The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed, or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

PREFACE

THERE are few works in the English language that have been of more general service to British readers than Brookes's Gazetteer. The very numerous editions that have been called for since its first appearance in 1762, are a sufficient proof of the value of the author's labours.

But at the period when it was first drawn up, Geographical knowledge, both political and physical, was in a very different condition from what is required at the present time. Political convulsions have overturned a great part of the civil relations which then existed; and the industry of modern Geographical science, especially within the last quarter of a century, has rendered obsolete, except as matters of history and curiosity, the accounts and descriptions which previously had been current, and received as accurate.

Brookes's Gazetteer of 1762 would afford but a very imperfect view of the present position and character of Geographical knowledge. The nature of the work, indeed, does not admit a lengthened account of every important point; to exhibit in the most compact tabular form even the major part of those places in which the world is now interested would occupy a volume of much greater bulk than the present.

It must not be expected, then, that any minor features could be introduced. But still this edition has been enlarged by nearly two thousand additional names; and the very numerous changes which have recently taken place in various parts of the world have been recorded in it. Indeed, so extensive have been the corrections and additions, that, on comparing the present edition with the first, it will be found that scarcely a single line remains of the original as compiled by the author whose name it bears: a name that has become identified with British literature.

There are few subjects which now cause greater embarrassment than Geographical orthography. For want of some authentic standard, each author or traveller, according to his nationality or caprice, gives a different form to the same word, creating in some instances very great confusion. A system of uniformity has been proposed for all European languages, and until some definite plan is adhered to by all, there must necessarily occur many discrepancies in a work of the present nature. Without implicitly adhering to any one system of orthography, the names will be found as most generally used.

In the Appendix, Statistics of the Population and Area of the World are collected in one view. They have been drawn up from the latest attainable information; and, among the Tables, the recently published Census of Great Britain holds a prominent place. In many particulars the estimates for this and other countries, given in the body of the work, will be found to differ from those in the Appendix; but the former have been retained, as being serviceable for comparison with those of more recent date, and thereby affording many interesting Statistics as to the progress or retrogression of countries and localities.

INTRODUCTION.

GEOGRAPHY treats of the figure, magnitude, position, and motion of the earth, and of the situation, extent, divisions, subdivisions, and boundaries of the different places upon its surface; to which is usually subjoined an abstract of the religion, history, character, government, manners, commerce, and population of every kingdom. This science is, however, in many respects so closely connected with Astronomy, that it will be proper to give a general outline of the latter as well as the former.

THE UNIVERSE.

The term universe comprehends the whole frame of Nature, to the utmost extent of Creation. How magnificent and exalted, then, are the ideas presented to the human mind by its contemplation! In the formation and preservation of this stupendous structure, the wonders of Omnipotence are illustriously displayed; and the more accurate and extensive our knowledge of the universe, the more elevated will be our conceptions of the Supreme Being.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

The solar system is that portion of the universe which comprehends the sun, planets, satellites, and comets. The sun is the centre of this system, and there are twelve planets which revolve around him, each in its orbit. The names of these, according to their distance from the sun, are Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Ceres, Pallas, Vesta, Juno, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune. The first two, moving within the orbit of the Earth, are denominated inferior planets; the others move without that orbit, and are therefore denominated superior planets. The Earth, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, are attended by secondary planets, called satellites, or moons, which revolve about them as centres, and are regulated in their motions by the same laws which regulate the motions of the planets in their orbits round the sun. The earth is attended by one Moon, revolving at a distance of 240,000 miles; Jupiter four; Saturn eight, one of which is of recent discovery; Uranus six; and Neptune one certain, perhaps two. Saturn, also, besides his moons, is encircled by two concentric riags, at a considerable distance from his body, which, like satellites or moons, revolve round about him in his planes. A similar appendage has been thought to accompany Neptune.

The planets have likewise a motion of rotation each round its own axis; at least observation renders it certain that Venus, the Earth, Jupiter, and Saturn have such a motion; and it is natural, from analogy, to infer that the rest have a similar motion.

The planets are opaque spherical bodies; and, having no light of their own, shine by borrowed light from the sun, which is both the centre of their motions and the source of their light and heat. They complete their revolutions in a greater or less time in proportion to their distances from the sun, there being a constant and very curious relation between their distances from him and their periodical times.

The following Table shows the distances of the planets from the sun; with their magnitudes and periods according to the latest observations:—

The fixed stars are distinguished from the planets by being more luminous, and by exhibiting that appearance termed the twinkling of the stars. They shine by their own native light, and are therefore, by analogy, and with the highest probability, supposed to be so many suns, each illuminating a considerable number of planets or worlds, which circulate round it. Indeed, it is unreasonable to think that these vast bodies of light and fire should be placed at such immense distances in the infinity of space, for no other purpose than to give a feeble light to the earth and the other planets in our solar system. Their distance from our earth is so inconceivably great, that were the nearest of them to be removed out of its present situation 200 millions of miles in any direction, its change of place would not be in the smallest degree perceived by any observer on the earth, although aided by the best instruments; hence it appears that a luminous spherical body, 200 millions of miles in diameter, if viewed at the distance of the nearest fixed star, would appear as a mere lucid point, without any sensible diameter.

Besides the planets, there are other bodies belonging to our solar system, called comets, which also revolve round the sun as a centre, but the orbits of which do not approach so near to circles as those of the planets; for they are very long ellipses, having the sun in one of their foci. Hence it happens, that, during one part of its revolution, a comet goes off to an immense distance from the sun, and therefore cannot be seen from our earth; and during another part it comes much nearer to him, and may then become visible for a short time. The comets differ also considerably in other respects from the planets; for the paths of the latter in the heavens are all found within the zodiac, which is a tract extending to

* A more exact knowledge of the fixed stars, combined with the improvement of telescopes, have led to the discovery within these few years, of a very large number of those small planets revolving between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, sometimes called asteroids. The orbits of some are given above, and the names of all as known to Jan. 1857, are as follows:—1. Ceres; 2. Pallas; 3. Juno; 4. Vesta; 5. Astræa; 6. Hebe; 7. Iris; 8. Flora; 9. Metis; 10. Hygiea; 11. Parthenope; 12. Victoria; 13. Egeria; 14. Irene; 15. Eunomia; 16. Psyche; 17. Thetis; 18. Melpomene; 19. Fortuna; 20. Masania; 21. Lutetia; 22. Calliope; 23. Thalia; 24. Themis; 25. Phocæa; 26. Proserpine; 27. Euterpe; 28. Bellona; 29. Amphitrite; 30. Urania; 31. Euphrosine; 32. Pomona; 33. Poliphymnia; 34. Circe; 35. Leucothea; 36. Fides; 37. Atalanta; 38. Leda; 39. Lutitia; 40. Harmonia; 41. Daphné; 42. Isis. Fifteen or sixteen others have since been discovered.

† The discovery of Neptune is one of the grandest achievements of modern science, inasmuch as the position and approximate elements of it were known before it had been seen. Two persons have the merit of this remarkable discovery; M. Le Verrier and Mr. Adams, who had both, unknown to each other, calculated its exact position. It was first seen October 1st, 1846.

a small distance on each side of the ecliptic, or the path which the sun appears to describe round the heavens; whereas the path of the former is found sometimes in one quarter of the heavens, and sometimes in another. The planets likewise move all in one direction about the sun, viz. from west to east, but the comets appear to move in all directions. They are also much more numerous than the planets, calculations having been made upon the orbits of upwards of eighty of them by astronomers.

The earth which we inhabit seems comparatively a small point in the universe, the sun being above two millions of times larger than the earth; and there is reason to suppose that similar is the fact with respect to all the stars.

It is one of the fundamental principles in geography, that the earth is of a round form; for, from the scientific measurements that have been made in various countries, it is proved that its form is that of a sphere, slightly flattened at the poles, from the effect of its diurnal motion. The difference of the equatorial and polar diameters is now ascertained to be 26 miles, and the four hundred and seventy-eighth thousandth part of a mile; or in the proportion of 298 to 299. This deviation from a true sphere is almost inappreciable in any representation of the earth's surface; for in a globe of 16 inches in diameter, it would vary only in the proportion of one-twentieth part of an inch—a quantity too small to be regarded; but in the actual measurement of any considerable portion of the earth's surface, this variation becomes more manifest from the inequality of the curve described by the polar circumference, while as to the degrees of latitude, which are always geographically divided into 60 miles or minutes, the measured length of a degree increases with the latitude, as the following table, resulting from the actual measurements, made with every refinement which science can command, by commissioners of various nations, men of the first eminence, will show:—

In a representation of the earth, its surface may also be considered as being smooth; its inequalities have been compared to those on the rind of an orange; but even this is an exaggeration. The loftiest mountain is known not to exceed five miles in perpendicular height, and this is only 1-1600th part of the earth's diameter; consequently it must be represented, on a globe of 16 inches in diameter, by an elevation of 1-100th part of an inch, or the thickness of common drawing-paper; but as the general elevation of the land is very much below this, or even one-fourth of it, it must be within the thickness of the thinnest writing-paper. The ocean, supposing its depth to be equal to the height of the land, would not appear more on a similar globe than the wash of colour left by a brush on tinting a drawing.

- The greater or equatorial diameter is 41,847,426 feet, or 7925·648 miles.
- The lesser, or polar diameter 41,707,620 " 7899·170 "
- Difference of diameters, or polar compression . 139,806 " 26·478 "
- Equatorial circumference 21,899·000 "

MOTIONS OF THE EARTH.

The earth turns uniformly round, once in twenty-four hours, in a direction from west to east, upon an axis, which is an imaginary line passing through its centre: this is called its diurnal motion. It is likewise carried in the same direction round the sun, in an orbit nearly circular, and completes its revolutions in a year: this is called its annual motion. As some of the divisions of our globe, of great importance in geography, depend upon these motions, we will now consider them more particularly.

By the diurnal motion of the earth, all places on its surface are carried uniformly round its axis from west to east, in the course of the natural day. This real motion causes the sun and the other heavenly bodies to have an apparent motion in the contrary direction, from east to west. Hence it is that we have the continual succession of day and night; for as the sun can only illuminate by his rays one half of a spherical body, one half of our earth must be in darkness while the other enjoys the light; it is therefore day at any place when, by the diurnal rotation, that place is turned towards the sun, and night at the same place when turned away from the sun.

The two points on the surface of the earth, which are the extremities of its axis, are called the north and south poles. A circle described upon the surface of the earth, equally distant from its two poles, is called the equator; this circle divides the surface of the earth into two equal parts, called the Northern and Southern Hemispheres.

As by a real motion of the earth about its axis there is produced an apparent motion of all the heavenly bodies, so, in like manner, by the real annual motion of the earth round the sun, there is produced an apparent annual motion of the sun round the earth; and thus the sun appears to make a complete revolution round the heavens once in a year. The circle which the sun appears to describe, in the course of the year, through the heavens, is called the ECLIPHTIC. Astronomers have conceived this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, called signs, and have given them the following names; Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces. The ecliptic passes through the middle of the zodiac, and hence these signs are also called the signs of the zodiac.

INEQUALITY OF THE DAYS AND NIGHTS, AND CHANGES OF THE SEASONS.

Were the sun and the earth perfectly at rest with respect to each other, it is evident that one half of the earth would be continually in light, and the other in darkness, as the sun can only illuminate one half of its surface at a time. Suppose the earth to revolve about its axis, yet the position of the axis, with respect to the sun, will very much affect the distribution of light and darkness to the various places on its surface. For example, were the earth's axis to point directly towards the sun, or to coincide with a line joining the centres of the earth and the sun, still one of our hemispheres would be continually in the light, and the other in darkness. Again, suppose the earth to revolve uniformly about an axis perpendicular to a line joining the centres of the earth and sun, then all places upon the surface would be in light and darkness alternately, and an equal interval of time in each, or the days and nights would be each twelve hours long throughout the globe.

If either half of the earth's axis, for example the northern, were to make an acute angle with a line joining the centres of the earth and sun, and of consequence the southern half an obtuse angle, it would follow that the north pole, and a certain tract round it, would remain always in the light, or would have continual day, notwithstanding the earth's rotation. Even such places, in the northern hemisphere, as were turned by the diurnal rotation away from the sun, would pass sooner through the dark hemisphere of the earth than that exposed to the light, and would thus have their nights shorter than their days; at the equator the days and nights would be equal; but, in the southern hemisphere, the phenomena would be the very reverse of those that took place in the northern hemisphere, and the south pole and its neighbourhood would be in darkness. It is evident also, that in this case the sun would be on the north side of the equator, and vertical to a certain circle parallel to it, which would be nearer to, or farther from it according as the acute angle formed by the northern half of the earth's axis, and a line joining the centres of sun and earth, was greater or less. Now, the last two suppositions respecting the situation of the axis are such as really take place in nature; for while the earth moves in its orbit round the sun, its axis remains continually parallel to itself, or points always in the same direction, making an angle with a perpendicular to its orbit of $23\frac{1}{2}$ degrees; and as by the earth's motion the line joining its centre with that of the sun is continually changing its direction, it is evident that the angle contained by that line and the axis must be continually varying in magnitude, and of course the position of the poles of the earth with respect to the sun (which, as we have seen, depends entirely on that angle), must be always changing.

About the 20th of March, when the sun, as seen from the earth, enters the constellation Aries, the line joining the centres is perpendicular to the earth's axis; therefore, both poles are situated alike with respect to the sun, which is now over the equator, and the days and nights are equal throughout the world. At this time of the year, which is called the vernal equinox, spring commences to the inhabitants of the northern hemisphere, and autumn to those of the southern. During the time that the sun is passing through Aries, Taurus, Gemini, and till he enters Cancer, which happens about the 20th of June, and is the time of the summer solstice, the angle contained by the north half of the earth's axis and the line which joins the centres of the sun and earth is always diminishing, by reason of that line changing its position while the axis moves parallel to itself. Hence it happens that the north pole is turning more and more towards the sun, and the phenomena take place which we have already described as peculiar to this situation of the axis. About the 20th of June the angle is at the least, and presently begins to increase, as well as the pole to turn away from the sun, which now passes through Cancer, Leo, and Virgo, and enters Libra on the 20th of September, when the axis has a position similar to that which it had on the 20th of March, and the days and nights are again equal; this is called the autumnal equinox. The sun now appears to cross the equator, and the south pole, which during the last six months was in the dark, begins to turn towards the sun, when precisely the same phenomena are exhibited to the southern hemisphere that we have already described in the case of the northern. The winter solstice is about the 20th of December, when the sun enters Capricorn. Thus, by a combination of the annual and diurnal motions of the earth, with the parallelism of its axis, and its obliquity to the plane of the earth's orbit, the various seasons are produced, and the same quantity of light and darkness, upon the whole, is distributed in the course of the year to all the regions of the globe.

THE CIRCLES DESCRIBED ON THE SURFACE OF THE EARTH.

The poles of the earth are two points on its surface diametrically opposite to each other. They are the extremities of the axis of the earth's diurnal revolution. The one is called the north and the other the south pole.

The equator is an imaginary circle on the surface of the earth, equally distant from both poles. It divides the earth's surface into two equal parts, called the northern and southern hemispheres.

The meridian of any place on the earth is an imaginary circle passing through that place and the two poles. This circle with respect to that place divides the earth's surface into two equal portions, called the eastern and western hemispheres.

All places, directly north and south to each other, have the same meridian; but those places which lie in any other direction from each other have different meridians. The meridians of all places on the globe are perpendicular to the equator.

The latitude of a place is its distance from the equator, reckoned in degrees and mi-utes, on an arc of its meridian, and is north or south according as that place lies in the northern or southern hemisphere; for example, the latitude of Edinburgh is 55 degrees 58 minutes N.; that of the Cape of Good Hope is about 34 degrees S. &c. No place can have a greater latitude than 90 degrees.

Parallels of latitude are circles on the earth's surface parallel to the equator. All places directly east and west from each other are equally distant from the equator, and are said to lie in the same parallel of latitude. Such places as lie in any other direction from each other are in different parallels of latitude.

The longitude of a place is the degrees and minutes in an arc of the equator, intercepted between its meridian and the meridian of some other given place, from which the longitude is reckoned. The geographers of different countries generally reckon the longitude eastward and westward from the meridians passing through the capitals of these countries. Thus, in Britain, we reckon the longitude eastward and westward from the meridian of Greenwich: the longitude of Edinburgh, for example, is three degrees west; that of Petersburg about thirty degrees east. No place can have its longitude greater than 180 degrees. The degrees of longitude are not like those of latitude, but diminish in proportion as the meridians incline, or their distance contracts in approaching the pole. Hence, in 60 degrees of latitude, a degree of longitude is but half the quantity of a degree on the equator; and so of the rest.

The horizon of a place is that apparent circle which bounds the view of a spectator at that place. When the celestial bodies come above the eastern part of the horizon they are said to rise, and when they descend below the western part, they are said to set.

DIVISION OF THE EARTH INTO ZONES.

A zone is a broad space upon the earth, included between two parallels of latitude. There are five zones, which take their names from the degrees of heat and cold to which they are exposed, by the poles of the earth being turned alternately to and from the sun.

The torrid zone is that portion of the earth over which the sun is perpendicular at one time or other in the course of the year. This zone is about 47 degrees in breadth, extending to about 23½ degrees on each side of the equator. The parallel of latitude by which it is limited in the northern hemisphere is called the tropic of cancer, because the sun is directly over this parallel when he enters the sign of that name, and, for a similar reason, the limiting parallel in the southern hemisphere is called the tropic of capricorn.

The frigid zones are those regions about the poles where the sun does not rise for some days at one time of the year, and does not set for some days at another time of the year. The zones extend round the poles to the distance of about 23½ degrees. That in the northern hemisphere is called the north frigid zone, and is bounded by a parallel of latitude called the arctic polar circle; the other, in the southern hemisphere, is called the south frigid zone, and the parallel of latitude which bounds it the antarctic polar circle.

The two temperate zones are the spaces between the torrid and frigid zones.

The superficies of the several zones are as follow:—

	square miles.
The torrid zone.	16,500,375
The two temperate zones.	103,114,775
The two frigid zones.	79,328,600
	198,943,750

NATURAL DIVISIONS OF THE EARTH.

The surface of the earth is naturally divided into land and water.

Land is divided into continents, islands, peninsulas, isthmuses, mountains, capes, hills, and cliffs.

Water is divided into oceans, seas, channels, gulfs, straits, lakes, rivers, and rivulets.

A continent is a large tract of land comprehending many contiguous kingdoms, states, &c., without any entire separation of its parts by water. The world is usually divided into two great continents, the Old and the New. The old continent comprehends Europe, Asia, and Africa; and the new, North and South America.

An island is a tract of land entirely surrounded by water, as Britain, Ireland, Sicily, &c.

A peninsula is a tract of land joined to a continent only by a narrow neck, being everywhere else encompassed by water, as the Morea in Greece, Jutland, the Crimea, &c.

An isthmus is the neck which joins a peninsula to the adjacent land, and forms the passage between them, as the isthmus of Suez, the isthmus of Darien, &c.

A mountain is a part of the land greatly elevated above the adjacent country.

A cape or promontory is a portion of land stretching out into the sea, as the North Cape, the Cape of Good Hope, &c.

A cliff is a steep shore, hill, or mountain.

The ocean is that vast collection of salt water, which covers the greater part of the globe. It is divided by geographers into three parts. 1. The Atlantic or European Ocean, lying between part of Europe, Africa, and America. 2. The Indian Ocean, lying between Africa, the East Indian Islands, and New Holland. 3. The Pacific Ocean or Great South Sea, which lies between the Philippine Islands, China, Japan, and New Holland on the W., and the coast of America on the E. The same Ocean takes different names from the countries upon which it borders, as the British Ocean, the German Ocean, &c.

A sea is a branch of the ocean flowing between some parts of the continent, or separating an island from the continent, as the Mediterranean Sea, the Euxine Sea, the Baltic Sea, &c.

A channel is a narrow sea confined between an island and a continent, or between two islands, as the English Channel, and St. George's Channel.

A gulf or bay is a part of the ocean or sea contained between two shores, and surrounded by land every where, except at its entrance, where it communicates with the ocean, seas, or other bays, as the Gulf of Venice, the Gulf of Mexico, &c.

A strait is a narrow passage by which there is a communication between a gulf and its neighbouring seas, or between one part of the ocean and another, as the Straits of Gibraltar, the Straits of Babelmandel, &c.

A lake is a collection of water surrounded on all sides by land, as Lake Ladoga, the Lake of Geneva, Loch Tay, Loch Lomond, &c.

A river is a current of fresh water, formed by the confluence of several rivulets, and flowing in a channel from its source to the sea.

A rivulet or brook is a small stream arising from a spring, and is the commencement of a river.

THE TIDES.

It is found by experience to be a general law of nature, that all the particles of matter which compose the universe, however remote they may be from one another, have a continual tendency to approach each other. This tendency is called universal gravitation, and is stronger or weaker according as the particles are situated nearer to, or farther from, each other, its intensity being always inversely proportional to the square of their distance. The planets are retained in their orbits, and move round the sun as a centre, in consequence of their tendency towards the sun being combined with a motion impressed on them, in the direction of a straight line touching their orbits. The same principle of universal gravitation likewise connects the earth and moon, and causes the moon to revolve in an orbit of which the earth is the centre; while, on the other hand, the moon, by the force of attraction which she exerts upon the earth, produces those alternate elevations and depressions of the waters of the ocean, called tides.

which compose the earth are heavy, or gravitate towards its centre; but, as they must also gravitate towards the moon, it is evident that the waters of the ocean directly under the moon, being nearer to her than the central parts of the earth, will be more attracted towards her than those parts, and therefore will have their gravity towards the centre somewhat diminished. Again, the central parts being nearer the moon than the waters on the opposite side of the earth, must be more attracted by her than the waters, by which means the waters of the ocean on the opposite side of the earth will also have the gravity towards the centre somewhat diminished.

As for those parts of the ocean which are 90 degrees from the point directly under the moon, since they are nearly at the same distance from her as the central parts of the earth, they will be attracted with nearly the same force; but because they are attracted in lines directed to the moon's centre, the effect produced upon the whole is a small increase of their gravity towards the centre of the earth. Since, therefore, by the unequal action of the moon upon the waters, their gravity is in some places increased, and in others diminished, and their equilibrium thus disturbed, it is evident, from the nature of fluids, that the ocean will arrange itself so as to restore the equilibrium, and will assume a spherical or egg-like form, having its longest diameter directed towards the moon. Hence, as the earth turns round its axis, from the moon to the moon again, in 24 hours 48 minutes, the elevated parts of the ocean, which always keep nearly under her and opposite to her, will shift and move round the earth in the same time; and as it is high water, or flood, at any place when the elevated parts of the watery spheroid pass that place, so it will be low water, or ebb, when the depressed parts of the spheroid pass that place; thus there will be two tides of flood, and two of ebb, succeeding each other within that time, or at intervals of 6 hours and 12 minutes.

We have hitherto considered only the action of the moon in producing the tides, but it is evident that, for the same reasons, the inequality of the sun's action on different parts of the earth must produce a similar effect; so that there are in reality two tides every natural day, from the action of the sun, as there are in the lunar day, from that of the moon; however, by reason of the sun's immense distance from the earth, its effect in producing the tides is considerably less than that of the moon.

At the time of the new moon, or when the moon is in conjunction with the sun, and at the time of full moon, or when the moon is in direct opposition to the sun, it is evident that their effects in raising the waters will be conjoined; hence, twice in the course of every month the tides are greater than usual; these are called spring tides.

When the moon is entering her second and last quarter, she is then 90 degrees distant from the sun; and, when they are in this position, their effects in raising the tides are opposed to one another, by which means the one raises the water where the other depresses it, and thus the tides are twice every month lower than usual; these are called neap tides.

The time of high water is not precisely when the moon comes to the meridian, but generally an hour or two after; for, by the motion of the earth on its axis, the most elevated part of the water is carried beyond the point directly under the moon, in the direction of the diurnal rotation, so that the water continues to rise after it has passed directly under the moon, though her action begins there to decrease. The greatest spring tides also do not happen till the second or third day after the new or full moon; and a similar observation is to be made with respect to the neap tides. To these observations may be added the following:—1. The elevation of the waters towards the moon a little exceeds the opposite one. 2. The action of the sun and moon is greater the nearer those bodies are to the earth. 3. The greatest tides happen a little before the vernal and a little after the autumnal equinox. 4. All these phenomena obtain in the open sea, where the ocean is extensive enough to be subject to these motions; but the particular situation of places, as to shores, capes, straits, &c., disturb the motion of the waters, and occasion a deviation in some measure from the general rules.

tides, because the action of the sun and moon is nearly the same over the whole extent of such seas. In very high latitudes, also, the tides are very inconsiderable; for the sun and moon, acting in the neighbourhood of the equator, and always raising the water towards the middle of the torrid zone, the regions adjoining to the poles must consequently be deprived of these waters, and the sea must, within the frigid zones, be low relatively to other parts.

THE WINDS.

The currents of the atmosphere, which constitute winds, are produced by various causes, but of these the heat of the sun seems to be the most general and powerful; and an east wind, which blows continually round the globe, is produced by the rarefaction of the air by means of the solar heat within the tropical regions, and even to a considerable distance beyond them.

The following observations on this subject have been made by skillful seamen, and by the celebrated Dr. Halley:—

Within the limits of 60 degrees, viz. from 30 degrees of N. latitude to 30 degrees of S. latitude, there is a constant east wind throughout the year, blowing on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. This is called the trade wind.

The trade winds near the northern limits blow between the north and east; and near their southern limits they blow between the south and east.

These general motions of the wind are distributed on the continent and near the coasts.

In some parts of the Indian Ocean there are periodical winds, which are called monsoons, that is, such as blow one half of the year one way, and the other half the contrary way.

In the Atlantic Ocean, near the coast of Africa, at about 100 leagues from the shore, between the latitudes of 28 degrees and 10 degrees N., seamen constantly meet with a fresh gale of wind blowing from the north-east.

Those bound to the Caribbee Islands, across the Atlantic ocean, find, as they approach the American side, that the said N. E. wind becomes easterly, or seldom blows more than a point from the east, either to the northward or southward. These trade winds, on the American side, extend to 30, 31, or even 32 degrees of N. latitude, which is about 4 degrees farther than they extend on the African side. To the southward of the equator, the trade winds extend three or four degrees farther towards the coast of Brazil, on the American side, than they do near the Cape of Good Hope, on the African side.

Between the latitude of 4 degrees N. and 4 degrees S., the wind always blows between the south and east; on the African side the winds are nearest the south, and on the American side nearest the east.

The winds are somewhat changed by the seasons of the year; for, when the sun is far northward, the Brazil S. E. gets to the south, and the N. E. wind to the east; and, when the sun is far south, the S. E. become east, and the N. E. winds on this side of the equator veer more to the north.

Along the coast of Guinea, from Sierra Leone to the island of St. Thomas, (under the equator,) which is about 50 leagues, the southerly and S. W. winds blow perpetually; for the S. E. trade wind having passed the equator, and approaching the Guinea coast within 80 or 100 leagues, inclines towards the shore, and becomes S., then S. E., and by degrees, as it comes nearer the land, it veers about to S., S. S. W., and, in with the land, it is S. W., and sometimes W. S. W. This tract is troubled with frequent calms and violent and sudden gusts of wind, called tornadoes, blowing from all points of the horizon.

Between the fourth and tenth degrees of N. latitude, and between the longitudes of Cape Verd and the farthest east of the Cape Verd Isles, there is a tract of sea which seems to be condemned to perpetual calms, attended with terrible thunder and lightnings, and such frequent rains that it is called the rains.

Between the southern latitudes of 10 degrees and 30 degrees in the Indian Ocean, the general trade wind, about the S. E. by S., is found to blow all the year in the same manner as in the like latitudes in the Ethiopic Ocean; and, during the six months from May to December, these winds redden to within two degrees of the equator; but during the other six months, from November to June, a N. W. wind blows in the tract lying between 3 degrees and 10 degrees of S. latitude, in the meridian of the north end of Madagascar, and between 2 degrees and 12 degrees of S. latitude near the longitude of Sumatra and Java.

In the tract between Sumatra and the African coast, and from 3 degrees S. latitude quite northward to the Asiatic coasts, including the Arabian Sea and the Gulf of Bengal, the monsoons blow from September to April on the N. E.; and from March to October on the S. W. In the former half year the winds are more steady and gentle, and the weather clearer than in the latter, and the wind is more strong and steady in the Arabian Sea than in the Bay of Bengal.

Between the island of Madagascar and the coast of Africa, and thence northward as far as the equator, there is a tract wherein, from April to October, there is a constant fresh S. S. W. wind, which to the northward changes into a W. S. W. wind, blowing at that time in the Arabian Sea.

To the eastward of Sumatra and Malacca, on the north of the equator, and along the coasts of Cambodia and Siam, quite through the Philippines, as far as Japan, the monsoons blow northerly and southerly; the northern setting in about October or November, and the southern about May. These winds are not quite so certain as those in the Arabian seas.

Between Sumatra and Java to the west, and New Guinea to the east, the same northerly and southerly winds are observed, but the first half year monsoon inclines to the N. W., and the latter to the S. E. These winds begin a month or six weeks after those in the Chinese seas set in, and are quite as variable.

These contrary winds do not shift from one point to its opposite all at once; in some places the time of the change is attended with calms, in others by variable winds; and it often happens on the coasts of Coromandel and China, towards the end of the monsoons, that there are most violent storms, greatly resembling the hurricanes in the West Indies, wherein the wind is so very strong that hardly anything can resist its force.

REPRESENTATIONS OF THE EARTH'S SURFACE.

The earth, as before described, is divided by the equator into two equal hemispheres, of which the north and south poles are the respective centres. As in all circles, the equator is divided into 360 degrees of 60 minutes' geographic miles, which, on the equator, are equal to about 68 2-3rds British miles. Through these divisions the meridians of longitude are imagined to pass and cross the poles, and are, of course, at right angles to the equator. These meridians are also divided into 360 degrees, or by the equator and the poles into four quadrants of 90 degrees each, and these are called degrees of latitude, counting from 0 degree on the equator to 90 degrees at the poles. These consist of 60 geographic miles, but, from the ellipticity of the earth, they are not of equal length, but increase toward the poles (see Table on page v.). This variation is generally disregarded in maps and representations of the earth. The parallels of latitude intersect the meridians at right angles, and are parallel to the equator. As they approach the pole, it will be evident that they approach each other, and consequently that the degrees of longitude decrease in length in proportion, till, at 60 degrees of latitude, it is but one-half the length of the equatorial degree, and at the pole it is nothing.

The only correct representation of the earth's surface can be made on a body of a similar form, or a globe, but as they are very inconvenient, or inapplicable to most purposes, maps are constructed on a flat surface, which are far more useful and preferable to a globe, but they distort, in a greater or less degree, the true figures of the countries they represent. They may be divided into three classes: maps, or representations of the land, showing its rivers, mountains, towns, &c.; charts, or representations of the sea, for nautical purposes, showing the depths of water, sandbanks, rocks, &c.; and plans, which represent minutely a small portion of a country, as a town or district, showing its roads, buildings, &c. A map illustrates geography, a chart belongs to hydrography, and a plan shows the topography of a place.

The projection of a map is a representation of the meridians and parallels on a plane surface, and may be generally considered as being constructed on two methods—globular projection and Mercator's projection. Maps are on globular, and charts always on Mercator's projection; while in plans, from the small portion represented, it is usually disregarded. Globular projection may be thus described. A circle of the intended diameter of the hemisphere is divided by a horizontal line passing through its centre, and representing the equator; through the centre, and at right angles to the equator, is drawn another line, which will represent a meridian; where this line cut the circle, at the top and bottom, will be the north and south poles, and the circle, which will represent one-half the globe, is thus divided into four equal quadrants. The equator is divided into 180 parts or degrees, and the centre meridian into 180 degrees also; which will represent the degrees of latitude, reckoning from the equator N. and S. The circumference is divided into 360 degrees, or 90 degrees in each quadrant, corresponding with the centre meridian. Curved lines are now drawn through each of the subdivisions of the central meridian to those in the circumference on each side of it, and through those on the equator to the north and south poles. The whole hemisphere, or circle, will now be covered with a network of lines, each supposed to be a degree, or 60 geographic miles apart, and on these lines the configurations of the earth's surface is represented, and the distances and area are to be calculated by them; but they are unequal; the degrees of latitude, that is, the parallels, diverge from the centre, which is supposed to be 180 degrees long, to the circumference, which is also supposed to be of two portions of 180 degrees each, and consequently a degree of the circumference is much longer than on the centre, and does not bear the same proportion to the degree of longitude; so that in all large portions of the earth, it must be represented more or less distorted on a flat surface. A map of a country, as Spain, Italy, England, is represented on a portion of such a projection, and the degrees of latitude and longitude are numbered on the margin, the top being usually considered as the north, and the right hand the east, unless otherwise expressed.

Mercator's projection was invented by Gerhard Mercator, a Flemish geographer, in 1566; but the true principles on which it is constructed were first explained by Edward Wright, an Englishman, in 1599. It is used for charts, and possesses several advantages over all other projections, though it differs essentially from the true figure of the earth; by it the bearings and distances between places may be ascertained with much greater facility.

In this projection the figure of the earth is supposed to be developed on a cylinder, instead of a sphere. Mercator conceived a transparent cylinder of infinite length, in which an elastic globe of the same diameter is placed, and on which the meridians and parallels are drawn. By expanding this globe it will fill the cylinder, and it is evident that while the equatorial degrees remain the same, by being confined by the cylinder, the meridians, as they approach the pole, instead of converging or decreasing as before, become parallel and equal, and the degrees of latitude are increased exactly in the same proportion or ratio as the expansion of those of longitude; and therefore the great difference between this and other projections is, that the degrees of longitude are invariable, and represented by parallel straight lines, and the degrees of latitude are made to bear the same proportion to the longitude, or increasing toward the poles, while the true figure is that in which the longitude decreases, and the latitude invariable.

All straight lines on the earth's surface will be represented by straight lines on this projection, and all bearings are truly represented, though the relative size of the countries represented is increased in proportion to the latitude; so that the polar regions will be on a much larger scale than those on the equator, though not otherwise distorted. There are other modes of projecting representations of the earth on a plane surface, but the above are the most generally used.

AA, a term applied anciently to a collection of waters, derived from the Latin, aqua, and still the name of several European rivers; the following are the principal, viz.—in Russia, runs through the Duchy of Courla; a into the bay of Riga; in Saxony, falling into Lake Blanken; in Switzerland, falling into Lake Lucerne, into Lake Walstadt, and into the Aar river; in Westphalia, falling into the Wehr, into the Vecht, and into the Ems; in Holland, falling into the Vecht, at Swartsluys, into the Oldysse!; in Overysse!, falling into Lake Giter; in Brabant, falling into the Dommel; in Pas de Calais, France, falling into the sea at Gravelines, &c.

AACH, the name of a river in Switzerland, and of two others in Suabia, and also of a town in Suabia, about 30 miles N. of Constanz.

AACHS, the chief town of a small district of the same name, in the government of Munster, one of the Prussian states, in the province of Westphalia.

AALBORG, one of the four bishoprics of the peninsular province of Jutland, being the most northerly part, and about 120 square miles in extent, containing about 90,000 inhabitants. The chief town of the same name is situate on the south coast of the Gulf of Lyndford, in N. lat. 56 50. E. long. 9. 46. Next to Copenhagen it is the most considerable town in Denmark. It has an exchange for merchants; the episcopal palace, two churches, two poor-houses, an hospital, convent, and cathedral school-house, are all respectable edifices; and it has a considerable trade in corn, herrings, fire-arms, saddles, gloves, &c. It was taken by the Swedes in 1643 and 1658.

AAR, AARS, or AR, a large river in Switzerland, which rises in a lake, near Mount Saalberg, in the S. of the Canton of Bern, and, running N. W. through the whole extent of the lake of Brienz and Thun to Bern, takes a circuitous course to Soleure; whence it flows E. to Arburg, and N. E. to Brugg; below which, being joined by the Reuss and Limmet, it falls into the Rhine opposite Waldschut; also the name of two other rivers, one rising in the Grand Duchy of the Lower Rhine, falling into the Rhine; the other rising in Nassau, falling into the Lahn.

AARAU, chief town of Argau canton, Switzerland, seated on the Aar; has a brisk trade, and manufactures of linen and cutlery, and is the place of general assembly for the Protestant cantons.

AARGAU, or ARGOVIA, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by the Rhine. It was made an independent canton in 1798; and in 1803 received further accessions of territory, and from one of the smallest became one of the largest cantons. Area, 650 sq. m. Pop. in 1836, 182,755. It has considerable manufactures, and is tolerably fruitful. A portion of the canton profess the Catholic religion, and the first outbreak of the recent and present troubles of the republics of Switzerland, was the radical parts of the canton seizing and confiscating the convents in the Fryamt and their possessions in 1841, an act of injustice ratified by the Diet in direct violation of the Pact entered into by the confederation.

AARHUS, the second of the four bishoprics of Jutland; it is a very fruitful district, on the E. side of the peninsula, extending for about 60 miles along the shore of the Cattegat; bounded on the W. by the bishopric of Viborg, intersected by numerous streams, abounding with fish, and is richly adorned with forests. It contains the residences of a great portion of the nobility of Denmark. The chief town of the same name is situate on the coast, in 56. 10. N. lat. 10. 13. E. long. The town is divided into two unequal parts by water conveyed from a lake about 15 miles in the interior. It is large and populous; and has six gates, two principal churches, two market-places, a university, a free-school, and a well-endowed hospital, and has a considerable trade in grain, timber, &c.

AARON'S ISLAND. See St. MALO.
AARONSBURG, a town of Northumberland co. in Pennsylvania, North America, 5 miles below Sunbury.

AASZY, a river of Syria, the ancient Orontes. It rises in Mount Lebanon, and, passing Antakia (Antioch), falls into the Mediterranean at Souvadia.

ABABLE, a tribe of Bedouin Arabs, in Nubia, on the Red Sea.

ABACH, or WEITENBURG, a market town in Lower Bavaria, seated on the Danube, 7 miles from Ratisbon. It is defended by a citadel, and is remarkable for Roman antiquities, as well as for its mineral waters, which are celebrated for curing various diseases. Long. 11. 56. E. lat. 48. 53. N.

ABACO, one of the Bahama islands, called by the older geographers Lucaya, a name sometimes applied to the whole group, lying at the S. E. end of the Little Bahama Bank. It is unimportant. Area, 700 square miles. Pop. in 1842, 1,591.

ABADEH, or SUEIK ABADÉ, a village of Egypt, on the left bank of the Nile, 80 miles S. of Cairo. Immense architectural ruins testify its having been the site of a great and populous city.

ABADIIH, a considerable town at the mouth of the Tigris, province of Fars, Persia.

ABAKANSK, a town situate on a branch of the river Yenesei, in the province of Kolyma, government of Tobolsk, Asiatic Russia. It was founded in 1707, and rebuilt in 1725, and since fortified: some ancient tombs, with fine inscriptions, bespeak it to have been a place of importance prior to the conquest of Siberia by Russia. N. lat. 54. E. long. 91. 14.

ABALAK, a town in the vicinity of Siberia, celebrated for an image of the Virgin, which is visited by many pilgrims, and carried in procession annually to Tobolsk.

ABASCAY, a province of Peru, S. America; the chief town thereof, of the same name, is situate about 60 miles N. W. of Cusco. There is also a river of the same name, flowing through the province, and another town in Cuenca, province of Quito.

ABASO, a considerable town of Italy, in the vicinity of Padua, distinguished for its hot sulphureous baths.

ABASCIA, or ABRIAT, a country of Asiatic Russia, lying between the Caspian and Black Seas. The inhabitants are estimated at about 150,000, subsisting chiefly by hunting and plunder, and speaking a language peculiar to themselves.

ABBERBURY, or ALBERBURY, a large parish divided into 5 townships, in Shropshire, and 4 others in Montgomeryshire. The village of Alberbury is 7 miles W. of Shrewsbury. It was formerly the site of an alien priory and castle.

ABBEVILLE, a considerable town of France, in the department of Somme, and late province of Picardy, seated in a pleasant valley, where the river Somme divides into several branches, and separates the town into two parts. It has a woollen manufactory. It lies 20 miles N. W. from Amiens, 60 S. of Calais, and 80 N. W. of Paris. The church of St. Wulfran is interesting. It is passed by the Boulogne and Amiens Railway.

ABBEVILLE, a county of S. Carolina, about 700 square miles in extent. The lands are agreeably diversified with hill and dale, well watered, and productive. Pop. 23,167. The chief town, of the same name, is situate on Savannah river, 118 miles W. by N. of Columbia.

ABBEY BOYLE, a town in Ireland, on the river Boyle, 107 miles from Dublin: near the town are the picturesque ruins of the abbey.

ABBEYFEALE, a parish in Connello, Upper Barony, county of Limerick, Ireland. It had formerly a monastery, and in the vicinity are the ruins of Part Castle.

ABBEY-GREENS, a village in the parish of Lesmahagow, county of Lanark; 6 miles S. W. of the town of Lanark. It had formerly an abbey, and also a priory.

ABBEYLEIX, a parish in Cullinagh Barony, Queen's co., Ireland. The town is sometimes called Clonkyne; 62 miles S. W. of Dublin.

ABBEY-MANIOS, a parish in Ireland, county of Cork; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. of Bandon Bridge.

ABBEY-SIDE, a parish in Ireland, county of Waterford.

ABBOTS-ANS, ABBOTS-LEIGH, or ABBERTLY, ABBOTS-MORTON, ABBOTS-WOOD, co. of Worcester; ABBOTS, or PAGET'S BROMLEY, ABBOTS, or APWOOD-CASTLE, Stafford; ABBOTSBURY, ABBOTS-STOKE, Dorset; ABBOTS, or ABBAS-COMBE, ABBOTS-ISLE, ABBOTS-LEIGH, Somerset; ABBOTS-HAM, ABBOTS-KERSWELL, Devon; ABBOTSIDE, High and Low, N. Towns and villages, in the several counties affixed in England. The prefix, Abbeley, denotes their having formerly been monastic abodes, but none of them now deserve any particular notice, except Abbotbury, in Dorset, for the former magnificence of its abbey; and Abbotsworthy, as having given birth to Nicholas Brakespeare, who attained to pontifical dignity, as Pope Adrian IV.

ABB'S HEAD, ST., a promontory, forming the southern extremity of the Firth of Forth, lying in the parish of Collingham, and the county of Berwick, Scotland, about 10 miles N. of Berwick, and the same distance S. from Dunbar. W. long 2. 8. lat. 55. 55. N.

ABDA, a small but fertile prov. of Morocco.
ABENRADE, or APENRADE, a town of Denmark, in Sleswick, now very flourishing, being double the extent it was formerly, and built in a better taste. It is seated on a spacious open bay in the Little Belt, surrounded on three sides by high mountains, which render the harbour safe. Pop. 2800. Long. 9. 26. E. lat. 55. 3. N.

ABENSBERG, or ABESSBERG, a town in the circle of Regen, Bavaria, seated on the Abens, near the Danube, 15 miles S. W. of Ratisbon.

AHEN, a village in Caernarvonshire, N. Wales, $\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Bangor, on the direct road from London to Holyhead. The word Aber signifies the fall of a lesser water into a greater, and usually refers to a place situate at the mouth of a river.

ABERAVON, in Glamorgan, Wales, 18 miles N. W. from Cowbridge. In the neighbourhood are extensive iron, copper, and tin works. It is included in the Swansea dist. for sending 1 member to parliament. Its harbour, Port Talbot, is on the South Wales railway.

ABERBROTHOCK, or ABRBROATH, an ancient royal burgh and sea-port, situate at the estuary of the r. Brothock, partly in a part of the same name, and partly in that of St. Vigans, in the co. of Forfar, Scotland, 56 miles N. N. E. of Edinburgh, in 56. 34. N. lat. and 2. 35. W. long. William I., surnamed the Lion, king of Scotland, founded a magnificent abbey at Arbroath, in 1178, and conferred upon it very extensive immunities. Some vestiges of the building still remain to attest its former grandeur. A harbour was formed in 1194, to the eastward of the present one; the importance of the town declined with the devastation of the abbey, during the ruthless period of the reformation. The commerce of the town revived about the year 1738, when the linen manufacture was introduced, which progressively extended up to the commencement of the war in 1793, when it was vastly promoted by the increased demand for sail-cloth. 4000 to 5000 tons of shipping belong to the town, part of which is employed in the importation of flax, deals, &c. from the Baltic. A new town-hall has been more recently erected, and the town at large has undergone considerable improvement, and is united to Dundee, &c. by a railway. The harbour, at spring tides, will only admit vessels of about 200 tons burthen, but being exceedingly well sheltered and commodious, and easily made, it affords security to vessels of easy draught of water. Arbroath is, however, a manufacturing rather than a commercial town. The Bell-rock lighthouse, one of the principal buildings of this kind in Britain, is off this town. It has 3 fairs annually, 31st of Jan., 3rd Wed. of June, and 18th of July.

ABERCONWAY, or CONWAY, a sea-port in and par., Wales, co. Caernarvon, at the mouth of the Conway r., 14 miles N. by W. of Bangor. It is surrounded by walls strengthened by towers, which are still in good preservation, being one of the most complete ancient fortifications in the kingdom. The remains of its castle, built in the reign of Edward I., 1284, stand on a rocky promontory, and consist of 8 round towers, outworks, &c. The town itself is poor and inconsiderable. The new line of road passes through this town, and crosses the Conway by a suspension bridge of 300 feet span. The river is also crossed near to the suspension bridge by an immense tubular iron bridge, carrying the Holyhead railway. The harbour is obstructed by shoals. Market on Friday.

ABERCORN, a vil. and par. in the co. of Linlithgow, Scotland, on the S. bank of the Frith of Forth, 12 miles W. by N. of Edinburgh. A monastery existed here in the 7th century; and the castle of Abercorn was a place of great strength in the family of the Douglasses. It was dismantled in 1445, and no trace of either monastery or castle now remains. Abercorn still gives the British title of Marquis, and the Scottish title of Earl, to a branch of the family of Hamilton. The Roman wall is said to have begun in this parish.

ABERCORN, a town of Georgia, N. America, 13 miles N. W. of Savannah.

ABERDARE, a town, Glamorgan, Wales, 4 miles W. from Merthyr Tydvil, connected with important mining operations, included in the Cardiff dist. for sending 1 member to parliament.

ABERDEEN, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. W. by Banffshire, and the r. Deveron; on the N. and N. E. by the German Ocean; on the S. by the co. Kincardine, Forfar, and Perth; and on the W. by Elgin and Inverness-shire. It is divided into 8 districts; the S. part is wild, rugged, and mountainous, some of the hills rising to the height of 4000 ft. above the level of the sea, covered, in some parts, with extensive natural forests; the N. part is bleak and barren; but the midland parts of the co. are more fertile, and, since the period of 1786, have undergone improvements equal to any part of Scotland. Its rivers are the Dee, Don, Ythan, Bogie, Urie, Ugie, Cruden, and the Deveron; all of which abound, more or less, with salmon, and on the Ythan some valuable pearls have been found. Its mineral productions are various, but none of much note, except the granite, the exportation of which constantly employs several hundred tons of shipping. It sends 1 member to parliament.

ABERDEEN, the principal city in the north of Scotland, situated on the coast of the German Ocean, at the efflux of the rivers Dee and Don, 127 miles N. E. from Edinburgh. It has an observatory; in long. 2. 29. W. lat. 57. 9. N. Under the denomination of Aberdeen are comprehended two towns, distinguished by the Old and New, which, however, are almost united by their respective suburbs.

ABERDEEN, OLD, formerly Aberdon, in the parish of Old Machar, or St. Machar, is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the mouth of the river Don, about a mile north of the New Town. It is of great antiquity, and was of some importance so long ago as 893, when, according to tradition, king Gregory the Great conferred on it some peculiar privileges; but no authentic records are extant prior to 1154. By charter, the free burgesses of the town are vested with the power of choosing their own magistracy, who are a provost, 3 bailies, a treasurer, and council, with the deacons of 6 incorporated trades. The town consists chiefly of one long street. There is a neat town-house—a new building—and a trades' hospital for decayed freemen and their widows, and an hospital for 12 poor men, founded by Bishop William Dunbar, in 1532. But the chief ornament of Old Aberdeen is the large and stately fabric of King's College, founded by Bishop Elphinstone, in 1494, situated on the S. side of the town. It is built round a square, with cloisters on the south side. The structure contains a chapel, library, museum, common hall, and lecture-rooms, with a long range of modern houses, for the accommodation of the professors and students. The library and museum are well furnished. The old town, being formerly the seat of a bishop, had a most magnificent cathedral, first founded in 1154, but the present edifice was begun by Bishop Kinnimonth, in 1357, and was 80 years in building; it was dedicated to St. Machar, but, like many others, it fell a sacrifice to the religious frenzy of the reformers. Two very antique spires, and one aisle, which is used as a church, is all that is now left. In this cathedral there was a fine library, which was also destroyed. Over the Don, at Old Aberdeen, there is a noble Gothic bridge, built by Bishop Cheyne, in 1281, of one arch, 67 feet span, and 34½ high from the surface of the river. On both sides it rests on a solid ledge of rock.

ABERDEEN, NEW, is the capital of the shire of Aberdeen. For extent, trade, and beauty, it far exceeds any town in the north of Scotland. It is built on a gentle eminence, rising from a small bay, formed by the river Dee, over which there is an elegant bridge of 7 arches, rebuilt in 1724, the first having been built by Bishop Dunbar, in 1532. The streets are numerous, spacious, and well paved; the houses are built of granite (from adjoining quarries), generally four stories high, remarkably neat and elegant, having, almost universally, gardens in their rear. The whole town is about two miles in circumference. The municipal government is vested in a provost, 4 bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, a town-clerk, a town council, and 7 deacons of incorporated trades. The town is a royal burgh, and, uniting with Aberbrothock, Brechin, Inverbarvie, and Montrose, sends a member to parliament. New Aberdeen is graced with an elegant college, founded by George Keith, the Earl Marischal of Scotland, in 1593. Its other public buildings are the town-hall, market-house, the house of the Aberdeen Banking Company, a cross, an octagon building of curious workmanship, a dispensary, infirmary, and lunatic asylum, a poor-house, bridewell, gaol, and extensive barracks. An elegant street from the S. is continued over an arch of cut granite, 132 ft. span, 29 in height, and 40 wide between the parapets. Aberdeen had formerly several religious houses; besides the university, there is a respectable grammar-school and several almshouses, and upwards of 20 places for religious worship. The harbour was formerly dangerous, but has been rendered safe and commodious, by a pier of 1200 ft. in length, and the construction of wet docks. Aberdeen was formerly celebrated for the manufacture of knit stockings, and woollen fabrics generally. The linen and cotton manufactures are now carried on to a great extent. There is a valuable salmon fishery in the Dee; a considerable number of vessels are built at Aberdeen, and about 40,000 tons belong to it. It has several public breweries, rope works, iron foundries, &c., and three fairs annually, on the 31st Jan., 3rd Wed. in June, and 13th of July: it is connected by railways with Stirling, Dundee, Edinburgh, and also London, 551 m. distant. The whale and other fisheries employ much shipping, so that upon the whole between 200 and 400 vessels, collectively of the burden of 40,000 tons, belong to this port.

ABERTON, a parish in the N. of Aberdeenshire, on the S. coast of Murray Frith. Also another parish and village 2 miles W. of Burnt Island, in the county of Fife, Scotland.

ABERFFRAW, a village pleasantly situated near the coast of Caernarvon bay, on the isle of Anglesea, 9 miles S. by W. of Llangefni, on the direct road from Bangor to Holyhead; it had formerly a palace, at which 11 Princes of Wales are said to have resided. It has 4 fairs annually, 7th March, Wednesday after Trinity, 23rd October, and 11th December.

ABERGAVENNY, a town of Monmouthshire, situate at the confluence of the river Gavenny with the Usk; over the latter is a fine bridge of 15 arches, 12 miles W. of Monmouth; there are some considerable iron works in the vicinity. It is on the Newport and Hereford railway. It has a considerable market on Tues., and 3 fairs annually, on May 1st, Tues. after Trinity, and Sep. 25th.

ABERGWEY, tu., Denbighshire, Wales, pleasantly situate on the coast of the Irish Sea, on the direct road from Chester to Holyhead, 7 miles W. of St. Asaph, and 218 from London; it is much frequented in the summer season for bathing, has a market on Saturday, and 3 fairs annually.

ABINGWILLY, a village near Caernarthen, S. Wales, situate at the confluence of the river Gully, with the Towy. It contains the episcopal palace of the see of St. David's.

ABERNETHY, a town in Perthshire, Scotland, seated near the junction of the Erne with the Tay, 7 miles from Perth on the railway. It is said to have been the seat of the Pictish kings, as well as the see of an archbishop. In the town church-yard is a round tower 74 feet high, and 48 in circumference, the only one besides that of Brechin in Scotland. It participates in the manufactures of Perth, and has 3 fairs annually. Also the name of another parish, from 150 to 180 square miles in extent, partly in Elgin and partly in Inverness-shire, abounding with natural forests of fir, which form an extensive traffic.

ABERYSTWYTH, a town of S. Wales, in Cardiganshire, seated on the Ystwith near its confluence with the Rhydol, where they fall into the bay of Cardigan; over the Rhydol is a handsome stone bridge. It lies 207 miles W. N. W. from London, and 39 N. E. from Cardigan. It was formerly fortified with a castle, and defended with walls; but both are now in ruins. It is, however, a flourishing town, having a great trade in lead, a considerable fishery of herrings, cod, and whittings, and a good weekly market on Monday; about 8000 tons of shipping belong to this town. In the bathing season, it is much frequented as a fashionable watering-place. Long. 3. 58. W., lat. 52. 25. N. It is contributory, in the Cardigan dist. in sending one member to parliament.

ABHAD, BAHR EL, or White river, Africa. Generally acknowledged as the true head of the Nile. The sources of this stream are still unknown, and its course is also, with the exception of that portion of it nearest to its junction, and still problematical. An expedition was lately sent by Mehemet Ali, the Pacha of Egypt, which penetrated to about lat. 3. N. It is most probable that it takes its rise on the south side of the snowy mountains, S. of Abyssinia, and flowing in a W. course, proceeds in a N. E. direction and joins the other principal branch, the Bahr el Azrek, or Blue river, at Halfaiah, forming the peninsula of Sennaar; the combined streams are then known by the name of the Nile. It derives its name from its whitish waters, consequent upon the clay which it holds suspended. At the point where it joins the Blue River it is 600 yards across, but is much larger a little above; and during the inundation, it sometimes covers a breadth of 21 miles in some parts. In its ordinary state, its depth is from 3 to 4 fathoms in mid-channel. See Nile.

ABINGDON, a mkt. and borough tn. in Berkshire, England, and, with the exception of Reading, the chief tn. in the co. It is situate on the S. bank of the river Thames, 6 miles S. of Oxford, and 56 W. from London. It is a place of great antiquity, and has frequently been the abode of royalty. The market-place is spacious, in the centre of which is a respectable edifice, a spacious hall, supported by lofty pillars, in which the summer assizes for the co. are held, the space beneath serving for a market-place. The market for grain and malt on Mon. and Fri. is very great, and it has a considerable manufacture of coarse linen, sacking, &c. It is divided into two parishes, each having a church, and sends one member to parliament.

ABINGDON, a post town, and capital of Washington county, Virginia, situated near the east side of the north branch of Holstein river. Here is a jail, and a court-house, where the district and county courts are held. It is 314 miles S. W. of Richmond, and 372 from Philadelphia.

ABINGTON, a township, in the state of Maryland, and another in Massachusetts, N. America; and of a village, 12 miles N. of Philadelphia.

Abo, a sea-port, and chief town of what was formerly Swedish Finland, but which was wrested from that power by Russia, in 1808. The port and town of Abo are finely located in N. lat. 60. 27. W. long. 22. 18, at the southern extremity of the Promontory of Finland, on the E. shore of the Gulf of Bothnia, where it forms its junction with the Gulf of Finland. Under the Swedish government Abo was the see of a bishop, suffragan of Upsal, and had a university, founded by Queen Christina, in 1640; the university was destroyed by fire in 1827, and it was then removed to Helsingfors; and also a school, founded by Gustavus Adolphus, for 300 scholars. It was the seat of the conference between Russia and Sweden, in 1743. The town has flourished considerably, since its transfer to Russia; its chief trade is in timber, deals, and grain. Pop. about 12,000.

ABOMEY, a populous town, the capital of the kingdom of Dahomey, on the Gold Coast of Africa. N. lat. 7. 35. E. long. 2. 55. Pop. about 25,000.

ABOUKIN, a town of Egypt, in N. lat. 31. 18. E. long. 30. 38, about 6 leagues E. of Alexandria. A British army of 12,000 men, commanded by Sir Ralph Abercrombie, landed here in 1801. The bay, formed on the W. by a neck of land on which the town is situate, and on the E. by another neck of land which bounds the Rosetta branch of the Nile, is very spacious, and will for ever be memorable in history, as the scene of one of the most splendid and decisive naval battles on record, in which 9 French ships of the line were taken, and 2 others destroyed, by Lord Nelson, on the 1st August, 1798.

ANOYNE, par. Aberdeen, Scotland, 5 miles W. of Kincardine.

ARRANTES, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, seated on the Tagus, 45 miles E. by N. of Lisbon, and belonging to a marquis of that title. It is situated on high ground, surrounded with gardens and olive-trees, and contains about 35,000 inhabitants, and has 4 convents, an hospital, and an alms-house.

ANATOLIOS, dangerous shoals on the coast of Brazil. S. lat. 17. 58. W. long. 38. 26.

ANBRZZO, one of the four great provinces of Naples, bounded on the E. by the Gulf of Venice, on the N. and W. by Ancona, Umbria, and the Campagna di Roma, and on the S. by the Terra di Lavoro and Molise. It is divided into two parts by the river Pescara, called Uteriore and Cteriore. The former has Aquila, and the latter Sulmona, for its capital. It is fertile in corn, rice, fruits, saffron, vines, and olives. Pop. 735,931.

ANS, a town in France, in the department of Ardeche, formerly the chief town of Vivares, and a bishop's see, now in a very ruinous state.

ANUTIGE, a town in Upper Egypt, on the site of the ancient Abotis, near the Nile, where great quantities of poppies grow, of which the natives make the best opium in the Levant. Long. 33. 0. E. lat. 26. 30. N.

ABYSSINIA or ABUSSYNTA, a kingdom on the E. side of Africa, extending in length from about the 9th to the 17th deg. of N. lat. and its southern base, from about the 35th to the 43rd deg. of E. long. and at the N. from about the 35th to the 38th of do. forming an area of about 140,000 sq. miles, bounded on the N. by Sennar, on the E. by the Arabian Gulf, or Red Sea, and on the S. and W. by very undefined limits, and countries very little known. A range of rugged mountains of considerable altitude, extending along the whole line of coast of the Red Sea, shut in Abyssinia, and nearly excluded it from all advantages of maritime intercourse. Some fine and fruitful plains pervade the southern part of the territory, but the prevailing characteristic of Abyssinia is mountainous and wild, and its inhabitants are as rude and ferocious as their country is wild and rugged. Its climate is various, but on the whole fine; it is exceedingly rich in vegetable productions, both of utility and beauty. The elephant, rhinoceros, buffaloes, leopards of various species, zebra, and especially the hyena, abound; the latter is particularly ferocious and destructive; there are no tigers, and the lion is not common; there are various other wild animals, as well as the domestic ones common to Europe; the horses are strong and handsome, and there is a species of oxen with horns 4 ft. in length, and 20 inches in circumference at the root; the hippopotami and crocodile are common to the swamps and rivers which flow into the Nile. Amongst the numerous feathered tribes common to the country is the golden and black eagle, and some owls of extraordinary size and beauty; bees abound to such a degree, that honey, in the southern parts of the country, forms the staple article of production, and standard of value in exchange for all other commodities, and constitutes the principal article of food; locusts commit great devastation, and there is a species of fly extremely annoying, and even destructive to the cattle in the rainy season. The whole of the external traffic of Abyssinia is carried on at Massowah, a small island on the coast of the Red Sea, in N. lat. 15. 34. E. long. 39. 37, where elephants' teeth, rhinoceros' horns, gold-dust, honey, wax, and slaves, are exchanged for various goods. The country is at present torn by insurrections, so that nothing can be said of its political divisions. Its states were Tigre, N. of which the towns are Adowa, Antale, Dixan, and Axum; 2nd. Amhara, W. of the Tacazze river, of which Gondar and Embras are the chief towns, and the former the capital of the whole kingdom; Shoa is now a separate kingdom, of which Ankobar is the chief town. The Abyssinians profess to be Christians, and some of their churches are spacious edifices, but their religious ceremonies are made up of the crude formalities of the Jewish worship, and of the Greek Christians. Their language is a dialect of the Arabic, and is called the Amharic. It contains a population of, perhaps, 4,500,000.

ACADIE, co. Canada, dist. of Montreal. There are manufactures of cloth, flannel, and linen. P. p. 11,470.

ACAPULCO, a town of Mexico, on the shores of the Pacific Ocean, in lat. 16. 55. N. and 103. 54. W. long. During the domination of Spanish rule in South America, Acapulco was the principal trading town of all New Spain; one, and sometimes two ships, annually, of several 100 tons burthen, used to arrive from the Philippine Islands, laden with all the choicest productions of Asia, to be exchanged for the gold and silver of Mexico; but this intercourse ceased with the wars which followed the French revolution in 1792, since which period to the present time, the commerce of all S. America has been exposed to numerous vicissitudes, and Acapulco has sunk into the utmost insignificance. Its harbour is one of the finest in the world, being formed into a basin by the small island of Roqueta, and defended by a fort on the N. W. The town contains only about 4000 inhabitants, and is exceedingly unhealthy, the temperature prevailing as high as 96, and hardly ever below 86, of Fahrenheit.

ACASAHASTLAN, a river of Mexico, in the province of Vera Paz, which runs into the Gulf of Dulce. There is also a village of the same name, in the province of Chiapa.

ACAYUCAN, an Indian settlement on the co. of the Gulf of Mexico.

ACCOMAC, a co. of Virginia, United States, forming the N. part of a promontory, bounded on the W. by Chesapeake bay, and on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, extending from the S. E. corner of the state of Maryland. Pop.

in 1840, 17,096. Accomac Town, 207. E. by N. of Drummond, is the chief town.

ACCRINGTON, New, township, Lancashire, England. Here are extensive cotton thread manufactories, and a colliery.

ACHEN, a kingdom, forming the N. W. part of the island of Sumatra, the head of Point Pedro, the most northerly part being in 5. 42. N. lat. and 95. 35. E. long. and extending about 50 miles E. by S. During the early period of the intercourse of Europe with Asia, by the Cape of Good Hope, Achen was a powerful state, and carried on an extensive trade with the Malay and Coromandel coasts, and other parts of Asia; and on the Portuguese successively attempting to form a settlement upon the Island of Sumatra, in the early part of the 16th century, they were completely expelled by the Acheneese; and, although considerably declined in power and importance, the Acheneese are still an active, and, when compared with other Asiatics, an efficient and industrious people. The chief town of the same name is situate on a river about 2 miles from the bay formed by King's Point, in N. lat. 5. 33. and 95. 17. E. long. and Point Pedro above mentioned.

ACHILL, a district consisting of a peninsula and an island, in the county of Mayo, on the western coast of Ireland, in 54. 7. N. lat. 10. 31. W. long. The inhabitants, altogether about 4,500, are in no better condition either in civilization or way of living, than their ancestors of the 13th or 14th century; they are now somewhat improving under the influence of schools, &c., established by some church missionaries.

ACHMIM, or EKHMIM, a town of Egypt, seated on the Nile; the ancient Panopolis. It has manufactories of coarse cottons, and stands on a small eminence, on the right bank of the Nile, 200 miles S. of Cairo. Of its ancient splendour but little now remains, but it is still one of the handsomest towns in Upper Egypt. Long. 31. 56. E. lat. 26. 40. N.

ACHONRY, a parish in Lency barony, co. of Sligo, Ireland. It is both a Protestant and Roman Catholic bishopric; there are in the parish 1 church and 1 chapel-of-ease, besides Roman Catholic chapels. About one-half of the parish is arable, the other is waste land. Pop. 17,986; area, 60,896 acres.

ACHEN, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, with a citadel, on the Elbe, 5 miles N. W. of Dessau.

ACT BEALE, a town in Sicily, at the foot of Mount Etna. It is clean and healthy, and is built on a mass of basaltic lava. Pop. about 14,000.

ACKWORTH, township, Yorkshire, 3½ miles S. S. W. of Pontefract. Here is a benevolent school of the Quakers, founded in 1777.

ACKLAM, a village 12 miles from York, where the body of the Emperor Severus, who died at York, was burnt to ashes, agreeably to the custom of the Romans.

ACOMA, or St. ESTEVAN DE ACOMA, a town of New Mexico, seated on a hill, with a good castle. The town is ascended by a flight of steps cut out of the rock. It was formerly the capital of that province. Long. 104. 15. W. lat. 35. 0. N.

ACOSEAGA, one of the provinces of Chili, S. 32. 70. W. It is inconsiderable both in extent and population. There is a town of the same name, and also a river running through the province and that of Quillota, into the sea.

ACOSEAGA, SAN FELIPE, a town of the republic of Chili, in the foregoing province, about 15 miles from the foot of the Andes. It is laid out in the form of a square, in the centre of which is a large open square containing the public edifices. The town is chiefly known for the copper mines in its vicinity, which are worked under English supervision, and lie in the cordillera of the Andes. The pop. of the town is about 12,000, or 13,000.

ACQUA, a town in Tuscany, noted for its warm baths, 15 miles E. of Leghorn.

ACQUA, a town of the Sardinian States, on the river Bormida; it has considerable manufactures of silk. Population about 7000.

ACRA or ACCARA, a territory of Guinea, on the Gold Coast, where some European states have forts, and each fort its village. Lat. 5. 25. N. D. 10. W. long.

ACRE, or St. JEAN D'ACRE, a seaport of Syria, in Palestine, and a bishop's see. It was originally named Archo, and afterwards Ptolemais. It was called by its present name by the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. It is small and well fortified, and appears handsome on approaching it, but the streets are narrow. The houses are built of stone, and have terrace roofs. The town is unhealthy, in consequence of the neighbouring marshes, and stands on a plain at the N. point of a bay, which extends in a semicircle of nine miles, to the point of Mount Carmel, near the mouth of the Kardamah, or ancient Belus. In the time of the crusades it underwent several sieges; and nothing is now to be seen of this ancient city, but the remains of monuments erected by the Christians, and some ruins of a church dedicated to St. Andrew. The palace of the grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem is the residence of the chief of Acre. Here are three mosques, four churches, and a synagogue. The chief articles of commerce are corn and cotton. In 1759, great damage was done by an earthquake; and the year following, 5000 persons, near one third of the inhabitants, died by the plague. In 1799, aided by the British, under Sir Sidney Smith, it withstood a severe siege by the French under Buonaparte, who retreated after failing in the twelfth assault. It was again taken in 1840 by the British, for the Ottoman Porte. It is 27 miles S. of Tyre, and 80 miles N. N. W. of Jerusalem. N. lat. 30. 0. E. long. 35. 10. Pop. about 10,000.

ACRON, a district of the Fantee territory, on the Gold Coast of Africa, about 50 miles E. N. E. of Cape Coast Castle.

ACRON, a village in the barony of Lower Orier, co. Armagh, Ireland. The land is in general of good quality and in fine cultivation. The village is built in a regular manner, and presents a neat and pleasant appearance. Pop. 3,843; of whom 1,423 are Roman Catholics; the rest Churchmen and Presbyterians. Area, 4,500 acres.

ACTON, the name of six villages, and a prefix to ten others, in different parts of England, signifying places originally situate among oaks; ac being the Saxon word for oak.

ACTOPAN, the capital of a district of the same name in the Intendencia de Mexico, about 70 miles N. N. E. of the city of Mexico.

ADALIA, or SATALIEN, a sea-port town in Turkey in Asia, at the head of the gulf of that name, and the largest city on this coast. It is beautifully seated round a small harbour, and is built on the declivity of a hill, rising like the seats of an amphitheatre. Pop. about 8000. It was the ancient Attalia.

ADAMS, a town in Massachusetts, United States, in Berkshire county, on the Hoosack river. It is a valuable township, containing two villages 5 or 6 miles apart. There is a natural bridge over Hudson's brook, a branch of the Hoosack, which is a great curiosity. Saddleback mountain 3,600 ft. high is mostly in the township. 20 miles N. Pittsfield, and 132 W. N. W. of Boston. Population in 1840, 3,703.

ADAM'S BRIDGE, a ledge of sand-banks, connecting Ceylon with the Coromandel coast.

ADAM'S PEAK, a remarkable mountain, the highest in Ceylon; 88 miles E. by S. from Colombo—an object of great veneration.

ADANA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Karamania, and a bishop's see, with a strong castle. It has a trade in corn, wine, and fruits; and is seated on a river of the same name, 12 miles from the Mediterranean, in N. lat. 36. 48. E. long. 85. 8. Population, 10,000.

ADARE, a town in the county of Limerick, Ireland. Here are the ruins of two friaries.

ADDA, a river of Switzerland, which rises in the Grisons, passes through the lake Como, the Valteline, and the N. part of the Milanese, and falls into the Po 5 miles above Cremona.

ADDISON, a county in the state of Vermont, N. America, bounded on the W. for about 25 miles in extent, by lake Champlain. Pop. 23,583. Chief town, Middlebury.

ADEL, a kingdom of Africa, called also ZEILA, from a rich trading town of that name, situated near its coast by the Red Sea.

ADELAIDE, a city of S. Australia, the capital of the colony, on the E. side of the Gulf of St. Vincent, about 7 miles from the port; it is located in an arid and unpleasant spot, and is described as the "dullest and most fly-tormented of cities." It contains about 15,000 inhabitants, but the population has been drained by the gold diggings.

ADELSBERG, a village in Illyria, about half way between Laybach and Trieste. Near it is the most magnificent and extensive stalactitic cavern that has yet been discovered in Europe; it has been explored to a distance of nearly two miles.

ADES, a sea-port of Arabia, and now occupied by the British East India Company, as a depôt for the steamers, &c., traversing the Red Sea. It was ceded to them after the unsuccessful treaty for Socotra, and has since been the scene of some warfare.

ADIGE, a river of Lombardy, which rises S. of the lake of Gluce, and, passing by Tyrol, Brixen, Trent, and Verona, falls into the Gulf of Venice, a little N. of the mouth of the Po.

ADMIRALTY ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, to the N. W. of New Ireland. They were discovered in 1767, and are between twenty and thirty in number; some of them appear of considerable extent; and the W. end of the principal island is in 2. 6. S. lat. and 146. 57. E. long.

ADOUR, a river of France, which rises in the department of Upper Pyrenees, flows by Turbes and Dax, and enters the Bay of Biscay below Bayonne. The Duke of Wellington effected a passage across this river, with the allied English and Spanish army, in the middle of February, 1814, after considerable difficulty, in the presence of the French army, commanded by Marshal Soult.

ADOWA, the capital and residence of the sovereign of Abyssinia, and the place through which the commerce of the inland parts of Abyssinia is maintained with Massowah, in the Red Sea.

ADFAE, a town in Cardigan, Wales; in the Cardigan district for returning one member to parliament.

ADRA, a sea-port of Spain, in Granada, 47 miles S. E. of Granada. In its vicinity are some of the richest lead mines in the world. Long. 3. 7. W. lat. 36. 45. N.

ADHAMITI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, on the E. coast of a gulf, of its name, 70 miles N. by W. of Smyrna. Long 27. 0. E. lat. 39. 35. N.

ADRIA, a town of Italy, in Polesino di Rovigo, which gives name to the Adriatic Sea, and was formerly of great note, but has been much reduced by frequent inundations. It is seated on the Tursaro, 25 miles S. S. W. of Venice.

ADRIAN, a town of the state of Michigan, United States, opposite the junction of the Beaver and Raisin Creeks. It is one of the best flourishing towns in the state, and has a railway to Toledo, 67 miles from Detroit and 501 from Washington. Population, in 1840, 2,496.

ADRIANOPLE, or EDRESEH, a city of European Turkey, in Rumania, the see of a Greek archbishop, and formerly the European seat of the Turkish dominion. It is 8 miles in circumference, situate in a plain, on the river Marissa, which here receives two tributary streams. Several of the mosques are very splendid, and many of the houses neat, but the streets are narrow and devious. The seraglio is separated from the city by the river Arda, and commands an extensive view of the country, which is fertile, and famous for excellent vines. The commerce of the city, by the river, is considerable, and celebrated for its beautiful red dye. The Turks took this city from the Greeks, in 1362. It is 135 miles N. W. of Constantinople. Long. 22. 30. E. lat. 41. N.

ADRIATIC SEA. See VENICE, Gulf of.

ADVENTURE BAY, at the S. E. end of Van Diemen's Land, so called from the ship in which Captain Furneaux sailed. Long. 147. 30. E. lat. 43. 23. S.

ÆTNA, or EÏNA, a celebrated burning mountain of Sicily, now called by the natives Monte Gibello. It is situated in the eastern part of the island, in long. 15. 0. E. lat. 38. 0. N. Pindar, who lived 435 years before Christ, calls it the Pillar of Heaven, on account of its great height, which is 10,874 feet, and its circumference at the base 70 miles. It affords an epitome of all the differences of climate. The summit is a league in circumference, and within, formed like a vast amphitheatre, from whence flames, ashes, and smoke, issue in divers places. Eruptions of this mountain are mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, as happening 1693 years before Christ; and Thucydides speaks of three eruptions, which happened in 734, 477, and 425, B.C. From this period till 1447, there were about 18 different eruptions, the most destructive of which were in 1169 and 1329; there have been other eruptions since, which have done immense damage, particularly those in 1669, 1755, 1780, and 1787. In 1809, eruptions took place in twelve different parts of the mountain, and covered the adjacent lands with lava to the depth of forty feet; and another eruption occurred in 1822.

AFFANE, a parish in the county of Waterford, Ireland. Sir Walter Raleigh first introduced cherries from the Canary Islands to this place.

AFGHANISTAN, a country of Asia, stretching from the mountains of Tartary to the Arabian sea, and from the Indus to the confines of Persia. The inhabitants of this wide domain have no written character, and speak a language peculiar to themselves. They are a robust, hardy race of men, and being generally addicted to a state of predatory warfare, their manners partake of a barbarous insolence. They avow a fixed contempt for the occupations of civil life, and are esteemed the most negligent of religious observances of all the Mahometans. They are of the sect of the Soonees, whilst their neighbours, the Persians, are Sheechs—two sects of the Mahometan religion fiercely opposed to each other. Their common dress consists of a shirt, which falls over the upper part of long and narrow trousers; a woollen vest, fitted closely to the body, and reaching to the mid-leg; and a high turned-up cap of broad cloth or cotton, usually of one colour, and of a conic form, with two small parallel slits in the upper edge of its facing. The principal cities of Afghanistan are Candahar and Cabul, the former of which was the capital; but the late and present sultans have kept their court at Cabul. About the year 1720, an army of Afghans invaded Persia, took Ispahan, and made the sultan Hussein prisoner. They kept possession of Ispahan and the southern provinces for ten years, when they were defeated in several battles, and driven out of the country by Nadir Kuli, commonly known in Europe by the name of Kouli Khan. After Nadir had deposed his sovereign, Shah Thomas, he laid siege to and took Candahar; but afterward received a considerable body of Afghans into his army, who became his favourite foreign troops. On his assassination, in 1747, the general of the Afghan troops, though furiously attacked by the whole Persian army, effected a safe retreat into his own country, where he caused himself to be acknowledged sovereign of the Afghan kingdom, over which he ruled till 1773. In 1761 he defeated the Mahrattas at Paniput, in one of the most sanguinary battles known in India. He was succeeded by his son, who reigned till 1792. On his death it was divided between his two sons, and a civil war broke out; and, after various depositions, Shah-Soojah, one of the brothers, attained the throne; who was again deposed by Dost Mahommed Khan. In 1797 the kingdom was threatened by Runjeet Singh, sovereign of the Punjab, but was prevented by the British, who subsequently deposed Dost Mahommed, in favour of the rightful heir, Shah-Soojah; the subsequent disasters of the British, and their final evacuation of Afghanistan, are still fresh in the memory. Pop. 5,000,000.

AFRICA, one of the four great divisions of the world, connected to Asia at the N. E. extremity, by the Isthmus of Suez. In its extreme length it extends from Cape Negro, in lat. 37. 21. N. to False Cape, in lat. 34. 25. S., being about 4300 miles; and in its extreme breadth from Cape Verd, in 17. 34. W., to Cape Guardafui, in 51. 32. E. long. being about 4100 miles.

The area of Africa is about 11,647,429 sq. m. Pop. estimated by different authors as 60 millions, 99 millions, 102 millions, or 160 millions.

Possessions of European powers, 1,236,674. Total population, 104,498,411. But these calculations, with few exceptions, are so vague, as scarcely to deserve attention.

Northern Africa is subdivided into a great number of kingdoms, states, and territories; the most prominent of which are Galla, Abyssinia, Sennaar, and Nubia on the east, bordering on the Red Sea; Egypt, at the north-eastern extremity; Libya, Fezzan, Barbary, and the French province of Algeria on the north, bordering on the Mediterranean; and Morocco at the north-western extremity, bounded by the Atlantic Ocean. Abyssinia and other states are on the N. E., and a large part of the east coast has owned the sovereignty of the Imam of Muscat, while the Portuguese claim the country between Zanzibar and Delagoa Bay. In the south are the British colonies of Natal, Cape colony, &c. On the west coast are the Portuguese provinces of Benueza, Angola, and Loango; while the coast of Guinea is divided into numerous separate native states. Many of these districts are highly fertile, being intersected with numerous streams and considerable rivers. The most celebrated river is the Nile, which, rising from various sources on the N. side of the great chain of mountains, and flowing through Abyssinia, Sennaar, Nubia, and Egypt, falls into the Mediterranean Sea, by several channels, between the long. of 30. 16. and 31. 50. E. The river Niger has long furnished a subject of considerable interest to the learned. It is now ascertained that it takes its rise in the mountains of Kong, on the western side of the continent, whence it proceeds in an easterly direction to Timbuctoo, and thence southerly to the Bight of Benue. Numerous streams and lakes intersect all the interior part of the country situate between the desert of Sahara, and the chain of mountains which divide the continent into two parts. Several rivers fall into the Atlantic Ocean S. of the Great Desert; the first of these is the Senegal, the entrance of which from the sea is in lat. 15. 53. N.; 2nd, the Gambia, in lat. 13. 8. N.; and further S. the Pongos, Rio Grande, Nunez, and Sierra Leone, in lat. 8. 30. N.

Independently of the great chain of mountains which divides Africa into two parts, a ridge of considerable altitude extends along the whole extent of the shores of the Red Sea; and the states of Barbary are bounded on the S. by another chain called the Atlas, which at the greatest elevation rises to the height of 13,000 feet above the level of the sea.

The complexion, habits, manners, and condition of the people of Africa, will be explained and illustrated when treating of its respective divisions. The physical condition of Europeans has hitherto proved exceedingly ill adapted to the climate of Africa, consequently our knowledge of the details of boundaries, population, production, and intercourse, are necessarily imperfect; but, as far as our knowledge does extend, nature appears in Africa to have displayed a bold and lavish hand, alike in the animal, the feathered, and the vegetable creation; most of the domestic animals and feathered tribes common to Europe are found in various parts of N. Africa; in addition to which, in all the fertile plains, the buffalo abounds; and the forests and mountains are occupied by the rhinoceros, hyena, leopard, panther, tiger, and lion, whilst the majestic and sagacious elephants roam in large herds, feasting on the odoriferous and luxuriant vegetation, which periodical rains and a diurnal sun constantly occasion an exhaustless soil to produce. There is also another animal, the camel, which it would be ungracious not to notice. In all the N. parts of N. Africa this gentle, unwearying, heavy-burthen and privation-sustaining animal abounds, and serves to enable the inhabitants of all the states bordering on the Atlantic Ocean and Mediterranean Sea to maintain an intercourse across the deserts (impassable by any other means) with the countries S. thereof. At the head of the feathered tribe is the ostrich, the feathers of which constitute a valuable branch of the external commerce of Africa. Winged insects are multitudinous. Bees are so numerous that honey constitutes one of the chief articles of food in all the states and territories previously enumerated, and wax an extensive article of export. Hives of locusts at times darken the atmosphere for many miles, by their number and density, and occasionally commit great ravages on the vegetation of the cultivated parts. Alligators abound in all the rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean; and in the marshes and streams in the interior, and on the E. side, which fall into the Nile, hippopotami and crocodiles are numerous, as are also reptiles and serpents of every description. In the vegetable kingdom, the baobab, the mangrove, the shea, lons-tree, and palm, claim the first notice; but nature has lavishly bestowed beauties on every class of creation. Of late years, many explorers in the various portions of the continent have met with considerable success, and we are gradually acquiring a more perfect acquaintance with the different features, even of those parts which have been quite a blank, or only imperfectly known from vague report. Nile have been much nearer approached, within these last 10 years, than previously. Captains Burton and Speke advancing from Zanzibar, and Consul Pethnick by the White Nile, have made considerable progress; and Speke and Pethnick are now (1861-2) engaged in a concerted expedition which is likely to throw light on this interesting subject. The enterprising traveller, Dr. Livingstone, has traversed the southern part of the continent, and made known the geographical features of a previously unexplored region, and is still employed in examining the country adjacent to the great rivers Zambesi and Shire. The coast of Guinea is occupied by powerful tribes, with whom the Europeans carry on an extensive traffic in exchange for gold dust, ivory, skins, bees' wax, palm-oil, bar-wood, &c. S. of the coast of Guinea, the coast is also occupied with several Negro tribes, who live in constant collision with each other. In Western Equatorial Africa, the explorations of M. Du Chaillu in the region of Cape Lopez have excited great interest by his discovery of the extraordinary ape, the gorilla. The testimony of all these travellers and of many others, goes to show that the interior of Africa, instead of being, as was formerly supposed, an arid desert, is generally well watered, of great fertility, dense population, and calculated to produce in abundance a supply of many of the wants of mankind. The character of this vast continent is at present exciting a great spirit of inquiry and enterprise; and it is probable that, in a short time, it will become almost as well known to us as any other quarter of the world. In addition to all the wild animals common to the N. part, the beautiful and stately, though somewhat disproportioned quadruped, the camelopard, as well as the zebra, is common towards the S. extremity of this part of Africa; the feathered and vegetable part of nature are much the same as in N. Africa. The principal river of the S. is the Congo, which falls into the Atlantic Ocean in lat. 6. 30. S. It is supposed by some that the Congo is the channel by which the waters in the interior of N. Africa discharge themselves into the sea; if so, there must be a break in the mountains somewhere between the 18th to the 22d deg. of E. long. Capt. Tuckey, by order of the British government, in the year 1817, attempted to explore the country bordering on the Congo, but, after sailing about 200 miles up the river, felt obliged to desist from the undertaking. Several other rivers of inferior note fall into the Atlantic Ocean, as well as into the Indian Ocean. A very rude and unsocial people, the Hottentots, occupy the more S. extremity of the continent extending to the Cape of Good Hope; who will be more particularly adverted to when treating of that settlement. Numerous islands flank the several coasts of both N. and S. Africa, the chief of which are the Azores, in lat. 39. 40. to 37. N.; the Madeiras, in lat. 32. 38. N.; the Canaries, in 29. 25. to 27. 48. N.; Cape Verde, in 17. to 14. 48. N.; a cluster at the entrance to the Rio Grande, in lat. about 11. N.; Isles de Los, in lat. about 9. 22. N.; Fernando, Princes, and St. Thomas's, in 3. 28. to 0. 27. N.; and Annabona, in 1. 33. S. The islands of Ascension and St. Helena, though situated 300 leagues from the coast, are also considered as a part of Africa; and on the E. side, in the Indian Ocean, is the large island of Madagascar, extending from 25. 40. to 12. 2. S. lat., and the Comoro group, lying between the N. end of Madagascar and the mainland, Socotra, to the E. of Cape Guardafui, completing the list, unless the Isles of France and Bourbon, situate about 10 deg. to the E. of Madagascar, be included.

AGAILY, a province in the centre of N. Africa. The chief town, of the same name, is situate in about 20. N. lat. and 13. E. long.

AGALLELA, or GALLELA, an island of Africa, near Madagascar. Long. 24. 8. E. lat. 10. 12. N.

AISSE, a department of France, including the territories of Soissonnois and Vermandois. It takes its name from a river which runs by Soissons, and enters the Oise, above Compeigne. It was overrun by the allied armies in 1814, and was the scene of several sanguinary battles fought between the allies and French, in the months of February and March of the same year. Laon is the capital.

AIX, an ancient city of France, capital of the department of the Mouths of the Rhone, and an archbishop's see. It was founded by C. S. Calvinus, a Roman general, 120 n.c., and was formerly the capital of Provence, when it had a parliament. It is seated in a plain, where there are hot baths near the river Arc, accidentally discovered in 1704; but several medals and other antiques, dug up, shew that it was known to the Romans. It is 75 miles E. of Montpellier, and near the Avignon and Marseille railway.

AIX, a town of Savoy, on the lake Bourget. Here are mineral waters, much frequented. It is 12 miles N. by E. of Chamberry.

AIX, a small island of France, between the isle of Oleron and the Continent. It is 12 miles N. W. of Rochfort. Long. 1. 10. W. lat. 46. 5. N.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE, an old and well-built city of the Prussian States, province Lower Rhine. It was formerly a free imperial city, and is now the capital of a reg. of the same name. It is the seat of a bishop; it has also a college, and an extensive public library, &c. It has considerable manufactures of broad-cloth, neckles, watches, jewellery, &c. It was the favourite residence of Charlemagne, who founded the cathedral. Its hot sulphureous springs are in great reputation. It is seated in a hollow, surrounded by mountains, 22 miles N. E. of Liege, at the junction of the Liege, Cologne, Dusseldorf, and Maastricht railways.

ALABAMA, part of the Mississippi territory, admitted as a state into the confederacy of the United States of America on the 11th Dec. 1819. It is bounded on the N. by Tennessee, W. by Mississippi, S. by the Gulf of Mexico and W. Florida, and E. by Georgia. It is 317 miles in length, and 174 in breadth, giving a superficies of about 28,200,000 English statute acres. It is divided into 49 counties; Cahawba, 915 miles S.W. of Washington, is the seat of government. The total population of the state is 590,756, of whom 253,532 are slaves. The culture of cotton, which is progressively extending, is their chief occupation. The river Tombecbee runs parallel with the boundary line on the western or Mississippi side of the state, and, near to its entrance into the sea, is joined by the Alabama, which flows from the east. The city of Mobile is the principal port for the exportation of all the surplus produce of the state. There are several railways and canals.

ALBACETE, a town of New Castile, in Spain. Owing to its central position respecting the roads, it is a place of great traffic. The environs are fertile, being irrigated by a canal. Albacete is called the Sheffield of Spain, a considerable quantity of coarse cutlery and knives being made here, and these knives are in great use throughout the kingdom. It was occupied in 1843 by Espartero, who hoped to menace Murcia and Valencia, protect Madrid, and secure a retreat to Andalusia, but succeeded only in the latter. The present population is 11,000. It has had, since 1845, an audiencia or high court, which has jurisdiction over 986,000 souls, and is 111 miles from Madrid.

ALBACETE, a town of Spain, in Murcia, with manufactures in iron and steel; seated in a fertile country on the post road from Madrid (dist. 40 leag.) to Cartagena, dist. 33½ leag.

ALBANIA, a maritime province of European Turkey, 240 miles long, and 60 broad; bounded on the N. by Dalmatia and Bosnia, E. by Macedonia and Janina, S. by Livadia, and W. by the Adriatic and Ionian Seas. It produces excellent wine. It was formerly an independent kingdom. Durazzo is the capital.

ALBANO, a town of Italy, on a lake of the same name, in Campagna di Roma. The environs produce the best wine in all this country. It is 15 miles S. S. E. of Rome.

ALBANO, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, on the river Basiento, 15 miles E. by S. of Potenza.

ALBANOPOLIS, a town of European Turkey, formerly the capital of Albania, but now a poor place, seated on the Drino, 43 miles E. of Alessio.

ALBANS, ST., a market town in Hertfordshire, distinguished in every period of English history. It was once the metropolis of Britain, and, on the invasion of the country by the Romans, became one of their most important stations; they gave it the name of Verulam, and, by the privileges conferred upon it, so attached the native inhabitants to their interest, as to excite the vengeance of Queen Boadicea, who massacred 70,000 of them, after which she was completely defeated by Suetonius Paulinus, the then Roman governor of Britain. St. Albans again became tranquil, and flourished till the Diocletian persecution, about the commencement of the fourth century, when it became distinguished for the martyrdom of its saint, whose name the town at present bears. After this period, St. Albans declined, till in the ninth century, Ossa, king of the Mercians, in expiation for his unprovoked murder of St. Ethelbert, king of the East Angles, whom he had invited to his court, to be his son-in-law, erected and endowed a most magnificent abbey and monastery, for Benedictine monks. After this period St. Albans experienced various alterations of fortune, till the final dissolution of its monastery, in the reign of Henry VIII., which led to the demolition of this magnificent establishment, of which the gateway now only remains, now used as the borough prison. The abbey church was rescued from impending destruction by the inhabitants, who purchased it of the succeeding monarch, Edward VI., for £400, when it was made parochial; but was exposed to the plunder and fanaticism of Cromwell, during the period of his predominance. It has since been repaired at various times, and recently by subscription of gentlemen of the county, and many vestiges of its former grandeur still remain; it is one of the largest ecclesiastical edifices in Europe. There are three other churches, in one of which (St. Michael) is a monument to the memory of the illustrious Francis Bacon. St. Albans was disfranchised for corruption in March, 1852. Its market, on Saturdays, is considerable in grain, &c., and especially for straw plait. The town is situate on the banks of the little river Ver, on which there are two mills for throwing silk. It is 21 miles N. of London.

ALBANY, a county of the State of New York, bounded on the E. by Hudson's river, N. by the Mohawk river, N. W. by Schoenectady county, W. by Schoharie county, and S. by Greene county. It is divided into nine townships, and its pop. 68,593, of whom 413 were slaves.

ALBANY, a city of New York, the chief place of the county of the same name, situate on the W. bank of the Hudson river, 160 miles N. of New York, 170 W. of Boston, and 230 S. of Montreal. It is the seat of the legislative government of New York, and, next to the city of New York, is the most important place in the state. A canal, 353 miles in extent, unites the waters of the Hudson river at Albany with the great chain of lakes westward of Lake Erie, at Buffalo. In Niagara county, and another canal, 62 miles in extent, unites the Hudson from the same point with Lake Champlain, at Whitehall, in Washington county. To these advantages, its connection by means of the Mohawk and Hudson railroads, to the lines on the west, and the railway to Boston, gives this fine city very considerable importance. Its commerce and manufactures are important, and has also numerous public and scientific institutions. It was founded by the Dutch in 1623. Its pop. in 1810 was 9,356; in 1830, 24,238; and in 1840, 33,721.

ALBANY, a river of Upper Canada, which flows E. through several small lakes into James's Bay. There is a fort of the same name at its mouth. Long. 82 W. lat. 52. 14. N.

ALBARAZIN, a town of Spain, in Arragon, and a bishop's see. Its wool is the best in Arragon. It is seated on the Guadalaviar, 100 miles E. of Madrid.

ALBECK, a town and castle of Suabia, on the river Alb, 5 miles N. by E. of Ulm.

ALBEMARLE, a central county of the state of Virginia, N. America. Pop. 22,924. Charlottesville is the chief town.

ALBEMARLE SOUND, an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean, in N. Carolina, 60 miles long, and from 8 to 12 broad. It is 30 miles N. of Pamlico Sound; and is united with Chesapeake Bay at Norfolk, by a canal cut through the Dismal Swamp.

ALBENGA, a strong seaport on the coast of Genoa, surrounded by olive trees, 37 miles S. W. of Genoa. Long. 8. 7. E. lat. 44. 6. N.

ALBION, a name sometimes applied to Britain, and probably given to it by Julius Caesar, from the white cliffs on the S. E. shore. (Lat. albus.) Scotland has been called Albany; but that is more probably derived from the Celtic alb, alp, high, from its mountainous character; the Gaels calling themselves Albannich.

ALBION, NEW, a name given by Sir Francis Drake, who explored the coast in 1578, to a country on the W. coast of N. America, extending from 35 to 48 of N. lat.; but the northern part is now comprehended in the Washington territory, and the southern in New California.

ALBONA, a town of Italy, in Istria, near the Gulf of Carnaro, 16 miles E. by S. of Rovigno.

ALBOURNE, a town in Wiltshire, England; 7 miles N. E. from Marlborough. Market on Tuesday.

ALBRET, a town of France, in the department of Gironde, 37 miles S. of Bordeaux.

ALBUFEIRA, a seaport town on the S. coast of Algarves, Portugal; pop. about 2000. Also a town of Valencia, on the sea-coast of Spain.

ALBUQUERQUE, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, with a strong castle. It has a considerable trade in wool and cloth, and is 18 miles N. N. W. of Badajoz. Also a town on the Rio del Norte, a few miles S. of Santa Fe, Mexico. There is also a village of the same name in the province of Puebla, Mexico.

ALBY, or ALBI, an ancient city of France, in the department of Tarn, seated on the river of that name. It is the chief city of the Albigeois, and was formerly the see of an archbishop. The cathedral was dedicated to St. Cecilia, and before the revolution of 1793, was ornamented with a valuable silver shrine, of exquisite workmanship, of the Mosaic kind, and contained the relics of St. Clair, the first bishop of this city. The chapel of this saint is a magnificent building, adorned with paintings. Alby has manufactures of both linens and woollens, and four gates, which open into beautiful and fruitful plains. Pop. 9367.

ALCALA DE HENAREZ, a beautiful and extensive city of Spain, in New Castile, seated upon the river Henarez. The university, which had gone to decay, was re-established, in 1494, by cardinal Francis Ximenes; at whose charge, and under whose direction, the first polyglot Bible was printed in this town. The removal of the university to Madrid completed its ruin, and it is now a poor and ignorant place. Without the walls is a spring, the water of which is so pure and well tasted, that it was enclosed for the king of Spain's own use, from whence it is carried to Madrid. It is 11 miles S. W. of Guadalanaxara, and 15 N. E. of Madrid.

ALCALA LA REAL, a city of Spain, with a fine abbey, situate on the summit of the Sierra de Grande, on the high road from Madrid to Grande, from which it is distant 18 miles, and 190 from Madrid.

ALCALA DE GUADAVIA, a town of Spain, distant 6 miles from Seville, on the road to Madrid. It is the bake-house for Seville, supplying that city with bread; there is also an aqueduct from the neighbouring hills, which conveys the water for the use of Seville.

ALCAMA, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazaro, 25 miles S. W. of Palermo.

ALCANIZ, a town of Arragon, in Spain. It was formerly the capital of the kingdom of the Moors. It has a remarkable fountain, which throws up water through forty-two pipes. It is seated on the river Bergantes, 12 miles from Caspe.

ALCANTARA, a fortified town of Spain, in Estremadura, and the chief place of the knights of that name. It has a celebrated stone bridge over the Tajo, or Tagus, built in the time of Trajan. It was taken by the Earl of Galway, in 1706, but retaken the same year. It is situate on the high post road from Badajoz to Ciudad Rodrigo.

ALCANTARA, or ALCANTARILLA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, near the river Guadalquivir. Here is a bridge, built by the Romans, to pass the marshes formed by the river. It is 14 miles S. of Seville.

ALCANTARA, a town of Portugal, near Lisbon, having a royal palace. There is also a town of the same name in Brazil, in the province of Maranhau.

ALCAZAR, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a strong castle, and a remarkable ancient aqueduct. It is situate near the source of the Guadalquivir, 80 miles E. by S. of Calatrava. Long. 2. 20. W. lat. 38. 28. N.

ALCAZAR, or ALCARRAZ, a town of Arragon, Spain, 2 leagues from Lerida, on the road to Madrid.

ALCAZAR DE SAL, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura. Fine white salt is made here. It is seated on the Cadoan, 15 miles from the sea, and 35 S. E. of Lisbon. Long. 9. 5. W. lat. 38. 18. N.

ALCAZAR DE SAN JUAN, a town of La Mancha, in Spain; and capital of a large district of the same name. The town contains 12 soap-factories, and the district produces saltpetre, and other minerals. 5 miles N. E. of Ciudad Real.

ALCAZAR QUINER, a town of the kingdom of Fez, near which Sebastian, king of Portugal, lost his life in a battle with the Moors, in 1578. It is seated on the Lucos, 36 miles S. of Tangier.

ALCAZAR SEGUEIR, a town of the kingdom of Fez, on the Strait of Gibraltar. It was taken by Alphonso, king of Portugal, in 1468, but soon after abandoned. It is 14 miles E. of Tangier.

ALCESTER, or ALNCESTER, town, Warwickshire. Many Roman coins, bricks, &c., have been found near it, and the Icknield street passes through the town. It is situate at the confluence of the Aine with the Arrow, 16 miles W. S. W. of Warwick. Market on Tuesday.

ALCMAER, or ALKMAER, a city of North Holland. It is a handsome city, and one of the cleanest in Holland. The streets and houses are extremely neat and regular, and the public buildings very beautiful. The Spaniards, under Frederick of Toledo, besieged it, after they had taken Haarlem, in 1578; but were forced to raise the siege, after laying before it three months. It opened its gates to the British troops in 1799, after the second battle near Bergen; and here the treaty for the evacuation of Holland by the invaders was afterwards concluded. It is recorded, in the register of this city, that, in the year 1639, 120 tulips, with the oil-seeds, sold for 90,000 florins; and, in particular, that one of them, called the Ficeroy, sold for 4203 guilders! The States at last put a stop to this extravagant and ruinous passion for flowers. The town has a good trade in butter and cheese, which is esteemed the best in Holland. It is about 4 miles from the sea, 15 from Haerlem, and 20 N. from Amsterdam. Pop. 9,500.

ALCONAZA, in Portugal, prov. Estremadura. Here is a celebrated abbey, the general place of sepulture of the sovereigns of Portugal.

ALCOUTIS, a town of Portugal, in Algarves, with a strong castle, seated on an island in the Guadiana, opposite to San Luear, 16 miles from the entrance of the Guadiana into the Gulf of Cadiz, 22 miles N. E. of Tavira.

ALCOY, a town of Spain, in Valencia. It is a busy and commercial place, being filled with coarse woollen and paper manufactories. Alcoy has many new buildings, a novelty seldom seen in the towns of Spain, where decay is the rule, and repairs the exception; the lower classes have the air of operative misery peculiar to English manufacturing districts. Pop. 20,000.

ALCUDIA, a town of Majorca, situated on the N. E. coast. Two stagnant pools between the town and the bay impair greatly the health of the people; they might be easily drained, if the people had sufficient industry. Long. 3. 0. E. lat. 39. 50. N.

ALDAI, a river of Siberia, joining the Lena, on which the finest sables are found.

ALDBOROUGH, or ALDENBURGH, seaport, Suffolk, England. The town was formerly much larger, but the sea has taken away whole streets. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

ALDONORP, in the W. R. Yorkshire, England, now disfranchised by parliament. Here are many remains of Roman works. It is 15 miles N. E. of York.

ALDENMERE, a town of Westphalia, 20 miles E. S. E. of Dusseldorf.

ALDENBURY, a town in Wiltshire, on a hill near the Avon, 3 miles from Salisbury. It has a manufacture of fustians. By a fire in 1777, 200 houses were destroyed.

ALDERHOLM, an island in Sweden, formed by the three arms of the river Getle, in the Gulf of Bothnia. It has a considerable trade in planks and deals. It is 80 miles N. of Stockholm.

ALDERNEY, an island in the English channel, 8 miles in circumference, separated from France by a strait called the Race of Alderney, which is a dangerous passage, on account of the rocks under water. It is fertile in corn and pasture, and is celebrated for a breed of small cattle, which yield an abundance of very rich milk. There is a town of the same name. Long. 2. 12. W. lat. 49. 45. N.

ALDERSHOT, a parish of England, in Hampshire, 3 miles N. E. of Farnham. A permanent camp, for training the army, was established here in 1854.

ALESCON, town of France, cap. of depart. of Orne. It has a considerable trade. 58 miles S. by E. from Caen.

ALENTEJO, the largest, in its superficies, of the 6 provinces of Portugal, bounded on the north by the Tagus, and south by the ancient kingdom of Algarves. Its superficial extent is 833 Fr. sq. leagues, and the population 380,480. Evora is the capital.

ALEPPO, the capital of Syria, and, next to Constantinople and Cairo, the most considerable city in the Turkish empire. It stands on eight hills, in the middle of a fruitful plain, and is of an oval figure. The castle is on the highest hill, in the centre of the city; and the houses are better than in other places in Turkey. As usual in the East, they consist of a large court, with a dead wall to the street, an arcade running round it, paved with marble, and a marble fountain in the middle. The streets are narrow, but well paved with large square stones, and kept very clean. Here are many stately mosques and caravanseras, fountains and reservoirs of water, vineyards and gardens. The water in the wells is brackish, but good water is brought from some springs about 5 miles off, by an aqueduct, said to have been built by the empress Helena. The Christians have their houses and churches in the suburbs, and carry on a considerable trade in silks, camlets, and leather. Large caravans continually arrive from Bagdad and Bassorah, charged with the products of Persia and India. Several European nations have factories here, and the merchants are in greater splendour and safety than in any other city in the Turkish empire. Coaches are not used here, but persons of quality ride on horseback, with a number of servants before them, according to their rank. Aleppo and its suburbs are 7 miles in compass; an old wall, and a broad ditch, now in many places turned into gardens, surround the city, which was estimated by Dr. Russell to contain 230,000 inhabitants, of whom 30,000 were Christians, and 5000 Jews; but, according to Mr. Eton, it does not contain more than 50,000, which depopulation, occasioned chiefly by the plague, has taken place since 1770, whole streets being uninhabited and bazaars abandoned. At present it may contain 100,000.

The inhabitants of both sexes smoke tobacco to great excess; even the servants have almost constantly a pipe in their mouths. Eighteen miles S. E. of Aleppo is a large plain, bounded by low rocky hills, called the Valley of Salt: this is overflowed in winter, and in April, the water being soon evaporated by the sun, leaves a cake of salt, in some places half an inch thick, which is sufficient to supply all this part of the country. Aleppo is seated on a rivulet, 70 miles S. E. of Alexandria, or Scanderon, and 150 N. of Damascus. Long. 37. 16. E. lat. 35. 40. N. It suffered greatly by a succession of earthquakes in 1822.

ALESSANDRIA, a city of Piedmont, 48 miles S. W. of Milan. Pop. about 36,000. The town contains a cathedral, 14 churches, 17 convents, and numerous handsome buildings.

ALESSANO, a town of Naples, near the extro-mity of the promontory of the Terrad'Otranto, 15 miles S. W. of Otranto.

ALESSTO, a town of European Turkey, in Dalmatia, and a bishop's see, seated on the Drino, near its entrance into the Adriatic Sea, 20 miles S. of Scutari. Long. 19. 30. E. lat. 41. 53. N.

ALET, a town of France, in the department of Aude, lately an episcopal see. It is noted for its baths, and stands near the Pyrenees, on the river Aude, 15 miles S. by W. of Carcassone.

ALDUTIAN ISLANDS. See ARCHIPELAGO, NORTHERN.

ALEXANDER, a county of the state of Illinois, at its southern extremity, bounded on the E. by the Ohio river to the point where it unites with the Mississippi, which bounds the county on the W. Pop. 3313. Unity is the chief town.

ALEXANDER, a town of the United States, in New York, 8 miles S. W. of Batavia, and 258 W. by N. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 2242.

ALEXANDRETTA, or SEANDERON, a town of Syria, on the Mediterranean Sea, and the port of Aleppo. It is now a poor place, the tombs being more numerous than the houses. It is 60 miles N. W. of Aleppo. Long. 36. 15. E. lat. 36. 35. N.

ALEXANDRIA, a celebrated city of Egypt, the present capital of that country. There are still some remains of its ancient splendour, particularly an obelisk full of hieroglyphics, called Cleopatra's Needle; and Pompey's Pillar, which is one entire piece of granite, 70 feet high, and 25 in circumference. The site of the ancient Pharos, so famous in antiquity, that it was numbered among the seven wonders of the world, is now occupied as a castle called Pharallon, and still used to direct vessels into the harbour. From the harbour is a canal to the west branch of the Nile, at Rhamanie. This city was built by Alexander the Great, and now consists chiefly of one long street, facing the harbour, the rest being a heap of ruins; part of the walls are standing, with great square towers, 200 paces distant; and the gates are of Thebaic marble and granite. It was formerly a place of great trade, all the treasures of the East Indies being deposited there, before the discovery of the route by the Cape of Good Hope. It has profited much by the steam communication with Europe, and the commerce fostered by the late Mehemet Ali. Alexandria was taken by the French under Buonaparte, in 1798, and taken from them by the English in 1801. It surrendered to the English in 1807, but was soon after evacuated. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 125 miles N. W. of Cairo to which place a railway was opened in 1856. Long. 30. 16. E. lat. 31. 11. N.

ALEXANDRIA, a city and port of entry in the foregoing county, situate on the W. bank of the Potomac, 7 miles S. of the city of Washington. Very considerable quantities of flour are shipped from Alexandria to the northern ports of the United States, and, occasionally, to Europe and other parts of the world. In other respects its commerce is inconsiderable. Pop. 8459.

ALEXANDRIA, a town of New York, on the St. Lawrence, and also on the military road from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbour, 195 miles N. W. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 3475.

ALFAYATES, a town of Portugal, in Beira, defended by a wall and castle. It is 150 miles N. E. of Lisbon. Long. 5. 48. W. lat. 40. 9. N.

ALFEIZERAO, a town of Portugal, on the sea-side, 75 miles N. N. E. of Lisbon.

ALFELD, a town of Lower Saxony, 15 miles S. S. W. of Hildesheim.

ALFORD, tn., Lincolnshire, with a market on Tuesday; 6 miles from the sea, 25 N. of Boston. On the E. Lincolnshire Railway.

ALFORD, a parish of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire. This parish is rendered memorable by a battle fought in it, wherein the marquis of Montrose defeated General Baillie and a party of the Covenanters, on the 2nd July, 1645; and there was lately discovered in one of the mosses a man in armour on horseback, supposed to have been drowned in attempting to escape.

ALFRETON, a town in Derbyshire, with a market on Monday and Friday. Here are manufactures of stockings and brown earthenware, and two iron-works. It is seated on a hill, 13 miles N. of Derby, and 142 N. N. W. of London.

ALGAIOLA, a small fortified seaport, on the N. W. coast of Corsica, at the mouth of the Arango, 28 miles W. by S. of Bastia.

ALGARVA, or ALGARVES, a province of Portugal. Its superficies is 232 sq. leagues, and contained 127,600 inhabitants. It forms the S. extremity of Portugal. Lagos, Faro, and Tavira, all on the S. coast, are the chief towns. It is fertile in figs, oranges, almonds, dates, olives, and excellent wine.

ALGECIRAS, a fortified town of Andalusia, Spain, situate on the coast W. of the Bay of Gibraltar. It was rebuilt in 1760 by Charles III., and now presents a good appearance. It is the Spanish naval and military station which watches over that of the English at Gibraltar, naturally a thorn in the side to the Spaniards. Pop. about 16,000. It is a very ancient city, called by the Phœnicians Tartessus Heracleon.

ALGEZIRAS, or DIARBEK, a province of Asiatic Turkey, between the Tigris and Euphrates. It is mountainous, but fertile. Chief towns, Jezreh, Diarbekir, and Karkissia.

ALGERI, a town and seaport of Sardinia, on its W. coast, 15 miles S. S. W. of Sassari. Pop. 6700. It is built on a low rocky point, and stoutly walled and fortified. It is the seat of a bishopric, and has a cathedral, and 12 churches and convents. The town was long occupied by the Spaniards, and their manners and language still prevail

ALGERIA, a country of N. Africa, comprising the ancient Numidia, and part of Mauritania. It is 600 miles from E. to W., and 170 in breadth; bounded on the E. by Tunis, N. by the Mediterranean, S. by Mount Atlas, and W. by Morocco. The country is generally mountainous; near the coast the Little Atlas chain runs, its highest point being rather more than 2000 feet. The Titeri Mountains of the Great Atlas are 9000 feet. Immediately S. of Algier is the plain of the Metidjah, fertile, well watered, and in parts marshy. The chief rivers are the Shelif, the Kebir, Seibous, Zoua, Zaïne, &c., which fall into the Mediterranean, and the Adjedi and Abiad, which run inland, and terminate in the Melgig, and some minor ones, in the Shat or Shott, two large salt lakes. The climate is generally healthy and temperate, but occasionally suffers from the khamzin or hot wind. There were nine distinct races of inhabitants, the Berbers or Kabyles being the principal or half the pop., the Bishens or Mozabs, Moors, Arabs, Jews, Europeans, and formerly Turks and their offspring; but the last almost entirely evacuated the country on the French conquest. The history of the country is chiefly connected with that of the city, as mentioned presently. Most of the towns and cities bear the names which have descended from Roman times, and many ruins testify to former greatness. In ancient times, the soil was celebrated for its fertility. Among the natural products, the date holds the first place, and grows abundantly S. of the Atlas Chain. The vine, cotton, indigo, melons, figs, grapes, and the sugar-cane, are also cultivated. Cattle are, or used to be, the chief wealth of the natives. The revenue and prosperity of the country have greatly increased since the French occupation, but it entails a very heavy outlay in the military force required. The government is administered by a military commander-in-chief. At the end of 1849, the European population amounted to 112,606, and the natives called Algiers about 90,000. See Appendix—FRANCE.

ALGER, a strong city, capital of the whole country of Algier. It is built on the side of a mountain, in the form of an amphitheatre, next the harbour; and the houses appearing one above another, of a resplendent whiteness, make a fine appearance from the sea. On the highest point of the hill is the Kasbah or citadel. Prior to the conquest, it had 4 large and 30 small mosques, some of which have been converted into Christian churches. The town, beautiful from the sea, is composed of dirty dark crooked streets, and, until the French had improved many in width, none were more than 12 feet across. In the centre a large area was cleared for the Place du Gouvernement, a fine square in the European style. Two small rocks stand off the N.E. part of the city, called Al Jezzir. The islands gave name to the city, and are now strongly fortified, and has a mole, &c., facing the harbour. It was made a bishopric in 1838, and European manners and names are common, and the streets have all received French names. The environs of Algiers are very beautiful, and for miles around are interspersed with elegant villas. There are two small suburbs, the Babel Oued, to the N., and the Bab a Zour, to the S. The harbour is small, and incapable of accommodating large war vessels. It has a regular steam communication with Marseilles and other Mediterranean ports, and has considerable trade, but few manufactures. The city and country were, until 1830, a horde of pirates under the Turkish Empire, and provoked the resentment of most Christian states. The emperor Charles V. lost a fine fleet and army in an expedition against Algiers in 1541. The English burnt their vessels in the harbour in 1635 and 1670; and it was bombarded by the French in 1688. In 1775, the Spaniards attacked it by sea and land, but were repulsed with great loss. In 1783 and 1784, they renewed their attacks by sea, to destroy the city and galleys; but were forced to retire without effecting either its capture or destruction. In 1816, a British squadron, under the command of Lord Exmouth, bombarded the town and fleet in the harbour, with such destructive effect, as induced the dey immediately to release the Christian slaves then in his territory, and subscribe to all the terms of submission and restraint from future depredation, which the victors thought proper to dictate. This, however, did not prevent them from resuming their piratical practices; and in 1830 the French undertook an expedition against them, of which the naval force reached the coasts of Algiers on the 13th of June; and on the 5th of July, they took possession of the city and territory. Its resources have been greatly developed, and its condition improved, under the present Emperor of the French.

ALGOA BAY, South Africa. An extensive bay, containing the principal port of the eastern division of the Cape Colony, Port Elizabeth, founded in 1820. There are several islands in the bay, particularly the Bird Islands, and St. Croix.

ALHAMA, a town of Spain, in Granada, celebrated for its warm baths. It is surrounded by craggy mountains, and is seated on the Frio, 25 miles S. W. of Granada.

ALICANTE, a seaport of Spain, in Valencia, famous for its excellent wine and fruits. It has also a great trade in barilla, and the English, Dutch, French, and Italians, have consuls here. The castle, on a high rock, was formerly reckoned impregnable, but was taken by the English in 1706. It was likewise taken by the French and Spaniards, after a siege of almost two years, when part of the rock was blown up. It is seated on the Mo-diterranean, on a bay of the same name, 64 French leagues S. E. of Madrid, 23 S. of Valencia, and 21 N. of Carthage. Long. 0. 29. W. lat. 38. 20. N.

ALICATA, a sea-port of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, with a fortress on a small cape at the mouth of the Salso, 22 miles S. E. of Girgenti, but it has very much gone to decay. Long. 14. 7. E. lat. 37. 14. N.

ALICUDI, the most western of the Lipari islands, in the Mediterranean, 10 miles W. of Feliciuda. Long. 14. 32. E. lat. 38. 33. N.

ALIFI, a town of Naples, at the foot of the Apennines, 25 miles S. W. of Benevento.

ALLAHABAD, an interior province of Hindostan, 160 miles long, and 120 broad; bounded on the N. by Oude, E. by Bahar, S. by Orissa and Berar, and W. by Malwa and Agra. The Nerbudda, which rises on the S. E. border of the province, flows from E. to W. near its side; and the Ganges crosses it from W. to E. near its north side.

ALLAHABAD, a city of Hindostan, capital of the above province, with a magnificent citadel. It was founded in 1583 by the emperor Acbar, who intended it as a place for arms; it has been much improved under the English, who have greatly strengthened and fortified it, making it their head quarters. It is seated at the confluence of the Jumna with the Ganges, 470 miles W. N. W. of Calcutta. Long. 82. 0. E. lat. 25. 45. N. It was finally ceded, together with the province, to the English East India Company, in 1801.

ALLAH SHEHR, or CITY OF GOD, a city of Asiatic Turkey, 83 miles E. of Smyrna; the ancient Philadelphia. It is famous as being one of the Apocalyptic churches, and is the seat of a Greek archbishop. The whole town teems with relics of antiquity, the only indications of its former nobility; it is now a poor and dirty place. It has suffered much at various times from earthquakes. Pop. 16,000.

ALLEGHANY, or APPALACHIAN, MOUNTAINS, a long range of mountains in North America, between the Atlantic, the Mississippi, and the lakes; extending parallel with the sea-coast, 900 miles in length, and from 60 to 200 in breadth. The different ridges which compose this immense range have different names in the different states. Advancing from the S. the first ridge, commencing in Georgia, and extending through North Carolina, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, is the Blue ridge, or South Mountain, from 130 to 200 miles from the sea, and about 4000 ft. high from its base. Between this and the North Mountain spreads a large fertile vale. Next lies the Alleghany, which is the principal ridge, and has been descriptively called the back-bone of the United States. Beyond this is the long ridge, called the Laurel Mountains, in a spur of which, in lat. 36. is a spring of water, 50 ft. deep, very cold, and as blue as indigo. From these several ridges proceed innumerable nameless branches or spurs. The Kittatiny, or Blue Mountains, run through the northern parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These mountains are sometimes called the Appalachian, from a river, whose original source proceeds from this ridge, called the Appalachicola. They are not confusedly scattered and broken, but stretch along in uniform ridges, scarcely half a mile high. In several places they diverge, and some of them terminate in high perpendicular bluffs; others, towards the south, gradually subside into a level country, giving rise to the rivers which run southerly into the Gulf of Mexico.

ALLEGHANY, a river of the United States, which rises in the S. W. corner of the state of New York, in lat. 42. It is navigable, for keel-boats of 10 tons burthen, to Hamilton, 260 miles above Pittsburg, where it joins the Monongahela, and then assumes the name of Ohio. See Ohio.

ALLEGHANY, the name of three counties in the United States of North America; viz. 1st. in New York, pop. 40,975, of which Angelica, 272 W. by S. of Albany, is the capital; 2nd. in Pennsylvania, pop. 81,235, of which Pittsburg, 200 miles W. of Harrisburg, is the capital; and 3rd. in Maryland, pop. 15,690, of which Cumberland, 173 miles W. N. W. of Annapolis, is the chief town; also the name of several townships in Pennsylvania.

ALLES, a county of Kentucky, U. S. of North America, pop. 7329. Scottsville, 160 miles S. W. by S. of Frankfort, is the chief town; also the name of a newly formed county in the state of Ohio.

ALLES, a county of Iowa, United States, containing 680 square miles. It is level and well timbered. The Wabash and Erie canal passes through it; capital, Fort Wayne. Pop. in 1840, 5942.

ALLEN, BOG, or, a vast but undefined extent of bog in Leinster, chiefly in co. Kildare, and in King's and Queen's co. The Kildare portion of this bog is estimated at 36,430 acres; the western, sometimes called the Barrow bog, is about 41,075 acres in extent. The peat varies in depth from 12 feet to 42, and averages 25. The scenery of the Bog of Allen is monotonous and dismal to a degree quite oppressive; but being traversed by the Grand Canal, is better known than its repulsive character would seem to promise. The turf-cutters live in huts which they excavate in the driest spot they can find, and are roofed with peat, rising very little above the level of the land, so that the eye would pass over them without observation, were they not apparent by a number of children sallying from a hole in one side, sometimes with a cat, a pig, or a goat, or by the smoke which issues through the roof, which, from its slight texture, is every where pervious to it. This sad picture is not confined to the Bog of Allen only.

ALLENDALE, a parish and mining district at the foot of Fuller Hill, in the county of Northumberland.

ALLENBORO', a town of Germany, famous for its salt water, and three bridges over the Werra. It is 15 miles E. of Cassel; n'so the name of several other small towns in Germany.

ALLEN, LOUGH, a large lake in Connaught, from which the river Shannon takes its rise, and is the first of the chain of lakes into which that river expands. On the E. it is screened by lofty mountains, which rise from 1400 to 2000 feet above the sea-level. It is in the midst of the Connaught coal district, and has a dock and quay for shipping the coal. It extends $6\frac{1}{2}$ by $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles.

ALBERTON, the name of a village in Lancashire, England; another in Somerset; and of 6 others in Yorkshire.

ALBERTON, NORTH. See NORTH ALBERTON.

ALLIER, a department of France. It is so called from a river, which flows by Moulins, and enters the Loire, below Nevers. Agriculture is in a very backward state; the peasantry are all small proprietors, and very little given to improvement. There are extensive glass and iron works, and other manufactures, in the department. Pop. in 1845, 329,510.

ALLOA, a sea-port, (Clackmannanshire, Scotland, near the mouth of the river into the Firth of Forth. Here is a custom house, and an excellent dry dock, and its harbour is the resort of all the coal vessels in the neighbourhood. It has a glass-house, two distilleries, and two breweries, the produce of which is in great repute. Near the town is a tower 90 ft. in height, with walls 11 ft. in thickness. It is 30 miles W. N. W. of Edinburgh, on the Stirling, &c., railway.

ALMA, a river on the W. side of the Crimea, celebrated for a victory gained by the allied French and English over the Russians near its mouth, Sept. 20, 1854.

ALMADEN DE LAZQUE, a town of Spain, in Mancha, famous for its rich mines of mercury, &c., 45 miles S. W. of Ciudad Real.

ALMADEN DE LA PLATA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the river Colar, 34 miles N. by E. of Seville.

ALMANZA, a town of Spain, in Murcia, remarkable for the victory gained by the French and Spaniards over the allies, in 1707, when most of the English were killed or taken, having been abandoned by the Portuguese horse at the first charge. It is now a well-built and tolerably flourishing town of 7000 inhabitants, situate in a fertile plain, on the frontiers of Valencia, 35 miles S. W. of Xativa, and 62 N. of Murcia. Long. 1. 10. W. lat. 38. 48. N.

ALMAZARROW, a town of Spain, in Granada. It is an industrious place, both the land and sea affording occupation. From the number of ruins discovered in the vicinity, it is supposed to have been an important Carthaginian settlement. In the hill of Almazarrow, silver ores occur, and from the hill San Christohal alum is extracted, and the red earth, almazra, which is used for rubbing merino sheep, polishing mirrors, and mixing with the red rappee snuff of Seville. Pop. about 5000.

ALMEIDA, a fortified town of Portugal, in Beira. It was taken by the French, after a short siege, in 1810, who afterwards demolished the fortifications. It is situate on the river Coa, and near the borders of Spain, 18 miles N. E. of Guarda. Pop. 6000.

ALMERIA, a sea-port town of Spain, in Granada. Under both the Romans and the Moors, it was the grand port of traffic with Italy and the East, and one of the richest manufacturing towns. Under its Moorish independent chief, Ibn Maynum, it was a perfect Algiers, a piratic port, whose galleys ravaged the coasts of France and Italy. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1147, chiefly by means of the Genoese, who were anxious to abate this piratical nuisance. The Moorish castle still remains, having been repaired by Charles V.; the vestiges also of a mole, and of the dock yards, constructed by the Moors, may be traced. But now it has no mole, no harbour; the houses are small, and the town is altogether in a state of decay. Some little bustle, however, is periodically caused by the steamers which call here in their voyage up and down. It is a good example of the state of modern Spain. The commerce consists in the produce of the lead mines, and the exports of grapes and barilla, which abound in the adjacent plains; a sort of acacia, also, from which a dye is made, flourishes here. It has a cathedral. Pop. under 20,000.

ALMISSA, a town of Dalmatia, famous for its wines. It stands at the foot of a high rock, and at the mouth of the Cetina, 12 miles E. of Spalatro.

ALMOGOVAR, a town of Portugal, province of Alentejo. Pop. about 2000.

ALMOGOVAR DEL CAMPO, a town of Spain, New Castile, a handsome town, at the foot of the Sierra Morena, 18 miles S. S. W. of Ciudad Real.

ALMONDBURY, a village W. R. Yorkshire, seated on the Calder, 2 miles S. S. E. of Huddersfield. It was the Campedonium of the Romans, afterward a seat of the Saxon kings, and had once a castle and a cathedral.

ALMUNETAR, a town of Spain, in Granada, seated on the Mediterranean, with a good harbour, defended by a strong castle, 30 miles S. S. E. of Alhama. Long. 3. 45. W. lat. 36. 40. N.

ALSWICK, a considerable town in Northumberland, on the road to Scotland; a place peculiarly fatal to some of the ancient Scottish monarchs. Here Malcolm III, making an inroad in Northumberland, was killed, with Edward his son, and his army defeated, by Robert Mowbray, earl of this county, in 1093; and here too his great grandson, William I., invading England with an army of 20,000 men, was encountered, his army routed, and himself made prisoner, in 1174. The town appears to have been formerly fortified, from the vestiges of a wall still to be seen in several parts, and three gates, which remain almost entire. Alnwick is a well built town; and is ornamented by a stately old Gothic castle, the seat of the Duke of Northumberland. It is seated on the Alne, 310 miles N. by W. from London, 33 N. of Newcastle, and 26 S. of Berwick, on the railway.

ALOSTR, a town of Belgium, province East Flanders, on the Deender, half-way between Brussels and Ghent, Pop. 14,807. It is walled, clean, and well-built; it has a parish church, the largest in the country; a college, town-house, and numerous manufactories of various kinds. Small vessels come quite up to the town; its commerce is in its manufactures, and in excellent hops, which are grown in the neighbourhood. Thierry Martens, the introducer of printing into Belgium, and friend of Erasmus, is buried here.

ALPENACH, a town of Switzerland, in Underwalden, seated on an arm of the lake of the Four Cantons, 6 miles S. of Lucern.

ALPS, (from the Celtic, Alb, or Alp, high.) a chain of mountains in Europe, which begins at the Gulf of Genoa, to the E. of Nice, passes into Switzerland, crosses that country and Tyrol, separates Germany from Italy, and terminates at the N. part of the Gulf of Venice. This grand chain is sometimes divided into two or more ridges, ranging one by another, with only narrow valleys between; and the different portions have distinct appellations, as the Maritime, Pennine, Lepontine, Helvetic, Rhetian, Julian, &c. They are composed of stupendous rocky masses, two, four, and even six being piled upon each other; Mount Blanc, the chief, being 15,735 feet in height, and visible at a distance of 140 miles. There are few passes over them, and those of difficult access. Switzerland has the central part of these mountains, and the valleys between them. The famous Hannibal attempted to cross the Alps on the side of Piedmont, in the winter season, when he invaded Italy, and lost most of his elephants among them. They were passed successfully by a numerous French army under the command of Napoleon Buonaparte, in 1800.

ALPS, UPPER, a department of France, including part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is so called from its vicinity to the mountains of that name. The capital is Embrun.

ALPS, LOWER, a department of France, including part of the late province of Provence. The capital is Digne.

ALPS, MARITIME, a late department of France, including the county of Nice. The capital is Nice.

ALPUNARES, high mountains in Spain, in Granada, near the Mediterranean. They are inhabited by the Moriscos, who carefully cultivate the ground, which produces excellent wines and fruits.

ALREDFORD, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Thurs, and a manufacture of linseys. To the S. W. of the town is a piece of water, covering about 200 acres, which forms a head to the river Itchen. It is 18 miles N. E. of Southampton, and 57 W. S. W. of London.

ALSACE, a late province of France, now divided into the Upper and Lower Rhine, which see.

ALSER, a fertile island of Denmark, in the Little Belt, between Sleswick and Funen, 100 miles W. of Copenhagen. Pop. 16,000. The chief town is Sonderborg.

ALSFIELD, a town of Germany, with a castle, 12 miles E. of Marburg.

ALSHEIDA, a town of Sweden, in Smaland, near which a gold mine was discovered in 1738.

ALSERA, a town of Naples, in the Molise, on the river Tiserno, 33 miles N. E. of Molise.

ALSLEBEN, a town of Upper Saxony, 9 miles S. S. W. of Bernburg.

ALSTADT, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle, on the rivulet Raue, 8 miles W. of Querfurt.

ALSTADT, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Olmutz, near the source of the Morau, 35 miles N. N. W. of Olmutz.

ALSTON-MOON, or ALSTONE, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday. Here is an iron-foundry, and a shot-manufacture; and in its vicinity are numerous lead-mine. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the S. side of the Tyne, 20 miles E. by S. of Carlisle, and 271 N. by W. of London.

ALTAI MOUNTAINS, a range of mountains, intersecting Asia from S. to N., commencing W. of the Indus, in W. long. about 68, and diverging northwards by several ridges towards East Cape, in E. long. 170.

ALTAMIRA, a town of Naples, at the foot of the Apennines, 10 miles S. E. of Gravina. It is walled, and has a magnificent cathedral, founded by Frederic II., an hospital, and a lycæum, and is one of the handsomest and best built towns in the province. Pop. about 16,000.

ALTDORF, a town of Bavaria, 13 miles S. E. of Nuremberg. All sorts of wooden toys are manufactured here, and exported to all parts of the world; there are also considerable breweries. The surrounding country is beautiful and fertile. Pop. 2000.

ALTENAN, a town of Lower Saxony, in the territory of Brunswick, 8 miles S. of Goslar.

ALTENBERG, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, celebrated for its tin mine; 20 miles S. of Dresden.

ALTENBURG, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle on a rock. It is seated on the Pleisse, 20 miles S. of Leipsic.

ALTENBURG, a town of Lower Saxony, on the river Leitha, at its entrance into the Danube. Here are two churches and a college; and its ancient castle is now principally used for a corn magazine. It is 17 miles S. S. E. of Bernburg.

ALTENKIRCHEN, a town of Germany, in the Westerwald; chief of the county of Sayn, with a castle, 15 miles N. N. E. of Coblenz.

ALTERSON, a town of Piedmont, between the rivers Doire and Stura, 3 miles N. of Turin.

ALTERICH, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on an eminence, near the source of the river Ill, 25 miles S. of Colmar.

ALTON, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Saturday. It has manufactures of worsted stuffs, and round the town are plantations of hops. It is seated on the Wey, 28 m. E. N. E. of Southampton, and 47 W. S. W. of London, and has a branch railway to Farnham, &c.

ALTON, a city of the United States in Illinois. This town was founded so late as 1818, and in 1832 it contained only 2 or 3 dozen houses; in 1838 it had nearly 4,000 inhabitants! It will most probably become a place of great importance. It stands 2½ miles above the mouth of the Missouri, and has the best landing for steam-boats on the E. bank of the Mississippi. Coal exists in great abundance near it.

ALTONA, a city and sea-port of Lower Saxony, in Holstein, seated on the Elbe, contiguous to Hamburg. The Danes built it in this situation, that it might rival Hamburg in commerce. It was burnt by the Swedes in 1712, but has been beautifully rebuilt, and contains 26,400 inhabitants. It has railways to Glückstadt, Rendsburg, and Kiel.

ALTORF, a town of Franconia, in the territory of Nuremberg, with a university, 16 miles S. E. of Nuremberg.

ALTORF, or ALTDORF, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Uri. Here are two stone pillars, 130 paces from each other, at which distance Tell is said to have shot the apple from his son's head. This deliverer of his country lived at Burglen, near this place, and his cottage is changed into a chapel, where mass is solemnly said. Altorf stands on the lake of Lucern, near the influx of the river Russ, 20 miles S. E. of Lucern.

ALTRINGHAM, tn., Cheshire, market on Tuesday. Here are several manufactures of worsted and cotton; and much fruit and vegetables are sent hence to Manchester. It is seated near the Duke of Bridgewater's Canal, 30 miles N. E. of Chester, and 180 N. W. of London by railway.

ALTUN-KUHLI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, the capital of Kurdistan, and the residence of a pacha. It is situated on the river Altun, which flows into the Tigris, 50 miles S. E. of Mosul. Long. 44. 30. E. lat. 35. 45 N.

ALVA DE TOIRMES. See ALBA DE TOIRMES.

ALVARADO, a river of Mexico, in the province of Vera Cruz, which rises 40 miles above the town of Cordova, and flows N. E. till it enters the Gulf of Mexico, at a town of the same name, 36 m. S. E. of Vera Cruz.

ALVARADO, a town and harbour of Mexico, at the mouth of the preceding river. It was here that the American forces landed in 1847, in proceeding to the campaign against Mexico.

ALVASTON, a village in Gloucestershire, 8 miles N. by E. of Bristol. On the top of a hill, near the Severn, is a round camp, called Oldbury, where several antiquities have been dug up.

ALZIRA, or ALCIRA, a populous town of Spain, which has a great trade in silk. It is surrounded by the Zucar, 17 miles S. of Valencia.

AMADAN, or HAMADAN, a town of Persia, in Irac Ajemi. Here are many Jews, who allege that the tombs of Mordecai and Esther are in the place which serves them for a synagogue. Amadan is a very ancient city; on its site, or near it, the ancient Ecbatana is supposed to have stood. It is said to have been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, and rebuilt by Darins, who brought hither all his riches. It is situate to the N. of the upper road from Bagdad to Ispahan, about 15 miles from Kenghey. It has considerable manufactures of leather, and contains about 40,000 inhabitants.

AMADIA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Kurdistan, governed by a bey, seated on a high mountain, 40 miles S. E. of Gezira. Long. 41. 35. E. lat. 37. 20. N.

AMAK, or AMAGEH, an island of Denmark, on which part of Copenhagen, called Christianshafen, is built. It is eight miles long, and four broad, and separated from Zealand by a narrow channel, over which are two bridges that communicate with Copenhagen. It is laid out in gardens and pastures, and supplies Copenhagen with milk, butter, and vegetables.

AMAL, a town of Sweden, in Gothland, with a good harbour on the lake Wenner. It has a great trade in timber, deals, and tar; and is 175 miles S. W. of Upsal.

AMALFI, a sea-port of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, and an archbishop's see. Flavio Gioin, who is said to have invented the mariner's compass, but really only the improver, was a native of this town. It is seated on the N. W. side of the Gulf of Salerno, 13 miles S. W. of Salerno. Long. 14. 45. E. lat. 40. 28. N.

AMARAFURA. See UMMERAPORA.

AMASIA, or AMASIEH, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, the birth-place of Strabo, the geographer. It is the capital of a province, which produces excellent wines and fruits. It was devastated by an earthquake, in 1794. It is seated on the Casalmack, which falls into the Black Sea, 36 miles N. of Tocant. Long. 35. 26. E. lat. 40. 31. N.

AMANICI, a sea-port town, capital of St. Maura, one of the Ionian Islands, near the N. E. extremity. It is strongly defended by a castle and a fort; the town is meanly built, principally of wood, owing to the prevalence of earthquakes. It is the residence of the governor, and a Greek bishop. There are extensive lagoons on the N. between the town and the castle, which communicate by a causeway on arches. Pop. 6000.

AMAZON, or MARANON, a river of South America, which, with its tributaries, is considered the largest river in the world. It takes its name at the junction of the Tungurajua, or Marañon, which issues from the lake Lauricocha, in Peru, in lat. 10. 29. S. and the Ucayali, formed by streams which have been traced to the 16th and 18th degrees of S. lat. These two great and navigable rivers unite on the confines of Peru, and form the main and uninterrupted stream of the Amazon, which, running eastward more than 1000 miles, then takes a more N. direction, and having received the waters of hitherto countless and navigable tributary streams, falls into the Atlantic by many channels. Following all its windings, it is computed to be between 4000 and 5000 miles in length; at its mouth it is 180 miles broad, and its depths are in most parts unknown. It has been navigated to its confluence with the Pachitea, between 5. and 9. S. lat., where its current is gentle; and by the Rio Negro, one of its branches, it communicates with the Cassiquari, which falls into the Oroonoko. The manati and tortoise abound along the banks of this river and its tributaries, which also swarm with alligators. This mighty river was discovered by the intrepid traveller Orellana, who, in a frail craft, descended the Amazon from the mountains of Peru to its mouth, in 1541.

AMBA-GESHEN, a rock in Abyssinia, of a most prodigious steepness, almost impregnable. The Ethiopic princes were formerly banished hither by their fathers, that they might not attempt anything against the state.

AMBERGATE, an important station on the North Midland Railway from Derby to Sheffield, &c., 10½ miles from Derby.

AMUENS, a fortified town of Bavaria, with a strong castle. The magnificent church of St. Martin contains many beautiful paintings and curiosities; and the mint is esteemed one of the finest buildings of the kind in Germany. In 1743, it was taken by the Austrians, and in 1796, by the French. It is seated on the river Ills, or Wills, on the confines of the principality of Saltzbach, 40 miles E. of Nuremberg. Long. 11. 48 E. lat. 49. 27. N. Pop. 8000.

AMBERT, a town of France, in the department of Puy de Dome. There are numerous paper makers in its vicinity, and it has a trade in coarse laces, camlets, ferrets, &c. It is seated in a beautiful valley, on the river Dore, 24 miles E. of Issoire.

AMBIESIDE, town of Westmoreland, standing on the site of a Roman city, called Diens, with a market on Wednesday. Here is a manufacture of woollen cloth. It is seated on the Rotha, near the head of Windermere-water, 13 miles N. W. of Kendal, and 276 N. N. W. of London.

AMBLETEUSE, a seaport of France, in the department of Pas de Calais, defended by a battery. At this port Casar embarked his cavalry when he passed over into England; and here James II. landed on his departure from England, in 1688. It is seated on the English channel, 6 miles N. of Boulogne. Long. 1. 36. E. lat. 50. 45. N.

AMBOISE, a town of France, in the department of the Indre and Loire. The town is mean and ill-built; but has been rendered famous in history, by the conspiracy of the Huguenot, in 1560, which opened the fatal religious wars in France. Here Louis XI. instituted the order of St. Michael; it was also the birth-place of the poet Jesuit Camille, and where Charles VIII. died. It is seated at the confluence of the Maisee with the Loire, 12 miles E. by N. of Tours, and 118 S. by W. of Paris.

AMBOOD, a town on the north coast of the Island of Borneo. It is surrounded by lofty hills, which are surmounted by an imposing peak, Kini Balu, 13,698 ft. high. The port, which is excellent, has not yet been frequented by Europeans.—Lat. 6. 16. N. long. 116. 20. E.

AMBOY. See PLATH AMBOY.

AMBOYSA, an island of the Moluccas, in the Indian Ocean. It is 56 miles in length from N. to S. and divided on the W. side by a large bay, into two parts; the largest of which is called Hiton, and the other Leytimor. The face of this island is beautiful; woody mountains and verdant plains being interspersed with hamlets, and enriched by cultivation. The chief products are cloves, nutmegs, sugar, coffee, and many delicious fruits, but more especially cloves. The principal animals are deer and wild hogs. The English and Dutch had factories here at the beginning of the 17th century; but the Dutch expelled the English, and tortured and put to death many of them. They are generally Mahometans; but there are some Christians among them. This island was taken by the English in 1796, and restored by the treaty of Amiens in 1802; recaptured in 1810, and again restored to the Dutch by the treaty at Paris in 1814, and confirmed in 1824. The chief town is of the same name, neatly built, and stands near the S. W. extremity. Fort Victoria is in long. 128. 15. E. lat. 3. 4. S.

AMMOOSE, St. an island on the coast of Chili, 15 miles W. from St. Felix Island. The crew of Captain Roberts, in 1792, killed and cured here 13,000 seal skins, in seven weeks. Long. 89. 55. W. lat. 26. 13. S.

AMRYA, one of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific Ocean, 70 miles in circumference. Long. 168. 12 E. lat. 16. 10. N.

AMEDABAD, or AHMEDABAD, a city of Hindostan; the capital of Guzerat. The walls are 6 miles in circumference, and contain twelve gates; but now not a quarter of the area is inhabited. The mosque and tomb of the founder, Tatay Ahmed, are built of stone and marble, the last of exquisite workmanship. It was taken by General Goddard, in 1780, from the Poonah Malhattas, to whom it was restored in 1783. It is seated in a level country, on a navigable river that enters the Gulf of Cambay, 320 miles N. of Bombay. Long. 72. 27. E. lat. 23. 18. N.

AMEDSAGUR, a city and fort of Hindoostan, once the capital of the soubah of its name, which is now better known by that of Dowatabad. This city was the residence of the emperor Aurungzebe, during his conquest of the Deccan and the Carnatic. In 1803 it was taken by the British army, under General Wellesley, (now Duke of Wellington.) It is 73 miles N. E. of Poonah. Long. 75. 6. E. lat. 19. 10. N.

AMEENABAD, a town of Hindostan, in Lahore, 35 miles N. by W. of Lahore.

AMELIA, an island on the coast of East Florida, 13 miles long and 2 broad; extending about 2 miles from the continent, between the rivers St. Mary and Nassau. It is very fertile, and has a town with an excellent harbour, (Fernandina, now much declined) at its north end. Long. 82. 0. W. lat. 30. 45. N.

AMELIA, the ancient AMERIA, a town of Italy, seated on a mountain between the Tiber and Nira, 20 miles S. W. of Spoleto, and 45 N. of Rome. It was the birth-place of Sextus Roscius, the celebrated comedian.

AMELIA, an inland county of Virginia. Pop. 10,320. The court-house of the county is 58 miles W. S. W. of Richmond.

AMENIA, a town of the United States, in New York. Marble, magnetic iron-ore, and some mineral springs, are found here. 20 m. E. N. E. from Poughkeepsie and 70 m. S. by E. from Albany. Pop. in 1840, 2,179.

AMERICA, in its most comprehensive sense and present acceptation, may be considered as comprising half of the terrestrial globe, or the whole of the western hemisphere. It has been usual to speak of America as constituting one of the four quarters, or four grand divisions of the globe; but it is equally matter for surprise as well as for regret, that the western hemisphere should so long have remained subject to a misnomer so obvious, and a designation so inappropriate and indefinite. Recent researches in Danish literature have brought to light the fact, that America was visited long before its rediscovery by Columbus. It is proved that the Northmen first discovered this continent in the year 986, and visited it for more than two centuries afterwards. Greenland was colonized by Erik Raude, an Icelandic, about the commencement of the 10th century; and one of these colonists, Leif, visited the continent of North America, and named the districts of Helluland, Markland, and Vinland, the last being the present territory of the United States; many other particulars and descriptions are still preserved. During the ignorance of the middle ages, these discoveries were totally forgotten, and not revived till the present century by the antiquaries of Copenhagen. It has also been lately elicited that its western shores were known to the Japanese and Chinese in the second century. This fact has been embodied in their histories, and of which there can be no doubt. The western hemisphere again became known to Europe in the year 1493 of the Christian era, when Christopher Columbus, a native of Genoa, who, from a long and close application to the study of geography and navigation, had obtained a knowledge of the figure of the earth, much superior to the general notions of the age in which he lived, in order to the terraqueous globe might be properly balanced, and the lands and seas proportioned to each other, was led to conceive that another continent existed. Having fully satisfied himself of the truth of this system, he became impatient to reduce it to practice, and accordingly laid his scheme before the senate of Genoa, making his native country the first offer of his services. They, however, rejected his proposal as the dream of a chimerical projector. It met with the same fate at the courts of Portugal, Spain, and England, and some of the other European powers of less note; but, still undiscouraged, he applied again to the court of Spain, who were at length induced to fit out a squadron of three small vessels, of which Columbus was made admiral; and with these he set out on his voyage of discovery, in 1492, in which voyage he discovered several of the Bahama islands, with those of Cuba and Hispaniola, and returned to Spain in the following year. In a second voyage he discovered many more of the West India islands; and in a third he attained the great object of his ambition, by discovering the southern division of the continent, near the mouth of the Oroonoko. Amongst the crowd of new adventurers who now followed from all parts of Europe, was one Americus Vesputius, a Florentine, who, with much art, and some degree of elegance, drew up an amusing history of his voyage, in which he insinuated that he first discovered what is commonly called the continent of the New World. This being published, and read with admiration, the country at large was, from him, called America, though it is now well understood that Columbus was the first discoverer. The celebrity of Columbus and Americus Vesputius soon resounded throughout all Europe, inspiring numbers of adventurers to witness the fruits of their discoveries. Among the rest, Giovanni Gabota (anglicised Cabot) a Venetian, and his three sons, under the auspices of Henry VII. of England, sailed from Bristol, in 1497, and traced the coast of Labrador as far as the 57th deg. of N. lat. On a second voyage, in the following year, in a ship furnished by the king, accompanied by four small barques provisioned by the merchants of Bristol, under the direction of Giovanni's second son, Sebastian, (who had been born in Bristol, hence the claim of the northern division of the western hemisphere having been discovered by an Englishman,) they discovered the island of Newfoundland in N. lat. about 47, and coasted southward as far as Florida. Cabot made a third voyage to Newfoundland in 1502. In 1519, a body of Spaniards, under the command of Cortez, landed at Vera Cruz, and discovered the populous district of Mexico. In 1524, the French sent an expedition, which traversed the coast from the lat. of 28. to 50. N. France, Spain, and England each sent successive expeditions to North America, and made attempts to establish settlements; but so unsuccessfully, that it is believed, that at the commencement of the 17th century, not a single European remained north of Mexico. In 1608, renewed efforts were made by England; since when, the extent, features, population, and productions of the whole of the western hemisphere have progressively been developed to Europe. America, or the western hemisphere, is sub-divided by nature into two grand divisions, north and south; very distinct in character and feature, connected with each other by a straggling extent of territory, stretching from about the 8th to the 15th deg. of N. lat.

The northern division extends from the polar regions to the 15th deg. of N. lat., the more northern part, as far as lat. 50., extending from about the 56th to the 130th deg. of W. long., and at lat. 65. as far W. as 168 of long. From the 50th to the 30th deg. of lat. the country assumes a very compact form, extending at the N. from about the 62nd to the 124th deg. of long., gradually converging southerly, and at lat. 30 extending only from about the 81st to the 115th deg. of long. at about the 30th deg. of N. lat. The great Gulf of Mexico bounds the land from about the 80th to the 97th deg. of long., the land converging into a promontory of about 10 deg. at the N., extending S. to the chain which unites the northern with the grand southern division, gradually converging in long. to about 1 deg. only, in N. lat. 15, and in W. long. 95. The extreme length of the grand northern division, in a straight, unbroken line, from the mouth of the Coppermine River, which runs S. to N. into the Icy Sea, in lat. 70, to Acapulco, in lat. 17, is about 3200 miles, and the extreme breadth, from the mouth of the Penobscot river, which falls into the division, from the point of the promontory S. in lat. 15. to the lat. of 70 N., bearing W. from the 95th to the 122nd or 123rd of long., and about 10 deg. from the western coast or shore of the Pacific Ocean; this ridge, which seems to be a continuation of the Andes of the southern division, from the 15th to about the 40th deg. of N. lat., is called the Cordilleras, and, more northerly, the Rocky Mountains; the greatest altitude is in N. lat. about 19, where the Popocatepetl issues forth volcanic eruptions at a height of 17,720 ft. above the level of the sea. Another range of mountains runs parallel with the eastern or Atlantic coast, from about the 35th to the 45th deg. of N. lat., diverging into several distinct and parallel ridges, designated the Blue, Tuscarora, and Allegany mountains, and the Laurel and Chesnut ridges; and collectively they are called the Allegany; the greatest altitude does not exceed 4000 ft. above the level of the sea.

Atlantic Ocean in N. lat. 44. 24. W. long. 68. 45. to the mouth of Columbia river, which falls into the North Pacific Ocean in N. lat. 46. W. long. 124. the distance is about 2500. The northern part of this grand division of the western hemisphere is indented by Hudson's Bay, which extends from the line of the Arctic circle, to the 51st deg. of N. lat. and, in its extreme breadth, from the 78th to the 95th deg. of W. long. It is also intersected by a chain of fresh water lakes of vast extent. Athapescow, and the Slave Lake, (the latter of great extent.) discharge their waters into the Icy Sea; Winnipeg, and several of lesser extent and note, discharge their waters into Hudson's Bay; whilst Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, Ontario, and Champlain, between the latitudes of 42 and 48. N. discharge their waters by the great river St. Lawrence into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the lat. of 50. N. and W. long. about 65, the western extremity of Lake Superior being in long. about 92. Innumerable streams of water intersect the country in all directions, which, by unions, form themselves into noble rivers, several of which run into Hudson's Bay, whilst those S. of the great chain of lakes and the St. Lawrence, run a course from N. to S. or S. E. falling into the Atlantic Ocean. Taking them in order from N. to S. the most prominent are, St. John's, the Penobscot, Kennebeck, Androsoggin, Piscataqua, Merrimac, Connecticut, the Hudson or North River, Delaware, Susquehanna, Potomac, Rappahannock, James river, Roanoke, Santee, and Savannah. All these rivers have their source E. of a chain of mountains, called the Allegany, running parallel with the Atlantic coast, from about the 34th to the 43rd deg. of N. lat., and 2 to 300 miles from the ocean. South of the 34th deg. of lat. the Appalochicola, Alabama, Tombecbee, and some other rivers of less note, run a course due S. falling into the Gulf of Mexico. West of the Allegany mountains, innumerable other streams have their source, forming another collection of noble rivers, the most important of which are the Ohio and Tennessee, running from E. to W., the Missouri, Kanza, and Arkansas, and the Red River, running from W. to E., all of which fall into one grand channel, called the Mississippi, which has its source about the 47th deg. of N. lat., running a course nearly due S., falling into the Gulf of Mexico in lat. 29. 5. N. and 89. 8. W. long. The Rio del Norte, or Rio Bravo, another noble river, has its source westward of the Arkansas and Red Rivers, in N. lat. about 42, and falls into the Gulf of Mexico in N. lat. 26. W. long. 97. 25. On the western coast, the Columbia and Colorado are the only rivers of importance, and they are not considerable; the first falls into the Pacific Ocean in N. lat. about 45, and the other into the Gulf of California in N. lat. about 52. A ridge of mountains runs parallel with the western coast, the whole extent of the N.

On the discovery of this vast territory, at the periods previously stated, it was found, to the N. of the 30th deg. of lat., to be thinly populated with inhabitants, and, except the Esquimaux at the more northern part, possessing one common character, and speaking one common language, though somewhat varied in dialect. In person, tall and well-proportioned; complexion coppery, with long, straight, and somewhat coarse, black hair; localized into various tribes or communities, none of whom were found to have made any, or very little, progress in the arts which contribute to the comfort of life; spears and arrows being their only instruments of attack and subsistence, whilst skins, mats, and the coarsest cloth of reeds, grass, or hemp, constituted their chief clothing and protection from the inclemency of the weather. They were, nevertheless, found possessing many manly qualities and social virtues, until corrupted and debased by the vicious refinements of their invaders, before whom they have progressively receded as from a pestilence; and from the effects of whisky and rum, exchanged for the furs which they collected for the traders; and still more, by the dreadful destruction from the small pox, also introduced by Europeans, whole tribes are becoming extinct, and the names alone, of many powerful and numerous nations, exist now as historical remembrances. Of their origin no trace or vestige, either traditional or historical, has as yet been discovered; but from many similarities in manners, customs, religious ceremonies, and peculiarities of language, of the ancient Peruvians and Mexicans, and some of the modern tribes, which may be almost identified with those of the Malays, Indo-Chinese, and Mongolians, and which are found certainly to extend, more or less, throughout the whole of the Polynesian islands, render the hypothesis good, that the population has been derived in an easterly direction from the older countries and people of Asiatic origin.

Northerly, from the 30th deg. of lat., this division of the western hemisphere contains no very remarkable natural features, either of aspect or productions, animal, mineral, or vegetable, beyond the rivers and mountains already described, except the falls of Niagara, and the natural bridge in Virginia, which will be found detailed under those heads, and a few animals, especially the beaver, peculiar to the latitudes of 45 to 48, in this hemisphere. In the plains between the Allegany and Rocky Mountains, fossil bones of animals have been found, far exceeding in dimensions those of any known animal at present existing, or that have ever been found in any part of the eastern hemisphere; neither the elephant, lion, tiger, leopard, panther, nor hyaena, have been found in the northern division, but in the more northern part, bears, wolves, foxes, and a variety of smaller animals abound; the feathered and vegetable kingdoms are various and abundant, but exhibit nothing remarkable. In the rivers S. of the 35th deg. of N. lat. the alligator is common. The promontory S. of the 30th deg. of N. lat. exhibits more sublimity of aspect, variety and richness of production; which will be found more particularly elucidated under the head of Mexico.

The northern division of the western hemisphere is at present divided into three great parts; viz. 1st, N., under the dominion of Great Britain, which part extends S. from the Ice Sea and polar regions, to about the 48th deg. of N. lat., subdivided into seven provinces or territories: viz. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Canada Lower and Upper, Labrador, New South Wales, and the N. W. territory, 2nd, the central part, from the boundary of the British territories on the N., to the Gulf of Mexico S. and W. from the Atlantic Ocean to about the 100th deg. of W. long., and from the 42nd to the 49th deg. of N. lat. extending W. to the Pacific Ocean, under the rule of the federal government of the U. S. of America; and, 3rd, the part extending from the United States territory N., to the isthmus which unites the northern with the grand southern division. This part for three centuries continued under the dominion of Spain; but, from the period of 1820 or 1821, it may be considered as forming a separate and independent territory, which will be found more fully exemplified under the head of Mexico; whilst the 1st. and 2nd. parts will be found more fully treated under the heads of British and U. S. of America.

South Division.—The southern division of the western hemisphere is subtended from the chain which connects it with the northern division, and extends through 68 deg. of lat. from Cape la Vela in 12. 12. N. to Cape Horn in 55. 58. S., being about 4100 miles, and, under the lat. of 5. S., extends through 45 deg. of long. from Cape St. Roque in 35. 40. to Cape Blanco in 81. 10. W. This division of the western hemisphere, as previously stated, was first discovered by Columbus (on his third voyage from Spain,) on the 1st of August, 1498 but it was not till the year 1532 that any inroad was made, or knowledge obtained, of its extent and productions; in which year three low and unprincipled adventurers, Pizarro, Almagro, and the priest Luques, landed on the chain of the Isthmus of Panama, and proceeding S. they discovered the rich and then populous districts of Quito and Peru. In the year 1500, the Portuguese admiral, Alvarez de Cabral, commanding a squadron of 13 sail, with 1200 men on board, destined for the East Indies by the Cape of Good Hope, having been carried by westerly winds beyond the intended longitude, accidentally discovered, on the 24th of April, the southern division of the western hemisphere, about 4 deg. S. of the equator, and, on the following day, landed and took possession of the country, since called the Brazils, in the name of the then potentate of Portugal; and, although near half a century elapsed before any effectual efforts were made by the Portuguese to form a permanent settlement, the whole of the southern division of the western hemisphere (with the exception of a comparatively trifling extent of territory between the 3rd and 7th deg. of N. lat., settled by the Dutch, and the southern extremity, continuing in possession of the natives,) fell under the dominion of Spain and Portugal, the Spanish portion being divided into five departments: viz. New Granada, Venezuela, Peru, Buenos Ayres, and Chili, each subdivided into several provinces; the whole of the Portuguese portion continuing under one general government, the Brazils subdivided into several captaincies, which will be found detailed under the head Brazils. Since the period of 1825, the domination and rule of both Spain and Portugal has entirely ceased over every part of the great southern division of the western hemisphere, new and distinct governments having established themselves, giving rise to new boundaries and subdivisions of territory; which will be found detailed under the several heads of Columbia, Peru, United Provinces of La Plata, or South America, Chili, and the Brazils, and the remaining portion under the heads of Amazonia, Guiana, and Patagonia.

The natural features of this division of the western hemisphere are in the highest degree grand and imposing; extensive fertile plains, yielding variety and abundance of every thing calculated for the comfort of man, whilst the mountains display the majesty of creation, yielding abundance of malleable and indestructible metals, and innumerable streams, forming themselves into noble rivers, yielding their proportion of supply, and affording facility of conveyance, eminently contributing to promote the sociality, enjoyment, and happiness of society. The range of mountains called the Andes, adverted to in the elucidation of the northern division, as extending from the chain to the Ice Sea, extends from the utmost extremity of this division south, to the chain which unites it with the north, running parallel with the shores of the Pacific Ocean, at the distance of 100 to 200 miles from the sea, and occasionally diverging into parallel ridges, the main ridge maintaining an average altitude of 12,000 to 15,000 ft. above the level of the sea, nearly the whole extent of the continent. In 1802, the Prussian travellers, Messrs Humboldt and Bonpland, ascended the peak of the Andes called Chimborazo, in the province of Quito, to the height of 19,400 feet, its extreme altitude being 21,440. The peak of Cotopaxi, 40 miles S. E. of the ancient city of Quito, is volcanic, and frequently emits, with terrific violence, from its summit, 18,898 ft. above the level of the sea. Various mountain ridges intersect the more eastern parts of the continent, all running from south to north, similar in diversity and altitude to the Allegany of the northern division. The rivers run in every direction; taking them from north to south, the first demanding notice is the Magdalena; 2nd, Orinoko; 3rd, the Japura, Tunguragua, Ucayali, Madeira, and Tapajos, branches which form the Amazons; 4th, the Araguay; 5th, the Paranaiba, or Maranham; 6th, the Francisco; and, 7th, the Uruguay, Parana, Paraguay, Pileomayo, Vermejo, and Salado branches, which form the Rio de la Plata, all of which will be found detailed under their respective heads. The inhabitants of this division of the western hemisphere, on the first inroads of the Spaniards, at the commencement of the 16th century, appeared to be of the same stock, and possessing the same common character of feature and colour, as those of the north, but, on the western side, much further advanced in the arts of social life and enervation; but of their origin no credible account, either of history or tradition, could be obtained. Instead of an Adam, formed of the dust of the earth, and an Eve, formed of Adam's rib, the Peruvians had a Manco-Capac, who came from an island on a great lake south, to instruct the men in agriculture and other useful employments, and a Mama-Oello, to instruct the women in spinning and weaving. Of the precise era, however, of their appearance, their chronology was too imperfect to define; they enumerated 14 reigns of incas or sovereigns since their time, which would carry the epoch back to about the end of the 12th, or beginning of the 14th century. In the face of evidence so imperfect, it would be absurd to hazard even a conjecture, much more an assertion, upon the subject of the first peopling of the south. It may, however, be fairly inferred that the north division, subsequent to the last great periodical immersion of the northern hemisphere, was first peopled by emigrants from the south, rather than from any part of the eastern hemisphere. This seems probable, as well from the similarity of general feature and character, as from the regular gradation of the athletic power and energy which seemed to prevail amongst them from south to north. The most healthy and robust of the race would doubtless be most likely to advance onward.

The other part of the animal creation is not so powerful as in the eastern hemisphere. The elephant is nowhere found, either in the north or south. The jaguar and cougar, species of the tiger, and the puma, a species of the lion, are common over every part of the southern division of the western hemisphere, as well as the panther, leopard, and ounce; the lama and vicuña are peculiar to this part of the world; the lama is not very dissimilar to the camel, but inferior in utility, and the vicuña still more so; the wool or hair, however, promises to become a useful article for manufacturing purposes. Every species of deer and furred animals are common; whose skins form great articles of traffic.

Birds are various in species, and numerous, the condor of the Andes is considered superior in majesty to the ostrich of the deserts of Africa; in the plains is another large bird of a species between the ostrich and cassowary of New Holland; there are eagles of various kinds, and an endless variety of smaller birds of exquisitely beautiful plumage. It is considered, however, that in physiognomy and tone, the birds of the western hemisphere are inferior to those of the eastern. The winged tribe and insects are various and infinite, some surpassing in beauty, and others in noxiousness; but, next to the volcanic eruptions and natural convulsions of the earth, the greatest terror of the southern division of the western hemisphere is the reptiles, which exceed in variety, number, and voracity, those of any other part of the world. Of the inhabitants of the waters, the electric eel and ink-fish are peculiar to the eastern coast of the equatorial latitudes of this hemisphere; in addition to which, nearly all the species common to other seas and rivers are also abundant. Indestructible metals and gems are more abundant in this division of the western hemisphere, than in any other part of the world; and those infatuation-exciting metals, gold and silver, seem to abound to such a degree as is likely soon to satiate the mania, and even predilection for their possession. Copper, in several parts, is also abundant. The vegetable productions also exceed in variety, beauty, and utility, those of Asia, or any other part of the globe, whether considered in reference to sustenance, or to luxury, taste, and adornment in art. The climate, though noxious in certain confined and local situations, is on the whole delightful; in short, nothing is wanting but judicious and well-directed means, on the part of man, to render the whole southern division of the western hemisphere the abode of enjoyment and happiness. There are several islands on different parts of the coast of the western hemisphere: taking them in order, beginning with the eastern coast from the north, they stand as follows: viz. Mansfield, at the entrance of Hudson's Bay; Anticosti at the mouth, and St. John's, or Prince Edward's, in Newfoundland, and Cape Breton, at the entrance of the Gulf of St. Lawrence; the Bermudas, lat. 32; Bahamas, Carribee, or West India, comprising Cuba, Hispaniola, or St. Domingo, Jamaica, and numerous others; Trinidad, at the mouth of the Oroonoko; Falkland's in lat. 52. S.; South Georgia, in 54. S. and 36. W. long.; Staten Island, and Terra del Fuego, at the extreme south point of the continent; Chiloe, Juan Fernandez, the Galapagos, Queen Charlotte's, and the Fox Islands, off the western coast, all of which, as well as Guatimala, the provinces of Yucatan, Honduras, Nicaragua, Mosquitia, Veragua, Panama, and Costa Rica, which compose the chain which unites the two grand divisions, will be found detailed under their respective heads.

AMERKOTE, a fort of Hindostan, in the extensive sandy desert between the Indus and the Puddar. This place is celebrated as the retreat of the emperor Hummaion, during his troubles; and here was born his son, the illustrious Akbar. It is 160 miles E. N. E. of Tatta.

AMERSFORT, a town of Holland, in the state of Utrecht. A considerable quantity of tobacco is grown in the neighbourhood. It has a trade in beer, and goods from Germany are shipped here for Amsterdam. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Ems, 10 miles E. N. E. of Utrecht.

AMERSHAM, or AGMONDESIAM, a town in Buckinghamshire; market on Tuesday. It has a considerable manufacture of black lace. The town-hall is the handsomest in the county. 26 miles N. W. of London.

AMESBURY, or AMMESBURY, a town in Wiltshire; market on Friday. It is seated on the lower Avon, at the place where a number of Britons were treacherously murdered, and near that famous monument of antiquity, Stonehenge. Here are the ruins of a venerable abbey. This place gave birth to the celebrated Joseph Addison. It is 6 miles N. of Salisbury, and 77 W. of London.

AMESBURY, a town of the United States, in Massachusetts, on the North side of the Merrimac. The Powow river flows through it, and affords extensive water power. Large ships are also built here and floated in to the Merrimac and to the sea. It is 44 m. E. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 2471.

AMHARA, a district of Abyssinia, between the Dender and Tacazze branches of the Nile.

AMHERST, a small inland county of Virginia, on the north bank of James' River. The courthouse of the county is 130 miles W. of Richmond. Pop. 12,576. Also the name of the chief town of Hillsborough county, New Hampshire, and of another town in Massachusetts, and another in Cumberland county, Nova Scotia.

AMHERST, a settlement belonging to the British on the W. coast of Sum, at the entrance of Martaban Bay.

AMHERSTBURG, a town and fort of Upper Canada, on the east side of the river Detroit, at its entrance into Lake Erie.

AMIENS, a large and populous town of France in the department of Somme. It is a place of great antiquity; being mentioned by Cæsar (by whom it is called Samarobriva) as a town that had made a vigorous resistance against the Romans, and where he convened a general assembly of the Gauls. The city was formerly encircled with fortifications, now levelled and planted with trees, forming pleasant boulevards. It stands on the railways between Boulogne, Paris, and Brussels. At the gate of Noyon there is a suburb, remarkable for the abbey of St. Achen. The cathedral is one of the largest and most magnificent churches in France. Three branches of the river Somme pass through this city, and afterwards unite. Amiens was taken by the Spaniards in 1597, but retaken by Henry IV., who built a citadel in it. A treaty of peace was concluded here, March 27, 1802, between Spain, Holland, France, and England. It has manufactures of linen and woollen cloth, which employ, in the city and adjacent country, 30,000 people. It is 20 miles S. E. of Abbeville, and 75 N. of Paris.

AMLWCH, a town of Wales, on the N. coast of Anglesey, with a harbour for small vessels. It is 15 miles N. W. of Beaumaris, and 266 N. W. of London. In 1768, when the Parys copper mine was opened, it did not contain above six houses. This mine yields a prodigious quantity of ore, the purest of which is exported to Swansea to be smelted.

AMMAS, a town of Syria, anciently the capital of the Ammonites, called Rabbah Ammon, and by the Greeks Philadelphia, and now the principal place of a district. It is 30 miles S. W. of Hama, and 52 N. of Jerusalem.

AMOL, a town of Usbeck Tartary, in Bucharia, and a place of considerable trade. It is seated on the Amu, which falls into the sea of Aral, 60 miles W. of Bucharia. Long 60. 40. E. lat. 39. 20. N.

AMOL, a town of Persia, in Mazanderan, with the remains of an ancient fortress and palace. It has manufactures of cotton, and in the neighbourhood are iron-mines and cannon-foundries. It stands in a plain at the foot of Mount Taurus, and on the borders of the Caspian Sea, 30 miles N. W. of Ferabad. Long. 52. 38. E. lat. 37. 30. N.

AMORGO, an island of the Archipelago, fertile in wine, oil, and corn. The best cultivated parts belong to a monastery. It is 30 miles in circumference, and 67 N. of Candia. Long. 26. 15. E. lat. 36. 20. N.

AMORF, or AMIR, a river of Chinese Tartary. See SAGHATHES.

AMOI, an island on the south-east coast of China, 15 miles in circumference. The English had a factory here, but abandoned it on account of the impositions of the inhabitants. Its port, on the west side, is capable of receiving 1000 ships. It is one of the ports thrown open again to Europeans by the late Chinese war. Long. 118. 45. E. lat. 23. 20. N.

AMPLEFURT, a town of France, in the department of Rhone, celebrated for its wines. It is 16 miles west of Valfranche, and 26 north-west of Lyons.

AMPTRILL, a town in Bedfordshire. Market on Thursday. It was the residence of Catherine, queen of Henry VIII., during the time that her unjust divorce was in agitation. It is situate between two hills, 8 miles S. of Bedford, and 45 N. W. of London.

AMPURIAS, a sea-port of Spain, in Catalonia, at the mouth of the Fluvia, 70 miles north-east of Barcelona. Long. 3. 0. E. lat. 42. 9. N.

AMRAS, a walled city of Arabia, in the mountain land of Yemen; it stands in a very fertile district, in the centre of the best coffee country. Top. 2000.

AMRAS, a castle or palace of Germany, in Tyrol, at the foot of a mountain, two miles S. E. of Inspruck.

AMSTERDAM, the principal city of Holland Proper, situate on the south bank of an inlet of the Zuyder Zee. It was formerly an insignificant fishing town; became a place of some importance towards the close of the 14th century; in 1482 it was first fortified; and towards the close of the 16th, and commencement of the 17th centuries, increased greatly in population and consequence, and after the decline of Venice and Genoa as emporiums of commerce, when the intercourse with Asia by the Cape of Good Hope had become established, Amsterdam became one of the most considerable commercial cities in Europe. Although its external intercourse was greatly impeded during the French revolutionary war, subsequent to 1795, and greatly rivalled by Rotterdam and Antwerp since the peace of 1814, and somewhat decreased in population, Amsterdam still ranks amongst the largest and most respectable commercial cities in Europe. Few places have their public buildings so fine, numerous, and well kept. Here are many handsome churches, colleges, and hospitals for all religions and countries. The exchange is one of the principal ornaments of the city, and the harbour is one of the finest in Europe. The foundation of this town is laid upon piles, driven into a morass, and under the stadhhouse alone are 13,659. The streets are broad and well paved, and most of them have canals, with rows of trees on each side; but there are no spacious public places, or squares. It surrendered to the king of Prussia, in Oct. 1787, when that prince invaded Holland, in favour of the stadtholder; and it received the French troops in Jan. 1795 without any resistance. The French, however, were expelled in November, 1813, by the inhabitants, and the ancient government restored. The river Amstel divides the town into two parts, the Old, or Eastern, and the New, or Western. It is 80 miles N. by E. of Antwerp. It has railways to Haarlem, Utrecht, &c.

AMSTERDAM AND ST. PAUL, two islands in the Indian Ocean, lying in the same longitude, at 40 miles distance. Their names are reversed by navigators, but most of them call the northern one St. Paul, and the southern Amsterdam. The former is high land, and upward of 4 miles long, and 2 miles broad. It has evident marks of volcanic eruption in every part, and is almost wholly covered with a deep fertile soil, but is destitute of trees. On the east side is a great crater, into which the sea has made a narrow and shallow entrance; its shelving sides are 700 feet in perpendicular height, in which, and in the causeway dividing it from the sea, are several hot springs of fresh water. Amsterdam, or the southern island, presents no very high land, or any rise in a conic form. It is covered with shrubs and low trees, but has no convenient landing-place. Long. 77. 48. E. lat. 37. 51. S.

AMSTERDAM, NEW, a town of British Guiana, at the mouth of the Berbice River. Pop. 2,900.

AMSTERDAM, a town of the United States in New York. It stands on the N. side of the Mohawk. The Utica and Shenectady railway passes through it, 32 m. W. of Albany, and 400 from Washington. Pop. of the township in 1840, 5,333.

AMU GHON, AMI, or OXUS, a river of Independent Tartary, formed by numerous streams which issue from the mountains of Belur, on the confines of India and Persia, and, flowing W. by N. through Bokhara, enters the S. extremity of the lake Aral after a course of 1200 miles, part of which is through a desert.

AMWELL, a village in Hertfordshire, a mile S. of Ware, famous for originally giving rise to the New River, which supplies a great part of London with water.

ANACOPTA, the capital of the nation of the Abkaks, on the river Makai, near its entrance into the Black Sea. Long. 40. 30. E. lat. 43. 20. N.

ANADIR, a r. of Siberia, which has its source out of a lake in the province of Tchukotski, and runs into Notchen Bay, near Behring's Straits.

ANA CAPRI. See CAPRI.

ANADOLI. See NATOLIA.

ANAH, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbeck. It stands on a river that flows into the Euphrates, 80 miles W. N. W. of Bagdad, and 240 S. S. E. of Diarbekir. Long. 42. 28. E. lat. 34. 6. N.

ANAM. See TONKIN, COCHIN CHINA, &c.

ANANTPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, 100 miles N. E. of Chittledroog, and 120 N. of Bangalore.

ANAPA, a town in Circassia, on the Black Sea. It is now much reduced.

ANAQUITO, a district in the province of Quito, and kingdom of Peru, where Almagro and Pizarro (joint discoverers of Peru) engaged each other in battle, in 1546.

ANATTON, an island, the most southern of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific Ocean. Long. 170. 9. E. lat. 20. 10. N.

ANBAR, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irac Arabi, seated on the Euphrates, 50 m. W. of Bagdad.

ANCARANI, a town of Italy, 5 miles N. of Ascoli, and 82 N. E. of Rome.

ANCASTER, a village in Lincolnshire, 15 miles S. of Lincoln. It gave the title of duke to the family of Bertie.

ANCIENS, a town of France, in the department of Lower Loire, seated on the Loire, 20 miles E. of Nantes. There are coal and iron mines near it, and it has a good general trade.

ANCLAM, a fortified town of Hither Pomerania, on the river Peene, 20 miles S. E. of Gripswald.

ANCOEN, a territory of Guinea, on the Gold Coast, to the W. of Axim. It has a river of the same name flowing through it; and at its mouth is a town with a good harbour. Long. 1. 10. W. lat. 4. 50. N.

ANCONA, MARQUISATE OF, a maritime province of the states of Rome, Italy, bounded on the E. by the Adriatic, and on the W. by the Apennines; it is very fruitful in corn, fruits, and silk. Pop. 166,114.

ANCONA, a city and seaport of Italy, in the above province, and a bishop's see, with a citadel on a hill. The cathedral stands upon another hill, and the houses extend down the side of the eminence towards the Gulf of Venice. Clement XII. built a mole, to render the harbour safe; it is erected on the ruins of the ancient mole, raised by Trajan, and is above 2000 feet in length. Near this stands the beautiful triumphal arch of Trajan. Here likewise Clement XII. erected a lazaretto, which advances a little way into the sea, in the form of a pentagon. Great numbers of Jews are settled in this city, where they have a synagogue; and they have the principal share of its commerce. Ancona was taken in 1796 by the French, who surrendered it to the Austrians in 1799. It was occupied by the French again in 1832 against the Austrians; but they withdrew in 1849. It is 116 miles N. by E. of Rome. Long. 13. 20. E. lat. 43. 38. N. Pop. about 20,000.

ANCOVE, a district of Madagascar, in the centre of the island. Pop. about 25,000. The soil is barren, and but little agriculture is carried on; but the slave trade was the principal employment. Ancove, or Tamane Anivou, the chief town of the district, is in lat. 20. 20. S. long. 46. 18. E.

ANCRAM, a town of the United States, in New York. It is watered by Ancram and Punch creeks, on the farm of which are large iron-works; gun-barres are extensively made. Lead mines also exist on the Punch Creek. It is 45 miles S. S. E. of Albany, and 340 from Washington. Pop. in 1849, 1770.

ANCYRA, the capital of Galatia, near the river Halys, said to have been built by Midas, king of Phrygia, and so named from an anchor found there. See ANGORA.

ASDABULIAS, the chief town of a district of the same name, in the intendency of Guamanga, Peru, about 100 miles W. of Cusco.

ANDALUSIA, a province of Spain, which in its largest sense comprises the kingdoms of Granada, Seville, Cordova, Jaen, and the colony of Sierra Morena; bounded on the N. by Estremadura and La Mancha, E. by Murcia, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by the Atlantic and Portugal. The Guadalquivir runs through its whole length; and it is the most fertile and trading country in Spain. Its aggregate superficies is 2281 French leagues, and pop. about 2,400,000. The French overran this province in 1810, but evacuated it in consequence of the battle of Salamanca, in 1812. The capital is Seville. For present divisions and p. p., see Appendix.

ANDAMAN ISLANDS, several islands on the eastern side of the Bay of Bengal. The largest, called Great Andaman, is 120 miles long and 16 broad, indented by deep bays affording good harbours, and intersected by vast creeks, one of which passes quite through the island, and at high water is navigable for small vessels. The forests afford some precious trees, as ebony, and the ticober bread-fruit; and the edible birds' nests abound here. The only quadrupeds seem to be wild hogs, monkeys, and rats. The inhabitants are in a state of barbarism, and live chiefly on fish, fruits, and herbs; they perfectly resemble negroes, and their canoes are of the rudest kind. In 1793, the English made a settlement on the N. end of Great Andaman, the largest island, which is called Port Cornwallis, and has a commodious harbour, to shelter ships during the N. E. monsoon. Long. 93. 0. E. lat. 13. 30. N.

ANDAYE, a fortified town of France, in the department of Lower Pyrenees, famous for its brandy. It is situate near the mouth of the Bidasson, almost opposite Forrabia, in Spain, 18 miles south-west of Bayonne.

ANDELDINGEN, a town in Switzerland, canton of Zurich, on the Thur river, over which is a covered bridge.

ANDELEY, a town of France, in the department of Eure, divided by a paved road into Great and Little Andely, a mile from each other. Great Andely is on the rivulet Gamons, and Little Andely on the Seine. The cloths manufactured here are in high esteem. It is 17 miles north-east of Evreux, and 20 south-east of Louen.

ANDERAN, a town of Turkestan, in Ushbek Tartary, or Himalaya. In its vicinity are rich quarries of lapis lazuli. It is seated on a branch of the Gihon, Amu, and near a pass through the mountains of Hindoo-koosh, into the kingdom of Cabul, 240 miles E. S. E. of Balk. Long. 68. 58. east, lat. 36. 10. north.

ANDERD, ST. See SANTANDER.

ANDERSAACH, a town in the grand duchy of the Lower Rhine, now forming part of the Prussian territory. Great quantities of timber are collected here, which are formed into vast rafts, and floated hence to Dordrecht, in Holland. It exports mill-stones, made of porous lava, and large quantities of pounded tufo, or cement, which, when mixed with water, becomes as hard as stone. It is seated on the Rhine, 20 miles N. W. of Coblenz.

ANDES, a chain of mountains running through the whole extent of both the S. and N. divisions of the western hemisphere, from the utmost extremity of the southern division, to S. lat. 54. to about the lat. of 18. S.; they continue, in an unbroken line, to run parallel with the shore of the Pacific Ocean, at a distance of 100 to 200 miles, with here and there parallel ridges further east, and at an altitude of 12,000 to 15,000 feet above the level of the sea; from about the 18th. to the 15th degree of south lat. the chain is somewhat broken, but further north they assume a more grand and imposing form, descending into parallel ridges, and rising near the equator to an altitude of 21,000 feet, and in several places issue forth voluminous eruptions with terrific violence. N. of the equator they diverge into four parallel and distinct ridges, running to the shores of the Caribbean Sea, and the outermost ridge skirting the coast of that sea to the Atlantic. Through the chain which unites the two grand divisions of America, or the western hemisphere, the mountains are considerably broken; but at about the 15th degree of N. lat., through the territory of Mexico, they again assume their wonted grandeur, under other names, rising to a height of 17,720 feet, and again pouring forth volcanic matter, and proceed in an unbroken line at a somewhat greater distance from the sea than through the S. division, by the name of the Rocky Mountains, to the icy Sea, in the 70th deg. N. lat. From the 40th deg. of lat. S. to the 30th N. the Andes abound with gold, silver, copper, and other metallic substances. For more minute details see AMERICA, and the several countries through which the Andes run.

ANDOVER, a town of the U.S., in New Hampshire, on the Blackwater. The surface is very uneven, but in some parts fertile; 22 miles N.W. of Concord. Pop. in 1840, 1168.

ANDOVER, borough, Hampshire, returning two members to parliament; market on Saturday; and a considerable trade in malt. It is near the river Ande, 14 miles W. by N. of Winchester, and 63 W. by S. of London, on a branch of the South Western railway.

ANDOVER, a town of Massachusetts, in Essex county. Here is an excellent academy, called Philip's Academy; and an excellent institution, the Andover Theological Seminary; also, manufactures of paper and gunpowder. It is situate on the Shawsheen and Merrimac rivers, 20 miles W. S. W. of Newbury Port, and 22 N. N. W. of Boston. Pop. 4530.

ANDORRA, a valley of Spain, in Catalonia; one of the wildest districts of the Spanish Pyrenees: it is a sort of independent republic, between France and Spain; in civil matters it is subject to the former, to the latter in religious affairs. It is altogether about 37 miles in extent, and 30 in width; the pop. is about 8000. The chief town is Andorra; population above 1000.

ANDRAGIRI, or INDRAGIRI, the capital of a kingdom on the eastern coast of the island of Sumatra. The chief produce is pepper. It is seated on a river, commodious for trade, 200 miles north by west of Bencoolen. Long. 102. 0. E. lat. 0. 58. S.

ANDRARIUM, a town of Sweden, in Gothland, with the greatest alum-work in the kingdom. It is 10 miles S. of Christianstadt.

ANDREASBERG, a town of Hanover, principality of Grubenbagen, 28 miles north-east of Gottingen, in a district which has mines of iron, copper, cobalt, and silver. It has a college, and manufactures of lace and thread. Pop. 3400.

ANDREW, Sr., a town of Germany, in Carinthia, and a bishop's see; seated on the river Lavant, 20 miles E. N. E. of Clagenfurt.

ANDREW, Sr., a sea-port town of New Brunswick, at the entrance of the Passamaquoddy river.

ANDREW'S, Sr., a city of Scotland, in Fifeshire, once the metropolis of the Pictish kingdom, and the see of an archbishop, and still the seat of the oldest Scotch university. The university was founded by Bishop Wardlaw, in 1411, and consists of two colleges. The cathedral, the chapel and tower of St. Regulus, and the church of St. Salvador, have been noble structures. The castle was the scene of the cruelty and punishment of Cardinal Beaton: the window is still shown from which he beheld the martyrdom of George Wishart, who was burnt on the spot beneath; and in this castle he himself was assassinated in 1546. The gigantic wall, also, of the priory, is an object of no little interest; it is 22 feet high, 4 thick, and 870 long, with 14 turrets. It is a place of little trade, and the harbour is in bad condition. It is seated at the bottom of a bay, on the level top of a small hill, 30 miles N. N. E. of Edinburgh. Pop. 3767. It has a branch to the Edinburgh and Dundee Railway.

ANDRIA, a town of Naples, 9 miles S. of Barletta. It is the seat of a bishopric, has a superb cathedral, a royal college, and three monts-de-piété. It was founded in 1046 by Peter, count of Trani. Pop. 13,500.

ANDROS, an island in the Archipelago, 24 miles long and 8 broad. It is one of the ancient Cyclades. It has fertile plains, which are well watered; and it wants only a good harbour. The inhabitants are of the Greek church, and have a bishop and several monasteries. The principal riches of this island consist in wine and silks, and the fields produce oranges, citrons, mulberries, pomegranates, and figs. The capital is of the same name; and about two miles from it are to be seen the ruins of a strong wall, with the fragments of many columns, chapters, bases, broken statues, and several inscriptions, some of which mention the senate and people of Andros, and the priests of Bacchus; from which it is probable that this was the site of the ancient city. Pop. 16,000. Long. 25. 2. E. lat. 38. 0. N.

ANDROS ISLES, a group of islands separated by intricate channels, forming part of the Bahamas in the W. Indies. Andros is the largest of the Bahamas. They are low and very thinly populated.

ANDROSCOGGAN, a river rising from Umbagog Lake, on the W. side of the state of Maine, runs into New Hampshire, and re-enters Maine, falling into the Kennebeck, about 18 miles above its confluence with the sea.

ANGERMÜNDE, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark, on the lake Münde, 48 miles N. N. E. of Berlin.

ANGERS, a large city of France, in the department of Maine and Loire, situated near the confluence of the Sarthe, the Loire, and the Maine, which divides the city into two equal parts, between which there is a communication by two large bridges. Pop. 59,066. The castle is situated in the centre of the city, on a rock overhanging the river. The cathedral is a venerable and elegant structure; the principal gate is surrounded with three steeples. Here lies interred with her ancestors, the renowned Margaret, daughter of René king of Sicily, and queen of Henry VI. of England, who expired after many intrepid but ineffectual efforts to replace her husband on the throne, in 1482, at the castle of Dampierre. The university of Angers was founded in 1398, and the academy of belles lettres in 1685. It has a considerable manufacture of handkerchiefs and canvas; and the produce of the slate quarries, at the extremity of the suburb of Bressigny, forms likewise an important article of commerce. The walls with which king John of England surrounded it in 1214, remain nearly entire, and are of very great circumference. It is 50 miles E. N. E. of Nantes, and 175 S. W. of Paris, on the railway connecting Nantes with Orléans.

