania, Natolia, and Syria, with Palestine. In Africa, the Turkish power may be considered as nominal, the Barbary states merely acknowledging the porte as the head of the Moslems, while Egypt is independent, though governed by a Turkish pacha. Of these countries (which see respectively) the climate, productions, manners, &c., must be various. The Turks are generally robust, and well-shaped. They shave their heads, but wear long beards, except those in the seraglio, or palace, and military men, who wear only whiskers. The turban worn by the men is white, and consists of long pieces of thin linen made up together in several folds. No one but a Turk must presume to wear a white turban. Their clothes are long and full. They sit, eat, and sleep on the floor, on cushions, mattresses, and carpets. In general they are very moderate in eating, and their meals are despatched with great haste. Their principal food is rice; and the frugal repast is followed by fruit and cold water, which are succeeded by hot coffee, and pipes with tobacco. With opium they procure what they call a kief, or placid intoxication. Chess and draughts are favourite games; and the coffee-houses and baths furnish other sources of amusement. Polygamy is allowed among them; but their wives, properly so called, are no more than four in number. The fair sex here are kept under a rigorous confinement: the Arabic word Haram, which signifies a sacred or prohibited thing, is in its fullest sense used both of the habitation of the women and of the women themselves. The Turks believe in one God, and that his great prophet is Mohammed; they appropriate to themselves the name of Moslem, which has been corrupted into Mussulman, signifying persons professing the doctrine of Mohammed, which he calls Islam. Drinking wine is prohibited by this prophet, in the Koran, yet the Turks make use of it occasionally, without any scruple; though instead of it they generally use sherbet, a liquor made of honey, spices, and the juice of fruits; in this, as in other points, their character is one of extremes. They seldom drink wine, but when they do, they get intoxicated. They are usually mild and placid; but when provoked, they are infuriated. They are not habitually cruel, but in their cruelty they are remorseless; and though they have many virtues, yet their vices are great, and spring from a pharisaical and sensual creed, and the debasing effects of a despotic government. They expend great sums on fountains, not only in the towns, but in the country, and other solitary places, for the refreshment of travellers and labourers. The grand seignior is absolute master of the goods and lives of his subjects, insomuch that they are little better than slaves. The grand vizier is the chief officer under the grand seignior: besides discharging the functions of prime minister, he is commander of all the forces of the empire. The divan, or cabinet council, consists of the vizier, the mufti, and the kiaya bey. The other ministers are the reis effendi, (whose office corresponds in part to that of chancellor, and in part to that of secretary for foreign affairs in Britain;) the teshterdar, or minister of finance; the tschelebi, or master of the ordnance; and the capitan pacha, or commander of the forces. The pachas, or governors of provinces, act also as farmers-general of the revenue, for their respective provinces. The sangiac beys are the governors of districts under the pachas, and invested, like them, with both civil and military functions. The ulemas are a numerous body whose functions consist in explaining the Koran, and in applying its injunctions to the circumstances of the times. They thus combine the character of clergy and lawyers, having at their head the grand mufti. The imams, or priests, are a body altogether distinct from the ulemas, their duty being merely to perform public worship in the mosques. Turkey in Europe is divided into the beylerbeyliks of Romania or Roumelia, and Bosnia, the island of Cyprus, and the province of Wallachia; and contains an area of 210,585 square miles, and a population of 15,500,000, of whom one-third are Turks, the remainder Greeks, Albanians, Friuk, Jews, &c. Asiatic Turkey probably contains 16,050,000 inhabitants, and are not less mixed. The area is about 447,000 square miles. See Appendix.

TURKHEIM. See DURKHEIM.

TURON, a seaport of Cochinchina, situate on a bay of the same name, which affords a safe retreat for the largest ships in the most tempestuous season. In the vicinity are plantations of sugar-canes and tobacco. Turon is 40 miles S.E. of Hue. Long. 107. 40. E. lat. 16. 9. N.

TURSHEEZ, or TOORSHEEZ, a town of Persia, in the province of Khorasan, on the borders of the Great Salt Desert; with an export trade in iron. It imports rice, wool, and cloth from Herat, from which it is distant about 160 miles W.N.W. Pop. 20,000.

TURSI, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, on the river Sino; 8 miles W. of the gulf of Taranto, and 30 S. of Matera.

TUSCALOOSA, a city of Alabama, capital of Tuscaloosa county, and on the S.E. side of the Black Warrior or Tuscaloosa river, which falls into the Mobile river 400 miles below, and is navigable for steam boats. It stands on an elevated plain, has spacious streets and is regularly planned, with a square in which is the handsome state house, in the centre. The Alabama university stands about 1 mile E. of the city. Pop. 1949; 256 miles N. from Mobile by land, 160 S.S.W. of Huntsville.

TUSCANY, formerly a sovereign state of Italy, but now amalgamated with the kingdom of Italy. It is bounded on the north by Modena, on the E. and S. by the pope's territories, and on the W. by the Mediterranean. It is about 130 miles in length, and 100 in breadth, and is watered by several rivers, of which the Arno is the chief. There are several mountains, in which are found mines of iron, alum, and vitriol. There are also quarries of marble, alabaster, and porphyry, besides hot baths and mineral waters.

Many parts of it are fruitful in corn and wine, and produce abundance of citrons, oranges, pomegranates, and other fruits. The inhabitants apply themselves to trade; they chiefly manufacture silks, stuffs, fine earthenware, and gilt leather. They are much visited by foreigners, on account of their politeness, and because the Tuscan language is accounted the purest in all Italy. This duchy is divided into three provinces, Florence, Pisano, and Sienna, to which some add the islands. Upon the flight of the grand duke, in 1799, it was erected by the French into the kingdom of Etruria, but was soon afterwards transformed into an appendage to the crown of Italy. In 1814, however, the duchy was restored to the Austrians, when Ferdinand, the grand duke, returned to his dominions. Area, 9270 square miles. Pop. 1,700,000. Florence is the capital. See Appendix.

TUSCARAWAS, a county of Ohio, settled principally by Germans from W. Philadelphia; capital, New Philadelphia. Pop. 25,631. The Tuscarawas river is the main branch of the Muskingum, and it is navigable.

TUSCUMBIA, a town of Alabama. A railroad extends from this place to Decatur, on the Tennessee river, for the purpose of passing the Muscle Shoals. Here is a most extraordinary and copious spring. Sixty-six miles W. of Huntsville, 129 N. by W. of Tuscaloosa. Pop. about 2000.

TUSIS, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, seated near the torrent Nolla; 16 miles S. by W. of Coire.

TUSPAN, a river and seaport of Mexico, on the Mexican gulf; the indolent inhabitants export fustic and caoutchouc.

TUXBURY, a village and formerly a market-town, in Staffordshire (with a cotton manufacture); noted for its ancient castle, of which several towers and a small part of the wall still remain. It is seated on the river Dove, in the bed of which, in 1831, an immense quantity of coin, of the age of Henry III. to Edward II., was found. It is conjectured that it was the treasure chest of the Earl of Lancaster, lost in the retreat before the army of Edward II., in 1321. The town is 4 miles N.W. of Burton, and 134 of London.

TURICOIN, a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, seated on the gulf of Manaar; 29 miles E. by N. of Palamcotta, and 67 S. of Madura.

TUTLINGEN, a town of Germany, with a castle on a mountain, belonging to the kingdom of Wirtemberg. Near it is the celebrated foundry of Ludwigsthal. It is seated on the Danube, over which is a bridge; 58 miles S. S.W. of Stutgard. Long. 8. 48. E. lat. 48. 2. N.

TURUNA, a town of Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, situate on the Lena; 160 miles N. of Irkutsk. Long. 105. 40. E. lat. 54. 40. N.

TUY, a town of Spain, in Galicia, and a bishop's see. It was once an important frontier town, and is regularly built and walled round, but now it is decayed and decaying. The great saint here is San Telmo, the pope and patron of Spanish mariners, and his tomb was raised here in 1579. It stands on a mountain near the river Minho; 60 miles S. of Compostolla, and 260 W.N.W. of Madrid. Pop. 4000. Long. 8. 32. W. lat. 42. 4. N.

TUZLA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Carmania, situate at the western extremity of a lake to which it gives name. It is 28 miles N. of Konieh.

TVER, a government of Russia, formerly a province in the government of Novogorod. It was the first province modelled according to the code of laws of Catherine II. It comprises an area of 24,000 square miles, with 1,000,000 inhabitants. The country produces abundantly all kinds of corn and vegetables. Its forests yield the most valuable timber. The quadrupeds and the feathered race are the same as in all the N. of Europe. Besides the fishes common to most lakes and rivers, there is one peculiar to the waters of these northern regions, called the sturlet: it is the acipenser ruthenus of Linné, and is a species of sturgeon, highly esteemed for the flavour of its flesh, and for its roe, of which the finest caviere is made.

TVER, the capital of the foregoing government, and an archbishop's see, with a fortress. It is a place of considerable commerce, being seated at the conflux of the Tverza and Volga, along which is conveyed all the merchandise sent by water from Siberia and the S. provinces towards Petersburg. It is divided into the Old and New Town; the former, situate on the opposite side of the Volga, consists almost entirely of wooden cottages; the latter has risen with lustre from the ashes of the conflagration of 1763. Catherine II., at her own expense, raised the governor's house, the episcopal palace, the courts of justice, the exchange, the prison, and some other public edifices; and, to every person who engaged to build a house of brick, she offered a loan of 300*l.* for 12 years, without interest. The streets are broad and long, extending in straight lines from an octagon in the centre; the houses of this octagon, and of the principal streets, are of brick, stuccoed white, and make a magnificent appearance. Here is an ecclesiastical seminary, which admits 600 students. In 1776 the empress founded a school for the instruction of 200 burghers' children; and in 1779, an academy for the education of 120 of the young nobility of the province. Tver is 99 miles N.N.W. of Moscow. Pop. 20,000. Long. 36. 5. E. lat. 56. 7. N.

North Uist is 22 miles long and 17 broad, and the face of the country corresponds with that of Lewis. South Uist is 23 miles long, and 7 broad, and trees are here equally unknown. Many cows are annually exported; but the staple commodity is kelp. The island of Benbecula lies between them, and they are each about 16 miles to the W. of the most western point of the Isle of Skye.

UTTENHAGE, a town of South Africa, in the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, near the river Zwartkops. It is a large rural village, neat and well built, and enjoying the great advantage in this climate of abundance of water. It is thriving, and has a most cheerful appearance, and is of considerable importance.

UKENSKOI, a town of Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, at the conflux of the Irtysh and Oby, and 196 miles N. of Tobolsk. Long. 69. 15. E. lat. 61. 10. N.

UKRAINE, a country of Europe, lying on the borders of Poland, Russia, and Little Tartary. Its name signifies a frontier. By a treaty between Russia and Poland, in 1693, the latter remained in possession of the Ukraine, on the W. side of the Dnieper, which constituted a palatinate called Kiov; while the E. side was allotted to Russia, and called the government of Kiov; but Russia having obtained the Polish part, by the treaty of partition in 1793, the whole belongs now to that power. That part of the Ukraine on the W. side of the Dnieper is but indifferently cultivated; but that on the E. side, inhabited by the Cossacs, is in much better condition. The principal town is Kiov. See COSSACS.

ULALA, a town of Hindostan, in Canara; 3 miles S.W. of Mangalore.

ULAPPOOL, a town of Scotland, in Ross-shire, on the E. side of the entrance of Loeh Broom, at the mouth of a river of its name, with a good harbour and commodious road. It is a great fishing station, and situate in the midst of a wool country; 48 miles W. by N. of Tain. Long. 5. 5. W. lat. 57. 50. N.

ULEA, or ULEAONO, an extensive province to the N. of Finland, and extending along the S. coast of the gulf of Bothnia. It was long subject to Sweden, but, since 1809, it forms a circle of the Russian government of Abo. The population is thinly scattered, the chief part of the surface being covered with forests, marshes, and rocks.

ULEABONO, the capital of the preceding province, and the largest town in East Bothnia; with a castle on an island, and a commodious harbour. In 1714 this town was demolished by the Russians, to whom the Swedes surrendered it in 1808. It is situate at the mouth of a river of the same name; 340 miles N. by E. of Abo. Pop. 3500. Long. 24. 40. E. lat. 65. 30. N.

ULIETE, one of the Society isles in the South Pacific. See RAIAEA.

ULLSWATER, a lake on the borders of Westmereland and Camberland; 10 miles N. of Ambleside. It is 8 miles long, and abounds with char and other fish. The report of guns, discharged in certain stations on the lake, is reverberated from rock to rock, promontory, cavern, and hill, with every variety of sound. The river Bamont flows through this lake, and by Penrith to the Eden, forming that part of the boundary line between the two counties.

ULM, a city of Germany, in Wirtemberg. It is a fortified, large, and handsome place, in which the archives of the late imperial towns of Snabia were preserved, and where the diet of the circle was generally held. The cathedral is a large magnificent structure. Here is an excellent college, with a theological seminary annexed; and a convent for the daughters of the nobility and citizens, who are here educated and afterwards at liberty to marry. Its other most remarkable buildings are the abbey of St. Michael, commonly called Wengen, the town-house, the arsenal, the magazines, and the valuable town library. The inhabitants are Protestants, and estimated at 16,000; they have a good trade in linens, fustians, paper, wine, and wool. The Duke of Bavaria took it in 1702, by stratagem; but surrendered it after the battle of Blenheim in 1704. In 1796 it was taken by the French, and it surrendered to them in 1805, with the flower of the Austrian army, under General Mack, consisting of 60,000 men. In 1810 it was transferred to Wirtemberg. It is seated at the confluence of the Blau with the Danube, opposite the influx of the Iler; 38 miles W. by N. of Augsburg, and 40 S.E. of Stutgard. Long. 9. 56. E. lat. 48. 24. N.

ULOTHO, or VLOTIOW, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Ravensburg; near which is a medicinal spring. It is 6 miles S. of Minden.

ULRICHESTEIN, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; with a fortified castle. It is 25 miles S.E. of Marburg.

ULRICHSHAMN, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, formerly called Bogesund; the present name being given it in 1741, in compliment to queen Ulrica Eleanor. It has a considerable trade in cattle, provisions, tobacco, &c. It is 50 miles E. of Gotheburg.

ULSTER, a province of Ireland, 116 miles long, and 100 broad; bounded on the E. by the Irish sea, N. by the Northern ocean, W. by the Atlantic ocean, S.W. by the province of Connaught, and S. by that of Leinster. It contains the counties of Donegal, Londonderry, Antrim, Tyrone, Fermanagh, Monaghan, Armagh, Down, and Cavan. The principal place is Londonderry.

ULSTER, a county in the S.E. part of the state of New York. The surface is covered with the Shawangunk and Catskill mountains, the valleys are very fertile. Area, 1096 square miles. Pop. in 1845, 48,907.

ULSTER, NEW. See ZEALAND, NEW.

ULTZEN, or VOLTZEN, a town of the Netherlands, in N. Holland; with a trade in flour and wool. It is 50 miles N. of Haarlem.

ULVERSTONE, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Thursday. It is seated at the foot of some hills, near a shallow arm of the Irish sea, and has a canal to the estuary of the Leven. The parish church, at the foot of a steep hill, is a handsome structure, rebuilt in 1804, after its ancient pattern of the age of Henry VIII. A fine column has been erected to Sir John Barron. Here are also an additional church, erected under the recent acts, three places of worship for dissenters, the ancient Quakers' meeting-house at Swartz Moor, built in 1688, and a Roman Catholic chapel. At the intersection of two of the principal streets was an ancient cross, replaced by one of cast iron in 1821. This town has considerably increased, and has manufactures of cotton, check, canvas, and hats. It is not now a seaport, the estuary of the Leven having receded; but the canal connecting it with Morecambe Bay makes it the port of the district of Furness, and exports much corn, limestone, iron ore, and blue slate. It is 22 miles N.W. of Lancaster, and 261 N.N.W. of London, at the end of the Furness Junction railway.

UMA, or UMEA, a province of Sweden, comprising W. Bothnia, Umea, Lapmark, and nearly all Swedish Lapland. It has an area of 6,000 square miles, with about 86,000 inhabitants.

UMA, or UMEA, a seaport of Sweden, in W. Bothnia, capital of the above province, at the mouth of the river Uma, in the gulf of Bothnia. The houses are built of wood, and it was twice burnt by the Russians. It is 310 miles N. by E. of Stockholm. Long. 13. 18. E. lat. 63. 58. N.

UMAGO, a small seaport of Austrian Illyria, in Istria, seated near the gulf Largonca, 12 miles S.W. of Capo d'Istria.

UMBRIA, a province of Italy, now called the duchy of Spoleto.

UMBRIATICO, a town of Naples, in Calabria, seated on the Lipuda, 15 miles N. by W. of St. Sever'na. Pop. 10,000.

UMMERAPOORA, or AMARAPURA, one of the most flourishing and well-built cities of Asia, the metropolis of Birmah; with a spacious and regular fort, completely fortified after the eastern manner. It was founded in 1783 by the emperor Minderogree; 4 miles N.E. of Ava, the ancient capital. The houses are raised on posts from the ground; the smaller supported by bamboos, the larger by strong timber. The streets are all straight, many of them wide, paved with brick, and frequently crossed by others at right angles. The royal palace is a splendid edifice, within the fort, and not any nobleman of the court is permitted to enter it with his feet covered. The temples and monasteries are numerous, and, though in general composed of wood, are very magnificent. The unbounded expenditure of gilding, which is bestowed on the outside of the roofs, particularly on the lofty spires, renders them objects of extraordinary splendor. Ummerapoora is situate on a peninsula, formed by the Irrawaddy on the W. and a narrow channel branching E. from the river, which soon takes a N. direction, and expands to a lake on the E. side of the city, 7 miles long and 1½ broad. It is 250 m E. of Calcutta, and 620 N.N.W. of Siam. Pop. 150,000. Long. 76. 7. E. lat. 21. 57. N.

UMRITSIR, a city of Hindostan, in the kingdom of Lahore, or Panjanh, once the principal city of the Sikhs, who now occupy the whole of the territory, and is by them esteemed sacred. It was razed to the ground in 1761. It contains no feature of interest within itself, except the Amritsir, or Pool of Immortality, in the midst of which is a temple covered with burnished gold, within which is preserved, under a silken canopy, the sacred book of the Sikhs, being a collection of laws and ordinances, chiefly collected by the hero Goorva Govind Singh, to whom the temple is dedicated. Being on the high road between Cabool and Delhi, it enjoys an extensive trade, and is the residence of many rich bankers and merchants.

UNDERWALDEN, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by the canton of Lucerne and the Lake of the Four Cantons, E. by high mountains which separate it from the canton of Uri, S. by Mount Brunnich, which parts it from the canton of Bern, and W. by that of Lucerne. It is 21 miles long and 20 broad, contains an area of 300 square miles, with 23,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the Upper and Lower Valley by a forest called Kesterwald, which crosses the canton from N. to S. The country abounds in fruit and cattle, but produces little corn, and no wine. The inhabitants are Roman Catholics. Stans is the capital of the Lower Valley, and Sarnen of the Upper, and of the whole canton.

UNGVAR, a town and fort of Hungary, capital of a palatinato of the same name. It stands in an island formed by the Ung, 57 miles E. of Cassovia. Pop. 5000. Long. 22. 23. E. lat. 48. 42. N.

UNIEGO, a town of Poland, in the palatinato of Leuzicz, with a fine castle belonging to the archbishop of Gnesen, seated on the Warta, 20 miles S.S.W. of Leuzicz.

No part of the globe is so well supplied with rivers, great and small, springs, and lakes, as the United States; so that a communication by water from one extremity to the other is more easy than in England; and a great multitude of bays and excellent harbours are on the coast of every maritime state. In the large towns, the houses are of brick; in the others, and their environs, the half, and often the whole of them are of planks; but 80 miles from the sea, in the central and southern states, and particularly in those W. of the Alleghany mountains, a large portion of the inhabitants still live in what are called log-houses, made of the trunks of trees, from 20 to 30 feet long, and four or five inches in diameter, laid one upon another, and supported by letting their ends into each other: the spaces between the trunks are filled with clay; they have two doors, which are hung upon wooden hinges, and these frequently supply the place of windows: neither nails nor iron of any sort are used. The thirteen original states long flourished as provinces of Great Britain; but parliament attempting to tax them by its sole authority, without the intervention of their assemblies, a civil war ensued. The Americans formed a congress, which in 1776 disclaimed all dependence on the mother country; the French king entered into an alliance with them in 1778; the colonies, powerfully assisted by France, were successful; and Great Britain acknowledged their independence by the peace of 1783. From this period they continued to flourish until they became involved in the wars that raged between Great Britain and France, and at length, in June 1812, took up arms against the British for the vindication of their rights as a neutral power. The American commerce now fell off to a very low ebb, and the states suffered considerably from the more direct consequence of the war. In 1814, peace having been concluded in Europe, the question in dispute between Britain and America ceased entirely, in a practical view, to possess any interest. Accordingly, the commissioners of the two powers, who had met at Ghent, agreed to adjourn the controversy, and in December a treaty of peace was signed between them. The manufactures and commerce have since been rapidly increasing, and the country is progressively advancing in population and importance. The congress of the United States consists of a senate and house of representatives, and must assemble at least once a year, on the 1st of December, unless it is otherwise provided by law. The senate is composed of two members from each state; so that the regular number is now 66. They are chosen by the legislatures of the several states, for the term of six years, one-third of them being elected biennially. The vice-president of the United States is the president of the senate, in which body he has only a casting vote which is given in case of an equal division of the votes of the senators; in his absence a president pro tempore is chosen by the senate. The house of representatives is composed of members from the several states, elected by the people for the term of 2 years; the representatives are apportioned among the different states, according to population. By an Act of Congress, in 1842, the ratio was fixed at "one representative for every 70,680 persons in each state, and one additional representative for each state having a fraction greater than one moiety of the said ratio, computed according to the rate prescribed by the constitution of the United States." The law of 1842 also requires that the representatives of each state "shall be elected by districts, composed of a contiguous territory, equal in number to the number of representatives to which such state is entitled, no one district electing more than one representative." The present number is 237 representatives and 5 delegates. Each member has a certain compensation per diem during his attendance in congress. In the United States there is no national establishment of religion, but every man is left to support that which is agreeable to him by his own voluntary contributions. The great mass of the people profess Christianity, and are divided into various sects, but no one sect is taken under state patronage, or distinguished by peculiar privileges. Education receives every possible encouragement from the government, and colleges, medical and law schools, and academies, are numerous throughout the union. The question of slavery has for years been a cause of contention between the northern (free) and southern (slave) states; and the struggle for supremacy between the rival sections has resulted in the melancholy and fratricidal conflict which was begun early in 1861, and threatens to overwhelm the whole country with devastation and misery.

It is 70 miles long, and 45 broad, contains an area of 500 square miles, with 250,000 inhabitants, and is extensively covered with shapeless stones and impenetrable woods, but enriched with inexhaustible mines of copper, iron, and silver. Stockholm is the capital.

UPPINGHAM, a town in Rutlandshire, with a market on Wednesday, seated on an eminence; 6 miles S. of Oakham, and 89 N. by W. of London.

UPSAL, a city of Sweden, in Upland, and an archbishop's see, with a university. It is divided into two almost equal parts by the river Sala, and the streets are drawn at right angles from a central kind of square. A few of the houses are built of brick, but the general ones are constructed of wood, painted red, and the roofs are covered in with turf. Upsal was formerly the metropolis of Sweden, and near it is the morasten, or stone on which the kings used to be crowned. The cathedral, a large structure of brick, contains the remains of the celebrated Gustavus Vasa, and of Charles Linné. The university is the most ancient in Sweden, and the first seminary in the N. for academical education. The Royal Society here is likewise the oldest literary academy in the N. Here is an observatory, planned by the celebrated Celsius, from which the Swedish geographers compute the longitude; also a botanical garden, of which Linné was superintendent. Upsal is seated in a vast open plain, fertile in corn; 35 miles N. N.W. of Stockholm, Pop. 5000. Long. 17.39. E. lat. 59.52. N.

UPTON—BOUN-BEVERN, a town in Worcestershire, with a market on Thursday, and a great trade in wool. It is seated on the Severn; 9 miles S. of Worcester, and 111 W. N.W. of London.

URACH, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg. It has a great trade in paper, damasks, and lichen, and is 21 miles S.S.E. of Stuttgart.

URAL, or ORHAL, a river of Russia, which rises in mount Caucasus, flows by Orenburg, Uralsk, and Gurief, and enters the Caspian sea by three mouths.

URAL MOUNTAINS, a chain of mountains extending from the 50th to nearly the 67th degree of N. lat., or about 1150 miles, and sometimes called by the Russians "the back of the world." The central part of this chain abounds in metals, and they contain fine white marble. Panda, one of the highest mountains, is said to be 4512 feet above the level of the sea; one of the richest gold districts in the world lies at its eastern foot. This chain forms a considerable part of the boundary between Europe and Asia.

URALIAN COSSACS, a Tartar tribe that inhabit the Russian province of Orenburg, on the S. side of the river Ural. These Cossacs are descended from those of the Don, and are a valiant race. They profess the Greek religion, but they are dissenters from the established religion, whom the Russians called Roskohniki, or Separatists, and who styled themselves Saroverski, or Old Believers. They consider the service of the established church as profane, and have their own priests and ceremonies. The Uralian Cossacs are all enthusiasts for the ancient ritual, and prize their beards almost equal to their lives. A Russian officer having ordered a number of Cossac recruits to be publicly shaved in the town of Yaitsk, in 1771, this wanton insult excited an insurrection, which was suppressed for a time; but in 1773 an impostor, Pagutchev, who assumed the name of Peter III., appeared among them, and, taking advantage of this circumstance, roused them once more into open rebellion. This was suppressed by the defeat and execution of the impostor; and, in order to extinguish all remembrance of this rebellion, the river Yaik was called the Ural, the Yaik Cossacs were denominated Uralian Cossacs, and the town of Yaitsk was named Uralsk. The Cossacs are very rich, in consequence of their fisheries in the Caspian sea. Their principal fishery is for sturgeons and beluga, whose roes supply large quantities of caviare; and the fish, chiefly salted and dried, afford a considerable article of consumption in the Russian empire.

URALSK, a town of Russia, capital of the country of the Uralian Cossacs, was formerly called Yaitsk, and is seated on the river Ural; 375 miles N.N.E. of Astracan. Pop. 3600. Long. 50.10. E. lat. 52.0. N.

URANIBURG, a once magnificent castle of Denmark, in the island of Huen, now in ruin. It was built by Tycho Brahe a celebrated astronomer, who called it Uraniburg, or Castle of the Heavens, and here made his observations.

URBANIA, a town of Italy, in the delegation of Urbino, built by Urban VIII., seated on the Metro; 7 miles S.S.W. of Urbino.

URBANNA, a town of Virginia, in Middlesex county, on the Rappahannoc; 73 miles N.E. of Richmond.

URBINO, a delegation of Italy, in the pope's dominions, comprising the greater part of the former duchy of Urbino, with some adjoining districts. The air is not deemed wholesome, nor is the soil fertile. The chief production is silk, and game is plentiful. Pop. 200,000.

URBINO, a city of Italy, capital of the foregoing delegation, and an archbishop's see. The university contains a noble college and 16 convents. Great quantities of fine earthenware are made here; and it is famous for being the birthplace of the illustrious painter Raphael. It stands on a hill, 58 miles E. of Florence, and 120 N. of Rome. Pop. 10,800. Long. 12.40. E. lat. 43.46. N.

URE, a river in Yorkshire, which rises on the confines of Westmoreland, flows by Mid-dlichem, Ripon, Boroughbridge, and Aldborough, and a little below joins the Swale, where the united stream forms the Ouse.

URGEL, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Segra, in a fertile plain, surrounded by mountains planted with vineyards; 78 miles N.N.W. of Barcelona. Long. 1. 28. E. lat. 42. 24. N.

UROHENZ, a town of Tartary, in Kharasm, of which it was formerly the capital, seated on a small river which runs into the lake Aral; 90 miles N.N.W. of Khiva. Long. 58. 30. E. lat. 42. 24. N.

URL, a canton of Switzerland, 30 miles long, and 12 broad; bounded on the N. by the canton of Schweiz and the Waldstadt, on the E. by the cantons of Grisons and Glarus, on the S. by the bailiwicks of Italy, and W. by the cantons of Underwalden and Bern. It has an area of 640 square miles, with 15,000 inhabitants. Altorf is the capital. See SCHWEITZ.

URI, LAKE OF. See WALDSTADTRE SEE.

URSEREN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Uri, situate on the Reuss; 17 miles S.S.E. of Altorf.

URSITZ, ST., a town in Switzerland, in the canton of Bern; indebted for its origin to a hermitage, built in the 7th century by St. Ursinus. It is seated on the Doubs; 6 miles S. of Porrentrui.

URUGUAY, or BANDA ORIENTAL DEL URUGUAY, a republic of South America, bounded on the S. by the estuary of the La Plata river, N. by Brazil, W. by the Uruguay river, which separates it from the Argentine republics. It is of a somewhat circular form, and is supposed to contain an area of 200,000 square miles. Of the country but little is known. On the south coast the land is quite level, and low, without wood, and watered by numerous rivers, which cause the soil to be very humid. Inland, and to the N., the country rises into hills, the intervening valleys being watered by the affluents of the Uruguay. This great river is about 800 miles in length, and takes its name from its numerous falls and rapids. It joins the Parana, and its clear blue waters are distinguishable from those of that river for miles after their junction. The republic is divided into 9 departments. Its three principal towns are Monte Video the capital, Colonia, and Maldonado. The population does not exceed, Indians included, 150,000. It formed a province under the government of Buenos Ayres till 1821, when it was taken by the Brazilians, but declared itself independent in 1825, and recognised by Brazil in 1828. See BUENOS AYRES.

