FLECKEROE, JUSTEROE, or FLECKEREN, an island in the Skagerak, near the coast of Norway; a few miles E. of Christiansand. Between the island and the continent is a most excellent harbour, defended by a fortress. Long. 8. 18. E. lat. 58. 4. N.

FLEET, a river of Scotland, in Kirkcubrightshire, which issues from a small lake of the same name, and enters Wigton Bay, below Gatehouse. On its W. side are the vestiges of a camp, a druidical circle, and a vitrified fort.

FLEETWOOD, PORT, a new promising seaport town, at the mouth of the Wyre river, Lancashire. Piers for a harbour and lighthouse have been erected here, 15 miles S. of Lancaster, to which it is connected by the Preston and Wyre railway, a branch of the Liverpool and Manchester railway.

FLEMING, a county of Kentucky, in the N.E. part of the state. The surface is partly mountainous, partly undulating and fertile. Capital, Flemingsburg. Pop. in 1840, 13,268.

FLENSBORG, a seaport of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a strong citadel, and a harbour at the head of a bay in the Little Belt, at its entrance into the Baltic. It is a place of great commerce; 15 miles N.N.W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 47. E. lat. 54. 52. N. Pop. about 15,000.

FLEURANCE, a town of France, in the département of Gers, on the river Gers; 3 miles N. of Auch.

FLEURUS, a town of Belgium, in Namur; 6 miles N.E. of Charleroi. Here, in 1690, a victory was gained by the French over the allies; and in 1794 the Austrians were defeated in a general attack of the French posts

FLIE, or V. JELAND, an island on the coast of Holland, N. of the Texel, at the middle of the entrance of the Zuyder Zee.

FLINT, a county at the N.E. extremity of Wales; bounded in a N.W. direction, by the estuary of the river Dee, and N. by W. by the Irish sea. It is the smallest county in Wales, its superficies being only 243 square miles. It is, however, rich in coal, copper, and lead, and, since the commencement of the present century, the cotton manufacture has been introduced. It returns one member to parliament. The principal towns are Mold, Holywell, Hawarden, and St. Asaph.

FLINT, formerly the chief town of the county, though now a small place. It has the county gaol, but the assizes are held at Mold. Here are the remains of a royal castle, in which Richard II. took shelter on arriving from Ireland; but on leaving it, he was delivered into the hands of his rival, afterwards Henry IV.: it stands on a rock close to the sea, and is governed by a constable, who is also mayor of the town. Flint has no market, but is well frequented as a bathing-place. It is seated on the estuary of the Dee; 12 miles W.N.W. of Chester, and 195 N.N.W. from London, and contributes, with Holywell, &c., in sending one member to parliament.

FLINT, a river of the state of Georgia, which rises in Campbell and De Kalb counties, runs S.W., and joining the Chatahoochee, at its entrance into East Florida, forms the Apalachicola.

FLIX, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, strong both by nature and art. It stands on a peninsula formed by the Ebro, and the side where the river does not pass is covered by mountains, and defended by a castle. It is 23 miles N. of Tortosa.

FLODDEN, a field in the parish of Kirknewton, Northumberland, 5 miles N.N.W. of Woller, on which a battle was fought between the English and Scots, in 1513, in which James IV. was killed, with many of his nobility, and 10,000 men.

FLORAC, a town of France, in the department of Lozere; 13 miles S. of Mende, and 55 N. of Montpellier. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 2450.

FLORENCE, or FIRENZE, a celebrated city of Italy, capital of Tuscany, and an archbishop's see, with a citadel and a university. It was first founded by the soldiers of Sylla, embellished and enlarged by the triumvirs, destroyed by Totila, and rebuilt by Charlemagne. The circumference is about six miles, and the fortifications consist of only a wall and a ditch, with two or three forts which command a part of the town. It is divided into two unequal parts, by the river Arno, over which are four handsome bridges. The quays, the buildings on each side, and the bridges, render the part through which the river runs by far the finest; but every part is full of wonders in the arts of painting, statuary, and architecture. The environs are beautiful, rich, and populous. Some of the Florentine merchants, formerly, were men of great wealth; and one of them, in the middle of the fifteenth century, built that noble fabric, which, from the name of its founder, is still called the Palazzo Pitti. It was afterwards purchased by the Medici family, who made some enlargements; and it thence became the residence of the grand dukes of Tuscany. The Palazzo Vecchio, or old palace, contains a room 172 feet long and 70 wide, for public entertainments. The beauties and riches of these palaces, in all that is masterly in architecture, literature, and the arts, especially those of painting and sculpture, have been often described; but before they were plundered by the French, in 1800, all description fell short of their contents. The celebrated Venus of Medici, the standard of taste in female beauty and proportion, stood in a room called the tribune; this, with other masterpieces of sculpture, was carried away to Paris, but restored, with most of the other works of art, at the general peace in 1815. There are other rooms, whose contents are indicated by the names they bear; as the cabinet of arts, of astronomy, natural history, medals, portraits, porcelain, antiquities, &c. Beside the Medicean library, begun by Julius de Medici, and greatly augmented by Duke Cosmo I., there are several other copious libraries, especially those in the two Benedictine and Carmelite convents. The Florentine Academy, and the Academia della Crusca, were instituted to enrich the literature and improve the language of Tuscany; the latter is so named because it rejects, like bran, all words not purely Tuscan. The cathedral, the churches, and other public buildings, contain paintings and sculptures by the first masters in Italy; and the chapel of Lorenzo is, perhaps, the most expensive habitation that ever was reared for the dead, being incrustated with precious stones, and adorned with the workmanship of the best modern sculptors. The manufactures of Florence are chiefly woven fabrics; and it has a considerable domestic trade. Florence is 54 m. E.N.E. of Leghorn, which is its outlet; they are connected by the Leopolda railway. The Maria Antonia railway connects it with Pistoia, Lucca, &c. Population, 106,899.

FLORENCE, a town of Alabama, capital of Lauderdale county, on the N. side of the Tennessee river, just below the Muscle shoals. Steamboats ascend to the place, and it has great advantages for trade; 135 miles N. by W. of Tuscaloosa. Pop. about 2000.

FLORENT, St., a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on the Loire; 20 miles W.S.W. of Angers.

FLORENTIN, St., a town of France, in the department of Yonne, at the conflux of the Armance and Armancon; 15 miles N.E. of Auxerre, and 80 S.E. of Paris.

FLORENTINO, one of the three provinces of Tuscany; bounded on the N.W. by the republic of Lucca and the Modenese, N.E. by the Appennines, and S. by the Siennese. Pop. about 580,000; besides Florence, the capital, the other principal towns are Leghorn, Pisa, and Pistoia.

FLORES, or MANGETLE, an island of the East Indies, one of the chain that forms the S. boundary of the Java and Banda seas; 180 miles long and 45 broad; lying to the E. of that of Sumbawa. On the S. side, near the E. end, is a town named Larantua. Long. 121. 56. E. lat. 8. 20. S.

FLORES, a fertile island, one of the Azores; so called from the abundance of flowers found upon it. Lagens is the most populous town, but Sta. Cruz is the capital. Long. 31. 0. W. lat. 39. 34. N.

FLORIDA, a country of North America, the southernmost state of the United States, forming a promontory extending from St. Mary's river, which divides it from Georgia, in the lat. of 30. 40. to Cape Sable, in 25. 2. N., between 80. and 83. of W. long. This part of America was first made known to Europeans by Cabot, in 1496. It appears, however, not to have been revisited until 1512, when Ponce de Leon drew so flattering a picture of its fertility and capabilities as to render it an object of considerable attraction to all the maritime states of Europe; and it was, for upwards of two centuries, an object of repeated contention between the French, Spaniards, and English. In 1763, it was ceded by treaty to England, in whose possession it continued until 1779, when it was overrun by a Spanish force from Louisiana; and in 1783 it was ceded back to Spain, between which power and the United States of North America it continued an object of contention until 1819, when it was ceded to the latter power; the cession being ratified in 1821, it was taken possession of by the United States in July of that year, and now forms the state of Florida, having been admitted into the Union in 1845. Since it has been in possession of the United States, it has been the scene of a constant and extensive warfare with the Indians. The Seminoles were subdued in 1818, but a portion of them who refused to emigrate, have carried on a tedious and harassing warfare up to nearly the present time.

The area, comprised within the present limits of the state, is about 385 miles long, and from 50 to 250 miles wide, containing 57,000 square miles, or 37,000,000 acres. The state is divided into West, Middle, East, and South Florida, and the Appalachicola districts, and these again into 20 counties. Tallahassee is the seat of government. The face of the country is uneven, but it has no mountains or high hills: a large portion of it is covered with pine forests, and the borders of the streams are usually skirted with hammocks or hillocks of hard timber. A large portion of Florida consists of pine barrens, much of which has a poor soil, but has fertile tracts capable of producing sugar, rice, cotton, tobacco, &c. Majestic cedars, chestnuts, magnolias, and cypresses, are found. The peninsula, which constitutes the S. part of the state, presents a singular alternation of savannahs, hammocks, lagoons, and grass ponds, called altogether the everglades. There are numerous streams which discharge their waters into the Gulf of Mexico, and some into the Atlantic, and a river of considerable magnitude, rising from a lake 50 miles in circumference, in the lat. of 26. N., flows parallel with the Atlantic coast, at a distance of about 30 miles, and falls into the Atlantic, in the lat. of 30. 10. N. This river is at intervals two to five miles wide, and is navigable for vessels drawing eight or nine feet water 150 miles from its mouth. Its aggregate population is 13,651, the greater portion of whom are concentrated at St. Augustine, the principal town, seated on the Atlantic coast in the lat. of 29. 48. N. South Florida produces some of the finest timber in all America, either for ship-building, or for carpentry purposes. At present it forms the chief article of commerce; but as population increases, cotton and other products common to the tropics, will probably be cultivated with success, and, to an industrious and enterprising people, it will doubtless yield an abundance of all the necessaries of life. Cape Sable, the southern extremity of the territory, is 135 miles N.N.W. of Havana. A chain of islands, or rather sandbanks, flank nearly the whole line of coast, both on the side of the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico, and extensive shoals and reefs of sand bound the southern extremity. There are two or three commodious harbours on the W. coast, within the Gulf of Mexico; viz. St. Juan, Charlotte Harbour, and Spirito Santo, or Hillsborough.

There are several railroads in the state: one from Tallahassee to St. Mark's, 22 miles; another from Lake Wicomico to St. Joseph, 12 miles; another thence to Iola on the Appalachicola, and several others projected. Pensacola, the chief town, has the best harbour in the Gulf of Mexico, with sufficient depth of water for ships of the largest class, under the influence of the enterprising and migratory disposition of the people of the United States, both West and East Florida may fairly be anticipated rapidly to increase in population, productions, and importance.

FLORIDA CAPE is on the E. coast of East Florida, in the gulf of the same name, in the lat. of 25. 41. N. and 80. 5. of W. long; 90 miles N.E. of Cape Sable, and about 30 W. of the N.W. end of the Great Bahama bank. Near it is a lighthouse on Kay Biscayno.

FLORIDA GULF OF, is the passage out of the Gulf of Mexico into the Atlantic Ocean, between the N.W. coast of the island of Cuba, and the Bahama bank and islands on the E., and the promontory of Florida on the W. Through the passage the great body of waters, flowing into the Gulf of Mexico from the Mississippi, Colorado, and Rio del Norte, set, in a continual stream, running at the rate of 4 to 5 miles per hour: the stream continues to run along the eastern coast of North America, to the lat. of 42. when the current is dispersed by the great bank of Newfoundland. The gulf passage is from 30 to 130 miles wide, the narrowest part being between Capo Florida and the Great Bahama bank before mentioned.

FLORIDA KEYS, or MARTYRS ISLANDS AND REEFS, are the shoals and sand-banks flanking the southern extremity and E. coast of the promontory of Florida, as previously described.

FLOUR, Sr., a city of France, in the department of Cuntal, and a bishop's see. Good knives are made here, and it has a considerable trade in corn. It is seated on a mountain; 53 miles S. of Clermont, and 108 N. by W. of Montpellier. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 4980.

FLOYD, a county in the S. part of Virginia. Capital, Jacksonville. Pop. in 1840, 4453. Also a county in Georgia; the soil is fertile on the river banks. Capital, Rome. Pop. 4441. Also a county in the E. part of Kentucky, with a hilly and broken surface. Capital, Prestonburg. Pop. 6302. Also a county in Indiana, on the N.W. side of the Ohio. Capital, New Albany. Pop. 9454.

FLUSHING, a strong seaport of Dutch Zealand, in the island of Walcheren, on the N. side of Western Scheldt, the entrance of which it defends. It has a good harbour, and a great canal, which is deep enough to admit loaded vessels, runs through the town. The stadthouse is a superb building, after the model of that of Amsterdam. Flushing was the birthplace of Admiral De Ruyter, and has a capacious harbour and basin for ships of the largest burthen. It is one of the naval depôts of the Netherlands. Its trade consists chiefly of smuggling. Pop. 6000. It is in lat. 51. 27. N. and 3. 34. of E. long.

FLUSHING, a town of New York, in Queen's county, Long Island, situate on the E. side of Hell-gate; 7 miles E. by N. of New York. Pop. 4124.

FLUVANNA, a county of Virginia, N. of James river, at the foot of the first ridge of the Alleghany mountains. The population is 8812. Columbia, the chief town, at the S.E. corner of the county, is 52 miles W. by N. of Richmond.

FOCHANERS, a town of Scotland, belonging to Banffshire, being seated on the E. side of the river Spey. It is 8 miles E. by S. of Elgin, and 22 W. of Banff.

FOCHAN, a populous village of China, in the vicinity of Canton.

FOCHEA, or FOGGIA, a seaport of Asiatic

Turkey, in Natolia, with a castle. The Venetians beat the Turkish fleet near this place, in 1650. It is seated on the Gulf of Smyrna, at the influx of the Hermus; 28 miles N. W. of Smyrna. Long. 26. 39. E. lat. 38. 44. N.

FOEDWAR, a town of Hungary; seated on the W. bank of the Danube, opposite Colocza; 40 miles S. of Buda. Pop. 2500.

FOGARAS, a town and castle of Transylvania, on the river Alauta; 30 miles N. by E. of Hermanstadt.

FOGGIA, a town of Naples, in Capitanati. It is a staple for corn and wool, and seated near the Cerbero; 20 miles S. of Manfredonia. It suffered greatly by an earthquake, in 1732. Pop. about 21,000.

FOGLIA, a river of Italy which rises on the confines of Tuscany, crosses the duchy of Urbino, and enters the Gulf of Venice at Pesaro.

FOGLIZZO, or FOGLINO, a town of Piedmont; 5 miles N.W. of Chevasso, and 13 W. of Crescentino.

FOGO. See FUEGO.

FOHR, or FORA, an island of Denmark, about 12 miles in circumference, near the coast of Sleswick, in the German Ocean; 65 miles N. of Helligoland. Pop. about 5500. Long. 8. 31. E. lat. 54. 44. N.

FOIX, a late district of France, in Languedoc, adjoining the Pyrenees. It now forms with Couserans, the department of Arriège.

FOIX, a town of France, capital of the department of Arriège. Here is a manufacture of coarse woollen cloths, and some copper-mills. It is seated on the Arriège, near the foot of the Pyrenees; 42 miles S. by E. of Toulouse.

FO-KIEN, a maritime province in the S. of China; bounded on the N. by Tehe-kiang, W. by Kiang-si, S. by Quang-Tong, and E. by the China sea. The climate is warm; and yet the air is so pure, that no contagious diseases ever prevail. It produces musk in abundance, precious stones, quicksilver, iron, and tin; also gold and silver, but it is forbidden to dig for these. It has fine plains; and industry fertilizes even the mountains, the greater part of which are cut into terraces, rising above each other. Its valleys are watered by springs and rivers from the mountains, which the husbandman distributes with great skill, to refresh his rice: he has even the art to raise his water to the tops of the mountains, and to convey it from one side to the other, by pipes made of bamboo. The people speak a different language in most of the cities, each of which has its particular dialect. The language of the mandarins is that which is spoken every where; but few understand it in this province; however, it produces a great number of literati. It contains nine cities of the first, and sixty of the third class. Fou-tchou is the capital. See CHINA.

FOLESHILL, a parish in the county of the city of Coventry, lying on the N. side of the city, and intersected by the Coventry canal.

Population almost exclusively employed in the ribbon manufacture.

FOLIGNO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Umbria; famous for its sweetmeats, paper-mills, and silk manufactures. It is seated on the W. side of the Apennines, near a fertile plain; 69 miles N. of Rome.

FOLKINGHAM, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday. Here are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on a rising ground; 18 miles W.S.W. of Boston, and 106 N. of London. Pop. 744.

FOLKESTONE, a town of Kent, with a market on Thursday. At various times four of its churches have been destroyed by the incursions of the sea. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in fishing. Dr. Wm. Harvey, the far-famed discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was born here in 1578. Since the railway has been constructed, it has greatly improved, and numerous handsome terraces and houses afford accommodation for summer visitors. Its harbour has been deepened and rendered accessible for steam boats communicating with the French ports opposite. It is a member of the port of Dover. It is seated on the English Channel; 8 miles S.W. of Dover, and 72 E. by S. of London, to which it is connected by the South Eastern Railway.

FONDI, a town of Naples, in the Terra di Lavoro; seated on the Appian Way, near the sea coast; 65 miles S.S.W. of Rome.

FONG-TSIANG, or FONTCHOU, a city of China in the province of Chen-si. Its district contains eight cities of the second and third class. It is seated on the Hoie Ho, which falls into the Yellow river; 500 miles S.W. of Peking. Long. 106. 57. E. lat. 34. 36. N.

FONG-YANG, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It encloses within its walls several fertile little hills; and its jurisdiction comprehends five cities of the second, and thirteen of the third class. It is seated on a mountain which overhangs a river falling into the Hong-tse Hou; 70 miles N.E. of Nankin. Long. 116. 58. E. lat. 32. 52. N.

FONS, a town of France in the department of Lot; 5 miles N.W. of Figeac.

FONTAINELEAU, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne; celebrated for its fine palace, and a hunting seat of the sovereigns of France. It stands in the midst of an extensive forest; 35 miles S.S.E. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. about 8000.

FONTAINE L'ÉVÊQUE, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege; 6 miles W. of Charleroi.

FONTANETTO, a town of Piedmont; 7 miles E. of Crescentino.

FONTARABIA, or FUENTERRADIA, a seaport of Spain, in Biscay, on the frontiers of France, from which it is separated by the river Bidassoa, which forms a harbour at its mouth, in the Bay of Biscay. It stands on a peninsula, at the foot of the Pyrenean mountains, and was once so strong, both by nature and art, as to be accounted the key of Spain on that side; but it opened its gates to the French in 1794. It is now a miserable and dilapidated spot. It is 22 miles S.W. of Bayonne, and 62 E. by N. of Bilbao. Long. 1. 47. W. lat. 43. 23. N.

FONTENAY LE COMPTE, a town of France, in the department of Vendée. It has a woolen manufacture, and its fairs are famous for cattle. It is seated on the Vendée; 25 miles N.E. of Rochelle, 55 W. by S. of Poitiers, and 215 S.E. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 6389.

FONTENOY, a town of Belgium, in Hainault; 4 miles S.E. of Tournay. It is celebrated for a battle between the allies and the French in 1745, in which the former were defeated.

FONTEVRAULT, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne and Loire. Here is a famous abbey, in the church of which several kings and queens of France lie interred. It is 7 miles S.E. of Saumur.

FORA, an island of Denmark, on the W. coast of S. Jutland, between those of Sylt and Nordstrand. It is of an oval form, 20 miles in circumference, and the chief place is Utersen. See FOHRA.

FORCHHEIM, a strong town of Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg, with a fine arsenal. It surrendered to the French in 1796, but the Austrians compelled them to abandon it soon afterward. It is seated at the conflux of the Wisent and Rednitz, 16 miles S.S.E. of Bamberg, and is now included in the territory of the king of Bavaria.

FORDHAM, a town of the state of New York, on the line of the Harlem railroad, with a dépôt. The St. John's (R. C.) college, was founded here in 1841; 12½ miles from New York city hall.

FORDINGBRIDGE, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Friday, and a manufacture of checks and bed ticks; seated on the Little Avon; 10 miles S. of Salisbury, and 88 W. by S. of London.

FORDWICH, a member of the town and cinque-port of Sandwich. It is now a small old-fashioned village, but possesses a corporation, who are entitled to the fishery of the river Stour, which is celebrated for its fine trout; 2 miles E.N.E. of Canterbury.

FORELAND, NORTH, a promontory of Kent, the E. point of the isle of Thanet. It is the most southern point of the port of London; and a line thence extended N. to the point called the Nase, in Essex, forms the mouth of the Thames. Here is a lighthouse upwards of 100 feet high. Long. 1. 29. E. lat. 51. 22. N.

FORELAND, SOUTH, another promontory of Kent. It is called South, in respect to its bearing from the other Foreland, which is 13 miles to the N., and on it are two beautiful modern lighthouses. Between these two capes is the noted roadstead, called the Dowus.

FINEST TOWNS, four towns of Suabia, in Brisgau, situate on the Rhine and the confines of Switzerland, at the entrance of the Black Forest. Their names are Waldschut, Lanffenburgh, Seekingen, and Rheinfelden.

FORFAR, a burgh of Scotland, capital of Angus-shire. It contains many neat modern houses, and has manufactures of coarse linens and shoes. It is situate in an extensive plain, nearly in the centre of the county; 14 miles N. by E. of Dundee. It contributes, with Inverbervie, &c., in sending one member to parliament, and has a railway to Arbroath.

FORFARSHIRE. See ANOUSSHIRE.

FORRES, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine; celebrated for its mineral waters. It is 24 miles N.E. of Rouen.

FORTE, or FONTARIO. See ISCHIA.

FORLI, a town of Italy, in the Roman states; seated on the frontier of Tuscany, in a fertile country, near the river Ronca; 11 miles S.S.W. of Ravenna. Pop. 16,000.

FORMENTERA, an island in the Mediterranean, belonging to the crown of Spain. It is situated to the S. of Ivica, from which it is separated by a channel 4 miles wide.

FORMOSA, TAE-WAN, or TAIOUAN, an island in the China sea, lying between 120. and 122. E. long. and 22. and 25. N. lat., and separated from the province of Fo-kien, in China, by a channel about 80 miles wide where narrowest. It is 280 miles from N. to S., and 70 in its broadest part, but is greatly contracted at the S. extremity. It is subject to the Chinese, who, however, did not know of its existence till the year 1430. A chain of mountains, running its whole length, divides it into two parts, the E. and W. The Dutch built the fort of Zealand, on the W. part, in 1643. They were driven thence in 1661, by a Chinese pirate, who made himself master of all the W. part. In 1682 the whole island submitted to the emperor of China. It contains extensive and fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivulets from the mountains. It produces abundance of corn and rice, most of the Indian fruits, many of those of Europe, tobacco, sugar, pepper, camphire, and cinnamon. Wholesome water is the only thing wanting in Formosa. The inhabitants rear a great number of oxen, which they use for riding, from a want of horses. This island was almost totally destroyed by a furious hurricane and dreadful inundation of the sea. Taïouan, at the S.W. end of the island, is the capital.

FORMOSA, CAPE, the point of land between the Bights of Benin and Biafra, in the Gulf of Guinea. Lat. 4. 15. N. and 5. 10. of E. long. One of the Bissagos Isles, on the W. coast of North Africa, is also called Formosa. Lat. 11. 30. N. long. 16. 10. W.

FORNOVO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma; near which, in 1495, Charles VIII. of France, obtained a victory over the princes of Italy. It is 8 miles W.S.W. of Parma.

FORRES, a royal burgh of Scotland, in Morayshire, neatly built on an eminence, on the river, and near the bay of Findhorn, which is its port. It has manufactures of linen and thread, and a valuable salmon fishery. A little W. of the town is a column, called Sweno's stone, covered with antique sculpture, and said to have been erected in memory of a victory obtained over the Danes in 1008; Forres is 12 miles W. by S. of Elgin, and 12 E. of Nairn. It is contributory with Fortrose, &c., in sending one member to parliament.

FORSTA, a town of Lusatia, with a castle. It has manufactures of woollen and linen cloths and carpets, and stands on a little island in the Neissa; 15 miles S.S.W. of Guben, and 54 N.E. of Dresden.

FORSYTH, a county of Georgia, on the Chattahoochee river, producing some gold, &c. Capital, Cumming. Pop. 5619.

Fort is prefixed to numberless fortresses and towns in different parts of the world, all the most important of which will be found in order of their substantive names.

FORT COVINGTON, a town of New York, on the Salmon river, which is navigable to the St. Lawrence, 5 miles below; 266 miles N.N.W. of Albany. Pop. in 1840, 2094.

FORT WAYNE, a strong fortification on the extreme W. end of Long Island, adjoining the Narrows, the main entrance to New York harbour. The village attached is frequented by summer visitors.

FORTEVENTURA, or FUERTEVENTURA, one of the Canary Islands, 65 miles in length, and of a very irregular breadth, consisting of two peninsulas, joined by an isthmus 12 miles in breadth. Its chief product is the barilla plant; it also produces some wheat, barley, beeves, and goats. The S.W. point is in long. 14. 31. W. lat. 28. 4. N. Pop. about 14,000.

FORTH, a river of Scotland, which rises in the mountain Benlomond, in Dumbartonshire, flows E. in a sinuous course, by Stirling and Alloa, and meets the German Ocean a little below Alloa, where it forms a noble estuary, called the Frith of Forth. The Forth is navigable for vessels of 80 tons as far as Stirling bridge, and for merchant vessels of any burthen, as far as Grangemouth, where there is a communication between this river and the Clyde, by a canal.

FORTH, FRITH OF, the estuary above mentioned, is about 10 miles in mean breadth, that is, reckoning the entrance from North Berwick, on the S., to Elie Ness, on the N., the distance from which two points is about 8 miles; from this line to the Queensferry where it narrows to a mile and a half, the distance is about 28 miles, and from Queensferry to Grangemouth the distance is about 12 miles, the water spreading again to the extent of 3 to 4 miles. Between Queensferry and the line of Elie Ness are a number of islands, the most celebrated of which are Inch Garvie, Inch Colm, and Inch Keith: on the latter, and on the Isle of May, without the line of Elle Ness, are lighthouses, and these, as well as most of the other islands, contain ruins of castles or religious houses. St. Abb's Head on the S. and Fife Ness on the N., distant from each other 35 miles, are by some considered as forming the points of entrance to the Frith of Forth.

FORTHROSE, a burgh of Scotland, in Rosshshire situate on the Moray Frith, nearly opposite Fort George, to which there is a regular ferry. It is composed of two towns, Rossmarkie and Chanonry; the former a very ancient burgh, and the latter one a bishop's see. Two small parts of the ancient cathedral remain; one used as a burial-place, the other as a court-house and prison. It contributes, with Inverness, Forres, and Nairn, in returning one member to parliament. It is 9 miles S.S.W. of Cromarty.

FORT-ROYAL, a town of Martinico, on the W. side of the island, with one of the best harbours in the West Indies, defended by a strong citadel. It is the residence of the French Governor of the island. Long. 61. 9. W. lat. 14. 36. N.

FORT-ROYAL, the capital of the island of Granada. See ST. GEORGE.

FOSSANO, a town of Piedmont, with a citadel; seated on the Stora; 10 miles N.E. of Coni. It has manufactures of silk.

FOSSE, a town of the Netherlands, in Namur, situate between the Sambre and Menise; 7 miles N.W. of Namur.

FOSSEMURONE, a town of Italy, in the Roman States, delegation of Urbino, with a castle on a mountain; near the river Metro; 10 miles S.E. of Urbino. The vicinity is very productive of fine silk.

FOSSUM, a town of Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys, noted for rich mines of cobalt; 35 miles W. of Christiania.

FOTHERINGAY, a village in Northamptonshire; 3 miles N. of Oundle, near the Nen. Here are the ruins of a castle in which Richard III. was born, and Mary, Queen of Scots, tried and beheaded. In the church are interred two dukes of York; Edward, killed at Agincourt in France, and Richard, slain at Wakefield.

FOUR, or FAGUA, a town of Lower Egypt; seated on the W. branch of the Nile; 25 miles S. by E. of Rosetta.

FOUGERES, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine, with an ancient castle. In 1302 it was taken by John, king of England. It is seated on the Coesnon; 25 miles N.E. of Rennes, and 150 W. by S. of Paris. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 9000.

FOULA, or FOWLA. See FULA.

FOULI, PHOLEY, or FOULAH, a country of Africa, extending on both sides of the river Senegal, about 500 miles from E. to W.; the boundaries from N. to S. are unknown. It is populous and fertile. The Foulahs are, in general, of a tawny complexion, though many of them are entirely black. Some lead a wandering life, and roam about the country with large droves of cows, sheep, goats, and horses; others are dextrous at hunting wild beasts; the teeth of elephants, and the skins of lions, leopards, and tigers, being articles of trade. Their arms are bows and arrows, lances, swords, daggers, and occasionally a kind of small fusce. They are praised by travellers for their hospitality; nor is their humanity in other respects less commendable; for if one of their countrymen have the misfortune to fall into slavery, the rest join stock to redeem him. The king of this country is called the Siratick; and, though he seldom appears with the badges of majesty, he has great authority, and is as much respected as any one on the coast.

FOULNESS, a small island on the S. E. coast of Essex, formed by the river Crouch at its entrance into the mouth of the Thames.

FOULSHAM, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Tuesday; 18 miles N.W. of Norwich, and 111 N.E. of London.

FOUNTAIN, a county in the W. part of Indiana, to the E. of the Wabash river, and traversed by the Wabash and Erie Canal. Capital, Covington. Pop. in 1840, 11,218.

FOUR CANTONS, LAKE OF THE. See WALDSTÄDTER SEA.

FOURNEAUX ISLAND, a small island in the Pacific Ocean. Long. 143. 2. W. lat. 17. 11. S.

FOU-TCHEOU, a city of China, in Fo-kien, and the most considerable in that province, on account of its trade, the convenience of its rivers and port, and the number of its literati. It is the residence of a viceroy, and has under its jurisdiction nine cities of the third class. It is seated near the mouth of a river falling into the China Sea; 435 miles N.E. of Canton, and 1030 S. by E. of Peking. Long. 119. 4. E. lat. 26. 4. N.

FOU-TCHEOU, another city of China, in Kiang-si, formerly one of the most beautiful cities of China, but almost ruined by the invasion of the Tartars. It is 240 miles N. W. of the other Fou-teheou, and 835 miles S. of Peking. Long. 115. 56. E. lat. 27. 55. N.

FOWEY, or FAWY, a river in Cornwall, which rises 4 miles S.E. of Camelford, passes by Lostwithiel, and after a winding course of about 40 miles, enters the English Channel at Fowey.

FOWEY, a seaport in Cornwall; market on Saturday, and a considerable trade in the pilchard fishery. It is seated at the mouth of the Fowey, which forms a capacious and very safe harbour; 11 miles S. of Bodmin, and 239 W. by S. of London. Long. 4. 37. W. lat. 50. 19. N.

FOX ISLANDS, or ALEUTIAN ISLANDS, a group of islands in the Northern Archipelago. They are 16 in number, between the coast of Kamtschatka and the W. coast of America; between 52. and 55. N. lat. Each island has a peculiar name; but this general name is given to the whole group, on account of the great number of black, grey, and red foxes with which they abound. The dress of the inhabitants consists of a cap and a fur coat, which reaches down to their knees: some wear a cap of a party-coloured bird-skin, upon which is left part of the wings and tail. On the forepart of their hunting and fishing caps they place a small board, like a screen, adorned with the jawbones of sea-bears, and ornamented with glass beads, which they receive in barter from the Russians. They feed upon the flesh of all sorts of sea animals, and generally eat it raw. The provision intended for keeping is dried without salt, in the air. Their weapons are bows, arrows, and darts; and, for defence, they use wooden shields. The most perfect equality reigns among them: they have neither chiefs nor superiors, neither laws nor punishments. They live together in families, and societies of several families united, which form what they call a race, who, in case of attack or defence, mutually aid each other. They have a good share of plain natural understanding, and seem cold and indifferent in most of their actions; yet if an injury, or mere suspicion, rouse them from this phlegmatic state, they become furious and revengeful. The Russians call these islands the Lyssie Ostrova, and belong to the Russian American Fur Company.

There is a cluster of small, but beautifully fertile and romantic islands, called Fox Islands, on the coast of the state of Maine, North America.

FOXFORD, a town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, on the river Moy; 8 miles E.N.E. of Castlebar.

FOX, Sr., a town of France, in the department of Gironde, on the river Dordogne; 38 miles E. of Bordeaux.

FOYERS, or FYENS, a river of Scotland, in the county of Inverness, which rises a few miles E. of Fort Augustus, and flows into Loch Ness. About 2 miles before its entrance into the lake, is the fall of Foyers, one of the highest in the world, being 207 feet in height, in one unbroken stream.

FOYLE, a river of Ireland, formed by the conflux of the Fin and the Mourne, at Lifford, in the county of Donegal. It passes by St. Johnstown and Londonderry, and, four miles below, expands into a bay called Lough Foyle, of an oval form, 14 miles long and 8 broad, which communicates with the ocean by a short and narrow strait.

FRAGA, a town of Spain, in Arragon, strong by situation, having the river Cinca before it, whose high banks are difficult of access, and at its back a hill, which cannot easily be approached with cannon. It is a poor, rough, ill paved town, of 4900 inhabitants. Alphonso VII., king of Arragon, was killed here by the Moors, in 1134, when he besieged this town. It is 63 miles E.S.E. of Saragossa.

FRAGOAS, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura: 7 miles N.W. of Santarem.

FRAMINGHAM, a pleasant and flourishing village of Massachusetts, resorted to for fishing and fowling. Black lead is found. It is on the Sudbury river; 22 miles W.S.W. of Boston. Pop. 3030.

FRAMLINGHAM, a town of Suffolk, with a market on Saturday. It has the remains of a castle. To this place the Princess Mary retired, when Lady Jane Grey was proclaimed queen; and here she found that powerful support, which soon seated her on the throne. It is 30 miles E. of Bury, and 87 N.E. of London.

FRANCAVILLA, a town of Naples, in Terra de Otranto, with a trade in oil, cotton stockings, and snuff; 15 miles E.N.E. of Tarento.

FRANCAVILLA, a town in Naples, in Basilicata, on the river Sino; 20 miles W.S.W. of Trusi.

FRANCE, a country of Europe, extending in its extreme limits from the foot of the Eastern Pyrenees, in the lat. of 42. 25, in nearly a perpendicular line to Dunkirk, in the lat. of 51. 2. N.; this line gives a distance of 517 geographical, or 593 British statute miles: the most important extreme point on the W. is Brest, in the long. of 4. 29. W., and 48. 23. of N. lat., and on the E. Strasburg, in the long. of 7. 45. E., and lat. of 48. 35.; the distance between these two points is 12. 14. of W. long., which in the mean lat. of 48. 29., is equal to 490 geographical, or 576 British statute miles; but a line exceeding this by about 40 miles might be drawn in this direction within the French territory, from Point Ras, 28 miles S. of Brest, to the extreme eastern limit, 45 miles S. by E. of Strasburg: the mean line, however, from N. to S. does not exceed 470, and from W. to E. 420 British statute miles: these limits give a superficies of 203,736 square miles, equal to 138,506,800 British statute acres. A report made to the French government in 1817, computed the superficies to be equal to 128 millions of acres, of which about 92 millions were in a state of cultivation, and about 36 millions of acres reported as unproductive, and unfit for cultivation. On the N.E., by the kingdom of Belgium, the province of Luxembourg, and Rhenish Prussia and Bavaria, this fine territory is bounded: about 100 miles of this frontier, nearest to Dunkirk, is an open plain, without any natural barrier; further south, the inroad is more or less impeded by forests. From the lat. of 49. the Rhine, in a direction S. by W. for about 110 miles, divides France from the territory of the Grand Duke of Baden; from the lat. 47. 40. to 43. 42., it is divided from Switzerland, Savoy, and Piedmont, by collateral ridges of the Alpine mountains; the S. E. extremity is bounded by the little river Var, which divides France from the county of Nice: the meridional distance from this point to the eastern extremity of the Pyrenees is 270 statute miles, but the indentations of the Mediterranean sea give an extent of sea-coast on that side of France, near to, if not exceeding 390 miles. The Pyrenean mountains, in a direction W. by N. for 250 miles, next form the southern boundary of France, dividing it from the Iberian peninsula of Spain and Portugal; the little river Bidassoa forms the boundary at the S. W. extremity; and W. from the mouth of this river, in the lat. of 43. 22. and 1. 47. of W. long. to the Isle of Ushant, in the lat. of 48. 28. and 5. 3. of W. long., France is bounded by the Atlantic Ocean, and N. W. from the Isle of Ushant to Dunkirk by the English Channel; the meridional distance from the Bidassoa to Ushant is 390 miles, and from Ushant to Dunkirk, 380 miles; but the indentations of the sea will give about 570 miles of coast on each side of the Isle of Ushant, and, with the S. E. boundary on the Mediterranean, an aggregate extent of sea-coast of about 1366 miles, and a circumference of about 2840 miles. The seaports are Dunkirk, Calais, Boulogne, Dieppe, Fecamp, Havre, Caen, Cherbourg, St. Malo. and Morlaix, on the coast of the English Channel; Brest, Quimper, L'Orient, Nantes, Rochelle, Rochefort, Bordeaux, and Bayonne, on the coast of the Bay of Biscay, or Atlantic Ocean; and Marseilles and Toulon in the Mediterranean. Cherbourg, Brest, Rochefort, and Toulon, are the chief stations of the French national marine. Every part of France is intersected by rivers flowing in all directions: taking them in geographical order from the N., the first entitled to notice are the Moselle and the Meuse, both of which rise in the N. E. part of France, and take circuitous courses northerly into the Netherlands, the former falling into the Rhine, and the latter into the North Sea: the Somme is an inconsiderable river, running W.N.W. into the English Channel; the next in order and importance is the Seine, which also runs in a W.N.W. direction into the English Channel, being joined in its course by the Marne, Aube, and the Oise, on the N., and by the Yonne and the Eure on the S.; the Orne, and two or three other rivers of inferior note, also fall into the English Channel. The noblest river in all France is the Loire, which rises in the S., and flows in a direction N. by W., for about 250 miles, when it takes a direction nearly due W. for about 250 miles more, falling into the Atlantic Ocean, receiving in its course numerous tributary streams; the most considerable of which are the Allier, running parallel with it from the S. for about 180 miles, and the Cher, Indre, Creuse, Vienne, and Sevre, all from the S.; and from the N. it receives the Lower Loire, Sarthe, Mayenne, and a few others of inferior note; in the S. the united streams of the Lot, the Tarn, and Garonne, with several others of inferior note, form the Gironde, which falls into the Bay of Biscay, being joined from the E. below Bordeaux by the Dordogne and Ille: between the Loire and the Gironde, the Charente, and between the Gironde and the Pyrenees the Adour, each with numerous tributary streams, also fall into the Bay of Biscay. The Rhone rising near Mount St. Gothard, in Switzerland, after forming the lake of Geneva, enters France on the S.E., and, after a course of about 80 miles to Lyons, first S. and then W., it takes a course nearly due S. from Lyons, for about 150 miles, falling into the Mediterranean; being joined at Lyons by the Saone from the N. and below Lyons from the E. by the Isere, the Drome, and the Durance: the Herault, the Aude, and one or two other rivers of inferior note, run also into the Mediterranean, between the Rhone and the Pyrenees: the Seine is united with the Loire by a canal, as is the Garonne with the Mediterranean Sea. The canals are executed by government, and consist of seven principal lines, comprising about 80 large branches. The principal roads are also under government control, of which there are 28 royal roads, of the first class, and 97 of the second. Railroads have made but comparative small progress: the first in operation was that from Paris to Versailles.

Since the revolution which commenced in 1789, France has been divided into 86 departments, each department into three to six arrondissements, the total being 363; the arrondissements into 2845 cantons, and the cantons into 37,040 communes.

* The population of the capitals of the departments, is given inclusive of their respective communes. Subtracting, therefore, the amount of population dwelling in the suburban districts from the total given above, we find that the entire population of the 86 towns (including Paris, at the head of the French departments, does not exceed in amount that of the British metropolis.

The average population to the square mile, from the foregoing statement, is 164. The northern part of the country is more populous than the south. Of the increase of population previous to the Great Revolution, there are but few means of judging. It is supposed that the population in 1700 was 19,669,000. In 1789 it was computed at 30,451,187. The following shows the amounts as ascertained by the government at the respective periods:—

France, as to area, is one-third less populous than England and Wales. This territorial division is principally dependent on the rivers which intersect the country, and superseded the former division into 35 provinces; for military purposes it is now divided into 22 governments. With the exception of the S.E. departments bordering on the Alpine territories of Switzerland, Savoy, and Piedmont, France may be regarded as a level, rather than a mountainous country, and in many respects, alike in a geographical, political, and social sense, as bearing a similar relation to Europe that the fine and fertile plains and people of China do to Asia. Over all the S.E. part of the country the vine, almond, olive, and mulberry flourish and bring forth fruit in the highest degree of perfection, and the vine and a variety of delicious fruits luxuriate over the greater part of the country, to the 49th degree of lat. The N. and N.W. departments are productive in every kind of grain, pulse, and legumes; manufactures of silk, wool, linens, leather, and metals are carried on over all the parts of the country; and, since the termination of the war in 1814, the cotton manufacture has been progressively increasing, and is now carried on to a great extent. In addition to these internal resources, France exclusively enjoys the abundant produce of the islands of Martinique and Guadalupe, in the West Indies; she also holds in colonial possession Algeria, in Africa; Cayenne, in S. America; Goree and Senegal, on the coast of Africa; and the Isle of Bourbon, in the Indian Ocean; the Marquesas and Tahiti in the Pacific Ocean; and draws considerable produce from the Brazils, the United States of North America, parts beyond the Cape of Good Hope, the Levant, and other parts of the world, in exchange for her surplus produce of wines, brandy, silks, and various manufactures. Exempt from all those extremes of climate, which in several parts of the world militate against physical exertion, as well as vegetation, France may be considered as possessing within itself all the means of commanding a higher degree of human enjoyment than can be obtained in any other part of Europe, and equal to what can be obtained in any other part of the globe, yet, notwithstanding her superior natural advantages and aggregate means exceeding those of Great Britain in the proportion of three to one, in point of efficiency, in everything calculated to promote a high degree of social existence and enjoyment, France is incomparably deficient. The cause of this disparity in the efficiency of character of the two nations will perhaps be more apparent as the history of the rise and progress of their several institutions and relations are elucidated and examined.

For centuries prior to the Christian era, this part of Europe appears to have been inhabited by a numerous and hardy race of people, those occupying the interior being denominated Celts. The first important notice which history furnishes of them is in 225 n.c., when the Gauls, who inhabited part of Piedmont and the N. of Italy, invited the people then occupying the banks of the Rhone to aid them in repelling the aggressions of the Romans; and from thus being brought in contact with that powerful and enlightened people, they acquired the name of Transalpine Gauls, in reference to their territory lying W. of the Alps, and in contradistinction to the ancient Gauls, who were designated the Cisalpinians. In 106 n.c. the Cimbric and Teutones from the N. of Germany, marched through Transalpine Gaul into Spain, ravaging the country on their way; but being driven back by the Celtiberians, they divided their forces with the view of penetrating into Italy in two directions; the Teutones directed their course to the S. E., when they were opposed by Marius, between the mouths of the Rhone and the Durance, and experienced a complete defeat, losing 200,000 men on the field of battle, and 80,000 more taken prisoners. From this period the Romans extended their arms and their arts over the greater part of the country, and in the year 59 n.c. the Roman senate conferred on Julius Cæsar the government of all Transalpine Gaul, for five years; two years after this, the whole western coast, from the Seine to the Loire, became effectually subdued to Roman control, and in five years more, by awarding honorary distinctions to the principal cities, and distributing bribes to the leading chiefs, the whole country became reconciled to the Roman government. It was afterwards divided into 17 military divisions.

As the power of the Romans declined, Transalpine Gaul again became exposed to the inroad of the different tribes on the N. E. In the year 406 a tribe of Burgundians, from the banks of the Vistula, crossed the Rhine and took possession of all that part of the country afterwards named Burgundy; and in 420 another tribe from Franconia, under the command of Pharamond, entered from the N. E. From 450 to 452 it was ravaged by the Huns, under Attila, who, on laying siege to Orleans, was brought to battle by Marovens, who defeated Attila with a loss of 200,000 men. In 482 Clovis, a Franco-German and descendant of Maroveus, possessed himself of all the places in Transalpine Gaul previously held by the Romans, and in 492, marrying Clotilda, daughter of Chilperic, king of the Burgundians, became king of the whole country now called France. Clotilda at the time of her marriage had embraced Christianity, and in 496 Clovis initiated himself in its mysteries, through the means of St. Romi, and was baptized at Rheims on Christmas-eve of that year: hence the coronation at Rheims of the kings of France, through a period of more than 1300 years. Clovis was the first of a race of seventeen kings who reigned over France in regular succession, denominated the Merovingian race, in reference to their descent from Maroveus. In 732 France was ravaged by the Saracens, under the command of Abdalrahman, when Eades, duke of Aquitaine, implored the assistance of Charles Martel, duke of Austrasia, who brought Abdalrahman to battle between Tours and Poitiers, and defeated him, as history informs us, with the loss of 375,000 men, Abdalrahman himself being slain on the field of battle. In 737 the crown of France devolved to Charles Martel, whose manly spirit, however, disdained regal parade; he ruled France for four years, under the title of duke; he died in 741, and was succeeded by an imbecile named Childeric, whose authority in 752 was superseded by Pepin, who became the first of a race of 13 kings denominated Carolingians. Pepin died in 768, and was succeeded by Charlemagne the renowned, crowned emperor of the Romans, or of the West, at Rome, in 800. On the death of Louis V. in 986, after a reign of one year, the crown of France descended to Charles, an uncle of Louis; but in consequence of his having vassalated himself to the emperor Otho III. he was precluded from its accession, and the crown was conferred, by election, on Hugh Capet, who became the first of another race of 14 kings termed the Capetian. Charles IV., the last of the Capets in regular succession, dying in 1334, without male issue, the crown devolved on Philip of Valois, who was the first of 7 kings of that race. In 1498 it devolved on the duke of Orleans, who became Louis XII. and was the first of another race of 6 kings. On the death of Henry III. in 1589, the succession was again broken, when the crown devolved on Henry of Bourbon, in whose line it continued until the decapitation of Louis XVI. on the 21st of January, 1793.

For some centuries antecedent to this period, France had been divided into 32 provinces of very unequal extent, each with a distinct local administration. The period of their formation does not appear: at the time the Romans first entered France it was divided into four great parts, viz. Narbonensis; comprising the S. E., Aquitania the S. W., Celtica the interior, and Gallia Belgica the North. The division into 17 provinces took place under Augustus, the first emperor of Rome, and some of the Roman names continued as late as the 13th century, John, king of England, in the preamble to Magna Charta, being styled Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine; Austrasia, over which Charles Martel presided in the 8th century, appears to have comprised part of the N. E. of France, and what now forms part of the Prussian Provinces of the Rhine. Subsequent to the period of the accession of Clovis, in 481, the country appears to have been exposed to a continuity of internal dissensions; and when these had subsided, the vain glory which France acquired under Charlemagne increased the jealousy of the neighbouring powers, and excited external broils. In 912 N. W. coast was invaded by a northern tribe called Normans, who retained possession of that part of the country, afterwards called Normandy; and in 1060, William, the duke of this province, invaded, conquered, and became king of England. This event subsequently led to violent contests between England and France. Louis VII. in 1137, embarked in the crusading mania of that period; and in 1334, on Charles IV., the last of the Capets, dying without male issue, Edward III. of England set up his claim for the French crown. The battles of Cressy and Poitiers, in 1346 and 1355, resulted from this pretension. At the battle of Poitiers, John king of France was taken prisoner, but afterwards ransomed for 3,000,000 crowns of gold, equal to 1,500,000; a respite from external war followed this negotiation, but internal broils again ensued, and in 1415, Henry V., king of England, availed himself of prevailing dissensions, to renew the claim of Edward to the French crown; and on the 25th of October of that year, the French forces experienced a decisive defeat at Agincourt. Henry followed up his victory by the capture of several of the most important towns in Normandy, and in 1420 the succession to the crown was ceded to him by treaty. In 1422 he assumed the regency of France; but dying at Vienne, on the 30th of August of that year, his brother succeeded him in the regency, during the minority of his son Henry VI. who was crowned king of France at Paris, on the 7th of December, 1431. The English influence had, however, previously experienced a considerable check, by the singular and daring exploits of Jeanne of Arc, celebrated as the Maid of Orleans; and by 1451, Calais was the only place in France held by the English. Her kings, however, retained the title of king of France, until the peace of Amiens, in 1801-2. After having succeeded in driving the English from the French territory, France embroiled herself in the contentions of her northern and eastern neighbours; but a general peace pervading all Europe during the latter part of the 16th century, by the treaty of Cambray, in 1559, the restless spirit of the French government, during the reigns of Francis II., Charles IX., and Henry III., the three last kings of the Orleans race, directed their wantonness and cruelty against their own protestant subjects. This persecution was allayed for a time by Henry IV., the first of the Bourbons, who ascended the throne in 1589, under whose conciliatory policy the interests of France became more consolidated than at any former period. Henry, however, was assassinated by a fanatic, in 1610, when fresh disorder ensued, and France again is seen involved in all the contentions of the European states, and of England with her American colonies, which took place in the interval of that period.

It was immediately after the general peace of Europe, in 1783, when the English American colonies obtained an honourable independence, that the triple oppression of the crown, the nobles, and the clergy, became intolerable to the French people, whilst the division of the country into 32 provincial governments, aggravated the evils by retarding that relief which the exigencies of one part of the country occasionally required, at the expense of the others; consequently, in May 1788, a convocation was assembled, which led to the division of the country into 86 departments, as previously mentioned, and also of the formation of a new constitution, in which the equality of all ranks to the rights of government formed the basis. The internal convulsions of the kingdom, after this event, usually termed the French revolution, forms the most tragic and bloody page in the whole volume of modern history; and a sad lesson to all ages, that a settled government, in almost its worst forms, is preferable to the domination of mobs, and regicides, and political clubs, whose march up to the seat of authority is effected by trampling upon the rights, the liberties, and the lives of their fellow subjects. Among those who contributed more especially to the eclat of the French armies was a young officer, of the name of Napoleon Bonaparte, who, on his return to Paris, after his successful campaign in Italy, was intrusted with the command of a vast armament to the shores of Egypt, and, when he returned in 1799, was mainly instrumental in forming a new constitution under a triune consulate, senate, and legislative body, in which he himself was appointed one of the consuls. In October, 1801, a peace was signed with England, which proved, however, of short duration. War was renewed in 1803, when Bonaparte was appointed consul for life, with power to nominate his successor; this, however, fell short of his ambition, and in May of the following year he was proclaimed emperor of France. On the 1st of October, 1805, he again headed a powerful army against the German States; detached the minor powers from the Germanic confederacy, and united them to his own interest, under the new title of the Confederation of the Rhine. In 1808, he marched an army of 80,000 men into Spain, and placed one of his brothers on the throne of that country; another brother he had caused to be crowned king of Holland; another king of Westphalia; and a brother-in-law king of Naples. The whole of the Netherlands he had annexed to France, in 16 departments; and, on the king of Holland resigning his crown in 1809, the whole of that country, with the coast of Germany, as far as the Elbe, the states of the papal church, and the greater part of the N. of Italy, were also decreed integral parts of the French empire, in 28 additional departments.

The emperor of Austria, imagining that the division of the French forces into Spain afforded him an opportunity of avenging the repeated defeats he had sustained, provoked a new contest in 1809, when Napoleon again broke the field against the Austrians, and on the 5th of July completely defeated them. A treaty of peace followed, in which the daughter of the emperor of Austria was ceded in marriage to the conqueror of her father's capital. The birth of a son, in 1811, seemed for a time to render permanent the fortunes of Napoleon and his family; but an ill-fated ambition led him, in 1812, to march an army of 300,000 men into Russia, which after repeated and severe conflicts reached Moscow, the ancient capital of that empire, on the 14th of September. By order of the governor this city was secretly set on fire, and the desolation by which Napoleon found himself surrounded induced him to withdraw his forces, which were overtaken with snow storms before they could reach the frontiers, whilst the Russians on their rear subjected them to continued disasters, and in the end destroyed the finest army which ever assembled in Europe. In the meantime the French troops in the peninsula were exposed to frequent defeats; and by 1814 Napoleon and his troops had not only been driven within their own frontier, but whilst a united Russian, Prussian, and Austrian army entered France from the N.E., the British, Spanish, and Portuguese armies entered it from the S.W.: and Napoleon, seeing the tide of fortune completely set against him, immediately abdicated the throne. The island of Elba was assigned to him as a residence in full sovereignty for life, with an income of about 100,000*l.* per annum. On the 3rd of May, 1814, Louis XVIII., who had been exiled in England during the consular and imperial dynasty, arrived in Paris, to resume the throne of his ancestors. On the 5th of March, 1815, Napoleon secretly landed at Frejus, and marched without interruption to Paris, from which Louis fled at midnight on the 20th, Napoleon arrived the same evening; on the 27th the national council annulled his abdication, and called upon him to resume his imperial functions. On the 29th he abolished the African slave trade; on the 12th of June he left Paris to take the command of an army on the N.E. frontier; but after a whole day's severe fighting, on the 18th his line was broken, his troops thrown into confusion, and the palm of victory left with the allies, who marched again upon Paris, which they re-occupied on the 6th of July. Napoleon again abdicated the imperial throne, and on the 29th of June quitted Paris never to return. Louis again resumed the sovereignty on the 18th of July; on the 25th of the same month Napoleon surrendered to the commander of a British ship of war, and was afterwards carried to the island of St. Helena, in the Atlantic Ocean, where he died on the 5th of May, 1821.

Louis XVIII. died in September, 1824, and was succeeded by his brother, Charles Philip, (Count d'Artois,) under the title of Charles X.; whose increasing infringement of the rights of the people at length aroused universal indignation, and expelled him from the throne he had so unworthily filled, and the country he had laboured to enslave. The form of government since 1814 resembles that of Britain—the power being vested in the king, the chamber of peers, and the chamber of deputies. To strengthen himself in the chamber of peers, Charles X. increased it by creations; to weaken the people he invaded the elective franchise and shackled the press. In August, 1829, he dismissed M. Martignac's administration, and appointed another of ultra-royalists, under his natural son, Prince Polignac. The first act of the deputies, on the meeting of the chambers in March, 1830, was an address praying for the dismissal of the ministers. The king answered it haughtily, and dismissed the chambers. A revolution ensued on the famous three days of July, which overturned the monarchy, and the king saved himself by flight only. The crown was then offered on certain conditions to, and accepted by Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, who thus became King of the French, and by his firmness and good sense he preserved the peace and prosperity of the realm he had been chosen to govern. Some defects, however, in the constitution, led to discontent in the course of years, and at some reform banquets in the end of 1847, the object of these meetings was declared to be revolutionary. In January, 1848, much excitement prevailed, and on Feb. 8th, 1848, the ministers declared their intention of suppressing these banquets. This led to an open rupture, and on Tuesday, February 22, the first outbreak took place in Paris, and some fighting occurred. This was increased on the two following days, when some of the military revolted. Paris was then in the hands of the mob, and the palace and public buildings were sacked. The king and court saved themselves by flight to England, and a republic was proclaimed on February 24th, and a provisional government appointed, the outrages still continuing. On February 26th, M. Lamartine, of the provisional government, proclaimed "the French republic, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," and this stayed the progress of the mob. The committee governing, which embraced some of the best names in France, now managed affairs far more successfully than could have been anticipated; but from the discontent consequent upon the extinction of trade, a large organized procession of workmen tumultuously entered the chamber of the assembly, May 15th, when it was declared to be dissolved, but some "national workshops" were established. These proved to be nests of sedition; and on June 22-26, the disbanding of the operatives led to another series of disasters. The men, after leaving Paris, returned, parading the streets. They erected barricades, and the national guards were twice repulsed in attacking them, and a fatal warfare was continued. General Cavaignac took the command, and the fighting was universal. The archbishop of Paris was killed while attempting to quell the insurgents. At last the insurrection was subdued, the total number killed and wounded being 3000 or 4000. The republic then seemed to be established, and in a subsequent election, Louis Napoleon, nephew of the emperor, was elected president of the republic by a large majority. In the following year, 1850, an unsuccessful outbreak of the extreme or red republicans occurred, on June 12. The prince-president, meanwhile, had ingratiated himself with the army, and a coup d'état was determined on. On December 1, 1851, the walls of Paris were placarded with a decree, declaring Paris to be in a state of siege. The people were paralysed; on the morning of the 3rd they arose, and a terrific onslaught of cannon was made on them. On the 4th, Louis Napoleon was master of France. He appealed to the people, was made permanent president, and declared the empire on Dec. 2, 1852, assuming the title of Louis Napoleon III. The subsequent history is well known to all. The marriage of the emperor to a Spanish lady, and the birth of an heir; the alliance of France with England and Turkey against Russia, in 1854-5; with Sardinia against Austria, in 1859; and again with England against China, in 1860; the recent commercial treaty with England, and similar conventions with some other states, are all matters familiar to the memory. But the chief subject which pre-occupies the mind of Europe is the progress of a gigantic armament of France by land and sea; and signs are not wanting at the present moment that fresh convulsions may soon shake Europe suddenly. While the emperor has conducted France to a high point of commercial importance and prosperity, it is evident that war and aggression are very much in his thoughts. But the recent financial crisis, showing a deficit of £40,000,000, will no doubt compel moderation for a time.

FRANCE, ISLE OF, a late province of France, so called because it was bounded by the rivers Seine, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Ourque. It now forms the four departments of Oise, Seine and Oise, Seine and Marne, and Seine, or Paris.

FRANCE, ISLE OF, or MAURITIUS, an island in the Indian Ocean; 400 miles E. of Madagascar. It was discovered by the Portuguese; but the first who settled here were the Dutch, in 1598. They called it Mauritius, in honour of the prince Maurice, their stadtholder; but, on their acquisition of the Cape of Good Hope, they deserted it; and it continued unsettled till the French landed here in 1720, and gave it the name of one of the finest provinces in France. It is 150 miles in circumference. The climate is healthy, but the soil not very fertile. The mountains, being high, produce the best ebony in the world. The valleys are well watered with rivers, and are made very productive by cultivation, of which sugar is the principal object. The island is singularly picturesque and abrupt, and is intersected by three chains of mountains from 1800 to 2000 feet high. Of these peaks, one, the Peter Botte on the N., is very remarkable. Forests still cover portions of the districts of Mahelbourg, Savanna, and Flacq. After the alteration of the duties on sugar in 1825, the exports of that article from Mauritius (which in 1812 was under one million lbs.), amounted in 1837 to nearly 69 millions lbs., nine-tenths of which came to England. The emancipation of the slaves does not appear to have been so disastrous here as in the West Indies, and to supply the demand for labour, a great number of hill coolies from India were brought here, but this has been stopped. The area of the island is estimated at 500,000 acres, and in 1836 there were 92,147 inhabitants. The town and harbour, called Port Louis, are strongly fortified; but in the hurricane months the harbour cannot afford shelter for more than eight vessels. Here are large storehouses, and every thing necessary for the equipment of fleets. This island was taken by the British in 1810, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris, in 1814. Port Louis, on the N.W. coast of the island, is in lat. 20. 9. N. and 57. 29. of E. long. See BOURNON.

FRANCHE COMTE, a late province of France; bounded on the N. by Lorraine, E. by Alsace and Switzerland, W. by Burgundy, and S. by Bresse. It is 125 miles long and 80 broad, and abounds in corn, wine, cattle, horses, mines of iron, copper, and lead. It now forms the three departments of Doubs, Jura, and Upper Saone.

FRANCHEMONT, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege; 12 m. S.E. of Liege.

FRANGLADE. See DENIS, ST.

FRANCIS, ST., a tributary stream of the great river Mississippi, rising in the state of Missouri, in the lat. of 37. 45. N., running parallel with the Mississippi on the W., at the distance of about 40 miles, and enters it after a course of about 220 miles, 45 miles above the entrance of the Arkansas.

FRANCIS, ST., a river of Lower Canada, rising in the lake Memphramagog, which spreads into the state of Vermont. The St. Francis, after a course of about 200 miles, falls into the St. Lawrence, about midway between Montreal and Quebec, and will probably, some future day, be united by a canal with the Connecticut.

FRANCIS, ST., a river of Brazil, which rises W. of the Brazilian Andes, in the province of Minas Geraes, in the lat. of 20. S., runs N. through the province of Bahia to the frontier of Pernambuco, when it takes a course E. by S., dividing that province from Bahia, and, after a course of near 1600 miles, falls into the Atlantic Ocean, in the lat. of 11. 20. S. It has a number of towns and settlements, chiefly on its head waters.

FRANCISCO, SAN, a town of Upper California, of which it is the capital or principal seaport. It stands on the south side of the entrance to one of the finest harbours in the world. In 1831 the population was estimated at 371, and these were chiefly attached to the mission established here by the Spaniards, and dependent on the shipping visiting the port. When the gold regions became known in 1848, a vast influx of population poured into San Francisco as the entrance to the Sacramento and San Joachin valleys, and a town sprung up with extraordinary celerity and of a very motley appearance. The town, or city, occupies a portion of the peninsula on the south side of the entrance to its noble harbour, or rather inland sea. As may be supposed, its character is very varied; a few good erections of brick and stone, the majority of wood—many very rudely constructed. The greater part of the population, in 1849, occupied tents, which extended along the shore of the harbour on each side of the town as far as the eye could reach. Their occupants were in transit for the gold regions, or quitting the country. In the latter part of that year an extensive fire destroyed much of the permanent town. Although it has been thrice almost destroyed by fire, it is now a fine city; many of the buildings more recently erected are elegant, and its commerce may now be said to be established on a firm basis.

FRANCKENAU, a town of Germany, in Upper Hesse; 26 miles S.W. of Cassel.

FRANÇOIS, CAPE, now called Cape Henry, or Cape Hayti, the principal seaport and city of what was formerly the French part of St. Domingo. It is seated on the N. coast of the island, in the lat. of 19. 46. N. and 72. 15. of W. long. Before the sanguinary revolt of the negroes in 1793, it contained 800 to 900 houses of stone or brick, and 8000 free inhabitants, exclusive of about 12,000 slaves; but in 1793 the whole of the white inhabitants, who could not effect their escape, were massacred by the blacks. It was named Cape Henry by Christophe, in 1811, and during his reign it was deemed the principal port of the island, though inferior to Port au Prince in commercial importance. It is 84 miles due N. of Port au Prince, and 134 W., 30 degrees N. of the city of St. Domingo. The harbour is secure and commodious, and the environs rich in tropical productions.

FRANCONIA, one of the ten circles into which the German empire was formerly divided, lying between the lat. of 48. 45. and 50. 55. N. It is bounded on the N. by Upper Saxony, E. by Bohemia and the palatinate of Bavaria, S. by Suabia, and W. by the circles of the Rhine. The middle is fertile in corn, wine, and fruits; but the borders are full of woods and barren mountains. The Franks, who conquered France in the early part of the 5th century, came from this province, and gave their name to that country. It comprises about 11,000 square miles, and was formerly divided into two principalities, three bishoprics, seven counties, and three lordships; but at the general partitioning of this part of Europe, after the peace of Paris in 1814, the greater part of Franconia was assigned to Bavaria, and the remainder to Wirtemberg, Baden, Hesse, and Saxe Coburg. The river Mayne, which falls into the Rhine, intersects it from E. to W.; the Rednitz from S. to N. falling into the Mayne; and the Altmuhl, falling into the Danube, intersects the S.E. Nuremberg was considered the capital.

FRANKENBURG, another town in Hesse; 5 miles W.S.W. of Franconau.

FRANEKER, a town of Holland, in Friesland, with a castle and a university. The public buildings and palaces are magnificent, and it has two navigable canals, communicating with the Zuyder Zee and Leewarden: it is 5 miles E. of Harlingen. Pop. about 4000.

FRANKENBERG, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a considerable manufacture of woollen stuffs; 7 miles N.N.E. of Chemnitz.

FRANKENTHAL, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. It has rich manufactures of stuffs, silks, cloths, &c.; and a canal to the river Rhine. It was taken by the French in 1793, and retaken by the allies in 1794. It is seated 2 miles W. of the Rhine, and 7 S. of Worms.

FRANKENHAUSEN, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, with some extensive salt-works; situate on a branch of the Wipper; 26 miles N. of Erfurt. Pop. about 3000.

FRANKENSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine; 9 miles S.E. of Kayserslautern.

FRANKENSTEIN, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Munsterberg, on the river Bantze; 12 miles W.S.W. of Munsterberg.

FRANKFORD, a town of Ireland, King's County. Here was a Carmelite friary.

FRANKFORT ON THE MAINE, a fortified city of Germany, in the circle of the Rhine. It is divided by the river Maine, 25 miles above its entrance into the Rhine, into two parts, which communicate by means of a stone bridge; the larger part, on the N. side, is called Frankfort, and the smaller Saclisenhausen. It contains several palaces and courts; belonging to princes and counts; and here the kings of the Romans have generally been elected and crowned. The chief structure is the town-house, in which is preserved the golden bull, the origin of the fundamental laws of the empire. All religions are tolerated at Frankfort, under certain restrictions; but Lutheranism is the established faith, though the principal church is in the possession of the Roman Catholics. The Jews, 8000 to 9000 in number, were formerly confined to a particular corner of the city; but since 1796 they have resided indiscriminately in all parts. Frankfort is one of the most considerable trading places in Europe, and has two great fairs every year. It was taken, in 1759, by the French, who evacuated it in 1763; and was several times taken and retaken by the French and Austrians, in the war of 1793—1814. Since the peace of the latter year, it has been declared the permanent seat of the Germanic Diet; and as such, most of the European states have a minister resident here; and it is now united in the German Customs league. It was the birth-place of Goethe, and also of the family of the Rothschilds, who, during the war between 1807 and 1815, and ten years subsequent thereto, became the greatest money-jobbers in Europe. Frankfort is in lat. 50. 7. N. and 9. 36. of E. long. Pop. in 1838, 54,822. Frankfort on the Maine stands in an independent territory, and forms the centre of a small republic, the most populous for its extent in Europe. It surrounds the city on both sides of the Maine, and, with some detached portions, contains altogether 85 square miles; and the Pop. in 1846 was, including the city, 68,240, three-fourths of whom are Lutherans. The territory is quite level, and very productive and well cultivated.

FRANKFORT ON THE ODER, a town of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg, with a famous university and a noble academy. It has three great fairs, and the exclusive right of navigation up the Oder to Breslau. Here are two suburbs, called Lebus and Guben, and a bridge over the Oder. In 1759 it was taken by the Russians and Austrians, and in 1806 it fell into the hands of the French; but fell to Prussia on the retreat of the French army from Moscow, in 1812. It is 45 miles E. by S. of Berlin, and 72 S. of Settin, to which places it has railways. Pop. 26,000.

FRANKFORT, the chief town of Franklin county, Kentucky, and seat of the legislative assembly of the state. It is regularly laid out, and stands on the E. bank of the Kentucky; 60 miles from its conflux with the Ohio, and 415 miles W. by S. of Washington. Pop. 1917.

Frankfort and Frankford are the names of several other towns and townships in different parts of the United States.

FRANKLIN, the name of 15 counties in different parts of the United States of North America, named after Benjamin Franklin, an American sage, who died at Philadelphia in the 85th year of his age, on the 17th of April, 1790. The following are the states, in geographical order, which have commemorated his name in one of their counties, with the population of each, and name of its chief town, and distance from the capital of the state.

 Massachusetts, 28,812, Greenfield, 95 W.

FRAUENFELD, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Thurgau, with a good castle. It is seated on an eminence, by the river Murg; 19 miles N.E. of Zurich, and 8 W. of Constance.

FRAUENSTEIN, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, on the river Boberisch; 20 miles S.E.W. of Dresden.

FRAUSTADT, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Posen, which has a great trade in wool and oxen. Near this town a battle was gained by the Swedes over the Saxons, in 1706. It stands on the frontiers of Silesia; 20 miles N.W. of Glogau, and 55 S.S.W. of Posen.

FREDEBERG, a town of the duchy of Westphalia, on the river Wenne; 23 miles S.S.E. of Arensberg.

FREDERICA, a town of the state of Georgia in Glynn county; and on the W. side of St. Simon Island, with a safe and commodious harbour; 64 miles S.W. of Savannah. Long. 80. 56. W. lat. 31. 6. N.

FREDERICIA, or FREDERICIA, a town and fortress of Jutland, at the entrance of the Little Belt from the Cattegat, in the lat. of 55. 35. N. and 9. 44. of E. long. All ships entering the Little Belt are here brought to, and a contribution levied towards the lights and buoys on the coast of Denmark. Pop. about 3500.

FREDERICK, a county of the state of Maryland, bounded on the N. by the conventional line which divides Maryland from Pennsylvania, and on the S. by the Potomac river, which divides it from Virginia: it is about 35 miles in length from N. to S. and 25 miles in mean breadth; it is intersected from N. to S. by the Monococcy river, which springs from several sources in Pennsylvania, and falls into the Potomac. Pop. 36,405, of whom 4345 are slaves. Frederick is the chief town.

FREDERICK, a county in the N. part of Virginia, between the Blue and North ridges of the Allegany Mountains; the Shenandoah river skirts the foot of the Blue Mountains on the E. side of the county, running from S. to N. into the Potomac. Pop. 14,242. Winchester, the chief town, is 130 miles N. by W. of Richmond.

FREDERICK, a city of Maryland, capital of Frederick county. It is the second place in importance in the state, being only inferior to Baltimore. It is regularly and handsomely built, and has some elegant buildings, and 12 churches. It is connected by a branch to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. The county around is exceedingly fertile, and the trade is extensive; 75 miles W.N.W. of Annapolis, and 43 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 5812.

FREDERICSBURG, a town of Virginia, capital of Spotsylvania county, and a place of considerable trade. It is situate on the S. side of the Rappahannock; 85 miles above its entrance into the Chesapeake, and 60 N. of Richmond.

FREYSTADT, a town of Austria, which has a great trade in worsted; 17 miles N. of Ens.

FRIEDURG, or FRIEBURG, one of the cantons of Switzerland, surrounded on all sides by the canton of Bern. It is fertile in corn, fruits, and pastures, and the famous Gruyere cheese made in this canton is deemed the best made in Switzerland. Area, 564 square miles. Pop. in 1838, 91,145.

Friburg, or FREIBURG, a fortified town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the same name. It is seated in a mountainous country, on the river Saane, which divides it into two parts; that on the W. side standing on plain ground, and the other among rocks and hills. The public buildings, especially the cathedral, are very handsome; and the bishop of Lausanne resides here. Three miles from this town is a celebrated hermitage, cut in a rock, said to have been the work of one man, with his servant, who performed it in 25 years. Friburg was taken by the French in 1798. The town surrendered to the radical army, after a trifling engagement at an outpost, in November 1847, and was almost the first instance of the triumph of injustice in the late and present unhappy struggles in the republic. See SWITZERLAND. It is 18 miles S.W. of Bern, and 30 N.E. of Lausanne. Long. 7. 15. E. lat. 46. 43. N.

FRIURG, a town of the Grand Duchy of Baden in Suabia. The steeple of its great church is the finest in Germany; and here is a university, a college formerly belonging to the Jesuits, and several convents. The inhabitants are famous for polishing crystal and precious stones. It has been often taken. It is seated on the Triser; 53 miles S. by W. of Baden, and 10 E. of Brisach, on the Rhine. Long. 7. 58. E. lat. 48. 3. N. Pop. about 12,000, exclusive of the garrison, &c.

There are numerous other towns and villages beginning with Fri or Frey, in different parts of Germany, and Fri and Frey are indiscriminately written.

FRIEDLAND, a town of Prussia, where the French, under Buonaparte, gained a complete victory over the Russians, June 14, 1807. It is seated on the Allu; 28 miles S.E. of Konigsberg.

FRIENDLY ISLANDS, or TONGA ISLANDS, a group of islands in the South Pacific Ocean, so named by Cook, in 1773, on account of the friendship that appeared to subsist among the inhabitants, and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, a Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1653, and gave the names of New Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Cook explored the whole cluster, which he found to consist of more than 20 islands, the principal of which are Tonga-taboo, or Amsterdam; Eaoowe, or Middleburg; Annamooka, or Rotterdam; Hapae, and Lefooga. The first, which is the largest, lies in 174. 46. W. long. and 21. 9. S. lat. The general appearance of these islands conveys an idea of the most exuberant fertility; the surface, at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are very large, particularly the tall cocoa-palm, and a species of fig, with narrow-pointed leaves. On closer examination, they are almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest productions of nature, such as bread-fruit, and cocoa-nut trees, plantains, yams, sugar-canes, and a fruit like a nectarine. The stock of quadrupeds is scanty; but they received from Cook some valuable additions, both to the animal and vegetable kingdom. Their domestic fowls are as large as those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and parroquets of various sorts, which furnish the red feathers so much esteemed in the Society Isles. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter for an endless variety of shell-fish. These islands are all inhabited by a race of people who cultivate the earth with great industry; and nature, assisted by a little art, appears no where in greater splendour. Agriculture, architecture, boat-building, and fishing, are the employments of the men; and to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth.

FRIESACH, a town of Germany, in Carinthia, with a strong castle on a mountain; seated on the Metnitz; 17 miles N.N.E. of Clagenfurt.

FRIESLAND, one of the provinces of Holland; bounded on the N. by the German Ocean, W. by the Zuyder Zee, S. by the same and Overysse, and E. by Overysse and Groningen. This country much resembles the province of Holland in its soil, canals, and dikes. Leewarden is the capital. Harlingen, on the shore of the Zuyder Zee, is the principal seaport.

FRIESLAND, EAST, a province of Hanover; so called from its situation with respect to the Dutch province of Friesland. It is 45 miles long, and 43 broad; bounded on the N. by the German Ocean, E. by Oldenburg, S. by Munster, and W. by Groningen and the German Ocean. The country being level and low, is obliged to be secured against inundations by expensive dikes. The land is fertile; and the pastures feed horned cattle, horses, and sheep of an extraordinary size. On the death of Prince Charles Edward, in 1744, it became subject to the king of Prussia. It was taken possession of by Buonaparte, in 1806, and at the general partitioning of Europe, subsequent to the peace of Paris in 1814, it was relinquished by Prussia, and ceded to Hanover. Emden is the principal seaport; and the principal towns in the interior are Aurich, Essens, and Friedeburg. The aggregate population is estimated at 120,000, spread over a surface of about 1150 square miles.

FRIO, CAPE, a promontory of Brazil, in the province of Rio Janeiro. Long. 41. 31. W. lat. 22. 54. S.

FRISCHE HAFF, a lake or bay of Prussia, from 3 to 9 miles broad, and extending 70 in length, along the Baltic sea, with which it communicates by a narrow passage, at Pillau; it receives the Pregel at the N.E. end, the Passarge from the S., and the E. branch of the Vistula at the W. end; the principal seaports within the Haff are Elbing, Braunsberg, Bradenburg, and Königsberg.

FRITZLAR, a fortified town of Germany, in Lower Hesse, with two colleges and a convent; seated on the Eder; 20 m. S.W. of Cassel.

FRIULI, AUSTRIAN, a district of Austria, comprising about 400 square miles; bounded on the N. and E. by Upper and Inner Carniola, and W. by Venetian Friuli, while a strip of the Venetian territory shuts it in from the Gulf of Trieste. Trieste is the capital. Population, 125,000.

FRIULI, a province of Italy; bounded on the N. by Carinthia, E. by Carniola and Austrian Friuli, S. by the Gulf of Venice, and W. by the Trevisano and Bellunese. It is rich in timber, cattle, silk, wine, and fruit. It is watered by the Tagliamento, and several other rivers falling into the Gulf of Venice, and contains about 370,000 inhabitants. Udina, in the centre of the province, is the chief town.

FRIULI, or CITTA DI FRIULI, a town of Italy, in Friuli, with a collegiate church and five convents. It stands at the foot of the mountains which separate Friuli from Carniola, on the river Natissone; 15 miles N.E. of Udina.

FRODSHAM, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Wednesday. Here is a graving dock and yard for building and repairing vessels. It is seated on the Weever, near its entrance into the estuary of the Mersey; 11 miles N.E. of Chester, and 192 N.N.W. of London. It has some extensive salt works in the town and neighbourhood, and partakes partially in the cotton manufacture.

FROME, a river which rises in the N.W. part of Dorsetshire, near Beaminster, flows by Frampton, Dorchester, and Wareham, and enters the bay that forms the harbour of Poole. There is another river of the same name, which rises on the border of Worcestershire, and falls into the Lug, a little above its entrance into the Wye, near Hereford; and another, rising on the border of Wilts, flows through Somersetshire, and falls into the Lower Avon, near Bath.

FROME SELWOOD, a borough of Somersetshire; seated on the banks of the last of the preceding rivers, over which is a bridge of five arches; it has three churches, one of them ancient and elegant; another erected in 1817, several schools, almshouses, five meeting-houses, new market-house, &c. Frome is the seat of an extensive manufacture of fine woollen cloth, and of cards; its markets on Wednesdays and Saturdays are well supplied. It is 12 miles S. of Bath, and 104 W. by S. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

FRONTIGNAN, a town of France, in the department of Herault; celebrated for its muscadine wine, generally called Frontignac. It is seated on the lake Magulcone; 12 miles S.S.W. of Montpellier.

FROSINONE, a town of South Italy, in the Roman States. It is very ill-built, but has many churches, and has a large annual fair. Being near the confines of the Neapolitan territory, it is infamous for brigandage; 47½ miles E.S.E. from Rome. Pop. 6500.

FROYEN, an island in the North sea, near the coast of Norway; about 35 miles in circumference. Long. 9. 0. E. lat. 63. 45. N.

FROZEN OCEAN, or ICY SEA, washing the northern shore of Asia. It is frozen over during the greatest part of the year, and its shores are covered with drift-wood, brought down by the river Kovima, and other rivers of magnitude, which discharge themselves into it. There are no sensible tides, but violent currents are at times felt, from the breaking up of the ice. The delta of the river Lena consists of turf hills on a foundation of ice, and the numerous isles composing it are inhabited by rein-deer and bears. Further E. off the coast lie the large islands of Kotelnoi, Fadeefskoi, &c., collectively called New Siberia. On the shores of the lakes in these islands are found innumerable remains and entire skeletons of elephants, rhinoceroses, and other inhabitants of tropical regions, imbedded in soft friable earth, the ivory of which is perfectly white and fresh.

FRUTINGEN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern: 30 miles S. of Friburg.

FRYEBURG, a town of the state of Maine, on both sides of the Saco river. It is seated in a plain, and has a flourishing academy Lovell's pond, famous in early Indian warfare, is near it; 72 miles W.S.W. of Augusta. Pop. 1536.

in the N.W. of the Atlantic Ocean, with a volcano, which burns continually. It is much higher than any of the rest, and seems to be a single mountain, at sea, but on the sides there are deep valleys. It has no river, and is almost destitute of fresh water; but is fertile in maize, gourds, wild figs, oranges, and apples, and has a great number of wild goats. It is 300 miles W. of Cape Verd. Long. 24. 30. W. lat. 14. 54. N.

FUNCHAL, the capital of Madeira; situat round a bay, on the gentle ascent of some hills, in form of an amphitheatre. An old castle, which commands the road, stands on the top of a steep black rock, called the Loo Rock, surrounded by the sea at high water; there are also three other forts, and several batteries. The streets are narrow and dirty, though streams of water run through them; but of late years it has somewhat improved in this respect. The houses are built of freestone, or of bricks; but they are dark, and only a few of the best are provided with glass windows; all the others have a kind of lattice-work in their stead, which hangs on hinges. The beams and roof of the cathedral are of cedar. The English church, in the suburbs, is delightfully situated, and, although the city itself contains nothing peculiarly attractive, yet the environs afford beautiful rides and excursions; and up the mountains, which commence immediately above the beach, the principal merchants and residents have their country houses. The town contains about 11,000 inhabitants. Long. 17. 6. E. lat. 32. 38. N.

FUNDY, a bay of N. America, between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; remarkable for its tides, which rise from the height of 30 to 70 feet, and flow rapidly. It extends about 200 miles in an E.N.E. direction; and, with Vert Bay, which pushes into the land in a N.W. direction from Northumberland strait, forms an isthmus of only 12 miles wide, which unites Nova Scotia to New Brunswick.

FUNEN, or FYEN, an island of Denmark; 150 miles in circumference; separated from Jutland by a strait called the Little Belt, and from Zealand, by the Great Belt. It is fertile in pasture and grain, and exports to Norway, barley, oats, rye, and pease. Population in 1834, 151,600. Odensee, on a bay at the N. end of the island, is the capital.

FUNFKIRCHEN, or FIVE CHURCHES, an episcopal town of Hungary; situate in a fertile country, between the Drave and the Danube; 85 miles S.S.W. of Buda. The Florida, extending from Georgia to the Gulf of Mexico. It is partly low and swampy. Capital, Quincy. Pop. in 1840, 5992.

GAETA, a strong town on the W. coast of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a fort, a citadel, and a harbour. It is irregularly built, and its streets are narrow and steep, but its suburbs are much superior. The cathedral has a very fine and ancient tower. It is the centre of a considerable trade, and its vicinity is extremely beautiful. Near this town was the Formian villa of Cicero; tradition points out its site, and the very spot where he was butchered. It held out against the Austrians in 1815 and 1821, and also afforded an asylum to the pope, Pius IX., in 1848-9. The ex-king of Naples also withdrew there in 1860, but, after a siege by the armies of Garibaldi and Victor Emanuel, it surrendered. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the gulf of Gaeta; 30 miles N.W. of Capua. L. 13. 47. E., lat. 41. 33. N.

GAINSBOROUGH, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Tuesday; seated on the Trent, over which is a handsome stone bridge. It is a riverport of some consequence, being accessible to vessels of sufficient size to navigate the sea; and serves as a place of export and import for the N. part of the county, and for Nottinghamshire. It is 17 miles N.W. of Lincoln and 149 N. by W. of London.

GAJRLOCH, a large bay of Scotland, on the W. coast of Ross-shire, which gives name to a tract of land near it. The fishing of cod, and other white fish, is here very considerable.

GALACZ, or GALA, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia. In 1790 it was taken by the Russians, after a bloody battle. It is seated on a lake, near the conflux of the Pruth with the Danube; 55 miles W. of Ismail, and 120 S.S.W. of Bender. Long. 28. 24. E. lat. 45. 24. N.

GALAPAGOS, an archipelago in the Pacific Ocean, belonging to Colombia. They are all volcanic, and in some places in activity. With the exception of James Island, where the settlement of La Floridae was established, they are uninhabited. They are chiefly known for their land tortoises or terrapin, from which the Spaniards named them. The South Sea whalers touch here for fresh water and provisions. They lie under the equator; Albarie, the chief island, in long. 85. 30. W. about 9 degrees W. of the coast of Colombia.

GALASHIELS, a town of Scotland, in Sel-kirkshire, with a manufacture of woollen cloth. It is seated on the Gala, near its conflux with the Tweed; 5 miles N. of Selkirk, with the Edinburgh and Hawick Railway.

GALATA, a suburb of CONSTANTINOPLE, (which see.)

GALENA, a city of Illinois, capital of Jo-Davies county. It is pleasantly seated on the Fève or Bean river, and is the metropolis of the great lead region. It is 6 miles above the mouth of the river, and has intercourse by means of the largest steam boats with all places on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. It was first settled in 1826, and in 1841 there were produced 22,000,000 lbs. of lead in the region. The manufacture of copper is also becoming important; 230 miles N.W. of Springfield, and 882 from Washington. Pop. about 1500.

GALICIA, a late province in the S.W. part of Poland, lying between the lat. of 48. and 51. N., and 19. and 26. of E. long. It is bounded on the S. in a direction W. by N. by the Carpathian mountains, which divide it from Hungary; the W. end jets upon Silesia; the Vistula river forms part of its northern, and the Bug part of its eastern boundary; the S.E. extremity is divided by the Buckovine district from Moldavia, and the Dneister river intersects the S.E. part. This territory was forcibly seized by the Austrians in 1772, and incorporated into the Austrian dominions, under the appellation of the kingdom of Galicia and Lodomeria. The mountainous parts produce fine pasture; the plains are mostly sandy, but abound in forests, and are fertile in corn. The principal articles of traffic are cattle, hides, wax, and honey; the country also contains mines of copper, lead, iron, and salt, of which the latter are the most valuable. Its limits comprise upwards of 34,000 square miles; the population about 4,600,000 in 1837. It is divided into East Galicia, and West Galicia, of which the capitals are Lemburg and Cracow.

GALICIA, a province of Spain, forming the N.W. extremity of the peninsula; bounded on the N. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E. by Asturias and Leon, on the S. by the Portuguese province of Tras-os-Montes, and on the S.W. by the river Minho, which divides it from the Portuguese province of Entre-Douro-e-Minho; its extreme length from the mouth of the Minho river, in 41. 52., to Cape Ortegal, the extreme northern limits of Spain, in 43. 46. N., is 133 statute miles, and its extreme width, from the frontier of Leon to Cape Finisterre, the extreme western limit of Spain, in the lat. of 42. 56. N., and 9. 17. of W. long., is about 120 miles, but the mean length and breadth does not much, if at all, exceed 100 miles; its area, therefore, comprises about 10,000 square miles; the population about 1,500,000. It is one of the most mountainous districts in Spain, yielding abundance of fine timber, and various minerals. The whole extent of its coast is indented with fine bays and harbours. The people of Galicia are in Portugal and the rest of Spain, what the Irish are in England, labourers. The Gallegos are a rude, boorish, industrious race, and have many peculiarities, arising from their isolated situation, as few travel into Galicia. Ferrol, 25 miles S.S.W. of Cape Ortegal, is one of the principal stations of the Spanish national marine; the port of Corunna is on the S.W. side of the same bay in which the harbour of Ferrol is situate: the most important harbour on the W. coast is Vigo Bay, about 50 miles S. of Cape Finisterre, and a few miles N. of the mouth of the Minho. Santiago, or St. Jago de Compostella, 35 miles S. of Corunna, and 300 N.W. of Madrid, is the capital of the province; the other principal towns are Mondoneda and Betanzos, in the N.E., Lugo, 35 miles E. of Santiago, Orense on the S., and Ciudad Tuy on the N. bank of the Minho, and Bayona on a southern inlet of Vigo Bay. See Appendix.

GALITSCH, a town of Russia, in the government of Kostroma, on the S. side of a lake of its name; 56 miles E.N.E. of Kostroma. Long. 42. 54. E. lat. 57. 56. N.

GALL, St., a small but populous canton of Switzerland; the E. end bordering on the lake of Constance, between the cantons of Thurgau and Appenzel. This canton had for a long time been equally balanced in its political partizans, but, in 1847 the radical party preponderated, and thus changed its line of policy in the confederation. See SWITZERLAND. Its population amounted in 1838 to 158,853; its quota of troops, 2630. See Appendix.

GALL, St., or St. GALLEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of St. Gall. It has a rich abbey, whose abbot formerly possessed the sovereignty of the town. The town is entirely protestant; and the subjects of the abbot, whose territory is distinct, are mostly catholics. The abbey is situate close to the town; and in its library are many curious manuscripts. The town has an extensive trade, arising chiefly from its linen and cotton manufactures and bleaching grounds. It is seated in a narrow valley, on two small streams; 35 miles E. of Zurich. Long. 9. 22. E. lat. 47. 26. N. Pop. about 10,500, in 1838.

GALLA, an extensive territory of Africa, comprising all the S. part of Abyssinia: the limits on the S. and W. are very undefined. It has recently been explored by several European travellers.

GALLAM, a town of Negroland; capital of a kingdom of the same name, on the river Senegal. The French built a fort here, which was ceded to the English in 1763. During the American war it was taken by the French, but restored in 1783. Long. 10. 0. W. lat. 14. 35. N.

GALLATIN, a county of Kentucky; bounded on the N. for about 35 miles by the Ohio river, which divides it from the state of Indiana. Population, 4003. Port William, on the E. bank of the Kentucky river, at its entrance into the Ohio, 45 miles N.N.W. of Frankfort, is the chief town.

GALLATIN, is also the name of another county in the state of Illinois. Population, 10,760. It is celebrated for its salt springs, from which vast quantities of salt are made. Equality is the chief town.

GALLATIN'S RIVER, one of the head water streams of the Missouri, rising in the lat. of 44. N. and 110. 5. of W. long., upwards of 3000 miles, by the course of the river, above the entrance of the Missouri into the Mississippi.

GALLIA, a county on the S.E. border of the state of Ohio; bounded by the Ohio river, where it receives the great Kanhawa from Virginia. Population, 13,444. Gallipolis, on the bank of the Ohio, 104 miles S.S.E. of Columbia, is the chief town.

GALLE, or POINT DE GALLE, a seaport on the S. coast of Ceylon, in a rich and beautiful district, with a strong fort, and a secure harbour. It is populous, and, in point of trade, ranks next to Colombo. The chief branch of its traffic consists in the exportation of fish to the continent; but a great part of the products of the island are also shipped here for Europe. It is 85 miles S. by E. of Colombo. Long. 80. 10. E. lat. 6. 0. N.

GALLIPOLI, a strait between European and Asiatic Turkey—the ancient Hellspont. It forms the communication between the Archipelago and the Sea of Marmora, and is defended at the S.W. entrance by two castles. It is here 2 miles over, and is 33 miles long. See DARJANELLES and HELLESPOINT.

GALLIPOLI, a town of European Turkey, which gives name to the preceding strait, is seated next its opening into the Sea of Marmora. It is the residence of a pacha, and the see of a Greek bishop. It contains about 10,000 Turks and 3500 Greeks, besides a great number of Jews, amounting together to about 20,000. It is an open place, with no other defence than a sorry square castle. It was the first place in Europe possessed by the Turks; 100 miles S.W. of Constantinople. Long. 26. 59. E., lat. 40. 26. N.

GALLIPOLI, a seaport of Naples, in Terra d'Otranto, and a bishop's see. This place is a great mart for olive oil, and has a manufacture of muslins. It is seated on a rocky island, on the E. shore of the bay of Taranto, and joined to the main land by a bridge protected by a fort; 23 miles W. of Otranto. Long. 18. 5. E., lat. 40. 20. N. Population about 9000.

GALLOWAY, a district of Scotland, now divided into East and West Galloway, or KIRKCUBBRIGHTSHIRE and WIGTONSHIRE. It was famous for a particular breed of small horses called galloways.

GALLOWAY, MULL OF, the extreme S.W. point of Scotland, in the lat. of 59. 38. N., and 4. 50. of W. long. It forms the W. point of entrance to Luce bay, and the E.

point of entrance to the North Channel, between the Irish Sea and the Atlantic Ocean.

GALLOWAY, New, a burgh of Scotland, in Kirkeudbrightshire, on the river Ken; 13 miles N. of Kirkeudbright, and 80 S.W. of Edinburgh. In conjunction with Wigton, &c. it sends one member to parliament.

GALMIER, St., a town of France in the department of Loire, with a medicinal spring of a vinous taste; 18 miles E. of Moulbrison.

GALSTON, a populous village of Ayrshire, Scotland; seated on the river Irvine; 3 m. E.S.E. of Kilmarnock, near the railway.

GALTEE MOUNTAINS, in the county of Tipperary, Ireland; the highest of which, Galteemoor, is 3000 feet high.

GALVESTON, a city of the United States, in the state of Texas. It stands on the E. end of Galveston Island, on the Gulf of Mexico. It is the most commercial place in the state, and contains 5 churches and about 5000 inhabitants.

GALWAY, a maritime county, in the province of Connaught, on the W. coast of Ireland, being about 100 miles in extreme length from E. to W.; the W. part, projecting into the Atlantic Ocean, is a mountainous and dreary district, but the inland part is in general fertile both in grain and pasture. Next to Cork, it is the largest county in Ireland, comprising 1,510,592 acres. It is bounded on the E. by the river Suck, which divides it from Roscommon; the Shannon on the S.E. divides it from Tipperary; Lough Corrib divides the W. from the E. part of the county. Besides the county town, of the same name, the other principal towns are Tuam, Athenry, and Loughrea.

GALWAY, the chief town of the preceding county, is seated on the banks of the outlet of Lough Corrib into Galway Bay; 126 miles due W. of Dublin. Its importance has been increased by its becoming a principal port for mail steamers to and from America, subsidized by the government. The harbour is defended by a fort. Here is a coarse woollen and linen manufacture, but much reduced, and a considerable trade in kelp. The salmon and herring fishery is also considerable. It is divided into three parishes, and is a county of itself, having a separate jurisdiction. The principal church, which is collegiate, is a spacious Gothic edifice; it has several catholic establishments of friars and nuns, a county infirmary, exchange, and several other public buildings. It returns two members to parliament.

GALWAY BAY extends about 20 miles from W. to E., and is from 7 to 10 miles wide; the South Arran Isles stretch across the entrance.

GAMBIA, a noble river of Africa, falling into the Atlantic Ocean by several channels, between the lat. of 12. and 13. 45. N. Cape St. Mary, the S. point of entrance to the main channel, is in the lat. of 13. 8. N., and 16. 33. of W. long. The banks, for about 100 miles from the mouth, are low and swampy, but, higher up, the river flows through a delightfully fertile country, interspersed with numerous towns and villages. At a distance of about 400 miles from its mouth, the navigation is impeded by falls. The English claim jurisdiction over a large extent of the river's borders. The chief settlement is at Bathurst, at the mouth, and the highest is at MacCarthy's Island, up the river.

GAMBIER, a village in Pleasant township, in Ohio. It was laid out in 1826, in a tract of 4000 acres, belonging to Kenyon college, founded by English fuids. It is beautifully situated on a high ridge of land, encompassed by the Vernon river; 56 miles N.E. of Columbus.

GANDICOTTA, or WANDICOTTA, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in the circle of Cuddapa, near which is a diamond mine. It is seated on a lofty mountain by the river Pennar; 33 miles W.N.W. of Cuddapa.

GANGAPATNAM, a town of Hindostan, in the Carnatic, at the mouth of the Pennar; 94 miles N. of Madras. Long. 80. 12. E. lat. 14. 24. N.

GANGEA, or GANJA, a town of Persia, in the province of Erivan; 105 miles S. by E. of Teflis. Long. 45. 50. E. lat. 41. 10. N.

GANGES, a celebrated river of Asia, which has its source in two springs, on the W. side of Mount Kentaiffe, in Tibet, in the lat. of 34. N. and 82. of E. long. The two streams take a W. direction for 300 miles, when, meeting the ridge of Himmaleh, they turn S., unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges, from the Hindoo word ganga, which signifies a river; a term given it by way of eminence. The great body of water now forces a passage through the ridge of Himmaleh, at the distance of 400 miles below the place of its first approach, and, rushing through a cavern, precipitates itself into a vast basin, at the hitler foot of the mountain. The Ganges thus appears, to incurious spectators, to have its source from this chain of mountains. Superstition has given to the mouth of the cavern the form of the head of a cow, an animal held by the Hindoos in great veneration; and it is therefore called the Gangotri, or the Cow's Month. From this place it takes a S.E. direction through the country of Sirinagur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes from this mountainous tract, in which it has wandered 800 miles. From Hurdwar, where it gushes through an opening in the mountains, and enters Hindostan, it flows 1200 miles with a smooth navigable stream through delightful plains to the Bay of Bengal, which it enters by several mouths, that form an extensive delta, in the lat. of 22. N. and between 88. and 91. of E. long. In its course through these plains, it receives 11 rivers, some of them larger and none smaller than the Thames, besides many of inferior note; the principal of which are the Gogra, Coosy, and the Burrampooter, from the N.; and the Jumna, Soane, and Dummooda, from the S. In the annual inundation of this river, which on an average rises 31 feet, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 miles in width. The Ganges is, in every respect, one of the most beneficial rivers in the world; diffusing plenty immediately, by means of its living productions, and, by enriching the lands, affording an easy conveyance for the production of its borders, and giving employment to many thousand boatmen. It is no wonder, therefore, that the Hindoos regard this river as a kind of deity, that they hold its waters in high veneration, and that it is visited annually by a prodigious number of pilgrims from all parts of Hindostan. To the British it is almost as important as it is held to be by the Hindoos, as by its forming the great military highway to the north-west provinces, they have acquired and maintained their sway. See HOOGLY.

GANGOTRI, a town of the country of Sirinagur, 10,073 feet above the sea, and a celebrated place of pilgrimage; seated on the Ganges, where that river rushes through a cavern of the Himmaleh mountains; 170 miles N.N.W. of Sirinagur. Long. 76. 35. E. lat. 33. 8. N.

GANGPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in Orissa; capital of a circar of its name. It is 50 miles N.N.E. of Sumbulpour, and 160 N.W. of Cuttack. Long. 84. 10. E. lat. 22. 2. N.

GANJAM, a town of Hindostan, in the circar of Cicacole, on the Bay of Bengal, at the mouth of a river which is rarely navigable; near the S. end of Lake Chilka, 110 m. N.E. of Cicacole. Long. 85. 20. E. lat. 19. 22. N. It is now deserted and decayed.

GANNAT, a town of France, in the department of Alier; 30 miles S. of Moulins. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 5000.

GAPSAI, a town of Russia, in the government of Revel, on a small gulf of the Baltic; 36 miles W.S.W. of Revel.

GARAK. See KAREK.

GARD, a department of the S. of France, including part of the late province of Languedoc. It has its name from a rapid river, which rises in the department of Lozere, flows S.E. through this department, and enters the Rhone above Beanaire. It is bounded on the E. by the Rhone; the S. point jets upon the Mediterranean; it partakes, however, more of the character of an interior than a maritime district. It is rich in mines of lead, enlamine, antimony, manganese, gypsum, &c. The vine and olive, and especially the latter, flourish luxuriantly. Pop. in 1842, 376,062.

GARDA, a town of Italy, in the Veronese; seated on the E. shore of a lake of its name; 17 miles N.W. of Verona.

GARDA, LAKE OF, one of the largest lakes in Italy, lying between the territories of Verona and Brescia. It is 30 miles long, and 10 where broadest; but not above 4 towards its northern extremity, which enters the principality of Trent: its outlet is by the Miucio, which runs past Mantua into the Po.

GARDEFAN, or GUARDAFUI, a cape in the Indian Ocean, the most easterly point of Africa. Long. 51. 10. E. lat. 11. 40. N.

GARDELEBEN, a town of Brandenburg, in the Old Mark, with manufactures of cloth, and a trade in hops and excellent beer; seated on the river Beise; 15 miles W. of Stendal. Pop. 4000.

GARDINER, a town of the United States, state of Maine, on the Kennebeck river, opposite Pittstown. Here is an establishment for instruction in natural science. Pop. 5042.

GARINANO, a town of the Bresciano; seated on the W. shore of Lake Garda; 26 miles N.E. of Brescia.

GARMOUTH, a town of Scotland, in Morayshire, at the mouth of the Spey, with a good harbour. Great quantities of ship-timber are floated down the river to the town, and many small vessels are built here. Wood is also a considerable article of commerce. It is 8 miles E. of Elgin.

GARONNE, a river of France, which rises in the Pyrenees, and flows N.N.E. of Toulouse, and from thence N.W. past Valence, Agen, Marmande, and Bordeaux, into the Bay of Biscay, receiving in its course from the E. the Tarn, Lot, Vezere, and Dordogne; from whence it is called the Gironde, and is united with the Mediterranean by a canal from Toulouse, called the canal of Languedoc.

GARONNE, UPPER, a department of the S. of France, containing part of the late province of Languedoc. The S. end extends to the Pyrenees, and it is intersected its whole extent from S. to N. by the Garonne. It is fertile both in tillage and pasture; the vine is also cultivated to a great extent. It is divided into four arrondissements, of which Toulouse GARRARD, a county in the state of Kentucky, between the Kentucky river, Dicks river and Point Lick. The soil is highly productive. Capital, Lancaster. Pop. in 1840, 10,480, including 3283 slaves.

GARSIS, a town of the kingdom of Fez, surrounded by walls, and the houses are built with black stone. It stands in a fertile country, on the Mulu; 56 m. S.E. of Melilla.

GARSTANG, a parish and corporate town of Lancashire, with a market on Thursday. Here are the ruins of Greenhough castle; and in the neighbourhood are several cotton works. The town is seated on the river Wyrc; 10 miles S. of Lancaster, and 229 N. N.W. of London.

GARTZ, a town of Hither Pomerania; seated on the Oder; 13 miles S. by W. of Stettin.

GASCONADE, a county of the state of Missouri. Iron-ore, sulphur, saltpetre and limestone, are abundant. Capital, Hermon. Pop. in 1840, 5330.

GASCONY, a late province of France; bounded on the W. by the Bay of Biscay, N. by Guienne, E. by Languedoc, and S. by the Pyrenees. The inhabitants are of a lively disposition, famous for boasting of their exploits, which has occasioned the name of gasconade to be given to all bragging stories. This province, with Armagnac, now forms the departments of Landes, Gers, Upper Pyrenees, and parts of the Upper Garonne, and Arriege.

GASPÉ, an extensive district of Lower Canada, lying between the river St. Lawrence on the N. and Bay of Chaleur on the S.; bounded on the E. by the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is at present but thinly inhabited, the population is, however, progressively increasing along the shore of the Bay of Chaleur, which supplies abundance of fine timber. The Bay of Gaspé is at the eastern extremity of the district.

GASTEIN, a town of Bavaria, in the duchy of Salzburg, near the frontier of Carinthia; celebrated for its warm baths, and mines of lead, iron, and gold. It is 45 miles S. of Salzburg.

GASTOUNI, a town of Greece, in the Morea, opposite the island of Zante, and 11 miles E. from Clarenza. Pop. about 3500, employed in raising cotton and wine.

GATA, CAPE, a promontory of Spain, on the coast of Granada, consisting of an enormous rock of a singular nature and appearance, 24 miles in circuit. Long. 2. 22. W. lat. 36. 43. N.

GATEHOUSE, a town of Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire, near the mouth of the river Fleet. Here are considerable cotton works, and an extensive tannery. It is 9 miles N. W. of Kirkcudbright.

GATES, a frontier county of North Carolina, bordering on the Great Dismal Swamp, and bounded on the W. by the Chowan river:

it comprises about 353 square miles. Pop. 8161.

GATESHEAD, a borough in the county of Durham, seated on the Tyne, over which is a handsome bridge to Newcastle, to which it appears like a suburb. There are extensive manufactories of chain-cables, &c., and of glass bottles; the celebrated "Newcastle grindstones" are quarried in this parish, and exported to all parts of the world. The Brandling Junction railway connects it with Sunderland, and a continuation unites it with the Carlisle and Newcastle line. It is 13 miles N. of Durham, and 269 N. by W. of London, and returns one member to parliament.

GATTON, a village, formerly a borough, in Surrey. It is 2 miles N.E. of Ryegate, and 19 S. by W. of London.

GAUDENS, St., a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne; seated on the Garonne; 13 miles E.N.E. of St. Bertrand; it is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1836, 4789.

GAUKARNA, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Canara, on the sea-coast, and principally occupied by Brahmims. Pop. 2000.

GAVI, a town of the territory of Genoa; an important frontier place toward Montserrat and the Milanese; seated on the Lemo; 22 miles N.W. of Genoa.

GAUN, or ZOUF, a city of Usbec Tartary; capital of the province of Gaur; seated on the river Zouf; 120 miles S. by W. of Balk. Long. 64. 40. W. lat. 35. 5. N.

GAUTS, stupendous mountains of Hindostan, extending along the E. and W. coasts of the peninsula. The W. ridge, called by the natives the mountains of Sukheim, extends from Cape Comorin to the river Tapty, in the lat. of 21. N., at the distance of from 40 to 70 miles from the shore, except a gap, opposite Paniany, about 16 miles in breadth, chiefly occupied by a forest. They rise abruptly from the low country, supporting, in the nature of a terrace, a vast extent of fertile and populous plains, which are so elevated as to render the air cool and pleasant. Gaut, according to the original import of the word, signifies a pass through or over mountains; and, by an extended sense, is applied to the mountains themselves.

GAWELGHUR, a town of Hindostan; capital of a fruitful district of the same name, in the province of Bernar. It is a strong fortress, and was taken by storm, in 1803, by Gen. Wellesley.

GAYA, a city of Hindostan; the modern capital of Bahar; 55 miles S. from Patna. It is divided into two parts. It is one of the most celebrated places of Hindoo pilgrimage, it having been the birthplace of Budha, who has a temple here, with an image very rudely carved. Brahmimism has however superseded that of the rival divinity. The ceremonies are directed by the resident priests, and are very numerous. It has also a cantonment for native troops. Its population is very fluctuating, but it contains about 7000 houses.

GAZA, a town of Syria, in Palestine; 2 miles from the Mediterranean; with a harbour and a castle. It is now very small, but, from the appearance of the ruins, it was formerly a considerable place. Here are manufactures of cotton; but the principal commerce is furnished by the caravans between Egypt and Syria. It stands in a fertile country; 50 miles S.W. of Jerusalem. Long. 34. 45. E. lat. 31. 28. N.

GAZYPUR, capital of a fertile and populous district of Hindostan; seated on the N. bank of the Ganges; 45 m. N.E. of Benares.

GEARON, or JARON, a town of Persia, in Farsistan, in whose territory the best dates of Persia are produced. It is 80 miles S. by E. of Shiras. Long. 51. 17. E. lat. 28. 15. N.

GAUGA, a county in the N.E. of Ohio; the N. end borders on Lake Erie; it comprises about 600 square miles. Pop. 15,813. Chardon, in the centre of the county, 145 miles N.E. of Columbus, is the chief town.

GEASHILL, a village in King's county, Ireland; 65 miles from Dublin.

GEFLE, a seaport of Sweden; capital of Gestrucia; seated on an arm of the Gulf of Bothnia, which divides the town, and forms two islands. The exports are principally iron, pitch, tar, and deals. It is 90 miles N.N.W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 8. E. lat. 60. 40. N. Pop. in 1836, 8049.

GENOL, or ZHENOL, a town of Chinese Tartary, with a large palace, and a magnificent temple of Buddha. Here the emperor of China received the British embassy in 1793. It is 136 miles N. of Peking.

GELDERLAND, one of the provinces of Holland, and the largest of them all. It lies between the Zuyder Zee, the provinces of Holland, Utrecht, and Overysse, the principality of Munster, the duchy of Cleve, and Dutch Brabant; and is divided into three quarters, or counties, called Nimeguen, Arnheim, and Zutphen, from the principal towns. It is fertile in fruit and corn, and in many parts abounds in wood.

GELDERLAND, UPPER, a territory of the Netherlands, lying in detached parts, on both sides of the river Meuse; once divided into Austrian, Dutch, and Prussian Gelderland. The Austrian part included Ruremonde and its dependencies; the Dutch comprehends the lordships of Veloo and Stevenswert; and the Prussian contains the capital, Gueldres, and its district, which is reckoned as a part of the circle of Westphalia; the Austrian and Dutch part, at the peace of 1814, were included in the kingdom of the Netherlands, and the remainder assigned to Prussia.

GELDERS, a town of Prussia, in the province of Cleves, and formerly the capital of Prussian Gelderland. Here is a palace, the residence of the former dukes. It was taken in 1702, by the king of Prussia; and in 1713 the town and its district were ceded by France to that prince, in exchange for the principality of Orange. In 1757 it surrendered to the French, who restored it in 1764, after demolishing the fortifications; and, in 1794, it again surrendered to them, and, at the peace of 1814, was assigned to Prussia. It is 20 m. S.S.E. of Cleves. Long. 16. 6. E. lat. 51. 31. N.

GELNHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, with a castle; seated on the Kintzig; 18 miles N.E. of Hanau.

GEMAPPE, a town of Belgium, in the province of Hainault; 3 miles from Mons. A decisive victory was gained in the revolutionary war, on November 6th, 1792, by the French army, over the Austrians. It also was the site of some warfare at the period of the battle of Waterloo. Pop. 2700.

GEMARKE, a town of Prussia, in the province of Lower Rhine. It has an extensive commerce in linen, &c.; 18 miles S.E. of Dusseldorf. Pop. 5500.

GEMLOUX, a town of the Netherlands, in Brabant, with an ancient abbey; seated on the Orneau; 22 miles S.E. of Brussels, on the road to Namur.

GEMINIANO, ST., a town of Tuscany, in the Florentino; seated on a mountain, in which is a mine of vitriol; 25 miles S.S.W. of Florence.

GEMISHKHANA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the pachalic of Trebisonde. It derives its name (Silver House) from a neighbouring silver mine; 45 miles S. from Trebisonde. Pop. 6500.

GEMONA, a town of Italy, in Friuli, near the river Tagliamento; 20 miles W.N.W. of Friuli.

GEMUND, a town of Swabia; seated on the Rems; 24 miles N. by W. of Ulm, and 25 E. by S. of Stuttgart.

GEMUND, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the Roer; 24 miles S.W. of Cologne.

GEMUND, a town of Upper Carinthia, with manufactures of iron and steel; 16 miles N.W. of Villach.

GEMUNDEN, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Wurtzburg, on the river Maine; 22 miles N. of Wurtzburg.

GEMUNDEN, a town of Austria, famous for its salt-works; seated at the N. end of a lake of the same name, on the river Traun; the outlet of the lake is 40 miles S.S.W. of Lintz, on the Danube.

GENESSEE, a river of the United States, which rises on the N. border of Pennsylvania, and runs N.N.E. through the state of New York into Lake Ontario. It has three falls, which furnish excellent mill seats; and on its borders are the Genessee flats, 20 miles long and 4 broad, the soil rich, and clear of trees.

GENESSEE, a county in the state of New York; the N. end of which borders on Lake Ontario; it comprises about 1600 square miles, and is intersected by the canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson river. Pop. 59,587. Batavia, 225 miles W. of Albany, is the chief town.

GENESSEE, a county in the state of Michigan, watered by the Flint and other rivers. Capital, Flint. Pop. 4268.

GENESSEE, a town in New York, capital of Livingston county, half-a-mile from the Genessee river; 230 miles W. of Albany. Pop. 2892.

GENEVA, a fortified city, capital of a territory of the same name, surrounded by the duchy of Savoy, of which it was formerly a part, and the see of a bishop, now resident at Annecy. In 1584 Geneva concluded an alliance with Zurich and Bern, by which it was an associate with Switzerland. During the greater part of the 18th century, there were frequent contests between the aristocratic and the popular parties; and the years 1768, 1782, 1789, and 1794, were distinguished by great revolutions. The last was effected entirely by the influence of the French; and, not long after, this city and its territory was made a department of France, under the name of Lemán; but in 1814, after the expulsion of the French, it was annexed to Switzerland. Geneva, which stands partly on a plain at the W. end of a lake, and partly on a gentle ascent, is irregularly built. It had a good arsenal, and a university, founded in 1368. The houses are lofty; and many in the trading part of the city have arcades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. The inhabitants, estimated in 1838 at 28,003, carry on a great trade; and among others, the watchmaking business is particularly flourishing. The population of the district is 60,400. Geneva is 40 miles N.E. of Chambéry (to which it has a railway), 135 N.W. of Turin, and 256 S.E. by S. of Paris. Long. 6. 9. E., lat. 46. 12. N.

GENEVA, a town of New York, beautifully situated near the north extremity of the Seneca lake, on its W. side. Geneva College and the Medical College are both at this place. Pop. about 3600.

GENEVA, LAKE OF, or LAKE LEMAN, a large expanse of water, between Savoy and Switzerland, in a valley which separates the Alps from Mount Jura. Its length, from the city of Geneva to Villeneuve, is 54 miles, and the breadth in the widest part is 12. The water near Geneva is shallow; in other parts the depth is various; the greatest yet found by sounding is 1012 feet. The river Rhone runs through it from the E. to the W. extremity.

GENEVIEVE, ST., a county in the state of Missouri, on the W. bank of the Mississippi river, comprising about 1100 square miles of territory: the St. Francis river intersects the S.W. part of the county, which contains an exceedingly rich bed of lead ore.

GENENBACH, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau, with a Benedictine abbey; seated on a rivulet of the same name, which flows into the Kintzig; 20 miles N. of Friburg.

GENOA, a celebrated city and seaport of Italy, distinguished for its trading importance, as far back as the 11th century, about which period it began to take under its protection the towns and territory of the adjoining coast; but the most celebrated period of its history is from the close of the 13th to the middle of the 15th century, when the Genoese divided with the Venetians the exclusive commerce of Europe in the productions of Asia. Their success, however, in commerce and banking, excited the jealousy of the Venetians, and ultimately involved them in open hostilities; and in 1746 it surrendered to the Austrian power, whose oppression of the inhabitants was such, that the latter suddenly rose and expelled their conquerors, who again besieged the city the next year, but without effect. In 1798 the French became masters of this city. In 1800 it sustained a siege by a British fleet and Austrian army, till literally starved, and was evacuated by capitulation; but soon afterwards it was again delivered up to the French, on their victory at Marengo. Early in 1814 it was taken by the British, under Lord Bentinck; but at the general partitioning of Europe, which followed the peace of Paris in that year, the city and territory of Genoa was assigned to the king of Sardinia, and incorporated as a state into his dominions. The harbour is commodious, protected by two moles of considerable length; the city is about six miles in circumference, surrounded on all sides by a strong wall, and on the land side is defended by a double fortification; most of the streets are narrow and irregular, but the Balbi, Strada Nuova, and Strada Nuovissima, are spacious and elegant. Prior to the French revolution it had upwards of 30 churches, and 70 religious houses, three theatres, and several other public buildings. Many of the houses in the principal streets are adorned with marble porticoes, and several of the churches are beautiful specimens of architecture, and their interior decorations exceedingly tasteful and rich. The bank of Genoa, established in 1345, considerably extended till the commencement of the following century; in 1751 it became insolvent for a large amount, and in 1798 was finally abolished by Bonaparte. Although Genoa now holds an inferior rank, from its relatively advantageous local position, and maritime accommodation, as the outport and depôt for the whole of Piedmont and Sardinia, it must necessarily continue a place of considerable importance. Genoa is the see of an archbishop, and the seat of a university with a valuable library, a nautical and other public schools; has several manufactures of silks and jewellery, and is particularly distinguished by its manufacture of silk velvets. It is seated at the head of a spacious gulf of the Mediterranean, in the lat. of 44. 25. N. and 8. 58. of E. long., 103 miles by railway from Turin, about the same distance S. by W. of Milan, 86 N.W. of Leghorn, 95 N.E. of Nice. Its population in 1838 amounted to 97,621, exclusive of 17,636 naval and merchant seamen: altogether, 115,257. The territory which formed the republic of Genoa extends along the shore of the gulf for about 120 miles.

GENTIAN, or JAINTUJA, the capital of a principality of Hindostan, province of Bengal, and adjoining the district of Silhet. The chief produce of the district is rice and cotton, and some ivory is also exported. The natives are barbarous, and their religion Brahminism.

GENTILLY, a town of France; 5 miles S. of Paris: it was the residence of the earlier kings of France. Population, 5000.

GEORGE, FORT, a fortress of Scotland, in Inverness-shire, which has several handsome streets of barracks. It is seated on the point of a peninsula, forming the point of entrance into the Moray Frith, and completely commands the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. It is 10 miles N.E. of Inverness.

GEORGE LAKE or HORICON in the state of New York has an outlet into Lake Champlain. In picturesque scenery it is unsurpassed in the United States, perhaps in the world. The waters are exceedingly transparent; 56 miles long, 2 to 3 wide, and with many islands.

GEORGE, ST., a small island in the gulf of Venice, to the S. of Venice, to which it is subject. Here is a Benedictine monastery, whose church is one of the finest in Italy.

GEORGE, ST., one of the Azores, which produces much wheat. In 1808 a volcano broke out here, which destroyed the town of Ursulina, several farming-houses, &c. The chief town is Vellas. Long. 28. 0. W. lat. 38. 39. N.

GEORGE DEL MINA, ST., or ELMINA, a fort of Guinea, on the Gold Coast, and the principal settlement of the Dutch in those parts. The town under it, called by the natives Oddenia, is very long, and pretty broad. The houses are built of stone, which is uncommon, for in other places they are composed only of clay and wood. It is 10 m. W.S.W. of Cape Coast Castle. Long. 0. 8. W. lat. 4. 56. N.

GEORGE FORT, ST. See MADRAS.

GEORGE, ST., the largest of the Bermudas islands. It is in the form of a hook; about 40 miles in length, but seldom 2 in breadth. It has a town of the same name, containing 500 houses built of freestone; it is the capital of all the islands. Long. 63. 35. W. lat. 32. 45. N.

GEORGE, ST., the Capital of the island of Grenada, formerly called Fort-royal, which name the fort still retains. It is situated on the W. coast, not far from the S. end of the island, and has a safe and commodious harbour. Long. 61. 45. W. lat. 11. 50. N.

GEORGE, ST., an island of the United States, in the Strait of St. Mary, which forms the communication between Lake Superior and Lake Huron.

GEORGE, ST., an island in the Gulf of Mexico, opposite the mouth of the Appalachicola. Long. 84. 50. W. lat. 29. 30. N.

GEORGE'S KEY, ST., a small island in the Bay of Honduras, on the E. coast of Yucatan. It is likewise called Casini, or Cayo Casigo. By a convention in 1786, the English logwood-cutters were permitted, under certain restrictions, to occupy this island. Long. 88. 35. W. lat. 17. 40. N.

GEORGETOWN, formerly called Stabroek, the capital of British Guiana, South America; it is built on the E. Bank of the river Demerara, here nearly a mile wide. The harbour formed by the mouth of the river is safe, but by occasion of a vast mud-bar is not of easy access. The streets of the town are wide and traversed by canals; the houses are of wood, mostly two storeys high, and separated from each other by canals or trenches. The one public building, which comprises all the public offices, is a large edifice. There are several Christian churches and schools. The pop. is estimated at above 20,000, of whom 16,000 are coloured people.

GEORGETOWN, a maritime district of South Carolina; bounded on the S. by the Santee river, which divides it from Charlestown district: it has 34 miles of sea coast, indented with several small inlets. Black river, Cedar and Lynches Creeks, the Great and little Pedee, and the Waccamaws river, all unite their waters in this district, which comprises a surface of about 1040 square miles, exceedingly fertile in rice and cotton. Pop. whites 2093, slaves 15,993, total 18,274.

GEORGETOWN, a city of the district of Columbia, county of Washington, with a college for the promotion of general literature, founded by the Roman Catholics. It is situate on the E. bank of the Potomac, opposite Mason's island, and on the W. side of Rock Creek, which separates it from the city of Washington; 3 miles W.N.W. of the capital, and 46 S.W. of Baltimore. Georgetown may be regarded as a suburb and the commercial quarter of the city of Washington. It owns about 7000 tons of shipping. The pop. is 7312.

GEORGETOWN, a town of the state of Maine, and the oldest in Lincoln county. It is the spot where the English first attempted to colonize New England, in 1607, and stands near the mouth of the Kennebec; 15 miles S. by W. of Wiscasset.

GEORGETOWN, a small town of Van Diemen's Land, in Dorset county, near the mouth of the Tamar, or Port Dalrymple. It has declined since Launceston has become prosperous: 32 miles N. of Launceston, and 152 from Hobart Town.

There are several other towns named Georgetown in different parts of the United States of North America.

GEORGIA, a country of Asia, called by the Persians Kurdistan, and by the Turks Gurtshii. It was once independent, but is now a province of Russia. It is one of the seven Caucasian nations, in the countries between the Black Sea and the Caspian, and the lat. of 39. and 43. N., and comprehends the ancient Iberia and Colchis. It is bounded on the N. by Circassia, E. by Daghestan and Schirvan, S. by Armenia, and W. by Cuban, or the new Russian government of Caucasia. It is divided into nine provinces. Of these, five form what is commonly called the kingdom of Georgia; and four the kingdom or principality of Imeritia. The last reigning prince, Heraclius, ceded this country to Russia on his death, which happened in 1800. The hills of Georgia are covered with forests of oak, ash, beech, chestnuts, walnuts, and elms, encircled with vines, growing perfectly wild, but producing vast quantities of grapes, from which much wine and brandy are made. Cotton grows spontaneously, as well as the finest European fruit trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hump, and flax are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The valleys afford the finest pasturage, the rivers are full of fish, the mountains abound in minerals, and the climate is healthy. The rivers of Georgia, the principal of which is the Kur, falling into the Caspian Sea, being fed by mountain torrents, are always either too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation. The Georgians are Christians of the Greek communion, and appear to have received their name from their attachment to St. George, the tutelary saint of these countries. Their dress nearly resembles that of the Cossacks; but men of rank frequently wear the habit of Persia. They usually dye their hair, beards, and nails with red. The women employ the same colour to stain the palms of their hands. On their head they wear a cap or fillet, under which their black hair falls on their forehead; behind it is braided into several tresses: their eyebrows are painted with black, in such a manner as to form one entire line, and the face is coated with white and red. They are celebrated for their beauty; but their air and manners are extremely voluptuous. The Georgians have great skill in the use of the bow, and are deemed excellent soldiers; but the men have no virtue, except courage: fathers sell their children, and sometimes their wives. Both sexes are addicted to drunkenness, and are particularly fond of brandy. The other inhabitants of Georgia are Tartars, Ossi, and Armenians. These last are found all over Georgia, sometimes mixed with the natives, and sometimes in villages of their own. They speak among themselves their own language, but all understand and can talk the Georgian. Besides these there are a considerable number of Jews, some having villages of their own, and others mixed with the Georgian, Armenian, and Tartar inhabitants, but never with the Ossi; the aggregate number amounts to 320,000. The Christians of the country in part follow the rites of the Armenian, and in part that of the Greek, church; and they are represented as the most tractable Christians in the East. Georgia forms one of the five Trans-Caucasian governments of the Russian empire. Its government is entirely military, and is apparently well adapted to the condition of the country, as it has undoubtedly ameliorated the condition of the inhabitants. The traffic in the female slaves for the Turkish and Persian harems, and of the youths for military service, has been put an end to by Russia. Teflis is the capital. See IMERITIA.

GEORGIA, one of the states of N. America, originally extended from the Atlantic Ocean to the Mississippi; but since the formation of the federal government, in 1776, the states of Mississippi and Alabama have been divided off on the W. from Georgia, which, in its present extent, has 95 miles of sea-coast, between the entrance to St. Mary's river, in the lat. of 30. 40., and entrance to the Savannah river in the lat. of 32. N.; the Savannah river, for 225 miles in a N.W. direction, divides Georgia from South Carolina; on the N. the line of the 35th degree of N. lat. for 140 miles, then divides Georgia from Tennessee; another conventional line, from the 35th degree of N. lat., bearing S. by E. till it cuts the Chatahoochee river, at Fort Mitchel, in the lat. of 32. 20., and then that river, till it joins the Flint, in the lat. of 30. 40., divides Georgia from the state of Alabama; and another conventional line for 185 miles divides it on the S. from East Florida: these limits give a length, from N. to S., of 300 miles, and a mean breadth of 195 miles. The St. Mary and Savannah rivers form the northern and southern boundaries of the state: the Alatomaha, with several tributary streams, intersects all the inferior parts, and, with the Great Ogecchee, falls into the Atlantic Ocean. The state is divided into 93 counties. The coast, for about 7 miles from the sea, is indented by rivers, creeks, and inlets, which form a chain of islands in which is produced the fine green-seeded cotton, commonly called Sea Island. The mouths and banks of all the rivers are in general exceedingly fertile in cotton and rice, and the forests supply abundance of fine timber, both pine and oak, which form an extensive external traffic, while the fig, orange, lemon, pomogranate, olive, and melon, supply luxurious repasts to the inhabitants. The government of Georgia, as established in 1798, and amended in 1839, being the third constitution since 1776, consists of a governor, senate, and house of representatives; the judicial power consists of a supreme court of four judges, and an inferior court of five judges, in each county, and subordinate justice courts of one justice of the peace, assisted by seven jurors. The religious denominations of Georgia are principally baptists and methodists: the latter were established in Georgia by Mr. John Wesley. In the value of its productions, Georgia holds the sixth rank in the Union of the North American States. The imports from foreign countries, direct into Georgia, are very limited; the excess of exports being equalized principally through New York and Boston. The population in 1840, was 691,392, of whom 280,944 were slaves. The principal internal improvements of the state are the Savannah and Ogeechee canal; the Brunswick canal; the Georgia railway from Augusta to De Kalb county, 165 miles; the Athens branch of the same, 33 miles; the Western and Atlantic railroad, a continuation of the Georgia to the Tennessee river, 140 miles; the central railroad, Savannah to Macon, 197 miles; the Monroe railroad, thence to Whitehall, 101 miles. The Oconulgee and Flint river railroad is designed to form a communication from the Atlantic to the Gulf of Mexico. The seat of the legislative assembly is at Milledgeville, nearly in the centre of the state; but the principal town is Savannah, seated on the S.W. bank of the river of the same name.

GEORGIA, or SOUTH GEORGIA, an island in the South Atlantic Ocean, visited by Cook in 1775. It is 64 miles long, and 30 in its greatest breadth. It abounds in bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. Here are perpendicular ice cliffs, of considerable height, like those of Spitzbergen; from which pieces were continually breaking off and floating out to sea. The valleys were covered with snow; and the only vegetation observed was bladed grass, wild burnet, and a plant like moss, which sprang from the rocks. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast.

GEORGIA, GULF OF, a gulf of the North Pacific Ocean, between the continent of N. America and Quailra and Vancouver Islands; about 120 miles in length, from N. to S., but the breadth varies in its different parts from 6 to 20 miles. It contains several clusters of islands, and branches off into a great number of canals, most of which were examined by Captain Vancouver and his officers.

GERA, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Renss. It has a castle about a mile from the town, on a mountain, in a wood, and is called Osterstein. It is seated on the Elster; 32 miles S.S.W. of Leipsic. Pop. 9000.

GERACE, a town of S. Italy, in the kingdom of Naples. It was rebuilt after an earthquake in 1783, but its streets are narrow, mean, and filthy. It has a ruined castle, and a fine cathedral, now much dilapidated. It occupies the site of the ancient Greek Loeri Epizephyrii, of which there are still ruins; 29 miles N.N.E. of Cape Spartivento, and 4 from the Ionian sea. Pop. about 4000.

GERAU, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 8 miles W.N.W. of Darmstadt. GERNSTADT, a town of Upper Saxony, in the county of Mansfield, Thuringia; 7 miles N.E. of Mansfield.

GERDAVEN, a town of Prussia, defended by two castles, and seated on the Omet, near a considerable lake; 50 miles S.E. of Konigsberg.

GERMAIN, St., a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise, with a magnificent palace, in which Louis XIV. was born. Here James II. found an asylum, when he fled to France. It is seated on the Seine, near a fine forest; 10 miles N.W. of Paris, to which there is a railroad. Pop. in 1836, 10,624.

GERMANTOWN, a town in Philadelphia, county Pennsylvania. It is chiefly a long street, 3 miles long, with 10 churches. It was founded by German quakers. It may be considered as a suburb of Philadelphia. A hard fought battle took place here October 1777; 6 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. Pop. in 1840, 5482.

GERMAN, and GERMAN TOWN. There are several towns of these names, in different parts of the United States of N. America.

GERMAN OCEAN, or NORTH SEA, is the sea between the E. coast of England, from the Straits of Dover to the Shetland Isles, and the coast of Jutland and Norway; it comprises about 8 degrees of lat., and 10 of long.

GERMANO, St., a town of Piedmont, on the river Naviglio; 9 miles W. of Vercelli, on the line of the canal to Ivrea.

GERMANO, St., a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, at the foot of Monte Cassino; 17 miles S.S.E. of Sorra.

GERMANS, St. a borough town in Cornwall. It was once the largest town in the county, and a bishop's see. It stands near the sea; 10 miles W. of Plymouth, and 228 W. by S. of London.

GERMANY, an extensive country of Europe, lying between the 45th and 54th deg. of N. lat. and 6. to 19. of E. long.; the mean length, however, from N. to S., does not exceed 530 British statute miles, and the mean breadth 460 miles, comprising an area of about 245,000 square miles. It is bounded on the E. by Hungary and Poland, N. by the Baltic sea and Denmark, W. by the Netherlands and France, and S. by Switzerland and Italy. The extreme S. point jets into the Gulf of Venice. Prior to the French revolutionary war, which commenced in 1793, Germany had geographically been divided into 9 circles, politically subdivided into 206 archbishoprics, bishoprics, principalities, dukedoms, marquisates, lordships, provinces, &c., under the government of nearly as many sovereign potentates; but the whole of them formed a great confederacy, governed by political laws, at the head of which was an emperor, whose power in the collective body, or diet, was not directive, but executive. The western Roman empire, which had terminated in the year 475, in the person of Augustulus, the last Roman emperor, and which was succeeded by the reign of the Huns, the Ostrogoths, and the Lombards, was revived by Charlemagne, king of France, on Christmas-day, in the year 800. This prince being then at Rome, Pope Leo III. crowned him emperor, in St. Peter's church; and Nicephorus, who was then emperor of the east, consented to this coronation. The French kept the empire under eight emperors, till the year 912, when Louis III., the last prince of the line of Charlemagne, died without issue male. Conrad, Count of Franconia, the son-in-law of Louis, was then elected emperor. Thus the empire went to the Germans, and became elective, having been hereditary under the French emperors. The emperor was chosen by the princes, the lords, and the deputies of cities, till the year 1239, when the number of electors was reduced to seven; one more was added in 1649, and another in 1692; these nine electors continued to the year 1798, when, in consequence of the alterations made in the constitution of the empire, under the influence of France and Russia, they became ten in number; namely, the elector and archbishop of Ratisbon, the elector and king of Bohemia, (the then emperor,) the elector of Bavaria, the elector of Saxony, the elector of Brandenburg, (king of Prussia,) the elector of Hanover, (king of England,) the elector of Wurtzburg, (late Grand Duke of Tuscany,) the elector of Wirtemberg, the elector of Baden, and the elector of Hesse. On the death of Charles VI. of Austria, in 1740, an emperor was chosen from the house of Bavaria, by the name of Charles VII. On the death of this prince, in 1745, Francis, Grand duke of Tuscany, was elected emperor; whose grandson, Francis II. enjoyed the dignity of emperor of Germany till 1806, when he formally resigned the title and office, transferring his title of emperor to his hereditary dominions of Austria. At the close of the Saxon race, in 1024, the prerogatives of the emperor were very considerable; but in 1437 they were reduced to the right of conferring all dignities and titles, except the privilege of being a state of the empire; of granting dispensations with respect to the age of majority; of erecting cities, and conferring the privilege of coining money; of calling the meetings of the diet, and presiding in them. But, after all, there was not a foot of land annexed to this title; for, ever since the reign of Charles IV., the emperors depended entirely on their hereditary dominions, as the only source of their power, and even of their subsistence. To prevent the calamities of a contested election, a king of the Romans was often chosen in the lifetime of the emperor, on whose death he succeeded to the imperial dignity, of course. The emperor (always elected and crowned at Frankfort on the Maine) assumed the title of august, and pretended to be successor to the emperors of Rome. Although he was chief of the empire, the supreme authority resided in the diet, which was composed of three colleges—the college of electors, the college of princes, and the college of imperial towns. The diet had the power of making peace or war, of settling general impositions, and of regulating all the important affairs of the empire; but the decisions had not the force of law till the emperor gave his consent. When a war was determined on, every prince contributed his quota of men and money, as valued in the matriculation roll; though, as an elector or prince, he might espouse a different side from that of the diet. All the sovereigns of Germany had, and still have, an absolute authority in their own dominions, and can lay taxes, levy troops, and make alliances, provided they do not prejudice the confederation. They determine all civil causes definitely, unless in some particular cases in which an appeal might be made. These appeals were to two courts, called the Imperial Chamber at Wetzlar, and the Aulic Council, at Vienna. Originally, the empire, in 1500, was divided into 6 circles (Franconia, Bavaria, Upper and Lower Rhine, Westphalia, and Saxony;) increased to 8 in 1512; and at the period of the outbreak of the French revolution in 1789, the 10 circles of Germany were Austria, Burgundy, Westphalia, the Palatinate, Upper Rhine, Suedia, Bavaria, Franconia, Lower Saxony, and Upper Saxony. In 1791 began the contest between Germany and France, which ended in the overthrow of the former, and the Rhine was then taken as the boundary of France, the remainder was formed into what was termed the Holy Roman Empire. Subsequently to this, in 1807, Napoleon formed a confederation of German princes, called the Confederation of the Rhine, under French protection; but fresh war led to the abrogation of this, and Francis II. renounced the title of Emperor of Germany in 1809, and a portion of the territory was incorporated with France. An attempt was made by the national diet to reconstruct the Germanic constitution, but failed. The hereditary imperial crown was offered to the King of Prussia, April 3, 1849, but declined; consequently, tumults and insurrections occurred, threatening the stability of the entire fabric, at Dresden, May 3—9, and at Rastatt, May 9, 1849; the declaration was—the federal German states, and the union with Austria. After preliminaries between Prussia, Austria, Hanover, &c., the imperial assembly met at Erfurt, March 20, 1850, to rebuild the constitutional fabric; but disputes arose, and a federal commission, agreed on by Austria and Prussia, Sept. 30, entered on its functions Dec. 20, 1849. Their deliberations continued during 1850. The parliament met at Erfurt, March 20, and a congress of princes, May 10—16, 1850, at Berlin. For results in 1851, see Appendix—ZOLLVEREIN.

Some recent changes have occurred, which are noticed in the Appendix.

Each of the foregoing states preserves its internal laws, and the administration of them. From their remarkably entangled position in a territorial view, several very serious inconveniences arose. Each state, having its own tariff and revenue laws, which frequently differed very widely from its neighbours, endeavoured to procure a revenue for itself, or to advance its own industry, by taxing or prohibiting the productions of those around it, and consequently the country was intersected in every direction by lines of custom-houses, interfering in every possible manner with that free and intimate correspondence so necessary to commercial and national prosperity. But through the intervention of Prussia, this exclusive policy has been broken through, and in 1818, the first foundation of the German customs league was made, which has progressively increased, till it now includes four-fifths of the Confederation. The league or Zollverein adopt the Prussian tariff, and have other important amendments in view. See Appendix.

The three principal religions are the Roman Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Calvinistic; but Christians of all denominations are tolerated, and there is a multitude of Jews in all the towns. Germany is watered by numerous rivers, the three principal of which are the Rhine, the Danube, and the Elbe; the first of these rises in Switzerland, and forms the S.W. boundary of the empire, dividing it from Switzerland and France; it afterwards intersects the N.W. part of Germany and Holland, and falls into the Meuse, near Rotterdam. The Danube rises in Suabia, the S.W. circle of the empire, and, by itself and several tributary streams of inferior note, intersects a great portion of the southern part of Germany; it afterwards runs through Hungary and European Turkey into the Black sea. The Elbe rises near the centre of the eastern frontier, and runs in a N.W. direction into the North sea. The Oder intersects all the N.E. part of Germany, and falls into the Baltic sea. The Weser, the Embs, the Adige, the Drave, and other small rivers are navigable, and afford admirable means of facilitating an interchange of productions from one part of the country to the other; but the Oder and the Elbe are the only two that are united by art. The mountains of the south are rich in every kind of metal and semi-metal. The forests supply the abundance of the finest timber, and the vine, olive, and mulberry only require common attention to yield fruit in abundance; while the plains of the north yield a surplus of grain and cattle for exportation, and of wool and flax to furnish materials for extensive manufactures, especially of linens, which are exported in considerable quantities to almost every part of Europe, Africa, and America.

Printing is most extensively encouraged; every man of letters is an author; they multiply books without number; thousands of suppositions and disputations are annually published, with which they overstock the fairs of Frankfort and Leipsic; for no man can be a graduate in the university, who has not published one disputation at least. The language of Germany is a dialect of the Teutonic, which succeeded that called the Celtic.

GERONA, a fortified town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see. It is a place of great antiquity; placed by its military position in the jaws of every invader, at no period has it escaped sieges, nor have the fierce natives shunned the encounter; in 1809 it surrendered to the French, after a protracted siege of more than seven months; it was much dismantled by Suchet when evacuating Catalonia after the battle of Vittoria. It has suffered much recently during the Prim and Ametuer bush-fightings of 1843. It is now greatly dilapidated; the result of the siege and bombardment by the French. Pop. 6500; seated on the Ter; 20 miles from its entrance into the Mediterranean, and 47 N.E. of Barcelona.

GERSE, an interior department in the S.W. of France; it is watered by numerous streams, running from S. to N. into the Garonne; the principal of them is the Gers, which gives name to the department. It contains a stratum of pit-coal, and has manufactures of wool, linen, and saltpetre; its chief vegetable productions are flax, the vine, and pears. Capital, Auch. Pop. in 1842, 311,147. It is divided into five arrondissements; the chief towns of which are Auch, Condon, Lecteur, Lombez, and Mirande.

GERSAE, a town of Switzerland, on the lake of Schewitz, at the foot of the Righi, 12 miles S.W. of Schewitz.

GERTRUYDENBURG, a fortified town of S. Holland, with a good harbour, and salmon fishery on a large lake, called Biesbosch. It has been often taken, the last time by the French, in 1793, but soon recovered. It is 7 miles N. by E. of Breda. Long. 4. 52. E. lat. 51. 42. N.

GERUMENHA, or JURUMENHA, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, with a strong castle; seated on a hill, near the river Guadiana; 18 miles below Badajoz.

GERVAIS, St., a town of France, in the department of Auvergne; 10 miles S. from Morkagne. Pop. 2450.

GERZAT, a town of France, in the department of Puy de Dome; 7 miles N.E. from Clermont. Pop. 2500.

GESECKE, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Westphalia, seated on the Weyck; 11 miles W.S.W. of Paderborn.

GESSENAI. See SANEN.

GESTHICIA, a province of Sweden, the S. part of Nordland, between Dalecarlia on the W. and the Gulf of Bothnia on the E. It is 100 miles long, and 60 broad, diversified by forests, rocks, hills, and dales, lakes and rivers; and there are numerous mines and forges. Gelfo is the capital.

GETAFF, a town of Spain; 7 miles S. of Madrid. It is a decayed town, on the road to Toledo. Pop. 5250.

GETTYSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, in York county; situate at the head of Rock Creek; 30 miles W. by S. of York. It is to be connected with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, 8 miles distant. Pop. in 1840, 1908.

GEWICZ, a town of the Austrian empire, in the province of Moravia; 25 miles W. from Olmutz. Pop. 2320, of whom 900 are Jews.

GEX, a town of France, in the department of Ain; noted for excellent cheese; seated at the foot of Mount St. Claude, between the Rhone, the Lake of Geneva, and Switzerland; 10 miles N.W. of Geneva. It is the seat of a prefect.

GEYSS, a town of the electorate of Hesse, in the principality of Fulda; seated on the Ulster; 17 miles N.E. of Fulda.

GEZAN, or GHEZAN, a seaport of Arabia Felix, which has a considerable trade in senna and coffee; seated on the Red sea; 90 miles N.W. of Loheia. Long. 43. 15. E. lat. 16. 25. N.

GEZIRA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbek, on an island formed by the river Tigris; 70 miles N.W. of Mosul. Long. 40. 50. E. lat. 37. 16. N.

GEZULA, a province of Marocco, which is very productive, and contains mines of iron and copper. The inhabitants are numerous, and considered as the most ancient people of Africa; they live in tents, and are so independent that they are rather the allies than the subjects of the emperor of Marocco.

GHANA, or GANA, a city of Negroland, capital of a country of the same name, governed by a sultan. It stands on the S. side of a large lake at its outlet, which separates the city into two parts, and soon after joins the river Niger, which is here called Neclil Aheed, or Nile of the Negroes. It is 100 miles E. by S. of Cassina.

GHAUTS. See GAUTS.

GHEELEN, a town of Belgium, in the province of Antwerp; 7 miles E. from Turnhout. Here are extensive distilleries and lace manufactures. Pop. 7350.

GHEENT, or GAND, a city of Belgium, formerly the capital of Anstrian Flanders, now the capital of the department of East Flanders, and a bishop's see. It contains 90,000 inhabitants; but it is not populous in proportion to its extent, being 15 miles in circumference. The city is intersected by many canals, which divide it into 26 isles, and over the canals are 300 bridges. It is on the chain of Belgian railways, and has also two navigable canals; the one to Sas van Ghert, the other to Bruges and Ostend. Here are several linen and woollen manufactures, and it has a great trade in corn. The cathedral of St. Bavon, and the abbey of St. Peter, are magnificent edifices; in which, as also in the churches, are some capital paintings by the best masters: the cathedral in particular contains one of the most magnificent collections of works of art in fresco, mosaic work, painting, and sculpture in the world. Charles V. was born here; but the inhabitants have no reason to respect his memory; for he repeatedly loaded them with heavy exactions, and built a citadel to awe them. Here, in 1576, was concluded the famous treaty, called the Pacification of Ghent, the first commencement of the separation of seven provinces from the seventeen which then formed the Netherlands; and it was the seat of the negotiation of the treaty of peace between England and the United States of North America, in 1814-15. Ghent was often taken and retaken in the wars of 1793-1815. It is seated on the Scheldt, at the influx of the Lis, Lieve, and Moeze; 36 miles N.W. of Brussels. Long. 3. 44. E. lat. 51. 3. N.

GHERGONG, a city and formerly the capital of the kingdom of Assam. It is seated on the Degoo, near its conflux with the Burrampooter; 400 miles N.E. of Calcutta. Long. 93. 36. E. lat. 25. 35. N.

GHERIAH, a seaport of Hindostan, on the coast of Concan. It was the capital of Angria, a famous piratical prince, whose fort here was taken by the English and Mahrattas, in 1756, and his whole fleet destroyed. It is 165 miles S. by E. of Bombay. Long. 73. 8. E. lat. 16. 45. N.

GILAN, a province of Persia, on the S.W. side of the Caspian Sea; supposed to be the Hyrcania of the ancients. On the W. side are high mountains, which are covered with many sorts of trees, and in the highest parts of them are deer, bears, wolves, leopards, and tigers. It produces abundance of silk, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, and excellent fruit. This province was ceded to Russia, by a treaty concluded at Petersburg in 1724, but not possessed by Russia till 1780. Reshd is the capital.

GIHNI, or GIHNEE, a town of the country of Cabul, once the capital of a powerful empire of the same name. It is called the second Medina, from the great number of illustrious persons who have been interred here. It has acquired some celebrity from its having been taken by storm by the British, 23rd July 1839, when they lost only 17 men. It is 54 miles S. of Cabul. Long. 68. 20. E. lat. 38. 40. N.

GHOURMOUD, a town of the country of Cabul; 42 miles N.W. of Cabul.

GIANT'S CAUSEWAY, a remarkable basaltic headland in the county of Antrim, Ireland; probably a continuation of a similar formation on the opposite shore of Scotland.

GIBELLO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma, on the river Po; 16 miles N.W. of Parma.

GIBRALTAR, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, near a mountain of the same name, formerly called Calpe, which, with Abyla (now Ceuta), on the opposite shore of Africa, were called the Pillars of Hercules. Tarick, a general of the Moors, built a fortress here, which he called Gebel-Tarick, that is, Mount Tarick. Since that time a town has been built at the foot of this rock, which is strongly fortified. It can be approached only by a narrow passage between the mountain and the sea, across which the Spaniards have drawn a line and fortified it, to prevent the garrison from having any communication with the country. The rock abounds in partridges; and on the E. side, amid the broken precipices, is a stratum of bones, belonging to various animals, encased in a reddish calcareous stone. Gibraltar was taken from the Moors in 1462, and in 1704 it fell into the hands of the English. The Spaniards attempted to retake it the following year; and they besieged it again, in 1727, with as little success. It sustained a siege from July, 1779, to February, 1783, when the siege was finally raised, on advice being received that the preliminaries of peace were signed, but it may be considered as terminated on September 13, 1782, on the failure of a grand attack made by the Spaniards, whose floating batteries were destroyed by red-hot shot from the garrison. The number and strength of the military works, and the vast galleries opened in the calcareous rock, excite admiration; and the fortress, in the opinion of most engineers, is absolutely impregnable. The garrison here is cooped up in a very narrow compass, and in a war with Spain has no provisions but what are brought from Barbary and England. The Strait of Gibraltar is 24 miles long, and 15 broad, and a strong current always sets into the Mediterranean through the strait from the Atlantic Ocean. The rock, at the foot of which the town is situate, forms a promontory, and the E. boundary of a spacious bay, which affords tolerably good anchorage for the largest ships of war. Pop. between 15,000 and 20,000, exclusive of the military, of whom there are generally five regiments.

GIBRALTAR, a town of Colombia, in the province of Zulia; defended by some fortifications. The air is so unhealthy in the rainy season, that the town is now reduced to an insignificant hamlet.

GIUSON, a county of the state of Indiana; bounded on the N. by White river, and W. by the Wabash, which divides it from the state of Illinois. The S.W. point of the county is 30 miles above the entrance of the Wabash into the Ohio. Pop. 8977.

GIUSON, a county of Tennessee, in the W. part of the state. Capital, Trenton. Pop. in 1840, 8977, including 2969 slaves.

GIEN, a town of France, in the department of Loire. It is seated on the N. bank of the Loire; 40 miles E. by S. of Orleans. It is the seat of a prefect.

GIENGEN, a town of Suabia, on the river Brentz; 18 miles N.N.E. of Ulm; now included in the kingdom of Württemberg.

GIERACE, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra; seated on a mountain, near the sea; 34 miles E.N.E. of Reggio.

GIESSEN, a fortified town of Germany, in Upper Hesse, with a citadel and a university of some celebrity. It is seated on the Lahn; 16 miles W.S.W. of Marburg. Pop. 7300. Long. 8. 43. E. lat. 50. 35. N.

GILES, another county in the state of Tennessee, bordering on Alabama; intersected by the Elk river, which flows S. into the Tennessee; it comprises about 600 square miles of surface, inhabited by 21,494 persons. Pulaski, 60 miles S. W. of Murfreesboro', is the chief town.

GILFORD, a town of Ireland in the county of Down; 82 miles from Dublin; with manufactures of linen. Here is a chalybeate spa.

GILSLAND, a district in the parish of Denton, in Cumberland, 8 miles N.E. of Brampton, on the line of the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. It is a fashionable watering place, and has several mineral springs. Near Gilsland is a hostel, now called "Mumps's Hall", said to be the inn celebrated by Scott in his Guy Mannering.

GILLES, St., a town of France, in the dep. of Gard; 10 miles S. of Nismes. Pop. 5600.

GILLINGHAM, a town in Kent, on the E. bank of the Medway, near its entrance into the Thames; it is strongly fortified, forming the outport of the arsenal of Chatham. It is a place of considerable antiquity.

GILLINGHAM, a parish in Dorsetshire, and one of the largest in England, being upwards of 40 miles in circumference. In the vicinity is the extensive White Hart forest; there are also traces of the palace of the Saxon and Norman kings, who came to hunt in this neighbourhood.

GILMANTON, a town of New Hampshire, in Belknap county. Here is a branch of the Gilmanton Theological Seminary, well endowed; 20 miles N. by E. of Concord. Pop. in 1840, 3485.

GILLOLO, an island, the largest of the Moluccas. It is 130 miles from N. to S., but is intersected by several large bays; the breadth of any limb seldom exceeds 40 miles. The shores are in general low, and the interior rises in high peaks. It does not produce any fine spices, but has a great deal of rice, and abounds with oxen, buffaloes, goats, deer, and wild hogs. The sultans of Ternate and Tidore shared this island between them, but it is entirely under Dutch influence. The natives are industrious, particularly in weaving. One of the chief towns is Tatany, on a small promontory of the eastern limb, and only accessible by ladders.

GILZEN, a town of Holland, in the province of North Brabant; 7 miles S.E. from Breda. Pop. 2000.

GROVENAZZO, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, with a castle. It has high houses and towers, built of polished stone, with flat roofs, which give it a very singular appearance. It is seated near the sea. It is 10 miles N. W. of Bari. Pop. 5500.

GIRARDEAU, CAPE, a county of the state of Missouri, lying between the St. Francis and Mississippi rivers; it contains about 1200 square miles of surface. The chief town of the same name, is seated on the W. bank of the Mississippi, about 30 miles above the entrance of the Ohio.

GIREST, a town of Persia, in Kerman, with a trade in wheat and dates; 100 miles E. by N. of Gombroon.

GIRGE, a town of Egypt, about three miles in circumference, and contains several mosques, bazaars, and squares, but no marble buildings, or remains of ancient structures. It stands near the left bank of the Nile; 40 miles N. of Esne, and 200 S. of Cairo. Long. 31. 12. E. lat. 28. 35. N.

GIRGENTI, an episcopal town, on the S.W. coast of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, with a castle. It is part of the ancient Agrigentum, and in the vicinity are numerous remains of temples, &c.; great quantities of sulphur are exported from this place. It stands on a hill, near the river St. Blaze; 62 miles S. of Palermo. Long. 13. 38. E. lat. 37. 14. N.

GIRONDE, a river of France, formed by the union of the Garonne and Dordogne; 12 miles N. of Bordeaux.

GIRONDE, a maritime department of France, which includes part of the late province of Guienne. It lies on both sides of the Garonne, and it is the largest of the 86 departments, containing about 1,022,000 hectares; it yields abundance of wine, and is fertile in every kind of grain and cattle, whilst the rivers and coast supply abundance of fish. Its principal manufactures are in founderies, glass, earthenware, dye-stuffs, liquors, (anis-seed,) and salt; it contains some seams of pit coal, and beds of peat. It is divided into six arrondissements, of which Bordeaux, (the capital,) Bayonne, Lesparre, Libourne, and Reole are the chief towns. Pop. in 1842, 568,034.

GIRON, St., a town of France, in the dep. of Arrige; 4 miles S. by E. of St. Lizier.

GIRVAN, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, at the mouth of the river Girvan, which forms a tolerable harbour. It is 16 miles S.S.W. of the burgh of Ayr.

GISBURN, a parish in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, 10½ miles W.S.W. of Skipton. It is remarkable for a rich vein of lead ore, from which also a considerable quantity of silver has been obtained.

GIURGEVO, a town of Wallachia, on the N. bank of the Danube, opposite Rustchuk. It is a dirty miserable place of mud houses and narrow streets. It was formerly fortified, and has some commerce, as it may be considered as the port of Bucharest, from which it is distant 38 m. S.S.W. Pop. about 15,000.

GIUSTENDIL. See KOSTENDIL.

GIVET, a fortified and frontier town of France, in the department of Ardennes; divided by the Meuse into two parts, Givet Saint Hilaire, and Givet Notre Dame; the former situate at the foot of a mountain, close by Charlemont, and the other on the opposite side of the river. It is 15 miles N.E. of Rocroy. Pop. 3533.

GIZEH, a fortified town of Egypt, with a palace, several mosques, a cannon foundry, and a manufacture of coarse earthen pots and tiles. A few miles to the S.W. are the largest pyramids in the country. Gizeh was taken from the French, by the British, in 1801. It stands on the left bank of the Nile, nearly opposite Cairo.

GLADBACH, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Juliers, with a Benedictine abbey. It has manufactures of fine strong linen, and is seated on the Ners; 18 miles N. of Juliers. Pop. about 6000.

GLADENBACH, a town of Germany, in Upper Hesse; 12 miles N. of Giessen.

GLAMMIS, a town of Scotland, in Angusshire, on the Midland Railway, with manufactures of yarn and linen cloth. Near it, on the banks of the Dean, is Glamis castle, in which Malcolm II. was murdered.

GLAMORGANSHIRE, the extreme S.E. county of Wales; bounded on the S. for about 50 miles by the Bristol Channel, on the E. by the county of Monmouth, N. by Brecknock, and W. by Carmarthenshire. It contains 792 square miles of surface, or about 506,880 acres; is divided into ten hundreds, and 124 parishes; has one city, and five market towns; and sends two members to parliament. On the N. side it is mountainous; but, being more level on the S. side, it there bears large crops of corn and very sweet grass. Cattle abound in all parts, there being fruitful valleys among the mountains, that yield very good pasture. The quantity of butter with which it supplies the Bristol market is very considerable. In the N. part of the county are the most extensive iron works in the world, (see MERTHYR TYDVIL;) copper and lead also abound, (see SWANSEA.) The county is intersected from N. to S. by several streams, three canals, and numerous railroads, by which the heavy products of the mines and forges are conveyed to the coast. Cardiff is the assize town, but Merthyr Tydvil is the most populous, and Swansea the most important town in the county; the other towns of note are Neath, Llantrissant, Cowbridge, and Llandaff.

GLANDFORDBRIDGE, or BRIGG, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday, and a good trade in corn, coal, and timber. It is seated on the Ancholm, which is navigable for sloops to the Humber; 23 miles N. of Lincoln.

GLANWORTH, a town in Ireland, county of Cork. Five fairs are held here annually.

GLARIS, or GLARUS, a canton in Switzerland; bounded on the N. by the rivers, Linth, Grisons, and lake of Wallenstadt; E. by the canton of Sargans, the canton of Uri, and W. by that of Schwytz. It is a mountainous country; and the chief trade is in cattle, cheese, and butter. The inhabitants amount to 30,213, of whom 26,281 are Protestants, the remainder Catholics. Glarus is surrounded by the Alps, except toward the N.; and there is no other entrance but through this opening, which lies between the lake of Wallenstadt, and the mountains separating this canton from that of Schwytz.

GLARIS, a town of Switzerland, capital of the preceding canton, issurrounded by mountains, and seated on the river Linth. It has manufactures of cloth, and a trade in cattle, horses, cheese, slates, and wooden ware; 32 miles S.E. of Zurich.

GLASGOW, a large and populous city of Scotland, in Lanarkshire. From its extent, beauty, regularity, and modern improvements, it is undoubtedly the second, if not the first city in North Britain. The site of Glasgow consists generally of a long level tract, on both banks of the river Clyde, but rising to a considerable height on the North, on which part stands the cathedral, the nucleus of the city, but this part is now faded and eclipsed by the more modern districts. The High Street extends from the cathedral to the cross, whence the Trongate extends to the W., and the Gallowgate to the E. The extension of the Trongate, called Argyle Street, is one of the most spacious in Europe. Parallel with this, extending westward, are George, Regent, Bath, and other streets, leading to the patrician locality of the Blythe wood grounds. The Saltmarket leads from the cross to Hutchesons' Bridge across the Clyde; but its glory has departed: and lower down the river is "the Glasgow Bridge," up to which ships of large tonnage now ascend. The Broomielaw and Jamaica Street form the mercantile focus of the city. There are four bridges across the river, communicating with the suburban districts of Hutchesonstown, the Gorbals, and Laurieston; the above-named last erected being the finest. Of public buildings, the cathedral, or high church, stands first, and is the most complete of the ancient ecclesiastical structures of Scotland, and is interesting from the fact, that Glasgow owes its origin to it. The university instituted in 1450, is constantly increasing in reputation. It has been greatly enriched in the mathematical department, by the library of the late celebrated Dr. Robert Simson, author of the translation of Euclid, and has received an important addition, by a collection of rare books and manuscripts, in every department of science, but particularly in medicine, bequeathed by the late Dr. William Hunter, who has also left his extensive museum to the university of Glasgow. Besides the anatomical preparations, the museum, for which an elegant building has been erected, contains a collection of shells, corals, insects, and fossils, made by the late Dr. Fothergill, and a cabinet of medals and coins, ancient and modern, the most complete of the kind in Europe. The Andersonian university, the high school, &c., must be also enumerated amongst its public institutions. Of public ornaments, the most conspicuous is the metal equestrian statue of William III.; the obelisk, 144 feet high, in the green, to the memory of Lord Nelson; a statue of Sir John Moore, in George's square; also a bronze statue, by Chantry, of James Watt. In 1837, a Doric column, surmounted by a colossal statue of Sir Walter Scott, with his plaid on the wrong shoulder, was placed in the same square. The new court-house, determined on in 1840, is also one of the attractions of the city. The royal exchange, in front of which has been erected a fine equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, the theatre, the bank, and numerous other edifices, also deserve notice, but cannot be here enumerated. Glasgow, next to London and Liverpool, is the most commercial place in the British dominions, and in manufacturing extent and importance, it is only exceeded by Manchester and Leeds; the cotton manufacture employs a large number of people, &c.; in addition to which, it has several glasshouses, sugar refineries, &c. Glasgow was originally one parish, but is now, for the benefit of the poor and ease of ministers, divided into 12, with as many churches, and several chapels of ease, and numerous meeting-houses for dissenters. It is connected with London, Edinburgh, &c. by railway; and there are railways to Paisley, Kilmarnock, Ayr, &c. Glasgow is 44 miles W. of Edinburgh, and 60 S.W. of Perth; the distance from London by mail is 404 miles. Pop. in 1841, about 285,000. Lat. 52. 52. N. long. 4. 16. W.

GLASGOW PORT. See PORT-GLASGOW.