ANGLES, OR ANGLEEN, a small country of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick. Many authors suppose that from the people of this country the English originated; being called in to assist the Britons against the invaders from Norway, they in process of time became masters of the country, and gave it the name of England.

ANGLESEY, an island and co. at the N. W. extremity of Wales. It is separated from Carnarvonshire by a long and narrow channel called Menai, over which is a noble suspension bridge, consisting of one principal opening of 560 ft. and seven stone arches. A still more wonderful work is the Britannia Bridge, a table of wrought-iron plates, for conducting the Chester and Holyhead Railway over the strait. That part of the island which borders this strait is finely wooded, as in its ancient state, when it was held by the Druids, whose rites were performed in the gloom of its woods. Rude mounds and heaps of stone, said to be druidical remains, are still to be seen; but a little way within, the whole appears an open tract, without trees or hedges, watered by numerous rills, fertile in grass and corn, and abounding in cattle. This island produces vast quantities of copper and sulphur, and in the N. W. part is a quarry of green marble intermixed with asbestos. It returns one member to parliament. Beaumaris and Holyhead are the chief towns; See HOLYHEAD.

ANGOLA, a country of Western Africa, extending along the shore of the Atlantic, from the Rio Ambriz in lat. 7. 47. S., to the river Cuanza in lat. 9. 20. S. It is a Portuguese possession, being so by right of discovery in 1485, and re-conquered in 1569. It is politically divided into 6 presidios and 4 districts, the capital being S. Paulo da Assumpção de Loanda. It extends inland to the countries of the Mollus, Jaga-Cassarge, and Dala Quicua, portions of which were traversed by Dr. Livingston in 1854-5. Its productions are cotton, sugar-cane, indigo, rice, coco-nuts, castor-oil, copal, tobacco, urzelia, &c. The natives of the ordinary negro-cast are idle and effeminate; marice, or sweet cassava, is the chief food cultivated. The population of the kingdom is estimated at 246,000, of whom 1740 only are white, including 154 women. The Portuguese authority is chiefly confined to the chief ports, from whence the export of copper ore, and other articles of commerce, have been lately increasing. Previous to the prevention of the slave-trade by British and French cruisers, this coast exported upwards of 100,000 negroes per annum.

ANGOLALA, a town on the Galla frontier of Abyssinia, founded 11 years since; the capital of the W. portion of the Kingdom of Soba, formerly part of Abyssinia. It consists of 100 or 500 huts, and a palace, &c.

ANGORA, OR ANGORA, the ancient Ancyra, a city of Asiatic Turkey, in Naxos, and a Greek archbishop's see, remarkable for its remains of antiquity; such as inscriptions, pillars, ruins of temples, &c. The castle has a triple enclosure, and the walls are of white marble and stone, resembling porphyry. The inhabitants are estimated at 50,000. Here are bred the finest goats in the world; the hair, being almost like silk, is worked into fine stuffs. It stands in a lofty situation, 212 miles S.E. of Constantinople. Long. 32 50. E. lat. 40. 4. N.

It is three miles in circumference, with a strong old castle on a rock, and had formerly a considerable manufacture of printed calicoes. Many medals of the Syrian kings have been found here, and some also of the kings of Cappadocia. It is 50 miles E. of Alexandretta, and 60 N. by E. of Aleppo. Pop. 20,000. Long. 37. 35. E. lat. 36. 35. N.

ANTALOW, a town in Abyssinia, prov. Tigré, 25 leagues S. S. E. of Axum. It is a considerable place, seated on the side of a mountain.

ANTARCTIC REGIONS, around the S. Pole. The probability of a southern continent seems to be revived from the recent discoveries in this part of the world. It was believed to exist till the voyage of Cook in 1774, when he reached the lat. of 71. 10. S., and his further progress was impeded by vast mountains and fields of ice, but without any discovery of land, and the belief of this continent was then abandoned. In Feb. 1831, land was discovered by Captain Biscoe, in lat. 66. 0. and long. 45. 0. E., which he named Enderby's Land; and afterwards, in Feb. 1832, he discovered Adelaide Island, in lat. 67. 1. S. and long. 71. 48. W. lying off Graham's, or Gherritz Land, to the southward of the South Shetland group; in 1838, land adjoining to Graham's Land was discovered by Captain D'Urville, and named Land of Louis Philippe. In 1839, Sabrina Land was discovered, in lat. 65. 0. S. long. 117. 0. E., and the Balleny Islands, in 66. 0. S. lat. and 164. 0. E. long.; they are volcanic. In 1840 (Jan. 18), Captain D'Urville discovered the Land of Adelle, between lat. 66. and 67. S. long. 140. 0. E. In 1841, Captains Ross and Crozier discovered the Land of Victoria, in long. 168. E., along which they sailed as high as lat. 78½, the nearest approach to the S. Pole which has yet been made. In lat. 77. 50. is Mount Erebus, an active volcano 12,000 ft. high; and to the S. of which a chain of lofty mountains extend. Their progress to the eastward was impeded by vast fields and cliffs of ice. These explorations, and those of the United States' exploring expedition subsequently under Captain Wilkes, render it probable that there is a continued line of coast for a great distance in the Antarctic Ocean; but which is very difficult of access, from the vast accumulation of ice.

ANTEQUERA, a town of Spain in Granada, divided into the Upper and the Lower. The Upper is seated on a hill, and has a castle; the Lower stands in a fertile plain, and is watered by many brooks. Here are large quantities of natural salt quarries, of excellent stone, and a famous medicinal spring. It is

ANTEQUERA, a town of Mexico, See GUAXACA.

ANTHONY, ST., FALLS OF, on the Mississippi River, in N. lat. 45. W. long. 93., being more than 2000 miles above the entrance of the river into the Gulf of Mexico. There is a fort in the Missouri territory, on the point of land formed by the St. Peter's River, which river falls into the Mississippi just below the falls of St. Anthony.

ANTHES, a town of France, in the department of Var, with a strong castle, and harbour for small vessels. Its territory produces excellent fruit; and it is seated on the Mediterranean, 11 miles S. S. W. of Nice. It is a very ancient place, having been founded 340 B. C. by a colony from Marseilles. Long. 7. 7. E. lat. 43. 35. N.

ANTONIS, St., a town of France, department Tarn et Garonne, in a spacious valley at the confluence of the Aveyron and Bonnette, 22 miles E. N. E. of Montauban. It has fabrics of serges, paper, and a considerable trade in leather, prunes, and juniper. Pop. 5455.

ANTONIO, St., the most northern of the Cape Verde islands, 15 miles from St. Vincent. It is full of high mountains, whence proceed streams of excellent water, which render the land fruitful. The principal town is seated among the mountains. Longitude 25. 0. W. lat. 17. 0. N.

ANTONIO DE CAIS, St., a town of Brazil, in the province of Pernambuco, situate near Cape St. Augustine, 30 m. S. S. W. of Olinda.

There are near 100 other towns and streams in different parts of S. America and Mexico, dedicated to the tutelary saint of the Portuguese and Spaniards, Anthony, or San Antonio, who does not appear to have done much for them, as they are mostly insignificant.

ANTHIM, a maritime county on the N. E. coast of Ireland. It has two great natural curiosities: Lough Neagh, a large lake, the area of which exceeds 190,000 acres, the waters being of a petrifying quality; and the Giant's Causeway, consisting of lofty pillars of basalt, all of angular shapes, from three to eight sides, and extending three miles along the north shore. The linen manufacture is carried on very extensively in this county, and since about 1823, the cotton manufacture has been making considerable progress. The principal towns are Belfast, Lisburne, and Carrickfergus, each of which (in addition to the two for the county,) returns one member to the parliament of the United Kingdom. Carrickfergus is the assize town.

ANTHIM, a city and parish of the above county, about 19 miles N. W. of Belfast. The town is situate on the bank of a small stream, which runs through Lough Neagh, at a short distance on the N. E. Though well situated for commanding the trade on Lough Neagh, and serving as a depôt and central market for an extensive agricultural district, it enjoys little consideration, and has lost nearly all of the ancient consequence, which rendered it a successful competitor with Carrickfergus, for the metropolitan honours of the country; yet is rather a languishing than a decaying town, it is on the railway which connects Belfast, Coleraine, and Portrush, &c. Market on Tuesday and Thursday. In the parish is one of the celebrated round towers, in good preservation. Pop. 2393.

ANTHIM, a township of the United States, in New Hampshire. It has some valuable water power, and several large fish-ponds, 28 m. W. by S. of Concord. Pop. in 1840, 1225.

ANTWERP, a celebrated city of Brabant, and, after the decline of Venice and Genoa, it became one of the most considerable commercial depôts of Europe. It is situate on the east bank of the Scheldt, in N. lat. 51. 13. and 4. 24. E. long. The era of its greatest importance was about the commencement of the 17th century, when its population amounted to about 200,000, but the devastating policy of Austria and Spain involved it in the bigoted and ruthless contentions of that period; further, by the extent of the commercial transactions, which its localities tended to make the centre, it greatly rivalled the transactions of Rotterdam and Amsterdam, and as such excited the grovelling jealousy of the Hollanders; the navigation of the Scheldt was therefore obstructed in 1648, by the treaty of Westphalia between Spain and Holland, and Antwerp in consequence progressively declined in population and importance, until the period of the French revolution. When the French overran this part of Europe in 1794, they proclaimed the free navigation of the Scheldt, and after the renewal of the war subsequent to the peace, or rather the respite of Amiens in 1802, Antwerp claimed the especial notice of Napoleon, who constructed a basin to hold about 20 sail of the line, and a noble quay, along the east bank of the river, and made it his principal naval arsenal for the northern part of his empire. It was not, however, till subsequent to the general peace of Europe in 1814, when the Netherlands were ceded to Holland, and Antwerp declared a free port for the transit of merchandise, that it began to resume its former wonted activity and importance. Since that period, Brussels, and a vast extent of country westward of the Rhine, draw their supplies of foreign produce from Antwerp, which is, in consequence, progressively, though slowly, increasing in population and interest. It has, however, but few articles of export, either within itself, or of transit. The principal architectural ornament of Antwerp is the cathedral, the tower of which is surmounted, at a height of 400 ft., with a lantern of open lattice-work of exquisitely beautiful workmanship; the interior is ill-proportioned and void of effect, and its decorations of art have been overrated. There are four other churches and one or two monastic establishments deserving attention. The exchange, so long celebrated, is very commodious, forming nearly a square of great amplitude, with an interior piazza; but as an architectural edifice it is unworthy of notice. The fortifications on the land side are very complete; and, since 1816, extensive fortifications have been constructed opposite to the town on the west side of the Scheldt, calculated to afford protection in the event of any attempt at assault by water. The citadel was retained for the king of Holland by Gen. Chassé, on the separation of Belgium from Holland, but was taken by the French, as the allies of Belgium. It is connected with Brussels and the rest of Belgium by the system of railways. Pop. about 76,000. 22 miles N. of Brussels, and 65 S. of Amsterdam.

ANZERMA, a town of New Granada, in the province of Popayan, where there are mines of gold. It is seated on the river Cauca, 140 miles N. N. E. of Popayan. Long. 75. 25. W. lat. 4. 58. N.

ANZI, a town of Naples, 13 miles S. E. of Potenza. Pop. 3090.

ANZIKO, a kingdom of Guinea, lying E. of Gabon and N. of Congo, but is little known. The king is styled the Micoeo, whence the country is sometimes so called. The capital is Mousol.

ANZIS, a village of France, dep. du Nord, in the vicinity of Valenciennes. It is the seat of the richest coal mines in France, which are exceedingly profitable, in consequence of the high duty on foreign coal. Pop. 4182.

AOSTA, or AOSTE, duchy of, a province of Piedmont, bounded on the W. and N. by the Alps, or rather on the N. by the Valais, for the mountains run from N. to S. into Aoust, which may be considered altogether as a mountainous district. Pop. about 65,000. The principal city of the same name, which is a bishop's see, is situate about the centre of the province, between two streams of the Baltea River, which falls into the Po, and on the great high road from the pass of St. Bernard to Turin. It contains several monuments of the Romans. Pop. about 5300.

APALACHIAN. See ALLEGHIAN MOUNTAINS.

APALACHE. See MARKS, ST.

APANORMIA, a town of the island of Santorin, seated on the N. W. coast, 7 miles N. N. W. of Scauro, at the entrance of the Grecian Archipelago.

ARAI, one of the New Hebrides, near Malicollo, in the Pacific Ocean. Long. 163. 27. E. lat. 16. 46. S.

APENNINES, the name given to the mountain system which traverses the whole length of Italy. At its N. extreme it is difficult to say where is the exact line of distinction from the Alps. The Northern Apennines extend from the pass of the Bochetta E. S. E. to the E. of Florence; hence the Central extend S. E. as far as Monte Vellano; then the Southern run E. S. E. till the sources of the Brandano, when they divide into two branches, of which the Eastern ends at Capo di Leuca, opposite Corfu; the Western range runs between 41. and 39. N. lat., nearly S. S. W., and between 39. and 38. S. S. W., terminating at the Cape dell' Armi, in the straits of Messina. The height of them varies from 3000 to 6000 or 7000 feet; Monte Corno in the Central range, near the Adriatic sea, rises to a height of 9524 feet, and is the highest in the whole range. From M. Vesuvius to the R. Ombrone in Tuscany is a volcanic region; there are also other volcanic rocks S. of the Tiber. The country round Rome is overspread with volcanic matter, and the Seven Hills themselves are partly composed of it. Earthquakes are frequent in the countries W. of the range; in the country about M. Matese, in 1805, an earthquake occurred, which killed 3274, and wounded 1513 persons.

APENRADE. See ABENRADE.

APHIOM, or APHIUM-KARA-BISSAR, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, built round a high rock, on the top of which is a fortress. It is three miles in circumference, and has a considerable trade. The chief manufacture is carpets; and the country around produces much opium, called aphiom by the Turks. It stands on the Mindra, 150 miles E. of Smyrna. Long 31. 10. E. lat. 38. 35. N.

APOLDA, a tn. of Upper Saxony in Thuringia, 8 miles N. of Jena, and 40 S. W. of Leipsic.

APPALACHICOLA a town of West Florida, United States, situated on a bluff at the mouth of the Appalachieola river, on the west side. The river forms a broad estuary called Appalachieola bay which connects with St. George's Sound; it is navigable for small vessels to the junction of the Chattahoochee and Flint rivers. The Chattahoochee, the largest branch, is navigable for boats nearly 400 m. from the gulf of Mexico. The town of Appalachieola is a port of entry, and is also a considerable cotton mart. It has 20 steam-boats and a tonnage of 4054 in 1840. It occupies a square mile, and is regularly laid out.

APPENZEL, a canton in the N. E. part of Switzerland, bordering on Tyrol. It is divided into twelve communities; six, called Rhodes Exterior, are Roman Catholics, about 11,272 in number, subsisting chiefly by agriculture; and six called Rhodes Interior, bordering on the canton of St. Gallen, are Protestants, about 43,621 in number, a great portion of whom are employed by the manufacturers of the city of St. Gallen.

APPENZEL, the chief town of the above canton, is situate on the bank of the river Siter, in Rhodes Interior, and containing about 1400 inhabitants. In the course of the recent political and religious struggles in Switzerland, this canton divided itself, like that of Bâle, into two half cantons, Intérieur and Extérieur, above described; each having half votes in the Diet, and each neutralizing the other by mutual opposition. See SWITZERLAND and Appenzel.

APPIN, a town in Scotland, Argyshire. The parish is of great extent.

APPINAY, the county town of Westmoreland. Market on Saturday. It was a Roman station, and has been twice destroyed by the Scots, and it now consists of only one broad street of mean houses. At the upper end, or S. part, is the castle, and at the lower end is the church. The town is almost encircled by the Eden. It is 20 miles S. N. E. of Kendal, and 270 N. N. W. of London.

APPINROSS, a parish extending for about 20 miles along the western coast of Ross-shire, Scotland. The population subsists mainly by the herring fishery. There is a town of the same name, in which the population are principally concentrated.

APPLEDORP, a vill. in the parish of Northam, Devonshire, situate at the mouth of the Towridge, in Barnstaple Bay, 3 miles N. by E. of Boleford. Here the Danes landed, under Hubba, in the time of Alfred. It is now resorted to for bathing.

APOLLONIA, a district extending about 100 miles on the S. W. coast of North Africa. Cape Apollonia is in 5 N. lat. and 3. 57. W. long.

APOLONASHUA, a town in La Paz, one of the united provinces of Paraguay, on the border of Peru.

APPOMATONX, a river of the United States in Virginia. After flowing 120 miles, it unites with the James R. at City Point, and is navigable for vessels of 100 tons up to St. Petersburg.

APSHERON, or APSHARON, a cape in the Caspian Sea, into which it projects from Baku, and contains a prodigious quantity of naphtha.

APT, a town in France, in the department of Vaucluse. It has a trade in prunes, coarse serge, and wax chandlery; and contains many fine Roman antiquities. It is seated on the Calaron, 20 miles N. of Aix.

APULIA, or PUGLIA, a portion of Southern Italy, containing three provinces, Capitanata, Bari, and Otranto. Area, 8092 square miles. Pop. 1,073,700. The first prov., Capitanata, produces corn, wool, wine, and oil; it is partly n mountain and partly a plain district. Bari is fertile in corn, wine, tobacco, saffron, &c., and has the finest sheep in Apulia; it also produces a great quantity of salt. Otranto yields wine, cotton, tobacco, and would be one of the richest provinces of Italy, but for its mal-administration; its chief natural disadvantage is the want of water. Many of the inhabitants of Apulia are Greeks or Albanians; in Otranto, these constitute $\frac{1}{4}$ of the whole. Although Apulia has about 440 miles of coast-line, it is singularly deficient in bays and harbours.

APURIC, a river of Columbia, rising from various sources on the E. side of the eastern range of the Andes, falling into the Oroonoko.

APURIMAC, a river of Peru, which rises 10 miles N. of Arequipa, and flows S. about 430 miles; receiving the Paucartambo, and Vilcomayo from the E., and the Janja or Mantaro from the W. It then takes the name of Ucaiale, and, continuing its course 470 miles further, enters the river Amazon, in long. 72. 46. W.

AQUI, a town of Piedmont, in the duchy of Montferrat, with a citadel, and baths of mineral water; seated on the north bank of the Bormida, 15 miles S. of Alexandria.

AQUILA, a fine large city of the kingdom of Naples, anciently called Avia, and Avella, the capital of Abruzzo, seated on a hill, E. of the Apennines, on the banks of the river Alterno, or Pescara, near its source. It has an ancient castle, and is a bishop's see. An earthquake was so violent here, in February, 1703, that 24,000 people perished, and great numbers were wounded. It is situate 35 miles W. from the Adriatic, and 92 E. of Rome. Long. 13. 20. E. lat. 42. 27. N. Pop. 9194.

AQUILEIA, an ancient city of the Carni, or Veneti, in Italy, seated near the coast, at the head of the Gulf of Venice. A Roman colony was settled in it, between the first and second Macedonian wars, to be a bulwark against the Huns and Goths. In 452, it was besieged by Attila, with an innumerable host of barbarians. Three months were consumed without effect in the siege; till the want of provisions, and the clamour of his army, compelled Attila to issue his orders, that the troops should strike their tents the next morning, and begin their retreat. But as he rode round the wall, pensive, angry, and disappointed, he observed a stork preparing to leave her nest in one of the towers, and to fly, with her infant family, towards the country; this he interpreted as an omen that those towers were devoted to impending ruin and solitude. The siege was renewed and prosecuted with fresh vigour; a large breach was made in the part of the wall from whence the stork had taken her flight; the Huns mounted to the assault with irresistible fury, and the succeeding generation could scarcely discover the ruins of Aquileia. It is surrounded by a wall and ditch, and is connected by a canal with the port of Erado, the residence of a few fishermen. This is all that remains of this once great town, the key of Italy. Pop. about 15,000.

ARANSO, a tn. of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, ruined by the emperor Courade. It is the birthplace of Juveuil, and seated near the Carigliano, on the great high road from Rome to Naples, 20 miles S. by E. of Sorra.

ARABAT, a town and fort of the Crimea, and province of Taurida, on the borders of the Sea of Asoph, 20 miles N. by E. of Caffa.

ARABIA, a country of Asia, extending from the 12th to the 32d deg. of N. lat. and from the 33d to the 58th of W. long., being about 1480 miles in length, and 1200 in breadth; bounded on the W. by the Red Sea, and the Isthmus of Suez, N. E. by the Euphrates, which divides it from Diarbekar; E. by the Gulfs of Persia and Ormuz; and S. by the Indian Ocean. It has by some been divided into three parts—Arabia Petraea, Deserta, and Felix, so named by Europeans, from their supposed qualities of soil and climate.

Arabia Petraea, much the smallest of the three, lies to the S. of Syria, along the E. coast of the Red Sea. The north part is mountains, and in general stony, sandy, and barren; but some parts yield sufficient nourishment for cattle, whose milk, and camels' flesh, is the chief food of its few inhabitants. Arabia Deserta lies S. of Syria, and E. of Arabia Petraea and the Red Sea. It is for the most part desert, being intersected by barren mountains, and many of the plains are nothing but great sands and heaths; but there are some plains and valleys that feed great flocks of sheep and goats; there are also great numbers of ostriches, and a fine breed of camels in several places, and the horses are the noblest of the species. Arabia Felix, so called on account of its fertility with regard to the rest, lies to the S. of Arabia Deserta, between the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean. It is by far the most considerable part; and, though the centre is occupied by very dry deserts, there are many rich provinces on the coasts, producing a variety of fruits, honey, wax, cinnamon, cassia, manna, spikenard, frankincense, myrrh, and coffee, of which latter great quantities are exported from Moela. But the divisions followed by the Arabian geographers themselves, and which there is every probability are identical with those of ancient date, are 7 in number, viz.: 1. Bar-el-tour-Sinai (the desert of Mount Sinai,) and nearly identical with Arabia Petraea. 2. Il Hedjas, (the land of pilgrimage) on the coast of the Red Sea. 3. Medsjed, the largest, central, and least known portion of the peninsula. 4. El-Hassa, Lachsa, Hadsjai, or Bahrein, on the Persian Gulf. 5. Oman, a mountainous region, having N. the Persian Gulf, and El-Hassa, and W. and S. E. vast deserts. 6. Hadramaut forms the S. E. division of Arabia, and 7. Yemen the southern portion of the peninsula. The two last being identical with the Arabia Felix of former ages. These are all subdivided into a great number of petty sovereignties, or rather tribes, which are but imperfectly understood in most instances in Europe. It has been vaguely estimated that the total population amounts from 12,000,000 to 14,000,000. The Arabs are of a middle stature, generally extremely thin, and brown complexion, and have always a grave and melancholy air. They derive their subsistence from their flocks, from hunting, and from what they acquire by plunder of the caravans which pass from Aleppo to Bassora, and from Bassora to Mecca. They acknowledge no sovereign, but the emirs of their tribes, who are their natural princes, and to whom they pay obedience. They have also sheikhs, or chiefs, of an advanced age, whom they often consult, and whose advice they follow. The dress of the Arabs consists of a white robe, bound round with a broad leather girdle, fastened by a strong buckle, or large clasp. Their drawers are made of linen, and descend to the lower part of the leg. They wear a kind of red cap on the head; and sometimes they wear slippers, after the manner of the Turks, but are generally in half boots, that they may be ready to get on horseback. Winter and summer they wear a large cloak, striped black and white, made of the hair of goats or some other animal. Their emirs dress in the same manner, except that their cloaks are for the most part all black. The Arabs in the deserts live in tents, and remove from place to place, partly for the sake of pasture, and partly to lie in wait for the caravans. The famous Mahomet was a native of this country; and his followers, soon after his death, conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe, establishing their religion wherever they came. The interior of this vast territory is very little known, but it seems nearly destitute of water, as but very few rivers are found around its coasts for near 2500 miles. Medina, Mecca, and Mocha, all on the coast of the Red Sea, are the chief towns.

ARABIAN GULF. See RED SEA.

ARACAN, RECCAN, or ARRACAN, a country of Asia, extending along the W. coast of the great E. peninsula of S. Asia; its length from N. to S. is about 500 miles; breadth at its N. end, 90 miles, gradually diminishing towards the S.; area, 16,250 square miles. Pop. about 230,000. The Yeomandong mountains bound it on the E.; the country is generally diversified with hill and dale; but on the N. border, the coasts are low, marshy tracts. The rivers run mostly in a S. W. direction; the largest is the Aracan (properly Kulady new,) which rises in the Biramese mountains, and discharges itself in 20. 15. N. lat. by several months; on one of which stands the capital Aracan. The coast contains many good harbours, and affords good anchorage ground. The climate is unhealthy, and the products of the country comparatively insignificant: not more than 1-133rd part being in cultivation, and of this nearly the whole is applied to growing rice; the remainder to cotton, indigo, &c. A good quantity of salt is also produced, and is one of the staple commodities. The chief exports consist of rice, paddy, wood, oil, buffalo hides and horns, elephants' tusks, tobacco, silk, cotton, &c. Since, however, the British occupation of it in 1824, the country has been getting into better condition; the people, who are Buddhites, and by no means a prepossessing race, either in character or habits, are becoming under British influence more civilized and industrious; the bands of robbers which formerly infested the country have been extirpated, and more satisfactory modes of living introduced, by the encouragement of agriculture and commerce.

ARACAN, (city) the capital of the above country, situated on one of the minor mouths of the Aracan, which is here crossed by several lofty wooden bridges. It forms an irregular square, walled on all sides, except on the N. E., where it touches a shallow lake; but as a fortress it is valueless, being on all sides commanded by various hills. There are the ruins of an ancient palace and fort within the town; and also many pagodas, as well as on the surrounding heights. Next to Akyab, it has the best market for English manufactures, and the export of silks; but its consequence has gradually declined since Akyab began to rise into importance. Pop. about 9,000.

ARACINA, a town of Spain in Andalusia; a favourite resort for the élite of Seville in the summer season. It has a Moorish castle in ruins. Pop. about 5,000.

ARAD, a town of the Austrian empire on both sides of the Maros; that part which is on the N. bank, or Old Arad, being in Hungary, and the other, or New Arad, in the Bannat, 27 miles N. of Temeswar. New Arad is strongly fortified, and Old Arad is the residence of a Greek Bishop. The town is the entrepôt of the products of a vast tract of country, which are shipped here, and sent along the Danube to various parts. The Jews have exclusive monopolies of tobacco, corn, and other commodities, and are therefore very opulent and numerous. Pop. nearly 18,000.

ARAFAT, or GEBEL ORFIAT, a mountain of Arabia, about 1500 feet in height, 15 miles S. S. E. of Mecca. Its name implies the mountain of knowledge, and as such is an object of adoration with the devotees of Mahomet; in 1807, upward of 80,000 pilgrims, including 45,000 mounted Wahabees were assembled about it.

ARAGOSA, a town of Sicily, 7 miles N. of Girgenti, on a hill; it is remarkable for its castle, containing a fine gallery of pictures; and for the mud volcano in its vicinity, which consists of numerous little hillocks with craters, which continually throw up a fine cold mud, and sometimes bubbles of sulphurous air; occasional eruptions eject the mud to a height of 40 or 50 feet; but generally it is not thrown up more than one or two feet.

ARAGUAYA, a noble river of South America, which rises in the lat. of about 19. S. near to the Parana, which runs from N. to S., whilst the Araguaya runs through the heart of Brazil from S. to N., to the lat. of about 7. S., where it is joined by the Tocantins, and about 5 deg. further it diverges into two branches, one falling into the Amazon, and the other forming a separate channel into the Atlantic, called Parana, in lat. of 0. 20. S. and 48. 20. W. long.

ARAT, a lake of Independent Tartary, 120 miles E. of the Caspian Sea. It is 200 miles in length, and in some places 70 in breadth, intersected by the lines of 45 N. lat. and 60. W. long. The water is salt, and there are many small saline lakes in the vicinity, but it has no visible communication with the sea.

ARAMOS, a town of France, department of Gard, on the Rhone; it has several manufactures.

ARANDA, a town of Spain, in Arragon, on the Duero, in a hideous, but fruitful country. Pop. about 4500. 84 miles from Madrid.

ARANJUEZ, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with broad streets intersecting each other at right angles. The great square is surrounded by porticoes, and has a fountain that supplies the town with water. Here are three churches, and a theatre for bull-fights; but the glory of Aranjuez is the royal palace and gardens, situated on an island formed by the Tagus, the Xarama, and a canal. This was the state of Aranjuez in the palmy days of Spain. Since the death of the sensual Ferdinand VII., its palace has been neglected, its theatre closed, and it is now a melancholy and deserted place, though still pleasant in its desolation. But in 1843 something was done for its restoration, which, should peace be preserved, will no doubt lead to its ancient state. Aranjuez is seated on the Tajo, 20 miles S. of Madrid.

ARARAT, a mountain of Armenia, situated near the chain of Taurus, in lat. 39. 42. N. and long. 44. 30. E. It is an insulated mountain, whose summit forms two distinct cones, the highest of which is 17,260 feet above the level of the sea, the other about 4000 feet lower. The principal summit is a circular plain about 200 feet in diameter, and encircled with perpetual ice. The ascent is so difficult, that it was not accomplished till 1829, after the third attempt, by Dr. Parrot. Tradition asserts that the ark rested on the summit after the flood; and the Armenians believe that the remains exist to this day. On July 2nd, 1840, a violent earthquake shook the mountain, and did immense mischief to the surrounding districts, destroying entirely the

ARAU, a town of Switzerland, capital of the department of Lower Argo, canton of Berne, with manufactures of cotton, printed linen, and cutlery. A treaty between the Protestant and Catholic cantons was concluded here in 1712. It is seated on the river Aar, 27 miles W. of Zurich.

ARAUCAZIA, a district extending from the 42nd to the 37th deg. of S. lat., on the shore of the Pacific Ocean; bounded on the E. by the Andes, and is considered as belonging to Chili, but it is inhabited almost exclusively by natives, who have not only successfully resisted every attempt of the Spaniards to become masters of the country, but frequently made incursions into their territory. They are a hardy race, brave and warlike, but subsist chiefly by the rearing of flocks and herds; they are acquainted, however, with few of the arts of civilization. The district contains both gold and silver, is watered by several streams, is very fertile, and the climate is delightful. The Spaniards constructed a fort about 40 miles S. of Concepcion, (named after the district,) as a defence against the incursions of the Araucans.

ARAXES, or ARAS, a river of Asia, which rises in Georgia, flows S. E. across Armenia, and joins the Kur, near its entrance into the Caspian Sea. It is a very rapid river, and is supposed to be the Gihon mentioned by Moses.

ARNE, an island 30 miles in circumference, on the coast of Dalmatia, from which it is 5 miles distant. The soil is rich, but the inhabitants are indolent. It has a town of the same name. Pop. 4100. Long. 14. 55. E. lat. 45. 5. N.

ARBERG, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Berne, on an island formed by two branches of the Aar. It is 10 miles W. by N. of Berne.

ARBEL, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Kurdistan, ancient Arbela, near which Alexander defeated Darius. Here are the remains of an ancient castle; and in the vicinity are sulphur pits. It is now an inconsiderable mud-built town, with a population of about 3000. It is situated on an extensive plain, 36 miles N. of Altankupri, and 50 E. of Mosul.

ARMOGA, a town of Sweden, Westmanland, situated on the Ulvison, by which river, and a canal, it has a communication with the lakes Hielmar and Maeler. It has a good transit trade for iron and copper. Pop. 1500. It is 25 miles E. N. E. of Orebro.

ARMOIS, a town of France, in the department of Jura, famous for its white wines. It is a handsome, well-built town, and has a royal college; fabries of earthenware, oil, paper, leather, &c.; and has some flattening-mills. Pichegru was a native of this town. It is 22 miles S. W. of Besançon.

ARNOX, a town of Switzerland, situate on a point of land jutting into the lake of Constance, 12 miles S. E. of Constance.

ARUROATHI. See ARUENROTHOK.

ARUNIG, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Berne, with a citadel on a rock, seated on the Aar, opposite Olten, 12 miles E. of Soleure.

ARCADIA, an inland nomarchy of the Morea, Greece; it is identical with the ancient Arcadia, about 40 miles in length, and the same in breadth; it is very hilly, with occasionally extensive plains. Its rivers are the Boutia, (ancient Alpheus) the largest river of the Morea; its lakes are insignificant; the famous Stymphalus is amongst them. The people are strong and laborious, but are chiefly engaged in tending cattle and sheep; agriculture is but little followed, and the women perform all that is done of it. The population is scanty, and wander about with their flocks according to the want or plenty of pasture. Good wine is produced at Henea, Tripolizza, Londari, and Karitena are the chief towns; the remains of Megalopohs, Pallantium, &c., still exist. Pop. see Appendix.

ARCHANGEL, a large province of Russia, bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean. It is divided into eight circles, viz.: Archangel, Chencourisk, Cholmegar, Kemi, Kola, Meson, Omega, and Senega. It is a very dreary district, especially the eastern part; it supplies some fir timber and deals, and contains many wild animals, which are slaughtered for their fat; and tallow and bristles form great articles of export. The inhabitants also make immense quantities of matting. Pop. 253,000.

ARCHANGEL, or ST. MICHAEL, the chief town of the above province, is situate on the E. bank of the Dwina river, a short distance above its entrance into a bay of the White Sea, in N. lat. 64. 34. E. long. 38. 59. It was for many years the principal seaport of Russia, and was first resorted to by the English in 1553; and, although greatly declined in importance since the building of St. Petersburg, it still exports considerable quantities of corn, tallow, deals, and some bristles; but as it is only attained by the dreary coast of Norway, and the North Cape, in lat. 71. 10. it is accessible only a few months in the year, say July, August, and September, during which short period it is resorted to by 60 or 70 sail of vessels annually, principally English. It was nearly destroyed by fire in 1793, but has since been rebuilt with neatness, principally of wood, the severity of the winter being counteracted by stoves. Pop. about 24,339, who have about a dozen churches, one Lutheran, one Calvinist, and the others Greek. Archangel is about 400 miles N. E. of St. Petersburg.

ARCHIPELAGO, is a term applied to a cluster or group of islands; hence the Grecian, Eastern, Northern, &c. &c. but the most celebrated group is the Grecian at the head of the Mediterranean Sea, having Romunia on the N., Natolia on the E., the island of Candia on the S., Macedonia, Livadia, and the Morea on the W. It is partly in Europe, and partly in Asia, containing the islands of Rhodes, Negropont, Lemnos, Tenedos, Seyros, Mytilene, Scio, Samos, Patmos, Paros, Antiparos, Cerigo, Santorini, Andros, Tinos, Naxos, Milo, Delos, Argenticera, and many others.

ANCHIPELAGO, NORTHERN, a part of the Pacific Ocean, having the peninsula of Kamtschatka on the W., and the coast of America on the E. It includes a number of islands, among which are four principal groups; the Sastignan, the Klion, these two groups together are styled the Aleutian Islands, the Andreofski Ostrova, and the Lissa Ostrova, or the Fox Islands. They all belong to Russia, and are valuable chiefly for the skins of animals found there, particularly the sea otter. See FOX ISLANDS.

ANCIENS-AUBE, a town of France, in the department of Aube, seated on the river Aube, 15 miles N. of Troyes. Pop. 2752.

ANCOIS, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 28 miles north-east of Cadiz. Pop. 10,000. There are several other towns of the same name in Spain and Portugal.

ANCOU, a city of Hindostan, capital of the Carnatic, which became subject to the English East India Company in 1801. It is seated on the south bank of the Paliar, 66 miles west by south of Madras. Long. 79. 24. E. lat. 12. 51. N.

ARCTIC REGIONS, the regions around the North Pole, formerly supposed to be a vast frozen ocean, but by recent explorers discovered to consist of numerous islands, some of great extent, with intervening seas. The disappearance of Sr. John Franklin's expedition, which left England in 1843, aroused a national endeavour to rescue it, which resulted in the discovery of the N. W. passage, an exploration of nearly the whole of these regions, and at last the finding a few blanched skeletons and other relics on and near King William's Land, which testified the fate of the noble Franklin and his comrades. The principal lands discovered were the vast group of the Parry Islands, the most northern land, Baring Island, Prince of Wales Land, Boothia Felix, Prince Albert Land, Victoria and Wollaston Lands, King William's Land, &c. The seas, though occasionally navigable in the summer, are frequently made impervious by ice. A few migratory Esquimaux are found on some of the islands.

ARCTIC HIGHLANDS, a country on the north-east of Baffin's Bay, discovered by Captain John Ross, in 1818. Inhabited by Esquimaux, who supposed themselves the only inhabitants of the world.

ARDUGH, the name of a barony in the county of Longford, Ireland, containing the parishes and the towns of Longford and Edgworthstown; and, united with Kilmore, gives name to a bishopric; but there is neither cathedral nor episcopal residence in Arslagh.

There are many other parishes in different parts of Ireland, beginning with Ard.

ARDEBIL, a town of Persia, in Azerbijan, the residence and burial-place of many kings, particularly of Sheik Saifu, the founder of the Sufite dynasty and sect. Pilgrims resort to this place from all parts of Persia; and caravans are frequently passing to and from Constantinople and Smyrna. It is 35 miles E. S. E. of Tauris. Long. 48. 23. east, lat. 38. 20. north.

ARDEUR, a depart. of France, lying lengthwise along the W. side of the Rhone, having S. the Gard, W. the Lozere and Haute Loire, and N. the Loire. The greatest part of its surface is hilly and mountainous; several of the smaller hills are of volcanic origin. Besides the Rhone, it is watered by the Ardèche, from which it takes its name, and the Loire which rises in this depart. about 8 m. W. of Privas, its chief town. There are mines of coal, iron, lead, antimony, &c. It produces some excellent wines; also butter, cheese, fat hogs, wool, &c. It furnishes also a vast amount of silk yearly; the paper made at Annonay, is reckoned amongst the best in Europe. Leather-tanning, for gloves, has become a considerable business. Pop. 353,752.

ARDRIU, a town of Ireland, in the county of Louth. Here is a large mound, apparently artificial: some suppose it to have been a burial-place of the Irish kings; others that it was a place where the people assembled to deliberate on public affairs. It has 14 large malting-houses, 1 tannery, 2 corn-mills, and a considerable manufacture of baskets. There is a good grain market on Tuesday. Pop. 3679. It is 11 miles N. W. of Drogheda.

ARDRES, a depart. in the N. of France, having N. Belgium, E. dep. Menze, S. dep. Marne, and W. dep. Aisne. The N. division is occupied by the old forest of Ardennes, from which it takes its name. The country in the N. is woody and mountainous; in the S. W. plain, and barren; but the valley of the Aisne, and some others, are very fruitful, especially in corn. It has mines of iron, lead, calamine; and quarries of slate and marble; coal also is found, but not worked. There are extensive iron, copper, and brass-works; and great quantities of nails are made; also factories of superior earthenware, glass, &c. Timber and wool also are amongst its staples. Pop. 306,861.

ARDRIFF, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, and a bishop's see united with Aghaloe to Limerick. It was formerly the capital of the county, but is now a poor place, with extensive ruins. It is seated on a river, which runs into Tralee Bay, four miles N. N. W. of Tralee. Pop. 655.

ARDGLASS, a seaport town of Ireland, county Down; the nearest part of Ireland to the Isle of Man, and may be considered the best watering-place in the north of Ireland. It is an ancient but decayed town, once a parliamentary borough, and a place of great strength; which several castellated buildings, whose history is unknown, seem to testify.

ARDARA, a town of Ireland, county Sligo, on the river Moy. There are valuable salmon fisheries in the neighbourhood.

ARDMORE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Waterford, on a cape and bay of its name, 10 miles S. S. W. of Dungarvon.

ARDORA, a small kingdom of Guinea, on the Slave coast, at the bottom of the Gulf of St. Thomas. The country is fertile in maize, palm wine, plants, and fruits, which last all the year; and produces a great deal of salt. It has a town of the same name. Long. 3. 5. E. lat. 6. 0. N.

ARDRES, a town of France, in the department of Pas de Calais. On an open plain between the town and Guisnes, was the celebrated interview between Francis I. of France, and Henry VIII. of England, in 1520. It is 10 miles S. S. E. of Calais. Pop. 2150.

ARDROSSAN, a parish and seaport town of Scotland, co. Ayr, 24 m. W. S. W. of Glasgow. The town was founded on an excellent design by the Late Lord Eglintoun, who expended vast sums in the formation of a good harbour, &c., with the view of making it a point of communication with Ireland; but this has not succeeded. It is now a pleasant bathing-place, and is on a branch of the Glasgow and South Western Railway. The shipping of coal here has become very considerable. Pop. of the town about 1200.

ARDEVER, a seaport town of France, department of Lower Charente. Pop. 3000. Chief trade in fresh and cured fish.

ARCCA, an island in the Gulf of Persia, three miles S. W. of Ormus. The Dutch attempted to establish a factory, and built a fort here, but were expelled by the Persians.

ARCEBO, a seaport on the N. coast of the island of Porto Rico, West Indies, 32 miles W. of S. Juan. It is an improving place (1843), and some coal has been found near it.

ARCEFER, a seaport town, capital of Lancerota, one of the Canary Islands, on its E. coast, lat. 28. 56. N. long. 13. 36. W. Pop. 2500. It has a small secure harbour, with two entrances, each defended by bomb-proof forts. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in fishing on the opposite coast of Africa.

ARCEBERG, a duchy of Germany, near Cologne.

ARCSBORG, the capital of a county of the same name, in the duchy of Westphalia. It is seated on a hill, by the river Roer, 22 miles S. S. E. of Ham, and 63 N. E. of Cologne. Long. 8. 10. E. lat. 51. 23. N.

ARCSNURG, a seaport of Russia, in the government of Riga, capital of the isle of Osel, and a bishop's see. Pop. 1800. Long. 22. 17. E. lat. 58. 15. N.

ARENSHARDE, a district in Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, containing the greatest part of the famous rampart built by king Gotric, in the beginning of the 9th century, as a defence against the irruptions of the Saxons. It extends across the country, about 9 miles in length.

AREQUIPA, an episcopal town of Peru, founded by Pizarro, in 1539. Near it is a volcano. It has been four times laid in ruins by earthquakes. It stands in a fertile country, a few miles S. of a small lake, which is the source of the Apurimac branch of the Amazon River, 240 miles S. of Cusco, 30 miles E. of the Pacific Ocean. Long. 73. 11. W. lat. 16. 40. S.

AREZZO, a town of Tuscany, in the Florentino. Guy Aretin, a Benedictine monk, inventor of the musical notes, ut, re, &c., was born here; also the celebrated Francis Petrarch, and Meccenas. It stands on a hill, at the conflux of the Chiaro and Arno, 15 miles W. of Citta di Castello. Pop. 10,000.

ARGANT. See AARGAT.

ARGENTES, a town of France, in the department of Calvados, on the river Menace, 10 miles E. of Caen.

ARGENTAN, a town of France, in the department of Orne, which has a considerable trade in lace. It is seated on an eminence, in the middle of a fertile plain, on the banks of the Orne, 12 miles N. W. of Secz, and 110 W. of Paris. Pop. 5772.

ARGENTEUIL, a town of France, on the river Seine, 5 miles N. W. of Paris. It has a fine vineyard, and in the environs are quarries of the plaster of Paris.

ARGESTIERA, a barren island of the Archipelago, so called from the silver mines in it. There is but one village, and it has no water but what is kept in cisterns. Long. 23. 10. E. lat. 36. 50. N.

ARGESTIERE, a town of France, department Ardeche. Pop. 3000. Some exhausted lead mines are here, but silk is now the principal manufacture.

ARGENTON, a town of France, in the department of Indre, divided into two parts by the river Creuse. Pop. 4319. It is 37 miles S. W. of Bourges.

ARGOS, a seaport of European Turkey, in the Morea, 25 miles S. of Corinth. It was the capital of ancient Argolis. Long. 23. 5. E. lat. 37. 30. N.

ARGOSTOLI, a town of the island of Cephalonia, with a fortress, and the best harbour in the island. Pop. 5000. It is 8 miles W. S. W. of Cephalonia.

ARGOVIA. See AARGAT.

ARGUEL, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Seine, 18 miles N. E. of Rouen.

ARGUN, an island and fort on the coast of Zahara, 30 miles S. E. of Cape Blanco. It was taken by the Dutch from the Portuguese, in 1637; afterwards the French took it from the Dutch. Long. 17. 5. W. lat. 20. 30. N.

ARGUN, a river of Asia. See SAGHALIEN.

ARGUNSKOI, a town of Siberia, on the frontiers of Chinese Tartary. There are mines of silver and lead near it, and a pearl fishery in the river Arigna, on the W. bank of which the town is situate. It is 70 miles S. E. of Nerchinsk. Long. 118 E. lat. 52, 30, N.

ARGYLESIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by Inverness-shire, E. by the counties of Perth and Dumbarton, and S. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, by which it is broken into islands and peninsulas. It is 110 miles long from the Mull of Cantyre to its N. E. extremity; its breadth is very unequal—about 40 miles where greatest. To the N. W. is a peninsula, nearly detached from the rest of the county; it contains the districts of Ardnamurchan, Morven, Sunart, and Ardgowar. The peninsulas of Cantyre and Cowal are likewise very large. The chief islands attached to this county are Mull, Islay, Jura, Trey, and Col. The soil of Argyleshire, in the high grounds, though little fitted for cultivation, affords excellent pasture. Some parts are covered with heath, and others exhibit rugged and bare rocks. The sides of the hills and lakes are interspersed with woods; and there are rich mines of copper, iron, and lead, which have become peculiarly valuable since the opening of the Crinan canal. Pop. 100,973. The chief town is Inverary.

ARIANO, a town of Naples. Pop. 8000.

ARICA, a seaport at the S. extremity of Peru. It is but badly fortified, and has been much injured by earthquakes. Here the treasure brought from Potosi is shipped; and there are many farms employed in the cultivation of Guinea pepper, in which it has a great trade. It is 550 miles S. E. of Lima. Long. 70, 25, W. lat. 18, 27, S.

ARIESZO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 14 miles N. E. of Naples.

ARISNA, an important mineral district in the vale of the Arigna river, on the borders of the counties of Rosecommon, Leitrim, and Connaught. The iron-works are the most extensive in Ireland; the mines were at first worked with little success, but now they are under the management of a joint stock company, and are much more productive, yielding about 60 tons per week. Coal is also found.

ARINDAL, a town of Norway, in the government of Bergen, noted for the productive iron mines in its vicinity. It is seated near the sea, 10 miles N. N. E. of Christiansand.

ARISEN, or ARISCH, a town and fort of Egypt, on a gulf of the Mediterranean, to which it gives name. Arisch stands on the confines of Arabia and Palestine, 36 miles S. W. of Gaza, and 120 N. E. of Suez, in N. lat. 31, 8, E. long. 34, 3.

AUTSRE, chief town of the district of Sonora, Mexico, in lat. 31, N., long. 109, W.

ARIZONA, a recently constituted territory of the United States, obtained from Mexico, east of the Colorado and Virgin rivers, and west of the 108th meridian, bounded on the S. by the Mexican border, and on the N. by the parallel of 36, 30. It contains nearly 200,000 square miles, and 6000 to 8000 people, chiefly Mexicans. There is abundance of mineral wealth, but very little arable land.

ARKANSAS RIVER, in the United States, rises in the Rocky Mountains, about lat. 42, N. and near the boundary between the United States and Mexico, and for some distance forms a part of that boundary. It flows through the central part of Arkansas, and after a whole course of 2170 miles, enters the Mississippi in lat. 33, 40, N. Its general course is E. S. E. It is navigable for boats in some seasons, 1980 miles. The navigation is not obstructed by rocks, shoals, or rapids. The country watered by the Arkansas in its upper parts is sterile; but in the lower parts it is tolerably fertile, and on its alluvial borders it is rich. The whole surface drained by the river and its tributaries, is estimated at 178,000 square miles.

ARKANSAS, one of the western United States, having Missouri to the N., the Mississippi river on the E., separating it from Tennessee and Mississippi, and W. by the Indian territory. It is 240 miles long, and 228 wide, containing 54,500 square miles, or 34,880,000 acres. It is now divided into 40 counties. Little Rock, on the S. bank of the Arkansas, is the seat of government. The other principal towns of the state are Arkansas, and Old French Settlement; Columbia, and Helena on the Mississippi, Batesville, and Fulton. The territory was part of the Louisiana purchase; was made a separate territory in 1819, and admitted to the union in 1836. It was originally divided into seven counties, and in 1820 contained a population of only 14,273, of whom 1617 were slaves. The population in 1840 was 97,574, including 19,935 slaves. The Arkansas river, which has its source in about the 40th deg. of N. lat. near that of the Redd North, crosses the territory between the long. of 97 and 98, and, after being joined by the four forks of the Canadian, about the centre of the territory, falls into the Mississippi, in lat. 34, N.; the White and Big Black River, composed of about a dozen branches, rising in the state of Missouri, falls into the state of Mississippi about 20 miles above the Arkansas. Badgers, deer, rks, bears, wolves, panthers, &c., are very numerous in this territory, and S. of the Arkansas River is a race of fleet wild horses, which are hunted and caught in a way similar to those of Paraguay. South of the Arkansas River, and about 100 miles W. from its mouth, and near the source of the Washita, which falls into the Redd River, is a hot spring, the waters of which are peculiarly efficacious in curing rheumatisms, and paralytic affections; and has had so sacred by the Indians, that when credulous ones may have existed among them, they subsided when here, and the fact was consecrated to peace. The Parks of the numerous rivers are composed of a red alluvial soil, which notwithstanding they are destitute of become fields of activity and abundance.

ARKANSAS POST, a town of the preceding state, occupying a high bluff of sterile land, on the N. bank of the Arkansas river, and with flats in the rear, inundated periodically by the White river. It is 50 miles above the Mississippi, and was founded by the French in 1685. 117 miles S. E. of Little Rock, and 1087 from Washington.

ARKEKO, a town of Abyssinia, situated on the shore of the Red Sea; it is built of clay and grass, with a few houses of stone.

ARKLOW, a barony containing 13 parishes, and the towns of Arklow, and part of Wicklow, in the county of Wicklow, Ireland.

ARKLOW, a market, post, and seaport town, in the above barony, 39½ miles S. by E. of Dublin. It is divided by the river Oyocca into the upper and lower towns; the latter, nearest the sea, is an assemblage of wretched huts, and fitted with the offal of a slovenly fishery. It is the head-quarters of the Wicklow fishery, but the bar off the harbour is a great draw-back; the fishermen nevertheless pursue their avocation with great perseverance and activity. The upper town is more respectable, and presents a tolerable appearance. The ruins of Arklow-castle overlook the river; Oliver Cromwell, in 1649, took it, and destroyed 6 of its 7 towers. The rebels in June 1798, were defeated here, and their leader, father Murphy, a priest, was killed in the action. Pop. 3254.

ARLES, an ancient city of France, in the department of Mouths of the Rhone, lately an archiepiscopal see. It was the chief city of ancient Gaul during the reign of Constantine, and Bason made it the capital of the kingdom of Burgundy. The country around produces good wine, vermilion, manna, oil, and fruits. There are a great number of antiquities, of which the amphitheatre and obelisk are the most remarkable. It is seated on the Rhone, 20 miles S. E. of Nismes. Pop. 13,342. near the Avignon and Marseille railway.

ARMAGH, an interior county in the N. E. part of Ireland, province of Ulster, 25 miles long, and 16 broad; bounded on the E. by Down, W. by Tyrone and Monaghan, N. by Lough Neagh, and S. by Louth. It contains 20 parishes, and sends three members to parliament; two for the county, and one for the city of Armagh. The soil is reckoned the richest in Ireland; but a tract called the Fewes is hilly and barren, and there are also some considerable bogs. Some good marble is found in this county; and the linen manufacture flourishes in all its branches. It has no river of consequence but the Blackwater, which separates it from Tyrone. The chief lakes are Carlong and Lough Clay.

ARMVICH, a populous parish and city of Ireland, the capital of the county of its name, and the see of an archbishop, who is primate of all Ireland. The archiepiscopal palace is an elegant building, erected by archbishop Robinson, who founded the college, the observatory, built and endowed the library and renovated and improved the cathedral; benefiting the city also in many other ways. Besides these public and handsome edifices, the city contains a lunatic asylum, two hospitals, a union-house, and a fine hall, 500 yards in length, and from 60 to 160 yards wide. It has one of the best linen markets in Ulster, and many bleaching-grounds in its vicinity. It is seated on the river Kalin, 66 miles S. E. of Londonderry, and 82 N. by W. of Dablin, on the Dublin and Drogheda railway.

ARMAGNAC, a late province of France, in Guienne, 55 miles long and 40 broad. It is fertile in corn and wine, and has a trade in brandy and wool. This province, with Gascony, now forms the department of Gers.

ARMENIA, a country of Asiatic Turkey, bordering on the S. E. extremity of the Black Sea, and extending eastward into Persia; it lies between the 38th and 45th deg. of E. long., and under the 39th and 44th of N. lat. The Euphrates, which has its source at the S. E. extremity of the country, runs parallel with its S. boundary; it is watered by several other rivers falling into the Black Sea, and the Karsi, which rises in the centre of the country, runs eastward, falls into the Caspian. It is a mountainous country (Ararat rising to the height of 17,260 feet), and abounds in minerals, whilst the valleys yield abundance of corn and fruit. The inhabitants are much addicted to commerce, and have a high reputation for probity; they are the chief merchants for the eastern commerce of Turkey, as the Greeks are for the western. The Armenians form a distinct sect of Christians, under a patriarch and an archbishop. Erzerum, or Arz Roum, in N. lat. 40. and 40. 50. E. long. is the capital. Of the civil, judicial, or military institutions, or extent of population of Armenia, but very little is known to Europeans; the Persians claim authority over the eastern parts, and the Kurds interfere to the south.

ARMENTIERES, a town of France, in the department of Nord, seated on the Lis, 8 miles W. N. W. of Lisle. It has a college, and several manufactories, and a good market for corn.

AROSTOOK RIVER in the State of Maine, U. S. It rises in Piscataquis county, separated from the head-waters of the Penobscot which are not more than 20 miles distant. Its course is circuitous to N. E. and E. until it falls into the St. John's in New Brunswick. Some of the land on its banks is very fertile.

ARPISO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 8 miles N. of Aversa. It is chiefly memorable as having produced two of the most illustrious men that Italy ever saw, Gaius Marius, and M. P. Fulvius Crasso. In its environs an extensive paper-mill has been established. Pop. 9000.

ARQUA, a town of Italy, in the Padua, remarkable for the tomb of Petrarch. It is 12 miles S. of Padua.

ARQUATA, a town of the territory of Genoa, seated on the Scrivia, 25 miles N. of Genoa.

ARQUES, a small town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a ruined castle. Here Henry IV. gained a complete victory over the Duke of Mayenne, general of the league, in 1589. It stands on a river of its name, 4 miles S. E. of Dieppe.

ARRAGON, or ARAGON, a province of the kingdom of Spain. Arragon was formerly an independent kingdom, and comprehended Arragon Proper, Catalonia, Valencia, and the Balearic Isles of Majorca, Minorca, Ivia, Cabrera, and Formentera. The kingdom of Arragon Proper is an interior district, extending S. from New Castle, in the lat. of 40, N. in a N. E. direction to the Pyrenees, bounded on the N. W. by Old Castle and Navarre; and on the E. by the S. end of Valencia, and Catalonia; its superficies is about 1230 square French leagues, and its population about 660,000. The river Ebro enters the territory from the N. W., and runs through the middle of it in a S. E. direction, Zaragoza, or Saragossa, seated on the banks of the Ebro, is the chief and only place of importance in the whole territory, nor is it remarkable for any natural productions. From its scanty population, as in other parts of the Peninsula, large parts of fertile land are left in a state of nature, depopulated and uncultivated. It is a disagreeable province, now divided into the new provinces of Zaragoza, Huesca, and Teruel. See Appendix.

ARBAH, a town of Hindostan, in Bahar, 33 miles W. by S. of Patna.

ARNAIS, an island of Scotland, in the Frith of Clyde, to the S. of the Isle of Bute. It is of an oval form, 20 miles long and 12 broad, and constitutes the greatest part of the county of Bute. Ridges of rugged mountains extend across the island, and Goatfell is near 3000 feet in height. The southern parts present low and cultivated grounds. Robert Bruce took refuge in this island, during the time of his greatest distress. Among the rocks are found iron-ore, spar, and a great variety of beautiful pebbles. Since 1845, the Duke of Hamilton has introduced a good system of farming, &c., which has vastly improved both the condition and character of the people. Pop. 600. It is divided into two parishes, K. Brode and Kilmory. The principal place is Lambash.

ARUN, a seaport town in Co. Galway, Connacht. It consists of a group of islands, which form a chain about 12 miles long and about two miles broad, and lie across the mouth of Galway Bay. These are inhabited by fishermen, who also pay some attention to agriculture, but they are very rude, half-civilized race, both in appearance and habits.

ARUNMORRE, the chief of the above islands; 3 miles in length and 2½ wide. Pop. about 1000. There is a light-house on the island showing a fixed bright light.

ARUNES, a fortified city of France capital of the department of Pas de Calais, and 22 episcopal see, and one of the most ancient towns of France; it was the seat of the Atrebatés in the time of Cæsar. It is divided into two towns; one named the city, which is the most ancient; and the other the town, which is modern. The great square is full of fine buildings, surrounded with piazzas. It was the birth-place of Robespierre, and is seated on the Scarpe, 22 miles W. N. W. of Cambrai, on the Brussels and Amiens railway. Pop. 23,485.

ARSOUF, a town of the coast of Syria, in Palestine, with a fortress, 10 m. N. of Joffa.

ARTA, a seaport of European Turkey, in Albania, and a Greek archbishop's see. It has a considerable trade in tobacco and skins, and is seated on the Arta, 70 miles N. N. W. of Lepunto. It occupies the site of the ancient Ambracia. It has manufactures of woollens, leather, &c. There is a curious Venetian bridge over the river, of one large arch, and several very small ones. It suffered very much during the Greek insurrection but it is now recovering. Pop. 7000. Long. 21, 00 E. lat. 39, 28. N.

ARTACHINE, on the W. coast of Greece; the ancient Sinus Ambracius; on the S. side of it is a long narrow tongue of land, the ancient promontory of Actium, off which was fought Dec. 29, the celebrated battle which decided the fate of Augustus and Mark Antony, and of the whole Roman world. The bay itself is a noble sheet of water, in length about 25 miles, by 10 miles, in its greatest breadth; the entrance is only about 700 yards wide.

ARTAKI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, on the S. coast of the Sea of Marmora, 76 miles S. W. of Constantinople. Long. 27. 40. E. lat. 39. 30. N.

ARTAQI, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, 48 miles N. W. of Gallipoli.

ARTERS, a town of Upper Saxony, in the county of Mansfield, circle of Thuringia, on the river Unstrutt, 29 miles N. N. E. of Erfurt. It has a castle, a salt-spring, and a distillery. Pop. 2400.

ARTOIS, a late province of France, bounded on the N. and E. by Flanders, and S. and W. by Hainault, Cambresis, and Picardy. It is now included in the department of Pas de Calais.

ARTUA, an island 15 miles in circumference, in the West Indies; one of the Leeward Islands, and belonging to Holland. Long. 70. 5. W. lat. 12. 10. N.

ARUNDEL, a borough in Sussex, returning one member. Market on Wed. and Sat. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the river Arun, about 5 miles from the sea, and has a venerable Gothic church, formerly collegiate. Its castle, the ancient seat of the dukes of Norfolk, stands on the hill, and is of great extent; a vast sum was expended upon it by Charles, the 12th duke. The possession of this castle confers an earldom on the proprietor. The river is navigable for barges, and great quantities of timber are sent hence. It is 11 m. E. of Chichester, and 56 S. S. W. of London, on the South Coast railway.

ARVA, a county at the northern extremity of Lower Hungary, intersected by the Carpathian mountains; it contains a pop. of about 75,000, subsisting chiefly by agriculture, more particularly flax for domestic manufacture, and some for trade. There is a town which gives name to the county, situate on a stream which falls into the Wag river.

ARVE, a rapid river of Savoy, which rises in Faucigny, and, watering Salenche, Cluse, and Bonneville, joins the Rhone below Geneva.

ARWANGEN, a town and castle of Switzerland, in the canton of Berne, on the river Aar, 12 miles E. of Soleure.

ARZEW, a seaport town of Algier, about 15 mls W. of Oran. It is the site of the ancient Arsenaria; there are many relics of antiquity in the neighbourhood.

ARZIGASANO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Lombardy, 11 miles W. S. W. of Vicenza. It has manufactures of silk, cloth, &c.; its territory grows good wine, and has two coal mines. Pop. 3305.

ARZILLA, a seaport in the kingdom of Fez, about 30 miles S. of Cape Spartel, and 50 S. S. W. of Tangier. It was formerly a Roman colony, and a place of considerable importance, but at present does not contain more than 1000 inhabitants.

ARZINGAN, a town of Armenia, on the W. bank of a branch of the Euphrates, 45 miles S. W. of Arz Roum.

ASAH, or ASSAH, a town of Abyssinia, in Damali, on a bay in the Straits of Babel-mandel, 36 miles S. E. of Baidur.

ASANGARO, a town and district of Peru, W. of the Andes, N. of the lake Chucuito. It is very thinly peopled.

ASAPH, Sr., a city of Wales, and a bishop's see, in Flintshire, on the river Elway, where it unites with the Clywd. It is a poor place, of note only for its cathedral, but has a market on Saturday. It is 25 miles W. of Chester, and 208 N. W. of London, on the line of road to Holyhead.

ASHES, an interior country of North Africa, of which Agadas is the capital; it is bounded on the E. by Bornou, and N. and W. by the deserts of Zaura and Tuarek.

ASCALON, or ASKELON, an ancient town on the coast of Palestine, distinguished in Jewish history as one of the chief cities of the Philistines. It is now without a single inhabitant within its walls, which are still standing; there is a small village near it of about 300 people. How truly are the prophecies of Zechariah and Ezekiel fulfilled! It is about 45 miles S. W. of Jerusalem, and 15 N. of Gaza.

ASCENSION, an island in the South Atlantic Ocean, about 8 miles in length, by 6 in breadth; lat. 7. 26. S. long. 14. 24. W. It is of volcanic formation, and rises to a great height. It has a bleak and barren appearance; and was uninhabited until it was garrisoned by a small British force, at the time of Napoleon Bonaparte's imprisonment at St. Helena; parts of it have since been brought into cultivation. It is now used to supply vessels calling there, with water and stores, a depôt being kept for that purpose. Vast numbers of turtle are taken on its shores.

ASCH, or AFSCH, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutmeritz, situate on the banks of a small river which falls into the Elbe, about 20 miles above the town of Leutmeritz.

ASCHACH, a considerable town of Upper Austria, in the quarter of Hausrack, on the S. bank of the Danube.

ASCHAFENBURG, a town of Germany, lately in the territory of Mentz, but now the capital of a principality of the same name, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, insulated in that of Franconia. Here is a place in which George II. of England took up his quarters the night before the battle of Dettingen, in 1748. It was taken by the French in 1796 and 1800. It is situate near the conflux of the Asehall with the Maine, on the E. side of the latter river, 20 miles E. S. E. of Frankfort, and 40 W. N. W. of Wurtzburgh. Long. 9. 5. E. lat. 50. 0. N.

ASCHERHAGEN, a considerable town on the W. bank of the Saal, in the principality of Anhalt, circle of Upper Saxony. Pop. 2730.

ASCIOT, an ancient town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, with a citadel, seated on the River Tronto, 80 miles N. E. of Rome. It is a well built, handsome town, with several public edifices and palaces of the governors, nobility, &c. Pop. 12,000. It was the Asculum Picenum of the Romans. Long. 14. 20. E. lat. 42. 44. N.

ASCOLI DI SERRASO, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, seated on a mountain, 70 miles east of Naples. Long. 15. 50. E. lat. 41. 8. N.

ASORCA, a town in the island of Majorca, with a church containing a celebrated image of the Virgin, much resorted to by pilgrims.

ASHANTEE, an interior territory of North Africa, extending from the meridional line to the 5th or 6th degree of W. long; bounded by the Gold Coast. The Ashantees have for a long period been the most powerful of all the negro tribes of Western Africa, not only in their contests with their neighbours, but they have frequently defied the scientific and destructive means of European warfare. During the period of the uncontrolled sway of the slave trade, previous to the commencement of the present century, the Ashantees, though little known upon the coast, were the main instruments in the interior, by which that debasing traffic was carried on, long constantly at war with their neighbours, for the obtaining of prisoners to send to the coast as slaves; and it was the Ashantees who gave rise to the famous, or rather infamous, Assiente contract of the Spaniards. Since the restriction of the slave trade to the S. of the equator, the Ashantees, though still full of thirst for war, have directed more of their attention to commerce. It was in 1806 that they first appeared formidable on the coast against the Annamboes; and in 1823 they completely defeated the British force of the coast, about 1000 men, which took the field against them. In 1826 their power on the coast was destroyed, and since then it has not revived.

ASHBORNE, a town of Derbyshire. Market on Saturday. It is famous for cheese, and seated between the rivers Dove and Compton, 149 miles N. N. W. of London, on a branch of the North Staffordshire railway.

ASHBURTON, a borough in Devonshire, with a market on Tuesday for wool and yarn, and on Saturday for provisions. It is one of the four stannary towns, and has a considerable manufacture of serges. It is seated among hills (remarkable for tin and copper) near the river Dart, 14 miles S. W. of Exeter, and 102 W. by S. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH, a town in Leicestershire. Market on Saturday. It had a castle with a very high tower, some ruins of which are standing. Here are manufactures of stockings, hats, and ribbons, and a considerable trade in madd. Ashby is 13 miles S. of Derby, and 115 N. N. W. of London. A vein of coal, of a very superior quality, was opened in the vicinity about the year 1816;

ASHKEFEF, or ESHEKEEF, a town of Persia, situate on a small rivulet which falls into the Caspian Sea at its south end.

ASHFORD, a town in Kent, governed by a mayor. Market on Tuesday. The church is large and was formerly collegiate. It is seated on the Ash, near its confluence with the Stour, and on the South Eastern Railway, 14 miles S. W. of Canterbury, and 55 S. E. of London.

ASHMUNEIS, a town of Egypt, built on the ruins of a city, supposed to be the ancient Hermapolis, on the left bank of the Nile, 140 miles S. W. of Cairo. Long. 31. 7. E. lat. 28. 10. N.

ASHNAGUR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Cabul, seated on the Kamch, 80 miles N. of Attock, and 110 S. E. of Cabul.

ASHOVER, a parish of Derbyshire, England, 6 miles S. of Chesterfield, and 157 from London.

ASHTABULA, a county at the N. E. extremity of the state of Ohio, bordering on Lake Erie. Pop. 23,724. Jefferson, 234 miles N. E. of Columbus, is the chief town.

ASHTON IN MARLBOROUGH, a township of Lancashire, England, 2 miles N. of Newton, and 196 from London.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE, a borough and populous parish of Lancashire; the town is seated on a high bank which rises from the river Tame, 6 miles E. of Manchester. The parish is divided into four districts, forming together one of the most important seats of the cotton manufacture, containing upwards of sixty large establishments for spinning and machine-weaving, four iron and brass foundries, as many machine manufactories, and about thirty establishments for the manufacture of hats. It has also extensive collieries in its vicinity, and it is intersected by the Manchester, and the Huddersfield and Peak Forest canals; and returns one member to parliament.

ASIA, one of the three grand divisions of the eastern hemisphere; its boundaries are so exceedingly irregular as to render it difficult to convey an accurate idea of its position, limits, and extent, except by a map; it lies, however, wholly north of the equator. Point Romæa, the most southerly point of the Malaya promontory, being in lat. 1. 23. 30. N., bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean, or, as a medial line, by the 70th deg. of N. lat.; from west to east it extends in its extreme limits from the Dardanelles in 26. to Behring's Straits in 190. E.; but, exclusive of the promontories of Natalia, Hindostan, Malaya, Kamstelatka, and the islands under the equator, Asia may be considered as lying between the 15th and 70th deg. of N. lat. and the 40th and 130th of E. long. Asia is separated from Europe on the W. by the Ural or Ural mountains, extending from the line of the Arctic circle in the long. of 63. E., bearing west to the long. of 54. in the lat. of 63., from which point they again bear to the east to the long. of 59. in the lat. of 55., from which point, while the Ural mountains run in a parallel line with the 59th of long. the Asiatic boundary becomes partly conventional, bearing west to the sea of Azof; from which, the Black Sea, the Sea of Marmora, the Dardanelles, and Levant, form the western boundary to the Atlantis of Suez, which separates it from Africa; the Arabian Gulf, or Red Sea, then forms the remainder of its western boundary, and the Arabian Sea, Indian Ocean, and China Sea, bound it on the south, and the North Pacific Ocean, on the E. and the Arctic Ocean, as previously stated, forms its northern boundary; this vast extent of territory is divided into eleven great parts; viz., Siberia, Chinese Tartary, China, Thibet, Western or Independent Tartary, the Birman empire, Hindostan, Persia, Arabia, Asiatic Turkey, and Japan, the latter being exclusively insular. Several noble rivers flow in various directions; the Obi, the Yenesei, and Lena, fall into the Arctic Ocean; the Amoor or Saghalien, into the Sea of Ochotsk, in the North Pacific; the Yellow and Great Rivers intersect China from west to east, falling into the Bay of Naukin, and the Ganges, Indus, and Euphrates flowing from north to south; but it is worthy of remark, that neither in Asia or Europe, or in either of the two grand divisions of the western hemisphere, are there any rivers of importance that flow from east to west, whilst in Africa there are none that flow from west to east.

The area of ASIA is about 17,505,145 square in les. Population variously stated at 330 millions, 450 millions, and 605 millions.

The most recent and a true representation will be found in the Appendix.

Although the rivers of Asia do not vie in magnificence with those of the western hemisphere, Asia far exceeds it in the magnificence of its mountains. The Himalaya range, which separate Hindostan from Tartary in the lat. 29. N., rises to the prodigious height of 27,677 ft. above the level of the sea; the Ural, or Orul ridge extends in a uniform and unbroken chain, from the line of the Arctic circle to the sea of Aral, and, although not rising in altitude more than about 4500 ft., they are emphatically denominated by the Russians, the back, and by the Tartars, the girdle of the world; the Altaian chain intersects the entire territory in a N. E. direction, from the Arabian Sea to the East Cape in Behring's Straits, and in the lat. of 49. N. rises to the height of 12,800 ft., and Mounts Caucasus, Taurus, Ararat, &c. &c., spread over the western part of Asia, rising to the height of 8 to 10,000 ft. The Caspian, Barkal, and Sea of Aral, are the only inland waters that merit notice in this place; and, when compared with those of the north division of the western hemisphere, they are very insignificant. The islands of the eastern ocean are so numerous, and so diffusely scattered, as to render it difficult to decide which properly belong to Asia, and which do not; those, however, which admit of no dispute, may be enumerated as follow, beginning at the north; viz. Saghalien, Jesso, the Japanese, Formosa, Hainan, the Philippines, Borneo, the Ceebes, Java, Sumatra, Ceylon, the Maldives, and Laccadives; the Lafrone, New Carolinas, Pellew, New Guinea, Solomon's, New Hebrides, New Caledonia, Sandwich, Society, Friendly, New Zealand, and Van Diemen's Land, will most probably hereafter become more particularly identified with Australasia; they will, however, all be treated of under their respective heads.

Asia was the parent of nations, and the scene of most of those remarkable transactions which are recorded in sacred history. After the deluge, Noah is said to have settled near the borders of the Euphrates, and to have peopled the whole continent; the posterity of Shem occupying the central regions, Japhet the northern, and Ham the southern. Javan and his descendants, Ashkenaz, Dodanim, Tarshish, Elishah, Tegermah, and Ephath, are supposed to have been the ancient inhabitants of Asia Minor. The Canaanites and Amalekites were the people of Syria and Arabia Petraea. Modern writers have referred the present natives of Asia to those different stocks of Hebrews, Indians, and Tartars, the propriety of which will appear from their make, features, and languages. There are, however, some large tribes which cannot be referred to any of these classes. Mr. Pinkerton observes that the population of Asia is allowed by all authors to be wholly primitive, with the exception of the Tshuk-tshis, (whom the Russian historians supposed to have passed from the opposite coast of America to the colonies that have migrated from Russia to the northern parts, as far as the sea of Kamshatka, the well-known European settlements, and a few others. Asia certainly contains an amazing original population, and presents an ample field for the study of man in all the stages of his progress from barbarism to civilization. The western parts of Asia appear to have been occupied by numerous petty sovereigns, whose names are now extinct. At a somewhat later period, the Babylonian empire extended over the greater part of Western Asia; the Persians next reigned paramount on that side, 328 years before the Christian era; Alexander of Macedon extended his arms as far as the Ganges, but his exploits in Asia may be considered as incursions rather than conquests.

The ascendancy of the Persians in its turn yielded to the still greater ascendant influence and power of the Tartars from the north, who also in the 12th century subdued China in the East; and indeed such was the extent of their power, that at one period nearly the whole of Asia, as well as a great part of Europe, fell under their dominion.

The Mogul, or Mongol empire, succeeded the Tartar, whilst the greater part of Eastern Tartary became united to China, which for several centuries has remained comparatively undisturbed; but at the present time, a company of English traders, under the denomination of "The United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies," may be regarded as the ascendant power, and as reigning paramount over all Asia. The Russians, however, occupy the whole of the north of Asia, from the Arctic Sea to the 50th degree of north latitude.

The productions of Asia, animal, mineral, vegetable, as well as birds, insects, reptiles, and fishes, are as majestic, valuable, and useful, as they are various and infinite. The elephant in Asia, like the camel in Africa, is made the instrument of burthen, and in war and pageantry ranks highest in importance; the lion and tiger of Asia are the noblest of their species, and as distinguished for the beauty of their symmetry as for their agility, strength, and ferocity. The inferior classes of the animal creation will be more particularly adverted to under the heads of the several divisions of Asia. Although apparently not so rich in precious minerals as the southern division of the western hemisphere, Asia indicates abundance of gold, and some silver, and its gems are deservedly held in the highest estimation. Of the inferior metals, if they abound, a subduing species of policy precludes their preparation for utility, and Asia draws considerable supplies of iron, copper, tin, and lead, from Europe.

Rice for food, and cotton for clothing, are the main productions of the soil over all the south parts of Asia and China, and in the latter country, a decoction of the well known tea-shrub constitutes the principal drink of that populous empire, whilst the vegetable tallow-tree supplies many of their domestic wants.

Mahomedism is established in the central and western parts, while Paganism, and the most degrading and cruel superstitions, prevail in all the other regions of Asia. Christianity is scarcely known throughout this part of the globe, except in Siberia and in Asia Minor, where the profession of it has been perpetual amidst cruelty and oppression.

from barbarism to civilization. The western parts of Asia appear to have been occupied by numerous petty sovereignties, whose names are now extinct. At a somewhat later period, Christianity is scarcely known throughout this part of the globe, except in Siberia and in Asia Minor, where the profession of it has been perpetuated amidst cruelty and oppression.

nor have any adequate exertions been made by Europeans for its introduction, the small tract of India brought under cultivation by our missionaries, being only as a single oasis in a vast and dreary desert.

The governments of Asia appear in all ages to have been arbitrary and despotic in the extreme; much addicted to parade and pageantry, and that to a degree of which Europe has exhibited no parallel. The government of China, although in name and form a complete despotism, appears, however, to be administered not only with temperance, but with a paternal solicitude for the welfare of the great body of the people, who may yet at the same time be ranked amongst the most abject of the human race. The growing ascendancy of the English, since the close of the 18th century, is unquestionably the most important era in the history of Asia; and, although much that is objectionable and reprehensible prevails, in some respects it indicates brighter and better prospects to Asia than it has ever before experienced.

ASIA MINOR comprehends that part of Western Asia under the dominion of the Turks, bordering north on the Black Sea, and south on the Levant, including the provinces of NATOLIA, CARAMANIA, and ROUM, which see.

ASIAGO, a considerable town of Italy, in Vicentino, 24 miles north of Vicenza. It is celebrated for its dye-works, and manufacture of straw hats. Pop. 4700.

ASINARA, an island in the Mediterranean, on the N. W. coast of Sardinia, 17 miles north by west of Sassari. It is 28 miles in compass, and is fertile and populous.

ASKEATON, a town and parish of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, noted for its castle, and for one of the most perfect abbeys in the country, built by one of the earls of Desmond. It is seated on the Decl, near its confluence with the Shannon, 20 miles west south-west of Limerick.

ASKRIG, a town in N. R. Yorkshire; market on Thursday; seated near the Ure, 18 m. W. S. W. of Richmond, and 246 N. of London.

ASNA. See ESNE.

ASINERAS, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienna, 10 miles north-west of Bellac.

ASOLA, a town of Italy, in Bresciano, 20 miles south-east of Brescia.

ASOLO, a town of Italy, in Trevisano, with a spacious citadel on a hill. It is surrounded by walls, and situated near the Masone, 17 miles north-west of Treviso.

ASOF, or AZOV, SEA OF, anciently the Falsæ Mæotis, lying to the N. of the Black Sea, with which it communicates by the Strait of Kertch, the ancient Cimærian Bosphorus. It is 195 miles in length, by 60 in breadth. Its greatest depth is 8 fathoms, but generally not more than 5 to 3 fathoms, which has diminished 6 feet between 1706 and 1833. The waters are thick and muddy, and but slightly salt. On its W. side is the Swashe or Putrid Sea, separated from it by the Tongue of Arabat. It was the scene of some warfare in the war of 1855.

ASORN, a town of Russia, lately the capital of a district of the same name, seated on the east bank of the Don, near its entrance into the sea of Asoph. It has been several times taken by the Turks and Russians. It is not of the importance it was in the reign of Peter the Great; the river being now so choked with sand, as scarcely to admit the smallest vessel. Long. 38. 32. E., lat. 46. 58. N.

ASPEREN, a town of Holland, famous for a long siege which it held out against the Geldrians, in 1517. It is seated on the Linghe, 13 miles south of Utrecht, and 22 east of Rotterdam.

ASPERN, a town of Austria, on the north bank of the eastern branch of the Danube, a little below Vienna, distinguished for a great battle fought between the French and Austrians in 1809, during which the town was totally destroyed, but has since been rebuilt.

ASSAM, or ASAM, an interior country of Asia, bounded on the W. by Bengal and Bootan, N. by Thibet, and S. E. and S. by Meckley. It is divided into three provinces, Upper, Central, and Lower. Area, 18,200 square miles; Pop. 602,500. Among the products are many kinds of valuable fruits, with silk, musk, pepper, cocoa-nuts, sugar, and ginger. The open parts are marked with population and tillage; the woods abound with elephants. The country is inhabited by a number of distinct tribes, all under the government of the British; they live in a state of barbarism chiefly, some of the tribes being naked, and eating principally rice, but also serpents, cats, locusts, dogs, &c.; the religion is that of Bramah, introduced in the 17th century: the priests are vicious and intriguing. Little is known of their early history. They are enterprising, savage, vindictive, and fond of war. They have neither horses, asses, nor camels; but they are sometimes brought there from other countries. Silk-velvet and cotton-stuffs are the chief manufactures. The invention of gunpowder is ascribed to the Assamese. It was known in China and Hindostan in very remote antiquity; and in the code of Genoo laws there is a prohibition of the use of fire-arms; but what these fire-arms were is not distinctly known. The ten-plum has been discovered growing wild in this country, and may prove of much importance. Mr. Bruce has found it growing in extensive tracts all along the river, from Jaipore, the capital of Lower Assam, to above Jorehaut, the capital of the Upper Province. It is found in the natural jungle, which covers a large portion of the country, and under the shade of which the tea-tree flourishes spontaneously; it has probably been introduced by the emigrants from the neighbouring province of Munkum. This tea has been prepared for the English market, under European superintendance, with considerable success.

ASSANCALE, or HASANKALA, a town of Turkish Armenia, which has hot baths much frequented. It is seated on the Aras, 22 miles E. of Erzerum.

ASSARPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in the country of Cutch, at the most eastern mouth of the Indus, 38 miles W. of Boogebooge.

ASSEERGUR, a strong hill fort of Hindostan, in Candeish. In the war with the Marattas, in 1803, it surrendered to the British. It is 15 miles N. of Burhanpour.

ASSEN, a town of Holland, in Overysseel, 12 miles S. of Groningen, and 51 N.N. W. of Coevorden.

ASSENEDE, a town of Belgium, a province of East Flanders, 13 miles N. N. E. of Ghent.

ASSENHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, at the conflux of the Wetter with the Nidda, 13 miles N. E. of Frankfurt. In this district a good deal of wine is produced, and it has large coal mines. Pop. 4000.

ASSENS, a seaport of Denmark, in the island of Finen. It is the common passage from the duchy of Sleswick to Copenhagen, and is 17 miles S. W. of Odensee. Long. 10. 2. E. lat. 55. 17. N.

ASSINIBOINS, or ASSENEBOYNE, a river of North America, falling into the S. W. end of Lake Winnipeg; the North West Fur Trading Company have a house on the S. bank of the river, about 15 miles above its entrance into the lake.

ASSISI, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto, with a magnificent cathedral church, 22 miles N. W. of Spoleto. Metastasio belonged to this town.

ASSUMPTION, a township and village of Lower Canada, situate on the bank of a river of the same name, which falls into the St. Lawrence a little below Montreal.

ASSOS, an ancient city of Asia Minor, in Troas, near the sea; 35 miles W. S. W. of Mount Ida. The ruins are very magnificent, and in a good state of preservation. A theatre almost entire; the remains of several temples, one inscribed to Augustus, others of earlier date; a causeway leading to a cemetery without the city; parts of the walls and towers; and its many other ruined relics, make the site extremely curious, and give perhaps the best idea of a Greek city that any where exists.

ASSUMPTION, an episcopal city, capital of a province of Paraguay. It is a miserable place, miserably built, with a miserable cathedral. It stands in a fertile country, on the E. bank of the river Paraguay, a little above the confluence of the Pilcomayo. Long. 57. 40. W. lat. 22. 47. S.

ASSYE, a small town in Hindostan, province of Berar, 38 miles N. E. of Aurungabad. A remarkable victory was gained here by General Wellesley, on September 23, 1803.

ASTABAT, a town of Persian Armenia, 3 miles from the river Aras, and 32 S. E. of Naksivan.

ASTARA, a town of Persia, in Ghilan, on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the S. W. end of the Caspian Sea. Long. 50. 40. E. lat. 38. 30. N.

ASTERABAD, or ESTERABAD, a town of Persia, capital of a province of its name, at the S. E. part of the Caspian Sea. It stands at the mouth of a river, which forms a bay convenient for trade, 110 miles E. of Ferabad. Long. 53. 23. E. lat. 36. 50. N.

ASTI, a city of Piedmont, capital of the department of Tanaro, with a citadel. Beside the cathedral, it contains upwards of thirty other churches. It is seated on the Tanaro, 24 miles E. of Turin. Pop. 21,225.

ASTORGA, the ancient Asturica Augusta, an episcopal town of Spain, in Leon, well fortified by art and nature, but the palace was dismantled by the French. It is the capital of La Maragateria, or county of the Maragates, a peculiar tribe, and is seated in a plain, on the river Tueria, 25 miles S. W. of Leon, and about midway on the high road from Corunna to Madrid.

ASTORIA, a commercial establishment on the Columbia River, on the W. coast of North America. It was founded in 1811, for the fur trade, by J. J. Astor, a private citizen of the United States, ultimately it was occupied by the Hudson's Bay Company, and is now included in the territory of the United States.

ASTRABAD, a tongue of land on the N. E. coast of the Crimea, extending into the Sea of Asoph.

ASTRABAD, capital of a province of the same name, on the S. E. of the Caspian Sea. It has a considerable commerce with Russia, &c.

ASTRACAN, a city of the Caucasus, and the principal city of Asiatic Russia, capital of a province of the same name, and an archbishop's see. It is situate on an island formed by two branches of the Volga River, near its entrance into the N. end of the Caspian Sea, in the lat. of 46., and has a good harbour. It is surrounded by walls, and on the W. has a triangular fortress. Here are 25 Russian churches, and two convents; the Armenians, Lutherans, and Papists, have their places of worship; and the Hindoos of Montan have been permitted to erect a temple. The houses are in general of wood; and the inhabitants are estimated at 31,000. It seldom rains here, but the river Volga overflows, like the Nile, and when the water is run off, vegetation is very rapid. Here are several large vineyards, from which some wine is made for home consumption; also manufactures of gunpowder and nitre, and on the side of the Caspian Sea are long marshes which produce a great quantity of salt. The Volga, either of itself, or by its numerous branches, intersects half of the interior provinces of European Russia, and affords to Astracan a facility of communication by water, of inestimable advantage. It communicates with Moscow by the Kashma branch, and with St. Petersburg from Twer, partly by canal, and partly by intermediate waters. The mouths of the river abound with beluga, a species of sturgeon, from the sound of which is made the finest isinglass, which forms a very extensive branch of the commerce of Astracan, which is also the centre of all the commerce of Russia with Persia and the East, in which Russians, Persians, Armenians, Greeks, Tartars, Jews, Hindoos, French, and English, all participate. It was taken from the Mongol Tartars about the middle of the 15th century, and is about 770 miles S. E. of Moscow, and 1050 S. S. E. of St. Petersburg.

ASTURIAS, a maritime province of the N. W. of Spain, extending for about 120 miles along the shore of the Bay of Biscay. It was divided into two parts, Asturias d'Oviedo and Asturias de Santillana. This province is full of mountains and forests; its wine and horses are excellent, and it has mines of gold, lapis-lazuli, and vermilion. The eldest son of the king of Spain is styled prince of the Asturias. It was formerly a principality of the kingdom of Leon, and is bounded on the S. by the province of Leon; on the W. by Galicia; and on the E. by Biscay and Old Castile; it extends inland from the Bay of Biscay about 45 miles, and contains a superficies of 303 square leagues, and a population of 364,238. The eastern extremity of the province, in lat. 43. 28. N. and 3. 40. W. long., and distant by way of Segovia 87, and by Aranda 71½ leagues N. from Madrid, is the principal town on the coast, and Oviedo, 75½ leagues north-west from Madrid, is the chief town inland.

ATACAMA, a seaport and prov. of Bolivia. The province has a great desert of the same name, which separates Peru from Chili. The town is remarkable for the fish called tollo, with which it carries on a great trade with the inland provinces. It is 210 miles S. by E. of Arica. Long. 69. 30. W. lat. 21. 20. S.

ATCHAFALAYA, an outlet of the Mississippi, forming the W. boundary of the delta of that river. It flows in a winding course for 147 miles to a bay of the same name on the Gulf of Mexico. The navigation is prevented by sunken trees, &c.

ATCHINSK, a considerable town in the government of Tobolsk, on the frontiers of Colyvan. It is situate on a branch of the Obe River, in the lat. of 56. 20. N. and 89. 30. E. long.

ATENA, a town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, near the river Negro, 22 miles N. of Policastro.

ATH, a fortified town of Belgium in the pr. of Hainault. It has been often taken, and is situated on the Dender, 12 miles N. W. of Mons, on the road from Brussels to Tournay. Pop. 8500.

ATHANASCA LAKE, British territories of North America, 200 miles long, 15 broad. Lat. 59. 0. N. long. 108. 0. W. Its chief outlet joins the Slave River.

ATHANOLI, a town of European Turkey, in Rumania, on the coast of the Black Sea, 70 miles N. E. of Adrianople.

ATINOF, a parish and town in the county of Meath, Ireland. The town is 30 miles N. of Dublin, and has three annual fairs.

ATHELNEY, an island in Somersetshire, at the confluence of the Thone and Parret, a few miles below Tuunton, memorable for having afforded shelter to King Alfred. Here he collected some of his retainers, on which account he called it Æthelingay, or the Isle of Nobles, and hence he made frequent sallies upon the Danes.

ATHENRAY, one of the most ancient towns in Connaught, formerly a parliamentary borough. Though relics of its former importance exist, and the business of its markets and fairs has lately increased, it wears a very desolate aspect, and affords little promise of any material improvement. A gateway and some portions of a wall which was built round the town, are still in existence. The east window, and some other remains of a splendid Dominican friary, are still standing.

ATHENS, a town of Pennsylvania, formerly called Tioga Point. It is seated at the junction of the Chemung with the Susquehanna. The situation is beautiful, in an undulating plain, environed by mountains. The North Branch canal of Pennsylvania terminates here, and it will be connected by a railroad with the New York and Erie railroad. Its advantages promise to make it a place of importance. It is 152 miles N. by E. of Harrisburg, and 262 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 1532.

ATHENS, a town of Georgia, on the W. bank of the Oconee River. It is the seat of the Georgia university, which was founded in 1785. It is 75 miles N. by W. of Milledgeville, and 610 from Washington. Pop. 3000.

ATHENS, a once celebrated city, situate on a promontory at the southern extremity of eastern Europe; supposed to have been founded by Cecrops, 1556 years antecedent to the Christian era, or about the period of the height of Egyptian glory in the age of Moses; it became the seat of kingly authority under Codrus, about the period of the reign of David in Palestine; and, in about 1000 years subsequent to its foundation, it had attained the summit of its glory, when it became the chief city of the Grecian republic, which successfully contended against the powerful arms of the Persian monarchy, and excelled in all the arts of poetry, painting, sculpture, and architecture; the two last the Athenians may be said to have perfected, for all that succeeding ages have done has been to copy, mix, and transform. Eighty-six years antecedent to the Christian era, when refinement among the Athenians had sunk into licentiousness, and patriotism into selfish ambition and individual aggrandisement, Athens fell a prey to the furious arm of Sylla, who sucked it of some of its choicest treasures; from this period it may be considered as having passed the meridian of its glory. In the 50th year of the Christian era, it was visited by the apostle Paul, whose speech to the multitude from the celebrated temple on Mars' Hill, as recorded in the 18th chap. of the Acts of the Apostles, verse 22nd, will best testify the social and moral condition of its inhabitants at that period. It subsequently became a prey to internal commotions, as well as to external enemies, and, after experiencing various alterations of fortune, it became tributary to the Turks, on their establishing their dominion in Europe. It has since become, once more, the capital of Attica and of Greece, and the projected improvements in its vicinity, including a splendid marble palace for King Otho, nearly completed, will render it a handsome town. It contains about 12,000 inhabitants, the greater portion of whom are Greeks; who, having the advantage of a delightful climate, live in comparative ease. Numerous vestiges of architectural grandeur still remain to attest the supremacy of the Athenians in that noble and useful art. In 1808 Lord Elgin, then ambassador from England at Constantinople, ransacked the Parthenon of the choicest vestiges of its friezes, &c., which now adorn the national museum in London. Athens stands in a spacious plain: the hill of Mars, on the summit of which stood the temple dedicated to the god of that name, was, during the zenith of its greatness, in the centre of the city, but now at some distance from the present town, which is bounded on one side by Mount Hymettus, deservedly celebrated for the honey which it produces. On the sea side it has three ports; the Phalereus, Munychia, and Piræus, now Porto Leone, about 5 miles distant from the town, and through which it carries on some little external traffic in honey, wax, oil, olives, silk, &c., in exchange for the manufactures of western Europe generally; it is in lat. 37. 58. N. and 23. 46. W. long.

ATHENS, a county in the S. E. end of the state of Ohio, a nook bordering on the Ohio river. Pop. 6338. The chief town of the same name is finely located in the centre of the county, on a tongue of land formed by the detour of the river Hoekhocking, which intersects the county from the N. W. to the S. E. corner, where it falls into the Ohio. The Ohio University was founded here in 1821. The town is 71 miles S. E. of Columbus.

ATHENS is the name of another town in Greene county, state of New York, on the W. bank of the Hudson River, nearly opposite the city of Hudson. Pop. 2387.

bons, &c. It is seated near the Anker, 13 miles N. of Coventry, and on the North Western railway, 102 miles from London.

ATHERTON, a flourishing town in Lancashire, with extensive coal-mines, cotton and iron manufactories, and silk-weaving. It is 12 miles W. by N. from Manchester.

ATHLONE, a borough of Ireland, partly in the county of West Meath, and partly in Roscommon. It stands on both sides of the Shannon, over which is a long bridge; and on the Midland Great Western railway, 78 miles from Dublin. This town was unsuccessfully besieged by William, Prince of Orange, after the battle of the Boyne, in 1690; but was taken by storm the following year, after the battle of Aughrim, by General Ginkle, one of the Orange followers, who was created Baron of Aughrim and Earl of Athlone, for the exploit. It is now one of the most extensive military stations in all Ireland; and sends one member to parliament.

ATHOS, or MONTÉ SANTO, a high mountain of Greece in Macedonia, on a peninsula at the entrance of the Gulf of Contessa. It has been celebrated in all ages for its singular locality, and the majesty of its appearance, and became an object of such great attraction to the Greeks, as to draw devotees from all parts of eastern Europe, who have interspersed it with numerous churches, monasteries, and hermitages; hence it has acquired the name of Monte Santo, or the Holy Mountain. The monks amount to about 6000, who subsist chiefly by preying on the numerous devotees whom their affected sanctity and craft continually draw around them; they, however, cultivate the olive and the vine to some extent, and there are four establishments of education for Greek ecclesiastics; there is a fortified town called Kureis, about half way up the mountain, at which a Turkish aga resides. It is about 70 miles E. of Salonica, and in lat. 40. 7. N. and 24. 15. E. long.

ATHY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, at which the assizes are held alternately with Naas. It is seated on the river Barrow, 12 miles S. of Kildare, on the Great South and Western railway, 45 miles from Dublin. The remains of an old castle now serve for a county jail, and there are ruins of two monasteries in the vicinity.

ATLANTIC, or ATLANTIC OCEAN, takes its name from Mount Atlas in Africa, and lies between the west continents of Africa and Europe, and the east continent of America. Its least breadth, from Guinea in Africa, to Brazil in South America, is 2300 miles. On one side of the equator, it is called the North Atlantic Ocean, and on the other the South Atlantic Ocean. It is remarkable for its currents, the principal of which, the Gulf Stream, is occasioned by the constant trade winds, which drive the waters, in a westerly direction, through the passages of the West India islands into the Gulf of Mexico; whence it flows, with great velocity, by the coast of Florida, making a curvilinear sweep of almost the whole breadth of the ocean. The surface of the Atlantic was estimated to be from 19 to 22 feet higher than the Pacific at the Isthmus of Panama, but this is an error.

ATLAS, a chain of high mountains in Africa, separating Barbary from Biledulgerid, and extending E. from the coast of the Atlantic to the border of Egypt, upwards of 2000 miles; their greatest altitude is about 13,000 ft. above the level of the sea. Silver, copper, iron, lead, and antimony, are found in different parts of these mountains. Another chain, called the Little Atlas, extends from the Strait of Gibraltar to Bona in the state of Algiers. These mountains have different names, according to the various countries they pass through, and the plains and valleys by which they are intersected. They are inhabited almost in every place, except where the extreme cold will not permit.

ATLISCO, a tn. of Mexico, in Tlascala, seated in an extensive plain of its name, 20 miles W. S. W. of Puebla de los Angeles.

ATOL, the name of each separate group of the Maldivo Islands, in the Indian Ocean.

ATOOI, or TAUAI, one of the Sandwich islands, in the North Pacific Ocean. It is 30 miles long, and contains a great portion of gently rising land. On the S. W. is a good road and anchoring place, called Wymoa. Long. 159. 40. W. lat. 21. 57. N. Pop. about 55,000.

ATOYAQUE, a town of Mexico, S. of the river Zacatula, and a few miles inland from the Pacific Ocean, in lat. 18. N.

ATRATO, a river of Columbia, which rises between the first and second ridge of the Andes, and runs from S. to N. about 250 miles, into the Gulf of Darien, in lat. 8. N. and W. long. 77. 6.

ATRI, a very ancient town of Naples, in Al-tuzzo Ulteriore, on a craggy mountain. It was the birth-place of the emperor Adrian. It is about four miles from the shore of the Adriatic, and 10. S. E. of Teramo. Pop. 4000. Long. 14. 2. E. lat. 42. 40 N.

ATLENBOROUGH, a town in Norfolk; market on Tuesday; 14 m. N. E. of Thetford. It was formerly a city and chief town of the county.

ATROCK, or ATROCK BENARES, a city and fortress of Hindostan, in the province of Lahore. It stands on the E. bank of the Indus, near the confluence of the Cabul, and on the site of the Taxila of Alexander, where he crossed that river, and advanced onwards to the Ganges, in the year 328 B. C. Attock is about 700 miles above the entrance of the Indus into the Arabian Sea, and about midway between Cabul and Lahore, or 180 to 200 miles from each, in lat. 33. 6. N. and 71. 15. E. long. The present fortress was built by the Emperor Acbar, in 1581.

ATROOK, a strong town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, 60 miles N. of Tritchinopoly, and 80 W. S. W. of Pondicherry.

AUB, a town of Germany, in the principality of Wurtzburg, on the river Gollach, 10 miles S. E. of Wurtzburg.

AUBAGNE, a town of France, department of Bouches du Rhone. It has fabrics of paper, leather, earthenware, &c., and several fairs. Pop. 6620.

AUBE, an interior department in the N. E. of France, containing part of the late province of Champagne. It takes its name from a river, which, passing by Bar-sur-Aube and Arcis, joins the Seine, above Nugent. Troyes is the capital. Pop. 253,870.

AUBENAS, a town of France, in the department of Ardeche, with manufactures of woollen cloths, red cotton, and raw and wrought silk; seated on the Ardeche, at the foot of the Cevennes, 15 m. S. of Viviers. Pop. 4855.

AUBENTON, a town of France, in the department of Somme, situated on the Aine, 10 miles S. of Virvins.

AUBETERRE, a town of France, on the frontiers of Charente and Dordogne, seated on the Drome, 22 miles S. of Angouleme. Long. 0. 12. E. lat. 45. 17. N.

AUBIERES, a town of France, in the dep. of Puy de Dome, 3 miles S. E. of Clermont.

AUBIGNÉ, or AUBION, a small town of France, in the department of Cher, seated in a fine plain, 28 miles N. of Bourges; it is old, dirty, and ill-built; it has, however, a good trade in wool. Pop. 2206.

AUBIN, St., a town of the island of Jersey, with a fort standing on a bay of the same name, opening to the south. See ST. HELLER.

AUBIN, St., a town of France, dep. Aveyron, 18 miles N. E. of Villefranche. In the environs are the burning hills of Fontagnes o Buegne; the smoke and other vapours produced by the fire, deposit on the sides of the crevices, through which they issue large quantities of alum, sufficient for the supply of France. Pop. 3017.

AUBONNE, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, on a river of its name, which falls into the Lake of Geneva, 14 miles W. of Lausanne.

AUBURN, the chief town of the county of Cayuga, the N. end of which borders on Lake Ontario, state of New York. It has a state prison, which is considered a model for such institutions, occupying a plot of ground 500 ft. by 1000 ft., surrounded by a wall 30 ft. high, enclosing the quadrangle of the prison buildings. There is also here a Presbyterian theological seminary, founded in 1821, and several other public buildings, and seven churches. It stands on the outlet of the Owaseo lake, 7 miles S. of the Erie canal. Pop. in 1840, 5626; 9 miles E. of the town of Cayuga, and 170 W. by N. of Albany.

AUBUSSON, a town of France, in the department of Creuse, with a manufacture of tapestry; seated on the river Creuse, 37 miles N. E. of Limoges. Pop. 5631.

AUCH, a very ancient city of France, capital of the department of Gers; lately an archiepiscopal see, and the capital of Gascony. The cathedral is one of the finest in France. Here are manufactures of velvet, serges, crapes, hats, and leather. It is seated on the summit and side of a hill, on the river Gers, 37 miles W. of Toulouse. Pop. 8470. Long. 137. E. lat. 43. 39. N.

AUCHTERARDER, a village and parish of Scotland, co. Perth; 14 miles W. S. W. of Perth. It is chiefly occupied by cotton weavers, who work for the Glasgow manufacturers. It was burnt down by the Earl of March in 1718, and has no building worth notice. It once returned members to parliament, and is near the Scottish Central Rail.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, a town and parish of Scotland, co. Fife, 9 m. W. of Cupar. It is an irregular, but respectable town; the people are chiefly employed in spinning and weaving. It was created a royal burgh by James IV., but has never sent any members to parliament. Pop. 3225.

AUCKLAND, the capital of New Zealand. It is seated on the Waitemata harbour, in lat. 36. 41. S. long. 174. 45. E.

AUCKLAND, BISHOP, a town of Durham, at which the bishop has a palace. Market on Thursday. It has a beautiful castle, and a chapel, whose architecture is very curious. Here are manufactures of cotton and muslin. It is seated by the side of a hill, on the river Wear, 8 miles S. by W. of Durham, and 249 N. N. W. of London, on the Wear Valley Rail.

AUCKLAND ISLES, Pacific Ocean, S. of New Zealand; discovered by Capt. Bristow in 1806. Lat. 50. 33½. S. long. 165. 52. E.

AUDE, a maritime department of France, at the S. E. extremity, containing part of the late province of Languedoc. It receives its name from a river which rises in the Pyrennees, and, flowing by Quillan, Limeux, and Carcassonne, enters the Mediterranean near Narbonne, and which, by the Royal Canal and Garonne, is united with the Atlantic Ocean. Carcassonne is the capital.

AUDIERNE, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre, seated in the Bay of Biscay, 18 miles W. of Quimper.

AUDLEM, a town of Cheshire, England, 6 miles S. from Nantwich, 162 from London.

AUERBACH, a town on the E. side of the Vogtland, in the S. W. corner of the circle of Upper Saxony.

AUERSTADT, a village of Thuringia, circle of Upper Saxony, W. of the Saal River, celebrated for a battle between Napoleon and the Prussians, on the 14th October, 1806.

AUGHER, a small market town, and formerly a parliamentary borough, in co. Tyrone, Ireland; it stands on the Blackwater, 2 miles N. E. of Clogher. The town presents a poor, though clean and pleasant appearance, and has for some years been improving. Market on Monday.

AUGHININ, a parish and village in co. Galway, Ireland, 29 miles E. of Galway. It is a neat and pleasant, though poor, village. Near here was fought the last battle between William III. and James II., in July, 1691, in which the Irish were totally routed, and their French general, St. Ruth, was killed.

AUGILA, a territory of North Africa, lying to the S. of Barca, between Fezzan and Egypt. The capital is of the same name, 220 miles W. of Sivah, and 510 E. by N. of Mourzouk. Long. 23. 40. E. lat. 29. 33. N.

AUGSBURG, a city of Suabia, lately imperial, and a bishop's see, but now the capital of one of the circles of Bavaria. It is a large fortified place, has a variety of manufactures, and is connected with Munich, Ulm, Nuremberg, and the rest of Germany, by various railways. The cathedral, town-house, and other public buildings, are magnificent. In the bishop's palace, the Lutherans presented their confession of faith to the emperor Charles V., in 1550, hence called the Confession of Augsburg. It was taken by the French in 1703, and again in 1796. It is seated between the Werdach and Lech, 35 m. N. W. of Munich. Pop. 35,000. Long. 10. 55. E. lat. 48. 17. N.

AUGUSTIN, Sr., a cape on the coast of Brazil, 300 miles N. E. of Bahia, or the Bay of All Saints. Long. 35. 40. W. lat. 8. 30. S. Also the name of a river, bay, and port, on the coast of Labrador, in the Straits of Belleisle; and of a river and bay, at the S. W. end of the island of Madagascar.

AUGUSTINE, a city and seaport of the U. S., E. coast of Florida; lat. 29. 52. N. long. 81. 25. W. Previously to the acquisition of Florida by the United States, this was a place of some importance, and was defended by a fort. It has since declined, from the badness of its harbour, there being a very shallow bar off the mouth of it. A lighthouse on the N. end of Anastasia island marks the entrance. The city is one mile long, and three-fourths of a mile wide. The streets cross each other at right angles, but some of them are narrow and very crooked. The public offices stand in a fine square, in which is a fine Roman Catholic church. The pop. in 1840 was 2459.

AUGUSTINE, SAN, a town of Texas, United States, standing on a small branch of the Necker river. It contains 2 churches, a university, a college, and about 1500 inhabitants.

AUGUSTOW, a town of Poland, in Polachia, seated on the Naricou, 44 miles N. of Bielsk.

AUGUSTUS, FORT, a fortress of Scotland, in Inverness-shire, at the influx of the Oich into the S. extremity of Loch Ness, 34 miles S. S. W. of Inverness.

AUGUSTURG. See SCHELLENBERG.

AULENDORF, a town of Suabia, situate on the river Schus, 8 miles N. of Ravensburg.

AULNAY, two towns of France, adjoining each other, in the department of Calvados, 14 miles S. W. of Caen. Pop. about 3500. Also the name of another town in the department of the Lower Charente.

AUMALE. See ALHEMARLE.

AUMONT, a town of France, in the department of Lozere, 15 miles N. W. of Mende.

AUMORE, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal, 30 miles S. of Rajenal, and 46 N. N. W. of Moorshedabad.

AUNIS, lately a small territory of France, in the S. W. part of Poitou, and now forming part of the department of Lower Charente.

AURACH, a fortified town of Wurtemberg, near the foot of a mountain, on the rivulet Ermst, 15 miles E. of Tubingen.

AURAS, a town of Silesia, on the river Oder, 12 miles N. W. of Breslau.

AURAY, a town of France, in the department of Morbihan, on a river of its name, near its entrance into the Gulf of Morbihan, in the Bay of Biscay, 11 miles W. of Vannes. Pop. 3895.

AURELIUS. See AUBURN.

AURICH, the capital of East Friesland, in the kingdom of Hanover, seated in a plain surrounded by forests, 12 miles N. E. of Emden. Pop. 2600.

AURILLAC, a town of France, in the department of Cantal, seated on the Jordane.

30 miles S. W. of St. Flour. It is a disagreeable town, with narrow, crooked streets. It has a college, fine church, and other public buildings; there is a very handsome bridge over the river. It is an industrious place, with manufactures of lace, paper, tapestry, &c. &c. Pop. 10,000.

AURIOL, a town of France, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhone, 15 m. E. N. E. of Marseilles. Pop. 5319.

AURORA, an island, one of the New Hebrides in the Pacific Ocean. It is 36 miles long and 6 broad, affords plenty of wood and water, and has a small bay on the N. W. coast. Long. 168. 18. E. lat. 15. 8. S.

AURORA, a town in Cayuga county, on the E. bank of Cayuga Lake, state of New York, 183 miles W. of Albany; also another town in Erie county, near the E. end of Lake Erie, in the same state, containing 2909 inhabitants; 298 miles W. of Albany.

AURORA, a small town of the United States, in Ohio, celebrated for the quantity and quality of the cheese produced in it. It is 144 m. N. E. of Columbus, and 335 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 906.

AURUNGABAD, a considerable city of Hindostan, capital of a prov. of the same name. It owes the greatest part of its magnificence to the great Aurungzebe, who made it his place of residence, and gave it the present name. It stands in a fertile plain, almost surrounded by mountains, 180 m. E. N. E. of Bombay. Long. 75. 33. E. lat. 19. 54. N.

AURUNGARUNDER, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Tatta, on a branch of the Indus, to which it gives name; 40 miles S. by W. of Tatta.

AUSA, formerly ALSA, a river of Carniola, which, running southward by Aquileia, after a short course falls into the Adriatic. On the banks of this river, Constantine, the son of Constantine the Great, fighting against Constantians, was slain.

AUSPITZ, a town of Moravia, 20 miles S. S. E. of Brun.

AUSSIG, a town of Bohemia, seated on the Elbe, 11 miles N. N. W. of Leutmeritz.

AUSTELL, ST., a town of Cornwall, in the centre of an extensive mining district. Market on Friday. In the environs is also got fine clay, which is sent to Liverpool, Bristol, and Staffordshire, for the potteries. It is seated near the English Channel, 13 miles E. N. E. of Truro, and 245 W. S. W. of London.

AUSTERLITZ, or SLAWKOW, a town of Moravia. Near this place a great and decisive victory was obtained by the French, commanded by Buonaparte, over the Austrians and Russians, on the 2nd December, 1805, which led to the treaty of Presburg. It is 12 m. E. of Brun, and 30 S. S. W. of Olmutz. Also the name of a town in Columbia co., state of New York, W. of the Hudson River, and on the border of Massachusetts; 28 miles S. E. of Albany.

AUSTIN, a city of the United States. It is the capital of Texas. It is on the left bank of the Colorado River, 200 miles from the sea. It contains 2 churches, several public buildings, and about 1000 inhabitants.

AUSTRALASIA, a name conventionally applied to the extensive territory of Australia, and the several groups of islands, including New Zealand, S. of the equator, in the Pacific Ocean. See NEW HOLLAND.

AUSTRALIA, the largest island in the world, having an extent nearly equal to Europe, being 2400 miles from E. to W., and 1200 in breadth. Western Australia is from the long. 129. 0. E. westward; South Australia lies between long. 132. 0. and 141. 0. E.; and Eastern Australia, or New South Wales, comprises the E. portion of the continent. The British settlements are on the E. coast, of which Sidney is the capital, (see WALES, NEW SOUTH); on the S. coast, at Port Philip, Melbourne is the capital; in St. Vincent Gulf, of which Adelaide is the capital; on the W. coast at Swan River, of which Perth is the principal town; and on the N. in Coburg peninsula, at the town of Victoria. See PORT ESSINGTON.

It is probable that this great territory was first discovered by the Portuguese in the early part of the 16th century; they saw the N. coast after exploring the shores of New Guinea. The first exploration of its shores was on the W. coast, by a Dutch navigator, Dirk Hartog, in 1616. It was again visited by the Dutch in 1619 and 1620, when the coast of Swan River was discovered. The S. coast was discovered also by the Dutch in 1627, and the N. shores by them in 1623 and 1644; this part was ordered by the States-General, in 1655, to be called New Holland—a name now changed for Australia, the South Land. The whole of the E. coast was discovered in 1770 by Capt. Cook, and called by him New South Wales, and was first colonized in 1788.

The interior has been recently penetrated by several travellers. Mr. Stuart, in 1860, proceeding from Chambers Creek in South Australia, found a well-watered country. As he advanced northwards he came to ranges of mountainous hills, with large rivers flowing from them. The valleys between the ranges of hills were fertile, and to the eastward he observed indications of water in abundance. Other travellers, advancing from the north and from the south, have been stopped by a saline desert. The absence of water upon the surface of the country, though abundance has been generally found a little below it, is remarkable. But the thick and flourishing vegetation holds out a reasonable expectation that the country is in many parts habitable, especially in the north. It is probable that fresh explorations will shortly ascertain very much more of the character and capabilities of this important country.

It was formerly thought that the great outlet of the waters was on the N. W. coast, but the recent researches prove the contrary.

No river of magnitude has been discovered in that quarter, except the Victoria, in long. 130., which has been traced for about 120 miles in a S. E. direction, and the Burdekin on the eastern side; and in this country of anomalies, every theory which has been advanced has wanted confirmation, or has been subverted by the facts discovered.

AUSTRALIA, NORTH. See ESSINGTON, PORT.

AUSTRALIA, SOUTH, a new province erected into a free colony, on Aug. 15, 1834, having the meridians of 132. 0. and 141. 0. E. for its E. and W. boundaries, and the parallel of 26. 0. S. on the N.; and the Gulfs of St. Vincent and Spencer on the S., and contains nearly 200,000,000 acres. The northern part of the province is unfit for the occupation of man. It was penetrated by Mr. Eyre, who left Adelaide on June 18th, 1840, who found that the whole of the country to the N. and E. of the head of Spencer's Gulf was of low elevation, with the exception of some ridges running in a N. and E. direction; and beyond which, and forming a crescent, lies Lake Torrens, a collection of salt water, which he in vain endeavoured to reach. In 1844-6, an expedition under Captain Sturt, penetrated much farther than had previously been practicable, and he found the country in a very different state from what it was when Eyre traversed it. After incredible difficulties and privations, he reached a point in lat. 24. 30. S. long. 138. 0. E., beyond which he could not extend his route; the country passed over was traversed by numerous creeks and water holes, and many brackish and salt ponds and plains. The heat at times was astounding, and the whole country may be included under the term of desert. Lake Torrens had disappeared, and its site evidently showed signs of repeated inundations; the whole country appears as if recently reclaimed from the bed of the ocean.

The southern part is a level country, and from the total deficiency of mountains, with the exception of the Mount Lofty range of 1000 or 1500, and the peak, which is 3000 feet high, there is no river of consequence. The Murray, which falls into Lake Alexandrina, passes through a country totally unfit for colonization, and does not receive a single tributary within the colony. The soil is moderately fertile, and well adapted for sheep grazing; but the country labours under the effects of drought, so peculiar to Australia in general. The climate is delicious, and exceedingly salubrious; during the summer, in Jun., Feb., and March, the thermometer is as high sometimes as 96. or 100.; but during the other parts of the year, it is temperate. Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, is situated on the river Torrens; three hundred acres being on the north side of the river, and seven hundred on the south. South Adelaide is the business part of the town, and is situated on an elevated table-land, commanding a beautiful prospect of Gulf St. Vincent to the west, and of the Mount Lofty range to the east. North Adelaide is rather more elevated than the southern portion of the town, being built upon a hill, the view from which, looking over the valley of the Torrens—which separates the north and south divisions of the town—is very fine.

The subsoil is entirely of limestone, good water being found at an average depth of forty feet in every part of the town. Excellent soft water is supplied from the river Torrens throughout the greater part of the year; but it must be admitted that the water obtained in summer is far from wholesome, until after it has been passed through a filter.

The population of the town is now supposed to be about 10,000, and many of the streets exhibit as much bustle and activity as is to be observed in many an English city of double or treble the size. There are several very handsome buildings in the town, among which may be mentioned the Government House on the banks of the Torrens, the Government Offices, the South Australian Bank, the Auction Mart, and the two Episcopal churches. The houses are constructed of almost every kind of material; but those of brick and stone prevail. Three neat and substantial bridges have been thrown over the Torrens, one of them being built of stone. The streets of the town are laid out at right angles, and there are six public squares at the intersections of the principal streets. The business of the town is chiefly confined to Hindley Street, Rundle Street, and King William Street, &c.

Port Adelaide is situated at a distance of about 7 miles from the capital, from which it is separated by an extensive plain. It is formed by an arm or estuary of the sea, navigable for a distance of 6 or 7 miles by the largest vessels. The territory between the E. boundary of this colony and the old colony of new South Wales, is now the province of Victoria, and has Melbourne for its capital. Its advantages, as an agricultural and pastoral country, appear to be very great. But the great feature of this and adjacent districts, is the recent discovery of immense gold deposits, which seem likely to rival, in interest and richness, those of California. That such treasures would be found, was predicted more than 10 years since, from the similarity of geological formation with the Russian gold field of the Ural Mountains. The auriferous deposits of Australia seem to exist in the great range which separates the waters which flow eastward and westward. The first opening was in the neighbourhood of Bathurst, N. S. W. The Turon river, Goulburn, &c., are rich. Farther to the S. W., the ranges called the Australian Alps and the Pyrenees—around mounts Alexander, Macedon, and Cole, are the great points of interest at the last news. The pop. on January 1, 1845, was 18,999, and

January 1, 1851, 63,700, and aborigines in settled districts at 3730. For extended particulars on this subject, see Appendix.

AUSTRALIA, WESTERN, a British settlement formed in 1829, in consequence of the official announcement of the French to colonize it, which led to its formation by England. The territory of Western Australia is divided from the rest of the continent by the meridian of 129. O. E. The colony is at the S. W. angle of the continent, and is divided into 26 counties. The country consists, generally, of a coast belt of sandy inferior land, with richer tracts near the rivers, bounded on the coast by a range of primitive mountains, between 3 and 4000 feet high, extending more than 500 miles in a N. and S. direction. Beyond these the country is generally level, and the soil superior to the coast, but not in a very high degree productive, and affords excellent sheep pasture. It is not heavily timbered, and is tolerably well watered. The principal rivers are the Swan, flowing from the N. E.; the Canning, which unites with it, and forms a large basin in lat. 32., at the head of which is the town of Perth, and at the mouth is Fremantle. The other towns are Albany, in King George's Sound, on the S. coast; and Augusta, in Flinder's Bay. North of the present colony is the district of Victoria, in which coal has been discovered, and several large rivers, among which are the Ilutt, Greenough, and Arrowsmith.

AUSTRIA, EMPIRE, and ARCHDUCHY OF, in Europe. The Austrian empire comprehends the ancient kingdoms of Bohemia, Moravia, and Hungary, the Italian states of the Tyrol and the ancient republic of Venice, Dalmatia, Croatia, Slavonia, and also parts of the circle of Bavaria, of Switzerland, and of Poland, (the particulars of which, with their several subdivisions, will be found under their respective heads,) and the circle which includes the archduchy. This fine empire lies between the 45th and the 51st deg. of N. lat. and the 9th and 27th of E. long. Its area is estimated at 257,368 square m. and its divisions and population in 1840 are exhibited in the following table:—

Lower Austria.....	1,400,626	VIENNA
Upper Austria.....	857,568	Linz
Tyrol	839,753	Innsbruck
Styria	975,309	Grätz
Carinthia	750,541	Klagenfurt
Carniola		Ljubach
Ilyrian Coast	481,189	Trieste
Bohemia	4,174,168	Prague
Moravia, and	2,166,638	Brunn
Silesia		Troppau
Galicia	4,797,243	Lemberg
Dalmatia	314,028	Zara
Hungary, &c	13,299,807	Ofen, Buda, Pesth
Transylvania	2,079,000	Clausenburg
Venice	2,168,553	Venice
Total.	36,950,401

For later estimates see the Appendix.

was made independent of Hungary, and a complete revision of all political relations made. This political reformation, however, was never fully effected. On Dec. 2, 1848, the Emperor Ferdinand I. abdicated, and the crown descended to his nephew, the present emperor, Francis Joseph I. Political difficulties have harassed the greater part of his reign. In 1859 a rupture occurred between Austria and the kingdom of Sardinia, the Emperor of the French espousing the cause of the latter. A fierce but short campaign ensued, the Austrians being generally worsted, till the decisive victory of Solferino induced the Emperor of Austria to accept the terms of Napoleon III., and to submit to the loss of Lombardy, while retaining Venetia. The opinion prevails that Austria awaits an opportunity of recovering the lost territory; while, on the other hand, the Italian government is threatening to wrest Venetia from her also. But in the meantime enormous frauds upon the revenue have come to light, and the perpetual fermentation of the "nationalities" under Austrian rule, preoccupies the anxious attention of the government. The Hungarians have taken up a position of passive resistance; and although a constitutional form of government has been promulgated, based upon representative institutions similar to those of England, and the concordat, by which the education of the empire was handed over to Papal direction, has been rescinded, and a general and apparently sincere desire has been exhibited, by the emperor and his advisers, to carry out the reformation for the welfare of his subjects; yet Hungary demands nothing less than a separate existence and monarchy of its own, allows its taxes to be levied only with the bayonet, and by the resignation in a body of all its public officials, has placed the Austrian government in a situation of the gravest difficulty, from which it can be extricated only by consummate wisdom, if recourse is not had to fire and sword.

AU SABLE, a river of the United States, rising in Essex county, in New York, and, after passing the manufacturing villages of Clinton, Keeseville, and Birmingham, affording by its great falls considerable water power, it falls into Lake Champlain.

AUTUN, a city of France, (the ancient Augustodunum,) and an episcopal see, in the department of Saone and Loire. It contains many vestiges of Roman magnificence, particularly the temples of Janus and Cybele. Here are manufactures of tapestry, carpets, coverlets, and delst ware. The cathedral of St. Lazarus, the college, and the seminary, are worthy of notice. Autun is seated on the Arroux, at the foot of three mountains, 45 miles E. by S. of Nevers, and 162 S. E. of Paris. Pop. 9000.

AUVILLARD, a town of France, in the department of Lot and Garonne, situate on the river Garonne 13 miles S. E. of Agen.

AUXERRE, a city of France, capital of the department of Yonne, and lately an episcopal see. It contains many fountains and squares, an episcopal palace, and a fine Gothic cathedral, one of the most beautiful in France. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the river Yonne, 95 miles S. S. E. of Paris. Pop. 11,000.

AUXON, a town of France, in the department of Aube, 13 miles S. of Troyes.

AUXONNE, a fortified town of France, in the department of Cote d'Or, with a castle, an arsenal, a foundry for cannon, and a school for the artillery. It is seated on the Saone, 17 miles E. S. E. of Dijon. Pop. 5300.

AUZEN, or TIGRE, a town of Abyssinia, capital of the province of Tigre, and a place of considerable commerce. It is seated on a river that flows into the Taccuzze, 170 miles N. E. of Gondar. Long. 39. 33. E. lat. 14. 4. N.

AVA, a country of Asia, now generally called BIRMAN, which see.

AVA, a large city, the metropolis of the Birman Empire. It is divided into an upper and lower city, both of which are fortified; the lower is the most extensive, about 5½ miles in circumference, protected by a lofty wall, now mouldering into decay. The materials of the houses, consisting chiefly of wood, were removed about the year 1783, to the new city; and its numerous temples, on which the Birmans never lay sacrilegious hands, are dilapidated by time. Clumps of bamboos, a few plantain trees, and tall thorns, occupy most of the area of this lately flourishing capital. It is situate on the S. side of the Erabatty, 4 miles S. W. of Ummierapoor, the present capital, in N. lat. 22. E. long. 96. 5.

AVALON, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, which has a great trade in grain, wine, and cattle, and a manufacture of cloth. It is seated on the Cousin, 24 miles S. S. E. of Auxerre. Pop. 5089.

AVATSCHA, or AWATSKA, a large bay, forming a very commodious harbour for ships of the largest burthen, near the S. E. extremity of the coast of Kamstchatka. The town of St. Peter and St. Paul, on the N. side of the bay, is in lat. 53. 1. N. and 15. 8. E. long. and was taken by the British in 1855.

AVEIRO, a town of Portugal, in Beira, with a good harbour for vessels of a moderate size. The chief trade is in salt, of which great quantities are made in its vicinity. It stands on a small gulf, at the mouth of the Vouga, 33 miles S. of Oporto. Pop. 4134. Long. 8. 40. W. lat. 40. 40. N.

AVEIRON, or AVEYRON, an interior department of the S. of France, including the late province of Rouergue. It is named from a river, which rises near Severac le Chateau, and, flowing by Rodez and Villefranche, joins the Garonne below Montauban. The Lot intersects the northern, and the Tarn the southern part of the department; it is divided into five arrondissements, Villefranche, Milhau, St. Afrique, Espalion, and Rhodéz; the Inst is the capital of the department, which contains a population of about 380,000.

AVELLA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, celebrated for its honey and apples, 15 miles N. E. of Naples. Pop. 5000.

AVELLINO, a town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore. It was almost ruined by an earthquake in 1694, and again in 1805. Near it is the celebrated convent of Monte Virgine, on a wild mountain, which formerly had a sumptuous temple of Cybele. Avellino is famous for the dye of cloth, also for nuts and macaroni. It is 25 miles E. of Naples. Pop. about 12,000.

AVENAY, a town of France, in the department of Marne, on the river Marne, 15 miles W. N. W. of Chalons-sur-Marne.

AVENCHÉ, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Berne, formerly the capital of Helvetia, but now greatly decayed, grain and tobacco being grown on the site of part of the ancient city, of which some very interesting remains still exist. It stands at the S. end of the lake Merat, 15 miles W. of Berne.

AVERBACH, a town of Upper Saxony, in Vogtland, near which is a rock famous for pale topazes. It is 14 miles S. of Zwickau.

AVERNO, a lake of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 600 yards in diameter, near Puzzoli. Virgil and others have said the water was so bad, that birds dropped dead when flying over it, and hence they call it the Lake of Hell; but it now has no such poisonous quality, for birds swim upon it. A little to the W. of the lake is a cave, where some pretended they went to consult the Cumæan sybil. There are also some old walls, which some suppose to be the ruins of a temple of Apollo, and others of Pluto.

AVERSA, an episcopal town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro. In 1805 it suffered greatly by an earthquake. It is seated in a fine plain, 10 miles N. E. of Naples. Pop. 15,000.

AVES, or THE ISLANDS OF BIRDS, in the W. Indies, so called from the great numbers of birds that frequent them, though they have not a tree. They are 70 miles E. of Curaçou, and 100 N. of the coast of Colombia, in N. lat. 15. 50. W. long. 63. 43.

AVESNES, a fortified frontier town of France, in the S. of the department of Nord, seated on the high road from Mons to Paris. The cathedral has a spire 300 ft. high. Pop. 3030.

AVESTADT, a town of Sweden, in Westmania, noted for its copper works, and a mint for copper money, 35 miles N. N. W. of Westeros.

AVEZZANO, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, 18 miles S. of Aquila. Pop. 3166.

AVIANO, a town of Italy, in Friuli, 13 miles W. of Udine.

AVIGLIANO, a fortified town of Piedmont, on a hill, near the Cottian Alps, 10 miles W. of Turin.

AVIGNON, a city of the S. of France, capital of the department of Vaucluse, and an archbishop's see. It was the residence of the popes between 1305 and 1377, and during this period rose into a large and important place, but it has since fallen off considerably. It has a university, several handsome churches, and a synagogue, and numerous manufacturing establishments. It is seated on the railway from Paris, &c., to Marseille, and in the heart of a very fruitful district (in which the olive, vine, &c., abound), on the E. bank of the Rhone, near the confluence of the Durance, about 20 miles N. E. of Nismes. Pop. about 27,500.

AVILA, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, and a bishop's see, with a university, and a manufacture of fine cloth. It is seated on the Adaga, in a large plain, surrounded by mountains, 56 miles N. W. of Madrid. Sta-Teresa, the object of much Spanish adoration, died here October 4, 1582. It was formerly one of the most considerable cities of Spain, but does not now contain more than 4000 inhabitants.

AVILES, a town of Galicia, in Spain. It has but little worth seeing, but might become of importance if the project of the North of Spain railroad from Madrid, which terminates here, were carried into effect. It would then become the most important place on the coast. It is 15 miles from Oviedo.

AVIS, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, seated on an eminence, with a castle, near the river Avis. Hence the military order of the knights of Avis have their name. It is 25 miles N. W. of Estremos. Pop. 3330.

AVISO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 6 miles E. of Sora.

AVLONA. See VALONA.

AVOLA, or AULA, a seaport town of Sicily, 12 miles S. W. of Syracuse; it is prettily situated, and has a considerable traffic in wine, honey, fruit, corn, &c.; the tunny fishery is also carried on here to a considerable extent. Pop. 8822.

AVON, a river of England, rising from several springs in Naseby Field, Northamptonshire. It runs W. and joins the Severn at Tewkesbury, whilst the Nez, which rises within a quarter of a mile of it, flows E. and falls into the German Ocean. It is navigable from Stratford, the birth-place of Shakespeare, 40 miles from Tewkesbury, and has numerous corn and paper mills on its banks. There is also another river of the same name in England, which rises in the N. of Wiltshire, runs past Malmesbury and Chippenham to Bath, falling into the Bristol Channel; this, in contradistinction to the other, is called the Lower Avon.

AVON, another river which rises near Bedwin, in Wiltshire, running past Salisbury, and skirting the edge of the New Forest falling into Christchurch Bay, in the English Channel.

AVON, a town of the United States, in New York, pleasantly seated about half-a-mile E. of the Genessee river, and about 100 feet above it. On the S. W. of the village are two celebrated sulphureous mineral springs, with bathing-houses for their use. Pop. in 1840, 2999. It is 222 miles W. by N. of Albany, and 355 from Washington.

AVRANCHES, a town of France, in the S. of the maritime department of La Manche. It is situate on an eminence, about 2 miles from the sea, in a fine agricultural district. It was formerly a bishop's see, to which Henry II. of England went to obtain absolution from the pope's nuncio, for the murder of Thomas à Becket, in 1172. Although much declined in importance, the cathedral, episcopal palace, and castle, give it some consequence; and it contains about 6000 inhabitants; 10 miles E. of St. Malo.

AW, Loch, a lake of Scotland, in Argyleshire, 30 miles long, and in some parts above 2 broad. It contains four little islands, tufted with trees, on one of which are the ruins of an ancient castle; and on a peninsula of the lake are the noble ruins of Killchurn Castle. At the N. extremity rises the mountain of Cruachan, elevated 3390 feet above the surface of the lake; and near its top is the spring which forms this beautiful expanse of water. The river Aw, the outlet of this lake, runs into Loch Etive, at the village of Bonaw.

AWATSKA. See AVATSCHA.

AWEN, or OYERO, a kingdom of Africa, dependent on Benin, with a town of the same name, on the river Formosa. Long. 5. 10. E. lat. 6. 10. N.

AWEN, a town of Suabia, on the river Colchin, 20 miles W. S. W. of Oeting.

AXBRIDGE, a town in Somersetshire; market on Thursday; seated on the river Ax, under the Mendip hills; 10 miles N. W. of Wells, and 130 W. of London.

AXEL, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, seated in a morass; 10 m. N. of Ghent.

AXIM, a territory of Guinea, on the Gold Coast, with a river of the same name flowing through it, and a town on the E. side, at its entrance into the ocean. The Dutch have a fort and a factory here, called St. Anthony. Long. 1. 3. W. lat. 4. 42. N.

AXMINSTER, a town in Devonshire, on the river Ax; market on Saturday. King Athelstan established a minster here to the memory of the princes slain in his army, when he defeated the Danes in this neighbourhood. Here is a manufacture of leather gloves, &c., and a famous one of carpets. It is 27 miles E. by N. of Exeter, and 147 W. of London.

AXUM, a town, anciently the capital of Abyssinia. Its ruins are very extensive, among which are many obelisks of granite, with sculptures, but no hieroglyphics. It is 70 miles N. W. of Auzen. Long. 38. 27. E. lat. 14. 5. N.

AYAMONTE, a seaport of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle on a rock, at the mouth of the river Guadiana, opposite Castro-Marino, 80 miles N. W. of Cadiz. Pop. 6350. Long. 7. 15. W. lat. 37. 12. N.

AYAMONTE, a poor fishing town. The Roman road to Merida commenced here. Pop. nearly 5000.

AYLESBURY, a borough in Buckinghamshire; market on Saturday; and returns two members to parliament. The spring assizes are held here. It is the centre of the business of the fertile vale of Aylesbury. Many people here derive their support from a peculiar manner of rearing early ducks for the London market; and the making of lace is carried on to a great extent. It is 17 miles S. E. of Buckingham, and 38 N. W. of London.

AYLESFORD, a town and parish of England, county Kent, on the right bank of the Medway, 30 miles S. E. of London. The church, a handsome building, is seated on an eminence; there is a bridge over the river; and near the town was a Carmelite monastery, now a residence of the Ffuch family, the earls of Aylesford. The chief object, however, is Kits-coty House, about 1 m. N. E. of the village; it consists of 3 upright stones, 8 feet high, supporting another 11 feet long, 8 broad, and 2 thick. It is supposed to have been a monument raised to the memory of Catigern, a British chief killed in a battle, about A. D. 455, with the Saxons, under Hengist and Horsa. Pop. 1301.

AYLESHAM, a town in Norfolk; market on Thursday; 12 miles N. of Norwich, and 118 N. E. of London. There is a spa about a mile from the town, very efficacious in chronic disorders. It is seated on the S. bank of the river Bure, which is navigable to Yarmouth.

AYR, a county, parish, royal burgh, and river of Scotland. The county extends for about 55 miles along the S. W. coast, and is about 20 in mean breadth. It is one of the most productive counties in Scotland, and exports considerable quantities of grain to Liverpool; and the N. part of the county participates largely in the cotton manufacture. It also abounds in coal and iron, and has some veins of copper and antimony; and some kelp is made on the coast, from seaweed, which is also extensively used as manure. It is watered by several small lakes and streams; the Garnock rises in the N. extremity of the county, and runs S. to Irvine; the Irvine and Ayr rise on the W. border, and flow E. to the sea; the Don runs from S. to N. towards Ayr; and the Girvan and Stinchar rise S. of Ayr, and run parallel with the coast into the sea, toward the S. end of the county. It has been proposed to intersect the N. part of the county with a canal from Ardrossan to the Clyde at Glasgow; but this has been superseded by several railways from Ayr to Kilmarnock, Irvine, Paisley, Glasgow, &c. Agates, porphyry, jasper, and calcareous petrefactions, are found in various parts of the county, whilst lime and freestone abound; and on the river Ayr is obtained the whetstone, so useful in sharpening of agricultural cutlery. The principal towns beside Ayr, are Kilmarnock, Kilwinning, and Irvine, N.; St. Quivox, Mauchline, Muirkirk, in the centre; Maybole, Kirkmichael, Dailly, Girvan, and Ballantrae, S.

The Royal Burgh of Ayr is situate in the parish, and at the mouth of the river of the same name, on the sea coast, the lighthouse being in lat. 54. 35. N. and 4. 26. W. long. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having been a royal burgh as far back as 1202; its commercial importance declined with the rise of Glasgow, but has revived somewhat since the commencement of the present century. Its export of coal is very great. About 6000 tons of shipping belong to the place, a portion of which is employed in the timber trade to British America. Its buildings do not merit any particular notice. The Ayr river, as well as the Don, affords a considerable supply of salmon.

AZAMOR, a town of Morocco, on the river Morbeys, near the sea; 80 miles N. of Morocco.

AZAREDO, a seaport of Brazil, in the Bay of Spirito Santo, celebrated for sugar. Long. 40. 10. W. lat. 20. 18. S.

AZERBIJAN, a province of Persia, in the N. W. angle of the kingdom. Pop. 2,000,000. The Guebres, or Fire-worshippers, have here their principal temples, which are numerous. Tabriz is the capital.

AZOF. See ASOPH.

AZORES, or WESTERN ISLANDS, a group of islands in the Atlantic, between 25. and 30. W. long. and 37. and 40. N. lat., 900 miles W. of Portugal. They are nine in number, viz., St. Maria, St. Michael, Terceira, St. George, Graciosa, Fayal, Pico, Flores, and Corvo. They were first discovered in 1439, by John Vanderberg, a merchant of Bruges, who was driven here by stress of weather. On his arrival at Lisbon, he boasted of his discovery; on which the Portuguese set sail, and took possession of them, which they have retained ever since. They have all a clear sky and salubrious air; are extremely fertile in corn, wine, and various fruits; and breed great numbers of cattle; but the indolence of the inhabitants, and the vicious laws and customs, prevent their becoming so productive as they might, and ought to be. It is said they are quite free from venomous animals; but they are very subject to earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. They are seen at a great distance, one of them having a very high mountain, called the Pico, or the Peak of the Azores. The governor-general resides at Angra, in Terceira; but St. Michael is the largest island. They export to Great Britain considerable quantities of oranges. Pop. in 1841, 210,300.

AZOTUS, ASHDOD, or SUDOOD, one of the five cities of the Philistines, and a celebrated seaport of the Mediterranean. The town is now called by the Arabs Hasaneyun. It is but thinly inhabited, though the situation is very pleasant. The town is about a mile and a half in circumference, and has in it a mosque, a public bath, a market-place, and two inns. Here is an old structure, with fine marble pillars, which the inhabitants say was the house that Samson pulled down; and to the S. E., just out of the town, is the water where Philip baptized the Ethiopian eunuch. There are several ancient buildings, with capitals and pillars standing. It is situated about 14 or 15 miles S. of Ekron, between that and Ascalon.

AZPEITIA, a town of Spain, in Giupuzcoa, pleasantly seated and walled. Near it are some iron works. San Ignacio was born here in 1491; 12 miles from Tolosa.

AZREK, BAHR EL, or BLUE RIVER, one of the principal tributaries of the Nile. It rises in the Lake Dembea, in Abyssinia, and joins the White River at Halfaiah, in Sennaar, which together form the Nile.

B.

BAALBEC. See BALBEC.

BABA, a town of Turkey in Asia, province Andoli. Pop. 4000. Also a town of South America, republic Colombia, in the Gulf of Guayaquil.

BABA, or BABADAGH, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, celebrated for its knives and sword blades. It stands on a gulf of its name, in the Black Sea, 90 miles N. E. of Silistria. Long. 28. 38. E. lat. 44. 40. N.

BABELMANDEL, or BAR-EL-MANDER, a strait between the coast of Abyssinia and Arabia, uniting the Red Sea with the Indian Ocean. In it is a small island and a mountain of the same name. Long. 43. 28. lat. 12. 35. N.

BADENSAUSEN, a town of Suabia, in Germany, 5 miles N. of Tubingen.

BABIC, or BABABEG, a town of Persia, on the confines of the Desert of Kerman, situate at about an equal distance from the cities of Kerman, Shwaz, and Zed.

BABUYANES, a cluster of six or seven small islands in the North Pacific Ocean, 10 leagues N. of the Isle of Luconia. The chief produce is wax, ebony, bananas, cocoas, and plantains.

BABYLON, the capital of the ancient kingdom of Babylonia or Chaldea. The foundation of it is ascribed to Nimrod, grandson of Ham; it is said also to be the site of the tower of Babel. But by whomsoever it was founded, Nebuchadnezzar greatly embellished it, and made it one of the wonders of the world. The most famous works in and about it were the walls of the city, the temple of Belus, Nebuchadnezzar's palace, the banks of the river, the artificial lake, and the canals. The walls were 87 feet thick, 350 feet high, and 60 miles in circumference, forming an exact square, having 100 gates of solid brass, 25 on each side, with a street running from each in a straight line to the opposite gate; so that there were in all 50 great streets, each 15 miles long. The site is near the present town of Helleh or Hillah, which see. Alexander of Macedon died here April 21, B.C. 323.

BAÇA, or BAZA, a town of Spain, in Granada, 15 m. N. E. of Guadix. Pop. about 15,000.

BACCARAT, a town of France, dep. Meurthe; 16 m. S. E. of Lunéville. It is the chief seat of the flint-glass, or crystal manufacture, which was transferred here from Voniche in Belgium, in 1815. The workmen and their families are all lodged in the establishment. Pop. 3057.

BACH, or BATHIA, a town of Hungary, formerly the see of a bishop, seated near the Danube, 30 miles E. N. E. of Fuaikirchen, and 85. S. of Buda.

BACHARACH, (ancient BACCHIARÆ), a town of Germany, in Rhenish Prussia. It is famous for its wine and ornamental glass manufactures, and stands at the foot of a mountain, near the Rhine, 24 miles S. by E. of Coblenz. The counts palatine had formerly a castle here, and levied toll on the produce and merchandise passing up and down the Rhine, which, from the extent of the exaction, was denominated the golden toll. It at present forms part of the Prussian territory.

BACHESERAI, a town of Russia, in the province of Taurida. It was lately the residence of the Tartar clans of the Crimea, and the palace is a curious species of painted Chinese structure. Near this place, on a high rock, is an old fort called the Jews' Citadel, so named as having been from time immemorial inhabited by about 200 families of Jews. Bacheserai is seated in a deep valley, on the rivulet Katza, 18 m. S. S. W. of Simferopol.

BACHIAN, an island, the largest and most southern of the proper Moluccas. It is 70 miles in circumference. The Dutch first formed a settlement here in 1610. Zabonga is the chief town. Long. 127. 0. E. lat. 0. 25. S.

BACHU, or BAKU, a city of Shirvan, in Persia, situate on the shore of a fine haven on the W. side of the Caspian Sea. It was taken possession of by Russia at the commencement of the last century; ceded back to Persia in 1735, and repossessed by Russia since 1801. The country round abounds in petroleum, and, in places, constantly emits flame, but without producing any very sensible degree of heat. It was probably this district that gave rise to the sect of the Parsees, Guebres, or Fire Worshipers, by whom it was formerly much resorted to. Baku is now an inconsiderable place; it is in 40. 5. N. lat. and 50. 10. E. long.

BACK RIVER, or THLEWEWECHODEZETH, a river of North America, discovered by Captain Sir George Back. It rises near the Great Slave Lake, and flows to the sea, S. of the land of Boothia Felix. Sir J. Franklin's party perished near its mouth in 1850.

BADAJOZ, a town in Spain, capital of Estremadura, and a bishop's see. It is famous for a bridge built by the Romans over the Guadiana. On this bridge the Portuguese were defeated by Don John of Asturias, in 1661. Badajoz was taken by the French in 1809, and retaken by the allied army under Lord Wellington, by storm, on the 6th of April, 1812. It is a frontier town towards Portugal, and well fortified. It is 14 miles E. of Elvas, and 175 S. by W. of Madrid. Pop. 12,088.

BADAKSHAN, or BUDAKSHAN, a city of Usbec Tartary, or Great Bokhara, capital of the province of Kilan. Gold, silver, and rubies are found in its vicinity; and caravans pass by this city to Cabul and China. It is seated on the main branch of the Gihon, about 100 miles from its source, at the foot of the Belar mountains, 120 miles E. of Balk. Long. 68. 50. E. lat. 37. 10. N.

BADELONA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, seated on the Mediterranean, 10 miles N. E. of Barcelonn. Pop. 4875.

BADEN, or BAADE, formerly a margraviate, in the circle of Suabia, stretching along the E. bank of the Rhine. It was divided into Upper and Lower, or Baden-Baden and Baden-Durlach, from the names of the chief towns of the two divisions. Under Napoleon Buonaparte's formation of the Rhenish confederacy in 1806, Baden was constituted a grand duchy in 1809; it was divided into the ten following circles, viz. the Lake, Danube, Weisen, Treisam, Kinzig, Murg, Pfalz, and Enz, Neckar, Odenwald, and Main and Tauber, being names of so many rivers intersecting the territory, and the seat of government, established at Carlsruhe, about two miles from Durlach. The whole territory contains about 5600 square miles, and a population of about 1,263,100. That portion of the territory bordering on the Rhine, including the old margraviate, is exceedingly fruitful, and contains about 180,000 inhabitants. The forests yield abundance of materials for building and fuel. See Appendix.

BADEN, the capital of Upper Baden, with a castle on the top of a hill, where the prince often resides. It is remarkable for its hot baths, and is seated between the Murg and the Rhine, 40 miles W. of Stuttgard, and 20 S. of Carlsruhe. It is one of the most beautiful, as well as most frequented, of the German watering-places.

BADEN, a town in Switzerland, in Argau, capital of the county of the same name. Near it are some warm baths, mentioned by the ancients under the names of Aquæ and Thermæ Helvetiæ. It is seated on the Limmat, 10 miles N. W. of Zurich. Long. 8. 24. E. lat. 47. 26. N.

BADEN, a town of Austria, famous for its numerous hot baths; seated on the Suechat, 15 miles S. S. W. of Vienna. Also of a village in the Valais, Switzerland, with a hot bath of a sufficient degree of heat to boil an egg.

BADENWILER, a town of the grand duchy of Baden, in the circle of Weisen, much frequented for its hot baths, seated near the Rhine, 5 miles S. S. W. of Sulzburg.

BADRINATH, a town in Kumaon, North Hindostan, elevated 10,000 feet, and celebrated for its temple, visited by 50,000 pilgrims annually.

BÆZA, or BAÇA, a town in Spain, in Andalusia, seated near the source of the Guadalquivir. It was once the residence of a Moorish king, and was since a bishop's see, and seat of a university, but is now deemed of little importance, although its population is still considerable. It lies four leagues E. of the great post road from Madrid to Cadiz by Cordova, and about 10 N. of Jaen.

BAFFA, a seaport town at the W. end of the Isle of Cyprus, with a fort, near the ancient Paphos, of which considerable ruins remain, particularly some broken columns, which probably belonged to the temple of Venus. Long. 32. 30. E. lat. 34. 50. N.

BAFFIN'S BAY, dividing Greenland from the eastern shores of North America—the largest gulf that has yet been explored; it was discovered by William Baffin, in 1616, but his testimony was disbelieved, till 1818, when Captain Parry circumnavigated it, and established his veracity. In 1819, Parry entered Lancaster Sound, and discovered the range of islands now known by his name; and several expeditions have followed in this direction, to ascertain the N. W. passage to the Pacific, which was accomplished in 1855 by Sir R. McClure. The N. extremity of the Bay, or Ross Bay, is in lat. 77. 45. N. The centre of it is occupied by impenetrable ice, leaving in the summer a channel round the shores, which abounded with whales and sea calves, but which have now in a great measure deserted them.

BAFRA, a town of Turkey, in Asia, on the Kizil Erinak, 3 miles from the Black Sea.

BAGDAD, a celebrated city of Asiatic Turkey, the capital of a pachalik of the same name, or, as it is now more commonly called, Irak Arabi; which see. Bagdad is finely seated on both sides, but chiefly on the E. bank, of the noble river Tigris, over which there is a bridge of boats. It was the capital of the Saracen empire, till taken by the Turks in the 13th century; since which it has often been an object of contention between the Turks and Persians, until it was taken the last time by the Turks in 1631. It still continues to be a place of considerable resort for all the commodities of Natolia, Syria, Persia, and India; but has lost much of its ancient splendour, and is not so opulent as when in the possession of the Persians. The tomb of the Jewish prophet Ezekiel is still shown here. It has several manufactories of silk, cotton, wool, and leather, and has a cannon foundry. The city is surrounded by a wall about five miles in circumference, and contains some commodious houses, but its general character is mean and dirty. Its markets are abundantly supplied with all kinds of provisions; but the great heat of its climate renders it uncomfortable in the summer season. It is about 50 miles N. of the site of the ancient Babylon, 250 N. of Bassora, and 8 deg. due E. of Damascus. Lat. 33. 20. N. and 44. 46. E. long. Pop. estimated at from 60,000 to 90,000, principally Arabs and Turks.

BAGLANA, a country of the Deccan of Hindostan, bounded on the N. by Guzerat, E. by Candeish and Dowlatabad, S. by Visiampur, and W. by the ocean. It is exceedingly mountainous, but fertile in many places.

BAGNALUCA, or BANALUKA, a town of European Turkey, in the N. W. corner of Bosnia, on the border of Croatia, 55 miles N. W. of Serai.

BAGNARA, a seaport of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore. Here are several high waterfalls; and among the rocks are the ruins of the former town, in which 3017 persons perished by an earthquake in 1783. It is situate near the strait of Messina, 15 miles N. N. E. of Reggio. Pop. about 5000.

BAGNAREA, an episcopal town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, 5 miles S. of Orvieto. Pop. 3500.

BAGNERS, a town of France, in the department of Upper Pyrenees, famous for its baths and mineral waters; seated on the river Adour, 10 miles S. of Turbes. Pop. 8108.

BAGNOLES, a town of France, in the department of Gard, near the river Cese, 8 miles S. of Pont St. Esprit. It has manufactures of silk.

BAGSHOT, a village in Surrey, 12 miles N. by E. of Farnham. It is surrounded by an extensive heath, bordered on the W. by Windsor park. Since 1800, a considerable portion has been enclosed and brought under cultivation.

BAHAMAS ISLANDS, a group of islands forming part of the British West Indies, extending from the long. of 79. W. in the lat. of 28. in a S. E. direction, to the long. of 70. in the lat. of 21. N. The northern part lies contiguous to the coast of Florida, and the southern contiguous to the N. end of Hayti.

The Bahama Banks and Islands are among the most wonderful features of the physical geography of the western world. These small oblong bodies of land, lying upon the extensive flats forming the banks, which rise almost perpendicularly from the unfathomable depths of the ocean, seem to have been formed, if appearances may be trusted, from an accumulation of shells, or small calcareous grains of sand. Without the line of their banks the water becomes immediately unfathomable; within it the bottom is either of a beautiful white sand, or chequered with rocks covered with sea weed. The principal islands lie on the Great and Little Bahama Banks, which are separated by the Providence channels. On the Little Bank lie the Abaco, Great Bahama Islands, &c., and on the Great Bank, which is of an irregular figure, are New Providence, Andros, Eleuthera, Exuma, Juma or Long, the Pimentos, and the Bernine Islands, besides very numerous inferior islets. Off the banks, and to the eastward of the principal islands, are S. Salvador, Watlings, Run, Conception, Attwood, Crooked Inguinas, Cazeos, and Turks Islands, all of which are low, flat, and woody. The principal commerce. Products are salt cotton, and pimento, and recently pine apples. The town of Nassau, in New Providence, is the capital and seat of government. The area of the islands collectively is estimated at 5424 square miles. In 1832 the total population was 18,505. In 1842 the numbers were, males 12,676, females 12,621, total 25,297. The islands are divided into 10 parishes, and there is one Presbyterian church, also a Court of Chancery, with five inferior courts, &c. The climate is temperate and healthy.

The Bahama Islands have the celebrity of being the first land of America discovered by Columbus. The first land made was Watlings Island, but the first seen was Guanahani, now Cat Island, or S. Salvador. The mild and peaceable, but unfortunate inhabitants, soon became utterly extinct under their conquerors, and these islands remained long without inhabitants till settled by the English in 1629. These were expelled in 1641 by the Spanish, and again colonized by them in 1666, and were again expelled by the French, and these by the Spaniards in 1703, after which they became a regular nest of pirates till they were extirpated by the British in 1718. They were ceded to Spain in 1783, but restored to Britain at the conclusion of the war, and have since remained under our government. The various particulars of the group will be found under the separate heads.

BAHAMA, GREAT, ISLAND, from which the name of the group is derived, on the S. side of the Little Bahama Bank, is commercially unimportant. Area about 600 square miles. Pop., with the Berry Islands, in 1842, 1020.

BAHAR, an interior province of Hindostan, W. of Bengal; bounded on the N. by Nepal, W. by Oude and Allahabad, and S. by Bezar and Orissa. It is intersected by the Ganges from W. to E., which receives several tributary streams in its course through the province, the most considerable of which are, the Coosey, from the N., and the Soame from the S. It is an exceedingly fertile district; its rice is the finest of all Hindostan; sugar, silk, indigo, cotton, and saltpetre, are produced in great abundance. Patna, on the S. bank of the Ganges, is the chief town.

The town of Bahar, formerly the capital, is about 35 miles S. E. of Patna. The whole province is subject to the English. Pop. 8,117,700.

BAHIA, one of the provinces of Brazil, lying S. of Pernambuco, and extending from the 11th to nearly the 16th deg. of S. lat. and W. from the Atlantic Ocean in the long. of 40., to a ridge of mountains in 44., which bound it on the W. Bahia contains a surface of 54,649 square miles, and is the most extensively cultivated district of all Brazil; sugar, coffee, cotton, and tobacco, are all produced in great abundance, and the culture is progressively extending. The forests abound in a variety of wood, and are so dense as to be almost impenetrable. Pop. 650,000. The chief town of the same name, or, as it is sometimes called St. Salvador, is situate in lat. 12. 56. S. and 38. 29. W. long. on the E. bank of a noble bay, called the Bay of All Saints, which runs up from S. to N. about 40 miles, being about 8 miles wide at its mouth. Next to Rio Janeiro, Bahia is the most important town of the Brazils, and in point of commerce is the greatest. The houses are in general well built, mostly of stone, and it has several churches and convents of considerable magnitude. Pop. about 180,000.

BAHLINGEN, a town of Wurtemberg, situate near the source of the Teyah, a branch of the Neckar River, about 20 miles S. W. of Hohengollern. Pop. 3000.

BAHR EL AHAD. See ABIAD.

BAHR EL AZREK. See AZREK.

BAHRAICHI, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Oude, 62 miles N. N. W. of Fyzabad, and 65 N. E. of Lucknow. Long. 81. 56. E. lat. 27. 30. N.

BAHRENBURG, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Hoya, on the river Suhlingen, 20 miles W. of Nieburg.

BAHREIN, a town of Arabia, situate on an island 25 miles long, in the Gulf of Persia. It gives name not only to the island on which it is built, but also to a cluster of them, celebrated for the pearl fishery; and likewise to a province extending along the W. coast of the gulf. The town is fortified, and belonged once to the Portuguese, but now belongs to Busheer. It stands on the W. side of the island, 70 miles N. E. of Lasha. Long. 49. 5. E. lat. 26. 20. N.

BAIJE, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, formerly famous for its hot baths and elegant palaces, of which some ruins remain. It is seated on the Bay of Naples, 12 miles W. of Naples.

BAIBORET, a town of Asiatic Turkey, pa-ehalic of Erzeroum. It is a straggling, ill-built town, with an ancient castle. It is defended, not by walls, but by strong wooden towers, which are moveable, and can be taken to pieces, or transported whole on wheels, to any place where they may be needed. Pop. 3000.

BAIKAL, a lake of Siberia, in the province of Irkutsk, 350 miles in length, but its greatest breadth, not above 40, between the lat. of 52. and 55. N. and 104. to 109. E. long. The water is fresh, and the Russians speak of it with reverence, calling it the Holy Sea. There are many seals in it of a blackish colour, and abundance of fish; also several islands; and that of Olchon, the largest, has sulphureous springs, and naphtha sometimes floats on its surface. It receives the Selenga from the S., and its outlet is the Angara, which flows N. into the Yenisei.

BAILLEUL, a town of France, in the department of Nord, 9 miles S. W. of Ypres. It is a manufacturing town. Pop. about 9900. There are several other towns of the same name, in different parts of France.

BAILUG, a seaport of Abyssinia, and chief town in the country of Damcali. It stands on a spacious bay of the Red Sea, 340 miles E. by N. of Gondar. Long. 42. 40. E. lat. 13. 3. N.

BAIN, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine, 16 miles S. of Rennes. Pop. 3515.

BAKTSHISHISERAL, a town of Russia, 60 miles N. of Caffa, in the Crimea. It is an irregularly built place. Pop. 9500.

BAKU, or BADKU, a seaport town of the Russian dominions, in the province of Daghestan, the most commodious haven of the Caspian Sea, on the W. coast of which it is situate. The vicinity produces much rock salt, sulphur, and naphtha, and it is famous for saffron. Baku is a fortress, surrounded by high brick walls, 300 miles S. of Astracan. Long. 51. 10. E. lat. 40. 22. N.

BALA, a corporate town of Wales, in Merionethshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Lake of Bala, or Pemblemere, which is 3 miles long and 1 broad, and abounds with a fish called guinard, resembling a salmon in shape, and tasting like a trout. The river Dee issues from this lake. It has the remains of three Roman camps, which seem to have been used as exploratory stations, before the Ordovices were totally subdued. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in knit woollen stockings. It is 40 miles S. E. of Caernarvon, and 84 N. W. of London.

BALACHEO, a town of European Russia, situate on a branch of the Don, 90 miles W. of Saratov.

BALACHINA, a town of Russia, situate near the Volga, 40 miles W. N. W. of Niznei Novogorod.

BALAGUER, a fortified town of Spain, in Catalonia, on the river Segra, at the foot of a craggy rock, 75 miles W. N. W. of Barcelona. Pop. 4000.

BALAGANSKOI, a town in the province of Irkutsk, Siberia, about 30 miles N. of the city of Irkutsk.

BALAGHAUT, a district in Central India, presidency of Madras, ceded to the British in 1800. Capital, Ahmednagar.

BALAKLAVA, an excellent harbour in the S. W. part of the Crimea, the ancient Port of Symbols. It was not open to commerce under the Russian dominion, but during the siege of Sebastopol, in 1854-5, it was made the entrepôt of the British army, and a railway was constructed from its head to the camp. It is a narrow basin, nearly a mile in length, between steep rocks.

BALAMBANGAN, a small but very fruitful island, off the N. end of Borneo.

BALAPURA, DODA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, surrounded by a mud wall and hedge, and has a strong mud fort, with a palace. Here are manufactures of cloth and sugar. It is 22 miles N. by W. of Bangalore, and 57 S. E. of Sera.

BALARUC, a town of France, in the department of Herault, famous for its baths. It is 12 miles from Montpellier.

BALASORE, a seaport of Hindostan, in Orissa; it was a place of considerable trade, which has, however, much fallen off; rice to Calcutta is its chief export. It is situate on the Gongahar, 20 miles from its mouth, in the Bay of Bengal, and 124 S. W. of Calcutta. Pop. 10,000. Long. 86. 46. E. lat. 21. 26. N.

BALATON, a lake in the S. part of Lower Hungary, 40 miles in length, and 1 to 4 broad. The N. end is about 5 miles from Statt-Weisenburg, and 36 more from the Danube.

BALBASTRO. See BARNASTRO.

BALBEC, or BALBEG, the ancient Heliopolis, a town of Syria, at the foot of Mount Libanus, near the N. E. extremity of the fertile valley of Bocat. On the E. side are magnificent ruins, particularly those of the temple dedicated to the sun. The town was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1759, and is now a poor place, 37 miles N.N.W. of Damascus.

BALBRIGGAN, a town in Ireland, county of Dublin, 16 miles N. E. of Dublin. The late chief baron Hamilton built a pier here, at an expense of £15,000; he also introduced the cotton manufacture, and from this the town dates its rise to a seat of manufacture, and a considerable seaport. Muslin embroidery is carried on to a considerable extent, and also the stocking manufacture. The adjacent country, which is very fertile, produces a good supply of corn. There is a lighthouse on the pier-head. The appearance of the town indicates both comfort and industry, and presents a pleasant contrast to most Irish towns. It is passed by the Dublin & Drogheda Rail.

BALD EAGLE MOUNTAIN, in Pennsylvania, situate on the confines of Huntingdon, and centre counties. The Bald Eagle Valley, on the E. side, has a place where the streams are absorbed, and run several miles under ground.

BALDOCK, a town in Hertfordshire, with a market on Thursday; seated among the hills, 9 miles W.S.W. of Royston, and 37 N.N.W. of London. It was originally built by the knights templars, in the 12th century, on the site of the Roman way, called the Ikeneild-street.

BALEARIC ISLES, five islands in the Mediterranean, forming part of the province of Arragon; they are named Majorca, Minorca, Ivica, Formentera, and Cabrera, which see.

BALFRUSH, a town of Persia, in Mazanderan, 12 miles from the S. shore of the Caspian Sea.

BALGA, a town of Prussia, on the Frisch Huff, 24 miles S.W. of Konigsberg.

BALI, or BALLY, an island, 75 miles long, and 45 broad, at the E. end of the isle of Java, from which it is separated by a channel called the Strait of Bali. It is populous, abounds in rice and fruits, and furnishes slaves and cotton yarn to the Chinese. Long. 115. E. lat. 8. 30. S.

BALIZE. See BELIZE.

BALKAN, or EMINEH DAGH, a chain of mountains in European Turkey, forming the N. boundary of Roumelia and Bulgaria, and terminates at the Black Sea.

BALKH, a province of Central Asia, now subject to the khanat of Bokhara; area, 30,000 square miles. Pop. about 1,000,000. The principal city of the same name is situate on the Dewash, a branch of the Oxus or Amu river, and is a place of great antiquity, once the capital of Persia, and the residence of Cyrus. The ruins occupy a circuit of 20 miles, and they have become, like those of Babylon, an almost inexhaustible mine of bricks for the surrounding country. The present town is surrounded by a mud wall, and contains three colleges, but they are empty and decaying. The country around is fertile and well cultivated, and containing, it is said, 360 villages, and watered by eighteen canals. Population of Balkh, under 2000. It is about 250 miles south-east of Bokhara, in 36. 48. N. lat. and 67. 20. W. long.

BALL, or BALLAUGH, a parish and village in county Mayo, Ireland, 8 miles E. S. E. of Castlebar. Though much spoken of by ancient chroniclers, it is now a collection of poor houses, and is noted only for its round tower, and the ruins of an ancient church, of materials and construction similar to those of the tower.

BALLANTRAE, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, near the mouth of the Stinchar, 24 miles S. S. W. of Ayr.

BALLEEN, a parish in the barony of Galway, county Kilkenny, Ireland, 2 miles N. W. of Freshford. The castle of Balleen, now an in-posing ruin, standing on a lofty hill, was built in 1455, by the fifth Earl of Ormonde, the favourite of Henry VI. It was taken and dismantled by the soldiers of Cromwell.

BALLENSTADT, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Anhalt. It is gloomy and ill-built. Pop. 2000.

BALLIBAY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Monaghan, 76 miles from Dublin.

BALLIENOROUGH, a parish and town in the county of Cavan, Ireland.

BALLIMONEY, a town of Ireland, county of Antrim, 150 miles from Dublin. Linen markets are held here.

BALLINA, a market and seaport town, county Mayo, Ireland, 29 miles W. S. W. of Sligo; on the river Moy. Two bridges connect it with Ardnaree, and with which it may be said to make one town. The Moy is navigable to within a mile of the town, and thus it carries on a considerable maritime commerce. In 1793, the French effected a landing, and took Ballina, hoping to excite rebellion.

BALLIGNINI, or BANGENE, an island of the Sooloo Sea, in the Asiatic Archipelago. It is the resort of a race of pirates, who have committed vast depredations in the neighbourhood, and are, like the Illanons, supposed to be under the dominion of Mindanao; lat. 6. 5. N., long. 120. 40. E.

BALLINAKILL, a town of Ireland, Queen's County, 50 miles from Dublin. It was once a busy town, with a good trade in grain, and some small woollen-factories; but now it has sadly declined; its woollen manufacture is nearly extinct, and its markets destroyed by a new market at Abbeyleix. It was once a parliamentary borough, but has been disfranchised.

BALLINASLOE, a town chiefly in the parish of Killoony, county of Galway, but extends into the parish of Creagh, in the county of Roscommon, Ireland. It is distinguished for its great annual sheep fair the first week in October, when about 100,000 sheep and 10,000 head of horned cattle are brought to market. It is 12 miles W. of Athlone, and 72 W. of Dublin. It is sometimes called Dunloc.

BALLINCOLLIG, a post-town, county Cork, Ireland, 5 miles W. S. W. of Cork. The adjacent country is rich, and well cultivated; the town itself is very neat, and pleasantly built. It has a large gunpowder manufactory, the only one in the south. To the S. W. of the town is Ballincollig castle; it was built in the reign of Edward III., and was garrisoned by Cromwell in the wars of the Commonwealth, and by James II. in the war of the Revolution.

BALLINGARRY, a parish and town in the county of Limerick, Ireland.

BALLINROBE, a town of Ireland, county of Mayo, 147 miles from Dublin. It was a military station, but it is now deserted by the arts, both of peace and war.

BALLINTAY, a parish and village in county Antrim, Ireland, 44 miles N. N. W. of Belfast. Basalt is extensively quarried in the adjacent precipitous hill, Croaghmore. Numerous very extraordinary antiquities have been found here, such as hatchets of stone, brass vases, bracelets, and urns filled with the ashes of the dead; a gold coin also of Valentinian, in good preservation, was discovered a few years since.

BALLON, a town of France, 9 miles from Rochelle. Pop. 2500.

BALLSTON, a town of Saratoga county, state of New York, 23 miles N. W. of Albany. Pop. 2047.

BALLSTON SPA, a mineral spring in the adjoining township of Milton, 3 miles N. of the town of Ballston. It was a celebrated resort of valetudinarians and of fashion in North America, and is connected by railroad with Troy, Schenectady, and Saratoga.

BALLY, in Irish, signifies town; there are upwards of 150 parishes, towns, and villages in Ireland beginning with Bally.

BALLYCASTLE, a maritime town of Ireland, N. coast of co. Antrim, on a bay of the same name, 42 m. N. by W. of Belfast. In 1770, large grants were made for working the coal found in the neighbourhood, but these collieries have since fallen into disuse; it was once also a place of considerable business, having in it a brewery, glass-house, and salt-works, all of which have declined since the stoppage of the mines. The only trade it has now is a small manufacture of linen by some of the cottagers; it has also an inconsiderable salmon fishery. Upwards of £150,000 were expended in the erection of a pier, but the harbour has since filled with sand, and so the trade is almost extinguished. Pop. 1683.

BALLYMENA, an inland town of Ireland, county Antrim, 23 miles N. N. W. of Belfast, or the Braid, an affluent of the Maine, over which there is a stone bridge. Pop. 4063. The town has a tolerably good appearance, with extensive and good schools; it owes its prosperity chiefly to the linen trade, which is carried on to a very considerable extent; it has also a distillery, and a good trade in malt. Its general aspect, both externally and internally, is much the same as most of the towns in this part of Ireland.

BALLYMONEY, an inland town of Ireland, county Antrim, 8 miles S. E. of Coleraine. It is irregularly built on an eminence, 3 miles E. of the river Bann. It has a good trade in coarse and fine linens, and in corn, butter, and provisions; also a distillery, malting-houses, and flax and flour mills. It is on the coach road from Belfast to Londonderry. Pop. 2222.

BALLYSHANNON, a maritime town of Ireland, county Donegal, near the mouth of the river Erne, 108 miles N. W. of Dublin. There is a bridge of 14 arches over the river, connecting the two divisions of the town; in the vicinity is a magnificent cascade made by the Erne, 150 yards wide, falling over a ridge of rocks 16 feet high, with a noise audible for miles. The natural impediments of the harbour prevent this town, apparently so advantageously situated, from rising into much commercial importance. Its chief trade is therefore retail; it has a distillery, malt-houses, and a brewery; the salmon and eel fishery is also extensive and valuable. The town is built on a hill, and consists of three very steep streets, and a poor suburb, an artillery barrack adjoins it.

BALMERINO, a town of Scotland, in Fife-shire, which has a trade in corn and salmon. The ruins of its once magnificent abbey, founded in 1229, are much admired. It is seated on the Frith of Tay, opposite Dundee, 10 miles N. W. of St. Andrew's.

BALTIC, an inland sea, in the N. W. of Europe, between the coasts of Sweden, Russia, Courland, Prussia, Germany, and Denmark, extending from the 54th to the 60th degree of N. lat., the Gulf of Bothnia running up to the lat. of 66. and lying between the 16th and 22nd degree of W. long: the Gulf of Livonia extending 2 degrees further W., and that of Finland as far as 30. Its surface is estimated at 120,000 square miles; it contains a great number of islands, the principal of which are Åland, Dago, Oesel, Gothland, Oeland, Bornholm, Rugen, and Laland; and the islands of Zealand and Funen separate it from the Cattegat, by which it communicates with the ocean. There are three navigable channels into the Baltic from the sea called the Cattegat, which communicates with the German Ocean: 1st. which is the most northerly and most frequented, is called the Sound, between the coast of Sweden N. and the coast of the Isle of Zealand S. This passage is about 4 miles across, and is navigated by 8000 to 9000 sail of vessels annually, which pay a trifling tax to the Danish government, for the maintenance of the light-houses on the coasts of the several channels. The middle channel, between the S. side of the Isle of Zealand and the Isles of Funen and Laland, is called the Great Belt; and the most southerly, between the Isles of Funen and Laland, and the coast of Jutland, the Little Belt; but the navigation of both is circuitous and intricate compared with the Sound, and they are only availed of under very particular circumstances. There is little or no tide within the Baltic, and the water is brackish, and, as such, the channels and harbours are generally frozen up three or four months in the winter. Amber is found on the coast of Prussia.

BALTIMORE, a maritime city of the state of Maryland, North America. It is finely located, at the head of an inlet called Petapsco River, on the W. side of Chesapeake Bay, in lat. 39. 22. N. and long. 76. 36. W. A stream called Jones's Falls divides the city into two parts, the town and Fell's Point, connected by bridges. Baltimore is the centre of an extensive commerce, and has risen into importance more rapidly than any other place in the Union. It is one of the greatest flour and tobacco markets in the world; it exports also hemp, flax, Indian corn, and has considerable cotton manufactories. It engrosses altogether half the trade of Maryland, and is the third city in population, and the fifth in commerce of the United States. In 1765 the spot was a dreary swamp, and in 1820 contained a population of 62,629, about 12,000 of whom were blacks, possessing 68,674 tons of shipping. Pop. in 1840, 102,313. The houses are in general well built, principally of brick; it has a University, a Roman Catholic college, with a fine library, and several other public buildings. The Washington column is the finest in the United States. The harbour is entered by a narrow strait, exceedingly well defended by a fort. During the war of 1813-14, the English made an unsuccessful attempt to possess Baltimore. There is a railway, 97 miles long, to Philadelphia. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad extends 160 miles to Cumberland, and has a branch, 38 miles, to Washington.

BALTIMORE, a maritime town of Ireland, county Cork, on a bay of the same name, 46 miles W. S. W. of Cork. In appearance and accommodation it is a mere village, but it is an incorporated town, and a port; the houses are built round the old castle, and have lately been increasing in number and respectability. It has but little trade, but the fisheries are carried on to some extent. Pop. 459.

BALTINGLASS, a town and parish of Ireland, in the county of Wicklow. It has some manufactures of linen and woollen, and is seated on the Slaney, 34 miles S. W. of Dublin. Pop. 1670.

BALOOCHISTAN. See BELOOCHISTAN.

BAMBA, a town of the kingdom of Congo, in a rich province of the same name. It carries on a traffic in slaves, and is seated on the Loze, 160 miles S. W. of St. Salvador. Long. 13. 45. E. lat. 7. 2. S.

BAMBARRA, a kingdom of Negroland, which lies to the S. W. of that of Timbuctoo. The cultivation of corn is here carried on to a great extent; and the inhabitants are hospitable to strangers. Sego is the capital. It is intersected from west to east by the Niger.

BAMBERO, the territory of, formerly an imperial bishopric, but made over to Bavaria in the Buonapartean territorial arrangements in 1803, and is now called the circle of the Maine. It is intersected by the lines of 50. N. lat. and the 11th of E. long., containing a surface of about 1430 square miles, several towns and villages. The chief town, of the same name, is situate in the centre of the territory, on the E. bank of the Rednitz river, a little above its conflux with the Maine. It is the seat of a university, and the cathedral and episcopal palace are stately edifices. Pop. 21,000.

BAMBOROUGH, a village in Northumberland, on the sea coast, 14 miles N. of Alnwick. It was once a borough, and gave name to a tract called Bamboroughshire. It has a castle, on a rock, inaccessible on all sides, except the south, said to have been built by king Ida, about 560.

BAMNOUR, a kingdom of Africa, between the rivers Faleme and Senegal. It is said to be very populous, and on the borders of the rivers fertile, but in other parts sandy and barren. The most remarkable animals are a species of white apes, which they will not allow to be sent out of the country, white foxes, and the giraffe, or cameopard, an animal of extraordinary swiftness. The mines of gold are said to be extremely rich and extensive, but the climate and the people seem to preclude the working of them by Europeans. The capital is of the same name. Long. 9. 30. W. lat. 13. 30. N.

BAMIAN, a city of Cabul, in Afghanistan. Here are a great number of apartments and recesses cut out of a mountain, some of which, from their ornamental work and extraordinary dimensions, are supposed to have been temples. It is seated near a river of the same name. 170 miles S. S. E. of Balk, and 100 W. of Cabul. Long. 66. 10. E. lat. 34. 30. N.

BANCOUT, or FORT VICTORIA, a town and fortress of Hindostan, on the coast of the Concan, with a good harbour, and a trade in salt. It was taken by the British in 1755; and is 66 miles S. of Bombay. Long. 72. 48. E. lat. 18. 5. N.

BANDA, a town of North Hindostan, province of Allahabad, a prosperous town, the seat of an excellent cotton manufacture.

BANDA, the chief of the Banda, or Nutmeg Islands, in the Indian Ocean. The group comprises this isle, called also Lantor, and six or seven others. The nutmeg, covered with mace, grows principally on these islands; and they have been subject to the Dutch ever since 1609, when they expelled both the English and natives. They are all very small, the largest being only 20 miles in circumference, and are subject to earthquakes. Banda was taken by the English in 1796, and restored in 1802, retaken in 1810, and restored again at the peace in 1814. Lat. 4. 40. S. long. 129. 30. E.

BANDA-ORIENTAL. See URUGUAY.

BANDON, or BANDON-BRIDGE, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Cork. It is commonly a military station, and has manufactures of cotton, camlets, ticking, &c. It is situated on a river of the same name, 13 miles S. W. of Cork. It returns one member to parliament.

BANDORA, a town of Hindostan, on the S. side of the island of Salsette, which is separated from that of Bombay by a narrow channel. It is 6 miles N. of Bombay.

BANCA, a town of Syria, 20 miles S. of Latakia.

BANFF, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the ocean, S. E. by Aberdeenshire, and W. by Murrayshire. Its greatest length is 50 miles, and its extent along the coast 22, but the main breadth is not more than 16. The S. part is very mountainous, but the northern district is level and fertile. The principal rivers are the Deveron and Spey, which form a part of its E. and W. boundaries, and yield abundance of fine salmon. The Avon rises from a small lake at the S. extremity of the county, falling into the Spey, where that river divides the county from Murrayshire. The principal towns are Gamry, Cullen, Fochabers, Keith, Aberdour, and Kirkmichael. Some minerals are found in the county, and great quantities of hones and whetstones. It returns one member to parliament.

BANFF, the chief town of the preceding county, is situated at its N. W. extremity, on the E. bank of the Deveron, over which is a handsome bridge of seven arches. It has some manufactures of linen and cotton, but it is more a place of fashionable resort than either a manufacturing or commercial town. The town-hall was built in 1798, and is a handsome edifice. It is a royal burgh, governed by a provost, four bailies, and 12 councillors, 45 miles N. of Aberdeen, and 167 of Edinburgh, and returns one member to parliament.

BANGALORE, a city of Hindostan, in Mysore. It had a strong fort built by Hyder, deemed the bulwark of Mysore, toward Arcot: it was taken by the English in 1791, and restored the next year to Tippoo, who destroyed it; but since reverted to the English. The palace is built of mud, yet not without some degree of magnificence; and there are two extensive gardens made by the two sultans. The chief manufactures are silk and cotton cloths, muslins, leather, and oil. It is 60 miles N. E. of Seringapatam. Long. 77. 37. E. lat. 13. 0. N.

BANG-KOC. See BANGKOK.

BANGOR, a city of Wales, in Caernarvonshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is situate on the E. shore of the Menai Strait, on the rail road from London to Holyhead. It was once so considerable, that it was called Bangor the Great, and defended by a castle. The principal buildings are the cathedral and the bishop's palace. The see is of very great antiquity. The church was dedicated to St. Daniel, who was bishop about the year 516. It is 36 miles W. of St. Asaph, and 251 N. W. of London. It contributes in sending one member to parliament.

BANGOR, a town and populous parish in Ireland, in the county of Down, seated on the S. shore of the Bay of Carrickfergus, opposite the town of that name. Here are two cotton factories, and linen is made for the home consumption; the fisheries also are extensive; 12 miles E. N. E. of Belfast.

BANGOR, a town in the United States, state of Maine, with considerable trade, and a theological seminary. It is pleasantly and commandingly situated at the head of the navigation of the Penobscot river; the principal trade is in lumber, which is brought down the river in immense quantities. Pop. 827.

BANJALUKA. See BAGNALUKA.

BANNBRIDGE. See BANBRIDGE.

BANNOCKBURN, a village of Scotland, in the parish of St. Ninians, on the river Bannock, two miles S. of Stirling. It is noted for a battle between Edward II. and Robert Bruce, in 1314, in which the former was defeated. Here also James III., in 1487, was defeated by his subjects, wounded, and soon after murdered by a priest, taking his confession.

BANTAM, a town on the N. W. coast of Java, capital of a kingdom of the same name, with two forts. It is divided into two parts by a river. The English and Danes had factories here till 1682, when they were expelled by the Dutch. The chief produce of the country is pepper, of which vast quantities were formerly exported by the Dutch, who deposed the kings of the ancient race, and monopolized the entire traffic of the country. Bantam, once populous and flourishing, is now a poor place, its harbour being so choked up that it is inaccessible to vessels of burden; its commerce is transferred to Batavia. Long. 105. 26. E. lat. 6. 20. S. Pop. of the province, 230,000.

BANTRY, a capacious bay, at the S. W. extremity of Ireland, on the coast of Cork, capable of containing all the shipping of Europe; but somewhat exposed to the swells of the Atlantic Ocean. A French fleet endeavoured to land succours of arms in this bay to the adherents of James II. in 1689, and they made another unsuccessful attempt to effect a landing with a formidable force in 1796. It is 26 miles long, 3 broad, and 40 fathoms deep in the middle. There is a town named Bantry, at the head of the bay on the E. side, the spacious harbour of which is defended from the swells of the ocean by the island of Whiddy. Pop. 4276. It is 43 miles W. by S. of Cork, and 163 from Dublin.

BARBADOES, the most easterly of the Windward Islands, in the West Indies, 25 miles long and 15 broad; subject to Great Britain. The soil is beautifully undulated, and yields most of the productions common to the climate; but the chief object of culture is the sugar-cane, the produce of which is about 15,000 tons of sugar annually, which, with some ginger and arrow-root, form its main exports. The island suffered greatly by a storm, on the 10th of October, 1780, when upwards of 4000 persons perished by its violence; and, at the commencement of the 19th century, was considerably on the decline, the soil indicating symptoms of exhaustion, until the year 1813, when a very singular phenomenon occurred, which contributed essentially to its resuscitation: a vast dense cloud of matter from the eastward, composed of volcanic eruption, fell, and covered nearly the whole surface of the island, which tended greatly to its fertility. Barbadoes was constituted an ecclesiastical see over the whole of the Caribbee Islands in 1824. It is also the chief seat of the commissariat for the same, which occasions the internal commerce of the island to be considerable. It was first settled by the English in 1624, and is the most ancient colony of the British Empire.

Bridgetown is on the S. W. side of the island; it covers an extent of nearly 2 miles, and contains 20,000 inhabitants. It has a cathedral and some handsome houses, but is very irregular, which gives it a mean appearance. There are also a naval dockyard and a military garrison, &c. The island is very beautiful in some parts, and is divided into five districts and eleven parishes. Bridgetown, the chief town, is in lat. 13. 5. N. and 59. 43. W. long. Charles's, James's, and Speight's towns, are the other towns of the island. Pop. in 1832, 100,242; in 1847, 122,198.

BARBAKEEN, a village of Ceylon, on the W. coast, 35 miles S. of Colombo. It has a harbour for ship-boats, and a considerable manufacture of cordage and cables from the cocoa-tree.

BARBARY, or the BARBARY STATES, comprise the whole northern coast of North Africa, bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, from the Atlantic Ocean to Egypt; bounded, or rather intersected on the S. by the Atlas chain of mountains, and bounded by the deserts of Sahara, Tuarick, and Libya, extending in length from the long. of 10. W. to 25. E., and varying in breadth from 300 to 600 or 700 miles, between the lat. of 29. and 37. N., divided into the six following sovereignties, or states; viz. first, beginning with the west, Morocco, bordering wholly on the Atlantic Ocean, Fez, forming the north-west corner of the African continent, and Algier, Tunis, Tripoli, and Barca, all bordering on the Mediterranean. This extensive territory was known to the ancients by the names of Mauritania, Numidia, Africa Proper, and Libya, and at one period contended with Rome for the empire of the world; and although at the present day its inhabitants are amongst the most unsocial and illiterate of the communities of civilization, they were at one period as distinguished for their attainments in art, as in arms. The whole country abounds in local beauties, and possesses all the advantages of soil and climate which man need desire; the soil yields great crops of maize and corn, and all the choice fruits, such as lemons, oranges, the vine, olives, figs, almonds, and dates, are in great profusion; the mountains are rich in mineral substances, and all the domestic animals common to Europe abound over the whole country, and the horses are much esteemed for their fleetness and beauty. The lion, panther, and hyæna, and other ferocious animals, are numerous in the mountains, and frequently make inroads into the plains. Reptiles are also very numerous, and the boa constrictor, the head, and most ferocious of that species of animated nature, is common on the borders of the deserts. The external commerce of the country is limited, but will be more particularly adverted to when treating of the respective divisions. Mahometanism, in its utmost degree of personal indulgence and wantonness of power, prevails alike in all the states, and restrains all rational and social advancement.

BARBASTRO, a town of Spain, in Aragon, on the Vero. It is an ancient city, the see of a cathedral. Pop. about 7000, 46 miles from Zaragoza.

BARBUDA, one of the Leeward Islands, in the West Indies, 15 miles long and 8 broad. It has a good road for shipping, but the inhabitants (about 1500) are chiefly employed in raising corn and breeding cattle for the use of the neighbouring islands. It is 27 miles N. of Antigua. Long. 61. 50. W. lat. 17. 50. N.

BARBY, a town in the Prussian principality of Anhalt, circle of Upper Saxony, capital of a county of its name, with an ancient castle, and an academical college, founded by the United Brethren in 1754. It is seated on the Elbe, 15 miles S. E. of Magdeburg. Pop. 3100. Long. 12. 4. E. lat. 52. 2. N.

BARCA, one of the six Barbary states, the ancient Cyrenaica, on the south coast of the Mediterranean, between Tripoli and Egypt. The south part is a barren desert, inhabited by wandering Arabs. The north part along the coast is fertile and well peopled. It belonged to the Turks, and is governed by a sangiac, dependent on the pacha, who resides at Tripoli. Derna is the capital.