URUMEA, or ORMIA, a great lake of Persia, in the province of Azerbijan, about 47 miles long, and 25 broad. Its depth does not exceed six feet, and is in some parts not more than one foot. The waters are extremely salt, and emit sulphureous vapours. It receives 14 rivers, and has no outlet. There are several islands, which are increased in the dry season.

URUMEA, a town from which the preceding lake is named, on its S.W. shore, on a noble plain watered by the Shur; 90 miles S.S.W. of Tabriz. It is walled, and contains 12,000 inhabitants.

USHEO TARTARY, a vast country of Western Tartary, bounded on the N. by the country of the Kalmucs and Turkestan, E. by Tibet, S. by Hindostan and Persia, and W. by the Caspian sea. These Tartars are divided into several tribes, governed by their respective khans, or princes. When under one sovereign, they were the most powerful of all the Tartarian nations. The principal khans pride themselves in being descended from Tamerlane, whose birthplace was the ancient city of Samarcand. The Usbees, in their persons, are said to have better complexions and more engaging features than the Kalmucs. Their religion is Mohammedism, and they differ, in general, very little from the people of the northern provinces of Hindostan.

USZDOM, an island of the Prussian states, in Pomerania, in the Baltic sea, between the mouths of the Peene and Swin; with two forts named after these two rivers. Pop. 12,000. It has a town of the same name, on the S.W. coast; 40 miles N.W. of Stettin. Pop. 1000. Long. 14. 2. E. lat. 53. 58. N.

USTIUG VELIKI, a town of European Russia, government of Vologda. Though in a remote and desolate region, it is a place of considerable trade. It has 3 cathedrals, 28 parish churches, and about 8,000 inhabitants. It is about 400 miles from the White Sea, and 550 E. by N. of Petersburg.

UTAH, a recently-erected territory of the United States (Sept. 9, 1850), deriving its name from a large lake; bounded W. by California, N. by Oregon, E. by the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and S. by N. Mexico.

UTICA, a city of the United States, in New York, on the S. bank of the Mohawk. It is regularly built, and is in some respects handsome and substantial. It owes its rapidly increased importance to the Erie canal, opened in 1823, which traverses the town, and here unites with the Chérango canal which joins it to the river Susquehannah. To these advantages are to be added, that it is the W. terminus of the Utica and Schenectady railway, 77 miles long, opened in 1830, and of the Syracuse railway, 53 miles long. In 1794 it was only an obscure village, and was erected into a city in 1832. It is the commercial capital in the W. part of the state; 93 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 12,782.

UTRECHT, one of the Dutch provinces, 30 miles long, and 20 broad; bounded on the N. and W. by Holland and the Zuyder Zee, and E. and S. by Guelderland. The soil is fertile, and there are no inundations to fear, as in the other provinces.

UTRECHT, a fortified city of Holland, capital of the foregoing province, with a famous university. It is of a square form, about 3 miles in circumference, exclusive of the suburbs, which are considerable. The inhabitants are estimated at 44,000. The most distinguished of the public buildings is the cathedral, the tower of which is very lofty, and said to be one of the handsomest in the kingdom. The town-house is also a noble building, and there are a great many churches and hospitals, schools for the fine arts, a hall of paintings, several valuable libraries, &c. The principal manufactures are silk and fire-arms; and in a palace called the Mall is an extensive foundry for cannon-balls. Two canals, called the New Graft and the Vaert, run through the city, and over them are 36 stone bridges. The environs are full of gardens, walks, and groves, which, added to the purity of the air, render Utrecht one of the most agreeable places for residence in these parts. Here the union of the Seven United Provinces was begun in 1579; and here was concluded, in 1713, the peace which terminated the wars of Queen Anne. Utrecht surrendered to the Prussians in 1787, and to the French in 1795, each time without resistance. It is seated on the Rhine; 18 miles S.E. of Amsterdam, and 35 N.N.W. of Nimeguen, having railways to Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Arnhem, &c.

URREKA, a town of Spain, in Andalusu, near which is a salt-spring. The town is large and not walled in, the streets wide and clean, and traversed by a clear stream, the only running water within several miles. It is an important station, being at the divergence of several cross roads; 14 miles S. of Seville. Pop. from 11,000 to 15,000.

UTROXETER, a town of Staffordshire, with a market on Wednesday, and manufactures of cabinet-ware, and a considerable trade in corn and cheese. The parish church, the body of which has been recently rebuilt, is a spacious Gothic edifice. The other places of worship are two meeting-houses for Independent Methodists, one for Baptists; and a new Roman Catholic chapel. It is seated on a rising ground, near the river Dove; 14 miles N.E. of Stafford, and 135 N.N.W. of London.

UTZNACH, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick belonging to the cantons of Schweitz and Glarus. It is 8 miles N. from the lake of Zurich, and 15 N. by W. of Glarus.

UXBRIDGE, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Thursday, and a great trade in corn and flour. The Coln flows through it in two streams, and the Grand Junction canal passes close by. A treaty was carried on here between Charles I. and the parliament in 1644; and the house in which the plenipotentiaries met is still called the Treaty-house. Near this town are the remains of an ancient camp. Uxbridge is 15 miles W. by N. of London.

UXBRIDGE, a town of Massachusetts, in Worcester county; 16 miles S. by E. of Worcester, and 40 S. by W. of Boston.

It is seated on a mountain, near the river Oreze, and the ruins of ancient Vaison, which was one of the largest cities of the Gauls; 22 miles N.E. of Avignon, and 23 S.S.E. of Montelimar.

VAL, a village of the Netherlands, 3 miles W. of Maestricht; where, in 1744, Marshal Saxe obtained a victory over the Duke of Cumberland.

VAL DI DEMONA, a province in the N.E. angle of Sicily. It means the valley of demons, and is so called because Mount Ætna is situate in this province, which occasioned ignorant and superstitious people, at the time of its fiery eruptions, to believe it was a chimney of hell. The capital is Messina.

VAL DI MAZARA, a province in the W. angle of Sicily, so called from the town of Mazara. It contains Palermo, the capital of the whole island.

VAL DI NOTO, a province in the S.E. angle of Sicily, so called from the town of Noto, its capital.

VALAIS, a canton of Switzerland, which consists of a valley 100 miles long, and 20 broad, between ridges of very high mountains, among which are the Great St. Bernard, Simplon, Grimsel, Furca, and others, whose summits are never free from snow. The S. chain separates it from the Milanese, Piedmont, and Savoy; the N. divides it from the canton of Bern. The country is divided into Upper and Lower Valais. The former reaches from Mount Furca, its E. boundary, to the river Morge, below Sion, and the latter from that river to St. Gingou, on the lake of Geneva. A country consisting of plains, elevated valleys, and lofty mountains, must necessarily exhibit a great variety of climates and prospects. The productions must vary also according to its singular diversity of climates; for strawberries, cherries, plums, pears, and grapes in their natural growth, may be tasted in the same day. It has more than sufficient wine and corn for interior consumption; the soil in the midland and lower districts being exceedingly rich and fertile, but in the more elevated parts barley is the only grain that can be cultivated with success. The inhabitants profess the Roman Catholic religion, and the lower class are extremely indolent and dirty; they have no manufactures of any consequence. In 1802 the Valais was constituted an independent republic, under the guarantee of France, Switzerland, and Italy; but in 1814 it was annexed to Switzerland. Area, 1660 square miles. Pop. in 1837, 75,798. Sion is the capital.

It is watered by a great number of streams, and fertile in all the necessaries of life, especially fruits, oil, and wine. In the mountains are mines of iron and alum, and quarries of marble, jasper, and lapis calaminaris. Here is also much silk, cotton, and hemp; the manufactures of which are the cause of a considerable population.

VALENCIA, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, and an archbishop's see; with a university. The Moors were expelled from it in the 12th century. It was taken by the Earl of Peterborough in 1705, and lost again in two years after. In 1811 it was taken by the French under Suchet, with a garrison of 16,000 men, and immense stores. It contains 12,000 houses within the walls, besides those in the suburbs and pleasure gardens around it, which amount to the same number. The cathedral has a steeple 130 feet high; and one side of the choir is incrust with alabaster, and adorned with fine paintings of scripture history. The palace of the viceroy, that of Ciuta, the monastery of St. Jerome, the exchange, and the arsenal, are all worthy of notice. Here are manufactures of cloth and silk, and several remains of antiquity. It is seated on the Guadalavia, near the Mediterranean, 130 miles E.S.E. of Madrid. Pop. 65,840. Long. 0. 25. W. lat. 39. 29. N.

VALENCIA, a town of South America, in Venezuela, seated on the lake Tocarigua. It is a very industrious and comfortable town, carrying on a good inland trade from and with Caraccas and Porto Cavallo. Pop. about 10,000.

VALENCIA D'ALCANTARA, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, with an old castle. It is surrounded by walls, and stands on a rock, near the frontiers of Portugal; 28 miles S.W. of Alcantara, and 45 N.N.W. of Badajoz.

VALENCIENNES, a city of France, in the department of Nord; seated on the Scheldt, which flows through it in several branches, and here begins to be navigable. It is large and populous, but the streets are narrow and crooked, and many of the houses are of wood. The citadel and fortifications were constructed by order of Louis XIV., who took this town from the Spaniards; and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nimèguen in 1678. In 1793 it was taken by the allies, under the Duke of York, after a severe siege. But in 1794 it again surrendered to the French by capitulation, and was confirmed to them by the treaties of 1814 and 1815. Besides lace, this city is noted for manufactures of woollen stuffs and cambric. It is 28 miles S.E. of Lisle, and 120 N.N.E. of Paris. Pop. 17,000. Long. 3. 32. E. lat. 50. 21. N.

VALENTINE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne; 9 miles N.E. of St. Bertrand.

VALENZA, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan, seated on a mountain, near the river Po; 12 miles E.S.E. of Casal, and 35 S.S.W. of Milan.

VALENZA, a fortified town of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho; seated on an eminence near the river Minho, opposite Tuy, in Spain, and 30 miles N.N.W. of Braga.

VALERY SUR SOMME, ST., a town of France, in the department of Somme, on the river Somme. Here William the Conqueror embarked, in 1066, for England; 50 miles N.W. of Amiens. Pop. 3200.

VALERY EN CAUX, ST., a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with considerable fisheries and trade; 33 miles N. by W. of Rouen. Pop. 5000.

VALETTA, a city of Malta, the capital of that island, and wonderfully strong both by nature and art. It is seated on a peninsula, between two of the finest ports in the world, which are defended by almost impregnable fortifications. La Valetta has three gates, and the streets are all paved with flat square stones. The houses are neat, and built of stone, the rooms forming a flat terrace, plastered with pozzolana, and most of them have a balcony to the street, where the inhabitants pass a great part of their time. The principal buildings are the palace of the grand master, the infirmary, the conservatory, and the magnificent church of St. John. The pavement of this church is composed entirely of sepulchral monuments of the finest marbles, porphyry, lapis lazuli, and a variety of other valuable stones, admirably joined together, representing the arms, insignia, &c., of the persons whose names they commemorate. The great source of water that supplies La Valetta rises near Citra Vecchia, and is thence conveyed by an aqueduct, erected at the expense of one of the grand masters. La Valetta is situate opposite Cape Passaro, in Sicily. Pop. 36,000. Long. 15. 34. E. lat. 35. 54. N.

VALETTE, a town of France, in the department of Charente; 12 miles S. by E. of Angoulême.

VALKENBURG, or FAUQUEMONT, a town of the Netherlands, in Limburg. In 1672 it was taken by the French, who demolished the fortifications. It is seated on the Geule; 8 miles E. by N. of Maestricht. Long. 5. 58. E. lat. 51. 0. N.

VALLADOLID, a city of Spain, in Leon, capital of a province of the same name, and a bishop's see, with one of the six universities of Spain. It lies in a concave valley, on the left bank of the Pisnerga, and is traversed by the Esqueva, which sometimes overflows and does infinite damage, but is favourable to cultivation. If the canal de Castilla, which terminates here, be ever completed, it will do much to restore it to its ancient prosperity. Valladolid is the capital of the province, the residence of the Captain-general of Old Castile; it has 16 parishes, an academy of fine arts, one of the six universities of Spain, now perhaps the most flourishing, and attended by about 2000 students, chiefly of jurisprudence, a liceo, and a new museo, which contains many fine sculptures and indifferent pictures, and a fine library, which things have been chiefly collected from the suppressed convents. Here is also the usual public establishments, and high court of chancery, which jurisdiction was divided in 1835, and the Audiencia of Valladolid now has jurisdiction over 965,300 souls. The cathedral, a handsome Græco-Romano structure, was commenced by Herrera in 1585, but has been since tampered with, and the only one of the four intended towers, which rose, well proportioned, to the height of 260 feet, fell down on May 31, 1841, and has not since been rebuilt. Valladolid retains its silversmiths, but their palmy days have past. Spain was the bullion mine of antiquity, and her works in gold and silver were of the most exquisite order, but these have all departed, and the value of the material has tempted the destroyer's hand. One of the greatest ornaments of the city is the celebrated Campo Grande—the great field, and the site of its royal festivities. It is surrounded with noble convents, hospitals, and palaces, many of which were gutted by the invaders, others have been recently demolished, and all impoverished. The town has few social attractions; it is cold and damp in winter, and fiercely scorched by the summer sun, but it is not unhealthy. The environs of the city are covered with ardens, orchards, vineyards, and meadows. Valladolid was taken and retaken several times by the French and Spaniards, during the late peninsular war, 74 miles S.S.E. of Leon, and 100 N.N.W. of Madrid. Long. 4. 47. W. lat. 41. 42. N.

VALLADOLID, a province of the republic of Mexico, bounded N. by the Rio de Lerma, S. by the Pacific, W. by New Galicia, and E. by Mexico Proper. It is very rich, abounding in all the necessaries of life; and the climate in general is mild and salubrious. At the period of the Spanish conquest, this province formed part of the kingdom of Mechoacan, which was independent of the ancient Mexican empire. Area, 10,338 square miles. Population, 376,400.

VALLADOLID, or MECOACAN, a city of Mexico, capital of the foregoing province, with a fine cathedral, and some handsome houses, situate on a river, near its source; 120 miles W. of Mexico. Pop. 18,000.

VALLADOLID, or COMAYAGUA, a city of Guatemala, capital of Honduras, seated in a plain; 280 miles E. of Guatemala. It is unhealthy. Pop. 3000. Long. 88. 20. W. lat. 14. 35. N.

VALLADOLID, a city of Yucatan, the residence of the vicar-general of the republic. It is a decayed and decaying place, of 15,000 inhabitants. Its plan, like many other Spanish towns, is upon a grand scale, but its churches and public buildings are all more or less dilapidated. It claims the honour of being the first place which rose against the power of Mexico, in its struggle for independence.

VALLADOLID, one of the five departments of the republic of Yucatan, containing, in 1841, 45,353 men, and 46,926 women, together 92,279.

VALPARAISO, a seaport of Chili, with a well-frequented harbour. Its proximity to St. Jago (to which it has a railway) has drawn hither all the commerce formerly carried on between that city and Callao, which consists principally of wheat, tallow, leather, cordage, and dried fruits. The prosperity of this port has increased so considerably within the last 20 years, that it now probably numbers five times the population it did in 1821. It was then a mere village, but is now a thickly settled town of above 30,000 inhabitants. It is divided into two parts, the older part called the Port, and the other portion, called the Almendral, occupying a level plain to the east. In all respects the town, as well as the republic generally, is greatly improved. It has a most active and efficient police, is well supplied with all necessaries, and has considerable commerce. It is seated on a bay of the Pacific ocean, at the foot of a high mountain; 75 miles N.W. of St. Jago. Long. 72. 19. W. lat. 33. 3. S.

VALTELINE, or VALLE-TELINE, a fertile valley of Austrian Italy, 50 miles long, and from 12 to 15 broad, enclosed between two chains of high mountains; the N. chain separates it from the Grisons, the S. from the Venetian territories; on the E. it is bounded by the county of Bormio, and on the W. by that of Chiavanna. The river Adda flows through its whole length into the lake Como; and it is divided into three districts, Upper, Middle, and Lower. The inhabitants are all Roman Catholics, and have no manufactures; but they export wine, silk, plants, cheese, butter, and cattle. On the 20th of July, 1620, there was a general massacre of the Protestants in this valley. Chief town, Sondrio.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND, or TASMANIA, is between 40. and 44. S. lat., and 144. and 149. E. long. It is about 210 miles long from N. to S., and 150 from E. to W., and contains an area of 23,437 square miles, or 14,999,680 acres, a very large proportion of which is unfit for cultivation. It was discovered by A. J. Tasman, on the first of December, 1642, and named by him after the Dutch governor-general of the East Indies. It was not again visited till 1773, when Captain Furneaux passed the E. coast; and in 1777 Captain Cook landed on Bruné island. It is also probable that the ill-fated La Perouse touched here in 1788. It was partially explored by the French expeditions under D'Entrecasteaux, in 1792 and 1793. Up to this time it was supposed to form part of the continent of Australia, till, in 1797, Buss strait, which separates it, was discovered by Captain Flinders, upon whose representations, and the fear of the French forming an establishment on it, a party under Lieutenant Bowen settled at Risdon, in August, 1803, 5 miles from the present Hobart Town; and here the first encounter with the natives took place, in which some of them were killed. This place was abandoned for that of Hobart Town, in 1804, under Lieutenant-governor Collins. For several years the colonists endured the greatest privations, being sometimes compelled to subsist on the flesh of the kangaroo, and a species of seaweed. In 1810 a great number of cattle and sheep were introduced. From 1813 the whole colony was in a state of alarm from the atrocities of the bush-rangers, or escaped convicts, which led to the establishment of martial law for a time, and confidence was again restored on the capture and death of the ringleaders. On June 14, 1825, Van Diemen's Land was declared to be independent of the government of New South Wales, under which the administration was hitherto carried on by a lieutenant-governor. The existence of the colony was now threatened by the aborigines, who had ever shown a hostile spirit toward the settlers, and which had increased to such an extent that life and property were equally unsafe; this led to active measures on the part of the colonists, in 1830, but which were ineffectual; but at the latter end of that year, a number of them were induced, by the humane endeavours of Mr. Robinson, to accompany him to Swan island, and afterwards to King's island, in Bass strait, where they are now domesticated; and thus the greatest drawback on the colony has been removed. It was made the diocese of a bishop in 1842. The colonized part of Van Diemen's Land is divided into eleven counties, viz., Kent, Buckingham, Pembroke, Monmouth, Cumberland, Somerset, Glamorgan, Westmoreland, Cornwall, Dorset, and Devon.

The western side, except on the margins of the rivers, and the N.W. corner, which is occupied by the Van Diemen's Land Agricultural Company, is barren and unfit for agricultural purposes, and is generally covered with forest. The principal rivers are the Derwent, Huon, and Gordon in the S.; and the North and South Esk, Hellyer, and Arthur on the N. On the W. coast is a remarkable land-locked basin, Macquarie Harbour, 20 miles long, and 5 broad, in which, on Sarah's island, was a penal settlement, which was left for the penal settlement at Port Arthur, founded in 1830, in a remarkably fine harbour, between Cape Raoul and Cape Pillar, formed of basaltic columns, similar to the Giant's causeway, in Ireland. The chief mountains are St. Valentine's Peak; Ben Lomond, 4200 feet; Peak of Teneriffe, 4500 feet; Mount Wellington, 3750 feet, &c.; and many in the S.W. which are covered with snow for a great part of the year. The chief towns are Hobart Town, or Hobarton, the capital; Launceston, George Town, New Norfolk, Campbell Town, and Perth. The staple production is wool, which is of superior quality, and principally exported to England; besides which, wheat, oats, and the usual European crops are cultivated with success. The wild animals are five species of kangaroos, now becoming scarce; the opossum, and other marsupial animals similar to those of Australia. The black whale resorts to its shores, and forms a lucrative branch of commerce. Iron ore abounds in most parts, and coal has been found. The climate is capricious, but healthy; the thermometer frequently ranging from 90 deg. and upwards down to 50 deg. in a single day; but it may be generally characterized as warm. The population in 1838 was 45,846; in 1857 it was 81,492, who are spread over an area of 27,000 square miles, or more than thrice as large as Wales, and who have brought vast tracts into cultivation.

VELORE, a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, with a large and beautiful fort, strongly garrisoned by English forces. The town is pretty large, and well built. Above it are three small forts on as many hills. It is seated in a fine valley, on the Paliar; 14 miles W. of Arcot.

VELTZEN. See ULTZEN.

VENAFRO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; 25 miles N. by W. of Capua.

VENAISSIN, a small but fertile district of France, now included in the department of Vaucluse.

VENANT, ST., a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, on the river Lis. It is 6 miles N. by W. of Bethune, and 27 S.E. of Dunkirk.

VENASQUE, a town of Spain, in Arragon, in a valley of the same name, and on the river Essarn; 47 miles N.N.E. of Balbastro.

VENASQUE, a town of France, department of Vaucluse, on the river Nasque; 10 miles E.S.E. of Carpentras, and 18 E.N.E. of Avignon.

VENCATICHERY, a town of Hindostan, in the E. part of Mysore, ceded to the English by the treaty of Seringapatam. Here are the remains of the rajah's palace, and the ruins of a fort. Near this place iron is smelted from black sand. It is 57 miles W. of Arcot, and 58 E. of Bangalore.

VENCE, a town of France, department of Var; 9 miles N. of Antibes, and 9 W. of Nice.

VENDÉE, LA, a department of France, including part of the former province of Poitou. It is so called from a small river of the same name. The surface is level and the soil fertile. It contains an area of 2600 square miles, with 280,000 inhabitants. Bourbon Vendée is the capital.

VENDEN, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga, on the river Aa; 36 miles E.N.E. of Riga.

VENEZUELA, a republic of Spanish America. It spreads round a gulf of the same name (which reaches 90 miles within land, and is 80 in breadth), and the lake of Maracaybo. When the Spaniards landed here in 1499, they observed some huts built upon piles in an Indian village named Coro, in order to raise them above the stagnated water that covered the plain: and this induced them to give it the name of Venezuela, or Little Venice. Near the seacoast are high mountains, the tops of which are barren, but the lower parts in the valley are fertile, and gold is found in the sands of the rivers. It is divided into 13 provinces; of which the chief towns are given in the following table with their populations, and those of the provinces to which they belong:—

PROVINCE.	Population of Town.	Population of Province.
Caraccas.....	35,000	242,888
Valencia.....	16,000	56,367
Barquisimeto.....	12,000	12,755
Coro.....	4,000	40,476
Maracaybo.....	14,000	27,800
Truxillo.....	4,000	44,788
Mérida.....	6,000	62,166
Barinas.....	4,000	109,497
Achaguas.....	2,000	15,479
Barcelona.....	6,000	52,103
Cumana.....	5,000	50,671
Margarita.....	3,000	18,305
Angostura.....	4,000	20,149
TOTAL.....	118,000	894,044

The names of the provinces are the same as those of the towns, except in three cases; viz. Valencia is in the province of Carabobo, Achaguas in Apure, and Angostura in Guiana. The inhabitants raise great numbers of sheep, manufacture some cotton stuffs, and cultivate excellently tobacco, cocoa, and sugar. Leon de Caraccas is the capital.

VENDOME, a town of France, department of Loir-et-Cher, on the river Loire; 30 miles N.E. of Tours, and 95 S.W. of Paris. Pop. 8000.

VENDRELL, a town of Spain, in Catalonia; 25 miles W.S.W. of Barcelona.

VENERIA, a town of Piedmont, which took its name from a magnificent hunting-seat built by a duke of Savoy. It has manufactures of wool and silk. It stands on the Stura, 8 miles N.N.W. of Turin.

VENICE, formerly a celebrated republic of Italy, the government of which was aristocratic, for none could have any share in it but the nobles. The doge was elected by a plurality of votes, obtained in a peculiar manner by means of gold and silver balls; and after his election the dual cap was placed on his head with great ceremony, on his public entrance into St. Mark's church. He held his dignity for life, and his office was to marry the Adriatic sea, in the name of the republic; to preside in all assemblies of the state; to have an eye over all the members of the magistracy; and to nominate to all the benefices annexed to the church of St. Mark. On the other hand, his power was so limited, that he has been justly defined to be, in habit and state, a king; in authority a counsellor; in the city a prisoner; and out of it a private person. There were five councils: the first was called La Signoria, composed of the doge and six counsellors. The second was Il Consiglio Grande, in which all the nobles, amounting to 2500, had a voice. The third was Il Consiglio dei Pregadi, consisting of about 250 of the nobility. The fourth was Il Consiglio Proprio, which was united to the Signoria: its members consisted of 28 assessors; this council gave audience to the ambassadors. The fifth and last was Il Consiglio dei Dieci, composed of ten counsellors, took notice of all criminal matters; and the doge himself, when accused, was obliged to appear before them: there was no appeal from this council, which was a severe state institution. This constitution, however, no longer exists. In 1797, a tumult having happened at Venice, in which some French soldiers were killed, the French seized the city, and instituted a provisional democratic government; but soon after, by the treaty of Campo Formio, the city and territory of Venice, lying to the N. and W. of the river Adige, was ceded to Austria as a duchy, in equivalence for the dominions that house had lost in the Netherlands; and the remainder of the territory was annexed to what the French then styled the Cisalpine republic. In 1805 commenced a short war between Austria and France, and, by the treaty of peace at Presburg, Venice was again given up, and Venice was annexed to the Austrians, the country in 1814. the continent, either by way of distinction (Terra Firma), and five places. These is the force of the reach the lagoon; tants was comp they have a factories, bone- and mirrors, w employments. M opening upon of peace at Presburg, the duchy of Venice was given up, and the whole territory of Venice was annexed to the kingdom of Italy. The Austrians, however, took possession of this country in 1814. The Venetian territories on the continent, enumerated above, (and which, by way of distinction, are sometimes called the Terra Firma,) are described in their respective places. Venice was once one of the most powerful commercial and maritime states in Europe. For this it was indebted, at first, to the monopoly of the commerce of India; the products of that country being conveyed, in the middle ages, up the gulf of Persia, the Euphrates, and the Tigris, as far as Bagdad; thence by land, across the desert, to Palmyra; and thence to the Mediterranean ports; and afterwards the supplying of the crusaders with provisions and military stores was an additional source of opulence and power. All this declined, however, after the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope by the Portuguese, in 1486; which, in its consequences, has reduced Venice from a state of the highest splendour to comparative insignificance. The Venetians are lively and ingenious, extravagantly fond of amusements, with an uncommon relish for humour. They are in general tall, well made, and of a ruddy brown colour, with dark eyes.

The women are of a fine style of countenance, with expressive features, and a skin of a rich carnation; they are of easy address, and have no aversion to cultivate an acquaintance with strangers who are properly recommended. Whatever degree of licentiousness may prevail among them, jealousy, poison, and the stiletto have been long banished from their gallantry. The common people display some qualities very rarely to be found in that sphere of life, being remarkably sober, obliging to strangers, and gentle in their intercourse with each other. See Appendix.

VENICE, a city of Italy, and a long time the capital of a territory of the same name. In the 4th century, when Attila, king of the Huns, ravaged the N. part of Italy, many of the inhabitants abandoned their country, and retired into the islands of the Adriatic sea, now called the gulf of Venice. These islands being near each other, they found means to join them by driving piles on the sides, and forming the channels into canals, on which they built houses; and thus the superb city of Venice had its beginning. It is the see of a patriarch, and stands on 72 little islands, about 5 miles from the mainland, in a kind of laguna or lake, separated from the gulf of Venice by some islands at a few miles' distance. These islands in a great measure break the force of the Adriatic storms before they reach the laguna. The number of the inhabitants was computed at 97,156, in 1837; and they have a flourishing trade in silk manufactures, bone-lace, and all sorts of glasses and mirrors, which make their principal employments. Most of the houses have a door opening upon a canal, and another into a street, by means of which, and of the bridges, a person may go to almost any part of the city, by land as well as by water. The streets in general are narrow, and also the canals, except the Grand canal, which is very broad, and has a serpentine course through the middle of the city. There are nearly 500 bridges in Venice; but most of them are only paltry single arches thrown over the canals. The Rialto consists also of a single arch, but a very noble one, and of marble, built across the Grand canal, near the middle, where it is the narrowest; this celebrated arch is 90 feet wide on the level of the canal, and 24 feet high. The beauty of it is impaired by two rows of booths or shops, which divide its upper surface into three narrow streets. The view from the Rialto is equally lively and magnificent, the canal being covered with boats and gondolas, and flanked on each side by magnificent palaces, churches, and spires. The patriarchal church of St. Mark, one of the richest and most expensive in the world, is crowned by five domes; and the treasury is very rich in jewels and relics. In the numerous churches and convents are the most admirable paintings; and indeed Venice, highly renowned for valuable paintings, far surpasses, in this respect, even Rome itself. The ducal palace, before the subversion of the republic, contained the apartments of the doge, halls and chambers for the senate and the different councils and tribunals, and an armoury, in which a great number of muskets were kept, ready charged, that the nobles might arm themselves on any sudden insurrection. The arsenal is a fortification of three miles in compass; before it was possessed by the French, it contained arms for 60,000 foot and 20,000 horse, arranged in an ornamental manner; and 2800 men were daily employed in building ships, casting cannons, making cables, sails, anchors, &c. In this city a famous carnival is held from Christmas to Ash Wednesday, in all which time libertinism reigns through the city, and thousands of foreigners frequent it from all parts of Europe. St. Mark's Place is the general rendezvous. Venice is included in the province called the Dogado. It has railways to Verona, Mantua, and towards Trieste, Milan, &c. It is 125 miles N.N.E. of Florence, and 140 E. of Milan. Long. 12. 20. E. lat. 45. 26. N.