GLASTONBURY, a town of Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday; it is seated near a high hill, called the Tor, and famous for an abbey, that occupied an area of 60 acres of which some considerable ruins still remain; particularly the kitchen, which is the most entire, and of a very unusual contrivance. The George Inn was formerly an hospital for the accommodation of pilgrims who came to the abbey, and to the thorn, which, it is pretended, was planted by Joseph of Arimathea, and blossomed on Christmas-eve. It was also pretended, that the bodies of Joseph of Arimathea, of King Arthur, and of Edward the Confessor, were buried here. The last abbot of this place was hanged on the top of the Tor, by order of Henry VIII., for not acknowledging his supremacy; and on this hill is a tower, which serves as a landmark to seamen. Glastonbury has two churches, and a manufacture of worsted stockings. It is seated on the river Brue; 6 miles S.W. of Wells, on the road to Exeter, and 124 W. by S. of London.

GLATZ, a strong town of Prussian Silesia, capital of the county of Glatz; seated on the side of a hill by the river Neiss. On the top of the hill is an ancient castle, and a new citadel. In 1742 the Prussians took the town by capitulation; and in 1760 the Austrians took it by storm, but restored it in 1763. It is 60 miles S.S.W. of Breslau, and 90 E.N.E. of Prague. Long. 16. 32. E. lat. 50. 18. N. Pop. about 9000.

GLAUCHAU, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with considerable manufactures of cotton and other stuffs; seated on the Mulda: 36 miles S. by E. of Leipsig.

GLEIWITZ, a town of Silesia, noted for the culture of hops; and the weaving of cloth; 34 miles S.E. of Oppelen.

GLENARM, a town of Ireland, county of Antrim; 133 miles from Dublin. Here are the ruins of a Franciscan friary.

GLENALOUGH, a parish of Ireland, county of Wicklow. This magnificent glen is celebrated for the ruins of its seven churches, and a noble pillar tower; for the beautiful scenery of lake, mountain, and wood, overhung by lofty summits, and its interesting legendary history.

GLENELO, a parish in Scotland, shire of Inverness, giving the title of baron to the family of Grant.

GLENLUCE, a town of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, with a harbour for small vessels.

GLENN'S FALLS, a town of New York, on the N. side of the Hudson river, which, having a descent of 50 feet, here afford much picturesque scenery, and great water power. The finest black marble is found here; 54 miles N. of Albany. Pop. about 1800.

GLOGAU, or GROSS GLOGAU, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, which is very fertile, and produces wine. The town is well fortified, and formerly stood close by the Oder, which has since changed its course, and now flows above a mile from it. Besides the Papists, there are a great number of Protestants and Jews. It was taken by the king of Prussia, in 1741. It is 60 miles N.W. of Breslau. Long. 16. 14. E. lat. 51. 38. N.

GLOGAU, LITTLE, a town of Silesia, with a collegiate church, and Minorite convent; 23 miles S. of Oppelen.

GLOMMEN, the largest river of Norway, in the bishopric of Aggerimys, which flows into the North sea at Frederickstadt. At least 50,000 trees are annually floated by this river to Frederickstadt.

GLOSSOP, a parish of Derbyshire, which contains 18 townships and hamlets. It is the chief seat of the cotton manufacture in the county. It is 8 m. N. of Chapel-in-le-frith.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE, a county of England; 60 miles long and 29 broad; bounded on the W. by Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, N. by Worcestershire, E. by Warwickshire and Oxfordshire, and S. by Wiltshire and Somersetshire. It contains 805,120 acres; is divided into 28 hundreds, has two cities, and 23 market-towns. The air is sharp in the E. or hilly part, called the Coteswold; but very mild in the rich vale that occupies the centre, through which the Severn flows. The W. part, which is the smallest district, is varied by hill and dale, and is chiefly occupied by the forest of Dean. The staple commodities of the county are its woollens and cheese. Its principal rivers are the Severn, Warwickshire, Avon, Lower Avon, Wye, Thames, Coln, and Lech; the Severn and Thames are united by a canal. The principal manufacturing towns are Stroudwater, Tewkesbury, and Wootton-under-edge, and the other places of note, besides the capital and city of Bristol, are Cheltenham, Cirencester, and Dursley. The county sends four members to parliament for the E. and W. divisions.

GLOUCESTER, a city and capital of the preceding county, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. With Bristol, it is a bishop's see. It sends two members to parliament. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and seated on the E. side of the Severn, where, by two streams, it makes the isle of Alney. It was fortified with a wall, which Charles II., after the Restoration, ordered to be demolished. The four principal streets have their junction in the centre of the town. It once contained 11 churches, but now has only two beside the cathedral, in which is a large cloister, a whispering gallery, and the tombs of Robert, duke of Normandy, and Edward II. It has five hospitals, two free-schools, and a large county jail. In the southern suburb is a spa, the waters of which are said to be better than those of Cheltenham.

It has four extensive establishments for the manufacture of pins, and is a great mart for wool, and there are twelve incorporated trading companies. Ships come up the Severn to the bridge; but the navigation being circuitous and difficult, a canal is made hence to Berkeley, with sufficient depth of water for ships of 400 tons burthen, at the head of which is a basin, fit for the reception of 100 vessels. Berkeley is distant from Gloucester 15 miles. The city and neighbourhood contain many remains of abbeyes; those of Lantony abbey, in the S. suburb, are converted into outhouses belonging to adjacent farms. Gloucester is 24 miles N.E. of Bristol, and 104 W. by N. of London. It is connected with the Great Western railway, by a branch line to Swindon.

GLOUCESTER, a county of the state of New Jersey, extending from the Atlantic Ocean to Delaware river, a distance of 60 miles, and is about 20 in mean breadth, giving a superficies of 1200 square miles. Capital, Woodbury. It is divided into 12 townships. Pop. 25,438.

GLOUCESTER, a maritime county of Virginia; bounded on the S.W. by York river and Chesapeake Bay. It contains about 280 square miles. Pop. 10,715. The chief town, of the same name, stands on a point of land on the N. side of the mouth of York river; 17 miles N.E. of York town, and 70 E. by S. of Richmond.

GLOUCESTER, a seaport of Massachusetts, in Essex county, and on the peninsula of Cape Ann, which forms the N. side of Massachusetts Bay. The harbour is accessible for large ships, and defended by a battery and citadel. It is one of the most considerable fishing towns in the United States; it is 16 miles N.E. of Salem. Long. 70. 40. W. lat. 42. 36. N. Pop. 6350.

GLUCKSTADT, a seaport of Lower Saxony, capital of the duchy of Holstein, with a strong castle. It has a considerable foreign trade, the principal branch of which is the whale fishery. It is seated on the Elbe, near its mouth; 28 m. N.W. of Hamburg. Pop. in 1835, about 6000. Long. 9. 20. E. lat. 53. 51. N.

GLYNN, or GLINN, a town of Ireland, county of Limerick, seated on the river Shannon.

GLYNN, a maritime county of the state of Georgia, comprising about 625 square miles of territory. Brunswick, the chief town, is 70 miles S. by W. of Savannah. Pop. 5302, including 4409 slaves.

GNESEN, or GNESENA, in Prussian Poland, contains an archbishop's see, whose prelate was primate of Poland. It was the first town built in the kingdom, and formerly more considerable than at present. It is 98 miles N. by E. of Breslau, and 145 W. by N. of Warsaw. Long. 17. 40. E. lat. 52. 28. N.

Mandova, which is capable of receiving the largest ships. The viceroy's palace was a noble building; but this, as well as the city at large, is very much on the decline. The inhabitants are contented with greens, fruits, and roots, which, with a little bread, rice, and fish, is their principal diet, though they have hogs and fowls in plenty. Their religion is the Roman Catholic, and the clergy are numerous and illiterate. In this place was one of the last refuges of the inquisition; a description of which is given in Dr. Buchanan's Christian Researches. Goa has few manufactures or productions, the best trade being in arrack, which is distilled from the sap of the coco-nut tree. The harbour is defended by several forts and batteries. It is 250 miles S. by E. of Bombay. Long. 73. 45. E. lat. 15. 31. N.

GOALPARA, a town of Hindostan, at the N.E. extremity of Bengal, where the Europeans have factories, who carry on a great trade with Assam, Bootan, Thibet, &c. It stands on the E. bank of the Brahmapootra; 38 miles E. of Rangamattay.

GOAR, Str., a small town of Germany, formerly the capital of the lower county of Katzenellenbogen. It is seated on the Rhine, under the stupendous rock and castle of Rheinfels, which it surrendered to the French in 1794. It is 25 miles S. of Coblenz.

GOATZACOALCOS RIVER, a river of the Mexican States, which falls into the Mexican sea, formerly the frontier of the state of Tabasco, which has attracted attention from being one of the termini of a projected grand canal across the isthmus Tehuantepec, which was in agitation from 1844-47.

GOAVE, GRAND, a town of the republic of Hayti, near the sea-coast. It is 10 miles S.S.W. of Leogane.

GOAVE, PETIT, a seaport of the republic of Hayti, in the Gulf of Gonaves, and the mart to which the traders in Grand Goave, and other places, send their commodities. It is 31 miles W.S.W. of Port au Prince.

GOBBI, a country of South Africa, on the coast of the Atlantic, between the country of Cawma and Cape Lopez Gonsalvo, under the equator. The chief town is situated about a day's journey from the sea. The principal trade of the inhabitants consists in elephants and ivory.

GOBIN, Str. See FERRE.

GOCH, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Clèves; seated on the Niers; 6 miles S. of Clèves.

GOCHSHEIM, or GOCHEN, a town of Suiabia, lately belonging to Wirtemberg, but ceded to Bavaria in 1802; 21 miles S. of Heidelberg, and 34 N.W. of Stuttgart.

GOCIANO, a town of Sardinia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle; seated on the Chirso; 25 miles E. of Algheri.

GODALMING, a corporate town in Surrey, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and manufactures of stockings, paper, leather, &c. It is seated on the Wye, where it divides into several streams; 4 miles S.W. of Guildford, and 34 of London.

GODAVERY, a river of Hindostan, which has its source in the Sackhein mountains; 70 miles to the N.E. of Bombay. In the upper part of its course it is esteemed a sacred river by the Hindoos, who call it Gonga, a term for a river in general. After crossing Dowlatabad and Goleconda, from W. to E., it turns to the S.E., and, receiving the Bain about 90 miles above the sea, divides into two principal channels at Rajamundry; and these subdividing again, form altogether several tide harbours, for vessels of moderate burden, at its different mouths, in the Bay of Bengal. Its course is estimated to be above 800 miles; and extensive forests of teak timber border on its banks, within the mountains.

GODESTOW, a village on the Isis, in Oxfordshire; 3 miles N.N.W. of Oxford. Here are the remains of a nunnery, in which it is said the "Fair Rosamond" was buried.

GODING, a town of Moravia, with a fine castle; seated on a branch of the Marsche; 38 miles S.E. of Brunn.

GODMANCHESTER, a corporate town in Huntingdonshire, parted from Huntingdon by the river Ouse. It is seated in a rich fertile soil, which yields great plenty of corn. When James I. came through it from Scotland, the inhabitants met him with 70 ploughs, drawn by as many team of horses; for which novel sight he granted them a charter. Here is a school called the free grammar-school of Queen Elizabeth. It is 59 miles N. by W. of London.

GODMANHAM, a parish in the E. Riding of Yorkshire, 2 miles N.E. of Market Weighton. The church, a venerable structure, is supposed to have been built with the materials of the chief Pagan temple in Northumbria. The surrounding land is so obstructed with the remains of ancient buildings as to prevent its culture.

GODSTONE, a parish in Surrey; 20 miles from London, near the South Eastern railway. Here is a quarry of freestone.

GODOLPHIN, a hamlet in the parish of Breage, in Cornwall, 6 miles N.W. of Helston. It is seated on a granite rock, and is noted for its mines of tin and copper.

GOES, or TER GOES, a small town of the Netherlands, in the island South Beveland. It has a considerable trade, particularly in salt and corn. The great church was burnt down in 1648, and another was built, which is a handsome structure. It communicates with the Scheldt by a canal, and is 10 miles E. of Middleburg. Long. 3. 50. E. lat. 51. 33. N.

GOGARD, a town of Sweden, in E. Gothland, near the lake Wetter; 23 miles N.N.W. of Linköping.

GOGO, a town of Hindostan, in Guzerat, with a good tide harbour, at the mouth of a river, in the Gulf of Cambay; 100 miles S. by W. of Ahmedabad. Long. 71. 53. E. lat. 21. 45. N.

GOGORA, or SARFEW, a river which issues from Lake Lunkee, in Tibet, and, forcing its way through Mount Himmaleh, pervades the province of Oude, in Hindostan, where it takes a S.E. direction, and unites with the Ganges, above Chuprah, in the province of Bahar.

GONUD, a town of Hindostan, capital of a circar of the same name, in the province of Agra; 63 miles S.S.E. of Agra. Long. 78. 44. E. lat. 26. 24. N.

GOITO, a town of Italy, in the Mantuan; seated on the river Mincio, between the Lake of Mantua and that of Garda; 15 miles N.W. of Mantua.

GOLCONDA, a province of Hindostan, now called Hyderabad, between the lower parts of the rivers Kistna and Godavery, and the principal part of Dowlatabad. It was formerly called Tellingana, or Tilling, and is subject to the Nizam of the Deccan. The King of Golconda, at one time, maintained in his pay above 500,000 soldiers; but in 1667 the reigning prince became tributary to Aurengzebe. The kings had vast revenues, arising from the properties of land, customs of merchandises, and provisions. It has been supposed that this is the country of diamonds; but this is erroneous. It is the depôt for diamonds that are brought from Balaghaut, and other districts, and cut for sale by the Golconda merchants: hence the commonly received opinion that the mines themselves are in this district. In some districts the inhabitants have, yearly, two crops of rice, and several other kinds of grain. Hyderabad is the capital.

GOLCONDA, a fortress of Hindostan, in the country of the same name; 6 miles W.N.W. of Hyderabad, and joined to that city by a wall of communication. It occupies the summit of a conical hill, and is deemed impregnable.

GOLDAP, a town of E. Prussia, in the province of Gumbinnen; 20 miles S. of Gumbinnen, with a manufacture of cloths, and a remarkable aqueduct. Pop. 3000.

GOLD-CLIFF, a parish in Monmouthshire, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. of Newport. Near here are the remains of an ancient priory. The village takes its name from a curious peninsulated cliff of limestone, seated on an immense bed of yellow mica, which is its only protection against the encroachments of the sea.

GOLD COAST, a maritime country of Guinea, where the Europeans have several forts and settlements. It is about 220 miles in length from W. to E., between the rivers Ancohar and Volta; and includes several districts in which are two or three towns or villages, lying on the sea shore. Seven of the districts are dignified with the title of kingdoms, though they contain but a small extent of land along the coast: the chief is Ashan-tee. The natives are generally very rich, as they carry on a great trade with the Europeans for gold; and many of them are employed in fishing, and cultivating rice, which grows in incredible quantities. This they exchange with others for maize, yams, potatoes, and palm oil. Most of the inhabitants go naked, and those who are best clothed have only some yards of stuff wrapped about their middle.

GOLDBERG, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Lignitz. It has manufactures of woollen and linen, and is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Katzbach; 11 miles S.W. of Lignitz, and 50 W. of Breslan. Pop. about 7000.

GOLDINGEN, a town of the duchy of Courland, with a castle, formerly the residence of the dukes. It is seated on the Wela, about 18 miles from the shore of the Baltic, and 60 miles W. of Mittau. Long. 22. 21. E. lat. 56. 48. N.

GOLETTA, or GOULETTE, a fortress of Tunis, on a narrow channel, between the Lake of Tunis and the sea. In 1536 it was taken by Charles V., when he attempted the siege of Tunis, and kept by the Spaniards till 1574, when it was taken from them by Selim II.

GOLLING, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Salzburg; 14 miles S. by E. of Salzburg.

GOMMERSAL, a town of Yorkshire; 6 miles W. of Huddersfield.

GONAIVE, a seaport of the republic of Hayti, in the island of St. Domingo, in the Gulf of Gonaives. The town of Gonaives, is at the head of a small bay, on the western shore; the houses are mostly of wood, and of one storey; the streets are long, with a large square in the centre, on one side of which stands the parish church, now in ruins. It has a good harbour for shipping, and a noble convenient quay, where logs of mahogany lie piled up in great quantities. The exports of the place are cotton, coffee, mahogany, and salt. It was nearly destroyed by the earthquake of May 7th, 1842. It is 30 miles S.E. of St. Nicolas-le-Mole. Lat. 19. 26. N. long. 72. 41. W.

GONAIVES, GULF OF, is formed by two promontories jutting from the W. end of the island of St. Domingo; it is about 100 miles wide at its entrance between Capes St. Nicolas-le-Mole and Donna Maria, and extends eastward about 100 miles, terminating in Port-au-Prince Bay, which is formed by the island of Gonaive, about 35 miles from E. to W., and 5 to 7 wide; the N. side into Port-au-Prince Bay is called St. Mark's Channel, and the S. Gonaives Channel.

GONDAR, the metropolis of Abyssinia; situate on a hill of considerable height. The palace of the neguz, is at the W. end, flanked with square towers. The greater part of it is now in ruins. The houses are chiefly of clay; the roofs thatched in the form of cones. The inhabitants once estimated at 40,000, are now reduced to 1000 families. They have no shops, but carry on their trade in a large square, where they expose their merchandise upon mats. There are numerous churches, and the patriarchate depends upon that of Alexandria. The city is at present in the hands of the Gallas. It is 180 miles S.E. of Sennaar. Long. 37. 33. E. lat. 12. 34. N.

GONDEGAMA, or GONDALCOMMA, a river of Hindostan, which rises near Conban, forms the nominal boundary of the Carnatic on the N., and enters the Bay of Bengal at Mootapilly.

There are two or three other towns of the same name, in different parts of the United States of North America.

GOSLAR, a town of Hanover, district of Hildesheim. It derives its principal subsistence from the neighbouring iron mines, manufactures of brass and copper, and brewing. Here the art of making gunpowder is said to have been discovered by a monk. It is seated on the river Gose, at the foot of a mountain, called Rammelberg; 28 miles S. of Brunswick. Long. 10. 31. E. lat. 51. 57 N. Pop. about 7000.

GOSPORT, a strongly fortified town in Hampshire, on the W. side of the harbour of Portsmouth, over which is a ferry. It has a market on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, and a considerable trade, especially in times of war, from its contiguity to the naval arsenal at Portsmouth. Here are several breweries, an extensive iron-foundry, and a royal hospital, called Haslar Hospital, for the sick and wounded of the royal navy. It is 15 miles S.E. of Southampton, and 73 S.W. of London, and is connected with the Southampton railway by a branch line.

GOSSEWEINSTEIN, or GOSSMANSTEIN, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg, on the Putlach; 20 miles E.S.E. of Bamberg.

GOTHA, SAXE, a principality in Central Germany, Saxony, comprising the greatest part of the ancient Thuringia, and is the sixteenth in order of the Germanic confederation. It produces corn, flax, coal, manganese, iron, cobalt, woollen stuffs, spinning flax, and wool. It maintains a small military force, and has the usual appurtenances of an independent state, as an exchequer, &c. The religion is Lutheran. Area, 816 square miles. Population, 147,195. It formerly consisted of this duchy, and great part of the principality of Altenburg; but on the death of Frederic IV., in 1823, the duchy of Gotha went to the Duke of Saxe Coburg, and the principality of Altenburg to the Duke of Saxe Hildburghausen.

GOTHA, a town of Upper Saxony; capital of a principality of the same name. It is the residence of the Duke of Saxe Gotha, whose palace contains a fine library of 150,000 volumes, and a rich cabinet of coins. Near it is the duenal observatory of Seeberg, one of the most beautiful and useful in Germany. Gotha has a foundry for cannon, a porcelain manufacture, and a considerable trade in woollens, wood, and beer. It is seated on the Leine; 16 miles W. by S. of Erfurt, and 75 from Leipsic. Long. 10. 48. E. lat. 50. 51. N. Pop. in 1837, 13,874.

GOTHA, a river of Sweden, which issues from the S.W. extremity of Lake Wenner, flows by Trollhatta (where it forms a cataract), and Balus, and enters the Cattogatt at Gottenburg.

GOTHAM, a parish in Nottinghamshire, 7 miles S.W. of Nottingham, near the Midland Counties railway. It kept the tenure formerly of certain lands, by the observance of some very ridiculous rites and festivities, which gave rise to the proverb, "as wise as a man of Gotham:" a periphrasis for a fool.

It has two excellent quarries, one of gypsum, the other of a reddish stone.

GOIHARD, Str., a celebrated mountain of Switzerland, in the canton of Uri. Its highest point is 10,600 feet from the sea: it is 22 miles S. of Altorf. Though not the highest mountain, it is deemed the principal summit of the Helvetic Alps; for in its vicinity rise the rivers Tesino, Aar, Renss, and Rhone, which flow hence in every direction.

GOTHEBURG, or GOTTENBURG, a city of Sweden, capital of West Gothland; seated at the mouth of the Gotha, which forms an excellent harbour; the best situated for foreign trade of any in the kingdom, as it lies on the Cattogat. Here is a considerable herring fishery, and a great trade in salt, iron, and fir planks; and from this port the Swedish East India ships take their departure. The inhabitants are computed at 30,000. Its environs present a uniform scene of barren rocks, on the sides of which part of the suburbs are built. The interior of the city resembles in some respects the towns of Holland, having canals with rows of trees along their margin. In 1802 nearly a fourth part of the city was consumed by a fire. It obtained great importance as a commercial depôt, during the proscription of Buonaparte in 1807—1811. It is 180 miles S.W. of Orebro. Long. 11. 53. E. lat. 57. 42. N.

GOTHLAND, one of the five general divisions of Sweden; bounded on the N. by Sweden Proper, E. and S. by the Baltic, and W. by the Sound and the Cattogat. This country is inhabited by a nation celebrated for their excursions and invasions of other countries, which had its origin from the Getæ, or Tartars of the Crimea. The Goths had kings of their own till 1132, when they were united to Sweden. It was formerly divided into East, West, and South Gothland, but now into nine provinces and the isles of Gothland and Oeland.

GOTHLAND, or GOTTLAND, an island of Sweden, in the Baltic; 70 miles from N. to S. and 25 in its greatest breadth. From its form and situation it has obtained the name of the Eye of the Baltic. The soil is fertile, and remarkable for an excellent breed of sheep. Here are fine woods of oak and pine, quarries of excellent stone, and very good limestone. Wisby is the capital.

GOTTESBERG, a town of Silesia, where great quantities of worsted stockings are knit; 16 miles S.W. of Schweidnitz.

GÖTTINGEN, a town of Hanover, capital of a principality of the same name. Here George II., of Great Britain, founded a university, which has acquired a very distinguished reputation; and it contains one of the most capital libraries in Europe. There are also many other literary institutions, and it had once a commandery of the Teutonic order. The woollen manufactures are the principal support of the inhabitants. It is seated on the Leine; 70 miles S. of Hannover by railway. Long. 9. 53. E. lat. 51. 32. N. Population about 11,000.

GOTLENNE, a small town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, on a river of the same name; 18 miles S.S.E. of Dresden.

GOTTORP, a castle of Denmark, formerly the ducal residence, from which the ducal line, formed by Adolphus, son of Frederick I., was denominated Holstein-Gottorp, which still subsists in the person of the emperor of Russia.

GOTTSCHÉE, a town of Lower Carniola, with a castle; 17 miles N.N.E. of Fiume.

GOVAN, a town of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, near the river Clyde; 2 miles W. of Glasgow, in the manufactures of which it participates.

GOUDA, or TERGOOUW, a strong town of South Holland, celebrated for its noble church, and painted glass windows, supposed to be the finest in Europe. Great quantities of yarn and tow are made here, also good cheese, and tobacco-pipes. It is seated on the Issel, at the influx of the Gouw; 10 miles N.E. of Rotterdam. Pop. 13,000.

GOUDHURST, a parish in Kent; 48 miles from London. It was formerly a market town, but has fallen to decay.

GOUR, the ruins of a city in the province of Bengal; it was the seat of government of Hindostan, during the Afghan dynasty, from 1204 to 1564. It is on the E. bank of the Ganges; 160 miles N. of Calcutta.

GOURDON, a town of France, in the department of Lot; 25 miles N. of Cahors. It is the seat of a prefect.

GOURNAY, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine; seated on the Epte; 24 miles E. of Rouen.

GOWRAN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kilkenny; 66 miles from Dublin.

GOYAZ, a central province of the empire of Brazil, east of Matto Grosso, to which it is very similar in condition, climate, and features. It is so called from the aboriginal nation Goya, now nearly extinct. It is described as abounding in gold, diamonds, and precious stones, but its remoteness and difficulty of access render its riches unavailable. Mineral and warm springs have been discovered in the S.W. part of the province. It was originally settled by gold-hunters, but the hardships they endured prevented further pursuit. Education, agriculture, and civilization are in a very backward state amongst the scanty settlers dispersed over the territory. These were estimated in 1844 at 97,952, exclusive of slaves and Indians.

GOZI, or GOZZO, an island in the Mediterranean, the ancient Clauda, under which St. Paul sailed on his voyage to Rome. It is 24 miles from the S.W. coast of Candia, and vessels often put in here for water and provisions. Long. 23. 46. E. lat. 34. 50. N.

GRADO, a town of Italy, in a small island of the same name, on the coast of Friuli; 50 miles E. by N of Venice. Long. 13. 10. E. lat. 45. 46. N.

GRAFF REYNET, a district in the territory of the Cape of Good Hope; bounded on the E. by Somerset, N. by that of the Hottentots, S. by Uitenhage, and W. by Beaufort. Population 16,000, principally occupied in rearing cattle.

GRAFTON, a county of the state of New Hampshire; bounded on the W. 55 miles by the Connecticut river, which divides it from the state of Vermont; it is about 28 miles in mean breadth, and contains a population of 42,311. Haverhill, on the E. bank of the Connecticut, is the chief town.

GRAHAM'S ISLAND, a volcano that appeared in July 1831, off the S. coast of Sicily, from the sea, and, after raging for some time, left an island of cinders and scoræa, 120 feet in height at the W. end, which, gradually subsiding, disappeared beneath the waves, forming a shoal of 9 feet: this remained for 4 or 5 years, when that also dispersed.

GRAHAM'S TOWN, a town of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, and capital of the eastern province. It is seated in a hollow, and about 1000 feet above the level of the sea, from which it is distant about 25 miles. It is the second town in size and importance in the colony; and up to a recent date was an ugly and ill-built place, but has somewhat improved by the addition of a few better buildings.

GRAIN COAST, a maritime country of Guinea, extending along the Atlantic about 300 miles, between the Sierra Leone country on the W. and the Ivory coast on the E. The productions are peas, beans, gourds, lemons, oranges, dates, and palm wine; but the chief article is the abundance of Guinea pepper, or grains of paradise, which draws a great interior and export trade. Cows, hogs, sheep, and goats, are numerous. The Portuguese had formerly the whole commerce of this coast, but it has long been chiefly in the hands of the English and Dutch.

GRAITZ, or GREITZ, a town of Upper Saxony, with a castle on a rocky mountain, and another in the town. It has manufactures of snuff, and is situate on the Elster, between mountains and woods; 10 miles N. of Plauen, and 50 S. of Leipsic. Population about 6000.

GRAMAT, a town of France, 28 miles N. N.E. of Cahors. Pop. 3295.

GRAMMONT, a town of Belgium; seated on both sides of the Dender; 12 miles N.E. of Tournay. Pop. in 1834, 7389.

GRAMPIAN HILLS, a chain of hills in Scotland, which extends, in a N.E. direction, from the mountain Benlomond, in Dumfriesshire, through the counties of Perth, Angus, and Kincardine, to Aberdeen, and thence, in a N.W. direction, through the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, and Moray, to the borders of Inverness. They take their name from a single hill, the Mons Grampius of Agricola, where Galgacus waited the approach of Agricola, and where the battle fought was so fatal to the brave Caledonians.

GRAMFOUND, a town in Cornwall, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of gloves; seated on the Fal; 40 miles S.W. of Luanncoston, and 244 W. by S. of London. It formerly returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised in 1824, for corrupt practices.

GRAN, a town of Lower Hungary, and an archbishop's see; seated near the conflux of the Gran with the Danube; 80 miles E.S.E. of Presburg. It was once the finest city of Hungary, and the residence of its kings, some of whose tombs are still to be seen. It is now the seat of the prince primate of Hungary. The superb new cathedral, the finest modern building in Hungary, the archbishop's palace, &c., commenced in 1821, occupy the summit of a precipitous rock, in a commanding situation. Pop. 12,885. Long. 18. 46. E. lat. 47. 46. N.

GRAN, or GREEN, a scaport of Arabia, in the province of Bahrin, at the N.W. end of the Gulf of Persia, and on the borders of Irac Arabi; 40 miles S. of Bassora. Long. 47. 45. E. lat. 29. 56. N.

GRANADA. See GRENADA.

GRANADA, a maritime province, formerly a kingdom of Spain, part of Andalusia, having about 270 miles of sea-coast, on the Mediterranean; the mean length of the province from W. to E. being about 234 miles, the extreme breadth at the E. end is about 95 miles, but the W. part not more than 30, its superficies not exceeding 9600 square miles. Population in 1827, 1,097,100. It is bounded on the E. by the kingdom of Seville, N. by those of Cordova and Jaen, and W. by Murcia. Though a mountainous country, the soil is good; but it has not been well cultivated since the Moors were expelled in 1492. However, it produces corn, wine, oil, sugar, flax, hemp, excellent fruits, honey, wax, and mulberry-trees, which feed a great number of silk-worms. The forests produce gull-nuts, palm-trees, and oaks. It is intersected by several streams falling into the Mediterranean, but the principal rivers run from E. to W. into the Guadalquivir through Cordova and Seville. Granada was the last province in Spain occupied by the Moors. The principal towns on the coast of the Mediterranean, beginning at the W., are Marbella, Malaga, Almunacar, Motril, Adra, Almeria, and Vera, and in the interior Granada (the capital), Ronda, Velez, Malaga, Santa Fé, Guadix, Baza, Huescar, and Purchena.

GRANADA, a city of Spain, capital of the preceding province, and an archbishop's see, is built on four hills, and divided into four parts, in one of which is the large church containing the tombs of Ferdinand and Isabella, who took this place from the Moors in 1492. In another is the palace of the kings of Spain, and the Alhambra, an ancient palace of the Moorish kings, with so many rooms that it is like a labyrinth. In the third is the university; the fourth has nothing considerable; but all the public buildings are magnificent, and the cathedral and convents contain excellent pictures by Spanish masters. The walls and gates, and the aqueducts, are mostly destroyed; and its trade is feebly carried on, without encouragement or protection. The inhabitants are not more than 66,000, and half of them are lawyers, ecclesiastics, and mendicants. It is seated on the Xenil, near the influx of the Oro; 220 miles due S. of Madrid, and 63 N.E. of Malaga.

The Alhambra is an ancient fortress-palace of the Moorish kings; the exterior, which is severe, and almost forbidding, gives no promise of the gorgeousness which once shone within, when the opening of a single door admitted the stranger into an almost paradise. The interior is of the most magnificent description, both in architecture and ornament, and in extent seems like a labyrinth. But this, which might have ranked almost amongst the wonders of the world, has, like all things in Spain, fallen a victim to ignorance, violence, and superstition. Portions of it have been devoted as a prison for convicts; its doors used for fire-wood; its ornaments defaced; and now it presents a picture of desolation only too often to be seen in ill-fated Spain—rich, indeed, in ruins and recollections. The French also have done their share of destruction; the several beautiful towers which adorned and defended the hill on which the Alhambra is seated, were wantonly blown up by them; ravaging and destroying wherever they came, for the mere enjoyment of it.

GRANADA, NEW, a republic of Spanish America; since its separation from the Columbia confederation, it comprises the N.W. region of South America, and extends from the boundary of central America to that of the more recently constituted republic of Ecuador, from near the equinoctial line to nearly 12 degrees N. lat., and from 70 to 83 degrees W. long.; the area is vaguely stated at 380,000 square miles. The population of its five provinces is estimated at 1,360,000. The isthmus of Panama and Veragua, though in a political view but loosely connected with the republic, are comprised within New Granada. The central Andes spread over the country E. of the Rio Magdalena; several of the river tributary to the Orinoco are navigable. Our knowledge, however, both of the country and of the rivers, is very imperfect. The climate varies in different localities; the productions consist of maize, plantains, cotton, tobacco, some sugar, and many kinds of vegetables; the forests also yield many useful woods. Gold is found in the central and western Andes; platinum and silver are also worked; and iron and copper have been discovered. The inhabitants are descended from the Spaniards, Indians, negroes, and are a very mixed race. The chief town is Santa Fé de Bogota.

GRANADA, a town of the republic of Guatemala, on the S.W. side of the lake of Nicaragua. It is the principal place from which the produce of the county is sent to the harbour of San Juan del Norte. Pop. about 14,000.

GRANARD, a neat town of Ireland, in the county of Longford; 16 miles E.N.E. of Longford.

GRANBY, a small town of South Carolina; seated on the Congaree, on the contrary side of the Colombia, about a mile below that city. It is noted for a curious bridge, whose centre arch is 100 feet wide, to give passage to large trees which are brought down by the floods.

GRAND GULF, a village on the Grand Gulf, a remarkable bend of the Mississippi river, in the state of Mississippi; 50 miles by road above Natchez, and 360 by the river from New Orleans. Pop. about 1000.

GRANDMONT, a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienna. Near it was a celebrated abbey, suppressed in 1769, after the death of the then professed members. It is 15 miles N.N.E. of Limoges.

GRAND MANAN, an island at the entrance of the Bay of Fundy, the S. end of which is in lat. 44. 43. N. and 67. of W. long.: it is included in the province of Nova Scotia.

GRANDPRE, a town of France, in the department of Ardennes; seated on the Ayre, 32 miles E. of Rheims.

GRANGEMOUTH, a village of Scotland, in Stirlingshire, at the junction of the Great Canal with the river Carron; 4 miles N.E. of Falkirk, in which parish it is included. Upwards of 40,000 tons of shipping are annually entered here, belonging either to the foreign or coasting trade.

GRANGER, a county of Tennessee, between the Clinch and Holston rivers. Area, 320 sq. miles. Capital, Rutledge. Pop. 10,572.

GRANSEE, a town of Brandenburg, in the Middle Mark; 30 miles N. of Berlin.

GRANSON, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud. It stands near the S. end of the lake of Neuchâtel; 16 miles W.S.W. of Neuchâtel.

GRANT, a newly-formed county of Kentucky, E. of the Kentucky river. Capital, Williamstown. Pop. in 1840, 4191.

GRANT, a county in the N. part of Indiana, containing an area of 415 square miles. Capital, Marion. Pop. 4875.

GRANT, a county in the S.W. part of Wisconsin, between the Wisconsin and Mississippi rivers. The soil is highly productive, and abounds in lead ore. Capital, Lancaster. Pop. 3926.

GRANTHAM, a borough in Lincolnshire, with a market on Saturday. The church is an elegant structure, with a very lofty spire. A canal passes hence to the Trent, at Nottingham. Grantham is seated on the Witham; 20 miles S. by W. of Lincoln, and 110 N. by W. of London. It returns two members to parliament. It is a place of great antiquity, of which it still shows some traces; the Angel Hotel was a commandery of the Knights Templars, and still displays some grotesque ornaments; a little to the S. W. was a beautiful stone oratory. Just without the town is a mild chalybeate spring. It is also celebrated as being the scene of Oliver Cromwell's first exploit, he having at this place defeated a large body of the king's troops. The Great Northern Railway will pass it, and it has branches to Nottingham, &c.

GRANVILLE, a seaport town in France, in the department of Manche; seated on the English Channel, in the bay of St. Malo, partly on a rock, and partly on a plain; 15 miles S. by W. of Contances, and 25 N.E. of St. Malo. Pop. 7580. The port is protected by a fine new pier. It carries on a considerable traffic with the Island of Jersey.

GRANVILLE, a county in the N. part of North Carolina. Area, 828 square miles. Capital, Oxford. Pop. in 1840, 18,817, including 8707 slaves.

GRANVILLE, a town of Ohio, settled by emigrants from Granville in Massachusetts. It is a flourishing place, and one mile E. of it is Granville College; 34 miles N.E. of Columbus. Population, 1528.

GRASLITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz; famous for its manufacture of brass; 15 miles N.W. of Elbogen.

GRASMERE-WATER, a small lake of Westmoreland, to the W. of Ambleside. Its margin is hollowed into small bays, with bold eminences some of rock, some of turf, that half conceal and vary the figure of the lake. A low promontory projects far into the water, and on it stands a white village; altogether it is one of the most beautiful and retired spots in the lake district.

GRASON, an island in the Gulf of Bothnia, near the coast of Sweden; 15 miles long and 2 broad. Long. 18.20. E. lat. 60.12 N.

GRASSE, a town of France, in the department of Var, and lately a bishop's see. It has a trade in dry fruit, oil, perfumes, and tanned leather, and is seated on an eminence; 11 miles W.N.W. of Antibes, and 20 W. by S. of Nice. It is the seat of a prefect. Pop. in 1836, 7515.

GRASSE, LA, a town of France, in the department of Aude, on the river Othien. Pop. 1244.

GRATZ, a fortified town of Germany, in the Austrian dominions; capital of Lower Styria, and a bishop's see. Here are many churches, and a fine arsenal. The castle stands on a rock, and is a strong place. Gratz is seated on the W. side of the Muer, over which is a bridge to an extensive suburb. The inhabitants are estimated at 40,000. In 1797 it was taken by the French. It is 88 miles S.S.W. of Vienna. Long. 15.26. E. lat. 47.4 N.

GRAUDENZ, a town of Prussian Poland, on the E. bank of the Vistula; 18 miles N. of Culm, and 55 S. of Danzig. Population about 8000.

GRAVE, a strong town of Dutch Brabant, on the left bank of the Maese, beyond which there is a fort. It has been often taken. It is 8 miles S.S.W. of Nimwegen.

GRAVELINES, a small seaport of France; seated at the mouth of the Aa, defended by Fort Philip; 12 miles E. of Calais. Pop. 2570.

GRAVENMACHEM, a town of Belgium, province of Luxembourg; 13 miles S.W. of Treves. Pop. 2500.

GRAVENAU, or GRAYENAU, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Passau, on the river Sag; 16 miles N. of Passau.

GRAVENWERT, a town of Bavaria, in the upper palatinate; 17 miles N. of Amberg.

GRAVESANDE, a town of South Holland, where the ancient counts of Holland formerly resided. It is about 4 miles from the sea, and 6 W. by S. of Delft.

GRAVESEND, a town in Kent, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It stands on the S. bank of the Thames, and is the common landing and embarking place for seamen and passengers to and from London. Here vessels deliver in their manifests, it being the boundary of the port of London. A great part of it was burnt down, with the church, in 1727; the latter was rebuilt at one of the 50 new churches. It is called the corporation of Gravesend and Milton, these two places being united under the government of a mayor. The latter place is situated a mile E. of the other, and has a blockhouse over against Tilbury Fort. They were incorporated by Queen Elizabeth; but, long before, Richard II. had granted them the exclusive privilege of conveying passengers to London in boats. This privilege, however, since the application of steam to navigation has become obsolete; and since 1825, in consequence of the facility which railway and steam-boats afford. Gravesend has greatly extended on the W. side, for the accommodation of an increasing number of visitors from the metropolis, the bank of the river being here favourable for bathing. It is 22 miles E.S.E. of London.

GRAVINA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari; 32 miles W.S.W. of Bari. It has nine churches, and a population of about 2000.

GRAY, a town of France, in the department of Upper Saone. It has a trade in iron, and is seated on the Saone; 25 miles N.E. of Dijon. It is the seat of a prefect. Population, 6584.

GRAYSON, an interior county of Kentucky; bounded on the S. by Green River. Population about 4461. Litchfield, the chief town, is 114 miles S. W. of Frankfort.—Also a frontier county of Virginia, bordering on North Carolina; it is intersected by New River, which runs from S. to N. into the Ohio. Population, 9087. Greensville, the chief town, is 180 miles W.S.W. of Richmond.

GREAT BRITAIN, an island of the Atlantic Ocean, off the W. coast of Europe, extending from the lat. of 49. 58. to 58. 40. N., a distance of about 605 British statute miles, varying in breadth from 60 to 260 miles; the superficies not exceeding 88,000 square miles, the mean breadth will not exceed 142 miles. It is divided into three great parts, ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, and WALES, which see.

GREATHAM, a parish in Durham, 7 miles N.E. of Stockton-on-Tees. It has two hospitals, or alms-houses, one of which, the Hospital of God in Greatham, is a fine building, and has large revenues.

GREBENSTEIN, a town of Germany, in Lower Hesse, on the river Esse; 12 miles N. N.W. of Cassel.

GREECE, a territory of the S.E. extremity of Europe, and, 2000 years ago, the most celebrated portion of that quarter of the globe, it having successfully combated the myriad armies of Persia and the East, and extended its arts and its arms eastward to the banks of the Indus. As the glory of Egypt declined, that of Greece rose to its meridian, to be eclipsed in its turn by the ascendancy of Rome, till, in the 15th century, it became tributary to, and dependent on, the government of the Turks. The main land of Greece extends from the lat. of 36.25. to 39.0. N., and is about 110 miles in mean breadth. In the days of Grecian celebrity, it was divided into four great parts, viz. Macedonia, Thessaly, Livadia, and the Peloponnesus, exclusive of the island of Candia and the Archipelago. Under the Turks it was divided into four pachalies, viz. Salonica, Joannina, Egripos or Negropont, and Tripolizza; and for four centuries was subject to their misrule and oppression, till the Greeks rose with one accord against their tyrants, in 1821, and the whole territory became one scene of slaughter and conflicts the most barbarous, till America, aided by the great powers of Europe, interfered; and, after the fortunate mistake of the destruction of the Turkish fleet, at Navarino, the sultan gave up what he was no longer able to maintain, and the choice of a Christian prince was left to the Greeks, who placed the sovereignty, in 1832, on Otho I. son of the king of Bavaria. The modern kingdom of Greece comprises the whole of the Morea, the island of Egripos or Negropont, the ancient Euboea, and continental Negropont or the ancient Attica: Lepanto, and Kaulali, including the countries lying south of Epirus, now Turkish Joannina, and of Thessaly, now Turkish Trikala; the N. boundary between Turkey and Greece having been settled by a survey and commission; and the Greek Archipelago. Total area about 16,000 square miles. The accounts of the population are uncertain, some have rated it as 600,000, and one authority at 2,120,000, but this is greatly in excess. Capo d'Istria, who was chosen president of the Greek republic at the declaration of its independence, instituted a commission who gave in 1836, for Eastern Greece, 175,800 Greeks, 15,000 Turks; Western Greece, 116,700 Greeks, 4500 Turks; Morea, 480,000 Greeks, 40,000 Turks; and about 210,000 for Islands; giving a total population of 1,012,000 inhabitants; but this is probably over-rated. After the establishment of the new monarchy, the kingdom was divided in 1833, into ten nomarchies, these into eparchies, and these again into 468 Demoi, or Communes. The following table exhibits the probable population in each division:

Greece, for a country limited to an extent of 400 miles in length by about 100 in average breadth, commands all the natural elements of wealth. There is no country, however, in central or southern Europe, whose natural resources have been so long neglected. Turkish despotism, internal dissensions, and consequent insecurity of property, have for centuries retarded the progress of agriculture, and driven the inhabitants of the interior to rearing cattle, and those on the sea-coasts to a semi-trading, semi-marauding life. The general aspect of the country is much diversified with high mountains, inlets, rocks, islands; with Parnassus, Olympus, Helicon, Pindus, and Cithæron to the south, and the snow-clad Rhodope and Arbelus in the north; and with numerous rich valleys, rugged districts, woods, pastures, and streams. Oranges, figs, olives, and other fruits; wild fowl and bees, and fish are abundant. The resources of the country under the new government are very imperfectly developed. Its numerous mines are unexhausted and unworked. The wheat and maize of the Morea is of excellent quality. Manufacturing industry has hitherto been confined to articles for domestic use. Ship building next to agriculture, is the most important branch of industry. The government is nearly an absolute monarchy, the administration is in seven departments. The king is assisted by a council of state, but its functions are purely advisory, and each province, or nome, has a nomarch or superior, under whom are ten chiefs of the subordinate divisions. The great mass of the people belong to the Greek church, but since 1833 Greece has been independent of the patriarch at Constantinople. The priesthood are exemplary, but poor and illiterate. Monasteries are not so numerous as formerly. Full religious toleration is guaranteed by the constitution. The people are rather marked in the different divisions of the kingdom: in N. Greece they have retained their chivalrous and warlike spirit, with a simplicity of manners. The soil is here cultivated by Bulgarians, Wallachs, and Albanians. E. Greece is the only place where the pure Hellenic race has maintained itself. The population of the Peloponnesus are similar to those of N. Greece, but more ignorant and less honest. The Mainotes (properly Spartans) form a separate class, occupying the lofty and sterile mountains between the gulfs of Laconia and Messenia. We have not space here to enumerate the other numerous races which occupy various districts. Greece is still a country that is very far in arrear of civilization and improvement, which can only be attributed to restrictions and maladministration. See LIVADIA, MACEDONIA, MOREA, THESSALY, and SPORADES.

GREENBRIER, an interior county of Virginia, bounded on the W. by the great Kenhawa river. It is intersected by collateral ridges of the Allegany mountains; it contains about 1200 square miles, and a population of 8695.

GREENE RIVER, a river of Kentucky, which runs from E. to W., and, after a course of about 200 miles, falls into the Ohio, about 30 miles above the entrance of the Wabash. It is navigable 150 miles; and near it are a number of salt springs, and three ponds of bitumen. Quantities of nitre are found in the caves on its banks, and many of the settlers make gunpowder.

GREENE, an interior county of Kentucky, intersected by the above river; it contains about 450 square miles of surface. Population, 14,212. Greensbury, the principal town, on the N. bank of Green River, is 70 miles S.S. W. of Frankfort.

There are several other counties of the same name, so called probably in commemoration of Major-general Greene, who died in 1786; viz.:—

GREENHITH, a hamlet in the parish of Swanscombe, in Kent, 3 miles E. by N. of Dartford. In this vicinity is a beautiful seat, once belonging to the Dartford nuns. Here are very extensive chalk-pits, the chalk from which forms a considerable branch of commerce, and the flints furnish a chief ingredient of the Staffordshire ware; vast quantities also of them are exported to China for a similar use.

GREENLAND, an extensive region stretching towards the north pole, which, whether continental or insular, is regarded as belonging to North America. This country was discovered in the tenth century, by the Norwegians, who planted a colony on the south-western coast; and the intercourse between this colony and Denmark was continued till the beginning of the 15th century; in that century, by the gradual increase of the arctic ice, the colony became completely imprisoned by the Frozen Ocean; while on the west a range of mountains and plains, covered with perpetual ice, precluded all access. This settlement contained several churches and monasteries, and is said to have extended about 200 miles, in the south-east extremity. They have been sought for without success on the east coast, which has thus been first explored by Captain Grant, who found the few inhabitants of this inclement region of a class somewhat superior to those on the west coast. It is, therefore, probable that the lost colonies occupied the same site as the present. In more recent times the W. coast, washed by the waters of Davis' Straits and Baffin's Bay, was chiefly explored by Davis and other English navigators; but there was no attempt to settle a colony. In 1721, a Norwegian clergyman, named Egede, proceeded to this dreary country, where he continued till 1735.

preaching to the natives; and his benevolent example has since been followed. The Danish and Moravian settlements are in the S. W. extremity. Dr. Kane, an enterprising American, in 1853-5, determined that the north coast of Greenland extends to lat. 79. 20, and is separated from Washington land by the largest glacier in the world. Its interior is probably a solid mass of ice, protruding its edges into the sea. The Esquimaux of America resemble the Greenlanders in their aspect, dress, and language. The quadrupeds are deer, bears, foxes, hares, and some dogs resembling wolves. Cape Farewell, the S. W. point, is in long. 42. 42. W., lat. 59. 38. N.

GREENLAW, a town of Scotland, capital of Berwickshire. Though a small place, here are the remains of two religious houses. It is seated on the Blackadder; 8 miles S. W. of Dunse, and 36 S. E. of Edinburgh.

GREENOCK, a chief seaport of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, at the mouth of the Clyde, with a fort for the defence of the harbour. Here are several dry docks, and the building and rigging of ships is much followed. It has a great trade; and the fisheries for herrings are carried on to a great extent. It is 24 miles W. by N. of Glasgow, to which there is a railway.

GREENPORT, a village and harbour in New York, near the N. E. end of Long Island. The harbour will admit the largest ships, and several whale ships are owned here. The Long Island railroad, 93 miles from Brooklyn, will terminate here.

GREENSTED, a village in Essex, one mile W. of Ongar, remarkable for its little church, (built prior to the Conquest,) the walls of which are formed of the trunks of trees.

GREENSVILLE, a frontier county of Virginia; bounded on the N. by the great Nottoway River, and S. by North Carolina; superficies about 300 square miles. Pop. 6366. Hicksford, the chief town, is 69 m. S. of Richmond.

GREENUP, a frontier county, the extreme N. E. point of Kentucky, with a superficies of about 800 square miles. Greensboro' is the chief town. Pop. 6927.

GREENVILLE, a frontier county or district at the N. W. extremity of South Carolina; superficies about 600 square miles. The chief town, of the same name, in the centre of the county, is 25 miles W. N. W. of Columbia. Population, 17, 839.

There are several towns of the same name in different parts of the United States.

GREENWICH, formerly a distinct town, but now an appendage to the British metropolis. It is seated in the county of Kent, on the S. bank of the Thames, 5 miles below London Bridge. It is celebrated for its hospital for wounded and decayed seamen of the national marine, which is one of the finest architectural edifices in the world. It has been built at separate times; the first erection, the N. W. wing, having been raised by Charles II. as a palace on the site of the old palace of Placentia, which had been a favourite residence of the kings and queens of England since the time of Henry IV. Edward VI. died here, and Henry VIII., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth were born here. In 1649, in the reign of William and Mary, it was applied to its present purpose, and a new building was erected by Sir Christopher Wren, who nobly superintended the work without any emolument. Since this time it has been gradually enlarged in proportion to the increasing number of pensioners. The buildings now consist of four distinct piles, two along the bank of the river, with a noble terrace in front, 860 feet in length; between these two piles is a lawn 270 feet wide; the two other piles are built behind, projecting into the square or lawn, so as to form a quadrangle with an opening in the centre through which is seen a neat square building, which is appropriated as a "naval asylum," or school for the children of non-commissioned officers of the navy and seamen; it was begun in the reign of James I., and finished by Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I., under the superintendance of Inigo Jones; it was designated the "House of Delight." A beautiful colonnade runs along the buildings facing the quadrangle; so that altogether the magnificence of the edifice, and the laudable purpose for which it is intended, make it in every way entitled to the celebrity it has acquired. In 1799, the chapel, dining-hall, and eight wards, were destroyed by fire; but the whole were immediately rebuilt. On an eminence stands the royal observatory, built on the site of the ancient castle; it is from this spot the English reckon their longitude. Immediately contiguous is a spacious park, most beautifully undulated, and planted with trees, affording the most delightful promenades and interesting prospects. Here is a college, called the Duke of Norfolk College, for the maintenance of 20 decayed housekeepers; and another called Queen Elizabeth College. The town is irregularly built, and, with the exception of the church, which is a noble structure, and the hospital, has nothing to recommend it to particular notice. There is a railroad between this place and London Bridge. It is a borough, and returns two members to parliament. The observatory is in the lat. of 51. 29. N. See BLACKHEATH and DEPTFORD.

GREENWICH, a seaport of Rhode Island, chief town in Kent county. It is noted for making good cider, and carries on the fisheries to advantage. It stands on the N. W. part of Narraganset Bay; sixteen miles S. of Providence.

There are ten or twelve other towns in different parts of the United States of North America named Greenwich, but none merit any particular notice.

GRIEFFEN, a town of Switzerland, on a small lake of its name; 9 miles E. S. E. of Zurich.

GREIFFENBERG, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark, on the river Sernitz; 13 miles S.S.E. of Prenzlau, and 48 N.N.E. of Berlin.

GREIFFENBERG, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Jauer, with a fortress on a mountain. It is celebrated for its linen manufactures, and seated on the Queiss; 23 miles W.S.W. of Lignitz.

GREIFFENHAGEN, a town of Further Pomerania, on the river Oder; 12 m. S. of Stettin.

GREIFSWALDE. See GRIFSWALDE.

GREIN, a town of Austria, on the Danube; 23 miles E. of Lintz.

GREITZ. See GRAITZ.

GRENADA, an island in the West Indies, the last of the Windward Carribees, and 30 leagues N.W. of Tobago. It is 20 miles long, and 13 broad, finely wooded, and the soil suited to produce sugar, tobacco, and indigo. It was taken from the French in 1762, confirmed to the English in 1763, taken by the French in 1779, and restored to the English in 1783. In 1795 the French landed some troops, and caused an insurrection in this island, which was not finally quelled till June 1796. St. George is the capital.

GRÉNADE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne; seated at the junction of the Save with the Garonne; 17 miles N.W. of Toulonse. Pop. 3925.

GRÉNADILLAS, or GRÉNADINES, a cluster of islands in the West Indies, dependent on Grenada, and situate between that island and St. Vincent. They are upwards of twenty in number, most of them fertile, and capable of producing cotton, coffee, indigo, and sugar. The most considerable is Carriacou.

GRÉNOBLE, a city of France, capital of the department of Isere, and a bishop's see, with a fortified castle. The leather and gloves that are made here, are highly esteemed. It is seated on the Isere, over which are two bridges to pass into that part called Perriere, a large street on the side of the river. It is the head quarters of the 7th military division, and seat of the Cour-Royale for the departments of the Upper Alps, Drome, and Isere; 300 miles S.S.E. of Paris, 60 from Lyons, and 100 due W. of Turin. Pop. 24,500.

GRÉNA-GREEN, a village of Scotland, in Dumfries-shire, near the mouth of the Esk, and on the borders of Cumberland. Until recently it was famous for the clandestine marriages of fugitive lovers from England, which were usually performed by two illiterate and drunken mechanics in the village, who had no form in the operation, excepting the entry of the names of the parties in a school boy's copy-book. All their inquiries turned upon the length of the applicant's purse, that they might know how to regulate their demand; any sum, from half-a-crown to 100 guineas, was accepted. It is 10 miles N. of Carlisle. The Glasgow Railway here diverges from the Caledonian Railway.

GREUSSEN, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, on the river Elbe; 15 miles N. of Erfurt.

GRIMAUD, a town of France, in the department of Var; 12 miles S.W. of Frejus.

GRIMBERGEN, or GRUMBERGHIEN, a town of Belgium, in Brabant, with an abbey and a castle; 6 miles N. of Brussels.

GRIMMA, or GRUMMA, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a trade in wool, linen, thread, and flannel; seated on the Mulda; 14 miles S.E. of Leipsic.

GRIMMEK, a town of Hither Pomerania; 16 miles S. of Stralsund.

GRIMSBY, GREAT, a borough in Lincolnshire, with a market on Wednesday. It has a large church, like a cathedral, and a good trade in coal and salt. The harbour, at the mouth of the Humber, has been improved, and in connection with its railways, it will probably rise to importance. It is 35 miles N.E. of Lincoln, and 168 N. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

GRINDENWALD, a village of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern; seated among mountains, at the foot of a celebrated glacier; 5 miles S.E. of Thun.

GRINDON, a village in that part of Durham called Northamshire; 6 miles S.W. of Berwick. To the S. of it, at a place called Grindon Rigg, are four upright stone pillars, funeral monuments of the chieftains slain in a famous victory gained here over the Scots, in 1558, by the earl of Northumberland and his brother.

GRINSTEAD, EAST, a town in Sussex, with a market on Thursday. Here is Sackville College, a large stone building, founded by the duke of Dorset, in 1616, for 24 aged persons of both sexes. It is seated on a hill; 20 miles N. of Lewes, and 29 S. of London.

GRINTON, a mountainous and mineral parish in the North Riding of Yorkshire, comprising the four townships of Grinton, Melbecks, Muker, and Reith; seated near the head waters of the Swale river. Grinton is 8 miles, and Muker about 20 miles, W. of Richmond.

GRIPSWALD, or GRIEFSWALDE, a strong town of Hither Pomerania, with a good harbour and a university. It is seated on the river Rik, which is navigable to the Baltic; 14 miles W. of Wolgast, and 22 S.E. of Stralsund.

GRISONS, a new canton of Switzerland; bounded on the S. by Milan and Venice, E. and N. by Tyrol, and W. by the cantons of Glaris, Uri and Tessin. It formerly included the Valteline, and the counties of Chiavenna and Bormio, now included in the Austrian dominions. The country was formerly divided into three leagues, namely, the Grey League, the League of God's House, and the League of the Ten Jurisdictions; each of them had a distinct internal government, and they were connected as one republic, by an annual diet held alternately at the towns of Chur or Coire, Ilantz, and Devos. But in 1803 the constitution was changed by the French, and the country made an additional canton of Switzerland. The inhabitants, amounting in 1838 to 88,506, of whom 62,000 were Calvinists, and 24,000 were Catholics. The principal subsistence of the peasantry is by breeding oxen, most of which are sent to Milan. The capital is Coire. The Rhine and the Inn both have their source in the Grisons.

GRODNO, a government of Russia, formerly included in the kingdom of Poland. Area about 14,700 square miles. Pop. about 400,000. The climate is damp and foggy, and in its S. part it is marshy. The forests are extensive; and rye, flax, and hemp are its principal productions. Cattle are also reared. Jews are numerous. The principal rivers are the Niemen, Bug, Narew, and Pripec.

GRODNO, a town of Lithuania, capital of the foregoing government. It has the appearance of a decayed town, containing a mixture of wretched hovels, falling houses, and ruined palaces, with magnificent gateways, remains of its ancient splendour. A few habitations in good repair make the contrast more striking. Here is a college and physic garden. In the new palace, built by Augustus III., the diets were sometimes held; particularly the last, in 1793, which was compelled, at the point of the bayonet, to consent to the second partition of Poland; and here, in 1795, Stanislaus III. formally resigned his crown. It is seated partly in a plain, on the river Niemen, and partly on a mountain, 140 miles N.E. of Warsaw. Long. 24. 25. E. lat. 53. 28. N. Pop. about 5000.

GROINDE, a town of Hanover, near which is a monument of stone, erected in memory of a battle fought here in 1421. It is seated on the Weser, 9 miles S. of Hameln.

GROLL, a small town of Holland, in Gelderland. A duty is collected here on all merchandise passing through it for Germany. It is seated on the Sijnk; 20 miles E. by S. of Zutphen.

GRONINGEN, the most N.E. province of Holland; bounded on the E. by East Friesland, W. by Friesland, N. by the German Ocean, and S. by Drenthe. It is divided into two parts, called Groningen and Onehands. The excellency of this country consists in pastures, which feed a great number of large horses.

GROENINGEN, a city of Holland, capital of the province of the same name, with a citadel and a university. It is seated on the rivers Hunse and Aa, and has a communication, by a canal, with a bay of the German Ocean, at the distance of 10 miles, by which large quantities of butter are exported. The inhabitants are computed at 30,500. It is 96 miles N.E. of Amsterdam. Long. 6. 34. E. lat. 53. 13. N.

GROONY, a hamlet, formerly a market town, in the parish of Bathy, in Leicestershire; 5 miles N.W. of Leicester, on the line of the Leicester and Leamington railway. Here is a fine sheet of water, called Grooby Pool, and near it are some traces of a castle, which in 1176 was razed by Henry II., for the part its owner, the Earl of Leicester, had taken in the intrigues of his son.

GROSMONT, a parish in Monmouthshire, once an important borough, with a market on Tuesday; 10 miles N.W. of Monmouth. On an eminence stand the ruins of a castle, surrounded by a dry moat, once the favourite residence of the earls of Lancaster. The church is a fine edifice, in the cathedral form, and, with other traces of buildings, shows the ancient extent and importance of this place.

GROSSA, an island in the Gulf of Venice, near the coast of Dalmatia; twenty-five miles long, and 2 broad. Long. 15. 7. E. lat. 54. 18. N.

GROSSENHAYN, or HAAN, a town of Upper Saxony, in Meissin, with manufactures of cotton and woollen cloths, seated on the Roder; 8 miles N. of Meissin.

GROSSETTO, a town of Tuscany, in the Siennese, with a castle, situate near the sea; 30 miles S.W. of Sienna.

GROTKAU, a town of Silesia, in the district of Neisse. The forests round this town are the joint property of all the inhabitants. It is 16 miles N.N.E. of Neisse, and 30 S. of Breslau.

GROTON, a town of Connecticut, on the E. side of the mouth of the Thames, opposite to New London. Fort Griswold is on the heights, and here is a granite monument to the patriots who defended the place in 1781; 45 miles S.E. of Hartford. Pop. 2963.

GROYNE. See CORUNNA.

GRUNENHAGEN, a town and castle of Hanover. The castle is now in ruins. It is 7 miles S. by W. of Einbeck.

GRUBENHAGEN, a principality of Hanover, at the S. extremity of the circle of Lower Saxony, comprising a portion of the Hartz mountains. The principal towns are Osterode, Grund, Clausthal, Cellarfield, &c.

GRUNBERG, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, where the kings of the Merovingian race, and Charlemagne, held their court. It is 10 miles E. of Giessen.

GRUNBERG, or GRUMBERG, a populous town of Silesia, in the principality of Glogau, surrounded with vineyards. Here is a manufacture of cloth, and a great trade in vinegar and dried fruits. It is 30 miles N.W. of Glogau.

GRUNDE, a town of Hanover, in the mountains of Hartz; 4 miles W. of Clausthal.

GRUNDY, a county of Illinois, in the N.E. part of the state. The capital is not yet established. Also a county in Missouri, in the N. part of the state. Capital, Trenton.

GRUNHAYN, a town of Upper Saxony, in Misnia, with a trade in copper and lead; 16 miles S. by W. of Chemnitz.

GRUNINGEN, a town in the canton of Zurich, Switzerland, with a castle on an elevated rock; 10 miles S.E. of Zurich.

GRUNSTADT, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, county of Leiningen; 22 miles N.N.W. of Spire, and 25 S. of Mentz.

GRUYERES, a town and balliwick of Switzerland, in the canton of Friburg, with a castle on a hill. It has a great trade in cheese, and is 15 miles S.W. of Friburg. Pop. with its hamlets, 940.

GRYFE, a river of Scotland, which rises in the S.W. angle of Renfrewshire, runs over several precipices into the lower country, falling into the Black Cart, near the town of Paisley.

GUADALAXARA, an interior province of Spain, forming the N.W. part of the kingdom of New Castile. Superficies, 1250 square miles, with a population of 126,115.

GUADALAXARA, or GUADALAJARA, (Arabic, Wadd'l-Hajarah, "the river of stones,") a town of New Castile, and the chief town of the foregoing province; on the river Henares, over which is a bridge erected on Roman foundations. Here is the dilapidated palace of the Mendoza family, famous in Spanish annals. An attempt was made here in 1757 to establish a cloth manufacture, but it never succeeded. There is much to interest in the place, but it is now dull and poverty-stricken; 30 miles from Madrid. Pop. about 6700.

GUADALAXARA, a division of Mexico, bounded on the W. by the Pacific Ocean. Superficies, 73,628 square miles. It is intersected by the Santiago river, or Rio Grande.

GUADALAXARA, a town of Mexico, capital of the preceding state. It stands in a rich and extensive plain, on the Rio Grande de Santiago. It covers a great extent of ground, and has a picturesque appearance. Its interior is handsome and well laid out. The city is supplied with water from the Cerro de Col, 3 leagues distant. There are some domestic manufactures carried on, particularly earthenware and leather. There is however, little or no foreign trade since the port of San Blas has been abandoned for those of Guaymas and Mazatlan on the Pacific. It has played an important part in the various revolution troubles of Mexico, of which it may now be considered the second city. In 1803 the population was estimated at 20,000, and is now probably 65,000; 130 miles from the Pacific, and 275 W.N.W. of Mexico. Lat. 21. 9. N. long. 103. 2. W.

GUADALOUPE, a town of Spain, in Estramadura, with a celebrated convent; seated on a rivulet of the same name; 34 miles E. by N. of Truxillo.

GUADALOUPE, one of the Leeward Caribbee

Islands, in the West Indies, between Antigua and Dominica. It is divided into two parts by a strait, called the Salt River. At this place the land on each side is not above four miles broad, and by this strait the sea on the N.W. communicates with that on the S.E. The S.W. part, called Basse-terre, is 35 miles long, and 18 broad; and the N.E., called Grande-terre, is 36 miles long, and 12 broad. The soil is exceedingly good, and well watered near the sea by rivulets which fall from the mountains, and produces large quantities of sugar, cotton, and coffee. On this island is a volcano, called the Mountain of Sulphur; and on its E. side are two mountains, which open into a pit of sulphur: the blacks who sell brimstone fetch it from this pit. The French settled on this island in 1635. It was taken by the English in 1759, but restored in 1763; again taken by the English in 1794, but evacuated the next year. The English again took it in 1810, and, in order to allure the Swedes into the late coalition against France, gave them this island. It was, however, by the consent of Sweden, restored to France in 1814. One of the first acts of the new French republic, was to set free all the slaves in these islands. Basse-terre, at the S.W. extremity of the island, is the capital. Pop. 107,810, including 81,642 freed blacks. Lat. 16. N., 61. 48. W. long.

GUADALQUIVEN, a river of Spain, which rises in the S. part of New Castile, flows through the kingdoms of Jaen, Cordova, and Seville, and enters the Bay of Cadiz at San Lucar, after a course of about 300 miles. It is navigable as far as Seville; some improvements are being made to render it again navigable up to Cordova, as it was formerly.

GUADARRAMA, a town of Spain, in Old Castile. It has a great trade in cheese, and is seated on the Guadarrama; 25 miles N.W. of Madrid.

GUADIANA, a river which rises in New Castile, in Spain, crosses Estremadura into Portugal, and, separating Algarve from Andalusia, enters the Bay of Cadiz at Ayamonte, after a tortuous course of 425 miles.

GUADIX, a town of Spain, in Granada. It is a bishopric, and has a cathedral. It is a Moorish town, and has the ruins of a castle. Pop. 9000. The whole country around the town resembles a sea, whose waves have suddenly been transformed into solid substances; the hillocks rise up into conical and pyramidal shapes. Their marly sides are excavated into caves, the homes of the poor. These localities, once covered with water, have been ploughed by the retiring floods into gullies, by which the whole district is intersected. Guadix is renowned for its dagger-knives.

GUAM, the chief of the Ladrone Islands, in the Pacific Ocean; 100 miles in circumference. The Spaniards had a garrison here; but the inhabitants are almost all natives of the country, and reputed to be skilful in building boats. It abounds with excellent fruit, and has several good harbours. Umata is the capital. Long. 143. 15. E. lat. 13. 10. N.

GUAMANGA, a city of Peru, capital of an interior province of the same name. It is famous for its mines of silver. It is 180 miles E.S.E. of Lima. Long. 74. 5. W. lat. 13. 20. S.

GUANAHANI, or CAT ISLAND, one of the Bahama Islands, the first land of America discovered by Columbus in 1491, and named by him St. Salvador.

GUANARE, an interior town of Columbia, in the republic of Venezuela, seated on a branch of the Apure river; 195 miles S.W. of Caracens, and 130 E. of Merida. Pop. estimated at 12,000.

GUANAXUATO, a small interior province of Mexico, containing only 6878 square miles, but a population of 517,300. It is the most densely populated part of the country, and is considered the most productive mineral district in Mexico. The chief city, of the same name, is seated on the eastern declivity of the Cordilleras, upwards of 6800 feet above the level of the sea, in the lat. of 21. N. and 101. 55. of W. long., giving a mean distance from the city of Mexico of 190 geographical, or 214 British statute miles. Pop. in 1803, about 40,000, exclusive of about 30,000 more employed in, or dependent on, the mines in its immediate vicinity, which had diminished to about 34,000 in 1835.

GUANCAVELICA, an interior province of Peru, E. of the maritime range of the Andes, extending about 190 miles from N. to S. between the lat. of 12. 20. and 14. 30. S., and is about 50 miles in mean breadth; it is thinly populated. The chief city, of the same name, is seated in an elevated glen of the Andes, in the lat. of 13. 5. S. and 74. 35. of W. long.; 170 miles S.E. of Lima.

GUANUCO, a town of Peru, capital of a fruitful district of the same name. It is 172 miles N.N.E. of Lima.

GUARCO. See CAGNETE.

GUARDE, a town of Portugal, in Beira, and a bishop's see. It is strong by nature and art, and has a stately cathedral; 138 miles N.E. of Lisbon.

GUARDAFUI. See GARDEFAN.

GUASTALLA, a fortified town of Italy, capital of a small duchy included in that of Parma, with an ancient decayed castle. It is seated near the river Po, 19 miles N.E. of Parma.

GUASTECA. See PANUCO.

GUATIMALA, or CENTRAL AMERICA, a republic of Central America. It extends from about 8. to 18. N. lat. and between 82. 30. and 94. W. long., and its area from the recent surveys, is 120,000 square miles, nearly equal to that of the United Kingdom, but including the Mosquito shore, (which see.) To the North it has the states of Mexico and Belize, and S.E. New Granada. It is remarkably irregular in its features and configuration. The mountains which traverse it, chiefly volcanic, are from 5000 to 13,000 feet high. The lowlands, on either coast, are remarkably unhealthy. One of its chief features is its lakes; of these Nicaragua is the chief, and is 180 miles long, and nearly 100 broad, and 10 fathoms deep; its only outlet is the river San Juan. The most remarkable lake is that of Atitlan, which is full of crabs. Gold and silver have been produced at Costa Rica, and other parts, and large iron mines are at S. Anna, in Salvador, but they are all now neglected. The Usumasinta is the largest river. It is a most fertile and beautiful country, but we are in great ignorance of its internal economy and resources, from anarchy and revolution. The provinces of this territory formed themselves into an independent republic, which was guaranteed by the other republics of America at the congress held at Panama in 1826. The indigo of Guatemala is the most esteemed of any in the world. Its productions are mahogany, logwood, sugar, hides, indigo, cocoa, and coffee, besides a numerous list of minor articles. The isthmus of Tehuantepec, (which see,) in its western part, is the site of some of the schemes for uniting the Pacific with the Atlantic. The population is vaguely estimated at two millions, or at a million and a half; that is, 125,000 European races; mixed 500,000; and 875,000 Indians. New Guatemala is the capital.

The following exhibits its divisions, and a crude estimate of their inhabitants.

STATES.	POP.	CHIEF TOWNS.
Guatemala	461,000	Guatemala
Quezaltenango	340,000	Quezaltenango
Honduras	350,000	Comayagua
Nicaragua	350,000	Leon
Salvador	300,000	San Vicente
Costa-Rica	151,000	San José
Federal District...	66,000	San Salvador
Total.....	2,000,000

GUATIMALA, NEW, the chief city of the preceding republic, in the lat. of 13. 54. N. and 90. 53. of W. long. It is seated on an undulating plain, 4961 feet above the sea; hence the climate is like that of Italy. The streets are broad, straight, and regular. The public buildings are a university, nine convents, a superb cathedral, and 20 churches, the government offices, and a large hospital. It is well supplied with water by an aqueduct. It is renowned for its religious observances. Pop. including the surrounding districts, about 40,000. A city of this name, now called La Antigua, was first founded in 1524, which suffered greatly from an earthquake, and was afterwards rebuilt; the second city was totally destroyed by a similar cause in 1773, after which the present city was built at some distance from the site of the former one.

GUAYANA. See GUIANA.

GUAYAQUIL, a city, and the chief seaport of the Colombian republic of Ecuador. It is seated on the W. bank of a river falling into a gulf or bay of the same name; about 20 miles from the Pacific Ocean. Guayaquil is the seaport of Quito, from which it is distant about 150 miles S.S.W. The surrounding country produces an abundance of the finest cocoa, of which large quantities are exported to all parts of Europe. Lat. 2. 11. S., W. long. 79. 40. Pop. about 20,000.

GUAYMAS, a seaport town of Mexico, in the state of Sonora, and on the Gulf of California. It has grown up since the revolution, and owes its rise to its magnificent harbour. The town is healthy, though hot; it has a pier, and now engrosses all the trade between Mexico and eastern Asia. Pop. in 1826, 3000. Lat. 27. 50. N. long. 112. 0. W.

GUAYRA, LA, a seaport of Colombia, on the shore of the Caribbean sea, and in the new republic of Venezuela. It is in lat. 10. 37. N. and 66 58. of W. long.; 7 miles N. of the city of Leon de Caraccas, of which it is the seaport; it exports large quantities of cocoa to Europe, and mules and cattle to the West India islands; and, although the harbour is inconvenient, the traffic is considerable. Pop. 600.

GUBEN, a town of Lusatia; capital of a circle of its name, which yields great quantities of excellent red wine. It is seated on the Lubst, near its conflux with the Neisse; 24 miles N.E. of Cobus, and 68 S.E. of Berlin. Pop. 6000.

GUDENSBURG, a town of Germany, in Lower Hesse; 10 miles S.S.W. of Cassel.

GUERANDE, a town of France, in the department of Lower Loire, with a considerable trade in salt. It is 3 miles from the Atlantic, and 40 W. by N. of Nantes. Pop. 7252.

GUERCHE, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine; 20 miles E.S.E. of Rennes. Pop. 3980.

GUERET, a town of France, capital of the department of Creuse. It is seated on the river Creuse; 35 miles N.E. of Limoges, and 190 S. by W. of Paris. Pop. 4014.

GUERNICA, a town of Spain, in Biscay, anciently of great importance in the Basque provinces, as here was held the parliament of the Basque senators, under an ancient oak, which, however, was cut down, and the half of the town burnt by the French republicans, and preachers of universal freedom, in 1808; 30 miles from Bilbao, and 45 from San Sebastian.

GUERNSEY, an island in the English Channel; 35 miles S.W. of Cupe La Hogue, a promontory of the N. coast of France. It formed part of the dukedom of Normandy; but Henry I. of England annexed it to Great Britain, to which it has ever since continued an appendage, although the language, dress, manners, and form of government of the ancient Normans still continue. The island is about 22 miles in circumference, well defended by natural rocks; the surface is considerably varied, generally fertile, and breeds a great number of small cattle. It is divided into 10 parishes. St. Peter-le-Port, on the E. side of the island, in lat. 49. 33. N. and 2. 40. of W. long., is the chief place of the island, containing more than one half of the total population. Being built on the slope of a hill, it looks well from seaward. The harbour is formed by two piers.

GUERNSEY, an interior county in the E. part of Ohio, containing about 650 square miles. It is intersected by Will's Creek, a branch of the Muskingum. The population, which in 1810 was only 3051, has increased to 27,748. Cambridge, the chief town, in the centre of the county, is 85 miles due E. of Columbus.

GUETA, or HUETA, a town of Spain, in New Castile; 52 miles E. by S. of Madrid.

GUGLINGEN, a town of Suabia, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg; situat on the Zabir; 20 miles N. of Stutgard.

GUIANA, or GUAYANA, comprising the whole country between the two great rivers Amazons and Oronoco, extending W. from the Atlantic Ocean, through 16 deg. of long. Prior to the war between England and France, which commenced in 1793, this extensive territory was divided between Portugal, Spain, France, and Holland; the Portuguese claimed the whole country lying N. of the Amazon, to about 1. 40. of N. lat. By a treaty in 1801, a line of demarcation was agreed upon between France and Portugal.

GUIANA, BRITISH, lies between 1. and 8. and 40. N. lat. and between 57. and 61. W. long.; it has a coast-line of more than 400 miles, running S.E. and N.W., extending from the river Corentyn westward, to the mouth of the Oronoco; on the W. and S. its boundaries are not well defined, extensive districts being claimed either by Venezuela, or by Brazil, and some by both. Along the shores there are shallows and muddy banks, stretching from 5 to 15 miles seaward, rendering the approach even of small vessels almost impracticable. The coast is low, and on a level with the sea at high water, from 2 to 8 miles inland; the soil is chiefly an alluvium of blue clay, impregnated with marine and vegetable matter; when drained and defended from the sea by embankments, this soil is very fertile. It is on this tract that the settlements or plantations are situated, as well as up the rivers; some few are considerably inland, chiefly for cutting timber, the country along the streams being generally well wooded. Sugar, coffee, cotton, yams, bananas, maize, &c., are the chief objects of cultivation. The population is estimated at 82,824, negroes; 8076 people of mixed race; 4000 whites; and about 3100 emigrants, since 1829. Georgetown is the capital; which see.

GUIANA, FRENCH, or CAYENNE, extends from the river Oyapoc, which separates it from Brazil, along the coast as far west as the river Marony, for about 200 miles inland, to the Sierra Acaray, but as the situation of that range is very imperfectly known, the inland boundary is not determined; the area is conjectured to be about 20,000 square miles; it may be much greater. The country is chiefly in a wilderness state, except the island of Cayenne, at the mouth of the river of that name, where are the chief plantations of pepper, &c., introduced by the French from the Indian archipelago; there are others on the neighbouring coast, and on the banks of the Organabo. In 1834 the population consisted of not more than 22,000, of whom three-fourths were slaves, since set free by the new French republic. The aborigines cultivate small patches of ground, but gain their subsistence chiefly by fishing and hunting. Cayenne is the capital, on the N. side of the above island of that name, and has a pop. of 5000. It exports the produce of the country.

GUIANA, DUTCH, or SURINAM, extends along the seacoast, between the river Marony on the E., and the river Corentyn on the W. The coast line is about 250 miles; the area of the country is variously estimated at from 38,000 to 50,000 square miles. Along the coast to the distance of 8 to 15 miles inland, the country is flat, and of little elevation above sea-level; the soil is dry, sandy, and salt, but adapted to the growth of cotton. At the back of this, the land rises higher, and beyond 40 miles the region consists of high and rocky soils, chiefly covered with trees. Along the banks of the rivers, where cultivated, the soil is a rich black mould, used for sugar, coffee, tobacco, cotton, and cocoa plantations. The river Surinam is navigable for large ships for about 30 miles from its mouth. The pop. is about 17,000 whites, and about 66,000 negroes and mixed races; the number of maroons (runaway slaves) and Indians is not known. The country was first settled by some Englishmen in 1634, but these settlements were given up to the Dutch in 1667; in 1808 the English took Surinam, but restored it in 1814. The capital is PARAMARIBO; which see.

GUIANA, BRAZILIAN, includes the whole of the Portuguese possessions N. of the Amazon, and W. of the river Yamunda, extending about 900 miles E. and W., and between 4. N. and 4. S. lat. Its W. portion is the basin of the Great Rio Negro, which having its source in the Andes, communicates by one of its branches, the Casiquari, with the Oronoco, and after a course of 1100 miles, it falls into the Amazon. Its waters, perfectly pure, clear, and wholesome, seem as black as ink; hence its name. Three leagues above its mouth is the town of Rio Negro, the seat of government for the province, and the entrepôt for all the exports of the river. It contains a church, and a few government buildings, but is unimportant. There are some other scattered Portuguese settlements of Portuguese Indians. Another of its great rivers is the Yapura, one of the largest affluents of the Amazon. The N. limits of the province have been the subject of much dispute. The resources, such as great rivers, harbours, fertile soils, and valuable forests and fisheries of this province, are more than ample for the population and power of a great empire. Yet, at the present day, this vast region may be considered as absolutely a wilderness, and, as far as the maintenance of the human race is concerned, scarcely superior to one great waste. The climate is very sultry and uniform, and there is an enormous amount of rain; yet it is considered generally healthy. Lat. 1. 21. S. long. 48. 28. W.

GUIANA, SPANISH, now included within the republic of Venezuela, has, for its boundaries, Brazil at San José de Maracitanos to the S., New Granada, and the province of Varinas to the W., those of Cumana, Barcelona, and Caraccus on the N., and the British, French, and Dutch Guiana to the E. According to Spanish historians, Juan Corno was the first European who sailed up the Oronoco in 1531; Sir Walter Raleigh, and Robert Dudley, visited it afterwards. In 1586, Don Antonio Berre founded a town, which he called San Tomé; this was in 1764 removed to the present Bolivar; which see. The country is now covered with herds of horses, mules, and asses, the offspring of what have been brought over from Europe. Guiana is by far the most fertile part of Venezuela, but there is very little cultivation; some sugar, cotton, and tobacco are grown. It is very thinly inhabited; the pop. being 20,149, but a little more than two people to the square league. Spanish Guiana formerly comprised the coast from the river Maroni to the delta of the Oronoco, and all the country W. of Dutch and French. Portuguese Guiana now forms part of the republic of Brazil.

GUIENNE, a late province of France, 220 miles long and 85 broad, on the S.W. coast, of which Bordeaux was the capital. It now forms the departments of Gironde, Lot and Garonne, Dordogne, Lot, and Aveyron.

GUILDFORD, a borough in Surrey, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Wey, on the side of a hill, and had a castle and a palace now in ruins; here is also part of a monastery, which is still occupied. The summer assizes are alternately held here and at Croydon; but the election of members for the county is always held here. It is a well built town, with two churches, and an elegant town-hall. The Wey is navigable to the Thames, and the trade in timber and corn is considerable. It is 23 miles W.S.W. of Croydon, and 29 S.W. of London, to which there is a railway. It returns two members to parliament.

GUILFORD, an interior county of North Carolina, a square of about 25 miles each way: it is well irrigated by the head waters of Cape Fear river, and contains a population of 19,175. Martinville, the chief town, is 70 miles W.N.W. of Raleigh.

GUILFORD, a town of Connecticut, in New-haven county; situate on a bay in Long Island Sound; 17 miles E. by S. of New-haven.

GUILLAG, or GAILLAG, a town of France, seated on the N. bank of the river Tarn, in the department of Tarn: it is the seat of a prefect. Pop. 7310. It is 35 miles N.E. of Toulouse, and 15 W. by S. of Alby.

GUIMARAENS, a town of Portugal, in Entre-Douro-e-Minho, which has formerly been the residence of its kings. It is divided into the Old and New town; the former situate on an eminence, surrounded by walls. Here is a manufacture of linen, in high estimation. The public buildings are magnificent, and the collegiate church is said to be founded on the ruins of a temple of Ceres. It is 10 miles S.E. of Braga, and 25 N.E. of Oporto.

GUINEA, UPPER, an extensive region of North Africa, comprising about 1500 miles of seacoast, from Cape Mesurado, in the lat. of 6. 26. N. and 10. 30. of W. long., to the Calabar river, in 4. 10. N. and 6. 42. of E. long., and from thence S. to the equator. Of the interior parts of this country, either N. or S., very little is known. The coast of Upper Guinea, from Cape Mesurado to Cape Palmas, a range of 240 miles, is called the Grain Coast, from the vast quantity of grains of paradise, or Guinea pepper, which it was found to produce, on first being visited by Europeans; further E., for upwards of 200 miles, is called the Tooth or Ivory Coast, from the large quantity of fine elephants' teeth which are brought to its markets; eastward of the Ivory Coast, to the meridional line, is called the Gold Coast, from the gold dust which is found in its rivers; and eastward of the meridional line is called the Slave Coast, from the extensive traffic in slaves, which was formerly carried on from thence by the English, Spaniards, French, and Americans, to the West Indies and America. This extensive tract of territory is occupied by various tribes and communities of negroes; the most numerous are the Fantees, who occupy the coast from Cape Mesurado to the meridional line. From a long continued intercourse with Europeans, the Fantees have acquired strong trading habits, and among them most of the trading nations of Europe have formed settlements, protected by forts. In the rear of the Fantees are the Ashantees, who, although they appear to be one people, live in continued hostility with each other. North of the Ashantees is a tribe called the Chambas, who are represented as an amiable and industrious people, diligent in the pursuit of agriculture; and it was from this peaceful and social occupation, from which the Ashantees were wont to drag the people to the coast as slaves, when that traffic was carried on by the English; and the cessation of this traffic seems to be the cause of the revenge of the Ashantees, who acted as robbers and drovers to the inhabitants on the coast, their enmity being extended to the English, whom they regard as the cause of the cessation; and in 1823, and 1826, they waged, for a time, successful war against the discipline and skill of the British arms. The principal towns, or trading stations, on this part of the coast, westward of the meridional line, are Cape Coast castle, Annamaboe, and Acoeah: eastward of the meridional line is the kingdom of Dahomey, the principal town of which, on the coast is Griwee, and in the interior Abomey, distant about 90 miles. The people of Dahomey are represented as fine looking, and industrious, their fields being productive in maize, legumes, and yams, and their pastures well stocked with sheep, goats, and cattle. Great ravages are frequently committed among them by leopards and hyenas, whilst the termites, or white ant, insidiously intrude, in such vast numbers into the habitations of the people, as to commit the most destructive ravages, before resistance can be applied; there have been instances of their devouring an ox in a single night; and persons debilitated by disease are liable to be attacked by them. Another remarkable animal of Dahomey is a bat of enormous size, which suspend themselves in thousands by their claws, to the branches of trees, immediately contiguous to the habitations of the people. Eastward of Dahomey, on the banks of a river, about 25 miles from the sea, is the town of Ardrah, with a population of from 7000 to 10,000, which seems an independent, or free town, under the protection of the Hios, or Eyos, a powerful and numerous people, whose country extends 180 to 300 miles into the interior. The country around Ardrah is represented as exceedingly beautiful, and productive in every variety of tropical vegetation; further E. is the town of Lagos; the country to the northward of which is inhabited by the Jaboos, a very industrious people, who manufacture great quantities of cotton cloth, and whose country is well cultivated, and rich in all the products of agriculture; E. of the Jaboos is the kingdom of Benin, supposed to be very extensive: the capital, of the same name, is about 40 miles from the coast, the seaport being Gatto; further E., extending to the 10th degree of longitude, near the kingdom of Warri, and Old and New Calabar. It was from this part of the coast from whence the most active slave trade was carried on by the English, a people from the interior, called the Eboes or Heebos, being the principal victims, and the town of Bonny the principal market; since the abandonment of this traffic in slaves by the English, the inhabitants of this coast have directed their attention to agriculture and commerce, and now export large quantities of palm oil, ivory, and dye-woods. From Old Calabar the coast extends to the S. which is commonly called Lower Guinea, comprising the kingdoms of Biafra, Calbonga, Gabon, Lopez, Malemba, Loango, Congo, Benguela, &c.: it is from this part of the coast from whence the Brazilians still continue to draw 30,000 or 40,000 slaves annually. Malemba, in the lat. of 5. 24. S. and 12. 20. of E. long. is represented as having a very salubrious climate, and as affording the most favourable spot on the whole western coast of Africa for the residence of Europeans. Off this coast, N. of the equator, are the islands of Fernando Po, Princes, and St. Thomas; which also afford favourable situations from whence to dispense the blessings of civilization and social order.

GUINEA, NEW, or PAPUA, an island of the South Pacific Ocean, to the N. of New Holland, from which it is separated by Endeavour Strait: it is next in size to New Holland, extending S.E. from the equator to 12. S. lat., and from 131. to 153. E. long., a length of more than 1200 miles, by a medial breadth of perhaps 300; the coasts of the eastern part having been but recently investigated. The northern part is said to have been discovered by the Spaniards, in 1528, who had sailed from Mexico to explore the Spice Islands. The coasts are generally lofty, and, in the interior, mountain rises above mountain; but the whole appears covered with such luxuriance of wood and herbage, as can scarcely be conceived. The cocon, sago, bread-fruit, and plantain-tree, beside most of the trees, shrubs, and plants common to the islands in the South Pacific Ocean, are found here in great perfection. This island is the chosen residence of the singular birds of paradise, which breed here during the wet monsoon, and, in the dry, migrate in flocks westward, to the smaller islands, particularly Arroo. Here are also elegant parrots, and pigeons that almost equal a turkey in size. The inhabitants of the northern part are called Papuas; whence the name of the country. They seem to have the true Malay complexion and features, but are in general of horrible appearance, and great ferocity. Their language and habitations resemble those of Borneo, &c. On the W. the women seem the most industrious in making mats and pots of clay, which they afterwards burn with dry grass or brushwood; and they even wield the axe, while the men are indolent, or engaged in the chase of wild hogs. In the interior is a race called Arafouras, who live in trees, which they ascend by a notched pole, drawing it after them, to prevent surprise. On this extensive territory, so favoured by nature, there is no European settlement. The chief commerce is with the Malays and Chinese, from whom they purchase blue and red cloth, axes, knives, and other instruments. Their returns are ambergris, tortoise-shell, small pearls, birds of paradise, and other birds, which the Papuans dry with great skill. Some slaves are also exported, probably captives taken in intestine wars.

GUINGAMP, a town of France, in the department of Côtes du Nord; seated on the Trieu; 18 miles S. of Treguier, and 23 W. by N. of St. Brieux. Pop. in 1836, 6466.

GUIPUZCOA, a district of Spain, forming the N.W. part of Biscay; comprising a superficies of 52 square leagues. Pop. 104,491. See BASQUE PROVINCES. St. Sebastian was, but Tolosa has been made the capital.

GUISBOROUGH, or GUILDSBOROUGH, a town in North Yorkshire, with a market on Monday. It is celebrated for being the first place where alum was made, as also for its once fine abbey. It is twenty-two miles N.W. of Whitby.

GUISE, a town of France, in the department of Aisne, with a castle; seated on the Oise; 18 miles E. of St. Quentin, and 95 N.E. of Paris.

GUJERAT. See GUZERAT.

GULVAL, a parish in Cornwall, 1½ miles from Penzance. Here is a spring, called Galfwell, which was superstitiously supposed to give information about the absent friends of those who inquired of it.

GUMBINNEN, a town of Prussia, capital of a government of the same name in Lithuania. It has manufactures of cloth, and is seated on the Pissa, which falls into the Pregel; 75 miles E. by S. of Königsberg. The superficies of the government of Gumbinnen comprises upwards of 6000 square miles, with a population of about 350,000. Population of the town about 6000.

GUMURGINIA, a populous town of European Turkey, in Rumelia, near the seacoast; 190 miles due W. of Constantinople.

GUNDELFINGEN, a town of Bavaria, situated on the Brenz, near the Danube; 17 miles W.S.W. of Donawert.

GUNDEVANA, a large province of Hindostan in the Deccan, comprising the N. E. portion of the table land of Central India, and chiefly included in the dominions of the Rajah of Berar, and in the S.W. part of the province of Bengal. A large proportion of it is mountainous, and the Nerbudda, Mahanuddy, and other large rivers rise in it. It is unhealthy, and thinly inhabited by an aboriginal and peculiar race, the Gonds. The chief towns are Nagpoor, Sumbhulpoor, Deoghur, &c.

GUNTOOR, a district of Hindostan, formerly the most southern of the circars, intersected by the river Kistnah, on the western coast of the Bay of Bengal. The chief town, of the same name, is seated S. of the Kistnah; 45 miles W. by N. from Masulipatam. See CIRCARS.

GUNTZBURG, a town of Suabia, with a castle. It stands on the river Guntz, near its conflux with the Danube; 6 miles W. of Burgau, and 14 E. of Ulm.

GUNZENHAUSEN, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach; seated on the Altmühl, near a forest; 16 miles S.S.E. of Anspach.

GUGAU, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Glogau, with good cloth manufactures, and a great trade in corn. In 1759 it was reduced to ashes by the Russians. It stands on an eminence, by the river Bartel; 19 miles E. of Glogau.

GUNCK, a town of Germany, in Carinthia, and lately a bishop's see; seated on the river Gurek; 20 miles N. by W. of Clagenfurt.

GUNCKFIELD, a town of Germany, in Carinthia, with a castle on a hill; situate on the Save; 28 miles S. E. of Cilly.

GURISTAN. See GEORGIA.

GURIEF, or GURIEV, a town of Russia, in the government of Astracan, with a good harbour; seated near the Caspian sea, between the mouths of the Ural; 210 miles E. by N. of Astracan. Long. 51. 56. lat. 47. 37. N.

GURRAH, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Allahabad; situate near the river Nerbuddah; 190 miles S.S.W. of Allahabad. Long. 80. 23. E. lat. 23. 9. N.

GURRUMCONDA, a town of Hindostan, lately subject to the regent of Mysore, but ceded by the Nizam to the British, in 1799. It is 73 miles N.E. of Bangalore, and 112 W.N.W. of Madras. Long. 78. 36. E. lat. 13. 47. N.

GUSTROW, a city of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. The chief courts of judicature for the duchy are held here; and it has an elegant ducal palace. It is situate on the Nebel; 29 miles E.N.E. of Schwerin. Long. 12. 13. E. lat. 53. 47. N.

GUTHRIE, a village of Forfarshire, at the junction of the Aberdeen and Forfar Railway; 50 m. from Aberdeen, 7 from Forfar.

GUY'S-CLIFF, in the parish of Loek-Wootton, Warwickshire. Here Guy, Earl of Warwick retired and ended his life, in a secluded cave hewn out by his own hands. In the reign of Henry VI. the then Earl of Warwick, founded a chantry for the celebration of masses for the repose of Guy and his Countess, which still remains; in it is a colossal statue of Guy, 9 feet in height. It a most romantic spot, and well adapted for lonely contemplation.

GUZERAT, an extensive province of Hindostan, which is a peninsula, 200 miles long and 140 broad, formed by the Arabian sea and the gulfs of Cambay and Cutch. The W. part is mountainous and woody, and inhabited by a wild hardy race, governed by rajahs of their own; but the largest and finest part is included within the extensive empire of the Mahrattas. Ahmedabad is the capital.

GWALION, a fortress of Hindostan, in a district of the same name, in the province of Agra, situated on a rock about 4 miles in length, but narrow, and nearly flat on the top, with sides almost perpendicular, from 200 to 300 feet above the surrounding plain. The rampart conforms to the edge of the precipice all round; and the only entrance is by steps running up the side of the rock, defended on the side next the country by a wall and bastions. The area within is full of noble buildings, reservoirs of water, wells, and cultivated land; so that it is a little district within itself. At the N.W. foot of a mountain is the town, which is well built. This fortress is considered as the Gibraltar of the east; but in 1780 Major Popham took it by an unexpected nocturnal escalade, and in 1804 it capitulated after a practicable breach was made through its walls by Colonel Henry White. It was afterwards given up to the Mahrattas by Lord Cornwallis. On June 14, 1857, the sepoys mutinied and murdered several officers. Scindia, the Maharajah, behaved with admirable zeal and good faith, and in June, 1858, the fortress was gallantly stormed by the British troops under Sir H. Rose, and Scindia was restored to his throne. It is 80 miles S. of Agra. Long. 78. 28. E., lat. 26. 15. N.

GWENNAP, a parish in Cornwall, 3 miles E.S.E. of Reduth. Here are several very extensive mines of tin, copper, and silver.

parish of Walley, in Lancashire; 2 miles S.W. of Burnley, near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. It has extensive mines and quarries of coal, stone, slate, &c.; and is becoming a place of considerable manufactures in cotton, woollens, and calico.

HAUENSIAM, a county in the N.E. part of the state of Georgia, containing 760 square miles. Capital, Clarksville. Pop. in 1840, 7961.

HACENY, a parish in Lincolnshire, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. of Grantham. Near here are extensive remains of ancient buildings, tessellated pavements, and other vestiges of a fixed Roman station, which were discovered in 1818.

HACHA. See RIO DE LA HACHA.

HACHENBURG, a town of Germany, in the county of Sayn, with a castle; 20 miles N.N.E. of Coblenz.

HACKETSTOWN, a town of New Jersey, in Sussex county; seated on the Musconunk; 22 miles W. of Morristown.

HACKENSACK, a town of New Jersey, chief of Bergen county, with a Dutch and episcopal church, and a flourishing academy. It is situated on a river of the same name; 20 miles N.W. of New York.

HACKNEY, a village and parish in Middlesex, an appendage to the metropolis; 2 miles N.E. of Shoreditch church. It has several hamlets, the principal of which are Upper and Lower Clapton, on the N.; Dalston, Shacklewell, and Kingsland, on the W.; and Homerton, on the E. It has a handsome modern church, begun in 1792, and a chapel or enclosure erected in 1810. The term Hackney Coaches was derived from the circumstance of this village being the first near the metropolis, that was accommodated with carriages of that description. It has an asylum for lunatics. St. John's palace, an ancient edifice in Well Street, is said to have been the residence of the prior of the order of St. John of Jerusalem. In this parish, S. of Lea Bridge, are the Temple Mills, so called from having formerly belonged to the Knights Templars.

HADDAM, a town of Connecticut, in Middlesex county, on the E. side of Connecticut river; 18 miles N. by E. of Saybrook.

HADDINGTON, a royal borough of Scotland, capital of the county of the same name, on the Tyne; 17 miles E. of Edinburgh, and the first stage on the road to London. It consists of four principal streets, which intersect each other at nearly right angles; it has a considerable manufacture of coarse woollen cloth. Part of a monastery here is occupied as a parish church, which is a large and venerable building. It has a town-house and county-hall; there are also two bridges over the Tyne. The site of the ancient abbey of Haddington is about a mile E. of the town; it was founded in 1178. In conjunction with Dunbar, &c., it sends a member to parliament. It has a branch to the Edinburgh & London Railway. Here John Knox was born.

HADDINGTONSHIRE, or EAST LOTHIAN, of which the preceding is the capital, a county of Scotland, 25 miles long, and 15 where broadest; bounded on the W. by Edinburghshire, N. by the Frith of Forth, E. by the German Ocean, and S. by Berwickshire, and comprises an extent of about 297 square miles. It is divided into 24 parishes. The soil is in many places doubly productive; rich crops are raised on the surface, and mines of coal are inexhaustible. The southern part is mountainous, comprehending the N. side of Lammermuir hills; but these high grounds feed many sheep. It is intersected by numerous streams, but the principal river is the Tyne. The chief towns are the three royal burghs of Haddington, North Berwick, and Dunbar. It sends one member to parliament.

HADDERSLEEN, a town of Denmark, in Sleswick, with a citadel, on a small island, in a narrow bay of the Baltic; 30 miles E. by S. of Ripen.

HADIT, or HADICE, a town of Syria, on the Euphrates; 115 miles W. of Bagdad.

HADLEY, or HADLEIGH, a town of Suffolk, with a market on Monday. It is seated on the Bret; 20 miles S.E. of Bury, and 64 N.E. of London.

HADLEY-MONKEN, a parish in Middlesex, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile N. of Chipping-Barnet. On the top of the church steeple, is one of the very few old beacon fire-pans which are still in existence. At a spot where the road divides, is a column in commemoration of a battle fought here in 1471, between the houses of York and Lancaster.

HADRAMAUT, a province of Arabia Felix, on the sea-coast, between Yemen on the W. and Oman on the E. Some parts are dry and desert, others are extremely fertile, with well watered valleys. The chief products are frankincense, gum-arabic, dragon's-blood, myrrh, and aloes. Shibam is the capital.

HAERLEBECKE, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders, on the Lys; 23 miles S.W. of Ghent, on the road to Courtray, from which it is distant 3 miles. Pop. about 3000.

HAERLEM, a town of the state of New York, in a plain on the Haerlem river, and traversed by a railroad. Numerous conveyances also constantly ply between it and New York; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant.

HAFF, a lake or bay of Prussia, in Pomerania, divided into Great and Little; at the mouth of the Oder, between which are the Baltic are situated the islands of Usedom and Wallen. It is 36 miles in length, and its greatest breadth 9 miles.

HAFOD, a township in Cardiganshire, 14 miles S.E. of Aberystwith. In the vicinity is the Devil's Bridge, over which is thrown a more modern arch, both surmounting a profound chasm, whose sides are almost perpendicular, and covered with trees; through the bottom the river Mvach pours its roaring stream.

HAGARTSTOWN. See ELIZABETHTOWN.
HAGEN, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Mark. It has manufactures of cloth, and stands on the Volme; 13 miles S. of Dortmund.

HAGETMAN, a town of France, in the department of Landes; 18 miles S. of Mont de Marsan, in the vicinity of which are some silver mines. Pop. about 2350.

HAGIAN, a town of Arabia Deserta; 160 miles N. by W. of Medina.

HAGUE, THE, a town of Holland, (which is the usual residence of the king and court,) province of S. Holland, which may compare with the handsomest cities in Europe, in the magnificence of its palaces, the beauty of its streets, the pleasantness of its situation, and the politeness of its inhabitants. It is seated 2 miles from the sea, and there is a pavement across the sand hills, with trees on each side, which leads to Scheveling on the seashore. There are 14 churches, and some charitable institutions. The castle of Ryswick, from which the treaty known by that name received its appellation, is about a mile and a half S.E. of the town. It was, with Brussels, the alternate seat of government previous to the Belgic revolution, and has since been the residence of the king of Holland. It suffered greatly by the revolution under Bonaparte, but the inhabitants threw off the French yoke in 1813. It is 30 miles S.W. of Amsterdam, and 7 S. by W. of Leyden. Pop. 58,000.

HAGUENAU, a fortified town of France, in the department of Lower Rhine, with a citadel; seated on the Motter; 15 miles N. of Strasburg. There are manufactures of tobacco, madder, and earthenware. Pop. 8000.

HÄIDERABAD. See HYDERABAD.

HAILSHAM, a town in Sussex, 59 miles from London. Here are the ruins of Michaelham Priory.

HAIMBURG, a town of Austria, with a castle on a mountain, near the S. bank of the Danube; 27 miles E. by S. of Vienna. Pop. about 2700.

HAINA, or IAINA, a river of St. Domingo, which falls into a bay of the same name; 12 miles W. of St. Domingo.

HAI-NAN, an island in the China sea, to the N. of the Gulf of Tonquin, and to the S.W. of the province of Quangtong, from which it is 12 miles distant. It is 400 miles in circumference. The soil of the N. part is level; but in the S. and E. are mountains, among which are valleys that produce two crops of rice every year. There are mines of gold and lapis lazuli, which last is carried to Canton, to paint the porcelain. There are also several kinds of woods, the most valuable of which is that called by the natives hoali, and by Europeans rose or violet wood. It produces the same fruits as China, beside sugar, tobacco, cotton, and indigo.

HAINAULT, a province of Belgium; bounded on the N.E. by Brabant, N.W. by Flanders,

S.W. by France, and E. by the territories of Liege and Namur; it comprises an extent of 1700 square miles, and is intersected by the Scheldt, the Sambre, and the Haine. Its mineral productions are considerable, and there are several manufactures. The chief towns are Tournay, Mons, and Charleroi. It was formerly divided into Austrian and French Hainault, and in 1814 was ceded by Austria to the Netherlands; in 1815 it received an accession of Beaumont, Merbe, Le Chateau, and Dour, formerly belonging to French Hainault.

HAJOSI, a town of Hungary, in Cumania Minor; 65 miles S. by E. of Pest.

HAIYPOOR, the chief town of the district of the same name; seated on the N.E. bank of the Ganges, at its confluence with the Guxduck.

HAKODADI, a town of Yesso Island, Japan, on the straits of Sangar. It has many large temples, Sintoo and Buddhist; the streets are regular, and the houses of one story, built of wood. It is an open port under the recent treaty.

HALBERSTADT, a town of Prussia, in Lower Saxony; capital of a principality of the same name, which was formerly a bishopric. The cathedral is a superb structure. It is seated on the Hotheim; 32 miles S.E. of Brunswick, on the road to Leipsic. Pop. 17,000.

HALDENLEBEN, New, a town of Prussia, in Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, on the river Ohra; 14 miles N.N.W. of Magdeburg.

HALDENSTEIN, a town of Switzerland, in the country of Grisons; seated near the Rhine; 4 miles N. of Coire.

HALEN, a town of Belgium, in Brabant; seated on the river Geet; 17 miles E.N.E. of Louvain.

HALES, a village in Gloucestershire; 2 miles N.E. of Winchcombe; noted for the remains of its abbey, which formerly was very magnificent, and had great privileges.

HALESOWEN, a town partly in Shropshire, partly in Worcestershire, with a market on Monday, and a manufacture of nails, and pearl and horn buttons. The poet Shenstone was born and buried here; and near it is the Leasowes, in the decoration of which his whole fortune was spent. It is 10 miles N.E. of Kidderminster, and 118 N.W. of London.

HALESWORTH, a town in Suffolk. Market on Tuesday. It has a canal to Southwold, and is seated near the river Blyth; 33 miles N.E. of Ipswich, and 101 of London.

HALIBUT ISLAND, an island in the Pacific Ocean, off the coast of Alaska; so named by Cook on account of the number of fish of that name caught here. It is 7 leagues in circumference, and very low and barren. Long. 164. 15. W. lat. 54. 48. N.

HALIFAX, a borough in the West Riding of Yorkshire. Market on Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It is a very large parish, and the inhabitants are principally employed in the woollen manufacture. This town is the great mart for shalloons and worsted stuffs, in great variety. It has a market-house, called the Piece Hall, and various others for particular goods. The church is a venerable building, and contains a number of ancient monuments. A handsome new church was built in 1798. It is about three quarters of a mile long, and is seated in a lilly country, near a branch of the Calder; 40 miles W.S.W. of York, and 197 N. by W. of London, on the York and Manchester railway.

HALIFAX, a city, and the capital of Nova Scotia. It stands on the W. side of Chebucto bay, which is large enough to shelter 1000 men of war. An island at the mouth of the harbour is so strongly fortified, as to bid defiance to all attack, and the town is protected on the land side by a fort, and several batteries, which render it impregnable. The streets are parallel and at right angles. At the N. extremity is the king's yard, supplied with stores of every kind for the royal navy. The inhabitants are estimated at above 15,000. It is 600 m. N.E. by E. of New York, and 90 E. of Annapolis. Lat. 44. 44. N. long. 63. 36. W.

HALIFAX, an interior county of N. Carolina; bounded on the N.E. by Roanoke; near the northern boundary. The chief town, Halifax, is 103 miles N.E. by E. of Raleigh.

HALIFAX, a county of Virginia, bordering on North Carolina, and bounded on the N.E. by the Roanoke. Its chief town, Bannister, is 143 miles S.W. by W. of Richmond.

Halifax is also the name of several townships of the United States.

HALITZ, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Lemberg, with a castle. Since 1773 it has been included in the new kingdom of Galicia. It is seated on the Dniester; 60 miles S.S.E. of Lemberg.

HALL, a county in the N.E. part of Georgia. Area, 525 square miles. Capital, Gainesville. Pop. in 1840, 7875.

HALLAND, a province of Sweden, on the W. coast of Gotland. It is 60 miles along the coast, but not above 18 in breadth. The country is in general mountainous, with considerable woods of oak and birch. Halmstadt is the capital. Pop. 75,000.

HALLATON, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Thursday; 12 miles E.S.E. of Leicester, and 90 N.N.W. of London.

HALLE, a town of Lower or Prussian Saxony, in the district of Merseberg, with a famous university. It has large salt-works, and manufactures of starch, linen, and flannel. It is seated on both sides of the Saale, over which there are five bridges; 18 miles N.N.W. of Leipsic, and 46 S.S.E. of Magdeburg. Pop. 25,000.

HALLE, a town of Suabia, noted for its salt-pits, and the famous protestant league concluded here in 1610. It is seated on the Kocher, among rocks and mountains; 32 miles N.E. of Stuttgart.

HALLE, a town of Germany, in Tyrol, famous for its salt-mine; seated on the Inn; 6 miles E.N.E. of Inspruck.

HALLE, a town of the Netherlands, in Hainault; seated on the Senne; 10 miles S.S.W. of Brussels.

HALLEIN, a town of Bavaria, in the duchy of Salzburg; seated on the Salza, among mountains that abound in mines of salt; 8 miles S. by E. of Salzburg.

HALLOWELL, a pleasantly situated town of Maine, in Kennebec county, on the W. side of Kennebec river. The houses are neatly and commandingly built. Granite is extensively worked and exported; and vessels of 150 tons come to its wharves; 2 miles S. of Augusta. Pop. in 1840, 4654.

HALMSTADT, a seaport of Sweden, capital of Halland. Here are flourishing woollen manufactures, and a profitable salmon fishery. It stands at the mouth of the Nissa, on a bay of the Cattegat; 82 miles S.S.E. of Gothenburg. Long. 12. 52. E. lat. 56. 40. N.

HALSALL, a parish in Lancashire. In this parish is a large morass, called Halsall Mere, containing a bituminous turf.

HALSTEAD, a town in Essex, with a market on Friday; seated on the side of a hill, on the river Colne; 15 miles N. of Chelmsford, and 46 N.E. of London.

HALTEREN, a town of Westphalia, in the principality of Munster; seated on the Lippe; 22 miles S.W. of Munster.

HALTON, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Saturday. It has a stately castle, belonging to the duchy of Lancaster, which maintained a large jurisdiction round it, by the name of Haltou Fee; but all that remains is now a prison. It is near the Mersoy; 13 miles N.E. of Chester, and 195 N.N.W. of London.

HALTWHISTLE, a town of Northumberland, with a market on Thursday; seated on a hill on the S. branch of the Tyne, near the Newcastle and Carlisle railway; 35 miles W. of Newcastle, and 315 N. by W. of London.

HAM, a strong town of Westphalia, capital of the county of Mark. It is a place of good trade, and has extensive bleaching-grounds. In 1761 the French were defeated near this place by the troops of Brunswick. It is seated on the Lippe; 20 miles W. of Lipstadt. Long. 7. 57. E. lat. 51. 40. N.

HAM, WEST, a village and parish of England, in the county of Essex, on the river Lea; 5 miles from London.

HAM, a town of France, in the department of Somme, with a strong castle, now used as a state prison, seated on the Somme; 70 miles N.N.E. of Paris.

HAMADAN. See AMADAN.

HAMAH, a town of Syria, the residence of the scheik, with the title of emir. The best houses, the mosques, and the castle, are built of black and white stones. The river Aaszi, formerly called Orontes, runs close by the castle, and fills its ditches, which are cut deep into the solid rock. The inhabitants have a trade in linen of their own manufacture. It is seated among hills; 78 miles S.S.W. of Aleppo.

HAMAMET, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, on a gulf of the same name; 37 miles S. of Tunis. Long. 10. 15. E. lat. 36. 13. N.

HAMBURG, a free and imperial city of Germany, in Lower Saxony; seated on the north bank of the Elbe, about 55 miles from its mouth; consisting of the old and new town, both nearly of an equal size. Most of the houses are built after the manner of the Dutch, and richly furnished within. The principal streets of the old town have long and broad canals, which are filled by the tide. It is seated on the rivers Elbe and Alster, and the latter, a tributary stream of the Elbe, before it enters the town by sluices, forms a fine basin. Here is a celebrated college, an arsenal, a bank, and a handsome exchange. The established religion is Lutheran, but all denominations are tolerated. Besides the five principal churches there are eleven smaller ones for particular occasions, some of which belong to hospitals, of which there are a great number. It has a library containing about 100,000 volumes. The cathedral of Our Lady is a very fine structure; it is well fortified, and on the ramparts are handsome walks, planted with rows of trees. On the East is the suburb of St. George, and on the west the Hamburger Berg. On May 5th and 6th, 1842, the central and older portion of the city was destroyed by fire, comprising above 60 streets and 1747 houses, &c., or three-eighths of the town. Among other public buildings thus burnt were the beautiful churches of St. Michael, St. Nicolai, and St. Peter's, the admiralty, exchange, &c. After this fire, was built the most magnificent part of this truly elegant city. The business part of it is commercially grand. Hamburg, from its situation, has all possible advantages for foreign and domestic trade; particularly from its communication, by the Elbe, with some of the principal navigable rivers of Germany; and hence it is one of the most commercial places in Europe. It is distinguished for its sugar refinery, and it has manufactures of cotton stockings, gold and silver lace, silk, linen, handkerchiefs, sail-cloths, thread, ribbons, and velvets. The commerce, however, received a severe shock in 1807; and since that, the city itself has been almost reduced to ruin. Previous to the year 1806, this city became the depôt of all the continental commerce, and numbers of merchants flocked here from every part of Europe, bringing their property along with them, as to a place free from military sway, and secure from the warlike commotions which then agitated Europe; but after the defeat of the Prussians at the battle of Jena, the French took possession of it, and afterwards annexed it to the empire. In 1813, on the advance of the Russians into Germany, the French evacuated the town, and the Russians immediately entered. In May following, the French laid siege to it for more than a month, when the Russians, finding it impossible to defend it any longer, retired. The French, on re-entering, began to strengthen the fortifications; and, after the battle of Leipsic, and the commander, Marshal Davoust, hearing of the approach of the allies, made great preparations for a long siege. For this purpose he destroyed the suburbs and gardens, and expelled all the inhabitants who were not able to provide provisions for six months. On the restoration of the Bourbons, however, the French garrison was withdrawn, and the place delivered up to the allies in May 1814. It has railways to Berlin, &c. Rostock, Kiel, &c. It is 55 miles N. E. of Bremen, and 40 S. W. of Lubeck. Pop. about 128,000. Lat. 53. 33. N., long. 9. 58. E.

HAMBURG, a town of S. Carolina, on the E. side of the Savannah river, opposite to Augusta, in Georgia. It is connected by a railway to Charleston, and is regularly plained and divided into the upper and lower town. Pop. about 2500.

HAMELBURG, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Fulda; seated on the Saale; 20 miles W.N.W. of Schweinfurt.

HAMLEN, a strong town of Hanover, at the extremity of the duchy of Brunswick, of which it is the key. Here are manufactures of stuffs, silks, and stockings. The fortress surrendered to the French in 1806. It is situated at the confluence of the Hamel with the Weser; 28 miles S.W. of Hanover. Pop. 6400.

HAMI, a province of Western Tartary, surrounded by deserts, yet accounted one of the most delightful countries in the world. Its rice and fruits, particularly the melons and dried raisins, are in high esteem in China. It is tributary to that country; and its capital of the same name. Long. 91. 44. E. lat. 42. 55. N.

HAMILTON, a county in the state of Tennessee, bounded on the S.E. by the river Tennessee. Pop. 3175. The chief town is Dallas.

HAMILTON, a county in Ohio, bounded on the S. by the river Ohio, and intersected by the great Miami river. Pop. 80,145. Cincinnati, its chief town, is 109 miles S.W. of Columbus.

HAMILTON is also the name of a county in New York, containing 1907 inhabitants. The capital is Lake Pleasant. There are several townships of the same name.

HAMILTON, a county in the N. part of Florida. Capital, Jasper. Pop. 1464.

HAMILTON, a county in Indiana, U. S. in the centre of the state. Capital, Nobleville. Pop. 9855.

HAMILTON, a county of Illinois, U. States. Capital, McLeansboro'. Pop. 3945.

HAMILTON, a township of the state of New York, on the Chenango river. Here is the Hamilton literary and theological institution, 96 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 3738.

HAMILTON, a town of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, with a noble seat belonging to the duke of that name. It has a trade in cabinet-work and the making of shoes; and the women are famous for the spinning of linen yarn, and making thread lace. It is seated on the Avon, near its conflux with the Clyde. It has a handsome parish church, an elegant town-house and prison, and a commodious market-place. It was made a royal burgh in 1548, by Queen Mary, and is contributory, with Lullithgow, &c., in sending one member to parliament. It is 11 miles S.E. of Glasgow, and 36 W.S.W. of Edinburgh.

HAMMERFEST, a town of Norway, 60 miles S.W. from the North Cape. It is the most northern town of Europe, and was founded in 1819 by Mr. Crowe, an English merchant. It is seated on a very secure harbour on Quaoen S., and has a considerable export trade in fish, oil, &c. Pop. 200.

HAMMERSMITH, a large village in Middlesex; seated on the north bank of the Thames, over which is a handsome suspension bridge, and one of the appendages of the metropolis; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Hyde Park Corner. Here also is a nursery, established originally as a boarding-school for young ladies of the Roman Catholic persuasion; and toward the river are a number of handsome seats and villas. Here is a charity school, a workhouse, and several places of worship for dissenters. The chapel is near the centre of the town. Here also was the celebrated villa of Brandenburg House, in which her Majesty Queen Caroline died.

HAMONT, a town of the Netherlands, in the late bishopric of Liege; 20 miles W. by N. of Buremonde.

HAMPDEN, GREAT, a parish in Buckinghamshire, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. of Chesham. It is celebrated as being the birthplace of the patriot John Hampden, whose manorial residence is in this parish. On the brow of a lofty hill is an immense cross, cut in chalk, supposed to commemorate the last battle between Hengist and Horsa, and the Britons, which was fought on the neighbouring plain of Risborough.

HAMPSHIRE, OR COUNTY OF SOUTHAMPTON, a maritime county of England; bounded on the N. by Berkshire, E. by Surrey and Sussex, S. by the English Channel, and W. by Dorsetshire and Wiltshire. It is nearly square, except a projection to the S.W.; and contains 1,018,550 acres. This county has a great variety of soils, but the principal part is chalk. The Dorsetshire border has large tracts of heath; and toward the sea are great quantities of marsh land, but very fertile; and all the remainder is excellent land. It is one of the most fertile and populous counties in England. On the downs, of which a ridge runs almost across the county, are fed plenty of sheep; but the stock is considerably decreased, owing to enclosures. Besides wheat, barley, and hops, it is famous for bacon, honey, and timber; the last in particular, on account of its great woods, of which the principal are the New Forest, and the forest of Bere. The county, but more particularly the town of Southampton, has been benefited by the completion of the South Western railway, which occurred in 1840, and the main line is 77 miles in length. There are now branches of it to Gosport and other parts, which materially increase its importance. The principal harbours, of which there are a great number along the coast, are Portsmouth and Yarmouth. Southampton is deemed the county town, but the assizes are held at Winchester. It sends 2 members to parliament for each of its divisions, N. and S., and one for the Isle of Wight.

HAMPSHIRE, NEW, one of the United States of North America; bounded on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, the Salmon Fall river, and a conventional line, extending to 45. 13. of N. lat., which divides it from the State of Maine; on the S. by a conventional line, in the lat. of 42. 40. which separates it from Massachusetts; on the W. by the Connecticut River, which divides it from Vermont; and on the northern extremity by Lower Canada. It lies between 71. 0. and 72. 39. W. long. It comprises a superficies of about 9280 square miles, or 5,939,200 acres. The land, for 20 or 30 miles from the coast, is generally low; but, advancing into the country, it rises into hills, which, in some parts of the state, are entitled to the denomination of lofty mountains. From the vicinity of some mountains, whose summits are covered with snow most of the year, this country is intensely cold in winter, but cool and pleasant in summer. The chief lakes are Umbagog, Winnipiseogee, Sunapee, and Squam; and the principal rivers the Androscoggin, Saco, Piscataqua, Merrimac, Connecticut, Upper and Lower Ammonoosnek. The manufactures of this state have of late rapidly increased: they consist of cotton and woollen, glass and iron. The principal exports are pot and pearl ashes, fish, beef, live cattle, pork, flax, and hemp. Among the curiosities of this state, the Notch, or Gap, which fell in September, 1826, is worthy of notice: it is on the W. side of the White Mountains, near the source of the Saco. It is a deep and narrow defile, 22 feet wide. The mountain appears as if cloven down to its base.

The principal improvements which have been made in this state relate to the navigation of the Merrimac river. To this add the Eastern railroad from Massachusetts line to Portsmouth, 15 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles; the Nashua and Lowell railroad, and the Boston and Maine line to Exeter.

New Hampshire is divided into ten counties, viz., Coos, Cheshire, Grafton, Hillsborough, Rockingham, Merrimac, Sullivan, Belknap, Carrol, and Strafford. The present constitution was adopted in 1792. The legislative power is vested in a senate and house of representatives, the former consisting of 12 members, chosen annually by the people, and the latter of delegates from the different towns. Pop. 234,574, in 1840.

HAMPSHIRE, a county in Massachusetts; intersected by the Connecticut river; bounded by the counties of Hampden, Berkshire, Franklin, and Worcester. Its chief town, Northampton, 94 miles W. of Boston, is situated on the west side of the Connecticut. Pop. of the county, 30,897.

HAMPSHIRE, a county of Virginia; bounded on the N.E. by the river Potomac, and by the counties of Morgan, Frederic, and Hardy. Pop. 12,295. Its chief town, Romney, is 214 miles N.W. by N. of Richmond.

HAMPSTEAD, a village of Middlesex, four miles N.N.W. of London, formerly famous for its medicinal waters. It may be considered one of the appendages of the metropolis, being a favourite residence of the merchants and citizens. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the top of which is a fine heath that commands a delightful prospect; and in the vicinity are many elegant seats and villas. In the windows of an ancient edifice, called the Chicken House, are painted, in stained glass, portraits of King James I. and the Duke of Buckingham, of the former of whom it is said to have been a hunting-seat.

HAMPTON, a seaport and an important naval station of Virginia, in Elizabeth county, near the mouth of James river; 29 miles S.E. of Williamsburg. Long. 76. 17. W. lat. 37. 5. N.

HAMPTON, a seaport of New Hampshire, in Rockingham County, on a river of its name, near the sea. It has a canal to the Merrimac, at Salisbury; and is 14 miles S. by W. of Portsmouth. Long. 70. 45. W. lat. 42. 55. N.

HAMPTON, a village in Middlesex, on the N. bank of the river Thames; 13 miles S.W. of London. It is famous for a royal palace, called Hampton Court, originally and magnificently built by Cardinal Wolsey, who gave it to Henry VIII. The remains of the old palace are only some of the domestic offices, the principal part being taken down in 1690, and the present palace erected by William III. The buildings, gardens, and parks, are four miles in circumference.

HAMPTON, LITTLE, a town on the coast of Sussex. It is a small seaport, seated near the mouth of the river Arun.

HAMPTON-LUCY, a parish in Warwickshire, on the Avon, four miles E.N.E. of Stratford. In 1822 a new and most elegant church was erected: it contains the most magnificent stained-glass window that has been produced in modern times.

HANAU, a strong town of Germany. in Hesse Cassel, capital of a fertile county on the same name. It is divided into the old and new town, and in the former is a magnificent castle. It has manufactures of woollen stuffs, stockings, porcelain, and tobacco; and a trade in corn, iron, and timber. It is seated on the Kintzig, near its conflux with the Maine; 13 miles E.N.E. of Frankfort-on-the-Maine. Pop. about 15,000.

HANCOCK, a county on the S.E. coast of the state of Maine, having numerous bays and excellent harbours. Capital, Castine. Pop. in 1840, 28,605.—Also a county in the state of Georgia; area 600 square miles. Capital, Sparta. Pop. in 1840, 9659 inclusive of 5915 slaves. Also a county of Mississippi, on Lake Borgne. Capital, Shieldsborough. Pop. 3367.—Also a county in Ohio, in the N.W. part of the state. Capital, Findlay. Pop. in 1840, 9986.—Also a county of Illinois, to the E. of the Mississippi river. Capital, Carthage. Pop. 9946.

HAN-KOW, a famous Chinese emporium, at the junction of the Han with the Yang-tse rivers, extending about a mile along the latter, and 2½ miles along the former, in a triangular form. Being a purely commercial city, it has neither walls nor fortifications. The town is handsome for China, and opposite to it is the city of Wo-chang. Han-kow, in the heart of China, has an important trade, and was thrown open to British commerce by the recent treaty of Peking. Lat. 30. 20 N., long. 119. 46 E.; 45 miles above Shanghai.

HANG-TSHEOU, a city of China, of the first class, capital of the province of Tche-kiang. It is 12 miles in circumference, exclusive of its suburbs; contains more than a million of inhabitants, and is the general emporium of all articles that pass between the northern and southern provinces. Here are extensive shops and warehouses; and it has a great trade in dyed cottons, nankeens, silks, rice, and other grain. It is seated between a large basin, that forms the S. extremity of the Grand Canal, and a small lake called See-hou; 700 miles S. by E. of Peking. Long. 119. 48. E. lat. 30. 20. N.

HANLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, in Staffordshire, 2½ miles N.E. of Newcastle-under-Lyne. It is a chief seat of the china and earthenware manufacture.

HANOVEN, a kingdom in the N. of Germany; bounded on the N.E. by the river Elbe, N.W. by the German ocean, S.W. by Dutch Friesland and Prussian Westphalia, and S.E. by Saxony.

According to the census of 1842, the population amounted to 1,755,592, or 119½ to the square mile. See Appendix.

The chief towns are Hanover, the capital, Embsen, Hildesheim, Lüneburg, Osnaburg, Göttingen, Zell, Klaustheil, Goslar, Braubek, and Hameln. In the S. is the mountainous tract of the Hartz, covered with forests, and with the exception of which the whole country is a vast plain. (See HARTZ.) Towards the N.

are numerous barren heaths; but the valleys in the S. are very fertile. This country abounds in extensive mines of silver, iron, copper and lead. The iron mines are the most valuable. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the Weser, and the Emba, with their tributary streams; and the chief lakes, Steinhilf and Dummer.

The corn cultivated is much the same as in Britain. The extensive heaths of Lunenburg produce considerable quantities of honey annually. The chief manufactures are thread, linen, woollens, paper, and glass. The exports are linen, iron, copper, timber, horses, and black cattle. The imports are linen, broad cloth, silk, and jewellery.

The prevailing religion is the Lutheran; but all denominations are tolerated. The religious creeds are thus estimated:—Lutherans, 1,356,000; Calvinists, 102,850; Romanists, 212,300; Jews, 11,090; Mennonites, 1500. In every village elementary schools are established, and in more populous places academies or high schools, which are well conducted; as well as the University of Göttingen. The frankness, simplicity, and hospitality, mentioned by Tacitus as characteristic of the ancient Germans, is still a prominent feature in the manners of the Hanoverians, particularly the inhabitants of the heaths.

Hanover, though under the government of Great Britain for more than a century, has undergone no political incorporation. At the diet of Germany, the King of Hanover occupies the fifth rank, and has four votes at the general assembly. The king's power is limited, having a counterpoise in the nobility of Wolfenbüttele, the heads of the church, and deputies of the towns. The only order of knighthood is that of the Guelph, instituted in 1815.

Hanover was taken possession of by the King of Prussia in 1801, and invaded by Buonaparte in 1803; and in 1806 partly ceded to the Prussians; but on the expulsion of the French, in 1813, the whole electorate was restored to the King of Great Britain; and the electoral office having been annulled, he assumed, in 1815, the title of King of Hanover. On the accession of our present Queen, Victoria, the sovereignty passed to Ernest, Duke of Cumberland, the Salic law not permitting a Queen.

HANOVER, a city of Germany, and capital of the above kingdom. It is built in the form of a half moon, and divided by the river Leine into the old and new town. The old town presents an antiquated appearance, but the buildings in the new town are in a better style. Hanover contains a considerable number of public buildings, among which are the elector's palace and the public library; the latter founded by Leibnitz, to whom an elegant monument has been erected in the town. There are five Lutheran churches, besides the chapels of the Calvinists and Catholics, and a Jewish synagogue. It is connected with Cologne, Bremen, Berlin, Frankfort, &c., by railways. Pop. about 40,000; 41 miles W. by N. of Brunswick, and 154 W. of Berlin.

HANOVER, a town of New Hampshire, on the Connecticut river; opposite Norwich, in Vermont. Dartmouth College, an old and respectable institution, is here. Pop. 2613; 54 miles N.W. of Concord.

HANOVER, a town of Virginia, in a county of the same name; situate on the Pamunkey, the S. branch of York river; 22 miles N.N.W. of Richmond. Pop. of the county, 14,968.

HANOVER NEW, a large island in the S. Pacific Ocean, opposite the N.W. extremity of New Ireland. It is high and covered with trees, among which are many beautiful plantations; lat. of W. end, 2. 25; long. 149. 6. E.

HAN-SAN. See TURON.

HANSE TOWNS, the name of certain free towns of Germany, which, being infested with pirates and robbers, entered into a mutual league for their protection. This association is supposed to have continued from the 13th to the 16th century. It consisted at first of only two towns, but it so increased in strength and reputation that at last it consisted of 66 cities. Having at length proclaimed war against Waldemar, King of Denmark, with 40 ships and 12,000 troops, several merchants were ordered by the princes of their respective kingdoms to withdraw their effects, and the association for the most part was dissolved. Several towns in Germany still retain the name, though the laws by which they are governed are disannulled, those now remaining with peculiar privileges being Hamburg, Bremen, and Lübeck.

HAN-TCHONG, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Chen-si; on the river Han; surrounded by mountains and forests. The articles of trade are honey, wax, musk, and cinnamon. Long. 109. 35. E. lat. 32. 58. N.

HANUTE, or HANNUT, a town of Belgium, in Brabant, on the frontiers of Liege and Namur; 20 miles N.N.E. of Namur.

HANWELL, a parish in Middlesex, 7 miles W. of London, on the Great Western railway. It is known for its Lunatic Asylum, which is distinguished as being both the largest and most enlightened institution of its kind.

HAN-YANG, a city of China, of the first class; in the province of Hou-quang. It is seated at the conflux of the Han with the Kian-ku. Long. 113. 44. E. lat. 30. 36. N.

HAPAEE, the name of four of the Friendly Islands, in the Pacific Ocean. They are of similar height and appearance, and connected by a reef of coral rocks, dry at low water. The plantations are numerous and extensive. These islands extend from N. to S. about 19 miles, and lie between 174. 24. and 174. 15. W. long., and lat. 19. 39. and 19. 53. S.

HAPSAL, a town of Russia, in the government of Revel; seated on the Baltic, opposite the island of Dago; 45 miles S.W. of Revel.

HARSBURG, an ancient castle of Switzerland, on a lofty eminence, near Schitznach. What is left of it is now inhabited by the family of a peasant. This castle was the cradle, as it were, of the House of Austria, whose ancestors may be traced back to the beginning of the 13th century, when Rodolph, Count of Hapsburg, was elevated to the empire of Germany and archduchy of Austria.

HARAN, or CHARAN, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbek, known in Scripture as the country of Laban. To this place Crassus retired after his defeat by the Parthians, and not far from it he was killed. It is 25 miles E. by S. of Orfa.

HARBOROUGH MARKET, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated on the Welland; 15 miles S. of Leicester, and 83 N. by W. of London.

HARBURG, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Luneburg, with a strong castle. It has manufactures of silks, stockings, wax, and tobacco; and a great trade in timber with Holland. In 1757 it was taken by the French, but retaken the same year by the Hanoverians. It is seated on the Seeve, at its conflux with the Elbe, opposite Hamburg; 29 miles N.W. of Luneburg.

HARCOURT, a town of France, in the department of Calvados; 12 miles S. by W. of Caen.

HARBERG, a town of Germany, in Styria; 12 miles S.S.W. of Frielberg, and 25 E.S.E. of Gratz.

HARDEGSEN, a town of the province of Calenberg, with a considerable manufacture of leather; 10 miles N.W. of Gottingen.

HARDENBURG, a town of Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg; 17 miles E.N.E. of Dusseldorf.

HARDENBURG, a town of Holland, in Overijssel; situate on the Vecht; 10 miles S.W. of Cooeverden.

HARDERWYCK, a fortified town of Holland, in Gelderland, with a university. It has a trade in corn and wood, and is seated on the Zuyder Zee; 30 miles N.N.E. of Arnheim, and 33 E. by S. of Amsterdam. Long. 5. 8. E. lat. 52. 20. N.

HARDY, a county of Virginia, bordering on Maryland. Population, 7622. Its chief town, Moorfields, is 228 miles N.W. by N. of Richmond.

HAREWOOD, a village in West Yorkshire, on the river Wharf; 8 miles N. of Leeds, and 204 from London. Here are the remains of an ancient castle; and in the church is the monument of Sir William Gascoyne, who committed Henry, prince of Wales to prison, for affronting him while he sat administering justice. Near it is Harewood-house, the noble seat of Lord Harewood.

HARFLEUR, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine. Its fortifications have been long demolished and its harbour nearly choked up. It stands on a small river.

near the mouth of the Seine; 36 miles N.W. of Ronen. Long. 0. 12 E. lat. 49. 30. N.

HARFORD, a town of Maryland, in a county of the same name; situate on Bush river; 25 miles E.N.E. of Baltimore. Population of the county, 17,120.

HARIHARA, or HURRYHUR, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a fort, in which is a celebrated temple. It stands on the E. side of the Toombaddra, which here separates Mysore from the country of the Mahrattas. In the vicinity much cotton wool is cleaned and spun into thread. It is 130 miles N.E. by N. of Mangalore.

HARLEIGH, or HARLECH, a town of Wales, capital of Merionethshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is a poor place, though governed by a mayor, and has a castle, built by Edward I., almost entire, on a rock projecting into St. George's Channel. It is 26 miles S.E. of Caernarvon, and 231 N.N.W. of London.

HARLEM, HAARLEM, or HAERLEM, a fortified city of North Holland, memorable for the siege it held out against the Spaniards in 1573, for ten months, before it capitulated. It has broad regular streets, and many canals; and it is noted for its velvets, damasks, worsted stuffs, and bleaching-grounds. A communication has been opened with the Lake of Harlem, Amsterdam, and Leyden, by means of navigable canals, and it has also the advantages of railway communication with Amsterdam, Leyden, the Hague, &c. It was formerly strongly fortified, but public promenades have been formed of the ramparts. The chief public buildings are the Stadthouse, the royal palace, and some charitable institutions. It has fifteen churches, one of which, called the great church, is the largest in Holland, and has the grandest organ in Europe: it contains 8000 pipes, and 68 stops. An important branch of trade in this city, is that of flower-roots. These are chiefly grown in a district S. of the town; and tulips, hyacinths, ranunculuses, and various other flowers to the amount of several millions are annually exported. Harlem is seated near a lake of the same name, now being drained by steam engines; 12 m. W. of Amsterdam. Long. 4.37. E. lat. 52. 22. N.

HARLESTON, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Wednesday; seated on the Wavenay; 16 miles S. of Norwich, and 99 N.E. of London.

HARLING, EAST, a town of Norfolk, 69 miles from London. Linen, cloth, and yarn are manufactured here.

HARLINGEN, a fortified seaport of Holland, in Friesland, of which, next to Lewarden, it is the largest and most populous. It has flourishing manufactures of paper and canvas, and is seated on the Zuyder Zee; 66 miles N.N.E. of Amsterdam, and 15 W. of Lewarden. Long. 5. 20. E. lat. 53. 10. N.

HARLOW, a town in Essex. On a common, 2 miles from the town, is a famous fair, on the 9th of September, called Harlow Bush Fair, much resorted to by the neighbouring gentry. It is 23 miles E. of London, on the London and Cambridge railway.

HARMONY, a town of Pennsylvania, in Susquehanna county, on the N. side of Starucea Creek, a water of the E. branch of the Susquehanna. Between this place and Stockport, on Delaware River, distance 18 miles E.S.E., there is a portage. It is 130 miles N.W. of New York, and 140 N. by W. of Philadelphia.

HARMONY, a village in Butler county, Pennsylvania, on the S. bank of Conque-nessing creek. It was founded in 1804 by the Harmonites, and contains about 40 or 50 houses; 14 miles S.W. by W. of Butler.

HARPER'S FERRY, a town of Virginia, situated at the junction of the Shenandoah river with the Potomac river, at the passage of the stream through the Blue Ridge. There is probably not a more picturesque spot in the United States. Here is a national armoury for the making of small arms. It has been the scene already of many military vicissitudes in the present civil war, having been several times occupied and abandoned by both Northern and Southern troops. The Chesapeake and Ohio canal passes it, and also the Baltimore and Ohio railroad; 57 miles from Washington, and 173 N. of Richmond.

HARPOSELY, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name, in the Mysore country; 23 miles S.S.W. of Bijnagur.

HARRINGTON, a small port in Cumberland, on a creek of the Irish sea, which admits vessels of 120 tons burden up to the houses. Coal, lime, iron-stone, and fire-clay, are sent hence to Ireland and Scotland. It is 6 miles N. of Whitehaven, and 8 W.S.W. of Cocker-moth.

HARRISBURG, a town of Hindostan, in the eastern extremity of Orissa; capital of the district of Mohurbunge. It is 90 miles N.N.E. of Cuttack, and 130 W.S.W. of Calcutta.

HARRIS, a county of Georgia on the Chatahochee river; capital, Hamilton. Pop. in 1840, 13,333, including 6413 slaves.

HARRISBURG, a city of the United States, in Pennsylvania, on the E. bank of the Susquehanna. It is in a commanding situation and is well built. The State House is splendid, and there is also a fine covered bridge over the river, besides other public works; 28 miles N.W. by W. of Philadelphia. Pop. in 1840, 3980.

HARRISON, a county of Virginia, capital, Clarksburg. Pop. 17,699. Also a county in Kentucky; capital, Cynthiana. Pop. 12,472. Also a county in Ohio; capital, Cadiz. Pop. 20,093. Also a county in Indiana; capital, Corydon. Pop. 12,459. Also a county in Mississippi; capital, Mississippi city.

HARRISONBURG, a town of Kentucky, in Mercer county, at the head of Salt River; 30 miles S. of Frankfort. Pop. 1254.

HARROW-ON-THE-HILL, a village in Middlesex, on the highest hill in the county, commanding a delightful prospect of the metropolis; 10 miles W.N.W. of London. It has a celebrated free school.

HARROWGATE, a village in the West Riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles W. of Knarresborough. It is famous for medicinal springs, one of which is chalybeate, and the other the strongest sulphureous water in Great Britain. Here are several large buildings, with a theatre, &c., for the accommodation of the numerous visitants in the summer. It is 211 miles N. by W. of London.

HARTENSTEIN, a town and castle of Upper Saxony, in Misnia; 6 miles S. of Zwickau.

HARTFORD, a city of Connecticut; capital of a county of its name, and a place where the half-yearly assembly of the state is held in May. It stands on the W. side of the river Connecticut, 50 miles from its mouth. The inhabitants enter largely into the manufacturing business. On the opposite side of the Connecticut is the town of East Hartford, where are iron and glass works. The city is divided by a small stream, called Little River, with high romantic banks, over which is a bridge; and the streets intersect each other at right angles. It is 35 miles N.N.E. of New-haven. Population of the county, 55,629. Of the city, in 1840, 9468.

HARTLAND, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. Near it is Hartland Abbey, which includes the site and some portion of the ancient abbey. It is seated near the Bristol Channel, on a promontory called Hartland Point; 28 miles W.S.W. of Barnstaple, and 217 W. by S. of London. Lat. of the Point, 51. 1. N. Long. 4. 30. W.

HARTLEPOOL, a rapidly rising seaport in the county of Durham, about 6 miles N. of the mouth of the Tees; governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. In the vicinity are several mines of coal, of which great quantities are shipped here. It is seated on the German Ocean, partly surrounded by rocks and hills; 19 miles E.S.E. of Durham, and 258 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 10. W. lat. 54. 41. N.

HARTLEY, a seaport of Northumberland; 6 miles N. of North Shields. Its prosperity is chiefly owing to the mineral productions of the neighbourhood. A haven has been constructed half a mile to the N., whence coal is shipped to London; and a canal is cut through a solid rock to the harbour. Here are also large glass-works. About a mile to the N.W. stands Seaton Delavel, a magnificent modern structure, equalled by few in the kingdom; the interior of it was destroyed by fire a few years ago.

HARTZ, or HARZ, a mountainous tract lying chiefly in the S. of Hanover, extending from Goslar to Hartzgerode; 70 miles long and 20 broad. It is part of the ancient Sylva Hercynia, and still covered with large forests, the timber of which is of great importance in supplying the numerous mines and forges with fuel. See HANOVER. There are many natural curiosities in the Hartz: the caverns of Scharsfeld and Baumann are the most interesting. The magnetic rocks of Ilsestein, and the Brocken or Blocksberg mountain also deserve notice; the latter of which commands a prospect of about 8000 square miles.

HARTZGERODE, or HARZGERODE, a town of Upper Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt-Bernburg; situate near the Hartz mountains. It has a mine-office and a castle, and is 23 miles S.W. of Brenburg. Population about 1800.

HARWICH, a seaport and borough on the coast of Essex, governed by a mayor; with a market on Tuesday and Friday. It has a capacious harbour, in which a great number of the largest ships may anchor, and a convenient dock for the building of men-of-war. Since the advancement of steam navigation this town has much declined; but the improvement of the harbour (1851), and railway communication, bid fair to revive it. The entrance into the harbour is defended by a battery, and Langnard Fort. The town is seated on a tongue of land, opposite the united mouths of the Stour and Orwell, which are navigable 12 miles above the town; 42 m. E. by N. of Chelmsford, and 72 E.N.E. of London. Long. 1. 13. E. lat. 51. 56. N.

HASLEMERE, a town in Surrey; market on Tuesday: 14 miles S.W. of Guildford, and 42 S.S.W. of London.

HASLINGDEN, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Saturday, and considerable manufactures of linen, woollen and cotton. It is 16 miles N. by W. of Manchester, on the East Lancashire Railway.

HASSELT, a fortified town of Holland, in Overysse; seated on the Vecht; 6 miles N. of Zwoll.

HASSELT is also the name of a town of Belgium, in the province of Liege; 15 miles W.N.W. of Maestricht. Pop. about 6000.

HASSER, or ASERGHUR, a town and fortress of Hindostan, province of Candesh; 20 miles N. of Burhampoor.

HASSFURT, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Wurtzburg, on the N.E. bank of the river Main; 8 miles E. of Schweinfurt. Population about 1300.

HASSLACH, a town of Suabia, in the Brisgau, on the river Kintzig; 14 miles S.S.E. of Gengenbach, and 20 N.E. of Friburg.

HASTENBECK, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick, near which the French gained a victory over the duke of Cumberland, in 1757. It is 5 miles S.E. of Hameln.

HASTINGS, a borough on the eastern extremity of Sussex; governed by a mayor; with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is one of the Cinque Ports, and had once a castle, now in ruins. The harbour, formerly of much consequence, is now only an indifferent road for small vessels. The town is commanded by a strong fort, has two ancient, and an elegant new church, and is a fashionable watering place, which is now the chief source of its prosperity. St. Leonards on Sea, a portion of the watering place, and of modern growth, is to the west of the town. In 1066 a bloody battle was fought here, between Harold II. of England, and William, duke of Normandy, in which the former lost his life and kingdom. Hastings sends two members to Parliament: it is seated between a high cliff towards the sea, and a high hill towards the land side; 24 miles E. of Lewes, and 64 S.S.E. of London, with which it is connected by a continuation of the Brighton railway. Long. 0. 38. E. lat. 50. 52. N.

HATCHRY, a tributary stream of the Mississippi, which it joins in Tennessee.

HATFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, in Hampshire county, on the W. side of the Connecticut, nearly opposite Hadley, to which place there is a ferry. It is 5 miles N. of Northampton.

HATFIELD, a town of Hertfordshire, with a market on Thursday. It formerly belonged to the bishop of Ely, in whose place Elizabeth resided, and was thence conducted, on the death of Mary, to ascend the throne. She procured the alienation of this manor; and James I. exchanged it with Sir Robert Cecil, afterwards earl of Salisbury, for Theobald; and on the site of the episcopal palace that nobleman built the magnificent seat called Hatfield-house. It is seated on the river Lea; 20 miles N. by W. of London.

HATHAZ, a town of Hungary, in the county of Szaboltz; 11 miles N. of Debretzin. The number of inhabitants is about 4000, and chiefly Calvinists.

HATHERLEY, or HATHERLEIGH, a corporate town in Devonshire, with a market on Friday, and a woollen manufacture. It is seated on the river Oke; 28 miles N.W. of Exeter, and 2.0 W. by S. of London.

HATRAS, a fort and tower of Hindostan, province of Agra; 18 miles S.S.W. of Coel, and 35 N.E. of Agra.

HATTEM, a town of Holland, in Gelderland; seated on the Yssel; 4 miles S.W. of Zwoll. Pop. about 2400.

HATTERAS, a cape on the coast of North America. It extends far into the ocean, from the coast of North Carolina, in the lat. 35. 7. N. and long. 75. 30.

HATTINGEN, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Mark; seated on the Roer; 22 m. E.N.E. of Dusseldorf. Pop. about 2000.

HATVAN, a town and fort of Upper Hungary; seated on a mountain; 28 miles E.N.E. of Buda.

HATZFELD, a town and castle of Germany, in Upper Hesse, capital of a county of its name; seated on the Eder, 17 miles N.N.W. of Marburg, and 60 N.E. of Coblenz.

HAUSEN, a town of Suabia, in Brisgau; on the river Kintzig; 22 miles N.N.E. of Friburg.

Hausruck, a circle of Upper Austria; bounded on the N.E. by the Danube, S.E. by the quarter of Traun, S.W. by Bavaria, and N.W. by the quarter of Inn, comprising a superficies of 733 square miles. Pop. about 109,000. The chief town is Linz.

HAUTEURVE, a town of France in the department of Upper Garonne; seated on the Arriege; 13 miles S. of Toulouse.

HAVANA, THE, (sometimes, but improperly, called Havannah,) a city and seaport on the N.W. part of Cuba, and the capital of the island. The capital of Cuba, whenever it is spoken of with becoming solemnity, as in addresses to the throne, or in formal official documents, is called "La siempre Fidelísima Ciudad de San Cristobal de la Habana." It is an episcopal see, as well as the seat of the provincial government; and the residence of all the colonial authorities, excepting the judges of the superior court, called the "Real Audiencia," who have held their sittings at Puerto Principe, as being in a more central situation with regard to the rest of the island. The Havana is a place of considerable strength; and besides the walls and ditches which surround it, the city is defended by six strongholds, called the Moro, the Cabanas, Number 4, the Atares, the Principe, and the Punta. The first and the last serve to protect the entrance of the harbour; the second is a sort of citadel; and the others are so placed as to cover the approaches by land. The suburbs, or barrios extra muros, cover more ground, and contain a larger population than the city itself. The streets of the Havana cross each other at right angles, and extend in straight lines from one side of the city to the other. In 1584, there were only four, and the notaries in those days commenced certain deeds with "la publicá en las cuatro calles de esta villa." In consequence of their regularity, they do not now exceed fifty within the walls. They are all Macadanized, thanks to the energy of Tacon, a late governor, but their want of width has prevented the formation of side walks; unless the narrow row of flagstones close to the houses, may be so named. Within the walls, the streets are in general so narrow, that, except where one crosses another, it is with difficulty that the peculiar earriage of the country, the volante, with its long shafts, and its enormous pair of wheels, can be made to turn; but on the outside, more especially in the suburb called the Sa-lad, they are much more spacious. The population, in 1827, consisted of 46,621 whites; 23,562 coloured and black free people; and 23,840 coloured and black slaves; total, 94,023. Including the garrison, the present population is considered little, if at all, under 150,000. The architecture of the houses is heavy, and they are most massively constructed. In addition to the usual public buildings, the cathedral, with its towers and pillared front of discoloured and worn stone, and situated near the mansion of the captain general, in the Calle del Ignacio, deserves some notice, being the reported burial place of Colombo, the discoverer of the new world. The attention of every visitor is directed to this object. A tablet of stone, inlaid in the wall, to the right and in front of the altar, with the bust of Colombo sculptured on it in basso relievo, above the opening of what is called his tomb. The wharves of the Havana, at which the merchant ships discharge their cargoes, are not more extensive than are strictly necessary for the increasing trade of the port. There is an ample space for the extension of these wharves, whenever a further increase of the trade shall require it. On the opposite side of the harbour, at the village of Casa Blanca, the notorious resort of the slavers who frequent the Havana, there are also wharves and ship yards, where vessels of all classes may be laid up, fitted out, or repaired; and in the tideway between, there is space sufficient for several hundred vessels to ride at anchor. This city was taken by the English in 1762, but restored to the Spaniards in 1763. It is seated on the W. side of the harbour, and watered by two branches of the river. Lat. of the Moro Fort, 23. 9. 18. N. long. 82. 21. 40. W.

HAVANT, a town in the S.E. extremity of Hampshire, with a market on Saturday; 7 miles N.E. of Portsmouth, and 66 S.W. of London, on the line of the London and Portsmouth railway.

HAVELBERG, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, in the Mark of Pregnitz; seated on the Havel, near its conflux with the Elbe. Many vessels, for the navigation of the Elbe, are built here, and great quantities of wood sent hence to Hamburg. It is 37 miles N.N.W. of Brandenburg. Pop. about 2000.

HAVERFORDWEST, a borough of Wales, in Pembrokehire; seated on the side of a high hill; with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, contains three parish churches, and has a considerable trade, and sends one member to parliament. The assizes and county gaol are kept here; and it had once a wall and castle, now in ruins, the latter built in the reign of Stephen. It is seated on the Cleddaw, which is navigable for vessels of small burthen, as high as the bridge, and which soon after enters a creek of Milford Haven; 15 miles E.S.E. of St. David, and 263 W. by N. of London. Long. 5. 0. W. lat. 51. 50. N.

HAVERTHILL, a town of New Hampshire, chief of Grafton county; situate on the E. bank of the Connecticut; 32 miles N. by E. of Hanover, and 110 W.N.W. of Portland. Pop. 2784.

HAVERTHILL, a town of Massachusetts, in Essex county, with two churches; on the N. bank of the Merrimac, over which there is a bridge. Some vessels are built here, and it has a manufacture of canvas. It is 12 miles W.S.W. of Newbury Port, at the mouth of the river, and 32 N. by W. of Boston. Pop. 4336.

HAYERIL, a town in Suffolk, on the borders of Essex, with a market on Wednesday, and a manufacture of checks, cottons, and fustians. It is 16 miles S.W. of Bury, and 59 N.E. of London.

HAVRE DE GRACE, a very important and commercial seaport of France, in the department of Lower Seine, with a strong citadel, a good arsenal, and storehouses for the construction and arming of ships. It is surrounded by lofty walls, and large ditches filled with water. The harbour has particular advantages above all others on the coast; for the water does not begin to ebb till near three hours after the full tide. It is capable of containing a great number of the largest vessels. This town was bombarded by the English in 1694 and 1759. It is seated at the mouth of the Seine; 45 miles W. of Ronen, and 112 N.W. of Paris, of which it is the seaport. Long. 0. 6. E. lat. 49. 29. N. Pop. in 1836, about 25,618.

HEAN, a town of Tonquin, on the river Hoti; 60 miles N.W. of the gulf of Tonquin.

HERRIDES, or WESTERN ISLANDS, a large cluster of islands, situated in the Atlantic Ocean, on the W. coast of Scotland, extending from the lat. of 55. 17. N. to 55. 29. They are upwards of 300 in number, and contain about 2,000,000 acres. The chief of these are Lewis and its circumjacent islands belonging to Ross-shire; Harris, N. and S. Uist, Benbecula, St. Kilda, Barra, Skye, Raaz, and Egg, attached to Inverness-shire; Cannara, Rum, Muck, Coll, Tiree, Mull, Jura, Colonsay, Islay, Gigha, and Cara, belonging to Argyllshire; and Bute, Arran, Grenter and Less Cumbrae, and Inchmarnock, which compose the shire of Bute. The ancient title tory of the Hebrides is involved in much uncertainty. They were governed by independent princes of their own, until the destruction of the Piets by Kenneth II., and for several centuries were the resort of pirates; and their chieftains were long lawless and seditions, till they were at last brought under the control of the royal power. The influence of the independent chieftains of the Western Isles was completely destroyed by the act of parliament in 1748, which abolished all heritable jurisdictions. About 86 are inhabited.

HEBRIDES, NEW, islands in the South Pacific Ocean, lying between 14. 29. and 20. 4. S. lat. and 166. 41. and 170. 21. E. long. They were discovered by Quiros, in 1606, and considered as part of a southern continent under the name of Tierra Australia del Espiritu Santo. Bougainville visited them in 1768, and found that the land was not connected, but composed of islands, which he called the Great Cyclades. Cook, in 1774, ascertained the extent and situation of the whole group, and gave them the name they now bear. The principal islands are Tierra del Espiritu Santo, and Mallicollo, beside several of less note, some of which are from 18 to 25 leagues in circuit. In general they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood, water, and the usual productions of the tropical islands. The inhabitants are of very different appearance at different islands; but are chiefly of a slender make and dark colour, and most of them have frizzled hair. Their canoes and houses are small, and poorly constructed; and, except their arms, they have scarcely any manufacture, not even for clothing. They are, however, hospitable and good-natured, when not prompted to a contrary conduct by the jealousy which European visitors may be supposed to excite.

HEBRON, now EL KHULLI, a town of Syria, in Palestine, with a Christian church, said to contain the tombs of Abraham and Sarah, to which the Mahometans, as well as Christians, come on pilgrimage. Constantine built a church here, the walls of which are still standing. It is 25 miles S. of Jerusalem.

HEBRON, a town of the United States, in Connecticut; 25 miles S.E. of Hartford, and 343 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 1726.

HECHINGEN, a town and castle of Suabia, which gives name to a branch of the family of Hohenzollern, and is the residence of the prince. It is seated on the Starzel; 4 m. N. of Hohenzollern, 30 S. of Stuttgart. Pop. 2600.

HECLA MOUNT. See ICELAND.

HEDEMORA, a town of Sweden, in Delectaria, with a manufacture of gunpowder; seated on the Dahl; 30 m. S.S.E. of Fahlun.

HEADINGHAM CASTLE, a parish in Essex, 19 miles N.N.E. of Chelmsford. Here are the ruins of the fortress of the above name; the keep is the only part remaining, which bears a striking resemblance to that of Rochester castle. It is supposed to have been erected in the 11th century.

HEDON, a borough in East Yorkshire. Market on Saturday. Seated on a creek of the Humber; 6 miles E. of Hull, and 182 N. by W. of London.

HEDJAZ, or HEJAZ, a division of Arabia, extending along the Red Sea, from Arabia Petraea to Yemen. It contains Mecca the capital, and Medina.

HEERMUND, or HINDMEND, a river of Persia, in the province of Segistan, which, after a westerly course of about 400 miles, falls into the Lake of Zereh, or Durrah.

HEIDELBERG, a city of Germany, in the duchy of Baden, with a celebrated university. It has manufactures of woollen stuffs, carpets, silk stockings, velvet, and soap. It was the capital of the palatinate, and celebrated for a great tun, which held 800 hogsheads. It has undergone so many calamities by war and fire that it is not so large as formerly. The protestant electoral house becoming extinct in 1693, a bloody war ensued, in which the castle was ruined, and the elector removed his residence to Mannheim. The French took possession of this town in 1800, and in 1803 it was given to the elector of Baden. It is seated on the Neckar, over which is a bridge; 12 miles S.E. of Mannheim, and 52 S. of Frankfurt. Pop. in 1838, 13,430.

HEIDELSHEIM, a town of Germany, in Lower Rhine; 17 miles S. of Heidelberg. Pop. about 1800.

HEILBRONN, a town of Suabia, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg. It is an irregular but a handsome place, situated in a country yielding good wine, and derives great advantages from its baths. It stands on the Neckar, 25 miles north of Stuttgart. Pop. 10,200.

HEILBRUNN, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Anspach, with a medicinal spring; 10 miles E.N.E. of Anspach.

HEILIGENHEIL, a town of Prussia, in the province of Natangen. It is famous for fine beer and white bread and seated on a small river, which soon after enters the Frisch-hall; 32 miles S.W. of Konigsberg.

HEILIGENBERG, a town of Suabia, in the principality of Furstenberg; 12 miles N.N.E. of Constance.

HEILIGENHAFEN, a town of Lower Saxony, in Holstein; seated on the Baltic, opposite the island of Femern, 40 miles N. of Lubbeck. Lat. 54. 27. N., long. 10. 48. E.

HEILIGENSTADT, a town of Lower Saxony, capital of the territory of Eichfield, with a castle and a college. It is seated at the conflux of the Geisland with the Leine, 17 miles S.E. of Gottingen.

HEILSBERG, a town of Prussia, in the province of Ermeland. In 1703, Charles XII. of Sweden fixed his head-quarters there. It is seated on the Alla, 45 miles S. of Konigsberg.

HELDER, a town of North Holland, with a strong fort, which defends the entrance of the Texel. In September, 1799, the fort was taken by the English, and the whole of the Dutch fleet lying in the Texel surrendered to them, for the service of the Prince of Orange; but the English abandoned the fort in November following. It is situated on the N. W. point of the province, opposite the W. end of Texel Island; 24 miles N. of Alcmner, and 45 N. by W. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 34. E., lat. 53. 0. N.

HELENA, St., an island in the Atlantic Ocean, 27 miles in circuit, belonging to the English East India Company. It lies between the continents of Africa and South America, about 1200 miles W. of the former and 1800 E. of the latter, and was discovered by the Portuguese in 1501, on St. Helena's day. Afterward the Dutch were in possession of it till 1600, when they were expelled by the English. In 1673 the Dutch retook it by surprise; but it was soon after recovered. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana Peak, which is covered with wood to the very top. There are other hills also, which bear evident marks of a volcanic origin; and some have huge rocks of lava, and a kind of half vitrified flags. The climate of St. Helena is temperate, being exempt from the extremes of heat and cold, from thunder and lightning, and hurricanes. It is moist, however, and only one day in three is illumined by sunshine. The interior valleys and little hills are covered with verdure, and interspersed with gardens, orchards, and various plantations. There are also many pastures, surrounded by enclosures of stone, and filled with a fine breed of small cattle, and with English sheep; goats and poultry are likewise numerous. The inhabitants amounted to 5298 in 1847, including near 500 soldiers and 1600 blacks, who were supplied with corn and manufactures by the Company's ships, in return for refreshments. The town, called Jamestown, is small, situated at the bottom of a bay on the S. side of the island, between two steep dreary mountains. The principal street is well built, and contains about 30 houses, at the top of which two other streets branch off to the E. and W. In the latter are the barracks, the hospital, and several shops, stored with every kind of commodities. On the left side of the parade are situated the government-house and the main guard-room, in the former of which the governor and public officers reside. The church is situated in front of the gateway by which the town is entered, and near it there is a small theatre. St. Helena is particularly celebrated for having been the prison of Buonaparte, the late Emperor of France, and for being the place in which he breathed his last, and where his mortal remains were deposited, till their removal to the chapel of the Invalides, in Paris, October, 1840. He died in May, 1821. Lat. of Jamestown, 15. 55. S., long. 5. 43. W.