BARCELLOS, a town of Portugal, province of Entre Douro e Minho, famous for its fans. Pop. 3900.

BARCELONA, a city of Spain, capital of Catalonia, and a bishop's see, with a good harbour on the Mediterranean. It is of an oblong form, defended by a strong fort, called Montjuich, which stands on a rocky mountain, a mile west of the town. It has double walls on the north and east, and the sea on the south, with a mole for the security of ships. It is divided into the New and Old town, by a wall and a ditch; and the sea having retired considerably from the port-gates, a whole quarter of the town now stands on the sands that were once the bottom of the harbour. It has a fine university, an acquisition, a cathedral with two lofty towers, a palace for the viceroy, a large exchange, an extensive cannon foundry, an arsenal containing arms for several thousand men, and docks for the building of galleys. It has various manufactures, but is more particularly distinguished for those of fire-arms of all kinds, swords, cutlery, and soap; and there are several very extensive distilleries of brandy: its commerce is general. In 1705 it was taken by the Earl of Peterborough, after a siege of three weeks. In 1706, Philip V. invested it with a numerous army, but was obliged to raise the siege. In 1714 it was taken by the French and Spaniards, and a citadel built to keep it in awe. The French took this city by treachery in 1808. In 1823, it held out to the last in favour of the constitutionalists, and did not yield until all hope or expectation of successful resistance was obviously useless. It is 250 miles E. by N. of Madrid. Long. 2. 12. E. lat. 41. 23. N. Pop. of the city about 100,000, and the new town or suburb of Barcelonetta, 10,000 to 12,000 more.

BASIL, BASLE, or BÂLE, a canton of Switzerland, 24 miles long and 21 broad; bounded on the N. by Brisgau, E. by the Forest towns, S. by the canton of Soleure, and W. by the bishopric of Basil and France. It contains about 47,885, inhabitants, and is of the reformed religion. In the course of events which have convulsed Switzerland since 1831, the canton of Bâle has been divided into the half cantons of Bâle Ville and Bâle Campagne, each having only a half vote in the Diet, and these always being given in opposition to each other, its voice as a member of the United Republic is lost.

BASIL, a bishopric in the N. W. part of Switzerland; bounded on the E. by the canton of Basil, S. by that of Soleure, and W. and N. by France. The territory of Basil was divided into Basil city and Basil country, in 1831, in consequence of a successful insurrection. There is a considerable ribbon manufacture, which employs more than 15,000 persons.

BASIL, the capital of the canton of the same name, and the largest town in Switzerland, is situate at the N. extremity of the canton, on the frontiers of France on the W., and the duchy of Baden on the E. It is surrounded by thick walls, flanked by towers and bastions, and is divided into two parts by the Rhine, which communicate by a handsome bridge. The largest part is on the side of Switzerland, and the least on that of Germany. The larger has five gates, six suburbs, numerous streets and fountains, and is partly seated on a hill; the other stands on a plain, and has but two gates, with several streets and fountains. The principal church is an elegant Gothic building, but disfigured by rose-coloured paint spread over the whole edifice. Under a marble tomb in it is interred the great Erasmus, who died here in 1536. The town-house, and fine paintings in fresco, are much admired. The university, founded in 1459, has a fine library, and a rich cabinet of medals. The clocks here are always an hour too fast, because the town-clock went so on a day appointed to murder the magistrates, by which the conspiracy was disconcerted. Basil has several manufactures, particularly of papers, ribbons, and cottons; and it carries on an extensive trade. Three treaties of peace were concluded here in one year (1795) with the French republic; namely, by Prussia, Spain, and Hesse Cassel. The allies passed through this city, when they invaded France, in December, 1813. Basil is capable of containing 100,000 inhabitants; but has only 29,698, or with the canton, 77,583. BASILIPOTAMO, a river of European Turkey, in the Morea, which flows into the Gulf of Colocythia. It was called Eurotas by the ancients.

BASINGSTOKE, a corporate town in Hampshire, with a market on Wednesday. It has a great trade in corn and malt, a manufacture of druggets and shalloons, and a navigable canal to the river Wey, near its entrance into the Thames; and, being situate at the junction of a branch to Reading with the South Western Railway. It is 18 miles N.N.E. of Winchester, and 45 W. by S. of London.

The village of Old Basing, which is a township in the parish of Basingstoke, situate about two miles to the E., is distinguished for the determined stand which it made against the forces of Cromwell, by whom it was ultimately taken, when he put nearly the whole garrison to the sword, and razed the fortress, which was the residence of the Marquis of Winchester, to the ground.

BASKINGRIDGE, a village of the United States, in New Jersey, beautifully situated in a rich and healthful country. It had an academy, formerly celebrated, and is memorable in the revolution, for the capture of Gen. Lee by the British; 46 miles N. by E. of Trenton.

BASQUE PROVINCES, THE, of Spain, Las Provincias Vascongadas, consist of the three united Provinces of Alava, Vizcaya (or Bizcaya), and Guipuzcoa. Vizcaya, the largest, contains about 106 sq. leagues; Guipuzcoa, the smallest, only 52, but is the most densely peopled, having at the rate of 2000 inhab. to the sq. l. Alava, containing about 90 sq. leagues, lies between Guipuzcoa and Navarre. These provinces forming the mountainous triangle of the N. W. of the peninsula, are the Cantabria of the ancients, and, like our Wales, is the home of the remnant of the aboriginal inhabitants, whose pride, nobility of descent, and language they still retain, and also their poverty. Fishing on the sea-board, and rude agriculture in the inland districts, are the occupation of the inhabitants. They have many singular customs derived from paganism, and have but few objects of interest to travellers among them, and possess little taste for the amenities of life. See BISCAY.

BASQUES, a late territory of France, which included Lower Navarre, Labourd, and Soule, and now forms, with Bearn, the department of Lower Pyrenees. The inhabitants still retain the ancient Iberian dialect.

BASS, an insulated rock near the coast of Scotland, at the entrance of the Frith of Forth, between the towns of North Berwick and Dunbar. On the S. side it is almost conic, on the other it overhangs the sea in a tremendous manner. It is inaccessible on all sides, except the S. W., and there it is with difficulty a man can climb up by the help of a rope or ladder. In May and June it is quite covered with the nests, eggs, and young birds of the gannets and solan geese. The rock is one mile in circumference, and has a rabbit warren, and pasture for a few sheep. A ruinous castle, once the state prison of Scotland, stands at the edge of the precipice. The garrison, in 1694, surrendered to King William, and the fortifications were demolished.

Bass's STRAIT, a channel about 40 leagues wide, which separates Van Diemen's Land from the S. extremity of New S. Wales. It contains a chain of small islands that run N. and S. This strait was discovered, in 1798, by Surgeon Bass, in an open whale boat, and passed through by him and Lieutenant Flinders, in the Norfolk, in 1799.

BASSANO, a town of Austrian Italy, in Vicentino, on the E. bank of the river Brenta, in a country productive of excellent wine, corn, cattle, iron, cloth, &c. The French defeated the Austrians at this place in 1796. It is 18 miles N. of Vicenza. Pop. 12,000.

BASSEE, or LA BASSE, a town of France, in the department of Nord, formerly of great strength, but dismantled by Louis XIV. It is seated on the Deule, 18 miles S. W. of Lisle. Pop. 2485.

BASSEEN, a tn. of Hindostan, in the prov. of Aurungabad. It was taken by the English in 1780, but restored to the Mahrattas in 1783. It stands on the sea-coast, opposite the N. W. point of the island of Salsette, 20 miles N. of Bombay. Long. 72. 40. E. lat. 19. 20. N.

BASSENTHWAITE-WATER, a lake in Cumberland, 3 miles N. W. of Keswick. It is 4 miles long, bounded on one side by high hills, wooded in many places to their bases; on the other, by the fields and the skirts of Skiddaw. The river Derwent flows through its whole length. There is a village named Bassen-thwaite on the E. bank of the lake, containing 549 inhabitants.

BASSETTERRE, the capital of St. Christopher, W. Indies; built by the French, when this part of the island was in their possession, before it was ceded to the English, in 1713. It is situate on the S. E. end of the island, and is defended by three forts. Long. 63. 13. W. lat. 17. 10. N.

BASSETTERRE, the capital of Guadaloupe, W. Indies, on the S. W. part of the island, defended by a citadel and other fortifications. Long. 61. 59. W. lat. 15. 59. N.

BASSIEN, or PERSAÏM, a city of Burmah, capital of the province of Bassien. It is a trading place, situate on a river of the same name, which is the W. branch of the Irrawaddy, 110 miles S. W. of Pegu. Long. 94. 53. E. lat. 16. 22. N.

BASSORAH, or BASRA, a city and seaport of Asiatic Turkey, in Irac Arabi. It stands on the W. bank of the Euphrates, or Shat-ul Arab; navigable for ships of 500 tons burthen up to the town, about 65 miles above the entrance of the river into the Gulf of Persia. Bassorah appears to have been founded about the middle of the seventh century, and progressively advanced into importance until it became the most considerable trading town of all western Asia; and, previous to the route to India by the Cape of Good Hope, it was the medium through which a great portion of the commerce of Asia passed to Venice and Genoa, and from thence over western Europe. It was taken possession of by the Turks, in 1688, since which period it has continned to decline, having been alternately exposed to the irruptions of the Persians, Arabs, and Turks; and, since the commencement of the nineteenth century, when the tide of commerce began to set from the W. to the E., Smyrna has become what Bassorah was for so many centuries—the emporium of the greater portion of the commerce of that part of the world. Bassorah, however, still continues to be a place of considerable traffic, which is participated in, more or less, by most of the trading nations both of Europe and Asia. The city is surrounded by a wall of clay, said to be 6 miles in circumference, mounted with a great number of cannon; the streets are bad and narrow, and the houses, constructed of bricks, have a mean aspect. It is nominally under the dominion of Turkey, but governed by an Arab chieftain, with little deference to the Ottoman authority. The great desert of Arabia runs up nearly to the town; the immediate vicinity, however, is very fertile. A wall of several miles in extent has been constructed on the side of the desert, as a check on the predatory incursions of the Arabs, who frequently commit depredations under the very walls of the town. The population is estimated at about 60,000, among whom are a considerable number of Jews, Armenians, and Arabs, and natives of the more eastern parts of Asia. It is about 210 miles S. W. of Isbahan, in lat. 30. 30. N. and 47. 34. E. long.

BASTIA, a seaport of European Turkey, in Albania, opposite the island of Corfu, at the mouth of the Calamu. Long. 20. 20. E. lat. 39. 40. N.

BASTIA, a city on the N. E. coast of the island of Corsica, with a good harbour and a strong castle. It was taken by the English in 1794. It is 80 miles S. S. W. of Leghorn. Long. 9. 20. E. lat. 42. 38. N. Pop. about 13,000. It was considered the capital of the island, but Ajaccio is now usually called so.

BASTOGNE, a city of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, near the forest of Ardennes. It was fortified by the French, in 1688, and commonly known among them by the name of Paris in Ardennes. It is 23 miles N. N. W. of Luxemburg.

BASWAPATANNA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a fort and a celebrated mosque; 60 miles E. by N. of Nagura.

BATABANO, a town on the S. coast of Cuba; situate on the N. side of a large bay, opposite Pines Island, 55 miles S. S. W. of Havanah. Long. 82. 0. W. lat. 22. 20. N.

BATACOLE, tn. of Hindostan, on the coast of Canara. The country produces a great quantity of pepper. It is 10 miles N. of Barcelore.

BATACOLO, a small fortress on the E. side of Ceylon, built by the Dutch. It is of great importance, on account of the extreme fertility of the adjacent country, which, during a war, or times of scarcity in the district of Trincomalee, can supply the garrisons there with all kinds of provisions. It surrendered to the English in 1796; it is situate at the head of a deep bay, 54 miles S. S. E. of Trincomalee.

BATALHA, a tn. of Portugal, in Estremadura, celebrated for its rich monastery, founded, in 1386, by John I., who is interred here, with his queen Philippa. It is 8 miles S. S. W. of Leirida.

BATAVIA, the ancient name of an island in Holland; whence the Dutch are sometimes called Batavians.

BATAVIA, a city and seaport on the N. E. part of the island of Java, capital of all the Dutch settlements in the East Indies, finely situate on the bosom of a spacious bay. The fort is built of coral rock, brought from some of the adjoining islands, and has a fortification of brick. A part of the town wall is built of dense lava, from the mountains in the centre of Java. No stone, of any kind, is to be found for many miles beyond this city; but marble and granite are brought here from China. The harbour is excellent, and there are canals in the principal streets, planted on each side with trees, after the manner of the towns in Holland. The inhabitants are composed of natives from nearly all the countries and islands of Asia and the Indian Ocean, as well as of most of the chief trading parts of Europe and America, amongst whom the number of Chinese is considerable.

The city was first founded in 1619, and rose rapidly into importance, and during the eighteenth century it was deemed the finest European settlement in all Asia; and although considered unhealthy, from the influence of the heat of the climate on the mud and stagnant waters of the canals and streams by which it is intersected, it was vainly denominated by the Dutch, the "Queen of the East." The houses of two streets, forming the European part of the town, are handsome and commodious, and vie with, if they do not excel in capaciousness and convenience, those of the best towns in Holland; but the parts occupied by the Javanese, Chinese, and the other natives of the East, like most of the Asiatic towns, are crowded, mean, and dirty. Batavia was very sensibly affected by the war of 1793, and became almost deserted, until its capture, with the whole of the island of Java, by the English, in 1811, when it became again the centre of an extensive commerce. It was ceded back to the Dutch on the peace of 1814, who, having relaxed somewhat from their former system of proscription and monopoly in their commercial regulations, Batavia continues a flourishing and important place. The stadthouse is the principal edifice deserving of notice. The natives of the several nations and countries who compose the population, which amounts to about 65,000, have each their churches, mosques, and temples, but there are none that merit any particular notice. The nature of its commerce will be more fully elucidated under the head of Java. The observatory is in lat. 6.9. S. and 106. 52. E. long.

BATAVIA, the chief town of Genesee county, in the state of New York, 258 miles W. of Albany, on the direct road to Buffalo, at the E. end of Lake Erie. Pop. 4219. There was an Indian village in the township called Tonnewanta, or Tonawanda. The Tonawanda railroad, part of the great western chain from Albany, extends hence 32 miles to Rochester.

BATH, a city of England, in the E. corner of the county of Somerset, on the confines of Gloucester and Wilts; it is bounded on the N. by a range of hills, up the declivity of which buildings have been constructed in varied ornamental and tasteful styles of architecture, terraces, crecents, &c., of a beautiful white stone, dug on the spot. The origin of this city, which derived its celebrity from its hot springs, is involved in uncertainty and fable. According to Geoffry of Monmouth, the ancient Britons, by whom it was called Yr enncinttwymn, dated the discovery of the waters as far back as the time of Bladud, 870 years antecedent to the Christian era; be this as it may, their properties and virtues immediately attracted the enlightened attention of the Romans, on their arrival in that part of the country, 44 years B. C., by whom they were denominated Aque Solis, Waters of the Sun, and Fontes Calidi, the Fountains of Heat, and who manifested their appreciation of the waters by the erection of extensive baths, constructed with all possible regard to taste, luxury, and utility, and a temple dedicated to Minerva; and at the period of their finally withdrawing from the country, about the middle of the fifth century, the city extended upwards of two miles in length, surrounded by a wall, regularly fortified. The waters were equally appreciated by the Saxons, by whom the city was called Cuer Badon; but it obtained no additional distinction, until the commencement of the eighteenth century, about which period it became the resort alike of all the afflicted, the idle, the gay, and the dissipated, whose means enabled them to reach it. The general influx of visitors excited a spirit of exertion and enterprise among the inhabitants, to afford accommodations suitable to the rank and taste of the most affluent classes; and, for more than half a century, popularity and improvement in all that contributed to the adornment, as well as the comfort and convenience of the city, to those who visited it for the benefit of health, or for indulgence in gaiety and pleasure, kept pace with each other until it became justly celebrated as the most beautiful and agreeable abode in the British dominions. There are six public baths, and a magnificent hospital for the reception of those who come to partake of the waters, who would otherwise be excluded the benefit by the inadequacy of their means.

Bath, in conjunction with Wells, is an ecclesiastical see, and the cathedral, or abbey church, was first founded by king Osric, in 676. The present building, begun in 1465, and finished in 1606, is a beautiful specimen of Gothic architecture. There are ten other churches of the establishment, and several dissenting places of worship: a guildhall and the assembly rooms are among the other public buildings which adorn the city. The city is governed by a mayor, fourteen aldermen, and forty-two common councilmen, by whom are appointed a chamberlain, two bailiffs, and two constables annually. It returns two members two parliament, and is on the Great Western Railway.

The waters of Bath are peculiarly efficacious in cases of gout, paralytic, and bilious affections, and various other diseases, for which they are taken internally, as well as availed of in vapour, shower, and immersion, varying in heat from 93 to 117 degrees of Fahrenheit; and, until some revolution of nature shall dry up their source, or direct their subterranean current to other openings, Bath will doubtless retain a due share of appreciation; although, notwithstanding the peculiar charm of its natural local beauties and artificial attractions so capricious is fashion, that Cheltenham, Leamington, and other places, are dividing, and contending for the palm of popularity. Its markets are abundantly supplied with corn, flesh, fish, vegetables, fruits, &c. on Wednesdays and Saturdays. It is 13 miles S. by E. of Bristol, 19 E. by N. of Wells, and 106 W. of London.

BATH is also the name of several towns and villages in North America, which, like the Badens of continental Europe, derive their name from hot or medicinal waters.

BATH, an interior county of the state of Virginia, intersected by two ridges (running parallel with each other) of the Alleghany mountains, between which, and 183 miles W. N. W. of Richmond, are the hot springs which give name to the county. There is another spring a few miles north, called the Warm Spring; the north and south forks of the Jackson River run through the plain between the two ridges of mountains and the Cow Pasture River, east of the eastern ridge, all of which fall into James River, at the south end of the county. There is another hot spring in Berkeley county, Virginia, between the foot of the bluff of the Cacapon ridge of the Alleghany Mountains and the Potomac River; about 40 miles N. by W. of the city of Washington. Pop. 4300.

BATH, a town on the east bank of Hudson River, State of New York, immediately opposite Albany. It has a sulphur mineral spring.

BATH, the chief town of Stenben county, State of New York, situate on the east bank of the main branch of the Conhocton River; 283 miles W. by S. of Albany. Pop. 1400.

BATH, a well built and respectable town in the state of Maine, North America, situate on the west bank of the Kennebec River (which supplies abundance of fine salmon and other fish), a little below the junction of the Androscoggin, and a few miles above its conflux with the ocean. The river forms a capacious harbour for ships of any burthen, and ship-building constitutes the chief occupation of the inhabitants; the ships being principally employed on freight, between the southern states and Europe. Pop. in 1840, 5141. It is 39 miles N. E. of Portland.

BATHGATE, a town of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, 19 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh, on the high-road to Glasgow. Pop. 3593, principally employed in weaving. It is on the railway between Airdrie and Edinburgh.

BATHON, an interior town of Upper Hungary, in the county of Szabolts, about 30 miles N. W. of Debretzin.

BATHURST, an English settlement on the W. coast of North Africa, at the entrance of the river Gambia. It is built along the bank of the river in a fertile, but low and swampy spot; it has a large hospital. The chief trade is in gum-sceneal, bees'-wax, hides, ivory, gold, tortoise-shells, rice, cotton, &c. Pop. 2825, of whom only thirty-six are Europeans; the rest are freed Africans.

BATHURST, a settlement in N. S. Wales, recently been laid out for a town, but much more important for the immense gold deposits just found in the vicinity; 114 miles from Sidney. Pop. in 1856, 12,000.

BATINDA, the chief town of a fertile district of the same name, on the N. W. confines of Delhi, bordering on the desert of Moultan.

BATOA, a small island in the Indian Ocean, near the west side of Sumatra, on the equinoctial line, in long. 98. 0. E.

BATON ROUGE, a tn. of the United States, in Louisiana, on the east bank of the Mississippi, 120 miles above New Orleans. The E. and W. parishes, which lie on each side of the river, is the first land elevated above the overflow, on ascending the river. The productions are cotton, Indian corn, and some sugar. The town is mostly seated on a plain some 25 to 80 feet high above high water; the business portion is on one street along the river, at the foot of the bluff. The town contains several public buildings, among others, the Louisiana penitentiary, a fine brick building. Pop. in 1840, 2500.

BATOPILAS, a considerable town of the Andes, or Cordilleras of Mexico, in the independency of Durango.

BATROUM, a town at the mouth of a river of the same name, falling into the Black Sea, and forming the N. E. boundary of Armenia.

BATROUN, a town on the coast of Syria, pchalic of Tripoli; one of the best ports in the Maronite country. It exports silk, cotton, and potash; 11 miles S. of Tripoli.

BATTA, two towns on the west bank of the Danube, in Lower Hungary; one a few miles S. of Buda, and the other a few miles E. of Funfkirchen.

BATTALLAH, a town of Hindostan, about 60 miles E. by S. of Lahore, in the province of that name.

BATTAS, a country in the Island of Sumatra. The inhabitants are ruled by a number of rajahs; but they obey, or rather have a blind adoration for the king of Menongkaboo. They are more industrious than the Malays, and are exceedingly superstitious. Pop. estimated at 1,500,000.

BATECOLA, a town on the Malabar coast, about 100 miles N. of Mangalore.

BATTENBURG, a town of Holland, in Guelderland, with a castle on the north bank of the Meuse; 10 miles S. W. of Nimeguen.

BATTENBURGH, a town and castle of Germany, in Upper Hesse, seated on the Eder; 14 miles N. of Marburg.

BATTERSEA, a village in Surrey, on the south bank of the Thames, 4 miles W. S. W. of London. Here was the seat of the St. Johns, where the famous Lord Bolingbroke was born, and died. On the site of it now stands a distillery. The Southampton railway passes through the parish. Here is a timber bridge over the river to Chelsea. Population chiefly occupied in gardening and supplying the London markets with vegetables.

BATTLE, a town of Sussex, with a market on Thursday. Near this place, William, duke of Normandy, defeated Harold, king of England, in 1066, and in memory of this victory, he founded here an abbey, which, from its remains, appears to have been magnificent. This town is famous for a manufacture of gunpowder. It is 24 miles E. of Lewes, 6 N. of Hastings, and 56 S. E. of London.

BABELTHOUAP, an island of the Pacific Ocean, and the largest of the Pelew group. It is 24 miles long, and is well timbered, and produces yams, cocoa-nuts, and the usual tropical fruits. Lat. of E. end, 7. 41 N. long. 134. 55. E.

BAUCHERVILLE, a beautifully located village, on the W. bank of the river St. Lawrence; about 10 miles W. of Montreal.

BAUD, a town of France, department of Morbihan. Population, 4600: 15 miles from Pontioi.

BAUG, a town of Hindostan, province of Malwa, standing in a pleasant valley, on the road between Malwa and Gujerat, and containing about 2000 inhabitants. Iron ore is found in the vicinity, and is smelted in the town.

BAUGÉ, a town of France, department of Maine et Loire, on the river Couanon, over which is a fine new bridge. It is agreeably seated in a valley, but very irregularly built; it has a college, and manufactures of cloth and coarse linen. The English forces, under the Duke of Clarence, were totally defeated near here, and the Duke killed, in 1421. Pop. 3400.

BAULEAH, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal, on the left bank of the Ganges. It is one of the principal stations for collecting of silk, 22 miles N. E. of Moorsheadabad.

BAUMAN'S ISLANDS, three islands in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Bauman, a Dutchman, who accompanied Roggewein, in 1722. They are covered with fruit trees, and divers sorts of vegetables. The inhabitants are numerous, and armed with bows and arrows; but of a gentle and humane disposition, and friendly to strangers. The largest island is about 22 miles in circumference. Long. 170. 0. W. lat. 14. 0. S.

BAUME LES NONES, or BAUME LES DAMES, a town of France, in the department of Doubs. It has a nunnery, from which it received its appellation, and is seated on the Doubs; 15 miles N. E. of Besançon. Pop. 2519.

BAUSK, or BAUTKA, a town of Courland, on the frontiers of Poland, with a castle on a rock. It is seated on the Musza; 15 miles S. E. of Mittau.

BAUTZEN, or BUDISSEN, the capital of Upper Lusatia, with a citadel on a rock, called Ortenburg. The trade, arising from various manufactures, is considerable. It is famous for a great battle having been fought here on May 20, 1813, between the allied army under the emperor of Russia and the king of Prussia, and the French army commanded by Napoleon Buonaparte, in which the former were defeated. It stands on the river Spree; 30 miles E. by N. of Dresden. Long. 14. 30. E. lat. 51. 10. N.

BAUX, a town of France, in the department of Mouths of the Rhone, seated on a rock, at the top of which is a castle; 10 miles E. by N. of Arles.

BAVARIA, PALATINATE, DUCHY, ELECTORATE, CIRCLE, and KINGDOM OF. The former circle of Bavaria lies between the 47th and 50th deg. of N. lat., and the 11th and 14th of E. long.; is bounded on the N. E. by Bohemia, S. E. and S. by Austria and the Tyrol, S. W. by Suabia, and N. W. by Franconia; and comprises the palatinate and principalities of Salzbach and Neuberg, in the N.; the duchy, which constituted the greater portion of the circle, divided into Lower and Upper, the county of Werdenfels in the S. W.; the bishopric of Passau on the E.; the provostship of Berchtolsgraden, insulated in the archbishopric of Saltzburg, which formed the S. E. part of the circle, forming together an area of about 16,500 square miles, and containing a pop. of 1,300,000.

The Duchy of Bavaria, which formed about two-thirds of the circle, was part of the ancient Noricum, peopled from ancient Gaul, from which they were driven about 590 years B. C. It was constituted a duchy in the early part of the 10th century of the Christian era, under which title it continued uninterrupted until the reign of the emperor Ferdinand of Germany, who raised Bavaria into an electorate of the Germanic confederacy; but Maximilian Emanuel, grandson of the first elector, forfeited his possessions, by violating his allegiance, in entering into alliance with France against the emperor. He was, however, reinstated in his possessions in 1714, and the succeeding elector, Charles, introduced numerous salutary regulations into the social institutions of the state, under which it rose in prosperity and reputation, and continued to make advances in social improvement, and to retain its influence in the Germanic diet, until Napoleon Buonaparte interposed his power and influence, at the commencement of the 19th century, when the elector was again induced to withdraw from the Germanic confederacy, under the pledge of being invested with regal authority, and guaranteed in an accession of territory at the expence of Austria; hence the Kingdom of Bavaria, which was acknowledged by the emperor of Austria at the peace of Presburg, in 1805; the accessions of territory obtained with the regal title lay on the side of Franconia, Suabia, and the Tyrol. The disaster experienced by Napoleon at Moscow, in the winter of 1812, 1813, induced the new king to conclude a secret treaty with the confederate powers against his former patron, on condition of being guaranteed in the integrity of his newly-acquired dominions; and at the congress of Vienna, in 1818, the boundaries of the Bavarian kingdom were finally adjusted, when the territory was divided into eight circles. Since which, these circles have been reorganised into provinces, whose corresponding area and population are shown in the following table, viz.:-

Former Circles.	Present Provinces.	Area Sq. M.	Pop in 1838.	Chief Towns.
1. Isar - - -	Upper Bavaria - -	6914	684,405	Munich
2. Isar, Danube - -	Lower - - -	4133	615,517	Passau
3. Rhine - - -	Palatinate - - -	3290	565,345	Spire
4. Regen - - -	Upper Palatinate and Salzbach - -	4193	449,908	Salzbach
5. Upper Main - -	Upper Franconia - -	2936	480,230	Baireuth
6. Saale - - -	Middle - - -	2738	607,604	Anspach Nuremberg
7. Lower Main - -	Lower - - and Aschaffenburg - -	3604	878,478	Wurtzburg
8. Up. Danube - -	Suabia and Neuburg - -	3958	533,667	Augsburg
Totals - - -		32,657	4,319,546

Of these divisions, the third lies on both sides of the Rhine, at the northern extremity of the territory of the Grand Duke of Baden, and is detached from the other seven. Nos. 5, 6, and 7, formed part of the circle of Franconia, and No. 8 of Suabia; Nos. 1, 2, and 4, previously forming the grand duchy and the palatinate, the archbishopric of Saltzburg having been ceded to Austria. This territory comprises an area of 29,657 square miles, and a pop. of 4,319,546 in 1850. (See Appendix.) The frontier parts of the kingdom of Bavaria are in general rugged and mountainous, but the inland parts are fertile in corn and pasture; all the various branches of manufacture of flax, wool, some silk, leather, and working of metals, are followed more or less as domestic occupations over most parts of the country. Bavaria possesses within itself all the means of domestic and social comfort, besides having a surplus produce for exportation. It is exceedingly well watered; the Danube, which rises on the border of the Black Forest in Suabia, runs from W. to E. through the heart of the country, passes Dilligon, Donawerth, Neuberg, Ingolstadt, and Ratisbon, to Passau, where it enters the archduchy of Austria. The Inn, Isar, Lech, and Iller, run from S. to N. into the Danube, and the Main runs from E. to W., past Schweinfurth and Wurtzburg into the Rhine. Four-fifths of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics, and the remainder Protestants; the latter, however, not only enjoy the unrestrained exercise of their worship, but are eligible to civil offices and military appointments. Like all the other Germanic states, military pretension and parade is the ruling passion of the government, and from 40,000 to 50,000 men are held under military discipline; to sustain which, and other expenses of the state, taxes, equal to about 2,500,000*l.* English money, are levied annually on the produce of the labour of the people. Munich is the capital of the whole kingdom, and the seat of government, which is unlimited, and vested in the king, the title to which is hereditary. The power has, however, been exercised with discretion, prudence, and mildness, although not with all the wisdom and efficiency to be desired. Education has of late years been widely diffused through the Bavarian states; academies, lyceums, and universities have been multiplied; productions of foreign literature have been imported; and the effects are already apparent in the improved condition of society, and the gradual advance of moral and physical renovation. Bavaria may now be considered as holding the first rank among the secondary class of European states.

BAVAY, a town of France, in the department of Nord. It was taken by the Austrians in 1792, but recovered the same year. It is 6 m. N. E. of Quesnoy, and 12 S. W. of Mons.

BAWTRY, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday. It has a trade in lead, millstones, and grindstones, and is seated on the river Idle; 9 miles S. by E. of Doncaster, and 153 N. of London. Pop. 1149.

BAYONNE, a city and seaport of France, in the department of Lower Pyrenees, and a bishop's see (Basque Bay-o-no, "the good port"). The Nive and Adour unite their streams in the middle of the city, and proceed to the sea, at the distance of a mile. The first, which is deeper and more rapid than the Adour, divides the town into two unequal parts, the smallest of which is called the Bourgneuf, or New Town: they have a communication by three timber bridges. A bank of sand, at the mouth of the Adour, renders the entrance of the harbour difficult. The citadel is the strongest in France, and the cathedral is remarkable for the height of the nave and the delicacy of the pillars which support it. The military weapon, the bayonet, bears the name of this city, in which it was invented by some Basques, on July 14, 1814, who stuck their knives in the muzzle of their muskets. The chocolate of Bayonne is famous; and it also exports wines, woollen cloths, silks, cottons, &c. The chief trade arises out of its relation with Spain; and it is a kind of emporium for the merchandise of that country. The court of France was held here for some time in 1808, when the king of Spain and his son, the prince of the Asturias, were invited here to settle their differences before Buonaparte; the result of which was, that they were made to sign a treaty, resigning the crown of Spain into his hands. Bayonne was besieged by the English in 1814, during which the French made a sally, and attacked the English with success, but were at length driven back. The loss of the British in this affair was considerable, and their commander wounded and taken prisoner. It is 25 miles S. W. of Dax, and 518 S. by W. of Paris. Long. 1. 29. W. lat. 43. 29. N.

BAYPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malabar, on a river capable of receiving vessels of 400 tons. It is 15 miles S. by E. of Calicut.

BAYREUTH, a city of Bavaria, capital of a principality of the same name, with a palace, a fine castle, and a famous college. Near it, forming a kind of suburb, is the town of Georgen, which has a large castle, a manufacture of excellent brown and white porcelain, and a house of correction, in which the marble of the country is polished by means of a machine. In 1783, the archives of the principality were brought to Bayreuth from Plessenburg; (see CULMBACH;) and in 1791, the margraviate of Bayreuth, with that of Anspach, was abdicated by the reigning prince, in favour of the king of Prussia; but both were annexed and guaranteed by Buonaparte, and afterwards confirmed by the congress at Vienna, to the kingdom of Bavaria, (which see;) and Bayreuth is now the capital of the circle of Upper Maine. It is 32 miles E. of Bamberg. Pop. 14,000. It has a branch to the Leipzig, &c., railway.

BEDFORD, an inland county of England. At the time Britain was invaded by the Romans, Cassibelanus, the chief of the inhabitants of this part of the country, was appointed to the command of all the forces of Britain, against Cæsar; and, under the heptarchy of the Saxons, it formed part of the kingdom of Mercia, and the county town is supposed to have been the burial place of King Offa. It was afterwards the scene of many contests between the Britons, Saxons, and Danes, and at later periods became involved in the collisions between King John and the barons; and, in 1642, it took the side of the people against the kingly authority of Charles I. The river Ouse intersects it by a very winding course from W. to E.; and the Ivel, with several tributary streams, waters the S. part. The face of the country is varied with small hills and valleys; and on the S. is a range of chalky hills, which, rising to a considerable elevation, and projecting irregularly over the valleys, give the landscape a bold and remarkable appearance. From the S. E. corner to the middle of the county runs a line of good meadow-land; and the N. and E. portions have a deep soil, which is well cultivated, and produces large crops of corn. The mineral productions are limestone, coarse marble, and imperfect coal; and fuller's earth is obtained in considerable quantities. Mineral springs are found in different parts of the county, but they have not acquired much celebrity. The manufactures are chiefly confined to the making of lace, and preparing straw-plait for bonnets, baskets, toys, &c. The remains of both Saxon and Gothic architecture are to be seen in several of the churches, as also a few specimens of stained glass in their windows. Roman antiquities have also been frequently discovered in the county; and it is intersected by three Roman roads. It sends two members to parliament.

BEDFORD, the chief town of the preceding county, is situate about the centre of the county, on a spacious plain, N. of the Chiltern hills, which run across the S. part. The river Ouse, over which there is a beautiful stone bridge of five arches, divides the town into two parts. It has five churches, a county hospital and lunatic asylum, a well endowed public school, and about 50 almshouses, liberally endowed by Sir William Harpur, knight, a former inhabitant of the town. It is a borough town, governed by a mayor, recorder, alderman, two chamberlains, and 12 common council, and returns two members to parliament. It has a branch to the London and North Western Railway. The Belfast canal connects the town with Lough Neagh, and passes several marble quarries. It is 102 miles N. of Dublin. It returns two members to parliament, and has railways to Armagh, &c.

BELFAST, a town beautifully located on the shore of a fine bay, on the S. side of the Penobscot river, in the state of Maine, North America; it owns some shipping, and carries on a trade in timber. Pop. 4186; about 220 m. N. E. of Boston.

BELFORD, a town of Northumberland, on the line of the Newcastle and Berwick Railway; 49 miles N. by W. of Newcastle, and 15 S. by E. of Berwick. It has a market on Thursdays.

BELGARD, a town of Prussian Pomerania, immediately contiguous to Corbin, and about 15 miles S. by E. of Colberg. Pop. 3000.

BELGAUM, a town of Hindostan, province of Bejapoor. Pop. 7600. It is strongly fortified, and has an abundant supply of water. It has been adopted as a cantonment for troops; 105 miles from Bejapoor.

BELGERN, a town of Saxony proper, with a good trade in corn; seated on the Elbe; 8 miles S. E. of Torgan. Pop. 2800.

BELGIUM, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the N. by Holland, W. by the N. Sea, S. by France, E. by Rhenish Prussia, containing an area of 14,459 square m., and pop. 4,242,600. The northern and eastern provinces of Belgium, in their flatness, their fertility, and the number of canals and dykes, can be geographically regarded only as a continuation of Holland, forming a portion of that immense delta formed of the mud deposited by the Rhine and other rivers. The greater portion of the land in this quarter has been perseveringly rescued from the water, and were it not for human agency and care, without doubt the sea would regain its ancient dominion. This portion of Belgium teems with population, so that in traversing it, it has the appearance of one vast continuous village. The southern provinces, on the contrary, have an opposite character; they consist, in a great degree, of a rugged district of mountains, covered with dense forests, and abounding in really picturesque scenery, the effect of which is increased by the frequent occurrence of old feudal castles. It is but a thinly peopled district, and its inhabitants, called Walloons, are a rough and hardy race. The northern provinces are further distinguished from the southern by their language. A line drawn nearly due east from the R. Lys at Menin, passing a little to the S. of Brussels and Louvain to the Meuse, between Maestricht and Liège, marks the boundary of the Flemish and the Walloon languages. The people on the north speak Flemish, those on the south Walloon, which is a dialect allied to the old French of the 13th century.

The kingdom consists of nine provinces; Antwerp, in the N.; E. and W. Flanders and Hainault, in the W.; Brabant, in the centre; Limburg and Liège, in the E.; Namur, in the S.; and Luxembourg in the S. E. Their population is as follows:—

PROVINCES.	No. of Towns.	No. of Villages.	Pop. In 1837.	Chief Cities.
Antwerp . . .	4	155	360,180	Antwerp
Brabant . . .	8	388	892,550	Brussels
W. Flanders . .	15	225	627,128	Bruges
E. Flanders . .	11	279	758,906	Ghent
Hainault . . .	21	398	681,823	Mons
Liège	7	320	399,715	Liège
Limburg	8	309	337,308	Maestricht
Luxembourg . .	17	940	323,219	Luxembourg
Namur	5	342	227,074	Namur

Of the foregoing towns, twenty-one are fortified, and the country, for the civil administration, is divided into forty-four arrondissements, and these into communes. For judicial proceedings, it is divided into twenty-nine arrondissements, and two hundred and thirty-seven cantons. The military divisions are nine commanderies, equivalent to the nine provinces. These formerly constituted the duchy of Brabant, the marquisate of Antwerp, the principality of Liège, the seigneurie of Mechlin, the comtés of Flanders, Hainault, Louvain, and Namur, and the duchies of Limburg and Luxembourg.

Belgium is one of the most efficiently watered countries in Europe. All its streams flow into the North Sea, and the Scheldt and the Meuse have the pre-eminence. The whole length of the navigable rivers in the kingdom, is calculated at 962,746 mètres. About one-fifth of the entire surface is covered with forests and woods, chiefly in Namur, Luxembourg, and Hainault. The forests belong to the state, and immense supplies of charcoal are drawn from them for the ironworks in Luxembourg. The working of mines constitutes the most important part of the national industry of Belgium. The coal mines are around three great centres, Mons, Charleroi, and Liège, and of these, the coal fields of Hainault alone, produce annually more than the whole of the mines of France. In 1836, there were 250 coal mines in Belgium, producing annually 3,200,000 tons. Mines of iron are numerous, especially between the Sambro and the Meuse rivers, and many are worked in the provinces of Luxembourg, Liège, and Limburg. Copper is found and worked in Hainault and Liège, and lead in Luxembourg, Liège, and Namur. There are other mineral productions. The mineral springs are also celebrated; those of Spa and Liège are the best known. In agricultural industry, the Flemings have long been far advanced, and in that densely populated portion of the kingdom, the tillage is conducted with the greatest care. Of other objects of industry, wool holds a prominent position; linens and flax are also largely made and grown; cotton and silk are among its important articles, while the lace of Mechlin and Brussels are known all over the world. This manufacture, though not so important as formerly, has nothing to fear from foreign competition. In science, Belgium has made great advances, and her astronomical, geographical, and printing establishments, hold a very respectable position in the scientific world. The kingdom is intersected in every direction by a connected system of railroads, all made at the government expense, and which must greatly advance the national prosperity. They all centre at Mechlin, and pass by, not through, every principal town. Belgium affords, in her edifices and cities, perhaps the most interesting field in Europe for the tourist, and the numerous magnificent ecclesiastical and other edifices, attest the wealth and power of the former inhabitants of the country.

In the ages immediately preceding, and subsequent to the Christian era, much of the great plain of Flanders and Antwerp was partially overflowed by the ocean, and its inhabitants lived in a very rude and precarious manner. The Walloon country was then covered by the immense forests of the Ardennes, reaching from the Rhine to the Scheldt, and affording shelter to numerous tribes of the German race. They formed the third division of Gaul, called by the Romans Belgia, Belgium, or Gallia Belgica. The people were the least civilised, and most courageous of all the Gallic nations. The highland tribes became amalgamated with their Roman conquerors, but lowland people remained faithful to their ancient manners and language, and secured their independence by maritime commerce. Between the 3rd and 5th centuries, the character of the Belgic population was greatly changed by the successive invasions of the Salian Franks, whose progress westward terminated in the establishment of the Frankish or French empire in Gaul, and the destruction or slavery of nearly all the inhabitants of the Ardennes. Christianity was then introduced, and the lowlanders had continued to prosper in agriculture and commerce. The country, too, had been embanked from the sea, and in the time of Charlemagne, A.D. 800, was much improved. The clergy enjoyed immense possessions, and the remains of their structures are still among the present interesting monuments of the past. The Flemings formed guilds, or fraternities, and Flanders was soon covered with corporate towns. At the end of the 9th century, the Normans, the rapacious inhabitants of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, began their piratical incursions, which they continued for 150 years. At the period of the English Norman conquest, Flemish maritime commerce was considerable, and the Flemings, a martial race, formed an important part of the Norman army. The country had long been divided into provinces belonging to different families, and governed by different laws; hence the dukedom, counties, principalities, previously enumerated. The fierce quarrels between these feudal lords and the prince-bishops, reduced all the states, except Flanders, to a cheerless waste, when the fanatical frenzy of the crusades incited the nobles of Flanders to make every species of sacrifice in furtherance of their favourite purpose. Their wealthy vassals, the burghers of Bruges, Ghent, and other great towns, were thus enabled by their riches to purchase their independence. They forthwith formed themselves into corporations, obtained a jurisdiction of their own, and then built a huge belfry, or a vast town-hall, as a trophy or temple of their liberties. But they abused their privileges by their petty jealousies and quarrels among one another. But they suffered for their faults, as the people, conscious of their power, extorted from their rulers so many concessions, that they were only nominally independent, but subservient to the monarch of France and his nobles. The courts of the country of Flanders were almost the only seat of liberty, civilisation, and refinement at the time when Europe was sunk in ignorance and despotism. They eventually came under the dominion of the Duke of Burgundy, in the middle of the 15th century; and under this dynasty they enjoyed remarkable prosperity. The famous order of the Golden Fleece was instituted in 1430, and soon after Ypres and Ghent became the greatest weaving marts, and Bruges and Antwerp were the great commercial marts of the world, each containing above 200,000 inhabitants. Wealth, splendour, and luxury, were carried to an enormous length, and this produced depravity and crime. The arts were cultivated with the greatest success, and many of the most beautiful buildings were also erected.

In 1477, Belgium passed under the dynasty of the House of Austria, and in 1519, to that of Spain, under Charles V., king of Spain, and emperor of Germany, under which the wool trade flourished exceedingly. Bigotry and intolerance soon after led to the persecution of the followers of Luther, and the other Protestant reformers; and the dreadful Duke of Alva filled the country with diabolical cruelties. He boasted that in six years he had massacred 18,000 men and women for their opinions. This drove the manufacturing industry from Belgium, and thus was the wool trade founded in England. Belgium remained under Spanish dominion until the battles of Ramillies, in 1706, and then became again subject to Austria, and after various changes, it was incorporated by Buonaparte with France, in 1795. Hence the French is the language used by the better classes at present. In the centre of Belgium was fought the battle of Waterloo, June 18, 1815, and the territory was thus joined to the kingdom of the Netherlands by the Congress of Vienna. The Netherlands kingdom, built up of the fragments of other states, was kept together rather by the pressure of surrounding Europe, than by any internal principle of cohesion. The Belgians differ essentially from the Dutch; they are French in inclination, and Roman Catholic in religion, and these forms are quite sufficient to make them a distinct nation, and led to the revolution of 1830, by which Belgium separated from Holland, and became an independent state; but it was not established till 1831. In 1849, its population was 4,359,090. See Appendix. From the government of Belgium having undergone so many changes, the country has been the scene of war for centuries, and has been termed the cock-pit of Europe. The natural consequence of so many revolutions, has been a certain debasement of national character, evinced in the lower orders by ignorance, and a coarseness of manners which is particularly apparent.

The history of Belgium is identical with that of the Netherlands, till 1830, when the Belgians revolted, and, in 1831, chose Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, for their sovereign, under the name of Leopold I. He is assisted in the executive by a chamber of representatives and a senate.

BELGRADE, a celebrated town and fortress of European Turkey, capital of Servia, and a Greek bishop's see, seated at the confluence of the Saave with the Danube, immediately contiguous to the Slavonian fortresses of Semlin. It was first possessed by the Turks in 1522, retaken by the confederated German powers in 1688, and again taken by the Turks in 1690. It was taken by Prince Eugene in 1717, and kept till 1739, when it was ceded to the Turks. It was again taken in 1789, and restored at the peace of Reichenbach in 1790; and in 1806 it surrendered to an insurgent force of Servians, in opposition to the wanton authority of the janissaries. It is very much reduced both in wealth and strength; its fortifications are mostly in ruins; it still, however, retains a little external trade. It is about 440 miles N. W. of Constantinople, and 160 S. S. E. of Pest.

BELGRADE, a town of European Turkey, in Rumania, on the Strait of Constantinople, 20 miles N. of that city. It was the residence of Lady M. W. Montague; and is now comparatively deserted.

BELGRADO, a town of Italy, in Friuli, seated near the Tojamenta; 81 miles S. by W. of Udina.

BELIDA or BLEEDA, an agreeable town of Algiers, in the province of Titeria, at the foot of a ridge of mountains; 25 miles S. E. of Algiers. Its district is fertile, and it has some trade in spices, &c.

BELITZ, a tn. of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, with a manufacture of cloth; seated on a river of the same name; 27 miles S. W. of Berlin.

BELIZE, or BALIZE, or BRITISH HONDURAS, a district on the E. coast of Yucatan, in Central America, between 15. 54. and 18. 30. N. lat. and 88. and 90. W. long., 175 miles long N. and S., and 110 miles broad E. and W. Area, 16,400 sq. miles. It was settled by English logwood cutters, about 3 years after the conquest of Jamaica in 1656, but they were expelled by the Spaniards in 1680 from Laguna, near Campeachy, but the English still maintained their colony, and hold it till now, although Yucatan makes a claim of the territory. The shores are low and rocky, and lined with numerous islands. The river Belize flows probably 150 miles from an unexplored region, and, like the other rivers, is navigable for 20 or 30 miles. The other larger rivers are the Rio Hondo, Rio Nuevo, and the Siboon; on the banks of the last are extensive mahogany forests. The pop. in 1845 was returned at 240 white males, 159 white females, together 399; and 10,410 coloured people, total 10,809. The coloured people work at cutting mahogany and dye woods. Cultivation is but little attended to.

BELIZE is the only town in the above territory, and is built on both sides of the river of the same name, crossed by a wooden bridge. The houses are of wood, raised 8 or 10 feet from the ground. It has a good roadstead for shipping. It owes its origin to a Scotch buccancer named Wallace; the name is a corruption of this.

BELLAC, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne, seated on the Vincon; 20 miles N. of Limoges. It has a good trade in cattle and timber, chestnuts, &c. Pop. about 3000.

BELLAIR, a town of Maryland, capital of Hartford county; 22 miles N. E. of Baltimore, and 86 W. S. W. of Philadelphia.

BELLEFONTE, a town of the United States, in Pennsylvania. It is seated on Spring Creek a branch of the Bald Eagle R. and in the centre of an extensive iron trade, 85 miles N. W. of Harrisburg, and 117 from Washington. Pop. 1840, 1032.

BELLEGARDE, a fortress of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees, and an important place, on account of its being a passage to the Pyrenees. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1793, but retaken the next year. It is eighteen miles S. of Perpignan.

BELLEGARDE, a tn. of France, in the department of Saone and Loire, on the river Saone; 15 miles N. E. of Chalons.

BELLE-ILE-EN-MER, an island of France, 15 miles from the coast of Bretagne. It is 10 miles long and three broad, diversified with craggy mountains, salt-works, and fertile plains. The principal place is Palais, a fortified town, with a citadel. It was taken by the English in 1761, and restored in 1763. It now forms part of the department of Morbihan, and contains a population of about 5800. Long. 3. 5. W. lat. 47. 17. N.

BELLEISLE, an island at the N. E. end of a channel, between Labrador and Newfoundland, called the Strait of Belleisle. The island is 20 miles in circuit, and has a small harbour on the N. W. side. Long. 55. 25. W. lat. 51. 58. N.

BELLESME, a town of France, in the department of Orne, with an ancient castle; 24 miles E. S. E. of Alencon. It has fabrics of linen and cotton, and has a good trade in timber and cattle.

BELLEVILLE, a town of the United States, in New Jersey, beautifully situated on the W. side of the Passaic R. and extending 3 m. along it. It has fine mill streams, and various manufactories. $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. E. of Newark, and 69 N. E. of Trenton. Pop. in 1840, 2466.

BELLEY, a town of France, in the department of Ain, and a bishop's see; seated near the Rhone; 40 miles S. E. of Bourg. Long. 5. 44. E. lat. 45. 47. N. Pop. about 4000.

BELLIN, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark, E. of the Oder Canal, about 18 miles N. N. W. of Kustin.

BELLINGHAM, a tn. in Northumberland, with a market on Sacurday; seated on the N. branch of the Tyne; 15 miles N. N. W. of Hexham, and 300 of London. It was the estate of the Earl of Derwentwater, but was given to Greenwich hospital on his attainder, in 1715.

BELLINZONA, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Tessin. It is seated on the Tessino, 5 miles above its entrance into the lake Maggiore, and 22 W. S. W. of Chiavenna. Long. 8. 55. E. lat. 46. 8. N.

BELL ROCK, or INCH CAPE, a ledge of partly sunken rocks, off the E. coast of Scotland, between the Friths of Forth and Tay, formerly very dangerous in foggy weather, and by night, but obviated since 1811, by the erection of a magnificent lighthouse upon the most prominent point, in lat. 56. 26. N. and long. 2. 23. W.

BELLOWS FALLS, a pleasant town of the United States, in Vermont, in a romantic situation, and near the various falls of the Connecticut River. 98 m. S. by E. of Montpelier.

BELLUNESE, a district of Italy, lying between Friuli, Cadorno, Feltrino, and Tyrol. It has large woods and iron mines; and is fertile in corn, wine, and fruit. Belluno is the only place of note.

BELLUNO, a town of Italy, capital of the Bellunese, and a bishop's see, seated among the Alps, on the river Piave; 15 miles N. E. of Feltri. Long. 12. 9. E. lat. 43. 13. N. Pop. about 9500.

BELMONT, a county on the E. side of the state of Ohio, bordering on the Ohio River, which separates it from Virginia. The population in 1810 was 11,097, and in 1840, 30,901. St. Clairsville, the chief town, is 123 miles E. of Columbus.

BELMONT, the name of two inconsiderable towns in France, one in the department of Loire, and the other in Aveiron.

BELOVER, a town in the N. E. part of Croatia, near the frontiers of Selavonia.

BELOOCHISTAN, a country of Asia, lying between Persia and the Indus, the boundaries of which are very imperfectly defined. The inhabitants, consisting wholly of pastoral tribes, extend their territory wherever pasture and fertility invite, and the power of their arms prove sufficient to defend them against interruption; in fact, instead of Beloochistan being designated a country, it would be more proper to consider it as the eastern part of Persia, inhabited by numerous predatory and lawless tribes, possessing peculiar Mahometan tenets; the two chief tribes are the Beloochés and the Brahoocés; a race called Dewahrs are scattered over the country; these last speak pure Persian. Agriculture is but little followed, not one hundredth part of the land being cultivated. Population, perhaps a million. Kelat is the capital.

BELLUZA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysora, with a citadel, both of them strongly fortified with a mud wall and a ditch. In the vicinity is much fine rice ground, and a great number of sheep are bred. It is 38 miles N. of Seringapatam.

BELLEN, a town in Derbyshire, with a market on Saturday. Here are several large cotton-mills, a bleaching-mill, and an iron-works, and about a dozen large establishments for the manufacture of nails. It is seated on the Derwent, eight miles N. of Derby, and 134 N. N. W. of London, on the North Midland Railway.

BELPRE, a town of the state of Ohio, on the N. W. bank of the Ohio, opposite the mouth of the Little Kanhuway; 14 miles S. W. of Marietta, and 46 N. E. of Gallipolis.

BELPUIG, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a famous convent; 18 miles E. N. E. of Lerida.

BELT, GREAT, a strait of Denmark, between the islands of Zealand and Funen, which forms a communication between the Cattegat and the Baltic. Owing to its more circuitous course, it is not so much frequented as the Sound. (See BALTIC.) In 1658, the whole strait was frozen so hard, that Charles Gustavus, King of Sweden, marched over it with a design to take Copenhagen.

BELT, LITTLE, a strait, W of the Great Belt, between Funen and North Jutland. It is one of the passages from the Cattegat to the Baltic, though not three miles in breadth, and very crooked.

BELTURBET, a tn. in the N. part of the county of Cavan, Ireland; it is in the parish of Annagh. Previous to the union, it returned a member to the Irish parliament. Nine miles N. N. W. of Cavan, and 61 of Dublin. Pop. 2026.

BELVEDERE, a town of Naples, prov. Calabria Citra; 26 m. N. N. W. of Cosenza. It has a fort, several churches, and a convent; its wine and raisins are in great repute. Pop. 5600.

BELVEDERE is the name of several small towns in different parts of Italy.

BELVEZ, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne; 27 miles S. S. E. of Perigueux. Pop. about 3000.

BELUM, a town of Hanover, near the mouth of the Oste; 24 miles N. W. of Stade. Considerable quantities of flax are grown in its vicinity.

BELUR, a town of Usbec Tartary, capital of a province of the same name, which is a hilly country, bounded on the N. and E. by the Belur Tagler, or Dark Mountains, anciently the Imaus. The capital is 200 miles E. of Budakshan. Long. 74. 10. E. lat. 36. 35. N.

BELZIG, a town of Saxony Proper, with a castle, seated on the Walse; 25 miles N. N. W. of Wittenburg.

BEMBA, a province of Congo, Africa. The inhabitants are idolatrous, and clothe in the unprepared skins of animals.

BEN, a name prefixed to most of the mountains in Scotland; the following are among the most considerable, with the counties in which situate, and their altitude above the level of the sea:—

		Feet.
Ben Ardlanich	Perth	3500
Beauchonzie	—	2922
Beinglo	—	3725
Abourd	Aberdeen	2940
Avon	—	2920
Choachan	Ross	3000
Cloch	Clackmannan	2420
Ivas	Perth	4000
Nevis	Inverness	4370
Lomond	Stirling	3240

BENA, or BENE, a fortified town of the Sardinian States, in the N. W. part of the province of Mondovi; 23 miles S. by E. of Turin. Pop. about 5000.

BENARES, an exceedingly fertile district of Hindostan, in the N. E. part of the province of Allahabad, between those of Balar and Oude. It contains the citrars of Benares, Jionpour, Chunar, and Gazypour; and was ceded to the English in 1775. It is very productive in rice, sugar, silk, cotton, and indigo.

BENARES, the chief town of the district, is one of the finest and most populous towns of all Hindostan. It is beautifully located on the N. bank of the Gunges, and celebrated as the ancient seat of Brahminical learning. It has a Hindoo Sanscrit college, and also an English college. Several Hindoo temples embellish the high banks of the river; and many other public and private buildings are magnificent. The streets are narrow, the houses high, and some of them five stories each, inhabited by different families, but the more wealthy Gentoos live in detached houses, with an open court, surrounded by a wall. Nearly in the centre of the city is a considerable Mahometan mosque, built by the emperor Aurungzebe, who destroyed a magnificent Hindoo temple to make room for it. There is also a very superb temple, built by the rajah Cheytsing, who was driven from Benares for exciting an insurrection against the British in 1781, and who was finally deposed in 1783. There are ruins of several Hindoo temples in the vicinity, destroyed by the intolerance of the Mohammedans. In addition to the consequence derived from the vast congregation of persons, occasioned by the priestcraft of Benares, it is the centre of a very extensive traffic for all the productions and manufactures of the east, and is distinguished for its trade in diamonds, and works in gold and jewellery. It is the seat of a British jurisdiction, and is about 130 miles W. by S. of Patna, and 400 W. by N. of Calcutta. Pop. 630,000.

BENASQUE, a town of Spain, in Aragon, the chief town of a valley in the Pyrenees, in which are some iron, silver, and copper mines, all much neglected. It was the ancient Veruela, and has about 1000 inhabitants.

BENATEK, a town in the circle of Bunzlau, Bohemia, situate on the west bank of the Iser River; about 30 miles N. E. of Prague. Tycho Brahe died here in 1601.

BENAVARI, a town of Spain, in Aragon; 17 miles N. of Lerida.

BENAVENTE, a town of Spain, in Leon, on the river Esla; with a ruined and over-praised castle; 35 miles S. S. W. of Leon.

BENAVENTE, a town of Portugal in Alentejo, on the river Soro, near its confluence with the Tajo; 30 miles E. N. E. of Lisbon.

BENNECULA, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, between North and South Uist, from the last of which it is separated by a narrow channel, nearly dry at low water. It is of a circular form, including the inlets of the sea, 9 miles in diameter. The soil is sandy and unproductive, but much kelp is made from the sea-weed thrown on the coast.

BENCOOLEN, a settlement formerly belonging to the English East India Company, but ceded to the Dutch in 1815, on the south-west side of the island of Sumatra. The settlement was first formed in 1690, after the valiant Dutch drove all the English from Batavia. The unhealthiness of the spot first chosen destroyed, in 1692, nearly the whole of the European population: a new site was chosen, and the fort called Fort Marlborough has proved more congenial to the physical constitutions of Europeans. The town is inhabited by natives from all parts of Asia. The chief occupation of the people of the country is the culture of the pepper plant, the extent of the produce of which is very great, and constitutes its exclusive means of external commerce. Fort Marlborough is in lat. 3. 48. S. and 102. 28. E. long.

BENCOONAT, a town at the south-west extremity of the island of Sumatra; about 120 miles S. E. of Bencoolen.

BENCOWSE, a town of Algier, in the province of Constantine, 25 miles S. S. E. of Seteef.

BENDALA, a town of Bornou, North Africa; about 200 miles E. of the capital.

BENDER, or TEKEN, a fortified town of European Turkey, capital of Bessarabia. Here Charles XII. of Sweden resided, after his defeat at Pultowa, in 1709. Previous to 1770, when the Russians took Bender by storm, and totally destroyed the town, and afterwards abandoned it, it contained about 20,000 inhabitants. In 1789, it was taken again by the Russians, almost without a struggle, but restored to the Turks in the following year; again taken by the Russians, to whom, with the whole of Bessarabia, and all that part of Moldavia east of the Pruth, it was confirmed by treaty in 1812. It is seated on the west bank of the Dniester, about 100 miles E. by S. of Jassy, and 410 N. of Constantinople. Present pop. 1700.

BENDER MAJOR, BEGH, and RISHER, three towns on the north-east shore of the Persian gulf.

BENDORF, a town on the east bank of the Rhine; about 5 miles N. of Coblenz.

BENEADI, a large town of Upper Egypt, on the west side of the Nile, in lat. about 27. 30. N.

BENE. See BENA.

BENEDETTO, ST., a town of Italy, in the Mantuan, near the river Po; 15 m. S. S. E. of Mantua; distinguished, before the revolution, for one of the richest and finest convents in all Italy. There is also another town of the same name in Piedmont, 12 miles E. of Bena.

BENEDICT, a town of Maryland, in Charles county, situate on the Patuxent; 16 miles W. of Port Tobacco.

BENEDICT, ST., a market town of Hungary, on the west bank of the Gran; about 5 miles W. of Pukanz.

BENESCHAU, a town in the south-west part of Silesia, on the frontier of the principality of Troppau. Also the name of four small towns in Bohemia.

BENEVENTE, a town of France, in the department of Creuse; 10 miles N. N. W. of Borganeuf.

BENEVENTO, a city of Naples, and an archbishop's see; capital of Principato Ulteriore, and of a small duchy of its name, belonging to the pope. Benevento has suffered greatly by earthquakes, particularly in 1688, when the archbishop was dug out of the ruins alive. Except Rome, no city of Italy can boast of so many ruins of ancient sculpture as are to be found in this place. It is seated near the confluence of the Sabato and Caloro; 35 miles N.E. of Naples. Long. 14. 47. E. lat. 41. 8. N. Pop. 16,000.

BENGAL, PRESIDENCY OF, the most important of the British territories in India. It is divided into the Upper or Western, Central, and Lower provinces, and comprises the divisions and districts of Calcutta, Patna, Moorsheadabad, Dacca, Benares, Barceilly, Assam, Arracan, &c. &c., containing an area of about 358,769 square miles; and in 1822 a pop. of 69,710,071. It lies between lat. 16. and 31. N. and long. 74. and 96. E.

BENGAL, PROVINCE OF, one of the largest and most important divisions of Hindostan, bounded on the N. by Nepaul, Bootan, &c., E. by Assam, Jynteah, &c., S. by the Bay of Bengal, and part of Orissa and Arracan, and W. by Bahar. The river Ganges intersects the province from N.W. to S.E. The Burram-pooter enters the province from Assam, at the N.E. extremity, and unites with the most northern, which is the main branch of the Ganges, at its confluence with the sea, whilst the Dammoda waters the S. side of the province, falling into the Hoogly, or southern branch of the Ganges, below Calcutta: these rivers, with their numerous tributary streams, afford a facility of communication by water to almost every town in the province, and by their periodical overflowings, add fertility to the luxuriant and exhaustless soil. Bengal is altogether a level country, formed of a continuity of vast plains, bounded only by the horizon, yielding, with but little aid of culture, all the plants and fruits peculiar to a tropical climate. Rice, cotton, silk, and saltpetre, are its indigenous and staple productions, and sugar and indigo have been recently cultivated with great success, and to a vast extent. Tobacco, hemp, and flax, are also produced for internal consumption; but, being inferior in quality to the like productions of America and Europe, they are not exported. Gums and medicinal plants are various and abundant. Of animals, the elephant and tiger hold the first rank; the former are highly appreciated for their docility, and utility for burthen, pagantry, and war; and command a value exceeding the value of the horse in Europe, according to their age and condition, in proportion as they exceed the horse in strength and power. Buffaloes and horned cattle are numerous, and horses of various kinds are common. Birds and domestic poultry of all kinds are very abundant. Previous to the commencement of the 13th century, Bengal was inhabited by an unmixed and feeble race of Hindoos, who at that period yielded their authority to a horde of Mahometan marauders from the confines of Persia and Tar-tary, who established their seat of empire at Delhi, and to whom Bengal continued tributary for about 140 years, when it regained, and retained its independence for nearly two centuries, when it was invaded by Shero Shah, and afterwards by the emperor Akbar, who again rendered it tributary to Delhi, to which it continued subject until the year 1756, when the whole province became subject to the authority of the English East India Company, who for half a century previously had established settlements on the banks of the Ganges, and progressively extended their influence. After the mutiny of 1857-8, the supreme government was transferred from the Company to the Queen, and many reforms have been introduced. The chief city and place of commerce is Calcutta, which is also the seat of government of the whole British empire in Asia. The total population is about 54,185,338, of whom nine-tenths are native Hindoos, and the remainder a mixed race of Mahometans, descendants of the early conquerors by intermarriages with the natives, and a few Europeans. Manufactures of cotton, or silk, are carried on in almost every town of the province, and in the principal cities the works in gold and jewellery are very extensive. The nature and present extent of the commerce of Bengal will be more fully elucidated under the head of CALCUTTA, and the nature and extent of revenue exactions under the head of HINDOSTAN, which see.

BENGAZI, a maritime town of N. Africa, in the beylic of Tripoli; lat. 32. 7. N. long. 20. 2. E. It is seated on the border of an extensive and very fertile plain, but it is miserably built, and filthy in the extreme; but, notwithstanding its poverty and the indolence of the people, it has some trade, chiefly carried on by the Jews. To such a state is the ancient Berenice reduced, which once boasted of its "Gardens of the Hesperides!" not a trace of it is visible above ground, but many remains have been excavated. Pop. 2560.

BENUELA, a maritime district on the W. coast of South Africa, lying S. of the Congo river, between the lat. 10. 30. and 16. S. There are two towns or settlements of the Portuguese on the coast, called Benguela, Old and New, the former in the lat. of 10. 50., and the other in about 12. 30. S., from whence the Portuguese and Brazilian ships obtain a considerable portion of their slaves. See ANGOLA.

BENI, a large river of South America, rising near the S. extremity of La Paz, running N. parallel with, and within the most easterly ridge of the Andes, and forming the E. branch of the Ucayale, which falls into the Amazon after running from S. to N. through the whole interior of Peru. The Jesuits founded some settlements on the banks of the Beni, of which St. Francisco, Trinidad, and Boyez, in the lat. of 12. to 14. S., are the chief BENICARLO, a town of Valencia, Spain, 25 miles S. of Tortosa. It is celebrated for its wines, of which considerable quantities are exported. Pop. 5500.

BENIGNO, Sr., a populous village of Piedmont, situate on the high road to the Alps, about 10 miles N. of Turin. Pop. about 4500.

BENICIA, a new town, pleasantly seated in Suisun Bay, on the Sacramento River, Upper California, a short distance above San Francisco.

BENIN, a country of North Africa, towards the E. extremity of Upper Guinea, lying principally N. and W. of the river Formosa, the entrance to which is in lat. 5. 35' N. and 4. 35' E. long. It is bounded on the W. by Dhomey; on the E. by Waree; and N. by undefined boundaries and countries but little known. Benin exhibits many beautiful landscapes; but the air is noxious near the coast, on account of the gross vapours from the marshes. Oranges and lemons grow on the sides of the roads, and the cotton and pepper plants are indigenous to the soil, but both are very imperfectly cultivated. Among the animals are elephants in great number, tigers, leopards, stags, wild boars, civet and mountain cats, horses, hares, and hairy sheep; a vast number of serpents and other reptiles; and the principal birds are paroquets, pigeons, partridges, storks, and ostriches. The dress of the natives is neat. The rich wear white calico or cotton petticoats, but the upper part of the body is commonly naked. The women use great art in dressing their hair, which they reduce into a variety of forms. The people are skilful in making various sorts of dyes; and they manufacture some cotton into cloths. Polygamy is allowed, and the number of wives is limited by the state of their circumstances only. Their religion is paganism, the king himself being fetiche, and, as such, the chief object of adoration in his dominions. The chief town, called also Benin, is one of the most populous of all Western Africa, containing about 15,000 inhabitants. It is situate inland about 40 miles from Gatto, a town situate at the head of a large inlet of the Formosa river. The road from Gatto to Benin is over a level country, in some places swampy and thickly wooded, and the country around the town of Benin is also thickly wooded. Like all other African towns, Benin is very unequally laid out. The houses are all built of clay, and covered with reeds, straw, or leaves. The royal palace is of vast extent, but neither elegant nor commodious. All male slaves here are foreigners; for the inhabitants cannot be sold for slaves, only they bear the name of the king's slaves. The slave trade, once so flourishing in the Bight of Benin, is now nearly or quite abolished, through the vigilance of the European cruisers, and the introduction of legitimate trade. Of this, palm and cocoa-nut oil are the chief articles of export, which are of increasing interest and value. The celebrated Niger debouches by many branches in the Bight; the mouths of all these rivers are exceedingly fatal to Europeans, and the climate in all parts is very unhealthy.

BENIN-DAZY, Sr., a town of France, department of Nievre, having several iron-mines in its vicinity. Pop. 1600.

BENISUEF, or BENISOUF, a town of Egypt, with manufactures of carpets, and woollen and linen stuffs, seated on the Nile, 60 miles S. of Cairo. The town has a good appearance, from the numerous mosques. Pop. 5000.

BENKENSTEIN, or BENNECKENSTEIN, a town of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Saxony, 11 miles S. W. of Halberstadt. Pop. 2700.

BENNINGEN, a village of Wirtemberg, on the Neckar, where the remains of a Roman town were discovered in 1597.

BENNINGTON, a county forming the S. W. part of the state of Vermont, bordering on the state of New York. Pop. 16,872.

BENNINGTON, the chief town of the preceding county. Though the largest and oldest town in the state, the judicial courts are commonly held at Rutland and Windsor alternately. In or near this town, Colonel Stark gained two battles, on Aug. 16th, 1777, which contributed to the subsequent surrender of General Burgoyne's army. Bennington is situate at the foot of the Green Mountains, near the S. W. corner of the state; 30 miles E. by N. of Albany, and 129 S. S. W. of Montpelier. Pop. 3429.

BENSBERG, a town of the duchy of Berg, Westphalia; 7 miles E. of Mulheim, on the Rhine.

BENSHEIM, a town of Germany, 25 miles N. N. W. of Heidelberg, and 10 N. E. of Worms. Pop. about 3100.

BENNINGTON, commonly called BENSON, a town in Oxfordshire, on the high road from London to Oxford. It was formerly the abode of royalty, and has an hospital called God's House.

BENTHEIM, formerly a county of the circle of Westphalia, but now forming part of the kingdom of Hanover. It is about 18 miles in breadth and 45 in length, bordering on the United Provinces of Holland, intersected from S. to N. by the Vecht. Pop. about 25,000. There is a town of the same name, inconsiderable. The chief towns are Neinhuis, Northorn, and Schuttorf.

BENUE or CHADDA RIVER, an important river of western Africa, which falls into the Niger at about 200 miles from its mouth. It flows in a westerly direction, and was ascended for about 400 miles in 1834.

BEAR, an interior province of the Deccan of Hindostan, bounded on the N. by Malwa and Allahabad, E. by Orissa, S. by Golconda, and W. by Dowlatabad and Candeish. The principal part of it is nominally subject to a rajah, under the surveillance of the English East India Company, the other to the Nizam of the Deccan. The rajah's country extends 550 miles from E. to W., and, in some places, 200 from N. to S. Its capital is Nagpour. Little is known respecting the interior; but that about Nagpour is fertile and well cultivated. The general appearance of the country, particularly between Nagpour and Orissa, is that of a forest, thinly set with villages and towns.

BERAT, of ARNAUTH BELGRADE, the ancient Eordea, a large interior town of Albania; about 28 miles N. E. of Valona. Pop. about 8000.

BERAUN-PODBRAD, an interior circle of Bohemia, lying between 49. 25. and 50. of N. lat., and 13. 45. and 14. 30. of E. long. It is intersected from S. to N. by the Moldna river, which falls into the Elbe, about 20 m. N. of Prague. Beraun, the chief town, is situate near the northern frontier of the circle, on the S. bank of a river of the same name, which rises near the frontiers of Bavaria, and falls into the Moldau, a few m. S. of Prague. It has manufactures of fire-arms and earthenware. 15 miles W. S. W. of Prague. Pop. 2200.

BERBERA, the projecting coast of Eastern Africa, extending from the Straits of Babel-mandel to Cape Guardafui. At a town of the same name upon the coast, in lat. 10. 25. N. and 45. 8. E. long., a large annual fair is held, at which the manufactured productions of Persia and India are exchanged for gum, frankincense, myrrh, and various other commodities. This seems to be a point of the African coast, from whence a more advantageous intercourse might be established with the interior than any other, either on the western or eastern coasts.

BERBICE, a river of South America, the entrance to which is in lat. 6. 29. N. and 57. 11. W. long. Plantations formed by the Dutch extend on both sides of the river for about 150 miles along the coast. The colony surrendered to the English in 1790; given up at the peace of Amiens; retaken on the renewal of the war, and confirmed to England at the peace of 1814. Cotton and coffee are now large cultivated on its banks.

BERCHTOLSGADEN, provostship or, encircled by the archbishopric of Salzburg, formerly part of the circle of Bavaria, but now of the Austrian empire. The chief town of the same name is situate at the N. E. part of the district, about 14 miles S. of Salzburg. It has a handsome church. Pop. about 3000, who are much employed in the manufacture of wooden toys, large quantities of which are exported to England; the district produces great quantities of salt.

BERDICKZOW, a town of Russia, in Europe, government of Volhynia. Pop. 10,000, chiefly Jews. Here is a celebrated image of the Virgin, preserved in a Carmelite friary.

BERDITCHEF, a town of Russia, in Europe, government of Volhynia, on its S. E. confines; 25 miles S. of Jitomir. It is dirty and ill-built, and is chiefly inhabited by Jews, by whom, however, a considerable trade is carried on. Pop. 9000.

BERDOA, a town of Persia, in Erivan, seated in a fertile plain; 16 miles E. S. E. of Gangea.

BERDOA. See BURGU.

BERE REGIS, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Wednesday. On Woodbury-hill, half a mile to the N. E., is a circular Roman camp, enclosed within three trenches. The town is seated on the Bere, near its confluence with the Piddle; 12 miles E. by N. of Dorchester, and 112 S. W. of London.

BEREGH, a frontier county of Upper Hungary, bounded on the S. by the river Theiss, and N. by the Carpathian mountains. Pop. about 46,000.

BEREON, and BEREGHSZAZ, two of the principal towns, are situate in the S. W. part of the preceding county.

BERELLY, a city of Hindostan, capital of Rohilla, which was conquered by the nabob of Oude, in 1774. It is 120 miles N. N. W. of Lucknow. Long. 79. 40. E. lat. 28. 30. N.

BERELOS, a lake of Egypt, between Damietta and Rosetta, of an oval form. 32 miles long, and 10 broad in the middle.

BERENICE, an ancient port of Said, or Upper Egypt, the ruins of which still remain. The harbour is safe and commodious.

BERETSK, a town at the S. E. frontier of Transylvania, near the pass of Oitosh.

BEREZINA, a river of European Russia, which has its source near a village of the same name, in lat. 54. 50. N., and after receiving several tributary streams, and running S. through the palatinate of Minsk, parallel with the Dneiper, through nearly three degrees of lat., falls into that river a little above Rzeczyca. It is memorable for the disasters which its passage occasioned to the French army, on its retreat from Moscow in 1812. There is a small river of the same name falling into the Vistula, a few miles S. E. of Thorn.

BEREZINSKOI, a town of Siberia, on the Irtsch river; about 40 miles S. E. of Tobolsk.

BEREZOV, a considerable town of Siberia, situate near the confluence of the Soswa river, with the W. branch of the Obe; in lat. 64.

BERG, a duchy of Westphalia, lying along the river Rhine, to the S. of the duchy of Cleve, about 60 miles in length, and from 10 to 22 in breadth. It is full of woods and mountains, but fertile upon the banks of the Rhine, and in the valleys; and has mines of lead, iron, and coal. Dusseldorf is the capital. It now forms a part of the Prussian provinces of the Lower Rhine. Pop. about 295,000.

BERG is also the name of several towns in different parts of Germany.

BERGA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, sented on the Lobrogat; 18 miles E.N.E. of Solsoua.

BERGA, is also the name of two towns in Saxony, one in Switzerland, and another in Norway.

BERGAMASCO, a province of Italy, bounded by Brescia, the Valteline, and the Milanese. Toward the N. it is mountainous and rocky, and has mines of iron; some of the valleys produce much wine and oil; and in the vicinity of the capital, Bergamo, it is very fertile. It formed part of the kingdom of Italy, under Buonaparte, but was transferred to Austria at the congress of Vienna, subsequently to the peace of 1815. Pop. about 365,000.

BERGAMO, an ancient city of Italy, and a bishop's see, capital of Bergamasco, with a citadel. It is famous for its sewing silk; and its fair, on St. Bartholomew's day, is resorted to by merchants from distant parts. It stands on a hill, between the rivers Bremba and Serio; 30 miles N.E. of Milan; it contains several fine edifices, and is distinguished as a birth-place of several eminent artists and literati. Pop. about 30,000.

BERGAMO, a city of Natolia. See PERGAMI.

BERGEDORF, a town on the N. bank of the Elbe; about 10 miles E. of Hamburg.

BERGEN, a city and seaport of Norway, capital of a government of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a castle. It is built on a promontory, and almost surrounded by the sea, and is the most populous town in Norway, containing 22,339 inhabitants. On the land side it is defended by mountains, and on the other, by several fortifications. All the churches, and some of the houses, are of stone, but most of the latter are constructed of wood. The castle and cathedral are remarkable edifices. It carries on a great trade in skins, fir-wood, deals, tar, and dried fish; it is 170 miles W. by N. of Christiana. Long. 5. 20. E. lat. 60. 24. N.

BERGEN, a town of North Holland, noted for two bloody battles, in 1793, between the English and Russian forces opposed by the Dutch and French, which terminated in favour of the former. It is situate among woods; 4 miles N.N.E. of Alcaaar. Pop. 6000.

BERGEN, the chief town of the island of RUGEN, which see.

BERGEN, a considerable town of New Jersey. The inhabitants are mostly descendants from the Dutch settlers. It is surrounded by water, except on the north, and separated by the river Hudson from the city of New York, 3 miles distant. The county contains a population of 13,223. The courts are held at Hackensack, 56 miles N.E. of Trenton.

BERGEN-OP-ZOOM, a town of Dutch Brabant, capital of a marquise of the same name. It is a handsome place, and its fortress is one of the strongest in the Netherlands, seated partly on a hill, and partly on the river Zoom, which communicates with the Scheldt by a canal. It has several times been besieged to no purpose; but was taken by the French in 1747, and in 1794. In 1814, the English attempted to carry this place by storm; but, after forcing a passage into the town, their retreat was cut off, when they were nearly all killed or made prisoners. It is 15 miles N. of Antwerp, and 22 S.W. of Breda. Pop. 6000. Long. 4. 22. E. lat. 51. 30. N.

BERGERAC, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne, seated on the north bank of the river Dordogne, over which is a magnificent bridge, 24 miles S. by W. of Perigueux, and 48 E. of Bordeaux. Pop. 9285.

BERGOO, an interior district of North Africa, lying to the east of Bergherme; Wara is the chief town.

BERG-REICHENSTEIN, and BERGSTADT, two towns in the circle of Prachin, Bohemia, situate in a mining district, on the frontiers of Bavaria.

BERGUES, a fortified town of France, in the department of Nord, on the river Colme, at the foot of a mountain; 5 miles S. of Dunkirk. It has several manufactures, and is the entrepôt of the corn, cheese, and lace, of the surrounding country. Pop. 5968.

BERIAMPORE, a town of Bengal, made memorable as being the first place at which the disturbances that preceded the Indian mutiny took place, on February 26, 1857.

BERJA, a busy, flourishing, and increasing town of Spain, in Granada; 50 miles S.E. of Granada. It lies under the Sierra de Gador, and is in the heart of the lead mines, of which many hundreds are open, the hills being quite honey-combed; the finest ore sometimes yields 70 per cent. of pure lead. Latterly, some fine smelting and flattening houses have been erected on the coast, and worked with English machinery. Berja is full of new houses, a thing rare in Spain; in them live the wives and families of the miners, while they are mostly lodged in the hills. Pop. nearly 10,000.

BERKHAMPSTEAD, a town in Hertfordshire, with a market on Saturday. Roman coins have been often dug up here; and on the north side are the remains of a castle, the residence of the Kings of Mercia. In 697 a parliament was held here, and Ina's laws published. Here William the Conqueror swore to his nobility to maintain the laws made by his predecessors. Henry II. kept his court in this town, and granted to it many privileges; and James I., whose children were nursed here, made it a corporation; but this government was dropped in the civil wars. The church is a handsome Gothic structure. It is seated on the west branch of the river Gade, on the Grand Junction Canal, and near the Birmingham railway; 26 miles N.W. of London.

and cheese, which is benefited by means of a canal from Gloucestershire. Here is an ancient castle on a rising ground, in which Edward II. was murdered. Berkeley has the honour of giving birth to the justly celebrated Dr. Edward Jenner, the discoverer of vaccine inoculation. It is seated on the little Avon, near its confluence with the Severn; a branch of the Bristol and Gloucester railway also passes through the parish; 15 miles S. W. of Gloucester, and 114 W. of London.

BERKELEY, a frontier county of Virginia, bounded on the north by the Potomac river, which separates it from Pennsylvania. Pop. in 1820, 11,211, being about 350 less than in 1810, and in 1840, 10,972. Martinsburg, 192 miles N. by W. of Richmond, is the chief town.

BERKS, or BERKSHIRE, an inland and very irregular shaped county of England: its length is 48 miles, its breadth 29, and its circumference nearly 208 miles. The river Thames, by a very circuitous course, divides it on the north and east from the counties of Oxford and Bucks, and it is bounded on the west by Wiltshire, and south by Hampshire. Reading, 39 miles west of London, is the chief town; but the assizes for the county are held alternately at Abingdon. At the east end of the county, on the south bank of the Thames, is the castle and extensive domain of Windsor, a residence of the kings of England, and one of the most stately and magnificent abodes in Europe, or the world. The other principal towns are Maidenhead, Newbury, and Hungerford. The county has but few manufactures; some sacking is made in the vicinity of Abingdon, and some ribbons and silk plush in the vicinity of Reading; but its supply of colonial, foreign, and manufactured productions, is obtained by means of a surplus of grain, flour, malt, wool, some cattle and sheep, and a considerable quantity of oak timber. In this county are also Frogmore, Camberland Lodge, Cranbourn Lodge, and other residences of the royal family, with numerous seats belonging to the nobility and gentry. It returns three members to parliament.

BERKS, an interior county of Pennsylvania, bounded on the north-west by the Blue Ridge of the Alleghany Mountains, and intersected from the north-west to south-east by the Schuylkyl River. Pop. 64,569. Reading, 52 miles E. by N. of Harrisburg, is the chief town.

BERKSHIRE, a county forming the whole western boundary of the state of Massachusetts, bordering on the state of New York. Pop. 41,745. Lenox, the chief town, in the centre of the county, is 129 miles due west of Boston.

BERLAMONT, a town of France, in the department of Nord; 6 miles E. S. E. of Quesnoy.

BERLEBURG, a town of Germany, in the Electorate of Hesse, with a castle, seated on the Berlebach, near its confluence with the Eder; 20 miles N. W. of Marburg, and 70 S. E. of Cassel.

BERLIN, a city of Germany, capital of the Electorate of Brandenburg, and of the whole Prussian dominions; one of the largest, best built, and best governed of any in Germany. It is defended partly by walls, partly by palisades, and has sixteen gates. The streets are straight, wide, and long; and its large squares, magnificent palaces, churches, and other buildings, are scarcely to be equalled. The magnificent avenue of lime trees, "Unter den Linden," is 2082 feet long, and 170 broad. It is 12 miles in circumference; but within this inclosure are numerous gardens; and many beautiful houses are let in stories to mechanics. The pop. in 1847, 408,502. The royal palace contains a fine library, a rich cabinet of curiosities and medals, and the supreme colleges of government. Near the palace stands the magnificent cathedral. Here are also several academies and hospitals, an astronomical observatory, a superb arsenal, and a royal cloth manufacture. Berlin has a flourishing trade, occasioned by its numerous manufactures of silk, wool, cotton, camel's hair, linen, Prussian blue, cutlery, and porcelain; and by its enamelled, inlaid, and embroidered works. It is seated on the river Spree, from which there is a canal to the Oder on the east, and another to the Elbe on the west; but it has extensive water communications, and a railway to Potsdam. This city was taken, in 1760, by an army of Russians, Austrians, and Saxons, who were obliged to evacuate it in a few days. In 1806, ten days after the battle of Jena, the French entered this city, and Buonaparte held a court in the palace. It is 100 miles N. of Dresden, and 185 N. W. of Breslau. Long. 13. 22. E. lat. 52. 31. N.

BERLIN, a town in Rensselaer county, state of New York, on the E. bank of the Hudson River; 15 miles E. of Albany. Pop. 1794. It is also the name of several other towns in different parts of the United States.

BERMEO, or BORMEO, a busy, fishing-town of Spain, in Biscay, the ancient Flaviobriga, on the Bay of Biscay, near the Cape of Machicaco, with 4000 amphibious inhabitants; 15 miles E. of Bilbao.

BERMUDA HUNDRED, or CITY POINT, a port of Virginia, in Chesterfield county. The exports from this place are collected at Richmond, 20 miles above it, and to which it is the out-port. City Point, from which it is named, is on the S. bank of James River; four miles S. S. W. of the town. Long. 77. 31. W. lat. 37. 16. N.

BERMUDAS, or SOMERS ISLANDS, four islands in the Atlantic Ocean; 600 miles E. of Carolina, and surrounded by rocks. They were discovered by Juan Bermudas, a Spaniard, in 1527; but not inhabited till 1609, when Sir George Somers was cast away upon them; and they have belonged to Britain ever since. They abound in cedar wood, with which a number of small vessels are built. Some sugar and coffee is cultivated for exportation. They are much subject to hurricanes and tornadoes. Pop. 9000. The principal island is called St. George, and the town, of the same name, is in lat. 32. 22. N. and 64. 33. W. long.

BERN, or BERNE, the largest of the cantons of Switzerland, being 150 miles long and 75 broad. It is the most fertile country in Switzerland, and divided into two principal parts, called the German and Roman; but the last is most commonly called the Pays de Vaud. It is intersected from S. to N. by the river Aar; on the S. E. part are the lakes of Thun and Brienz, and on the N. W. it extends to lake Neuchâtel, and to that of Geneva. The religion is Calvinistic. Pop. in March, 1850, 458,225. See Appendix.

BERNE, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Berne. Here is a celebrated academy and a rich library. It is a strong place, in a peninsula formed by the river Aar; it is estimated to contain 20,000 inhabitants. The houses are built of freestone, and pretty uniform, particularly in the principal street, and there are piazzas on each side, with a walk raised four feet above the level of the street, very commodious in wet weather. The streets are traversed by a canal, and the public buildings are magnificent. BINGENHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Raine; 16 miles N. N. E. of Frankfort.

BINGHAM, a town of Nottinghamshire, in the vale of Belvoir, with a market on Thursday; 9 miles E. of Nottingham, and 124 N. by W. of London.

BINGHAMPTON, a town of the United States, in New York, at the junction of the Chenango and Susquehanna rivers. It is connected by the Chenango canal to the Erie canal at Utica, and the New York and Erie railway passes through it; 138 miles S.W. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 2800.

BINGLEY, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday; seated on the Aire. The worsted, paper, and cotton manufactures are carried on here, and there is also a good trade in malt; 14 miles S. E. of Skipton, and 202 N.N.W. of London.

BIOBIO, the largest river of Chili, which rises in the Andes, runs through an arid plain, and, passing the city of Concepcion, enters the Pacific Ocean, in lat. 36. 56. S. It is the boundary between Chili and the country of the Araucan Indians.

BRONEBURG, a town of Russian Finland, near the mouth of the Kune, in the Gulf of Bothnia; 75 miles N. of Abo. Long. 22. 5. E. lat. 61. 42. N.

BIR, EL-BIR, BEER, or BIREDOIK, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbeck, with a castle. It stands on the E. bank of the Euphrates, near a high mountain, in a fruitful country; 60 miles N.E. of Aleppo. This is the point which was proposed for the steam navigation of the Euphrates to commence, the merchandise being conveyed overland from the Gulf of Iskenderoon, to which this is the nearest part of the river.

BIRBOOM, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal; 66 miles W.S.W. of Moorshedabad, and 115 N.N.W. of Calcutta.

BIRD ISLANDS, in the Caribbean Sea, E. of Curacoa.

BIRKENFIELD, a town of Germany, in the county of Sponheim, in the circle of Upper Rhine; seated near the source of the river Nahe; 25 miles E.S.E. of Treves. It is distinguished for its cattle fairs.

BIRKENHEAD, a seaport town of England, county Chester, on the W. shore of the Mersey, directly opposite to Liverpool. Wet and dry docks for the accommodation of the shipping have been constructed here, and has raised this place greatly both in size and consequence. It was made a parliamentary borough, with one member, in 1861.

BIRMAH, an extensive empire in Asia, to the E. of the Bay of Bengal; containing the kingdoms of Birmah, Cassay, Arracan, and Pegu, and all the W. coast of Siam, to the promontory of Malay, extending from the 10th to the 24th deg. of N. lat. The kingdom of Birmah, frequently called Ava, from the name of its ancient capital, has Pegu on the S. and occupies both sides of the river Irrawaddy, or Errabatty, to the frontiers of Assam on the N.; on the W. it has Arracan and Cassay, and on the E. China and Upper Siam. This kingdom was conquered in 1752, by the king of Pegu, who carried the Birman monarch prisoner to Pegu, and caused him to be murdered there in 1754; but Alompra, a Birman of low distinction, who was continued by the conqueror as chief at Monchaban, a small place to the N. of Ava, revolted against the Peguese, got possession of Ava in 1755, and, after continued battles, with various success, became the conqueror of Pegu, in 1757. This deliverer of his country continued in a state of warfare to his death in 1760; and his successors have since added the other countries, which now form the Birman Empire. The climate of Birmah is very salubrious, the seasons being regular, and the extremes of heat and cold seldom experienced. The soil is remarkably fertile, produces rice, sugar-canes, tobacco, indigo, cotton, and all the tropical fruits, in perfection; and on the banks of the Irrawaddy, which runs S. through the whole country, is produced pure amber, and the finest teak timber in the world. The kingdom of Birmah abounds in minerals; it has mines of gold, silver, rubies, and sapphires; and affords amethysts, garnets, chrysolites, jasper, loadstone, and marble. The general disposition of the Birmanians is strikingly contrasted with that of the natives of Hindostan, though separated only by a narrow ridge of mountains, in several places admitting of an easy intercourse. The Birmanians are a lively, inquisitive race, active, irascible, and impatient; but the character of their Bengal neighbours is known to be the reverse. The passion of jealousy, which prompts most eastern nations to immure their women, and surround them with guards, seems to have little influence on the minds of the Birmanians; for their wives and daughters have as free intercourse with the other sex as the rules of European society admit. The Birmanians are extremely fond both of poetry and music. Their religion is, in fact, that of the Hindoos, though they are not votaries of Brama, but sectaries of Boodh. Their system of jurisprudence is distinguished above any other Hindoo commentary, for perspicuity and good sense. The emperor of Birman is a despotic monarch, and, like the sovereigns of China, acknowledges no equal. The prevailing characteristic of the Birman court is pride. There are no hereditary dignities or employments in the government, for all honours and offices, on the demise of the possessor, revert to the crown. A white elephant is here paid almost divine honours, and has a palace, and allowed rank next to the king, and above the queen. The capital of the kingdom, and metropolis of the empire, is Ummerapoura, in lat. 22. N. and 96. E. long., and the principal seaport is Rangoon. Hostilities commenced between the Birmanese and Anglo-Indians, in 1824, and at the close of 1825 continued with equivocal results to both parties. Rangoon, the maritime capital, surrendered to the English on the 1st of Feb. 1825.

BIRMINGHAM, a large, inland, populous, and important town of England, in Warwickshire, bordering on the counties of Worcester and Stafford. It is a place of great antiquity, and has long been celebrated for its works in every kind of metal, and the manufacture of hardware, fire-arms, cutlery, japanned wares, and trinkets. The era of its pre-eminence, however, is comparatively recent: its commencement may be dated subsequent to the war of 1776—1783; since when it has more than doubled in extent and population. The Staffordshire border abounds in iron and coal of the finest quality, which contributes essentially to the excellence and facility of most of its manufactures. The town is considered peculiarly healthy, the chief part being built along the ridge of a hill, having a dry, sandy soil. The streets are regular, and the buildings spacious. The church of St. Philip, built in 1711, is a stately and fine edifice; there are three other churches, besides several chapels. It has several sectarian meeting-houses, a well-endowed public school, a handsome theatre and an extensive suite of baths. The perspective of the town, especially on the E. side, is very imposing; and, independent of its innate importance, being nearly in the centre of the kingdom, it is a place of vast intercourse. It has a canal basin at its highest level, from whence cuts diverge in every direction, by which the manufactures of the district are conveyed to all the ports of the kingdom, for distribution over every part of the habitable globe. Its principal improvement is the magnificent railway between it and London, one of the greatest and most important works ever executed, and which communicates, by means of the Grand Junction Railway, with Liverpool, Derby, York, Sheffield, &c., the North Midland, and the Midland Counties Railways, forming a chain of communication with all parts of England. The surrounding country is very fertile, and its markets on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday, are in consequence, exceedingly well supplied with all the essentials of subsistence. Birmingham, notwithstanding its size and importance, had no representatives in parliament, until the passing of the Reform Bill: it now returns two members. It is governed by a mayor, town-council, and aldermen. In 1643, Birmingham was besieged and taken by Prince Rupert, and ordered to be burnt to the ground, but, owing to some propitious circumstances, the conflagration did very little damage. In 1665, or 1666, the town suffered severely from the plague. It began shortly after this period to be considerably enlarged, though in 1700 it consisted of only 30 streets; whereas there are now upwards of 300. Within 2 miles of the town are the Soho Works, celebrated as the engineering establishment of Boulton and Watt. It is 109 miles N.N.W. of London, by way of Coventry or Warwick, from each of which it is distant 18 miles; and 116 by way of Oxford, from which it is distant 58 miles.

BIRNAM, a hill of Scotland, in Perthshire, celebrated by Shakspeare in his Macbeth, 1580 feet above the level of the sea. It was anciently a forest and part of the royal domain of Scotland.

BIRR, or PARSONS TOWN, a parish and town of Ireland, in King's County, near the borders of Tipperary. Close to the town is Birr Castle, the seat of the Earl of Rosse, where some of the finest reflecting telescopes have been made, and the largest of which has been erected in the grounds. It is 34 miles N. E. of Limerick, and 34 N. N. W. of Kilkenny.

BIRVIESCA, a town of Spain, in Old Castile; 13 miles N. of Burgos.

BIRZA, a town of Poland, in Samogitia; 42 miles S. E. of Mittau.

BISACCIA, a town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore; 15 miles N. E. of Conza. Pop. 5000.

BISCARA, a town of Algier, in the province of Constantina, and the chief place of the district of Zaab. It is an ancient town; 120 miles S. S. W. of Constantina. Long. 5. 12. W. lat. 33. 35. N.

BISCAY, or VISCAYA, a maritime province on the N. coast of Spain, and is the largest of the Basque provinces, (which see.) The country is in some parts mountainous, but well covered with wood, and yielding abundance of iron and lead. The plains and valleys are well cultivated, yielding ample supplies of all that is essential to the comfort of the inhabitants. The Biscayans are a brave, choleric people, possessing a character, and speaking a language, distinct from that of every other part of Spain; and through all the mutations to which Spain has been exposed, during a period of 2000 years, by the irruptions of Romans, Carthaginians, Moors, &c., Biscay has retained its ancient Cantabrian laws and independence, and at the present time forms an independent republic under the protection of Spain, rather than an integral part of the kingdom. It admits a corregidor and commissary appointed by the crown, but permits no taxes to be levied, without the sanction of the province, and yields none to the crown but as gratuitous donations, and sanctions no title of the king but that of lord. The language is a dialect of the Celtic, called the Euskarian, by some considered as derived from the Tartarian or Mongolian. Pop. 111,433. See Appendix.

BISCAY, BAY OF, a large bay of the Atlantic Ocean, washing the N. coast of Spain, from Cape Ortegal, and the W. coast of France. During a prevalence of westerly winds, the swell of the Atlantic Ocean sets into this bay, and renders the reach of the British Channel, to vessels from the S. and S. W., exceedingly difficult, and, if the gales are powerful, quite unattainable until they subside; there being, however, plenty of searoom, it is a position of tediousness and labour, rather than of danger.

BISCAY, NEW, a name given by the Spaniards to a part of the W. coast of Mexico; now incorporated with the intendency of SONORA, DURANGO, and GUADALAJARA, (all of which see.)

BISEGLIA, a seaport town of Naples, prov. Terra di Bari, on the Adriatic; 12 miles E. S. E. of Barletta. It is ill-built, and surrounded by lofty stone walls; the seat of a bishopric, has a cathedral and several other churches; it has little external trade. It is supposed to be the site of a Roman city, but no antiquities have been found to bear out this supposition. Pop. 10,000.

BISCHOFSTEIN, a town of Prussia Proper, about 50 miles S. of Königsberg, and 5 S. E. of Heilsberg.

BISCHOFSEHEIM, a town of the duchy of Wurtzburg, seated on the Tauber; 20 miles S. S. W. of Wurtzburg. Another, seated on the Rhine; 44 miles N. by E. of Wurtzburg.

BISCHOFSLACK, a town of Upper Carniola, with a good trade in linen and worsted; 17 miles W. by N. of Laybach.

BISCHOFSEWERDA, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, seated on the Weiseritz; 18 miles E. of Dresden.

BISCHOFSEWERDEN, a town of Prussia, in the province of Oberland, on the river Oss; 28 miles N. E. of Culm.

BISCHOFZELL, a town of Switzerland, in Thurgau, with a castle; seated at the confluence of the Sitter and Thur; 12 miles S. of Constance.

BISCHWELLER, a town of France, department of Lower Rhine. Pop. 5854; who manufacture leather, cloth, &c.; 10 miles from Strasburg.

BISENTZ, a town of Moravia, near the frontier of Hungary; 15 miles S. W. of Hradisch. Pop. about 2600.

BISHOPS-AUCKLAND, Stortford, Waltham, and Wearmouth. See AUCKLAND, &c.

BISHOPS-CASTLE, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Friday, much frequented by the Welsh. It is seated near the river Clun; 8 miles S. E. of Montgomery, and 159 W. N. W. of London.

There are about thirty-six other towns and villages with Bishop, or Bishops prefixed to their names, in different parts of England.

BISIGNANO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore, with a castle; seated on a hill, near the river Bocono, 16 miles N. of Cosenza. Great numbers of silkworms are raised in the vicinity. Pop. 10,000.

BISLEY, a town in Gloucestershire; 3 m. S. E. of London. It has a large church, standing on an eminence. Population much employed in the woollen manufacture.

BISNAGUR, or BISNAGUR, town of Hindostan, in the country of Sanore. It was the capital of the ancient kingdom of Narsinga, and formerly a large city. It is seated on the S. bank of the Toombudra; 28 miles S. S. E. of Sanore, and 105 N. by W. of Chitteldroog. Long. 76. 0. E. lat. 15. 20. N.

BISNEE, a town of Bootan, capital of a district on the borders of Bengal and Assam. It is 50 miles E. N. E. of Rangamutty, and 130 S. E. of Tassasudon. Long. 90. 45. E. lat. 26. 27. N.

BISSAOS, or BEJUGAS, a cluster of volcanic islands and shoals, on the W. coast of Africa. The largest, called Bissao, is 80 miles in circuit, inhabited by Portuguese and Negroes, and well cultivated. Its N. end is opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande. Long. 15. 10. W. lat. 10. 58. N.

BISSUNFOUR, a town of Hindostan, capital of a circar in Bengal; 74 miles N. W. of Calcutta.

BISTRICZ, a free royal town in the N. E. part of Transylvania, on the river Bistricz; 142 miles N. E. of Coloswar. Also the name of another town in the circle of Frers, Moravia.

BITCHE, a fortified town of France, in the department of Moselle, with a citadel on a rock, which is vaulted and casemated in the interior. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, near the river Schelw; 30 miles N. by W. of Strasburg. Pop. 3077.

BITETTO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari; 11 miles S. E. W. of Bari. Pop. 5000.

BITONTO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari. It is described as a fine town, and the people as being better off than in most cities on the coast. It is the seat of a bishopric; the environs produce an excellent wine. In 1734, the Spaniards here gained a signal victory over the Austrians. Pop. 12,000.

BITTERFELD, a town of the kingdom of Saxony, seated on the Mulda; 14 miles S. of Dessau.

BIZERTA, or BENZART, a seaport town of Tunis; 40 miles N. N. W. of Tunis. It is defended by walls and two castles, but being commanded by a neighbouring height, it has little real strength. The neighbouring country is exceedingly fertile in corn, &c., and, if possessed by any others than the Turks, it would become a prosperous and wealthy place. The harbour, once one of the best in the Mediterranean, can now be approached by small vessels only; but it might easily be put in a good state. Pop. 12,000.

BLACKBURN, an extensive parish and borough in the centre of the county of Lancaster, England, and on the E. Lancashire and Lancashire and Yorkshire Railways. Parts of the parish are bleak and dreary, but it is partly situate on the great coal strata, which supplies abundance of fuel. The town of Blackburn is seated in a valley, on both sides of a stream called the Derwent, over which there are four bridges, and it is skirted by the Leeds and Liverpool Canal. It is connected with the Lancashire network of railways. Its chief prosperity is the cotton manufacture, of which it is one of the earliest seats. James Hargreaves, of this place, invented the spinning jenny in 1767. It has all the attendant occupations of bleaching, dyeing, iron founding, and machine and reed-making. Markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays. It has a free grammar school with an endowment of about 150*l.* per annum, and also a female charity school with nearly a similar endowment; four churches, two of them handsome, and several meeting-houses; 12 miles E. by S. of Preston, and 23 N. W. of Manchester. It sends two members to parliament.

BLACK FOREST, a mountainous and woody district of Germany, part of the ancient Hyrcinian Forest, extending N. from the frontiers of Switzerland, for about 100 miles parallel with the N. course of the Rhine. It is in some places rich in iron and other metals; and its wood is very valuable, as well for fuel, as for building, both of houses and vessels for navigating the Rhine.

BLACKHEATH, an elevated and spacious plain, the ascent to which is 5 miles E. of London Bridge. It is partly in the parish of Greenwich, and the upper part of the park of the hospital of Greenwich, is part of the plain. It is intersected by the great high road from London to Dover, and is celebrated in several periods of English history. The Danes encamped upon it in 1012. In 1390, the celebrated Wat Tyler assembled 100,000 men against the government, to avenge an insult offered to his daughter by a petty tax-gatherer at Dartford. In 1450, Jack Cade assembled his forces on the same spot; and in 1497 it was the scene of a contest between Henry VII. and Lord Audley. It is surrounded by detached, and ranges of handsome buildings, residences of some of the more opulent classes connected with the transactions of London. It commands some fine prospects, and in the summer season, especially, is a beautiful and interesting spot. In the side of the ascent from London, is a cavern consisting of seven large rooms, which communicate by arched avenues; the sides and roofs of rocks of chalk; and it has a well of clear water, 27 feet deep.

BLACKNESS-CASTLE, a fort of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, built on a kind of peninsula on the Frith of Forth; 9 miles N. E. of Linlithgow. It consists of four bastions, and is one of the forts which, by the Articles of Union, are to be kept in repair.

BLACK SEA. See EUXINE.

BLACKWALL, an appendage of the metropolis of the British empire, situate in a nook at the S. E. extremity of the county of Middlesex. It is bounded on the E. by the river Lea, which divides it from the county of Essex, at its junction with the Thames, which from Blackwall towards London Bridge makes a very considerable detour, the distance by the course of the river being about 10 miles; which led to the construction of a tide canal, nearly a mile in length, across the isthmus, but which is now disused; and also to the construction of basins or docks for the reception of all the ships arriving from the West and East Indies. The West India dock establishment is the most magnificent and complete work of the kind in the world; it consists of two outer basins from the river at Blackwall, which lead to the grand receiving basin, an oblong square, 1200 yards in length. It was first opened in 1802. Between the West India docks and the river Lea, are two spacious basins for the reception of all the ships from China and the East Indies, with store-houses for the ships' stores, saltpetre, and some of the more bulky productions; but all the more valuable articles are stored in warehouses in different parts of the E. side of London. There is also the largest private ship-building yard in the world, now divided into two, where eight or ten ships, averaging 1000 tons each, are occasionally on the stocks, or repairing, at one time. Blackwall commands a very extensive view down the river, which draws a constant succession of visitors to witness the unrivalled passing scene of vessels from and to all parts of the world, which almost every flood and ebb of the tide presents. It is connected with the heart of London by means of a railway.

BLACKWATER, a river of Ireland, which flows through the counties of Cork and Waterford into Youghal Bay.

BLACKWATER, a river in Essex, which flows into Blackwater Bay, near the mouth of the Thames. It is also the name of four or five rivers in the United States of America, but all inconsiderable.

BLANKENBURG, a town of the duchy of Brunswick, on a rivulet of the same name; 37 miles S. S. E. of Brunswick. On an adjoining hill is an unprepossessing palace of the dukes of Brunswick; and at a short distance are the remains of a castle cut in the rock by Henry the Fowler, A.D. 919. Pop. 3300.

BLANKENESSE, a town of Holstein, on the N. bank of the Elbe; 9 miles W. by N. of Hamburg. Pop. about 2000.

BLANKENHAYN, a town of Saxony; 10 m. S. W. of Jena. Pop. about 1850.

BLANTYRE, a parish of Scotland, county Lanark, 8 miles S. E. of Glasgow. The manufactures of cotton, &c., have made great progress in this town of late years, and very creditable endeavours are made to improve the social condition of the work-people, by the establishment of schools, a library, and other institutions for their benefit.

BLARNEY, a parish and town in the county of Cork, Ireland. The town is situate about 4 miles N. W. of Cork, on a branch of the river Lee, which works a paper-mill: the cotton manufacture was attempted to be introduced about 1820. Here is a castle, on the top of which is the famous Blarney Stone.

BLAS, SAN, a seaport town of Mexico, on an island at the mouth of the Rio Grande, or Santiago river, which falls into the Pacific Ocean in lat. 21. 30. N., and 104. 46. W. long. It is very unhealthy, and from this cause has greatly declined; its pop. of 20,000 having dwindled down to 3000, in 1848. Mazatlan has correspondingly increased.

BLAUBEREN, a town of Suabia, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg, with a castle on a hill. Great quantities of fustian and linen cloth are made here. It is seated at the confluence of the Aeh with the Blau; 11 miles W. of Ulm.

BLAYE, a seaport of France, in the department of Gironde, on the E. bank of the river of that name; 34 miles N. N. W. of Bordeaux. It has a good citadel, and a fort on an island in the Gironde, or Garonne, which is here 2½ miles wide. Its trade consists in the wines of the adjacent country. Its harbour is much frequented, being the out-port to Bordeaux, as Gravesend is to London; ships bound to Bordeaux having guns on board, leave them at Blaye. Pop. 3266.

BLEKINGEN, a province of Sweden, in Gothland, on the coast of the Baltic. It is 90 miles long and 21 broad; and, though mountainous, is one of the most agreeable countries in the kingdom. The principal trade is in potash, pitch, tar, tallow, hides, and timber. The chief town is Carlsrona.

BLBNHEIM, a village of Suabia, now in the Bavarian circle of the Upper Danube, seated on the Danube; 3 miles N. of Höchstst. It is memorable for the signal victory over the French and Bavarians, gained August 2nd, 1704, by the Duke of Marlborough. The Austrians were defeated by the French near this place in 1800.

BLISWORTH, a parish in Northamptonshire, 4½ miles from Towcester, 63 from London, at the junction of the Peterborough with the London & N. Western Railway, which latter line passes through a remarkable cutting.

BLOCKZYL, a town of Holland, in Overysel, with a fort; seated at the mouth of the Aa, on the Zuyder Zee, where there is a good harbour; 8 miles N.W. of Steenwich. Long. 5. 39. E. lat. 52. 44. N.

BLOIS, a city of France, capital of the department of Loire and Cher, and lately an episcopal see. The cathedral is a large structure, seated on an eminence at one extremity of the city; and on another eminence at the other end is a magnificent castle. In this castle Louis XII. was born; and here, in 1588, Henry III. caused the Duke of Guise, and his brother the Cardinal, to be assassinated. Here are some fine fountains, supplied by an aqueduct, supposed to have been erected by the Romans. The principal commerce is in wine and brandy; and the chief manufactures are serges and ticken. It is seated on the Loire, over which is a handsome bridge; 37 miles E.N.E. of Tours, and 100 S.S.W. of Paris. Pop. 11,423.

BLONIEZ, a town of Poland, in Masovia; 20 miles W. of Warsaw.

BLOOMINGTON, a town of the United States, in Indiana. It has several public buildings, including the Indiana University, founded in 1827; 49 miles S.W. of Indianapolis.

BLORE, a village in Staffordshire, 10 miles N. of Uttoxeter. Its heath is famous for a battle between the houses of York and Lancaster, in which Nevil, Earl of Salisbury, for York, with 500 men only, defeated Lord Audley with 10,000. The latter was killed, and on the spot is erected a stone cross to his memory.

BLOSSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, 133 miles N.N.W. of Harrisburg. In its vicinity is the celebrated bituminous coal-mine. A railroad connects it with Corning, in New York, and thence there is continuous navigation to Albany.

BLUEFIELDS, a town on the E. coast of Central America, the capital of the Mosquito territory, at the mouth of the river of the same name. Lat. 11 19. north, long. 83. 40. west.

BLUE MOUNTAINS, several mountains so called in different parts of the world; viz. 1st. Intersecting the island of Jamaica from E. to W.; North Peak is 8180 feet above the level of the sea. 2nd. The most easterly ridge of the Allegany, in the state of Pennsylvania, extending in a S. W. direction, from the Delaware to S. of the Susquehanna river; altitude 3000 to 4000 feet. 3rd. A more southern branch of the same ridge, extending in the same direction from the N. of the Potomac river, through the state of Virginia into North Carolina; Outer Peak is 3103 feet high, and is the highest point in all Virginia; the passage of the Potomac river through this ridge is peculiarly grand. 4th. An extensive range in New South Wales, dividing the districts on the coast, from Bathurst plains. 5th. Intersecting the island of Java in various directions.

BLUE SULPHUR SPRINGS, a watering-place in the state of Virginia, and much resorted to. There is no village except the range of buildings for visitors, in a valley surrounded by picturesque mountains. They are 22 miles W. of the White Sulphur Springs, which are still more frequented, and 227 miles N. by W. of Richmond.

BLYTH, a large parish and town at the N. W. extremity of the county of Nottingham, bordering on Yorkshire. The town is 5 miles N. of Worksop; it has a market on Thursday.

BLYTH, a town of Northumberland, England, situate at the mouth of a river of the same name, which falls into the German Ocean; 14 miles N. N. E. of Newcastle. It has a railway to North Shields, and a large trade in coals. There are two other rivers of this name in England; viz., one in the county of Suffolk, falling into the sea at Southwold, and another in the county of Warwick, falling into the Tame, below Coleshill.

BOAD, a town of Hindostan, in Orissa, on the river Mahanuddy; 65 miles S. S. E. of Sumbulpour, and 115 W. of Cuttack.

BONBIO, a walled town of Italy, in the Milanese, on the river Trebia; 25 miles S. E. of Pavia. It is a bishop's see. Pop. 4000.

BOBERSBERG, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark, and duchy of Crossen; seated on the side of a hill, by the river Bober; 5 miles S. of Crossen.

BOBINGEN, a town of Bavaria; 9 miles S. of Augsburg. Pop. about 1500.

BOBRAWA, a town in the circle of Brunn, Moravia; 4 miles S. W. of Bistitz.

BOBRETZ, a town in the county of Liptau, Upper Hungary, among the Carpathian Mountains. Pop. about 1700.

BOHRYSK, a town in the palatinate of Minsk, Lithuania; situate E. of the Bobrignia river, just above its confluence with the Berezhina.

BOCA, signifying a month, is a term which has been prefixed by the Spaniards, to the names of several straits or sea-passages in different parts of South America; the most celebrated is the north strait, between the island of Trinidad and the coast of Cumana, called the Boca del Drago, or Dragon's Month.

BOCA TIGRIS, a strait in Canton river, China.

BOCHETTA, a chain of mountains in the territory of Genoa, over which is the road into Lombardy. On the highest mountain is a strong pass that will hardly admit three men to go abreast; and this is, properly, the Bochetta. It is the key of Genoa, and was forced by the French in 1796, and by the Austrians in 1800.

BOCHOLT, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster, on the river Aa; 40 miles W. of Munster. There are rich iron mines in the vicinity. Pop. 4000.

BOCKENHEIM, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Hildesheim, on the river Nette; 13 miles S. S. E. of Hildesheim.

BOCKING, a large village in Essex, adjoining to Braintree. Its church is spacious; and here is a great manufacture of baize.

BOCKUM, a town of Westphalia, in the reg. of Arnsberg, 26 miles S. E. of Wesel. Pop. 4200.

BODEN SEE. See CONSTANCE LAKE OF.

BODMIN, a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. The summer assizes are held here. It has some manufactures of serge, and a trade in wool and yarn. The church is the largest in the county; and the remains of an episcopal palace and a priory are still to be seen. It is 32 miles N. E. of Falmouth, and 235 W. by S. of London. It returns two members to parliament.

BODROGH, a river of Upper Hungary, rising among the Carpathian mountains, and falling into the Theiss at Tokay.

BOO, or BUG, a river which rises on the south border of Volhynia, in Poland, flows through Podolia and Budzac Tartary, and enters the Black Sea, between Oczakow and the river Dnieper.

BOGLIO, or BEUL, a town of Savoy, situate on the Tinea; 21 miles N. N. W. of Nice.

BOGLION, a town of Austrian Istria; about 30 miles S. S. E. of Trieste.

BOGLIPOUR, a town of Hindostan, capital of a circar in Bengal; seated on the Gauges, 112 miles N.E. of Moorsshedabad.

BOGNOR, a village in Sussex; 7 miles S. of Chichester. It is an improving place, and much frequented in summer for sea-bathing.

BOGODOUK, or BOGODOUCNOW, a large inland town of European Russia, in the prov. of Kharkov. It has considerable manufactures of leather. Pop. about 7000.

BOGOTA, a river of Columbia, which falls into the Pacific Ocean, in the lat. of 1. N.

BOGONODITSK, a handsome town, containing about 5000 inhabitants; in the province of Toula, Russia.

BOGOTA, ST. FE DE, a large town of S. America. Since the threefold division of the republic of Colombia, it has been more commonly called Bogota, and made the chief town and seat of the republican government of New Granada. It is situate on a spacious and fertile plain, on the most easterly ridge of the Andes, in the lat. of 4. 36. N. and 73. 30. of W. long., at an elevation of 8958 feet above the level of the sea, which, notwithstanding its contiguity to the equator, renders its climate comparatively temperate and agreeable. It is intersected by a small river called the Bogota (hence its recent appellation,) which falls into the Magdalena, W. of the ridge of mountains on which the town is situate. The town is tolerably well laid out, having four squares, containing some handsome buildings. It has a university, consisting of three colleges; and although its remoteness from the sea, and destitution of water communication, will militate against its becoming a place of the first magnitude, should it continue to be the seat of government, it will doubtless considerably increase both in extent and population, which at present amounts to about 40,000. It is about 450 miles N. E. of Quito. About 15 miles S. W. of the town, at a place called Tequenadama, the river Bogota falls down a precipice, 900 feet deep, with great fury, and is an object of considerable attraction to the strangers who visit Bogota.

BOGWANTOOR, a town of Bahar, Hindostan; a few miles S. E. of Benares.

BOHEMIA, a kingdom and very compact territory in the centre of Europe; supposed to have derived its name from a tribe of Celts called the Boii, and was originally more extensive, including Lusatia and Silesia on the N.E., and Moravia on the S.E. Previous to 1547, it was an independent kingdom, having an elective form of government, the popularity of which excited the jealousy of the emperor of Germany, Ferdinand I., who obtained at that period the consent of the Germanic diet, to declare it an hereditary appendage of the dominion of Austria. This union was severely contested on the part of the Bohemians for about 70 years; but since 1690, they have implicitly yielded to the Austrian yoke. Bohemia, in its present extent, is in the form of a diamond, and lies between the lat. of 48. 35. and 51. 5. N. and 12. 20. to 16. 30. of W. long. Its southern point borders on Upper Austria, and it is bounded by Bavaria on the S.W., Saxony on the N.W., Lusatia and Silesia on the N.E., and Moravia on the S.E. Its extreme length and breadth will be about 180 by 190 miles, but each of the four sides of its quadrilateral figure will not average more than about 125. and as such give a superficial extent of 15,625 square miles.

Since 1751, it has been divided into the sixteen following circles, named after the principal towns, (exclusive of Prague, the metropolis of the whole territory, which has a separate jurisdiction :) viz :—

Bohemia is considered the most elevated part of Europe, no rivers running into it. The Spree, the Neisse, and the Bober running north through Lusatia and Silesia, have their source on the frontiers of the circle of Bunzlau and Königgrätz, and the Elbe has its source in the latter circle, near the frontier of Silesia, running south into the circle of Chrudim, and then takes a north-west course, bounding the circle of Bunzlau on the south, intersecting Leitmeritz towards Dresden, in Saxony. The Moldau rises near the frontier of Austria, at the south extremity of the circle of Budweis, and runs nearly due north past Prague, into the Elbe at Milnik, in Bunzlau. Several streams have their sources in the circle of Pilsen, which unite near the town of that name, and there form the Beraun, which runs into the Moldau a little below Prague. The Egen intersects the circle of Saaz from south-west to north-east, falling into the Elbe a little below the town of Leitmeritz. These rivers, with their several tributary streams, contribute alike to the diversity and fertility of the country. There are also several small lakes in the south part of the circle of Budweis. The frontiers on all sides, except on that of Moravia, are mountainous and woody, whilst the whole of the interior possesses a soil of great capability; but as a species of feudal tyranny pervades the whole territory, it naturally precludes all excitement to social exertion, and its productions are consequently confined to a bare means of subsistence. It grows a considerable quantity of flax, which, as well as their wool, is manufactured into linens and cloths, for domestic use, and some on the side of Lusatia and Silesia, for exportation. Almost every kind of mineral is found in one part of the country or the other; and, having but little external intercourse, every branch of manufacture is carried on as domestic occupations for internal supply. It has several mineral springs, but is deficient in the essential article of salt, part of the supply being obtained from external sources.

On the subjugation of Bohemia by Austria, the ancient form of government was retained, but it was merely the form: an absolute and despotic dictation nullified whatever was calculated to justify or vindicate the rights of man, and the conduct of blind passive obedience may now be considered as firmly established in Bohemia, as in any part of Europe, or the world. The established religion of Bohemia is the Roman Catholic, and; before the year 1781, the Protestants were not permitted the free exercise of their worship: at present all religious creeds are tolerated. Out of a population of about 4,500,000, the dissentients from catholicism do not exceed 100,000, about half of whom are Jews. In time of peace, about 50,000 men are maintained in arms, to support whom and other state pretensions, exactions, equal to about 2,000,000*l.*, English money, are imposed on the productive labours of the people. The original language of Bohemia seems to have been Slavonic, a dialect of which is still common in the country; but the German or high Dutch is spoken with considerable purity.

BOHMERWALD, a dense mountain forest, forming the S. W. boundary of Bohemia. The term implies Bohemian Forest, Baum in German signifying wood; Bohm is probably a corruption of that term in Bohemia, and may have given name to the country, signifying a woody country, and the two following places as situated in woods.

BOHMISCH AIGLE, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bunzlau; 20 miles N. of Jung Bunzlau.

BOHMISCH BROD, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Kaurzin; 14 miles E. S. E. of Prague.

BOHOL, one of the Philippine islands, to the N. of Mindanno. Long. 124. 5. E. lat. 10. 0. N.

BOHOL, or BOOL, a town at the mouth of a river of the same name, falling into the Sooloo Sea, on the N. coast of the Isle of Celebes.

BOHUS, or BAHUS, a small district of West Gothland, Sweden, bordering on the Cattergat, N. of Gottenburg. Stromstadt, on the coast, in lat. 58. 56. N. and 11. 15. E. long., is the principal town.

BOJADOR, a cape on the W. coast of Africa, doubled by the Portuguese in 1433. Long. 14. 27. W. lat. 26. 12. N.

BOJANO, a town of Naples, in the Molise, at the foot of the Appennines, on the E., near the river Tilerno. In 1805, it suffered greatly by an earthquake, and most of the inhabitants were destroyed. It is 45 miles N. N. E. of Naples.

BOIS LE DUC, or HERTOGENBOSCH, a fortified city of Dutch Brabant, capital of a district of the same name, which contains also the towns of Helmont and Eyndhoven. It has a castle named Papenbricel, and a little to the S. are two forts, called Isabella and St. Anthony. It was taken by the French in 1794. It is situate among morasses, on the river Dommel, where it receives the Aa; 22 miles E. by N. of Breda, and 45 S. S. E. of Amsterdam. Pop about 13,000.

BOISCOMMUN, a town of France, in the department of Loiret; 25 miles N. E. of Orleans.

BOITZENBURG, a town of Lower Saxony, in Mecklenburg, at the confluence of the Boitze with the Elbe; 30 miles S. W. of Schwerin.

BOITZENBURG, a town of Brandenburg, in the Upper Mark; 10 miles W. of Prenslow.

BOKHARA, a city of Bokhara. It disputes, with Samarcand, the title of capital, and stands on a rising ground, surrounded by a slender wall of earth, and a dry ditch, on the S. side of the river Sodg. The streets are all exceedingly narrow, the widest not admitting more than one wheeled carriage; there are numerous ponds and fountains, which supply the town with water, and several canals also intersect it. The bazaars are very busy scenes, being all day long crowded with the buyers and sellers. The principal building is the khan's palace, built on an elevation in the centre of the city, walled and fortified; there are 360 mosques, and more than that number of colleges and schools, all of which are tolerably well built of brick, with stone court-yards, particularly a college built by king Abdoolla, in 1650; it is the handsomest structure in Bokhara. The inhabitants are most inveterate teardrinkers, this luxury being vended in all quarters at all hours. The Jews are comparatively very numerous, being 4000. There is a great traffic in foreign and home merchandise. The pop. is estimated at 150,000, (?). In 1220, Bokhara was taken by Jenghis Khan, with a numerous army, who burnt the city, and demolished the castle; but after the city had remained in ruins some years, he at length ordered it to be rebuilt. It is 115 miles W. by S. of Samarcand. Long. 62. 56. E. lat. 39. 4. N.

Asin, bounded on the N. by Turkestan, E. by Cashgur, S. by Hindostan and Persia, and W. by Khorasan and Kharesm. It is fertile in corn and fruit, and the best cultivated of any part of Tartary. The inhabitants, chiefly Usbec Tartars, are in general tawny, with black hair, but some are white and well made; they are cleanly in their habits, but dreadfully demoralized. They are not warlike, but use the bow, lance, and sabre. The original inhabitants are a Persian colony, and still use the Persian language. They live in cities, and carry on commerce with Russia and Persia. The government is despotic; religion Mohammedan.

BOKHARIA, Little. See CASHGUR.

BOLAHOA, one of the Society Islands, in the Pacific Ocean; 4 leagues N. W. of Otaha. Long. 151. 52. W. lat. 16. 32. S.

BOLBEC, a town of France, dep. Lower Seine; 18 miles N. N. E. of Havre. It is a handsome, thriving town, with a flourishing manufacture of cotton; also linen and woollen goods, leather, &c. The work-people are all in good circumstances, and contented. Pop. 9302.

BOLCHERESK, a town of Kamtschatka, on the river Bolchoireka, 22 miles from its mouth, in the sea of Okotsk. Long. 156. 37. E. lat. 52. 54. N.

BOLI, a city of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia; 85 miles N. W. of Angora. It is seated on an eminence, by a rich and fertile plain, on the site of the ancient Hadrimopolis. It is a poor place, chiefly inhabited by Turks; it is on the route from Erzeroum to Constantinople. There are mineral baths in the neighborhood. Pop. 6000. (?)

BOLINGBROKE, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Tuesday. It was the birthplace of Henry IV.; 29 miles E. of Lincoln, and 133 N. by E. of London.

BOLIVAR, or SAN TOMÉ DE ANGOSTURA, capital of the province of Spanish Guiana, in the republic of Venezuela. It is seated on the Orinoco, about 230 miles from its mouth, and was built in 1764, after the old town of San Tomé, nearer the sea, had been pillaged by the English, French, and Dutch. Through its inconvenient position, and the badness of the navigation of the river, it is not a flourishing place; it is well built, but badly paved. Pop. about 8000. The name was changed to Bolivar in 1846.

BOLIVIA, or UPPER PERU, a new republic of South America, bounded on the E. by Brazil, S. by La Plata, or the Argentine republics, W. by the Pacific and Chili, and N. W. by Peru. In 1778, when the Peruvian vicerealty was divided, the districts of La Paz, Potosi-Charecas, and Santa Cruz, were added to the vicerealty of Buenos Ayres. These now form the republic of Bolivia. Peru was the last of the Spanish colonies that succeeded in throwing off the yoke, which was accomplished by the brilliant victory of Ayacucho, on Dec. 9th, 1824. Since that time there have been many changes in these two republics. Of its present position, but little satisfactory is known; but it is said that its political constitution is similar to that of Peru. Respecting its population, nothing can be more vague than the estimates, which vary from 500,000 to 1,500,000. It is divided into 9 departments, of which the areas, in square miles, subjoined, are mere estimates:

DEPARTMENT.	AREA.	DEPARTMENT.	AREA.
La Mar . . .	30,000	Chuquisaca . .	24,000
Cnti	20,000	Cochabamba . .	18,000
Tanja	12,000	La Paz	65,000
Potosi	40,000	Sta. Cruz de } la Sierra . . }	150,000
Oruro	12,000

In former times, this country was one of the most productive in the world in the precious metals; at present it is much less so. Many mineral treasures exist among its mountains; but the great difficulty, distance, and expense of transport, prevent their being profitably worked. Chuquisaca is the seat of the central government.

BOLKENHAYN, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Schweidnitz, a few miles W. of the town of Schweidnitz; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the linen manufacture.

BOLKOWITZ, or POLKWITZ, a town of Silesia; 12 miles S. of Glogau.

BOLOGNA, a city of Italy, capital of the Bolognese, and an archbishop's see. It is about 5 miles in circumference, and contains 70,000 inhabitants. It has long been distinguished as a school of science; the university being one of the most ancient and celebrated in Europe. An academy of arts and sciences was founded in 1712, and contributed greatly to that fame which it has acquired. As a school of painting, it is immortalized by the number of masters it has produced; there are here 74 churches, besides convents and nunneries; and these, as well as the numerous mansions of the nobles, are most magnificently furnished with their best productions. Nor have the exertions of art been confined to the sphere of painting; the city exhibits some of the finest monuments of architecture, such as the palace of Caprarina, the marble fountain in the Piazza-del-Gigante, and in fact almost every building of any note. In the centre of the city are the two celebrated leaning towers. The academy of arts and sciences is a building of great magnificence, and the public theatre is one of the largest and most beautiful in Italy. The church of St. Petronius is the largest in Bologna, but is more remarkable for its pavement, where Cassino drew his meridian line, 180 feet long. The trade of Bologna is very considerable, being situated in a fertile country, and having an easy conveyance of its produce by a canal to the Po. The exuberance of the adjacent country enables the inhabitants to furnish all Europe with the greatest delicacies in confectionery, distilled waters, essences, &c.; oil, wine, flax, hemp, and silk, also furnish abundant sources of trade and employment. The Reno, which passes by the city, turns no less than 400 mills for silk-works. It is situated at the foot of the Appennines; 22 miles S. E. of Modena, and 175 N. W. of Rome. Long. 11. 21. E. lat. 44. 30. N. It was taken possession of by the French in 1796, but restored to the states of Rome at the general peace in 1815.

BOLOGNESE, a province of Italy, bounded on the N. by the Ferrarese, W. by Modena, S. by Tuscany, and E. by Romagna. It is watered by many small rivers, and produces all sorts of grain and fruit, particularly rich muscadine grapes. Some miles before the entrance into Bologna, the country seems one continued garden. The vineyards are not divided by hedges, but by rows of elms and mulberry-trees; the vines hanging in festoons from one tree to another. There are also mines of alum and iron. Bologna is the capital. There are about 300 other towns, containing a population of about 210,000.

BOLSENA, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, on the lake of its name; the ancient Volsinium, 18 miles N.N.W. of Viterbo. Pop. 2000.

BOLSOVER, a town in Derbyshire, with a market on Friday. It has a spacious castle on the brow of a hill, and is noted for the manufacture of tobacco pipes. It is 6 miles E. of Chesterfield, and 145 N. N. W. of London.

BOLSWAERT, a town of Holland, in Friesland, near the Zuyder Zee; 10 miles N. of Sloten. Near this town, which is about 2 miles in extent, was formerly an abbey of the Cisterians, where the Munster Anabaptists took refuge in 1534, and where William, count of Holland, was buried in the 14th century.

BOLTON-LE-MOORS, a large and populous borough in Lancashire, consisting of two townships, Great and Little Bolton. It is so called from its situation amidst several extensive moors, and also to distinguish it from another town in the N. part of the county, called Bolton-le-Sands. It is 11 miles N.W. of Manchester, on the Lanca-hire and Yorkshire Railway, and, next to Manchester, is one of the most considerable stations of the cotton manufacture, the branches more particularly pursued being those of muslins, dimities, and counterpanes. The canal to Manchester, from which there is a branch to Bury, has added materially to the prosperity of the place; but still greater advantages are derived from the railways, of which it is the centre, diverging to L'pool, Preston, Bury, Manchester, &c. Besides the parish church, here are eight other episcopal churches of recent erection, a Roman Catholic chapel, and about twenty-three meeting-houses for dissenters, with various schools and charitable institutions. A town-hall, for the transaction of public business, has been lately erected. Market on Mondays, well supplied with provisions. Under the Reform Bill, it sends two members to parliament. The Earl of Derby was executed here, in 1651, for proclaiming Charles II.

There are 12 other towns and villages named Bolton, besides Bolton on the Sands, in different parts of England.

BOMARSUND, a fortified town on the Aland isles, at the entrance of the Gulf of Bothnia in the Baltic. It was, after a fierce bombardment, taken from the Russians by the allied British and French, August 16, 1854.

BOMAL, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxembourg, on the river Ourt; 20 miles S. of Liege.

BOMBAY, (Bom-bahia, good bay, Portuguese,) an island, city, and presidency on the W. coast of the Deccan of Hindostan. It came to the English by the marriage of Charles II. with Catherine of Portugal, and was made over to the East India Company, in 1688, when it was made the seat of government of all their possessions on that side of Hindostan, which was previously at Surat, and it is now one of the three presidencies by which their oriental territories are governed. It contains a strong and capacious fortress, a city, dockyard, and marine arsenal. Here the finest merchant ships are built, all of teak supplied from the neighbouring countries, which is more durable than the best English oak; and in 1819 the Minden, 74 gun ship, was launched, having been built entirely under the superintendance of a Parsee. The ground is in general barren, and good water scarce; but it has abundance of cocoa-nuts, and its markets are well supplied with every delicacy. The population of Bombay is estimated at 230,000, three-fourths of whom are Hindoos, the remainder Mahometans, Armenians, and Jews, and about 8000 Parsees, or Fire Worshipers, of whom some are the richest merchants in the place. The city of Bombay, next to Calcutta, may be considered the most commercial place in all Hindostan; its interchange with China is very great, the export of cotton sometimes amounting to nearly 45,000,000 lbs. per annum. It is much resorted to by traders from Persia, Arabia, Abyssinia, Armenia, and all parts of western Asia, as well as from most of the islands of the Indian Ocean, and all the eastern parts of Asia; and the commercial transactions are conducted with more integrity than is usual in Asiatic cities. It is about 150 miles S. of Surat, and 1050 W. by S. of Calcutta. The electric telegraph connects it with Madras, Calcutta, and Lahore, and is in course of extension towards Europe, lat. 18. 53. N., and 72. 53. E. long.

BOMBAY, a township of New York, U. S. It contains the reserve and settlement of the St. Regis Indians, on the St. Lawrence river;

232 miles north of Albany. Population in 1840, 1446.

BOMENE, a seaport of Holland, in Zealand, on the N. shore of the island of Schowen; 3 miles E. of Brouwershaven.

BOMMEL, a town of South Holland, in the isle of Overflakke; 7 m. W. of Williamstadt.

BOMMEL, a strong town of Holland, in Guelderland, in the island of Bommelwert, on the river Want; 21 miles S. by E. of Utrecht, and 7 N. of Bois-le-Duc. Pop. about 3000.

BOMMEL-ERT, an island of Holland, formed by the junction of the Waal and Maese. It lies in the province of Guelderland, except a small district in the west end, which belongs to South Holland. It is 15 miles in length, from Lowestein to Fort St. Andrew, and is not more than four miles in the broadest part. It was taken by the French in 1672, and again in 1794.

BONA, a seaport of Algier, in the province of Constantina. Near it are the ruins of the ancient Hippo Regius. It has a trade in corn, oil, wax, and wool; it is 270 miles E. of Algier. Long. 7. 45. E. lat. 36. 52. N.

BONAIN, or BUEN AYRE, a fertile island in the Caribbean Sea, to the E. of Curaçoa. It is 60 miles in circuit, and has a good harbour and road on the S. W. side. Long. 68. 18. W. lat. 12. 10. N.

BONAVISTA, one of the Cape Veril islands, so called from its beautiful appearance to the first discoverers, in 1450; but it is now become barren, through the extreme idleness of the inhabitants. Long. 22. 47. W. lat. 16. 6. N.

BONAVISTA, a cape on the E. side of the island of Newfoundland. Long. 52. 32. W. lat. 48. 15. N.

BOND, an interior county of the state of Illinois. It is intersected by the Kaskaskia river. Pop. 2931. Independence, 10 miles S. by W. of Vandalia, is the chief town.

BONDORF, a town of Swabia, in the Black Forest, capital of a county which joins the Brisgau. It is 7 miles S. by W. of Furstenburg, now included in the territory of the duchy of Baden.

BONDOT, an interior country of N. Africa, lying between the rivers Senegal and Gambia, inhabited by the Foulah race, with many distinctive marks of the Arabs, who are industrious and social in their habits, and chiefly Mahometans in religion.

BONNESS, or BONROWSTONESS, a town of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, with a safe and commodious harbour on the Frith of Forth. It has a considerable trade in ship-building and coal, and extensive manufactures of salt and stoneware. It is 5 miles N. of Linlithgow. Pop. 2809.

BONI, or BONY, a spacious bay between the two southern promontories of the Isle of Celebes. It has numerous shoals and rocks, and is commonly called Bugges Bay by Europeans. Near the upper end of the bay, on the shore of the western promontory, is the town of Boni, which is the capital of a kingdom of the same name, but little known. The inhabitants are partly Mahometans. It is in the lat. of 3. S. and 120. 30. of E. long.

BONIFACIO, a fortified seaport of Corsica, with a good harbour and a coral fishery. It stands on a small peninsula, at the S. extremity of the island; 45 miles S. of Ajaccio. Long. 9. 9. E. lat. 41. 25. N. Pop. about 3000.

BONN, a city of Germany, in the territory of Prussia. It has a flourishing university, four parish churches, and several religious foundations. It was taken by the Duke of Marlborough, in 1703, and by the French in 1794. It is seated on the Rhine; 14 miles S. by E. of Cologne. Pop. 13,000.

BONIN or ANZŌJISPO ISLES, a small group in the North Pacific, S. E. of Japan; discovered in 1825 and 1827 by Admiral Beechy, and colonised in 1830. Lat. 27° 5' N.; long. 142° 11' E.

BOOSNAH, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal; 98 miles N. E. of Calcutta.

BOOTAN, or BUOTAN, a mountainous country of Hindostan Proper, lying between the province of Bengal and Thibet. Area 65,000 square miles. Pop. about 1,500,000. It is a feudatory province of Thibet, and abounds in mountains covered with verdure, and rich with abundant forest trees; there is scarcely a mountain whose base is not washed by some torrent, and many of the loftiest bear populous villages, amid orchards and plantations, on their summits and on their sides. The southernmost ridge of the Bootan mountains rises near a mile and a half above the plains of Bengal, in a horizontal distance of only 15 miles; and from the summit the astonished traveller looks on the plains below as on an extensive ocean. The Booteas are much fairer and more robust than their neighbours the Bengalees, with broad faces and high cheek-bones; their hair is invariably black, and cut short; their eyes small and black, with long pointed corners; and their skins remarkably smooth. The houses are built on props, and ascended by a ladder: the lower part, closed on all sides, serves for holding stores, and accommodating hogs, cows, and other animals. The capital is Tassasudon.

BOOTHIA FELIX, a district in the Arctic regions, discovered by Captain Sir John Ross, in 1829. It lies to the W. of the Gulf of Boothia, a continuation of Prince Regent's Inlet, but the S. shore is unexplored. It is remarkable as containing the northern magnetic pole, in lat. 70. 0. 4. N. long. 96. 45. W.

BOOTLE, a village in Lanenshire, contiguous to Liverpool, which it supplies with fine fresh water, from abundant and never-failing springs, near the sea-shore.

source of the Bistritz river, on the eastern frontier of Transylvania, bordering on the Bukowine. They have salt-springs, and some manufactures of earthenware. The pop. is considerable, principally Wallachians.

BORGO, Sr. DONNINI, a walled town in the duchy of Parma, so called from the martyrdom of Donnini, who was beheaded here in 304. It is a bishop's see, and is situate about midway on the road from Placentia to Parma. Pop. 4000.

BORGO DI ST. SEPOLCRO, a town of Tuscany, in the Florentino, with a fort, seated near the source of the Tiber; 12 miles N.E. of Arezzo. In 1789, about 1000 of the inhabitants were destroyed by an earthquake.

BORGOFRONTE, a town of Italy, in the Mantuan, on the river Po, at the influx of the Oglio, 10 miles S. of Mantua; and nine others, all inconsiderable.

BORGO, or BURGO D'OSMA, a town of Spain, surrounded with walls, and containing about 200 families; 33 miles W. of Soria, and 40 S. E. of Burgos.

BURGO DI ST. ANGELO, a fortress of the island of Malta, a little to the E. of Valetta.

BORJA, or BERGOSA, a town of Spain, in Arragon, in a fruitful spot, near Mount Cayo, at the foot of the Pyrenices; 42 miles W.N.W. of Saragossa.

BORJA, a town of Columbia, situate on the head waters of the river Amazon, 300 m. E. by N. of Paita, and 90 W. by N. of Jean. Long. 76. 36. W. lat. 4. 15. S.

BORJA, a town in the province of Buenos Ayres, near the frontier of Brazil. It was founded by the Jesuits.

BORISOGLEBSK, a town of Russia, situate on the banks of the Verona, near the S. end of the province of Tamboy, about 300 miles S. E. of Moscow. It is also the name of a town in the province of Jaroslav, on the W. bank of the Volga, a few miles N. of the city of Jaroslav. Pop. of each about 3000.

BORISSOW, a town of Russian Poland, on the banks of the Berezina; about 45 miles E. of Minsk. It is only worth notice from the disasters of the retreating French army in 1812, in the passage of the Berezina.

BORKELOW, a strong town of Holland, in the county of Zutphen, remarkable for having been the subject of two wars: one in 1665, against the Bishop of Munster, and the other with France, in 1672. It is seated on the river Borkel, 15 miles E. N. E. of Zutphen.

BORKEN, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster, with a collegiate church; seated on the Aa; 38 miles W. of Munster.

BORKUM, an island of the kingdom of Hannover, lying between the E. and W. channels of the Ems river. It is partly inundated at high water. It has a town of the same name, the inhabitants subsisting chiefly by fishing. The steeple of the church is used for a lighthouse.

BORNIO, a town of Austrian Italy. About a mile from the town are medicinal baths. It is seated at the foot of the mountains, on the river Fredolso, near its confluence with the Adida; 40 miles S. E. of Coire. Pop. 5500. Long. 10. 20. E. lat. 46. 17. N.

BORNIO, or BORNIDA, a large river of Piedmont, which rises in the territory of Finale, runs N., intersecting the duchy of Monterrat, falling into the Tanaro, a little below Alessandria.

BORNA, a town of Upper Saxony, in the circle of Leipsic, with a manufacture of stuffs; seated near the river Pleyssie; 13 miles S. E. of Leipsic, on the road to Altenburg.

BORNEO, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, discovered by the Portuguese in 1521; lying between the lat. of 4. 10. S. and 7. N., and 109. 15. to 119. 25. W. long., being in its extreme length 775 miles, and 650 in extreme breadth; a surface greater than that of any island in the world, except Australia, being about 262,500 square miles, or nearly five times larger than Great Britain.

Although under the equator, the air is not so excessively hot as might be expected, being frequently refreshed with showers and cool breezes, the thermometer varying from 82 to 94. of Fahrenheit. In the monsoon, from April to September, the wind is westerly, and the rains are constant and heavy, attended with violent storms of thunder and lightning. The rainy season continues for eight months, and during that time all the flat country, from ten to twenty miles from the coast is overflowed, and the air rendered very unhealthy. For this reason, the inhabitants build their houses on floata, which they make fast to trees. They have but one floor, with partitions made with canes; and the roofs are covered with palm-branches, the eaves of which reach within four or five feet of the bottom. Some of their houses are built upon pillars, a sufficient height from the surface not to be deluged. The countries on the coast are inhabited by a mixture of Malays, Javanese, and Macassars.

The natives of the interior parts of Borneo are the Dyaks, who are the real natives of the country. The coast regions are occupied by various settlements of Malays, who have much oppressed the less warlike Dyaks. They are an interesting race of people, and one of their curious customs is that of preserving the heads of those slain, and of which each Dyak is obliged to procure one. These are all hung up in the principal house of their villages. Besides the orang-outang, which seems to be a native of the soil of Borneo, are apes, monkeys, bears, goats, deer, horses, buffaloes, and other horned cattle, tigers, and the elephant; whilst on the other side is a class of beings with apparently no other claim to the character of man but that of the power of articulation; and yet, amidst this unsocial and unappreciating race of beings, Nature seems to have bestowed, in lavish profusion, all her most delectable gifts; with iron, tin, and various other metals, for purposes of utility, gold, diamonds, and various other precious gems for ornament, abound. It is here that the salangane, a species of swallow, constructs its edible nest, which is exchanged, to gratify the luxurious palates of the Chinese, at a rate double its weight of silver. In the vegetable kingdom, in addition to rice and maize for substantial subsistence, the sensations of taste and smell are here to be gratified in the highest possible degree. Cassia, cinnamon, frankincense, and myrrh, are indigenous productions of the country. The laurus camphoratus yields an endless abundance of its fragrant and inflammable substance; whilst agaric, musk, aloes, and various other substances and plants, are dispersed over the country in endless profusion, to aid the domestic and social economy of man, and to serve as alternatives in case of accident or disease. On the other hand, the pernicious and poisonous class of plants and reptiles are also common; and the natives appear equally adept at applying them in revenge against their enemies, as in the application of alteratives to avoid their consequences. Thus, whilst the soil of Borneo appears susceptible, by social arrangements and due cultivation, to subsist, in a high degree of comfort and enjoyment, a fourth of the whole population of the globe, the total number of inhabitants are supposed not to exceed 4,000,000, divided into numerous petty sovereignties. With the exception, however, of the coast, very little is known as to the extent and condition of the population. The English East India Company formed some settlements upon the coast, towards the close of the 17th century; but, in 1706, the Dutch drove the English entirely from the country, and for more than a century were the only European nation that maintained any direct intercourse with the island. During the war, subsequently to the peace of Amiens, in 1802, when in their turn the Dutch were driven from all their positions in Asia, the English again established themselves on the coast of Borneo, and were making progress in the arts of cultivation and social economy, when, by treaty, in 1816, the Dutch were reinstated in their possessions, and Borneo again exposed to their exclusive line of policy. But through the recent cession from the native chiefs to our countryman, James Brooke, the sovereignty of the district of Sarawac, on the N. W. coast, has been assumed by him under the title of rajah. Recent disturbances, however, have greatly impaired its prosperity; but there is still hope that Sarawac, in connection with our new settlement of the island of Labuan, near the city of Borneo, will become of great importance. As far as our knowledge of the country does extend, whilst the coast on all sides is low and swampy, the interior seems much intersected by mountains; a river, called the Banjar, has its source in the centre of the country, about two degrees north of the equator, runs south into the sea of Java; and there are two or three rivers running from E. to W., falling into the sea on the west side; but the north and east coast appears deficient in the essential of rivers for internal communication by water. There are, however, several fine harbours and roadsteads round the coast; the principal is Bander-massing, at the mouth of the Banjar; Sambar, at the south-west point; Sambas, on the west coast; Borneo, at the north-west; and Passir, at the south-east.

BORNEO, BRUNAI, or BRUNI, the capital of the island of Borneo, the largest of the Asiatic archipelago. It is a city built upon the waters. The houses are all built on piles, and occupy the shores and the centre of the river Bruni, at 15 or 12 miles from its mouth. At high water, the dense mass of houses have no connection with the shores, and the streets are filled with an immense number of boats. One of the most amusing parts of the city is its immense floating Bazaar. It is affirmed that the colony was first formed by some Malays from Johore, in Malacca. The present population of Bruni is estimated at 22,500, and is in lat. 4. 52. N. long. 114. 55. E.

BORSHEIM, a town in the electorate of Cologne; about 15 miles W. by N. of Bonn. Pop. about 1100. Also a town of the Netherlands; about 10 m. N. E. of Dendermonde.

BORSUUM, an island of Denmark, just within the Baltic; of an oval form; about 20 miles in length, and 14 wide, and nearly surrounded by rocks. The soil is stony, but fertile, with excellent pasture; and there are mines of coal, and quarries of marble. It lies 24 miles S. E. of the southern extremity of Sweden. The chief town is Ronne, on the W. side; the north end has a lighthouse on it.

BORNOS, a town of the province of Seville; about 15 m. N. E. of Cadiz. Pop. about 3000.

BORSOU, an extensive empire in the interior of North Africa, having Foussa on the west, and Nubia on the east. It consists of a number of oases, or fertile spots, interspersed with arid wastes. The climate is said to be characterized by excessive, though not by uniform heat. Two seasons, one commencing soon after the middle of April, the other at the same period in October, divide the year. The first is introduced by violent winds from the south-east and south, with intense heat, a deluge of sultry rain, and such tempests of thunder and lightning as destroy multitudes of the cattle, and many of the people. At the commencement of the second season, the ardent heat subsides; the air becomes soft and mild, and the weather perfectly serene. Maize, rice, the horse-bean, cotton, hemp, and indigo, are cultivated; and there are figs, grapes, apricots, pomegranates, lemons, limes, and melons. The most valuable tree is called redeynah, in form and height like an olive, the leaf resembling that of the lemon, and bearing a nut, the kernel and shell of which are in great estimation, the former as a fruit, the latter on account of the oil it produces. Horses, asses, mules, dogs, horned cattle, goats, sheep, and camels (the flesh of which is much esteemed,) are the common animals. Bees are so numerous, that the wax is often thrown away as an article of no value. The game consists of partridges, wild ducks, and ostriches, the flesh of which is prized above every other. The other animals are the lion, leopard, civet cat, wolf, fox, elephant, buffalo, antelope, and camelopardalis; and there are many snakes, scorpions, centipedes, and toads. The complexion of the natives is black; but they are not of the negro cast. The dress of the greater part consists of shirts of blue cotton, manufactured in the country, of a red cap, brought from Tripoli, and a white muslin turban, from Cairo. Nose-rings of gold are worn by the principal people. But the only covering of the poorer sort is a kind of girdle for the waist. In their manners the people are courteous and humane; they are passionately fond of play; the lower classes of draughts, and the higher excel in chess. More than thirty different languages are said to be spoken in Bornou and its dependencies; and the reigning religion is the Mahometan. The monarchy is elective. The sultan is said to have five hundred ladies in his seraglio, and his stud contains likewise five hundred horses. His dominions extend beyond the desert into the fertile country of Negroland, of which he possesses a large portion. He has a vast army, which consists almost entirely of horse: the sabre, pike, and bow, are their weapons of offence, and a shield of hides is their armour.

BORNOU, the capital of the empire of the same name, with a palace like a citadel. The whole city is surrounded by a high wall, encompassed with a ditch; but the other towns of the kingdom are open. The principal trade is in gold-dust, slaves, horses, ostriches' feathers, salt, and civet. It is seated on the Yen; 750 miles E.N.E. of the mouth of the Niger. Long. 14. 5. E. lat. 19. 45. N.

BORO BUDOR, the chief temple of the Javanese; situate about 60 miles from Sumararang, nearly in the centre of the island. It is dedicated to Boohd, and contains several hundred subordinate idols.

BORODINO, a village of Russia, near the river Moskwa; about 90 miles W. of Moscow. It will long be memorable in the annals of Russia, for the desperate conflict between the French and Russian armies, during the march of the former towards Moscow, on the 7th of September, 1812, when about 30,000 men on each side were either killed or wounded.

BOROUGHBRIDGE, a town in West Yorkshire; market on Saturday. The earl of Lancaster and the rebel army were here defeated by the troops of Edward II, and the earl being taken prisoner, was at once beheaded. It is 18 miles N. W. of York, and 206 N. by W. of London.

BOROVITCHI, a town of Russia, on the S.E. side of the province of Novogorod; bordering on Twer; seated on the S. bank of the Msta river; about 170 miles S. E. of St. Petersburg. Pop. 2600.

BOROWISK, or BOROVSK, another town of Russia; about 60 miles S.W. of Moscow.

BORRIANO, or BORRIAL, a town of Spain, in Valencia, near the mouth of the Minjares; 21 miles N. of Valencia. Pop. about 4000.

BORRIS, in Ossory, a village in the parish of Aghaboe, Queen's County, Ireland; 63 m. W. by S. of Maryborough.

BORROS, a parish in Queen's County, Ireland, which includes the town of Maryborough, by which name the parish is sometimes called. See MARYBOROUGH.

BORROMEI ISLES, four beautiful isles in the S. part of Lake Maggiore, N. Italy. On Isola Bella there is a fine palace and gardens.

BORROWDALE, a village in Cumberland; 6 miles S. of Keswick. It stands at the end of a narrow and crooked valley, and is famous for mines of wadd, or black-lead, a substance almost peculiar to England, and the vicinity of Malaga, Spain.

BORROWSTONES. See BO'NESS.

BORROD, a county in the N. part of Upper Hungary, bounded on the E. by the Szujo branch of the Sheif river. It is one of the most fertile districts of the country. Pop. about 95,000. Mishkoltz is the capital.

BOSA, a seaport on the W. coast of Sardinia, and a bishop's see, with a castle, on a river of the same name; 17 miles S. S. E. of Argeri. Long. 8. 25. E. lat. 40. 16. N. Pop. 3500.

BOSCAWEN ISLAND, an island in the Pacific Ocean; about 10 miles in circumference. Long. 175. 10. W. lat. 15. 50. S.

BOSCO, or BOSCHI, a town of Italy, in the Milanese, seated on the Orbe; 5 miles E. of Alexandria.

BOSCOBEL, a village in Shropshire, 9 m. S. E. of Newport, where Charles II. was concealed in an oak, after the battle of Worcester.

BOSHUANA, or BECHUANA, an extensive tract of country in the interior of S. Africa, extending through about 5 deg. of lat. from 25. to 20. S., inhabited by numerous tribes of people, of whom at present very little is known. They seem, physically considered, to be of the same stock as the Caffres, but somewhat more advanced in social economy, which seems to improve northwards. Hence it may be inferred, that civilization and improvement in Africa gradually extended itself from the north. The chief town, as far as the country is at present known, is Lakatoo, represented to have contained about 15,000 inhabitants, reduced to 7 or 8000 during the 2nd deceannary of the present century, by the continued intestine broils of the different tribes. They cultivate various kinds of grain, and look upon fish, as an article of food, with horror. As far as pretension to worship prevails, the people are idolaters; but they seem indifferent to worship of any kind: polygamy is general; the elder men have usually one young wife, and another who is past child-bearing. Mahomedism appears not to have reached them. Their dress is principally of skins, which they tan into leather; and, in the more northern parts, they appear to have made some progress in the smelting and working of iron. See CAFFRARIA.

BOSNA-SERAI, the capital of Bosnia. It has a considerable trade with Dalmatia, and manufactures of swords and cutlery. It is of considerable extent, and interspersed with gardens; 125 miles S.W. of Belgrade. Pop. 60,400.

BOSNIA, a compact and naturally fertile district of European Turkey, lying between the lat. of 42. 18. and 45. 10. N., and the 16th and 21st of W. long. It is bounded on the W. by the Austrian province of Croatia; N. by the Saave river, which falls into the Danube, and divides it from Slavonia; on the E. by the Turkish province of Servia; and S. by the N. end of Albania and Dalmatia. It has some mountain districts, and is intersected by several rivers, running from the N. into the Saave; and the Narenta, which rises in the S. part of the province, runs S. through Dalmatia, into the Adriatic at Narsi, a few miles N. of Ragusa. Its area may be stated at about 15,000 square m.; yet the population is supposed not to exceed 800,000. As a frontier district, it is principally occupied by Turkish soldiery, who are sanctioned in subsisting themselves upon the products of the occupiers of the soil; and, as the soldiery of the province amount to 40 or 50,000, they of course tend to subdue all excitement to agricultural exertion; and thus, although the vine and the olive would yield fruit in abundance, one of the finest districts in Europe is kept a wilderness, by an undisciplined, lawless, and ruthless horde of soldiery. The principal towns are Bosnia Serai, the capital; Banjaluka, Svornik, Traunik, (the seat of the pacha,) and Priserendi. As far as any external commercial intercourse is maintained with Bosnia, it is principally through Dalmatia from Ragusa. The greater part of the province formerly belonged to Hungary. The inhabitants are principally Slavonians, speaking the Slavonic with great purity, and professing the creed of the Greek church.

BOSPORUS, the narrow strait, 20 miles in length, and from 1 to 1½ broad, which unites the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmora. It is sometimes called the Strait of Constantinople. It is of exceeding beauty, and the shores are lined with splendid kiosks and houses of the Constantinopolitans, for almost its whole length.

BOSSINY, or THEVENNA, a village in Cornwall, seated near the Bristol Channel; 17 miles N.W. of Launceston, and 233 W. by S. of London.

BOST, a strong town of Persia, capital of Segistan, or Seistan. It is seated on the Heermund, and on the route of the caravans from Ispahan to Caubul; about 170 miles W. S.W. of Caudahar. Long. 64. 15. E. lat. 32. 30. N.

BOSTAN, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the N. part of the province of Aladeul, situate near the eastern confines of Caramania, and near the source of a river which falls into the Levant at Adanah. Pop. above 8000.

BOSTON, a borough and seaport town of Lincolnshire, England. When the idle, the crafty, and the vicious, sought subsistence and refuge, and the oppressed and indigent relief, from monastic institutions, Boston ranked among the most important towns in the country, having had not less than ten fraternal establishments; all of which were annulled, and the inmates dispersed, under the general demolition of those institutions by Henry VIII. After this reverse, when England exchanged her agricultural productions and raw materials, for the haberdashery and other manufactures of Germany and Holland, Boston became one of the principal markets in the kingdom for wool, which used to be exported in large quantities to Holland and the Hanse Towns; but, on the exportation of wool being totally prohibited, Boston was doomed to a further reverse, and gradually declined until towards the close of the last century. It has, since the commencement of the present century, gradually been rising in population and importance. The town is situate on both the banks of the river Witham, over which is a handsome bridge, of one arch, of cast iron, eighty-six feet in span, a few miles above the entrance of the river into the sea called Boston Wash, with which river, and by canals, it communicates with a considerable portion of the interior of the country; and, in addition to its very considerable trade in grain for the London market, it carries on a direct trade with the Baltic for deals, hemp, tar, &c. The parish church, founded by St. Botolph, in 1309, is a very stately edifice, being 382 feet in length, supported by Corinthian pillars, lighted by pointed windows, and its steeple ascended by steps, corresponding in number with the months, weeks, and days in the year. The steeple or tower is 263 feet in height, surmounted with a lantern, which serves as a beacon for many miles out at sea, and the country being very level inland, it forms a beautiful and interesting object in the perspective, many miles distant. The town is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, and eighteen common councilmen, with subordinate officers, who are vested with the admiralty jurisdiction of the adjoining coasts. The corporation, since 1800, have erected a commodious fish-market, which is abundantly supplied, and large quantities are conveyed into the interior counties of Nottingham and Leicester. The markets for grain, &c., are on Wednesdays and Saturdays. It is at the junction of the present Gt. Northern and E. Lincolnshire Rys., and returns two members to parliament. It is 36 miles S.E. of Lincoln, and 116 N. of London.

BOSTON DEERS, is the sea channel of the inlet called the Wash, leading from the German Ocean by the Lincolnshire coast, up to the port of Boston. The opposite side which washes the coast of Norfolk, is called Lynn Deeps. The bottom of the Wash is a large shoal, partly dry at low water; and even the Deeps are the reverse of what their name implies, not admitting, at the most, vessels of more than 200 tons burthen. It is proposed to recover a large portion of this bay from the sea, by means of an embankment.

BOSTON, the chief town of New England, North America, N. of New York, and the seat of the legislative government of the state of Massachusetts. The old town is beautifully located on a peninsula of an irregular form, about 5 miles in circumference, united on the S. side with the main land by an isthmus nearly a mile in length, and about the eighth of a mile broad; situate at the head of a spacious bay, and surrounded inland, at a distance of 5 to 7 miles, with a range of hills running in a semicircular direction, beautifully diversified with foliage, and forming altogether a very prepossessing scene. The bay is about 10 miles in length, formed by Alderton Point S., and Nahant Point N. Between these points, nearest to Alderton, is a cluster of small islands, on the most southern of which is a lighthouse, in the lat. of 42. 22. N. and 70. 53. W. long., being 10 miles E. of the town. On this island is the signal station for announcing to the town the number and description of vessels approaching from sea; and between it and Alderton Point is the principal ship channel into the bay, which contains about eighty small islands, mostly uninhabited, but several of them affording pasture for cattle and sheep. On one of them within about 4 miles of the town, is a fort and garrison, peculiarly well adapted to protect the town from any external attack, and for the maintenance of all maritime regulations, the ship channel being within pistol-shot of the N. side of the island. Having passed this island, a vessel is considered within the harbour, which has been known to have been frozen so as to enable persons to travel on foot from the town to the fort; but this is of rare occurrence, and the harbour may be considered accessible at all seasons of the year, and as affording secure accommodation for 500 sail of vessels of the largest capacity. There is sufficient depth of water for ships of 500 to 600 tons burthen, proceeding quite up to the town, and discharging their cargoes directly upon the quays. A tongue of land projects into the harbour from the main part of the town, on which is a spring of fine fresh water, which supplies all the shipping of the port, under local and judicious regulations. The ground is of sufficient width to afford convenient quay room and passage between it and a range of warehouses originally constructed of wood, but since 1800 substantially rebuilt four stories high, of brick. This is called Long Wharf, and is the principal focus of the coasting vessels. It lends from the harbour in a direct line up the principal street of the town, called State-street, in which are all the insurance offices and banking establishments, in and about which the principal merchants and traders assemble daily. At the upper end of this street is the old state-house, and contiguous is the court-house, record, and post-offices. Since 1806 vast improvements have taken place S. of Long Wharf; several extensive ranges of warehouses have been built, including a new custom-house, public sale-room, and observatory. The house in which the legislature of the state hold their sittings is on the W. side of the town; it is a spacious edifice of brick, and having an elevated site, and being surmounted with a dome, is a very prominent object. The private residences on this side of the town are spacious and handsome, and exceeded by none in all America. In the market-place, N. of State street, is a ponderous edifice, supported by pillars, called Faneuil Hall, in which the town meetings are held. It has two theatres, several literary and benevolent institutions, and about one hundred places for religious worship; and, independent of the neck, it is connected with the main land by five bridges; the first is on the N. side of the town leading to Charlestown, a populous and important place; and, although not within the civil jurisdiction of Boston, commercially it may be regarded as an integral part, the two being as closely identified as Southwark and London. This bridge is upwards of 1500 feet in length; the second on the W. side of the town, is about two-thirds of a mile in length, leading to Cambridge, distant about 4 miles, at which is the principal university in all America; the third is on the S. side of the town; and a fourth constructed is between those of Charlestown and Cambridge. These bridges are all of wood, but are well constructed, and the last two are as substantial and elegant as the materials of which they are constructed admit. They are all private or joint-stock properties, and encumbered with tolls. South Boston extends about 2 miles along the S. side of the harbour, and is elegantly laid out. About its centre are the Dorchester Heights, celebrated in the revolutionary history. East Boston is on an island, and connected with old Boston by a steam ferry, and to Chelsea by a bridge; the Eastern railroad commences here. At East Boston is also the wharf for the Liverpool steam ships. Among the pub-lie places of Boston, the Common is the most distinguished, and is now one of the finest public grounds in America. By means of the Middlesex canal, Boston has communication with the Merrimack, and recently a railroad has been opened to Albany, opening a vast trade to the west. Boston is distinguished as the birthplace of Benjamin Franklin, and as the place which engendered the revolution that led to the independence of the United States. It was founded in 1630, and the first church was built in 1632. At an early period after the confederacy was acknowledged, the Bostonians embarked in the fur trade of the N. W. coast, which, by exchanging the skins in China for teas and silks, proved a source of vast wealth, and thereby laid the foundation of a general commerce, more extensive and important than in any other town of the union, except New York. Boston has several distilleries of rum from molasses, which is imported in large quantities from the Havannah and other West India islands, in exchange for flour, rice, lumber, and fish. It has a manufacture of window-glass, several roperies, and various manufactures of articles of primary necessity; and in the vicinity there are extensive tanneries and paper-mills. It is at present deficient in water communication inland; the harbour has been united with the Merrimack river by a canal, but the traffic has hitherto been inconsiderable. The local jurisdiction of the town, since 1821, has been similar to civic corporations in England, and now consists of a mayor, court of 8 aldermen, and a common council. The population in 1840 was 93,383, and if to this be added the population of Charlestown, and the population contiguous to Cambridge Bridge, and of Roxbury, continuous to the isthmus, all of which, in a social point of view, may be considered as having one common interest, and forming an undivided community, it will give a total population of 122,365 at that period. In 1845, the census of Boston gave 114,366 as the population of Boston alone. It is about 300 miles S. S. E. of Montreal, 210 N. E. of New York, and 436 N. E. by E. of Washington. Lat. 42. 21. 23. N. long. 71. 4. 9. W.

BOSWORTH, MARKET, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Wednesday. In its vicinity, in 1485, was fought the famous battle between Richard III. and the Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., in which the former lost his crown and his life. It is seated on a hill; 13 miles W. of Leicester, and 106 N. N. W. of London.

BOSWORTH, HUSBAND, another town in Leicestershire; 14 miles S. of Leicester.

BOSZRA, a town of Syria, where Mahomet is said to have received much information from a Nestorian monk, towards founding his religious doctrines. It is 50 miles S. of Damascus.

BOTANY BAY, a bay of New South Wales, discovered by Cook in 1770, and so called from the great quantity of plants found on the shore. The promontories which form its entrance are named Cape Banks and Point Solander. The N. shore is 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles S. of Sydney, and was the first place colonized by Britain in 1788; the settlement was afterwards removed to Port Jackson. Here is a tower, and a memorial of Captain Cook's first landing, and also a column surmounted by a globe, to the memory of the unfortunate La Pérouse. See NEW SOUTH WALES. Long. 151. 21. E. lat. 34. 0. S.

BOTANY ISLAND, a small island in the Pacific Ocean, to the S. E. of New Caledonia. Long. 167. 17. E. lat. 22. 27. S.

BOTESDALE, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Thursday; seated in a valley; 15 miles N. E. of Bury, and 86 of London.

BOTETOURT, an interior county of Virginia, lying between the two most easterly ridges of the Alleghany Mountains. The Roanoke and James Rivers have both their sources within this county; and it is bounded on the N. by the valley over which is the natural bridge, 90 feet in length, and 200 feet above the surface of the water. (See CEDAR CREEK.) Pop. 11,679. Fincastle, 194 miles W. of Richmond, is the chief town.

BOTHNIA, GULF OF, a large gulf of the Baltic, forming its northern continuity, extending in a N. by E. direction, from the Isle of Åland, in the lat. of 60., to Tornea, in the lat. of 66 N., and having an average breadth of about 3 degrees of long., between 17. and 25. E. It is bounded on the W. by Sweden, and E. by Finland. It is completely frozen over in winter, and affords a convenient communication between Russia and the coasts of Sweden.

BOTHNIA, EAST, the northern province of Finland, extending from Finland Proper, in the lat. of 62 N., to the line of the arctic circle, which divides it from Lapland; lying on the E. shore of the Gulf of Bothnia, between 21. and 30. of E. longitude, bounded on the E. by the Russian province of Olonetz; containing an area of about 28,000 square miles, but having only about 70,000 inhabitants. It is generally low and marshy, intersected by lakes and small rivers abounding with fish—some salmon. The climate is generally unfavourable to vegetation. It has, however, some herds of small horned cattle, and bears and other furred animals are common; and it exports some fir timber, deals, tar, and pitch. It is divided into 28 parishes, under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the see of Abo, which favours the tenets of Luther. The inhabitants, with some little exception of Swedish, speak the Finnish language. The chief towns are Kazana, on the E. side, and Ulcaborg, Bruhestad, Carleby, Jacobstadt, Wasa, and Christianstadt, all on the shore of the Gulf of Bothnia. This province, with Finland, was ceded by Sweden to Russia in 1809.

BOTHNIA, WEST, a province of Sweden, lying between the W. shore of the Gulf of Bothnia and Lapland, extending S. from Angermanland, in the lat. of 63. 50. to that of 67. N. and 19. to 25. E. long. Its area is about half that of East Bothnia, and the population does not exceed 50,000. It differs but little in character from the eastern province; it abounds somewhat more in furred animals, which serve alike for subsistence and traffic. It is intersected by numerous streams, all running from W. to E. into the gulf. The four principal, rising from the mountains which divide Lapland from Norland, give name to as many districts and towns: viz. Tornea, at the head of the gulf, Lulea, Pitea, and Umea, at the S. extremity of the province, all upon the coast of the gulf. It contains some veins of copper and iron; but its chief exports are timber, deals, and tar. It is under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the see of Hernösand.

BOTHWELL, a town of Scotland, in the county of Lanark, situate on the E. bank of the Clyde, between Hamilton and Glasgow. It is distinguished for the battle fought in its vicinity in 1679, between the covenanters and the royal forces commanded by the Duke of Monmouth, when the former were completely defeated.

BOTTESFORD, a village in Leicestershire, on the confines of Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire; 7 miles W. by N. of Grantham. Near it, on a lofty eminence, is Belvoir Castle, the ancient seat of the dukes of Rutland. In the church are several handsome monuments of that noble family; and many Roman antiquities have been found in the neighbourhood.

BOTWAR, a town in the N. part of the duchy of Wirtemberg, on a river of its name; 15 miles S. S. E. of Heilbron. Pop. about 2000.

BOTZEMBURGH, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark; 9 miles S.W. of Prentzlau, and about 50 N. of Berlin. It has a manufacture of silk.

BOTZEN, a large town in the interior of the Tyrol, beautifully located near the junction of the Taffer and Eisach, branches of the Adige river. It has some manufactures of silks, and has four fairs annually, numerously attended. The surrounding country produces excellent wine. It was taken by the French in Mareh, 1797, but retaken by the Austrians immediately after. An Austrian commandant resides here. It is about 30 miles N. N. E. of Trent. Pop. about 9000.

BOUCHAIN, a fortified town of France, in the department of Nord, divided into two parts by the Scheldt. It was taken by the allies in 1711, under the Duke of Marlborough, but retaken the year following; and was invested by the Austrians in 1793, but soon relieved. It is 9 miles W. of Valenciennes. Pop. 1148.

BOUCHART, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, situate on an island in the river Vienne; 15 miles S. S. W. of Tours.

BOUCHEMAIN, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire; 4 miles S. of Angers.

BOUCHES DU RHONE. See RHONE, MOUTHS OF THE.

BOUCLANS, a town of France, in the department of Doubs; 8 miles E. of Besançon.

BOUDRY, a town of Switzerland, in the county of Neuchâtel; 4 miles S. W. of Neuchâtel. It was the birthplace of Marat.

BOUGAINVILLE'S STRAIT, in the South Pacific Ocean, between an island of the same name and the N. end of Solomon's Island, in the lat. of 7. S. and 156. E. long.

BOUILLON, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, with a castle, on an almost inaccessible rock. The French took it in 1676, when Louis XIV. gave it to the Duke of Bouillon. In 1794, this town was taken by storm, by General Beaulieu, after defeating a considerable body of French republicans, and given up to pillage. It is seated near the river Senoy, on the frontier of France; 6 miles N. N. E. of Sedan, and 46 W. by N. of Luxemburg.

BOUVILLY, a town of France, in the department of Aube; 7 miles S. of Treves.

BOVIN, an island on the coast of France, belonging to the department of La Vendée; area 3 square leagues. It is of a triangular shape, low and marshy, producing corn and cattle, and large quantities of salt. Pop. 2700.

BOULAY, a town of France, in the department of Moselle; 13 miles N. of Metz.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, a seaport of France, in the department of Pas de Calais. It is divided into two towns, the Upper and the Lower; the former is strongly fortified; but the latter is merely surrounded with walls. The port has for a long time been so shallow that no ships of burden could enter it; but, owing to some recent improvements, it is represented to hold ten feet at low water; and a large basin has lately been constructed to contain seventeen feet. The harbour is protected by a mole, to which very strong fortifications have been added. Under Buonaparte, Boulogne was made a port, and no merchant vessel, privateers, nor even prizes were admitted, unless loaded with ordnance or military stores, being the principal depôt of the armaments which he intended for the invasion of Britain. Since the peace in 1815 it has been much resorted to by the English, a great number of whom permanently reside here, which, with the influx of visitors from England, facilitated by the South Eastern Railway, and the excellent steam navigation from Dover and Folkestone, and its railway to Paris, through Amiens, &c., render it a flourishing town. Buonaparte commenced the erection of a tower, apparently intended to be carried to a great height, on which the French have recently erected his statue. It is 20 miles S. W. of Calais, in lat. 50. 43. N. and 1. 37. E. long. Pop. 25,732. There is also another town of the same name in France, in the department of Upper Garonne, having several tanneries. It is twelve miles N. by W. of St. Gaudins.

BOUNARBASHI, a village in Asia Minor, province of Anadoli, near the Dardanelles, the undoubted site of ancient Troy. The plain of the Troad may still be traced, although some alterations have taken place in the various streams, &c.; but the main features remain to this day, and afford a proof of the veracity of the Homeric poem.

BOURBON, an island in the Indian Ocean, 50 miles long and 35 broad, lying 400 miles E. of Madagascar. It has not a safe harbour, but there are some roads for shipping. On the S. E. is a volcano. It is a fertile island; producing, in particular, the finest cotton, and excellent coffee. The French settled here in 1672. It surrendered to the English, after the capture of the isle of France, on the 3rd of December, 1810. But Bourbon was restored at the general peace, in 1815; since when, the culture of sugar, coffee, and cotton, has been pursued with great avidity, by the aid of slaves obtained from Madagascar. It also produces a variety of woods, resins, gums, and flints. Wild goats and hogs abound in the mountains and woods. The cattle in the plains are numerous, and the coasts supply abundance of fish. On the whole, this island affords, not only all the means of subsistence, but of enjoyment, in a very high degree. Pop. about 100,000. St. Denis is the chief town, in lat. 20. 52. N. and 55. 30. E. long.; about 100 miles S. of the Isle of France, which see.

BOURBON, an interior county in the N. W. part of the state of Kentucky. Pop. 14,478. Paris, situate in a fork of the S. branch of the Licking river, 40 miles E. of Frankfort, is the chief town.

BOURBON-LANCY, a town of France, on the W. side of the department of Saone and Loire, celebrated for its hot mineral waters, and a large marble pavement, called the Great Bath, which is a work of the Romans. It is 28 miles S. W. of Autun. Pop. 2800.

BOURBON-L'ARCHAMBAUD, a town of France, in the department of Allier, celebrated for its hot baths, and for giving name to the family of the kings of France. It is situate near the river Allier; 15 miles W. of Moulins. Pop. 3017.

BOURBONNE-LES-BAINS, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne, famous for its hot baths; 18 miles E. N. E. of Langres. Pop. 3200.

BOURBON-VENDEE, a town of France, capital of the department of Vendée, on the right bank of the Yon. It is on the site of Roches-sur-Yon, a strong feudal castle, having near it a miserable little town. Pop., which is rapidly increasing, 5257.

BOUNOUNG, a town of France, in the department of Nord, seated near the river Au, and on a canal that communicates with Calais and Dunkirk; 10 miles S. W. of Dunkirk. Pop. 2527.

BOURDEAUX, or BORDEAUX, an ancient, large, and fine town of France, in the department of Gironde. It is built in the form of a crescent, on the W. bank of the river Garonne. The town has twelve gates; and the public edifices are noble, and the streets regular and handsome. The castle called the Trumpet, is situated at the entrance of the quay, and the river runs round its walls. Most of the great streets lead to the quays. The quays are four miles in length, and the river, over which has been erected a magnificent bridge, is considerably broader than the Thames at London Bridge. On the opposite side, a range of hills, covered with woods, vineyards, churches, and villas, extend beyond the view. Almost in the centre of the town, a fine equestrian statue in bronze, was erected to Louis XV. in 1743. The beauty of the Garonne, and the fertility of the adjoining country, were probably the causes which induced the Romans to lay the foundation of this city. The ruins of a very large amphitheatre yet remain, constructed under the Emperor Gallienus. During the irruptions of the barbarous nations, and particularly in those which the Normans repeatedly made, Bordeaux was ravaged, burnt, and almost entirely destroyed. But when Henry II. of England united it to his dominions, by his marriage with Eleanor of Aquitaine, he made it a principal object of his policy to rebuild and restore it to its ancient lustre. Edward, the Black Prince, brought his royal captive, John, king of France to this city, after the battle of Poitiers, in 1356; and held his court and residence here during eleven years. His exalted character, his uninterrupted series of good fortune, his victories, and his munificence, drew strangers to Bordeaux from every part of Europe. Here his son, Richard II., was born. Bordeaux contains upwards of 95,000 inhabitants, and is one of the first cities in France for magnitude and beauty; and is justly esteemed as one of the most agreeable abodes in Europe. The cathedral, and the churches belonging to the lute religious orders, the Dominicans and Chartreux, are much admired. Bordeaux is the seat of an archbishop. The town has a university, and an academy of arts and sciences; and a considerable export trade, particularly in fruit, wine, and brandy. It is connected with Bayonne, Paris, and the rest of France by railways. In March, 1812, Bordeaux was entered by the English after the battle of Orthes, but evacuated on the restoration of the Bourbons. It was the birth-place of Ausonius. It lies 87 miles S. of Rochelle, and 325 S. W. of Paris. Long. 0. 34. W. lat. 44. 50. N. There is a village of the same name, department of Drome, 18 miles N. of Nyons. It was the birthplace of Cusaubon, and contains 1200 inhabitants.

BOURG-EN-BRASSE, the capital of the department of Ain. Near it is the magnificent church and monastery of the Augustines, which contains the mausoleum of Margaret of Austria, and of Charles V. The principal commerce is in corn, horses, cattle, and white leather. It stands in a marshy but fertile country, on the river Ressonasse; 36 miles N. E. of Lyons, and 233 S. S. E. of Paris. It was the birth-place of Lalande, Pop. about 8818.

BOURG-SUR-MER, in the department of Gironde, with a tide harbour on the Dordogne, near the point of land formed by the junction of that river with the Garonne, on its north side. It has a great trade in wine, and is 15 miles N. by E. of Bordeaux. Pop. 2700.

BOURG ACHARD, and THEROUDE, department of Eure; SR. ANDEOL, of Ardeche; ARGENTAL, of the Rhone, D'AULT, of Somme; DEOLS of Indre; LASTIC, of Isere; D'ORSANS of ditto; DEPEAGE, of the Drome; LA REINE, of the Seine, &c., are all inconsiderable.

BOURGANEUF, a town of France, in the department of Creuse. Here is a lofty tower, faced with stones, cut diamond-wise, erected by Zisim, brother of Bajazet II., emperor of the Turks, when he was obliged to exile himself, after the loss of a decisive battle. Bourganuef is seated on the Taurion; 20 miles N. E. of Limoges. Pop. about 2900.

BOURGAS, a town in Turkey in Europe, pach. Roumelia, on the N. shore of a gulf of the same name, on the Black Sea; 130 miles N. W. of Constantinople. It has a celebrated manufacture of pottery. Pop. 6000.

BOURGES, a city of France, capital of the department of Cher, and an archiepiscopal see, with a university founded by Louis XI., the Nero of France, who was born here. In extent, it is one of the greatest cities in France. The principal manufactures are cloth, woollen stuffs, and stockings, but the trade is inconsiderable. It is seated at the conflux of the Auron and Yevre; 25 miles N. W. of Nevers, and 125 S. of Paris. Pop. 19,646.

BOURGET, a town of Savoy, on a lake of the same name, near the Rhone; 6 miles N. of Chambéry.

BOURGNEUF, a seaport of France, in the department of Lower Loire. The chief trade is in salt, made from the adjacent salt marshes. It stands on a bay, to which it gives name; 20 miles S. W. of Nantes. It has an oyster fishery on the coast. Pop. 2700. Long. 1. 51. W. lat. 47. 3 N.

BOUROIX, a town of France, in the department of Isere. Some hemp is grown in the vicinity, and it has some manufactures in chintz. Pop. 4325.

BOURMILL, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire; 22 miles W. of Tours. It has a Benedictine abbey and castle. Pop. about 3600.

BOUROS, a large lake or bay lying between the Rosetta and Damietta branches of the Nile. On the east cape is a town called Bourlos, in the lat. of 31. 36. N. and 31. 27. E. long.

BOURMONT, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Marne, on a steep mountain; 20 miles E. by N. of Chaumont.

BOURN, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Saturday. It has a navigable canal to Boston, and is seated at the source of a rivulet that runs to Spalding. The chief trade is in leather and wool, 35 miles S. of Lincoln, and 97 N. of London.

BOURO, one of the Molucca islands, in the Banda Sea, between Celebes and Ceram; about 90 miles long and 30 broad. Some mountains in it are extremely high, and the sea on one side is uncommonly deep. It is represented as being exceedingly fertile, yielding abundance of rice. One of its peculiar vegetable productions is the metalexca catigolia, from the leaves of which the cajeputa oil is extracted, which forms one of the principal articles of traffic. The nutmeg, clove, cocoa, banana, and ebony trees, as well as the orange, lemon, citron, &c., are also common to the island. The natives, who live mostly in the interior, are represented to be as rude and unsocial as those of Borneo, to whom they bear a close affinity in feature, manner, and character. Wild boars, goats, and hog deer, range in the woods, which are also much infested with reptiles, and some of an enormous size. There is a town of the same name, on the shore of a commodious bay, called Cajeli, on the N. E. part of the island, in lat. 3. 25. S. and 127 E. long., where the Dutch have a fort; whose policy precludes alike all social improvement among the natives, whilst it constitutes a barrier to the attainment of all knowledge of the details of their numbers, economy, and resources. Some Mahometans, and natives of other islands, who live in subservience to the Dutch, inhabit the towns upon the coast. Pop. 60,000.

BOURRNES, a town of France, in the department of Pas de Calais; 12 miles S. E. of Boulogne.

BOUSSA, a town on an island, in the Niger, in the interior of Africa; the place where Mungo Park was killed. It is a large and strong place. Pop. 16,000 or 18,000. Lat. 10. 14. N. long. 6. 11. E.

BOURON, an island of the Indian Ocean, about 180 miles in length from N. to S., and 25 in breadth. It is in part mountainous and woody, but in other parts exceedingly fertile. The natives appear to be of Malayan origin, professing the Mahometan faith. It is governed by a sultan, who lives in considerable state, and whose authority extends over some small islands contiguous. Forts are constructed on several inaccessible heights, in different parts of the island. It is said to produce cotton of a very superior quality, which the natives manufacture into cloth. The N. point of the island is in lat. 4. 21. S. and 123. 5. E. long. The Dutch attempted to establish themselves upon this island; but their perfidy led to a general massacre, and they have not since renewed the attempt. There is a town of the same name at the N. W. extremity of the island, at which the sultan usually resides. There is also another island (a small one) called Bouton, off the Malay coast, in lat. 6. 25. N. and 99. 15. E. long.

BOUÏSSONNE, a river of France, rising in the department of Deux Sèvres, becomes navigable at St. Jean D'Angely, and falls into the Charente, about 10 miles above Rochefort. There is a town of the same name, on the N. bank of the river; about 18 miles W. of St. Jean D'Angely.