VENICE, GULF OF, a sea or gulf of the Mediterranean, between Italy and Turkey in Europe. It is the ancient Adriaticum Mare, and is still sometimes called the Adriatic sea. There are many islands in it, and many bays or small gulfs on each coast. The grand ceremony of the doge of Venice marrying the Adriatic annually on Ascension Day, by dropping into it a ring from his bucentaur, or state barge, attended by all the nobility and ambassadors in gondolas, was intermitted in 1797, for the first time for several centuries.

VENLOO, a strong town of Holland, in Limburg, and a place of trade for merchandise coming from the adjacent countries. In 1702 it surrendered to the allies, and was confirmed to the Dutch by the barrier treaty in 1715. It was taken by the French in 1794, but ceded to the allies in 1814. It is seated on the E. side of the Meuse, opposite Fort St. Michael; 12 miles N. of Ruremonde. Pop. 5000. Long. 6. 6. E. lat. 51. 22. N.

VENOSA, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, noted as the birthplace of Horace, seated on the river Ofanto; 13 miles N.W. of Acerenza. Pop. 3500.

VENTA DE CRUZ, a town of Colombia, in the isthmus of Darien; seated on the river Chagre. Here the Spaniards used to bring the merchandise of Peru, and Chili on mules from Panama, and embark it on the river for Porto Bello, 20 miles N. of Panama.

VENTNOR, a rapidly rising town in the undercliff on the S.E. side of the isle of Wight, which has become, from a mere hamlet in 1830, to be a considerable place. It is one of the most genial and healthful spots in England. It is well provided with accommodations for its visitors, and has a handsome episcopal chapel erected by John Hambrough, Esq. in 1837. It lies between the villages of Bonchurch and St. Lawrence.

VENZONE, a town of Austrian Italy, in Friuli, situate on the Tagliamento; 18 miles N.N.W. of Friuli.

VERA, a town of Spain, in Granada, 34 miles N.N.E. of Almeria, and 80 E. of Granada.

VERA CRUZ, a province of Mexico, comprising a considerable part of the eastern coast. It has an area of about 32,000 square miles, with 160,000 inhabitants. The soil of the lower grounds is abundantly productive, but the climate is so various that in the space of one day the traveller may pass from the regions of perpetual snow through all the intermediate temperatures, to the suffocating heat of the plains near the sea; and within the compass of a few miles the naturalist may range through the scale of vegetation.

VERA CRUZ, a city and seaport of Mexico, capital of the above province. The harbour is defended by a fort, situate on a rock of the island of St. Juan de Ulua, nearly adjoining. This port is the natural centre of the treasure and merchandise of Mexico. The city is regularly built, its streets broad and straight, and its edifices constructed of materials drawn from the bottom of the ocean; for no rock is to be procured in the neighbourhood. It is situate in an arid plain, without running water, and on which the N. winds blow with dreadful impetuosity from October to April, forming vast hills of moving sand. People in easy circumstances drink rain water collected in cisterns, and it is in contemplation to erect public cisterns within the precincts of the city; but at present the common people are obliged to use water which proceeds from the filtration of the marshes, and which, having been in contact with the roots of vegetables, is of very bad quality. The old town, 16 miles to the N.W., is famous on account of the landing of Cortez, with 500 Spaniards, when he undertook the conquest of Mexico. This place has been the scene of various struggles and attacks connected with the history of Mexico, to the city of which it may be considered that this is the port. Vera Cruz is 200 miles E.S.E. of Mexico. Pop. 17,000. Long. 96. 7. W. lat. 19. 12. N.

VERA PAZ, a province of South America, in Guatemala, bounded on the N. by Yucatan, E. by the bay and province of Honduras, S. by Guatemala Proper, and W. by Chiapa. It is full of mountains and forests; but there are many fertile valleys, which feed a great number of horses and mules. There are also many towns and villages of the native Americans. The capital, of the same name, is a bishop's see, but is inconsiderable. It is 120 miles N.E. of Guatemala. Long. 90. 55. W. lat. 15. 30. N.

VERAGUA, a province of Colombia, bounded on the N. by the Caribbean sea, E. by the province and bay of Panama, S. by the Pacific ocean, and W. by Costa Rica. It is 125 miles long, and 40 broad, and is a mountainous and barren country, but abounds in gold and silver. St. Jago is the capital.

VERBERIE, a town of France in the department of Oise, on the river Oise; 10 miles N.E. of Senlis.

VERCELLI, a city of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, capital of a lordship of the same name, and a bishop's see. The townhouse, the governor's palace, and the hospital, are handsome structures. The inhabitants estimated at 16,000, are chiefly employed in the manufacture of silk. It is seated at the conflux of the Cerva with the Cesia; 40 miles N.E. of Turin. Long. 80. 24. E. lat. 45. 31. N.

VERCHOLENSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, seated on the Lena; 120 miles N. of Irkutsk. Long. 105. 35. E. lat. 54. 0. N.

VERCHOTURA, a town of Russia, in the government of Perin, and a bishop's see. This was the first town the Russians built in Siberia. It is situate near the river Tura; 120 miles N. of Catharinenburg. Long. 60. 15. E. lat. 58. 45. N.

VERD CAPE, a promontory on the W. coast of Africa, 145 miles N.W. of the mouth of the Gambia. Long. 17. 37. W. lat. 14. 44. N.

VERD ISLANDS, CAPE, islands in the Atlantic, about 300 miles W. of the coast of Africa, between 13. and 19. N. lat. They were discovered in 1446, by Anthony Noel, a Genoese, in the service of Portugal, and received their general name from their situation opposite Cape Verd; but they are said to have been known to the ancients under the name of Gorgades. They are ten in number, lying in a semicircle. The names are St. Antonio, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, St. Nicolas, Sal, Bonavista, Mayo, St. Jago, Fuego, and Brava. St. Jago is the principal.

VERDRN, a duchy of Hanover, 28 miles long, and nearly as many broad; bounded on the W. and N. by the duchy of Bremen, and E. and S. by the duchy of Lunenburg. Pop. 23,000. It consists chiefly of heaths and high dry lands; but there are good marshes on the rivers Weser and Aller. It was formerly a bishopric, which, at the peace of Westphalia, was secularized, and ceded to Sweden; in 1712 it was taken by the Danes, who, in 1715, ceded it to the electoral house of Brunswick, which cession was confirmed, in 1718, by the Swedes. The inhabitants are Lutherans.

VERDEN, the capital of the foregoing duchy, contains four churches. It is seated on a branch of the Aller; 18 miles E.S.E. of Bremen. Pop. 3600. Long. 9.20. E. lat. 52.52.1.

VERDUN, a strong town of France, in the department of Meuse, and a bishop's see. The citadel, which is a regular fortification, was constructed by Vauban, who was a native of this place. Besides the cathedral there are a collegiate church and nine parish churches, and it is divided into the Upper, Lower, and New Town. Verdun surrendered to the Prussians in 1792, but was retaken soon after. Here Bonaparte confined those Englishmen whom he detained after the rupture of 1803. It is seated on the Meuse; 28 miles N. by E. of Bar le Duc, and 140 E. by N. of Paris. Pop. 9000. Long. 5.23. E. lat. 49.9.N.

VERDUN, a town in the department of Saone-et-Loire, seated on the Saone, at the influx of the Doubs; 30 miles E. by S. of Autun.

VERDUN, a town in the department of Upper Garonne, seated on the Garonne; 20 miles N.N.W. of Toulouse.

VEREA, a town of Macedonia, 48 miles W. of Salonica. It has large manufactures of cotton and thread. Pop. 8000.

VEREIA, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow; 56 miles W.S.W. of Moscow. Pop. 6000.

VERGARA, a town of Spain, in Guipuscoa one of the Basque provinces. It is a Swiss-like town on the banks of the Deva. Pop. about 4000; 25 miles from Vitoria, and 52 from Irun. Here, on August 31, 1839, was concluded the infamous treaty between Marto and Espartero, in which the former betrayed his king and master.

VERGENNES, a flourishing city of Vermont, in Addison county. It is the only city in the state and has large iron works, seated on Otter creek; 6 miles from its mouth in Lake Champlain, and 10 N. of Middlebury. Pop. in 1840, 1017.

VERINU, a town of Colombia, in Cumana; celebrated for its tobacco. It is situate on a gulf of the Atlantic; 45 miles E. of Cumana. Long. 63.44. W. lat. 10.8. N.

VERMANSOIS, a territory of France, in Picardy; which is now included, with the territory of Soissonnois, in the department of Aisne. It abounds in corn and excellent flax.

VERMANTON, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, 44 miles S.S.E. of Auxerre.

VERMEJO, a river which rises in Tucuman on the borders of Peru, flows S.E. to the Parana, and enters that river a little above its junction with the Parana.

VERMONT, one of the United States of America, bounded N. by Canada, E. by the Connecticut, which divides it from New Hampshire, S. by Massachusetts, and W. by New York. It is 157 miles long, and 65 broad, and is divided into 14 counties; Addison, Bennington, Caledonia, Chittenden, Essex, Franklin, Grand Isle, Lamoille, Orange, Orleans, Rutland, Washington, Windham, and Windsor. A chain of high mountains, running N. and S., divides the state nearly in the centre, between the river Connecticut and Lake Champlain. The natural growth upon this chain consists of hemlock, pine, spruce, and other evergreens; hence they are called the Green Mountains, and give name to the state. The country is generally hilly, but not rocky, and the soil is fertile. It has numerous streams and rivers, which all rise in the Green Mountains; the largest are on the W. side, and the chief are Otter creek, Onion river, La Moille, and Mischisco; the most numerous are on the E. side, and the largest are West river, White river, and Pousoomsuc. Iron ore abounds in this state, and renders it the seat of flourishing manufactures of every thing that can be made of iron and steel; the other chief manufactures are pot and pearl ash, maple-sugar, and spirits. The principal denominations of Christians are Baptists and Congregationalists; there are also some Episcopalians, Quakers, &c. Area 10,212 square miles, Pop. 6,535,680 acres. Pop. in 1840, 291,948. Montpelier is the chief town.

VERNET, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees; 4 miles S. of Prades.

VERNEUIL, a town in the department of Eure, seated on the Anre; 22 miles S.W. of Evreux, and 65 W. by S. of Paris. Population, 5300.

VERNEUIL, a town in the department of Allier, 3 miles from the river Allier, and 15 S. of Moulins.

VERNON, a town in the department of Eure, with a fortress at the end of the bridge over the Seine; 27 miles S.E. of Rouen, and 42 N.W. of Paris. Pop. 4000.

VEROLI, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, seated on the Cosa; 3 miles S. of Alatri.

VERONA, a province of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice; 35 miles long, and 27 broad. Pop. 285,000. It is a very fertile country, abounding in corn, wine, fruit, and cattle.

VERONA, a city of Italy. Capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see. It has three forts, and is surrounded by thick walls, deep ditches, and good ramparts. The river Adige divides it into two parts, which communicate by four bridges. Most of the buildings are of marble, above thirty kinds of which are found in the neighbourhood; but the streets are neither clean nor straight: the best is that called the Corso, which is pretty long; and there is a handsome square called the Piazza d'Armi. This city is famous for antiquities, the most remarkable of which is the Roman amphitheatre, of which seven rows of benches of white marble are still entire; but various repairs have been made from time to time. In the town-house are the statues of five illustrious natives of Verona; namely, Catullus, Æmilius Marcus, Cornelius Nepos, the elder Pliny, and Vitruvius. Besides the cathedral there are a great number of churches and convents, and several hospitals. The palaces of Bevilacqua and Scipio Maffei contain many valuable paintings, antiques, and other curiosities. The principal trade arises from the manufactures of silk, and woollen, and next to them are those of gloves and leather. Near the city is a delightful place, called Campo Marzo, where two annual fairs are held in May and November. Verona has been often taken; and, when Italy was invaded by the French, it was added to the kingdom of Italy. In 1814 it was ceded to Austria, and in 1822 the members of the Holy Alliance met here to deliberate on the affairs of Europe. It is 23 miles N.N.E. of Mantua, and 66 W. of Venice, each by railway. Pop. 65,000. Long. 11. 1. E. lat. 45. 26. N.

VEROVITZA, a strong town of Slavonia, seated near the Drave; 65 miles N.W. of Essek.

VERREZ, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; with a fortress so strong by nature as to be deemed impregnable. It is 15 miles S.S.E. of Aosta, and 35 N. of Turin.

VERRIERES, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Neuchâtel. The environs are celebrated for excellent cheese. It is 6 m. E.N.E. of Pontarlier, and 20 W.S.W. of Neuchâtel.

VERSAILLES, a town of France, capital of the department of Seine-et-Oise, and a bishop's see. In the reign of Louis XIII. it was only a small village, in a forest 30 miles in circuit; and here this prince built a hunting-seat in 1630, which Louis XIV. enlarged into a magnificent palace, and it was the usual residence of the kings of France, till 1789, when Louis XVI. and his family were removed from it to Paris. The buildings and gardens were adorned with a vast number of statues, by the greatest masters, and the water-works are magnificent. The gardens, with the park, are 5 miles in circumference, and surrounded by walls. Versailles is 10 miles W.S.W. of Paris, and has two railroads to the capital. Pop. in 1837, 28,776. Long. 2. 7. E. lat. 48. 48. N.

VERSAILLES, a town of Kentucky, chief of Woodford county; 23 miles W. by S. of Lexington.

VERSETZ, a town of Hungary, in Temeswar, and a bishop's see. It contains some extensive barracks, and near it are the ruins of a castle; 18 miles N. of Vipalanca, and 40 S. of Temeswar. Pop. 5000.

VERSOIX, a town of France, in the department of Aisne. Here, in 1768, an attempt was made to form a harbour, in opposition to Geneva, and great sums were expended for that purpose; but it was soon after relinquished. It is seated on the lake of Geneva, at the influx of the river Versoix; 6 miles S.E. of Gex, and 7 N. of Geneva.

VERT BAY. See FUNDY.

VERTUS, a town of France in the department of Marne, seated at the foot of a mountain on which are good vineyards; 17 miles S.W. of Chalons, and 78 N.E. of Paris.

VESUVIUS, a volcanic mountain of Italy, 7 miles E. of Naples. It is nearly 30 miles in circuit at the base, and 3730 feet high. Towards the sea it is covered with fruit-trees and vineyards, but on the S. and W. sides, and on the top nothing is to be seen but black ashes, cinders, and stones. The top of Vesuvius is divided into two points, the southernmost of which is called Monte de Somma which is considered as the remains of an older and larger volcano. The eruption in the year 79, under Titus, was accompanied by an earthquake, which overturned several cities, particularly Pompeii and Herculaneum; and this eruption proved fatal to Pliny the naturalist. Great quantities of ashes and sulphurous smoke were carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean, into Africa; birds were suffocated in the air, and fell down upon the ground; and fishes perished in the neighbouring waters, which were made hot, and infected by it. Another very violent eruption, in 1631, totally destroyed the town of Torre del Greco. The eruption in 1767 was

VICENZA, a city of Italy, the capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see. It is surrounded by dilapidated walls, but it is a large place, adorned with about 20 palaces, from the designs of Palladio, who was a native of this place. The cathedral is embellished with marble, and has some good paintings; besides which there are above 60 other churches, and in that of St. Corona, the high altar, and the painting of Paul Veronese, of the Magi paying adoration to Christ, attract particular notice. In the fine square before the town-house are two lofty columns, with St. Mark's winged lion on one of them, and on the other a statue of our Saviour. The other remarkable places are the Monte della Pietà, with its fine library; the Palazzo Vecchio, with its admirable paintings; the Theatrum Olympicum, after the model of the amphitheatre of Palladio, and the triumphal arches in the public promenade of Campo Marzio. The principal manufactures are silk, damask, and taffeta. About four miles from the city, on a mountain, is the church Della Madonna di Monte Berico, which is much frequented by pilgrims, and has a fine frontispiece, with a convent close by. Vicenza is seated in a fertile plain, between two hills, at the union of the rivulets Bacchiglione and Retrone; 26 miles E.N.E. of Verona, and 39 W. of Venice by railway. Pop. in 1837, 20,688. VIENNA, a city of Lower Austria, the capital of the empire, and an archbishop's see. It stands in a fertile plain, on the right bank of the Danube, at the influx of the little river Wien. The city itself is not of great extent, nor can it be enlarged, being limited by fortifications; but it is very populous. The streets in general are narrow, and the houses high; but there are several fine squares; and in that called Joseph Square is a colossal equestrian statue in bronze, of Joseph II. Some of the public buildings are magnificent; the chief of them are the imperial palace, the palaces of the princes Lichtenstein, Esterhazy, Schwartzburg, &c., the imperial chancery, the extensive imperial arsenal, the city arsenal, the mint, the general hospital, the town-house, the custom-house, the bank, the library, and the museum. No houses without the walls are allowed to be built nearer to the glacis than 600 yards, so that there is a circular field of that breadth all round the city, which has a beautiful and salutary effect. The eight suburbs are not populous in proportion to their size, for many houses have extensive gardens. The circumference of the city and suburbs is upwards of 18 miles. Many families who live during the winter within the fortifications, spend the summer in the suburbs. The cathedral is built of freestone, and the steeple contains a bell of uncommon magnitude, cast out of the cannon taken from the Turks. Adjoining to this church is the archbishop's palace, the front of which is very fine. Vienna was ineffectually besieged by the Turks in 1589 and 1683. At the latter period the siege was raised by John Sobieski king of Poland, who totally defeated the Turkish army. The university had several thousand students, who, during the siege, mounted guard, as they did also in 1741. The imperial library is much frequented by foreigners, as it contains above 300,000 printed books, and 16,000 MSS. The imperial treasury, and a cabinet of curiosities of the house of Austria, are great rarities. The Danube here is very wide, and contains several woody isles, one of which is the prater, or imperial park; it also forms a sort of harbour, where are magazines of naval stores; and ships have been fitted out to serve on that river against the Turks. The trade of Vienna is in a flourishing state, and it has manufactures of silk stuffs, gold and silver lace, tapestry, looking-glasses, &c. In 1805 this city surrendered to the French, but was given up by the peace of Presburg. In 1809 it again surrendered to the French, but they again restored it on the conclusion of peace. In 1830 it experienced a severe calamity; after a frost of 118 days, a thaw set in on the 26th of February and about midnight on the 28th the ice broke, and inundated the dwellings of 50,000 inhabitants, many of whom were drowned. It suffered greatly from cholera in 1831 and 1832. It is 50 miles W. of Presburg, 350 N.N.E. of Rome, and 570 E. of Paris. The pop. in 1851 was 477,684, of whom 10,670 are Jews, 8,173 Protestants, 820 Greek Church, and 21 Mahomedans; foreign visitors, 17,000.

VIENNE, a town of France, department of Isère, and an archbishop's see. In the 5th century the Burgundians made it the capital of their kingdom. The cathedral is a handsome Gothic structure. In 1311 a general council was held here, at which Pope Clement V. presided, and, among other matters, the suppression of the Knights Templars was determined. The commerce of Vienne consists in wines, silk, and sword-blades. It is seated VINCENNES, a town of France, in the department of Paris, remarkable for its castle, which for three centuries was the country residence of the royal family, but which is now used as a state prison. Here the unfortunate duke d'Enghien was shot in 1804; 3 miles E. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 2825.

VINCENNES, or VINCENT, a town of the United States, and capital of Knox county, Indiana, with a fort. It is seated on the Wabash, opposite the influx of the Ombrash. It is the oldest town in the state, and has a large proportion of French inhabitants; 160 miles W.N.W. of Frankfort, in Kentucky. Pop. about 2000. Long. 85. 30. W. lat. 39. 0. N.

VINCENT, CAPE ST., the S.W. promontory of Portugal, 25 miles W. by S. of Lagos, off which the naval victory was gained in 1797, by Sir John Jervis, created Earl St. Vincent. Long. 9. 0. W. lat. 37. 3. N.

VINCENT, ST., one of the Windward Caribbee islands, in the West Indies, 24 miles long, and 18 broad, and about 70 miles W. of Barbadoes. It is extremely fertile, and well adapted for the raising of sugar and indigo; and here the bread-fruit trees brought from Tahiti thrive remarkably well. The original inhabitants were Caribs, a warlike race, manifestly distinguished from the aborigines of the larger islands. They are conjectured to have been originally a colony from North America, their fierce manners approaching nearer to those of the original natives of that continent than they do to that of South America, and their language also having some affinity to that spoken in Florida. In their wars they preserved their ancient practice of destroying all the males, and preserving the women either for servitude or for breeding. St. Vincent was long a neutral island; but at the peace of 1763 the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English. The latter, soon after, engaged in a war against the Caribs, on the windward side of the island, who were obliged to consent to a peace, by which they ceded a large tract of land to the crown. The consequence of this was, that in 1779 they greatly contributed to the reduction of this island by the French, who, however, restored it in 1783. In 1795 the French landed some troops, and again instigated the Caribs to an insurrection, which was not subdued for several months. It was almost desolated in 1812 by an eruption of the Souffriere mountain, which had continued quiet for nearly a century before. It contains 84,000 acres. Pop. 24,000. Kingston is the capital.

VINCENT, ST., one of the Cape Verd islands, 12 miles long, and three broad, and uninhabited. On the N.W. side of it is a good bay, where ships may wood and water, and wild goats may be shot. Long. 25. 30. W. lat. 17. 30. N.

VINTIMIGLIA, a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, with a small harbour, and a strong castle on a high rock. It is seated on the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the Rotta; 20 miles N.E. of Nice, and 24 S.W. of Oneglia. Pop. 5000. Long. 7. 37. E. lat. 43. 53. N.

VIPALANCA, or UJ PALANKA, a town of Hungary, in Temeswar, with a fortress. It stands on the Karass, near its entrance into the Danube. It is situate 52 miles E. of Belgrade, and 58 S. of Temeswar.

VIQUE. See VIC.

VINE, a town of France, department of Calvados, with several manufactures of coarse woollen cloths. It is seated on the Vire; 30 miles S.E. of Coutances, and 150 W. of Paris. Pop. 7500.

VIRGIN GORDA, or SPANISH TOWN, one of the Virgin islands in the West Indies. It has two good harbours, and is defended by a fort. Long. 64. 0. W. lat. 18. 18. N.

VIRGIN ISLANDS, about 40 islands and keys in the West Indies, between St. Juan de Puerto Rico and the Leeward Caribbee islands. They are possessed by the English and Danes. In the first division, belonging to the English, is Tortola, to which belong Jost Van Dike, Little Van Dike, Guana, Beef, and Thatch islands. In the second division is Virgin Gorda, to which belong Anegada, Nicker, Prickly Pear, the Muskites, the Commahnoes, &c. Of the Danish islands, the principal are St. Thomas and St. John.

VIRGINIA, one of the United States of America, bounded on the S. by N. Carolina and Tennessee, W. by Kentucky, N. by Pennsylvania and the river Ohio, and E. by the Atlantic ocean. It is 446 miles long, and 224 broad, and is divided into 119 counties and 2 districts. Several ridges of mountains cross the country from N. to S., the most easterly above 100 miles from the Atlantic. Here are mines of gold, lead, copper, iron, and coal; marble and limestone are found in great quantities, and many medicinal springs have been discovered in different parts. The principal rivers are James, York, Rappahannoc, and Potomac, which are full of convenient harbours; and there are many other rivers, some of which are capable of receiving the largest merchant ships. The land towards the mouths of the rivers is generally low, and fit for rice, hemp, and maize; that higher up is generally level, and watered with springs. Near the sea it is generally sandy, and without stones, for which reason the horses are seldom shod. The richest lands lie near the branches of the rivers, and abound with various sorts of timber, surprisingly large. The superficial extent is about 64,000 square miles, or 40,960,000 acres, with 1,239,797 inhabitants in 1840. The principal produce is tobacco, wheat, and maize; but the culture of tobacco has considerably declined in favour of that of wheat. The capital is Richmond.

Here are six churches, several meeting-houses, and an ancient stone bridge over the Calder, on which Edward IV. erected a chapel to the memory of his father, who lost his life in the battle near this place, in 1460; but some are of opinion that it was erected about 1340; it has long been used as a warehouse. Also a free grammar-school, which has several exhibitions to both the universities. The town was formerly celebrated for the manufactures of woollen cloth and worsted yarn, but these have so declined, that the 'Tammy Hall,' an immense room erected for the sale of these stuffs, has been converted into a private manufactory. The town is intersected by the Manchester and Leeds railway, and the North Midland, from Derby to Leeds, joins the former a little to the east of Wakefield. Its chief trade is now in the exportation of corn, coal, and wool. There is here a new seminary called the West-Riding Proprietary school. It is situate in the heart of a rich and fertile district; 29 m. S.W. of York, and 187 N.N.W. of London.

WALACHIA. See WALLACHIA.

WALCHEREN, an island of the Netherlands, the principal one of Zealand, and the most westerly, at the mouth of the Scheldt. It is 9 miles long, and 8 broad; and, being low, is subject to inundations, but has good arable and pasture lands. This island was taken by the British in July 1809, with a view to the destruction of the ships and arsenal at Antwerp; but a number of untoward circumstances first rendered the principal object of the expedition abortive, and then the pestilential nature of the island, at that particular season of the year, obliged the British to relinquish every advantage they had gained. The capital of this island, and of the whole province, is Middleburg.

WALCOUR, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Namur, which was entirely destroyed by fire in 1615; seated on the Heura; 27 miles S.W. of Namur.

WALDBURG, a castle of Germany, which gives name to a county between the Danube and the Iller. It stands on a mountain; 7 miles N. of Wangen, and 38 S. by W. of Ulm.

WALDECK, a principality of Germany, 30 miles long, and 24 broad, bounded on the E. and S. by Hesse-Cassel, W. by the Prussian province of Westphalia, and N. by the principality of Paderborn. It consists of two counties, Pyrmont and Waldeck, the latter containing 424 sq. miles, with 52,000 inhabitants; the former 31 sq. miles, with 6,700 inhabitants. Together in 1838, the population amounted to 56,480. The country is mountainous and covered with woods, and has mines of iron, copper, quicksilver, and alum.

WALDECK, a town of Germany, in the county of the same name, with a castle; seated on the Steinbach; 6 miles S.E. of Corbach.

WALDEN, or SAFFRON WALDEN, a town in Essex, governed by a mayor; with a market on Saturday, and a trade in malt. It has a fine large church. It is seated on a hill, among fields that were formerly cultivated with saffron. The other places of worship are meeting-houses for Quakers, Baptists, and Independents. The keep of its ancient castle is still to be seen. Near it is Audley End, the stately mansion of Lord Braybrooke, which is a small portion of what was once considered as the largest mansion in the kingdom; it was founded on the site of a monastery, in the time of James I. It is 27 miles N.N.W. of Chelmsford, and 42 N. by E. of London.

WALDENBURG, a town and castle of Saxony, situate on the Muldau. The old town, on the opposite side of the river, is famous for its brown and white earthenware. It is 12 miles N.N.E. of Zwickau. Pop. 3000.

WALDENBURG, a town of Wirtemberg, in the principality of Hohenlohe, with an ancient castle on a mountain; 6 miles E. by N. of Ohringen.

WALDENSES, VALLEYS OF THE, a district of Piedmont, bordering on France; 24 miles long and 10 broad. It was formerly called the four valleys of Perusa, Lucerna, St. Martino, and Angrogna, but the last does not now belong to them. Pop. 20,000, who are remarkable as being the first community of Western Europe who separated from the church of Rome.

WALDHEIM, a town of Saxony, with an ancient monastery, now converted into an orphan-house, and house of correction, in which various manufactures are carried on. It is situate on the Zschopau; 30 miles S.E. of Leipsic.

WALDMUNCHEN, a town of Bavaria, on the river Schwarzau; 32 miles E.S.E. of Amberg.

WALDOBOROUGH, a town of Maine, in Lincoln county; 16 miles E. of Wiscasset, and 180 N.E. of Boston.

WALDENSEN, a town of Bavaria, near which is a rich Cistercian abbey, the abbot of which was formerly a prince of the empire. It is 44 miles N.N.E. of Amberg.

WALDSHUT, a strong town of Baden, in the circle of Wiesen; one of the four Forest Towns; seated on the Rhine, at the entrance of the Black Forest; 19 miles W.S.W. of Schaffhausen.

WALDSTADT, a name given to the Swiss cantons of Lucern, Uri, Schweiz, and Underwalden. It signifies Forest Towns, these cantons containing a great number of forests. For the Waldstadt of Baden, see FOREST TOWNS.

WALDSTADTER SEE, OR LAKE OF THE FOUR CANTONS, one of the finest lakes in Switzerland. It consists of three principal branches, called the lakes of Lucern, Schweiz, and Uri. The upper branch, or lake of Lucern, is in the form of a cross, the sides of which stretch from Kussnacht to Dullenwal, a village near Stantz. It is bounded towards the town by cultivated hills, sloping gradually to the water, contrasted on the opposite side by an enormous mass of barren and craggy rocks, Mount Pilati, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, rising boldly from the lake. Towards the E. of this branch, the lake contracts into a narrow creek, scarcely a mile across. Soon after, it again widens, and forms the second branch, or lake of Schweiz; on the W. side is the canton of Underwalden, on the E. that of Schweiz. Here the mountains are more lofty, and infinitely varied; some covered to the very summits with verdure, others perpendicular and craggy. Near Brunen commences the third branch, or lake of Uri, which takes a S.E. direction. It is deep and narrow, about 9 miles long, and bordered on both sides by rocks uncommonly wild and romantic, with forests of beech and pine growing down their sides to the very edge of the water. The river Reuss flows through this lake.