HELENA, St., one of a cluster of islands on the coast of S. Carolina, composing the parish of St. Helena, in the district of Beaufort.

HELENS, St., a village in Hampshire, at the E. end of the Isle of Wight; 2 miles N. E. of Brading.

HELENS, St., a town in Lancashire, 3 miles N. E. of Prescot, on the Liverpool and Manchester railway. It has very extensive manufactures of glass, copper, chemicals, earthenware, watch movements, &c.; and the cheapness and abundance of coal, the proximity to Liverpool, and the facilities afforded by both canal and railway traffic, have contributed to raise the place rapidly to great importance. It has three churches. Population in 1851, 14,866.

HELIER, St., the capital of the island of Jersey; seated on the E. side of the Bay of St. Aubin. It is the capital of the island of Jersey, and has, in common with the other channel islands, wonderfully improved, in consequence of the policy of the British government towards them of late years, in the exemption from fiscal imposts. Thus the population of this town has perhaps trebled its numbers within the last twenty years, amounting to about 26,000 in 1850—the influx attracted by the cheapness of living, and other local advantages. The older portion of the town is not well built, the streets being irregular and narrow, an evil remedied in the more modern outskirts. It stands near the shore, between two rocky heights, on one of which is Fort Regent, commanding the harbour, a regular fortress, with little accommodation, erected at a cost of 800,000*l.* in 1806. The royal square is the chief open area within the town, and contains the original parish church, built in 1341, the court-house, &c. In addition to this, there have been erected three other churches or chapels, and there are several dissenting places of worship. On the public promenade, a college is intended to be built. The other public buildings are the theatre, gaol, and the hospital. There are some markets also. The harbour is formed by two piers projecting into the bay at the S. end of the town. Elizabeth castle, the residence of the governor and garrison of Jersey, occupies a small rocky island, surrounded by the sea at every half flood; and hence, at low water, is a natural causeway to the town, called the Bridge, half-a-mile long.

HELIGOLAND, or HELGOLAND, a group of one larger and one small island, in the German Ocean, off the coast of Denmark, to which they formerly belonged, but now to Great Britain. They are situated about 28 miles from the Weser, the Elbe, and the Eyder. The principal island is about 24 miles in circumference, and on it is erected a lighthouse, which is visible nearly 30 miles distant. Heligoland has two good harbours, and to the E. of the smaller island, called the Downs, is good anchorage in 48 feet of water. The number of inhabitants is about 2000, who live chiefly by fishing and piloting. Lat. of lighthouse, 54. 11. N. long. 7. 53. E.

Egypt, 4 miles E.N.E. of Cairo, where the French gained a decisive victory over the Turks in 1800. Here is a celebrated spring of fresh water, said to be the only one in Egypt; and, according to tradition, the Holy Family came here on their flight from Herod, and bathed the child Jesus in this fountain.

HELLEH, or HILLAH, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irak Arabi, situate on both sides of the Euphrates, with a bridge of communication. The surrounding gardens are so covered with fruit trees, particularly palms, that the town appears as if seated in a wood. From the extensive ruins around, it appears to occupy the site of the ancient Babylon. The most remarkable of these is what at first appears to be a hill, but is in reality the ruins of a pyramid of sun-dried brick, cemented with bitumen. It is called the Mujelibah, and is about 660 feet long, 450 broad, and 170 high. South from this is the Kasr, or palace, of fine bricks, cemented with lime, 2100 feet square; near this is another mound, 55 feet high, 3360 feet long, and 2250 feet broad, called the mound of Amran; another, called the Birs Nemrood, an oblong mound of the finest bricks, cemented with lime, of a pyramidal form, and 200 feet high, surmounted by a tower 40 feet high. These are the only vestiges remaining of the once powerful Babylon. These remarkable antiquities are now in course of exhumation, and many most interesting and unsuspected features have been ascertained to exist among them. It is 72 miles S. by E. of Bagdad.

HELLGATE, a strait near the W. end of Long Island Sound, 8 miles N. by E. of New York. It is narrow and crooked, with a bed of rocks extending quite across; but at proper times of the tide ships of any burthen may pass through this strait.

HELLIN, a town of Spain, province of Murcia, 44 miles N.W. of Murcia. It is well paved, with neatly-painted houses, and has an air of comfort about it. Pop. about 8000.

HELMERSHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in Lower Hesse, on the river Diemel; 20 miles N. of Cassel.

HELMONT, a town of Dutch Brabant, with a strong castle; seated on the Aa, 17 miles S.E. of Bois-le-Duc. Pop. about 2500.

HELMSDALE, a town of Scotland, in the shire of Sutherland. It stands on the river Helmsdale, which issues from several mountain lakes in Sutherlandshire, and rolls over its rocky bottom to the Ord of Caithness. At its mouth, in the German Ocean, is a good salmon fishery.

HELMSTEDT, a town in the North Riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday. It has the remains of a castle, and is seated on the Rye; 20 miles N. of York, and 218 N. by W. of London.

HELSENBURGH, a seaport of Sweden, in Schonen; seated on the Sound, nearly opposite Elsinore. Here is a ferry across the Sound to Denmark. It has manufactures of ribbons, hats, and boots. It is 5 miles N.E. of Elsinore, and 32 N.W. of Lund. Pop. about 2500. Long. 12. 48. E. lat. 56. 3. N.

HELSINGFORS, a seaport of Russia, in Finland, and the chief town in the province of Nyland. It has a commodious harbour in the Gulf of Finland, and an immense fortress. It is 110 miles E.S.E. of Abo. Long. 25 E., lat. 60. 5. N. Pop. 12,725.

HELSINGIA, or HELSINGLAND, a province of Sweden, in Norland, 210 miles in length, between Dalecarlia and the Gulf of Bothnia, and from 50 to 80 in breadth, and comprises a superficies of about 4470 square miles. It has extensive forests, and many iron mines. The articles of trade are iron, flax, linen, tallow, butter, tar, deal, and timber. Pop. about 52,000. The principal town is Hudwicksvall.

HELSTONE, a borough in Cornwall; market on Saturday. It stands on the river Looe, near its entrance into Mount bay. A little below it is a harbour, where vessels take in their lading. It sends one member to parliament. It is 10 miles S.W. of Falmouth, and 274 W. by S. of London. Long. 5. 15. E. lat. 50. 7. N.

HELVETIA. See SWITZERLAND.

HELVETIA, NEW, a town or settlement on the river Sacramento, Upper California, 75 miles from its mouth at the harbour of San Francisco. It was established some years since, by Captain Sater, for agricultural purposes; but gold having been abundantly found in, or prior to 1847, its character was very soon changed, and it became the focus of much gold-seeking enterprise.

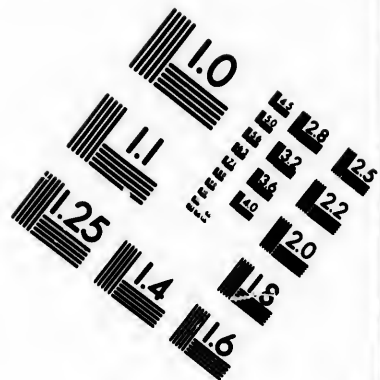

HELVETSLSUYS, a strong seaport of South Holland, on the S. side of the island of Voorn. Here some of the Dutch men-of-war are laid up in ordinary; and it was the general port for the English packets from Harwich to Holland. It surrendered to the French in 1795. It is 7 miles S. by W. of Briel. Pop. 1644. Long. 4. 0. E. lat. 51. 46. N.

HERCULANEUM, an ancient city of Naples.

totally overwhelmed by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Titus. Its situation was long doubtful, till 1711, when something of this city was discovered by a peasant digging a well in his garden; and, from 1738 to the present time, researches being frequently made by digging, a great number of manuscripts, paintings, statues, busts, domestic utensils, instruments of husbandry, &c., have been found. The village of Portici now stands on part of its site. It is 5 miles E. by S. of Naples.

HERCYNA, a river of Greece, in Bœotia, with two streams, the larger called by the ancients Lethe, and the smaller Memnosyne.

HEREFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bordering on Wales, and bounded on the N. by Shropshire, E. by Worcestershire, S. by Monmouthshire and Gloucestershire, and W. by the counties of Brecknock and Radnor. It contains 556,400 acres, and is divided into 11 hundreds, and 221 parishes. It has one city, Hereford, two boroughs, Hereford and Leominster, and seven market towns, Leominster, Ross, Weobly, Ledbury, Kington, Bromyard, and Pembridge, and sends seven members to parliament; two for the city of Hereford, two for the borough of Leominster, and three for the county. Herefordshire is almost entirely an agricultural county. About nine-tenths of the land are in a state of cultivation, and it excels in almost every department of husbandry. The face of the county is rich and picturesque, the climate is mild, and the soil is extremely fertile, which arises from the subsoil of limestone on which it rests. Hops are cultivated, and the apples producing the cider for which Herefordshire is celebrated, grow in greater plenty than in any other county. Red and yellow ochres are often met with; fullers' earth is dug near Stoke, and on the borders of Gloucestershire iron ore is found. It is watered by several streams, the chief of which are the Wye, the Monnow, and the Lugg. Before the invasion of the Romans, Herefordshire was inhabited by the Silures, a brave people, who long checked the progress of the Roman arms; but being at last overcome, they retired into the fastnesses of Wales. It was a part of Mercia, one of the kingdoms of the Saxon Heptarchy.

HEREFORD, an ancient city, and chief town of Herefordshire; seated on the N. bank of the Wye, over which there is a stone bridge of six arches. It has manufactures of gloves, flannels, and hats. It was anciently defended by a castle, which is now destroyed, and on 7 part of the walls remain. It has six parishes, and four churches, the principal of which is the cathedral, a large and venerable structure; and there are several places of worship for dissenters. It has also an infirmary, a county gaol, a house of correction, a lunatic asylum, and a free grammar school. The city is in general well built, the streets wide, and the environs delightful. It is governed by a mayor, six aldermen, a common council of 31, a high steward, and a recorder. It sends two members to parliament. Hereford, from its situation on the borders of Wales, suffered much from the wars between that country and England, and, in later times, from the contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, and the civil broils in the time of Charles I. It has six fairs, and a market every Wednesday and Saturday. It is 135 miles W.N.W. of London, and 30 N.W. of Gloucester.

HERENTHALS, a town of Belgium, in Brabant, on the river Nethe; 20 miles N.E. of Louvain.

HERJADALEN, a district on the N. of Sweden, now included in Gefleborgsten, and bounded on the W. by Norway, and N. by Jampland. It consists of an extensive valley, watered by the Ljusna and Ljunga. It is mostly covered with wood, and abounds in cattle, game and fish. Territorial extent, 3200 square miles, with a population of only 4000.

HERINNES, a town of South Brabant, with 3300 inhabitants; 17 miles S.W. of Brussels.

HERISAU, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Appenzel, with manufactures of fine linen and muslin; that of silk has been recently introduced; 12 miles N.W. of Appenzel, and 8 S.W. of St. Gall. Pop. about 2200, but with the surrounding commune, 7000.

HERIURA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore; seated on the Vedawati; 22 miles W.N.W. of Sera.

HERKIMER, a town of New York, chief of a county of the same name; situated on the North side of Mohawk river; 81 miles W.N.W. of Albany. Population of the county, 55,869; of the town, 2369.

HERMANSTADT, a strong city of Transylvania, and a bishop's see. It has a large church, built by Maria Theresa, with a globe and steeple not easily described. In the great square is the house of the governor, in the best German style, containing many good pictures. It is seated on the Szeben; 230 miles E.S.E. of Buda, and 67 S.S.E. of Colosvar. Pop. in 1838, 18,337.

HERMSDORF, two large villages of Silesia, the one 38 miles N. by W. of Breslau, and the other 40 m. W. by S. of the same place.

HERMSTADT, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Wolau, on the river Barch; 10 miles N.W. of Trachenberg, and 38 N. by W. of Breslau.

HEMUND, or HELMUND, a river of Central Asia, province of Afghanistan, Cabool. It is fordable during the summer, but in winter becomes a considerable river, half a mile broad. It flows into the Sea of Zerra, after a W. course of 350 miles.

HERNANI, a town of Spain in Guipuzcoa, under a fortified hill on the Urumea. Here the Spanish Legion, under General Evans, was repulsed, Aug. 29, 1835, and defeated on the same ground, March 16, 1837. Population about 2500.

HERNE BAY, a hamlet in the parish of Herne, county of Kent, at the mouth of the river Thames, which has arisen, in a few years, to be an attractive watering-place. A pier was erected in 1831, upwards of 3000 feet in length; and other accommodations, requisite for a considerable population, have sprung up with great rapidity. It is connected with Canterbury and London by a railway.

HERNGRUND, or HERRENGRUND, a town of Upper Hungary; seated among mountains with rich mines of copper; 28 miles N. by E. of Schemnitz, and 4 miles N.N.W. of Neusohl.

HERNHUT, a village in Lusatia; 12 miles N.N.W. of Zittau. It was founded in 1722, by some persecuted Moravian brethren, in the fields belonging to Count Zinzendorf, whom they considered as their bishop and father, and they were for some time called Hernhutters, as this place continued their principal nursery.

HERNOSAND, a seaport of Sweden, in Angermania; situated on an island in the Gulf of Bothnia, which is joined to the continent by a bridge. It was formerly a staple town, and has still a considerable trade in linen. In 1710, 1714, and 1721, it was burned by the Russians. It is 240 miles N. by W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 53. E. lat. 62. 38. N.

HERNOSAND is also the name of an extensive government of Sweden, of which the preceding is the capital; comprising the provinces of Angermannland, Jamptland, and Medelpad, containing 18,000 square miles, with only 100,000 inhabitants.

HERO, NORTH and SOUTH, two islands in Lake Champlain, North America.

HERSTAL, or HERISTAL, a town of Belgium, in Liege; seated on the Maese; 4 miles N. of Liege. Pop. 4750.

HERTFORDSHIRE, an interior county of England, extending, in a north-easterly direction, about 32 miles in length, and 16 in mean breadth; bounded on the S. by Middlesex, E. by Essex, N. by Cambridge and Bedford, and W. by Buckingham, and part of Bedford. It contains 400,370 acres, is divided into eight hundreds, 134 parishes, and has 19 market towns, the chief of which are St. Albans, Hertford, Ware, and Royston. It sends seven members to parliament, three for the county and two for each of the two boroughs. The N. part is hilly, forming a scattered part of the chalky ridge, which slopes towards London. A number of clear streams take their rise from the S. side. Flint stones are scattered in great profusion over the face of this county, and beds of chalk are frequently to be met with. The soil, however, with the aid of proper culture, is favourable to wheat and barley, which come to as great perfection here, as in any part of the kingdom. The W. part is, in general, a tolerably rich soil, and under excellent cultivation. The principal rivers are the Lea, Stort, and Coln, and the artificial one called the New River. The grand Junction Canal passes through the S. extremity of the county. The Northern and Eastern railway intersects the county. Corn is the principal object of agriculture, and a great trade in malt is carried on. The manufactures are inconsiderable.

HERTFORD, a borough, and the capital of Hertfordshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Lea, which is navigable for barges, as it was once for ships. In 879 the Danes erected two forts here, for security of their ships; but Alfred turned the course of the river, so that their vessels were left on dry ground. Edward, the eldest son of Alfred, built a castle here, which has been often a royal residence. The town is governed by a mayor, and had formerly five churches, but now only two. Here is a fine hospital, belonging to Christ's Hospital, London; also a noble shire hall, and a large county gaol. About a mile to the E. is a basin of water called Chadwell, which is the head spring of the New River; and, at Haileybury, distant 2½ miles on the London road, is the East India College for the education of 100 students. Hertford is 21 miles N. of London: it sends two members to parliament.

HERTFORD, a county of North Carolina, bordering on Virginia, and bounded on the N.E. by Chowan River. Pop. 7484.

HINDOSTAN, (Persian, hindoo, black, and stan, a place, or country.) or INDIA, and by the aborigines called Bharatta, a region of Asia, which comprises all the countries between the mountains of Tartary and Tibet on the N., Bootan, Assam, and the Bay of Bengal on the E., the Indian Ocean on the S., and the same ocean and Persia on the W. But this country must be considered under the three grand divisions of Hindostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindostan Proper includes the provinces of Bengal, Buhar, and all those that lie to the N. of the river Nerbudda; the principal of which are Agimere, Agrn, Allahabad, Cashmere, Delhi, Guzerat, Lahore, Malwa, Moultan, Oude, and Sinde. The Deccan has been extended to the whole region S. of Hindostan Proper; but, in its most restricted sense, it means only the countries situate between Hindostan Proper and the river Kistna. See DECCAN. The tract S. of the river Kistna is generally called the Peninsula; although its form does not authorize that appellation: it includes a small part of Golconda, Mysore, and the Carnatic, with Madura, and other smaller districts; the W. coast being called that of Malabar, and the E. that of Coromandel. The Sikhs possess Lahore, part of Moultan, and Delhi; the king of Candahar, Cashmere, and part of Moultan; Berar and Orissa, Malwa, Candeish, Visiupour, and part of Agimere and Guzerat, are in the possession of the Mahrattas; and the Nizam of the Deccan possesses Golconda, part of Dowlatabsd, and Berar.

The British possessions are Bengal, Bahar, part of Allahabad, and Orissa, the Northern Circars, the Jaghire in the Carnatic, the countries north and south of Calicut, Bombay and the island of Salsette. The allies of the British are the rijnahs of Mysore, Tanjore, Madura, Travancore, Trichinopoly, the nabobs of Oude and Arcot, and the district of Cochin. The principal rivers are the Ganges, the Indus, Nerbudda, Pundar, Taptee, Caggar, Muhannuddy, Godavery, Kistna. The chief mountains are the Himmalah, the western and eastern Gaits, and those which divide Bengal from Ava. The following tables give the best estimates of the area and population. The first is that of our British possessions, as usually stated, but the number of inhabitants will be seen to be overrated by the subsequent estimate:—

BRITISH PROVINCES.	Area sq. miles.	Population.
BENGAL, including N.W. Provinces. Districts of which the population is doubtful	230,317	69,710,071
MARWAR	141,923	13,509,335
BOMBAY	89,434	6,251,348
Doubtful Districts	4,550	...
Total, BRITISH INDIA.....	512,923	89,470,158

But according to an estimate upon which considerable dependence may be placed, the following amounts have been ascertained for the North Western Provinces of Bengal.

DISTRICTS.	No. of ins. and villa.	Area, pop. sq. m.	Area, acres.	Pop. in 1847.	Inhab. to sq. m.
D-ih.....	3,074	6,274	5,315,159	1,494,356	277.3
Morcat.....	8,779	7,710	6,532,850	2,816,891	365.3
Hollitund.....	14,829	8,883	7,524,134	3,755,938	422.7
Agra.....	7,524	6,843	5,707,593	2,935,434	414.3
Allahabad.....	10,232	8,939	7,571,457	2,446,853	273.7
Benares.....	32,965	13,212	11,193,831	6,390,970	483.7
	77,303	61,861	44,937,062	19,733,742	380.5

The foregoing is the first estimate of the population of British India which has been given at all in a satisfactory manner; more recent ones will be found in the Appendix. The first two columns, depending upon trigonometric data, are accurate. The last, which shows the enormous density of the population on the great plain of the Ganges, is an evidence that it is greater than even in China, and only exceeded by our island of Barbadoes. But these are much lower than former suppositions, as 32,000,000 have been assigned previously to the north western provinces. As these are among our most important districts, we may state, that the Hindoos amount to 6,199,956, and the Mahometans and others, to 1,254,121, or in the proportion not quite 6 to 1, formerly considered as 15 to 1. Among the Hindoos, the agriculturists amount to 4,051,484, and the non-agriculturists to 2,148,872. Among the Mahomedans, this proportion is reversed, being as 507,295 agricultural, to 746,826 non-agricultural. From the evidence afforded by this estimate, the following table exhibits much lower amounts in population than formerly had been made.

The greater proportion of the Hindoo population are idolaters, and are divided into three great sects: the first worship the triad, Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva; the second are the followers of Boodhi, whose principal tenet is the doctrine of transmigrating; the Juins are the third, who chiefly worship Parisswanath; the other class of inhabitants are Mahometans, of whom there are about the eighth part of the number Hindoos. To give an idea of the modern revolutions in the empire of Hindostan, it is proper to observe, that from a pure Hindoo government, it became, at last, a Mahometan state, and continued to be so, under various dynasties, till the beginning of the 18th century. The first irruption of the Mahometans was in the year 1000. From this period the provinces of Hindostan were held rather as tributary kingdoms, than as provinces of the same empire; and the conquest of the Deccan, in particular, was for ages an object of considerable importance to the emperors. In 1389, the Mogul Tartars, under the conduct of Timur, or Tamerlane, invaded Hindostan; but the conquest of the country was not effected till 1525, by Sultan Baber, one of his descendants, who, from this circumstance, was the founder of the Mogul dynasty; and hence Hindostan has been called the Mogul empire, and its chief, the Great Mogul. The illustrious Acbar, his son, failed in his attack upon the Deccan; an attempt in which many of his successors were equally unfortunate, and which tended, in the sequel, to the decline and dissolution of the empire. In 1615, Emperor Jehanguire, his son, received Sir Thomas Roe, as the first English ambassador, and the Portuguese had by this time acquired considerable settlements in Bengal and Guzerat. In the reign of his grandson Arungzebe, which lasted from 1660 to 1707, the empire attained its full extent; his authority reached from 10 to 35 degrees in lat., and nearly as much in long., and his revenue exceeded 32,000,000*l.* sterling. But in the course of 50 years after his death, a succession of weak princes and wicked ministers reduced this astonishing empire to very narrow limits, and deprived it of all its power and splendour. In consequence of the intrigues of the Nizam of the Deccan, Nadir Shah, the Persian usurper, invaded Hindostan in 1738. In the reign of Achmed Shah, successor of Mahomed Shah, the entire division of the empire took place; nothing remaining to the house of Tamerlane, but the city and small territory of Delhi. The last imperial army was defeated by the Rohillas, in 1749. The Jats, a Hindoo tribe, founded a state in Agra; Oude was seized by Mahomed Kooli, and the Mahrattas, beside their ancient domains in the Deccan, obtained great part of Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, and Orissa. The Mogul empire was now become nearly nominal; and the emperors, from this period, must be regarded as of no political consequence, otherwise than as their names and persons were made use of, by different parties, to promote their own views; for the name and person of the emperor retains a considerable degree of veneration among the bulk of the people of Hindostan. Achmed was deposed in 1753, and his successor was deposed and murdered in 1760. He was succeeded, however, by his son Shah Alum, who was alternately dependent on the contending powers, and more particularly upon the English, who obtained from him a grant of the provinces of Bengal, Bahir, Orissa, and the Circars. This prince died in 1806, and was succeeded by his second son, Achar Shah. The Mahometans, or Mussulmans, whom the English improperly call Moors, are represented to be of a detestable character. The Hindoos, or Gentoos, are of a black complexion; their hair is long, their persons straight and elegant, and their countenance open and pleasant. They differ materially from all other nations, by being divided into tribes or castes. The four principal tribes are the Brahmins, Soldiers, Labourers, and Mechanics; and these are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are Brahmins of various degrees of excellence, who have the care of religion allotted to them, and are held sacred by the rest: some of these acknowledge the errors that have crept into their religion, own one Supremo Being, and laugh at the idolatry of the multitude, but insist upon the necessity of working upon the weaknesses of the vulgar; yet the generality of them are as ignorant as the laity. Such as are not engaged in worldly pursuits are a very superstitious, innocent people, who promote charity as much as they can, both to man and beast; but those who engage in the world are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; but, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and being exempt from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice (under the Gentoo governments), they run into much greater excesses. A large number of the natives were enlisted as soldiers in the service of the late East India Company; they were called sepoy, or sepahis, and were clothed and disciplined in the European manner. But since the mutiny, which broke up the native army in Bengal in 1857-8, the number of sepoy in that presidency has been reduced to a minimum, though in the others they are still retained. But the East Indian army being now amalgamated with the Queen's, greater precautions are taken against the native troops having the ascendancy. Acting in concert with European soldiers, and commanded by European officers, the sepoy have generally been found brave, faithful, and effective. The labourers include farmers, and all who cultivate the land. The mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade; these again are subdivided into each profession. Beside these are the Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse of all the tribes. They are a set of unhappy wretches, who perform all the vilest offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away every thing that is polluted. All the different tribes are kept distinct from each other by insurmountable barriers: they are forbidden to intermarry, to cohabit, to eat with each other, or even to drink out of the same vessel with one of another tribe. Every deviation from these points subjects them to be rejected by their tribe, renders them polluted for ever, and obliges them, from that instant, to herd with the Hallachores. The members of each caste adhere invariably to the profession of their forefathers; from generation to generation the same families have followed, and still continue to follow, one uniform manner of life. To this may be ascribed that high degree of perfection conspicuous in many of the Indian manufactures; and also that striking peculiarity in the state of Hindostan, the permanence of its institutions, and the immutability in the manners of the inhabitants. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese in respect to the antiquity of their nation. Their institutions of religion form a complete system of superstition, upheld by everything which can excite the reverence of the people. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious ceremonies splendid; and the absolute dominion which the Brahmins have obtained over the minds of the people is supported by the command of the immense revenues with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends to a thousand particulars which, in other countries, are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, custom, and fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoo is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee (a kind of imperfect butter), milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. The warrior caste may eat of the flesh of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior castes may eat poultry and fish; but the inferior castes are prohibited from eating flesh or fish of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spices and perfumes, of which the great people are very lavish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. They are taught by their religion that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man who does not entirely separate himself from the world from a principle of devotion; and, as none but male descendants can perform the obsequies to the manes of their ancestors, it is thought an irreparable calamity to die without male issue. Scarcely any state can be more degrading than that of Hindoo females. Till three years after the nuptial age, a girl is entirely at the disposal of her father. When married, she is inured in her husband's dwelling; her dependence upon him is perpetual and entire; she is not permitted to eat in his presence, and is considered, not as a companion to aid him in enduring the evils of life, but as a slave to bear children, and be subservient to his rule. Polygamy is tolerated; but the females, except among the Nairs, are not permitted to marry a second time. A husband can dismiss his wife at any time; but there is nothing that can dissolve the wife from her matrimonial engagement. The inhuman custom of women burning themselves on the funeral pile of their deceased husbands has, however, been recently prohibited in the presidencies of Fort William and Madras; and the progress of Christianity affords reason to hope for the speedy abolition of other revolting practices. The code of Gentoo laws, with their sacred books, the Vidam and the Shuster, are written in the Sanscrit language, which is very copious and nervous, although the style of their best authors is wonderfully concise. Hindostan, towards the N., is pretty temperate, but hot towards the S.; and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products are diamonds and other precious stones, silks, spices, aromatics, drugs, maize, rice, and sugar; and the chief manufactures are muslins and calicoes. But these and various other particulars, will be found under the names of its different provinces, cities, towns, mountains, and rivers described in this work.

HINGHAM, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday; 14 miles W. of Norwich, and 99 N.E. of London.

HINGHAM, a town of Massachusetts, in Suffolk county, with several churches; seated on a small bay; 19 miles S.E. of Boston.

HING-HOA, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Fo-kien. The vicinity furnishes abundance of rice, li-chi, and silk.

HINTENGENSDORF, a town of Saxony, in Meissen; 8 miles E. of Freyburg.

HINZUAN, JOANNA, or ANJOUAN, one of the largest of the Comorro islands; situated off the eastern coast of Africa. It is of a triangular form; and the whole island appears to have undergone the action of a volcano, the rocks being every where volcanized. It is entirely mountainous, but is covered with vegetation, which even reaches to the summit of the highest conical hill. The coasts can be approached with safety. The sovereign of Hinzuan takes the title of sultan, and formerly ruled over the whole group of the Comorro islands. His subjects view him with the most profound respect, and never approach him without kneeling, and touching the earth with their forehead. The nobles are on a familiar footing with the king, and must be consulted on many occasions. The natives are in general tall, robust, and well made; they have long black hair, piercing eyes, and are of a colour between olive and black. They profess Mahomedism; but the native African worship of fetiches is still very prevalent. They are courteous and hospitable, and all shipwrecked mariners have been received with the greatest kindness. The pine apples are most delicious, and the other fruits are excellent. Yams and sweet potatoes are in abundance; also goats and poultry. The bullocks are of a moderate size, and are excellent food. This island is often frequented by Europeans, and particularly by English vessels, for the sake of procuring water and provisions. The commodities in demand are arms, toys, looking-glasses, shirts, and blue and red cloth. Salm is the capital. Long. 41.30. E. lat. 12.54. S.

HIOGO, a port on the south side of Nippon island, Japan, to be opened to Europeans on January 1, 1863. It will probably be the principal port for European trade in the empire.

HIRSCHBERG, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Jauer; famous for its mineral baths. In the neighbourhood are extensive bleaching grounds; and, next to Breslau, it is the most considerable trading town in Silesia. It is seated on the Bober; 23 miles S.W. of Jauer. Pop. 7000.

HIRSCHFELD, a town of Germany, in Hesse Cassel; capital of a principality of the same name, depending on a famous abbey, which was secularized in favour of the house of Hesse Cassel. It is seated on the Fulda; 34 miles S. by E. of Cassel. Pop. 6450. Long. 9.42. E. lat. 50.50. N.

HIRSCHOLM, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, with a castle; 12 miles N. of Copenhagen.

HIRSCHORN, a town of Hesse Darmstadt, with a castle, seated on the Neckar; 7 miles E. of Heilberg.

HISSAN, a town of Hindostan, in the country of Delhi; capital of a district of the same name; seated near the river Sursoory; 112 miles W.N.W. of Delhi. Long. 75. 40. E. lat. 29. 5. N.

HIT, a town of Syria, near which is a spring of naphtha and bitumen. It stands on a river of the same name, which soon after joins the Euphrates; 100 miles W. by S. of Bagdad.

HITCHEIN, a town in Hertfordshire, with a market on Tuesday, and a great trade in malt. It has a handsome parish church, and several meeting-houses; 15 miles N.N.W. of Hertford, and 34 N.W. of London.

HOAI-KING, a city of China, of the first rank, in Ho-nan; 320 miles S.W. of Peking. Long. 112. 34. E. lat. 35. 6. N.

HOAI-NGAN-FOO, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-nan. It is seated in a marsh, and enclosed by a triple wall. The suburbs extend to the distance of a league on each side of a canal, and form, at their extremity, a kind of port on the Hoang-ho. The canal, being above the level of the city, occasions perpetual danger of inundation, 515 m. S.S.E. of Peking. Long. 118. 47. E. lat. 53. 30. N.

HOANG-HO, a large river of Asia, also called yellow river, from the quantity of clay it devolves. Its sources are two lakes among the mountains of that part of Tartary known by the name of Kokonor, in about 35. N. lat. It pursues a N.E. direction to about 42. N. lat.; and, after running due E., it suddenly bends S., penetrating China to a latitude nearly parallel to its source; and then it pursues an easterly direction till it enters the Eastern Ocean, 100 miles to the N. of the mouth of the Kian-ku. The length of its course is estimated at 2000 miles; at 70 miles from the sea, where it is crossed by the Great Canal, the breadth is little more than a mile; but it is so rapid and shallow as to be scarcely navigable.

HOBART-TOWN, or HOBARTON, the capital of Van Diemen's Land, in Buckingham county. It is seated near the mouth of the river Derwent, which is here about 2 miles wide. The city is about 1½ mile square; seated at the foot of Mount Wellington, which is 3750 feet high. The streets are straight, and cross each other at right angles, and have a number of handsome houses. The public buildings are numerous, and some of them are handsome. The government-house is near the harbour, or Sullivan's Cove; it is an irregular building, without architectural pretensions. The other principal buildings are the court-house, church, colonial hospital, barracks, &c. The view of the city, &c., from the harbour is magnificent, and the trade is prosperous. Population about 11,000 or 12,000. See the Appendix. Lat. 42. 56. S., long. 147. 27. E.

HOBOKEN, a village of New Jersey, on the

W. bank of the Hudson river, opposite to New York, to which it is connected by 3 steam ferries. Its grounds called the Elysian Fields are beautifully laid out, and much frequented in the summer.

HOCHBERG, a castle of Baden; situate on a mountain; 2 miles N.E. of Emmendingen.

HOCHHEIM, a town of Central Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; surrounded by vineyards, and famous for its wine called Hock; 15 miles S.W. from Frankfort. Pop. 1910.

HOCHST, a town of Germany, in Nassau, with an extensive tobacco manufacture; seated on the Rhine; 6 miles W. of Frankfort, and 17 N.E. of Mentz.

HOCHSTADT, a town and castle of Bavaria, famous for a signal victory gained near it by the Duke of Marlborough in 1704, and which the English call the battle of Blenheim, from a village three miles S.W. of this place. It is seated on the Danube; 17 miles S.W. of Donawert.

HOCHSTAT, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia, in the principality of Bamberg; on the river Aisch; 23 miles S.S.W. of Bamberg.

HOCKHOCKING, a town of the U. S., Ohio, in the county of Fairfield. Pop. 3079.

HODDSDON, a town in Hertfordshire, with a market on Thursday; seated near the river Lea; 4 miles S.E. of Hertford, and 17 N. by E. of London.

HODEIDA, a town of Arabia, in Yemen, with a harbour for small vessels, on the Red sea; 90 miles N.N.W. of Mocha. Long. 43. 30. E. lat. 14. 10. N.

HOEI-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-nan; famous for its tea, varnish, and japanned work; 625 m. S. of Peking.

HOEI-TCHIEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in Quang-ton; 1010 miles S. of Peking.

HOLKAR'S TERRITORY. See INDORE.

HOLLAND, KINGDOM OF. See NETHERLANDS.

HOLLAND, an important province of the kingdom of Holland, which has often given name to the Seven United Provinces; but these appellations have been merged in the title of the kingdom, and Holland is now, properly, the maritime peninsula of that name. It is divided into two parts, North and South Holland; and is bounded on the N. and W. by the German Ocean, on the E. by the Zuyder Zee and the elevated state of Utrecht, and on the S. by the Meuse and Dutch Brabant; extending from lat. 51. 40. to 53. 10. N.; its long. is about 180 miles E. of London. It contains 90 walled towns, besides many others, and above 400 villages. Before the Revolution, in 1795, six large cities had seats in the states-general; viz. Dort, Haerlem, Delft, Leyden, Amsterdam, and Gouda. The number of inhabitants was estimated at 800,000. They also reached this number in 1801; but in 1817 they had been reduced by the war to 748,000. The division into the two governments of South and North Holland is recognised by the constitution of 1814; the former contains 1170 square miles, with 509,661 inhabitants, and is divided into the six districts of the Hague, Leyden, Rotterdam, Dort, Gorcum, and the Briel; while North Holland, which, in official papers, is called by its ancient name of West Friesland, contains 958 square miles, with 423,873 inhabitants, and is divided into the four districts of Amsterdam, Haerlem, Hoorn, and Alkmaar. The whole province is a continued flat; and, but for the constant care in forming ditches and canals, it would be hardly capable of cultivation. Some part of it lies even lower than the sea, from which it is secured by dikes, 25 or 30 feet high, and as many broad at top. The climate is moist and variable, and in various places, particularly in North Holland, unfavourable to health. The winters are severe, and the rivers are almost every season rendered unnavigable, for several weeks together, by the ice. The soil is rich, consisting of a deep fat loam; but, owing to the humidity of both soil and climate, tillage is very limited. Wheat, madder, tobacco, hemp, and flax are raised, but the chief agricultural wealth of the country consists in the pastures, which feed great numbers of cows; the making of butter and cheese being a principal occupation. The meadows are generally under water during the winter, and the inhabitants only discharge them from it by mills adapted, as in the fenny parts of England, to this particular purpose. The Hollanders are affable, industrious, laborious, absorbed in trade, excellent sailors, moderate politicians, and lovers of liberty. In the middle ages it was governed by its counts or earls; in the 15th century it became subject to the House of Burgundy; it passed afterwards to Austria; and, finally, joined the other provinces that declared for independence. On the invasion of Holland by the French, in the beginning of 1795, the stadtholder with his family took refuge in England. Holland was subsequently under various forms of French domination. At length the people became weary of this connexion. The events of 1813 had weakened the power that bound them; the people rose; their fetters were broken; and "Orange boven," (up with the House of Orange,) resounded through the country. A provisional government was formed at Amsterdam, on the 18th of November. William Frederick, of Nassau and Orange, landed from England at the close of the same month, entered Amsterdam on the 2nd of December, and was proclaimed Sovereign Prince of the United Netherlands, on the following day. By the act of congress, signed at Vienna on the 31st May, 1815, the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, which had formerly been subject to the dukes of Burgundy, were re-united under the Prince of Orange, as William I., king of the Netherlands. See NETHERLANDS.

HOLLAND, a strong town of E. Prussia; seated near the river Weeske; 14 miles S.S.E. of Elbing.

HOLLAND, NEW. See AUSTRALIA.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, on the Beaver-dam-creek. From a basin here, a railway passes over the Alleghany mountains by a series of inclines to Johnstown 36½ miles; 181 miles W.N.W. of Harrisburg. Population, 1896.

HOLLONDALE, a river of Scotland, in the county of Sutherland, which rises in the mountains on the borders of Caithness, and flows N. into a bay of the North sea, forming, for several miles, in the latter part of its course, the boundary between the two counties.

HOLLYWOOD, a town of Ireland, in the county of Down; situate on Belfast Lough; 105 miles from Dublin.

HOLM CULTRAM, a town in Cumberland, sometimes called Holm-Abbey, from the celebrated abbey that formerly stood here, the remains of which have been converted into the parish church. It is seated near the mouth of the Waver; 12 miles N. of Cockermonth, and 310 N.N.W. of London.

HOLMES, a county in the N.E. part of the state of Ohio. Capital, Millesburg; area, 422 square miles. Pop. 18,088. Also a county in Mississippi, between the Yazoo and Big Black rivers. Capital, Lexington. Area, 600 square miles. Pop. in 1840, 9452, including 5566 slaves.

HOLMES HOLE, a seaport of Massachusetts, on the N. side of Martha's Vineyard. Its harbour is deep, spacious and safe, and is much frequented; 89 miles S.S.E. of Boston.

HOLMSWORTHY, a town in Devonshire; seated between two branches of the river Tamar; 214 miles from London.

HOLSTENHOE, a town of Denmark, in North Jutland; situate on a shallow river which runs into the North sea. The principal trade is in corn, oxen, and horses. It is 24 miles W. of Wiborg, and 68 N. of Ripen.

HOLSTEIN, a duchy at the N. extremity of Germany, belonging to Denmark, 100 miles long and 50 broad; bounded N. by Sleswick, E. by the Baltic and the duchy of Saxe-Lauenburg, S. by the duchies of Bremen and Lüneburg, and W. by the German Ocean. Its principal rivers are the Elbe, the Eyder, and the Stor. It is a fruitful country, and well seated for trade, having some considerable harbours, particularly those of Hamburg, Lubeck, and Kiel, and from the latter is a canal to the Eyder, at Rensburg, by which there is a free navigation from the Baltic to the German Ocean. The king of Denmark, as duke of Holstein, has a place in the Germanic diet, and in 1834, he established in the duchy, as in the other provinces of the kingdom, a provincial state, in which the land proprietors have representatives. This, though defective, is a great concession from the extreme absoluteness of the Danish monarchy. Most serious disturbances and revolts have taken place in present times, against the power of the Danish king, who has, it is contended, exercised regal power where he has only ducal authority in Holstein. Area, 3330 square miles. Population in 1845, 479,364. See DENMARK.

HOLSTON, a river of the United States, which rises in the Alleghany mountains, in Virginia, and flows S.S.W. into the State of Tennessee, where it takes a more southerly course to Knoxville, and 35 miles below that town is joined by the Clinch, when their united waters take the name of Tennessee. It is navigable for boats of 25 tons upwards of 100 miles. On its banks are several iron-works; and the adjacent country abounds with iron ore, and has sundry lead mines.

HOLT, a town in Denbighshire, North Wales; on the river Dee.

HOLT, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday, and an excellent free school, founded by Sir John Gresham. It is situate in a fertile district; 24 miles W.N.W. of Norwich, and 119 N.E. of London.

HOLY CROSS, a village in Ireland, county of Tipperary; on the river Suir. Here are the ruins of a beautiful Cistercian abbey.

HOLY ISLAND, an island on the E. coast of England; 8 miles S.E. of Berwick-upon-Tweed, but belonging to the county of Durham. It is three miles long and two broad; the soil rocky and full of stones; and at low water it is accessible by horses and carriages. It has a town called Kilo, and a castle on a high rock, under which is a commodious harbour, defended by a blockhouse. On this island are considerable remains of a stately monastery, called Lindisfarne; and here was anciently a bishop's see, removed with the body of St. Cuthbert, first to Chester-le-Street, and afterwards to Durham.

HOLYHEAD, a seaport and capo of Wales, in the isle of Anglesey. It has lately risen into great importance as being the chief point of communication with Ireland, having superseded Liverpool in convenience both of harbour and distance; the voyage across from Holyhead to Kingston occupying little more than six hours; while from Liverpool to Kingston it takes twelve hours, under the most favourable circumstances. There is a good natural harbour; and another harbour, for greater safety, has been constructed, as well as a dock for repairing the steamers on the station; but all former works will sink into insignificance when compared with the immense refuge harbour now constructing by the British government to the N.W. of the existing town and port, but which, from its magnitude, will occupy several years ere it is finished. The regularity of the tides and the easy ingress and egress at all times, make this port much more advantageous than that of Liverpool, which labours under great disadvantages in those respects. It is connected with London by portions of four lines of railway, viz. the London and Birmingham from London to Rugby; by the Manchester and Birmingham, and the Chester and Crewe railways, to Chester; and by the Great Holyhead railway to Holyhead. The whole journey from London to Kingston, a distance of 315 miles, is performed in 16½ hours; which is 4½ hours less than that via Liverpool. In the neighbourhood is a large vein of white fullers'-earth, and another of yellow. Among the principal objects of interest are the venerable ruins of a hermitage, two chapels, and the remains of a Dutch wall; these, with the lighthouse and suspension bridge, attract the attention of strangers. The church, near the verge of the cliff, is a handsome structure of the 13th century; here are also four chapels for dissenters, a free school, and some almshouses. Market on Saturday. It is 86 miles W. by N. of Chester, and 267 N.W. of London. Long. 4. 40. W. lat. 53. 23. N.

HOLYWELL, a town of Wales, in Flintshire, with a market on Friday, considered one of the best in North Wales. It has a neat parish church, and four places of worship for dissenters. From its vicinity to the mines, and the extensive manufactures carried on in the neighbourhood, it is become the most flourishing town in the county. Its name was derived from the famous well of St. Winifred, concerning which so many fables and superstitious notions have prevailed, but which is certainly a very remarkable spring, bursting out of the ground with great impetuosity, at the foot of a hill, and discharging upwards of 20 tons of water every minute. The waters have long since lost their reputation for miraculous healing powers, but are much esteemed by the manufacturer, being now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. It is 10 miles E. of St. Asaph, and 207 N.W. of London.

HOLZAFFEL, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau. It is situate on the Lahn, at the foot of a mountain, on which is the tower of an ancient castle, the original seat of the princes of Nassau; 4 miles N.E. of Nassau.

HOLZMINDEN, a town of the states of Brunswick, in Wolfenbittel, with considerable iron-works. It is seated at the conflux of the Holz with the Wezer; 28 miles N.W. of Gottingen.

HOMBURG, a town of Germany in Hesse-Cassel, with an iron forge and a glass manufacture; 20 miles S. of Cassel.—Also a town of Prussia, in the duchy of Berg; 48 miles S.E. of Dusseldorf.—And a town of Bavaria, in Deux Ponts, seated on a mountain; 5 miles N.W. of Deux Ponts.

HOMER, a town of the state of New York, on the Toughluoga creek. It has 4 churches and 3572 inhabitants; 141 m. W. of Albany.

HO-NAN, a province of China; bounded on the N. by the provinces of Pe-tcheli, and Chan-si, E. by Kiang-si and Chantong, S. by Hon-quang, and W. by Chensi. As every thing that can contribute to render a country delightful is found in this province, thus as it is situate almost in the centre of the empire, the Chinese call it Tong-hoa, the middle flower. Besides Caifong, its capital, it contains 8 cities of the first class, and 102 of the second and third.

HO-NAN a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Ho-nan; 360 miles S.W. of Peking. Long. 112. 9. E. lat. 34. 44. N.

HONAWERA, or ONORA, a town of Hindostan, in Canara; seated in an inlet of the sea, which spreads into a lake, and includes a number of islands. It was formerly a place of great commerce, but was demolished by Tippoo after he had recovered it by the treaty of Mangalore. Here is now a custom-house, and a few shops; also some merchants who live scattered near the banks of the lake, and sell rice, pepper, cocoa, and betelnuts, &c., to the trading vessels that come from Goa, Rajapura, and Bombay. It is 50 miles N. by W. of Kundapura, and 84 S.S.E. of Goa.

HONDTCOOOTE, a town of France, department of Nord, near which a part of the allied troops were surprised and defeated in 1793. It is 7 miles S.E. of Dunkirk.

HONDURAS, a republic of Central America; 400 miles long, and 150 broad; bounded on the N. by a bay of its name, E. by the Atlantic, S. by Nicaragua, and W. by Guatimala and Vera Paz. The country consists of mountains, valleys, and plains, watered by numerous rivers; and is exceedingly fertile, but unhealthy to Europeans. The soil, in many parts, yields three crops of maize: other productions are wheat, pease, cotton, wool, logwood, with excellent pastures, honey, wax, and provisions of all kinds. Honduras was formerly one of the most populous countries in America, but at present, though so fertile, is almost deserted. See Mosquito Shore.

HONDURAS, GULF OF, is that gulf of the Caribbean sea, between the peninsula of Yucatan and Cape Honduras. It is well known, from the colonies settled on it by the British for the cutting down of mahogany and dyewoods. HONDURAS BRITISH, see BELIZE.

HONESDALE, a town of Pennsylvania, at the confluence of the Dyberry and Lackawaxen creeks, and at the termination of the Lackawaxen canal and railroad. It has risen within a few years. Pop. 1086 in 1840.

HONFLEUR, a seaport of France, in the department of Calvados. The harbour is very capacious at the mouth of the Seine; and its principal trade is in lace. It is 8 miles N. of Pont l'Evêque, and 110 N.W. of Paris. Pop. 8490. Long. 0. 15. E. lat. 49. 24. N.

HONG-KONG, an island near Canton, on the S. coast of China. It consists of high conical mountains, composed of primitive rocks, principally of trap and basalt; the only produce being a small quantity of rice and fruits; the vegetation consists of ferns, and some other plants of small growth, giving it, at a distance, an appearance of fertility, though it is in reality remarkably barren. It was inhabited by a few fishermen, and is described as having been the resort of Chinese pirates; thus giving the name of "Ladrones," which is applied to the group of which it forms a part. It was one of the first places resorted to by the Portuguese. It was taken possession of by the English as a result of the Chinese war, in March 1841, and a settlement was formed, called Victoria, on the N.E. side of the island in the ensuing year. The position of the place, and the nature of our relations with China, have raised the settlement into great importance, and at the beginning of 1848, the number of inhabitants was estimated at 21,069. The city is above a mile in extent, and its buildings and accommodations are of the first order.

HONITON, a borough in Devonshire, celebrated for the manufacture of broad lace. The old church is half-a-mile from the town; but a new parish church was built in 1838, also a chapel belonging to the establishment, and three meeting-houses for Independents, Baptists, and Presbyterians. A fire happened here in 1747, which consumed three-fourths of the town; and another in 1765, destroyed nearly 180 buildings. It is situated in a delightful vale, on the river Otter; 16 miles E. of Exeter. It sends two members to parliament. Market on Saturday.

HOOBLY, a town of Hindostan, in the Decan, province of Bejapoor. It has long been a place of great trade and commerce. There are no public buildings worthy of notice; 13 miles S.W. of Durwar. Pop. in 1820, about 15,000.

HOOGHLY, a river of Hindostan, formed by the two westernmost branches of the Ganges, named the Cossimbazar and Jellinghy, which unite at Nuddea. It flows by Hooghly, Chinsura, Chandernagore, and Calcutta to the bay of Bengal, and is the only branch of the Ganges that is commonly navigated by ships.

HOOGHLY, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal, possessing many vestiges of former greatness. In the beginning of the 18th century it was the great mart of the export trade of Bengal to Europe, and though not of its former importance, it is still large and prosperous. It occupies a commanding site, and a handsome Christian church is one of its most conspicuous buildings. It is seated on the river Hooghly; 23 miles N. of Calcutta.

HOOGSTRATEN, a town of Belgium, in Brabant; 15 miles N. of Herentals.

HOORN, a seaport of N. Holland, on the Zuyder Zee; with manufactures of woollen cloths and carpets, and a considerable trade in cattle, butter, cheese, herrings, and other fish. It is 20 miles N.N.E. of Amsterdam. Pop. 10,000.

HOPE, EAST, a village of Wales, in the county of Flint; contributory with Flint and Caergurle, in returning one member to parliament. Here are the ruins of a castle.

HOPE, a parish in Derbyshire; 6 miles N.N.E. of Tideswell, with a market on Friday. It is a very picturesque place, and a great many Roman antiquities have been discovered, evidencing it as a Roman station.

HOPE, a village of the United States, in New Jersey. It is 20 miles N.E. of Easton. —Also a Moravian settlement of North Carolina, in Surry county.

HOPE, a river of the island of Jamaica, which runs into the sea, 5 m. S. of Kingston.

HOPE ADVANCE BAY, a bay in Hudson's strait; 100 miles W. of Cape Chidley.

HOPE BAY, a bay at the N.E. corner of Nootka Sound.

HOPE CAPE, a cape of Hudson's bay, at the entrance of Repulse bay.

HOPKINTON, a town of Massachusetts, near the Boston and Worcester railroad, and the Blackstone canal. It has a mineral spring; 29 m. W.S.W. of Boston. Pop. 2245.

HOPTON AND COTTON, a Liberty in St. Mary and St. Chad parish, Staffordshire; 3 miles N.E. of Stafford. Here are the ruins of an ancient priory; and on Hopton heath, now enclosed, a severe battle was fought in 1643 between the royal and the parliamentary armies, both sides claiming the victory

HORAIPAN, a town of Persia, in the province of Farsistan; 76 miles N.W. of Shiraz.

HORN, a town of Wirtemberg, with a considerable trade in woollen goods; seated on the Neckar; 21 miles W.S.W. of Tubingen.

HOREN, a mountain of Arabia Petrea, a little to the W. of Mount Sinai. Here are two or three fine springs, and a great number of fruit-trees.

HORN, a town of Austria, with a trade in beer made of oats; seated on the Tiffer 48 miles W.N.W. of Vienna.

HORN, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege; 3 miles W.N.W. of Ruremopde.

HORN CAPE, the southern extremity of S. America, forming part of Hermite island; on the coast of Terra del Fuego. Long. 67. 30. W. lat. 55. 46. S.

HORNACHOS, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, near the river Malachel; 30 miles S.S.E. of Merida.

HORNBERG, a town of Baden, in the Black Forest, with a fortress on a mountain; seated on the Gutlash; 12 miles N.W. of Rothweil.

HORNBERG, a town of Prussian Saxony, on the Ilse; 8 miles S. of Wolfenbuttel.

HORNBY, a small town in Lancashire; situated on the bank of the Wenning; 9 miles N.E. of Lancaster. The principal object of attraction is Hornby castle, erected, as it is supposed, by Nicholas de Mont Begons, soon after the Conquest. Here was formerly a weekly market on Friday, which has merged in the fair for cattle every alternate Tuesday.

HORNCASTLE, a town in Lincolnshire; situated in an angle formed by the confluence of the Bane and the Waring; with a market on Saturday. It was a Roman station, and part of the wall of the castle is still remaining. Here are a church, four meeting-houses, a dispensary, &c. It is 21 miles E. of Lincoln, and 134 N. of London.

HORNING, a parish in Norfolk; 3 miles S.E. of North Walsham. Here stood the once celebrated abbey of St. Bennet's, at Holm; from which fact, the Bishop of Norwich takes the title of Abbot of St. Benedict. The chapel, now a barn, and part of the magnificent gateway still remain.

HORNSEA, a town in East Yorkshire, nearly surrounded by an arm of the sea, and much resorted to during the bathing season. Near it is a mere, two miles long, and one broad, famous for its pike and eels. It is 16 miles N. of Hull, and 193 N. of London.

HORNSEY, a village in Middlesex; 5 miles from London. Here was anciently an episcopal palace, and the manor has belonged to the see of London for many ages.

HORRY, a district of South Carolina, in the extreme E. part of the state, and on the Pades river; producing cotton and rice. Capital, Conwaysboro'. Area, 1000 square miles. Pop. 5755 in 1840.

HORSENS, a seaport of Denmark, in North Jutland, on the Cattogat, having manufactures of woollen goods, and a considerable trade. It is 20 miles S.S.W. of Arhusen.

HORSFORTH, a township in Yorkshire, with a manufacture of woollen.

HORSHAM, a borough in Sussex. Market on Saturday, noted for fine poultry. Here is the county gaol; and the spring assizes are held here. It returns one member to parliament. It is seated on the Adur; 20 miles N.W. of Brighton, and 36 S. of London.

HORWICH, a chapelry and populous manufacturing village of Lancashire, 5 m. W.N.W. from Bolton. Pop. (1851) 3,951.

HOSPITAL, a town of Ireland, in the county of Limerick. The ruins of a castle are still visible, which was built on the site of a commandery of the Knights Hospitalers.

HORSsprings, a village of Bath county, in the state of Virginia. Here are some remarkable mineral springs, of a temperature of 103° to 106° of Fahrenheit, and also a hot and cold spring in juxtaposition. They are in a wild and picturesque county, and much frequented; 169 miles W.N.W. from Richmond. —Also the name of a village, capital of Hot-springs county, Arkansas; 6 miles N. of the Wastita river. There are above 50 springs of a temperature varying from 110° to 150° of Fahrenheit. There are also chalybeate and sulphur springs in the region; 53 miles W. by S. of Little Rock.

HOTTENTOTS, COUNTRY OF THE, or HOTTENTOTIA, a large region in the S. extremity of Africa, extending N. from the Cape Colony, beyond the mouth of Orange river, and westward to about the meridian of 27. 30. which divides it from Caffraria. The Hottentots are as tall as most Europeans, but are more slender; and the characteristic mark of this nation is the smallness of their hands and feet, compared with the other parts of their body. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, resembling that of a European who has the jaundice in a high degree. There are not such thick lips among the Hottentots as among their neighbours the negroes, the Caffres, and the Mozambiques; and their mouth is of the middling size, with the finest set of teeth imaginable. Their heads are covered with hair more woolly, if possible, than that of the negroes. With respect to shape, carriage, and every motion, their whole appearance indicates health and content. They are excellent swimmers and divers, and practise bathing several times in the day. The women braid or plait their hair as an additional elegance, and adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. Both the men and women generally go bareheaded, and seldom wear any shoes. Both sexes wear rings on their arms and legs, chiefly made of thick leather straps, cut in a circular shape; but rings of iron, copper, or brass, of the size of a goose-quill, are considered more genteel. Girls are not allowed to use any rings till they are marriageable. Their habitations are adapted to their wandering pastoral life: they are merely huts, resembling a round beehive, from 18 to 24 feet in diameter, and so low, that a middle-sized man cannot stand upright in them. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit or lie round it in a circle. The low door is the only place that admits the light, and the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The order of these huts, in a craal, or clan, is most frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. From the atrocious system of indiscriminate slaughter practised toward them by their oppressors, the Dutch boors, or settlers, their numbers have been much reduced: they do not number more, at present, than about 12,000. Their condition has also been much degraded, from their hardships. They are now considered to be admirably adapted for agricultural pursuits, and are found dispersed among the British colonists as menial servants. Their appearance has more of the Tartar than of the African race, and their language is very peculiar, differing from all other languages, in the singular clucking sound in most of their words. They are now under the protection of the British government, and their condition is gradually ameliorating. Among the tribes inhabiting their territory is that of the Boschmen, Bosjesmans, or Bushmen, who lead a predatory life, and are thought to be of the same stock as the Caffres. They differ from the Hottentots considerably in their stature and appearance: they are about 4 feet 6 in. to 4 feet 9 inches in height, and are perfectly black. Their principal town is Lattakoo, or Litakun, in lat. 27. 10. S. long. 24. 30. E. They excel the Caffres in their arts, and are accustomed to the chase from their earliest infancy; and acquire surprising dexterity in the use of the bow and poisoned arrow. They are governed by hereditary chiefs, who have but little authority. The other tribes are the Namaquas, Griquas, &c. In 1778, Lieutenant Paterson visited a Hottentot village, in Little Namaqua Land, in the N.W. part of the country; it consisted of 12 huts, and about 150 inhabitants. The ensign of authority worn by their chief was a cane, with a brass top, given to him by the Dutch East India Company. The Hottentots amused them, part of the night, with music and dancing; their visitors in return, treated them with tobacco and dacka, or hemp leaves, which they prefer even to tobacco. Their music was produced from flutes, made of the bark of trees, of different sizes. Another tribe of Hottentots, near the mouth of Orange river, were observed by Lieutenant Paterson, in his journey to the N.W. in 1799. Their huts were loftier, and thatched with grass, and were furnished with stools made of the backbones of the grampus. Their mode of living was in the highest degree wretched, and they were apparently the most dirty of all the Hottentot tribes. Their dress was composed of the skins of seals and juckals, the flesh of which they eat. Since these periods there have been many travellers in most parts of this region; particularly Mr. Campbell, a missionary, who made a large portion of the N.E. quarter of this territory known to Europeans; and, more recently, by Dr. Smith and others, in the N.; and Sir J. Alexander, who travelled along the W. coast of Africa as far as Walvisch bay. To the E., and on the banks of Orange river, is another tribe, called Koras, who may be reckoned to rank higher than any of the other Hottentots known in the S. of Africa. Their features are of a superior cast; they are more cleanly in their appearance, and neater in their dress and domestic utensils; their huts are also constructed with greater care, and with a view of being more durable. They seem to be a mixed breed, between the Hottentot and Caffre. The Hottentots, in general, are described as a mild, simple, affectionate, and inoffensive race; but extremely indolent in their habits, and limited in their faculties. But Christianity has been introduced through the exertions of the Moravians and other missionaries, who have endeavoured, with some degree of success, to ameliorate the condition even of some of the wilder tribes. Of the seventy species of antelope enumerated by naturalists, 50 belong to Africa, and nearly 30 are found on the Karroos, or steppes of this territory: they are principally gregarious, and are extremely cautious. Among the species are the spring-bok, which migrates in countless multitudes in search of pasture; the gems-bok, which has remarkably long sharp horns, and, when attacked by dogs, will sit on its hind quarters, and defend itself; the koeodo, an animal rather larger than a deer, of a mouse-colour, with three white stripes over the back, and the male having very large twisted horns. Three species of the horse genus, the zebra, the dauw, and the quagga, are found on the arid plains; and the graceful zerapha, or camelopard, is occasionally found in small herds, feeding on the prickly acacias of the desert. Lions are abundant and formidable; the leopard and cheetah, the lynx, and the hyæna, prey on the numerous antelopes, and other animals. Among other species may be enumerated the rhinoceros, horse, domestic horned cattle, common sheep, and a peculiar species of sheep covered with hair instead of wool. The hippopotamus, or river-horse, is frequently seen here. Among the birds are vultures, ostriches, (whose eggs are excellent food,) and the loxia, a species of gregarious bird. Among the insects are a species of termites, which do no injury to wood, as in the East Indies, but, by raising a number of hills, they impede the progress of vegetation. The black, or rock scorpion, is nearly as venomous here as any of the serpent tribe, of which there are numerous kinds.

HOUAT, an island of France, between Belle-isle and the continent. It is 10 miles in circumference, and is defended by a fort.

HOUDAIN, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais; 6 miles S. of Bethune.

HOUDAN, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise; 21 miles W. of Versailles.

HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING, a town in the county of Durham; 266 miles from London. There is a chalybeate spring in the vicinity; from which it derives its name.

HOUGHTON, WEST, a township in Lancashire, a manufacturing place of great trade.

HOUSLOW, a town of Middlesex, with a market on Thursday; situate on the edge of a heath, of the same name, on which are many vestiges of ancient encampments. A large trade in posting was formerly established here, being the first stage out of London. This is now extinct, from the Great Western railway passing near it, and the place has therefore greatly declined; 10 miles W. by S. of London.

HOU-QUANG, a province of China, which occupies nearly the centre of the empire, and is divided into two parts, the N. and S., by the river Kian-ku. It is a flat, open country, watered by lakes, canals, and rivers; and has plenty of wild fowl and cattle. The soil is remarkably fertile; gold is found in the sands of the rivers; and there is such a variety of all sorts of commodities, that it is called, by the Chinese, the storehouse of the empire. It contains 15 cities of the first class, and 114 of the second and third. Vou-tchang is the capital.

HOURN, LOCH, an arm of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, in Inverness-shire, extending 20 miles inward from the Sound of Skye.

HOUSSA, a considerable town of Negroland; capital of a country of the same name, extending along the N. side of the Niger. It is 200 miles E. of Tombuctoo. Long. 4. 20. E. lat. 16. 10. N.

HOUSTON, a city of Texas, United States. It is situated at the head of tide water, on Buffalo Bayou. It contains four churches, and about 4000 inhabitants.

HOU-CHNEOT, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Tehe-kiang. The quantity of silk manufactured here is almost incredible, and it is the chief place for making writing pencils. It stands near a large lake, called Tai; 110 miles S.E. of Nan-king. Long. 120. 15. E. lat. 30. 55. N.

HOWARD, a county of the state of Missouri, on the Missouri river. Capital, Fayette. Pop. 13,108.

HOWDEN, a town in E. Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday. It gives name to a small district called Howdenshire. The bishops of Durham had formerly a palace here, the remains of which are now occupied as a farm-house. Here is a large church, like a cathedral, part of which is in ruins. It is seated near the Ouse, and the Hull and Selby railway; and surrounded by a level country in a high state of cultivation; 21 miles S.S.E. of York, and 175 N. by W. of London.

HOWTH, a village in Ireland, county of Dublin; seated on a peninsula called the Hill of Howth, on the N. side of Dublin bay, and which has a fine harbour for a packet station.

HOXTER, a fortified town of the Prussian states, on the Weser; 23 miles E. by N. of Paderborn.

HOY, one of the Orkney islands, situate between the island of Pomona and the N. coast of Caithness-shire. It is 9 miles long, and 6 broad. Here is a stupendous rock, called the Beary; and on the W. coast is a great conic hill, called Hoy Head, which is a seamark. Long. 3. 9. W. lat. 58. 46. N.

HOYA, a town of Hanover, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the Weser; 37 miles N.W. of Hanover. Long. 9. 20. E. lat. 52. 47. N.

HOYER, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick; celebrated for its oyster-fishery; 4 miles W. of Tonderen.

HOYERSWERDA, a town and castle of Prussia, on the Black Elster; 17 miles N.N.W. of Bantzen.

HOYM, a town and castle of Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt; seated on the Godel, at its junction with the Selke; 7 miles E. of Quedlinburg.

HRADISCH, a town of Moravia, capital of a circle of the same name, which produces excellent wine. It is a frontier fortress towards Hungary, and stands on an island in the river Moraw; 30 miles S.S.E. of Olmutz. Long. 17. 30. E. lat. 49. 7. S.

HUAHEINE, one of the Society islands, in the South Pacific; 30 leagues from Tahiti. It is 21 miles in compass, and has a commodious harbour, called Owharra bay, on the W. coast. Long. 151. 8. W. lat. 16. 44. S.

HUBERT, ST., a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, with a celebrated abbey; seated in the forest of Ardenne, on the rivulet Homme; 14 miles W. of Bastogne.

HUBERTSBERG, a town of Saxony in Meissen, with a magnificent hunting-seat, built by Augustus III., then electoral prince. It is 22 miles E. of Leipsic.

HUDDESFIELD, a borough in West Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday. Here is a large circular hall, in which narrow and broad cloth, serges, kerseymeres, &c., which are extensively manufactured in the town and neighbourhood, are weekly exposed to sale. It stands on the Colne, 3 miles from the Calder, from which it has a canal to Ashton-under-Lyne. In addition to the parish church, there are twelve others in the town and its immediate neighbourhood; and there are several meeting-houses for the different denominations of dissenters. The charitable institutions are numerous, and a mechanics' institute was established in 1825, to which a valuable library has since been attached. It returns one member to parliament. It is 41 miles S.W. of York, 25 N.E. of Manchester, and 189 N.N.W. of London.

HUDSON, a city of New York, in Columbia county. The streets are spacious, and cross each other at right angles; and the houses are supplied with water brought in pipes from a spring 2 miles distant. The trade is considerable, and vessels of the largest size can unload here. It is connected with Boston by the Hudson and Berkshire railway. It is seated on an eminence on the E. side of Hudson river; 30 miles S. of Albany, and 120 N. of New York.

HUDSON, a river of the United States, which passes its whole course of 250 miles in the state of New York. It rises between the Lakes Ontario and Champlain, flows S. by Lausenburgh, Albany, and Hudson, and enters the Atlantic Ocean at New York. It is navigable for ships to Hudson, and for sloops to Albany.

HUDSON'S BAY, a bay of North America, lying between 51. and 69. N. lat.; discovered in 1610 by Captain Henry Hudson. The entrance of the bay from the ocean is between Resolution isle on the N., and the Labrador coast on the S., forming the extremity of the strait distinguished by the name of its great discoverer. On the S. is James bay; on the E. side it is bordered by Labrador, on the S.W. by New South Wales, and on the N.W. by New North Wales. In 1670 a charter was granted to a company, for the exclusive trade of this bay. The territories claimed by this company extend from 70. to 115. of W. long.; and as far as 49. N. lat.; thus comprehending a length of 1300 or 1400 geographical miles, by a medial breadth of 350 miles. Over this large extent of country are established a number of forts or houses, for the purpose of trading with the thinly scattered tribes of Indians, for furs and peltry, in exchange for blankets, ammunition, &c. These furs, &c., are exported principally to Britain. The Indians, who subsist entirely on the produce of the chase, have preserved their characteristics and habits much more than those of the more southern regions. The Esquimaux are a different and widely extended race, inhabiting the shores and islands of the Arctic ocean and Greenland. The principal settlement of the Company is Fort Churchill, on the W. shore of the bay. In December, 1770, Mr. Hearne set out from Prince of Wales fort, to explore the Copper-mine river; he arrived at this river in June, 1771, and traced it to the Arctic ocean, in long. 119. W. lat. 72. N. In 1789, Mr. Mackenzie explored the Mackenzie river to its mouth, in long. 135. W. lat. 71. N. In 1839-40, the extreme N.W. coast of America, and also the coasts between the Copper-mine and Back rivers, have been explored by Messrs. Dease and Simpson, and Dr. Rae, who have thus completed our knowledge of the northern boundaries of the continent.

HUDWICKSWALD, a seaport of Sweden, the chief town of Helsingia, with a good harbour, on the gulf of Bothnia. The inhabitants carry on an advantageous trade in timber, flax, linen, butter, fish, &c. It is 185 miles N. by W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 46. E. lat. 62. 6. N.

HUÉ, or HUE-FO, a city of Southern Asia, the capital of the Anamese empire. It stands on a river of the same name, about 10 miles from the Chinese sea. It is probably the most remarkable city in the East. It was fortified in the European style, early in the present century, upon the model of Strasbourg, it is said, by some French officers under the orders of the king of Cochin China. These fortifications are admirable and excellently constructed, and completely furnished with a vast amount of artillery, shot, shells, &c., all manufactured in the country. The chief defect is its great size, as it would require 50,000 men to defend it, but against Asiatic troops it is impregnable. In 1821, the barracks, arsenal, and granaries, would have done no discredit to the best military establishment in Europe. The palace is situated within a strong inner citadel, and the bridges which approach the city, are all paved with marble. The river is narrow at the entrance, but is wide and imposing within, and a large fleet of galleys is maintained here. The neighbourhood of the capital is everywhere in a high state of cultivation, with rice, mulberries, cotton, fruit, &c., and thickly interspersed with villages, and is the only city in India, which has good roads, canals and bridges in its vicinity. The royal mausoleum is about 10 leagues N. of Hué, and is in grounds magnificently laid out. The population is uncertain. Lat. 16. 19. N. Long. 107. 12. E.

HUELVA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the coast of the Atlantic, between the mouths of the Odiel and Tinto; 53 miles W. of Seville.

HUEN, or HVEEN, an island in the Baltic, with one scattered village; 3 miles from the coast of Sweden, and 9 miles S.S.E. of Elsinore. It is 6 miles in circumference, and was ceded by the Danes to the Swedes, in 1658. On it was Tycho Brahe's observatory. See URANIBURG.

HUESCA, an old fortified town decayed and decaying, in the N. of Arragon, in Spain; situated in a plain on the Isuela. Its works have gone into ruins, but it is still a bishop's see, has a university, two large schools, a cathedral, and 9000 inhabitants, with manufactures of cloth and leather. It is 30 miles N.E. of Saragosa.

HUESCAN, a town of Spain, in Granada, with a castle; 42 miles N.E. of Guadix.

HUESSEN, a town of Holland, in Gelderland, seated on the Rhine; 7 miles N.E. of Nimeguen.

HUETA. See GUETA.

HUETINBERG, a town of the Austrian states, in Carinthia; 20 miles N.N.E. of Clagenfurt.

HUFFINGEN, a town of Baden, in the principality of Furstenburg; 4 miles N.N.W. of Furstenburg.

HUGHESBURG. See CATAWISSA.

HULL, or KINGSTON UPON HULL, a borough and seaport in East Yorkshire, with markets on Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday. The foundation of this town is now satisfactorily proved to have been long anterior to the date commonly ascribed to it, viz. that of the period when Edward I. gave it the appellation of King's-Town-upon-Hull: its more ancient name was Wyke. The principal streets are broad, well paved, and lighted with gas. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, &c.; and, including the parish of Sculcoates, has six churches, ten meeting houses for dissenters, and a Jews' synagogue. It was the first town that shut its gates against Charles I. The commerce of this place is considerable, and it is deemed the fourth port in the kingdom. Besides its communication with the Yorkshire rivers and canals, it has access also to the Trent, and all its branches; and is connected with the grand chain of railways, by the Selby and Leeds railways; so that it has the import and export trade of many of the northern and midland counties. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic; but it was also one of the privileged ports for trading to the East Indies, and has traffic with the southern parts of Europe, and with America. More ships are sent hence to Greenland than from any other port, that of London excepted. The harbour is artificial; and here are docks for building and repairing ships. Among the public buildings are the Trinity-house, for the relief of seamen and their widows, an armoury, a naval storehouse, a custom-house, and an exchange. It is seated on the northern side of the Humber, about 20 miles from its mouth, the town extending almost in a direct line along the river Hull, and lying on a level tract of ground, washed on two of its sides by the Humber and the Humber. It is now well secured from inundations, by embankments. It is 38 miles S. E. of York, and 171 N. of London.

HULLEDYPTURA, a town of Hindostan, in Canara; seated in a plain of rice-ground to the E. of a considerable creek, which runs N. from the entrance into Honawera lake; 54 miles N. by W. of Kundapura.

HULPEN, a town of Belgium, in Brabant; 10 miles S.E. of Brussels.

HULST, a town of the Netherlands, in Dutch Brabant, strong by its situation and fortifications. It was shamefully surrendered to the French in 1747, and taken by them in 1794. It is seated on a plain, which may be overflowed, and on a canal that communicates with the Scheldt; 15 miles W.N.W. of Antwerp.

HULTSCHIN, a town of Silesia, near the river Oppa, 13 miles E. of Troppau.

HUMBER, a river formed by the junction of the Trent and Ouse. It is a large estuary, which divides Yorkshire from Lincolnshire, and enters the German Ocean at Spurn Head.

HUMMELSTOWN, a town of Pennsylvania, in Dauphine county, on the S. side of the Swetera; 10 miles E. by N. of Harrisburg, and 110 miles N. of Washington.

HUMPHREYS, a county of Tennessee, traversed by the Tennessee river; capital, Reynoldsburg; area, 475 square miles. Pop. in 1840, 5795.

HUNDSMARCK, a town of the Austrian states, in Styria, near the river Muech; 17 miles W. by S. of Judenburg.

HUNEFELD, a town of Germany, in the district of Fulda, with a collegiate church; 10 miles N. of Fulda.

HUNGARY, a country of Europe, forming an important part of the Austrian dominions. At different periods this name has been applied with a very different signification. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries Hungary comprised part of modern Poland and European Turkey, and was divided into ten separate governments, or kingdoms, viz. Hungary Proper, Croatia, Slavonia, Dalmatia, Bosnia, Bulgaria, Moldavia, Galicia, and Lodomeria, besides the principality of Transylvania. Several of these provinces have long since been detached from Hungary. The name is now more particularly confined to Hungary Proper, Croatia, and Slavonia. The whole country forms one large plain sloping to the S. and surrounded by the Carpathian mountains to the N.W., N., and N.E.. On the S. it is separated by the Danube and the Save from the Turkish provinces of Servia and Bosnia. Hungary is still called a kingdom though it forms an integral portion of the Austrian empire. This arises from the royal dignity being hereditary in the house of Austria, and has been so since 1526, and in 1723 it has been on the same footing with the other states of the empire. The Hungarians hold this dignity of an independent kingdom to be of great importance. It was formerly divided into Upper and Lower Hungary; but this division has been superseded by that of the following circles:—1. Circle this side the Danube; 2. Circle beyond the Danube; 3. Circle this side the Theiss; 4. Circle beyond the Theiss; 5. Province of Slavonia; 6. Province of Croatia. These are divided into counties, of which there are thirteen in the first circle, and eleven in each of the others. The principal rivers are the Danube, the Drave, the Marosch, the March, the Köros, the Szamos, the Theiss, the Waag, and the Temes. The chief lakes are Balaton and Neusiedler See, W., Palitsch on the S.W., and Grünzee, among the Carpathians. There are also several extensive marshes here, as that of the isle of Schut on the W., and that of Saxetje on the E. of the kingdom. The greater part of the kingdom, for such it is still called, consists of two extensive levels, that of Upper Hungary, much the smallest, and traversed E. and W. by the Danube, and produces abundant crops of corn. The great plain of Hungary is larger than Ireland, contains 36,000 square miles, and the Danube crosses it from N. to S., and has scarcely a single point 100 feet above its level. Thus many of the rivers, as the Körös and the Theiss, form a succession of swamps, and, with these exceptions, this plain contains some of the richest land in Europe. The whole of its rivers, except the Poprad, fall into the Danube. There are some canals, the chief connecting the Theiss and the Danube. The climate among the mountains is of course bleak; but in the S. it is in general mild; in the sandy districts extremely hot; on the banks of the rivers and near the marshes there is much humidity: indeed, this is a prevailing characteristic of the climate of the level part of Hungary. The country abounds in all the necessaries of life, and the wine, especially that called Tokay, is excellent. There are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron; and also of opal, at Czerwenitz, which gem is almost peculiar to this country. The trade principally consists in cattle, hogs, sheep, flour, wheat, rye, wool, and wine; and these are almost wholly sent to the Austrian provinces. No country in the world is better supplied with mineral waters and baths; and those of Buda, when the Turks were in possession of it, were reckoned the finest in Europe. The internal taxes were laid by the people themselves, but recently the Austrian government have had to employ the military to collect the imposts from the unwilling population. The Hungarian people consist of seven distinct races, the principal of which are the Magyars or those more peculiarly Hungarian, amounting, from the imperfect estimates, to 4½ millions, more than half of whom are protestants and speak a peculiar language. The next are the Slovacks, or Slavonian inhabitants of the N.W. part of Hungary, 1½ millions in number. The Croatsians are nearly as numerous. The Wallachians, also speak a peculiar language, nearly identical with the ancient Latin; are about 900,000 in number; and the remainder consist of Germans, Rasniaks and Jews, amounting altogether to ten millions, which population occupies an area of 78,822 Eng. square miles, or 133 to each square mile. The religious classes may be divided into four. The Roman Catholic, which is the state religion, embraces 6-10ths of the population. The Protestants 2½ millions, Greek church 2½ millions, and Jews a quarter of a million. The Roman Catholics are governed by three archbishops, the archbishop of Gran being primate, and 14 bishops. The United Greeks have 4 bishops, and the Orthodox Greeks 1 archbishop and 6 bishops, all of whom have had seats in the diet since 1792. By the law of 1840, Jews are admitted to all civil rights and privileges. The ancient inhabitants were the Pannonians, and assumed an independent form in the 11th century, under Alfred a Magyar prince, but his family becoming extinct in 1301, Charles of Anjou was elected, and a few reigns subsequently, the kingdom comprised the whole of what is now Austria. It was attacked by the Turks unsuccessfully for a time till the battle of Mohacz in 1526. By the aid of Austria they were driven out by John Sobieski and prince Eugene, and finally secured to Austria by the treaties of Carlowitz and Passarowitz in 1718, since which it has remained on amicable terms with Austria up to within a very recent period, when the peculiarly Hungarian races, the Magyars, have raised various insurrections, and consequently caused great desolation throughout the country. It is far from being in a settled condition. See AUSTRIA.

HUNGERFORD, a town in Berkshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a good trade by its canal navigation. John of Gaunt granted a charter by the gift of a brass bugle horn, which is blown annually for the inhabitants to elect the constable, who is the chief officer. It is seated on the Kennet; 22 miles S.S.W. of Abingdon, and 64 W. of London.

HUNINGUEN, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine; seated on the Rhine. The strong fortress of Huninguen, which for a long time held out against the allies in 1815, was afterwards demolished in consequence of a stipulation in the treaty of Paris; 2 miles N. of Basel, and 14 E. of Altkirch.

HUNMANDY, a town in East Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday. The town is pleasantly situated on a rising ground, surrounded by a fine wood on the N.W., within 2 miles of the sea, and contains many good houses; 39 miles N.E. of York, and 207 N. of London.

HUNTERDON, a county of the state of New Jersey on the N. of the Delaware river. Soil, very fertile. Capital, Flemington. Pop. in 1840, 24,789.

HUNTINGTON, a town of New York, in Suffolk county, Long island. It is situated on a bay, in the sound; 38 miles E. by N. of New York.

HUNTINGDON, a town of Pennsylvania, capital of a mountainous county of the same name, which abounds with limestone, iron, and lead. It is situated on the Juniatta, at the mouth of Standing Stone Creek; 23 miles W.S.W. of Lewistown. Pop. 1145; of the county, 31,484.

HUNTINGDON, a borough, returning two members to parliament, and the capital of Huntingdonshire; governed by a mayor; with a market on Saturday, and a great trade in corn, coals, wood, &c. It was once a large place, said to have had 15 churches, which are now reduced to two; and there are the cemetaries of two other parishes, in one of which is an ancient steeple. Huntingdon is the birthplace of Oliver Cromwell. It is seated on the river Ouse, over which is a stone bridge to Godmanchester; 16 miles W.N.W. of Cambridge, and 59 N. by W. of London.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE, a county of England, 25 miles long, and 20 broad; bounded on the N.W. and N. by Northamptonshire, E. by Cambridgeshire, and S.W. by Bedfordshire. It contains 241,690 acres; is divided into four hundreds, and 107 parishes; and has six market towns. It sends two members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen. The S.E. part consists of beautiful meadows. The middle and western parts are fertile in corn, and adorned with woods; and the upland part was anciently a forest, peculiarly adapted for hunting. The N.E. part consists of fens, which join those of Ely; but they are drained, so as to afford rich pasturage, and even large crops of corn. In the midst of them are some shallow pools, abounding with fish; and a lake, 6 miles long, and 3 broad, called Whittleseamere. The principal commodities are corn, malt, and cheese; and it fattens abundance of cattle.

HUNTLY, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, beautifully seated on the Bogie, near its conflux with the Deveron; 38 miles N.W. of Aberdeen. The houses, built of granite quarried in the vicinity, are remarkably neat, and many of them elegant. The Gordon schools, founded by the Duchess of Gordon, is an exceedingly handsome structure, as is also the Free church, and the Roman catholic chapel. It is lighted with gas.

HUNTSPELL, a town in Somersetshire; 7 miles N. of Bridgewater, and 143 W. by S. of London.

HUNTSVILLE, a town of the United States, capital of Madison county, Alabama. It stands 10 m. N. of the Tennessee river. The houses are neat, and many of them elegant; 153 miles N.N.E. of Tuscaloosa. Pop. in 1840, 2496.

HUNTSVILLE, a town of North Carolina, on Yadkin river; 30 miles N. of Salisbury, and 90 W. of Hillsborough.

HURDWAR, (the gate of the Ganges,) a town of Hindostan, in Bengal, in the province of Delhi, where the Ganges first enters the country. The holy bathing place, in the Ganges, is much resorted to by pilgrims; and in 1819 upwards of 400 were crushed to death in the struggle to reach it. The fairs for the disposal of merchandise are sometimes attended by half a million of people. It is 105 miles N.E. of Delhi. Long. 78. 23. E. lat. 29. 53. N.

HURON, a lake of North America, which lies between 79. 30. and 85. W. long., and 43. and 46. 15. N. lat. It has a communication with Lake Michigan and Lake Erie. Its shape is somewhat triangular; 250 miles in length, and its circumference 800 miles. On the W. side is a chain of islands 150 miles long, called Manitoulin by the Indians, who consider them as sacred; on the S.W. is Sagulna bay, and a little more to the N.W. is Thunder bay. Few towns exist as yet on its shores.

HURST CASTLE, a fortress of Hampshire, 4 miles S. of Lymington. It stands on the extreme point of a neck of land, about a mile distant from the isle of Wight. In this castle Charles I. was confined previously to his being brought to trial.

HUS, or HUSSU, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia; the see of a Greek bishop. Here Peter the Great made peace with the Turks in 1711. It is situate on the Pruth; 70 miles S.W. of Benda. Long. 28. 34. E. lat. 46. 35. N.

HUSSINGABAD, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malwah, on the S. side of the Nerbuddah; 140 miles N.W. of Nagpore. Long. 77. 54. E. lat. 22. 42. N.

HUSTUM, a seaport of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a strong citadel. It has a trade in horses and oxen, and manufactures of leather, cotton, and linen. It stands on the river Ow or Auc, near the German ocean; 16 miles W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 20. E. lat. 54. 36. N.

HUTRANY, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Visiapour, 30 miles S.S.W. of Visiapour. Long. 75. 6. E. lat. 17. 5. N.

HUY, a town of Belgium, in the territory of Liege, with many paper-mills, and iron-foundries. It is seated on the Maese; 12 miles W.S.W. of Liege.

HYDE, a township in Cheshire; 3 miles from Stockport, on the M. S. & L. Ry. Cotton spinning is the staple trade, and coal abounds. There are 2 churches. Has increased rapidly in extent and importance. Pop. (1851) 11,564.

HYDERABAD, or HAÏDERABAD, a city of Hindostan, in the Deccan, the capital of the Nizam's dominions. It stands on the Musah, which falls into the Kristna, 197 miles W.N.W. of Masulipatam, and 270 S.E. of Aurungabad. Lat. 17. 15. N. long. 78. 35. E. It is 4 miles long and 3 broad, and surrounded by a stone wall, which is not much protection against artillery. The streets are narrow and badly paved, the houses mostly of wood. The chief public buildings are the palace and numerous mosques; this having been the stronghold of Mohammedanism in the Deccan. It was founded in 1585 by Cuttub Shah, and taken and plundered by Aurungzebe in 1687. The late Nizam transferred his court hither from Aurungabad, and since that it has increased in wealth. Pop. including the suburbs, 200,000.

The territory of which it is the capital, known as the Nizam's dominions, embraces the provinces of Hyderabad and Beeder, part of Beejapour, Aurungabad, and Berar. Area, 108,000 square miles. Pop. 3,000,000. It was badly governed by the native princes, and rebellions were frequent, and in 1808 the British became bound to assist the Nizam against his enemies, and it has since remained under our protection.

HYDERABAD, a fort of Hindostan, in the province of Sindh, and the usual residence of the prince of Sindh; situate near the Indus; 6 miles E. of Nusserpour, and 62 N.E. of Tutta.

HYDRA, an island of the Grecian archipelago, but little better than a sterile rock, the inhabitants of which are all mariners, and derive wealth from commercial enterprise. The port is fortified, and the houses are built on the side of a steep acclivity. Pop. in 1834, 20,000. It is 11 miles long, and 2 broad.

HYPOLITE, St., a town of France, in the department of Gard; seated on the Vidourle, near its source; 12 miles S.W. of Alais.

HYPOLITE, St., a town of France, in the department of Doubs, on the river Doubs; 40 miles E. by N. of Besançon.

HYs, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the Arabian Irak, on the Euphrates; 120 miles S. of Bagdad.

HYTE, a borough in Kent; market on Thursday. It is one of the principal cinque ports, but is no longer of maritime importance, and, with Folkestone, returns one member to parliament. The church is of great antiquity and beauty, and contains in a vault a remarkable pile of bones, 28 feet long, 6 broad, and 9 high, the remains of Dunes and Britons, killed in a battle on the beach, in A.D. 824. There are extensive barracks adjoining the town, and the remains of Saltwood castle, about 2 miles distant. It is 12 miles W.S.W. of Dover, near the South Eastern Railway, and 71 from London.

I.

IAGO, St., DE LA VEGA. See SPANISH TOWN.

IBARRA, the capital of a fertile province of the same name, in South America, in Ecuador, republic of Colombia, is situated on an extensive and delightful plain, watered on the E. by the river Taguando, and W. by Ajavi. The streets are wide and convenient, and the buildings of good construction; 42 miles N.E. from Quito.

IBERVILLE, an outlet for the overflowing waters of the Mississippi, during the seasons of inundation, entering Lake Maurepas. It gives its name to a parish of the state of Louisiana, the soil of which is level and very fertile. Capital, Plaquemine. Area, 350 square miles. Pop. in 1840, 8495.

IBERIA, NEW, a village of Louisiana, in the district of Attacapas; 200 miles W. of New Orleans.

IBERIAN MOUNTAINS, the most extensive mountain range of Spain, beginning to the W. of Ebro, and extending to the shore of the Mediterranean.

INIZA. See IYIÇA.

INBURG, a small town of Hanover, in the principality of Osnaburg; 10 miles S.W. of Osnaburg.

ICELAND, an island of the North Atlantic ocean, belonging to Denmark. It lies between 63.30. and 66.40. N. lat. and long. 16. and 23. W. It is of an irregular oval figure, about 380 miles in length, and 230 miles in its greatest breadth. The coast is indented all round with numerous deep gulfs, bays, and creeks, several of which form excellent harbours. The island is mountainous, stony, and barren; but in some places there are excellent pastures. The chief rivers are in the E. part; the Skalfunda, Oxarford, and Bruna, all flowing from S. to N. Some are white with lime, others smell of sulphur. The principal mountains, clothed with perpetual snow, are called Yökuls; and of these Snäfial, hanging over the sea on the S.W. coast, is esteemed the highest, being computed at 6660 feet. Mount Hecla, about 5000 feet in height, is the most noted, and is a volcano: there are also several other volcanoes, and the convulsions caused by them in 1783 were so dreadful and multiplied, that it was feared the island would fall to pieces; the eruptions were the most tremendous of any recorded in history. Hot springs abound, and the most remarkable are those about 30 miles N.W. of Hecla, called the Geysers. The principal of these sends up, at intervals of about 6 hours, an immense jet or column of boiling water, of about 10 feet in diameter, to the height of 60, 100, or even 212 feet. The climate is not extremely cold, but the seasons are variable. The sea, at a small distance from the shore, is seldom frozen; and very little ice is ever seen near the W. coast, notwithstanding its proximity to Greenland. Iceland is governed as a dependency of Denmark. The inhabitants were estimated at 50,092 in 1824, and in 1824, 56,000. It was formerly divided into 4 amts, or provinces, answering to the cardinal points. The N. and E. are now merged into one, and the W. is presided over by the governor in person. It contained 19 syssels or shires, and these 184 parishes. Their houses are at a distance from each other, and many of them deep in the ground; but they are all miserable hovels of turf, without windows, and those of the common class are such wretched dens, that it is wonderful how any thing in the human form can breathe in them. The established religion is the Lutheran. The island constitutes one bishopric, and there are 300 clergy in the island. The principal school, held at a place called Bessestadt, near the W. coast, has three masters, who teach the classics, theology, and the Danish language. Rei-

Kiavik, on the S.W. coast, is the capital, and has little more than 300 residents, chiefly Danes. Most of the villages are on the sea coast, and the interior is very imperfectly explored. It was discovered, according to tradition, by a Norwegian pirate in 860, but was settled by the Norwegians in 874, and in 928 the inhabitants formed themselves into a republic, and had an althing, or general assembly of the nation held annually at Thingvalla, which was not abolished till 1800. It was annexed to Denmark, when Norway, to which it had belonged since the 13th century, was transferred to it. The Icelanders have, from their earliest history, successfully applied themselves to the cultivation of literature, an anomaly in the history of learning, but to which we are indebted for the early notions of the discovery and colonization of America.

ICHABO, a small island off the S.W. coast of Africa, in lat. 26. 18. S. and 15. 3. E. long. being about 480 miles N.N.W. of the Cape of Good Hope. It is celebrated as having been for a short period the site of a most lucrative trade for British shipping. In Nov. 1843, it was first visited for the purpose of procuring guano, a most fertilizing manure, produced in the course of ages, by the dung and bodies of Penguins, seals, &c. The quantity removed was about 200,000 tons, and has left it a barren, deserted, granitic rock, three quarters of a mile in circumference. The guano was also found on a few other islets and rocks on this coast, but is now chiefly procured from the Chincha isles on the coast of Peru.

ICOLMILL, or IONA, one of the Hebrides, near the S.W. point of the isle of Mull; only three miles long and one broad. Here are the ruins of an august nunnery, monastery, and cathedral, said to have been founded by St. Columba, about the year 735; also a small chapel, dedicated to St. Oran, containing many marble tombstones of the great lords of the isles; and adjoining it is a cemetery, in which many ancient kings of Scotland, Ireland, and Norway, are buried. Other ruins of monastic and druidical edifices can be traced; and many places are pointed out, noted for particular acts of St. Columba. This island was the retreat of learning, during the Gothic ignorance which pervaded Europe, after the overthrow of the Roman empire; and the seminary whence issued those pious monks and laymen who again revived learning, and propagated Christianity through many kingdoms of Europe.

IDA, a lofty and pointed mountain in the middle of the island of Candia; famous in ancient times as being the place on which Jupiter was brought up, and where there was a temple dedicated to Cybele.

IDUO, "Gem of the Mountains," a new territory of the United States, between lat. 37° and 43° N., and long. 102° E. and the Green river. It includes part of Utah. Area, 150,000 sq.

ms.; pop. 15,000 to 20,000. The name will be changed to Jefferson or Colorado.

IDANHA A VELLA, a town of Portugal, in Beira. The French took it by assault in 1704; 25 miles E. of Castel Branco.

IDRIA, a town of the Austrian states, in Carniola; celebrated for its rich quicksilver mines; 23 miles W. by S. of Laybach. Pop. in 1838, 4185.

IDSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, with a castle, the residence of the duke; situate in a district containing several forests, and iron-works. It is 16 miles N. of Mentz, and 22 S.W. of Wetzlar.

IF, a rocky island in the Mediterranean, on the coast of France, the most eastern of the three before the harbour of Marseilles, on which is a château.

IGLAU, a fortified town of Moravia, capital of a circle of the same name, with two convents and a college. Good cloth is manufactured here, and the commerce in corn and hemp is considerable. It is seated on the Iglau; 40 miles W.N.W. of Brinn. Long. 15. 32. E. lat. 49. 28. N.

IGLESIAS, a town of the island of Sardinia, and a bishop's see; 37 miles W.S.W. of Cagliari. Long. 8. 39. E. lat. 39. 18. N.

IFORD, ward and chapelry, county of Essex; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles from London.

ILFRACOM, a seaport in Devonshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It has a spacious natural basin, with a good pier and quay, projecting into the Bristol Channel. This port employs a number of brigs and sloops, chiefly in carrying ore from Cornwall, coals from Wales, and corn from Bristol; also a number of fishing skiffs. It is 49 miles N.N.W. of Exeter, and 202 W. of London.

ILHEOS, a province of Brazil, S. of that of All Saints' bay. Its chief town, of the same name, is seated at the mouth of the river Ilheos; 130 miles S.S.W. of St. Salvador. Long. 40. 15. W. lat. 14. 55. S.

ILKUCU, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Cracow, remarkable for its silver and lead mines; 15 miles N.W. of Cracow.

ILLANON BAY, an extensive bay on the S. W. side of Mindanao, or Magindanao, one of the Philippine islands, inhabited by a distinct race of people called Illanons by the Spaniards, and whose piracies have rendered them a terror on the surrounding seas. The chief city is Mindanao, the capital of the island, and where the sultan resides, but the principal resort of the piratical prahuas or vessels is a lagoon, separated from the sea by a very narrow peninsula on the east side of the bay. In this bay or laguna, these daring pirates have constructed many most ingenious modes of escape, and has led to great difficulties in the attempts to suppress them in the last 8 or 10 years.

ILLE, a town of France, in the department of eastern Pyrenees, on the river Teck; 10 miles W. of Perpignan.

ILLE-ET-VILAINE, a department of France, containing part of the late province of Bretagne. It takes its name from two rivers, which unite at Rennes, the capital of the department. Pop. in 1836, 547,250.

ILLER, a river of Germany, which rises in Tyrol, runs N. through Bavaria and joins the Danube near Ulm.

ILLESCAS, a town of Spain, in New Castile; 15 miles S.S.W. of Madrid, and 15 N.N.E. of Toledo.

ILLINOIS, a river of N. America, formed by the junction of several streams near the S. end of Lake Michigan; after taking a S.W. course of 250 miles, it enters the Mississippi, 30 miles above the influx of the Missouri. Below the entrance of Vermilion river it is navigable for steamboats throughout the year. From this point a canal is in progress to Chicago and Michigan, a distance altogether of 100 miles, and will be one of the most important works in this country.

ILLINOIS, one of the western United States, bounded on the N. by Wisconsin; E. by S. Michigan and Indiana; S. by the Ohio river, which separates it from Kentucky, and W. by the Mississippi river, dividing it from Iowa and Missouri. It is 350 miles long, by 180 broad, and contains 50,000 square miles, or 32,000,000 acres. It is divided into 87 counties. Springfield, near the centre of the state, is the capital. The surface of the state is generally level, and there is no mountain; in the north part, prairie predominates; in the south it is generally covered with timber. The banks of the Illinois and Kaskaskia; in some places present sublime and picturesque scenery. The peninsula between the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, has been surveyed by the United States as military bounty lands. The soil throughout the state may be considered as fertile. The most important production of the state is lead. Galena is the centre of this trade, and in one year 13,000,000 lbs. of lead have been smelted. Salt springs are worked near Shawneetown, and coal abounds in the bluffs. The climate is healthy, but the winter is cold; average of the year 50° or 53° Fahrenheit. The Illinois is its largest river; the others are the Rock, Kaskaskia, Wabash, and others. Its principal depôt is Chicago and Michigan, and the most commercial place on the Mississippi is Alton. An extensive system of railways is undertaken, but none yet completed. The region was first settled in 1720. It was made into a territory in 1809, and admitted into the Union in 1818. Pop. in 1840, 476,183, and in 1845, 643,482.

ILOGAN, a parish of Cornwall, 264 miles from London. One of the richest copper mines in the county is in this parish.

ILLYRIA, a portion of the Austrian empire, styled a kingdom. It lies on the eastern shore of the Adriatic sea, and is divided into the governments of Laybath and Trieste. It is bounded on the N. by Austria and Styria; E. by the latter and Croatia; W. by the Tyrol and Italy; and S. by the Adriatic. Its north part contains part of the central chain of the Alps, and the S. slope of this mountain range extends through the government of Trieste to the sea. The Carnic and Julian Alps contain very numerous and singular cavities, some of which are celebrated, as that of Adelsberg in Carniola. It is well watered in the N. part by the Drau or Drave, which traverses Carinthia. The second river is the Sau or Save. Istria is not well watered. There are few important lakes. The South part of Illyria differs essentially in its agriculture from the North, which are much controlled by the difference of climate. Carinthia on the N. is damp and cold. Istria and Friuli in the S. are more like Italy. The grain produced in Illyria is insufficient for its consumption. Wine, oil, and fruits are abundant in the S. parts. The chief wealth of Illyria consists in its mines. In the mountain chain rich iron ore is abundant, though the government limitations cramp all speculation, and the produce is far beneath the capabilities either of the country or the people. Commerce in the shipping interest is in great activity, chiefly through a joint stock company called "The Austrian Lloyds," established in 1837. The population, though improving, is not prosperous. Their language isolates them from literature. The population in 1851 was 1,293,292, on an area of 10,801 square miles. The prevailing religion is the Roman Catholic. The cities of Laybach and Trieste are the seats of the respective governments, but the chief court for appeals throughout the kingdom is at Klagenfurth. See Appendix, AUSTRIA.

ILM, a town of Saxony, on a river of its name; 13 miles N.W. of Rudolstadt, and 14 S. by E. of Erfurt.

ILMEN, a lake of Russia, in the government of Novgorod; 48 miles long, and from 12 to 18 broad. Near it stands the city of Novgorod. It communicates with Lake Ladoga by the river Volkhof.

ILMENAU, a town of Saxe-Weimar, in Henneberg. Near it is a mineral spring, also a copper and silver mine. It is seated near the source of the Ilm, 17 miles E.S.E. of Smalkalden.

ILMSTEN, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of narrow cloths. It is seated among hills, near the river Ille; 26 miles S.W. of Wells, and 136 W. by S. of London.

ILSLEY, a town in Berkshire, with a market on Wednesday; seated between two hills, 14 miles N.W. of Reading, and 54 W. of London.

ILST, a town of the Netherlands, in Friesland, seated on the Weymer, 12 miles S. of Lewarden.

ILSTROP, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, 27 miles S.S.E. of Gotheburg.

ILTEN, a town of Hanover, in the province of Luneberg, 16 miles S.S.W. of Zell.

ITZHOFFEN, a town of Prussian Saxony, 8 miles N.E. of Halle.

IMBRO, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, about 20 miles in circumference. It is mountainous and woody, and affords plenty of game. Long. 25. 44. E. lat. 40. 10. N.

IMERITIA, a country of Asia, lying E. of the Black sea; bounded on the S. by Turkey, W. by Mingrelia, N. by Ossetia, and E. by Georgia, of which it is, properly speaking, a part.

IMMENSTADT, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of the Upper Danube; situate on a small river which soon after joins the Iller; 12 miles S. of Kempten.

IMOLA, an episcopal town of Italy, in the delegation of Ravenna, with a strong citadel. It is surrounded by walls, towers, and ditches; contains 16 churches and 17 convents, and is seated on the Santerno; 13 miles W. by S. of Ravenna, and 45 N.N.E. of Florence.

INAOUA, GREAT and LITTLE, some islands of the Bahama group, but which are really uninhabited.

INCHERRATOCK, a small 'lan' of Scotland, in Forfarshire, within the mouth of the South Esk, near Montrose, with which it communicates by a drawbridge. It has also a large and convenient dry dock.

INCHCOLM, a small island of Scotland, in the Frith of Forth, near the village of Aberdour, on the coast of Fife. Here is the ruin of a famous monastery, founded by Alexander I., in 1123, to commemorate the hospitable treatment he received here from a hermit.

INCHGARVIE, a small island of the Frith of Forth, nearly in the middle of the passage over the Queensferry.

INCHKEITH, a small island of the Frith of Forth, lying midway between the ports of Leith and Kinghorn. Here is a lighthouse, and also a ruinous fort.

INCHMARNOCK, a small island of Scotland, on the S.W. side of Bute. The ruins of a chapel dedicated to St. Marnock are still to be seen; and on the W. side are vast strata of coral and shells.

INDAL, a town of Sweden, in Medelpadia, on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Gulf of Bothnia; 16 miles N. by W. of Sundswald.

INDAPOUR. See INDRAPOUR.

INDEN HOTUN, a town of Chinese Tartary, capital of the Mantcheou Tartars; 420 miles E.N.E. of Peking.

INDIA, the ancient name of the country now called Hindostan, and that region of Asia lying to the S. of Tartary, and between Persia and China, with its independent islands. It contains, besides Hindostan, the Birman Empire, Siam, Cochin China, Tonquin, Thibet, Japan, and Ceylon, but is now, in its geographical features, more usually, and far more properly, described under those respective heads, which see.

INDIA, BRITISH, a very extensive empire, embracing a considerable part of the region described in the foregoing article; comprehending the greater portion of the peninsula of Hindostan, (or India within the Ganges;) Ceylon, a large territory acquired from the Burmese in 1826, on the eastern side of the Bay of Bengal; portions of the Malay peninsula, at Singapore; Palo Penang, the province of Assam, and other districts in the N. on the frontier of the Chinese dominions. The area of these together, excluding that of Sindh recently added to the British empire, is estimated at 608,470 English square miles, with a population of 93,929,000. The territories which are under the British influence, or in which the government is administered by British rulers, are those of Berar, Oude, Mysore, Sattarah, the dominions of the Nizam, &c., surrounded by our territories and including Sindh, may be estimated at 533,000 square miles, and 42,000,000 people. The separate particulars of this immense dominion will be found under their respective heads. The general history of the peninsular and adjacent country, is under the head of Hindostan, as also the general features of its inhabitants. Of that portion belonging to England previously to 1773, the government was vested in the East India Company; and as early as 1707, the three presidencies of Madras, Bombay, and Calcutta were in existence, and each was governed by a president or governor, with a council appointed by the Company. In 1726 a charter was granted which gave to these councils the powers and the exercise of penal judicature, so that the presidents being commanders-in-chief, all power was in their own hands. In 1773, from the great increase of the territory, two bills were introduced into parliament, by which the crown laid claim to the territory, and interfered greatly with the privileges of the Company as it had previously existed. In 1784 Mr. Pitt's famous India bill established the board of control, appointed by the king, the president of which was, in fact, the secretary of state for India. Under the act of 1833, (3 and 4 Will. IV. c. 85,) the Company held, under the superintendence of the Board of Control, the political government and patronage of British India, until the 30th of April, 1854; the charter was then temporarily renewed, but in 1858 an Act was passed, abrogating the rule of the Company altogether, and vesting the supreme sovereignty of India in the queen; the executive being in the hands of a secretary of state and council in London, and the governor-general and council at Calcutta. See HINDOSTAN, BENGAL, MADRAS, BOMBAY, &c.

INDIAN or WESTERN TERRITORY of the United States, is a tract of country W. of the settled portion of the states, and has been set apart by the general government for the permanent residence of those Indian tribes that have been removed, chiefly from the S.W. states of the Union. Here they are to be governed by their own choice, without other control from the United States, than such as may be necessary to preserve peace on the frontier or between the tribes. It is about 600 miles long, S. to N., and from 300 to 600 miles broad, W. to E. It has the Platte river on the N., the states of Missouri and Arkansas on the E., the Red river on the S., and a desert country on the W. It contains, within the habitable district, an area of 120,000 square miles, or 78,000,000 acres. The principal rivers are the Red river, Canadian, Arkansas, Neosho, Kansas, and Platte rivers. A considerable portion of it is prairie, but the margins of the streams are generally wooded. The climate is healthy, but cold in winter. The number of the different tribes now occupying it is about 70,000, exclusive of the wild tribes of the prairies. The Chickasaws and Choctaws, kindred tribes on the E. side of the Mississippi, now dwell together on the W., and some of them are extensively engaged in agriculture. They are settled between the Canadian and Arkansas rivers. The Creeks inhabit the tract to the N. of the Chickasaws and Choctaws; and the Seminoles, a constituent part of the Creek nation, dwell amongst them. The country assigned to the Cherokees is N. and E. of that assigned to the Creeks. They are further advanced than the rest in civilization, and have a fine agricultural country, and well cultivated farms. The Osages occupy a region N. of the Cherokees, and are among the least civilized of the Indians. The Shawnees are between the Osage and Kansas rivers. The Senecas are mingled with them. North of the Shawnees are the Delawares. The Kansas, Pawnees, Omahaws, and the Ottos, who inhabit about the Platte river, are native tribes, and retain much of their original habits. The whole number of Indians now remaining in the United States' territory E. of the Rocky mountains, was estimated, on November 23, 1841, at 342,058; and this is all that is left of a once numerous and happy race.

INDIANA, one of the United States of North America, formed in 1816. It is bounded N. by the N.W. territory, Michigan Lake and territory; E. by the state of Ohio; S. by Ohio river, which separates it from Kentucky; and W. by the state of Illinois. The most considerable towns are Indianapolis (the seat of government), N. Albany, the largest town, Madison, Richmond, Vincennes, Vevay, Brookville, and Jeffersonville. All these, with the exception of Vincennes, are new and have risen suddenly into notice. The principal rivers are the Ohio, Wabash, White River, Whitewater, Tippacanoe, Illinois, Plein, Theakiki, St. Joseph's, and St. Mary's. The climate is generally healthy and pleasant: the principal productions are wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, barley, buck-wheat, potatoes, pulse, beef, pork, butter, whisky, and peach-brandy. It is divided into 87 counties. The principal works of improvement undertaken by this state, is the Wabash and Eric canal, 187 miles; the Whitewater canal from Lawrenceberg to Brooksville, 30 miles; the Central canal, designed to connect the Wabash and Eric canal with the Ohio, length when completed, 290 miles, and others. The Madison and Indianapolis railroad, 95 miles, is nearly completed. Pop. 685,866.

INDIANA, a county of Pennsylvania. Coal and salt are abundant in it. Capital, Indiana; area, 770 sq. miles. Pop. in 1840, 20,782.

INDIANAPOLIS, capital of Marion county and of the state of Indiana. It stands on the E. side of White river, and is the centre of the most important national roads. It is regularly laid out, a mile square, with a circular area, with the governor's house in the centre. Pop. in 1840, 2692.

INDIAN KEY, a place of fashionable resort on the coast of Florida. It is a mudrepore rock, artificially fertilized, and has a superb hotel for visitors. It is one mile S. of New Matecumbe, 75 S.W. of Cape Florida, and 75 N.E. of Key West.

peans to that vast tract of country in Asia which is situated to the S. of Tartary, between Persia and China (see HINDOSTAN,) as well as to a great number of islands in the Indian ocean, extending from the peninsula of Hindostan as far E. as New Guinea, and from the bay of Bengal and the China sea as far S. as New Holland. The most western of them are the Maldives, and the most eastern the Moluccas; between which are several very large ones, as Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, and Celebes; besides many others of considerable importance as to riches, though much inferior as to extent. They will be described under their respective articles.

INDIES, WEST, a denomination under which is comprehended a large chain of islands, extending in a curve from the Florida shore, on the northern peninsula of America, to the Gulf of Venezuela on the southern. Columbus gave this name to them, under the notion that they formed part of the Indian continent, which it was his object, in his first voyage to find; and this opinion was so general, that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of an agreement granted to Columbus, upon his return, gave them the name of Indies. Even after the error which gave rise to this opinion was detected, and the position of the New World was ascertained, the name has remained, and the appellation of West Indies is given by all the people of Europe to these islands, and that of Indians to the inhabitants, not only of these islands, but of the continent of America. The principal of these islands are Curaçon, Trinidad, Tobago, Grenada, St. Vincent, Barbadoes, Martinico, Dominica, Marie Galante, Guadeloupe, Antigua, Barbuda, St. Christopher, St. Eustatius, St. Bartholomew, St. Martin, Anguilla, St. Thomas, Porto-Rico, Haiti or St. Domingo, Jamaica, Cuba, and the Bahamas; a full description of which will be found under their respective denominations.

INDORE, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malwah; capital of the Holkar's dominions. It is now inconsiderable in size and population. The territories of Holkar comprise an area of 4250 square miles, having Sindia N. and E., and the Bombay presidency W. and S. By the treaty of 1818, it is placed under British protection, and the state to furnish us, if necessary, with a contingent of 8000 horse. It is seated on a river that flows into the Nerbuddah; 28 m. S.S.E. of Ougein. Long. 75. 50. E. lat. 22. 42. N.

INDRAPOUR, a seaport on the W. coast of Sumatra; capital of a district of the same name; 160 miles N.W. of Bencoolen.

INDRE, a department of France, including part of the ci-devant province of Berry. It has its name from a river which rises in this department, flows into that of Indre-et-Loire, and joins the Loire 4 miles below the influx of the Cher. Its area is estimated at 2860 square miles; its population 205,000. Chateauroux is the capital.

INDRE-ET-LOIRE, a department of France, including almost the whole of the province of Touraine, and bounded by the department of the Loire-et-Cher, the Indre, the Vienne, and the Maine. It consists mostly of fine plains, interspersed, however, with small hills. The principal rivers are the Loire, the Vienne, the Cher, and the Indre. Tours is the capital.

INDUS, or SINDE, a great river of Asia, having its source in a range of the mountains of Tartary, between 38. and 39. of N. lat. From Thibet it takes a S.W. course, and enters Hindostan in about 35. N. lat. It has always been considered as the western barrier of Hindostan: 60 miles from its source it is joined by the Cabul, when it is no longer fordable. Between lat. 25. and 26. it enters the province of Sinde, and here we find it again divided into two considerable branches; the principal, or western, divides into numerous streams, which form a delta similar to that of the Nile, or Ganges: they are, however, very shallow, and only navigable by boats. It is said to be 1350 miles in length, and some parts of it are capable of bearing vessels of 200 tons; but there is very little commerce transported by it. Its water is very wholesome. On the E. of this river is a great sandy desert, extending 500 miles in length, and from 60 to 150 in breadth.

INGATESTONE, a small town in Essex; 23 miles from London, on the Eastern Counties railway.

INGELFINGEN, a town of Wirtemberg, on the Kocher; 20 miles S.S.W. of Mergentheim.

INGELHEIM, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; seated on an eminence, on the river Salva; 9 miles E. of Bingen.

INGHAM, a county of Michigan. Capital, Vevay; area, 560 square miles. Population in 1840, 2498.

INGLEBOROUGH, one of the highest mountains of England, in Yorkshire; 8 miles N.N.W. of Settle. It is 2361 feet above the level of the sea.

INGLETON, a village in West Yorkshire, at the foot of Ingleborough mountain. It is tolerably well built, and has manufactures of cotton yarn. Near it are several collieries, which supply the surrounding country to a considerable distance with coals; 10 miles W.N.W. of Settle, and 245 N.W. of London.

INGLIS ISLAND, an island on the N. coast of New Holland, near the entrance of the Gulf of Carpentaria.

INGOLSTADT, a town of Bavaria. It was one of the strongest places in Germany; surrounded by a morass, but the fortifications are demolished. The houses are built of stone, and the streets are large. Here was formerly a university, which, in 1800, was transferred to Munich. The population of this ancient, decayed and melancholy town was reduced (in 1832) to 9000. It is seated on the Danube; 9 miles E. of Neuberg, and 45 N. by W. of Munich.

INGRANDE, a town of France, department of Maine-et-Loire; situate on the Loire; 15 miles W. S. W. of Angers.

INGRE, a town of France, department of the Loiret; 4 miles N. W. of Orleans.

INISHANNON, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with a considerable linen manufacture; seated on the Bandon; 7 m. N. W. of Kinsale.

INISTIOGE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kilkenny; 80 miles from Dublin. The lace manufacture is carried on here.

INKERMAN, a village at the head of the harbour of Sebastopol in the Crimea, an important position during the siege of that city in 1854-5, and the scene of a battle on Nov. 5, 1854, in which the Russians were defeated.

INN, a large river of Austria, which rises in the Swiss canton of Grisons, flows N. E. through Tyrol and Bavaria, and joins the Danube at Passau, where it is nearly 900 feet wide. It becomes navigable at Hall, in the Tyrol, and its whole course is more than 250 miles.

INSCH, a village and parish of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; 26 miles W. N. W. of Aberdeen.

INNSBRUCK, or INSPRUCK, a fortified town of Austria, capital of Tyrol, with an extensive palace, formerly the residence of the archdukes of Austria. There is also a university, museum, and other public edifices. The principal manufacture is that of cotton, but it has also manufactures of silk and woollen stuffs, and all kinds of glass wares, and the transit trade from Germany to Italy is considerable. Inspruck was entered by the French, in 1805, and was the scene of several heroic efforts of the Tyrolese against the French and Bavarians, in 1809. It is seated in a pleasant valley, on the river Inn, over which is a wooden bridge which gives name to the town; 62 miles S. of Munich.

INSTRERBURG, a town and circle of East Prussia, on the Angerap, in the government of Gumbinnen. Its chief trade is in corn and linseed. The circle is of great extent, comprehending a population of 150,000. Part of it is covered with forests; but the soil of the rest is fertile, and the pastures here are extensive: manufactures are hardly known. The town is 50 miles E. of Konigsberg. It contains 5300 inhabitants.

INTERLACHEN, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, in the canton of Bern; 28 miles S. S. W. of Lucern, and 32 S. E. of Bern.

INVERARY, a burgh of Scotland, and the county town of Argyshire; situate on the N. W. side of Loch Fyne, at the influx of the Aray. It has some manufactures, and a trade in wool, timber, and oak bark; but its chief support is from the herring fishery. It is contributory, with Campbeltown and Irvine, in returning one member to parliament. Near the town is Inverary castle, the seat of the Duke of Argyll; and in the neighbourhood is a considerable iron-work. The planting around Inverary is very extensive and admirably variegated; 45 miles N. W. of Glasgow, and 75 W. N. W. of Edinburgh.

INVERBERVIE. See BERVIE.

INVERGORDON, a village of Scotland, in Ross-shire, at the mouth of the Frith of Cromarty; 8 miles S. S. E. of Tain. It has a good harbour and a regular ferry over the Frith to the town of Cromarty.

INVERKEITHING, a burgh and seaport of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with a considerable trade in coal and salt. Before the entrance of the harbour is a bay, which affords safe anchorage for ships of any burden, in all winds. The harbour itself is commodious, and has two quays. It is situate on the N. side of the Frith of Forth, 18 miles N. W. of Edinburgh, and contributes, with Stirling, &c., in returning one member to parliament.

INVERLEITHEN, a village of Scotland, on the river Tweed, at the influx of the Leithen; 5 miles E. of Peebles. Here is an extensive woollen manufacture; and near it is a sulphurous spring.

INVERNESS, a burgh of Scotland, capital of a county of the same name; situate on both sides the river Ness, near its entrance into the Frith of Moray. It has a commodious harbour, and a good salmon fishery. The trade is very considerable, and the town is rapidly improving. The principal manufactures are those of hemp and flax; and there are also woollen and other manufactures, tanneries, brick-works, &c., which furnish employment to many of the inhabitants. On an eminence are the ruins of the old castle, demolished by the rebels in 1746; and over the Ness is a stone bridge of seven arches. The court-house, nearly in the centre of the town, is a handsome modern building, with a fine tower, terminated by an elegant spire, which sustained considerable injury from the earthquake in 1816. It contributes, with Fortrose, Nairn, and Forres, in returning one member to parliament. Near this town, on Culloden Heath, the duke of Cumberland gained a decisive victory over the rebels in 1746. To the W. of the town is the hill of Craig Phatric, on the summit of which are the extensive remains of a vitrified fort, so called from the marks of fusion which the cement and stones exhibit. Inverness is 50 miles N. E. of Fort William, and 156 N. by W. of Edinburgh. Pop. 14,324.

INVERNESS-SHIRE, the most extensive county of Scotland; bounded on the N. by Ross-shire; E. by the counties of Nairn, Moray, and Aberdeen; S. by those of Perth and Argyll; and W. by the Atlantic Ocean. It also includes several of the Hebrides. Independent of the islands, it is 80 miles long, and 50 broad. It comprehends the districts of Badenoch, Lochaber, and Glenaly, which are subdivided into 31 parishes. The prin-pal towns are Inverness, Fort William, (or Inverlochry,) and Fort Augustus. The N. part is mountainous and barren, and is the most elevated ground in Scotland, Ben-Nevis rising to the height of 4370 feet above the sea. This county has several considerable lakes, and is divided, in a manner, into two equal parts, by those of Ness, Oich, Lochy, and Lochiel, united by the Caledonian Canal, which forms a communication between the two seas. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are, in general, fertile; the high grounds feed many sheep and black cattle, and numerous herds of goats are found in every district. The mountains and forests are inhabited by great numbers of red deer; the alpine and common hare, and other game, are also abundant. Limestone, iron-ore, and some traces of different minerals, have been found in this county, with beautiful rock crystals of various tints; but no mines have hitherto been worked with much success. The principal rivers are the Spey, the Beauly, the Ness, and the Lochy.

INVERUGIE, or ST. FERGUS, a village of Scotland, on the E. coast of Aberdeenshire, at the mouth of the Ugie; 1 mile N. of Peterhead. It has an extensive bleachfield, and a considerable brewery. Near it are the ruins of Inverugie Castle.

INVERURY, an ancient burgh of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; seated at the conflux of the Don and the Ury. It has much improved within a few years, and joins with Elgin, Banff, &c., in returning one member to parliament; 15 miles W.N.W. of Aberdeen.

IONA. See ICOLMKILL.

IONIA, a county of Michigan, containing an area of 576 square miles. Pop. 1932. The capital, Ionia, is on the Grand river, which is navigable; 136 miles W.N.W. of Detroit.

IONIAN ISLANDS, a recently constituted republic of Europe; comprising, besides a number of islets, the seven principal islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca or Thiaki, Cerigo, and Paxo; of which Corfu, lying opposite to Albania, is the most northerly. The territorial extent of this small state is estimated at 1097 square miles, and the population, in 1836, at 204,266. The climate is in general mild, but the transitions from heat to cold are sudden; hot and scorching winds are sometimes destructive to vegetation; and, at certain seasons, there are violent rains and thunder. They are all subject to slight earthquakes, which are sometimes confined to a single island. The soil in the plains and valleys is fertile in vines, corn, olives, currants, cotton, honey, wax, &c. Pasturage is in general scanty; goats and sheep are reared in considerable number; but horses and cattle are brought from the continent. The wild animals are foxes, hares, and rabbits. Prior to the French revolution, these islands were subject to Venice, but were ceded to France by the treaty of Campo Formio (1797). After repeatedly changing masters, the republic was placed under the protection of Great Britain, by the arrangements of the Congress of Vienna; and a constitution for this small state was drawn up and ratified by the British government in July 1817. See Appendix.

IOWA, one of the United States of America, bounded on the N. by the Mini Sota (Minnay Sotor) territory; on the E. by the Mississippi river; S. by the state of Missouri; W. by the Missouri and Sioux rivers. It is 250 miles long, and 190 broad; area, 47,500 square m. Iowa City is the seat of government. The surface is moderately undulating, unlike other regions. The prairies extend over nearly three-fourths of the surface. The soil is generally good, and the productions are those usual in temperate climates: except on the low bottom lands, the region is heathy. A portion of it is exceedingly rich as a mineral region. The great lead county of the N. part of Illinois extends into Iowa. Zinc and iron ore abound. The chief rivers are the Desmoines, the Checauque or Skunk, the Iowa, and numerous other tributaries of the Mississippi and Missouri. Burlington, 1429 miles above New Orleans, on the Mississippi, is a place of much trade. Du Buque is the metropolis of the mineral region. The University of Iowa is at Mount Pleasant. The county formed part of the French possessions acquired (as Louisiana) by the U.S. in 1803, by treaty. The first purchase of the lands from the Indians was in 1832, and the settlement made soon after. Iowa separated from Wisconsin as a territory in 1838, and was admitted into the Union in Dec. 1846. Pop. in 1844, 78,819, and in 1845, 81,920.

IOWA CITY, the capital of the state of Iowa. It stands on the E. bank of the Iowa river which is always navigable. The neighbourhood furnishes good stone and timber. Up to 1839, this place was the hunting ground of the Indians. The situation of the young metropolis is commanding; 33 miles W. of Bloomington, 86 S.S.W. of Dubuque, and 75 N. by W. of Burlington.

Ips, a town of Austria, near the conflux of the Ips with the Danube; 22 miles W. of St. Polten.

IPSALA, a town of European Turkey, in Rumania, and a Greek archbishop's see. Near it are mines of alum; and red wine is an article of commerce. It is seated on the Marissu; 43 miles S. of Adrianople.

IPSARA, an island of the Grecian Archipelago; 15 miles N.W. of the island of Scio. To the W. is another small island called Anti-Ipsara.

IPSHEIM, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth, 17 miles N.N.W. of Anspach.

IPSWICH, a burgh and principal town of Suffolk; governed by two bailiffs, a high steward, recorder, &c.; with a market on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It was once surrounded by a wall, traces of which are yet to be seen. It is irregularly built, and has declined from its former consequence: it now contains 12 parish churches, several meeting-houses for dissenters, a library, several hospitals, a free school, a commodious market-place, a guildhall, a custom-house, and a county jail. Much corn and malt is sent hence to London, and great quantities of timber were formerly sent to the king's dock-yard at Chatham. It has a considerable coasting trade, a small share of foreign commerce, and sends ships to Greenland. Vessels of large burden are obliged to stop at some distance below the town. It is the birth-place of Cardinal Wolsey. It is seated on the Orwell; 26 miles S.E. of Bury St. Edmund, and 69 N.E. of London.

IRAWADY, a township and town of the United States, in Massachusetts; situated on a river of the same name, about a mile from the sea; 23 m. N.E. of Boston. Pop. 3600.

IRAHATTY. See IRRAWADDY.

IRAC, a province of Persia, comprehending the greater part of the ancient Media. It is bounded S. by Fars and Khuzistan; E. by Khorassan and the Great Salt Desert; W. by Kurdistan, and N. by Azerbaijan, Ghilan, and Mazanderan, and divided into five districts, Apahan, Tehraun, Naen, Mullager, and Keranshah.

IRAC-ARABI, or BAGDAD, an important province or pachalic of Asiatic Turkey, of a triangular form; it extends over an area of more than 100,000 square miles, and comprises the whole of the ancient Babylonia and Chaldæa, and the greater part of Assyria Proper, and Susiana; it lies between 30. and 38. N. lat., and 40. and 48. E. long. It is traversed by the Euphrates and Tigris, which, by their inundations, aiding the natural fertility of the soil, make it capable of being made one of the finest countries in the world; but Turkish ignorance and oppression are quite subversive of all energy and industry. The population of the whole country does not exceed 1,300,000, a number hardly equal to the population of either Nineveh or Babylon. But the prophetic curse of desolation is upon the country, and its wretched, abject condition, too truly show its fulfilment. Bagdad is the capital; which see.

IRBIT, or IRBITSKAIA, a town of Russia, in the government of Perm, on the river Irbis, and the frontiers of Siberia. In the vicinity is a large iron-work, which yields nearly 2000 tons of iron a-year; 142 miles N.E. of Ekaterinenburg.

IRENY, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Thursday; seated in a valley, at the source of the Ellen; 10 miles N.E. of Cockermouth, and 303 N.N.W. of London.

IRELAND, the second in magnitude of the British isles, is situated to the W. of Great Britain, in the Atlantic ocean. It is bounded on the N.W. and S. by the Atlantic, and on the E. by the North Channel, the Irish sea, and St. George's Channel, which separate it from England. Its greatest length from N.E. to S.W., is 306 miles, and its greatest breadth is 207 miles: it contains 18,484,343 English acres. Ireland is divided into four provinces; namely, Ulster, to the N.; Leinster, to the E.; Munster, to the S.; and Connaught to the W.; and these are subdivided into 32 counties. Ulster contains the counties of Down, Armagh, Monaghan, Cavan, Antrim, Londonderry, Tyrone, Fermanagh, and Donegal; Leinster has those of Dublin, Louth, Wicklow, Wexford, Longford, East Meath, West Meath, King's county, Queen's county, Kilkenny, Kildare, and Carlow; Munster, includes Clare, Cork, Kerry, Limerick, Tipperary, and Waterford; and Connaught has Leitrim, Roscommon, Mayo, Sligo, and Galway. These are again subdivided into 316 baronies, and these into 2532 parishes. The climate of Ireland is mild and temperate, but more humid than in England. It is, on the whole, of a mountainous character, but well watered with lakes and rivers; and the soil, in most parts, is very good and fertile: even in those places where the bogs and morasses have been drained, there is good meadow ground. It produces corn, hemp, and flax, in great plenty; and there are so many cattle that beef and butter are exported to foreign parts; and not only the English, but other ships, frequently come to be victualled here. The other commodities are hides, wool, tallow, wood, salt, honey, and wax. The commerce and manufactures have for many years been greatly on the increase: the staple branch of industry is the manufacture of fine linen cloth, which is brought to great perfection. This country is well situated for foreign trade, on account of its many secure and commodious bays and harbours. Its principal lakes are Lough Lean, Lough Ern, Lough Neagh, and Lough Coribb; and its chief rivers are the Shannon, Liffey, Boyne, Suire, Nore, Barrow, Blackwater, and Lee. The mountains are Slicbh Donard, 2909 feet, county of Down; Croagh Patrick, county of Mayo, 2510 feet; Carran Taal, 3410 feet, and Mangerton, 2550 feet, county of Kerry; Lagnaquilla, 3070 feet, county of Wicklow; and numerous others. The mineral productions of Ireland were little known till of late; some of the mines are very productive. In the royalty of Glendalough, in the county of Wicklow, are two veins of rich lead ore, at one of which the lead is raised at an expense of 17. 5s. per ton; and, within twelve fathoms, two parallel veins, equally rich, were discovered in 1827. Gold has been found in this county. There are likewise productive calciferous, and quarries of marble, slate, and freestone; and numerous mineral springs, chiefly chalybeate. Formerly this kingdom had a parliament, which was subordinate to that of Great Britain; but in 1800 it was deemed expedient, for the welfare of Ireland, that it should be united to Great Britain. two parliaments passed acts for that purpose, and the two kingdoms, at the commencement of 1801, were styled the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and 32 peers (four of them bishops) and 105 commoners of Ireland, are elected to represent that country in the Imperial Parliament, assembled in England. The lord lieutenant of Ireland, as well as the council, is appointed, from time to time, by the king. General education has been much neglected. Great efforts have been made, for some years past, to remove this, chiefly by two societies established in Britain, who have under their patronage a great number of schools, in a highly prosperous state. The established religion is the same as in England. The Irish protestant church is under the government of four archbishops, viz. of Armagh, primate of all Ireland; Dublin, primate of Ireland; Cashel, and Tuam; and eight bishops, viz. Meath, Down, Kilmore, Derry, Ferns, Limerick, Cloyne, and Killaloe; but the great majority of the people are Catholics. The latter were long excluded all civil and military distinctions. This system, however, no longer exists. For pop., see Appendix.

IRELAND, NEW, a long narrow island of the eastern seas, N. of New Britain, extending from N.W. to S.E. about 190 miles, and in general very narrow. The natives are Papuas, who go entirely naked, smearing their faces, and powdering their heads with white clay; their huts have only an opening to crawl in on their hands and knees. Their canoes, however, are neatly formed of a single tree, sometimes 90 feet long, and furnished with outriggers. See BRITAIN, NEW.

IRISHTOWN. See KILKENNY.

IRJAB, a town of Affghanistan, in Cabul; seated near a western branch of the Indus; 110 miles S.S.W. of Cabul.

IRKEN, or IBRIEN. See YARKAN.

IRKUTSK, the largest and least populous government of the Russian empire; comprising all the E. part of Siberia, from the Northern ocean to the frontiers of Chinese Tartary, and from the boundaries of the government of Tobolsk to the Eastern ocean. This large territory was gradually conquered, and appropriated by the Russians in their desultory excursion from Tobolsk. It is divided into the four provinces of Irkutsk, Nerchinsk, Yakutsk, and Okhotsk. Pop. in 1838, 507,300.

IRKUTSK, a town of Siberia; capital of the government of the same name, and the see of a bishop. It is a place of considerable commercial importance, from the caravans passing through it, which trade to China, and from its being the seat of supreme jurisdiction over eastern Siberia. It has an annual and important fair in June. There are several churches and other edifices of stone, and the wooden houses are large and convenient. The inhabitants are estimated at 15,000. It stands on the river Angara, near the Lake Baikal; 900 miles E.S.E. of Tobolsk.

IRROUOIS. See LAWRENCE, ST.

IRRAWADDI, or IRABATTY, a considerable river of Asia, which rises in Thibet, flows S. through the kingdom of Birmah and Pegu, and enters the bay of Bengal by several mouths. On its banks are produced great quantities of the finest teak timber, so much esteemed in ship-building. The principal market for this valuable timber is Rangoon, at the most eastern mouth of the river.

IRTYSCH, a river of Siberia, which issues from the Lake Saisan, in Chinese Tartary, runs N.W. between the two countries, above 300 miles, then flows by Omsk, Tobolsk, and Samarof, below which it joins the Oby.

IRUN, a town of Spain, in Guipuzcoa, the first from the French frontier. Its name in Basque signifies the 'good town,' but it is a misnomer, as it is poor and uninteresting, and is only supported by the travellers entering and departing from Spain. Pop. about 4000. It has been the scene of much military adventure. It was attacked Aug. 30, 1813, by Soult, but he was completely repulsed. It has been shown, that during the French invasion, 549,570 Frenchmen entered from Irun alone, of whom only 236,555 came out.

IRVINE, a river of Scotland, in Ayrshire, which passes by Newmills and Kilmarnock, to the town of Irvine, below which it enters the Frith of Clyde.

IRVINE, a burgh of Scotland, in Ayrshire; contributory, with Ayr, &c., in sending one member to parliament. The chief trade is the exporting of coals to Ireland. Here is a dockyard, a large tan-work, and manufactures of carpets, muslins, silks, lawns, &c. It is seated near the mouth of the river Irvine; 10 miles N. of Ayr, and 24 S.W. of Glasgow, near several railways.

IRWELL, a river in Lancashire, which rises above Bolton, flows thence to Manchester, and joins the Mersey, below Flixton.

IS SUR TILLE, a town of France, in the department of Côte d'Or; seated on the Tille; 12 miles N. of Dijon.

ISABELLA, a town on the N. coast of Hispaniola; founded by Christopher Columbus, in 1493. Long. 71.2. W. lat. 19.55. N.

ISCHIA, an island belonging to Naples, 2 miles in circuit, lying 18 miles from Naples. It is mountainous; but abounds in minerals, sulphur, fruits, and excellent wines. It was taken by a British and Sicilian force in 1807. Fresh water is scarce, and the ruin is collected in cisterns; but the air is healthy; and there are several hot baths, on which account it is much resorted to by invalids. Pop. about 20,000.

ISCHIA, an episcopal city of Naples, capital of the above island; with a strong fort. It stands upon a rock, which is joined to the island by a bridge, and is like a pyramid of houses piled one upon another. At the end of the bridge, next the city, are iron gates, which open into a subterranean passage, through which the city is entered. Pop. 3000. Long. 14. 2. E. lat. 40. 41. N.

ISENBURG, UPPER, a principality of Germany, on the borders of Hanau; subject partly to Hesse-Cassel, partly to Hesse-Darmstadt. It is generally fertile, and contains 217 square miles, and 47,500 inhabitants.

ISENBURG, NEW, a small town in the foregoing principality; 3 miles S. of Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

Isco, a town of Italy, in Bresciano, on the S. E. side of a lake of the same name; 10 miles N. W. of Brescia.

ISER, a river of Bavaria, which rises on the confines of Tyrol, and, passing by Munich and Landschut, joins the Danube between Straubing and Passau.

ISER, or ISAR, (CIRCLE OF,) one of the modern divisions of Bavaria; bounded partly by the circles of the Regen and the Upper Danube, and partly by the Austrian states. It comprises most of the southern part of the old duchy of Bavaria, and is divided into 26 districts; its chief town, Munich, being the capital of the kingdom. The S. is mountainous, and consequently cold; the N. forms a large plain, with few elevations, possessing great fertility. The principal rivers are the Inn, the Isar, and the Lech.

ISERE, a department of France, including part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is so named from a river which rises in Savoy, crosses this department by Grenoble, Moirans, and St. Marcellin, and joins the Rhone, above Valence. It is one of the richest departments of France in respect of minerals; most of the metals being here procured, and forming the chief occupation of the inhabitants. Gold and silver were worked here till the beginning of the present century. At present, iron, copper, zinc, and lead, are the chief products. Grenoble is the capital. Pop. in 1836, 573,645.

ISERLOHN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, with manufactures of iron, tin, velvets, silks, and stuffs. It is seated on the Buaren; 41 miles E. by N. of Dusseldorf.

ISERNIA, a town of Naples, in the Molise, at the foot of the Appenines. In 1805 it suffered much by an earthquake; 12 miles W. of Molise.

ISONY, a town of France in the department of Calvados; 15 m. W. by N. of Bayeux.

ISIS, See THAMES.

ISKARNO, a commercial and fortified town of Little Tibet on the Upper Indus; about 130 miles N. W. of Ladak, but of which little is known.

ISKENDERON. See ALEXANDRETTO.

ISLAY or ISLA, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S. W. of Jura, from which it is separated by a narrow channel, called the Sound of Isla. It is 21 miles long, and 15 broad. On the E. side the surface is hilly, and covered with heath, but the greater part of the island is flat, and, when uncultivated, covered with a fine green sward. In the centre of the island is Loch Finlagan, about 3 miles in circuit, with an islet of the same name in the middle, where the great lord of the isles resided, but the palaces and offices are now in ruins. Isla has mines of iron, lead, copper, emery, quicksilver, and black-lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand for manure. Much flax is raised here, a great number of cattle fed, and a large quantity of whisky distilled. The principal village is Bowmore, which has a convenient harbour and quay.

ISLAMABAD, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal; capital of the country of Chittagong; situate on the Currumpooly, near its entrance into the Bay of Bengal. Long. 91. 55. E. lat. 22. 22. N. Pop. 12,000.

ISLANDS, BAY OF, a bay of New Zealand, at the N. extremity of the most northern of the three islands that go under that name. In 1772 M. Dufresne Marion, with two French sloops, put into this bay, and, with 28 of his crew, was murdered by the natives. It contains Russell, once the temporary seat of government, and several missionary and emigrant stations.

ISLE ADAM, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise; seated on the Oise; 20 miles N. by W. of Paris.

ISLE BOUCHARD, a town of France, in the department of Indre-et-Loire; surrounded by the Vienne; 21 miles S. S. W. of Tours.

ISLE DIEU, a small island of France; 14 miles from the coast of Poitou. It was taken by the English in 1795, but soon after evacuated.

ISLE DE FRANCE. See FRANCE, ISLE OF.

ISLE JOURDAIN, a town of France, in the department of Gers; seated on an island in the river Save; 8 miles N. of Lombes.

ISLEWORTH, a village in Middlesex; seated on the Thames; 9 miles W. of London. Here are many elegant villas; and near it is Sion-house, the magnificent seat of the duke of Northumberland.

ISLINGTON, a large village in Middlesex, N. of London, to which it now forms a suburb. The New River is received at the S. W. end of it into a large reservoir, whence its water is conveyed, in pipes, to all parts of the metropolis.

ISMAIL, a strong town of European Turkey, in Bessarabia. The Russians took it by storm in 1790; and it is said that the long siege, and the capture, did not cost them fewer than 20,000 men. The brave garrison merited the highest honours, but they were massacred by the Russians; and the city was abandoned to the fury of the brutal soldiery, but it has partly recovered from this barbarous devastation. Ismail is seated on the N. side of the Danube; 140 miles S. by W. of Bender. Pop. 12,000.

ISNIK, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, and a Greek archbishop's see. It is the ancient Nice, famous for the general council held here in 325. Nothing remains of its ancient splendour but an aqueduct. The Jews inhabit the greater part of it; and silk forms the principal article of trade. It is seated in a country fertile in corn and wine; 60 miles S.E. of Constantinople. Long. 30. 2. E. lat. 40. 22. N.

ISNY, a town of Wirtemberg; with an abbey, called St. George. It is seated on the Isny; 18 miles N.E. of Lindau.

ISORDAKICK, or KROZKA, a town of Servia; 14 miles S.E. of Belgrade.

ISPAHAN, a city of Persia, long the capital of the Persian monarchy, which is now removed to Tehran. It is situated in the province of Irak and was formerly celebrated as the finest city in the East. It stands in the middle of a plain, surrounded on all sides by mountains at 8 miles distance, which rise gradually in the form of an amphitheatre. There is no river except a small one, called Zenderud, which supplies almost all the houses with water, and over which are several fine bridges. Ispahan was in its glory during the reign of Shah Abbas, in the 17th century, but now presents only the ruins of its former greatness. Within the last thirty years, however, it has begun to revive from its desolation, and a new palace has been erected, and the manufacture of a variety of cloths and other articles, but its trading prosperity is much impeded by monopolies and injudicious taxation. The population is very variously estimated at from 250,000 to 50,000, Morier stating it as 60,000, but 100,000 may be taken as the amount. This city is the emporium of the inland commerce of Persia, being the medium of communication with India, Cabul, and Turkey. It is 265 miles N.E. of Bassorah, and 300 S. of the Caspian sea.

ISSEL. See YSSEL.

ISSENGEAUX, a town of France, in the department of Upper Loire; 17 miles N.E. of Puy.

ISSOIRE, a town of France, department of Pay de Dome; a clean and well built town with manufactures of copper articles; 19 miles S.S.E. of Clermont. Pop. in 1836, 5741.

ISSOUDEX, a town of France, in the department of Indre, with a brisk trade in wood, cattle, cloth, hats and stockings. It is seated on the Theole; 17 miles S.W. of Bourges, and 135 S. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 9406.

ISTAPA, a town of Mexico, in the province of Culiacan; 40 miles E. by S. of Culiacan.

ISTRIA, a peninsula of Italy, between the Bay of Trieste, and the Quarnero Isles; bounded by Friuli on the W., and Carniola on the N.; being 200 miles in circumference. The air is unwholesome, especially near the coast; but the soil is fertile. Oil and wine are abundant, and there are some productive quarries of fine marble. The chief riches of the country, however, consist in its vast and valuable forests. One part of it belonged formerly to the Venetians; but the whole was ceded to the emperor by the treaty of Presburg, in 1805. In 1809 it fell into the hands of Napoleon, but was reconquered by the Austrians in 1814, and now forms the southern division of Austrian Illyria. The inhabitants (about 140,000) are chiefly occupied in agriculture, rearing bees, fishing, and the manufacture of silk, leather, tallow, and salt.

ITALY, one of the finest and most celebrated countries of Europe; lying between 7. and 10. E. long., and between 37. and 46. N. lat. On the N.N.W. and N.E. it is bounded by France, Switzerland, the county of the Grisons, and Germany; on the E. by the Adriatic sea; and on the S. and W. by the Mediterranean; its figure bearing some resemblance to a boot. Its length from Aosta, at the foot of the Alps, in Savoy, to the utmost verge of Calabria, is about 600 miles; but its breadth is very unequal, being in some places nearly 400 miles, in others not above 25 or 30. It was formerly the seat of the Roman empire, and, afterwards, of that more astonishing usurpation, the dominion of the pope. In the middle ages the kingdom of Lombardy and that of Naples held the two extremes, and the Ecclesiastical and Tuscan states occupied the centre. In more modern times the northern part became divided into a great number of states, differing considerably in their extent and importance. By the treaty of Campo Formio, in 1797, the Venetian territories to the E. and N. of the river Adige were ceded to Austria; and the remainder of the Venetian states, with the duchies of Modena, Milan, and Mantua, the principality of Massa, and the three legations of Ferrara, Bologna, and Romagna, in the pope's dominions, were erected into a government by the French, and called the Cisalpine Republic. This republic was overturned in 1799, but restored after the battle of Marengo, in 1800. In 1802 it received a new constitution, under the name of the Italian Republic, and Bonaparte, then first consul of France, was elected president. In 1805 the Italian Republic was erected into a kingdom, and the emperor of France assumed the title of King of Italy. In December following, the Austrian part of the Venetian states was added to its territories, by the treaty of Presburg. The kingdom was divided into departments, and the city of Milan was the capital. But the subsequent changes which took place in Europe again deranged the political situation of this country. The kingdom of Italy was overturned; and the country was divided into the following states:—The Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, the kingdom of Sardinia, the Roman States, the kingdom of the two Sicilies, the grand duchy of Tuscany, the states of Modena, the states of Parma, the duchy of Lucca, and the republic of San Marino. But Austrian oppression in Lombardo-Venetia, the cruel tyranny of the kings of Naples, and the gross misgovernment of the Roman states and the duchies, abetted by Austria, led to the eruption of 1859, in which France siding with Sardinia, as the exponent of popular liberty, drove the Austrians out of Lombardy; and the inhabitants of the duchies rising against their tyrants, expelled them from their thrones, and then by popular vote annexed themselves to Sardinia. The peace of Villafranca, on July 11, 1859, after the battle of Solferino, besides the cession of Lombardy, stipulated for the restoration of the ducal governments, and the institution of an Italian confederation, of which the pope was to be the head. But the people willed it otherwise; the victorious career of Garibaldi dethroned the king of Naples, detached a large part of the states of the Church; and Sardinia in 1860 intervening to complete the revolution, the whole of Italy and Sicily, except the city of Rome and its immediate vicinity, was combined into a united realm, which in 1861 was proclaimed as the kingdom of Italy, with Victor Emmanuel as its sovereign. The little temporal power remaining to the pope, is at present secured to him by French intervention. Italy, as to climate, has been divided into four separate regions. The first of these embraces the basin of the Po, extending about 260 miles in length, and 150 in its greatest breadth; here the atmosphere is uniformly serene and bright, and the climate is one of the most salubrious and delightful in the world. The second region includes what were the Tuscan and Roman territories, being screened on the N. by the Apennines, and more exposed to the heats of summer than to the rigours of winter. Frost and snow are here experienced. The third district contains Campania Felix and its dependencies, where the air is uniformly mild and serene, and a peculiar glow of beauty pervades the landscape. The fourth division embraces the southern districts of the peninsula. Here the aloe, the palm, and other productions of a southern climate, flourish; but, when the sirocco blows, the heats are overcoming to a stranger. The climate of Italy also experiences much diversity from elevation and local circumstances. The general aspect of the country is highly beautiful and picturesque. The Alps and Apennines diversify this peninsula with almost every possible combination of hill and valley, rivers, lakes, and romantic scenery. Northern Italy is broken into bold and rugged acclivities by the former, from the southern face of which descend the streams that form the Po, and various other classical rivers. Towards the southern extremity of Italy, the Apennines diverge into two branches, one of which advances eastward to Capodi Leuca, and the other southward to the Straits of Messina. Several detached mountains, among which is the celebrated Vesuvius, here overhanging the Gulf of Naples, and discharge their liquid fires into its waters. The Apennines are, in many parts, clothed with trees to their summits; in other places they are more precipitous, and attain the altitude of ice and snow. The principal rivers are the Po, Tiber, Adige, Brenta, Piave, and Tagliamento; and there are several fine lakes, as the Muggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, Perugia, Bracciano, and Celano. The soil, in general, is very fertile. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe; excellent silk in abundance; corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, figs, peaches, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chestnuts, &c. This country also yields good pasture, and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, buffaloes, wild boars, mules, and horses. The forests are well stored with game, and the mountains have not only mines of iron, lead, alum, sulphur, marble of all sorts, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c., but also gold and silver, with a great variety of aromatic herbs, trees, shrubs, and evergreens. Wine, oil, perfumes, fruits, and silks, are the principal articles of exportation, and great sums of money are expended by travellers in the purchase of pictures, curiosities, relics, antiquities, &c. No country has produced better politicians, historians, poets, musicians, painters, and sculptors; that is, since the revival of the arts and sciences, exclusive of those of ancient times. The Italians are generally well proportioned, but of their complexion they cannot boast. With respect to dress, they follow the fashions of the countries on which they border, or to which they are subject. They are very affable, courteous, ingenious, sober, and ready-witted; but extremely jealous, vindictive, lascivious, ceremonious, and superstitious. Masquerades, gaming, horse-races, and conversations or assemblies, are the chief diversions of the Italians, excepting religious exhibitions, in which they are pompous beyond all other nations. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, but all other sects are now tolerated. The number of archbishops in the whole country is 38, and that of the suffragans indefinite, as may be truly added of the inferior ecclesiastics. Their language, a corruption of the Latin, is remarkable for its smoothness, and is said to be spoken in its greatest purity at Florence. Further particulars of this country will be found under the names of its particular divisions, as NAPLES, &c. A general view of its population is given in the Appendix.

Ives, St., a borough in Cornwall, sending one member to parliament; seated on a bay of the same name, celebrated for its extensive pilchard fishery. Market on Wednesday. The church is a handsome building, close to the sea. Here are also meeting-houses for Independents and Methodists, and a good grammar-school, founded by Charles I. In the vicinity of the town is Treganny castle, and one mile from this mansion, on the summit of a lofty hill, is a pyramid, erected by the late J. Knoll, Esq., who died in 1811, and directed, by will, that at the end of every five years an old woman, and 10 girls under 14 years of age, dressed in white, and accompanied by music, should walk in procession from the market-house to this pyramid, where they should dance, and sing the 100th psalm. For this he bequeathed certain freeholds, and vested them in the minister, to whom, and the port collector, he bequeathed 10*l.* for a dinner; 8 miles N.E. of Penzance, and 277 W. by S. of London.

Ives, Sr., a town in Huntingdonshire, with a market on Monday; seated on the river Ouse, 6 miles S.E. of Huntingdon, and 59 N. by W. of London.

IVIÇA, an island of the Mediterranean, 56 miles S.W. of Majorca, belonging to Spain. It is about 60 miles in circumference, and mountainous, but fertile in corn and fruits. A great quantity of salt is made here, highly esteemed for its whiteness. The capital, of the same name, which stands on the S. side of the island, is well fortified, and has a convenient harbour. Pop. 5720. Long. 1. 25. E. lat. 38. 52. N.

IVINGHOE, a town in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Saturday, and manufactures of bone-lace. It is 6 miles S.W. of Dunstable, and 33 N.W. of London.

IVREA, an ancient town of Piedmont, N. Italy, in the kingdom of Sardinia, with a fort, citadel, and castle. It is a bishop's see, and contains a cathedral, four other churches, and several religious houses. It is seated on the Doria, between two hills; 20 m. N. of Turin. Pop. in 1838, including communes, 8475.

JAGO Sr., or SANTIAGO, the most fertile province of Chili, extending 45 miles in length from E. to W. and 36 in breadth from N. to S. It is bounded on the E. by the Andes, W. by Melipilla, N. by the province of Aconcagua, and S. by the river Maypocho. Corn, wine, and fruits are produced here in great quantities. The mountains abound in the precious metals, and here are also mines of copper, tin, and lead. The province is watered by the Maypocho, the Colina, and several other fine streams.

JAGO, St., or SANTIAGO, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see. Besides the cathedral, there are three parish churches, and eight monasteries. The inhabitants are chiefly native Americans and Spaniards. Here are several canals and a dike, by means of which they water the gardens, and cool the streets. It is seated in a beautiful plain, at the foot of the Andes, on the river Maypocho, over which is a handsome bridge, which connects several suburbs with the city. It has frequently suffered from earthquakes. The commerce is considerable, and the markets are well supplied with all kinds of provisions. It contains about 60,000 inhabitants, and is one of the few, perhaps the only one, of the South American capitals, that is increasing in wealth and population. It has various private seminaries, a national institute or college, an extensive hospital, a medical college, and a military academy. The Congress meets here every year on the 1st of June; 64 m. E.S.E. of Valparaiso, to which it has a railway. Long. 69. 48. W., lat. 33. 15. S.

JALOFS, or OUALOFS, a people of Africa, who occupy great part of the country between the lower part of the Gambia and that of the Senegal. Their territory is estimated at 4800 square miles. They are celebrated as hunters and warriors; and the cotton cloth which they manufacture, is superior, both in quality and colour, to that of the Mandingos.

JALONITZA, a town of European Turkey, in Walachia, on a river of the same name; 95 miles S.W. of Ismail.

JALOUR, a town of Hindostan, in the country of Ajmere; situate on a mountain difficult of access; 85 miles W.N.W. of Cheitore.

JAMAGORD, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg; with a strong fort; seated on the Jama; 12 miles N.E. of Narva.

JAMAICA, the most considerable and valuable of the British West India Islands; discovered by Columbus, in 1494. It lies 30 leagues W. of St. Domingo, nearly the same distance S. of Cuba, and is of an oval figure, 150 miles long and 40 broad, containing 4,080,000 acres, of which 2,155,096 are cultivated. It is divided into three counties, Cornwall on the W., Middlesex in the centre, and Surrey on the E. St. Jago de la Vega commonly called Spanish-Town, is the capital and is the residence of the governor, although Kingston is the chief town, containing a population of about 33,000. According to the census of 1832, there were 37,000 whites, 55,000 coloured free, and 323,000 negroes or slaves: total, 415,000: number of acres under cultivation in 1828, 2,250,585. According to the census, June 3, 1844, the number of cultivated acres was 2,155,096; white inhabitants, 15,776; black and coloured ditto, 361,657; total, 377,433. The southern shores of Jamaica, diversified as they are with hill and dale, timber and cultivation, and the Blue Mountains for a back ground, afford a delightful coup d'œil, though they are usually considered as far inferior to the north side of the island. On the north side, the scenery differs widely from that on the south. The country rises into hills, more remarkable for beauty than for boldness, and on these are groves of pimento trees; and to enliven the scene, and add to its beauty, the bounty of nature has copiously watered the whole district. In the parish of St. Anne, being that part first seen by Columbus, the whole of the scenery is superlatively fine, so that words cannot convey an adequate idea of it. From the numerous rivulets and water-falls, the island derives its native name Jamaica, 'the land of springs.' The principal mountains are called the Blue Mountains, which lie in the middle of the island. In the county of Surrey, this is called the Cold Ridge, and here are three remarkable peaks of the heights of 8184, 7656, and 7576 feet respectively. Calloun's hill, to the N.E. of Kingston, is 5075 feet high; Yallah's Hill, on the S.E. coast, is only 2076 feet; the Bull's Head, in Clarendon, near the centre of the island, is 3140 feet. The year is distinguished into two seasons, the wet and dry; but the rains are not so frequent as formerly, which is supposed to be owing to the cutting down of the woods. About nine in the morning it is so extremely hot that it would be almost intolerable if the easterly breeze did not rise to cool the air. Sometimes the nights are pretty cool, and there are great dews, which are deemed unwholesome, especially to new comers. The months of July, August, and September, are called the hurricane months, because then they are the most frequent; and there is lightning almost every night. The best houses are generally built low, on account of the hurricanes and earthquakes; and the negroes' huts, made of reeds, will hold only two or three persons. The valleys are embellished with plantations, so well laid out, and with such a variety of fruit-trees, as to make the country look like a paradise. Horned cattle, hogs, and sheep are plentiful; but the servants generally feed upon Irish salt beef, and the negroes have herrings and salt fish. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, molasses, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimento, cocoa, coffee, several kinds of wood, and medicinal drugs. It has some tobacco, but not good, and used only by the negroes; also maize, Guinea corn, and pease of various kinds, with variety of roots. Fruits are in great plenty, such as oranges, lemons, shadocks, citrons, pomegranates, pine-apples, prickly-pears, melons, pompions, guavas, and many others. Jamaica can boast of a botanical garden, containing the rarest collection of curious trees and plants, perhaps in the world. The first settlement on this island was made in 1509, by the Spaniards, who were cruel to the natives; but it was taken by the English in 1656, and a colony soon after formed by disbanded soldiers from the parliamentary army, who were governed by military laws till the restoration. The tranquillity of this colony has been occasionally disturbed by the inroads of the Maroons, or original natives, who, however, were completely quelled in 1796; and since that period the colony has rapidly increased in importance. There is an ecclesiastical establishment in this island, consisting of 19 beneficed clergymen. Within the last few years, considerable efforts have been made by missionaries and others; and, though the principal men of the island have manifested much opposition, yet these efforts have already been crowned with very considerable success. The first West Indian railroad was opened in 1845 between Kingston and Spanish-Town, though it is to be feared that the present colonial depression will prevent further advance. After the emancipation of the slaves, the landed property in our colonies, and particularly in Jamaica, suffered considerable deterioration; and this calamity has been ruinously increased by the British fiscal regulations of 1848, and which bid fair to put an end to any further improvement in the agriculture and condition of the labourers in this once happy and beautiful island.

JAMAICA, a town of New York in Queen's County, with five churches; 12 miles E. by S. of New York. Pop. 3781.

JAMALABAD, a town of Hindostan, in Canara, with a fort on the summit of an immense rock, which is accessible only by one narrow way. The town stands on the banks of a river; 30 miles E.N.E. of Mangalore.

JAPAN, an extensive and insular empire in the most eastern part of Asia; extending from long. 128. to 151. E., and from lat. 30. to 50. N. Of the internal geography and state of the people of Japan, our knowledge is still imperfect, though, by the closer relations which we have had with them since the treaty of August 26, 1858, we have a great variety of curious particulars concerning this remarkable people. The three principal islands of Japan Proper have alone been explored by Europeans. Nippon, or Nipon, the largest, has a very uneven surface, and but very few plains. It has a regular mountain chain running N.N.E.; the highest summit of which, called Fusi, according to Siebold, is 12,000 feet high, and several of the peaks are covered with perpetual snow. These high summits are active volcanoes which cause frequent earthquakes throughout the island; one of which, in 1703, destroyed half of Yedo the capital, and 100,000 of its inhabitants. The general surface of the islands is of more moderate height; and from the shores either being exceedingly rocky or very flat, nautical surveyors have not been able to approach them to observe them satisfactorily. The rivers are numerous but not long, and but few of them are navigable. As might be supposed from its volcanic character, the metallic riches of Japan are very great, and copper is produced in abundance for exportation; other metals are found, and a little gold and silver, which last are under the exclusive superintendence of the government. The climate is very distinct in so large a range of country. In the N. it is severely cold, in the S. similar to the south of France. Rain is very prevalent, falling during two thirds of the year, particularly during June and July.

The Japanese empire consists of the island of Nippon or Nipon, the principal; area, 109,000 square miles, with Jedo or Yedo, and Miako for its capitals, and divided into 53 provinces; Kinsiu, into 4 provinces; area, 23,300 square miles, containing the town best known to Europe, Nangasaki or Nagasaki. The island of Sikokf, divided into 9 provinces; area, 17,200 square miles; capital, Tossa; the islands of Iki and Iouseina, each a province; area, 800 square miles. All which islands have an area of 155,300 square miles. The Japanese dependencies, called the government of Mutsmal, consist of the islands of Jusso; area, about 62,500 square miles, capital, Mutsmai; of the S. part of Tarakai; area, 47,000 square miles; and Kunachir, Iturup and Urup of the Kenile islands, off Kamstchatka. The entire area of all the empire is estimated at 266,600 square miles. Agriculture is industriously and imperatively followed, rice and tea being the chief products. The manufacturing industry of the Japanese will compare with the Chinese, and their artificers in iron, copper and steel, have a high character; clocks and watches are also well made. But the most excellent of their works is lacquering furniture with gold, silver, &c., known as japanning, which till lately was a secret. Most admirable porcelain is also made. The internal trade is very extensive, but foreign commerce is vigorously opposed in consequence of the Jesuit missionaries interfering with the religion of the country in 1585. The Dutch, soon after the expulsion of the Portuguese, established, with great difficulty, a trade at Nangasaki, but were strictly confined to one small islet off the harbour. But, by recent treaties, commerce and intercourse with foreign nations have been materially freed and extended. There are two emperors, a spiritual and a temporal; the former gives a merely formal sanction to matters of state; the Tycoon, or temporal emperor, resident at Jeddo, being the administrator of the empire. A universal system of espionage over the emperor himself, and every other official, secures universal probity. There is a council of state of five of the highest nobles appointed by the Tycoon, and a minor council of eight of the titular princes, the whole of whom are under spies. The council is the executive body, and appoints all governors, &c. The princes of the blood have a kind of supreme position as ultimate arbitrators. The population has been very variously stated, but the most moderate estimate places it at rather more than 50 millions. The army, in time of peace, is 100,000 infantry and 20,000 cavalry, which is increased at war time to 400,000 infantry, and 40,000 cavalry. The language has no known relation to any other.

The Japanese are of a yellowish complexion; their heads are in general large, their necks short, and their hair, which is naturally black and thick, is rendered shining by the use of oils; their eyes are small, of a dark brown colour, and sunk deep in the head, and the eyelids form, in the great angle of the eye, a deep furrow, which discriminates them from other nations; their eyebrows are also placed somewhat higher; and their noses, though not flat, are thick and short. They are naturally ingenious, and have a high character for honesty and veracity. Their common drinks are all hot; they unof the district of Jagyzin, on the Zagya; 40 miles E. from Pesth. It has a large trade in horses, corn, and cattle, and a handsome church in the centre of the town, erected in 1797 in honour of the archduke John. And here is also the reported tomb of Attila, on an island. Pop. 15,530.