Bow, or STRATFORD-LE-BOW, one of the out-parishes of London, on the E. side. The church is 4 miles from the Royal Exchange. Bow is situate at the S. E. extremity of the county of Middlesex, separated from Essex by the river Lea. (See BLACKWALL.) The church is very ancient; and an old stone bridge over the river is supposed to have been the first erected in England, and the curve or bow of the arch to have given name to the town. Over this bridge is the great outlet from London, to the three eastern counties of England, viz., Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk.

Bow, one of the Society Isles, at the S. E. extremity of the cluster, in lat. 18. 23. S. and 141. 10. W. long. It was discovered by Captain Cook, on his first voyage; but, with 130 fathom of line, no bottom could be found for anchorage. It seemed barren; but from appearance of smoke, it was conjectured either to be inhabited or volcanic.

BOWDOINHAM, a town of the state of Maine, United States, on the W. side of the Kennebec River. It has a considerable trade in lumber and ship building; 21 miles S. by W. of Augusta, and 12 N. of Bath. Pop. in 1840, 2402.

Bowes, a town at the N. W. extremity of the county of York, situate at the foot of the mountains on the frontiers of Westmoreland, on one of the Roman military ways, now the high road from London to Carlisle. Its antiquity is further manifest, from a stone in the church, which, at the commencement of the last century, was used as a communion-table, on which is an adulatory inscription to the emperor Adrian. It holds a market on Fridays; 53 miles S. by E. of Carlisle; and 250 N. by W. of London.

BOWLING-GREEN, a town of Kentucky, United States, on the Big Barren River, a branch of the Green River, which is accessible to steam-boats of 200 tons. It has considerable trade, principally export of tobacco; 144 miles S. W. of Frankfort. Pop. in 1840, 1400.

BRADFIELD is also the name of a township in the parish of Ecclesfield; 6 miles N. of Sheffield, in the manufactures of which it is extensively occupied. It is also the name of seven other towns and villages in different parts of England; all inconsiderable.

BRADFORD, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Monday. It is the centre of the greatest fabric of superfine cloths in England. It stands on the side of a rocky hill, on the Lower Avon; and 93 miles W. by S. of London.

BRADFORD, a large and populous parish and borough in the West Riding of Yorkshire. It returns two members to parliament. The production of worsted yarns and stuffs constitutes the chief business of the town; and to the success in this branch of manufactures is its present importance to be attributed. The iron trade, also, is very considerable, and has existed here for time immemorial. The population, since the beginning of the present century, has increased wonderfully; the whole parish is densely peopled, and along all the principal roads is an unbroken series of towns and villages. In 1839, there were in the parish of Bradford 142 worsted mills, employing 10,896 hands; 9 woollen mills, employing 681 hands; and 2 cotton mills, employed 98. The increase has been immense since that date. The town is situate at the foot of the ridge of mountains which divides the West Riding of Yorkshire from Lancashire, on the banks of a small river, falling into the Aire on the south side. It has the advantage of a collateral cut to the Leeds and Liverpool Canal; and is connected with the W. Riding Union, and the Yorkshire and Lancashire Railways. The surrounding country abounds in iron ore, coal, flag-stones, and slates. The parish church is a stately Gothic edifice: there are about 20 others now in the neighbourhood. It has several other places of religious worship, a free grammar school, and a market-hall for the exhibition of the worsted stuffs brought for sale. Market on Thursday. It is 10 miles W. of Leeds, and 9 N.E. of Halifax.

BRANDENBURG, an interior and irregularly shaped province of the Prussian States; lying between the lats. of 51. 10. and 54. N.; and 11. and 16. of E. long. It is separated from the Baltic, on the north, by Mecklenburg and Pomerania; bounded on the east by Prussian Poland, and on the south by the kingdom of Saxony and principality of Anhalt; and on the west by Hanover, &c. Its area may be estimated at about 15,500 square miles. From the tenth to the fifteenth century, this territory passed under various governments subject to Poland, when, in 1417, it was vested in perpetuity, by the emperor Sigismund, with consent of the Germanic confederacy, to Frederic VI. of Nuremberg, and his descendants; a succeeding margrave having been acknowledged sovereign of the then duchy of Prussia, which in 1701 was converted into a kingdom. The seat of government was transferred from Königsberg, in Prussia, to Berlin in Brandenburg, which has thereby become the chief part of the Prussian dominions. It is in part a sandy and sterile district; but, having the advantage of several navigable rivers, and by the aid of culture, it is rendered tolerably productive in all that is necessary for subsistence and comfort. The revocation of the edict of Nantes, which, in 1685, drove thousands of the most industrious and intelligent of the manufacturing population of France from their homes, led to a number of them settling in this part of Europe, where they introduced their respective occupations in the manufacture of silk and worsted stuffs, which now contributes essentially to the reciprocal benefit of the various classes of the country. The principal rivers are, 1st, the Oder, which enters the New Mark from the S., runs N. past Frankfort, Kustrin, and Schwedt, through Pomerania, into the Baltic; 2nd, the Netze; enters the New Mark from the E., and falls into the Oder at Kustrin; 3rd, the Spree; enters the Middle Mark from the S., runs W. by N., falling into the Havel W. of Berlin; 4th, the Havel rises near the S. confines of the Ucker Mark, runs S. to Potsdam, when it makes a circuitous course W. to the town of Brandenburg, then N. to Havelberg, where it falls into the Elbe; 5th, the Elbe, from the S. E., divides the Old Mark from the Prignitz; the Havel is also united with the Elbe by a canal across the principality of Magdeburg, from Brandenburg, past Genthin; and with the Oder by another canal from Liebenwalde, past Neustadt, to Oderberg; the Spree is also united with the Oder by a canal from the S. E. extremity of the Middle Mark, to the point where the Oder enters the New Mark from Lusatia. The population of this part of the Prussian dominions amounts to about 1,000,000. The inhabitants are mostly Lutherans. The province is traversed by several important railways, which centre in Berlin. These are from Brunswick, from Anhalt, from Leipzig, from Dresden, from Breslau, and from Stettin. These afford rapid and unbroken communication with all parts of Europe. It is divided into 2 regencies and 34 circles.

BRANDENBURG, the city which gives name to the preceding territory. It is divided into two parts, Old and New; the former on the N. bank of the river Havel, and the latter on the S. It is a place of considerable antiquity, supposed to have been first founded by the Selavonians, and fortified in the early part of the tenth century, as a barrier against the incursions of the Huns. It has various manufactures. Pop. about 13,000. It is about 30 miles S. of Havelberg, and about the same distance W. of Berlin. There are two other towns named Brandenburg; one in Mecklenburg-Strelitz, surrounded by walls. The streets are wide and straight. The church of St. Mary is a large structure, and the town-house is worthy of notice. It is situated on the Tollensee; 72 miles N. of Berlin; and the other in East Prussia, with an ancient castle at the S. end of the Frische Hauff; 13 miles S. W. of Königsberg.

BRANDON, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday. It stands on the Little Ouse, over which is a bridge, and a ferry a mile below, for conveying goods to and from the Isle of Ely. It has a great trade in corn, malt, coal, timber, &c. It is 15 miles N. by W. of Bury, and 78 N. N. E. of London.

BRANCON, a township of Vermont, U. S. Bog iron ore, and marble, are found in it. First settled in 1775. Pop. in 1840, 2194.

BRANDYWINE, a river of Chester county, in the S. E. part of Pennsylvania, which falls into the Delaware, a little below Wilmington. It is distinguished in American history for a defeat sustained by the revolutionary army, on the 11th of September, 1777.

BRANFORD, a town of Connecticut, U. S. on Long Island Sound. The surface of the township is uneven, and the soil fertile; 7 miles E. of Newhaven. Pop. in 1840, 1322.

BRANTOME, a town of France, department of Dordogne, on the Drôme; 12 miles N. W. of Périgueux. It is a neat, handsome town, with some fabrics of woollens, cotton, and hosiery. Near the town is a Benedictine abbey, founded, it is said, by Charlemagne. Pop. 2500.

BRAUNSTON, a village in Northamptonshire; 4 miles N. W. of Daventry, and 73 from London; on the confines of Warwickshire. Here commences the Grand Junction Canal, under a tunnel three-fourths of a mile in length, to the Thames, which, with the Oxford and Coventry canals, renders it the central place of inland navigation.

BRAVA, a republic on the southern extremity of the Kingdom of Magadoxa, and the only one in Africa. It was founded by seven Arabian brethren, who fled hither from the tyranny of Laeah, a petty monarch of Arabia. Finding a most delightful situation between two rivers, near their confluence into the Indian Ocean, they built the city of Brava, which is now large and populous, and the greatest mart on all the coast. Its merchants are rich, carrying on an extensive trade in gold, silver, elephants' teeth, ambergris, silk, cotton, and other stuffs. The republic is under the protection of the king of Portugal, for which they pay a tribute of about 20*l.* annually. The city of Brava lies in long. 43. 25. E. lat. 1. 20. N.

BRAVA, one of the Cape Verde Islands; 12 miles W. S. W. of Fuego, and inhabited by the Portuguese. The land is high and mountainous, but fertile; and horses, bees, asses, and hogs, are numerous. It has three harbours; but Porto Ferreo, on the S. side, is the best for large ships. Long. W. 24. 39. lat. 14. 52. N.

BRAY, a maritime town of Ireland, in the county of Wicklow, seated on the river Bray, near St. George's Channel; 13 miles S. of Dublin. The town is neatly built, and is becoming a fashionable watering place. Pop. 3656.

BRAY, a village in Berkshire; 1 mile S. of Maidenhead. It is famous in song for its vicar, who was twice a papist and twice a protestant, in four successive reigns; and, when taxed for being a turncoat, said, "he always kept to his principle, to five and die vicar of Bray."

BRAZIL, a vast territory of South America, lying between the lats. of 4. N. and 30. S., and 35. and 71. W. long. The length of the empire is computed from N. to S. at 2600 miles, and its greatest breadth at nearly 2540 m. The area is estimated at about 2,750,000 square miles, or nearly twenty-three times the area of the United Kingdom. The northern and western parts consist of vast alluvial plains of great fertility, and, in some parts, very unhealthy. The central, eastern, and southern provinces vary greatly, both in climate and production. The whole of the southern and eastern provinces may be considered as one great plateau, which, rising abruptly from the Atlantic, extends westward with undulation several hundred miles. The highest part of the plateau rises into a chain of mountains, which runs parallel to the coast, and east of the river S. Francisco. Lakes are numerous on the great plains of the Amazon, but there are no deep or extensive inland lakes, like those of North America. The Amazon is its largest river, as it is of the world, and with its affluents, drains the N. part of the empire. Those which drain the S. portion, carry their waters down to the Parana and Paraguay, into the Plate. The Rio Francisco has a course of above 1000 miles, and is the third in magnitude of South America, and debouches into the Atlantic in lat. 11. S. The climate varies greatly; in the N. it is within the tropics, and consequently, is of that character, but the S. portion is more temperate; but generally it is remarkably mild and regular. Its principal production, besides the usual articles of sustenance, are coffee, sugar, cacao, cotton, dye-woods, vanilla, sarsaparilla, gingers, peppers, copal, and cavi, and a very numerous list of minor articles. Of its cultivation, not one two-hundredth part of its fertile land is under any kind of culture. The population of Brazil is divided into free and slave inhabitants; the free consist chiefly of Portuguese, and mixed castes of every shade, between the white, the negro, and the aborigines. The slaves are chiefly African negroes, and their descendants. The free population and names of the various states composing the empire in 1844, is estimated thus by Mr. Kiddle and other authorities:—

Besides these, there are the wilderness regions of Guiana, N. of the Amazon, and of Solimoens, a vast territory, ill-explored, W. of the Rio Madera, and E. of the Amazon, extending to the limits of Brazil.

There are 88 titles of nobility in Brazil, but they are not hereditary. The form of government is an hereditary monarchy, with a general assembly of national representatives. The national religion is the Roman Catholic; but other faiths are tolerated. Monasticism is on the decline, and irreligion and infidelity is spreading far and wide. Education is in a very backward state, and the morals of the people are consequently not of a very high character.

The first discovery of Brazil has been claimed for a Martin Behmen, who is said to have visited it in 1487; but the credit of making it known to Europeans is assigned to the Portuguese admiral Pedro Alvares Cabral, who sailed from Lisbon on the 9th of March, 1500, with a squadron of thirteen sail, destined for the East Indies; when, stretching more than usual to the westward, to avoid the storms that prevail off the Cape of Good Hope, he accidentally discovered this fine territory, in the lat. of 16. S., on the 22th of April; and having communicated with the natives, who manifested a social disposition, anchored his squadron in the Bay of Porto Seguro, and, on the following day, landed and planted the cross, and took possession of the territory in the name of Emanuel, the then king of Portugal. For nearly fifty years, however, it was but little appreciated; there being no indications of gold, silver, or gems, upon the coast: it was merely availed of as a place for transportation for criminals, the ships conveying them carrying back nothing but the red wood so important in dyeing, (called from its appearance brazas, a glowing fire or coal, and hence the name of the country.) Its capabilities would probably have remained much longer undisclosed, but for the banishment of the Jews from Portugal in 1549; who introduced the sugar-cane from Madeira, which flourished to such a degree as soon to render it an object of great importance. The celebrity of the colony became sufficiently general, by the close of the century, to excite the jealousy and enmity alike of the French, Spaniards, and Dutch; and in 1624 the Dutch despatched a squadron, under the command of admiral Willikens, who succeeded in taking possession of St. Salvador, or Bahia, the then principal settlement, and proclaimed the possession of the whole territory; and, after having published a manifesto, allowing liberty of conscience to all who were disposed to subscribe an oath of fidelity to the Dutch republic, and plundered the town, he returned to Holland. The Spaniards next sent a formidable squadron, who completely dislodged the Dutch; but, in 1630, the Dutch again returned to the charge with a force of not less than forty-six armed ships, and, after seven or eight years of continued warfare, succeeded in extending their influence over more than half the country; but their oppressive and exclusive policy became so obnoxious to the settlers as to render their tenure exceedingly precarious; so that, after various collisions, and alternations of success between Dutch, Spaniards, and Portuguese, towards the close of the seventeenth century, the Dutch, by treaty, ceded all their interest to the Portuguese; and the influence of the Spaniards having been previously subverted, at the commencement of the 18th century the whole territory came into the possession of the Portuguese, with whom it remained for more than a century, silently advancing in cultivation and importance, though, comparatively speaking, but little known to the world, until the events of the twenty years' war, growing out of the French revolution in 1793, led, in 1807, to the emigration of the Portuguese court from Lisbon, under the protection of a British squadron, to seek shelter at Rio Janeiro.

Since 1806, however, cultivation has been pursued with greater avidity, and, its superior advantages once established, it will probably increase in estimation, whilst the infatuating pursuits in search of diamonds and gold will subside. The revolutionary spirit, so widely spread over all Spanish America during the first and second decennaries of the present century, extended itself into Brazil. Pernambuco, in 1817, revolted against the government; and the whole country manifesting rather an equivocal disposition towards the ruling family, the court of Rio Janeiro, in 1821, emigrated back to Lisbon, leaving Don Pedro, the eldest son of the king, as viceroy, who no sooner felt himself separated from paternal allegiance, than he began to turn his thoughts to his individual aggrandisement, and strove to cherish, rather than subdue, the revolutionary spirit which had previously been excited; and on the 11th of September, all allegiance to Portugal was formally denounced, and Don Pedro proclaimed emperor of Brazil. His reign, however, comparatively speaking, proved but of short duration. After maintaining for some time a profitless and inglorious contest with Buenos Ayres, in regard to the Banda Oriental, disquietude and suspicion surrounded him in his imperial abode, and on the 7th of April, 1831, he abdicated in favour of his son, Don Pedro II., a child of five years of age; and Don Pedro I., with all the rest of his family, embarked for Europe on board a British ship of war.

The executive government is in the six departments—justice, the interior, foreign affairs, navy, war, and finance. The total expenditure in 1859-60 amounted to £10,063,111, and the receipts to £9,375,000. The budget of 1861-2, shows a deficit of £750,000. In 1858 the public debt was £12,032,000. The military force for 1860 was 22,546 men of the line, 60,000 national guards, and a well-equipped police force. In 1860 the navy comprised 41 vessels of all sizes, manned by 3,335 men.

In some of the provinces, the heat of the climate favours the generation of a variety of poisonous insects and reptiles; some of which, as the iboya, or roebuck snake, are said to extend to the length of thirty feet, and to be two or three yards in circumference. The rattlesnake, and other reptiles of the same kind, grow likewise to an enormous size; and the serpent called ibabaloka is affirmed to be seven yards long, and half a yard in circumference, possessed too of a poison instantaneously fatal to the human race. Here also are scorpions, ant-bears, tigers, the jaguar, porcupines, janoverus, and an animal called tapirassou. No part of the world affords a greater number of beautiful birds, or greater variety of the most exquisite fruits; the chief indigenous vegetable production, which gave name to the country, and title of prince to the heir presumptive of the sovereignty of Portugal, is the lignum Brasilianum, or Brazil wood, (so called from its colour, brazieras, burning embers,) so justly celebrated for its colouring properties. Forests of trees, as stately in size as endless in variety, intermixed with brambles and creeping plants, flowering in every variety and tinge of colour, emitting the most delicious odours, and for hundreds of square miles in extent so dense as to be quite impenetrable, except to the native Indians, are spread over the greater part of the country from the sea-coast to the Araguay river, which separates Goyaz from Matto Grosso. In the cultivated parts, the paua Christi, orange, lemon, citron, and various other trees and plants, flourish in the utmost luxuriance. The productions for which Brazil has hitherto been the most celebrated, are its gems, gold, and silver. The gems are various as beautiful; and, although diamonds have been appreciated from the earliest periods of social refinement, the largest and most appreciated ever known, was found in the Brazils. The quantity of gold and silver, during a series of years, averaged in money about 5,000,000*l.* English per annum. On the gold and silver, the government levied a tax of one-fifth of the produce, but restricted the searching for diamonds, and denting of the lignum Brasilianum, to its own agents, subjecting the violators of the law to the severest penalties. Rich as Brazil is, in a comparative sense, in gems and metals, they have obviously retarded, rather than advanced, the genuine prosperity of the country, having tended to divert the inhabitants from the more rational and socializing pursuit of agriculture.

The induction of slaves from the coast of Africa, since the excitements to agriculture commenced, has been very great, and must have added at least 50,000 annually to the population of the coast, unless the mortality has been proportionably great with the induction. The natives who inhabit the inland parts are copper-coloured, strong, lively, and gay, and subject to few diseases. They are divided into a great number of tribes, each of which have their peculiar customs, which they scrupulously observe; and among some of which, it is said, cannibalism prevails. The number of tribes is probably between 200 and 300, but their extent is generally unknown.

BRAZORIA, a town of the state of Texas, on the right bank of the Brazos river, and about 30 miles from the sea. It is a place of considerable trade, and has about 500 inhabitants.

BRAZZA, an island in the Adriatic, near the coast of Dalmatia; 24 miles long, and 6 broad. The soil is stony, but it produces much excellent wine; and this article, with fire-wood and sheep, form the chief trade. It has a town of the same name, several villages, and an aggregate population of about 15,000. Long. 17. 35. E. lat. 43 50. N.

BREAGE, a populous village on the shore of Mount's Bay, Cornwall, with ten mines in its vicinity; 4 miles W. of Helston, and 10 E. by S. of Penzance.

BRECHIN, a borough of Scotland, in Forfar, anciently a bishop's see, and the county town. The cathedral is partly ruinous, but one of its aisles serves for the parish church. Adjoining to this is a curious antique round tower, which tapers from the bottom, and is very slender in proportion to its height.

Here is a manufacture of linen and cotton, and a considerable tannery. It is seated on the South Esk; 8 miles W. of Montrose, and 12 E. N. E. of Forfar. Pop. 3951.

BRECKERFELD, a town of Westphalia, in the county of the Mark; about 30 miles N. N. E. of Cologne. Pop. 1100.

BRECON, or BRECKNOCKSHIRE, a border county of South Wales, bounded on the E. by the counties of Hereford and Monmouth, N. by Radnor, W. by Carmarthen and Cardiganshire, and S. by Glamorgan. It is a mountainous district, yielding iron, coal, and limestone, in great abundance, and some copper and lead; and at Lanelly, on the border of Glamorganshire, the smelting of iron is carried on to some extent. It has some fertile valleys, and is watered by the rivers Wye and Uske, and other streams, and has the advantage of a canal for barges of 25 tons burthen, from the centre of the county to the Bristol Channel, at Newport. It has few or no manufactures; but, in addition to its iron, it produces a surplus of grain, cattle, and butter, and some wool. The four principal towns are Brecon, Builth, Crickhowel, and Hay. This county contains the Vann, or Brecknock beacon, reckoned the loftiest mountain in South Wales. It sends one member to parliament.

BRECKNOCK, or BRECON, a borough and chief town of the preceding county, with a market on Wednesday and Friday. It is an ancient place, as appears by the Roman coins that are often dug up; and its once magnificent castle is now in ruins. It contains 4 churches, one of which is collegiate; and in that part of the town called the Warton is a fine arsenal. To the east of the town is a considerable lake, well stored with fish, whence runs a rivulet into the Wye. It is seated at the confluence of the Hondey with the Uske, which falls into the Bristol Channel, and with which it communicates by a canal to Newport, near the mouth of the Uske; a railway also connects it with Merthyr Tydvil; 34 miles N. W. of Monmouth, and 171 W. by N. of London. It sends one member to parliament.

BREDA, a strongly fortified town of Dutch Brabant, surrounded on all sides by water and morasses. The great church is a noble structure, with a lofty spire, 362 feet in height. In 1625, the Spaniards, after a memorable siege of ten months, reduced this city; but, in 1637, the Prince of Orange retook it. In 1793, it surrendered to the French, after a siege of only three days, but was retaken soon after. It is seated on the river Merk; 30 miles N. N. E. of Antwerp. Pop. 13,000.

BRENDE, a village of France, dep. Gironde, near Bourdeaux. It is worthy of notice only as having been the residence of the celebrated Montesquieu. Pop. 1531.

BREDON, a parish in Worcestershire, intersected by the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. On the top of Bredon Hill are traces of a Roman encampment, with a double trench; 4 miles N. E. of Tewkesbury.

BRENFREDT, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick; 21 miles W. N. W. of Sleswick. Pop. about 1500.

BREEDS HILL, an eminence, on the N. side of Charlestown, in Massachusetts, immediately contiguous to Boston; celebrated for the stand made by the Americans against the British troops, at the commencement of hostilities with the mother country. This action, usually called the battle of Bunker's Hill, (another hill near it,) happened on the 17th of June, 1775.

BREGENTZ, or BERGENS, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, with a castle on an eminence; seated at the mouth of a river of its name, on the E. end of the lake of Constance; 6 miles S. E. of Lindau. Pop. about 3500.

BREGLIO, a town of the continental part of Sardinia; 19 miles N. E. of Nice.

BREIHAN, the most mountainous of the Scilly islands; 30 miles W. of the Land's End. Long. 6. 47. W. lat. 50. 2. N.

BREHNA, a town of the duchy of Saxony; 8 miles N. E. of Halle.

BREITENBACH, a town of Central Germany, in the kingdom of Saxony; 15 miles S. of Erfurt. Manufactures, sulphur, alum, and china. Pop. 2500.

BRELADE, ST., a parish of the island of Jersey, English Channel. The church is near the coast of Brehudes Bay, and romantically situated. Pop. 2069.

BREME, a town of Italy, in the Milanese, near the confluence of the Scissia with the Po, on the frontiers of Monterrat; 28 miles W. of Pavia.

BREMEN, a duchy and maritime district of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, lying between the Weser and the Elbe; the former of which separates it from Oldenberg, and the other from Holstein. The country is fertile and populous, but in winter is subject to inundations. It formerly belonged to the Swedes, but was sold to the Elector of Hanover, in 1719. Stade, on the S. bank of the Elbe, is the seat of regency. It is about 2100 square miles in extent; contains a population of about 170,000; and now forms part of the kingdom of Hanover.

BREMEN, one of the three free German Hanseatic cities, on the Weser, which divides it into the Old and New Town: the former is the largest, and in it stands the cathedral. A bridge across the river connects the two divisions; it has a cathedral, and 8 churches: a magnificent town-hall, an exchange, museum, &c. The manufactures are considerable, consisting chiefly of linens, snuff, tobacco, leather, soap, &c., and there are also about 100 distilleries. A new and excellent harbour has been constructed on the E. side of the river, and it has a railway to Hanover, &c. The exports are greatly increasing, the Bremen merchants having corresponding establishments in many places of the Western BREMENFORD, a town in the duchy of Bremen, defended by a castle. The chancery of the duchy is kept here. It stands near the Oste; 32 miles N. by E. of Bremen.

BREMGARTEN, a town of Switzerland, in the free lower bailiwicks, between the cantons of Zurich and Bern. The inhabitants deal chiefly in paper; and it is seated on the Reuss; 10 miles W. of Zurich.

BRENO, a town of Italy, in Bresciano, seated on the Oglio; 36 miles N. of Brescia. Pop. about 2000.

BRENTA, a river which rises in the principality of Trent, passes by Bassano and Padua, and enters the Gulf of Venice, a little S. of Venice.

BRENTFORD, an appendage to London; 7 miles from Hyde Park Corner, on the great western road. It is seated on the N. bank of the Thames, where the Grand Junction Canal originally communicated with the river. It has some very extensive flour mills, distilleries, soap-works, pan, tile, and coarse pottery works, extensive nursery grounds, and various other occupations dependent on the metropolis. The town consists of a long street, and is divided into Old and New Brentford. It has a church and several dissenting meeting-houses. It was one of the polling places for the county of Middlesex. Market on Tuesday, which is generally well supplied. It is noted as being the scene of a battle between Edmund Ironside and the Danes, in 1016. In 1841, many lives were lost, and an immense amount of property destroyed, by an inundation of the Grand Junction Canal, in consequence of a rapid thaw on Jan. 16. In 1813, some curious fossil remains, of the hippopotamus, elephant, and deer, were discovered in the neighbourhood.

BRENTWOOD, once a considerable market town, in Essex; 18 miles E.N.E. of London, intersected by the railway from London to Norwich. The church is a small ancient building of Gothic architecture.

BRESCIANO, a province of Austrian Italy, lying between the lat. of 45. 10. and 46. 20. N. and 10. and 10. 45. of E. long., bounded on the S. by Mantua and the Cremonese, W. by Bergamasco, N. by the country of the Grisons, and E. by the principality of Trent, the Veronese, and Mantua. The Oglio has its source in the N. extremity of this province; runs S. for about 30 miles, when it forms the lake of Jeso, and afterwards the boundary between Bergamasco and the Cremonese. The Chiese intersects the E. side, falling into the Oglio at the S. E. extremity of the province; the Smela and several other streams intersect the centre and southern part of the province, all falling into the Oglio, and Lake Garda divides it from the Veronese on the E. Its superficies may be stated at about 3000 square miles, and population at 306,000. It has some dreary spots; but on the whole it may be considered a fertile district, producing corn, wine, and oil, in abundance. The vine, olive, and mulberry, all luxuriate in its soil; and the lakes and rivers supply abundance of fish. It exports some silk; but its manufactures do not much, if at all, exceed the demand and consumption of the province. Besides Brescia, the capital, the other principal towns are Breno, Chiari, Oreci, Novi, and Salo. It was formerly a part of the republic of Venice; but is now under the dominion of Austria.

BRESCIA, an episcopal city, and capital of the preceding province, situate in a spacious and fertile plain, between the rivers Mela and Navilo, on the high road from Bergamo to Mantua. It is well fortified, and is on the railroad connecting Venice with Milan, &c. It has twelve churches and thirty convents. The cathedral and the palace are adorned with beautiful paintings, and in the former is shown the standard of Constantine. Here are several flourishing manufactures, and its fire-arms are particularly celebrated. This city has been taken and retaken several times by the Austrians and French. Pop. 35,000. A stream, called the Garza, runs through the city, afterwards falling into the Mela. It is about 50 miles N. of Parma, 40 N. W. of Mantua, and 30 S. E. of Bergamo.

BRESELO, a town of Italy, in the Modenese, on the river Po; 27 miles N. W. of Modena.

BRESLAU, an ecclesiastical city and capital of Silesia; seated on the banks of the Oder, just below the junction of the little river Ohlau, which runs through it, and forms two islands. It is also a principal station on the railroad from Cracow to Berlin and Dresden, &c. It has a Lutheran and twenty-six Catholic churches, and is the second town in the Prussian dominions. It has a great trade in linen, wool, Hungarian wines, &c. The public squares are spacious, the streets tolerably wide, and the houses lofty. The royal palace was obtained by the Jesuits, where they founded a university in 1702, at which there are generally about 400 students. The two principal churches belong to the Protestants; near one of which is a college. This city became subject to the King of Prussia in 1741. It was taken by the Austrians, in 1757, but regained the same year. It was for some time besieged by the French, and surrendered to them in January, 1807, and again in 1813; but reverted to Prussia after the peace of 1814. It is 112 miles N. E. of Prague, and 165 N. of Vienna. Long. 17. 2. E. lat. 51. 6. N. The principality contains about 495 sq. miles of area, and 1,174,679 inhabitants. Pop. of the city, 112,194 at the end of 1849

BRESLE, a river of France, which divides the department of Lower Seine from that of Somme, and enters the English Channel at Treport.

BRESSAY SOUND. See BRASSA.

BRESSE, a late province of France, bounded on the N. by Burgundy and Franche Compté, E. by Savoy, S. by the Viennois, and W. by the Lyonnais. It now forms the department of Ain.

BRESSURE, a town of France, in the department of Two Sevres; 35 miles N. W. of Poitiers. Pop. 1394.

BREST, a maritime town of France, in the department of Finisterre. Prior to 1631, it was an insignificant fishing town; but, having one of the most commodious and secure harbours in Europe, it was availed of by the French government, under the administration of Richelieu, in the reign of Louis XIV., for a marine station, and it is now the chief naval depôt of France. Situate on a promontory at the western extremity of the kingdom, it is equally convenient for the equipment of expeditions to all parts of the coast, or of the world. The English made an ineffectual attempt to take it in 1694; and during the twenty-three years' war, from 1793 to 1815, it compelled the English to maintain a large blockading squadron off the harbour, without doing the least possible injury to France. The extensive occupations attendant on the building, repairing, and equipment of a great national marine, necessarily gave rise to an extensive interchange of consumption of commodities of various kinds, and the town of Brest has consequently risen into importance proportionate to the consequence derived from its being the chief naval station of the kingdom; and it now contains a population of about 30,000. It has a marine academy, theatre, &c. It is 33 miles E. of Ushant Light, in the lat. of 48. 23. N. and 4. 29. W. long.: being 27 miles S. and 6 deg. 49., or about 325 geographical miles W. by S. of Paris.

BRETEUIL, a town of France, in the department of Oise, with an ancient abbey; 14 miles N. N. E. of Beauvais, and 8 S. of Amiens. Pop. 2414.

BRETON, CAPE. See CAPE BRETON.

BRETTEN, a town of Germany, in the late palatinate of the Rhine, on the frontier of Wurtemberg; 20 miles S. of Heidelberg, and about 20 N. by W. of Stuttgart. Pop. 2500. It was the birthplace of Melancthon, and is now included in the territory of the duchy of Baden, circle of the Pfintz and Enz.

BREYARD, or BREYVORT, a strong town of Holland, in the county of Zutphen, with a castle; situate in a morass; 24 miles S. E. of Zutphen.

BREWOD, a town in Staffordshire, with a market on Tuesday; 10 miles S. by W. of Stafford, and 129 N. W. of London.

BRIANÇON, a town of France, on the frontier of Piedmont, in the department of Upper Alps; with a castle on a craggy rock, and other strong fortifications. In its neighbourhood manna is gathered from a sort of ash-tree. It has a handsome church, and a noble bridge over the Durance; 20 miles N. of Embrun, and about 70 E. by S. of Turin. Pop. 3455.

BRIANÇONNET, a fortress of Savoy, near the town of Monstiers, situate on a rock inaccessible every way, except by the side of a river, where it is ascended by two or three hundred steps. The common passage from Savoy to Italy is by this fortress.

BRIANSK, an interior town of Russia, in the province of Orel; situate on the Desna, an eastern branch of the Dnieper; about 250 miles S. W. of Moscow. Pop. about 5000. It has an annual fair very numerously attended.

BRIARE, a town of France, in the department of Loiret; seated on the Loire, and has a canal between that river and the Seine. It is 40 miles E. S. E. of Orleans.

BRIDGEND, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, with a market on Saturday, and a woollen manufacture; seated on the Ogmore, a river abounding in trout and salmon; 7 miles W. by N. of Cowbridge, and 181 W. of London.

BRIDGENORTH, a borough in Shropshire, with a market on Saturday. It has two churches, and a free school that sends and maintains eighteen scholars at the University of Oxford. It was formerly fortified with walls, and had a castle, now in ruins. Its trade both by land and water, is considerable. It is seated on both banks of the Severn, over which is a handsome bridge of six arches. The upper part of the town is 180 feet above the bed of the river, and commands an extensive and delightful prospect. An annual fair, on the 29th of October, is very numerously attended, and the quantities of cattle, sheep, butter, cheese, and bacon, brought for sale, is very great. It had formerly some manufactures of worsted, which have declined. It has a large grain market on Saturday. It returns two members to parliament, and is 23 miles S. E. of Shrewsbury, and 139 N. W. of London.

BRIDGEPORT, a city of the United States, in Connecticut. It stands on the W. side of an arm of Long Island Sound, into the head of which the Pequanoek r. enters. The city, incorporated in 1836, is neatly built, and has considerable manufactures, particularly of carriages, and saddles. The Housatonic railway connects it with West Stockbridge, and thence it is connected with Boston and Albany. The harbour is good for constant vessels, 75 miles S. S. W. of Hartford, 17 miles W. S. W. of New Haven, and 62 N. E. of New York. Pop. in 1840, 4570.

BRIANÇONNET, the capital of the island of Barbadoes, situate in the inmost part of Carlisle Bay, which is large enough to contain 500 ships, but the bottom is foul, and apt to cut the cables. This city was burnt down in 1688, and suffered also greatly by fires in 1756, 1766, and 1767. Before these fires it contained 1500 houses; and it has since been rebuilt. The streets are broad, the houses high, the wharfs and quays convenient, and the forts strong. The church is as large as some cathedrals. Here also is a free school, an hospital, and a college; the latter erected by the Society for Propagating the Gospel, pursuant to the will of Colonel Codrington, who endowed it with 2000*l.* a year. The town had scarcely risen from the calamities already mentioned, when it was torn from its foundation by a hurricane, in 1780, in which many of the inhabitants perished. It is scarcely yet restored to its former splendour. Long. 59. 43. W. lat. 13. 5. N. See BARBADOS.

BRIDGETOWN, the capital of Cumberland county, in New Jersey. The county court is held in it quarterly. It is situated on Cohanzey Creek; 54 miles S. of Philadelphia, and 71 S. S. W. of Trenton.

BRIDGEWATER, a borough in Somersetshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Thursday and Saturday. It is seated on the Parret, over which is a handsome bridge. It has a large handsome church, with a lofty spire. The summer assizes are held here every other year. In the wars between Charles I. and the parliament, the forces of the latter reduced great part of the town to ashes, and the castle was then so far demolished, that few vestiges of it are now observable. The river is navigable up to the town, for vessels of 200 tons burthen, and for barges as far as Langport, and by the Thone to Taunton: and although a prevalence of westerly wind causes the tide, at times, to set into the river with great fury, its navigation contributes essentially to the interest of the town; its commercial intercourse, however, is principally confined to the coast. The Bristol and eastern railway passes close to the town. It returns two members to parliament: and is 31 miles S. S. W. of Bristol, and 138 W. by S. of London. It was the birthplace of Admiral Blake, the worthy antagonist of Van Tromp.

BRIDGEWATER, a town of Vermont, U. S., watered by the Queechey river, affording considerable water power. An inexhaustible quarry of steatite or soapstone is much worked here; 78 miles S. of Montpelier. Pop. 1363.

BRIDLINGTON, commonly called HORTLINGTON; a seaport in East Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday. The harbour is commodious, and defended by two strong piers. Its mineral waters and accommodations for sea-bathing, draw much company in summer; and its trade is considerable, and has railways to Scarborough and Hull. It is seated on a creek S. of Flamborough-head; 40 m. E. N. E. of York, and 206 N. of London.

BRIDPORT, a borough in Dorsetshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated about 3 miles from the shore of the British Channel, between the rivers Brit and Bride, which unite just below the town, and form a convenient harbour, which, since 1822, has been improved so as to admit vessels of 200 to 300 tons burthen. It was formerly celebrated for its manufactures of cordage, sail-cloth, twine, and netting; and Henry VIII. granted it a monopoly for making all the cordage for the national marine, which it retained for about sixty years; but its manufactures are now inconsiderable. It builds and owns some shipping, and carries on a little external, as well as coasting trade. It returns two members to parliament. It is 12 miles W. of Dorchester, and 135 W. by S. of London.

BRIDPORT, a town of Vermont, U. S., on Lake Champlain, opposite Crown Point. The water of the place is very strongly impregnated with Epsom salts; 79 miles S. by W. of Montpelier. Pop. in 1840, 1480.

BRIEG, a fortified town of Silesia, capital of a circle of the same name, with a Lutheran cathedral, and several other churches for Protestants and Catholics. Here is a manufacture of cloth. It was taken by the Prussians in 1741, and its ancient castle burnt down during the siege. It is seated on the Oder; 25 miles S. E. of Breslau. Pop. about 11,500.

BRIEG, or BUG, a handsome town of the Valais, seated on the Saltina river, which falls into the Rhone on the S. side, about 28 miles E. of Sion. It suffered much from an earthquake in 1755.

BRIEL, or BRIELLE, a fortified seaport of South Holland, capital of the island of Voorn. The Dutch took it from the Spaniards in 1572, which was the foundation of their republic. It was the birthplace of Van Tromp, and is seated at the mouth of the Maese; 13 miles W. of Rotterdam. Long. 4. 9. E. lat. 51. 54. N. Pop. about 3000.

BRIENNE, a small town of France, in the department of Aube, distinguished for its military school, at which Napoleon Buonaparte received his education. It is about 20 miles E. of Troyes.

BRIENZ, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, famous for the cheese made in its neighbourhood. It is situated on a lake of the same name (9 miles long and 3 broad); 42 miles S. E. of Bern.

BRIEZEN, a small town of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, on the frontier of Anhalt; about 25 miles S. of Potsdam.

BRIETZEN. See WRIEZEN.

BRIEUX, Sr., a town of France, capital of the department of Cotes du Nord, and a bishop's see, with a handsome quay and commodious harbour. It is seated among hills, near the English Channel; 38 miles S. W. of St. Malo. Pop. 11,382.

BRIEY, a town of France, in the department of Moselle, near the river Mause; 12 miles N. W. of Metz. Pop. 1300.

BRIGG. See GLANDFORDBRIDGE.

BRIGA, LA, a town in the Col de Tende, on the frontier of Nice; a few miles S. of the town of Tende.

BRIGHTON, (or Brighthelmstone,) borough of England, county of Sussex. It stands at the foot of the South Downs, and extends for a considerable distance along the coast. It was little noticed till sea-bathing was strongly recommended in several disorders; and, from its being nearer the metropolis than almost any other part of the sea-coast, it gradually increased in attraction as a watering-place, till it has become one of the principal resorts of gaiety and fashion in the kingdom.

In 1784, the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., erected at Brighton, for an occasional residence, an edifice, called a marine pavilion, which he afterwards converted into a splendid palace, where he spent a great portion of every year; it has since been purchased by the town. Up to this period the buildings were comparatively mean; but since that time, the improvements have been such as to render Brighton a splendid town. It extends from Kemp Town on the E. for upwards of 2½ miles, to Brunswick Square on the W. Midway between these places is the magnificent chain-pier, 1154 feet long, and 13 wide, suspended by means of chains over four towers of cast iron. The parish church, situate on an eminence at the N.W., was formerly at a small distance from the town, which has now almost entrenched upon its sacred enclosure. The other places of worship connected with the Establishment, are the Chapel Royal, St. James's Chapel, and Trinity Chapel, and ten others, situate in various parts of the town and its suburbs, besides the church of St. Peter's, recently erected, which is one of the most beautiful ornaments that Brighton has to boast of. Here are also a Roman Catholic chapel, a Jews' synagogue, and several meeting-houses for the different denominations of dissenters. Besides the accommodations for sea-bathing, warm, cold, and vapour baths, of the most elegant and commodious construction, have also been erected; while the park furnishes a beautiful ride, and the spa all the varieties of artificial, mineral, and medicinal waters. Here are also two assembly rooms, a handsome theatre, (opened in 1807,) a celebrated race-ground, &c. It is connected with the metropolis by means of the Brighton and South Eastern Railway, which has afforded such facilities, that great numbers of the metropolitan merchants have their residence here; and the town has thereby been immensely increased in both extent and population. It sends two members to parliament. It is 17 miles W. by N. of Wechey Head, 50 E. by N. of Portsmouth, and 52 S. from London.

BRIGHTON, a town of Pennsylvania, on the W. side of Big Beaver River, 4 miles from the Ohio; a beautiful and flourishing place. Pop. 902; 231 m. W. by N. of Harrisburg.

BRIGHTSIDE, BERLOW, the W. quarter of the parish of Sheffield; which see.

BRIGNAIS, a town of France, in the department of Rhone. During the summer season it is the favourite resort of the citizens of Lyons, who have here many elegant villas and country houses. It is seated on the small river Garron; 9 miles S. of Lyons.

BRIGNOLLES, a town of France, in the department of Var, famous for its prunes. It is seated among mountains, in a pleasant country; 20 miles N.N.E. of Toulon. Pop. 5652.

BRIGUEGA, a town of Spain, in New Castile, an old and once walled town. Pop. 4800. Here General Stanhope and an English army were taken prisoners, in 1710. It is seated on the Tajuna; 43 miles N. E. of Madrid.

BRILLON, a town of the province of Westphalia, on the river Alme; 27 miles E. by S. of Arensburg. Pop. 3301.

BRINDISI, (the ancient BRUNDISIUM), a maritime and archiepiscopal city of Naples, in the province of Otranto, situate just within the entrance to the Adriatic, in the lat. of 40. 39. N. and 18. 20. E. long. Its harbour at one period was the most commodious and secure in the Mediterranean; but during the commercial career of Venice, it became neglected and inaccessible, except for small vessels. Within the present century, efforts have been made to render it again convenient and useful; but, so long as the subduing and precluding line of policy of the present government of Naples prevails, all efforts at social improvement will be made in vain. The adjacent country, like the harbour, presents an aspect of desolation. It is surrounded by extensive forests of olive-trees, and some mulberries, from which silk is gathered. Pop. of the city about 9000. It is about 190 m. S. E. of Naples. Virgil died at Brindisi, B.C. 19.

BRIONI, islands in the Gulf of Venice, opposite Pola, famous for their marble quarries.

BRIONNE, a town of France in the province of Normandy; 32 miles from Rouen.

BRIOUDE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Loire. Near it is a small town called Church Brioude, on account of a famous chapter. Brioude stands on the Allier, over which is a bridge of one arch, 182 feet in span. It is 32 miles N. W. of Puy, and 34 S. by E. of Claremont. Pop. about 5247. It was the birthplace of La Fayette, distinguished for his enthusiasm in the cause of the Americans to obtain their independence.

BRISACH, OLD AND NEW. Old Brisach is on the E. bank of the Rhine, and was formerly the chief town of the Brisgau; but the fortifications were demolished in 1741, and the ordnance removed to Friburg, about 15 miles in the interior. New Brisach is a fortified town on the opposite bank of the river, in the French department of the Upper Rhine; about 40 miles S. of Strasburg, and 250 E. by S. of Paris.

BRISBANE, an incorporated city, and capital of the colony of Queensland, Australia. It is beautifully situated on the left bank of Brisbane river. It is a bishop's see, and has two or three churches. The population (1861) is about 7,000, and is rapidly increasing.

BRISGAU, a territory in the circle of Suabia, of about 1000 square miles in extent, intersected by the line of the 48th degree of N. lat. and 8. of E. long., extending eastward from the Rhine into the Black Forest. As a frontier district bordering on France, it has been exposed to ravage in all the wars between that nation and Austria, and has been the scene of several bloody contests. At an early period of the French revolution, in 1793, the French reduced nearly the whole of the town of Old Brisach to ashes, and in 1796, after a severe action, possessed themselves of Friburg, the capital, but which they were obliged to abandon the same year. After various changes of sovereignty, it was wholly ceded by Bonaparte to the grand duke of Baden, in 1805; confirmed by treaty with Austria; and, in the new subdivisions of the territory of the States of Baden, in 1810, the Brisgau was divided between the three circles of Wiesen, Treisam, and Kinzig, the names of three rivers by which the territory of Baden is intersected.

BRISSAC, a town of France, in the department of Maine-et-Loire; seated on the Aubance; 13 miles S. of Angers.

BRISTOL, an ancient maritime and ecclesiastical city and county of England, situate at the S.W. extremity of the county of Gloucester, at the confluence of the little river Frome with the Lower Avon, which divides it from Somersetshire on the S., about ten miles above the confluence of the Avon with the Severn, into the arm of the sea called the Bristol Channel. Bristol was known at a very early period; and about the year 430, it is mentioned as one of the fortified cities of Britain. It was known to the ancient Britons by the name of Caer Oder nant Baden, or the city of Ostorius, in the valley of Bath; and by way of eminence it is sometimes called Caer Brito, the British city, and by the Saxons Brightstowe, pleasant place. It is adverted to both by Gildas and Nennius, in the fifth and seventh centuries, and from the period of Henry II. in the twelfth, to the middle of the eighteenth century, it ranked next to London, as the most populous, commercial, and important place in the kingdom. Since the latter period it has declined, and been greatly exceeded in population, commerce, and importance by Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, and Birmingham. As into all the rivers falling into the Bristol Channel, the tides rise to a great height, and occasionally rush in with considerable fury, the spring tides at Bristol rising to the height of forty-two feet; the ebbs and neaps were consequently attended with great inconveniences and detentions. This circumstance, since the completion of the canal navigation of the inland counties communicating with Liverpool and London—neither of which ports are materially affected by the inequality of the tides—tended to divert a considerable portion of the West India trade and refining of sugar from Bristol. It, however, retains a certain portion: the importation of sugar, on an average of the six years 1819—1824, was about 27,000 hogsheds per annum. It also imports a considerable quantity of wool, fruit, and wine, direct from Spain, Portugal, and France; and maintains a partial intercourse direct with all other parts of the world, except the East Indies, to which, up to 1826, it had not sent more than one or two ships. From 1809 to 1822, about 600,000*l.* had been expended towards the improvement of the harbour. In the latter year, another act was granted for its further improvement; and in 1825, numerous arbitrary and oppressive town dues were abolished, or duly regulated; all of which are as well calculated to revive and maintain its commercial prosperity, as to add to the comfort, interest, and character of the city at large. The docks, &c., have been lately purchased by the city, and a great reduction of the dues has been, or will be, made—a measure likely to do more for the prosperity of the city, than any other improvement during the present generation. It has some extensive works in copper and brass, and manufactures of glass bottles, lead, painters' colours, &c. &c. The principal resort of visitors is the suburb of Clifton, about a mile W. of the city, the houses and terraces of which are magnificent, and are arranged on different acclivities above the Hot Well, the waters of which are considered efficacious in consumptive cases. There is a railway between this place and London, called the Great Western Railway; and from here, the steam navigation of the Atlantic was attempted to be established, but it was soon abandoned. Besides the cathedral and the church of St. Mary Redcliffe, it has sixteen other churches, and five episcopal chapels, some of them beautiful, and most of them fine edifices. There are several dissenting meeting-houses; thirteen fellowship companies, some of whom have elegant halls; several hospitals, and other public buildings. Being surrounded by a very fertile as well as picturesque country, its markets are abundantly supplied with every kind of fish, flesh, fowls, vegetables, and fruits, on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays; and two annual fairs in March and September are very numerously attended. It has a distinct jurisdiction, and returns two members to parliament. It is 13 m. W.N.W. of Bath, 34 S. S. W. of Gloucester, and 114 W. of London. Long. 2. 36. W. lat. 51. 27. N.

BRISTOL, a maritime county of the state of Massachusetts; bounded on the S. by Buzzards' Bay, and W. by the state of Rhode Island. Pop. 60,164. Taunton, the chief town, situate near the head of a river of the same name, nearly in the centre of the country, is 33 miles S. of Boston. New Bedford, on Buzzards' Bay, is the other principal town.

BRISTOL, a small maritime county of the state of Rhode Island; bounded on the W. by the upper part of the preceding county, and on the E. by Narragansett Bay. Pop. 6467. The chief town, of the same name, situate near the S. end of the county, was distinguished for the part which it took in the slave-trade, previous to its abolition by the American government. It owns about 16,000 tons of shipping. Pop. 3490.

BRISTOL, a town in the S. W. part of Ontario county, state of New York; 217 miles W. of Albany. Pop. 1953.

BRISTOL, a town of Connecticut, United States. The soil is fertile, but it is more distinguished as a manufacturing town, clocks and buttons being largely made here; 17 m. S.W. of Hartford. Pop. in 1840, 2109.

BRISTOL, a town of Pennsylvania, on the W. bank of the Delaware, 20 miles above Philadelphia. It is a beautiful village, with a branch of the Pennsylvania canal terminating here. A great amount of coal passes through it. Pop. 1438.

BRISTOL BAY, a spacious bay, formed by two projecting points of the W. coast of N. America. The mouth of a river called Bristol river, falling into the head of the bay, is in the lat. of 58. 12. N. and 157. 33. W. long.; and Cape Newnham, which forms the N. point of the bay, is in lat. 58. 34. N. and 161. 55. W. long.; and the island of Oonalaska, one of the Aleutian group, off the S. point of the bay, is in lat. 53. 54. N. and 166. 22. W. long.

BRISTOL CHANNEL, an arm of the sea, between the south coast of Wales and the north coast of the counties of Somerset and Devon, leading into the river Severn and Lower Avon, on which the city of Bristol is situate.

BRITAIN, NEW, a country of N. America, comprehending all the tract north of Canada, commonly called the Esquimaux country, including Labrador, and New North and South Wales. It is subject to Great Britain; and lies between 50. and 70. N. lat. and 50. and 100. W. long. There are innumerable lakes and morasses, which are covered with ice and snow a great part of the year. The principal settlements belong to the English Hudson Bay Company. See ESQUIMAUX, HUDSON BAY, and LABRADOR.

BRITAIN, NEW, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, to the east of New Guinea, explored by Dampier, who sailed through the strait which separates it from New Guinea; and Captain Carteret, in 1767, sailed through a channel which divides it on the north-east from a long island, called New Ireland. New Britain lies in long. 152. 20. E. and 4. 0. S. The shores of both islands are rocky, the inland parts high and mountainous, but covered with trees of various kinds, among which are the nutmeg, the cocoa nut, and different kinds of palm. The inhabitants are black and woolly-headed, like negroes, but have not their flat noses and thick lips.

BRITISH AMERICA comprises the whole of the north part of the northern division of the western hemisphere, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, extending south in the long. of 83. W. to the lat. of about 42 N.; but further west it is bounded on the south by a conventional line, dividing it from the United States of America, in the lat. of about 48 N., and the Columbia river. This extensive territory, of several millions of square miles, will be found more particularly elucidated under the ten heads, as specified under the head of BRITISH EMPIRE.

BRITISH EMPIRE, the most extensive, influential, and, with the exception of China, the most populous empire in the world.

BRIVE, a town of France, in the department of Corrèze, with manufactures of silk handkerchiefs, muslins, gazes, &c. It is seated on the Corrèze, opposite the influx of the Vezere, in a delightful valley; 12 miles S. W. of Tulle. Pop. about 6000.

BROD, DEUTSCH, a town of Bohemia, on the river Sazawa; 20 miles S. by E. of Czaslau.

BRODERA, a town and fortress of Hindustan, in Guzerat, celebrated for its liuens, indigo, and lucc. It is 62 miles S.S.E. of Ahmedabad. Long. 73. 11. E. lat. 22. 15. N.

BRODY, a town of the Austrian states, N.E. part of Galicia; 52 miles E. by N. of Lemberg. Its name, which signifies a dirty place, is very characteristic; the houses are mostly built of wood, streets unpaved and filthy. Nevertheless, it enjoys a considerable trade, being a free commercial city, i. e., it does not pay any duties on its imports and exports. The chief trade is in cattle, hides, tallow, wax, &c. In it is a large estate belonging to Count Botocki, on whose estate the town stands. Pop. 25,000, of whom 18,000 are Jews.

BRODZIAK, a town of Lithuania, on the river Berczina; 100 miles S. of Polotsk, and 40 W. of Mohilow.

BROEK, a town of Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg, capital of a county of the same name; seated on the Roer; 11 miles N. of Dusseldorf.

BROEK, a village of North Holland; 6 miles from Amsterdam. It is one of the most singular and picturesque places in the world. The streets are paved in mosaic work, with variegated bricks; and no carriages ever enter them. The houses are painted on the outside, and each has a terrace and garden to the street, enclosed by a low railing; the garden adorned with China vases and shell-work, with borders composed of minute particles of glass, of different colours. Behind the houses are meadows full of cattle, in which the inhabitants carry on a great trade. Pop. about 800.

BROKEN BAY, a bay of New South Wales; 18 miles N. of Port Jackson. It is formed by the mouth of a great river, called the Hawkesbury, and is a good harbour.

BROMBERG, a town of Prussia, grand duchy of Posen, on the river Brahe, and the Königsberg, Danzig, &c., railway. A canal which unites the Elbe, Oder, and Vistula rivers with this town, is of great importance to the interior trade of the country. Pop. 8000.

BROMLEY, a town in Kent, with a market on Thursday. Here is a college for 40 poor clergymen's widows; and near the town is a mansion, formerly a palace, of the bishops of Rochester, where there is a chalybeate spring. Bromley is seated on the Ravensbourne; 10 miles S. by E. of London.

BROMLEY, a town in Staffordshire, with a market on Mouday. It was formerly called Abbots-Bromley, and afterward Paget Bromley, being given to Lord Paget at the dissolution of the abbey. It is 7 miles E. of Stafford, and 129 N.W. of London.

BROMSGROVE, a corporate town in Worcestershire, with a market on Tuesday. Here are manufactures of sheeting, nails, and needles; and a grammar-school founded by Edward VI. It is seated on the Salwarp; 13 miles N.N.E. of Worcester, 13 S. W. of Birmingham, and 116 N.W. of London.

BROOMWICH, WEST, a town in Staffordshire, contiguous to Wednesbury, and 7 miles W. by N. of Birmingham. Population extensively occupied in the various branches of the hardware manufacture.

BROOKE, a frontier county, at the northern extremity of Virginia; bounded on the E. by Washington county, Pennsylvania, and W. by the Ohio river. Pop. 7948. Wellsburg, on the E. bank of the Ohio, 400 miles N.W. of Richmond, is the chief town.

BROOKFIELD, a township of Madison county, New York; 93 miles W. of Albany. Pop. 3695.

BROOKFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, in Worcester county. Here are iron ore, and large quantities of stone which yield copperas. It is seated on the Quabong; 17 miles W. by S. of Worcester. Pop. 2472. There are several other towns and villages named Brookfield, in different parts of the United States.

BROOKHAVEN, a township of New York, in Suffolk county, Long Island; 60 miles E. of New York. Pop. 7050.

BROOKLYN, a city of New York, in King's county, at the W. end of Long Island, near East River, which separates it from the city of New York. It is the second place in population in the state, and the seventh in the United States. The ground on which the city is built, was originally quite uneven; and though much of its beauty has been impaired by levelling, it still is the finest situation in the neighbourhood of New York. It is one of the finest built cities in the United States, and from its proximity to the business portion of New York, it is a favourite place of residence for the merchants, &c. It is connected to that city by four steam ferries. The streets, with the exception of Fulton street, are strait, broad, and at right angles to each other. The public buildings are handsome, and there are several scientific institutions. The United States navy yard is here at Wallabout Bay, and covers forty acres; half-a mile E. of it is the naval hospital, and in the S. part of the city is the Greenwood cemetery. The Atlantic Dock Company are constructing a large basin of 42½ acres at Red Hook Point. The pop. has most rapidly increased. Between 1810 and 1840, the increase was 21,000, and the census of 1840 gave the pop. as 36,233, that of 1845, probably at 55,000.

BROOKLYN, a town of Massachusetts, in Norfolk county, separated from Boston on the E. by a narrow bay. Large quantities of fruits and vegetables are produced here for the Boston market.

BROOKLYN, the chief town of Windham county, Connecticut; 46 m. E. of Hartford.

BROOKVILLE, the chief town of Franklyn county, state of Indiana. It is finely located between the E. and W. forks of the White Water river, which falls into the Miami, a little above its entrance into the Ohio; 71 miles S. E. by E. of Indianopolis.

BROOME, a south frontier county of the state of New York, bordering on Susquehannah county, Pennsylvania, and the S. E. corner borders on the Delaware river. It has some mountain districts. Pop. in 1840, 22,338; in 1845, 25,808. Binghamton, on the N. bank of the Susquehannah, 148 miles W. by S. of Albany, is the chief town. BRUNL. See BORNEO.

BRUNN, or BRINN, a town of the Austrian States, capital of Moravia, and a bishop's see. It is defended by a strong fortress, called Spilberg, built on an eminence; and has manufactures of cloth, velvet, and plush. The Prussians besieged it in 1742, but were obliged to raise the siege. It is seated at the confluence of the Zwittau and Schwartz; 33 miles S. W. of Olmutz. Long. 16. 38. E. lat. 49. 13. N. Pop. 40,000.

BRUNNEN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Schweiz. Here the cantons of Uri, Schweiz, and Underwalden, formed the alliance which was the foundation of the republic of Switzerland. It is seated on the Waldsträdter See; 2 miles S.W. of Schweiz.

BRUNSBUTTE, a town of Germany, in Holstein, near the mouth of the Elbe; 13 miles N. W. of Gluckstadt.

BRUNSWICK, DUCHY OF, a territory of Germany, in the S. part of the circle of Lower Saxony. This territory formed the patrimony of the family of Guelph, who trace their descent from the Marquis of Este, who died about the middle of the 10th century. In 1546, it was divided by Ernest, the then duke, between his two sons; one founding the dukedom of Brunswick Lüneburg, and the other of Brunswick Wolfenbüttele. The Duchy, which is the 12th in order in the Germanic Confederation, and 12th in the Diet, is divided into five districts, as follows:

DISTRICTS.	AREA, Sq. MILES.	POP. IN 1833.
Wolfenbüttele	460	109,000
Schöningen	290	40,000
Harz	304	41,500
Weser	280	37,500
Blaukenberg	170	20,000
Total	1504	248,000

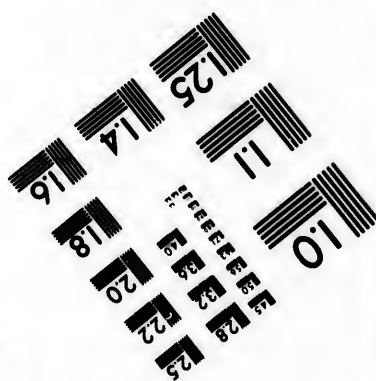

At present, the population is about 273,000. See LUNEBURG, HANOVER, and WOLFENBUTTELE, and Appendix.

BRUNSWICK, the chief town of the states of Brunswick Wolfenbüttele, is situate in the principality of Wolfenbüttele, on the banks of the river Ocker, which falls into the Aller. It is strongly fortified, and contains ten Lutheran churches, a cathedral dedicated to St. Blasius, one Calvinist, and one catholic church, a college, two academies, a mint, opera-house, town-hall, &c. The ducal palace was formerly a monastery. There is a large building appropriated as a public storeroom for wine. It has several manufactories, and claims the invention of the spinning-wheel; is distinguished for its breweries of mun, made principally from wheat malt. It has railway communication with Berlin, Hanover, and the rest of Europe; and, with the exception of Leipzig and Frankfurt, the fairs of Brunswick are more numerously attended than in any other town in Germany. It formerly ranked as a free and independent city; and for the continuance of its freedom it long and strenuously contended; but towards the close of the 17th century, yielded all its pretensions, and became the ducal residence in 1764. It is 47 miles W. by N. of Magdeburg, 37 E. by S. of Hanover, and about 110 S. by E. of Hamburg; in the lat. of 52. 16. N. and 10. 30. of E. long. Pop. about 36,000.

BRUNSWICK, New, a province of British America, extending from the Bay of Fundy S., in the lat. of 45., to the frontier of Canada, in the lat. of 48. N.; bounded on the W. partly by the Schoodie river, and partly by a conventional line running from the head of tide-water in the above river, which divides it from the united state of Maine, in the long. of 67. 45. W., to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the long. of 64. It is joined to Nova Scotia, at the S. E. corner, by an isthmus about 15 miles in breadth, and contains an area of about 25,931 square miles. In 1834, the population was estimated at 119,557. In 1848, the following was its divisions and population:

COUNTIES.	POP.	COUNTIES.	POP.
Restigouche . . .	4,214	Brought forward	86,676
Gloucester . . .	10,334	St. John . . .	43,942

It is intersected from the N. by the river St. John, which falls over a rapid into the Bay of Fundy; the rapid impedes the navigation from and into the bay; but above, it is navigable for vessels of 100 tons burthen for a hundred miles; and vast quantities of masts and logs of timber are floated down for shipment in the bay, which is spacious and secure. St. John's, the chief town of the province, is situated on the E. shore of the bay, immediately contiguous to the river of the same name. It has several rivers running from W. to E. into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on which side of the province are several spacious bays, such as Chaleure, Miranichi, Richibucto, &c., from whence vast quantities of timber are shipped to Great Britain annually. A few tribes of native Indians are scattered over the province. It possesses in general a capable soil, but cultivation has made but little progress; the inhabitants depending more on the forests and the fishery, in obtaining a supply of manufactures and other foreign productions, than on agriculture. Besides St. John's, the other chief towns are St. Andrew's, on the E. bank of the Schoodie, and St. Ann's, or, as it is now called, Frederic Town, which is the seat of the provincial government; about 80 miles up the river St. John.

BRUNSWICK, a S. frontier county of the state of Virginia, bordering on Northampton county, North Carolina. The S.W. corner jets upon the Roanoke river. Pop. 14,346 (two-thirds of whom are slaves). Lawrencevill is the chief town.

BRUNSWICK, a maritime and frontier county at the S. extremity of North Carolina. It is bounded on the N. and E. by Cape Fear River. It is a swampy and desolate district. Pop. 5265, of whom 2119 are people of colour. Smithville, near the mouth of Cape Fear River, 255 miles S. by E. of Raleigh, is the chief town. It has also a town of the same name about 30 miles up the river.

BRUNSWICK, a seaport of the state of Georgia, chief town of Glynn county, with a safe harbour, capable of containing a numerous fleet of men-of-war. It is seated in a fertile country, at the mouth of Turtle River, in St. Simon Sound; 60 miles S. S. W. of Savannah, and 10 S. of Darien. Long. 81. 0. W. lat. 31. 10. N.

BRUNSWICK, New, a city of New Jersey, in Middlesex county. Its situation is low, but many houses are now built on a pleasant hill, which rises at the back of the town. It has a considerable inland trade; and, over the Rariton, is one of the most elegant bridges in America. Rutgers's College, formerly called Queen's College, is a handsome building. New Brunswick is 60 miles N. E. of Philadelphia, on the high road to New York. Pop. 8693.

BRUNSWICK, a town of Rensselaer county, New York, 11 miles W. of Albany. Pop. 3051.

BRUNSWICK, a town of the United States, in the state of Maine, situate on a spacious plain on the S. bank of the Androscoggin River, which here falls over a succession of rapids, forming some beautiful scenery, as well as holding out great advantages for mill-sites. It has a college, founded by the legislature of Massachusetts in 1794, called Bowdoin College, after the name of a liberal benefactor. It is about 30 miles N. E. of Portland. Pop. 3547.

BRUNY ISLE, an island off the S. E. point of Van Diemen's Land; about 30 miles in length, indented by Adventure Bay.

BRUSSELS, (Bruzelle), a deservedly celebrated city of South Brabant, and capital of the kingdom of Belgium, situate on the banks of the Sienne, which affords a facility of communication by water to Antwerp. During the domination of Austria over this part of Europe, it was the seat of the Austrian governor, and head-quarters of the commissariat of the armed forces; and during the successful career of Napoleon Buonaparte, it was the chief town of the department of the Dyle, annexed to the French empire, and adopted as a favourite station by that distinguished individual. On the Netherlands being annexed to Holland, at the peace of 1814, Brussels was made the seat of government of the two countries alternately, year by year, with the Hague. It has since that period undergone great improvements, and is now the seat of government, and residence of King Leo-old. The city is about seven miles in circumference, surrounded by a wall, which, however, offers little or no security against the now efficient mode of warfare. It was bombarded by Marshal Villeroy in 1695, when about 400 houses and 14 churches were destroyed; a disaster, together with its having been exposed to the ravages of war in every contest that has prevailed in this part of Europe from that period up to 1814, it has not thoroughly recovered. During the career of Antwerp and Amsterdam, as the chief commercial cities of Europe, Brussels and the surrounding country was equally distinguished for the extent and excellence of its manufactures in linens, silks, &c., as well as in cottons, since the introduction of the manufacture into this part of Europe; and the carpets and lace of Brussels were proverbial for their fineness and superiority over the whole trading world; and although it has greatly declined from its former pre-eminence, partly in consequence of the frequent wars to which it has been exposed, but more from the manufacturing energy of the English, which, during the 23 years' war, from 1793 to 1815, attained an ascendancy in every branch over the manufactures of the whole world, it still retains some extensive and respectable establishments for the manufacture of lace, cambrics, and cottons, and for the printing of calicoes, &c., &c. The site of Brussels, selected by St. Gery, Bishop of Cambrai, at the commencement of the 7th century, was very judicious, being at the foot of the first ascent from the great level called the Pays de Bas, or low countries. The buildings extend up the ascent to a height of 100 to 200 feet, affording to the upper part of the town an extensive and beautiful prospect over the surrounding territory; whilst the lower part possesses every advantage of traffic by the canals which intersect the level country. It is also connected with Mechlin, and by the system of railways with all parts of Belgium, which also extend to the Rhine eastward, and to Paris on the S., rendering it a chief centre for continental travellers. The market-place is a handsome square in the lower part of the town, surrounded on three sides by very stately houses, the window-frames of which, being gilt, produce a very imposing effect. On the S. side is the town-hall, a very ponderous edifice, with a long sloping roof, and a range of projecting windows. It has a beautiful spire, towering in the air to the height of 364 feet, surmounted with a figure of St. Michael, on copper, 17 feet in additional height. In the upper part of the town, overlooking the market-place, is a square, surrounded by ranges of very elegant and uniform buildings of stone, principally occupied as hotels; an avenue from the N. side of the square leads to the park, surrounded on all sides by very handsome buildings, among which are the residences of the ambassadors and the opulent classes; at the upper end are the king's palace and the house of assembly of the states-general of the kingdom. The park itself is a kind of public garden, intersected by beautiful alleys, bordered with trees, and ornamented with numerous statues of white marble. The cathedral, dedicated to St. Gudule, also in the upper part of the town, is a very ponderous edifice, which, like the town-hall, interests more by its magnitude than the beauty of its architecture, or justness of its proportions. The interior is disfigured by the exhibition of numerous collections of catholic mummery, and works of art, dispersed about the edifice without any regard to order or taste. It has sixteen chapels or recesses; and were the numerous works of art judiciously arranged, as in the cathedral at Ghent, the whole is susceptible of being made to produce a very interesting and imposing effect. The church of the Capuchins, one of the finest of that order in Europe, and one or two others, are fine edifices. There are several squares of minor note; and several parts of the city are ornamented with fountains, which once were elegant, but have of late been neglected; the most celebrated is the representation of Neptune, the Tritons and the horses spouting the water from their nostrils; and another, which excites the curiosity of all strangers, is called in the language of the country, manikin pis, which, if correctly translated and described, would, to the fastidious taste of an English reader, be deemed indelicate. The water for the supply of these fountains is raised from a lake about half a mile to the E. of the city, by means of machinery. It has a museum of works of art, and cabinet of natural productions, a botanic garden, an extensive public library, and several institutions for education, useful, scientific, and refined. The opera house, built in the year 1700, is a stately edifice, in the Italian style; and the theatre, erected in 1819, is worthy of notice. The ramparts within the walls, surrounding the high part of the town, being planted with rows of trees, afford agreeable promenades. The gates are seven in number, but have no claim to notice, except as affording ingress and egress. The palace of Laeken, a favourite residence of Napoleon, situate about two miles from the Antwerp gate, is a fascinating place, but not extensive. Brussels being situate in the bosom of a very fertile district, its markets are exceedingly well supplied with all the substantial articles of subsistence. In regard to the important considerations of salubrity and mildness of temperature, it is second to no city in Europe; and it has always been a favourite resort for the English. During the commonwealth, it was the occasional abode of Charles II., and his brother the Duke of York. The inhabitants are Catholics, and speak the French language, but all religious tenets are tolerated. The population has increased considerably since 1814, and may be estimated at 106,000. It is 25 miles S. of Antwerp, about the same distance E. by S. of Ghent, and 148 N. by E. of Paris.

BRUTON, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday. Here are manufactures of silk and hosiery; a free-school, founded by Edward VI.; and a stately alms-house, consisting of the ruins of a priory, with an income of nearly 3000*l.* per annum. It is seated on the river Brue; 12 miles S. E. of Wells, and 100 W. of London.

BRUTUS, a township of Cayuga county, New York, lying between the S. shore of Lake Ontario and the Erie Canal; 172 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 2044.

BRUX, a town in the N. part of the circle of Saaz, Bohemia.

BRUYERES, a town of France, in the department of Vosges; 11 miles E. N. E. of Epinal. Pop. 1900.

BRVAN, a small maritime county of the state of Georgia, bounded on the N. by the Ogeechee river, which divides it from Chat-tam county; the Canouchee river intersects it from the S. W. corner, falling into the Ogeechee about the centre of the N. side. Pop. 897 whites, 7 free blacks, and 3182 slaves. The court-house of the county is about 15 miles S. of Savannah, and 206 S. E. by E. of Milledgeville.

BRZESC, or POLESIA, PALATINATE OF, a district of Russian Poland, lying between the rivers Bug on the W., and Dnieper on the E., intersected by the line of the 52nd degree of N. lat.; and also from W. to E. by the Prz-yspiec or Pripet river, with numerous branches falling into the Dnieper. These rivers, from a total absence of all regard to free the obstructions of their currents, tend to make Brzesc a marshy and dreary district, which, under social and reciprocal arrangements, might easily be made to rank amongst the most fertile in Europe. The Pina, a branch of the Przyspiec, is united by a canal to the Machawiza, a branch of the Bug, falling into the Vistula, thereby uniting the waters of the Black Sea with those of the Baltic.

BRZESO LITOV, the chief town of the above district, is situate at the confluence of the river Machawiza with the Bug, opposite to Theres-pol. It is a considerable place, the see of a Greek bishop, and celebrated for its being the chief place for the instruction of Jews destined for rabbinical pursuits, and its magnificent synagogue. It is strongly fortified, and has a castle on an eminence; about 100 miles E. by S. of Warsaw, and 250 S. E. of Dantzic.

BRZESO is also the name of another town, capital of another palatinate of the same name, lying between the rivers Wurtha on the S. W. and Vistula on the N. E. The town, seated near the Vistula, is about 90 miles W. by N. of Warsaw, and 150 due S. of Dantzic.

BRZEZANY, a town in the S. E. part of Austrian Galicia, seated near a small lake communicating with the Dnicister river. Pop. about 5000.

BRZESNITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz, on the frontier of the principality of Miessen, with manufactures of lace, fire-arms, and hardware; 24 miles W. N. W. of Saaz. Another, in the N. part of the circle of Prachin; 18 miles W. N. W. of Pisek.

BSHIRRAI, a village and district of Palestine, near the celebrated cedars of Lebanon, on the Nahr Kadasha, which falls into the Mediterranean.

Bu, a town of France, department of Eure et Loire; 9 miles N. E. from Dreux.

Bu-ROREG, a river of Fez, North Africa, on which the town of Sia, or Salee, stands.

BuA, an island in the Gulf of Venice, on the coast of Dalmatia, called likewise Partridge island, because frequented by those birds. It is joined by a bridge to the town of Tracon; about 20 m. W. S. W. of Spalatro.

BUARGOS, a town of Portugal, in Beira, on the sea coast, at the mouth of the Mondego; 27 miles S. of Aveira. It suffered greatly by the earthquake which destroyed the greater part of Lisbon, in 1755.

BUCCARI, or BUCHARI, a seaport of the Austrian empire, on the coast of Morlachia, at the head of the N. E. part of the Gulf of Venice, declared by the emperor, in 1780, a free port for commerce with the East Indies; but the favour might just as well have applied to trading with the moon, for any advantage that has resulted from the declaration. It is 12 miles E. of Fiume. Pop. about 3000.

BUCHANESS, the most eastern promontory of Scotland, to the E. of Peterhead, in Aberdeenshire, in long. 1. 34. W. lat. 57. 27. N. Near this promontory are the Bullers of Buchan and other stupendous rocks and precipices, much admired for their awful grandeur.

BUCHARIA. See BOKHARIA.

BUCHAU, a town of Suabia, with a nunnery, seated on a small lake, called Feyder See; 25 miles S. W. of Ulm.

BUCHAU, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz; 26 miles S. W. of Saaz.

BUCHOLZ, a town of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark, seated on the Dahme, near the frontier of Lusatia; 23 miles S. S. E. of Berlin.

BUCHOREST (Buckarest, city of joy), a strong city of Europe, since 1698 the capital of Wallachia, where the hospodar commonly resides. The patriarchal church is large, adjoining to the palace of the archbishop; and in a square, near the centre of the town, is the great church of St. George, the patron saint of Wallachia. The inhabitants are estimated at 60,000. It is seated on the Dom-boriza, which falls into the Danube; 35 miles S. S. E. of Tergovist, and 200 N. by W. of Adrianople.

BUCHORN, a town of Suabia, seated on the N. bank of the Lake of Constance; 18 miles N. W. of Lindau.

BUCHOVINE, or BUKOVINA, a circle of Moldavia, in Austria, a mountainous district, cold but salubrious. Pop. 130,000. Capital, Czernowitz. See BUKOWINE.

BUCHSWEILER, a town of France, department of Lower Rhine. Pop. 2500.

BUCKDEN, a village in Huntingdonshire; 5 miles S. W. of Huntingdon, and 61 N. of London. Here is a superb piece of the bishops of Lincoln, and several of the prelates have been interred in the church.

BUCKENBURG, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Schauenburg, with a castle, on the river Au; 3 miles E. S. E. of Minden.

BUCKENHAM, OLD and NEW, two towns in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday; 12 miles E. by N. of Thetford, and 93 N. E. of London.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, an interior county of England, bounded on the S. by the river Thames, which divides it from Berkshire, E. by the counties of Middlesex, Hertford, and Bedford, S. by Northampton, and W. by Oxfordshire. The S. part is intersected by the Ouse river, running from W. to E. into Bedfordshire, working several corn and paper mills, but is not navigable within the county. The Lys-sel runs from S. to N. into the Ouse, and the Coln, which divides the county from that of Middlesex, runs from N. to S. into the Thames. The Thame, which rises in the centre of the county, runs W., falling into the Thames in Oxfordshire. The N. part is intersected by a range of chalk hills, and the Grand Junction Canal runs through the S. E. part of the county, being carried over the river Ouse by an aqueduct three quarters of a mile in length. The county may be considered divided by the chalk hills into two extensive plains; the S. part producing wheat and beans of superior quality, and the N. part appropriated more to pasture. In addition to its chalk, which is distributed over all the inland counties for whitewashing, it has veins of fuller's earth and ochre.

This county has long been celebrated for its corn and cattle: formerly fine flocks of sheep were fed in the vale of Aylesbury, but the breeding of these useful animals has been for some time on the decline. At present this vale feeds oxen for the London market, to which it also sends immense supplies of butter weekly. There is a small proportion of arable land in the northern division of the county; and not much in any other part, except the Chiltern districts, which are usually cultivated with wheat, barley, oats, beans, and sunflower. In the neighbourhood of Aylesbury, ducks are reared very early in the spring, and sometimes at Christmas, which, being sent to London, sell at a high price. The only manufactures of consequence in this county are those of bone, lace, and paper. The former is carried on at Olney, Newport Pagnell, and Hanslope, and the latter principally in the neighbourhood of Wycombe. At Amersham there is a manufacture of sacking, and of white cotton goods; and at Marlow are some large works of copper, brass, and brass wire, and mills for making thimbles, and pressing rape and linseed. This county is adorned with several magnificent seats; and in various parts Roman roads and military stations are traced, and Roman antiquities have been occasionally discovered. The principal towns are Aylesbury, Buckingham, Marlow; and, of a secondary class, Amersham, Wycombe, and Wendover. It sends three members to parliament.

BUCKINGHAM, a borough, and one of the principal towns in the preceding county, is situated on the N. bank of the Ouse, by which it is nearly surrounded, and over which there are three bridges. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having been fortified by Edward the Elder in 918, against the incursions of the Danes. In 1837, the remains of a Roman villa were discovered within two miles of the town; and near this spot are two tumuli or burrows, supposed to be Roman; but they have not been opened. It had formerly a castle in the centre of the town, on the site of which, towards the close of the last century, an elegant new church was erected. The summer assizes for the county are held here. The town hall is a spacious edifice of brick. A great number of calves are fattened, and large quantities of butter made for the London market, in this part of the county; lace is also made here. Market on Saturday; 16 miles N. of Aylesbury, 26 N. E. of Oxford, 23 S. W. of Northampton, and 55 N. of London, on the Banbury Rail.

BUCKINGHAM, an interior county of Virginia, forming nearly a square, the W. and N. sides of which are bounded by James River. Pop. 18,786. The court-house, in the centre of the county, is 64 miles W. of Richmond.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, a county of Lower Canada, in the district of Trois Rivières, on the S. bank of the St. Lawrence.

BUCKS, a frontier county of the state of Pennsylvania, bounded on the N. E. and S. E. by the Delaware river, which divides it from New Jersey, and on the S. W. by Montgomery county, the S. W. corner jetting upon Philadelphia. It is divided into twenty-seven townships, containing together about 410,000 acres, and a population of 48,107. Bristol, the chief town, in the S. E. part of the county, on the bank of the Delaware, is 142 miles E. of Harrisburg, and 18 N. E. of Philadelphia.

BUCKSPORT, a flourishing town of the state of Maine, United States, on the E. side of the Penobscot river. It has a fine harbour, and considerable shipping, and has been very successful in the lumber trade. It is 15 miles S. of Bangor, and 58 miles N. E. by E. of Augusta. Pop. in 1840, 3015.

BUCTRUS, a town of Ohio, on the S. bank of the Sandusky river. It stands in a rich prairie land, 62 miles N. of Columbus. Pop. 1634.

BUDA, or OFEN, the capital of Lower Hungary, situated on the side of a hill, on the W. side of the Danube, over which is a handsome suspension bridge to Pesth. The inhabitants are estimated at 40,000. The churches and public buildings are handsome. In the adjacent country are vineyards, which produce excellent wine. Prior to 1526, when it surrendered to the Turks, it was the residence of the kings of Hungary. From that period, for 160 years, it was an object of jealousy and contention between the Turks and the Christian powers of Europe; when, in 1686, it surrendered to the latter, who strengthened the fortifications, by whom it has since been retained with at interruption. It suffered greatly by fire in 1810, when 600 houses were destroyed; but their places have since been supplied with improved buildings. It is about 130 miles E.S.E. of Vienna, and 180 N. N. W. of Belgrade. Long. 19. 5. E. lat. 47. 30. N.

BUDANITZA, a town at the N.W. end of Slavonia, near the south bank of the Drave; 23 miles S.W. of Funfkirchen.

BUDDEGAUM, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Agra, with 4000 inhabitants.

BUDE, a hamlet in Cornwall, on the Bristol Channel, with a lighthouse.

BUDELICH, a town of Germany, in the territory of Treves; seated on the Traen; 12 m. E.N.E. of Treves.

BUDERICH, or BURICH, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Cleves, seated on the Rhine; 22 miles S. E. of Cleves, and 4 S.E. of Wesel.

BUDIN, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Rakonitz, with a castle; 9 miles S. by W. of Lentmeritz.

BUDINGEN, a town of Germany, in Wetteravia, with a castle; situate on the Sambach; 25 miles E. N. E. of Frankfort on the Maine.

BUDINZF, a town of Slavonia; 18 miles S. W. of Essey.

BUDISSEN. See BAUTZEN.

BUDOJA, a strong seaport of Dalmatia, and a bishop's see. It sustained a siege by the Turks, in 1686; and is 30 mil. S.E. of Ragusa. Long. 18. 58. E. lat. 42. 10. N.

BUDRIO, a town of Italy, in the Bolognese; 8 miles E. of Bologna.

BUDUKHSAN, a province of central Asia, now a dependency of the khan of Koondooz; between lat. 36. and 38. N., and 70. 30. and 72. 30. E. long. It consists of the valley of the Koocha, a tributary of the Oxus. It contains ruby mines, and cliffs of lapis lazuli. This district suffered greatly from an earthquake in 1832.

BUDWEIS, a fortified town of Bohemia, in the circle of Budweis, and lately a bishop's see. It has various manufactures, and a good trade in corn and horses. It is seated on the Muldau; 75 miles S. of Prague. Pop. 7400.

BUDWEIS, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Znuin; 40 m. S.W. of Bunn, and 65 N.N.W. of Vienna.

BUEN AYRE. See BONAIR.

BUENOS AYRES, a republic of S. America, extending from the 13th to the 41st degree of S. lat., comprising an area of about 1,096,440 square miles; constituted a viceroyalty of Spain in 1778, but from the period of July, 1806, to July, 1821, it continued in perpetual collision, when at the latter period it was constituted an independent republic, by the title of the United Provinces of South America. It is sometimes called the Argentine Republic, or Republic of La Plata, from the river. It is divided into 13 provinces, and is bounded on the N. by Bolivia, W. by Chili, S. by Patagonia, on the N.E. by Brazil, and E. by Uruguay. The valley of the Plata river comprehends the northern part, while to the S. are the level plains covered with tall grass, affording pasturage to numerous herds of wild cattle and horses, and which stretch away into the unpeopled districts of Patagonia, in the S., and are called pampas. The western part, at the foot of the Andes, is exceedingly cold in winter, while the heat is oppressive in summer. On the coast, violent and sudden winds are common. The soil is exceedingly various in such an extensive tract, but it is generally fruitful, and produces much valuable timber, and fruits of numerous varieties. Gold and silver are found in the northern districts. The provinces are independent of each other, but are all subject to a governor, captain-general, and house of representatives; and all internal disputes were settled by the treaty of August 27, 1828.

San Luis	25,000	San Luis
Mendoza	40,000	Mendoza
San Juan	25,000	San Juan
Total	675,000

The area is about 726,000 square miles. The above population is probably underrated, and exclusive of about 50,000 Indians.

The relations of the separate states, was in some degree changed by the war between the republic and Brazil, respecting Uruguay, which was established as an independent state in 1828. In 1839, the president, General Rosas, invaded Montevideo, and in 1842, again attacked this place. France and Great Britain interposed, but without effect, and the greatest injuries have been inflicted on the commerce of the two countries. A treaty, with great concession to Rosas, was concluded by England, Nov. 24, 1849, and the English force left on Feb. 24, 1850. The French treaty is still in negotiation. The principal exports are hides, tallow, gold, and silver. The chief towns are Buenos Ayres, the capital, Santa Fé, Cordova, Mendoza, Tucuman, and Vera Cruz.

Buenos Ayres, city of, seated on the S. bank of the La Plata, about 180 miles from its mouth, in the lat. of 34.35. S. and 58.24. of W. long., opposite to where the Uruguay forms its junction with the Parana. This city is justly esteemed as the finest, and as containing the most active and intelligent population of all South America. It was founded by Mendoza, in 1535, but afterwards abandoned; and in 1544 another colony of the Spaniards came here, who left it also; but it was rebuilt in 1582, and inhabited by Spaniards and the native Americans. It was, however, but little known to the world until the commencement of the last century, up to which period the intercourse of the country had been restrained by a rigorous monopoly, when, in 1748, the annual fleet of the monopolists sailed for the last time to Cadiz, the intercourse being thrown open to the whole of Spain. In 1774, the freedom of its intercourse was extended to the greater part of the ports of the other Spanish governments in America; and in 1778, when the provinces of Buenos Ayres, which had previously been under the government of Peru, were constituted a separate vicerealty, and the city of Buenos Ayres made the seat of the viceroy, it gradually increased in extent, population, and importance, during the remainder of the last century; about which period, the imperial French government, under Napoleon, sent emissaries for the purpose of rendering it subservient to the views and policy of France, which tended materially to retard its commercial career, on which alone the prosperity of the city depended. To counteract this influence, the English, in 1806, sent an expedition from the Cape of Good Hope against Buenos Ayres, which they took by surprise in the month of May of that year, but the whole force were compelled to surrender at discretion, after a few weeks, to a body of militia under the command of General Liniers, a partisan of the French government. In June of the following year, successive reinforcements having arrived from England, a renewed attack was made upon the city with a force of 10,000 men, under the command of General White-locks; but the inhabitants, animated by Liniers to the most determined resistance, and aided by the militia, converted every house into a fortress, from which they assailed the English troops at all points, with such disastrous effect as to compel the whole force to surrender prisoners of war. From this period, up to July, 1816, the city became the theatre of internal dissensions, when a declaration of independence was agreed upon. Civil commotions have since occasionally distracted it, and are doing so at the present time (1861); but it is hoped that a decisive victory recently gained, in October, by the constitutional party, will re-establish order. Among the public buildings are a stately cathedral, and two or three churches, town-hall, several convents, and other similar institutions. The public edifices are all built of stone, of a whitish colour, and produce an imposing effect. Its commercial intercourse now extends to all parts of the world, and its export productions of hides and tallow, in addition to the silver and gold from the mines of Potosi, &c., enable it to command an abundant supply of all the manufactured productions of Europe and Asia, as well as of every other commodity, from every quarter of the globe. The population, which, at the commencement of the present century, was estimated at about 40,000, is now above 110,000.

BUFFALO, a city of Erie county, state of New York, situate at the mouth of a small river of the same name, at the E. end of Lake Erie. The land rises by a gentle ascent, 2 miles from the water, to an extended plain; and from the elevated parts of the city there are fine views. The city has broad and regular streets; Main Street is 2 miles long, and is finely built, the other parts of the city are built with neatness and taste. There are three public squares. The harbour of Buffalo is spacious and safe, and once had a bar, now obviated by a long pier. One inconvenience, however, to which it is liable, is obstruction from ice. There are a large number of steam boats and other craft employed in the navigation of L. Erie. The commencement of the rapid growth may be dated from the opening of the Erie canal, connecting it with Albany and the Hudson, though, as it stands, as a great gate between the east and the west, it is a great depot for the Western county, and had flourished accordingly. It is connected with Black Rock and Niagara Falls by railroads. It was originally laid out by the Holland Land Company in 1801, and was entirely burnt by the British in 1814. It is 288 m. W. (or 363 by the Erie canal) from Albany; 73 W. from Rochester, and 22 S. S. E. from Niagara Falls. Pop. in 1810, 1508; in 1830, 8658; and in 1840, 18,213.

BUG, a river of Poland, rising near Leopold, or Limberg, running N., dividing Austrian Galicia from Russian Poland to Brzesc. It then takes a westerly course, between Galicia and Prussian Poland, falling into the Vistula a few miles below Warsaw.

BUGIA, or BUEZIA, a seaport of Algiers, in the province of Constantina, at the mouth of the Aduse, on a bay of the Mediterranean. It has a strong castle; but Sir Edward Spragge destroyed several Algerine men-of-war under its walls, in 1671. The harbour is safe and more capacious than that of Algiers, but its entrance is equally dangerous. The principal trade is in instruments of agriculture, made of iron, obtained from mountains near the town. It is 122 miles E. of Algiers. Long. 5. 28. E. lat. 36. 49. N.

BUGIE, a town of Egypt, situate on the west shore of the Red Sea, almost opposite to Ziden, the port town of Mecca, and about 110 miles W. of it. Long. 36. 6. E. lat. 22. 15. N.

BUCUE, a town of France, department Dordogne; 16 miles W. N. W. of Sarlat. It is well built, and carries on various woollen manufactures; it also sends great supplies of wine to Bourdeaux. Pop. 2437.

BUILTH, or BUART, a town of Wales, in Brecknockshire, with a market on Monday and Saturday. Here was an ancient castle, whose keep, its last remains, was burnt down in 1690. In this neighbourhood the Welsh made their last stand for independence, and were defeated by Edward I. in 1283. Builth has a manufacture of stockings. It is seated on the Wye, over which is a bridge into Radnorshire; 12 miles N. of Brecknock, and 173 W. by N. of London.

BUIS, a town of France, in the department of Drome; 40 miles E. of Orange, and 65. S. S. E. of Valence.

BUITRAGO, a fortified town of Spain, in New Castile, on the frontier of Segovia, celebrated for the wool collected in its environs. It is seated on the Lozoya; 40 miles N. of Madrid.

BURRAMPOOTER, BRAHMAPUTRA, or MEGNA, a river of Asia, which rises in the mountains of Tibet, near the head of the Ganges, in the lat. of 34. N. and of 80. of E. long. These two rivers, issuing from opposite sides of the same ridge of mountains, direct their course toward opposite quarters, till they are more than 700 miles asunder; and afterwards meet in one point near the sea, each having performed a winding course of about 1400 miles. From its source, the Burrampooter proceeds S.E. through Tibet, where it is named Sampoo, or Zancin, that is, the river: after washing the border of the territory of Lassa, it proceeds S.E. beyond the 95th degree of E. long. to within 220 miles of Yunan, the westernmost province of China; it then turns suddenly to the W., and passing through Assam, assumes the name of Burrampooter. It enters Bengal on the N.E., makes a circuit round the western point of the Garrow Mountains, and then, altering its course to S., meets the Ganges about 40 miles from the sea, in the lat. of 22. 40. N. During the last 60 miles, before its junction with the Ganges, it forms a stream which is regularly from 4 to 5 miles wide.

BURSA, or BRUSA, a city of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, built by Prusias, king of Bithynia. It was the capital of the Ottoman empire, before the taking of Constantinople; and it now contains about 60,000 inhabitants. It stands upon several little hills, at the bottom of Mount Olympus, and on the edge of a fine plain, full of fruit trees. So many springs proceed from the mount, that every house has its own fountain; and at its foot are splendid hot-baths. The mosques are elegant, as are the caravanseras. The bezestine is a large structure full of warehouses and shops, containing all the commodities of the east, besides their own manufactures in silk. Here are the best workmen in all Turkey, who are excellent imitators of the tapestry of Italy and France. None but Mussulmans are permitted to dwell in the city; but the suburbs, which are much finer, and better peopled, are filled with Jews, Armenians, and Greeks. Bursa is seated on the banks of the Nilifur, which falls into the sea of Marmora; 68 miles S. by E. of Constantinople. Long. 29. 4. E. lat. 40. 9. N.

BURTON-UPON-TRENT, a town in Staffordshire, with a market on Thursday. It has the remains of a large abbey; and is seated on the W. bank of the Trent, which here divides the counties of Stafford and Derby; there is an old bridge of thirty-six arches over the river, and on its banks are two extensive corn mills, four cotton mills, and six extensive breweries, the produce of which is distributed, and justly esteemed, over every part of the world. There are also six or eight employers in the manufacture of hats;
the cotton spinning, at the commencement of the present century, was more extensive.
It is 12 miles E. of Lichfield, 12 W. of Derby, and 123 W. of London, on the line of the Birmingham and Derby Railway.

BURWAH, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal, on the borders of Orissa; 256 miles W. by N.

on Thursday. Returns one member to parliament. It is extensively engaged both in the cotton and woollen manufacture, in all the operations of spinning, weaving, scouring, fulling, dressing, bleaching, printing, &c., in the various branches of which there is a very large number of establishments, some of them very extensive. There are also ironfoundries, machine-makers, and considerable trade in the manufacture of hats; it communicates with the Leeds and Liverpool Canal.
It is seated on the Irwell, 9 miles N. of Manchester, on the East Lanc. and Lanc. and Yorks. Railways, and is connected by other branches to all the large towns of the district.

BURY ST. EDMUND'S, a borough in Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday.
It took its name from St. Edmund the king, who was buried here; and to his honour an abbey was founded, of which some noble ruins remain. Here are two parish churches, which stand in one churchyard; in St. Mary's lies Mary, queen of France, who was married to Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk. At this town the barons met and entered into a league against king John. Henry VI. called a parliament here. In 1446, when Humphry, duke of Gloucester, was imprisoned, and here he died, as supposed, by poison. The assizes for the county are held here; and it has a free-school, founded by Edward VI. It returns two members to parliament, and is on the

BUSHIR, or BUSHIRE, a seaport town of Persia, province of Fars, and, excepting Bus-sorah, the principal port of the Persian Gulf; 120 miles W. S. W. of Shiraz. It is built at the end of a low sandy peninsula, and is thus nearly surrounded by water, and across the isthmus a mud wall, useless as a defence, is built. It is a mean wretched place; the houses low and ill built, the streets narrow, crooked, and dirty; and the public buildings are on a par with the rest of the town. It is subject also to all the miseries and annoyances of an eastern climate and locality. It is nevertheless the chief entrepôt for the supply of Persia with Indian goods, and has a considerable trade with Bombay and Calcutta. The East India Company have a factory here. The chief exports to India are horses, dried fruits, tobacco, shawls, &c. The merchants are almost entirely Persians and Armenians; very few Jews. Pop. uncertain, estimated at from 8000 to 15,000.

River, 144 miles W. by S. of Frankfort, is the chief town.

BUTLER, a frontier county at the S.E. extremity of the state of Ohio, bordering on Indiana. It is intersected from the N. W. corner to the centre of the S. border, by the Miami river. Pop. 28,173. Hamilton, on the E. bank of the Miami, 107 miles W.S.W. of Columbus, and 12 N. of Cincinnati, is the chief town. Pop. 1409.

BUTLER is also the name of a newly-formed county in Alabama. The court-house is 47 miles S.E. by S. of Cahawba. Pop. 8685.

BUTRINTO, a seaport of European Turkey, in Albania, and a bishop's see; seated on the canal of Corfu, at the entrance of the Gulf of Venice; 30 miles S. of Chios. Long. 19. 9. E. lat. 39. 49. N.

BUTTERMERE, a lake in Cumberland, 8 m. S.W. of Keswick. It is about a mile and a quarter long, and nearly half a mile broad. On the W. side it is terminated by a mountain, called, from its ferruginous colour, the Red Pike; a strip of cultivated ground adorns the E. shore; at the N. end is the village of Buttermere; and a group of houses, called Gutesgarth, is seated on the S. extremity, under an amphitheatre of mountainous rocks. Here Honister Crag is seen rising to a vast height, flanked by two conical mountains, Fleetwith on the E. and Searf on the W. side. Numerous mountain torrents form never-failing cataracts, that thunder and foam down the rocks, and form the lake below. This lake is called the Upper Lake; and, near a mile from it, to the N.E., is the Lower Lake, called also Cromack-water. The river Cocker flows through both these lakes to Cocker-mouth.

BUXTEHUDE, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Bremen, on the river Eosto; 18 miles S. E. of Stade.

BUXTON, a village in Derbyshire, at the entrance of the Peak. It has nine wells that rise near the source of the river Wye, and they are deemed one of the seven wonders of the Peak. Their waters, noted in the time of the Romans, are hot and sulphureous, temperature about 82; much company resort to them in the summer. The building for the bath was erected by George, Earl of Shrewsbury; and here Mary, Queen of Scotland, was for some time. The Duke of Devonshire has erected a beautiful building in the form of a crescent, under which are piazzas and shops. A mile hence is another of the wonders, called Pool's Hole, at the foot of a mountain. The entrance is low and narrow, but it presently opens to a cave of considerable height, and 696 feet long, with a roof resembling a Gothic cathedral. It contains many stalactitious concretions, and several curious representations, both of art and nature, produced by the petrifying water continually dropping from the rock. Buxton is 32 miles N.W. of Derby, and 160 N.N.W. of London.

CANOTIA, a name sometimes applied to the countries on the St. Lawrence, North America, comprising Canada, New Brunswick, &c., from their being first explored by the Cabots.

CADRA, a rich agricultural town of Spain, in Andalusia; 25 miles S. E. of Cordova. It was once a bishop's see. The tortuous town is built under two hills; the Plaza, although irregular, is striking, and the streets on the level are handsome, and cleansed with running water. It is surrounded with gardens, which produce excellent fruit and vegetables, from the abundance of water. The wines made in the Pago de Rio frio, vie with those of Montilla. There is an extinct crater at Los Hoyones. Pop. above 12,000.

CADRA, a town of the kingdom of Tombuctoo. It is a place of great trade, seated on the Niger, and serves as a port to the capital;
10 miles S. E. of Tombuctoo.

CABRERA, one of the Balearic Isles, in the Mediterranean, 7 miles S. of Majorca. It has a large harbour, on the N. side, defended by a castle. Long. 2. 55. E. lat. 39. 8. N.

CABUL, or KABOOL, or CAUNUL, a country of Asia, bounded on the W. by Persia, N. by the Hindoo-ko, E. by Cashmere and Lahore, and S. by Candahar. It was anciently a province of Persia; afterwards it was annexed to the Mogul empire till 1739, when it was restored to Persia by Nadir Shah. In 1747, Ahmed Shah Abdalli, the founder of the Dooranee dynasty, was crowned at Candah-ar. His successor, Timour Shah, died in 1793, and a long civil war ensued among his three sons; one of them, Shah Shoojah ul Moolk, succeeded in placing himself on the throne, but was deposed in 1809; after which Dost Mohamed Khan established himself in Cabul, but he having assisted the Persians against Herat, a British army took his quarters at Ghizni by storm, June 23, 1839, replacing Shah Shoojah after a deposition of thirty years. The country is highly diversified, consisting of mountains covered with snow, hills of moderate height, rich plains, stately forests, and innumerable streams. It produces every article necessary for human life, and the most delicate fruits and flowers. It is sometimes called Zabulis-tan, from Zabul, one of the names of Ghizni, which was the ancient capital of the country.

CABUL, the capital of the province of Cabul, and of the dominions of the sultan of the Afghans, (See AFGHANISTAN,) seated near the foot of the Hindoo-ko, on the river Attock, a branch of the Indus. It carries on a considerable trade, and is considered as the gate of India towards Tartary. In 1739, Nadir

Shah took it by storm, and plundered it of great treasures. It is 170 miles N. E. of Can-dahar. Long. 68. 35. E. lat. 34. 30. N.

CACERES, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, seated on the Sabrot; 22 miles S. E. of Alcantara, on the road to Truxillo. It has a college, an episcopal palace, an hospital, &c.; it has also several manufactures. It formerly belonged to Portugal, and was then of more importance than it is at present. Pop. 10,000.

CACERES, a town in the S. part of the island of Luçonia, East Indies, capital of the province of Camarines, and a bishop's see.
Long. 124. 0. E. lat. 14. 33. N.

CACHAN, or KASHAN, a town of Persia, in Irac Ajemi, which has a considerable trade in silks, silver and gold brocades, and porcelain. Here are many Christians, and Guebres, or worshippers of fire. It is seated in a vast plain; 55 miles N. by W. of Isphahan.

CACHAO, or KESHO, the capital of the kingdom of Anam. It contains 20,000 houses, whose walls are of mud, and the roofs covered with thatch; a few are built with brick, and roofed with pantiles. The principal streets are very wide, and paved with small stones. The king has three palaces here, such as they are; and near them are stables for his horses and elephants. The house of the English factory is the best in the city; but the factories have been discontinued. It is seated on the river Hoti; 80 miles W. from the Gulf of Tonquin. Long. 103. 11. E. lat.
21. 10. N.

CACHAR, or HIRUMBO, a British territory of India, beyond the Ganges; it lies between lat. 24. and 27. N., and long. 92. and 94. E.
Area 6500 square miles; pop. 70,000. It is surrounded on three sides by mountains; the southern part is chiefly plain land, and very fertile. It came under the British in 1832.

is situate at the N. W. extremity of a promontory, jutting into the Atlantic Ocean, and running parallel with the coast, forming a bay twelve miles in extent, and five or six broad, defended at the entrance by two forts, which render the harbour secure, and, being edged by craggy rocks on the south, and strongly defended on the land side, enables it to defy whatever armed force may be brought against it, either by sea or land. It is supposed to have been first founded by the Phœnicians, and to have attracted the enlightened attention of the Romans at an early period of their career, several vestiges of their works of art still remaining to attest their supremacy, and refinement of taste. It was taken and pillaged by the English in 1596, who made another attempt upon it in 1626, and again in 1702, but in both instances without effect. During the domination of Spain in Mexico and South America, it was not only the chief station of the national marine, but the grand dépôt of all the monopolized commerce of those extensive regions, and it consequently ranked, up to the period of 1778, among the most considerable and important of the commercial cities of Europe. In 1778, the commerce of the Americans was opened generally, to all the seaports of Spain, when Cadiz experienced some decline; it however retained a pre-eminence over all the other ports, and continued to hold a high commercial rank, until the events of the war growing out of the French revolution in 1793, led not merely to an interruption of the commerce of Cadiz, but to an almost total extinction of all external intercourse. It was bombarded by the English, without effect, in 1800. Its harbour was the rendezvous of the combined fleets of France and Spain, previous to the fatal battle with the English off Cape Trafalgar, in October, 1805. On the ebullition of the Spaniards in favour of the late king Ferdinand, in 1806, in opposition to the government established by Napoleon Buonaparte, under his brother Joseph, the wreck of the French fleet, then in the harbour of Cadiz, surrendered to the ebullitionists; and, on Seville being taken possession of by a French force in the following year, Cadiz became the seat of the Central Junta, and afterwards of the Cortes, the French maintaining a large armed force in its vicinity, occasionally bombarding it from that period up to 1812, when they finally withdrew, and it once again endeavoured to resume its wonted activity and importance in commerce; but during its suspension a revolution had taken place, more or less, over all South America; its commerce diverted into new channels; and, as such, the merchants of Cadiz found that every enterprise had to be formed anew. The time was unpropitious; and the commercial as well as social policy of Spain were incompatible with the time and circumstances, and Cadiz continued to droop, whilst distrust and dissatisfaction pervaded the whole country; to such a height had the spirit of distrust and disorder attained, that on the 10th of March, 1820, near 1000 of the inhabitants of Cadiz fell a prey to the fury of the soldiery. In the following year, when a party sprang up in Spain, demanding of the king the assembling of the Cortes, and the fulfilment of the constitution, the citizens of Cadiz identified themselves with the constitutional party; and, on a French army of 100,000 men entering the country in 1823, to protect the king in his absolute and despotic authority, the constitutionalists removed him and the court from Madrid, first to Seville, and ultimately to Cadiz, as to a place impregnable to all the force which the French could bring against it. A large French naval force now blockaded the harbour, and on the 1st of October of that year, treachery triumphed over patriotism, and accomplished what fleets and armies could not have effected. The French became masters of Cadiz, released Ferdinand from the shackles of the constitutionalists, and proscription and terror again reigned with uncontrolled sway over Cadiz and all Spain.

The aspect of Cadiz, viewed either from the harbour, or from the opposite shore of the bay, is very imposing; on entering it, however, the streets are narrow, and the houses have a gloomy appearance; the great square of St. Antonio is, however, an exception. It has several churches, some of them spacious and fine edifices, numerous convents, and other religious houses, an extensive hospital, and custom-house. Its greatest inconvenience is its destitution of good water, with which essential commodity the city is supplied from a considerable distance, being conveyed in butts, at a great expense of labour and cost. Large quantities of salt ure made in the vicinity. It has no manufacture deserving of notice; indeed, not only its prosperity and importance, but its subsistence, may be considered as depending altogether on its external commerce; and as such, it suffers in an equal or greater proportion than any other part of Spain, by the unsocializing policy which pervades that delightful country. Cadiz is about 60 miles S. of Seville, 45 N. W. of Gibraltar, and 320 S. by W. of Madrid; the observatory being in the lat. of 36. 32. N. and 6. 17. W. long. Pop. 58,525.

CADOLZBURG, a town of Bavaria, circle of Rezat; 8 miles W. of Nuremberg.

CADORE, a town of the Austrian Venetian territory, the birthplace of Titian, the painter. It is seated on the Piave; 15 miles N. of Belluno.

CALSAND, or CASSAND, an island of Holland, on the N. coast of Flanders, at the mouth of the Scheldt. The land is fertile, and the inhabitants make a large quantity of excellent cheese. The chief town is Cassandria.

CAEN, a city of France, capital of the department of Calvados. It has a celebrated university, and a castle with four towers, built by the English. The abbey of St. Stephen was founded by William the Conqueror, who was buried in it. The river Orne, which falls into the English Channel, runs through the city, to which the tide brings up large vessels. Its manufactures of lace, silk, cottons, fine earthenware, &c., &c., are very important and valuable; it is a thriving and improving place. It is 65 miles W. by S. of Rouen and 125 W. by N. of Paris. Long. 0. 22. W. lat. 49. 11. N. Pop. 39,886.

CAERLEON, a town of Monmouthshire, with a market on Thursday. Many Roman antiquities have been found here, and it has the ruins of a castle. It is seated on the Usk; 19 miles S. W. of Monmouth, and 146 W. by N. of London.

CAERMARTHENSHIRE, a maritime county of South Wales, 48 miles long, and 25 broad. It is bounded on the S. by the Bristol Channel, on the W. by Pembrokeshire, on the N. by Cardiganshire, and on the east by Brecknock and Glamorganshire. The air is wholesome, and the soil less rocky and mountainous than in most other parts of Wales, and consequently it is proportionately more fertile both in corn and pasture. It has also plenty of wood, and is well supplied with coal and limestone. The principal rivers are the Towy, Cothy, and Tave; of which the first abounds with excellent salmon. It has numerous ancient forts, camps, and tumuli. Near Caermarthen, towards the E, may be seen the ruins of Kastolk Karry, and several vast caverns, supposed to have been copper mines of the Romans. Near this spot is a fountain, which ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. The county and city send each a member to parliament.

CAERMARTHEN, a borough of Wales, capital of Caermarthenshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on the Towy, over which is a strong bridge, to which vessels of 200 to 300 tons burden may come up. It was fortified with a wall and a castle, now in ruins; and on the E. side of the town, near the river, are the remains of a monastic building of considerable extent. Caermarthen is a county of itself, governed by a mayor. There are iron and tin mines in the neighbourhood. It is 24 miles S. E. of Cardigan, and 220 W. by N. of London.

CAERNARVONSHIRE, a county of North Wales, of an oblong form, the S. part projecting into St. George's Channel, the north being bounded by the Irish Sea, or what would now more properly be called Liverpool Bay, from the celebrity of the town of that name: the Menai Strait divides it from the Isle of Anglesea on the N. W., and the river Conway divides it from Denbighshire on the E., whilst part of the S. E. side borders on Merionethshire. This county being the most rugged district of North Wales, may be truly called the Cambrian Alps. Its central part is occupied by the famed Snowdon, rising to the height of 3571 feet above the level of the sea, and the prospects around are rude and savage in the highest degree, but not without a mixture of beauty, where the dimensions of the vales admit the varieties of wood, water, and meadows. The soil in the valleys, on the side of St. George's Channel, is pretty fertile, especially of barley; great numbers of black cattle, sheep, and goats, are fed on the mountains; and the sea, lakes, and rivers, abound with a variety of fish. Copper mines have been worked in various parts of these mountains, as well as lead; and quantities of stones, excellent for hones, are dug near Snowdon; to the dreary region of which the rich vale of Conway below forms a pleasing contrast. It sends one member to parliament.

CAERNARVON, a borough and seaport of Wales, capital of Caernarvonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated within the Menai Strait, near its entrance into Caernarvon bay, and carries on a considerable trade with Ireland, and the principal English ports, to which it exports vast quantities of slates. It has a celebrated castle, built by Edward I., in which his son, Edward II., the first prince of Wales, was born. Caernarvon is governed by the constable of the castle, who is always mayor. Here are salt-water baths, and elegant hot and cold baths, which are much frequented during the season. It is 7 r. les S. W. of Bangor, and 244 N. W. of London. Long. 4. 20. W. lat. 53. S. N. It sends one member to parliament.

CAERPHILLY, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, with a market on Thursday. The ruins of its celebrated castle more resemble that of a city than a single edifice; a circular tower about 75 feet in height, inclines 11 ft. 6 in. from its base. It is seated between the Taafe and Rumney; 7 miles N. of Cardiff, and 160 W. of London.

CAERWENT, a village in Monmouthshire, 4 miles S. W. of Chepstow, and about 2 miles from the bank of the Severn.

CAERWYS, a town of Wales, in Flintshire, with a market on Tuesday; 5 miles W. of Eunt, and 212 N. W. of London.

CAFFA, KAFFA, or THEODOSIA, the largest town of the Crimea, with an excellent road and harbour. It was taken in 1266, by the Genoese, who made it one of the most flourishing towns in the E. of Europe. It was taken from the Venetians in 1297, but soon recovered; however, in 1474, the Tartars, assisted by the Turks, finally expelled them. It was the last post in the Crimea of which the Genoese retained the sovereignty. Caffa was the Theodosia of the ancients; a name which has been restored to it since the Russians became possessed of the Crimea, in 1770. It suffered by its capture by the Russians, but has begun to revive, though the superiority of Kertche will prevent its rising to its former importance. Caffa is seated on a bay of the Black Sea, at the foot of some high mountains; 65 miles E. by N. of Sympheropol, and 130 S. E. of Precop. Long. 35. 23. 37. E. lat. 45. 1. 37. N. Pop. 7250.

CAFFA, STRAIT OF, the ancient Cimærian Bosphorus; a strait that forms a communication between the Black Sea and the Sea of Asoph, and a separation between Europe and Asia.

CAFIRISTIN, or KETTORE, a mountainous country of Asia, lying between the N. E. part of Persia and Tartary. The valleys are inhabited by various independent tribes, possessing manners and speaking a language peculiar to themselves, but of which very little is known.

CAFFRARIA, or KAFFRARIA, a country on the E. coast of South Africa, extending from the latitude of about 30. S. to the Great Fish River, in the latitude of about 34., which divides it from the country of the Hottentots: its western boundaries are not ascertained. The Caffres are tall and well proportioned, and, in general, evince great courage in attacking lions, and other beasts of prey. Their skin is a jet black, their teeth white as ivory, and their eyes large. The clothing of both sexes is the same, consisting entirely of the hides of oxen, which are as pliant as cloth. The men wear tails of different animals tied round their thighs, pieces of brass in their hair, and large ivory rings on their arms; they are adorned also with the hair of lions, and feathers fastened on their heads, with many other fantastical ornaments. They are fond of dogs, and have great pride in their cattle, which pay the most perfect obedience to their voice. Their exercise is hunting, fighting, or dancing. They are expert in throwing lances, and, in time of war, use shields made of the hides of oxen. They sometimes make incursions into the English territories of the Cape of Good Hope. The women are employed in the cultivation of their gardens and corn. They raise several vegetables which are not indigenous to the country, as tobacco, water-melons, kidney-beans, and hemp. Their huts are higher and more commodious than those of the Hottentots, and their lands more fertile, but their oxen, and almost all their animals are much smaller. Industry is the leading trait in the character of the Caffres, who are distinguished from their neighbours to the south, by their fondness for agriculture. They have a high opinion of the Supreme Being, and of his power; they believe in a future state of rewards and punishments; but think that the world had no beginning, and will be everlasting. They have no sacred ceremonies, and, consequently have no priests; but they have a kind of conjurors, whom they greatly revere. They are governed by an hereditary king, whose power is very limited; but being permitted to take as many wives as he pleases, he has a larger portion of land to cultivate, and a greater number of cattle to tend and feed. The distance of the different hordes makes it necessary that they should have inferior chiefs, who are appointed by the king. They are divided into several tribes, of which the Koozas are those to whom "Caffro" (infidel) is now more specifically applied. They have continually threatened the eastern frontier of the colony, which has led to much warfare.

CAGAYAN SOOLOO, an eastern island, lying off the N. E. point of Borneo, in the lat of 7. N. and 118. 36. E. long. It is about 20 miles in circumference, and governed by a rajah.

CAGAYAN, a district the most northern part of Luçon, the chief of the Philippine islands. It is a fertile and populous district, in the lat. of 19 N.

CAGAYAN ISLES, a group of small islands in the Mindoro Sea, between Borneo and the Philippines, in the lat. of 9. N. and 121 E. long.

CAGLIARI, a fortified city and seaport of Sardinia, capital of the island, and an archbishop's see, with a university and a castle. Here are numerous churches, beside the cathedral, three of which are collegiate. It stands on the S. part of the Island, at the bottom of a gulf of the same name, which forms a large and secure harbour, and exports considerable quantities of olive oil and salt. It has also a royal manufactory of tobacco, and others of cotton, leather, soap, &c. Long. 9. 8. E. lat. 39. 20. N. Pop. about 26,000.

CAGNETE, CANETE, or GUARCO, a town of Peru, capital of a district of the same name, extending about 24 leagues along the sea coast. It is situate near the sea; 80 miles S. E. of Lima. Long. 76. 16. W. lat. 13. 10. S.

CAHAWBA, or CAHADA, the chief town of Dallas county, and once the seat of the legislative government of the state of Alabama. It is seated at the junction of a river of the same name with the Alabama river; 915 m. S. W. of Washington, and about 180 N. of New Orleans.

CAHIR, a town of Ireland, county Tipperary, on the Suir; 96 miles S. W. by S. of Dublin. The town is well built, and the church is a fine building. Pop. 3408.

CAHIR is also the name of a small island off the S. W. coast of the county of Mayo, in the lat. of 53. 44. N. and 9. 53. W. long.

CAHORS, a city of France, capital of the department of Lot, and a bishop's see, with a university. It is seated on a peninsula made by the river Lot, and built partly on a craggy rock. There are three bridges over the river. The cathedral is a Gothic structure, and has a large square steeple. The town has a manufacture of fine cloths and rattens, and furnishes excellent wine, of the kind called vin de grave. It was taken by assault, in 1580, by Henry IV., by means of petards, which were first employed here. In one of the suburbs are the remains of a Roman amphitheatre. Cahors is 60 miles N. of Toulouse, and 315 S. by W. of Paris. Pop. 10,944.

CAICOS, or CAYCOS, the southernmost of the Bahama Isles. See BAHAMAS.

CAI-PONG, a city of China, capital of the province of Ho-nan. It is situate on a plain, 6 miles from the river Hoanho, or Great Yellow River, above 300 miles above its entrance into the sea, which is higher than the plain, and kept in by raised dikes, that extend above 90 miles. When the city was besieged by the rebels, in 1642, they cut the dikes of the river, which drowned 300,000 of the inhabitants. Some of the ruins still remain, which show that its present state is far inferior to its former magnificence. Its jurisdiction comprehends four cities of the second class, and 30 of the third. It is 350 miles S.S.W. of Peking, and about 850 N. by E. of Canton. Long. 114. 28. E. lat. 34. 53. N.

CAIFFA, or KAIFA, a seaport of Syria, in Palestine, defended by a wall and a citadel. It stands on the S. side of the bay of Acre; 8 miles S.W. of Acre.

CAIMAN, or CAYMANS, three small islands lying to the N.W. of Jamaica, between it and the S. coast of Cuba. The N.E. point of Grand Caymans is in lat. 19. 12. N. and 81. 26. W. long. The inhabitants of Jamaica come hither to catch turtle.

CAIRNGORM, a mountain of Scotland, at the S.W. extremity of Banffshire, on the border of Inverness. It rises in a conical form 1750 feet above the level of a small lake near its base, which is the source of the Aven, and 4050 feet above the level of the sea; its sides clothed with firs, and its top generally covered with snow. It is famous for beautiful rock-crystals, much esteemed by lapidaries; about 30 miles E. of Fort Augustus.

CAIRO, (El Kahira, the victorious, Arabic,) or GRAND CAIRO, a large city, capital of Egypt. It consists of three towns, about a mile apart; Old Cairo, New Cairo, and the port termed Bulac. The population is estimated at 240,000. Old Cairo is now reduced to a small place. New Cairo is a mile from the river, and 7 miles in circumference. The streets are narrow; and the finest houses are built round a court, in which they make the best appearance, having few or no windows next to the street. The castle stands on a steep rock, and is surrounded by thick walls, on which are strong towers. Joseph's Well, made by a vizier of that name, about the year 1100, is the most curious part of the castle: it is sunk in the rock, 280 feet deep, and 40 in circumference, with a staircase carried round; and a machine, turned by oxen, raises the water (which comes from the Nile) into a reservoir, whence it is again raised by a similar machine. There are many other reservoirs for water; and numerous bazars, where each trade has its allotted quarter. There are several public bagnios, very handsome within, and used as places of refreshment and diversion, especially for the women, who go there twice a week; but the wives of great men have baths at home. There is a palace and harem, a mint, and arsenal, a cannon foundry, and many other manufactories, all called into existence by the late pacha, Mehemet Ali; and who engrossed the commerce of the city. The Kaliss, a canal which conveys the waters of the Nile into the city, is 20 feet broad, and has houses on each side of it. As soon as the waters begin to rise, they close the mouth of the canal with earth, and place a mark, to show the time when this and all other canals in the kingdom are to be opened, which is done with great solemnity. There are not less than 300 mosques in Cairo, the lofty minarets of which present a very picturesque appearance. It was a place of very great trade before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, and is still the centre of that of eastern Africa. The chief manufactures are sugar, sal ammoniac, glass lamps, saltpetre, gunpowder, red and yellow leather, and linen made of the fine Egyptian flax. This city was taken by the French, under Buonaparte, in 1798, and retaken by the British in 1801. It stands on the E. bank of the Nile, about 120 miles S.E. of Alexandria, and about the same distance from the two mouths of the river at Rosetta and Damietta, and has a railway to Alexandria.

CAIRO, a town of Piedmont; 25 miles W. of Genoa. It was the scene of a sanguinary battle between the French and Austrians in 1794, and in 1796 was taken by the French. Pop. about 4000.

CAIRO, a town in Greene county, state of New York; about 5 miles W. of Hudson.

CAIRO, a town of Illinois, on the point of land formed by the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. The situation is important, but the land is low, and liable to be overflowed, and is thus bad for a town. It is intended to commence the Great Central railroad here, extending northwards through the state; 233 miles S. by E. of Springfield, and 867 from Washington.

CAIROAN, or KAIRWAN, an interior town of the kingdom of Tunis, and next to the city of Tunis for trade and number of inhabitants, which are vaguely estimated at 50,000. It is situate near a sandy desert, where are found many vestiges of former magnificence, and on the river Magrida; about 60 miles S. by E. of Tunis, and a few miles W. of Susa.

CAISTOR, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Monday. Near it are the remains of a monastery, and many Roman vestiges. It is 12 miles S.W. of Grimsby, and 156 N. of London.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE, a county at the N.E. extremity of Scotland; 35 miles long, and 20 broad; bounded on the N. by Pentland Frith, which divides it from the Orkneys, E. and S.E. by the German Ocean, and W. by Sutherlandshire. The S. angle is occupied by mountains; and a vast ridge of hills forms the S.W. boundary, ending in a promontory, called the Ord of Caithness, which runs out into the sea, in the lat. of 58. 10. N. The rest of the county may be deemed an immense morass, interspersed with some fruitful spots, producing oats and barley, and others affording pasture for sheep and black cattle. Its other chief products are butter, cheese, yarn, skins, feathers, and kelp. It sends a member to parliament alternately with Buteshire. English is chiefly spoken on the coast, but in the highlands the Gaelic prevails. Thurso, on the N., and Wick, on the E. coast, are the chief towns.

CAJAZZO, a town of Naples; 25 miles N. of the city of Naples.

CAJELLI, BAY OF. See BOUR.

CALABAR, OLD and NEW, two rivers in the Bight of Benin, on the coast of Guinea, on the W. coast of North Africa. Since the restriction of the slave trade to the S. of the Equator, this district has carried on a more extensive trade in palm oil and bar wood, and some elephants' teeth, than any other part of the coast. The town of New Calabar is situate at the mouth of a river of the same name, in the lat. of 4. 10 N. and 6. 42. of E. long. Duke's Town is at the mouth of the Old Calabar river, which enters the Bight about 80 miles eastward of the New Calabar. It is much frequented by the ships trading for palm oil. These rivers form part of the Delta of the mysterious Niger, which debouches at the River Nun, near to them.

CALABAZO, or CALABACO, an interior town of Venezuela; about 150 miles S. of Caracas. It contains about 5000 inhabitants.

CALABRIA, a promontory and province of Naples, forming the foot and southern extremity of Italy, extending from 37. 53. to 40. 5. of N. lat., and being about 40 miles in mean breadth, between the long. of 15. 40. and 17. 30. E. A ridge of mountains, the Appennines, intersects the whole territory from N. to S., and numerous streams fall into the sea on both coasts. It gives the title of duke to the eldest son of the king of Naples. It is divided into two parts: Citra, N., bordering on the Basilicata, contains 385,360 inhabitants, and Ultra, S., contains about 583,800. This country abounds in excellent fruit, corn, wine, oil, silk, cotton, and wool. In 1783, a great part of Calabria Ultra, as well as of Sicily, was destroyed by one of the most terrible earthquakes on record: beside the destruction of many towns, villages, and farms; above 40,000 people perished by this calamity. The principal towns are Bova, at the E. extremity; Reggio, Rosarno, St. Eufemia, Castiglione, and Paula, on the W.; and Rossano, Cariato, Catanzaro, and Squillace, on the E. coast; and in the interior, Cossano, Bisagnano, Cosenza (the capital), Policastro, Mileto, and Oppido.

CALAHORRA, an episcopal town of Spain, in Old Castile, on the side of a hill, which extends to the Ebro; 90 miles E. of Burgos. It was the birthplace of Quintilian. The celebrated warm baths of Arnedillo lie about 4 leagues up the course of the Cid, and are much frequented. Pop. about 6500.

CALAIS, a seaport of France, in the department of Pas de Calais, with a citadel. It was taken by Edward III. of England, in 1347, after a siege of more than 11 months, which has given rise to some historical, as well as dramatic fiction. In 1557 it was retaken by the Duke of Guise. It was bombarded by the English in 1696, without receiving much injury. The fortifications are good, but its greatest strength is its situation among the marshes, which may be overflowed. In the centre of the town is a spacious square, surrounded by good buildings, and the church is a stately edifice; the harbour, which is formed of two wooden piers running into the sea, only admits small vessels. On the N. pier is a pillar erected to commemorate the landing of Louis XVIII. from England, in 1814, after 23 years of exile. Calais derives all its importance from its contiguity to the English coast; being only 22 m. from Dover. It is the terminus of a branch of the Northern railway. It is 25 m. W. by S. of Dunkirk, 20 N. by E. of Boulogne, and 145 due N. of Paris. Pop. 10,865.

CALAIS, ST. a town of France, in the department of Sarthe; 54 miles E.S.E. of Le Mans. Pop. 3783.

CALAIS, a town of the state of Maine, at the head of the navigation of the St. Croix, or Scoddie river, nearly opposite St. Andrew's, New Brunswick. It has an upper and a lower village, 2 miles apart, and connected by a railroad. The falls in the river here afford considerable water power, and below them is a bridge over to the British side; 200 miles E.N.E. of Augusta, 786 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 2934.

CALAMAS, a town of Persia, on the coast of Mekran; 60 miles E. of Guadal, and 290 W. of Tatta, on the western branch of the Indus.

CALAMATA, a town of European Turkey, at the head of the Gulf of Coron, in the Morea, on the river Spinarza; 36 miles W.S.W. of Misitra.

CALAMIANES, a cluster of islands, the most westerly of the Philippines, and to the N. of Borneo. They are 17 in number, and mountainous, but produce great quantities of wax, honey, and edible birds' nests. The principal island is Paragao, in the lat. of 12 N. and 120. of E. long.

CALANORE, a town of Hindostan; 70 miles E. of Lahore; distinguished as the place where the emperor Akbar ascended the throne of India in 1556.

CALATAGRIRONE, a large town in the interior of Sicily; about 50 miles W. by N. of Syracuse. It is a clean town, and well built; many of the public buildings are handsome. It is the seat of a bishopric, and has a royal college, an hospital, &c. The people are very ingenious and industrious. A grand fair is held in October for cattle, cloth, wax, honey

&c. It has also manufactures of fine earthenware. Pop. 21,616.

CALATAYUD, (an. Bibilis), a city of Spain, in Arragon; 45 miles S.W. of Saragossa. It is well and regularly built, and has a large square, an episcopal palace, two hospitals, a hall for the meetings of the Junta, &c. There are three bridges over the river Jalon, on which it stands. It has manufactures of soap. It is the second town of Arragon. The city has an imposing look, imbedded among the rocks, and has a noble castle. It is of Moorish origin, and was built from the remains of ancient Bibilis, the birth-place of Martial, which lies about two miles east from it, at Bambola. Population about 15,000.

CALATANISSETTA, a town of Sicily, capital of a province of same name; 62 miles S.E. of Palermo. It is well built, and has a fine square; it is defended by a castle. In its environs are two salses, which emit hydrogen gas.

CALATRAVA, a town of Spain, in La Mancha, the chief place of the military order of the knights of Calatrava. It is seated near the Guadiana; 90 miles S. of Madrid. Long. 3. 10. W. lat. 39. 4. N.

CALBE, or KALBE, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on the river Saale; 16 miles S. by E. of Magdeburg. Pop. about 3000.

CALBE, a town of Brandenburg, in the Old Mark, with a castle; seven miles S.W. of Stendel.

CALBERGA, a town of Hindostan, in Golconda, formerly a vast city, and the residence of the sovereigns of the Deccan. It is 85 miles W. of Hydrabad, and 110 E. of Visnampur. Long. 77. 20. E. lat. 17. 25. N.

CALCAR, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Cleve; seated near the Rhine; eight miles S.E. of Cleves.

CALCASIEU, a river in the western part of Louisiana, forming a considerable lake before it falls into the Gulf of Mexico.

CALCHAQUA. See COLCHAGUA.

CALCINATO, a town of Italy, in Bresciano, where a victory was gained over the Austrians by the French, in 1706. It is eight m. S.W. of Brescia.

CALCUTTA, the capital of Bengal, and the seat of the Governor-general of the British dominions in the East Indies, is situated on the eastern bank of the river Hoogley (the western arm of the Ganges), about 100 miles from the sea. Its name is derived from Cutta, a temple dedicated by the Hindoos to Caly, the goddess of time, which was situated between the villages of Chuttanuty and Gopindpore, where the agents of the English East India Company, in 1690, obtained permission of Aurungzebe to establish a trading factory, which, in 1698, in consequence of the disturbed state of the province of Bengal, they were allowed to fortify. In 1698, Prince Azeen Ooshan, grandson of Aurungzebe, granted a lease to the agents of the English company, of the villages above mentioned, in perpetuity, upon which they strengthened the fortification, and gave it the name of Fort William, in compliment to the English monarch of that time. From this period Calcutta gradually increased in population and importance up to 1756, when it was attacked by the soubah of Bengal, with an army of 70,000 horse and foot, and 400 elephants, when the besieged were forced to abandon their posts, and retreat into the fort; on which the enemy's troops entered the town, and plundered it for 24 hours. An order was then given for attacking the fort, the garrison of which defended themselves bravely for some time; but many of them being killed and wounded, and their ammunition almost exhausted, they were at last obliged to surrender, and were all, to the number of 146, crammed into the Black Hole prison, a dungeon about 18 feet square; from whence only 23 came out alive in the morning; the rest were all suffocated from want of air. Calcutta, however, was retaken the next year; and, after the victory of Plassey, the inhuman soubah was deposed, and put to death by his successor, and the whole of the province of Bengal transferred to the English East India Company. Immediately after this victory, the erection of a new fort, about a mile below the old one, was commenced, which is superior in extent and security to any fortress in India, containing commodious accommodation for 4000 men. From this period Calcutta rapidly increased in extent and population. In 1798, the number of houses was 78,760, exclusive of the forts, since which time they have increased more than one-half; the number of inhabitants, composed of people from all parts of the world, amounting to 600,000 or 700,000. The part inhabited by the English is elegantly built; but the greatest part is built after the general fashion of the cities of India. Their streets are exceedingly confined, narrow, and crooked, with a vast number of ponds, reservoirs, and gardens, interspersed. A few of them are paved with brick. The houses are built, some with brick, others with mud, and a still greater number with bamboos and mats, all which different kinds of fabrics, intermixed, form a very uncouth appearance, and are very readily destroyed by fire. The brick houses are seldom above two stories high, with flat and terraced roofs; those of mud and bamboos are only one story, and are covered with thatch. During the administration of the Marquis of Wellesley, at the commencement of the present century, a magnificent palace was erected at the distance of about a mile from the fort. The line of houses that surround two sides of the esplanade of the fort is also magnificent; they are all on a large scale, and detached from one another. From the necessity of having a free circulation of air in a climate so extremely hot, the approach to the houses is generally by a flight of steps, with great projecting porticoes, or surrounded by colonnades and arcades, which give them much the appearance of Grecian temples. Since the commencement of the present century, Calcutta has been greatly improved, both in appearance and in the salubrity of its air; the streets have been properly drained, and the ponds filled; thereby removing a vast surface of stagnant water, the exhalations of which were particularly hurtful. Contiguous to the old fort is the spacious square, on one side of which is the college, founded also under the administration of the Marquis Wellesley, in 1801; another side of the square is occupied by buildings appropriated to the use of the junior servants of the company, and the remainder is occupied by some of the principal traders. Calcutta is the residence of a bishop, who, assisted by three archdeacons, is entrusted with the ecclesiastical affairs of all the British possessions in Asia: the cathedral is a spacious edifice. Here is likewise a supreme court of judicature, in which justice is dispensed according to the laws of England, by a chief justice, and three puisne judges. The natives of the province still retain their Hindoo laws, as well as religion, and courts are duly appointed for the administration of justice accordingly. The southern part of Calcutta is occupied almost entirely by Europeans, who have adopted a style of building at once magnificent in its appearance, and well adapted to the climate. Every house is detached, enclosed with walls, and fronted with an elegant veranda, shading a flight of steps. The northern part is chiefly inhabited by natives, whose dwellings are, for the most part, mere mud or bamboo cottages. The mixture of European and Asiatic manners that may be observed in Calcutta is curious; coaches, phaetons, single horse chaises, with the palanquins and hackeries of the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearance of the fakirs, form a sight more novel and extraordinary, perhaps, than any other city in the world can present. The Hoogly is navigable up to the town, for ships of 400 to 500 tons, but those of greater burden lie at Diamond Point, about 50 miles below, their cargoes being conveyed to and from the town by lighters. Independently of its commercial intercourse with England, Calcutta maintains an extensive intercourse with China, as well as with almost every port in Asia, and islands in the eastern seas, with which an interchange is effected in every commodity that mankind possibly can desire. The railway system and its advantages are now in progress of adoption from Calcutta. The Burdwan railroad, 182 miles long, was opened March 26th, 1855, and others are proposed to a more convenient port down the Hooghly, &c. The control of the governor-general and council of Bengal, at Calcutta, extends over the presidencies of Madras, Bombay, and Bencoolen; the extent of the civil establishments attending the administration of so extensive an empire, in addition to the military and commercial affairs of the place, necessarily give an importance to Calcutta beyond that of any city in Asia, except those of China and Japan. The new fort is in the lat. of 22.35. N. and 88.28. E. long.; 1030 miles N.N.E. of Madras, and about 1100 E.N.E. of Bombay.

CALDAS, the name of several small towns in different parts of Spain and Portugal, which, like the Badens of Germany, implies their contiguity to hot or medicinal springs: one 25 miles N. by E. of Lisbon, another 10 miles N. E. of Castel Branco; another contiguous to Montalegre, 60 miles N. E. of Oporto; another 15 miles N. of Barcelona; another 25 miles N. of Vigo.

CALDER, a river which rises on the W. borders of Yorkshire, flows by Halifax to Wakefield, and eight m. below joins the Aire.

CALDERA, LA, a seaport on the coast of Chile, the terminus of a railway to the foot of the Andes for mining purposes. The place is destitute of water. Lat. 27. 5. S.

CALDOLZBURG, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach, with a castle; 18 miles N.E. of Anspach. It is now included in the Bavarian circle of Rezat.

CALDWELL, an interior county in the western part of Kentucky, bounded on the S.W. by the great Cumberland river. Pop. 10,365. Eddyville, on the N. bank of the river, about 30 miles above its entrance into the Ohio, and 200 miles S.W. of Frankfort, is the chief town.

CALDWELL, the chief tn. of Warren county, state of New York; 43 miles N. of Albany. Pop. 693.

CALEDON, a town in the parish of Aughloe, (sometimes called Caledon,) S. part of the county of Tyrone, Ireland.

CALEDON, a town of South Africa, in the Cape colony. It is a small neat village, at the foot of a rugged black mountain, and near it are some hot springs.

CALEDONIA, a county in the N. part of the state of Vermont, the S.E. part of which is bounded by the Connecticut river, which divides it from New Hampshire. Pop. 21,891. Danville, in the centre of the county, about 20 miles N.E. of Montpelier, is the chief town. Pop. 2633.

CALEDONIA, a town of Livingstone county, state of New York, lying to the W. of Genesee River, and S. of Erie Canal; 240 miles W. of Albany. Big Spring, remarkable for the abundance of its water, is in this township. Pop. 1987.

CALEDONIA, NEW, an island in the Pacific Ocean, to the E. of New Holland, discovered by Cook, in 1774. It is 260 miles from N.W. to S.E., and 70 broad. The inhabitants are strong, active, and well made; their hair is black, and much frizzled, but not woolly; their beards are crisp and thick; they besmear their faces with black pigment, and their only covering is a wrapper, made from the bark of a tree, or of leaves. Their houses are circular, like a bee-hive, formed of small spars and reeds, covered with long coarse grass, and the floor laid with dry grass. They deposit their dead in the ground, and decorate the graves of their chiefs with spears, darts, paddles, &c. They are of a pacific disposition, and their women chaster than those of the more eastern islands. They cultivate the soil with some art and industry, but subsist chiefly on roots and fish. Plantains and sugar-canes are not plentiful; bread-fruit is scarce, and cocoa-nut trees are but thinly planted but yams and taras are in great abundance. In 1855 it was taken into possession by the French government, who had several missionary establishments on its N. E. coast, and it is intended to make it a regular French colony. The S. end, called Queen Charlotte Foreland, is in long. 167. 12. E., lat. 22. 15. S.

CALENBERG, a principality of Lower Saxony, a part of the duchy of Brunswick, is divided into two parts by Wolfenbuttle. The S. part is intersected from E. to W. by the Werra, and the chief town is Gottingen. The Lene has its source in this part, near the banks of the Werra, and runs N. through the principality of Wolfenbuttle, it afterwards intersects the north part of North Calenberg. The Weser also intersects the S. part of North Calenberg from S. E. to N. W., the chief towns being Hanover, Neustadt, and Hameln. The aggregate extent of the surface may be estimated at about 1700 square m. Pop. 139,230. The soil is generally fertile, and, under social and reciprocal arrangements, Calenberg might be made to yield a surplus produce sufficient to command an abundance of tropical and other luxuries.

CALHOUN, a county in the S. W. part of Florida, on the Apalachian River. Capital, St. Joseph. Pop. 1142.

CALHOUN, a county in the S. part of the state of Michigan. It is watered by the head branches of the Kalamazoo river, and by St. Joseph's river. It has some valuable quarries of sandstone. Capital, Marshall. Pop. in 1840, 10,599.

CALHOUN, a county in the W. part of Illinois, between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers. Pop. 1741.

CALHUCO, a town at the S. extremity of Araucan, opposite the N. end of the Isle of Chiloe, in the South Pacific Ocean, inhabited by Spaniards, Mestecs, and Indians; 180 m. S. of Valdivia. Long. 73. 37. W. lat. 41. 40. S.

CALI, a city of Colombia, in the valley of Popayan, on the W. bank of the river Cauca. The governor of the province generally resides here. It is 90 miles E. of Bonaventura, and 200 W. by S. of Santa Fé. Long. 77. 5. W. lat. 3. 15. N.

CALICUT, a city of Hindostan, capital of a province of the same name, on the coast of Malabar. It was the first Indian port visited by European shipping; being discovered by the Portuguese, in 1498. Here is a manufacture of plain cotton goods. The name of calico, applied to cotton goods, was derived from this place. Much salt is made here, by the natural evaporation of the sea water. The principal exports are cocoa and betel nuts, black pepper, ginger, and turmeric. It is seated at the mouth of a river; 85 miles S. W. of Seringapatam. Long. 75. 52. E. lat. 11. 12. N. It was formerly much more considerable, having been much encroached upon by the sea.

CALIFORNIA, UPPER, or NEW, a county of N. W. America, comprised between the parallels of 32. and 42. N. lat., and between 109. W. long. and the Pacific Ocean, comprising an area of 400,000 square miles. It now forms a portion of the United States, being ceded to it in 1848, in consequence of the Mexican war. To the N. it has the recently acquired territory of Oregon; to the E. the Indian or western territory of the United States; and to the S. the republic of Mexico.

The country was first discovered by Cabrillo, a Spaniard, in 1542, and its N. part was called New Albion by Sir Francis Drake, in 1578. The name California is of very uncertain origin. The principal town, San Francisco, is on the S. side of the opening into one of the most magnificent harbours in the world. Until the late accession of importance, it remained a comparatively insignificant place. It now boasts all the advantages of sudden prosperity. Its area (Mar. 1852) is 146,285 sq. m. The pop. in July 1850, was 103,000.

The country up to a recent period was very imperfectly known, but few travellers having been through it. The principal river is the Rio Colorado, which rises in the Rocky Mountains, and falls into the Gulf of California at its head. East of this, the country is separated from New Mexico by the Anahuac Range. This part is composed of high table lands, perfectly barren, and utterly destitute of water, the river being brackish and slimy. The basin of the river Gila, which forms its southern boundary, is also destitute of trees, and in great part of any vegetation whatever, and rains are in no part to be relied on. The central part is a semi-desert, its northern portion forming what is called the Great Basin, 400 miles in extent from E. to W., and 250 N. and S., a dreary waste, having in its northern part a succession of isolated sharp and rugged mountain ranges, 6000 or 7000 feet high, running N. and S. Its plains are described as frightfully forbidding and unearthly; one part, the Great Salt Plain, which is crossed by the route to the settlements, has a snow-like surface, from the saline incrustation. There are several lakes within this area; as the Timpanogos, or Great Salt; the Pyramid; the Utah Lakes, &c. On the last, which is in the N. part of the territory, is, or was, a settlement of Mormons established in 1847. This singular sect, emigrated in a body from Nauvoo, on the Missouri, and after incredible suffering reached California, being the pioneers of the present gold movement in this country. The Great Basin is separated from the coast region of California by the Californian range, the pass through which 7200 feet high, is near the Pyramid Lake, but requires great caution. Between these mountains and the coast range, a collection of rugged mountains, lie the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, the most important part of Upper California. The river Sacramento traverses the former from N. to S., inclining to the E., from which side it receives its principal tributary, the largest among which is the Feather River, which joins it about 90 miles above the bay of San Francisco, into which it falls. The Feather River is about 100 miles in length; it has several mountain streams running into it, and has many important gold placers on its banks. The American Fork joins the Sacramento at New Helvetia. It has a large body of water, and its banks are fertile and cultivated. New Helvetia is a settlement 75 miles above San Francisco, established by Captain Suter, a native of Switzerland, who was the first that benefited by the enormous golden treasures every where distributed. The discovery was made at a mill-head of Captain Suter's, though it has recently been shown that proposals for working these washings were made by some Russian officers more than 20 years previously. The southern part of the valley above named is traversed by the San Joaquin river, which proceeds northward from the Tula and Chintache Lakes, receiving all its tributaries on the east side. This valley is very fertile, but the climate though salubrious, is by no means favourable to agriculture. There are two seasons; the wet, December to March, and the dry the remainder of the year. At New Helvetia, it is not unusual for the temperature to rise as high as 114° in the shade in the hot months. Some parts of the interior country are covered many feet thick with snow during the cold months. The climate 30 miles from the coast undergoes a great change, and in no part of the world is there to be found a finer or more equable one than in the valley of the San Juan river, which flows northward into the Bay of San Francisco, and on whose banks were several of the Jesuits' missions.

Gold, for which California has acquired such sudden celebrity, is found in almost every part. Along the streams falling into the Sacramento and the San Joaquin Rivers, it has been most worked. It has been lately found as far north as 500 miles from S. Joaquin. It is procured by the usual process of washing, and every part of the San Joaquin Valley has produced gold of 20 carats fine. Of the quantity produced it is difficult to form a calculation, but in 1849, it was estimated at from 100,000,000 to 200,000,000 dollars. The wonderful facility of procuring wealth, which up to the end of 1849, had induced above 90,000 people to emigrate thither, has caused many great singularities in the social organization, but which from their changeable character, cannot be noticed here. It is probable, however, that when the great deposits of gold are ransacked, which may be at a very uncertain period, California will be reduced to the level of ordinary gold-producing countries, as Siberia, &c. In 1768, it was first colonized by the Spaniards, and several missions among the native Indians were establishing chiefs in the neighbourhood of the coast, and it at first formed a province of Mexico. In November 1836, the people of Monterey revolted and expelled the Mexican functionary, and soon afterwards the excellent missions were destroyed and comparatively abandoned. Its internal relations were unimportant after this, until its acquisition by treaty in 1848 to the United States of America, of which it is the newest portion at present. See Appendix.

CALIFORNIA, LOWER, a promontory in the Pacific Ocean; separated from the W. coast of North America by the Vermilion Sea, or Gulf of California; extending N.W. from Cape St. Lucas, in the lat. of 22. 44. to lat. 33. N., being about 50 miles in average breadth. It was discovered by Cortes, in 1536; and is said to have been visited by Sir Francis Drake in 1578. Toward the close of the seventeenth century, the Jesuits formed several settlements here, and endeavoured to govern the natives with the same policy and authority that they exercised in their missions in Paraguay. They seem studiously to have depreciated the climate and soil of the country; but on their expulsion from the Spanish dominions, the court appointed Don Joseph Galvez to visit this peninsula. His account of the country was favourable: he found the pearl fishery on its coast to be valuable, and he discovered mines of gold of a very promising appearance.

The pearl fishery was conducted up to a late period, but with diminished success, and the missions, under which the chief part of the native Indian population were gathered and nominally converted to Christianity, have very much declined since the troubles consequent on the revolutionary movements in 1837, occurred. Loreto was considered the capital, but some of the ports, as San Josef, were of more importance. Pearls, tortoiseshell, a few hides, dried beef and fruits sent to Mazatlan or San Blas, constituted the principal overplus of the produce. What the population may be at present, it is very difficult to estimate, as most of the presidios have been depopulated by the gold-seeking of Upper California. Prior to these changes it might be about 14,000 or 15,000.

CALIMNA, or CALIMNO, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, near the coast of Asia.

7 miles N. W. of Stanchio. Long. 26. 46. E. lat. 36. 56. N.

CALIX, a town of Sweden, in West Bothnia, on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Gulf of Bothnia; 22 miles W. of Tornea.

CALLAH, a town of Algier, in the province of Mascara, which has a considerable trade, and the greatest market for carpets in the country. It is 40 miles E. of Oran.

CALLAN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kilkenny, on the frontier of Tipperary; 7 miles S. W. of the city of Kilkenny, and 72 S. W. by S. from Dublin.

CALLANDER, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, seated on the river Teath; 30 miles W. S. W. of Perth. It derives its chief support from the transit of travellers visiting the scene of Sir Walter Scott's poem of "The Lady of the Lake." It is a neat and thriving place.

CALLAO, a seaport of Peru, with the best harbour on the coast, and a large and safe roadstead, defended by the islands of Callao and St. Lorenzo. In the port every commodity is to be procured that vessels may be in need of. The town was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, in 1746. It is seated on a river of the same name; 6 miles W. of Lima, of which it is the port, and has between 2000 and 3000 inhabitants. Long. 76. 58. W. lat. 12. 2. S.

CALLE, a town of Algier, in the province of Constantina, where the French have a factory established for a coral fishery, and trade for grain, wool, leather, and wax. It stands on a rock, almost surrounded by the sea; 36 miles E. of Bona.

CALLIANEE, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Aurangabad; 24 miles N. E. from Bombay. It is populous, and has considerable trade. It is surrounded by ruined fortifications.

CALLINGER, a fortified town of Hindostan, in the province of Allahabad, formerly capital of Bundelcund. It was ceded by the Maharrattas to the English in 1793. It is 20 miles N. of the Diamond Mines of Punnah, and 150 W. by S. of Benares.

CALLINGTON, a town of Cornwall; market on Wednesday; situate on the Lynher; 12 m. S. of Launceston, and 216 W. by S. of London.

CALLOMA, or CAILLOMO, a town of Peru, celebrated for its silver mines; 50 miles N. by E. of Arequipa, and 170 S. of Cusco.

CALMAR, a strong seaport of Sweden, capital of Smaland, and a bishop's see. It is celebrated as the place where the deputies of Sweden, Denmark, and Norway were appointed to assemble for the election of a king, according to the Union of Calmar. On an eminence, half a mile from the town, is the ancient castle, now converted into a distillery. The chief exports are deals and tar. It is seated near the Baltic; 190 miles S. S. W. of Stockholm. Long. 16. 22. E. lat. 56. 41. N. Pop. 5346.

CALMUCS, or KALMUCS, a people of central Asia, in Mongolia, a branch of the great Mongol or Mogul nation, and the only one that has retained the language and customs. See KALMUCS.

CALNE, a borough in Wiltshire; market on Tuesday. It has eight or ten extensive employers in the manufacture of woollen cloth, and in the vicinity are many fulling and corn mills. It is seated on a river of the same name; 25 miles E. of Bristol, and 88 W. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

CALPEE, or KALPEE, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Agra, on the Jumna. It is a depôt for the transit of cotton, &c., from the S. W., and is famous for its paper and candy; 45 miles S. W. of Casonpore.

CALTHORPE, a village in Leicestershire, on the river Avon, said to be the site of the Roman station Tripontium. Here are traces of encampments, through which the Roman road passed.

CALTUNA, a town on the W. coast of Ceylon, with a fort. A great quantity of arrack is made here, and other manufactures carried on. It stands at the mouth of a large branch of the Muliwaddy; 23 miles S. by E. of Columbo. Long. 79. 56. E. lat. 6. 44. N.

CALVADOS, a maritime department of France, on the English Channel. It is so called from a ridge of rocks of the same name, near the coast of what was heretofore called Normandy, extending 12 miles in length. It contains an area of about 2200 square miles, and 501,775 inhabitants. It is intersected from the S. to the sea by the river Orne. It is a fertile province, and exports a considerable quantity of clover seed. Caen, on the banks of the Orne, is the chief town.

CALVERT, a county of the state of Maryland, lying between the Patuxent river and Chesapeake Bay. Pop. 9229. St. Leonard's, on the shore of the Chesapeake, 71 miles S. of Annapolis, is the chief town.

CALVI, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; 8 miles N. of Capua.

CALVI, a town of Corsica, on a craggy mountain and gulf of the same name, with a strong fortress, and a good harbour. It was taken by the English in 1794. It is 38 miles W. S. W. of Bastia. Pop. 1500.

CALVISANO, a town of Bresciano; 12 miles S. by E. of Brescia. Pop. about 3000.

CALVISSON, a town of France, in the province of Languedoc; 9 miles from Nismes. Pop. 3000.

diction; situate on a river of the same name, near the Pacific Ocean; 70 miles W. of Arculpa, in lat. 16. 10. N. and 73. 15. W. long.

CAMARAN, an island of Arabia, on the Red Sea, where there is a fishery for white coral and pearl oysters. Long. 42. 22. E. lat. 15. 6. N.

CAMARÉ, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre. In an expedition against Brest, in 1694, the English landed here, and lost a great number of men. It stands on a bay of the same name; 8 miles S. of Brest.

CAMARINES, the most southern province of the Isle of Luzon, of which Caceres is the chief town.

CAMARGUE, an island, or cluster of islands, of France, in the mouths of the Rhone, separated by canals, and fortified. The whole contains 80 square miles; the land is fertile, but the air is unwholesome.

CAMBAT, the southernmost province of Abyssinia; inhabited by a people called Sebua-aija, who are a mixture of Pagans, Christians, and Mahometans. It is abundant in fruits.

CAMBAY, a considerable city of Hindostan, in the province of Guzerat. It stands on a gulf of the same name, and was the Camanes of Ptolemy. Here are three bazars, and four public cisterns, capable of supplying the whole town with water in times of the greatest drought. Its products and manufactures are considerable; for the country abounds in corn, cattle, and silk; and cornelian and agate stones are found in its rivers. The inhabitants are noted for embossing. It is 72 miles N. of Surat, and 50 miles S. of Ahmedabad, of which it is the port. It belongs to the English, and is included in the presidency of Bombay. Pop. 10,000. Long. 72. 34. E. lat. 22. 17. N.

CAMBERG, a town of Germany, on the south-west frontier of the electorate of Hesse; situate on a hill; 17 miles E. by S. of Nassau, and 20 N. W. of Frankfort on the Maine.

CAMBERWELL, a parish in Surrey, contiguous to London, on the south side; and to which it forms an appendage, being occupied principally by the private residences of those engaged in the business of the city. The church is $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. of London Bridge; an additional church, after the model of one in Rome, was erected in 1825.

CAMBODIA, CAMBOJA, or CAMBOYA, a country of Asia, extending from Cape Cambodia, in the China Sea, south, in the lat. of 8. 40. to Laotcha, or Laos, in the lat. of about 17. N.; bounded on the east, at the south end, by Tsiompa; and further north, by the country of the Kemoys, which divides it from Cochinchina; and on the west, from the 8th to the 14th degree of latitude, by the gulf of Siam; and further north by the territory of Siam; being of an average breadth of about three degrees of longitude, between 101. and 106. E., comprising an aggregate extent of surface of about 100,000 square miles. As far as any knowledge of this country has been obtained, it appears to be exceedingly rich, alike in vegetable, animal, and mineral productions; whilst the unsocial habits of the people, who appear to be a mixture of Japanese, Cochin-Chinese, Malays, and natives of the Eastern Islands, preclude nearly all intercourse with Europeans. In the 17th century, the Portuguese, Dutch, and English, each unsuccessfully endeavoured to establish an intercourse in this country; and all succeeding attempts, except to a trifling extent surreptitiously, appear to have met with disadvantageous results. It is intersected by a noble river of the same name, which rises in Chinese Tartary, runs through Thibet, and the west side of Yun-nan, the south-west province of China, and Laos, and through the Cambodian territory, in a south-eastern direction, falling into the China Sea, by several channels, between the latitudes of 9. and 11. N. In Thibet this river is called the Matchou, in China the Kiou Long, and through Laos the May Kung; and the eastern channel, into the sea, is sometimes called the Japanese. The chief town of the country, called also Cambodia, is situate on the western bank of the river, about 240 miles above its entrance into the sea. Cambodia appears to be thinly peopled, but of the number of its inhabitants no estimate has been formed. They appear to manufacture both silk and cotton; and the country producing every possible article necessary for subsistence and comfort, and also to gratify the most luxuriant sense, either of taste, smell, or ornament, there is but little inducement on the part of the Cambodians to cultivate an intercourse with the Europeans, more especially on the overbearing, higgling, and selfish principle which they seem to have exercised over all Asia. As far as the Cambodians do maintain an external commerce, sandal wood, elephants' teeth of the finest quality, camphor, and the gum called cambogia, or gamboge, from the name of the country, constitute the chief articles of export. It was divided, in 1820, into three parts, one of which is still independent; another became tributary to Siam, the third to Cochinchina. Saegon is the chief trading port. See SIAM.

CAMBORNE, a town in Cornwall. In the neighbourhood are some of the chief copper mines in the country; it is pleasantly situated, and is a neat town.

CAMBRAY, a fortified city of France, capital of the department of Nord. The linen manufacture is extensively carried on in this district, and the term cambric was derived from the finer qualities of linen, which emanated from this city. It has since been applied by the English to the fine fabric of cotton as well as of linen. Cambray has also some manufactures of lace and leather. It is seated near the source of the Scheldt, which runs through the city; 18 miles S. by W. of Valenciennes; 35 S. by E. of Lisle, and 102 N. N. E. of Paris. The fortification was one of those retained by the allies for five years after the peace of 1815.

CAMBRIA, an interior county of Pennsylvania, lying W. of the main ridge of the Allegheny mountains. The S. W. branch of the Susquehanna river rises in this county. The railroad from Hollidaysburg terminates at Johnstown, in the S. part of this county. Pop. 11,256. Ebensburg, in the centre of the county, 143 miles W. by N. of Harrisburg, is the chief town.

CAMBRIA, a town in the state of New York, near the great falls of Niagara; 310 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 2099.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE, an interior county towards the S. E. part of England, being about 50 miles in extent from N. to S. and 20 to 25 from W. to E. It is bounded on the S. by a range of hills, which divide it from the counties of Bedford and Essex, having the counties of Suffolk and Norfolk on the E., and Bedford, Huntingdon, Northampton, and Lincoln, on the W., the northern extremity jutting upon the Boston Wash. The river Ouse intersects it from E. to W., whilst the Nen forms the boundary between the counties of Northampton and Lincoln, and the Cam, which rises at the foot of the hills which form the southern boundary, falls into the Ouse about the middle of the county. After descending the hills from the S., the country is one entire level, and that part was formerly little better than a swamp; some parts of it, however, by well-directed efforts in draining and embanking, since the middle of the last century, has been converted into rich and verdant pastures, which yield great supplies of butter and cream-cheese for the London market. It has no manufactures of any kind; but, in addition to its butter, it yields a surplus of calves, cattle, sheep, and wool, and large quantities of wild fowl. Its supply, however, of foreign and manufactured productions, is obtained in exchange for the expenditure of the students at the university of the town of Cambridge, and rents abstracted from different parts of the country, on account of the endowments of the several colleges. The only other place in the county deserving of notice, besides the town of Cambridge, is the city of Ely. It returns three members to parliament.

CAMBRIDGE, the chief town of the preceding county, and seat of one of the universities of England, is situate in the S. part of the county; 17 miles S. of Ely, 23 E. of Bedford, 28 W. of Bury, and 51 N. by E. of London. It is a corporate town, governed by a mayor and thirteen aldermen; but its importance is derived from its university, which dates its foundation by Siegebert, King of the East Angles, in 630. It acquired, however, but little celebrity until after the period of the collisions between the barons and the court had subsided, in the 13th century, from which period, to the close of the 16th century, twelve colleges and four halls were founded, by the names, and in the order of date as follows, viz. :—

COLLEGES.

1. St. Peter's in 1257	7. St John's in 1509
2. Gonville and Calus 1348	8. Magdalene 1519
3. Corpus Christi 1350	9. Trinity 1546
4. King's 1441	10. Jesus 1576
5. Queen's 1448	11. Emanuel 1594
6. Christ's 1505	12. Syd. Sussex 1598

HALLS.

1. Clare in 1326	3. Trinity in 1350
2. Pembroke 1343	4. Cantharine 1475

These institutions, founded in ages of monastic influence, and when architecture was the ruling passion of those who possessed the means of indulging either in acts of benevolence or vanity, claim the attention of the present age, some for their monastic features, some for the history of their foundations, and others for their architectural beauty. Most of them have chapels and libraries attached, some of them extensive and valuable, and the chapel of King's College is justly esteemed as the most beautiful Gothic edifice in the world. It is 304 feet in length, 71 broad, and 91 in height; the effect of its proportions, and beauty of its decorations, cannot here be described. In 1807, another college was founded, pursuant to the will of Sir George Downing, whose name it bears; and, in 1810, Viscount Fitzwilliam bequeathed a very extensive and valuable cabinet of works of Nature and Art, and ample funds for the foundation of an observatory, and a building for the reception of his collection for the use of the university at large, which has been erected on a magnificent scale, and completed in 1842. This munificent donation excited a general spirit of improvement both in the town and university; several of the colleges have been enlarged, repaired, and beautified; several old buildings in the town taken down, judicious sites for the new buildings selected, and those edifices more particularly deserving of attention for their architecture, laid more open to the view. In addition to the libraries attached to the several colleges and halls, there is also one common to the university, in a splendid building of recent erection; a senate-house, and schools for public examinations, which, together with fourteen parish churches, a county hospital, and other public buildings for county purposes, afford an extent of varied architectural display of great interest. There are also six bridges of stone over the river Cam, which, in addition to their convenience, add considerably to the general picturesque effect. The town and university each send two members to parliament. The town market is abundantly supplied on Wednesdays and Saturdays; and in a field called Sturbich, or Stourbridge, about two miles from the town, one of the largest fairs in England is held, for a fortnight, commencing on the 7th of September.

CAMBRIDGE, the seat of the chief university in the United States of North America. The town is in Middlesex county, Massachusetts, and contains a total population of 8409. The collegiate buildings of Harvard University are situate about three miles from Boston (which see,) at the N. E. end of a plain, similar in extent and aspect to Clapham Common, in the vicinity of London. It was founded in 1633. The buildings consist of four uniform ranges, four stories high, of brick; in one of them is a library containing 53,000 volumes of books, and some philosophical apparatus. Lat. 42. 22. N. long. 71. 7. 38. W.

CAMBULLA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, surrounded by a wall, and seated near the sea; 14 miles W. by S. of Tarragona.

CAMBURG, a town of Saxony, on the E. bank of the Saal; 18 miles N. by E. of Jena, and 32 S. W. of Leipsic.

CAMBYNA, an island lying between the S. E. promontory of Celebes and the Isle of Bounon. It is about 60 miles in circumference.

CAMDEN, a county in the N. E. part of North Carolina, about 25 miles from N. to S., and 4 in breadth; the north end borders on Virginia, and forms part of the Great Dismal Swamp; and the south end jets upon Albemarle Sound, between Pasquotunk and George Rivers. Pop. 5663, of whom 1661 are slaves. Camden Court House, or Jonesburg, is the capital.

CAMDEN, a maritime county of the state of Georgia; bounded on the south by St. Mary's River, which divides it from East Florida. It is about 20 miles in extent each way, bounded on the west by the Great Swamp of Oke-fin-o-caw. The St. Illa river intersects it from the N. W. corner, running to the centre of the county, falling into the sea at the N. E. corner. It is very productive in rice and cotton. Pop. 6375, of whom 4049 are slaves, and 22 free blacks; beside the population of the town of St. Mary, and the town of Jefferson, in the centre of the county.

CAMDEN, a city of the United States in New Jersey, on the E. side of the Delaware, opposite Philadelphia. It consists of three parts, a central, and a northern and southern suburb, from each of which there is a ferry across to Philadelphia. Ships of the largest class come up to the lower village. The Camden and Amboy railway leading to New York city terminates here, and there is also another S. to Woodbury. Pop. 3371, in 1840.

CAMDEN, a town of South Carolina, on the E. bank of the Wateree river, which is crossed 1½ miles S. W. of the village, by a long bridge. The soil around it is fertile in cotton and corn, but liable to be overflowed. Peaches, apples, and melons, are abundant. Two celebrated battles were fought here in 1780 and 1781: 2. miles W. of the town is a large Indian inroad; 33 miles N. E. of Columbia, and 473 from Washington. Pop. 1000.

CAMDEN, a town on the W. side of Penobscot Bay, state of Maine.

CAMEL, a river in Cornwall, which rises two miles north of Camelford, flows south almost to Bodmin, and then north-west to Padstow, where it enters the British Channel. Its banks were the scenes of some bloody battles between the Britons and Saxons.

CAMELFORD, a town in Cornwall; market on Friday. A great quantity of yarn is spun in this place and its neighbourhood. It is seated on the Camel; 14 miles W. of Lanneston, and 205 W. by S. of London.

CAMERINO, a town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, and an archbishop's see. It is seated on a mountain near the river Chienti - 5 miles S. W. of Ancona. Pop. 4900.

CAMERON'S PEAK, on the W. coast of Africa, at the Old Calabar river, 13,000 feet high, and near a river of the same name, which flows into the bight of Biafra.

CAMILLUS, a township of Onandago county, state of New York, containing four towns, viz., Elbridge, Jordan, Camillus, and Ionia. The town of Camillus is 155 miles, and Jordan 167 miles W. of Albany.

CAMIN, a seaport of Further Pomerania, and once a bishop's see, which was secularized at the peace of Westphalia; but it still has a fine cathedral and a chapter; 38 miles N. of Stettin. Long. 14. 52. E. lat. 53. 54. N. Pop. 2200.

CAMINIA, a town of Portugal, in Entre-Douro-e-Minho, with a fort; seated at the mouth of the Minho; 12 miles N. of Viana.

CAMOROTA, one of the Nicobar isles off the west coast of Malaya; in the lat. of 8. N.

CAMPAGNA, or CAMPANIA, a town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore; 40 miles S. E. of Naples.

CAMPAGNA DI ROMA, or TERRITORY OF ROME, the most south-west of what were the ecclesiastical states of Rome, extending from the river Tiber, for about 65 miles along the shore of the Mediterranean, to the Neapolitan province of Lavoro, being about 50 miles wide; bounded on the E. by Abruzzo. This extensive district, lying between the 41st and 42nd degree of north latitude, was the ancient Latium, and was once the most populous and fertile district in the world, but now presents one general scene of desolation. The Pontine marshes, which are constantly emitting the most noisome vapours, comprise a great portion of the south-east part of the province. Besides the city of Rome, on the banks of the Tiber, at the northern extremity of the province, Albano, Velletri, and Piperno, all on the western side, still exhibit marks of former greatness; whilst the ruins of temples, baths, and other stately edifices, are seen scattered in all directions. See ROME.

CAMPAN, a town of France, in the department of Upper Pyrenees, on the river Adour; one of the most delightful spots in the south of France. Pop. 4300.

CAMPBELL, an interior county of Virginia; a fertile district. Pop. 21,030, nearly half of whom are slaves. The court-house, in the centre of the county, is 144 miles W. by S. of Richmond. Lynchburg is the capital.

CAMPBELL, a frontier county in the north-east part of Tennessee. It contains an area of about 230 square miles, and a population of 6149. Jacksborough is the chief town.

CAMPBELLTON, a borough and seaport of Scotland, in Argyleshire, situate on a bay, toward the south extremity of the peninsula of Cantyre. It has a considerable trade in the distillation of whisky, besides being the general rendezvous of the fishing vessels that annually visit the western coast. It is 65 miles S.S.W. of Inverary. Long. 5. 32. W. lat. 55. 28. N. Pop. 4869.

CAMPDEN, a corporate town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday; 22 miles N.E. of Gloucester, and 90 W.N.W. of London.

CAMPEACHY, or more properly CAMPECHE, a town of Yucatan, on the west coast of the bay of Campeachy, in the Gulf of Mexico, defended by strong forts. The port is large, but shallow, and has a good dock. It is noted for logwood, which, however, does not grow very near it. It was taken by the English in 1659; by the buccaners in 1678; and by the freebooters of St. Domingo in 1685, who burnt it, and blew up the citadel. Long. 90. 33. W. lat. 19. 51. N.

CAMPEN, a town of Holland, in Overysseel, with a citadel, and a port almost choked up. It is seated near the mouth of the Yssel, on the Zuyder Zee; 8 miles W.N.W. of Zwoll. Pop. about 6000.

CAMPERDOWN, a seaport of Holland, about 25 miles S. of Texel Island; famous for the signal victory obtained by Admiral Lord Viscount Duncan, off its coast, over the Dutch fleet, on the 11th October, 1797.

CAMPO BASSO, a town of Naples, in the Molise. In 1805, it suffered greatly by an earthquake, and most of the inhabitants were destroyed. It has a considerable trade in articles of cutlery, and is 12 m. S. of Molise. Pop. about 6000.

CAMPO FORMIO, a village of Italy, in Friuli, with an elegant castle, where a treaty of peace was concluded between the Austrians and French, in 1797. It is 2 miles S.W. of Udina.

CAMPO MAYOR, a fortified town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on the frontier of Spain; 14 miles N. by E. of Elvas. Pop. about 5000.

CAMPO S. PIETRO, a town and castle of Italy, in the Paduano, on the river Menson;

12 miles N. of Padua, and about the same distance N.W. of Venice. Pop. about 3000.

CANAAN, a town of Columbia county, state of New York, on the E. side of Hudson River; 25 miles W. by S. of Albany. The railroads from W. Stockbridge to Hudson and Albany, pass through it. Pop. 1957.

CANADA, a vast territory of N. America, lying between the 42nd and 54th degrees of N. latitude, and the 64th and 98th of W. longitude. This extensive country appears to have been first made known in 1535, by Jacques Cartier, commanding a fleet fitted out from St. Maloes, under the auspices of the French government. Three or four attempts, during the fifteen years from 1535 to 1550, were made to establish a colony upon it, but all proved unsuccessful. In 1607, the first permanent establishment was formed by M. de Champlain, from France, who founded the city of Quebec, on the site of the Indian village Hochelaga; but for more than fifty years it remained without any laws or social arrangements, the settlers being little better than hordes of banditti, living in constant collision with the native Indians, with whom the most sanguinary conflicts frequently occurred with alternate success. In 1663, at which period the European inhabitants did not exceed 7000, the French government affected to extend its paternal regard to the colony, and appropriated a train of civil officers to organize and administer a code of laws on the principle of those then prevailing in France. This arrangement produced some excitement and indications of improvement; but both were of short duration. The collisions with the natives were renewed, and their frequent incursions upon the lands of the settlers, which were often stained with acts of cruelty, operated as a check to all social enterprise; so that at the end of another half century, the number of settlers did not exceed 20,000. During the earlier part of the 18th century, the colony made some progress towards improvement; but the object of the French government seemed to be extension of territory, rather than social arrangement, and as such, in addition to the collisions in which it was so frequently involved with the natives, it involved itself also with the outposts of the English, who then possessed the territory now forming the United States of North America; and, on war being declared between France and England in 1756, the English prepared to expel the French entirely from the North American continent, in which they completely succeeded in 1759. At this period, the number of settlers in Canada amounted to about 70,000. During the first fifteen years after its surrender to the English, it made but little progress either in population or improvement; the prejudices of some of the older settlers being inimical to the English laws, introduced immediately after its surrender, led in 1775 to a revision of the civil code, more conformable to the usage and prejudices of the inhabitants. The revolt of the other Anglo-American provinces taking place about this time, occasioned a considerable accession of population to Canada, which progressively increased up to the period of 1792, when a further important arrangement took place in its internal administration: the territory was divided into two great parts, denominated Upper and Lower Canada, with separate jurisdictions, and a council, and an assembly of representatives established for each. But dissensions having sprung up between the two states, and which led to some warfare, they were declared, in 1840, to be but one state, under the title of the Vice-Royalty of Canada, and will be governed by the same laws and customs in each, which were before different; but, for convenience, they will be described under their original denomination.

CANADA, LOWER, or EAST, although the least favoured in climate of the two, is by far the most populous, owing to its nearer contiguity to the sea, and earlier settlement. This division extends from the United States' territory, in the lat. of 45. to that of 52. N.; and W. from the 65th degree of long. to the Ottawa river; the part, however, which is inhabited and under cultivation, lies within much narrower limits, comprising a tract of territory about 700 miles in length, and 150 in mean breadth, lying in a N. E. direction, from the lat. of 45. N. and 74. 30. of W. long. The geographical bearing of this territory has been owing to the noble river St. Lawrence, which intersects it in that direction, its whole extent, falling into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, at the N.E., the settlements extending along both banks of the river, and intersected on both sides by innumerable tributary streams and rivers, some of them of great magnitude. The most considerable of those on the S. side of the St. Lawrence, taking them in order from the W., are, 1st, the Chambly, which runs out of Lake Champlain, falling into the St. Lawrence about 60 miles below Montreal; 2nd, the Tortu; 3rd, the St. Francis; 4th, the Nicolet; 5th, the Beancour; 6th, the Bearivage; and 7th, the Chaudiere, which falls into the St. Lawrence, about 20 miles below Quebec; E. of the Chaudiere, the waters chiefly flow to the S., or E. into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The N. bank is intersected, at the distance of every fifteen to twenty miles, by rivers of greater or less magnitude; the most considerable is the Pickonaganis, which, after passing through a lake of considerable extent, is called the Saguenay, and falls into the St. Lawrence about 150 miles below Quebec. At the new organization of the government, in 1762, this territory was divided into the four districts of Montreal, Trois Rivers, Quebec, and Gaspé: the first three extend on both sides the river; and the latter, which is called the district and county of Gaspé, comprises all the S. E. part of the territory S. of the St. Lawrence, bounded on the E. by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and S. by the province of New Brunswick: the first three districts were further subdivided into twenty counties, eleven on the S., and nine on the N. side of the river, as follows, beginning at the S.W., viz.:-

On the south side.	1. Huntingdon.	On the north side.	12. York.
	2. Bedford.		13. Eppingham.
	3. Montreal.		14. Leinster.
	4. Richelieu.		15. Warwick.
	5. Surrey.		16. St. Maurice.
	6. Kent.		17. Hampshire.
	7. Buckingham.		18. Orleans.
	8. Dorchester.		19. Quebec.
	9. Hertford.		20. Northumberland.
	10. Devon.
	11. Cornwallis.

Of these, the first eight, which all lie within, or S.W. of the river Chaudiere, are the most fertile, and afford the most favourable spots for agricultural and commercial enterprise. The counties of Cornwallis and Northumberland each extend from the lat. of about 47., the former to the district of Gaspé, and the latter borders on Labrador, all of which at present may be looked upon as one great wilderness. With this subdivision of territory, and a new organization of the government of Canada in 1792, a more steadfast career of improvement seems to have been pursued than in any former period. Incidental circumstances, however, rather than any measures of foresight, or well directed exertion, contributed to give it an interest and importance which it otherwise might never have obtained. For some years previous to 1807, England had been accustomed to draw a supply of timber, to the extent of 150,000 to 200,000 tons per annum, from the United States of America, when in that year the United States' government adopted the most extraordinary policy ever before heard of, in proscribing its citizens from all external intercourse. This circumstance forced the English upon Canada, and the other British American provinces, for a supply of that essential commodity; and in 1809, when the folly of the measure of the United States' government became too apparent to be any longer continued, so reciprocal had an extensive intercourse between Canada and England, as well as between Canada and the West Indies, become, that, on the United States attempting to renew their intercourse, they found all the ports of the British West India islands shut against them, and in all the ports of England, so high a duty on all sorts of wood from their territory, that it amounted to an entire prohibition. Never did presumption so effectually recoil upon its authors as did that ridiculous pretension of proscription of the United States' government, in 1808. It destroyed at once and for ever the employment of 100,000 to 200,000 tons of shipping annually, whilst it threw an advantage to a corresponding extent into the hands of the Canadians, and the other British American provinces. And it was not only the marine that was affected by the measure; a great number of the most active and intelligent of the citizens of the United States, living on or near the borders of Canada, moved within the British territory, and directed an extensive and valuable branch of commerce in pot and pearl ashes, and other commodities, through Canada, which would otherwise have found its way by the Atlantic coast. This extension of commercial intercourse brought a vast accession of population: the number of inhabitants which, in 1775, did not exceed 90,000, in 1814, according to a capitation tax, amounted to 335,000; and the number has since been gradually increasing, and was, according to the census of 1834, 549,005.

One of the most distinguishing characteristics of Lower Canada is its climate, in the intensity of cold in the winter, and of heat in summer, and the sudden transition from one to the other, without producing any injurious effect upon the constitutions either of the inhabitants, or other parts of the animal creation. The frosts begin about the middle of October, the sun continuing to render the days mild and agreeable for three or four weeks, when the snow storms set in, which continue for about a month, with variable winds and hazy atmosphere, until about the middle or end of December; by which time the whole country is covered with an average depth of snow of three to five feet. An invariable season now commences; an uninterruptedly clear sky prevails for about twenty weeks, the thermometer ranging, the greater part of the time, from 20 to 25 below zero, sometimes descending more than 30 below, when the frost suddenly breaks, and, in the course of a few days, about the end of April, or middle of May, the snow as suddenly disappears. All the energies of the husbandman are now directed to prepare the earth for seed, and in the short space of a month the most luxuriant verdure and vegetation are spread over all Canada; the thermometer, sometimes in June, ranges as high as 95 or 100, prevailing through the summer from about 75 to 80. Although the severity of the winter precludes the earth from yielding any produce, yet it essentially facilitates the conveyance to market of its summer products; a tract once beaten upon the snow, which is easily effected after the storms have ceased, enables a horse to drag, on a sledge, a twofold weight, twice or thrice the distance in a day, which he would be able to draw in the best constructed carriage, on the best possible road. In any country this facility of conveyance would be a great advantage; but in Canada especially, where the rapidity of vegetation, and the abundant produce of the summer, claim all the attention and all the energy of the population during that season, it more than counterbalances the severe and long duration of the winter, inasmuch as it supersees the necessity of cost and labour in the construction of bridges and roads, and renders conveyance easy by routes, and over tracts that would otherwise be impassable; and, so far from being deemed severe or inconvenient, it is regarded by the Canadians as the season of social intercourse and festivity. The basis of the commerce of Canada is in the produce of its forests, which, since 1817, supplied England and the West Indies with an average of about 300,000 loads (of 50 cubic feet each) of timber annually. Its next source of supply for export is the skins of the innumerable wild animals which inhabit the forests, comprising the bear, stag, elk, deer, fox, martin, wild cat, and various others, including hare and rabbit, as well as a great variety of the weasel species; and the banks of the numerous lakes and rivers supply large quantities of otter and beaver skins. The aggregate value of this branch of commerce to Canada, may be estimated at from 100,000l. to 150,000l. annually, varying in some measure according to the caprice of fashion. Fox and otter skins, which at one time sold in London for 10l. or 15l. a skin, at other times obtain only two or three to five pounds each; the others occasionally varying in nearly like proportion. Another great article of production for export is pot and pearl ash; which, with a few other articles of minor importance, constitute the whole of the exports; amounting, in the aggregate, including the freight of a portion of the wood in Canadian-built vessels, to a money value of about 800,000l. The exclusion of a market for the surplus of grain, which would easily be supplied, is, however, more than counterbalanced to Canada by a large military force and civil establishment, which is maintained in that country out of the taxes levied on the people of England; these maintenances, in addition to its exports, enable the Canadians to draw from England a supply of manufactured and Asiatic productions to the amount, in money value, of about 1,400,000l. annually, whilst the direct intercourse of Canada with the British West India islands, enables it to obtain a liberal supply of the products of those luxuriant climes. From these circumstances, it is easy to conceive that Canada affords great advantage to agricultural enterprise and well-directed exertion. The inhabitants consist chiefly of the descendants of the original French settlers, and have preserved their language and customs to the present day. French is the general language; and the great subdivision of the estates under seigniorial laws, is a remarkable feature in this part of Canada. The upper division of the vice-royalty has been the principal resort of later emigrants.

The legal establishment consists of a Court of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Court of Appeal; and the civil and criminal law is administered by a chief justice and two puisne judges; the chief justice is also president of the legislative council. The ecclesiastical affairs of this country are under the superintendence of a catholic bishop resident at Quebec, and an assistant bishop, nine vicars-general, and about 200 curés, who are supported chiefly out of grants of land made under the French government, and an assessment of one twenty-sixth part of all grain produced on the lands held by Catholics. The protestant establishment consists of a lord bishop, also resident at Quebec, nine rectors, and several curates or clergymen, supported in part out of the civil list, and an appropriation of one-seventh of all the lands held by Protestants. The protestant bishop has also a seat in the legislative council, by virtue of his appointment: no distinction is otherwise made on account of religious profession, catholic and protestant being alike eligible to a seat in the executive or legislative council of the assembly, as well as to all other civil or military appointments. Numerous tribes of native Indians still inhabit all the western and interior parts of this vast country, though their number has been much reduced since 1780, about which period the small-pox raged with such destructive fury as to entirely depopulate several hundred thousand square miles of territory. Since the abatement of that dreadful catastrophe, and the conciliatory measures of the Canadian government towards them, although they still withhold themselves as much as ever from the society of the settlers, they have maintained a much more social intercourse, with but few attempts at open hostility; and it is the Indian population who contribute so essentially to the traffic in furs. The principal towns in Lower Canada are QUEBEC, MONTREAL, and TROIS RIVIERES, each of which see for more circumstantial details of their commerce, &c.

CANADA, UPPER, or WEST, in its most comprehensive sense, comprises a tract of country extending from the Ottawa, or Grand River, which divides it from Lower Canada at its junction with the St. Lawrence, in the long. of 74. 30. W. and 45. of N. latitude. to the N.W. extremity of Lake Winnipeg, in the lat. of 59. N. and the 98th of W. long., bounded on the S. by a chain of lakes which discharge their waters into the sea by the great river St. Lawrence, and on the N. by the Ottawa River, in a N.W. direction, to the longitude of about 82., when it borders, by undefined limits, on the Hudson Bay and N.W. territories. However, like Lower Canada, the part under cultivation, and which at present more particularly merits attention, lies within comparatively narrow limits, in a S.W. direction, along the N. bank of the St. Lawrence and N. shores of Lakes Ontario and Erie, from the Ottawa River before mentioned, at its entrance into the St. Lawrence, to the Straits of Erie and St. Clair River, between the Lakes Erie and Huron, in the long. of 82. 30. W., being about 570 miles from N.E. to S.W., and 40 to 50 in breadth, including about 10,000,000 of acres of as fertile land as any in all N. America. The S.W. extremity extending to the 42nd degree of latitude, it is not subject to such severity of winter as the lower province; numerous streams, affording the most advantageous site for the erection of mills, fall into the lakes, and two considerable rivers in the eastern district fall into the Ottawa, and two others run in a S. W. direction, falling into Lake St. Clair, between the Strait of Erie and the St. Clair River. The southernmost of these rivers is called the Thames, with a London on its banks, destined, probably, at some future time, to rival in population and importance its namesake in Britain. Upper Canada is divided, for judicial and local purposes, into eight districts. About one-third of the lands were granted in free and common socage, prior to 1825, about 500,000 acres of which are already under cultivation; one-third more being reserved for the crown and clergy, leaves about 4,000,000 of acres of fertile land, in the immediate vicinity of settlements already formed, for future grants; in addition to which, millions of acres in the rear, northward, covered at present with the finest timber of oak, hickory, beech, walnut, maple, pine, &c., &c., present a rich field for exertion, and the supply of future ages. The population of this province has increased, and continues increasing, in a greater ratio than the lower one. The population, which in 1783 did not exceed 10,000, in 1814 amounted to 95,000. Since that period, the progress of the population has been as under:—

YEAR.	POP.	YEAR.	POP.
1830	210,437	1841	465,337

Its civil and religious institutions are similar to those of the sister province, with the exception of its being settled since the expulsion of the French; there are no feudal tenures or lands held in seigniorage, which is the case with all those granted to the original French settlers in the lower province. The inhabitants also of Upper Canada, being emigrants from the United States, Scotland, and England, are principally Protestants, and as such there are no special enactments or reservations for the Catholics. The government and people of the United States of North America have long viewed this fine province with a longing and a jealous eye; and, immediately after their declaration of war against England, on the 18th of June, 1812, they landed an army from Detroit, of about 2000 men, under the command of General Hull, at its S. W. extremity, but who were immediately obliged to retreat, and, being pursued into their own territory by the English General Brock, the whole force surrendered prisoners of war on the following 16th of August. A second attempt, in October of the same year, proved equally unsuccessful. In the spring of the following year, however, the United States' forces obtained some advantages, and, on the 10th of September, a British naval force, on Lake Erie, of five vessels carrying 69 guns, was completely defeated and captured by a United States' squadron of nine vessels. This affair completely turned the tide of victory in favour of the United States; but it led to no ulterior advantages of any kind, though it probably presented them some disadvantages. The war terminated in 1815, without any object on the side of Canada having being obtained. Upper Canada participates in common in the commerce of the lower province; in addition to which, it has also the advantage of interchanging its surplus productions with the United States, as either one direction or the other may best promote its interest. Independent of its abundance of vegetable and animal food, the forests are filled with every kind of game and fowl, and the rivers and lakes afford a great variety of fish common to inland waters; and, by due attention to culture, the gardens may be made to yield plenty of delicious fruits. Under the later dominion of Great Britain, Canada has been very flourishing, and the almost entire immunity from taxation has given it great advantages over the United States. The development of its resources has received a great impetus from the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway, and others, connecting the principal ports and emporiums. The loyalty of the people to the British crown, was enthusiastically exhibited during the Prince of Wales's progress through the country, in 1860.