WALES, a principality in the W. of England, 150 miles long, and 80 broad; bounded on the N. by the Irish sea, W. by that sea and St. George's channel, S. by the Bristol channel, and E. by the counties of Chester, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth. It has an area of 5,206,900 acres, (or according to the trigonometrical survey only 4,752,000 acres) of which 900,000 are arable, 2,600,000 pasture, and 1,700,000 waste, of which much is capable of improvement. It sends 24 members to parliament. It is divided into North and South Wales, each containing six counties, namely, Anglesea, Carnarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery, in North Wales; Brecknock, Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor in South Wales. It is the country to which the ancient Britons fled when Great Britain was invaded by the Saxons. They are now called Welsh, and continue to preserve their own language. They were long governed by independent kings, till in the reign of Edward I., their last prince, Llewellyn, being vanquished and slain in the year 1283, the country was united to England. The natives submitted to the English dominion with extreme reluctance; and Edward, as a conciliatory means, promised to give them for their prince a Welshman by birth, and one who could speak no other language. This notice being received with joy, he invested in the principality his second son, Edward, then an infant, who had been born at Carnarvon. The death of his eldest son, Alphonso, happening soon after, young Edward became heir also of the English monarchy, and united both nations under one government; but some ages elapsed before the animosity which had long subsisted between them was totally extinguished. From the time of Edward II. the eldest son of the king of England has always been created prince of Wales. The general aspect of the country is bold, romantic, and mountainous, consisting of almost continued ranges of lofty mountains and impending crags, intersected by numerous deep ravines, with extensive valleys, and affording endless views of wild mountain scenery. Agriculture is in a backward state, but the soil is by no means barren, producing all the necessaries of life; the cattle and sheep are numerous, but small. It is watered by many rivers, the principal of which, and other particulars, are noted in the different counties.

WALES, NEW SOUTH, a name given to the E. portion of Australia. It was first explored by Captain Cook in 1770, and a design was formed, in consequence of his recommendation, to settle a colony of convicts at Botany bay. Captain Philip, being appointed governor of the intended settlement, sailed from Portsmouth in May 1787, with a detachment of marines, and 778 convicts, of whom 220 were women. He arrived at Botany bay in January 1788; but, subsequently, finding this bay very ineligible for a colony, he fixed upon Port Jackson, about 13 miles further to the N.; and here a settlement was begun, to which he gave the name of Sydney. It has regularly increased since that time, by the influx of emigrants from the mother country, to whom the colony offers peculiar agricultural, or rather pastoral, advantages; and also by the transportation of convicts, which has largely increased their population. The inhabitants are now spread over a vast extent of country, in proportion to their numbers. The flocks now range over an extent of 900 miles long, by 300 miles wide, from Moreton bay on the N. to the boundaries of South Australia and Port Philip on the S. and W. The peculiar character of Australia, differing from every other European colony, has been the cause of this remarkable dispersion. The absence of dense forests, or swamps, combined with the remarkable dryness of the soil, render travelling over the whole country a work of facility. As a proof of its accessible nature, a road has been opened from Melbourne, at Port Philip, to Yass, on the confines of the colony, a distance of 380 miles, at a very trifling expense to a few individuals, and which is easy throughout for carriages of any description. The land, in its natural state, is far from rich, but consists of pasturage, which is available to the settler without the outlay of a large amount of capital; and the flocks are reared for the wool, and migrate in the interior as the pasturage varies, and as far as the limits of land carriage for the produce render it profitable, which, in the opinion of many, has been already attained. The alluvial lands on the banks of the Nepean and Hawkesbury, within the colony, are of the greatest fertility, being a rich vegetable mould, many feet in depth, formed by depositions from these rivers during their inundations. Wheat and maize are extensively cultivated by the colony, and barley, oats, rye, &c., are also raised. Every species of culinary vegetable known in Britain is produced in New South Wales, and many of them attain a superior degree of perfection, though a few also degenerate. The fruits are excellent, and of great variety; oranges, peaches, apricots, nectarines, grapes, pears, plums, pomegranates, raspberries, strawberries, melons, &c., attain the highest degree of maturity in the open air. The colony is divided into 19 counties, but which are only used to distinguish certain tracts of country, as they are not used for any civil or ecclesiastical divisions: for purposes of jurisdiction it is divided into 30 police districts, of very unequal size, each having a magistrate, and a bench of petty sessions. The extreme boundary of the counties, however, are the limits of location; that is, no lands are sold beyond their limits; beyond this, the country is on a different regulation: it is divided roughly into districts, in each of which is a commissioner of crown lands, who is also the magistrate, and has a small force of mounted, or border police. Beyond the limits of location, land is neither sold nor let on lease, as within the colony, but licenses are granted for allotments of land for pasturage, in stations of from 5000, to 30,000 acres. The quantity of stock thus pastured was stated, in January 1846, as 7088 horses, 371,699 cattle, 1,334,593 sheep, which is probably under the real amount. The number of stations was 694. The persons who form these stations are the real explorers of the country; they push themselves into the interior with extraordinary rapidity, and perhaps do not become known, even to the crown commissioner, till some accidental circumstance, as a collision with the aborigines, brings them under his notice. This hostility of the natives, and its dreadful consequences, are the greatest drawback on the colony. Wherever a river presents itself, its banks are lined with stations, which the general aridity of the intervening tracts prevents from being tenanted so early. The district of Victoria, in the southern part of New South Wales, was opened, and the town of Melbourne, at the head of the Port, was founded in 1837, by Governor Sir Richard Bourke; since which it has increased in population and prosperity in an eminent degree: the quantity of land sold at the end of 1840 exceeded 160,000 acres. The net amount of the revenues, without the sales of lands, was, in 1837, £2539; in 1838, £2920; in 1839, £14,703; and in the first six months of 1840, £11,747; affording a satisfactory proof of the flourishing state of the settlement, and which the proximity of Australia Felix, a rich and beautiful district to the W. and N., discovered in 1836, by Sir Thomas Mitchell, and also of Gipps Land, discovered in 1840, by Count Streleski, must tend to increase. In the mountainous ranges north of the last-named districts, and in their continuation to the N.E., towards Bathurst, are found those wonderful deposits of gold, which threaten to subvert all the civil and social relations of the colony. Their richness in other metalliferous deposits is nowhere exceeded; but the gold seems quite as abundant as in those which occasioned the colonization and importance of California. See AUSTRALIA. Of the interior of the continent, to the westward of the colony, some attempts have been made to ascertain its character. The principal of these is the expedition under Dr. Leichhardt, who penetrated in a N.W. direction as far as Port Essington. The country is mostly desert, and it may be inferred that the heart of the continent is an arid desert, perhaps sometimes inundated from the tropical rains, but not of any permanent inland sea, which has been a favourite theory concerning this remarkable country. This view has also been verified by the expedition under Captain Sturt, who penetrated nearly to the centre of the continent from Adelaide, under great privations, and under a most astounding degree of heat. The native quadrupeds are principally of the marsupial kind, or bear their young in an abdominal pouch, of which the most remarkable is the kangaroo. The native dogs are extremely fierce, and cannot be brought to the same degree of familiarity as those with which we are acquainted. There are also weasels and ant-eaters, with that singular animal the ornithomyiaceous pardoxus, or duck-billed platypus, in which the jaws of a quadruped are elongated into the complete bill of a bird. There are many beautiful birds of various kinds; among which the principal is a black swan, its wings edged with white, its bill tinged with red; and the emu, or Australian ostrich, which frequently reaches the height of seven feet or more. Several kinds of serpents, large spiders, and scelopendras, have also been met with; and three or four species of ants, particularly green ants, which build their nests upon trees, in a very singular manner. There are likewise many curious fishes; though the finny tribe seem not to be so plentiful here as they generally are in higher latitudes. The aborigines of New South Wales are represented as perhaps the most miserable and debased race of men existing. Their colour is rather a deep chocolate than a full black; but the filth with which their skin is covered prevents its true colour from appearing. Their hair is generally clotted with a red gum, and they paint themselves with various colours; they will also sometimes ornament themselves with beads and shells, but make no use of the beautiful feathers of their birds. Most of the men want one of the fore teeth in the upper jaw, which appears to be a badge of honour among them; and it is common for the women to cut off two joints of the little finger. Of the cultivation of the ground they have no notion; hence they depend entirely for subsistence on the fruits and roots they can gather, and the animals and fish they catch. Their canoes are nothing more than large pieces of bark tied up at both ends with vines; and, considering the slight texture of these vessels, the dexterity with which they are managed, and the boldness with which they venture out to sea in them, are wonderful. Their huts consist of pieces of bark laid together in the form of an oven, open at one end, very low, but long enough for a man to lie in full length; but they seem to depend more for shelter on the caverns with which the rocks abound. They possess a great power of imitation; they can imitate the songs and language of the Europeans almost instantaneously. In person they are active and vigorous, though generally lean. They are very expert at throwing their waddies or lances, and will hit a mark at a considerable distance. Their number seems to be small, in comparison to the extent of the country. The colony of New South Wales lies between 31. 40, and 36. 0. S. lat., and 148. 40, and 152. 35. W. long., and extends from the Manning river, and Liverpool range on the N., to the Munnoo river on the S., and is bounded on the W. by the Goulburn, Cudgegong, Lachlan, and Morumbidgee rivers, and the Warragong mountains, or Australian Alps; which limits contain an area of 34,505 square miles, or 22,083,200 acres, and is divided into 19 counties, viz. Bligh, Brisbane, Durham, Gloucester, Philip, Hunter, Northumberland, Wellington, Roxburgh, Cook, Cumberland, Bathurst, Georgiana, Westmorland, King, Argyll, Camden, Murray, and St. Vincent. This extensive district contains a great variety of soil, which on the coast is generally of inferior quality, and which extends for 12 or 14 miles inland, after which there are many rich tracts, particularly on the margins of the rivers. Beyond these limits many other counties, extending from Moreton bay on the north, and to Port Phillip on the S.W. have been surveyed and planned. This last is now called Victoria. See MELBOURNE, &c. It was rapidly progressing in pastoral riches, till the gold discoveries of 1851-2, which has greatly disorganised it. By the returns of 1846, the total acres under cultivation was 182,533. The population of the whole colony at different periods is estimated to have been as under:

See Appendix.

From the first establishment of the colony in 1788, till 1813, a very small portion of this vast continent was known; the Blue Mountains, a range extending for upwards of 1000 miles in length, under different names, and lying 50 or 60 miles from the coast, was for 25 years a barrier between the coast and interior. In 1813, a season of distressing drought, a pass was discovered through these mountains, and a vast extent of valuable country was thrown open to the settlers; fresh expeditions were set on foot in 1817, when the Lachlan river was explored, and in 1818 the Macquarie was traced: these rivers flow into the interior in a N.W. direction, and join the Darling river in lat. 30. 0., which was discovered in 1828: the waters are salt; it flows in a S.W. course to the Murray, which enters the Pacific at Encounter bay in South Australia: these are by far the largest rivers that have been discovered in Australia, but they flow through a level, arid country, totally useless for colonization. The principal rivers of the colony are the Hunter, in the N. part, flowing through a rich and beautiful country, and falling into the sea at Newcastle, in Port Hunter; S. of this is the Hawkesbury, rising in the Blue Mountains, and flowing eastward to Broken bay; the banks are fertile and populous: the Nepean, also fertile, and falling into the Hawkesbury; and in the S. the Shoalhaven, debouching N. of Jervis bay, and rising to the E. of the sources of the Murrumbidgee, a large river tributary to the Murray, and one of the principal rivers of the province. The principal towns are Sydney, the capital, Parramatta, Richmond, Maitland, Liverpool, and Carrington.

WALET, the capital of Beeroo, in Negroland. It is 100 miles N. by W. of Sege, and 270 W. by S. of Timbuctoo. Long. 3. 0. W. lat. 15. 45. N.

WALHOFF, a town of Russia, in the government of Courland, near which the Poles were defeated by Gustavus, king of Sweden, in 1626. It is 34 miles E. of Mittau.

WALLAJAPETTA, a populous and well-built town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, which is the emporium of the trade between the country above the Gauts and the seacoast. It is seated on the N. bank of the Palliar, nearly opposite Arcot; 63 miles W. by S. of Madras.

WALLACHIA, and MOLDAVIA, two principalities in the S.E. part of Europe. They adjoin each other, and are principally separated from each other by the river Sereth. On the N.W. and W. is Transylvania, and on the E. of Moldavia is Bessarabia, separated from it by the river Pruth. The Danube forms the southern boundary. The area and population of the two provinces are as follows:

	AREA, Sq. M.	POP. IN 1837-39.	CAPITALS.
Wallachia	27,500	1,747,815	Bucharest
Moldavia	17,020	1,419,105	Jassy
Total	44,520	3,166,920

The Carpathian mountains on the N. of Wallachia, vary in height from 3000 to 8000 feet, and from these the country declines to the S. and E. through picturesque regions to the immense level and marshy plain, from 10 to 12 leagues in breadth. It is exceedingly well watered by numerous rivers which annually inundate the surrounding country. The winter is very severe, especially in Moldavia, and the summer hot, though the climate cannot be said to be unhealthy. The principal mineral production is salt, though many others abound that are not worked. The land principally belongs to the boyars or nobles, but is cultivated somewhat on the serf system. Corn is largely produced, but the principal occupation of the Wallachians is the rearing of cattle, sheep, and horses. The people are the descendants of the ancient Dacians; and the Wallachs, though the country was almost the last to submit to the Roman yoke, still speak a language so nearly true Latin that a person can generally make himself understood in that language. From misgovernment the inhabitants are a very debased race, but considerable improvements are now in operation. Wallachia and Moldavia, have each their own peculiar government, but their history is intimately connected. Since Trajan's conquest, the country has never ceased to be under foreign domination. Early in the 15th century it was conquered by the Turks, but the last war between Turkey and Russia entirely destroyed the influence of the former, and rendered the latter paramount. Since the Russian war of 1854-5, Wallachia and Moldavia have been united under a ruling prince of their own election, acknowledging the suzerainty of the Porte. The inhabitants are nearly all of the Greek church.

WALLENBURG, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Basel, with a castle on a high rock, seated on the Ergetz; 12 miles S. by E. of Basel.

WALLENSTADT, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall. It is a great thoroughfare for merchandise passing from Germany, through the country of the Grisons, to Italy, and stands at the E. end of a lake of the same name; 9 miles W. of Sargans, and 15 N.W. of Coire.

WALLENSTADT, a lake of Switzerland, 10 miles long, and 2 broad, bounded by high mountains, except to the E. and W. Through this lake flows the Mat, which soon after joins the Linth, and forms the river Linmat.

WALLERSTEIN, a town of Bavaria, with a castle; 6 miles S.W. of Oettingen.

WALLINGFORD, a borough in Berkshire, markets on Tuesday and Friday, and a great trade in corn and malt. It was once surrounded by a wall, and had a magnificent castle, some ruins of which still remain. There were formerly four churches, only one of which is now in use. The town has, however, of late years much increased in population and extent, and now contains three meeting-houses for dissenters, a handsome market-house, a town-hall, a free-school, almshouses, &c. It is seated on the Thames, over which it has a handsome stone bridge of 19 arches. It returns one member to parliament. It is 14 miles N.W. of Reading, and 46 W. of London.

WALLINGFORD, a town of Connecticut, in Newhaven county; 13 miles S.W. of Middletown, and 13 N.E. of Newhaven. Pop. 2204.

WALLKILL, a town of New York in Orange county, on a creek of its name; 19 miles W. of Newburg.

WALSSEND, a parish in Northumberland, 4 miles E.N.E. of Newcastle, and intersected by the Newcastle and North Shields railway. Extensive coal mines are in its neighbourhood, and immense quantities bearing its name are sent to London.

WALNEY, an island of England, on the coast of Lancashire. It is 9 miles long, and 1 broad, and serves as a bulwark to the hundred of Furness, against the waves of the Irish sea.

WALPO, a town of Slavonia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle. It is seated on the river Walpo; 20 miles W. of Essek, and 110 S. of Buda.

WALPOLE, a town of New Hampshire, in Cheshire county, seated on the Connecticut 14 miles N. by W. of Keene. Pop. 2015.

Here are six churches, six meeting-houses for dissenters, a Roman Catholic chapel, an excellent free school, two charity schools, and an infant school, opened in 1826. It is seated on the Mersey, over which is a bridge; 18 miles E. of Liverpool, and 182 N.N.W. of London, on the main line of the Lon. & N. Western railway. It returns one member to parliament. It was the coach thoroughfare between Manchester and Liverpool but this has been altered by the railway.

WARRIORE, a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic; 52 miles N.N.E. of Tanjore, and 55 S.S.W. of Pondicherry.

WARSAW, the metropolis of the present kingdom of Poland, and formerly of the whole country of that name. It is built partly in a plain, and partly on a gentle rise from the Vistula; extending, with the suburbs of Kraka and Praga, over a vast extent of ground, and containing above 140,571 inhabitants. The streets are spacious, but ill paved; the churches and public buildings large and magnificent; the palaces of the nobility numerous and splendid; but the greatest part of the houses, particularly in the suburbs, are mean and ill-constructed wooden hovels. The manufactures comprise woollen stuffs, carpeting, gold and silver wire, soap, tobacco, &c. Here are several wholesale mercantile houses, employed in the import of articles for the supply of the interior, and the export of Polish produce. Two great annual fairs have, since 1817, been established here, on the plan of those of Frankfurt, Leipsic, &c. They are held in May and November, each continuing three weeks. In the beginning of 1794 the empress of Russia put a garrison into this city, in order to compel the Poles to acquiesce in the usurpation she had in view; but this garrison was soon expelled by the citizens. The king of Prussia besieged Warsaw in July, but was compelled to raise the siege in September.

It was undertaken by the Russians, who, in November, took by storm the suburb of Praga, massacred the inhabitants, and nearly reduced it to ashes. The immediate consequence was the surrender of the city to the Russians, who, in 1796, delivered it up to the king of Prussia. Towards the end of 1800, the French occupied this place; and by the treaty of Tilsit, the city, with this part of Poland, was given to Saxony, to be held under the title of the duchy of Warsaw. The Russians, however, overran this duchy in 1813, and took possession of the city of Warsaw. It was the residence of the viceroy, and the place of meeting of the Polish parliament, till the insurrection of the Poles in 1833, which failed in restoring their ancient privileges and annihilated the political existence of the Poles; since which it has formed a part of the Russian empire. It is 170 m. S. of Konigsburg, and 180 E.N.E. of Breslau. It is connected by a branch railway, 190 m. long, to that connecting Cracow with Berlin, Bresden, &c.

WARTA, a river of Poland which rises in the palatinate of Cracow, flows by Siradia and Posnan, passes by Driessen and Landsberg in Brandenburg, and enters the Oder at Custrin.

WARTENBERG, a town of Prussian Silesia, capital of a lordship of the same name, with a castle. In 1742 it was entirely reduced to ashes, except the old castle, which is now used as a brewhouse. It is 28 m. N. E. of Breslau.

WARTENBURG, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Glogau; 20 miles N.W. of Glogau.

WARWICK, a borough, and the capital of Warwickshire, governed by a mayor, returning two members to parliament. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It was fortified with a wall, now in ruins, but has still a noble castle of the ancient earls of Warwick, inhabited by the present possessor of that title. The town was nearly destroyed by fire in 1694, but was subsequently rebuilt with greater regularity. The streets are spacious, and meet nearly in the centre of the town. It had formerly six parish churches, of which two only remain. There are likewise meeting-houses for Baptists, Independents, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Quakers; and a mile distant is a Roman Catholic chapel. The charitable institutions are numerous, and conducted upon a scale of liberality and extent which reflect great honour upon the inhabitants. The chief manufactures are in worsted and hats; there are also silk-throwing concerns, and a good malting business. The town is situated on a rocky eminence, on the river Avon, over which is a stone bridge, erected by the late earl of Warwick, at his own expense. It is 10 miles S.S.W. of Coventry, and 92 N.W. of London. Long. 1. 35. W. lat. 52. 17. N.

WARWICK, a town of North America, in the state of New York, in Orange county, containing five places of worship, and large iron-works; 54 miles N.W. of New York. Population, 5113.

WARWICK, a town of Rhode Island, chief of Kent county. It has a cotton manufacture, and is situated at the head of Narragansett bay; 8 miles S. of Providence. Pop. 6726.

WARWICKSHIRE, a county of England; 47 miles long, and 30 broad; bounded on the N. by Derbyshire, N.E. by Leicestershire, E. by Northamptonshire, S.E. by Oxfordshire, S.W. by Gloucestershire, W. by Worcestershire, and N.W. by Staffordshire. It contains 577,280 acres; is divided into four hundreds, and one liberty, and 205 parishes. It sends four members to parliament for the N. and S. divisions of the county. The climate of this county is healthy, and the air mild and pleasant: its salubrity is increased by the great consumption of wood for the iron-works, many parts being entirely cleared and converted to tillage and pasture. The N. part, called the Woodlands, is divided from the S., called the Feldon, by the river Avon; and the soil of both is in general rich and fertile. It produces corn, flax, wool, cheese, coal, iron, and limestone, and its breeds of cattle and sheep are of a superior kind. The principal rivers are the Avon, Tame, and Arrow. It is intersected by several canals, which, communicating with others that proceed to the rivers Thames, Severn, Mersey, and Trent, and also by the London and Birmingham railway, are of considerable advantage to its trade and commerce. The manufactures are various and important, comprising ribbons, gauzes, and other silk fabrics, lastings and thread, and all descriptions of hardware. The capital is Warwick, but Birmingham is the largest town.

WASA, a seaport of Sweden, in East Bothnia, on the gulf of Bothnia; 40 miles N. by E. of Christianstadt.

WASHINGTON, a city, and the metropolis of the United States of America. It is seated on the river Potomac, at the junction of the Anacostia or Eastern Branch, extending about 4 miles up each; including a tract of territory called Columbia. The plan of this city combines every thing grand and beautiful that can be introduced into a city, but, as yet the outline remains to be filled up. It is divided into squares or grand divisions, by streets running due N. and S. and E. and W.; which form the ground-work of the plan. But from the capitol, the president's house, and some of the important areas in the city, run diagonal streets, from one material object to another, which not only produce a variety of prospects, but remove the insipid sameness which renders some great cities unpleasing. The great leading streets are 160 feet wide, including a pavement of 10 feet, and a gravel walk of 30 feet, planted with trees on each side, which will leave 80 feet of paved street for carriages. The rest of the streets are, in general, 110 feet wide, with a few only 90 feet, except North, South, and Capitol streets, which are 160 feet. The diagonal streets are named after the respective states composing the Union, while those running N. and S. are, from the capitol eastward, named East First street, East Second street, &c., and those W. of it are, in the same manner, called West First street, West Second street, &c. Those running E. and W. are, from the capitol northward, named North A street, North B street, &c.; and those S. of it are called South A street, South B street, &c. The squares, or divisions of the city, amount to 1150; the rectangular ones contain from three to six acres, and are divided into lots of from 40 to 60 feet in front, and their depth from 110 to 300, according to the size of the square. In 1800, after the adjournment of congress, at their last session in Philadelphia, the public offices, records, and property were removed to this city, and here, on the 22nd of November, the congress assembled for the first time. In 1804, a society of agriculture was incorporated here. On the 19th of August, 1814, a British army, of about 5000 men, under General Ross, landed at Benedict, on the right bank of the Patuxent, and, after defeating the Americans at Bladensburg, entered this city on the 24th, and destroyed all the public edifices; but they have subsequently been rebuilt, and some of them on an improved plan. The houses are all brick or stone. The capitol (or house for the legislative bodies) is on an eminence, 73 feet high, about a mile from the Eastern Branch, and not much more from the Potomac, commanding a full view of the city, as well as a considerable extent of the country round. It is built of white free-stone, and is an edifice of great elegance and grandeur. The president's house is also an elegant building, of the same material, situate on a rising ground, not far from the Potomac, and possessing a delightful water prospect, with a view of the capitol, and some other material parts of the city. There are two large buildings on each side of the President's house for the departments of the state, the navy, the treasury, and of war. The general post-office and the patent office are also extensive buildings. Due S. from the president's house, and due W. from the capitol, run two great pleasure parks, or malls, which intersect and terminate upon the banks of the Potomac, and are ornamented at the sides by a variety of elegant buildings, houses for foreign ministers, &c. Interspersed through the city, where the most material streets cross each other, are a variety of open areas, formed in various regular figures, which, in great cities, are extremely useful and ornamental. The more spacious of these areas are appropriated to the different states composing the Union; not only to bear their respective names, but as proper places to erect statues, obelisks, or columns, to the memory of their celebrated men. Upon a small eminence, where a line due W. from the capitol, and due S. from the president's house, would intersect, is erected an equestrian statue of General Washington, the first president of the United States. N. of the capitol, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles, is the Columbian college, incorporated by congress in 1821. Other public buildings have been commenced, as a marine hospital, with its gardens; a general exchange, and its public walks; a fort, magazines, and arsenal; a city hall, churches, colleges, market-houses, theatre, &c. The city being situate on the great post road, equidistant from the N. and S. extremities of the Union, and nearly so from the Atlantic ocean to the river Ohio, upon the best navigation, and in the midst of the richest commercial territory in America, is by far the most eligible situation for the residence of the congress. The Eastern Branch is one of the safest and most commodious harbours in America, being sufficiently deep for the largest ships, for 4 miles above its junction with the Potomac; while the channel lies close along the edge of the city, and is abundantly capacious. The Navy Yard is on the Eastern Branch, and covers 27 acres. Some of the largest ships of war have been built here. The Potomac produces a communication by water between the city and the interior parts of Virginia and Maryland, by means of the Shannandoah, the South Branch, Opcean, Cape Capon, Patterson Creek, Connocheague, and Monocasy, for upwards of 200 miles, through one of the most healthy regions in America, producing tobacco of superior quality, hemp, maize, wheat, and other small grain, with fruits and vegetables in abundance. The lands upon the Potomac, above the city of Washington, all around it, and for 60 miles below, are high and dry, abounding with innumerable springs of excellent water, and well covered with timber trees, of various kinds. A few miles below the city, upon the banks of the Potomac, are inexhaustible mountains of excellent free-stone, of which the public edifices in the city are built. Above the city also, upon the banks of the river, are immense quantities of excellent coal, limestone, and marble, with blue slate of the best quality. The Tyber, which is the principal stream that passes through the city, is to be collected in a grand reservoir, near the capitol, whence it will be carried into pipes to different parts of the city; while its surplus water will fall down in cascades, through the public gardens W. of the capitol, into a canal. The plan of this city was formed by Major L'Enfant; but the scale is so gigantic, that it may be considered rather as consisting of four distinct towns lying on the principal streets, and about a mile distant from each other; and it is improbable that it ever will become the centre of attraction that the ideas of the originators seemed to anticipate. Except during the sitting of congress, it presents a dull and deserted aspect, and possesses but little trade; and whatever may be the plan, it is much inferior to many other towns of the Union. It is 136 miles S.W. of Philadelphia, the late capital of the United States, 225 from New York, 432 from Boston, 1203 from New Orleans. Pop. in 1800, 3210; in 1810, 8208; in 1820, 13,247; in 1830, 18,827; and in 1840, 23,364. The capitol is in lat. 38. 53. 25. N. Long. 77. 2. 0. W. from Greenwich.

WESTERWICK, a seaport of Sweden, in Smaland, with a good harbour, a commodious quay, a cloth manufacture, and a trade in ship-timber and all sorts of naval stores. It is seated on the Baltic; 56 miles N. of Culmur, and 120 S.W. of Stockholm. Long. 16. 0. E. lat. 57. 40. N. Pop. 3000.

WESTFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampden county, on a river of its name; 10 miles W. of Springfield. Pop. 3526.

WESTHOFEN, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. It has three churches. It is 7 miles N.W. of Worms.

WESTHOFEN, a town of France, in the department of Lower Rhine; 12 miles W. of Strasburg.

WESTMANIA, a former province of Sweden, between Upland, Sadermania, Nericia, Wermeland, and Dalecarlia. It is 75 miles long, and 45 broad. Pop. 110,000. It abounds in copper and iron mines. The face of the country is diversified like Wermeland.

WESTMINSTER, a city of Middlesex, the residence of the monarch, the seat of the parliament, and of the high courts of justice, and constituting, with London and Southwark, the metropolis of the British empire. On the dissolution of its abbey, in 1541, Henry VIII. erected it into a bishopric, appointing the whole of Middlesex (Fulham excepted) for the diocese. It had, however, only one prelate; for Edward VI. soon after dissolved it, but in 1856, the extension of the metropolis had so increased, that it was again divided into the bishoprics of London and Westminster. It sends two members to parliament, who are chosen by its householders, there being no freemen nor incorporated companies. Besides the churches of the establishment, Westminster contains places of worship for dissenters of almost every denomination, and a Jews' synagogue. In the city are two parish churches, St. Margaret and St. John; and seven in the liberties, namely, St. Clement, St. Mary, St. Paul, St. Martin, St. Ann, St. James, and St. George. The precinct of St. Martin-le-Grand, though within the city of London, is under the jurisdiction of Westminster. See LONDON.

WESTMINSTER, a town of Vermont, in Windham county, on Connecticut river, opposite Walpole, in New Hampshire, with which it communicates by a bridge; 40 miles N.E. of Bennington.