JAUER, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a citadel, and a large square, surrounded by piazzas. It has manufactures of woollen and cotton, and a trade in flax and yarn. It is seated in a fine country, on the rivulet Jauer; 35 miles W. by S. of Breslau. Long. 16. 23. E. lat. 51. 2. N.

JAULNAIS, a town of France, in the department of Vienne; 6 miles N. of Poitiers.

JAURU, a river of Brazil, in Matto-Grosso, which rises in the plains of Parexis, in long. 58. 30. W. lat. 14. 42. S., and, after a long S. and S.E. course, falls into the Paraguay, in lat. 17. 24. S. At its mouth is erected a beautiful pyramid of marble, bearing inscriptions commemorative of the treaty between Spain and Portugal, which defined the boundaries of their respective territories. On its banks are extensive salt-pits, from which the province of Matto-Grosso derives large quantities of salt.

JAVA, an island of the East Indies, lying to the S. of Borneo, and separated, at its W. end, from Sumatra, by the Strait of Sunda. It is principally under the dominion of the Dutch, and is their chief Asiatic settlement. It is 660 miles in length, and of various breadth, extending from 105. to 115. E. long. and 6. to 9. S. lat. Most of the surface of Java is mountainous, and a mountain chain, among which are many conical peaks, almost all of which are either active or extinct volcanoes, extend E. and W. the whole length of the island. The south shore is bold and rocky, from this cause has no harbours of consequence. The north side, on the contrary, is flat and frequently marshy, and here are the principal ports. Rivers are numerous, but small, and there are many extensive swamps. The seasons are, the wet, from October to March or April, and the dry, during the rest of the year. On the north coast, the climate is very deleterious to Europeans, but within and up the mountains it is healthy. Java has a most luxuriant, and in some cases, a remarkable vegetation. It has a number of most excellent fruits, and other valuable products. The Javanese are a nation of husbandmen, and rice is the principal food of the people; and it also produces enough for its own consumption, but is the granary of the East Indies, although only a third of the surface of the island is under culture. Coffee has become the great staple of Java, and is principally in the W. part of the island; the residency of Preangers furnishing at least $\frac{1}{2}$ of the total produce. The increase in the production of sugar since 1825, has been most extraordinary, the quantity exported in 1837 being twenty-five times greater than in 1826. The increase of indigo and coffee has even been greater than this, and Java is now one of the principal sources for these products. In 1833, government also intimated that the cultivation of spices, previously prohibited, would be allowed, which act must still further add to its prosperity. From these causes, Java is one of the finest and most flourishing colonies in the world, labour being very cheap, as well as the necessaries of life.

Java is under the dominion of the Dutch, and is divided into 19 provinces, or, including Madura, into 20, each governed by a European resident. The colonial government at Batavia, exercises a full and complete power over all the Dutch dependencies in the East Indies. Three subordinate judicial courts are established in Batavia, Samarang, and Sourabaya. The area of the whole is estimated at about 52,000 square miles. Population between 8 and 9 millions, including 100,000 Chinese, and several thousand Europeans. (See Appendix, NETHERLANDS.) The Chinese are governed by their own laws, under functionaries who are responsible to the Dutch. The territories of the native princes comprise about one-fourth part of Java, and its population in the centre, S. and S.E. part of the island. The principal states are Sulsulunan, or empire of Java. Capital, Surakarta, and that of the sultan at Djockjocarta. The general religion is the Mahometan. The Javanese, as a nation, are the most advanced of any in the Asiatic archipelago. The Javanese are of a brown complexion, short, coal-black hair, large cheeks, small eyes, and large eyebrows. The men are very robust and strong limbed; the women are small, but of pleasing countenance, and in some districts they are really beautiful. The men wear a piece of calico, which is the principal manufacture of the island, wrapped two or three times round their middle; and the women wear them from their armpits down to their knees; but all other parts are bare. The men have two or three wives, and several concubines, according to their circumstances. The Javanese appear, from the remains of temples and inscriptions, to be of Hindoo descent, and their language is quite distinct from that of the Malays; but the professed religion of both is Mahomedism. The Malays principally inhabit along the coast; they are not so well featured as the Javanese; but the men are often very muscular and well made. They are generally indolent, but at the same time restless, vindictive, and treacherous. The Chinese are distinguished by their habits of industry, and generally by their wealth. Many of them carry on a considerable trade with their native country, and the several islands of the eastern archipelago. They intermarry with the Javanese and Malays, and purchase female slaves for wives and concubines. For more than a century, JAVA was under the dominion of the Dutch. In 1811 it was captured by the British, under Sir Samuel Auchmuty, and many important improvements were adopted in its internal administration. Government also did much to promote agricultural improvements, and the country prospered and enjoyed tranquillity; but in pursuance of the treaty of Paris in 1816, it was restored to the Dutch. Batavia is the capital.

JAXT, one of the four circles, or departments, of Wirtemberg, deriving its name from the river Jaxt; having Baden on the W., and Bavaria on the E. It comprises a superficial area of above 1400 square miles, with a population of about 260,000; the name was formerly given to a province not half the extent.

JAXT, a river of Germany, in Wirtemberg, which rises in the county of Oettingen, and, after flowing through the principality of Ellwangen, falls into the Neckar, opposite to Wimpfen, in Heesse-Darmstadt.

JAXTBERG, a small town of Wirtemberg, on the river Jaxt; 10 miles S. E. of Mergentheim.

JAYSALMEER. See JESSELMERE.

JEAN, ST., a town of France, in the department of Moselle; seated on the Sarre; 12 miles W. of Deux Ponts.

JEAN D'ANGELEY, ST., a town of France, department of Lower Charente; famous for its brandy. It was taken from the Huguenots, in 1621, by Louis XIII., who demolished the fortifications. It is seated on the Boutonne; 17 miles N. E. of Saintes, and 33 S. E. of Rochelle. Pop. 1836, 5342.

JEAN DE LOSNE, ST., a town of France, department of Côte d'Or; celebrated for the bravery of its inhabitants in opposing the imperial Count Gallas, at the head of a numerous army, in 1635. It is seated on the Saone; 15 miles S. S. E. of Dijon.

JEAN DE LUZ, ST., a town of France, in the department of Lower Pyrenees—the last next Spain; with a harbour. It owes its opulence to the cod and whale fishery. It is seated on a small river, near the Bay of Biscay; 14 miles S. W. of Bayonne. Long. 1. 40. W. Lat. 43. 25. N.

JEAN DE MAURIENNE, ST., a town of Savoy; capital of the province of Maurienne, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the river Arc; 25 miles E. N. E. of Grenoble. Long. 6. 20. E. lat. 45. 17. N.

JEAN DE PIED DE PORT, ST., a town of France, department of Lower Pyrenees; defended by a citadel; upon an eminence, at the entrance of those passages, or defiles, in the Pyrenees, which, in this country, are called Ports. It is seated on the river Nive; 20 miles S. S. E. of Bayonne, and 30 N. E. of Pampluna.

JED, a river of Scotland, in Roxburghshire, which rises on the borders of England, and joins the Teviot a little below Jedburgh. On its banks are several large caverns, which were the hiding-places of ancient border warriors.

JEDBURGH, a burgh of Scotland; capital of Roxburghshire; with a market on Tuesday. Here is the ruin of a fine abbey, part of which has been made the parish church. A variety of woollen manufactures are carried on here, and the vicinity is noted for its orchards. It is situate on the Jed, near its conflux with the Teviot; 42 miles S. E. of Edinburgh.

JEDDAH, a large town on the E. shores of the Red Sea, the landing-place for pilgrims to Mecca. On June 15, 1858, the inhabitants attacked the English consulate, murdered the vice-consul, and 20 other persons, and pillaged the house. An English man-of-war afterwards bombarded the town, and the ring-leaders were executed.

JEDDO or YEDDO, on the E. side of Nippon island, is the principal city of Japan, in lat. 35° 37' N., and long. 139° 47' E. It has a line of forts towards the bay. Low hills, prettily wooded and crowned with temples, form the background of the south and west parts of the city; while a woodad eminence in the centre, gleaming here and there with a patch of white wall, and distinguished by the roofs of a pagoda, marks the citadel or residence of the Tycoon, or king. Towering above all in the western distance, the majestic conical volcano of Fusi-yama rises. The citadel is said to measure 8 miles in circumference, and to afford shelter for 40,000 people, still leaving room for spacious palaces and pleasant scenes. The houses are mostly built of wood, tiled, and of two stories. The streets are broad and clean, and thronged with passengers, but not imposing in appearance. They are infested with dogs, which are specially cared for by the inhabitant. The population is estimated at more than 2,000,000.

JEFFERSON, the name of several counties in the United States, probably deriving their name from the well-known president of that name. In New York; capital, Watertown. Pop. in 1845, 64,999.—In Pennsylvania; capital, Brookville. Pop. in 1840, 7253.—In Virginia; capital, Charleston. Pop. 14,082.—In Mississippi; capital, Fayette. Pop. 11,650.—A county in Tennessee; capital, Dandridge. Pop. 12,076.—In Kentucky; capital, Louisville. Pop. 36,346.—In Ohio; capital, Steubenville. Pop. 25,030.—In Indiana; capital, Madison. Pop. 16,164.—In Illinois; capital, Mount Vernon. Pop. 5762. It is also the name of 55 townships in different parts of the Union, mostly insignificant.

JEFFERSON CITY, capital of Cole county and of the state of Missouri. It stands on the S. bank of the Missouri river, on elevated ground, 936 miles W. of Washington. Pop. in 1840, 1174.

JEFFERSONVILLE, a post town of the United States, in Indiana; seated on the Ohio, nearly opposite Louisville.

JEGNI-KEVI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia; 24 miles N. N. W. of Degnizlu.

JERUD, or JOUD, mountains in the N.W. part of Hindostan, extending eastward from Attock to Behnbur. They are part of the territory of the mountaineers called Gickers, Gehkers, or Kakares.

JEKYL, a small island of North America, on the coast of Georgia; S. of the island of St. Simon.

JELALABAD, or JALALABAD, a town of Afghanistan, 8 miles E. by N. of Cabul, and 60 miles W.N.W. of Peshawur. It is a small town of 2000 people; but is increased tenfold in the cold season by the influx of people from the surrounding hills. It is one of the filthiest places in the east. The Cabul river passes about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile N. of the town. Lat. 34. 30. N. long. 70. 32. E.

JELASORE, a town of Bengal; seated on the Sabauraeka; 50 miles S. by W. of Midnapour.

JELLINGHY, a town of Bengal; on the right bank of the Ganges, where a branch, called the Jellinghy River, separates from the main stream; 25 miles E. by S. of Moorshedabad.

JEMARROW, a kingdom of Africa, on the S. side of the Gambia; about 120 m. from the sea. The inhabitants are chiefly Mohammedans.

JEMME, EL, a town of Tunis, North Africa, 95 miles S. of Tunis; where there are the remains of a splendid Roman amphitheatre, and other ruins.

JENA, a strong town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Saxe-Weimar; with a castle and a university of considerable eminence. Near this place, on October, 14, 1806, there was a general action between the French and Prussians, in which the latter were defeated with immense loss. It is seated on the Saale; 12 miles E. of Weimar. Long. 11. 37. E. lat. 50. 56. N. Pop. in 1838, 5817.

JENIKALE, a fortress of European Russia, in the government of Taurida. It was built in 1703, by the Turks, to prevent the Russians entering the Black sea. It commands the narrowest part of the Taman strait. It was taken by the British in 1855.

JENISKOL. See YENISEISK.

JENITZ, a town of Germany, in the principality of Anhalt-Dessau; situate on the Muldau; 2 miles N.E. of Dessau.

JENITZ, a town of European Turkey, in Macedonia; situate on a lake which communicates with the Gulf of Salonichi, by a canal 12 miles long. It is 24 miles N.N.W. of Salonichi.

JENNINGS, a county in the S.E. part of Indiana, crossing the Madison and Indianapolis railroad; capital, Vernon. Pop. in 1840, 8829.

JEREMIE, a town and cape on the N. side of the southern peninsula of the island of St. Domingo. The town is situate on an eminence, in a fertile soil, particularly excellent for the culture of coffee; 5 miles W. of St. Domingo. Long. 73. 14. W. lat. 18. 42. N.

JERICHO, a town of Syria, in Palestine, once a famous city. It is now called Herubi by the Arabs, and contains only a few wretched huts, where some beggarly Arabs reside. It is 5 miles W. of the river Jordan, and 20 E. by N. of Jerusalem.

JERICHO, a town of Prussia Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg; situate on the Elbe; 32 miles N.N.E. of Magdeburg.

JERMAH, a town of the kingdom of Fezzan; distinguished by many majestic ruins, that exhibit vestiges of former greatness; 60 miles S.E. of Mourzouk.

JERSEY, an island in the English Channel; 18 miles from the coast of Normandy, in France, and 84 S. of Portland, in Dorsetshire. It is subject to the English, but is still governed by the ancient Norman laws. It is 30 miles in circumference, and difficult of access, on account of rocks, sands, and the forts erected for its defence. It produces excellent butter and honey, and the S. part of the island is nearly covered with apple-trees, for cider. The commerce of Jersey extends to almost every European nation, and also to America. It exports to England great quantities of cider; also fruits, potatoes, and cattle; and in return imports corn, flour, seeds, coals, cloth, linen, glass, &c. The island has greatly increased in prosperity and number of inhabitants of late years; which circumstance is owing greatly to the immunity from customs' duties, and consequent cheapness of living; this has attracted a large population of residents from England. The French have made various unsuccessful attempts to capture the island: the most remarkable one was in 1781, when a body of French troops landed, surprised the lieutenant-governor, made him prisoner, and obliged him to sign a capitulation; but they were repulsed, and compelled to surrender prisoners of war, by the English troops under the brave Major Pierson, who was unfortunately killed in the moment of victory. See HELIER, St.

JERSEY, a county in the W. part of the state of Illinois, between the Illinois and Mississippi river; capital, Jerseyville. Pop. in 1840, 4535.

JERSEY CITY, a town of the United States in New Jersey, on the W. side of the Hudson river opposite New York. The ground on which it is built projects into the Hudson, and the city is regularly and handsomely laid out. The New Jersey railroad to Philadelphia and the Patterson and Hudson railroad, commence here, and the Morris canal, 101 miles long to the Delaware, terminates here. Directly W. of the city is Harsimus, and to the N. is Pavonia, settlements which may be considered as suburbs to Jersey city; 58 miles N. E. of Trenton, 224 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 3072.

JERSEY, NEW, one of the United States of America; 163 miles long, and 52 broad; bounded on the E. by Hudson river and the Atlantic Ocean, S. by Delaware bay and river, W. by Pennsylvania, and N. by the state of New York. It is divided into 13 counties; namely, Cape May, Cumberland, Salem, Gloucester, Burlington, Hudson, Sussex, Bergen, Atlantic, Mercer, Passaic, Warren, Essex, Middlesex, Monmouth, Somerset, and Morris; the last two are mountainous, and one-fourth of the others are sandy and barren. It contains 5,324,000 acres, and the hilly country feeds great quantities of cattle; the barren parts produce little else but shrub-oaks and yellow pines; and the sandy lands yield an immense quantity of bog-iron ore, which is worked up to great advantage in the numerous iron-works in this state; the soil in other parts is fertile, producing plenty of corn, and fruits of all kinds common to the climate. The principal rivers, besides the boundary ones, are the Hackinsack, Passaic, and Rariton. From its proximity to the Atlantic the climate is mild and equable. The railways are numerous and have an aggregate length of 191 miles within the state. The first settlement of the state was by the Dutch in 1614, and in 1627 by a colony of Swedes, and was received as a separate member of the Union in 1787. The population in 1840 was 373,306, including 674 slaves. Trenton is the capital.

JERUSALEM, (modern name El Kods, the holy city,) an ancient and famous town of Asia, formerly capital of Judea. It was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, in the 11th year of Zedekiah, when the Jews were led captive to Babylon. It was afterwards taken by the Romans, and destroyed together with the temple, 70 years after the birth of Christ, after sustaining one of the most remarkable sieges in history. The emperor Adrian built a new city near its ruins. It was taken by the Persians in 614, and by the Saracens in 636. In 1099 it was retaken by the crusaders, who founded a new kingdom under Godfrey of Bouillon, which lasted 88 years, under nine kings. Saladin, king of Egypt and Syria, obtained possession of it in 1187. The Turks, who drove away the Saracens in 1217, have retained it ever since. It is now of an irregular oval form, about three-fourths of a mile in its greatest length from N. E. to S. W., and four-sevenths of a mile in its greatest breadth, from the mosque of Omar to the Damascus gate on the N. W. The northern portion of the city is in ruins, from a fire which destroyed it, and has never been rebuilt. The mosque of Omar, (or Great Sahara,) is the principal building in Jerusalem, and occupies the S. E. portion of the city. The outer walls enclose a parallelogram facing the cardinal points, of 1500 feet from N. to S., and 900 from E. to W.; in the western part of this enclosure is a raised platform of 450 feet by 600 feet, with 8 gateways, and on which stands the splendid mosque of Omar, a Saracenic building of exquisite beauty, of an octagonal form, and of great height, surmounted by a dome. It is built of marble, and it is of a pale blue colour: the platform on which it stands is of a dazzling white. The interior is plain, and contains but few objects of interest, though the architecture is of great beauty. It is surrounded by a great number of prying places, and on the S. side of the enclosure stands the mosque of Aksa, once the church of the purification; on the W. side is an extensive range of buildings, containing the college of dervishes, court of justice, &c.; and at the N. W. angle is the Turkish governor's residence, or Pilate's house, according to the tradition; and the terrace of which affords a fine view of the mosque. It is precipitous from the walls on the eastern and southern sides, and there are some subterranean vaults built with immense stones on the S. E. side, which are of great antiquity, probably coeval with the temple of Solomon, the site of which is undoubtedly occupied by the present mosque. The city is well-built, and all the houses have flat roofs, with a dome over the principal chamber, and on which the inhabitants spend the chief part of their time, and from the parapets can view what is passing below. The streets are narrow, and regularly built. The Via Dolorosa, along which our Saviour passed to Calvary, is about three-fourths of a mile long. The Jews live in the southern quarter, near to the mosque of Omar. The principal object of veneration is the church of the holy sepulchre, a very handsome building, 300 feet long and nearly 200 broad. It is supposed to comprehend within these limits the scene of all the great events of the crucifixion, entombment, and resurrection of Christ. The chapel is cut out of the rock, and lamps are kept constantly burning in it. The whole is covered with white marble, both within and without; and on the outside there are ten fine columns of the same. It is covered with a platform, the middle of which forms a small dome, six feet in height, covered with lead, and supported by 12 columns of porphyry, placed by pairs on the platform, and forming 6 arches, which have three lamps under each. On Good Friday, all the parts of our Saviour's passion are solemnized in this church. Pilgrims flock here from various parts, and the inhabitants accommodate them with lodging and provisions, which is their chief business; and a bashaw, with a guard of janissaries, always resides here to protect them from the insults of the Arabs. The Greek convent, of which the church of the sepulchre forms a part, occupies the site of Mount Calvary, which is but a slight elevation, now within the walls which have been built to enclose it. It lies on the W. side of the city, and S. of it is the city castle, and the immense building of the Armenian convent. Mount Sion is just outside the S. wall and is crowned with the tomb of David. Eastward is the valley of Jehoshaphat, in which the Moslems believe the world will be assembled on the final day, to be judged by Mahomet from a spot in the enclosure of the mosque above. full of objects connected with sacred history, most of which owe their present form to the piety of the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine; but whether they occupy the sites they commemorate, is a matter of conjecture in most instances. The population may be stated as 25,000, which is much augmented at the time of the Greek Easter, by the immense number of pilgrims who come to witness the farce of the descent of the sacred fire in the Greek convent, and from whom great part of the Turkish revenues are derived. The manufactures of Jerusalem are almost confined to one branch, that of beads, crosses, shells, and other objects supposed to derive their sanctity from their local origin. These articles receive a species of benediction in the church of the sepulchre; and they are bought even by those who are more sensible of their insignificance, as they form acceptable presents to all the inhabitants of Greek and Catholic countries. Jerusalem is politically included in the pachalic of Damascus; 112 miles S. W. of Damascus, 45 from the Mediterranean. Lat. 31. 47. 47. N. long. 35. 21. E.

JESI, a town of Italy, (Ancient Æsium) in the states of the church; seated on the river Esino; 10 miles W. S. W. of Ancona.

JESSAMINE, a county of Kentucky, with 9396 inhabitants. Chief town Nicholasville.

JESSO, a large island, lying between those of Nippon and Saghalien. It is 150 miles in length, and from 80 to 220 in breadth; the narrow part is in the S. towards Nippon. It is full of woods; and the natives, who live by fishing and hunting, are strong, robust, savage, and slovenly, when compared to the Japanese. The island is deemed subject to Japan; but it may be rather considered as a foreign conquest than as a part of the civilized empire. Matsmai is the capital; and Hakodadi, its port, was thrown open by treaty to American ships in 1855.

JESSORE, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal; capital of a district of the same name. It is seated on the river Boirub, and on the high bank from Calcutta to Dacca.

JESSMERE, or JAYSULMEER, a state of N. W. Hindostan in Rajpootana, of which it is the principal of the five states subsidiary to the British. Between 25. and 28. N. lat. and 69. and 72. E. long. Area about 10,000 square miles. Pop. about 300,000. It is an uneven territory, intersected by rocky hills, and not watered by any considerable stream, and surrounded by a sandy desert. Cultivation is therefore limited. The heat is very oppressive. Its commerce is utterly insignificant and every where it betrays the strongest marks of poverty.

JESSELMERE a town of N. W. Hindostan, capital of the above rajship, 120 miles W. N. W. of Joudpour, lat. 26. 56. N. long. 70. 54. E. Pop. about 20,000. Its citadel, a place of considerable strength, stands commandingly. The town is of an oval shape, 2 miles in circuit, and surrounded with a rampart of loose stones, and regularly laid out. It has some opulent merchants, as the town stands on the great route from Malwah to Kurachee, the port at the mouth of the Indus.

JEVER, a small district of Germany; situated between East Friesland and the duchy of Oldenburg. Though surrounded by Westphalia, it was never included in any circle of the empire. It was ceded to Oldenburg in 1814.

JEVER, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Oldenburg; 34 miles N. by W. of Oldenburg.

JHYLUM, JAILUM, or BEHUT, a river of the Punjab in N. W. Hindostan, and one of the five affluents of the Indus. It rises in Kashmir and joins the Chenab, and is muddy and rapid.

JIDDA, or DIJIDDA, a seaport of Arabia Felix, on the Red sea, in a barren sandy district, destitute of fresh water. A very considerable trade is carried on here, this city being a mart between Egypt and India. The ships from Suez seldom proceed further than this port, and those from India were not suffered to advance to Suez. The English are permitted to trade here; but, in consequence of the numerous exactions to which they are subjected, the trade has greatly declined: 34 miles W. S. W. of Mecca, of which it is the port. Long. 39. 15. E. lat. 21. 29. N.

JILLIFREE, a town of West Africa, kingdom of Bana; near the mouth of the river Gambia, where the duties of the exports and imports are levied.

JINBALA, a town of Negroland, capital of an island so called, which is formed by two branches of the Niger, that separate at leaving the Lake Dibbic, and unite again about 15 miles from Tombuctoo. The town is a resting place for traders between Tombuctoo and the western parts of the country. It stands on the W. branch of the Niger; 80 miles S. W. of Tombuctoo. Long. 0. 16. E. lat. 16. 4. N.

JIONPOUR, town of Hindostan, capital of a circar of the same name, in Alahabad. It is seated on the Goomty; and, not far from the conflux of that river with the Ganges, is the fort of Jionpour, on a high bank commanding the bridge over the Goomty. This place was at one time the seat of an empire; and sultan Shirki built the great masjid, or mausoleum, which is still remaining. The stone bridge over the Goomty consists of sixteen pointed arches; and on the top of it are many little shops on both sides. Jionpour is 18 miles N. W. of Benares. Long. 82. 55. E. lat. 25. 45. N.

JOACHIMSTHAL, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz; noted for its mines and a manufacture of lace; 15 miles N. by E. of Elnbogen.

JOACHIMSTHAL, a town of Brandenburg, in the Ucker Mark; 36 miles N. N. E. of Berlin.

JOANNA. See HINZUAN.

JOANNINA, properly YANINA, a city of European Turkey; capital of the pachalic of Albania. It consists of two principal streets crossing each other, and contained a palace, and several mosques and churches. Its chief manufacture is leather. It was the capital of the rebel Ali Pacha, during the early part of the present century, who declared himself independent of the porte, but was ultimately subdued and beheaded. It was set fire to by him in 1820, and almost wholly ruined. Pop. at present 12,000; formerly it was 30,000.

LOCKGUM, a town of Bavaria, province of the Rhine; situate on an eminence near the Rhine; 9 miles S. E. of Landau.

JO-DAYESS, a county of Illinois, containing abundance of lead and copper ore. It is named from a general who fell in the battle of Tippecanoe; capital, Galena, the chief town of the lead region. Pop. 6180.

JOHAN-GEORGEN-STADT, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Upper Silesia; celebrated for its mines, and for a considerable manufacture of lace. It is 18 miles E. S. E. of Zwickau.

JOHANNISBURG, a hill and castle of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; celebrated for the vineyards in its environs, which were bestowed by the emperor on Prince Metternich, in 1816. It has a citadel, and is seated on the river Pech, near the Lake Spirding; 95 m. S. E. of Konigsberg, and 18 W. of Mentz.

JOHN, Sr., one of the Philippine islands, E. of Mindanao. Long. 126. 32. E. lat. 9. 30. N.

JOHN, Sr., a small island in the West Indies, N. of St. Croix, belonging to the Danes. It has a town and spacious harbour.

JOHN, Sr. or PRINCE EDWARD, an island in the S. part of the gulf of St. Lawrence, having New Brunswick on the W., Nova Scotia on the S., and Cape Breton on the E. It is 60 miles long and 30 broad, and fertile, with several streams. In 1745 it surrendered, with Cape Breton, to the English. Pop. in 1841, 32,292. The capital is Charlotte Town. Pop. 1965.

JOHN, Sr., a river which rises in the N. W. part of the district of Maine, flows N. E. into New Brunswick, where it soon takes a S. S. E. course, and enters the Bay of Fundy, at the city of St. John. It is navigable 60 miles for sloops of 50 tons, and about 200 for boats; and affords a common and near route from the province of New Brunswick to Quebec.

JOHNS, Sr., a city of New Brunswick; situate at the mouth of the river St. John, in the Bay of Fundy. It is the largest and most important town, though not the capital of the colony. It has wonderfully risen within these last 60 years from a few straggling huts, and is now one of the most thriving seaports in America. The harbour is commodious and spacious, and the town is handsome and commandingly situated. On the opposite side of the river is the rising town of Carleton. St. John's is a corporate city, a free port, and the great emporium of New Brunswick. Pop. in 1834, 12,885. Lat. 45. 20. N. long. 66. 3. E.

JOHN, Sr., the capital of Newfoundland; situate on the E. side of the island. It has a good harbour, entirely land-locked, and defended by several forts, in one of which the governor of the island resides. Its trade partakes of the general character of the commerce of the colony, and is principally connected with the fishery. It stands along the N. W. side of the harbour and is a long straggling place. This city has suffered very severely by repeated fires. It is now the seat of the bishop of Newfoundland and Bermuda. Pop. in 1836, 18,926.

JOHN, Sr., the capital of Antigua. It is one of the most regular towns in the West Indies, and has the most commodious harbour in the Leeward islands. Long. 62. 4. W. lat. 17. 4. N.

JOHN, Sr., a town and fort of Lower Canada, on the W. bank of Chamblay or Richelieu River, at the N. end of Lake Champlain. In 1796 it was made the sole port of entry and clearance for all goods imported from the United States into Canada. It is 20 miles E. by S. of Montreal, and 110 N. by E. of Crown Point. Long. 73. 20. W. lat. 45. 25. N.

JOHN D'ACRE, Sr. See ACRE.

JOHNSHAVEN, a village of Scotland, in Kincairdineshire, with a harbour for small vessels; 4 miles S. S. W. of Bervie. It was formerly a great fishing town, but is now more noted for an extensive manufacture of canvas.

JOHNSON, the name of several counties in the United States. In North Carolina; capital, Smithfield. Pop. in 1840, 10,599.—In Tennessee; capital, Taylorsville. Pop. 2658.—In Indiana, crossed by the Madison and Indianapolis railroad; capital, Franklin. Pop. 9352.—In Illinois; capital, Vienna. Pop. 3626.—In Iowa; capital, Iowa city. Pop. 1491.—In Missouri; capital, Warrensburg. Pop. 4471.—In Arkansas; capital, Clarksville. Pop. in 1840, 3433.

JOHNSTON, a manufacturing town of Scotland, in the parish of Paisley, from which it is 3 miles distant, county of Renfrew. It has risen more rapidly than any place in Scotland, as in 1782 there were only 9 houses, and in 1840 there were above 7000 persons. This progress is owing to the cotton manufacture, besides which here are some foundries, brass and iron, and other manufactures. The Glasgow Paisley and Ayr railway also passes it; 12 miles W. by S. of Glasgow.

JOHNSTON, a town of New York, chief of Montgomery county; on the N. bank of Mohawk river; 24 miles W. N. W. of Schenectady.

JOHNSTOWN, a town of Upper Canada, extending nearly a mile on the river St. Lawrence. It is 50 miles N. E. of Kingstown, and 100 S. W. of Montreal. Long. 75. 10. W. lat. 44. 42. N.

JOHNSTOWN, Sr., a borough of Ireland, in the county of Donegal, on the river Foyle; 5 miles S. S. W. of Londonderry.

JORON, or JON, a town of the peninsula of Malaya, destroyed by the Portuguese in 1603, but subsequently rebuilt: it is seated near the S. coast; 150 miles S.E. of Malacca. Long. 103. 30. E. lat. 1. 35. N.

JONGNY, a town of France, in the department of Yonne; surrounded by thick walls, and seated near the Yonne; 17 miles S.S.E. of Sens. Pop. 5750.

JOINVILLE, an ancient town of France, in the department of Upper Marne; situate on the Marne; 25 miles S.W. of Bar-le-Duc, and 125 S.E. of Paris. Long. 5. 20. E. lat. 48. 20. N. Pop. 3350.

JOLUCAR, a town of Spain, in Granada; 7 miles N.E. of Motril.

JONES, a county of North Carolina; capital Trenton. Pop. in 1840, 4945. Also a county of Georgia; capital, Clinton. Pop. 10,065. Also a county in Mississippi; capital, Ellisville. Pop. 1258. Also, a county in Iowa; capital, Edinburgh. Pop. 471.

JONESBOROUGH, a town of Tennessee; capital of the district of Washington; seated near the foot of the Iron mountains; 86 miles E. by N. of Knoxville.

JONKOPING, a town of Sweden, in Smaland, and the seat of justice for Gothland. It has a strong citadel, and a manufacture of arms. The houses are chiefly of wood; and on the roof are spread layers of birch bark, covered with turf or moss, many of them producing herbage, and some ornamented with flowers. It is seated near the S. end of the lake Wetter; 80 miles W.N.W. of Calmar.

JOODPOOR, or JOODPOOR, or MARWAR, a state of N.W. Hindostan, the most powerful of the five rajpoot states, subsidiary to the British, separated from the British territory of Ajmere on the E., by a mountain range. Area, 70,000 square miles. Pop. uncertain. It is watered by the Loonee river, and is thus more fruitful than Jessulmere, producing some grain for exportation. Cotton is also an important product, as is also salt, with which the soil is impregnated. Marwar is celebrated for its camels, which are numerous. The commerce is extensive, its principal place of trade being Pallee, 40 miles S.E. of the capital. Opium is its principal article; besides which, salt and corn are largely exported. The trade has arisen entirely within the last 70 years. The government is a kind of feudal monarchy, and the inhabitants, chiefly Rhatore Rajpoots, are a handsome and brave race of men. Chief towns, Joodfour, Pallee, Nagore, and Meertra.

JOODPOUR, a town of Hindostan, capital of the above rajahship, in a hollow surrounded by rocks, and destitute of water. We have no recent account respecting it. Pop. perhaps 10,000; 100 miles W. of Ajmere.

JORDAN, a river of Syria, which rises at Baneas, ancient Paneas, at the foot of Djebel Essnelkh, (Mount Lebanon,) but which is probably derived from Lake Phiala, a round bowl to the northward, which has no apparent discharge. It flows southward through the lake Tabariah, (Tiberias,) and continues its southward course to the Dead sea. A most remarkable feature of the Jordan has lately been established; that of its great fall or descent between the lake of Tiberias and the Dead sea. The lake of Tiberias is about 318 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, while that of the Dead sea is from 1300 to 1400 feet below the same level, giving a decline for the Jordan of above 1000 feet, which would allow 3 cataracts, each larger than Niagara, and then sufficient descent to carry the waters; yet there is no cataract, but its most tortuous course has above 27 rapids in its total length of 200 miles, which it winds in about the direct distance of 60 miles. The river is in the upper part of its course much obstructed by artificial dams or weirs, erected to facilitate irrigation, and the stream is of very various width and depth. There have been two expeditions which have descended it, an English in 1846, and an American in 1848, and these appear to have been the first, and have given us all the information we possess of it. The water is perfectly fresh and sweet, but has no outlet from the Salt lake or Dead sea. It is about 200 or 300 feet wide, and the water is turbid from the sand it flows over. It has been supposed that before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the formation of the Lake Asphaltites, it flowed into the Gulf of Suez and the Red sea: but the great depth of the level of the Dead sea below the surrounding country, and the elevation of the valley southward, which has lately been asserted, will contradict such a theory. The margin is generally covered with a thicket of oleander and willow, the lurking-place of wild animals. Near Jericho it is clear and rapid, and is much frequented by pilgrims for bathing. The Arabic name is El Sheriat (the river). See DEAD SEA.

JOREHAUT, a town of Eastern Asia; capital of Upper Assam. It was made the capital of the province, in 1794. The tea shrub has been found growing in its vicinity, and a manufacture of tea has been established.

JORJAN, or KORGAN, a town of Persia, in Asterabad; bordering on the Caspian sea. It is 60 miles E. by N. of Asterabad, and 320 W. of Mesched. Long. 56. 5. E. lat. 15. 56. N.

JORKAU, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Saaz; celebrated for its breweries. On a mountain by the town is the magnificent castle of Rothenhaus; 5 miles N. of Commotau.

JOSSELIN, a town of France, in the department of Morbihan; 25 miles N.N.E. of Vaunnes.

JOUARRE, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Marne; 10 miles S.E. of Meaux, and 35 E. of Paris. Pop. 2570.

JOUD. See JEHUD.

JOUDPOOR. See JOODPOUR.

JOUE, a town of France, in the department of Indre-et-Loire; 3 miles S. of Tours.

JOUE DU PLAID, a town in the department of Orne; 5 miles S.W. of Argentan.

JOUCRE, a town in the department of Doubs; 8 miles S. of Pontarlier, and 22 E.S.E. of Salins.

JOUGUES, a town in the department of Mouths of the Rhone; 12 miles N.E. of Aix.

JOURA, an island in the Grecian archipelago, 10 miles in circuit; 12 miles S.W. of Andros.

JOUY, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise; 3 m. S. of Versailles.

JOUY LE CHATEL, a town in the department of Seine-et-Marne; 10 miles from Provins.

JOUY SUR MORIN, a town in the department of Seine-et-Marne; 15 m. from Meaux.

JUAN, ST., or DESAGUADERO, a river of Mexico, which is the outlet of the Lake Nicaragua. It flows from the S.E. corner of the lake, in an easterly direction, into the Caribbean sea. It is navigable for steamers, and is considered by many as the best means for a canal communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

JUAN, ST., DEL NORTE, or GREY TOWN, a town of Guatemala, or Central America, situate at the mouth of the river St. Juan, on the Caribbean sea. It is of some importance as the port of the river communication, and was bombarded by a United States frigate July 13, 1854.

JUAN BAUTISTA, SAN, or VILLA HERMOSEA DE SAN JUAN BAUTISTA, the capital of the Mexican state of Tabasco. It is 24 leagues up the river from the Frontera de Tabasco, and exports logwood and cocoa. Most of the houses are of stone, constructed in a substantial manner, though the town is irregular and dirty. Lat. 17. 34. N. long. 95. 5. W.

JUAN DE FUCA, STRAIT OF, a large bay or gulf of the Pacific Ocean, on the W. coast of N. America. The entrance is in long. 124. 55. W. lat. 48. 25. N.

JUAN DE LA FRONTERA, ST., a town of Buenos Ayres, on the frontiers of Chili. It is seated near the Lake Guanacho, on the E. side of the Andes; 150 miles N. of Mendoza. Pop. 20,000. Long. 68. 57. W. lat. 31. 4. S.

JUAN DEL RIO, SAN, a town of Mexico, state of Queretaro, a tolerably well built town on a plain, 6490 feet above the sea, in a beautiful and fertile country; 81 miles N.W. of Mexico, and 164 S.W. of Tampico. Pop. perhaps 10,000.

JUAN DE PORTO RICO, SAN, the capital of the island of Porto Rico; with a good harbour, defended by several forts. It is a bishop's see, and is well built, and better inhabited than most of the Spanish towns. It was taken by Sir Francis Drake, and afterwards by the Earl of Cumberland; who losing most of his men by sickness, was obliged to abandon it. In 1615 the Dutch took and plundered this city, but could not retain it. It stands on a peninsula, on the N. coast of the island. Pop. 30,000. Long. 66. 6. W. lat. 18. 29. N.

JUAN DE ULUA, ST., a small low island in the Gulf of Mexico, before the town of Vera Cruz, on which is a strong fortress, mis-called a castle, which has been frequently attacked in the wars against Mexico. See VERA CRUZ.

JUAN FERNANDEZ, an island in the Pacific Ocean; 38 leagues eastward of the island of Masufiero, and 390 W. of the continent. It is supposed to have been inhabited by a Spaniard, whose name it retains; but it is more remarkable for having been the residence of Alexander Selkirk, a Scotchman, whose life and adventures furnished De Foe with the ground-work of that admirable novel, Robinson Crusoe. The island is about 30 miles in circumference, and at a distance appears like a naked rock; but there are intersecting valleys covered with wood, and a great number of goats on the sides of every hill. In 1766 a settlement was made by the Spaniards, on the N. and highest part of this island, at Cumberland bay, which is defended by batteries. The town is situate in a fine valley, between two high hills. It is used as a convict settlement from Peru, and has lately had a severe shock of an earthquake. Long. 78. 52. W. lat. 33. 40. S.

JUBO, a kingdom of Africa, on the coast of Ajan, with a capital of the same name; subject to the Portuguese. Long. 43. 20. E. lat. 0. 50. N.

JUCATAN. See YUCATAN.

JUDENBURG, a town of Upper Styria, capital of a circle of the same name; with a handsome castle. The public buildings, with the square, are magnificent. This town was taken by the French in 1797. It suffered dreadfully from fire in 1807 and 1818. It is seated on the Mner; 40 miles W. of Gratz. Long. 14. 24. E. lat. 47. 10. N.

JUDOIGNE, a town of Belgium, in South Brabant, near which are the ruins of an ancient castle. It is seated on the Geelle; 13 miles S.S.E. of Louvain.

JUGDISPORE, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Bahar; 20 miles from Patna.

JUGGERNAUT, a place of Hindoo worship, on the coast of Orissa, district of Cuttack; with a population estimated at 30,000. It is one of the most celebrated places in India.

All the land within 20 miles is considered holy; but the most sacred spot is enclosed with a stone wall 21 feet high, and forms nearly a square, being 656 feet long, and 626 feet wide. Within this area are about 50 temples, dedicated to various idols; but the most conspicuous buildings consist of one lofty stone tower, 184 feet high, and 28½ feet square inside, and two adjoining stone buildings, with pyramidal roofs. The tower is occupied by the idol Juggernaut, his brother Bulbudra, and his sister Subudra; and the other buildings are used for purposes connected with the worship. Adjoining is also a low building on pillars, (with a fabulous animal in the centre,) which is intended as an awning to shelter the entrance from the rays of the sun; and after this is another, where the food prepared by the pilgrims is daily brought, previous to distribution. The temple of Juggernaut was erected by rajah Anung Bheem, in A.D. 1198; it was taken by the British, together with the town, in 1803. The idol Juggernaut is made of wood, and is probably the coarsest image in the country, having a frightful black visage, with a distended mouth. The figure does not extend below the loins, and it has no hands, but two stumps in lieu of arms, on which the priests occasionally fasten hands of gold: a Christian is almost led to think that it was an attempt to see how low idolatry could debase the human mind. When two new moons occur in Assaur, (part of June and July,) which is said to happen about once in 17 years, a new idol is always made. On certain festivals the images of Juggernaut, Bulbudra, and Subudra, are superbly dressed, and placed in an immense moveable tower, which the pilgrims drag to a certain distance, and then return to the temple. Respecting the self immolation of the devotees beneath the car in its progress, it either never occurred, or has almost entirely ceased, as none occur now, though many come themselves here in the last stage of existence to die on holy ground. There are two principal festivals (the Swinging and Car festivals) and eleven minor ones annually. The concourse of pilgrims to this shrine is immense; and the revenue derived from them by the British government is said to have exceeded 12,000*l.* per annum; which tax has been abolished. A road has been recently completed from Calcutta to Juggernaut, great part of the expense being paid by a rich Hindoo (rajah Sookmoy Roy) on condition that the road should be named after him. Juggernaut is seated a few miles N.E. of the Chilka Lake; 300 miles from Calcutta. Long. 85. 54. E. lat. 19. 49. N.

JULALABAD. See JELALABAD.

JULIERS, a small town of the Prussian states, in the government of Aix-la-Chapelle, and formerly capital of the duchy of the same name; seated on the Roer; 23½ miles W. of Cologne. Pop. 3130. Long. 6. 25. E. lat. 50. 55. N.

JULIUSBURG, a town of Prussian Silesia, with a castle; 4 miles N. of Oels.

JUMELLA, a town of Spain, in the province of Murcia; 22 miles S.W. of Murcia.

JUMBOSEER, a town of British India, Bombay presidency; 25 miles N.N.W. of Baroach. It carries on a considerable trade in cotton, &c. with Bombay. Pop. in 1820, above 10,000.

JUMILLA, a town of Spain, in Murcia. It is situated on the S. slope of a hill, on the summit of which is a castle. It has several oil and corn mills, but grazing is the principal pursuit of the inhabitants; 36 miles N. by W. of Murcia, and 75 S.S.W. of Valencia. Pop. 8267.

JUMMOO, or JUMMO, a town of Hindostan; capital of a flourishing district of the same name, which is governed by an independent Hindoo chief. It is a place of considerable trade, being seated on the banks of a small river on the high road from Cashmere to Delhi; 80 miles N.E. of Lahore.

JUMNA, a river of Hindostan, the chief affluent of the Ganges, which it joins at Allahabad. It rises on the S. side of the Himachya mountains, about lat. 30. 55. N. and long. 78. 24. E., and has been traced to an elevation of 11,200 feet, about half a mile above Jumnotré, a place of pilgrimage and ablution famous among the Hindoos, and where there are hot springs. Throughout its whole course it runs parallel to, and from 20 to 80 miles from, the Ganges, its centre length being about 780 miles.

JUNAGUR, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Guzerat; 170 miles S.W. of Amedabad. Long. 70. 33. E. lat. 21. 48. N.

JUNKSEILAN, or JUNKSEYLOAN, an island in the Indian Ocean, near the S.W. coast of Siam, about 60 miles long, and from 10 to 20 broad. The soil is luxuriant, and it has a considerable trade in ivory and tin. The principal town, of the same name, is situate on the N. part of the island, and has a harbour capable of receiving vessels of a moderate size. Long. 98. 0. E. lat. 8. 10. N.

JURA, one of the western isles of Scotland; N.E. of the island of Islay, on the coast of Argyleshire. It is 26 miles long, and 7 broad, and is composed of huge naked rocks piled on one another in the utmost disorder. The mountainous ridges occupy the centre of the island, extending along its whole length, and terminating in four mountains, called the Paps of Jura, which are of a conic form, and of stupendous height. The W. side of the island is uninhabited. The whole of the E. side forms a pleasing scene, and the coast is indented with bays and harbours. The only products are oats, barley, potatoes, and flux. A few wild roses are still seen here.

JURA, a department of France, including part of the late province of Franche Comté. It contains mines of iron of a superior quality, mines of copper and lead, and many quarries of black marble, jasper, and alabaster. It takes its name from Mount Jura. Lons le Saunier is the capital. Pop. in 1836, 315,355.

JURA, MOUNT, a chain of mountains which begins in the canton of Zurich in Switzerland, extends along the Rhine, into the canton of Soleure and the principality of Neuchâtel, branches out toward the Pays de Vaud, separates that country from France, and continues beyond the frontiers of the Genevois, as far as the Rhone. In the Pays de Vaud this chain forms many elevated valleys, particularly one on the top of that part called Mount Joux, which is watered by two picturesque lakes, the largest called Joux, and the other Brenet. These mountains have different names in different parts of their course in Switzerland. The highest, Reculet, is 5633 feet.

JUSSEY, a town of France, in the department of Upper Saone; situate on the Aunance; 17 miles N.W. of Vesoul.

JUTHIA. See SIAM.

JUTLAND, a province of Denmark; bounded on all sides by the sea, except towards the S., where its boundary is the duchy of Sleswick. The name of Jutland was formerly applied to the whole peninsula forming the mainland of the Danish dominions, but it is now confined to the northern part of the peninsula, extending from 55. to 58. N. lat. It is about 180 miles in length, and from 70 to 90 in breadth; area, 9550 sq. miles. Pop. in 1834, 525,952. It is divided into four dioceses or districts, each of which has a bishop and governor. The prevailing religion is the Lutheran. The country is generally low, and, except the rocks on the E. coast, presents little picturesque scenery. In the E. are fine woods of oak, beech, fir, &c. The middle part consists of heaths and moors, with some arable land; it affords good pasture for oxen, sheep, and goats. The other parts are fertile, and yield large crops of grain, (principally rye,) which, together with horses, are annually exported to Sweden, Norway, and Holland. The air is cold, especially towards the North sea, but the inhabitants are vigorous and robust. It is the only province of Denmark which contains useful minerals; and even here they are confined to iron, limestone, and marble.

JYENAGUR, or JYEPOUR, a fortified town of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Rajpootana. It is a place of great wealth, being the staple for goods that are brought from the neighbouring provinces; and is reckoned one of the handsomest and most regular towns of Hindostan; 120 miles W. by S. of Agra. Long. 75. 37. E. lat. 26. 55. N.

KALHAT, a town of Arabia, on a river of the same name, at its entrance into the Gulf of Ormus; 80 miles S. of Mascat.

KALISCH, one of the eight palatinates of Russian Poland; bounded on the W. by Prussian Poland, and on the three other sides by the Palatinates of Sandomir, Cracow, and Masovia.

KALISCH, a city of Poland, capital of the above palatinate, with manufactures of cloth, linen, and leather. It is surrounded by moorasses and walls; has a collegiate and ten other churches, four religious houses, and a Catholic high school; 66 miles N. W. of Breslau.

KALKA PIRA, a river of Chinese Tartary, which gives name to a tribe of Monguls, and is nearly 300 leagues in extent from E. to W.

KALLINGSBORG, a seaport of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand; seated on an inlet of the Great Belt; with the best harbour, next to Copenhagen, on the island; 55 miles W. by N. of Copenhagen. Long. 11. 11. E. lat. 55. 47. N.

KALMUCS, a nation of Tartars, inhabiting that part of the Russian government of Caucasia which lies between the Volga and the Ural, towards the Caspian sea. They all live in tents, and remove from place to place in quest of pasturage for their numerous cattle, consisting of horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They neither sow nor reap, nor make hay for their cattle, so that they live without bread, or any sort of vegetable; and, in winter, their cattle fare like the wild beasts. Their food is flesh, (especially that of horses,) fish, wild fowl, and venison; and they have great plenty of milk, butter, and cheese; but mare's milk is the most esteemed, and from it they make a strong spirit, to which they are partial. They are divided into a number of hordes or clans, each under its own particular khan, and all acknowledge the authority of one principal khan, who is called Orkheurtikhhan, or the king of kings, and derives his pedigree from the great Tamerlane. All of them, however, have submitted to the government of Russia, or live under its protection. They are pagans, and believe in the transmigration of souls. In person, manners, and customs, they resemble the ancient Scythians, from whom they are descended. See TARTARY.

KALPAKI, a town of Morea, Greece; 13 miles N. from Tripolizza; with the ruins of a Doric temple, and near the ancient Orchomenos.

KALPEE. See KULPEE.

KALUGA, a government of the Russian empire, formerly a province in the government of Moscow. Pop. 1,180,000. Its principal town, of the same name, is seated on the Oeca; 107 miles S.S.W. of Moscow. Pop. 26,500.

KAMAKURA, an island of Japan, 3 miles in circumference; lying on the S. coast of Niphon. It is surrounded with very high and steep rocks, and is used as a place of exile for state prisoners.

KAMALIA, a town of Negroland, in the country of Mandingo. The inhabitants are partly pagans and partly Mahomedans, and have manufactures of cotton, leather, and iron.

KAMENITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bechin; 27 miles E. by N. of Bechin.

KAMINIECK, a strong town of Russian Poland; capital of Podolia, and a bishop's see, with a castle. When the Russians seized part of the Polish territories, in 1793, this fortress held out a long time, but at last surrendered to their arms. The castle is seated on a craggy rock; 85 miles W. of Braclaw. Pop. in 1830 (probably much exaggerated,) 15,599.

KAMNITZ, a town of Bohemia, with manufactures of stockings, glass, and linen; also several bleach-fields; 21 miles N.N.E. of Leitmeritz.

KAMSTCHATKA, a peninsula on the eastern coast of Asia, extending from 52. to 62. of N. lat. the long. of its extremity to the S. being 156. 45. E. The isthmus joining it to the continent on the N. lies between the Gulf of Olutorsh and Penshink; and its extremity to the S. is Cape Lopatka. Its greatest breadth is about 150 miles, being from the mouth of the river Tigril to that of the river Kamstchatka; and towards each extremity it gradually becomes narrower. It is bounded by the North Pacific Ocean to the S. and E.;

and by the sea of Okhotsk to the W. A chain of mountains from N. to S. extends the whole length of the peninsula, and almost equally divides it; many of these are volcanoes in a high state of action, and many of them have been accurately measured. The highest, Kentschewsky, is 16,500 feet high. Assatchinsky, 8340, Avatcha, 8760, and these are the most active of the volcanoes. There are several peaks between 10,000, and 12,000 feet. From these mountains several rivers rise, and take their course into the Pacific Ocean, and the sea of Okhotsk. Stunted trees are thinly scattered over the whole face of the country, whose bottoms are mossy, with a mixture of low heath; the whole resembling Newfoundland in a most striking degree. The severity of the climate is in proportion to the sterility of the soil. Four months, commencing at midsummer, may be considered as forming their spring, summer, and autumn; the rest of the year is an dreary winter. The forests abound in wild animals, particularly the bear; and wild fowl are also plentiful. The people of Kamtschatka may be said to consist of three sorts, the Kamstchadales, the Russians, and Koriaks, and a mixture produced by their intermarriages. The habitations of the natives consist of three different kinds, which they call jourts, balagans, and log-houses. They inhabit the first in winter, and the second in summer; in the third, introduced by the Russians, only the wealthy people reside. The external appearance of a jourt resembles a round, squat hilloek; a hole serving for a chimney, window, and door, is left in the centre, and the inhabitants go in and out by the assistance of a long pole, having notches deep enough to afford a little security for the too. The upper garment of the Kamstchadales resembles a waggoner's frock; if for summer wear, it is made of nankeen; if intended for winter, it is made of a skin, having one side turned, and the hair preserved on the other, which is worn innermost; a close jacket of nankeen, or other cotton stuff, is the next under this; and, beneath that, a shirt made of thin Persian silk, of any colour. They wear long breeches and boots, made of skins, with the hair innermost. They have also a fur cap, with two flaps, that are usually tied up close to the head, but are allowed to fall round the shoulders in rough weather. A species of dog, resembling the mountain or shepherd dogs of Europe, is used for the purposes of labour and draught. None of the inhabitants keep fewer than five of these dogs, which in winter are fed upon offals or decayed fish: in summer when their services are not required, they are left to range over the country and provide for themselves; but, on the approach of winter, they return home in the most punctual manner. They are harnessed to a sledge, two abreast, with one well trained in front as a leader, and are used both for travelling and for conveying all sorts of commodities from place to place. The Russians made themselves masters of the whole of this peninsula in 1706; but the government they have established is exceedingly mild, the inhabitants being permitted to choose their own magistrates. Skins and furs form the only articles of trade; in return for which they import brandy (the introduction of which has been attended with the most destructive effects), nankeens, and other Chinese stuffs, together with various commodities of Russian and European manufacture. It is divided into 4 districts, each of which is governed by a lieutenant, the governor resides at Petropaulowsky, which for some years has been the principal place. Its pop. is about 700. Its former capital, Misharei Kamtschatk, has not above 150 inhabitants, and Bolcheresk, a small harbour on the W. side, has a pop. of 200. The pop. does not exceed 5000.

KANAGAWA, a port on the east side of Nippon island, Japan, opened for commerce by the recent treaty; it is a poor place, and the harbour is unsafe.

KANAWHA, a county of Virginia, in the W. part of the state, watered by the Kanawha river and the Elk and Coal rivers. The Kanawha rises in N. Carolina and falls into the Ohio, 252 miles below Pittsburg. Sixty-six miles from its mouth, are the Kanawha salt-works, works which may be indefinitely extended for evaporating the brine springs, and employing a large number of men. Coal is also abundant. The capital of the county is Kanawha Court-house, called also Charleston; 6 miles below the salt-works, on the river. Pop. of the county, 13,567, including 2560 slaves.

KANDAHAR. See CANDAHAR.

KANEM, a town of the empire of Bornou, in a province of the same name, where are bred multitudes of cattle and horses. It is seated on the Gazel; 150 miles N.N.W. of Bornou.

KANGAROO ISLAND, an island on the S. coast of Australia; it was discovered by Captain Flinders, and so named from the number of kangaroos found on it, which were extremely tame. Kangaroo Head is in long. 137. 58. E. lat. 35. 43. S.

KANSAS, a state of the United States, organized in 1860; it was formerly part of the Indian territory. It has Nebraska on the N., Missouri on the E., and Utah on the W., being 600 miles long and 180 broad. Its western portion forms part of the great American desert; its eastern part is a fine country, abounding in prairies and forests, and drained by the Kansas and Arkansas rivers. Wild animals abound in some portions of its area. Since its formation into a territory, there has been much controversy as to whether slavery is to be allowed in it.

KANSAS RIVER, North America, a tributary of the Missouri; it is about 1450 miles long, and is navigable for 900 miles. It is salt in some parts of its course.

KENILWORTH, a town in Warwickshire; with a market on Wednesday. Its church is an ancient edifice; and there are two dissenting meeting-houses, a free-school, and a school of industry. Here was a famous castle, the remains of which form one of the most picturesque objects in the kingdom. It is 3 miles N. of Warwick, and 96 N.W. of London.

KENMARE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry; at the head of a river, or bay of the same name; 26 miles S.S.E. of Tralee.

KENNEBEC, a county of the United States, state of Maine; chief towns, Augusta and Hallowell. Pop. 55,823. The Kennebec river runs through this county.

KENNEBEC RIVER, next to the Penobscot the most important river of the state of Maine. Its course is about 200 miles. It is navigable for ships to Hallowell, and is the medium of an extensive commerce.

KENNEBUNK, a seaport town of Maine, at the mouth of the Kennebank river. It has considerable shipping; 75 miles S.S.W. of Augusta. Pop. 2323.

KENNET, a river of England, which rises among the chalky hills in Wiltshire, becomes navigable at Newbury, in Berkshire, and joins the Thames at Sunning.

KENSINGTON, a village in Middlesex, one mile W. of London. Here is a royal palace, which until the reign of George III., was a favourite residence of our monarchs: King William, Queen Mary, Queen Anne, and George II. died here. The gardens now form a fashionable and extensive promenade, having been gradually augmented to $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles in circumference.

KENT, a county of England; 55 miles long and 28 broad; bounded on the N. by the Thames and the German Ocean, E. by the same ocean, S. E. and S. by the English Channel and Sussex, and W. by Surrey. It contains 935,600 acres; is divided into 63 hundreds, and 414 parishes; has two cities, Canterbury and Rochester, and 24 market towns. In the soil and face of the country there is a great diversity. The banks of the Thames are low and marshy, but backed by a range of chalky eminences, sometimes rising to a moderate height. This kind of hard chalky soil, inclining to barrenness, extends to the N. E. extremity of the county, and thence round to Dover, exhibiting its nature in the lofty white cliffs which here bound the island, and produce that striking appearance at sea which gave it the name of Albion. The S.W. part of Kent, called the Weald, is a flat and woody tract, of a clayey soil, and fertile. The midland and western districts are a mixture of hill and vale, arable and pasture, equal in pleasantness to any part of England. The minerals of this county consist chiefly of chalk, flint, ragstone, and pyrites; and the only mineral water of any note is that of Tunbridge Wells. The manufactures are few; but every branch of agriculture is extensively prosecuted with ability and success. Besides the usual objects of agriculture, the county produces large quantities of hops, (for which it is famous,) fruit of various kinds (especially cherries and apples, of which there are large orchards for the London markets). In the S. W. angle of the county is Romney-marsh, celebrated for its rich meadows, affording pasturage to vast flocks of sheep. Few counties in Britain abound more in antiquities and noblemen's seats, than Kent. It is divided into the Eastern and Western divisions, each of which returns two members to parliament. The principal rivers, besides the Thames, are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother.

KENT, is also the name of four counties in the United States: one in Rhode Island, on the W. side of Narraganset bay, pop. 13,083; another in Delaware, the soil of which is esteemed the richest in the state, pop. 19,872; a third in Maryland, on the eastern shore of Chesapeake bay, pop. 10,842; and the fourth in Michigan, pop. 2587.

KENTUCKY, one of the United States of America; 328 miles long, and from 30 to 190 broad. It is bounded on the N. by the Ohio, E. by Virginia, S. by Tennessee, and W. by the Mississippi; has an area of 40,110 square miles; and is divided into 90 counties. The soil is amazingly fertile in the central part; to the E. and W. it is mountainous, and the S. is principally composed of the Burrens, a sterile country destitute of water. Tobacco, hemp, cotton, and the different grains of Europe, but particularly maize and wheat, are cultivated. The trees are numerous, but of comparatively small size: the oak, beech, poplar, sugar-tree, mulberry, and ash, are common; and here are also the pawpaw, cucumber, black mulberry, wild cherry, buckeye, and some other kind of trees not common elsewhere. The mountainous parts produce a great quantity of ginseng. Iron ore and lead are found in abundance; and there are many large caves, some of which extend above a mile under a limestone rock, supported by curious arches and pillars. The waters produce plenty of fish and fowl; especially geese and ducks, which are amazingly numerous on the Ohio. The land fowls are turkeys; a species of grouse which the inhabitants call pheasants; and quails, to which they give the name of partridges. Among the native animals are deer, bears, wild cats, wolves, beavers, otters, foxes, rabbits, squirrels, racoons, and opossums. Most of the species of domestic quadrupeds, such as horses, cows, sheep, and hogs, have been introduced since the settlement. The manufactures of this state, which are considerable, consist of cloth and stuffs, bagging for cotton and hemp, iron castings, nails, earthenware, glass, leather, cordage, paper, distilled spirits, oil, salt, saltpetre, gunpowder, and maple sugar. Louisville is much the largest and most commercial place in the state: Lexington is the oldest. Frankfort on the Kentucky river is the capital. Pop. in 1840, 779,828, including 182,258 slaves.

KENTUCKY, a river in the foregoing state, which rises in the Laurel Mountains, and after a general N.W. course of 200 miles, enters the Ohio in lat. 38. 42. N. It is navigable for boats 150 miles; but the stream in some places is rapid and dangerous, and its banks may rather be called precipices.

KENYON, a township in Winwick parish, Lancashire, at the junction of the Bolton with the Liverpool and Manchester railway.

KERASOON, a seaport in Asiatic Turkey, on the S. shore of the Black sea. It stands on an elevated rocky promontory, and is in a ruinous condition. It appears formerly to have been a place of great strength. It is the ancient Cerasus, and has now a population of 3000, half Armenian, half Greek; 88 miles W. by S. from Trebisond.

KERELAHI, or MESJID HOSSEIN, a town of Asiatic Turkey, pacha of Irak Arabi, near the W. bank of the Euphrates. There is a splendid mosque and tomb of Hossein, grandson of the prophet, much resorted to by pilgrims; 55 miles S.W. from Bagdad. Pop. large, but uncertain.

KERCOLANG, an island in the Indian ocean; about 80 miles in circumference. The face of the country is diversified with steep hills and extensive valleys, and is everywhere covered with trees and verdure. The inhabitants are Malay. Long. 126. 30. E. lat. 4. 28. N.

KERGUELEN LAND, an island in the Southern ocean, which, on account of its sterility, Captain Cook, who visited it in 1779, would have denominated the island of Desolation, but that he was unwilling to rob M. Kerguelen of the honour of its bearing his name. On the N.E. coast is a good and safe bay, named Christmas harbour. Long. 69. 30. E. lat. 49. 20. S.

KERKOUR, a town of Kurdistan; the capital of a government, and residence of a pacha. It is surrounded by walls, and defended by a castle; 135 m. S.S.E. of Betlis. Pop. 14,500.

KERMAN, the ancient Caramania; a province of Persia, lying on the Gulf of Persia. The northern part is barren, but towards the S. the land is fertile.

KERMAN, or SIRJIAN, a city of Persia; capital of the foregoing province; celebrated for its beautiful pottery, carpets, and stuffs. It is 120 miles N. by W. of Bunder Abbas. Long. 55. 15. E. lat. 29. 20. N. Pop. 21,000.

KERMANSIAH, a city of Persia, capital of Persian Kurdistan. It stands near the banks of the Kerkah or Karassu, in a beautiful plain, and surrounded by a substantial brick wall, and has a citadel. Its manufactures are principally woollen carpets and swords. Its population (now 30,000) and importance have been steadily increasing during the present century. About 6 miles E. of it, and in a range of mountains, are the excavations and sculptures of Takti Bostan, which though most interesting, are of doubtful origin. Kermanshah is 82 miles W.S.W. of Hamadan, and 320 S.W. of Ispahan.

KERPEN, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Juliers. It has a collegiate church; it is seated on the Erft; 10 miles E.S.E. of Juliers.

KERRY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster; bounded on the E. by the counties of Limerick and Cork; W. by the Atlantic Ocean; N. by the Shannon, which separates it from Thomond; and S. by Desmond and the ocean. Its greatest length is 67 miles, and its maximum breadth 62, comprising about 1,040,487 statute acres, or 1639 square miles. The southern part is plain, and fertile in corn; but the greater part is mountainous, and chiefly adapted for grazing. Maegillicuddys Reeks, the highest mountains in Ireland, and the Lake of Killarney, with its celebrated scenery, are in this county. Considerable quantities of beef, butter, hides, and tallow, are exported from its excellent harbours. Tralee is the capital. It sends two members to parliament.

KERRY, a parish of Wales, in Montgomeryshire; situate in a beautiful vale of the same name; 3 miles from Newton.

KERSHAW, a district in the centre of North Carolina, with some very fertile land. Capital, Camden. Pop. in 1840, 12,281, including 8043 slaves.

KERTSCH, a seaport and fortress on the E. coast of the Crimea. It is of great importance, as one of those commanding the passage which forms the communication between the Black sea and sea of Azoph. It stands on the site of the ancient Panticapæum. It was taken possession of by the Allies, May 25, 1855. Its excellent museum of antiquities, &c., was then much mutilated, but numerous antiquarian discoveries were made. Long. 36. 28. E. lat. 45. 21. N.

KESH, or SENS, a town of Usbec Tartary, in Bukharia; once the summer residence of Timur. It is 30 m. S. by W. of Samarcand.

KESMARK, or KAISERSMARKT, a town of Hungary, on the Propad, a tributary of the Vistula. It has an ancient castle, and some trade in linen and wine; 130 miles N.E. of Pesth. Pop. 4330.

KESSEL, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Antwerp; with a handsome castle. It is seated on the Maese; 7 miles N. of Ruremonde.

KESSELDORF, a village of Saxony, 7 miles W. of Dresden; celebrated for a victory gained by the king of Prussia over the Saxons, in the year 1745.

KESWICK, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday; seated in a vale of its name, near the rapid river Greta. This vale is much visited by the admirers of nature: here is the Lake of Keswick, or Derwentwater; and to the N. of this soars the lofty mountain Skiddaw, one of the most distinguished in England. Keswick has manu-

It is 25 miles N.W. of Kendal, and 293 N.N.W. of London.

KESZTHELY, a town of Hungary, near the W. end of Lake Balaton; 98 miles S. of Presburg. It has an important school of agriculture, called the Georgicon. Pop. 7000.

KETSKEMET, a town of Hungary; 50 miles S.E. of Pesth. The inhabitants (36,000?) are chiefly employed in the breeding and sale of horses, cattle, and sheep.

KETERING, a town in Northamptonshire, with a market on Saturday, and manufactures of woollen articles, &c. It is 12 miles N.E. of Northampton, and 74 N.W. of London.

KESCHBERG, or KIADÉ, a town of Prussian Saxony; 6 miles S.E. of Mersburg.

KEW, a village in Surrey; 6 miles W. by S. of London. The royal palace of Kew was a favourite retreat of George III., who enlarged the gardens, and united them with those of Richmond. The botanic garden, chiefly for exotics, is one of the finest in the world, and contains a magnificent hot-house, completed in 1848, 362 feet long.

KEXHOLM. See WINERG.

KEXHOLM, a town of Russia, in Finland, formerly the capital of the Swedish province of Carelia, and now of a Russian government. It is situated on two islands, in the river Woxon, which here flows into Lake Ladoga; 90 miles N. of Petersburg. Long. 30. 25. E. lat. 61. 3. N.

KEY WEST, a town of Florida. It is on the N.W. end of an island of the same name, otherwise Thompson's island, one of the Florida Keys; it has become an important station, the key to the Mexican gulf. It is finely situated for a naval station, and has a fine harbour.

KEYNSHAM, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Thursday, and a trade in malt; seated on the Chew, at its conflux with the Avon; 5 miles S.E. of Bristol, and 114 W. of London.

KIARKOFF, a government of European Russia, N. of Ekaterinostav. Area, 17,450 square miles. Pop. in 1838, 1,334,000.

KIARKOFF, or CHARKOW, a town of European Russia, capital of the above government; 400 miles S. by W. of Moscow. It is the seat of a university founded in 1804.

KAARUM, a town of Sennaar, Eastern Africa, near the junction of the White and Blue Niles. It is the centre of the ivory trade of the district, and the starting-point of Consul Pethinck and other travellers who are now exploring the sources of the Nile.

KUEL, a city of Beloochistan, of which it is the capital, and is a place of considerable strength. It was taken by storm by the British, November 13, 1839. It is 240 miles S. by W. of Kandahar. Lat. 29. 7. N. long. 65. 45. E.

KHERSON. See CHERSON.

KHIVA, or KHIARESM, an independant khanat of Turkistan, in Central Asia, of uncertain limits, and lying S.E. of the Caspian and Aral seas, and W. of Bokhara, which it somewhat resembles. Its chief feature is the river Oxus, along the banks of which is the principal population, the remainder of the territory consisting of sandy wastes. The chief population consists of Uzbek Tartars, who seize many slaves, and from this cause, the Russians made a hostile descent upon it in 1835. The total pop. is estimated by Sir A. Burnes, at 200,000.

KHIVA, a town of Central Asia, the capital of the above khanat, in a plain near the Oxus. It is picturesque, but built of mud. Pop. perhaps 10,000 or 12,000; 290 miles W.N.W. of Bokhara, on the road from Orenburg.

KHOKAN, or FERGHANA, a khanat of Central Asia, S. of the Kirghiz steppe, W. and N.W. of Turkistan, and N. of Bokhara. It is chiefly mountainous. Its limits are, as usual in this part of the East, very variable, but it probably will fall into the hands of Russia. The inhabitants are Uzbeks; capital, Khokan.

KHOKAN, the capital of the preceding khanat, is on the Sir, or Sihun (Jaxartes). It is an open town chiefly built of mud, with many mosques. Pop. uncertain, but about 70,000 or 80,000; 230 miles N.E. of Samar-cand.

KHORASSAN. See CHORASSAN.

KHUM. See COM.

KIA-KING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Tche-kiang. Canals are cut through most of the streets, and passengers are sheltered from the sun and rain by beautiful piazzas. The silk manufactures are very extensive, and the trade considerable. It is 590 miles S.S.E. of Peking. Long. 120. 14. E. lat. 30. 50. N.

KIAKTA, or KIACHITA, a town of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Irkutsk. It has a considerable fur trade, and is the centre of the Russian and Chinese commerce. It stands on a small river near its conflux with the Selenga, 75 miles S.S.W. of Selenginsk. Long. 106. 28. E. lat. 50. 21. N. Pop. 4000.

KIANGARI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, chief place of a sangiac; with a castle on a rock, 230 miles E. of Brusa. Long. 34. 47. E. lat. 39. 56. N.

KIANG-SU, a province on the eastern coast of China, esteemed the richest in the empire. According to the statistics of the emperor Kien-long it contains 40,000 square miles; and a population nearly 38,000,000, or about 946 inhabitants to the square mile, showing it to be, for its extent, the most populous in the world. It consists of plains perfectly watered, being traversed in its whole length by the Yang-tze-kiang, one of the finest rivers of Asia. The principal productions are rice, cotton, particularly yellow cotton, green teas, and the mulberry tree. Its silk manufactures are very flourishing. Nanking, the ancient capital of the empire, is the principal city. Besides this, Suchau, surnamed the paradise of China, and Shang-haë, one of the most celebrated seats of commerce in any age, are in this province. Shang-haë, which commands the commerce of the interior, is the northernmost and principal of the Chinese ports opened to Europeans by the late war.

KIANG-SI, a province of China, bounded on the N. by Kiang-nan, W. by Honquang, S. by Quang-tong, and E. by Fokien and Tche-kiang. The N. part contains the great Poyang Lake, and some extensive morasses; the middle and S. parts are mountainous, but intermixed with fertile and well cultivated valleys. It contains 13 cities of the first rank, and 78 of the second and third. It is celebrated for its porcelain, which is the finest and most valuable of the empire. Nan-tchang is the capital.

KIAN-KU, or YANG-TZE-KIANG, the largest river of Asia. It flows E. during the first part of its course along the borders of China, after which it enters the empire, and, passing through the grand central provinces, falls into the Gulf of Tung-ning, in the eastern sea. See YANG-TZE-KIANG.

KIURGO, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Zurich, with a castle; seated on the Theoff, 14 miles E. N.E. of Zurich.

KIDDERMINSTER, a borough in Worcestershire, with a market on Thursday, and another, recently established, on Saturday. It has long been celebrated for its carpet manufacture, which has been brought to great perfection: it has also manufactures of poplins, crapes, bombazeens, &c. A fine specimen of carpet-weaving, delineating the descent from the cross, is placed over the altar in St. George's chapel, recently erected. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes this place. And also the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. It returns one member to parliament. It is seated on the river Stour, 14 miles S. E. of Bridgenorth, and 118 N. W. of London.

KIDWELLY, or CYDWELL, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Tuesday. It stands on a creek of the Bristol Channel, and has a canal to some collieries, whence coal is brought down and exported. Here are also an iron-foundry and a tin-mill. On the opposite bank of the creek, where the old town formerly stood, are the remains of a castle. It is 8 miles S. of Caermarthen, and 226 W. by N. of London.

KIEF. See KIOF.

KIEL, a strong town of Denmark, capital of the duchy of Holstein, with a castle and a university. It stands on a peninsula, in a bay of the Baltic, and has a commodious harbour for ships of the largest size. It is one of the most commercial places in Holstein, and its trade is augmented by means of the canal to Rendsburg, and railways to Hamburg, Gluckstadt, &c. Kiel is 87 miles N. W. of Lubec, and 46 N. by E. of Hamburg. Pop. 7500.

KIEN-NING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Fo-kien. At the time of the conquest of China by the Tartars, it sustained two sieges, and was at last taken, and all the inhabitants put to the sword. It was afterwards re-established by the Tartars, and is now a place of considerable trade. It stands on the river Min-ho, 260 miles S. E. of Nan-king. Long 117. 2. E. lat. 27. 5 N.

KIEN-TCHANG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si, seated in a fertile country, 340 miles S. S. W. of Nan-king. Long. 118. 20. E. lat. 27. 35 N.

KIEOU-KIANG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si; situate on the Kiang-ku, immediately above the influx of the Poyang-hou. It is the rendezvous of all the barks which pass to and from other places in this province, and the provinces of Kiang-su and Hou-quang. It is 250 miles S. W. of Nan-king. Long. 116. 0. E. lat. 29. 54. N.

KIEV. See KIOV.

KILDARCHAN, a village of Scotland, on the W. side of Loch Winnoch; 5 miles S. W. of Renfrew. It is inhabited chiefly by weavers, and has extensive bleachfields.

KILBEGGAN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Westmeath; 56 miles from Dublin.

KILBRIDE, a town of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, noted for its cotton manufactures, and for being the birthplace of Dr. William Hunter and his brother John, two highly celebrated anatomists and physiologists. It is 6 miles S. by E. of Glasgow.

KILCALMONEILL, a town of Scotland, in Argyleshire; 17 miles N. of Campbelton.

KILCONQUHAR, a town of Scotland, Fifeshire. The vicinity abounds in coal and limestone. It is situated on the north shore of the Frith of Forth.

KILDA, St., one of the Hebrides, 28 miles to the W. of North Uist. It is 3 miles long and 2 broad, fenced about with one continued perpendicular face of rock, of prodigious height, except at the landing-place on the S. E., where there is a narrow and steep passage to a village on the top of a rock. The surface of the island is hilly, but it feeds many sheep, and produces plenty of barley and potatoes. Many of the inhabitants live chiefly by fishing, and catching wild fowls. In the latter employment they are incredibly adventurous. Being let down by a rope from the summit of the precipitous rocks, they clamber along their fronts, in search of the eggs and nests of various birds. St. Kilda is the most remote of the Hebrides, and is about 140 miles from the nearest point of the mainland of Scotland. Long. 8. 32. W. lat. 57. 50. N.

from 12 to 20 broad; bounded on the E. by Dublin and Wicklow, W. by King's county and Queen's county, N. by East Meath, and S. by Carlow. The principal rivers are the Liffey, Barrow, and Boyne. It is a very fertile and arable country, area 392,435 acres, much interspersed with bog, amounting to 36,480 acres, including the bogs of Allen, Lullymore, &c., part of which have been reclaimed. It sends two members to parliament.

KILDARE, a town of Ireland, capital of the foregoing county, and a bishop's see. It is chiefly supported by frequent horse-races on what is called the Carragh, a fine turfy plain, containing upwards of 5000 acres, which feeds a great number of sheep; 27 miles S.W. of Dublin. Long. 6. 57. W. lat. 53. 9. N.

KILFENORA, a small town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, and a bishop's see united with Killaloe; 12 miles N.W. of Ennis.

KILIA, a fortified town of European Russia, in Bessarabia; with a good trade in wool, goats' hair, tallow, wine, corn, &c. It is situated on the most northern branch of the Danube; 86 miles S.W. of Bialogorod.

KILKENNY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 40 miles long and 20 broad, containing 510,882 acres; bounded on the E. by Carlow and Wexford, W. by Tipperary, N. by Queen's county, and S. by Waterford. It sends two members to parliament. The surface is in general level, and the soil fertile. It is particularly noted for its coal, which makes no smoke in burning. The principal rivers are the Barrow, Suire, and Nore.

KILKENNY, a city of Ireland, capital of the above county, situate on the river Nore, over which are two bridges. Irishtown, on the E. side of the river, is joined to it, and both together form a large and pleasant place. The cathedral, which stands in Irishtown, belongs to the bishop of Ossory. The chief manufactures are coarse woollens and fine blankets. It sends one member to parliament; 26 m. N. of Waterford, and 81 from Dublin, on the Great Southern and Western railway.

KILLALA, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, and formerly a bishop's see united with Achonry, now united with Tuam. It stands on a fine bay of the Atlantic, to which it gives name; 24 miles N. of Castlebar.

KILLALOE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, and formerly a bishop's see united with Kilfenora, now united with Tuam. It is seated on the Shannon, over which is a bridge of 19 arches; 10 miles N.N.E. of Limerick.

KILLARNEY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, with an extensive manufacture. It is much frequented on account of the adjoining lake; 14 miles S.E. of Trillick, and 186 from Dublin, by railway.

KILLARNEY, a beautiful lake of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, otherwise called Lough Leaa, from its being surrounded by high mountains. It is divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lake. The northern, or lower lake, is 6 miles long and 3 broad. On the side of one of the mountains is O'Sullivan's Cascade, which falls above 70 feet into the lake with a tremendous roar; and opposite this cascade is the island of Innisfallen. The promontory of Mucrus divides the upper from the lower lake, and on passing round its extremity into the upper lake, there is a celebrated rock, called the Eagle's Nest, which produces wonderful echoes. The upper lake is 4 miles long and 2 broad; and from the mountains descend a number of beautiful cascades. The islands in this lake are numerous, and afford an amazing variety of picturesque views. The centre lake is small in comparison with the other two, and cannot boast of equal variety; but the shores are indented with bays, surrounded by dark groves of trees. The E. boundary is formed by the base of Mangerton, down the steep side of which descends a cascade, visible for 150 yards; this fall of water is supplied by a circular lake, near the summit of the mountain, called the Devil's Punch-bowl, which is considered one of the greatest curiosities of Killarney.

KILCULLEN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, on the river Liffey, over which is a bridge; 9 miles E.S.E. of Kildare, and 25 S.W. of Dublin.

KILLIECRANKIE, a celebrated pass through the Grampian Mountains in Scotland, in Perthshire; 15 miles above Dunkeld. The revolutionary army was defeated here in 1689.

KILLIMANJARO, an apparently isolated, snow-capped mountain of immense elevation, in Eastern Africa. It was supposed to be the source of the waters of the White Nile.

KILLONNY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Sligo, 6 miles S. of Sligo.

KILLOUGH, or PORT ST. ANN, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Down, to the N. of St. John's Point, in the Irish sea. A rock stands in the middle of the entrance of its harbour, covered at half flood. Here is a manufacture of salt; 6 miles S.S.E. of Downpatrick. Long. 5. 40. W. lat. 54. 14. N.

KILLRUSH, a town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, near the river Shannon; it is a modern town, and has a considerable trade in grain, butter, slates, &c.

KILLYBEGS, a town of Ireland, in the county of Donegal, with a spacious harbour on the N. side of Donegal bay; 12 miles N.W. of Ballyshannon.

KILMACTHOMAS, a town of Ireland, in the county of Waterford; 12 miles W.S.W. of Waterford.

KILMAINHAM, a town of Ireland, in a valley; about half a mile W. of Dublin. It has a session-house, a gaol, a foundling hospital, and an hospital for invalid soldiers. Here the knights for the county of Dublin are elected; and it was the seat of government before the castle at Dublin was appropriated to that purpose.

KILMALLOCK, a town of Ireland, in the county of Limerick; 140 miles from Dublin. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and formerly of much importance, as its numerous ruined mansions, castles, &c., indicate.

KILMARNOCK, a populous and flourishing town of Scotland, in Ayrshire; with a market on Friday. In conjunction with Renfrew, &c., it sends one member to parliament. It is the principal manufacturing town in the county, and carries on an extensive trade: its chief manufactures are carpets, serges, blankets, tartans, and other woollen goods, saddlery, leather, &c. Near it are the remains of Denn Castle, the seat of the earls of Kilmarnock, in the desolate condition to which it was reduced by fire in 1735. It is seated near the Irvine, on the Glasgow and Ayr railway, and has a railway $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles long to Troon which is its port; 11 miles N.N.E. of Ayr, and 20 S.S.W. of Glasgow.

KILMAURS, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire; formerly celebrated for its cutlery; 2 miles N.W. of Kilmarnock.

KILMORE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cavan, and, with Armagh, a bishop's see; 3 miles S.W. of Cavan.

KILRENNY, a parish of Scotland, in Fifeshire; on the Frith of Forth; 20 miles N.E. of Edinburgh.

KILRUSH, a seaport of Ireland, in the S.W. of county Clare. It exports considerable quantities of corn, &c., and has a good herring fishery and a pier; 37 m. W. of Limerick.

KILSYTH, a village of Scotland, in Stirlingshire; inhabited chiefly by weavers employed by the Glasgow manufacturers. Here a great victory over the covenanters, was obtained by the marquis of Montrose, in 1645. It is situate on the road from Stirling to Glasgow and Edinburgh; 15 miles S.W. of Stirling, and 13 N.E. of Glasgow.

KILWINNING, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire. Here is the elegant seat of the Montgomery family, Eglintoun castle; also some remains of a magnificent monastery, which was erected here in 1140. The vicinity abounds in limestone and coal. It is seated on the Garnock, over which is a stone bridge, and near the Glasgow and Ayr railway; 3 miles N.N.W. of Irvine.

KIMBOLTON, a town in Huntingdonshire; with a market on Friday. Here is a castle, the seat of the Duke of Manchester, where Queen Catherine resided for some time after her divorce from Henry VIII.; 63 miles N. by W. of London.

KIMI, or KIEMI, a town of Russian Lapland; on a river of the same name, near its entrance into the Gulf of Bothnia; 10 miles E. of Tornea.

KIN, or KAIN, a town of Persia, in the province of Seistan; situate at the foot of a mountain; 60 miles S.S.W. of Herat.

KINBURN, a fortress of Russia, in the government of Taurida, on the S. side of the estuary of the Dnieper. It has been frequently attacked by the Turks, by land and sea, but without success; 18 miles S.S.E. of Oczakow, on the opposite side of the Dnieper.

KINCARDINE, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire; with a commodious harbour, and a good road in the Frith of Forth. Ship-building is carried on to a great extent, and the coasting and foreign trade is considerable; 5 miles S.E. of Alloa and 22 of Perth, near the Stirling and Dunfermline railway.

KINCARDINE, a town of Scotland, in Ross-shire, with a small harbour on the Frith of Dornoch; 14 miles W. by N. of Tain.

KINCARDINE O'NEIL, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; seated on the river Dee; 23 miles W. by S. of Aberdeen.

KINCARDINESHIRE, or MEARNS, a county of Scotland; bounded on the N.W. and N. by Aberdeenshire, E. by the German Ocean, and S. and W. by Angusshire. Its length along the coast, is 30 miles; and its greatest breadth about 24; area, 244,480 acres. The N.W. part is mountainous, and chiefly adapted for pasture; but to the S. of the Grampians, the surface is in general fertile. The small village of Kincardine, 9 miles S.W. of Stonehaven, was formerly the capital, but Stonehaven is now the county town. It sends one member to parliament.

KINDERHOOK, a town of New York, in Columbia county, on the E. side of Hudson river; 13 miles N. of the city of Hudson. Pop. 3512.

KIN-GAN, a city of China of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si; seated on the Kankiang; 800 miles S. of Peking. Long. 115. 10. E. lat. 27. 16. N.

KINGHORN, a burgh of Scotland, in Fifeshire; on the Frith of Forth, nearly opposite Leith. It joins with Burntisland, Kirkcaldy, and Dysart, in returning one member to parliament. It has two harbours, one below the town and the other half a mile W. at Pettycur, for the passage-boats between this place and Leith; 9 miles N. by W. of Leith.

KING'S COUNTY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; 43 miles long, and about 39 in its greatest breadth; bounded on the N. by West Meath, E. by Kildare, S. by Queen's county and Tipperary, and W. by the Shannon, which separates it from Galway and Roscommon. It is divided into 52 parishes, contains 523,166 acres, and sends two members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Shannon, and the Greater and Little Brosna; and the Grand Canal crosses the N. part of the county. It is not so well cultivated as some of the other counties, but the soil is tolerably fertile. The capital was Philipstown; its chief town is now Birr or Parsonstown.

KING'S LANGLEY, a village in Hertfordshire, where Henry III. occasionally resided. It is seated on the river Gade; 5 miles S.W. of St. Albans.

KINGSBRIDGE, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday; seated on a branch of the Salcombe river, over which is a bridge to Doolbrook; 34 miles S. by W. of Exeter, and 208 W.S.W. of London.

KINGSCLERE, a town in Hampshire; with a market on Tuesday, and a great trade in malt. It was the residence of some of our Saxon kings; 54 miles W. by S. of London.

KINGSCLIFF, a parish in Northamptonshire; 12 miles W. of Peterborough.

KING'S LYNN. See LYNN REGIS.

KINGSTEIN, a strong fortress of Norway. See FREDERICSTADT.

KINGSTON UPON THAMES, a corporate town in Surrey, with a market on Saturday. At a national council held here in the year 838, King Egbert, and his son Athelwolf, were present; and several of the Saxon monarchs were crowned here; hence its name, which superseded the more ancient one, or Moreford. This town sent two members to parliament in the reigns of Edward II. and III., but was disfranchised by the desire of the inhabitants. Queen Elizabeth founded here a free school; and the spring assizes are held at this place. It is seated on the river Thames, over which it had an ancient wooden bridge, now replaced by one of stone. It is 10 miles S.W. of London. The South Western Railway passes near this town.

KINGSTON, a seaport of Jamaica, in the West Indies; situate on the N. side of Port Royal bay. It was built in 1698, after the great earthquake which destroyed the town of Port Royal, and in 1803 was incorporated as a city. It is a large town lying on a slope, with straight and moderately wide streets, but unpaved and dirty, far beyond what is usual to such places belonging to England. Many of the houses, however, are extremely good and comfortable; the arsenal is close to the town wharf. The situation during the day, when the sea breeze is blowing, is delightfully cool, but at night, both damp and unhealthy. It first rose after the calamities which occurred to Port Royal, which is on the opposite side of the harbour on a tongue of land, in 1692, 1712, and 1722. Pop. in 1844, 32,943. It is 10 miles from Spanish Town to which it is connected by a railroad. Long. 76. 40. W. lat. 18. 3. N.

KINGSTON, the capital of St. Vincent, in the West Indies, situate at the head of a bay of the same name, on the S.W. shore of the island.

KINGSTON, or ESOPUS, a town of New York, in Ulster county. It was destroyed by an English fleet in 1777, but has been rebuilt on a regular plan. It stands on Esopus creek, near its entrance into Hudson river; 76 miles N. of New York. Pop. in 1840, 5824. Long. 74. 3. W. lat. 41. 54. N.

KINGSTON, a town of North Carolina, chief of Lenoir county; on the N. side of the Neus; 40 miles W. by N. of Newbern, and 50 S.E. of Raleigh.

KINGSTON, a town of South Carolina, in Georgetown district; on the Wakkamaw; 30 miles N.N.E. of Georgetown.

KINGSTON, the largest and most populous town of Upper Canada; with a good harbour. Here the Queen's stores are kept and guarded. Vessels from Lower Canada go no farther than this place; and hence to York, Niagara, &c., stores and merchandise are conveyed in boats. It is seated on Lake Ontario, at its outlet into the St. Lawrence; 190 miles W. of Montreal. Long. 76. 41. W. lat. 44. 8. N.

KINGSTON ON HULL. See HULL.

KINGSTOWN, or DUNLEARY, a town in Ireland, county of Dublin; 6½ miles from Dublin, to which it is connected by a railway, from which it has derived much advantage. It is an agreeable watering-place, and possesses an excellent asylum harbour, commenced in 1817, enclosed by two piers, each upwards of 4000 feet in length, and a light-house; area 260 acres.

KING-TCHIEOU, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Hou-quang. It is considered one of the keys of the empire, is well fortified, and has a large Tartar garrison. It stands on the Kian-ku; 620 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 111. 37. E. lat. 30. 26. N.

KING-TE-TCHING, a town of China, in the province of Kiang-si; famous for its beautiful porcelain. It is computed to contain above 1,000,000 of inhabitants, and extends 4 miles along the banks of a river, which here forms a kind of harbour; 655 miles S. of Peking. Long. 115. 54. E. lat. 29. 25. N.

KINGTON, or KINETON, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Tuesday. King John kept his court in a castle he erected here. It is 85 miles N.W. of London.

KINGTON, or KYNETON, an ancient town in Herefordshire; with a market on Wednesday, and a considerable clothing trade. It is seated on the Arrow, under Bradnor mountain; 19 miles N.W. of Hereford, and 154 W. by N. of London.

KIN-HOA, a city of China, of the first rank; in Tehe-kiang, on the banks of a fine river. It has a great trade in dried plums and hams; and it is famous for good rice-wine, and very white candles: the latter are made of a substance obtained from little shrubs with a white flower, not unlike jessamine. It is 190 miles S. by E. of Nan-king. Long. 119. 10. E. lat. 29. 16. N.

KINNAIRD HEAD, a lofty promontory on the E. coast of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; about a mile to the N. of the town of Fraserburgh. Here is a castle four storeys high, on the top of which is a lighthouse. Long. 1. 46. W. lat. 57. 39. N.

KINROSS, a town of Scotland, the capital of Kinross-shire; seated in a plain, screened on the N. by the Ochill hills; and on the river Leven, before it enters Loch Leven. It has a manufacture of cotton and coarse linens. It is 23 miles N.N.W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 9. W. lat. 56. 7. N.

KINROSS-SHIRE, a county of Scotland, surrounded by the shires of Perth and Fife, and almost circular; about 30 miles in circumference. Area 50,560. It is divided into four parishes. The central part is occupied by Loch Leven, which has been considerably drained, and the country around has a rich appearance. It sends 1 member to parliament alternately with the county of Clackmannan.

KINSALE, a seaport and borough of Ireland, in the county of Cork; returning one member to parliament. It is a maritime arsenal, and has an excellent harbour, defended by a strong fort. In times of war it was very much frequented by East and West India fleets. Notwithstanding its fine harbour, its trade is but trifling, the principal dependence of the town being on its fisheries; it is therefore in a depressed condition. It is seated at the mouth of the Bandon; 14 miles S. of Cork. Long. 8. 28. W. lat. 51. 42. N.

KIN-TCHING, the capital of the island of Loo-choo, in the China sea, and of all the islands under that appellation. The king's palace, reckoned to be four leagues in circumference, is built on a neighbouring mountain. Long. 127. 30. E. lat. 26. 2. N.

KIN-TONG, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Yun-nan. The surrounding country is mountainous, but the valleys yield abundance of rice. It is seated on the Papien; 750 miles W. by N. of Canton. Long. 100. 40. E. lat. 24. 30. N.

KINTORE, a burgh of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; on the river Don; 13 miles W. by N. of Aberdeen. It sends, in conjunction with Elgin, &c., one member to parliament.

KINTYRE. See CANTYRE.

KIN-YANG, a city of China, of the first rank; in Chen-si. It has always been deemed as a barrier against the incursions of the Tartars, and is strongly fortified. The country around is very fruitful. It is 560 miles S.W. of Peking. Long. 107. 30. E. lat. 36. 6. N.

KIN-YUEN, a city of China of the first rank; in Quang-si. It is seated on a fine river, but surrounded with craggy mountains, inhabited by a rude and savage race of people. It is 310 miles W. by N. of Canton. Long. 108. 15. E. lat. 25. 28. E.

KIOV, or KIOW, a government of the Russian empire, being part of the Ukraine, or Little Russia. It was once a duchy, belonging to the great dukes of Russia, and Kiov was their capital. This country was conquered by the Tartars, and came again into the possession of the great dukes, but was overrun and possessed by the Cossacks, under the protection of Poland. In 1664, the natives, discontented with John Casimir, king of Poland, submitted to Russia, and have ever since remained subject to that empire. This government is divided into twelve circles, and contained, in 1838, 460,000 inhabitants.

KIOV, KIOW, KIEF, KIVA, or KIIVA, a town of European Russia; capital of the foregoing government, and a Greek archbishop's see; with a castle. It is divided into the Old Town, the Lower Town, and the fortress of Petcherski, all connected by intrinements. Here are catacombs of considerable extent, dug, as it would seem, through a mass of hardened clay. It has a celebrated theological academy, founded in 1661. It is seated on the Dnieper; 180 miles N.E. of Kaminitck, and 335 E.S.E. of Warsaw. Pop. 26,000.

KIO-FEOU, a city of China, in the province of Chan-tong, and district of Yen-tcheon. It was the birthplace of Confucius, several monuments to whose memory are still to be seen here.

KIOGE, a seaport of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand. The English defeated the Danes here, and took the town in 1807. It is 10 miles S.W. of Copenhagen. Long. 12. 15. E. lat. 55. 30. N.

KIOPING, or KÖPING, a town of Sweden, in the government of Westeraas; 18 miles N. by W. of Westeraas.

KIPPEN, a town of Scotland, in Stirling-shire; on the S. bank of the Forth; 9 miles W. of Stirling.

KIRBY, or KIRKBY LONSDALE, a town in Westmoreland; with a market on Thursday and manufactures of carpets and blankets. It is seated on the Loynce, over which is a curious ancient stone bridge of three arches. It is 12 miles S.E. of Kendal, and 252 N.W. of London.

N. Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday. There are several interesting ruins in the neighbourhood; and in the village of Kirkdale, 2 miles hence, many fossil animal remains were discovered in 1820. It is seated on the river Dow; 29 miles N. of York, and 221 N. by W. of London.

KIRBY, or KIRBY STEPHEN, a town in Westmoreland, with a market on Monday. The woollen manufacture is the chief trade here. It is seated on the River Eden; 3 miles S.S.E. of Appleby, and 266 N.N.W. of London.

KIRCHBERG, a town and castle of Wirtemberg, in a district of the same name; seated on the Iller; 9 miles S. of Ulm.

KIRCHBERG, a town of Wirtemberg, with a castle on a hill, by the river Jaxt; 12 miles S.S.W. of Rotenberg.

KIRCHBERG, a town in the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine; 41 miles W. of Meutz.

KIRCHEIM, a town of Bavaria, on the Mindel; 29 miles E.S.E. of Ulm.

KIRCHHAYN, a town of the Prussian states, in Lusatia; seated on the Bober; 18 miles S. of Luckau.

KIRCHHEIM, a town of Wirtemberg, with a castle; seated on the river Lauter; 1 mile S.E. of Stutzgard.

KIRDORF, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 42 miles S.S.W. of Cassel.

KIRGHIZ, STEPPE OF THE, a county of W. Asia, in the N. part of Independent Turkistan, between lats. 44. and 55. N. and longs. 53. and 82. E. being about 1400 miles long and 1100 broad. Area, 1,533,000 square miles, and the probable pop. of the three hordes composing the Kirghiz nation, 2,300,000. Till recently we have known but little of this singular and nomadic people. These are nominally but not really subject to Russia, and have no form of government properly so called. They wander from place to place with their camels, horses and sheep, in which their wealth, and provision consist. The Kirghiz Steppe is not a mere plain, but is intersected by mountain ridges; and also comprises the Caspian and Aral seas. The climate is in the extremes of heat and cold. The Kirghiz are closely allied to the Mongols, and their language a corrupted Turkish. They are usually divided into the Great, Middle, and Little hordes, but these terms are misapplied in reference to their numbers.

KIRIN, a government of Eastern Tartary; enclosed between the sea of Japan, the northern frontier of Corea, and the river of Saghalien. The emperor of China sends thither the criminals banished by the laws.

KIRIN, a city of Eastern Tartary; capital of the foregoing province, and the residence of a Mandshar general, who is invested with the authority of a viceroy. It is situate on the river Songari, which is here called Kirin; 540 miles E.N.E. of Peking. Long. 126. 20. N. lat. 43. 20. N.

KIRKCALDY a burgh of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with a good harbour. Here are a dock-yard for small vessels, and manufactures of checks, ticking, cotton, and leather. This was the birthplace of the celebrated Dr. Adam Smith, author of the "Wealth of Nations." It sends, with Dysart, &c., one member to parliament. It is seated on the N. side of the Frith of Forth; 11 miles N. of Leith.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT, a burgh and seaport of Scotland, capital of the county of its name; with a castle; contributory, with Dumfries, &c., in sending one member to parliament. The harbour will admit ships of any burden to come up to the town, and yet it has no considerable trade or manufacture. It is seated at the mouth of the Dee; 23 miles S. W. of Dumfries.

KIRKCUDBRIGHTSHIRE, or EAST GALLOWAY, a county of Scotland, 45 miles long and 30 broad; bounded on the N.W. by Ayrshire, N.E. and E. by Dumfriesshire, S. by Solway Frith and the Irish sea, and W. by Wigtonshire. It is divided into 28 parishes, and sends one member to parliament. The northern parts are mountainous and uncultivated; but there is some fertile land on the sides of the rivers, and it feeds a great number of cattle and sheep. The chief rivers are the Dee, Fleet, Cree, and Orr.

KIRKHAM, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Thursday. The ancient church was taken down in 1822, except the tower. The manufactures are sail-cloth, cordage, coarse linens, cottons, &c. It is situated near the mouth of the Ribble, on the Preston and Wyre railway; 23 miles S. of Lancaster, and 226 N.N.W. of London.

KIRKINTILLOCH, a town of Scotland, in Dumbartonshire, with manufactures of linen and cotton; seated near the junction of the Luggie with the Kelvin; 7 miles E.N.E. of Glasgow.

KIRK-KILISSA, a town of European Turkey in Roumelia. It is large, dirty and ruinous, 106 miles W.N.W. of Constantinople, and 30 E. of Adrianople.

KIRKLESS, a village in W. Yorkshire; situate on the Calder; 3 miles from Huddersfield. In the park near it is the monument of the famous Robin Hood.

KIRKOSWALD, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Thursday. On an elevated spot, a little E. of the town, are the ruins of a castle, and on another eminence, 3 miles to the S., is the famous Druidical monument called Long Meg and her Daughters. Kirkoswald is seated at the conflux of the Croglin with the Eden; 9 miles N. by E. of Penrith, and 292 N.W. of London.

KIRKPATRICK, a village of Scotland, in Dumbartonshire; 5 miles E.S.E. of Dumbarton. The vestiges of the Roman wall, built by Antoninus, extend from the Clyde at this place to Abercorn on the Frith of Forth. It is called, by the country people, Graham's Dike.

KIRKTON, or KIRTON, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Saturday; situate on the top of a hill; 20 miles N. of Lincoln, and 147 N. by W. of London.

KIRKWALL, a burgh of Scotland; capital of Pomona, the principal island of the Orkneys. It is contributory in sending one member to parliament. It is built on a neck of land on the E. side of the island; and the most striking object is the stately cathedral of St. Magnus, opposite which is the bishop's palace, now called a castle. The harbour is excellent, with a good outer road, defended by a fortification. Here are manufactures of linen and cotton; and great quantities of kelp was exported. It is thirty miles N.E. of Thurso, in Caithness-shire.

KIRN, a town of the Prussian province of Lower Rhine; situate on the Nahe; 42 miles S. by W. of Coblenz.

KIRRYMUIR, a town of Scotland, in Forfarshire, with considerable manufactures of brown and coarse lincens. It is five miles N.W. of Forfar, and 16 N. of Dundee.

KIRSHEHR, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia; formerly a considerable city, called Diocæsarea. Salt is made in the neighbourhood. It is 84 miles N.E. of Konieh. Long. 34. 15. E. lat. 39. 10. N.

KIRSOVA, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria; seated on the Danube; 76 m. S.W. of Ismael. Long. 28. 4. E. lat. 44. 47. N.

KISMICH, or KISHM, a fertile island at the entrance of the Gulf of Persia; 60 miles long, and 12 broad; separated by a narrow channel from the continent of Persia. Its east end is 12 miles south of Bunder Abbas.

KISSINGEN, a town of the Bavarian states, in Franconia, in the environs of which are some medicinal and salt springs. It is 32 miles north of Wurzburg.

Lower Kurdistan, or the western division, which is included in the pachalic of Bagdad, and corresponds nearly to the whole of ancient Assyria Proper; and Artelan, which extends from the small river Sharook to the Turkish district of Zohab. The surface is diversified by mountains and valleys: and the soil is in some places fertile and well cultivated; but it abounds with deserts, and except in the neighbourhood of the towns, is barren and desolate. Wheat and barley are the grains most commonly raised. The inhabitants are not subject either to the Turks or Persians. Some live in towns and villages, and others rove from place to place, having tents like the wild Arabs, and being robbers like them. The tribes are ruled by a number of their own princes, or chiefs. They are proud of their descent, and demand a premium for their daughters, on giving them in marriage. Their character and circumstances seem to have undergone little change since the most remote times. Xenophon is supposed to refer to them under the name of Carduchai, a people who opposed the retreat of the 10,000 Greeks. Their religion is partly Christianity, and partly Mohammedism. Altunkupri is the capital. Kermanshah is the capital of the Persian Kurdistan. The chief towns are Kerkook, Solymania, Beltis, Erbil, Amndia, Sennah, &c.

the southern point of Kamstchatka to the isles of Jesso, or Matsmai, an island of Japan. They lie between 42, and 51. of N. lat., and the whole length of the range is said to be nearly 900 miles. Exclusive of the very small ones, they are 22 in number. They are annexed to the government of I. kutsk, and pay a tribute of furs and sea-calves, which is collected every three years; the Russian authority, however, can only be considered as extending over 19, the three most southerly belonging rather to Japan. The northernmost, called Shoomska, is three leagues from Capo Loputka; the next, named Paramousic, is considerably larger than Shoomska. These two islands were first visited by the Russians, in 1713, and the rest have been gradually discovered since that period. Some of these islands are fertile, wooded, and abound in fish and game; while others are destitute of water, and uninhabitable, but are occasionally visited by the islanders, for the sake of hunting foxes and otters. The natives are very hairy, wear long beards, and live entirely upon seals, fish, and the produce of the chase. They are hospitable and docile; but pusillanimous, and unable to support misfortune with fortitude. Their houses and customs resemble those of the Kamstchadales. They have some trade with the Chinese, Japanese, and Russians.

LABADIA, a town of Austrian Italy; seated on the Adige; twenty miles N.N.W. of Ferrara.

LABER, a river of Bavaria, in Franconia, which rises near Neumark, and falls into the Danube, at Sinzing, above Ratisbon.

LABES, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania; with manufactures of cloth; seated on the Recca; 35 miles N.E. of Stargard.

LADIA, a town of European Turkey, in Servia; 70 miles S.W. of Nissa.

LANIAT, a town of East Prussia, with a strong castle; seated at the mouth of the Deine, near the Curische Hauff; 25 miles N.E. of Königsberg.

LABRADOR, a country of North America, on the E. side of Hudson bay. The general aspect of the country is most dreary: the surface is mountainous and rugged, and covered with large stones, and the soil is poor. Coarse plants, adapted to the nourishment of deer and goats, and other wild animals, are its chief productions. The climate, in only lat. 57. N., is excessively cold during winter. The ice begins to disappear in May; and, about the middle of July, commences hot weather, which at times is such as to scorch the faces of the hunters. Mock suns and halos are not unfrequent; and the night is enlivened by the aurora borealis, which spreads over the whole sky. No country is better furnished with large, safe, and convenient harbours, or supplied with better water. The numerous islands along the E. coast abound with eider-ducks and other water-fowl, and also with hares, foxes, and deer. The animals are not numerous; the most common are reindeer, bears, wolves, tigers, foxes, beavers, otters, lynxes, martens, crumins, and wild cats. Eagles, hawks, owls, geese, bustards, ducks, partridges, and all kinds of wild fowl, are numerous. The fishes are whales, morses, seals, cod, and capelin; and in the rivers and fresh waters are pike, perch, carp, trout, &c. During the three months of summer, there is a variety in the colour of the several animals, but in winter everything, animate, and inanimate, is white. The trees of Labrador are mere shrubs, with the exception of the black, white, and red spruce, silver-fir, birch, and aspen. A few vegetables are produced, and various kinds of fruit. A beautiful spar, called Labrador feldspar, was discovered by the Moravian missionaries, who have successfully exerted themselves in improving the condition of the natives. They have now three settlements on these inhospitable shores, the total population of which is about 600. The natives are Esquimaux, the most disgusting of their race. The Labrador fishery is nearly confined to the S.E. tract, opposite Newfoundland, and has within a few years increased six-fold, and now rivals that of Newfoundland.

LABUAN, or LADUAN, an island of the Asiatic Archipelago, on the N.W. side of Borneo, and near the mouth of the Borneo or Bruni river. It was taken possession of by the British on December 24, 1846, and a settlement for commercial purposes formed immediately afterward. It is about thirteen miles long and four or five broad. A large portion of it is very low and marshy and has been found very unhealthy. As a situation for trade, it is well-seated. A few miles up the river Bruni, near the city of the same name, the capital of Borneo, coal has been found, but not in abundance, and also in Labuan. Labuan has a governor appointed under the British crown, and is in lat. 5. 20. N. long. 115. 15. E. The settlement is called Port Victoria.

LADY, a considerable town of Western Africa, in the kingdom of Fouta Jalloo. It is upwards of two miles in circumference, and contains 5000 inhabitants, who are employed in the manufacture of narrow cloths, and various articles in iron, silver, wood, leather, &c., and carry on a good trade with Timbuctoo, which is four months' journey beyond.

LACCADIVES, or LAKDIVAS, a group of small islands in the Indian Sea, lying W. of the coast of Malabar; discovered by Vasco di Gama, in 1449. They are 32 in number, and are inhabited by a race of Mahomedans called Moplays, whose chief traffic is in the produce of the cocoa-palm, such as oil, cables, and cordage; and in dried fish. These are sent to the continent of India, whence they get rice, &c., in return; and also to Mascat, in large boats, which bring back dates and coffee. Calpeny, one of the largest, is 170 m. W. of Cochin. Long. 73. 32. E. lat. 10. 0. N.

LACEDOENA. See CEDOENA.

LACEPEDES ISLANDS, a group of islands on the N.W. coast of Australia: the largest about nine miles long. A long chain of rocky reefs and great sand-banks proceed from their termination. Many whales, sea-serpents, and fishes of different kinds, are seen in the surrounding sea. Long. 117. 8. E. lat. 16. 43. S.

LACFODERY, mountains of Ireland, on the E. side of the county of Kerry; 12 miles E. of Trulee.

LACHEN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Schweitz, near which are some mineral springs, and petrifications: it is seated on the lake of Zurich.

LACHEN, a large village of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, district of Spire; 3 miles S.E. of Neustadt.

LACHISA, or LASCIA, a division of Arabia, occupying nearly the whole of the southwestern coast of the Persian Gulf, and extending to a considerable distance inland. Great part of the interior consists of sandy plains; but the coast is fertile and well peopled. The chief productions are dates, rice, and cotton. The asses and camels are esteemed to be of an excellent breed, and some thousands of the latter are annually exported to Syria. The extensive piracies committed by the inhabitants of this country were so intolerable, that in 1809 the British fitted out an expedition for the purpose of chastising them. They sailed to Ras-el Khima, the principal port on this coast, which they took by assault, burned 70 vessels, and made considerable plunder. Lachsa was formerly subject to Turkey, but the inhabitants have now shaken off the yoke, and their sheikh is one of the most powerful princes of Arabia.

LADAKH, an independent country of Asia, W. of Thibet, between lat. 32. and 36. N. and long. 76. and 79. E. having the Chinese province of Yarkund, &c., N. and N. E.; separated on the S. E. and S. from Kashmir by the Himalayas, and having Little Tibet on the W. Area about 30,000 square miles. Population 150,000 to 180,000, chiefly of the Thibetian race. It is an inhospitable country, being a succession of mountains, and is watered by the upper part of the Indus. The climate is one of extremes, but the country is fruitful when it can be cultivated. Its native trade is of no great amount, but being the great thoroughfare between Tibet, China, Russia, on one hand, and Kashmir, the Punjab and Hindostan on the other, its transit trade is very important. The government is despotic, the rajah is governed by the lamas, and the religion of Ladakh is subject to the supreme pontiff of the Buddhists, the grand lama of Thibet. Mohammedanism has of late made great progress. It originally formed one of the provinces of the kingdom of Thibet, but was not conquered by the Chinese. Runjeet Singh took possession of it; but since his death it is believed that it has recovered its independence. Our knowledge of the country has been but recently acquired. Leh or Ladakh is the capital.

LADENBURG, a town of Germany, in Baden; seated on the Neckar; 8 miles N. W. of Heidelberg.

LADOGA, a lake of Russia, between the Gulf of Finland and the lake Onega. It is 140 miles long and 80 broad. The shores of the lake are flat, but the navigation is very dangerous, on account of quicksands. This induced Peter I. to cause a canal to be cut from the S. W. extremity of this lake to the river Neva, by which it has a communication with the Gulf of Finland. It was begun in 1718 and finished in 1732: it is 67 miles long, and 70 feet broad. It is navigated by an immense number of boats.

LADOGA, New, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg; seated on the Volkhof, between the lake and canal of Ladoga. Old Ladoga, an inconsiderable place, is higher up the Volkhof. New Ladoga is 56 miles E. of Peterburg. Long. 31. 42. E. lat. 60. 0. N.

LADRONES, or MARIAN ISLANDS, islands of the Pacific Ocean, lying between 144. and 146. E. long., and between 13. and 21. N. lat. They were discovered by Magellan, in 1521. He touched first at the island of Guam, where the natives stole some of his goods, which caused him to name these islands the Ladrones, or Islands of Thieves. Besides the other fruits natural to the soil and climate, here is the breadfruit tree in abundance. The names of the principal islands are Saypan, Tinian, Guam, and Rota.

LADRONES is also the name of a cluster of small islands in the Gulf of Sa, at the southern extremity of China. They are the resort of pirates, who have long set the naval power of China at defiance. In 1805 they had acquired possession of the whole island of Hainan and the southern part of Formosa.

LA-FAYETTE, a county in Mississippi, drained by the Tallahawhee river; capital, Oxford. Pop. 6531. Also a parish in Louisiana. It is low and wet; capital, Vermilionville. Pop. 7841. Also a county in Missouri; capital, Lexington. Pop. 6185. Also a county in Arkansas; capital, Lewisville. Pop. 2200.

LA-FAYETTE, a town of Indiana on the E. side of the Wabash river, and is connected with Lake Erie by the Wabash and Erie canal. Pop. 2000.

LAGNASCO, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; 24 miles S. of Turin.

LAGNY, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Marne; with a late famous Benedictine abbey; seated on the Marne; 15 miles E. of Paris.

LAGOS, a seaport of Portugal, in Algarva, with a castle. Off the cape, near this town, in 1759, Admiral Boscawen defeated a French fleet. It is 130 miles S. S. E. of Lisbon.

LAGOS, a town on the coast of Guinea; destroyed by the British for slave-trading in 1851.

LAGUNES OF VENICE, the marshes or lakes in Italy on which Venice is seated. There are about 60 islands in these Lagunes, which together make a bishop's see. Euranio is the most considerable, next to those on which Venice stands.

LAUN, a river of Germany, which rises in Hesse-Cassel; and, flowing by Marburg, Wetzlar, and Nassau, falls into the Rhine above Coblenz.

LAIN, a town of the Prussian states, in Silesia, near which is the castle of Lahnhaus; it is seated on the Bober; 10 miles N. N. W. of Hirschberg.

LAHOLM, a seaport of Sweden, in Halland, with a castle; seated on the Laga, near its entrance into the Cattegat; 12 miles S. S. E. of Halmstadt. Long. 12. 56 E. lat. 56. 31. N.

LAHORE, a province of Hindostan; bounded on the W. by Candahar, N. by Cashmere, E. by Sirinagar and Delhi, and S. by Moultan. It is called Punjab, or the country of Five Rivers. It is extensive and fertile; affording, in addition to all the necessaries of life, wine, sugar, and cotton wool. In the tract between the Indus and the Chelmm are salt mines, which afford pieces of rock salt, hard enough to be formed into vessels, &c. See PUNJAB.

LAHORE, a city of Hindostan, capital of the above province, and of the country of the Seiks. It was the residence of the Mohammedan conquerors of Hindostan, before they had established themselves in the central parts of the country; and owes its chief improvements to Humaioon, the father of Aebur, who made it his residence during a part of his troublesome reign. The city and suburbs form a circumferetice of 7 miles. It is surrounded by walls of brick, and adorned with beautiful edifices and gardens. Here are manufactures of cotton cloths and stuffs of all kinds, and of very curious carpets; it is situated on the S. bank of the Ranvee; 210 miles S. of Kashmir.

LAHR, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden, which was only a village in 1780; but is now an active manufacturing town. The manufactures are of woollens, linens, cotton, tobacco, and leather; 18 miles S.S.E. of Strasburg. Pop. 4550.

LAINO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citra; near a river of the same name; 19 miles W. N.W. of Cassano.

LAI-TCHOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Chang-tong; with a convenient harbour on the Yellow sea. It stands on a promontory; 255 miles S.E. of Peking.

LAKE, a county of Ohio, on Lake Erie; capital, Painesville. Pop. 13,719.—Also a county in Indiana on Lake Michigan; capital, Crown Point. Pop. 1468.

LALAND, or LAALAND, an island of Denmark, situated at the entrance into the Baltic, near the coast of Zealand. It is about 60 miles in length by 14 in breadth, and is reckoned the most fertile spot in the Danish dominions. It produces pease, and plenty of all sorts of grain, particularly wheat. The climate, however, is considered unhealthy, on account of the damp. Laland forms a part of the bishopric of Funen. Naskow is the capital. Pop. 47,000.

LALANG, an island near the N. coast of the island of Sumatra, in the strait of Malacca. Long. 90. 20. E. lat. 1. 45. N.

LAMBACH, a town of Austria, on the Trann; 24 miles S.S.W. of Laintz.

LAMBALLE, a town of France, in the department of Côtes du Nord; with a good trade in cattle, linen, and parchment; 11 miles E. S.E. of St. Briens. Pop. in 1836, 4396.

LAMBAYEQUE, a town on the coast of Peru, with upwards of 10,000 inhabitants, the generality of whom are poor Spaniards, Mulattoes, and Indians. It is 95 miles N.N.W. of Truxillo. Long. 79. 35. W. lat. 6. 45. S. Pop. 8500.

LAMBESC, a town of France, in the department of Mouths of the Rhone; 12 miles N. of Aix.

LAMBETH, a parish of Surrey, on the river Thames, opposite Westminster; one of the metropolitan boroughs. It returns two members to parliament. Here the archbishop of Canterbury has an ancient palace. By the vast increase of buildings, Lambeth is now joined to the metropolis. See LONDON.

LAMBOURN, a town in Berkshire, with a market on Friday; seated on a river of the same name; 15 miles S.W. of Abingdon, and 65 W. of London.

LAMEGO, a town of Portugal, in Beira, and a bishop's see; with a strong citadel, two cathedral churches, and four convents. Here the states assembled to confirm the election of Alfonso Henriquez, the first king of Portugal, and enacted the fundamental laws now forgotten. It is seated on the Balsanao; 50 miles E. of Oporto. Long. 7. 30. W. lat. 41. 12. N. Pop. 6750.

LAMMERMUIR, a mountainous ridge in Scotland, which divides the county of Berwick from that of Haddington, for above 20 miles, and terminates on the W. at Soutra Hill, which is elevated 1000 feet above the sea level. These hills are bleak and barren, affording but scanty pasture for sheep.

LAMLASH, a town of Scotland, on the S.E. coast of the isle of Arran; on a bay of its name, which forms an excellent harbour for vessels of any size. It is sheltered from the sea by a lofty islet, 2 miles long, called Holy Isle.

LAMOILLE, a county in the N.W. part of Vermont; capital, Hyde Park. Pop. 10,475.

LAMPA, an extensive and mountainous district of Peru, in the intendancy of Cuzco. The climate is cold, and it is chiefly valuable for its pastures. The chief town, of the same name is 90 miles S. of Cuzco. Long. 81. 44. W. lat. 15. 55. S.

LAMPANGU, a lofty mountain of the Chilean Andes, celebrated for its rich mines; 240 miles from Valparaiso.

LAMPEDOSA, an island in the Mediterranean, between the coast of Tunis and the island of Malta. It is about 21 miles in circuit, and is pleasant and fertile, but it is uninhabited. It has an excellent harbour, sheltered from all winds except the N. Long. 12. 24. E. lat. 35. 40. N.

LAMPERTHEIM, a village of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, 2 miles S.E. of Worms.

LAMPON, a town of Sumatra, capital of a district belonging to the king of Bantam. The Dutch have a resident here. It is situated on a bay of the same name, in the Strait of Sunda, 180 miles S.E. of Benecoolen. Long. 104. 15. E. lat. 5. 40. N.

LAMPSEKI, (the ancient Lampsaens,) a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia; celebrated for its wine; seated on the Sea of Marmora; 6 miles from the Dardanelles.

LAMSPRINGE, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Hildersheim; situate at the source of the rivulet Lame; 17 miles S. of Hildersheim. Pop. 1230.

LANARK, a burgh of Scotland, and the county town of Lanarkshire. It is contributory, with Linlithgow, in sending one member to parliament. Since the introduction of the cotton manufacture, many new houses have been built. It is seated on an eminence, near the river Clyde; 22 miles S.E. of Glasgow, and 30 S.W. of Edinburgh; on the Caledonian railway.

LANCASHIRE, a county in the N.W. part of England; capital, Manchester. Pop. 1,155,840. It is bounded by the Irish sea to the west, and by the Mersey to the north. It is a parliamentary county, and is divided into three districts, viz. the duchy of Lancaster, which comprises the county of Lancashire, and the county of Westmorland, which is a part of the county of Lancashire. It is a fertile and populous county, and is celebrated for its wool, and its manufactures of cotton, linen, and woollen goods. It is also celebrated for its mineral waters, and its numerous castles and fortifications. The county is bounded to the north by the county of Westmorland, to the east by the county of Yorkshire, to the south by the county of Cheshire, and to the west by the county of Westmorland and the county of Lancashire. The county is divided into three districts, viz. the duchy of Lancaster, which comprises the county of Lancashire, and the county of Westmorland, which is a part of the county of Lancashire. It is a fertile and populous county, and is celebrated for its wool, and its manufactures of cotton, linen, and woollen goods. It is also celebrated for its mineral waters, and its numerous castles and fortifications. The county is bounded to the north by the county of Westmorland, to the east by the county of Yorkshire, to the south by the county of Cheshire, and to the west by the county of Westmorland and the county of Lancashire.

greatest length, and 33 in its greatest breadth, comprising a superficial extent of 870 square miles, or 556,800 English acres. On the whole, it is mountainous and heathy, but pleasant, and agreeably diversified, exhibiting landscapes intermingled with wood and water, hill and dale. It contains as much curious, romantic, and varied scenery, as any in Scotland; but the falls of the Clyde are particularly interesting to a stranger. The climate is rather moist, and the S.W. wind is the most prevalent. The county is divided into three districts, called the Upper, Middle, and Lower wards, and contains 41 parishes. It sends one member to parliament. The river Clyde runs through the whole extent of the county, dividing it into two nearly equal parts. It abounds in lead, iron, and coal.

LANCASTER, a maritime county of England; bounded S. by Cheshire, E. by Yorkshire, N. by Westmoreland, and W. by the Irish sea. It is 74 miles from N. to S., and its greatest breadth is 44 miles. It contains 1,155,840 acres, and sends five members to parliament for the northern and southern divisions. It is a county-palatine, under the title of the Duchy of Lancaster: the only duchy of England (that of Cornwall excepted) which is not merely titular. This county comprises a variety of soil and face of country; but, upon the whole, is one of the least favoured by nature. The Hundred of Furness, which is separated from the rest by Morecambe bay, is a wild and rugged region, stored with quantities of iron ore and slate, and covered with a growth of underwood, which is cut in succession, and made into charcoal. The E. part, between the Ribble and the Mersey, comprising the ancient forests, of Wyresdale and Bowland, is mountainous and generally barren; but the S. part of the tract between these two rivers is flat. Much of this is a fertile country, though occasionally deforced by black turf bogs, here called mosses, some of which are of large extent, and impassable in wet seasons. In the N.E. part of this division are some lofty hills, the most noted of which is Pendle Hill. The remaining part is varied with hill, dale, and moor. Among its products is a species of coal, called cannel, highly valuable as fuel, and capable of being manufactured into candlesticks, cups, snuff-boxes, &c. It is the grand seat of the cotton manufacture, which has grown up with a rapidity unexampled in the history of industry. As a commercial and manufacturing county, it is superior to any other in the kingdom. Its principal manufactures are cotton goods, linen, silk, woollen, shallons, baize, serges, tapes, hardware, plate-glass, &c. Of the commerce of this county it may suffice to observe, that Liverpool is the second port in the kingdom. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Loyne, Leven, Wyre, Hodder, Roche, Duddon, Winstar, and Ken; and it has two considerable lakes, Windermere and Conistonmere. It had the honour of exhibiting the first regular canal in the kingdom, which was begun by the Duke of Bridgewater, in 1758; and also of perfecting the present system of railways and locomotion by the opening of the Manchester and Liverpool railway in 1830. Now, canals and railways intersect it in every direction, and are important features in its prosperity.

LANCASTER, a borough, and the capital of Lancashire; governed by a mayor; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on the Loyne, or Lune, which forms a port for vessels of moderate burden. The parish church of St. Mary is a fine structure, on the side of a hill, on the summit of which is a noble castle, serving both as the shire-house and the county gaol. Here are also three chapels belonging to the Establishment, and several dissenting meeting-houses. On the top of the castle is a square tower, called John of Gaunt's Chair, whence there is an extensive prospect. Among the modern improvements are an extensive quay, with large warehouses, and a commodious and elegant bridge over the river, in place of the old one, now in ruins. The canal from Kendal winds round the E. part of the town, and is conveyed over the river by an aqueduct of five arches, each of 70 feet span. Besides numerous other charities, there is a county lunatic asylum, a handsome stone erection, on Lancaster Moor, opened in 1816. It has a chapel attached, and the hospital is capable of accommodating 300 patients. Five miles from this place is Donald-mill-hole, a cave at the foot of a mountain, into which a large brook runs and passes two miles under ground before it appears again: some of its vaults are so high that they resemble the roof of a church, and in other parts so low that they can be passed only by creeping on the hands and feet. Lancaster depends for its support principally on its trade and manufactures, and the county business. It is noted for the making of mahogany cabinet ware, and has manufactures of sail-cloth, cordage, linens, &c. The cotton manufacture is also gaining ground, and ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent. It returns two members to parliament. It is 53 miles N.W. of Manchester, and 240 N.N.W. of London.

LANCASTER, a handsome town in Pennsylvania; capital of a county of the same name. It is a pleasant and flourishing place, situate in a fertile and well cultivated country; and contains a court-house, a gaol, two banks, and nine places of worship. A college was founded here in 1787, but the buildings are now appropriated to schools. Here are manufactures of guns and other hardware; and about a mile distant is a large cotton manufactory. The town has considerable trade, which increases with the population of the surrounding country. It is seated near Conestoga creek, which runs into the Susquehanna, 61 miles W. by N. of Philadelphia. Long.

of the lake Neufchatel; 7 miles N. of Neufchatel.

LANDES, a department of France; bounded W. by the Atlantic, and on its other sides by the departments of Gironde, Lot-et-Garonne, Gers, and Lower Pyrenees. It is divided into the three arrondissements of Mont de Marsan, Dax, and St. Sever, and has an area of 3700 square miles, with 284,918 inhabitants in 1836. The principal rivers are the Adour and the Douze, which traverses it from E. to W. To the S. of these rivers the soil is tolerably fertile, producing wine, fruit, and corn, but on the N. it is perfectly sterile. It is occupied for four-fifths of its surface with an extensive tract of loose sandy soil, forming heaths, marshes, and waste lands, and a dead flat, from which the department derives its name. The exports are wood, turpentine, tar, wax, cattle, wool, and brandy.

LANDRECY, a strong town of France, in the department of Nord. It was besieged in vain by Prince Eugene in 1712. In 1794 it was taken by the allies, but shortly after evacuated. It was one of the barrier fortresses occupied by the allies after the second treaty of Paris. It is seated on the Cambre; 18 miles E. by S. of Cambrai, and 19 S. by E. of Valenciennes.

LANDRIANO, a town of Italy, in the Milanese; 11 miles S.S.E. of Milan.

LANDSBERG, a town of Prussia, province of Brandenburg; with a considerable trade in cloths and wool. In 1758 it was taken by the Russians. It is seated on the Warta; 23 miles N.E. of Custrin. Pop. in 1833, 10,000.

LAOS, or the SIAM COUNTRY, a kingdom of India beyond the Brahmaputra; extending from 15. to 24. N. lat., and bounded by China, Burmah, Siam, Cambodia, Tonquin, and Cochim-China, to the last of which it is nominally subject. It is surrounded by mountains covered with forests; but the country is in general flat, and the soil fertile, being watered by numerous rivulets from the mountains, and a number of canals from the Menamkong or Mecon, which flows from N. to S. through the whole region. It abounds in rice, fruit, honey, wax, and cotton; and the principal drugs are benzoin and lac. Gold and silver are found in certain places of the river; and it has mines of iron, lead, and tin. It is very thinly inhabited, the greater part of the population consisting of migrating tribes, who wage an almost constant internal warfare. The religion, language, and manners, are much the same as in Siam. Pop about 1,000,000. Lanjan is the capital.

LAPLAND, a northern region of Europe, now belonging to Russia and Sweden; bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean, E. by the White Sea, S. by Sweden, and W. by Norway and the Atlantic. It was formerly divided into three parts, Russian, Swedish, and Danish, (or Norwegian) Lapland. The first, the most dreary region of the whole, consisted of three districts, Bellamoreskoi, Maremanskoi, and Terskoi; but these are now all included in the general appellation of the circle of Kola, which includes also the tract on the E. of the Torneo, called Kemi-Lapmark, which was ceded by Sweden in 1809. Swedish Lapland, or Lapland Proper, is subdivided into six provinces, now comprised in the government of Umea. Norwegian Lapland, or Finmark, the most northerly of all, now belongs also to Sweden. The general aspect of Lapland is mountainous. The principal rivers are the Torneo, which issues from a lake of the same name, and, after a course of 300 miles, falls into the Gulf of Bothnia; the Tana, and the Alten, both of which fall into the Frozen Ocean. The lakes are numerous, and many of them very extensive. The maritime districts are of uniform and rather mild temperature; but in the interior, the winter is intensely cold: in the most northern parts the sun remains below the horizon from the 20th of November to the 10th of January; and the whole country is covered with snow and ice, from the beginning of September to the middle of March. In summer the sun continues two months above the horizon; and in the valleys and plains the heat is excessive, favouring the production of numerous insects, particularly mosquitoes, which greatly infect the inhabitants. Barley is the common grain, but rye and oats are also cultivated in some places, and a few culinary vegetables are raised. The trees are fir, birch, larch, and Metals and minerals are found in abundance: gold has been found at Suappavara; copper, iron, lead, zinc, and plumbago are found in various places; and in the S. of Swedish Lapland several mines are wrought. Among the other internal productions of this country are limestone, marble, gypsum, rock-crystal, jasper, amethysts, and garnets. The animals of this country are much the same as those of Norway; but the rein-deer may more properly be said to belong to Lapland. The singular usefulness of this animal in a great measure recompenses the Laplander for the privation of the other comforts of life. The rein-deer in summer live upon leaves and grass, and in winter upon moss, which they dig up from under the snow; yet upon such scanty fare they will perform a journey of inconceivable length. The animal is fixed to a kind of sledge, shaped like a small boat, in which the traveller, well secured from cold, is laced down; and, taking the reins, which are fastened to the horns of the animal, in one hand, and a kind of bludgcon, to keep the carriage clear of ice and snow, in the other, he sets out, and continues his journey with incredible speed, the animals choosing the road and directing their course with very little trouble to the traveller. Their milk and cheese are nutritive and pleasant; their flesh is well tasted food, whether fresh or dried; their skin forms excellent clothing, both for the bed and body; and their intestines and tendons supply their masters with thread and cordage. The Laplanders are rather lower in stature than the more southern Europeans. The men are of a swarthy and dark complexion; their hair is black and short, their mouth wide, and their cheek hollow, with a tough pointed chin. The women are in general well made, complaisant, chaste, and extremely nervous. In their manner of life the Laplanders are divided into fishers and mountaineers. The former, in summer, fix their habitations in the neighbourhood of some lake, from which they draw their subsistence, and in winter live in the woods. The latter seek their support on the mountains, and possess herds of rein-deer, more or less numerous. They are active and expert in the chase; and the introduction of fire-arms has almost abolished the use of the bow and arrow. Besides looking after the rein-deer, the fishery, and the chase, the men are employed in making canoes, sledges, harness, cups, howls, &c.; and the women in making nets, drying the fish and meat, milking the deer, making the cheese, and tanning hides. Like the Icelanders, they consider their country the finest in the universe. They live in tents composed of several poles or beams of wood, which meet at the top and support each other; the fire-place consists of a few stones, and is always in the middle of the hut, a hole being at the top for the smoke to pass. When travelling, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather, they throw a covering over the head, neck, and shoulders, leaving only a small opening, through which they see and breathe. In their dress they use no kind of linen. The men wear close breeches, reaching down to their shoes, which are made of untanned leather, pointed and turned up before. Their doublet is made to fit their shape; it is open at the breast, and over it they wear a close coat with narrow sleeves, the skirts of which reach down to the knees, and are fastened round them by a leathern girdle, ornamented with plates of tin and brass. To this girdle they tie their knives, instruments for making fire, pipes, and other smoking apparatus. The dress of the women is the same as that of the men, with the exception of a few ornamental peculiarities. All the Swedish and Norwegian, as well as the greater number of the Russian Laplanders, bear the name of Christians; but their religion is full of superstition, and a compound of Christian and Pagan ceremonies. Their language has an affinity with the Finnish, but is greatly intermixed with others. They trade with the Swedes and Norwegians, whom they supply with the skins and furs of quadrupeds, such as erminea, sables, martens, squirrels, foxes of various colours, bears, lynxes, and wolves; and receive in return meal, cloth, spirituous liquors, tobacco, and various utensils.

LAR, a town of Persia, capital of Laristan; with a castle on a rock; chiefly celebrated for the manufacture of muskets and cotton cloth. It was once a magnificent city, but is now in ruins. Some handsome houses still remain, and the bazaar is said to be the noblest structure of the kind in Persia. Pop. 12,500. Long. 52. 45. E. lat. 27. 30. N.

LARACHE, OF EL-ARASIE, a strong town in the kingdom of Fez; with a castle, and a good harbour. Here are magazines for the refitting of vessels, but no docks for building. It is seated near the mouth of the Lucos; 46 miles S. by W. of Tangier.

LASSAY, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne; 12 miles E.N.E. of Mayenne.

LASTRES, a town of Spain, in Asturias; near a cape of the same name, on the Bay of Biscay; 35 miles E.N.E. of Oviedo.

LASWAREE, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Delhi; where a desperate battle was fought in 1803, between the British, under Lord Lake, and the Maharratas, under Dowlat Row Scindia, in which the latter were totally defeated.

LATACUNGA, a town of Peru; capital of a district of the same name. The streets are broad and straight; the houses only one storey high, and arched, on account of the frequency of earthquakes, one of which overturned the whole place in 1698. It contains manufactures of cloth and baize, &c., and exports great quantities of salt pork; the vicinity is noted for making fine red earthenware. It is situated 50 miles S. of Quito. Long. 78. 16. W. lat. 0. 56. S. Pop. 11,500.

LATAKIA, or LADIKIEH, (the ancient Ladicea ad mare), a seaport of Syria, and a bishop's see. It has beautiful remains of antiquity, and a considerable trade, especially in tobacco, though the harbour is become too shallow for large vessels. It stands on the S. side of a small peninsula; 75 miles S.W. of Aleppo. Pop. between 5000 and 10,000. Long. 5. 42. E. lat. 35. 30. N.

LAUBACH, a town of Germany in Hesse-Darmstadt; with a castle; 10 miles E. by S. of Giesen.

LAUBACH, one of the two governments of Austrian Illyria, containing nearly 640,000 inhabitants. It is divided into the circles of Laubach, Neustadt, Adelsberg, Clagenfurt, and Villach.

LAUBACH, or LAYBACH, a strong town of Austrian Illyria; capital of the preceding government. It has manufactures of leather and excellent cloth. In 1821 a congress was held here on the affairs of Italy. It has derived considerable importance from having been for some time the terminus of the railway from Vienna (264 English m. long) to Trieste, which passes hence through a very mountainous country. It is seated on a river of the same name; 38 m. S.E. of Clagenfurt. Pop. 15,000.

LAUINGEN, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Neuberg; seated on the Danube; 3 miles W. of Dillingen.

LAUNCESTON, a borough and the capital of Cornwall; market on Wednesday and Saturday. It had a strong castle, now in ruins, but the tower serves as a prison; and a little without the town stands the old priory. The spring assizes are held here; the summer assizes at Bodmin. It returns one member to parliament. Here is a free school, founded by Queen Elizabeth, and two charity schools. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the Attery, which falls into the Tamar, 3 miles below the town; 28 miles N.N.W. of Plymouth, and 214 W. by S. of London. Long. 4. 21. W. lat. 50. 38. N.

LAUNCESTON, a town of Van Diemen's Land, seated at the junction of the Esk and Tamar, at the head of Port Dalrymple, or River Tamar, which will allow vessels of considerable burden to approach the town; but the navigation is intricate. It contains a church, government house, barracks, court-house, &c., and is a thriving and improving place; to the N.E. is a race-course, and to the S.W. is a beautiful cascade on the South Esk. The town has but a limited supply of water, which is principally brought from the South Esk. It is 121 miles N. from Hobart Town. Lat. 41. 30. S. long. 147. 15. E.

LAUNY, a town of Bohemia, near the river Egar; 10 miles E.N.E. of Saaz.

LAUPEN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, at the conflux of the Sannen and Sense; 5 miles S.W. of Bern.

LAURINGEN, a town of Germany, on the river Laur; 11 miles N.E. of Schweinfurt.

LAUSANNE, a city of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Pays de Vaud, and a bishop's see, with a famous college. It stands on a very uneven tract of land, formed by three small hills; and the lofty parts afford the most sublime views in nature. The cathedral, the town-house, and other public buildings, are magnificent; 30 miles N.E. of Geneva, and 42 S.W. of Bern. It is much frequented by visitors, and has been the residence of Voltaire, Gibbon, and Haller. It has a railway in progress to Bern, &c. Pop. 14,126.

LAUTENBURG, a town of West Prussia, in the palatinate of Culm. It is 4 miles E. by S. of Culm.

LAUTER, a river which rises in the Vosges mountains, and forms the boundary between France and Germany, on the W. of the Rhine, into which it falls at Lauterburg.

LAUTERBRUNN, a village of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, 6 miles S. of Interlachen. It is seated in a romantic valley of the same name, celebrated for its cataract, called Staubbach.

LAUTERBURG, a town of France, in the department of Lower Rhine. It stands on the Lauter, near its conflux with the Rhine; 14 miles S. of Landau.

LAUZERTE, a town of France, in the department of Lot; 20 miles S.W. of Cahors.

LAVAN, a town of France, in the department of Lot-et-Garonne, 17 miles N.E. of Marmande. Pop. 1250.

LAVAL, a town of France, capital of the department of Mayenne. It is surrounded by an old wall, and has two old castles, five churches, and three hospitals, with a monastery established in 1815. Linen of all kinds and qualities is manufactured here, and the neighbouring quarries produce green marble, or black veined with white. It is seated on the Mayenne, 40 miles W. of Mans by railway. Pop. in 1836, 15,590.

LAVAMUNDE, a small town of Austrian Illyria, in Lower Carinthia, seated on the Drave, 23 miles E. of Clagenfurt.

LAVAUUR, a town of the republic of France, department of Tarn on the Agout. It is divided into the old and new town, both of which are ill built; with manufactures of silk 32 miles, S.W. of Alby. Pop. in 1836, 4622.

LAVELD, or LAFELD, a village of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, 4 miles W. of Maestricht. In 1747 the French obtained a victory here over the allies, commanded by the Duke of Cumberland.

LAVELLO, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, 90 miles E. by N. of Naples.

LAVENHAM, a town in Suffolk, with manufactures of hempen cloth and woollen yarn. Here is a spacious market-place, with a cross in the centre; but the market has long been disused. The town is situate on an eminence, at the foot of which runs the river Breton; 12 miles S. by E. of Bury St. Edmund, and 62 N.E. of London.

LAVENZA, a town of Italy, in the principality of Massa, with a citadel; seated at the mouth of the Lavenza, on the Gulf of Genoa—6 miles W.N.W. of Massa.

LAVINGTON, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Monday and Wednesday, 4 miles S. of Devizes, and 90 W. by S. of London.

LAVIS, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, at the conflux of the Lavis with the Adige; 7 miles N. of Trent.

LAVORO, TERRA DI, a province in the N. W. part of Naples; bordered on the W. by the Tuscan sea, and containing 1720 square miles, with 625,000 inhabitants. It is proper for tillage, whence it took its name, and is fertile in excellent wines and fruits. There are also mineral springs and mines of sulphur. Capua is the capital, and Gaeta is the chief seaport.

LAWRENCE, St., a large river of North America, proceeding from Lake Ontario, from which it runs 700 miles to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the Atlantic. Its mouth is 100 miles wide, and it is navigable for ships of war as far as Quebec, which is 360 miles; and vessels from Europe ascend to Montreal, which is 180 miles further. Taken in connection with the chain of inland lakes or rather seas, of which it is the outlet, the basin of the St. Lawrence, contains more than half of all the fresh water on the globe. The discharge, by means of the St. Lawrence, however, is not so proportionably large, but exceeds, by more than half, that brought down by the Mississippi. Its remotest source is that of the St. Louis, an affluent of lake Superior, which source is not far from that of the Mississippi, and is 1192 feet above the sea, giving a general fall for the river of above 6 inches per mile; but this is very unequally distributed; as the falls of the Niagara and its rapids form a considerable portion of it. It is remarkably uniform in the quantity of water flowing through it, and it is the great commercial thoroughfare of our Canadian provinces. The navigation of this river is closed from December to April by the ice; but it then forms a medium of communication, by roads being marked on it and its tributaries; and goods are then transported on it, by means of sleighs and other vehicles. See QUEBEC, MONTREAL, &c.

LAWRENCE, ST., GULF OF, is formed between the western part of Newfoundland, the eastern shores of Labrador, the eastern extremity of the province of New Brunswick, part of the province of Nova Scotia, and the island of Cape Breton. It communicates with the Atlantic Ocean by three different passages.

LAWRENCE, the name of several counties in the United States.—In Alabama; capital, Moulton. Pop. 13,313.—In Mississippi; capital, Monticello. Pop. 5920.—In Tennessee; capital, Lawrenceboro. Pop. 4721.—In Kentucky; capital, Louisville. Pop. 4730.—In Ohio; capital, Burlington. Pop. 9738.—In Indiana; capital, Bedford. Pop. 11,782.—In Illinois; capital, Lawrenceville. LUXEMBURG, a town of Austria, with a palace; seated on the Suechat, 17 miles S. of Vienna.

LAYBACH. See LAUBACH.

LAZIZE, a town of North Italy, in Lombardy, on Lake Garda. Here is a castle, and a port on the lake; 23 miles N. from Mantua. Pop. 8500.

LEA, a river of England, which rises near Luton, in Bedfordshire, flows to Hertford and Ware, and, dividing Essex from Hertfordshire and Middlesex, enters the Thames below Blackwall.

LEADHILLS, a village of Scotland, in Lanarkshire, situate amid mountains, in which are rich mines of lead. It is supposed to be the highest inhabited place in Britain, being about 2000 feet above the level of the sea. It is situate near the Caledonian railway, 18 miles S. of Lanark, and 44 S. of Glasgow.

LEAMINGTON PRIONS, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Wednesday. Here are some saline springs, with warm and cold baths, a pump-room, and other accommodations for genteel company. The town in 1811 contained only 543 people, and 30 years after they amounted to 14,000; an unparalleled increase, occasioned by the celebrity of its mineral waters. It has now many noble and opulent residents, and may be justly considered as one of the handsomest and best built towns in the kingdom. It formerly only stood on one side of the river Leam, but has been extended to the other, and connected by two stone bridges, one, the Victoria bridge erected in 1840. The waters, to which it owes its existence and celebrity, embrace 11 streams, uniting the sulphureous, saline and chalybeate waters, in one spot. The pump-rooms are elegant, and the vicinity is a fine sporting country. The North Western Railway has a branch terminating at Leamington; it is seated on the Leam, near its confluence with the Avon, 2 m. E. of Warwick, and 89 N.W. of London.

LEAO-TONG. See CHEN-YANG.

LEATHERHEAD, a town in Surrey, which had formerly a market. Here is a bridge of 14 arches over the river Mole, which a little above is said to make its reappearance above ground; 18 miles S.S.W. of London.

LEATHES-WATER, or WITHBOUN, a fine lake in Cumberland, lying S.E. of Keswick. It is narrow and irregular, about 4 miles in length, skirting the foot of Helvellyn, and receiving numerous torrents from that huge mountain. The singular beauty of this lake is its being almost intersected in the middle by two peninsulas, which are joined by a neat wooden bridge. Its outlet at the N. end, joins the river Greta, which runs into the Derwent below Keswick.

LEBA, a town of Prussia in Pomerania, on a river of the same name, which, after forming a lake 15 miles in circumference, enters the Baltic sea; 16 miles N.N.W. of Lauenburg.

LEBANON, a range of mountains in Syria, which, running from the table land of Anatolia, forms two parallel branches, extending S.S.W. through Syria, and unite with Mounts Horeb and Sini in the Arabian peninsula. The western branch of the chain, which is the celebrated Mount Lebanon, the Libanus of antiquity, runs from the Taurus mountains of Asia Minor at the gulf of Iskenderun. The highest point of this chain, which is still called Djebel-Liban, is Djebel Makinel, which is upwards of 12,000 feet above the sea. It extends southward, and forms also Mount Carmel. The E. chain now called Djebel-es-Sheikh, is the Anti-Libanus, and in its highest point is 5000 feet in lat. 33. 20. under the ancient name of Mount Hermon. The ancient cedars, are now only to be found in one spot, near Bshirai. Coal has been worked in them by Mehemet Ali at about 8 hours from Beirut. In its valleys the population chiefly consists of Maronite Christians.

LEBANON, a town of Pennsylvania, capital of a county of the same name. It has considerable trade, and in the vicinity are copper and iron mines. It is seated on the Quitaphilla Creek, 80 miles W.N.W. of Philadelphia. Population of the county, 21,872; of the town, 1860.

LEBANON is also the name of several townships of the United States. 1. A post township in York county, Maine. 2. In Grafton county, New Hampshire. 3. In Windham county, Connecticut. 4. In Madison county, New York. 5. In Hunterdon county, New Jersey. 6. In Warren county, Ohio, 25 miles S. of Dayton. 7. The capital of Wilson county, Tennessee, 25 miles E. of Nashville.

LEBANON, NEW, a town of New York, in Columbia county, noted for its medicinal spring; 30 miles N.E. of Hudson. It is also the name of a township in Camden county, North Carolina. Two miles S. of it is a new Shaker settlement.

LEBIDA, a seaport of Africa, in the territory of Tripoli, with a good harbour and an old castle. Here are the ruins of a temple and other splendid buildings. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 30 miles S.E. of Tripoli.

LEBRISA, or LEBRISA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle, seated in a territory abounding in olive-trees, that produce the best oil in Spain; 20 miles S. by W. of So-ville. Pop. 6250.

LENUS, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, seated on the Oder, 5 miles N. of Frankfurt.

LECASSELLO, a town in the state of Genoa; 23 miles N.E. of Genoa.

LOCCE, a city of Naples, in Otranto, and a bishop's see. It is the residence of the governor of the province, which by some is called Locce, instead of Otranto; 17 miles N.W. of Otranto, and 195 E.S.E. of Naples. The surrounding district is very fertile, but the town is unhealthy. Pop. 13,735. Long. 18. 10. E. lat. 40. 21. N.

LECCO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Milanese, with several flourishing manufactures. It is seated on the E. branch of the lake Como, 15 miles E.N.E. of Como. Long. 9. 23. E. lat. 45. 5. N. Pop. 4250.

LECH, a river of the Bavarian states, which rises in Tyrol, divides Suabia from Bavaria, and enters the Danube below Donawert.

LECHLAD, or LECHLADE, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Tuesday. A canal from the Severn joins the Thames near this town, and the traffic here on both is considerable in cheese, corn, and coal; and is also near the Great Western Railway. It is seated at the confluence of the Lech with the Thames, 28 miles E. by S. of Gloucester, and 76 W. by N. of London.

LECHNITZ, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the province of Oppeln. Near it is the convent of St. Annenberg, much resorted to by pilgrims. It is seated near the Oder, 17 miles S.S.E. of Oppeln.

LECK, a river of the Netherlands, which branches off from the Rhine at Deurstele, and enters the Maese; 10 m. E. of Rotterdam.

LECTROURE, a strong town of France, department of Gers, with manufactures of leather, and some trade in corn and wine. It is situate on a mountain, near the river Gers; 16 miles N. of Auch. Long. 0. 37. E. lat. 43. 56. N. Pop. in 1831, 3202.

LEDBURY, a town of Herefordshire, with a market on Tuesday, and a considerable manufacture of ropes and sacking, but its principal trade is in hops and cider. The navigable canal from Gloucester to Hereford passes by this town, which is situate near the S. extremity of the Malvern hills, 16 miles E. of Hereford, and 120 W.N.W. of London.

LEDESMA, a small town of Spain, in Leon; seated on the Tormes, over which is a Roman bridge; celebrated for its warm baths; 20 miles S.W. of Salamanca.

LEE, a river of Ireland, which rises on the confines of Kerry, flows E. to Cork, and falls into Cork Harbour.

LEEDS, a borough in West Yorkshire; markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It stands on the river Aire, over which is a stately stone bridge. It is the principal of the clothing towns in Yorkshire, and the mart for the coloured and white broad cloths, of which vast quantities are sold in its two cloth halls, within the space of an hour, without the least confusion. Leeds has a flourishing manufacture of carpets; also some mills for the cutting of tobacco, and several potteries. In the neighbourhood are numerous collieries, and great quantities of coal are sent to York and Hull. Three miles N.N.W. of the town, on the river Aire, stands the remains of that venerable pile, Kirkstall Abbey, embowered in groves of oak. Leeds has thirty-one churches, and several meeting-houses, a general infirmary, an hospital, three almshouses, a free school, charity school, and a large national school, opened in 1813. The most handsome building in the town is the court-house and prison, erected in 1812. This town has canal communication with the Irish Sea and the German Ocean. It is the centre of a system of railways, and is connected with London, Birmingham, &c., by means of the North Midland railway; 24 miles S.W. of York, and 189 N.W. of London. Long. 1.34. W. lat. 53. 48. N.

LEEDS, a parish in Kent, with a castle and a priory; some ruins of the latter still remain; 5 m. S.W. of Maidstone, and 40 from London.

LEEDS, a town of Virginia, in Richmond county, on the N. side of the Rappahannock; 54 miles S.E. of Falmouth.

LEEDS, the most fertile of the Hapai Islands, in the South Pacific. It is not above 7 miles in length, and only 2 or 3 in breadth, but is superior in many respects to Anni-mooka. The inhabitants are treacherous, and have frequently attempted to seize European vessels. Long. 185. 40. E. lat. 19. 49. S.

LEEK, a town in Staffordshire, with a market on Wednesday. It has a brisk trade, and manufactures of bandanna and other handkerchiefs, ribbons, twist, and buttons. It is seated on the Churnet; 21 miles N. of Stafford, and 154 N.N.W. of London.

LEER, or LEHR, a town of Hanover, in E. Friesland, on the river Leda, which soon after joins the Ems; 14 miles S.E. of Emden.

LEERDAM, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland; seated on the Lingbe; 11 miles S. of Utrecht. Pop. 2225.

LEERORT, a fortress of Hanover, in East Friesland; seated at the conflux of the Leda with the Ems; 10 miles E. by S. of Emden.

LEERS, or LIERS, a town of Belgium, in the territory of Liege, near which the allies were defeated by the French in 1746; 4 miles N. of Liege.

LEESBURG, a town of Virginia, in Loudoun county, near the Potomac; 35 miles N.W. of Washington.

LEESBURG, a town of Ohio, in Highland county.—Also a township of Harrison county Kentucky.

LEETAKOO, or LATTAKOO, a town of Southern Africa. The old town of this name was, until lately, the most remote place known in the Boshuana county. The inhabitants, when visited by Mr. Campbell and others, in 1813, appeared to have made considerable progress in the arts and civilization. Soon after, they removed to a more suitable situation, about 40 miles distant in a southern direction, and founded New Leetakoo. On his return, in 1820, he found this new town occupied by about 8000 persons, collected from various tribes. The women perform most of the agricultural labour; while the men milk the cows, make the clothes, and go to war. New Leetakoo is 900 miles N.E. of Cape Town.

LEEUWARDEN. See LEWARDEN.

LEEUWE, a fortified town of Belgium, in South Brabant. It is seated in a morass, on the river Geete; 12 miles E. of Louvain.

LEEUWARD ISLANDS, such of the Caribbean Islands, in the West Indies, as commence at Porto Rico, and extend to Dominica.

LEGNORNO, or LIVORNO, a strong city of Italy, in the grand duchy of Tuscany, and a bishop's see. It has a good harbour, and is the greatest commercial depot of Italy. The Jews, who are numerous and rich, have a handsome synagogue and schools; the Greeks and Armenians have churches of their own; and no religion is disturbed. The inhabitants in 1836 were 76,397. The town is supplied with excellent water, brought from the mountains of Colognale by means of a long and expensive aqueduct, constructed by government. The streets are wide and straight, and almost all the houses of the same height. There are so many canals, that some have given it the title of New Venice. At a little distance is a lighthouse, on a small island. It is one of the most improving towns in continental Europe, and during the summer season is the great resort of visitors from Rome, Florence, &c., frequently amounting to 20,000 persons. The Leopolda railway affords great facilities to the intercourse between Leghorn and Pisa, Lucca, Florence, Sienna, &c. The harbour is in course of enlargement. In 1741 this city suffered greatly by an earthquake. The neighbouring marshes have been rendered fit for culture by means of canals, which have also been useful in dissipating the noxious effluvia; 140 m. N.W. of Rome, and 46 W. of Florence.

LEGNANO, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Voronese; with a fortress regularly constructed. The town is populous, and carries on a considerable trade, particularly in grain which is greatly facilitated by means of a canal from the Adige to the Po. It is seated on the Adige; 22 miles S.E. of Verona. Pop. 5790.

LEHIGH, a county in the E. part of Pennsylvania, watered by the Lehigh river and its tributaries. This river and its improvements form a most important opening to the coal region, to which railroads are continued. The capital of the county is Allentown. Pop. of the county, 25,787.

in Lower Styria; seated on the Sahn; 16 miles S. of Gratz.

LEICESTER, a town of Massachusetts, in Worcester county; with a considerable manufacture of wool curds; 6 miles W.N.W. of Worcester. Pop. 1707.

LEICESTER, a borough, and the capital of Leicestershire; it is governed by a mayor; with a market on Saturday; it returns two members to parliament. In the civil wars the walls were in a great measure demolished; the castle was also dismantled, the hall and kitchen being the only parts that are left entire. It has 10 churches, 18 meeting-houses for the different denominations of dissenters, several hospitals, a free school, and three charity schools. In 1821 an act was passed for lighting the town with gas. The principal manufacture is that of woollen stockings, of which, several years ago, the value amounted to 60,000*l.* annually, and it has of late much increased. A canal passes hence by Loughborough to the river Trent, and the Midland Counties railway passes this town, and there is another to Swannington. At a parliament held here in the reign of Henry V., the first law was made for the burning of heretics. In the meadows near the town are the ruins of an abbey in which Cardinal Wolsey died. It is seated on the Soar; 28 miles S. by E. of Derby, and 96 N.N.W. of London. Long. 1. 8. W. lat. 52. 38. N.

LEICESTERSHIRE, a county of England; bounded on the N. by Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, E. by the counties of Lincoln and Rutland, S. by Northamptonshire, and W. by Warwickshire and Staffordshire. It is about 45 miles long, and 30 broad; contains 514,560 statute acres, is divided into six hundreds, and 216 parishes; has 12 market towns; and sends four members to parliament for the Northern and Southern divisions. The climate is temperate, and the country is well watered. The chief rivers are the Avon, Soar, Swift, Wreke, Anker, and Welland; it has three distinct lines of canal navigation, and is traversed by the Midland Counties railway. The soil, in general, affords great quantities of rich grazing land, and is peculiarly fitted for the culture of beans. Towards the N.W., the Bardon Hills rise to a great height; and in their neighbourhood is Sherwood Forest, a rough and open tract; further to the N.W. are valuable coal mines. The manufacture of stockings, the principal one in the county, is very considerable; but it may be considered rather an agricultural than a manufacturing county. It is famous for its breed of large black cart horses, numbers of which are continually sent to London; and for its fine neat cattle and sheep; the latter, owing to the great care paid to crossing the breeds, and other modes of improvement, have been brought to an astonishing degree of excellence. More than half the land is constantly in pasture, and most of the rest, maintained in tillage, is also rendered subservient to the rearing of cattle. The principal object of the graziers here is to fatten their cattle for the butcher; but the dairy is also in some places attended to; and great quantities of cheese are annually exported. The Stilton cheese is made in this county.

LETON, a town in Lancashire, with considerable manufactures of cotton, silk, &c.; there are also extensive coal-mines in the neighbourhood, and large glue and chemical works. The Bridgewater canal, and a branch of the North Western Railway, give great facilities for the transport of its produce to Manchester, Liverpool, &c. It is 12 miles W. of Manchester, and 198 N.W. of London.

LETON, a small seaport of Essex, opposite the E. extremity of Canvey Island, near the mouth of the Thames. It is noted for oysters; and has a good road for shipping. It is 18 miles S.S.E. of Chelmsford, and 39 E. of London.

LEIGHLIN, OLD, a decayed town of Ireland; in the county of Carlow. It is 9 miles N.E. of Kilkenny.

LEIGHLIN BRIDON, a town of Ireland, in the county of Carlow; with the ruins of an ancient abbey, and also of a strong castle; seated on the river Barrow; 7 miles S. of Carlow.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD, a town in Bedfordshire; with a market on Tuesday. The trade consists in corn, cattle, lace, platted straw, &c. About half a mile distant are the remains of a Roman camp. It is seated on the Ouse; 18 m. S. of Bedford, and 41 N.W. of London.

LEIN, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; 4 miles N.E. of Weilburg.

LEININGEN, a small town of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine; 30 miles S. of Mentz.

LEINSTER, a province of Ireland; 104 miles long, and 55 broad; it contains 4,270,213 acres; bounded on the E. and S. by St. George's Channel, W. by Connaught and Munster, and N. by Ulster. It contains the counties of Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's County, Queen's County, Longford, Lough, East Meath, West Meath, Wexford, and Wicklow. Dublin is the capital. The principal rivers are the Boyne, the Barrow, the Liffey, the Noir, and the May.

LEINSTER, NEW. See ZEALAND, NEW.
LEIPA, a town of Bohemia; with manufactures of porcelain, glass, fine cloth, and cotton. It is 47 miles S.E. of Dreden. Population, 4925.

LEIPNIC, a walled town of Moravia; near the river Beetzwa; 14 m. E.S.E. of Olmutz.

LEIPSIK, CIRCLE OF, a province of the kingdom of Saxony; bounded E. by the circle of Meissen, S. by that of the Erzgebirge and the principality of Altenburg, and W. and N. by the Prussian part of Saxony. It comprises 14 bailiwicks, and is the seat of considerable manufactures. Pop. 218,500.

LEIPSIK, a city of Saxony, in the circle of Meissen; with a famous university, the only le in the kingdom, and a strong citadel, called Pleysenburg. The principal manufactures are silk, gold and silver stuffs, linen, and cotton printing, leather, and paper. There are three handsome colleges belonging to the university, besides the private colleges; and the exchange is a fine structure. Leipsic is, next to Hamburg, the chief commercial city of Germany, and is the chief book emporium of the world. It stands in a fertile but level plain, and occupies but a small extent of ground compared with its population. It is far inferior in elegance to Dresden, but superior to Frankfort. Its chief celebrity however is its book trade. There are three fairs each year, the principal of which are the Easter and Michaelmas fairs, at which it is calculated that there are no less than 8000 new works brought out annually. During these fairs, which last 3 weeks each, Leipsic is the great mart for all kinds of merchandise. There is an exchange built for the booksellers. A railroad has been completed between Leipsic and Dresden, and another to Magdeburg. The Prussian Customs' Union has been beneficial to the trade of Leipsic, but some of its foreign trade has fallen off. The population in 1837, was 47,514, nearly all Protestants. Leipsic was taken by the Prussians in 1745 and 1756. The Austrians, in 1756, besieged it in vain; they took it two years after, but were soon obliged to give it up. Leipsic is celebrated for two of the greatest battles recorded in history having been fought in its vicinity, between the French and the allied armies, on the 16th and 18th of October, 1813, which were followed by the capture of the town, and the rear-guard of the French army, on the following morning, and also the king of Saxony and his family, who were made prisoners. It is seated in a plain, on the river Pleisse; 64 miles W.N.W. of Dresden, 90 S. by W. of Berlin, and 180 N.E. of Frankfort-on-the-Maine. Long. 12. 22. E. lat. 51. 20. N.