The Canadas, in a general sense, may be considered a level country, beautifully undulated, but nowhere attaining an elevation exceeding 300 to 500 feet above the level of the waters of the great chain of lakes. A ridge of mountains skirts the northern boundaries of both provinces, from the 74th to the 98th degree of W. longitude; the altitudes have not been correctly ascertained, but they seem to claim the character only of a chain of broken hills rather than mountains. But little discovery of minerals has as yet been made: coals, copper, and iron, have been found; and, as population extends itself, and when necessity requires them, the mineral substances will, most probably, not prove deficient. The two principal towns are TORONTO and KINGSTON, the capital, both of which see; and, for a more comprehensive and general view of the advantages which the Canadas are destined to derive from the facility of conveyance by water, see, under their respective heads, besides those previously mentioned, the following lakes and rivers, viz.:—

CANAJOHARIE, a town of New York, in Montgomery county. Its vicinity abounds with apple trees, from which is made cider of an excellent quality; 25 miles N. E. of Cooperstown, and 56 W. N. W. of Albany. The Catskill and Canajoharie railroad will terminate here. Pop. 5146.

CANALS, a town of Italy, in Piedmont. Pop. 3500.

CANANDAIGUA, a town of New York, chief of Ontario county, situate on the N. end of a lake of the same name, at its outlet into Canandaigua Creek, which runs E. into Seneca River. The lake is 20 miles long and 3 broad. The town stands on a pleasant slope from the lake. It has three churches, and a population of 5652, 90 miles E. S. E. of Niagara, and 208 W. by N. of Albany.

CANANORE, a town of Hindostan, in Malabar, defended by a fortress, with other works after the European fashion, and the head quarters of the province. This town was taken in 1790 by the British, in whose possession it remains. It has several good houses, and carries on a good trade with other parts of the peninsula, and with Arabia and Sumatra. The country furnishes a large quantity of pepper, cardamoms, sandalwood, coir, sharks' fins, &c.; the imports are horses, benzoin, camphor, almonds, opium, sugar, and piece goods. It is governed by a native sovereign, who pays an annual tribute of 14,000 rupees to the English East India Company. It is seated on a small bay, one of the best on the coast; 56 miles N. N. W. of Calicut. Long. 75. 30. E. lat. 11. 53. N.

CANARA, a province on the W. coast of Hindostan, formerly subject to the regent of Mysore, on whose defeat and death, in 1789, it came into the hands of the British. It is 180 miles in length, between the Concan and Malahar, and from 30 to 80 in breadth. The soil is fertile, and it produces abundance of rice, betel-nuts, and wild nutmegs. The principal port is Mangalore.

CANARIES, or CANARY ISLANDS, anciently called the Fortunato Islands, are 13 in number; lying in the North Atlantic Ocean, off the W. coast of North Africa, between the latitudes of 28. and 30. N. Seven of them are considerable, namely, PALMA, FERRO, GOMERA, TENERIFFE, CANARIA, FUERTEVENTURA, and LANÇEROTA, each of which see; the other six are very small—Graciosa, Rocca, Alagranza, St. Clare, Inferno, and Lobos. They were formerly inhabited by a brave and independent race of people, called Guanches. Fuerteventura and Lançerota, being the least populous, were taken possession of by John de Bethencourt, a Norman, about the commencement of the 15th century, in behalf of John, the then king of Castile: but it was not till towards the close of that century that the Spaniards, under whose sovereignty they still remain, obtained complete possession of the whole group, after the most determined resistance of the natives; the whole of whom, during the 16th century, fell victims to the cruelty of the Spaniards, either by the sword or the inquisition, which was established in these islands in 1532.

CANARY, GRAND, one of the principal of the above islands, lying between the E. side of Teneriffe, and the S. end of Fuerteventura. Next to Teneriffe, it is the most fertile and productive of the group. The surface near the coast is beautifully diversified with hill and dale, and well watered with streams issuing from mountains converging towards the centre of the island. The vine in all its varieties flourishes in this island in the utmost luxuriance. It is here that the most delicious wine or sack is made, and it was from hence that the English obtained their sack, so celebrated in the time of Shakspeare. But under the proscriptive policy of Spain, nothing depending on human exertion prospers, and, though the Canary Islands are less exposed to its despotism than any other part of the Spanish dominions, every thing languishes. The extent of this island is about 30 miles from N. to S., and 28 in breadth. Palmas, or Canary, as it is sometimes called, the chief town, is situate on the coast, towards the N. E. end of the island, in the latitude of 28. 43. N. and 17. 46. of W. long., having a tolerable harbour for vessels of 100 to 200 tons burthen, sheltered by a promontory, jutting for about two miles into the sea, from the N. E. extremity of the island. Palmas was formerly the capital and seat of government, both civil and ecclesiastical, of the whole group of islands, but the governor now resides at Santa Cruz, or Teneriffe; the bishop continuing at Palmas, the population of which is estimated at about 25,000, and the remainder of the island at about the same number.

CANCALE, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine, seated on a bay of its name, and celebrated for oysters. The English landed here in 1753, and proceeded by land to burn the ships at St. Malo. It is nine miles E. of St. Malo, and 40 N. W. of Rennes. Pop. about 5150.

CANDAHAR, or KANDAHAR, a province of Afghanistan, lying between the 31st and 34th degree of N. lat., and the 65th and 70th of E. long.; the chief city, of the same name, is situate on the frontier of the Persian province of Segistan, in the lat. of 33. N. and 66. 15. of E. long. During the entirety of the Persian and Mogul empires, it was considered the most important barrier between the two territories, and it was formerly the capital and seat of government of the whole Afghan territory, which is now at Cabul. It is, however, still an important place, both as a fortress, and of commercial intercourse. See AFGHANISTAN.

CANDEISH, a province of the Deccan of Hindostan, subject to the Poonah Mahrattas; bounded on the N. by Malwa, E. by Berar, S. by Dowlatabad, and W. by Baglana. The soil is fertile, though mountainous, and produces abundance of cotton. Burhampour, which surrendered to the British in 1803, is the capital.

CANDES, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, at the confluence of the Vienne with the Loire; 30 miles W.S.W. of Tours.

CANDIA, or CRETE, an island in the Mediterranean, formerly Crete, lying to the S. of the Archipelago. It is 180 miles long, from W. to E., and 50 broad, and pervaded by a chain of mountains. The soil is fertile; and it abounds in fine cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, and game. The chief products are corn, wine, oil, wool, silk, and honey. It was taken by the Turks in 1669, after a war of 25 years. It was attempted to be retaken by the Venetians, in 1692, without effect. Mount Ida, so famous in history, is in the middle of this island. It suffered greatly from devastating civil wars between 1821 and 1830; the population was more than decimated, and it was a prey to all the other calamities consequent on intestine divisions; but since quiet was restored, it has gradually assumed its better aspect. The chief towns are well and strongly fortified, the inferior ones quite the reverse. The language, dress, and manners, are those of the modern Greeks. Besides Candia, the capital, the other principal towns are Canea, Retimo, Nuovo, Legortino, and Setia. Total population, about 153,000.

CANDIA, the capital of the above island, seated on the N. side of it, about 240 miles S. S. W. of Smyrna. It was built by the Sarcens, but its present fortifications are Venetian. The port formed by two projecting moles, is in a very bad state, and serviceable only for small vessels. It is generally well built; streets wide and clean, but roughly paved. It is the residence of the Pacha, and seat of a Greek archbishop. Its province, comprising all the E. part of the island, produces chiefly, wheat, barley, raisins, and a little cotton. Long. 24. 8. E. lat.

35. 19. N. Pop. about 12,000.

CANDLEMAS ISLES, two islands in the Southern Ocean, near Sandwich land. Long.
27. 13. W. lat. 57. 10. S.

CANDY, formerly a kingdom, comprising the greater part of the interior of the island of CEYLON, (which see;) of which it is the most fertile portion, producing abundance of coffee; the chief town, of the same name, is situate nearly in the centre of the island, on the banks of a river called the Malvaganga, which falls into the sea by several channels on the E. side. The town is very beautifully situate, and has residences for the British governor &c. It surrendered to a British force in March 1815, and was annexed, with the whole of the island of Ceylon, to the British dominions. Candy is about 80 miles
E. N. E. of Colombo, and 95 S. W. of Trincomalee. Pop. 3000.

CANEA, a strong town of the island of Candia, with a good harbour. The environs are adorned with olive trees, vineyards, gardens, and brooks, bordered with myrtle and laurel roses. It was taken from the Venetians by the Turks, in 1645, after a defence of two months, in which the victors lost 25,000 men.
It is seated on the N. coast of the island; 63 miles W. by N. of Candia. It is on the site of the ancient Cydonia. Long. 24. 7. E. lat.
35. 27. N. Pop. 8000.

CANELLE, a town of Piedmont, at the S. extremity of Asti; 12 miles S. S. E. of the town of Asti. Pop. about 3000.

CANETE. See CAGNETE.

CANETO, a town of Italy, in the Mantuan, several times taken and retaken by the French and Austrians. It is seated on the Oglio; 20 miles W. of Mantua.

CANGA, a town of the kingdom of Congo, on the river Zaire; 280 miles N. E. of St.
Salvador. Long. 17. 10. E. lat. 2. 10. S.

CANGIANO, a town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore; 40 miles east by south of Salerno.

CANGOXIMA, a strong seaport of Japan, on the most southern verge of the isle of Ximo, or Kiusiu, with a commodious harbour. At the entrance of the haven is a light-house, on a lofty rock; and at the foot of the rock is a convenient road for shipping. Here are large and sumptuous magazines, belonging to the emperor, some of which are proof against fire. Long. 132. 15. E. lat. 32. 10. N.

CANINA, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, near the entrance of the Gulf of Venice; 8 miles S. E. of Avlona.

CANISHA, a strong town of Lower Hungary. It was taken in 1600, by the Turks, who held it till 1690, when it was taken by the Austrians, after a blockade of two years, and ceded to the emperor by the peace of Carlowitz. It is seated on the bank of a small lake; 12 miles N. of the Drave River, and 85 miles S. S. W. of Raab. Long. 17.

10. E. lat. 46. 30. N.

CANNA, one of the Hebrides of Scotland,
S. W. of the Isle of Skye. It is four miles long and one broad: the high parts produce excellent pasture for cattle, and the low are tolerably fertile. Here are many basaltic columns. On the S. E. side of Canna is Sand Island, separated by a narrow channel, and between them is a well frequented harbour.
Long. 6. 38. W. lat. 57. 13. N.

CANNÆ. See CANOSA.

CANNES, or CAGNES, a small seaport at the S. E. extremity of France; distinguished as the place of debarkation of Napoleon from Elba, on the 1st of March, 1815. It is about six miles S. W. of Nice. Pop. 3997.

CANNOBINE, or KANOBINE, a village of Syria, at the foot of Mount Lebanon, and near to the celebrated cedars, which are about 36 in number, besides a large number of minor ones, presenting a very picturesque appearance.

CANO. See GHANA.

CANOBIA, a town of Italy, in the Milanese, on the lake Maggiore; 35 miles N. N. W. of Milan.

CANOGE, or KANOJE, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Agra. It is said to have been the capital of all Hindostan, under the predecessor of Porus, who fought against Alexander; and that in the 6th century it contained 30,000 shops in which betel-nut was sold. It is now reduced to the size of a middling town, and seated on the Calini, near its conflux with the Ganges; 110 miles
E. by S. of Agra. Long. 80. 13. E. lat. 27.
3. N.

CANONSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, in Washington county, on the W. branch of Chartier Creek. Jefferson college is here;
4 miles above Marganza, and 15 S. S. W. of Pittsburg.

CANOSA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, which stands on part of the site of the ancient Canusium, one of the most magnificent cities of Italy. Between Canosa and the river Ofanto are still some traces of the ancient town of Canna, in the plain of which was fought the celebrated battle between Hannibal and the Romans, wherein the latter lost, 50,000 killed, and 10,000 prisoners.
Canosa is 4 miles W. by N. of Traui. Pop.
about 4000.

CANOUL, a town of Hindostan, in Golcon-da; capital of a circar of the same name, seated on the S. bank of the Toombudra river; 110 miles S. S. W. of Hydrabad.
Long. 78. 7. E. lat. 15. 48. N.

CANOURGUE, a town of France, in the department of Lozere, with a trade in cattle and woollen stuffs; seated near the Lot; 13 miles S. W. of Mende. A number of vases and other articles of Roman pottery, apparently made on the spot, were excavated in 1829. Pop. 1969.

CANSO, a seaport at the S. E. extremity of Nova Scotia. Near the town is a fine fishery for cod. Long. 60. 55. W. lat. 45. 20. N.

CANSO, GUT OF, a strait about 25 miles in length, and from a half to a mile wide, between the E. end of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, leading from the Atlantic Ocean through Chedabucto Bay, into St. George's Bay, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

CANSTADT, a town of Suabia, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg, with a manufacture of printed cottons. In the neighbourhood are some medicinal springs. It is seated on the Neckar, 3 miles N. E. of Stuttgart.

CANTAL, an interior department in the S. of France, including part of the late province of Auvergne. It is so called, from a mountain near the centre of the department, whose summit is always covered with snow. The capital is St. Flour. Pop. about 262,000.

CANTAZARO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore, near the sea; 26 miles S. W. of St. Severino. Pop. 10,000.

CANTERBURY, a city in Kent, capital of the county, and the see of an archbishop, who is primate of all England. It was the Durovernum of the Romans, and founded before the Christian era. The cathedral, a large structure, was once famous for the shrine of Thomas à Becket, the archbishop, who was murdered here in 1170, and afterwards canonised. In this cathedral are interred Henry IV. and Edward the Black Prince. The city has likewise 14 parish churches, the remains of many Roman antiquities, and an ancient castle, with walls and a deep ditch; and a grammar-school founded by Henry VIII. A new college, for church missionaries, has been founded on the site of St. Augustine's Monastery, by the munificence of Mr. Beresford Hope, M. P. for Maidstone, and others, called St. Augustine's College. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor; and is noted for excellent brawn. The adjacent country produces abundance of hops. It has a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and is seated on the river Stour; 55 miles E. S. E. of London, on the high road to Dover, from which it is distant 17 miles. It stands on Chatham and Dover Railway, and on a branch of the South Eastern.

CANTERBURY, a settlement on the E. coast of the Middle Island of New Zealand, on the north side of Banks' peninsula. It was established in 1849.

CANTH, a town of Silesia, on the river Weisritz; 15 miles S. W. of Breslau.

CANTIN, CAPE, a promontory of the Atlantic Ocean, on the coast of Morocco. Long. W. lat. 32. 33. N.

CANTON, a city, seaport, and capital of Quanton, the most southern province of China, and once the only port in the empire with which Europeans were permitted to hold any intercourse; it is finely located at the head of a bay, into which flow two large rivers, one from the westward, which by numerous collateral branches intersects all the southern part of the empire, and the other from the north, which, by a portage of only one day's journey, communicates with the great chain of inland waters that intersects every other province, thereby affording a facility of conveyance by water, which renders Canton peculiarly well adapted for the great outport of the empire. The harbour is very commodious, and, being sheltered by several small islands, it affords secure moorings for the innumerable barks or junks which navigate the inland waters; all the foreign ships anchor several miles distant from the town, not on account of the incapacity of the harbour to accommodate them, but from the peculiarly jealous policy of the Chinese, which seems to dread nothing so much as sociality of intercourse. Canton consists of three towns, divided by high walls, but so conjoined as to form almost a regular square. The streets are long and straight, paved with flagstones, and adorned with triumphal arches. The houses in general have only one floor, built of earth or brick, some of them fantastically coloured, and covered with tiles. The better class of people are carried about in chairs, but the common sort walk barefooted and bareheaded. At the end of every street is a barrier, which is shut every evening, as well as the gates of the city. The Europeans and Americans occupy a range of buildings termed the factories, fronting a spacious quay along the bank of the harbour, without the city, which no foreigner is permitted to enter without the special permission of the viceroy, which is seldom or never obtained. The foreign trade of Canton resolves itself into a monopoly more peculiar and oppressive than any where else exists; it is vested in twelve persons, each paying a large premium for the privilege of trading, who are collectively amenable, as well to foreigners as to the government, for any default or mulct imposed upon any one or more of them individually. In addition to the external commerce of Canton, it also appears to be the seat of almost every branch of manufacture, more especially of silks and household goods. From the circumstance of there being no public worship in China, every house has its own collection of idols, the manufacture of which forms one of the most important branches of occupation. The main article of export from Canton is tea. The other principal articles exported to England are raw silk. A few manufactured silks and crapes, fans, ivory chessmen, fancy boxes, and other toys, soy, and ink, constitute the remaining exports to England. The reimbursement by the English for the above productions is made in cotton, wool, opium, and some other articles from Bombay and Bengal, and in woollen cloths, lead, &c. from England. In addition to the trade direct to England, there is also an extensive traffic on English account between the different ports of India and Canton, which consists in a re reciprocal interchange of the productions of the respective countries, and in which porcelain forms a considerable article of export from Canton. The intercourse of America with Canton is maintained on the part of America, with furs from the N. W. coast, sandal-wood, and the edible birds'-nests, collected among the eastern islands, and with dollars. A considerable portion of the tea exported in American ships, being on account and risk of the Chinese merchants, more especially the portion brought to Hamburg, Antwerp, and other European ports, is wholly reimbursed in specie, the imposts of the government on its external commerce being levied on the length and breadth of the shipping entering and leaving the port. In 1823, several thousand houses in Canton were destroyed by fire, but the ground has since been rebuilt upon. The population is estimated at about 1,500,000. In 1847, and again in 1856, the British destroyed the forts, bombarded and took the city, and reduced the government to temporary amity.

CANTON, a town of Massachusetts, on the Boston and Providence railroad. The soil is indifferent, but it has several manufactures; 16 miles S. by W. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 1993.

CANTON, a town of the state of New York, on Grass River. Marble is found, and sulphate of iron is extensively made into copras and alum; 223 miles N. N. W. of Albany. Pop. 800.

CANTON, a town of Ohio, pleasantly seated on the forks of Miniskillen Creek, and surrounded by a fertile country; 124 miles N. E. of Columbus. Pop. 3299.

CANTYRE, or KINTYRE, a peninsula of the W. coast of Scotland, in Argyleshire, 35 m. long and 7 broad; connected on the N. by an isthmus, scarcely a mile broad, to the mountainous district of Knapdale. To the S. the peninsula terminates in a great promontory, surrounded by a group of dangerous rocks, called the Mull of Cantyre, on which is a lighthouse, in the lat. of 55. 17. N. and 5. 41. W. long. It is a mountainous district, with some fertile spots. The chief town is Campbellton. The other towns are Kirkmichael, Ballachintea, Killean, Kilcalmonil, and Skipness.

CANTY, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine; situate in a country which produces great quantities of corn and flax; 26 miles N. W. of Rouen.

CAORLO, a small island in the Gulf of Venice, on the coast of Friuli. It has a town of the same name; 20 miles S. W. of Aquileia. Long. 12. 36. E. lat. 45. 42. N.

CAPA, a river of Russia, which issues from the N. extremity of the Ural mountains, and flows into the Gulf of Karskoï, in the Arctic Ocean; forming the boundary between Europe and Asia, for the space of about 140 miles.

CAPACCIO, a town of Naples, in Principato

Citeriore; 25 miles S. E. of Salerno. Pop. 2500.

CAPE BRETON, an island forming part of the British dominions in America; lying between the N. end of Nova Scotia, from which it is separated by the GULF OF CANSO (which see,) and the S. W. point of Newfoundland, from which it is separated by the principal entrance into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It extends, in a N. by E. direction, from the lat. of 45. 30. to 47. 6. N. and from the long. of 59. 45. to 61. 35. W., forming a barrier between the Atlantic Ocean and the gulf, which it completely landlocks, and forms into a vast inland sea; the passage between the N. E. end and Newfoundland being about 65 miles wide, intercepted, however, by the island of St. Paul, and just within the gulf, by the Magdalen group of isles. Cape Breton is indented from N. to S. by spacious bays, dividing it into two islands joined together by a very narrow isthmus. The coast on all sides is also much indented by bays, making the figure of the land very irregular. Its area, however, amounts to about 35,000 sq. miles. The French first formed a settlement upon this island in 1712, which surrendered to a British force from New England, in 1745, and was confirmed, with all the other French possessions in North America, to England, by the treaty of 1763. Its most distinguishing property is its rich strata of coal of superior quality; with some dreary surface, it also presents some very fertile spots, well wooded, and containing a variety of wild animals, the skins of which form a branch of its traffic. Louisburg, the chief town, is situate on the Atlantic coast, in the lat. of 45. 54. N. and 59. 55. W. long. The chief occupation of the people, not only of Louisburg, but of the whole island, in addition to agriculture, is the cod fishery, which they pursue to some extent, for the West India and other markets. Total population of the island in 1848, 49,600. It was constituted a separate government in 1784, under a lieutenant-governor appointed by the king; but by a stretch of authority on the part of the legislative assembly and council of Nova Scotia, it has reverted as a province to that government, to which it was originally attached.

CAPE GIRARDIEU, a county of the state of Missouri, North America, lying between the St. Francis and Mississippi rivers, just above the junction of the Ohio with the Mississippi, in the lat. of 37. N. It is 40 miles in length from N. to S., and about 20 in mean breadth. Pop. 9359. There is a town of the same name on the W. bank of the Mississippi; but Jackson, further N. in the interior, 80 miles S. S. E. of St. Louis, and about 600 N. N. W. of New Orleans, is the chief town.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, the South Western extremity of Africa, discovered by the Portuguese navigator, Bartholomew Diaz, in 1493, who gave it the name of Cabo Tormentoso, from the boisterous weather which he met with near it; but Emanuel, king of Portugal, on the return of Diaz, changed its name to that of Cape of Good Hope, from the hope he entertained of finding a passage beyond it to India; and in this he was not deceived, for Vasco de Gama, having doubled this cape on the 20th November, 1497, proceeded to India, and landed at Calicut, on the 22nd of May, 1498. On each side of the Cape of Good Hope is a bay, frequented alternately as the winds prevail; that on the east side, in the Southern Ocean, is called False Bay, which affords tolerable shelter during the prevalence of south and south-east winds. They are, however, both destitute of convenient harbours. There are two other bays north of Table Bay; Saldanha, in the lat. of 33. 7. S., and St. Helens, in 32. 40., both of which have more convenient harbours than either of the other two; but, being deficient in fresh water, they are not much frequented. On the shore of Table Bay, in the lat. of 33. 56. S. and 18. 28. E. long., is the chief town of the colony, called Cape Town.

CAPE TOWN, the capital of the Cape colony. It stands on the S. side of Table Bay, in lat. 33. 56. S. long. 18. 28. E. It is surrounded by black and dreary mountains. To the south-east of the town are some vineyards, which yield the famous wine called Constantia. The store-houses built by the Dutch East India Company are situate next the water, and the private buildings lie beyond them, on a gentle ascent toward the mountains. The castle, or principal fort, which commands the road, is on the east side; and another strong fort, called Amsterdam fort, is on the west side. The streets are broad and regular; and the houses, in general, are built of stone, and white-washed. There are barracks for 2000 men, built on one side of a spacious plain, which serves for a parade. There are two other large squares, in one of which the market is held, and the other serves to assemble the numerous waggons and vehicles bringing in the produce from the country. There is another large building erected by the Dutch for a marine hospital, and a house formerly the dwelling of the government slaves; the government house, a town hall, and a Calvinist and Lutheran church, constitute the remainder of the public buildings. The Table Mountain, so called from the flatness of its main summit, rises from immediately behind the town, to the height of 3592 feet above the level of the sea, having a collateral peak on the east, 3315 feet in height, and another on the west, 2160 feet. The profitable productions of the country, taken as a whole, are wine, grain, all the European and most of the tropical fruits, vegetables of every description, cattle, and sheep. At the foot of the Table Mountain are considerable plantations of the protea argentea, or silver tree, (a species of the protea peculiar to this spot,) the stone pine, and the white poplar. Avenues of oak adorn the country houses; and this tree grows rapidly throughout the colony, but rarely to any perfection as timber. It is constantly cut down with the rest of the few forest trees of the Cape for fuel. The markets are well supplied with fish from the open sea, and from the numerous inlets of the coast.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE COLONY, a British territory, embracing the whole of the southern portion of the African continent, deriving its name from the foregoing Cape, and forming an important colony.

The Cape of Good Hope was first touched at by the Dutch in 1600, and in 1650 they established a settlement at this place, of which they held undisturbed possession for near 150 years. The cape or promontory, which gives name to the territory, is about 13 leagues W.N.W. of Cape Agulhas, which is the extreme S. point of the African continent; and the territory extends northward to the lat. of about 30. S., and eastward from the shore of the Atlantic Ocean, in 18. to that of the Indian Ocean in 28. of E. long. This extensive territory was taken from the Dutch by the English, in 1795; but restored to Holland at the peace of Amiens, in 1802; retaken in 1806, and ceded to Great Britain by the Congress at Vienna, in 1816; and it now forms part of the British dominions.

The colony is divided into two provinces, the Eastern and Western, over each of which a lieutenant-governor is appointed; the seat of the former is at Graham's Town. The Governor's residence is at Cape Town. The Western province is divided into 8 districts, viz., Cape Town, Cape District, Stellenbosch, Worcester, Clanwilliam, Zwelldendam, Beaufort, and George. The Eastern province contains the 5 districts of Colesberg, Albany, Somerset, Graaf Reinet, and Uitenhage, of which the population, &c., in 1838, was as follows:—

The total area is about 130,000 square m., and the population in 1847 was 167,995.

Several well marked chains and groups of mountains give its characteristic form and structure to this region. At the S.W. extremity is the insulated and remarkable mass of the Table Mountain. From the neighbourhood of Worcester, 60 or 70 miles N.E. of Cape Town, several chains of mountains strike off in different directions, which may be chiefly divided into the western or Tullagh chain, running northward, dividing the colony from the high bleak plains called the Bokkeveld and Ruggerveld Karroos; the Drakenstein or Hottentot-Holland chain; a third running S.E. and E. for more than 200 miles under various names, and cut by a few narrow and deep transverse valleys; and the fourth, the great Zwartberg, running generally parallel with the last. The Great Karroo, which is 70 or 80 miles broad, is bounded on the N. by a great chain of mountains called the Nieuwoeld and Sneeuw Bergen, the last of which are the highest in the colony. The highest summit, the Spitzkop, or Compas Berg, N. of the village of Graaf Reinet, is from 7000 to 10,000 feet above the level of the sea. These mountain chains rising in successive stages from S. to N., appear higher and more imposing when seen from the S. than from the N. The easternmost district of the colony, that of Albany, is for the most part a region of undulating hills. The rivers of the colony are numerous, but none of them have a sufficiently permanent depth to be available for navigation. The principal of them which discharge themselves into the sea on the S. coast, are the Breede, Gauritz, Campoos, Sunday, Baskinans, the Great Fish, and the Keiskamina Rivers. There are several of minor importance, but all are of the character of torrents, being much reduced in the dry season, and impetuous and formidable at the opposite period, when by flowing usually through deep ravines, and in the absence of bridges, they render travelling very precarious and inconvenient. The general character of the country is sterile and uninviting. The environs of Cape Town are picturesque, and some of the S. W. districts have a considerable degree of fertility, but the general characteristics of the scenery are rocky and mountainous, naked plains, &c., no trees, verdure, nor water. The country to the E. of the Fish River, has much more variety and beauty than the colony in general, and improves still more as you proceed eastward toward Natal. The N. parts of the colony, as far as the Orange River, are barren and desolate in the highest degree.

In the eastern part of the colony, the progress of emigration has been much retarded by the aboriginal inhabitants, the Caffers, or Kufirs. The country of the Amakosa Caffers borders on that of the Amatembu, or Tambookies, to the N., and on that of the Amapondu to the N.E. Farther along the coast, around and beyond Port Natal, is the country of the terrible Zooloos, or Amazoolu, a tribe of Caffers, which, after a serious warfare, was erected into the British colony of NATAL, which see.

When the country first became known to Europeans, it was inhabited by a race of savages, called by us Hottentots, but which name, however, is quite foreign to their language. They were filthy in their habits, but altogether in a very low state of civilization, but mild and inoffensive. But of the encroachments of the Dutch settlers upon them, we have ample and shocking accounts; this treatment almost obliterated them and the progress of civilization led the Dutch to the eastward as far as the Sunday River, where they came in contact with a very different race of men, the warlike Amakosa, commonly called by us the Caffers, or Kufirs, (infidels,) with whom they had some fierce and sanguinary conflicts, at first occasioned by the treachery and cruelty of the boers, as the Dutch settlers were called. At the time of the English conquest in 1795, the great Fish River formed the E. limit of the colony, and the frontier was occupied chiefly by boers. The Caffers had crossed the frontier, and settled between this and 1806, and from their cattle-stealing propensities, they were expelled hostilely in 1811. In 1817, the governor, Lord Charles Somerset, entered into a treaty with Gaika, one of the chieftains, for mutual protection from theft or injury, but in 1819, they attacked Graham's Town in a most daring manner, but were repulsed, and the consequence was, a large increase of colonial territory, and the Albany district was formed and colonized, in 1820, from Algoa Bay. A portion of the district was ceded to Gaika, under the name of the neutral ground, and for fifteen years no serious hostilities occurred between the Caffers and their European neighbours. But the resumption of the neutral ground, the Kat River territory, has been one of the great sources of discontent and irritation to the Caffers, so that on 21st and 22nd Dec. 1834, they burst in upon the E. frontier of the colony, ravaging every thing before them, and continued so until January 1835, and the later history of the colony is a series of expeditions formed, treaties made and broken by the expelled races, marauding expeditions, &c., ending in a cruel war, which lasted until they were defeated and humbled in a vigorous campaign under Sir H. Smith, in 1846; in 1851-2 they broke out again; other disturbances have since occurred, and parts of their country have been annexed to the colony. Famine has recently made great havoc amongst them, and reduced their numbers.

In 1819, an attempt was made to establish a settlement at Algoa Bay, but the seasons in succession cutting off all the crops, the settlers were all subjected to the extreme of privation. By due attention to the nature of the climate, and application of the soil to purposes for which it is best adapted, the Cape territory is doubtless susceptible of being rendered subservient to the highest degree of comfort and enjoyment of the settlers.

It is 5 miles long and two broad, with steep shores, accessible only in two places; and was the retreat of the Emperor Tiberius, who here spent the last ten years of his life in luxurious debauchery. Pop. about 3600.

CAPRI, the capital of the island of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a castle. It was once a delightful place, embellished with magnificent works, which were demolished after the death of Tiberius. It is 27 miles S. S. W. of Naples. Long. 14. 10. E. lat. 40. 32. N.

CAPRYCKE, a town of the Netherlands; 18 miles E. of Bruges, on the road to Phillipina. Pop. about 3500.

CAPUA, a strong city of Naples, in Terra di Luvoro, and an archbishop's see, with a citadel. It is two miles from the ancient Capua, and was built out of its ruins. No city in Italy, except Rome, contains a greater number of ancient inscriptions. In 1803 it suffered much by an earthquake, and in 1860 it was besieged and captured by the patriot army of Garibaldi. It stands at the foot of a mountain, on the river Volturno; 20 miles N. of Naples. Pop. 15,000. Long. 13. 56. E. lat. 41. 7. N.

CARACCAS, a province of the republic of Venezuela, extending from 7. 38. to 10. 40. N. lat.; and from 2. 8. E. of the town of Caraccas, to 57. W. Pop. 242,888.

CARACCAS, LEON DE, the chief town of the Venezuelan republic, and of the above province, is situated on an elevated plain, 2900 feet above the level of the sea, at a distance of about 16 miles from its port, in the lat. of 10. 31. N. and 67. of W. long. Notwithstanding its altitude, it is watered by two or three streams, whilst by its elevation it enjoys a comparatively temperate and delightful climate. The town is regularly laid out, and has two or three squares, a cathedral, college, and several churches, but none remarkable for architectural beauty. The population is estimated at 35,000. Its markets are well supplied with almost every luxury as well as necessary of life; and, should the new government continue firm, discreet, and just, Caraccas de Leon will probably rank among the most important towns of South America. See LA GUAYRA.

CARAMAN, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne; 20 miles S. E. of Toulouse. Pop. about 2300.

CARAMANIA, or KARAMANIA, a province of Asiatic Turkey, to the E. of Ntolia. It comprehends the ancient Pamphylia, and a great part of Cilicia, Pisidia, and Cappadocia. It contains several lakes, which abound with fish, and furnish great quantities of salt, and the Kasil Irmak river intersects the eastern part of the province, running N. into the Black Sea. Konieh, in the lat. of 38. 10. N. and 32. 25. of E. long., is the capital. It is more specifically applied to the S. coast of Asia Minor, as the name is unknown to the Turks.

It is situated on the line of the grand canal of Languedoc, and divided into the upper and lower town by the Aude, over which is a stone bridge. In the upper town, called the city, are a strong castle and the cathedral; it is very ill built, and dirty. The lower town is square, regularly built, and kept very neat, by means of an aqueduct which brings the water of the Aude to different fountains. Here are manufactures of all sorts of cloth.

It is 35 miles W. of Narbonne, and 50 S. E. of Toulouse. Pop. about 15,000.

CARCULLA, or CARICUL, a town of Hindostan, in Canara, chiefly inhabited by shopkeepers. In an open temple here is the image of a naked man, 38 feet in height by 19 in thickness, made of one piece of granite. Much rice, ginger, turmeric, and betel-nut is raised in the vicinity. It is seated between two lakes, or tanks, which give source to two rivers; 26 miles N. by E. of Mangalore.

CARDIFF, a borough and seaport of Wales, capital of Glamorganshire with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on the Taafe, over which there is a handsome bridge of five arches. Its castle was an elegant Gothic structure, but has undergone a motley repair. The town was formerly encompassed by a wall, and vestiges of its four gates yet remain. The constable of the castle is the chief magistrate, who is called mayor; and here the assizes for the county are held. Near the town are some iron works, and it has railways to Gloucester, Swansea, and Merthyr Tydvil. In the castle died Robert Duke of Normandy, eldest son of William the Conqueror, after having been blinded and confined 28 years, by his brother Henry I. Cardiff is 40 miles W. of Bristol, 47 E. of Swansea, and 160 W. of London. Long. 3. 12. W. lat. 51. 28. N. It sends, with its tributaries, one member to parliament.

CARDIGAN, a maritime county of South Wales, extending for about 50 miles along the shore of St. George's Channel, from the river Tievvy, which divides it from Pembroke and Caermarthen shires on the S., to the Dovey, which divides it from Merionethshire, N.; being about 30 miles in mean breadth, bounded on the E. by the counties of Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock. The Rheidol, and one or two other rivers, intersect the country from E. to W. Parts of this county are very fertile, both in tillage and pasture, which enables the inhabitants to produce a considerable surplus of grain, and small black cattle, with which, and some few sheep and wool, they obtain a tolerable supply of manufactured and colonial productions. The principal towns besides Cardigan are Aberystwith and Llanbeder. It sends one member to parliament.

CARDIGAN, the chief town of the preceding county, is situated at the mouth of the Tievvy over which is a handsome bridge of seven arches, at the S. W. extremity of the county. It had formerly a strong and an extensive castle, of which but little now remains. It was from hence that the first descent upon Ireland was made by the English. The church is a spacious edifice; the county gaol and hall have been rebuilt within the present century. It is a corporate town, governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, &c., and unites with Adpar, Aberystwith, and Llanbeder in returning one member to parliament. It is 25 miles E. N. E. of St. David's Head, 132 miles W. of Gloucester, and about the same distance due E. of Waterford in Ireland. Its commerce by sea is confined to the coast.

CARDIOAN BAY is formed by St. David's Head, the western point of Pembrokeshire S., in the lat. of 51. 44. N. and 5. 17. of W. long., and Bardsley Island, off the S. W. point of Caernarvonshire N., in the lat. of 52. 44. and 4. 39. of W. long.; the main coast of Caernarvonshire being in the long. of about 4.; it gives a stretch of about 40 miles from W. to E., and 50 from S. to N. within the bay.

CARDONA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a castle. Near it is a mountain of solid rock salt, of which are made vases, snuff-boxes, and trinkets; and there are vineyards that produce excellent wine. It is seated on the Cardenero; 55 miles N. W. of Barcelona. Pop. about 3000.

N. and 12. 30. to 14. 50. of E. long., comprising an area of about 3500 English square miles; the W. end borders on the Tyrol, and it is bounded on the N. by the bishopric of Salzburg and Upper Styria, E. by Lower Styria, and S. by Upper Carniola and the Venetian territory. The river Drave, which rises in the Tyrol and falls into the Danube at Belgrade, intersects Carinthia in its whole extent from W. to E., receiving several tributary streams, both from the N. and S.; there are also several lakes. It is a mountainous and woody district, the mountains yielding abundance of iron, lead, and copper, as well as quicksilver, bismuth, and zinc, and also the purest marbles, and a variety of gems; whilst the forests abound with the finest timber, the valleys afford some excellent pasturage, as well as fertile lands for tillage. It is divided, for local jurisdiction, into two parts, Upper, West; and Lower, East. The principal towns in the upper part are Gmund and Villach, and in the lower, Clagenfurt, (which is the capital of the duchy,) Wolfsberg, Wolfenmarck, Pleyburg, &c. The inhabitants, who speak chiefly the Slavonian language, are of the Romish church.

CARISBROOK, a village contiguous to Newport, in the Isle of Wight, remarkable for its castle and church, which are both very ancient. The church had once a convent of monks annexed, part of which is now a farm house, still retaining the name of the priory. The castle stands on an eminence, and was the prison of Charles I. in 1647, before he was delivered to the parliament forces. It is now nominally the seat of the governor of the Isle of Wight.

CARLINGFORD, a populous parish and town in the county of Louth, Ireland. The parish comprises a promontory between Dundalk and Carlingford Bays. The town is situate on the S. shore of the bay of Carlingford, and is noted for its oyster fishery; it is a corporate town, and returned two members to the Irish parliament. It is 8 miles S. of Newry, and 52 N. of Dublin.

CARLISLE, a city, bishop's see, and capital of the county of Cumberland, England, is situate at the junction of three rivers, Caldew, Petterill, and Eden, about six miles above the entrance of the United streams into Solway Frith, and 13 miles from the S.W. frontier of Scotland. Carlisle has held a distinguished rank among the cities of England in every period of British history, and is supposed to have been first founded by Luil, a native Briton, long before the irruption of the Romans into England. The contiguity of Carlisle to Scotland, during the loss social habits and distinctiveness of interest of the people of that country, frequently exposed it to their depredations; to avoid which, the Romans, on their possessing themselves of this part of England, erected a wall from Solway Frith to the German Ocean, which included Carlisle on one side, and Newcastle on the other, within its southern limits. After the departure of the Romans from England, Carlisle was surrounded with a wall, by Egfrid, king of Northumberland; and after the Norman conquest, it was further protected by a citadel and castle, built by William Rufus, having three gates, called the English, Irish, and Scottish, with reference to their bearing on the side of each respective country. These defences, however, did not prevent it from falling into the possession of the Scots, who held it alternately with the English, from the period of William Rufus to that of Henry VII. It was constituted a bishop's see by Henry I., destroyed by fire by the Scots in the reign of Henry III., and experienced the same disaster twice in the following reign. In 1568, the castle was made the prison-house of the unfortunate Mary of Scotland; in 1645 it surrendered through famine to the parliamentary forces, and in 1745 fell into the possession of the partisans of the Pretender, but was immediately after retaken by the Duke of Cumberland, who demolished the gates and part of the wall; and it has since that period enjoyed an uninterrupted tranquillity. Since the commencement of the present century it has undergone great improvements; on the site of the citadel two commodious court-houses have been erected, the county gaol rebuilt, a handsome stone bridge built over the Eden, with other improvements, which have contributed to render it one of the most agreeable and interesting cities of England. The castle is still kept in repair, and serves, with other purposes, for a magazine, and an armory of about 10,000 stand of arms. The cathedral is a stately and venerable edifice, partly of Saxon and partly of Gothic architecture; there are two other churches, as well as several sectarian meeting-houses. The markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays, are well supplied with every thing necessary for subsistence and comfort. The cotton manufacture has long been established here upon an extended scale, whilst the architectural and external appearances of the city indicate great prosperity. The conveyance of its commodities of commerce has been facilitated by a canal to the Solway Frith; it likewise participates in the advantages of the railways which now communicate with all parts of the kingdom; and it is a point of union and interchange for the mails to all parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland. Its corporation consists of a mayor, twelve aldermen, &c. It returns two members to parliament, and is 101 miles S.E. of Glasgow, 91 S. by W. of Edinburgh, and 303 N.N.W. of London.

CARLOS, Sr. a city in the republic of Venezuela, situate on one of the branches of the Apure river; about 85 miles S.W. of Valencia. The inhabitants are principally descendants of settlers from the Canary Isles; who are more industrious and social than those from Spain. Under the newly formed government of Venezuela, St. Carlos promises to become a flourishing place, being situated in a very fertile country, affording great inducements to agricultural enterprise. Pop. in 1826, about 10,000; but since that period it has greatly increased.

CARLOS DE MONTEREY, SAN, once the chief town of New California, on the W. coast of N. America, in the lat. of 36. 36. N. and 121. 34. of W. long. It is beautifully situated within a small bay of the same name, first discovered by Cabrillo, in 1542. It was afterwards visited by the Count de Monterey, from whom it received its present name. The forests and mountains preclude much intercourse with the interior; nor does it appear that there is any considerable river. It has since ceded the palm of superiority to San Francisco.

CARLOW, an interior county in the S.E. part of Ireland; it is bounded on the W. by the Barrow river, which divides it from the county of Kilkenny, and is intersected on the E. by the Slaney river, which falls into Wexford Haven; it is one of the smallest counties of Ireland, containing 219,863 acres, in general exceedingly fertile; its butter is highly esteemed. There is a canal to Dublin, and the rivers Barry and Slaney are navigable. It returns two members to Parliament. The only towns besides Carlow, the capital, are Tullow and Inacketstown.

CARLOW, the chief town of the preceding county, is situated on the E. bank of the Barrow river, at the N. W. extremity of the county, bordering on Queen's County. The ruins of a castle overhanging the river, the ruins of a very fine abbey, a convent, and Roman Catholic college, are the principal objects of interest in the town. It has also a respectable market house, county court-house, gaol, and cavalry barracks, and manufactures some woollen cloths; it returns one member to parliament. It is 45 m. S. W. of Dublin, on the great S. and W. railway.

CARLOWITZ, a town of Slavonia, where a peace was concluded between the Turks and Germans in 1669. It is seated on the S. bank of the Danube, just below Peterwarden; 38 miles N. W. of Belgrade. Pop. 5800.

Upper Town, or citadel, on a hill, and the Lower Town at the foot of it. It has a handsome Roman Catholic church, and a splendid episcopal palace; a college, royal mint, observatory, libraries, arsenal, &c. There is a bridge over the Maros. The Jews here enjoy the full rights of citizenship, under the protection of the bishop. Pop. 11,300.

CARLSRONA, a city and seaport of Sweden, in Blekingen. It was founded in 1680 by Charles XI, who removed the fleet from Stockholm to this place, on account of its central situation, and the superiority of its harbour, the entrance of which is defended by two strong forts. The greatest part of the town is built of wood, and stands upon a small rocky island, which rises gently in a bay of the Baltic. The suburbs extend over another small rock, and along the mole, close to the basin where the fleet is moored; and are fortified towards the land by a stone wall. Here are excellent docks for the repairing and building of ships, foundries for cannon, and manufactures of gunpowder, ropes, sails, &c. The admiralty board was transferred back to Stockholm in 1770. The inhabitants are estimated at 11,000. It is 220 m. S.S.W. of Stockholm. Long. 15. 33. E. lat. 56. 7. N.

The gate toward Seville is one of the most extraordinary pieces of antiquity in all Spain; and its castle, now in ruins, was formerly of immense extent. It is seated on a high hill; 24 miles E.N.E. of Seville. Pop. 20,200.

CARNAC, a village of France, department Morbihan; 20 miles S.E. of L'Orient. Here are some very extensive and remarkable remains, almost similar to those at Stonehenge; they consist of 11 ranges of vast granite stones, of great thickness, and varying from 9 to 15 feet in height; in some cases, two of them stood upright, supporting another placed on them. It is said, there are more than 4000 of them. They are as difficult a problem for the French antiquaries to solve, as Stonehenge is for the English. An immense amount of ancient golden ornaments and trinkets was found here some years since.

CARNATIC, a territory of Hindostan, extending along the E. coast from Cape Comorin, the southern extremity of Asia, in the lat. of 8. 4. N. to near the mouth of the Kistna, in the lat. of 16. N., varying in breadth from 50 to 100 miles; bounded on the W. by the Mysore, and on the E. for about two deg of lat., by the Gulf of Manara and Palks Strait, which divides it from the N. end of the island of Ceylon, the remainder of its eastern boundary being better known by the name of the coast of Coroman del. The principal towns on the coast, beginning from the S., are Negapatam, Pondicherry, Madras, Pulicat, and Gangapatam, and those in the interior, beginning also from the S., are Tinnevely, Madura, Trichinopoly, Tanjore, Arcot, Nellore, and Ongole. Numerous streams and rivers from the westward intersect this territory, the principal of which are the Cauvery, Cuddalore, Paliare, and Pennar. The soil is various in quality, being in some places exceedingly fertile, and in others sandy and barren, and the inhabitants occasionally exposed to great privation for want of water. Since 1801, it has been uninterruptedly possessed by the British, and included in the presidency of MADRAS, which see.

CARNAWL, or KURNOWL, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Delhi. Here, in 1739, Kouli Khan gained a victory over the army of the Great Mogul; and in 1761, the Seiks, under Abdalla, defeated the Mahrattas. It is seated at the junction of the Hissar canal with the Jumna. It is 80 miles N.W. of Delhi.

CARNESVILLE. See FRANKFORT.

CAR NICOBAR, an island in the Bay of Bengal; it is the most northern of the Nicobar Islands; about 40 miles in circumference, and covered with timber. The climate is very insalubrious. Lat. 9. 10. N. long. 93. 0. E.

CARNIOLA, Duchy of, a territory of the Austrian empire, lying between the lat. of 45. 30. and 46. 30. N. and 13. 25. and 15. 40. of E. long., comprising an area of about 4600 square miles. It is bounded on the N. by Lower Carinthia, the S.W. point jutting upon the Gulf of Trieste. It is intersected from the N.W. to the S.E. by the Save river, which receives several tributary streams, both from the N. and S. In feature, character, and productions, it is very similar to CARINTHIA (which see), somewhat more diversified and fertile, and, having the advantage of a nearer proximity to the sea, the inhabitants are somewhat more active and enterprising. It is divided into four parts, viz., Upper, N.; Inner, S.W.; Middle and Lower, S.E. Laybach, in the middle district, is the chief town. For commercial purposes it has the advantage of the port of Fiume, as well as Trieste.

CAROLATH, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, seated on the Oder, 14 miles N.W. of Glogau.

CAROLINA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, the chief of a new colony of the same name, in the Sierra Morena. It stands on a hill, towering above the whole settlement; 20 m. N.E. of Anduxar. In 1768, the colonization of these once wild hills was planned, and a number of Germans and Swiss were invited to settle, under promise of pecuniary assistance and certain immunities; all these pledges were broken, and the colonists were reduced to the greatest distress. Population is now 2800.

CAROLINA, NORTH, one of the United States of North America, lying between the lat. of 33. 50. and 36. 30. N. It is bounded on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the W. by a chain of the Allegany Mountains, running in a N.E. direction; a conventional line of 36. 30. of N. lat. from the 76th to the 82nd of W. long. divides it from Virginia, and another conventional line, in a N.W. direction, from the long. of 78. 40. to 79. 50. and from thence due W. under the line of 35. of N. lat. to the long. of 84. W. divides it from South Carolina; its area, according to American computation, comprises 48,000 square miles. Although it has upwards of 200 miles of sea coast, besides being indented by several very large inlets, it does not afford one good harbour; indeed, a ledge of sand-banks flanks the coast its whole extent, rendering the navigation very dangerous in stormy weather, and almost inaccessible at all times; it consequently partakes more of the character of an interior than a maritime state. Some little external intercourse, however, is maintained through Wilmington, situate on Cape Fear river, which intersects the centre of the state from N. to S., falling into the sea in the lat. of 34. N.; and the productions of the western part of the state are facilitated in their conveyance to market, by the Yadkin and Catawba rivers, which intersect that part between the long. of 80. and 82. W., running S. into South Carolina. The Neuse, Tar, Roanoke, and Chowan, are other rivers which intersect the N.E. part of the state, falling into the great inlets of Pamlico and Albemarle Sounds, which it is proposed to connect with Chesapeake Bay by means of a canal through the Dismal Swamp. The coast for about 70 miles from the shore is level and swampy, but westward the ground gradually rises into a mountainous country, being in parts beautifully diversified. The gold mines of this state, which have excited much interest, are on the Yadkin river, and the gold is found in the usual manner, by washing. The first mine was found in 1814, and produces annually between 200,000 and 250,000 dollars. The swamps are favourable to the growth of rice, and the pitch-pine flourishes in them in the utmost luxuriance, yielding an unbounded supply of timber, tar, and turpentine, whilst the upper country is favourable to the growth of every kind of grain, as well as to cotton and tobacco, and yields a variety of vegetables and plants, some of them of a medicinal nature, peculiar to itself; and as population increases, North Carolina will doubtless prove a country of great capability and resources. The internal improvements in this state are not so numerous and extensive as in some other states. The Wilmington and Raleigh railroad, 161½ miles long, connects with the Portsmouth and Roanoke railway: it was finished in 1840. The Raleigh and Gaston railway, 85 miles long, connects with the Petersburg, Greenville, and Roanoke railways. North West canal, Dismal Swamp canal, the Weldon and Clubfoot and Harrow canals, are the principal. In 1820, it was divided into 62 counties, and the population which, in 1790, was only 393,751, is now 753,419, of whom 245,817 are slaves. Raleigh, nearly in the centre of the state, is the seat of the legislative assembly. Wilmington, Fayetteville, and Newburn, are the other principal towns.

CAROLINA, SOUTH, another of the United States of North America, being divided from North Carolina by a conventional line, as already described, extending S.S.W. along the Atlantic coast, from the lat. of 33. 50. to the Savannah river, in the lat. of 32. 2. N. The Savannah river, in a N.N.W. direction, until it cuts the S.W. point of North Carolina, separates it from the state of Georgia, its area being 25,000 square miles. The general features, character of the soil, and productions of this state, are very similar to those of North Carolina; but having the advantage of several fine navigable rivers, and some tolerably good harbours, to facilitate an external commerce, whilst North Carolina ranks among the least, South Carolina ranks among the most important states of the union. The Yadkin river rising in North Carolina, which when it enters this state is called the Great Pee Dee, and after being joined by several tributary streams, falls into Georgetown Bay; and the Cahawba, which also rises in North Carolina, and in this state is first called the Wateree, and afterwards the Santee, is united by a canal to Cooper River, which falls into Charleston harbour. Numerous streams, intersecting all the N.W. part, unite with the Santee about the centre of the state, and between the Santee and the Savannah are the Edisto, Bigslake, and Coosahatchie Rivers; so that there is hardly five miles in the state without the advantage of water communication. Between the mouths of the Santee and Savannah Rivers, the coast is flanked by a chain of islands, on which is produced the valuable cotton called Sea Island. The swamps produce vast quantities of the finest rice, the seed of which was first introduced from Madagascar, at the close of the seventeenth century; and, previous to 1790, indigo was cultivated to a great extent, and with proportionate advantage; but since that period, the culture of the cotton plant in the upland country, has superseded every other pursuit, and has been carried to an extent without any precedent. South Carolina is divided into twenty-nine districts, and the population, which in 1790 was 240,073, is now 594,398, including 327,038 slaves. Gold is found in considerable quantities in this state. The principal internal improvements of the state are the Santee, the Winyaw, and the Saluda canals, and some others of minor importance. The South Carolina railroad from Charleston to Hamburg, 135½ miles in length, will, when the chain is completed, extend to Cincinnati, a length of 718 miles. Another portion of it lies within the state between Branchville and Columbia, 66 miles. Columbia, nearly in the centre of the state, 507 m. S.W. by S. of Washington, is the seat of its legislative assembly. Charleston is, however, the chief and most important town of the state; the other principal towns are Beaufort and Georgetown.

CAROLINE, a county of the state of Maryland, bounded on the E. by Kent county, state of Delaware, and on the W. by the Tuckapo and Choptank rivers, which fall into Chesapeake Bay. Pop. 7806, of whom 752 are slaves. Denton, the chief town, is 65 m. E. by S. of Annapolis.

CAROLINE, an interior county in the E. part of Virginia, bounded on the N. E. by the Rappahannock river, and S. W. by the North Anna river. Its area is about 20 miles each way, or 400 square miles, and is tolerably fertile. Pop. 17,813, of whom 9314 are slaves. Bowling Green, 44 miles N.N.E. of Richmond, is the chief town.

CAROLINE is also the name of a town in Tomkins county, state of New York, near the S. end of Cayuga Lake; 176 miles W. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 2093.

CAROLINE ISLANDS, a range of islands on the North Pacific Ocean, discovered in 1686 by the Spaniards, in the reign of Charles II. They lie to the E. of the Philippines, between 138. and 135. E. long. and 8. and 11. N. lat. They are about 30 in number, and populous; the natives resembling those of the Philippines. The most considerable island is Hogueu, about 90 miles long, and 40 broad: the next is Yap, at the W. extremity of this chain, but not above a third part of that size. They have been little visited by recent navigators.

CAROON. See CAIROON.

CAROON BELEID, extensive ruins in central Egypt—perhaps of the famous labyrinth of Egypt. The ruins of Kasr Caroön, near the lake of Caroön, about 2 miles distant, are very interesting.

CAROONT, a river in South America, a tributary of the Oroonoco. It has a very rapid current, which renders it quite unnavigable.

CAROOB. See CARUBA.

CARORA, a city of the republic of Venezuela, situated about 15 miles E. from the lake of Maracaibo. It is intersected by a stream called the Morera, that runs E. into the Caribbean Sea. The inhabitants, about 10,000 in number, subsist principally by means of cattle and mules, which they drive to the coast for transhipment to the West India Islands. The surrounding country produces a variety of odoriferous balsams and aromatics, which, under social arrangements, may be made to constitute an extensive and reciprocal external commerce.

CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, a grand chain which divides Hungary and Transylvania from Poland on the N. and N.E., and from Moravia on the N.W., extending about 500 miles.

CARPENDOLO, a town of the Bresciano, on the Chièse; 15 miles S.S.E. of Brescia. Pop. about 4000.

CARPENTARIA, GULF OF, a large bay on the N. coast of New Holland, discovered in 1613 by a Dutch captain, named Carpenter. That part of the country which borders on the E. side of the bay is also called Carpentaria. It has about 1200 miles of coast, which is but little known. It is frequented by Chinese junks, to fish for the biche-de-la-mer, or sea slug, which superabound at the entrance of this bay.

CARPENTRAS, a town of France, in the department of Vaucluse. It was formerly the capital of Venaissin, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Anson, at the foot of a mountain; 14 miles N.E. of Avignon. Pop. 9224.

CARPI, a town of Italy, in the Modenese, with a fortified castle, and a good trade. It stands on a canal to the Secchia, 8 miles N. of Modena.

CARPI, a town of Italy, in the Veronese, where a victory was gained by the Austrians over the French, in 1701. It is seated on the Adige; 24 miles S.E. of Verona.

CARRARA. See CARARA.

CARRIBEE ISLANDS. See CARIBEE ISLANDS.

CARRICK ON SHANNON, a town of Ireland, capital of the county of Leitrim. It is a small place, seated on the Shannon; 85 miles W.N.W. of Dublin.

CARRICK ON SUIR, a town of Ireland, in Tipperary, once famous for its woollen cloth, called ratteen. It is seated on the Suir; 22 miles S.E. of Cishel, and 10 W.N.W. of Waterford. It is now a poor miserable place.

CARRICKFENGUS, a borough and seaport of Ireland, chief town of the county of Antrim, with a castle. It is seated on a bay of its name in the Irish channel; 95 miles N. by E. of Dublin, and 8 from Belfast. It is pretty well built, and shows no evidence of the squalid poverty too often met with in other parts of Ireland. Tanning is carried on to a considerable extent, and it has distilleries, and some manufactures. The Scotch descent of the people is apparent in many points; they are industrious, frugal, and honest. It sends one member to parliament. Pop. 8860.

CARRICKMACROSS, a town of Ireland, in the county of Monaghan; 19 miles E.S.E. of Monaghan, and 44 N. by W. of Dublin. Pop. 2979.

CARRION DE LOS GONDES, a town of Spain, in Leon, on the frontiers of Old Castile. It is seated on the river Carrion; 18 miles N. of Placentia, and 40 W. of Burgos.

CARROLL, a newly formed county, at the western extremity of Tennessee, bordering on Wood Lake, contiguous to the Mississippi river. Pop. in 1840, 12,362.

CARROLL, a county in the north part of the state of Maryland. It is fertile and wealthy. Westminster is the capital. Pop. in 1840, 17,241.

CARROLL, a county in the N.W. part of Georgia, drained by the Tallapoosa river, producing some gold. Pop. in 1840, 5252.

CARROLL, a county in Mississippi, between the Zazoo and Big Black rivers. Carrollton is the capital. Pop. 10,481.

CARROLL, a fertile county of Kentucky, in the N. part of the state. Carrollton is the capital. Pop. in 1840, 3966.

CARROLL, a county of Ohio, in the E. part of the state. The soil is very fertile. Capital, Carrollton. Pop. 18,108.

CARROLL, a county of Indiana, traversed by the Wabash river, and the Wabash and Erie canal. Pop. in 1840, 7819.

CARRON, a river of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, which rises on the S. side of the Campsie hills, and flows into the Frith of Forth, below Falkirk. Two miles from its source it forms a fine cascade, called the fall of Auchinlilly; and near its mouth commences the Great Canal from the Forth to the Clyde.

CARRON, a village of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, on the river Carron; 2 miles from Falkirk; celebrated for the greatest iron-works in Europe. These works employ about 3000 men; and on an average, use weekly 1200 tons of coal, 400 tons of ironstone, and 100 tons of limestone. All sorts of iron goods are made here, from the most minute article to the largest cannon; and the same piece of ordnance called a carronade, hence received its name. The trade in coke and lime is also considerable. These works were erected in 1761, and are carried on by a chartered company.

CARROUGE, a newly erected town, duchy of Savoy; 2 miles S. E. from Geneva.

CARSTAIRS, an improving village of Lanarkshire, Scotland, at the junction of the Glasgow and Edinburgh branches of the Caledonian Railway; 3 miles E. of Lanark.

CART, two rivers in Scotland, in Renfrewshire, distinguished by the appellation of Black and White. The Black Cart issues from the lake Lochwinnoch; the White Cart descends from the N. E. angle of the county; and they both flow into the Gryfe, a few m. before its confluence with the Clyde.

CARTAGO, a city and capital of Costa Rica in Guatimala, and a bishop's see. It stands on a river of the same name, 50 miles from its mouth, in the Pacific Ocean, and about the same from Lake Nicaragua. Long. 84. 1. W. lat. 10. 15. N.

CARTAGO, a town in the republic of New Granada, in Colombia, province of Popayan, about 100 miles W. of St. Fe de Bogota. Pop. about 5000.

CARTAMA, a town of Spain, in Granada, at the foot of a mountain, near the river Guadalquivir; 8 miles N. W. of Malaga.

CARTER, a frontier county at the N. E. extremity of Tennessee, bounded on the E. by the iron, yellow, and stone mountains, which divide it from North Carolina. It is intersected by the Watonga, a branch of the Tennessee river. It contains about 170 square miles, and a population of 5372. Elizabeth Town, on the W. side of the county, 284 miles E. by N. of Murfreesborough, is the chief town.

CARTERET, a county of North Carolina, bordering on the Atlantic Ocean, S. of Pamlico Sound. It is a swampy and dreary district. Pop. 6591, of whom 1860 were slaves.

Beaufort, 164 miles S. E. by E. of Raleigh, is the chief town.

CARTERET ISLAND, an island in the Pacific Ocean, seen by Captain Carteret in 1767. It is six leagues long, from E. to W. Long. 159. 14. E. lat. 8. 26. S.

CARTERSVILLE, a town of Virginia, in Powhatan county, seated on James River: 40 miles W. N. W. of Richmond.

CARTIAGE, CAPE, a promontory on the E. coast of the kingdom of Tunis, near which stood the famous city of Carthage, razed by the Romans; and some of the ruins are to be seen on the coast. It is 10 miles N. E. of Tunis. Long. 10. 20. E. lat. 36. 50. N.

CARTIAGE, a town of New York, on the N. E. side of the Black river. The Long Falls here furnish great water power; 152 miles N. W. of Albany.

CARTIAGE, a pleasant village, in Ohio; 8 miles N. of Cincinnati, and 116 S. W. of Columbus. From its pleasant situation, and being in the centre of the county, it is the place chosen for large public meetings. An annual agricultural fair is held here.

CARTHAGENA, a seaport of Spain, in Murcia, built by Asdrubal, a Carthaginian general, and named after the city of Carthage. It is the see of a bishop, and a great mart for merchandize. It has the best harbour in Spain; also the most considerable docks and magazines. The principal crops of barilla are produced in its vicinity; and a fine red earth, called almagra, used in polishing mirrors, and preparing tobacco for snuff. Carthage was taken by Sir John Leake in 1706, but the Duke of Brunswick retook it. It is seated on a gulf of the same name; 27 miles S. of Murcia. It was taken by the Romans under Scipio, with whom it continued to flourish. It was nearly destroyed by the Goths; and S. Isidore, who was born here in 595, speaks of it as then desolate. After that, it again rose to eminence, from the excellence of its natural harbour, and strong position; but it is now much decayed; it contains scarcely 30,000 inhabitants, instead of the 60,000 of 1786, when Charles III. endeavoured to force a naval establishment. Here were fitted out the fleets which were destroyed at St. Vincent and Trafalgar. The port of Carthage is now almost deserted; the hospitals, arsenals, rope-walks, foundries, and dock-yards are things that were; there is no navy, and commerce prefers Alicante. The tunny fishery, and the export of barilla, and mining, are the chief resources of the inhabitants. A glass factory has recently been established by an Englishman. During the peninsular war, it was garrisoned by the English, and consequently did not share the fate of almost every other town at the hands of the French. Long. 1. 0. W. lat. 37. 35. N. Pop. 30,000.

CARTHAGENA, a city of South America, in the republic of New Granada, of which it is the capital. It is situated on an island off the shore of the Caribbean Sea, in the lat. of 10.

25. N. and 75. 27. of W. long.; about 70 m. S.S.W. of the mouth of the Magdalena, and 180 N.N.E. of the Gulf of Darien. It has a commodious and safe harbour, and for nearly three centuries has ranked among the most considerable cities of America. It was the port first resorted to by galleons from Spain, during the monopoly of the commerce of America with that country. It has experienced various alternations of fortune, having been several times captured, and was an object of severe contention between the royalist and republican forces, from 1815 down to the period of the final extinction of Spanish domination in America in 1823. The island is united to the main land by two wooden bridges. The houses are chiefly built of stone, and it has several churches and convents, some of which are elegant edifices. Its harbour will doubtless contribute towards its retaining its high rank among the cities and seaports of the new republic. Pop. about 24,000.

CARTMEL, a town of Lancashire, with a market on Monday. It has a spacious old church, with a curious tower, being a square within a square, the upper part set diagonally within the lower. It is seated among the hills called Cartmell Fells, not far from the sea; 14 miles N. by W. of Lancaster, and 254 N.N.W. of London.

CARRA, or CANOOR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a neat fort, in which is a large temple. Much sugarcane is raised in the vicinity. It is seated on the Amarawati; 8 miles above its confluence with the Cavery, and 37 north-east of Duraporam.

CARWAR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Canara, and a British settlement. It is seated near the mouth of the Aliga; 50 miles S. S. E. of Goa. Long. 74. 14. E. lat. 14. 52. N.

CARYSFORT, a town of Ireland, county of Wicklow; there is a free-school.

CASAC, or CAZAC, a country in the dominions of Persia, on the frontiers of Armenia, governed by princes of its own, nominally subject to Persia. The inhabitants are descended from the Cossacs, and represented as a rude and barbarous people. Casac, or Cazac Lora, is the name of the capital.

CASAORANDE, a town of New Mexico, in the N. part of New Navarre. Here is an immense edifice, supposed to have been built by the ancient Mexicans for a fortress; it consists of three floors, with a terrace above them; and the entrance is at the second floor; so that a scaling-ladder was necessary. Long. 113. 23 W. lat. 33. 49. N.

CASALE, a town of N. Italy, kingdom of Sardinia, lately the capital of Lower Montferrat, and a bishop's see. Its castle, citadel, and all its fortifications, have been demolished. It is seated on the river Po; 37 miles N. E. of Turin. Pop. about 16,000.

CASALE MAGGIORE, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Milan, on the river Po; 20 miles E. S. E. of Cremona. Pop. about 4900.

CASALE NUOVA, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore. An earthquake happened here in 1773, by which upwards of 4000 inhabitants lost their lives. It stands near the sea; 11 miles N. by W. of Oppido. Pop. 4000.

CASANDRINO, a city of Naples; 4 miles from Naples. Pop. 3000.

CASBIN, or CASWIN, a town of Persia, in Irac Ajemi, where several of the kings of Persia have resided. Nadir Shah, built a palace here, enclosed by a wall a mile and a half in circumference; and the town is surrounded by another, 4 miles in circuit. It carries on a great trade, and is seated near the S. shore of the Caspian Sea, in a sandy plain; 280 miles N. W. of Ispahan. Long. 50. 10. E. lat. 36. 8. N. Pop. estimated at 40,000.

CASCATS, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, at the mouth of the Tajo, on the N. bank, near the rock; 17 miles W. of Lisbon. Pop. 2500.

CASCANTE, a town of Spain, in Navarre, on the Queyles, the ancient Cascentum. Pop. 3000; 6 miles from Tudela there is a mineral spring.

CASCHAU. See CASSOVIA.

CASCO BAY, a bay of the state of Maine, between Cape Elizabeth and Cape Small Point, leading into the harbour of Portland. It is 25 miles wide, and interspersed with small islands. Long. 69. 30. W. lat. 43. 40. N.

CASERTA, a town of Naples in Terra di Lavoro. Here is a magnificent unfinished royal palace, and a grand modern aqueduct, which furnishes a great part of the city of Naples with water. Most of the buildings were greatly damaged by an earthquake in 1803. It is 15 miles N. of Naples. Pop. about 16,000. (?)

CASEY, an interior county of the state of Kentucky. Pop. 4939. Liberty, the chief town, is 68 miles S. of Frankfort.

CASHAN. See KASAN.

CASHIEL, a borough of Ireland, capital of the county of Tipperary, and an archbishop's see. It had formerly a wall; and part of two gates are still remaining. It is generally speaking a poor mean-looking place. The old cathedral is supposed to have been the first stone edifice in Ireland. A synod was held here by Henry I. in 1158, by which the kingdom of Ireland was confirmed to him. The new cathedral is an elegant edifice; it has several other public buildings, and barracks for infantry. It sends one member to parliament; and is seated on the east bank of the Suir; 43 miles N. N. E. of Cork, and 86 S. S. W. of Dublin. Pop. 7000.

CASHOUR, or KASHGAR or LITTLE BOKHARA, a country of Usbec Tartary, which commences on the north and north-east of Cashmere, in Hindostan (from which it is separated by the Himmaleh mountains), and extends to 41. N. lat. Great part of it is a sandy desert the other parts are populous and fertile. The Tartar inhabitants are chiefly employed in feeding cattle. The musk animals are found in this country. See BOKHARA.

CASIGUR, a city of Usbec Tartary, formerly the capital of the country of the same name. It has a good trade with the neighbouring countries, and stands at the foot of the Himmaleh Mountains. It was taken by the Chinese about 80 years since, and is the furthest west place of note in the Chinese dominions. Long. 73. 25. E. lat. 41. 30. N.

CASHMERE, or KASHMIR, a province of Hindostan, subject to the king of Candahar, or sultan of the Afghans; bounded on the W. by the Indus, N. by Mount Himmaleh, and E. and S. by Lahore. It is an elevated valley, 90 miles long and 50 broad, lying between the 34th and 35th degree of N. lat. and 73. to 76. of E. long., surrounded by steep mountains which tower above the regions of snow. The periodical rains, which almost deluge the rest of India, are shut out of Cashmere by the height of the mountains, so that only light showers fall here; but these are sufficiently abundant to feed some hundreds of cascades, which are precipitated into the valley. The soil is the richest that can be conceived, and its productions those of the temperate zone. Numerous streams, from all quarters of the valley, bring their tribute to the Chelum, a large navigable river, running from east to west, falling into the Indus. It contains several small lakes, in some of which are floating islands. But the country is subject to earthquakes; and, to guard against their most terrible effects, the houses are mostly built of wood. Among other curious manufactures of Cashmere is that of shawls, 80,000 of which are annually produced; and the delicate wool of which the finest are made is the produce of a species of goat of this country, or of the adjoining Thibet. Here are bred a species of sheep called Hindoo, which are employed in carrying burdens. The Cashmerians are stout and well made, but their features are often coarse and broad: the women are of a deep brown complexion, gay and lively. They have a language of their own, said to be anterior to that of the Sanscrit; and a religion too, it is thought, different from that of the Hindoos. All Cashmere is holy land, and miraculous fountains abound. In addition to their shawls, in the manufacture of which about 16,000 looms are supposed to be employed, corn, saffron, otto of roses, and some drugs, form the chief articles of commerce. The population in 1832 was estimated at 800,000, but famine, cholera, and war, reduced it to 200,000 in 1836.

CASHMERE, or SERINAGHUR, a city of Hindostan, capital of the province or valley of Cashmere. Here are many fountains, reservoirs, and temples. The streets are narrow and dirty. The houses, many of them two and three stories high, are slightly built of brick and mortar, with a large intermixture of timber; and on the roof is laid a covering of fine earth, which is planted with a variety of flowers. This city is without walls, and seated on both sides of the Chelum, over which are several wooden bridges; 285 miles E. by S. of Cabul. Pop. 40,000. Long. 74. 47. E. lat. 33. 23. N.

CASPE, a town of Spain, in Arragon, where Ferdinand IV. was elected king of Arragon in 1412. It stands at the confluence of the Guadaloupe and Ebro; 58 miles S. E. of Saragossa. Pop. 9100.

CASPIAN SEA, a large inland Sea of Western Asia; bounded on the S. by the Persian province of Mazanderan, in the lat. of 36. 40., and N. by the Russian government of Astracan, in the lat. of 46. 50., thus being about 700 miles in length from S. to N.; its eastern and western boundaries are very irregular, extending from the long. of 46. 30. to 57., whilst the mean breadth does not extend 260 miles. The eastern coast is indented by several bays, the more prominent of which are Calkan, in the lat. of 39., Alexander, in 43., and Merti-voi, or Koutjoug, in 45. N. The Persian province of Korasan extends along the E. coast to the bay of Balkan, and further N. the E. coast is occupied by the Turcomans, Kirgees, and other Tartar tribes; and the W. coast by the governments of Gilhan, Baku, Derbent, and the Caucasus. Numerous rivers flow into this sea from all points, the most important of which are the Oural and the Volga, the former at its N. extremity, and the latter at the N. W. It contains several islands near both the eastern and western coasts; and the depth is very irregular, being in some places unfathomable with a line of 450 fathoms, whilst in other places the navigation is difficult with vessels drawing only 10 feet of water; the water is as salt as that of the ocean, with a bitter taste, which taste is ascribed to the prevalence of the naphtha on the western coast. (See BAKU.) It is 25 feet below the level of the Black Sea. Its waters have no visible outlet; their equilibrium must therefore be maintained either by subterraneous channels, or by evaporation. Salmon, sturgeon, and other fish, abound in all parts of this sea, and seals are extremely numerous. Of birds properly aquatic, it has the grebe, the crested diver, the pelican, the cormorant, and several species of gull; while geese, ducks, storks, herons, crows, &c., frequent the shores. The Russians are the only people who derive much benefit from this great natural basin, although so well calculated to facilitate an extensive and reciprocal intercourse between all its surrounding nations; and, were a communication to be effected with the Black Sea, by means of canals, Europe at large might participate in the advantages of an extended intercourse.

Cass, a county in Georgia, in the N. W. part of the state. Capital, Cassville. Pop. in 1840, 9390. Also a county in Michigan, on the borders of Indiana, with a fertile soil.

CASSANO, a town of Italy in the Milanese, with a castle. Here Prince Eugene, in 1705, was checked in attempting to force the passage of the Adda; and in 1799 the French were defeated by the Austrians. It is seated on the Adda; 15 miles N. E. of Milan.

CASSANO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore; 24 miles N. W. of Rossano, and 50 E. S. E. of Policastro. It is well built, is a bishop's see, and has a cathedral, &c. There are some manufactures of cotton, silk, &c. Pop. 5000.

CASSAY, or MUNNEEPOOR, a country of India beyond the Ganges, between lat. 24. and 26. N., and long. 93. 95. E. Area about 7000 square miles. It consists of a fertile valley surrounded by a wild and mountainous country. Iron is the only metal found; salt is procured from springs by evaporation. The climate is on the whole healthy; but during the winter fogs are very prevalent. Herds of elephants frequent the valley; the hills are covered with fine forest trees, but the want of means of conveyance prevents the timber being made available. Rice is the chief object of cultivation; tobacco, the sugar-cane, indigo, &c. are also grown. There are various manufactures of necessary articles. It is an independent state; the capital is Munneepoor. Pop. 20,000 (?)

CASSEL, a city of Germany, capital of Lower Hesse, and seat of the court and government of the electorate of Hesse. It is divided into the Old Town, Lower New Town, and Upper New Town; the former towns are chiefly built in the ancient style, but the last is very regular and handsome. The inhabitants are estimated at 31,000; and they have manufactures of linen cloth, hats, porcelain, &c. Here is a college, founded by the landgrave in 1709. The castle or palace, the gardens, the arsenal, the foundry, and the cabinet of curiosities, deserve the attention of travellers. It was taken by the French in 1760, and restored at the peace in 1763. It is seated on the Fulda; 40 miles S. E. of Paderborn. Long. 9. 35. E. lat. 51. 19. N.

CASTIGLIONE, a fortified town of Italy, in Mantua, with a castle. It was taken by the Austrians, in 1701; and the French defeated them near it, in 1706, and again in 1796. It is 20 miles N. W. of Mantua. Pop. 5300.

CASTILE, the principal and most opulent of the kingdoms into which Spain was formerly divided. It now forms the two provinces of Old and New Castile; the former having been recovered from the Moors some time before the latter.

CASTILE, OLD, a province of Spain, bounded on the N. by Asturias and Biscay, E. by Navarre and Arragon, S. by New Castile, and W. by Leon, being in extreme length from N. to S. about 240 miles, and 100 in mean breadth. It is subdivided into four inferior provinces, after the name of the four chief towns. The superficies and population of each province is as follows: viz.—

PROVINCES.	AREA Sq. Miles.	POP. IN 1838.
Burgos N.	7,752	541,182
Soria E.	4,118	115,619
Segovia S.	3,502	131,854
Avila S.W.	2,600	137,903
Old Castile	17,972	929,558

The Ebro rises on the N. part of Burgos, and forms the boundary of Old Castile, on the side of Biscay and Navarre. Several streams fall into the Ebro, but the waters of Old Castile run chiefly to the westward, into the Douro. The chief production of this part of Spain is wool, of which commodity about 6,000,000 lbs. are annually exported to England. The government, however, is a bar to all social exertion, in this as well as every other part of Spain.

CASTILE, NEW, lies to the S. of the preceding province, and is divided into five inferior provinces, as follows: viz.—

PROVINCES	AREA Sq. Miles.	POP. IN 1838
Guadalaxara N.	1,970	159,375
Madrid N.W.	1,330	320,070
Cuenca E.	11,410	334,582
Toledo S.W.	8,863	282,197
La Mancha S.	7,620	277,788
New Castile	31,193	1,373,942

The Tagns, Guadiana, and Lucar, all afford to New Castile the advantage of a facility of intercourse; but the chief riches of this province are its flocks of sheep, which, under the regulation of the "Mesta," preclude all agricultural improvements. See each of the inferior provinces.

CASTILLON, a town of France, in the department of Gironde; seated on the Dordogne; 25 miles E. of Bordeaux. In 1451, the French won a hard-fought battle over the English, under the walls of this place. Pop. 2900.

CASTINE, a seaport of the state of Maine, chief town of Hancock county, situate on Penobscot Bay; 65 miles W. S. W. of Machias. It was taken by the British in 1814, but restored at the peace in 1815. Long. 69. 0. W. lat. 44. 26. N.

CASTLE CARY, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Tuesday; 12 miles S. E. of Wells, and 113 W. by S. of London.

CASTLE RISING, a town in Norfolk. The market is now disused. It is 5 miles N. E. of Lynn, and 103 N. N. E. of London.

CASTLE BLAYNEY, a town in Ireland, county of Monaghan; 68 miles from Dublin. Here is the magnificent seat of Lord Blayney.

CASTLE COMER, a town in Ireland, county of Kilkenny; 52 miles from Dublin. Near the town are some extensive collieries. It is a regularly built town, with a large church, town-hall, &c. Pop. 2500.

CASTLE CONNELL, a town in Ireland, county of Limerick, near the Shannon; 114 miles from Dublin.

CASTLE DERMOT, a town in Ireland, county of Kildare, on the river Lane; 43 miles from Dublin. In the vicinity are many ecclesiastical ruins.

CASTLE-DOUGLAS, a town of Scotland, county of Kirkcudbright; 18 miles from Dumfries. It is neat and well-built, and is seated in a thriving agricultural district. It has risen in importance since the transfer to it of the important market for corn and cattle, from Rhone House, a neighbouring village. Pop. 1500.

CASTLE ISLAND, a town in Ireland, county of Kerry; 197 miles from Dublin. Here is an ancient castle.

CASTLE REAGH, a town in Ireland, county of Roscommon; 112 miles from Dublin.

CASTLEBAR, a parish and town in the county of Mayo, Ireland. A considerable portion of the inhabitants are employed in the linen manufacture. The town is also the seat of assize, and a chief place in the county, having a spacious church, a handsome court-house, gaol, and cavalry barracks. It is situate at the E. end of a small lake; 11 miles E. by N. of Westport, and 126 W. by N. of Dublin.

CASTLETON, a village on the Peak of Derbyshire; 5 miles N. of Tideswell. It is situate at the foot of a rock about 250 feet high, on which are the remains of a castle, ascribed to William Peveril, natural son of the Conqueror. Three of the seven wonders of the Peak are in its neighbourhood; the Devil's Cave, Mam Tor, and Elden Hole. The first is in a cavern in the rock above mentioned, whose arched entrance is 42 feet high and 120 wide, which becomes narrower as it proceeds, and the roof descends to within 2 feet of the surface of a brook; this being passed over, another large cavern succeeds, with several high openings in the roof, which descends again to a second brook; after which is a third cavern, called Roger Rain's House, because of the perpetual dripping: the length of the whole cavern is 617 yards. Mam Tor, a mile W. of the village, is a mountain, 1300 feet above the level of the valley, on the top and sides of which is a camp, supposed to be Roman: it overtops the whole Peak Country, and the vulgar story is, that this hill is continually crumbling, without being diminished. Elden Hole, a mile S. of Mam Tor, is a perpendicular gulf or chasm in a limestone rock, the depth of which is unfathomable, its sides being so very shelving and irregular; it has been plumbed from 192 to 295 yards, 70 of which seemed to be in water.

CASTLETON, a township in the parish of Rochdale, Lancashire. See ROCHDALE.

CASTLETOWN, the capital of the Isle of Man near the S. coast, with a rocky and shallow harbour, which checks its commerce, and renders it inferior to Douglas in most respects. In the centre of the town, on a high rock, is castle Rushen, a magnificent pile, built of freestone, in 960, by Guttred, a prince of the Danish line, who lies buried in the edifice. It is occupied by the governor of the island, and on one side of it are the chancery offices, and good barracks. Near the town is a fine quarry of black marble, whence the steps of St. Paul's church, in London, were taken. Long. 4. 38. W. lat. 55. 4. N.

CASTLETOWN, a town on Staten Island, at the entrance of New York harbour, where is the Quarantine Ground and Marine Hospital for that city. Pop. 4275.

CASTLETON, a township of Vermont, U. S., watered by the Castleton river, and containing S. Bombazine. In the town is the Vermont academy of medicine; 10 miles W. of Rutland, and 14 E. of Whitehall. Pop. 1769.

CASTON, a parish 5 miles W. of Peterborough, in the county of Northampton. It is the site of the Roman station Durobrivæ; great numbers of Roman coins, chiefly copper, have been dug up in the neighbourhood.

CASTRES, a city of France, capital of the department of Tarn, and lately an episcopal see. In the reign of Louis XIII., it was a kind of Protestant republic; but in 1629 its fortifications were demolished. It is the birthplace of Rapin, Thoynas, and M. Dacier; has a good trade, and contains a number of beautiful edifices, and about 13,500 inhabitants. In the vicinity turquoise stones have been found. It is seated in a fine valley, on the Agout; 36 miles E. of Toulouse.

CASTRIES, BAY OF, a bay on the N.E. coast of Chinese Tartary, in the strait of Saghalien, visited by Perouse. Long. 142. 1. E. lat. 51. 29. N.

CASTRO REALE, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona; 15 miles W. of Messina. Pop. 8000.

CASTRO VERDE, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on the Corbes; 18 miles S.S.W. of Beja.

CASTRO VIREYNA, a town of Peru, in the prov. of Guananga, noted for good tobacco and fine wool. It is 125 miles S.E. of Lima. Long. 74. 45. W. lat. 13. 50. S.

There are several other towns in Italy, Spain, and Portugal, to the names of which Castro is prefixed.

CASTRIA, a town of Austrian Istria, a few miles W. of Fiume.

CASTROP, a town of Westphalia in the county of Mark; 7 miles W. of Dortmund.

CASTROPOL, a town of Spain, in Asturias; 14 miles N.E. of Mondonedo.

CASWELL, a county of North Carolina, bordering on Pittsylvania county, Virginia. Pop. 14,693, of whom 7024 were slaves. The court-house, in the centre of the county, is 60 miles N.N.W. of Raleigh. The principal town is called Leesburg.

CAT ISLAND. See SALVADOR, S.

CATANAMBA, or COTOBAMBA, an interior town of Peru, in a district of the same name, in the 14th degree of S. latitude. The town is seated on the S.W. bank of the Aparimac river; about 60 miles S. of Cuzco.

CATANAW, properly CATAWBA, a river of the United States of North America, rising from numerous sources in the N. W. part of N. Carolina, in the lat. of 36. N. and 82. of W. long., running in a S.S.E. direction into South Carolina, in which state it is called the Wateree, until it reaches the centre of the state, where it is joined by the Saluda, or Congaree, and numerous other streams from the S.W., where it is called the Santee, falling into the Atlantic Ocean, in the lat. of 33. 5. N. and 79. 15. of W. long.; about 40 miles N. of Charleston, with the harbour of which city it is connected by a canal from a point 50 miles above its entrance into the sea.

CATABAW, or CATAWBA, an Indian town on the banks of the preceding river, at its entrance into S. Carolina. The native inhabitants amount to about 450, the remains of a once powerful nation, who have degenerated in physical energy, and progressively decreased in number, since their association with Europeans.

CATAHOULA, or OCATAHOOL, a parish of Louisiana; about 60 miles in extent from N. to S. and 30 in mean breadth; it is intersected by the Washita, and several other CATALONIA, a province of Spain; lying along the shore of the Mediterranean, in a N.N.E. direction from the lat. of 40. 30. to 42. 30. N. separated from France on the N. by the Pyrenees, and bounded on the W. by Arragon, being in the shape of a right-angled triangle, of which the Pyrenees are the base, and the sea const the hypothenuse. It contains about 1000 square leagues, and a population exceeding a million, and increasing. It is a country of mountains and plains, and its productions vary according to the elevations; the hills are cold and temperate, the maritime strips warm and sunny; all are alike cultivated by the industry and labour of the Catalan. It produces abundance of wine, nuts, marble, and minerals; in corn and cattle it is deficient. The Catalans are a distinct people from the rest of the Spaniards both in language, habits, and character. They sigh for their ancient independence, and are ever ready for commotion or revolt. Catalonia is, like most other places on the coast, an inlet of contraband goods. Every body smuggles; especially the custom-house officers, commissioners, and preventive guards, who have only this way to requite their otherwise ill-paid services. Barcelona is the chief town; the other towns of note being Tortosa, Lerida, Tarragona, Mantresa, Gerona, and Rosas. The river Ebro intersects the S. end of the province, and the united streams of the Pallaresa and Segre run from the Pyrenees into the Ebro, near the frontier of Arragon. The Lobregat, Ter, and several other streams of minor note, fall into the Mediterranean. The Catalonians are the bravest and least bigoted, and the most active and enterprising of the Spanish people; but the subduing tendency of the national policy of Spain precludes all advance towards social improvement. The chief surplus products of the soil of Catalonia are cork, nuts, and brandy; silks, woollens, hardware, and cutlery, are manufactured for distribution over the other parts of Spain, and for exportation. See Appendix.

CATAMANDOO, or KIATMANDU, a city and capital of Nepal, containing about 50,000 inhabitants; 200 miles due N. of Patna. See NEPAUL.

CATANIA, a celebrated city on the E. coast of Sicily; it is a place of great antiquity, but has suffered greatly as well by the eruptions of Mount Ætna, as by earthquakes; it was nearly overwhelmed with lava from the former.

in 1669, and in 1693 an earthquake destroyed a great portion of the city, and buried 18,000 persons in its ruins; it appears, however, to have risen from each succeeding disaster with increasing magnificence, and in 1825 ranked among the finest cities in Europe. It is the see of a bishop, and seat of the only university in Sicily. The principal square, formed by the cathedral, college, and town-hall, is very grand; it has about thirty convents, and 50 churches, some of them fine edifices; a museum of natural history and antiquities, the remains of a Roman amphitheatre, and other vestiges of ancient splendour, render it a place of peculiar interest to an intelligent and inquiring traveller. It is situated at the foot of Mount Ætna, on the south side; thirty-five miles north of Syracuse, in the lat. of 37. 26. North, and 15. 5. of East long. Pop. 52,433.

CETTE, a seaport of France, situate on a tongue of land stretching along the coast of the department of Hérault, on the Gulf of Lyons. A considerable quantity of salt is made from the water of the inlet. It has a manufacture of soap, and sugar refinery, and exports a considerable quantity of brandy; the canal of Languedoc falling into the inlet, occasions Cette to be the medium of an extensive intercourse between the eastern and southern departments of France. Pop. about 8000. The lighthouse is in lat \approx 3. 24. N. and 3. 42. W. long. and about 18 miles S. W. of Montpellier.

CEUTA, (the ancient Abyla), a town of Fez, at the N. W. extremity of Africa, opposite to Gibraltar, from which it is distant only 14 miles. It was taken from the Moors, by the Portuguese, in 1409; it fell into the hands of the Spaniards in 1640, was confirmed to them by the treaty of Lisbon in 1688, and in whose possession it still continues. The Moors besieged it in 1694, and maintained a close blockade before it, on the land side, for nearly thirty years, when they ultimately retired with great loss. Its fortress, like that of Gibraltar, to which it is considered a counterpart, may be regarded as impregnable; and, as such, they are poetically termed the Pillars of Hercules. It has a tolerably good harbour for vessels not of very large burthen; in the lat. of 35. 54. N. and 5. 16. W. long.

CEVA, a town of Piedmont, with a fort. It was taken by the French in 1796, and retaken by the Piedmontese peasants in 1799. It stands on the Tenaro; 8 miles S. E. of Mondovi. Pop. about 5500.

CEVENNES, a late territory of France, in the province of Languedoc. It is a mountainous country, and now forms the department of Gard.

CEYLON, an island of the Indian Ocean, lying off the S. W. coast of the promontory of Hindostan, from which it is separated by the Gulf of Manara and Polk's Strait, about 90 miles in breadth. The form of Ceylon has not inaptly been compared to that of a pear, the N. part forming the stem. It is 270 miles in extreme length, from Point de Galle, in the lat. 6. 4., to Point Pedro, in 9. 50. N., and 120 in extreme breadth between the long. of 80. and 81. 52. E.

The early history of Ceylon is involved in obscurity; but supposing it to be the Taprobane adverted to by Strabo, Pomponius Mela, and Pliny; it must have ranked high in population and influence among the nations of Asia, for ages antecedent to the Christian era, having sent an embassy over land to Rome in the reign of the Emperor Claudius. It appears to have been visited by some Nestorian missionaries, in the 9th century. About the middle of the 13th century it was visited by Marco Polo, a Venetian, who travelled over a great part of Asia, and afterwards published an account of his travels. The information, however, which he communicated being of a general rather than of a circumstantial nature, but little was known of Ceylon, beyond its actual existence as an island, until after the discovery of the passage by the Cape of Good Hope, and its being visited by the Portuguese in 1505, who found it divided into several petty sovereignties, which subsequently merged into one, under the title of the kingdom of Candy. The Portuguese held settlements on different parts of the coast for upwards of 150 years, when they were expelled by the Dutch, who possessed themselves of the entire circuit of the coast, for 10 to 20 miles from the sea, and the whole of the N. part of the island; confining the dominion of the king of Candy entirely to the interior. The Dutch possessions of the island all surrendered to the English in 1796, after sustaining a siege of three weeks; and in 1815 a British force marched into the interior, took the king of Candy prisoner, deposed him, and possessed his territory, thereby rendering the whole island a part of the British dominion. The general character of the surface of the island of Ceylon is mountainous and woody, with an ample extent of soil; and sufficiently intersected by streams of water, to afford the most abundant means of subsistence and comfort to a population more than tenfold its present extent. The most lofty range of mountains divides the island nearly into two parts, and terminates completely the effects of the monsoons, which set in periodically from opposite sides of them. The seasons are more regulated by the monsoons than the course of the sun; for the coolest season is during the summer solstice while the western monsoon prevails. Spring commences in October, and the hottest season is from January to the beginning of April. The climate on the coast, is more temperate than on the continent of Hindostan, but in the interior of the country the heat is many degrees greater, and the climate often extremely sultry and unhealthy. The finest fruits grow in vast plenty; but there is a poisonous fruit called Adam's apple, which in shape resembles the quarter of an apple cut out, with the two insides a little convex, and a continued ridge along the outer edges, and is of a beautiful orange colour. Pepper, ginger, and cardamoms are produced in Ceylon, with five kinds of rice, which ripen one after another. One of the most remarkable trees in the island is the tulipot, which grows straight and tall, and is as big as the mast of a ship; the leaves are so large as to cover 15 men; when dried, they are round, and fold up like a fan. The natives wear a piece of the leaf on their head when they travel, to shade them from the sun; and they are so tough that they are not easily torn. Every soldier carries one, and it serves for his tent; other trees and shrubs, some valuable for their timber and others for their resin, gums, and flowers, are interspersed over every part of the island; but the most important of all its vegetable productions is the cinnamon tree, the bark of which is distributed over every part of the habitable globe.

Ceylon also abounds with topazes, garnets, rubies, and other gems; besides ores of copper, iron, &c., and veins of black crystal. Common deer, as well as Guinea deer, are numerous; but the horned cattle are both very small and scarce, six of them weighing altogether only 714 lbs., and one of these only 70 lbs. Yet the island produces the largest and best elephants in the world, which occasionally formed an extensive branch of traffic to different parts of Hindostan, but since cultivation has become of greater importance, they have been destroyed in great numbers. The woods are infested by tigers: they abound also with snakes of a monstrous size, among which is the boa constrictor, one of which has been known to destroy a tiger, and devour him at one meal. Spiders, centipedes, and scorpions, also grow to an enormous size. Among the curiosities of the insect tribe, the mantis, or creeping leaf, is met with, having every member of common insects, though in shape and appearance it greatly resembles a leaf: it is of a green colour. The sea-coast abounds with fish. Alligators, and all the lizard tribe, are also numerous.

The aborigines of Ceylon consist of two classes of people, the Cingalese, and the Veddahs. The latter are still in the rudest stage of social life; they live embosomed in the woods, or in the hollows of the mountains; hunting their sole employment, and providing for the day their only care. Some of them acknowledged the authority of the king of Candy, and exchanged with the Cingalese, elephants' teeth and deer flesh, fat arrows, cloth, &c.; but this practice is not general, for two-thirds of them hold no communication with the Cingalese, and have an utter antipathy to strangers. They worship a particular god; and their religious doctrine seems to consist of some indistinct notions of the fundamental principles of the Braminical faith. In some places they have erected temples; but for the most part they perform worship at an altar constructed of bamboos, under the shade of a banyan tree. The Cingalese, the subjects of the kings of Candy during the existence of their reign, appear to have been, beyond time of memory, a race of Hindoos, instructed in all the arts of civil life, and maintaining, if not an ascendancy, a co-equality of influence and importance with their continental neighbours. The distinction of castes into nineteen grades, prevails among them as scrupulously as among the Hindoos. In their devotions they are Pagans; and, though they acknowledge a supreme God, they worship only the inferior deities, among which they reckon the sun and moon. In their temples are images, well executed, though their figures are monstrous; some are of silver, copper, &c. The different sorts of gods had various priests, who have all some privileges. Their houses are small and low, with walls made of hurdles, smoothly covered with clay, and the roofs thatched. They have no chimneys, and their furniture is only a few earthen vessels, with two copper basins, and two or three stools; none but their king having been allowed to sit in a chair. Their food is generally rice, and their common drink is water, which they pour into their mouths out of a vessel like a tea-pot, through the spout, never touching it with their lips. There are some inscriptions on the rocks, which must be very ancient, for they are not understood by any of the present inhabitants. The subversion of the native government of Ceylon, and the predilection of the English to force a distribution of the products of British labour over every part of the globe, are calculated to effect a great change in the taste and habits of the Cingalese, the result of which it is difficult to foresee. In addition to the various productions of Ceylon, previously enumerated, connected with it is the pearl fishery, in the Gulf of Manaar, which is considered the richest source of that article in the world. It is a government monopoly, and only opened periodically. The commodity for which Ceylon is the most known, is cinnamon, and this is owing to some peculiarity of the soil and climate. It grows near the sea, on a very narrow tract of land on the S. W. side of the island, near Colombo, and it is remarkable for the soil's being a pearly white sand, without the admixture of any other soil. The quantity exported by the Dutch in 1785-91 was between 150,000 and 500,000 lbs. per annum. The amount exported in 1844, was 1,041,320 lbs. Coffee is an article of growth which has increased in a very remarkable manner. The export to England in 1835, was 1,870,143 lbs.: in 1845, 16,657,239 lbs, and in 1846, 18,350,341 lbs. There are numerous other productions of considerable commercial importance, but cannot be enumerated here.

The population of Ceylon, in 1835, was comprised in the following numbers:—

DESCRIPTION.	MALES.	FEMALES.	TOTAL.
Whites	5,516	3,605	9,121
Free Blacks	625,465	564,017	1,189,482
Slaves	14,108	13,289	27,397
Allies & Strangers.	10,825
TOTALS	616,080	584,911	1,241,825

The return for 1843, exhibits a total of 1,421,631, so, that with a moderate increase, the total present population may be taken as 1,500,000. The principal towns are Colombo, Negombo, and Arroboo, on the W. coast; Trincomalee and Batacolo, on the E. coast; Magane and Matura, at the S. end; and Candy, nearly in the centre of the island.

CHABEUIL, a town of France, in the department of Drome, with about 4000 inhabitants; 8 miles S. by E. of Valence.

CHABLAIS, a fertile province of Savoy, bounded on the N. by the lake of Geneva, E. by Valois, S. by Faucigny, and W. by the Genevois. Thonon, 22 miles E. N. E. of Geneva, is the capital.

CHABLAIS, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, celebrated for its excellent white wine. It is 12 miles E. by N. of Auxerre.

CHACAO, a seaport at the N. E. end of the island of Chiloe, on the strait that separates it from the main land, in the lat. of 41. 53. S.

CHACHAPOYAS, a town of Peru, in the province of Truxillo, capital of a district lying E. of the main ridge of the Andes. It is seated on a river; 160 miles N. N. E. of Truxillo. Long. 77. 30. W. lat. 6. 20. S.

CHACO, or GRAN CHACO, an interior district of South America, bordering east on the Paragnay river, which, under the influence of the Incas, and more recently of the domination of the Spaniards, was a sort of country of refuge for the native Indians. Its length is estimated at 750, and its breadth 450 miles. It is well watered, and yields most of the productions of other parts of Peru: it is now merged into the United Provinces of Buenos Ayrcs.

CHAGANO, a city of Birmah, with a small fort. It is the principal emporium for cotton, which is brought from all parts of the country, and embarked here in boats up the river Irrawaddy into the province of Yunen. Here also is the only manufacture of marble idols, whence the whole Birman empire is supplied, none being allowed to be made in any other place. It is situate opposite Ava, the deserted capital, on the N. side of the Irrawaddy, which here turns N. and parts it from Ummerapoora, the present capital.

CHAGRES, a small and unhealthy town on the north coast of the isthmus of central America. It was proposed as the terminus of the railroad or canal which was to connect the two oceans. The northern terminus of the Panama railroad, 80 miles in length, is at Aspinwall in Navy Bay, a few miles to the E. It was entirely opened on January 28, 1855. The fort of Chagres was taken by Admiral Vernon in 1748. Long. 90.17. W.; lat. 9.10. N.

CHAIS DIEU, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Loire, with a celebrated Benedictine abbey; 12 miles E. of Brioude.

CHALAIN NEW, a town of Asia, kingdom of Ava, and chief town of a district in Burmah. It is walled, and is very ancient.

CHALCO, a town of Mexico; 18 miles S. E. of the city of Mexico.

CHALEUR BAY OF, a spacious bay on the W. side of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which divides the district of Gaspé, Lower Canada, from the province of New Brunswick. Miscou Island, at the entrance of the bay, is in lat. 48. 4. N. and 64. 14. W. long.; from which point the bay runs about 80 miles further west, being about twenty miles in breadth, indented on the N. by Cascadepia, and on the S. by Nipisiguit Bay. It receives several rivers, the principal of which is the Ristigouche, at its head. Along the coast are numerous inhabitants whose occupation is fishing and ship-building.

CHALLANS, a town of France, in the department of Vendée; situate about 12 miles from the coast, and 21 miles N. of Sables d'Olonne.

CHALLONE, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, situate on the S. bank of the Loire; 30 miles E. N. E. of Nantes. Pop. about 5000.

CHALONS SUR MARNE, a city of France, capital of the department of Marne, and lately an episcopal see. It contains several public buildings, and 12,000 inhabitants, who carry on a considerable trade in shallons and other woollen stuffs. Here is an academy of the sciences, arts, and belles-lettres. Chalons is seated on the river Marne, over which there is one very handsome, and two other bridges. It is 25 miles S. E. of Rheims, and 95 E. of Paris, near the Strasbourg railway.

CHALONS SUR SAONE, a city of France, in the department of Saone and Loire, with a citadel, and lately an episcopal see. It is the staple of iron for Lyon and St. Etienne, and of wines for exportation. Here are various indications of Roman magnificence, particularly the ruins of an amphitheatre. The city contains the old town, the new town, and the suburb of St. Lawrence. In the first is the court of justice, and the cathedral. It is, on the railroad, 70 miles N. of Lyons, and 170 S. E. of Paris. Pop. about 9000.

CHAM, a town of Bavaria, seated on the river Cham, at its confluence with the Regen; 27 miles N. E. of Ratisbon. Pop. about 2000.

CHAMBERS, a county of Alabama, United States, in the E. part of the state having the Chattahoochee River on its E. border. Lafayette is the capital. Pop. 17,333.

CHAMBERSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, chief of Franklin county, with two Presbyterian churches; situate in a hilly country; 30 miles S. W. of Carlisle.

CHAMBERTIN, a village of France in the department of Cote d'Or, celebrated for its delicious wine. It lies to the S. of Dijon.

CHAMBERY, the capital of Savoy, with a castle and ducal palace. It is fortified by walls and ditches, and watered by many streams, which run through several of the streets. There are piazzas under most of the houses, where people may walk dry in the worst weather. It has large and handsome suburbs; and in the neighbourhood are some baths, much frequented in summer. In 1742 the Spaniards made themselves masters of this capital, but it was restored by the peace of 1748. It was taken in 1792 by the French, who were dispossessed of it in 1799, but regained it in 1800. It is seated at the conflux of the Lesso and D'Albon; 27 miles N.E. of Grenoble, and 85 N.W. of Turin. Pop. about 12,000. Long. 5. 50. E. lat. 45. 33. N.

CHAMBLY, a fort of Lower Canada, on the river Chambly, or Sorel, issuing from Lake Champlain. It was taken by the Americans in 1775, and retaken by the English in 1776. It is 15 miles E. of Montreal; and a little higher on the same river is the fort of St. John, which is a frontier garrison.

CHAMNEISKOI, a town of Asiatic Russia, lying S. of the S. end of Lake Baikal, near the frontiers of Chinese Tartary.

CHAMOUNI, one of the elevated valleys of the Alps, about 3300 feet above the level of the sea. It is at the foot of Mont Blanc, on the N. side, and is watered by the Arve, and celebrated for its herds of goats. There is a village of the same name in the bosom of the valley, on the banks of the Arve; 42 m. E. N. E. of Chambery, and 35 S. E. of Geneva.

CHAMOND, St., a town of France, in the department of Rhone, with a castle; on the river Giez; 17 miles S. of Lyon.

CHAMPANEER, a city and capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Malwa, Hindostan; it was formerly the capital of the rajahs of Guzerat; ruins of temples and mosques remain to attest its former consequence. It is 45 miles due east of Cambay.

CHAMPLAIN, a lake of North America, which divides the N. part of the state of New York from that of Vermont. It is 90 miles long, in a direction due N., and 18 in its broadest part; the mean width is about 6 m., and its depth is sufficient for the largest vessel. It contains many islands, the principal of which, called North Hero, is twenty-four miles long, and from two to four wide. It receives the waters of Lake George from the S. S. W. and sends its own waters a N. course, through Chamblly River into the St. Lawrence. The land on its borders, and on the banks of its rivers, is good. During the war declared by the United States against England in 1812, each party maintained a naval force of three or four vessels, which came to an engagement on the 14th of September, 1814, when the British squadron was defeated and taken. Although this lake lies between the lat. of 45. and 47. it is frequently frozen over, so as to afford a passage on the ice for two or three months in the year; it is united with Lake Erie by a canal. See ALBANY.

CHAMPLAIN, a town of New York, in Clinton county, situate on Lake Champlain, near its N. extremity. In 1777 a battle was fought here between the British, under General Carlton, and the Americans, under General Arnold, in which the latter were totally defeated. Pop. 3632. It is 92 miles due N. of Albany.

CHARLESTON, a maritime district of the state of South Carolina, extending for about 70 miles along the shore of the Atlantic Ocean, in a north-eastern direction, from the lat. of 32. 30. to 33. 5. N., and inland about 50 miles; it is bounded on the N. by the Santee River, and intersected by Ashley, Cooper, and one or two other rivers of inferior note. It contains a good deal of swampy land; but is, on the whole, very productive in maize, rice, and cotton. The coast is broken into numerous islands, which yield a cotton of very superior quality, known by the name of Sea Island. Pop. 82,661.

CHARLESTON CITY, the chief place of the above district, and fifth in rank and importance in all the United States of North America; it is advantageously located on a point of land between the rivers Ashley and Cooper, which unite just below the city, forming a commodious harbour, protected from the swell of the ocean by Sullivan's Island, about 7 miles distant, and by three forts. The lighthouse, at the southern entrance of the harbour is in lat. 32. 42. N. and 79. 46. W. long.; a sand-bar precludes the entrance of vessels of large burthen, there being only 16 feet of water in the deepest channel, and the highest tides rising only 6 feet. The principal streets of the city run parallel to each other from river to river, intersected by others at right angles. It contains about 20 places of religious worship, a city hall, theatre, and several other public buildings. It is the focus of all the commerce of the state, and of part of North Carolina and Georgia. Fort Sumter, in the harbour, was bombarded by the Secessionists in the early part of 1861, and the Union troops in it capitulated without losing a man. The population in 1790 was 16,360, and is now 29,261. For the extent of its commerce see CAROLINA, SOUTH.

CHARLESTOWN, a town of Massachusetts, united to Boston by a wooden bridge, about 1500 feet in length, over Charles River. CHATHAM, a borough in the county of Kent, England, situate on the S. bank of the river Medway, about 8 miles above its confluence with the Thames. It is one of the stations for building, fitting, and victualling the national marine; and the apparatus and accommodation for this purpose, in conjunction with its fortifications, and marine and artillery barracks, render it one of the most magnificent establishments of the kind in the world, and every way worthy of the distinguished character of the British nation. The local advantages of its situation are very great, whilst the lines of the fortifications command the segment of a circle from the river, of several miles in extent, and are as complete and efficient as art and execution can make the; and additional works, mounted with heavy Armstrong guns, have been recently completed, which have rendered it as nearly impregnable as possible.

Several ships of war usually lie here. The dockyard was first established in the time of Elizabeth; and the Dutch, in the hey-day of their valour, in 1667, ascended with a naval force up the river, and did considerable damage. In 1558, the fund for relieving the wounded in the naval service was established at Chatham; but the chest (the term by which the accounts of the fund were called) was transferred to Greenwich in 1802. In 1592 an hospital for decayed marines, shipwrights, and their widows, was founded by Sir John Hawkins. The hospital has been rebuilt within the present century, on a commodious and extensive scale. A new hospital for the whole naval department, called the Melville Hospital, has been lately erected, at an expense of £70,000. This town was very inconsiderable till after the peace with Holland in 1678. Chatham is 30 miles E. S. E. of London Bridge, on the road from London to Dover. It has a weekly market on Saturdays, and returns one member to parliament.

The present important town of Lowell belonged to this town until 1824. Pop. 1697.

CHELSEA, a parish lying along the N. bank of the Thames, to the S. W. of London, and to which it forms an integral part. This section of the metropolis is distinguished for its hospital for the support of decayed and maimed soldiers, founded in the time of Charles II.; its chief promoter was Sir Stephen Fox, who contributed 13,000*l.* towards the building; it was finished in the time of William and Mary. The building is a quadrangle, the wings extending towards the river; the base which is nearly 800 feet in extent, is entered from the centre of the north front, into a noble vestibule; the E. side is appropriated to a chapel, and the W. to a hall, in which the pensioners dine; the wings, which are divided into wards, are each 360 feet in length, 80 wide, and three stories high; the infirmary, and other out-buildings, and gardens, cover an area of nearly 50 acres. Sir Christopher Wren, was the architect; and, in respect to proportion and convenience, the edifice is worthy of his high reputation, and produces an imposing effect; but being built mostly of brick, it is inferior in magnificence to the marine hospital at Greenwich. The number of in-pensioners is usually about 500; the out-pensioners vary in number, averaging perhaps 70,000 or 80,000. In 1801 a military asylum, contiguous to the hospital, was established for the education of 1000 children of non-commissioned officers and soldiers, towards the support of which the whole army contributes one day's pay per ann.; the building, which is principally of brick, cost about 150,000*l.* Chelsea is also distinguished for its botanic garden, formed by Sir Hans Sloane, and presented by him, in 1721, to the Apothecaries' Company of London, on condition of paying a quit-rent of 5*l.* per annum and presenting annually to the Royal Society fifty different specimens of plants grown in the garden, until the number of new specimens amounted to 2000. The hospital is about two miles W.S.W. of Westminster Abbey, and four miles in the same direction from the Royal Exchange.

CHELTONHAM, a borough in Gloucestershire, England, situate in a fertile vale near the foot of the Coldswold Hills; 94 miles N. W. of London, on the road to Gloucester. Till within the present century it was an inconsiderable place, participating partially in the woollen manufactures of the neighbouring district. It acquired some distinction by the discovery of a medicinal spring in 1740; and, being visited by George III. in 1788, it became somewhat celebrated; the population, however, in 1801, amounted only to 3076, since which it has greatly increased in numbers and importance, and is one of the chief resorts of gaiety and fashion in the kingdom. A theatre was erected in 1803; baths, assembly-rooms, libraries, public walks, and other attractions, have progressively been extended for the accommodation of an increasing population. It is connected by a branch line with the Great Western Railway at Swindon. Its waters, which increase in quantity in proportion to the demand for them, and increase of visitors, operate both as aperient and restorative, being impregnated with salts, sulphur, steel, and calcareous earth. The parish church is an ancient and venerable structure; there are several sectarian places of worship; its market, on Thursday, is well supplied with every necessary. CHEN-SI, or SIEN-SI, a western frontier province of China, lying between the lat. of 32. and 38. N. and 103. to 110. of E. long. It is bounded on the S. by the province of Setchuen, and on the E. partially by the province of Honan, but mainly by the Hoang-ho, or Great Yellow River which divides it from Chan-si, on the N., partly by the great wall which divides it from Chinese Tartary; and on the W. by the dreary country of the Moguls, containing an area of about 147,000 square miles. The Hoang-ho, in the eccentricity of its course skirts the N.W. part of the province, running in a northerly direction, whilst on the E. it runs a course due S. Numerous streams intersect this province in all directions, some falling into the Hoang-ho, on the W., and some into the same river on the E., and others into the Kiang Kien, or Great River, which intersects the province of Setchuen. A province so extensive, as may be expected comprises much diversity of soil and features. It abounds with drugs, rhubarb, musk, cinnabar, wax, honey, and coals, of which last it contains inexhaustible veins. It has also rich gold mines, which for political reasons, are not allowed to be opened. It produces little rice, but plentiful crops of wheat and millet; but it is occasionally subject to long droughts, when clouds of locusts, from the forests of Mongul Tartary, destroy the entire vegetation of extensive districts; the inhabitants, however, make food of the locusts, and esteemed them as a delicacy. The population is estimated at upwards of 30,000,000.

CHEN-YANG, CHIN-YAN, or MOUK-DEN, a city of Eastern Tartary, capital of a province of the same name, otherwise called Leaotong. It is situated on the bank of a fine river, running S. into the Gulf of Leaotong. The walls are 10 miles in circumference; and it is ornamented with several public edifices, and provided with arsenals and storehouses. It is 350 miles E.N.E. of Peking. Long. 123. 5. E. lat. 41. 55. N.

CHIEPELO, an island in the Bay of Panama, about 20 miles from the city of Panama, which it supplies with provisions and fruit.

CHIEPSTOW, a town in Monmouthshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the Wye, near its confluence with the Severn. It was surrounded by a wall, traces of which are observable; and on a perpendicular rock are the remains of a large castle. Here was also a priory, part of which is converted into a church; and comparatively, it was in former times of much greater consequence than at present. It is now the port of entry for all the towns on the rivers Wye and Lug, and fits a few ships annually to the Baltic and British America, for timber, deals, &c.; ships coastway a considerable quantity of timber bark, &c. and has two slip-yards, where vessels of 500 to 600 tons are generally in course of building. The spring tides rise to the height of 60 feet; which is consequently attended with great inconvenience, and preclude it from materially extending its commerce. There is a fine bridge of iron over the Wye, erected at the expense of the counties. It stands on the S. Wales Railway, about 10 miles N. of Bristol, and 130 W.N.W. of London.

CHER, an interior department in the centre of France, including part of the late province of Berry. It receives its name from a river which rises in Auvergne, and flows into the Loire, below Tours. Bourges, 126 miles due S. of Paris, is the capital. It contains about 3000 square miles, and 230,000 inhabitants.

CHERASCO, a fortified town of Piedmont, capital of a fertile territory of the same name, with a strong citadel. It is seated on a mountain, at the confluence of the Stura with the Tanaro; 24 miles S. S. E. of Turin. Pop. about 11,000.

CHERBOURG, a seaport of France, in the department of Manche, with an Augustine abbey. Here was a sea-fight between the English and French, in 1692, when the latter were beaten, and upwards of twenty of their men-of-war burnt near Cape la Hogue. The English landed here in 1758, took the town, with the ships in the basin, demolished the fortifications, and ruined the works for improving the harbour. These works were resumed on a stupendous scale by Louis XVI., by commencing the famous digue, but their progress was interrupted by the revolution, resumed again under Napoleon Buonaparte in 1803, and the works destroyed by the fury of the elements in 1808; after which a new plan of operations was resolved upon, by excavating a basin out of the reach of the violence of the ocean, which, by 1813, was so far accomplished as to hold fifty sail of the line, having fifty feet depth of water. The principal feature of the port is the immense artificial island, the digue, or break-water, which has been in course of construction for a long series of years. It is of much larger dimensions than that of Plymouth, and has a circular fort in the middle. Other works of corresponding magnitude have since been completed, and it now appears destined to become the chief naval station of France, and to rival in extent and magnificence every establishment of the like kind in the world. Its situation is very advantageous either for despatching a fleet to any part of the world, west or south; or for commanding the channel between France and England, being about 70 miles due S. of the S. side of the Isle of Wight, and 190 W. N. W. of Paris; in N. lat. 49. 39. and 1. 37. W. long.

CHERINON, a seaport on the N. coast of the Island of Java, about 150 miles E. of Batavia; it exports large quantities of coffee.

CHEROKEES, an Indian tribe, occupying an extensive tract of country between the Chattahoochee and Tennessee rivers, comprising the N. W. part of Georgia, and the N. E. of Alabama. The Cherokees were among the bravest and noblest of the American race; but they have progressively declined in numbers and influence, as that of the Europeans has increased.

CHEROKEE, a county of North Carolina. It has some valuable gold mines, and other metals. Some of the land is fertile. Pop. 3427. Also a county in Georgia, drained by the Etowah River. Canton is the capital. Pop. in 1840, 5895. Also a county in Alabama, a hilly country, with some fertile soil. Jefferson is the capital. Pop. in 1840, 8773.

CHERONISO, a town of European Turkey, on the N. E. coast of the Island of Negropont, 25 miles E. of Negropont.

CHEROY, a town of France, in the department of Yonne; 10 miles W. of Sens.

CHERRYVALLEY, an incorporated and flourishing town of New York, in Otsego county, at the head of a creek of its name; 18 miles S. of Canajohary, and 53 W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 3923. It is a place of great intercourse, being situated at the intersection of several turnpike roads.

CHERISO, an island in the gulf of Venice, between the coasts of Istria and Croatia. On the S. it is separated from Osero by a very narrow channel, and the two islands are united by a bridge. The soil is stony; but it abounds in cattle, wine, oil, and honey. It has a town of the same name, with a good harbour. Long. 14. 45. E. lat. 45. 10. N. The two islands contain together a population of about 11,000, and were ceded to Austria by the treaty of Campo Formio, in 1797, after having for nearly eight centuries formed a part of the Venetian republic.

CHERSON, or KHERSON, a government in the S. part of European Russia, on the N. shore of the Black Sea, between the rivers Dnieper and Dniester. Area, 25,000 to 30,000 sq. miles. Pop. in 1838, including the military colonies, 765,000. The climate is in extremes, and agriculture does not flourish. Commerce is very extensive, and centres at Odessa and Kherston.

CHERSON, or KHERSON, the capital of New Russia, in the government of Catharineslaf, founded by Catherine II. in 1778, on the N. bank of the Dnieper, 10 miles below the influx of the Ingulec. The church and many of the houses are built of stone. Here is a dock, from which several men-of-war and merchant ships have been launched; but owing to some sand-banks in the river, the naval establishment has been transferred hence to Nicolief, and its commerce to Odessa. In 1787 the empress made a triumphant journey to this capital, and here met Emperor Joseph II. At this place, in 1790, the philanthropic Howard fell a victim to his indefatigable humanity; and a monument was erected to his memory by the Russian admiral. Cherson is 50 miles E. of Ocza-kow. Long. 32. 38. E. lat. 46. 37. N.

CHERTSY, a town in Surrey, with a market on Wednesday. Here was formerly an abbey, of which only a part of the walls now remains; it was the first burial-place of Henry VI., who was afterwards removed to Windsor. It is seated near the Thames, over which is a handsome bridge; 20 miles W. by S. of London.

CHESAPEAKE, the largest and safest bay in the United States. Its entrance is between Cape Charles, in Maryland, and Cape Henry, in Virginia; 12 miles wide. It extends 270 miles to the N.; is from 10 to 40 miles broad, and generally 9 fathoms deep; containing several islands, and many commodious harbours. It receives the Susquehanna, Potomac, Rappahannock, York, and James rivers, which are all large and navigable.

CHEHAM, a town in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Wednesday, and manufactures of lace and wooden ware. It stands in a vale, 27 miles N.W. of London.

CHESHIRE, a county palatine of England, bounded on the N. by the river Mersey, which divides it from Lancashire, N.E. by Yorkshire, E. by Derbyshire, S.E. by Staffordshire, S. by Shropshire, W. by the river Dec, which divides it from Denbighshire and Flintshire, and N. W. by the Irish Sea, into which projects a peninsula, 13 miles long and 6 broad, formed by the mouths of the Mersey and the Dec. This county extends 30 miles from N. to S., and 42 from E. to W., without including the peninsula just mentioned on the W., and a narrow tract of land, which stretches between Lancashire and Derbyshire, to Yorkshire on the N.E., and contains 673,280 acres. Antecedent to the invasion of Britain by the Romans, this part of the country was occupied by a tribe called the Cornavii; and Cheshire was constituted a county-palatine by William the Norman, who conferred it upon his nephew, Hugh Lupus; but the succeeding palatines, exercising an authority incompatible with justice to other parts of the country, such as affording sanctuary, &c., Henry VIII. abrogated most of the privileges of this palatinate; and in 1830, it was deprived of the remainder. Its principal towns, besides the city of Chester, are Stockport, Macclesfield, Congleton, and Nantwich; Stockport, at the N.E. extremity of the county, and the surrounding country, participates largely in the cotton manufacture; Macclesfield and Congleton are extensively engaged in the silk manufacture; Nantwich is celebrated for its salt springs; and ship-building is extensively carried on at the city of Chester.

In addition to the rivers Mersey and Dec, the county of Chester is intersected by the rivers Weaver and Bollin, and contains several small lakes well stored with fish; it is also intersected by several canals, affording it a facility of communication with all parts of the kingdom. The river Dec is united by a canal of one entire level, about 14 miles in length, from the city of Chester to the Mersey, about 12 miles above Liverpool; other canals diverge from the city of Chester to Northwich, and into Wales. The Trent and Mersey Canal (see RUNCORN and PRESTON) intersects the heart of the county, whilst the Duke of Bridgewater's is carried nearly parallel with the Mersey to Manchester; and the Peak Forest Canal intersects the N.E. end of the county. The E. and N.E. parts of the county supply abundance of coal and various minerals; but the distinguishing characteristics of the county are its salt and cheese; the supply of the first is inexhaustible, and celebrated for its purity; whilst the cheese stands unrivalled for the excellence of its quality. The salt is produced both in a rock or solid state, and by evaporation of the water from the numerous springs. The quantity consumed in Great Britain since 1779, has averaged about 55,000 tons per annum, produced chiefly by evaporation; and the quantity exported since that time has averaged about 250,000 tons per annum, in the proportion of about 35,000 tons of rock, and the remainder produced by evaporation. The S. and W. parts of the county are the most productive in cheese, and are those in which the salt springs abound. This part of the county is rather level than hilly, and subdvided by hedgerows, well stocked with timber, into comparatively very small enclosures, intersected by numerous paved roads; which imply either a Roman origin, or perhaps were found necessary on account of the sandy nature of the surface. On the N. and E. side of the county, about 100,000 persons are employed in the silk and cotton manufacture. See CONGLETON, MACCLESFIELD, and SROCKPORT. It returns four members to parliament, two for each of the divisions, northern and southern.

CHESHIRE, a county of New Hampshire, bounded on the W. for about 50 miles by the Connecticut river, which separates it from Vermont; it is about 20 m. in mean breadth, and is, upon the whole, a tolerably fertile district; the S. end borders on Massachusetts. Pop. 26,429. Charleston, on the E. bank of the Connecticut river, 65 miles W., and Keene, in the interior of the county, 60 miles S.W. by W. of Concord, are the chief towns.

Cheshire is also the name of a town in Berkshire county, Massachusetts, and of another in Newhaven county, Connecticut.

CHESHUNT, a parish in Hertfordshire, England. Waltham Cross, at the entrance of the parish from London, is 11 miles from Shoreditch church, on the line of the great north road.

CHESTER, the capital city of Cheshire, and an ecclesiastical see, on the N. bank of the Dee, 183 miles N.N.W. of London, and 24 S. of Liverpool. It was very early a Roman station, as its name, (from Castra, a camp,) implies; the form of the town itself is that of a Roman camp, the streets running from a centre to the four cardinal points of the compass, at the end of each of which is a gate. At the conquest it was made a county-palatine, holding its own courts and parliaments. Under Henry VIII. its privileges were greatly curtailed, and acts passed in 1830 terminated the separate jurisdiction of the county-palatine. It now sends two members to parliament.

Chester was once a place of great trade, but the difficulty of the navigation of the Dee, and the prosperity of the more convenient port of Liverpool, have tended very much to its decay. There was once a considerable trade in Irish linen, for which a hall was built; but the trade has disappeared, and the hall is now used for the cheese fairs, which are held eight times a-year. Ship-building, however, is still carried on to a large extent, there being sometimes 10 or 12 large ships on the stocks at once. The markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday, and are well supplied and attended. The races are held on a fine level course, close to the city. The town itself has a striking and picturesque effect; it is walled all round, the walls being nearly two miles in circumference, and are wide enough to afford a very agreeable promenade to the inhabitants. The streets are cut down several feet in the rock, and level with them are low shops or warehouses, above which are the foot pavements, with a balustrade at the side; along these footways, or rows, as they are called, are the shops and houses. Many of the old houses have the overhanging upper storeys. The town is adorned with many fine buildings; the linen hall, erected by the Irish merchants about 1780, is a splendid edifice; the exchange, gaol, &c., are handsome buildings. The most distinguished of all is the county gaol, on the site of the old castle, and the county-hall contiguous thereto; the porticoes of these two edifices, in their appropriateness of design, exactness of proportion, and grandeur of effect, have no parallel in Britain, and cannot be surpassed in any part of the world. They were erected about the commencement of the present century, under the superintendence of Mr. Harrison, a native of the city, whose refined and correct taste is also displayed in a public library, an exchange, &c. The cathedral is a venerable structure of reddish sandstone, built in the 8th century; there are 8 other churches, and several dissenting places of worship, a county infirmary, and several schools. It is one of the great centres of the post-office establishment, being on the line of the mail conveyance from London to Dublin. The Irish letters to and from Liverpool, Manchester, and the West Riding of Yorkshire, concentrate at and diverge from Chester. It derives great advantage from its railway systems. See CHESHIRE.

In 1839, an ancient Gothic chapel was discovered, nearly buried in rubbish, but in an admirable state of preservation. A new bridge, of a single arch of 200 feet in the span, has recently been erected over the Dee, at an expense of 40,000*l.*, from a design by Mr. Thomas Harrison. The old bridge, consisting of seven arches, has within the last few years been considerably widened and improved.

The municipal government is vested in a mayor and court of aldermen.

CHESTER, a county at the S.E. extremity of the state of Pennsylvania, bounded on the N.E. by the Schuylkill river, and intersected by the Brandy wine, celebrated for the battle fought on the E. bank, on the 11th September, 1777, when the American army sustained a severe defeat. The county is about 35 m. from N. to S., and 15 in mean breadth. Pop. 57,515. West Chester, on the E. border of the county, 18 miles from Philadelphia, on the great western road to Pittsburg, is the chief town.

CHESTER DISTRICT, a county or district in the N. part of the state of South Carolina, bounded on the E. by the Catawba river, and W. by Broad River, distant from each other about 25 miles. This district is about 20 m. from N. to S.; and contains a population of 17,747. The chief town of the same name is 60 miles N. by W. of Columbia.

There are several other towns named Chester in different parts of the United States of North America, among which are the following, with their distance and bearing from the chief town of the state in which they are respectively situate, viz.:—In Rockingham county, New Hampshire, 20 miles S. by E.; Windsor county, Vermont, 70 S.; Hampden co. Massachusetts, 70 W.; Orange county, New York, 110 S.; Warren county, New York, 86 N.; Morris county, New Jersey, 33 N.; Burlington county, New Jersey, 30 N.; Delaware county, Pennsylvania, 85 W. by N.; Shenandoah co. Virginia, 190 N.W.; Cumberland co. Virginia, 45 W.; Kent county, Maryland, 67 N.E. by E.

CHESTERFIELD, a borough in Derbyshire, England, with a market on Saturdays. Next to Derby it is the most important trading town in the county, and situate in a fertile and most romantic district. It has mines of coal and iron in its vicinity, and a canal communicating with the Trent below Gainsborough. Earthenware is manufactured in the neighbourhood to a great extent. It has also silk and other mills; net factories; and has also recently been much improved by new streets. It has two churches, one very ancient, and noted for its crooked spire; four meeting-houses; also a handsome town-hall, a theatre, assembly rooms, baths, libraries, an ancient grammar school, and a very large market-place. The North Midland railway passes it. It is 150 miles N. by W. of London, 12 from Sheffield, and 26 from Nottingham.

CHESTERFIELD DISTRICT, a frontier district of South Carolina, bordering on North Carolina; bounded on the E. by the Great Pedee river, and W. by Lynch's Creek; it contains 450 square miles, and a population of 8574. The chief town, of the same name, is 111 miles N.E. of Columbia.

Chesterfield is also the name of several towns in the United States of North America, the chief of which are as follows, viz.:—In Essex county, New York, 158 miles N.; St. Lawrence county, New York, 250 N. by W.; Cheshire county, New Hampshire, 70 S.W.; Hampshire county, Massachusetts, 85 W. The bearing and distances are from the chief towns of the respective states.

CHESTERFIELD INLET, an inlet extending about 200 miles westward from the N. end of Hudson's Bay; the entrance to the inlet is in lat. 63. 30. N. long. 90. 40. W.; its mean breadth is about 15 miles.

CHESTER-LE-STREET, a parish in the county of Durham, containing 18 townships. The parish abounds in coal, and is intersected by the river Wear; the township of Chester-le-Street, is situate on the W. bank of the Wear; 6 m. N. of Durham, and 18 S. of Newcastle.

CHESTERTOWN, a port of the United States, state of Maryland. Here is Washington College, incorporated in 1782; 45 miles E. S. E. of Baltimore.

CHEVIOT HILLS, a ridge of mountains in England, which runs from N. to S. through Northumberland and Cumberland, famous for its free chase, formerly much used by the English and Scotch gentry. These hills are now chiefly wild and open sheep-walks; goats also are fed among them, and some of the finest cattle in the kingdom, in parts of the Scottish border. Near these many an obstinate battle has been fought between the English and Scots, before the two kingdoms were united; among which may be numbered the encounter between the Earls Percy and Douglas, celebrated in the ancient ballad called Chevy Chase. The altitude of the peak called Cheviot Hill, which is about 20 miles W. by N. of Alnwick, is 2658 ft. above the level of the sea; other peaks of the range rise 300 to 400 feet higher.

CHEVRES, a town of France, department of Charente; 8 miles from Rochefoucauld. Pop. 1300.

CHIAPA, a province of the republic of Guatemala. This province extends from the lat. of 14. 50. to 17. 30. of N. lat., and lies between the long. of 90. 20. and 92. 50. W., being about 180 miles in extreme length, but the mean breadth not exceeding more than about 100 miles. The Andes run into this province in broken ridges at its S. E. extremity; but, towards its more western boundary, the grand mountain chain may be said to be completely divided. The Tabasco river rises at the foot of the termination of the mountain chain, runs first in a W. N. W. direction, and afterwards takes a northerly course through the province of Tabasco, into the Bay of Campeachy, thereby affording an advantageous opening with the Atlantic Ocean, there being no river of any note running out of Chiapa into the Pacific Ocean. With the exception of the S. E. part, Chiapa may be considered a level rather than a mountainous country, and exceedingly fertile. Nearly all the animated creatures and vegetable productions common to the tropical section of this division of the globe are common in Chiapa. Its forests will supply abundance of cypress, cedar, pine, walnut, and other timber, whilst the cultivated parts will yield abundance of cotton, cocoa, coffee, sugar, and cochineal, with a boundless variety of aromatic resins, gums, and dyes, to constitute fit and ample equivalents to exchange for the varied useful productions of European art. See VILLA HERMOSA.

CHIAPA, the chief town of the preceding province, is situate on the W. side of the river Tabasco, near the N. W. extremity of the province, in the lat. of 17. 5. N. and 92. 40. of W. long. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 20,000, chiefly Indians; hence it is called Chiapa dos Indios, in contradistinction to another town about 20 miles W called Chiapa dos Espagnols, in consequence of its being inhabited chiefly by persons of Spanish descent; the latter is sometimes called Ciudad Real, and is the see of a bishop, having a stately cathedral, and several monastic establishments; its population is, however, inconsiderable, not exceeding 2000.

CHIARENZA. See CLARENZA.

CHIARI, a town of Italy, in Bresciana, where the Austrians defeated the French in 1701. It is situated between two rivers which fall into the Oglio, on the E. side; 15 miles N. N. E. of Crema. Pop. 8000.

CHIAROMONTE, a town of Sicily, in Val di Noto, seated on a mountain; 25 miles W. of Syracuse; it gave the surname to the family of the virtuous and amiable Pope Pius VII.

CHIAVARI, a town of the territory of Genoa, situate at the mouth of the river falling into the gulf; about 20 miles S. E. of Genoa. It has several manufactures. Population about 8000.

CHIAVENNA, a town of North Italy, capital of a country of its name, subject to the Grisons. It is a trading place, especially in wine and delicate fruits, being the principal communication between the Milanese and Germany. The governor's palace and the churches are magnificent; and the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. Here are the ruins of a once celebrated fortress, on the summit of a rock; and close to the town is a rock of asbestos. It is seated on the banks of the river Maira, which falls into the N. end of the Lake of Como. Pop. about 3000. The district, which is mountainous, contains a population of about 18,000.

CHICAGO, a river of the state of Illinois, North America, which enters near the S. end of Lake Michigan, and is composed of two branches: the N. branch 40 miles long, and the other only about 6. They are sufficiently deep for a harbour to vessels navigating the Lakes.

CHICAGO, a city of the state of Illinois, and capital of Cook county. It is beautifully situated on level ground, above the reach of floods between the junction of the N. and S. branches of the Chicago river, and extends along the shore of the Lake Michigan for about a mile. An artificial harbour has been made to prevent the accumulation of the bar. Numerous steam boats ply between here and Buffalo, and other places on the Lakes. At the back of the city is a fertile prairie, and on the river and lake shore, are extensive tracts of fine timber. The canal now in progress from this place to the Illinois river will add to its importance. It is 204 miles N. N. E. of Springfield. Pop. in 1840, 4470.

CHICASAWS, or CHICKASAWS. See INDIAN TERRITORY.

CHICHACOTTA, a fortified town of Bootan, on the S. frontier, frequently taken and retaken by the British India troops, in the war with the Bootecas in 1772. It is 84 miles

S. by E. of Tassasudon. Long. 89. 35. E. lat. 26. 35. N.

CHICHESTER, a city, and the capital of Sussex, and a county of itself, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and sends two members to parliament. It is a bishop's see, and has seven churches, beside the cathedral, a spacious edifice, 410 ft. in length, with a tower, surmounted by a spire rising to the height of 297 feet. The city is walled round, and had formerly four gates. It exports corn, malt, &c., has some foreign commerce, and a manufacture of needles. The haven affords fine lobsters. It is seated in a plain, on the river Levant, near its entrance into an arm of the English Channel. The south coast railway goes through this city; twelve miles east-north-east of Portsmouth, and 61 south-west of London.

CHIGLANA, a town of Spain, province of Andalusia; seated on a canal which is connected with the Cadiz harbour; 17 miles from Cadiz. Pop. 10,000.

CHIELEFA, a town of European Turkey, in the Morca, near the Gulf of Coron; 14 miles W. of Colokythia.

CHIEM-SEE, a lake of Bavaria, 35 miles in circumference. In the midst of it are two islands; on one of them is a convent of Benedictine nuns, and on the other an Augustine monastery. It lies 22 miles W. N. W. of Salzburg, and discharges its waters by the river Alza, in a northerly direction, into the Inn.

CHIERI, a town of Piedmont, surrounded by an ancient wall, in which are six gates. It has four grand squares; many churches and religious houses, and considerable manufactures of cloth and silk. It is 7 miles E. of Turin. Pop. about 11,000.

CHIETI. See CIVITA DI CHIETI.

CHIGWELL, a village in Essex; 10 miles N. E. of London. It is noted for a free-school, founded by Archbishop Harsnett, where William Penn was educated.

CHIHUAHUA, a city in the province of Chihuahua, situate in the lat. of 28. 50. N. on the high road from the city of Mexico to Santa Fé; about 700 miles N. N. W. of Mexico. Chihuahua is a considerable place, having several public buildings, and about 10,000 or 11,000 inhabitants. The principal church is a beautiful edifice; the surrounding country is productive in silver, though not so much worked as formerly.

CHILCA, a small seaport of Peru; about 30 miles S. of Lima.

CHILE, or CHILE, an independent state of South America, extending from the lat. of 25. 20. to 42. 50. S. and from 68. 50. to 74. 20. of W. long; bounded on the W. by the Pacific Ocean, and on the E. by the Andes, which divide it from the United Provinces of Buenos Ayres; being about 1350 miles in length, from N. to S., and 130 in mean breadth, in a position from the S. of N. N. E.

Antecedent to the irruption of the Spaniards into this part of the world, Chili was divided into several independent states, of whom the earliest information hitherto obtained respecting them is, that in 1450, Upanqui, the then Inca of Peru, made inroads upon the Chilean territory, and subdued the four northern provinces; at the southern boundary of which their progress was stayed by the bravery of a tribe called the Promancians. The Peruvians, however, remained masters of the four provinces, up to the period of 1535, when it was first visited by the Spaniards, who invaded it from Peru with a force of 570 Europeans and 15,000 Peruvians, under the command of Almagro, the coadjutor of Pizarro. Two-thirds of the number of this expedition perished with fatigue on the march; the remainder, however, succeeded in reaching the northern province of Chili, and the Spaniards were received by the inhabitants with cordiality and respect; but the perfidy and baseness of Almagro indulged in the wanton massacre of some of the chief men of the country, and thereby raised the indignation of the whole population against him; and having, in a general engagement with the Promancians, sustained a complete defeat, and dissatisfaction prevailing among his troops, he returned to Peru in 1538. In 1540, however, Pizarro despatched another expedition, under the command of Valdivia, who, after much resistance, succeeded in extending his arms as far as Maypocho; and from that period the Spaniards maintained possession in the country, though not without repeated conflicts with the natives, and occasional reverse of fortune; and such has been the bravery of the Araucans, a tribe of Indians occupying the southern part of the territory, from the lat. of 37. to 42. S. that up to the present time they have never been subdued. The last conflict in which they were engaged with the Spaniards was in 1773, in which great slaughter ensued, without a decided triumph to either party. From that period, however, tranquillity has generally prevailed, the Araucans having since then had a resident at Santiago, more in the character of representative of an independent nation, than a conquered or dependent province. The more southern portion of the territory, to the lat. of 42. S., is occupied by the Araucans, and the Island of Chiloe, projecting into the Pacific Ocean, forms the southern extremity of the territory, which is separated from Peru on the N., by the dreary desert of Atacama. The Andes, which flank the whole eastern boundary, rise to an average altitude of 12,000 to 14,000 feet above the level of the sea, having, in the course of this range, 14 volcanoes in a state of constant eruption, and several others which emit occasionally. All of them are, however, too remote from the inhabited parts of the territory, either to occasion inconvenience, or inspire terror, by the violence of their eruption. It is divided into eight provinces, the area and population of which have been estimated as follows:—(but see Appendix.)

PROVINCES.	AREA. Sq. M.	POPULATION.	CHIEF TOWNS.
Coquimbo . . .	48,000	Coquimbo.
Aconcagua . . .	14,000	San Felipe.
Santiago . . .	12,000	Santiago.
Colchagua . . .	15,000	Valparaiso.
Maule . . .	12,000	101,130	Curico.
Concepcion . . .	18,000	102,000	Concepcion.
Valdivia . . .	40,000	6,780	Valdivia.
Chiloe . . .	11,000	44,000	San Carlos.
Total . . .	170,000	1,300,000

The several provinces are mostly divided from each other by ranges of hills, each intervening valley being intersected by one or more streams of water, contributing alike to the beauty and fertility of the country, which, as a whole, for diversity, beauty, and grandeur of feature, is unequalled in the world. Although the soil and climate of Chili are alike congenial to the culture and breed of all the fruits, grain, and animals conducive to the well-being, comfort, and enjoyment of society, its more distinguishing feature is the abundance of its mineral productions, in gold, silver, copper, tin, and iron. Such, however, for nearly three centuries, was the subduing and perverse policy of the Spaniards, that, with means to command every possible comfort, the inhabitants of this fine and fertile territory were kept in a state of barbarism, and on the verge of want. The ties of Spanish bondage, however, now appear broken, never to be united. The first movement of resistance to Spanish authority took place in 1809, which, for some time, appeared likely to succeed without interruption; but in 1814 a Spanish force from Peru subdued nearly the whole country, and held it again in subjection until 1817, when a force in the cause of independence, under the command of General San Martin, entered Chili from Buenos Ayres, and turned again the tide of victory against Spanish domination; and on the 12th of February 1819, the Chileans formally renounced all obligation to Spanish authority, and declared themselves independent; which the battle of Maypo, in the following April, not only confirmed to them, but enabled them to extend their arms, in pursuit of their oppressors, in Peru. Santiago, or St. Jago de Chili (as it is sometimes written), in the province of Maypocho, in the lat. of 33. 20., is the chief city, and to which Valparaiso, distant 100 miles W., is the seaport. The other seaports are COPIAPO, COQUIMBO, CONCEPCION, and VALDIVIA, all of which see, under their respective heads; as well as those of the several provinces respectively, for a more ample elucidation of the nature and extent of the present state of their productions, commerce, &c. &c.

CHILKA, a lake in the Deccan of Hindostan, which bounds the five Circars on the N. It lies on the coast of the Bay of Bengal, and seems the effect of the breach of the sea over a flat sandy surface, whose elevation was something above the level of the country within. It communicates with the sea by a very narrow but deep opening, and is shallow within. It is 40 miles long and 14 broad, with a narrow slip of ground between it and the sea. It contains many inhabited islands. On the N. W. it is bounded by a ridge of mountains, a continuation of that which extends from the Mahanuddy to the Godavery river, and shuts up the Circars towards the continent.

CHILICOTHE, the chief town of Ross county, Ohio, and second in rank in the state; seated on a point of land formed by Point Creek, and the W. bank of the Scioto river, 70 miles, by the water-course, above its entrance into the Ohio; it has several mills and manufactures in its vicinity. The Grand Canal passes through the town, and adds much to its commerce. It is 45 miles S. of Columbus, the capital of the state, and 90 E. by N. of Cincinnati. Pop. 3977.

CHILLON, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Berne, at the end of the lake of Geneva. On a rock in the lake is an ancient castle, which has lately been used as a state prison. It is 5 miles E. S. E. of Vevay.

CHILMARRY, a town of Hindostan, in the district of Rungpoor, Bengal, on the Brahmaputra river. It has a trade in rice and cotton, and is a place of pilgrimage.

CHILOE, ISLAND AND ARCHIPELAGO OF. The island of Chiloe forms the southern extremity of the territory of Chili; separated from the province of Araucan on the N. by a channel 4 to 5 miles wide. It is 140 miles in length, and about 50 in mean breadth; separated on the E. from the main land by a gulf about 50 miles wide, containing 46 small islands, 15 uninhabited, forming the Archipelago of Chiloe. The total population in 1832 was 43,830. San Carlos is the capital. Castro, seated at the head of a bay, opening into the Archipelago, is the principal town.

CHILPANZINGO, a considerable town, 2500 feet above the level of the sea; 65 miles N. by E. of Acapulco, on the road to Mexico.

CHILQUES Y MASQUES, a district of the province of Cuzco, Peru, lying E. of the Apurimac river, having a ridge of the Andes for its E. boundary. It is a fertile district, containing about 16,000 inhabitants. Parino, in the lat. of 12. 45. S. and 71. 35. of W. long., is the chief town.

CHILTERN, a chain of chalky hills in England, passing from E. to W., out of Hertfordshire, through the middle of Buckinghamshire, to the Thames at Henley. This district formerly belonged to the crown, which, from time immemorial, has had the nominal office of steward of the Chiltern Hundreds, by the acceptance of which a commoner vacates his seat in parliament.

CHIMAY, a town of Belgium, in the forest of Thierarche. Near it are mines of iron, with founderies and forges. It is seated near the French frontier; 12 miles N. W. of Rocroy.

CHINBORAZO, the highest peak of the Andes, in the province of Quito, Colombia; lat. 1. 30. S. On the 23rd of June, 1797, this mountain was ascended by the Prussian traveller, Humboldt, to the height of 19,300 feet above the level of the sea, when a chasm several hundred feet wide prevented the summit being attained; the extreme altitude of which is 21,440. At the height attained the cold was intense, and respiration rendered difficult by the extreme tenuity of the air. The peak is about 100 miles N. N. E. of Guayaquil, and presents a most magnificent spectacle for many leagues out at sea, in the Pacific Ocean.

CHIMERA, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, with a fort; seated on a rock, at the entrance of the Adriatic; 24 miles S. of Avlona.

CHINA, an empire of Asia. In its most extended sense, it reaches E. and W. from the Sea of Okhotsk to Kokhan and Budakshan a distance of 3350 miles, and N. and S. from Tonquin to Asiatic Russia, about 2100 miles, enclosing an area of about 5,300,000 square miles, and including all the table land of eastern Asia, about a tenth part of the habitable globe, or one-third of the continent of Asia. But these limits embrace the various Chinese possessions, which will be found described under their respective titles of Tibet, Mongolia, Chinese Tartary, &c. CHINA PROPER is about 1500 miles average breadth from N. to S., and about 1400 from E. to W., and its area has been estimated at between 1,297,999 and 1,482,091 square miles. It has about 2500 miles of coast line, and is about eight times as large as France, and eleven times that of Great Britain. The N. and N.E. part of China Proper is bounded by a wall, which divides it from Mongol Tartary, and the W. by Kokonor and Sifan, provinces of Thibet, at present but little known; and the S.W. province of Yunnan borders on the Birman Empire, and the territory of Tonquin. Every part of this extensive territory appears to be intersected by streams of water, falling into two grand rivers, both rising in Thibet, and falling into the sea, one in the lat. of 31. 30., and the other in lat. 34. N.. The most northerly of these is called the HOANG-HO, or GREAT YELLOW RIVER, and the other the KIANG-KEOU, or the GREAT RIVER (each of which see under their respective heads). There are also several lakes in the interior; two S. of the Kiang-keou, called Tong-tong and Poyang, each contains about 300 square miles of surface; and in the latter are several islands. The coast also, from the Gulf of Tonquin to the mouth of the Great River, is flanked by a chain of small islands; and, as forming an integral part of China Proper, are the islands of Hainan and Formosa; the former at the S. extremity of the empire, intersected by the lines of 19. of N. lat. and 113. of E. long., and the other intersected by the line of the tropic of Cancer, and the 121st of E. long.; and as dependent islands, are the Lekey, or Loo Choo Islands, the principal of which is 150 miles in length from N. to S., and 30 to 40 in breadth, in the long. of 129. E. and the lat. of 36. N. Between these and Formosa is another group, thirty or forty in number, nearly all of which are inhabited. Mountain ridges run in various directions over nearly every part of China Proper: but there are none remarkable for their altitude; and, in an aggregate sense, it may be considered a level rather than a mountainous country.

In the N.E. part of China Proper is an immense plain, above 700 miles in length, and from 150 to 500 miles in breadth. It is bounded on the N. by the Great Wall, in which part it is dry and sandy, but is extremely populous altogether, and also, with some few exceptions, exceedingly fertile and well cultivated. It is to her mighty rivers that China owes much of her fertility, and her vast means of supplying her enormous population. The Hoang-ho, or Yellow River, so called from the large quantities of yellow clay which it brings down, so much so as to sensibly diminish the depth of the Yellow Sea, into which it flows, and which will at no distant period become dry land from the same cause. But the Yang-tse-kiang is the principal river of China; and with its extended course of 2300 miles, its innumerable tributaries, and the numerous canals connected with it, it becomes the main artery for the internal communication with the entire country. From these circumstances, the importance of the new European trading port, near its mouth, Shang-hae, may be inferred. The other rivers, though far exceeding in magnitude any of those in Europe, are too numerous even to be particularised here.

Respecting the political divisions of the empire, it is believed that tolerably accurate statistics are collected by the imperial government. It is divided and sub-divided in the most systematic manner. Formerly it was separated into fifteen provinces; but in the Emperor Kien-long's reign, the two largest were subdivided, so that there are now eighteen. The areas of each of these, according to Lord Macartney's estimate, is shown in the ensuing tables.

The population of China has long been supposed to be by far the most dense in the world, in comparison with its area. We have several enumerations at different periods, but there are such great discrepancies between them, that it must be confessed that no great dependence can be placed on their accuracy. Still it is beyond question that the amount is most enormous, and the following may perhaps be a correct enumeration:—

Of all the communities at present existing, that of China is unquestionably the most ancient; and, from a very early period, had obviously made great progress in the arts of social life; but of the origin of the community nothing satisfactory is at present known. Of their origin, the most rational supposition is, that the Chinese were among the first portion of the wandering tribes spread over the northern hemisphere, dispersed from some of the populous districts of that time, who formed themselves into a social community; whilst an examination of the localities and natural advantages of the territory of China proper, as well with reference to the natural fertility of its soil, as the variety, and adaptation to the wants of a social community, of its indigenous productions, will sufficiently account for the numerical extent and peculiarity of manners of its population. By the writings of Confucius (the only Chinese that appears to have obtained immortality among them), who flourished 520 years before our era, China had then attained nearly, if not quite, as high a degree of sociality and refinement as prevails there at the present time; and, indeed, the moral character of the people, which may be considered the surest foundation of, and best security for, the permanence and well being of every community, appears progressively to have increased in turpitude since the time of Confucius; and, that China has not experienced the fate (viz. subjection or dissolution) which has befallen every other nation, on the perversion of moral order, is to be ascribed entirely to the local barriers of deserts and mountains with which it is protected, and not to any efficiency or superior agency of the people. But, in fact, in the twelfth century, China Proper may be considered as having been subjected to the arms of the Mongol Tartar chief, Genghis Khan, who subverted the then ruling power, and established a Tartar dynasty in the government of China: but notwithstanding this change in the ruling power, instead of the territory of China yielding itself up as a dependent province of Tartary, the superior fertility of China brought Tartary into its subservience; thereby reversing the usual result of conquest; in the conquering becoming the dependent; and the dynasty of Genghis also gradually declined in influence, until it became entirely supplanted again by one of Chinese origin, which ruled undisturbed until the commencement of the 17th century, when a host of Manchoo Tartars from the N. E. part of Asia poured down their arms, and by whom the ruling power in China was again subverted, but with the same result to the country as in the former instance, the revolution having only extended itself to the central government, and substitution of a Tartarian for a Chinese sovereign. The Manchoo dynasty is now threatened with subversion by a Chinese rebellion, headed by a native chief, who professes a spurious Christianity. They have taken Nankin, Shanghai, in 1854-5, and other important places, and are apparently in the ascendant. Amid these various changes, no material alteration appears to have been effected in the character, habits, or manners of the people.

The districts on the sea coast are generally the best inhabited, and the richest: the tracts along the Yang-tse-kiang the most fertile. Large and flourishing cities are only found where a ready water communication with other parts of the empire can be carried on. The greatest sameness exists in all the cities. In the larger ones are a few well paved streets, lined with shops; but the greater part of the streets are very narrow, extremely filthy, and planted with mere hovels. The suburbs of many cities are much larger than the cities themselves; and it is by no means extraordinary to see an immense walled space without any houses, where formerly a city stood. Villages and hamlets have a beautiful appearance at a distance, but on entering them one sees nothing but a heap of houses irregularly thrown together, the outside fair to behold, but the inside without furniture or comforts, and more filthy even than a stable. This does not apply to one district only, but it is common to most. Although the fields and gardens are beautifully laid out, there yet appears in them little attention to elegance or pleasure. The gardens are very few; and a Chinese grandee delights more in artificial landscapes laid out in a small compass, than in an extensive park and flower garden. Utility is studied in preference to pleasure. The grandeur of natural scenery is in many parts of China as striking as in many parts of the world. Mountains, crags, rivulets, and valleys, both picturesque and romantic, are found in most provinces. Commanding situations are chosen for temples, the haunts of superstition and idolatry. These serve likewise for taverns, stages, public halls, and gambling houses. The building of houses is regulated by law: none is allowed to exceed a certain dimension. Public halls have little to recommend them; the Chinese were never great architects; they understood the building of dwelling houses but not of palaces.

The climate is very various in the different regions of this extensive territory. In the N., though in the latitude of southern Italy, the climate of Pekin in winter is that of Norway, and in summer that of Cairo. In the Western districts, the mountains have great influence in diffusing cold, while the sea moderates it on the East coast. In the South, at Canton on the Tropic, the heat in July, August, and September is excessive, causing frightful tornadoes, called typhoons, which do not extend far from Canton. After this season, the transition from the day heats to night fogs and cold are greater than in any other part of the globe. The climate of the interior is generally not of such extremes, and enjoys a much more equable temperature. The W. frontier districts of Yun-nan and Sze-chuen are said to be unhealthy, and are the places whither criminals are banished. Pe-che-lee, the N. E. province, is low, flat, and marshy on the coast, but more hilly in the interior; the pop. are more depressed than in any other province. Shan-se is more scantily peopled than other parts. Shan-se and Kan-suh were formerly united; the former contains some unworked gold mines, but neither of them are so important as other portions of the empire. Ho-nan is one of the most fertile districts of the great plain, and is called the garden of China. Kiang-se is the great drain of China, containing the Poyang Lake; but has fertile and well cultivated valleys. It has also very extensive manufactures, including the important one of China ware. Hoo-nan is traversed by the Yang-tse-kiang and is extremely fertile. The tea grown in the vicinity of the capital of Hoo-pih is superior, as is the bamboo paper made there. Kevei-chou is called the Switzerland of China, and in its south part are some intractable tribes, who have preserved their independence and make predatory incursions into the neighbouring provinces. Shan-tung in the north is bleak and barren, but supplies the whole empire with coal. The Kiang-tsu and Gan-hwuy provinces were once united in the province of Kiang-nang, and are both crossed by the great rivers, the Hoang-ho, and Yang-tse-kiang; and from their important situation, and great local and artificial advantages, they may be considered as the best territory in China. The staple productions are grain, especially rice, cotton, green teas, and silk. Che-kiang is the smallest province, but is most assiduously cultivated, producing abundance of tea. Fo-kien consists of barren hills and sandy plains, but the former, by unremitting industry, produces vast quantities of tea; and also China oranges. Quang-tong has many valuable products, but not tea, though Canton (its capital) is the great entrepôt for that article. Kwang-se is principally mountainous, and produces gold and other metals. Its inhabitants differ in language and habits from other Chinese. Yun-nan is mountainous, and furnishes the copper for Chinese coinage. Sze-chuen, the western province, is the largest; plains, mountains, and extensive deserts are its chief features.

In some of the provinces of China, part of the exactions for the support of the government are levied in kind—in grain and rice. This fact, whilst it serves to show somewhat the nature of the soil in the respective provinces, leads to the consideration of a feature in the policy of China, peculiar at this time to itself, but which appears in past times to have been acted upon both in Egypt and in Rome; viz. that of storing of grain to meet the exigencies of occasional dearth. The average stock maintained in China for this purpose is about 30,000,000 of S&I, equal to about 2,000,000 of English tons, in the proportion of one-sixth rice, and the remainder in grain, chiefly maize and wheat; and although this quantity is not more than equal to two months' subsistence for the aggregate population, yet, when it is considered that China proper extends through 20 degrees of latitude, partly within the tropic of Cancer, and 25 degrees of longitude, in which extensive range it is not likely that a scarcity would, at most, pervade more than one-fifth part, if so much, at one time, it is probable that the quantity in question has proved, by the experience of centuries, adequate to its proposed object; and it is unquestionably a measure, if duly regulated, worthy the adoption of every social community.

As there is scarcely a town, or even a village in China, which has not the advantage either of an arm of the sea or a canal, navigation is so common, that almost as many people live on the water as on land. The Great Canal runs from N. to S., from the city of Canton to the extremity of the empire; and by it all kinds of foreign merchandise entered at that city are conveyed directly to Peking, a distance of 825 miles. This canal is about 50 feet wide, passes through or near 41 large cities, and has 75 large sluices to keep up the water, besides several thousand bridges. China owes a great part of her riches to these numerous canals, which are cut through any kind of private property, not even excepting the gardens of the emperor.

Among the fruits peculiar to China, and in addition to the orange, lemon, lime, citron, pomegranate, and the vine, in great variety, are the tse-tse, a kind of fig; the li-tchi, of the size of a date, its stone covered with a soft juicy pulp, of an exquisite taste, but dangerous when eaten to excess; the long-yen, or dragon's-eye, its pulp white, tart, and juicy, not so agreeable to the taste, but more wholesome than the li-tchi. Of esculent plants they have an infinity unknown to Europe. They cultivate also the bottom of their waters; the beds of their lakes, ponds, and rivulets producing crops unknown to us, particularly of the pi-tsi, or water-chestnut, the fruit of which (found in a cover formed by its root) is exceedingly wholesome, and of a very delicate taste. Among the trees peculiar to China are the tallow-tree, the fruit of which is white, the size of a small walnut, and the pulp has the properties of tallow; the wax-tree, producing a kind of white wax almost equal to that made by bees; the tsi-chu, or varnish-tree, which produces the admirable Chinese varnish; the tie-ly-mou, or iron-wood, the wood of which is so hard and heavy that it sinks in water, and the anchors of the Chinese ships are made of it; the camphire-tree; the bamboo reeds, which grow to the height and size of a large tree, and besides being used as natural pipes to convey water, are employed for numberless other purposes; the tea-plant, &c., with cotton, betel, and tobacco: the flowering shrubs, flowers, herbs, and medicinal plants, are exceedingly numerous. In the mountains and forests are wild animals of every species; but that valuable quadruped the musk-deer, is peculiar to this country. Of its birds, the most beautiful in China, and perhaps in the world, is the kin-hi, or golden fowl. Gold and silver are said to be common in several parts of the empire; but the working of the mines is interdicted, to prevent, as is pretended, the produce leading to a derangement of their general system of policy. The mountains also, chiefly in the N. and W. parts of the empire, contain mines of iron, tutenag, copper, and quicksilver, as well as quarries of marble, coal, lapis-lazuli, jasper, rock crystals, granite, and a kind of sonorous stones, of which musical instruments are composed; and here is potters' earth, of such various and superior kinds that the fine porcelain of China is unrivalled. The number of domestic animals appears to be very limited, and animal food, though not interdicted either from state or religious scruples, as is the case over a great part of Hindostan, is very uncommon.

The most singular characteristic in the civil policy of China, is the total absence of all state religion and priesthood, which is supposed to have been subverted for the two-fold purpose of preventing a priesthood from sharing in the influence of the government, and the people from congregating in too large numbers; and the latter notion seems also to have precluded the toleration of public theatres. Both religious worship and dramatic representations are, however, universal throughout the empire. Of the former, every house has its own altar and collection of gods, the form and number of which are generally in proportion to the taste of the head of the family to select, and of his ability to purchase; hence their religious worship may be said to resolve itself into one of their most extensive branches of manufacture. In like manner the dramatic representations are all of a family nature, the performers consisting of strolling companies, who engage themselves for an evening to any one that can afford to pay them. Connected with the question of religion, the civil policy of China tolerates polygamy. It appears, however, not to be so extensively indulged in, as in other parts of Asia and Africa. Burials are not permitted in cities or towns, and their sepulchres are commonly on barren hills and mountains. They pretend to have a great veneration for their ancestors; and some keep images of them in their houses, to which they pay a sort of adoration. They have laws, which regulate the civilities and ceremonious salutations they pay to each other; for which reason they always appear to be extremely good-natured, whilst low cunning and deceit is their ruling passion: and yet, while infanticide is not unfrequent among them, they are not destitute of social affections in their families. In person, the complexion of the Chinese is a sort of tawny, and they have large foreheads, small eyes, short noses, large ears, long beards, and black hair; and those who are thought to be the most handsome who are the most bulky. The women affect a great deal of modesty, and are remarkable for their little feet. The men endeavour to make a pompous appearance when they go abroad; and yet their houses are mean and low, consisting only of a ground floor. The Chinese, as is well known, are remarkable for their industry, and every inch of ground is most assiduously cultivated, but in these operations, industry usurps the place of ingenuity and science, so that they are of the rudest description. In manufactures they are highly distinguished; their porcelain, their silks, carvings in ivory and mother-of-pearl, are well known in Europe, where they cannot be excelled. The government is of an entirely different character from those which are established in other parts of the world. The emperor, to whom divine honors are paid, theoretically is supreme, his will is law, and he is held to be the father of the entire nation. In reality his power is limited, and the chief defect of the constitution appears to be the want of effectual control of the inferior agents. All offices are honorary. The mandarins are all selected for their acquirements, and are subdivided into a great number of classes. The government is represented in the most opposite terms by different authors, as a despotism employed to vex and crush the people, or else administered with inflexible moderation and humanity. The Chinese character is also represented in most opposite terms, by some as of a very degraded description, and by others in much more favourable terms. The truth perhaps belongs to both these classes. The natives in the interior, apart from the contamination of European vices at Canton, are certainly superior to those more known to us. With the recent events which have changed the character of European connexion with this nation, most people are familiar. A misunderstanding with Commissioner Yeh in 1856, respecting a small vessel, led to hostilities, which resulted in the occupation of Canton by the British forces, and the capture of the commissioner, in 1858. After much equivocation, a treaty was signed at Tien-tsin for opening certain ports, and for the residence of a British minister at Peking. Similar treaties were likewise made with France, Russia, America, &c. On June 25, 1859, by a treacherous attack by the Pei-ho forts on the squadron conveying the British minister, our forces were disastrously worsted. This led to more vigorous measures, and, in 1860, a combined French and English army marched victoriously on Peking, which reluctantly opened its gates to them; terms of submission were exacted which, it was hoped, would secure a firm peace, and an English envoy took up his residence in Peking. The recent death of the emperor may, however, produce fresh complications.

CHINCHA ISLANDS, a small cluster of rocky islets lying off the coast of Peru, and now frequented by shipping for the guano, a manure produced by sea-fowl, with which they are covered. The trade first commenced at Ichabo, a rocky islet off the S.W. coast of Africa. The Chincha Islands belong to Peru, and are in lat. 13. 38. S. long. 76. 25. W; 100 S.E. of Lima.

CHITPOOR, a considerable town of Guzerat, about 30 miles N. E. of Mangalore, on the shore of the Arabian Sea. It has extensive manufactures of chintzes.

CHITRO, or KITRO, a town of European Turkey, Macedonia, on the W. shore, near the head of the Bay of Salonichi. Here the mother, wife, and son of Alexander were murdered by Cassander. It is 36 miles S.S.E. of Edessa.

CHITTAGONG, a province of Asia, lying between the Bay of Bengal and Arracan. It was conquered from Arracan by Aurungzebe, in 1666, and now belongs to the English East India Company. Islamabad is the chief town. Pop. 790,000.

CHITTELDRÖG, or CHALTRAKAI, a strong fort and town of Hindostan, capital of the N. E. district of Mysore. The plain of Chitteldroog is 10 miles long and 4 broad, surrounded by rocky hills, on one of which stands the fort. The town formerly occupied a great portion of the plain, and is still a considerable place, but now confined entirely within the walls, which are near the foot of the rock. Hyder, who obtained possession of this place by treachery, strengthened the walls; and other works have been since added, so as to render it totally impregnable against any neighbouring power. After the final defeat of Tippoo, in 1799, it belonged to the rajah of the Mysore; and the English keep a garrison here. It is 48 miles N.W. of Sera, and 117 N. by W. of Seringapatam.

CHITTENDEN, a county of Vermont; bounded on the W. for about 38 miles by Lake Champlain, between the lat. of 44. and 45. N. It is about 18 miles in mean breadth, and is divided into 24 townships. The population is 22,977. Burlington is the chief town.

CHITTENANGO, a town of New York, lying 1 mile S. of the Erie canal, in Madison county. The Syracuse and Utica railway also passes the town, where there is a depôt. There is a mineral (sulphureous) spring, 1 mile S. of the village. 120 miles W. N. W. of Albany. Pop. about 1000.

Choco, a bay of Columbia, in the Pacific Ocean. There is a town named Buenaventura, at the mouth of a river falling into this bay, in the lat. of 3. 50. N.

Choco is also the name of a district in Colombia, lying between the two first western ridges of the Andes, between the 6th and 8th degrees of N. latitude. The river Atrato intersects this district from S. to N., falling into the Gulf of Darien; the head waters of this river were united in 1783 by the Canal de Rospaldura, with the river St. Juan, falling into the Pacific Ocean, about 20 miles N. W. of Buenaventura.

CHOCATAWS, a numerous and powerful tribe of Indians. By a treaty with the United States of North America, in 1820, the boundaries of their territory enclosed about 17,000 square miles in the states of Mississippi and Alabama, intersected by the Talahochee, the Yzoo, and several other rivers; but so surrounded as to be completely subservient to any dictations which the United States Government thought proper to prescribe. They have since been located in the INDIAN TERRITORY, which see.

CHOEZIM, a town and fortress of Moldavia, situate on the S. bank of the Dneister; 110 miles N. N. W. of Jassy, and 15 S. W. of Kaminiueck, in Podolia. Choezim was the seat of repeated conflicts between the Turks and Poles, during the integrity of Poland, and, since its dissolution, between the Turks and Russians, till it was finally ceded to the latter power in 1812, and it is now included in the government of Podolia. Pop. 25,000.

CHOISEUL, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne; 12 miles N. E. of Langres.

CHOLULA, a city of Mexico, in the intendancy of Puebla, and about 7 miles W. of the city of Puebla. Previous to the irruption of the Spaniards into Mexico, Cholula was the seat of government of an independent state, which, in conjunction with three other adjoining republics, had resisted the authority of the Mexicans for several centuries. Cortes halted at Cholula, on his way to the city of Mexico, in 1519, at which time it contained about 200,000 inhabitants, who carried on extensive manufactures of cotton cloths, jewellery, and earthenware. It was also the chief place of religious resort in all Mexico, having a temple which vies with the Pyramids of Egypt in extent and magnificence; and had at that time not less than 400 other places of worship. Cholula is now comparatively an inconsiderable place, having only about 15,000 inhabitants, being eclipsed in splendour and importance by Puebla.

CHONAD, or CSONAD, an episcopal town of Hungary, and capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the S. bank of the N. branch of the Marosch river, 25 miles above its entrance into the Theiss, at Zegedin.

CHONOS, an island of the South Pacific Ocean; 20 miles long, and 5 broad; lying off the W. coast of Patagonia, and one of the Chonos Archipelago.

CHORASAN, or KHORASSAN, a province of Persia, extending from the lat. of 31. to 38. N., and from 53. to 62. of E. long, containing an area of about 80,000 square miles. It is bounded on the W. by the Great Salt Desert, Mazenderan, and the Caspian Sea; N. by the Bay of Balkan and the Desert of Karakum; N. E. by the main branch of the Jihon, or Oxus river; E. by the territory of Balk; S. E. by the Lake of Zeresh, or Durra, which divides it from Seistan; and the extreme S. projects upon the Desert of Kerman. A ridge of the Gaur mountains intersects the E. side of the province, from S. to N.; and E. of this ridge is the Magrab river, which falls into the Oxus at Amol. Another river, with several tributary streams, rises near Herat, in the S. E. corner of the province, and runs in a N. W. direction into the Bay of Balkan. Meshid, in the lat. of 37. 35. N. and 57. 15. E. long., is the capital of the province, and has a pop. of 30,000.

CHORLEY, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated on the line of the Liverpool, Lancaster, and Leeds ca-

CHURCH, STATES OF. See POPULOM.

CHURCH. There are 30 towns and villages in different parts of England, the names of which are preceded by Church, but none that claim any particular notice; the most considerable are Church Staunton in Devonshire, and Stretton in Shropshire.

CHUSAN, an island off the east coast of China, which gives its name to the surrounding archipelago. The group is very numerous, and is a dependency on the province of Che-king, the coast of which is in sight from the islands. The largest island is 50 miles in circumference, and 21 in its greatest length. It is covered with mountains, in the midst of which extend fertile valleys. Rice, cotton, tea, the tallow-tree, some varieties of pulse and fruits, are its principal productions. The climate cannot be called salubrious, but its effects were considerably diminished by the sanitary precautions adopted by the British during their military occupation. Ting-haë is the capital of the island. The barracks, the hospital, and the different English establishments were between the walls and the shore. At that period the appearance of the city was somewhat anomalous—neither English nor Chinese. Its possession would be of great importance to the English, who, at the termination of hostilities, exchanged it for Hong Kong, not so advantageous in position, but which loss is counterbalanced by the adjacent port of Shang-hae, now opened to European commerce. Chusan was taken by the English forces in 1840, and was retained by them until the stipulated ransom was paid by the Chinese in August 1846. Ting-haë is in lat. 30. 3. N. long. 122. 4. E.

CHUSISTAN. See KUSISTAN.

CIAMPA, or TSIOMPA, a small kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N. by Cochin-China, S.E. by the China Sea, W. and N.W. by Cambodia. It is more elevated than Cambodia, but not so fertile; having tracts of sand intersected with rocks. The productions are cotton, indigo, and bad silk; and the inhabitants are much employed in fishing. Cape St. James, at the S.E. extremity of the territory, is in lat. 10. 18. N. and 107. 10. E. long.; from this point the coast lies in a direction E.N.E. for about 200 miles. There are two or three small harbours along the coast, of which Cecir Bay, about 140 miles E.N.E. of Cape St. James, is the most considerable.

CICACOLE, a town of Hindostan, capital of one of the Northern Circars. It is 150 miles N.E. of Rajammundry, and 308 E.N.E. of Hyderabad. Long. 84. 8. E. lat. 18. 16. N.

CINALOA, or SINALOA, a province and town of Mexico, in the intendancy of Sonora, on the Gulf of California. The aborigines in this province are robust and warlike, and were with difficulty brought to submit to the Spaniards about the year 1771. This province produces abundance of maize, legumes, fruits, and cotton; and abounds in the richest gold mines. Pop. 60,000. The town is seated on a river of the same name, and contains about 9500 inhabitants. Long. 109. 35. W. lat. 26. 15. N.

CINCINNATI, the largest town of the state of Ohio, and the capital of Hamilton county. It is seated on the N. bank of the Ohio river, about two miles below the entrance of the Leeking, from the state of Kentucky, and 20 above the entrance of the Great Miami, and more than 600 above the entrance of the Ohio in the Mississippi, in the lat. of 39. 7. N. and 84. 27. W. long. Cincinnati has increased in population and importance more rapidly than any other town in the North American Union. The population, which in 1805 did not exceed 500, amounts to above 46,338. It has extensive flour and saw mills, worked by steam, and various manufactures. It carries on a very extensive traffic with New Orleans, in exchanging the agricultural productions of the state of Ohio, principally flour and pork, for tropical and other foreign articles; and is the most important trading town of all the territory of America, west of the Allegany mountains. The city is near the eastern extremity of a pleasant valley, skirted to the North by a picturesque range of hills, about 300 feet high, and stands on two plains, the one about 50 or 60 feet above the front. Excepting on the margin of the river it is regularly built, the streets crossing at right angles; those running E. and W. are numbered, while those running N. and S. are named after the native trees, as Walnut, Sycamore, &c. Main street extends from the steam-boat landing, directly N. to the boundary of the city. The central portion is compactly built, the other parts are scattered. The court-house, the banks, Cincinnati college, &c., are the principal buildings. There were 43 churches in 1840. Good roads converge here from many directions, and the Miami railroad extends 85½ miles to Springfield. The Miami canal, 178 miles in length, joins the Wabash and Erie canal at Defiance. The climate, though changeable, is, on the whole, healthy. The mean temperature, in 1819, was 56° 89.

CIXEPI, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, in the neighbourhood of which excellent manna is collected. It is 20 m. W. of Palermo.

CINÈY, a town of Belgium, in the territory of Liege; 17 miles S.E. of Namur, and 37 S.W. of Liege.

CINQUE PORTS, certain ports on the S coast of England, opposite France; so called on account of their being five in number, when their first charter was granted by William I. in 1077. These were Dover, Hastings, Hythe, Romney, and Sandwich, to which were afterwards added Winchelsea, Seaford, and Rye. The king appointed a constable of Dover Castle (who is now called Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports,) and invested him with the command of these ports, whose inhabitants had considerable privileges and immunities, for which they were to supply the government with 57 ships, at forty days' notice, and to pay their crews during fifteen days. At that period, the opulent traders of London were styled barons; a privilege that was enjoyed likewise by the merchants of these ports; each of which formerly returned two members to parliament, the representatives being styled Barons of the Cinque Ports. Their other privileges are now become nominal. See each place under its respective head.

CINQUE VILLAS, a town of Portugal, in Beira; 6 miles N.E. of Almeida.

CINTEGADELLE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne, on the frontier of Arriege; 17 miles S. of Toulouse. Pop. about 3000.

CINTRA, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, situate between the mountains of Cintra, on the N. side of the entrance of the Tajo. Here was a palace built by the Moors, which was destroyed by an earthquake in 1655, and rebuilt by King Joseph. It is 12 miles N.W. of Lisbon, by the inhabitants of which place it is much frequented as an occasional retreat; and is distinguished for the convention concluded at it, on the 22nd Aug. 1803, between the English general, Dalrymple, and the French general, Junot. Pop. 4500.

CLOTAT, LA, a seaport of France, in the department of Mouths of the Rhone, defended by a strong fort. It is famous for Muscadine wine, and seated on the Bay of Laquee; 14 miles S.E. of Marseilles. Pop. 5382.

CIRCARS, five provinces of the Deccan of Hindostan, on the Bay of Bengal. They were originally denominated Northern, from their position in respect to the Carnatic. Under the Mogul dynasty the government of these provinces was vested in the Nizam of the Deccan, and was assigned to the French in 1753, for arrears of pay claimed by them for auxiliary troops, with which they had supplied the Nizam. In 1759 they were conquered from the French by the English; and in 1765 were formally ceded by the Great Mogul, Shah Alum, to the English East India Company, during the governorship of Lord Clive. Four of these provinces, viz. Guntour, Condapilly, Ellore, and Rajamundry, comprise about 7000 square miles of territory, between the mouths of the Kistna and Godavery rivers, and the line of 16. to 17. of N. lat.; and the fifth, Cicacole, extends in a N.E. direction along the shore of the Bay of Bengal, from the Godavery river, in the lat. of 17 N. for about 280 miles, to the lake Chilka, and is about 60 miles in mean breadth. This is the district from whence 500,000 to 600,000 pieces of cotton manufactured goods were formerly imported into England, under the name of long cloths, salampores, and calicoes; and handkerchiefs, under the name of mazzulipatams, &c.; it is also fertile in maize. Cicacole is now divided into two districts, viz., Ganjam, Vizagapatam; and the other four Circars, resolved into three districts, viz., RAJAMUNDRY, MAZULIPATAM, and GUNTOOR, the area and population of which may be estimated as follows:—

DISTRICTS.	AREA, Sq. MILES.	POP. IN 1837.
Ganjam	3700	588,079
Vizagapatam	5500	1,047,414
Rajamundry	4650	578,529
Mazulipatam	4810	332,039
Guntoor	4560	19,318
Total	23,760	2,565,379

CIRCASSIA, a country of Asia, lying between the 44th and 45th degrees of N. lat., and longitudinally between the Black Sea, Sea of Azof, and the Caspian; its precise boundaries are very undefined: the Caucasian mountains, dividing it from the territories of the Abkhas, may be considered as forming its boundary on the S.; but the habits of the people being completely predatory, they acknowledge no boundary but that prescribed by the force of arms. It contains the districts of Great Kabarda, Little Kabarda, Beslen, Temirgoi, Abasich, Bseduch, Hatukai, and Bshani. It is now nominally subject to Russia; but they maintain their independence in defiance of the numerous attempts of the Russians to subdue them; and, from the peculiarly advantageous local circumstances of this country, and the extraordinary courage and military genius of its inhabitants, it might become very formidable were they united under one chief; but they are entirely a predatory people, divided into many different and hostile tribes, and want that spirit of unity necessary to make their power effectual. The Kabardians are the most powerful race, and their superiority has introduced a general imitation of their manners among their neighbours, so that from a description of these, an idea may be formed of all the rest. They are divided into three classes, the princes, the usdens or nobles, and the vassals or people. The people are divided into certain portions, who are each governed by a princely family, the eldest of whom is considered as chief, and the judge, protector, and father of the vassals. His person is sacred, but he cannot be a landholder. His property is nothing more than his arms, horses, slaves, and what tribute he can occasionally exact from foreign powers. In times of peace they are with difficulty distinguished from their subjects, their dress and food being the same, and their houses little better. The usdens are chosen by the princes from among the people, and are their officers, the executors of the law, and ministers of the legislature. Both the usdens and the people are proprietors of land. There does not appear to be any written law: the people are governed by a kind of common law, founded on a collection of ancient usages. They have a few manufactures; and their tillage produces scarcely sufficient for their own subsistence. The principal articles of commerce are sheep and horses, particularly the latter, which sell at a high price, being much esteemed. The balance of trade would, however, be considerably against them, were it not for the slaves they make in their predatory excursions. They have no money, and all their commerce is carried on by exchange. They almost universally subsist by robbery, being trained to it from their very cradle. This disposition naturally produces a bold adventurous spirit: they are expert horsemen and able warriors, being in general stout and well made. Their women are famed for their beauty, and chiefly supply the seraglios of Persia and Turkey. Those that are thus sold, are, however, chiefly slaves, or their descendants. They sell at from 20*l.* to 100*l.* according to their beauty. The women participate in the general character of the nation, taking pride in the courage of their husbands, and loading them with reproaches when defeated. They are kept extremely close, and the greatest reserve subsists between the married pairs. Their habitations are usually two huts, one for the husband, and the reception of strangers; and the other for the wife and family. The Circassians were formerly Christians; but, for want of instruction and written laws, they content themselves with a bare profession of being Christians or Mahometans. They have no letters of their own; and those who wish to write their language, are obliged to make use of Arabian characters. The population is uncertain, but supposed to be between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000.

CIRCLEVILLE, a town of the state of Ohio, United States. It was commenced in 1810, on the site of an ancient fortification on the E. bank of the Scioto river. The Ohio canal passes through it. It is regularly built, and the country around is very fertile, and has great water power; 26 miles S. of Columbus. Pop. in 1840, 2972.

CIRENCESTER, commonly called CICETER, a borough in Gloucestershire, returning two members to parliament, with a market on Monday and Friday. The ruins of the walls are yet visible. It had also a castle and an abbey; and here three Roman Roads, the Foss, Irmin, and Icknild, crossed each other. It is one of the greatest marts in the county for wool; and has a manufacture of curriers' knives, highly valued, and two public breweries; the church is a very stately edifice. It is seated on the banks of the little river Churn; 18 miles S. E. of Gloucester, and 89 W. of London. It communicates both with the Severn and the Thames, by a canal. The Cheltenham branch of the Great Western railway has a station here.

CIRIE, a town of Piedmont; seated on the Doria, near the foot of the Alps; 8 miles N. N. W. of Turin. Pop. 3500.

CIRTKNITZ. See CZIRNITZ.

CISMAR, a town of Lower Saxony, in Holstein; seated near the Baltic; 17 miles N. of Travemunde.

CITADELLA, or CIUADELLA, a seaport, and the capital of Minorca, surrounded by walls and bastions, with a good harbour at the N. W. point of the island. Long. 3. 11. E. lat. 39. 58. N.

CITADELLA, an inland town of the Venetian territory; 25 miles N. W. of Venice. Pop. about 6000.

CITTA DI CASTELLO, a city of Italy, with a castle; capital of a district of the same name W. of the Appennines; seated on the Tiber, 27 miles S. W. of Urbino.

CITTA NUOVA, a town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, on the Gulf of Venice; 10 miles S. of Loreto.

CITTA NUOVA, a seaport of Istria, and a bishop's see; seated on an isthmus, at the mouth of the Queto, which forms a good harbour; 26 miles S. S. W. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 13. 47. E. lat. 45. 32. N.

CITTA OF CIVITA VECCHIA, a fortified city of Malta, formerly the capital of the island, and still the seat of the bishopric. The most remarkable edifices are the palace of the grand master and the cathedral. Here are extensive catacombs, about 15 feet below the surface of the rock in which they are cut; they contain streets formed with such regularity, that the title of Subterranean City has been given to this place. Near the city is the Grotto of St. Paul, divided into three parts by iron gates; in the furthest part is an altar, and a statue of the saint, in white marble. This old city was considerably larger than at present; for the new city, Valetta, being more conveniently seated, has drawn away the greater number of inhabitants. It stands on a hill, in the interior of the island; 6 miles W. by S of Valetta.

CITY POINT. See BERMUDA HUNDRED.

CIUDAD REAL, a town of Spain, capital of la Mancha, is of all the backward inland capitals of Spain, the most backward; a fit capital of its province, la Mancha. It was, before the final conquest of Granada, the frontier capital and seat of the court of Chancery for the south; it is now scarcely ever visited, and has little intercourse with other places. The hospital founded by cardinal Lorenzana is a noble pile. Pop. about 10,000. It is 2 miles from the Guadina, and 98 S. of Madrid.

CIUDAD REAL, a city of Chiapa. See CHIAPA DOS ESPAGNOLS.

CIUDAD RODRIGO, a town of Spain in Leon, and a bishop's see; seated on the river Agnada, over which a bridge communicates with a suburb, and leads a few miles over the plains to Portugal. It was founded in 1150, but there is little worth noticing in it. The cathedral was founded in 1130, and enlarged in 1538. It was taken by the French in 1810, and retaken by the English in 1811; 50 miles S.W. of Salamanca.

CIVITA CASTELLANA, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter; seated on a high rock, at the foot of which is a river that flows into the Tiber; 25 miles N. of Rome.

CIVITA CHIETI, a city of Naples, capital of Abruzzo Citeriore, and an archbishop's see. It contains four churches and nine convents, and is situate on a mountain, near the river Pescara, a few miles above its entrance into the Adriatic; 28 miles E. of Aquila, and 56 N. of Naples.

CIVITA DI FRIULI, a town of Italy, in Friuli; seated on the Natisona; 10 miles E. of Udina.

CIVITA DI PENNA, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, near the river Salino; 25 miles N.E. of Aquila.

CIVITA DUCALE, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, on the river Velino; 10 miles W. of Aquila.

CIVITA MADONIA, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore, near which are the ruins of the famous city of Sibaris. It is seated on the Gulf of Taranto, at the influx of the Crati; 31 miles N. by E. of Cosenza.

CIVITA VECCIA, a strong seaport of Italy in the patrimony of St. Peter, with an arsenal. The chief exports are puzzolana, and a superior kind of alum, prepared at Tolfa. Here the pope's galleys are stationed, and it is a free port. It was taken by the French in 1798, and retaken by the Austrians and Russians in 1799. It is 35 miles N.W. of Rome. Long. 11.46. E. lat. 42.5. N.

CIVITELLA, a town of Naples, in Otranto; 5 miles N. of Taranto.

CIVRAY. See SIVRAY.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the S. and S.W. by the Forth, and on all other sides by Perthshire. It is 9 miles long and 6 broad; produces good corn and pasture, and plenty of coal and salt. It has also veins of lead, cobalt and antimony. Alloa is the principal town. Clackmannan and Kinross send one member to parliament.

CLACKMANNAN, a parish and town of the above county. The parish comprises nearly four-fifths of the county, and contains about 800 acres of woodland. The town is seated on an eminence, and has a harbour formed by the Devon, at its influx with the Forth. On the top of a hill, 190 feet above the level of the Forth, is a square tower which derives its name from the illustrious Robert Bruce, whose great sword and casque are here preserved. It is 27 miles W.N.W. of Edinburgh.