WESTMORELAND, an inland county of England, 42 miles long, and from 16 to 40 broad; bounded on the N. and N.W. by Camberland, E. and S.E. by Yorkshire, and S.W. by Lancashire. It contains 487,680 acres, is divided into four wards, and 32 parishes, has eight market-towns, and sends two members to parliament. It is a region of lofty mountains, naked hills, dreary forests, and barren moors; but is watered by numerous rivers, and several lakes. The soil, of course, is various; that on the mountains being very barren, while that in the valleys is fertile, producing good corn and grass, especially in the meadows near the rivers. In the hilly parts on the W. borders are some mines of copper, but the ore lies very deep. This county yields abundance of limestone, and the finest blue slate; and many excellent hams are cured here. Its manufactures are a coarse woollen cloth, worsted stockings, flannels, tanned leather, and gunpowder. The principal rivers are the Eden, Lane, and Ken; and the chief lake is Windermere, the largest in England. Appleby is the county town.

WESTROE, a borough in the county of Durham, a suburb of South Shields, the market-place, and many of the principal streets of which are in this township; and in conjunction with it, it sends one member to parliament.

WESTPHALIA, one of the former circles of Germany, bounded on the E. by Lower Saxony, S. by Hesse, Wetteravia, and Treves, W. by the Netherlands, and N. by the German ocean. The climate is cold, and there are a great many marshes, but the soil produces pastures, and some corn. The horses are large, and the hogs in high esteem, especially the hams, known by the name of Westphalia hams. The principal rivers are the Weser, Fms, Lippe, and Roer. This circle contained the bishoprics of Munster, Liege, Paderborn, and Osnaburg; the principalities of Emden, or East Friesland, Meurs, Minden, and Verden; the duchies of Westphalia, Berg, Juliers, Cleve, Oldenburg, and part of the territories of the princes of Nassau; the counties of Mark, Ravensburg, Steinfurt, Tecklenburg, Lingen, Bentheim, Diepholt, Hoya, Schauenburg, Spiegelburg, Lippe, Ritberg, and other smaller ones; and several lordships and abbeys. In 1800 all the parts of the circle lying on the left bank of the Rhine, being full one-third of the whole territory, became united to France; and in 1808 the French emperor erected the remainder into a kingdom, in favour of his brother Jerome, and added to it the electorates of Hesse-Cassel and Hanover. Cassel was the capital. After the celebrated battle of Leipsic, in 1813, this new kingdom was overrun by the allies, and the government overthrown. The whole territory now belongs to Prussia, Hanover, and Oldenburg.

WESTPHALIA a province of the Prussian states, bounded W. by the Netherlands, and

E. by Hanover and Hesse-Cassel. It is divided into the districts of Arensburg, Minden, and Munster. It contains an area of 7801 square miles, with 1,317,511 of inhabitants in 1837. The soil in general is not fertile, but large quantities of flax are raised, and the rearing of cattle is carried to a great extent. There are mines of lead, iron, and coal in the mountainous districts, and extensive salt-works in different parts of the province.

WESTPORT, a town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, 8 miles W. of Castlebar.

WESTPORT, a town of Massachusetts, in Bristol county, seated on Buzzard's bay, 24 miles S. of Taunton. Pop. 2820.

WESTRA, one of the Orkney islands, 9 miles long, and from 1 to 3 broad. It has a trade in kelp, and a good harbour for small vessels on the N. W. side; 9 miles N.N.E. of Pomona. Long. 2. 52. W. lat. 69. 8. N.

WESTWATER, a lake in Cumberland, 7 miles N.N.E. of Ravenglass. It is 3 miles long, and above half a mile broad, lying in Wastdale, among the western mountains. The Scares, a very high ridge of mountains, run along the S.E. side of the lake. Its outlet, at the S. end, joins the river Irt, which enters the sea at Ravenglass.

WETHERBY, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday, seated on the Wharfe, over which is a handsome stone bridge; 15 miles W. by S. of York, and 191 N. by W. of London.

WETHERSFIELD, a town in the United States, in the state of Connecticut, famous for its onions, and its state prison. It is situated on the W. bank of the river Connecticut; 4 miles S. of Hartford. Population, 3824.

WETTER, a lake of Sweden, in Gothland, S.E. of the lake Wenner. It is 100 miles in length, and in some places 20 in breadth. Above 40 small streams enter this lake, and its only outlet is the river Motala, which flows E. by Nordkoping into the Baltic.

WETTEREN, a town of Belgium, in the province of East Flanders, on the river Scheldt, with a considerable manufacture of lace, linen, and woollens. It is 7 miles E. of Ghent. Population, 7500.

WETTERAVIA, or WETERAW, a name originally applied to a district of Germany, lying on the banks of the river Wetter, but now so extended as to denote all the country between the Lahn, the Rhine, and the Maine.

WETTIN, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, with a castle on a mountain, seated on the Saal, over which is a ferry; 9 miles N.N.W. of Halle. Pop. 2700.

WETTINGEN, a town of Switzerland, in the county of Baden, celebrated for its wooden bridge, 240 feet long, of a single arch, over the river Limmat. It is 1 mile S. of Baden.

WETZLAR, a town of Germany, in Wetteravia, capital of a county of the same name. It is surrounded by ditches, and wall; flanked with towers. It is seated at the confluence of the Lahn

Frankfurt.

WEVELGHEM, a town of Belgium, in the province of West Flanders, on the river Nederbecke, with a manufacture of dimities. Pop. 3100.

WEVELSBURO, a town and citadel of Westphalia, in the principality of Paderborn; 9 miles S. of Paderborn.

WEXFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 47 miles long and 30 broad; area, 564,479 acres; bounded on the N. by Wicklow, E. by St. George's channel, S. by the Atlantic ocean, W. by Waterford and Kilkenny, and N.W. by Catherlough. It contains 142 parishes, 8 baronies, has two boroughs, and sends two members to parliament. The surface is mountainous, but the soil in general is fertile in corn and grass. The principal rivers are the Barrow and Slaney.

WEXFORD, a borough of Ireland, sending one member to parliament, and capital of the foregoing county. It has a spacious harbour at the mouth of the Slaney, on a bay of St. George's channel, but the water is not deep enough for large vessels. Much woollen cloth is manufactured here, and in the neighbourhood. It is 33 miles E.N.E. of Waterford, and 60 S. of Dublin. Long. 6. 30. W. lat. 52. 22. N.

WEXIO, a town of Sweden, in Smaland, seated on the lake Helga, which contains a group of woody islands. It is a bishop's see, though small. It is 50 miles W. of Culmar.

WEY, a river which rises in Hampshire, flows through Surrey by Godalming and Guildford, and enters the Thames at Weybridge.

WEYBRIDGE, a village in Surrey, seated on the Wey, near its entrance into the Thames, and near the South Western railway; 2 miles E. of Chertsey.

WEYHILL, a village in Hampshire, famous for an annual fair for all kinds of cattle and sheep, leather, hops, cheese, and pedlery. It is one of the largest fairs in England, lasting a week from the 9th October; 3 miles W. of Andover.

WEYMOUTH, a seaport and borough in Dorsetshire, with markets on Tuesday and Friday. It stands on a bay of its name, in the English channel, and on the S. side of the mouth of the Wey, which separates it from the borough of Melcomb Regis. The two boroughs are united as one corporation, returning two members to parliament, governed by a mayor; and the communication between them is by means of a bridge. See MELCOMB REGIS. The harbour is injured by the sand, so that its trade, which was once considerable, is much reduced. This decline is in some degree compensated by the great resort of persons of all ranks for the purpose of sea-bathing, for which it is excellently fitted by its remarkably fine beach; and the royal family, during the reign of George III., frequently visited it. Here is a handsome battery, a royal assembly-room, and an elegant theatre. In the church is a fine altar-piece, executed and presented by Sir James Thornhill, who was born at Melcomb Regis. Near it, at the village of Nottingham, is a famous sulphureous spring. Weymouth is 9 miles S. of Dorchester, and 128 W.S.W. of London. Long. 2. 34. W. lat. 50. 40. N.

WIALLEY, a village, and the largest parish in Lancashire, being 30 miles long and 15 broad; the towns of Burnley, Clitheroe, Haslingden, &c., are within it. The village is 8 miles W.N.W. of Burnley, on the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. Pop. of parish in 1851, 127,458.

WHAMPOA, a town of China, province of Quantung, on an island in the Cantou river. Merchant vessels stop at this town and communicate with Canton by means of boats. It is 45 miles N. of Mueao, and 10 S. of Canton.

WHARNSIDE, the highest mountain in England, in the N.W. part of Yorkshire. Its summit is 4050 feet above the level of the sea.

WHEELING, a city of Virginia, in Ohio county, which participates with Pittsburg in the trade to the western country. Situate at the mouth of a creek on Ohio river, 45 miles S.W. of Pittsburg. Pop. in 1840, 7885.

WHIDAI, a country of Guinea, on the Slave coast, extending about 10 miles along the Atlantic, and 12 miles inland. The country is so populous that one single village contains as many inhabitants as some entire kingdoms on the coast of Guinea. The people, in their manners, have been compared to the Chinese; the same persevering industry, ceremonious civility, jealous affection for their women, and thievish inclinations in trade, prevail in both countries. The fruits are citrons, lemons, oranges, bananas, tamarinds, &c., and there are vast numbers of palm-trees, from which much wine is made. The trade consists chiefly of elephants' teeth, wax, and honey; and the principal manufactures are cloths, umbrellas, baskets, pitchers for pito or beer, plates and dishes of wood, gourds finely ornamented, white and blue paper, &c. In 1727 the king of Dahomy reduced this country to the state of a dependent province. Xavier, or Sabi, is the capital.

WHITBY, a borough and seaport in North Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday. It returns one member to parliament. It has a considerable manufacture of canvas, and a great traffic in the building of ships, and in the carrying business. In the neighbourhood are some large alum works, and lime is also very largely made and sent to the iron works on the Tyne. The principal public buildings are the church, a chapel of ease, several places of worship for dissenters, a town-hall, a dispensary, a library, and a commodious news-room. Its harbour is the best on this coast and has a fine pier; but it has no river communication with the inland country. In 1787 a strong new-built quay, running parallel to a high cliff, fell into the sea, followed by large masses of the cliff. The remains of an abbey church stood on this cliff, and since the above accident several parts have fallen to the ground. Whithy is the birthplace of James Cook, the great circumnavigator. It is seated at the mouth of the Esk; 48 miles N.N.E. of York, and 243 N. of London. Long. 0. 37. W. lat. 54. 30. N.

WHITCHURCH, a town in Hampshire, market on Friday; seated on the Test, near its source; 12 miles N. of Winchester, and 56 W. by S. of London.

WHITCHURCH, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Friday. It is noted for its annual races, and contains a handsome church, several places of worship for dissenters, an excellent free-school, a charity-school, almshouses, &c.; 20 miles N. of Shrewsbury, and 160 N.W. of London.

WHITE, a county of Tennessee, capital, Sparta. Pop. in 1840, 10,747.—Also a county in Indiana; capital, Monticello. Pop. 1832.—Also a county in Illinois; capital, Carmi. Pop. 7919.—Also a county in Arkansas; capital, Searcy. Pop. 929.

WHITE MOUNTAINS, the highest part of a ridge of mountains in the state of New Hampshire. They extend N.E. and S.W., about 20 miles. The highest peak, Mount Washington, is 6234 feet high; Mount Adams, 5328 feet; and Mount Jefferson, 5058 feet above the sea. The snow and ice cover them nine or ten months in the year; and during that time they exhibit the bright appearance from which they are denominated the White Mountains. Until recently they were considered as the highest land in the United States E. of the Rocky Mountains, but it has been ascertained that there are higher peaks in N. Carolina. Although they are 70 miles inland, they are seen many leagues off at sea, and appear like an exceedingly bright cloud in the horizon. Their highest summit is in lat. 44. N.

WHITE SEA, a large bay of the Frozen ocean, on the N. part of Russia, on the E. side of which stands the city of Archangel.

WHITEHALL, (formerly Skenesborough,) a town of New York, in Washington county, at the head of Lake Champlain. It has a considerable trade, and is the great thoroughfare between New York and Montreal; 70 miles N. of Albany. Pop. 3813.

WHITEHAVEN, a borough and seaport in Cumberland, with markets on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. It returns one member to parliament. It is seated on a creek of the Irish sea, on the N. end of a great hill, washed by the tide on the W. side, where there is a large whitish rock and a strong stone wall that secures the harbour. Near it are excellent coal mines, some of which run a considerable way under the sea, and are the chief source of its wealth; but its trade is now extended to foreign parts. Here are yards for ship-building, and extensive canvas manufacture, large roperies, and several copper works. The town is defended by batteries, and has four neat churches, and several meeting-houses. It is 41 miles S.W.

of Carlisle, and 320 N.N.W. of London. It has railways to Carlisle and Furness, &c.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, a celebrated mineral spring and town of Virginia, in Greenbrier county. It has excellent accommodation for its visitors; 205 miles W. by N. of Richmond, 242 from Washington.

WHITHORN, a borough of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, near the bay of Wigton. It contributes, with Wigton, &c., in sending one member to parliament. It is a place of great antiquity, having been a Roman station, and the first bishopric in Scotland; 11 miles S. of Wigton.

WHITESTOWN, a town of New York, in Herkimer county; 53 miles W.N.W. of Canajohary. Pop. 5156.

WHITSTABLE, a town on the coast of Kent, 7 miles N.N.W. of Canterbury. It is a small port, whence Canterbury is supplied with coal, &c. by means of a railroad, and has several trading vessels to London.

WHITSUNDE ISLAND, one of the New Hebrides in the South Pacific; 30 miles long, and 8 broad; discovered by Captain Wallis on Whit-sunday, 1767. Long. 168. 20. E. lat. 15. 44. S.

WHITTLENUY FOREST, a forest in the S. part of Northamptonshire; 9 miles long, and 3 broad. In 1685 the first Duke of Grafton was appointed hereditary ranger of this forest, in which is a fine seat, called Wakefield Lodge.

WIBURG, or VIBORG, an extensive district of Russia, in the government of Finland. It was ceded by the Swedes to the Russians, partly by the peace of Nystadt in 1721, and partly by the treaty of Abo in 1743. Besides pastures, the country produces rye, oats, and barley, but not sufficient for the inhabitants.

WIBURG, a fortified seaport of Russia, capital of the foregoing district, and a bishop's see, with a strong citadel. The houses are almost entirely built of stone. The chief exports are planks, tallow, pitch, and tar. The surrounding country is pleasant; and near it, at Imatra, is the famous cataract of the Woxa, which makes a noise more stunning than that of the Rhine at Lauffen. Wiburg stands on the N.E. point of the gulf of Finland; 100 miles N.N.W. of Petersburg. Long 29. 10. E. lat. 60. 56. N.

WIBURG, a city of Denmark, in North Jutland, capital of a diocese of the same name, and the seat of the chief court of justice in the province. In 1726 the cathedral, a church, the town-house, and the bishop's palace, were destroyed by fire; but they have all been magnificently rebuilt. It is seated on a lake, in a peninsula; 120 miles N. of Sleswick, Long. 9. 50. E. lat. 56. 20. N.

WICK, a borough of Scotland, and the capital of Caithness-shire; united with Cromarty, Dingwall, &c., in sending one member to parliament; with a harbour on an inlet of the German ocean, at the mouth of a river of the same name. Much kelp is made here, but the herring-fisheries are the chief object of importance. It is 55 miles N.E. of Dornoch. Long. 2. 51. W. lat. 58. 21. N.

WICK, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Limburg, seated on the Meuse, opposite Maestricht, with which it communicates by a bridge.

WICK DUERSTEDT, a town of Prussian Westphalia, with two castles; 12 miles N. of Juliers.

WICKLOW, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; 36 miles long, and 25 broad; bounded on the N. by Dublin, E. by the Irish sea, S. by Wexford, W. by Catherlough and Kildare, and N.W. by Kildare. It is divided into 58 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. It is very mountainous and woolly, interspersed with rocks and bogs, but the valleys are fertile and well cultivated, and watered by numerous small rivers.

WICKLOW, the capital of the foregoing county, is seated on the Irish sea, with a narrow harbour, at the mouth of the river Leitrim; 26 miles S.S.E. of Dublin. Long. 6. 12. W. lat. 52. 58. N.

WIDDIN, a fortified town of Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see. It has often been taken and retaken by the Austrians and Turks. It is seated on the Danube; 100 miles N. by W. of Sossa, and 140 E.S.E. of Belgrade. Pop. 20,000. Long. 24. 27. E. lat. 44. 12. N.

WIEN, a county of Germany, at the conflux of the rivers Wied and Rhine. It is composed of two parts, the Upper County, or Wied-Runkel and the Lower County, or Wied-Nienwied. Area, 170 square miles. Pop. 24,000.

WIEN, a town of Germany, in the Lower County of Wied; 9 miles N.N.W. of Coblenz.

WIELUN, a town of Prussian Poland, with a good castle; 16 miles S. of Siradia.

WIELITSKA, a village of Austrian Poland, in Galicia, celebrated for its salt mines, which extend under the whole town, and to a considerable distance on each side. In these mines are several small chapels, excavated in the salt; and many of the inhabitants reside chiefly in the mines. It is 8 miles S.E. of Cracow. Pop. 2200.

WIESENSTEIG, a town of Wirtemberg, with a castle, seated on the Fils; 16 miles W.N.W. of Ulm, and 25 E.S.E. of Stuttgart.

WIESENTHAL, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, with manufactures of iron, steel, and fire-arms, and a considerable trade in leather. It stands on a rivulet of the same name, on the frontiers of Bohemia; 15 miles N. by E. of Carlsbad.

WIGAN, a borough in Lancashire, governed by a mayor; returns two members to parliament. It has bleachworks, brass and machine factories, iron-foundries, and abundance of coal. The staple manufacture of the town is that of cotton, and, more recently, of silks. The parish church has been elegantly restored. There is also a town-hall, 2 Roman Catholic chapels, meeting-houses for dissenters, a free school, a blue-coat school, a school of industry, a dispensary, a mechanics' institute, &c. The town is lighted by gas, and is well supplied with water. In the neighbourhood are extensive iron-works, and a mineral spring, similar in nature with that of Harrogate. Cannel coal is peculiar to this parish, and, besides its utility, is formed into toys, &c. The old parish has been subdivided into several new ones, each with its church. In 1650 a battle was fought here between the forces of Charles I. and those of the parliament, in which the latter were victorious; the Earl of Derby, who commanded the former, being then taken prisoner, and afterwards beheaded. Wigan is situated on the rivulet Douglas, which is made navigable to the Ribbles, and joins a canal from Liverpool, and on the N. the Union and other railways. It is 39 miles S. of Lancaster, and 196 N.N.W. of London.

WIGHT, an island in the English Channel on the S. coast of Hampshire, from which it is separated by a narrow strait. It is about 21 miles in length, and 13 in breadth, and is nearly divided into two equal parts by the river Medina, or Cowes, which, rising in the southern angle, enters at the northern into the channel, opposite the mouth of Southampton bay. The S. coast is bordered with very steep cliffs of chalk and free-stone, hollowed into caverns in various parts. The S.E. face of the island is called the Undercliff, and is the part much frequented by summer visitors. The W. side is fenced with ridges of rocks of which the most remarkable are those called the Needles. Between the island and the main are various sand-banks, especially off the E. part, where is the safe road of St. Helens. Across the island from E. to W. runs a ridge of hills, forming a tract of fine downs, with a chalky or marly soil, which feeds a great number of rabbits and fine fleeced sheep. To the N. of this ridge the land is chiefly pasture; to the S. of it is a rich arable country, producing great crops of corn. The variety of prospects which this island affords, its mild air, and the neat manner in which the fields are laid out, render it a very delightful spot. It is devoted almost entirely to husbandry, and has no manufactures of any consequence. Among its products are to be reckoned a pure white pipe-clay, and a fine white crystalline sand, of the latter of which great quantities are exported for the use of the glass-works of various parts. The other articles of export are wheat, flour, barley, malt, and salt. Its principal town is Newport. It returns one member to parliament.

WIGTON, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Tuesday, and manufactures of linen and cotton; also an extensive calico-printing establishment, and a hat manufactory. Besides the parish church, which is a neat structure, here are meeting-houses for Independents, Quakers, and Methodists; also a free grammar-school, Brookfield school, established by the Quakers in 1826, and an hospital for six clergymen's widows. It is seated among the moors, on the Maryport and Carlisle railway; 12 miles S.W. of Carlisle, and 304 N.N.W. of London.

WIGTON, a borough and seaport of Scotland, capital of Wigtonshire. It sends one member to parliament, with Whithorn, &c. Here are manufactures of woollen and cotton, the former chiefly of plaids and flannel. It is situate on a hill which overlooks the bay of Wigton; 105 miles S.S.W. of Edinburgh.

WIGTONSHIRE, or WEST GALLOWAY, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by Ayrshire, N.E. by Kirkebrightshire, and on all other sides by the Irish sea. Its greatest extent, in any direction, does not exceed 30 miles, and its figure is very irregular. It is divided into 17 parishes. It returns one member to parliament. The bays of Luce and Ryan extend inland, forming by their approximation a peninsula, called the Rhyns of Galloway. The principal rivers are the Luce, Cree, and Bladenoch. The coast is tolerably fertile, but the interior and northern parts are mountainous, fit only for the pasturage of sheep and black cattle, and a small breed of horses called Galloways.

WILHACS, a frontier town of European Turkey, in Bosnia, seated on a lake formed by the river Unna; 40 miles S.E. of Carlstadt, and 220 W. of Belgrade. Long. 16. 10. E. lat. 45. 34. N.

WILDBAD, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, with a celebrated warm-bath, seated on the Enz; 24 miles W. of Stuttgart.

WILDBERG, a town of Wirtemberg, situate on the Nagold; 19 miles S.W. of Stuttgart.

WILDBERG, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg; 28 miles N. of Brandenburg.

WILDESHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Oldenburg, seated on the Hunte; 20 miles S.W. of Bremen. Long. 8. 27. E. lat. 52. 53. N.

WILDUNGEN, a town of Germany, in the county of Waldeck, with a castle. Near it are mineral springs, and mines of copper, iron, and lead. It is 14 miles S.S.E. of Corbach.

WILHELMSTEIN, a fortress of Germany, in the county of Schaumburg, on an island formed of stones sunk for the purpose, in Steinhudermere. It was erected in 1768, by William, count of Schaumburg-Lippe, for the improvement of his new inventions in the art of war. It stands near the town of Steinhude, 18 miles W.N.W. of Hanover.

WILKES, a town of North Carolina, capital of a county of its name, seated on the Yadkin, near its source; 50 miles W. of Morgantown.

WILKESBARRE (formerly Wyoming), a town of Pennsylvania, chief of Luzerne county, on the E. branch of the Susquehanna; 118 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. Pop. 1718.

WILLIAM, PORT, a fort of Scotland, in the county of Inverness, at the extremity of Loch Linne, where that arm of the sea bends to the W. and forms Loch Eil. It is of a triangular figure. It is 64 miles S.W. of Inverness.

WILLIAM HENRY, a town of Lower Canada, situate at the conflux of the Sorel with the St. Lawrence. It has a Protestant and a Roman catholic church. The principal channel of intercourse with this country and the United States is through this town. It is 40 miles N.E. of Montreal, and 120 S.W. of Quebec. Long. 73. 22. W. lat. 45. 55. N.

WILLIAMSBURG, a town of New York, opposite the N.E. part of the city of New York, to which it is closely allied, as there many of its inhabitants do business. Pop. in 1840, 5094.

WILLIAMSBURG, a town of Virginia, formerly the capital of that state. The college of William and Mary is fixed here, but since the removal of the seat of government, this and other public buildings are much decayed. It is situate between two creeks; 60 miles E. S.E. of Richmond. Pop. about 1600. Long. 77. 3. W. lat. 37. 10. N.

WILLIAMSPORT, a town of Maryland, in Washington county, seated on the Potomac, at the mouth of Conegocheaque creek; 6 miles S.W. of Elizabethtown, and 71 N.N.W. of Washington. The Franklin railroad from Chambersburg terminates here.

WILLIAMSTADT, a strong seaport of the Netherlands, in North Brabant, built by William I., prince of Orange, in 1585. It is well built, has a good harbour, and stands on that part of the Meuse called Butterflic; 15 miles W.N.W. of Breda. Long. 4. 30. E. lat. 51. 30. N.

WILLIAMSTON, a town of Massachusetts, in Berkshire county, with a flourishing seminary called William's College, in honour of its liberal founder. It is 28 miles N. of Lenox, and 140 W.N.W. of Boston. Pop. 2153.

WILLIS ISLE, a rocky island at the N. end of the island of Southern Georgia. It was discovered in 1775, and contained the nests of many thousands of shags. Long. 38. 50. W. lat. 54. 0. S.

WILLISAU, a town and bailiwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucern, seated among mountains on the river Wiger; 16 miles W. N.W. of Lucern.

WILMANSTRAND, a town of Russia, in the government of Finland; near which an obstinate battle was fought in 1741, between 3000 Swedes and 16,000 Russians, when the former were obliged at length to yield to superiority of numbers. It is seated on the S. side of the lake Saima; 40 miles N.N.W. of Wiburg, and 100 N.N.W. of Petersburg.

WILMINGTON, a town of North Carolina, chief of New Hanover county, and of the district of its name. It has a considerable trade to the West Indies. It stands on the N.E.

branch of Cape Fear river; 34 miles from the sea, and 90 S.S.W. of Newbern. Pop. 4744.

WILMINGTON, a city and seaport of Delaware, in Newcastle county. Here are 16 edifices for public worship. Almost the whole of the foreign exports of Delaware are from this place. It is situated on the N. side of Christiana creek; 2 miles W. of the river Delaware, and 28 S.W. of Philadelphia. Pop. 8367. Long. 75. 40. W. lat. 39. 43. N.

WILMA, a government of European Russia, comprising the N. part of Lithuania, and containing an area of 24,500 square miles, with about 1,600,000 of inhabitants.

WILMSLOW, a manufacturing village of Cheshire, 12 miles S. of Manchester, on the L. & N. W. railway. The fine air, &c., has attracted many residents. Pop. in 1851, 4972.

WILNA, a town of Russia, capital of the foregoing government, and a bishop's see, with a university, an ancient castle, and a royal palace. It stands on several little eminences, and has two considerable suburbs, called Antokollo and Radziska. Here are upwards of 40 churches, and the magnificent one belonging to the castle has a very rich treasury. In 1743 a dreadful conflagration destroyed 13 churches; and in 1749 another fire happened by lightning, which consumed six churches; besides these, the Jewish synagogue, the council-house, 33 palaces, numerous stone edifices, and other buildings were destroyed. The churches have been rebuilt, and some of them in a more elegant manner than before; but the city has not recovered its former grandeur. Wilna was taken by the Russians in 1794, and, with its territory, annexed to that empire. The French took possession of it in 1812, but evacuated it the same year. It is seated on the Vilia; 180 miles E. of Konigsberg, and 240 N.E. of Warsaw. Pop. 54,499. Long. 25. 28. E. lat. 54. 41. N.

WILSDORF, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, near which the Saxons were defeated by the Prussians in 1745. It is 9 miles W. of Dresden.

WILTON, a borough in Wiltshire, with a manufacture of carpets and thin woollen stuffs. It returns one member to parliament. It was formerly the capital of the county, but is now much reduced. Here is Wilton House, the magnificent seat of the earl of Pembroke, in which is a celebrated collection of antiques. One of the largest sheep fairs in the W. of England is held here on September 12. Wilton is seated between the rivers Willy and Nadder; three miles W. by N. of Salisbury, and 85 W. by S. of London.

WILTSHIRE, a county of England, 53 miles long, and 38 broad; bounded on the E. by Berkshire and Hampshire, S. by Hampshire and Dorsetshire, W. by Somersetshire, and N.W. and N. by Gloucestershire. It contains 869,620 acres, is divided into 28 hundreds and 304 parishes, and sends 4 members to parliament for the N. and S. divisions of the county. The air is sharp on the hills in winter, but is mild during that season in the vales. The land in the N. parts is generally hilly and woody, but affords excellent pasture for cattle; and here is made the N. Wiltshire cheese, so much esteemed. In the S. the soil is rich and fertile; in the middle it chiefly consists of downs, that afford the best pasture for sheep; and in the valleys, which divide the downs, are corn fields and rich meadows. Its principal commodities are sheep, wool, wood, and stone; of this last there are excellent quarries on the banks of the Nadder, where some of the stones are 23 yards in length, and four in thickness, without a flaw. The chief manufactures are the different branches of the clothing trade. The principal rivers are the Upper and Lower Avon, the Nadder, Willy, Bourne, and Kennet. Salisbury is the capital.

WIMBLEDON, a village in Surrey, on an elevated heath, 7 miles S.W. of London. On the S.W. angle of the common is a circular encampment, including seven acres—the trench very deep and perfect.

WIMBORNE, or WIMBORNE MINSTER, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Friday. It had a monastery, in which were interred the W. Saxon kings Ethelred and Sigeforth, and queen Ethelburga. Its noble church, called the Minster, was formerly collegiate. The town is seated between the Stour and Allen; 6 miles N. of Poole, 100 S.W. of London.

WIMMIS, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, seated on the Sibnen. It is 18 miles S. of Bern.

WIMPFEN, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, consisting properly of two towns, called Wimpfen on the Hill, and Wimpfen in the Vale. A salt-work was established here in 1761. It is seated on the Neckar; 8 miles N. of Heilbron, and 22 E. of Heidelberg.

WINCAUNTON, or WINCANTON, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Wednesday, and manufactures of ticking, dowlas, serges, &c., and a considerable trade in cheese. It is 24 miles S. of Bath, and 108 W. by S. of London.