LEIRA, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, and a bishop's see; with an ancient castle on an eminence. Pop. 2500. It is 77 miles N.N.E. of Lisbon. Long. 8. 52. W. lat. 39. 30. N.

LEISZNIG, a town of Saxony, in Meissen; with manufactures of cloth, lace, stockings, &c. It is seated on the Mulda; 24 miles E.S.E. of Leipsic, and 32 N.W. of Dresden.

LEITH, a seaport of Scotland, on the Frith of Forth; 2 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh, of which it is the port. It is situate at the mouth of the river Leith, which forms the harbour and divides the town into N. and S. Leith, which communicate by two draw-bridges. The harbour is secured by a noble stone pier, and it is accommodated with wet and dry docks, and other conveniences for ship-building, which is carried on to a considerable extent. Here are also manufactures of ropes, canvass, carpets, glass, shoes, leather, soap, and candles, and several iron forges. There are three churches, an episcopal chapel, three meeting-houses, a magnificent banking-house, an hospital for disabled seamen, rebuilt in 1817, and numerous charities. A little E. of the town are the baths, which are constructed upon a grand scale, and in a style of great elegance. The harbour is defended by a martello tower, and to the W. of the citadel is a battery for the protection of the shipping. The commerce of Leith is very considerable; and the vessels employed in the London trade are, in general, of a large size; but the largest ships are those employed in the Greenland whale fishery. To foreign parts are exported lead, glass ware, linen, woollen stuffs, and a variety of other goods. It returns, with Portobello, &c., one member to Parliament. Long. 2. 56. W. lat. 55. 54. N.

LEITMERTZ. See LEUTMERITZ.

LEITOMISCHIEL. See LEUTMISCHIEL.

LEITRIM, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught; bounded on the N. by Donegal Bay, N.E. by Fermanagh, E. by Cavan, S.E. by Longford, S.W. by Roscommon, and W. by Sligo. Its greatest length is about 54 English miles, and its maximum breadth 20. It contains 5 baronies and 17 parishes, and an area of 407,260 English acres. The northern parts are mountainous and uncultivated, but they abound with inexhaustible veins of lead, iron, and copper ore, and have likewise some coal mines. The S. is level and fertile. The county is traversed by the river Shannon, and abounds with small lakes and rivers, has some productive iron-works, and feeds great herds of cattle. Agriculture is in a very backward state. It returns two members to the imperial parliament. Carrick is the capital.

LEITRIM, a village of Ireland, from which the preceding county has its name. It is seated on the Shannon; 4 miles N. of Carrick, and 82 W.N.W. of Dublin.

LEIXLIP, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare. It has a noble castle, with large gardens, on one side of which is a fine waterfall, called the Salmon Leap. Near it are the ruins of the church and castle of Confy. It is seated on the Liffy; 8 miles W. of Dublin.

LEMBURG, a town of Austrian Poland; formerly the capital of Red Russia and now of Galicia and Lodomeria. It was formerly an important fortress, but the fortifications were demolished in the early part of last century, and the site planted with trees. It has still two castles. The city itself is small and ill-built, but it has four suburbs which have spacious and regular streets. Its chief buildings are the palace of the Armenian archbishop; the Dominican church, and the new council-house. It has upwards of 20 churches. It has many manufactures, but has none of a commercial character. Next to Brody, it is the chief trading city of Galicia, and is also one of the principal corn markets of the Austrian empire. It is the see of a Roman Catholic archbishop, and has also an Ar-

LEMOOW, a town of Prussia, in Westphalia, and in the principality of Lippe-Deimold; with some cloth and stuff manufactures, and a considerable trade in printing and book-selling. It is seated on the Beya; 17 miles S. of Minden. Pop. 3650.

LEMNOS, or STALIMENE, an island of the Archipelago, lying near the Strait of Gallipoli; 15 miles long and 11 broad. The poets made it sacred to Vulean, who was hence called Lemnius Pater. It was also celebrated for its labyrinth, of which not a trace has been discovered. The air is pure, and the produce consists of wine, corn, oil, cotton, and a variety of fruits. A medicinal earth, Terra Lemnia, of ancient celebrity, has been dug here down to late times, but its supposed virtues have been declining. It has two harbours on the S. coast, and an extensive roadstead on the N. Area about 150 square miles. Pop. 12,000, chiefly Greeks. Its capital is of the same name, and is a metropolitan see. Long. 25. 28. E. lat. 40. 3. N.

LEXA, a river of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, which rises in the mountains to the N.W. of the lake Baikal, flows N. and N.E. to Yakutsk, where it is 5 miles wide, and, proceeding N.N.W. enters the Frozen Ocean, by several mouths, forming an Archipelago of two islands, on a basis of ice, which are the resort of bears and animals valuable for their fur.

LENZICZ, a strong town of Poland, with a fort on a rock. It stands in a morass on the river Biusa; 77 miles W. of Warsaw, and 110 N. by W. of Cracow. Pop. 2340.

LEON, an important N.W. division of Spain, still retaining the title of a kingdom; bounded on the N. by Asturias W. by Galicia and Portugal, S. by Estremadura, and E. by Old Castile. It is 200 miles long, and 170 broad, and divided into about two equal parts by the river Douro. It is divided into the districts of Leon, Salamanca, Palencia, Zamora, Toro, and Valladolid. It is fertile, and produces some wine, and in the mountains copper and iron are found. Area, 10,573 square miles. Pop. 1,216,000.

LEON, capital of the above province, and a bishop's see, was formerly richer and more populous than at present. It stands on the banks of the Vernesga and Torio, which meet just below the town. The name is a corruption of Legio, and in common with other ancient and now deserted capitals, it is dull and decaying. Outside the town, is the enormous but incomplete and beautiful convent of St. Marcos de Leon. Its cathedral, which is admired for its elegant lightness, contains the tombs of 37 kings and one emperor; 174 miles N. by W. of Madrid. Long. 5. 17. W. lat. 42. 45. N. Pop. 5000.

LEON, ISLE OF, an insulated tract on the S.W. coast of Spain; separated from the mainland by a canal and river, 10 miles in length, and from 20 to 30 feet in depth. The defence thus afforded against an enemy in possession of the mainland (as was the case of the French in 1810) is farther strengthened by the salt marshes, which extend to the eastward, and are impassable, except along a causeway. See CADIZ.

LEON, a town on the above island. The population including St. Carlos, is said to amount to 40,000, whose chief support arises from the works carried on at the neighbouring arsenal and dock-yard of Caraccas; 11 m. S.E. of Cudiz. Long. 6. 12. W. lat. 36. 27. N.

LEON, or LEON DE NICARAGUA, a city of Mexico; capital of the province of Nicaragua. In the vicinity is a mountain, with a volcano, which sometimes occasions earthquakes. It is a commercial place, though much decayed; seated near the N.W. extremity of the lake Nicaragua; 40 miles from the Pacific Ocean. Pop. 14,000. Long. 87. 20. W. lat. 12. 30. N.

LEVEN, a river of Scotland, in Dumbartonshire, which issues from Loch Lomond, and enters the estuary of the Clyde below Dumbarton.

LEVEN, a river of Scotland, which rises in Kinross-shire, flows through Loch Leven, and crosses Fifeshire to the town of Leven, where it enters Largo bay.

LEVEN, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire; with a good harbour, and some share in the coasting and Baltic trade. It stands on the W. side of Largo bay, at the influx of the river Leven; 7 miles N.E. of Dysart.

LEVEN, LOCH, a lake of Scotland, in Kinross-shire, upwards of 10 miles in circumference, and somewhat of a circular form. It has several small islands, on one of which is a ruinous castle, where Mary, queen of Scots, was confined by the confederate lords, after she had separated from Bothwell; and on another, named St. Serf's Isle, is the ruin of a priory. On the E. side of the lake, near its outlet, stands the ruinous monastery of Portmouk.

LEVENZO. See ÆGADES.

LEVIROUX, a town of France, department of Indre; 11 miles N. of Chateauroux.

LEWARDEN, or LEEUWARDEN, a strong town of the Netherlands, capital of Friesland. It has several canals in the streets, which, being continued to the sea, and to the most considerable towns in the province, are a great assistance to its trade. Many of the buildings, as well public as private, are magnificent. It has 12 churches, in one of which the princes of Orange are buried. It is seated on the Ee; 28 miles W. of Groningen. Pop. about 17,000. Long. 5. 48. E. lat. 53. 13. N.

LEWENTZ, a town of Hungary, on a river of the same name; 25 miles N.E. of Gran.

LEWES, a borough in Sussex, with a market on Tuesday; it returns two members to parliament. It had formerly twelve parish churches, now reduced to six, including those of the adjoining villages of Southover and Cliff. It is a very ancient place, and vestiges of its walls and castle, and of an extensive priory, still remain. Here are seven meeting-houses for dissenters; also a handsome county-hall, a free grammar-school, a good charity school, and several charitable institutions. On a hill, about a mile from the town, is the race ground, which is accounted one of the best in England. It is connected by a branch railway to the Brighton and South Coast railway, in the construction of which, many interesting antiquities were found in the town. Near this town was fought a battle in 1263, when Henry III. and his son (afterward Edward I.) were made prisoners by the Earl of Leicester. Lewes is situate at the edge of the South Downs, 8 miles N.E. of Brighton, and 49 S. of London. Long. 0. 2. E. lat. 50. 55. N.

LEWES, a town of Delaware, in Sussex county, situate on Lewes Creek, 5 miles from its mouth in Chesapeake bay, and 16 N.N.E. of Georgetown.

LEWIS, one of the most considerable of the Western islands of Scotland, parted by two arms of the sea into two divisions, the southern of which is called Harris, and the northern Lewes: the former is annexed to the county of Inverness, but Lewis belongs to Ross-shire. It is about 60 miles in length from N. to S., and from 10 to 15 in breadth. The country in general is wild, bleak, bare of wood, and little fitted for cultivation, and the poorer inhabitants are the most wretched in the British dominions. Barley, oats, pease, rye, and potatoes, are the products of the soil. The hills are covered with heath, which affords shelter for various sorts of game. The lakes and streams abound with salmon, large red trout, &c., and there are good fisheries on the W. coast, which is annually visited by millions of herrings. There are several small villages, but Stornoway is the only town. The promontory at the N. extremity of the island is called the Butt of Lewis. Long. 6. 32. E. lat. 58. 33. N.

LEWIS, a county of New York, erected from Oneida county in 1805. It is traversed by Black river. Chief town, Martinsburg. Pop. in 1845, 20,218.

LEWIS, a county of the N.W. part of Virginia, formed out of Harrison county, in 1816. Pop. 8121. This name is common to several townships and rivers of North America.

LEWISBURG, a town of Pennsylvania, in Northumberland county, on the W. branch of the Susquehanna; 17 miles N.N.W. of Northumberland.

LEWISBURG, a town of Virginia, chief of Greenbrier county, on the N. side of Greenbrier river; 250 miles W.N.W. of Richmond. Long. 81. 15. W. lat. 38. 10. N.

LEWISHAM, a village in the county of Kent, which, from its pleasant situation, and its proximity to the metropolis, has become the residence of several opulent citizens, who have many elegant houses here. It is 5 miles S.E. of London.

LEWISTOWN, a town of Pennsylvania, chief of Mifflin county, seated on the Juniata; 160 miles W.N.W. of Philadelphia. Long. 78. 13. W. lat. 40. 35. N. Pop. 2058.

LEWISTON, a town of Delaware, in Sussex county, with considerable salt-works for manufacturing salt by the heat of the sun. It is seated on Lewis creek, 3 miles above its entrance into Delaware bay, and the same distance N.N.W. of the lighthouse on Cape Henlopen.

LEXINGTON, a town of Kentucky, chief of Fayette county, and formerly the capital of the state. It has six edifices for public worship, a university, and a large court-house; and has a railway to the Ohio. The trade is considerable, and the manufactures numerous and flourishing. In the neighbourhood are the remains of two ancient fortifications, with ditches and bastions; one containing about six acres of land, and the other nearly three. Pieces of earthen vessels, a manufacture with which the Indians were never acquainted, have also been ploughed up near Lexington. These, with the fortifications and the sepulchres, have been urged as an argument that this country was formerly inhabited by a people farther advanced in the arts of life than the present Indians. Lexington stands in a fine tract of country, on the head waters of Elkhorn river; 24 miles E.S.E. of Frankfort, the present capital. Pop. 6997. Long. 84. 55. W. lat. 38. 15. N. LEXINGTON, a town of Virginia, chief of Rockbridge county; situate near the N. branch of James river; 150 miles W. by N. of Richmond.

LEXINGTON, a town of Massachusetts, in Middlesex county, celebrated for being the place where hostilities commenced between the British troops and the Americans, in 1775. It is 10 miles N.W. of Boston.

LEYDEN, a city of Holland, in South Holland, seated on the ancient bed of the Rhine, which here almost expires in a number of small channels. It is famous for the long siege it sustained in 1574, against the Spaniards, during which 6000 of the inhabitants died of famine and pestilence. In honour of this siege a university was founded in 1575, celebrated for its colleges, botanical garden, anatomical theatre, astronomical observatory, cabinet of natural history, and valuable library; in 1807 it was almost destroyed by the blowing up of a vessel loaded with 40,000 lbs. of gunpowder. The principal church is a superb structure, and the old castle, town-house, custom-house, and house for orphans, deserve notice. Here are excellent manufactures of soap and indigo; and the vicinity produces the best Dutch butter and cheese. It stands on 50 islands, and has 145 bridges, the greater part built of freestone. The inhabitants are 36,000. Leyden is 4 miles E. of the German Ocean, and 30 S.W. of Amsterdam by railway.

LEYPA, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leitmeritz; seated on the Pabietz; 23 miles E.N.E. of Leitmeritz.

LEYTA, one of the Philippines; about 40 leagues in length, and 95 in circumference. Its soil, on the E. side, is very fertile; but the high mountains that intersect it from E. to W. occasion so great an alteration in the climate, that, when the inhabitants of one part of the island reap, the others sow; and they have two plentiful harvests in the year, to which the rivers descending from the mountains not a little contribute. The island contains 9000 inhabitants, who pay tribute in rice, wax, &c. Long. 124. 40. E. lat. 10. 50. N.

LIAM-PO. See MING-PO.

LIANUS. See LEBANON.

LIBATA, a town of Guinea, in the country of Gabon; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name; 120 miles N.W. of Sette. Long. 8. 54. E. lat. 0. 58. S.

LIBAU, a town of Courland, on the Baltic; with a harbour for small ships. The chief articles of commerce are hemp and linseed. It is seated on a peninsula; 50 miles N. of Memel; and 80 W. of Mittau. Long. 21. 25. E. lat. 56. 30. N.

colour. Under the auspices of a colonization society in America, the first settlers proceeded to Africa in 1822. Cape Mesurado, in lat. 6. 18. N., was purchased of the natives; the plan of a town, afterwards called Monrovia, was formed; and, as fresh emigrants arrived, they purchased additional tracts of country. The greater part of the early settlers from America were men of decided piety; and their just, humane, and benevolent policy, has given them an astonishing influence over the native tribes. In 1827 this sable community had risen completely above the pressure of urgent necessities. Monrovia was rapidly improving in accommodations and increasing in magnitude, and several fresh towns were already springing up. The soil is extremely fertile; the natives of the country, without tools, without skill, and with little labour, raising more grain and vegetables than they can consume, and often more than they can sell. Cattle, swine, fowls, ducks, goats, and sheep, thrive without feeding, and require no other care than to keep them from straying. Cotton, coffee, indigo, and sugar cane, are all the spontaneous growth of the forests, and may be cultivated at pleasure, to any extent, by such as are disposed. The same may be said of rice, Indian corn, Guinea corn, millet, and too many species of fruits and vegetables to be enumerated. Add to all this, that winter is here unknown; the hills and plains are covered with perpetual verdure, and Nature is constantly pouring her treasures, all the year round, into the laps of the industrious. The trade and commerce extend to the coast, to the interior parts of the continent, and to foreign vessels, and is already valuable and fast increasing. The chief exports are rice, palm oil, ivory, tortoiseshell, dye-woods, gold, hides, wax, and a small amount of coffee. The imports consist of the products and manufactures of the four quarters of the world. The harbour is seldom clear of European and American shipping; and the bustle and thronging of the streets show something already of the activity of the smaller seaports of the United States. Mechanics of nearly every trade are carrying on their various occupations, and not a child or youth in the colony but is provided with an appropriate school. The piety of the first settlers has continued to spread, and the standard of morals consequently remains high. The Sabbath is carefully regarded, and Sunday schools have been established for the benefit of the native children. The cheerful abodes of civilization and happiness—the flourishing settlements—the sound of christian instruction, and scenes of christian worship, which are heard and seen in this land of brooding pagan darkness—a thousand contented freemen, united in founding a new Christian empire, happy themselves, and the instrument of happiness to others—while they refresh the hearts, cannot fail to encourage the brightest anticipations of Christian philanthropists. It was recognised by most European powers as a republic in 1848. The model of its constitution is based on that of the United States.

LIBERTY, a county in the E. part of the state of Georgia, North America; the chief towns are Sunbury and Riceborough. Pop. 7241.

LIBERTY, a town of Kentucky, in Mason county; with a ship-yard; seated on the Ohio; 1 mile above Limestone, and 5 miles N.N.E. of the town of Washington. There are several townships of this name in the United States.

LIBERTIEN, a town of Hungary; with rich mines of copper and iron, and productive springs of blue vitriol; 122 miles E. by N. of Vienna. Pop. 1420.

LIUNGO, a town of Africa; on the Lufana; near the sea; 50 miles S.S.W. of Bombi.

LINOURNE, a town of France; department of Gironde; with manufactures of light woolen stuffs, and a trade in wine and brandy; it is seated at the conflux of the Ille with the Dordogne; 20 miles E.N.E. of Bordeaux. Pop. 8520, in 1836.

LITCHFIELD. See LITCHFIELD.

LICHTSTALL, or LICHTOLLEN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Basel; seated on the Ergetz; 7 miles S.E. of Basel.

LICHTENAU, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel; 15 miles S.E. of Cassel. Pop. 1150.

LICHTENAU, a town of Franconia, in the territory of Nuremberg; with a fortress on the Rezel; 6 miles E. of Anspach.

LICHTENBERG, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth. In the neighbourhood are medicinal springs, quarries of marble, and mines of copper and iron; it is seated on the Selbnitz; 18 miles N.E. of Culmbach.

LICHTENFELS, a town of Bavarian Franconia; with a trade in timber; seated on the Main; 15 miles N.E. of Bamberg.

LICHTENSTEIG, a town of the Swiss canton of St. Gall; seated on the Thur; 27 miles E. S. E. of Zurich. Long. 9. 5. E. lat. 47. 16. N.

LICHTENSTEIN, a town of Saxony, in the circle of Erzgebirge; with a castle on a mountain; 6 miles N. E. of Zwickau. Pop. 2000.

LICHTENVORD, a town of the Netherlands, in Guelderland; 42 miles S. of Leipsic.

LICKING, a county of Ohio, an elevated table land, on which iron ore is extensively found; capital, Newark. Pop. 35,096.

LICOLA, a lake of Naples, formerly famous for excellent fish; but, in 1538, an earthquake happened, which changed one part of it into a mountain of ashes, and the other into a morass. It was anciently known by the name Lucrino, or the Lucrine Lake.

LIDA, a town and castle of Lithuania, in the government of Grodno; 56 miles S. of Wilna. Long. 25. 34. E. lat. 53. 50. N.

LIDDEL, a river of Scotland, in Roxburghshire, and the only one in the county that flows southward. It forms the boundary with England for 5 miles, till it enters the Esk, from Dumfries-shire, 3 miles above Longtown in Cumberland.

LIDFORD, a village in Devonshire, formerly a borough; with a castle. It is seated on the river Lid, at the edge of Dartmoor forest; 7 miles N. of Tavistock.

LIDKOPING, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, on the S. side of the lake Wenner, at the mouth of the Lida; 80 miles N.E. of Gotheburg. Pop. 1640.

LIEBENWALD, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, near which commences the Finow canal, that unites the rivers Oder, Finow, and Havel. It is seated on the Havel; 25 miles N. of Berlin.

LIEBENVERDA, a town of Prussian Saxony, with a castle; seated on the Elster; 38 miles N.N.W. of Dresden.

LIEDENZELL, a town of Wirtemberg, near which is the bath of Zell. It is seated on the Nagold; 17 miles W. by N. of Stuttgart.

LIEBEROSE, a town of Lusatia, with a castle. It is seated on the Spreewald; 20 miles W. of Guben.

LIEBSTADT, a town of W. Prussia; with a castle; 45 miles S.S.E. of Marienburg.

LIECHTENSTEIN, a small independent principality of South Germany, on the borders of Switzerland, from which it is partly separated by the Rhine. Cattle breeding and cotton spinning are the chief employments of the people. Area, 53 sq. miles; and pop. 6300; being the smallest of extent and population of all the European states. The capital is Vodutz, or Liechtenstein, a small town of less than 1000 inhabitants.

LIEGE, a province of Belgium; bounded by the grand duchy of Luxemburg, the Belgic provinces of Namur, S. Brabant, and Limburg, and the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine. It is fertile in corn and fruits, and contains mines of iron, lead, and coal, besides quarries of marble. Pop. 354,000.

LIEGE, a large and ancient city of Belgium; capital of the above province. Here the river Meuse is divided into three branches, which, after passing through the city, under several bridges, unite again. Liege is 4 miles in circumference, and has 16 gates: it has also 10 large suburbs, in which, and the city, there were formerly a great number of churches and religious houses, part of which are suppressed. The magnificent cathedral contains many relics; and the other public structures are the castle, the council-house, the hotel de ville, and the arsenal. During the middle ages, it is said to have had a population of 150,000; but, although the numbers scarcely exceed a third of this, they are increasing. It is the Birmingham of Belgium, and, indeed, of the continent. The manufacture of fire-arms is its principal trade; and here is also the royal cannon foundry, from which a large quantity of brass and iron ordnance has issued. Steam-engines and machinery are, or rather were, largely made at Liege; the principal factory being an ancient palace of the bishop-princes of Liege, in the adjacent village of Leraing, on the opposite side of the Meuse. It belonged to Messrs.

Cockerill, and was the largest establishment on the continent. The pop. of Liege, in 1836, was 58,000; but the surrounding districts are densely peopled. It is connected with the system of Belgian and Rhenish railways. In 1792 the French took the city; they were driven thence in 1793, but entered it again in 1794; and it was afterwards annexed to France. In 1814, however, Liege, with its district, was delivered up to the allied forces. It is 60 miles W.S.W. of Cologne. Pop. about 47,000. Long. 5.35. E. lat. 50.38. N.

LIEGNITZ. See LIGNITZ.

LIEN-TCHOU, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Quang-tong. Its territories border on the kingdom of Tonquin, from which it is separated by inaccessible mountains. It is seated on the Lien-kiang, which forms a convenient harbour for Chinese barks; 325 miles W.S.W. of Canton. Long. 108.40. E. lat. 21.40. N.

LIERRE, a town of Belgium, in the province of Antwerp; with manufactures of woolen and cotton, besides extensive breweries and distilleries, and a trade in cattle. It is seated at the junction of the Great and Little Nethe; 10 miles S.E. of Antwerp.

LIESSE, a town of France, department of Aisne, famous for an image of the Virgin, to which a great number of pilgrims used to resort; 7 miles E. of Laon.

LIFFEY, a river of Ireland, which rises in the county of Wicklow, runs W. into Kildare, where it has a cataract near Leixlip, and then, turning N.E., passes through the county and city of Dublin, below which it enters the Irish sea.

LIFFORD, a town of Ireland, in the county of Donegal; situate on the Foyle; 11 miles S.S.W. of Donegal.

LIGNEROLLES, a town of France, department of Allier; 4 miles S. of Montluçon.

LIGNIERES, a town of France, department of Cher; with a collegiate church, and a castle; 24 miles S. of Bourges. Pop. 2000.

LIGNITZ, or LEIGNITZ, a government of Prussian Silesia; including the former principalities of Glogau, Sagan, Lignitz, Karoiath, with part of those of Jauer and Upper Lusatia. The climate is mild, and the soil in many places fertile: it is necessary, however, to import corn.

LIGNITZ, or LIEGNITZ, an ancient town of Prussian Silesia, and capital of the government of the same name; with a considerable trade in cloth and madder. It is surrounded by an earthen mound, and has four gates, but is not fortified. The old palace of the princes, though within the town, is surrounded with a distinct moat and high wall. The other remarkable objects are the castle, the council-house, the two Lutheran churches, the Catholic church of St. John, and the superb chapel where the dukes of Lignitz and Brieg were buried. Here is also an academy founded by Joseph I., for the education of the sons of Silesian gentlemen, whether Protestants or Catholics. It is seated at the confluence of the Katzbach and the Schwartzwasser; 39 miles W. by N. of Breslau, and 181 English miles from Berlin, to both of which places it has railroads. Pop. 14,000.

LIGNY, a village of Belgium, in the province of Namur; celebrated for a sanguinary engagement between the French and Prussians, on the 16th June, 1815, which was the prelude to the battle of Waterloo; 3 miles N.E. of Fleurus, and 11 W.N.W. of Namur.

LIGNY, a town of France, department of Meuse; with a castle and a collegiate church. The inhabitants are estimated at about 3000. It is seated on the Orney; 9 miles S.E. of Bar-le-Duc.

LIGORE, a town of the Malay peninsula; subject to Siam; situate on a river of the same name. Long. 100. 12. E. lat. 8. 18. N.

LIGUEIL, a town of France; department of Indre-et-Loire: 21 miles S. of Tours.

LIMONS, a town of France; department of Somme; 18 miles E. of Amiens.

LILIENTHAL, a town of Saxony; on the river Warpe; 10 miles N.N.E. of Bremen.

LILLE. See LISLE.

LILLERS, a town of France; department of Pas-de-Calais; seated on the Navez; 17 miles N.W. of Arras. Pop. 4250.

LILLO, a fort of Belgium, in Brabant; on the N. side of the Scheldt; 9 miles N.N.W. of Antwerp.

LIMA, an intendancy of the republic of Peru; bounded N. by Truxillo, E. by the Andes, S. by Arequipa, and W. by the Pacific Ocean.

LIMA, the capital of Peru, and an archbishop's see; with a university. This city was founded in 1534, by Pizarro, who gave it the name of Ciudad de los Reyes, or City of the Kings. This Spanish name it retained in all legal deeds, but is better known to foreigners by that of Lima, a corruption of Rimac the native name of the small river traversing the beautiful valley in which the city stands. It is 4 miles long, and 2 broad, and surrounded by brick walls with ramparts and bastions. The streets are handsome and straight; the houses are generally only one story high, in consequence of the earthquakes. They have flat roofs, and trees are planted round them to keep off the heat of the sun. The river forms canals in the streets, which run to most of the houses, and serve to water the gardens, &c. The churches and convents were extremely rich; and many images of the saints were of gold, adorned with jewels. The present aspect of the place is that of decay and poverty; twenty-five years of civil war and commotion, of which this has been long the centre, have deprived it of many of the marks of superiority it formerly possessed. Many of its churches, and all its convents have been deprived of the riches and magnificence which once distinguished them above even European standards. It is still, however, a place of considerable commerce and trade. The inhabitants, estimated at 70,000, are fond of dress and splendid retinues, and extremely superstitious. Lima is 90 miles from the Cordilleras, and 850 S. by E. of Quito. Callao is its port, 6 miles distant. Long. 77. 15. W. lat. 12. 3. S.

LIMALE, a town of Belgium, in Brabant; seated on the Dyle; 13 miles S.E. of Brussels.

LIMAVADY. See NEWTOWN LIMAVADY.

LIMBURG, a province of Belgium; bounded by Prussia, and the provinces of South and North Brabant, Liege, and Antwerp. It contains an area of 1600 square miles, with 293,000 inhabitants. It has good arable ground, abounds in a fine breed of cattle, and contains mines of iron and lead. Maestricht is the capital.

LIMBURG, a town of Belgium, in the province of Liege; with a castle built of marble. Here is a manufacture of woollen cloths, and it is famous for excellent cheese. In the neighbourhood are quarries of different kinds of marble, and good mines of calamine and coal. Limburg was taken by the French in 1793; but in 1814 they delivered it up to the allies. It is seated on a mountain, near the river Weze; 20 miles E. of Liege. Long. 6. 3. E. lat. 56. 38. N.

LIMBURG, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau; with a fine cathedral. The Austrians defeated the French on the heights near this place in 1796. It is seated on the Lahn; 26 miles N.W. of Frankfort.

LIME, a town of Dorsetshire. See LYME REGIS.

LIMEKILNS, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire; on the coast of the Forth. It is famous for great lime-works, and has a good tide harbour for small vessels; 3 miles S. of Dunfermline.

LIMERICK, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster; bounded on the N. by the river Shannon, which separates it from the county of Clare; W. by Kerry; S. by Cork, and E. by Tipperary. It is 50 English miles long from E. to W., and 32 broad from N. to S., and contains an area of 674,783 acres. It is divided into 9 baronies, and 125 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Deel; Maig, Comogue, Feale, Gal, and Blackwater, besides the noble river Shannon, which may rather be said to flow by the county. The surface of the county is tolerably level, but sheltered on the S. E. by a range of mountains called the Galtees; and the fertility of the soil is proverbial. To the N. of the Galtees lies the tract of land denominated, for its fertility, the Golden Vein; and on the banks of the Shannon lie the earlages, or swamps, on which a quantity of manure is annually deposited by the overflowing of the river.

LIMERICK, a city of Ireland; capital of the above county, and generally considered the metropolis of the province of Munster. It was formerly well fortified, and reckoned the second city in the kingdom, but has long since yielded that rank to Cork. Limerick is a county of itself, and a bishop's see, and is divided into the Irish and English towns, the latter being built on an island of the Shannon, called King's Island. It sends two members to parliament. The linen, woollen, and paper manufactures are carried on to a great extent; and the exports of provisions is considerable. Besides the cathedral and other churches, it has a modern episcopal palace, many hospitals, and other handsome public structures. King William was obliged to raise a siege of this city in 1690; but in 1691 the garrison surrendered on a very honourable capitulation. It is 40 miles S.S.E. of Galway, and 94 W.S.W. of Dublin. Long. 8. 35. W. lat. 52. 40. N.

LIMESOL, a town of the island of Cyprus, in the Mediterranean sea. It is built of unburnt bricks, and is in a beautiful country. It is the see of a bishop.

LIMESTONE, or MAYSVILLE, a town of Kentucky, in Mason county; with a glass manufactory, a printing office, &c. It is seated on the S. side of the Ohio; 4 miles N. by E. of the town of Washington, and 500 by the river, below Pittsburg. Also the name of a county in Alabama.

LIMMAT, a river of Switzerland, formed by the junction of the Mat and the Linth; the former issuing from the N.W. extremity of the Lake Wallenstadt, and the latter flowing from the S. The Limmat flows N.W., passes through the Lake of Zurich, and unites with the Aar below Baden.

LIMOGES, an ancient town of France, capital of the department of Upper Vienne. It is divided into the 'city,' occupying the site of the ancient Celtic and Roman city, and is ill built; and the 'town,' of modern date well built, pleasant and healthy. It is supplied with water by an ancient aqueduct and has other Roman antiquities. Its manufactures are glass, woollen and cotton articles, tanneries, iron, and wax, bleaching, besides a trade in wines. It has also a considerable commerce. Pop. in 1836, 23,963. It is seated on the Vienne 110 miles E. of Bordeaux. Long. 1. 15. E. lat. 45. 50. N.

LIMOSIN, or LIMOUSIN, a late province of France, divided into Upper and Lower Limosin, the former of which is cold and hilly, but the latter is temperate and fertile. It contains mines of lead, copper, tin, and iron. It now forms the departments of Upper Vienne, Correze, Creux, and Dordogne.

LIMOUX, a town of France, department of Aude; with manufactures of woollens, leather, and soap. It is seated on the Aude; 50 miles S.E. of Toulouse. Pop. in 1836, 6666.

LINCOLN, a maritime county of the United States, in the district of Maine; 200 miles in length, and 54 in breadth. Wiscasset is the chief town. Pop. 63,577.

LINCOLN, a county of Kentucky; chief town, Stanford. Pop. 10,187.

LINCOLN, a city, and the capital of Lincolnshire; with a market on Friday. It is situated on the river Witham, is divided into the Upper and Lower Town, and has two suburbs. Formerly it contained 52 churches now reduced to 15. It is a bishop's see. The cathedral stands on the brow of the hill, and is admired for its rich and light architecture. The great bell of the cathedral, called Tom of Lincoln, required 15 able men to ring it: it was broken while under repairs, in 1831. Here are several meeting-houses for the different denominations of dissenters, a catholic chapel, a national school erected in 1814, and several other schools and charitable institutions. Of the castle, built by William I., few vestiges remain; but the ruins of religious houses are so numerous, that the very barns, stables, &c., are built with arched doors and windows. Newport Gate, on the N. side of the city, still remains, and is one of the noblest remnants of Roman architecture left in Britain. Lincoln is a county of itself, governed by a mayor. The chief trade is in coal, brought by the Trent and Fossdike; and oats and wool, which are sent by the Witham. It returns two members to parliament: it is 32 miles N.E. of Nottingham, and 131 N. by W. of London. It is on the (present) Great Northern, and the Midland railways.

LINCOLNSHIRE, a large maritime county of England; bounded on the N. by the Humber, which divides it from Yorkshire, E. by the German Ocean, S.E. by the Wash and Norfolk, S. by Cambridgeshire and Northamptonshire, S.W. by Rutlandshire and W. by the counties of Leicestershire and Nottingham. It contains 1,671,040 acres; is divided into 38 hundreds, and 630 parishes; has one city, and 31 market towns: it sends four members to parliament, for the Lindsey and Kesteven divisions. The coast is flat, and, at low water, may be seen the submarine relics of a forest, which is a great natural curiosity. The principal rivers are the Humber, Trent, Witham, Welland, and Ancholm. This county is divided into three districts, called Holland, Kesteven, and Lindsey. The air is various. The soil, in many places, is very rich, the inland part producing corn in great plenty, and the fens, colesced, and very rich pastures; whence their breed of cattle is larger than that of any other county of England, except Somersetshire; their horses are also excellent, and very large; their sheep are not only of the largest breed, but are clothed with a long thick wool, peculiarly fitted for the worsted and course woollen manufacturers; and many of the unimproved fens are devoted to the rearing of geese, the quills and feathers of which are sent in immense quantities to the London and other markets. In the N.W. part, the rivers Trent, Dunne, and Idle, form an island, called Axholm, which is a rich tract and produces much flax. To the N. E. is a large tract of heathy land, called the Wolds, in which great flocks of sheep are bred. The southern portion is, for the most part, enclosed and well inhabited. Lincolnshire has no considerable manufactures, and its trade is almost confined to the exchange of its produce for manufactured and grocery goods, and other considerable commodities.

LINCOLNTON, a town of North Carolina; chief of Lincoln county; 33 miles E. by S. of Morgantown, and 35 W. of Salisbury.

LINDAU, a town of Bavaria; with a castle and wall, deemed to be Roman works. The French took possession of this city in 1796; and it became subject to Bavaria in 1803. It is a trading place; seated on an island of the Lake of Constance, joined to the mainland by a long bridge; 25 miles E.S.E. of Constance, and 75 S.W. of Augsburg, to which it is connected by a railway.

LINDAU, a town and castle of Germany, in the principality of Anhalt-Kothen; 5 miles N. of Zerbst.

LINDENNESS. See NAZE.

LINDENFELS, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; 22 miles N.N.E. of Manheim.

LINDFIELD, a town of Sussex, 14 miles N. of Brighton and 33 S. of London. Here are some excellent benevolent institutions, and one of the largest cattle fairs in the county is held here.

LINGEN, an island of the Asiatic archipelago off the east end of Sumatra. It probably possesses some tin ores, and is healthy; 50 miles long and 30 broad.

LINDISFAERNE. See HOLY ISLAND.

LINGEN, a county of Germany, in Westphalia; divided into Upper and Lower; partly belonging to Prussia, and partly to Hanover.

LINGEN, a town of Hanover; with an excellent Calvinist academy. A little to the N. of it is a passage over the Elbe, called the Lingen Ferry. It is seated on the Elbe; 40 miles N.N.W. of Munster.

LIN-KEANG, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Kiang-si. It is thinly inhabited; but is of some note, on account of one of its villages being the general mart for all the drugs sold in the empire. It is seated on the Yu-ho; 410 miles N. by E. of Canton. Long. 115. 0. E. lat. 27. 58. N.

LINKÖPING, a government of Sweden, corresponding nearly to the old province of East Gothland. It lies along the Baltic, and contains 3280 square miles, with 160,000 inhabitants.

LINKÖPING, a town of Sweden; capital of the foregoing government, and a bishop's see. It is defended by a castle, and stands on the river Stoeng, near the lake Roxen; 112 miles S.W. of Stockholm.

LINTHGOV, a burgh of Scotland; capital of Linlithgowshire; seated on a rising ground, overlooking a lake at its E. end. It returns, with its contributories, one member to parliament. It has manufactures of leather, and in the neighbourhood are an extensive print-field, bleachfield, and two distilleries. Here the kings of Scotland had one of their noblest palaces, now in ruins; but the room is still shown in which Queen Mary was born. It is 16 miles W. of Edinburgh, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE, or WEST LOTHIAN, a county of Scotland; 20 miles long, and 12 broad; bounded on the N. by the Frith of Forth, S.E. by Edinburghshire, S.W. by Lanarkshire, and N.W. by Stirlingshire. It is divided into 13 parishes. The surface is finely diversified with hill and dale: it is fertile in corn and pasture, and produces coal, iron, limestone, and lead. It is passed by the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway. The chief rivers are the Avon and Almond. It returns one member to parliament.

LINNHE, LOCH, an arm of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, which separates the counties of Argyle and Inverness. It extends in a N.E. direction from the Sound of Mull to Fort William, where it takes a northerly direction, and acquires the name of Loch Eil. Another branch, in a south-easterly direction, is called Loch Leven. This lake is bounded on each side by lofty mountains. The island of Lismore lies at its entrance, and in it are interspersed several smaller ones.

LINNICH, a town of the Prussian states; in the duchy of Juliers; seated on the river Roer; 5 miles N.N.W. of Juliers.

LIN-TCHEIN, a city of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chang-tong; seated on the great canal. Here is an octagonal tower, divided into eight storeys, about 135 feet high, the walls of which are covered on the outside with porcelain; 187 miles S. of Peking.

LINTON, a town in Cambridgeshire, with a market on Thursday; seated on the river Granton. The chief trade is tanning; 10 miles S.E. of Cambridge, and 40 N. by E. of London.

LINTZ, or LINZ, the capital of Upper Austria, and a bishop's see: it has two castles, and considerable woollen manufactures. It is a beautiful city; the houses handsome and lofty, and the streets wide and regular, though badly paved. There are few public buildings. It has no surrounding wall, but is surrounded with a chain of 32 isolated forts, recently built. It is the seat of the provincial government, has an important lyceum and several other public schools, a large imperial and several other woollen manufactories. There is some trade with steamers on the Danube, and the city is connected with Budweis in Bohemia, and with Gmunden and Grätz in Styria, by railways. The French became masters of it in 1741, and again in 1800. It is seated on the right bank of the Danube, over which is a wooden bridge; 96 miles W. of Vienna. Long. 14. 16. E. lat. 48. 19. N. Pop. in 1834, exclusive of the garrison, 23,318.

LINTZ, a town and city of the Prussian states, in the late electorate of Cologne; seated on the Rhine; 23 miles S.S.E. of Cologne.

LIPARI ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the Mediterranean, lying to the N. of Sicily, to which they politically belong. They are all of volcanic origin, were feigned to be the residence of Æolus and Vulcan, and formerly called Æolian islands. They are 12 in number, and nearly as follows, in the order of their size: Lipari, Stromboli, Vulcano, Salini, Felicuda, Alicuda, Panaria, Vulcanello, Vacheluse, Lisca, Dattolo, and Tila Navi. They produce great quantities of alum, sulphur, nitre, cinabar, and most kinds of fruits, particularly raisins, currants, and figs. Some of their wines are much esteemed, particularly the Malvasia.

LIPARI, the largest and most fertile of the Lipari islands; about 15 miles in circumference. Pop. 15,000. It has not suffered from subterranean fires for ages past, though it every where bears the marks of its former volcanic state. It abounds with the currant grape; cotton also grows here; and great quantities of pumice are exported. It has a town of the same name, which is a bishop's see, and stands on the S.E. side of the island. Pop. 12,500. It is 26 miles N.N.E. of Patti in Sicily. Long. 14.58. E. lat. 38.27. N.

LIPETSK, a town of European Russia, in the government of Tambov. It has several churches, most of them of wood; and, formerly, a cannon foundry. Pop. 6000; 80 miles W. by S. of Tambov.

LIPNO, a town of Poland; in the palatinate of Ploczko; 33 miles N.N.W. of Ploczko.

LIPONEC, a town of Poland; in the palatinate of Cracow; 22 miles W. of Cracow.

LIPPE, a river of Westphalia, which flows W. by Paderborn, Lippstadt, Ham, and Dorsten, and joins the Rhine above Wesel.

LIPPE-DETMOLD, a principality of N.W. Germany, surrounded by Prussian Westphalia; bounded by the Prussian states and Hanover, and containing an area of 445 square miles; in 1838, a pop. of 82,970 inhabitants. It is mountainous almost throughout, and contains large forests of oak and beech. Detmold is the chief town.

LIPPSRING, a town of Prussian Westphalia, near the source of the Lippe; 6 miles N. of Paderborn.

LIPPSTADT, a strong town of Westphalia; with a good trade in timber. It stands on the river Lippe; 18 miles W. of Paderborn. Long. 8.23. E. lat. 51.41. N.

LIQUE, a town of France; department of Pas de Calais; 12 miles W. of St. Omer.

LITIA, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia, (the Edera of the Carthaginians, and the Edeta of the Romans.) It has manufactures of linen, soap, and earthenware; also brandy distilleries; 20 miles N.N.W. of Valencia. Pop. 10,256.

LITSA, a river of Asiatic Russia, which rises in a lake of the same name, and falls into the Yenisei. Long. 90.14. E. lat. 62.20. N.

LIS, a river which rises in France, in the department of Pas de Calais, flows by Aire, St. Venant, and Armentieres, into Flanders, where it passes by Menin, Courtray, and Deynse, and joins the Scheldt at Ghent.

LISUON, the capital of Portugal, and the see of a patriarch and an archbishop; with a university. It is seated on the N. side of the Tagus, 10 miles from its mouth, and built in the form of an amphitheatre, on seven hills, not broad, but 6 miles in length. The city is walled round, and it has so increased by degrees, particularly towards the W., that the old walls now divide the two dioceses; the E. part under the archbishop, and the W. under the patriarch. The harbour, which is capable of containing 1000 ships in the greatest safety, is defended by two forts, and before the entrance to the city is the fort of Belem. Near this is a grand aqueduct, between two hills, which conveys water to a great reservoir at one of the extremities of Lisbon. In the middle of the city, on one of the hills, is a citadel, which commands the whole place. The cathedral, on another eminence, is ancient and gloomy; but the riches of the Portuguese have rendered it magnificent. The royal palace, which fronts the river, is large and magnificent, and contains a library, collected at a vast expense by John V. Lisbon was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1755, but has been handsomely rebuilt, although it has never entirely recovered. It contains many beautiful edifices; 40 parish churches, 99 chapels, and 258,000 inhabitants. There are public walks, two theatres, and a circus for the bull-feasts. The streets are badly paved, and generally narrow; the houses have a melancholy appearance, while, in filthiness and impurity, Lisbon may vie with Constantinople. Few cities of Europe are so scantily supplied with public buildings. The Custom House, Exchange, and India House are large and handsome; but besides these, except the churches and convents, there are scarcely any since 1635, when the convents were suppressed. Lisbon has lost much of its monkish appearance, the buildings having been sold and converted to other uses. The foreign trade has very much declined since the separation of Brazil. The exports consist chiefly of wine, corn, oil, and fruit. It has some manufactures of silk, paper, soap, sugar-refining, tanning, pottery, and gold and silver articles. The climate is variable but healthy. The population is of a very varied character, the lower orders much debased and very idle. In December, 1807, Lisbon was entered by the French, who retained possession till August 1808, when they evacuated it after the battle of Vimiera, in which they were defeated by the British. The inhabitants are described as superstitious, vindictive, and meanly acquiescing under power; 178 miles W. by N. of Seville, and 255 S. by W. of Madrid. Long. 9.5. W. lat. 38.42. N. See PORTUGAL.

LISBURN, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, returning one member to parliament; with manufactures of linen, cloth, muslin, and cambric. It is one of the handsomest towns in the N. of Ireland; seated on the Laggan; 8 miles S.W. of Belfast.

LISCA, or LISCA BIANCA, one of the Lipari islands; 3 miles S.W. of Stromboli. It is a small desert spot.

LISIEUX, a town of France, in the department of Calvados. It has a good trade, particularly in linen cloth; seated on the Tonques, 12 miles from the sea, and 40 S.W. of Rouen. Pop. 11,250. Long. 0. 14. E. lat. 49. 9. N.

LISKEARD. See LESKEARD.

LISLE, or LILLE, a strong city of France, in the department of Nord, and one of the most commercial towns in France. The inhabitants were estimated in 1836 at 72,000. Its citadel is supposed to be the strongest in Europe, next to that of Turin. The streets and squares are adorned with noble buildings, particularly the Grande Place and the Little Square; and among the public structures are the exchange, a magazine of vast extent, and five hospitals. It is one of the chief seats of the French cotton manufacture, and many of the operatives are in great misery and poverty. The other manufactures are numerous, comprising camlets, serges, linen, silk, velvet, lace, &c. Lisle was taken by the allies in 1708, but was restored by the treaty of Utrecht in 1713, in consideration of the demolition of the fortifications of Dunkirk. In 1792 it sustained a severe bombardment from the Austrians. It is seated in a rich and marshy soil, on the Deule; 18 miles E. of Tournay, and 145 N.N.E. of Paris. Long. 3. 4. E. lat. 50. 38. N.

LISMORE, one of the Hebrides of Scotland; at the entrance of Loch Mull, on the coast of Argyshire. It is a fertile island, 9 miles long and 2 broad, and was anciently the residence of the bishop of Argye.

LISMORE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Waterford, and a bishop's see united to Waterford. The cathedral is spacious and handsome, but the town is now a small place. It has a magnificent old castle, and the town has been improved lately by the Duke of Devonshire. It stands on the Blackwater; 26 miles N.E. of Cork.

LISOZZO, a river of Austrian Italy, in Friuli, which enters the Gulf of Trieste.

LISSA, an island in the Gulf of Venice; on the coast of Austrian Dalmatia. Here is a fishery of pilchards and anchovies; and it produces excellent wine, and abundance of oil and almonds. It is 56 miles W. of Ragusa. Pop. 7550. Long. 17. 0. E. lat. 42. 59. N.

LISSA, a town of Prussian Poland; near the borders of Silesia. In 1707 it was laid waste by the Russians; but it has been rebuilt, with great improvement, and carries on a great trade. It is 65 miles W. of Kalisch. Pop. 8600. Long. 16. 35. E. lat. 52. 0. N.

LISSA, a village of Prussian Silesia; on the Weistriz; 6 miles N.W. of Breslau; celebrated for a victory gained by the Prussians over the Austrians, in 1757.

LITCHFIELD, or LICHFIELD, a city of Staffordshire, with markets on Tuesday and Friday. It is a county of itself, and, united with Coventry, forms an episcopal see. It has six parish churches, besides the cathedral, which is a beautiful structure, and walled in like a castle. Litchfield is the birthplace of two celebrated contemporaries, Johnson and Garrick. The city is governed by two bailiffs, &c., and sends two members to parliament. It is seated on a small river, which soon afterwards joins the Trent; 16 miles N. of Birmingham, and 119 N.W. of London. Long. 1. 44. W. lat. 52. 41. N.

LITCHFIELD, a mountainous county of Connecticut, bounded N. by Massachusetts, E. by Hartford county, S.E. by New Haven county, S.W. by Fairfield county, and W. by New York; and containing 40,448 inhabitants, chiefly farmers. The soil is fertile, yielding large crops of wheat and Indian corn, and affording fine pasture.

LITCHFIELD, the capital of the above county, situated in an elevated plain. It is a good agricultural town, and contains numerous mills and manufacturing establishments; 8 miles N.N.W. of New Haven. Pop. 4088.

LITHUANIA, the former name of an extensive tract of country lying between Poland and Russia, now forming the three Russian governments of Wilna, Grodno, and Minsk. It was divided into Lithuania Proper and Samogitia, and in 1569 was united to Poland under one elective king. It is a flat country, fertile in corn, and produces honey, wood, pitch, and vast quantities of wool.

LITIZ, a town of Pennsylvania, in Lancaster county, and a settlement of the Moravians; 66 miles W. by N. of Philadelphia.

LITSCHAU, a town and castle of Austria, on the frontiers of Bohemia; 23 miles N.W. of Horn.

LITTAU, a town of Moravia, on the river March; 9 m. N.N.E. of Olmutz. Pop. 2350.

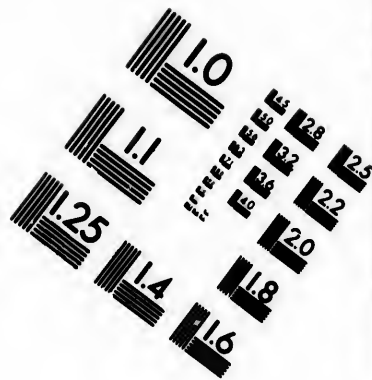

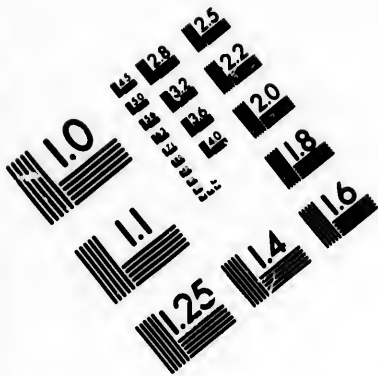

LITTLE FALLS, a town of Herkimer county, state of New York. It is near the Mohawk river, against which runs the Erie canal, and on the N. side of the township the Utica and Schenectady railroad passes. The town is in a most romantic situation; 91 miles W.N.W. of Albany. Pop. 3881.

LITTLE ROCK, a city of the United States, capital of the state of Arkansas. It is on the S. bank of the Arkansas river, 300 miles above its mouth; on a high rocky bluff, 150 to 200 feet high, and well built. Pop. 2500.

LIVADIA, or LERADIA, a town of Greece, capital of the above province, with a castle. It has a brisk trade in wool, corn, and rice; it is unhealthily seated on the Gulf of Lepanto, 50 miles N.W. of Athens. Long. 22. 59. E. lat. 38. 26. N.

LIVENZA, a river of Austrian Italy, which runs on the confines of Trevisano and Friuli, and enters the Gulf of Venice between the mouth of the Piava and the town of Chiolo.

LIVERPOOL, a borough and seaport in Lancashire, on the east bank of the Mersey; it is only second to London in commercial importance. Up to the close of the seventeenth century it was a very inconsiderable place, having only one church, which was a chapel of ease to Walton-on-the-Hill, a village three miles distant. In 1699 it was made into a distinct parish, and in 1695 a new charter was granted. From its commanding situation it has gradually increased to its present magnitude, and has quintupled its population during the last half century. Previous to this period, it was made up of narrow, inconvenient streets, of dull, heavy-looking houses, a character very much changed since that time. Liverpool occupies a space of level ground along the river, which is occupied by the extensive line of docks, and the accompanying warehouses; the principal part of the town standing on a gently rising declivity. The docks stretch several miles along the side of the Mersey; there are also fine landing-stages, one of them being of extraordinary dimensions. It is abundantly supplied with water and gas by various companies. Of public buildings, the most striking are the town-hall, commenced in 1749, and rebuilt after a fire in 1795, a fine edifice; the exchange buildings, completed in 1809, one of the finest structures in England; in the centre of the square is the Nelson monument, a stiff and affected composition; the sessions-house, a plain stone building; the corn exchange, a very extensive pile for the custom-house, excise office, &c. A splendid building, called St. George's hall, newly erected on the site of the old barracks; the sailor's home (lately burnt down); and the new post-office. Of literary and scientific institutions, the more prominent are the royal institution; the medical school in Seel-street; the mechanics' institute in Mount-street; the literary institute in St. Anne's-street; the medical institute in Mount pleasant; the collegiate institutes; the atheneum, opened in 1799; the lycum, and the union news-room; the zoological gardens, east of the town; the botanic garden, observatory, and a new Free Library, built and presented by Mr. W. Brown. There are also three theatres. The markets are excellent, and well supplied; they are nine in number, St. John's, St. James's, and St. Martin's being the principal. There are about 40 churches, and numerous dissenting chapels, and three large and well laid out cemeteries. The principal manufactures, besides those connected with the shipping, which employ an immense number of persons, are fine porcelain, watches, glass, iron, salt, copperas, &c. The watch movement and tool business is almost confined to this part of the country, and the breweries, soap works, brass and iron foundries, sugar-houses, &c., are on an extensive scale. Few towns possess accommodations for shipping at all comparable to Liverpool; the Albert Dock, Dry Dock, Salt-house Dock, King's Dock, Queen's Dock, George's Dock, Prince's Dock, North Dock, Brunswick Dock, and others, for an extent of several miles, are a series of works almost unexampled in the world. The estuary of the Mersey may be properly termed an arm of the sea, opening to this port a ready access to the Western sea; and ships of any burden may come up fully laden to the town; though the sand-banks which enclose the channels are continually shifting. The opening of the new Victoria channel, in 1839, has greatly increased the facilities of entering and leaving Liverpool. It is connected by canals with all parts of the kingdom; and the inland trade is still more commanded by the extensive system of railways, of which this town is the focus. The first of these is that to Manchester, which was the first one of importance opened in the kingdom, Sept. 15th, 1830. This port is now estimated to engross a fourth part of the foreign trade of Britain, a sixth of its general trade, and to furnish one-twelfth of the shipping: its custom amount to nearly 4,000,000*l.*, and its exports exceed even those of the metropolis. The town is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. Its progress will be demonstrated by the increase of population within the present parliamentary borough. In 1801, it was 82,857; in 1811, 103,851; in 1821, 140,214; in 1831, 205,964; in 1841, 286,487. For present pop. see the Appendix. It is 48 miles S. of Lancaster, and 206 N.W. of London. Long. 3 W. lat. 53.22 N.

LIVERPOOL, a town of New South Wales, Northumberland county, 20 miles W. by S. of Sydney. It has a straggling appearance, but is very neat and pleasant, and has several public buildings.

LIVERPOOL, a town of Nova Scotia, in Queen's county, with a harbour at the mouth of a river of its name, 58 miles N.W. of Halifax. Long. 64.15 W. lat. 44.10 N.

LIVINGSTON, a county of New York. It has sulphur springs at Avon; capital, Genesee. Pop. 35,140.—Also a parish of Louisiana, on Lake Fortchartrain; capital, Springfield. Pop. 2315.—Also a county of Kentucky; capital, Smithland. Pop. 9025.—Also a county of Michigan; capital, Howell. Pop. 7430.—Also a county in Missouri; capital, Chillicothe. Pop. 4325.

LIVINGSTON, a town of New York, in Columbia county, on the E. side of the Hudson, 11 miles S. of Hudson. Pop. 2190.

LIVONIA, a province of Russia, which, with that of Esthonia, has been reciprocally claimed and possessed by Russia, Sweden, and Poland, and, for more than two centuries, was a perpetual scene of the most bloody wars. It was finally wrested from the Swedes by Peter the Great: was confirmed to the Russians by the peace of Nystadt, in 1721, and now forms the government of Riga, or Livonia. It is 250 miles long, and 150 broad; bounded on the N. by the government of Esthonia, and S. by Courland. The land is fertile, but is only partially cultivated; the products are rye, barley, flax, and linseed. In the forests are wolves, elks, rein-deer, stags, and hares. The domestic animals are numerous, but the sheep bear very bad wool. The pensantry are in a state of great degradation. Area, 17,500 sq. m. Pop. 1838, 740,100.

LIVORNO. See LEGHORN.

LIZARD, a peninsula on the S. coast of Cornwall, and the most southern point of land in England. On it are two lighthouses. The Lizard Point is in long. 5. 11. W. lat. 49. 58 N.

LLANBEDER, or LLAMPETER, a corporate town of Wales, in Cardiganshire; with a market on Saturday, and a considerable traffic in horses, cattle, hogs, salted butter, and tanned and raw hides. The chief attraction of the place is the college of St. David's, founded by Geo. IV. in 1822-5, for theological students. It is seated on the Teifi, over which is a bridge into Caermarthenshire; 27 miles E. of Cardigan, and 209 W. by N. of London.

LLANDAFF, an ancient city of Wales, in Glamorganshire, being an episcopal see; but it is a small and insignificant place, and has no market. The body of its ancient cathedral was rebuilt in 1751, but without cross aisles. Near it are some ruins of the ancient castellated mansion of the bishop. It is seated on the Taafe, and has the benefit of a tolerably good harbour, which opens into the Severn. It is 2 miles N.W. of Cardiff, and 163 W. of London. Long. 3. 13. W. lat. 51. 29. N.

LLANDILO-YAWR, or LLANDEILO-FAWR, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable manufacture of flannel. Near it are the picturesque remains of Dynevor castle, formerly the residence of the native princes of Wales. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the river Towy, 13 miles E. of Caermarthen, and 202 W. of London.

LLANDOVERY, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, with a market on Friday. It is seated on the Towy, at its conflux with the Braun, 26 miles E.N.E. of Caermarthen, and 191 W. of London.

LLANDEUNO, a town of North Wales, four miles from Conway, on the isthmus connecting the Great Orms Head. In a very few years it has been built into a large and fashionable watering-place.

LLANELLY, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, with a considerable trade in iron and coal. There are four large collieries at Llangeunck, which supply large quantities of coal for steam-engines and factories. And the interests of the town have just been greatly promoted by the construction of railways, which will perhaps bring it to be one of the chief mining ports of South Wales. It is seated on a lately improved creek of the Bristol Channel, 16 miles S.S.E. of Caermarthen, and 217 W. of London.

LLANFROTH-Y-MEDD, a town of North Wales, in the county of Anglesey, with a manufacture of snuff; 253 m. from London.

LLANFAIR, a town of Wales, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the banks of the river Verniew, 14 miles W. of Newtown, and 180 N.W. of London.

LLANFYLIN, a town of Wales, in Montgomeryshire, with a market on Thursday; seated in a flat, among hills, near the river Cain. It is 15 miles N. by W. of Montgomery, and 186 N.W. of London.

LLANGADDOG-FAWR, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire, with a market on Tuesday; 18 miles E. by N. of Caermarthen, and 195 W. of London.

LLANGOLLEN, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire, in the Vale of Llangollen, with a market on Saturday. Near it, on a steep mountain, are the remains of Castle Dinas, once a strong place; and about 2 miles distant is the beautiful ruin of Vale Crucis abbey. The town stands on the Dee, over which is a beautiful ancient bridge; 2 m. S.S.W. of Wrexham, and 184 N.W. of London.

LLANIDLOES, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable manufacture of fine flannels, &c. It is seated at the confluence of the Severn and Clewedog, 13 miles S.W. of Newtown, and 188 N.W. of London. Within the parish is the lofty Plinlimmon, (the "five-peaked hill,") on which are the sources of the Severn, Wye, and Rheidiol.

LLANRWST, a town of Wales, in Denbighshire, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. Here are two churches, and the town is the centre of the business of the Vale of Conway. It is seated on the Conway, over which is a bridge into Carnarvonshire; 20 miles W.S. W. of Denbigh, and 220 N.W. of London.

LLANTRISSAINT, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire; with a market on Friday. It is governed by a portreeve, and unites with Cardiff, Swansea, &c., in sending one member to parliament. It had a castle which is nearly destroyed. It is 12 miles N.W. of Cardiff, and 171 W. of London.

LLAUGHARN, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire; with a market on Saturday. It stands at the mouth of the Towy, where, on a low rock, are the ruins of an ancient castle; and on the other side of the river are the remains of that of Llanstephen. Llaugharn is 7 miles S. W. of Caermarthen, and 223 W. by N. of London.

LLERENA, a town of Spain, in Estremadura; 63 miles N. of Seville. Pop. 6495, chiefly employed in grazing cattle, and collecting oakgalls, &c.

LLIVIA, a town within the French bonndary, but belonging to Spain; province, Catalonia. Here Santiago is said first to have preached the gospel to the Jews of Spain. It is prettily situated under its ruined castle, and near the source of the beautiful Segre. The church is handsome; it was once an episcopal town, but the cathedral was entirely destroyed in 732 by the Moors. Pop. 1000.

LOUONOR, or LYCHWYN, a corporate town of Wales, in Glamorganshire; on the left bank of a river of the same name. It is contributory, with Swansea, in sending one member to parliament. It was the Leucarum of Antoninus. It is 312 miles W. of London.

Lo. Sr., a town of France, department of La Manche; with manufactures of serges, shalloons, ribbons, and gold and silver lace; seated on the Vire; 125 miles W. by N. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 8820.

LOANDO, SAN PAULO DE, capital of the Portuguese settlements in Angola. It has a good harbour, formed by the island of Loando, lying a little off the coast. The town is large and handsome, considering the country, but is now much ruined; containing 3000 houses, built of stone, and covered with tiles, besides a vast number of huts made of straw and earth. It is 260 miles S.S.W. of St. Salvador. Long. 13. 15. E. lat. 8. 50. S.

LOANDO, an island of the Atlantic; near the coast of Angola; about 20 miles long, and only 1 broad, and divided from the continent by a narrow channel. Goats and sheep are numerous. It produces no grain, but yields the best water in all the neighbourhood.

LOANGO, a kingdom of Western Africa, to the N. of the river Zaire or Congo. It includes Loango Proper, and the districts of Mayomba, and Malemba, which are subject to the king of Loango: it is said to extend more than 400 miles along the coast, from the Zaire to Cape St. Catherine. The climate is said to be very fine, and never subject to hurricanes, nor even to violent winds. Rain rarely occurs, but the dews are sufficient for vegetation. The land is fertile, yielding, with very little of agricultural skill or labour, three crops of millet in a year. The potato and yam are abundant; and there are a great number of trees whence palm-wine is drawn. The women cultivate the ground, sow, and get in the harvest. The inhabitants are well-made, mild, and tractable.

LOANGO, the capital of the above kingdom; with a harbour, at the mouth of the Quiloa. The streets are wide, and lined with palm-trees, bananas, and bacavas. The houses are oblong, and have only a ground floor; separated from each other, and fenced round with a hedge of palm-twigs, canes, or bulrushes. In the centre of the city is a large square, fronting the royal palace, which forms another square, a mile and a half in compass, surrounded by a palisado of stately palm-trees. The principal trade consists in elephants' teeth, palm-cloth, copper, tin, lead, iron, and slaves. It is 230 miles W.N.W. of St. Salvador. Long. 12. 30. E. lat. 4. 40. S.

LOANO, or LOVANO, a town of the Sardinian states; in the territory of Genoa, near the sea; 6 miles S.S.W. of Finale. Pop. 4000.

LONGARTY, a village of Scotland, in Perthshire; signalized by the great victory obtained by the Scots over the Danes, in 970. It has extensive bleaching grounds; and is seated near the Tay, 5 miles N. of Perth.

LONDON, the metropolis of Great Britain; one of the largest and most opulent cities in the world; mentioned by Tacitus as a considerable commercial place in the reign of the Roman emperor Nero. London stands principally on the north side of the Thames, 45 miles above its mouth at the Nore, and 15 miles below the highest tide water. It is to this that the prosperity and growth of the metropolis is mainly owing. The geological situation is in the London basin, a subsoil of clay lying in the middle of the great chalk basin. To this clay, the construction of the chief portion of the houses is indebted. In these respects, it is very similarly situated to the French metropolis. On the north side of the river, the surface is undulating and elevated; on the Southwark side, it is low and level. The lat. of St. Paul's cathedral is 51. 30. 48. N. and long. 0. 5. 48. W. of Greenwich observatory.

Of the growth of London, no better evidence can be given than the increase of its population. Of the early estimates we have nothing satisfactory. In 1661 it was considered to be about 460,000; in 1696, 527,560; in the subsequent half century it advanced slowly, and probably did not contain more than 650, accurate following for conventional

The foregoing include only the metropolitan boroughs, but to embrace all that in reality are connected with London itself, Deptford, Greenwich, and very numerous other districts must be included in the account; so that in 1841, these amounted to above 1,873,676; the immense increase since then may be seen in the Appendix.

The external aspect, and the intrinsic reality of London, varies very considerably in different quarters. The west end, that is, the portion west of Whitehall, Strand, Regent-street, is the aristocratic quarter, and in the richness and elegance of its architecture and public edifices, exceed that of any other city in the world. The city itself, which is only a small portion of the whole, occupies the centre, and its area is roughly estimated at about 600 acres, and has 97 parishes within, and 11 without the walls, which last, however, are only known by the names of its gates having survived it. North of this and Clerkenwell, is one of the busiest districts in the world. The population of the city is chiefly occupied by the manufacturers employed in making clocks, watches, chronometers, and jewellery for the whole world. East of this lies Spitalfields, and its adjuncts, the seat of the weaving population; while south of it, and along the river Thames, is the district devoted to the shipping and its numerous ramifications. The borough of Southwark is in the county of Surrey, and its trade consists chiefly in the agricultural produce, and necessaries for the S. and S.E. parts of the kingdom. Beyond all these, and extending very long distances along the principal roads, lie the suburban districts, occupied more or less by those employed during the day in the businesses of the city itself. The extension of these suburbs is one of the more remarkable features of modern London, and it will be seen that the population of the city itself has decreased 30,000 or 40,000 during the last 30 years. Owing to the vast extension of its surface, the old thoroughfares have been found insufficient for the necessarily greatly increased traffic, and consequently, within the last few years, the general appearance of the city itself, as well as of its surrounding parts, has been totally altered. The fine streets forming the approaches to the new London bridge, and many others forming and completed, may vie with any in Europe. The architectural character of the buildings too, has been completely changed since Regent street, projected and completed by George IV., was formed. The public buildings, wonderfully enlarged in number, are many of them magnificent, and are literally too numerous to particularize. The circumference of this great city at the present time,—including those suburbs which, though they are not considered as integral portions of the metropolis, yet, by the vast increase of new buildings, have become joined to the dense mass of houses so called,—is not less than 28 miles, including an area of 48 square miles, or 30,000 acres, covered with houses, and the gardens attached. Its length from Stratford-le-Bow to Hammersmith, a continued line of streets and buildings E. and W., is 9 miles; and from Camberwell to Highbury, it is 6½ miles N. and S. The direction of the principal streets accompanies the course of the river Thames from E. to W.; and the cross streets run mostly in a transverse direction from N. to S. There are two chief lines of streets from W. to E., one of which commences at the N. side of Hyde Park, and under the successive names of Oxford-street, New Oxford-street, Holborn, Skinner-street, Newgate-street, Cheapside, Cornhill, and Leadenhall-street, is continued to Whitechapel and Mile End, on the Essex road; the other begins at the S. side of Hyde Park, and consists of Piccadilly, St. James's-street, Pall Mall, Charing Cross, the Strand, Fleet-street, Ludgate-hill, St. Paul's Church-yard, Watling-street, Cannon-street, and Tower-street; whence, crossing Tower-hill, it may be said to be further extended 2 miles along the river side, in Wapping. The streets near the river, and most of the cross ones in the city, are narrow. They are all well paved with granite stones, and wood; and on each side with flag-stones, for the convenience of foot passengers. The subterranean works, constructed for the accommodation of the inhabitants, consisting of sewers, drains, water-pipes, and gas-pipes, are most extensive. It is calculated that there are 63 miles of sewerage belonging to the city alone. The houses are mostly of brick of a pale colour, and with very few exceptions, they are built of this material, procured, in many instances, from the sites of the houses themselves. The principal squares are Grosvenor, Portman, Berkeley, St. James's, Hanover, Manchester, Cavendish, Belgrave, Hyde Park, Eaton, Bedford, Russell, Tavistock, Bloomsbury, Montague, Leicester, Bryanston, and Finsbury-squares, and Lincoln's Inn Fields. Among the public buildings, St. Paul's cathedral is the most conspicuous; and indeed is the glory of London. It is 2292 feet in circumference, and 362 in height to the top of the cross, and is inferior to none in Europe, except St. Peter's at Rome. It contains monuments of many illustrious individuals, who have done honour to their country by their talents or their virtues. Westminster Abbey is a grand specimen of Gothic architecture, said to have been founded by Sebert, king of the East Saxons, in 610. Here most of the English sovereigns have been crowned, and many of them interred. It contains also a great number of monuments, erected to the memory of kings, statesmen, heroes, poets, and persons distinguished by genius, learning, and science. The chapel of Henry VII., adjoining, Leland calls the Wonder of the World. Next to these may be mentioned the splendid pile of building, "a dream in stone," now erected from the designs of Barry, at Westminster—the Palace at Westminster for the Houses of Parliament, on the site of those destroyed by fire, October 16, 1834. It occupies a length of 700 feet along the river, and is one of the most elaborate and beautiful specimens of Gothic architecture in the world. Buckingham palace, though not a building commensurate with its expense, is in St. James's Park. St. Stephen's, Walbrook, is a small church of exquisite beauty, the masterpiece of Sir Christopher Wren. Bow church in Cheapside, St. Bride's in Fleet-street, St. Dunstan's in the east, Camberwell church, the Temple church, and many others, are worthy of notice. The Tower of London is very ancient, but the founder is uncertain. It is surrounded by a wall, and partly by a dry ditch. Here are the jewels and ornaments of the crown, as well as the other regalia. The Grand Armoury was destroyed by fire in 1841. The Mint, on Tower-hill, is a very elegant modern building, of pure Grecian architecture. There are several parks of very considerable extent and beauty. Hyde Park, with Kensington Gardens adjoining, is the largest; the Regent's Park, surrounded by noble terraces; St. James's Park; the Green Park; Victoria Park, recently formed at Bethnal Green, and one now arranging at Battersea. The bridges are a great ornament to the metropolis. The most ancient, London Bridge, was begun in 1176, and finished in 1209. The length of it was 915 feet, supplanted by the New London Bridge, a noble structure of 5 arches, which was opened by King William IV., on August 1, 1831. Westminster Bridge was commenced in 1739, and opened to the public in 1750. It is 1223 feet in length, and has 13 large, and 2 small semicircular arches. It is much dilapidated, and is now being replaced. Blackfriars' Bridge, built by Mylne, was completed in 1768. It also is to be removed. It consists of 9 elliptical arches, the centre one of which is 100 feet wide; and both this, and the arch on each side, are wider than the celebrated Rialto at Venice. Waterloo Bridge, commenced in 1811, and opened in 1816, on the anniversary of the battle which it is designed to commemorate, is one of the noblest structures of the kind in the world. It consists of 9 arches, each 120 feet span, and 35 feet elevation. The other bridges are those of Southwark, an iron bridge of 3 arches, the Hungerford Suspension Bridge, and Vauxhall Bridge. Among the other public buildings, which can be merely enumerated here, are Westminster Hall, containing the supreme courts of justice; the Guildhall of the city; the Sessions House; the Horse Guards, the Treasury, and the Admiralty, at Whitehall; the National Gallery; the noble collection of public offices which form that magnificent structure called Somerset Place; the magnificent New British Museum; the Royal Exchange; the Bank of England; the Excise Office; the East India House; the Mansion House, for the lord mayor; the Monument, in commemoration of the great fire in 1666; the New Post Office, St. Martins-le-grand, opened in Sept. 1829; the Stock Exchange; the New Custom-house; the New Corn Exchange, erected on the site of the old one, in Mark-lane, in 1829; the New Coal Exchange; the Herald's College; and the halls of the various city companies. The Inns of court, for the study of the law; the colleges, learned societies, and public seminaries; the noble hospitals and other charitable institutions; the public places of diversion, &c., are too numerous to be here particularly mentioned. Such, on a cursory view of it, is the metropolis of Great Britain, to the extent and opulence of which many causes have contributed. The broad stream of the Thames, flowing between London and Southwark, continually agitated by a brisk current, or a rapid tide, brings constant supplies of fresh air, which no buildings can intercept. The cleanliness of London, as well as its supply of water, is generally aided by its situation on the banks of the Thames; and the New River, with many good springs within the city itself, further contributes to the abundance of that necessary element. All these are advantages, with respect to health, in which this metropolis is exceeded by few. Its situation, with regard to the circumstance of navigation is equally well chosen: had it been placed lower on the Thames it would have been annoyed by the marshes; had it been higher, it would not have been accessible, as at present, to ships of large burthen. It now possesses every advantage that can be derived from a seaport, and at the same time, by means of its noble river, and its canal navigation, enjoys a most extensive communication with the internal parts of the country, which supply it with necessaries, and in return receive from it such commodities as they require. It contains several large wet docks, particularly those called the West India, the East India, the London, and St. Catherine's docks; also dry docks for repairing, and slips for building of ships; besides the royal yard at Deptford for building men-of-war. numerous railways also which now centre in London, also lend their aid to its prosperity. These are the North Western, Eastern Counties, the Greenwich, Croydon and Epsom, Brighton and South Coast, South Eastern, South Western, Great Western, North Kent, Great Northern, the North London, and the underground railway. The river affords an immense thoroughfare for passengers by steamboats. London, therefore, unites in itself all the benefits arising from navigation and commerce, with those of a metropolis at which all the public business of a great nation is transacted; and is thus both the mercantile and political emporium of these kingdoms. It is also the seat of many considerable manufactures; some almost peculiar to itself, as administering to the demands of studied splendour and refined luxury; others in which it participates with the manufacturing towns in general. A variety of works in gold, silver, and jewellery, the engraving of prints, the making of optical and mathematical instruments, are principally executed here, and some of them in greater perfection than in any other country. The porter-brewery, a business of immense extent, is also chiefly carried on in London. Thus London has risen to its present rank of the first city in Europe, with respect to wealth and population. The city is divided into 26 wards, each governed by an alderman; and from the aldermen the lord mayor is annually chosen. There are likewise 236 common-councillors, a recorder, a common-serjeant, two sheriffs (who are also sheriffs of Middlesex), a chamberlain, a town-clerk, a city remembrancer, a water-bailiff, and many inferior officers. Westminster is governed by a high steward, who is generally a nobleman, chosen by the dean and chapter; and he has an under-steward who officiates for him. Next to him is the high-bailiff, chosen also by the dean and chapter; whose power resembles that of a sheriff. The suburbs are under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the county; and there are also several police offices, where magistrates sit every day for the examination of offenders, and the determination of various complaints in a summary way. Southwark was long independent of London, but Edward III. granted it to the city. It was then called the village of Southwark, and afterwards named the bailiwick. In the reign of Edward VI. it was formed into a twenty-six ward, by the name of Bridge Ward Without. On the death of the alderman of this ward, he is succeeded by the next in seniority, to whatever ward he may belong, this ward being considered as a sinecure, and consequently the most proper for "the father of the city." The city has likewise a high-bailiff and steward here. To attempt an enumeration of the events by which this great capital has been distinguished, within the limits of a work like this, would of course be absurd; but we cannot omit to mention the plague, in 1665, which cut off 68,596 people; and the dreadful conflagration of 1666, by which the cathedral and many other churches, with 13,200 houses were destroyed. London is divided into 7 districts, called the Metropolitan Boroughs, of which the city of London returns 4 members, and the boroughs of the city of Westminster, Southwark, Marylebone, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, and Lambeth, 2 members each, or 16 members altogether. London is 225 miles N.N.W. of Paris, 395 S. of Edinburgh, and 338 E.S.E. of Dublin.

LONDON, NEW, a seaport of Connecticut; capital of a county of the same name; with the best harbour in the state, defended by two forts. A considerable part of the town was burnt by Benedict Arnold, in 1781, but was subsequently rebuilt. It has a good trade to the West Indies: it is seated on the Thames, near its entrance into Long Island Sound; 54 miles E. by N. of Newhaven. Pop. 5528. Long. 72. 30. W. lat. 41. 24. N.

LONDON, NEW, a town of Virginia; chief of Bedford county; 110 miles W. by S. of Richmond. Long. 79. 45. W. lat. 37. 20. N. It is also the name of several townships of the United States.

LONDONDERRY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster; 40 English miles long, and 33 broad; bounded on the W. by Donegal, N. by the Ocean, S. and S.W. by Tyrone, and E. by Antrim. Area, 518,270 acres. It is divided into 31 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. It is a fruitful champion country; and the greater part of it was given by James I. to an incorporated company of London merchants. The linen manufacture flourishes through every part of the county, though not to so great an extent as a few years since.

LONDONDERRY OF DERRY, a city and seaport of Ireland, and a county of itself; capital of the foregoing county, and a bishop's see. It is still surrounded by walls, and celebrated for a long siege it sustained against James II. in 1689. The cathedral, which is the parish church, is a large and handsome Gothic structure. There are two other churches and several dissenters' meeting-houses. One of its ornaments is a column erected in 1827 to the Rev. G. Walker, its heroic defender, in 1689. There is also a school called Foylo college. Its trade is very extensive and rapidly increasing, but its manufactures are inconsiderable. It is governed by a mayor, and sends one member to parliament. It is seated on the river Foyle, over which is a wooden bridge, 1068 feet in length. Londonderry is 4 miles S. of Lough Foyle, and 115 N.W. of Dublin.

LONDONDERRY, a town of New Hampshire, in Rockingham county, with a manufacture of linen, cloth, and thread; seated near the head of Beaver River, which runs into the Merrimac; 38 miles S.S.W. of Portsmouth.

LONG, LOCII, an arm of the sea, in Scotland; which, from the Frith of Clyde, extends 20 miles N. between the counties of Dumbar-ton and Argyle. It is from 1 to 2 miles in breadth; and near the middle, on the Argyle side, it sends off a small branch called Loch Gail.

LONG ISLAND, an island of the state of New York; separated from Connecticut by Long Island Sound. It extends E. from the city of New York 140 miles, but is not more than 10 broad on a medium; and is divided into three counties, King's, Queen's, and Suffolk. Hence are exported to the West Indies, &c., whale oil, pitch, pine-bark, horses, cattle, flax-seed, beef, &c. The produce of the middle and western parts of the island, particularly corn, is carried to New York. A railroad runs from Brooklyn to Greenport along the island.

LONG ISLAND SOUND, a channel in North America, from 3 to 25 miles broad; extending the whole length of Long Island, and dividing it from Connecticut. It communicates with the Atlantic at both ends of the island.

LONG LAKE. See RAIN LAKE.

LONGFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; 25 miles long, and 20 broad; bounded on the N.W. by Leitrim, N.E. by Cavan, S.E. by West Meath, and W. by the river Shannon, which parts it from Roscommon. It is divided into 23 parishes, and sends members to parliament. Area, 263,645

The country in general is fertile, but dispersed in some parts with bogs, morasses, and forests; the flat parts, along the Shannon, are subject to inundation. It contains several lakes, and, besides the Shannon, is watered by the Inny, the Camlin, the Fallen, and numerous inferior streamlets. Oats form the chief article of agricultural export.

LONGFORD, a town of Ireland, capital of the above county. Much linen is manufactured in the town and neighbourhood, and great quantities of flax sent to other parts. It is seated on the Camlin; 70 miles (English) W.N.W. of Dublin. Long. 7. 40. W. lat. 52. 48. N.

LONGFORDGAN, a town of Scotland; in the S.E. corner of Perthshire; on the Frith of Tay; 4 miles W. by S. of Dundee.

LONG-NAN, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Se-tchuen. Long. 104. 18. E. lat. 32. 22. N.

LONGTOWN, a town in Cumberland; with a market on Monday; seated on the Esk; 9 miles N. of Carlisle, and 310 N.N.W. of London.

LONGUE, a town of France; in the department of Maine-et-Loire; 7 m. N. of Saumur.

LONGUON, a town of France; in the department of Moselle. Here is a considerable iron forge and cannon foundry; 10 miles S.W. of Longwy, and 36 N.W. of Metz.

LONGWY, a town of France, in the department of Moselle; with a castle. It is divided into the Old and New Town, the latter of which is fortified. It is seated on a rocky eminence, on the river Chiers; 32 miles N. N.W. of Metz. Long. 5. 44. E. lat. 49. 32. N. Pop. 2500.

LONS LE SAULNIE, a town of France; capital of the department of Jura. It derives its name from the salt springs in its vicinity: it is seated on the Solvan; 62 miles S.E. of Dijon. Pop. in 1836, 7684. Long. 5. 30. E. lat. 46. 37. N.

LOO, a town of Belgium; in West Flanders; 10 miles N.N.W. of Ypres. Pop. 1525.

LOODHEANA, a town and fort of North Hindostan, province of Delhi; on the S. bank of the Sutlej river: it is the most remote military station possessed by the British; 178 miles N.W. of Delhi.

LOO-CHOO, LEW-CHEW, or LIEOU-KION, the general name of 36 islands lying between Formosa and Japan. The great Loo-choo is 50 miles long, and from 12 to 15 broad; the others are inconsiderable. They were very imperfectly known to Europeans, till visited by Captain Hall and Mr. M'Leod, in their return from the late embassy to China. The climate and soil seem to be among the happiest on the globe. The fruits and vegetable productions are of the most exquisite description. The inhabitants are diminutive in their stature, but strong and well made. Their disposition has been stated to be peculiarly gay, hospitable, and affectionate, but they showed that strong aversion to receive strangers into their country which is characteristic of China, Japan, and all the neighbouring regions. But their real character has been much overrated. The king is tributary to China, and the government resembles that of the Chinese. The capital is Kintching; about 5 miles from its port of Napakiang. Long. 127. 52. E. lat. 26. 14. N.

LOOE, EAST and WEST, Cornwall; separated by a creek, over which is a narrow stone bridge. A market is held at East Looe, on Saturday. It is 13 miles W. of Plymouth, and 233 W. by S. of London.

LOOKOUT CAPE, a cape of North Carolina, S. of Cape Hatteras, and opposite Core Sound. Long. 76. 48. W. lat. 34. 22. N.

LOOZ, or LOOTZ, a town of Belgium; in the Province of Liege; 14 miles N.N.W. of Liege.

LOPATKA CAPE, the S. extremity of Kamtschatka. Long. 156. 45. E. lat. 51. 0. N. See KURILES.

LOPHAM, NORTH and SOUTH, two adjoining parishes in Norfolk; 4 miles S.E. of East Harling.

LOPEZ CAPE, a long and narrow peninsula on the coast of Guinea, low, flat, and covered with trees. It affords a good harbour, and near the cape is a village, where provisions are plentiful. Long. 8. 30. E. lat. 0. 45. S.

LORA, a town of Spain in Seville; on the Guadalquiver; 28 miles N.E. of Seville.

LORAIN, a fertile county of Ohio; capital, Elyria. Pop. in 1840, 18,467.

LORBUS, (the ancient Laribus Colonia,) a town of the kingdom of Tunis; with a castle, and fine remains of antiquity. It is seated in a plain, fertile in corn; 150 miles S.W. of Tunis. Long. 9. 0. E. lat. 35. 34. N.

LOUCA, a town of Spain, in Murcia, divided into the Upper and Lower Town. The former has narrow, crooked, and ill paved streets; the latter is regularly and neatly built. It contains eight churches, an episcopal palace, a royal college, and has extensive manufactures of saltpetre. In 1802 the bursting of an immense reservoir, containing water for the purpose of irrigation, occasioned much damage to the town, and killed 6000 people. It is seated on an eminence near the Sengonera; 40 miles W.S.W. of Murcia. Pop. 40,366. Long. 1. 22. W. lat. 37. 25. N.

LOAN HOWE'S GROUP, an extensive group of islands in the South Pacific, thickly covered with wood, among which the cocconut is very distinguishable. The natives are of a dark copper colour; their hair tied in a knot on the back of the head; and they seem to have some method of taking off the beard; for they appear as if clean shaved. Their arms and thighs are tattooed in the manner described by Captain Cook, of some of the natives of the islands he visited in these seas; and some are painted with red and white streaks. They wear a wrapper round their middle. Long. from 159. 14. to 159. 37. E. lat. 5. 30. S.

LORD HOWE ISLAND, an island in the Pacific Ocean; discovered in 1788 by Lieutenant King. At its end are two high mountains, nearly perpendicular from the sea, the southernmost named Mount Gowcr. Long. 159. 0. E. lat. 31. 36. N.

LORENZO SAN, a town of Mexico, province of New Biscay; with 500 inhabitants, whose employment consists in cultivating the grape. There are numerous settlements and considerable islands of this name in South America.

LOREO, a town of Austrian Italy; in Rovigo on the Adige; 30 miles E. of Rovigo.

LORETTO, a fortified town of Italy; in the papal states. The cathedral contains the Santissima Casa or Holy House, in which it is pretended the Virgin Mary lived at Nazareth. According to the legend, it was carried by angels from Galilee into Dalmatia, and thence to the place where it now stands, in 1295. This house, or chapel, is 31 feet long, 15 broad, and 18 high; the inner part very old, but cased with marble on the outside. The famous Lady of Loretto, who holds the infant Jesus in her arms, stands upon the principal altar, in a niche of silver: this statue is of cedar-wood, three feet high; but her face can hardly be seen, on account of the numerous gold and silver lamps around her. She is clothed with cloth of gold, set off with jewels; and the child Jesus is covered with a shirt, holds a globe in his hand, and is adorned with rich jewels. Those who go on pilgrimage to Loretto, after having performed their devotion, make the Virgin a present; so that the treasury of this chapel was immensely rich. The inhabitants of this town subsist principally by agriculture and gardening, and many of them are shoemakers, tailors, and sellers of chaplets. Loretto was taken by the French, in 1796, and the church despoiled of its treasures: even the Virgin was carried away, but restored in 1802. It is seated on a mountain; 3 miles from the Gulf of Venice, 12 S.E. of Ancona, and 115 N.E. of Rome. Long. 13. 36. E. lat. 43. 27. N.

LORQUES, a town of France, in Provence; on the Argens; 16 miles W. of Fréjus.

L'ORIENT, a fortified modern seaport of France; department of Morbihan. It is built with considerable regularity; the streets are wide, the public squares spacious and handsome, and the harbour large, secure, and of easy access. Formerly it was a very flourishing town, the French East India Company making it the exclusive entrepôt of their imported goods. It has still some trade, and is a place of importance on account of its magazines for the navy. The chief manufacture is of salt. Its principal feature now is its dockyard, at which more ships of war are built than at any other place in France; the establishments were being enlarged in 1841, &c., and then employed 5000 people. The British made an unsuccessful attempt upon it in 1746. It is seated on the bay of Port Louis, at the influx of the Scorff; 340 miles W. by S. of Paris. Long. 3. 21. W. lat. 47. 45 N. Pop. 20,000.

LORROCK, a town of Germany, in Baden; 6 miles N.E. of Bâle.

LORRAINE, an extensive district of the N.E. of France, one of its ancient provinces, between Champagne and Alsace, and now forming the departments of Meurthe, Moselle, Vosges, and Bas Rhin. It abounds in all sorts of corn, wine, hemp, flax, and rape-seed.

LOSTWITHIEL. See LESTWITHIEL.

LOT, a river of France, which rises in the department of Lozere; begins to be navigable at Cahors, and enters the Garonne near Aiguillon.

LOT, a department of France, consisting of the former district of Quercy, in Guienne. It takes its name from the river Lot, which crosses it from E. to W.; it is bounded on the N. by Correze, E. by Cantal and Aveyron, S. by Tarn-et-Garonne, and W. by Lot-et-Garonne and Dordogne. Its pastures feeds numerous flocks, which constitute a great part of the commerce. The climate is mild and healthy; and the soil, consisting of fat rich earth, is cultivated in a rude manner with oxen, and yields more than sufficient for its population, estimated, in 1836, at 287,003. Cahors is the capital.

Landes and the Gironde. It has its name from the rivers Lot and Garonne. Its pastures are but indifferent, and artificial meadows are little known. The land, being much covered with heath, is cultivated with oxen; and a large proportion of the department is incapable of cultivation, consisting of rugged hills or sandy deserts. Pop. in 1836, 346,400. Agen is the capital.

LOTHIAN. See HADDINGTONSHIRE, EDINBURGSHIRE, and LINLITHGOWSHIRE.

LOUDEAC, a town of France, department of Côtes du Nord; 25 miles S. of St. Brieux.

LOUDON, a county of the United States, in Virginia, on the Potomac; adjoining Fairfax, Berkeley, and Fauquier counties. It is about 50 miles in length and 20 in breadth. Leesburg is the chief town. Pop. 20,431.

LOUDUX, a town of France, department of Vienne; 30 m. N.W. of Poitiers. Pop. 5350.

LOUGHNOUGH, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Thursday. It has a large church, with a handsome tower, and seven meeting-houses for dissenters; also a free grammar school, and a charity school. The chief manufactures are those of cotton-spinning, lace, and hosiery. By means of the Loughborough canal, the river, and Midland Counties rail-road, it carries on a brisk trade particularly in coals. Many of the houses have an old and irregular appearance, but great improvements have lately taken place: it is seated near the Soar; 11 miles N. of Leicester, and 109 N.N.W. of London.

LOUGHREA, a town of Ireland, in the county of Galway, near a lake of the same name; 15 miles S.W. of Galway.

LOUJANS, a town of France; department of Upper Saone, situate on a kind of island between the rivers Seilles, Vaillere, and Solman; 18 miles S.E. of Chalons. Pop. 3350.

LOUIS, FORT, a barrier fortress of France; in Alsace, on the Rhine; 12 miles E. of Haguenau.

LOUIS, Sr., a town and island of Africa, at the mouth of the river Senegal; the capital of the French possessions in Senegambia. It is laid out in a regular plan, about a mile long and 200 yards broad, with the Fort in the middle. Pop. in 1836, exclusive of the garrison, 11,606, of whom 6006 were slaves, who, we presume, have been liberated by the recent acts of the French republic. It was taken in 1758 by the English, and ceded to them in 1763. In the American war it was taken by the French, and kept by them after the peace in 1783. The island is flat, sandy, and barren. Long. 16. 21. W. lat. 16. 14. N.

LOUIS, Sr., a seaport and fortress of St. Domingo, on the S.W. coast, at the head of a bay of its name. The exports are coffee, cotton, and indigo; 70 miles W.S.W. of Port au Prince. Long. 73. 32. W. lat. 18. 16. N.

LOUIS, Sr., a city of the United States, in Missouri. It stands on the W. bank of the Mississippi river, 18 miles, by its course, below the junction of the Missouri. The situation of the city is pleasant and healthy. It is built chiefly on the second bank of the river, 40 feet higher than the first, and thus presents a beautiful appearance on approaching it. There are five principal streets running parallel with the river, and crossed by many others at right angles. The compact part of the city extends about a mile and a half along the river, but, with its suburbs, altogether about 3 miles. The city is watered by steam-power from the Mississippi. The country around, and W. for 15 miles, is a very fertile prairie. The City Hall, the Roman Catholic Cathedral, the University, Kemper College, &c., are the chief buildings. There are 20 churches (in 1840). It is admirably situated for commerce, and already surpasses in its trade every other place N. of New Orleans. The Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri open a vast extent of country, of which it is the outlet. The American Fur Company have a large establishment here. It was founded in 1764, as a trading post by the French from Canada; but during theirs and the Spanish possession, it remained an inconsiderable village. Its progress may be judged by its population: in 1820 it was 4598; in 1830, 5852; in 1840, 16,469; and in 1845, 34,140. It is 200 miles above the junction of the Ohio, 1132 miles by the river from New Orleans, 1100 below the Falls of St. Anthony, 120 E. of Jefferson city. Lat. 33. 36. N. long. 89. 56. W.

LOUIS, Sr., a lake of North America, formed by the junction of the Ottawa with the St. Lawrence. It is 12 miles long, and 6 broad.

LOUIS, Sr., a river of North America, which has its source near the eastern head waters of the Mississippi, and falls into Lake Superior on the west shore. It is navigable 150 miles. Long. 91. 52. W. lat. 46. 44. N.

LOUISA, a town of European Russia, on a bay of the Gulf of Finland; 30 miles E.N.E. of Helsingfors.

LOUISA, a county of the United States, in Virginia; about 25 miles long, and 20 broad; with 15,433 inhabitants.

LOUISBURO, the capital of the island of Cape Breton, British North America; with a citadel, and an excellent harbour, nearly four leagues in circumference. It was taken by the English in 1745, restored to the French in 1748, taken by the English in 1758, and ceded to them in 1763. The chief source of trade is the cod-fishery. Long. 59. 55. W. lat. 45. 54. N.

LOUISBURG, a town of North Carolina; chief of Franklin county; situate on the river Tar; 23 miles N. by E. of Raleigh. Long. 78. 40. W. lat. 36. 3. N.

LOUISIANA, a name by which a large tract of North America was formerly known. It is now much more limited. Originally, it was estimated to extend about 2000 miles in length, and 680 in breadth; bounded on the E. by the Mississippi, S. by the Gulf of Mexico, W. by New Mexico, and running indefi-nately N. Ferdinand de la Salle, XIV, in 1763, to the E. bank of the river to Spain by Spain's government 13,000,000. ers took for 1804. A incorporated the S.E. part and Missouri. In 1763, that part of Louisiana lying on the E. bank of the Mississippi was ceded to England, and the portion to the westward of the river to Spain. Louisiana having been ceded by Spain in 1801 to France, the American government succeeded in purchasing it for 15,000,000 of dollars, and their commissioners took formal possession of it in the year 1804. A small portion of this country is incorporated into the state of Mississippi; the S.E. part forms the states of Louisiana and Missouri.

LOUISIANA, one of the United States, formed in 1812. It is situated between 31. and 33. N. lat., and bounded N. and W. by the Missouri territory, S. by the Gulf of Mexico, E. by the Mississippi territory. It is 210 miles in length from E. to W., and 240 broad from N. to S., having an area of 43,350 square miles, or 29,024,000 acres. The south-western part is generally level prairie, and much of its area very productive; the north-western part a thick forest, and low alluvial soil upon the rivers, which is of great fertility; but at a distance from the streams the land is high, broken, and sterile. That part of West Florida which lies between Pearl river on the E., and the Mississippi on the W. as far as 31. N. lat., has been annexed to this state. Sugar plantations are becoming numerous; and the exports, consisting of sugar, cotton, indigo, rice, molasses, soap, tallow, wax, planks, &c., are rapidly increasing. Population in 1840, 352,411, including 168,452 slaves. The principal town is New Orleans.

LOUISVILLE, a town of Georgia; capital of Jefferson county; seated on the N. side of the Ogeechee; 52 miles S.S.W. of Augusta, and 110 N.W. of Savannah. Long. 82.17. W. lat. 32.42. N.

LOUISVILLE, a flourishing city of Kentucky; capital of Jefferson county; seated on the Ohio, just above its rapids, at the head of which is a fort. Louisville is a port of entry; 50 miles W. of Frankfort. Pop. in 1840, 21,210; and in 1843, 28,643. Long. 85.32. W. lat. 35.4. N.

LOULÉ, a town of Portugal, in Algarva; surrounded by antique walls, and seated on a river of the same name; 10 miles N.W. of Faro. Pop. 5350.

LOU-NGAN, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Chan-si; situate near the source of the Queyho; 270 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 116.56. E. lat. 31.46. N.

LOURDE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Pyrenees; with a castle on a rock; 10 miles N.W. of Bagneres.

LOUISRAN, a mountainous but fertile district of Irak, in Persia; bordering upon Khuzistan. It is abundantly watered, and the pastures are most luxuriant, but agriculture is quite neglected. The inhabitants are a barbarous and independent race, and reside always in tents. The only town is Khorumabad.

LOURIN, a corporate town in Lincolnshire; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It has manufactures of blankets and carpets, and also a large soap manufactory. Here is a noble Gothic church, with a lofty spire; a new district church; also five meeting-houses for dissenters, a free school founded by Edward VI., and another founded in 1677. It has a navigation, by means of the river Lud and a canal, to the German Ocean at Tetney Creek; 28 miles N.E. of Lincoln, and 141 N. of London; on the E. Lincolnshire railway.

LOUTH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; 27 miles long, and 18 broad; bounded on the N. by Armagh and Carlingford bay, E. by the Irish Sea, W. by Monaghan and E. Meath, and S. by E. by Meath, from which it is parted by the Boyne. It is a fertile country; contains 61 parishes, area, 206,261 acres; and sends two members to parliament.

LOUTH, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name; containing the ruins of an ancient abbey, founded by St. Patrick; 18 miles N.N.W. of Drogheda.

LOUVAIN, a city of Belgium, in S. Brabant; with an old castle, and a celebrated university. Its walls are nearly 9 miles in circumference, but within them are many gardens and vineyards. The churches, convents, and public buildings are magnificent. It was, in its prosperous days, one of the most populous and industrious towns in the country. Large quantities of cloth were formerly made here; but this trade is decayed, and the town is now chiefly noted for good beer. It was taken by the French in 1746, 1792, and 1794. It is seated on the Doyle, and on the railway between Brussels and Liege; 14 miles E. by N. of Brussels, and 20 S.S.E. of Antwerp. Long. 4.41. E. lat. 50.53. N.

LOUVIENS, a handsome town of France, in the department of Eure; with a considerable manufacture of fine cloths. It is seated on the Eure; 10 miles N. of Evreux, and 55 N.W. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 8713.

LOUVRES, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise; 14 miles N. of Paris.

LOWELL, a town of the United States, in Middlesex county, Massachusetts; 25 miles N.W. from Boston; one of the most flourishing towns in the United States, being the principal seat of the cotton manufacture, and also carpeting, and silk fabrics. A railroad to Boston, 26 miles, was completed in 1835. The Andover branch extends from it 10 miles to Dover, New Hampshire; and the Nashua railroad extends 9 miles to the New Hampshire line. Its rise may be inferred from its increase of population, which in 1830 was 6474, in 1840, was 20,796.

LOWENSTEIN, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg; capital of a county of the same name, 9 miles E.S.E. of Heilbron, and 33 N.N.E. of Stuttgart.

LOWENSTEIN, a fort and ancient castle of the Netherlands; in the province of Guelderland; situated at the W. end of the island of Bommelwert. In this castle, in 1618, Hugo Grotius was confined, and after three years' imprisonment was conveyed away by a stragem of his wife, in a returned box used for the purpose of carrying books. It is 18 miles S.E. of Rotterdam.

LOWESTOFT, a town in Suffolk; with a market on Wednesday. Its church is a fine Gothic building; and it has, beside a chapel of ease, several dissenting meeting-houses, and two grammar-schools. The chief trade is in the mackerel and herring fisheries; and it is much frequented for sea-bathing. It stands on a cliff, the most easterly point of Great Britain; 10 miles S. of Yarmouth, and 114 N.E. of London. Long. 1.45. E. lat. 52.29. N.

LOWER-WATER, a lake in Cumberland, one mile long, and a quarter of a mile broad. It is of no great depth, but abounds with pike and perch. In opposition to all the other lakes, it has its course from N. to S. and, under the lofty Mellbreak, runs into the N. end of Cromach-water.

LOWICZ, a town of Poland, with a strong fortress; seated on the Bzura; 42 miles W. of Warsaw. Pop. 2550.

LOWNDES, a county of Georgia: capital, Troupville. Pop. 5574.—Also a county in the state of Alabama; capital, Haynesville. Pop. 19,539.—Also a county of the state of Mississippi; capital, Columbus. Pop. 14,513, including 8771 slaves.

LOWOSITZ, a town of Bohemia; in the circle of Leutmeritz. In 1756 the greatest part of it was burnt in an obstinate engagement between the Saxons and Prussians. It is seated on the Egria; 5 miles W.S.W. of Leutmeritz.

LOXA. See LOJA.

LOXA, or LOJA, a town of Quito; republic of Colombia; capital of a province of the same name; famous for producing fine Jesuits' bark and cochineal. Carpets of remarkable fineness are manufactured here, but the town is much decayed. It stands at the head of a N.W. branch of the Amazon; 150 miles E.N.E. of Païta. Pop. 4500. Long. 78.16. W. lat. 4.5. S.

LUBECK, or LÜBECK, a city, seaport, and republic of Germany; adjoining the duchy of Holstein. It was the head of the famous Hanseatic league, formed here in 1164, and the most commercial city of the north; but great part of its trade is transferred to Hamburg. The city is surrounded with walls, which are planted with rows of trees, but the other defences were demolished by the French, to whom it was surrendered in 1806. The houses are built of stone, in a very ancient style. The town-house is a superb structure, and has several towers. There is also a fine council-house, and an exchange. The inhabitants are Lutherans. There are four large churches, besides the cathedral. The trade consists in the export of corn from the adjoining country, and the import of articles for consumption; and the manufactures comprise woollens, silks, cotton, tobacco, soap, white lead, copper, &c. Lubeck is seated on the Trave; 8 miles S.W. of the Baltic, and 53 N.E. of Hamburg, on a branch of the Hamburg and Berlin railway. Pop. 22,500.

LUBECK, the territory subject to Lubeck, contains about 80 sq. miles immediately around the city; several detached portions in Holstein; and the Vierländer and town of Bergedorf, the sovereignty of which it shares with Hamburg; total area, 127 sq. miles. Pop. in 1838, 47,200, almost all Lutherans. The land is fruitful, but cattle and sheep are the principal productions. The government of the whole is vested in the senate and house of burgesses, and has one vote in the Germanic confederation.

LUBEC, an island in the Indian Ocean; near the island of Madura. Long. 112.22. E. lat. 5.50. S.

LUBECK, a seaport of Maine, in Washington county; situated on a beautiful peninsula, on the W. side of Passamaquoddy bay; 365 miles E. of Boston. It was commenced in 1813, and is now a handsome and flourishing town.

LUBEN, a town of Prussian Silesia, seated on the Katsbach; 14 miles N. of Leignitz.

LUDLÉNTZ, a town of Silesia, in the principality of Oppeln; 32 miles E. of Oppeln.

LUBLIN, a city of Russian Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, and a bishop's see; with a citadel. Three annual fairs are held here, each lasting a month, which are frequented by great numbers of German, Russian, Turkish, and other traders and merchants. It is seated on the Bistricza; 85 miles S.E. of Warsaw. Long. 22.45. E. lat. 51.14. N. Pop. 12,500, half of whom are Jews.

LUCATA ISLANDS. See BATTAMA.

LUCCA, prefecture of Tuscany, till 1847 an independent duchy, lying on the E. coast of the Gulf of Genoa. It is bounded by Tuscany, Modena, and the Mediterranean, and contains about 430 sq. m., and a pop. in 1855 of 284,430. It is mountainous, but well cultivated, and produces plenty of wine, oil, silk, wool, and chestnuts; the oil, in particular, is in high esteem. During the autumn its male population emigrate to Tuscany and the marshes, to the harvest work. Most of the plaster image-makers of other countries, are emigrants from Lucca. It has but one seaport, Viareggio. It was formerly a republic; was constituted a principality by Napoleon in 1805, and in 1815 erected into a duchy by the Congress of Vienna, but, by failure of heirs, it became incorporated with Tuscany in 1847.

LUCCA, a city of Italy, capital of the above duchy, and an archbishop's see. It is nearly 3 miles in circumference, regularly but not strongly fortified, and contained in 1839, 24,092 inhabitants. The state palace, and the cathedral and other churches, are worthy of notice. About 12 or 13 miles up the valley are the hot-baths of Lucca, much frequented. Here are considerable manufactures of silk, and gold and silver stuffs. Lucca was entered by the French in 1796, evacuated in 1799, and re-entered in 1800. It is seated in a fruitful plain, near the river Serchio; 10 miles N.E. of Pisa, and 37 W. of Florence, on the Leopolda railway.

LUCE, a spacious bay on the S. coast of Scotland, in Wigtonshire; lying E. of the promontory called the Mull of Galloway. The river Luce enters its N.E. extremity, at the town of Glenluce.

LUCENSTEIG, ST., a narrow pass from the country of the Grisons into Germany; defended by a fort; 3 m. N. of Mayenfeld; which was taken by Gen. Massena, in March 1799.

LUCENA, a town of Spain, in Cordova; 32 miles S.S.E. of Cordova, and 42 W.N.W. of Granada. Pop. 19,716.

LUCERA, a city of Naples; capital of Capitanata, and a bishop's see. The town has about 12,000 inhabitants; the houses are good but the streets narrow and dirty. Near it are the ruins of a very ancient citadel, and the cathedral, formerly a Saracenic mosque, is interesting. Numerous antiquities have been found around it. It has a royal college, and great quantities of cattle are reared in the neighbourhood. The town is small, and has a manufacture of cloth. It is 75 miles N.E. of Naples. Long. 15. 34. E. lat. 41. 28. N.

LUCERNA, a town of Piedmont; in a valley of its name; 15 miles S.W. of Turin.

LUCERNE, canton of Switzerland, ranking third in the confederation, and containing a superficial extent of 587 square miles; and bounded by the cantons of Underwalden, Schweiz, and Zurich. The air is mild, and the soil uncommonly fertile. Freedom and openness of manners characterize the inhabitants, who are Roman Catholics, and computed, in 1838, at 124,521.

LUCERNE, the capital of the above canton, is divided into two parts by a branch of the Reuss, which here enters the Lake of Lucerne. The situation of the town is highly picturesque, and is well built. Its most remarkable objects are the 4 bridges over the Reuss. It has a cathedral, several churches and convents; that of the Jesuits has been converted into a lyceum or college. The weekly corn market is one of the largest in Switzerland. It has no manufactures of consequence, and little commerce, the merchants being principally engaged in the commission business, upon goods passing between Italy and Germany, over Mount St. Gothard and the Lucerne lake. Lucerne surrendered at the end of 1847, to the united army of the radical party, after the hard fought battles of Gislikon and Rottenburg, and was one of the great but inglorious triumphs of injustice over the Sonderbund, or confederation for the preservation of the Swiss constitutions. Pop. 6750. It is 30 miles S.W. of Zurich, and 42 E. of Berne, to which places it will have railways.

LUCERNE, or WALDSTADTER, a lake of Switzerland; between the cantons of Underwalden, Lucerne, Schweiz, and Uri. It consists of a number of detached parts, forming in a manner, separate lakes. It is the largest, as well as the most romantic lake in the interior of Switzerland, being 25 miles long, and from 2 to 4 broad; depth varying from 300 to 900 feet. Area, 300 sq. miles.

LUCHEW, a town of Hanover; in the duchy of Luneburg; seated on the Jetze; 30 miles S. of Luneburg.

LUCIA, ST., one of the Caribbee islands, in the West Indies; 27 miles long, and 12 broad. It consists of plains well watered with rivulets, and hills furnished with timber; and has several good bays and commodious harbours.

By the peace of 1763 this island was allotted to France. In 1803 it was taken by the English, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris, in 1814. There are two high mountains, by which this island may be known at a considerable distance. Its N. end is 21 miles S. of Martinico. Pop. 16,017, including 13,348 blacks. It is divided into Basseterre and Capisterre. Castries is the chief town. Long. 60. 51. W. lat. 14. 0. N.

LUCIA, St., one of the Cape de Verde islands, to the W. of that of St. Nicholas. Long. 24. 30. W. lat. 16. 45. N.

LUCIA, Sr., a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona; 15 miles W. of Messina. Pop. in 1831, 6270.

LUCIA, St., a town of Buenos Ayres, on a river of the same name; 30 miles N. of Monte Video and 340 N. by W. of Buenos Ayres.—It is also the name of several settlements in S. America, none of which require particular notice.

LUCIANA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia; 8 miles W.N.W. of Ecija.

LUCIRO, a town of Naples, in the Molise; 11 miles N.E. of Molise.

LUCKAU, a town of the Prussian states; in Lower Lusatia. It is seated in a swampy country, on the Breste; 55 miles N. of Dresden.

LUCKENWALD, a town of Prussian Saxony; seated on the Nute; 32 miles S. of Berlin.

LUCIFORD, a town of Dorsetshire; W. of Holme; on the river Luckford, which falls into the Frome, and forms the W. boundaries of Purbeck Isle.

LUCKNOW, an ancient city of Hindostan, and capital of Oude. It is large, but poorly built, and the streets are narrow and crooked. The palace of the nabob is situated on a high bank near the Goomty, and commands an extensive view both of that river and the country on the eastern side. It will be long memorable for the heroic defence of a few Europeans against the mutineers, from July to September, 1857, and for the equally heroic and successful struggle of the illustrious Havelock to its relief.

LUCKPUT-BUNDER, a town and seaport of Hindostan, province of Cutch, on the Khoree, the W. branch of the Indus. It had 2000 inhabitants, but by an earthquake in 1819, the Indus having deepened, it has contributed to the prosperity of Luckput-Bunder; 82 miles S.E. by S. of Tatta.

LUCO, a town of Naples, on the W. bank of the lake Celano; 9 miles S.S.W. of Celano.

LUCON, a town of France; department of Vendée; seated on a morass, on the canal of Fontenay; 20 miles W. of Fontenay, and 50 S. of Nantes.

LUÇONIA, or MANILLA, the chief of the Philippine islands; 400 miles in length and 100 in breadth. It is not so hot as might be expected, being well watered by large lakes and rivers, and the periodical rains, which inundate the plains. There are several volcanoes in the mountains, which occasion earthquakes. The produce is wax, cotton, indigo, tobacco, sugar, coffee, wild cinnamon, sulphur, cocoa-nuts, rice, &c. Gold is found in various parts of the island; and horses, buffaloes, and a variety of game abound. The inhabitants are, for the most part, a well disposed people, and, before their subjugation, were distributed into mud villages. Under the tyranny of the Spanish government they have become indolent, and destitute of energy. The interior, however, is occupied by a savage race, whom the Spaniards have not been able to subdue. They carry on a small traffic in gold, wax, and tobacco, in exchange for cattle. Area, 65,000 square miles. Pop. 1,760,000. Long. 122. 0. E. lat. 15. 0. N.

LUCRINO. See LICOLA.

LUCY, a town of the Sardinian states, in Savoy; 16 miles N. of Chambéry.

LUDAMAR, a country of central Africa; bounded on the S. by Kaarta and Bumbarra, and N. by the Sahara or Great Desert. It is inhabited by a race of Moors, who are almost strangers to agriculture, and depend for subsistence on the rearing of cattle. In religion they are Mohammedans of the most bigoted and intolerant character, as was fully proved in the case of Major Houghton, who was murdered here; and of Mr. Park, who was kept in long captivity, and with difficulty made his escape.

LUDENCHEID, a town of Prussian Westphalia; with manufactures of iron and cloth; 28 miles N.E. of Cologne.

LUDGERSHALL, a wretched and decayed market town in Wiltshire; it is 15 miles N. of Salisbury, and 71 N. by W. of London.

LUDLOW, a borough in Shropshire; with a market on Monday. It has a castle, now fast going to decay, where all business was formerly transacted for the principality of Wales. This castle and town were held for the empress Maud, against king Stephen, and besieged by him. Edward V. resided here at the time of his father's death, and was carried hence to London. Arthur, prince of Wales, son of Henry VII., held a court, and died here. Ludlow has a stately church, an elegant town-house, a commodious market-house, several meeting-houses for dissenters, two alms-houses, a free school, a charity school, and a national school. It returns two members to parliament. It is seated on the Teme; 21 miles from Shrewsbury, and 148 from London by railway.

Near this place, in 1632, Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, was killed in a battle, at the moment of victory. Lutzen is also celebrated for the defeat of the united forces of Russia and Prussia, by Bonaparte, in May 1813. It is seated on the Elster; 11 miles W.S.W. of Leipsic.

LUXEMBURG, a province of Western Europe, bounded by the Prussian states on the Rhine, a part of the French frontier, and the Belgic provinces of Namur and Liege, and comprising a superficial area of 2700 square miles, with 328,000 inhabitants. It gives the title of grand duke to the sovereign, which is now held by the king of the Netherlands. The surface is mountainous and woody, being traversed by branches of the Ardennes; and the climate is colder than that of the other provinces. The principal river is the Moselle. Corn, potatoes, flax, and some wine are raised; the rearing of cattle forms a important branch of industry; and there are manufactures of woolen and iron; but the chief wealth of the province consists in its forests, which occupy upwards of 460,000 acres. It is divided into the districts of Luxembourg, which is the Dutch portion, Dietkirch, and Neufchateau. In the partition of Europe in 1815, it was ceded to the kingdom of the Netherlands, and on the separation of Belgium from that kingdom, it was claimed by both of them. By the treaty of April 19, 1839, this territory was partitioned between Holland and Belgium. The eastern portion, area 1000 square miles—pop. 160,000, to the former; and the western portion, area 1700 square miles—pop. about 168,000, to the latter.

LUXEMBURG, the capital of the above province, belonging to Holland, and one of the strongest towns in Europe. It is divided by the Alzette into the Upper and Lower Town; the former almost surrounded by rocks, but the latter seated in a plain. In 1795 it surrendered to the French, but was restored in 1814. It is 22 miles W.S.W. of Treves, and 130 S.E. of Brussels. Long. 6.7. E. lat. 49.37. N. Pop. in 1830, 11,500.

LYMFORD, a gulf of Denmark, in North Jutland; which has a narrow entrance from the Cattegat, and extends 80 miles across the country, widening gradually, and forming several branches; the W. end is 20 miles long, and separated from the North sea only by a narrow bank.

LYMINGTON, a borough in Hampshire, governed by a mayor; with a market on Saturday. It is seated on a river of its name, a mile from the sea; and the harbour will admit vessels of 30 tons burden. The chief trade is in salt; and it is much resorted to in summer for sea-bathing. Near it are the remains of a Roman camp; and in 1744, nearly 200 lbs weight of their coins were discovered here in two urns. It returns two members to parliament. It is 18 miles S.S.W. of Southampton, and 88 S.W. of London.

LYNCHBURG, a town of Virginia, in Campbell county, on the S. side of James river; 116 miles W. of Richmond. It has extensive tobacco warehouses. Pop. in 1840, 6395.

LYNDHURST, a village in Hampshire; on the N. side of the New Forest, 9 miles W.S.W. of Southampton. Here are the king's house and the king's stables, the latter very large; and all the forest courts are held here.

LYNN, a town of Massachusetts, in Essex county; with a considerable manufacture of women's silk and cloth shoes. It is 9 miles S.S.W. of Salem, and 10 N.E. of Boston. Pop. 9367.

LYNN, or LYNN REGIS, a borough and seaport of Norfolk; governed by a mayor; with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. By the Ouse, and its associated rivers, it supplies most of the midland counties with coal, timber, and wine; and, in return, exports malt and corn in great quantities: it is the terminus of the East Anglian railways. Lynn has a large market-place, with an elegant cross. It is 42 miles W.N.W. of Norwich, and 96 N. by E. of London. Long. 0. 26. E. lat. 52. 48. N.

LYONS, a former province of France; lying on the W. side of the Saone and Rhone; 30 miles in length, and 17 in breadth. This province, with Forez and Beaujolois, now forms the department of the Rhone and the Loire.

LYONS, a city of France; capital of the department of Rhone, and the see of an archbishop. Many antiquities are still observed, which evince its Roman origin. It has long been considered as the second city of France, in beauty, size, and population, and superior to Paris in trade, commerce, and manufactures. It stands on a tongue of land, at the junction of the Rhone and the Saone. The vicinity, unlike Paris and many French towns, is thickly populated, and the suburbs gradually melt into the country. It is irregularly built, and chiefly consists of narrow, dirty, and winding streets. Some of the quarters are most filthy, but other parts are magnificent. Three ranges of quays and 17 bridges, nearly all modern, are upon its rivers. These sometimes rise and cause great damage by their inundation, as was the case in 1840, when the city was much injured, and the surrounding country laid under water. There are three stone bridges over the Rhone. Lyons has 55 squares, some large and regular, many others much the reverse. The town-hall is its principal public building, and the finest edifice of the kind in France: erected between 1646 and 1655. The 18 churches are not remarkable. The cathedral is gothic, and its interior is simple. The hospitals are the largest public establishments in Lyons. The Hotel-Dieu is the most ancient and finest in France, receiving annually 12,000 in-patients. The Palais des Arts, a museum, was formerly the Benedictine convent. The botanic garden is much frequented, and is in the city. The beautiful ile Barbe, in the Saone, is connected with its left bank by a handsome new suspension bridge. Lyons is the principal manufacturing town of France, and is the first silk manufacturing city of Europe. Her situation is peculiarly favourable for this; the principal silk growing districts are adjacent, and her navigation causes the city to be the entrepôt of a vast inland commerce. The silks made here are celebrated, and are woven by the people principally in their own houses, and not in factories. The patterns are improved by the training the designers have in the School of Arts (Institution de la Martinière). The trade has frequent crises, which have led to serious distress, of which that of 1836-7 led to formidable riots. The other articles of manufacture are gold and silver brocade, plain, double and striped velvet, richly embroidered taffeta, and satin; also gold and silver laces, or galloons, gauze, hats, ribbons, leather, carpets, and coloured paper. The printing and book-selling of this place are the next to Paris in importance. In June, 1793, it revolted against the Convention, and on its surrender in October, it was decreed that its walls and public buildings should be destroyed, and multitudes of the insurgents were executed. This was avenged in 1795 by a general massacre of the judges of the revolutionary tribunal, and all the Jacobins then in confinement. It was the scene of several actions between the French and Austrians in 1814; and, on the return of Bonaparte from Elba, in 1815, the princes of the house of Bourbon were obliged to withdraw. The city is seated at the conflux of the Saone with the Rhone; 15 miles N. of Vienne, 70 W.S.W. of Geneva, and 280 S.E. of Paris. Population of the city in 1836, 147,223, but including the suburbs, about 200,000. Long. 4. 45. E. lat. 45. 46. N.

LYONS, a town of North America, state of

New York; an improving place, situated on the Erie Canal; 16 miles N. of Geneva.

MAASSLUIS, a town of S. Holland, on a branch of the Maas, with manufactures of sail-cloth, cordage and leather, and also takes a part in the cod and herring fisheries; 9 m. W. by N. of Rotterdam. Pop. 4500.

MADRA, a town of Algiers, seated on the Gulf of Bona; 10 miles W. of Bona.

MACAO, a town in China, in the province of Quang-tung, in the bay of Canton, from which it is distant 55 miles. The town is situated on a sandy peninsula, connected with the island of Macao by a neck of land, on which is a Chinese fort and wall, and beyond which no European is allowed to pass, and which circumscribes the space to about 3 miles long and 1 wide. The Portuguese, to whom the town nominally belongs, and who have a custom-house, and who are masters of the strong fortifications, pay an annual ground-rent for the town. The British and other European nations have factories in the town, which is 30 miles below the island of Liutin, and beyond which no ship of war is allowed to proceed, and 45 miles below Whampoa, where merchant ships stop, 10 miles below Canton. The first Portuguese settlement was in 1537; but they gradually proceeded to gain a firm footing, till it became the centre of the commerce which they carried on with Japan, China, and the eastern islands, and was then a more important place than at present. In a garden, at one extremity of the town, is a cave in which the poet Camoens composed the Lusiad. After 1638 it declined, and is now inhabited by about 5000 Portuguese, and the Chinese are estimated 150,000. Long. 113 32. E. lat. 22. 11. N.

MACARSCA, a seaport of Austrian Dalmatia, and a bishop's see. In its vicinity are many subterraneous grottos. It is seated on the Gulf of Venice; 36 miles S.E. of Spalatro. Long. 18. 7. E. lat. 43. 49. N.

MACAS, a town of Columbia, the capital of a fertile district of Del Escador. The town was formerly a rich and flourishing place, but it is greatly decayed. It is seated on one of the sources of the Amazons; 138 miles S. by E. of Quito.

MACASSAR, formerly a considerable kingdom of the island of Celebes. Its princes at one period ruled over almost the whole island, and also over several of the neighbouring ones. Since that time however, the empire has been completely subverted by the Dutch.

MACASSAR, the chief settlement of the Dutch in the above territory, called by them Fort Rotterdam; with a respectable fort and a good harbour; but the latter is of difficult access. Chinese junks carry on a direct trade with China from this place; so that the mixed population of Dutch and half-castes, Chinese and natives, amounts to about 100,000. The Portuguese settled here about 1525, but were expelled by the Dutch in 1660. The British took possession of it in 1810, but restored it in 1814. The Dutch have constituted it a free port in 1847, and there is no doubt that this will greatly enhance its prosperity. It is seated at the mouth of a river, on the S.W. coast, and at the S. end of the Strait of Macassar. Long. 119. 49. E. lat. 5. 9. S.

MACASSAR, a strait which separates the islands of Celebes and Borneo. It is about 350 miles in length, and from 50 to 140 in breadth, and contains numerous shoals and rocky islands.

MACCLESFIELD, a borough in Cheshire; markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It returns two members to Parliament. It has manufactures of silk, cotton, buttons, and thread, and mills for the winding of silk. It is a large handsome town, and contains four churches, several meeting-houses for dissenters, a Roman Catholic chapel, three almshouses for widows; a free grammar-school, founded by Edward VI., and two Sunday-schools. It is seated at the edge of a forest, near the river Bollin; 36 miles E. of Chester, and 167 N.W. of London; on the North Staffordshire railway.

MACDUFF, a town of Scotland, in Banffshire, with a good harbour, on the Frith of Moray; 2 miles E. of Banff.

MACIO, a seaport of Brazil, the capital of the small province of Alagoas. It is well built, and has a good commerce and harbour. Pop. 4000. Lat. 9. 40. S. long. 35. 41. W.

MACON, a city and capital of Bibb county, Georgia, at the head of the steam navigation on the Ocmulgee river. A great quantity of cotton is shipped here. Pop. 3927.

MACQUARIE HARBOUR, an extensive land-locked basin, on the W. side of Van Die-men's Land. On Sarah island was a penal settlement for secondary punishments.

MACQUARIE, PORT, a settlement in the E. coast of Australia, at the mouth of the Hastings river, in lat. 31. 22. S. long. 152. 52. E.—Also the name of a large river in New South Wales, rising W. of the Blue Mountains. It was discovered in 1813, and it has since been traced to its junction with the Darling river.

MACRI, or MAKRI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, seated on a gulf of its name, in the Mediterranean. Here are the ruins of an amphitheatre and an old fort, and numerous remains of Greek inscriptions. It is 125 miles S.E. of Smyrna. Long. 29. 24. E. lat. 36. 56. N.

MACRO, or MACRONISI, an island of the Grecian archipelago, near the coast of Livadia; 20 miles E. of Athens. Long. 24. 16. E. lat. 37. 30. N.

MACROOM, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork. It has a handsome court-house and chapel. Mncroom castle is a building of great beauty, and of great antiquity; 191 miles from Dublin.

MACTAN. See MATAN.

MACULA, a seaport of Arabia, in the province of Hudramant; 150 miles S.W. of Shibam. Long. 47. 50. E. lat. 13. 25. N.

MADAGASCAR, an island lying on the eastern coast of Africa; 930 miles in length, 300 in breadth, area, 234,400 square miles, being greater than that of France. It is intersected throughout its whole length by a chain of lofty mountains, the highest, Ankaratra, 11,000 feet high; the scenery of which is in many places strikingly grand and picturesque. The climate is much diversified, and exceedingly prejudicial to Europeans on the coasts. Earthquakes are sometimes felt. Next to the cultivation of the soil, the chief occupation of the inhabitants is that of the working of iron. The soil is extremely fertile; its products are rice, sugar, and silk; also potatoes. The cocoa-nut, the banana, and other useful trees, flourish here. The island rears no horses or camels, but large herds of oxen, some of which come to an enormous size. The inhabitants consist of four chief political divisions, the Ovahs in the central land; Sakalevas on the W. side; Betsilers, S. of the Ovahs; and the Betanimana and Betsimarska on the E. coast, amounting altogether to 4,700,000. Though nominally comprised in one empire, and speaking one language, they include several distinct nations. The distinction of colour separates them into two classes: the Ovahs, and a few other tribes have olive complexions, long hair, and are handsome; while those on the coast are more like the Papuas, almost black, short, and long crisped hair. They seem to have had a great many Arabs among them, with whom they are mixed; and there are some of a yellowish complexion, who have neater features than the rest. Although a populous country, they have no cities or towns, but a great number of villages at a small distance from each other, composed of huts, with doors so low, that a boy of 12 years old cannot enter them without stooping. They have neither windows nor chimneys, and the roofs are covered with reeds or leaves. Both men and women are fond of bracelets and necklaces, and anoint their bodies with grease or oil. Those that are dressed in the best manner, have a piece of cotton, cloth, or silk, wrapped round their middle; but they generally make little use of clothing. Their beds are only mats spread upon boards, and a piece of wood or stone serves them for a bolster. They are very superstitious, and practise circumcision and polygamy. Madagascar is happily exempt from the ravages of the lion and the tiger, but here are great numbers of locusts, crocodiles, and chameleons. Madagascar is divided into 28 provinces, each having a separate chief, but the Ovahs are the prevailing tribe, and their chief is king. The government is despotic. The religion of the community is a rude polytheism. Christianity was introduced in 1818-30, by English missionaries; but a royal edict in 1835, forbade its public profession. Since the death of Radama, the most enlightened monarch that ever reigned in Madagascar, in 1828, almost all foreign and European commerce with it has ceased. The French have frequently attempted to settle here, but have always been driven hence. The chief settlement was at Port Dauphin, on the S.E. coast, in long. 47. 0. E. lat. 25. 0. S.; and the place most visited by the Europeans is more to the N. called Foulepointe.

MADALENA, a river of Colombia, which rises in the mountains to the E. of Popayan, takes a northerly course of above 900 miles, and enters the Caribbean sea, by several mouths, between Carthagena and St. Martha.

MADAWASKA, a town of the state of Maine, and of the British province of Canada. The St. John's river, according to the late treaty, is the national boundary, separating it into two parts: the British to the N., pop. 1876; and the American S., with a pop. 1584.

MADDALONI, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, province Terra di Lavoro. It has several churches, convents, a royal college, and a noble aqueduct. Pop. 10,500; 14 miles N.N.E. of Naples.

MADEIRA, an island in the Atlantic ocean, 54 miles long, and 20 broad, and 250 N. by E. of Teneriffe. Area, 400 square miles. Population, almost entirely of Portuguese descent, between 90,000 and 110,000. It may be characterized as one mountain, rising in the centre to the height of 5068 feet, and exhibits evidences of volcanic action. The Portuguese discovered this island in 1419; but it was uninhabited, and covered with wood, and on that account they called it Madeira; but it has been asserted that it was visited prior to this, by an Englishman named Macham, who had eloped with a French lady. Prince Henry, the next year, settled a colony here, and not only furnished it with the plants and domestic animals common in Europe, but procured slips of the vine from Cyprus, and plants of the sugar-cane from Sicily; and the sugar and wine of Madeira quickly became articles of some consequence in the commerce of Portugal. The sugar-works have since been removed, and the destruction of all the vines by disease in the last few years, has put an end to this chief source of its wealth. It used to export 20,000 to 25,000 pipes of its famous wine annually. The scorching heat of summer, and the icy chill of winter, are here unknown; for spring and autumn reign continually, and produce flowers and fruits throughout the year. The cedar tree is found in great abundance, and the dragon-tree is a native of this island. Flowers nursed in the English green-houses grow wild here in the fields; the hedges are mostly formed of the geranium, rose, jasmine, and honeysuckle; while the larkspur, fleur-de-lis, lupin, &c., spring up spontaneously in the meadows. There are few reptiles to be seen in the island; the lizard is the most common. Canary birds and goldfinches are found in the mountains. The hog is the food most relished; they are suffered to range among the mountains, and are hunted and caught by dogs. Salted cod is imported from America, and is the chief diet of the poor. Madeira is well watered and populous. The following was the population of the group in 1836.

The British factory settled in this island consists of upwards of 20 commercial houses, and have considerably more of its trade than the Portuguese. In 1808 it surrendered, conditionally, to the English. Funchal is the capital.

MADELEY MARKET, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Friday, held at the foot of Coalbrookdale Bridge. About 2 miles W. of the town is the romantic village of Coalbrookdale, one of the principal iron mining and manufacturing districts of England. Here is the first iron bridge erected in this county. Madeley is celebrated for having afforded refuge to Charles I. after the battle of Worcester. It is 9 miles N. of Bridgenorth, and 147 N.W. of London.

MADIAN, or MIDIAN, a town of Arabia Petraea, on the E. side of the eastern arm of the Red sea. The Arabians call it Megar el Schnaid, the Grotto of Schuuld (or Jethro), and suppose it to be the place where Moses tended the flocks of his father-in-law. It is 50 miles N. of Mollah, and 80 S. of Akaba.

MADISON, a county of the United States, in New York, erected in 1806; capital, Morrisville. Pop. in 1845, 40,987.—Also a county in the state of Virginia; capital, Madison. Pop. in 1840, 8107.—In Georgia, celebrated for its chalybeate springs; capital, Danielsville. Pop. 4510.—In Florida; capital, Madison. Pop. 2644.—Also in Alabama; capital, Huntsville. MADISON, a town of the United States, capital of Wisconsin. It is beautifully situated on a peninsula between the Four lakes. It is regularly laid out, with a square in the centre. It was a wilderness in 1837, and since the beginning of 1841, its growth has been very rapid; 90 miles W. of Milwaukee, 90 N.E. of Galena, and 847 from Washington.

MADJICOSIMA, or MEIJA-CO-SHIMA ISLANDS. A group of islands lying to the E. of Formosa, off the Chinese coast, and dependent on the islands of Loo-choo. The principal islands are Ty-pin-san, the easternmost, which is surrounded by numerous others, and in lat. 24. 44. N. long. 125. 14. E.; Pa-tchu-san, the middle island of the range, and Koo-kien-san, the westernmost. The inhabitants are an interesting and polished race of people, resembling the Chinese in their language, habits, and government, and like them have been but little visited. Ty-pin-san is supposed to be a penal settlement of the Loo-choo islands.

MADRAS, a celebrated fort and city of Hindostan. It is the capital of the British possessions on the E. side of the peninsula, and is a fortress of very great extent. It is close on the margin of the bay of Bengal, from which it has a rich and beautiful appearance, the houses being covered with stucco, called chunam, which in itself is nearly as compact as the finest marble, and bears as high a polish. The Black town is separated from the fort by an esplanade. In common with all the European settlements on this coast, Madras has no port for shipping, the coast forming nearly a straight line; and it is rendered nearly unapproachable, except by a sort of raft, called a catamaran, through a high and dangerous surf. It is the seat of a bishopric and an archdeaconry, and of missions from different societies in Britain. In 1746 it was taken by the French, but restored by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. Pop. in 1836-7, within 2 or 3 miles of Madras, 400,000. It is 100 miles N. by E. of Pondicherry, 870 (direct) S.W. of Calcutta, and 650 S.E. of Bombay. Long. 80. 21. E. lat. 23. 4. N.

MADRAS, PRESIDENCY OF, a division of British India, comprehending nearly the whole of India S. of the river Kistnah, or Krishna, and the extensive province denominated the Northern Circars. Within these boundaries, however, the rajahs of Mysore, Travancore, Cochin, and Coorg, still collect their resources, and exercise a certain degree of authority within their territories. The rest of the country is under the immediate jurisdiction of the governor and council of Madras, and is subdivided into 20 districts, over each of which there is a European judge and a collector, with the requisite establishments. There are, also, four provisional courts of circuit and appeal, to which the above-mentioned judges are subordinate; and a supreme court of appeal, stationary at Madras, consisting of four judges, selected from the Company's civil servants. The church establishment consists of a bishop and archdeacon of Madras, and 19 chaplains. Its greatest length N. and S. is about 950 miles; and the estimated area altogether, 172,028 square miles; or of the British territory alone, 130,888 square miles. It consists of a central table land, 3000 to 5000 feet above the sea, gradually declining on all sides toward the sea. On the E. and W. sides this plain is bounded by the E. and W. Ghauts, mountain ranges, which diverge from each other at the heap of mountains called the Neilgherries, which rise to from 5000 to 8760 feet above the sea. The Ghauts are lower. The principal rivers are the Godavery and Krishna; and nearly the whole of them have an E. course, toward the Coromandel coast. The Coromandel coast, on the E. side, is almost unapproachable, from the furious sea which beats on it; and during the N.E. monsoon it is inaccessible. It is much drier than the Malabar, or E. coast, the quantity of rain falling per annum on it being from 9 to 23 inches, while on the latter it is sometimes 114 inches; consequently, the climate is much more oppressive than on the Malabar coast. There is an oppressive land-tax, (on the ryot war system,) which is severely felt by the agriculturists. Tanjore is the principal grain province. Opium is not much grown, but cotton and tobacco form some of its chief products, and the cotton manufacture is much followed in the S. districts. The population under British influence, as estimated in 1836, 7, amounted to 14,894,851, or 113·8 to the square mile; in the whole territory, to 18,314,605, or 106·4 to the square mile.

MADRE DE DIOS, an island in the Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Patagonia; 180 miles in circumference.

MADRE DE POPA, a town of New Granada, with a celebrated convent. It is much resorted to by the pilgrims of South America, and they pretend that the image of the Virgin has done a great many miracles in favour of the seafaring people. It is seated on the Madlena, 50 miles E. of Carthagena.

MADRID, the capital of Spain, in New Castile. It has but a recent history as a city. It was declared to be the court by Philip II., in 1560, and soon rose at the expense of the older and better situated capitals. Its position has no single natural advantage, except the fancied merit of being the centre of Spain. It is built on several hills, that hang over the Manzanares, at an elevation of 2400 feet above the sea. The climate is extremely unpleasant, fluctuating between the extremes of heat and cold; and, consequently, is very unhealthy. It is not a city, and has no cathedral or bishop. Since the death of Ferdinand VII., it has much improved as a town. It is better cleaned and lighted; and the suppression and removal of convents has opened spaces for new buildings, which are everywhere rising. It is divided into 12 districts, consisting of 24 parishes; has 18 hospitals, a cuna or casa de depositos, a university, 9 academies, 4 public libraries, 3 museums, a glorious palace, 3 theatres, a plaza de toros, 33 fountains, and 5 chief gates; and 201,344 inhabitants. The heart of the city is the Puerto do Sol, formerly the E. gate, but now built around in all directions, and is the great centre of traffic. The museo contains about 1200 fine pictures, and some sculpture. The new museum was opened by Espartero, on the famous anniversary in Madrid, the dos de Maio, 1842, which has also some excellent works of art. The botanic garden, destroyed by the ruthless French invaders, again flourishes; the same with the observatorio astronomico, but has not met with the same respect. Near the observatory is the convent of Atocha, in the chapel of which is a celebrated image of the Virgin. The Manzanares is a poor stream, over which are four bridges; at the end of the E. one is the hermitage of San Isidro, the scene of an annual pilgrimage and jollification on May 15. The royal palace is one of the most magnificent in the world. The bibliotheca nacional is well conducted, and contains 200,000 volumes, and a fine collection of coins, &c. The royal armoury, on the S. side of the palace, is one of the finest in the world. The vast pile of San Francisco, formerly a convent, is now a barrack. The Plaza mayor, where the autos da fé and bullfights took place, is still sometimes used for the latter.

There are three theatres. But few of the churches are worth visiting. There is much talk of making it the focus of a grand system of railways, which are to connect it with Barcelona, Alicante, Cadiz, Aviles, Bilbao, Badajoz, &c.; but as the Spanish have never yet been able properly to support a canal or road, these must as yet be visionary. In the environs, which possess very few attractions, are several royal residences, such as the Casa del Campo, where a great many wild animals were formerly kept for the chase. The manufactures of Madrid are very inconsiderable; those for hats, and the royal china and salt-petre works, are the principal. The French took possession of this city in March, 1808, and on the 2d of May the inhabitants rose up in arms to expel them from the city, when a terrible carnage took place for several hours, and it was not till the arrival of more troops that order was enforced among the people. On the 20th of July following Joseph Bonaparte entered it as king of Spain, but was obliged to quit it soon afterwards. On the 2d of December of the same year it was retaken by Napolcon, who reinstated his brother on the throne; and he kept possession till August, 1812, when Madrid was entered by the British army under the Duke of Wellington. The French, however, again took possession of it in November, but finally evacuated it the following year. The inhabitants joined in the revolution of 1820, when the king was obliged to accede to the general desire of restoring the constitution of the Cortes of 1812. See SPAIN. Madrid is on the river Manzanares, over which is a magnificent bridge; 265 miles N.E. of Lisbon, and 650 S.S.W. of Paris. Long. 3.38. W. lat. 40.25. N.

MADRIDEJOS, a town of Spain, in New Castile; 65 miles S. of Madrid; in a plain producing much saffron, and grazing many sheep. Pop. 6900.

MADRIGAL, a town of Spain, in Old Castile; seated in a plain, fertile in excellent wine; 10 miles N.E. of Medina del Campo.

MADRISIO, a town of Italy, in Friuli; 30 miles N. of Venice.

MADROGAN, a town of Africa, the capital of Mocaranga, with a spacious royal palace. The upper part of the houses is in the shape of a bell. Long. 29.40. E. lat. 18.0. S.

MADURA, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name belonging to the British, and included in the collectorship of Dindigul. It is fortified with square towers and parapets, and has one of the most superb pagodas in Hindostan. It is 130 miles N.N.W. of Cape Comorin, and 270 S.S.W. of Madras. Long. 78.14. E. lat. 9.55. N.

MADURA, an island in the Indian Ocean, on the N. coast of the island of Java; belonging to the Dutch. It is 100 miles long, and 15 broad, and the soil is fertile and well cultivated. The chief towns are Samanah, Pharmacassan, and Bancallan.

MÄLER, a lake of Sweden, 80 miles long and 20 broad, between the provinces of Westman and Söderman. It contains several fine islands, is usually frozen during a few weeks in winter, and opens an easy communication, by sledges, between the interior parts of Sweden and the city of Stockholm.

MÄLSTROM, a dangerous whirlpool on the coast of Norway, in 68 N. lat. and near the island of Moskoe; whence it is also named Moskoestrom. When it is flood, the stream runs up the country with a boisterous rapidity; but the roar of its impetuous ebb to the sea is scarcely equalled by the loudest cataracts. The intervals of tranquillity are only at the turn of the ebb and flood, and calm weather; and they last but a quarter of an hour, its violence gradually returning. When the stream is most boisterous, and its fury heightened by a storm, vessels have been reached by it at the distance of 5 miles.

MÄRNA, a town of Germany, in Tyrol; 23 miles W.S.W. of Trent.

MÆSE. See MEUSE.

MÆSEYE, a town of Belgium, in the province of Liege, on the river Meuse; 10 miles S.S.W. of Ruremonde.

MÆSLANDELSUYT, a town of South Holland, near the mouth of the Meuse; 10 miles W. of Rotterdam.

MÆSTRICHT, a city of the Netherlands, capital of the province of Limburg, about 4 miles in circumference, seated on the Meuse, opposite Wyck, with which it communicates by a stone bridge. The number of inhabitants in 1834, was 22,000. It has fine long streets, many churches and convents, a college formerly belonging to the Jesuits, a council-house with its library, and considerable manufactures of woollen and cotton goods, cloth, leather, hosiery, and hardware. Near it is the lofty mountain of St. Peter, with a fortress; and a stone quarry, with a number of subterranean passages. The other fortifications, and the situation of Mæstricht, are such, that it is deemed one of the strongest places in Europe. The city was besieged by the French in 1748, during the negotiations of Aix-la-Chapelle; was unsuccessfully attacked by them in 1793; and they became masters of it towards the end of the following year. In 1814 it was delivered up to the allied forces. It is 14 miles N.N.E. of Liege, and 58 E. of Brussels. Long. 5. 41. E. lat. 50. 51. N.

MÆFRA, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a college, founded in 1772. In a sandy and barren spot near this place, John V., in pursuance of a vow, erected a building of extraordinary magnificence, as a Franciscan convent. The town is seated near the sea, 18 miles N.N.W. of Lisbon.

MÆGADI, or MÆGHERY, a town of Hindostan, in the district of Mysore, seated in a hilly country, abounding in timber-trees, stone, and iron; 24 miles W. of Bangalore.

MÆGADOXA, the capital of a kingdom of the same name on the coast of Ajan on the E. coast of Africa, with a citadel, and a good harbour. It stands at the mouth of a river, which is supposed to have a long course, having regular inundations, that fertilize the country to a great extent. The inhabitants are mostly Mohammedans; but there are also some Abyssinian Christians. The city is a place of great commerce, receiving from Aden and other parts, cotton, silk, spices, and drugs, in exchange for gold, ivory, wax, and other commodities. Long. 46. 25. E., lat. 2. 10. N.

MÆGDALEN ISLES, a group of islets in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, near its entrance.

MÆGDALENA, a large river of South America, in the republic of New Granada, which rises in the province of Popayan, and, after a course of 900 miles falls into the sea in lat. 11. 2. N.

MÆGDEBURG, a government of the Prussian states in Saxony, composed of part of the duchy of Magdeburg, with other territories. The country is in general level, and the parts which are not marshy and overgrown with wood are very fertile. Its commerce is greatly facilitated by the Elbe, which traverses it through its whole extent.

MÆGDENBURG, a fortified city, capital of the foregoing government. It has a handsome palace, a citadel, with a fine arsenal, and a magnificent cathedral, which contains the superb mausoleum of Otho the Great. The inhabitants were computed at 51,347 in 1837. Here are manufactures of cotton and linen goods, stockings, gloves, porcelain, hats, leather, soap, and tobacco; but the principal are those of woollen and silk. It is well situate for trade, on both sides of the Elbe, by which it has an easy communication with Hamburg. In the neighbourhood are the monastery of Bergin, and the salt-works of Schœnebeck, producing about 30,000 tons annually. Magdeburg has sustained several sieges. In 1631 it was taken by the Austrians, who burnt the town, except the cathedral and a few houses adjacent, and massacred above 10,000 of the inhabitants; but it was soon handsomely rebuilt. In 1806 it surrendered to the French, and was not restored till 1813. It is 75 miles W.S.W. of Berlin, and 120 S.E. of Hamburg, at the junction of several railways.

MÆGELLAN, or MÆGALHAEN, a strait of South America separating Patagonia from Tierra del Fuego; discovered in 1520, by Ferdinand Magellan, a Portuguese, in the service of Spain. It has since been accurately surveyed; but the passage, upwards of 300 miles, being dangerous and troublesome, navigators generally sail round Cape Horn.

MÆGENTA, a town of Pavia, in Italy, 16 miles W. of Milan. Famed for the victory obtained there by the French and Sardinians over the Austrians, on June 4, 1859.

MÆGGEROE, or MÆGERON, a large island on the coast of Norway, and the most northern land in Europe. It is separated from the con thent on the S. by a narrow channel; and its N. extremity is an enormous rock, called North Cape. Long. 25. 57. E lat. 71. 10. N.

MAGHERAFELT, a town of Ireland, in the county of Londonderry; with a considerable linen manufacture; 13 miles W. of Antrim, and 30 S.E. of Londonderry.

MAGIA, a river of Switzerland, in the canton of Tessin; which runs S. with rapidity, through a narrow valley of its name, and enters the lake of Magglore, near Locarno.

MAGGIORIE, a lake of Upper Italy, separating part of the Austro-Italian government of Milan from the states of Sardinia, and extending from Sesto northward to Locarno; 30 miles in length, and 3 in breadth. It has some beautiful scenery, and the Borromean islands, Isole Bella and Madre, are most famous. It is more than 300 fathoms deep in some parts. The river Tesino runs S. through its whole length.

MAGINDANAO. See MINDANAO.

MAGLIANO, a town of Italy, province of Sabina; seated on a mountain near the river Tiber; 34 miles N. of Rome. Long. 12. 35. E. lat. 42. 25. N.

MAONA VACCA, a town and fort of Italy, in the Papal States; seated at the mouth of the Lake of Commachio, in the Gulf of Venice; 3 miles S.E. of Commachio.

MAGNISA, (ancient Magnesia,) a town of European Turkey, in Anadoli; 28 miles N.E. of Smyrna; once the capital of the Greek empire. It is better built than the rest of the towns in the pælonic, and was formerly famous as productive of the loadstone; from whence the name magnet is perhaps derived. Its pop. is estimated at 30,000.

MAONY, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise; 32 miles N.W. of Paris.

MAHALIPOORAM, or MAVALIPURAM, a village and collection of rock-temples on the Coromandel coast, S. India, evidently of much importance in former times; 33 miles S.S.W. of Madras.

MAHALKU, or MAHALLET-EL-KEREER, a town of Egypt; capital of El-Garbis. It carries on a considerable trade in linen, cotton, and sal ammoniac; and the inhabitants have ovens to hatch chickens. Long. 33. 30. E. lat. 31. 30. N.

MAHANUDDY, (the large river,) a river of Hindostan, which rises in the N.E. part of Berar, crosses Orissa, and enters the Bay of Bengal, by several mouths, below Cuttack. These mouths form an assemblage of low woody islands. Diamonds are sometimes found in the sand brought down by it.

MAHE, a town of Hindostan, in Malabar, belonging to the French; taken by the English in 1793, and restored to them. It is now but of little importance. It is situate on high ground, at the mouth of a river; 5 miles S.S.E. of Tellicherry.

MAHEBOURG, a town of the island of Mauritius. It is on the S.E. coast, in a healthy situation, and the chief quarters of the military corps. It has an excellent harbour, which was made a port of entry in 1839.

MAHLBERG, a town and castle of Germany, in Baden; 17 miles N. of Friburg.

MAHMOODABAD, a town of Hindostan, in Guzerat; 17 miles S.S.E. of Ahmedabad.

MAHMUDPORE, a town of Hindostan, in Bengal; 80 miles N.E. of Calcutta.

MAHMUDY, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Oude; 70 miles N.W. of Lucknow, and 150 E.S.E. of Delhi.

MAHON, a port and town at the eastern end of Minorea. It is a fine harbour, the entrance of which is narrow, and defended by two forts. It was much used by the British during the late wars.

MAHARATTA TERRITORY, an extensive country of Hindostan, which, till lately, stretched across what is called the Peninsula of India. On the accession of Ran Rajah, in 1740, the peishwa and the paymaster-general confined him to the fortress of Sattarah, and divided the empire between them; the former fixing his residence at Poonah, which became the capital of the Western Maharrattas: the latter founding a new kingdom in the province of Gundwannah, called the Eastern Maharrattas, and fixing his residence at NAGPORE (which see). The peishwa became dependent on the British, in 1802; but, attempting to shake off his dependence, he was defeated, and deposed. The Maharrattas are Hindoos; and many of the Brahmins are polished and insidious merchants. They are fond of horses, and their army was almost entirely composed of cavalry; they were, however, never very formidable, as a regular force, depending more on the celerity of their motions, and the suddenness of their incursions, than on the boldness with which they met their enemies.

MAHRBURG. See MARCHBURG.

MAHUR, a town of Hindostan; capital of a district of its name, in the province of Berar; seated on the Chin Gongu, which flows into the Godavery; 140 miles S.W. of Nagpore. Long. 78. 34. E. lat. 19. 24. N.

MAIDA, a small town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra. On the plain near this place, in 1806, a victory was obtained by 5000 British troops over 8000 French. It is 9 miles W.S.W. of Squillace.

MAIDENHEAD, a town in Berkshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday, and a good trade in malt, meal, and timber. It is seated on the Thames, over which is a bridge, near which it is also crossed by the Great Western railway; 12 miles E. by N. of Reading, and 26 W. by N. of London.

MAIDENOT, an island of the Pacific Ocean; 36 miles long, and 9 broad. In the N.W. part of it native copper is found. Long. 167. 10. E. lat. 54. 40. N.

MAIDSTONE, a borough, and the county town of Kent; governed by a mayor, with a market on Thursday. It has a brisk trade in exporting the commodities of the county, particularly hops, of which there are name-rous plantations around; here are also paper mills, and a manufacture of linen. The old church is a spacious and handsome edifice; there are 3 others, and several meeting-houses for dissenters, a grammar school, eight charity schools, &c. The county goal and court-house is an extensive range of modern buildings. Maidstone is seated on the Medway, over which is a bridge of seven arches; 20 miles W. of Canterbury, and 34 E.S.E. of London. It returns two members to parliament.

MAHARAJA, a town of Hindoostan, in Malwal; near which the troops of Holkar were defeated by the British in 1817. It is seated on the Soprah; 20 miles N. of Oojain.

MAILLICOTT, a lofty fortress of Hindoostan, in Mysore; and one of the most celebrated places of Hindoo worship. The large temple is a square building of great dimensions, and the jewels belonging to it are very valuable. In 1772 Hyder was completely routed by the Mahratta chiefs near this place; and it was here that the Mahratta chiefs joined Lord Cornwallis, in 1791. It is 17 miles N. of Seringapatam.

MAILLEZAIN, a town of France, department of Vendée; seated on an island formed by the Sèvre and Antize; 22 miles N.E. of Rochelle.

MAINA, a seaport of Greece, in the Morea, which gives name to a district which lies between two bays of the Mediterranean sea. The inhabitants of the district, estimated at 50,000, could never, even nominally, be subjected to the Turks, till the end of the eighteenth century, when they agreed to pay a small tribute to the porte. The town is seated on the Bay of Coron; 46 miles S. by W. of Mistra. Long. 22. 10. E. lat. 36. 34. N.

MAINE, one of the United States; formerly a district of Massachusetts; 250 miles long, and 192 broad. Area, about 30,000 square miles. Pop. 501,793. It is bounded on the N.W. and N. by Canada, E. by New Brunswick, S.E. and E. by the Atlantic, and W. by New Hampshire. It comprises the 13 counties of Penobscot, York, Cumberland, Lincoln, Hancock, Washington, Kennebeck, Oxford, Waldo, Piscataquis, Franklin, Aroostook and Somerset. The chief rivers are the Penobscot, Kennebeck, Saco, Androscoggin, St. John, and St. Croix; and it has several small lakes. Though an elevated tract, it cannot be called mountainous, and a great proportion of the lands are arable, and exceedingly fertile. Hops are the spontaneous growth of this country. The trees are white pine, spruce, maple, beech, white and grey oak, and yellow birch; these, as ship timber, boards, and every species of split lumber, are the principal exports of the country. The heat in summer is intense, and the cold in winter extreme; all the lakes and rivers are usually passable on ice, from Christmas till the middle of March. A portion of this state was under dispute between the United States, and England, but the territory was divided by treaty, between the contending parties. Augusta is its political capital, but is inferior in importance to Portland and other towns.

MAINE, or MAYS, an important river of central Germany, rising in Bavaria. It is formed by the union of the White and Red Maine, about 24 miles N.W. of Bayreuth. It falls into the Rhine, after a course of 230 miles, opposite Mentz. To it Frankfort owes all its consequence as a commercial city.

MAINE-ET-LOIRE, a department of France; bounded by the departments of Mayenne, Sarthe, and Indre-et-Loire; comprising an extent of 4000 square miles, with, in 1836, 477,270 inhabitants. The soil is in general fertile, producing corn, flax, hemp, fruit, and wine; and the manufacture of linen is carried on to a considerable extent. Angers is the capital.

MAINLAND, the principal of the Shetland isles, is 60 miles long, and from 6 to 18 broad, and is divided into eight parochial districts. The face of the country exhibits a prospect of black, craggy mountains, and marshy plains, interspersed with some verdant spots, which appear smooth and fertile. The mountains abound with various kinds of game; the lofty cliffs, impending over the sea, are the haunts of eagles, falcons, and ravens; the deep caverns underneath shelter seals and otters; and to the winding bays resort the swans, geese, scaris, and other aquatic birds. The seas abound with fish, such as the herring, cod, turbot, and haddock, lobsters, oysters, mussels, &c., are also plentiful; while the rivulets and lakes abound with salmon, trout, &c. The hills are covered with sheep of a small breed, and of a shaggy appearance; but their fleece is very soft, and extremely fine. Their horses are of a diminutive size, but remarkably strong and handsome, and are well known by the name of shelties. There is an immense store of peat, but no coal. They have some manufactures of linen and woollen cloth, but their chief employment is derived from the fisheries. Lerwick is the capital.

MAINLAND, the principal of the Orkney islands. See POMONA.

MAINTENON, a town of France, department of Eure-et-Loire; seated between two mountains; on the river Eure; 11 miles N. by E. of Chartres.

MAIRE, Lo, a strait of South America; between Tierra del Fuego and Staten Land; about 15 miles long, and as many broad.

MAITLAND, a town of New South Wales of considerable importance, about 4 miles from the navigable head of the river Hunter, and 120 miles from Sydney, with which city a constant communication is kept up by steam vessels. It is known as East and West Maitland: the former being the site selected by government, and the latter chosen on the banks of the Hunter by the early settlers. East Maitland contains a Protestant church, Catholic chapel, and court house; also a branch of the Bank of Australasia. In West Maitland there is a Protestant church, a Scotch kirk, and a Wesleyan meeting-house; also a branch of the Commercial Bank of Sydney. There are several good inns.

MALIKANT ST., a town of France; department of Deux Sevres; with a trade in corn, and manufactures of woollen stuffs, &c. It is seated on the Sevre Niortoise; 36 miles S.W. of Poitiers.

MAJORCA, the principal of the Balearic isles; 40 miles long, and 35 broad; situate in the Mediterranean sea, between Ivica and Minorca. The whole coast is lined with strong towers. The surface is extremely uneven, and is divided by a range of mountains, the highest of which is 5114 feet. The climate is exceedingly mild and salubrious. Agriculture is very rude and debased, but olives, wine, saffron, and cattle, are largely produced. The foreign trade of the island is considerable. It has only two important towns, and 28 villages. The roads have been considerably improved within the last few years. Area, 1340 square miles. Pop. 181,900. Palma is the capital.

MAKAREV, a town of Russia, in the government of Niznei Novogorod; situate on the Volga; 24 miles E.N.E. of Niznei Novogorod.

MAKARIEF, or MAKAREV, a town of Russia; in the government of Kostroma. It is seated on the river Unza; 140 miles E. of Kostroma. Long. 44. 14. E. lat. 58. 50. N.

MALABAR, a maritime province of Hindostan; lying between 10. and 13. N. lat.; now under the dominion of the British. The term is usually applied to the whole W. coast between Cape Comorin and Bombay, but strictly speaking it only extends as far N. as lat. 12. 30. or to where the Malabar language is spoken. It consists either of flat land washed by the sea, or of different ranges of hills, extending to the foot of the mountains; and it is intersected by a number of mountain streams. Its chief produce is timber, sandal-wood, cocoa-nut, coir, and black pepper. Its principal towns are Calicut, Tellicherry, and Cananore. The area of the province is estimated at 6262 square miles, and the population in 1836,7, consisted of 844,186 Hindoos, 282,027 Mohammedans, and 14,403 Roman Catholics; altogether, 1,140,916.

MALACCA, or MALAYA, an extensive country of India, beyond the Ganges; bounded on the N. by Siam, E. by the ocean, and S.W. by the strait of Malacca, which separates it from Sumatra. It is a peninsula lying between 1. and 8. N. lat. and 98. and 104. E. long.; and to the N. it has the kingdom of Siam, and is surrounded by the sea on all other sides. It is subdivided into several native states, and also contains the British provinces of Malacca and Nanning, pop. 37,706; and the Wellesley province, pop. 46,880. The internal native states contains a pop. of 36,680, and those on the coasts 253,000; the total pop. being 84,586. The Malay peninsula produces tin, gold and iron; tin being its chief article of export, and is very excellent. Its climate is remarkably moist, and hence the vegetation is prolific. Timber, gums, and spices are therefore produced; and the new gum, gutta percha, promises to be a considerable article of export. The chief towns are Malacca and Singapore. The Malays are rather below the middle stature; their limbs well shaped, their complexion tawny, their eyes large, and their hair long, black, and shining. They are fond of navigation, war, plunder, emigration, adventures, and gallantry; talk incessantly of their honour and bravery, and speak the softest language of Asia; yet they are deemed the most treacherous and ferocious people on the face of the globe. The government is vested in a rajah, or sultan, with a great number of chiefs under him, who generally pay very little regard to his authority. Their religion is a mixture of Mohammedism and Paganism. The inland parts are possessed by a savage and barbarous people.

MALACCA, the capital of the British colony, situate on the western coast of the Malay peninsula. It stands on the Malacca river, which divides it into two parts. On its left bank are several remains of the date of the Portuguese domination. The principal public institution is the Anglo-Chinese college founded in 1818. Since the establishment of Penang and Singapore, the trade of Malacca has greatly declined, and is now very limited. Pop. in 1832, 12,120, including 4000 Chinese and 2000 Europeans. The Portuguese had a factory here, which was taken from them by the Dutch, in 1640; it was subjected to the English in 1795, restored to the Dutch in 1818, but is now under the authority of Great Britain. It is seated on the strait of its name; 480 miles S.E. of Achen. Long. 102. 12. E. lat. 2. 14. N.

MALAGA, a seaport and city of Spain, in Granada, with a good harbour, capable of containing 400 merchant vessels, and 20 sail of the line. The cathedral is a stupendous pile, begun by Philip II. while married to Mary of England, and their united arms are over the gate. The inhabitants are about 50,000, who have some trade in raisins and excellent wines, and manufactures of silks, velvets, soap, paper, &c. It may be the third or fourth city of Spain. Malaga was taken by the French, in 1810, and remained in their possession till 1812. It is seated on the Mediterranean; surrounded by hills; 55 miles W.S.W. of Granada. Long. 4. 25. W. lat. 36. 43. N.