CLAGENFURT, or KLAGENFURT, a town of the Austrian empire, capital of Lower Carinthia. It has a strong wall, and contains six churches and three convents. Here is a manufacture of cloth, and a considerable one of white lead. This town was taken by the French in 1797, and again in 1809, when they demolished the fortifications. It stands on the river Glan, which falls into the Drave; 148 miles S.W. of Vienna. Population about 10,900.

CLAIR, ST., a lake of North America, between the Lakes Huron and Erie, 90 miles in circumference. It receives the waters of the Lakes Superior, Michigan, and Huron, and also of the river Thames, from Upper Canada, in the lat. of 42.32. N., and discharges them through the strait called Detroit, into the Lake Erie.

CLAIR, ST., a county in the state of Illinois, the W. side of which borders on the Mississippi river, in the lat. of 38.30. N. Pop. 7092. Cahokia, on the bank of the river, 81 miles S.W. by W. of Vandalia is the chief town. St. Clair is also the name of a township in Allegany county, and another in Bedford county, both in Pennsylvania.

CLAIRAC, or CLAVRAC, a town of France, in the department of Lot and Garonne. Corn and tobacco are cultivated, and a great deal of wine and brandy made here. It is seated in a valley, on the river Dord; 13 miles N.W. of Agen. Pop. about 6000.

CLAIRBORNE, a county of the state of Mississippi; bounded on the S. by the Big Black, and N. by the Yazoo rivers, and on the W., for about 25 miles, by the Mississippi river, between the lat. of 32. and 33. N. Pop. 13,078. Port Gibson, 118 miles N.W. by W. of Monticello is the chief town.

CLAIREBORNE, is also the name of another county, on the N. frontier of the eastern part of the state of Tennessee. Pop. 3474. Tazewell, N. of the mountain ridge, and 222 miles E. N. E. of Murfreesborough, is the chief town.

CLANECEY, a town of France, in the department of Nièvre. Before the late revolution, the chapel of an hospital in the suburb was the provision for the bishop of Bethleheim, who was fixed here in 1180, after the Christians had been driven from the Holy Land. Clanecey is seated at the confluence of the Rucron with the Yonne; 35 miles N.N.E. of Nevers. Pop. about 5300.

CLANE, a town of Ireland, county of Kildare, on the Liffey.

CLAPHAM, a village in Surrey, an appendage to the British metropolis; 4 miles S. of London Bridge. It is composed of a number of very neat houses, built round an extensive common, presenting a very rural, picturesque, and interesting scene.

CLAPTON, UPPER and LOWER. See HACKNEY.

CLARA, St., a small island of Peru, in the Bay of Guayaquil; 70 miles S.W. of Guayaquil. Long. 82. 20. W. lat. 2. 20. S.

CLARE, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Tuesday. Here are the ruins of a castle; also of a priory, the house of which is now occupied by a farmer, and the chapel is a barn. Clare has a manufacture of baize, and is seated near the Stour; fifteen miles S. of Bury St. Edmund, and fifty-five N. E. of London.

CLARE, a maritime county in the province of Munster, on the W. coast of Ireland, bounded on the N. by Galway Bay, and S. by the Shannon. It contains a good deal of mountainous surface; the valleys, however, are very fertile; and it breeds more horses than any other county in Ireland, beside a great number of cattle and sheep. Ennis, 113 miles W. by S. of Dublin, is the capital. Although it has 70 miles of sea-coast, it has no frequented harbour, its principal outport being Limerick. It sends two members to parliament.

CLARE, a parish and town on the N. bank of the Shannon, in the preceding county. The town is at the head of a bay, in the Shannon; 3 miles S. of Ennis. There is also another parish of the same name in the county of Galway, intersected by the river Clare, which falls into Lough Corrib; about 5 miles N. of the town of Galway.

CLAREMOUNT, a town of New Hampshire, in Cheshire county, situate on Sugar River, at its conflux with the Connecticut; 90 miles W. N. W. of Portsmouth. Pop. 3217.

CLARENDON, a village in Wiltshire; 3 miles E. of Salisbury. Here was once a royal palace, in which the parliament was several times convened; the first time by Henry II. in 1164, who enacted the laws called the Constitutions of Clarendon, by which the power of the clergy was restrained.

CLARENZA, or CHIARENZA, a small village and Cape of Greece, N.W. part of the Morea. It gives the title to the English Dukes of Clarence—one of the Dukes of Chiarenza having married into the Hainault family, a descendant of which (Philippa) was queen to Edward III., whose third son Lionel, bore the title, which has since been given to the third son of the kings of England.

CLARION, a town recently commenced in the pine woods in Pennsylvania, on the Susquehannah and Waterford turnpike road, 184 miles W. N. W. of Harrisburg. Pop. 2233.

CLARITZA, a town of European Turkey, in Jouba, at the mouth of the Penco, in the Gulf of Salonica; twenty-six miles E. of Larissa.

CLARKE, the name of several counties in different parts of the United States of North America, the principal of which are as follows, viz. with the number of inhabitants in each, and the distance and bearing of the chief town from the seat of government of each respective state:—

In Georgia . . .	10,552	Watkinsville	63 N. by W.

CLARKESBURG, a town of Virginia, chief of Harrison county, situate on the Monongahela; 40 miles S.W. of Morgan-town, and 325 N.W. of Richmond.

CLARKSON, a town of Munroe county, New York; 255 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 3486.

CLARKSTOWN, a town of Rockland county, New York, on the W. bank of the Hudson river; about 40 miles above the city of New York. Rockland Lake supplies the city with ice.

CLARKSVILLE, a town of Tennessee, chief of Montgomery county; situate on Cumberland River, at the influx of the Red River; 45 miles N. W. of Nashville. Also another town in Otsego county, New York; 61 miles W. by S. of Albany.

CLATSOPS FORT, at the mouth of Colombia River, in the Pacific Ocean, named after a tribe of Indians inhabiting the banks of that river. See ASTORIA.

CLAUDE, St., a town of France, in the department of Jura. It owes its origin to a celebrated abbey, which was secularized in 1742. The cathedral is extremely elegant; and here are many public fountains with large basins. It is seated between three high mountains, on the river Lison; 35 miles N. W. of Geneva. Pop. about 3700.

CLAVERACK, a town of New York, in Columbia county; seated in a large plain, near a creek of its name; 2 miles E. of Hudson. Pop. 3056.

CLAVO, a town of the island of Corsica; 8 miles E. S. E. of Ajaccio.

CLAUSEN, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, with a castle. The adjacent country produces a fine red wine. It stands near the river Eisack; 8 miles S. W. of Brixen.

CLAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Treves; 5 miles S. of Wittlick.

CLAUSENBERG, or COLOSWAR, a town or Transylvania, where the states of the province generally assemble. On one of the gates is an inscription in honour of Trajan. It suffered greatly by fire in 1798, at which period it contained about 13,000 inhabitants. It is seated on the Samos; 60 miles N. N. W. of Hermanstadt, and 225 E. S. E. of Vienna. Long. 23. 20. E. lat. 46. 55. N.

CLAUSTHAL, or KAUSTHAL, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Grubenhagen, and immediately contiguous to Zellerfeld. Here is a mint for coining money; and near it are some rich silver mines. It stands in the Hartz mountains; 14 miles S. S. W. of Goslar, and 48 S. E. of Hanover. Pop. about 3070.

CLAUSZ, a town of Germany, in the Traun quarter of Upper Austria; 17 miles S. W. of Steyn.

CLAY, or CLEY, a village in Norfolk, seated on an arm of the sea; 4 miles N. N. W. of Holt. It has some large salt-works, and is frequented for sea-bathing.

CLAY, an interior county in the S. E. part of Kentucky, containing 880 square miles of surface. Pop. 4607. The S. fork of the Kentucky river has its source in this county. Manchester, in the vicinity of which are some salt-works, about 100 miles S. S. E. of Frankfort, is the chief town.

CLAY, a county in the W. part of the state of Iowa, watered by the Icel River. It contains some good cultivable land, with timber and prairie. Bowling Green is the capital. Pop. in 1830, 1616; in 1840, 5567.

CLAY, a county in the S. E. part of the state of Illinois, watered by the Little Wabash River. The soil is level and fertile. Lewisville is the capital. Pop. in 1840, 3228.

CLAY, a county in the N. W. part of Missouri, on the N. side of the Missouri River. Surface undulating, and soil excellent. Capital, Liberty. Pop. in 1840, whites, 6373; slaves, 1875; total, 8248.

CLAYDON. There are five villages of this name in different parts of England, all inconsiderable.

CLAYTON. There are eight townships and villages of this name in different parts of England, the most important of which is a township in the parish of BRADFORD, Yorkshire, which see; the others are unimportant.

CLEAR CAPE, the S. point of a small island off the S. extremity of Ireland, in the lat. of 51. 20. N. and 9. 37. W. long. It generally forms the point of departure, or commencement of the reckoning, of vessels sailing out of St. George's Channel to the westward.

CLEARFIELD, an interior, large, but thinly inhabited county in the W. part of Pennsylvania, in which the western branch of the Susquehanna and several creeks have their source. Pop. 7834. The chief town, of the same name, is about 200 miles N. N. W. of Philadelphia.

CLEGUEREC, a town of France, near the N. frontier of the department of Morbihan; 11 miles N. W. of Pontivi. Pop. about 4000.

CLEMENTS ST., a town in Spain, in the province of New Castile; 40 miles from La Mancha. Pop. 4000.

CLEOBURY MORTIMER, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Thursday; seated on the river Rea; 28 miles S. S. E. of Shrewsbury, and 137 N. W. of London.

CLERKENWELL, one of the out parishes, forming an integral part of the British metropolis, lying on the N. side. A great portion of the inhabitants are employed as lapidaries, working jewellers, and in all the various branches of the manufacture of clocks, watches, and time-keepers, which are here made in greater perfection than in any other part of the world. In this district are extensive distilleries, several iron foundries, and various other manufactures, as also the works of the New River Company, which supply a great portion of the metropolis with water, conveyed by pipes into the several houses. Clerkenwell contains also a very elegant and spacious edifice, in which the sessions for the county of Middlesex are held; two extensive prisons, one appropriated as a house of correction for juvenile offenders, and the other, which has recently been much enlarged, to general purposes. It was formerly distinguished for an extensive establishment of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, which was destroyed by the rebels under Wat Tyler, in 1381, except the principal gate tower, which still remains entire, and forms one of the most interesting features of antiquity connected with the metropolis. It has four churches. The general aspect of this division of the metropolis is not in any way imposing to the eye; but, in the extent and value of its productions, it is entitled to rank among the most important.

CLERKE, or SINDE ISLES, two islands near the entrance of Behring's Strait, between the coasts of Kamstchatka and North America. They were seen by Cook in 1778, and so named in honour of Captain Clerke, his second in command. They were both inhabited, and not unknown to the Russians. Long. 169. 30. W. lat. 63. 15. N.

CLERMONT, a city of France, capital of the department of Puy de Dome, and a bishop's see. It is seated on an eminence, and sometimes called Clermont Ferrand, since the town Montferrand, about a mile distant to the N. E., was united under the name of suburb. The cathedral, public squares, and walks, are very fine, but the streets are narrow, and the houses built of stone of a gloomy hue. In the neighbourhood are some mineral springs; and that of the suburb St. Allyre has formed a natural bridge over the brook into which it falls, so that carriages can pass over. Clermont is the birthplace of the celebrated Pascal, and has manufactures of rattens, druggets, serges, and leather. It is 215 miles S. by E. of Paris, and 10 W. of Lyons. Pop. in 1836, including the suburbs, 42,427.

CLERMONT, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, on an eminence by the river Ayr; 12 miles W. by S. of Verdun.

CLERMONT, a town of France, in the department of Oise, on an eminence near the Bresche, 37 miles N. of Paris. Clermont is also the name of several other inconsiderable towns in different parts of France.

CLERMONT, a county in the state of Ohio, the S. end of which is bounded by the Ohio river. It is about 30 miles from N. to S., and 20 from E. to W. The population is 23,106. Williamsburg, on a branch of the Miami river, about 18 miles from the Ohio, and 30 E. of Cincinnati, is the chief town.

CLERMONT, a town of New York, in Columbia county; 45 miles S. of Hudson, and 117 N. of New York. Pop. 1231.

CLERMONT DE LODEVE, a town of France, in the department of Herault, with manufactures of cloth and hats; seated on an eminence near the Loguere; 80 miles S.S.E. of Lodeve, and 24 W. of Montpellier. Pop. about 5500.

CLERY, a town of France, in the department of Loiret, once famous for the pilgrimages to our Lady of Clery. Here is the tomb of Louis XI., who appears in white marble as the saint and the patriot king. It is 9 miles S.S.W. of Orleans.

CLEVELAND, a city and port-of-entry of the state of Ohio, capital of Cuyahoga county. It is the emporium of northern Ohio, and is, next to Cincinnati, the most important town of the state. It possesses a commanding situation on Lake Erie, at the mouth of the Cuyahoga river, and derives its chief importance from being at the N. extremity of the Ohio canal. It occupies a gravelly plain, 80 feet above the lake, and consists of very wide streets, crossing each other at right angles, having a public square of ten acres in the centre. The harbour is one of the best on Lake Erie, and is formed by the mouth of the river, improved by two piers faced with masonry. It is the great grain mart of the greatest producing state of the Union, and exports enormous quantities by the numerous canals by which it is connected with Canada and other places. Ohio city, on the opposite side of the Cuyahoga river, constitutes, virtually, one place with Cleveland. It has, however, a separate incorporation. It derives its name from General Moses Cleveland, an agent of the Land Co., who first surveyed the place. It was incorporated as a village in 1814, and as a city in 1836. It is 130 miles N.W. of Pittsburgh, 146 N.E. of Columbus, 200 by water from Buffalo, and 130 from Detroit. Pop. in 1840, 6071. Lat. 41. 31. N. long. 81. 46. W.

CLEVES, a duchy of Westphalia, bordering on the S.E. part of Holland, divided into two parts by the Rhine. It is a fine country, variegated with hills, woods, fields, towns and villages, and the chief rivers are the Rhine, Lippe, and Roer. The capital is Wesel.

CLEVES, a city of Germany, and the capital of the duchy of Cleves. It is seated on the eastern side of three hills, 2 miles W. of the Rhine; and has a castle, built in the time of Julius Cæsar. It is 70 miles N.N.W. of Cologne, and about the same distance E. by S. of Rotterdam. Pop. about 5000.

CLIFF, a Saxon word, implying a rock or high ground. There are eight villages in different parts of England, so named probably from their situation (in a relative sense) on high ground. There are three others named CLIFFORD, in reference to their contiguity to a fordable stream; and 22 named CLIFTON, implying towns on a cliff, or high ground. None of these demand any particular notice, except CLIFTON, contiguous to Bristol, to which city it forms a beautiful and interesting appendage; as its name implies, it is built on an eminence, at the foot of which, on the N. bank of the Lower Avon, is a hot well, that contributes greatly to its advantage, by the numerous visitors who seek to avail themselves of the benefits of its restorative properties. The buildings of Clifton are in general elegant and commodious, and, from their elevated site, command extensive and beautiful prospects. See BRISTOL.

CLINTON, a county at the N.E. extremity of the state of New York. It is bounded on the E. for about 35 miles by Lake Champlain, which divides it from Vermont. Plattsburg, on the shore of Lake Champlain, 170 miles N. of Albany, is the capital.

CLINTON, an interior county in the S. W. part of the state of Ohio, in which one of the branches of the Little Miami river has its source. Pop. 15,719. Wilmington, in the centre of the county, is the chief town; 75 miles S.W. of Columbus.

CLINTON is also the name of several townships in different parts of the United States of North America, named probably, as well as the preceding counties, in reference to George Clinton, who was vice-president of the United States from 1805 to 1813. The most considerable is in Dutchess county, on the E. bank of the Hudson river, 70 miles N. of New York. Pop. 1830. At Clinton, in Oneida county, New York, 102 miles W. of Albany, is Hamilton College, endowed by the State, and which promises to become flourishing seat of instruction.

CLINTONVILLE, a village of the state of New York, on the N. side of Au Sable River. The Peru Iron Co. have extensive works at this place; 10 miles W. of Port Kent, on Lake Champlain, and 153 N. of Albany.

CLITHEROE, a borough in Lancashire, seated on the E. bank of the river Ribble, the foot of Pendle Hill, on the confines of Yorkshire. It is a place of some antiquity, having the ruins of a castle, built by the Laeys in 1178. It communicates by a collateral cut with the Leeds and Liverpool Canal, which facilitates the conveyance of large quantities of lime, dug in the vicinity of the town. It has a spring of water impregnated with sulphur. It holds a market on Saturday, and four fairs annually, and returns one member to parliament. It is 30 miles N. by W. of Manchester.

CLOGHER, a parish in the county of Tyrone, Ireland. The city, now much decayed, was the see of a bishop, but is now united to Armagh. It is 20 miles W. by N. of Armagh, and 76 N.N.W. of Dublin.

in Ireland beginning with Clon, among which the following are the most important, viz.:—

CLONAKILTY, a town of the county of Cork, seated at the head of a bay on St. George's Channel. The principal part of the town is formed of a spacious square. It is 20 miles W.S.W. of Cork.

CLONES, a town of Ireland, in the county of Monaghan; 85 miles N. by W. of Dublin. The parish of Clones extends into Fermanagh county.

CLONFERT, formerly a bishop's see, on the eastern confines of the county of Galway, Ireland. It is a miserable place, containing only 31 houses; 36 miles E. of Galway, and 70 W. of Dublin.

CLONMEL, a town partly in the county of Tipperary, and partly in that of Waterford, Ireland. It is seated on the banks of the river Suir, over which is a bridge of twenty arches; 22 miles W. N. W. of the city of Waterford, and 82 S. W. of Dublin. It is the assize town for the county of Tipperary, and returns one member to the parliament of the United Kingdom; it had considerable manufactures of woollens, and there is a lunatic and orphan asylum, several schools, and other public buildings. It was the birthplace of Sterne.

CLONTARF, a town on the N. shore of Dublin Bay, two miles E. of the city of Dublin. It has several neat residences in its vicinity, and is memorable in Irish history for the last battle fought between the native Irish and the Danes, in 1015, which led to the expulsion of the latter from Ireland.

CLOPPENBURG, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster; 32 miles N. E. of Lingen.

KLOSTER NEUBURG, a town of Austria, with an Augustine convent of regular canons. It has a yard for ship-building, and is seated on the Danube; 7 miles N. N. W. of Vienna.

KLOSTER SEVEN, or KLOSTER ZEVEN, a town of the Duchy of Bremen, memorable for a convention entered into between the Duke of Cumberland and the Duke of Richelieu, commander of the French armies, in 1758, by which 38,000 Hanoverians laid down their arms and were dispersed. It is 19 miles S. of Stade.

CLOUD, Sr., a town of France, 5 miles E. of Paris; celebrated for its palace, which was the favourite residence of Napoleon Bonaparte.

CLÔVE, or CLÔIS, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire; 5 miles S. W. of Chateaudun.

CLYONE, a town of Ireland, on the E. shore of Cork harbour, in the county of Cork, and a bishop's see; 16 miles E. of Cork.

CLUN, a market town in Shropshire, on the river Clun. It gives the title of Baron Clun to the Dukes of Norfolk; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. S. W. of Bishop's Castle.

CLUNDERT, a town and fortress of South

Holland, near an arm of the sea called Hollands Diep. In 1793 it was taken by the French, who were obliged to evacuate it soon after; but it surrendered to them in 1795. It is 9 miles S. E. of Williamstadt.

CLUNY, a town of France, in the department of Saone and Loire, with a late famous Benedictine abbey, seated on the Grosne; 13 miles N. W. of Macon.

CLUSES, a town of Savoy, in Faucigny, seated on the Arve; 22 miles S. E. of Geneva.

CLWYD, a river of Wales, which rises in the middle of Denbighshire, runs N. through a beautiful valley of the same name, and, having entered Flintshire, flows into the Irish Sea, 6 miles below St. Asaph.

CLYDE, a river of Scotland, which rises in the S. part of Lanarkshire, passes by Lanark, Hamilton, Glasgow, Renfrew, Dumbarton, and Port Glasgow, to Greenock, where it enters an arm of the sea called the Frith or Clyde. This river runs, for several miles, between high rocks, and in its course forms several cataracts: it is deservedly celebrated for its romantic and diversified scenery, and has several extensive cotton and other works on its banks. At Glasgow it becomes navigable; and, 6 miles below that city, it is joined by the Great Canal from the Forth.

CLYDE, FRITH OF, an inlet of the sea, between the coast of Ayrshire and the Isle of Arran, which opens into the North Channel, between the N. E. end of Ireland and Scotland.

CLYDE, a town of New York, on the Clyde River, and the Erie canal; 174 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 1000.

COANGO, a tributary stream of the great river Congo, in South Africa. It rises in Matamba, and runs a course nearly due N., falling into the Congo, about 100 miles above the Cataracts. It is supposed by some to be the main branch of the Congo.

COANZO, a river of Africa, which rises in the interior parts, crosses the kingdoms of Matamba and Angola, and enters the Atlantic in lat. 9. 20. S.

COAST CASTLE, CAPE, the principal settlement of the English on the coast of Guinea, with a strong citadel. The Portuguese first formed an establishment here in 1610, but were soon after dislodged by the Dutch, who, in their turn, surrendered it to the English in 1661. It is in the lat. of 5. 6. N. and 1. 51. of W. long.

COATBRIDGE, a village in Monkland parish, Lanarkshire, at the junction of the Perth branch with the Caledonian Railway. It has rapidly risen from the iron works around.

COBAN, a town of Central America, and capital of Vera Paz. It is situated in an undulating and luxuriant valley, covered with plantations of sugar-cane, bananas, &c. It contains about 14,000 inhabitants, chiefly aborigines, and said to be more wealthy and orderly than in any other part of the country.

CERRE, the capital of the territory of Dar-far, in Zahara, North Africa, situate on the borders of Nubia; 150 miles W. S. W. of Seimaar, and 500 S. E. of Mathan. Long. 28. 8. E. lat. 14. 11. N.

COBIAM, a village in Surrey, on the river Mole; 7 miles S. W. of Kingston. It has several handsome villas, two medicinal springs, and a manufacture of iron and copper.

COBI, called by the Chinese Shamo, a vast desert of Asia, extending from the 75th to the 110th degree of E. long., and lying between the 35th and 45th of N. lat. The western part of this vast district borders on Bucharia, and the S. W. on Thibet. The Chinese province of KAN-SUH (which see) projects into this desert, and the N. E. part stretches towards the frontiers of Asiatic Russia; but its limits are on every side too imperfectly defined to admit of any precise description.

COBISA, or LA MAN, a town of Bolivia, on the coast of the desert of Atacama, with a good harbour for vessels carrying the metal from the neighbouring mines. It is 250 miles S. of Arica. Long. 34. 44. W. lat. 22. 20. S.

COBLENTZ, a strong city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine, situate at the conflux of the Rhine and the Moselle; with a bridge of boats over the former, and a stone bridge over the latter. In the time of the Romans it was the station of the first legion, by whom it was called Confluentes, and after them, the residence of the successors of Charlemagne, and at a later period it was the capital of the Grand Duchy of Treves. It contains three large churches, two of which are collegiate, a college, eight convents, &c. It is memorable for having been the chief rendezvous of the French emigrant princes, at the commencement of the revolution. It was taken by the French in 1794, who retained it until the peace of 1814, when it was assigned to Prussia. It transmits large quantities of excellent wine, timber, and iron, by the Rhine, into Holland. It is 285 miles W. S. W. of Berlin, 420 W. N. W. of Vienna, and 260 E. S. E. of Paris. Long. 7. 32. E., lat. 50. 24. N. Pop. exclusive of the garrison, 13,700.

COBLENTZ, a town of Switzerland, in the district of Baden, at the conflux of the Aar and the Rhine. It is ten miles N. N. W. of Baden.

COBLESKILL, a town of New York, United States. Here is a mill-stream issuing from an unfathomable well, which soon disappears into a subterranean channel, 7 miles long; 42 miles W. of Albany. Pop. 3583.

COBRE, EL, a town of the island of Cuba, 10 miles W. of St. Jago.

COBURG, SAXE, a principality, at the S. W. extremity of the circle of Upper Saxony, projecting into the circle of Franconia. It is one of the states of the Germanic confederacy. Its area is about 797 square miles; the population is 139,440. The feudal principles were abolished in 1809, and in 1826 the duke obtained the accession of the duchy of Gotha, and other minor states, to his dominions. It is a tolerably fertile district, intersected by the river Itzsch, which runs from N. to S. into the Mayne, and contains, besides several villages, the towns of Illburg-hausen, Eislefeld, Sonneberg, Schalkaw, Neustadt, Heldburg, Umerstadt, and Coburg; and Konigsberg, with several villages insulated in the bishopric of Wurzburg.

COBURG, the capital of the preceding principality, is seated on the banks of the Itzsch, 95 miles S. S. W. of Leipsic, and has a college, a fort, and a castle. Here are manufactures of porcelain, and of petrified wood, with which the country abounds; it also carries on some trade in wool. The government offices and town-house form part of the sides of a spacious square. Pop. in 1834, 9000.

COCA, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, with a strong castle for state prisoners; seated among mountains, on the river Eresma; 22 miles N. W. of Segovia.

COCHABAMBA, a district of South America, in Bolivia, lying between the 62nd and 68th degrees of W. long., and the 16th and 19th of S. lat. Cochabamba is watered by several streams, all running from S. to N., uniting, on the northern frontier, to form the river Mainore, running through the government of Moxos and Brazil, where, after the union of the Guapore, it is called the Madeira, falling into the Amazons. Cochabamba is an exceedingly fertile district; and the inhabitants, about 70,000 in number, seem to prefer the pursuits of agriculture rather than of mining. The chief town, of the same name, is situate on the western confines of the province, in the lat. of 18. S. and about 200 miles E. of Arica.

COCHERIN, a town of Germany, seated on the Moselle; 25 miles S. W. of Coblentz.

COCHEREL, a town of France, in the department of the Eure; noted for a victory gained by Gueselin over the king of Navarre, in 1564. It is seven miles E. of Evreux.

COCHIN, a small rajahship of Hindostan, on the coast of Malabar, towards the southern extremity of the peninsula; a chain of islands flanks the whole extent of the coast. It is a very fertile district, and yields abundance of rice, pepper, and cocoa nuts, and excellent timber for ship building. It was the first part of India where the Portuguese, after passing the Cape of Good Hope, formed a settlement; but their intrigues and extortions soon occasioned them to be repulsed from the main land; but they were allowed, in 1503, to erect a fortification on one of the islands, in the lat. of 9. 57. N. The fort surrendered to the Dutch in 1663, who, by their toleration of all religious professions, occasioned it to increase greatly in population. The natives of the province successfully resisted the Mahometan arms up to the period of 1776, when Hyder Ali rendered them tributary; and the exaction being enforced with increased vigour, under Tippoo Saib, in 1791, the rajah sought the protection of the English; to whom the Dutch fort and town surrendered in 1793, and thereby the whole territory became subservient to the English. The town of Cochin is 120 miles S. by E. of Calicut.

COCHIN CHINA, a maritime province of Asia, a portion of the Anamese empire, extending from Cape Varela-falsa, in the lat. of 12. 55. N., to Sinhoo Bay, in the lat. of 17. N.; it is bounded on the W. by a high mountain ridge, running parallel with the coast its whole extent, at the distance of 60 or 70 miles; this mountain ridge divides Cochin China from a vast desert, lying between the mountains and the great river Cambodia. The aborigines of Cochin China are called Moys, and reside chiefly on the western declivities of the mountains. To these strong-holds they were driven, about the beginning of the 15th century, by the present possessors of the country. The aborigines are a savage people, very black, and in features resemble the Caffres. The present inhabitants bear evident marks of being derived from the same stock as the Chinese; their religion is also the same, and most of their manners and customs. They are a courteous, affable, inoffensive race, rather inclined to indolence. The women are by far the most active sex, and merchants often employ them as their factors and brokers. The cities and towns have gates at the end of each street, which are shut every night. The houses are mostly of lamboo, covered with rushes, or the straw of rice, and stand in groves of oranges, limes, plantains, and cocoa trees. Here is plenty of sugar, pepper, rice, yams, sweet potatoes, pumpkins, and melons; also ivory, musk, honey, and silk, and the edible birds'-nests. The climate is healthy, the summer heat being tempered by regular breezes from the sea. September, October, and November is the rainy season, when the low lands are suddenly overflowed by torrents of water from the mountains; the inundations happen generally once a fortnight, and continue three or four days. In the three following months there are frequent rains, brought by cold northerly winds, which distinguish this country by a winter different from any other in the east. The inundations render the land fruitful, many parts producing three crops of grain in the year. Gold is taken almost pure from the mines, and there are rich silver mines. The country is intersected by rivers, which are well calculated for promoting inland commerce, yet not large enough to admit vessels of great burden; but there are commodious harbours on the coast, particularly that of Tounron, in the lat. of 16. 5. N. The vanity of the Chinese induces them to consider Cochin as a tributary province of their empire; but if any acknowledgment is made, it is merely nominal. The Cochin Chinese are the most brave and efficient of the eastern nations; they have hitherto held very little intercourse with Europeans, but carry on an extensive traffic with China and various parts of the eastern seas. The town of Tounron was attacked by a French expedition on April 12th, 1847, for some aggressions on commerce by the Cochin Chinese, and hostilities are being carried on by the French up to the present moment.

COCKE, a county of Tennessee, bounded on the S.E. by a ridge of the Allegany mountains, called the Smoky Mountains, which divides it from North Carolina. It is intersected by the Big Pigeon and French Bread rivers, which unite their streams toward the N.W. boundary of the county. Pop. 6992. Newport, 216 miles E. of Murfreesborough, is the chief town.

COCKER, a river which rises in the S. of Cumberland, flows through the Lakes of Dattermere, Cromack-water, and Lowes-water, and joins the Derwent below Cocker-mouth.

COCKERMOUTH, a borough in Cumberland, with a market on Monday. It stands on the Cocker, at its conflux with the Derwent, and between two hills, on one of which is a handsome church, and on the other the remains of a stately castle. It has manufactures of woollen and linen, and a railway to Workington. It returns two members to parliament, and is 36 miles S.W. of Carlisle, and 305 N.N.W. of London.

COCONATO, a town of Piedmont, the birth-place of Columbus; 20 miles E. of Turin.

COCOS ISLANDS, in the Bay of Bengal, occupied by some British settlers, and producing a large supply of cocoa nuts.

COD, CAPE, is the northern extremity of a peninsula, more than 120 miles in extent, and 10 to 15 in mean breadth, forming part of the state of Massachusetts. Cape Cod and the main land form a very spacious bay, about 50 miles each way; and Cape Cod and Cape Ann are the S. and W. points which form the open bay called Massachusetts Bay, leading to the harbour of Boston; the outer side of the peninsula forming Cape Cod is flanked by shoals, which render the navigation thereabout dangerous. A lighthouse on the Cape Point is in lat. 42. 3. N. and 70. 6. W. long.

CODOGNO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Lodesan, duchy of Milan, near the confluence of the Adda with the Po; 12 miles S.S.E. of Lodi. Pop. 8000.

CODOMUDI, a town of Hindostan, in Coimbatore, seated near the Cavery, a little above the influx of the Noyelar; 23 miles S. E. of Bhawanikudal.

COEPANG, a seaport in the Asiatic archipelago, on the S.W. end of the Island of Timor. It is the principal port of the island, and a great resort of the Malays, who fish for the biche-de-la-mer off the N. coast of Australia; and also the chief place of export for the Timor ponies to Australia, and other ports. It lies W. of Port Essington, North Australia. Fort Concordia is in lat. 10. 13. S. and long. 123. 45. E.

CORSEFELD, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster, near the source of the Burkel; 18 miles W. of Munster.

COEVORDEN, a fortified town of Holland, on the confines of Drenthe, Westphalia, and Overijssel, and one of the strongest places in the whole country. It stands in a morass, on the river Aa; 33 miles S. by E. of Groningen. It is the capital of Drenthe.

COEYMANA, a town in Albany county, New York, on the W. bank of the Hudson river; 14 miles S. of Albany. Pop. 3107.

COFFEE, a co. in the centre of Tennessee, with a fertile soil. Capital, Manchester. Pop. in 1840, whites, 7057, slaves, 1105, total, 8184.

COGGESHALL, a town in Essex, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of baize and silk; seated on the N. bank of the river Blackwater; 7 miles W. of Colchester, and 44 E.N.E. of London.

COGNAC, or COGNAC, a town of France, in the department of Charente, with a castle, where Francis I. was born. It is celebrated for excellent brandy, and seated on the Charente; 17 miles W. of Angouleme, and 40 E. by S. of Rochefort.

COGNE, a town of Piedmont, in a valley, and on a river of the same name. The mountains which surround it are rich in mines of iron and copper. It is 6 miles S. of Aousta.

COGNI, or KONIEH, a city of Asiatic Turkey, capital of Karamania, and the see of a Greek archbishop, the ancient Iconium. The walls have 108 square towers, forty paces distant from each other; it has two large suburbs, into one of which the caravans and strangers retire. It has 12 large and many smaller mosques; and has much declined of late years. It is seated on the E. side of a ridge of lofty mountains, in a country abounding in corn, fruit, pulse, and cattle; 280 miles S.E. of Constantinople, and about the same distance due E. of Smyrna. Pop. about 30,000.

COHUUILA, an intendency of N. America, republic of Mexico, bounded on the E. by the Texas. There are productive mines in this district. Pop. 160,000. Chief town, Chihuahua.

COHASSET, a town on the S. coast of Massachusetts Bay, just without the entrance to Boston harbour, 25 miles S.W. of Boston. Cohasset has a tolerably good harbour; but a ledge of rocks at its entrance renders its approach dangerous.

COHOES. It is near the junction of the Erie and Champlain canals. Here is a cotton factory, and other manufactures, and it has large water power; 8 miles N. of Albany. Pop. about 2000.

COHOES FALLS, a cataract of the Mohawk river, over which is a bridge, about one mile and a half above its entrance into the Hudson; about three-quarters of a mile higher up, the Mohawk, being about 350 yards wide, pours down its waters over a precipice, in an unbroken sheet, a height of 70 feet perpendicular, and, next to Niagara, forms the grandest natural object in the state of New York.

COMNETORE, a province of the peninsula of Hindostan, lying S. of Mysore, to which it was lately subject, but ceded to the English on the final defeat of Tippoo, in 1799. It is 110 miles long, and 70 broad; and is divided by the river Noyelar into two districts, N. and S., of which Bhawanikudal and Darnapuram are the chief towns.

COMNETORE, a town of Hindostan, the ancient capital of the province of the same name. It was taken by General Meadows in 1790, and retaken in 1791 by Tippoo, who soon after destroyed the fort. It contains 2000 houses, an extensive mud palace, and a tolerable mosque, built by Tippoo, who sometimes resided here; but it has no large temple. The palace now serves as a barrack for a regiment of British cavalry. The chief manufactures are muslins and cotton cloths; and these, with cotton-wool and thread, tobacco, sugar, and betel-leaf, are the principal articles of trade. It is 100 miles S. by E. of Seringapatam. Long. 77. 6. E. lat. 11 0. N.

CORUMBA, a city of Portugal, capital of Beira, and a bishop's see, with a celebrated university, the only one in Portugal, transferred hither from Lisbon in 1306, where it was originally founded in 1290. The cathedral is magnificent; beside which there are nine churches and eight convents. It stands on a mountain, on the river Mondego, over which is an elegant bridge, about 25 miles above its entrance into the sea; 100 m. N.E. of Lisbon. It suffered considerably by the great earthquake in 1755. Pop. about 20,000.

COIOACAN, a town of North America, republic of Mexico; 5 miles S.E. of Mexico, in a rich and fertile district; it has manufactures of woollen fabrics. Pop. 5200.

COIRE, or CHUR, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the Grisons, and a bishop's see. It is surrounded by ancient brick walls, with square and round towers, and divided into two parts, the least of which is of the catholic religion, and the greatest of the protestant. The French surprised and defeated the Austrian army at this place in 1799. It is seated between two mountains, on the river Plessur, near the Rhine, 65 m. S. by W. of Constance, and contributes to render Coire a place of considerable traffic. It was the birthplace of Angelica Kauffman, the female painter.

COLABBA, a town of Hindostan, on the coast; 19 miles S. of Bombay. Here is a military cantonment.

COLAPOOR, a small independent state of Hindostan, on the coast of the Concan, bounded on the S. by the Portuguese territory of Goa. The rajah of this district claims being descended from the founder of the Mahratta empire. The natives were formerly celebrated for their piracies; but their depredations were put an end to under the administration of the Marquis Wellesley, in 1804.

COLAR, or COLORAM, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a large mud fort, and the remains of a hill fort. It is the birthplace of Hyder Ali, who erected here a handsome mausoleum for his father; and near it is a mosque, and a college of Mussulman priests. The chief manufactures are cotton cloths and muslins. It is 40 miles E.N.E. of Bangalore, and 140 W. of Madras. Long. 78. 9. E. lat. 13. 9. N.

COLBENE, a town of Tripoli, on the S.W. part of the Gulf of Sidra; 90 miles S.S.E. of Messurata.

COLBERG, a fortified seaport of Farther Prussia. It has a collegiate church, good linen manufactures, and considerable salt-works. The Russians laid siege to this town in 1758 and 1760, without success; but it surrendered to them, after a long siege, in 1761, and was restored at the subsequent peace. It is seated at the mouth of the Persant, on the Baltic; 60 miles N.E. of Stettin. Long. 15. 37. E. lat. 54. 7. N.

COLCHAGUA, a province of Chili, extending from the Pacific Ocean to the Andes, in the lat. of 34. 30. S. It is intersected by two or three rivers, falling into the Pacific; but it has no port or harbour of note. Pop. about 15,000. St. Fernando, about 50 miles from the sea, and 100 S. of St. Jago, is the chief town.

COLCHESTER, a borough and market town in the county of Essex, pleasantly situate on a gentle eminence, on the W. bank of the river Coln, about 8 miles above its entrance into the English Channel. It is a place of antiquity, supposed to have been a Roman station; and was formerly surrounded by a wall, some vestiges of which still remain; and contained a castle of great strength, supposed to have been built by a son of Alfred the Great, the remains of which served for a house of correction for petty offenders. Prior to the civil war, in the time of Oliver Cromwell, the wall, castle, and fortifications were entire, and held out with great obstinacy against the parliamentary forces, until after Charles I. was beheaded in 1648, in which year it surrendered. The town sustained great damage during the siege. It is now by far the largest and most important town in the county, and has undergone great improvement within the present century: a spacious quay has been constructed, and the river made navigable up to the town for vessels of 90 to 100 tons burthen. It is a port of entry for vessels from foreign parts, and has a custom-house a little below the town; but its external commerce is very inconsiderable. Its chief traffic in export is in oysters and grain, which it sends to the London market in great quantities, and receives in return every description of shop goods for the supply of the town, and distribution over the surrounding country. It had formerly extensive manufactures of woollen stuffs (baize;) but its manufacture is now trifling. No small share of its present importance is derived from the extensive intercourse of which it is a centre point between London, Harwich, Ipswich, Yarmouth, and Norwich, with all of which it is connected by railways. It is divided into 16 parishes, and has as many churches; but four of them are not used, and only three are entitled to notice for their architecture. It has three bridges over the Coln, a spacious market-place, town-hall, corn-exchange, and a theatre. It has also an hospital, free grammar-schools, water-works, two public libraries, a botanical and philosophical institution, and several dissenting meeting-houses. The town is governed by a mayor, recorder, town-clerk, 12 aldermen, 18 assistants, and 18 common-councilmen; and returns two members to parliament. Its markets are on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Pop. 16,167. It is 51 miles E.N.E. from London, 21 W. by S. of Harwich, and the same distance S.S.W. of Ipswich.

COLCHESTER, a township in Delaware county, New York; 91 miles S. of Albany. Pop. 1576.

COLCHESTER, a town of Virginia, in Fairfax county, on Oequoquam Creek; 3 miles from its conflux with the Potomac, and 16 S.W. of Alexandria.

COLCHESTER, a town of Connecticut, in New London county; 20 miles N.W. of New London. Pop. 2101.

COLCHESTER, a town of Vermont, in Chittenden county, on a bay of Lake Champlain, at the influx of the Onion; 6 miles N. by E. of Burlington. Pop. 1739.

COLDING, or KOLDING, a town of Denmark, in Jutland, formerly the residence of many Danish kings, who adorned it with several edifices. The harbour is choked up, and its commerce nearly annihilated. It is seated on the Thuneths, near its entrance into a bay of the Little Belt; 30 miles E.N.E. of Ripen.

COLDINGHAM, a town of Scotland, in the county of Berwick, anciently noted for a munner, rebuilt by Edgar, king of Scotland, in 1098. Ebba, one of the abbesses, renowned in tradition for her charity, gave name to the neighbouring promontory called St. Abb's Head. It is 9 miles N.N.W. of Berwick.

COLDITZ, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with manufactures of linen and stuffs; seated on the Mulda; 22 miles S.E. of Leipsic.

COLD SPRING, a town in a romantic situation on the E. side of the Hudson river, in New York, about one mile above West Point. The West Point foundry is situated here, and has extensive machinery and fur-COLDSTREAM, a town of Scotland, in the county of Berwick. Here General Monk first raised the Coldstream regiment of guards, with which he marched into England, to restore Charles II. It is seated on the Tweed, over which is a handsome bridge; 13 miles S. W. of Berwick.

COLE, a county in the state of Missouri, on the S. bank of the Missouri river. Capital, Jefferson city. Pop. in 1840, 9286.

COLEAGARA, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Coimbatore. It has two large temples, and is a considerable mart for the traders between Seringapatam and the country below the eastern Gaults. It is 34 miles S. E. of Seringapatam.

COLEBROOK DALE, a village in Shropshire, on the banks of the Severn; 2 miles N. by E. of BROSELEY, which see.

COLERAIN, a town of the state of Georgia, in Camden county. A treaty was concluded here, in 1796, between the United States and the Creek Indians. It is seated on the St. Mary river, 35 miles W. by N. of the port of St. Mary, and 14 S. by E. of Louisville.

COLERAINE, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Londonderry; seated on the banks of the river Bann, about 4 miles above its entrance into the Atlantic Ocean. It participates largely in the linen manufactures, and its fabrics and bleaching are in the highest esteem. The fall of the river Bann precludes it from affording much commercial advantage to Coleraine; but this defect is in some measure compensated for by its salmon fishery, which is the most valuable in Ireland. A harbour has been formed at Port Rush, four miles N. E. of the mouth of the Bann. Coleraine has a railway to Londonderry, Dublin, &c., sends one member to parliament, and is 25 miles E. by N. of Londonderry, and 138 N. by W. of Dublin.

COLERAINE is also the name of a town in Hamilton county, Ohio, on the E. bank of the Miami river, about 15 miles above its entrance into the Ohio, and 10 N. of Cincinnati. There is also a township of the same name in Franklin county, Massachusetts.

COLES, a county of Illinois, drained by the Kaskaskia and Embarrass rivers. It has extensive prairies. Capital, Charleston. Pop. in 1840, 9616.

COLESHILL, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Wednesday; seated on a hill, by the river Cole; 10 miles E. of Birmingham, and 105 N. W. of London. The church is an elegant structure.

COLFORD, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Tuesday; 5 miles E. S. E. of Monmouth, and 124 W. by N. of London. It has several iron forges in its vicinity.

COLIN. See KOLIN.

COLIMA, a town of Mexico, in the intendancy of Guadalajara, on the frontiers of Valadolid; it is seated at the foot of a volcanic mountain, about 300 miles due W. of the city of Mexico, under the banks of a small river, about 30 miles above its entrance into the Pacific Ocean, in the lat. of 18. 40. N. The intervening country between the town and the sea is very fertile. Pop. of the town about 2500.

COLKING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the N. W. part of the province of Yun-nan; 1160 miles S. S. W. of Peking.

COLL, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the W. N. W. of Mull; 13 miles long and 3 broad. The greatest part is covered with heath, and abounds with rabbits; and many black cattle are fed here. The castle of Coll is a strong square-built structure, and still in tolerable repair.

COLLAHUAS, a district of Peru, lying between Lake Titicaca and the Pacific Ocean. It is a very mountainous district; the Andes here diverging into several ridges, among which the Apurimac and other streams, forming the head quarters of the noble river Amazon, have their source. Cailloma, in the lat. of 15. 40. S., is the capital.

COLLE, a town of Tuscany, on a hill near the river Elza; 10 miles N. N. W. of Sienna. There are five other towns of the same name in different parts of Italy, all inconsiderable.

COLLEDA, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, on the Unstrut; 19 miles N. by W. of Weimar.

COLLETON, a maritime district of South Carolina, S. of Charleston; it is intersected by the Eduto river, and is fertile in rice and cotton. Pop. 25,548, of whom 19,246 were slaves.

COLLUN, a town of Prussia, kingdom of Bohemia; 27 miles E. from Prague. Pop. 4400.

COLLIOURE, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyreneas, with a castle. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1793, but retaken the next year. It has a small port on the Mediterranean; 16 miles S. S. E. of Perpignan.

COLLON, a well-built town of Ireland, in Louth county, with a stocking manufactory, and an extensive bleach-field; 29 miles from Dublin.

COLLUMPTON, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable trade in woollen cloth. It is seated on the river Culm; 12 miles N. N. E. of Exeter, and 160 W. of London.

COLMAR, a town of France, capital of the department of Upper Rhine. It is surrounded by a wall, flanked with towers, near the river Ill; and has various manufactures; 42 miles S. by W. of Strasburg. Pop. 13,867.

COLMAR, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holstein; 5 miles S. E. of C'luckstadt.

COLMARS, a town of France, in the department of Lower Alps; 20 miles E. N. E. of Digne.

COLN, a river which rises near Clare, in Suffolk, passes by Halstead and Colchester in Essex, and after a course of about 40 miles, enters the German Ocean, at the E. end of Mersey Island. In the inlets and pools at the mouth of this river, are bred the famous Colchester oysters. There are several small rivers of the same name in England.

COLNBROOK, a town in Buckinghamshire, seated on the river Coln, which falls into the Thames; 17 miles W. of London, on the road to Bath.

COLNE, a town in Lancashire with a market on Wednesday. It is a place of great antiquity, having been selected for a Roman station by Agricola. It is situate near the border of Yorkshire, within about a mile of the Liverpool and Leeds Canal. It was formerly a great place for hand-loom weavers, but since the introduction of the power-loom, they have been reduced to great distress, and consequent demoralization. The vicinity abounds in coals and slate. It is 21 miles N. by E. of Manchester.

COLOCYTHIA, a town of European Turkey, in the Morea, on the W. side of a bay to which it gives name; 36 miles S. of Mistra. Long. 22. 24. E. lat. 36. 38. N.

COLOCZA, or KALOTSHA, a town of Hungary, on the E. bank of the Danube, and an archbishop's see; 57 miles S. of Buda.

COLOGNA, a town of Italy, in the Paduan; 26 miles W. by S. of Padua. Pop. about 6000.

COLOGNE, a late archbishopric and electorate of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine; bounded on the N. by the duchy of Cleves and Gelderland; on the S. by the archbishopric of Treves; and from the S., in a N. N. W. direction, for about 90 miles, by the Rhine, which divides it on the E. from the duchy of Berg; and on the W. it is divided by a very irregular boundary from the duchy of Juliers. It is not more than about 15 miles in mean breadth, and contains a good deal of forest and some mines of coal and iron, and parts are very fertile in corn, wine, and flax. Pop. about 220,000. It held a distinguished rank in the Germanic confederacy, as early as the 4th century, and at the general partition in 1814, it was transferred to Prussia. Besides the city of Cologne, the other principal towns are Kemper, Lunne, Nuyz, Brul, Meckenheim, Bonn, &c.

COLOGNE, the chief town of the preceding territory, and one of the most ancient and celebrated cities of Europe; it is seated on the W. bank of the Rhine, in lat. of 50.55. N. and e. 55. of W. long.; 295 miles W.S.W. of Berlin, and 105 E. of Brussel. Antecedent to the ascendancy of the Romans over western Europe, the site of Cologne is supposed to have been the capital of a tribe called the Ubi; and at a subsequent period, to have given birth to Agrippina, the mother of Nero; in reference to whom the Romans named it Colonia Agrippina. It joined the Hanseatic league at an early period of its formation; and in the 13th century ranked high as a commercial city. After that period its commercial activity yielded to the influence of priestcraft and indolence. Persecution followed. In 1485 the Jews, and in 1618 the Protestants were expelled the city; so that in 1794, when the French took possession of it, the ecclesiastics amounted to about 2000; and, besides the university, founded in 1388, nine collegiate churches, two abbeys, and an archiepiscopal seminary, it contained no less than 126 other monastic and religious establishments. The walls of the city are about seven miles in circumference, but a considerable portion of the area is now converted into gardens and vineyards; and although the perspective of the city on all sides is very imposing, on inspection it proves to be low and ill built. The town-hall, cathedral, and some of the churches, are, however, stately and fine edifices. Cologne is connected with Duitz, on the opposite bank of the river, by a bridge of boats, and contains within itself almost every branch of manufacture for domestic use, and still carries on some traffic up and down the Rhine; but its chief commercial prosperity is owing to the railway from Belgium, France &c., which here reaches the river. The city was transferred to Prussia in 1814. It was the birthplace of Rubens.

COLOMBE, ST., the name of about 20 towns in different parts of France, all inconsiderable.

COLOMBEY AUX BELLES FEMMES, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, and chief place of a canton in the district of Veselize; 15 miles S. W. of Nancy.

COLOMBIA, an extensive territory, forming the whole northern part of the southern division of the western hemisphere, commonly called South America, and includes what, previous to 1811, constituted the vice-royalty of NEW GRANADA, and the captain-generalship of CARACAS, or VENEZUELA, each of which see. Its extreme length from N. to S. Colombia extends from the shores of the Caribbean Sea, in the lat. of 12. 30. N. to the Tungaragua, the main western branch of the great river Amazon, in the lat. of 5. S. and longitudinally from 59. to 83. W. From the 59th to the 68th of W. long., however, it extends only to 3. of N. lat., and its mean long. on the western side, or side of the Pacific Ocean, will not exceed the line of 79. W. These limits will give an aggregate extent of surface of about 1,200,000 sq. miles, or an area fourteen times the extent of Great Britain; but over this wide domain the human inhabitants are supposed not to exceed 2,000,000. In its north-western extremity, it includes the Isthmus of Panama, which alone includes an unbroken range of sea coast of nearly 3000 miles in extent, with several spacious and commodious harbours. On its eastern extremity it is bounded by the Essequibo river, which divides it from French Guiana and the English and Dutch settlements of Demerara, Berbice, and Surinam; from the 59th to the 65th degree of W. long., it is bounded on the S. by a mountain ridge, which divides it from Portuguese Guiana, the most northern part of Brazil; whilst the Tungaragua, or, as it is afterward called, the Marañon river, divides it from Peru; the whole of its western boundaries being washed by the Pacific Ocean, and its northern by the Caribbean Sea, and the N.E. by the Atlantic Ocean. The earlier history of this territory will be found more particularly adverted to under the heads of New Granada and Venezuela. A futile attempt was made by a General Miranda to revolutionize Venezuela in 1806; but it was not till 1811 that the people generally exerted themselves in favour of independence; from which period up to 1819, various sanguinary conflicts ensued between the European Spaniards and the natives, with alternate success. It was on the 17th of December, 1819, that the two territories of New Granada and Venezuela became united under the title of the Republic of Colombia, and a popular representative government, divided into legislative, executive, and judicial. On the 6th of May, 1821, in conformity with the fundamental law, the installation of the general congress took place in the city of Rosario, of Cúcuta, but the seat of government was afterwards established at St. Fé de Bogota; and it was at Curabobo, on the 24th of June of that year, when the last battle was fought, that decided the downfall of Spanish domination, and the independence of the Colombian republic. The territory was at first divided into four parts, viz., Quito, Cundinamarca, Venezuela, and Spanish Guyana. But in 1831, the three states of ECUADOR, VENEZUELA, and NEW GRANADA, separated from each other, forming distinct republics, which see.

The aggregate features of the Colombian territory are, in the highest degree, grand and imposing. The Andes, in a parallel ridge of about 200 miles in extent, between which is a valley 20 or 30 miles wide, at an elevation of about 9000 feet above the level of the sea, enter at the S.W. extremity, in which direction the peaks of Chimborazo, Cotopaxi, Antisana, rear their majestic heads, all S. of the equator; and in the lat. of 2° N. the chain diverges into three ridges, the most easterly of which takes an E.N.E. direction towards the shores of the Caribbean Sea, with which it runs parallel through seven degrees of longitude to near the Delta of the Orinoco, opposite to the island of Trinidad. It is on the eastern declivity of this ridge, which is called the Venezuelan chain, at an altitude of 8000 feet above the level of the sea, in the lat. of 4.45° N., that St. Fé de Bogota is situated; between this and the central ridge, which is called the Chain of Santa Martha, runs, for a course of 650 miles, the fine river Magdalena; and between the chain of Santa Martha and the main ridge, runs the river Cauca, which unites with the Magdalena at the foot of the Knol of the Santa Martha chain, about 150 miles above the entrance of the Magdalena into the Caribbean Sea. From the lat. of 6° N. the main ridge of the Andes takes a N. by W. direction into the isthmus that unites the two grand divisions of the western hemisphere, whilst another collateral ridge runs nearly due N. towards Carthagena; between these two ridges runs the Atrato, N. into the Gulf of Darien, the head waters of which river are contiguous to those of the St. Juan, which runs S. into the Bay of Choco in the Pacific Ocean; which rivers seem to form the most favourable means for effecting a water communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans. See CHOCO. East of the Andes, the country is intersected by innumerable streams, those in the S. part running into the MARANON, or AMAZON, and those in the N. part into the ORINOCO, which see. From the extreme N., the country is indented by a spacious bay, called the Gulf of Maracaibo, which leads by a narrow strait into a spacious lake of the same name. This lake, which is about 180 miles in length, and 70 in width, is bounded on the E. by the Venezuelan chain of the Andes, and on the W. by a ridge which diverges from it in the lat. of 8° N., and with the lake forms a very distinguishing feature of the country. Numerous islands flank the coast of the Caribbean Sea, from the long. of 61. to the Gulf of Maracaibo, in the long. of 70.: the most easterly and important of these is Trinidad, in possession of the English; and near the entrance of the Gulf of Maracaibo is Curaçoa, in possession of the Dutch. The rest may be considered as forming part of the Colombian territory, the most important being Margarita. The principal seaports on the side of the Atlantic and coast of the Caribbean Sea, are Cumana, La Guayra, (the outport of Leon de Caraccas,) Maracaibo, Carthagena, and Portobello; and, on the side of the Pacific Ocean, Panama, Bay of Choco, and Guayaquil; and the most important towns in the interior, besides St. Fé de Bogota, are Loja, Jean de Bracamoros, Cuenca, Rio Brambo, Quito, Popayan, Merida, and Angostura.

Colombia is not remarkable for any peculiar productions either animal or vegetable. Its capabilities for supplying all that can contribute to the comfort and enjoyment of man are, however, of the first order, while the elevated plains on the western side of the territory afford the most agreeable temperature of climate. The S.W. section of the territory is rich in minerals, including both gold and silver; but the most distinguishing feature of surplus production, hitherto, has been horses, mules, and horned cattle, which have been exported in large quantities to Jamaica, and all the other West India Islands; these, with an inconsiderable supply of cotton, wool, cocoa (the best in the world,) coffee, tobacco, and indigo, and some dye-woods, with silver to the amount of about 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 of dollars, making an average return of about 1,500,000^l, constitute about the collective extent of its external commerce.

COLOMBAER, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Saone, and chief place of a canton in the district of Vesoul; 4 miles N.E. of Vesoul, and 10 W. of Lure.

COLOMMIERS, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne; 18 miles S.E. of Meaux, and 40 E. of Paris.

COLONNA CAPE, the S.E. point of Livadia; 30 miles S.E. of Athens. The name also of another cape on the E. coast of Calabria, near the entrance to the Gulf of Tarento, in lat. 39. 6. N.

COLONSA, a fertile island off the W. coast of Scotland, to the W. of Jura. It is separated on the S. from that of Oronsa, by a narrow channel, which being dry at low water, they may be considered as one island; about 12 miles long and two broad.

COLOOR, a town of Hindostan, in the circar of Guntoor, near which is a diamond mine. It is situate on the S. side of the Kistnah; 13 miles N.W. of Condovir.

COLORADO, a river of Mexico, which falls into the Gulf of California, at its head, in the lat. of 33. N. The main branch, which is called the St. Rafael, has its source in the lat. of about 40. N., not far distant from those of the del Norte, the Arkansas, and the Platte, all of which flow S. and W. into the Gulf of Mexico. There are six other branches, all of which have their source N. of the 36th degree of N. lat., which fall into the St. Rafael, whose united stream may be considered the main branch of the Colorado; about 50 miles above its entrance into the Gulf of California, it is united by another stream, from the eastward, called the Gila. These rivers are said to afford several hundred miles of navigation for vessels of considerable burthen.

COLORADO, OR RED RIVER, is also the name of another river, rising E. of the Andes, in the lat. 32. S., running in a S.S.E. direction, through the red loamy plains of Pampas and Buenos Ayres, into the South Atlantic Ocean, in the lat. of 40. S.

COLOSURI, an island of Greece, formerly called Salamis, near the coast of Livadia; 7 miles long and two broad. The principal town is of the same name, on the S. side, with an excellent harbour; 17 miles W. by S. of Athens. It was in the strait between this island and the main land where Themistocles defeated the Persian fleet.

COLOSWAR. See CLUSENBURG.

COLSTERWORTH, a village in Lincolnshire on the Witham; 8 miles S. of Grantham; celebrated for being the birthplace of the famous Sir Isaac Newton.

COLUMB MAJOR, St. a town in Cornwall, with a market on Thursday, seated on a hill; 26 miles N.N.W. of Penryn, and 249 W.S.W. of London.

COLUMBIA, OR OREGON, a river in the N.W. part of N. America. It rises in the Rocky Mountains, in lat. 55. 0. N., and falls into the Pacific Ocean in lat. 46. 16. N., after a course of 1500 miles; 190 miles up it is obstructed by rapids, when it is navigable for 65 miles to the "long narrows" and falls, and then 150 miles to the embouchure of the Lewis river. It abounds with salmon, and the Indians, who inhabit permanent villages on the banks, live on the produce of its waters. Astoria, a commercial settlement, is at its mouth. It was first explored by Captains Lewis and Clarke, in 1805, who passed down it to the Pacific Ocean, into a bay of which it enters, by a mouth about three miles wide, in long. 123. 26. W. lat. 46. 19. N. See MISSOURI. The Spaniards claim the discovery of this river, and call it Entrada de Ceta, after the commander of the vessel. It derives its name, Oregon, from the wild marjoram, oregano, abundant in the territory.

COLUMBIA, a district of the United States of America, the seat of the federal city. Pop. 43,712, including 4694 slaves. See WASHINGTON.

COLUMBIA, a county of the state of New York, on the E. side of the Hudson river; bounded on the E. by Berkshire county, Massachusetts. It is about 35 miles from N. to S., and 20 from W. to E. The pop. is 43,252. It is divided into 14 townships. The Hudson and Berkshire railway passes through it. It yields some iron at Ancram, in the S.E. part of the county. The city of Hudson (which see) on the E. bank of the noble river of that name, 30 miles S. of Albany, and 110 N. of New York, is the chief place in the county.

COLUMBIA, a county in the state of Georgia, bounded on the E. by the Savannah river, which divides it from Edgefield county, S. Carolina. It is nearly a square of about 25 miles each way; being on the verge of the upland district, it is a healthy, agreeable, and fruitful country. Capital, Applington. Pop. in 1840 was 11,356, of whom 7313 were slaves.

COLUMBIA, a city of South Carolina, capital of Richland county, and the seat of government of the state; but a branch of each of the public offices is retained in Charleston, with which it is connected by railroad. It is the seat of a university, liberally patronized by the state; and is situate on the Congaree river, just below the conflux of the Saluda and Broad rivers; 110 m. N.N.W. of Charleston, 170 S.W. of Raleigh, and 507 S.W. by S. of Washington. Long. 81. 10. W. lat. 33. 58. N.

COLUMBIA, a town of Pennsylvania, Lancaster county, situate on the Susquehanna, at Wright's Ferry. The Columbia and Philadelphia railway passes through it; 12 m. W. of Lancaster, and 70 W. by N. of Philadelphia.

COLUMBIA, a town of the district of Maine, in Washington county, situate on Pleasant River, near the Atlantic; 15 miles W.S.W. of Machias; it is also the name of othertowns.

COLUMBIA, a new colony on the western side of British N. America, between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific. The Fraser and Thompson rivers are rich in gold, and the district about the latter is exceedingly fertile. A governor has been appointed, and a bishop. It is a most promising colony.

COLUMBIANA, a county of the state of Ohio. It is a square of about 35 miles each way; the S.E. corner jets upon the Ohio river at the point where it divides the state of Ohio from that of Virginia, the E. side being bounded by Beaver county, in the state of Pennsylvania. It is intersected from the N.W. by Little Beaver River, which falls into the Ohio at the point of union with Beaver county. The fertility and local advantages of this county may be inferred from the increase of population since 1810, when it was 10,870; in 1820, 22,033; and is now 40,378. There is a town of the same name in the N. part of the county; but the chief town is New Lisbon, on the N. bank of the Little Beaver River, in the centre of the county; 185 miles E.N.E. of Columbus.

COLUMBO, or COLOMBO, the maritime capital of Ceylon. In 1805 its site was the residence of a powerful native chief, on whose territory the Portuguese first settled in 1517, and founded the present town in 1638; the Portuguese, in 1653, were expelled by the Dutch, and they surrendered it to the English in 1796. The fort, upwards of a mile in circumference, stands on the extremity of a peninsula, and is strong both by nature and art. The town is built more in the European style than any other garrison in India, and nearly divided into four equal quarters by two principal streets, to which smaller ones run parallel, with connecting lanes between them. The natives, who are very numerous, live in the old town, without the walls of the new, like most of the maritime cities of the east. Its inhabitants comprise some of all nations, and the aggregate population is very considerable. Here is a school for the propagation of the Christian religion, and a botanical garden. Colombo is the chief place for the staple trade of the island. The articles exported are cinnamon, pepper, arrack, and coir rope, or cordage; also cocoa-nuts and oil, wax, honey, cardamoms, coral, ivory, fruit, &c. Colombo is situate in a rich district on the W. coast, towards the S. part of the island. Long. 79. 45. E. lat. 6. 55. N. It contains 31,549 inhabitants.

COLUMBRETES ISLES, off the coast of Spain, in the province of Valencia; 29½ miles from Cape Oropesa. They are fourteen in number, and the principal one, which has a harbour, is apparently the extinguished crater of a volcano, which has afforded shelter to the Moorish corsairs.

COLUMBUS, a small county in the S.E. part of North Carolina, in the swampy district, through which runs the line dividing N. from S. Carolina. Pop. 3941, of whom 1086 are slaves.

COLUMBUS, a city of the United States, capital of Muscogea county, Georgia. It is on the E. bank of the Chattahoochee river, at the head of the steamboat navigation; 3 miles above it the river fills 111 feet. It is regular in its plan, and has some factories, and cotton factories are erecting. Its growth has been rapid, and it is still increasing. A large number of steamboats navigate to New Orleans and other places. It is 275 miles above Appalacicola Bay, and 124 W.S.W. of Milledgeville. Pop. in 1840, 3114.

COLUMBUS, the chief town of Franklin county, in the state of Ohio, and seat of government of the state. It is pleasantly situate on a gentle eminence, on the E. bank of the Scioto river, just below the junction of the Whetstone; 45 miles above, or N. of, Chillicothe, and 418 W. by N. of Washington. Pop. 6048.

COLUMNA, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow, and an archbishop's see; situated on the S.E. frontier of the province, at the confluence of the Moskwa with the Oka river, 50 miles S.E. of Moscow.

COLYTON, a town of Devonshire, with a market on Thursday; seated on the Cole, at its confluence with the Ax; 17 miles E. of Exeter, and 171 W. by S. of London.

COM, or KOM, a town of Persia, in Irac Ajemi, with several beautiful mosques, and some grand sepulchres, especially those of Seli I. and Abbas II. The trade is considerable; and the chief articles are fruit, both fresh and dry, the best soap in Persia, excellent sword blades, white porcelain, silks, and velvets. It is seated near the foot of a mountain, and on the banks of a river, in a fine plain; 110 miles N.N.E. of Ispahan. Pop. 15,000.

COMAYAGUA. See VALLADOLID.

COMDE MARTIN, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated on an inlet of the Bristol Channel, surrounded by lodes of iron and lead, the produce from which is shipped for Wales and Bristol. It is 6 miles E. of Ilfracomb, and 202 W. of London.

COMBOURG, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilains; 25 miles S.S.E. of St. Maloes; it was the birthplace of Chateaubriand.

COMBICONUM, a town of Hindostan, situate on the banks of the Cavery river, about 20 miles above its entrance into the sea. It was the capital of the most ancient of the Hindoo dynasties; it is now inconsiderable, but several ruins still remain to attest its former greatness. It is about 15 miles N. by E. of Tanjore.

COMERCOLLY, a town of Bengal, near the S. bend of the main branch of the Ganges; about 100 miles N. by E. of Calcutta; it is one of the stations or factories of the English East India Company, for collecting of silk and cotton manufactures.

COMILLA, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal, and chief place of the country of Tippera. It is seated on a river that flows W. into the Burampooter; 58 miles E.S.E. of Dacca, and 185 E.N.E. of Calcutta.

COMINES, a town of France, in the department of Nord, on the river Lys; 8 miles N. from Lille. It has a trade in linen, &c. Pop. 2582.

COMITAN, a town of the republic of Guatemala, on the frontier of Chiapas. It is notorious for its smuggling trade, and is the place of transit for most of the European goods used in Central America, smuggled in from Belize and Guatemala. Pop. about 10,000.

COMMENDO, or COMMANI, a kingdom of Guinea, on the Gold Coast, formerly a part of the kingdom of Fetu. The natives are of a warlike disposition, and so numerous that the king is said to be able to raise an army of 20,000 men. The capital, where the king resides, is called Grand Commendo, or Guffo; 4 miles to the S. of which, on the sea-coast, is Little Commendo, where the English and Dutch have forts. It lies to the W. of Cape Coast Castle, in the lat. of 4. 54. N. and 3. 34. W. long.

COMMERCY, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, with a castle seated on the Menise; 16 miles E. of Bar le Duc. Pop. about 3600.

COMMOTAU, or CHOMUTOU, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz. Its alum pits, and the great quantities of fruit and vegetables raised here, are the principal part of its trade. It is 53 miles N. W. of Prague, on the road to Chemnitz.

COMO, a city of Austrian Italy, in the Milanese, and a bishop's see. It is surrounded by a wall, backed by a conical eminence, on which are the ruins of a castle. The cathedral is a handsome edifice of white marble, hewn from the neighbouring quarries. The inhabitants have manufactures of cotton and silk, and carry on some trade with the Grisons. Pliny was born here, and speaks of the delightful scenery of its environs. It stands at the S. W. end of the Lake of Como; 24 miles by railway N. of Milan, and 80 N. E. of Turin. Pop. about 15,000.

COMO, LAKE OF, a lake of Italy, in the Milanese, extending from the city of Como in a N. N. E. direction for about 35 miles; it varies in breadth from 1 to 6 miles, and receives from the N. the river Maira, and from the E. the Adda, both of which rivers fall into the lake at its N. E. end, and discharge their waters by an arm from near the centre on the S. E. side; this arm extends for about 20 miles, from 1 to 2 miles wide, and is called Lake Lecco, when it again narrows, and resumes the name of the Adda, till it falls into the Po, after a further course of about 60 miles, a few miles above Cremona.

COMORIN CAPE, the most southern point of Hindostan, in the lat. of 8. 4. N. and 77. 45. of E. long.

COMORN, a strong tower of Hungary, capital of a territory of the same name. It is seated on an island called Schut, formed by the confluence of the Wag with the Danube; 70 miles E. S. E. of Vienna. The citadel is deemed one of the strongest in Europe, and had never surrendered to any besieging force. The town was taken by the sultan Solyman, in 1543; and has since then been exposed to various conflicts and ravages, alike from war, fire, and earthquakes. It has about 17,500 inhabitants, who carry on a considerable traffic with the surrounding country.

COMORO ISLANDS, five islands in the Indian Ocean, between the coast of Zanguebar and the N. end of the island of Madagascar. They are called Hinzenan, Mahotta, Mohilla, Angezeia, and Comoro. See HINZUAN. Grand Comoro rises to the height of nearly 8000 feet above the level of the sea.

COMPIEGNE, a town of France, in the department of Oise. Here is a palace, in which the kings of France often resided. The Maid of Orleans was taken prisoner here by the English, in 1430. It is seated near an extensive forest, on the E. bank of the river Oise, over which is an elegant bridge, a little below the confluence of the Aisne, and 45 miles N. E. of Paris.

COMPOSTELLA, or SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELLA, a city of Spain, capital of Galicia, and an archbishop's see, with a university. The public squares and churches are magnificent. It is pretended that the body of St. James, the patron of Spain, was buried here; and pilgrims visit his wooden image, which stands on the great altar of the cathedral. From this city the military order of St. Jago had its origin. It is seated in a beautiful plain between the rivers Tambre and Ulla; 35 miles S. by W. of Corunna, and 300 N. N. W. of Madrid. Pop. about 12,000.

COMPOSTELLA, a town of Mexico, in Guadalupe; capital of the district of Xalisco. There are several mines of silver in its neighbourhood. It is 110 miles W. of Guadalupe, and about 50 from the shore of the Pacific Ocean, in the long. of 105. 42. W. lat. 21. 15. N.

CONCAN, a low tract of country on the W. coast of the Deccan of Hindostan. From this tract rises abruptly that stupendous wall of mountains, called the Gauts. It lies between the Portuguese settlement of Goa and Bombay, in the lat. of 16. and 19. N., and was formerly designated the Pirate Coast, in consequence of the frequent piracies committed upon it during the 17th and 18th centuries. The pirates were extirpated by a united British and Mahratta force in 1756, and the territory guaranteed to the Poishwa of the Mahrattas, in whose sovereignty it still continues. It is about 40 miles wide, and intersected by several small rivers; and the coast is indented by numerous bays and harbours, the principal of which are as follows, beginning at the N., viz.—Choul, Bancoote, or Fort Victoria, Dabul, Zigar, Gheria, and Rajpoor: off Dabul lies the small island of Severndroog, which was the main point of rendezvous for the pirates. It is divided into N. and S. districts, which together have an area of 12,270 square miles, and a population of 1,044,120.

CONCARNEAU, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre, with a castle; seated on a small inlet of the sea; 16 miles S.E. of Quimper.

CONCEPCION, BAY AND TOWN OF, in Chili. The Bay of Concepcion is one of the most commodious on the whole western coast of South America. It is about 10 miles each way, open to the N.W., the entrance being divided into two channels by the small island of Quiriquina. Both channels have sufficient depth of water for the largest vessels; the eastern is about two miles wide, and the western about one mile and a half. The S. side of the island of Quiriquina affords very good anchorage; but the S.W. extremity of the bay is more convenient. On the shore of this part of the bay is the town of Talcahuana, nearly on the site of which the town of Concepcion was originally founded by Valdivia in 1550; and it was, for a considerable time, the capital of all Chili; but having repeatedly suffered from the attacks of the Araucanians, the seat of government was transferred to St. Jago; and having suffered greatly by an earthquake in 1730, and totally destroyed in 1751, the town was rebuilt on the N. bank of the Biobio river, at a distance of about 6 miles S.E. of the site of the former town. Next to St. Jago, it is the most populous town in Chili; and in 1826, contained about 13,000 inhabitants. Previously to 1835 it possessed a massive cathedral, and as many as 20,000 people; but the cathedral and the greater part of the city were in that year totally destroyed by an earthquake. Its manufactures and trade, it is said, at present are of little importance. It is situate in the province of Puchacay, in the lat. of 36. 43. N. and 73. 5. of W. long.

Connaught. The ruins of several churches and religious houses are yet visible.

CONGAREE, a river of S. Carolina. It is formed of the united waters of the Broad and Saluda rivers, which, after a course of about 40 miles, when united with the Wateree, in nearly the centre of the state, the united streams then take the name of the Santee.

CONGLETON, a town of England, in the county of Cheshire. It is seated on the banks of the river Dean; 161 miles N.W. of London, on the road to Liverpool. There are two mills for spinning cotton; the weaving, also, both of cotton and silk, has been established in the town and neighbourhood. It has two tan-yards, and various other manufactures dependent on the process of spinning. It is 7 miles S.S.W. of Macclesfield.

CONGO, a country on the W. coast of South Africa, between 4 and 15 deg. of S. lat., containing the kingdoms of Loango, Congo, Angola, Matamba, and Benguela. It was discovered by the Portuguese in 1481; and is bounded on the N. by Guinea, E. by parts unknown, S. by Beuba, and W. by the Atlantic. It is sometimes called Lower Guinea; and the Portuguese have many settlements on the coast, as well as in the inland country. There are many desert places within land, in which are elephants, tigers, leopards, monkeys, and monstrous serpents; but near the coast the soil is more fertile; and there are fruits of many kinds, beside palm trees, from which wine and oil are made. The greatest part of the inhabitants go almost naked; they worship the sun, moon, stars, and animals of different kinds; but the Portuguese have made many converts: they are skilful in weaving cotton cloth; and trade in slaves, ivory, cassia, and tamarinds. Congo, properly so called, is only 150 miles broad along the coast, but is 370 inland. From March to September is called the winter season, when it rains almost every day; and the summer is from October to March, when the weather is very hot. The principal rivers are the Zaire and Coanza. The capital is St. Salvador. See ZAIRE.

CONGO, a town of Persia, in Laristan. It is a market for pearls, brought from Bahrein, and is seated on a river, which flows into the Persian Gulf; 90 miles W. by S. of Ormuz. Long. 54. 30. E. lat. 26. 36. N. Pop. about 7000.

CONI, a fortified town of Piedmont, capital of a territory of its name, with a strong citadel. Its trade is considerable, being the repository for all the merchandise from Turin and Nice, which is intended for Lombardy, Switzerland, and Germany. It is so strong by nature and art, that, though frequently besieged by the French, they never could take it. In 1796 it was delivered up to the French after their victory at Mondovi, as a hostage for the performance of a treaty; and it surrendered to the Austrians in 1799. It fell again into the hands of the French in 1810, and was ceded to Sardinia at the general peace of 1814. It is seated on a rock, at the confluence of the Gezzo and Stura; 35 miles S. of Turin. Pop. about 10,000.

CONIL, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on a bay to which it gives name. The inhabitants are much engaged in fishing, especially for tunnies; and beautiful crystallized sulphur is found here. It is 13 miles N. of Cadiz.

CONISBROUGH, a village in West Yorkshire, 5 miles S. W. of Doncaster. It was formerly a place of note, and has large remains of an ancient castle.

CONISTON-MERE, a lake in Lancashire, 6 miles long and nearly one broad. It is in some places 40 fathoms deep, and abounds in excellent char. Near the head of it, on the N. W. side, is the village of Coniston, 3 miles W. by S. of Hawkshead, and N. of the village rises the peak of Coniston Fell, to the height of 2577 feet above the level of the sea.

CONJEVERAM, a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic. The streets are tolerably wide; and on each side is a row of cocoa-nut trees. The inhabitants are most of them Brahmins belonging to two large temples; there is also a mosque of very neat workmanship. It is seated near the Palcar; 24 miles E. of Arcot, and 44 W. S. W. of Madras.

CONNAUGHT, one of the four provinces of Ireland; bounded on the S. by Munster, E. by the river Shannon, which divides it from Leinster, N. by Donegal and Sligo Bays, and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, which indents it with numerous bays, giving it from 300 to 400 miles of sea coast, flanked by numerous islands. It has a good deal of mountainous territory, and several lakes. It contains five counties, viz. Galway, Roscommon, Mayo, Sligo, and Leitrim; and 3,658,546 English acres.

CONNENT, a town in the S. E. corner of Ohio, at the entrance of the Conneant Creek into Lake Erie, and owns considerable shipping. Pop. 2642.

CONNECTICUT, one of the United States of North America; bounded on the E. by a conventional line, from the lat of 41. 20. to 42. N., which divides it from the state of Rhode Island, N. by the line of the 42nd deg. of N. lat. from the long. of 71. 53. to 73. 30. W.; this line divides it from the western part of the state of Massachusetts; on the W. it is divided from the state of New York by another conventional line, in a direction nearly due S., to the lat. of 41. N., the whole of its southern boundary being washed by the waters of Long Island Sound; these limits give an area of about 4675 square miles—nearly 3,000,000 of acres. The surface of Connecticut is agreeably diversfied by gently-swelling hills and valleys, presenting to the eye of the traveller a constantly varying prospect; and in the western part of the state, the hills rise to a height to claim the denomination of mountains, more especially so in the county of Litchfield; and the state is intersected from N. to S. by three fine rivers; the most easterly is the Thames, the next the Connecticut, and the most westerly the Housatonic; these, with their numerous tributary streams, intersect every part of the state, contributing alike to the diversity and fertility of the country. The first settlements in Connecticut were made on the bank of the river of that name by a band of emigrants from Massachusetts, in 1634. A short time after, another band of emigrants from England established themselves at Newhaven, at the head of a small bay, near the mouth of the Housatonic river. The two settlements were united under a charter granted by Charles II. in 1662. In 1673 Connecticut formed a confederacy with Massachusetts and Plymouth, under the name of the United Colonies of New England. The early settlers experienced much interruption from the Indians, who have long since been driven far beyond the limits of the state. An attempt was early made to infringe upon the conditions of the charter, which occasioned continued contentions during the reign of the Stuarts; but on the charter being confirmed by William and Mary, in 1688, the province continued to increase in population and prosperity, and contributed essentially and effectually to all the expeditions of the English against the French, in Canada, and other parts of America, especially towards the capture of Louisbourg in 1745. During the revolution of 1776—1783, although Connecticut manifested less virulence towards England than some of the other provinces, she acted a steady and determined part in favour of independence. To the war declared by the United States against England, in 1812, the state of Connecticut displayed a marked and decided opposition; and in 1814-15 a convention assembled at Hartford, the capital of the state, with the view, as is supposed, of proposing to secede from the confederacy; but a treaty of peace being signed at Ghent, on the 24th of December, 1814, prevented the intentions of the Assembly being announced.

The charter of 1662 continued to form the basis of the government of Connecticut until 1818, when a new constitution, resembling those of most of the other states, was adopted. (See UNITED STATES.) Although limited in extent of territory, Connecticut is a very efficient member of the United States' confederacy; the industry, well-directed exertion, and social order of the people, not being exceeded by any in the union; and, while she exhibits no pre-eminent traits of character in any one pursuit, agriculture, manufactures, commerce, education, and the useful arts, display a rational medium of influence and effect over every part of the state. The supplies of its agricultural produce in horses, mules, Indian corn, beans, onions, butter, cheese, cider, beef, and pork, is considerable; part of which is exchanged at New York and Boston for manufactured productions, and part in the southern states and the West Indies, for the production of those climates. In 1820 Connecticut was divided into eight counties; viz. Hartford, New Haven, New London, Fairfield, Windham, Litchfield, Middlesex, and Tolland. There are six cities in Connecticut: Hartford, New London, New Haven, Middletown, Bridgeport, and Norwich. The other large towns are numerous and important. There are three colleges in the state: Yale college, at New Haven, one of the oldest, and the most flourishing in the union; Washington college, at Hartford; and the Wesleyan university at Middletown. This state has a larger productive school fund than any other state. The principal internal improvements are the Farmington canal, extending 56 miles from New Haven; a canal on the Connecticut river at Enfield; the Norwich and Worcester railroad, 58½ miles; the New Haven and Hartford railroad, 36 miles; the Housatonic railroad, 73 m., and several others. The population, next to that of Massachusetts, is more dense than in any other part of the United States; notwithstanding which, great numbers are constantly emigrating to Ohio, and other parts of the western territory. The climate of Connecticut varies from 91. above to 10. below 0. Fahrenheit, though the extremes seldom exceed 84. and 0.; a variation, however, which may be considered extreme, considering its latitude. Pop. 301,015.

CONNECTICUT RIVER rises at the foot of the range of hills which divides New Hampshire from Lower Canada; and, for a course of about 170 miles in a S. S. W. direction, divides the state of New Hampshire from the state of Vermont, when it enters the western part of the state of Massachusetts, through which it runs in a direction nearly due S., a distance of about 50 miles, when it enters the state of Connecticut, through which it runs in a S. by E. direction for about 60 miles into Long Island Sound, dividing the state into nearly two equal parts. This river is navigable to Middletown, 36 miles from its mouth, for vessels drawing 10 feet of water; and to Hartford, 14 miles further, for those drawing 8 feet: higher up, the navigation, except for boats, is impeded by a succession of rapids, which afford the most advantageous sites for mills. The scenery of its banks, nearly the whole of its course, is delightful, and in parts grand; and the soil exceedingly fertile. It is crossed by numerous bridges above Hartford.

CONNEXUH. See CONEXUH.

CONNEMARA, a district of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, containing some of the best harbours in Ireland.

CONNOR, a parish in the county of Antrim, Ireland. There is a decayed town in the parish, formerly a bishop's see, now united to Down. It is six miles North of Antrim.

CONQUET, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre, with a good harbour and road. It is twelve miles West of Brest.

CONSELVE, a town of Italy; 12 miles S. of Padua. Pop. about 6000.

CONSIGLIONE, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara; 19 miles S. of Palermo.

CONSTADT, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Oels; twenty-three miles N. E. of Brieg.

CONSTANCE, a fortified city of the Grand Duchy of Baden, seated on the S. side of the Rhine, between the upper and lower lakes of Constance, or the lakes of Constance and Zell. Though once flourishing in commerce, and celebrated in history, it now scarcely contains 6000 inhabitants. Constance is famous for a council in 1514, which caused John Huss and Jerome of Prague to be burnt; and likewise condemned the doctrine of Wickliffe, and ordered his bones to be burned forty years after he was dead. It was formerly the capital of a secularized bishopric, extending on both sides of the Rhine; that on the S. is now included in the Swiss canton of Thurgau; and that on the N., with the city itself, now forms part of the circle of the lake in the territory of the Grand Duke of Baden; 100 miles S. S. E. of Carlsruhe, 80 E. of Basle, and 42 N. N. E. of Zurich.

CONSTANCE, LAKE OR, the most considerable lake of Switzerland, which it separates from Suabia, that part excepted where the city of Constance is seated on its S. side. It is divided into three parts. The upper and largest part is called Boden See; the middle part is named Bodmer See; and the lower part Unter See, Zeller See, or the lake of Zell. The upper lake, from Bregenz, at its eastern extremity, to Constance, is 37 miles long, and 15 in its greatest breadth. Through this lake the Rhine flows, and then enters the Zeller See, which is 16 miles long, and 10 in its greatest breadth. It is in some places 350 fathoms deep, and 100 generally; and, like all the lakes in Switzerland, is deeper in summer than in winter; which is owing to the first melting of the snow from the adjacent mountains. It abounds with fish, and its trout are much esteemed; and besides the city of Constance, has many agreeable towns and villages on its banks.

CONSTANTINA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle on a mountain; 40 m. N. E. of Seville.

CONSTANTINAH, the eastern province of the country of Algier, and the largest and richest of the four. The greatest part along the coast is mountainous. In the mountains dwell free Arabian and Moorish tribes, of whom the Calybes are deemed the most turbulent and cruel.

CONSTANTINAH, a city of the country of Algier, capital of the province of the same name. It is seated at the top of a steep rock, and there is no way to it but by steps cut out of the rock. Here are many Roman antiquities, particularly a triumphal arch. Next to Algier, this is the most populous city in the kingdom. It is vulgarly called Kosantinah. It was besieged by 8000 French in 1836, who were foiled, and suffered much in their retreat, but it was taken in the following year after a desperate resistance. It is 190 miles E. by S. of Algier. Long. 6. E. E. lat. 36. 24. N.

CONSTANTINOPLE, or STAMBOUL, one of the largest cities in Europe, and the capital of the Turkish empire. It is of a triangular form, and seated between the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora, on a neck of land that advances towards Natolia, from which it is separated by a strait a mile in breadth. The Sea of Marmora washes its walls on the S., and a gulf of the strait of Constantinople does the same on the N.E. It was anciently called Byzantium, but the name was changed in the year 330, by Constantine the Great, who made it the seat of the Roman empire in the East. It was taken in 1453 by the Turks, who have kept possession of it ever since. The grand seignior's palace, called the Seraglio, is on the sea side, surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and separated from the city by canals. It stands on the site of ancient Byzantium, the E. point of the present city, and is 3 miles in circumference, consisting of an assemblage of palaces and apartments placed by the side of one another, without symmetry, and without order. The principal entrance of this palace is of marble, and is called Capi, that is, the Porte, or gate, a name used frequently to express the court, or the empire. The castle of Seven Towers is a state prison, and stands near the sea of Marmora, at the W. point of the city from the seraglio; and at the N.W. point, without the walls of the seraglio, is the Atmeidan, the ancient Hippodrome. The number of houses in Constantinople is prodigious; but in general they are mean, and all of them constructed of wood, and the roofs covered with hollow tiles. The public edifices alone are built of masonry, in a very solid manner. The streets are narrow, badly paved, and dirty; and the people are infested with the plague almost every year. The inhabitants, who are variously said to amount to from 300,000 to 400,000, are half Turks, two-thirds of the other half Greeks or Armenians, and the rest Jews. Here are a great number of ancient monuments still remaining; particularly the superb temple of St. Sophia, built in the sixth century, which is converted into a mosque. Between the two mosques of Sultan Solyman and Bajazet is the old seraglio, in which are shut up the wives of the deceased sultans, and also such women as have displeased the grand seignior. The bazars, or bezesteins, are large square buildings, covered with domes supported by arcades, and contain all sorts of goods, which are there exposed to sale. There is a market for slaves; the Jews are the principal merchants, who bring them here to be sold; great numbers of girls are brought from Hungary, Greece, Candia, Circassia, Mingrelia, and Georgia, for the service of the Turks, who generally buy them for their seraglios. The great square, near the mosque of Sultan Bajazet, is the place for public diversions. The gulf on the N.E. of the city is the harbour; which runs up from the point of the seraglio to the village of Aijub, about 4 miles in length, and half a mile wide where broadest. Aijub may be reckoned one of the suburbs, and has a mosque, in which is the tomb of Sultan Othman, the founder of the empire. The suburbs of Galata and Pera are on the other side of the harbour. The former extends along the entrance of the harbour, and is chiefly occupied by merchants; and adjoining it, on the E., is a cannon foundry, called Tophana. Pera stands behind these, on an eminence, and is the place where the foreign ambassadors reside. It was burnt down some years since. The palace of the British embassy is a fine brick building. On the opposite side of the Bosphorus, in Asia, is the suburb of Scutari, or Skoutari, which is surrounded with very extensive cemeteries. The circumference of this city is 14 miles, and 24 with the suburbs included; and as they are built on ground which rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea. The city is surrounded by walls of freestone, here and there mixed with bricks, and flanked with 250 towers. There are 22 gates, 6 on the land side, and the rest toward the harbour and sea. The palaces, mosques, bagnios, and caravanseries, are many of them magnificent. Constantinople is 780 miles in a direct line S.E. of Vienna. Long. 28. 35. E. lat. 41. 1. N.

CONSTANTINOPLE, STRAIT OF, anciently the Thracian Bosphorus, and forming the communication between the Propontis, or Sea of Marmora, and the Euxine or Black Sea. It is 20 miles long, and a mile and a quarter where broadest; and forms the separation here between Europe and Asia. At its entrance or the W. side is situate Constantinople, and on the other Scutari. Both its banks are lined with villages, where are seen some very handsome houses, almost entirely built of wood, and variously painted; those belonging to the Turks are in white or red; those of the Greeks, Armenians, and Jews, are of a blackish brown, for they are not allowed to employ the colours of the Mussulmans. At its termination in the Black Sea are two forts opposite each other, to defend the passage. See BOSPHORUS.

CONSTANTINAW, a town of Poland, in Podolia, on the river Bog; 8 miles S.W. of Chmielnik, and 72 N.E. of Kuminieck.

CONSTANTINOW, another town of Poland, in Volhina, on the river Sulezca; 30 miles W. by N. of the former.

CONSUEGRA, a town of Spain in La Mancha. It has two churches, a palace, and several Roman antiquities; on a hill are the remains of its ancient castle, 38 miles S.E. of Toledo. Pop. 8000.

CONTESSA, a seaport of European Turkey, in Macedonia, advantageously located at the head of a gulf of its name, at the influx of the Strimon; 60 miles E. by N. of Salonichi, and 246 W. of Constantinople. Long. 24. S. E., and lat. 40. 52. N.

CONTRES, a town of France, in the department of Loir and Cher; 10 miles S.E. of Blois.

CONTY, a town of France in the department of Somme; seated on the Scille; 14 miles S.S.W. of Amiens.

CONVERSANO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari; 12 miles S.E. of Bari.

CONWAY, (i. e. Chief River), a river of Wales, which flows through a fertile vale of the same name, along the whole eastern border of Carnarvonshire, and enters the Irish Sea at Aberconway.

CONWAY, a borough, situated on the estuary of the above river, in Carnarvonshire, 13 miles E. by N. of Bangor. Here are ruins of a fine castle built by Edward I. It is chiefly agricultural, although some improvements have been lately made to render its port more convenient; its trade, however, is very limited.

CONWAY, a town of New Hampshire, U. S. on the Saco. A mineral spring is here, and magnesia and fuller's earth are found; 68 m. N.N.E. of Concord. Pop. 1801.

CONZA, a town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore, and an archbishop's see. It suffered so much by an earthquake in 1694, that the place where the cathedral stood, is hardly known. Its principal commerce is in marble. It is seated near the head waters of the Ofanti river; 52 miles E. of Naples.

COCH BETHAR, a district of Bengal on the frontier of Bootan, which exhibits a melancholy proof of two facts frequently united; the great facility of obtaining food, and the wretched indigence of the lower order of inhabitants. It became tributary to the English in 1772. Bethar, the chief town, is 260 miles N. by E. of Calcutta.

COOK, a county in the State of Illinois, on Lake Michigan. Capital, Chicago. Pop. 10,201.

Cook's INLET, an extensive arm of the sea, on the N.W. coast of America, discovered in 1778 by Captain Cook, who traced it 70 leagues from its entrance, in long. 152. W., and supposed it to be the mouth of a large river; but it was further explored in 1794 by Captain Vancouver, who found its termination to be in long. 148. 43. W. lat. 61. 29. N.

COOK'S STRAIT, a strait dividing the two islands of which New Zealand is composed; it is about 4 or 5 leagues broad.

COOPER, a county of the state of Missouri, and on the W. frontier of the United States, territory. It lies S. of the Missouri river, and is bounded on the E. by a mountain ridge, which divides it from Wayne county, and is intersected from W. to E. by Orange river. Pop. 6959. Boonsville, on the S. bank of the Missouri, in the lat. of 39. S. is the chief town.

COOPERSTOWN, an incorporated town of New York, chief of Otsego county, situate at the S.W. end, and the outlet of Lake Otsego; 12 miles N. W. of Cherry Valley, and 64 W. by N. of Albany.

COOS, a county forming the whole of the N. part of the state of New Hampshire. It is about 90 miles in length from N. to S., and 28 in mean breadth; it is bounded on the E. by the state of Maine, and W. by the Connecticut river which divides it from Vermont, and N. by the ridge of mountains which divides the United States territory from Lower Canada. This county takes its name from a tribe of Indians who formerly inhabited these parts. On the southern confines of this county is a ridge of mountains called the White Mountains, which rises to the height of about 6500 feet above the level of the sea; through them is a pass in one place not more than 22 feet wide, which appears cloven down to its very base, in a perpendicular line on one side, and, on the other, in an angle of about 45 degrees; through this notch or gap, as it is termed, a turnpike road has been constructed from the banks of the Connecticut river to the Atlantic Ocean at Portland, a route much availed of for the conveyance of heavy produce on the sledges in the winter season; and thus, whilst it forms one of the grandest natural features of the world, it is rendered subservient to the medium of an extensive and an advantageous intercourse. Coos county is at present but thinly inhabited. The population, however, which, in 1810, was only 3991, is now 9849. Lancaster, on the E. bank of the Connecticut river, 117 miles due N. of Concord, is the chief town.

COOSA, a county of Alabama with a fertile soil; capital, Rockford. Pop. in 1840, 6995, including 2125 slaves.

COOSAWATCHIE, a town of South Carolina, in Beaufort district. The courts formerly held at Beaufort are held here. It is seated on the Coosaw, over which is a bridge; 20 miles N.W. of Beaufort, and 60 W.S.W. of Charleston.

COOTEHILL, a town of Ireland in the county of Cavan; 74 miles from Dublin. It has a good linen market.

COPENHAGEN, the capital of Denmark, built on a morass, and surrounded by several small lakes. It was founded by some wandering fishermen in the 11th century, and is now accounted the best built city of the north of Europe. It became the seat of the court and government of Denmark in 1443. The streets are well paved, with a foot-way on each side. The greatest part of the buildings are of brick, and a few of freestone; the houses of the nobility are in general splendid, and built in the Italian style. The harbour is capable of containing 500 sail; and the streets are intersected by broad canals, which bring the merchandise close to the warehouses on the quays. Copenhagen contains four royal palaces, twenty-two churches, a great number of public buildings, and a university, and in 1845, 126,787 inhabitants. The palace, called Christiansburg, built by Christian VI. and burnt down in 1794, was an immense pile of building of hewn stone, the wings and stables of brick stuccoed. The hospital of Warlow is large and convenient, containing 350 beds, occupied by as many poor. The church is so placed, that service may be heard by those who are confined to their bed. The exchange is a large Gothic building; vessels are brought very near it by means of canals; and here the merchants assemble. The new royal market is the largest square in the city, and almost entirely composed of stately buildings, as the academy of painting and sculpture, the theatre, the great hotel, the artillery-house, &c., and in the centre is a marble equestrian statue of Christian V. In the N. suburbs is an obelisk of reddish stone erected in 1793 by the city, to the honour of Christian VI. on his abolishing vassalage; and around its pedestal are four female figures of white marble. The citadel is a regular fortification, with five bastions, a double ditch full of water, and several advanced works. This city owes its present beauty to the fire of 1728, which destroyed five churches and sixty-seven streets, having been rebuilt in a better style. It suffered greatly by fire in 1794, again in the following year, and lastly, in 1848. The new part of the town, raised by Frederic V., is extremely beautiful. It consists of an octagon containing four uniform and elegant buildings of hewn stone, and of four broad streets leading to it, in opposite directions. In the middle of the area stands an equestrian statue of Frederic V. in bronze, as large as life, which is justly admired. The round tower, built by Christian IV., and designed for an observatory, is a singular structure, not having a single step in it, though very lofty: its ascent is by a spiral road near 14 feet wide; and one of their kings has driven in his carriage up and down it. On the interruption to the commerce of Holland, by the events of the French revolution in 1793-4, Copenhagen became the principal entrepôt for the commerce of the north of Europe; for which no place can be more advantageously situated; but Denmark becoming involved in the contentions of that period, and joining in a confederacy with Russia and Sweden against the naval ascendancy of England, an English fleet, in March, 1801, was despatched to bombard Copenhagen, when, after considerable damage being done to the town, and 28 ships of war taken or destroyed, an armistice was entered upon, which led to a treaty of peace with all the northern powers; but not without operating as a severe check to the commercial enterprise of Copenhagen; and in 1807 the British Government, anticipating the designs of the French on the fleet and naval stores in the harbour of Copenhagen, sent a fleet of seventeen ships of the line, with frigates, &c., and a considerable army, to take possession of the island of Zealand, Copenhagen, &c., which the Danes opposed, and the city was bombarded for three days, when 300 houses, the cathedral, and part of the university were destroyed, and as many more buildings greatly damaged; and with this event, the ephemeral importance of Copenhagen, as a great commercial entrepôt, may be considered as terminating. Eighteen Danish ships of the line, fifteen frigates, six brigs, and twenty-five gun-boats, with all the naval stores in the arsenal of Copenhagen, were delivered up by capitulation, to Admiral Gambier and Lord Cathcart. The city is five miles in circumference, seated on the E. shore of the isle of Zealand, at the entrance into the Baltic Sea, about 25 miles within the strait called the Sound; 340 miles S.W. of Stockholm, and 500 N.E. of London. Long. 12. 35. E. lat. 55. 41. N. See AMAK.

COPENHAGEN, a village of the state of New York, on the Deer River, which, half a mile below, has a fall of 175 feet perpendicular—a great curiosity; 149 miles N.W. of Albany.

COPIAPO, the most northern province of Chili; bounded on the N. by the great desert of Atacama, E. by the Andes, and W. by the Pacific Ocean; being about 260 miles from N. to S., from 24. 20. to 28. of S. lat., and about 90 miles in mean breadth, abounding in mines of gold, iron, copper, sulphur, tin, and lead. The chief town of the same name, stands on the S. side of a river, also of the same name, at its entrance into the Pacific Ocean; 490 miles N. by E. of Valparaiso. Long. 70. 50. W. lat. 27. 20. S. On the Andes, in a parallel line with the town of Copiapo, is a volcano, called the Volcano of Copiapo.

COPPENBRIDGE, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Collenberg; 10 miles E. by N. of Hamelin.

COPPER-MINE RIVER, a river of North America, which runs from S. to N. into the icy sea, in the long. of 111. 5. W. and 69. 7. of N. lat.

COPPET, or COPET, a town of Switzerland, with a castle, on the W. bank of the Lake of Geneva; 10 miles N. of Geneva. The castle and barony became the property of M. Neckar, celebrated for his pretensions as a financier in the time of the French revolution; both he and his daughter, Madame de Staël, lie interred here in a fine mausoleum in the castle-garden.

COUJET, a river of England, which rises on the borders of Scotland, crosses the centre of Northumberland, and enters the German Ocean at Warkworth. Opposite its mouth is a small island of the same name.

COQUIMBO, or LA SERENA, a seaport of Chili, near the mouth of a river of the same name, and the capital of a province also of the same name, rich in corn and mines of gold and silver. The streets are shaded with fig-trees, palms, oranges, olives, &c., always green. It is 260 miles N. by E. of Valparaiso. Long. 71. 19. W. lat. 29. 52. S.

CORACHIK, or KURACHIEE, a seaport of British India, in Scinde, at the mouth of a creek which communicates, in the rainy season, with the Indus, on the western side. It is supposed to be the Sangada of Arrian, or Port of Alexander, and is now the principal outport of the Punjab. It appears to afford a favourable opening for commercial adventure. It is about 100 miles W. of Tatta, in the lat. of 24. 30. N. and 67. 15. of E. long.

CORAH, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name, lying between the Jumna and the main branch of the Ganges; which came wholly into the possession of the English in 1801. It is a very fertile and productive district; the town is 98 miles N.W. of Allahabad.

CORNACH, a town in the electorate of Hesse, capital of the county of Waldeck. It is divided into the old and new town, and near it, on a mountain, is the castle of Eisenberg. The Hanoverians were defeated here by the French in 1760. It is seated on the Ifter; 22 miles W. of Cassel. Long. 9. 1. E. lat. 51. 16. N.

CORBECK, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant; 3 miles S. of Louvain.

CORBELL, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise; seated on the Seine at the influx of the Juine; 17 m. S. of Paris.

CORBIE, a town of France, in the department of Somme, with a celebrated Benedictine abbey; seated on the Somme; 10 miles E. of Amiens.

CORRIERES, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Friburg; 10 miles S. of Friburg.

CORRINGE, a township, formerly a borough, in Northumberland, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. of Hexham. It anciently sent members to parliament, but has misused that privilege. It is on the line of the Carlisle and Newcastle railway, which has a station here.

CORRY, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday; 13 miles N. of Stamford, and 102 N. by W. of London.

CORCUBION, a poor fishing-town of Galicia, in Spain, near to the noble Cape Finis-terra, the Prom. Nerium, the Land's End.

The pop. 1200. Lord Anson obtained a victory over, and took six line-of-battle ships from the French, May 3, 1747, near the cape. Corcubion is 31 miles from Santiago.

CORDILLERAS. See ANDES.

CORDOUAN, TOWER OF, a lighthouse built on a rock at the mouth of the Garonne river; 55 miles W. by N. from Bordeaux. It is 175 feet high, and of handsome proportions.

CORDOVA, an interior province of Andalusia, in the S. of Spain, comprising an area of about 5500 square miles, and contains a population of about 252,028. It is divided into nearly two equal parts, by the Guadalquivir river, which intersects it from E. to W.: the N.W. part is mountainous, but the more southern part is exceedingly fertile in corn, fruit, wine, and olives. It was formed into an independent kingdom by Abderame, a Moorish general, about the year 695; besides the city of Cordova, the other principal towns are Bujalance and Mantilla.

CORDOVA, CITY OF, the capital of the preceding province, is seated on the N. bank of the Guadalquivir, over which is a bridge of sixteen arches, built by the Moors. It was a considerable place in the time of the Romans, who surrendered it to the Goths in 572. In 692 it was taken by Abderame, a Moorish general, who soon after renounced the authority of the grand caliph of Damascus, and made the city of Cordova the capital of a kingdom. It is a bishop's see, and was once a place of great magnificence, and in the tenth century contained a population of nearly a million; now it has not 60,000 inhabitants. It flourished greatly under the Moors, but it is now a dirty, benighted, ill-provided, decaying place. The circumference is large, but there are many orchards, gardens, and ruined buildings within the walls. The palaces, church, and religious houses were superb, particularly the cathedral, which is 534 feet in length, and 387 wide, built by Abderhaman for a mosque, and it still retains the name of Mezquita. The square, called the Plaza Major, is surrounded by fine houses, under which are piazzas. The trade consists in wine, silk, and leather; but it is not so considerable as formerly. In the neighbourhood are a vast number of orange and lemon trees; and here are the best horses in Spain. It was from hence that the leather called cordovan derived its name, the mode of manufacture being first introduced here by the Moors. Cordova is 130 miles N.E. of Cadiz, and 190 S. by W. of Madrid.

CORDOVA, a town of Mexico, in the intendency of Vera Cruz, and a bishop's see. Here are upwards of thirty sugar-mills. It is seated on a river which flows into the Gulf of Mexico; 80 miles E.S.E. of Puebla de los Angeles, and 55 W. by S. of the port of Vera Cruz.

COREA, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N. by Chinese Tartary, on the E. by the sea of Japan, on the S. by a narrow sea, which separates it from the Japanese islands, and on the W. by the Yellow Sea, which separates it from China. The W. coast is flanked by innumerable islands. It is a peninsula, being surrounded on every side by the sea, except towards the N. It is governed by a king, tributary to the emperor of China, and is divided into eight provinces, Hien-king, Ping-ngung, Hoang-hai, Kiang-yuen, King-ki, Tchu-sin, King-chun, and Tchuen-se, which contains 33 cities of the first, 53 of the second, and 70 of the third rank. Pop. 8,000,000. The towns are populous, and the inhabitants follow nearly the same customs, and are of the same religion, with the Chinese. The country abounds in corn and rice, of which last they have two kinds, one of which delights in water, and the other, which is the better sort, is cultivated on dry ground, like corn. There are mines of gold and silver in the mountains, and good pearl fisheries on the coast. The Corcaus are well made, ingenious, brave, and tractable. They are fond of dancing and music, and show great aptness for acquiring the sciences, which they apply to with ardour. They are less fastidious and less ceremonious than the Chinese, but equally jealous of admitting strangers into the country. Men of learning are distinguished from other people by two plumes of feathers, which they wear in their caps. Their women are less confined than those in China, and have the liberty of appearing in company with the other sex. In China, parents often marry children without their consent, but in Corea they choose for themselves. They never bury their dead till three years after their decease, but keep them in coffins for that time. Corea extends from N. to S. from the lat. of 34. 30. to 42. 30. N., and from E. to W. from 125. to 129. of E. long. Kiang-ki-tao, nearly in the centre of the kingdom, is the capital.

CORFE CASTLE, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Thursday. It is seated on a peninsula in the British Channel, called the Isle of Purbeck, on a river, between two hills, on one of which stands the castle, formerly a place of great importance. Great quantities of fine clay and stone are shipped here for the Staffordshire potteries. The town is governed by a mayor, and every alderman that has served the office has the title of baron. It is 18 miles S. by E. of Dorchester, and 116 W. by S. of London.

CORFU, an island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Albania, at the entrance of the Adriatic. Here is made a great quantity of salt; and it abounds with vineyards, lemons, and olives. It was anciently known under the several names of Scheria, Phacia, and Coreyra. The Corecyrans were an independent people, coeval with the proudest epoch of the Greeks. In the 14th century, the island became subject to the Venetians, in whose possession it continued until 1797, when it was ceded to the French, by the treaty of Campo-Formio. It capitulated to the Turks and Russians in 1729, and, with six other islands, was constituted independent, under the title of IONIAN REPUBLIC (which see.)

CORFU (the ancient Coreyra), the chief town of the preceding island, is situate on the E. side, on the shore of a spacious and secure harbour, for vessels of easy draught of water. The fortifications are very strong. It is the seat of government of the whole of the Seven Islands, or Ionian Republic, and contains about 17,000 inhabitants. Lat. 39. 37. N. long. 19. 56. E.

CORIA, an episcopal town of Spain, in Estremadura; seated on the Alagon; 120 miles W.S.W. of Madrid.

CORINGA, a town at the N. extremity of the coast of Coromandel, having a commodious harbour a few miles N. of the main channel of the Godavery river; in the lat. of 17. N.

CORINTH, ISTHMUS OF, a neck of land which joins the Morea to Livadia, and reaches from the Gulf of Lepanto W., to that of Ægina, E. The narrowest part of it is 6 miles over; and on a mount here, called Oneius, were formerly celebrated the Isthmian games. There are still the ruins of a town upon it, and of the temples dedicated to the Sun, Pluto, Diana, Neptune, Ceres, and Bacchus. Julius Cæsar, Caligula, and Nero in vain attempted to cut a channel through the isthmus; they therefore built a wall across it, called Hexamilia, because it was six miles in length. This was demolished by Amurath II., rebuilt by the Venetians, and levelled a second time by Mahomet II.

CORINTH, a town of the Morea, situate on the northern declivity of a mountain, sloping towards the Gulf of Lepanto and the preceding isthmus, to which it gives name. During the zenith of Grecian glory, Corinth justly ranked among the most important and magnificent cities of Greece; its temples, theatres, and fountains were the admiration of every beholder; and in the proportions and richness of their columns and porticoes, architecture was perfected, leaving nothing for after ages to perform in that noble art but to copy: and the Corinthian pillar or column now, more or less, adorns every city of the civilized world. Corinth fell a prey to the fury of the Roman arms under Mummius, in the year 146 B.C.; and although Julius Cæsar endeavoured to restore it to its former grandeur, in whose time it was visited by St. Paul, it has progressively sunk into a place of insignificance. It fell into the hands of the Venetians during their ascendancy, but the Turks became masters of it in 1715, and in their possession it continued till the Greek revolution. It had formerly a port on the Gulf of Ægina, called Cenchrea, as well as on that of Lepanto; but the former is now little used. The ancient citadel, Acro-Corinthus, still remains entire, and, to a well-disciplined garrison, may be considered impregnable. Corinth is the seat of a Greek metropolitan and bishop. Pop. about 3000. It is 65 miles E. by S. of Patros, and 48 W. by S. of Athens.

CORK, a maritime county forming the S.W. extremity of Ireland, having upwards of 100 miles of sea-coast, indented with several very spacious and safe bays and harbours, opening into the Atlantic Ocean. It is about 35 miles in mean breadth from S. to N., and is intersected from E. to W. by two fine rivers, the Blackwater and the Lee, with five or six others of inferior note. The following are the principal bays and harbours, beginning at the west: viz., Bantry, Dunmanny, Baltimore, Glandore, Ross, Clonakilly, Kinsale, Cork, and Youghal. Besides the city of Cork, the principal towns in the interior are Charleville, Mallow, Doneraile, Michelstown, Bandon, Cloyne, &c. Bandon, Kinsale, Mallow, and Youghal, each return one, and the city of Cork and the county each two members to the parliament of the United Kingdom. The agriculture of this county, both in tillage and pasture, has been much improved since the middle of the eighteenth century, and, in conjunction with the adjoining interior county of Tipperary, supplies large quantities of salt beef and pork, more especially the former, and exports large quantities of butter; and since 1800, it has also exported a considerable quantity of grain. Some woollen manufactures are carried on for internal consumption in the eastern part of the county.

CORK, CITY OF, and capital of the preceding county, supposed to have been founded by the Danes in the sixth century, is beautifully and advantageously situate on the banks of the river Lee, about 5 miles above its entrance into Cork harbour. Cork, in conjunction with Ross, is a bishop's see. The city is divided into twenty two parishes. Next to Dublin, Cork is the largest and most important place in all Ireland. During the twenty-four years' war, from 1793 to 1815, Cork harbour was one of the chief rendezvous of the British navy; and the extensive demand which that war created for salt provisions, led to Cork becoming the largest and most celebrated market in Europe for that article, and it still continues to be the chief source of supply, not only of the national, but of the commercial navy of the United Kingdom; and, for long voyages, and tropical climates, is preferred by the ships of all nations. As the chief commercial town of the south-west of Ireland, it concentrates the surplus production, not only of the whole county, but of the greater part of those of Kerry and Tipperary, which it also supplies with such British and foreign productions as are received in exchange. Since the commencement of the war in 1793, the city has undergone great improvement, both in regard to public and private buildings. There are five bridges over the Lee; that of St. Patrick is a fine structure. The exchange, custom-house, and town-hall, are all fine edifices. It has two theatres, several hospitals, and other public buildings. The cathedral, erected between 1725 and 1735, is a stately edifice, and some of the parish churches are of a like character. The barracks, on the N. side of the city, situate on an eminence, present a very imposing aspect. Cork has a public brewery on a very extensive scale. Cork is 165 m. by railroad S. W. of Dublin, and 20 from Bandon, in the lat. of 51. 54. N., and 8. 28. of W. long.

CORK, COVE OF, named QUEENSTOWN on the occasion of Queen Victoria's visit in 1849. The seaport of Cork, which is entered by a deep and narrow channel, and defended by a strong fort on each side, is about 9 m. from the mouth of the river Lee, and about the same extent in breadth. At the upper end is an island, called Great Island, from 4 to 5 m. long from W. to E., and from 2 to 3 m. wide. At the W. end of this island is Queenstown, formerly called Cove, and at the entrance of the channel between Great Island and the main land, are two small islands called Haulbowline and Rocky Islands, strongly fortified; and thus, whilst the natural positions of Cork harbour are such as afford accommodation for the whole British marine, secure from the effects of the elements, the fortifications render the shipping and the town equally secure from the irruptions of an enemy; and, the surrounding shore being studded with neat and commodious residences, render the whole as picturesque and agreeable as it is important in point of security and defence.

CORLEONE, a large and well-built town of Sicily, in the Val di Mazzara. It is 24 miles S.S.W. of Palermo. Pop. in 1831, 13,788.

CORLIN, a town of Further Pomerania, with a castle. It has considerable woollen manufactures, and is seated on the Persaut; 10 miles S. E. of Colberg.

CORMANTIN, a town of Guinea, on the Gold Coast, large and populous. Here the Dutch have a fort, which was taken by the English in 1665. Long. 0. 15. W. lat. 5. 30. N.

CORMERY, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Indre; 8 miles S. E. of Tours.

CORNA, a town of Asiatic Turkey in Irak Arabi; seated on the Tigris, near its conflux with the Euphrates; 35 miles W.N.W. of Bassora.

CORNETO, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of Saint Peter; seated on the Marta; 3 miles E. of the sea, and 10 N. of Civita Vecchia.

CORNHILL, a town of the county of Durham, in Northshire; seated near the Tweed, over which it has a large bridge to Coldstream, in Scotland. It is 12 miles S.W. of Berwick, and 333 N.N.W. of London.

CORNIGLIANO, a town of Italy, in the Milanese; 15 miles E. of Milan.

CORNING, a town of New York, U. S. on the S. side of the Chemung river, and on the line of the New York and Erie railroad. It is also connected with the Erie Canal, by a canal; and a railroad to Blossburg, Penn. 40 miles long, connects it with the coal region. These advantages have already made its trade to be extensive, 213 miles W.S.W. of Albany.

CORNWALL, a county forming the S.W. extremity of England, projecting into the Atlantic Ocean. It is bounded on the E.N.E. by the river Tamar, which divides it from Devonshire, being washed on all its other sides by the sea. The S. coast, for about 70 miles, borders on the entrance to the English, and the N., for about 90 miles, on the entrance to the Bristol Channel. At its easter or E.N.E. extremity, it is about 42 miles wide, but gradually narrows towards the W. to about 15 miles, when it diverges, at a distance of about 60 miles, into two points; the most southerly called the Lizard, in the lat. of 49. 58. N. and 5. 11. of W. long., and the other the Land's End, in the lat. of 50. 4. N. and 5. 42. of W. long., the intermediate space being known by the name of Mount's Bay. It contains 866,474 acres, and returns two members to parliament for each of the divisions, Eastern and Western. The distinguishing characteristics of this county are its minerals, semi-metals, and clays, which are found here in greater variety than in almost any other part of the world. Gold, silver, iron, cobalt, antimony, manganese, and lapis calaminaris, are all found to a certain extent, and some in abundance; but the predominating productions are copper and tin, with which are mixed mndie and arsenic; in the supply of which upwards of 100 mines are in constant work. Some of the mines are worked to a vast depth; but the perfection of the means applied, as well in bringing the ores to the surface, as in smelting, &c., renders the operations comparatively easy, and the proceeds a source of great wealth to the parties engaged in them, and of general advantage to the county. The mining business is entirely regulated by a code called the Stannary Laws, enacted by a court of stannaters, or proprietors. These laws divide the tinmen into ten divisions, under the superintendence of one warden. A vice-warden is appointed every month; and there is a steward for each precinct, who holds his court every three weeks, where a jury of six persons decides disputes, with a progressive appeal, however, to the vice-warden, lord-warden, and lords of the Duke of Cornwall's council. The mines are under no other jurisdiction excepting in such cases as affect land or life. In addition to its minerals, a vein of soapy earth, and of potter's clay, estimable in the manufacture of porcelain, add considerably to the resources of the county. The shaping of granite for building, and moorstone for grinding of corn, gives employment to great numbers; and, in addition to these resources, the coast of Cornwall is annually visited by shoals of pilchards, which, in fish and oil, yield an average produce of 50,000l. per annum. The occupations of mining and fishing, up to the middle of the eighteenth century, prevailed to such an extent in this county, as to render agriculture almost entirely neglected, and to give it a rudeness and wildness of character distinct from that of every other part of the kingdom; but since that period agriculture has been progressively improving, and potatoes and grain are now included among its surplus productions, which, in the aggregate, may be considered as exceeding 500,000l. per annum in amount. What are denominated the duchy lands are very extensive, and the income derived from them, together with the duty on tin ore, form the only remaining parts of those immense hereditary revenues, which were anciently appropriated as a provision for the heir apparent to the crown. Previously to the invasion of Britain by the Romans, Cornwall was inhabited by a tribe called the Damnonii, with whom the Phœnicians are supposed to have traded largely for tin. The descendants of that tribe, and the succeeding inhabitants, continued longer to retain the language, manners, and customs of antiquity, than in any other part of England; which, up to this time, can hardly be said to be extinct. The coast is, in many parts, extremely rugged, and ridges of granite intersect the western part of the county, whilst the valleys are beautifully diversified with verdure, shrubs, and plants, among which the myrtle is common, with several peculiar to the district. The coast abounds with marine vegetables, which are much used for manure. The blocks of broken granite appear in remote ages, according to the supposition of some persons, to have been much used in the construction of rude temples for religious worship. Near the Land's End is a block from 90 to 100 tons in weight, so nicely poised as to be moveable with the hand; there are several others of less magnitude similarly poised; these are termed loggin stones. The principal ports on the N. coast, are Padstow and St. Ives; on Mount's Bay, Penzance and Helstone; on the S. coast, Falmouth, Truro, Fowey, and Looe; Plymouth Sound, bounding the S.E. extremity of the county. The principal towns in the interior are Redruth, St. Austle, Penryn, Bodmin, Launceston, &c. The assizes, &c., for the county, are held alternately at Bodmin and Launceston. Streams of water intersect the county in all directions, and add considerably to its diversity and picturesque beauty. Some woollen, and a few other manufactures, are carried on in different parts of the county, but they are inconsiderable.

CORNWALL, a township in Orange county, New York, situate along the W. bank of the Hudson river; 105 miles S. of Albany. The United States' military academy of West Point is here. Pop. 3925. Also the name of a township in Addison county, Vermont; and of a town in Litchfield co., Connecticut.

CORNWALL, a town of Connecticut, on the Housatonic river. A foreign and useful mission school was established here in 1718; 39 miles W. by N. of Hartford. Pop. in 1840, 1703.

CORNWALL, a town of Stormont county, Upper Canada, situate on the N. bank of the St. Lawrence; about 50 miles above Montreal.

CORNWALL, CAPE, is about 5 miles N. by E. of the Land's End.

CORNWALL, NEW, a county in the western part of North America, extending from Garliner's canal, in lat. 53. 15., to Frederick's Sound, lat. 37. 6. N.

CORNWALLIS, a town of Nova Scotia, seated on the S. shore of the basin of miles at the head of the Bay of Fundy; about 10 miles N. W. of Windsor, and 45 N. W. of Halifax.

CORNWALLIS, a county of Lower Canada, extending for about 160 miles along the S. E. bank of the great river St. Lawrence; bounded on the N. E. by the district of Gaspe. It is at present but thinly inhabited.

CORO, a town of the republic of Venezuela. It is advantageously situate at the entrance of an isthmus, at about an equal distance from the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Maracaibo. It contains about 10,000 inhabitants, who carry on a considerable trade in mules, cattle, &c., with Curaçoa, and other islands in the Caribbean Sea. See VENEZUELA.

COROMANDEL, COAST OF, the eastern coast of the peninsula of Hindostan, extending from Point Calymere, in the lat. of 10. 18. N. to the Kistnah river, in the lat. 16. N. There is not a port for large ships on the whole coast, which is an even, low sandy country. Madras is the principal town, and the other places of note are Negapatam, Pondicherry, Pullicate, &c.

CORON, a seaport of European Turkey, in the Morea; seated on the W. side of a bay to which it gives name; 15 miles E. of Modon. Long. 21. 46. E. lat. 36. 55. N.

CORONATION GULF, in the Polar Seas, between Melville Sound and Duke of York's Archipelago. Lat. 68. 0. N. long. 112. 0. W.

CORONATION, CAPE, a cape of the island of New Caledonia, in the Pacific Ocean. Long. 167. 8. E. lat. 22. 5. S.

CORREGIO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena, with a castle; 9 miles N. N. E. of Reggio.

CORRÈZE, an interior department of France, containing the late province of Limousin. It takes its name from a river which runs into the Vezere, after having watered Tulle and Brives. Pop. in 1836, 302,433. Tulle is the capital.

CORRIE LOUGH, Ireland, county Galway, connected by a canal with Galway Bay; area 30,000 acres.

CORRIENTES, CAPE, on the E. coast of South Africa, opposite the S. end of the island of Madagascar. Also the name of another cape on the W. coast of Mexico, in the Pacific Ocean, in the lat. of 20 N.

CORRIENTES, a town of Paraguay, with a fort, seated on the E. side of the Parana, at the influx of the river Paraguay; 490 miles N. of Buenos Ayres. Long. 59. 0. W. lat. 27. 30. S.

CORRYVREKAN, a dangerous whirlpool on the W. coast of Scotland, between the Isle of Scarba and the N. point of that of Jura. It is so named from a young Danish prince, who perished in this place. Its vortex extends above a mile in circuit.

CORSHAM, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a considerable woollen manufacture. It is 9 miles E. N. E. of Bath, and 97 W. of London.

CORSICA, or CORSE, an island in the Mediterranean, separated from that of Sardinia, on the S., by the Strait of Bonifacio. It is 150 miles from N. to S., and from 40 to 50 in breadth. It was known to the ancient Greeks by the names of Callista and Cynrus, and to the Romans by its present appellation. On the coast are many excellent harbours. It is mountainous, but fruitful valleys are interspersed; and it has some fine lakes and rivers. In the earliest time it has been famous for its swarms of bees, and produces vast quantities of honey, which, however, is reckoned bitter, on account of the box and yew with which the country abounds. The mountains are rich in lead, iron, copper, and silver; and there are also mines of alum and sulphure. The granite of Corsica is nearly equal to oriental; porphyries, jasper, talc, amianthes, emeralds, and other precious stones, are found scattered in the mountains, and the S. coast abounds with beautiful coral. This island was, for some centuries, under the dominion of the Genoese, whose tyranny was such, that the Corsicans were almost in a perpetual state of insurrection. In 1736, a German adventurer, Theodore Baron Newhoff, brought some assistance to them; and, on his assurance of more powerful aid, they elected him king; but, as he could not substantiate his promises, he was obliged to leave the island. He went into England, was thrown into the Fleet Prison, released by an act of insolvency, (after having registered his kingdom of Corsica for the benefit of his creditors,) and suffered to die in extreme indigence. The Genoese, tired of the contest, sold the sovereignty to France, in 1767; and the celebrated Paoli, who had been elected to the chief command in 1755, was obliged to abandon the island in 1769. After the French revolution in 1789, Corsica was admitted as an eighty-third department of France, at the particular request of a deputation, of which Paoli was at the head. In consequence of some events which followed the revolution in 1792, Paoli revolted; the French, by the assistance of the English, were expelled from the island; and Corsica, in 1794, was declared annexed to the crown of Great Britain. In 1796, however, the English found it expedient to evacuate the island, of which the French immediately took possession, and again united it to France, of which country it now forms the eighty-sixth department. It is divided into five prefectures, viz. Ajaccio, Bastia, Calvi, Corte, and Sartenne. Ajaccio, on the W. coast, is the principal seaport. Pop. in 1836, 874,745.

CONSOER, a town of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand, on a peninsula in the Great Belt, with a good harbour for light vessels. It is defended by a citadel, which serves also as a magazine for corn; and is 54 miles W.S.W. of Copenhagen. Long. 11. 12. E. lat. 55. 12. N.

CORTE, a town of Corsica, situate in the centre of the island, on the side and foot of a rock, at the confluence of the Tavignano and Restonica. On the point of a rock, rising above the rest, is the castle, to which there is but one winding passage, that will admit only two persons abreast. While the island was in the possession of the English, Corte was made the seat of the viceroy; and it has been enlarged and fortified by the French. It is 27 miles N.E. of Ajaccio, and 90 S.W. of Bastia. Pop. 3735.

CORTEMIGLIA, a town of Piedmont, in Montferrat, situate on the Bermida; 16 miles E. of Cherasco.

CORTLAND, a county of the state of New York. Soil fertile; capital, Cortland. Pop. in 1840, 24,607.

CORTLAND, a town of West Chester county, New York, including a portion of the Highlands, watered by the Croton river, which is taken to New York by an aqueduct. Pop. in 1840, 5592; 113 miles S. of Albany.

CORTLANDVILLE, a town of North America, state of New York; 40 miles N. of New York, in a populous and fertile country. Pop. 3799.

CORTONA, a fortified town of Tuscany, and a bishop's see, with an academy. It is dismal and poor, though once famous. It stands on a mountain, on the frontiers of the Roman States; 32 miles E. of Sienna.

CORUNA, LA, a seaport at the N.W. of Spain, in Galicia. It is a very ancient town, being founded by the Phœnicians, and the tower, now called the Torre de Hercules, still serves for the light house. La Coruna, or as it is sometimes called by us, Coranna, or formerly the Groyne, since the Audiencia and captain-general have been removed to it from Santiago, has made much progress in every kind of improvement; population, 25,000 and increasing. It is the chief seaport of Galicia, and stands on a headland of the three bays of Coruna, Betanzos and El Ferrol, the coast is picturesquely indented; it is about half way between capes Ortegal, and Finisterre. It has an upper and lower quarter; the first contains the official and ecclesiastical buildings and two ancient churches. The new town, was once La Pescadaria, or the resort of fishermen. It has now eclipsed the other, and is well and handsomely built, chiefly of granite. There is, however, but little to see here. It is easily accessible now from England. The Spanish Armada refitted here previous to its memorable defeat. It is also the scene of Moore's celebrated retreat with 13,244 men before the French army, Jan., 16. 1809. It is 20 miles S.W. of Ferrol, and 35 N. by E. of Compostella. Long. 8. 20. W. and lat. 43. 23. N.

CORVEN, a town and small principality of Westphalia, with a celebrated abbey; situated on the Weser; 27 miles E. by N. of Paderborn. Long. 9. 35. E. lat. 51. 46. N.

CORVO, the smallest and most northerly island of the Azores, so called from the abundance of crows found upon it. The inhabitants cultivate wheat, and feed hogs. Long. 31. 6. W. lat. 39. 42. N.

CORWRU, a town in Wales, county of Merioneth; 10 miles N.E. of Bala, and 194 W.N.W. of London. It is situate on the S. bank of the Dee.

CORTDON, a flourishing town of Harrison county, Indiana, situate on the base line of a bend of the Ohio river; from which it is distant about 15 miles both E. W. and S.

COSALA, a town of Mexico, in the state of Sonora. It is important as being the depôt for goods passing to and from the port of Guaymas on the Gulf of California, but more so on account of its mines; 60 miles from the Pacific Ocean. Pop. in 1836, 6000.

COSEL, a town of Prussia, province of Silesia, on the Oder. It is fortified, and contains a population of 3600.

COSENZA, a city of Naples, capital of Calabria Citeriore, and an archbishop's see, with a strong castle. The environs produce abundance of corn, fruit, oil, wine, and silk. It is situate on several small hills, at the foot of the Appennines on the E. side, and by the river Crati; 155 miles S.E. of Naples. Pop. about 9000.

COSNOCTON, an interior county of the state of Ohio. Several streams of considerable magnitude unite in this county to form the Muskingum river, which river it is in contemplation to unite with the Cayahoga, and thereby open a direct water communication between the Ohio and Lake Erie. The chief town, of the same name, is situate on the E. bank of the Muskingum, 65 miles N N.E. of Columbia, the capital of the state. Pop. of the county, 21,590.

COSLIN, or KOSLIN, a town of Further Pomerania, Prussia, which has good woollen manufactures, excellent fisheries, and fine cattle. It is seated on the Nesebach; 18 n. E. of Colberg.

JOSNE, a town of France, in the N.W. part of the department of Nievre. Anchors for ships are forged here; and its cutlery and gloves are much esteemed. It is seated on the E. bank of the Loire, at the influx of the Nonin; 34 miles N. by W. of Nevers, and 110 S. by E. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 5823.

COSPOUR, a town of Hindostan, province of Cachar, now much decayed; 276 m. E. of Patna. Long. 92. 57. E. lat. 24. 56. N.

COSSACKS, or KOZAKS, a people inhabiting the confines of Poland, Russia, Tartary, and Turkey. They are divided into the Kosakki-sa-Parovi, the Kosakki-Donski, and the Uralian Cossacks. The men are large and well made, have blue eyes, brown hair, and aquiline noses; the women are handsome, well shaped, and complaisant to strangers. The Uralian Cossacks dwell in villages along the banks of the Ural, and their chief town is Uralsk. The country which the Kosakki-sa-Parovi inhabit is called the Ukraine, and their towns are built of wood, after the manner of the Russians. The Kosakki-Donski dwell on both sides of the Don, are under the protection of Russia, and profess the same religion. See UKRAINE and URALIAN COSSACKS.

COSSEIR, or KOSSEIR, a town of Egypt, on the Red Sea, and the chief place of trade across that sea, between Egypt and Arabia. It is 280 miles S. by E. of Suacz. Long. 33. 50. E. lat. 26. 8. N.

COSSIMBAZAR, a river of Hindostan, in Bengal; the most western arm of the Ganges, from which it separates 35 miles below Rajemal. It passes by Moorshedabad, Cossimbazar, &c. to Nuddea, where it is joined by the Jellingy, another arm of the Ganges; and their united streams form the Hoogly.

COSSIMBAZAR, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal. It has been at all times the residence of the different European factors, this being the centre of their trade. It is seated on the river of the same name, by which it is surrounded; 7 miles S. of Moorshedabad, and 105 N. of Calcutta.

COSSIMCOTTA, a town of Hindostan, in the circar of Cicacole, on a river that flows into the Bay of Bengal; 74 miles S.W. of Cicacole. Long. 83. 7. E. lat. 17. 42. N.

COSSIPOUR, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Delhi, on the N.E. border of the province; 100 miles E. N. E. of Delhi. Long. 79. 18. E. lat. 29. 14. N.

COSTA RICA, a province of Guatimala, central America; bounded on the N. by Lake Nicaragua, and on the S.E. by Veragua. It has rich mines of gold and silver, but in other respects is mountainous and richly wooded. Cartago is the capital.

COSTALNITZA, a town of Croatia, on the river Udda, and borders of Bosnia; 57 miles E.S.E. of Carlstadt. Long. 17. 8. E. lat. 45. 20. N.

COSTAMBOUL, or COSTAMANI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia. It stands in a dreary and unfruitful country, in a hollow, from the centre of which rises a lofty and perpendicular rock, crowned with a ruined fortress. It has 30 mosques, and numerous other public buildings; 235 miles E. of Constantinople, and 50 S. from the Black Sea. Pop. 12,000.

COSWICK, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt, with a castle, situate on the Elbe; 10 miles W. by N. of Wittenburg.

COTABAMBA, a town in the province of Cuzco, Peru; seated on the W. bank of the Apurimac river; 75 miles S. of the city of Cuzco.

CORNUS, a town and district of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg. The castle stands on an eminence on the E. side of the town. Here are a great number of French protestants, who have introduced their manufactures; and it is noted for excellent beer pitch, and flax. It is seated on the river Spree; 60 m. E by S. of Wittenburg. Long. 14. 24. E. lat. 51. 46. N.

CÔTE D'OR, an interior department in the E. part of France, which has its name from a mountain situate to the S. of Dijon. It contains part of the late province of Burgundy. Dijon is the capital. Pop. in 1836, 385,624.

CÔTES DU NORD, a department of France, so named from its northern maritime position. It contains part of the late province of Bretagne. St. Brieux is the capital. Pop. in 1836, 605,563.

COTESWOLD HILLS, a long tract of high ground in the E. part of Gloucestershire. It affords, in many places, a fine short grass for the feed of sheep; and others are devoted to the growth of corn. The sides of this long range are beautiful as they sink into the vale, from the hills of Stinchcomb and Nibley in the S., to that of Bredon in the N., which has been celebrated in ancient rhyme.

COTHEN, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of the principality of Anhalt-Cothen, with a castle. It is 12 miles S.W. of Dessau. Long. 12. 9. E. lat. 51. 48. N. Pop. 6200.

COUTANCES, a seaport of France, capital of the department of Manche, and a bishop's see, with a fine cathedral. It is 37 m. S.W. of Bayeux, and 185 W. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 7683.

COUTRAS, a town of France, in the department of Gironde, at the conflux of the Ille and Dronne; 25 miles N. E. of Bordeaux.

COVE. See CORK, COVE OF.

COVENTRY, CITY AND COUNTY OF, is insulated within the county of Warwick. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and was formerly surrounded with strong walls, which were three miles in circumference, having twenty-six towers and twelve gates; but few vestiges of them now remain, having been demolished by order of King Charles II. in 1662, in despite for the resistance made to the troops of his predecessor. A parliament was held here in the reign of Henry IV. called Parliamentum Indoctum, or the unlearned parliament, because the lawyers were excluded. Leofric, Earl of Mercia, who was lord of the place about 1040, is said to have loaded the inhabitants with heavy taxes, on account of some provocation he had received from them; and that, being importuned by his lady, Godiva, to remit them, he consented, upon condition that she would ride naked through the town, which condition she accepted and performed; for, being possessed of a long flowing head of hair, she contrived to dispose of her tresses so as to preserve her decency; and at the same time enjoined the citizens, on pain of death, not to look out as she passed. The curiosity of a poor tailor, however, prevailed over his fears, and he ventured to take a single peep, but was struck blind, and was ever after called Peeping Tom. This improbable story is annually commemorated by the citizens of Coventry with great splendour, and a female, closely habited in fine linen of flesh colour, rides through the town, attended by a very numerous and elegant procession. The window through which the tailor is said to have gratified his curiosity is still shown, with his effigy, always newly dressed for the occasion of the procession on the Friday preceding Trinity Sunday.

It had formerly extensive manufactures of woollen and worsted stuffs, now quite discontinued in this part of the country, they having been supplanted by the manufacture of ribbons, of which it is the focus for the produce of from 17,000 to 18,000 looms. This trade has been recently very much depressed, and an attempt made to supplement it with cotton-spinning. It is upon the main lines of canal and railway communication between London, Liverpool, and Manchester. It is situated on the verge of the great coal strata, running through all the northern part of the country. The vein is worked in abundance within five miles of the city of Coventry. The city is divided into two parishes, and the churches, contiguous to each other, are both fine structures; more particularly so that dedicated to St. Michael, which was twenty-two years in building, and finished in 1394. The spire is 303 feet high, and deservedly ranks among the most beautiful specimens of architecture in the kingdom. There is a third spire, the church to which has long since been demolished; but there is another church with a stately tower, which serves as a chapel of ease to St. Michael. The three spires form beautiful and interesting objects in the perspective from the surrounding country for many miles. The corporation consists of a mayor and ten aldermen. St. Mary's Hall, in which the archives of the city are kept, and its business transacted, is an ancient and venerable edifice; the county hall is a neat Doric structure. It has a free school and two hospitals, and had formerly a very extensive establishment of Carmelites, or White Friars, whose house, after lying in ruins many years, was converted into a workhouse in 1806, at which period the two parishes were united for parochial purposes. Coventry was united with Lichfield, as a bishop's see, but it is now annexed to the diocese of Worcester. It returns two members to parliament. Its market, on Fridays, is well supplied, and it has three fairs annually; one, on the Friday preceding Trinity Sunday, on the occasion of the procession of Lady Godiva, is numerous attended, and continues till the Friday following. Since 1820 the city has undergone considerable improvements in the widening, cleaning, and lighting the streets, and several new buildings have been erected. It is 10 miles N. by E. of Warwick, 18 E.S.E. of Birmingham, and 91 N.W. of London. It is nearly in the centre of the country, being equidistant from the four great ports, London, Liverpool, Hull, and Bristol, with all of which it has a railway communication.

COVENTRY is also the name of some townships in the United States of North America. 1st. In Kent county, Rhode Island. 2nd. In Tolland county, in Connecticut. 3rd. In Chester county, Pennsylvania. 4th. In Portage county, Ohio.

COVERDEN. See COEVORDEN.

COVERIPORUM, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Mysore, on the S. bank of the Cavery; 60 miles S.E. of Mysore. Long. 77. 38. E. lat. 11. 51. N.

COVILHAM, a town of Portugal, in Beira. It has a manufacture of woollen cloth, and is 18 miles S.W. of Guarda. Pop. 6350.

COVINGTON, a county of the state of Mississippi, bounded on the N. by the territory of the Choctaw Indians, and intersected by the line of road from the Tennessee river to Lake Portchartrain. Pop. 2717. Also the name of a newly formed county, in the state of Alabama, bordering on West Florida. Capital, Montezuma. Pop. 2345.

COVINGTON, a city of the United States, in Kentucky, on the Ohio river at the mouth of the Licking Creek, and directly opposite to Cincinnati, of which, from its arrangement, it appears to be a continuation. Newport lies on the opposite side of the Licking. Covington has six churches, a large iron mill, and slaughters 60,000 hogs for exportation annually; 80 miles S.E. of Frankfort. Pop. in 1840, 2026.

COWBRIDGE, a corporate town of Wales, in Glamorganshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is called by the Welsh Pont-faen, from the stone bridge over the river, which soon after enters the British Channel. Near it are the remains of Llanbithian Castle, of which a massive gateway is now converted into a barn; and about a mile distant, on a lofty hill, are the ruins of Penline Castle. It joins with Cardiff, Llantrissant, Aberdare, and Llandaff, in sending one member to parliament. Cowbridge is 12 miles W. of Cardiff, and 173 of London.

COWES, WEST, a seaport on the W. side of the Isle of Wight, at the mouth of the Medina, or Cowes. On the opposite side is the village of East Cowes, and at each place is a fort built by Henry VIII. for the security of the island and road. Cowes has an excellent harbour, which is much frequented by ships to repair damages sustained at sea, and to water; and also a good trade in provisions, &c., for the use of the shipping. During the summer it is much frequented for the purpose of sea-bathing, and is the rendezvous of the Royal Yacht Club; near it also is Osborne House, the private marine residence of the Queen; and here are a number of genteel lodging-houses, and an assembly-room. It is 12 m. S. by E. of Southampton, 12 W.S.W. of Portsmouth, and 86 S.W. of London.

COWETA, a county of the state of Georgia, between the Chailahoochee and Flint rivers. Pop. in 1840, 10,364, including 3078 slaves.

COWLDUROA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a strong hill fort. It is 12 miles S. of Nagara.

COXHOE, a township in the parish of Kelloe, Durham, near the junction of the Clarence and Stockton Railways, $\frac{5}{8}$ miles S.S.E. of Durham.

COZUMEL, or COSUMEL, an island on the E. coast of Yucatan, where Cortes landed and refreshed his troops, before he attempted the conquest of Mexico. It abounds with fruit, and is inhabited principally by native Indians.

CRAB ISLAND. See PORTO-RICO.

CRACATOA, the southernmost of a cluster of islands in the entrance of the Strait of Sunda. It consists of elevated land, gradually rising on all sides from the sea, and is covered with trees except a few spots, which have been cleared by the natives for the purpose of forming rice fields; and its coral reefs afford small turtle in abundance. The inhabitants are not considerable; and their chief, like those of the other islands in the strait, is subject to the king of Bantam.

CRACOW, a city and nominal republic of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a university. It was formerly the capital of Poland, where the kings were elected, and crowned, and nearly in the centre of the Polish dominions. On a rock near the Vistula is the ancient royal palace, surrounded by brick walls and old towers, which form a kind of citadel. Adjoining is the cathedral, within the walls of the citadel, in which most of the sovereigns of Poland are interred. Though the city and suburbs occupy a vast tract of ground, they scarcely contain 26,000 inhabitants. The great square is spacious and well built, and many of the streets are broad and handsome; but almost every building bears the mark of ruined grandeur. This devastation was begun by the Swedes in 1702, when it was taken by Charles XII.; but it has since experienced greater calamities, having been retaken by the Russians and the confederates. When the general insurrection broke out in 1794, against the Prussian and Russian usurpers of the Polish territory, Kosciusko, the chief of the patriotic insurgents, expelled the Russian garrison from this city, on the 24th of March, 1794; but, having marched in the sequel to the protection of Warsaw, Cracow surrendered to the Prussians on the 15th of June. By the Congress of Vienna it was restored to independence, with 487 square miles of territory, and formed a republic under the protection of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, who, however, have some authority in the legislature. About a league W. of the city is an immense artificial tumulus, raised to the memory of the great Kosciusko, the work of the people, commenced in 1820. Its subsequent proceedings have caused great changes in its political constitution. It is seated on the Vistula, 130 m. S.S.W. of Warsaw, and is connected by railway with Western Germany.

CRAIL, a borough of Scotland, in Fifeshire; seated on the Frith of Forth; 7 miles S.E. of St. Andrew's. It is an ancient town, and unites with Cupar, &c., in sending one member to parliament.

CRANBURG, a town of Germany, in Carniola, with a castle on the river Save; 18 miles N.W. of Laubach.

CRAMOND, a village of Scotland; 3 miles N.W. of Edinburgh, at the mouth of the Almond, in the Frith of Forth. It has a commodious harbour, and considerable iron-works.

CRANBOURNE, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Wednesday. It stands near a fine chase, which extends almost to Salisbury; 38 miles N.E. of Dorchester, and 93 W. of London.

CRANBROOK, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday. Here is a free grammar-school, and a free writing-school for poor children, the former endowed by Queen Elizabeth. It is 13 miles S. of Maidstone, and 49 S.E. of London.

CRANGANORE, a town and fort of Hindostan, on the coast of Cochin. It was taken from the Portuguese in 1662, by the Dutch, who sold it in 1789 to the rajah of Travancore. It is seated at the mouth of a river; 30 miles N. by W. of Cochin. Long. 75. 58. E. lat. 10. 23. N.

CRANSAC, a village of France, in the department of Aveyron, celebrated for its mineral waters; 15 miles N.W. of Rhodéz.

CRACON, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne, near the river Oudon; 17 miles S. by W. of Laval.

CRATO, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, with a priory belonging to the order of Malta; 14 miles W. of Portalegre.

CRAYEN, a county of North Carolina, the east end of which borders on Pamlico Sound. It is intersected by the Neuse river. Pop. 13,348, of whom 5702 were slaves. Newbern, on the W. bank of the Neuse, 119 m. S.E. by E. of Raleigh, is the chief town. Pop. 3690.

CRAWFORD. There are several counties of this name in different parts of the United States of North America, named probably in reference to W. H. Crawford, who was secretary to the treasury during the presidency of James Munroe, from 1807 to 1825:—

At the N.W. extremity of Pennsylvania, bordering on the state of Ohio, intersected by French Creek, falling into the Alleghany river. Pop. 31,724. Meadville, 286 miles W.N.W. of Harrisburg, is the chief town.

In the state of Indiana, bounded on the E. by Big Blue river, the S. end jetting upon the Ohio. Pop. 5282. Fredonia, on the N. bank of the Ohio, 130 miles E. by W. of Indianapolis, is the chief town.

In the state of Illinois, extending westward from the Wabash river for about 80 miles, being about 35 miles in breadth. Pop. 4422. Palestine, on the W. bank of the Wabash, 80 miles E. of Vandalia, is the chief town.

In the interior of Ohio, intersected by the Sandusky river, which falls into Lake Erie; the Scioto, falling into the Ohio, rises in the adjoining county. Pop. 13,152.

CRAWFORDVILLE, a town of Indiana, on the S. side of Sugar Creek, and the seat of Wabash College; 45 miles N.W. by W. of Indianapolis. Pop. in 1840, 1327.

CRAYFORD, a village in Kent, on the river Cray; 2 miles W. by N. of Dartford. Here are some calico-printing grounds, and a manufacture of iron hoops.

CRECI-EN-PONTIEU, a town of France, in the department of Somme, province of Picardy, on the river Maye. Pop. 1587; 15 miles E. from Montreuil. Here the French, under Philip VI., were defeated by Edward III. of England, in the famous battle of Crecy, on August 26, 1346.

CREDITON, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable manufacture of serges. The church is a noble structure, and was formerly a cathedral. The town was almost all destroyed by fire in 1769. It is seated between two hills; 8 miles N.W. of Exeter, and 180 W. by N. of London.

CREE, a river of Scotland, which rises in the northern parts of the counties of Wigton and Kirkcudbright, forms the boundary between them, and enters the head of Wigton Bay.

CREEK, or MUSKOGEE INDIANS, once the most numerous tribe of Indians of any within the limits of the United States of North America. They inhabited an extensive tract of the country between the states of Georgia and Alabama; their diminished numbers, however, have all been removed to the Indian territory, W. of the Mississippi. Their country abounds with creeks and rivulets, and hence they derived their name.

CREETOWN, or FERRYTOWN, a small port of Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire. Here several sloops are constantly employed in the coasting trade. It stands on Wigton Bay, near the influx of the Cree; 12 miles W. by N. of Kirkcudbright.

CREGLINGEN, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach, on the Tauber; 22 miles S. of Wurtzburg, and 30 N.W. of Anspach now included in the Bavarian circle of the Lower Mayne.

CREIL, a town of France, in the dep. of Oise, on the river Oise; 5 miles E. of Senlis.

CREILSHEIM, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach; on the river Jaxt; 22 miles S.W. of Anspach; now included in the Bavarian circle of the Rezat.

CREMA, a fortified town of Italy, capital of Cremasco, a bishop's see. It is well built and populous, and seated on the Serio; 30 miles S. of Bergamo. Pop. 4000.

CREMASCO, a small territory of Italy, in the N. part of the province of Bergamasco. It is nearly surrounded by the Duchy of Milan, and fertile in corn, wine, flax, and hemp. Crema is the capital.

CREMIEU, a town of France, in the department of Isere, at the foot of a mountain near the Rhone; 20 miles N. E. of Vienne.

CREMNITZ, or KREMNITZ, a town in the N. part of Lower Hungary, noted for its gold and silver mines; 17 miles N. of Schemnitz. The silver mine of Bacherstollen is one of the principal mines of Austria, and here all the Hungarian gold and silver is coined. Pop. about 4000.

CREMONA, a city of Austrian Italy, capital of the Cremonese, and a bishop's see, with a castle and a university. The streets are broad and straight, adorned with some small squares, a few palaces, 40 parish churches, and 43 convents of both sexes. It stands in a delightful plain, watered by the Oglio, about a quarter of a mile from the Po, over which is a bridge of boats, defended by a fort. A canal passes through the town, and forms a communication between the two rivers. Cremona has been several times taken. It has considerable manufactures of silk, and is peculiarly celebrated for the manufacture of violins, during the 17th and 18th centuries. A tower, 372 feet in height, attached to the Duomo church, forms a prominent object over all the surrounding country. The Romans established themselves here in 291 u. c. It is 48 miles S.E. of Milan, and about the same distance S. by W. of Mantua. Pop. 28,500.

CREMONESE TERRITORY, in the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, subject to Austria, extends from the S. in a W. N. W. direction, for about 45 miles, between the river Po on the S., which divides it from the duchy of Parma, and the Oglio on the N., which divides it from Bresciano; the E. and borders on the duchy of Mantua, and the W. on the small district of Cremasco. It is a very fertile country.

CREMSIER, a town of Moravia, with a fine castle and a convent, seated on the W. bank of the river March; 18 m. S. S. E. of Olmutz.

CREPY, a town of France in the department of Oise; 17 miles S. of Compeigne.

CRETE. See CANDIA.

CREVELDT, a town of Germany, at the N. extremity of the territory of Cologne. Near this place the French were defeated by the Hanoverians, in 1758. It has considerable manufactures of linen. It is 32 miles N. N. W. of Cologne, and 7 from Duseldorf. Pop. about 7000.

CREUSE, an interior department, nearly in the centre of France, so named from a river, which crosses from S. to N., and flows into the Vienne. It contains the late province of Marche. Pop. in 1836, 276,234. Gueret is the capital.

CREUSEN, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth, 7 miles E. of the city of Bayreuth.

CREUTZNACH, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, on the Nahe, 25 miles S.W. of Mentz.

CREWE, a township in the parish of Barthornley, Cheshire, with a pop. of 289 in 1831; but, from its being at the junction of the London & North Western Railway, with branches to Chester, Warrington, Manchester, and other places, the traffic through it is enormous, and a station has been erected commensurate with its importance; 157½ m. from London, 31¼ from Manchester.

CREWKERNE, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday. It has considerable establishments for the manufacture of sail-cloth. It is seated near a branch of the Parret; 25 m. S. of Wells, and 132 W. S. W. of London.

CRICKKEITH, or CRICCAETH, a town of Wales, in Caernarvonshire, with a market on Wednesday; 18 miles S. S. E. of Caernarvon, and 244 N. W. of London. It contributes with Caernarvon, in sending one member to parliament.

CRICKHOWELL, a town of Wales, in Brecknockshire, with a market on Thursday. Near it are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on the Usk; 10 m. S. E. of Brecknock, and 153 W. by N. of London.

CRICKLADE, a borough in Wiltshire, with a market on Saturday; seated near the Thames, and the Stroud canal; 25 miles W. by S. of Oxford, and 84 W. by N. of London.

CRIEFF, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, with manufactures of paper and thin linen, seated on the Eric; 18 miles W. of Perth.

CRIM, a town of the Crimea, supposed to be on the site of an ancient city that once gave its name of Crim Tartary, or Crimea, to the whole peninsula of the Taurida; after having, under the name of Cimmericum, been the capital of a famous people, who gave laws to the greatest part of Europe. The modern town called, Eski Krim (Old Crim) by the Tartars, is seated at the foot of an insulated mountain; 10 miles W. of Caffa.

CRIMEA, or TAURIDA, the ancient Taurica Chersonesus, a peninsula of Europe, bounded on the S. and W. by the Black Sea; N. by the province of Catharinenslaf, with which it communicates by the Isthmus of Prekop; and

E. by the sea of Asoph and the Strait of Caffa. Towards the end of the 11th century the Genoese settled in this country; but they were expelled by the Crim Tartars, in 1474. See CAFFA. These Tartars had been settled in the Crimea above two centuries before the expulsion of the Genoese. They were subjects to Batu Khan, grandson of Genghis; and their conquest was annexed to the kingdom of Kusan till the death of Tamerlane, in 1400, when Edgeai Khan, an officer of that prince took possession of it, and was succeeded by Duclat Cheral, in whose family the sovereignty continued till the 18th century. The Khans, however, were vassals, or tributary to the Turks, till the year 1774, when their independence was stipulated in the treaty of Cainargi. In 1783, the Russians took possession of the country with an army; the following year it was ceded to them by the Turks; and the peaceable possession of the whole was secured to them in 1791, by the cession of the fortress of Oczako. In 1854-5 it was the scene of the Russian war, the Allies having landed near Eupatoria in September of the former year. The battle of the Alma was fought on the 20th of that month, and was followed by the memorable siege of Sebastopol, and the battles of Balaklava, Inkermann, the Tchernaya, and others, till the great fortress yielded on September 9, 1855. The fortifications were then destroyed by the Allies, the magnificent docks blown up, and the place reduced to ruins. The inhabitants have since partially returned, and its appearance has somewhat revived. The Crimea is divided into two parts by the river Salgir, which runs from W. to E. The N. division is flat, poor, and fit for pasturage only. It has neither tree nor hillock; salt-lakes and flocks of sheep are its greatest riches. The principal articles of export are corn, salt, honey, wax, butter, horses, hides, and furs, especially the Tauric lamb-skins, which are in high esteem. The Crimea now forms one of the two provinces of the government of Catharinenski, under the name of Taurida. Sympheropol is the capital. See RUSSIA.

CRITTENDEN, a county of Kentucky, formed in 1825; soil level and fertile. Capital, Salem.

CRITTENDEN, a county of Arkansas, on the W. side of the Mississippi, which at times overflows it. Capital, Marion. Pop. in 1840, 1561.

CROAGH-PATRICK, a mountain in Ireland, in the county of Mayo, 2528 feet above the sea.

CROATIA, a province of the Austrian empire; bounded on the N. by the river Drave, which separates it from Lower Hungary, extending S. for about 160 miles to the Adriatic; the Save intersects it from the W. in an E.S.E. direction, parallel with the Drave, at a distance of about 45 miles; the part N. of the Save is bounded on the E. by Sclavonia, and on the W. by Lower Syria, and the part S. of the Save is bounded on the E. by the Turkish province of Bosnia, and on the W. by Lower Carniola; this part was ceded to France at the peace of Vienna in 1809, but restored to Austria at the general peace of 1815. The mean breadth of Croatia is about 60 miles, and its superficial area 9420 square miles, containing a population of about 1,000,000. It was called by the Romans Liburnia, and subsequently formed part of Illyria and Sclavonia; and at a somewhat later period became an independent kingdom under the protection of the eastern emperors. In 1087 it was conquered by Ladislaus, king of Hungary, and passed into the hands of Austria by its being made an integral part of Hungary in 1102. It is now divided into six counties, and the S.E. part into six districts. It is in general a mountainous country; containing some mines of iron and copper, and the best timber in Europe. The valleys are tolerably fertile, and the mulberry, prune, vine, and olive are interspersed over most parts of the country, and, in parts, flourish luxuriantly. Honey is collected in great quantities on the banks of the Drave. The port of Fiume, at the S.W. extremity of the province, supplies the interior with such foreign productions as the inhabitants can command, in exchange for their surplus produce, which is limited both in value and extent. The capital of the country is Carlstadt, and the other principal towns are Warasden, Agram, Petrinia, Ogulia, Zettin, &c. &c. See MORLACHIA.

CROCE, ST., CROIX, ST., or CRUZ, SANTA. There are several towns, villages, and rivers of this name both in Europe and America, but all inconsiderable.

CROISIC, or CROISIL, a town of France, in the department of Lower Loire, seated on the Bay of Biscay, between the mouths of the Loire and Vilaine; 35 miles W. of Nantes.

CROIX, ST., a river of North America, which forms the N. E. boundary of the United States, and runs into the Bay of Passamaquoddy, in the lat. of 45. 0. N. and 67. 0. of W. long.

CROIX, ST., or SANTA CRUZ, one of the Virgin Islands, in the Caribbean Sea; about 20 miles long and 9 broad; area, 81 square miles. The soil is tolerably fertile, but subject to droughts; producing sugar, &c.; but the quantity is very variable. Pop. 3200 whites, 20,000 slaves. About one-third of the slaves belong to the king of Denmark, as mortgagee of estates; but they are being gradually emancipated as in the other Danish islands. The English possess many of the largest estates in the island; lying 40 miles E. by S. of St. Thomas, and about the same distance E.S.E. of Crab Island, off the S.E. end of Porto Rico. Columbus landed upon this island in one of his early voyages. It was successively held by the Spaniards, English, and Dutch. In 1651 it was bought for the knights of Malta, who sold it in 1664 to the French West India Company, by whom it was sold to the Danes in 1696; who held it till 1801, when it was taken by the English, and restored after the naval action of Copenhagen in the same year; retaken in 1807, and restored again at the general peace of 1815. The chief town is Christianstædt, on the N. coast, with a fine harbour, defended by a fortress.

CROJA, a town of European Turkey, in Albania, seated near the Gulf of Venice; 13 miles N. by E. of Durazzo. It was once the residence of the kings of Albania.

CROMACK-WATER, or CRUMACK-WATER, a lake in Cumberland, between Buttermerewater and Lowes-water, receiving the former at its S. end, by the river Cocker, and the latter at its N. end. It is four miles long, and half a mile over; with three small isles, one of them a rock, and the other covered with wood. Half a mile from the S.W. end is a waterfall, called Seale Force, between the mountains of Mellbreak and Bleacragg. At the N.E. corner is a stone bridge over its outlet, the Cocker. It abounds with char and red trout.

CROMARTY, a county of Scotland, sixteen miles long and six broad, comprehending part of a peninsula on the S. side of a frith, to which it gives name. On the S. and W. it is bounded by Ross-shire. It is divided into five parishes. The highlands are healthy, and on the coast it is fertile and well cultivated. It sends one member to parliament in conjunction with Ross. The towns are Cromarty, Kirkmichael, Rosolis, and Urquhart.

CROMARTY, a seaport of Scotland, and capital of the preceding county. The harbour is one of the finest in Great Britain, and has a commodious quay. Here is a considerable manufacture of hempen cloth, and a coasting trade in corn, thread, yarn, fish, and skins of various sorts. It stands at the mouth of the Frith of Cromarty; 16 miles N.N.E. of Inverness. It joins with Kirkwall and four other places in sending one member to parliament. Long. 3. 50. W. lat. 57. 38. N.

CROMER, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday. It formerly had two churches, one of which, with several houses, was swallowed up by the sea. The inhabitants are chiefly fishermen; and the best lobsters on this part of the coast are taken here. It is seated on the German Ocean; 22 miles N. of Norwich, and 129 N.E. of London, and is frequented in the summer season for sea-bathing.

CROMFORD, a village in Derbyshire, on the river Derwent; 2 miles N. of Wirksworth. The Arkwrights have erected an extensive cotton mill at this place, and connected it by a canal with the Erwash and Nottingham canals, and thereby with the river Trent.

CROMPTON, a township in the parish of Oldham, Lancashire. See OLDHAM.

CRONACH, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Bamberg, near which is a mountain fortress, called Rosenberg. It is seated near the river Cronach; 11 miles N. of Culmbach.

CRONBORG, a strong fortress of Denmark, on the Isle of Zealand, near Elsinore, which guards the passage of the Sound. It is situated on the point of a peninsular promontory, opposite Helsingborg in Sweden, little more than 2 miles distant. In 1658 it was taken by the king of Sweden, and restored in 1660. In this fortress is a palace where Queen Matilda was imprisoned till she was permitted to retire to Zell. Not far from this, at Barienfelt, is Hamiet's Garden, said to be the spot where the murder of his father was perpetrated.

CRONENBERG, or KRONBERG, a town of Germany, in the late electorate of Mentz; seated on a mountain; 9 miles N.W. of Frankfort.

CRONSTADT, a seaport and fortress of Russia, on the island of Retusari, in the Gulf of Finland. The harbour is the chief station of the Russian fleet. Here are great magazines of naval stores, docks and yards for building ships, a foundry for casting cannon balls, and an extensive marine hospital. The Man-of-War's Mole is enclosed by a strong rampart, built of granite, in the sea, and Peter's canal, lined with masonry, is 1050 fathoms long, 60 broad at the bottom, and 100 at the top; it is 24 fathoms deep, and in this manner stretches 358 fathoms into the sea. It is most strongly fortified, and was considered impregnable by the combined fleets of France and England, in 1854-5. The town occupies the E. part of the island, and the inhabitants are estimated at 54,717. It is 22 m. W. of Petersburg, of which it is the outport.

CROOK, a township in Brancepeth parish, Durham, on the Stockton, Darlington, and Wear Valley Ry., $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. fr. Bishop Auckland.

CROOKED ISLANDS. A singular group of the Bahamas, containing a surface of 320 square miles, and, in 1842, a pop. of 804.

CROOKED LAKE, in New York, is 18 miles long, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 mile broad. It flows into Seneca Lake, and has a canal thence to the Erie canal.

CROFANI, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore; 9 miles E.N.E. of St. Severino.

CROSNE, a town of Austrian Poland, in the Palatinate of Lemberg; 80 miles W.S.W. of Lemberg.

CROSSEN, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark, capital of a duchy of the same name, with a strong castle. It is seated on the frontiers of Silesia, near the conflux of the Bober with the Oder, in a country abounding with wine and fruit; 23 miles S.E. of Frankfort.

CROSS-FELL, a mountain in Cumberland, 8 miles E.S.E. of Kirkoswald. Its extreme altitude is 2902 feet. At different elevations there are two extensive plains; and a third on the summit contains several hundred acres covered with moss and other vegetable productions. The view from this height comprehends a great part of six counties. A few yards below the summit is a spring called the Gentleman's Well.

CROSSMALINA, a town in Ireland, county of Mayo; about 90 miles from Dublin.

CROSTHWAITHE, an extensive parish in Cumberland; 10 miles S.E. of Cockermouth. The rugged mountains about here are rich in copper, lead, and plumbago. There are also some woollen mills in this parish.

CROTONA, or CROTON, a seaport of Naples, on the E. coast of Calabria Ulteriore, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. It has a trade in grain, cheese, oil, and silk, and is 15 miles S.E. of St. Severino. Long. 17. 27. E. lat. 39. 9. N.

CROTOY, a town of France, in the department of Somme; on the E. side of the mouth of the Somme; 35 miles N.W. of Amiens.

CROUCH, a river in Essex, which rises near Hornndon, and enters the German Ocean between Burnham and Foulness Island. The Wulfleet and Burnham oysters are the produce of its creeks and pits.

CROWLAND, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Saturday. Here was formerly an abbey of great note; and some stately ruins yet remain. The town consists of four streets, which are separated by water-courses, and connected by a curious triangular bridge for foot passengers. The chief trade is in fish and wild ducks, which are plentiful in the adjacent pools and marshes. It is 11 miles N. of Peterborough, and 93 N. by W. of London.

CROWLE, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Monday; seated on the Isle of Axholme, near the river Dun; 18 miles N. of Gainsborough, and 167 N. N. W. of London.

CROWN POINT, a fort and town of New York, in Essex county. The fort was erected by the French in 1731, on a point that runs N. into Lake Champlain. It was reduced by the English in 1759, taken by the Americans in 1775, and retaken by the English the year after. It is 123 miles N. of Albany. Pop. 2212.

CROYDON, a town in Surrey, with a market on Saturday. It has an hospital and free-school, founded by Archbishop Whitgift; and in the church are some monuments of the archbishops of Canterbury, who had here an ancient palace, which was alienated from the see in 1780: the building and adjoining premises are now occupied by some cotton manufactures. Addington park and house, about 3 miles from Croydon, were bought and annexed to the see of Canterbury, as a more suitable residence for the archbishop. About a mile and a half N.E. of the town is Addiscombe college: a military school for cadets for the East India Company's service. The summer assizes are held here and at Guildford alternately. Croydon is seated near the source of the Wandle; 10 miles S. of London. A railroad is now established from London to this place, from whence the Brighton and South Eastern lines are continued, and a line to Epsom.

CROYLAND, an ancient town and parish in Lincolnshire. It has a curious triangular bridge, of the age of Edward II. The first great school established after the Norman conquest, was founded here.

CROZEN, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre, situate on the promontory which forms the S. boundary of Brest Harbour, 16 miles N.W. of Chateaulin. Pop. about 8000, mostly sailors and fishermen.

CRUACHAN-BEN, a mountain of Scotland, between Loch Etive and the N. end of Loch Awe, in Argyllshire. It has two conical peaks, one of which is 3962, and the other 3390 feet above the level of the sea.

CRUCES, a small seaport in the Gulf of Mexico, about 15 miles W. S. W. of Porto Bello.

CRUMLAU, or CRUMAU, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bœhm, with a castle; seated on the Muldau; 12 miles S. by W. of Budweis.

CRUMLAW, or CROMAU, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Znaim, with a castle; 10 m. N.N.E. of Znaim.

CRUZ, ST., a seaport of Morocco. The Portuguese had a fortress here, which was taken from them by the Moors in 1536, and the emperor caused it to be destroyed in 1773. The harbour is safe and commodious. It is seated on a bay of the Atlantic; 130 miles W.S.W. of Morocco, and 65 S. of Mogador. Long. 9. 30. W. lat. 30. 28. N.

CRUZ, ST., a seaport on the south-east side of Teneriffe, and the general residence of the governor of all the Canary Islands. It has a well-built pier and quay, and is defended by several forts and batteries. Long. 16. 16. W. and lat. 28. 27. N.

CRUZ, ST., a town of Bolivia, capital of a jurisdiction, and a bishop's see. The country is woody and mountainous; but the town stands in a fertile valley, near the river Guapaix; 160 miles N.N.E. of Plata. Long. 65. 15. W. lat. 17. 26. S.

CRUZ, ST., a town on the N. side of the island of Cuba; 50 miles E. of Havana.

CRUZ, ST., an island in the Pacific Ocean. See CROCE, ST.

CUBA, an island in the West Indies, the principal of the Spanish possessions. This island, the largest, most westerly, and the richest of the Antilles archipelago, was discovered by the immortal Cristobal Colombo, on October 27th, 1492. Its greatest length, in a straight line, E.S.E. and W.N.W. is 624 geographic miles, or 718 British miles. Its greatest breadth, which is between Puerto Sabinal and Puerto del Ingles, in the meridian of 77. 18, is 117 miles, and the least 22 miles, in the meridian of Puerto del Mariel, and 28 in that of the Havana; its median breadth may be taken as 60 geographic m. Its area is 33,605 square geographic miles, including the surrounding islands. It contains 11 cities, 10 chief towns, 94 secondary towns, 163 villages, and 241 rural districts.

In its civil territorial division, it contains two provinces, Havana and Cuba, and these provinces are divided into six governments, which are subdivided into 22 districts. Its military divisions are three, Occidental, del Centro, and Oriental, and these again into 19 sections. For the marine, it is divided into the five provinces of Havana, Trinidad, Remedios, Nuevitas, and Cuba; each of which is subdivided into a certain number of districts, comprehending the whole of the islands and dependencies of Cuba.

Population.—The census of Cuba of 1775, gave a population of 170,370; that of 1791, 272,140; that of 1817, gave 551,998, and that of 1827, 704,487; viz., 311,051 whites; free coloured, 106,494; slaves, 286,942. The census of 1841, gave a total population of 1,007,624. Of these, 418,147 were whites; 152,638, free coloured; total free population, 571,129. Of the slaves, negroes, 275,382 were males, and only 150,139 females; total slaves, 436,495. Excess of free over slave population, 134,634. There is a garrison of several battalions, and a small marine force.

The climate is hot, humid, and subject to frequent and sudden changes of temperature. The constant breezes from between N.E. and S.E. moderate the otherwise oppressive heat of the climate. There are but two seasons: known as the rainy and the dry. The first commences in April, more commonly in May, and sometimes as late as June, and ends in September or October. The second comprehends the rest of the months, although in some years it prevails longer, causing great mortality among the flocks. The mean temperature of the year at the Havana, and on the north coast, is 89° of Fahrenheit: in the hottest months, 96°; in the coolest months, 80°. In Cuba, the mean temperature of the year is 91° in the hottest months, 96½°; in the coolest, 82½°. Extremes of temperature at the Havana and the north coast, 76° to 99°; in Cuba, 78° to 101° of Fahrenheit.

We have no accounts of the present extent of cultivation in Cuba; but by comparing the exportable produce of 1830, with that of 1842, and by various estimates, we consider it probable that the lands under sugar, coffee, tobacco, and gardens, may be fairly estimated at 54,000 caballerias, or 1,728,000 acres. In 1840, there were 1238 sugar estates, employing 138,701 persons; on 1835 coffee plantations, 114,760 persons; and on 42,549 farms, 393,993 persons. Total, 647,454 agricultural labourers. If we compare this extent with the remaining vast area of the fertile soils of Cuba, which are still uncultivated, and the produce which the whole island at present yields, it can scarcely be an exaggeration to say, that Europe might draw as much coffee and sugar from Cuba alone, as the quantity at present consumed. In 1760, the produce of coffee and sugar together, in Cuba, amounted only to about 5,000,000 lbs. Forty years afterwards, this was increased to above 40,000,000 lbs. In 1820, the exports increased to above 100,000,000 lbs. In 1841, the export of these two articles was, sugar, 812,129 boxes; coffee, 1,260,920½ arrobas.

In agriculture, especially in the cultivation of sugar and coffee, the inhabitants have made great progress since the year 1809, when the trade of this island was emancipated from the restriction of trading to no foreign country whatever. The administration of Cuba has, since that period, published, with apparently great care, official returns of the population, revenue, and trade of the colony.

The coasts are in general exceedingly foul, presenting reefs and shallows, which extend from two to two-and-a-half miles into the sea, and make the approach to the land both difficult and dangerous for such as are not intimately acquainted with the channels of entrance. Within these reefs there is often a good sandy beach; but for the greater part of the circumference of the island, there is a belt or zone of low land, very little raised above the level of the sea, subject to floods and inundations, and so wet at all seasons of the year, as to be always in a state approaching to mud, which makes access to the coast, and the ordinary communication between the interior and the sea next to impossible in the rainy season, and not very easy during any month of the year. There is, nevertheless, a considerable number of harbour ports and bays, surgideros, esteros, and embarcaderos, comprising, in the first class, some of the best, safest, and most accessible harbours in the known world.

On some parts of the coast, the sea, during spring tides and the season of the equinox, forms extensive salt lagoons, which in dry years produce such quantities of marine salt, as to suffice for the consumption of the population. These lagoons are more common on the northern than on the southern coast, and might provide for the means of curing vast quantities of fish, which are said to be abundant, but it appears that no fishery of any note has yet been established.

The narrow form of the island, and the cordillera of mountains which divides it into two unequal sections throughout its whole length, leaves a very limited course for its rivers and streams, more especially those which belong to its northern side. In the rainy season, they become torrents, but during the rest of the year, they are nearly dried up. Along their banks, they are generally lined with a belt of underwood, called cejas, and at their mouths the embarcaderos, surgideros, and other shipping places are established.

It does not appear that much gold or silver has ever been found in Cuba. The copper mines, near Santiago, mentioned on p. 730 hereafter, were worked and abandoned in the 17th century. Three companies were formed some years ago to reopen and work these mines, which have been executed by great outlay, and by the aid of steam engines, with considerable success. The ore has been chiefly exported for smelting to Swansea. A copper mine in the neighbourhood of Santa Chala has been opened by an American company; but from its inconvenient access, it has been worked with far less advantage than those near Santiago.

Coal has been found within 10 miles of the Havana, but from the execrable roads, although of excellent quality, and found on the surface, this coal cannot be brought into competition as regards price with English coal.

The first line of railway of any consideration which has yet been laid down in the W. Indies, is that which connects the Havana with one of its most important sugar districts, and having its inland terminus at the town of Guines, 45 miles distant from the capital. The works are exceedingly well executed, and do great credit to the engineer, Mr. Alfred Cruger, of the United States. The expense of travelling is of course greater than it would be in Europe and America. There are four other very minor railways, all constructed by Americans or Englishmen. The other roads are generally execrable, and the means of transport are both difficult and expensive.

Steam-boats have for some years been established for carrying passengers between Havana and the other ports of the island, and this mode of visiting all places on the sea-coast has become convenient and speedy.

No foreigner can land in Cuba without procuring security to the government for good behaviour from a responsible inhabitant.

The island was first made known to Europeans by Columbus, in 1492; and, from the great extent of its coast from E. to W., was at first supposed to form part of the western continent. It was, however, ascertained to be an island in 1508, by Nicholas Ovando, who sailed round it in that year; and in about three years after, it was taken possession of by a Spanish force from Hispaniola, under the command of Don Jago de Velasquez, who took the native chief prisoner, and roasted him alive, and afterwards extirpated the natives; after which the island remained, with but little interruption, in possession of the Spaniards until 1741, when an unsuccessful attempt was made upon it by the English; to whom, however, it surrendered on the 13th of August, 1762, after a desperate resistance of the Spaniards for about two months. See HAVANA. It was restored to Spain in the following year, and has remained in their quiet possession up to the present time, having been but little affected by the events which led to the entire subversion of Spanish dominion over every part of their continental possessions in the western hemisphere. Since the period of 1791, when the mania of the French revolution extended to the neighbouring island of Hispaniola, numerous planters of that island fled to Cuba. One interruption to its tranquillity, was an attempt at invasion by Lopez in 1851, which ended in the dispersion of the adventurers, and execution of their leader.

CUBA, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, 30 miles S. by E. of Evora.

CUBAGUA, a small island off the N. coast of Colombia, between that of Margarita and Cumana. Here the Spaniards, in 1509, established a fishery of pearl; but the banks disappeared in 1524. The island is barren and nitrous. Long. 64. 10. W. lat. 10. 56. N.

CUBAN, a river which issues from the N. side of the Caucasian mountains, divides Circassia from part of Taurica, and flows into the N. extremity of the Black Sea, near the entrance to the Sea of Asoph. It receives several tributary streams from the S.

CUBAN, or CUBAN TARTARY, a county in the Russian province of Taurica; bounded on the W. by the Sea of Taurica; N. by the river Don, which separates it from Europe, E. by the desert of Astracan, and S. by the river Cuban, which divides it from Circassia.

CUCKFIELD, a town in Sussex, with a market on Friday; 13 miles N. W. of Lewes, and 39 S. by W. of London.

CUDDALORE, a town of Hindostan, on the coast of Carnatic, near the place where Fort St. David once stood. It was taken by the French in 1758, and again in 1783. It is 20 miles S.S.W. of Pondicherry. Long. 79. 55. E. lat. 11. 41. N.

CUDDAPA, a town of Hindostan, capital of a circar of the same name, ceded by Tippee, in 1792, to the Nizam of the Deccan. It is 133 miles N.W. of Madras. Long. 78. 57. E. lat. 14. 23. N.

CUDREFIN, a town and bailiwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern; 21 miles W. of Bern.

CUELLAR, a town of Leon in Spain, in a fertile country, lying on the slope of a hill which is crowned by a fine castle. Pop. 3000. It had 10 churches and 3 convents.

CUENCA, a province of Spain, on the E. side of New Castile, intersected by the river Xucar. In the 15th and 16th centuries, it was densely peopled by rich busy traders in its staple, wool, but now all is desolate and poverty stricken. This district is one of the most thinly peopled in the Peninsula, having scarcely 300 souls to the square league. It is cultivated in the southern part, and produces corn, hemp, &c.; while the northern and eastern portions are devoted to pasturing sheep. The principal produce is wool. Pop. 296,750.

now only a shadow of the past; its prosperity was blighted by the French invasion, and only contains 3000 inhabitants. The cathedral is one of the most remarkable in Spain, being a museum of fine art, and near it is the bishop's palace. The town was once remarkable for its colleges, printing presses, manufactories, art, science, but all has been swept away by the French, and nothing but desolation left. It is 76 miles from Madrid, and 88 from Valencia.

CUENÇA, a town of Colombia, in the republic of Ecuador, and capital of a jurisdiction of the same name, in the province of Quito; bounded on the W. by the shore of the Bay of Guayaquil, and E. by the Andes. The town is situate in a valley, about midway from the foot of the Andes and the shore of the bay, and 176 miles S. by W. of the city of Quito. Pop. about 18,000.

CUERNAYACA, a town of Mexico; 40 miles
S. by W. of the city of Mexico, on the road to Acapulco. In the time of Cortes it was the capital of an independent state. It is situate on the southern declivity of the Cor-dilleras, 5400 feet above the level of the sea.
The climate is delightful.

CUEVAS, a town of Spain, in Granada. It is about 8 miles from the Mediterranean, and almost surrounded by the river Almanzor.
It derives its name from some very deep and ancient caverns near it; 51 miles N.E. of Almeria. Pop. 9500.

CUIABA, a town of Brazil, in the province of Matto Grosso; seated on the W. bank of the river Cuiaba, which falls into the Paraguay, in the long. of 56. W. and lat. of 15.
35. S. The population is estimated at 30,000.
There is a tolerably productive gold mine in the vicinity of the town.

CULLY, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, on the N.E. side of the Lake of Geneva; 8 miles E.S.E. of Lausanne.

CULENBURG, or KARLENBOURG, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, on the S. bank of the river Leek; 16 miles S.S.E. of Utrecht.

CULIACAN, a town of Mexico, seated near the source of a river of the same name, which, after a course of about 50 miles, falls into the Gulf of California, in the lat. of 24. 20. N.
Pop. in 1835, 11,000. It is celebrated in Mexican history under the name of Hueicol-huacan, and is the capital of a populous and fertile district.

CULLAR DE BAZA, a town of Spain in Granada, 65 miles E. by N. of Granada. It lies in a ravine below the ruins of the Moorish town, and in a valley of maize and vines. It is a straggling place; half the dwellings are mere holes dug in the hill-side, in which the rustics burrow like rabbits, and they look all fur in their sheep-skin jackets. Pop. 5000.
Here in 1811 the Spaniards were dreadfully beaten by the French.

CULLEN, a town of Scotland, in Banffshire, at the mouth of the Cullan or Cullen. It has manufactures of linen and damask, and a trade in fresh and dried fish. Near it are seen three lofty spiring rocks, formed of flinty masses, called the Three Kings of Cullen. It is 13 miles W. by N. of Banff. It unites with Banff, &c. in sending one member to parliament.

CULLERA, a town of Spain, in Valencia, at the mouth of the Xucar; 21 miles S. of Valencia. Pop. about 4000.

CULM, a city of Prussia, capital of a palatinate of the same name, and a bishop's see, with a Catholic university. It is seated on the E. bank of the Vistula; 85 miles S. of Dantzic. Long. 18. 30. E. lat. 53. 24. N.

CULM, is also the name of a town in Bohemia, in the W. part of the circle of Saaz. It was near this place where the French general Vandamme was defeated by a corps of Austrians and Prussians, in August 1813.

CULMBACH, a town of Franconia, formerly the capital of a principality of the same name.
Near it, on a mountain, stands the fortress of Plessenburg, where the archives of the principality were preserved; but they were removed to Bayreuth in 1783. Culmbach is seated near the Weiss branch of the Main; 13 miles
N.N.W. of Bayreuth. Pop. about 3800.

CULMORE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Londonderry, on the coast of Lough Foyle;
5 miles N. by E. of Londonderry. It is stated in a return made to parliament in 1821, to be extra-parochial, and exempt from tithe, and parish and county rate.

CULNA, a town of Hindostan, in the presidency of Bengal, on the Hoogly. It is the port of the Burdwan district; 48 miles N.W. of Calcutta.

CULPEE, a town of Hindostan; an unhealthy station on the Hoogly; 33 miles S.
of Calcutta.

CULPEPER, a county of Virginia, bounded on the N.W. by the Blue ridge of the Alle-gany mountains, and on the E. by the Rappahannock river. Fairfax, 72 miles N. by W. of Richmond, is the chief town. Pop. of the county 11,393.

CULROSS, a borough of Scotland, in Perth-shire, in a district almost surrounded by Clackmannanshire. Here is a princely abbey, built in 1217. It is situate on the Frith of Forth; 20 miles S. of Perth; and 21 W.
N. W. of Edinburgh.

CUMANA, a town of the republic of Venezuela, on the navigable river Manzanares, over which there is a bridge; it is in 10. 57. N.
lat. and 64. 10. W. long. Its climate is very hot, being only fifty-three feet above sea-level, and seldom refreshed by rains. It is built at the foot of a volcanic mountain, in an arid plain, and is subject to earthquakes. It is the capital of a province of the same name.
Pop. of the province 50,671; of the town 8000.
The inhabitants grow cotton, coffee, sugar, &c.
Innumerable flocks of sea-fowls of various species frequent the neighbouring Gulf of Cariaco, which is about 30 miles long from E. to W., and from 8 to 10 miles wide, and affords good shelter for ships of any size.

CUMANOCOA, a town of the republic of Venezuela, in one of the most fertile districts of the province of Cumana. It is seated in a valley of the same name, about 45 miles S.E. of Cumana, in 10. 16. N. lat. and 64. 15. W. long. The air is healthy and tolerably cool, and the fruits grown here are reported the best in the province. Pop. of the town and adjacent district about 5000.

CUMBER, or COMBER, a parish and town in the county of Down, Ireland. The town is pleasantly seated at the head of a small bay of Strangford Lough.

CUMBERLAND, a maritime and mountainous county of the N. of England; bounded on the N. by the river Liddel, which separates it from Scotland, and on the E. by the counties of Northumberland and Durham, S. by those of Westmoreland and part of Lancashire, and E. by the Irish Sea. It contains 974,720 acres, and is divided into the eastern and western divisions, for each of which it sends two members to parliament. This county contains a good deal of dreary moor, but some of the valleys, intersected by streams of water and interspersed with lakes, are exceedingly picturesque, and very fertile. The two principal rivers are the Eden and Derwent, which abound with salmon and char. The mountains and moors are rich in minerals, especially coals and lead. It has also a very valuable bed of plumbago, or black lead. Sea Fell, the highest peak of the mountains, rises to a height of 3166 feet above the level of the sea. Skiddaw and Helvellyn also each rise to heights exceeding 3000 feet, and five or six others approximate to 3000 feet. Carlisle is the capital, where some considerable manufactures of cotton are carried on. The county also yields a surplus of cattle, and about 200,000 chaldrons of coals annually. The seaports are Whitehaven, Workington, and Maryport; and the principal towns in the interior, Aldston, Coekermouth, Penrith, and Wigton.

CUMBERLAND is also the name of several counties in different parts of the United States of North America, viz.

1st. In the State of Maine, of which Portland is the chief town, and seat of government of the state. (See PORTLAND.) It is a maritime county, its area not exceeding 700 square miles, comprising a considerable surface of lakes. The N.E. corner of the county is bounded by the Kennebec river. Pop. 68,658.

2nd. At the S. extremity of the state of New Jersey, bordering on Delaware Bay, in the lat. of 39. 15. to 39. 30. N. Pop. 14,374. Bridgetown is the capital.

3rd. In Pennsylvania, bounded on the N. by the Blue ridge of the Allegany mountains, and on the E. by the Susquehanna river. It is about 35 miles in extent from

E. to W., and 15 in mean breadth. Pop. 30,953. Carlisle, 18 miles W. of Harrisburg, is the chief town.

4th. In Virginia, extending S. from James River for 28 miles, to the Appomattox River. The mean breadth of this county does not exceed 8 miles. Cartersville, the chief town, on the S. bank of James River, is 32 miles W. by N. of Richmond. Pop. of the county, 10,399, of whom 6781 are slaves.

5th. In the interior of North Carolina, intersected by Cape Fear River. Pop. 15,284, of whom 5392 are slaves. Fayetteville, 48 miles S. by W. of Raleigh, is the chief town.