WINCOMBEE, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Saturday. It was formerly noted for its abbey, whose mitred abbot sat in parliament. Near the town is the ruin of Sudeley castle, where Catherine Parr, queen of Henry VIII., and afterwards wife to Sir Thomas Seymour, died in childbed, not without suspicion of poison. It is 15 miles N.E. of Gloucester, and 99 N.N.W. of London.

WINCHELSEA, a town in Sussex, an appendage to the cinque ports, market on Saturday. It is seated on a rocky cliff, and now included in the borough of Rye. It has several interesting antiquities; 4 miles S.W. of Rye, and 64 S.E. of London.

WINCHESTER, a city in Hampshire, governed by a mayor, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. It is one mile and a half in circumference, and has ten churches, besides the cathedral, in which were interred several Saxon kings and queens, whose bones were collected by bishop Fox, put into six small gilded coffins, and placed on a wall in the S. side of the choir. In this cathedral is the marble coffin of William Rufus. The principal parochial church, St. Maurice, was rebuilt by subscription in 1840. There are also several meeting-houses for dissenters, and a Roman Catholic chapel. On a fine eminence, overlooking the city, stood the castle, which was taken from Charles I., and afterwards demolished, except the magnificent hall, in which the assizes are now held. Near the site of this castle is the shell of a palace built by Charles II., but never finished: some years since, a part of it was fitted up for the reception of prisoners of war. In the vicinity is St. Mary's College, founded by William of Wykeham, for a warden, 70 scholars, 10 fellows, &c., with exhibitions for New College, Oxford; and contiguous to it is a spacious quadrangular edifice for commoners or gentlemen not on the foundation. At the S. end of the city is the hospital of St. Cross, founded by a bishop of this see, for a master, nine poor brethren, and four out-pensioners. All travellers who call at this hospital have a right to demand some bread and beer, which is always brought to them. Near the E. gate of the city is St. John's hospital, in the hall of which the corporation gave their entertainments. Winchester was of great note in the time of the Saxons, and here Egbert was crowned the first sole monarch of England. Here Henry II. held a parliament, king John resided, Henry III. was born, Richard II. held a parliament, and Henry IV. was married, as was also Mary I. Winchester is seated on the river Itchen, which is navigable hence to Southampton; 21 miles N.W. of Chichester, and 62 W. by N. of London. Long. 1. 12. W. lat. 51. 4. N.

WINCHESTER, a town of Virginia, capital of Frederick county. It has 13 edifices for public worship, and has a railroad to Harper's ferry, connecting it with the Baltimore railroad. Its trade is extensive. It is 70 miles W.N.W. of Washington. Pop. 3454. Long. 78. 34. E. lat. 39. 15. N.

WINDAU, a seaport of Russia, in the government of Courland, with a castle. The exports are pitch, tar, wax, &c., and some ships are built here. It stands at the mouth of a river of the same name, in the Baltic; 76 miles N.W. of Mittau, and 100 N. by E. of Memel. Population, 1000. Long. 21. 50. E. lat. 57. 15. N.

WINDERMERE, or WINANDERMERE, the most extensive lake in England, lying between Westmoreland and Lancashire. It extends 15 miles from N. to S. but is not more than a mile broad. It is famous for its fine char, and abundance of trout, perch, pike, and eel. Its principal feeders are the rivers Rothay and Brathay, and its outlet the river Leven. This lake is intersected by several promontories, and spotted with islands. Among these, the Hohne, or Great island, an oblong tract of 30 acres, crosses the lake in a diagonal line, surrounded by a number of inferior isles. There is a railway hence to Kendal.

WINDHAM, a town of Connecticut, in a county of its name, seated on the Shetucket. 31 miles E. of Hartford. Pop. of the county, 28,080; of the town, 3832.

WINDLENGEN, a town of the kingdom of Wirtemberg, seated on the Lauter; 12 miles S.E. of Stuttgart.

WINDSBACH, a town and castle of Germany, in the district of Anspach, on the Rednitz; 10 miles S.E. of Anspach.

WINDSHEIM, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, surrounded with ramparts which servo for a promenade. It is seated on the Aisch; 30 miles S.E. of Wurtzburg, and 32 S.S.W. of Bamberg. Pop. 4500.

WINDSOR, a borough in Berkshire, seated on an eminence, on the Thames, with a market on Saturday. It has been a royal demesne ever since the time of William the Conqueror, who received it from the hands of the abbot of Westminster, in exchange for lands in Essex. The picturesque beauty of its scenery, its noble forest, and the interesting historical associations connected with the vicinity, all combine to confer upon it peculiar attractions; but it owes its chief celebrity to its magnificent castle, the favourite residence of a long line of kings. This castle stands upon a high hill, which rises from the town by a gentle ascent; and its fine terrace, faced with a rampart of free-stone, 1870 feet in length, is one of the noblest walks in Europe, with respect to strength, grandeur, and prospects. It was built originally by William the Conqueror, and enlarged by Henry I. Edward III. (who was born in it) caused the greater part of the edifice to be taken down and rebuilt in its present form. Great additions were made to it by Edward IV., Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth. Charles II. enlarged the windows and made them regular, furnished the royal apartments with paintings, enlarged the terrace walk on the N. side, and carried it round the E. and S. sides. After the accession of the illustrious House of Brunswick, and in particular during the reign of George III., splendid improvements were made; and under George IV. it assumed its present grand and magnificent appearance. It has undergone many improvements by William IV., and her present majesty. The castle is divided into two large courts, separated from each other by the round tower allotted for the residence of the governor. On the N. side of the upper court are the state apartments, on the E. the private apartments of his late majesty, and on the S. the suite of rooms set apart for the officers of state. In the centre of the court is an equestrian statue of Charles II. The royal apartments are adorned with a splendid collection of paintings, chiefly formed by George IV., and the royal chapel is embellished with a variety of superb carvings, by the celebrated Gibbons. In the lower ward of the castle is

St. George's chapel, an elegant and highly finished structure of pointed architecture, begun by Edward III. in 1437, in honour of the order of the garter. Edward IV. enlarged the design, and it was completed and embellished as it is now seen, during the reign of Henry VIII. The interior architecture is greatly admired, particularly its stone roof, the whole of which was repaired and beautified in 1790. In this chapel are interred Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VIII., and his queen Jane Seymour, and Charles I.; and here also is the new royal cemetery commenced by George III., under the direction of the late James Wyatt, the entire dimensions of which are 70 feet long, 28 wide, and 14 deep. The cemetery has already received the remains of the princess Amelia, the duchess of Brunswick, the princess Charlotte, queen Charlotte, George III., the duke of York, the duke of Kent, George IV., and William IV. Connected with the chapel is the charitable institution of the poor knights of Windsor, who receive a yearly allowance of about £40, and blue cloaks embroidered with the cross of St. George. Opposite the S.E. side of the castle is a mansion called the Queen's Lodge; and below this is the Lower Lodge, for the accommodation of the younger branches of the royal family. Adjoining the Queen's Lodge is the little park, which extends round the E. and N. sides of the castle, and forms a beautiful lawn, 4 miles in circumference. On the S. side of the town is the great park, which is 14 miles in circumference. From that part of the castle called the round tower, the eye embraces one of the most noble and extensive prospects in England; for not fewer than 12 counties may be discerned with the naked eye; while the landscape presents every combination of picturesque beauty. The Thames, winding its serene and majestic course amidst green and luxuriant foliage, which forms the most agreeable and refreshing shade—the vivid green, or deeper brown shades of the forest—hamlets, villas, and hills—all combine to present to the beholder a rural panorama of unrivalled brilliancy and effect. In the interior of the tower is a guard-chamber filled with various kinds of warlike weapons and ancient armour, among which are the coats of mail said to have been worn by John King of France, and David of Scotland, both of whom are known to have been prisoners in the castle. Windsor is governed by a corporation of 30 brethren, 10 of whom are called aldermen, and the rest benchers and burgesses. From the former of these are annually elected a mayor and justice, and two bailiffs from the latter. It received its first charter from Edward I., and its last from William III. It returns two members to parliament. The parish church is an ancient gothic edifice, and contains monuments of great interest to the antiquary. The guildhall is a stately edifice, containing several noble apartments, and is decorated chiefly with portraits of the English sovereigns. Here are also many handsome buildings, a free-school, almshouses, and other charities, &c. It is 17 miles E. by N. of Reading, and 22 W. of London. Long. 0. 36. W. lat. 51. 30. N.

WITZENHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, seated on the Werra, 18 miles E. by N. of Cassel.

WIVELISCOMB, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable manufacture of blanketing, kerseys, and other coarse cloths. It stands on the Thone, 20 miles N. of Exeter, and 153 W. by S. of London.

WIVENHOE, a village in Essex, seated on the Coln, 3 miles S.E. of Colchester, of which it is the port. The Colchester oysters are chiefly barrelled at this place.

WLADISLAW, a town of Poland, capital of a palatinate of its name, and of the province of Cujavia, with a fort. It stands on the Vistula, 98 miles W.N.W. of Warsaw. Long. 18. 50. E. lat. 52. 54. N.

WOAHOO, or OHAI, one of the Sandwich islands, 7 leagues N.W. of Morotoi. From the appearance of the N.E. and N.W. parts, it is the finest island of the group. A bay is formed by the N. and W. extremities, into which a fine river flows, through a deep valley; but the water is brackish for 200 yards from the entrance. It is supposed to contain 60,000 inhabitants. Lient. Hergest, who had been sent from England in 1791, with a supply of provisions for Captain Vancouver, then on a voyage of discovery, was here surprised and murdered by the natives, together with Mr. Gooch, the astronomer. Long. 157. 51. W lat. 21. 43. N.

WOBURN, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Friday. It had an ancient abbey, on the site of which stands the magnificent building called Woburn Abbey, the seat of the Duke of Bedford. The town was burnt down in 1724, but was subsequently rebuilt with considerable improvement. Near it is found great plenty of fuller's earth. It is 12 miles S. of Bedford, and 42 N.N.W. of London.

WODNIAN, a town of Bohemia, seated on the Bianitz; 12 miles S. of Piseck.

WOERDEN, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland, seated on the Rhine, 10 miles W. of Utrecht.

WOKEY, or ORKEY, a village in Somersetshire, on the S. side of the Mendip hills, 2 miles W. of Wells. Here is a famous cavern, called Woky Hole, the mouth of which is only six feet high, but it soon expands into a spacious vault, 80 feet in height, the roof composed of pendent rocks, whence a clear water, of a petrifying quality, continually drops. From this grotto a narrow passage descends to another of less height; and beyond a second narrow passage is a third grotto. The extremity is above 200 yards from the entrance.

WOKING, a village in Surrey, on the river Wey, 5 miles N.N.E. of Guildford, near the South Western railroad. In the manor-house here died Margaret Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII.

WOKINGHAM, or OAKINGHAM, a corporate town in Berkshire, with a market on Tuesday, noted for its great supply of poultry. Here all the courts of Windsor Forest were formerly held, and 4 miles to the S.E. are vestiges of some Roman entrenchments called Cæsar's Camp. It is 7 miles E.S.E. of Reading, and 31 W. by S. of London.

WOLAŃ, a strong town of Prussian Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a fine castle, many handsome buildings, and a great woollen manufacture. It is seated near the Oder, surrounded by a morass, 20 miles N.W. of Breslau. Pop. of the principality, 50,000, and of the town, 1300. Long. 16. 45. E. lat. 51. 18. N.

WOLBECK, a town of the Prussian states, in the government of Munster, 7 miles S.S.W. of Munster.

WOLDECK, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg, 21 miles E.N.E. of Srelitz.

WOLFACH, a town of Baden, on a river of the same name, at its confluence with the Kinzig, 19 miles N.E. of Friburg.

WOLFENBUTTEL, a principality of Germany, which constitutes part of the duchy of Brunswick. It is divided into two parts by the principalities of Hildesheim and Halberstadt: the northern borders on the duchies of Lunenburg and Magdeburg; the southern lies between the principality of Hildesheim, the abbey of Corvey, and the county of Wernigerode. The N. part produces abundance of grass, grain, flax, hemp, silk, and various kinds of pulse and fruit. The S. part is hilly, and has little arable land, but yields plenty of timber and iron, and has manufactures of glass and fine porcelain, with a very rich mine and salt works in the Harz Forest. The principal rivers are the Weser, Leine, and Ocker. The established religion is the Lutheran.

WOLFENBUTTEL, a strong city of Germany, capital of the foregoing principality. It has a castle, formerly the residence of the dukes, in which is an excellent library, with a cabinet of curiosities relating to natural history. In the principal church is the burial-place of the princes, which is an admirable piece of architecture. Wolfenbuttel is seated in a marshy soil, on the Ocker, 7 miles S. by W.

of Brunswick, and 30 W. of Halberstadt. Pop. 8500. Long. 10. 45. E. lat. 52. 10. N.

WOLFERSDIXE, a small island of the Netherlands, in Zealand, between N. and S. Beveland.

WOLFSBERG, a town of Austrian Illyria, in Carinthia, with a castle, seated on the Levant, at the foot of a mountain, 26 miles E.N.E. of Clagenfurt.

WOLGA. See VOLGA.

WOLGAST, a seaport of Prussia, in Pomerania, with one of the best harbours on the Baltic. Only the tower of its ancient castle is now standing. It is seated on the Peene, or W. channel of the Oder, 54 miles N.W. of Stettin. Pop. 4000. Long. 13. 52. E. lat. 54. 4. N.

WOLKENSTEIN, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Erzgebirg, with a castle on a rock, seated near the Zschopa, 15 miles S.S.E. of Chemnitz.

WOLKOMYSK, a town of Prussia, in the government of Grodno, seated on the Ros, 23 miles S.E. of Grodno.

WOLLIN, a fortified town of Pomerania, capital of a fertile island of the same name, between the two eastern branches of the Oder. It is seated on the Diwenow, 12 miles S.W. of Camin, and 30 N. of Stettin. Long. 14. 40. E. lat. 53. 50. N.

WOLMIRSTADT, a town of Prussian Saxony, in Magdeburg, on the river Ohra, 19 miles N. of Magdeburg.

WOLRINGHAM, a town in the county of Durham, with a market on Tuesday, situated on the Wear, amid mines of lead and coal; 16 miles W. of Durham, and 257 N.N.W. of London; a branch to the Stockton railway.

WOLVERTON, a new village, for the works of the London and North Western Railway Company; 5½ miles from London.

WOLVERHAMPTON, a borough in Staffordshire, with a market on Wednesday. It returns two members to parliament. It has a collegiate church, annexed to the deanery of Windsor, 3 other churches of modern erection, and 13 others in the district, and several meeting-houses for dissenters, and one for Roman Catholics. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is seated in a district abounding in coal, iron, and limestone, and has long been celebrated for the manufacture of locks, which is carried on to a great extent, and also manufactures of various kinds of iron, brass, steel, and tin goods, japanned and paper wares, &c. The town is well supplied with gas, and has within the last few years undergone considerable improvements in other respects. It is seated on a hill, nearly encompassed by canals, and on the Grand Junction railway, 16 miles S. of Stafford, and 122 N.W. of London.

WOODBIDGE, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday, seated on the E. side of a sandy hill on the river Deben, 8 miles from the sea. It has docks for building ships, convenient wharfs, and a great corn trade; 7

WOODBIDGE, a town of New Jersey, in Middlesex county, 3 miles N. by W. of Amboy. Pop. 3969.

WOODBURY, a town of New Jersey, chief of Gloucester county, situate near the Delaware, 9 miles S. of Philadelphia.

WOODCHESTER, a village in Gloucestershire, 2 miles S. of Stroud. It has a broadcloth and a silk manufacture. A great tessellated pavement and other splendid Roman antiquities have been discovered here.

WOODS, LAKE OF THE, a lake of North America, 90 miles long, and 30 where broadest, but very irregular in its shape. It lies between the Winnipeg and lake Superior, chiefly in Upper Canada, but the S. part is in the territory of the United States. The lands on its banks are covered with oaks, pines, firs, &c.

WOODSTOCK, a borough in Oxfordshire, market on Tuesday and Friday. It is chiefly noted for Blenheim-house, built at the expense of the nation for the Duke of Marlborough, in memory of his signal victory over the French and Bavarians in 1704. In Blenheim park originally stood a royal palace, the favourite retreat of several kings of England till the reign of Charles I., when it was almost wholly in ruins. In this palace king Ethelred held a parliament, and here Alfred the Great translated Boetius de Consolatione Philosophia. It was beautified by Henry I., became the residence of Rosamond, mistress of Henry II.; Edmund, second son of Edward I., and Edward, eldest son of Edward III., were born here; and here the princess Elizabeth was confined by her sister Mary. After the building of Blenheim every trace of the ancient edifice was removed, and two elms were planted on its site. Woodstock has a manufacture of gloves, and of steel watch chains. The poet Chaucer was born, lived, and died here. It is 8 miles N.W. of Oxford, and 62 W.N.W. of London.

WOODSTOCK, a town of Virginia, chief of Shenandoah county, on a branch of Shenandoah river, 24 miles S.S.W. of Winchester, and 80 W.N.W. of Alexandria.

WOODSTOCK, a town of Vermont, capital of Windsor county, seated on the Water-queechy, 14 miles N.W. of Windsor. Pop. about 1000.

WOOLER, a town in Northumberland, with a market on Thursday. In a plain near this town the Scots were defeated on Holyrood day, 1402, and the battle was so bloody, that it gave the name of Redgriggs to the place where it was fought. Wooller is seated on the river Till, near the Cheviot hills, 14 miles S. of Berwick, and 317 N. by W. of London.

WOOLWICH, a town of Kent, with a market on Friday. It is the most ancient military and naval arsenal in England, and has a royal dock-yard, where men-of-war were built as early as the reign of Henry VIII. It has now been made the principal dock-yard for the steam navy, and large men-of-war will no longer be built here. At the eastern part of the town is the royal arsenal, in which are vast magazines of artillery and every necessary equipment for army or navy; a foundry, with three furnaces, for casting ordnance; and a laboratory, where fireworks and cart-ridges are made, for the public service. A little to the S. of the arsenal are extensive artillery barracks, for the accommodation of the officers and privates; and a little further S. a royal military academy, where the mathematics are taught, and cadets instructed in the military art. The parish church is a spacious brick edifice, the interior of which is elegantly fitted up in the Grecian style. Here are also not fewer than 12 meeting-houses for the several denominations of dissenters. Woolwich is seated on the Thames, which is here so deep that large ships may at all times ride with safety. It is 8 miles E. of London.

WOOSUNG, a small port of China at the mouth of the river of the same name, and is the outer port to the city of Shanghai, 25 miles up the same river. The village itself is poor, and was one of the points most fiercely attacked and defended in the Chinese war. At present it is chiefly known to Europeans as the station where the opium is smuggled into China, to Shanghai and all other parts. Long. 120. 40. E. lat. 31. 28. N.

WORCESTER, a town of Massachusetts, capital of a county of its name, and the largest inland town of New England. It has manufactures of pot and pearl ash, cotton and linen goods, and some other articles. It is situate in a healthy vale; and on the Boston and Albany railroad, which renders it one of the greatest thoroughfares in the country; 45 miles W. by S. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 7497. Long. 71. 55. W. lat. 42. 20. N.

WORCESTER, one of the most ancient and respectable cities of England; the capital of Worcestershire, and a bishop's see, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It contains twelve churches, besides the cathedral, also a number of meeting-houses for various sectaries, as well as Roman Catholics. Edgar's Tower, a strong portal, is part of its ancient castle; here are also three grammar-schools, seven hospitals, a public infirmary, and a well-contrived quay. Worcester is governed by a mayor, carries on a considerable trade in hops, carpets, and gloves, has a large manufacture of elegant china ware, manufactures of fine lace, extensive iron-foundries, distillery, &c. It returns two members to parliament. Here Cromwell, in 1651, obtained a victory over the Scotch army which had marched into England to reinstate Charles II., who, after this defeat, escaped with great difficulty into France. Worcester is seated on the Severn; 36 miles N.N.E. of Bristol, and 111 W.N.W. of London. Long. 2. 0. W. lat. 52. 9. N.

WORCESTERSHIRE, a county of England,

44 miles long, and 24 broad; bounded on the N. by Shropshire and Staffordshire, E. by Warwickshire, S.E. and S. by Gloucestershire, and W. by Herefordshire. It contains 462,720 acres, is divided into five hundreds and 152 parishes, and sends four members to parliament for the eastern and western divisions of the county. The soil in the vales and meadows is very rich, particularly the vale of Evesham, which is styled the granary of these parts. The hills have generally an easy ascent, except the Malvern Hills in the S.W. part of the county, which feed large flocks of sheep. The other hills are the Licky, near Bromsgrove, towards the N., and the Bredon Hills, towards the S.E. Here are plenty of fruits of most sorts, especially pears, which are in many places found growing in the hedges. The commerce and manufactures are considerable. The chief exports are coal, corn, hops, cloth, cheese, cider, perry, and salt. The principal rivers are the Severn, Tems, and Avon.

WONCUM, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland, seated on the S. side of the Meuse, just below the influx of the Waal; 8 miles N.N.W. of Heusdon.

WONCUM, a town of the Netherlands, in Friesland; 18 miles S.W. of Lewarden.

WORDINGBORO, a seaport of Denmark, on the S. coast of the island of Zealand, from which there is a much-frequented passage to the islands Falster and Laland. It is 46 miles S.S.W. of Copenhagen. Long. 11. 58. E. lat. 55. 3. N.

WORKINGTON, a seaport in Cumberland, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday, seated at the mouth of the Derwent, on the coast of the Irish sea. The river admits vessels of 400 tons burden, and the harbour is commodious. Here are two churches belonging to the establishment, and several meeting-houses for dissenters. This was the landing-place of Mary queen of Scots, when she was driven to take refuge in England. In the neighbourhood are a large iron-foundry, some salt-works, and numerous collieries. The principal manufactures are canvas and cordage, but the coal trade is its chief support. It is 7 miles W. by S. of Cockermouth, and 312 N.N.W. of London. Long. 3. 27. W. lat. 54. 31. N.

WORKSOP, a town in Nottinghamshire, with a market on Wednesday. Here was once an abbey, of which the church still remains. On the W. side of the town is a circular hill, which was the site of a castle. Quantities of liquorice are grown in its vicinity. Two miles to the S.E. is Clumber Park, the seat of the duke of Newcastle. The canal from Chesterfield to the Trent passes near this town. It is 22 miles N.W. of Newark, and 146 N. by W. of London.

WORMS, a city of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, formerly the capital of a princely bishopric of the same name. It is famous for diets held in 1122 and 1521, at which last Luther assisted in person. The cathedral is magnificent, and the principal Lutheran church has a beautiful altar and fine paintings. In the war of 1689 it was taken by the French, who almost reduced it to ashes. In 1743 a treaty was concluded here between Great Britain, Hungary, and Sardinia. In 1792 Worms surrendered to the French, who were obliged to evacuate it the next year, after the loss of Mentz; but it was again taken by them in 1794. It is seated on the Rhine; 27 miles S.S.W. of Mentz. Pop. 8500. Long. 8. 28. E. lat. 49. 36. N.

WORSLEY, a town in Lancashire, celebrated for the immense quantity of coal in its vicinity, and for being the place where the duke of Bridgewater first commenced his canal navigation. It is 6 miles N.N.W. of Manchester.

WORSTEAD, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday. This place is noted for the introduction of that sort of twisted yarn called worsted; and was formerly a place of considerable trade, though now reduced to a mere village. It is 12 miles N. of Norwich, and 121 N.E. of London.

WORTHING, a town in Sussex, on the coast, 11 miles W. of Brighton; like which, it has, from an obscure fishing village, become a fashionable watering-place. It is pleasantly seated, and has fine sands, and is much frequented for sea-bathing. It possesses a theatre, good libraries, and some spacious hotels, though it cannot boast of the gaieties and grandeur of its proud neighbour. There is also a considerable fishery off the town; 56 miles from London.

WORTHINGTON, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampshire county; 19 miles W. by N. of Northampton.

WOTTON BASSET, a town in Wiltshire, market on Tuesday. It is a mean town, formerly sending two members to parliament; 12 miles N.W. of Marlborough, and 88 W. of London.

WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, a town in Gloucestershire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Friday, and extensive manufactures of cloth. It is seated under a fertile eminence; 20 miles N.E. of Bristol, and 109 W.N.W. of London.

WRAGBY, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday; 11 miles E.N.E. of Lincoln, and 143 N. of London.

WRATH CAPE, a promontory of Scotland, in Sutherlandshire, which is the N.W. point of Great Britain. Against its rugged and lofty cliffs the rapid tide bursts with incredible fury. Long. 4. 47. W. lat. 58. 34. N.

WREKIN, a noted hill or mountain in Shropshire, 8 miles E.S.E. of Shrewsbury. It was a famous station of the Romans, and its height is reckoned 1200 feet.

WRENTHAM, a town of Massachusetts, in Norfolk county; 30 miles S.S.W. of Boston.

WREXHAM, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire, with markets on Monday and Thursday. It is a great mart for flannel, and a place of considerable traffic. Here is a large church, a beautiful specimen of the florid gothic, with a lofty steeple; also two large meeting-houses, and a well-endowed free-school. Near Wrexham is a foundry, and the adjacent country affords plenty of coal, iron, and lead. It is seated on a river which flows into the Dee; 13 miles W. by S. of Chester, and 180 N.W. of London. Long. 3. 10. W. lat. 53. 2. N.

WRIEZEN, or BRIETZEN, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, situate on a lake formed by the inundations of the Oder; 37 miles E.N.E. of Berlin. Pop. 3200.

WINGTON, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Tuesday. Much tinsel is grown in the vicinity, and sold to the cloth manufacturers. It was the birthplace of the celebrated Locke. It is seated near the source of the Yeou; 10 miles S.W. of Bristol, and 125 W. of London.

WROTHAM, a town in Kent, with a market four times a year. The church is a large edifice, dedicated to St. George, attached to which was an archiepiscopal palace, the materials of which were removed to Aylesford. Some remains of it are still visible. The parish is very extensive, and contains some fertile and pleasant localities. Waltham, the ancient seat of the Peckham family, is about two miles from the town. It is 11 miles W.N.W. of Maidstone, and 24 S.E. of London.

WROXETER, a village in Shropshire, said to be the site of the ancient Roman city Uriconium. Extensive excavations of it have recently been made, and several Roman houses, and other interesting remains, have been laid open. It appears to have been surrounded by a thick wall and a deep trench, 3 miles in circuit, which may be traced in several places, 5 miles S.E. of Shrewsbury.

WUNNENBERG, a town of Prussian Westphalia, which received its name from a victory gained by Charlemagne over the Saxons in 794. It is 14 miles S. of Paderborn.

WURTEMBERG. See WIRTEMBERG.

WURZBURG, a district of Bavaria, in the circle of Lower Maine, comprehending a great part of Franconia. It is 65 miles long, and 50 broad, and is bounded on the N. by Henneberg, E. by Bamberg, S. by Anspach, Hohenlohe, and Mergentheim, and W. by Wertheim, Mentz, and Fulda. The soil is very fertile, and produces more corn and wine than the inhabitants consume. This territory was formerly a bishopric, and its sovereign was one of the greatest ecclesiastical princes of the empire; but it was given as a principality to the elector of Bavaria in 1803, and by the treaty of Presburg, in 1805, it was ceded to the archduke Ferdinand, whose electoral title was transferred from Salzburg to this place. In 1814, however, it was again transferred to Bavaria, in exchange for the Tyrol, when the archduke Ferdinand was reinstated in his Tuscan dominions.

WURZBURG, a fortified city of Bavaria, capital of the circle of Lower Maine, with a magnificent palace, a university, an arsenal, and a handsome hospital. The fortress stands on an eminence, and communicates with the city by a stone bridge. Besides the cathedral, there are several collegiate and parish churches, colleges, abbeyes, and convents. Wurzburg was taken by the French in 1796, and again in 1800. It is seated on the Maine; 40 miles W.S.W. of Bamberg, and 65 E.S.E. of Frankfort. Pop. 22,500. Long. 10. 14. E. lat. 49. 46. N.

WURZACH, a town of the kingdom of Wirtemberg, in the county of Waldburg, with a castle, situate on the Aitrach; 17 miles N. of Wangen, and 28 S. by W. of Ulm.

WURZEN, or WURTZEN, a town of Saxony, with a castle, a cathedral, and two churches. Here are fine bleaching-grounds for linen; but the principal trade is in beer, of which great quantities are exported. It is situate on the Muldau; 15 miles E. of Leipsic. Pop. 2400.

WUSTERHAUSEN, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, seated on the Sprece; 15 miles S.S.E. of Berlin.—Another, seated on the Dosse; 17 miles E.N.E. of Havelburg, and 44 N.W. of Berlin.

WUSTRAU, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Lauenberg, seated on the Dumme, at its confluence with the Jetzo; 14 miles S. of Danneberg.

WYBORG. See WIRBURG.