MALAHIDE, a town and bay of Ireland, in the county of Dublin, famous for its oysters, 6 miles from the capital. In the vicinity is Malahide castle, the residence of the Talbot family.

MALAMBITO, a town of S. America, in the province of Cartagena, about 60 miles E.

of Carthage, on the W. side of the river Magdalena.

MALANOCOCCO, a small island and town of Austrian Italy, 5 miles S. of Venice.

MALATIA, a town of Asia Minor, on the site of the ancient Melitene, once the capital of Armenia Minor; seated 15 miles W. of the Euphrates, and 90 W.N.W. of Diarbekir. Long. 37. 50. E. lat. 37. 30. N.

MALAWULLY, or MALAVILLY, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a large mud fort, separated into two parts by a transverse wall. Here is a fruit-garden of great extent, planted by the late sultans. Tippoo Sultan was defeated here by General Harris, in 1799. It is 35 miles E. of Srirangapatam.

MALCHIN, a town in Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin; seated on the river Peene, where it forms the lake Camrow; 22 miles E. of Gustrow.

MALCHO, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, between the lakes Culpa and Plan; 23 miles S.S.E. of Gustrow.

MALDEGHEM, a town of Belgium, province of East Flanders. Pop. 4350. It is 10 miles E. of Bruges.

MALDA, a town of Bengal, now decayed, on the N.E. side of the Ganges. Long. 88. 4. lat. 25. 3. N.

MALDEX, a town of Middlesex county, Massachusetts, 4 miles N. of Boston. It is connected with Charlestown by a bridge over Mystic river, built in 1787.

MALDIVES, or MALDEEVE, a cluster of small islands in the Indian ocean; lying S.W. of Cape Comorin, extending from the equinoctial line to 8. N. lat. and situated between 72. and 74. E. long. They consist of numerous coralline reefs of an oval form, usually encircling lakes in which are small islands. They are divided into 17 atollons, or provinces, each having its separate governor and its distinct branch of industry, the brewers residing in one, the goldsmiths in another, &c. The inhabitants appear to be a mixture of Arabs and Hindoos from Malabar. They supply ships with sails and cordage, coconuts, oil, and honey, dry fish, tortoise-shell, and especially cowries.

MALDON, a borough in Essex, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable trade, chiefly in corn, salt, coal, iron, deals, and wine. It has two parish churches, a free school, a library, and a town-hall; and returns two members to parliament. Vessels of moderate burden come up to the town, but large ships are obliged to unload at a distance below, in Blackwater bay. The custom of Borough English, by which the youngest son succeeds to the burghage tenure, is kept up here. It is seated on an eminence, on the river Blackwater, 8 miles E. of Chelmsford, and 37. N.E. of London.

MALDONADO, a town of Banda Oriental, in S. America, with a harbour sheltered by a small island of its name: seated near the N.

entrance of the Plata. Long. 55. 36. W. lat. 34. 50. S.

MALEMNA, a seaport on the coast of Loango, Western Africa, 50 miles S. of Loango.

MALE, the principal of the Maldivé islands, and the residence of the prince. Long. 73. 10. E. lat. 6. 20. N.

MALESHERBES, a town of France, department of Loiret; seated on the Essone, 35 miles N.E. of Orleans. Pop. 1150.

MALESTRAIT, a town of France, department of Morbihan; seated on the Ouse, 19 miles E.N.E. of Vannes.

MALHAM, a village in W. Yorkshire, surrounded on every side by mountains and rising grounds, which abound in natural curiosities; and among them, on a high moor, is a circular lake, about a mile in diameter, which is the source of the river Aire, 6 miles E. of Settle, and 233 from London.

MALINES. See MECHLIN.

MALIVAGONGA, a river of Ceylon, which rises among the hills to the S.E. of Candy, nearly encompasses that city, and, after many windings among the mountains, enters the sea at Trincomalee.

MALICOLLO, one of the largest of the New Hebrides, in the South Pacific, extending 20 leagues from N.W. to S.E. The inland mountains are very high, and clad with forests; but the soil is rich and fertile, producing coconuts, bread-fruit, bananas, sugar-canes, yams, eddoes, turmeric, oranges, &c. Hogs and common poultry are the domestic animals. The inhabitants appear to be a different race from those of the Friendly and Society islands. In many particulars they seem to correspond with the natives of New Guinea, particularly in their black colour and woolly hair. They go almost naked, are of a slender make, have lively but very irregular features, and tie a rope fast round their belly. At the S. end of the island is a port, named Sandwich harbour. Long. 167. 53. E. lat. 16. 25. S.

MALLING, WEST, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday; 6 miles W. of Maidstone, and 29 E. by S. of London.

MALLOW, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with considerable linen manufactures, and a fine spring of tepid water. It is seated on the Blackwater, 17 miles N. by W. of Cork. It returns one member to parliament.

MALMEDY, a town of the Prussian province of Lower Rhine, government of Aix-la-Chapelle; seated on the Recht. It has a noble church and some mineral springs; 20 miles S. of Aix-la-Chapelle. Pop. in 1838, 4212.

MALMÖ, a seaport of Sweden, government of Malmöhus, with a large harbour and a strong citadel. It has manufactures of woolen, and a considerable trade; seated on the Sound, 18 miles E. by S. of Copenhagen. Pop. in 1836, 8763. Long. 13. 7. E. lat. 55. 36. N.

MALMOHUS, a government of Sweden, including a great part of the ancient Schonen.

or Scania. It lies along the Sound and the Baltic, and comprises an area of 1380 square miles, with 137,000 inhabitants.

MALMSBURY, a borough in Wiltshire, with a market on Saturday, and a woollen manufacture. Its castle is demolished, but there are some remains of its once celebrated abbey. It is seated on a hill, almost surrounded by the Avon, over which it has six bridges; 26 miles E. by N. of Bristol, and 96 W. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

MALO, Sr., a seaport of France, department of Ille-et-Vilaine, with a strong castle. It has a large harbour, difficult of access, on account of the rocks that surround it, a floating dock or harbour, recently constructed, and is a trading place of great importance. It was bombarded by the English, in 1693, but without success. In 1758 they landed in Cancalle Bay, went to the harbour by land, and burnt above 109 ships. St. Malo is seated on an island, united to the mainland by a causeway; 44 miles N.N.W. of Rennes. Pop. in 1836, 9409. Long. 2. 1. W. lat. 48. 39. N.

MALONE, a town of the state of New York, on the Salmon river, in a romantic situation. Iron ore is found in the vicinity. Pop. 3229, 214 miles N. by W. of Albany.

MALPAS, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Wednesday. It has a handsome church, three chapels of ease, an hospital, a grammar school, a national school, and some dissenters' meeting-houses. Its chief importance is its market for cheese. It is seated on a high bill, near the river Dee; 15 miles S.E. of Chester, and 165 N.W. of London.

MALPLAQUET, a village of France, in the department du Nord, famous for a victory gained over the French by the Duke of Marlborough, in 1709. It is 9 miles S. E. of Mons.

MALTA, an island in the Mediterranean, between Africa and Sicily; 17 miles long, and 9 broad; formerly reckoned a part of Africa, but now belonging to Europe. It belongs to great Britain, and is a crown colony. It is of an irregular oval form, and the surface is an inclined plain, sloping from the N.E. to the S.W. The substratum is a soft calcareous sandstone, which is broken up, and crumbles into good soil. Cultivation is diligently pursued: cotton is the chief produce; corn, oranges, and figs are grown. It has no rivers or lakes, and the climate is unusually hot, especially during the summer. The central position of Malta, its excellent port, and great military strength render it of great commercial importance, and it has lately become the centre of a very extensive system of steam-packet service. The inhabitants are very swarthy, and speak a language compounded of the Arabic and Italian, they are laborious and frugal, and make excellent seamen, and have a high moral character. The area of Malta is considered as 96 sq. miles, and is peopled (1838) with 108,000 inhabitants, including 4500 British; being 1125 to the sq. mile. The neighbouring island of Gozzo contains 16,534 inhabitants. After the taking of Rhodes, the emperor Charles V. gave this island to the grand-master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem. It was attacked, in 1566, by the Turks, who were obliged to abandon the enterprise with the loss of 30,000 men. It was taken by Bonaparte in the outset of his expedition to Egypt, on the 12th of June, 1793. It was soon afterwards taken by the British; was stipulated to be restored to the knights at the peace of Amiens, but retained in consequence of new aggressions from France. In 1803 the war recommenced between the two nations, and the treaty of Paris, in 1814, confirmed the possession of it to Great Britain. Malta is extremely well fortified, the ditches, of a vast size, are all cut out of the solid rock, and extend many miles. Valetta is the capital.

MALTON, New, a borough in N. Yorkshire, returning one member to parliament; with a market on Tuesday and Saturday, and a considerable trade in malt, leather, coals, corn, butter, &c. Here are two churches, three dissenting meeting-houses, a free school, and a national school. It is seated on the Derwent, over which is a stone bridge to the village of Old Malton; 48 miles N.E. of York, and 214 N. by W. of London.

MALVERN, GREAT and LITTLE, two villages in Worcestershire. The former is 8 miles W. by S. of Worcester, and had once an abbey, of which nothing remains but the gateway of the abbey, and the nave of the church, now parochial; the latter is seated in a cavity of the Malvern hills, 3 miles from Great Malvern. Between Great and Little Malvern are two celebrated chalybeate springs, the chief of which is St. Anne's Well.

MALVERN HILLS, a range of hills in the counties of Worcester and Hereford, extending about 9 miles in length, and from 1 to 2 in breadth. They appear to be of limestone and quartz, and the highest point is 1444 feet above the surface of the Severn.

MALWAH, a province of Hindostan; bounded N. by the provinces of Agimere and Agra, E. by Allahabad and Gunwanch, S. by Khandeish and Berar, and W. by Agimere and Guzerat. It is 250 miles in length, by 150 in breadth, and is one of the most extensive, elevated, and diversified tracts in Hindostan. It raises considerable quantities of wheat; and its opium and tobacco are the best in Hindostan. Malwah is the chief seat of the Bheer race, and is divided among the dominions of native princes. Till lately, the whole territory belonged to the Mahrattas.

MALZIEU, a town of France; in the department of Lozere, seated on the Truyere; 12 miles N.N.E. of Mende.

MAMARS, a town of France, lately much improved, in the department of Sarthe, seated on the Dive; 14 miles W. of Bellesme.

MAN, an island in the Irish sea, 30 miles long, and 12 broad. It contains 18 parishes, under the jurisdiction of a bishop, called the bishop of Sodor and Man, who is sole baron of the Isle, and possesses other important privileges, but has no seat in the British parliament. The air is healthy, and the soil produces more corn than is sufficient to maintain the inhabitants, who are a mixture of English, Scotch, and Irish. The language is a dialect of the Celtic, called Manx. The commodities of the island are wool, hides, butter, tallow, black marble, slate, limestone, lead, and iron. Some manufactures of coarse hats, cotton goods, and linen cloth, are carried on in different parts; but its principal trade arises from the herring fishery. The duke of Athol was formerly lord of this island, the sovereignty of which he sold, in 1765, to the Crown. The chief towns are Castletown, Douglas, Peele, Ruthin, and Ramsay. It is 18 miles S. of Scotland, 40 N. of Wales, 30 W. of England, and 26 E. of Ireland.

MANAAR, a small island in the Indian Ocean; on the N.W. side of Ceylon. From this island a bank of sand, called Adam's Bridge, runs over to the continent of Hindostan, which can be passed only by boats. The sea to the S. of this, between the continent and the island of Ceylon, is called the Gulf of Manaar. The Portuguese obtained possession of the island in 1563; but it was taken by the Dutch, in 1638, and in 1795 by the English. Long. 79. 3. E. lat. 9. 6. N.

MANADU, a Dutch settlement, on the N.E. point of the island of Celebes, in the Asiatic archipelago. This settlement has never been made known to the rest of the world till visited in 1844 by Captain Belcher. It is in the bight of a deep bay, and about 9 miles from Manado Tua or Old Manado, which was abandoned, probably on account of earthquakes; the whole of this part of the peninsula being volcanic, and some portions in activity. Manado is in lat. 130. 23. N. long. 124. 43. E.

MANAPAR, a town of Hindostan, district of Tinnevely; situate on a point of land projecting into the gulf of Manaar; 40 miles S.E. of Palamcotto. Long. 78. 17. E. lat. 8. 39. N.—Also a town in the province of Tanjore. Long. 78. 30. E. lat. 16. 39. N.

MANBONA, a town of Eastern Africa; situated on the sea coast, 60 miles S. of Sofala. Long. 35. 39. E. lat. 21. 15. S.

MANCHESTER, a village in Warwickshire, near Atherstone. It was a Roman station, and here several coins have been dug up; seated on an eminence near the Anker; 106 miles from London.

MANCHA, LA, a territory of Spain, lying S. of Old Castile, and N. of Andalusia. It is divided into Upper and Lower, and is nearly surrounded by mountains, producing antimony, vermilion, and mercury. It is chiefly a table land, elevated at a mean height of 2000 feet above the level of the sea. Although apparently a plain, it is very undulating; in the dips, occasionally, a streamlet creates a partial verdure and fertility; water is the great want. Denuded of trees, it is exposed to the cutting blasts of winter, and scorched by the calcining heat of summer. There is a total want of any thing to interest either in man or his works, or the nature with which he is surrounded. The inhabitants have neither art nor commerce; the fields lie desolate and uncultivated, while the mud-built villages are the abodes of half starved, ill-clothed labourers. They are, indeed, honest and hard-working, when there is any one to employ them; their affections are better developed than their reason. Area, 7500 square miles. Pop. scanty, 250,000. It was here that Cervantes made his hero, Don Quixote, perform his chief exploits. The capital is Ciudad Real.

MANCHE, a department of France, including the W. part of Normandy, and comprising about 2500 square miles, and in 1836, 594,382 inhabitants. It is almost surrounded by the English Channel. St. Lo is the capital, but Cherbourg is the largest town.

MANCHESTER, a city and borough of Lancashire, with markets on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday; seated between the rivers Irk and Irwell. It returns two members to parliament. It is a place of great antiquity, and has attained greater opulence than almost any of the trading towns in England. It has long been noted for various branches of the linen, silk, and cotton manufactures, and is now principally conspicuous as the centre of the cotton trade. The labours of a very populous neighbourhood are collected at Manchester, whence they are sent to London, Liverpool, India, &c. These consist of a great variety of cotton and mixed goods, fitted for all sorts of markets, both at home and abroad, spreading over a great part of Europe, America, and the coast of Guinea. Manufactures of tapes and other small wares, of silk goods, and of hats, are also carried on at Manchester. Its chief ornaments are the college, the exchange, the collegiate church, another large church, and a spacious marketplace. The churches and chapels of the Establishment, several of which are recent erections, are seventy in number. The Bishop's see was created in 1848, and at the same time the collegiate church, founded in the 15th century, was made a cathedral. Here are also upwards of forty places of worship for different sects of dissenters, and three for Roman Catholics. The most important of the charitable institutions are the Manchester General Infirmary and Dispensary, the Blind Asylum, the Fever Hospital, the Lying-in-Hospital, the Strangers' Friend Society, the Samaritan Society, the Lock Hospital, the Female Penitentiary, and the School for the Deaf and Dumb, instituted in 1823. Of the institutions for the promotion of literature and science, the principal are the Literary and Philosophical Society, the Society for the promotion of Natural History, and the Royal Manchester Institution. The Mechanics' Institute is in a very flourishing state; and there are several valuable libraries, the free and the college libraries, and the Portico. Manchester is governed by a corporation, consisting of a Mayor, Court of Aldermen, &c., and has several courts of law. It has risen to its present consequence entirely by its manufactures. By the Irwell it has a communication with the Mersey, and all the late various extensions of inland navigation; and, by means of the various railways, it communicates with all parts of the kingdom. It is 26 miles E. by N. of Liverpool, and 186 N.N.W. of London.

MANCHESTER, a town of Vermont, in Bennington county; situated on Button river, which flows into the Hudson, above Saratoga. It is 22 miles N. of Bennington, and 35 S. of Rutland. There are many other townships and villages of this name in the United States.

MANDAL, a town of Norway, capital of a province in the government of Bergen; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name; 60 miles W.S.W. of Christiansand. Long. 7. 42. E. lat. 58. 2. N.

MANDAN, a fort and Indian village of North America, on the Missouri; where Captains Lewis and Clarke had their winter encampment, when on their expedition to the Missouri. Long. 100. 50. W. lat. 47. 20. N. The Mandan tribe is now extinct.

MANDAN, a district of the western territory of the United States, between the British possessions on the N., Wisconsin on the E., the Indian or Western territory and the Platte river on the S., and the rocky mountains separating it from Oregon on the W. It contains 300,000 square miles; and has been but imperfectly explored. It consists chiefly of an elevated table land, or vast prairies on which large herds of the bison, elk, or deer, range. The principal rivers are the Missouri and Yellow Stone. The most interesting feature of the region is the capacity it affords for a good road across the Rocky mountains. The principal aboriginal tribes who still inhabit the country, are the Pawnees, Picarees, Crows, Blackfeet, &c. They own horses in abundance. The Mandans became extinct as a tribe, as above stated, from the small pox in 1837, but the name has been applied to perpetuate their memory.

MANDAR, a district of the island of Celebes, on the W. and N. coast; bounded W. by the Strait of Macassar, and E. by a tract of desert mountains.

MANDAVEE, a seaport town of Hindostan, in the province of Catch, at the entrance of the gulf of that name. It is the centre of a considerable commerce with India, and the neighbouring states of Sinde and the Indus; 35 miles S.S.W. of Bhoj. Pop. 35,000.

MANDINGO, a country in the W. part of Negroland, at the sources of the rivers Niger and Senegal. Not only the inhabitants of this state, but the bulk of the people in many other districts in the western part of Africa, are called Mandingoes, probably from having originally emigrated from this country. They are of a mild, sociable, and obliging disposition: the men are above the middle size, well-shaped, strong and capable of enduring great labour; the women are good-natured, sprightly, and agreeable. The dress of both sexes is composed of cotton cloth, of their own manufacture. Polygamy is common, but the women are not under that restraint which prevails in many other countries. Most of the towns contain a mosque, where public prayers are offered; and a bentang, or coffee-house, where public business is transacted. The private houses are built of mud, with a conical bamboo roof, thatched with grass. The language of the Mandingoes is said to be copious and refined, and is generally understood in all the regions of Western Africa.

MANDSHOOS, or MANTCHOOS, a branch of the Mongul Tartars, whose ancestors conquered China in the thirteenth century, but were expelled by the Chinese, in 1363. They inhabit the three provinces of Eastern Tartary, and retain the customs they brought from China; of their country but very little is known to Europeans.

MANDURIA, a straggling, but well built town of the Neapolitan dominions, S. Italy, in the province of Otranto. In its vicinity are many Roman remains, and a remarkable well; 22 miles E.S.E. of Taronto. Pop. about 5000.

MANFREDONIA, a seaport of Naples, in Capitanata; with a castle and good harbour. All sorts of vegetables are in abundance, and most of the corn exported from the province is shipped here. It is very regular and clean; and is seated on a gulf of the same name; 30 miles E.N.E. of Lucera. Pop. 5000. Long. 15. 56. E. lat. 41. 33. N.

MANGALORE, a town of Hindostan; in the province of Canara; seated between the two arms of a fine lake of salt water, each of which receives a river from the Gauts; but the bar at the entrance into this harbour will not admit vessels drawing more than ten feet. It is a place of great trade: the principal exports are rice, betel-nut, black pepper, sandalwood, (from the country above the Gauts,) cinnamon, and turmeric. Here are the ruins of a fort which Tippoo Sultan ordered to be demolished in 1784. In this town a treaty of peace was signed between Tippoo and the English, in 1784; in 1799 it came into the hands of the British, and is now the residence of the judge, collector, &c., of South Canara. Pop. 30,000. It is 130 miles N.N.W. of Calicut, and 190 S.S.E. of Goa. Long. 75. 4. E. lat. 12. 50. N.

MANGEA, an island in the South Pacific, 5 leagues in circumference. In the interior parts it rises into small hills; and Captain Cook, by whom it was discovered in 1777, represents it as a fine island; but he did not find a landing-place. Long. 158. 16. W. lat. 21. 27. S.

Germany in the grand Duchy of Baden, capital of the Lower circle of the Rhine, at the junction of the Neckar with the Rhine. The streets are spacious, straight, and well paved; the houses elegant, and uniform. The palace is a magnificent structure, with a cabinet of natural curiosities and a gallery of pictures. The inhabitants in 1808, were computed at 20,600. Mannheim was frequently taken and re-taken by the French and Austrians, in the late wars: and was finally ceded to Baden in 1802. It is 17 miles N. of Spire, and 42 S. of Frankfort. Long. 8. 28. E. lat. 49. 29. N.

MANICA, an inland kingdom in the S. E. part of Africa; bounded on the N. by Mocaranga, E. by Sofala and Sabia, and S. and W. by unknown regions. It is said to abound with mines of gold, and has a river and capital of the same name; but it is little known to the Europeans.

MANICKDURG, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in the province of Berar; 5 miles S. E. of Chanda.

MANICKPATAM, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Orissa; 12 miles S.W. of Juggeriatt.

MANICKPORE, a town of Hindostan; capital of a district of the same name in the province of Allahabad; seated on the Ganges, in lat. 19. 40. N. long. 85. 36. E.

MANILLA, or MANILA, the capital of the island of Luzon, as well as of the other Philippine islands, and the see of an archbishop, who is commonly the Spanish viceroy. It is well fortified, and defended by the castle of St. Philip. Manilla comprises the city proper, and ten suburbs. The former is on the S. bank of the Passig, across which is a stone bridge, and is about 2 miles in circuit, containing about 10,000 or 12,000 inhabitants. It is regularly laid out, and is handsome; and also contains most of the public edifices, the residence of the Spanish captain-general, the public offices, and the new aduana or custom-house. There are a vast number of churches and ecclesiastical establishments. The tobacco of the Philippines is excellent, and the royal cigar manufactory in Manilla employs 350 men, and 2000 women. Manilla is the only port in the Spanish Philippines with which Spanish vessels from Europe, or foreign vessels from any quarter, are allowed to trade. The population is variously estimated at from 100,000 to 150,000, including 7000 ecclesiastics. Most of the public structures are built of wood, on account of the frequent earthquakes, by one of which, in 1617, a mountain was levelled; and, in 1625, a third part of the city was overthrown by another, when 3000 persons perished. This city is seated near the lake Bahía, on the E. side of a bay, on the S.W. coast. The bay is a circular basin, 10 leagues in diameter, and great part of it land-locked; but the port peculiar to the city, called Cavite, lies 9 miles to the S.W. On account of the pure and mild temperature of the air, it is deemed the most healthy of all the European settlements in the east. In 1762, the English took this city by storm, but suffered the archbishop to ransom it for about 1,000,000*l.* sterling, but great part of the ransom never was paid. Long. 120. 53. E. lat. 14. 36. N.

MANNINGTREE, a town in Essex, with a market on Thursday. The principal imports are deals, corn, coal, and iron. It is seated on a branch of the Stour, called Manningtree-water, and is on the Eastern Counties railway; 11 miles W. of Harwich, and 60 N.E. of London.

MANNHARTSBERG, a mountain chain of Austria, beginning at the frontier of Moravia, and terminating at the Danube. The products are corn, saffron, and wine. The chief towns are Crems and Kloster-Neuberg.

MANOSQUE, a town of France, in the department of Lower Alps, near the Duranee, with a castle; 23 m. N.E. of Aix. Pop. 5400.

MANPURRY, a town and fort of Hindostan, in the district of Doonab, seated on Issah; 54 miles E. of Agra.

MANRESA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia; with a castle, and manufactures of silk, hats, gunpowder, &c.; seated at the conflux of the Cardonero with the Llobregat; 20 miles N.W. of Barcelona. It was fired by Marshal Macdonald in 1811, and the grossest enormities perpetrated, which the Catalan knife avenged, and the blackened ruins yet remain a silent but crying record of the past, and a warning for the future. Pop. 13,000.

MANS, LE, a town of France, capital of the department of Sarthe, and the see of a bishop. It contained in 1836, 19,103 inhabitants, and was formerly much more populous. Its cathedral and churches are remarkable. It has excellent poultry, and its wax and stuffs are famous. It is seated on a high hill, near the Sarthe; 20 miles S. of Alençon, and 75 W. by N. of Orleans. Long. 0. 9. E. lat. 48. 0. N.

MANSAROAR, a lake of Thibet, from which the southernmost head of the Ganges was long supposed to issue. It was about 115 miles in circumference, and lies about 79. E. long. and 34. N. lat.

MANSFIELD, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseberg; with a decayed castle on a high rock; seated on the Thalbach, 8 miles N.N.W. of Eisleben.

MANSFIELD, a town in Nottinghamshire, with a market on Thursday; a trade in corn and malt, and lately of building stone, and manufactures of lace, hosiery, and cotton-spinning. Here are a commodious church, five meeting-houses, a grammar-school, two charity schools, and twelve almshouses. Coins of several Roman emperors have been dug up near this town, and the relic recently discovered afford indisputable proof that the Romans had a station in the vicinity. It communicates with Nottingham by a railway 17½ miles in length. It is seated on the edge of the forest of Sherwood, 14 miles N.

of Nottingham, and 138 N. by W. of London.

MANSFIELD, a town of Tolland county, Connecticut. Population, 2276.—There are several inconsiderable townships of this name in the United States.

MANSILLA, a town of Spain, province of Leon; 10 miles S.S.E. of Leon.

MANSORA, a town in the kingdom of Fez, seated near the mouth of the Guir; 60 miles W. of Mequinez.

MANSOURA, a town of Lower Egypt, with a considerable trade in rice and sal-ammuniac; built by the Saracens, during the crusades, as a bulwark against the Christians. It is seated on the E. side of the Nile; 24 m. S.S.W. of Damietta, and 60 N. of Cairo.

MANTES, a town of France; department of Seine-et-Oise, with a bridge over the Seine, the great arch of which is 120 feet wide. The wines of its vicinity are famous. It is 31 miles N.W. of Paris. Pop. 4300.

MANTUA, a province or delegation of Austrian Italy, contiguous to the duchies of Parma and Modena; fertile in corn, flax, fruits, and excellent wine. It was governed by the Gonzago family, with the title of duke, till Charles IV., taking part with the French in the dispute relating to the succession of Spain, was put under the ban of the empire, and died in 1708. Having no heirs, the House of Austria kept possession till 1800, when the French obtained it after the battle of Marengo; but the Austrians obtained possession of it again in 1814.

MANTUA, a city of Austrian Italy; capital of the above province. It is seated on an island in the middle of a lake, 20 miles in circumference, and 2 broad, formed by the Mincio, and so very strong by situation, as well as by art, that it is one of the most considerable fortresses in Europe. The only way into this city is by means of two moles or bridges, each of which is defended by a fort and other works. The city is well built, and most of the streets are spacious, regular, and well paved. In the cathedral are paintings by the most celebrated masters; the church of St. Anthony is famous for relics; and the Franciscan church is one of the most elegant of that order in Italy. Here are many other churches, numerous convents, a synagogue for the Jews, who live in a distinct quarter, a university, the ancient ducal palace, with its gallery of paintings, &c. Virgil was born at a village near this city. Mantua surrendered to the French in 1797 (after a siege of eight months), was taken by the Austrian and Russian army in 1799; again ceded to France in 1801, and finally delivered up to the Austrians in 1814. It is 35 miles N.E. of Parma, and 70 E.S.E. of Milan. Pop. in 1837, 26,865. It has a branch to the railway from Venice to Milan, &c.

MANZANARES, a town of Spain, in the district of La Mancha, province of New Castile, on a river of the same name; 21 miles from Ciudad Real. Its inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the culture of saffron. Pop. 9100. MAOUNA, one of the Navigator's islands, in the S. Pacific.—Here, in 1787, Perouse met with his first fatal accident; Captain Langle Lemanon, the naturalist, and nine sailors, being massacred by the natives. Long. 169. O. W. lat. 14. 19. S.

MARACAIBO, a province of South America; now forming part of the Venezuelan province of the Colombian republic, and extending N. to the Caribbean sea. The soil is in many places exceedingly fertile, and the climate, although excessively hot, is not on the whole unhealthy.

MARACAIBO, the capital of the above province; with a harbour which can only admit small vessels, owing to the obstruction of a sand-bar. It has a mean appearance, some of the houses being covered with tiles, others with reeds. The climate is hot, and the storms of thunder and lightning that frequently occur, are accompanied with tremendous rains. Population in 1801, and perhaps now, 24,000. It is seated on the outlet of the lake of its name; 60 miles W.S.W. of Venezuela, and 420 W. of Caracas. Long. 71. 46. W. lat. 10. 30. N.

MARACAIBO, LAGOON OR LAKE, a lake of the Caracas; in the province of Venezuela. It is 150 miles long, and 90 where broadest, with a circumference of 450; and is navigable for vessels of the greatest burden. The banks are sterile, and the air insalubrious; but the water is fresh, except in stormy weather, when the waters of the sea are forced into it. It communicates with the gulf of Venezuela by a strait, which is defended by strong forts, and has several Spanish towns seated on its borders.

MARACAY, or MORACAO, a town of the republic of Venezuela; in the neighbourhood of which are plantations of cotton, indigo, coffee, corn, &c.; seated on the E. side of the lake Tacarigua. Pop. 10,000.

MARAGA, a well-built city of Persia, province of Azerbaijan; with a spacious bazaar, a glass manufactory, and a handsome public bath; situated at the extremity of a well cultivated plain, opening to the lake of Urumea, from which it is distant 10 or 12 miles, and 68 miles N. of Tabreez. Pop. 15,000. Long. 46. 25. E. lat. 37. 20. N.

MARANHAM, a northern province of Brazil, which comprehends a fertile and populous island of the same name, 112 miles in circumference. The borders of its numerous rivers, of which the Itapicuru is the chief, are fruitful in cotton and rice, and have prospered when compared with other ports. The early history of the province is a record of misfortunes, cruelties, and nearly at all times of the slave trade. The population was estimated in 1844 as 105,119 free, and 111,905 slaves, total, 217,024. The French settled here in 1812; but they were soon expelled by the Portuguese. St. Luis de Maranham is the chief town.

MARANHAM, SAN LUIS DE, a city of the Brazilian empire, and capital of the foregoing province. It is better built than any other city in Brazil, and exhibits an air of neatness and enterprise not to be found elsewhere. It is clean, regularly built, divided into 2 parishes, has 13 churches, 3 monasteries, a public school, and 6 hospitals. It ranks as the fourth city of the empire. It stands on the N.W. point of the island of the same name, and has very considerable commerce in cotton, rice, and other articles, chiefly with England. Its pop. is estimated at 33,000. Lat 2. 31. S. long. 44. 16. W.

MARANON. See AMAZON.

MARANO, a seaport of Austrian Italy, in the province of Udina; seated on the Gulf of Venice, 27 miles S. by E. of Udina. Long. 13. 5. E. lat. 45. 52. N.

MARANS, a town of France, department of Lower Charente; with a brisk trade in salt, malt, corn, and meal; seated on the Sevre, in the midst of salt marshes; 12 miles N.N.E. of Rochelle.

MARANT, or AMARANT, a town of Persia, in the province of Azerbaijan, containing 2500 houses, each with a garden; situate near a river, and watered by canals. Cochineal is found in its neighbourhood. The inhabitants say that Noah was buried here. It is 50 miles N. of Thuris. Long. 47. 46. E. lat. 39. 7. N.

MARASA, a town of W. Africa, in Wangara, on the N. side of the Niger; 160 miles N.E. of Ghanra. Long. 17. 10. E. lat. 15. 50. N.

MARASCH, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Caramania; the capital of a sangiacate, and the see of a bishop. It is 180 miles E. by S. of Koniak. Long. 37. 25. E. lat. 37. 24. N.

MARATHON, a village of Livadia, in Greece; formerly a city, famous for the victory obtained by Miltiades, with 10,000 Athenians, over 500,000 Persians, B. C. 490. It is 20 miles N.N.E. of Athens.

MARAVI, a lake of Eastern Africa, behind Mozambique; reported to be about 40 miles in breadth, and of much greater length. At its S. extremity is a district with a town of the same name. Long. 33. 10. E. lat. 13. 10. S.

MARAZION, or MARKET JEW, a town in Cornwall, with a market on Saturday. The parish church of St. Hilary is about 2 miles distant, but the town has a chapel of ease, besides several meeting-houses for dissenters. It is seated on Mounts bay, 4 miles E. of Penzance, and 279 W. by S. of London.

MARBELLA, a town of Andalusia, seated at the mouth of the Rio Verde; with a harbour, defended by an old Moorish castle; 28 miles S.W. of Malaga. Pop. 4282.

MARBLEBEAD, a town of Massachusetts, in Essex county, with a harbour protected by a sea wall, and defended by a battery and citadel. It stands on a neck of land, in Massachusetts bay; 16 miles N.E. of Boston. Pop. 5575. Long. 70. 36. W. lat. 42. 36. N.

MARNEUF, a town of France, department of Eure; 12 miles N. of Conches.

MARBOZ, a town of France, department of Ain. It is 12 miles N. of Bourg. Pop. 2500.

MARNHOOK, a river in Shropshire, which joins the Severn below Bridgenorth.

MARBURG, a town of Germany, capital of that part of Upper Hesse which belongs to the elector of Hesse-Cassel. It has a fortified castle on the top of a mountain, a university, an academy, a Lutheran, a Calvinist, and a Catholic church, an hospital, two infirmaries, and an orphan-house. It was taken by the French in 1757; surrendered to the allies in 1759; and again taken by the French in 1760. It is seated on the Lahn; 47 miles S.W. of Cassel. Pop., including the suburb of Weidenhausen, 7700. Long. 8. 46. E. lat. 50. 48. N.

MAREOTIS LAKE, at the S. of Alexandria, Egypt. It was formed by the British, in their siege of that city, by cutting a communication between the canal and the present lake, and which is still open, and affords a considerable supply of water to the ancient lake, which had become almost dry.

MARETIMO, an island in the Mediterranean; on the W. coast of Sicily; 12 miles in circumference. It has a castle with a few farm-houses; and produces much honey. Long. 12. 15. E. lat. 38. 5. N.

MARGARITA, an island near the coast of Cumana, republic of Venezuela, S. America; about 40 miles long and 15 broad; discovered by Columbus in 1498. The continual verdure renders it pleasant; but it has no fresh water. The inhabitants are principally mulattres and the original natives. The pearl fishery was once prosecuted to a great extent; but in 1620 the Dutch landed and burned the town and castle, since which it has greatly declined. Its ports are Pampatar, Pueblo de la Mar, and Pueblo del Norte. Ascension is the capital. Long. 64. to 65. W. lat. 10. 56. N.

MARGATE, a town in Kent, on the isle of Thanet; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday, and a brisk trade in corn, coals, fish, timber, iron, tar, &c. It is a member of the port of Dover: and, owing to the great resort to it, for sea-bathing, for which its situation is well adapted, it has rapidly increased in population and wealth. The harbour has been greatly improved, and the town is protected from the inroads of the sea by a stone pier. It is situate on the side of a hill; 17 miles E.N.E. of Canterbury, and 71 E. by S. of London, and is the terminus of a branch of the South Eastern Railway. Long. 1. 22. E. lat. 51. 24. N.

MARKET BOSWORTH. See BOSWORTH.

MARKET; HARBOROUGH, ROSEN, DRAYTON.

MARLBOROUGH, a borough in Wiltshire; governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. Here King John had a castle, in which a Parliament was held in 1267; when the statute of Marlebridge, for suppressing riots, was enacted. The town contains two churches, several meeting-houses, a free grammar-school, a Lancasterian school, &c. It has declined since the opening of the Great Western Railway, which leaves it to the southward. It is seated on the Kennet; 26 miles N. of Salisbury, and 74 W. of London.

MARLBOROUGH, a town of Massachusetts, in Middlesex county; with a manufacture of Spanish brown, from a kind of loam found in the neighbourhood. It is 25 miles W. by S. of Boston. Pop. 2101.—Also the name of several townships of the United States.

MARLBOROUGH-FORT, an English factory, on the W. coast of the island of Sumatra; 9 miles E. of Bencoolen.

MARLBOROUGH, LOWER, a town of Maryland, in Calvert county, on the Patuxent; 24 miles S.E. of Washington.

MARLBOROUGH, UPPER, a town of Maryland, chief of Prince George county; situated on the Hatuvisit, a principal branch of the Patuxent; 15 miles E. of Washington.

MARLOW, GREAT, a borough in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of black silk lace, and paper. It sends two members to parliament. It is seated near the Thames, over which is a bridge into Berkshire; 17 miles N. of Aylesbury, and 31 W. of London.

MARMANDE, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, with a brisk trade in corn, wine, and brandy. It is seated on the Garonne, 35 miles S.E. of Bordeaux. Pop. in 1836, 4880. Long. 0. 15. E. lat. 44. 20. N.

MARMORA, or WHITE SEA, (the ancient Propontis,) an inland sea between Europe and Asia, which communicates with the Archipelago by the Strait of Gallipoli, or Hellespont, and with the Black sea by the Strait of Constantinople, (anc. Thracius Bosphorus.) It is 120 miles in length, and 60 in breadth.

MARMORICE, a seaport on the S.W. coast of Asia Minor, the harbour of which is one of the finest in the world, though the entrance is very narrow. Lat. 36. 52. N. long. 28. 31. E.

MARNE, a department of France, including part of the former province of Champagne, and the district of Brie. It takes its name from a river which rises near Langres, and falls into the Seine a little above Paris. Its chief produce is wine. The white wines, includes some of the finest champagne. Area, 3200 square miles. Pop. in 1836, 345,245. Chalons is the capital.

MARNE, HAUTE or UPPER, a department of France, including the S.E. part of the province of Champagne and Brie. It is fertile in parts, and produces considerable quantities of corn, and some indifferent wine. Area, 2560 square miles. Pop. in 1837, 244,823. Chaumont is the capital.

MARCO, a town of the Sardinian states, in the province of Oneglia, seated in a valley, 8 miles N.W. of Oneglia.

MAROS-VASASHELY, or SZEKELY-VASAR-

TELY, or NEUMARKT, a royal free town of Hungary in Transylvania, on the Muros. Though not handsome, it is an important place, and has a Protestant and Roman Catholic college, and is also the seat of the highest legal tribunal in Transylvania, called the royal table, and thus is the great law school of the country. It has also a fine public library of the Telekis, in a handsome building, 53 miles N.N.E. of Hermanstadt. Pop. 7000.

MARPLE, a manufacturing township in the parish of Stockport, Cheshire. It has two churches. Pop. (1851) 3,558.

MARQUESAS, five islands in the Pacific Ocean, named St. Christina, Magdalena, St. Dominica, St. Pedro, and Hood. The first four were discovered by Quiros, in 1595, the last by Cook, in 1774. St. Dominica is much the largest, about 48 miles in circuit. Captain Cook, in his second voyage, lay some time at Christina, in long. 139. 9. W. and lat. 9. 55. S. It is high and steep, but has many valleys, which widen towards the sea, and are covered with fine forests to the summits of the interior mountains. The products of these islands are bread-fruit, bananas, plantains, coco-nuts, scarlet beans, paper-mulberries, (of the bark of which their cloth is made,) casuarinas, with other tropical plants and trees. The inhabitants are well made, strong, and active; of a tawny complexion, but look almost black, by being punctured over the whole body. Their language, manner, customs, &c., very much resemble those of the Society islands. They have been colonized by the French.

MARSAL, a town of France, department of Meurthe, with considerable salt-works, seated on the Seille, in a marsh of difficult access, 17 miles E.S.E. of Nancy.

MARSALA, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, in the intendency of Trapani, built on the ruins of the ancient Lilybæum, at the most western part of the island, 45 miles W.S.W. of Palermo. Marsala has risen to its modern importance from its wine trade, established here in 1789 by the Messrs. Woodhouse, Englishmen, which, however, did not come much into repute till Lord Nelson ordered it to be supplied to the fleet in 1802. Its consumption is now very great. Long. 12. 25. E. lat. 37. 48. N. Pop. in 1831, 23,388.

MARSAQUIVER, a strong seaport of Algier, in the province of Mascara, seated on a rock, near a bay of the Mediterranean, 3 miles from Oran.

MARSCHE. See MORAW.

MARSEILLES, a flourishing seaport of France, capital of the department of Mouths of the Rhone. The inhabitants are computed at 185,000. It was so celebrated in the time of the Romans, that Cicero styled it the Athens of the Gauls, and Pliny called it the Mistress of Education. It is divided into the Old Town and the New. The former appears like an amphitheatre to the vessels which enter the port, but the houses are mean, and the streets dirty, narrow, and steep. In this part is the principal church, built by the Goths, on the ruins of the temple of Diana. The New Town is, in every respect, a perfect contrast to the Old, with which it has a communication by one of the finest streets imaginable. The other streets and squares, as well as the public buildings in general are very elegant. With respect to commerce, Marscilles has long been eminent; and it is now sometimes called Europe in Miniature, on account of the variety of dresses and languages. In the environs are nearly 5000 little country boxes of the citizens, called bastides. The port is a basin of an oval form, 3480 feet long, with 18 or 20 feet depth of water; but, unfortunately, it becomes the receptacle for all the filth of the city, from the sewers running into it. This is almost intolerable to strangers at times. A fine outer harbour has been formed at La Joliette. In 1649 the plague raged with great violence in Marscilles, and with still greater in 1720, when it carried off 50,000 of the inhabitants. Marscilles is seated on the Mediterranean, 15 miles S. of Aix, and 534 S. by E. of Paris, to which it is connected direct by railway.

MARSHALL, a county of Virginia, on the E. side of the Ohio; capital, Elizabethstown. Pop. 6937.—Also a county in Tennessee; capital, Lewisburg. Pop. 14,555.—Also a county in Alabama; capital, Warrenton. Pop. 7553.—Also in Mississippi; capital, Holly Springs. Pop. 17,526.—Also in Louisiana; capital, Plymouth. Pop. 1651.

MARSHALL, a town of Michigan, one of the most flourishing places in the state. It is pleasantly seated on the Kalamazoo river, and connected with Detroit by railroad; 105 miles W. of Detroit. Pop. 1763.

MARSHFIELD, a town of Massachusetts, with a tolerable harbour; 31 miles S.E. of Boston. Pop. 1761.

MARSHFIELD, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Tuesday, seated on the Coteswold Hills, 11 miles E. of Bristol, and 103 W. of London.

MARTABAN, a city of the Birman empire, capital of a province of the same name, fertile in rice, fruits, and wines of all kinds. It was at one time a rich trading place, but after it fell into the hands of the Birmans, they caused its harbour to be nearly choked up, and it is now of little importance. It is seated on the bay of Bengal, at the mouth of the Thaluan; 120 miles S.E. of Pegu. Pop. uncertain. Long. 97. 30. E. lat. 16. 28. N.

MARTAPURA. See METAPURA.

MARTEL, a town of France, department of Lot, seated near the Dordogne; 18 miles E. of Sarlat. Pop. 2800.

MARTHA ST., a town of the republic of New Granada, Colombia, capital of the district of the name. The harbour is surrounded by high mountains. It was once flourishing and populous, but has of late years much declined. It has been frequently pillaged by the English, the Dutch, and the Buccaneers; in 1596 it was reduced to ashes by Sir Francis Drake. It is seated on one of the mouths of the Magdalena, 100 miles W. by S. of Rio de la Hacha. Pop. about 6000. Long. 74. 18. W. lat. 11. 15. N.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, an island near the S. coast of Massachusetts, a little to the W. of Nantucket. It is 21 miles long, and from 2 to 10 broad, and belongs to Duke's county. The chief products are Indian corn and rye. Edgarton is the chief town.

MARTHALEN, a town of Switzerland, canton of Zurich, 6 miles S. of Schaffhausen.

MARTIQUES, LES, a town of France, department of Mouths of the Rhone, seated near a lake 12 miles long, and 5 broad, which produces excellent salt. It is 20 miles N.W. of Marseilles. Pop. in 1837, 7299.

MARTIN, CAPE, a promontory of Spain, separating the gulf of Valencia from that of Alicant. Long. 0. 36. E. lat. 38. 54. N.

MARTIN, ST., a town of France, in the isle of Ré, with a harbour and strong citadel; 10 miles W.N.W. of Rochelle. Long. 1. 21. W. lat. 46. 18. N. Pop. 3000.

MARTIN, ST., one of the Leeward Caribbee islands, about 15 miles in length, and 9 in breadth. Area, 30 square miles. The French and Dutch made a settlement here in 1638, from which they were expelled by the Spaniards, who abandoned it in 1650; the French and Dutch then divided it between them; it was taken by the English in 1801, but afterwards restored. It is hilly, and is watered by several rivulets; in the S. part are salt-water lagoons, from which great quantities of salt are obtained by the Dutch, to whom the S. portion of the island belongs. The N. and largest portion of the island belonging to the French, forms a commune of the island of Guadaloupe. The soil is fertile, and produces excellent tobacco. The population of this division is stated to be about 3600, of whom 3000 are free negroes. The S. division has about the same population, including the slaves; this division is less fertile than the N., but is more valuable for the salt; it also yields about 25,000 cwt. of sugar, and 130,000 gallons of rum yearly. Its expenditure, in common with all Dutch colonies, exceeds its income.

MARTINACH, a town of Switzerland, in the Valais, on the river Dranse; 12 miles S.W. of Sion.

MARTINICO, or MARTINIQUE, one of the Virgin islands, W. Indies, 50 miles long, and 18 broad, belonging to the French. There are high mountains covered with trees, several rivers, and many fertile valleys. It is a volcanic island. St. Pierre is the capital, and Fort Royal is the seat of government. It is divided into the arrondissements of Fort Royal and St. Pierre, fourteen cantons, and twenty-six communes. It has a military force of about 2000 men, besides a militia of about 4000. The chief products are sugar, cotton, ginger, indigo, chocolate, aloes, pimento, plantains, and several other tropical fruits. The island is extremely populous, and it has several safe and commodious harbours, well fortified. It was taken by the English, in 1762, 1794, 1809, but restored in 1815. In 1806 it suffered great damage by a tremendous hurricane. Pop. in 1836, 117,502, including 77,500 slaves, who were emancipated by one of the first acts of the French republic. Viscount Beauharnais, and his wife, Josephine, afterwards the empress of Napoleon, were natives of Martinique.

MARTINSBURG, a town of Virginia, capital of Berkeley county, situate in a fertile country, 10 miles N.N.W. of Shepherdstown, and 22 N.E. of Winchester.

MARTINSVILLE, a town of North Carolina, capital of Guilford county. Near this place, in 1781, Lord Cornwallis defeated General Greene. It is seated on Buffalo creek, 22 miles E. of Salem, and 45 W. by N. of Hillsborough.

MARTINSVILLE, a town of Louisiana, situate in a well cultivated district, on the river Zeche.

MASSACHUSETTS, one of America, 190 miles long and 100 broad containing 7,480,000 acres; bounded N. by New Hampshire and Vermont, S. by Connecticut, the Atlantic, and E. by Massachusetts bay. It is divided into 14 counties: Suffolk, Norfolk, Hampshire, Worcester, Plymouth, Essex, Middlesex, Suffolk, Nantucket, Bristol, Franklin, and Hampden. The roads in operation in this state are the Hingham, Lake Ontario, parallel with Providence, to Lowell, Stockbridge to the bound, and the Hingham. This state is well watered by small rivers, and produces wheat, flax, hemp, copper, iron, and lead. There have been made here iron, and powder, to prevent, in a great measure, the importation of them from Great Britain. It also manufactures cotton and woollen, paper, oil, chocolate, and powder, iron-works and other mills in common use for grinding grain, and fulling. There are few articles of comfort and convenience not manufactured in this state, and distilleries have long been here, but are now declining, and are prosecuted with great humanity, and other societies have been formed. It is estimated that more than 1,000,000 of the shipping of the United States is employed in Massachusetts. The population in 1850 was 737,699. Slavery is abolished. Boston is the capital.

It is divided into 14 counties; Suffolk, Norfolk, Essex, Middlesex, Hampshire, Worcester, Plymouth, Barnstable, Dukes, Nantucket, Bristol, Berkshire, Franklin, and Hampden. There are several railroads in operation in this state, from Boston to Worcester, to the Hudson, and thence to Lake Ontario, parallel with the Grand Canal; to Providence, to Lowell, and from West Stockbridge to the boundary of New York. This state is well watered by a number of small rivers, and produces plenty of maize, wheat, flax, hemp, copper, and iron. Nails have been made here in such quantities, as to prevent, in a great measure, the importation of them from Great Britain. There are also duck manufactories, manufactures of cotton and woollen, paper-mills, several snuff, oil, chocolate, and powder mills, and a number of iron-works and slitting-mills, besides other mills in common use for sawing timber, grinding grain, and fulling cloth. In fact, there are few articles necessary to the comfort and convenience of life which are not manufactured in this state. Breweries and distilleries have long been established, but are now declining, and shipbuilding is prosecuted with great ardour. The literary, humane, and other societies are numerous. It is estimated that more than one-fourth of the shipping of the United States belongs to Massachusetts. The inhabitants amount to 737,699. Slavery is, happily, abolished. Boston is the capital.

MASSACHUSETTS BAY, a bay of the foregoing state, between Cape Ann and Cape Cod. It is so named, as well as the whole state of Massachusetts, from a tribe of Indians

MEACO, a city of Nippon, in Japan, formerly the metropolis of the whole empire. It is still the ecclesiastical capital, the residence of the dairo, or spiritual sovereign, and the centre of literature and science. The palace, and some of the temples, are of extraordinary magnificence. A number of the finer manufactures, particularly japan-work, painting, carving, &c., are carried on here. The town is seated in a fine plain; 160 miles W.S.W. of Jeddo. Pop. 529,000. Long. 153. 30. E. lat. 35. 24. N.

MEADIA, a town of Hungary, in the bannat of Temeswar. It was taken by the Turks in 1728 and 1789; it is 23 miles E. of Temeswar. Pop. 1400.

MEADVILLE, a town of the state of Pennsylvania, on the E. side of French creek. It is the seat of Alleghany college; 234 miles N.W. by W. of Harrisburg. Pop. 1319.

MECO, one of the smaller Moluccas, in the Indian Ocean; with a good harbour. Long. 127. 5. E. lat. 1. 12. N.

MEARNS. See KINCARDINESHIRE.

MEATH, or EAST MEATH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; 43 miles (English) long, and 36 broad; bounded on the N. by Cavan and Louth, E. by the Irish sea, S. by Kildare and Dublin, and W. by Westmeath. It is divided into 18 baronies, and 147 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. It formerly contained several small bishoprics, which were gradually united into one see, and received the name of Meath in the twelfth century. There is no cathedral, and the episcopal palace is at Ardracacan, a village near Navan. The agriculture of this county is now improving. The soil in general is a rich fertile loam, producing abundance of corn, and feeding numerous sheep and cattle. Trim is the capital.

MEATH, WEST, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 42 miles long, and 35 broad; bounded N. by Cavan, E. by East Meath, S. by King's county, W. by Roscommon (from which it is separated by the Shannon), and N.W. by Longford. It is divided into 11 baronies (besides half the barony of Forc) and 59 parishes, with parts of seven others. It sends two members to parliament. It is very fertile in corn and pasturage, and has several lakes and rivers. This county gives the title of marquis to the family of Nugent. Mullingar is the county town.

MEAUX, a large and populous town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne. The market-place is a peninsula, contiguous to the town, which was formerly well fortified. In the cathedral is the tomb of the celebrated Bossuet, bishop of Meaux. It is seated on both sides of the Marne; 25 miles E.N.E. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 7774. On the Paris and Strasbourg railway.

MECCA, a city of Arabia; famous as the birthplace of Mohammed. It is seated in a barren valley, surrounded by many little hills, consisting of a blackish rock. The houses follow the windings of the valley, and are built partly on the declivities upon each side. The streets are regular, level, and convenient. The chief support of the inhabitants is derived from the pilgrims, who flock to this place from every part of the Mohammedan world. The principal object of veneration and pilgrimage is the Kaaba, or Beit Allah, (the House of God,) a quadrilateral tower of 34 feet high, enclosing the sacred stone, or Hagera el Asoud, a block of black stone, which is exposed through an opening in an immense black cloth, covering the whole of the Kaaba, except its base. The ceremonies consist in walking seven times round the Kaaba, commencing at the sacred stone at the eastern angle, and kissing and touching it with the right hand, repeating certain prayers. This stone was an object of veneration many ages ago; the same ceremonies were observed 700 years before Mohammed engrafted them into his system. The other objects of Mohammedan superstition have been destroyed by the schismatic Wahabees; and the whole ceremonies have much declined in the veneration of the Mussulmans. The city formerly contained 100,000 inhabitants; it now does not amount to above 16,000, or 20,000, whose character is a union of fraud, fanaticism, and poverty. The famous balm of Mecca is not manufactured in this city, but is found and brought hither from the surrounding country. Mecca is governed by a shereef, who is a temporal prince, and his revenue is increased by the donations of Mohammedan sovereigns. It is 34 miles E. N. E. of Jidda, the seaport of Mecca, and 220 S. by E. of Medina. Long. 40. 15. E. lat. 21. 25. N.

MECHLIN, or MALINES, a town of Belgium; capital of a district in the province of Antwerp, and an archbishop's see. The cathedral is a superb structure, with a very high steeple. Here is a great foundry for ordnance of all kinds; and the best Brabant lace, fine linen, damasks, carpets, and leather are made here. Mechlin submitted to the duke of Marlborough in 1706, and was taken by the French in 1746, 1792, and 1794. The system of railroads, which intersects Belgium in all directions, from Ostend to the Rhine, centres in this town, which therefore is a starting point for the traffic of the kingdom. It is seated on the Dyle; 10 miles N. N. E. of Brussels, and 15 S. S. E. of Antwerp. Pop. in 1836, 22,896. Long. 4. 29. E. lat. 51. 2. N.

MECHOACAN. See VALLADOLID.

MECKENHEIM, a town of the Prussian states, in the province of Berg and Cleves, situate on the Erfft; 8 miles S. W. of Bone.

MECKLENBURG, a duchy of Germany, bounded N. by the Baltic, E. by Pomerania, S. by Brandenburg, and W. by Holstein and Denmark. It extends 135 miles in length, and 90 where broadest; and abounds in corn, pastures, and game. The country was, for many centuries, under the government of one prince; but on the death of the sovereign, in 1529, it was divided between his two sons; the elder obtaining the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and the younger the duchy of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. Both princes received the title of grand duke, at the congress of Vienna, in 1815, and they have each a vote at the diet of the empire. Area, 5343 sq. m. Pop. about 572,500. Schwerin and Strelitz are the chief towns. See Appendix.

MECKLENBURG, a county of Virginia, bounded N. by Lunenburg, E. by Brunswick, S. by North Carolina, and W. by Halifax and Charlotte counties. Pop. 20,076. Chief town, Boynton.

MECKLEY. See CASSAT.

MECON, a river which rises in the N. E. part of Tibet, flows through the country of Cambodia, and falls into the China sea by three mouths.

MECRAN, or MUKRAN, a province of Persia; bounded on the N. by Segistan and Candahar, E. by Hindostan, S. by the Indian Ocean, and W. by Kerman. The southern part is dry, and little more than a desert; the northern is less so, but animals are rare, and the soil far from fertile. Kodge is the capital.

MEDEA, a town of Algier, on the site of the ancient Lamida, in a country abounding in corn, fruit, and sheep; 35 miles S. W. of Algier.

MEDEA, of MALEDIA, a seaport of Tunis, formerly a place of importance; seated on a peninsula in the gulf of Cabes, 8 miles S. by E. of Tunis.

MEDEBACH, a town of Prussia, in the province of Westphalia; 32 miles E. of Cassel.

MEDELIN, a town of Spain, in Estremadura; the birthplace of the celebrated Fernando Cortes. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Guadiana; 20 miles E. by S. of Merida.

MEDELPADIA, a province of Sweden; between the Gulfs of Bothnia and Jamptland. It is 100 miles long, and 45 broad, very mountainous and woody, but interspersed with lakes, rivers, and fertile valleys. Sundswald is the capital.

MEDENBLICK, a seaport of the Netherlands, in the North Holland; with a good harbour. The chief commerce is in timber brought from Norway and Sweden; and the vicinity is remarkable for its rich pastures. Medenblick was taken by the English, in 1799. It is seated on the Zuyder Zee; 28 miles N. E. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 51. E. lat. 52. 46. N.

MEDFORD, a town of Massachusetts, in Middlesex county; noted for its distilleries and brick-works. Pop. 2478. It stands on the Mystic, 3 miles from its mouth, and 4 N. of Boston.

MEDIAN. See MADIAN.

MEDINA, a town of Arabia Deserta, celebrated as the burial place of Mohammed. It is a small poor place, but is walled round, and has a magnificent mosque, in one corner of which is the tomb of Mohammed, enclosed with rich curtains, and lighted by a great number of lamps. Medina is called the city of the Prophet, because here he was protected by the inhabitants when he fled from Mecca, and here he was first invested with regal power. The time of his death was in 637, but the Mohammedan epoch begins in 622, from the time of his flight. Medina is seated on a sandy plain, abounding in palm-trees; 200 miles N. W. of Mecca. Its port is Jumbo. Long. 40. 3. E. lat. 25. 13. N.

MEDINA, the capital of the kingdom of Woolly, West Africa. It contains about 1000 houses, and is defended by a high wall, surrounded by a thick hedge. Long. 12. 50. W. lat. 23. 38. N.

MEDINA, a town and fort of the island of Bahrein, near which is a bank containing the finest pearls in the world. The harbour will not admit vessels of more than 260 tons. It is seated near the Arabian shore of the Persian gulf.

MEDINA, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, seated at the foot of a mountain; 20 miles W.N.W. of Lereña.

MEDINA DEL CAMPO, a town of Spain; province of Leon. It is the capital of the Campo, one of the finest wheat countries in the world, and once had a population of 50,000, now dwindled down to 3000. It is 23 miles S.S.W. of Valladolid, and 42 from Zamora, Segovia, and Salamanca.

MEDINA DEL RIO SECO, a decayed town of Leon, once prosperous from the manufactures of cloth and linen, near the Sequillo; 25 miles N.W. of Valladolid, and 56 S.S.E. of Leon. Pop. 2000.

MEDINA SIDON, a town of Spain, in Andalusia; with a castle, 24 miles S.E. of Cadiz, and 60 S. of Seville. Pop. 5000.

MEDITERRANEAN, a sea between Asia, Africa, and Europe; communicating with the Atlantic ocean by the strait of Gibraltar, and with the Black sea by the strait of Gallipoli, the sea of Marmora, and the strait of Constantinople. Its tides are inconsiderable, and a constant current sets in from the Atlantic through the strait of Gibraltar. It contains many islands, several of them large, as Majorca, Minorca, Corsica, Sardinia, Sicily, Candia, Cyprus, &c. The eastern part of it, bordering on Asia, is called the Levant. Its greatest length is 2300 miles, and its greatest breadth 1200; estimated area about 690,000 square miles. The Mediterranean possesses the most powerful interest to the scholar and the traveller. On its shores were the earliest seats of civilization, art, science, and divine revelation. From the importance of its commerce, and the great influx of travellers and tourists, it is now the sphere of a most perfect system of steam navigation.

MEDWAY, a river of England, which rises in Ashdown forest, in Sussex; entering Kent, it flows by Tunbridge and Maidstone, and thence to Rochester; below which, at Chatham, is a station of the royal navy. Dividing into two branches, the western one enters the Thames, between the isles of Grain and Sheppey, and is defended by the fort at Sheerness. The eastern branch, called the East Swale, passes by Queenborough and Milton, and enters the German ocean below Faversham. The tide flows up nearly to Maidstone, and the river is navigable to Tunbridge.

MEDVI, a town of Sweden, in Gothland; much frequented on account of its waters, which are vitriolic and sulphureous. The lodging-houses form one street of uniform wooden buildings, painted red. It stands near the lake Wetter; 3 miles from Wadstena.

MEELAH, a town of Algier, province of Constantina; surrounded by gardens producing abundance of herbs and excellent fruit, particularly pomegranates. It is 14 miles N.W. of Constantina.

MEGARA, a town of Greece, in the isthmus of Corinth; formerly very large, but now inconsiderable. It has some fine remains of antiquity; 20 miles W. of Athens.

MEGEN, a town of the Netherlands, in North Brabant; seated on the Meuse, 15 miles W.S.W. of Nimeguen.

MEGNA. See BURRANFOOTER.

MEHALLET EL KEHEB. See MATALEX.

MEHUN, a town of France, department of Cher. Here are the ruins of a castle built by Charles VII. as a place of retirement; and here he starved himself, in the dread of being poisoned by his son, afterwards Louis XI. It is seated on the Yevro; 10 miles N.W. of Bourges.

MEHWAS, a district of Guzerat, Hindostan; inhabited by a race of marauders, who live by plunder.

MEINAU, a small island in the middle lake of Constance, which produces excellent wine; 5 miles N.W. of Constance.

MEININGEN SAXE, DUCHY OF, a principality of Germany, in Saxony, forming the territory of the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, comprising an area of 968 square miles; and in 1840, 148,078 inhabitants.

MEININGEN, the capital of the foregoing principality; with a fine castle, a lyceum, a council-house, &c. The principal manufacture is black crape. It is situated amongst mountains, on the river Werra; 16 miles N.W. of Hildburghausen, and 21 N. of Schweinfurt. Pop. 6000. Long. 10. 43. E. lat. 50. 38. N.

MEISSEN, OR MISNIA, a circle of Saxony, formerly a margraviate. Part of it was ceded to Prussia in 1815, but it has still an area of 1600 square miles, with 298,000 inhabitants. It is a fine country, producing corn, wine, metals, and all the conveniences of life. It is situate on both sides of the Elbe, having Bohemia on the S., and Prussian Saxony on the N.

MEISSEN, the capital of the foregoing circle, with a castle, and a famous manufacture of porcelain. The cathedral is the burial-place of the Saxon princes, to the year 1539. The bridge over the Elbe, burnt down by the Prussians in 1757, has been replaced by another of a very handsome construction. Meissen is seated on the rivulet Meisse, at its junction with the Elbe; 14½ miles N.N.W. of Dresden. Pop. in 1837, 7858. Long. 13. 31. E. lat. 51. 11. N.

MEISSENHEIM, a town of Bavaria, in a district of the same name, situate on the Glan; 34 miles N. by E. of Deux Ponts, and 30 W.S.W. of Mentz.

MELBOURN, a considerable village in Derbyshire, 8 miles S. by E. of Derby. Here are a church, four meeting-houses, and the vestiges of an ancient castle, in which the Duke of Bourbon was confined after the battle of Agincourt.

MELBOURNE, a city of South Australia, the capital of the district of Victoria, in New South Wales. It stands at the head of the extensive sheet of water named Port Phillip, 2½ miles from the anchorage, and is reached by vessels of 500 tons of light draught. It is quite of modern origin, as its site twelve years ago was a wilderness, only tenanted by the tribes of savages, and the kangaroo, emu, and wild dog; now (1850) it has a population of at least 15,000 souls. Melbourne is prettily situated on sloping banks, and overlooks in many parts the bay, fronting on the north the river Yarra-Yarra, over which has been thrown a very handsome bridge, faced with white granite, the span of which equals that of the largest arch of London Bridge.

On the western side of the city there is an extensive swamp, or rather lake, it being usually covered in its whole extent with water, on the surface of which numerous flocks of water-fowl sport. As a city, Melbourne presents much incongruity in the style and structure of many of its buildings. Their irregularity, and anomalous and undefined style of architecture, even in the main street, contrast strangely with one's notions of the beau idéal in such matters. Most of the modern houses are two storeys in height, and built of brick; but these, with very few exceptions, are inconvenient and low, and ill adapted to the climate. Little architectural taste or design is displayed in the public buildings: the gaol, court-house, and governor's offices are plain structures of stone.

The principal streets are wide; and since Melbourne has boasted its corporation, much has been effected by this body towards the formation of excellent roads. A police-office, hospital, mechanics' institute, theatre, indifferant barracks, a race-course, botanical garden, &c., are among its public institutions. There are two churches, St. James's and St. Peter's, and there are also four dissenting chapels. The city stands on a surface of sandy loam, with a stratum more or less calcareous, and is supplied with tolerably pure water from the Yarra-Yarra, which has a dam below the wharf to keep the water fresh. It has considerable commerce, and communication with Sydney and Launceston by steam, and to Geelong by railway. See AUSTRALIA.

MIRICK, a town of Austria, with a Benedictine abbey on a high rock, near the Danube; 10 miles W. of St. Polten.

MELCOMBE REGIS a town in Dorsetshire, annexed to Weymouth as a port, as a corporation, and as a market-town, and with it returns two members to parliament. It has a good market-place, and a town-hall, in which the corporation of Weymouth and Melcombe transact business. It is seated at the mouth of the river Wey, opposite to Weymouth, with which it communicates by an elegant bridge; 127 miles W.S.W. of London. See WEYMOUTH.

MELDEAT, a town of Belgium, in South Brabant; 10 miles S.E. of Louvain.

MELNORF, a town of Denmark, in Holstein; seated near the mouth of the Miele, 50 miles N.W. of Hamburg.

MELDNUM, OLD, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; 17 miles N.N.W. of Aberdeen.

MELFI, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, and a bishop's see, with a castle on a rock; 20 m. N.N.W. of Accenza. Pop. about 7000.

MELFORD, LONG, a town of Suffolk, pleasantly seated in a picturesque county, with a handsome Gothic church. The market has been discontinued; 17½ miles W. of Ipswich, and 51 N.E. of London.

MELGAZA, a town of Portugal, in Entre Dourho e Minho, with a strong castle; seated on the Minho, 27 miles N. by E. of Braga.

MELIDA, an island of Dalmatia, in the Gulf of Venice, with a Benedictine abbey, six villages, and several harbours. It is 30 miles in length, and abounds in oranges, citrons, wine, and fish.

MELILLA, a seaport of Fez, on the coast of the Mediterranean. In 1496 it was taken by the Spaniards, who built a citadel. It is 115 miles N.E. of Fez. Long. 2. 57. W. lat. 34. 58. N.

MELINDA, a kingdom of East Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar. Its products are gold, elephants' teeth, ostriches' feathers, wax and aloes, senna, and other drugs; also plenty of rice, sugar, cocoa-nuts, and other tropical fruits.

MELINDA, the capital of the above kingdom, is a large and handsome place, surrounded by fine gardens. It has a good harbour, defended by a fort, but the entrance is dangerous, on account of the great number of shoals and rocks under water. The inhabitants are said to amount to above 200,000, principally negroes; 470 miles S.W. of Magadoca. Long. 41. 48. E. lat. 2. 15. S.

MELIPILLA, a province of Chili, extending about 25 leagues from E. to W., and abounding in grain and wine. Logrono is the capital.

MELITA. See MALTA.

MELITELLO, a town of Sicily, in Val di Noto; 8 miles W. of Leontini.

MELITOPOL, a town of Russia, government of Taurida; situate on a lake, 12 miles from the sea of Asoph, and 108 S. of Catherine's-laf.

MELKSHAM, a town in Wiltshire, with a market every other Thursday for cattle, and a manufacture of broad cloths, which has much declined. It has a large parish church, and three meeting-houses. It is 99 miles W. of London.

MELLE, a town of Hanover, seated on the Hase; 15 miles E. by S. of Osnaburg.

MELLE, a town of France, in the department of Deux Sevres; 12 miles S.W. of Niort.

MELLINGEN, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Argau; seated on the Reuss, 2 miles S. by W. of Baden.

MELNICK, a town of Bohemia, with a castle. Its vicinity yields excellent red and white wine, and near it stands the Augustine convent of Schopka. It is seated on the Elbe, opposite the influx of the Muldau; 18 miles N. of Prague.

MELOUT, a town of Egypt, with a remarkable mosque; seated on the Nile, 3 miles S. of Ashunnein.

MELROSE, a town of Scotland, in Roxburghshire. At some distance from the town, on the S. side of the Tweed, are the magnificent remains of Melrose Abbey, founded by David I., in 1136, part of which was used for divine service, till the new church was erected. Alexander II. is said to be buried under the great altar. Abbotsford, the seat of the late Sir Walter Scott, is in the vicinity of the abbey; and Dryburgh Abbey, where he is buried, is about 3 miles from the village. It is 11 miles N.W. of Jedburgh, and 35 S. of Edinburgh, on the Hawick railway.

MELTON MOWBRAY, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Tuesday. The fine cheese, called Stilton, is chiefly made in its neighbourhood. Its chief celebrity is its lying in the centre of a fine hunting county, and being thus, as it were, the hunting metropolis. The church is a fine Gothic edifice, and here are two meeting-houses, a charity school, a national school, and twelve almshouses, six of which were erected in 1827. It is seated in a rich grazing country, on the river Eye, over which are two handsome stone bridges; 15 miles N.E. of Leicester, and 106 N. by W. of London.

MELUN, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Marne. It has a trade with Paris in corn, meal, wine and cheese. It is seated on the Seine; 25 miles S.E. of Paris. Long. 2. 35. E. lat. 48. 30. N. Pop. in 1836, 6830.

MEMEL, a strong town of East Prussia, with a castle, a fine harbour, and an extensive commerce. It is seated on a river of the same name, at the N. extremity of the Curische Haff, and on the N.E. side of the entrance into the harbour is a lighthouse. Its principal trade is timber, especially oak plank and fir; hemp and flax. It has also a considerable trade in ship-building, and other commerce. It is 70 miles N.N.E. of Konigsberg, and 130 N.E. of Dantzic. Long. 21. 36. E. lat. 55. 46. N.

MEMMINGEN, a town of Bavaria, defended by art, and surrounded by a morass. It has a considerable trade in fine linen, fustian, cotton, paper, salt, tobacco, and hops. Near this place, in 1795, the French republicans defeated the emigrants under the prince of Condé; and in 1800 the French defeated the Austrians, and took the town. It is seated in a fertile plain, near the river Iller; 23 miles S. by E. of Ulm. Pop. 7000. Long. 10. 12. E. lat. 48. 0. N.

MEMPHIS, a town of Tennessee, standing on an elevated bluff of the Mississippi, immediately below the mouth of the Wolf river. It is regularly laid out, and its commerce is extensive, being equal to that of any town between St. Louis and New Orleans. The Charleston and Memphis railroad is partly completed; 230 miles W. S.W. of Nashville. Pop. 3300.

MEMPHRAMAGOO, a lake of N. America, in Canada and Vermont; 35 m. long, and 3 broad.

MENAI, a strait which divides the island of Anglesey from the other parts of N. Wales. An elegant suspension bridge has been thrown over this strait by Mr. Telford, consisting of seven stone arches of 52½ feet span each, the suspension being 579 feet, and of sufficient height to allow the largest vessels that pass the straits to sail beneath it. It has also been crossed by a novel and magnificent railway tubular bridge, lately opened, named Britannia bridge, for the Holyhead railway.

MENAN, a river of the kingdom of Siam, which passes by the city of Siam, and enters the Gulf of Siam below Bancock.

MENANGABOW, a kingdom in the centre of the island of Sumatra. The country is described as a large plain, clear of wood, comparatively well cultivated, and abounding in gold.

MENDE, a town of France, capital of the department of Lozere, and a bishop's see. It has manufactures of serges and other woollen stuffs. It is seated on the Lot, 35 miles S.W. of Puy, and 210 S. by E. of Paris. Long. 3. 30. E. lat. 44. 31. N. Pop. in 1836, 5109.

MENDIP HILLS, a lofty tract in the N.E. of Somersetshire, abounding in coal, calamine, and lead: copper, manganese, bole, and red ochre, are also found. A great portion of these hills, formerly covered with heath and fern, has been brought into cultivation, and produces good corn.

MENDON, a town of Massachusetts, in Worcester county; 18 miles S.E. of Worcester, and 36 S.W. of Boston. Pop. 3524.

MENDOZA, a city of Buenos Ayres, in the province of Cuyo, on the E. side of the Andes, in a plain adorned with gardens, well watered by canals. It contains four convents, a college, and a church. A river of the same name flows by this town, and finally enters the Atlantic under the name of Colorado. Long. 70. 12. W. lat. 34. 0. S.

MENDRAH, a province of the kingdom of Fezzan, much of which is a continued level of hard and barren soil; but the quantity of trona, a species of fossil alkali, that floats on the surface, or settles on the banks of its numerous smoking lakes, has given it a higher importance than that of the more fertile districts. It has a town of the same name; 60 miles S. of Mourzouk.

MENDUSIO, a town of Switzerland, canton of Ticino, containing several convents. It is 7 miles W. by N. of Como.

MENEIOUËL, ST., a town of France, in the department of Marne. In 1792 the French gave the first check to the progress of the Prussians at this place, which in the end compelled them to a retreat. It is seated on a morass, on the river Aisne, between two rocks; 20 miles E.N.E. of Chalons. Pop. 3400.

MENGEN, a town of Württemberg, near the Danube; 50 miles S. of Stuttgart.

MENGERINGHAUSEN, a town and castle of Germany, county of Waldeck; 8 miles N.E. of Corbach, and 24 N.W. of Cassel.

MENIN, a town of Belgium, in West Flanders. It has been often taken; the last time by the French, in 1794. It is seated on the Lis; 10 miles N. of Lisle. Pop. in 1836, 7394.

MENFONE, a town of Nice, with a castle and small harbour; 5 miles E.N.E. of Monaco.

MENTZ, MAINZ, or MAYENCE, a city of Germany, in the grand duchy of Hesse, and a bishop's see. It is well fortified, and deemed a barrier fortress. The city is built in an irregular manner, and plentifully provided with churches. The principal buildings are the electoral palace (now much decayed,) the house of the Teutonic knights, and the cathedral. Mentz is one of the towns which claim the invention of printing; and the growth of the best Rhenish wine is limited to a circle of about 5 miles round it. The French took this place by surprise in 1792; and the next year it stood a long blockade and siege before it surrendered to the allies. It was twice re-attacked by the French, in 1795, but they were defeated by the Austrians, who also relieved it from a blockade of two months, in 1796. The siege was soon after resumed, and continued till the signing of the treaty of Udina, in 1797, when the city was taken possession of by the French. By the peace of Luneville, in 1801, it was formally ceded to France, but was delivered up to the allies in 1814. Mentz is seated on the Rhine, just below the influx of the Maine; and on the opposite side is the town of Cassel, connected with it by a bridge of boats. Pop. 40,500. It is 21 ra. W.S.W. of Frankfort by railway, and has also railways to Paris, &c.

MENXU, a town of Egypt, situated in a well cultivated country, near that branch in the Nile which flows to Rosetta; 40 miles N.N.W. of Cairo. Pop. 5000.

MENZALEH, a town of Egypt, situate near a lake of the same name 60 miles long, separated from the Mediterranean by a narrow slip of land. It is 20 miles S.S.E. of Damietta, and 73 N.N.E. of Cairo. Long. 32. 2. E. lat. 31. 3. N.

MEPPEN, a town of Westphalia, capital of a district of the same name; 52 miles N. of Munster.

MEQUINENZA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a castle; seated at the conflux of the Segra with the Ebro, 58 miles E.S.E. of Saragossa, and 180 E.N.E. of Madrid.

MEQUINEZ, a city of Morocco, seated in a delightful plain, having a serene and clear air; for which reason the late emperor Muley Ismael frequently resided in this place, in preference to Fez. The pulnce stands on the S. side. In the middle of the city the Jews have a place to themselves, the gates of which are locked every night, and guarded. Close by Mequinez, on the N.W. side, is a large Negro town, which takes up as much ground as the city, but the houses are not so high, nor so well built. The inhabitants of Mequinez, estimated at from 50,000 to 112,000, are considered more polished and hospitable than those of the southern provinces. It is 58 m. W. of Fez. Long. 5. 59. W. lat. 33. 56. N.

MER, a town of France; in the department of Loire-et-Cher; 11 miles N.N.W. of Blois.

MERAN, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, of which it was formerly the capital; seated near the conflux of the Passar with the Adige; 12 miles N.N.W. of Botzen. Long. 11. 5. E. lat. 46. 39. N.

MERCER, a county of New Jersey, on the Delaware river; capital, Trenton. Pop. 21,502. — Also a county in Pennsylvania; capital, Mercer. Pop. 32,873. — Also a county in Virginia; capital, Princeton. Pop. 2233. — Also a county in Kentucky; capital, Harriaburg. Pop. 18,720. — Also a county in Ohio; capital, Celina. Pop. 8277. — Also a county in Illinois; capital, Millersburg. Pop. 2352.

MERDIN, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbekir, and an archbishop's see; with a castle. The country about it produces a great deal of cotton. It is seated on the summit of a mountain; 45 miles S.E. of Diarbekir. Pop. 1100. Long. 39. 59. E. lat. 37. 19. N.

MERE, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Thursday; 28 miles W. of Salisbury, and 100 W. by S. of London.

MERGHEN, or MERGUEN, a city of East Tartary, province of Teiticar, seated on the Nonni; 140 miles N. by E. of Teiticar. Long. 124. 55. E. lat. 49. 10. N.

MERGUL, a seaport on the W. coast of Siam; with an excellent harbour. It was wrested from the Siamese by the Birman, in 1755, but was ceded to Britain in 1824.5. It is 208 miles S.W. of Siam. Pop. 8000. Long. 98. 9. E. lat. 12. 12. N.

MEROUI ARCHIPELAGO consists of islands extending 135 miles along the coast of Tannasserim and the isthmus of the Malay peninsula, with a strait between them and the mainland, from 15 to 30 miles broad, having regular soundings and good anchorage. They are in general covered with trees, but are not inhabited, although the soil appears fertile. The principal of them are King's Island, Clara, St. Matthew's, and Tannasserim.

MERIDA, a decayed town of Spain, in Estremadura; built by the Romans, before the birth of Christ. Here are fine remains of antiquity, particularly a triumphal arch. It is a decaying place, with a pop. of 4500. It was named Emerita Augusta by the Romans, whence Merida. In 1811 it fell into the hands of the French, but was retaken by General (afterwards Lord) Hill in the following year. It is seated in an extensive fertile plain, on the river Guadiana, over which is a noble Roman bridge; 32 miles E. of Badajoz. Pop. 4390. Long. 5. 58. W. lat. 38. 47. N.

MERIDA, a city of Central America, the capital of the republic of Yucatan. It is situated on a great plain of limestone rock. The houses are low and well built, and the streets are clean. The distinguishing feature of the place is its churches, the principal of which is its cathedral. It has a public walk and several public buildings. Pop. about 23,000. Sisal is its port. Long. 89. 58. W. lat. 20. 45. N.

MERIDA, one of the five departments of the republic of Yucatan, containing, in 1841, a pop. of 48,606 men and 58,663 women, together 107,269.

MERIONETHSHIRE, a county of Wales; 36 to 46 miles long, and 34 where broadest; bounded N. by the counties of Caernarvon and Denbigh, E. by the latter and Montgomery, S. by Cardiganshire, and W. by the Irish sea. It contains nearly 500,000 acres, is divided into five hundreds, and 37 parishes, has four market towns, and sends one member to parliament. The face of the country is varied throughout with a romantic mixture of all the scenery peculiar to a wild and mountainous region. The principal rivers are the Dee and Dyfi. Cader Idris, 2914 ft., one of the highest mountains in Wales, is in this county. Karlech is the county town.

MERITCH, an important town and fortress of Hindostan, in the province of Bejapoor; situate near the N. bank of the Kistna; 62 miles S.W. of Visiapour.

MERO, a strong town of the kingdom of Pegu, 140 miles S.W. of Pegu. Long. 98. 36. E. lat. 16. 0. N.

MEROU, a town of Persia, in Khorassan; seated in a fertile country, which produces salt, 112 miles S.W. of Bokhara. Long. 64. 25. E. lat. 37. 40. N.

MERIMAC, a river of the United States, formed by the junction of the Pemigewasset and Winnipiscogee; in the centre of New Hampshire. Its course is S. till it enters Massachusetts; it then turns E. and passes into the ocean at Newbury. It is navigable for vessels of 200 tons, 20 miles from its mouth, where it is obstructed by the first rapids, called Mitchell's Eddy, a little above Haverhill. It gives name to a township in Hillsborough county.

MENSCH, a town of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Luxemburg; 8 miles N. of Luxemburg.

MERSEBURG, one of the new divisions of the Prussian states, consisting principally of cessions made by Saxony in 1815. It lies to the S. of Anhalt, and to the E. of the government of Erfurt; and comprises an area of 4000 square miles, with 471,000 inhabitants.

MERSEBURG, the capital of the above government; formerly a bishopric. The most remarkable buildings are the castle, the cathedral, which stands below it, and the academy. The brewing and exportation of strong beer furnish the principal employment of the inhabitants. It is seated on the Saale; 15 miles N.W. of Leipsic. Pop. in 1837, 9413.

MERSEY, a river of England, which rises in the N. extremity of the Peak in Derbyshire, receives the Tame at Stockport, and, lower down, the Irwell. It then passes by Warrington, and receives the Weaver at Frodsham, where it forms a broad estuary that contracts on its approach to Liverpool, below which it enters the Irish sea. This river not only affords salmon, but it is also visited by annual shoals of smelts, here called sparlings, of a remarkable size and flavour.

MERSEY, an island in Essex, between the mouth of the Coln and the entrance of Blackwater bay. It has two parishes, called East and West Mersey; 7 miles S. of Colchester.

MERTHYR TYDVIL, a borough of South Wales, in Glamorganshire; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It returns one member to parliament. The rise of Merthyr Tydvil is almost unexampled. Its prosperity is owing to its rich mines of iron, coal and limestone, which employ a vast number of the population. It is connected with Cardiff, by the Taff Vale railway, has also a canal to the same place. Three miles distant are the ruins of Morlais castle, said to have been the residence of the kings of Brecknock. It is seated on the T'aa' or Taff; 24 miles N.N.W. of Cardiff, and 180 W. of London.

MERTOLA, a strong town of Portugal, in Alentejo, seated near the Guadiana; 60 miles S. of Evora, and 100 S.E. of Lisbon. Long. 7. 37. W. lat. 37. 41. N.

MERTON, a village in Surrey, which formerly had considerable manufactures and bleachfields. Here Henry III. held a parliament in 1236, at which were enacted the Provisions of Merton, the most ancient body of laws after Magna Charta. It is seated on the Wandale; 7 miles S.W. of London.

Persian monarchs; but it has since declined from its greatness. It is 130 miles N.E. of Mesched. Pop. 3000.

MEERUT, a district of British India, in the presidency of Agra (Bengal); area, 2250 square miles. The chief towns are Meerut, Sirdihna, Kutouli, and Hustinapoor.

MEERUT, a town of British India, in the Agra presidency, capital of the above district. It lies in a grassy plain, 30 miles N.E. of Delhi. It is surrounded by a ruined wall and has also a ruined citadel. The streets are narrow and mean, but there are some good architectural remains. The military cantonments are at some distance N. of the town, and consist of ranges of barracks extending at intervals along a space of two miles in length, and accommodating 20,000 men. The church is perhaps the largest in British India. It is a more agreeable place than Cawnpore.

MEVILLE, a town of France, department of Nord; seated on the Lyss, 15 m. N. of Lisle.

MESCHED, or MUSNEH, a city of Persia; capital of Khorassan. It is fortified with several towers, and is famous for the magnificent sepulchre of Imam Kessa, of the family of Ali, to which the Persians pay great devotion. Here is a manufacture of beautiful pottery, and another of skins. Caravans are continually passing through this city from Bokhara, Balkh, Candahar, Hindostan, and all parts of Persia. It is 180 miles E. of Astrabad, and 490 N.E. of Ispahan. Long. 59. 35. E. lat. 36. 18. N.

MESCHED ALI, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irak Arabi; near a large lake called Rahe-ma, which communicates with the Euphrates by a canal. It stands on the spot where Ali, one of the successors of Mahomet, was interred; and his tomb is annually visited by Persian pilgrims. It is 110 miles S. of Bagdad. Long. 44. 50. E. lat. 32. 5. N.

Messa, a considerable town of Morocco, on the river Sus, not far from the Atlantic. It is 165 miles S.W. of Morocco. Long. 10. 46. W. lat. 29. 58. N.

MESSINA, a seaport of Sicily; capital of an intendancy of the same name, in Val di Demona; with a citadel and several forts. It is 5 miles in circumference, and has four large suburbs. The public buildings and monasteries are numerous and magnificent: there are 50 churches, including the cathedral, which is much admired. The harbour is one of the safest in the Mediterranean, and has a quay above a mile in length. A great trade is carried on here in silk, oil, fruit, corn, and excellent wine. The city suffered much by an earthquake in 1780; and also in 1783, when it was half destroyed. It has since been rebuilt, with elegant houses. For several years prior to the peace of 1814, Messina was the head quarters of the British troops in Sicily. It is seated on the strait of Messina, which separates Sicily from Calabria; 130 miles E. of Palermo. Pop. in 1831, including the canton, 83,772. Long. 15. 35. E. lat. 38. 11. N.

MESSING, a town of Franconia, in the principality of Aichstat. It is 14 miles N.N.E. of Aichstat.

MESTRE, a town of Austrian Italy, in Treviso; 8 miles N.W. of Venice.

MESURADO, a considerable river of Western Africa, which falls into the Atlantic on the Grain coast. On its banks is a kingdom of the same name, the boundaries of which are very uncertain.

MESURATA, a seaport of Tripoli, and the residence of a governor. Caravans travel hence to Fezzan, and other interior parts of Africa; by which they carry on a great trade. It is 100 miles E.S.E. of Tripoli. Long. 15. 10. E. lat. 32. 10. N.

META, a large river of New Granada, which has its rise opposite to Santa Fé de Bogota, and falls into the Orinoco, about 450 miles from its source, in long. 67. 45. W. lat. 6. 10. N.

METAPURA, a town of the island of Borneo, in the kingdom of Banjermassing; 72 miles N.E. of Banjermassing, and 100 S.E. of Negara.

METELEN, a town of Prussia, in the province of Westphalia; seated on the Vechta, 19 miles N.W. of Munster.

METELIN, or MYTILENE, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, anciently called Lesbos; to the N. of Scio, and at the entrance of the Gulf of Adramiti. It is about 40 miles long, and 12 broad; somewhat mountainous, and has many hot springs. The soil is very good; and the mountains are in many places covered with wood. It produces good wheat, wine, oil, and the best figs in the Archipelago. Mytilene is the capital, and has about 5000 or 6000 inhabitants, and two harbours.

METHIL, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire; with a safe harbour on the Frith of Forth, whence much coal is exported. It is 6 miles N.E. of Dysart.

METHVEN, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire, where king Robert Bruce was defeated by the English in 1306; 6 m. W.N.W. of Perth.

METLING, or MOTTLING, a strong town of the Austrian states, in Carniola; seated on the Kulp, 13 miles N.W. of Carlstadt, and 40 S.E. of Laubach.

METRO, a river of Italy, which rises on the frontiers of Tuscany, crosses the duchy of Urbino, and enters the Gulf of Venice near Fano.

METROPOLI, a town of the island of Candia, on the site of the ancient Gortyna, of which many vestiges remain; 22 miles S.S. W. of Candia.

METZ, a town of France, in the department of Moselle, of which it is the capital. The fortifications are excellent, and it has three citadels and noble barracks. The cathedral is one of the finest in Europe. Here are manufactures of cotton, linen, gauze, chintz, fustian, &c.; and a considerable trade in leather, wine, brandy, &c.; also a (royal) gunpowder manufactory. The sweetmeats made here are in high esteem. Metz is the seat of the departmental administration, and a bishop's see, and contained, in 1836, 42,793 inhabitants. It is seated at the conflux of the Moselle and Seille; 210 miles N.E. of Paris. Long. 6. 1. E. lat. 49. 7. N.

MEUDON, a village of France, with a magnificent royal palace and park; seated on the left bank of the Seine, and one of the Versailles railroads, 6 miles S. of Paris.

MEULAN, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise; seated on the Seine, over which is a stone bridge of 21 arches; 26 miles N.W. of Paris.

MEULENEEK, a town of Belgium, province of E. Flanders; 14 m. S. of Bruges. Pop. 7000.

MEURS, or MOENS, a town of the Prussian states; capital of a small principality of the same name. It has a castle, and was formerly a place of strength; but its fortifications were destroyed in 1764; 16 miles N.N.E. of Dusseldorf.

MEURTHE, a department of France, including part of the former province of Lorraine. It is bounded by the departments of Moselle, Vosges and Meuse, and comprises an area of 2500 square miles, with (in 1836,) 424,336 inhabitants. The climate is temperate, and the soil in general fertile. Nancy is the capital.

MEURTHE, a river of France, which rises in the department of Vosges, and flows by Luneville and Nancy into the Moselle.

MEUSE, MAESE, or MAAS, a river which rises in France; in the department of Upper Marne. It enters Belgium at Givet, flows to Charlemont, Namur, Huy, Liege, Maestricht, Ruremonde, Venlo, Grave, Battenburg, Ravestein, Goreum, (where it receives the Waal,) and Worcum. At Dort it divides into four principal branches, the most northern of which is called the Merve. These form the islands of Ysselmonde, Voorn, and Overflackee, and enter the German Ocean below Briel, Helvoetsluys, and Goreo.

MEUSE, a department of France, including the former duchy of Bar. It is bounded by the grand duchy of Luxemburg, and the departments of Moselle, Vosges, Marne, and Ardennes, and comprises an area of 2500 square miles, with, in 1836, 314,558 inhabitants. Bar sur Ordin is the capital.

MEWAT, a hilly and woody tract of Hindostan, lying on the S.W. of Delhi; confining the low country, along the W. bank of the Jumna, to a comparatively narrow slip, and extending westward 130 miles. From N. to S. it is 90 miles. Its inhabitants, the Mewatti, have been ever characterized as the most savage and brutal, and are still noted as thieves and robbers. The country contains some strong fortresses on steep or inaccessible hills. It is nominally possessed by the rajah of Macherry.

MEXICANO, or ADAYES, a river of New Mexico, on the confines of Louisiana; which runs into the Gulf of Mexico.

MEXICO, a country of North America, now forming an independent republic; situated between 42. and 113. W. long., and extending from the Pacific ocean to the Caribbean sea, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Rio del Norte river. In general, it is a mountainous country, intermixed with many rich valleys; the highest mountains, many of which are volcanoes, are near the coast of the Pacific ocean. The eastern shore is a flat country, full of impenetrable forests, with bogs and morasses, overflowed in the rainy season, which is from April to September. Although a considerable portion of Mexico is within the torrid zone, the climate in general is temperate and healthy. No country abounds more with grain, fruits, roots, and vegetables, many of them peculiar to the country, or at least to America. It is also celebrated for its mines of gold and silver, and has quarries of jasper, porphyry, and exquisite marble. Cochineal is almost peculiar to this country; its indigo and cocoa are superior to any in America; and its logwood has long been an important article of commerce. Among the quadrupeds are the puma, jaguar, bears, elks, wolves, deer, &c. The puma and jaguar have been inaccurately denominated, by Europeans, lions and tigers; but they possess neither the undaunted courage of the former, nor the ravenous cruelty of the latter. The domestic animals of Europe, particularly horned cattle, have multiplied here, almost with incredible rapidity. Numbers of these, having been suffered to run wild, now range over the vast plains, in herds of from 30,000 to 40,000; they are killed merely for the sake of their hides, which are annually exported, in vast quantities, to Europe. The inhabitants consist of native Spaniards; Creoles, who are descendants of Europeans; Mulattoes, the issue of whites and negroes; Mestizoes, descendants of whites and Indians; Zambos, descendants of negroes and Indians; and African negroes, with whom are classed a mixed extraction from Europeans, Africans, Indians, and Malays, or others of Asiatic origin. The country possesses many monuments of its former inhabitants. These have been considered to be the Tolteccans, a tribe of Indians from the Rocky mountains in the north, who fixed themselves after several migrations near the present city of Mexico, where they remained for nearly four centuries. Their successors were supplanted by the warlike Azteccans, who, in 1160 migrated hither from the country N. of the gulf of California, founding the present capital, and calling it Mexico after Mexitli their god of war. Their greatest sovereign was Montezuma I., whose son was subdued by Fernando Cortes in 1519. The consequent successes reduced the country to a Spanish dependancy, it being made into a vicerealty whose chief had nearly unlimited power. Of the remains of art left by the ancient Mexicans, the most remarkable are the pyramids, which are in some instances of even greater dimensions than those of Egypt. That of Cholula is a square of 1423 feet on each side. A more elegant structure is in the N. part of the state of Vera Cruz. The mountains of Tezcuco are nearly covered with ruins, and the remains of an Aztec city, called by the Spaniards Las Casas Grandes, lie to the S. of the Rio Gila the present N. boundary. In the W. part of the state of Chihuahua are similar ruins of great extent. The remains of noble paved roads extend from these cities, but their histories are nothing but a chain of surmises. The whole country was long under the dominion of Spain. The first attempt to assume independence took place in 1810; and, after a long guerilla warfare, in 1824 a federal government was established.

In consequence of the disputes between the Mexican and United States, an expedition was sent out to Vera Cruz, by the latter government, under General Taylor, in 1847. After some minor occurrences, the rival armies met at Buena Vista, near Saltillo, that of the Mexicans, said to be 17,000 strong, under Santa Anna the president; and the Americans, from 4000 to 9000 in number. A deadly fight, for two days, Feb. 22, 23, 1847, ensued, in which it is said that the Mexicans lost 4000, and the Americans 2000. The victory was claimed on both sides, but the war was tediously protracted till the American army took the Mexican outposts, before the city, on the 19th and 20th August: an armistice was then agreed on, till Sept. 9, but, on the 8th, General Scott recommenced the siege against Chapultepec and the citadel, and took possession of the city of Mexico on the 14th September, 1847. The president, Santa Anna, was superseded against his will, in November, and General Remon appointed in his stead. A treaty, defining the boundaries between California and Mexico, was subsequently agreed to, in 1848, by which the United States took possession of the former region. For several years the country has been a scene of anarchy and civil war; and now (1861) England, France, and Spain are combining to exact respect for their rights.

The united population of these departments and territories amounts, according to this estimate, to 6,449,000; (see the Appendix). They consist of four races, in the proportion of—Indians 56, metis (leperos) 31, whites 12, negroes 1, in every 100.

Mexico, the capital of the above country. It was a flourishing city before the Spaniards entered the country. It is seated in a marshy plain. Instead of an "interior sea," as formerly, the lakes Tezcuco and Xochimilco, which originally insulated the city, have been gradually diminishing. It is elevated 7200 feet above the sea. Pop., about 155,000. The circumference of the city, exclusive of the suburbs, was formerly above 10 miles; and it contains at least 80,000 houses, with several large temples, and three palaces. It was taken by Ferdinando Cortes, in 1521, after a siege of nearly three months, and, as the Mexicans defended themselves from street to street, it was almost ruined, but was afterwards rebuilt by the Spaniards. The streets are straight, and so exactly disposed, that, in point of regularity, it is the finest city in the world. The great square, in the centre of the city, and the public buildings, are magnificent. The situation of Mexico is highly favourable for carrying on commerce both with Europe and Asia, being about 69 leagues distant from Vera Cruz on the one hand, and from Acapulco on the other. The working of gold and silver has long been carried to great perfection here; and here are also manufactures of calico, cloth, soap, and tobacco. This city has been frequently inundated by the overflowing of the lakes in its vicinity, particularly in 1629, when 40,000 persons are said to have been drowned. To prevent the recurrence of such calamities, a vast conduit was constructed, to turn the course of the waters, which formerly flowed into the lake Tezcuco, through the mountains. It is 200 miles E.N.E. of St. Juan de Ulua. Long. 101. 25. 30. W. lat. 9. 25. 45. N.

MEXICO, New, a territory of the United States. It lies between Texas and the republic of Mexico. Santa Fe is the capital.

MEYAHOUN, a city of Pegu; with numerous gilded temples and spacious monasteries. Its vicinity is uncommonly fruitful in rice; and here are capacious granaries, always kept filled with grain ready to be transported to any part of the empire in which there happens to be a scarcity. It stretches 2 miles on the S.W. bank of the Irrawaddy; and is 85 miles N.W. of Pegu. Long. 95. 8. E. lat. 18. 18. N.

MEYENFIELD. See MAYENFIELD.

MEYRVIES, a town of France, department of Lozere; 23 miles S. of Mendoc.

MEZEMNA, a seaport of Fez, on the coast of the Mediterranean; 80 miles E. of Tetuan. Long. 4. 1. W. lat. 35. 22. N.

MEZIERES, a town of France, department of Ardennes, with a citadel; seated on an island in the river Meuse, 12 miles W. by N. of Sedan. Pop. in 1836, 3817.

MEZIN, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne; 9 miles N.W. of Condom.

MOLIN, a town in European Russia, governed by Czernigov. It has a considerable trade in hemp. Pop. 5000.

MHENDIGAUT, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Agra; on the W. bank of the Ganges. Long. 79. 57. E. lat. 27. 3. N.

MIACO. See MEACO.

MIAMI, LITTLE AND GREAT, two rivers of the state of Ohio, which run S. into the Ohio, the former just above Columbia, and the latter 21 miles below Cincinnati. The little Miami is 60 miles to its source, but generally so shallow as to afford no navigation. The Great Miami has a navigation, like the Muskingum, that approaches near the navigable waters of Lake Erie. The country between these two rivers is called the Miamis, and is reckoned among the richest belonging to the United States.

MIANA, a town of Persia, in Aderheitzan. Here the celebrated traveller M. Thevenot died, on his return from Ispahan. It is 57 miles S.E. of Teauris.

MICHA, a cape of Dalmatia, which advances into the Gulf of Venice, near the town of Zara.

MICHAEL, ST., the most extensive and populous island of the Azores. It is 54 miles long and from 6 to 15 broad, and contains nearly 80,000 inhabitants. In a valley on the eastern side are a number of boiling fountains; also many sulphureous springs, some of a hot, and others of a cold temperature. The principal towns are Punta del Gada (the capital of the island), and Villa Franca. Long. 25. 42. W. lat. 37. 47. N.

MICHAEL, ST., or MIDSHALL, a town of Cornwall; 8 miles S.W. of St. Columb, and 250 W. by S. of London.

MICHAEL, ST., a town of France, department of Meuse; with a fine hospital, and the rich library of a Benedictine abbey. It is surrounded by mountains. It is seated on the Meuse; 20 miles N.E. of Bar le Duc.

MICHAEL, ST., a town of Mexico, in the province of Nicaragua, on the river St. Michael; 110 miles N.W. of Leon. Long. 87. 45. W. lat. 12. 25. N.

MICHAEL, ST., a town of Mexico, province of Culiacan, near the mouth of the Siguanlan; 30 miles E.S.E. of Culiacan. Long. 107. 40. W. lat. 24. 10. N.

MICHAEL, ST., a city of Tucuman, situate in a fruitful valley, at the foot of a range of rugged mountains; 150 miles N.W. of St. Jago del Estero. Long. 66. 45. W. lat. 27. 0. S.

MICHAEL DE IBARRA, ST., a town of Colombia, in the presidency of Quito; capital of a jurisdiction of its name. It has a large and elegant church, a college, and several convents. It is 70 miles N.E. of Quito. Long. 77. 30. W. lat. 0. 25. N.

MICHAEL DE PIURA, ST., a town of Quito, seated near the mouth of the Piura; 325 miles S.S.W. of Quito. Long. 80. 40. W. lat. 3. 10. S.

MICHAEL, GULF OF ST., to the E. of Panama; that part of the Pacific ocean which was first discovered by the Spaniards, after their march across the Isthmus of Darien.

MICHIGAN, one of the western United States; bounded on the N. by Lake Superior, E. by the lakes Huron, St. Clair, and Erie, S. by Ohio and Indiana, and W. by Lake Michigan. It consists chiefly of two peninsulas, which together contain an area of 38,000 square miles, or 24,320,000 acres. It is divided (1840) into 32 counties. Detroit is the seat of government. The southern peninsula is generally level, much of it covered with fine timber, a large portion of it is fertile, and no part of the United States is better supplied with fish and wild game than this. The northern peninsula is of a much bolder character, and much of it is valueless for agriculture. Maple sugar is largely made in it, and it may be looked on as the scene of future mineral operations. The country possesses immense advantages, resulting from navigation and fisheries. The chief exports are furs and peltries, dried hides, bees'-wax, pot and pearl ashes, fish, &c. There are 557 miles of railroad intended in this state, 40 of which, from Ann Arbor to Detroit, the capital, is in operation. The population, which has rapidly increased, was, in 1840, 212,276, and in 1845, 312,000.

MICHIGAN, the largest lake which is wholly within the United States, being 280 miles long, and from 50 to 60 broad. It is navigable for vessels of any burden, and communicates with the N.W. end of Lake Huron, by the strait of Mackinac.

MICHILMACKINAC, or MACKINAC, a strait of North America, which unites the lakes Michigan and Huron. It is 6 miles wide; and on its S.E. side, in Lake Huron, is an island, with a fort and village of the same name. Long. 84. 30. W. lat. 45. 48. N.

MICHILMACKINAC, LITTLE, a river of the state of Illinois, which enters the Illinois 200 miles above its junction with the Mississippi.

MIDDLEBOROUGH, a town of Massachusetts, in Plymouth county; situate 40 miles S. by E. of Boston. Pop. 5085.

MIDDLEBURG, a large commercial town of the Netherlands, capital of the island of Walcheren, and of all Zealand. The squares and public buildings are magnificent; particularly the town-house, formerly a celebrated abbey. The harbour is commodious, and has a communication with Flushing by a canal, which will bear the largest vessels. Middleburg was taken by the British in July, 1809, but evacuated in the December following. It is 85 miles S.W. of Amsterdam. Pop. 3500. Long. 3. 37. E. lat. 51. 29. N.

MIDDLEBURG, a town of the Netherlands, in Flanders; 5 miles S.E. of Sluys.

MIDDLEBURG, one of the Friendly islands. See EAOWWE.

MIDDLEBURY, a town of Vermont, chief of Addison county; seated on the Otter Creek, 37 miles S. of Burlington. Pop. 3168.

MIDDLEHAM, a town in North Yorkshire, with a market on Monday, and a woollen manufacture. Here are the ruins of a once stately castle, in which Richard III. was born, and where Edward IV. was confined after being taken prisoner in his camp. It is seated on the Eare; 11 miles S. by W. of Richmond, and 232 N.N.W. of London.

MIDDLESBOROUGH, a town of England, North riding of Yorkshire, on the river Tees. It has rapidly risen from a single farm-house in 1830, to be a large and thriving town, in consequence of its advantageous situation as a coal shipping port, and from its being the terminus of the Stockton and Darlington railway, 32 miles long, to the important coal field near Bishop Auckland. It is 16 miles E. by N. of Darlington, and 215 N. from London.

MIDDLESEX, a county of England; bounded N. by Hertfordshire, E. by Essex, S. by Surrey and Kent, and W. by Buckinghamshire. It contains an area of 179,200 acres, has two cities (London and Westminster,) and seven market towns, and sends two members to parliament. The air is healthy; but the soil in general, being gravelly, is not naturally fertile, though, by means of the vicinity to the metropolis, many parts of it are converted into rich beds of manure, clothed with almost perpetual verdure. Besides the Thames, Lea, and Coln, which are its boundaries to the S., E., and W., Middlesex is watered by several small streams; one of which, called the New River, is artificially brought from near Hartford, for the purpose of supplying London with water.

MIDDLESEX, a county of Massachusetts; bounded N. by New Hampshire, E. by Essex county, S.E. by Norfolk county, and W. by Worcester county. Pop. 106,611. The chief towns are Charlestown, Cambridge, and Concord.

MIDDLESEX, a maritime county of Connecticut; bounded N. by Hartford county, E. by New London county, S. by Long Island Sound, and W. by New Haven county. Middletown is the capital. Pop. 27,879.

MIDDLESEX, a county of New Jersey, bounded N. by Essex county, E. by Raritan bay, and part of Staten island, S.E. by Monmouth county, and W. by Somerset county. Pop. 21,893. New Brunswick is the chief town.

MIDDLESEX, a county of Virginia, on Chesapeake bay; about 35 miles in length, and 7 in breadth. Pop. 4392. Urbanna is the chief town.

MIDDLESEX, a town of Vermont, in Washington county.—Also, a town in Ontario county, New York.

MIDDLETON, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Saturday. The church is an ancient edifice; and there are five meeting-houses, and a free grammar-school. It has the cotton trade in all its branches, a large twist manufacture, considerable bleaching-works, some manufactures of silk, and extensive dye-works. It stands on the Rochdale canal; the Manchester and Leeds, and the Bolton railways; 6 miles N. by E. of Manchester, and 190 N.N.W. of London.

MIDDLETON IN TEESDALE, a town of Durham, with considerable lead mines in the parish; 255 miles from London.

MIDDLETON, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork; situated on the N.W. angle of Cork harbour. It is 13 miles E. of Cork; midway between it and Youghal.

MIDDLETON, a town of Delaware, in New-castle county, situate on Apoquinimy creek; 21 miles S.S.W. of Wilmington.—Also, the name of a number of inconsiderable townships of the United States.

MIDDLETON, a town of Connecticut, capital of Middlesex county. It is a pleasant and flourishing town, and has a considerable trade and manufactures. Two miles from the town is a lead mine. Population 7210. It is seated on the W. bank of Connecticut river; 25 miles N.N.E. of New Haven. Long. 72. 54. W. lat. 41. 35. N.

MIDDLETOWN, a town of Pennsylvania, in Dauphin county. It has a trade in corn, and stands on Swatara creek, 2 miles from its mouth in the Susquehanna, and 62 W. by N. of Philadelphia.

MIDDLETOWN, a town of New Jersey; in Monmouth county, on the S.W. side of the bay within Sandy Hook; 14 miles N.W. of Shrewsbury, and 52 E.N.E. of Trenton. Pop. 6063.

MIDDLEWICH, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Tuesday. The trade of the place is chiefly derived from the surrounding neighbourhood, which is a great farming district; to which may be added the extensive salt-works, and some silk factories. Here are a spacious church, three meeting-houses, and a free grammar-school. The Trent and Mersey canal runs through the town; and is near the Grand Junction, and the Manchester and Birmingham railways. It is seated on the Croco, near its confluence with the Dane; 24 miles E. of Chester, and 167 N.W. of London.

MIDHURST, a borough in Sussex, seated on the Arun; 11 miles N. of Chichester, and 50 W. by S. of London. It returns one member to parliament.

MIDNAPOUR, a town of Hindostan, in Orissa, capital of a district of the same name. It is seated near a river that flows into the Hoogly; 70 miles W. by S. of Calcutta. Long. 87. 25. E. lat. 22. 25. N. The district contained in 1822, a population of 1,914,060, the surface of the county, consists of jungles, and the inhabitants are of a very low caste.

MIES, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen, on the river Misa; 18 miles W. of Pilsen.

MIFFLIN, a county of Pennsylvania, bounded by the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, Dauphin, and Huntingdon. Pop. 13,092. Lewistown is the capital.

MIRIEU, Sr. a town of France, department of the Meuse. It is well laid out, and has several remarkable churches. Pop. in 1836, 5703; 20 miles N.E. of Bar-le-Duc.

MIKALIDA, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, with a fort; situate on a river which runs into the sea of Marmora; 55 miles W. by S. of Bursa.

MILAN, or the MILANESE, a country of Italy, bounded on the N. by the Alps, E. by the Venetian territory, S. by the Apennines, and W. by Piedmont. The soil is every where fertile in corn, wine, fruits, rice, and olives; and there are also plenty of cattle. The rivers are the Seccia, Tesin, Adda, Oglio, and Po. There are likewise several lakes, the three principal of which are those of Maggiore, Como, and Lugano. Milan, with other countries in Italy, was long comprised under the general name of Lombardy. In the fourteenth century it became a duchy. The earl, sign of Prince Eugene, in 1706, put it in possession of the House of Austria, to whom, with the exception of the Sardinian Milanese, it continued subject during 90 years, until the victories of Napoleon in 1796. In 1797 it was formed into four departments, as the Cisalpine republic; but in 1814, after several other changes, the part belonging to the king of Sardinia was restored, and the remainder incorporated with the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, or Austrian Italy. The Austrian Milanese then formed, with the duchy of Mantua and the Valteline, the government of Milan. It is divided into eight delegations, and contains 7700 square miles, with 2,280,063 inhabitants. But after the battle of Solferino the Austrian emperor was obliged by the treaty of Villafranca, July 11, 1859, to cede this province to the kingdom of Sardinia, and it is now amalgamated with the new kingdom of Italy. The population of the Sardinian province in 1855 was 899,174.

MILAN, a city of Italy, capital of the above-named province, and the see of an archbishop. The city is 10 miles in circumference; but the garden grounds are extensive. It stands in a delightful plain, between the rivers Adda and Ticino, which communicate with the city by means of two canals. The cathedral, in the centre of the city, is a splendid specimen of Gothic architecture, and, next to St. Peter's at Rome, is the most considerable in Italy. This vast fabric is built of white marble, supported by 50 columns, and adorned, within and without, by a prodigious number of marble statues. The other public buildings are the university, several colleges, the convents, the hospitals, the theatres, the mansions of the minister of finance, of the minister of the interior, and of the archbishop, and the former ducal palace, now the residence of the Austrian viceroy. In the Piazza di Castello is an arena, in imitation of the amphitheatre of Verona, which is capable of containing 30,000 spectators. The college of St. Ambrose has a large library of manuscripts, 95,000 printed books, and a superb picture gallery. The chief trade of Milan is in grain (especially rice,) cattle, and cheese; and manufactures. Since 1840 the nobility have ceased to visit it, and it has therefore fallen off considerably; but the railways, when completed, will join it with Venice, Trieste, Turin, Genoa, &c., and add greatly to its prosperity. It has been many times taken in the wars that have desolated Italy. The French took it in 1796. It was retaken by the Austrians and Russians in 1799, but again possessed by the French in 1800, and retained by them till the fall of Napoleon in 1814. It is 280 miles N.W. by N. of Rome.

MILAZZO, or MELAZZO, a seaport of Sicily; in Val di Demona. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town; the former stands on a promontory, and is fortified; the latter has a fine square, with a superb fountain. It stands on a rock, on the W. side of a bay of the same name; 20 miles W. of Messina. The Pop., chiefly employed in the tunny fishery, was in 1831, 9206. Long. 15. 14. E. lat. 38. 16. N.

MILBORN-PORT, a town in Somersetshire, which has no market. It has manufactures of woollen cloth, linen, and hosiery. It is seated on a branch of the Parret; 2 m. E. by N. of Sherborn, and 114 W. by S. of London.

MILDENHALL, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday; seated on the Larke, a branch of the Onse; 12 miles N.W. of Bury, and 70 N.N.E. of London.

MILETO, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra; nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1783. It is 8 miles N.E. of Nicotera.

MILFORD, a town of Wales, in Pembroke-shire. It is elegantly and uniformly built, and stands on the N. side of Milford Haven, a deep inlet of the Irish Sea. The haven branches off into so many creeks, secured from all winds, that it is esteemed the safest and most capacious harbour in Great Britain. A railway now gives it direct communication with London, and it has steamers to the south of Ireland. Here the Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., landed, on his enterprise against Richard III. A quay and several good buildings were constructed by a company of Quakers from Nantucket. It is 6 m. W.N.W. of Pembroke, and 262 W. by N. of London.

MILFORD, a town of Pennsylvania, in Pike county, on the W. side of Delaware River; 120 miles above Philadelphia.

MILFORD, a town of Connecticut, in New-haven county; situate on a creek of Long Island Sound; 10 miles S.W. of Newhaven. Pop. 2455. There are a great many townships of this name in the United States.

MILFORD, New, a town of Connecticut, in Litchfield county, on the side of the Housatonic; 20 miles S.W. of Litchfield.

MILHAU, a town of France, department of Aveyron, seated on the Tarn; 20 miles N.W. of Montpellier.

MILHAUD, a town of France, department of Gard; seated on the Vistre. It is 9 miles S.W. of Nismes.

MILITSCH, a town of Prussian Silesia, seated on the river Bartsch; 27 miles N.N.E. of Breslau. Long. 17. 23. E. lat. 51. 32. N.

MILLEDGEVILLE, a town in North America, county of Baldwin, state of Georgia, of which it is the capital, the legislative assembly being held here; otherwise it is inconsiderable. It is situated on the Oconee; 170 miles S.W. of Savannah. Pop. 2095.

MILLPORT, a neat village and bathing-place on the Great Cambrac, Buteshire, 24 miles S. of Greenock; the railway to which place affords a great means of communication between it and Glasgow.

MIL0, (the ancient Melos,) an island of the Grecian Archipelago; 18 leagues in circumference; with one of the best and largest harbours in the Mediterranean. It produces plentiful crops of corn, excellent fruit, and wine; abounds in very good cattle, especially goats; and has mines of iron and sulphur. In this island are curious subterranean galleries, the roofs of which are covered with genuine capillary or plume alum, and the crevices of the rocks filled with pure sulphur. Here are two bishops; one of the Greek, and the other of the Latin church. At the commencement of the eighteenth century, the inhabitants amounted to above 20,000; but since that period it has grown under the yoke of Turkish despotism, and a considerable time must elapse before it can recover its former opulence and splendour. The population of the whole island does not at present exceed 1200.—On the E. side of the island is a town of the same name, 60 miles N. of Candia, and 100 S. by E. of Athens. Long. 25. 0. E. lat. 36. 41. N.

MILTENBERG, a town of the Bavarian states, principality of Leiningen; with a castle on a hill, seated on the main; 20 miles S.S.E. of Aschaffenburg.

MILTHORPE, a town in Westmoreland, with a market on Friday; seated on the Botha, near the mouth of the Ken. It is the only port in the county; and hence the fine Westmoreland slates and other commodities are exported. The manufactures consist chiefly of sacking, twine, and paper; there is also a respectable tannery, and in the vicinity are limestone and marble quarries. It is 8 miles S. of Kendal, and 255 N.N.W. of London.

MILTON, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday. It is noted for excellent oysters; and much corn, &c., is shipped here for the London markets. It is a place of great antiquity, and was the residence of the kings of Kent, and of Alfred, who had a palace here. It is 14 miles N.E. of Maidstone, and 40 E. of London.

MILTON, a town of Massachusetts, in Norfolk county; seven miles S. of Boston. Pop. 1565.

MILTON, a town of Virginia, in Albemarle county, situate on the Rivanna; 76 miles W. N.W. of Richmond.—Also the name of several inconsiderable townships in the United States.

MILTON ABBAS, or ABNEY MILTON, a village in Dorsetshire; 7 miles S.W. of Blandford. It formerly had an abbey, founded by king Athelstan; but the whole was swept away, except the church, in 1771, by the Earl of Dorchester, who erected on its site a large Gothic mansion. The village with its church and almshouse were built by the same nobleman.

MILVERTON, a town in Somersetshire; 152 miles from London: an ancient town. The population are employed in the manufacture of flannel, druggots, &c.

MILWAUKEE, a town of the United States, capital of Milwaukee county, Wisconsin. It stands on both sides of the river of the same name, near its entrance into Lake Michigan. Light-coloured bricks are extensively made here; 83 miles E. of Madison, 805 from Washington. Pop. in 1840, 1712; in 1845, 7500.

MINA, a town of Persia, province of Kerman; surrounded by a wall with towers, and seated on the Ibrahim, near its entrance into the Gulf of Ormus; 190 miles S. of Kerman. Long. 56. 50. E. lat. 26. 40. N.

MINAS, a town in S. America, in Buenos Ayres; seated near the source of the river St. Lucia, 34 miles N.E. of Maldonado. Long. 55. 5. W. lat. 31. 21. S.

MINAS GERAES, (general mines,) an interior province of the empire of Brazil, having Bahia and Pernambuco N., Bahia, Po. Seguro and Esp. Santo E., and Goyaz on the W. It is 600 miles long N. and S. between lat. 13. and 21. 10. S. and 350 broad, and its area is, perhaps, 150,000 sq. miles, or one-seventh larger than the United Kingdom. It owes its chief celebrity to its precious metals and diamonds; but besides this, it has many agricultural and pastoral advantages. It is by far the most mountainous and undulating district of Brazil. Almost all the metals and precious stones have been discovered and worked in this province, and altogether it is a highly favoured spot. Its climate is mild and healthy, its soil is fertile, and producing most of the more valuable woods, drugs, and grain. Much of it is still a wilderness, and occupied by the aborigines; other parts are among the most improved parts of the empire. Several of its most valuable gold mines have been worked by an English company and miners, since 1825; Gongo Socco is the principal of these. The agricultural produce consists chiefly of coffee, sugar, tobacco, and cotton. In education Minas Geraes is far in advance of the other provinces. Should the projected steam navigation of the Rio Doce, and the Rio S. Francisco be carried into effect, it will greatly promote the prosperity of the province. In 1820, the pop. consisted of 456,675 free, and 165,210 slaves; total 621,885. In 1844 it was estimated at 760,000 probably not including slaves or aborigines.

MINCIE, an arm of the sea, on the west coast of Scotland, which separates the Isle of Skye from Long Island.

MINCINGHAMPTON, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Tuesday, and a considerable manufacture of cloth, which, however, is much declined. It is pleasantly situated on a declivity, 10 miles west of Cirencester, and 98 west of London.

MINCIO, a river of Italy, which flows south from the lake Garda, forms the lake and marshes that surround the city of Mantua, and afterwards runs into the Po.

MINCHELDORF, a town of Austria, on the Triessing, 6 miles E.N.E. of Baden.

MINDANAO, an island in the Eastern seas, and one of the Philippines; about 300 miles long, and 108 broad. The coast is indented by numerous bays, and the interior is intersected by chains of lofty mountains, with intervening plains that afford pasture for immense herds of cattle. The sides of the hills and valleys are stony, and yet there are tall trees, of kinds unknown in Europe. Some of the mountains yield very good gold; and the valleys are well watered with rivulets. Rice is produced in abundance; as are also plantains, cocoa-nuts, sweet potatoes, and all the fruits common to tropical climates. There are neither lions nor tigers; but horses, bees, buffaloes, goats, hogs, deer, &c., are numerous. The fowls are, ducks, hens, pigeons, parrots, paroquets, and turtle-doves, besides many small birds. The inhabitants are generally of a low stature, with little heads, small black eyes, short noses, and large mouths. Their hair is black and straight, and their complexion tawny, but more inclined to yellow than that of other Indians. The chief trades are goldsmiths, blacksmiths, and carpenters, who can build pretty good vessels. Polygamy is practised. The government is partly feudal and partly monarchical. The prevailing religion is Mohammedanism, but the Spaniards have been in possession of a large portion of the sea-coast, to the W., N., and N. E., where they have planted colonies of Christians.

MINDANAO, the capital of the above island, and the residence of the sultan and his court, is about 6 miles up the Pelangy. Opposite stands the town of Selangan. Long. 124. 40. E. lat. 7. 9. N.

MINDELHEIM, a town of Bavaria, with a castle on a mountain; situate between the rivers Iller and Lech; 25 miles S.W. of Augsburg.

MINDEN, a government of the Prussian states; comprising the N.E. part of the province of Westphalia, and the former principalities of Minden, Paderborn, Rittberg, and Corvey, the bailiwick of Reckeberg, and the lordship of Rheda. It has an area of 2000 square miles, divided into 13 districts, with 330,000 inhabitants. The soil in general is fertile, and the pasturage good.

MINDEN, the capital of the above government, is one of the oldest towns in Germany, and, while the see of a bishop, formed a petty republic. Its convenient situation for trade and navigation, its saw-mills, breweries, sugar-houses, and wax manufactures, are great advantages to the inhabitants. Near this town prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, defeated the French, in 1759. It was occupied in 1806 by the French, and finally ceded to Prussia in 1814. Pop. in 1838, 7800. It is seated on the Weser, 43 miles E. of Osnaburg. Long. 8. 53. E. lat. 52. 18. N.

MINDORO, one of the Philippines; separated from Luzonia by a narrow channel. It is mountainous, and abounds in palm-trees and all sorts of fruits. The inhabitants are pagans, and pay tribute to the Spaniards.

MINEHEAD, a seaport in Somersetshire; market on Wednesday. It has a good harbour on the Bristol Channel, and carries on a small trade in wool, coal, and herrings. It is 35 miles N. of Exeter, and 160 W. by S. of London.

MINORELIA, a country of Asia; bounded W. by the Black sea, E. by Imeritia, S. by the river Phasis, and N. by Georgia. It is governed by a prince who is tributary to Russia. The face of this country, its products, and the customs and manners of the inhabitants, are similar to those of Georgia.

MINHO, a river of Spain, which rises in the N.E. part of Galicia, passes by Lugo, Orense, and Tuy; and, dividing Galicia from Portugal, enters the Atlantic at Caminha.

MINIEM, a town of Egypt, on the left bank of the Nile; 90 miles S. of Fayoum.

MINNESOTA, or MINKAY SOTOR, a state of the Western territory of the United States, organised March 1849, embracing the region around the head waters of the Mississippi river, from one of the branches of which it derives its name; area 150,000 square miles. According to the census of June, 1849, there were 4,500 free white males in the territory.

MINORCA, one of the Balearic islands, lying 50 miles to the N.E. of Majorca. It is 30 miles long, and 12 broad; and is a mountainous country, with some fruitful valleys. Some corn is raised, but the principal products of the island are wine, wool, cheese, and various fruits. It has been frequently in the hands of the British, by whom it was taken without the loss of a man, in 1798, but given up by the peace of 1802. Ciudadella is the capital; but Port Mahon claims greater consequence, on account of its excellent harbour, which is defended by two forts. Pop. 44,147.

MINSK, an extensive province of European Russia, comprehending the old palatinate of Minsk, and portions of Polotzk, Novogrodek, and Wilna. It extends from the Dwina, N. to the provinces of Volhynia, comprises an MISSISSIPPI, one of the United States of America, bounded N. by Tennessee, E. by Alabama, S. by Louisiana and the Gulf of Mexico, and W. by Pearl and Mississippi rivers. It is 339 miles long, and 150 broad; comprises an area of about 45,350 square miles, is divided into 56 counties, and contained 375,561 inhabitants in 1840, of whom 195,211 were slaves. The white population of the state in 1845 was taken as 247,880. The Mississippi territory was divided, in 1817, into two nearly equal parts, the western part forming the state of Mississippi, and the eastern forming the territory, afterwards the state, of Alabama. The surface is agreeably diversified with hills, plains, and valleys; the climate is mild, and the soil is in general exceedingly fertile in corn, sugar, indigo, garden vegetables, cotton, and various kinds of fruit. Cotton is the staple production. Jackson is the capital, but the largest towns are Natchez and Washington.

MISSISSIPPI (the Father of waters), a large river of North America, which rises from Lake Itasca, in lat. 47. 10. N. long. 95. 54. W., 1330 feet above the sea level, and falls into the Gulf of Mexico by several mouths, the principal of which is called the Balize: but below New Orleans, the port of the river, 105 miles from the sea, the country is not habitable, consisting of mudbanks, which confine the river above the height of the surrounding districts, as is the case throughout the state of Louisiana. The tributary streams are numerous; the largest is the Missouri, which it receives 1310 miles from its mouth; after which the character of the river is altered, and it becomes a furious, turbid current, bearing a great quantity of trees, &c., torn from the banks, and which it deposits in its course, forming sand and mud banks, &c. The other affluents are the Illinois, the Arkansas, and the Ohio. The general course of the Mississippi is from N. to S., but below the influx of the Ohio it is exceedingly crooked, and in it are many small islands. The water of this river is clear till it receives the Missouri. It is navigable for boats, upwards of 2000 miles, and its whole course is estimated at 3200; but from the sources of the Missouri, the true head of the mighty river, 4400 miles. It drains three-fifths of the whole territory of the United States, or above 1,000,000 square miles.

MISSOLOGIUM, a town of Western Greece; 10 miles W. of Livadia, on a strip of land projecting into the Gulf of Patras. It was taken by the Turks in 1826, when nearly all the inhabitants were slaughtered. Lord Byron died here on April 19th, 1824.

MISSOURI, one of the United States of N. America, formed in 1821, and lying on both sides of the Missouri river. It is the largest state, except Virginia, and contains an area of 64,000 square miles, and 383,702 inhabitants in 1840, of whom 58,240 were slaves. The census of 1845, gave the population at 511,937. The general face of the state consists of immense prairies, which, during the summer, have but little water, and the population is chiefly confined to the neighbourhood of its immense rivers. Its principal feature is the extensive lead mines in the S.E. part of the state, occupying a space of 45 miles by 70 miles, and containing the richest mines in the new continent, about 170 in number, affording a vast supply of the richest and purest ore. It is divided into 62 counties. The capital is Jefferson city, on the Missouri, but the principal place is St. Louis, situate on the Mississippi, 13 miles below the junction of the Missouri.

MISSOURI, a river of North America, which rises in the Rocky mountains, the source being not more than a mile from that of the Columbia which falls into the Pacific, and falls into the Mississippi 1200 miles from its mouth. In 1804-5, by direction of the government of the United States, it was ascended its whole length by Captains Lewis and Clarke, who gave the names of Jefferson, Madison, and Gallatin, to the three branches into which it is divided, 2858 miles from its confluence with the Mississippi. The Missouri is deep and rapid, and turbid for a great part of its course, and receives numerous rivers, many of them of considerable extent. The navigation may be deemed good for 2575 miles, when tremendous cataracts render a portage of about 3 miles necessary. Above these falls, shoals and rapids are frequent; and, as the river issues from the Rocky mountains, its banks for more than 5 miles are shut in on both sides, by the most tremendous rocks, which rise perpendicularly to the height of nearly 1200 feet. The banks, except a sterile district below the falls, are in general rich and beautiful: in some parts are extensive meadows, with hills beyond them covered with trees; in others, lower down, are long chains of high hills of a dark colour.

MISTAKEN CAPE, the S. point of the easternmost of the Hermit islands, about 9 miles E.N.E. of Cape Horn.

MISTAKEN POINT, a promontory on the W.

of Cape Race, at the S.E. point of the island of Newfoundland.

MISTASSIN LAKE, a lake of New Britain, lying E. of the S. part of James's bay, and surrounded by mountains called the Great Mistassins. It is above 250 miles in circuit, of a very irregular shape, being much intersected by long and narrow projections of land, and contains several islands. It is formed of the Mistassin and other rivers from the mountains, and its outlet is the river Rupert.

MISTRETTA, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona, 50 miles E.S.E. of Palermo. Pop. 8000.

MITCHAM, a village in Surrey, 7 miles S. W. of London. It is situated on the Wandle, on which are some snuff-mills, and calico-printing manufactories.

MITCHELDEAN, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Monday, seated at the N. extremity of the forest of Dean, 12 miles W. of Gloucester, and 116 W. by N. of London.

MITCHELSTOWN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with a college for 12 decayed gentlemen, and 16 gentlewomen. It is 23 m. N.E. of Cork, and 26 S.S.E. of Limerick.

MITTAU, a town of Russia, capital of the government of Courland, seated at the N. S.E. of Louis XVIII. for several years during his exile. The walls and moats of the town are decayed; the houses, for the most part, have no particular elegance, and a great many gardens and open places are contained within its circuit. Here are two Lutheran churches, a beautiful Calvinist church, and a Catholic church. It is seated on the Aa, 45 miles E. of Goldingen, and 270 N.N.E. of Warsaw. Pop. 12,000. Long. 23.43. E. lat. 56.40. N.

MITTENWALD, a town of Bavaria, capital of the county of Werdenfels, seated on the Iser, 12 miles N. of Inspruck.

MITTENBURG, a town of Austrian Illyria, with a castle on a rock, 30 m. S.E. of Trieste.

MOBILE, a city of the United States in Alabama, formerly in West Florida. When it came into the possession of the United States in 1813, it was a poor mean place, but has since been rapidly increasing in population and commercial importance. It is a great shipping port for cotton. It has a regular fortress, and stands at the mouth of a river, and at the head of a bay, of the same name; 170 miles E. of New Orleans. A part of it was burnt down in 1827, and 600 houses were consumed in 1839. Since that time it has been rebuilt with additional beauty and convenience. It is now one of the principal cotton ports, and its progress may be estimated by the increase of its population, which in 1830 was 3194, and in 1840, amounted to 12,672. Long. 88.3. W. lat. 30.43. N.

streams, which soon after enter into W. Florida. The river to the W. retains the name of Mobile; that to the E. takes the name of Tensaw; both are equally navigable, and they run nearly parallel into Mobile bay, which extends 11 leagues S. to the Gulf of Mexico.

MOCARANGA, or MOCARA, a kingdom on the E. coast of Africa, mistakenly called Monomotapa, which is the title of the monarch. It is bounded on the N. by Monomugi, E. by the Mosambique, S. by Sofala and Manica, and W. by unknown regions. It has several rivers, of which the Zambezi is the chief; is fertile in rice, millet, and sugar-canes, which last grow without cultivation; and the pastures feed vast multitudes of cattle, especially of the larger sort, but not any horses. There are a great many ostriches, wild beasts, and elephants; and several mines of gold and silver. The natives possess all the characteristics of the African negro. Their houses are built of wood, and covered with plaster; but they have few towns. Madrogan is the capital.

MOCAMPOUR, or MOCKWANPORE, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name, subject to the rajah of Nepaul. It is situate on the E. side of the Nepaul, 48 miles S.S.E. of Catmandu, and 136 N. of Patna. Long. 85. 20. E. lat. 27. 30. N.

MOCIA, or MORKA, a town of Arabia, in Yemen; seated on a small bay of the Red sea, near the strait of Bab-el-mandeb. On each of the points of land which enclose the road is a fort, but they are wretched structures. The town is of a circular form, surrounded by a wall, in which are six gates, and has a handsome appearance from the sea. It stands in a dreary plain, bounded by mountains, and consisting entirely of arid sand. The English, from Hindostan, at present engross almost exclusively the trade of this place, which is very considerable, especially in coffee; 140 miles S.S.W. of Sana, and 630 S.S.E. of Mecca. Pop. from 5000 to 7000. Long. 44. 25. E. lat. 13. 10. N.

MONBURY, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Thursday, and once had a manufacture of plush. It has a spacious church, and two meeting-houses. It is seated between two hills, 36 miles S.S.W. of Exeter, and 208 W.S.W. of London.

MODENA, or MODENESE, a duchy of Italy, bounded on the W. by Parma, N. by the Po, E. by the Papal states, and S. by the Appennines. It now includes the principalities of Massa and Carrara, and contains an area of 2960 square miles, with 403,000 inhabitants. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, and fruits of different kinds. It is now merged in the kingdom of Italy.

MODENA, the capital of the Modenese, and a bishop's see, with a citadel and a magnificent college. The cathedral, several of the churches, and some of the monasteries, are handsome structures. The ducal palace is richly furnished, and contains fine paintings. The inhabitants of Modena, estimated at 27,000, carry on manufactures of hemp, woollens, glass, leather, &c. It is seated between the rivers Secchia and Panaro, 30 miles E.S.E. of Parma, and 60 N.N.W. of Florence. Long. 10. 55. E. lat. 44. 38. N.

MODICA, a town of Sicily, in Val di Noto, capital of a district of its name; seated near the river Scicli, 10 miles W. of Noto. Pop. 23,500.

MONON, a strong town of the Morea, and a bishop's see, with a safe harbour. It is seated on a promontory projecting into the sea of Sapienza, 15 miles W. of Coron. Long. 21. 31. E. lat. 36. 53. N.

MOERS. See MEURS.

MOESKIRCH, a town of Bavaria, 18 miles N. of Constance.

MOFFAT, a town of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, near the river Annan; encompassed on all sides, except the S., by hills of different heights. Its delightful situation, and its mineral springs, attract much company; 20 miles N. by E. of Dumfries, and 50 S. of Edinburgh, near the Caledonian railway.

MOFFAT HILLS, the highest mountains of the S. of Scotland, on the N. border of Dumfriesshire. Hartfel, the most elevated, is 2300 feet above the level of the sea. They feed numerous flocks of sheep, and from them descend, in different directions, the Tweed, Clyde, and Annan; whose sources are but little distant from each other.

MOGADOR, or SUERRAH, a town of the empire of Morocco, with a harbour for vessels of a middling size. It is the emporium of all the foreign, and indeed of the entire trade of Morocco, and contains 10,000 inhabitants. The town is surrounded by walls, with batteries, and at high tides is almost encompassed by the sea. The streets are all in straight lines, and contain a great number of handsome houses. It is supplied with water by means of an aqueduct. The port is formed by a channel between the mainland and an island, above a mile in length. It is 180 miles W.N.W. of Morocco. Long. 9. 35. W. lat. 31. 28. N.

MOGUER, a town of Spain, province of Andalusia; it stands on the Rio Tinto, and traffics in wine and fruit. It has a castle, which, as well as the town itself, is much dilapidated. In a convent, now going to ruins, Columbus was sheltered by the prior Juan Perez de Marchena, who, by his influence with Queen Isabella, procured the necessary ships, &c., to be supplied to Columbus for his voyage to the New World, and thus deserves a great part of the glory attached to it.

MOHATS, a town of Lower Hungary, in the county of Burany. Here Louis, the last king of Hungary, was defeated in 1526 by the Turks under Soliman II., with the loss of 22,000 men; and, after the battle, suffocated by the fall of his horse in a muddy brook. In 1687 the Turks were defeated by prince Charles of Lorrain, with the loss of 10,000 men, their cannon, and baggage. It is seated at the conflux of the Corasse with the Danube, 23 miles N. by E. of Esseeck.

MOHAWK RIVER, a river of the state of New York, which rises 40 miles E. of Lake Ontario, and, after receiving many tributary streams, enters Hudson river, 10 miles above Albany. The Erie canal runs along its banks as far as Rome. About 3 miles above its junction with the Hudson it has a cataract, where the stream, 100 yards wide, falls perpendicularly about 70 feet.

MOHAWKS, a once powerful tribe of Indians living on Mohawk river. Most of them emigrated in 1776 into Canada, and none now remain in the United States, except in the W. territory.

MOHILA, one of the Comoro islands, between the N. end of Madagascar and the continent of Africa. The inland parts are mountainous and woody. It has a good road for ships. Long. 43. 59. E. lat. 12. 35. S.

MOHILEF, or MOGILEV, a considerable government of the Russian empire, to the E. of the government of Minsk. Its area is 18,500 square miles, and its population in 1838, 846,600, of whom the majority are Poles.

MOHILEF, the capital of the above government, is the seat of the government offices, and the residence of a Greek and a Catholic archbishop, and has a castle surrounded with an earthen mound. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade with Dantzic, Riga, and Memel. In July, 1812, a severe battle was fought in the neighbourhood of this place between the French and the Russians. It is situate on the Dnieper, 340 miles E.N.E. of Warsaw, and 364 S. of Petersburg. Pop. in 1834, 21,080. Long. 30. 24. E. lat. 53. 54. N.

MOHILL, a market town of Ireland, in the county of Leitrim, 94 miles from Dublin.

MOHURN, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, 18 miles N.N.W. of Castrin.

MOHRUNGEN, a town of Prussia, in the government of Konigsberg; situate on a lake of the same name, which almost surrounds it. Here is an old castle, formerly a convent belonging to the knights of the Teutonic order, in consequence of whose wars the town has frequently suffered. It is 56 miles S.S.W. of Konigsberg, and 56 S.E. of Dantzic.

MOHLAN, a town and fort of Arabia Petrea, on the coast of the Red sea, 130 miles S. of Akaba, and 180 N.W. of Medina. Long. 33. 50. E. lat. 27. 30. N.

MOIRA, a market town of Ireland, in the county of Down, with an excellent linen market; 90 miles from Dublin.

MOIRANS, a town of France, in the department of Isere; 25 miles S.E. of Vienna.

MOISSAC, a town of France, in the department of Tarn-et-Garonne, with a ruined abbey and a trade in corn and flour; situated on the Tarn, near its confluence with the Garonne; 18 miles N.W. of Montauban. Pop. in 1836, 6190.

MOLA DI BARI, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, seated on the gulf of Venice; 17 miles E. of Bari. Pop. 6000.

MOLA DI GAETA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, seated near the sea; 3 miles N.E. of Gaeta. Pop. 2000.

MOLD, a town of Wales, in Flintshire, with a market on Saturday. It is surrounded by rugged hills, rich in mineral treasures; 5 miles S. of Flint, and 191 N.W. of London.

MOLDAU, a river of Bohemia, and, next to the Elbe, to which it joins, the principal of that kingdom. By means of this river, and a railway 75 miles long, between Linz in Upper Austria and Budweis on the Moldau, the rivers Elbe and Danube are united.

MOLDAVIA, a province of Turkey in Europe, bounded N. by Austrian Poland, E. by Russia, S. by Turkey, and W. by Transylvania. The principal rivers are the Danube, Pruth, and Sereth. The W. part is mountainous, and there are some uncultivated deserts; but it abounds in good pastures, which feed a great number of horses, oxen, and sheep; it also produces corn, pulse, honey, wax, fruits, with plenty of game and fowls. Jassy is the principal town. It was the invasion of these principalities by Russia, that led to the war of 1854-5. By the treaty of peace, the boundary of Wallachia is extended beyond the Danube, and is placed under the suzerainty of Turkey. See WALLACHIA and Appendix.

MOLE, a river in Surrey, which rises on the borders of Sussex, flows N. to Dorking, and, passing beneath Box hill, is said to disappear in its vicinity, and to rise again near Leatherhead, and enters the Thames opposite Hampton Court.

MOLFETTA, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, seated on the gulf of Venice, 10 miles W. by N. of Bari. Pop. 11,500.

MOLIERES, a town of France, department of Tarn-et-Garonne; 11 miles N. of Montauban.

MOLINA DE ARAGON, a town of New Castile, in Spain, 27 miles S.W. of Darsena.

MOLISE, a province of Naples, in the form of a triangle, whose sides are 39 miles long, lying between Terra di Lavoro, Abruzzo Citra, Capitanata, and Principato Ultra. Pop. 27,000. It is a mountainous country, but fertile in corn, wine, saffron, and silk. It suffered much damage by an earthquake in 1805, when upwards of 20,000 of the inhabitants perished.

MOLUCCAS, or SPICE ISLANDS, a number of islands in the Indian Ocean, lying E. of Celebes. They include those from Mortay in the N. to Banda in the S., and from Mysol in the E. to Bouro in the W. The other principal ones are Gilolo, Ceram, Amboyna, Onby, Ternate, Tidore, Motir, Machian, and Bachian. Except Gilolo, they produce neither corn, rice, nor cattle; but they have oranges, lemons, and other fruits; and are most remarkable for spices, especially cloves and nutmegs. On the shores there are large rocks of coral, of great variety and beauty. They were discovered in 1511, by the Portuguese, who formed some settlements, but were driven out in 1607 by the Dutch, to whom the islands are at present subject.

MOLWITZ, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Brieg; famous for a victory gained by the Prussians over the Austrians in 1741. It is 4 miles W. of Brieg.

MOMBASA, a city on the coast of Zanguebar. It was seated on a peninsula, which has been since turned into an island, by cutting a canal through the isthmus. It is defended by a strong citadel, has a commodious harbour for large vessels, and carries on a great commerce with the islands and kingdoms adjacent, in gold, ivory, rice, flesh, &c. The king of Melinda, being a Christian, had a quarrel with the Portuguese governor, took the castle by assault, turned Mohammedan, and murdered all the Christians, in 1631. In 1729 the Portuguese again became masters of this territory; but since that time the natives have regained possession of it, and have treated in the most treacherous and hostile manner all Christians who have attempted to land. Mombaza is 75 miles S.S.W. of Melinda. Long. 39. 30. E. lat. 3. 15. S.

MOMFLOT, a town of Egypt with manufactures of linen; seated on the left bank of the Nile, 20 miles N.N.W. of Siout.

MOMPON, a town of New Granada, republic of Colombia, in the province of Carthagena, on the left bank of the Madalena; 112 miles S.S.E. of Carthagena. Pop. 10,000 or 15,000.

MOSA, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, to the S.W. of the island of Zealand, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. Stege is the chief town.

MONACO, a fortified seaport of Italy, capital of a small principality of the same name, between the county of Nice and the duchy of Genoa. The harbour is good, but not deep enough for large vessels; the principal export is olive oil. It is seated on a craggy rock that projects into the sea, 12 miles E.N.E. of Nice. Long. 7. 30. E. lat. 43. 44. N. Pop. of the principality 7000; of the town 1200.

MONAGHAN, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster; bounded N. by Tyrone, E. by Armagh, S.E. by Louth, S.W. by Cavan, and W. by Fermanagh. Its area includes 327,048 acres, part of which is occupied by woods and bogs, and a third part taken up by Lough Erne. A great part is, however, in a high state of cultivation. It contains five baronies, is divided into 19 parishes, and sends two members to parliament.

MONAGHAN, the capital of the foregoing county, was fortified with a castle and a fort, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It is 40 miles S.W. of Belfast, and 60 N.N.W. of Dublin. Long. 6. 49. W. lat. 54. 16. N.

MONASTER, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, seated near the sea; 70 miles S.E. of Tunis. Long. 11. 6. E. lat. 35. 50. N.

MONASTEREVAN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, situate on the Barrow, near the Grand Canal; 19 miles N. of Carlow, and 32 S.W. of Dublin.

MONASTIR, or BITOLIA, a town of European Turkey, province of Macedonia on the Nostrizza. It is the principal entrepôt for merchandise passing from Roumelia to Albania. Its pop. is overrated at 15,000; 82 miles N.N.E. of Jannina, and 90 miles W.N.W. of Salonika.

MONBLANC, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, on the river Francoli, 17 miles N. of Tarragona.

MONCALIERT, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated on an eminence near the Po; 5 miles S.E. of Turin. Pop. 7300.

MONCALVO, a town of Piedmont, province of Monterrat, seated on a mountain; 12 miles S.W. of Casal, and 30 E. of Turin. Pop. 3500.

MONCAON, a town of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, with a strong castle; seated near the Minho, 24 miles N. of Bruga.

MONCHABOU, a city of Birmah, and during a short period its capital, is surrounded by a wall and ditch, but is chiefly celebrated as the birthplace of Alompra, who afterwards became the deliverer of his country, and the conqueror of Pegu. It is 40 miles N. of Ummerapoora.

MONÇON, a town of Spain, in Arragon, with a castle; 6 miles S. of Balbastro, and 50 N.E. of Saragossa.

MONCONTOUR, a town of France, department of Vienne; 27 miles N.W. of Poitiers.

MONDEGO, a river of Portugal, which has its source near Guardo, crosses Beira by Coimbra, and enters the Atlantic near a cape of the same name.

MONDONEDO, an uninteresting town of Spain, in Galicia, and a bishop's see; 60 miles N.E. of Compostella, and 115 N.W. of Leon. Pop. 6000. Long. 7. 10. W. lat. 43. 30. N.

MONDOVI, a fortified town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, capital of a province of its name, and a bishop's see. In 1796 the French gained a victory here over the Austrians, which made them masters of the state of the king of Sardinia; and in 1799 they abandoned this place to a general pillage. It is seated on a mountain, near the river Ellero, 14 miles E. of Coni. Pop. in 1838, including the district, 15,921. Long. 8. 3. E. lat. 44. 25. N.

MONDRAGON, a town of Spain, in Guipuscoa; near which are some medicinal springs, and a famous mine of excellent iron. It is seated on the beautiful river Deva. Pop. about 2500, chiefly blacksmiths; 24 miles S.S.W. of St. Sebastian.

MONDRAGONE, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; celebrated for its medicinal waters; 13 miles N.W. of Capua.

MONFIA, an island on the coast of Zanguebar, to the N.E. of Quiloa; tributary to Portugal. Long. 40. 50. E. lat. 7. 50. S.

MONFLANQUIN, a town of France, in the department of Lot-et-Garonne; 20 miles N.N.E. of Agen. Pop. 5000.

MONFORTE, a town of Spain, in Galicia, with a castle; 19 miles N. of Orense.

MONGHYR, a celebrated town and fortress of Hindostan, capital of a district of its name in the province of Bahar; seated on the S. bank of the Ganges, which in the rainy season forms here a prodigious expanse of fresh water. The town, as distinct from the fortress, consists of 16 different bazaars, or market-places, scattered over a space of about a mile and a half long and a mile wide. The population is estimated at 30,000, employed in the manufacture of iron and steel goods; 80 miles E. by S. of Patna, and 300 N.W. of Calcutta. Long. 86. 36. E. lat. 25. 24. N.

MONGOLIA, or WESTERN CHINESE TARTARY, is bounded on the N. by Siberia, E. by Eastern Tartary, S. by the Great Wall of China and Leao-tong, and W. by Independent Tartary, and occupying most of the space between China and Asiatic Russia. Almost the whole territory consists of a level plain, which borders on the Altai and other mountain chains that form the Russian frontier. The inhabitants are decidedly distinguished both from the Turks and Tartars. They have neither towns nor houses, but wander in hordes, and live under tents, which they remove from one place to another according as the temperature of the different seasons, or the wants of their flocks require. They pass the summer on the banks of rivers, and the winter at the foot of some mountain or hill which shelters them from the piercing N. wind. Their ideas of honour, perhaps less ridiculous than those of our contemporaries, induce them rather to be content with the food which their flocks supply them, than cultivate the earth. During the summer they live only on milk, using, without distinction, that of the cow, mare, ewe, goat and camel. Their ordinary drink is warm water, in which a little coarse tea has been infused; with this they mix cream, milk, or butter, according to their circumstances. They have also a method of making a kind of spirituous liquor of sour milk, especially of that of the mare. The Mongols are free, open, and sincere.

They pride themselves chiefly in their dexterity in handling the bow and arrow, mounting on horseback, and hunting wild beasts. Polygamy is permitted among them; but they generally have only one wife. Their religion is confined to the worship of Fo. They have the most superstitious veneration for their lamas, to whom they give the most valuable of their effects in return for prayers, which they go about reciting from tent to tent. The Mongols are now split into a number of petty states, dependent on the empires of Russia and China. Those under the Chinese government may be divided into four principal tribes, which are the Mongols, properly so called, the Kalkas, the Ortous, and the Tartars of Kokonor.

MONHEIM, a town of Bavaria, in Neuburg, 8 miles N. of Donawert.

MONIKENDAM, a seaport of the Netherlands, in North Holland; with manufactures of soap and silk; seated on an arm of the Zuyder Zee; 8 miles N.E. of Amsterdaam. Long. 4. 38. E. lat. 52. 28. N.

MONISTROL, a town of France, in the department of Upper Loire. It is 14 miles S.W. of St. Etienne. Pop. 4000.

MONKLAND, OLD and NEW, an extensive district in Lanarkshire, Scotland, which is one of the principal seats of the iron manufacture and collieries in Scotland. The vast abundance of its mineral treasures have advanced it rapidly in population and importance. The soil is also fertile, and is occupied by thriving agriculturists. This district is also connected with no less than four great railways: the Garnkirk and Glasgow, the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, the Ballochney, and the Wishaw and Coltness railways; besides which it has the Monkland and Glasgow canal. It is 12 miles distant from Glasgow.

MONMOUTH, a town of Maine, in Lincoln county, seated on the Androscoggin; 15 miles W. by S. of Harrington, and 125 N. by E. of Boston. Pop. 1882.

MONMOUTH, a county of the state of New Jersey; capital, Freehold. Pop. in 1840, 32,909.

MONMOUTH, a borough of England, capital of Monmouthshire, with a market on Saturday. It is governed by a mayor, and joins with Usk and Newport in sending one member to Parliament. It was formerly defended by a wall and ditch, and contains the ruins of a castle in which the warlike Henry V. was born, hence called Henry of Monmouth; his cradle, and the armour which he wore at the battle of Agincourt, are still shown at Troy House, the seat of the Duke of Beaufort, about half a mile from the town. Here are two ancient churches, both curious structures. The inhabitants carry on some trade by means of the Wye, and there are iron and tin works in the neighbourhood. Monmouth is seated at the conflux of the Wye and Monnow, 25 miles W. of Gloucester, and 131 W. by N. of London. Long. 2. 46. W. lat. 51. 49. N.

MONMOUTHSHIRE, a county of England; 24 miles long and 20 broad, bounded on the N. by Herefordshire, E. by Gloucestershire, S. by the Severn, and W. and S.W. by the counties of Brecknock and Glamorgan. It contains 318,720 acres, is divided into six hundreds and 127 parishes, has seven market towns, and sends two members to parliament. Besides the Wye (which parts it from Gloucestershire), the Monnow (which separates it from Herefordshire), and the Rhyney or Rumney (which divides it from Glamorgan-shire), this county has, almost peculiar to itself, the river Usk, which divides it into two unequal portions. The eastern and largest part is a tract fertile in corn and pasture, well wooded, and abounding with limestone. The western portion is mountainous, and, in great part, unfavourable for cultivation; whence it is devoted to the feeding of sheep and goats. Monmouthshire was formerly reckoned one of the counties of Wales; and, from the names of its towns and villages, its mountainous rugged surface, and its situation beyond the Wye, which seems to form a natural boundary between England and Wales in this part, it certainly partakes most of the character of the latter country, though now comprehended in the civil division of the former. The higher ranks generally speak English, but the common people use the Welsh language. The chief wealth of the county arises from its agricultural and mineral products. During the last century a great number of iron-works have been established, and some tin-works; and the inland intercourse has been greatly facilitated by the Brecknock and Monmouthshire canals, as also by the several railways.

MONOMOTAPA. See MOCARANGA.

MONONGAHELA, a river of the United States, which rises in Virginia, at the foot of Laurel mountains, flows N. by Morgantown, where it becomes navigable, then enters Pennsylvania, and passes by Redstone to Pittsburg, where it meets the Alleghany, and their united streams assume the name of Ohio.

Montenegro contains few towns. The general appearance of the country is a succession of mountain ridges. The principal market for their produce is Cattaro. They are governed by a Vladika or Prince bishop, and are all of the Greek church, except the Katska who have separated from the Montenegrins.

MONTREAU, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne; celebrated for a battle fought here, on the 17th February, 1814, between the allies and the French, in which the former were defeated with great loss. It has a trade in corn, earthenware, wood, &c. It is seated on the Seine, at the influx of the Yonne; 15 miles S.E. of Melun. Pop. in 1836, 4379.

MONTREY, ST CARLOS DE, a seaport of New California, in a jurisdiction of its name. It comprehends an area of 300 yards long by 250 wide, is walled round, and has a fort. It stands on the S.E. part of a spacious bay of its name. It is an important seaport of the New State, but is eclipsed by its neighbour San Francisco. Long. 121. 34. W. lat. 37. 6. N.

MONTESA, a town and fortress of Spain, in Valencia; 9 miles W.S.W. of San Felipe.

MONTESQUIEU, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne; 15 miles S. S.E. of Toulouse. Pop. 2800.

MONTESQUIEU, a town of France, department of Gers; 11 miles W.S.W. of Auch.

MONTERRAND, a town of France, now forming a suburb to CLERMONT (which see).

MONTERRAT, a duchy of Italy, forming a part of the Sardinian states, and bound by Piedmont, the Milanese, and Genoa, from which last it is separated by the Apennines. It is very fertile and well cultivated, abounding in corn, wine, oil, and silk. Pop. 186,000.

MONTFORT, a town of France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise; 16 miles W. of Versailles.

MONTFORT, a town of France, department of Ille-et Vilaine; 12 miles W. of Rennes.

MONTFORT, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Utrecht, seated on the Yssel; 7 miles S.W. of Utrecht.

MONTFORT, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol; 6 miles N. of Feldkireh.

MONTGATZ, or MUNKACS, a town of Hungary, with a fortress, composed of three castles; seated on a craggy rock. It is encompassed by a great morass; and was defended three years by the wife of Count Tekeli, the leader of the Hungarian malcontents, near the close of the 17th century. It is 162 miles E.S.E. of Cracow. Long. 21. 55. E. lat. 48. 26. N.

MONTGOMERY, a borough of Wales, capital of Montgomeryshire, with a market on Thursday; it returns one member to parliament. Here are the ruins of a castle, which was destroyed in the civil wars. Of late years the town has received considerable improvements, the market-house has been enlarged, and a new county jail erected; many of the buildings are large and handsome. It stands on the side of a hill, at a short distance from the Severn; 24 miles S.W. of Shrewsbury, and 168 N.W. of London. Long. 3. 5. W. lat. 52. 26. N.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE, a county of Wales, 36 miles long, and 34 broad; bounded N. by Merionethshire, and Denbighshire, N.E. and E. by Shropshire, S. by Radnorshire, S.W. by Cardiganshire, and W. by Merionethshire. It contains 536,960 acres, is divided into nine hundreds and forty-seven parishes, has seven market towns, and sends one member to parliament. Though barren and mountainous in many parts, it has a greater mixture of fertile vale and plain than several of the Welsh counties. Its riches proceed from its sheep and wool, the hilly tracts being almost entirely sheep walks; and the flocks, like those of Spain, are driven from distant parts to feed on them during the summer. This county also affords mineral treasures, particularly lead; and it abounds with slate and lime. Plynlimmon is its principal mountain. Its principal rivers are the Severn, Vyrnew, and Tannat, all of which are noted for affording a variety of fish, particularly salmon.

MONTGOMERY, the name of the following counties in the United States:—In New York; capital, Fonda. Pop. in 1840, 35,818, in 1845, 29,643.—In Pennsylvania; capital, Morristown. ment of Loir-et-Cher, with a castle, seated near the Cher; 12 miles S.E. of Amboise.

MONTROSE, a town and seaport of Scotland, in Angus-shire, at the mouth of the South Esk. A little above the town the river expands into a wide lake called the Basin, into which the tide flows; so that at high water the town is almost surrounded by the sea. Fine quays have been erected, and two lighthouses. The harbour is very commodious, and has a dry and wet dock. Here are considerable manufactures of canvas, ropes, sheeting, linen, and thread. The salmon fisheries on the N. and S. Esk form a valuable branch of commerce, and also the exportation of corn; and the town generally has undergone great improvements and extensions within these few years. The most important public structure is the suspension bridge, connecting the town with the Inch over the principal branch of the South Esk, finished in Dec. 1829, under the superintendence of Capt. Sir J. Brown, who invented the chain-cable. At this place the Pretender landed on the 22nd of December, 1745, and embarked on the 14th of February following, 28 miles N.E. of Dundee. There are railways to Aberdeen, Perth, &c.

MONTSAUCHE, a town of France, department of Nièvre; 15 m. N.E. of Chateau-Chinon.

MONTSERRAT, a mountain of Spain, in Catalonia, on which is a monastery, with a chapel to the Virgin, resorted to by numbers of pilgrims. It is 26 miles N.W. of Barcelona.

MONTSERRAT, one of the Leeward Caribbee islands, discovered by Columbus, and so named by him from its resemblance to the mountain mentioned in the preceding article. It is about 9 miles in length and breadth; and the hills are covered with cedar and other trees. It belongs to the English, and is 30 miles S.W. of Antigua. Long. 61.7. W. lat. 16.48. N.

MONTVILLE, a town of Connecticut, midway between Norwich and New London. Pop. principally engaged in the whale fishery. There is a remnant of the Mohican Indians remaining in the township; 36 miles S.E. of Hartford. Pop. 1990.

MONZA, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan; famous for the treasury of St. John the Baptist, where, among other things, is the iron crown of the kingdom of Lombardy. Charlemagne was crowned here with it in 774, and Napoleon in 1805. It is seated on the Lambro; 8 miles N.E. of Milan. Pop. in 1837, 8378.

MOULTAN. See MOULTAN.

MOON, MOUNTAINS OF THE, (Gebel el Kumri) mountains of Africa; extending from West Africa, through Abyssinia, to the Indian sea. Their existence is now supposed only to exist in the fictitious geography of the middle ages, arising, perhaps, out of some fancied resemblance of the name to that given above. As far as present research has gone, there does not exist any mountain chain in the part indicated.

MOORFIELDS, a town of Virginia, chief of Hardy county, on the Potomac; 45 m. W. by S. of Winchester, and 180 N.W. of Richmond.

MOORSHEHADAD, a city of Hindostan, the capital of Bengal before the establishment of the English power. It is seated near the western arm of the Ganges. It is dirty, unhealthy, and has only the new British residence worth notice; 112 miles N. of Calcutta. Long. 89. 15. E. lat. 24. 12. N. Pop. estimated at 165,000.

MOOTAPILLY, a town of Hindostan, in the Guntoor circar, at the mouth of the Grande guma. Long. 80. 10. E. lat. 15. 35. N.

MOQUEHUA, a province of Peru, bounded by those of Lampa, Puno, Chucuito, Arica, and Arequipa. The chief products are wine, fruits, and olives. The capital, of the same name, is situate in a fertile valley, at the foot of the Cordilleras; 70 miles S. of Arequipa. Pop. 6000.

MORA, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on the Odilvor; 29 miles N.W. of Evora.

MORA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, on the Ebro; 18 miles N. of Tortossa.

MORA, a town of Spain, in New Castile; 18 miles S.E. of Toledo.

MORADABAD, a town of British India, in the province of Delhi. It is one of the most populous and flourishing seats of commerce in the Upper provinces. It has some good streets, but no public edifice of importance. It stands on the Ramagunga; 105 miles E. by N. of Delhi. The district of which it is the capital is well watered and fertile, though there is a great deal of waste. Sugar, cotton, and wheat, are the chief productions. Pop. about 1,500,000.