6th. In Kentucky, bordering on Tennessee, intersected by the Cumberland river. Pop. 6090. Burkesville is the chief town.

CUMBERLAND RIVER, which gives name to the preceding county, rises on the W. side of the Cumberland ridge of mountains, which divide the S.E. end of the state of Kentucky from that of Virginia, in the lat. of 37. N., runs W. for about 120 miles, when it leaves the state of Kentucky in a southerly direction, at the S.W. corner of Cumberland county, into the state of Tennessee, through which it runs a course of about 150 miles, when it re-enters the state of Kentucky in a N.W. direction; and, after a further course of about 60 miles, falls into the Ohio about 50 miles above the entrance of that river into the Mississippi. From the source of the Cumberland river, to its conflux with the Ohio, the distance in a direct line is 300 miles, being 6 deg. of long. between 82. 15. and 88. 15. in the lat. of 37. N.; but the distance by the course and windings of the stream is near 600 miles, 500 of which is navigable for batteaux of 14 or 15 tons burthen.

CUMBERLAND BRIDGE is the most westerly of the Allegany chain of mountains, and extends from the frontier of Georgia, in the lat. of 35. N. in an E.N.E. direction, through the state of Tennessee, flanking the S.E. end of the state of Kentucky, into Tazewell county, in the state of Virginia, in the lat. of 37. 20. N., where it terminates in several knolls, which give rise to several streams that form the Big Sandy River.

CUMBERLAND, an island on the coast of Georgia; the most southern territory of the United States on the Atlantic Ocean, previous to their possession of the Floridas, in July 1821. It is 15 miles long and 2 broad. Opposite its S. extremity is the island Amelia, and between them is the entrance to St. Mary's river, in the lat. of 30. 39. N.

Cumberland is also the name of two or three townships in different parts of the United States of North America.

CUMBERLAND, a town and fort of British America, in a county of the same name, forming the isthmus which unites Nova Scotia to New Brunswick. The fort is situated at the head of the Bay of Fundy, on the E. side of its northern branch, called Chignecto Bay. The isthmus is here about fifteen miles a breadth. Pop. 8 W. of Harris-

Cumberland is also the name of several other islands, bays, and capes in different parts of the world.

CUMBERNAULD, a manufacturing village of Scotland, in Dumbartonshire. It stands near the Forth and Clyde Canal and the Edinburgh and Glasgow railroads. The chief employment is cotton weaving; 13 miles E. of Glasgow.

CUMBO, or COMBO, a kingdom on the W. coast of Africa, S. of the river Gambia. The Portuguese have a settlement at Cacheo.

CUMBRAY, GREAT and LITTLE, two islands of Scotland, at the entrance of the Frith of Clyde, to the S.E. of the Isle of Bute. The former is 6 miles in circumference, has excellent freestone quarries, and the ruins of a cathedral dedicated to St. Columbo. The latter lies a little to the S. of the other, and on it is a lighthouse. Long. 4. 47. W. lat. 55. 45. N. They are included in the county of Bute.

CUMIRNA, a town of Piedmont; 12 miles S.W. of Turin. Pop. about 4500.

CUMLY, a fort and town of Hindostan, in Canara, seated between two rivers, 15 miles S. by E. of Mangalore.

CUMNOCK, OLD and NEW, two adjoining parishes in Ayrshire, on the line of the Glasgow and South Western Ry. Old Cumnock was once celebrated for its wooden snuff-boxes, and is pleasantly seated. New Cumnock, 5½ miles from the former, is, like it, rich in mineral but unwrought treasures, and is 70 m. from Carlisle, and 55 from Glasgow.

CUNDINAMARCA, one of the four great divisions into which the new republican territory of Colombia was first divided; but since the division of 1823, when the country was divided into twelve provinces, it forms the central and metropolitan province of the republic. See BOGOTA, Sr. FÉ DE.

CUPAR OF FIFE, a borough of Scotland, capital of Fifeshire. Here are manufactures of coarse linens, and a considerable tannery. It is seated in a rich valley, on the N. side of the Eden, on the Edinburgh and Northern Railway; 8 m. W. by S. of St. Andrews, and 30 N.N.E. of Edinburgh. It joins St. Andrews, &c., in sending a member to parliament.

CUPAR OF ANGUS, a town of Scotland, partly in Forfar, but chiefly in Perthshire, with a considerable linen manufacture and tannery. It is seated on the Isla; 12 miles N.W. of Dundee, and 13 N.N.E. of Perth, on the Scottish Midland Railway.

CURAGOA, an island in the Caribbean Sea, lying off the coast of Colombia, 35 miles long and 12 broad; subject to the Dutch. Pop.

3000 whites, 5500 free coloured, 5000 slaves. It produces sugar, tobacco, and salt; has numerous warehouses, which used formerly to supply the adjacent coast with the productions of Europe and Asia, and which still continue to do so to some extent. In 1800 some French having settled on part of the island, and becoming at variance with the Dutch, the latter surrendered the island to a single British frigate. It was restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1802, and taken from them by a British squadron in 1807, and again restored by the peace of 1814. The principal town is St. Peter, at the N.E. extremity of the island. Pop. in 1815, 13,000. Long. 69. 15. W. lat. 12. 22. N.

CURICO, the tenth in order of the provinces of Chili; the chief town, of the same name, is about 100 miles from the sea, in the lat. of 35. S., on the road from Concepcion to Santiago.

CURIA MURIA, an island on the coast of Arabia Felix, opposite the mouth of the river Prim. Long. 55. 25. E. lat. 17. 0. N.

CURUSCH HAFF, a lake or bay of Prussia, separated from the Baltic Sea by a tongue of land 70 miles in extent, in a N.N.E. direction, but not more than 2 or 3 miles wide; the Haff is about 30 miles wide at the S. end, progressively narrowing to about a mile only at its outlet into the sea at Memel.

CURNOUL, or KURNOUL, a town of Hindostan, district of Balaghaut, the ancient capital of the Deccan, and defended by a strong fort. It was taken by the British in 1815, and again in 1839. It is 279 miles from Madras, on the river Toombudra.

CURRAH, a town of Hindostan, in Allahabad, on the S. bank of the Ganges; 36 miles N.W. of Allahabad.

CURRITUCK, a maritime county at the N.E. extremity of North Carolina, the N. end bordering on the great Dismal Swamp of Virginia, and the S. end on Albemarle Sound. This was formerly a very dreary district, but some of the land, within the present century, has been rendered very productive in rice. Pop. 6703, of whom 2100 are slaves. The county gives name to one of the inlets into Albemarle Sound.

CURUPA, a town of Brazil, in the government of Para, seated on the S. bank of the main channel of the Amazon; 250 miles W. of Para. Long. 53. 10. W. lat. 1. 50. S.

CURZOLA, an island in the Gulf of Venice, on the coast of Dalmatia; about 26 miles long. It abounds in wood proper for building ships, and produces good wine. At the E. end is a fortified town of the same name, with a good harbour. Long. 17. 10. E. lat. 43. 6. N.

Cusco, or Cuzco, a city of Peru, and a bishop's see, formerly the capital of the incas; supposed to have been first founded by Manca Capac, in 1043. The Spaniards, under Pizarro, took possession of it in 1534. On a mountain contiguous to the N. part of the city are the ruins of a fort and palace of the Inca, the stones of which are of enormous magnitude. Cusco is built in a square form, in the middle of which is the best market in all America: four large streets, which are perfectly straight, terminate in the square. It contains nine churches besides the cathedral, which is a noble structure. The number of inhabitants is about 40,000, of which one-half are original Americans. Streams of water run through the town, which are a great convenience in a country where it seldom rains. It is seated near the source of a river falling into the Velcomayo, on the E. side of the first collateral ridge of the Andes; 350 miles E. by S. of Lima. Long. 71. 47. W. lat. 13. 20. S.

CUSSET, a town of France, in the department of Allier; 37 miles S. by E. of Moulins. Pop. about 4000.

CUSTEE, a town of Bengal on the S. bank of the main branch of the Ganges; 100 miles N. by E. of Calcutta. It has considerable manufactures of silk.

CUSTRIN, a fortified town of Brandenburg, capital of the New Mark, with a castle. In 1760 it was bombarded and almost destroyed by the Russians, and in 1806 it was taken by the French. It is seated amid morasses, at the conflux of the Warta with the Oder; 46 miles E. by N. of Berlin.

CUTAIS, or KOTATIS, the chief town of Imeritia, Russian Asia, government of Georgia. The remains of the cathedral seem to prove that it was once a considerable place. It is seated on the Riona; 120 miles W. by N. of Teflis. Long. 43. 0. E. lat. 42. 25. N.

CUTCH, a country of Hindostan, governed by a rajah, and situate on the S. E. of Sind; the E. branch of the Indus separating the two countries. It extends along the N. coast of the Gulf of Cutch, and is separated from Guzerat by the river Ban. It abounds with hills, woods, and sandy wilds. The capital is Bhoj, in the lat. of 23. 16. N., and 69. 2. of E. long. The Runn, or Rin of Cutch, is an extensive tract of 8000 square miles to the N. of the district, which is alternately a muddy plain, or a dry sandy desert, covered with saline deposits, from which much salt is manufactured.

CUTTACK, a maritime district of Hindostan, extending from Lake Chilka in the lat. of 19. 30. N., to the Subunreeka river, which separates it from Bengal in the lat. of 21. 30. N., being bounded on the W. by the province of Orissa. The rivers Coyle, Nuddy, and Mahanuddy, intersect it from W. to E. It is a very fertile district, and has numerous and extensive manufactures of cotton; but is more particularly celebrated as the chief district of Hindoo devotees, and containing the temple of Jagarnaut. Pop. 1,984,600. The chief town, of the same name, sometimes called, and 86. 5. of E. long. Besides Jagarnaut, the other places of note are Balasore, Masulipatam, and Jageepoor. This district was familiar to the Mahomedans as early as the commencement of the 13th century, but continued in possession of the Hindoos till 1569, when it surrendered to Solymann Kerand, who annexed it to Bengal. In 1757, it was ceded to the Nagpore Mahrattas, and fell into the possession of the English in 1803.

CUTTACK BENARES, is seated on an island formed by the Mahanuddy river, about 50 miles from the sea, in the lat. of 20. 27. N.,

CUTTERAH, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Oude; 25 miles S. by E. of Bareilly; celebrated for a decisive battle fought in its vicinity on the 18th of April, 1774, between the Rohillas and the British.

CUTTUB, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Delhi; 13 miles S. from Delhi. near the town is a remarkable column, 242 feet high, erected in the 11th century.

CUXHAVEN, a seaport of Lower Saxony in the Duchy of Bremen; situate near the point of the promontory formed by the mouths of the rivers Weser and Elbe. It is an insignificant place, but was rendered of some importance as the station of the post-office packets between England and the N. of Europe, but since the establishment of steam packets the business is transferred direct to Hamburg. It is 60 miles N. N. W. of Hamburg. Lat. 53. 52. N. and 8. 43. of E. long.

CUYAHOGA. See CAYAHOGA.

CYCLADES, the ancient name of ten islands at the entrance of the Grecian Archipelago, between 36. and 38. of N. lat.

CYPRUS, an island at the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean Sea, lying off the coast of Syria, from which the eastern extremity of the island is distant 70 miles. It is 165 miles in extreme length, and 50 wide in its broadest part, but its mean breadth does not exceed 30 miles, giving an area of about 5000 square miles, in 35. of N. lat. It is intersected by mountains and streams of water. The mountains are of considerable elevation, and the tops of some of them are covered with snow a great part of the year. The principal river runs from W. to E. and is called the Pedia. During the national career of Egypt, Persia, Greece, and Rome, Cyprus was the resort of the learned, gay, refined, and vicious of those nations. Its pre-eminence declined with the fall of the Roman empire, and, from its being the abode of all that was refined in art, and voluptuous in every species of indulgence—yielding to numerous population abundance of every thing necessary to subsistence, and a variety of the most delicious fruits—it rapidly became a wilderness in comparison with its previous fertility, overrun by tribes of Arabs, who were driven from the island during the crusades, at the close of the twelfth century, by Richard I. of England, who assumed the title of king of Cyprus. In 1480 it fell into the hands of the Venetians, at which period it was made the place and scene of a drama by the English dramatic poet Shakspere. The Venetians surrendered it to the Turks in 1570, in whose possession, up to 1826, it still continued, when it was taken possession of by Mehmet Ali, Pacha of Egypt, but was wrested from him by the combined powers and restored to the Porte. Its present population is supposed not to exceed 70,000, about one-third of whom are Turks and the remainder Greeks, who have three bishops and one archbishop. The principal towns are Pafos, or Baffo, at the W. end, Massarea and Mancorta, or Famagonsta, at the mouth of the Pedia, towards the end, and Cerina, on the N. coast of the Island, and Lessocossia, or Viconis, the capital, in the interior. Cyprus is still rich by nature, in mineral, animal, and vegetable productions: the vine and olive, with a variety of other plants and flowers, esculent, ambrosial, and medicinal, luxuriate in a perfection equal to any part of the world, and superior to most parts. The wines possess a strong aperient quality, and require forty years to duly qualify them for the palate. The inhabitants carry on various manufactures in silk, cotton, and wool, and their carpets are deservedly esteemed for the variety, richness, and beauty of their colour.

CYR, ST., a village of France, 2 miles from Versailles; celebrated for an abbey founded by Madame de Maintenon, who was the abbess till her death, in 1719.

There are a number of towns and villages of this name in different parts of France, but all inconsiderable.

Cz. For places sometimes written with Cz, see Cs, and Tsch.

CZASLAW, or TCHASLAW, a circle of Bohemia, bordering on Moravia, the N. end jutting upon the Elbe; containing about 800 square miles of territory. It is intersected from E. to W. by the Yasawa, which river falls into the Moldau, and from N. to S. by another river which falls into the Elbe. Pop. about 180,000, chiefly agricultural. The chief town, of the same name, is seated in the N. part of the circle, 8 miles S. of the Elbe, and 45 E. N. E. of Prague. The church has the highest tower of Bohemia. Near this place the king of Prussia gained a victory over the Austrians, in 1742.

CZENSTOCHOW, or CZESTOCHOW, a town of Prussian Poland, near the frontier of Silesia and the source of the Warta; near which there is a celebrated convent, fortified and garrisoned. It sustained a siege against the Swedes in 1657, and near it a battle was fought in 1665, between the royal army of Poland and Lubomirski, to the disadvantage of the former. It was garrisoned by the French in 1812. It is fifty miles N. N. W. of Cracow.

CZERCOSSI, or ST. CZYRKOSSY, a town of Russia, in the Ukraine, with a castle; seated near the Dniester; 85 miles S. E. of Kiow. Long. 32. 5. E. lat. 49. 20. N.

CZERNETZ, a town of European Turkey, in Wallachia, near the Danube; 140 miles W. by N. of Bucharest.

CZERNITZ, or KASCHAU, a town of Carniola, remarkable for its lake, which produces grass and corn every year. The lake is surrounded by mountains, and in dry seasons is from 20 to 25 miles in circumference; but when full, it is 40 miles round, and contains several islands, on the largest of which is a village. When the water subsides, buckwheat is sown on the dry parts, and becomes ready for the sickle in six weeks; and the pasturage is not hurt by the water if it does not stay too long. The town is situate at the N. part of the lake; 20 miles S. by W. of Laybach.

CZERNIGOV, or TCHERNIGOV, a government of European Russia; bounded on the W. by the Dniester. The chief town, of the same name, is seated on the N. bank of the Desna, which falls into the Dniester; 450 m. S. S. W. of Moscow, and 75 N. by E. of Kiow. Pop. about 5000.

CZERSKO, a town of Prussian Poland, in the palatinate of Masovia; seated on the W. bank of the Vistula; 30 m. S. S. E. of Warsaw.

CZERVENIZA, a town of Upper Hungary, famous for mines of opal, a noble gem not yet discovered in any other region of the globe. It is 15 miles N. of Cassovia.

CZONORSZT, or ALT-CZONGRAD, a town of Hungary, at the conflux of the Theiss and Korosh; 18 miles N. of Zegedin.

Cz begins the names of several other towns in Poland, Russia, and Austria.

D.

DABER, a town of Hither Pomerania, in a circle of its name; 16 miles N. N. E. of Stargard.

DABUL, a town of Hindostan, on the coast of CONCAN, (which see,) with a trade in pepper and salt; seated at the mouth of a river; 75 miles S. by E. of Bombay. Long. 72. 53. E. lat. 17. 50. N.

DACCA, two districts of Bengal, lying between the main branch of the Ganges and the Burrampooter rivers. These districts are, Dacca, area, 1870 square miles, and with 512,385 inhabitants in 1828; and Dacca Jelapore, area, 2585 square miles. Pop. 583,375. Area combined, 4455 square miles. Pop. 1,095,760. The chief town, of the same name, is seated on the banks of a small river, which communicates with the Burrampooter. It was once the capital of Bengal, and defended by a strong fortress, the remains of which appear. It had a great trade in muslins and other cotton manufactures of the most delicate texture, manufactured from the cotton produced in the province, but now annihilated by the changes in the position of its people. The country round Dacca lies low, and is always covered with verdure during the dry months. It is 150 miles N.E. of Calcutta. Long. 90. 32. E. lat. 23. 42. N.

DACHAU, a town of Bavaria, where the king has a palace; seated on a hill near the river Ammer; 10 miles N.N.W. of Munich.

DAGLET'S ISLAND, an island about 9 miles in circumference, in the Japanese Sea, at about an equal distance from the Isle of Nippon and the coast of the Corea, in the lat. of 37. 25. N. It was visited by La Perouse. It abounds with timber, which the Coreans are supposed to use in the building of boats.

DAGENHAM, a village of Essex, England, on the N. bank of the Thames, from the tide-waters of which it is secured by an embankment. In 1703 the embankment gave way, and inundated 5000 acres of ground, which were reclaimed in 1715.

DAGHISTAN, a province of Georgia, lying between the W. shore of the Caspian Sea and the Caucasian mountains. It is intersected by several small rivers falling into the Caspian. The inhabitants are a brave and hardy race, and successfully resisted the arms of Nadir Shah in 1743. Its sovereignty is claimed by Russia, but the resoluteness of the inhabitants renders it nominal rather than real. It has two considerable towns, Tasker and Derbent, on the shores of the Caspian. It is a fertile district, and, under social institutions, might be made an agreeable country. It is intersected by the line of 42. of N. lat.

DAGO, or DAGOE, an island in the Baltic, on the coast of Livonia; 7 miles N. of the Isle of Oesel, near the entrance to the Gulf of Finland. It is 20 miles in circumference, and has two castles called Dagerwort and Paden. Long. 22. 56. E. lat. 58. 44. N.

DAGON. See RANGOON.

DAHL, the finest river of Sweden, which flows through Dalecarlia, or Dalarne, and on the S. confines of Gastricia, and enters the Gulf of Bothnia south of Gefle. Near Escarleby, not far from its mouth, it forms a celebrated entreat, little inferior to that of the Rhine at Lauffen.

DAHLAK, an island in the Red Sea, near the N. end of the coast of Abyssinia; 40 m. long and 6 broad. It is fertile, populous, and remarkable for a pearl fishery. The inhabitants are blacks, and great enemies to the Mahometans. Long. 40. 10. E. lat. 15. 44. N.

DAHOMEY, a kingdom of W. Africa, on the coast of Guinea, supposed to reach 180 miles inland, though no European has penetrated above half the distance. The country is fertile, yielding a plentiful supply of farinaceous vegetables and tropical fruits; also indigo, cotton, sugar-cane tobacco, palm-oil, and a variety of spices. The religion of Dahomey consists of a jumble of superstitious ceremonies, of which it is impossible to convey any satisfactory idea. The government is perhaps the most perfect despotism in the world; for the polity admits of no intermediate degree of subordination between king and slave, at least in the royal presence, where the prime minister prostrates himself with as much abject submission as the meanest subject. The king maintains a considerable standing army, commanded by an agoaw, or general, and their subordinate officers, who must hold themselves in readiness to take the field at the command of the sovereign. On extraordinary occasions, all the males able to bear arms are obliged to repair to the general's standard; every caboccer marching at the head of his own people. Sometimes the king takes the field at the head of his troops; and, on very great emergencies, at the head of his women. In the different royal palaces in Dahomey, are immured not less than 3000 women; several hundreds of whom are trained to arms, under a female general and other officers. The general character of the Dahomans is marked by a mixture of ferocity and politeness; the former has recently been frightfully exemplified in the slaughter of above 3000 slaves, to celebrate the accession of the present sovereign. The leopard and hyena are common in this part of Africa, and commit great ravages, as sometimes does also a species of white ant. Grewhe, or Griwhee, in the lat. 6. 17. N., and 3. 6. of E. long., is the principal seaport. Pop. about 6500. Abomey, about 90 miles inland, is the capital.

DAKOTAH, a new territory of the United States, west of Minnesota. The Missouri river divides it into two nearly equal sections. The area is about 135,000 square miles, and the estimated population (1860) 8000. It contains much fertile land, salt-lakes, coal, &c., but timber is scarce.

DALECARLIA, or DALARNE (signifying the valley), an interior province of Sweden, in the division of Sweden Proper, between Nordland and the mountains of Norway. It is 270 miles long, and from 40 to 120 broad. The principal productions are wood, corn, and hemp, and it contains many mountains, in which are mines of silver, copper, and iron. The capital is Fahlun. The manners of the people are distinct from those of other parts of Sweden.

DALHEIM, a town of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Limberg, capital of a territory of the same name, seated near the Meuse; 15 miles N.W. of Limberg.

DALE, a county of Alabama, on the Choctawhatchie river. The surface is level, and generally barren, except some very fertile river swamp. Capital, Daleville. Pop. in 1840, 7397.

DALA, DALAND, or DALSAND, a province of Sweden, in Gothland, to the W. of Wermeland and Lake Wenner. It is 85 miles long and 40 broad. The N. part is full of mountains, forests, and lakes; but to the S. it produces corn sufficient for the inhabitants. Cattle, fish, butter, and cheese are the chief articles. The capital is Daleburg, or Amal, on the shore of the lake.

DALKEITH, a town of Scotland, in Edinburghshire, with a great market on Thursday for corn and oatmeal. Here is Dalkeith-house, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Buccleuch. It is seated on a strip of land between the N. and S. Esk; 6 miles S.E. of Edinburgh.

DALLA, or DELLA, a district of low land at the delta of the Irawaddy river; a town of the same name on the E. bank of the main branch of the river, about 40 miles W.S.W. of Rangoon, manufactures a great quantity of salt. The soil is capable of being rendered very productive. It is at present much infested with wild animals.

DALLAS, a county of Alabama, watered by the Alabama and Cahaba rivers, which unite in it. On the margins of them the soil is very fertile. Capital, Cahaba. Pop. in 1840, 25,199, including 17,208 slaves.

DALMATIA, a country of Europe, anciently part of Illyricum, stretching, in a N.W. direction, from the lat. of 42. to 44. N., along the E. shore of the Adriatic Sea. It is a country of great antiquity, and formerly extended inland to the lat. of 45. 39. N., and included parts of Croatia, Bosnia, and Albania; the whole was incorporated with Hungary in the 12th century. The Venetians afterwards made inroads upon the sea-coast, and in the 15th century the whole country, now commonly called Dalmatia, became subject to that republic. It was ceded to Austria by the treaty of Campo Formio, in 1797; Austria ceded it to France in 1805. It fell again into the possession of Austria at the general partitioning in 1814. This portion of Dalmatia, which is all now understood by that name, has 200 miles of sea-coast, within the latitude above mentioned, with an area of about 5800 square miles, and, in 1812, contained 401,541 inhabitants. It is bounded on the E. by the Bocana river, which separates it from Albania, on the N. by Bosnia and Croatia, and W. by MORLACIA (which see). It has several islands lying off the coast, the principal of which are Brazza, Lessino, Curzola, Sabbioncello, and Meloda. It has some mountainous territory, containing marble, gypsum, iron, and other minerals; but parts are very fertile, and the mulberry, vine, and olive flourish in considerable luxuriance. The principal river is the Narenta, which rises in Bosnia; and either this or the Bocana might easily be united with collateral branches of the Save, near its union with the Danube, and thereby open a water communication by means of the latter, with the Black Sea on one side, and the interior of Germany on the other; but military despotism and catholic subjugation are incompatible with social improvements. The principal towns on the coast are Cattaro, Ragusa, and Spalatro, and in the interior Krin and Mostar. See Appendix.

DALME, a town of Prussia, at the S. extremity of the Middle Mark; 45 miles S. of Berlin. Pop. about 3000.

DALRY, a village of Scotland, in Ayrshire, 7 miles N.N.W. of Irvine. It has a cotton manufacture, and near it are valuable coal mines, and a strong sulphurous spring.

DALSLAND. See DALIA.

DALTON, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Saturday. Here are the remains of an ancient castle, and near it are the magnificent ruins of Furness Abbey. It is seated in a champaign country, not far from the sea; 6 m. S.W. of Ulverston, on the Whitehaven, &c. Railway, and 265 m. N.N.W. of London.

DAMASHUR, a town of Egypt, near the canal of Alexandria; 32 miles E. S. E. of Alexandria.

DAMAR, a town of Arabia Felix, in Yemen, with a university; 60 miles S. by E. of Sana.

DAMASCUS, or (as it is called by the Arabs) SHAM, a city of Syria, capital of a Turkish pachalic, and the see of a Greek archbishop. The form is an exact square, each side being a mile and a half long, and is supposed to contain from 120,000 to 150,000 inhabitants, among whom are great numbers of Christians and Jews. It has three walls, now almost entirely ruined; and of the several suburbs which it formerly had, there remains only one, which extends three miles in length. Several streams flow across the fertile plains of Damascus, which water all the gardens, supply the public fountains, and are carried into every house. The houses are built of wood, with their fronts inward, where there is a court; in the streets there are only walls to be seen, but the insides are richly adorned. The most remarkable buildings are the caravansaries, which consist of long galleries supported by marble pillars, and surrounding a large square court. The castle is like a little town, having its own streets and houses; and the famous Damascus steel was kept here in a magazine. The mosques, of which there are about 200, are extremely handsome edifices, the most stately of which was a Christian church. One street runs across the city and suburbs in a direct line, on each side of which are shops, where all sorts of rich merchandise are sold. Several manufactures are carried on here, among which that of sabres and knives has been the most famous. Damascus is one of the most ancient places existing; it is mentioned by Abraham 1917 years before the Christian era, as the place near which he encountered the forces of Chedorloamer, king of Elam (Persia), and rescued his nephew Lot, with considerable treasure, which the Elamites had taken from the cities of the plain. It afterwards became the capital of an independent kingdom, and at a later period became subject to the Jews. It was conquered by the Romans; and, after the fall of the Roman empire, Damascus became the seat of the grand caliph of the Saracens, who surrendered it to the Turkish emperor Solim, the third of the Ottoman dynasty, about 1515. It has continued subject to the Turks since that time. The pachalic, which extends from the desert of Arabia, through five degrees of latitude, to Aleppo, is considered the most valuable and important of all the Turkish possessions. In 1860, it was the scene of a cruel massacre of 8000 Christians by the Mohammedans. See SYRIA. Damascus is seated 60 miles from the sea, at Beirut, in the lat. of 33. 30. N.; 130 miles N.N.E. of Jerusalem, and 170 S. by W. of Aleppo.

DAMAUN, a seaport of Hindostan, in the province of Guzerat, at the entrance of the Gulf of Cambay. Anrunggzebe besieged it about the middle of the 17th century, with an army of 40,000 men; but the garrison sallying out on a part of his camp, guarded by 200 elephants, so terrified those animals by their fire-arms, that they turned on their masters, and trampled to death half his army. The Parsees (see BACRU) have a celebrated temple here. It is subject to the Portuguese, and 60 miles S. of Surat. Long. 72. 47. E. lat. 20. 18. N.

DAMBOOLLOO, a town of the island of Ceylon; 34 miles N. of Candy; celebrated for its cavern temples, which are in excellent preservation.

DAMEGAN, or DAMGAN, a town of Persia; seated near the S. shore of the Caspian Sea, in the district of Mazanderan. It is supposed once to have been the seat of government of the Parthian empire. It is 90 miles E. by S. of Ferrabad, and 300 N. by E. of Ispahan.

DANGARTIN, or DAMGARD, a town of Hither Pomerania, with a castle seated at the mouth of the Recknitz; 18 miles W. of Stralsund.

DAMIETTA, a town of Egypt, and a Greek archbishop's see, with a good harbour, at one of the eastern mouths of the Nile. It has several squares, various grand mosques, and public baths faced with marble. The rice mozelauoi, the finest in Egypt, is cultivated in the neighbouring plains. Here are likewise Indian stuffs, silks, sal ammoniac, wheat, &c. The Christians of Aleppo and Damascus carry on the principal trade, which, till the dominion of Ali Pacha, was considerable, but has been transferred by him chiefly to Alexandria. He has also established a military school here. During the crusades, Damietta was frequently an object of contention. It surrendered to the French in 1798, since which period it has been on the decline. It is about 90 miles E. of Alexandria, the same distance N. by E. of Cairo, in the lat. of 31. 26. N. and 31. 50. of E. long. Pop. about 30,000.

DAMM, a town of Further Pomerania, which has a considerable trade in steel manufactures. It is seated on the S. end of a lake of the same name, near the mouth of the Oder; 8 miles E. S. E. of Stettin. Pop. about 2000.

DAMME, a town of Belgium, in West Flanders; seated on the canal between Sluys and Bruges; 5 miles N. by E. of Bruges.

DAMME, or AFIINGEDAM, a town of Holland, in Groningen; seated on the Dumster, near the mouth of the Ems; 14 miles N. E. of Groningen.

DAMPIER'S LAND, in the lat. of 19. S., on the W. coast of Australia; so called from the navigator of that name, who visited it in 1688.

DANBURY, a villago in Essex, England, 5 miles E. of Chelmsford, and 16 W. of the sea. It stands on the highest ground in the county, and the spire of the church serves as a sea-mark.

DANBURY, a town of Connecticut, in Fairfield county, with two churches. This town, with a large quantity of military stores, was burnt by the British in 1777. It is 20 miles N. N. W. of Fairfield, and 65 N. N. E. of New York.

DANCALI, a country in the E. part of Abyssinia, at the entrance to the Red Sea. The soil is unproductive; and its chief riches consist in fossil salt, and honey. It is governed by a prince nominally tributary to the negus, or emperor of Abyssinia. Bailur is the principal town.

DANGALA. See DONGOLA.

DANGER, ISLES OF, three islands in the Pacific Ocean, seen by Byron in 1765, but so surrounded by rocks and breakers, that it was unsafe to land. Long. 169. 28. W. lat. 10. 15. S.

DANNEMORA, or DAMMORA, the most celebrated iron mine in Sweden. It produces from four to five thousand tons of iron, of the very best quality, annually. It is about 30 miles N. of Upsal.

DANNENBURG, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Luneburgh; capital of a district of the same name; seated on the Jetze, near the Elbe; 30 miles E. by S. of Luneburgh.

DANZIC, or DANTZIG, a city of Europe, very advantageously located on the W. bank of the Vistula, about 5 miles above its entrance into the Baltic Sea, in the lat. of 54. 21. N. and 18. 38. of E. long. It is supposed to have been first founded by the Danes in the 12th century, and for some time continued a free and independent city. In 1454 it became subject to Poland, retaining, however, all its municipal institutions, and long continued to rank as the chief commercial city of the N. of Europe, included in the Hanseatic league. At the commencement of the 18th century it contained upwards of 100,000 inhabitants, more than 20,000 of whom were carried off by a pest, in 1709. In 1734 it offered protection to Stanislaus, king of Poland, when it was besieged by the Russians and Saxons, to whom it was obliged to surrender. In 1793 it was taken possession of by a Prussian force, who held it till 1807, when, after a long siege, it surrendered to the French, who, in their turn, were forced to surrender it to a united Russian and Prussian force, after the disastrous campaign of 1812-13; and in the following year (1814) it was confirmed in full sovereignty to Prussia. The easy navigation of the Vistula, and three or four considerable rivers, combined with the railway which connects with Konigsberg and all Germany, affords to Dantzic great commercial advantages. The chief product of the interior country is grain, of which article Dantzic has occasionally exported 500,000 quarters of wheat per annum; and the vicinity of the city contains very extensive granaries. It is also capable of affording very extensive supplies of timber, pearl-ash, flax, and hemp. It has several yards for ship-building, all on the small island in the river Modlau. It has upwards of twenty churches, chiefly Lutheran, and several other public buildings. It is nearly surrounded by water, and two streams intersect the city, dividing it into three parts. The fortifications are very strong by nature, and rendered formidable by art. It is 90 miles W.S.W. of Konigsberg, 250 N.E. of Berlin, and 190 N. by W. of Warsaw.

DANUBE, German, "Dunn," i. e. deep water, (the lower part called Ister by Strabo,) the noblest river of Europe; has its sources in the territory of the grand duke of Baden, on the eastern confines of the Black Forest, in the lat. of 48. N. and 8. 15. of E. long. It pursues a winding course in a N.N.E. direction to Ulm, where it receives the Iller from the S., and becomes navigable. From Ulm it bears N. into Bavaria, to the lat. of 49. at Ratisbon, previously receiving the united waters of the Wartasch and Lech from the S.; and, before passing Ratisbon, it receives the waters of the Altmucht and of the Nab from the N. From Ratisbon it bears to the S., past Ilstadt into Austria, previously receiving the Iser, Inn, and Salza, all from the S.

Its course through the archduchy of Austria, past Vienna to Presburg, is rather circuitous: from Presburg it runs E. by N. for about 100 miles, receiving several streams from the Carpathian mountains, when it takes a course due S. through the heart of Lower Hungary, past Buda, for 160 miles, to the lat. of 45. 35., when it receives the waters of the Drave from the W., and again bears to the E., receiving the Theis, which divides Upper and Lower Hungary from the N., and the Save from the W. at Belgrade; from Belgrade it forms the boundary between Hungary and Servia, then bears S., separating Bulgaria from Wallachia, receiving numerous streams both from the N. and S. It again bears N. to Galatz, near which it receives the waters of the numerous rivers of Moldavia and Bessarabia, falling into the Black Sea on the E., by several channels between the lat. of 44. 40. and 45. 30. N. in 29. 20. of E. long. The meridional distance from the source to the mouth of this river is 21 degrees of long., between the lat. of 45. and 49., equal to about 1000 English miles, but the course of the stream, by its continued windings, may be estimated at from 1750 to 1800 miles. It is navigable to Ulm, within 150 miles of its source, and has a number of steam vessels communicating with the Black Sea and its ports. In the archduchy of Austria it forms several islands. Under the head of DALMATIA it is shown that it might easily be made to communicate with the Adriatic. It contains a great variety of fish, and is celebrated for its sturgeon. Its free navigation has been secured by the treaty with Russia, Turkey, and the Western Powers, in 1856.

DANUBE, UPPER, CIRCLE OF, from the S.E. part of the circle of Bavaria, lying between 48. and 49. of N. lat. and 10. and 11. of E. long., and comprises the S. part of the circle of Suabia, the county of Pappenheim, and the principality of Neuberg. It is watered by the Iller, Mindel, Wertach, and the Lech, all running from S. to N. into the Danube, which gives name to the circle. The Iller might readily be united with the Lako of Constance, and thereby open a water communication between the Danube and the Rhine. It is a district of capability and of resource, under a well-directed exertion of agricultural pursuit. The principal towns are Gunsburg, Dillengen, Hochstadt, Donauwert, Pappenheim, Neuberg, Eichstadt, Nordlingen, &c. &c.

DANUBE, LOWER, CIRCLE OF, another circle of the kingdom of Bavaria, comprises the E. part of Lower Bavaria, and the bishopric of Passau. It lies on both sides of the Danube, between the lat. of 12. 30. and 13. 40. E., in the same parallel of lat. as the Upper Circle. The Iser and the Inn intersect the S. part, which is considered the most fertile district of all Bavaria. Passau is the capital; and the other principal towns are Straubing, Landau, Deckendorf, Osterhofen, Wilshofen, &c.

DANUBE, CIRCLE OF. The source of the Danube also gives name to a circle in the territory of the grand duke of Baden, comprising part of the Black Forest. Willengen, 20 miles E. by N. of Frilburg is the capital.

DANVERS, a township of Essex county, Massachusetts. The chief village is a continuation of the streets of Salem, and the other has considerable ship-building; 16 miles N. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 5020.

DANVILLE, a town of Vermont. It is a pleasant and flourishing place, and has considerable trade; 30 miles N.E. of Montpelier. Pop. in 1840, 2633.

DANVILLE, a town of Virginia, on a branch of the Roanoke river, with considerable manufacturing advantages; 164 miles S. by W. of Richmond. Pop. 1200.

DANVILLE, a town of Kentucky, in Mercer county, situate in a fertile plain; 35 miles S.S.W. of Lexington, and 70 S.E. of Louisville. Danville is also the name of three or four other townships in different parts of the United States of North America.

DARANGHERD, a town of Persia, in Fars, said to have been founded by Darius. It is large, but not populous, and surrounded by luxurious groves of orange and lemon trees. Near it salt is found of various colours—white, black, red, and green. A considerable manufacture of glass is carried on here. Though much declined, it has still a population of 15,000 to 20,000. It stands 140 miles E.S.E. of Schiraz, on the road to Ormuz. Long. 54. 56. E. lat. 28. 56. N.

DARAI, or DRASS, a country of Barbary, bounded on the N. by Sus, E. by Tafilet, S. by Zahara, and W. by the Atlantic. A river of the same name flows through it, which enters the Atlantic on the S. side of Cape Non. The principal produce is indigo and dates. The inhabitants are Arabs and Mahomedans; and some of the districts are dependent on Morocco.

DARAPORAM, a town of Hindostan, capital of the S. part of Coimbatore. It has a large mud fort, and straight and wide streets. Much cotton and tobacco are cultivated in the vicinity, and the garden and rice grounds are considerable. It is seated at about an equal distance from the Malabar and Coromandel coasts; 42 miles E.S.E. of Coimbatore, and 106 W. of Tunjore. Long. 77. 40. E. lat. 10. 47. N.

DARDA, a town and fort of Lower Hungary, built by the Turks in 1686, and taken by the Austrians the next year. It is seated near the Drave, at the end of the bridge of Essoek; 8 miles S. of Barany.

DARDANELLES, two castles of Turkey, the one called Sestos, seated in Romelia, the other called Abydos, in Natolia. They command the S.W. entrance of the Hellespont, leading from the Grecian Archipelago into the sea of Marmora, which separates Europe from Asia. The name is sometimes, but erroneously, applied to the strait itself.

DARFOON, or DARFUR, a kingdom of N. Africa, on the borders of Nubia and Negroland, between Bournou and Abyssinia, governed by a chief who calls himself sultan, and assumes the most extravagant titles. The wild animals are the lion, leopard, hyæna, wolf, and buffalo. The domestic animals are camels, goats, sheep, and horned cattle. Considerable quantities of grain of different sorts are raised, and, after the tropical rains, the fertility is sudden and great. The people are very barbarous, consisting of native tribes, of a deep black complexion, and woolly hair, though with features different from those of the Negroes, and of Arabs of various tribes.

Polygamy is not only established, but the intercourse of the sexes is totaly destitute of decency. The most severe labours of the field are left to the women; and the houses, which are of clay, covered with thin boards, are chiefly built by them. Salt is the general medium of commerce here, as gold-dust is in many other parts of Africa. Caravans travel between this country and Egypt. Pop. not above 200,000. Cobbe is the capital, in the lat. of 13. 40. N. and 28. 30. of E. long. Pop. 6000.

DARIEN, GULF and ISTHMUS OF, at the N. W. extremity of the Colombian republic of New Granada. The gulf runs inland to the S. about 80 m., is from 20 to 30 m. wide, and quite open to navigation. At its head, on the western side, is the delta of the great river Atrato, which flows in a northerly direction. On the western coast of the isthmus is a large bay, called the Gulf of San Miguel, terminating in Darien harbour, formed by the mouth of the Tuyra river. The isthmus itself was colonised by an ill-fated expedition of Scotchmen, in 1699, since which, till recently, no European has explored it. It is now of great interest, as being the only probable site for a ship canal to unite the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. But the scheme is found to be impracticable, from the height of the cordillera in the northern part. The probable best scheme is that of Mr. Kelley of the U.S., who proposes to improve the entrance of the Atrato on the Atlantic side, ascend this river to an affluent on the W., the Truando, whence it is to be deepened for 25 m., with a tunnel 3 m. long to the Pacific. The climate of the isthmus is most deadly to Europeans, and the few Indian inhabitants exceedingly hostile. See PANAMA, TEHUANTEPEC, and NICARAGUA.

DARIEN, a town of the state of Georgia, in McIntosh county, seated on the Alatomaha, not far from its mouth, and 47 miles S.S.W. of Savannah. It has a considerable trade in cotton. Long. 81. 14. W. lat. 31. 23. N.

DARKE, a frontier county of the state of Ohio, bordering on Indiana. It is about 33 miles from N. to S., and 22 wide. Pop. 13,282. Chief town, Greenville; 70 miles W. by N. of Columbus. Pop. 2006.

DARLSTON, a parish of Staffordshire, England, contiguous to the great coal district of WEDNESBURY, which see.

DARLINGTON, a town in the county of Durham, with a market on Monday. The manufacture of linen, though now declined, is still considerable; woollen yarn is also made, and several other branches of trade flourish. The church has a handsome tower. The Great North of England Railway passes Darlington. It is seated on the Skerne; 19 miles S. of Durham, and 241 N. by W. of London.

DARMSTADT, the capital and seat of government of the landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, in the circle of the Upper Rhine. It is seated on the banks of the river Darm, contains several public buildings, and a population of about 23,000. It is about 18 miles S. of Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and the same distance S. E. of Mentz.

DANNEY, a town of France, in the department of Vosges; 21 miles W. S. W. of Epinal.

DAROCA, a town of Spain, in Aragon, with seven parish churches, one of which is collegiate. It stands between two hills, on the Xiloca; 48 miles S. S. W. of Saragossa.

DARRAWAY, a town of Hindostan, in the country of Tatta, at the mouth of a river of the same name, a branch of the Indus; 74 miles W. S. W. of Tatta. Long. 67. 31. E. lat. 24. 32. N.

DART, a river in Devonshire, which rises at the foot of Dartmoor Hills, crosses Dartmoor to Ashburton and Totness, where it is navigable for small vessels, and enters the English Channel at Dartmouth.

DANTFORD, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday; seated on the river Darent. Here was a celebrated nunnery, which Henry VIII. converted into a royal palace, and is now become a gentleman's seat. The first paper-mill in England was erected here by Sir John Spilman, to whom Charles I. granted a patent, with 200*l.* a year to encourage the manufacture. On this river was also the first mill for slitting iron bars to make wire. Dartford is distinguished in English history as the place where, in 1391, the insolence of a taxgatherer to the daughter of Wat Tyler provoked the father's resentment to such a degree, as led to his exciting 100,000 men to arms, who threatened the subversion of the government of Richard II. Tyler was killed by the treachery of the lord-mayor of London. The principal business of the town is connected with its gunpowder-mills, paper, oil, and flour mills, and also large engineering establishments. It is 15 miles E. S. E. of London, on the high road to Dover, and on the North Kent railway.

DARTMOOR, an extensive forest in Devonshire; bounded on the N. by bleak hills, comprising about 53,000 acres, and is watered by the river Dart. Many sheep are bred here, but of a small kind, and black cattle, which thrive well on the coarse herbage.

DARTMOUTH, a borough and seaport in Devonshire; market on Friday. It stands on the side of a craggy hill, by the river Dart, near its entrance into the sea, and has a spacious bay, defended by a castle and strong battery. The dock yards and quay project into the river, and the rocks on each side are composed of a purple-coloured slate. The town contains three churches, and has a considerable trade to the south of Europe and to Newfoundland, as well as a share in the coasting traffic. It was burnt in the reigns of Richard I. and Henry IV. by the French; but they were repulsed in a third attempt afterwards, chiefly by the valour of the women, who fought so bravely, that, after a great slaughter, they took M. Castel, the French general, three lords, and twenty-three knights, prisoners. It is 25 miles S. of Exeter, 204 W. S. W. of London, and returns one member to parliament.

DARTMOUTH, a seaport in Massachusetts, in Bristol county; situate on the Acushnet, falling into Buzzard's Bay; 70 miles S. of Boston. Long. 70. 52. W. lat. 41. 37. N.

DARTON, a town in Yorkshire; 3 miles N. of Barnsley, and 175 from London.

DARWAR, a fortress of Hindostan, in the country of Sanore; taken from Tippee by the British in 1791, and afterwards restored to the Mahrattas. It is 45 miles W. N. W. of Sanore, and 90 E. of Goa.

DARWEN, UPPER and LOWER, two townships in the parish of, and contiguous to, Blackburn, Lancashire. See BLACKBURN.

DASSEL, a town of Germany, in the principality of South Calenberg; 48 miles S. by W. of Hanover.

DAUPHIN, an interior county of Pennsylvania; bounded on the W., for about 40 miles, by the Susquehanna river, being about 20 miles in mean breadth. The Blue Mountain ridge intersects this county from W. to N. by E. Pop. 30,118. Harrisburg, 97 miles W. N. W. of Philadelphia, is the chief town and seat of government of the state.

DAUPHINE, a late province of France, extending 40 leagues from N. to S. and 36 from E. to W.; bounded on the W. by the Rhone, N. by the Rhone and Savoy, S. by Provence, and E. by the Alps. The heir apparent of the kings of France derived the title of dauphin from this province. Two-thirds of Dauphiné are intersected by mountains, which afford good pasturage; plenty of timber, fir-trees in particular, for the building of ships; and very scarce simples. In these mountains, which are branches of the Alps, are bears, chamois, marmots, eagles, hawks, &c., and mines of iron, copper, and lead. The valleys afford wheat, and the hills in the vicinity of the Rhone, excellent wines, olives, and silks. The principal rivers are the Rhone, Durance, Isere, and Drome. It now forms the departments of Drome, Isere, and Upper Alps.

DAVENTRY, a town in Northamptonshire, governed by a mayor; with a market on Wednesday, and formerly a manufacture of whips, but now a small trade in shoes is the only one. It stands on the Roman highway called Watling-street, on the side of a hill; 16 miles W. of Northampton, and 72 N. W. of London, 5 miles from Weedon on the North Western Railway. It is distinguished for its cheese fairs in April and October.

DAVID'S, ST., a city of South Wales, in Pembrokeshire, with a market on Wednesday. It was formerly an archbishop's see, and, in King Arthur's days, the metropolitan of the church of South Wales, and continued so till King Henry I., at which time Bernard, who was the forty-seventh archbishop of St. David's, became suffragan to the see of Canterbury. The situation of the town being very unhealthy, and the soil of the adjacent country very barren, it has nothing now to boast of but its cathedral, which is 300 feet long, and about 127 high, and supposed to be the highest in Britain; though the E. end is in ruins, the western part and choir are in good repair. St. David's is at present a bishop's see, yet only a single street of miserable cottages. It is seated on the Illen, near the coast; 24 miles N. W. of Pembroke, and 255 W. by N. of London.

DAVID, St., a village of Scotland, in the parish of Dalgety, Fifeshire, with a harbour in Inverkeithing bay. It has a considerable manufacture of salt, and exports an immense quantity of coal.

DAVID, FORT ST., an English fort on the coast of Coromandel, which was taken and destroyed by the French in 1758, and has not yet been rebuilt. It is 80 miles S. of Fort St. George.

DAVIDSON, an interior county of the state of Tennessee, about 30 miles square. It is intersected, from E. to W., by Cumberland river, and contains a population of 30,509. Nashville, on the S. bank of the river, is the chief town.

DAVIES, an interior county of the state of Indiana; 25 miles from S. to N., and 15 wide, intersected by White River, which falls into the Wabash. Pop. 6720.

DAVISS, a county in the western part of Kentucky; bounded on the S. and W. by Green river, and on the N. by the Ohio, which separates this county from the state of Indiana. Owenboro', on the S. bank of the Ohio, is the chief town. Another town, called Vienna, is seated on the N. bank of Green river. The extent of this county is about 25 miles each way. Pop. 8331.

DAVIS' STRAITS, an arm of the sea between Greenland and North America, discovered by Captain Davis in 1585, when he attempted to find a N. W. passage. This sea comprises a space between the lat. of 58. and 68., N. and from 50. to 70. of W. long., and is the entrance to Baffin's Bay.

DAVOS, a town of Switzerland in the canton of Grisons, capital of a district in which are mines of copper, lead, and silver. It is 14 miles E. of Coire.

DAWLISH, a village pleasantly situated near Teignmouth, on the shore of the English Channel, in Devonshire. It is a good deal frequented in the summer season for sea-bathing.

DAX, or DACQS, a town of France, in the department of Landes; and lately a bishop's see. Here are some famous hot baths, the spring of which discharges 36 cubic feet of water in a minute. It is surrounded by walls, flanked with towers, and seated on the Adour; 24 n. N. E. of Bayonne. It is the seat of a prefect, and contained, in 1836, 4776 inhabitants.

DAYTON, a town of the United States, capital of Montgomery county, Ohio, on the Great Miami river. In and near the town are four cotton factories, a gun-barrel factory, an iron foundry, an extensive paper-mill, and numerous other branches of industry, which render it a busy place. It has ten churches, and other public buildings, and is connected with Cincinnati by the Miami canal. It is 68 miles S. by W. of Columbus. Pop. in 1840, of the township, 6067, and of the town in addition, 4268.

DEAD SEA, the ancient Lacus Asphaltites, a lake of Palestine, celebrated in sacred history. It is called by the Arabs Bahr Lout, or the Sea of Lot, from its having been the site of the cities of the plain, Sodom, Gomorrah, Zeboim, &c. Up to a recent period our knowledge of this interesting locality was limited to the observations of those numerous travellers who had visited its shores, but who had no means of inquiring into its actual features. Many of the received opinions have been found to be erroneous: that its waters are fatal to fish, and its exhalations to birds in flying over it, &c. but these statements have been disproved. Its waters are intensely salt, bitter, and nauseous, though exceedingly limpid. From its great density and its peculiar locality, its surface is not moved by a slight breeze; hence from its stillness, and the absence of living things, it derives its name. But the waves which are raised on it are most furious, and would be destruction to any slight boat sailing on it. It is about 55 miles in length, and 20 in breadth. The most remarkable feature is its great depression below the level of the Mediterranean. This was first suspected and ascertained in 1838, and the repeated measurements between that and 1846, give an average of 1416 feet below the level of the sea. Another measurement gives 1312 feet. Its extraordinary depth is also another remarkable feature. It is divided into two portions, the principal to the N. separated by a peninsula from the southern and smaller part. The bottom of the northern part is nearly a level plain, at a depth of 1200 or 1300 feet below the surface of the water, and is covered with crystals of pure salt. The southern part is as shallow as the other is deep, not exceeding 18 feet. The shores of the northern portion consist of nearly perpendicular hills, 1200 or 1500 feet high on the W. side down to the water's edge, and still higher mountains on the E. side, presenting a desolate, barren, and scorched aspect. Near the mountain of Uzdom (Sodom) the American expedition in 1848 saw a large, rounded, turret-shaped column, of solid rock salt, capped with crystallized carbonate of lime; and Lieut. Molyneux in 1847 observed a curious broad strip of foam, extending in a straight line N. and S. throughout the whole length of the sea, some miles to the W. of the direction of the Jordan. It has no visible outlet, and receives six streams besides the Jordan, but gives none. Asphaltum, (or Jew's pitch) is found floating on its waters, and shells are found on its beaches. South of the lake is the remarkable valley of El Ghor, extending in a S. direction to the Red Sea, and of which the valley of the Jordan to the N. is a continuation. The Jordan, which has been ascertained to meander above 200 miles in its course, has the extraordinary fall of above 1000 feet from Lake Tiberias. The whole of the natural features of this most interesting region afford incontrovertible testimonies to the truth of Holy writ. See JORDAN. From Jericho, towards the W. side, the whole way is a succession of terraces, which fall toward it; and it is 17 miles W. of Jerusalem, and may be discerned from that city.

DEADMAN'S HEAD, a cape on the S. coast of England in Cornwall, between St. Mawes and Fowey.

DEAL, a town in Kent, with a market on Thursday. It is seated between the North and South Foreland, and is a member of the cinque port of Sandwich; governed by a mayor. It has no harbour, but the sea between the shore and the Goodwin Sands, called the Downs, is generally a secure road for ships, where they usually ride at their leaving or entering the river Thames. The port is defended by two castles, Deal, or Walmercastle, to the S., and Sandown castle to the N.; and also by several batteries. Deal has long been famed for its intrepid and skilful pilots. The Goodwin Sands are an extensive and very dangerous quicksand, lying off this town, and which, with westerly winds, are a serious obstruction to the navigation. The town of Deal is 9 miles N. of Dover, and 74 E. by S. of London.

DEAN, a celebrated forest in Gloucestershire, which originally included all that part of the country which lies between the Severn and the shires of Monmouth and Hereford, and contained 4 market towns and 23 parishes. It is fertile in pasture and tillage, bears very fine oaks, and has rich mines of iron and coal. It was once reckoned the chief support of the English navy; but, having been much thinned by frequency of felling, and narrowed by increase of cultivation, it was near losing all features of its former character, until within the present century, when a still extensive tract, containing a population exceeding 7000, has been replanted and replenished with deer, and divided into six walks, extra-parochial, over which proper rangers have been appointed. There is a village without the boundary of the present forest, 1 mile N. of Nownham, called Little Dean, and contiguous with Mitchel Dean, at which a market was formerly held on Mondays.

There are 10 other villages in different parts of England name Dean, all inconsiderable.

DEARBORN, a frontier county at the S. E. extremity of the state of Indiana. Lawrenceville, the principal town, is seated on a point of land formed by the junction of the Miami with the Ohio river. The county is about 30 miles from S. to N., and 15 in mean breadth. The N. E. part borders on the state of Ohio, and the S. E. on that of Kentucky. Pop. 19,327.

DEARBORN. This name, after one of their military officers, the United States' government has also given to one of the head water branches of the Missouri river, in the lat. of 46. N. and 34. to 36. of long. W. of Washington.

DEARBORNVILLE, a village of the state of Michigan, on the S. branch of the Range river. There is an arsenal of the United States situated here; 10 miles W. of Detroit.

DEBA, a town of Thibet, Asia, standing 14,924 feet above the level of the sea; it contains many temples. The houses are built of stone.

DEBALPOOR, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district in the country of Moultan. It is situate on the great road from Delhi to Moultan, near the river Setlege; 80 miles S. of Lahore, and 170 E. by N. of Moultan. Long. 73. 32. E. lat. 30. 5. N.

DEBEN, a river in Suffolk, which rises near Debenham, and flows to Woodbridge, where it expands into a long narrow arm of the German Ocean, a little to the N. of Harwich.

DEBENHAM, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday; seated on the side of a hill, near the source of the Deben; 24 miles E. of Nury St. Edmunds, and 83 N. E. of London.

DEBRECZIN, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a district of the same name, and one of the most populous and important trading towns in all Hungary. It is one of the most singular places in Europe; notwithstanding its size it resembles a large village rather than a town. Shoes, tobacco pipes, and red-clay pipe bowls, soap, prepared sheep-skins, are its principal manufactures. It has an immense fair every three months. The principal portion of the population are Magyars, and amount to 45,730, chiefly Calvinists. It was taken by the Turks in 1684, and the Austrians retook it the same year. It is 107 miles E. of Buda. Long. 21. 6. E. lat. 47. 30. N.

DECATUR, a frontier county of the state of Indiana, lying between Tennessee river and the state of Tennessee, and another in Georgia.

DECCAN, an extensive tract in Hindostan, which, from the signification of its name, the South has been supposed to include the whole region S. of Hindostan Proper. But, in its more accepted sense, it contains only the countries situate between Hindostan Proper and what is termed the Peninsula; namely, the provinces of Candesh, Dowlatabad, Visiapour, the North part of Golconda, Berar, Orissa, and the Circars. It is bounded on the N. by the river Nerbudda, by Bengal, and by Bahar; and the river Kistna forms its separation on the S. from what is called the peninsula of Hindostan. All this vast country was once the southern province of the Moguls, who did not pass the Kistna till a recent period. Candeish, Visiapour, and a part of Dowlatabad, Berar, and Orissa are subject to the Mahrattas. The English have part of Orissa and of the Circars, the dominions of the Nizam of the Deccan comprising Golconda, the principal part of Dowlatabad, and the western part of Berar. His territories are bounded on the N.W. by the Poonah Mahrattas, N. by the Berar Mahrattas, E. by the Circars, and S. by the Carnatic and Mysore. By a family succession in 1780, the Nizam became possessed of the districts of Adoni and Tachore, and of the Gunto or Circar; and by the peace of 1792, and partition of 1799, he had a share of the countries belonging to Tipoo Sultan, including Koppal, Cuddapa, Gangecola, Gooty, and Gurumonda. His dominions, without including the cessions, are supposed to be 430 m. from N.W. to S.E. by 300 wide. The capital is Hyderabad.

DECIZE, a town of France, in the department of Nievre; seated on an island, at the conflux of the Airon with the Loire; 16 m. S.E. of Nevers.

DECKENDORF, a town of Lower Bavaria; seated on the Danube; 27 miles N. W. of Passau.

DEDDINGTON, a town in Oxfordshire, with a market on Saturday; 16 miles N. of Oxford, and 69 W.N.W. of London.

DEDHAM, a town in Essex, with a market on Tuesday, and a manufacture of baize. It has an ancient large church, with a curious steeple, and a free grammar-school, endowed by Queen Elizabeth. It is seated on the Stour; 5 miles N.N.E. of Colchester, and 58 N.E. of London.

DEDHAM, a town of Massachusetts, chief of Norfolk county; seated on Charles river; 11 miles S.W. of Boston.

DEE, a river of Wales, held in great veneration by the ancient Britons, and the theme of many a poet since. It issues from the Lake of Bala, in Merionethshire, whence it flows through a fine vale across the S. part of Denbighshire to the N.W. part of Shropshire, its the W. border of Cheshire, passes on to Chester, and flows thence to the Irish sea, making a broad estuary, which separates Cheshire from Flintshire. The Dee is navigable from near Ellesmere, in Shropshire, to Chester, where the continuity of the navigation is broken by a ledge of rocks, running across the river; but by embankments made here, much land has been gained from the tide; and a narrow channel, fitter for navigation, has been formed from Chester half-way to the sea. See CHESTER.

DEE, a river of Scotland, which rises on the W. border of Aberdeenshire, amid the mountains of Mar forest, and flows E. through a wild country, till it reaches the fertile vale of Braemar, whence it proceeds to Aberdeen, below which it enters the German Ocean.

DEE, a river of Scotland, which rises in the W. part of Kirkcudbrightshire, receives the Ken below New Galloway, and runs into the Irish Sea, 5 miles below Kirkcudbright.

DEEPING, or MARKET DEEPING, a town in Lincolnshire with a market on Thursday, seated on the banks of the river Welland, in a fenny country; 6 miles E. of Stamford, and 90 N. of London.

DEEPING, ST. JAMES'S, contiguous to the above.

DEER, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, on a river of its name; 10 miles W. of Peterhead. It has a trade in fine yarn, and near it are the remains of the abbey of Deer.

DEERFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampshire county, seated on the Connecticut, near the influx of the river Deerfield; 15 miles N. of Northampton, and 80 W. by N. of Boston.

There are five other towns of the same name in different parts of the United States of North America.

DEERHURST, a village in Gloucestershire: 3 miles S. of Tewkesbury; subject to frequent inundations from the Severn. Here was a celebrated monastery, which was afterwards made a cell to Towkesbury Abbey.

DEER ISLAND, in Penobscot Bay, state of Maine, containing about 1100 inhabitants.

DEFIANCE, a town of Ohio, at the junction of the Maumee and Auglaize rivers. It is well seated for commerce, though now but a small place, being on the Wabash and Erie canal, and at the junction of the Miami and Wabash canals; 152 miles N. W. of Columbus. Pop. 944.

DEIZABAD, a town of Persia, in Irac Ajemi; 90 miles N. of Ispahan.

DE KALB, a county in the northern part of the state of Georgia, and traversed by the Georgia railroad; capital Deconter. Pop. in 1840, 10,467, including 2004 slaves.

DE KALB, a county of Alabama, on the Tennessee River. Capital, Lebanon. Pop. 5929.

DE KALB, a county of Indiana, producing tobacco and grain. Capital, Smithville. Pop. 5868. Also a county in Indiana. Capital, Auburn. Pop. 1968.

DELAGOA, a bay on the E. coast of South Africa, at the N. end of the country of Natal. It is frequently visited by vessels employed in whale fishery. Long. 32. 0. E. lat. 26. 0. S.

DELAWARE, a town of Virginia, in King William county; seated on the broad peninsula formed by the confluence of the Pamunkey and Mattaponi, whose united streams hence assume the name of York river. It is 20 m. N. by W. of Williamsburg, and 45 W. of Richmond.

DELAWARE, a river of the United States, formed of two streams in the state of New York, in the lat. of 42. 30. N. In its course S. it separates, for about 50 miles, the N.E. part of Pennsylvania from New York, and afterwards, for about 100 miles in a direction due S. it separates Pennsylvania from New Jersey, and, a few miles below Philadelphia, the state of Delaware from New Jersey, till it enters the head of Delaware Bay, at Bombay Bar, in the lat. of 39. 15. N., where it is about 5 miles wide. At Philadelphia it has sufficient depth of water for a 74 gun ship; is navigable thence for sloops up to the Falls of Trenton, a distance of about 30 miles; for boats that carry eight or ten tons, 40 miles higher.

DELAWARE BAY, into which the preceding river falls, is formed by Cape Henlopen, on the W. on which is a light-house, in the lat. of 38. 45., and Cape May on the E., in the lat. of 39. N., the two capes being about 18 miles distant, narrowing to about 10 miles at Bombay Bar, which is considered as forming the entrance to the river. The bay, and its entrance, is interspersed with numerous shoals, the ship channel being on the side of Cape Henlopen; and, about midway between Bombay Hook and Philadelphia, the ship channel runs between two small islands, called Pea Patch, on which formerly were two strong forts. At the entrance of the bay, on the S. side, within Cape Henlopen, the United States' government are constructing a magnificent break-water, together 1700 yards long, to form a harbour on the same plan as those of Plymouth and Cherbourg.

DELAWARE, STATE OF, one of the United States of North America, extends from the lat. of 38. 27. to 39. 50. N., being bounded on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, and Delaware Bay, and separated on the S. and W. by conventional lines from the state of Maryland, and on the N. by another conventional boundary from the state of Pennsylvania. At its southern boundary it is about 30 miles wide; but its mean breadth does not exceed 20 m., giving an area of about 2000 square m. It is divided into three counties, NEWCASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX; Kent subdivided into five, and the other two counties each into ten (hundreds of) townships. The first permanent settlers from Europe on this part of the western continent were Swedes, who emigrated in 1627, and who made considerable progress in colonization, the Indians receding westward into Indiana, (see DELAWARE COUNTY, INDIANA,) when, in 1655, their authority was extinguished by the Dutch, who, in their turn, surrendered to the English in 1664. The Dutch, however, gained an ascendancy in 1673, but in the following year the three counties were confirmed to England by treaty. In 1682, it was granted by Charles II. to the then Duke of York, who in the same year transferred it to William Penn, who landed at Newcastle on the 24th of October, and, from that time to the period of the American revolution, it formed part of the state of Pennsylvania, under the title of the Three Lower Counties upon Delaware. In 1704, however, a separate house of assembly was established, but under the same government as Pennsylvania. It was one of the first sections of the then British possessions to assert its independence, which was established in 1776 under the executive authority of a president and privy council of four members. In 1792 a new constitution was adopted similar to the other states of a governor, senate, and house of assembly. The population, which in 1790 was 59,094, is 78,058, of whom 2605 are slaves; at the former period there were 8887 slaves, and 3889 free blacks. Dover, nearly in the centre of the state is the seat of government. For other towns, rivers, local relations, productions, manufactures, &c. &c., see each of the three counties, under their respective heads.

DELAWARE is also the name of five counties in the different states of North America, as follows:—

1. In the state of New York, bordering on Pennsylvania, in which the Susquehanna as well as the Delaware rivers both have their source. It is a somewhat mountainous district, but its fertility and local advantages may be inferred from its increase of population, which in 1800 was 10,281, and is now 35,390. Delhi is the chief town.

2. In Pennsylvania, bounded on the S. by the state of, and E. by the river, Delaware, and N. by the county of the city of Philadelphia. It is the smallest county in the state. Pop. 19,791. Chester, 15 miles S.W. of Philadelphia, is the chief town.

3. In the centre of the state of Ohio, intersected by the Scioto river, and Walnut, Alum, and Whetstone creeks. It is a square of about 28 miles each way. The pop., which in 1810 was only 2000, is 22,060. The chief town, of the same name, is seated between the main branch of the Scioto and Whetstone Creek, 25 miles N. of Columbus.

4. An extensive tract in the centre of the state of Indiana, extending 100 miles from S. to N., and 70 from E. to W. White River, the head waters of which are occupied by the Delaware Indians, has its source in the N. part of this county, and Indianopolis, nearly in its centre, has been adopted for the seat of government of the state. Pop. 9683.

And 5. A thinly populated county in Iowa, with only 168 inhabitants.

DELFT, a town of South Holland, well built, with canals in the streets, planted on each side with trees. Here are two churches, in one of which is the tomb of William I. Prince of Orange, who was assassinated. It has a fine arsenal, and once had a considerable manufacture for earthenware, but now, nearly all the "Delft ware" in use on the continent, is imported from England. Delft is the birthplace of the renowned Grotius. It is seated about midway between Rotterdam and the Hague. Pop. in 1837, 15,987.

DELFTSHAVEN, a fortified town of South Holland, on the N. side of the Maase, with a canal to Delft. It is between Rotterdam and Schiedam, about 3 miles from each.

DELFTZYL, a town and fortress of Holland, in Groningen, with a good harbour. It is seated on the Demster, at its entrance into the mouth of the Ems; 12 miles W. by S. of Emden. Long. 6. 58. E. lat. 58. 18. N.

DELHI, a province of Hindostan; bounded on the N.W. by Lahore, N.E. by Serinagur, E. by Gunshal, &c., S. by Agra, and W. by Moultan. Having been the seat of continual wars above 60 years previous to 1806, when it fell under the influence of the English, it had become almost depopulated; and a tract of country that possessed every advantage that could be derived from nature, contained the most miserable of inhabitants. The country is level, arid and sandy. It is susceptible of very great improvement by irrigation. The British government have therefore paid great attention to the restoration of the ancient canals, and the construction of new ones. Prosperity has therefore been restored.

DELHI, the capital of the province of the same name. It is the nominal capital of all Hindostan, and was actually so during the greatest part of the time since the Mahomedan conquest in 1193. In 1738, when Nadir Shah invaded Hindostan, he entered Delhi, and dreadful were the massacres and famine that followed: 100,000 of the inhabitants perished by the sword; and plunder to the amount of £62,000,000 was said to be collected. The same calamities were endured in 1761, on the invasion of Abdalla, king of Candahar. In 1803 the Malirattas, aided by the French, got possession of this place; but they were afterwards defeated here by General Lake, and the aged Shah Aulum, emperor of Hindostan, was restored to his throne. On May 11, 1857, the native troops mutinied, and the English residents were murdered, under circumstances of the deepest atrocity, beneath the walls of the palace and under the eye of the king. The British forces laid siege to the city, and the mutineers held out stubbornly till the following September, when, on the 14th, the place was stormed with great heroism, and finally captured on the 20th. The aged king was transported to Rangoon. There are many splendid remains of palaces, with baths of marble. The grand mosque is a magnificent edifice of marble and red freestone. At Cuttab Minor, 15 miles S.W. of the city, is a noble monument, 242 feet high, built by the khan Cuttabadeen, in 1194, to commemorate his conquest of Delhi, which is seated on the W. bank of the Jumna, 350 miles N.W. of Allahabad, and 1500 N.W. of Calcutta. Long. 77. 40. E., lat. 28. 37. N.

DELHI, the chief town of Delaware county, in the state of New York, seated on the N. bank of the Mohawk branch of the Delaware river; 70 miles W.S.W. of Albany. Pop. 2554.

DELITZ, a town and castle of Upper Saxony, in Misnia. Great quantities of worsted stockings are made here. It is 15 miles N. by E. of Leipsic.

DELLAMCORTA, a fortress of the country of Bootan, which commands the principal pass over the mountains. It was taken by storm in 1773, by a detachment under the command of Captain John Jones. It is 55 miles S.S.W. of Tassasudon, and 200 N. of Moorshedabad. Long. 88. 46. E. lat. 27. 2. N.

DELMENHORST, a town of Westphalia, capital of a district in the duchy of Oldenburg; seated on the Delm, near the Weser; 8 miles S.W. of Bremen.

DELOS, or DILI, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, formerly celebrated for the temples of Diana and Apollo, whose birth-place it is said to be. It is 6 miles in circumference, but now little more than a desert rock, covered with ruins, and uninhabited. Long. 25. 12. E. lat. 37. 38. N.

DELPHI, or DELPHOS, a town of European Turkey, in Livadia, once famous for the oracle of Apollo, which people came from all parts to consult. It is seated in a valley near Mount Parnassus; 18 miles W.S.W. of Livadia, and now called Castrì.

DEL REX, a tract of country on the coast of Brazil; about 100 miles wide, and 800 from N. to S., between the mountains of Paraguay and the Atlantic Ocean. At its S. extremity are two lakes, called De los Patos and Mini, each about 160 miles long, and from 10 to 50 broad, with a fort at each end. The principal place on this extensive coast is the island of St. Catherine, in the lat. of 27. 30. S. This coast is now principally included in the province of Rio Grande.

DELSBURG, a town of Switzerland, in the late bishopric of Basil, on the river Birs; 10 miles N.W. of Soleure.

DELTA, a part of Lower Egypt, enclosed between the mouths of the Nile and the Mediterranean; so called, it is supposed by some, from its triangular form, resembling the Greek letter of that name, and by others, as implying a maritime and swampy district; hence the term Delta is now generally applied to the mouths of all great rivers having diverging branches, such as the Indus, Ganges, Mississippi, &c.

DELVINO, a town of Lower Albania, seated about 15 miles from the coast of the Adriatic, opposite Corfu. It is the residence of a pacha, and has about 10,000 inhabitants.

DEMNEA, an interior province of Abyssinia, of which Emfras is the capital, in the lat. of 12. N. and 37. 30. E. long. In the centre of the province is a lake, supposed to be 450 miles in circumference, and containing many islands, one of which is a place of confinement for state prisoners. Its waters appear to form one of the principal sources of the Nile, the Bahr-el-Azrek; but this part of Africa is at present very little known.

d colony of South America, in British Guiana. The entrance to the river is in the lat. of 6. 48. N. and 53. 2. of W. long. It is navigable for about 100 miles inland, and at its entrance forms a very commodious harbour, impeded, however, by a bar, not admitting vessels drawing more than 18 feet of water. The plantations lie on both banks of the river. They were originally formed by the Dutch, but fell into the hands of the English in 1796; restored at the peace of Amiens in 1802; retaken on the renewal of the war in the following year, and confirmed to England at the general peace in 1814; since which the cultivation has been greatly extended, and, next to Jamaica, is now the most populous and productive of all the British colonies in the West Indies and South America. See GUIANA, BRITISH.

DEMIANSKOI, a town of Siberia, in the government of Tobolsk; seated on the Irtysh, at the influx of the Demianha; 100 miles N.N.E. of Tobolsk.

DEMMIN, a fortified town of Anterior Pomerania, seated on the banks of the Ribnitz; 27 m. S. of Stralsund. Pop. about 3000.

DEMONA, a town and fort of Piedmont, on the river Stura; 10 miles S.W. of Coni.

DEMONA VAL. See DIMONA.

DEMOTICA, or DOMOTICA, a town of European Turkey, in Roumelia, where a Greek archbishop resides. It was the residence of Charles XII. for some years; and is situate near the Marisca; 12 miles S. of Adrianople. Pop. about 8000.

DENAIN, a village of France, in the department of Nord, where a victory was gained over prince Eugene, by Marshal Villars, in 1712. It is seated on the Scheldt; 6 miles S.W. of Valenciennes.

DENBIGH, a borough of North Wales, capital of Denbighshire, with a market on Wednesday. Its ruined castle, with its vast enclosure crowning the top of the hill, forms a striking object. Denbigh has a considerable manufacture of gloves and shoes. It is situate on the side of a rocky hill, above the vale of Clwyd, on a branch of the river of that name; 27 miles W. of Chester, 5. S. of St. Asaph, and 218 N.W. of London. It returns one member to parliament, in conjunction with Ruthin, Wrexham, &c.

DENBIGHSHIRE, a county of North Wales, bounded on the N. by the Irish sea, N. E. by Flintshire, E. by Cheshire, S. by Salop, Merioneth, and Montgomeryshires, and W. by the river Conway, which separates it from Caernarvonshire. It is 48 miles long from S. to W., and 20 in its broadest part, but its mean breadth does not exceed 14 miles. Area 405,120 acres. This county contains some picturesque and beautiful scenery; besides the Conway, the Clwyd and Elwy also fall into the Irish sea, whilst the Dee, running in a meandering course from E. to W., intersects all the S. part of the county; and the vale of Clwyd, for 20 miles in extent, is deservedly celebrated for its fertility as well as for its picturesque beauty. Its surplus products consist principally of cattle and butter, a partial supply of grain, some wool, &c. &c. It contains veins of both coal and lead, but the mines are very partially worked. Besides the borough of Denbigh, the other principal towns are Wrexham, Ruthin, Abergely, and Llangollen. It sends two members to parliament.

DENDER, a river of the Netherlands, which rises in Hainault, flows by Lenze, Ath, Lessines, Grammont, Ninove, and Alost, and joins the Scheldt at Dendermond.

DENDERA, a town of Egypt. It was anciently called Tentyra, and, from the ruins that are seen, appears to have been a large city: they consist principally of three temples, whose beautiful remains are the finest in Lower Egypt, and are the first seen in ascending the hill. This place supplies most part of Egypt with charcoal. It is seated near the W. bank of the Nile; 260 miles S. by E. of Cairo. Long. 32. 40. E. lat. 26. 10. N.

DENDERMONDE, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, with a strong citadel. It was taken by the allies in 1706, and the Dutch put a garrison into it as one of the barrier-towns. The French took it in 1745, and again in 1794. It is surrounded by marshes and fine meadows, which can be covered with water: it is seated at the conflux of the Dender with the Scheldt; 16 miles E. of Ghent. Pop. in 1836, 7652. Its name is rendered immortal by Sterne, in his tale of Lefevre.

DENTA, a seaport of Spain, in Valencia. The entrance to the harbour is difficult, and the chief trade is in almonds and raisins. It stands at the foot of a mountain; 47 miles N.E. of Alicante. Long. 0.2. E. lat. 38.50. N.

DENIS, ST., or ST. DENY'S, a town of France, in the department of the Seine. The abbey of the Benedictines, to which the town owes its rise, has the appearance of a palace. Here is an ancient and magnificent church, in which were the tombs of many of the French kings; and in the treasury, among other curiosities, are the swords of St. Louis and the Maid of Orleans, and the sceptre of Charlemagne. In 1793, after the abolition of royalty, the royal tombs in the church were all destroyed; and the name of the town was changed to that of Francade; but, after the re-establishment of the monarchy and catholic religion, St. Denis resumed its former celebrity. It is the seat of a prefect, and seated on the river Crould, near the Seine; 5 m. N. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 9332.

DENMARK, a kingdom of the N. of Europe, lying between the lat. of 53. 34. and 57. 43. N. partly continental and partly insular. The continental part comprises North and South Jutland, Holstein, and Lauenburg; and the insular part, the islands of Zealand, Funen, Laaland, Falster, Bornholm, Femern, &c., all lying between the E. coast of Jutland and Sweden; and, in the Atlantic Ocean, in the lat. of 62., are the Ferro Isles; and, in the lat. of from 64. to 66., Iceland, and several other islands lying off the W. coast of Jutland—all forming a part of the European dominions of the kingdom of Denmark; comprising together an area of about 22,000 square miles of surface. In addition to these, the islands of St. Croix, St. Thomas, and St. John, in the West Indies, are also subject to Denmark. See each part of the kingdom under its respective head. The aspect of the continental part of Denmark is flat and undiversified, containing neither mountains nor rivers of any magnitude. It is largely indented by the sea, and possesses numerous creeks and bays, as well as internal lakes. The only canal of importance is that of Kiel, which will admit vessels of 120 tons burden, and extends from the Baltic to the Eyder at Rendsburge, where the river becomes navigable, thus opening a communication between the two seas, or through 105 miles of territory: it is 22 English miles in length, and 10 feet deep; its breadth at the top is 100 feet, at bottom 54 feet. It was begun in 1777, and completed in 1785, at an expense of 800,000*l.* During the last war, between 3000 and 4000 vessels annually passed through it; but in the time of peace the number is much smaller. The lands are in general in an excellent state of cultivation, and the pasturage is rich: the climate bears a great resemblance to that of Britain.

The Danish community, although its early history is involved in considerable obscurity, appears to have been of Scandinavian origin, and its monarchy ranks among the most ancient, perhaps the most so of any, in Europe, having been contemporary with the proudest epoch of the Roman empire; and their advancement in discipline and arms in the tenth century may be inferred from their irruption into England, in the ninth decennary of that era, and their complete subjection of the country in the early part of the following century. It was not, however, till towards the close of the fourteenth century, that Denmark appears to have obtained a respectable and commanding position in the great European compact, when Norway by inheritance, and Sweden by conquest and cession, in 1397, became united with Denmark under Queen Margaret, whose heroism obtained for her the appellation of the Semiramis of the North; and further, when, in 1448, the royal race of Skioldung became extinct, Christian of Oldenburg succeeded to the crown, by whom Holstein and Sleswick, the southern province of Jutland, also became annexed to the dominions of Denmark. Sweden, however, re-established her independence in 1523, which she has ever since maintained. The doctrines of Luther were early promulgated in Denmark. In 1522 the inhabitants embraced the Confession of Augsburg, and in 1536 the bishops were deprived of their temporal power, and placed on a footing similar to those of England, with the exception of the Danish bishops having no legislative voice. Previously to 1660, Denmark was a limited and elective monarchy, in which year it was made absolute and hereditary, by a revolution almost unparalleled in history. The avarice and contentions of a rival aristocracy led to such oppressions of the people, as induced them voluntarily to resign their liberties into the hands of their sovereign. The turbulent and martial spirit of Charles XII. of Sweden involved Denmark in a state of continual warfare, during the first twenty years of the eighteenth century, which contention terminated in 1720; in which year a treaty of peace was concluded, that continued with but little interruption for about eighty years; during which period the inhabitants of Denmark directed much of their attention to external commerce, which they pursued with considerable success, purchasing from a company of French adventurers the island of St. Croix in the West Indies: formed settlements in the East, at Tranquebar on the Coromandel coast, and at the Nicobar Isles; and a factory at Canton, in China; and, at the close of the century, her commercial navy exceeded 250,000 tons, with a proportionate national marine for its protection. The interruption to the external commerce of Holland and France, by the events of the war with England, commencing in 1793, promised for a time to make Denmark the emporium for all the external commerce of the N. of Europe, which her local and advantageous maritime position at the entrance to the Baltic sea tended much to favour. But unhappily for the Danes, Denmark became involved in the general contention of the time; and in 1801, a British armament frustrated their commercial career by the almost total destruction of their national marine. See COPENHAGEN. The peace of Amiens, and the almost immediate renewal of war, tended to revive the hopes of Denmark for regaining her commercial importance, and great exertions were made to replenish and strengthen her national marine; but the spirit and circumstances of the times were such as to admit of no neutrality; and in 1807, another armament from England annihilated her commercial career, and her power for resuming it. Her possessions both in the East and West all fell into the hands of the English in that year, and Norway was offered to Sweden as a boon to induce that power to join the confederacy against France, with which Denmark had ceased. This proposal being assented to by Sweden, involved Denmark in the political necessity of endeavouring to resist the transfer; but although the efforts made were not inconsiderable, they proved ineffectual. After the battle of Leipsic, however, in October, 1813, which changed the relations of all the states of Europe, it was endeavoured to reconcile Denmark to the transfer of Norway to Sweden, by proposing to cede to Denmark the island of Rugen and Swedish Pomerania; but in the general partitioning which took place after the peace of Paris, in 1814, Norway was confirmed to Sweden, the island of Rugen and Pomerania to Prussia; whilst Denmark was confirmed in the possession of Holstein of Lauenberg, and reinstated in her former possessions in the West Indies.

As sovereign of Holstein-Lauenberg, Denmark is a member of the Germanic confederation, her quota of troops being 3600, occupying the tenth place in the diet, and having three votes; but the question of this sovereignty, the king of Denmark having exercised regal rights over the duchy of Holstein, has led to a civil war, barely suppressed in 1849.

On May 25, 1848, a new constitution was adopted by the Danish diet. This diet, or Volksthing and Landesthing, is composed of 109 members, chosen by the people in Jutland and the islands, 5 in Iceland, 1 in the Feroe Islands, and 32 named by the king; in all, 147. On July 10, 1849, Prussia and Denmark called in the mediation of Great Britain to settle the Schleswig Holstein dispute; an armistice was concluded July 10, 1849, and again July 2, 1850; but difficulties ensued, and hostilities recommenced July 24, 1850.

The following is an estimate of her territory and population: (See also Appendix.)

PROVINCES.	AREA, sq. miles.	Pop. in 1801-3	Pop. in 1834-5

Jutland.	9483	393,142	530,976
Duchy of Sleswick.	3451	276,339	338,132
" Holstein.	3508	3 5,348	435,356
" Lauenburg.	44	—	35,680
TOTAL.	21,856	1,526,661	2,033,265

In 1840 the population of the foregoing territory, including Iceland, was 2,194,950.

The manufactures of Denmark are very limited. The ancient literature of Denmark is rich in the elucidation of Scandinavian antiquity, and their traditions, whilst they vie with the heathen mythology in preposterousness, are exceedingly amusing for their quaintness. For the higher order of mental cultivation, at the present time, there is a university at Copenhagen, on an extensive scale, and under liberal regulations; another at Kiel, in Holstein, and a college at Ovenssee, in the island of Funen. The manners and customs of the superior classes differ but little, whilst the manners of the people at large are more social and orderly than in most parts of Europe. For some time after the adoption of the tenets of Luther, the penal statutes against dissenters were very severe, but the most complete toleration in reference to religious pretensions now prevails.

DENNEWITZ, a village of Braunsburg, where the French experienced a severe defeat in 1813; 2 miles from Jutterbock.

DENNIS, a township on the peninsula of Cape Cod, in Massachusetts. Silt has been long made here by evaporation; and a considerable quantity of shipping is owned here; 81 miles S.E. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 2942.

DENNY, a town of Scotland, Stirlingshire; 30 miles from Edinburgh: it possesses abundance of coal and freestone, and manufactories of woollen cloth and paper.

DENTILA, a country of Western Africa, situated to the W. of Konkodoo. It is famous for its iron, in preparing which the natives employ as a flux the ashes of the bark of the kino tree.

DENTON, a town of Maryland, capital of Carolina county; situated on the E. side of Choptank river; 37 miles S.E. of Chester.

D'ENTRECASTEAUX'S CHANNEL, a strait, on the S.E. coast of Van Diemen's Land; about 30 or 40 miles long.

D'ENTRECASTEAUX'S PORT, or PORT NORTH, a harbour near the S. extremity of Van Diemen's Land.

DEOGUR (the mansion of the gods), a town in the province of Bahar, Hindostan; 170 miles N.N.W. of Calcutta. The name is applied to several hill-forts in different parts of India.

DEOUNELLA, a town of the Mysore, supposed to have been the birthplace of Hyder Ali; it surrendered to the English under Lord Cornwallis, in 1791. It is 20 miles N. by E. of Bangalore.

DEPTFORD, an appendage to the metropolis of England; situate in the county of Kent, on the S. bank of the Thames; the market place is $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. of London Bridge. The town is intersected by a stream called the Ravensbourne, on the banks of which are some extensive flour mills; a bridge over this river, near its entrance into the Thames, connects Deptford with Greenwich on the E. It contains the principal storehouse for victualling the national marine, and also several slips for building and repairing the largest ships of war. It has also two floating docks, a basin, and two ponds for masts, and extensive workshops for the manufacture of cables, anchors, and blocks. In the reign of Henry VIII. a society was incorporated here under the title of the Master, Warden, and Assistants of the Guild of the most glorious and undivided Trinity; which society was invested with the power of examining the masters of the king's ships, the appointment of all pilots, ballasting of all ships in the port of London, and the erecting and maintaining lighthouses, buoys, beacons, &c., in the river Thames, and within certain limits on the E. coast of England. The business of this society was transferred to an elegant edifice in the vicinity of the Tower in London, in 1788; but in 1685 an hospital with 56 apartments, and another in 1788, with 25 apartments, was endowed here for decayed masters of vessels and pilots, and their widows, with very comfortable allowance. Deptford is divided into two parishes, St. Nicholas and St. Paul; the church of the latter, erected in 1730, is an elegant and spacious structure. With the exception of the importance which Deptford derives from its extensive government establishments, it is an uninviting part of the metropolis.

DERA ISMAEL KHAN, an inland town of Afghanistan, capital of the district of Damaun, belonging to the dominion of the Punjaub. It stands in a large wood of date trees, about 100 yards from the W. bank of the Indus, 200 miles W. of Lahore.

DERWENT, a district or khanship in the province of Daghestan, Persia, extending about 20 miles along the W. shore of the Caspian Sea, and 15 miles inland; the chief town, of the same name, which implies a door locked, or an impassable place, is supposed to have been built by order of Alexander of Macedon, as the portal of Persia from the north. The town extends from the shore of the Caspian to the foot of a lofty mountain, and is surrounded by a strong wall flanked with numerous towers; and, to a well organised garrison, might defy any assault. It surrendered to the Russians in 1722, when it was defended by 230 pieces of ordnance; the Russians held it till 1735, since when it has several times changed masters, and, since 1806, has again been occupied by the Russians; the inhabitants of the district, however, acknowledge no sovereignty but their own will, and the town is now deemed but of little importance; it is inhabited by about 900 families—Persians, Tartars, and Armenians: the harbour is nearly choked up. It is in the lat. of 42.8. N. and 48.10. of E. long.

DERBYSHIRE, an interior county of England, extending about 56 miles from N. to S., and 20 in mean breadth, and contains 720,640 acres. The greater part of its W. side is bounded by the river Dove, which divides it from Staffordshire; the N.W. corner is bounded by the county of Chester, and the N. by the county of York; and the counties of Nottingham and Leicester bound it on the E. and S.. The noble river Trent, and the Trent and Mersey canal, intersect the S. end, whilst the Derwent, falling into the Trent, intersects the heart of the county from N. to S.; the N.W. part of the county is mountainous, several of the peaks rising to the height of upwards of 1700 feet; and Holme Moss, the highest point, to 1859 feet above the level of the sea. Near the centre of the county is a rich vein of lead ore (see WIRKSWORTH); it also contains several veins of iron; in the mountainous district of the N.W. corner of the county are several extensive caverns, which attract numerous visitors, and produce a beautiful variety of spar and petrifications, which are extensively wrought into vases and other ornaments.

See PEAR. It abounds also in numerous mineral springs, (See BUXTON and MATLOCK), and parts of the county are esteemed as the most beautifully picturesque of any in the kingdom: the S. part of the county is rich in pasture, and yields a very considerable surplus of cheese and cattle, and other agricultural produce. The county also contains several tan-yards, participates partially in the cotton, silk, and hosiery manufactures, and extensively in the manufacture of nails. See BELPER. Besides the Trent and Mersey canal, already mentioned, another extends from the S. extremity of the county into Warwickshire. Two others, the Derby and Erewash, intersect the S.E. part of the county, another extends from Chesterfield in the N.E. into Yorkshire, and another intersects the mountainous district of the N.W., running through Cheshire into Lancashire. The happy combination of agriculture, mines, and manufactures of the most useful and valuable description in this county, with the great facility of conveyance afforded by its several canals, tend to render it one of the least demoralised and deranged parts of the country. The principal towns in Derbyshire, besides those previously mentioned, are Derby, the county town, Alfreton, Ashborne, Bakewell, Chapel-in-le-frith, Dronfield, and Tideswell. It sends four members to parliament, for the northern and southern divisions.

DERBY, the chief town of the preceding county, is situate on the W. bank of the river Derwent, about 10 miles above its entrance into the Trent; 28 miles N. of Leicester, 15 W. of Nottingham, about 30 E. of Stafford, and 126 N.N.W. of London, on the mail-coach road to Manchester, from which it is distant 60 miles. Derby is a place of considerable antiquity, and was created a royal borough by Edward I., in 1305. It consists of five parishes. The church of All Saints is a stately and elegant structure, having a beautiful Gothic tower 178 feet in height. About the year 1735, an extensive silk-mill was erected here, the model of which was surreptitiously obtained from Italy; it was for many years the only establishment of the kind in England, and is still one of the most extensive; and, in 1750, a porcelain manufacture was established, which is now in high repute for the elegance of its productions. In 1803, a military depôt was established here, suitable for the arming and equipment of 15,000 men, which has since been turned into a silk-mill; and in 1810 a county infirmary was erected on an extensive scale, and rendered very complete in all its interior arrangements. Besides the original silk-mill, Derby has now 16 others, and several for spinning of cotton, on a tolerably extensive scale; four paper-mills, five tan-yards, fourteen malting-houses, and two public breweries; five establishments for the manufacture of silk-stuffs, and six for small wares of cotton, &c.; five for the manufacture of hats, eleven for hosiery, two bleach-grounds, nine manufactures of shot, white-lead, and painter's colours; three soap-houses, five foundries, and seven for working of spar and petrifications into various ornaments; with some of almost every other occupation attendant on an active and social state. This variety of occupation, since the commencement of the present century, has rendered Derby one of the most flourishing towns in the kingdom. A public promenade, or arboretum, has lately been presented to the town, and was opened in 1840. But the principal improvement is its magnificent railway station on the North Midland railway, which is the largest in England: the covered way for the carriages is nearly a quarter of a mile in length, and its other arrangements in a corresponding style of magnitude. The general aspect of the town is respectable, and in its principal part assumes a feature of importance; the county hall, and other county buildings, are stately; it has a spacious assembly-room, and a literary and philosophical society; a range of alms-houses for clergymen's widows, two others for lay persons, and several dissenting places of worship. Derby was formerly surrounded by a wall, and contained a castle and three monasteries, no vestiges of any of which now remain. The Pretender's army from Scotland entered the town in 1745, but withdrew after a very short stay. Derby returns two members to parliament, and holds seven fairs annually, and a weekly market for corn, &c., on Fridays. The river Derwent is navigable from the Trent up to Derby, in a N. N. W. direction, but the town communicates with the Trent and Mersey canal, by a cut in a direction due S., and with the Erewash canal (see EREWASH) in a direction nearly due E., which affords an easy conveyance to all the S.E. parts of the county.

DERBY, WEST, a township, 4 miles N. of Liverpool, Lancashire. See WALTON and LIVERPOOL.

DERBY, a town of Connecticut, in New-haven county; seated on Housatonic, which is navigable hence to the sea; 14 miles N.W. of New-haven.

DERBY, a town of Pennsylvania, in Dauphin county. Here is a cave divided into several apartments, and adorned with stalactites. It is situate on the Swatera, 2 miles above its conflux with the Susquehanna, and 10 S.E. of Harrisburg.

DERBY is also the name of a township in Vermont, on the E. side of Lake Memphramagog, and bounded on the N. by the conventional line which divides the United States territory from Lower Canada.

DEREHAM MARKET, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Friday. The church is a very ancient structure, with four chapels, and a curious stone font. The poet Cowper is interred here. It is sixteen miles west of Norwich, and 101 north-north-east of London.

DERKUS, a town of European Turkey, in Rumania, on the coast of the Black Sea; 30 miles N.N.W. of Constantinople. At some former period a wall appears to have extended from this place to Erekli, 100 miles W. of Constantinople, on the coast of the sea of Marmora.

DERRY. See LONDONDERRY.

DERVEL, a town of Ayrshire, Scotland. Here are extensive lime-works, collieries, and manufactories.

DERWENT, the name of four rivers, in different parts of England: 1st, rising in the Peak district of Derbyshire, and, after a course of about 50 miles, in a direction S.E. by E., falls into the Trent, about 10 miles below the town of Derby, from whence it is navigable; 2nd, rises near Whitby, in the N. Riding of Yorkshire, and, after a winding course of about 25 miles, is joined by the Rye, when the united stream runs nearly due S. for about 35 miles, falling into the Ouse, about 6 miles below Selby; 3rd, rises at the foot of Kilhope Law Mountain, and for about 15 miles, in an irregular course, forms the boundary between the counties of Durham and Northumberland, when it intersects, for about 7 miles, the N.W. corner of the former county, falling into the Tyne about 5 miles above Newcastle; 4th, rises on the border of Westmoreland, intersects the S.E. part of the county of Cumberland, and after a course of about 30 miles, through Derwent and Basenthwaite waters, and past Cockermouth, falls into the Solway Frith at Workington; this river abounds in excellent fish.

DERWENT-WATER, near to Keswick, in Cumberland; is of an oval form, 3 miles in length, and a mile and a half wide. It is surrounded by rocky mountains, broken into many fantastic shapes. The precipices seldom overhang the water, but are arranged at some distance; and the shores swell with woody eminences, or sink into green pastoral margins. The lake contains five islands; one of which, near the centre, is famous for having been the residence of St. Herbert, the ruins of whose hermitage are yet remaining.

DESAGUEDERO, a river and lake of the La Paz, Upper Peru, communicating with the S. end of the lake Titicaca.

DESEADA, or DESTRADA, a small island, 2 leagues E. of Guadaloupe, of the French West Indies. It rises with a steep ascent, and then spreads into a tableland of lime-stone rocks, in which caverns occur; it is without water. Pop. 1568, including 1070 negroes, who have been set free by the new French Republic. It was the first land-mark of Columbus on his second voyage. Lat. 16. 40. N. and 61. 20. of E. long.

DESEADA, CAPE, the N.W. point of Terra del Fuego, forming the S.W. point of entrance into the Straits of Magellan from the Pacific Ocean. Lat. 53.48. and 74. 18. of W. long.

DESEADA RIVER. See PORT DESAIRE.

DES MOINES, a county of the state of Iowa, on the W. side of the Mississippi. It consists of timber and prairie in due proportion. Burlington is the capital. Pop. in '1840, 5577.

DES MOINES, a river of Iowa, forming its boundary with the state of Missouri. It rises in the Côteau des Prairies and enters the Mississippi, and is navigable for 100 miles.

DE SORO, a county of Mississippi state, United States, drained by the Coldwater and other rivers. Capital, Hernando. Pop. in 1840, 7002, including 3021 slaves.

DESSAU, a strong town of Upper Saxony, capital of the principality of Anhalt-Dessau. It has manufactures of cloth, stockings, and hats; and is seated on the Mulda, at its conflux with the Elbe, 37 miles N. of Leipsic. Pop. in 1837, 11,749.

DETMOLD, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Lippe, with a fortified castle; seated on the river Wehern; 17 miles N.N.W. of Paderborn. Pop. about 2400.

DETROIT, a city of the United States, capital of Wayne county, Michigan. It is pleasantly seated in a healthy situation on a river or strait of the same name, that forms a communication between the lake of St. Clair and Lake Erie. On the river the plan of the city is rectangular for 1200 feet back. From this point 8 avenues radiate from an open area called the Grand Circus, and divides the town into triangular portions. There are several public squares, and the city is well drained by sewers. The State Houses, the City Hall, and its 11 churches, are, many of them, fine buildings. Detroit is admirably situated for trade. The navigation is open for 8 months in the year, and many of the largest class of steamers belong to this place. The central railroad from Detroit to Ann Arbor is finished 44 miles. The city was incorporated in 1815, and has several times suffered severely from fire. It is 302 miles W. of Buffalo, 18 miles above the W. end of Lake Erie, and 524 from Washington. Lat. 42. 19. 53.; 82. 58. W. long. Pop. in 1810, 770; 1820, 1422; 1830, 2222; 1840, 9102.

DETTENHEIM, a small town of Bavaria, in the district of Pappenheim, in the circle of the Upper Danube; it is seated on the E. bank of the Altmuhl, and is remarkable as the place from near which Charlemagne, in the 8th century, undertook to unite by a canal the waters of the Altmuhl with the Rednitz, and thereby the Danube with the Rhine.

DETTLEBACH, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Wurtzburg, now included in the Kingdom of Bavaria. circle of the Lower Maine; seated on the Maine; 8 miles E. of Wurtzburg.

DETTINGEN, a village of Bavaria, in the territory of Hanau, circle of the Lower Maine;

4 miles S.E. of Hanau. Here George II. gained a victory over the French, in 1745.

There are three small towns of this name in the Duchy of Wurtemberg.

DEVA, a town of Spain in Guipuzcoa, on the sea coast, a charming and pleasantly seated town of 3000 souls; 19 miles from St. Sebastian.

DEVA, a considerable town of Transylvania; seated on the S. bank of the Marosch; about 12 miles S.W. of Carlsburgh.

DEVAL COTTY, a town of Upper Hindostan, on the E. bank of the main branch of the Ganges; 10 miles S. of Gangotry, in the lat. of 32. 40. N.

DEVAPRAYAGA, or DEUPRAG, another town of Upper Hindostan, on the E. bank of the Ganges; a few miles S. of SERINAGUR, (which see,) and near the junction of four united streams from the N., with the Ganges, and where the water is esteemed most sacred by the Hindoos. The town contains the celebrated temple of Ramachandra, the resort of numerous pilgrims, who contribute to the support of numerous Brahmins who form the principal population of the town. It suffered considerably by an earthquake in 1803.

DEUCAR, a district of Nepal, bordering on the province of Oude; a town of the same name is about ninety miles N. of the city of Oude.

DEVELTO, or ZAGORA, a town of European Turkey, in Romania, the see of a Greek archbishop; situate on the Paniza, near its entrance into the Gulf of Forus, in the Black sea; 58 miles N.E. of Adrianople, and 106 N.N.W. of Constantinople. Long. 27. 22. E. lat. 42. 35. N.

DEVENISH, a parish of Ireland, county of Fermanagh, situate on Lough Erne, or Holy Island; in this parish stands the most perfect of the ancient Irish pillar towers, 70 feet high, and the ruins of two churches.

DEVENTER, a city of Holland, the capital of Overyssel, with a college. It is surrounded by strong walls, and seated on the Yssel; 50 miles E. of Amsterdam. Pop. 13,639.

DEVERON, a river of Scotland, which rises in the S.E. of Banffshire, and enters the ocean at Banff. It forms the boundary between the counties of Aberdeen and Banff for about 50 miles.

DEVICORTA, a town on the coast of the Carnatic, at the mouth of the Colran, or N. branch of the Cavery river, in the lat. of 11. 40. N. This place surrendered to the English in 1749, and for several years was one of the principal factories of the East India Company on that coast; the entrance to the harbour is impeded by shoals.

DEVIL'S BASON, a harbour in Christmas Sound, at the S. W. extremity of Terra del Fuego, opening into the South Pacific Ocean, in the lat. of 55. 25. S.; the harbour is surrounded by rugged rocks of such a repulsive aspect, and so lofty, as to preclude the rays

DEVIL'S-ASS-O-THE-PEAK, a cavern in the N.W. part of the county of Derby. See PEAK.

DEVIZES, a borough town, in the centro of the county of Wiltshire, England; 88 miles W. by S. of London, on the road to Bath from which it is distant 19 miles. It was a Roman station, and, at a more recent period, had considerable manufactures of worsted stuff; but two public breweries, on no very extensive scale, are now the only source of surplus production. Its corn market, on Thursday, is the most considerable in the county. It is divided into two parishes; has a town-hall and gaol; and sessions for the county are held here annually in January; it returns two members to parliament, and is passed by the Kennet and Avon canal.

DEVONPORT, the principal station of the national navy of England, formerly called Plymouth Dock, (see PLYMOUTH;) but received its present name by mandate of the king, George IV., on January 1st, 1824; it is situate on the S.W. extremity of the county of Devon, at the mouth of the Tamar river, which here forms one of the most commodious harbours in the world. It is a borough, and sends two members to parliament. This spot was first used for a marine station at the close of the 17th century, previous to which, it was a mere fishing village, and it was not till after 1760 that it assumed any thing like importance, whilst during the long war, from 1793 to 1815, it progressively rose to be the most extensive and complete arsenal in the world, the natural advantages having been rendered as convenient as labour and skill could make them. The natural accommodations of Devonport consist of a triple harbour: the outer one is called the Sound;
the first inner one, Catwater; and the upper one, Hamoaze; the Sound was formerly open and exposed to the swells of the Atlantic Ocean, which, during a continuance of S.W. winds, used to subject the anchorage to much inconvenience, and sometimes to danger; but in August, 1812, the first stone was sunk of a breakwater pier, or mole, 5100 feet in length, 4000 feet in a straight line, with an angle inclining into the Sound at each end; this stupendous work is composed of upwards of two million tons of stone, blasted from the adjoining rocks, in pieces of 1½ to 5 tons each, sunk indiscriminately into the water, to work their own position; it is carried up 10 feet above high water mark at its W. end is a beautiful granite lighthouse, and on the E. end a conical stone beacon.
The space within the pier is about 3 miles each way, affording anchorage for 2000 sail of the largest ships, secure from the fury of the ocean, however tempestuous; the ingress and egress being safe and easy at either end of the pier, defended from the land side on the

W. by the rock of St. Carlos, and on the E. by the Shovel rock. The Catwater is formed by the estuary of the little river Plym with the Tamar, and may be regarded as the harbour of the town of Plymouth, and applicable to the commercial intercourse of the port;
whilst the Hamoaze extends inland for about 4 miles, in a direction nearly due N., and about half a mile wide, forming one of the most convenient and beautiful natural basins known in the world, affording moorings for 100 of the largest ships of war, without interruption to the anchorage and movement of numerous other vessels, and with sufficient depth of water to enable ships of the largest burden to take in their stores directly off the quays and jetties that range along its eastern shore; the dock yard extends 3500 feet along the shore, and comprises 96 acres, containing a basin 250 feet by 180, in which are kept the boats and launches belonging to the yard; also two mast ponds, and a canal, which enables vessels bringing stores, to land them at the door intended for their reception; slips and dry docks, for building and repairing of the largest ships of war, range along the shore of Hamoaze, and communicate with the dock basin, by a block of store houses built of stone, 450 feet long, and 300 wide;
two roperies, 1200 feet in length, three stories high, and a smithery containing forty-eight forges, are all included within the yard; the bakehouse, brewhouse, cooperage, slaughter house, hospital, and barracks for 3000 men are without the yard, but contiguous thereto;
all defended on the land side by several batteries, and a line of circumvallation, mounted with numerous cannon, and an outer trench excavated 12 to 20 feet deep, out of the solid rock, forming altogether the most complete and magnificent display of human art and exertion in the world. The parish church is at Stoke, about a mile distant, but the town contains two chapels of ease, and numerous dissenting meeting-houses. Here are also a commodious town-hall, and a public library, besides several other handsome buildings. The column erected to commemorate the name of the town, is a prominent and interesting object. The streets are mostly at right angles, and are well paved. In the census of 1821, the population of Devonport, then Plymouth Dock, was returned with PLYMOUTH, (which see;) the post-office at Devonport is 217½ miles S.W. of Hyde Park Corner, London, by way of Salisbury and Exeter; distant from the latter 45 miles. The block-house flag-staff of the garrison is in lat. of 50. 22. 56.
N. and 4. 9. 11. long. W. of Greenwich.

DEVONSHIRE, a maritime county in the S.W. of England, bounded on the N.E. by the county of Somerset, N.W. by the entrance to the Bristol Channel, W.S.W. by the Tamar river, which divides it from the county of Cornwall, and S. by the English Channel.
Its extreme length from the Start point in the English Channel to Ilfracomb, on the shore of the Bristol Channel, is about 70 m., but its mean length and breadth is about 50 miles, giving the largest area of any county in England, except those of York and Lincoln. It contains 1,654,400 acres, and sends four members to parliament for the northern and southern divisions. It is the fourth county in order of population, and the most agricultural of any in the kingdom; although it has the finest harbour in the world, and several other convenient ones, and intersected by numerous streams, favourable for mill sites, and other manufacturing operations, relatively it is one of the least commercial and manufacturing counties in the kingdom. The S.W. part of the county contains a dreary tract called Dartmoor, containing upwards of 53,000 acres; the highest elevation of this moor is 1549 feet above the level of the sea; the other parts of the county, more particularly the S. and W., are exceedingly fertile. Its principal surface produce is cattle, of a remarkably fine breed, either for dairying or for feeding, and of beautiful symmetry; the N.E. part of the county contains veins of copper, lead, manganese, gypsum, and of loadstone; antimony, bismuth, and cobalt are also found in small quantities; it has also quarries of beautiful marble and granite, none of which, however, are worked to any great advantage. The principal manufactures of the county are serges, kerseys, shal-loons, broad-cloth, blond lace, and porcelain; there is also a considerable ship-building trade at Barnstaple. The woollen cloth manufactures at Tiverton and Great Torrington, and the wool-combing at Chumleigh, were formerly extensive, but have now much decayed or vanished. Besides the Tamar, which divides the county from Cornwall on the S.W., the other principal rivers falling into the English Channel are the Dart and the Exe, and into Biddeford Bay, on the side of the Bristol Channel, the Torridge and the Taw; Devonshire contains one city, Exeter; and eight boroughs, viz., Ashburton, Barnstaple, Dartmouth, Honiton, Plymouth, Tavistock, Tiverton, and Totness, which each return two members to parliament. It contains twenty-five other market towns, and upwards of 400 villages. EXETER, which see, is the seat of assize and other local business of the county.

DEVON, a river of Scotland, which rises in the S.E. part of Perthshire, and, after a course of 40 miles enters the Forth at Clackmannan, only 8 miles distant from its source. In Perthshire it forms some romantic waterfalls, called the Devil's Mill, the Rumbling Bridge, and the Caldroy-linn.

DEUREN, a town of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Juliers, with manufactures of cloth and paper, and some iron works. It is 14 miles E. of Aix-la-Chapelle. Pop. about 8500.

DEUTZ. See DURTZ.

DEUX PONTS, a late duchy of Germany, lying W. of the Rhine; it is about 30 miles in length from N. to S., and 12 in mean breadth, and tolerably fertile. It was ceded to France at the peace of Luneville, in 1802, assigned to Austria at the general partitioning after the peace of Paris, in 1814, and by Austria exchanged with Bavaria for other districts on the E. It now forms part of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine.

DEUX PONTS, the chief town of the preceding district or duchy, is seated at the confluence of the Hornbach with Erlbach, a short distance above the entrance of the united stream into the Blise, near the S. end of the duchy. Its castle, the former residence of the grand duke, is a stately edifice; and it has two spacious churches, an academy, and an orphan house, and was formerly celebrated for a printing establishment, since removed to Strasburg, which produced a valuable edition of the Greek and Latin classics. Pop. 1300; Deux Ponts is 55 miles E. by N. of Metz, and 65 N.W. by N. of Mentz. Lat. 49. 15. N. and 7. 22. of E. long.

DEWANGUNGE, a town of Bengal, on the W. bank of the Burampooter; 110 miles N.N.W. of Dacca.

DEWARCOTE, a town and district of North Hindostan, between the Ganges and Jumna; the town is seated on the W. of the main branch of the Ganges; 175 N. by W. of Delhi, and 90 N.W. of Serin-gapat.

DEWSBURY, or DEWSBURY, a parish and town in the West Riding of Yorkshire, England. The parish includes the townships of Osset, Soothill, and Clifton-cum. The town of Dewsbury is a place of great antiquity, being mentioned as early as 626, when Paulinus, the first archbishop of York, preached Christianity to the inhabitants of the surrounding country; it is now distinguished as the seat of an extensive commerce, having upwards of 50 establishments for the manufacture of blankets, carpets, and other heavy woollen fabrics; and Hecknondwike, adjoining, has 40 other establishments for the like purpose. The cloths made, chiefly of the coarser descriptions, are shoddy fabrics, that is, they are formed from refuse woollen rags, which, being torn to their original state of wool by machinery, are re-spun, and then woven into carpets, druggets, army and navy clothing, &c. &c. It is connected with Leeds, Halifax, Wakefield, &c., by an extensive system of railways. Dewsbury is seated near the N. bank of the Calder river; 5 m. W. by N. of Wakefield, on the road to Halifax.

DEXTER, a town of the state of New York, at the mouth of the Black river, whence is extensive water power, and an uninterrupted navigation to Lake Ontario. The United States' government are constructing piers for the improvement of the harbour. It is of recent origin, but has several factories.

DEXTERVILLE, a village of the state of New York, on the north side of the outlet of Chautauque Lake. It has great water power and furnishes annually a great quantity of timber and wood. It is of recent origin, but promising.

DRYNSE, a town of Flanders; seated on the S. bank of the Lys; 9 miles W.S.W. of Ghent.

DEYRAH, a town of Upper Hindostan, on the frontier of Delhi, in the province of Serinagur.

DESAIGNE, a town of France, in the N. part of the department of L'Ardeche; 23 miles W.N.W. of Valence. Pop. about 3500.

DEZENSANO, a town of Bresciano, situated at the S. end of Lake Garda; 15 miles E. of Brescia. Pop. about 3500.

DEZFUL, a populous town of Persia, in the province of Kurdistan; seated on the banks of the Abzal, over which is an elegant bridge of twenty-two arches. Dezful is 130 miles N. by E. of Bassora; the Abzal falls into the Ahwas, which joins the Tigris, at its junction with the Euphrates. Pop. 14,000.

DIAR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malwa, surrounded by a mud wall. Pop. 37,865.

DIOLFLOOR, a considerable town in the province of Agra, Hindostan, on the river Chambul, between Agra and Delhi.

DIADIX, a town of Armenia; seated near the source of the Euphrates, and frontier of Persia; 80 miles S.S.W. of Ewan.

DIAKOVAR, a town of Selavonia; about 20 miles S.S.E. of Essig, on the road to Brodo. Pop. about 3000.

DIAMOND HARBOUR AND POINT, on the Hoogly river. See CALCUTTA.

DIAMOND ISLE, a small island lying off the S.W. point of Pegu, and S.E. point of the Bay of Bengal, in the lat. of 15. 51. N. and 94. 12. of E. long.

DIAMOND POINT, the N.E. point of the island of Sumatra, at the entrance to the strait of Malacca, in the lat. of 5. 18. N. and 97. 48. of E. long.

DIANO, a town of Naples W. of the Appennines, in Principato Citra; 15 miles N. by E. of Policastro. Pop. about 4500.

DIARBEKIR, a district of Asiatic Turkey, in the province of Algezira, the whole of which, extending from 33. 20. to the lat. of 39. N., was formerly called Diarbekir; and the Pasha, or governor of the province, is still called the Pasha of Diarbekir. It formed the ancient kingdom of Mesopotamia; but the district of Diarbekir is now confined between the 37th and 38th degrees of N. lat.; it lies E. of the Euphrates, and is intersected by numerous streams, forming the head waters of the Tigris. It is beautifully diversified with mountains and valleys, and, to a social people, would form a most delightful residence.

DIARBEKIR, the chief city of the preceding district, or, as it is called by the Turks, Kara Amid, which signifies a black wall, in reference to a lofty wall of black stone with which the city was formerly surrounded, is seated on the banks of the main branch of the Tigris, in the lat. of 37. 55. N. and 39. 22. of E. long.; 570 miles E.S.E. of Constantinople, and 180 N.E. of Aleppo. The pasha resides in an extensive castle on the N. side of the city. Extensive manufactures of silk, wool, cotton, and leather, and in metals, are carried on at Diarbekir; and their dyed fabrics in wool and cotton are justly esteemed for the beauty of their colours. As in most eastern cities, the streets are narrow and dirty, but many of the houses are spacious and elegant within. It contains several commodious bazaars, a magnificent mosque, and also a noble cathedral belonging to the Armenians. As a place of residence to Europeans, it was considered among the most agreeable of all the Turkish cities. The population is estimated at 40,000, consisting of Armenians, Kurds, Christians, Jews, and Turks. But for a period the population and prosperity have declined, from the incursions and depredations of the Kurds.

DICKSON, an interior country in the western part of Tennessee, about 28 miles from N. to S. and 25 in breadth. Duck river, which falls into the Tennessee, washes all the S. part of the country, whilst the E. and W. corners of the N. side jet upon the Cumberland river. Pop. 7074. Charlotte, N. of the mountain ridge, 72 miles W.N.W. of Murfreesboro, is the principal town.

DIPFOLDISWALDA, a town of Saxony, 12 miles S. by W. of Dresden.

DISENTIS, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, with an abbey founded in the seventh century. It is situated near the source of the Lower Rhine; 10 miles W. by S. of Ilantz.

DISILEY, a village in Leicestershire; 2 miles N.W. of Loughborough, rendered famous by a native grazier and farmer, Robert Bakewell, (who died in 1795), from his successful experiments and practices in the improvement of live stock, more particularly sheep.

DISMAL SWAMP, GREAT, extends about 30 miles from N. to S., and 10 broad, between the Chesapeake and Albemarle Sound, partly in Virginia and partly in North Carolina. It derived its name from its dismal aspect, being impervious, in most parts, from trees and brushwood; there is a pond in the centre, about 15 miles in circumference. The territory abounds with noxious reptiles and wild animals. Within the present century a canal has been cut through it from the Elizabeth river, falling into the Chesapeake, to the Pasquotank, falling into Albemarle Sound; this is calculated to change the face and character of the whole territory, but its original dismal features are immortalized by the Irish bard, Moore, in his Epistles from America. There is another swamp between Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds, called the Little Dismal Swamp.

DISS, a town of Norfolk, on the border of Suffolk, with a market on Friday. It is seated on the river Wavoney, on the side of a hill; 19 miles S. of Norwich, and 85 N.N.E. of London.

DISSEN, or TISSEN, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Osnaburgh, where are salt works, which belong to Hanover. It is 16 miles S.E. of Osnaburgh.

DITMARSON, a district of the duchy of Holstein, lying on the coast of the German Ocean, between the rivers Eyder and Elbe; it contains no towns of importance.

DIITTEAH, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Bundelcund, on the frontier of Agra; about 120 miles S. by E. of the city of Agra.

DIU, an island of Hindostan, making the S. point of Guzerat, at the entrance of the Gulf of Cambay, three miles long and one broad. On it is a fortified town, of the same name, built of freestone and marble; and it contains some fine churches, erected by the Portuguese, about the time they took possession of the island in 1515. The trade of the town, once so important, is almost entirely removed to Surat. It is 180 miles W. by S. of Surat, and 200 N.W. of Bombay. Long. 71.5. E. lat. 20.45. N.

DIXAN, a town of Abyssinia, in Tigre, seated on the top of the conical hill, and inhabited by Moors and Christians. Their chief trade is stolen children, and carrying them to a market at Masuah, whence they are sent to Arabia or India. It is 34 m. S. of Masuah.

DIXCOVE, a British fort on the Gold Coast of N. Africa; 40 miles S.W. of Cape Coast castle.

DIXMUNE, a fortified town of Belgium, in Flanders, celebrated for its excellent cheese and butter. It is seated on the Yperlec; 13 miles N. of Ypres, and 11 S. of Ostend.

DIZIER, ST., a town of France, at the N. extremity of the department of the Upper Marne, seated on the Marne; 13 m. N.N.E. of Joinville, and 120 E. of Paris. The Marne is navigable from here to Paris, which renders St. Dizier a place of considerable commerce. Pop. about 6000.

DJEBAIL, GEBAIL, or GEBILE, a town of Syria, seated near the coast, on the site of the ancient Byblos, about 25 m. N. of Berus. It was a place of some importance during the reign of Solomon, the Byblos having had at that time several vessels employed in the conveyance of wood for the building of the temple. The town was taken possession of by the crusaders in 1100, and at present contains from 5000 to 6000 inhabitants.

DJEBEL, or GEBEL HADDA, GEBEL SAADE, and GEBEL AMER KEMIR, places of Mahomedan devotion, S. of Mecca.

DJESIMA, a small island in Japan, before the harbour of Magasaki, in the form of a fan, which is the only spot allowed to the Dutch to trade with that singular people.

DJIDDA. See JIDDA.

DNEFER, or DNEPER, a river of European Russia, (the ancient Borysthenes;) rising near the northern frontier of the government of Smolensk, in the lat. 56. 20. N., and after a course of about 800 m. in a direction nearly due S., falls into the Black sea at Otchakov, in the lat. of 46. 30. N. It is navigable from above the city of Smolensk the whole of its remaining course, but is impeded by rapids within about 200 miles of its entrance into the Black sea; it receives a great number of tributary streams both from the E. and W.; the principal of those on the E. are the Sotz, the Uput, and the Deszna; and from the W. the Berezyna, and the Przypiec; by the latter, and a canal, the waters of the Black sea are made to communicate with the Baltic. See BRZESC.

DNIESTER, a river of Europe, (the ancient Tyras;) rising on the N. side of the Carpathian Mountains in Austrian Galicia, in the long. of 23. E.; and from the long. of 26. 20. to 29. E., in a direction S.S.E., it divides the Polish palatinate of Podolia from Moldavia, when it takes its course nearly due S. for about 100 miles past Bender, and, dividing Bessarabia from the Russian province of Catharinenslaf, falls into the Black sea at Akerman, 100 m. W. of Otchakov; it is navigable the greater part of its course.

DONRZIN, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Ploczko, or Polock; seated on a rock near the Vistula; 14 miles N.W. of Ploczko.

DOCKUM, a town of Holland, in W. Friesland, near the mouth of the river Ee; 10 m. N.E. of Lewarden.

DODBROOK, a town of Devonshire, with a market every third Wednesday, and noted as being the first place where white ale was brewed; 208 miles W.S.W. of London.

DODGE, a county of the state of Wisconsin, United States, containing 756 square miles, with only 67 inhabitants in 1840.

DOEBELN, a town of Saxony, 35 miles S.E. of Leipsic. Pop. upwards of 4000, chiefly employed in manufactures.

DOEL, a town of Belgium, in Flanders, on the river Scheldt, opposite Lillo; 7 m. N.W. of Antwerp.

DOESBURG, a town of Holland, in Guelderland. It has been often taken; and the reduction of it, in 1586, was the first exploit of the English forces sent by Queen Elizabeth to the assistance of the Dutch. It is seated on the Yssel; 10 miles S.S.W. of Zutphen.

DOFAR, a town on the coast of Arabia, in the Indian Ocean, seated on the E. shore of a bay of the same name: it is the residence of a sheik, and exports some gum, olibanum, and other drugs. Lat. 16. 16. N. and 54. of E. long.

DOGGER BANK, a sand bank in the German Ocean, between Flamborough Head and the coast of Jutland; it is about 200 miles from W. to E., and 30 to 50 broad, having from 15 to 30 fathoms depth of water; it yields abundance of excellent cod to the English and Dutch fishermen. A sanguinary, but undecisive sea fight, between the Dutch and English, took place on this bank, on the 8th August, 1781.

DOGLIANI, a populous town of Piedmont; 18 miles N. by E. of Mondovi.

DOL, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine, situate on a morass; 5 miles from the sea, and 11 S.E. of St. Malo. Pop. about 3900.

DOLCE AQUA, a town of Piedmont, in the county of Nice, with a castle, seated on the Nervia; 5 miles N. of Vintimiglia.

DOLE, a town of France, in the department of Jura, on the river Doubs. It contains several public buildings, evidences of Roman magnificence. Under the ancient regime of France it was the capital of Franche Comte, until 1674, when Besançon was made the capital. It is now the seat of a prefect; and contains 9647 inhabitants. It is 70 m. N. by W. of Geneva, and 30 S.E. of Dijon. Pop. 7843.

DOLE, LA, one of the loftiest peaks of the Jura chain of mountains, rising to the height of 5600 feet above the level of the sea.

DOLGELLY, a town of Wales, in Merionethshire, with a market on Tuesday, and a manufacture of coarse woollen cloth, undyed, called webbing. It is seated on the river Avon, at the foot of the mountain Cader Idris; 12 miles S. E. of Harlech, and 208 N. W. of London, on the road to Caernarvon, from which it is distant 39 miles. The summer assizes for the county are held here.

DOLLART, THE, a bay or lake separating East Friesland, in Germany, from Groningen, in Holland. It was formed by an inundation of the sea, in 1277, when 33 villages are said to have been destroyed.

DOMFRONT, a town of France, in the department of Orne, seated on a craggy rock, by the river Mayenne; 35 miles N. W. of Alençon, and 65 E. of St. Maloes. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 1670.

DOMINGO, ST., or HISPANIOLA, or HAYTI, an island of the West Indies, extending from Cape Engano, in the long. of 68. 20. W., to Cape Tiburon, in 74. 26. W. It is now politically divided into the republics of HAYTI or HAITI, and SANTO DOMINGO, but for convenience we here describe them together, as they have scarcely yet had a separate existence. The E. end of the island is separated from Porto Rico by the Mona, or Porto Rico channel, about 120 miles wide; and the northern promontory of the W. end is separated from the Island of Cuba by the windward passage, about 60 miles wide; and the southern promontory of the W. end is about 100 miles distant from the E. end of the island of Jamaica. The estimated length of the island is nearly 400 miles, and from 60 to 150 broad. Its area is about 29,000 square miles, or 18,816,000 acres. Near its centre rise the Cibao mountains, the highest of which are estimated at nearly 9000 feet above the sea: lower ranges ramify from these, chiefly from east to west. On the east, highlands rise among extensive plains, in parts without trees. These places afford good pastures; the highlands, especially along the southern coast, which extend about 80 miles from the town of St. Domingo to Iligneu, being about 30 miles in breadth. This plain is very fertile, watered by the Ynna down to the bay of Samana. The peninsula of Samana on the north side of this bay, is joined to the mainland by a low isthmus, covered by the sea at spring tide. Along the northern shores west of Samana, the mountains rise abruptly from the sea to a considerable elevation, with here and there a few slopes along the shores of lower lands. Behind these the wide and fertile plain or valley of Santiago, is drained by the river Yague. Along the southern and northern shores of the western part of Hayti, small tracts of level and cultivable lands occur only in detached portions, but between the hilly ridges and the valleys, or rather plains of Artibonite and Cul de Sac; the one is irrigated by the Artibonite, the other covered partly by the salt lake, Laguna de Henriquillo, and has no outlet, and by the fresh-water lake Saumache. The region between the mountains of Cibao and the southern coast, comprises high hills and ravines, with but few inhabitants. This island was discovered by Columbus, on the 6th of December, 1492, after having touched on the Bahamas on his first voyage, and is memorable for being the first spot in America which was colonized by Europeans. Columbus landed at St. Nicolas-le-mole, at the extremity of the N. W. promontory, where he left 33 of his comrades; returning to Spain the following month. At this time the country was called Hayti by the natives; Columbus gave it the name of Espanola, or little Spain; hence Hispaniola. The avarice of the settlers soon excited the just indignation of the native inhabitants, whose resentment, however, was readily subdued by the more ample and destructive means of warfare of the Spaniards. Columbus returned to Spain in 1496, leaving his brother Bartholomew in command of the settlement, who soon after removed to the southern coast, and founded the city of St. Domingo, which afterwards gave name to the whole island. The number of settlers from Spain increased rapidly, by whom the natives were compelled to the severest labour, which soon brought on disease and premature death; and so fatal to life was the cruel policy of the Spaniards, that after a lapse of 20 years, an efficient labourer scarcely remained on the island; under this exigency about 40,000 of the inhabitants of the Bahama Isles were decoyed from their homes to become labourers or slaves in St. Domingo; but such was the perverse policy of the Spaniards, that notwithstanding this acquisition, and 1,000,000 of native inhabitants—and some historians carry the number as high as 3,000,000—which the island was supposed to contain on its first discovery in 1492, by the middle of the following century scarcely 150 remained alive; whilst the Spaniards had progressively sunk into indolence, and the island reduced again to a wilderness. The French obtained a footing on the W. end of the island about the middle of the 17th century, and resumed the culture of the sugarcane, which had been early introduced by the Spaniards from the Canary Islands, but had been entirely neglected by them. By the treaty of Ryswick, in 1691, Spain ceded to France all the W., or about a third part of the island. After this period the French plantations progressively increased in number and importance, and, in 1789, the population of the French part of the island had increased to 534,830 inhabitants, whilst the total population of the Spanish part did not exceed 155,000. From this period a new and important era in the history of St. Domingo commences; the desolating mania of the French revolution had extended to this island; an insurrection ensued, in which upwards of 2000 of the white oppressors fell a prey to the fury of their slaves. In 1792, the national assembly of France proclaimed the political equality of the negroes and whites; in the following year three commissioners were despatched from France, who, on their arrival in St. Domingo, proclaimed the emancipation of the slaves; this served as a signal for the slaves to wreak their vengeance on their white oppressors, and, on the 21st of June, 1793, a force of 3000 blacks entered Cape François, and worked an indiscriminate slaughter among the white inhabitants, whilst the most cruel vengeance displayed itself over all the French part of the island. In the midst of this confusion, the English attempted to establish an authority, and a force from Jamaica succeeded in taking possession of Port au Prince; but, after suffering much from disease and resistance of the blacks, they abandoned the island in 1798; by which time the whole of the white population had become nearly extirpated, whilst the blacks, under the command of Rigaud and Toussaint L'Ouverture, had effected considerable progress in military discipline; and, on the 1st of July, 1801, the independence of the island was formally proclaimed in the name of the republic of Hayti, when Toussaint L'Ouverture was appointed governor for life, with the power of naming his successor. On the 6th of October, 1801, the French concluded a peace with England, and, in the December following, despatched a squadron with 20,000 men, under the command of General Le Clerc, to attempt the subjugation of St. Domingo. Le Clerc commenced the campaign in February, 1802, and fought with varied success until the following May, when a truce was concluded upon; pending which, Toussaint was inveigled on board a vessel, and conveyed to France, where he died in prison, in April, 1803. Hostilities recommenced with greater animosity than ever; the command of the black troops devolved on Dessalines; and the English being now regarded as auxiliaries against the French, on the 30th December, 1803, the whole of the remaining French forces surrendered prisoners of war to the English; and thus St. Domingo was again freed from all European oppression; but new calamities now awaited it. On the 1st of January, 1804, the generals and chiefs of the army entered into a solemn compact, in the name of the people of Hayti, renouncing for ever all dependence on France, at the same time appointing Dessalines governor for life, invested with extensive powers; in September following, he assumed the imperial title of Jacques I., Emperor of Hayti. His ambition and tyranny brought upon him the detestation of the people, and he was slain by a military conspiracy in October, 1806. He was succeeded by Christophe as "chief of the government," but Petion starting as a rival candidate for the supreme authority, a severe battle was fought between the forces of Petion and Christophe, on the 1st of January, 1807, in which Petion was defeated. In the same year Christophe was appointed chief magistrate for life, with the power of appointing his successor; but, like his predecessor Dessalines, he was not content with conditional power, and, in 1811, he assumed the regal title of Henry I., king of Hayti, making the title hereditary in his family, and Sans Souci, a village about 15 miles from Cape François, now called Cape Henry or Cape Hayti, the seat of his court and government. King Henry was both voracious and cruel, and, like Dessalines, fell a prey to his own soldiery, who dragged him from his palace by force, and massacred him in October, 1820. In the mean time, from 1810 to 1818, Petion, after his defeat in 1807, retreated to the S. of the W. part of the island, and remained at the head of a considerable military force, and ruled over a great portion of the country. In 1816, he was appointed president for life, but died in May, 1818, universally lamented by all who had espoused his cause; he was succeeded by Boyer, who, on the death of Christophe, succeeded also to the command and government of the whole of what was formerly the French part of the island. In 1794 Spain ceded the whole of the remaining part of the island to France; but the troubles which ensued rendered the cession nominal, the French never having been able to take possession; and the Spanish flag continued to wave over the fortress of the city of St. Domingo until the 1st of December, 1821, when the inhabitants issued a formal declaration of independence, and made overtures to the republic of Columbia, to be admitted as an integral part of its confederacy; which proposition, however, was not acceded to. Such was the political state of St. Domingo at the period of 1822; about which time the French endeavoured again to regain an ascendancy in the island; they succeeded in inducing the Haytians to agree to a pecuniary indemnity. It was industriously propagated in England at the time, that the Haytian revolution commenced with the revolt of the slaves: this is not correct; they remained perfectly faithful for two years after the "declaration of rights" was promulgated in France. The fearful scenes that were enacted, and in which they were afterwards so much implicated, were occasioned by the overweening pride of the white population. When the insurrection broke out in the French part of Hayti, the slaves in the Spanish or eastern part of the island adhered with wonderful fidelity to their masters, who were eminently kind and indulgent slave-owners. These two divisions becoming ultimately united in one republic under President Boyer, whose domination lasted 26 years—that is, from 1818 to 1843—the troubles consequent on the disastrous earthquake of 1842, and on the fire which destroyed nearly one-third of the city of Port au Prince, Jan. 9th, 1843, brought about a revolution, and Boyer abdicated, and was succeeded by General Herard, March 21st, 1843. Symptoms of revolt in the Spanish part of Hayti now showed themselves, and Herard was defeated, and replaced by the old negro, General Guerrier, April 12th, 1844. The whole of the Spanish division was proclaimed independent, July 12th, 1844, under Santa Anna, the San Domingo General, who is supreme chief of the Dominican Republic. In the Haytian republic, tranquillity was disturbed by the ex-president, Herard Rivière, attempting, unsuccessful-fully, to regain the reins of government. A few days after, President Guerricr died suddenly, and his successor, President Pierrot, made his public entry into Port Republicain, formerly Port au Prince, on May 8th, 1845. On March 1st, 1846, another revolution broke out, and General Riché, a negro, about sixty years old, was proclaimed president of the republic of Hayti, and Pierrot abdicated on March 24th; but, subsequent to this, the intestine troubles and discord were still rife, which led to a further revolution; and the last state of the political existence of Hayti is, that it is raised into an empire in 1849, under a black monarch, Soulouque I., who affects great state; but, from the very unsettled state of affairs, it does not seem probable that tranquillity is restored.

Agriculture has been so far neglected, and the products so badly prepared, that Haytian coffee is in little repute in the European markets, from the slovenly and careless way in which it is gathered. When properly cleaned and separated, the coffee of Hayti has always been considered superior to any in the West Indies. The commercial statistics of the French division of San Domingo, previous to the presidentship of Boyer, or in 1787-90, show an extraordinary state of prosperity,—that is, for an area less than one-third of the whole island. Presidents Toussaint and Christophe, who understood thoroughly the disinclination of the population to agricultural labour, may well be justified for the severity of their rural codes, when we compare the San Domingo of 1790 to the island of Hayti in 1846.

A line of demarcation, in some places artificially drawn, separates the Spanish part of the island from the French; but, until the recent revolution, there was no political distinction of territory, the whole country being united under one political head. The eastern part of the island, where the Spanish language is still spoken, embraces more than two-thirds of the soil, and contains only one-sixth of the inhabitants. The number of inhabitants at present is variously estimated at from 600,000 to 1,000,000, being chiefly mulattoes or quadroons; we doubt if the whole population exceeds 800,000. The number of whites and pure negroes is small in comparison with the mulattoes, or descendants of Europeans and negroes, and of the descendants of aborigines, Europeans, or negroes. The population of the Spanish part is estimated at 130,000, and of the French part nearly 700,000. The Haytian Empire—that is, the French or western territory—is the only part of the island that has numerous towns and villages, and it is here principally that commerce carries on its exchanges with other nations. A large quantity of wood is exported from Santo Domingo, and a good deal of tobacco from Santiago and Port au Platte—all towns once belonging to the Spaniards, and still Spanish as to language and customs of the people. But the great staples of cotton, coffee, mahogany, and yew-wood, are collected on the French side, and shipped from Cape Haytien, Port au Prince (or Port Republicain), Cayes, Gonaives, and Jacinél. In the REPUBLIC OF DOMINGO, or the Spanish part, Santa Anna has published a constitution. It declares the limits of the republic to be the boundary of 1793, as appertaining to Spain. It declares the government to be civil not military, republican, representative, elective, and responsible. The territory to be divided into five provinces:—1. Ampastella de Azan; 2. Santo Domingo; 3. Santa Cruz del Seybo; 4. La Concepcion de la Vega; 5. Santiago de los Cabelleros. These provinces to be divided into communes. Citizenship is extended nearly to all, even to foreigners, who pay a fixed amount of taxes. Sovereignty is vested in all the citizens. The executive is a president, with a legislative assembly and council. In the REPUBLIC OF HAYTI, President Riché proclaimed the constitution of 1816, which was merely a transcript of that of France, with the exception of president for king, and republic for kingdom. What the present state of affairs may be, it is not exactly ascertained.

The indigenous vegetable productions of the island are various, beautiful, and valuable; its mahogany is unrivalled for its texture and beauty, and there is a satin wood proportionably superior to that of other parts of the world; the flowering shrubs are various, and nowhere surpassed in beauty and fragrance; vanilla and the plantain both luxuriant; pine for ship-building and house-carpentry is abundant; whilst the cotton tree supplies the means of capacious canoes. Of quadrupeds one only is known peculiar to the island—the agouti, in size less than the common cat of Europe; all the domestic animals of Europe have, however, been introduced, and thrive exceedingly; swine, horses, and horned cattle, all running wild in considerable numbers. The feathered race is numerous and beautiful in plumage, and more melodious than common with birds of tropical climates. There is a salt-water lake of considerable extent, between the French and Spanish part of the island, on the S. side, which, as well as the plains and rivers of that side, abound in alligators and other reptiles of great size, and also of such noxious insects as are common to the situation and climate. The land tortoise is common, and the coast abounds in turtle and other fish.

DOMINGO, ST., CITY OF, is situate on the W. bank of a river called the Ozama, in lat. and long. as previously laid down. The city was originally founded in 1496, on the opposite bank of the river, but afterwards moved to its present site. It is regularly laid out, and, like most of the cities built by the Spaniards in this part of the world, the private houses have interior courts and flat roofs. The cathedral, finished in 1540, is a ponderous edifice; the government house, hall of justice, barracks, and arsenal, are all respectable buildings; it has also several convents, which have been mostly deserted by their inmates since 1794. The harbour is capacious, but exposed to the tempests from the S.W. The population, which at one time amounted to 25,000, is now computed at 15,000, and indicates decline rather than prosperity. It was sacked by the English Admiral Drake, in 1586, who obtained a ransom from the inhabitants of £7000 to prevent further devastation.

DOMINGO DE LA CALZADA, SANTO, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, on the Oca, and shares with Calahovia the dignity of a bishopric. Pop. 5000; 36 miles from Burgos.

DOMINICA, one of the West India Leeward islands, lying N. of Martinico, and S. of Guadalupe, being about 34 miles from N. to S. and 10 in mean breadth. It was discovered by Columbus on Sunday, hence its name, November 3, 1493. A party of Frenchmen settled upon it about the beginning of the 17th century, who, by cultivating the friendship of the natives, succeeded in the culture of the soil. At the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748, it was agreed that it should be neutral, but the English took possession of it in 1759, and it was confirmed to them at the peace of 1763. It was captured by a French force from Martinico in 1778, but restored to the English in 1783, since when it has remained in their possession. It is very productive of coffee of a choice quality, and yields some sugar. Charlotte Town, at the mouth of a river towards the S. end of the island, on the W. side, is in lat. 15. 18. N. and 61. 28. of W. long.

DOMINICA, the largest of the islands of the Pacific Ocean called the Marquesas. Long. 139. 2. W. lat. 9. 41. S.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC. See DOMINGO, ST.

DOMINO, ST., one of the Tremiti islands, in the Gulf of Venice; 15 miles from the coast of Naples, in the lat. of 42. 10. N.

DOMITZ, a town of Lower Saxony, in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, with a fort seated at the confluence of the Elde and Elbe; 25 miles S. of Schwerin.

DOMMEL, a river of Dutch Brabant, which receives the Aa below Bois le Duc, and then flows into the Meuse.

DOMO D'OSSOLA, a town of Italy, in the Milanese, with a castle, seated near the frontier of the Valais, on the Tossa; 20 miles N. of Varallo. The famous road of the Simplon passes this place.

DOMOTICA, or DIMOTICE, a large town of European Turkey, situate on the W. bank of the Marissa; 12 miles S. by W. of Adrianople. Pop. about 8000.

DOMPAIRE, a town of France, in the dep. of Vosges; 10 miles W. N. W. of Epinal.

DOMREMY, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, the birthplace of the celebrated Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans. It is seated on the Meuse; 5 miles N. of Neufchateau.

DOMVILLERS, or DANVILLERS, a town of France, in the department of Meuse; 14 miles N. of Verdun.

DON, a river of Europe, (the Tanaïs of the ancients,) which intersects the S.E. provinces of Russia. It issues from the Lake St. John, in the government of Tula, and, after a very circuitous course of several hundred miles, flows into the Sea of Asoph. This river has so many windings, and such numerous shoals, as to be scarcely navigable, except in the spring, on the melting of the snows; and flat-bottomed boats only, except in the same season, can pass into the Sea of Asoph. In former times the Don was held to be the boundary of Europe, but which is now extended to the Caucasus.

DON, a river of Scotland, which rises in the W. part of Aberdeenshire, receives the Urie water at Inverury, passes by Kintore and enters the German Ocean at Old Aberdeen.

DON, a river in Yorkshire, which rises on the borders of Cheshire, flows by Penistone, Sheffield, Rotheram, Doncaster, and Thorn, and joins the Ouse near its termination in the Humber.

DONAGHDEE, a town and parish of Ireland, in the county of Down; it is seated on the coast, 35 miles W. N. W. of the Isle of Man, and 23 W. by S. of the Mull of Galloway. It was the mail steam packet station between Ireland and Scotland. See PORT PATRICK. It has a custom-house, and exports some cattle and other live stock to Scotland, but in other respects its commerce is very inconsiderable, the receipt of customs not equalling the expense. On Mew Island, at the entrance of the harbour. It is connected by railway to Belfast and Dublin, is a lighthouse in the lat. of 54. 37. N. and 5. 24. of W. long.

DONAGHMORE, the name of 13 extensive parishes and townships in Ireland.

DONAGHMORE, a town of Ireland, county Cork, giving the title of earl to the Hely Hutchinson family.

DONALDSONVILLE, a town of the United States, formerly the capital of the state of Louisiana. It is on the S. side of the Mississippi, just below the outlet of the La Fourcha; 73 miles N. by W. of New Orleans. Pop. about 1000.

DONAUESCHINGEN, or DONESCHINGEN, a town of Suabia, on the E. border of the Black Forest, in the principality of Furstenburg. It is the chief residence of the prince; in the court-yard of whose palace are some springs, collected in a reservoir about 30 feet square, which has the honour of being called the head of the Danube. It is 13 miles N. N. W. of Schaffhausen.

DONAWERT, a strong town of Bavaria, seated on the N. bank of the Danube, at the influx of the Wernitz; 25 miles N. by W. of Augsburg; here is a bridge over the Danube, aid of Orleans.

5 miles N. of

DONCASTER, a handsome town in the S.E. part of the West Riding of Yorkshire; it is situate on the great high road from London to York and Edinburgh, on the S. bank of the river Don, over which are two handsome bridges. It is a corporate town, with considerable funds, governed by a mayor, recorder, and common council, and formerly sent members to parliament. The principal street is about a mile in length; the mansion-house, in which the mayor and justices hold their sittings, is a spacious and elegant building; there is also a town-hall, theatre, dispensary, hospital, and two or three other public buildings, and the church dedicated to St. George is a noble edifice. Doncaster has five tan-yards, several flax dressers, and some manufactures of sacking, carpets, nails, &c., and its trade in corn is considerable; but the agreeableness of its locality renders it more celebrated as a place of gaiety and fashion, than as a manufacturing or trading town. The annual races are amongst the gayest in the kingdom, and the frequent balls and concerts held in the mansion-house make it the resort of all the élite of the surrounding country. It is passed by the Great Northern, and by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway. It is 158 miles N. from London, 18 N.E. of Sheffield, 20 S. E. of Wakefield, and 37 S. of York. Market on Saturday.

DONDRA HEAD, the southern point of the island of Ceylon, in the lat. of 5. 55. 30. N. and 80. 42. of E. long. The land is low and densely populated, but appears to have been of greater importance than at present, there being the ruins of a magnificent Hindoo temple in the vicinity. See MATURA.

DONEGAL, a maritime county forming the N.W. extremity of Ireland; it is about 70 miles in extreme length, but, being indented by numerous bays and harbours, it has about 150 miles of sea coast; the principal bay is called Lough Foyle, and divides Donegal from the county of Londonderry, opening by a narrow strait into the N. channel. Lough Swilly is another capacious bay, opening into the Atlantic Ocean, and Donegal Bay forms the southern boundary of the county, which is bounded on the E. and S. E. by the counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh. The river Finn intersects the centre of the county from W. to E., and then takes a northern course into Lough Foyle. Area, 1,165,107 imperial acres, of which 644,371 are bog and mountain. Donegal is a mountainous and rather dreary district, and its inhabitants may be considered the rudest in Ireland, the greater portion speaking only their vernacular language. The mountains contain various minerals; kelp is made upon the coast, which yields also a silicious sand used in the manufacture of glass; the spinning of flax, the linen manufacture, and distillation of spirits, prevail over the greater part of the county; the principal towns are Lifford, Raphoe, Johnstown, Letterkenny, Ballyshannon, Donegal, and Killibegs; at Ballyshannon is a valuable salmon fishery. It contains the ruins of several castles and other works of antiquity; and returns two members to parliament.

DONEGAL, a town and parish of the preceding county; seated at the head of a bay 111 miles N.W. of Dublin, and 25 S.W. of Lifford.

DONERAILE, a town and parish of Ireland, in the county of Cork. Near it are quarries of beautiful variegated marble. It is situate on the Awbeg, which falls into the Blackwater; 19 miles N.W. of Cork, and 113 S.W. of Dublin.

DONGA, a country in central Africa, on the N. side of the Donga Mountains, and watered by the Bahr-el-Abiad, or White Nile.

DONGOLA, a town of Nubia, capital of a province of the same name. It is seated on the Nile, among mountains; 500 miles N. by W. of Sennaar. It is called Murákah or New Dongola, and is increasing. Pop. probably 6000; lat. 19. 7. N. long. 29. 55. E. Old Dongola, once the capital, is now a miserable place. Its mosque is in a commanding situation. The country is celebrated for a fine breed of horses, and the inhabitants for their skill in horsemanship. The province now is a portion of the Egyptian pasha's dominion. It was taken possession of by Mehemet Ali in 1822.

DONJON, a town of France, in the department of Allier; 24 m. S.E. of Moulins.

DONNINGTON, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Saturday. Much hemp is cultivated in the neighbourhood. It is 8 miles W.S.W. of Boston, and 106 N. of London.

There are seven villages of the same name in different parts of England—the principal one in Leicestershire.

DONNYBROOK, a village in Ireland, county of Dublin, 2½ m. from Dublin, celebrated for its annual saturnalia or fair.

DONZY, a town of France, in the department of Nièvre; 22 miles N. of Nevers.

DOOAE, a term applied by the Hindoos to tracts of land lying between two rivers; the most celebrated tract is that lying between the Ganges and Jumna, in the provinces of Allahabad, Agra, and Delhi.

DOON, a river of Scotland, which issues from a lake of the same name in Ayrshire, and enters the Frith of Clyde, 2 miles S. of Ayr.

DOORNSPYK, a town of Holland, in the province of Gelderland, on the Zuyder Zee. Pop. 2100.

DOOSHAK, a town of Persia, in the province of Seistan, of which it is the capital. It stands near the Helmund river. The modern city is small and compact, but the ruins of the old city cover a large extent of ground. The inhabitants who are more polished than the other people of Seistan, have a good bazaar. The country around it is productive; 50 miles E. of Zurrah. Lat. 31. 8. N. long. 63. 10 E.

DORAN, a town of Arabia, in Yemen, on the side of a mountain; 28 m. S. of Sana.

DORAT, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne; seated on the Abbran, near its junction with the Sevre; 25 m. N. of Limoges.

DORCHESTER, a borough and the capital of Dorsetshire, England, governed by a mayor; with a market on Wednesday and Saturday; it sends two members to parliament. It was formerly much larger, and the ruins of the walls are still to be seen in some places. It has three churches; and a fine terrace-walk, planted with trees, almost surrounds the town, which has no manufactures, but is famous for excellent ale. A little to the S. is a Roman amphitheatre, constructed of chalk and turf, supposed to be the most perfect in the kingdom. One mile to the S.W. is Maiden Castle, another work of the Romans. There are three ramparts and ditches, nearly oval, and the whole area is 115 acres. Dorchester is seated on the river Frome, about 10 miles from the sea at Weymouth, 53 E. of Exeter, and 120 W. by S. of London, at the end of the South Western Railway.

DORCHESTER, a town in Oxfordshire, which was a station of the Romans, and ruined in the wars with the Danes. It was a bishop's see till 1086, when William the Conqueror translated it to Lincoln; and it had five churches, though now but one, which was the cathedral; 10 miles S.E. of Oxford, and 49 W.N.W. of London.

DORCHESTER, a county of the state of Maryland, lying between the Nanticoke and Choptank rivers, on the E. side of Chesapeake Bay. Pop. 18,843. The chief town is Cambridge, on the S. bank of the Choptank; 60 miles S.S.W. of Baltimore.

There is also a town of the same name contiguous to Boston, Massachusetts, which see, on the S. side of the town, and another on Ashley river, South Carolina, and two or three others in different parts of the United States.

DORDOGNE, an interior department in the S.W. of France, comprising the late province of Perigord, and part of the Limousin; a river of the same name intersects the S. part of the department; the Vizere, Ille, and La Drome, all falling into the Dordogne, in its course to the Garonne at Bourg, intersects other parts of the department, which is in general fertile, and yields some delicious wines. It is divided into five arrondissements, the principal towns of which are Perigueux, the capital, Bergerac, Nontron, Riberae, and Sarlat; the other principal towns are Belves, Monpont, and Eaciderfil. Pop. in 1836, 487,502.

DORSTRO. See SILISTRIA.

DORKING, a beautifully picturesque town in Surrey, England, with a market on Thursdays; celebrated for a remarkably fine breed of poultry; a vast quantity of lime is burnt in the neighbourhood. It is 23 miles S.S.W. of London Bridge.

DORX, a village in a detached part of Worcestershire; 3 miles S.E. of Camden in Gloucestershire. The Roman fowsway runs through it, and abundance of coin, both Roman and British, have been found here.

DORNBURG, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Weimar, with a castle; situats on a hill, by the river Saale; 14 miles E. of Weimar, and 40 S.W. of Leipsic.

DORNOCH, a borough on the E. coast of Scotland, capital of Sutherlandshire, at the entrance of a frith of the same name, over which it has a ferry to Tain. It is a small place, and half in ruins, but was formerly the residence of the bishops of Caithness; and part of the cathedral is kept up as the parish church. It is 40 miles N. of Inverness. Long. 3. 48. W. lat. 57. 52. N. It unites with Kirkwall, &c., in sending one member to parliament.

DORPT, or DORPAT, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga, with a university; seated on the Ember, between the lakes Wosero and Pepas; 60 miles S. of Narva, and about 50 E. of Pernau. The town is well built, and consists of three parts, the town, and the suburbs of Riga and Petersburg. The university was originally founded by Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden in 1632, was afterwards removed to Pernau, but re-established here by the emperor Alexander in 1802, on the site of an old fortress. It is much esteemed as a seat of learning, and its famous astronomical observatory containing the finest instruments of the age, is under the superintendence of the celebrated M. Struvé. Lat. 58. 22. 44. N. long. 26. 42. 19. E. The town is on the high road between Riga and Petersburg; 150 miles N.E. from Riga, and 170 S.E. from Petersburg. Pop. about 10,000.

DORSETSHIRE, a maritime county of England, having about 70 miles of coast in the British Channel; bounded on the W. by Devonshire, N. by the counties of Somerset and Wilts, and E. by Hampshire; it is of an irregular form, having an extreme length of 55 miles from W. to E., and 35 in extreme breadth; but the mean lines do not much exceed half that extent, the superficial area being only 643,840 acres. The soil is generally rich and fertile, though in some parts very sandy; the northern part, which is divided by a range of chalk-hills from the southern, affords good pasturage for cattle; while the southern part chiefly consists of fine downs, and feeds incredible numbers of sheep. The chalk-hills, which run through every county from the S.E. part of the kingdom thus far, terminate at the further extremity of this; but, on the coast, chalk-cliffs extend beyond it into Devonshire, 10 miles W. of Lyme. to the neighbourhood of Blandford, a heathy common extends, which causes an exception to the general character of fertility which this county merits; but the rich vales to the S.W. make ample amends. The greatest altitude of the county is 669 feet above the level of the sea; the climate is mild and congenial. The principal rivers are the Stour, Piddle, and Frome. Here is plenty of fowl of all sorts, swans, woodcocks, pheasants, partridges, fieldfares, &c. The principal towns on the coast are Lyme Regis, Melcombe Regis, Weymouth, Bridport, Wareham, and Poole; at the two latter some ships are built, and some foreign trade carried on; and Poole was formerly celebrated for its extensive interest in the Newfoundland fishery; and considerable manufactures of cordage, twine, and coarse woollens were formerly carried on in the vicinity of Bridport and Poole; but the commercial and manufacturing concerns of the county have of late years declined, and are now relatively insignificant, the shipping being principally employed in carrying; and the rental, taxes, and supply of shop goods for the consumption of the county, are now paid out of the surplus produce of sheep and lambs for the London market, some cattle, wool, and stone, from the quarries of Portland and Purbeck, and freight of shipping; some trifling manufactures also contribute to constitute an exchange; and the western part of the coast abounds in mackerel during the season. The principal towns in the interior are Dorchester (the capital), Corfe castle, and Shaftesbury. It returns three members to parliament. There are thirteen other market towns, and upwards of 200 villages in this county.

DORSTEN, a fortified town in Westphalia, in the county of Recklinghausen; seated on the Lippe; 15 miles E. by N. of Wesel.

DORT, or DORDRECHT, a city of Holland, province of S. Holland, on an island formed by the Meuse, which is here called the Merwe. The island was formed in 1421, in November of which year an inundation destroyed 72 villages, and drowned 100,000 persons. In 1457 Dort was nearly destroyed by fire, and is further celebrated for an assembly of protestant clergy from all parts of Europe, in 1618-19, called the Synod of Dort, which condemned the tenets of Arminius. The building in which this synod was held, still exists, but is degraded into a low Sunday theatre. Here are several Lutheran and Calvinist churches, a fine council-house, an excellent academy, and the mint of S. Holland. It has a good harbour, and a great trade in corn, wine, and timber; of the latter, immense rafts are floated hither from Andernach, in Germany. It was formerly the chief depository of Rhenish wines; but its commerce has much declined of late years, having been transferred to Rotterdam. The father of the celebrated de Witt was burgo-master of Dort, and Vossius was once superintendent of its academy. The natural situation of Dort is such, that it has never been taken by an enemy; but it surrendered to the French in 1795. It is 10 miles S.E. of Rotterdam. Long. 4. 45. E. lat. 51. 54. N. Pop. about 20,000.

DORTMUND, a strong town of Westphalia, in a nook at the S. extremity of the upper bishopric of Munster. It was lately imperial, and is seated on the Emster; 15 miles S.W. of Ham, and 30 S. by W. of the city of Munster. Pop. about 4000.

DORÉKOM, or DUREZKOM, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, with a foundry for bombs and cannon-balls; seated S. of Yssel; 10 miles S.E. of Doesburg.

DOUARNENEZ, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre; seated on a bay of the same name, at the entrance of the English Channel; 8 miles N.W. of Quimper.

DOUAY, a city of France, formerly the capital of the department of Nord, with a fine arsenal, a foundry for cannon, a military school, a citadel, and three famous colleges; to which a great number of the Roman Catholic youths of England and Ireland are sent for education. It was taken by the Duke of Marlborough in 1710, and retaken by the French in 1712, after the suspension of arms. It is 110 miles N. by E. of Paris, 70 E.S.E. of Boulogne, and 18 S. of Lisle, to which it is connected by a canal. It is the seat of a prefect, and contains 19,000 inhabitants.

DOUBS, a department of France, on the frontier of Neuchâtel, in Switzerland. It comprises the eastern part of the late province of Franche Comte, and is watered by a river giving name to the department, which falls into the Saone a little above Chalons. Doubs is a woody and mountainous district, interspersed with fertile valleys; the mountains yield a considerable supply of iron, the forests abundance of timber, whilst sheep and black cattle abound in the valleys, yielding a considerable supply of butter and cheese; the latter is celebrated by the name of gruyere. The vine is also cultivated with success, and to some extent; it has been proposed to unite the river Doubs with the Ille, falling into the Rhine, and thereby unite the waters of the North sea with the Mediterranean. The department of Doubs is divided into four arrondissements; Besançon, 210 m. S.E. of Paris, is the capital; and the chief towns of the other three arrondissements are Baume, Pontarlier, and Montbéliard; there are two other considerable towns, viz., Quingey and Ornans. Population in 1836, 276,274.

DOUE, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, with a considerable manufacture of druggets and tammies. Near it is a vast Roman amphitheatre, cut out of the solid rock. It is 9 miles S.W. of Saumur.

DOUGLAS, a village of Lanarkshire, Scotland, seated on a river of the same name, falling into the Clyde; 29 miles S.S.E. of Glasgow, on the road to Carlisle.

DOUGLAS, the chief town of the Isle of Man. The streets are in general narrow and dirty, but have been improved a great deal of late years, in consequence of the influx of visitors from Liverpool and elsewhere. It is seated at the mouth of two united streams, on the E. side of the island, in the lat. of 54. 12. N. and 4. 26. of W. long. See MAN.

DOUGLAS CAPE, a promontory on the W. coast of America, the W. point of the entrance of Cook's Inlet. Its summit forms two very high mountains. Long. 153. 30. W. lat. 58. 56. N.

DOULAINCOURT, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne; 10 miles S.W. of Joinville.

DOULLENS, a town of France, in the department of Somme; with two citadels; seated on the Antie; 15 miles N. of Amiens; it is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 2720.

DOUNE, DOUN, or DONNE, a town of Scotland, in the parish of Kilmadock, Perthshire, with the ruin of a huge square castle, whose tower is full 80 feet in height. Here is a manufacture of pistols; also an extensive work called the Adelphi cotton-mill. It is seated on the Teith; 8 miles N.W. of Stirling, and 32 S.W. of Perth.

DOURDAN, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, with a manufacture of silk and worsted stockings; seated on the Orge; 25 miles S.W. of Paris.

DOURO, a river of Spain, rising near Soria, in Old Castile, in the long. of 2. 30. W. It rises to the W. of Sorin, and from thence runs S. for about 20 miles, when it takes a course nearly due W. past Aranda into Leon, past Zamora to the frontier of the Portuguese province of Traz os Montes; it then takes a course S.S.W. past Mirandi, and for about 60 miles forms the boundary between Leon in Spain, and Traz os Montes; it then takes a course N. by W., dividing the latter province and Entre Douro e Minho from Beira, falling into the sea a short distance below Oporto. The meridional distance from its source to its entrance into the sea, is about 300 miles, while the course of the stream will be nearly 500 miles; it receives numerous tributary streams both from the N. and S.

DOVE, a river of Derbyshire, which rises in the Peak, near Buxton, parts the county from Staffordshire, and, after a course of about 40 miles, joins the Trent, 4 miles below Burton.

DOVER, STRAITS OF, between the S.E. point of England and the N.W. extremity of France, leading from the Atlantic Ocean, through the English channel into the North sea: the narrowest part of the strait is about twenty English statute miles, and the two usual points of intercourse about 23 miles, Dover castle being in 1. 19. 7., and Calais in 1. 51. 1. of E. long., being a difference of 32 minutes of long., which in the lat. of 51. is equal to 19 geographical, or 23 English statute miles. The straits extend from the S.W. in a direction N.N.E. for about 45 miles, intersected by the line of 51. of N. lat.

DOVER, TOWN OF, which gives name to the preceding strait, is seated on the English coast, in the county of Kent, and is celebrated in every period of English history; by the ancient Britons it was called Dour, by the Romans Dubris, and by the Saxons Dovre; and the Romans regarded it as clavis et repagulum totius regni—the lock and key of the whole realm. It is sometimes spelt Dovor, but without authority. Dover may doubtless still be regarded as the great outlet and portal of the realm on the side of northern Europe, and, from its peculiar local situation and advantages, to be still entitled to high consideration. Since its connection with the chain of railways under the title of the South Eastern Railway, Dover has considerably increased in importance and prosperity, of which numerous buildings give testimony. It is again likely to assume its ancient importance among our seaports, which had in some measure declined with the growth of steam navigation, from the construction of the magnificent Harbour of Refuge in Dover Bay by the British government. This important national work will enclose a space nearly a mile in length to the E. of the present harbour, which will then be converted into floating docks. Dover is still the medium of conveyance for the mails, and of all messengers and travellers intent on despatch, between England and France, for whose accommodation packets proceed to and from Calais and Boulogne with every tide; and the intercourse is still very great, constituting the chief support of the town, which extends for near a mile along the shore, and is divided into two parts; the eastern part is called the town, at the extremity of which, on an eminence, is the castle, supposed to have been first founded by Julius Cæsar; the west part is called the pier, and is overhung by a range of chalk cliffs, which seem to threaten an immediate overwhelming of all below. The heights to the N.W. of the town, 300 to 350 feet above the level of the sea, are fortified with trenches, subterraneous works, and casemates for the accommodation of 2000 men, and in clear weather presents fine prospects of the coast of France. Dover is one of the (five) cinque ports vested with peculiar privileges by the 32 Henry VIII. cap. 48, on condition of furnishing a certain number of ships equipped and manned for the national defence: one of the privileges was, each port returning two members to parliament, by the title of Barons of the Cinque Ports. Dover post-office is 71 miles S.S.E. of London Bridge, by way of Canterbury, from which it is distant 16 miles; it is divided into two parishes; it holds two weekly markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The castle is a very extensive edifice, and interesting from its antiquity, and the historical events connected with it; it occupies 35 acres. The most ancient parts of this are a Roman pharos or watch-tower, and adjoining to it the ruins of one of the most ancient churches in the kingdom. Besides the castle and two churches, the other public buildings are a town-hall, theatre, and military hospital, victualling-office, and custom-house; the business of the latter is confined almost exclusively to the inspecting the baggage of the passengers arriving by the packets. The harbour will admit ships of 500 tons burthen, but the town carries on little foreign trade. To the W. of the town is the celebrated cliff mentioned by Shakspeare in King Lear, which is now cut through by a double tunnel, for the South Eastern Railway.

DOVER, a flourishing town of New Hampshire, on the W. side of the Piscataqua river. It is the oldest town in the state, having been first settled in 1623. The beautiful village of Dover is built around the lower falls of the Cocheo, which suddenly descend 32½ feet, producing unequalled water power, and are at the head of Tide water. Considerable shipping is owned here, and it is about 12 miles from the ocean; 12 miles N. W. by N. from Portsmouth, 50 S.W. from Portland, and 60 N. of Boston. Pop. in 1820, 2871; 1830, 5449; and in 1840, 6458.

DOVER, a borough in the state of Delaware, capital of Kent county, and of the state. It stands on high ground, 10 miles from the entrance of Jones Creek, in Delaware Bay. It is regularly laid out, with wide streets, and has some neat buildings. It has a splendid monument to Colonel J. Masiott, who fell at the battle of Princeton. The trade of the place is chiefly in flour with Philadelphia; 50 miles S. of Wilmington. Pop. in 1840, 3790.

DOVER, a township in Dutchess county, state of New York. It is in part mountainous. The town stands on a beautiful plain: 20 miles E. of Poughkeepsie, and 74 S. by E. of Albany. Pop. 2000.

DOVER, a town in the state of Ohio, on the W. side of the Ohio canal, and also on the Tascarawas river, across both of which there is a bridge. It is regularly planned; 83 miles S. of Cleveland by canal. Pop. in 1840, 2247.

DOVERFIELD MOUNTAINS, a chain of mountains dividing Norway into the N. and S. divisions, and also separating it from Sweden. Their greatest altitude is about 800 feet.

DOWLATABAD, formerly called Amednagur, a province of the Deccan of Hindostan; intersected by the Godavery river; bounded on the N. by Candehi, W. by the Gants, S. by Visiapour and Goleonda, and E. by the Berar. Aurungabad is the capital.

DOWLATABAD, one of the celebrated hill-forts of Hindostan, and formerly the capital of the preceding province. The fort is 420 feet above the level of the plain. In the beginning of the 14th century, the Emperor Mahomet III. caused a great number of the inhabitants of Delhi to emigrate S. of the Godavery river, and attempted to make Dowlatabad the seat of government of his empire; but the project did not succeed, and his successor returned to the ancient capital. Dowlatabad, nevertheless, continued an important place, and capital of the province, until the time of Aurungzebe, who fixed his residence at Aurungabad (which see), about 10 miles to the S.: it is now included in the territories of the Nizam of the Deccan.

DOWN, a maritime county on the N.E. coast of Ireland, opposite to the Isle of Man, it is bounded on the N. by the Lough of Belfast, which divides it from the county of Antrim; S. by Carlingford Bay, which divides it from the county of Louth; and on the W. it is bounded by the county of Armagh. It is 53 miles in extreme length from S.W. to S.E., and about 25 in mean breadth, the N. E. being indented by Strangford Lough, containing 611,404 acres; a canal from Carlingford Bay to Lough Neagh, bounds the W. end of the county, and the river Lagan, falling into Belfast Lough, waters the northern side, the river Bann intersecting the S.W. Down is the fifth county in Ireland, in order of population, both collectively and relatively, and although it is one of the least productive counties in the country, a great portion of its surface being occupied as bleach grounds, the industry of the inhabitants in the linen manufactures, enables it to command an equal or greater share of comforts than in most other parts of Ireland; the S. part of the county is mountainous, Slieve Donard Peak rising to the height of 2800 feet above the level of the sea: various minerals are found in different parts of the county, but none are worked to advantage, the linen manufactures absorbing all the labour and exertion of its inhabitants, about an equal portion of whom are Protestants, emigrants, or descendants of emigrants, from Scotland. Remains of antiquity are common in every part of the county. The principal towns are Downpatrick (the capital and a bishop's see), Newton Ardes, Bangor, Donaghadee, Killyleagh, Hillsborough, Dro-more (another bishop's see), and Newry, at the head of Carlingford Bay, which is the largest and most considerable trading town in the county. It sends two members to parliament.

DOWN, or DOWNPATRICK, the chief town of the preceding county, is pleasantly located on the banks of a stream falling into the S. end of Strangford Lough; 74 miles N.N. E. of Dublin, and 23 S. by E. of Belfast: it is a bishop's see, in conjunction with Connor, in the county of Antrim, and, besides the cathedral, has three other places of religious worship; its other public buildings consist of a diocesan school, hospital, town-hall, court-house, and gaol. Down is celebrated as the supposed place of interment of Ireland's adopted saint, St. Patrick, and a well in the vicinity, dedicated to that saint, is held in high veneration. Down participates in the linen manufacture. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

DOWNHAM, MARKET, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday; seated on the side of a hill, about a mile from the river Ouse. It has a great trade in butter, which is sent up the river in boats to Cambridge, and thence conveyed in waggons to London, under the name of Cambridge butter. It is 11 m. S. of Lynn, and 86 N. by E. of London.

There are four villages of the same name in different parts of England.

DOWNES, a famous road for shipping, on the E. coast of Kent, between the North and South Foreland. See GOODWIN SANDS, and DEAL.

DOWNTON, a town in Wiltshire, which has now no market; seated on the Avon; 6 m. S.E. of Salisbury, and 88 W.S.W. of London.

DRAABURGH, a town of Carinthia, on the river Drave, near the frontier of Tyrol.

DRAOUT, a town of Massachusetts, in Middlesex county, on the N. bank of the Merrimack; at Patucket Falls; 28 miles S.W. of Exeter, and 30 N.N.W. of Boston.

DRADATE, or DURHO, a town of Nubia, with a harbour, on the Red Sea, and wells of good water in the vicinity. It is 36 miles N.N.W. of Suakem.

DRAOIGNAN, a town of France, capital of the department of Var; 10 miles N.W. of Frejus, 40 N.E. of Toulon, and 420 S.S.E. of Paris. Pop. 8774.

DRAKENSTEIN, an extensive valley in the Cape of Good Hope territory. See STELLENBOSCH.

DRAHE, a town of Macedonia, near the ruins of Philippi, and about 20 m. N.N.E. of Einboli.

DRAMBURG, a town of Brandenburg, in the N. part of the New Mark; seated on the Drage; 15 m. E. by N. of New Stargard.

DRAMMEN. The two towns of Stromsøe and Bragnas, on each side of the Drammen river, falling into the Bay of Christiana, in Norway, are called Drammen. See STROMSØE.

DRAS. See DARAH.

DRAVE, or DRAU, a river which rises in Germany, at Innichen, in Tyrol, flows through Carinthia and Styria, then along the confines of Selavonia and Lower Hungary, and, after a course of about 300 miles, joins the Danube a little below Essig.

DRAVTON, a town in Shropshire, England, with a market on Wednesday; it is seated on the banks of the river Tern, at the N.E. end of the county, on the road from Shrewsbury to Newcastle. It has three tan-yards, two paper-mills, and two manufactures of haircloth; 151 mile N.W. of London.

DRESDEN, a city of Germany, and the capital of the kingdom of Saxony. It is divided by the Elbe into the old and new town, which are united by a grand bridge, and surrounded by strong fortifications. It has a castle, an academy of painting and sculpture, and a magnificent church for the Roman Catholics, with a tower 378 feet in height, one Calvinist, and eleven Lutheran churches. The houses are built of freestone, almost all of the same height; and, though the palaces are few, it is deemed the handsomest city in Germany. The palaces of Holland and Japan are full of curiosities from that country and China; and the picture gallery may claim precedence over every individual gallery in Italy. The royal palace has a tower 355 feet in height. Dresden is deservedly celebrated for its manufacture of porcelain; the repository for which is in the castle. Here are also manufactures of gold and silver lace, jewellery, paper-hangings, and wind instruments of music, &c., &c. The arsenal contains specimens of the first invented firearms, and a curious collection of arms of all ages and countries. The other public buildings of Dresden are the house of assembly of the Saxon diet, an academy for the young nobility, a military school, and several edifices for charitable institutions. It was taken by the king of Prussia, 1745, and again in 1756, but retaken in 1759; and it was bombarded by him in 1760, for nine days, when he was obliged to raise the siege. Dresden is further rendered memorable for its neighbourhood being the principal theatre of operations between the allied and French armies, during the greater part of the year 1815. The Russian and Prussian troops having entered it in the month of March, were obliged to quit it in May, after the battle of Lutzen; and Buonaparte afterwards held his head quarters here for a long time. On the 26th and 27th of August of the same year, the allied army, 200,000 strong, under Prince Schwartzberg, attempted to carry the town by assault; but Buonaparte having arrived from Silesia, with his guards, the night before the attack, repulsed them with great loss in killed, wounded and prisoners. It was at this time the celebrated General Moreau received a mortal wound, while in conversation with the Emperor of Russia. The allies, in consequence of this disaster, immediately commenced their retreat into Bohemia; and the French being too eager to profit by their success, had sent General Vandamme with about 30,000 men, into the mountains of that country, to cut off their retreat. But on their arrival near Culm, they were assailed on all sides; and, after a furious conflict, the whole army was nearly destroyed, and the commander, with the whole of his staff, were made prisoners; and on the 6th of November, after the battle of Lelispic, Marshal St. Cyr, who remained in Dresden with a French force of 39 000 men, after a fruitless attempt to negotiate a retreat, was compelled to yield to an unconditional surrender. Prior to the spoliation by Prussia in 1756, Dresden contained about 65,000 inhabitants; from which period it progressively declined down to 45,000 in 1810; but since the restoration of peace in 1814, it has gradually increased, and in 1837, contained a population of 69,500. In the vicinity are several fine gardens and public promenades, which serve to render Dresden one of the most agreeable abodes in the north of Europe. It is in the lat. of 51. 2. 50. N. and 13. 43. of W. long.: 230 miles N.N.W. of Vienna, 240 N.N.E. of Munich, 100 S. by E. of Berlin, 190 E. of Cassel, by way of Lelispic, from which it is distant 55 m. It is a principal station of the North Germany railway system.

DREUX, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire, with a considerable manufacture of cloth for the army. It is seated on the river Blaise, at the foot of a mountain; 48 miles W. by S. of Paris. It was burnt by Henry II. of England, in 1186, taken by Henry V. in 1421, and is further celebrated for a battle fought in its neighbourhood on the 18th of December, 1562, between the army of the King of France and the Protestants under the Prince of Condé, when the latter were defeated. It surrendered to Henry IV. of France in 1593, and is now the seat of a prefect with a population of 5394.

DRIESEN, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark; seated on an island formed by the river Netze, near the Polish frontier: 20 miles E. of Landsberg.

DRIFFIELD, a town in East Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday, connected by branches with the Hull and Selby and North Eastern R'ways. It is 28 miles E. by N. of York, and 22 N. by W. of Hull. The neighbourhood is very productive in corn, but thinly inhabited.

DRINO, a river of Albania, formed of two streams, one flowing from the frontier of Bosnia, on the N., is called the White Drino, and the other from the frontier of Macedonia in the S., is called the Black Drino; after each running a course of about 100 miles, the united stream, after a further course of about 50 miles, falls into the Gulf of Drino in the Adriatic, by several mouths, at Alessio.

DRINO, or DRINIZZA, another river which rises in the N. part of Albania, and runs parallel with the White Drino for a considerable distance in a contrary direction into Bosnia, and, after dividing Bosnia from Servia for about 30 miles, and a course of about 150 miles, falls into the Save, about 70 miles above Belgrade; this river seems to afford a favourable opportunity for uniting the waters of the Save, and thereby the Danube, with the Adriatic. See DULCIGNO.

DRISSA, a town of Russia, in the government of Polotsk, at the conflux of the Drissa with the Dwina; 20 miles W.N.W. of Polotsk, and 272 S. of Petersburg.

DRISTA. See SILISTRIA.

DRIVASTRO, a town of European Turkey, in Albania; 20 miles N.E. of Dulcigno.

DROGHEDA, a seaport on the E. coast of Ireland; seated at the head of a bay on the banks of the river Boyne, which here divides the counties of Meath and Louth; Drogheda being a town and county of itself, with a separate jurisdiction. It is a respectable town, and carries on a considerable trade in butter, grain, and coarse linens; the harbour is tolerably commodious, but its entrance is impeded for ships of large burthen, by a bar. It is divided into three parishes. Oliver Cromwell took it by storm in 1649; and it was near here where the decisive battle was fought between the forces of William and James, in 1691, when the latter were defeated. See BOYNE. Drogheda is 24 miles N. of Dublin. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

DROITWICH, a borough in Worcestershire; market on Friday. Here are famous salt springs, which were in great celebrity at the period of the Norman conquest, from which is made much peculiarly fine white salt. It is seated on the Salwarp; 7 m. N.N.E. of Worcester, and 116 W.N.W. of London. It is connected with the river Severn by a canal, and with Birmingham and Worcester by canal, and is on the Oxford and Worcester railway, and by these means the salt is distributed over all parts of the kingdom. Droitwich is divided into four parishes, and returns one member to parliament.

DROME, an interior department in the S.E. of France; bounded on the W. for 65 miles, by the Rhone, which divides it from Ardeche; it is about 35 miles in mean breadth, bounded on the N. and E. by the departments of Isere and Upper Alps, and S. by Vaucluse. It derives its name from a river which intersects its centre, and falls into the Rhone. The Isere intersects the N., and the Argens the S. part of the department, which is comprised of the western part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is divided into four arrondissements, the chief towns of which are Valence, Die, Montelimart, and Nyons; the other principal towns are Romans, Le Crest, and Le Buis; Valence is the capital. Pop. in 1836, 305,500.

DROMORE, a town and parish in the county of Down, Ireland; the town is a bishop's see, the palace of the prelate is a stately edifice. It is 20 miles W. by N. of Downpatrick, and 66 N. of Dublin, on the road to Belfast.

DRONERO, a town of Piedmont, at the foot of the Alps, on the river Maira; 14 miles S.S.W. of Saluzzo, and about the same distance W. by N. of Coni. It contains six churches, and has a fine bridge across the river. Pop. about 6500.

DRONFIELD, a town in Derbyshire; 156 miles from London. Here is a free grammar-school, and a chalybeate spring.

DROSTHEIM, or TRONDYEM, or TRONJEM, the most northerly of the four great dioceses of Norway, extending from the lat. of 62. 5. to 65. 20. N., being about 80 miles in mean breadth; it is intersected by several small streams, and the coast is indented with numerous inlets and bays, and flanked with numerous islands; although a dreary district, the industry of the inhabitants counteracts, in a considerable degree, the inhospitality of its position and climate. It is divided into 80 parishes, containing a population of about 250,000, having considerably increased during the last and present century. The chief town, of the same name, is seated on a point of land, formed by a deep inlet, about 40 miles from the open sea, in the lat. of 63. 26. N. and 10. 22. of E. long.; 253 miles N.E. of Bergen, about the same distance due N. of Christiana, and 360 N.W. of Stockholm. It was the residence of the ancient kings of Norway, and is now the principal trading town of the diocese, and exports a very considerable quantity of fir timber and deals, some pitch, tar, peltry, &c. It is the residence of the bishop of the diocese; the cathedral is a stately edifice; the houses are mostly built of wood, but the streets are commodious, and in the summer season it is not an unpleasant residence. Pop. about 9900.

DROSENDORF, a town of Austria, with an ancient castle; seated on the Teya, on the frontier of Moravia; 10 miles N. of Horn.

DROSSEN, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark; 14 miles S.E. of Custrin.

DRUM, the name of two parishes in Ireland, one in the county of Mayo, and the other in Roscommon; there are also about thirty other parishes and several villages in different parts of Ireland beginning with Drum, such as Drumara, Drumboe, Drumcannon, &c. &c.

DRUMSNA, a town of Ireland, in the county of Leitrim; seated on the E. bank of the Shannon; 4 miles S.E. of Carrick, and 73 from Dublin; it is rather a neat town.

DRUSENHEIM, a town of France, in the Department of Lower Rhine; seated on the Motter, near the Rhine; 15 miles N. by E. of Strassburg.

DRUSES, a community of people in Syria, which had its origin in a fanatical persecution of a caliph of Egypt, against the Mnhomedans. About the beginning of the 11th century, the caliph and his prophet (a native of Persia) both met a violent death, and such of their disciples (the Druses) as adhered to their tenets, fled for refuge to the mountains of Lebanon and Antilibanus; from whence they successively made war against the crusaders; the sultans of Aleppo, the Mamelukes and Turks; they were effectually subdued by Amurath III. in 1588, who imposed a regular tribute upon them, appointing an emir, or chief, whom he invested with executive power, and held him responsible for the payment of the tribute; this organization, however, the Druses soon turned against the Turks, with whom they have since been involved in repeated conflicts, with alternate success; they still maintain a nominal independence, occupying about 70 miles of coast from Saïze, the ancient Sidon, to Gebail or Djebail; BARROUT, or BEINUR (which see) being their chief station. Their number is estimated at about 120,000, all the males being trained to arms. Their language is the Arabic. In 1860 they rose upon the Christians, and barbarously destroyed upwards of 150 towns and villages, and massacred their inhabitants.

DRYBURG, or DRINBURG, a town in the Prussian States, seated near the source of a stream falling into the Weser, in the principality of Paderborn; it is pleasantly located, and distinguished for its baths; 10 miles E. of the town of Paderborn.

DUBLIN, a maritime and fertile county on the E. coast of Ireland, being about 30 miles in extreme length, and 13 in mean breadth. Area, 248,631 acres, of which a city of the same name is the capital of all Ireland, and in extent of population and architectural display, is the second city of the British dominions in Europe; but in other respects inferior to either Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, or Edinburgh.

DUBLIN CITY is seated on the banks of the river Liffey, at its entrance into a bay of about 40 square miles in surface. It is an archiepiscopal see, and seat of the only university in Ireland, and also its principal centre of commerce; the banks of the river are faced with cut stone for nearly 3 miles in extent; forming spacious quays on both sides, and connected at convenient distances by nice elegant bridges. The other public edifices deserving notice, are the castle, the residence of the viceroy, built about the beginning of the 13th century; the university, the cathedral of Christ Church, and the collegiate church of St. Patrick, and the churches of St. George and St. Werburgh; the custom house, stamp and post offices, courts of law, and Queen's inns, the bank of Ireland (formerly the parliament house), linen hall, royal exchange, and commercial buildings; the royal barracks, several hospitals, 18 parochial, 26 Roman catholic, and several sectarian places of worship, and an elegant theatre. The harbour is formed by a pier, run from the S. bank of the river, for near 3 miles into the bay, terminated by an elegant lighthouse. The entrance of the harbour is, however, impeded by sand-banks. There are railways in operation between Dublin and Belfast, Londonderry, Coleraine, Galway, Wicklow, Limerick, Waterford, Cork, and all intermediate places. Two canals facilitate the commerce of the city with the interior; the royal canal into the county of Meath, and the grand canal into the county of Kildare, where it diverges, one branch to the Shannon, and the other to the Barrow, thereby uniting the ports of Limerick and Waterford with Dublin. A railroad now connects the harbour of Kingstown, formerly Dunleary, with the city, and which obviates much of the inconveniences of the port. On the N. W. side of the city is the Phoenix Park, a royal demesne, about 7 miles in circumference, containing a residence for the viceroy, and another for the chief secretary; and also an observatory; and, on an eminence on the S. bank of the river is Kilmainham hospital, for the invalids of the army. The city is bounded by a fine road, called the Circular, about 10 miles in its course, similar to the Faubourgs of Paris; within the city are five spacious squares, three on the S. and two on the N. side of the river; and the principal street, called Sackville Street, 170 feet wide, is entitled to rank among the finest in Europe; in the centre is a pillar 130 feet in height, to commemorate the naval achievements of Nelson. Prior to the union of Ireland with England, Dublin was the seat of the legislature, and most of the nobility and members of parliament had residences there; some of them, very extensive and elegant, have since been converted into hotels, hospitals, and to other public purposes. The local government of Dublin consists of a lord mayor, 24 aldermen, and 24 common councilmen. There is a considerable manufacture of broad silks, and some woollen manufactures are also carried on within the city, with various other manufactures for domestic purposes.

Its population at different periods has been stated as follows:—

In 1682.....	64,483	In 1813.....	176,610
" 1728.....	146,075	" 1821.....	185,881
" 1753.....	128,570	" 1831.....	203,650
" 1777.....	138,203	" 1834.....	240,300
" 1793.....	182,370	" 1841.....	238,531

The university returns two, and the city and county each two, members to the parliament of the United Kingdom. The general exterior aspect of Dublin is grand and imposing, and the general character of its inhabitants frank, hospitable, and prepossessing. On close investigation, however, it proves to contain more abodes of wretchedness and misery than is to be found in any other city of the like extent, in any other part of the world. Dublin, in its most comprehensive sense, contains 26 parishes, 17 within the city boundaries, and 9 between the city boundaries and the Circular road. The civil government is vested in the lord mayor, recorder, 2 sheriffs, 24 aldermen, and a common council composed of representatives from the 15 guilds. It is divided into four districts, each submitted to the care of a police magistracy, who have an office and court within their respective districts. The observatory in the Phoenix Park, about 4 miles W. of the custom house, on the N. bank of the river, near its entrance into the bay, is in the lat. of 53. 23. 7. N., and 6. 20. 30. of W. long. The bay is formed by HOWTH HILL on the N. and KINGSTOWN on the S. See each, under their respective heads, for distance from Holyhead, the nearest point of communication with the British coast, &c. &c.

There are four townships called Dublin in the United States of North America; three in Pennsylvania, and one in New Hampshire.

DUNOIS, a county in the S. W. part of the state of Indiana, watered by the E. fork of the White river. Capital, Jasper. Pop. in 1840, 3632.

DUBUQUE, a county of the state of Iowa, on the W. side of the Mississippi. Pop. 3059. The capital, of the same name, is on the W. bank of the Mississippi, and is regularly and handsomely built, and is the commercial centre of the mineral region. Lead ore is found in the limits of the town, and for miles around: 1605 miles above New Orleans, and 324 miles below the Falls of St. Anthony. Pop. about 1300.