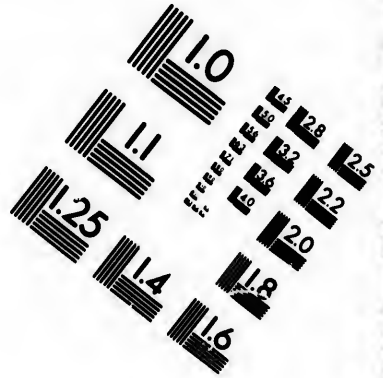

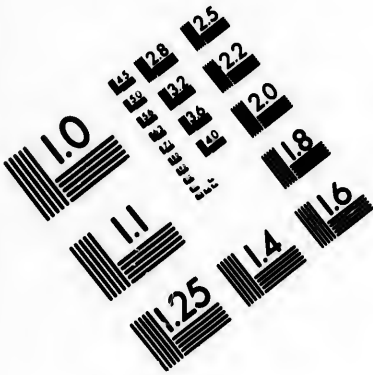

WYCOMB, or HIGH or CHIPPING WYCOMB, a borough in Buckinghamshire, returning, with its contributories, two members to parliament, governed by a mayor. Market on Friday. In the vicinity are many corn and paper mills; and a Roman tessellated pavement was discovered in an adjacent meadow in 1744. It is seated on the Wyck; 12 miles S.S.E. of Aylesbury, and 31 W.N.W. of London.

WYE, a town in Kent, whose market is now disused, seated on the Stour; 10 miles S.S.W. of Canterbury, and 55 S.E. of London.

WYE, a river of Wales, celebrated for its romantic scenery. It issues from Plynlimon Hill, in the S. part of Montgomeryshire, very near the source of the Severn, and crosses the N.E. corner of Radnorshire, giving name to the town of Rhayadergogy, (fall of the Wye,) where it is precipitated in a cataract; then, flowing between this county and Brecknockshire, it enters Herefordshire, passing by Hay to Hereford, a few miles below which it receives the Lug; it then flows by Ross and Monmouth, and, separating the counties of Monmouth and Gloucester, it enters the Severn below Chepstow. This river is navigable almost to Hay, and a canal forms a communication between it and the Severn, from Hereford to Gloucester.

WYMONDHAM, or WYNDHAM, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Friday, and manufactures of bombasins, Norwich crapes, &c. The church is the eastern part of an ancient abbey, and has a lofty steeple, on which Ket, the leader of the rebellion in the reign of XACCA, or SCIACCA, a seaport of Sicily, in Val di-Mazara, with an old castle. Here are large granaries for the reception of corn intended to be exported, and manufactures of beautiful vases. It is seated on the S. coast, at the foot of a mountain; 20 miles S.E. of Mazara, and 41 S.S.W. of Palermo. Pop. 12,000. Long. 13. 2. E. lat. 37. 41. N.

XAGUA, a seaport on the S. coast of the island of Cuba, seated on a bay, which is five leagues in circumference, and surrounded by mountains. It is one of the finest ports in the West Indies. A new colony, here called Fernandina de Jagua, was promoted by the King of Spain in 1829, and many privileges granted to it. The county is healthy and fertile. It is 84 miles S.E. of the Havana. Long. 80. 45. W. lat. 22. 10. N.

XALAPA, a town of Mexico, in Vera Cruz, and a bishop's see. It is on the high road from Vera Cruz to Mexico, and was formerly a great entrepôt for the European trade with Mexico, but this has greatly declined. This town is said to give name to the purgative root called jalap, or xalap. It is 60 miles E. of Angelos, and 80 E. of Mexico. Pop. 13,000. Long. 98. 20. W. lat. 19. 32. N.

XALISCO, a town of Mexico, in a province of its name; 14 miles N.W. of Compostella.

XATIVA, or St. PHILIP, a town of Spain, in Valencia. Having taken the part of Charles III. in 1707, Philip V. ordered it to be demolished, and a new town to be built called St. Philip. It is seated on the side of a hill, at the foot of which runs the Zucar; 32 miles S.W. of Valencia, and 50 N.W. of Alicante. Long. 0. 14. W. lat. 39. 4. N.

XAUXA, or JAUXA, a province of Peru; 36 miles long, and 45 broad; bounded by the mountains of the Indians, and the provinces of Tarma, Huanta, Angaraes, Xauyos, and Guarochiri. The climate is highly salubrious, and the soil fertile in corn and fruits. Population, 52,286.

XAUXA, a town of Peru, capital of the foregoing province, noted for its silver mines. It is seated on a river of the same name; 100 miles E. of Lima.

XERES, a town of Mexico, in Nicaragua, seated on a river that flows into Fonseca bay, 70 miles N.W. of Leon.

XERES DE LA FRONTERA, a large town of Spain, in Andalusia, famous for that excellent wine corruptly called sherry. It is seated between two rounded hillocks, and covers a considerable extent of ground. The city itself is partly encompassed with an old Moorish wall, enclosing a labyrinth of narrow, ill built streets. The limits of the city proper are well marked by numerous gateways. It has eight churches, and several public buildings, but the streets, even in the best parts, are disgustingly filthy, which want of cleanliness causes frequent epidemics. The vineyards are mostly seated on slopes, and scattered at considerable distances; and amount at present to perhaps 12,000 acres. The principal wine merchants reside mostly in the suburbs, and where are also the largest warehouses, immense buildings with lofty roofs, containing the immense casks in which the wine is perfected. The amount of sherry imported in 1841 into England, the chief market, was 2,412,921 gallons. Port St. Mary, on the N. side of the bay of Cadiz, and 10 miles S.W. of Xeres is the principal shipping port. Xeres is seated on the small river Guadalete, 15 miles N.E. of Cadiz, and 38 S.S.W. of Seville. Pop. about 50,000.

XERES DE LA FRONTERA, a town of Mexico, in the S. part of the province of Zacatecas; 80 miles N. by E. of Guadalupe. Long. 103. 35. W. lat. 22. 22. N.

YAKUTSK, or JAKUTSKOI, a town of Russia, capital of a province of the same name, which contains three-fifths of E. Siberia, with a scattered population of 185,000. It is seated on a barren flat, near the river, and has all the characters of the cold and gloomy north. It has considerably improved within the last 30 years, and the Yakut huts are beginning to be replaced by better and more substantial houses. It is the centre of the interior trade of E. Siberia. All the more costly furs, as well as the more common kinds of walrus teeth, are brought here in the ten weeks of the summer, from the extremes of the continent, which are collected in most enormous quantities. It is seated on the Lena; 960 miles N.E. of Irkutsk. Pop. 4000. Long. 147. 44. E. lat. 62. 2. N.

YALE, the capital of a province of the same name, in the island of Ceylon, 56 miles S.E. of Candy.

YANINA. See JOANNINA.

YANG-TZE-KIANG, the principal river of China or Asia. Its course is about 2700 miles in length, and is the usual route from the southern provinces to Peking. In the lower portion of its course it traverses the province of Kiang-su, the richest province in China, and the most populous in the world. Nanking, the second city in the empire, stands on its left bank. The river falls into the China sea by a very large mouth, divided into two branches by the large island of Tsung-ming, gradually formed by the deposit of mud from the river, which with other deposits and shoals, render the navigation very difficult. The principal port thrown open to European commerce by the late hostilities, Shanghai, stands on a river, 43 miles from the estuary of this magnificent river.

YANG-TSHEU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan. Its district is intersected by a number of canals, and it carries on a great trade, particularly in salt, which is made on the seacoast of this juris-dition. It stands on the left bank of the Kian-ku, where the imperial canal crosses that river; 485 miles S. by E. of Peking. Long. 118. 54. E. lat. 32. 26. N.

YAO-GAN, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yun-nan. Its territory is intermixed with mountains, fine forests, and fruitful valleys, and produces abundance of musk. Near the city is a salt-spring, which produces very white salt. It is 100 miles W. by N. of Yun-nan. Long. 100. 45. E. lat. 25. 12. N.

YAO-TSHEU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-si, on the W. side of the lake Poyang; 700 miles S. of Peking. Long. 116. 40. E. lat. 29. 8. N.

YARE, a river in Norfolk, formed by the confluence of several streams that rise in the heart of the county. It passes through Norwich, whence it is navigable to Yarmouth, where it enters the German ocean.

YARKUND, a town of Tartary, the principal city of Chinese Turkestan; with a large palace, where the khan of the Eluth Tartars generally resides. It has a considerable trade, and stands in a fertile country, on a river of the same name; 100 miles S.E. of Kashgar. Its population has been estimated at 50,000, exclusive of the Chinese garrison. Long. 76. 18. E. lat. 38. 19. N.

YARM, a town in North Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday, seated on the Tees; 17 miles N. by E. of Northallerton, and 239 N. by W. of London on the Stockton railway.

YARMOUTH, a seaport and borough in Norfolk, returning two members to parliament, governed by a mayor, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated at the mouth of the Yare, and is the terminus of the E. Counties railway. The harbour is convenient for business, with a very extensive quay. Its foreign trade is considerable. A great number of herrings are cured here, and also a large quantity of mackerel are caught and sent to London. The town is much frequented for sea-bathing, and has three churches, seven meeting-houses, a charity school, an hospital, a theatre, a large gauze silk factory, extensive ship yards, &c. The market-place is very spacious, but the streets in general, are narrow. Off the mouth of the harbour is a bar, which prevents the entry of ships of large burden; and the many sand-banks off the coast form the Yarmouth Roads, so noted for frequent shipwrecks. It is 23 miles from Norwich, and 124 N.E. of London. Yarmouth gives the inferior title of earl to the Marquess of Hertford. Long. 1. 45. E. lat. 52. 38. N.

YARMOUTH, a town in Hampshire, on the north-western coast of the Isle of Wight, with a market on Friday, a fortified castle, and a convenient quay. It is 9 miles W. of Newport.

YEN-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Tehe-kiang. In the neighbourhood are mines of copper, and trees that yield an excellent varnish, which, when once dry, never melts again, and will bear boiling water. The paper made here is in high esteem. It is 650 miles S.S.E. of Peking. Long. 119. 14. E. lat. 29. 38. N.

YENTCHING, a town of China, in Chang-tong, where a kind of glass is made, so delicate that it will not endure the inclemencies of the air. It is 45 miles S.E. of Tsi-nan.

YEOVIL, a corporate town of Somersetshire, with a market on Friday. It contains a handsome parish church, five meeting-houses, a free-school, and several other charitable institutions. Here was formerly a considerable manufacture of woollen cloths, but the principal manufacture at present is of leather gloves, and the trade in hemp and flax is considerable. It is seated on the Yeo or Ivil; 20 miles S. of Wells, and 122 W. by S. of London.

YEZD, a town of Persia, in the province of Irak, on the road from Kerman to Ispahan. It has a silk manufacture, and here are made the finest porcelain and carpets. It is 200 m. E.S.E. of Ispahan. Population supposed to be 80,000. Long. 56. 50. E. lat. 32. 0. N.

YLO, a seaport of Peru, in Los Chares; 70 miles N.N.W. of Arica. Long. 71. 13. W. lat. 17. 36. S.

YONNE, a department of France, containing part of the former provinces of Burgundy and Champagne, and comprising an area of 2900 square miles, with 350,000 inhabitants. The climate is temperate, and the soil fertile in corn, hemp, flax, wine, and fruits. It receives its name from a river which rises in the department of Nievre, flows by Chateaufort, Clameci, Auxerre, Joigny, and Sens, and joins the Seine at Montereau. Auxerre is the capital.

YORK, a city, the capital of Yorkshire, and an archbishop's see, with markets on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It is the Eboraecum of the Romans, and many of their coffins, urns, coins, &c., have been found here. It has always been considered as the capital of the North, and, in point of rank, as the second city of the kingdom; but is now surpassed in wealth and populousness by many of the more modern trading towns. The cathedral of St. Peter, generally called the Minster, is reckoned the largest and most magnificent Gothic structure in the universe. The E. window, which is said hardly to have its equal for tracery, painting, and preservation, was the work of John Thornton, a glazier, of Coventry, in 1405. This beautiful edifice sustained considerable injury from fire, occasioned by a fanatic incendiary, in 1829. It was restored to its original splendour by public subscription, and was again destroyed in 1840, by one of the towers accidentally taking fire and falling on the nave, which again rendered this beautiful pile a mass of ruins, but it has been restored. Besides the cathedral, York contains but 28 churches in use, though in the reign of Henry V. it had 44 parish churches, 17 chapels, and 9 religious houses. Here are also a number of meeting-houses for dissenters and catholics. The city is divided by the Ouse into two parts, united by a stone bridge of five arches, the centre one 81 feet wide. The river is navigable to this city for vessels of 70 tons burden, although it is 60 miles from the sea. The castle is a noble structure, and was formerly a place of great strength, but is now used as a county prison. Near it, on an artificial mount, is Clifford's Tower, a round shell, said by some to have been raised by William the Conqueror, but others deem it a Roman work. It was used as a garrison in the civil wars, and till the year 1683, when the magazine, blowing up, reduced it to its present form. York is a county of itself, governed by a lord mayor, the prefix of lord being given by Richard II.; and its county includes Ainsty Liberty, in which are 35 villages and hamlets. The guildhall, built in 1466, is a grand structure, supported by two rows of oak pillars, each pillar a single tree. The corporation built a mansion-house in 1728, for the lord mayor; and, among the other public buildings, are a noble assembly-house, designed by the Earl of Burlington, an elegant court-house on the right of the castle, a theatre-royal, a county hospital, and an asylum for lunatics. It is connected with the metropolis by means of the N. Midland and Birmingham railways. York is 70 miles S. by E. of Durham, 190 S.S.E. of Edinburgh, and 195 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 7. W. lat. 53. 59. N.

YORK, now called TORONTO, a city of Upper Canada. It is situate on the N.W. side of Lake Ontario, and has an excellent harbour, formed by a long peninsula, which embraces a basin of water sufficiently large to contain a considerable fleet. On the extremity of the peninsula called Gibraltar Point, are stores and blockhouses, which command the entrance of the harbour; and on the mainland, opposite this point, is the garrison. The front of the city is a mile and a half in length, and it contains several handsome squares, particularly one open to the harbour. It was made a bishop's see in 1857. It is 45 miles N.N.W. of Fort Niagara. Pop. 3500. Long. 79. 36. W., lat. 43. 35. N.

YORK, a town of Pennsylvania, capital of a county of the same name. It has twelve edifices for public worship, and stands on the Codorus creek, which flows into the Susquehanna, 88 miles W. of Philadelphia. Population of the county, 47,016; of the town, 4779

YORK, a seaport of Maine, capital of a county of the same name. The river of its name enters York harbour below the town. It is 75 miles N.N.E. of Boston. Population of the county in 1840, 54,034; of the town, 3111. Long. 70. 55. W. lat. 43. 7. N.

YORK, a county in the E. part of Virginia, with 4720 inhabitants. York Town is the capital.

YOAK, a town of South Carolina, capital of a district of its name; 30 miles N. of Columbia.

YORK, NEW, one of the United States of America, 316 miles in length, and 314 in breadth; bounded on the N. by Lower Canada, E. by Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut; S. by the Atlantic and New Jersey, and W. by Pennsylvania, Lake Erie, and Upper Canada. The area of the state is estimated at 46,000 square miles, or 30,000,000 acres. It contains 58 counties, the chief of which are New York, Richmond, Suffolk, West Chester, Queen's, King's, Orange, Dutchess, Columbia, Rensselaer, Washington, Clinton, Saratoga, Albany, Montgomery, Herkimer, Onondaga, Otsego, Ontario, Tioga, &c. New York, in general, is intersected by ridges of mountains running in a N.E. and S.W. direction. Beyond the Allegany mountains, however, the country is quite level, of a fine rich soil, covered in its natural state with various kinds of trees. East of these mountains it is broken into hills and valleys; the hills are thickly clothed with timber, and, when cleared, afford fine pastures; while the valleys produce wheat, hemp, flax, pease, grass, oats, and maize. Of the commodities produced from culture, wheat is the staple, of which immense quantities are raised and exported. The noble river Hudson traverses this state from N. to S., and it is connected to lake Erie by the great Erie canal, 360 miles in length. It is also joined to lake Champlain, by a shorter canal; and another connects it with the Delaware. Owing to these singular advantages of situation, and the unequalled extent of inland navigation, this state has become the principal of the N. states, and now contains a population nearly equal to all the states of New England together. The climate of New York is various. The winters on the coast are mild but changeable. In the N.E. part they are more severe but uniform. In the extensive level country to the W. the climate is milder. The commerce of New York greatly surpasses every other state in the Union, and its manufactures are also extensive. It has a number of very respectable literary institutions, and has made more internal improvements than other states. The railroads now amount to an aggregate length of 734 miles (1847), and connect the more Important parts of the state with each other in every direction. Its canals are also equally, if not more, important. The first permanent settlement was made in it by the Dutch in 1614, and was subsequently changed between the British and Dutch more than once; but was ceded to the British in 1674, and held by them until the Independence. The present constitution of the state was adopted in 1846. The population as estimated in 1845, was 2,607,995, with only 4 slaves.

Y. AK, New, the capital of the foregoing state, is situate on the S.W. point of Manhattan island, at the confluence of Hudson and East rivers, and is 5 miles in circumference. Surrounded on all sides by water, it is refreshed by cool breezes in summer, and the air in winter is more temperate than in other places under the same parallel. The island is $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, but hardly one in breadth; and is joined to the mainland by a bridge called King's bridge, and 3 bridges across the Harlem river. There is no basin or bay for the reception of ships, but the road where they lie, in East river, is defended from the violence of the sea by some islands which interlock with each other. The city of New York is the principal city of the United States in wealth, population, commerce, and extent. It is built over an extent of three miles on each river, and in its compact parts, has a circumference of about 9 miles. The most elevated part of the island is 238 feet above tide-water. The streets were originally laid out in an irregular manner, but in the newer parts great regularity and openness have been observed. Broadway is the principal thoroughfare, and extends from the Battery, a beautiful public promenade at the S. point of the island, 3 miles N. to the Bloomingdale road; the principal part of the streets run either parallel or transversely with this. The most splendid buildings in the city, or in the United States, is the Merchants' Exchange in Wall street, (which extends from the Broadway to East river,) but is in a confined situation. The new Custom House is also a splendid building, something after the Parthenon at Athens, and stands on the site of the old City Hall, where Washington took his oath of office in its open gallery. The City Hall, heretofore regarded as the finest structure, is in a much more beautiful site. Besides these buildings may be enumerated the University Hall, Columbia College, Trinity Church on Broadway, St. Paul's Church, Astor House Hotel, &c. The most splendid public work is the Croton aqueduct, supplying the city with water. It is a magnificent undertaking, and will bring 60 millions of gallons in 24 hours from the Croton river, 5 miles from Hudson river, to a splendid reservoir 38 miles from its source. The Harlem railroad, 8 miles long, and continued to Fordham, is an important work. There are 220 churches, 30 banks, 5 theatres, and many other most important institutions. It is connected with Liverpool, Southampton, and Antwerp, by noble steam-ships, rendering its access from the old world ready and certain. On December 16th, 1835, a dreadful fire swept over 40 acres, covered with stores filled with valuable merchandise; but the district has been rebuilt with increased convenience. This city has more commercial business than any town in the United States, owing to its situation at the mouth of a noble river, and its fertile and populous back country. It is 86 miles N.E. of Philadelphia; 210 S.W. from Boston; 225 N.E. from Washington; 397 N.E. from New Orleans; 145 S. from Albany; and 372 S. from Montreal. Pop. in 1790, 33,131; 1810, 96,373; 1830, 202,589; and in 1845, 371,223. Lat. of the City Hall, 40. 42. 40. N. long. 71. 1. 8. W.

YORK TOWN, a seaport of Virginia, capital of York county, with the best harbour in the state. Here, in 1781, Lord Cornwallis and his army were captured by the combined forces of the United States and France. It is seated on York river, near its entrance into Chesapeake bay; 13 miles E. of Williamsburg. Pop. 1000. Long. 76. 52. W. lat. 37. 18. N.

YORKSHIRE, the largest county of England, bounded on the N. by Westmoreland and Durham, E. by the German ocean, S. by Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire, S.W. by Cheshire, W. by Lancashire, and N.W. by Westmoreland. It extends 80 miles from N. to S., and 115 from E. to W., and contains 3,847,420 acres. From its great extent it has been divided into three parts, called the North, East, and West Ridings, each of which returns two members to parliament, and subdivided into 26 wapentakes: it has two cities, 60 market-towns, and 604 parishes. The air and soil of this county vary extremely. The East Riding is less healthy than the others, but this inconvenience decreases in proportion as the county recedes from the sea. On the hilly parts of this riding, especially in what is called the York Wolds, the soil is generally barren, dry, and sandy; but great numbers of lean sheep are sold here, and sent into other parts to be fattened. The West Riding, which is much the largest, enjoys a sharp but healthy air, and the land on the western side is hilly, stony, and not very fruitful; but the intermediate valleys consist of much good arable ground, and pasture for the largest cattle. It also produces iron, coal, lime, jet, alum, horses, and goats. Here the clothing manufactures principally flourish. The North Riding, in general, exceeds the other two in the salubrity of the air. The worst parts breed lean cattle; but, on the sides of the hills, in the valleys, and in the plains, it produces good corn and rich pastures. Richmondshire, on the N.W. of this riding, was formerly a county of itself; here many lead-mines are worked to great advantage. In Yorkshire, likewise, are the districts of Holderness, on the borders of the Humber; Cleveland, on the confines of Durham; and Craven, on the borders of Westmoreland and Lancashire. In this last district are three of the highest hills in England, named Wirm-side, Ingleborough, and Pennygaut, which form a sort of triangle from their tops, at the distance of 5, 6, and 8 miles, while their monstrous bases nearly unite. The principal rivers are the Ouse, Don, Derwent, Calder, Aire, Wharfe, Ure, and Hull, and they all terminate in the Humber, which enters the German ocean between Yorkshire and Lincolnshire.

YO-TCHOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Hou-quang, and one of the richest cities in the empire. It is seated on the river Kian-ku, and on the lake Tong-tiang, which is more than 70 leagues in circuit; 700 miles S. by W. of Peking. Long. 112. 35. E. lat. 29. 23. N.

YOUGHALL, a borough and seaport of Ireland, in the county of Cork, sending one member to parliament, with a commodious harbour, and a well defended quay. It has a manufacture of earthenware. It is seated on the side of a hill, on a bay of its name; 28 miles E. by N. of Cork. Long. 8. 10. W., lat. 51. 49. N.

YPRES, a fortified city of Belgium, in Flanders, and a bishop's see. It has considerable manufactures of silk, linen, lace, cotton, thread, &c., and the canal of Boisingen, and the New Cut, greatly expedite the conveyance of goods to Nieupoort, Ostend, and Bruges. Ypres was taken by the French in 1794, and retained till the downfall of Napoleon. It is seated on the Yperlee; 15 miles W. of Courtray. Pop. 15,000. Long. 2. 48. E. lat. 50. 51. N.

YRIEX, Sr., a town of France, department of Upper Vienne; 20 miles S. by W. of Limoges. Pop. 6400.

YSENDYK, a strong town of the Netherlands, in the Isle of Cadzand; 8 miles E. of Sluys, and 18 N.W. of Ghent.

YSEL, or ISSEL, a river of the Netherlands, which branches off from the Rhine below Huessen, and, flowing by Doesburg, Zutphen, Deventer, and Campen, enters the Zuyder Zee by two channels.

YSEL, or LITTLE ISSEL, a river of the Netherlands, which flows by Ysselstein, Montford, Oudewater, and Gouda, and enters the Merwe above Rotterdam.

YSEL, or OLD ISSEL, a river which rises in Westphalia, in the duchy of Cleve, flows by Ysselburg into the county of Zutphen, and enters the Yssel at Doesburg.

YSELMOND, an island of the Netherlands, in South Holland, situate between the Merwe on the N., and another branch of the Meuse on the S. It has a town of the same name, nearly 3 miles W. of Rotterdam.

YSTADT, or YDSTED, a town of Sweden, in the province of Schonen, on a bay of the Baltic, opposite Stralsund; 26 miles S.E. of Lund. Long. 13. 44. E., lat. 55. 22. N.

YSELSTEIN, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland, with a castle on the river Yssel; 5 miles S.S.W. of Utrecht.

YTHAN, a river of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, which crosses the county in a S.E. direction, and enters the German ocean at the village of Newburg; 15 miles N.N.E. of Aberdeen.

YUCATAN, a republic and peninsula of Central America, which divides the Mexican gulf from the Caribbean sea, and lies to the W. of Cuba. To the S. is the republic of Central America, or Guatemala, and at its S.E. end is the British settlement of Balize. The republic of Yucatan was formerly a portion of the Mexican republic, and consequently attained her independence of Spain at the same time as that confederacy. Under the Spanish administration, it was a province unconnected with either Mexico or Guatemala. Separated from Spain, Yucatan sent commissioners to Mexico, to deliberate upon forming a government, and on the return of these commissioners, and on their report, she gave up her independent position, and entered into the Mexican confederation as one of the states of that republic. After suffering from this unhappy connection, a revolution broke out all over the country, on the successful progress of which, the last Mexican garrison was driven out of Yucatan. The state assumed the right of sovereignty, but did not entirely disconnect itself from that republic. After the deposition of Santa Anna, the Mexican president, it acted quite independently of that government, and at the commencement of the present war between Mexico and the United States, it has proclaimed its neutrality and independence. The country, however, was far from settled, and is evidently unfit to assume the power of self-government: for in the commencement of 1848, a fearful revolt of the coloured against the white population took place, accompanied with fearful slaughter. The present political condition of the country is therefore undecided. The population, according to the census of April 8th 1841, is 472,876. But as this is probably not very exact, and for political reasons, underrated, the population may be assumed as 600,000 souls. It is divided into 5 departments, Merida, Izamal, Tekax, Vnilladolid, and Campeachy. Yucatan is a country remarkable for bad roads, or rather the general want of roads; a soil in which stony, and not very fertile districts prevail; rich vegetation, where there is moisture, on those soils of which fertility is the character; a general want of water, few good harbours, a hot climate, occasional forests, with wild beasts and reptiles; pastures with herds of cattle, ranchos and haciendas, towns and villages, with cathedrals and churches; a population ignorant and superstitious, yet towards the traveller kindly disposed; with industry in a very backward state; with little trade, and few, or only rude manufactures. Nevertheless Yucatan, with a hot, and in many parts an unhealthy climate, and other disadvantages, is still capable of being important as a productive country, and of maintaining a large population. The country, in many respects, is less improved than Mexico, and far less romantic in its scenery than Central America. Merida is the capital of Yucatan, and the population of this city is estimated at about 23,000. The chief places resorted to for trade, are Sisal, which has a roadstead forming the port of Merida; Campeachy, and Laguna, which forms the depôt of the great logwood country in the interior, and ten or twelve vessels are usually there loading their cargoes for Europe and the United States. One of the chief points of interest which attaches to Yucatan, is the architectural remains of its former inhabitants. These singular, beautiful, and extensive evidences of the skill and taste of a now forgotten race, whose history and era we are ignorant of, have, within the last few years, excited the most lively attention of the rest of the civilized world.

YUEN-KIANG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yun-nan, on the river Ho-ti; 145 miles S.S.W. of Yun-nan. Long. 101. 44. E. lat. 23. 37. N.

YUEN-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-si; 750 miles S. of Peking. Long. 113. 58. E. lat. 27. 50. N.

YUMA, EKUMA, or LONG ISLAND, one of the Bahama islands, i. e. the West Indies, lying to the N. of the E. end of Cuba, and its N. part under the tropic of Cancer. It is of an irregular form. Pop. in 1840, 1240.

YUMENTOS, or JUMENTOS, a cluster of small islands, among the Bahamas, lying to the S. W. of Yuma, producing a considerable quantity of salt.

YUNG-NING, a city of China, of the first rank, at the N. extremity of the province of Yun-nan, on the borders of Tibet; 230 miles N.N.W. of Yun-nan. Long. 100. 24. E. lat. 27. 50. N.

YUNG-PE, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yun-nan; 170 miles N.W. of Yun-nan. Long. 100. 34. E. lat. 26. 44. N.

YUNG-PING, a city of China, of the first rank, in Pe-tche-li, on a river that enters the Gulf of Leao-tong. Near it stands the fort Chau-lui, which is the key of the province of Leao-tong; 115 miles E. of Peking. Long. 108. 34. E. lat. 39. 55. N.

YUNG-TCHANG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yun-nan. The neighbouring country produces gold, honey, wax, amber, and a vast quantity of fine silk. 210 miles W. of Yun-nan. Long. 99. 2. E. lat. 25. 5. N.

YUNO-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Hou-quang; 885 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 111. 15. E. lat. 26. 10. N.

YUN-NING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Ho-nan; 430 miles S. of Peking. Long. 113. 52. E. lat. 33. 0. N.

YUN-NAN, a province of China, at the S.W. extremity; 300 miles long, and 250 broad; bounded on the N. by Tibet and Se-tcheuen, E. by Koel-tcheou and Quang-si, S. by Tonquin and Laos, and W. by Pegu and Birmah. It is mountainous, but the soil in general is fertile, and it is reckoned the richest province in China, from its productive mines of gold, copper, and tin, its amber, rubies, sapphires, agates, pearls, and marble, its musk, silk, elephants, horses, gums medicinal plants, and linen; 21 cities of the first rank, and 55 of the second and third are included in this province. The number of inhabitants is estimated at upwards of 8,000,000.

YUN-NAN, a city of China, capital of the foregoing province, formerly celebrated for its extent, magnificent buildings, vast gardens, tombs, triumphal arches, and elegant squares; but it has suffered greatly from the Tartars, in their different invasions, and the city at present contains nothing remarkable. It stands at the N. extremity of a lake; 1260 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 102. 30. E. lat. 25. 6. N.

YURCUP, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Caramania, on the Kizil-Irmak; 125 miles N.E. of Kouieh. Long. 34. 30. E. lat. 39. 40. N.

YUTHIA. See SIAM.

YVERDUN, a strong town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, capital of a bailiwick of its name, with a castle, a college, and an hospital. Near the town is a sulphurous spring, with a commodious bathing-house. The principal trade is in wine, and merchandise passing between Germany, Italy, and France. It has some remains of Roman antiquities. It stands on the Lake of Neufchatel, at the influx of the Orbe and Thiele; 38 miles W.S.W. of Bern. Pop. between 3,000 and 4,000. Long. 6. 59. E. lat. 46. 44. N.