MORANT POINT, a promontory on the E. coast of Jamaica, on which stands a new iron lighthouse. Long. 75. 56. W. lat. 17. 56. N.

MORAT, or MURTEN, a town of Switzerland, canton of Friburg, with a castle. This town sustained a siege against the Duke of Burgundy, in 1476, in which his whole army was destroyed. It is 10 miles N.E. of Friburg. Pop. 1586.

MORATALAZ, a town of Spain, in New Castile; 22 miles E. of Ciudad Real.

MORATALLA, a town of Spain, in Murcia; 34 miles S.S.W. of Chinchilla.

MORAVA, a large river of Servia, which rises in Bulgaria, and, running through Servia by Nissa, joins the Danube at Semendria.

MORAVIA, German, MÖHREN, a province of the Austrian empire; bounded N. and W. by Bohemia, E. by Hungary, and S. by Austria Proper. With Austrian Silesia now annexed to it, its area is upwards of 10,000 square miles, and its population in 1851, 4,513,074. It is intersected by mountain ranges, but the most lofty ridges are diversified with fertile valleys and extensive plains; and it is watered by a great number of rivers and brooks. More corn is grown than the inhabitants consume, and much hemp and flax are raised. The principal manufactures are woollens, linen, cotton, iron, glass, paper, and gunpowder. From this country a sect of Christians takes its name, their doctrines having been first taught here, who have migrated to other countries, in consequence of the intolerance of the government; the inhabitants in general are Roman Catholics. The trade of the province will be vastly facilitated by the new railway from Vienna to Bochnia in Galicia, which passes through the valley of the Morawa, the chief river, and has branch railways to Brunn and Olmutz. Brunn is the capital.

MORAW, or MARSCHE, a river of the Austrian states, which rises in the mountains between Bohemia and Silesia, and receiving the Teya, on the confines of Austria and Hungary, separates these two countries as far as the Danube, into which it enters; 15 miles above Presburg.

MORAY FRITH, a considerable inlet of the sea, on the coast of Scotland, between Tarbetness, in Ross-shire, on the N., and Broughhead, in Morayshire, on the S. It extends in a S.W. direction as far as Inverness, and thence W. to the town of Beanley, where it receives the river of that name.

MORAYSHIRE, or ELGINSHIRE, a county of Scotland, 50 miles in length, and 20 along the coast; bounded on the N. by the frith of Moray, E. by Banff-shire, S. by Inverness-shire, and W. by that county and Nairnshire. It is divided into 18 parishes. The S. part is mountainous, and occupied by forests; but the greater part is rich, and produces wheat, barley, oats, and flax. The chief rivers are the Spey, Findhorn, and Lossie. The county town is Elgin. Elgin and Nairn-shires return one member to parliament.

MORBEGNO, a town of Austrian Italy, one of the handsomest and most commercial towns in the Milanese; seated on the Aida, 12 miles S.E. of Chiavenna. Pop. 2000. Long. 9. 35. E. lat. 46. 8. N.

MORUEYS, or OMMIRABIN, a river of Barbary, which rises in Mount Atlas, flows through the empire of Marocco, and enters the Atlantic at Azamor.

MORILLAN, a department in the N.W. of France, bounded N. by that of Côtes du Nord, and S. by the sea. It takes its name from a bay between Vannes (the capital,) and the island of Belleisle. It has extensive fisheries, and contained in 1836 a population of 433,552.

MORCONE, a town of Naples, provinces of Molise; 19 miles S.S.E. of Molise.

MOREA, (the ancient Peloponnesus), a peninsula of the kingdom of Greece, to which it is joined by the isthmus of Corinth. It is 180 miles long, and 120 broad, and forms the principal port of the new kingdom. The soil is fertile, except in the middle, where there are many mountains; and it is watered by several rivers, of which the Alpheus, Vasilipotamo, and Stromio are the chief. The principal towns are Tripolitza, Argos, Patras, and Nauplia; but the trade is inconsiderable.

It was taken by the Venetians from the Turks in 1687, and retaken in 1715. It remained in their hands till the erection of the kingdom of Greece, and contained above half a million of inhabitants, now reduced by war, &c., to half that number. See GREECE.

MORELIA. See ANTON LIZARDO.

MORELLA, a town of Spain, in Valencia, seated among high mountains; 80 miles N. of Valencia. It is the capital of its hilly district, and being on the frontier of Arragon and Valencia, becomes an important fortress in war time. It is a scrambling city, built like an amphitheatre, and girdled by Moorish walls and towers; it rises up in tiers, to the point of the hill, which is crowned by a castle; it has a noble aqueduct. It was the chief hold of the Carlist Cabrera, who here, in 1838, twice defeated the Christians, but it was bombarded and taken by Espartero in 1840. Pop. 6060; they are a wild, rude people.

MORET, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne, near the Seine; 12 miles S. S.E. of Melun.

MORETON HAMPSTEAD, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable trade; three meeting-houses, and a charity school. Here are the vestiges of two castles, or forts; and in the vicinity, are a Druidical temple, a large rocking-stone, and a cromlech. It is 12 miles W.S.W. of Exeter, and 185 W. by S. of London.

MORLAIX, a town of France, department of Finisterre; with a castle and a tide harbour. The church of Notre Dame is a singular structure, and the hospital is very handsome. It has a considerable trade in linen, hemp, and tobacco: it is seated on a river of the same name; 30 miles E.N.E. of Brest. Pop. in 1836, 7300. Long. 3. 52. W. lat. 47. 35. N.

MOROCCO, properly MAROC, an empire of Africa, comprehending a considerable part of the ancient Mauritania; bounded W. by the Atlantic, N. by the Mediterranean, E. by Algier, and S. by the Sahara. Its greatest length is above 590 miles; but it is nowhere more than 260 broad. It comprehends 4 kingdoms as follows, though Susc claims to be independent.

The soil, though sandy and dry in some places, is fertile in others; and the fruits, as well as the pastures, are excellent; but the country is not properly cultivated. The inhabitants are Mohammedans: of a tawny complexion, robust, and very skilful in managing a horse and wielding a lance; they are jealous, deceitful, superstitious, and cruel. There are great numbers of Jews, who carry on almost all the trade, especially by land, with the negroes; to whom they send large caravans, which travel over vast deserts, almost destitute of water. Besides woollen goods, their commodities are morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostriches' feathers; in return for which they have silks, muslins, calicoes, coffee, and drugs. In the deserts are lions, tigers, leopards, and serpents of several kinds. The fruits are dates, figs, almonds, lemons, oranges, pomegranates and many others. There is also much flax and hemp, but very little timber. The emperor is absolute. In 1859-60, hostilities broke out between Morocco and Spain. The Spaniards landed near Curta in November, 1859, and were in several engagements victorious. Tetnan was captured, and the Moors were forced to submit, and pay an indemnity, which, however, has not yet (1861) been fully discharged.

Morocco, (Arabic, MAROK'SH), a city of the foregoing empire; seated in a beautiful valley, formed by a chain of mountains on the N., and those of Atlas on the S. and E. Though not equal to Fez in magnitude and population, it is generally considered the capital, being the most usual residence of the emperor. It has nothing to recommend it but its great extent, and the royal palace. It is surrounded by strong walls: 8 miles in circumference. The mosques are very numerous, and some of them magnificent. The best houses are enclosed in gardens; but the generality of them serve only to impress the traveller with the idea of a miserable and deserted city. The Jews, who are numerous, have a separate town, walled in, and under the charge of an alcaid, appointed by the emperor. It has two gates, which are regularly shut every evening at nine; after which hour no person can enter or depart. Morocco is 90 miles E. of Mogador, and 400 S. of Gibraltar. Pop. 60,000 or 80,000. Long. 7. 35. 30. W. lat. 31. 37. 31. N.

MORON, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle; near it is a mine of precious stones. Pop. 7894. It is 30 m. S.E. of Seville.

MORETOI, one of the Sandwich islands; 7 miles W.N.W. of Mowee. Yams are its principal produce; but it has little wood. The coast, on the S. and W. sides, forms several bays. Long. 117. 14. W. lat. 21. 10. N.

MORPETH, a borough in Northumberland; market on Wednesday. It stands on the N. bank of the Wansbeck; and on the opposite side are the parish church and the ruins of a castle. Here are also a chapel of ease; a Roman Catholic chapel, two meeting-houses, a free grammar-school founded by Edward VI.; an English free-school, erected in 1792; a dispensary, opened in 1817; and a mechanics' institute, commenced in 1825. The other principal buildings are the town-hall, and the new county gaol, house of correction, &c. It returns one member to parliament. It is 15 miles N. of Newcastle, and 289 N. by W. of London, on the Berwick railway.

MORRIS, a county in the state of New Jersey; bounded by Bergen, Essex, Somerset, Hunterdon, and Sussex counties. Pop. 25,844.

MORRISTOWN, the capital of Morris county, has two churches, an academy, &c. The place is supplied with water by an aqueduct, and the Morris and Essex railroad connects it with Newark, and thus with Philadelphia and New York. Pop. about 2500. It is 28 miles N.W. of New York.

MORSONA, a town of Naples, in the Molise; 14 miles N.E. of Molise.

MORTAGNE, a town of France, department of Orne; famous for its serges and tanneries. It is 19 miles E.N.E. of Alençon, and 70 W. S.W. of Paris. Pop. 5800.

MORTAGNE, a town in the department of Nord, seated at the conflux of the Scarpe and Scheldt; 8 miles S.E. of Tournay.

MORTAGNE, a town in the department of Lower Charente, on the Gironde; 24 miles S.S.W. of Saintes.

MORTAGNE, a town in the department of Vendée, where a battle was fought between the royalists and republicans, in 1793, in which the former are said to have lost 20,000 men. It is 36 miles N. of Fontenay le Compte.

MORTAIN, a town in the department of Manche, on the rivulet Lunces, almost surrounded by craggy rocks; 18 miles E. of Avranches.

MORTARA, a town of the Sardinian Milanese; 22 miles S.W. of Milan.

MORTAY, or MARTEBO, an island in the Eastern seas; formerly subject to the sultan of Ternate. It is 80 miles in circumference, and thinly inhabited, but full of sago trees, which are cut by the people of Gilolo. Long. 128. 23. E. lat. 2. 15. N.

MORTLACH, a village of Scotland, in Banffshire. The ancient cathedral is now used as the parish church; 6 miles S.W. of Keith.

MORVEDRO, a town of Spain in Valencia, on the site of the ancient Saguntum; with the ruin of a Roman amphitheatre, &c. It is seated on a river of the same name; 15 miles N. of Valencia.

MOSA, a town of Arabia, in Yemen; 25 miles N. by E. of Mocha.

MOSAMBIQUE, a strait or channel of the Indian Ocean: between the E. coast of Africa and the island of Madagascar. It is narrowest in the middle, where it is 240 miles over.

MOSAMNIQUE, or MOZAMNIQUE, a city and seaport; the principal settlement of the Portuguese on the E. coast of Africa. It stands on an island of the same name, not more than three miles in length, and half as much in breadth, and about 2 miles from the continent. The city is handsome, and the buildings well constructed, especially the churches and convents; the fort, or castle, is about a musket-shot from the city. The Portuguese have generally a garrison here, a well-stored magazine, and a large hospital for sick sailors, but since the endeavours to suppress the slave trade, on which, most of the prosperity of the town was dependent, it has much declined. Their ships always call here in going to the East Indies; and the harbour is so commodious, that whole fleets may anchor and provide themselves with all necessaries. Pop. 2800. Long. 40. 45. E. lat. 14. 19. S.

MOSBACH, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden; with a castle, and manufactures of cloth and salt; seated on the Neckar, 18 miles E. of Heidelberg.

MOSBURG, a town of Bavaria, seated at the conflux of the Amber with the Isar; 24 miles N.E. of Munich.

Moscovy. See RUSSIA.

Moscow, formerly a duchy, but now a government of Russia; bounded on the N. by the government of Tver, E. by that of Great Volodimir, S. by the government of Kaluga and Resan, and W. by those of Tver and Smolensko. It is a fruitful country; and a considerable portion is laid out in gardens and orchards. Area, 10,000 square m.

Moscow, the capital of the above government, and formerly of the whole empire. Previous to the entry of the French, it was the largest city in Europe, the circumference within the rampart that inclosed the suburbs being 20 miles; but its population did not correspond with its extent. It contained within the ramparts 300,000 souls, and was the most populous city in the empire, notwithstanding the residence of the court was at Petersburg. Moscow is rendered memorable in history, for one of the most extraordinary events that ever took place. In June, 1812, the French entered Russia with such an immense army, that they threatened to sweep every thing before them like a torrent; and it was generally expected that if they once reached this city, which would afford vast resources for their army, as well as comfortable quarters for the winter, the object of the war would have been completed. On the 8th of September, the battle of Borodino took place; victory decided in favour of the French; and the Russians retreated off the field, leaving Moscow to its fate. The road being thus left open, the French entered this city on the 14th of the same month, with little opposition. But a sad reverse of fortune now took place, which preserved the Russian empire from ruin, and paved the way to the downfall of the French military power over Europe. Count Rostopchin, the governor, had formed the desperate resolution of setting the city on fire; which was so completely carried into effect, at the time the French had taken possession, that they were foiled in their last resource, and compelled to attempt their retreat, at the moment they thought themselves securely entrenched for the winter. Nothing now remained but to offer terms of peace to the Russians, which were rejected; they next proposed an armistice, which was refused; and, on the 19th of October following, they commenced their calamitous retreat from Moscow. The conflagration, the act of the Russian government, destroyed upwards of three parts of the town; and, shocking to relate, more than 30,000 sick and wounded soldiers, who were in the hospitals, perished in the flames. The old city was distributed into five divisions, all of which, not excepting the suburbs, have been rebuilt, with wider streets and greater uniformity in the private dwellings; and the population has nearly reached its former magnitude. The divisions are—1. The Kremlin, in the central and highest part of the city, surrounded by high walls of stone and brick, two miles in circumference. This division contained the ancient palace of the czars, where Peter the Great was born; also the cathedral with seven towers, besides other churches, the patriarchal palace, and the arsenal. The palace escaped the conflagration of 1812, but was damaged by the French on their leaving Moscow; it has since been rebuilt, with improvements. 2. The Khitatained the university, the printing-house, and many other public buildings, with all the tradesmen's shops. 3. The Bielgorod, or White Town, ran round the two preceding divisions, and took its name from a white wall, by which it was formerly surrounded. 4. The Semlainogorod environed all the other three quarters, and was so denominated from a circular rampart of earth by which it was encompassed. The last two divisions exhibited a grotesque group of churches, convents, palaces, brick and wooden houses, and mean hovels. 5. The Sloboda, or suburbs, formed a vast exterior circle round all the parts already described, and were invested by a low rampart and ditch. These suburbs contained, besides buildings of all kinds, orchards, gardens, corn-fields, much open pasture, and some small lakes, which give rise to the Neglina. The Moskwa, from which the city takes its name, flows through it in a winding channel: but, excepting in spring, is only navigable for rafts. It receives the Yausa in the Semlainogorod, and the Neglina at the western extremity of the Kremlin; but the beds of both these rivulets are nearly dry in summer. Moscow exhibited an astonishing degree of extent and variety, irregularity and contrast: some parts had the appearance of a sequestered desert; others of a populous town; some of a contemptible village; others of a great capital. The streets, in general, were very long and broad: some of them paved; others, particularly in the suburbs, were formed with trunks of trees, or boarded with planks like the floor of a moor. The places of divine worship, including chapels, amounted to above 1500: of these, 484 were public churches, some built of brick, stuccoed or white-washed, but the greater part were of wood, painted red; some had domes of copper, others of tin, gilt or painted green, and many were roofed with wood. They were richly ornamented within; and the pictures of the saints were decorated with gold, silver, and precious stones. Some of their bells were of stupendous size: they hung in belfries detached from the church, were fixed immovably to the beams, and rung by a rope tied to the clapper. In the cathedral of St. Michael the sovereigns of Russia were formerly interred, their bodies being deposited in raised sepulchres, in the shape of coffins, above the pavement. The cathedral of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was the most magnificent in the city, and had long been appropriated to the coronation of the Russian sovereigns. The foundling hospital, founded by Catherine II., was an immense pile of building, of a quadrangular shape, and capable of containing 8000 foundlings. Since the fire, the churches and chapels are less numerous than before, but those which have been rebuilt occupy the former sites. Moscow is the centre of the inland commerce of Russia, particularly connecting the trade between Europe and Siberia. The principal manufactures are those of silk, linen, cotton, paper, leather, and sugar. The navigation to this city is formed by the Moskwa, which flows into the Ocea, near Kolomna, and that river communicates with the Volga and also by a canal to the Don. It has a railway completed to St. Petersburg. 455 miles S. E. of Petersburg. Long. 37. 33. E. lat. 55. 46. N. Pop. in 1838, 384,562.

MOSELLE, a department of France, including part of the former province of Lorraine. It takes its name from a river which rises in the Vosges, waters Epinal and Toul, receives the Meurthe below Nancy, and, passing by Metz, Thionville, and Treves, enters the Rhine at Coblenz. The province is a poor district, although the soil is good; the inhabitants are in poverty and dirt. Agriculture, however, has made much advance. The chief products are corn, flax, hemp, and considerable quantities of light wine. Iron is every where abundant, and there are also manufactories of woollen, glass, paper, glue, leather, &c. Pop. in 1836, 417,003. Metz is the capital.

MOSENIA, a town of Persia, in Khusistan; 22 miles S. W. of Suter.

MOSKIRCH, a town of Germany, in the grand duchy of Baden, where the Austrians sustained a defeat in 1800; 22 miles N. of Stuttgart.

MOSKOE, an island on the coast of Norway, separated from the mainland by the Vestfjord. In its coast is the whirlpool of MAELSTROM (which see).

MOSQUITO SHORE, or MOSQUITO TERRITORY, a district of Central America, extending eastward from Honduras. It has never been subjugated, and recently its king has been recognised by England as an independent monarch. It extends from Cape Honduras to the Escuda de Veragua, and comprises the coasts of the Province of Nicaragua, Costa-rica and Veragua. Bluefields, on the river of the same name, is the capital, and now the residence of the king. It is in progress of improvement, and in 1846 the land was regularly surveyed and allotted. Our information regarding the territory and its apparently important capabilities is very imperfect.

Moss, a seaport of Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys; at the mouth of a river of its name, on the E. side of Christiania bay. Here are many saw-mills, and a large iron foundry, 28 miles S. of Christiania. Long. 10. 48. E. lat. 58. 38. N.

MOSULLA, a town of the kingdom of Congo, at the mouth of the Onzo; 220 miles S. W. of St. Salvador. Long. 12. 10. lat. 7. 50. S.

MOSTAN, a seaport of Dalmatia, and a Greek archbishop's see; seated on the Narzenza, 20 miles N. E. of Narenza. Long. 18. 37. E. lat. 43. 48. N.

MOSUL, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbekir; surrounded by high walls and defended by a castle and citadel. The houses are in several places gone to ruin; but it has a great trade, particularly in cloth, and all sorts of cottons and silks. At some distance from Mosul is a mosque, in which they pretend the prophet Jonah lies; on the opposite bank of the river is the village of Nunia, probably occupying the site of the ancient Nineveh. It is seated on the Tigris; 130 miles S.E. of Diarbekir, and 190 N.E. of Bagdad. Long. 43. 30. E. lat. 36. 20. N.

MOTIR, one of the Molucca islands; 20 miles in circumference, and valuable for its spices. Long. 127. 0. E. lat. 0. 10. N.

MOUAB, a town of Arabia, in Yemen; seated in a fertile country, 90 miles S.E. of Sana. Long. 46. 35. E. lat. 14. 20. N.

MOUDON, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Vaud; with a castle on the summit of a mountain; 12 miles N.N.E. of Lausanne.

MOULINS, a town of France, capital of the department of Allier. Its manufacture of cutlery is in great esteem; and the houses of the late Chartreux, and of the Visitation, are magnificent. It is seated on the Allier, over which is a fine bridge; 30 miles S. of Nevers, and 225 S.S.E. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 14,000. Long. 3. 20. E. lat. 46. 34. N.

MOULINS EN GILBERT, a town in the department of Nièvre, at the foot of the mountains of Morvan; 5 miles S.W. of Chateau Chinon.

MOULMEIN. See MAULMAIN.

MOULTAN, or MOOLTAN a province of Hindostan in the Punjab; bounded by Lahore, Afghanistan, Agimere, Sinde, and Beloochistan. Its products are cotton, sugar, opium, galls, sulphur, &c. In many parts there are fine camels, and a breed of excellent horses.

MOULTAN, the capital of the above province, surrounded with a fine wall 40 feet high, and four miles in circumference, is strongly fortified, and has a Hindoo temple of great celebrity. It is famous for its silks and carpets, and is situate in a pleasant and well cultivated district, 4 miles S.E. of Channah, or Acesines river, and 210 N.W. of Lahore. Pop. about 60,000. Long. 70. 7. E. lat. 20. 0. N.

MOULTON BAY, a bay in the English Channel, on the S. coast of Cornwall, between the Land's End and the Lizard Point. Within rises a lofty peninsulated rock, called Mount St. Michael, near the town Marazion, to which there is a dry passage at low water.

MOUNT DESERT, a fertile island on the coast of the state of Maine, in Hancock county; 15 miles long, and 12 broad.

MOUNT HOLLY, a town of New Jersey, capital of Burlington county; on the N. side of Rancocus creek; 7 miles S.E. of Burlington.

MOUNT VERNON, the residence and burial place of General Washington in Virginia, on the Potomac, 6 miles below Alexandria, much visited and hallowed.—Also the capital of Knox county, Ohio; seated on Owl creek.—Also the name of several townships and villages.

MOUNTNELLICK, a town of Ireland, in Queen's county, inhabited principally by Quakers. The wool-combing, maiting, and tanning businesses, the cotton manufacture, and bleaching, are carried on here. It is seated on a stream which falls into the Barrow; 5 miles N. of Maryborough, and 42 W.S.W. of Dublin.

MOUNTRATH, a town of Ireland, in Queen's county. In its neighbourhood are some iron-works; but the woollen manufacture forms the principal trade; 23 miles N. of Kilkenny, and 47 W.S.W. of Dublin.

MOUNTSORREL, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Monday; seated on the Soar, at the foot of a high mount or rock, of a sorrel-coloured stone, with which the town is chiefly built and paved. It is 7 miles N. of Leicester, and 102 N.W. of London.

MOURA, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, with an old castle; 34 miles S.S.E. of Evora. Population, 4000.

MOURAON, a town of Portugal in Alentejo, with a castle, on the borders of Spain; 28 miles E. by S. of Evora.

MOURZOUK, the capital of Fezzan, with a fortress, in which is the sultan's palace. It is situate on a rivulet, and supplied with water from a multitude of springs and wells. The medley which it presents to the eye, of the vast ruins of ancient buildings, and the humble cottages of earth and sand that form the dwellings of the present Arab inhabitants, is singularly grotesque and strange. It is surrounded by a high wall, with three gates, at which is collected a tax on all goods (provisions excepted) that are brought into the city. Its commerce, which is considerable, consists of foreign merchandise brought by the caravans from Cairo, Bornou, Mesurata, and other smaller troops of traders. Mourzouk is 290 miles S. of Mesurata, and 700 N.W. of Bornou. Long. 15. 35. E. lat. 27. 54. N.

MOUSTIERS, a town of France, in the department of Lower Alps, with a manufacture of porcelain; seated between two craggy mountains, 9 miles E. of Riez.

MOUZON, a town in the department of Ardennes, with a manufacture of serges; seated on the Meuse, 9 miles S.E. of Sedan.

MOWER, or MAUI, one of the Sandwich islands, 162 miles in circumference. A low isthmus divides it into two circular peninsulas, of which the eastern is double the size of the western. The mountains in both rise MUHLNERO, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseburg, with a castle; situate on the Elbe, 30 miles N.W. of Dresden.

MULDORF, a town of Bavaria, on the Inn; 23 miles S.S.E. of Landschut.

MURKUR, a town of Scotland, in Ayrshire, with manufactures of iron and coal tar, on the river Avy. 26 miles E. of Ayr. It has a railway to Old Cumnock, &c.

MUJAXAR, a seaport of Spain, in Granada, on a bay of the Mediterranean, 40 miles N.E. of Almeria. Long. 1. 55. W. lat. 37. 7. N.

MULDAU, or MOLDAU, a river of Bohemia, which rises on the confines of Bavaria, and, after receiving a number of rivers, enters the Elbe, opposite Melnick.

MULLHAUSEN, a city of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Erfurt. It was formerly an imperial city, but fell to Prussia in 1802, and was confirmed to that power in 1814. Here are various manufactures, and some flourishing schools. It is seated in a fertile country, on the Unstrut; 29 miles N.W. of Erfurt. Pop. 9400. Long. 10. 37. E. lat. 51. 10. N.

MULLHAUSEN, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, with manufactures of printed linens and cottons; seated in a fertile plain on the Ille, 24 miles S. of Colmar.

MULIVADDY, a river of Ceylon, which rises at the foot of a high mountain called Adam's Peak, about 60 miles N.E. of Colombo, flows westward, and enters the sea by several branches, 3 miles from Colombo.

MULL, one of the Hebrides of Scotland, 28 miles in length, and in some places of equal breadth, separated from the main land of Argyleshire by a narrow passage, called the Sound of Mull. There are many good natural harbours, and the ruins of several ancient castles are to be seen. The soil is for the most part rocky and barren, but the hills abound with springs, and are covered with sheep and cattle; these, with the fishery, and a considerable quantity of kelp, are the articles of commerce. The only town is Tobermory.

MULLINGAR, a town of Ireland, capital of West Meath. It is a place of good trade. It stands on the river Foyle, 38 miles W. of Dublin. Long. 7. 50. W. lat. 53. 30. N.

MULLUVIA, a river which rises in Mount Atlas, divides the empire of Marocco from Algier, and runs into the Mediterranean sea.

MULROSE, a town of the Prussian province of Brandenburg, seated on a canal cut between the Spree and Oder; 10 miles S.W. of Frankfort.

MUNCHBERG, a town of Bavarian Franconia, in the principality of Bayreuth, 16 miles E. of Culmbach.

MUNCHENBERG, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, with silk and woollen manufactures; 34 miles E. of Berlin.

MUNDA, a town of Spain, in Granada; 30 miles W.N.W. of Malaga.

MUNDEN, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Brunswick, situate on the Weira, at the influx of the Fulda, where their united streams form the Weser. Good millstones are found in the neighbourhood of the town. In the war of 1756 it was several times in the hands of the French, by whom it was again occupied in 1805. It is 10 miles N.E. of Cassel, and 13 S.W. of Gottingen.

MUNDERKINGEN, a town of Germany, in Wirtemberg, seated on the Danube; 9 miles N. of Buchau.

MUNDU, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name, extending from 23 to 23. N. lat., in the province of Malwah. It was anciently the capital of the province, and was then 22 miles in circuit, and contained many monuments of ancient magnificence; but it has fallen much to decay. It occupies the top of a large and lofty mountain, 25 miles S. of Ougein, and 110 N.N.W. of Burhanpour. Long. 75. 47. E. lat. 22. 50. N.

MUNGLORE, a town of Afghanistan, in the province of Cabul, 125 miles W. of Cashmere, and 135 E. of Cabul. Long. 71. 15. E. lat. 34. 15. N.

MUNGULHAUT, a town of Bengal, with a manufacture of coarse cotton cloths, situate on the Durlah; 20 miles N.N.E. of Rungpour.

MUNICH, one of the finest towns in Germany, and capital of the kingdom of Bavaria. It contained in 1840, 106,537 inhabitants. The houses are high, and the streets spacious, with canals in many of them. The palace is a stupendous structure, the interior magnificently adorned; and the cabinet of curiosities, the museum, the library, and the arsenal, merit attention. The cathedral of Notre Dame contains the tomb of one of the emperors, of black marble, adorned with statues of bronze. The chief attraction of Munich, however, is its noble galleries of painting and sculpture, called the Pinacotheca and the Glyptotheca. Its university, removed hither from Ingoldstadt in 1826, is the chief seat of learning in Bavaria, and is deservedly celebrated. The royal library has lately been removed to a noble building, and has 540,000 printed books, and 16,000 MSS. Munich is celebrated for the manufacture of telescopes and optical apparatus, and has also a royal porcelain manufactory. Institutions for charitable, literary, and scientific purposes are numerous. The large market-place, in which is the town-house, is very beautiful. Manufactures of silk, velvet, woollen cloth, and tapestry are carried on. Near the city are two other palaces, Nymphenburg and Schlesheim. Munich has often suffered in the wars of Germany, and in 1796 and 1800 it was taken by the French. It is seated on the Iser, 33 m. E.S.E. of Augsburg, and 62 S. by W. of Ratisbon. Long. 11. 34. E. lat. 48. 8. N. It has railways to Salzburg, Ratisbon, Frankfort, Leipzig, &c.

MUNNERSTADT, a town of Germany, in Franconia, situate on the Lauer; 13 miles N. of Schweinfurt.

MUNNYPOUR, a town of Birmanh, capital of the province of Cassay; 210 miles N.N.W. of Ummerapoor, and 410 E. by N. of Calcutta. Long. 94. 40. E. lat. 24. 30. N.

MUNSGEN, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wirttemberg, with a castle; 20 miles W. of Ulm.

MUNSTER, a province of Ireland. 135 miles long, and 120 broad; bounded on the N. by Connaught, E. by Leinster, and S. and W. by the Atlantic. It contains the counties of Clare, Tipperary, Waterford, Cork, Limerick, and Kerry, and 820 parishes. The principal place is Cork.

MUNSTER, a government of the Prussian province of Westphalia. It contains 2820 square miles, and is divided into 10 circles or districts; Munster Proper, Tecklenburg, Warendorf, Beckum, Ledinghausen, Koesfeld, Recklinghausen, Berken, Ahans, and Steinfurt. The chief rivers are the Ems and Lippe. The country is level, with some agreeable heights, but no mountains; and it has fruitful plains, fine woods, extensive heaths that feed much cattle, and good quarries of stone. This government consists, for the greater part, of the ancient bishopric of its name, which, on the secularization of church property, in 1802, was divided between Prussia, the duke of Oldenburg, and several other princes, all of whom became subject to Prussia in 1815.

MUNSTER, the capital of the foregoing government. The cathedral, the library of the chapter, and many antiquities, are worthy of notice. In 1535, a tailor, Bocol, called John of Leyden, king of the anabaptists, made himself master of the city; but it was retaken in 1536, after 14 months' siege, when John and two of his associates were tortured to death with red-hot pincers. The famous treaty, called the Treaty of Westphalia, which ended the 30 years' war, was concluded here in 1648. In the war of 1756 this city sustained several sieges, and was taken in 1759. In 1806 the French laid the inhabitants under a heavy contribution, and stripped the churches of their plate. Munster is seated on the Aa; 50 miles E.N.E. of Wesel, and 52 W.N.W. of Paderborn. Pop. in 1838, 19,763. Long. 7. 36. E. lat. 51. 58. N.

MURCIA, a province of Spain; bounded N. by New Castile, E. by Valencia, W. by Andalusia and Granada, and S. by the Mediterranean. It is 90 miles long, and 58 broad; and the principal river is the Segura. The soil is dry, and it produces little corn or wine; but oranges, citrons, lemons, olives, almonds, mulberries, rice, pulse, and sugar are plentiful. It has also a great deal of silk. The vale of Murcia is celebrated for the variety and richness of its culture. Pop. in 1833, 474,315.

MURCIA, the capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see. The inhabitants are computed at 35,390. A number of hands are employed in the working of bassweed, and there is also an extensive establishment for twisting silk, and a refinery of saltpetre. There are fine gardens about the city, in which are the best fruits in Spain. It was formerly fortified, but these, as well as many of its other marks of distinction, have disappeared. It is seated on the Segura, over which is a bridge; 27 miles N. of Cartagena, and 212 S.E. of Madrid. Long. 1. 16. W. lat. 37. 58. N.

MURFREESBOROUGH, a flourishing town of Tennessee, in Rutherford county; seated on an eminence in a fertile district, 32 miles S.E. of Nashville. Pop. 1500.

MURVIEDRO, a town and fortress of Spain, in Valencia. The long lines of walls and towers crown the height, which rises above the ancient Saguntum. This city was founded by the Greeks of Zacynthus (Zante) 1384 years B.C. It was formerly a seaport, but now the waters have receded more than a league. It was taken and destroyed by Hannibal 218 B.C.; but was afterwards rebuilt by the Romans. It has ever since been used by Goth, Moor, and Spaniard, as a quarry above ground; in the same way as they used Italic, near Seville. The present town of Murviedro (muri veteres, old walls) is straggling and miserable, containing about 5000 inhabitants, agriculturists, and wine-makers. This important and almost impregnable fortress, the key of Valencia, was surrendered to the French in 1811. Pop. 6273.

MUSA, a walled town of Arabia, in Yemen; 15 miles E. of Mocha.

MUSKAT. See MASCAT.

MUSKINGUM, a river of the state of Ohio, which runs S. into the Ohio, at Marietta, where it is 280 yards wide. See CAYAHOGA.

MUSSELBURGH, a seaport of Scotland, in Edinburghshire, near the mouth of the Esk, over which are three bridges to the suburb of Fisherrow. It enjoys many privileges, and has 7 incorporated trades. Besides the parish church, here are an episcopal chapel and four other places of worship. The principal manufactures are of salt, sail-cloth, hair-cloth, and netting. It is 5½ miles E. of Edinburgh, to which it is connected by a railway to its suburb of Musselburgh. It unites with Leith and Portobello in sending 1 member to parliament.

MUSTAGAM, or MOSTAGANEM, a seaport of Algiers, in the province of Tremecen, with three castles; 140 miles W.S.W. of the city of Algiers. Long. 0. 30. E. lat. 36. 20. N.

MUSUELA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, situate on the river Guadalquivir; 7 miles N.E. of Jean, and 50 N. of Granada.

MUTEODU, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore; noted for its manufacture of the glass used for making the rings which are worn on the wrists of the native women. It is 34 miles W. of Sera.

MUTTRA. See MATHURA.

MUTDEN, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in South Holland; seated on the Zuyder Zee, at the influx of the Veelt. It is 6 miles E.S.E. of Amsterdam.

MYCONI, an island of the Grecian archipelago; 30 miles in circumference. The soil is dry, and the mountains are of great height. Here are plenty of partridges, quails, woodcocks, turtle doves, rabbits, and wheatears also excellent grapes and figs. The harbour is open, and deep enough for the largest ships to ride secure from the N. wind. Long. 25. 21. E. lat. 37. 38. N.

MYSON, one of the Moluccas, of a triangular form, with a bold shore. The villages are built in the water upon posts; and there are forests visited by the birds of paradise, which are caught in great numbers. Long. 130. 0. E. lat. 2. 0. S.

MYSONE, an extensive province of Hindostan, lying between 11. and 15. N. lat., and now surrounded by the British territories of the Madras presidency, while the existing Rajah is also dependent on British protection. The area is estimated at 29,750 square miles, and the population about 2,500,000. The whole country is a table land, varying from 1900 to 4600 feet above the sea, with a gradual slope to the North. The country is in general dry, rugged, mountainous, and barren; but there are several rivers and mountain torrents, which by artificial means, serve to water rice-grounds, gardens, &c. In the forests are many elephants, and tigers are common. Oxen, buffaloes, and goats are numerous, and in the N.E. part many sheep are bred; but horses and asses are few. The chief products are rice, cotton, pepper, cocoa, and betel-nut; sugar-cane, butter, and oil. The whole of this country, with some other territories to the N. and E., and the provinces of Coimbatore, Malabar, and Canara, were subdued by Hyder Ali, a mussulman, who usurped the throne of Mysore in 1759, and made Seringapatam his capital. He was succeeded by Tippoo Sultan, who continued his father's state of warfare. On the termination of a war in 1792, Tippoo agreed to pay thirty lacs of rupees, and to cede one half of his dominions to the English and their allies, the Mahrattas and the Nizam of the Deccan. In 1799, a new war taking place, his capital was taken by the English on the 4th of May, and himself killed in the assault. A partition of his remaining territories took place, and on the 30th of June following, Kistna Rajah, then only five years old, was placed by the British on the throne of his forefathers. The dominions of the Rajah of Mysore are now divided into three great districts; Patana, to the S., Nagara, to the N.W., and Chattrakal, to the N.E.; so called from the three places where the chief officers are situate. The Patana district is by far the largest, and of itself comprises a much greater extent of territory than was ever before subject to the Mysore family.

MYSOORE, the capital of the foregoing province, was ruined by Tippoo Sultan; but since the English restored the ancient family, in 1799, and made it the rajah's seat of government, the town and fortress have been rebuilt, and the population is rapidly increasing. Mysore is 10 miles S. of Seringapatam. Long. 76. 50. E. lat. 12. 19. N.

MYTILENE. See METELIN.

MYTON, a town in N. Yorkshire, 2 miles from Aldborough.

N.

NAAS, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare; where the assizes are held alternately with Athy. It was anciently the residence of the kings of Leinster, but instead of advancing, its prosperity has evidently been declining during these 20 years past. It is 17 miles S.W. of Dublin.

NAB, a river of Germany, which flows S. through the kingdom of Bavaria, and enters the Danube a little above Ratisbon.

NABAL, a town of the kingdom of Tunis; celebrated for its potteries. Near it are several remains of antiquity. It is seated near the sea, 32 miles S.S.E. of Tunis. Long. 10. 19. E. lat. 53. 13. N.

NABBURG, a town of Bavaria, on the river Nab; 10 miles E.S.E. of Amberg.

NABLOUS, (anciently Neapolis,) a town of Palestine, capital of a country which was the ancient kingdom of Samaria. It is the residence of a sheik, who farms the tribute to the pacha of Damascus. Here is considerable trade, and the manufactures flourish more than in most cities of the east. The soil of the surrounding country is fertile, and produces a great deal of corn, cotton, olives, and some silk. Nabloous is 24 miles N. of Jerusalem, and 90 S.S.W. of Damascus. Long. 35. 24. E. lat. 32. 20. N.

NACO, a town of S. America, in Mexico, 50 miles N.W. of Valladolid.

NACOGDOCHES, a town of the United States, in Texas. It stands at the head of several small streams flowing into the Angelina river. Pop. about 1000.

NADIR, a town of Egypt, on the W. branch of the Nile; 28 miles N.N.W. of Cairo.

NAEFELS, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Glarus, near which, in 1388, an unparalleled victory was obtained by 350 troops of Glarus, assisted by 50 Schweitzers, over 15,000 Austrians. In memory of his heroic achievement, a chapel was built on the spot, which was re-built in 1779. It is 4 miles N. of Glarus.

NAERDEN, a strong town of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, at the head of the canals of the province, of which it is considered the key. In 1572 it was taken by Fernande de Toledo, son of the Duke of Alva, and all the inhabitants were massacred. In 1672 it was taken by the French, and retaken by the Prince of Orange, the following year. It is seated on the Zuyder Zee, 14 miles E.S.E. of Amsterdam. Long. 5. 11. E. lat. 52. 19. N.

NAGAMANGALA, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a citadel in the centre, both fortified with mud walls. In the outer town, a wide street extends all round, with short lanes on each side of the outer and inner wall. In the fort are two large temples, and a ruinous palace. It is 30 miles N. of Seringapatam.

NAGARA, or HYDER-NAGARA, a city of Hindostan, capital of the city of Bednore. It was formerly called Bidderru, and by Europeans, Biddenore; but received its present name in 1763, on being taken by Hyder, who made it his principal arsenal, and a place of great magnitude and commerce. It afterwards declined, being neither the seat of a court, nor of any public works, except the mint. In 1783 it was taken by the English, and re-taken soon after by Tippoo; but on his final defeat in 1799, it was ceded by the English to the Rajah of Mysore. It is 70 miles N. by E. of Mangalor. Long. 75. 3. E., lat. 13. 48. N.

Cabal; on the Cowmull, 70 miles W. by N. of Attock, and 120 S. of Cabul.

NAGOLD, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg, with a ruined castle; situate on a river of the same name, 15 miles W. of Tubingen.

NAOGRE, a city of Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name, in the province of Agimere; 50 miles N.W. of Agimere. Long. 74. 15. E. lat. 27. 9. N.

NAOPOAE, a city of Hindostan, capital of the eastern Mahratta territories. It is extensive and populous, but meanly built; and, excepting a small citadel, is open and defenceless; inhabitants in 1825, estimated at 151,000; 500 miles W. by S. of Calcutta. Long. 79. 11. E. lat. 21. 9. N.

NAOPURE, CHUTA (or Little,) a district of Bahar, Hindostan, constituting the S.W. British frontier, and included in the collectorship of Ramghur. It is one of the wildest and least cultivated districts of British India.

NAOYBANGA, a town of Hungary, and one of the royal free towns. The gold and silver mines are of great produce, and money is coined here. It is 30 miles N.E. of Zatmar. Long. 22. 54. E. lat. 48. 10. N.

NAHANT, a watering place in Massachusetts, in Lynn township. It consists of a rocky island, connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus of sand, just above the water, affording a delightful road to the inhabitable portion, which is washed by the tremendous surf of the Atlantic. It is much frequented for health and pleasure; 9 miles S. from Salem, and 14 E. from Boston.

NAHE, a river of Germany, which rises in the territory of Treves, above Birkenfeld, and enters the Rhine at Bingen.

NAHS, a town of Delhi, Hindostan, capital of a district of the same name; and a place of considerable strength. It is the residence of a Hindoo chief, tributary to the Rajah of Nepal. Long. 77. 8. E. lat. 30. 41. N.

NAIRN, a town of Scotland, and capital of Nairnshire, with a small harbour. It is seated at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the Moray frith, 18 miles N.E. of Inverness, and 194 N.N.W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 6. W. lat. 57. 38. N.

NAIRNSHIRE, a county of Scotland, 15 miles long, and 10 broad, bounded N. by the Moray frith, and enclosed on every side by the counties of Inverness and Moray. It is divided into four parishes, and sends one member to parliament in conjunction with Morayshire. The S. part is mountainous, but towards the N. it is level, and the soil abundantly fertile.

NAJERA, a town of Spain in Old Castile, now a decayed place of 3000 inhabitants, but once the court of Navarre, and here St. Ferdinand was crowned. In the Benedictine convent 35 of the royal families of Castile and Navarre are interred; 45 miles from Burgos.

NAKSIYAN, or NAKSCHIVAN, a town of Persian Armenia, formerly a large city, but ruined by Abbas I. who removed the inhabitants into the interior parts of Persia. Here are now some considerable bazars, caravanseras, baths, and other public buildings. It is 85 miles S.E. of Erivan, and 250 E. of Erzerum. Pop. above 10,000, chiefly Armenians. Long. 45. 30. E. lat. 38. 40. N.

NAMAQUAS, a people of South Africa, a branch of the Hottentot race. See HOTTENTOTS.

NAMSLAU, a town of Prussian Silesia, with a castle. It is situate among morasses, on the river Weyda, 29 miles E.S.E. of Breslau.

NAMUR, a province of Belgium, 30 miles long, and 20 broad, bounded by the French frontier, and by the provinces of Hainault, South Brabant, and Liege. It is pretty fertile, and has several forests, marble quarries, and mines of iron, lead, and coal. The rivers Meuse and Sambre divide it into three parts, nearly of equal extent. Before the French Revolution of 1789, the greater part of this province belonged to Austria, and the remainder to France. In 1794 the whole was seized by the French, and constituted for 20 years part of the department of Sambre-et-Meuse, and was incorporated with the kingdom of the Netherlands in 1815.

NAMUR, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see. It has a castle in the middle of the town, on a craggy rock, and several forts. The inhabitants were estimated in 1836, at 20,176. Fire-arms, swords, knives, and many other kinds of cutlery are made here. This city was the scene of a sanguinary conflict, between the allies and the French, in June 1815, and is noted in history as the scene of many early battles. It is seated between two mountains, at the confluence of the Maese and Sambre; 24 miles W.S.W. of Liege, and 32 S.E. of Brussels. Long. 50. E. lat. 50. 29. N.

NANCY, a city of France, capital of the department of Meurthe and a bishop's see. It is divided by a canal into the Old and New Town. The former, though irregularly built, is rich and populous, and contains the palace of the ancient dukes of Lorraine; and their tombs are in a rich saloon, which adjoins the church of the late Cordeliers. The New Town, whose streets are perfectly straight, was one of the finest in Europe, even before the magnificent works with which Stanislaus I., titular king of Poland, and duke of Lorraine, enriched it. The cathedral is a superb structure, and there are several other elegant churches. It was occupied by the allies in 1814. Nancy is seated in a delightful plain, near the river Meurthe; 30 miles S. of Metz, and 230 E. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 29,299. Long. 6 10. E. lat. 48. 42. N.

NANDIDROOG, a strong fortress of Hindostan, in Mysore. Since the restoration of the rajah, in 1799, it has been garrisoned by English troops. It is 25 miles N. by E. of Bangalore, and 64 E.S.E. of Seru.

NANPIO, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, a little to the E. of Santorin. It is 16 miles in circumference, but has no harbour, nor springs sufficient to water the fields. The inhabitants are all Greeks, and their chief trade is in onions, wax, and honey. The ruins of the temple of Apollo are yet to be seen, and consist chiefly of marble columns. Long. 26. 10. E. lat. 36. 15. N.

NANGASAKI, or NAGASAKI, a town and harbour of Japan, on the S.W. side of Kinsiu island. The entrance is picturesque, between land high and steep, and clothed with fir and cedar. It is strongly fortified. The country around is delightful and highly cultivated, with pleasant hamlets, gardens, and mountain streams. The port is well adapted for foreign trade, if the temper of the Japanese can be conciliated. It is one of the ports opened by the recent treaties for commerce with foreign nations.

NAN-KANG, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-si; seated on the lake Po-yang, 637 miles S. of Peking. Long. 113. 58. E. lat. 29. 33. N.

NANKING, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiang-nan. It is 17 miles in circumference, and about 3 miles distant from the great river Yang-tse-Kiang, from which canals are cut, so large that vessels may enter the town. It was formerly the imperial city, whence it is called Nanking, which signifies southern court; but, since the six grand tribunals have been removed to Peking, it is called Kiang-nan in all public acts. The place is greatly fallen from its ancient splendour, since its desertion as the capital by Kublai Khan; for it had a magnificent palace, which is quite destroyed, as well as many ancient monuments; and a third part of the city itself is desolate. The streets are narrow, but handsome and well paved; and on each side are shops neatly furnished. The public buildings are mean, except a few temples, the city gates, and a celebrated and beautiful tower of porcelain 200 feet high. The inhabitants were formerly estimated at 2,000,000, the city being above 30 miles in circumference. They have several manufactures in silk and wood. Here the physicians have their principal academy. Nanking is seated on the Yang-tse-Kiang river, 500 miles S.S.E. of Peking. Long. 113. 25. E. lat. 32. 4. N.

NAN-NGAN, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-si. It stands among plantations of sugar-cane, near the source of the Kan-Kiang, and the foot of the mountain Me-lin; 200 miles N.E. of Canton. Long. 113. 38. E. lat. 24. 48. N.

NAN-NING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quang-si; 1145 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 107. 45. E. lat. 22. 44. N.

NANSEMOND, a county of Virginia. A part of the Dismal Swamp is in it. Capital, Suffolk. Pop. 10,795, including 4530 slaves.

NAN-TCHING, a city of China, capital of Kiang-si. It has no trade but that of porcelain, which is made in the vicinity of Jantchoon. The country is so much cultivated, that the pastures are barely sufficient for the flocks. It is seated on the Kan-kiang, which flows hence into the lake Po-yang; 693 miles S. of Peking. Long. 115. 30. E. lat. 28. 36. N.

NANTES, a city of France, capital of the department of Lower Loire, and a bishop's see, with a university. It was formerly the residence of the dukes of Bretagne, who built a strong castle on the side of the river, which still exists. The cathedral contains the tombs of the ancient dukes, besides which there are a collegiate church and 11 parish churches. The bridges over the Loire, in which are some islands, are almost a league in length. The suburbs exceed the city in extent. A great quantity of salt is made in the territory of Nantes, both at the bay of Bourgneuf and in the salt marshes of Guerande and Croisic. Large vessels can come no higher than Paimboeuf, which is 12 miles from Nantes; but its quays are crowded with those of less burden than 200 tons. It has some building-yards for steam vessels, and also large naval store-houses. The inhabitants in 1836 were computed at 75,150. It was here that Henry IV. promulgated the famous edict, in 1598, in favour of the Protestants, which was revoked by Louis XIV. in 1685. Nantes is 58 miles S. by E. of Rennes, and 217 S.W. of Paris. Long. 1. 33. W. lat. 47. 13. N.

NANTEUA, a town of France, department of Ain; with manufactures of gauzes, taffetas, chintzes, &c.; situate on a lake of the same name; 18 miles E. of Bourg.

NANTUCKET, an island and county of the state of Massachusetts, which lies 8 leagues S. of Cape Cod. It is 15 miles long and 11 broad, including Sandy point, which makes a fine road for ships. The island was originally conveyed by the Earl of Stirling, in 1659, to nine proprietors: it is a joint-stock property to the present day, and the inhabitants (7030 in 1830) belong principally to the Society of Friends. It is one of the principal places for the sperm whale fishery, and has some few manufactures. It has also one town, now called Nantucket, but formerly Sherburne; 93 miles S.E. of Boston. Pop. in 1840, 9012. Long. 70. 8. W. lat. 41. 16. N.

NANTWICH, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Saturday. It has an elegant church, six meeting-houses, a free school, charity school, &c. The manufacture of salt was formerly considerable, but it is now confined to a single establishment; and the chief trade consists in the manufacture of shoes for the London and Manchester dealers. The principal dairies of Cheshire are about this town; and it has a considerable trade in cheese. It is seated on the Weaver, and by the Chester canal, which here forms a broad basin; 20 miles S.E. of Chester, and 164 N.W. of London.

The population of Naples Proper was estimated in 1734 at about 4,000,000; in 1819 at 3,034,191; and in 1840 at 6,177,598. In the description of SICILY is included the particulars of that portion of the kingdom. See the Appendix.

The climate of Naples Proper in general is extremely hot, especially in July, August, and September, and is said to be one of the most inconstant and unfavourable to valetudinarians. In some seasons it rains every day for six or seven weeks together; but the most disagreeable part of the climate is the sirocco, or S.E. wind, which is very common in May, and extremely relaxing. In winter there is seldom any ice or snow, except on the mountains. The country abounds with grain, the finest fruits and vegetables, rice, flax, oil, wine, saffron, and manna, and affords alum, vitriol, sulphur, rock-crystal, marble, minerals, and fine wool and silk. Besides the manufactures noticed in the account of the city of Naples, waistcoats, caps, stockings, and gloves are also made of the hair or filaments of a shellfish, which are warmer than those of wool, and of a beautiful glossy green. The principal mountains are the Apennines (which traverse this country from N. to S., branching out to the two extremities), and the celebrated volcano, Mount Vesuvius. The rivers are numerous, but inconsiderable; the chief are the Garigliano and Volturno. One of the inconveniences to which this kingdom is exposed, is earthquakes. The religion is Roman Catholic; and much intolerance had been shown by the late kings to religious and political differences.

NAPLES, a large and rich trading city of Italy, one of the finest in the world, capital of the above province, with a university. It is situate at the bottom of a bay, and is built in the form of a vast amphitheatre, sloping from the hills to the sea. Although the style of architecture is inferior to what prevails at Rome, and it cannot vie with that city in the number of palaces, or in the magnificence of the public buildings, yet the private houses in general are better built, and the streets are broader and better paved. No street in Rome equals in beauty the Strada di Toledo at Naples; nor can any of them be compared with the beautiful streets which lie open to the bay, where the excessive heat of the sun is often tempered with the sea breezes and gales wafting the perfumes of the Campagni Felice. The houses in general are five or six stories high, and flat at the top; on which are placed numbers of flower vases, or fruit-trees in boxes of earth, producing a very gay and agreeable effect. On the mountain St. Elmo, in a most pleasant situation, is a convent of Carthusians, on which much expense has been lavished, to render the building, the apartments, and the gardens, equal to the situation. Naples is admirably situated for commerce. The chief articles manufactured here are silk stockings, soap, snuff-boxes of tortoise-shell or of the lava of Mount Vesuvius, tables, and ornamental furniture of marble. Unhappily, of late years, one of the chief features of Naples have been its prisons. By the last Bourbon kings political offences were visited with cruel rigour, and men of rank and character, for mere suspicion, have been for long years immured in loathsome dungeons; the descriptions of which, since they have been thrown open, fill the mind with horror and disgust. Although the churches and convents of Naples are not to be compared with those of Rome in point of architecture, they surpass them in rich jewels, and the quantity of silver and golden crucifixes, vessels, and other ornaments. The cathedral is a grand Gothic edifice; and of all the palaces that of this king is not only the most magnificent, but in the best style of architecture. The harbour, which is spacious, is protected by a mole. The bay of Naples is one of the finest in the world, being almost of a circular figure, about 30 miles in diameter, shut out from the Mediterranean by the island of Caprea, and three parts of it sheltered by a circuit of woods and mountains. In 1806 it was again taken possession of by the French, under Musseua; soon after which Joseph Bonaparte was here crowned king of Naples; but on his removal to Spain, in 1808, the crown was conferred on Murat; but in 1815 king Ferdinand was restored. The Bourbon dynasty has again passed away, after years of tyranny and misgovernment. In Aug., 1860, Garibaldi crossed from Sicily to the mainland, and rapidly advancing towards Naples, Francis II. fled to Gaeta, when Garibaldi triumphantly entered the city with six attendants. Victor Emmanuel afterwards visited Naples, and assumed the sovereignty on Nov. 7, 1860. In 1861 the kingdom of the Two Sicilies was amalgamated with the new kingdom of Italy; 110 m. S.E. of Rome. Long. 14. 16. E., lat. 49. 50. N.

NAPOLI DE ROMANIA, or NAUPLIA, a seaport of Greece, in the Morea, and an archbishop's see; on a peninsula, at the head of a bay of same name. It has a large harbour, with a narrow entrance defended by a citadel. It is 20 miles S.S.W. of Corinth. Pop. 16,000. Long. 22. 48. E., lat. 37. 34. N.

NAPOLI DI MALVASIA, a seaport of the Morea, capital of the island of Malvasia. It has a fine harbour, defended by a good citadel, and a long wooden bridge, which joins it to the mainland. It gives name to that excellent wine called Malmsay; and was the ancient Epidaurus, famed for the temple of Æsculapius. It is seated on a rock, at the entrance of the bay of Napoli di Romania; 38 miles S.E. of Misitra. Long. 22. 58. E., lat. 36. 53. N.

more the appearance of a German than of a Russian town. In the suburb called Ivan-gorod are the stupendous remains of an ancient fortress, built by Ivan Basilowitz the Great, which impend over the steep banks of the Narova. In 1700 Charles XII. of Sweden obtained a victory here over Peter the Great. Five years after, the czar took the town by assault, and by his own personal exertions, saved it from pillage and massacre. The principal exports are hemp, flax, timber, and corn. It is situated on the Narova; 8 miles from its mouth, and 85 W.S.W. of Petersburg. Long. 28. 25. E. lat. 59. 23 N.

NARWAN, a town of Hindostan; capital of a fertile district of the same name, in the provinces of Agra; seated near the Scinde; 115 miles S. of Agra. Long. 78. 17. E. lat. 25. 40. N.

NASCA, a seaport of Peru, in the audience of Lima. It has a good harbour, and stands in a territory fertile in wine and sugar; 220 miles S.S.E. of Lima. Long. 75. 10. W. lat. 14. 45. S.

NASEBY, a village in Northamptonshire, famous for the decisive victory gained by the army of the parliament over that of Charles I. in 1645; 12 miles N.N.W. of Northampton.

NASHUA, a town of New Hampshire, near the W. side of the Merrimac river, and on the Nashua river. It has large water power and some cotton factories; 12 miles N.W. of Lowell, and 36 S. by E. of Concord. Pop. 6053.

NASHVILLE, a flourishing city of Tennessee; capital of Davidson county; seated on Cumberland river, 120 miles from its entrance into the Ohio river, and at the head of the steamboat navigation. There is a university, state-house, 10 churches, and numerous other public buildings. The pop. in 1830 was 5566. In 1844, 7000 within the city limits, but including the suburbs, 11,000. It is 177 miles S.S.W. of Louisville, in Kentucky, and 170 miles W. of Knoxville. Long. 86. 56. W. lat. 36. 2. N.

NASKOW, a town of Denmark, in the island of Laaland, with a convenient harbour; seated on a bay of the same name, 15 miles W. by N. of Marieboe.

NASSAU, an independent duchy of Germany, formed of the several principalities which formerly bore this name. It is bounded by the Prussian territory on the Lower Rhine, and the states of the princes of Aesse. It contains mines of iron, copper and lead, and the soil is fertile in some places, but the surface is for the most part woody and mountainous. The rearing of cattle and the culture of the vine are the principal occupations of the inhabitants. Area, 2186 square miles. Pop. in 1838, 386,221. The Duke of Nassau holds the ninth place at the smaller assembly of the German diet, and has two votes in the full assembly. See Appendix.

NASSAU, a town of Germany, in the above duchy. Opposite the town, on the other side of the river, and on a high mountain, formerly stood Nassauberg, a place of great antiquity, and the original seat of the Nassau family. Nassau is 32 miles W.N.W. of Frankfort. Long. 7. 52. E. lat. 50. 16. N.

NASSAU, an island in the Indian ocean, on the W. side of the island of Sumatra; about 120 miles in circumference. Long. 99. 40. E. lat. 2. 50. S.

NASSAU, the capital of the Bahama islands, on the N. side of the island of New Providence. It is pleasantly seated on some sloping ground facing the harbour, with the government house crowning it. It is one of the best towns in the West Indies, and the inhabitants, generally speaking, are very hospitable and attentive to strangers. Lat. 25. 5. 10. N. long. 77. 21. 14. W.

NATA, a seaport of Colombia, in the province of Panama; seated in a fertile country, on the bay of Panama, 68 miles S.W. of Panama. Long. 81. 5. W., lat. 8. 30. N.

NATAL, a district of South Africa, made a British colony in 1843. It lies between 28° 30' and 31° S. lat., with a coast-line of about 200 miles, and extends inland from 100 to 250 miles. Port Natal bay is the only good harbour, but the bar is too shallow to admit any large vessels; but it is being deepened and improved. The country abounds in pure streams, and the soil, though various, is generally fertile, producing corn, sugar, cotton, and other tropical plants; it is also impregnated with iron. Some parts of it produce two crops yearly. The climate is delightful, and very beneficial to European constitutions. Pietermaritzburg on the Urgeni is the capital, and near it is a magnificent cascade. The rainy season is from October to April. Fish abound in the rivers. A bishop was appointed to the diocese of Natal in 1853.

NATCHEZ, a town of the United States in the state of Mississippi. It is seated on the Mississippi, 520 miles W. of Savanna, and 292 miles above New Orleans. It is the chief emporium of the state, and has by the river a great trade in the export of cotton. Pop. 4800. Long. 91. 39. W. lat. 31. 34. N.

NATCHITOCHE, pronounced NAKITOSH, a town of Louisiana; chief of a county of the same name; on the Red River. Pop. 2000. Long. 93. 10. W. lat. 31. 45. N.

NATOLIA, or ANADOLI, a province of Asiatic Turkey; comprising the W. part of Asia Minor, the whole of which is sometimes called by the name. It is about 400 miles in length, from N.E. to S.W., and 370 miles from E. to W. It is mountainous, but generally fertile, and has considerable commerce. Pop. perhaps 4,350,000. The residence of the bey is at Kutaiah.

The chief manufactures are leather, soap, starch, gunpowder, turnery wares, &c.; and it carries on a brisk trade. It is seated on the Saale; 18 miles W.S.W. of Merseburg. Pop. 12,000. Long. 12. 0. E. lat. 51. 8. N.

NAUMBURG, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Leignitz, on the river Queis; 11 miles N.W. of Lowenburg.

NAUPLIA. See NAPOLI DI ROMANIA.

NAUVOO, a city in Hancock county, in the state of Illinois. It stands on the E. bank, and in a curve of the Mississippi river, about 181 miles above the mouth of the Illinois river; the river is here about 2 miles wide. It was the residence of the Mormonites or "Latter Day Saints," the followers of the pretended prophet and leader Joe Smith, one of the greatest infatigations of the age. The principal public buildings are Nauvoo House, a spacious hotel, and the Nauvoo temple, not completed, and upon the model of that of Solomon. The population amounted to about 7000, besides about 3000 of the body in the vicinity. Since the prophet was killed in an affray, the fraternity have bodily removed to their purchase in California. Nauvoo is 124 miles N. by W. of Springfield, and 891 from Washington.

NAVAN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Meath, seated at the conflux of the Blackwater with the Boyne. It has considerable trade in agricultural produce, 7 miles N.E. of Trim, and 25 N.W. of Dublin.

NAVARINO, a seaport on the W. coast of the Morea, with a large harbour, defended by two forts. It is memorable for the destruction of the Turkish and Egyptian fleet, by the English, French, and Russians, in 1827. It is seated on a hill; 10 miles N. by E. of Modon, and 88 S.W. of Corinth. Long. 21. 41. E. lat. 36. 52. N.

NAVARRIE, a province of Spain, containing the greater part of the ancient kingdom of Navarre. It is 75 miles long, and 60 broad, containing an area of 2475 square miles. Pop. scarcely exceeding 300,000, chiefly pastoral and agricultural. Though a mountainous country, abounding in game and iron mines, some valleys produce good corn and excellent wine. Pampeluna is the capital.

NAVARRIE, NEW, a former province of Mexico, now divided into various modern intendancies.

NAVARRIENS, a town of France, department of Lower Pyrenees, on the Gave d'Oleron; 26 miles S.E. of Bayonne.

NAVAZA, a little islet of the West Indies, between Haiti and Jamaica. It is high and rocky. Lat. 18. 25. N. long. 75. 1. W.

NAVIGATOR'S ISLANDS, a cluster of ten islands in the Pacific ocean; discovered by Bougainville, and explored by Perouse in 1787. They are called by the natives Opoun, Leone, Fanfoue, Maouna, Oyalava, Calinasse, Pola, Slika, Ossamo, and Ouero. Opoun, the most southerly and easterly of these islands, lies in long. 169. 7. W. lat. 14. 7. S. Maouna, Oyalava, and Pola, may be numbered among the largest and most beautiful islands of the South Pacific. They combine the advantages of a soil fertile with cut culture, and a climate that renders clothing unnecessary. The inhabitants are a strong and lusty race; scarcely a man is to be seen among them less than six feet high, and the women are in proportion. In disposition they are thievish, treacherous, and ferocious. Their villages are situate on creeks, by the seaside, and have no paths between them, so that they pass from one to another in their canoes, and thus they are almost constantly on the water. Their canoes, houses, &c., are well constructed; and they are much more advanced in internal policy than any of the islands in this ocean. See MAOUNA.

NAXIA, or NAXOS, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, 15 miles in length and 50 in circumference. It is fertile in grain, wine, oil, cotton, and silk, and its plains abound with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, fig, and mulberry trees. It is inhabited both by Greeks and Latins, and has a great many villages, but the population of the whole island does not exceed 18,000. The highest mountain is Zia, which signifies the mountain of Jupiter; but there are no antiquities, except some small remains of a temple of Bacchus.

NAXIA, the capital of the above island, and one of the most beautiful places in the Archipelago. It has two archiepiscopal sees, the one Greek and the other Latin. Here is no harbour, but the trade is considerable in barley, wine, oil, figs, cotton, silk, flax, cheese, salt, oxen, sheep, and mules. It stands on the S. side of the island, and is defended by a castle. Long. 25. 32. E. lat. 37. 8. N.

NAYAKANAHULLY, a large square town of Hindostan, in Mysore, with a citadel in the centre, both strongly fortified with mud walls. In the town a wide street extends all round, and has short lanes on each side. It has a manufacture of coarse cotton cloth, and in the vicinity are many palm gardens. It is 34 miles S.W. of Seru.

NAZARETH, or NASZERA, a town of Palestine, celebrated as the residence of Christ, in the early part of his life. The Latin convent is spacious, and the church is, after that at Jerusalem, the finest in Syria. Pop. about 3000; 50 miles N.N.E. of Jerusalem.

NAZE, or LINDENESS, the most southern promontory of Norway. Long. 7. 20. E. lat. 57. 30. N.

NEGAPATAM, a decayed city of Hindostan, in the district of Tanjore, on the coast of Coromandel. The port is not extraordinary, and is now not much resorted to; 50 miles E. of Tanjore, and 166 S. by W. of Madras. Long. 79. 56. E. lat. 10. 46. N.

NEGARA, a town of the island of Borneo, capital of the kingdom of Benjermassing, situate on the E. side of the river Benjer; 60 miles N. of the town of Benjermassing. Long. 114. 0. E. lat. 1. 40. S.

NEGOMBO, a seaport on the W. coast of the island of Ceylon, with a fort built by the Portuguese. It was taken in 1640 by the Dutch, who evacuated it to the English in 1796. It is 16 miles N. of Colombo. Long. 79. 55. E. lat. 7. 20. N.

NEORAI, an island on the E. side of the bay of Bengal, at the mouth of the Bassian river, the most western branch of the Irrawaddy, with an excellent harbour. Long. 94. 30. E. lat. 16. 0. N. It gives its name to a district adjoining, containing 9000 square miles, and a population of 80,000.

NEGRIL POINT, the most westerly promontory of the island of Jamaica. Long. 78. 23. W. lat. 18. 17. N.

NEGRO, R.O. See GUIANA, BRAZILIAN.

NEGROLAND, or NIGRITIA, a large country in the interior of Africa, through which the river Niger flows from W. to E. It is called by the Arabs, Soudan, a word of similar import to the European appellation, signifying the Land of the Blacks. It extends from long. 10. W. to 27 E., and from lat. 10. to 25. N.; being bounded on the N. by the Zahara, and the mountains which separate it from the states of Barbary, on the E. by Nubia and Abyssinia, on the S. by countries unknown and Guinea, and W. by Guinea, Fouti, and Zahara. Of this vast country little is known, more than the names of some of the towns and great kingdoms of which it is composed. Some parts, particularly on the river Niger, are said to be exceedingly fertile; other parts are represented as sandy and desert. The principal territory known is Bornou. The general character of the negroes who are the inhabitants of this region, is that of levity. They do not appear to want the feelings of humanity, nor are they more destitute of sagacity than other people of an equal degree of education; but, as their country supplies them with food by a very slight degree of industry, and there is little occasion for clothing amid the heat of their climate, they have a general habit of seeking present pleasure, and no care for the future. The only necessary of life that appears to be deficient is salt, which is the more wanted among them, in consequence of their subsisting chiefly on vegetable food; and it is a proverbial expression of a man's riches to say that he eats salt with his food. This important article they receive from Zahara, by caravans of travelling Arabs. They also receive arms, hardware, glasses, and trinkets from the W. by the Europeans, and in the interior by the caravans of Cairo, Pezzan, and Marocco. For these they give, in return, gold dust, ivory, and elephants' teeth. The kind of government that exists among the negro nations is by no means uniform. Many districts are governed by a number of independent petty chiefs, who are engaged in frequent wars with each other. In other places, the talents of individual chieftains have been able to reduce considerable tracts of territory under their dominion; and hence some flourishing towns have sprung up. Many of the towns are fortified with ditches and high walls. Domestic slavery prevails in a very great degree among all the negro states. When the tropical rains fall, or are so deficient that the sun burns up the face of the country, it is not uncommon for parents to sell their children, and even themselves, for bread. A free man may also lose his liberty by being taken prisoner in war, or on account of the crimes of murder and sorcery; and also in consequence of insolvency. The knowledge of the negroes, with regard to religion and all speculative subjects, is very limited; but they are superstitious, and implicit believers in witchcraft and magic.

NEGROPONT, or EGROS, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, 100 miles in length and 18 in breadth, anciently called Eubœa. It is near the N. coast of Livadia, and separated from it by the strait of Euripus, over which is a bridge. It abounds in corn, wine, oil, and fruits. Pop. 60,000.

NEGROPONT, a strong city, capital of the above island, and an archbishop's see, with a good harbour. The walls of the city are $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in circumference, but the suburbs are much larger. It is seated on a strait of the same name; 30 miles N.E. of Athens, and 260 S.W. of Constantinople. Pop. 6000. Long. 23. 54. E. lat. 38. 30. N.

NEHAVEND, a town of Irak, in Persia, famous for a battle fought near it between the caliph Omar and Yex Degerd, king of Persia, in 638, when the latter lost his life and kingdom. It is 200 miles N.W. of Isfahan. Long. 48. 10. E. lat. 34. 20. N.

NEIDENBERG, a town of Prussia, in the government of Königsburg, with a castle on a mountain; 75 miles E. of Culm. Long. 20. 20. E. lat. 53. 22. S.

NEOT'S, ST., a town in Huntingdonshire, with a market on Thursday, and a considerable trade in corn, &c.; seated on the Ouse, over which is a strong bridge; 9 miles S.S.W. of Huntingdon, and 56 N.N.W. of London.

NEOUNDON, a town of Birmah, with manufactures of japanned ware, seated on the Irrawaddy; 4 miles N.N.E. of Pagahm.

NEPAUL, or NEPAL, a kingdom of northern Hindostan; bounded N. by the Himalayn mountains, S. by the provinces of Bahar, Oude, and Delhi, E. by Bootan and the territory of the Rajah of Si Kim. The soil is productive, and in some places yields two crops in the year. The mountains of Nepaul contain mines of lead, copper, and iron; and, although commerce is not encouraged, it sends to Bengal ivory, wax, honey, resin, timber, bastard cinnamon, cardamoms, walnuts, &c.; and takes in return, muslins and silks of Bengal, carpets, spices, tobacco, and European goods. The government has been monopolized for many years by the tribe called Gorkhas, and is essentially despotic. In 1814, in consequence of the repeated encroachments of the Nepaulese, the British invaded their territories, and dictated to them a treaty of peace in 1816. By this treaty Nepaul is limited on the W. to the river Gogra; the British have gained possession of the province of Kumaon, and a British envoy constantly resides at Katmandoo, the capital of Nepaul. Pop. 2,000,000.

NEPEAN ISLAND, a small island in the South Pacific, opposite Port Hunter, on the South coast of Norfolk island.

NEPI, a town of Italy, in the papal states, remarkable for some Roman ruins, and a fine modern aqueduct, seated on the Triglia; 20 miles N. of Rome. Pop. 1500.

NERAC, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, divided by the river Brise into Great and Little Nerac. In the feudal times, this was the residence of the lords of Albert, whose stupendous castle is now in ruins. Pop. in 1836, 3684. It is 16 miles W.S.W. of Agen, and 67 S.E. of Bordeaux.

NERBUDDAH, a river of Hindostan, which issues from a lake on the S. confines of the province of Allahabad, flows W. for 700 miles, and enters the Gulf of Cambay below Barroon.

NERESHEIM, a town of Wirtemberg, with a late Benedictine abbey, on a mountain, whose abbot was a prelate of the empire. It is 15 miles W.N.W. of Donawert.

NERICIA, a province of Sweden, bounded by Sudermania, Westmania, Wermeland, and W. and E. Gothland. It is now included in the government of Orebro.

NERONDE, a town of France, department of Loire; 24 miles W. of Lyons.

NERONDES, a town in the department of Cher; 19 miles E.S.E. of Bourges.

The capital is Amsterdam, but the seat of government is at the Hague. The surface of the country is uncommonly level, and is covered with woods, corn fields, and vast meadows of the freshest verdure. The maritime provinces have undergone great physical revolutions, especially from the retreat and encroachments of the sea, along with the changes in the course of the Rhine. So lately as the 15th century, a great salt-water lake was suddenly formed to the S.E. of Dort, which overwhelmed 72 villages, and 100,000 inhabitants are supposed to have perished. To prevent the recurrence of such dreadful calamities, the Dutch began to secure their coasts, as also the banks of the great rivers, by dykes or mounds of earth, the erection of which has been justly considered one of the greatest efforts of human industry. The climate in the maritime provinces is humid and variable; in the interior it is more constant. The summers are warmer, and the winters colder than in England. The soil is in general fertile, and agriculture has been long prosecuted with care and success. The principal productions are corn, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, madder, and fruit. Cattle are reared in great numbers, and vast quantities of excellent butter and cheese are made for exportation. The principal rivers are the Rhine, with its different branches, and the Maese. These rivers and the multitude of canals with which the country is intersected, afford an easy and safe navigation, not only to all parts of the kingdom, but to the W. of Germany, the N. of France, and even to Switzerland. The lakes are comparatively inconsiderable; the principal is that of Haarlem, which is now being drained. During several centuries the Netherlands took the lead of all the neighbouring states, both in trade and manufactures, the linen of Holland, the lace of Brussels, the leather of Liege, the woollens of Leyden and Utrecht, and the silks of Amsterdam, and Antwerp, being known several centuries ago throughout Europe. From their situation, at the mouth of so many large rivers, both the Dutch and Flemish had an early and extensive trade. The number of vessels employed by the Dutch in the fisheries, particularly the herring fishery, is said to have exceeded that of all the rest of Europe. At a later date came their acquisitions in the East and West Indies, while they also carried on extensive transactions with America, and the coast of Guinea. The commerce of this country, however, experienced a woeful decline after its connexion with France. The new constitution resembles, in many respects, that of Great Britain; though it also approximates to the federal government of the United States of America, in consequence of the long existence of provincial customs, particularly among the Dutch. The royal power is vested in the family of Nassau-Orange, with the title of the King of Holland. The parliament is divided into two houses, the upper and lower house, the members of both being paid for their attendance. The supreme courts sit at the Hague. The Dutch have been long distinguished as a laborious and persevering people, not devoid of enterprise, but led much more rarely than the English and Americans into miserable speculations of doubtful success. Calvinism is the established religion; but there are no political disqualifications on account of religious tenets. The earliest accounts we have of the history of this country are from the Romans, by whom all the southern and central part was conquered, and called by them Belgium. After several political changes, the country came into the possession of the House of Burgundy, and by marriage, passed to Maximilian of Austria, father of Charles V. The latter united the 17 provinces into one state; but the bigotry and tyranny of his son Philip II, produced the separation of the seven united provinces. The other ten, however, continued under the Spanish crown till 1702, when Louis XIV. obtained possession; but after the battle of Ramillies in 1706, the Netherlands were brought under the power of the allies, and assigned to the Austrians by the peace of Utrecht. In 1741 the French under Marshal Saxe, recovered what the preceding generation had lost; but at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle the country was again restored to Austria. In 1792 the French overran the Austrian Netherlands; they were driven out of the country in 1793 but returned in 1794, and subdued every part of it; and in 1795 decreed it, with the territories of Liege and Upper Gelderland, an integral part of the French republic. To this country they gave the name of Belgium, and divided it into nine departments; but, in 1814, agreeably to the treaty of Paris, they evacuated all that part which formerly belonged to Austria and Holland; and the 17 provinces were united, and formed into an independent state. In November 1815, the French also ceded some frontier districts, and two fortresses, to the Netherlands; and in 1830, the southern or Catholic provinces threw off the yoke they had always borne with uneasiness, and formed a new kingdom under the ancient name of BELGIUM See Appendix.

chatel is one of the principal manufacturing cantons of Switzerland especially for watch-making in various branches, and which trade is principally centred near Le Locle and Chaux de Fond. From 100,000 to 120,000 watches are annually produced, which are exported to all parts of the world. Printed cottons and lace are also important branches of trade here. This district, along with that of Vallengin, was formerly a separate principality. On the death of the duchess of Nemours, in 1707, the sovereignty was claimed by Frederic I. of Prussia, as heir to the Prince of Orange, and his right was acknowledged by the states of the country, whose privileges and alliances he confirmed. In 1806 Neuchatel was ceded by the king of Prussia to the French marshal Berthier, and the grant was confirmed by Napoleon. In 1814 it was rescued from this subjection, and the Congress of Vienna acknowledged it a Swiss canton, though the nominal sovereignty of Prussia was preserved. This sovereignty became the subject of strong dispute in 1856. Area, 280 square miles, and in 1837, 58,616 inhabitants.

NEUCHATEL, the capital of the above canton, situate partly on the plain between the lake of Neuchatel and the Jura, and partly on the side of that mountain. The chief article of exportation is wine, produced from the neighbouring vineyards, and much esteemed; and it has manufactures of printed linens and cottons. It is 25 miles N.E. of Lausanne, and 25 W. of Bern. Pop. 5000. Long. 7.0 E. lat. 47. 5. N.

It is the largest place in the state, and is regularly laid out, and steam boats and other ships are built here; 121 miles S. by E. of Indianapolis. Pop. 4226.

NEW FOREST, a forest in that part of Hampshire, which lies between Southampton water and the river Avon. It is 20 miles in length, and 15 in breadth; and has advantages of situation, with respect to conveyance by water carriage and vicinity to the dock-yards, superior to every other forest, having in its neighbourhood several places for shipping timber. It was afforested by William the Conqueror, and was then 10 miles longer than it is now. His son, William Rufus, was killed in this forest by an arrow, shot by Walter Tyrrel, that accidentally glanced against a tree, the site of which is now pointed out by a triangular stone. Several considerable towns and villages are now included in the forest. The lord warden is appointed by letters patent, during the king's pleasure, and all the courts of jurisdiction are held at Lyndhurst.

NEW PROVIDENCE, the principal of the Bahama islands, although inferior in extent and fertility to many of the other islands, is the most populous. It is the seat of government, and probably obtained the preference of the first settlers from its superior harbour, and central position. It is more hilly than most of the others, and has some fertile tracts, which produce a variety of fruits, and particularly fine pine apples, which are exported in vast numbers to England and the United States. The most productive of its pine grounds is on Harbour island. It has several smaller articles of export, though but little trade. It is about 17 miles long, E. and W. by 7 broad, and the population in 1822 was 6208. In 1842, there were 3505 males, and 4055 females, together, 7560. Nassau, one of the best towns in the W. NEW RIVER, an artificial river of England, originally brought from Amwell, in Hertfordshire, to Islington, for the supply of the metropolis with water. It was finished in 1613, by Sir Hugh Middleton, a citizen of London, who expended his whole fortune in the undertaking. It has since been carried up to a spring near Hertford, called Chadwell, where the stream is also increased by a cut from the river Lea. The river, with all its windings, is 42 miles in length, and is under the management of a corporation called the New River Company.

NEW YEAR ISLANDS, small islands in the South Pacific, near New Year harbour; the resort of vast numbers of sea lions, seals, and a species of vulture.

NEW YORK. See YORK, NEW.

NEWARK, a borough in Nottinghamshire; governed by a mayor, with a market on Wednesday. It returns two members to parliament. Near the river are the splendid ruins of its ancient castle. The church, erected by Henry IV., is reckoned one of the finest in the kingdom. There are also three meeting-houses for dissenters, and a catholic chapel. The schools are a free grammar-school, and subscription and national schools. Here, in the midst of his troubles, died King John; and here Charles I., after his defeat at Naseby, put himself into the hands of the Scotch army, who afterwards gave him up to his worst enemies. Newark has a good trade in malt, corn, and coals, manufactures of coarse linens and lace, iron and brass foundries, extensive roperies, &c. Gypsum of a superior quality is found in the neighbourhood. It is seated on the Trent, over which is a bridge; 17 miles N.E. of Nottingham, and 120 N. by W. of London by the Great Northern Railway.

NEWARK, a city of New Jersey, capital of Essex county; with 17 churches. It is celebrated for its cider, and has a considerable manufacture of shoes. It stands on the W. side of Passaic river, near its mouth in Newark bay; nine miles W. of New York. Pop. in 1840, 17,290. Long. 74. 18. W. lat. 40. N.

NEW BEDFORD, a seaport town of the United States, in Massachusetts. It is regularly and well laid out, and is a prosperous place. Its inhabitants are principally engaged in the whale fishery; this port furnishes more ships for this purpose than almost the whole world besides. The town is connected with Taunton by a railway, 20 miles in length, and is seated on an arm of Buzzard bay; 50 miles S.E. of Boston. Pop. 16,000.

NEWBERN, a town of North Carolina, in Craven county; capital of a district of its name. It has a considerable trade in tar, pitch, turpentine, timber, corn, &c., and stands on a sandy point of land, formed by the conflux of the Neus and Trent; 96 miles E.S.E. of Raleigh. Pop. 3690. Long. 77. 3. W. lat. 35. 20. N.

NEWBOROUGH, or GOREY, a town of Ireland, in the county of Wexford; 25 miles N. by E. of Wexford.

NEW BRUNSWICK. See BRUNSWICK, NEW.

NEWBURON, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire; with a good harbour on the Frith of Tay. Here the large vessels belonging to Perth unload their goods into lighters. The principal manufacture is linen, and there is also a considerable export of grain. It is 10 miles S.E. of Perth.

NEWBURGH, a town of Wales, in the isle of Anglesey, governed by a mayor, with a market on Tuesday; 12 miles S.W. of Beaumaris, and 256 N.W. of London.

NEWBURG, a town of New York, in Orange county, on the W. side of Hudson river. Ships of considerable burden may unload at the wharfs, and many vessels are built here. It is 32 miles S. of Kingston, and 54 N. of New York. Population, 8933.

NEWBURY, a town in Berkshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Thursday. The manufactures of druggets, shallons, and broad cloths, formerly very extensive, are greatly declined; but a considerable trade is carried on by means of the Kennet and Avon canal. Here is a handsome parish church; also five meeting-houses, a charity school, and 65 almshouses. Two battles were fought near this town, between Charles I. and the parliament, in 1643 and 1644. It is seated on the Kennet; 56 miles S. of Oxford, and 56 W. of London, by the Great Western Railway.

NEWBURY, a town of Vermont, in Orange county, situate on the Connecticut; 50 miles N.N.E. of Windsor, and 60 E.S.E. of Burlington. Pop. 2578.

NEWBURYPORT, a seaport of Massachusetts, in Essex county, with seven churches and a court-house. Large quantities of rum are distilled here, and the inhabitants have a considerable trade with the W. Indies and the southern states. The harbour is safe and commodious, and was endeavoured to be improved by an expensive breakwater, recently constructed, and the business of ship-building is carried on largely. In 1811 the town suffered severely by fire. It is situate on the river Merrimac; 2 miles from the sea, and 35 N.N.E. of Boston. Long. 70. 50. W. lat. 42. 48. N. Pop. 7161.

NEWCASTLE IN EMLYN, a town of Wales, in Caermarthenshire; with a market on Friday. It had a fine castle, now in ruins. It is seated on the Tivy; 18 miles N.N.W. of Caermarthen, and 229 W.N.W. of London.

NEWCASTLE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Dublin; 10 m. W.S.W. of Dublin.

NEWCASTLE, a town of Delaware, capital of a county of the same name; with two churches. It was settled by the Swedes, in 1627, and called Stockholm; afterwards taken by the Dutch, and called New Amsterdam; and, falling into the hands of the English, it was called Newcastle. It is the oldest town on the river Delaware. There is a large establishment here, for steam-engines and machinery, belonging to the Newcastle and French town railroad. It is 35 miles S.W. of Philadelphia. Pop. 2737. Long. 75. 38. W. lat. 39. 37. N.

NEWCASTLE, a town of New South Wales, in Northumberland county; on the entrance of Port Hunter. It is prettily situated, and has several public buildings; but has declined, preference being given to Maitland, at the head of the navigation of the river Hunter; but is now again rising rapidly. Near it is a productive coal mine.

NEWCASTLE UNDER LYNE, a borough in Staffordshire, governed by a mayor; with markets on Monday and Saturday, and a considerable manufacture of hats. It returns two members to parliament. The throwing of silk is a very considerable branch of trade, and here are also a cotton mill, tanneries, malt concerns, &c., and in the neighbourhood are some iron-works. The villages around are entirely occupied with the manufactures of porcelain, stoneware, &c. The principal streets are broad, well paved, and lighted with gas, and the general aspect of the town is much improved of late years. It had four churches, afterwards reduced to one; and the castle, from whence it had its name, is quite demolished. Here are several meeting-houses, a free school, and 20 almshouses. It stands on a branch of the Trent, 15 miles N. by W. of Stafford, and 149 N.N.W. of London, on a branch of the N. Staffordshire railway.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, a borough and seaport in Northumberland, governed by a mayor, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It is situate among steep hills, on the Tyne, which is here a fine and deep river, so that ships of 300 or 400 tons burden may safely come up to the town, though the large colliers are stationed at Shields. The haven is so secure, that vessels, when they have passed Tynemouth bar, are in no danger either from storms or shallows. The town rises on the N. bank of the river, where the streets upon the ascent are exceedingly steep. Many of the houses are built of stone, but some of timber, and the rest of brick. Through this town went part of the wall which extended from sea to sea, and was built by the Romans, to defend the Britons against the incursions of the Piets, after all their trained youth had been drawn from the kingdom to recruit the armies of their conquerors. The castle, which is old and ruinous, overlooks the whole town. There are four parish and seven district churches, five chapels of the Scotch establishment, one for Roman Catholics, and seventeen meeting-houses belonging to different denominations. The exchange, churches, and other public buildings, are elegant; and the quay for landing goods is long and large. Here are a surgeon's hall; a large hospital, built by the contribution of the keelmen, for the maintenance of the poor of their fraternity; and several charitable foundations. This town has undergone such improvements within these few years, that it may rank with some of the most elegantly built in England. This improvement has been chiefly caused by the enterprise and genius of one individual, Mr. Grainger, a native of the town. It has a railway to Carlisle. Newcastle is situated in the centre of the collieries, which have for centuries supplied London, all the eastern, and most of the midland and southern parts of the Kingdom, with coal. This trade has been the source of great opulence to Newcastle; which, besides, exports large quantities of lead, salt, salmon, butter, tallow, and grindstones; and imports wine and fruit from the S. of Europe, and timber, iron, hemp, &c., from the Baltic and Norway. Ships are sent hence to the Greenland fishery. It also possesses manufactures of steel, iron, and woollen cloth; and in the town and vicinity are several glass houses. The first charter which was granted to the townsmen for digging coal, was by Henry III., in 1239; but in 1306 the use of coal for fuel was prohibited in London by royal proclamation, chiefly because it injured the sale of wood for fuel, great quantities of which were then growing about that city; but this interdiction did not long continue, and we may consider coal as having been dug and exported from this place for more than 400 years. A handsome stone bridge of nine arches connects this town with the ancient borough of Gateshead. It was erected in 1781, in place of the old one, which was carried away by an extraordinary flood in 1771. It sends two members to parliament; has railways to Carlisle, Berwick, and all places southward, and is 14 miles N. of Durham, and 272 N. by W. of London.

NEWCHURCH IN ROSSENDALE, a populous chapelry in the parish of Whalley, Lancashire, 20 miles north of Manchester. It has extensive cotton and woollen manufactures on the banks of the river Irwell. Pop. (1851) 16,918.

NEWENHAM CAPE, a rocky point of considerable height, on the W. coast of North America. It was discovered by Cook, in 1778. Long. 162. 24. W. lat. 58. 42. N.

NEWENT, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Friday, seated on a branch of the Severn; 8 miles N.W. of Gloucester, and 112 W.N.W. of London.

NEWFANE, a town of Vermont, chief of Windham county, situate on West River, 28 miles E.N.E. of Bennington, and 80 W.N.W. of Boston. Pop. 1403.

NEWFOUNDLAND, an island on the E. coast of N. America, between 47. and 52. N. lat. It was discovered by the northmen from Greenland, in the latter part of the 10th century; but their explorations having sunk into oblivion, it was re-discovered by Sebastian Cabot, in 1496; and, after many disputes with the French, it was ceded to the English in 1713. Its form is triangular; the N. point is separated from Labrador by the strait of Belleisle, and from this apex it is 350 miles in length to the base, which is 300 in breadth.

It is a mountainous, woody country, and very cold, being covered with snow five months in the year. The settlements of the British are chiefly confined to the harbours, the country near Placentia, and along the bays E. toward Cape Race and thence to Cape Bonavista. On the south coast the French have a settlement at the isles of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which is very important to their bank fishery. The west coast is almost entirely uninhabited, although more adapted for settlers. Of the interior very little is known. There are several extensive lakes, and many rivers, but few animals except deer, and no remnants of its original inhabitants. In the fishing season, which begins in May and ends in September, it is resorted to by at least 100,000 people, on account of the great fishing-banks to the S.E. of the island; for here they cure the cod, which is carried not only to England, but to the Mediterranean and the West Indies. Within a few years Newfoundland has rapidly increased in population and industry. In 1789 the number of its inhabitants was 23,300; it is now estimated at 100,000. The cutting down of wood still furnishes a large portion of employment during the winter. There is great plenty of game, fish, and fowl, but very little corn, fruit, or cattle. It was, with Bermudas, made a bishopric in 1842, the city of St. John's being the seat of the bishop.

NEW HANOVER, a county of N. Carolina, on the shore of the Atlantic. Capital, Wilmington. Pop. 13,312, including 6376 slaves.

NEW HARMONY, a village in Indiana, founded by a German society of "Harmonists" in 1814. They have removed to Economy, in Pennsylvania, 172 miles S.W. of Indianapolis.

NEW GRANADA. See GRANADA, NEW.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. See HAMPSHIRE, NEW.

NEWHAVEN, a town in Sussex, near the mouth of the Ouse, with a small harbour. The entrance of the river forms a good harbour, and it is intended to construct one of the noble Refuge harbours in Seaford Roads off the town, which will most materially affect the interests of this town. Ship-building is carried on here to some extent. It is 7 miles S. by E. of Lewes, and 57 S.S.E. of London.

NEWHAVEN, a seaport of Connecticut, capital of a county of its name. The half-yearly assembly of the state is held here in October. The city is on a beautiful plain, backed by two bold rocky eminences, called the East and West rocks, which from the top, 330 to 370 feet high, afford charming views. The city extends 3 miles E. and W. and 2 m. N. and S., and is laid out with great regularity, consisting of two parts, the old town and new township. In the central square of the old town is a row of three beautiful churches. On the W. side of the square are the buildings of Yale college, one of the oldest and most extensive, and successful institutions in the United States. The houses of the city are generally of wood and white-wash, and surrounded by gardens and shrubberies, and altogether has a quiet and rural aspect. It is connected with Hartford by a railroad. The harbour has good anchorage. It carries on a considerable trade with New York and the West India islands, and stands at the head of a bay; 4 miles N. of Long Island Sound, and 78 N.E. of New York. Pop. 14,390.

NEW HOLLAND, in Lincolnshire, the terminus of the railways from E. Lincolnshire and Manchester, at the Humber, opposite Hull.

NEWINGTON, an elegant modern suburb of the old town of Edinburgh. It forms the extreme south of the city.

NEW LONDON. See LONDON, NEW.

NEWMARKET, a town of Suffolk, with a market on Thursday. It is the most celebrated place in England for horse-races, which are held several times every year, chiefly in spring and in the months of July and October; and here Charles II. built a house for the sake of this diversion. It is 13 miles W. of Bury, and 61 N. by E. of London, to which it is connected by the Northern and Eastern Counties railway.

NEWMARKET, a town of Virginia, in Amherst county; on the N. side of James river, 100 miles above Richmond.

NEW MEXICO. See MEXICO, NEW.

NEWMHAM, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Friday, seated on the Severn; 12 miles W.S.W. of Gloucester, and 120 W. N.W. of London.

NEW ORLEANS. See ORLEANS, NEW.

NEWPORT, a borough of Hampshire, returning two members to parliament, and the chief town in the Isle of Wight; governed by a mayor, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday, and a manufacture of starch. It is seated on the river Cowes, which is navigable for small vessels; 17 miles S. by E. of Southampton, and 91 S.W. of London. Long. 1. 16. W. lat. 50. 42. N.

NEWPORT, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Saturday, and a handsome free-school. The church is of great antiquity, and was formerly collegiate: the other places of worship are, one for Roman Catholics, and two for Methodists. Here is a spacious market-hall; and in the neighbourhood are productive mines of coal, iron, and limestone. The surrounding country is very fertile, is enriched by many seats of note, and affords delightful views; 17 miles E. of Shrewsbury, and 139 N.W. of London.

NEWPORT, a village, formerly a borough, of Cornwall; 3 miles N. of Launceston, and 214 W. by S. of London.

NEWPORT, a town of Monmouthshire, with a market on Saturday. It is rapidly improving and thriving, from the increasing trade in iron, tin, and coal, and the consequent manufactures. It was formerly walled round, and defended by a castle, considerable remains of which are yet in being. Near it are the vestiges of a camp. It is seated on the river Usk; 19 miles S.S.W. of Monmouth, and 118 W. by N. of London.

NEWPORT, a decayed town of Wales, in Pembrokeshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, and the ruins of a castle. It is seated at the foot of a high hill, on a bay of the same name; 18 miles N.E. of St. David, and 320 W.N.W. of London.

NEWPORT, a seaport of Rhode island, chief town of a county of the same name, and the semi-metropolis of the state. It stands on the S.W. end of Rhode island, about 5 miles from the sea; and has 12 edifices for public worship, a flourishing academy, an elegant state-house, and a handsome public library. Its harbour is one of the finest in the world; and to the W. of the town is Goat island, on which is a fort. Newport has a considerable trade. It is 80 miles N.E. of New York. Pop. 8333. Long. 71. 15. W. lat. 41. 30. N.

NEWPORT, a town of the state of Georgia, in Liberty county; situate on a navigable creek, 8 miles above Sunbury, and 34 S.S.W. of Savannah.

NEWPORT, a town of Kentucky, chief of Campbell county; seated on the Ohio, opposite Cincinnati.

NEWPORT PAGNEL, a town in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Saturday, and a considerable manufacture of bonelace; seated on the Onse, 14 miles E.N.E. of Buckingham, and 50 N.N.W. of London.

NEWPORT PRATT, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, near the mouth of the Beatta; 8 miles W. of Castlebar. Long. 9. 21. W. lat. 53. 53. N.

NEWRY, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Down; situate on the side of a steep hill, by a river of the same name, which enters Curlingford bay, 2 miles below the town of Newry. Vessels of 200 tons burden can come up to the town; and, by means of the Newry canal to the river Bann, it has a communication with Lough Neagh. Newry was burnt by the Duke of Berwick, in 1689, but is now become the largest town in the county; and the trade and manufactures are rising rapidly in importance. It sends one member to parliament, and is 49 miles N. of Dublin. Long. 6. 20. W. lat. 54. 15. N.

NEWSTEAD, an insignificant village of Nottinghamshire, 8 miles N. by W. of Nottingham, with an abbey; a portion of which is rebuilt, and was the residence of the poet, Lord Byron, who is buried at Hucknall Torkard, a few miles distant.

NEWTON-IN-THE-WILLOWS, or Newton in Makerfield, a town of Lancashire; seated on the N. Western line, midway between Manchester and Liverpool, at the junction of the N. Western and N. Union lines. It has rapidly increased from this circumstance, and has two churches, besides a chapel for Congregationalists. A Church school has recently been erected. There is also a very large printing and stationary establishment, employing about 300 hands, at which the chief part of the work in connection with the London and North Western and other railways is executed. An extensive race-course in the neighbourhood is used annually for reviewing the volunteers of South Lancashire. The climate upon the whole is genial; and during summer, the walks in the environs are delightful. The town is lighted with gas, and lately a number of ornamental villas have been built in the vicinity; 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. by S. of Manchester, and 187 N.W. of London.

NEWTON, a town in the Isle of Wight, governed by a mayor; 5 miles W. of Newport.

NEWTON, a county in the state of Georgia; capital, Covington. Pop. 11,628.—Also a county in Mississippi; capital, Decatur. Pop. 2527.—Also a county in Missouri; capital, Neosho. Pop. 3790.

NEWTON, a town of Massachusetts, in a bend of Charles river, and which has here two falls affording great water power. The Boston and Worcester railroad passes through it, and here is the Newton theological seminary. Pop. 3351.

NEWTON BUSHIEL, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Wednesday, and a manufacture of woollen cloths; seated on the Teign, 15 miles S. by W. of Exeter, and 188 W.S.W. of London.

NEWTON DOUGLAS, or NEWTON STEWART, a town of Scotland, in Wigtonshire; situate on the Cree, which is navigable for small vessels to within two miles of the town. Here are manufactures of cotton and carpets, which have much declined, and several tan-works. It is 8 miles N. of Wigton, and 28 E. by N. of Port Patrick.

NEWTOWN, a town of Wales, in Montgomeryshire, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday; seated in a beautiful valley, on the Severn. It is the principal seat of the fine flannel manufacture in Wales, and is now in a very flourishing state. A new bridge has been erected, and the town is rapidly extending itself on the opposite shore. An extensive pottery, established in 1823, is carried on with great success. The church is an ancient edifice; beside which there are several meeting-houses, and a free-school; 9 miles S.W. of Montgomery, and 175 W.N.W. of London.

NEWTOWN, a town of the United States, New Jersey, the seat of justice in Sussex county; 60 miles N. of Trenton. Long 75. 2. W. lat. 41. 3. N.

NIANG-KING, a city of China, capital of the W. part of the province of Kiang-nan. It is defended by a fort, and seated on the Kiang-ka; 575 miles S. of Peking. Long. 116. 45. E. lat. 30. 37. N.

NIAN-LO, a city of China, of the first rank; in the province of Hou-quang. It has a considerable trade, and stands in a vast plain on the river Han; 175 miles S.S.W. of Peking. Long. 112. 3. E. lat. 31. 14. N.

NIAGARA, a river of North America, which forms the communication between the lakes Erie and Ontario, and flows from S. to N. about 36 miles. At the head of this river, on its western shore, is Fort Erie; and 18 miles below this are those remarkable falls, (Indian O-niaw-ga-rab—the 'thunder of waters') which are reckoned among the greatest natural curiosities in the world. The river is here 740 yards wide. The half mile immediately above the cataracts is a rapid, in which the water falls 58 feet: it is then thrown, with astonishing grandeur, down a stupendous precipice of 163 feet perpendicular, in three distinct and collateral sheets; and, in a rapid that extends to the distance of 9 miles below, falls nearly as much more. The river then flows in a deep channel till it enters Lake Ontario, at Fort Niagara. It is crossed by a wire-ropo suspension bridge, completed in 1848, which must be rather a monument of man's presumption than a work of utility.

NIAGARA, a town and fort of New York, in a county of the same name, on the E. side of the river Niagara, at its entrance into Lake Ontario, and opposite Newark, in Upper Canada. The fort was erected by the French, in 1751, and was taken from them in 1759, by Sir William Johnson. In 1796 it was surrendered to the United States; it was again taken by the British in 1803, and the town destroyed, but it has since been rebuilt, and is a flourishing place; 18 miles below the cataracts, and 80 N.W. of Williamsburg. Long. 79. 5. W. lat. 43. 4. N.

NIAS, a small island, near the W. coast of the island of Sumatra. Long. 97. 0. E. lat. 0. 40. N.

NIBE, a town of Denmark, in North Jutland, 9 miles W.S.W. of Alburg.

NIBIANO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma; 16 miles S.W. of Piacenza.

NICARAGUA, a province of Central America, republic of Guatimala; bounded on the N. by Honduras, E. by the Atlantic ocean, S.E. by Costa Rica, and S.W. by the Pacific ocean. It is 400 miles from E. to W., and 120 from N. to S. It is well watered by lakes and rivers, and produces plenty of sugar, cochineal, and fine chocolate. Leon de Nicaragua is the capital.

NICARAGUA, a lake in the foregoing province, 350 miles in circumference. It is interspersed with islands, and abounds in fishes, but is infested with alligators. The S.W. extremity is only a few leagues from the Pacific ocean, and the S.E. end communicates with the Atlantic ocean, by the river St. Juan.

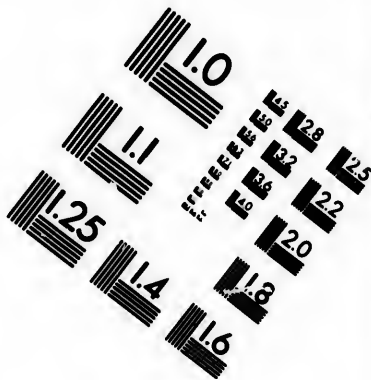

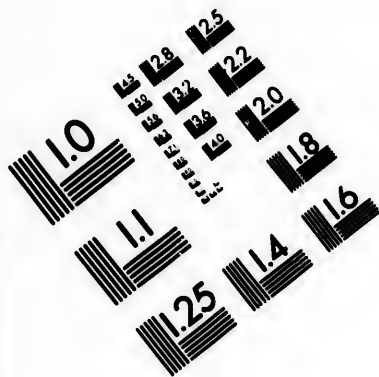

NICARAGUA, ISTHMUS OF, that part of the republic of Guatimala, between the Rio San Juan and Realejo. It is the site of some of the proposed schemes for connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans by means of a canal. The chief plan proposed is, to form the communication by the Rio San Juan, from the bay of Guatimala on the Atlantic side to the Lake of Nicaragua, a distance of 90 (or 104) English miles; then across the lake, 90 miles, to the river Tipitapa 20 miles long, to the Lake of Managua or Leon, which is 35 miles long, and then across the isthmus between the Lake of Leon and the port of Realejo on the Pacific, 29 miles across. Total length of the projected canal, 278 miles, 82 of which require deepening, or other works. The Lake of Nicaragua is 128½ ft. above the Atlantic, and that of Leon 28½ ft. higher, the Atlantic being 19½ ft. above the Pacific, but this has been controverted, as in the case of the canals at PANAMA, and TEHUANTEPEC (which see.) The unsettled political state of the country through which it passes, and the consequent insecurity of property, must be a great obstacle to its construction, though the recent accession of importance to California, has led to a revival of the project, with some prospect of its execution, (March 1850).

an appendage of Provence in France, but afterwards passed to the king of Sardinia. It was again ceded to France in 1860.

NICE, an ancient, handsome, and considerable town, on the confines of France and Italy, capital of the foregoing province. It has a strong citadel built on a rock, and on the W. it is fortified with a wall and ditch. On the E. side of the rock is the harbour, called Limpia, from a small river that runs into it. The inhabitants export oil, silk, wine, cordials, rice, oranges, lemons, and all sorts of dried fruits. It was taken by the French in 1792, retaken by the Austrians in 1800, but evacuated in a week afterwards. It is very agreeably situated, 4 miles from the mouth of the Var, 83 miles S. by W. of Turin, and 83 E. of Aix. Pop. in 1838, exclusive of the garrison, 33,811.

NICE, a city of Natolia. See ISNIC.

NICHABURG, a town of Persia, famous for a mine of turquoise stones in its neighbourhood. It is 37 miles S. of Mesched.

NICHOLAS, Sr., one of the largest and most pleasant of the Cape Verd islands, between St. Lucia and St. Jago. It is 75 miles in length, and is the residence of the bishop of the isles. Long. 14. 10. W. lat. 16. 32. N.

NICHOLAS, Sr., a town of France, in the department of Meurthe; with a handsome church, to which pilgrims formerly resorted. It is seated on the Meurthe; 7 miles S. E. of Nancy.

NICHOLAS, Sr., or MOLE, a town, harbour, and cape, at the N.W. extremity of St. Domingo, commanding the strait called the Windward passage. The harbour is strongly fortified by nature and art; and ships of any burden may ride at anchor in the basin, even during a hurricane. It was taken by the English, aided by the French royalists, in 1793, but evacuated in 1798. Long. 73. 30. W. lat. 19. 49. N.

NICHOLAS, a county in the central part of the state of Virginia; capital, Summersville. Pop. in 1840, 2575.—Also a county in Kentucky; capital, Carlisle. Pop. 8745.

NICHOLAS ISLAND, a small island on the N. coast of the island of Cuba. Long. 79. 40. W. lat. 33. 50. N.

NICOBAR ISLANDS, a group of 19 islands, on the E. side of the bay of Bengal. They are almost entirely uncultivated: but the cocoa-nut, the melli or lorum (a kind of bread-fruit), and other tropical fruits, grow spontaneously; there are also yams and sweet potatoes, and the edible birds'-nests, so much esteemed in China. Dogs and hogs are the principal animals. The inhabitants are tall and well proportioned, with black eyes, black hair, and dark copper-coloured skins. These islands extend northward, from the N. point of Sumatra. The largest, which gives name to the rest, is 25 miles long, and 10 broad. Its S. extremity is in long. 94. 3. E. lat. 6. 39. N.

NICOLAS, Sr., a town of Belgium in the province of East Flanders; a handsome town, and has a considerable trade in corn, cattle, and horses. Pop. in 1836, 16,153. It is 12 miles S.W. of Antwerp.

NICOLAEFF, a city of Russia, in the government of Catherinenslaf; founded by Catherine II., on the S. side of the Ingul, at its conflux with the Bog. The public buildings, and a number of private houses, are constructed of a white calcareous stone, but the rest of the houses are of wood. This place, being of easier access by water for vessels than Kherson, is now the capital of the naval establishment of the Black sea. The admiralty, with a long line of magazines, workshops, wet and dry docks, and every necessary department for shipping, are placed along the bank of the Ingul. It is 30 miles N.N.E. of Oczakow, and 45 N.W. of Kherson. Long. 32. 0. E. lat. 46. 58. N.

NICOLO, Sr., the most considerable of the isles of Tremeti, in the gulf of Venice. It has a harbour, defended by a fortress, in which is an abbey with a church. Long. 15. 37. E. lat. 42. 10. N.

NICOLSBURG, a town of Moravia, with a castle on a mountain; 12 miles E.N.E. of Laab.

NICOPOL, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Bulgaria; famous for the first battle fought between the Turks and the Christians in 1396, when the emperor Sigismund was defeated, and had 20,000 men killed. It is seated on the Danube, at the influx of the Osma; 60 miles S.S.W. of Bucharest, and 150 N.N.W. of Adrianople. Pop. 10,000. Long. 25. 43. E. lat. 44. 16. N.

NICOSIA, the capital of Cyprus, seated near the mountain Olympus. From the time of Constantine the Great, till 1567, it was 9 miles in circumference; but the Venetians, finding it too extensive, reduced it to 3, and fortified it with 11 bastions, and three gates; all the rest they razed to the foundation, demolishing temples, palaces, and the most beautiful monuments. In 1570 it was besieged 45 days by the Turks, and then taken by a general assault. The church of St. Sophia is a fine old Gothic structure. The bazaar is extensive, well supplied with provisions, and remarkably clean. Long. 33. 26. E. lat. 35. 13. N. Pop. about 17,500.

NICOSIA, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona; 12 miles S. of Cefalu.

NICOTERA, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, near the coast of the Mediterranean; 35 miles N.N.E. of Reggio, and 135 S.E. of Naples. Long. 16. 30. E. lat. 38. 34. N.

NICOYA, a town of Guaimala, in Costa Rica, situate on a small river, which runs into the bay of Salinas, where there is a pearl fishery. It is 98 miles W.N.W. of Cartago. Long. 85. 49. W. lat. 10. 40. N.

NIÉBLA, a town of Spain, in Seville. A decayed and decaying place, on the river Tinto. It has a very ancient bridge, and a ruined castle and donjon of great former importance; 40 m. W. of Seville. Pop. about 800.

NIEMECK, a town of Brandenburg, on the river Ada; 16 miles N. of Wittenberg.

NIEMECZ, a strong town of Moldavia, situate on a mountain, on a river of the same name; 76 miles W.S.W. of Jassy. Long. 26. 10. E. lat. 46. 58. N.

NIEMEN, a river which rises in Lithuania, and passes by Bielica and Grodno; it then runs through part of Samogitia and East Prussia, and enters the Curisch Haff by several mouths, of which the principal and most northern is called the Russ.

NIENBURG, a strong town of Hanover, capital of the county of Hoya, with a considerable trade in corn and wool, seated on the Weser; 37 miles S.S.E. of Bremen. Long. 9. 25. E. lat. 52. 29. N.

NIENBURG, a town of Prussia, in the government of Munster, seated on the Dinkel; 33 miles N.W. of Munster.

NIENBURG, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Anhalt-Kothen, seated on the Saale, 8 miles N.W. of Kothen.

NIENHAUS, a town of Hanover, in the district of Paderborn, with a castle, formerly the residence of the prince, seated on the Lippe; 2 miles N.N.E. of Paderborn.

NIÉPER. See DNIÉPER.

NIESTER. See DNIESTER.

NIÉUPORT, a seaport of Belgium, in West Flanders, at the mouth of the Yperlee. Here are sluices, by which the country can be laid under water. The inhabitants principally subsist by the herring fishery, and by making nets and ropes. It is 9 miles S. W. of Ostend. Long. 2. 45. E. lat. 51. 8. N.

NIÉUPORT, a town of the Netherlands, in South Holland, seated on the river Leek; 15 miles E. of Rotterdam.

NIÈVRE, a department of France, including the greatest part of the province of Nivernois. It takes its name from a small river, which rises near Champleny, and runs into the Loire, at Nevers, the chief town of the department. Pop. in 1836, 282,521.

NIGER, a large river of Africa, which rises in the Mandingo country, in lat. 9. 25. N., and long. 9. 45. W., near to the sources of the Gambia and Senegal, which flow in an opposite or westerly direction. It pursues a northerly course as far as Tombuctoo, in about 17. 5. N. lat., and 3. 40. W. long., when it proceeds to the S.E., and falls into the Atlantic by several mouths in the bight of Benin. This river, for many years, excited the most extraordinary interest in geographers, nothing but the name being known till Mango Park reached it in 1796, at Sego, in Bambarra; he traced it upwards to Bammakoo, and downwards to Silla, an extent of 300 miles; it was there called the Joliba, the name Niger being unknown in Africa. It was afterwards explored by him to Jenna and Cabra, the port of Tombuctoo, and at Boossa he was killed by the natives. From this point all remained in mystery, till the brothers Lander, in 1830, traced the river from Yaorie, by Rabba, Egga, Eboc, through which course it is called the Quorra, and finally to the river Nun, or First Brass river, in the bight of Benin, and which had long been known and frequented by traders, little suspecting that it was the celebrated Niger. Its course has since been accurately surveyed, and several expeditions, of disastrous memory, have been sent to it.

NIGONO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena; 22 miles S.W. of Modena.

NIGRITIA. See NEGROLAND.

NIJNH NOVOGOROD. See NOVOGOROD, NIZNEL.

NILE, a great river of Africa, which has two principal sources, called the BAHR EL ARIAD, or WHITE RIVER, and the BAHR EL AZREK, or BLUE RIVER (which see). They unite and form the Nile at Halfaiah, in Sennaar. It receives the Tacazze after having flowed some distance northward, after which it does not receive a single tributary. It then enters into Nubia, through which country it takes a circuitous course, and forms some considerable cataracts. It then flows almost directly S. through Egypt, till it arrives at Cairo; and a little below that city it divides into two great branches, which, with the Mediterranean sea, form the island called Delta. The ancients reckoned eleven mouths of the Nile, of which seven were considerable; but at present there are only two that are at all times navigable, and those are at Rosetta and Damietta. The fertility of Egypt depends upon the overflowing of the Nile, which takes place regularly every year, from the 15th of June to the 17th of September, when it begins to decrease. It is caused by the periodical rains that fall between the tropics, and more particularly in Abyssinia, which is full of high mountains. In Cairo there is a canal, called Khalis, which is opened when the water is high enough; thence it is conveyed into reservoirs and cisterns, and is afterwards distributed into the fields and gardens, as occasion requires.

NIMEGUEN, a town of the Netherlands, in Gelderland, with a citadel, an ancient palace, and several forts. The churches are, in general, handsome structures; and the town-house is remarkable for its beauty and magnificence. The inhabitants subsist chiefly by brewing ale, and their trade with Germany. The city is celebrated in history, on account of several treaties of peace concluded here, particularly in 1678. It was taken by the French in 1794. It stands on the Waal; 35 miles E.S.E. of Utrecht. Pop. in 1831, 17,734. Long. 5. 51. E. lat. 51. 52. N.

NIMPTSCH, a town of Prussian Silesia, which gives name to a circle in the principality of Brieg. It has a castle on an eminence, and is seated on the Lohé; 26 miles S.W. of Breslau.

NING-KOUÉ, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan; noted for its manufacture of paper, made of a species of reed. Its district is very hilly, but pleasant; and the surrounding mountains, covered with woods, produce excellent medicinal plants. It is seated on a river, which runs into the Kiang-hu; 537 miles S. by E. of Peking. Long. 118. 25. E. lat. 31. 2. N.

NING-PO, a city of China, on the E. coast, in the province of Che-kiang, and near the Chusan islands. It is one of the four ports opened to European commerce by the late war, but from its situation as compared with Shang-huë and other places, it is not so important. It is about 15 miles from the mouth of the river Ta-ka. It is surrounded by a dilapidated wall, about 15 feet high, and 6 miles in circuit, but which is far from including the whole of the city; vest suburbs surround it, and their extremities join the country villages, so that it is difficult to assign their limits. The streets of Ning-po, especially in the neighbourhood of the river, are lined with shops and immense store-houses, each quarter having its own occupation and trade. The city is very ancient, and its pagoda, 6 storeys high, is as celebrated in China as that at Nanking; the city itself is also esteemed one of the most beautiful in the Celestial Empire, but it would suffer sadly in comparison with second rate towns in our country. It is near the silk manufacturing districts, and also to those producing green tea, and the manufacture of cotton cloths is extensively carried on. It was taken by the English in 1841, and held by them for a considerable period until the Chinese debt to us had been paid. Europeans are allowed much more freedom here than they are in Canton, but the trade does not increase in the same way as it has done and will probably do at Shang-huë. The English formerly traded to Ning-po, and the ruins of their factory are still to be seen near the harbour of Chusan. Ning-po is in lat. 29. 49. N. long. 121. 27. E.

NINGUTA, a city of Eastern Tartary, in the province of Kirin, with a considerable trade; particularly in the valuable plant ginseng, which abounds in the neighbourhood. It is seated on the Hurha, 110 miles N.E. of Kirin. Long. 124. 40. E. lat. 44. 30. N.

NINANS, ST., a town of Scotland, in Stirling-shire, with manufactures of leather, woollen cloth, and nails. It is 2 miles S.E. of Stirling. In this parish is the village of Bannockburn, the scene of the famous battle.

NINOVE, a town of Belgium, in East Flanders, on the Dender; 12 miles W. of Brussels.

NIO, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the S. of Naxia, anciently called Nios. It is 35 miles in circumference, and fertile in corn, but has very little wood or oil. The regular manners of the inhabitants, who are all Greeks, revives an idea of the simplicity of the primitive ages; and their kind treatment of strangers appears to be the genuine remains of ancient hospitality. Pop. 4000.

NION, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, with a manufacture of beautiful porcelain. It is 12 miles N. by E. of Geneva.

NIONS, a town of France, department of Drome, with a mineral spring called Pontais, and some manufactures of soap and woollen cloth. It is seated at the foot of a chain of mountains, on the river Aigues; 21 miles E.S.E. of Montelimart.

NIORT, a town of France, capital of the department of Deux Sèvres, with manufactures of druggets, serges, and other coarse woollen goods. It is seated on the Sevre Niortoise; 31 miles E.N.E. of Rochelle, and 46 W.S.W. of Poitiers. Pop. in 1836, 18,015. Long. O. 19. W. lat. 46. 20. N.

NIPPON, or NIPPON, the largest island of Japan, 750 miles long, and from 150 to 300 broad, containing 55 provinces. It was discovered in 1542, by the Portuguese, who were cast ashore by a tempest. The chief town is Jedo.

NISCHNEI-NOVOGOROD. See NOVOGOROD.

NISHAPOOR, a town of Persia, in Khorassan, surrounded with a mud wall and ditch, it is meanly built, and has few manufactures. Its only importance is derived from its turquois mines, eight or nine in number, on a hill 40 miles W.S.W. of the town, and from which we exclusively derive our supplies of this valuable gem. Pop. 8000; 46 m. W. by S. of Mesched, lat. 58. 55. N. long. 36. 8. E.

NISIBIN, or NISIN, a town and fortress of Asiatic Turkey, in Diarbeck, now greatly decayed. It is seated in a vast plain, 78 miles S.E. of Diarbeckir.

NISIDA, a small island in the gulf of Naples, very fertile, and laid out in slopes and terraces, like a large garden. It has a harbour, called Porto Pavone, 5 miles W.S.W. of Naples.

NISMES, a city of France, capital of the department of Gard, and a bishop's see. Here are numerous monuments of antiquity, of which the amphitheatre, built by the Romans, is the principal. There are likewise the ruins of a temple of Diana, and a grand tower. The Maison Quarrée, or the Square House, is one of the finest pieces of architecture of the Corinthian order in the world. Here are manufactures of silks, stockings, cloth, leather, &c., and a considerable trade in silk, corn, dried fruits, oil, and wine. It is seated in a plain, abounding in wine and oil; 75 miles N.E. of Narbonne. Pop. in 1836, 41,194. It is on the railway uniting Montpellier with Avignon, &c.

NISSA, a strong town of Servia. It was taken by the Hungarians, in 1737, but retaken by the Turks the following year. It is seated on a river of the same name; 20 miles E. of Precep, and 120 S.E. of Belgrade.

NORDHAUSEN, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Erfurt, with seven Lutheran churches, and a well-built orphan-house. It has a considerable trade in corn, brandy, and rape and linseed oil, and manufactures of marble and alabaster. It was ceded to Prussia in 1802. It is seated on the Oerge, 35 miles N.N.E. of Erfurt. Long. 10. 56. E. lat. 51. 30. N. Pop. in 1838, 12,163.

NORDHEIM, a town of Hanover, situated on the Rhume, at its conflux with the Leina; 10 miles N. of Gottingen.

NORDKÖPING, a seaport of Sweden, in Gothland. It is 10 miles in circumference; but the houses are scattered, and the inhabitants in 1836, 11,440. The river Motala flows through the town, forms a series of cataracts, and is divided into four principal streams, which encircle several rocky islands, covered with buildings; but at the extremity of the town it is navigable for large vessels. Here are manufactures of woollen cloth, paper, and fire-arms, some sugar-houses, and a brass-foundry. Corn is exported hence in great quantities, and a salmon-fishery gives employment and riches to many of the inhabitants. It is 110 miles S.W. of Stockholm. Long. 15. 50. E. lat. 58. 35. N.

NORLAND, one of the ancient divisions of Sweden; bounded on the N. by Lapland, E. by the gulf of Bothnia, S. by Sweden Proper, and W. by the same and Norway. It contains six provinces.

NORLANDI, a province of Norway, having the North sea on the W. and Swedish Lapland on the E.

NORLINGEN, a town of Bavaria, fortified in the ancient manner. Here the league of the five western circles of the empire was concluded in 1702. In 1796 it was taken by the French. It is a commercial place, seated on the Eger; 38 miles N.N.W. of Augsburg. Pop. 6300. Long. 10. 34. E. lat. 48. 50. N.

NORDMALING, a town of Sweden, in Angermania, near a bay of the gulf of Bothnia; 24 miles S.W. of Uma, and 70 N.E. of Hermosand.

NORDSTRAND, an island of Denmark, on the W. coast of South Jutland; 12 miles long, and 5 broad. It has a town called Ilan, 28 miles W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 0. E. lat. 54. 40. N. Pop. 2500.

NORE, a noted part of the river Thames, situated off Sheerness, at the point of a sand-bank, on which is a light vessel. Long. 0. 44. E. lat. 51. 27. N.

NORFOLK, a county of England, 77 miles long and 45 broad; bounded on the N. and E. by the German Ocean, S.E. and S. by Suffolk, and W. by Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire. It contains 1,292,400 acres, is divided into 33 hundreds and 660 parishes, has one city and 32 market towns, and sends 4 members to parliament for the E. and W. divisions of the county. The products vary according to the soil and situation. The lighter arable lands produce barley in great plenty; wheat is cultivated in the stronger soils, and turnips are grown here in great quantities; buckwheat is also grown on the light soils, and used for feeding swine and poultry. The fenny parts yield great quantities of butter, which is sent to London under the name of Cambridge butter. The sheep are a hardy small breed, much valued for their mutton. Poultry of all kinds are very plentiful, and the turkeys are reared here to a larger size than elsewhere; rabbits are extremely numerous on the sandy heaths; and there is abundance of game, especially of pheasants. The principal manufactures of the county are silks, bombazeens, crapes, camblets, &c. It is watered by the Great Ouse, Nen, Little Ouse, Waveney, Yare, Bure, and some smaller streams. Norwich is the capital.

NORFOLK, a seaport of Virginia, capital of a county of the same name. It was burnt in 1776, by order of the British governor; but is now the most considerable commercial town in the state. The chief exports are tobacco, flour, corn, staves, and lumber. Here are 8 churches, and the harbour is large enough to contain 300 ships. The town stands on the E. side of Elizabeth river, near its entrance into the estuary of James river; 110 miles E.S.E. of Richmond. Pop. in 1840, 10,920.

NORFOLK ISLAND, an island in the South Pacific, lying to the E. of New South Wales. It was discovered in 1774 by Captain Cook, who found it uninhabited except by birds. It is very hilly, but some of the valleys are tolerably large; Mount Pitt is 12,000 feet high. It is a beautiful spot, the climate being delicious, and the soil wonderfully productive. It would seem to be a perfect garden. The whole island is covered by a thick forest, but has not much underwood; the principal timber-tree is the pine, which is very useful in building, and seems to be durable. It is supplied with many streams of good water, which abound with very fine eels. The cliffs round the coast are 240 feet high, quite perpendicular; but there is no harbour, and there is great difficulty in approaching it. It was first colonised by convicts from New South Wales, but subsequently was again made a penal settlement for doubly convicted felons. This system, however, was abandoned, and the island, with its clearances, buildings, &c., have been given by the British government to the Pitcairn islanders, who have removed entirely to this place. Long. 168. 2. E. lat. 29. 5. S.

NORFOLK, NEW, or ELIZABETHTOWN, a town of Van Dieman's land, in Buckingham county, on the banks of the Derwent: 22 miles from Hobart Town. It was founded by the settlers from Norfolk Island, and the name was afterwards changed to Elizabethtown, but the original name is the one in use.

NORHAM, Durham, on the edge of the moor, has been many times burnt, and is 6 miles S.W. of Durham.

NORMANDY, now forming the Eure, Manche, Normans, a province, having entered the Simple, the 912, which formed the seventh of his successors, the land, it became till it was lost reunited to the most fertile abounds in all the most fertile rivers and harbours.

NORRIDGEWATER, Maine, capital of the Kennebec, 0. m. N. of Bangor.

NORRISTOWN, capital of Monmouth, on the Schuylkill, delphia. Long. 75. 37. W. lat. 39. 37. N.

NORTELÖA, a town of Sweden, in the making fire-arms, 10 m. N. of Stockholm.

NORTHALLERTON, Yorkshire, with returns one mile between the E. and W. of the Battle of the Marston, in a delightful Wisk; 32 miles N. of London.

NORTH CAPE, the end of the island of Norway, and the north of Europe.

NORTH SEA, the sea between the British and the continent of Europe.

NORTHAMPTON, county of Penn, capital, Easton, of Virginia, on Eastville. Pop. 77,000.

NORTHAMPTON, Carolina; capital of Northampton, including 6759 slaves.

NORTHAMPTON, capital of Hampshire, considerable inland town, Connecticut; 98 m. N. of New York.

NORTHAMPTON, Northampton, with a market of members to parliament.

NORHAM, a village in the detached part of Durham, called Northhamshire. Its castle, on the edge of a rock above the Tweed, has been many times taken and destroyed by the Scotch, and as often rebuilt by the English; 6 miles S.W. of Berwick.

NORMANDY, a former province of France, now forming the departments of Calvados, Eure, Manche, Orne, and Lower Seine. The Normans, a people of Denmark and Norway, having entered France, under Rollo, Charles the Simple ceded this country to them in 912, which from that time was called Normandy. Rollo, the first duke, held it as a fief of the crown of France, as did several of his successors after him. In 1066, William, the seventh duke, having conquered England, it became a province of that country, till it was lost in the reign of King John, and reunited to the crown of France. It is one of the most fertile provinces in France, and abounds in all things except wine, which defect is supplied by cider and perry. It contains iron, copper, and a great number of rivers and harbours.

NORRIDGEWOOD, a town of the state of Maine, capital of Somerset county, situate on the Kennebec, over which is an elegant bridge; .0 m. W. by N. of Canaan. Pop. 1865.

NORRISTOWN, a town of Pennsylvania, capital of Montgomery county. It is seated on the Schuylkill, 15 miles N.W. of Philadelphia. Long. 75. 24. W. lat. 40. 10. N. Pop. 2937.

NORTELLOA, or NOR TELGE, a seaport of Sweden, in the Baltic. Near it is a forge for making fire-arms; 30 miles N.E. of Stockholm. Long. 10. 32. E. lat. 50. 44. N.

NORTHALLEERTON, a borough in North Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday; it returns one member to parliament. Near this place was fought the celebrated battle between the English and Scots, called the Battle of the Standard, in 1138. It is seated in a delightful valley, watered by the river Wisk; 32 miles N.N.W. of York, and 222 N. by W. of London.

NORTH CAPE, an enormous rock at the N. end of the island of Maggeroe, on the coast of Norway, and the most northern promontory of Europe. Long. 25. 57. E. lat. 71. 10. N.

NORTH SEA. See GERMAN OCEAN.

NORTHAMPTON, a wild and picturesque county of Pennsylvania, on the Delaware; capital, Easton. Pop. 40,996.—Also a county of Virginia, on the Atlantic coast; capital, Eastville. Pop. 7715.—Also a county of North Carolina; capital, Jackson. Pop. 13,369, including 6759 slaves.

NORTHAMPTON, a town of Massachusetts, capital of Hampshire county. It has a considerable inland trade, and is situate on the Connecticut; 98 m. W. of Boston. Pop. 3750.

NORTHAMPTON, a borough, and the capital of Northamptonshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday; returning two members to parliament. It was formerly surrounded by a wall, and had a castle, of which there are still some remains. In 1675 it was almost entirely destroyed by fire, but was soon rebuilt. The houses are uniformly built of freestone, and chiefly slated; the streets are regular, and the town is lighted with gas. It has seven churches, eight dissenting meeting-houses, a spacious market place, a good free-school, a general infirmary, and a county gaol, on the principles of Mr. Howard. The principal manufacture consists of boots and shoes, chiefly for exportation. In the meadows below the town a battle was fought in 1460 between Henry VI. and the Yorkists, in which the former was defeated and made prisoner. Two miles to the S. is a fine ancient Gothic structure, called Queen's Cross, erected by Edward I., in memory of his queen, Eleanor. Northampton is seated on the Nen; 20 miles S.E. of Coventry, and 66 N.W. of London.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE, a county of England, 65 miles long, and 24 where broadest, bounded S. by Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire, W. by the latter county and Warwickshire, N.W. by Leicestershire and Rutlandshire, N. by Lincolnshire, and E. by the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, and Bedford. It contains 646,810 acres, is divided into 20 hundreds, and 306 parishes, has one city and 11 market-towns, and sends four members to parliament for the N. and S. divisions of the county. In the N.E. part, near Peterborough, commences a fenney tract, extending to the Lincolnshire Wash. With this single exception, Northamptonshire is said to contain less waste ground, and more seats of the nobility and gentry, than any other county. Its greatest defect is a scarcity of fuel, which is but scantily supplied by its woods; and though coal is brought by the river Nen, it is at a very dear rate. This county, however, possesses some considerable remains of its old forests, particularly those of Rockingham, on the N.W., and of Salcey and Whittlebury, on the S. Its products are, in general, the same with those of other farming counties, but it is particularly celebrated for grazing land. Wood for the dyers is cultivated here, but the county is not distinguished for manufactures. The principal rivers are the Nen and Welland; besides which it is partly watered by the Ouse, Leam, Cherwell, and Avon; and the inland trade is greatly facilitated by the construction of canals, and by the Birmingham railway, which traverses this county.

NORTH CAROLINA. See CAROLINA, NORTH.

NORTH FLEET, a village in Kent, seated on the Thames; 2 miles W. of Gravesend. The church contains fragments of monuments as ancient as the 14th century. Vast quantities of lime are made here, and great numbers of extraneous fossils have been dug up.

NORTHROP, a town of Wales, in Flintshire; 3 miles S.E. of Flint, noted for its manufactures of coarse earthenware, fire-bricks, &c.

NORTHUMBERLAND, the most northern county of England. In the Saxon heptarchy it was a part of the kingdom of the Northumbrians, which contained also the counties of York, Lancaster, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmorland, and received its name from being situate N. of the Humber. It is a triangular form, 64 miles in extreme length, and 50 in extreme breadth; bounded on the E. by the German ocean, S. by Durham, W. by Cumberland and Scotland, and N. by the detached part of Durham called Northshire and Islandshire. It contains 1,157,760 acres, is divided into six wards and 460 parishes, has 12 market-towns, and sends four members to parliament for the N. and S. divisions of the county. The soil is various; the E. part is fruitful in most sorts of corn, with rich meadows on the banks of the rivers; but the W. part is mostly heathy and mountainous. The S.E. part abounds with thick seams of coal, and the S.W. angle has rich lead mines. Limestone and iron ore abound in various parts. It is divided from Scotland and Cumberland by the Cheviot hills and other mountains. The Cheviot hills afford excellent pasturage to a peculiar and valuable breed of sheep, so called. The manufactures are unimportant. Pit-coal forms its staple produce. The principal rivers are the Tyne, Coquet, Alm, and Blyth. Alnwick is the capital; but the largest town is Newcastle. It gives the title of duke to the ancient family of Percy.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a county of Pennsylvania, on the E. side of the Susquehanna river; capital, Sunbury. Pop. 20,027.—Also a county in Virginia, on Chesapeake bay; capital, Henthsville. Pop. 7924.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a town of Pennsylvania, in a county of its name; seated in the angle formed by the junction of the W. and E. branches of the Susquehanna; 2 miles above Sunbury, and 138 N.W. of Philadelphia.

NORTHUMBERLAND ISLANDS, a chain of islands in the South Pacific; near the N.E. coast of Australia. Long. 150. E. lat. 22. S.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT, the S. part of the gulf of St. Lawrence; between the island of St. John and the coast of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

NORTHWICH, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Friday, a cotton manufacture, and considerable salt-works; seated on the Dan, at its junction with the Weaver; 20 miles N.E. of Chester, and 174 N.W. of London.

NORTON, a town of Massachusetts, in Bristol county. A great quantity of nails are made here, and it has a manufacture of ochre, similar to that of Taunton; 28 miles S. of Boston.

NORTON. See CHIPPING.

NORTON SOUND, an inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of North America, discovered by Cook in his last voyage. The entrance is between Cape Denbigh, on the E., and Cape Danny, on the W., about 70 miles distant, both lying in lat. 64. 30. N., and the latter in long. 162. 55. W.

NORWALK, a town of Connecticut, in Fairfield county, with two churches, and some iron-works. It has a small trade to the West Indies, and is situate on an inlet of Long Island Sound; 48 miles N.E. of New York. Long. 73. 47. W. lat. 41. 9. N. Pop. 3863.

NORWAY, a country in the N. of Europe, belonging to Sweden, the most westerly part of the ancient Scandinavia. It is bounded on the W. and N. by the Northern ocean, E. by Swedish Lapland and Sweden, and S. by the Cattegat; extending from the Nahe in lat. 57. 30., to the North Cape in lat. 71. 10. Its breadth, which is very unequal, is from 40 to 280 miles. It is naturally formed into two divisions, namely, Northern and Southern, or Proper Norway, separated from each other by the small Swedish province of Herndahl.

From its rocky soil, and northern position, Norway is not populous in proportion to its extent. The inhabitants, like the Swiss mountaineers, are exceedingly attached to their country. In Norway they have a particular code, called the Norway Law, compiled by Grieffefeld, at the command of Christian V., the great legislator of this country. By this law—the palladium of Norway—the peasants are free-born. They possess much spirit and fire in their manner; are frank, open, and undaunted, yet not insolent; never fawning, yet paying proper respect. Their principal mode of salute is by offering their hand; and when they are given or paid any trifles, the peasants, instead of returning thanks by words, or by a bow, shake hands with great frankness and cordiality. The same causes which affect the population of Norway operate likewise on the state of tillage; for although in some places vegetation is so quick, that the corn is sown and cut in six or seven weeks, yet the country does not produce sufficient corn for however, exc consequently horses are sma hardy. cient corn for its own consumption. It is however, exceedingly rich in pasture, and consequently produces much cattle. The horses are small, but strong, very active, and hardy. The fisheries, particularly on the W. coast, find employment and wealth for the natives, and supply the finest sailors for the Danish fleet. The principal fish are salmon, cod, ling, and whiting: their livers also yield train-oil, and the smallest are given as winter fodder to the cattle. The extensive forests of oak and pine produce timber, spars, beams, and planks, besides charcoal, turpentine, bark, fuel, and even manure; and the birch (the bark of which is used as a covering for the roofs of houses) not only supplies fuel, but also a kind of wine. The general exports are tallow, butter, dried fish, timber, planks, horses, horned cattle, silver, cobalt, alum, Prussian blue, copper, and iron. It abounds in lakes and rivers; the former so large that they appear like inlets of the sea; but the rivers are in general of a short course, except the Glommen. The mountains are numerous, and generally clothed with pines and firs; the grand Scandinavian chain, which runs from S. to N., is known by distinct appellations; the chief are the ridges of Langfiel, Dofrafiel, Kolen, and Severnoi. The wild animals are the bear, lynx, wolf, fox, and hare; but the most singular creature is the lemming, or Norwegian mouse, of a reddish colour, and about five inches long. These animals proceed in vast numbers from the ridge of Kolen to the sea, devouring every produce of the soil in their course, and at last seem to devour each other. Norway was formerly governed by its own hereditary sovereigns. On the demise of Hasen V., in 1319, without male issue, his grandson, in the female line, Magnus Smek, united in his person the kingdoms of Sweden and Norway. Magnus was succeeded in the kingdom of Norway by his son Hagen VI. husband of the celebrated Margaret; and at his decease, in 1380, Norway was united to Denmark by their son Olof V., who dying without issue, Margaret herself was raised to the throne by the unanimous voice of the nation. On her death, it descended, with Denmark and Sweden, to her nephew Eric. Sweden was afterwards separated from Denmark by the valour and address of Gustavus Vasa. By the treaty of Kiel, in Jan. 1814, Norway was ceded by the king of Denmark to Sweden; but the people not approving of this cession, had recourse to arms, in order to resist the entrance of the Swedish troops into their country; and the Diet elected Prince Christian, the king of Denmark's son, who was then governor, to the throne. However, on the conclusion of the war with France, the allied powers, who had previously promised this country to Sweden, if she would take an active part in the coalition against the French empire, now did all in their power to enforce the cession. For this purpose a considerable body of their troops was marched into the Danish territories on the continent to watch that power, and all the ports of Norway were blockaded by the Swedish and English fleets by sea, while the Swedish army, under the crown prince, entered Norway by land. Amidst such united efforts, it was not to be expected that the brave Norwegians could hold out long. After the capture of Frederickstadt, and the passage of the Glommen by the Swedes, Prince Christian proposed to resign his crown into the hands of the Diet; and on the 20th of October, 1814, that assembly came to the resolution that Norway should be governed by the king of Sweden, but as an integral state, preserving its constitution and laws; to which the king of Sweden assented. Christiania is the capital.

NORWICH, a city and county of itself, the capital of Norfolk, and a bishop's see; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, &c.; and sends two members to parliament. It was formerly surrounded by a strong wall, of which some ruins still remain. Many of the streets are still narrow and ill-disposed, though, during the last ten years, considerable improvements have been effected. Besides the cathedral, which is one of the most spacious and elegant in the kingdom, here are 37 parish churches, many of them remarkable, a number of dissenting meeting-houses, and two Roman Catholic chapels. On a hill, commanding an extensive view of the city, is the castle, an ancient and stately edifice, occupied as a shire-house and county gaol. It has recently undergone considerable alteration and enlargement. Among the other public buildings are the Guildhall, St. Andrew's Hall, the assembly-room, the theatre, the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, the Norwich Dispensary, the Blind Hospital, Lunatic Asylum, and Doughty's Hospital. Here are also a good grammar-school, a public library, a literary institution, a museum, a society of artists, and other scientific and charitable institutions. The market-place is a spacious area, with a gradual descent. It is occupied on market days by an immense number of moveable shambles, and contrivances for displaying the neatly-trussed poultry, and other provisions, brought from all parts of the county, and has a very striking appearance. On the upper part, but separated by a range of shops and dwelling-houses, is a good fish market, which is well supplied. Near this city, on Mousehold Heath, are the ruins of the castle of Kett, the tanner, by whose rebellion, in the reign of Edward VI., the city was reduced to a ruinous state. Norwich has extensive manufactures of crapes, bombazines, and stuffs of various kinds, and a considerable trade. It is seated on the river Yare: 22 miles W. of Yarmouth, and 110 N.E. of London; and is the centre of several railways.

NORWICH, a city of Connecticut, in New London county, with seven churches. It is

In three divisions, namely, Chelsea, the Town, and Beau Hill. The executive courts of law are held at this place and New London alternately. Here are made paper of all kinds, stockings, buttons, stone and earthenware, and all kinds of forge work. It is seated at the head of navigation on the Thames, and is connected by railway with Worcester, Mass., and Boston; 12 miles N. of New London. Long. 72. 7. W. lat. 41. 33. N. Pop. 7239.—Also the name of numerous inconsiderable townships of the United States.

NOSSEN, a town of Saxony, on the Muldau, 18 miles W. of Dresden.

NOTENBURG, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, seated on an island in the lake Ladoga, at the place where the Neva issues. It has a good citadel, and was capital of Ingria, before Petersburg was built. It is 25 miles E. of Petersburg. Long. 31. 9. E. lat. 59. 56. N.

NOTO, a town of Sicily, capital of Val di Noto. It was ruined by an earthquake in 1693, and near it another town was built, called Noto Nuovo. It is 22 miles S.W. of Syracuse. Pop. in 1831, 11,156. Long. 15. 19. E. lat. 36. 50. N.

NOTTINGHAM, a town of Maryland, in Prince George county, situate on the Patuxent; 26 miles S.E. of Washington.

NOTTINGHAM, a town of New Hampshire, Rockingham county; 14 miles N.N.W. of Peter.—Also the name of several townships in the United States.

NOTTINGHAM, a borough, and the capital of Nottinghamshire, and a county of itself; governed by a mayor, with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. It is situate on the side and summit of a rock, of a soft sandy nature, out of which many of the cellars and vaults of the town are excavated, and from which the name of the town is derived, i. e. "the town of the caves." To the W. of the town, on a rocky eminence, is the castle, a magnificent modern structure, now destroyed by fire, belonging to the Duke of Newcastle, built on the site of an ancient fortress, originally erected in the reign of William the Conqueror, and afterwards the residence of the profligate Isabella, queen of Edward II., and her paramour Roger Mortimer. It was made a garrison by the parliamentarians in the reign of Charles the I., but was taken by the royalists; after the civil war, it was dismantled by order of Oliver Cromwell, and was rebuilt by William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle. It is a handsome town, distinguished by its spacious market-place, and noted for its excellent ale. It is one of the principal seats of the silk and cotton stocking manufacture; the lace manufacture is also very extensive. It has three parish churches, one extra-parochial; 3 district churches, & 15 meeting-houses for dissenters, two for Roman Catholics, and a synagogue for Jews. The charitable institutions are numerous, and many of them pre-eminent in extent and utility of design. In the neighbourhood are many coal-pits, which afford plenty of fuel at little expense. At this town Charles I. set up his standard, at the commencement of the civil war, which terminated in his destruction. Nottingham is seated on a river which communicates with the Trent 1 mile to the S. It is 16 miles E. of Derby, and 124 N. by W. of London, and has several railways.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE, a county of England, 48 miles long, and 25 broad; bounded N. by Yorkshire, E. by Lincolnshire, S. by Leicestershire, and W. by Derbyshire. It contains 538,680 acres, is divided into six hundreds, and 168 parishes, has eight market-towns, and sends four members to parliament. It enjoys such a temperature of soil and climate as to render it one of the most fertile and healthful counties in England. The principal rivers are the Trent, Idle, and Erwash. Almost the whole of the middle and western parts of the county were formerly occupied by the extensive forest of Sherwood, the only royal forest N. of the Trent; but the greater part is now enclosed and covered with thriving towns, cheerful villages, and extensive parks. The chief products of this county are coal, of which there is a great plenty, gypsum, lead, grain of all sorts, cattle, malt, hops, wool, liquorice, and wood. The manufactures chiefly consist of hosiery, bobbin-net and net lace, glass, and earthenware.

NOVA SCOTIA, a British province of North America; which formerly, till 1784, included the province of New Brunswick. It is bounded on the S. and S.E. by the Atlantic, E. by the Gut of Canso, N. by Northumberland strait, and N.W. by New Brunswick and the bay of Fundy. Its length is 235 miles from Cape Sable on the S.W. to Cape Canso on the N.E. Its extreme breadth is 88 miles, but the mean of the peninsular part is not more than 45; it contains an area of 15,617 square miles. It has several lakes, and a vast number of small rivers. It is a peninsula, lying S.E. of New Brunswick, and joined to it by a narrow isthmus, at the N.E. extremity of the bay of Fundy. The French settled here before they made any establishment in Canada, and called it Acadia. The first grant of lands was made to Sir William Alexander, by James I. of England, from whom it received the name of Nova Scotia. Since its first settlement it has more than once changed proprietors, but was confirmed to England at the peace of Utrecht in 1713. The inhabitants consist of English, Scotch, Irish, and a few Germans. Pop. in 1838, 135,000. Its divisions and population in 1848 were as follows.

The soil is in many parts thin and sterile, but there are some tracts not inferior to the best lands in New England. Halifax is the capital. In April, 1861, gold was discovered close to Tangier harbour, about 40 or 50 miles east of Halifax; and since then it has been found at other places, in such quantities as to attract a large number of diggers. Judicious arrangements have been made, by which the work of collecting it may be carried on orderly and successfully.

NOVA ZEMBLA, or NOVAIA ZEMLIA, an island in the Arctic ocean; separated from the continent of Russia by the strait of Waigatz. This country was discovered by the English in 1556. In 1595, a Dutch vessel being cast away on the coast, the crew were obliged to winter here, and with great difficulty preserved their lives. The eastern coast was first visited in 1742; between 1819 and 1824 the W. coasts were explored in five expeditions by order of the Russian government; the eastern coast was visited in 1832, again in 1834, and in 1837; the result of these discoveries is, that more than the eastern half of the islands, as formerly represented, has no existence; and that beyond the lat. of Cape Nassau, 76. 17. N., nothing is known. It stretches in a N.N.W. direction about 400 geographical miles, with an average breadth of 50 miles. It is divided into two by the Matozhkin Shar, in lat. 73. 45.; long. of W. entrance, 54. 10. E. The country is extremely desolate, producing no trees, nor any vegetables but moss, and some few Arctic plants.

NOVARA, a city of Italy, capital of a province of its name, in the Sardinian Milanese. It contains 17 churches, besides the cathedral; and is seated on an eminence, 25 miles W. by S. of Milan. Pop. in 1838, exclusive of the garrison 18,524.

NOVELLARA, a town of Italy, in the Modenesa, with a castle, 17 miles E. by N. of Parma, and 18 N.N.W. of Modena. Pop. 4070.

NOVI, a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa; with an old castle on a mountain. It is the principal deposit for goods coming from the Levant, which pass into Austrian Italy, and thence into the S. of Germany. Near this place, in 1799, the Austrians and Russians defeated the French, who lost their general (Joubert,) and nearly 10,000 men; 25 miles N. by W. of Genoa. Pop. in 1838, 10,278.

NOVI, a fortified town of Croatia, taken by the Austrians in 1789. It is seated on the right bank of the Unna; 52 miles S.E. of Carlstadt. Long. 16. 53. E. lat. 45. 8. N.

NOVI BAZAR, a town of Turkey in Europe, province of Bosnia, on the Rachka. Pop. from 8000 to 10,000.

NOVIGRAD, a town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle; seated on a mountain near the Danube; 25 miles N. of Buda.

NOVIGRAD, a town of Austrian Dalmatia, with a castle, seated on a lake of the same name, near the gulf of Venice; 17 miles E. of Nona, and 25 N.W. of Zara.

NOVOGONON, a city of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, and formerly called Great Novogorod, to distinguish it from other towns of the same appellation. It was for a long time governed by its own dukes, and was in fact a republic, under the jurisdiction of a nominal sovereign. It was the great mart of trade between Russia and the Hanseatic cities, and made the most rapid advances in opulence and population. Its power was so great, and its situation so impregnable, as to give rise to a proverb: "Who can resist the gods and Great Novogorod?" But in the 15th century this independent republic was obliged to submit to Ivan Basilowitz I., grand duke of Russia. It continued, nevertheless, the largest and most commercial city in Russia, and contained at least 400,000 inhabitants. It was first desolated by the cruelties of Ivan Basilowitz II.; but its splendour was not totally eclipsed until Peter the Great built Petersburg, to which he transferred all the commerce of the Baltic that had before entered here. It now contains scarcely 8000 souls; and a vast number of churches and convents stand as melancholy monuments of its former magnificence. The town stretches on both sides of the Volkoff, a river of considerable depth and rapidity, which separates it into two divisions, namely, the trading part, and the quarter of St. Sophia; in the latter are the ruins of the cathedral, in which several princes of the ducal family of Russia are interred. Novogorod is situated near the N. end of the lake Ilmen; 120 miles S.S.E. of Petersburg. Long. 31. 45. E. lat. 58. 25. N.

NOVOGOROD, NIZNEI, a city of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, and an archbishop's see. It has a castle, surrounded by stone walls; also two cathedrals, 28 parish churches, and five convents. The trade is considerable, and its commercial importance has been vastly increased by the removal hither of the great annual fair, commencing on July 1st, and which lasts 4 or 6 weeks. This fair, which is celebrated almost in every part of Europe and Asia, is held in a most superb establishment, erected for the purpose, on the banks of the river, and supported by 8000 iron pillars, comprising above 2500 booths, and has a greater command of commerce and internavigation than any other place in the old world. Stationary pop., 25,000. It is seated at the conflux of the Occa with the Volga; 250 m. E. by N. of Moscow. Lat. 56. 20. N. long. 44. 28. E.

NOYENS, a town of France, department of Yonne, with a castle, seated on the Serin; 19 miles E.S.E. of Auxerre.

NOYON, a town in the department of Oise; the birthplace of the celebrated Calvin. It is an episcopal see, and is seated near the Oise; 25 miles N.W. of Soissons, and 70 N. by E. of Paris.

NOZENOT, a town in the department of Jura, with a castle on a mountain; 20 miles S.E. of Salins.

NUBIA, a country of Africa, bounded on the N. by Egypt, E. by the Red sea, S. by Abyssinia and Darfoor, and W. by Bornou. It is about 600 miles in length, and 450 in breadth. It is divided into Upper Nubia, including Shendy, Halfah, and Sennaar; and Lower Nubia, or Nubia Proper, extending from Egypt to the N. frontier of Dongola. Rocky and mountainous are the characteristics of Lower Nubia, and the climate of it is intensely hot, but healthy. Berber, or El Mekhair, is the capital, near the E. bank of the Nile, about 17 miles below the junction of the Tacazzé. Shendy is the capital of Upper Nubia, and N. of it are the interesting ruins of Meroë. There are other ancient ruins, the most interesting of which are the excavated temples of Ipsamboul. The Nile runs through both provinces, on the banks of which it is fruitful, but in other places barren, sandy, and destitute of water. The inhabitants make their bread and drink of a small round seed called darra, or dhourra, a kind of millet. Their houses have mud walls, are very low, and covered with reeds. The dress of the better sort is a vest without sleeves, and they have no coverings for head, legs, or feet. The common people wrap a piece of linen cloth about them, and the children go quite naked. They are described as a stupid and debauched people, but profess to be Mohammedans. The productions of the country are gold, elephants' teeth, civet, and sandal-wood; and a great many slaves are sent into Egypt.

NUEVITAS DEL PRINCIPE, a town and harbour on the north coast of Cuba, which may be considered as the port of the city of Puerto Principe, the capital of the central department of Cuba, from which it is distant 12½ leagues, but there is great want of good communication. A new colony was formed here some years since, which in 12 years could boast of a growing population, amounting to 1153.

NUZZ, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon, on the borders of Portugal; 15 miles E. of Braganza, and 48 W. of Zamora.

NUITZ, a town of France, department of Côte d'Or; famous for its excellent wines. It is seated at the foot of a mountain; 15 miles S.S.W. of Dijon.

NUN, or WADINOON, an extensive valley of the territory of Zahara-Suz, in Western Africa. It is inhabited by different tribes of Arabs, whose camps are scattered over such interior parts of the country as are capable of cultivation. It has a river of the same name, which enters the Atlantic on the N. side of Cape Noon.

NUNDYDROOG, a town and fortress of Hindostan, in Mysore. It is built on the summit of a mountain, 1700 feet in height, the greater part inaccessible; but was besieged and taken by the English, under Lord Cornwallis, in 1792. It is 70 miles N. of Seringapatam.

NUNEATON, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Saturday, and manufactures of woollen cloths and ribbons. It was formerly noted for its nuntery; it is seated on the river Anker, 9 miles N. by E. of Coventry, and 98 N.W. of London.

NUNJINGODU, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore; with a ruinous fort, and a large square temple. It is situate in the fork formed by the junction of the Kaundini with the Kapini; 12 miles S. by E. of Mysore.

NUREMBERG, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Middle Franconia. It is surrounded by an old wall and ditch, more than 3 miles in circumference, formerly flanked with 365 towers; and through the middle of the town flows the river Pegnitz, over which are six stone bridges, and several of wood. The inhabitants are very industrious, and their maps and prints, as well as their musical and mathematical instruments, are in high esteem; nor are they less curious in clockwork, and in the several manufactures of iron, steel, ivory, wood, and alabaster. The toys commonly known in England by the name of Dutch toys are also made here. Among the public institutions are a famous academy for painting, an anatomical theatre, and a public library. The ancient castle, or palace, is still standing at the extremity of the city; and the arsenal is one of the best in Germany. The houses are built of freestone, and are four or five storeys high. The first railway in Germany was opened between Nuremberg and Fürth, 4½ miles long, in 1835-6. This is part of the Royal Bavarian State railway, which goes to Munich, Frankfurt, Bayreuth, &c. Nuremberg was given to Bavaria by the treaty of Tilsit, in 1807. It is 95 miles N. by W. of Munich, 250 W.N.W. of Vienna, Pop. in 1838, estimated at 40,400. Long. 11. 4. E. lat. 49. 27. N.

NYKOPING, a government of Sweden, comprehending the W. part of Sudermania. Pop. 99,000.

NYKOPING, a neat town of Sweden, capital of Sudermania; with a harbour, and the remains of a strong castle. It is the most ancient town in the kingdom, and was formerly the residence of the kings of Sudermania. It is seated on a river of the same name, near the Baltic; 70 miles S.W. of Stockholm. Pop. 2400. Long. 17. 27. E. lat. 58. 35. N.

NYLAND, a province of European Russia, in Finland; lying on the gulf of Finland, to the W. of Carelia. It is 120 miles long, and from 30 to 60 broad; and is a fertile pleasant country, being better peopled and cultivated than the neighbouring provinces. The inhabitants (about 115,000) carry on some trade in corn, cattle, planks, linen, and dried fish.

NYSLÖT, a town of Russia, in the government of Wiburg, on the lake Saima. The castle, which stands on a rock in a river, near the town, is strongly fortified by nature and art. It was taken by the Russians in 1714, restored to the Swedes at the peace of Nyestadt, but finally given up to the Russians, by the treaty of Abo, in 1743. It is 50 miles N.W. of Wiburg.

NYSLÖT, a town of Russia, in the government of Livonia, with a castle; 20 miles S. by W. of Narva.

NYSTADT, a town of Russia, in Finland; with a commodious harbour, and a considerable trade in all kinds of wooden vessels. In 1721 a peace was concluded here between Russia and Sweden. It is seated on a bay of the gulf of Bothnia; 38 miles N.W. of Abo. Pop. 1900. Long. 21. 31. E. lat. 61. 10. N.

NYTTED, a town of Denmark, on the S.E. coast of the isle of Laland. It carries on a considerable trade with the provinces of Germany. It is 22 miles E.S.E. of Naxkoo.

O.

It is 13 miles E. of Peniche, and 40 N.N.E. of Lisbon. Pop. 300.

ONOLLAH, a strong town of Persia, in Irac-Agemi; seated on a branch of the Tigris, near Bassora.

ONSKAIA, a gulf or bay of Siberia, in the Frozen ocean; about 360 miles from N. to S. and 45 to 60 in breadth. The S.W. extremity, where it is entered by the river Oby, is in long. 69. 15. E. lat. 66. 55. N.

ONVINSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Perm, situated on the Kama; 60 m. N. of Perm. Long. 56. 0. E. lat. 58. 44. N.

ONY, or ON, the largest river of Siberia. It issues from lake Altyn, in the desert of Iehimska, on the frontiers of China, runs N.W. and W. by Kolivan, Narim, and Surgut, till it receives the Irtysh from Tobolsk, when it flows N. and N.E., and after a course of 2700 miles, enters the gulf of Obskaia. It is a large smooth stream, abounds in fish, and is navigable almost to its source. In its course, especially after the influx of the Irtysh, it forms a great number of islands.

OCANA, an ancient town of Spain, in La Mancha; formerly fortified, but now in a state of decay. On November 19, 1809, a battle was fought in its vicinity, between the French and Spaniards, in which the French were victorious with 25,000 against 55,000. Pop. 5000. It is 30 miles S.S.E. of Madrid.

OCANA, a town of the republic of New Granada, in the province of St. Martha; on the Rio de Oro, which flows to the Madalena. It is 240 miles S. by E. of St. Martha. Long. 73. 26. W. lat. 7. 40. N.

OCEANICA, or OCEANIA, an expressive name given by Malte Brun and other modern geographers to that division of the globe which cannot well be classed with the other divisions. It includes Australasia, or the continent of Australia and its surrounding islands; and New Zealand, and Polynesia or the numerous groups of islands which are spread over the Pacific ocean, and which cannot properly be called either American or Asiatic. The term, however, is not universally recognised.

OCHSENFURT, a town of Bavarian Franconia, seated on the Main; 10 miles S.E. of Wurtzburg.

OCHSENHAUSEN, a town of Wirtemberg, capital of a petty principality (formerly the territory of a rich abbey) which was given to Prince Metternich in 1803. It is 14 miles S. of Ulm.

OCKER, a river of Saxony, which rises in the Hartz, flows by Goslar, Wolfenbittel, and Brunswick, and joins the Aller E. of Zell.

OCRIDA. See LOCHRIDA.

OCZAKOW, or OTCHAHOF, a decayed seaport and fortress of Russia, in the government of Ch. therinenslaf. It has been frequently an object of contest between the Turks and Russians, many thousands of whom, on both sides, have fallen in its different sieges. The Russians took it by storm in 1788, and it was confirmed to them by the subsequent peace. This important place is the key to both the Bog and the Dnieper, rivers of great consequence to this part of the empire. It is seated near the Black sea, on the N. side of the estuary of the Dnieper, opposite Kinburn, 50 m. W. of Kherson, and 190 N. by E. of Constantinople. Long. 30. 30. E. lat. 46. 35. N.

ODENBACH, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Deux Ponts, seated on the Glan; 34 miles S.W. of Mentz.

ODENSEE, a town of Denmark, capital of the isle of Funen, and a bishop's see. It supplies the greatest part of the army with all their leather accoutrements, and is particularly famous for gloves. Here are also manufactures of cloth, sugar, and soap. It is situate on a river, 6 miles from the bay of Stegestrand, and 90 W. by S. of Copenhagen. Pop. 8700. Long. 10. 25. E. lat. 55. 24. N.

ODER, a river of the Austrian and Prussian empires, which rises in the mountains of Moravia, and flows through Brandenburg and Pomerania. It is of the greatest commercial importance to Prussia. Below Stettin it forms a large lake or bay, called Cross Haff, and then enters the Baltic sea by three channels, called Peene, Swin, and Diwenow; between which lie the islands of Usedom and Wollin.

ODERBERG, a town of Moravia, on the confines of Silesia, with a castle, seated on the Oser, at the influx of the Elsa; 18 miles N.N.W. of Teschen.

ODERBERG, a town of the Prussian province of Brandenburg, situate on the Oder; 25 miles N.W. of Custrin.

ODERNHEIM, a town of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt, on the Seltz; 14 m. S. of Mentz.

ODERNHEIM, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Deux Ponts, seated on the Glan, near its conflux with the Nahe; 28 miles S.W. of Mentz.

ODESSA, a fortified seaport of Russia, in the government of Kherson, founded in 1792 by Catherine II. The port is excellent, consisting of an artificial harbour, formed by two moles, and will accommodate a numerous fleet. At first the town was very deficient in water, but this has been remedied by a canal conveying it to the town. There are no very good streets in the town, and till lately they were unpaved, and sometimes nearly impassable. This, however, has been greatly remedied. The cathedral of St. Nicholas, the exchange, the governor's palace, a fine hospital, and extensive corn warehouses, are its principal public buildings. The inhabitants are of a very mixed nature, and consist of nearly every European nation. Its great progress is owing, as is well known, to its extensive trade in the exportation of corn, particularly wheat, and is the emporium of South Russia for this product. Tallow is also an important article, besides a numerous list of other articles. The chief imports are sugars and other colonial products, cottons, silks, allied fleets.