DUBRO, a town of Russian Poland, in the province of Volhynia; seated on the banks of a branch of the Przypiec, near the frontier of Galicia; it was formerly celebrated for its great annual fair. It is 24 miles S. E. of Lucko. Pop. about 6500, chiefly Jews.

DUCKENFIELD, a township in the parish of Stockport, Cheshire. See STOCKPORT.

DUDDINGSTON, a pleasant village on the S. side of Edinburgh, Scotland.

DUDERSTADT, a town of Germany, in the territory of Eichsfeld; 18 miles E. of Göttingen. Pop. about 4000.

DUDLEY, a borough of Worcestershire, England, insulated in the county of Stafford; 10 miles W. by N. of Birmingham, and 119 from London. It is a place of antiquity, having the remains of a castle, first built by Dodo about the year 700; the neighbourhood abounds in coal, iron, and limestone, and the town participates largely in the manufactures of the district, having about 20 establishments for the manufacture of nails, anvils, vices, tracery, and other heavy iron work; 10 other establishments for the manufacture of fenders and fire-irons, 5 glass-houses, and 2 other establishments for glass-cutting; 3 malt and coffee-mill makers, 20 malting-houses, &c. &c. It has 2 churches; that of St. Thomas is a beautiful structure, with a lofty spire. Market on Saturday. It returns one member to parliament.

DUDLEY, a town in Worcester county, Massachusetts, near the frontier of Connecticut; 20 miles S. of Worcester.

DUENAS, a village of Leon in Spain, 13 miles from Valladolid, where a noble canal, planned in 1753, and completed in 1832, is intended as a portion of a system which should connect the Atlantic with the Mediterranean.

DUFFEL, a town of the Netherlands, a few miles N. of Malines. Pop. about 3000.

DUISBURG. See DUYSBURG.

DUKE OF YORK ISLAND, an island in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Commodore Byron, in 1765, lying N. of the Friendly Islands. Long. 172. 30. W. lat. 7. 56. S.

DUKE OF YORK ISLAND, an island in the Pacific Ocean, lying between New Britain and New Ireland; so named by Captain Carteret, in 1767. The natives go entirely naked; are stout, well made, and of a light copper colour; their hair is woolly, but they dress it with grease and powder, and make it hang straight. Their huts are made chiefly of bamboo, and placed under the shade of cocoa-nut trees with a fence before them, within which the plaintain, banana, yam, sugar-cane, &c., are cultivated. The island produces, besides the plants above mentioned, betel-nuts, mangoes, bread-fruit, and guavas. Here are also dogs, hogs, poultry, and some spices. The nutmeg was seen by Captain Hunter, who anchored in Port Hunter Bay, in this island, in 1791. Long. 151. 20. E. lat. 4. 7. S.

DUKE'S COUNTY, in the state of Massachusetts. See MARTHA'S VINEYARD.

DULAS, a village of Wales, in the Isle of Anglesea; 10 miles N.W. of Beaumaris. It stands on the Irish sea, at the mouth of a river of the same name; and is much frequented on account of the corn and butter trade, and for fern ashes and kelp.

There are several small rivers in different parts of Wales, named Dulas, and also a village in Herefordshire.

DULCIGENO, a town of European Turkey, in Albania; seated at the mouth of the river Bosnia; 15 miles S.W. of SCUTARI (which see). Long 18. 56. E. lat. 42. 23. N. Pop. about 8000.

DULEEK, a town of Ireland, in the county of Meath, formerly the see of a bishop, but now an inconsiderable place. It is seated near the S. bank of the river Boyne; 3 miles S.W. of Drogheda, and 21 N. by W. of Dublin.

DULKEN, a town of the Prussian states, lying about midway between the Rhine and the Maese; 20 miles N. by W. of Juliers. Pop. about 4000.

DULMEN, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster; 14 miles S.W. of Munster. Pop. about 1800.

DULVERTON, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday, and manufactures of coarse woollen cloths and blankets. It is seated near the Ex; 20 miles S. of Minehead, and 165 W. by S. of London.

DULWICH, a beautifully sequestered village in Surrey; 4 miles S. of London. It is famous for a college, founded by Edward Alleyn, a comedian, called the College of God's Gift; to which is attached a gallery, containing a beautiful collection of paintings; the village is seated in a vale.

DUMARINO, a town of the island of Borneo, on the E. coast. Long. 117. 30. E. lat. 2. 10. N.

DUMBARTON, COUNTY OF, sometimes called Dunbarton, formerly Lennox, formed of a narrow strip of territory between the lowlands and the highlands of Scotland, extending W. from near the Frith of Forth, for about 25 miles, to the mouth of the Clyde, and then N. for about 25 miles more, between Loch Long and Loch Lomond, the mean breadth not exceeding 5 miles; the Grand Canal from the Clyde to the Forth runs along the E. part of the county, which is divided into 12 parishes: the principal towns and villages are Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, in the E. part; Kirkpatrick, Kilpatrick, Dumbarton, Cardross, Bonhill, and Kilmarnock, in the centre; and Roseneath, Row, Lap, and Arroquhar, in the N. It returns one member to parliament. The cotton manufacture is carried on in the central part of the county, and illicit distillation in the N.

DUMBARTON, the chief town of the preceding county, is a royal burgh; seated on the N. bank of the Clyde, at the junction of the Leven, the outlet of Loch Lomond; on a point of land formed by the junction of the two rivers is a castle, occupying a very commanding position, and formerly deemed the key of the passage between the lowlands and the highlands, on the W., as well as commanding the navigation of the Clyde. The town consists principally of one long street, in the form of a crescent, parallel with the Leven, over which is a handsome bridge of five arches. It has a handsome church, with a lofty spire, erected at the close of the last century. Its principal manufacture is glass; a portion of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton manufacture in connexion with Glasgow. It has a convenient port for small vessels, and a quay; is on a railway between Glasgow and Loch Lomond; and, with Renfrew, &c., it sends one member to parliament. It is 12 miles W.N.W. of Glasgow.

DUNBLANE. See DUNBLANE.

DUMBOOC, or DOMBOO, a salt lake on the north frontier of Bournou, in the interior of North Africa, from whence much salt is carried to Agades and other parts of western Africa; there is a considerable town, of the same name, on the W. side of the lake, which is S. of the tropic of Cancer, in the long. of 21. 50. E.

DUMDUM, a military village and extensive cantonment of Hindostan, 6 miles E. N. E. of Calcutta, it is the head-quarters of the Bengal artillery. The buildings adjoin a large plain used as a practice ground.

DUMFRIES, a county of the S. of Scotland, being about 65 miles in extreme length from E. to W., and 30 in mean breadth, its superficial area being 672,000 Scotch acres; it is bounded on the N. by the counties of Ayr, Lanark, Peebles, Selkirk, and Roxburgh; E. S. E. by the English border, W. S. W. by Kirkcudbrightshire, and S. by the Solway Frith; it is intersected from N. to S. by three considerable rivers, abundant in salmon and trout, viz. the Nith, Annan, and Esk, all running from the N. into Solway Frith, and is divided into 44 parishes, including four royal burghs, viz. Dumfries, Annan, Lochmaben, and Sanquhar, and sends one member to parliament. A great part of this county is mountainous, overspread with heath, well stocked with game, and affording pasture to numerous herds of sheep and black cattle, which are driven into England in great numbers; the valleys, watered by the three rivers before mentioned, and the coast bordering on the Frith, are fertile both in pasture and tillage; the mountains in the N.W. part of the county contain a bed of rich lead ore, yielding a small portion of silver; coal and lime abound over the greater part of the county, and on the English border both copper and iron have been found; the county also contains a vein of antimony, and two mineral springs. It has no manufactures of importance.

DUMFRIES, a royal burgh, and chief town of the preceding county; seated on the E. bank of the river Nith, where that river forms the boundary between the counties of Dumfries and Kirkcubright, and about 9 miles above its entrance into Solway Frith. Dumfries is a port of entry, but its external commerce is inconsiderable (except coastwise); it derives its chief importance from being the assize town for the county of Kirkcubright, as well as for Dumfries, and from being the seat of the commissary and sheriff court, and of the presbytery and synod, while the agreeableness of its locality renders it the focus of gaiety and fashion for all the S.W. part of Scotland. It has two bridges over the Nith, one of them ancient, the other modern and elegant, two churches, a catholic chapel, and four dissenting places of worship. Its other public buildings are the town-house, guildhall, infirmary, house of correction, and lunatic asylum. In conjunction with Sanquhar, &c., it sends one member to parliament. Dumfries is on the Glasgow and S.W. Railway; 75 m. S.W. of Edinburgh, 79 S.S.E. of Glasgow, and 80 E.N.E. of Port-Patrick. It is the place of internment of Burns.

DUN, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, on the river Meuse; 15 miles N. N.W. of Verdun.

DUN LE ROI, a town of France, in the department of Cher, on the river Auron; 15 miles S. of Bourges.

DUNAGHY, a town of Ireland, county of Antrim, on the Ravel water; here is a chalybeate spa.

DUNAMUNDE, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga. It formerly belonged to the duchy of Courland, but was taken by the Swedes in their wars with the Poles. In 1700 it was taken by the Poles, and retaken the next year by Charles XII. In 1710 it was taken by Peter the Great. It is situated at the mouth of the Dwina; 15 miles N.W.

of Riga, to which it is the outpost, and 20 N. of Mittau. Long. 23. 41. E. lat. 57. 5. N.

DUNABURGH, a town of Russia, in the government of Vitepsk; seated on the E. bank of the Divena, about 100 miles above Riga. The Russians formed extensive entrenchments near this place in 1812, but abandoned them on the approach of the French towards Moscow. Pop. about 6000.

DUNBAR, a town of Haddingtonshire, on the S.E. coast of Scotland; seated on the shore of a bay opening into the German Ocean; the harbour, defended by a battery, is difficult of access, but safe and commodious when attained. It is a port of entry, but its foreign commerce is inconsiderable; it has a yard for ship-building, a ropery, soap-work, and one or two iron foundries; it exports a considerable quantity of corn to the London market, and the inhabitants in the season pursue the herring fishery with much industry. Here was anciently a castle, now in ruins, which stood on a rock, and, before the use of artillery, was deemed impregnable. Under the rock are two natural arches, through which the tide flows; and between the harbour and the castle is a stratum of vast basaltic columns of red stone, interspersed with veins of jasper. Dunbar is distinguished in various periods of Scottish history through several centuries, and was formerly deemed of much greater importance than at present. It was created a royal burgh about the middle of the 14th century, and contributes, with Haddington, &c., in sending one member to parliament. The parish extends for about 9 miles along the coast. It is 27 miles E. of Edinburgh, and 29 N.W. of Berwick-on-Tweed. Lat. 56. N. and 2. 30. of W. long. On the North British Railway.

DUNBARTON. See DUMBARTON.

DUNBLANE, or DUNBLANE, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, formerly a bishop's see, with a magnificent cathedral; it is 6 miles N. of Stirling, on the Central Railway.

DUNCANSBY, or DUNGISBY HEAD, the extreme N.E. point of Great Britain, in the lat. of 58. 40. N. and 3. 8. of W. long.

DUNDALK, a parish and town on the E. coast of Ireland, in the county of Louth, and of which it is the assize and chief town. The town is seated at the mouth of a small river, falling into a bay of the same name. It participates largely in the linen manufacture, and is distinguished for a manufacture of fine cambrics, established in 1737. It has a custom-house, and an elegant town-hall, and other public buildings. It is 18 miles N. of Drogheda, and 12 S. of Newry. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

DUNDEE, a seaport of Scotland, seated at the S. extremity of Angus, or Forfarshire, on the N. shore of the Frith of Tay, which forms a convenient and commodious harbour for ships of large burden. Next to Edinburgh and Glasgow, Dundee is the most manufacturing and commercial town in Scotland; independent of its extensive coasting trade, it imports a large quantity of flax and other products direct from the Baltic, and employs several ships in the Greenland whale fishery. Its manufactures consist of sail-cloth, cotton, baggings, osnaburgs, and other heavy linen fabrics, and coloured sewing threads. The town consists of four principal streets, diverging from a square in the centre; the public buildings are a town-house, trades-hall, infirmary, orphan and lunatic asylum, three churches, and a theatre, and is the junction of the Perth and Newtyle and Arbroath Railway. Dnudee was erected into a royal burgh in 1165, and has been exposed to the repeated ravages of the contending parties which have prevailed in Scotland since that period; the last time it suffered from such cause was in the time of Cromwell, when it was taken by assault, and given up to pillage by the troops under General Monk, who shared 60*l.* a man from the booty they obtained. It is 22 miles E. of Perth, and 42 N.E. of Edinburgh. Lat. 56. 27. N. and 3. 3. of W. long.

DUNDONALD, a village S. of Irvine, in Ayrshire, Scotland, abounding in excellent coal. The cotton manufacture is also carried on in the village.

DUNFERMLINE, a royal burgh of Scotland, in Fifeshire; seated near the S.W. extremity of the county; about 3 miles from the N. shore of the Frith of Forth. It is celebrated for its once magnificent abbey, which fell a prey to the plundering army of Edward I., and as the place of interment of Malcolm Canmore, the founder of the abbey, seven other Scottish monarchs, five queens, and several of the most eminent persons who figure in Scottish history. Dunfermline has been celebrated in later times for its extensive manufacture of fine table-linen, and still ranks among the most important manufacturing towns of Scotland. The town is well built on an eminence, and commands some beautiful prospects of the surrounding country; its public buildings consist of a town-house, an elegant guildhall, &c. It returns one member to parliament, and is 17 miles N.W. of Edinburgh, on the Stirling Railway.

DUNGANNON, a town of Ireland, in the S. E. part of the county of Tyrone. It returns a member to the imperial parliament. It is 11 m. N. by W. of Armagh, and 73 from Dublin.

DUNGARVAN, a town of Ireland, seated at the head of a bay in the county of Waterford; although the harbour is safe and convenient, it is not a port of entry; its principal trade consists of potatoes and fish, for the Dublin market. It returns one member to the parliament of the United Kingdom, and is frequented, in the summer season, for sea-bathing; the principal object of the town is the ruin of an ancient castle; 17 m. W. by S. of Waterford, in the lat. of 52. 2. N. and 7. 35. of W. long.

DUNGENESS, a celebrated promontory, forming the S.E. point of the county of Kent, England, at the entrance to the Straits of Dover; the light-house is in the lat. of 50. 55. 1. N. and 0. 57. 48. of E. long.

DUNGIVEN, a town in Ireland, county of Londonderry. Here are the ruins of a very ancient church, and also of a castle; 183 m. from Dublin.

DUNKELD, a town of the highlands of Scotland, seated on the N. bank of the river Tay, in a delightfully romantic part of the county of Perth. It was the capital of ancient Caledonia; and, at an early period, a Pictish king founded here a monastery of Culdees, which was converted into a bishopric by David I., in 1130, and, for a length of time, held the first rank in Scotland. The choir of the cathedral is still entire, and serves for the parish church. At a more recent period it was much frequented as a place of fashionable retreat, and for obtaining goats' whey; but this practice has ceased. The town and surrounding country is claimed by the Duke of Argyle, as his exclusive property; and as such, he has converted the whole of the adjacent vicinity to his own immediate purpose and gratification; there is an elegant bridge of seven arches over the Tay. Dunkeld is the chief market town of the highlands; it is 15 miles N. of Perth, on the line of the military road to Fort Augustus and Inverness.

DUNKIRK, in French, DUNKERQUE, a seaport of France, in the department of Nord. It was taken from the Spaniards by the English and French in 1658, and put into the hands of the English, but sold to the French by Charles II., in 1662. Louis XIV. made it one of the best fortified ports in the kingdom; but all the works were demolished, and the basins filled up, in consequence of the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. The French afterwards resumed the works; but they were ordered to be demolished at the peace of 1763. They continued thus till the peace of 1783, when the works were again resumed; and the next year it was declared a free port. The English attempted to besiege this place in 1793, but were obliged to retire with loss. Dunkirk is divided into the old and new town, is well built, uninteresting, has a spacious market-place, and an elegant modern built church; as a seaport it is now but of little note, and suffers from the want of good water. It is the seat of a prefect; 16 miles E. by N. of Calais. Pop. in 1836, 23,808.

DUNKIRK, a village of New York, on Lake Erie. The harbour has been much improved, and is greatly resorted to. It is intended to be the termination of the New York and Erie railroad; length, 470 miles. Dunkirk is 362 miles W. of Albany.

DUNLEARY. See KINGSTOWN.

DUNMOW, a corporate town in Essex, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on a hill; 13 miles N.N.W. of Chelmsford, and 38. N.E. of London.

DUNMOW, LITTLE, a village 2 miles from Dunmow. It had once a monastery, built in 1103, and part of the priory now forms the parish church. This place is famous for the tenure of its manor; namely, that whatever married couple will go to the priory, and swear they have not repented of their marriage, within a year and a day after it took place, shall receive a fitch of bacon. The first grant of this description took place in the reign of Henry VI., and the last in 1751.

DUNNER HEAD, an extensive promontory of Scotland, in the county of Caithness. Its N. extremity, in the Pentland Firth, is the most northern point of Great Britain. Long. 3. 29. W. lat. 58. 42. N. It gives name to a bay on the W.; and on the E. shore of which is a village of the same name. See THURSO.

DUNNING, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire; 59 miles from Edinburgh, near the Scottish Central Railway.

DUNNOSE, a cape in the English Channel, on the S.E. side of the Isle of Wight.

DUNSEE, a town of Scotland, the largest in Berwickshire. Here is a woollen manufacture, and celebrated mineral well, similar to that of Tunbridge, in England. It is situate under a hill, near the river Whiteadder; 14 miles W. of Berwick, and 40 E.S.E. of Edinburgh. It is the birthplace of Joannes Duns Scotus, in 1274. It has a branch to the N. British Railway.

DUNSHANE, or DINSINNAN, a hill 6 miles N.E. of Perth, in Scotland, 1024 feet above the level of the sea; immortalized by the English poet Shakspere, in his drama of Macbeth.

DUNSTABLE, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is of great antiquity, having been ruined by the Danes, and restored by Henry I., who made it a borough, but no members were ever sent to parliament. The church is the remainder of a priory, and opposite to it is a farm house, once a royal mansion built by Henry I. Dunstable consists principally of one long street, and is celebrated for its manufacture of straw for bonnets, &c. It is seated on the verge of a range of chalk hills, which extend across the counties of Bedford, Buckingham, and Oxford. Large quantities of larks are caught in its vicinity, and sent to the London market. It is 33 miles N.N.W. of London, near the London and Birmingham railway.

DUNSTAFENAGE, a castle of Scotland, in Argyleshire, one of the first seats of the Pictish and Scottish monarchs. Here was long preserved the famous stone, used as the coronation seat of the Scottish monarchs, which was removed to Scone by Kenneth II., and thence by Edward I., in 1206, to Westminster Abbey, where it now remains as an appendage to the coronation chair. Some of the ancient regalia still continue in the castle; and near it is a small roofless chapel, of elegant architecture, where several of the kings of Scotland are said to be interred. It stands on a promontory, almost insulated, at the entrance of Loch Etive; 24 miles N.W. of Inverary.

DUNSTER, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Friday. It has a castle, on a steep knoll; and at one corner of the terrace is an ancient turret, supposed to be part of the original castle, built in the time of William I. A priory stood on the N.W. side of the castle, part of which now serves for the parish church. It stands on the edge of a vale, near the Bristol channel; 20 miles N.W. of Taunton, and 161 W. of London.

DUNWICH, a village in Suffolk. It was formerly a bishop's see, and had many churches, which have been swallowed up by the sea; 24 miles S. of Yarmouth, and 100 N. of London.

There are numerous other towns and villages in England, the names of which begin with Dun, a Saxon word, signifying a down, or level place, or country.

DUPLIN, an interior county, in the S.E. part of the state of North Carolina, watered by the N. E. branch of Cape Fear river. Pop. 11,182.

DURANCE, a river in the S.E. of France, which is formed near Briançon, of the rivulets Dure and Ance, and flows by Embrun, Tullard, Sisteron, Manosque, Cavailon, and Avignon, into the Rhone.

DURANGO, a town of Spain, in Biscay; 14 miles S.E. of Bilboa. It is an important military point, and was the scene of some of the infamous incidents of the Carlist war in 1839. Pop. about 3000.

DURANGO, a division of Mexico, extending from the lat of 24. to 32. N., comprising the greater portion of the late province of New Biscay; intersected from S. to N. by the main ridge of the Andes. Its superficial area is computed at 129,247 square miles, and a population of 159,700. The chief town, of the same name, is seated near the S. end of the province, in the lat. of 24. 10. N. and 104. of W. long., at an elevation of 6854 feet above the level of the sea. It is about 520 miles N.W. of the city of Mexico. Pop. about 12,000.

DURAZZO, a town of European Turkey, capital of Albania, and a Greek archbishop's see. It has a ruined fortress, and a good harbour on the Gulf of Venice; 50 miles N. of Avlona. Long. 19. 36. E. lat. 41. 25. N. Pop. 5000.

DURBUNGA, a town of Hindostan, in Bahar, near the Gogary; 50 miles N.E. of Patna.

DURBUY, a town of Holland, in Luxemburg; seated on the Ourthe; 25 miles S. by W. of Liege, and about the same distance E. by S. of Namur.

DURHAM, a maritime county on the N.E. coast of England, bounded on the S. and S. W. by the river Tees, which divides it from Yorkshire. The western extremity of the county juts upon Westmoreland and Cumberland, and on the N. the rivers Derwent and Tyne divide it from Northumberland. The line of coast from the mouth of the Tees to the Tyne is about 32 miles; but in its extreme extent from N. to S. the distance is 36 miles, and from E. to W. about 40 miles, and contains 702,080 acres. All the W. part of the county is mountainous, some of the peaks rising upwards of 2000 feet above the level of the sea; from these mountains rises the river Wear, which, by its circuitous course and collateral streams, waters all the interior parts of the county. The chief characteristic of this county is its coal mines, which yield about two million tons annually, chiefly for the supply of London, and the E. and S.E. parts of England. The rivers and coasts abound in salmon and other excellent fish, while the E. and S.E. parts of the county yield a surplus of agricultural produce, both in grain and cattle; it owns also a considerable extent of shipping, employed chiefly in the conveyance of its coal, which, together with some lead, iron, and millstones, constitute its chief commerce. The principal towns besides the capital, of the same name, are Stockton, Darlington, and Barnard Castle, on the N. bank of the Tees; Gateshead and South Shields, on the S. bank of the Tyne; Monk Wearmouth, Bishop's Wearmouth, and Sunderland, at the mouth of the Wear; Bishop's Auckland, Chester-le-Street, &c., in the interior. It is divided into the N. and S. divisions, and returns two members for each.

DURHAM CITY, the chief place and capital of the preceding county, is seated on the banks of the river Wear, about the centre of the county, on the line of the great high road from London to Edinburgh; 10 miles from the sea in a direct line, about 20 from the mouth of the Wear, by the course of the stream, 14 from the Tyne at Newcastle, 19 from the Tees at Darlington, 242 in a meridional line, and 255 by the line of road N. by W. of London. It was created a bishop's see by a king of Northumberland, prior to the conquest; who, out of devotion, conferred the whole county of Durham upon St. Cuthbert, a monk of Lindisfarne, its first bishop, and his successors for ever. This grant was confirmed by William, the Norman conqueror, who constituted it a principality, or county palatine; hence the county is sometimes designated the principality of Durham. The cathedral was founded towards the close of the 11th century, and is a magnificent edifice, upwards of 400 feet in length, seated on an eminence, 80 feet above the surface of the river; the principal tower is 214 feet in height. Besides the cathedral, there are six other churches, three of them fine edifices; two Roman Catholic, and several dissenting places of worship. Durham has also a stately castle, founded by William the Norman, now occupied by the bishop and the university, and several public buildings more immediately belonging to the city; while the goal, house of correction, courts, and governor's house for county purposes, have all been recently rebuilt in a handsome style. The university of Durham, recently founded, is endowed with ample revenues, derived from the cathedral and bishopric. There are three bridges over the river; and, on the whole, the city of Durham presents a very interesting and imposing aspect, and is celebrated in English history. It returns two members to parliament; market on Thurs.; it has no manufacture of importance. It has a branch to the York and Newcastle Railway.

There are several towns named Durham in different parts of the United States of North America; the only one deserving of notice is in Stafford county, New Hampshire. Near it is a rock computed to weigh 60 tons, so exactly poised on another rock, as to be easily moved with a finger. It is situate on Oyster River, near its junction with the Piscataqua; 16 miles W. of Portsmouth.

DURKHEIM, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine; seated on the river Hardt; 17 miles S.W. of Worms.

DURKHEIM, or TURKHEIM, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, where the French gained a victory over the Austrians in 1675. It is 4 miles N.W. of Colmar.

DURLACH, a town of Swabia, capital of Baden-Durlach, with a castle. It was formerly the seat of government of the grand duke of Baden, who transferred his residence to Carlsruhe, since the peace of 1814. Here are manufactures of porcelain, cloth, and stuffs. It is seated on the Giessen; 15 miles N.N.E. of Baden. Long. 8.35. E. lat. 48.58. N. Pop. 4900.

EBERSTEIN, a town and castle of Suabia; 8 miles S. by E. of Baden.

EBERVILLE, a town of France, in the department of Puy de Dome, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Scioule; 8 miles N. of Riom.

EBINGEN, a town of Wirtemberg, noted for its cheese; 7 miles S. of Hohenzollern. Pop. 3800.

EBRO, a river of Spain, the ancient Iberus, which rises in the mountains of Asturias, on the confines of Leon, about 60 miles from the shore of the Bay of Biscay, runs E. across the N. part of Old Castile, and afterwards, in a direction E.S.E., forming the boundary between that province and those of Biscay and Navarre: it then, in a S.E. direction divides Arragon into nearly two equal parts, intersecting the S. part of Catalonia, and, after a course of 300 miles in a meridional line, and about 400 by the course of the stream, past Logrono, Calahorra, Tudela, and Saragossa, falls into the Mediterranean, a few miles below Tortosa. There are several islands off its mouth, and a canal runs parallel with it through Arragon, used more for irrigation than navigation. The river is but little used for navigable purposes, on account of its numerous shoals and rapids.

ECCLEFECHAN, a town of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, noted for its great monthly market for cattle; 5 m. N. of Annan, and 15 E. of Dumfries, on the Caledonian Railway.

ECCLES, a parish of Lancashire, consisting of five townships, on the W. side of MANCHESTER (which see).

ECCLESALL BIERLOW, a township in the parish of, and contiguous to Sheffield, on the S.W. side. See SHEFFIELD.

ECCLESFIELD, a town and parish; 5 miles N. of Sheffield. See SHEFFIELD.

ECCLESHELL, a parish and town in Staffordshire, with a market on Friday. The bishop of Lichfield and Coventry has a castle here. It is seated on the river Sow; 7 miles N.W. of Stafford, and 148 of London. The parish consists of 21 small townships.

ECCLESIASTICAL STATE, or STATES OF THE CHURCH. See ROMAN STATES, &c.

ECHTERNACH, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, on the river Sour, surrounded by mountains; 18 miles N.E. of Luxemburg.

ECLJA, an episcopal and populous town of Spain, in Andalusia, with manufactures of leather and shoes, and a trade in wool and hemp. It is seated on the Xenil; 62 miles E. N.E. of Seville. Pop. 34,000.

ECKARDSBERG, a town and castle of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia; 10 miles S. W. of Naumburg.

ECKERNFORDE, a seaport of Denmark, in South Jutland, on a bay of the Baltic. Near the town is a fresh-water lake, which is connected with the bay. It is 14 miles N. W. of Kiel, in Holstein. Long. 10.1. W. lat. 54.33. N.

ECKMÜHL, a small town of Bavaria, near to which Buonaparte defeated the Austrians, in April, 1809; it is 13 miles S. by E. of Ratisbon, and about the same distance W. of Straubing, S. of the Danube.

ECLOO, a town of Belgium in East Flanders. It is generally very well built and has an active trade; 15 miles east of Bruges. Pop. in 1836, 8730.

ECUADOR. See COLOMBIA.

EDAM, a town of North Holland, famous for its red rind cheeses; seated on the E. near the Zuider Zee; 11 miles N. E. of Amsterdam.

EDDYSTONE, the name of some rocks in the English channel, lying S. S. W. from the middle of Plymouth Sound, at the distance of 14 miles. On the principal rock (for the rest are under water), Mr. Winstanley built a lighthouse, in 1700, which was destroyed by a storm in 1703, and the projector perished in it. In 1709, another, built of wood, was erected by Mr. Rudyard, which was consumed by fire in 1755. Within four years after, one was built by Mr. Smeaton, which also was burnt down in 1770; and another, of stone, was completed by him in 1774, which has hitherto withstood the fury of the elements. The building, one of the artificial wonders of England, to the height of 33 feet from the foundation, is a solid mass of stones, dovetailed into each other; above this are four rooms, one over the other, and at the top a gallery and lantern, with a beautiful lens apparatus erected in 1842. The new and elegant brass light room or lantern was erected in 1848. It is nearly 80 feet high; and its distance from the Ram Head, the nearest point of land, is 12 miles. Long. 4. 24. W. lat. 50. 8. N.

EDEN, or EHDEN, a village on Mount Lebanon, pachalic of Tripoli, in Syria, near the celebrated cedars. See BSURRAI.

EDEN, a river of Scotland, which rises in Perthshire, on the confines of Fifeshire, and flows through the latter county, by Cupar, into the German Ocean, at the bay of St. Andrews. Also another river in Scotland, in Berwickshire, falling into the Tweed; and another, which rises in Westmorland, on the confines of Yorkshire. It runs N. by Appleby into Cumberland, and thence flows by Kirkoswald and Carlisle, into Solway Frith.

EDENBORO, a town of North Carolina, capital of Chowan county: it formerly gave name to an extensive district, now divided into eight or nine counties, in the N. E. corner of the state. It is situate on Albemarle Sound, at the mouth of the Chowan; 110 miles E.

by N. of Raleigh. Long. 77. 5. W. lat. 35. 38. N.

EDRESSA, or VODENA, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, once the residence of the Macedonian kings. It is seated near the Vicietria; 44 miles W. N. W. of Salonich. Long. 22. 3. E. lat. 40. 50. N.

EDFOU, or EDFU, a town of Upper Egypt, the ancient Apollinopolis Parva, of which the principal remains are the ruins of two splendid temples, which are sumptuous specimens of the ancient Egyptian architecture, the work of the Ptolemies.

EDGARTON. See MARTHA'S VINEYARD.

EDGNASTON, an out-parish of the town of BIRMINGHAM (which see).

EDGEcombe, MOUNT, a hill on the W. side of the harbour of Devonport, from the summit of which is an enchanting prospect of the surrounding country, and the English Channel.

EDGEcombe, an interior county on the E. part of N. Carolina, intersected by Tar river. Pop. 14,993. Tarborough, 60 miles E. of Raleigh, is the chief town.

EDGEFIELD, a district of S. Carolina, bounded on the S. W. by the Savannah river, comprising about 1500 square miles of surface. Pop. 32,852. The chief town, of the same name, in the centre of the county, is 63 miles E. S. E. of Columbia, and 140 S. S. E. of Savannah.

EDGEHILL, a village in Warwickshire, 14 miles S. of Warwick, memorable for the first battle fought between Charles I. and the parliament, in 1642: from the brow of the hill there is an extensive and delightful prospect over the vale of Rothorse.

EDGEWARE, a town in Middlesex; market on Thursday. It stands on the Roman road leading to St. Albans; 8 miles N. W. of London.

EDGEWORTHSTOWN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Longford; 66 miles from Dublin. This is the birthplace of Maria Edgeworth, and the residence of her father, Lovel Edgeworth, well known in the literary world.

EDINBURGHSHIRE, or MID LOTHIAN, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Frith of Forth, E. by the shires of Haddington, Berwick, and Roxburgh, S. by those of Selkirk, Peebles, and Lanark, and W. by Linlithgowshire. It is divided into 31 parishes, comprising an area of 230,000 acres, and sends one member to parliament. The soil is fertile, and produces corn of all sorts, with plenty of grass; also coal, iron, limestone, and black marble. The principal rivers are the N. and S. Esk, Leith, Almond, and Gala, all flowing into the Frith of Forth. See SCOTLAND.

EDINBURGH CITY, the chief place of the preceding county, and metropolis of Scotland, is seated about 1½ mile from the S. shore of the Frith of Forth, in the lat. of 55. 53. N., and 3. 13. of W. long.; 341 miles in the meridional line, and 398 by the mail line of road

N.N.W. of London. It is surrounded by hills on every side but the N., and which form a magnificent amphitheatre; on the E. are Arthur's Seat and Salisbury Crags—a range of almost perpendicular rocks; and the Calton hill, on the summit of which is erected the portico of a temple, intended when finished, to be a model of the Parthenon at Athens; a column to the memory of Lord Nelson, and an observatory; a road entering the town from the E. was cut through this rock in 1814. On the S. are the Pentland hills, and the hills of Braid; and on the W. are the Corstorphine hills. The improvements of Edinburgh date from 1753, previous to which it had remained stationary for centuries, since that time the increase of handsome edifices, and its fine situation, have acquired for it the designation of the Modern Athens. Edinburgh is divided into three parts, standing on as many hills, which run from E. to W. in a direction almost parallel. On the middle ridge, which is narrow and steep, stands the Old Town; the New Town on the north is seated on an elevated plain, gently sloping on every side; and the Southern District stands also on a similar sloping eminence. The main or High Street of the Old Town is built along the centre ridge, 5570 feet in length, terminated at one end by Holyrood House, and at the other by a castle, seated on a high, craggy, and precipitous rock, 300 feet high, with a draw-bridge on the only accessible side: here is shown the apartment in which was born James VI., of Scotland, afterwards James I. of England. In the High Street is the collegiate church of St. Giles, a fine gothic structure, which has four places of public worship under its roof. Near this is the building in which the Scotch parliament were convened: it is now occupied by the courts of justice; and has a magnificent lofty hall. The palace of Holyrood House forms a grand quadrangle, with a court in the centre surrounded by piazzas: the N.W. towers were built by James V., and the whole was completed in the reign of Charles II. A spacious gallery here is hung with the pictures of 111 monarchs, from Fergus I., who reigned in 403, to James VI.—the greatest part of them imaginary. In the N.W. tower is shown the chamber where Queen Mary sat at supper, when Rizzio was dragged from her side and murdered, and the private staircase by which Ruthven entered with the assassins, to perpetrate the savage deed. Adjoining are magnificent ruins of an abbey, founded by David I., and converted by Charles II. into a royal chapel. The university, which was founded by James VI., in 1580, is celebrated throughout the world; and its medical school in particular is entitled to the first rank. The High School of Edinburgh has also been long famous for the scholars it has produced. Of the other buildings a few only can be noticed; the royal exchange, the register office, the physicians' hall; Heriot's hospital, for the education of 140 poor boys; Watson's hospital, royal infirmary, the public dispensary, and some other public charities. The city of Edinburgh is divided into 11 parishes, and 4 in the suburbs, and returns two members to parliament. The churches, both presbyterian and episcopal, and other places of worship, of various denominations, are numerous, and some of them beautiful edifices. It is now nearly united by its suburbs to the port of Leith, on the Frith of Forth, the principal residence of the merchants. There are two mineral springs near the village of Stockbridge, on the N., much frequented for scrofulous diseases, &c., one called St. Bernard's Well, surmounted by a beautiful temple erected by Lord Gardenstone; the other, St. John's Well. Edinburgh, as a whole, is a beautiful, picturesque, and interesting place. It is governed by a lord provost, a dean of guild, a guild council, and 25 common council. Here are 14 incorporated trades, each having its deacon or warden. Its principal importance is derived from the courts of justice, and the university and medical schools, which render it the focus of science and literature, and of polite society. Its manufactures are inconsiderable. Two miles to the S. are the remains of Craigmillar Castle, the residence of James V., during his minority, and of Queen Mary, after her return from France in 1562.

EDISTO, a river of South Carolina, which, after a course of about 140 miles, falls into the Atlantic Ocean by two channels, about 40 miles S. of Charleston. The island, formed by the divergence of the stream, contains about 3000 inhabitants, the greater part of whom are slaves.

EDKO, a lake and town of Lower Egypt, 15 miles S.W. from Rosetta.

EDMORTON, a village of Middlesex, England; six miles N. of Shoreditch church, London, on the great high road to Edinburgh.

EDWARDS, a county on the E. frontier of the state of Illinois; bounded by the great Wabash river; 35 miles from S. to N. and about 30 in mean breadth: the little Wabash intersects the W. side of the county; and, towards the S. part, between the two rivers, 40 miles above their entrance into the Ohio, is an English settlement, founded by an adventurer of the name of Birkbeck, in 1813; being a level country, the settlement is designated Birkbeck's Prairie.

EELCOO, a populous town of Belgium; 11 miles N. by W. of Ghent.

EFFERDING, a town of Austria, with a castle seated near the S. bank of the Danube; 12 miles W. of Liatz.

EFFINGHAM, a village in Surrey; 12 miles N.E. of Guildford. It was once a much larger place, and supposed to have contained sixteen churches; wells, cavities like cellars, have been frequently found in the neighbouring fields and woods; and in the present church are some ancient stalls and monuments.

EFFINGHAM, a county in the state of Georgia, bordering on the Savannah river; its area comprises about 500 square miles. Pop. 3075, of whom 1433 are slaves. Springfield, the chief town, is 20 miles N.W. of the city of Savannah.

EGELN, a town and castle of Germany, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on the river Bode; 16 miles S.S.W. of Magdeburg.

EOENBURI, a town of Austria, noted for good wine; 13 miles S.W. of Znaim in Moravia.

EGER, a river in Germany, which rises in the principality of Culmbach, running in an E.N.E. direction through the circle of Saaz, and, after a course of about 120 miles, falls into the Elbe, near Leutmeritz.

EGER, a fortified town at the western extremity of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz, with a castle and college. It was taken by the French in 1742, but they were forced to evacuate it the next year, through famine. Here are manufactures of leather, hats, cloths, and stuffs; and its mineral waters are famous. It is seated on the Eger; 90 miles W. by N. of Prague. Long. 12. 27. E. lat. 50. 5. N. Pop. about 8000.

EGERSEG SZALA, a town of Lower Hungary, seated on the banks of the Szala, which falls into the S. end of Lake Balaton.

Egg, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S. of Skye, 5 miles in length, and from 2 to 3 in breadth. It is partly flat, and partly hilly and rocky, with some basaltic pillars. The low grounds are fertile.

EGG HARBOUR RIVER, and HARBOUR, GREAT and LITTLE, the former forming the S., and the other the N. boundary of Gloucester county, New Jersey; the harbours opening into the Atlantic Ocean, in the lat. of 39. 17. and 39. 30. N.

EGHAM, a village of England, in Surrey; 18 miles from Hyde Park Corner, London, on the great western road. On a plain, adjoining the river Thames, in this parish, known as Runnymede, the barons of England conferred with King John, and compelled him to sign Magna Charta, 19th June, 1215; which was done on a small island, still called Magna Charta Island.

EGLINGEN, a town of Suabia, capital of a lordship of the same name; 8 miles N. of Dillingen.

EGLSBAU, a town and castle of Switzerland, in the canton of Zurich; seated on the Rhine; 13 miles N. of Zurich.

EGMONT OP DEN HOEF, a village of Holland, in the province of North Holland; 3 m. W. by S. of Alkmaer. It appears to have been a considerable town, but was destroyed in 1573, by the enraged Spaniards, after their failure before Alkmaer. It now exhibits extensive and picturesque ruins, perhaps the only ruins in all Holland. Near it are two other villages: Egmont op Zee, a mile to the

W. on the sea-coast; and Egmont Binnen, nearly two miles to the S., where a bloody but undecisive battle was fought in 1799, between the allied English and Russian army, and the French and Dutch.

EGREMONT, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday. On the W. side is an artificial mount, with the ruins of a castle; and 3 miles S.E. of the town, in the wooded vale of the Calder, are the remains of the Calder abbey. Egremont is seated near the Irish sea, on the river Eden; 5 miles S.S.E. of Whitehaven, and 289 N.W. of London, near the Whitehaven and Furness Railway.

EGYPT, a country comprising the N.E. extremity of Africa, having about 400 miles of coast between Alexandria and El Arisch, including the indentations of lakes and bays. Cape Bourlos, its N. extremity, is in lat. 31. 36. N., from which point it extends inland to the frontier of Nubia, in the lat. of about 24. 31., giving a length of about 500 miles, while its boundaries E. and W. are very undefined. It is divided from Asia, at its N.E. extremity, by an extensive desert, and further S. by the Gulf of Suez and the Red sea. See SUEZ. It is bounded on the W. by the deserts of Barca and Libya, and parts of Africa but little known, and in its extreme limits from W. to E. may be considered as comprising about 2 degrees of long. or 122 statute miles, between 31. and 33. E.; the inhabited parts, however, do not exceed more than 15 to 25 miles on each side of the Nile, which runs in a direction N. by W. through the whole extent of Egypt, except for about 120 miles above its entrance into the Mediterranean, where it diverges into two main, and numerous collateral channels. This is called the Delta of the Nile; comprising an area of about 12,000 square miles, studded, over the greater part, with towns and villages. This country, so celebrated in history for its fertility, its policy and arts, appears first to have obtained pre-eminence under the renowned Sesostris, about 1720 years antecedent to the Christian era. For nearly four centuries prior to this period, Egypt appears to have been divided into several petty sovereignties, under what were then termed Hycsos, or Shepherd Kings, of whom Amasis or Thetmosis was the first who gained an ascendancy over his compeers: this ascendancy was acquired about 100 years prior to that of Sesostris; and it appears to have been the descendants of Amasis who were ruling in Egypt at the time of the death in western Asia, when Jacob and his family established themselves in the valley of Gessen, or Goshen, E. of the Nile. From the descendants of Amasis and Sesostris sprang the race of the Pharaohs, who ruled over Egypt for twelve centuries, until Cambyces, king of Persia, became master of it, 525 years n. c.; and in their time all those wonderful structures were raised, and were as perfected, which we cannot behold without astonishment. These are the pyramids, the labyrinths, the immense grottoes in the Thebaid, the obelisks, temples, and pompous palaces, the lake Mœris, and the vast canals which served both for trade and to irrigate the land. After this conquest, Cambyses demolished the temples, disinterred the remains of Amasis, and burnt them, and persecuted the priests. This country continued under the Persian yoke till the time of Alexander of Macedon, who, having conquered Persia, built the city of Alexandria. He was succeeded by Ptolemy, the son of Lagos, 324 years n. c. Ten kings of that name succeeded each other, till Cleopatra, the sister of the last Ptolemy, ascended the throne; when Egypt became a Roman province, and continued so till the reign of Omar, the second caliph of the successors of Mahomet, who drove out the Romans after it had been in their hands 700 years. When the power of the caliphs declined, in the 13 century, Saladin set up the empire of the Mamelukes, which in time became so powerful, that they extended their dominions over a great part of Africa, Syria, and Arabia. Next, about 1570, Egypt yielded to the arms of Selim, the second emperor of the Turks. The present inhabitants are composed of four different races of people: the Turks, who assume to be masters of the country; the Saracen Arabs, who were conquered by the Turks; the Copts, who are descended from the first Egyptians that became Christians; and the Mamelukes, who were originally Circassian or Mingrelian slaves, and, being the only military force, continued for centuries to be the real masters of the country; and Egypt had been for many years distracted by the civil wars between the different contending beys, by which its twenty-four provinces were governed. The famous Hassen Ali, the Turkish admiral, gained several victories over them in 1786; but though he repressed, he could not totally subdue them. The French invaded Egypt in 1798, under Gen. Buonaparte, who defeated the beys in several engagements; but after the departure of Buonaparte, and a strong British force arriving to aid the country, the French were expelled in 1801. But the Turkish pacha, Mehmet Ali, finding the power of the Mamelukes broken by their conflicts with the French, invited them to his palace, under pretext of an entertainment, and then commenced a general slaughter of them. A few escaped, but the power of these tyrants of Egypt, and the possessors of nearly all the land, was broken, and has now been reduced to insignificance. The complexion of the Egyptians is of a dusky brown; they are generally indolent and cowardly; and the lower class are disgustingly filthy in their persons: the richer sort do nothing all day but drink coffee, smoke tobacco, and sleep; and they are ignorant, proud, haughty, and ridiculously vain. But the Copts are an ingenious people, and have great skill in business. From March to November, the heat, to a European, is almost insupportable; but the other months are more temperate. The south winds, which occur at intervals, from February to the end of May, are by the natives called Khamsin, or poisonous winds, or the hot winds of the deserts; they are of such extreme heat and aridity, that no animated body exposed to them can withstand their fatal influence; and for the three days that they generally last, the streets are deserted. The sands are so subtle, that they penetrate into the closets, chests, and cabinets; which, with the hot winds, are probably the cause of ophthalmia being so very common here. It rains very seldom in Egypt; but that want is fully supplied by the annual inundation of the Nile. When the waters retire, all the ground is covered with mud; then the corn is harrowed into it, and in the following March there is usually a plentiful harvest. But some lands are never fallow, and yield three harvests annually; particularly, in Lower Egypt, where sowing and reaping are going on incessantly, wherever the water of the river can be obtained for irrigation. There is no place in the world better furnished with corn, flesh, fish, sugar, fruits, and all sorts of garden vegetables; and, in Lower Egypt, oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, are produced in great plenty. The ancient fertility of Egypt has been much extolled; that it was more so than at present, is problematical. The fact has lately been elicited, that the valley of the Nile, and the breadth of the cultivable land, has considerably and progressively increased, from the deposits of the Nile, which have in some places covered the ancient remains to the depth of seven feet; thus widening the ancient valley in proportion to the depth of the deposit. Lentils form a considerable article of food to the inhabitants of Upper Egypt, who rarely enjoy the luxury of rice; and onions, remarkably mild, and of the purest white, continue to be a favourite diet among all classes. The animals of Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes, black cattle, fine horses, large asses, crocodiles, hippopotami, the camel, the cerastes, or horned viper, and a kind of rat called ichneumon; eagles, hawks, pelicans, water-fowls of all kinds, and the ibis, which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and noxious insects. The pyramids of Egypt, so justly celebrated as evidences of human labour and art, are all built on rocky and sandy plains; the largest is 500 feet in height, and covers 11 acres of ground. They are situate on the south part of the Delta, or Lower Egypt, on the W. bank of the Nile. Egypt is now spoken of as divided into three parts—Lower, or the Delta, Middle, and Upper. During the reign of some of the Pharaohs, Thebes in Upper Egypt, in the lat. of 25. 25., appears to have been the capital of the whole country; afterwards transferred to Memphis, in the lat. of 29.; and during the reign of the Ptolemies the seat of the empire was transferred to Alexandria; whilst at the present time Cairo is the seat of government. Under Mehemet Ali, who has ruled since 1798, Egypt has made advances in enterprise and cultivation, almost without a precedent; and cotton, wool, indigo, sugar, and grain, are again forming the basis of an extensive external commerce. His government, however, was despotic, and his system monopoly; all the commerce was in his own hands; the manufacturer and the agriculturist deposited their produce in the public stores, and received a moderate remuneration for them. The pacha then retailed them for his own profit. He instituted European tactics in his army, and the usages and sciences of more civilized life into his government; and introduced many European men of science into the principal offices of the government. He was open to any suggestions, formerly thought incompatible with the Mussulman character. The destruction of the Mamelukes raised Mehemet Ali to almost absolute power, which he soon afterwards assumed, and by the force of arms wrested the provinces of Syria, Candia, and Cyprus from the Turkish sovereign. The invasion of Syria led to the intervention of the British, French, and Turkish arms, and consequently the fall of Acre to the British fleet, overthrew the power of the Egyptian pacha in Syria. He was confirmed in that of Egypt; but in 1848, from his great age, his faculties became impaired, and his son assumed the reins of government. Respecting the extent of the population of Egypt, information is very imperfect, both in reference to the past, as well as at the present time, being variously estimated at from two to four millions. According to the census of July 10, 1848, but of the accuracy of which we have no means of judging, it was 4,504,178, exclusive of Beorlos, the army, and the Beduin Arabs. Conjecture has hardly ever offered an opinion as to the number in former times. In further illustration of this very interesting section of the globe, see NILE, SUEZ, and THEBES.

EUINGEN, a town of Suabia; near which the Austrians were defeated by the French, in 1805. It is seated on the Danube; 12 miles S.W. of Ulm.

EUINGEN, another town of Suabia; seat on the Neckar, opposite Rotenberg; 6 miles W. by S. of Tubingen, and 25 S.S.W. of Stuttgart; both these towns are in the dominions of the king of Wurtemberg, and contain each about 4000 inhabitants.

EURENBREITSTEIN, ('the broad stone of honour') a fortress of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine, on the E. bank of the river Rhine, opposite Coblentz. It stands on the summit of a stupendous rock, not less than 800 feet above the level of the river, and is deemed impregnable. It has a communication with Coblentz by a subterraneous passage, cut out of the solid rock, and is plentifully supplied with water from a well 280 feet deep. In the vale of Ehrenbreitstein is an old palace which belonged to the Elector of Treves. This fortress surrendered to the French through famine, in 1799, after a blockade of above 20 months.

EINENSTOCK, or EYUENSTOCK, a town of Upper Saxony, in the circle of Erzeberg, near the N.W. frontier of Bohemia 60 miles S. by E. of Leipsic. Pop. 3200.

EICHSELDT, a territory of Germany, at the N.E. extremity of the circle of the Lower Rhine; surrounded by Brunswick, Thuringia, and Hesse. It produces much flax and tobacco. Heiligenstadt is the capital. It is now divided between Prussia and Hanover; it formerly belonged to the Elector of Mainz, and contained a population of 90,000, on a surface of about 600 square miles. Stadt Worbis and Mulhausen are the other principal towns.

EICHSTADT, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Regensburg, capital of the dominions of the Duke of Leuchtenberg. It is well built, and stands on the river Altmuhl. Here is the summer residence of the ducal family, a cathedral, palace, seminary, museums, &c. It has four suburbs, and at 1 mile distant is a castle on a height called Willibaldsburg, on the site of a Roman fortress. The principality, of which it is the capital, has about 217 square miles, and a pop. of 24,400. The town is 41 miles W.S.W. of Ratisbon. Pop. 7500 in 1840.

EIL. LOCH. See LINNIE, LOCH.

EILENNURG, a town of Upper Saxony, in Meisnia, situate on the Mulda; 12 miles N.E. of Leipsic.

EIMEO, one of the Society Isles, in the Pacific Ocean; lying 12 miles W. of Otaheite. The products of the two islands, and the manners of the people, are much the same. Eimeo has steep, rugged hills, running in different directions, leaving large valleys, and gently rising ground about their sides. The hills, though rocky, are generally covered with trees almost to the tops.

EINNECK, a fortified town of Hanover, in the principality of Grubenhagen. It was formerly celebrated for its beer, and now has manufactures of cloth, and all kinds of stuffs; and in the mountains near it are mines of silver, iron, copper, and lead. It is situate 17 miles N. of Gottingen, and 45 S. of Hanover. Pop. about 5400.

EISENACH, or EYSENACH, a town of Upper Saxony, at the western extremity of Thuringia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a celebrated college. The duke resides in a castle within the town; and there is another on a mountain out of it, called Wartburg, which, in 1521, was for some time the asylum of Luther. It is seated on the Nesse, at its conflux with the Horsa; 16 miles W. of Gotha. Long. 10. 21. E. lat. 51. 0. N. Pop. with its suburbs, 9325.

EISENARTZ, or EISENITZ, a town of Germany, in Styria, famous for its iron mines; 34 miles N.N.W. of Gratz.

EISENBERG, another town in Thuringia; 35 miles S.W. of Leipsic. Pop. 3500.

EISENSTADT, a town of Hungary, with a magnificent palace; 5 miles N.W. of Oldenburg, and 27 S. of Vienna.

EISLEBEN, a town of Upper Saxony, capital of the county of Mansfield, with a decayed castle. The celebrated Luther was born and died here. In the churches of St. Andrew and St. Ann are the superb burial places of the ancient counts of Mansfield. Eisleben contains many breweries, and derives much profit from the neighbouring iron mines. It is 28 miles N.N.W. of Naumburg. Long. 11. 47. E. lat. 51. 32. N.

EISSFELD, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Coburg, with a castle. It has manufactures of vitriol, &c., and stands on the Werra, near its source; 7 miles E. of Hildburghausen.

EJEA DE LOS CABALLEROS, a town of Spain, in Navarre. It is about 40 miles N. W. of Zaragoza. Pop. 2000.

EKATERINBURG. See CATHARINBURG.

ELBA, an island in the Mediterranean sea, between Italy and the island of Corsica, and separated from Tuscany by the channel of Piombino. It was known to the Greeks by the name of Æthalia, and to the Romans by that of Ilva. The form of the island is very irregular; the length from E. to W. is about 14 miles, and the greatest breadth, which is at the W. end, is between 8 and 9 miles: it contains a population of about 14,000 souls. The whole island presents numerous mountains, separated by deep valleys, and some plains of considerable extent; the S.W. part is the most elevated, and is composed of black and white granite, susceptible of a fine polish. Elba has been renowned for its mines of iron and loadstone, for a period beyond the reach of history. Aristotle speaks of them as opened from time immemorial: it has also quarries of fine marble. On the N.E. part is the mountain, or mine of iron ore, which supplies most of the forges of Italy. The tower of Voltorajo stands on this mountain, on a shaggy rock. The view from this tower is wonderfully fine every way, as the eye overlooks the whole island, that of Corsica, many scattered islets, the channel of Piombino, and a great range of continent. On the E. side of the mountain stands Rio, a village inhabited by miners. Utter it breaks out the only rivulet in Elba, which does not run above a mile before it falls into the sea; but the water gushes out of the rock in such abundance, that it turns seventeen mills in that short course. The soil of Elba is very shallow, with scanty room for cultivation, and few places level enough for corn, producing little more than six months' provisions for its inhabitants: but the island is so situate that it can, in spite of a blockading fleet, be always supplied with provisions, and the garrison with reinforcements. The wine is good, if made with care, and properly kept; the fruit of its standard trees are excellent, though not in great plenty; orange and lemon trees thrive very well in the sheltered valleys and narrow plains near the sea. There are several springs of excellent water in the island; and the climate is much milder than the adjacent continent, for it produces many fruits and plants that cannot stand the Tuscan winters. Among the animals and birds are wild boars, hedgehogs, partridges, quails, canary-birds, nightingales, ortolans, &c. This island was held with Piombino, &c. the Appiani, as a fief of the empire, till Charles V. thought proper to transfer it to Cosmo I. duke of Florence, that he might rescue it and the adjacent coast from the Turks and French. Before the French revolution, it was subject to the Prince of Piombino, except Porto Ferrajo and Porto Longone, the former belonging to the Duke of Tuscany, and the latter to the king of Naples; but in 1801 the French became possessed of the whole island, which owes its celebrity to the circumstance of its having been ceded by the powers of Europe in full sovereignty to Napoleon Bonaparte, after the surrender of Paris to the allies in March, 1814. He landed at Porto Ferrajo, the capital of the island, on the 4th of May in that year, but on the 26th of February following, he embarked again for France, and reached Paris without encountering the least obstruction; after which the island was wholly ceded to the Grand Duke of Tuscany; it is now incorporated with the new kingdom of Italy. Porto Ferrajo, on the N. side of the island, is in lat. 42. 50. N., and 10. 15. of E. long.

ELBE, a river of Europe, rising on the S. side of the Schneekoppe, one of the Riesengebirge mountains, on the N.E. frontier of Bohemia, bordering on Silesia, in the lat. of 50. 30. N. and 15. 35. of E. long., flows S. for about 40 miles past Koniggratz to Pardubitz, in the circle of Chrudim, from whence it takes a meandering course in a N. W. direction to Melnick, where it receives the Moldau from the frontiers of Austria on the S.: from Melnick it continues a winding course through the circle of Leutmeritz, in which it receives the Eger from the frontier of Franconia, on the W.S.W., and then enters the circle of Meissen in Upper Saxony, still running in a N.W. direction past Dresden in the duchy of Saxony to Magdeburg; from whence it takes a direction N. by E. to Havelberg, where it receives the Havel; from Havelberg, it intersects, in a N.W. direction, the Old Mark of Brandenburg, and then divides Mecklenburg Schwerin, and the duchy of Saxe Launenburg on the N., from Lüneburg Zell to Hamburg; from whence it becomes navigable for ships of the largest burthen, dividing for about 70 miles the duchy of Holstein on the N. from Bremen on the S., and, after a course of 380 miles in a meridional line, and upwards of 720 miles by the course of the stream, falls into the North Sea of Cuxhaven, in the lat. of 53.52. N. and 8.46. of E. long. The Elbe is rendered subservient to the purposes of navigation, and, by itself and numerous collateral branches, receives and distributes produce along various lines of country several hundred miles in extent. See LÜNEC.

ELBERFELD, a town of Rhenish Prussia, in the district of Dusseldorf; seated on the banks of the Wupper, which falls into the Rhine between Cologne and Dusseldorf. It is united with BARMEN; and the two contiguous towns form the most important manufacturing community in the Prussian dominions. Elberfeld, which has arisen entirely within the present century, is not regularly built, but contains some good houses. Its principal manufactures are silk; and there are cotton, linen, velvet, and lace manufactures; but the most celebrated of all its factories are those for dyeing the beautiful colour called Turkey red, in which the dyers have peculiar skill, so that considerable quantities of yarn are sent here from Glasgow and other parts to be dyed. Barmen is a long straggling town, consisting of several villages. It has four churches, and its manufactures are nearly the same as those of Elberfeld, with the addition of steel and plated articles, &c. It is estimated that nearly 16,000 hands are employed in the manufactures of the two towns. In 1846, Elberfeld had a population of 34,956, and Barmen of 32,984. Elberfeld is fifteen miles E. by N. of Dusseldorf; and twenty-three miles N.N.E. of Cologne.

ELBRIDGE, a township of the state of New York, traversed by the Erie canal, and by the Utica and Albany railroad; 13 miles W. of Syracuse, and 149 W. by N. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 4647.

ELBEUF, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine. It has extensive manufactures of cloth, and is seated on the Seine; 10 miles S. of Rouen, and 65 N.W. of Paris.

ELBERT, a county of the state of Georgia; lying between the Savannah and Broad rivers. Population 11,123, of whom 4975 were slaves. Elbert, the chief town, is 190 miles N.W. of the city of Savannah.

ELBING, a strong town of West Prussia, in the palatinate of Marienburg, with a considerable trade in butter, cheese, and corn. It is seated on a river of the same name, about 5 miles from its entrance into the Frische Hafl; 30 miles E.S.E. of Dantzic. Long. 19. 30. E. lat. 54. 18. N. Pop. about 18,000.

ELBOGEN, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz, with a citadel, seated on a mountain, by the river Eger; 10 miles N.E. of Eger.

ELBURG, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, on the E. coast of the Zuyder Zee; 10 miles N. E. of Harderwick.

ELCIB, ALBUFERA DE, a town of Spain, in Valencia. It is a "city of palm-trees," of which tens of thousands encircle the town, producing large quantities of dates; some are of a great age. It wants only the Bedouin, for it is quite a place of the east both in climate and appearance; the reddish houses of the Moors, with flat roofs and few windows, rising one above the other; winter is unknown here. It is surrounded by walls, and has some good streets and squares. The principal church has a majestic dome. There is a magnificent old castle, belonging to the Duke of Arcos. A large quantity of the dates are exported to England, under the name of Barbury dates. Barilla is also largely made and exported. Pop. including the suburbs, 22,828; 15 miles W.S.W. of Alicante.

ELCHINGEN, a village of Suabia, on the N. bank of the Danube, about 5 miles N.E. of Ulm, where a battle was fought between the French and Austrians, in 1805, which obtained for Ney, one of Buonaparte's generals, the title of Duke of Elchingen.

ELDA, a town of Spain, in Valencia; 20 miles W.N.W. of Alicante.

ELEPHANTA, called by the natives Gharipoor, an island on the W. coast of Hindostan; 5 miles from Bombay. It contains one of the most celebrated temples of the Hindoos. The figure of an elephant, of the natural size, cut coarsely in stone, appears on the landing-place, near the foot of a mountain. An easy slope then leads to a subterranean temple, hewn out of the solid rock, 80 feet long and 40 broad, the roof supported by rows of pillars 10 feet high. At the further end are gigantic figures of the three Hindoo deities, Brahma, Vishna, and Seva, which were mutilated by the zeal of the Portuguese, when this island was in their possession. Elephanta was ceded to the English by the Mahrattas.

ELEPHANTINA. See SYENE.

ELEETHS, a kingdom of Tartary, lying to the N.W. of Chinese Tartary. It was conquered in 1759 by the emperor of China. See KALMUCKS.

ELEUTHERA, or ETHERA, an island in the West Indies, one of the principal on the Bahama bank. It produces abundance of pine-apples, and there is a magnificent tunnel piercing the island at one end, formed by the sea, called the Glass Window; lat. 23. 28. N. long. 76. 37. W.

ELGIN, a burgh of Scotland, capital of Morayshire, and formerly the see of a bishop. Here are many large old buildings over piazzas. Its cathedral was one of the most magnificent structures in Scotland; of which its ruins are a sufficient proof. Two miles to the N.E., on the banks of a lake, is the palace of Spynie, formerly the residence of the bishop, of which some rooms are still pretty entire. Elgin stands on the Lossie, 5 miles from its port at Lossiemouth, where there is a tolerable harbour, whence much corn is exported. It sends, in conjunction with Cullen, &c. one member to parliament. It is 38 miles E.N.E. of Inverness, and 163 N. of Edinburgh.

ELGINSHIRE. See MORAYSHIRE.

ELINGS, a village of Hampshire, at the head of Southampton Bay, 5 miles W. of Southampton. Here are docks for building and repairing ships, and storehouses for merchandise and corn, in which last it carries on a considerable trade.

ELIZABETH CITY, a small county of Virginia, forming the promontory between the mouths of York and James Rivers, into Chesapeake Bay. Pop. 3706. The town is called Hampton, and gives name to the celebrated anchorage ground, called Hampton Roads, at the entrance of James River. A town of the same name is seated on the Pasquotank River, in North Carolina, which is united with Chesapeake Bay, by the canal cut through the Great Dismal Swamp.

ELIZABETH ISLANDS, small islands near the coast of Massachusetts, bearing N.W. of Martha's Vineyard, and belonging to Duke's county. They are about 16 in number; the chief of which are Nashawn, Pasqui, Nashawenna, Pinequese, and Chatahunk. Nashawn, the largest, supports a considerable number of cattle and sheep, and is famous for excellent cheese and wool. It is 2 miles from the continent, and the N. point 6 miles W.S.W. of Falmouth. Long. 70. 38. W. lat. 41. 34. N.

ELIZABETH PORT, a seaport of South Africa, in Algoa bay, which is important as the only seaport of the Eastern province of the Cape Colony. It is an ugly, ill-built hamlet, but is prosperous. It is seated in an unpromising neighbourhood.

ELIZABETHTOWN, a town of New Jersey, in Essex county, with a handsome Presbyterian church, an episcopal church, and an academy. It is situate on a creek of Newark bay; 14 miles W.S.W. of the city of New York.

ELIZABETH, a town of North Carolina, chief of Bladen county; seated on the W. bank of Cape Fear river; 36 miles S. by W. of Fayetteville, and 48 N.W. of Wilmington.

ELIZABETHTOWN, or HAGERSTOWN, a town of Maryland, chief of Washington county. It has a considerable trade with the western country, and the neighbourhood produces the finest Oroonoko tobacco. It is situate in a valley; 70 miles W.N.W. of Baltimore, and 80 N.N.W. of Washington.

There are several other places so called in different parts of the United States of North America; one in Allegany county, Pennsylvania, on the E. bank of the Monangahela; another in Pleasant Valley, Essex county, New York, near the W. shore of Lake Champlain.

ELK, a river of Maryland, which falls into the head of Chesapeake Bay; which is proposed to be united with the Delaware, by the Elk river.

There are several other rivers and creeks so called, as well as Elk-horn, lick, and ridge, in different parts of the United States of North America.

ELKTON, a town of Maryland, chief of Cecil county, which once had a considerable trade, particularly in wheat, but has now declined. It is situate at the conflux of the head branches of the Elk, 13 miles from its mouth in Chesapeake Bay, and 47 S.W. of Philadelphia. Long. 76. 20. W. lat. 39. 40. N.

ELLESMERE, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Tuesday, and a considerable trade in malt. It has a canal from Shrewsbury, which passes hence, by Wrexham and Chester, to the estuary of the Mersey. The town is seated on a large mere; 16 miles N.N.W. of Shrewsbury, and 178 N.W. of London.

ELLIPOUR, or ELLISHPOOR, a town of Hindostan, in Berar, capital of a circar of the same name, subject to the Nizam of the Deccan. It was formerly the capital of Berar, and is 154 miles N.E. of Aurangabad. Long. 78. 5. E. lat. 21. 12. N.

ELLORE, a town of Hindostan, capital of one of the circars, on the Bay of Bengal. It is 32 miles N. of Masulipatam. Long. 81. 15. E. lat. 16. 43. N.

ELMINA, or ST. GEORGE DEL MINA, a town of West Africa, on the Gold Coast, founded by the Portuguese in 1481. It is seated on a peninsula, near a navigable river, and trades in gold-dust and ivory. It was taken in 1637 by the Dutch, and was formally ceded to them.

ELMIRA, the capital of Chemung county, state of New York. It stands on the N. side of the Chemung river, and was formerly called Newtown. The line of the New York and Erie railway passes through it; 195 m. W.S.W. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 4791.

ELMSHORN, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein; 20 miles N.W. of Hamburg.

ELNBOGEN, a town of Bohemia, capital of a territory in the circle of Saaz, with a castle on a rock, by the river Egra; 38 miles W.S.W. of Saaz. Long. 12. 50. E. lat. 50. 10. N.

ELNE, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees. It suffered greatly in the civil wars, during the reign of Louis XI. It is 8 miles S. by E. of Perpignan.

ELORA, or ELOORA, a town of Hindostan, in the Nizam's dominions, province of Aurangabad; celebrated for its wonderful temples, cut out of the natural rock. These exceed in size and execution, any other structures of the kind in India. They are deserted, and partly in ruins. It is 15 m. N. of Aurungabad. Lat. 19. 58. N. long. 75. 23. E.

ELPHIN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Roscommon, and the see of a bishop; 16 miles N. of Roscommon.

ELRICH, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia; the capital of the county of Hohenstem. It stands on the river Zorge; 12 m. N.N.W. of Nordhausen. Long. 10. 43. E. lat. 51. 38. N.

ELSFLER, a town of Westphalia, at the conflux of the Hantorf with the Weser; 13 miles E.N.E. of Oldenburg, and 13 N.W. of Bremen.

ELSLINBURG. See HELSINBERGH.

ELSNORE, or HELSINGOR, a town of Denmark, seated on the Sound, in the Isle of Zealand. It is the most commercial place in Denmark, next to Copenhagen, being the residence of a considerable number of foreign merchants, and the consuls of the principal nations trading to the Baltic. A little to the E. is the fortress of Kronborg, which guards the Sound. Every vessel, as it passes, pays a toll at Elsinore; in return for which, the crown takes the charge of constructing lighthouses, and erecting signals to mark the shoals and rocks, from the Cattegat to the entrance into the Baltic. Elsinore has no harbour, but a good and safe road. It is well known to English readers, being the scene of Shakspeare's Hamlet, a drama, founded on fact, but so buried in remote antiquity, as to be difficult to discern the truth from fable. It is 22 miles N. of Copenhagen. Long. 12. 30. E. lat. 56. 2. N. See CROXBORO.

ELSTER, WHITE and BLACK, two rivers of Upper Saxony: the first rises near the northern frontier of Franconia, and runs N. nearly parallel with, and E. of the Saal, into which it falls about 18 miles N.W. of Leipzig; this river proved very disastrous to the French troops, on their retreat after the battle of Leipzig, in October 1813. The Black Elster rises near the Spree in Upper Lusatia, and after a winding course E. of the Elbe, falls into that river in the duchy of Saxony.

ELSTERBERG, a town on the W. bank of the White Elster, near its source; 7 miles N. of Plauene.

ELSTERWERDA, a town and castle of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, on the E. bank of the Black Elster; 24 miles N. by W. of Dresden.

ELSTOW, a parish in Bedfordshire, 2 miles S. of Bedford, celebrated as being the birth-place of John Bunyan.

ELTHAM, a town in Kent, with a market on Monday. Here are the remains of a once noble palace, in which the kings of England, down to the time of the Commonwealth, often resided; it was then totally destroyed by the fanatics, except its stately hall which still remains; John of Eltham, son of Edward II., was born here. It is 8 miles S.W. of London Bridge.

ELVAS, a strong frontier town of Portugal, in Alentejo, and a bishop's see, with a castle. Here is a cistern so large, that it will hold water enough for the town for six months. The water is brought by a Moorish aqueduct, 3 miles in length, which, in some places, is supported by several stories of arches. On the side of it is a forest of olive-trees, among which are walks and fine mountains. Elvas was bombarded by the French in 1706. A royal academy for young gentlemen was founded here in 1733. It is seated near the Guadiana; 15 miles W. of Badajos, and 118 E. of Lisbon. Pop. about 16,000.

ELWANGEN, a town of Swabia, near the S. frontier of Franconia, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the Jaxt; 18 miles N.W. of Nordingen.

ELY, a city in Cambridgeshire, and a bishop's see, with a market on Thursday. It is seated on the Onse (which is navigable hence to Lynn), in the fenny but exceedingly fertile tract called the Isle of Ely. The spring assizes are held here. It is a county of itself, including the territory around it, and had a distinct civil and criminal jurisdiction, of which the bishop was the head, which has been recently abrogated. It has a fine cathedral, and an episcopal palace. It is at the junction of the East Anglian, Yarmouth, and March branches of the E. Counties Ry., and is 17 m. N. of Cambridge, and 67 N. by E. of London.

ELY, or ELIE, a town of Scotland, on the S.E. coast of Fifeshire, with a good harbour, but it has but little trade. It is opposite to North Berwick, and forms the N. point of entrance to the Frith of Forth.

ELYRIA, a town of the state of Ohio, and one of the pleasantest places in the state. It is seated in a plain between two branches of the Black river, on each of which is a fall; 116 miles N.N.E. of Columbus. Pop. 1636 in 1840.

ELZE, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Hildesheim; seated on the Leina; 12 miles S.W. of Hildesheim, and 20 S. of Hanover.

EMBOLY, or JEMBOLI, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, and a Greek archbishop's see. It is the ancient Amphipolis, and is sometimes called Christopholis. It is seated on the Strumona, at its entrance into the Gulf of Contessa. Long. 23. 55. E. lat. 40. 59. N.

EMBRUN, a city of France, in the department of Upper Alps. It has a fortress built by Louis XIV., and is seated on a craggy rock, near the river Durance; 17 miles E of Gap. It is the seat of a prefect, and contains 3002 inhabitants.

EMDEN, a strong town of Hanover, capital of E. Friesland. It has a good harbour and a safe road at the mouth of the Ems; and considerable manufactures of stockings, soap, leather, and cotton. The greatest part of the inhabitants are Calvinists, but there are some Lutherans, Papists, and Jews. It was a free port under the protection of the United Provinces, but in 1744 they sold their right to the King of Prussia. It was a neutral port during the early part of the war between England and France, which began in 1793. It is now included in the kingdom of Hanover, of which it is the second town in size and importance; population, about 12,000. It is 28 m. E.N.E. of Groningen, and 47 W. N.W. of Oldenburg. Long. 7. 8. E. lat. 53. 20. N.

EMMENDINGEN, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, and chief town in the marquisate of Hochberg; seated on the river Ens; 10 miles N. by W. of Friburg.

EMMERICK, a strong town in Germany, in the duchy of Cleve. It has a considerable trade with Holland, and is seated on the Rhine; 22 miles N.W. of Wesel.

ENNETTSBURG, a town of Maryland, 80 miles N.W. of Annapolis. Mount St. Mary's college (Roman Catholic) is near it.

ENS, a river of Westphalia, which rises in the territory of Paderborn, and, after a course of about 150 miles in a N.N.W. direction, flows, at Emden, into the Dollart, a bay of the German Ocean.

ENS, or EMBS, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, near which are some baths impregnated with sulphur. It is 10 miles S.E. of the Lake of Constance.

ENKLUYSEN, or ENKLUYZEN, a town of North Holland, on the Zuyder Zee. It was once a flourishing place; but, its harbour being now obstructed by sand, it has lost its former consequence. It was taken by the English in 1709. It is 27 miles N.E. of Amsterdam.

ENDINGEN, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, near the Rhine; 7 miles N.N.E. of Old Brisach.

ENFIELD, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Saturday. It was once famous for an extensive royal chase, disforested in 1779; and had a royal palace, of which little now remains, the front having been taken down in 1792, and its site occupied by some houses. It is 10 miles N. of London.

ENFIELD, a town of Connecticut, in Hartford county, situate on the E. bank of the Connecticut; 16 miles N. by E. of Hartford. Also the name of another town in Grafton county, New Hampshire.

ENGADINE, or INTHAL, a delightful valley of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, extending along the banks of the river Inn, from its source to Tyrol. It is divided into Upper and Lower; the chief towns are Zurz and Cernetz.

ENGELBERG, a valley of Switzerland, in the canton of Underwalden; 10 miles long; surrounded by mountains. It is subject to the abbot of a Benedictine monastery of the same name, whose revenues arise principally from a commerce in cheese. The country contains extensive glaciers, on the side of fertile mountains; fine black marble, white veined, small crystals called Swiss diamonds, silver, and vitriol. The abbey is 12 miles S.W. of Altdorf.

ENGELHOLM, a seaport of Sweden, in Schonen, on a bay of the Cattegat, with good anchorage near the entrance to the Sound. In 1678 it was taken by the Danes, after an obstinate defence. It is 44 miles N. by W. of Lund. Long. 12. 57. E. lat. 56. 22. N.

ENGERS, a town of Germany, in the Westwald; capital of a county of its name; seated near the Rhine; 5 miles N.W. of Co-blentz.

ENGHEIN, a town of Belgium, in Hainault, 15 miles S.W. of Brussels, on the road to Tournay. It gave the title of duke to one of the Bourbon family.

ENGHIA, EGINA, or ÆGINA, (its ancient name,) an island of Greece, in the Gulf of Egina, between Livadia and the Morea. It has a town of the same name; 22 miles S. S.W. of Athens. Long. 23. 39. E. lat. 37. 45. N.

ENGLAND, the southern part of the island of Great Britain, is a very irregularly-shaped territory, extending in its extreme length, from the Land's End in Cornwall, in the lat. of 49. 57½, and long. of 5. 41. 31, to Berwick, at the mouth of the Tweed, which divides it from Scotland, in the lat. of 55. 46. 21. N. and 1. 59. 41. of W. long. The meridional distance between these two points is 365 geographical, or 425 English statute miles; this line, however, intersects the entrance to the Bristol Channel, South and North Wales, and the Irish sea; the extreme meridional line that could be drawn on English ground from N. to S., would be from Berwick to St. Alban's Head, in the county of Dorset: this line would measure 366 statute miles; and the extreme length from W. to E. would be from the Land's End, Cornwall, to the Dudgeon light, on the N.E. coast of Norfolk, which would measure 359 statute miles. The four S.E. counties of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall, however, form a promontory; and, as the superficial area of England, by actual survey proves to be about 57,812 square miles, taking the length from N. to S. to be 366 miles, the mean breadth from W. to E. will be within 150 miles. The sea on the S. is called the English Channel, and divides England from the N.W. coast of France: the sea at the S.E. point is called the Straits of Dover, and divides England from the N.W. point of France and the Netherlands; the sea on the E. coast of England is called the North sea, or German Ocean, and divides England from Holland, Germany, and Denmark; the sea on the N.W. coast of England is called the Irish sea, and divides England from the N.E. coast of Ireland. Wales, North and South, bound the centre of its western side; and the four S.W. counties before mentioned, project into the Atlantic Ocean.

Of the works of man, in adapting the natural resources of England to his use, it would be impossible here to dilate. In the description of the respective counties, we have given those necessarily cursory notices of their principal features.

The population of England has progressively and immensely increased, but of its exact amount, prior to 1801, we have no knowledge beyond surmises. At the time of the Norman conquest, it was probably about 2,150,000. In 1377, the amount perhaps might have been about 2,500,000. In Elizabeth's reign, it might have been 4,500,000, or 5,000,000, and at the revolution in 1696, it was supposed to be 5,500,000. England is divided into forty counties, and these are subdivided into hundreds and parishes. The following table will show the extent and population of the several counties as ascertained by the several censuses after 1801.

The details of the last, in 1861, are given in the Appendix.

For judicial purposes, England is divided into six circuits, and for ecclesiastical purposes into 2 archiepiscopal, and 25 episcopal sees, or jurisdictions. The extent, relations, &c., of each of the several counties, towns, &c., are noticed in their alphabetical place in this work.

The face of the country affords all that beautiful variety which can be found in the most extensive tracts of the globe; not, however, without romantic, and even dreary scenes, lofty mountains, craggy rocks, black barren moors, and wide uncultivated heaths; and yet, few countries have a smaller proportion of land absolutely sterile and incapable of culture. The richest parts are, in general, the midland and southern. Towards the N., it partakes of the barrenness of the adjoining parts of Scotland. The E. coast is, in many places, sandy and marshy. A range of rude and elevated land, sometimes rising into mountains 3000 feet in height, extends from the borders of Scotland to the very heart of England, forming a natural division between the E. and W. sides of the kingdom. Cornwall is also a rough hilly tract; and a similar character prevails in part of the adjacent counties. These mountainous tracts abound with various mineral treasures, more particularly coal, iron, copper, lead, and tin.

The rivers of England are numerous, and contribute essentially to the beauty and fertility of the country, as well as to facilitate the conveyance of its products from one part of the kingdom to another: the four most deserving of notice for their magnitude and utility are the Trent, Mersey, *Severn, and Thames. These four rivers rise in the interior of the country, and flow in contrary directions; the first to the N.E., the next to the N.W., the Severn to the S.W., and the Thames to the S.E.; and, being rendered navigable, and united to each other by canals, they afford an admirable facility of conveyance over all parts of the country. In addition to these, the great Ouse and the Nen flow from the centre of the country in a N.E. direction, into the North sea, between the Thames and the Trent; and the Nen is united to the line of canal which unites those two rivers, and thereby with the Mersey and Severn. Further N. is the Humber, *Tees, Wear, *Tyne, and the *Tweed, which divides England from Scotland, all flowing from W. to E. into the North sea; and on the other side is the *Eden, *Derwent, Ribble, and the *Dee, flowing into the Irish sea: the tributary rivers deserving of notice are the Medway and Lea, falling into the Thames; the Sour and Derwent falling into the Trent; the Don, Aire, and Ouse, falling into the Humber; the Irwell into the Mersey; and the Upper and Lower Avon and Wye into the Severn; all of which are navigable, and yield a variety of fish; those noted with a * yielding delicious salmon. The Tamar, Torridge, Tame, Exe, Arun, and a few other rivers of inferior note, intersect the S. and S.W. parts of the country, falling into the Bristol and English Channels. The lakes are neither numerous nor extensive, and are chiefly in the N.W. counties: those of Westmoreland and Cumberland, in particular, exhibit such varieties of beautiful scenery, as to become the object of summer excursions from every part of the country. With respect to climate, England is situate in the N. part of the temperate zone, so that it enjoys but a scanty share of the genial influence of the sun. Its atmosphere is inclined to chilliness and moisture, subject to frequent and sudden changes, and is more favourable to the growth, than to the ripening of the products of the earth. No country is clothed with so beautiful and lasting a verdure; but the harvests, especially in the northern parts, frequently suffer from unseasonable rains. The country, nevertheless, in general affords an abundant supply of grain, and all the other necessaries of life, and the rigours of winter, and the heats of summer are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent; a circumstance common to all islands. The whole country, some particular spots excepted, is sufficiently healthy; and the longevity of its inhabitants is equal to that of almost any region. All its most valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, have been imported from foreign countries, and have been kept up and improved by constant attention. England has now no other wild quadrupeds than those of the smaller kind, as the fox, badger, marten, otter, hare, rabbit, squirrel, &c. On the other hand, every kind of domestic animal imported from abroad, has been reared to the greatest degree of perfection. The horse has been trained up for all the various purposes of strength and swiftness, so as to excel in those qualities the same animal in every other country. The breeds of cattle, in various parts of the kingdom, have also been cultivated with much care, and have been brought to the largest size and greatest justness of shape. The different races of sheep are variously distinguished, either for uncommon size, goodness of flesh, or plenty or fineness of wool. The deer of its parks, which are originally a foreign breed, are superior in beauty of skin, and delicacy of flesh, to those of most countries. Even the several kinds of dogs have been trained to degrees of courage, strength, and sagacity, rarely to be met with elsewhere. Domestic poultry, as well as wild birds, are numerous; the shape and beauty of plumage of the pheasant, and delicious note of the nightingale, cannot be surpassed. The improvement in the vegetable products of this island is not less striking than in the animal. Nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, were almost all the variety of vegetable food which its woods could boast. To other countries, and to the efforts of culture, it is indebted for corn, esulent roots, plants, and all its garden fruits. The seas, as well as the rivers of England, are stocked with a great variety of fish, which yield a plentiful article of provision to all ranks of people.

Of the early history of England but little is known prior to its becoming a province of the Roman empire, during the first century of the Christian era. The first invasion of England by the Romans was under Julius Caesar, in the year 55, at which period the country was inhabited by a very numerous but hardy and rude race of people, denominated Britons, living in tribes and subject to an austere and rigorous priesthood; about the year 86 A.D. the whole country, after numerous conflicts, was subdued under Agricola. During a period of nearly 400 years, from the time of Agricola to the year 447, when the Romans finally quitted the island, they had effectually succeeded in reconciling the natives to a dependence on their government, and in diffusing a taste and desire to cultivate and practise the arts of social life; they had, however, so implicitly yielded to Roman government and protection, that, on being left to govern and protect themselves, they were unable to withstand the rude and vigorous attacks of the Picts and Scots, who poured into the country from the N.; and the Romans, on being applied to by the Britons, declining, from inability, to render them assistance, the Britons invited the assistance of the Saxons, a people who had acquired celebrity for their valour in the N. of Europe. In the year 449, Hengist and Horsa, two Saxon leaders, arrived with a force of 1600 men, who succeeded in speedily subduing the Scots and Picts; but, perceiving the inefficiency of the Britons, the Saxons obtained a succession of reinforcements, made allies of the Scots and Picts, and turned their whole force to the subjugation of England; and, in the progress of time, the country became divided into seven monarchies, some one of which, however, in its turn, maintaining an ascendancy over the rest, the ascendant monarch being regarded as king of England. The following is a list of the seven monarchies, with the dates of their foundation and extinction: viz.—

Kent	founded in 454	extinct 823
South Saxons	" 491	" 685
East Saxons	" 527	" 827
Northumberland	" 547	" 827
East Angles	" 575	" 792
Mercia	" 582	" 827
West Saxons	" 592	" 828

This period is denominated the Heptarchy, which merged into an undivided sovereignty under Egbert, the 17th king of the West Saxons, in 828. In 860 the Saxon dynasty in its turn was assailed by the Danes, and, after repeated conflicts and aggressions, Sweyne, a Dane, was crowned king of England in 1013. The crown reverted again to the Saxons in Edward, surnamed the Confessor, in 1042; but on the 14th of October, 1066, the destinies of England were placed in the hands of William of Normandy, surnamed the conqueror, from the decisive victory he gained on that day over Harold II., king of England. From that period to the present time, the whole country has been under the rule of a successive line of kings, except for 11 years, from 1649 to 1660, when it was under a protectorate, in consequence of the arbitrary measures of the monarch having led to his decapitation on the 30th of January, 1649.

ENGLAND, NEW, the N.E. part of the United States of North America, extending from the lat. of 41 to 43 N., thus first named by Captain Smith, in 1614. It is bounded on the N. by Canada, on the E. by New Brunswick and the Atlantic, on the S. by the Atlantic and Long Island Sound, and on the W. by New York. It comprises the states of MASSACHUSETTS, MAINE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, VERMONT, RHODE ISLAND, and CONNECTICUT; each of which see under its respective head.

ENKIUYSSEN. See ENCHUYSSEN.
ENKIOPING, a town of Sweden, in Upland, on the N. side of Lake Maeler; 21 miles S. W. of Upsal.

ENNIS, a town in the parish of Drumcliff, Ireland; capital of the county of Clare. It is seated near the head of a bay, on the N. side of the river Shannon. It is meanly and irregularly built, and is 19 miles N.N.W. of Limerick, and 113 S.S.W. of Dublin. It returns a member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

ENNISCORTHY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, with a manufacture of coarse woollen cloth, and some iron-works. It has a brisk trade with Wexford by means of the river, and is situate on the Slaney; 10 miles N. of Wexford, and 27 N. E. of Waterford.

ENNISKILLEN, a borough of Ireland, capital of the county of Fermanagh. It is seated on an island in Lough Erne, where that lake is contracted, for about 6 miles, to the width of an ordinary river, and has a strong fort, it being a pass of great importance between the N. and S. of Ireland. It has increased much of late years, and has railways to Dundalk, Londonderry, Dublin, &c. It has an excellent market, and a considerable corn trade. In 1595 it made an obstinate defence against the army of Queen Elizabeth, and again in 1680 against James II. It is 80 miles N.W. of Dublin. It returns one member to the parliament of the United Kingdom.

ENO or ENOS, a town of European Turkey, in Rumelia, and a Greek archbishop's see; seated near a gulf of the Archipelago, at the influx of the Marissa; 90 miles S. by W. of Adrianople, and 145 W.S.W. of Constantinople. Pop. 7000. Long. 25. 59. E. lat. 40. 42. N.

ENS, a town of Austria, on a river of the same name, at its conflux with the Danube; many Roman antiquities have been found in its vicinity. Pop. 3418; 12 miles E.S.E. of Linz.

ENSENE, a town of Egypt, on the E. side of the Nile. Here are considerable ruins of the ancient Antinoë. It is 120 miles S. of Cairo. Long. 30. 54. E. lat. 28. 5. N.

ENSHAM, a parish in Oxfordshire, 5 miles E. by S. of Witney. It is a place of great antiquity. There are some slight remains of a Benedictine abbey still to be seen.

ENSISHEIM, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on the river Ille; 10 miles S. of Colmar.

ENSKIRKEN, a town in the duchy of Juliers; 15 miles S.W. of Cologne.

ENSTOFF, a town of the palatinate of Bavaria; 22 miles N. of Ratisbon.

ENTLINCH, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucern; 14 miles W.S.W. of Lucern.

ENTRE DOURO E MINHO, the most N.W. province of Portugal, lying on the sea coast, between the rivers Douro and Minho, and bounded on the E. by Tra los Montes. It is 68 miles from N. to S., and 40 broad; and contains a population of 907,965. Braga, 30 miles N.N.E. of Oporto, is the capital. It is watered by two other rivers, falling into the Atlantic Ocean, viz. the Lima and Cavado; the other principal towns are, Lagos, Lapeda, and Moncao, on the S. bank of the Minho, which divides the province from the Spanish province of Galicia; Port de Lima and Viana, near the mouth of the Lima, Barcellos, between Braga and the mouth of the Cavado, Guimaraens and Amarante on the S.E., and Oporto on the N. bank, near the mouth of the Douro, which separates the province from Beira.

EPERIES, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of the county of Saros, celebrated for its mines of salt. It is seated on the Tatra; 20 miles N.E. of Cassovia. Long. 21. 13. E. lat. 48. 50. N. Pop. about 7500.

EPERNAY, a town of France, in the department of Marne. It was taken by Henry IV. in 1592, when Marshal Biron was killed while the king's hand was on his shoulder. It is the chief town of the champagne wine districts, and its wine vaults, cut in the chalk rock, are expensive and curious. It is 17 m. N.W. of Chalons, on the Paris and Strasbourg railway, with a population of 54,000.

EPERNON, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire; 15 m. N.N.E. of Chartres.

EPHESUS, an ancient and ruined city, near the modern village of Aiasluk, a village of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, 38 miles S.S.E. of Smyrna, anciently one of the most splendid cities of Asia Minor, and the most frequented emporium of that continent. Of its former splendour there is nothing to be seen but heaps of marble, overturned walls, co-lums, capitals, and pieces of statues. The fortress, which is upon an eminence, seems to have been the work of the Greek emperors; and also the aqueduct, part of which is yet standing, supported by pillars of fine marble. The eastern gate has three basso-relievos, taken from some ancient monuments; that in the middle was constructed by the Romans. The most remarkable structure was the Temple of Diana, deemed one of the seven wonders of the world, and which the primitive Christians had converted into a church; but it is now so entirely ruined, that it is not easy to find the ground plot. Ephesus is seated near the mouth of the Cayster, which formerly afforded a good harbour for ships, but is now almost choked up with sand. The present inhabitants are only Greek peasants, who live in extreme wretchedness and insensibility. It is 30 miles S.S.E. of Smyrna. Long. 27. 23. E. lat. 38. 8. N.

EPHRATA, or TUNKERSTOWN, a town of Pennsylvania, in Lancaster county, and the principal settlement of a sect called Tunkers (Dippers), who are of German extraction, and first appeared in America in 1719. It is 22 miles N. of Lancaster. Pop. 2803.

EPINAL, a town of France, capital of the department of Vosges. It is famous for its paper-mill: it is seated on the river Moselle, near the mountains of the Vosges: 65 miles S.W. of Strasburg, and 195 E. by S. of Paris. Pop. 1836, 8742.

EPINGEN, a town of South Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden; 20 miles S.E. of Heidelberg. Pop. 3000.

EPIRUS, a sandjak of Turkey in Europe, in the pachalic of Albania. It is inhabited principally by Arnauts.

EPPING, a town in Essex, with a market on Friday. It is famous for excellent butter; it is seated at the N. end of a forest of the same name; 17 miles N.N.E. of London.

EPSOM, a town in Surrey, which has, from the number of opulent people residing in and near it, a daily market. It is celebrated for its mineral waters and salts; and on its neighbouring downs are annual horse-races. It is connected with London by a continuation of the Croydon railway. It is 15 miles S.S.W. of London.

EPWORTH, a town in Lincolnshire, in the isle of Axholm, with a market on Thursday, and a manufacture of sacking. John Wesley was born here. It is 11 m. N. of Gainsborough, and 106 N.N.W. of London.

EQUADOR. See COLOMBIA.

ERBACH, a town of Wirtemberg, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle. It is 22 miles W. by S. of Wertheim, and 35 S.S.E. of Frankfort.

ERBIL, a town of Asiatic Turkey, pachalic of Kurdistan. It occupies a hill in the midst of fruitful plains, near the ancient Arbela, the scene of the defeat of Darius, by Alexander the Great, b. c. 331.

ERELLI, a town of European Turkey, on the N. shore of the Sea of Marmora, 55 miles W. of Constantinople. It was the ancient Heraclia, and contains the ruins of an amphitheatre, built by the emperor Severus; and a wall at some former time extended from this place to Derkus, on the shore of the Black Sea, a distance of about 55 miles, the object of which seems to have been the protection of Constantinople from the northern barbarians.

There is another town of the same name, on the S.W. shore of the Black Sea; 130 miles E. by N. of Constantinople.

ERFURT, a city of Upper Saxony, formerly a free imperial city, and the capital of Thuringia, with a university and two strong forts. It has three fine libraries, one of which belongs to the papists, another to the university, and a third to the protestant ministers. The inhabitants are computed at 15,000. A fire happened here in 1736, which burnt down 180 houses, and several churches. Pop. in 1836, 8742. In 1806 it was taken by the French; and in 1814 it surrendered to the allies. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Gerar; 58 miles W.S.W. of Leipsic.

ERNOL, LOCH, in Scotland, an arm of the sea, on the N. coast of Sutherlandshire, in the long. of 4. 30. W., capable of affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels. It receives several streams; particularly that which flows from a lake called Loch Hope.

ERICHT, LOCH, a lake of Scotland, lying in the counties of Inverness and Perth. It is 24 miles in length, and one in breadth, surrounded by lofty mountains and rugged cliffs, and its banks covered with heath and a few straggling birches and alders. Its outlet, at the S. extremity, is the river Ericht, which flows into Loch Rannoch.

ERIE, LAKE, one of the great chain of lakes in North America, lies between 79. and 84. W. long, and 41. and 43. N. lat. Its length is 260 miles, and 40 its medium breadth. It is upwards of 650 miles in circumference, and navigable for ships of any burden. Its depth in the centre is 120 feet. It is 565 feet above the level of tide water in the Hudson at Albany; and it is 330 feet above the level of Lake Ontario, into which it discharges its waters by the falls of Niagara. The coast on both sides is generally favourable for batteaux and canoes; yet in some places, chiefly on the S. side, there are rocks that run several miles in length. Some of these, near the mouth of the Cayahoga, rise 40 or 50 feet perpendicular out of the water, and project over the lake so as to inspire dread in the boldest breast, when they are approached. This lake, at its N.W. end receives the waters of the great chain from the N.W. by the river Detroit, and discharges them by the river Niagara, over the great falls at its N.E. end, into Lake Ontario. It forms the boundary line between the United States and British North American territories, both parties claiming an equal right of navigation. The navigation on this lake is very great in amount. A large number of steamers and other ships are always traversing it, except in winter, when it is frozen over for a considerable period. It is the outlet of a large chain of connecting canals, which render its navigation of great importance, and which is consequently fast increasing. The Erie Canal is the principal, 360 miles long, connecting it with the Hudson river and the Atlantic at New York, and it is connected with the Gulf of Florida by the Ohio canal; 334 miles long to the Scioto. During the war of 1812-1815, the Americans had a squadron of 9 vessels, carrying 56 guns, and the British, one of 6 vessels, carrying 69 guns; on the 10th September 1813, after an action of three hours, the whole of the British squadron surrendered to the American Commodore Perry.

ERIE, a county on the N.W. extremity of the state of Pennsylvania, the W.N.W. side is washed by the waters of the lake, the W. end borders on the state of Ohio, and the E. end on that of New York. Its area is about 750 square miles. Pop. 31,344. A town of the same name, seated near the shore of the lake, is 315 miles in a meridional line N.N.W. of Philadelphia.

ERIE, a county on the N.W. extremity of the state of New York, bordering on the E. end of the lake and Niagara river, bounded on the N. by the Tonnewanta, and S. by the Cattaraugus river; this county was divided off from Niagara county since 1810, and contains a population of 62,465. Buffalo, opposite the British Fort Erie, is the chief town; 265 miles W. of Albany. From Buffalo a railway extends to Niagara falls, and the Erie canal passes through the county.

ERIE, a county in the N. part of the state of Ohio, having Lake Erie and Sanduskey bay for its N. boundary. Capital, Huron. Pop. in 1840, 12,599.

ERISKAY, a small island of the Hebrides of Scotland, at the S. end of South Uist; noted for being the first place upon which Charles Stuart landed, in his wild attempt to gain the British crown.

ERITH, a village in Kent, on the Thames; 5 miles E. by S. of Woolwich. Great quantities of corn and wood are shipped hence, and here the East India ships, in their passage up the river, generally discharge a part of their cargoes.

ERIVAN, a city of Asiatic Russia, once the capital of Persian Armenia, in a province of the same name, and the seat of an Armenian patriarch. The city is defended by a fortress, in which is the governor's palace, and by a castle, on the river Zuengui, near the lake of Erivan, which is very deep, and 60 miles in circumference. The Meidan is an open square, 400 paces over, in which are very fine trees. The baths and caravansaries have their beauties, but the churches of the Christians are small, and half under ground. It is seated on the banks of the Arus river, which runs past Shirvan into the Caspian sea, from which it is distant about 130 miles, and about the same distance from Gonieh, on the S.E. shore of the Black Sea. It has some trade, principally in the fruits of the district, which are exported to Persia and Georgia. The Russians attempted to take this place by storm in 1808, but were repulsed with great slaughter, but succeeded in 1827, since which time it has been in their possession. Pop. 11,500, mostly Armenians. Long. 44. 10. E. lat. 40. 20. N.

ERKELENS, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the Roer; 10 miles N.W. of Juliers. Pop. about 2300.

ERLAN, or ERLAU, a populous town on the frontiers of Lower and Upper Hungary; 60 miles E.N.E. of Buda. It is the see of an archbishop. The cathedral and archiepiscopal palace are stately edifices, and the vicinity is fertile and highly cultivated. Pop. 18,247.

ERLANGEN, a town of Bavaria, with a university and a palace. It is divided into the old and new town; and the latter is one of the handsomest towns in Germany. The principal manufactures are hats, gloves, and stockings. It is seated on the Rednitz, 12 miles N. of Nuremberg, and is now included in the dominions of the king of Bavaria. Pop. 8800. Long. 11. 2. E. lat. 49. 38. N.

ERNANI. See HERNANI.

ERNE, a river of Scotland, which issues from a lake of the same name, in Perthshire, flows by Crieff, and joins the Tay, a little below Abernethy.

ERNE, a river of Ireland, which issues from a small lake on the N. border of the county of Longford, flows N. through that of Cavan, and N.W. through Fermanagh into Donegal bay. In the latter county it forms a lake, called Lough Erne, 30 miles in length, containing several islands; and on one in the middle part, where the lake is very narrow, stands the town of Enniskillen.

ERNEE, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne, on a river of the same name; 15 miles N.N.W. of Laval.

ERODU, or ERROAD, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a large mud fort. Much coarse cotton cloth is made here and in the vicinity. It is seated on a canal from the Bhawani, E. of the Cavery river; 75 miles W.N.W. of Trichinopoly.

ERROL, a town in Perthshire, Scotland, 43½ miles from Edinburgh. The population are engaged in the making of linen, and the salmon fishery. Grain is also exported hence in large quantities.

ERROMANGO, one of the new Hebrides in the S. Pacific Ocean; 70 miles in circumference, with low shores. On the W. side is a promontory that separates two bays; and Captain Cook, from the treacherous behaviour of the inhabitants, named it Traitor's Head. Long. 169. 19. E. lat. 18. 47. S.

ERVY, a town of France, in the department of Aube; 17 miles S. by W. of Troyes.

ERZERUM, or ANZ ROOM, the capital of Turkish Armenia, with Armenian and Greek episcopal sees. It was once strongly fortified, but of these none now remain but the citadel, within which most of the Turkish inhabitants live, and the inner stone wall surrounding the city. The streets of the city, which may be regarded as a suburb of the citadel, are narrow, crooked, filthy, and infested by hungry dogs. The houses are chiefly of mud. The environs are singularly destitute of trees. It has two Armenian churches, a Greek church, and about forty mosques. Its bazaars are poor and small, but the markets are well supplied. It was once the great thoroughfare for the overland commerce between Europe and the East, but this has greatly diminished of late, from a variety of causes, chiefly from the fact of the great part of the Christian population having emigrated. The great manufacture of copper utensils has also been almost abandoned for the same reason. Since the establishment of steamboats on the Black sea, its commerce has begun to revive, and it has still a considerable transit trade. It is a principal halting place for the pilgrim caravans, from Tehran, &c. to Mecca. Its pop. has fluctuated exceedingly: it had once, before the ravages of a plague some years ago, 100,000; reduced at the time of the Russian invasion in 1829, to 70,000 or 80,000; and in 1835, it was (probably under-estimated) at 15,000, but is now on the increase. It is situated between the two sources of the Euphrates, at the foot of a chain of mountains; 104 miles S.E. of Trebisond, on the S.E. shore of the Black sea. Long. 41. 36. E. lat. 39. 58. N.

ERZOEBERG, CIRCLE OF, a populous district of Upper Saxony, forming the S.W. part of the margraviate of Meissen, or Misnia; bounded on the S. by the Bohemian mountains. It abounds in valuable minerals. Freyburg, Altenburg, and Chemnitz, are the principal towns.

ESCALONA, a town of Spain, in New Castile; surrounded by walls. It is situated on an eminence, in a fertile country, near the Albreche, a tributary of the Tagus; 20 miles N.W. of Toledo, and 32 S.W. of Madrid.

ESCAMBIA, a county of Florida, deriving its name from the Escambia river. The capital is Pensacola, which has a fine harbour. The surface near the shore of the Gulf of Mexico is level, but rises in the interior. It is barren, and covered with pines. Pop. in 1840, 3993.

ESCHWEGEN, a town and castle of Germany, in the landgraviate of Hesse Cassel; seated on the Werra; 25 miles E.S.E. of Cassel.

ESCURIAL, or EL ESCORIAL, a village of Spain, in New Castile; seated on the Gua-Trator's Head.

a village of
on the Gua-dara; 15 miles N.W. of Madrid. It takes its name from a noble structure, founded by Philip II., in memory of the victory gained over the French near St. Quentin, in 1557. It is built of grey stones, found in the neighbourhood, and in the form of a gridiron, because St. Lawrence, on whose day the victory was gained, suffered martyrdom by being broiled on such an instrument. It is a long square of 744 feet by 580, and four stories high, with a tower at each angle 200 feet high; and the palace forms the angle of this imaginary gridiron. The most remarkable part is the arched chapel; in which is a magnificent sepulchre, called the Pantheon, being built in imitation of that church at Rome; it is the burying place of the kings and queens of Spain; and is thought by some to be the most curious piece of architecture in the world. The church is built after the model of St. Peter's at Rome.

The Escorial is now but a shadow of the past. Since he lost his living tenants, the monks and their revenues whereby they lived, the enormous pile, exposed to the hurricane and mountain snows, was only to be kept in repair at a great outlay. In five years after the sequestration of Mendizabal, more injury ensued than during the preceding two centuries, and this eighth wonder of the world was perishing for a pittance, when, in 1842, a small sum was given out of the royal purse to stay immediate ruin. It has been stripped of its gold by the invaders, and in 1837 above 100 of its best pictures were taken to Madrid. It is an enormous pile, partly fortress, partly palace and convent.

ESQUEVRA, or ESQUERIA, a town of Portugal, in Beira; 8 miles S. of Aveiro.

ESK, a river which rises in Scotland, in the N.E. part of Dumfries-shire, and flows S. E. through a dale to which it gives name, to the edge of the county. It there receives the Liddel from Roxburghshire, and enters Cumberland, flowing S. by Longtown, into the N.E. extremity of Solway Frith.

ESK, a river of Scotland, in Edinburghshire, formed by the junction of two streams called North and South Esk. They almost encircle the town of Dalkeith, passing on each side of the eminence on which it stands, and unite a little below the town. The river enters the Frith of Forth at Musselburgh.

ESK, NORTH and SOUTH, two rivers of Scotland, in Angus-shire, which descend from the hills called the Braes of Angus. The former divides the county from Kincairdineshire, for several miles, and reaches the ocean a little to the N. of Montrose; the latter, after traversing the whole breadth of the county, enters the bay on the W. of the same town.

ESKI SHIEM, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, on the river Sakaria, which falls into the Black sea; 80 miles E.S.E. of Brusa. Long. 31. 18. E. lat. 39. 48. N.

ESMERALDAS, a department of South America, republic of Colombia. The chief town, of the same name, is situated on a neck of land, at the mouth of a river discharging itself into the Pacific Ocean.

ESNEH, ASNA, or ESNAY, a town of Egypt, supposed to be the ancient Latopolis. Here is an ancient temple, with walls on three sides, and in the front 24 columns well preserved; within it are three stories of hieroglyphics, of men about three feet high; and the ceiling is adorned with animals, painted with beautiful colours. On the N. side of the town was another temple, richly covered with hieroglyphics, crocodiles, &c., but destroyed for its materials by Mehemet Ali; and a mile to the S. is the Coptic monastery of St. Helena, which contains many magnificent tombs. Esneh stands on the Nile; 300 miles S. of Cuira. Long. 32. 29. E. lat. 25. 17. N.

ESOPUS. See KINGSTON.

ESPALION, a town of France, in the department of Aveiron, on the river Lot; 14 miles N.N.E. of Rhodéz. It is the seat of a prefect, and contains 3261 inhabitants.

ESPINOSA DE LOS MONTEÑOS, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, in a pleasant valley, watered by the Trueba, which soon falls into the Ebro; 30 miles from Santander.

ESPIRITO SANTO, a province of the empire of Brazil, between the rivers Itabapuaana on the S., and Rio Doce on the N.; having the province of Porto Seguro on the N., Minas Geraes on the W., and Rio Janeiro on the S. It is one of the least known and least commercial of all the Brazilian provinces, and its civilized population (40,000 in 1844) is almost entirely confined to the sea coast. Victoria, near the bay of Espirito Santo, is the capital of the province.

ESPOSENDA, or ESPENDENDA, a seaport of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, at the mouth of the Cavado; 22 miles N. of Oporto. Long. 8. 21. W. lat. 41. 32. N.

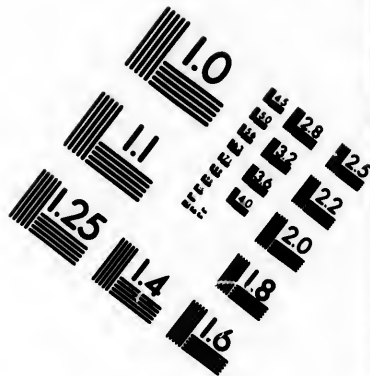

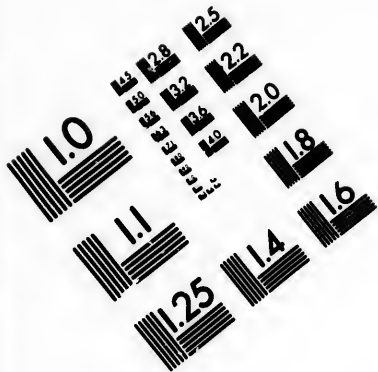

ESQUIMAUX, a people of North America, chiefly inhabiting Labrador, and the shores of Hudson's Bay; each of which see.

ESQUIMAUX BAY, a bay on the S. coast of Labrador, at the entrance to the Straits of Belleisle from the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Long. 57. 59. W. lat. 51. 30. N.

ESQUIMAUX ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, off the entrance to the bay.

ESSEG, or ESZEK, a trading town of Austria, in Slavonia, of which it is the capital, with a strong castle. It has a wooden bridge over the Drave, into Lower Hungary, and the marshes, 8 miles in length, and 80 feet in breadth, with towers at a quarter of a mile distant from each other. It is a difficult pass, and several battles have been fought here, between the Turks and Germans. Esseg was taken from the Turks in 1637, since which time it has continued in the hands of the House of Austria. It is seated on the river Drave; 100 miles W.N.W. of Belgrade, ESSEN, a town of Rhenish Prussia, in the duchy of Berg. Here are several Catholic churches and convents, but the inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans. It is 8 miles E. of Duysburg, and 18 N.E. of Dusseldorf.

ESSENS, a town of Westphalia, in East Friesland, near the German Ocean; 20 miles N.N.E. of Emden.

ESSEQUIBO. See IESTURNO.

ESSEX, a maritime and fertile county of England. It is bounded on the S. by the river Thames, which divides it from the county of Kent, and N. by the Stour, which divides it from the county of Suffolk, and W. by the Stort and Lea, dividing it from the counties of Hertford and Middlesex: the E. boundary is washed by the German Ocean, and the N.W. corner borders on the county of Cambridge: the Colne and two other rivers, the Chelmer and Blackwater, intersect the interior parts of the county, and the united streams of the two latter, at Maldon, form a beautiful estuary to the German Ocean. The county is nearly a square, the area of which is 981,120 acres. It possesses a variety of soil and face of country. The S.W. part is occupied principally by the two forests of Epping and Hainault, and is noted for its butter. The middle part is a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and sprinkled with woods. The part bordering on the Thames and the sea consists chiefly of marshy grounds, which afford excellent pasturage, being secured from the inroad of the tides by embankments. Its contiguity to the metropolis affords it a facile and advantageous market for its surplus produce of grain, seeds, calves, butter, poultry, potatoes, fruit, wild fowl, and oysters, all of which it supplies in a greater proportion than any other county in the kingdom; yet notwithstanding all the advantages of fertility, abundance, and contiguity to market, pauperism and crime prevail to an equal extent to any, and to a much greater extent than in most other parts of the kingdom. The manufacture of baize, and other worsted stuffs, was formerly carried on over the greater part of this county, but since the middle of the 18th century it has progressively declined, and is now almost extinct. It has large establishments for the printing of calico, and mills for making sheet lead. The county is intersected by the Eastern Counties railway. The assize town for Essex is Chelmsford; and the other principal towns are Colchester, Saffron-Walden, Romford, Harwich, &c. It returns four members to parliament for the north and south divisions.

ESSEX is also the name of a county in Upper Canada, forming a promontory at the southern extremity of the province, and nearly surrounded by Lakes Erie and St. Clair, and Detroit river.

ESSEX is also the name of five counties in different parts of the United States of North America, viz.:-

First, In Vermont, bounded on the E. for about 45 miles by the Connecticut river, and bounded on the N. by Lower Canada; its mean breadth is about 20 miles. Pop. 4226, chief town, Guildhall.

Second, Forming the N.E. part of the state of Massachusetts, bordering on New Hampshire and the Atlantic Ocean: it is intersected by the Merrimack river, and contains several considerable towns, viz.: Newbury Port, Ipswich, Gloucester, Marblehead, Salem, and Beverley, &c. Pop. 94,987. Salem, 15 miles N.E. of Boston, is the chief town.

Third, In New York, bounded on the E. for 52 m. by Lake Champlain. Pop. 23,634. The court-house at Elizabeth town, in Pleasant Valley, is 130 miles N. of Albany.

Fourth, In New Jersey, bounded on the W. N. and E. by the Passaic river: its area is only about 150 square miles. Pop. 44,621. Newark, 10 miles W. of New York, is the chief town; its contiguity to which renders it the most populous and important part of the state.

Fifth, In Virginia, on the S.W. bank of the Rappahannoc river, along which it extends about 30 miles, being about 8 miles in mean breadth. Pop. 11,309. Rappahannoc, 46 miles N.N.E. of Richmond, is the chief town.

There are two or three towns named Essex in different parts of the United States of North America.

ESSEXINGTON, PORT, a remarkably fine harbour in Coburg Peninsula, on the N. coast of Australia, on the W. shore of which is the British settlement of Victoria, founded in Oct. 1838. It is seated on a rising ground, on the inner harbour, and has a pier. It is the third settlement that has been formed in this neighbourhood; the first in 1824, in Apsley Straits; and the next in 1827, in Raffles Bay, Coburg Peninsula. They were founded for the purpose of opening a trade in British merchandise with the Malays, who visit these parts to fish for trepang, or sea-slug, which is sent to China. These two settlements were abandoned from misrepresentation, and the last has been formed for the same purposes of trading. The climate is tropical, and produces many of the vegetables common in those regions. The natives are friendly and useful, and the climate is very salubrious. Victoria is in 11. 20. 30. S. lat. and 132. 9. E. long.

ESSLING, a village of Austria, on the N. bank of the Danube, about 6 miles E.S.E. of Vienna; between which and Aspern a sanguinary battle was fought between the French and Austrians on the 21st and 22nd May, 1809.

ESSLINGEN, a town of Suabia, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg. Here are several convents, but the inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans. It has three extensive suburbs, and its district yields good Neckar wine. It is seated on the Neckar; 8 miles S.E. of Stuttgart. Pop. 7000.

ESTAIN, a town of France, in the department of Meuse; 12 miles E.N.E. of Verdun.

ESTAKAR, a town of Persia, in Farsistan; capital of a district of the same name. Near it are the magnificent ruins of ancient Persepolis. It is 50 miles N.E. of Shiraz. Long. 53. 40. E. lat. 30. 5. N.

ESTAVAYER, a town and balliwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Friburg, with a fine castle, seated on the lake of Neufchatel; 13 miles W. of Friburg.

ESTE, a town of Austrian Italy. It is well built, and has several handsome edifices. It is chiefly known from its giving its name to the illustrious branches of the Guelphic family, which have filled the throne of Great Britain, Brunswick, and Modena; 14 miles S.S.W. of Padua. Pop. 6300.

ESTELLA, an episcopal town of Spain, in Navarre, with a castle and university; seated on the Ega; 15 miles W.S.W. of Pamplona. Long. 2. 2. W. lat. 42. 38. N. Pop. 6000.

ESTEPA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with an ancient castle on a mountain; 18 miles S. of Ecija, and 58 E. of Seville. It was the ancient Astapa, and is regularly and tolerably built. Pop. 10,270.

ESTEFONA, a seaport town of Spain, in Granada, near the coast; 20 miles W.S.W. of Marbella. Pop. 9000.

ESTERADAD. See ASTERADAD.

ESTHONIA, or REVEL, a government of the Russian empire, bounded on the W. by the Baltic, N. by the Gulf of Finland, E. by Ingaria, and S. by Livonia. After having been long an object of bloody contention between the Russians, Poles, and Swedes, it was confirmed to the latter by the peace of Oliva, in 1660; but it was subdued by Peter the Great in 1710, and finally ceded to Russia in 1721. It is divided into four circles. Area, 6870 square miles. Pop. 310,400. Revel is the capital.

ESTHWAITE-WATER, a lake in Lancashire, between Hawkshead and Windermere-water. It is two and a half miles long, and half a mile broad, intersected by a peninsula from each side, jutting far into the lake. On the banks are villages and scattered houses, pleasantly situate under woods and hanging grounds clothed with verdure, all heightened by the strong back ground of rocky mountains. No char are found in this lake, though it is connected with the Windermere-water.

ESTILL, an interior county in the E. part of the state of Kentucky, intersected by the Kentucky river; its area is about 500 square miles. Irvine is the chief town.

ESTREMADURA, a province in Spain extending from the lat. of 37. 56. to 40. 15. of N. lat. bounded on the W. by the Portuguese province of Alentejo and part of Beira. It is about 90 miles in mean breadth, giving an area of 14,400 square miles. Pop. about 547,420. The N. end is intersected by the Tagus, and the S. by the Guadiana; it seems a county of great capability. The vine, olive, and corn, all luxuriate within its limits. Cattle and fine wool are the chief articles of trade; and great herds of black swine are fed on the hills, which are covered with oaks. It is very thinly populated, chiefly by sheep and swine herds. Immense numbers of the merino sheep, and pigs, are bred in the pasture lands, and in the oak and beach forests; the sheep are celebrated for the fineness and length of their wool, great care is bestowed on their rearing, and in the growth of their wool; they migrate according to the season, and have great quantities of salt given them; in September they are daubed with a red earth from Almazarron, which conduces to the fineness of the wool; they are shorn in May, the fleeces averaging about 25lbs. in weight. The country is very beautiful and worthy of attention, but from its depopulated condition it is seldom visited. Badajoz, near the Portuguese frontier, is the capital; and the other principal towns are Plazencia, Coria, Alcantara, Albuquerque, Truxillo, Merida, Olivenza, Xeres, and Llerena.

ESTREMADURA, the metropolitan province of Portugal, lying on both sides of the Tagus; its area is about 700 square miles. Pop. 826,680. The part S. of the Tagus is mountainous and unproductive, whilst the N., although its parts mountainous, is exceedingly fertile; the vine, olive, orange, lemon, and other delicious fruits, as well as corn, millet, and legumes, abound; besides Lisbon, the capital of the province, and of all Portugal, the other principal towns are Leyria, Thomar, Abrantes, Santarem, and Alenquer, all N. of the Tagus, and Setuval, near the coast on the S.

ESTREMOZ, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, and one of the strongest in the kingdom, being surrounded by ten bastions. An earthenware is made here, greatly esteemed; and in the vicinity are quarries of beautiful marble. It is 18 miles W. of Elvas, and 100 E. of Lisbon. Pop. 5270.

ESZEK, or ESZEC. See ESSEG.

ETAMPES, a town in France, in the department of Seine and Oise; seated on the river Loet, or Etampes; 15 miles E. of Chartres, and 23 miles S. of Versailles. Pop. 7399.

ETAPLES, a town of France, in the department of Pas de Calais; situate on the English Channel, near the mouth of the river Canche; 13 miles S. of Boulogne.

ETATA, or ETAWER, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Agra; situate on the E. bank of the Jumna, which is here 60 feet high. On the top, near the river, are the remains of a fort. It is 62 miles S.E. of Agra. Long. 79. 16. E. lat. 26. 45. N.

ETHIOPIA, a name by which a vast region of Africa has been distinguished by some geographers, who have divided it into Upper and Lower Ethiopia. The first includes Nubia, Abyssinia, and part of Guinea; the second, all the countries S. of the equinoctial line, as Congo, Monumugi, Monomotapa, &c. Ethiopia appears to have once been a great and powerful empire, but the details of its history are lost in the vortex of time. The Egyptian empire was probably founded on the ruin of that of Ethiopia.

ETIENNE, ST., a town of France in the department of Loire. Besides the manufactures of arms, hardware, and cutlery, (the most considerable in France,) the weaving of ribbons forms a considerable article of commerce. Coal is found in the neighbourhood, and also a soft stone, fit for grindstones. It is the seat of a prefect; 20 miles S.E. of Montbrison, and 32 S.W. of Lyons. Pop. in 1836, 41,534.

There are about a dozen other towns in different parts of France, named after Saint Etienne (Stephen), all inconsiderable.

ETIVE, LOCE, a navigable inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, in Argyleshire. It is 20 miles in length, but of very unequal breadth; and its banks are indented with creeks, which afford safe anchorage. About 7 miles from the entrance it contracts into a narrow channel, called Connell, where a ridge of rocks occasion, at particular times of the tide, a violent current. About 2 miles below is the ancient castle of Dunstaffnage.

ETNA. See ÆTNA.

ETON, a town in Buckinghamshire, England; seated on the N. bank of the Thames, opposite to Windsor, to which it is united by an elegant stone bridge over the river. Eton is celebrated for its school, founded by Henry VI. in 1440, for the education of 70 scholars, a portion of which, when duly qualified, are annually elected to King's College, Cambridge. In addition to the 70 foundation scholars, there are generally 300 to 400 of the sons of the opulent classes, called oppidans, receiving their education at Eton. The buildings are commodious and elegant; their light Gothic turrets form a beautiful and interesting contrast to the massive and majestic towers of Windsor Castle, from which Eton is separated only by the river. Eton is 22 miles N.W. of London.

ETRURIA, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire; intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway, and the grand Trunk canal. It is celebrated in the history of British manufactures as being the seat of the porcelain works founded by Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., whose ware is known by his name, and, from their imitation of the ancient Etruscan pottery, gave the name to the village. He died here in 1795. The village is remarkable for the beauty of its situation, and the productions of this and the adjoining places form one of the most important items in our national productions. It is $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. of Newcastle-under-Lyne.

ETRURIA. See TUSCANY.

ETTENEHEIM, a town in the territory of the Grand Duke of Baden, distinguished as the residence of the illustrious Duke D'Engheim. Buonaparte, in violation of the established law of nations, sent a military force into the territory of Baden, then at peace, and arrested the Duke D'Engheim, who was drugged to Paris and shot. Ettenheim is 25 miles S. by E. of Strasburg.

ETTLINGEN, a town of Stabia, in the duchy of Baden, on the river Albe; 4 miles S.S.W. of Durlach.

EU, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a strong castle, and a harbour for small vessels at Treport. The principal trade is in serges and lace. It is seated on the river Bresle, near the English Channel; 15 miles N.E. of Dieppe.

EU-HO, or PRECIOUS-RIVER, a river of China, in Fe-tche-li, which flows N.E. into the Pei-ho, at Tien-sing. Much grain is conveyed by this river for Peking, and it is also important for its connexion with the N. extremity of the Grand Canal.

EULE, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Kaurzim, with a gold mine; 11 miles S. by E. of Prague.

EUPATORIA, or KOSLOFF, a town of Russia, in the Crimea, or government of Taurida, situate on the W. side of a salt lake, and near the Black sea, 68 miles S. by W. of Perecop. Long. 33. 16. E., lat. 45. 12. N. It was taken by the British on Sept. 14, 1854.

EUPHEMIA, ST., a town of Naples, on the W. coast of Calabria Ulteriore, on the gulf of the Mediterranean to which it gives name; 27 miles S. by E. of Cosenza.

EUPHRATES, a noble river of Western Asia, which rises from three sources in Turkish Armenia. The principal head is about 35 miles S.E. of Erzerum, and is called by the Turks Bin-gheuil Frat, or 1000 springs; and on the opposite side of the mountains from whence these springs flow, the Raksi, a branch of the Aras, which falls into the Caspian Sea below Shirvan, also has its source: another branch of the Euphrates rises about 35 miles N. by W. of Erzerum; these two branches unite in the long. of 40 E. and lat. of 39. 50. N., and about 40 miles W. by S. of Erzerum, from whence the united stream becomes navigable for boats. Another branch rises on the frontier of Persia, in the long. of 43. 40. E., and runs a course nearly due W. to the long. of 39. 25. and lat. of 39.; the united streams are then called the Frat, and flow in a direction S.S.W. to Semisat, in the lat. 37. 8. N. and long. of 37. 20. E., being within 60 miles of the Gulf of Iskenderun, at the N.E. extremity of the Mediterranean; from this point the Euphrates flows in a S.E. direction through twelve degrees of longitude in Asiatic Turkey, falling into the Gulf of Persia, in the lat. of 30. N. and long. of 48. 40. E. The meridional distance from the source to the mouth of this noble river is about 800 miles, but the course of the stream to its junction with the Tigris is about 1350 miles. It is navigable for ships of the largest burthen to Basorah, 35 miles from its mouth, and for steam vessels, properly constructed, as far as Bir, a distance of 1150 m. It has been proposed as the nearest route between Europe and India; and its capabilities for this are about to be tested, by the construction of a railway from Seleucia on the Mediterranean to a point near Bir.

EUKE, a department of the North of France, so named from a river which intersects the E. part, falling into the Seine, about 15 m. above Rouen; the Seine then forms its northern boundary to its entrance into the sea. Eure is a manufacturing and agricultural, rather than a maritime, department. Pop. in 1843, 425,780.

EURE and LOIRE, an interior department of France, bordering on the preceding province, on the S. It is so named from the two rivers, the Eure and the Loire, both of which rise in the department; the Loire flowing to the S., and the Euro to the N., as described in the preceding article. Pop. in 1843, 286,368.

EUROPE, one of the five grand divisions of the globe; the extreme limits of which are as follow: viz. Cape Matapan, S. in 36. 23. N. and 22. 29. E.; Cape St. Vincent, W. in 37. 3. N. and 9. 2. W.; Cape North, N. in 71. 10. N. and 25. 50. E.; Kara River, E. in 66. 30. N. and 63. 30. E. The longest meridional line that could be drawn across Europe, would be from Europa Point, in the straits of Gibraltar, which divides Europe from the N.W. extremity of Africa, in the lat. of 36. 7. N. and 5. 20. of W. long., to the Kara River, in the long. of 63. 30. E., in the lat. of 66. 30. N. This line, the angle of which is N. E. bearing E., would intersect the gulfs of Dantzig, Riga, and Finland, and the lakes Ladoga and Onega; and its length would be 3055 geographical, or 3546 English statute miles. The longest line that could be drawn from S. to N. would be from Cape Matapan, at the S. extremity of the Morea, to Cape North, at the northern extremity of Finmark; this line would intersect the Gulf of Riga, the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, and the N. E. shore of the Gulf of Bothnia; and its length would be 2090 geographical, or 2423 English statute miles. Europe is estimated to contain 3,387,019 or 3,650,000 square miles. It is bounded on the N. by the Arctic sea, W. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. from the long. of 5. W. to 35. E. by the Mediterranean sea. For its boundary on the E. see ASIA. The predominant feature of Europe is variety; the mountain ridges run in all directions; but, with the exception of the Alps and the Pyrenees, there are none remarkable for their altitude. The Appennines, Carpathian, Hartz, Oural, and other mountains of inferior note, abound in every species of metallic and semi-metallic ores, which are worked, wrought, and distributed over every part of the world. The rivers are numerous, and flow in every direction; their courses, extent, &c. will be elucidated under the heads of their respective names, as will also the several countries through which they flow. See Appendix.

EURVILLE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne; 6 miles S. E. of St. Dizier.

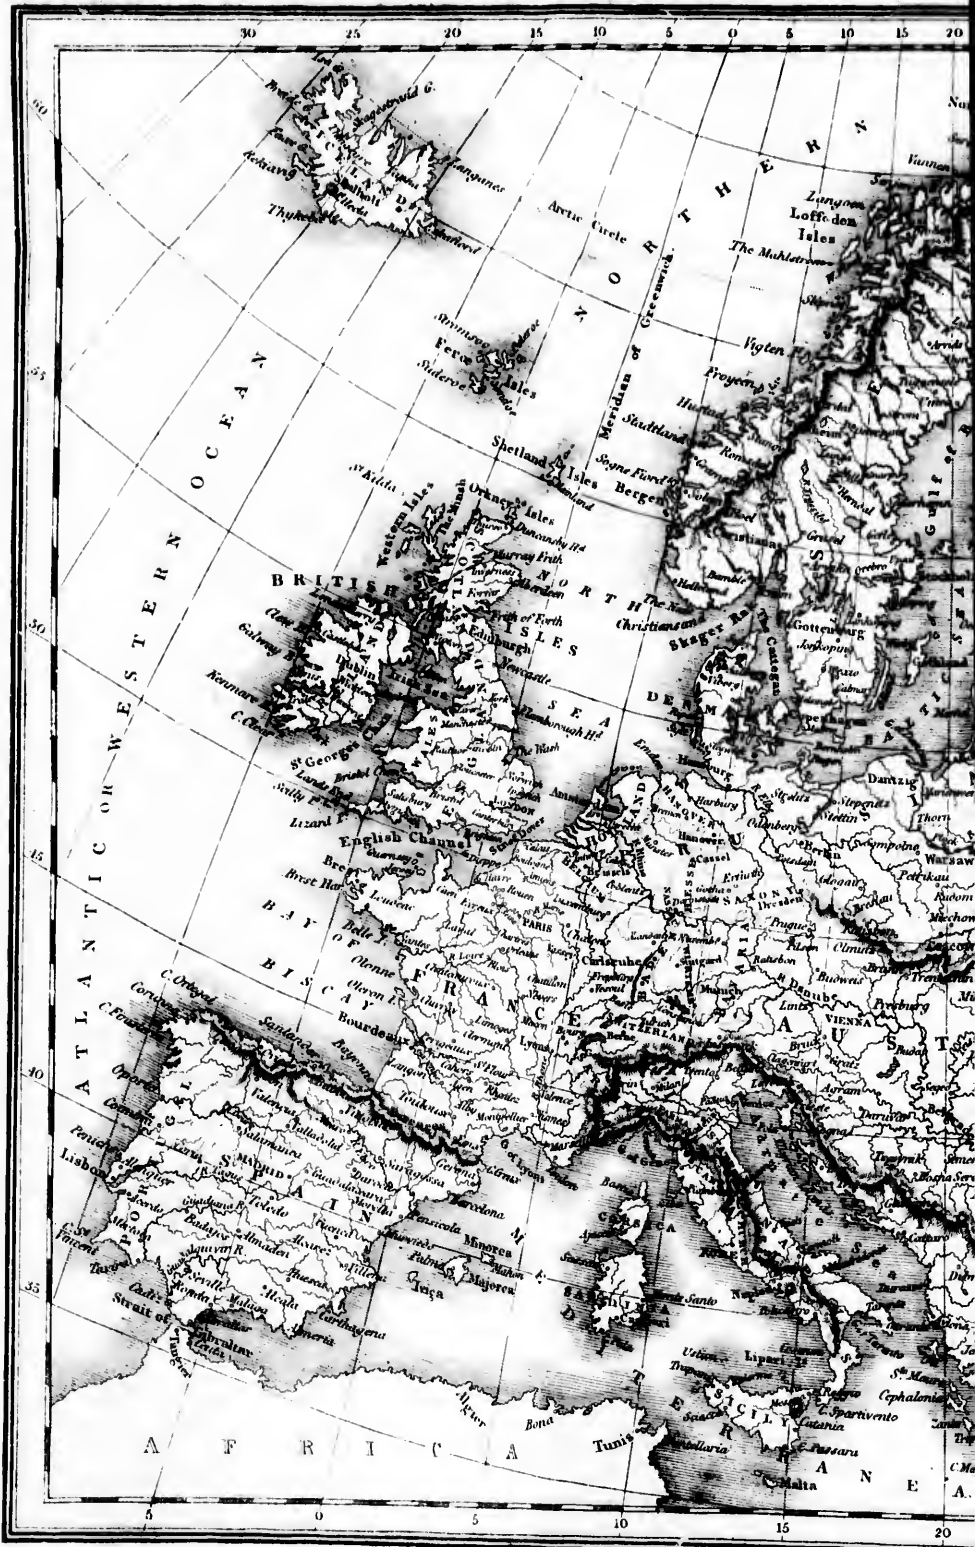

EUSKINGHEN, a town of the Prussian states; 23 miles S. E. of Juliers.

EUSTACE, an island which forms, with a long point of land, the entrance to the harbour of St. Augustine, in East Florida.

EUSTATIA, ST., an island of the Dutch West Indies; 10 miles N.W. of St. Christopher's. This small island was first settled by the Dutch in 1635; it is nearly 30 miles in circumference, and is said to contain about 190 square miles. It appears from some distance at sea, like a conical mountain; but it changes its appearance on approaching its shores, having a level surface for some miles, covered with cane-fields and provision grounds. Its town, during the war, carried on a contraband traffic to an unprecedented extent; the plunder taken by Admiral Rodney, in 1781, amounted to about £4,000,000. The island was soon after taken by the French, and restored to the Dutch; again taken by the English in 1801, and restored to the Dutch at the general peace of 1814. The prosperity of this island has rapidly declined; little commerce is now carried on, and its expenditure exceeds its revenue; there are now very few sugar plantations; a few articles of food, such as yams, &c., are raised. Pop. 13,700.

ETIN, a town of Lower Saxony, in Holstein, near the side of a lake; 20 miles N.N.W. of Lubec.

EUXINE, or BLACK SEA, a large inland sea, dividing Europe from Asia, between the latitudes of 41. and 47. N. extending E. from the long. of 28. to 41. 25., giving an extreme length from W. to E. of 606 geographical, or 702 British statute miles: on the W. it washes the coasts of Romania, Bulgaria, and Bessarabia; and on that side receives the waters of the Danube: at the N.W. corner it receives the waters of the Dniester and the Dnieper, which flow through the southern provinces of European Russia; and from the N., between the longitudes of 33. and 37. E., projects the peninsula of the Crimea, or Russian province of Taurida. A narrow strait at the eastern extremity of this peninsula, leads into the Sea of Azof, into which flows the river Don: the N. E. part of the Euxine washes the coast of Circassia and the territory of the Abkhas; the eastern extremity washes the coast of Mingrelia, which contributes to the waters of the Euxine by several streams, the most important of which is the Rioni or Phasis: the S. part washes the coasts of the Turkish provinces of Armenia, Roum, and Natolia, which contribute the waters of the Kizil-Irmak, and numerous other rivers of inferior note. The Euxine communicates with the Mediterranean, first by the narrow Strait of Constantinople into the Sea of Marmora, and from thence by the Dardanelles, the ancient Hellespont, or Thracian Bosphorus, into the Grecian Archipelago. The navigation of the Euxine appears to have been more general in past than at the present time, the Phœnicians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Venetians, and Genoese all appearing to have maintained an extensive intercourse with the inhabitants on its shores. In 1476, when the Turks drove the Genoese from the Crimea, they precluded all intercourse through the Straits of Constantinople, and claimed an exclusive right of navigation within. In 1774 the Russians, and in 1784 Austria, obtained by treaty an equal right of navigation, which at the peace of Amiens was extended to all nations; and, since the peace of 1814, a considerable traffic has been carried on from the port of Odessa, between the rivers Dniester and Dnieper, with the Mediterranean and with England; but the other parts of its extensive shores are but little frequented, and but little known, though doubtless susceptible of affording a rich field for well-directed enterprise and exertion.

EUZER, a town of France, in the department of the Gard, and chief place of a canton, in the district of Uzès; 9 m. W. N.W. of Uzès.

EVANVILLE, a town of Indiana, capital of Vandenburgh county. It stands on the N. bank of the Ohio river at the great N. bend, 30 miles S.W. by S. of Indianapolis. Pop. 2500.

EVVAUX, a town of France, in the department of Creuse, near which is a mineral spring, and baths. It is 25 miles E. of Guéret.

EVERDING. See EFFERDING.

EVERFELD, or ELVERFELD, a town of Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg, near the river Wipper; 18 miles E. of Dusseldorf.

EVERGHEM, a populous town of the Netherlands; 7 miles N. of Ghent.

EVESHAM, a borough in Worcestershire, England, governed by a mayor, with a market on Monday. Here are three churches, and it had formerly an abbey, of which some remains are still visible. A remarkable battle was fought here in 1265, between Prince Edward, afterward Edward I., and Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, in which the earl and most of his adherents were slain. Evesham is seated in a fertile vale, and is nearly surrounded by the Avon. The vale is mostly appropriated to gardens, and supplies vast quantities of fruit and vegetables for the Worcester, Bath, Bristol, and other markets. It has also some extensive flour-mills worked by the water of the Avon. It is 14 miles S.E. of Worcester, and 100 N.W. of London, on the Oxford and Worcester railway. It returns two members to parliament.

EVORA, a fortified city of Portugal, capital of Alentejo, and a bishop's see, with a university. Some remains of the ancient Roman wall are visible; part of a temple of Diana, of which there are seven entire pillars standing, is now converted into butchers' shambles; and the famous aqueduct built by Sertorius still conveys a noble stream of water to the city. Evora is seated in a pleasant country, surrounded on all sides by mountains; 65 miles E. by S. of Lisbon. Long. 7. 50. W. lat. 38. 28. N.

EVORAMONTE, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, situate on a rock; 8 miles W.S.W. of Estremoz, and 23 N.N.E. of Evora.

EVREUX, a town of France, capital of the department of Eure, and a bishop's see. The cathedral is a handsome structure. The trade consists in corn, linen, and woollen cloth; and it has manufactures of cotton, velvets, and tick. It is seated on the Iton; 25 miles S. of Rouen, and 55 N.W. of Paris. Pop. in 1842, 10,263.

EWELL, a town in Surrey, contiguous to Epsom, with a market on Thursday; 6 miles W. of Croydon, and 13 S.S.W. of London.

EX, a river rising in the forest of Exmoor, in Somersetshire, and leaving that county, below Dulverton, runs through Devonshire, by Tiverton, Exeter, and Topsham, whence it forms an estuary to the English Channel, at Exmouth.

EXETER, a city and county of itself, and the capital of Devonshire, on the river Ex, with a market on Tuesday and Friday. It was formerly the seat of the W. Saxon kings, who resided in the castle, called Rougemont, from the colour of the hill on which it is built. It was encompassed by walls, and had four gates, two of which are now pulled down. With its suburbs it contains 24 churches beside the cathedral, which is a magnificent fabric. It formerly carried on an extensive commerce in woollen stuffs to Spain, &c.; but its commerce and manufactures have materially declined since the close of the 18th century, and its present importance is derived from the agreeableness of its locality, occasioning it to be much resorted to by the neighbouring gentry. An elegant bridge crosses the river. The public buildings consist of a guildhall, county hall, hospital, lunatic asylum, &c., &c. It returns two members to parliament. It is situate 9 miles above the entrance of the river into the sea; 43 miles E. of Plymouth, 87 S.W. of Bath, and 168 W.S.W. of London, and has a railway to Plymouth and Bristol.

EXETER, a town of New Hampshire, on Exeter River, a branch of the Piscataqua. It has several manufactures, and the saddlery business is carried on to a great extent. Some vessels are built here, the river being capable of floating down those of 500 tons. The public edifices are two congregational churches, a celebrated academy, and a court-house. It is 15 miles S.W. of Portsmouth, and 34 N. of Boston. Pop. 2925.

EXETER, a town in North Carolina, in New Hanover county, on the N.E. branch of Cape Fear river; 30 miles N. of Wilmington.

EXIDEUIL, or EXCIDERFIL, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne; 20 miles N.E. of Périgueux, and 32 S. of Limoges.

EXILLES, a strong town of Piedmont, with a fortified castle on a mountain, which guards one of the passes into the country. It is seated on the river Doire; 37 miles W.N.W. of Turin.

EXMOUTH, a town in Devonshire, on the E. side of the mouth of the river Ex; 10 miles S.S.E. of Exeter. It is much frequented for the benefit of sea-bathing.

EXCINA ISLES, a group of the Bahama Islands, the chief product of which is salt. Area, 220 square miles. Pop. in 1842, 1384.

EYENSCHITZ, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Znaim, on the river Ollawa; 12 miles S.W. of Bruun.

EYDER, a river and canal that separates Jutland from Holstein. The river rises in Holstein, and flows W. by Rendsburgh, Fredericstadt, and Tonningen, into the German Ocean. The canal passes E. from Rendsburgh to a bay of the Baltic, a little N. of Kiel. These jointly afford a safe inland navigation across the country, between the Baltic sea and German Ocean.

EYE, a borough in Suffolk, with a market on Monday. Here are the ruins of a castle and a Benedictine abbey. It is a mean place; 20 miles N. of Ipswich, and 89 N.E. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

EYEMOUTH, a town of Scotland, in Berwickshire, with a harbour for vessels of small burden, and a trade in corn and meal. It is seated at the mouth of the Eye; 8 miles N. by W. of Berwick.

EYLAU, DUTCH, a town of Prussia, in the province of Oberland, at the S. end of a lake; 47 miles E. by N. of Culu, and 90 S.S.W. of Konigsberg.

EYLAU, PRUSSIAN, a town of Prussia, in the province of Natangen. On February 8, 1807, a most bloody battle was fought here between the French and Russians, which terminated in favour of the former. It is 24 miles S. by E. of Konigsberg.

EYMOUTIERS, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne, with a considerable trade in skins, leather, and rags; seated on the Vienne; 20 miles N. of Limoges.

EYNDHOVEN, a town of Holland, in North Brabant, at the conflux of the Eynds with the Dommel; 13 miles S.E. of Bois le Duc.

EYRECOURT, a town of Ireland, in the county of Galway; 89 miles from Dublin. Here are the ruins of a castle.

ETWANOWITZ, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Olmutz; 23 miles S.S.W. of Olmutz.

EZAGEN, a rich and ancient town in the kingdom of Fez; 60 miles S. of Tetuan.

EZEL, an island of Russia, in the Baltic sea, of a triangular form, about 8 miles in circumference. Long. 40. E. lat. 58. 20. N.

EZT, a town of France, in the department of the Eure; 15 miles S.E. of Evreux.

F.

FAABORO, a seaport town of Denmark, on the S. coast of the island of Funen, in a flat but fertile country. The principal trade is in provisions. It is 17 miles S. of Odensea. Long. 10. 16. E. lat. 55. 12. N.

FABBRIANO, a town of Italy, in the marquise of Ancona, famous for its excellent paper. It is 25 miles N.E. of Foligno. Pop. 8500.

FAENZA, a city of Italy in the Roman States, and a bishop's see, with an old fortress. The cathedral stands in the great square, and has a steeple five stories high, with balustrades. In 1796 it was taken by the French, and afterwards re-taken by the troops of the pope. In 1797 the pope's troops were defeated and expelled. Faenza is famous for fine earthenware, and was the residence of Torricelli, the inventor of the barometer. It is seated on the Amona; 20 miles W.S.W. of Ravenna. Pop. in 1832, 18,500.

FAILLUN, a town of Sweden, capital of Dalecarlia. Near it is a large copper mine, deemed the most ancient in Europe; also a manufacture of green and blue vitriol. It is situate in the midst of the rocks and hills, between the lakes Run and Warpen; 110 miles N.W. of Stockholm. Pop. about 4000.

FAIFO, a town of Cochin-China, and a place of great trade; situate on a river that flows into the Bay of Turon; 30 miles S.E. of Turon.

FAIRFAX, a county of Virginia, lying W. of the Potomac river; bounded on the E. by the federal district of Columbia. Its area is about 400 square miles. Pop. 9370.

FAIRFIELD, a county at the S.W. extremity of Connecticut; bounded in a W.S.W. direction by Long Island Sound, and N.N.E. by the Housatonic river. It is divided into 18 townships. Pop. 49,917. The chief town, of the same name, is seated on the W. bank of a creek in Long Island Sound; 22 miles W.S.W. of Newhaven. It was burnt by a party of Tories and British in 1777.

FAIRFIELD is also the name of an interior county in the S. part of Ohio, in which the Hoehockings river and a tributary of the Scioto have their sources; it extends about 20 miles from N. to S., and 15 in mean breadth. Pop. 31,924. Lancaster, the chief town, is 30 miles S.E. of Columbus.

FAIRFIELD, a district of South Carolina, lying between the Catawba and Broad rivers. Pop. 20,163. Winnsborough, 30 miles N. by W. of Columbia, is the chief town.

There are seven or eight towns named Fairfield, in different parts of the United States of North America.

FAIRFORD, a town of Gloucestershire, a market on Thursday. The church was founded in 1493, by John Tame, a merchant of London, purposely for the reception of some glass, taken by one of his vessels, in a ship going to Rome; it has 28 windows, beautifully painted, with subjects chiefly scriptural, designed by the famous Albert Durer. It is seated near the Coln; 25 miles S.E. of Gloucester, and 80 W. by N. of London.

FAIR HAVEN, a seaport of Massachusetts, separated from New Bedford by the Acushnet river, and connected to it by a very long bridge. It has considerable shipping employed in the whale fishery; 59 miles S. by E. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 3951.

FAIRHEAD, the N.E. point of Ireland, rising 636 feet above the level of the sea, in lat. 55. 3. N. and 6. 10. of W. long. It is opposite to Roughlin island.

FAIR ISLE, a small island in the Northern Ocean, between the Shetland and Orkneys, from both of which its high towering rocks are visible. On the E. side, the Duke of Medina Sidonia, admiral of the Spanish Armada, was wrecked in 1588.

FAISANS, an island in the river Bidasson, which separates France from Spain. It is also called the Isle of Conference, because Louis XIV. and Philip IV. here swore to observe the peace of the Pyrenees, in 1660, after twenty-four conferences between their ministers. It is considered as a neutral place, and situate between Andaye and Fontarabia.

FAKENHAM, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Thursday, situate on a hill, by the river Yare; 9 miles from the coast; 20 N.W. of Norwich, and 108 N.N.E. of London.

FALAISE, a town of France, in the department of Calvados, with a castle, and one of the finest towers in France. It is the birthplace of William the Conqueror, and has a good trade in serges, linen, and lace. It stands on the river Ante; 20 miles S.E. of Cuen, and 115 W. of Paris: it is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1836, 9396.

FALF, a river in Cornwall, which flows by Gram-pound and Tregony to Falmouth, where it forms a fine haven in the English Channel.

FALKENAU, a town in Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz, with manufactures of alum, sulphur, and vitriol; seated on the river Egra; 12 miles N.E. of Egra.

FALKENBERG, a town of Sweden, in Holland, at the mouth of the Athran, on the Cattogat, opposite to the Isle of Anholt; 17 miles N. by W. of Halmstadt.

FALKENBURG, a town of Brandenburg, in the New Mark, with a castle, seated on the Drage; 32 miles E. by N. of New Stargard.

FALKENBURG, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Oppeln, with a castle; 14 miles S. by E. of Brieg.

FALKENSTEIN, a town in Germany, in a county of the same name. It stands a little to the N. of Winweiler; 24 miles W. by S. of Worms.

FALKENSTEIN, a town in Vogtland, near the N.W. frontier of Bohemia.

FALKIOPINO, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland; 56 miles E. of Uddevalla. It is memorable for a battle fought in 1388, between Margaret, Queen of Denmark, and Albert, King of Sweden, when the latter was defeated and taken prisoner, with his son.

FALKIRK, a populous town of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, famous for its trysts held thrice a year; at which 60,000 head of black cattle have been sold at one tryst. It is seated near the Carron iron-works and the Great Canal; 12 miles S.E. of Stirling, near the Edinburgh and Glasgow, and Central Rys. The royal army was defeated near this place in 1746.

FALKLAND, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with some linen manufactures. Here are the remains of the royal palace in which James V. died in 1582; the remains of which have been lately fitted up as a residence. It is 20 miles N. of Edinburgh.

FALKLAND ISLANDS, two large islands, surrounded by a great number of smaller, lying in the South Atlantic Ocean, to the E. of the Strait of Magellan. The smaller of the two large islands lies E. of the other, from which it is separated by a channel called Falkland Sound. These islands were probably seen by Magellan, but Davis is deemed the discoverer of them, in 1592. They were visited by Sir Richard Hawkins, in 1594; and in 1765, Commodore Byron made a settlement here; but in 1770, the Spaniards furcibly deposed the English. This affair was settled by a convention, and the English regained possession; but in 1771 it was abandoned. Not having been colonized by us, a colony from Buenos Ayres was settled here in 1820 at Port Louis, but destroyed by the Americans in 1831. In 1833, it was again settled by the English at Port Louis, and Port Egmont, since which period it has remained under our government. The islands are not adapted to cultivation, from the continual high winds to which they are subject, but their riches consist in the great herds of wild cattle which afford ample supplies to ships passing. The whole number of settlers in 1847 was about 155.

FALL RIVER, a seaport of Massachusetts in Mount Hope Bay, a branch of Narragansett Bay. It has excellent water power, and considerable shipping employed in the whale fishery; 51 miles S. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 6738.

FALMOUTH, a seaport on the E. coast of Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Thursday. It has a noble and extensive harbour, communicating with a number of navigable creeks, and its entrance is defended by the castles of St. Mawes and Pendennis. It is a town of great traffic, much improved by its being the station of the post-office packets to the S. of Europe, the West Indies, and America. It stands on the Falf, at its entrance into the English Channel. 14 miles N.N.E. of the Lizard Point, 10 S. of Truro, and 269 W.S.W. of London. Long. 5. 2. W. lat. 50. 8. N.

FALMOUTH, a town of the island of Jamaica, on the N. coast, and on the S. side of Martha Brae harbour. Long. 77. 33. W. lat. 18. 31. N.

FALMOUTH, a town of the island of Antigua, on the S. coast, with a fortified harbour. Long. 62. 0. W. lat. 16. 55. N.

FALMOUTH, a seaport of Massachusetts, in Barnstable county. In 1773 this town was burned by the British. It is situate on the W. side of a small bay; 70 miles S.S.E. of Boston. Long. 70. 32. W. lat. 41. 36. N.

There are two or three other towns named Falmouth, in different parts of the United States.

FALSE BAY, a bay between the Cape of Good Hope and Cape False, frequented during the prevalence of the N.W. winds in May. Long. 18. 53. E. lat. 34. 10. S.

FALSE CAPE, a promontory, 20 miles E. of the Cape of Good Hope. Long. 18. 44. E. lat. 34. 16. S.

FALSTER, a fertile island of Denmark, 60 miles in circumference, near the entrance of the Baltic, off the N. end of Zealand, and between the islands of Moen and Laland. Nykoping is the capital. Its area is about 185 square miles; and population 19,400.

FALSTERBO, a town of Sweden, in Schonen, chiefly known for its lighthouse, at the entrance of the Baltic from the Sound; 22 miles S.S.W. of Lund. Long. 12. 48. E. lat. 55. 22. N.

FAMAGUSTA, a town on the S.E. coast of the island of Cyprus, and a Greek bishop's see, with a harbour once defended by two forts. It was taken by the Turks in 1570, after a siege of 10 months, when they slayed the Venetian governor alive, and murdered the inhabitants, though they surrendered on honourable terms. The town, which is now poor and in ruins, has very numerous decayed churches, and the harbour is choked up. It is 62 miles S. by E. of Nicosia. Long. 33. 59. E. lat. 35. 7. N.

FAMARS, a village of France, in the department of Nord; near which the French were defeated by the allies in 1793. It is 3 miles S. of Valenciennes.

FANO, a fortified town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, and a bishop's see. Here are an ancient triumphal arch, handsome churches, and fine palaces. It is seated on the Gulf of Venice; 18 miles E. of Urbino, and 32 N.W. of Ancona. Pop. about 7500.

FANOE, an island of Jutland, at the entrance of the Little Belt from Cattegat.

FANTEES, FANTIN: the Gold Coast of Africa, from Cape Three Points to Anconah, was formerly called Fantin; but, since 1811, it has more commonly been called Ashantee. The Fantees occupy the coast, and the Ashantees the interior. See ASHANTEE.

FAOUA. See FOUE.

FAOUET, a town of France, in the department of Morbihan; 21 miles N. by W. of L'Orient.

FAREHAM, a town in Hampshire, with a market on alternate Mondays. Sloops and smaller vessels are built here; and it has a considerable trade in coal, corn, canvas, and ropes. It is seated at the N.W. point of Portsmouth harbour; 5 miles N.N.W. of Gosport, and 73 W. by S. of London. The Gosport and Southampton railway passes through Fareham common.

FAREWELL CAPE, the most southerly promontory of Greenland, at the entrance of Davis' Strait. Long. 42. 42. W. lat. 59. 38. N.

FAVIGNANA, an island 15 miles in compass, off the W. end of Sicily, with a fort and a good harbour. Long. 12.25. E. lat. 38.16. N.

FAY, a town of France, in the department of Lower Loire; 18 miles N.W. of Nantes. Pop. 3500.

FATAL, one of the Azores, or Western Islands, which suffered greatly by an earthquake in 1764. Its capital is Villa do Horta, the S.E. point of the island: it is in lat. 38.31. N. and 28.42. W. long. It is very fertile, and exports large quantities of wine.

FAYETTE, the name of several counties in the United States of North America, so called after a French officer, the Marquis de la Fayette, who volunteered his services against the English in America, during the revolutionary war:—

At the S.W. corner of Pennsylvania; bounded on the E. by the Laurel Ridge of the Allegany Mountains, W. by the Monan-gahela river, and S. by Monangahela county, Virginia. It is nearly a square of about 32 miles each way. Pop. 33,574. Union, 186 miles W. by S. of Harrisburg, is the chief town.

In Georgia, bounded on the W. by Flint river. Capital, Fayetteville. This county has been recently formed. Pop. 6191.

In the S.W. part of Ohio, W. of the Sciota river. Washington, the chief town, is 40 miles S.W. by S. of Columbia, and 35 N.W. of Chillicothe. Pop. 10,984.

In the interior of Kentucky, E. of Kentucky river. Pop. 22,194. LEXINGTON (which see) is the chief town.

In the E. part of Indiana. Pop. 9837. Connersville, 65 miles S.E. by E. of Indianapolis, is the chief town.

In the W. part of Virginia, watered by the New river, which is exceedingly rapid. There are some interesting remains of Indian fortifications in the county. Pop. 3924.

In the W. part of Alabama, with an undulating and fertile surface. Capital, Fayette, city and county. Pop. 6942.

In the S.W. part of Tennessee. The soil is excellent. A railroad extends from La Grange to Memphis, on the Mississippi. Capital, Somerville. Pop. in 1840, 21,501, including 10,885 slaves.

In the centre of Illinois drained by the Kaskaskin river. Capital, Vandalia. Pop. in 1840, 6328.

FAYETTEVILLE, a town of North Carolina, in Cumberland county, capital of a district, formerly called Fayette, but now divided into several counties. Its trade with Wilmington is very considerable, to which it sends tobacco, wheat, hemp, cotton, lumber, staves, naval stores, &c., and has a return of European and Indian goods. A disastrous fire destroyed a considerable portion of the place in 1831, which excited great sympathy throughout the Union, and from the effects of which it has recovered. It is situate on the N.W. branch of Cape Fear river; 50 miles S. by W. of Raleigh, and 90 N.W. of Wilmington.

FAYOUM, or FIUM, a valley and province of central Egypt, anciently the name of Arsinoë. It is about 40 miles from E. to W. and 30 miles broad from N. to S., and, unlike other valleys, has its greatest depressions at the sides, that to the N. occupied by the Birket-el-Kerûn, the remains of the ancient Lake Moeris. This celebrated reservoir for the superabundant waters of the Nile, has lately been shown to have been formed by an immense artificial embankment, forming a right angle on its N. and W. sides, now, however, destroyed. The S. depression is occupied by Lake Garah. Medinet-el-Fayoum is the capital, and near it are some remains which have been stated as those of the famous labyrinth.

FE, Sr., a town of Spain, in the province of Granada, near the river Xenil; 6 miles W. by N. of Granada.

FÉ, STA., a city of Paragnay, in the province of Buenos Ayres. The environs abound in silk, corn, wine, fruit, game, and cattle. It is seated on the Parana, at the influx of the Salado; 240 miles N.N.W. of Buenos Ayres. Long. 61. 10. W. lat. 31. 30. S.

FÉ, STA., the capital of New Mexico, and a bishop's see, with a fortress. The environs are rich, and it stands on a river, which, 57 miles below, enters the Rio del Norte. Long. 108. 48. W. lat. 36. 50. N.

FÉ DE BOGOTA, STA. See BOGOTA.

FEAR, CAPE, a cape of N. Carolina, where there is a dangerous shoal, called, from its form, the Frying Pan, lying at the entrance of Cape Fear river. This river is formed by two branches, called the N.W. and N.E. branches, which unite above Wilmington; and it enters the Atlantic below Brunswick. Long. 77. 45. W. lat. 33. 40. N.

FECAMP, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a trade in linen, serges, lace, leather, and hats; seated near the English Channel; 24 miles N.E. of Havre de Grace.

FECKENHAM, a parish in Worcestershire, with an extensive manufacture of needles.

FEELJEE, FEIJEE, or VIJI ISLES, South Pacific Ocean, an extensive group of islands discovered by Tasman, in 1643. The principal island, called Viti-levu, is high and fruitful, and abounding in hogs, fruits, and roots of all kinds. The inhabitants are very ferocious, and are addicted to cannibalism; they are tall, well-formed, and dark, with hair approaching to woolly, and are of Malay origin.

FEIRA, a town of Portugal, in Beira; 10 m. S.E. of Oporto, and 30 N. by E. of Aveiro.

FELDKIRCH, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the river Ill, near its entrance into the Rhine; 19 miles S. of the Lake of Constance.

FELDSHURG, a town and castle at the N.E. extremity of Lower Austria, with a fine palace; seated on the Teyn; 18 miles E. of Laab.

FELICUDA, one of the Lipari islands in the Mediterranean; 28 miles W. of Lipari.

FELIPE, ST. See XATIVA.

FELIPE, SAN, a town of the republic of Venezuela. It was settled by a great number of Canary islanders and natives of the neighbouring districts, who were attracted by the fertility of the soil. The present inhabitants grow cocoa, coffee, maize, rice, and a little cotton. The copper mines of Arva are in the neighbourhood. Pop. about 7000.

FELIX, ST., an island in the Pacific Ocean, N.N.W. of Juan Fernandez. Long. 86. W. lat. 26. S.

FELLTIN, a town of France, in the department of Creuse, with a manufacture of tapestry. It is 20 miles S.S.W. of Evaux, and 21 S.S.E. of Gueret.

FELLIN, a town of Russia, in Livonia, on the river Fernau; 62 miles S.E. of Revel.

FELSHERG, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, with an ancient castle on a rock; 12 miles S. of Cassel.

FELSO-BANYA, a village of Upper Hungary, near the frontier of Transylvania, celebrated for a gold mine in its vicinity.

FELTRI, a town of Italy, capital of Feltrino, and a bishop's see. It is fortified, and seated on the Asona, a small stream, falling into the Piave from the W.; 30 miles N.W. of Treviso. Long. 11. 55. E. lat. 46. 3. N. Pop. about 5000.

FELTRINO, a district of Italy, lying between Belunese, Trevisano, Vicentino, and the principality of Trent. It abounds in mountains, in which are iron mines. Feltri is the only place of note.

FEMERN, a fertile island of Denmark, at the entrance of the Baltic, from the passage of the Great and Little Belt. It is 10 miles long and 5 broad, separated from the coast of Holstein by a narrow channel, called the Femern Sound. Borg is the chief town; population of the island about 7500.

FENNESTRANGE, or FENESTRANGE, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, on the river Sarre; 40 miles E. by N. of Nancy.

FENESTRELLE, a town and fort of Piedmont; seated on the Cluson; 18 miles W. of Turin.

FERABAD, a town of Persia, capital of the province of Mazenderan. The environs produce sugar, cotton, and silk. The inhabitants, about 16,000, are principally descendants of Georgians and Armenians. It is seated among the mountains which bound the Caspian sea to the S.; 12 miles from that sea, and 280 N. of Ispahan. Long. 52. 21. E. lat. 36. 54. N.

FERCALA, or FORCULA, a town of the kingdom of Tufflet, E. of Morocco, and the principal place of a district. It is 50 miles W. of Sigilmessa. Long. 4. 30. W. lat. 31. 40. N.

FERE, a town of France, in the department of Aisne, famous for its powder-mill and school of artillery. Near it is the castle of St. Gobin, in which is a manufacture of fine plate-glass. Fere is seated at the conflux of the Serre with the Oise; 20 miles N. of Soissons, and 75 N.E. of Paris.

FERENTINO, or FIORINZO, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma; 3 miles W. of Alatri, on the high road from Rome to Naples.

FERETTE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, on the river Ill, near its source; 40 miles S. of Colmar.

FERGHARA. See KIUKAN.

FEROUS, a river in Ireland, county of Clara, tributary to the Shannon.

FERMANAGH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster; bounded on the N. by the counties of Donegal and Tyrone, E. by Monaghan, S. by Cavan, and W. by Leitrim, the N.W. end jutting upon Donegal Bay; it extends from the S. in a N.W. direction about 36 miles, being about 24 in mean breadth. Area. 471,348 imperial acres.

One-sixth of its area in summer, and one-fifth in winter, is occupied by Lough Erne, which discharges its waters into Donegal Bay, dividing the county into nearly two equal parts. In the centre of the county, the water narrows so as to admit of the two parts being united by a bridge. See ENNIS-KILLEN. The linen manufacture, and the raising of cattle and hemp, are the chief employ of the inhabitants. The county is navigable throughout by means of Lough Erne, but its uneven surface and numerous bogs render it difficult for travelling. Enniskillen is the capital and only town of importance in the county. It returns two members to parliament.

FERMO, a town of Italy, in the Roman States, and an archbishop's see, with a good trade in corn, wool, &c. It has a harbour on the Gulf of Venice, and is 17 miles S.E. of Macerata. Long. 13. 50. E. lat. 43. 7. N. Pop. including its suburbs, 19,000.

FERMOSELLA, or FORMOSELLA, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon; seated on the N. bank of the Tormes, near its entrance into the Douro.

FERMOY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork; seated on the banks of the Blackwater; 142 miles N.W. of Dublin, on the road to Cork, from which it is distant 17 miles. This place has risen from an inconsiderable village, since the commencement of the war in 1793.

FERNANDEZ. See JUAN FERNANDEZ.

FERNANDINA. See XAGUA.

FERNANDO NORONHA, an island in the S. Atlantic; 100 leagues from Cape St. Roque, the N.E. point of the province of Pernambuco. It belongs to Brazil, and is used as a penal settlement. Long. 32. 33. W. lat. 3. 56. S.

FERNANDO PO, an island of Africa, in the bight of Biafra, 20 miles from the African coast, about 40 miles long, and 20 broad. It is mountainous, and its highest point, Clarence Peak, is 10,700 feet high. It was selected as a military and naval station by Great Britain in 1827, from its supposed salubrity, and its proximity to the slave-trading ports. But it was soon found to be nearly as unhealthy as other parts of the Guinea coast, and was consequently abandoned about 7 years afterwards. There are some few European residents still at Clarence town, the chief settlement on the N. side of the island. Lat. 3. 53. N. long. 7. 40. E.

FERNET, a village of France, in the department of Ain, a few miles N.W. of Geneva, celebrated as having been the residence of Voltaire.

FERNS, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, and a bishop's see united to Leighlin. It is seated on the Bann, near its conflux with the Slaney; 17 miles N. of Wexford, and 30 S.S.W. of Wicklow.

FEROE ISLANDS, a cluster of 22 small islands in the Northern Ocean, between the Shetland Islands and Iceland, in 5. and 8. W. long. and 61. and 63. N. lat.; subject to Denmark. Seventeen are habitable, each of which is a lofty mountain, divided from the others by deep and rapid currents. Some of them are deeply indented with secure harbours, all of them steep, and most of them faced with tremendous precipices. They produce agate, jasper, and beautiful zeolites. The surface consists of a shallow soil of remarkable fertility, yielding plenty of barley and fine grass for sheep. No trees above the size of a juniper, or stunted willow, will grow here; and the only quadrupeds are sheep. Vast quantities of sea-fowls frequent the rocks, and the taking of them furnishes a perilous employment for the inhabitants. The exports are salted mutton, tallow, geese-quills, feathers, eider-down, knit woollen waistcoats, caps, and stockings. To the S. of these islands is a considerable whirlpool. Pop. 5265.

FEROZABAD, or FIRUZABAD, a city of Persia, in Farsistan, formerly of considerable repute, and yet contains a number of fine tombs, gardens, and buildings. It is seated in a fertile county; 60 miles S. by W. o. Shiraz, on the route to Ormus. Long. 53. 0. E. lat. 28. 50. N.

FERRARA, a city of Italy, capital of a delegation of the same name, in the Roman States, and an archbishop's see, with a strong citadel, and a university. Its broad streets, and number of fine buildings, evince that it was formerly a flourishing place, but the present inhabitants are few, in proportion to its extent. In the middle of the city is a palace, surrounded by walls flanked with towers and ditches. The cathedral is remarkable for its antiquity. In the Benedictine Church, Ariosto the poet is interred. Ferrara was taken by the French in 1796; in 1799 it was retaken by the Austrians, but shortly after surrendered to the French. Its celebrity is almost all derived from its association with Ariosto, Tasso, who was imprisoned here, Guarini, Bentivoglio, &c. It is seated near the Po; 25 m. N.E. of Bologna. Pop. 25,000. Long. 11. 36. E. lat. 44. 50. N.

FERRARA, or FERRARESE, a duchy of Italy; bounded on the N. by the Po, which divides it from Polesino di Rovigno, W. by the Mantuan, S. by the Bolognese and Romagna, and E. by the Gulf of Venice. It had its own dukes till 1597, when Clement VIII. united it to the apostolic chamber. The air is unwholesome, on account of the marshes, which the abject condition of the inhabitants precludes from draining. Ferrara is the capital.

FERRENDINA, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, near the river Basianto; 25 miles S.W. of Matera.

FERRINTOSH, or FERINTOSH, a village of Scotland, shire of Ross, whose inhabitants possessed the privilege of distilling whisky, duty free, till 1786, when it was abolished.

FERRO, or HERRO, the most westward of the Canary islands; about 18 miles in circumference. It is not fertile, but produces some corn, sugar, fruit, and legumes. The inhabitants make use of water collected in cisterns during the rainy season, for there is no spring in the island. Voyagers speak of a fountain-tree in the middle of the island, and that in the night much water distils from its leaves. Ancient geographers have taken their first meridian from the W. extremity of this island. Long. 17. 52. W. lat. 27. 47. N.

FERROL, a seaport of Spain, in Galicia, on a bay of the Atlantic. Its harbour is one of the best in Europe. The magnificent dockyard, once one of the finest in the world, is now deserted and decaying, a sad emblem of Spain herself. The population of the town has dwindled down to some 13,000, and is poverty-stricken and unemployed. The town is surrounded on three sides by the sea, and strongly fortified on the other. It is 28½ miles N.E. of Corunna, and 305 N.W. of Madrid. Long. 8. 4. W. lat. 43. 23. N.

FERRYBIDGE, a large village in West Yorkshire, on the S. side of the Aire, over which is a noble bridge; 21 miles S. by W. of York, and 174 N. by W. of London.

FERRYPORT, a village of Scotland, in Fifeshire, on the Frith of Tay; 4 miles below Dundee, and 9 N.N.W. of St. Andrews. It has a considerable manufacture of brown linens, and a ferry over the Tay, well frequented before the bridge of Perth was built.

FERRYTOWN. See CREETOWN.

FERTE SUR AUBE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Marne; seated on the Aube; 22 miles W. by S. of Chaumont, and 33 E.S.E. of Troyes.

There are seven or eight towns in France named Ferte, all prefixed to some other name, as in the case of Aube, to distinguish them from each other.

FESTENBERG, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Oels; 14 miles N.W. of Warthenburg.

FESTINOG, a hamlet in North Wales, county of Merioneth. It is near the junction of the rivers Llyrhyd and Cynfoel, on which are several beautiful cascades.

FETHARD, a town of Ireland, in the county of Tipperary; 8 miles S.E. of Cashel, and 86 S.S.W. of Dublin. It was formerly fortified, but the walls are now ruined; it was also anciently a borough.

FETHARD, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford, on the W. side of Bannow Bay; 14 miles S. by E. of New Ross.

FEVERSHAM, or FAVERSIAM, a town in Kent, on a creek falling into the mouth of the Thames, much frequented by small vessels. It is a member of the port of Dover, and governed by a mayor. The church is in the form of a cross, and the interior well worthy of observation; and here is a free grammar school, founded by Queen Elizabeth. It has a market on Wednesday and Saturday; is famous for oysters; and has some gunpowder mills in its neighbourhood. Here are the remains of a stately abbey, built by King Stephen, who was interred in it with his queen and son. James II. embarked here in disguise, after the success of the Prince of Orange; but the vessel was detained by the populace, and the king conveyed back to London. Feversham is 9 miles W. of Canterbury, and 47 E. by S. of London, on the Chatham and Dover Railway.

FEUNS, a town of France, in the department of Loire, seated on the Loire; 13 miles E.N.E. of Montrbrison.

FEYSRITZ, or WINDISCH FISTRITZ, a town and castle of Germany, in Lower Styria, on a river of the same name; 17 miles N.N.E. of Cilley.

FEZ, or FAS, a kingdom of Barbary, at the N.W. extremity of North Africa; bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Algier, and S. by Morocco and Taflet. It extends upwards of 400 miles from E. to W. and is about 150 in breadth, is divided into nine provinces, and forms part of the empire of Morocco. The country is full of mountains, particularly to the W. and S. where Mount Atlas lies; but it is populous and fertile, producing citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, almonds, olives, figs, raisins, honey, wax, cotton, flax, pitch, and corn in abundance. The inhabitants breed camels, bees, sheep, and the finest horses in Barbary. At the extreme N. point is the town and fortress of Ceuta, garrisoned by the Spaniards. See CEUTA. The principal places on the Atlantic coast are Salce and Laranche; Melitta and Tangier, on the coast of the Mediterranean; and in the interior, Mequinez, Fez, and Teza.

FEZ, the capital of the kingdom of Fez, and one of the largest cities in Africa. It is composed of three towns called Belyde, Old Fez, and New Fez. Old Fez is the most considerable, and contains about 88,000 inhabitants. New Fez, founded about the 13th century, is principally inhabited by Jews, who trade with the Moors, notwithstanding the contempt with which they are treated by them. Old Fez was founded in 793, by Sidy Edris, a descendant of Mahomet and Ali, whose father fled from Medina to avoid the proscriptions of the caliph Abdallah. The palaces are magnificent; and there are numerous mosques, one of which, called Carubin, is one of the finest edifices in the empire. The houses are built of brick or stone, and adorned with mosaic work; those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours like Dutch tiles, and the wood-work and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. The roofs are flat; and every house has a court, in which is a square marble basin. Here are two colleges for students, finely built of marble, and adorned with paintings. The hospitals and public baths are numerous, many of which are stately structures. All the traders live in a separate part of the city; and the exchange, full of all sorts of rich merchandise, is as large as a small town. The gardens are full of all kinds of fragrant flowers and shrubs. The Moors of Fez are clothed like the Turks; and, though more polished than their countrymen, are vain, superstitious, and intolerant. The saints, whom they pretend to have been buried in the city, serve them for a pretext to forbid its entrance to Jews and Christians; and an order from the emperor is necessary to gain admission. Arabic is better spoken here than in other parts of the empire; and the rich Moors send their children to the schools at Fez, where they gain more instruction than they could do elsewhere. Fez is the centre of the trade of this empire; and hence caravans go to Mecca, carrying ready made garments, leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostrich feathers, for which they bring in return silks, muslins, and drugs. Other caravans go to Tombuctoo, and the river Niger. They travel over such dry barren deserts, that every other camel carries water. Their commodities are salt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woollen manufactures of Barbary. Fez is seated in a circular valley, watered by a river, and surrounded by mountains; 160 miles S.S.W. of Gibraltar, and 240 N.E. of Morocco. Long. 4. 45. W. lat. 33. 40. N.

FEZZAN, an interior kingdom of North Africa, lying between the great deserts of Zahara and Libya; bounded on the N. by Tripoli, to the pacha of which province Fezzan pays an annual tribute of 4000 dollars. It is an extensive plain, encompassed by mountains, except to the W.; and to the influence of these heights it may be owing, that here, as well as in Upper Egypt, no rain is ever known. Though the character of the surface (which in general is a light sand) and the want of rain, may seem to announce sterility, yet the springs are so abundant, that few regions in the N. of Africa exhibit a richer vegetation. The greatest length of the cultivated part is about 300 miles from N. to S. and 200 from E. to W. From wells of 10 or 15 feet deep, with which every garden and field is furnished, the husbandman waters the productions of his land; among these are the date-tree, the olive, lime, apricot, pomegranate, fig, maize, barley, wheat, pumpions or calabash, carrots, cucumbers, onions, and garlic. Among the tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, ass, and a species of the domestic fowl of Europe. The wild animals are the ostrich and antelopes of various kinds. A multitude of noxious animals infest the country; snakes, scorpions, and toads swarm in the fields, gardens, and houses; the air is crowded with mosquitoes; and persons of every rank are overrun with vermin. The heat of the climate in summer is intense, and the S. wind is scarcely supportable even by the natives; and in winter a penetrating N. wind prevails, which drives to the fire even the natives of the northern country. Tempests of wind are frequent, which whirl up the sand and dust so as to give a yellow tinge to the atmosphere. The towns are chiefly inhabited by husbandmen and shepherds; for, though they also contain merchants and artificers, yet agriculture and pasturage are the principal occupations. The houses are built of clay with a flat roof composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; their hair is a short curly black; their lips thick, their noses flat and broad, and their skin emits a fetid effluvia; they are tall, and well shaped, but weakly, indolent, and inactive. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors of Barbary. In their common intercourse, all distinctions of rank seem forgotten; the shereef, or governor, and the lowest plebeian, the rich and the poor, the master and the servant, converse familiarly, and eat and drink together. Generous and hospitable, let his fare be scanty or abundant, the Fezzaner is desirous that others should partake of it; and if twenty persons were unexpectedly to visit his dwelling, they must all participate as far as it will go. When they settle their money transactions, they squat upon the ground, and, having levelled a spot with their hands, make dots as they reckon: if they are wrong, they smooth the spot again, and repeat the calculation. Gold dust constitutes the chief medium of payment; and value in that medium is always expressed by weight. In religion they are rigid but not intolerant Mahometans. The government is monarchical; and its powers are administered with such a temperate hand, that the people are ardently attached to their sovereign. MOURZOUK (which see) is the capital.

FIANO, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter. It is seated on the Tiber; 15 miles N. of Rome.

FIANONO, a town of Istria, on the S.W. coast; 17 miles N. of Pola.

FICHELBERG, a mountain in Franconia, one of the highest mountains in Germany. It extends from near Bayreuth, to Eger in Bohemia, about 16 miles, and is covered with pines and other trees.

FIELEWIER, an island near the W. coast of Norway; 22 miles long and 4 broad, with a town of the same name; 48 miles W.N.W. of Dronthiem. Long. 10. 40. E. lat. 63. 44. N.

FIFE, a maritime county on the coast of Scotland, forming a peninsula between the friths of Forth and Tay: it extends from the mouth of the river Forth, in a N.N.E. direction, about 40 miles, and is about 12 miles in mean breadth; it is watered by numerous streams, the principal of which is the Eden, flowing through the centre of the county in a N.E. direction, into St. Andrew's bay. From the earliest period, the security afforded by its peninsular position appears to have occasioned it to have been the most densely populated part of Scotland; it seems to have constituted the stronghold of the Picts, during their conflicts with the Cimbri, or more ancient Scots. But it attained its greatest distinction in the early part of the 16th century, when its advantageous position obtained for it the royal favour of James V., who incorporated several of its towns, and conferred upon them royal privileges: 13 of these royal burghs still continue incorporated, but most of them are now become inconsiderable, and several others have become dissolved, from their inability to sustain the expense of civic parade; and, since the commencement of the 18th century the whole county has declined in importance, relative to other counties of Scotland; and, whatever benefit the county of Fife may have derived at former periods from royal favour, it now obviously militates against its social advancement. Some linen manufactures are carried on in the S.W. parts of the county, (see DUNFERMLINE;) but as a whole, it is an agricultural rather than a manufacturing district; it produces coal and lime in abundance, and copper, lead, iron, and other minerals are also found in different parts of the county, though but partially worked; a beautiful grey marble, cornelian, agates, and jasper, are occasionally met with, and fishing on its coasts and its rivers is assiduously pursued by the inhabitants. It returns one member to parliament. Cupar is the assize town.

FIGARNOLO, an island in the Gulf of Venice, near the coast of Istria. Long. 13. 47. E. lat. 45. 18. N.

FINDON, or FINNAN a fishing village on the E. coast of Scotland in Kincardineshire, 6 miles S. of Aberdeen. It is a poor place, but has long been celebrated for its preparation of smoked haddocks.

FINDHORN, a town of Scotland, shire of Elgin. It possesses a thriving foreign and coasting trade in corn, salmon, yarn, &c.

FINDLAY, a town of Ohio, capital of Hancock county, on the S. side of Blanchard's Fork of the Anglaise river. Laid out in 1823; 90 miles N.W. of Columbus.

FINDLAY, a town of Pennsylvania in Alleghany county. The surface is hilly. Pop. in 1840, 1367.

FINISTERRE, CAPE, a cape of Spain, forming the extreme N.W. point of that country, projecting into the Atlantic Ocean, from the province of Galicia. It was thought by the ancients to have no country beyond it, and therefore they gave it a name which signifies the Land's-end. Long. 9. 17. W. lat. 42. 54. N.

FINISTERRE, a maritime department of France, which includes part of the late province of Bretagne. It is the most westerly part of France, and bounded on three sides by the sea. On the N. it forms the boundary to the entrance of the English Channel. It is divided into five arrondissements, of which Quimper, Brest, Morlaix, Chateaulin, and Quimperle, are the seats of the prefects. Pop. in 1842, 576,068. The other principal towns are Lesneven, Landerneau, and Carhaix. Quimper is the capital.

FINLAND, a principality of European Russia, extending from the lat. of 60. to 66. 30. N., and in its extreme breadth from the long. of 21. to 31. 30. E. It is bounded on the S. by the Gulf of Finland, and W. by the Gulf of Bothnia, N. by Lapland, and E. by the Russian provinces of Wiburg and Olonetz; it formerly belonged to Sweden, and was divided into two great parts, the N. called East Bothnia, (see BOTHNIA;) and the S., Finland Proper, which contains several considerable towns, of which Abo is the chief, and capital of the whole country (see ABO.) The other towns are Nystadt, Raumo, and Bjorneborg, on the shore of the Gulf of Bothnia, and Helsingfors, Borgo, and Louisa, on the shore of the Gulf of Finland. There are also four or five considerable towns in the interior. About one third of the area of Finland Proper is composed of lakes. The contiguity of Finland to the maritime capital of the Russian empire had long rendered it an object of jealousy to that power, and in 1808 they overran it with so formidable a force as to compel the Swedes to consent to a formal cession of the whole country, and it now forms one of the fifty governments of the Russian empire. It is divided into eight districts, containing together a pop. of 1,411,952.

FINMARK, the most northern section of Europe, jetting into the Arctic Ocean: it formerly belonged to Denmark, but with Norway was ceded to Sweden, in 1815. The coast is flanked with islands, and indented with bays. It comprises about 400 miles of surface, but the inhabitants, a mixed race of Fins and Laplanders, do not exceed 26,000, who principally inhabit the coast, fishing and hunting constituting their chief employment; the S. part, bordering on Lapland, is mountainous. North Cape, its extreme northern limit, and also of Europe, is in the lat. of 71. 10. N. and 25. 50. of E. long.

FINOW, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark. It has a canal, by which the Oder and Havel are united. It is 23 miles N.W. of Custrin.

FLAMBOROUGH HEAD, a lofty promontory, on the coast of Yorkshire, whose snow-white cliffs rise from 300 to 450 feet above the level of the sea, and are the northern extremity of the chalk cliffs of Albion, affording shelter to innumerable multitudes of sea-fowls. The lower parts contain vast caverns, and on the summit is a lighthouse; 5 miles E.N.E. of Burlington. Long. 0. 2. W. lat. 54. 8. N. There is a village of the same name contiguous to the cliffs.

FLAMSTEAD, a village in Hertfordshire, England. It was a place of some importance in the time of the Romans being in possession of England.

The house in Greenwich Park, in which is the Royal Observatory, and from whence the English meridional line of longitude is drawn, is commonly called Flamsteed House, after the name of its first astronomer. See GREENWICH.

FLANDERS, a country of Europe, now included in the kingdom of Belgium; bounded on the North by the mouth of the Scheldt, and N.W. by the North sea or German Ocean, lying between the lat. of 50. 40. and 51. 20. N. and 2. 15. to 4. 15. of E. long. The early history of this country is involved in considerable obscurity; it has, however, for several centuries ranked among the most fertile, populous, and civilized parts of Europe; it was formerly known under three divisions of French, Austrian, and Dutch Flanders; the French, or S. part, was comprised in the late province of Artois, now the département du Nord, or North. The Austrian comprised the centre, from E. to W.; and the Dutch the coast of the mouth of the Scheldt; the whole country was overrun by the French in the early part of the war, which commenced in 1793, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Campo Formio, in 1797. After the treaty of Luneville, in 1801, Austrian and Dutch Flanders was divided into two departments—Lys, on the W., and Scheldt on the E., and incorporated with the French empire. At the general partitioning of this part of Europe, which followed the peace of 1814, these two departments were ceded to the new kingdom of the Netherlands, and were included in the kingdom of Belgium on the erection of that state in 1831, and are now called the provinces of East and West Flanders.

FLANDERS, EAST, comprises about 1260 square miles, and contains about 758,906 inhabitants. It is divided into four circles, of which Ghent, Dendermonde, Oudenarde, and Eecloo, are the chief towns; the other places of note are Sluys, Ardenberg, Philipina, and Sas Van Ghent, on the shore of the mouth of the Scheldt; and Deynse, Renaix, Grammont, Sotteghem, Alost, and Watteren, in the S. The river Scheldt, which rises in the French department of Aisne, enters the S.W. corner, running N. by E. to Ghent in the centre of the province, and then nearly due E. till it changes its course to the N., forming the boundary of the province on the side of Brabant; towards the S. the surface is slightly undulated, but northward it is an entire level, intersected by canals, communicating both with the North sea and the mouth of the Scheldt.

FLANDERS, WEST, is bounded on the S. and S.W. by the French department, on the N. and N.W. by the North sea; the area of this province is about 1500 square miles, containing 627,128 inhabitants. Bruges, Furnes, Ypres, and Courtray are the chief towns; the other places of note are the seaports of Nicuport and Ostend; the latter is regarded as the maritime portal of this part of Europe; this, like East Flanders, is a level country; in the S.E. part fine thread, lace, and linen cambrics are manufactured to a great extent for exportation; over all the other parts of the two provinces, fishing, agriculture, and manufactures are assiduously pursued, and tend to render the inhabitants among the most social and best conditioned in Europe. The language of the common people is peculiar; but in the towns the French is most generally spoken. The Roman Catholic religion prevails through both provinces: the clergy are, however, a tolerant and respectable body. See BELGIUM.

FLATBUSH, a town of New York, chief of King's county, Long Island. The Americans were defeated near this place by the British in 1776. It is situate amid garden grounds; 5 miles S. by E. of New York.

FLATTERY, CAPE, on the W. coast of N. America, discovered by Cook, in 1778; and so named because he was disappointed at not finding a harbour. Long. 124. 57. W. lat. 48. 25. N.

FLAVIGNY, a town of France, in the département of Cote d'Or, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on a mountain, by the river Ozerain; 27 miles W.N.W. of Dijon.

FLÈCHE, LA, a town of France, in the département of Sarthe. Here was a noble college built by Henry IV., at which Descartes was educated; the centre is now converted into a town-house, and one of the wings rebuilt as a prytaeum, or military school for soldiers' children. It is seated on the N. bank of the Loire, and is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 5833. It is 80 miles E.N.E. of Nantes.