YVETOT, a town of France, department of Lower Seine; 7 miles N.N.W. of Caudbec. Pop. in 1836, 7923.

YVRY, a town of France, department of Eure, on the river Eure; 16 miles S. of Evreux.

ZAAH, a district of Algier, in the desert behind Mount Atlas, belonging to the province of Constantine. Dates are the principal article of food; and they have extensive plantations of palm-trees. They carry on some commerce in ostriches' feathers. The chief place of the district is Biscara.

ZABOLA, a town of Transylvania, on the confines of Moldavia; 5 miles S.W. of Denmark.

ZACATECAS, a province of Mexico, bounded on the N. by New Biscay, E. by Pann, S. by Mechoacan and Guadalaxara, and W. by Chiameatlan. It abounds with large villages, and its mines were deemed the richest in America. Pop. 280,000.

ZACATECAS, a city of Mexico, capital of the above province, surrounded by rich silver mines; 260 miles N.E. of Mexico. Pop. 28,000.

ZACATULA, a town of Mexico, in the province of Mechoacan, on a river of the same name, near the Pacific ocean; 180 miles S.W. of Mexico. Long. 102. 55. W. lat. 18. 30. N.

ZACHAN, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania; 13 miles E. of New Stargard.

ZAFRA, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, with a castle; 20 miles S.W. of Medina. Pop. 7500. This town is full of buildings, begun in better times, and on a great scale; they have either remained unfurnished or have been gutted and destroyed by the French under Drouet, in 1811. Amongst these are the magnificent ducal palace; the unfinished convent of Sa. Marina, desecrated by the invaders.

ZAGARA, a mountain of Greece, in Livadia, one of the tops of Mount Parnassus. It was the ancient Helicon, from which issued the fountain Hippocrene, and was sacred to the Muses, who had here a temple.

ZAGHARA, a town of Negroland, in Bornou, on the river Fittree; 170 miles S.E. of Bornou.

ZAGORA. See DEVELTO.

ZAHARA, or the GREAT DESERT, a vast country of Africa, 1900 miles in length, by 840 in breadth; bounded on the N. by Barbary, E. by Fezzan and Cassina, S. by Negroland and Fouli, and W. by the Atlantic ocean. The air is very hot, but not unwholesome to the natives. The soil is generally sandy and barren, but there are verdant valleys, in which water either springs or stagnates; and it is here and there interspersed with spots of astonishing fertility, which are crowded with inhabitants. These fertile spots in the desert are called oases, or islands, and they abound most in the northern and eastern parts; but the smaller ones are not always permanent, for a furious wind from the desert, bringing along with it an immense quantity of sand, sometimes overwhelms an oasis, and reduces it to barrenness. These oases are formed into a number of states, governed by petty princes; and those of which some intelligence has been obtained are noticed in this work in their proper places. The inhabitants, consisting of various tribes, are wild and ignorant; and the Mohammedan religion is professed throughout the country, unless where they approach the country of the Negroes. They maintain towards each other the maxims of apparent hostility, but a Christian is every where odious. Their language is chiefly a dialect of the Arabic; and their only intercourse with other nations is carried on with the caravans, which periodically traverse these immense deserts. The Zahara abounds in antelopes, wild boar, leopards, apes, ostriches, and serpents. There are few horses and bees, but many sheep, goats, and camels.

ZAHARA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a citadel, seated on a craggy rock; 42 miles S.E. of Seville.

ZAHARA SUZ. See SUZE.

ZAHINA, a town of Prussian Saxony; 6 miles N.E. of Wittenberg.

ZAINA, a town of Algier, in the province of Constantina, supposed, from some considerable ruins, to have been the ancient city of Zama. It is 28 miles S.E. of Seteef, and 46 S.W. of Constantina.

ZAINE, a river of Barbary, which separates Algier and Tunis, and enters the Mediterranean at the island of Tubarea.

ZAIRE or CONGO, a river of Congo, which rises in the kingdom of Matamba, flows N. to the extreme borders of Congo, where it turns to the W., then separates the kingdoms of Loango and Congo Proper, and enters the Atlantic ocean below Sogno.

ZALAMEA, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, anciently called Ilapa. It contains many vestiges of its former splendour. It is 38 miles S.E. of Meride.

ZAMBESI, an immense navigable river of Africa, rising in the centre of the country, about lat. 10° S., and long. 25° E., thence flowing in a southerly direction to about lat. 18° S., and then easterly to the ocean, receiving in its course several tributary streams, the Chobe and Shire rivers being the chief. It was traced by the great traveller, Livingstone, in 1855-6, and is still being explored by him.

ZAMORA, a town of Quito, in the neighbourhood of which are rich mines of gold. It is seated near the Andes; 230 miles S. of Quito. Long. 78. 20. W. lat. 4. 6. S.

ZAMORA, once a strong but now decayed town of Spain, in Leon, and a bishop's see. It is seated on a hill, on the river Douro, over which is a bridge; 32 miles N. by W. of Salamanca and 146 N.W. of Madrid. It is said to derive its Moorish name from turquoises, of which it has none. The cathedral is very ancient. Population, under 10,000. Long. 5. 56. W. lat. 41. 50. N.

ZAMORA, a town of Mexico, in Guadalupe, 40 miles S.E. of Guadalupe. Long. 103. 30. W. lat. 20. 52. N.

ZAMORA, a town of Algier, in the province of Constantina; 250 miles W. of Hamamet. Long. 6. 25. E. lat. 36. 20. N.

ZAMOSKI, a town of Poland, with a citadel, a cathedral, and several other churches. It is 37 miles S.S.W. of Chelm, and 44 W.N.W. of Betz. Pop. 6600.

ZAMPAO, a town of Mexico, seated on a small lake; 30 miles N. of Mexico.

ZANESVILLE, a town of Ohio, capital of Muskingum county, on the E. side of the Muskingum river. It has considerable water-power and manufactures. The pop. of the town (in 1840) was 4766, and, including the several adjacent and connected villages, about 7000; 54 miles E. of Columbus.

ZANFARA, a kingdom of Negroland, to the S. of Zegzeg, between Cassina and Bornou. The inhabitants are tall in stature, of very black complexion, with broad faces, and savage dispositions. The capital, of the same name, stands on a river that forms a lake N. of Bornou, and then flows through that city into the Niger. It is 230 miles N.E. of Ghazal, and 450 W.S.W. of Bornou. Long. 16. 0. E. lat. 18. 30. N.

ZANQUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR, a country on the E. coast of Africa, between 3. N. and 9. S. lat. It includes several petty kingdoms, in which the Portuguese have settlements. The inhabitants are all blacks, with curled woolly hair; and, except those converted by the Portuguese, are either Mohammedans or Pagans, the latter much the more numerous. The principal territories are Jubo, Melinda, Mombaza, and Quiloa. The Portuguese trade for slaves, ivory, gold, ostriches' feathers, wax, and drugs. The productions are much the same as in the other parts of Africa, between the tropics.

ZANTE, an island in the Mediterranean, forming part of the Ionian republic. It is situate near the coast of the Morea, 17 miles S. of the island of Cephalonia, and is 14 miles long, and 8 broad. Its principal riches consist in currants, which are cultivated in a large plain under the shelter of mountains, producing 9,000,000 lbs. annually, and it has some tar-springs, or petroleum. Here are also the finest peaches in the world, with other choice fruits, and excellent wine and oil. It is visited, rarely, by earthquakes, one of which, October 20th 1840, did much damage. The natives speak both Greek and Italian, though there are very few Roman Catholics among them; but they have a bishop as well as the Greeks. Area, 160 square miles. Pop. in 1836, 35,348.

ZANTE, the capital of the foregoing island, is pleasantly situate on an eminence on the E. side of the island, at the bottom of a small bay. The houses are built partly of brick, and partly of wood, and seldom more than one or two storeys in height, on account of the frequency of earthquakes: the last visitation of this kind was in 1820, when several hundreds of houses were overthrown. The harbour is capacious, and is protected by a mole. It is 12 miles W. of Cape Tornese, in the Morea. Pop. 18,000.

ZANZIBAR, an island in the Indian sea, on the coast of Zanguebar, between the islands of Pemba and Mombasa. It abounds in sugarcanes and citrons. The inhabitants are Mohammedan Arabs, and are governed by a sheik appointed by the iman of Muscat. Long. 41. 0. E. lat. 6. 0. S.

ZARA, a city of the Austrian states, capital of a circle of the same name, and of the whole of Austrian Dalmatia, with a harbour. It is situated in a plain, upon a small peninsula, joined to the continent by an isthmus of about 25 paces broad. On the side of the citadel it is very well fortified. Near the church, which the Greeks called St. Heli, are two handsome fluted columns of the Corinthian order, said to have been part of the Temple of Juno. This place was formerly more considerable than at present, the number of the inhabitants being now not above 8000. The circle contains an area of 2150 square miles, with 100,000 inhabitants. There are very fine paintings in the churches, done by the best masters; and they pretend to have the body of Simeon, brought from Judea, and kept in a shrine with a crystal before it. Zara is seated on the gulf of Venice; 80 miles S.W. of Jaicza, and 150 S.E. of Venice. Long. 16. 6. E. lat. 44. 30. N.

ZARENG, a town of Persia, in the province of Segestan. It is celebrated for its beautiful porcelain. It is seated on the Hirmund; 350 miles E. of Ispahan. Long. 61. 10. E. lat. 32. 28. N.

ZARIL, a town of Greece, in the Morea; 22 miles E. of Misitra.

ZARNATE, a town in the Morea, seated on an eminence; 20 miles S.W. of Misitra.

ZAROWITZ, a town of Prussia in Pomerania, on a bay of the Baltic; 38 miles N.N.W. of Dantzic.

ZASLAW, a town of Poland, in Volhynia, seated on the Horin; 30 miles N.N.W. of Constantinow.

ZATMAR, a strong town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on a small lake, formed by the river Samos; 50 miles E. by S. of Tokay, and 130 E. of Buna. Long. 22. 34. E. lat. 47. 50. N.

ZATOR, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Cracow, with a castle, seated on an eminence, near the river Vistula; 20 miles S.W. of Cracow, and 50 S.E. of Ratibor.

ZAWEH, a town of Persia, in the province of Khorasan, situate on the Tedjen; 20 miles from the Caspian sea, and 80 N. of Mesched.

ZBARAS, a town of Austrian Poland, 23 miles E. of Zborow, and 68 N. by W. of Kamlinieck.

ZBOROW, a town of Austrian Poland, in the circle of Lemburg. Here, in 1649, John Casimir, king of Poland, with 20,000 men, was attacked by 110,000 Cossacks and Tartars, for three days successively, but defended himself so bravely, that the latter consented to terms of accommodation. Zborow is 52 miles E. by S. of Lemburg. Long. 25. 46. E. lat. 49. 46. N.

ZEALAND, or ZEELAND, an island of Denmark, of a triangular form; 230 miles in circumference, and the largest of the isles belonging to the king of Denmark. Area, 2600 square miles. Pop. including Moen and Samsoc, 439,962. It lies at the entrance of the Baltic, having the Cattegat on the N., the Sound on the E., and the Great Belt or the W. The coast is much intersected by large bays; and within the country are several lakes, which, as well as the rivers, abound in fish. It is exceedingly fertile, producing grain of all sorts, with excellent pasture, and in most parts plenty of wood. It is particularly famous for its breed of horses. Copenhagen is the capital of this island, and of the whole kingdom.

ZEALAND, a province of the Netherlands, comprising the ancient county of Zealand, and Dutch Flanders; bounded on the N. by the isles of Holland, E. by Brabant, S. by Flanders, and W. by the German ocean. It is composed of several islands, the principal of which are Walcheren, Schouwen, North and South Beveland, Tolen, Duyveland, and Wolversdike. Area, 570 square miles. Pop. 120,000. The surface is generally level, and lies so low that the inhabitants are obliged to defend themselves from encroachments of the sea, by vast dykes, which are kept up at a great expense. The river Scheldt forms the most of these islands, and the soil of them is fruitful. The province carries on a considerable trade in corn, madder, flax, salt meat, linen yarn, rape-seed, oil, &c. The greater part of the inhabitants are Calvinists; but there are also many Catholics and Lutherans, and some Mennonite Baptists. The principal towns are Middleburg and Flushing.

ZEALAND, NEW, a group of islands in the Pacific ocean, lying between lat. 34. 25. and 47. 17. S. and long. 166. 5. and 178. 35. E., was discovered by Tasman in 1642. He traversed the eastern coast from lat. 34. to 45. S., and entered a strait; but being attacked by the natives soon after he came to an anchor, he did not go ashore. From the time of Tasman, the whole country, except that part of the coast which was seen by him, remained altogether unknown, and was by many supposed to make part of a southern continent, till 1770, when it was circumnavigated by Captain Cook, who found it to consist of two large islands, separated by the strait above mentioned, and to which he gave his own name. In the year 1814 several missionary stations were established, which have continued their exertions in the civilization and instruction of the natives in their vicinity, up to the present time. These islands have been the resort of the South sea whalers, particularly the middle islands; and a great quantity of land has been purchased, or procured from the native chiefs, from time to time, by various adventurers who had established themselves among the numerous harbours and fine rivers with which the northern island abounds. Upto the year 1840 New Zealand was not regularly colonized, though the number of Europeans was gradually increasing. In the commencement of that year, a company was formed in London for the purchase and cultivation of land in that country; and a number of emigrants sailed from England for Port Nicholson, in the S. part of the north island, the territory on each side of Cook strait having been purchased from the natives; this colony, which was unauthorized by the British government, led to many speculations in the purchase of large districts by private individuals, and others. To prevent the dissensions consequent upon this, it was judged expedient by the government to commission a lieutenant-governor under New South Wales, to proclaim the sovereignty of the Queen over the whole territory. Lieutenant-governor Hobson accordingly issued a proclamation to that effect on the 23rd of May, 1840, and immediately proceeded to procure the submission of the chiefs, who unanimously acceded to the British domination. This deliberate act, and cession of the chiefs, and of their having been formerly recognised by Great Britain as an independent state, form strong claims for protection on the part of the government. Among the many barbarous tribes that our extended colonial empire brings us in contact with, there are none whose claims are greater. They are not mere wanderers over an extended surface, in search of a precarious subsistence, nor tribes of hunters, or of herdsmen, but a people among whom the arts of government have made some progress; they have a regular division and appropriation of the soil, have some agricultural skill, and have a certain subordination of ranks, and large bodies of them have been converted to the Christian faith. These islands were established into a separate colony by a royal charter, dated November 16, 1840, and Lieutenant-governor Hobson was appointed the first governor, assisted by a legislative council. By the same charter it is directed that the northern island be called New Ulster; the middle island, New Munster; and the south, or Stewart island, New Leinster. New Ulster, or Ekei-nomauwe, or North island, is the most populous, as it is probably the most fertile, of the New Zealand group; at least, it is the best adapted for colonization, for ity numerous fine harbours, and the rich valleys which intersect it. It is about 520 miles long, and 140 in its greatest breadth, but is very irregular in figure. The occupation of its inhabitants will be almost exclusively agricultural, as the remarkable deficiency of pasturage will prevent the increase of cattle in any great degree. In this circumstance a marked difference will exist between this and the neighbouring colonies of Australia. The numerous missionary stations, which have been long established, are all on the north island, the principal of which are in the bay of islands in the N.E. The first colony was founded at Wellington, in Port Nicholson, a splendid harbour in Cook strait. The future capital, Auckland, has been fixed at Waitemata harbour, in the Shouraki gulf, or Frith of the Thames, in lat. 36. 51. S. long. 174. 45. E. The temporary seat of government was at Russell, a settlement near Pahia, in the bay of islands. In the interior are the extensive lakes of Roturua and Taupo, and numerous fine streams intersect the country; the mountains are not so extensive as in New Munster, though some attain a great elevation, as Ruafanhu, always covered with snow, and near it the Tongouro volcano, 10,000 feet high. The forests, with which the interior abounds, contain the finest timber for ship-building, and have been extensively used for that purpose. Another native production is the phormium tenax, or New Zealand flax, a species of flag growing on the margins of streams, and which has been prepared for cordage in great quantities by the natives. New Munster, Tavai Poenamoo, or the middle island, is of a much more regular figure; it is 580 miles long, and from 100 to 160 broad, and contains about 23,000,000 acres, and the mountains which traverse it have a remarkably bleak and savage appearance, which contrasts strongly with the real amenity of the climate, and the fertility of the land near the coast. In the N. part are some fine harbours and rivers, which have been colonized, particularly the Oyerri or Pelorus river, which has some fine land on its banks. A settlement was formed by the French on Banks' Peninsula, on the eastern coast, but is now being colonized by members of the episcopal church, and called the Canterbury settlement. This peninsula consists of a succession of hills, which are clothed with verdure to their summits, and well adapted for agricultural and pastoral purposes. The climate of the middle island is represented as being delicious. The new settlement of Otago, founded in 1848, is on an extensive inlet on its S.E. side. The productions of Europe flourish here, and potatoes and cattle are raised in many parts of it. Stewart's island, or New Leinster, is the southernmost of the group, and is much smaller than the other two, being only 38 miles broad by 40 long. It has some fine harbours, particularly Port Pegasus, on the S.E. From its being more to the S. the climate is somewhat colder than in the others; but it is a beautiful and fertile island; the number of paroquets giving rather the appearance of a tropical climate. There is plenty of timber, among which are several varieties of pine; all the trees appear to be evergreens. The Europeans resident on it raise pigs, poultry, potatoes, and wheat, for the whalers who visit its shores. The number of Europeans estimated to be in the colony, at the commencement of 1841, was about 4000. From a very accurate estimate of the number of natives on the whole of the islands, made in 1841, they amount to 107,265, and these are principally congregated around the Bay of Islands, on the eastern extreme of the north island, around Wangaroa on the west side, and on the west side of Cook's strait. The middle island, once devoted to the New Zealand Company, is very thinly populated by them. Their numbers have probably not increased. The number of Europeans, in 1847, was estimated at 18,171. For latest estimates, see Appendix. In 1860, disturbances broke out in the province of Taranaki between the colonists and the Maori tribe, respecting the sale of land. Active hostilities ensued, and severe but indecisive fighting took place. Fears were entertained (1861) that the disturbances might soon be renewed; but the recent discovery of gold in immense abundance, has turned the thoughts of the colonists, and may perhaps lead to pacific measures. The only native quadrupeds are dogs and rats. The birds, like the vegetables, are almost entirely peculiar to the country. The creeks swarm with fish, which are equally delicious with those of Europe. The rocks are furnished with great quantities of excellent mussels, one sort of which measures above a foot in length, and with great variety of other shell-fish. The natives are stout and fleshy, but not corpulent, and are exceedingly vigorous and active. The women, in general, are smaller than the men, and are chiefly distinguished by the softness of their voices. The bodies of both sexes are marked with black stains, which is the same as tattooing at Tahiti. Their dress is also the same with that of the natives of that island. Their houses are miserable lodgings, and their only furniture consists in a few small baskets, in which they put their fishing-hooks and other trifles. Their food consists chiefly of fish, with which, instead of bread, they eat the root of a kind of fern, which they scorch over the fire, and then beat with a stick till the bark or dry outside falls off. The eastern coast of the north island is by far the most populous; tillage, weaving, and the other arts of peace, being here best known and most practised. In other parts, the inhabitants are scattered along the coast in families or tribes. A bishop of New Zealand was appointed in 1841, and subsequently four others, viz., Christ Church (1856), Wellington and Nelson (1858), and Waipatu (1859).

ZOSSEN, a town and castle of Brandenburg, situate on the Notte, 19 miles S. of Berlin.

ZOUT-PAN, a curious salt-lake, in the country of the Hottentots, lying a few miles

N. of Point Padron, in a plain much above the level of the sea, and between 3 and 4 miles in circumference. At some seasons of the year it is formed into an entire mass of fine white salt, with a hard crust resembling ice.

ZOWAN, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, famous for the dyeing of scarlet caps and the bleaching of linen, 36 miles S.W. of Tunisia.

ZUCKMANTEL, a town of Austrian Silesia, and a bishop's see. It has mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron. It is 15 miles S. of Neisse.

ZUEELA, a town of the kingdom of Fezzan, situate in a district of remarkable fertility. The remnants of ancient buildings, the number and size of the cisterns, and the construction of the vaulted caves, intended perhaps, as repositories for corn, exhibit wonderful vestiges of its ancient splendour. It is 60 miles E.N.E. of Mourzook. Long. 16. 34. E. lat. 27. 59. N.

ZUG, the smallest canton of Switzerland, containing an area of 125 square miles, bounded on the E. and N. by Zurich, W. by Lucern, and S. by Schweiz. It is rich in pasturage, has plenty of various kinds of stone fruit, as well as walnuts and chestnuts, and wine of a very acid flavour. The inhabitants, estimated at 15,500, are Roman Catholics.

ZUG, a capital of the foregoing canton, containing several handsome churches, a good town-house, &c. It is seated on a lake of its name, 12 miles N.W. of Schweiz. Pop. 2500. Long. 8. 24. E. lat. 47. 4. N.

ZULAUF, or SULAY, a town of Prussian Silesia, 5 miles S.W. of Militsch.

ZULLICHAU, a town of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg, with a castle, which stands without the walls of the town, and has a rampart and ditches. The suburbs contain more houses than the town itself, and among them is a large orphan-house, to which is annexed a school, an academy, &c. Here are good cloth manufactures, and the vicinity produces much corn and wine. In 1759 a battle was fought near this town, between the Prussians and the Russians, in which the former were defeated. It is situate in a plain, near the Oder, 24 miles E. by N. of Crossen. Pop. 5500. Long. 15. 52. E. lat. 52. 9. N.

ZULFIA, or JULEFA, a town of Persia, almost close to Ispahan, to which it is a sort of suburb, and separated from it by the river Sanderon. It was peopled by a colony of Armenians, brought hither by Shah Abbas. It contains several churches and monasteries.

ZULZ, a town of Austrian Silesia, in the principality of Oepeln, 14 miles E. by S. of Neisse, and 26 S.S.W. of Oepeln.

ZUMPANGO, a town of Mexico, 100 miles N. by E. of Acapulco, and 105 S. of Mexico.

ZURICH, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by Schaffhausen, E. by Thurgau and the county of Tockenbourg, S. by Glarus, Schweiz, and Zug, and W. by Lucern and the county of Baden. Zurich was admitted a member of the Helvetic confederacy in 1351, and obtained the privilege of being the first canton in rank; it is also the most considerable in extent, both of territory and power, next to that of Bern, having an area of 685 square miles, with, in 1837, 231,576 inhabitants. It abounds in wine and excellent pasture, but the supply of corn is not sufficient for interior consumption. The inhabitants are all Calvinists; and two-thirds of them derive their livelihood by spinning.

ZURICH, a city of Switzerland, capital of the foregoing canton, stands at the northern extremity of the lake of Zurich, and occupies both sides of the rapid and transparent Limmat, which issues from that lake and divides the town into two unequal parts, communicating by three bridges. It was formerly an imperial city, and is one of the best built in this country, but the streets are narrow and the houses high. Zurich was the first town in Switzerland that separated from the church of Rome. It has some manufactures, and is much frequented by visitors, the traffic being much facilitated by the railways from Bale, St. Gallen, &c. It is 35 miles S.W. of Constance, 40 S.E. of Basil, and 55 N.E. of Bern. Pop. 16,000. Long. 8. 32. E. lat. 47. 22. N.

ZURICH, a lake of Switzerland, 24 miles long and 4 broad. The adjacent country is finely cultivated and well peopled, and the S. part of the lake appears bounded by the stupendous mountains of Schweiz and Glarus. The scenery is picturesque, lively, and diversified. The river Limmat runs through the whole length of this lake to Zurich.

ZURITA, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a castle, seated on the Tagus, 38 miles E. of Madrid.

ZURZ, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, seated on the Inn, 20 miles N.N.W. of Bormio.

ZURZACH, a town of Switzerland, in the county of Baden, seated on the Rhine, just above the influx of the Aar. It is 9 miles N. of Baden.

ZURZONZA, a town of Mexico, in the province of Mechoacan, situate on an island in a lake, 25 miles W.S.W. of Mechoacan.

ZUTPHEN, a strong town of the Netherlands, in Gelderland, capital of a county of its name. It is seated at the conflux of the Berkel with the Yssel, 9 miles S. by E. of Deventer, and 55 E. by S. of Amsterdam.

Long. 6. 13. E. lat. 52. 10. N. Pop. about 10,000.

ZUYDER ZEE, a great bay of the German ocean, which extends from N. to S., in Holland, between the provinces of Friesland, Overyssel, Gelderland, and North Holland.

ZUYST, a village of the Netherlands, which abounds in plantations and shady walks, and is inhabited by Moravian manufacturers. It is much frequented, in the summer months, by merchants who have no country seats of their own. It is 5 miles from Utrecht.

ZVENIGOROD, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow, situate on the Moskva, 28 miles W. of Moscow.

ZWELLENDAM, a district of the Cape of Good Hope, on the S. coast, bounded on the N. by Tulbagh and Stellenbosch, and on the E. by George. Area, 9000 square miles. Pop. 6663. It produces some corn, wine, and cattle. Port Beaufort, in St. Sebastian's bay, enjoys a considerable coasting trade. To the W. are some salt pans, and to the N., over the Zwartberg mountains, some remarkable caverns were discovered in 1780. Zwelldam is the chief town.

ZWENKAU, a town and castle of Saxony, seated on the Elster, 6 miles S. of Leipzig.

ZWETL, a town of Austria, at the conflux of the Zwetl with the Kemp, 26 miles W.N.W. of Krems.

ZWICK, a town of Saxony, with a citadel, three churches, and a Latin school, in which is a good library. The inhabitants have manufactures of cloth and leather, and a trade in corn and beer. It is seated on the Mulda, 20 miles N.N.E. of Plauen, and 21 S. of Altenburg.

ZWINGENBERG, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, 8 miles S. of Darmstadt.

ZWITTAU, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Olmutz, 40 miles W.N.W. of Olmutz.

ZWOLLE, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Overyssel, with three handsome suburbs. A canal begins near this place, and extends to the river Yssel, which is defended by several forts. Zwolle is the most opulent town in the province, and stands on an eminence, on the river Aa, 14 miles N. of Deventer, and 31 S.W. of Coevorden. Pop. 12,800. Long. 6. 3. E. lat. 52. 31. N.

ZWONITZ, a town of Saxony, 14 miles S.S.W. of Chemnitz.

ZVORNICK, or ZVORNIK, a town of Bosnia, 60 miles E. of Seraio, and 68 S.W. of Belgrade.

ZYDOMIERZ, a town and fortress of Russia, capital of the government of Volhynia, and a bishop's see, seated on the Ciecief; 120 miles E. of Lucko. Pop. in 1838, 17,434. Long. 29. 22. E. lat. 50. 35. N.

* This account of the Contingents shows generally the numbers of 1855. But in 1858 the Federal Army consisted of 595,897 infantry, 81,000 chasseurs, 72,975 cavalry, 48,846 artillery, and 14,017 pioneers, &c.; total, 662,735. In 1859 the army numbered upwards of 600,000.

† The Quota Parts of the 80,000 florins have been fixed according to the law which was in force after 14th April, 1842, which showed the inhabitants of the countries of the Confederation to be 30,184,892. The distribution of the federal contingents in the army, the number of the contingents of troops, and the quota parts for the expenses of the Confederation, and the items contained in the last two columns, are according to the federal relations prior to March, 1849; since that they have been slightly modified.

15 & 16.—INDIA.

The following table gives the estimates of the area and population of several years since; but the actual number of inhabitants will be seen to be much greater by the latest estimate on page 926 :—

BRITISH PROVINCES.	Area, Sq. Miles.	Population.
BENGAL, including N. W. Provinces	220,312	69,710,071

N.B.—By more authentic information than the foregoing, the population of India was found, in 1858, to be 185,472,315. See page 926.

CEYLON.

The population of Ceylon, in 1835, was comprised in the following numbers:—

DESCRIPTION.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Free Blacks	626,465	568,017	1,194,482

Aliens and Strangers	10,825
	646,089	584,911	1,241,825

AFRICA.

The estimates of the population of Africa are even still more indefinite than those of Asia. The nature of the countries, and the barrier which climate places between European enterprise and all the social and physical relations of its various countries, render any approach to accuracy or definite knowledge quite hopeless.

3.—EGYPT.

The estimates of the population of Egypt are very vague; but it is certain that it has greatly decreased. It was stated that a census of July 10, 1848, gave a total of 4,504,178, exclusive of Bedouin Arabs, the army, &c. But it is believed that this cannot be correct; and half this amount is assumed, by competent judges, to be more nearly correct. The following is Mr. Lane's estimate:—

	Population.
1. Arab Christians	1,750,000
2. Christian Egyptians (Copts)	150,000
3. Turks	10,000
4. Syrians	5,000

This estimate of the total population of South America is open to much conjecture as to its accuracy; for as the interior portions of Brazil, and the south-eastern portions of the Colombian Republics—as well as most other parts—have been so little visited that they still remain almost a terra incognita, no just conclusions can be made. Thus, the amount given may vary considerably, but is considered to give as just a view as our present materials are capable of affording.

Total of Australia and Polynesia 2,326,314

The total population of this vast area—so little in accordance with its extent—is derived from tolerably correct estimates in some points, in others rests on the merest surmises. But it is thought, judging from the portions better known, that it will not exceed the number above stated, or nearly two and a half millions.