OHETEROA, an island in the S. Pacific; 13 miles in circuit. It has no harbour, and is neither so populous nor fertile as the islands to the N. of it; but its manufactures are of a superior kind, the cloth is of a better dye, and the spears and clubs are better carved and polished. The people are lusty and well made, and rather browner than those of Tahiti. Long. 150. 47. W. lat. 22. 27. S.

OHIO, a river of N. America, formed by the junction of the Alleghany and the Monongahela, at Pittsburg. It bounds the states of Ohio and Kentucky in its whole length; and the only disadvantage it has is a rapid, just below Louisville, one mile and a half long, with a descent of 22½ feet. In this place the river runs over a rocky bottom, above 1000 yards broad. These falls are obviated by a canal round them, but boats can pass them when the water is high. The current is very gentle, and the whole descent of the river from its source to its mouth is estimated at 395 feet, or rather less than 5 inches per mile. Of its two confluent, the Alleghany is the more important, as it will be hereafter united by the Genesee Valley canal, starting from Olean in New York to the Erie canal, thus forming an important junction between New York and the West. The great valley drained by the Ohio and its tributaries is estimated at an area of 200,000 square miles; and the river and its tributaries have 5000 miles of navigation. The Ohio carries a great uniformity of breadth, from 400 to 600 yards, except the last 150 miles, where it is from 800 to 900 yards. After a course of 1188 miles, in which it receives many large and small rivers, it enters the Mississippi, in lat. 36.58. N.

Onto, one of the United States of America, erected in 1802, lying between 38. 30. and 42. 2. N. lat. and 80. 35. and 84. 47. W. long. It is bounded N. by the territory of Michigan and Lake Erie, E. by Pennsylvania, S.E. and S. by the Ohio, and W. by Indiana. This country, affirmed to be the most healthy and fertile spot in America, (but which assertion requires qualification) is divided into 79 counties. Its principal rivers are the Muskingum, Kockhocking, and Sciota, which runs into the Ohio; and the Cayahoga, which runs into Lake Erie. There are no slaves in this state. The manufactures of cotton, wool, hemp, flax, iron, earthenware, &c., are prosecuted with great success; ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent, and the inhabitants are rapidly increasing in number and wealth. In 1815 the population amounted to 324,070; in 1840, 1,519,467. Columbus is the seat of the legislature, but Cincinnati is the principal town.

Onto, a county in the state of Virginia, on the Ohio river; capital, Wheeling. Pop. 13,357.—Also a county in Kentucky; capital, Hartford. Pop. 6592.

Onto, a city in Brooklyn county, Ohio, at the mouth of the Cayahoga river, on lake Erie, opposite Cleveland; 145 miles N.N.E. Columbus. Pop. 1577.

OLDENBURG, a grand duchy of Germany, consisting of several scattered portions, containing together 2412 square miles, and a population of 240,000. Oldenburg Proper was formerly a county, united with Delmenhorst; and when the line of its counts became extinct, in 1667, it devolved to the royal family of Denmark. In 1773 it was exchanged by Denmark with the grand duke of Russia, for the district of Kiel, in Holstein; and in 1777 the emperor of Germany raised it to the rank of a duchy. The reigning duke was expelled by Napoleon in 1810, but was restored in 1813, and at the congress of Vienna received the title of grand duke. He now possesses, besides Oldenburg Proper (including Delmenhorst and the lordships of Varel, Jever, and Knipphausen), the principality of Eutin (formerly the bishopric of Lubeck), in Holstein, and the lordship of Bürkenfeld, ceded by Prussia out of the territory on the Rhine. The area and population of each is as follows:—

	AREA Sq. M.	POP. IN 1837.

OONALASHKA, one of the Aleutian islands in the North Pacific, visited by Cook in his last voyage. The natives are described as very peaceable. Fish and other sea animals, birds, roots, berries, and oven sea-weed, compose their food. They dry quantities of fish during the summer, which they lay up in small huts for their use in winter. Their clothing is chiefly composed of skins. The upper garment, made like a waggoner's frock, reaches down to the knees. Besides this, they wear a waistcoat, or two, a pair of breeches, a fur cap, and boots. They manufacture mats and baskets of grass, which are both strong and beautiful; and there is a neatness and perfection in most of their works, which shows that they are not deficient in ingenuity and perseverance. OPORTO, or PORTO, a city and seaport of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, and a bishop's see. It is by nature almost impregnable; and is noted for its strong wines, of which large quantities are exported to England; whence all red wines from Spain or Portugal are called Port wines. The other chief exports are oranges, lemons, oil, sumach, and linen cloth. Its commerce greatly increased after the earthquake at Lisbon, in 1755; before that time the population was estimated at 20,000, and it is now said to be 80,000. Oporto was in the hands of the French during part of 1808, and the spring of 1809. The inhabitants readily joined in the revolution of the kingdom; and it has been still more recently (1847) the scene of much commotion in the struggle between Don Miguel and the queen for the supremacy. It is seated on the side of a mountain, near the river Douro, which forms an excellent harbour; 172 miles N. by E. of Lisbon. Long. 8. 37. W. lat. 41. 10. N.

OPPELN, a province of the Prussian states, comprising the greater part of Upper Silesia. It consists chiefly of hills and mountains, abounding with extensive forests, and containing a large store of valuable minerals. The district called the principality of Oppeln, including more than half of this province, was formerly governed by its own duke.

OPPELN, the capital of the above province, with a Catholic collegiate church. It has a great trade in wool, and stands on the Oder, 150 miles S.E. of Breslau. Long. 18. 0. E. lat. 50. 39. N. Pop. in 1838, 6281.

OPPENHEIM, a town of Germany, in Hesso Darmstadt. The vicinity produces excellent wine. It is seated on the side of a hill, near the Rhine, 12 m. S.S.E. of Mentz. Pop. 1700.

ORAN, a city and seaport of Algier, in the province of Tremccen, with an excellent harbour, almost opposite Carthage, in Spain. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1509, and retaken in 1708. In 1732 the Spaniards became masters of it again. It is now in the possession of the French. In 1790 it was destroyed by an earthquake, little besides the exterior walls being left standing, when 2000 persons perished; 225 miles W.N.W. of Algier. Long. 0. 5. W. lat. 35. 58. N.

ORANGE, a city of France, in the department of Vaucluse, and a bishop's see. It was an important place in the time of the Romans, but at present is remarkable only for its antiquities. A triumphal arch, 200 paces from the town, was formerly within its limits; and here are also the remains of a fine amphitheatre, some aqueducts, &c. The fortifications were demolished by Louis XIV., in 1682. The chief manufactures are linen, serge, and paper. Orange was the capital of a principality of the same name, 17 miles long, and 12 broad, given by Charlemagne to William au Cornet, as a reward for his military services. It was possessed successively by the Houses of Baux, Chalons, and Nassau; and, on the death of William III. of England, in 1702, Frederic William of Prussia claimed the succession, but in 1713 it was ceded to France. The city is seated in a fine plain, on the river Aigues; 12 miles N. of Avignon, and 57 S. of Valence on the Lyons and Marselle railway. Pop. in 1836, 5897.

ORANGE, a county of the state of New York; bounded N. by Sullivan and Ulster counties, E. by Hudson, S.E. by Rockland county, and S.W. by New Jersey and Pennsylvania.—2. A county in the central part of Virginia.—3. In North Carolina.—4. In Indiana.—5. In Vermont.—Also, the name of various townships in the United States.

OREBRO, a government of Sweden, comprising the old Province of Nercia, part of Westmannland, and a small part of Warmeland. It contains 1780 square miles.

OREBRO, the capital of the above government, has a considerable trade with Stockholm, across the lakes Hielmars and Maeler, by means of the river and canal of Arboga: sending iron, vitriol, and red paint, in particular, to that capital. In the middle of the town, on a small island formed by the Swart, stands the castle, formerly a royal residence. It is seated near the W. extremity of the lake Hielmars, 100 miles W. by S. of Stockholm. Pop. in 1836, 4135.

OREGON TERRITORY, an extensive country of North-west America, lying between the Rocky mountains and the Pacific ocean, and drained by the Oregon or Columbia river, and its tributaries. The boundaries of it are:—on the E. the Rocky mountains; on the S. the Klamet range or Snowy mountains, on the parallel of 42. N. lat., and dividing it from the former Mexican territory; on the W. the Pacific ocean; on the N. the chain of lakes near the parallel of 50. N. lat. The area thus circumscribed contains about 480,000 square miles. According to the treaty of June 15, 1846, the division between the United States and the British territory is the continuation of the 49th parallel of N. lat. to the Pacific ocean, the navigation of the Columbia being free to both. The population consists of various tribes of Indians, fast decreasing in numbers, who perhaps may number 20,000; of whites, about 700 or 800. The surface is very various. Near the coast it is generally well timbered, and appears sufficiently fertile to yield the ordinary agricultural produce. Farther inland, the country is more rugged and barren, and apparently unserviceable for man. The Rocky mountains form an almost impenetrable barrier to the E., and only a few difficult and dangerous passes. The great South Pass is in lat. 42. N.; and the Northern one, the Committee's Punch Bowl Pass, in lat. 52. N. The Columbia is the great river of the territory, and rising in the Rocky mountains, in lat. 50. N. long. 116. W., runs first N. and then S., and is increased by the Lewis river, whose length is 520 miles, and then turns W. and runs with a rapid course and cataracts on to the Pacific at Cape Disappointment. Its harbours are almost useless from their sand-bars, and, with the exception of those on Vancouver's island, cannot be made available. All the rivers abound with salmon, the principal food of the natives and settlers. The principal sources of merchandise have been used by the Hudson's Bay Company in the fur trade, which is centred at Fort Vancouver, eighty miles up the Columbia. The United States have erected a colony on the Willamette river, 94 miles above the Columbia, to be called "Oregon City." Astoria or Fort George, Wallawalla, and Puget's Sound, are the other principal settlements. The country can be but of very little service to the Eastern parts of America or Europe.

OREGRUND, a seaport of Sweden, in Uppland, on the gulf of Bothnia, opposite the small island of Ginson. The chief article exported is iron, from the long celebrated mine of Danamora in its vicinity. It is 70 m. N. of Stockholm. Long. 18. 5. E. lat. 60. 21. N.

OREL, a government of Russia, once a province of the government of Beilgorod. Area, 16,780 sq. miles. Pop. 1,366,000. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the Occa and Orel, 207 miles S.S.W. of Moscow. Long. 35. 57. E. lat. 52. 58. N.

ORIENT. See L'ORIENT.

ORIHUELA, a town of Spain, in Murcia, and a bishop's see; with a university, and a citadel built on a rock. The inhabitants have manufactures of silk, brandy distilleries, and some saltpetre works; and here are made curious snuff-boxes, with the roots of the terebinthus, much esteemed for preserving Spanish snuff. It is seated in a very fertile country, on the Segura, 12 miles N.E. of Murcia. Pop. 25,551.

ORINOCO. See OROCOCO.

ORISSA, a province of Hindostan; bounded on the N. by Bohar and Bengal, W. by Berar, S. by Golconda, and E. by the bay of Bengal. The greater part of the province now belongs to the British. It is divided into the districts of Cuttack, Mohurbunge, and Konjear.

ORISTANO, a fortified town of Sardinia, and an archbishop's see, with a good harbour. It is seated on the W. coast, on a bay of the same name; 42 miles N.W. of Gagliari. Long. 8. 51. E. lat. 39. 53. N.

ORIZABA, a town of North America, republic of Mexico; seated in a rich valley, 120 miles E. by S. of Mexico, and producing great quantities of tobacco in its neighbourhood. Celebrated for the mountain called the Peak of Orizaba. Pop. 8000.

ORKENED, a town of Sweden, in Schonen; 24 miles N. of Christianstallt.

ORKNEY ISLANDS, the ancient Orcades, a cluster of islands to the N. of Scotland, from which they are separated by Pentland frith. They lie between 54. 47. and 59. 20. N. lat., and are about 67 in number, of which 40 are inhabited, and besides a very large number of rocky islets or skerries. The largest is sometimes dignified with the appellation of Mainland, but is more frequently called Pomona. Beyond this island, to the N.E., are seen, among others, Rowsa, Eglisha, and Westra; Shapinsha and Eda; Stronsa, Sunda, and North Ronaldsha; and to the S. appear Hoy and South Ronaldsha, with others of inferior note. The currents and tides which flow between these islands are rapid and dangerous, and near the small isle of Swinna are two whirlpools, very dangerous to mariners, especially in calms. The sea-coast swarms with seals and otters, and is visited by whales, cod, ling, haddocks, herrings, and other fish; and on the shores are found large oysters, mussels, cockles, &c. The islands are visited by eagles, falcons, wild geese, and ducks in great variety, herons, hawks, gulls, &c. Springs of pure water are found in all the mountainous parts, and there are numerous lakes and rivulets abounding in fish. The heath on the mountains shelters grouse, plovers, snipes, &c., but there are no partridges, hares, nor foxes. There are great numbers of small sheep and black cattle, swine, rabbits, and red deer. The products of the valleys and plains are chiefly big and oats. Except juniper, wild myrtle, and heath, and a shrub called cyorhordon, there is scarcely a tree or plant to be seen; but this nakedness cannot have been their former state, as many trunks of large oaks are to be found in all the mosses. The climate in summer is moist and cold, but in winter there is very little snow, and that lies only a short time. Preceding the autumnal equinox, dreadful storms of wind, rain, and thunder occur. For about three weeks in mid-summer these islands enjoy the rays of the sun almost without intermission; but, for the same space in winter, that luminary hardly rises above the horizon, and is commonly obscured by clouds and mists. In this gloomy season the absence of day is supplied partly by moonlight, and partly by the radiance of the aurora borealis, which here gives a light nearly equal to that of a full moon. The coasts afford numerous bays and harbours for the fisheries. The chief exports are linen and woollen yarn, stockings, butter, dried fish, herrings, oil, feathers, and skins of various kinds, and kelp. The English language prevails in all these islands, although there are many words in the Norse or Norwegian still in use. The inhabitants have the general character of being frugal, sagacious, circumspect, and hospitable; but the common people are superstitious. The Orkney and Shetland isles unite in sending one member to the imperial parliament.

ORLANUNDA, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Gotha, seated on the Saale, opposite the influx of the Orla; 40 miles W.S.W. of Altenburg. Pop. 2000.

ORLANDO, a cape on the N. coast of Sicily, 15 miles W. by N. of Pattì. Long. 15. 4. E. lat. 38. 14. N.

ORLEANS, a city of France, capital of the department of Loiret, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Loire, and has a canal thence to the Loing near Montargis. Under the sons of Clovis it was the capital of a kingdom. In 1428 it stood a memorable siege against the English, which was raised by the celebrated Joan of Arc, called the Maid of Orleans. It is now considered one of the largest and most pleasant cities in France. The principal public buildings are the fine cathedral, town-house, court of justice, mint, and theatre. The trade consists in stockings, sheep skins, wine, brandy, corn, grocery, and particularly sugar, which is brought raw from Nantes and Rochelle. The faubourg of Paris is of a prodigious length, and that of Olivet, on the left side of the Loire, has a communication with the city by a bridge of nine arches. Near the city is a forest, containing 94,000 acres, planted with oak and other valuable trees. Orleans is 30 m. N.E. of Blois, and 60 S.S.W. of Paris. It has railways to Paris, Bordeaux, Bourges, Nantes, &c. Pop. in 1836, 40,272.

ORLEANS, an island and town of Lower Canada, on the river St. Lawrence, a little to the E. of Quebec. Long. 69. 50. W. lat. 17. 0. N.

ORLEANS, NEW, a city and the capital of Louisiana, built in 1720, under the regency of the duke of Orleans. In 1788 seven-eighths of the city were destroyed by fire; but it was rebuilt on a regular plan, principally in the Spanish and French style. It is seated in a swampy plain, about seven feet below the level of the Mississippi, and 105 miles from its mouth. The old city does not now form more than about one-eighth of its present extent. Above it were the suburbs, or faubourgs, of St. Mary and Annunciation, and below it those of Murigny, Franklin, and Washington. The legislature in 1836, divided it into three principalities. It is very commandingly situated for commerce, being here connected with not less than 20,000 miles of rivers navigable by steam. Several railroads too, connect it with the lakes Pontchartrain and Borgne, &c. The Levée, an embankment which protects it from the waters of the Mississippi, it being from 3 to 9 feet below its higher level, is about 20 feet broad, from 4 to 10 feet high, and extends 43 miles below the city, and 120 above it. In part of the city it has been formed into a noble promenade. At times a break or crevasse is made by the waters through this dyke, and great destruction ensues, as was the case in 1849. The city contains a state-house, custom-house, 2 exchanges, and a splendid Romanist cathedral, a convent, 3 theatres, and fewer churches in proportion to its extent than any other place in the United States. No city in the United States has so great a variety of inhabitants as this, with such a great contrast of manners, language, and complexion. During the hot months it is very unhealthy, from fevers, &c. It was founded by the French in 1717, but conveyed to the Spaniards in 1762, re-conveyed to the French in 1800, and purchased by the United States in 1803. On January 8th, 1815, the British made an attack on the city, but were repulsed with great loss, the commander, General Packenham, being killed. It is the fourth city in rank of population in the United States. In 1810 there were 17,242 inhabitants; in 1820, 27,176; in 1830, 46,310; and in 1840, 102,193. Long. 90. 0. W. lat. 29. 58. N.

ORLEANS, a county of Vermont; capital, Irasburg. Pop. 13,634.—Also a county in New York, on lake Ontario, and traversed by the Erie canal; capital, Albion. Pop. 25,127.—Also a parish of Louisiana; surface marshy but fertile, producing sugar, rice, cotton, and garden produce; capital, New Orleans. Pop. 102,193, including 23,450 slaves, in 1840.

ORLEANS, a town of Massachusetts, on the narrow part of Cape Cod peninsula. Its inhabitants (1974 in 1840) are extensively employed in the fisheries and the manufacture of salt; 95 miles S.E. of Boston.

ORLENGA, a town of Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, situate on the Lena; 235 miles N. of Irkutsk. Long. 105. 40. E. lat. 56. 0. N.

ORMEA, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated on the river Tanaro; 12 miles S. of Mondovì.

ORMSKIRK, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Thursday. The parish church is remarkable for its two steeples, placed contiguous; one a tower, and the other a short spire. Three other churches have been erected under the recent acts; and here are also three meeting-houses for dissenters, a grammar-school, and a national school. The chief branches of trade are cotton-spinning and coal; coarse thread is also made for sail-cloth; 3 miles N. by E. of Liverpool, and 209 N.N.W. of London.

Some time after, the Persians rebuilt the fort, and, though they could never bring it to be a place of trade as before, it is still the key of the gulf of Persia, on account of the commodiousness of the harbour. It is now almost deserted; for it produces nothing but salt, which sometimes is two inches deep upon the surface of the earth. Long. 56. 25. E. lat. 27. 20. N.

OUNANS, a town of France, department of Doubs, seated on the Louvre; 10 miles S.E. of Besançon. Pop. 3100.

ORNE, a department of France, including the old province of Perche, and part of that of Normandy. It takes its name from a river which rises in the department, and runs into the English Channel 8 miles below Caen. Pop. in 1836, 441,881. The capital is Alençon.

ORONOCO, or ORINOCO, a majestic river of South America, which issues from the small lake Ipava, in lat. 5. N., flows E. and S.E. to the lake Parima, from which it runs towards the W.; but after receiving the Guaviari, it bends N., then N.E. and E., till it enters the Atlantic by an extended delta of mouths opposite the isle of Trinidad; but the principal one is considerably to the S.E. of that island, in lat. 8. 30. N. In this singular winding course, estimated at 1400 miles, it receives many large rivers; and its chief estuary is so deep and impetuous as to stem the most powerful tides. See PARIMA.

ORONSA, a small fertile island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S. of Colonsa, from which it is separated by a narrow channel that is dry at low water. Here are the ruins of an abbey, with many sepulchral statues, and some curious ancient sculpture.

OTAHA, one of the Society islands, in the South Pacific. It lies N. of Ulitea, and is divided from it by a strait, which, in the narrowest part, is not more than 2 miles broad. This island is smaller and more barren than Ulitea, but has two good harbours.

OTAHITE, or TAHITI, an island in the S. Pacific; discovered in 1767 by Captain Wallis, who called it George the Third island. Captain Cook, who came hither in 1768 to observe the transit of Venus, sailed round the whole island in a boat, and staid three months; it was visited twice afterwards by that celebrated navigator. It consists of two peninsulas, about 30 leagues in circumference. Great part of it is covered with woods, consisting partly of bread-fruit trees, palms, cocoa-nut-trees, plantains, bananas, mulberries, sugar-caues, and others peculiar to the climate, particularly a kind of pine-apple, and the dragon-tree. The only quadrupeds found on the island were hogs, dogs, and rats. The inhabitants were mild features, and a pleasing countenance. They are about the ordinary size of Europeans, of a pale mahogany brown, with fine black hair and eyes. Their provisions are chiefly fish, pork, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, and bananas; and they employ sea-water as a sauce, both to fish and pork. Nothing can exceed their agility in swimming, diving, and climbing trees, and they are praised for their gentleness, good nature, and hospitality. Previously to the introduction of European habits, the men wore a piece of cloth round their middle, and another wrapped about the head like a turban; the women had a piece of cloth, with a hole in the middle, through which they passed their heads, so that one part of the garment hung down behind and the other before to the knees; a fine white cloth, like muslin, passing over this in various elegant turns round the body. Tattooing was common among both sexes. Their houses had seldom any walls, but consisted only of a roof, thatched with the long prickly leaves of the palm tree, and supported by a few pillars made of the bread-fruit tree. The native cloth is made of the fibrous bark of the mulberry-tree, which is beaten with a kind of mallet; and a glue, made of the hibiscus esculentus, is employed to make the bark cohere. Some of these pieces are two or three yards wide, and 50 yards long. In 1799 king Pomare ceded the district of Matavai, on the N. side of this island, to some of the missionaries belonging to the London Missionary society, through whose labours all the inhabitants of Otaheite, and many of the neighbouring islands, have been led to renounce idolatry. The sovereign himself became a decided convert to Christianity. A general reformation of manners was effected, a number of schools established, the useful arts introduced, and civilization rapidly advanced. But these great advantages were perhaps doomed to be nullified, for in 1845 the French government took military possession of the island, expelled our missionaries, and supplanted them by those of the Roman Catholic religion. Point Venus is in long. 149. 36. W. lat. 17. 29. S.

It is divided into six districts, two of which, on the N. E. side, are separated by a mountain, which rises in three peaks, the summits of which are 18,000 feet above the level of the sea; they are perpetually covered with snow, and may be seen at 40 leagues' distance. To the N. of this mountain, the coast consists of high and abrupt cliffs, down which fall many beautiful cascades; and the whole country is covered with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees. To the S. the ground is covered with cinders, and in many places has black streaks, which seem to mark the course of a lava that has flowed from the mountain to the shore. The southern promontory looks like the mere dregs of a volcano. The projecting headland is composed of broken and craggy rocks piled irregularly on one another, and terminating in sharp points; yet amidst these ruins are many patches of rich soil, carefully laid out in plantations. The fields are enclosed by stone fences, and are interspersed with groves of cocoa-nut trees. Here Captain Cook, in 1779, fell a victim to a sudden resentment of the natives, with whom he unfortunately had a dispute. The inhabitants, formerly devoted to the most degrading superstitions, have within a few years wholly renounced idolatry, and some American missionaries are settled amongst them. They are said to be naturally mild, friendly, and hospitable to strangers. The king and chiefs ceded this island to Great Britain in 1794. Pop. 85,000. Long. 156. 0. W. lat. 19. 28. N.

OXFORD, a town of New York, in Chango county; 45 m. N.E. of Union. Pop. 3179.

OXFORD, the capital of Oxfordshire, and a bishop's see; with markets on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated at the conflux of the Cherwell with the Isis, and has a canal to Braunston, in Northamptonshire. The city, with the suburbs, is of a circular form, three miles in circumference, and was anciently surrounded by walls, of which some remains are yet to be seen; as also of its extensive castle, the tower of which is conspicuous. It has, besides the cathedral, 13 parish churches, a number of dissenting chapels, a noble market-place, and two bridges. The university is generally supposed to have been a seminary for learning before the time of Alfred, although it owed its revival and consequence to his liberal patronage. Here are 19 colleges and five halls, several of which stand in the streets, and give the city an air of magnificence. The colleges are provided with revenues for the maintenance of a master, fellows, and scholars, &c. The colleges are, University, Balliol, Merton, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's, New, Lincoln, All Souls, Magdalen, Brazen Nose, Corpus Christi, Christ Church, Trinity, St. John Baptist, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, and Worcester. Of these, the most ancient is University College, founded before the year 872; and to Christ Church College, begun by Cardinal Wolsey, and finished by Henry VIII., belongs the cathedral. The halls are Alban, Edmund, New Inn, St. Mary and Magdalen. Among the libraries in the university, the most distinguished is the Bodleian (founded by Sir Thomas Bodley), those of All Souls College, Christ Church, Queen's, New, St. John's, Exeter, and Corpus Christi. Among other public buildings are the theatre, the Ashmolean museum, the Clarendon printing-house, the Radcliffe infirmary, the observatory, and the Taylor institute. Magdalen Bridge is more than half on dry ground, the rest covers the Cherwell, and is 526 feet long. A beautiful cross, a memorial to the martyrs Latimer, Ridley, and Cranmer, has been erected. At Oxford, King John, compelled by his barons, summoned a parliament to meet in 1258, the proceedings of which were so disorderly that it was afterwards known by the name of the Mad Parliament. Charles I. assembled a parliament here in 1625, in consequence of the plague then raging in London; and in 1644 he summoned such of the members of both houses as were devoted to his interests; these were seceders from the parliament then sitting at Westminster. This city was distinguished for its attachment to that unfortunate king, who here held his court during the whole civil war. Without the town are many ruins of the fortifications erected in that war. Oxford is governed by a mayor, dependent on the chancellor and vice-chancellor of the university, and sends four members to parliament, two for the university and two for the city. It is connected by a branch to the Great Western railway which will be continued to Birmingham. It is 50 miles S. by E. of Coventry, and 55 W.N.W. of London. Long. 1. 15. 29. W. lat. 51. 45. 38. N.

OXFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded E. by Buckinghamshire, W. by Gloucestershire, S. by Berkshire, and N. by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire. The extreme length is 48 miles, and breadth 38, but its form is very irregular. It contains 467,380 acres, is divided into 14 hundreds and 207 parishes, has one city and 12 market towns. The soil, though various, is fertile in corn and grass. The S. part, especially on the borders of Buckinghamshire, is hilly and woody, having a continuation of the Chiltern Hills running through it. The N. W. part is also elevated and stony. The middle is in general a rich country, watered by numerous streams running from N. to S. and terminating in the Thames. Of these the most considerable are the Windrush, Ewanlode, Cherwell, and Tame; the last, although an inconsiderable rivulet, has obtained some importance from having been supposed to give name to the Thames. The products of Oxfordshire are chiefly those common to the midland farming counties; and a great improvement has taken place of late years in the agricultural system. Its hills yield ochre, pipe-clay, and other earths, useful for various purposes. A branch of the Great Western railway traverses it. Corn and malt are conveyed from it by the Thames to the metropolis; and the Oxford canal affords a direct water communication with Liverpool, Manchester, and the Wrensbury collieries, as well as with London and Bristol. It returns three members to parliament.

PACHAMAC, or PACHACAMA, a town of Peru, in the province of Cercado, situate in a valley of its name; formerly beautified with a magnificent temple, built by the incas, in which the Spaniards, when they conquered Peru, found immense riches. It is 18 miles S.S.E. of Lima.

PACHETE, a town and fort of Bengal, formerly the capital of a district of its name, which is now included in the government of Burdwan. It stands near the Dunmooda; 10 miles N.E. of Rogonatpour.

PACHUCA, a town of Mexico, noted for the rich silver mines in its vicinity; 56 miles N. by E. of Mexico. Long. 100. 41. W. lat. 20. 44. N.

PACIFIC OCEAN, otherwise called the South sea, lying between Asia and America. It is the largest ocean in the world, extending over more than one-third of its whole surface, and being upwards of 10,100 miles in breadth. When Magellan entered this ocean, through the dangerous strait that bears his name, he sailed three months and 20 days in a uniform direction to the N.W. without discovering land. In the distress he suffered in his voyage, before he discovered the Ladrone islands, he had the consolation of enjoying such calm and gentle weather, with fair winds, that he gave this ocean the name of Pacific. The Spaniards, on passing the isthmus of Darien from N. to S., at the first discovery of this ocean, named it the South sea; but, with respect to America, it is more properly the western ocean. On one side of the equator it is called the North, and on the other the South Pacific.

PACY, a town of France, department of Eure, on the Eure; 11 miles E. of Evreux.

PADANG, a seaport on the W. coast of Sumatra, in the possession of the Dutch. It was taken by the British in 1781, and again in 1794; but finally surrendered to the Dutch in 1814. In 1797 it was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, and upwards of 300 lives were lost. Long. 99. 49. E. lat. 0. 50. S.

PADINGTON, a village in Middlesex, W. by N. of London. From the number of buildings erected of late years, it is now joined to the metropolis. A canal passes hence to the Grand Junction canal, near Brentford, and the Great Western railway commences here.

PADERBORN, an ancient principality of Westphalia, 40 miles long, and 25 broad; remarkable for its bacon and venison. It now belongs to Prussia.

PADERBORN, a fortified town of Prussian Westphalia. The rivulet Pader rises under the high altar of the cathedral, and in the collegiate church are the remains of St. Blaise. It is 52 miles E.S.E. of Munster. Pop. in 1838, 7895.

PADSTOW, a town in Cornwall, with a market on Saturday, a convenient harbour, and some coasting trade. It is seated at the mouth of the Camel, near the Bristol channel; 30 miles W. of Launceston, and 243 W. by S. of London.

PADUA, a province of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice; 40 miles long, and 35 broad, bounded by Rovigo, Verona, Vicenza, Treviso, and Venice. It is well watered, and one of the most fertile countries in Italy.

PADUA, a fortified city of Italy, capital of the above province, and a bishop's see. It is 7 miles in circumference, but much less considerable than formerly, for great part of the area within the walls is unbuilt, and the town in general so thinly inhabited, that grass grows in many of the streets. The houses are built on piazzas, which, when the town was in a flourishing state, may have had a magnificent appearance; but they now rather give it a gloomy air. The cathedral is one of the richest in Italy: in the sacristy is a statue of the celebrated Petrarch, who was a canon of the church, and left to it a part of his library. The Franciscan church is dedicated to St. Antonio, the patron of the city, whose body is enclosed in a sarcophagus, under an altar in the middle of the chapel. Near this church is the school of St. Antonio, where many of the actions of the saint are painted in fresco, some of them by Titian. The church of St. Justina is remarkable for its rich Mosaic pavement. The hall of the town-house is one of the largest in Europe, and contains the cenotaph of Livy, who was a native of Padua. The university, once so celebrated, is now on the decline, but was remodelled in 1814. Here are manufactures of cloth, silk, ribbons, and leather, all on a small scale. Padua was taken by the French in 1796. It is seated on the Brenta and Bachiglione, in a fine plain; 20 miles W. by S. of Venice. Pop. 47,000. Long. 11. 52. E. lat. 45. 24. N.

PADULA, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra; 14 miles N. of Pollicastro. Pop. 6000.

PAGAHN, a decayed city of Birmah, anciently capital of a province of the same name. It is said to have been abandoned in the 13th century, in consequence of a divine admonition. The remains of its ancient splendour are numerous mouldering temples, and the vestiges of a fort. It is seated on the Irrawaddy, 110 miles S.W. of Ummerapora. Long. 94. 34. E. lat. 21. 10. N.

PAGLIANO, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra; 15 miles E.S.E. of Aquilla.

PAGO, an island in the gulf of Venice, separated from Dalmatia by a narrow channel. It is 20 miles long, and 6 broad, chiefly barren, and the soil stony; but it is well peopled, contains salt-works, and produces wine and honey. The chief town is of the same name. Long. 51. 10. E. lat. 44. 40. N.

PAHANG, a reduced seaport on the E. coast of the peninsula of Malaya, capital of a kingdom of the same name, containing 50,000 inhabitants; famous for a great number of elephants, and for plenty of pepper. It is 140 miles N.E. of Malacca. Long. 103. 30. E. lat. 3. 55. N.

PAIMBEUR, a seaport of France, department of Loire Inferieure, at the mouth of the Loire. Hence all the ships belonging to Nantes take their departure, and here they anchor on their arrival; 22 miles W. by N. of Nantes. Pop. in 1836, 3850. Long. 1. 59. W. lat. 47. 17. N.

PAISLEY, a burgh in Scotland, the largest town in Renfrewshire. It returns one member to Parliament. It has considerable manufactures of shawls of various descriptions, particularly of cashmere wool, and of silk, linen, gauze, lawn, muslin, cambric, thread, &c.; also extensive soap, candle, and cotton works. The river White Cart divides it into the Old and New Town, which communicate by three bridges. The latter stands on the E. side of the river, and consists of many handsome buildings; it also contains the magnificent remains of an abbey church, and the only one which Paisley formerly required; and close by this is a small vaulted chapel, used as the family burial-place of the Marquis of Abercorn, which is famous for a surprising echo. Paisley is divided into four parishes, has 11 churches belonging to the establishment, and 16 for dissenters, besides several meeting-houses. By means of the river, and a canal, vessels of 40 tons can come up and unload at the quay; and the Glasgow, Greenock, and Ayr railways pass this town. It is 7½ miles W. of Glasgow, and 52 from Edinburgh. Long. 4. 23. W. lat. 55. 57. N.

PAITA, a seaport of Peru, with an excellent

PALERMO, a fortified city of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, capital of the island, and an archbishop's see. It stands on a bay of the same name, on the N. coast, near the extremity of a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by high and rocky mountains. The country between the city and the mountains is one of the richest plains in the world; the whole appearing a magnificent garden, filled with fruitful trees, and watered by fountains and rivulets. The two principal streets intersect each other in the centre of the city, where they form a handsome square, called the Ottangola. from the centre of which is seen the whole of these noble streets, and the four elegant gates which terminate them, each at the distance of half-a-mile. The Porto Felice opens to the Marino, a delightful walk, which has on one side the wall of the city, and on the other the sea; and in the centre is an elegant kind of temple, frequently made use of as an orchestra. The churches of Palermo are upwards of 300, and many of them very rich and magnificent. The cathedral is a large Gothic structure, supported within by 80 columns of oriental granite, and divided into a great number of chapels, some of which are extremely rich, particularly that of St. Rosalia, the patroness of Palermo. The relics of this saint are preserved in a large box of silver, enriched with precious stones; and they are considered as the greatest treasures of the city. Here are also found the tombs of several of the ancient Norman kings, and of the emperors Henry VI. and Frederick II., of the finest porphyry. This city has suffered greatly at different periods by earthquakes and inundations. The harbour, defended by two castles, forms a magnificent mole a quarter of a mile long, which cost above L.1,000,000, and is capable of accommodating a large number of vessels. About the middle of the 11th century, the Norman king, Roger, established silk manufactures in this city, by means of prisoners taken in his war with the Greeks, and they still flourish, though not so lucrative since the manufacture has extended to Italy. One mile from Palermo is a celebrated convent of Capuchins, in which is a vault, made use of as a receptacle for the dead. It consists of four wide passages each about 40 feet in length, with arches along the sides, in which the bodies are set upright, clothed in coarse garments, with their heads, arms, and feet bare. On the floor are handsome trunks, containing the bodies of persons of distinction, the keys of which are kept by the relations. In 1799, when the French made themselves masters of Naples, Palermo became the residence of the court. In July, 1860, it was captured by Garibaldi, after the Neapolitan garrison had wantonly bombarded a crowded district of the city. It is 130 m. W. of Messina, and 200 S. by W. of Naples. Pop. in 1840, 140,000, which is reduced from 174,000 in 1831, in consequence of the cholera. Long. 13. 20. E. lat. 38. 7. N.

PALESTINE, a county of Syria, so called from the Philistines, who inhabited its sea coast. In the scriptures it is styled the Land of Canaan, and the Promised Land; it is also called Judæa, from the patriarch Judah; and the Holy Land, from its having been the scene of the birth, ministry, and death of Jesus Christ. It is divided from the other parts of Syria, on the N. by Mount Libanus, and on the E. by the river Jordan and the Dead sea, Arabia Petræa on the S. and the Mediterranean on the W. It is in general a fertile country, abounding, where cultivated, with corn, wine, and oil; and it might supply the neighbouring country with all these, as it anciently did, were the present inhabitants equally industrious. The parts about Jerusalem are the most mountainous and rocky; but they feed numerous herds and flocks, and yield plenty of honey, with excellent wine and oil; and the valleys produce large crops of corn. This country has been conquered and occupied by such a variety of foreign races, that it is difficult to say which forms the basis of its present population. It now belongs to the Turkish empire, and is included in the pachalics of Acre and Damascus, the former comprehending the sea coast, and the latter extending over the interior. The name of Palestine is not known in the country itself, but is applied to it only by Europeans. See SYRIA.

It consists of about 10 islets, connected by a reef of coral rocks, and lying in a circular direction; the principal one not exceeding a mile in circumference, nor more than three feet above the level of the sea. It abounds with cocoa-nuts, scurvy-grass, and the wharra-tree, but has no inhabitants. Long. 162. 57. W. lat. 18. 0. S.

PALMYRA, or TADMOR, once a magnificent city of Syria, originally built by king Solomon, in the midst of a sandy desert, bounded on three sides by a chain of high mountains. On the decline of the Macedonian empire in the E., it became the capital of a principality, under the name of Palmyra; and it declared for the Romans, on Adrian marching his army through Syria to Egypt. The city flourished and increased to the time of Aurelian, when it resisted the Roman power under queen Zenobia, who was at length taken captive, and led in triumph through the streets of Rome. Soon afterwards the inhabitants massacred the soldiers who had been left in garrison; this occasioned the return of Aurelian, who, having made himself master of the place, caused the inhabitants to be destroyed, and gave up the city to pillage. Its stupendous ruins were visited, in 1751, by Mr. Wood, who published a splendid account of them in 1753. The inhabitants consist of about 40 Arab families, living in mud cottages, erected within the spacious court of a once magnificent temple. It is 100 miles S.E. of Aleppo. Long. 38. 50. E. lat. 33. 20. N.

PALMYRA, a town of New York, standing on the Erie canal. It is above a mile long, each end touching the canal, and finely ornamented with trees; 195 miles W. by N. of Albany. Pop. 3549.

PALOS, a seaport of Spain, in Andalusia, with a tolerable harbour; celebrated as the place whence Columbus sailed on his first adventurous voyage, in 1492. It is seated at the mouth of the Tinto; 50 miles W. by S. of Seville. Long. 6. 52. W. lat. 37. 10. N.

PALOS, CAPE, a promontory of Spain, in Murcia; 19 miles E. of Carthage. Long. 0. 40. W. lat. 37. 37. N.

PAMLICO, or PAMLICO SOUND, a shallow body of water on the coast of North Carolina, 80 miles long and from 8 to 30 broad; separated from the Atlantic ocean by a range of low sandy islands scarcely a mile broad. Ocracoke inlet is the principal entrance. The Pamlico river is a broad estuary 40 miles long, a continuation of the Tar river, which enters the Sound.

PAMPELONNE, a town of France, department of Tarn; 15 miles N. by E. of Alby.

PAMPLIEGA, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 12 miles S.W. of Burgos.

PAMPLONA, or PAMPELUNA, a city of Spain, capital of Upper Navarre, and a bishop's see; with a strong citadel, and a university. The squares are handsome, and adorned with shops. It was taken by the French on their invasion of Spain: but surrendered to the allied forces in 1813. It is seated on the Arga; 47 miles S. of Bayonne, and 197 N.E. of Madrid. Pop. 15,000. Long. 1. 39. W. lat. 42. 50. N.

PAMTICO SOUND, a kind of inland sea, on the coast of North Carolina, 100 miles long and from 10 to 20 broad; separated, in its whole length, from the Atlantic by a beach of sand hardly a mile wide. It has several inlets, but that of Ocracoke, in lat. 35. 10. N., is the only one that would admit vessels of burden.

PANAOGIA, a town of Romania, in European Turkey; 14 miles N. of Gallipoli.

PANAMA, a city and seaport of Colombia, capital of a district of the same name, in the republic of New Granada. It stands on a fine bay of its name, on the S. coast of the isthmus. The climate is very unhealthy. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons, it was the emporium for all the merchandise of Chili and Peru intended for Europe. Upon the destruction of the Spanish galleon trade, Panama fell into poverty and ruin, and remained for many years an emblem of fallen greatness. When, however, the Californian prosperity arose, and Panama became once more the port connecting the eastern and western worlds, this city became suddenly prosperous, and is now the focus of a considerable transit trade, and regular and extensive steam communication is now centred here. It is 60 miles S. by W. of Porto Bello. Pop. about 11,000. Long. 79. 30 W. lat. 8. 57. N. See DARIEN.

PANAMA, ISTHMUS OF, the narrowest part of the neck of land joining the North and South American continents. It is in the territory of the republic of New Granada. Across it there have been several projects for cutting canals; but it would appear that there are great natural difficulties to contend with. The length of this canal would be about 30 miles, and the highest level about 177 feet, but there would be no means of getting water to such a level—an insuperable difficulty. To obviate this, an immense tunnel, to cost £2,000,000, has been proposed. It would appear that some of the schemes are not impossible; but they are now in abeyance, from the construction of a plank railroad from Aspenwall, near Chagres, on the Atlantic side, to near Panama City. This was partially opened on the north side in 1851, and completed in 1855. The important passage of the Isthmus is now safely made in four hours.

PANARAGA, a town of the island of Java; 60 miles E. by N. of Mataram.

PANARUCAN, a town on the N. coast of Java, formerly the capital of a principality, but now subject to the Dutch. The chief export is long pepper. Long. 113. 25. E. lat. 8. 0. S.

PANA, one of the Philippine islands, between those of Paragoa and Negros. It is of a triangular form, 250 miles in circumference, populous and fertile, and watered by a great number of rivers and brooks. The chief commodity for exportation is rice. Iloilo is the capital.

PANCRAS, ST., an extensive parish in Middlesex, 2 miles N.W. of the city of London. The old church, lately rebuilt, and its churchyard, have long been noted as a burial-place for Roman Catholics. An elegant new church has been erected, as well as several other churches; there is also a Roman Catholic, and several Dissenting chapels. The Foundling Hospital, and the termini of the North Western and the Great Northern railways, are in this parish. Like all other suburbs of London, it now partakes of all the features of a densely peopled locality.

PANCSOVA, a town and fortress of Hungary, seated near the Danube; 10 miles E.N.E. of Belgrade.

PANGASENA, one of the Molucca islands, in the East Indies; 45 miles long, and 10 broad, lying between Celebes and Bourton.

PANGO, a town of the kingdom of Congo; capital of a province of the same name. It stands on the river Barbella; 95 miles N.N.E. of St. Salvador. Long. 14. 45. E. lat. 4. 20. S.

PANTANY, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Malabar; containing above 40 mosques, 500 houses belonging to traders, and 1000 huts inhabited by the lower orders of people. The port is frequented by small vessels from different places on the coast; and much rice is exported hence to the northern parts of the province. It is seated in a sandy plain, near the mouth of a river;

32 miles S. by E. of Calicut. Long. 75. 58. E. lat. 10. 47. N.

PANIPUR, a town of Hindostan, in the province of Delhi; celebrated for a battle, in 1761, between an army of 200,000 Mahrattas, and Abdallah, sultan of Candahar, at the head of 150,000 Mohammedans, in which the former were totally defeated. Paniput is situate in an extensive plain, 72 miles N.W. of Delhi. Long. 76. 55. E. lat. 29. 13. N.

PANOMI, a town of Mucedonia; 16 miles S. of Salonichi.

PANTALARIA, or PANTELLARIA, an island in the Mediterranean; belonging to Sicily, and situated between that island and the coast of Tunis. It is 30 miles in circumference, and abounds in cotton, fruits, and wine. Pop. 6000.

PANTICOOSA, a village of Aragon, in Spain, among the Pyrenees, which owes its celebrity to its mineral baths, and is one of the highest inhabited spots in the mountain, being 8500 feet above the sea.

PANUCO, or GUASTECA, a province of Mexico; bounded on the E. by the gulf of Mexico, and W. by Mechoacan and New Biscay. The tropic of Cancer divides it in two parts, the S. part abounds with provisions, and has some veins of gold and mines of salt; but the other is poor and barren.

PANUCO, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see, is situate near a river of the same name, which falls into the gulf of Mexico; 210 miles N.N.E. of Mexico. Long. 98. 50. W. lat. 22. 50. N.

PARÁ, the northernmost province of the empire of Brazil. It is an immense territory, separated by the Amazon from Guiana on the N.; extending W. to the Madera; or, according to some, including the district of Solimoens, and having the provinces of Matto Grosso, Gozar, and Maranham to the S. and E. of it. It contains a population of about 250,000. It is celebrated for its cotton, sugar, india rubber, vanilla, chocolate, and coffee. The climate is very sultry, and alike all the year round; the woods abound with valuable timber, and it has extensive lakes, an immense number of noble rivers, and extensive and most fertile valleys. Its resources are as yet entirely undeveloped. Para or Belem is the capital.

PARÁ or BELEM, a city of Brazil, the capital of Brazilian Guiana. It is on a high point of land on the S.E. bank of the Para river, 80 miles from the ocean. It is regular and handsome; but from internal disorders, and particularly the insurrection of 1835, its improvement as a town has not been rapid of late years. The cathedral is the largest in the empire, and was built in 1720-75. The chief apparent trade is in india rubber, or caoutchouc, but it has a large commerce.

PARACELS, or PRACELS, a vast multitude of small islands and rocks in the China sea, lying off the coast of Cochinchina. They extend 300 miles in length by 60 in breadth, and the intercurrents among them render their navigation dangerous.

PARADELLA, a town of Portugal, in Beira 12 miles S.E. of Lamego.

PARAGOA, or PALAWAN, the most westerly of the Philippine islands, being 180 miles long, and from 20 to 40 broad, divided between the king of Borneo and the Spaniards, with some independent natives in the interior parts, who are black, and have no fixed place of abode. The Spaniards have a garrison at the N. end of the island, at a place called Tutay. Long. 118. 45. E. lat. 11. 0. N.

PARAGUAY, an extensive country of South America, bounded on the N. and E. by Brazil, S. by Patagonia, and W. by the Argentine republic. It contains numerous lakes and rivers; of the latter, the three principal are the Purana, Paraguay, and Uruguay, the united streams of which form the celebrated Rio de la Plata. These rivers annually overflow their banks. The climate is in general moist and temperate, though in some places it is cold. In the temperate parts the soil is extremely fertile, producing grain, beans, pease, cotton, tobacco, and the valuable herb called paraguay, which is peculiar to this country, and the infusion of which is drunk instead of tea. Here are also a variety of fruits and very rich pastures.

but the country is destitute of woods. Cattle, horses, and mules are in great abundance. In 1515 the Spaniards discovered this country by sailing up the Rio de la Plata, and in 1535 founded the town of Buenos Ayres. In 1580 the Jesuits were admitted into these fertile regions, and in the next century founded the famous missions of Paraguay. In 1757 Spain exchanged the colonies on the E. shore of the Uruguay for the Portuguese colony of St. Sacramento, which caused that river to become the boundary of the respective possessions of the two crowns. In 1767 the court expelled the Jesuits, and the natives were put upon the same footing with the other Indians of the Spanish part of South America. Upon the expulsion of the Jesuits, their system, and the consequent great amelioration of the condition of the country, came to be totally destroyed and forgotten; and it then became (in 1776) a tributary of the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres. In 1810 the Buenos Ayres revolutionary troops were defeated by the Paraguayans, and the latter, in 1813, proclaimed Paraguay a republic, under two consuls. In 1814, the future dictator, Dr. Francia, assumed the sole power, and then commenced one of the most anomalous governments recorded in history; his principle was that of total exclusion, so that nothing of the country was known until very recently. This system continued till his death, since which the country has been embroiled in the contests in which the European powers have taken a part.

PARAIBA, or PARAHYBA, a province of Brazil, between those of Rio Grande and Tamarica. It abounds in sugar-canes, branwood, tobacco, and cotton. The absence of industry, and debased state of the morals of its inhabitants, are its most remarkable features. Population, 100,000. The chief town, which is a city of the same name, is seated on the river Paranahyba, Pop. 4000. The Dutch obtained possession of it in 1635, and fortified it with a slight rampart; but the Portuguese retook it soon after. It has recently improved, and has considerable commerce.

PARAMARIBO, the capital of Dutch Guiana, on the W. bank of the river Surinam, 18 miles from its mouth. It is regularly built in the Dutch style, with straight wide streets, planted with orange trees; the houses in general are two storeys high and are built of wood. On the S. side is the fortress of Zelandia, in which the governor resides. Pop. about 20,000; of whom three-fifths are slaves or coloured people. The products of the country, chiefly sugar and coffee, are exported to Holland. Of late years the colony has not, according to official reports, advanced in prosperity. The average quantity of sugar exported is about 25,000 tons, and of coffee about 4,000,000 lbs.

PARAMYTHIA, a town in the kingdom of Greece, in the province of Albania; capital of a district, but without any regular government. Pop. together, about 15,000. The town is 19 miles S.W. of Joannina.

PARANA, a province of Paraguay; so named from a large river, which receives the Paraguay at Corrientes, and, afterwards joining the Uruguay, forms the river Plata. The river is the principal means of approach to the secluded region of Paraguay, once the dominions of the despotic dictator Francia, subsequently to whose death the ruling powers of the same country having pursued a line of policy which called for European interference, a battle was fought on the Parana, 4th June, 1846, between the united English and French fleets, and the Paraguayan and other troops, in which the victory was gained, without the loss of a single man on the conquering European side.

PARANAHYBA, or FERNAIBAO, RIO DE, one of the largest rivers of Brazil, rising in the Sierra, on the S. part of Piahy, and falling into the Atlantic at Parahyba, lat. 7. 6. S. long 34. 53. W.

PARCHWITZ, a town and castle of Prussian Silesia, with a considerable manufacture of cloth; seated on the Katzbach, 10 miles N.E. of Leignitz.

PARDUBITZ, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Chrudim, with a fortified castle, and a manufacture of knives and sword blades. It is seated on the Elbe, 23 miles E. by S. of Prague. Pop. 3000. Long. 15. 41. E. lat. 49. 51. N.

PARECHIA. See PAROS.

PARENZA, a seaport of Istria, on a peninsula in the gulf of Venice; with a harbour for large vessels. It is 28 miles S. by W. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 13. 50. E. lat. 45. 18. N.

PARGA, a seaport on the coast of Albania, opposite to the southern point of the island of Corfu; memorable as the only place which bade defiance to the arms of Ali Pacha, tyrant of Albania, to whom it was eventually surrendered on condition of his paying an indemnity to those of the inhabitants who should refuse to remain. The evacuation took place in 1819, most of the inhabitants removing to the Ionian islands. Pop. 4000. It is 30 miles S.W. of Joannina.

PARIA, a district of South America, province of Buenos Ayres, lying to the S.E. of Cumana, on the banks of the Oronoco, and including the delta of that river. On the N. of this province between Cumana and the island of Trinidad, is a large bay called the gulf of Paria.

PARIA, the capital of the above province. Here are some silver mines; and its cheeses, made from the milk both of sheep and cows, are in high esteem. It is 140 miles W.N.W. of Plata. Long. 68. 32. W. lat. 18. 30. S.

PARIDRONG, a strong town of Tibet, on the borders of Bootan; 45 miles W.N.W. of Tassasudon.

PARILLA, or SANTA, a town of Peru, in the province of Lima, at the mouth of a river of the same name; 80 miles S.E. of Truxillo, and 280 N.W. of Lima. Long. 77. 50 W. lat. 8. 56. S.

PARIMA, a lake of South America, near the borders of Amazonia and Guiana, of a square form, 80 miles long and 40 broad; formed by the Oronoco river.

PARIS, a city of Europe, the metropolis of France, and next to London in rank of magnificence and importance among the capitals of Europe. It stands on the river Seine, which forms two small islands, one of which was the entire site of the ancient city. It now covers an area of 14 square miles, the larger portion being on the north side of the Seine. The city stands in a plain, surrounded on several sides, especially to north-east, with considerable elevations. The streets in the north-west and west, the more modern and fashionable quarters, are wide, regular, and straight; in other parts, as in the old quarters near the Seine, and the southern parts, they are narrow, gloomy, and monotonous. The houses are of a superior order of architecture, frequently seven stories in height, and no underground floors; they are almost invariably plastered, and painted white. This circumstance, with the numerous windows with Persiennes, or wooden blinds, give the chief streets a gay and cheerful appearance. Along each bank of the Seine is a wide road or quai, which contrasts very favourably with the banks of the Thames in London. The Seine itself is insignificant, and is about five miles in length within the limits of the city; and is crossed by twenty-five bridges, the principal of which are those of Austerlitz, the Pont Neuf, of the Jardin du Roi, des Arts, de la Concorde, and of Jena; but they will not bear remote comparison with the London bridges. Besides the fine opening made through the city by the Seine, and its quais, it has an encircling road called the Boulevards, occupying the site of the fortifications of Louis XIII. They are planted with trees, and form agreeable promenades. Paris originally was divided into 4 quarters, which have increased to 48, still called quarters. For electoral and municipal purposes, it is divided into 12 arrondissements of 4 quarters each, 9 on the north and 3 on the south of the Seine. The limits of the city are now well defined by a line of strong fortifications, erected by Louis Philippe; and within this is a line, marked by the walls, erected by Louis XVI., enclosing the city, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles from N.E. to S.W. by $3\frac{1}{4}$ broad. In these walls are 58 gates. The pop. within these walls in 1856 was 1,200,000, and within the fortifications 1,800,000. The fashionable part is at the west end. Its principal edifice is the Palace of the Tuileries, the only one of late years inhabited by royalty. To the west of it are the Palace Gardens, 67 acres in extent, and adorned with statuary; its main avenue leads to the Place de la Concorde, the finest area in Paris, having the Louxor obelisk, brought from Egypt, in its centre, and decorated with noble fountains, &c. Beyond this, the avenue continues through the Champs Elysées, the favourite resort of the Parisians; and beyond this it continues under the name of the Avenue de Neuilly, terminating at the Arc de l'Etoile—the most magnificent triumphal arch ever erected. To the east of the Tuileries is the beautiful Arc de Carrousel, standing in the Place de Carrousel—an area, till 1851–2, disfigured by wretched buildings, separating the Palace of the Louvre from that of the Tuileries. These are connected by a long gallery, once filled with pictures, since removed to Versailles. The Louvre is one of the finest regal structures in Europe, forming a quadrangle, now used as the National Museum. There are two other royal palaces in Paris; the Palais Royal, built by Cardinal Richelieu, now occupied by shops, cafés, &c.—and the Palais du Luxembourg, S. of the Seine, built for Marie de Medicis, and afterwards used for the Chamber of Peers. The Chambre des Députés, formerly the Palais Bourbon, occupies a commanding situation at the end of the Pont Louis XVI.; corresponding with this, in the opposite direction, is the Hotel des Finances. Several others of the public buildings are very fine, such as the Hotel des Monnaies, the Hotel de Ville, the scene of many tragedies, the Palais de Justice, &c. The churches of Paris are very fine, but few in number. The ancient cathedral of Notre Dame, erected between 1010 and 1407, is a noble and imposing structure, on one of the islands formed by the Seine. The church of St. Germain des Prés, in the south of the city, re-edified in 1851, is very ancient, and most interesting; as is the church of St. Germain l'Auxerrois, near the Louvre—the scene of the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Among the more modern churches, that of St. Genevieve, or the Panthéon, which was long disused but again consecrated, is remarkable. It is a poor resemblance of St. Paul's in London, and is 282 feet in height. It is used as an illustrious cemetery, and is in the quarter of the University. St. Eustache, near the Marché des Innocens—the Covent Garden of Paris—is a spacious and fine edifice. St. Paul, St. Gervais, and other churches, deserve notice; but pre-eminent among them is the Church of the Madeleine, a magnificent peristyle, gorgeously decorated within. The Church of St. Vincent de Paul, in the north, just completed, is another specimen of sumptuous decoration. The late improvements by the emperor Napoleon III. are magnificent; the chief are the extension of the Rue Rivoli, the Louvre, and the Bois de Boulogne. There are now five cemeteries, of which Père la Chaise, outside the east barrier, is the most interesting, from its illustrious dead, its monuments, and its charming walks. Its hospitals are extensive; the principal in the PARMA, a duchy of Italy, under which name are included the duchies of Parma Proper, Placenza, and Guastalla. It is bounded on the W. and N. by the Milanese, E. by the Modenese, and S. by Tuscany and Genoa. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, hemp, and pasturage; and there are some inconsiderable mines of copper and silver. The celebrated Parmesan cheese is no longer made in this country, but at Lodi, in the Milanese, and some other places. By the treaty of Paris, in 1814, this duchy was given to the ex-empress Maria Louisa. Area, 2300 square miles. Pop. in 1833, 465,673.

PARMA, an ancient, rich, populous, and handsome town of Italy, capital of the foregoing duchy. It has a university, a magnificent cathedral, and the largest opera-house in Europe, which has seats for 8000 people. The dome of the cathedral, and the church of St. John, are painted by the famous Correggio, who was a native of this place. The other most remarkable places are the ducal palace, with its gullery and collection of artificial curiosities; the large Benedictine convent, in which 12,000 soldiers were quartered in 1724; the Palazza Giardino, a ducal palace, connected with the town; and the promenade between the town and citadel. Charles, king of the Two Sicilies, carried away a library from this place to Naples, which contained 18,000 volumes, and a very valuable cabinet of curiosities, with a rich collection of medals. The inhabitants, about 33,000, trade in silk and silk stockings. In 1734 a bloody battle was fought here between the Austrians and the French and Sardinians, in which the former were defeated. Parma is situated on a river of the same name. In March, 1860, it was annexed to Sardinia by popular vote; 40 m. N.W. of Modena, and 60 S.E. of Milan. Long. 10. 26. E., lat. 44 48. N.

PARNASSUS, or PARNASSO, a celebrated mountain of Greece, in Livadia. It has two heads, one of which was famous for being consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, and the other to Bacchus. It is the highest in Greece, and has a fine fountain, supposed to be the ancient Castalia. It is 8 miles N. of Livadia. The ancient Delphi, now called Castri, was on its south face.

PARO, or PORROGONG, a town of Hindostan, capital of a district of its name, in the province of Bootan; with a castle, the residence of a governor. It is famous for the manufacture of idols, and the forging of swords, daggers, and arrows. It stands on the Patehieu, in a fertile valley; 20 miles S. by E. of Tassasndon.

PAROS, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, to the W. of Naxia. It is 10 miles long and 8 broad, and the soil is well cultivated. The trade consists in wheat, barley, wine, and pulse, and in calicoes. Pop. perhaps 8000. It formerly produced a great deal of oil, but the Venetian army burned all the olive-trees. This island was anciently dedicated to Bacchus, on account of its excellent wines; and has been so famous for its marble, that the best carvers would make use of no other. The celebrated statues Phidias and Praxiteles were natives of this island; and the famous Arundelian marbles, at Oxford, were brought from this place in 1667.

PAROS, or PARACHIA, the capital of the isle of Paros, and a bishop's see. It was anciently the largest and most powerful town of the Cyclades, but is greatly decayed. The walls of the castle are built of ancient pieces of marble, and most of the columns are placed long-wise; some of them, that stand upright, support cornices of amazing size. The natives build their houses of marble, which they find ready cut to their hands; but they take no care to place the pieces in a regular manner; their fields, likewise, are enclosed with friezes, altars, and basso-relievos. The present inhabitants are so ignorant, that instead of great sculptors, and skilful architects, they have nothing but carvers of mortars and salt-cellar. Paros is situate on the W. coast of the island. Long. 25. 44. E. lat. 37. 8. N.

PARRAMATTA, a town in New South Wales, with a curious church, with a double steeple, an observatory of great repute, a government-house, court-house, hospital, orphan-house, gaol, &c.; the soil in most places is remarkably good. PATAGONIA, a country in the most southern part of South America, bounded on the N. by the states of the Argentine republic or La Plata, from which it is separated by the River Casa Leaba, or Rio Negro, and extending southward to the straits of Magellan. Along the Pacific the Patagonian Andes occupy the surface from 30 to 40 miles from the sea. The climate of this region is excessively wet, rain falling during a great part of the year. The mountain region is generally covered with forests except along the shores. The rest of the country consists chiefly of almost desert plains. This country has no timber in the S. parts, though the N. contains an immense quantity, and numerous flocks of cattle. The E. coast is generally low. The natives are tall, stout, and well made, some of them six feet five inches in height; but their hands and feet are remarkably small. Their colour is a kind of bronze. They have no other clothing than skins, which they wear with the hair inwards, and a little apron of leather. The principal harbour is that of Port St. Julian.

It is divided into 16 parishes, and sends one member to parliament. Its hills, among which are those of Tweedsmuir, abound with salubrious springs, and feed numbers of sheep and cattle. The principal rivers are the Tweed and Lync; the former runs through the county, whence it is sometimes called Tweeddale.

PEEKSKILL, a town of New York, in West Chester county, on the N. side of a creek of its name. It has 6 iron foundries; 5 miles from its entrance into Hudson river, and 50 N. of New York. Pop. in 1840, about 2000.

PEEL, a town on the W. coast of the isle of Man, situate on a spacious bay. At the S. extremity of the bay is Peel isle, a rock of great magnitude and height, on the summit of which is a castle, and the dilapidated cathedral of the isle, dedicated to St. Germain, the first bishop, who lived in the fifth century. The town is much decayed, and the inhabitants are indolent and poor. It is 10 miles W. of Douglas. Long. 4. 40. W. lat. 54. 13. N.

PEENE, a river of Germany, which rises out of some lakes in Mecklenburg, flows through Hither Pomerania to the western branch of the Oder, which is thence called Peene, and runs by Wolgast into the Baltic sea, at Peenemunde.

PEENEMUNDE, a town and fort of Prussian Pomerania, in the isle of Usedom, and the residence of the governor of the island. It commands the entrance and mouth of the Peene, near which it stands; 6 miles N. by E. of Wolgast. Long. 13. 55. E. lat. 54. 8. N.

PEER, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Limburg; 24 miles N.N.W. of Maastricht.

PEGAU, a town of Saxony, on the Elster; 10 miles S.S.W. of Leipsic.

PEGAU, a town of the Austrian states, in Styria, near which are considerable lead mines. It is seated near the Meur, 9 miles N.N.W. of Gratz.

PEGU, a province of British India beyond the Ganges, bounded N. by Birmah, W. and S. by the bay of Bengal, and E. by Siam. It is very fertile in corn, &c.; its products are teak timber, elephants' teeth, bees-wax, lac, saltpetre, iron, tin, petroleum, very fine rubies, small diamonds, and plenty of lead. The inhabitants are generally of low stature, and have small eyes, and are a distinct race from the Burmese. The women are much fairer than the men, small, but well proportioned. In the low flat part of the country, which is liable to be overflowed, the houses are built upon stakes, and in time of inundation the inhabitants communicate with each other by boats. Pegu was long an independent kingdom, and in 1752 conquered the kingdom of Birmah; but Alompra, whom the king of Pegu had continued as chief at Monchabou, soon afterwards revolted, and in 1757 reduced Pegu to a dependent province.

PEGU, a city of the above province, erected on the site of the former city, which was ruined by Alompra in 1757. The ancient city was a quadrangle, each side measuring nearly a mile and a half, and surrounded by strong walls and other fortifications, now in ruins. The magnificent temple of Shoemadoo still exists as a monument of its ancient greatness. The present city occupies about one-fourth of the former area. On the N. and E. sides it borders on the old wall, and is fenced round by a stockade. It is seated on a river of the same name, 300 miles S. of Ummerapoor. Pop. about 15,000. Long. 96. 11. E. lat. 17. 40. N.

PEI-HO, or WHITE-RIVER, a river of China, in Pe-tche-li, which passes near Peking, and by the cities of Tong-tchou and Tiensing, into the Yellow Sea. The allied English and French forces, in 1860, destroyed its forts, and advanced by it to Peking.

PEINA, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Hildesheim, with a palace and a Capuchin convent; 20 miles E. of Hanover.

PEIPUS, or TCHUDSKOI, a large lake of Russia, between the governments of Petersburg and Livonia. The river Narova issues from this lake, by which it has a communication at Narva with the gulf of Finland.

PEISHORE, or PESHAWUR, a town of Afghanistan, capital of a fine and populous district of its name. The inhabitants have been estimated at 100,000, but are now much less. Here the Hon. M. S. Elphinstone had his audience with the Afghan king, in 1809; 95 miles S.S.E. of Cabul. The bala hiser or citadel is the only public building deserving of notice. Long. 70. 37. E. lat. 33. 32. N.

PEISKRETSCHAM, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Oppeln; 39 miles S.E. of Oppeln.

PRETZ, a town of Prussia, in the Ucker Mark of Brandenburg, with manufactures of cloth and yarn, and in the neighbourhood are iron-works. It stands on the Mankke, which runs into the Spree; 10 miles N.N.E. of Cottbus, and 37 S.S.E. of Frankfort.

PEKING, the capital of the empire of China, in the province of Pe-tche-li. Its name signifies the Northern Court, to distinguish it from Nanking, the Southern Court, where the emperor formerly resided. This capital forms an oblong square, and is divided into two cities; one inhabited by Chinese, the other by Tartars. Those two cities, exclusive of the suburbs, are nearly 14 miles in circumference. The walls of the city are 28 feet high, 24 thick at the base, and 12 at the top; and there are spacious towers at 70 feet distance from each other. The gates are high, and well arched, supporting buildings of nine storeys high, the lowest of which is for the soldiers when they come off guard: they are nine in number, three in the S. wall, and two in each of the other sides. The middle gate, on the E. side, opens into the Tartar or imperial city, which is a space within the general enclosure, about a mile from N. to S. and three-quarters of a mile from E. to W. with a rivulet winding through it. A wall of large red polished bricks, 20 feet high, covered with a roof of tiles painted yellow and varnished, surrounds this space in which are contained the imperial palace and gardens, the public offices, and lodgings for the ministers, the eunuchs, artificers, and tradesmen belonging to the court. Between the two other gates in the S. wall and the opposite ones on the N. side of the city, run two straight streets, each 4 miles in length, and 120 feet wide. One street of the same width runs from one of the eastern to the corresponding western gate, but the other is interrupted by the imperial city, round the walls of which it is carried. The other streets branch from these main streets at right angles, and are very narrow. The houses have no windows nor openings to the street, except the great shops; most of them are poorly built, and have only a ground floor. It is astonishing to see the concourse of people in the main streets, yet not one Chinese woman among them, and the confusion occasioned by the number of horses, camels, mules, asses, waggons, carts, and chairs; without reckoning the several mobs which gather about the jugglers, ballad-singers, &c. Persons of distinction have always a horseman to go before them and clear the way. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrol night and day with swords by their sides, and whips in their hands, to chastise those who make any disturbance, or take them into custody. The minor streets have lattice gates at their entrance into the great streets, which are shut up at night, and guarded by soldiers, who suffer no assemblies in the streets at that time. The emperor's palace and garden, which occupy two thirds of the Tartar city, is surrounded by a brick wall, 2 miles in length, with a pavilion at each corner, encompassed by galleries supported by columns: the architecture of the stupendous pile of buildings of which the palace consists is entirely different from that of the Europeans. The temples and the towers of Peking are almost countless. On Oct. 13, 1860, it opened its gates to the allied English and French armies, who occupied it till Nov. 5. In the mean time peace was concluded, and a treaty negotiated with the Earl of Elgin, and signed with considerable pomp. The city was described then showing great poverty, the public buildings were in decay, and there was not a single house in it fit for a European's official residence. The inhabitants are estimated at 2,000,000. 60 miles S. of the Great Wall. Long. 116. 27. E., lat. 39. 54. N.

PELEGRINO, a mountain on the N. coast of Sicily, nearly 2 miles W. of Palermo. On this mount is a cavern, in which is the image of St. Rosalia, the patroness of Palermo, who is said to have died here; and round this cave a church is built, where priests attend to watch the precious relics, and receive the offerings of the pilgrims.

PELEW ISLANDS, or PALAOIS, a group of islands in the Pacific ocean lying between 134. and 136. E. long. and 6. and 8. N. lat. They are encircled on the W. side by a reef of coral, and are 18 in number, of which the principal ones are Oroolong, Emungs, Emillegue, Artigal, Coroora, and Pelelew. They are well covered with trees of various kinds and sizes; and every part of that called Coroora bears the marks of industry and good cultivation. Captain Wilson, of the Antelope East India packet, who was wrecked here in 1783, found the natives simple in their manners, delicate in their sentiments, and friendly in their disposition. The astonishment which they manifested on seeing the English plainly showed that they had never before seen a white man. They had no idea of the nature of powder and shot, and were exceedingly amazed on seeing its effects. Their principal arms consist of bamboo darts, from five to eight feet long, pointed with the wood of the betel-nut tree; but there are short ones for different marks, which are thrown by means of a stick two feet long. The chiefs wear a bone round one of their wrists, in the form of a bracelet, which being a mark of great honour conferred by the king, is never to be parted with but with life. They are not all of the same degree, as appeared from the difference in the bone they wore. Captain Wilson was invested with the highest order of the bone. With respect to property, in these islands, a man's house or canoe is considered as his own, as is also the land allotted to him, as long as he occupies and cultivates it; but whenever he removes to another place, the ground reverts to the king. The natives make canoes out of the trunks of trees, some large enough to carry 30 men. Yams and cocoa-nuts, being their chief articles of subsistence, are attended with the utmost care, and the milk of the latter is their common drink. On particular occasions they add to their ordinary fare certain sweetmeats, and a sweet beverage, obtained by the aid of a syrup extracted either from the palm-tree or the sugar-cane. Their houses are raised about three feet from the ground, the foundation beams being laid on large stones, whence spring the upright supports of their sides, which are crossed by other timbers grooved together, and fastened by wooden pins, the intermediate space being closely filled up with bamboos and palm-tree leaves, plaited together: the inside is without any divisions, forming one great room. They have little baskets, nicely woven from slips of the plaintain-tree, and wooden baskets with covers, neatly carved, and inlaid with shells. No one goes abroad without a basket, which usually contains some betel-nut, a comb, a knife, and a little twine. The best knives are made of a piece of the large mother-of-pearl oyster, ground narrow, and the outward side a little polished. The combs are made of the orange tree, of which there are a few of the Seville kind; the handle and teeth are fastened to the solid wood. The fishing-hooks are of tortoise-shell; and twine, cord, and fishing-nets are well manufactured from the husks of the cocoa-nut. Of the plaintain leaf are formed mats, which serve the people as beds. They also use a plaintain leaf at meals, instead of a plate; and the shell of a cocoa-nut supplies the place of a cup. There are vessels of a kind of earthenware, of a reddish brown colour, in which they boil their fish, yams, &c. A bundle of cocoa-nut husks serves them for a broom; and thick bamboos, with bores five or six inches in diameter, are their buckets or cisterns. The shell of the tortoise is here remarkably beautiful, and the natives have discovered the art of moulding it into little trays or dishes, and spoons. Some of the great ladies have also bracelets of the same manufacture, and ear-rings inlaid with shells. The Pelelvans, in general, are stout and well made, rather above the middle stature, and of a deep copper colour. Their hair is long, and generally formed into one large loose curl round their heads. The men are entirely naked; but the women wear two little aprons, one before, the other behind. Both sexes are tattooed, have their teeth made black by art, and the cartilage between the nostrils bored, through which they frequently put a sprig or blossom of some plant or shrub. The men have the left ear bored, and the women both; a few of the former wear beads in the perforated ear, the latter either a leaf, or an ear-ring of inlaid tortoise-shell. Both sexes are very expert swimmers; and the men are admirable divers. Such an opinion had Abba Thulle, the king of the island, entertained of the English, that, on their departure, he permitted his second son, Lee Boo, to accompany them to England, where he arrived in 1784. In a few months after, this hopeful youth died of the small-pox, and the East India Company erected a monument over his grave in Rotherhithe church-yard. The directors of the East India Company, sensible that there remained obligations for them to fulfil, equipped two vessels at Bombay, under the command of Captain M'Cluer, which arrived at these islands in January, 1791. A joyful and affecting interview took place between the English and the Pelewans; and the good Abba Thulle bore the intelligence of the death of Lee Boo with great fortitude. When the presents were landed, consisting of cattle, sheep, goats, pigs, &c., together with arms, grindstones, shovels, saws, and other utensils, the natives were struck with amazement, and the king himself was for some time at a loss how to express his gratitude. The king, in return, made a present of one of the islands to the English, which was taken possession of with the usual formalities. Captain McCluer, leaving one ship behind to superintend the gardens, plantations, and live stock, proceeded with the other to Canton, some of the natives voluntarily accompanying him. He returned to Pelew in June; but thinking his benevolent mission not yet completed, he sailed with both ships to New Guinea and Bencoolen, and returned again in January, 1793, with two full cargoes of cattle and stores. During his absence Abba Thulle had died, and his brother had succeeded to the sovereignty. The munificent gratitude of the East India Company was attended with complete success, but the increasing intercourse with shipping of late years, with the lawlessness of their crews, have shown the treachery of these islanders.

PELISIANE, a town of France, department of Mouths of the Rhone; 15 m. W.N.W. of Aix.

PELLERIN, a town in the department of Lower Loire, situate on the Loire, with a harbour for small vessels; 10 miles N. of Nantes, and 22 S.E. of Paimboeuf.

PEMBRIDGE, a town in Herefordshire, with a manufacture of woollen cloth, seated on the Arrow; 7 miles W. of Leominster, and 145 W.N.W. of London.

PEMBROKE, a town of Massachusetts, in Plymouth county, situate on North river, remarkable for its depth of water, though in some places not more than 50 feet wide. Vessels of 300 tons are built here, and descend to Massachusetts bay, 18 miles distant. It is 51 miles S.S.E. of Boston. Pop. 1528.

PEMBROKE, a borough of Wales, capital of Pembrokehire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday. It returns one member to parliament. It stands on the innermost creek of Milford-haven, over which are two bridges; but the harbour is become injured by the rubbish of the neighbouring limestone quarries. It was anciently surrounded by walls, and had a magnificent castle; the remains of which still give it an appearance of uncommon grandeur. Here are three churches, several meeting-houses, and a free grammar-school. About a mile N.W. of the town is Paterchurch, now more commonly called Pembroke dock, from the Naval dockyard transferred hither from Milford in 1814. It is regularly built, and the dock-yard, strongly defended, contains about 60 acres, and is one of the finest building yards in the kingdom. It is 10 miles S. by E. of Haverfordwest, (where the assizes of the county are held,) and 263 W. by N. of London. Long. 4. 48. W. lat. 51. 43. N.

PEMBROKESHIRE, a county of Wales, 37 miles long, and 28 broad; surrounded on all sides by the sea, except on the E., where it is bounded by Caermarthenshire and Cardiganshire. It contains 390,400 acres, is divided into seven hundreds and 148 parishes, has one city and seven market-towns, and sends one member to parliament. The rivers are inconsiderable. A great part of the county is plain and tolerably fertile, consisting of rich meadow and arable land. The N.E. part alone is mountainous, which, however, yields good pasturage for sheep and cattle. This county abounds with objects of antiquarian interest, such as Druidical circles and cromlechs, single stone monuments, castles, &c.

PENA DE FRANCA, a town of Spain, in Leon; 27 miles S.S.E. of Ciudad Rodrigo.

PENAFIEL, a town of Spain, in Leon, with a palace, and a strong castle. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, near the Douro; 33 miles E.S.E. of Valladolid. Long. 4. 0. W. lat. 41. 33. N.

PENISCOLA, a town of Spain, in Valencia, seated on a high point of land, surrounded on three sides by the sea, and of difficult access by land. It is 30 miles S. by W. of Tortosa, and 80 N.N.E. of Valencia. Pop. 2200. Long. 0.24. E. lat. 40.24. N.

PENISHEHR, a town of Afghanistan, capital of a district in the province of Cabul; 46 miles N. of Cabul.

PENISTONE, a town in West Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday, and a small woollen manufacture. It has a handsome parish church, three meeting-houses, a grammar-school, and three other schools free to the whole parish. The environs, especially to the W., have rather a dreary and barren appearance. The town is 13 miles S.S.E. of Huddersfield, and 177 N.N.W. of London; on the Manchester and Lincolnshire railway.

PENKRIEGE, a decayed town in Staffordshire, seated on the river Penk; 6 miles S. of Stafford, and 129 N.W. of London.

PENKUM, a town of Prussian Pomerania, seated on the Randow, between two small lakes; 15 miles S.W. of Stettin.

PENMAENMAWR, a mountain of Wales, in Merionethshire, overhanging the sea, and rising to the height of 1540 feet. It is 4 miles W. by E. of Aberconway, and the road to Holyhead crosses it on the side of a dreadful precipice, from which it is defended by a wall.

PENNA, a town in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, adjoining the city of Philadelphia on the N.W. It is the seat of Girard college, a beautiful edifice of white marble. It was founded by Stephen Girard, who bequeathed 2 millions of dollars for the education of orphan boys. Pop. 3342.

PENN YANN, a town of New York, standing on the outlet of the Crooked lake, and on the Crooked lake canal. It is also connected with the Erie canal; 192 miles W. of Albany. Pop. about 1500.

PENNAR, a river of Hindostan, which rises in Mysore, flows by Gooty, Gandicotta, Cudappa, and Vellore, and enters the bay of Bengal at Gangapatnam.

PENNSYLVANIA, one of the United States of America, 302 miles long, and 160 broad; contains 46,000 square miles, and 29,440,000 acres. Bounded N. by New York, E. by the river Delaware, S. by Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, W. by the latter and Ohio, and N.W. by lake Erie, on which it has a considerable front, and a good port. It is divided into 55 counties. The climate of this state is changeable; the heat of summer is seldom oppressive, except in low situations; in all the hilly parts the air is healthy, but near the seacoast the temperature of winter is severe. The country is well watered by the Delaware, Schuylkill, Susquehanna, Monongahela, Allegheny, and other navigable rivers. It is intersected from N.E. to S.W. by the different ridges of the Allegheny mountains, some of which admit of cultivation almost to their summits; and between the numerous ridges there are delightful valleys, with a very rich soil. The other parts of the state are generally level, or agreeably diversified with hills and valleys. Wheat, Indian corn, buck-wheat, rye, barley, oats, flax, hemp, beans, pease, and potatoes, are extensively cultivated. Cherries, peaches, apples, and cider are abundant. Wood is plentiful; in the western parts are found the oak, chestnut, beech, sugar maple, ash, black walnut, bass wood, elm, hickory, white ash, butternut, hemlock, and locust. Cattle and sheep are numerous; the merino breeds of sheep have been introduced, and thrive well. There are mineral waters in different parts of the state, and also salt springs. The Mauch Chunk, the Lackawanna, and the Lehigh coal fields are very extensive and largely worked. Iron ore is distributed in large quantities, and in some places copper, lead, and alum are found. Here are also numerous limestone quarries, and various kinds of marble, and coal. The principal manufactures are iron, copper, tin, leather, paper, gunpowder, hats, cotton, sugar, and tobacco. The canals are the Union, Susquehanna, Schuylkill, Chesapeake, Pittsburg, and Pennsylvania; total length, 428 miles; and the railroads are most extensive, having an aggregate length, in 1846, of 701 miles. The name was given to it by Charles II. in honour of admiral Sir William Penn, father of the illustrious founder of the colony, William Penn. Pop. 1,734,033. Harrisburg is the seat of government; Philadelphia and Pittsburg are its most commercial places.

PENNYOANT, one of the highest mountains of England, in Yorkshire, 7 miles N. of Settle. Its summit is 3930 feet above the level of the sea. On its sides are two awful orifices, called Hunpit and Hunt-pit holes; through each of them runs a brook, both of which run under ground for about a mile, and cross each other in the bowels of the earth, without mixing their waters.

PENOBSCOT, a capacious bay of the state of Maine, at the mouth of a river of the same name, the largest and most important in the state. Its E. side is lined with a cluster of small islands. On the river's banks are several important and flourishing towns.

PENRICE, a town of Wales, in Glamorgan-shire; with a market on Thursday. Here are the ruins of a Norman castle, and 3 miles to the N., on a mountain, is a Druidical monument, called Arthur's Stone. Penrice is seated on the Bristol channel, 20 miles S.E. of Caernarthen, and 220 W. of London.

PENRITH, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Tuesday. The parish church is a neat, plain structure, partly rebuilt in 1722; in the churchyard is a singular monument of antiquity, called the Giant's Grave. Here are meeting-houses for Independents, Presbyterians, Quakers, Methodists, and Ranters; also a free grammar-school. The ruins of the ancient castle overlook the town from the W., and the heights to the N. is a square stone building called the "Beacon," well situated for giving alarm in times of danger. The ascent to it is difficult, but the prospects from the summit of the hill are extensive and beautiful; 18 miles S. of Carlisle, and 283 N.N.W. of London. It is on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway.

PENRYN, a borough in Cornwall, governed by a mayor; with markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. Here are large warehouses for flour and grain imported from the isle of Wight, and several good breweries, which supply the shipping at Falmouth; and it has a great trade in the pilchard and Newfoundland fisheries. It is seated on a creek of Falmouth haven, 3 miles N.W. of Falmouth, and 263 W. by S. of London.

PENSACOLA, a city of West Florida, U.S., seated on a bay of the gulf of Mexico, which forms a safe and commodious harbour. The entrance into the bay is defended by a small fort and a battery. The United States has a navy yard 8 miles from the city, which covers 80 acres. Pop. 2000. Long. 87. 14. W. lat. 30. 24. N.

PENSFORD, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Tuesday, and a manufacture of huts; seated on the Chew, 6 miles S. by E. of Bristol, and 117 W. by S. of London.

PENTLAND FRITH, a strait which divides the Orkney islands from Caithness-shire, in Scotland. It is 20 miles long, and 10 broad, and dangerous to those who are not acquainted with its tides and currents, especially in passing the Pentland Skerries, a cluster of rocks at the E. end of the frith. On the largest of these rocks are 2 lighthouses. Long. 2. 42. W. lat. 58. 35. N.

PENTLAND HILLS, a ridge of hills in Scotland, 7 miles S.W. of Edinburgh.

PENZA, a government of Russia, formerly a province of Kasan. It is level and extremely fertile, producing large quantities of corn and cattle; it has also some valuable iron mines. Pop. in 1838, 988,000. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the Sura, where it receives the rivulet Penza; 220 miles S.W. of Kasan. Pop. 11,000. Long. 45. 38. E. lat. 53. 11. N.

PENZANCE, a seaport in Cornwall, governed by a mayor; with markets on Thursday and Saturday. It was burnt by the Spaniards in 1593, but soon rebuilt, and made one of the tin coinage towns. In the town is a chapel of ease to the mother church of Madron, which is nearly two miles to the W.; and here are meeting-houses for Independents, Quakers, Baptists, and Methodists, and a synagogue for the Jews; also a grammar-school. The trade of Penzance is considerable, and consists chiefly in pilchards and other fish, and in shipping lead, tin, and copper, which abound in the vicinity. In consequence of the mildness and salubrity of the air, and the agreeableness of its situation, Penzance is much frequented by invalids, for whose accommodation there are cold and hot seawater baths, &c. It is seated on a creek of Mount bay, 10 miles N.E. of the Land's end, and 280 W. by S. of London. Long. 5. 35. W. lat. 50. 11. N.

PEORIA, a town of Illinois, in Peoria county, of which it is the capital. It stands beautifully, at the outlet of the Peoria lake, on the Illinois river; 70 miles N. of Springfield. Pop. 1467; of the county, 6153.

PEQUIGNY, a town of France, in the department of Somme; memorable for an interview and treaty between Louis XI. of France and Edward IV. of England, in 1475, on a bridge built for that purpose. It is seated on the river Somme, 15 miles S.E. of Abbeville.

PERAC, a seaport of Malaya; capital of a kingdom on the W. coast. It is seated on a river of the same name, 180 miles N.W. of Malacca. Long. 100. 0. E. lat. 4. 23. N.

PERAY, St. a town of France, in the department of Ardeche, noted for its wines. It is seated on the Rhone, opposite Valence, 32 miles N. of Viviers.

PERDU, MOUNT, a lofty mountain of the Pyrenees, with a double summit, of which the higher is computed at 11,000 feet above the sea. It is of very difficult access, as the calcareous rock often assumes the form of perpendicular walls, from 100 to 600 feet in height; and glaciers increase the difficulty. About 2000 feet from the summit is a lake, which throws its waters to the E. into the Spanish valley of Beoussa.

PERNELLA, a town of Hindostan, in Guzerat; 38 miles S. of Surat.

PERNAMBUCO, a province in the E. part of the empire of Brazil, which is constituted one of, if not the most important part of the Brazilian empire since the period of the Dutch conquest. It has several good harbours, and the soil is very generally fertile. From its commercial importance, more attention has been bestowed upon the roads throughout the state, and a long suspension bridge, the first of its kind in Brazil, leads the road to St. Antonio over a deep river.

Sugar is its chief production, and the numerous rivers offer great facilities for bringing it down to the sea. Many parts of the interior far west were but little known till the year 1815, since which time it has increased in wealth and prosperity. The sertanejos, or inhabitants of the country district, are a fine industrious and muscular race. The estimate of the population in 1846 was 600,020, exclusive of slaves, who were calculated by some to exceed by two-thirds the free population. The sugar engenhoos are chiefly on the coast region, and altogether produce above 25,000 tons per annum. Hides and cotton are also produced, and other manufactures are but of minor importance.

PERNAMBUCO, capital of the above province, consists of three divisions, Recife, St. Antonio, and Boa Vista. The two former are situated on two flat sand-banks, surrounded by the sea, and connected together by a bridge, partly of stone and partly of wood; the other division is connected with Boa Vista, situated on the continent, by a narrow wooden bridge. The greatest part of the extent of sand between Olinda, a town about a league distant, on the same sand-bank as Recife, and the latter, remains uncovered, is open to the sea, and the surf is very violent. The tide enters between the bridges, and encircles the middle compartment. The first division of the town is composed of brick houses, of three, four, and even five storeys in height; most of the streets are narrow, and there are no public buildings that require notice. St. Antonio, the principal division of the town, is composed chiefly of large houses and broad streets. It contains the governor's palace (formerly the Jesuits' convent), the treasury, the town-hall, and prison, the barracks, and the Franciscan, Carmelite, and Penha convents. It comprises several squares, and has, to a certain degree, a gay and lively appearance. The river Capibaribe discharges its waters into the channel between St. Antonio and Boa Vista. The harbour belonging to Recife, called the Mosqueiro, situated on the outward bank, is formed by a reef of coralline rocks, which runs parallel with the town, at a very small distance. Its free population, including the suburbs, in 1845, was 74,310, and the adjoining town of Olinda was 17,824; or 92,134, exclusive of slaves. Olinda continued to be the capital for above 200 years after its foundation in 1536, but the superior maritime advantages of the "Recifes," led to its being, in some measure, neglected for the latter. Pernambuco is the third city of Brazil, and is daily increasing in opulence and importance. It has a railway constructing to Agoa Prieta up the river, to the W. Long. 34. 52. W. lat. 8. 3. S.

PERNAU, a fortified town of Russia, in Livonia, with a castle; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name; 95 miles N. of Riga. Long. 24. 28. E. lat. 53. 21. N. Pop. 9000.

PERNES, a town of France, in the department of Vaucluse; noted as the birthplace of the celebrated orator Flechier, bishop of Nismes; 12 miles E. by N. of Avignon. Pop. 3500.

PERNES, a town in the department of Pas de Calais; seated on the Clarence, 17 miles N.W. of Arras.

PERNO, a town of Sweden; in the province of Nyland, on the coast of the Baltic; 36 miles E. of Helsingfors.

PERONNE, a strong town of France, in the department of Somme. It was called Pucelle, because never taken, though often besieged, till the 29th of June, 1816, when it was stormed by the British. Charles the Simple was imprisoned in the castle, where he miserably died; and the duke of Burgundy detained Louis XI. here three days, till he consented to sign a disadvantageous treaty. It is seated on the Somme, 27 miles S.W. of Cambay, and 80 E. by N. of Paris. Pop. in 1836, 4029. Long. 3. 2. E. lat. 49. 55. N.

PEROUSA, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; seated on the river Cluson, 6 miles N.W. of Pignerol. Pop. 2300.

PERPIGNAN, a fortified town of France, capital of the department of Eastern Pyrenees, with a good citadel and a university. The inhabitants carry on a trade in corn, wool, iron, and wine, and have manufactures of silk, woollen, soap, liqueurs, &c. This town was the scene of two battles between the French and Spaniards, in 1793. It is seated partly on a gentle declivity and partly on a plain, on the Tet, near the Mediterranean, 97 miles S.E. of Toulon. Pop. in 1836, 6733. Long. 2. 49. E. lat. 42. 42. N.

PERSEPOLIS, anciently the capital of the Persian empire. It was taken by Alexander the Great, who set it on fire. Its magnificent ruins are 50 miles N.E. of Shiraz.

PERSHORE, a town in Worcestershire, with a market on Saturday. Here are two churches, and that of Holy Cross contains several ancient monuments. It is seated on the Avon, 9 miles E.S.E. of Worcester, and 102 W.N.W. of London.

PERSIA, a large kingdom of Asia, consisting of several provinces, which, at different times, have had their particular kings. It is bounded on the N. by the Caspian sea, Russian Tartary, and the mountains of Caucasus; W. by the Euphrates and Tigris; S. by the gulf of Persia; and E. by Cabool and Beloochistan; in its most extended sense it embraces these last also. It is about 1225 miles in length from E. to W., and 900 in breadth from N. to S. The chief river is the Tigris. In the N. and E. parts it is mountainous and cold; in the middle and S.E. parts, sandy and desert; and in the S.W. level and fertile, though for several months very hot. Though a great part of the country is bare of vegetation, yet in many parts the soil produces various sorts of pulse and corn, and cotton in great abundance. In several places, naphtha, a sort of bitumen, rises out of the ground, and here are numerous mines of iron, silver, gold, turquoise stones, and salt; but the first two of these are not worked, on account of the scarcity of wood. This country produces all the various sorts of fruits, excellent wine, and a great number of mulberry trees; likewise dates, pistachio-nuts, and trees which produce manna. Sheep and goats are abundant, as are also camels, buffaloes, and horses. One of the most striking features of this country, which it also shares with a large portion of central Asia and Africa, is the tracts of salt desert and sandy wastes. The largest part, called the great Deria Kuveer, or salt sea, is an immense waste occupying the central and eastern portion of the country. The principal manufactures are silks, silk mixed with cotton or with camels' or goats' hair, brocades, gold tissues, gold velvet, carpets, calicoes, camlets, &c. The Persians are subjected to a despotism similar to that which presses upon all oriental nations; yet their character is materially different. They are more gay, lively, and active. They are said to be extremely ostentations, and to surpass all other nations in politeness, if the most profuse and hypocritical flattery may be so called; while falsehood is proverbially their characteristic. Their dress is less graceful than that of the Turks; sombre colours predominate, and the head dress of all, from the sovereign to the meanest subject, is a cylindrical cap of jet black lamb-skin. The beard is held in high estimation, and every art employed to render it thick and tufted. They are, however, the most learned people of the east; poetry and the sciences may even be considered as their ruling passion, although cultivated in a most debased manner. In the former their fame is decidedly superior to that of any other oriental nation. The names of Hafiz, Ferdusi, and Sadi, are classic even in Europe. The religion of the country is Mohammedism, of the sect of Ali, or Sheeahs. The present population of Persia, consists of two classes, the fixed, those above described, and the nomadic tribes, which comprise the Arabs, Toorkmans, Mongols, Usbeks, which are all described under their respective heads. Of the amount of the population and the relative area of the different states, our knowledge is but imperfect; the following table is therefore only a rude approximation.

In the beginning of the last century Persia was overrun by the Afghans, who carried fire and sword through its remotest extremities, and reduced its proudest capitals to ashes. The atrocities of the Afghans were avenged, and the independence of Persia vindicated, by Nadir Shah; but though the victories of this daring chief threw a lustre on his country, after his death the country was almost torn to pieces by civil war, till the fortune of arms gave a decided superiority to Kurreem Khan. His death gave rise to another disputed succession, with civil wars as furious as before. At length, Aga Mohammed, a eunuch, raised himself to the sovereignty, and not only retained it during his lifetime, but transmitted it to his nephew, who assumed the title of Futeh Ali Shah, an accomplished prince, whose grandson now reigns. The seat of government is Teheran. The other principal towns are Ispahan and Shiraz.

PERSIAN GULF, a sea or inland lake between Persia and Arabia, which receives the united streams of the Euphrates and Tigris, under the name of the Sbat el Arab. The entrance near Ormus is not above 30 miles over; but within it is from 120 to 250 in breadth, and the length from Ormus to the mouth of the Euphrates is 500 miles. The southern side is particularly celebrated for its pearl fishery.

PERTH, the capital of Western Australia, near the mouth of the Swan river, and the seat of the biahopric.

PERTH, a burgh of Scotland, capital of Perthshire, with two parish churches, one of which formerly belonged to a fine abbey. Here is also a Gaelic chapel belonging to the establishment, and the dissenters have places of worship in almost every part of the town. The grammar-school is accounted one of the best in Scotland; and there is also an excellent academy, with other literary institutions. One of the chief ornaments of the town is the beautiful building for county courts, &c. erected in 1819. It has been the residence of the sovereigns of Scotland, and the seat of the parliament, and of the supreme courts of justice. It sends one member to parliament. Near the town are some saline springs, called Piteachly wells, deemed beneficial in scorbutic cases. Perth is beautifully seated on the S.W. side of the Tay, which is navigable for small vessels, but the largest vessels are obliged to partly unload at Newburg. Over the river is a modern bridge of ten arches, to the town of Kinnoull. Here are several incorporated trades, some of which have halls. The salmon fishery is a great article of trade, shipbuilding is extensively followed, and the manufacture of linen is considerable. It is 39 miles N. by W. of Edinburgh, and has several railways to Dundee, Edinburgh, &c.

PERTH, a delightful village in Van Diemen's land, on the South Esk river, 12 miles from Launceston, in Cornwall county. Here are some flour mills, barracks, &c.

PERTH AMBOY, a city and seaport of New Jersey, in Middlesex county; seated on a neck of land between the river Rariton and Arthur Kull sound. It lies open to Sandy Hook, and has one of the best harbours on the continent. It is 35 miles S.W. of New York, and 74 N.E. of Philadelphia. Pop. 1303. Long. 75. 0. W. lat. 40. 35. N.

PERTHES, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne; 6 miles S.W. of Melun.

PERTHES, a town in the department of Upper Marne; 6 miles N.W. of St. Dizier.

PERTHSHIRE, a county of Scotland, 76 miles long, and 68 broad; bounded W. by Argyleshire, N. by the shires of Inverness and Aberdeen, E. by Angus-shire, S.E. by the frith of Tay, and the counties of Fife and Kinross, and S. by the frith of Forth, and the counties of Clackmannan, Stirling, and Dunbarton. It contains 4,068,640 English acres, is divided into 76 parishes, and returns one member to parliament. The county exhibits scenes of rugged and striking magnificence, contrasted with the most beautiful ones of cultivation. The Grampian mountains cross it from S.W. to N.E., the highest of which is Benlawers. The country N.W. of this ridge is mountainous, and contains several lakes; but the opposite side, though not free from hills, is more low and fertile. There is a railway from Stirling to Perth, and from Perth to Aberdeen, &c., and that from Dundee to Cupar-Angus, passes one of its districts. The principal rivers are the Forth and Tay. Pop. in 1841, 138,151. Perth is the capital.

PERRIOT, a town of the island of Sardinia; 19 miles S.E. of Castel Aragonese.

PEARUS, a town of France, department of Vauchuse, near the Durance; 11 miles N. of Aix, and 38 S.E. of Avignon.

PERU, an independent republic of South America, the largest of the former Spanish vice-royalties; bounded on the N. by the republic of Ecuador, W. by the Pacific ocean, S. by Bolivia, and E. by Brazil. Its extreme length along the shores of the Pacific is estimated at nearly 1700 miles. The greatest breadth may be more than 1000 miles. Its S. and S.E. boundaries, however, are not well decided. That part of Peru which extends from the western declivity of the Andes to the Pacific, is called the Valles, a region with little wood or cultivation, but generally consisting of sandy or stony deserts. The whole seacoast is sandy and bare, and scorched. The country is traversed by two parallel chains of high mountains, called indifferently the Andes and the Cordilleras; the western range follows the shores at the distance of 60 or 70 miles, and it is remarkable that all the streams flowing from its eastern slopes, find their way through the chain of the Andes to the Atlantic. The vast plateau, or region between the two ranges of mountains, is about 12,000 feet above the sea, called by the natives Puna, and in Spanish despoblado. Its aspect is dull and dreary, but inhabited by the peculiar animals of the llama tribe, and constantly visited by cold winds, or snow storms. In the Valles rain seldom or never falls, and the climate may be said to be generally unhealthy. Peru has been long celebrated for its mines of gold, silver, &c., which are the chief or only source of its riches. These are in the Montana, at Pasco, Huancabelica, Gualgayo, &c. Besides the produce of the mines, the commodities exported are sugar, vicuna wool, cotton, Peruvian bark, copper, and cocoa. The fiercest beasts of prey in Peru are the puma and jaguar, inaccurately called lions and tigers by Europeans; for they possess neither the undaunted courage of the former, nor the ravenous cruelty of the latter. The llama, and another species of American camel, inhabit the cold districts, and the elk, bear, deer, armadillos, monkeys, &c., are numerous. Among the birds, the most remarkable is the condor, which is entitled to pre-eminence over the flying tribe, in bulk, strength, and courage. The river Guayaquil abounds with alligators, and the neighbouring country swarms almost as much with snakes and vipers as that round Porto Bello does with toads. When the Spaniards landed in this country in 1530, they found it governed by sovereigns called incas, who were revered by their subjects as divinities; and the inhabitants were found to be much more polished than the natives of other parts of America, those of Mexico excepted.

These were soon subdued by the Spaniards, under the command of Francis Pizarro. After the assassination of Pizarro in 1541, the country continued a prey to civil contentions and insurrections, till about the year 1562, when Tupac Amaru, the son of Manco Capac, who had taken refuge in the mountains, was attacked by the viceroy, Toledo. The inca surrendered himself, and was led to the scaffold amid the tears of the people. The royal authority, thus established, continued without interruption till 1781, when a descendant of Amaru began an insurrection. After two years of varied success, he was, however, surprised and taken prisoner, together with his family, who were all executed. Peru now remained in subjection to Spain, and in a comparative state of tranquillity for some time; and in 1809, when juntas were established in La Paz and Quito, Peru sent out troops which suppressed their rising efforts. In 1817 the Peruvian army was compelled to evacuate Chili; and Chili, in return, sent an army into Peru, under General San Martin, who, in 1821, in conjunction with the fleet under Lord Cochrane, succeeded in liberating it from the Spanish yoke. The present constitution of Peru was formed in 1828, and, ostensibly was based on that of the United States, but it has very far departed from it in spirit, and it may truly be said that the whole races are degenerate both in morals and in numbers, under the influence of the vile system by which they are and have been surrounded. The number of inhabitants at present has been vaguely estimated at 1,499,953, consisting of 230,819 whites, 848,846 Peruvians, 323,782 Mestizoes, 64,878 mulattoes, and 31,628 slaves. Other estimates place the whole number at but little more than one million, under the population of the single province of Cuzco, prior to the Spanish conquest. Lima is the capital.

PERUGIA, a province of Italy, in the papal dominions; comprehending the ancient province of Perugia. It is 25 miles long, and 24 broad, and is bounded W. by Tuscany, S. by Orvieto, E. by Spoleto and Urbino, and N. by Citta di Castello. The soil is fertile in corn and good wine.

PERUGIA, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see; with a strong citadel and a university. The churches, and many other buildings, public and private, are very handsome. It is seated on a hill, near the Tiber; 85 miles N. of Rome. Pop. 30,000. Long. 12. 29. E. lat. 43. 7. N.

PERUGIA, a lake of Italy; 8 miles W. of the city of its name. It is almost round, 6 miles in diameter, and in it are three islands.

PESARO, a seaport of the ecclesiastical states, in the delegation of Urbino, and a bishop's see. The cathedral is magnificent, and it has several handsome churches, with exquisite paintings. The environs are remarkable for producing olives and excellent figs. It is seated on an eminence, at the PESCARA, a strong town of Naples, in Abruzzo Citra; at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the gulf of Venice. It is 9 miles N.N.E. of Chieti.

PESCHIERA, a strong town of Austrian Italy, in the Veronese. It was taken by the French in 1796; and the garrison surrendered to the Austrians in 1799. It is seated on the river Mincio, where it proceeds from the lake Garda; 16 miles W. of Verona. Pop. 2500.

PESCIA, a town of Tuscany, in the province of Florence; celebrated for its fine oil; 25 miles N.E. of Florence.

PESCINA, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra, near the lake Celano. It is 20 miles S. by E. of Aquila.

PESENAS, a town of France, department of Herault, on the river Herault; 12 miles N.E. of Beziers. Pop. 7000.

PESHAWER. See PESHORE.

PESTH, a town of Hungary, capital of a palatinate of the same name; with a fortress, a royal palace, and a university, the only one in the kingdom. Here are many Greek merchants, who conduct the Levant trade to Germany and the northern nations. The town was nearly destroyed in 1839 by the eruption of the Danube, which did immense mischief; but it has been rebuilt, and some of the new erections are handsome. It has also several other literary and scientific establishments, and two elegant theatres. It is generally well built; and, though inferior in this respect to Buda, has many handsome and noble palaces, and elegant private houses. One of its principal features is the new and majestic suspension-bridge, which has superseded the old and inconvenient bridge of boats, and is one of the finest structures of the kind in existence; it crosses the Danube, uniting Pesth with Buda. The population is estimated at 63,000, without the garrison; or, with Buda and the suburbs, at about 110,000. It is seated on the E. side of the Danube. It has railways to Szegedin, Vienna, &c.; 96 miles E.S.E. of Presburg.

PESTO, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra; seated near the magnificent ruins of the ancient Paestum, 20 miles S.E. of Salerno.

PETAPA, a town of Mexico, 25 miles S.E. of Guatemala.

PETAQUEL, a province on the N. coast of Brazil, between the provinces of Seara and Rio Grande. It contains mines of silver.

PE-TCHE-LI, the principal province of China, bounded on the N. by the Great Wall and part of Tartary, E. by the Yellow sea, S. by Changtong and Ho-nan, and W. by the mountains of Chan-si. It contains nine cities of the first class, which have many others under their jurisdiction. Although Pe-tche-li extends no further than 42 N. lat., yet all its rivers are so much frozen during four months in the year, that waggons with the heaviest loads may safely pass them. The soil is sandy, and produces very little rice; but it abounds with all other kinds of grain, and with the greater part of the fruit-trees common in Europe. But what renders this province the most considerable, is that the riches of the whole empire are brought hither, the southern provinces furnishing it with everything they produce that is most uncommon and delicious. The inhabitants, in general, are reckoned not so polite, nor so apt to learn the sciences, as those of the southern provinces; but they are stronger and more warlike. Their number is estimated at 38,000,000. Peking is the capital.

PETER BOTTE, a remarkable mountain in the Mauritius, near the coast of Madagascar, between 2000 and 3000 feet high.

PETER AND PAUL, ST., or PETROPOLYVSKOY, a seaport of Russia, in Kamtschutka. The town consists of some log-houses and a few conical huts. Captain Clerke, who succeeded Captain Cook, was interred here. It is seated on the E. side of Awatska bay. It was taken by a British squadron, after a previous unsuccessful attack, in 1855.

PETER LE PORT, ST., a market-town, in the island of Guernsey; with an excellent harbour, defended by two castles.

PETERBOROUGH, a city in Northamptonshire, governed by a mayor; with a market on Saturday. It is a bishop's see, but has only one parish church, besides the cathedral, which was formerly attached to a monastery, one of the most magnificent in the kingdom prior to the Reformation. The market-place is spacious, the streets regular, and many of the buildings extremely neat. The manufacture of stockings is extensive, and considerable trade is carried on in corn, coal, and timber. It sends two members to parliament. It is seated on the Nen, over which is a bridge into Huntingdonshire; 42 miles N.E. of Northampton, and 76 N. of London, by the Great Northern Railway.

PETERHEAD, a seaport of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire; situate on a peninsula, about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile S. of the mouth of the Ugie. It has two harbours, defended by piers, a considerable trade in the whale-fishery, and in the export of grain, butter, and granite. Here is a small fort. A mineral spring, of a powerful diuretic quality, and the sea-bathing, bring a great resort of company, for whose accommodation there is a ball-room, and many elegant houses. It stands a little to the W. of Buchanness, the most eastern promontory of Scotland; 32 m. N.E. of Aberdeen. Long. 1. 35. W. lat. 57. 27. N.

PETERSBOROUGH, a town of New Hampshire, in Hillsborough county; 18 miles E. of Keene, and 73 W. by S. of Portsmouth.

PETERSBURG, a town of Virginia, in Dinwiddie county. It has a considerable trade, particularly in tobacco and flour. It is sented on the S. side of the Appomattox; 25 miles south of Richmond. Pop. in 1840, 11,136.

PETERSBURG, a government or province of Russia, at the E. extremity of the gulf of Finland. The greater part of this province was formerly called Ingermanland, or Ingria. It comprises an area of 15,000 square miles, with 700,000 inhabitants. Timber forms the chief source of wealth.

PETERSBURG, the metropolis of the Russian empire, in the government of the same name, is situated on the river Neva, near the gulf of Finland, and is built partly upon some islands in the mouth of that river, and partly upon the continent. So late as the beginning of the last century, the ground on which Petersburg now stands was only a vast morass, occupied by a few fishermen's huts. Peter the Great first began this city in 1703. He built a small hut for himself, and some wretched wooden hovels. In 1710 the count Golovkin built the first house of brick, and the next year the emperor, with his own hand, laid the foundation of a house of the same material. From these small beginnings rose the imperial city of Petersburg; and, in less than nine years after the wooden hovels were erected, the seat of empire was transferred from Moscow to this place. The streets, in general, are broad and spacious; and three of the principal ones, which meet in a point at the admiralty, are at least two miles in length. The mansions of the nobles are vast piles of building, furnished with great cost, in the same elegant style as at Paris or London, and situated chiefly on the S. side of the Neva, either in the admiralty quarter, or in the suburbs of Livonia and Moscow, which are the finest parts of the city. The views upon the banks of the Neva exhibit the grandest and most lively scenes imaginable. That river is in many places as broad as the Thames at London; it is also deep, rapid, and as transparent as crystal; and its banks are lined on each side with a continued range of grand buildings. On the N. of the fortress, the academy of sciences, and the academy of arts, are the most striking objects. On the opposite side are the imperial palace, the admiralty, the mansions of many Russian nobles, and the English line, so called because it is mostly occupied by English merchants. In the front of these buildings, on the S. side, is the quay, which extends three miles, except where it is interrupted by the admiralty; and the Neva, during the whole of that space, has been embanked by a wall, parapet, and pavement of hewn granite. From its low and marshy situation, it is subject to inundations, which have sometimes risen so high as to threaten the town with a total submersion. The opposite divisions of Petersburg, situated on each side of the Neva, are connected by two bridges on pontoons, which, on account of the large masses of ice driven down the stream from lake Ladoga, are usually removed when these masses first make their appearance; and, for a few days, till the river is frozen hard enough to bear carriages, there is no communication between the opposite parts of the town. Among the noblest ornaments of Petersburg is an equestrian statue of Peter the Great, in bronze, erected by Catherine II. in 1782. It is of colossal size, and stands on a huge pedestal of rock, brought there at great expense. Within the walls of the fortress is the cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, in which are deposited the remains of Peter the Great, and of the successive sovereigns, except Peter II., who was buried at Moscow. The literary and scientific institutions are numerous; but the most important is the university, founded in 1819. Of the charitable institutions, the principal are the foundling hospital, the sailor's hospital, the lazaretto, the asylum for the blind, the asylum for the deaf and dumb, the humane society, &c. The manufactures are various, and some of them of considerable extent; and the commercial intercourse is important, from its extensive communication with the interior, this being the only great maritime outlet in the gulf of Finland. The principal exports are hemp, flax, skins, leather, iron, tallow, &c.: the imports, sugar, coffee, cotton, indigo, dyewool, spices, hardware, &c. The number of ships that enter the Neva annually, varies from 1000 to 1700. It has railways to Moscow (400 miles long), Pawloosk, and Gatschina. Petersburg is 430 N.E. of Stockholm, and 1400 E.N.E. of London. Long. 30. 20. E. lat. 59. 56. N.

PETERSDORF, a town of Prussia, in the province of Siamland; 24 m. S. of Konigsberg

PHILADELPHIA, the capital of Pennsylvania, and formerly the metropolis of the United States of America, of which it is the second city for size and population; situate in the county of its name, on the W. bank of the Delaware, which is here a mile broad. It was originally laid out by William Penn, in 1683, and settled by a colony from England, and was increased by a constant influx of foreigners to so great a degree, that in less than a century, and in the lifetime of the first person born in it of European parents, it was computed to contain 6000 houses and 40,000 inhabitants in the city and suburbs. The population has been constantly increasing, and was estimated at 258,832, in 1840. The streets intersect each other at right angles; the principal one is Broad-street, 113 feet wide, running N. and S., which is crossed by Market or High-street, 100 feet wide, extending from river to river; the other streets, in general, are 50 feet wide; they are all paved, and have broad bricked footways. The public buildings are numerous, and many of them splendid edifices. It has about 150 places of public worship for Christians of various denominations. The university of Pennsylvania was incorporated here in 1791; its funds partly given by the state, and partly taken from the old college. Among the other literary and scientific institutions, the principal are the Philadelphia library, containing upwards of 42,000 volumes, a museum, philosophical apparatus, &c.; the American Philosophical Society; the Society for Agriculture; the Athenæum, incorporated in 1815; the Academy of Natural Sciences; and the library of the Society of Friends. The benevolent institutions are highly honourable to the inhabitants. The Pennsylvania hospital, established in 1752, is the most respectable institution of the kind in the Union. The United States' bank, in Chestnut street; the United States' mint, the merchants' exchange; the United States' Naval Asylum, or Marine Hospital, may be enumerated among the more remarkable buildings. Girard college, about a mile from the city, in Penn, is a splendid white marble structure. Among the public works of the city, the Fairmount waterworks, for the supply of water from the Schuylkill river, stands pre-eminent. On the lawn in the front is a handsome statue of William Penn; and in 1817 a building was erected for the celebrated painting of West, representing Christ healing the sick, which is a source of considerable income to the hospital. The manufactures of Pennsylvania surpass in excellence, variety, and extent, those of all other towns in the United States; and printing is here carried on most extensively. The city contains 5 markets, which are well supplied with provisions. It is connected with Columbia by the Columbian railroad, 83 miles in length: this and others make Philadelphia to be a great commercial centre. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, &c. In August, 1793, it was visited by a malignant fever, which carried off nearly 5000 of the inhabitants in the course of three months. It is 86 miles S.W. of New York, and 132 N.E. of Washington. Long. 75. 10. W. lat. 39. 57. N.

PHILIP ISLANDS, two islands in the South Pacific, discovered by Captain Hunter in 1791. They are 5 miles asunder, but almost joined by a sandy spit above water. They are covered with shrubs, have few tall trees on them, and the land is low. Long. of the eastern island, 140. 3. E. lat. 8. 6. S.

PHILIPPEVILLE, a fortified town of Belgium; 22 miles S. by W. of Namur.

PHILIPPI, a town of Macedonia, and an archbishop's see. Near this place, commonly called the plains of Philipp, Cassius and Brutus were defeated by Augustus and Mark Antony, in 42 B.C. It is greatly decayed, but an amphitheatre and several other monuments of its ancient grandeur remain. It is 60 miles E. of Salonica. Long. 24. 18. E. lat. 40. 40. N.

PHILIPPINE, a strong town of Belgium, in Flanders. It was taken by the French in 1747, and again in 1794, but retaken in 1814. It is seated on an arm of the Scheldt, 15 miles N. by W. of Ghent.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, a large cluster of islands, said to be 1100 in number, in the East Indian ocean. They were discovered by Magellan in 1519. The principal is Luzon, or Luçon. The air is very hot and moist, and the soil fertile in rice, &c. The trees are always green, and there are ripe fruits all the year. There are many wild beasts and birds, quite unknown in Europe. The inhabitants are affable, hospitable, and honest. They cultivate the land with considerable skill, and rear pigs, fowls, goats, and buffaloes, under the same roof with themselves. The houses are of bamboo, covered with palm leaves, raised on pillars to the height of nine feet. The chief food consists of rice, coconuts, and salted fish. Further particulars are given under the name of their respective islands. Total area, 129,100; pop. 4,183,000.

PHILIPPOLI, a town of Macedonia, founded by Philip, the father of Alexander the Great. It was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1818. It is seated on a small island formed by the Marizza; 95 miles W. N.W. of Adrianople.

PHILIPSBURG, a town of Germany in the grand duchy of Baden, formerly fortified, and considered as one of the bulwarks of the empire. It was taken by the French in 1734, when the duke of Berwick was killed at the siege; but it was restored the year following by the treaty of Vienna. In 1799 it was four times blockaded by the French republicans, and was at length completely dismantled.

It is seated on the bank of the Danube.

The city is compactly built in the form of a triangle, encompassed about a mile from the point by Grant's, Ayers's, and Quarry hills. The buildings, some of which are handsome, are generally of brick, but of a dingy appearance from the coal smoke. The harbour is chiefly on the Monongahela, which is deeper than the Alleghany. Three bridges cross the Alleghany, and two cross the Monongahela. The hills with which Pittsburgh is surrounded, afford an inexhaustible supply of bituminous coal, to which its manufacturing eminence is owing. The principal public buildings are the new court house on Grant's Hill, the university, (destroyed by fire 1845,) the Roman Catholic church, all on the same elevation. There are 3 market houses, and 35 churches. The city is amply supplied from the Alleghany with pure water. There are several places round Pittsburgh, which, though distinct, must be considered as suburbs of it. The principal is Alleghany City, on the N.W. side of the Alleghany. It contains 15 churches. It presents many agreeable residences, whither the business part of the population retire from the dust, smoke, and bustle of Pittsburgh. Birmingham is another suburb, on the S. side of the Monongahela river, about a mile distant from the centre of Pittsburgh. It has also important manufactures of glass, iron, &c. Pittsburgh is alike distinguished for its commerce and manufactures, and may be considered as the Birmingham of the United States. Pop. in 1840, of Pittsburgh, 21,115; of Alleghany City, 10,089; and of Birmingham, 1154; altogether, and including the suburbs, 32,358. PLYMOUTH, a borough and seaport in Devonshire, governed by a mayor; with a market on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday. It is seated at the mouth of the Plym, and, next to Portsmouth, is the most considerable naval harbour in England. There are, properly speaking, three harbours, called Catwater, Sutton Pool, and Hamoaze. The first is the mouth of the Plym, and is a commodious harbour for merchant ships, but is seldom entered by ships of war. The second, frequented by merchant ships only, is almost surrounded by the houses of the town, and further secured by an extensive pier. The third is the mouth of the Tamar, and is the harbour for large ships, having moorings for 92, and a good anchorage for a much greater number. These harbours unite in a capacious bay, called the Sound, which affords fine anchorage for ships, particularly since the construction of the magnificent breakwater across its entrance. This important structure, the second of the kind ever attempted, Cherbourg having the priority, has most completely answered the intended purpose. More than 3,777,000 tons of stone is employed in its construction, and on its Western extreme has a beautiful light tower. The other buildings connected with the port are the Naval hospital, one of the finest in Britain, and, opposite to the Military hospital, extensive barracks and a magnificent victualling office, built of marble, at the entrance to the Hamoaze. The theatre, assembly-rooms, and royal hotel, together form the great ornaments of Plymouth. The Eddystone lighthouse is off this town, at a distance of 15 miles S. S. W. Plymouth is the fishery for pilchards, which extends no further East than this port, whence great quantities are exported to Italy, and other Catholic countries. It contains two parish and eight district churches, various meeting-houses, and a Jews' synagogue, and carries on a considerable foreign and domestic trade.

The charitable institutions are numerous; and, among those for literary purposes, are the Athenæum, and a public library containing several thousand valuable books. The town is well supplied with fresh water, first brought here from a place seven miles off, by the famous Sir Francis Drake. It carries on a considerable trade, but has no manufactures of any consequence. It returns two members to parliament. It is 43 miles S.W. of Exeter, and 216 W. by S. of London. Long. 4. 7. W. lat. 50. 22. N.

PLYMOUTH, a seaport of Massachusetts, capital of a county of the same name. It is the oldest settlement in New England; and the rock on which the first settlers landed was conveyed in 1774, from the shore to a square in the centre of the town. The principal business of the place is the cod fishery, in which 2000 tons of shipping are employed. It is situated at the S. end of Plymouth bay; 42 miles S.S.E. of Boston. Pop. 5281. Long. 70. 45. W. lat. 41. 58. N.

PLYMOUTH, a town of New Hampshire, in Grafton county, situate on the Pemigewasset, at the mouth of Baker river; 45 miles N. of Concord. Pop. 1281.

PLYMOUTH, a town of North Carolina, capital of Washington county, on the S. side of Roanoke river; 4 miles above Albemarle Sound, and 23 S.S.W. of Edenton.

PLYMOUTH-DOCK. See DEVONPORT.

PLYMPTON, a decayed town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. It was one of the stannary towns for tin. It is seated near the Plym; 4 miles E. of Plymouth, and 218 W. by S. of London.

PLYMLIMON, a vast mountain of Wales, partly in Montgomeryshire, and partly in Cardiganshire, 2463 feet high. The Severn, the Wye, and other rivers, have their source in this mountain.

Po, the principal river of Italy, which has its source at Mount Viso, in Piedmont, flows N.E. to Turin, and thence curving E.S.E. for 45 miles, then runs N. to receive the Oglio, and then, following a generally east course, enters the gulf of Venice by four principal mouths; in its course it receives several rivers, and often overflows its banks, as most of those rivers descend from the Alps, and are increased by the melting of the snow. It is crossed like the Rhine by flying bridges.

Po, a river of China, in the province of Kiang-si; which runs into the Po-yang-hou, a small distance from Jao-tcheou.

POCKLINGTON, a town in East Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday; seated on a stream that runs into the Derwent, 14 miles E. of York, and 194 N. by W. of London.

PODENSTEIN, a town of Bavarian Franconia, near the source of the Putlach; 30 miles S.E. of Bamberg.

PODGORITZA, a free city of the Austrian empire, in Galicia; seated on the Vistula, opposite to Cracow. Pop. 4000.

PODLACHIA, one of the eight palatinates of Poland; bounded N. and E. by the river Bog, S. by the palatinate of Lublin, and W. by the Vistula. It has an area of 5520 square miles, with 438,000 inhabitants. The capital is Siedlec.

PODOLIA, a government of Russia, wrested from Poland in 1793. The Dniester separates it from Moldavia on the S.W., and the Bog crosses it from the N. in a S.E. direction. It has an area of 12,200 square miles. Pop. in 1838, 1,548,000 principally Poles.

PODOLSK, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow; 28 miles S. of Moscow.

PODOR, a fortress of Africa, on the river Senegal; built by the French. It was ceded to the English in 1763, but afterwards taken by the French, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1783. Long. 14. 20. W. lat. 17. 1. N.

POGGIOBONZI, a town of Tuscany with the ruins of a citadel; seated near the Elsa, 20 miles S. of Florence.

POGGY, an island in the Indian ocean, on the W. side of the island of Sumatra, and separated from the N. end of that of Nassau by a narrow channel, which contains a number of smaller islands, the whole of which are sometimes called the Nassau or Pogy islands. It is triangular, and about 20 miles in length. Long. 99. 33. E. lat. 2. 20. S.

POINT COUPÉE, a parish of Louisiana, between the Mississippi and the Atchafalaya; capital, of the same name, at the commencement of the levee, or embankment which extends to New Orleans. The Pop. is chiefly of French descent. Pop. of the parish in 1840, 7898, including 5430 slaves.

POINISO, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated on the Bonna; 14 miles S.E. of Turin.

POISSY, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise, the birthplace of Louis XI.; seated near the forest of St. Germain; 15 miles N.W. of Paris.

PORTIERS, a town of France, capital of the department of Vienne, and a bishop's see. Its population is not in proportion to its extent; for it includes a number of gardens and fields within its circuit. It has several Roman antiquities, particularly an amphitheatre, partly demolished, and a triumphal arch, which serves as a gate to the great street. Here, in 1356, Edward the Black Prince, gained a victory over the French, taking prisoners king John and his son Philip, whom he brought to England. The principal manufactures are stockings, woollen caps, gloves, and combs. It is seated on a hill, on the river Clain; on the Paris and Bordeaux railway, 209 miles from Paris, and 154 from Bordeaux. Pop. 21,500. Long. 0. 21. E. lat. 46. 35. N.

POITOU, a province of France, which now forms the three departments of Vendée, Vienne, and Deux Sèvres.

POLA, a strong, but decayed and poor seaport of Istria, in the Austrian dominions, and a bishop's see. Here are large remains of a Roman amphitheatre, and a triumphal arch. It is seated on a mountain, near a bay of the gulf of Venice; 38 miles S. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 13. 50. E. lat. 44. 52. N.

POLAND, a large country of Europe, bounded on the N. by Prussia, Courland, Livonia, and Russia, W. by the Baltic, Brandenburg, and Silesia, S. by Hungary, and Moldavia, and E. by Russia, and the territories wrested by that power from the Turks. It was formerly divided into four principal parts, Great Poland, Little Poland, Red Russia, and Lithuania. In 1772, a partition of this country, projected by the king of Prussia, was effected by that monarch, in conjunction with the empress of Russia, and the emperor of Germany. By this partition one-third of the country was wrested from the republic, the diet being compelled, by a foreign force, to make and ratify this important cession. The three partitioning powers, moreover, forcibly effected a great change in the constitution. In 1791, however, the king and the nation, in concurrence, almost unanimously, and without any foreign intervention, established another constitution, and one so unexceptionable every way, that it was celebrated by Mr. Burke, as a revolution whereby the conditions of all were made better, and the rights of none infringed. By it the broils of an elective monarchy, by which Poland, on almost every vacancy of the throne, had been involved in the calamities of war, were avoided, the throne being declared hereditary in the house of Saxony. A few of the nobility, however, discontented at the generous sacrifice of some of their privileges, repaired to the court of Russia; and, their representations concurring with the ambitious views of the empress, she sent an army into Poland, under the pretext of being guarantee of the constitution of 1772. Her interference was too powerful to be resisted; and this new constitution was overthrown. But the principal object for which the Russian army entered Poland was not yet attained. The empress had planned, in conjunction with the king of Prussia, a second partition of this country, which took place in 1793. Such multiplied oppressions at last roused the spirit of the nation. General Kosciusko appeared in 1794, at the head of a Polish army, to assert the independency of his country, and to recover the provinces wrested from it. He was successful at first, against the king of Prussia, but was at length overpowered by numbers; the country was in different parts desolated, the houses burnt, and the inhabitants massacred in crowds. The brave Kosciusko was taken prisoner, and sent with a number of other patriots into confinement at Petersburg, for having dared to defend his native country against foreign aggression. The king formally resigned his crown at Grodno in 1795, and was afterwards removed to Petersburg, where he remained a kind of state prisoner, till his death, in 1798. The whole of the country was divided among the three partitioning powers. Austria had Little Poland, and the greatest part of Red Russia and Podolia, which is now called the kingdom of Galicia; Prussia had Great Poland, Polish Prussia, a small part of Lithuania, and Polesia; and Russia had Samogitia, the remainder of Lithuania, Volhynia, and Podolia. In the war with Prussia in 1806, the French penetrated into Poland, and proclaimed their desire to restore its ancient independence, when, treaties of peace having been adjusted with Russia and Prussia, the project was for the most part abandoned. By the peace of Tilsit, the king of Prussia renounced the possession of the greater part of his Polish provinces, when they were erected into the dukedom of Warsaw, in favour of the king of Saxony. In 1809 Austria was compelled to cede part of Galicia to Russia, and a further portion to the new states. But on the retreat of the French army out of Poland in 1813, the Russians took possession of the duchy of Warsaw, and the congress of Vienna not only confirmed to that power all the Polish and Lithuanian provinces acquired before 1795, but added the sovereignty of the central provinces. On the downfall of Bonaparte, and the settlement of the continent in 1815, a part of the territory of Poland, comprising the central portion, and a population of 3,000,000, was formed into a separate kingdom, subject to the emperor of Russia, but governed by its own laws, with such modern improvements in legislature as the liberal policy of the emperor Alexander thought necessary to the welfare of the kingdom, which was governed by his viceroy. On the accession of Nicholas, his despotical conduct towards the conquered nation roused them again to resistance; in 1833 they flew to arms, and made a noble effort to gain their independence, but which only ended in their entire destruction; and the policy of Russia now seems to be the total annihilation of the unfortunate Poles as a people, in language and character; and Poland, once powerful, and containing a population of 15,000,000, has been annihilated from among the nations of the earth, and even its name almost obliterated from the map of Europe. The people, however, are now again (1861) upheaving with silent commotion, and signs appear that a sanguinary outburst may take place any moment. The kingdom, as constituted by the congress of Vienna in 1815, and now united to the Russian empire, was of comparatively limited dimensions, and was divided as follows:—

The towns of Poland are for the most part built with wood; and the villages consist of mean cottages, or huts. The country is so fertile in corn, in many places, that it supplies Sweden and Holland with large quantities, and it has extensive pastures. Peat, ochre, chalk, agate, chalcodony, carnelians, onyxes, jasper, rock crystals, amethysts, garnets, topazes, sapphires, and even rubies and diamonds are found in Poland; also tale, spur, lapis calaminaris, coal, iron, lead, and quicksilver. Here is much leather, fur, hemp, flax, saltpetre, alum, manna, honey, and wax; and there are mines of salt, of great depth, out of which is dug rock-salt. Horses are numerous, very strong, swift, and beautiful; and horned cattle are bred in immense numbers. Warsaw is the principal city.

POMEGUE, a small island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of France, at the entrance into the harbour of Marseilles, defended by a tower.

POMERANIA, an extensive province of Prussia; lying along the S. coast of the Baltic, and comprising an area of 12,000 square miles, with 970,117 inhabitants in 1837. It is divided into the regencies of Stettin, Stralsund, and Coslin, and is watered by several rivers, of which the Oder, Peene, Ucker, Rega, Persante, Inna, Stolphen, and Lebo, are the most considerable. The air is pretty cold, but compensated by the fertility of the soil, which abounds in pastures and corn, of which a great deal is exported. The country is flat, contains many lakes, woods, and forests, and has several good harbours. It was formerly an independent duchy of the German empire, and was divided into Hither and Further Pomerania. The latter, and part of Hither Pomerania, were seized by the king of Prussia, and confirmed to him in 1720; the remainder, N. of the Peene, was ceded by the king of Sweden, at the treaty of Keil, in 1814, to the king of Denmark, in exchange for Norway, but soon after came to Prussia in exchange for Saxe-Lunenburgh.

POMERELIA, a district of West Prussia; extending W. from the river Vistula to the duchy of Pomerania, of which it was formerly a part. It is now included in the government of Dantzic.

destroyed, with Herculaneum, by an eruption, in 79 A.D. The volcanic matter is much less hard than at Herculaneum, and, since its discovery in 1811, much of the town has been excavated, and many interesting discoveries have been made relating to the domestic manners of the ancient Romans. It once stood on the sea-shore, but is now a considerable distance from it.

PONCE SANTI, a village of Spain, in Andalusia, near Seville. It was the ancient Italica, founded by Scipio Africanus, B.C. 206. It was the birthplace of the Roman emperors Trajan, Adrian, and Theodosius. Trajan adorned it greatly. It was a place of great magnificence, of which many monuments still remain, such as its fine amphitheatres, &c.; but Spanish ignorance has done much towards destroying these vestiges of antiquity by using the materials for paving roads, building houses, &c. The ruin of the ancient city dates from the drying up of the river, from which cause the inhabitants deserted it for Seville. It is now only visited by the curious traveller.

PONDICHERY, a town of Hindostan, the principal French settlement in Asia, on the Coromandel coast, in the Carnatic. It was first settled by the French in 1674, and, previously to the war of 1756, was a fine city. It extended along the sea-coast above a mile, was three-quarters of a mile in breadth, and had a citadel, then the best of its kind in India. The city has been repeatedly taken by the English, particularly in 1761 (when it was immediately razed, in retaliation of M. Lally's conduct towards Fort St. David), and the last time in 1793. It was restored to the French at the general peace; 85 miles S. by W. of Madras. Long. 79. 53. E. lat. 11. 57. N.

PONDICO, a small uninhabited island of the Grecian Archipelago, near the coast of Negropont. Long. 23. 29. E. lat. 39. 9. N.

PONFERRADA, a town of Spain, in Leon, on the river Sill; 40 miles S.W. of Leon.

PONG-HOU, or PESCADORES, a cluster of islands in the China sea, which lie about six leagues from the W. coast of the island of Formosa. They are only sand-banks or rocks, and not a shrub is to be seen upon them. The harbour of Pong-hou, the principal island, is good, and was fortified by the Dutch, while they were masters of Formosa. A Chinese garrison is kept here, with one of the mandarins called literati, whose chief employ is to watch the trading vessels between China and Formosa. Long. 121. 25. E. lat. 25. 30. N.

POSS, a town of France, department of Lower Charente, with a mineral spring; seated on a hill, near the river Sevigne, 10 miles S. of Saintes. Pop. 4000.

POSS, ST., a town in the department of Herault, and a bishop's see. It is seated in a valley surrounded by mountains, in which are fine marble quarries; 24 miles N. of Nar-

PONT DE L'ACHIE, a town in the department of Eure, seated on the Seine; 18 miles N. of Evreux.

PONT L'EVEQUE, a town in the department of Calvados. It is a trading place, seated on the Touque; 4 miles from the sea, and 40 W.S.W. of Rouen. Pop. 2500. Long. 0. 10. E. lat. 49. 17. N.

PONT DE VAUX, a town in the department of Ain, seated on the Resouze, near its conflux with the Saone; 8 miles S. of Macon. Pop. 2800.

PONT DE VESLE, a town in the department of Ain, with manufactures of stuffs and tapestry; seated on the Vesle, 12 miles W. of Bourg.

PONT DU GARD. See GARD.

PONT GIBAUT, a town in the department of Puy de Dome; 10 miles W.N.W. of Clermont.

PONT ST. ESPRIT, a town in the department of Gard, on the river Rhone; over which is one of the finest bridges in Europe, consisting of 19 great, and 4 small arches. To facilitate the passage of the water, in time of floods, apertures are made through each pier, six feet above the common level of the river; and, to stem the rapidity of the river, the bridge is not built in a right line, but in a curve. Here are manufactures of silk, and a good trade in wine, oil, and fruits; 17 miles S. of Viviers, and 55 N.E. of Montpellier. Long. 4. 40. E. lat. 44. 15. N. Pop. 4160.

PONT ST. MAXENCE, a town in the department of Seine-et-Oise, seated on the Oise; 5 miles N. of Senlis.

PONT-SUR-SEINE, a town in the department of Aube, with a castle, seated on the Seine; 20 miles N.W. of Troyes, and 55 S.E. of Paris.

PONT-SUR-YONNE, a town in the department of Yonne, seated on the Yonne; 8 miles N.W. of Sens.

PONTA DELGADA, a seaport, but not the capital, and the largest and most populous town of St. Michael, one of the Azores. It is defended by a citadel, and contains about 22,000 inhabitants. It is substantially built, but disgustingly filthy. It has considerable commercial activity and wealth. It is defended by three forts, and stands on the S. side of the island. Long. 25. 41. W. lat. 37. 45. N.

PONTARLIER, a town of France, department of Doubs, with a strong castle on a mountain. It is seated on the Doubs, and the frontiers of Switzerland; 22 miles W. of Neufchâtel, and 35 S.E. of Besançon. Pop. 4500. Long. 6. 26. E. lat. 46. 55. N.

PONTE DE LIMA, a town of Portugal, in Entre Douro e Minho, seated on the Lima, over which is a magnificent bridge; 13 miles N.W. of Braga.

PONTE STURA, a town of the Sardinian states, in the duchy of Montferrat; seated at the conflux of the Stura and Po, 5 miles W. S.W. of Casal.

PONTEVEDRA, a clean well built town of Spain, in Galicia, near the mouth of the Lerez; 21 miles from Vigo.

PONTEBA, or PONTE IMPERIALE, a town of the Austrian states in Carinthia; seated on the Fella, over which it has a bridge to Ponteba Veneta, a small town of the province of Friuli. It is 20 miles N.N.W. of Friuli, and 25 S.W. of Villach.

PONTECORVO, a town of S. Italy, in the Papal states, but in a territory surrounded by the Neapolitan dominions. It has an old castle, several churches and convents, and near it are some ruins. Napoleon conferred the title of Prince of Pontecorvo on Marshal Bernadotte, afterwards king of Sweden. Pop. 5500; 37 miles N.W. of Capua.

PONTEFRACCT, commonly POMFRET, a borough in West Yorkshire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Saturday, returning two members to parliament. It is situated in a very rich soil, noted for its gardens and nurseries, and the large quantity of liquorice grown here. Its castle, now in ruins, has been the scene of various tragical events in the English history, particularly the murder of Richard II.; though this latter crime has been doubted, 22 miles S.W. of York, and 175 N.N.W. of London.

PONTIAN ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands in the Mediterranean, opposite to the coast of Terra di Lavoro.

PONTIANA, a river of Borneo, which enters the ocean by several mouths, at the W. side of the island, under the equinoctial line, where the Dutch had a factory.

PONTIVY, a town of France, department of Morbihan, with a linen manufacture; seated on the river Blavet, 25 miles N. of Vannes. Pop. 3100.

Seine-et-Oise, with a castle. The parliament of Paris was transferred to this place in 1652, 1720, and 1753. It is seated on an eminence near the Oise, 20 miles N.W. of Paris. Pop. 1836, 4990. Long. 2. 6. E. lat. 49. 3. N.

PONTOUSEN, a town in the department of Manche, on the Coesnon, with a tide-harbour; 10 miles S.S.W. of Avranches.

PONTREMOLI, a town of Tuscany, with a strong castle, seated at the foot of the Apennines, on the river Mugra; 40 miles S.W. of Parma. Pop. 2500. Long. 9. 40. E. lat. 44. 25. N.

PONTRIEUX, a town of France, department of Côtes du Nord, on the river Trieux; 10 miles N.W. of St. Brieux.

PONTYPOOL, a town in Monmouthshire, with a market on Saturday, extensive iron-works, and a manufacture of japanned ware. It is seated between two hills on the river Avon, 15 miles S.W. of Monmouth, and 148 W. by N. of London.

PONZA, one of the Pontian islands, in the Mediterranean; containing a town, harbour, and considerable salt-works. It was taken by the British in 1813. Long. 13. 10. E. lat. 40. 53. N.

PONZONE, a town of the Sardinian states, in the duchy of Montferrat; 20 miles W.N. W. of Genoa.

POOLE, a borough and seaport in Dorsetshire; with a market on Monday and Thursday. It is a county of itself, and sends two members to parliament. It is governed by a mayor, and situate on a peninsula projecting into a capacious bay, which branches into many creeks, and forms several islands. The parish church, formerly a chapel of ease to Lanford, is a very ancient structure. Here are also various places of worship for dissenters, a grammar-school, and several charity schools. The harbour admits vessels of moderate size only; but for them it is very secure. Poole rose into some consequence when the ancient town of Wareham fell into decay. The principal branch of business here is the Newfoundland fishery. It has also a large importation of deals from Norway, a general commerce with America and various parts of Europe, and a fine coasting trade, particularly in corn and coal. Near the mouth of the harbour is an oyster bank, from which vast quantities are carried to be fattened in the creeks of Essex and the Thames. Poole is 40 miles W.S.W. of Winchester, and 122 W. by S of London, by S.W. Railway. Long. 1. 59. W. lat. 50. 43. N.

POOLORON, or POLERON, one of the Bana islands, 100 miles S.E. of Amboyna. Long. 130. 0. E. lat. 4. 20. S.

POOLO WOT, one of the Banda islands, on which the Dutch have a regular pentagon, called Port Revenge.

walls, where the peishwa used to assemble the Brahmans, to whom he gave alms at the great feast, when the rainy season terminated. The view from this hill commands the town, with all its gardens and plantations, the cantonments, and the British residency at the Sangum. The town is entirely defenceless, the streets long and narrow, and the houses very irregularly built. The more respectable dwellings are raised with large blocks of granite to the height of about 14 feet, after which the superstructure is composed of timber frames, with slight brick walls; those of the common people are only one storey high, with tiled roofs. The palace is surrounded by high and thick brick walls, with round towers at the angles, and has only one entrance. The affairs of government are under the direction of the British resident. It is 100 miles S.E. of Bombay. Pop. 110,000. Long. 74. 2. E. lat. 18. 30. N.

POORUNDEE, a fortress of Hindostan, in B-japora, where the archives of Poona are kept; seated on a mountain, 18 miles E.S.E. of Poona.

POORE, a town of France, in the department of Mayenne; 6 m. W.S.W. of Alençon.

POPAYAN, the capital of the province of Cauca, in the republic of New Granada, and the most ancient city erected by Europeans in this part of America. It contains a cathedral, several churches and convents, and two nunneries. The trade is considerable, and the inhabitants are estimated at 20,000, chiefly mulattoes. It stands in a large plain, 200 miles W.S.W. of Santa Fé, and 240 N.E. of Quito. Long. 75. 55. W. lat. 2. 35. N.

POPEDOM, OF ROMAN STATES, Italy; bounded N. by the Po, which separates it from the Austrian states, E. by the Adriatic, S. by Naples, and W. by Tuscany. It is 120 miles long, and from 80 to 100 broad, divided into the following delegations:—

The foregoing exhibits the area and population of each province. The first column shows the area in Roman rubbie, the rubbia being a measure of corn, equal to $8\frac{1}{2}$ English bushels, and will therefore serve to show the comparative agricultural importance of each, as the second, in square miles, does the actual area. In 1829 the census gave 2,679,524 as the population; but this as well as the later one, 1833, is considered as too high, and therefore 2,500,000 may be taken as the correct population. The papal government, a bar to industry, and ill calculated to promote the happiness of its subjects, was subverted by the deposition of the Pope Pius IX. in 1848; but after several attempts to form a republican constitution, the French interposed, and restored the pope to power, and he returned to Rome in 1850. The country is badly cultivated and thinly inhabited. Trade and manufactures are but little encouraged; and, were it not for dates, figs, almonds, olives, and other fruits, which grow spontaneously, the indolence of the inhabitants is such that they would be absolutely starved. The pope, according to the ancient canon law, is the supreme, universal, and independent head of the church, and is invested with sovereignty over all Christian sovereigns, communities, and individuals. He has the titles of Holy Father and Holiness, and is elected at every vacancy from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled his Eminence. Their number was fixed by Sixtus V. at 70, in allusion to the number of the disciples sent out by Christ to teach the world. The annual revenue of the pope, which formerly amounted to upwards of £2,000,000 sterling, is now much reduced. In 1798 this state was taken possession of by the French, who overturned its ancient government, and erected it into a republic, styled the Roman republic, under the direction of five consuls. They obliged the pope, Pius VI., to remove from Rome, first into Tuscany, and afterwards into France, where he died at Valence, August 19th, 1799. In December following a conclave was held at Venice, and on March 13th, 1800, cardinal Chiaromonte was elected to the papal chair, under the title of Pius VII., and assumed the sovereignty. A concordat was concluded for France in 1802, and in 1804 Napoleon was crowned by the pope; but in 1807 the emperor became imperious. The pope was removed into France, and his state transformed into a kingdom under Napoleon's son. He continued a kind of prisoner till the allies had invaded France in 1814, when he was restored to most of his former prerogatives. His successors remained in possession of the government until an insurrection caused Pius IX. to fly from Rome, in 1848. The pope (Pius IX.) resided at Gaeta from Nov. 25, 1848, till Sept. 4, 1849, when he went to Portici. He left this on April 4, 1850, and re-entered Rome on April 12, 1850. By the revolution of 1859-60, the greatest part of the territory was attached to the kingdom of Italy, and the remainder is only secured to the pontiff by the presence of a French army.

POPE, a county in Illinois, level and fertile. Capital, Golconda; the pop. in 1840 was 4094.

POPERINGHE, a town of Belgium, in West Flanders; 6 miles W. of Ypres.

POPO, a kingdom of Africa, on the Slave Coast. The inhabitants have scarcely any houses, except the king's village, which is on an island in the midst of a river. Long. 2. 33. E. lat. 6. 18. N.

PORA, an island in the Indian ocean, on the W. coast of Sumatra; 54 miles long, and from 9 to 12 broad. Long. 98. 30. E. lat. 1. 10. S.

PORCARI, a seaport of Hindostan, in Travancore, taken by the English in 1795. It is populous, and carries on a considerable trade. It is 85 miles N.W. of Travancore. Long. 76. 20. E. lat. 9. 15. N.

PORCO, a town of Buenos Ayres, capital of a province which commences on the W. side of Potosi, from which it extends sixty miles. It has its name from a mountain, in which is a rich silver mine, the first worked by the Spaniards after their conquest of the country. It is 25 miles W.S.W. of Potosi. Long. 67. 20. W. lat. 19. 40. S.

PORCUNA, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the Salado, 22 miles N.W. of Jaen.

PORENTRUI, a town of Switzerland, canton of Bern; seated on the Hallan, near mount Jura, 24 miles W.S.W. of Basel. Long. 7. 10. E. lat. 47. 27. N.

PORLOCK, a town in Somersetshire, with a trade in coal and lime. It is seated on a bay of the Bristol channel, surrounded by hills, 7 miles W. of Minehead, and 170 W. of London.

PORNOGONG. See PARO.

PORSELOU, a rich and commercial town of the kingdom of Siam. It is surrounded by 14 bastions, and situate on a large river, 300 miles N. of its mouth in the gulf of Siam. Long. 100. 2. E. lat. 17. 48. N.

PORTRALINGTON, a borough of Ireland, in Queen's county, 44 miles from Dublin. It consists principally of one handsome avenue, and has a market-hall, 2 churches, and 3 chapels. It returns one member to parliament.

PORT AU PRINCE, or PORT REPUBLICAIN, as it was called on the first establishment of the republic of Haiti, is a city and capital of that republic on the W. side of the island of St. Domingo. It is unhealthy, and instead of a handsome city as it appears from the sea, it is dirty and ill built. Some few of the houses are of brick and stone, and are handsome. The senate-house is a plain edifice, and the palace of the president, the largest building in the city, was erected by the English. The city is well supplied by a copious stream of water. It was disastrously affected by the earthquake of May 7th, 1842, and one-third of it destroyed by fire on January 9th, 1843; which troubles hastened the Haytian revolution of 1843. See DOMINICO, ST. It was also nearly burnt down in 1791, by the revolting negroes, and was taken by the English and royalists in 1794. Long. 72. 10. W. lat. 18. 40. N.

PORT BALTIC. See ROGERWICK.

PORT DALRYMPLE, a harbour on the N. coast of Van Diemen's land, where a British settlement was established in 1804. Luncheon is at the extremity of the river Tamar, which forms the port.

PORT DESIRE, a harbour on the E. coast of Patagonia, where ships sometimes touch in their passage to the Pacific ocean. Long. 67. 56. W. lat. 47. 50. S.

PORT DISCOVERY, a harbour on the W. coast of North America, in the gulf of Georgia. Long. 237. 20. E. lat. 48. 7. N.

PORT EGOMT, one of the finest harbours in the world, on the N.W. coast of Falkland islands, discovered by commodore Byron in 1765. The whole navy of England might ride here in perfect security from all winds; and every thing for the refreshment of ships is to be obtained in abundance. Long. 55. 0. W. lat. 51. 27. S.

PORT FRANÇAIS, a harbour on the W. coast of North America, discovered by Perouse in 1786. It is of a circular form, not to be fathomed in the middle, and bordered by peak mountains, of an excessive height, covered with snow. Long. 137. 30. W. lat. 58. 37. N.

PORT-GLASGOW, a town of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, near the mouth of the Clyde; erected in 1710, to serve as the port of the city of Glasgow, whose magistrates appoint a bailiff for its government. The harbour is excellent, and there are extensive warehouses on the quay, belonging to the Glasgow merchants. Contiguous to the town, and near the shore, stands the castle of Newark, a strong fortified edifice. It unites with Dumbarton, Renfrew, &c., in sending one member to parliament. The Glasgow, Paisley, and Greenock railway, passes close to the W. of it. It is 2 miles E. of Greenock, and 20 N.W. of Glasgow.

PORTGLENONE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim. It consists of one street, and has a linen market; 130 m. from Dublin.

PORT JACKSON, a bay and harbour on the coast of New South Wales; 13 miles N. of Botany bay. The capes that form its entrance are high, rugged, and perpendicular cliffs; and the harbour is one of the noblest in the world, extending 14 miles in length, with numerous creeks or coves. The name of Port Jackson was given to it by Captain Cook, who observed it in sailing along the coast. See SYDNEY.

and a good harbour. It stands on the extremity of a peninsula, at the mouth of the Biavet; 27 miles W. of Vannes. Long. 3. 18. W. lat. 47. 40. N.

PORT LOUIS, the capital of the island of Mauritius, or isle of France, situate on the W. side of the island, in a low and flat valley, surrounded by mountains. In 1817 it was almost entirely burnt down, but has since been rebuilt. It was long the chief settlement of the French in this part of the world, but now belongs to the British. Long. 57. 32. E. lat. 20. 10. N.

PORT MAHON, a seaport and chief place of a district of the island of Minorca, with an excellent harbour. It is built chiefly on lofty rocks. The houses are in general good, and are all provided with cisterns, and many with terraces. The Place d'Armes is large and handsome; on one side are barracks capable of containing 1200 men. The only public walk is the Alameyda, which is merely an alley of trees. On one side of the harbour is a dock-yard, and on the other a natural mole. Long. 4. 5. E. lat. 36. 17. N.

PORT PAIX, a town on the N. coast of St. Domingo, with a good harbour, opposite the island of Tortue. Long. 73. 2. W. lat. 19. 58. N.

PORT PATRICK, a seaport of Scotland, in Wigtownshire, confined by the sea on one side, and on the other by overhanging rocks and hills. It is nearly opposite Donaghadee, in Ireland, from which it is only 20 miles distant; and packet-boats sail hence for that place every day. The harbour is good, and has one of the finest quays in Great Britain, with a lighthouse. It is 28 miles W. of Wigtown, and 107 S.W. of Edinburgh. Long. 5. 3. W. lat. 54. 58. N.

PORT PENN, a town of Delaware, in New-castle county, with a secure harbour, opposite Ready island, in the Delaware. It is the rendezvous of outward-bound ships waiting for a favourable wind, 56 miles below Philadelphia.

PORT ROSEWAY. See SHELburne.

PORT ROYAL, a town of Virginia, in Caroline county, with three churches, situate on the Rappahannock; 22 miles S.E. of Fredericksburg, and 58 above Urbanna.

PORT ROYAL, an island on the coast of South Carolina, separated from the neighbouring continent by an arm of the sea, called Broad river, which forms the most commodious harbour in the state, at the town of Beaufort.

PORT ST. ANNE. See KILLOUGH.

PORT ST. JULIAN, a harbour on the E. coast of Patagonia, where ships bound for the Pacific usually touch. Long. 68. 44. W. lat. 49. 10. S.

PORT ST. MARY, a seaport of Spain, in Andalusia, on the bay of Cadiz. The principal trade is in salt. The English made a descent here in 1702, with a design to besiege Cadiz, but without success; 10 miles N.E. of Cadiz.

PORT SUR SAONE, a town of France, in the department of Upper Saone, on the river Saone; 8 miles N.W. of Vesoul.

PORT TONACCO, a town of Maryland, chief of Charles county, situate on a creek of its name, which enters the Potomac, 4 miles below the town. In its vicinity are the celebrated cold waters of Mount Misery; 30 miles S. of Washington.

PORT VENDRE, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees, with a small harbour on the Mediterranean, defended by two forts. It is 25 miles S.S.E. of Perpignan.

PORT WILLIAM, a town of Kentucky, capital of Gallatin county, at the confluence of the Kentucky and the Ohio.

PORTADOWN, a town of Ireland, in the county of Armagh; with a linen manufacture, situate on the river Bann; 16 miles N. of Newry.

PORTALGUE, a strong town of Portugal, in Alentejo, and a bishop's see. It has a manufacture of woollen cloth, and is seated at the foot of a high mountain; 30 miles N. of Elvas. Pop. 5600.

PORTICI, a village 4 miles E.S.E. of the city of Naples, on part of the site of the ancient Herculaneum, near mount Vesuvius. Here is a palace of the king of Naples, enriched with a vast number of fine statues, and other remains of antiquity, taken out of the ruins of Herculaneum. Pop. 5200.

PORTLAND, a peninsula in Dorsetshire, connected with the main land by a ridge of pebbles, called the Chesil Bank, extending above 7 miles up the S.W. coast. Between this bank and the mainland is a narrow arm of the sea, called the Fleet. Portland Isle is 4 miles long, and 2 broad, surrounded by inaccessible rocks, except at the landing-place, at the N.W. end, where there is a strong castle, called Portland Castle, built by Henry VIII. The peninsula is noted for its freestone, which is used for building the finest structures, and now for the fine refuge harbour constructed by convict labour. It lies on the S.W. side of Weymouth bay, and on its S. extremity, called Portland Point, two lighthouses have been erected. Long. 2. 27. W. lat. 50. 31. N.

PORTLAND, the capital of the state of Maine; in Cumberland county; with a capacious harbour, defended by a fort, a citadel, and a battery. It was almost laid in ashes by the British fleet in 1775, but has been entirely rebuilt, and has three churches. It is situate on a promontory in Casco bay, with a lighthouse at the entrance of the harbour; 120 miles N.N.E. of Boston. Pop. 12,601. Long. 70. 20. W. lat. 43. 40. N.

PORTLAND ISLANDS, a cluster of small islands in the South Pacific. They are low and covered with wood; and the centre one is in long. 149. 8. E. lat. 2. 38. S.

PORTO, a small seaport of the papal states, in the patrimony of St. Peter. It is the sea of a bishop, (who is generally a cardinal,) dependent only on the pope. It is seated on the W. side of the Tiber; 10 miles S.W. of Rome.

PORTO ALEGRE a town of Brazil in the province of Rio Grande do Sul, at the mouth of the Jaculy river on the Lagon dos Patos. It is well built, and has a trade in ship building, and with the interior, and carries on some foreign commerce. Pop. about 10,000.

PORTOBELLO, a modern watering place of Scotland, three miles E. of Edinburgh, and 2½ miles from Musselburgh; in 1765, it consisted of a solitary humble public-house, called the Portobello, which is still in existence in the High-street. The present town is nearly a mile in length, along the beach, and consists of several streets, which are thinly lined with detached houses. It is much frequented for bathing, and contains several handsome houses. There is no accommodation for shipping, and it is seated near the line of the Dalkeith and Edinburgh, railway. It unites with Leith and Musselburgh, in sending a member to parliament.

PORTO BELLO, a seaport of Central America, republic of Colombia; on the N. coast of the isthmus of Darien, nearly opposite Panama, on the S. coast. It is one of the most unhealthy places in the world, and the country around it swarms with reptiles in the rainy season. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons, in 1748, and the introduction of register ships, this place was the great mart for the rich commerce of Peru and Chili. The town stands close to the sea, on the side of a mountain that surrounds the harbour, which is safe and commodious. Should the isthmus of Panama, by means of a canal or railway be the plan of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, Portobello, from its excellent harbour, may become again of importance. It was taken in 1742 by admiral Vernon, who demolished the fortifications; but was afterwards strongly fortified. It is 60 miles N. by E. of Panama, and 300 W. of Cartagena. Long. 79. 50. W. lat. 9. 33. N.

PORTO CABELLO, a seaport of Venezuela, South America; with a good harbour defended by forts. It is a flourishing place, containing a population of 8000, and is the centre of the navigation and commerce of Venezuela; 70 miles W. by S. of Jago de Leon. Long. 67. 32. E. lat. 10. 31. N.

PORTO FARINO, a seaport of the kingdom of Tunis. Long. 10. 16. E. lat. 37. 12. N.

PORTO FERRAJO, the capital of the island of Elba; with a good harbour, capable of containing the largest fleets. This town is celebrated as having been the residence of Napoleon, from May 4, 1811, to February 26, 1815, when he sailed on his final expedition to France. Its position is central in the Mediterranean; and it perfectly commands the coast of Italy. It is a very pretty town, built on a shelving rock, that closes in a circular bay, about 2 miles deep and as many in breadth. The land all round is high and woody, and the entrance to the bay is high and easy to hit. The streets and fortifications rise one above another, like rows of seats in an ancient amphitheatre, and present a most beautiful spectacle to those who approach by water. A commodious quay communicates, by means of large flights of steps, with all the streets. Porto Ferrajo was built and fortified by Cosmo I., duke of Florence, in 1548; but the fortifications were not finished till 1628, when Cosmo II. completed them with a magnificence equal to that displayed by the old Romans in their public undertakings; and it is now deemed impregnable. The gates are decorated with sculpture, and the rings for fastening cables to are of carved bronze; 7 miles S.W. of Piombino, on the coast of Italy. Pop. 3000. Long. 12. 17. E. lat. 42. 53. N.

PORTO FIORE, a small seaport on the coast of Genoa, with a fort, situate between two mountains; 13 miles S.E. of Genoa.

PORTO GALETE, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated in a small bay; 10 miles N.W. of Bilbao.

PORTO GRECO, a town of Naples, in the Capitanata, near the gulf of Venice; 16 miles N.W. of Manfredonia.

PORTO GRUARO, a town of Austrian Italy, in Friuli, seated on the Lemia; 20 miles W. by S. of Palma Novo.

PORTO LONGONE, a seaport on the S.E. side of the isle of Elba; with a good harbour, and a fortress upon a rock, almost inaccessible. It is 4 miles S.E. of Porto Ferrajo, and 35 N.W. of Orbitello, on the coast of Italy. Long. 10. 20. E. lat. 42. 50. N.

PORTO MARIN, a town of Spain, in Galicia; 48 miles E. of Compostella.

PORTO PRAYA, a town and bay of St. Jago, one of the Cape de Verd islands. The town stands on an elevated plain, and is the residence of the Portuguese governor of the islands. Long. 23. 29. W. lat. 14. 54. N.

PORTO REAL, a seaport of Spain, in Andalusia, on the E. side of the bay of Cadiz; 7 miles E. of Cadiz.

PORTO RICO, an island of the West Indies, 60 miles E. of St. Domingo, belonging to the Spaniards. It was discovered by Columbus in 1493, invaded by the Spaniards in 1509, and the natives, 600,000 in number, soon disappeared. It is about 100 miles in length, and averages 39 broad. Its area is computed at about 3750 square miles, being about 2500 less than Jamaica. About one-fifth of the whole area (or 109,587 acres,) were in cultivation in 1840, of which 14,803 were in sugarcane. The population in 1846, based on the last census, was estimated at 500,000, of which there are not more than about 50,000 slaves. Free labour, and also white men's labour, is used in the colony. It is an agricultural colony, and has no mines, with the exception of a recently discovered and difficult coal mine near Arecibo. There are no roads of any extent throughout the island. The laws of Spain, as administered in Cuba, are those of Porto Rico, and used to be very severe in regard to foreigners, especially of Protestants; these, however, are relaxed, and since the change in the English sugar duties, the trade has flourished in this colony. San Juan is the capital.

PORTO SANTO, an island in the Atlantic, the least of the Madeiras, 15 miles in circumference. In 1518 a Portuguese ship, coasting along the African shore, was driven out to sea by a sudden squall, and, when they all expected to perish, they discovered this island, which, on account of their escape, they named Porto Santo; and hence they desisted the island of Madeira. It produces little corn, but there are oxen and wild hogs, and a vast number of rabbits. Its most valuable productions are dragons' blood, honey, and wax. It has no harbour, but good anchorage in the road. Long. 16. 25. W. lat. 32. 58. N.

PORT PHILIP, or VICTORIA, a portion of New South Wales, lying on the great bay of the same name. It extends from cape Howe to the S. of a line drawn in a N.E. direction to the nearest portion of the river Murray, then along that river to the 141st degree of E. long., then along that meridian to the sea coast, which, for 600 miles to cape Howe, forms its southern limit. It contains 20,000,000 acres, or 260 miles E. and W., and 160 miles from N. to S. Its principal feature is the great bay of Port Phillip. Its climate is exceedingly variable and the changes most sudden. The spring commences in September and terminates in November, then summer lasts until March, the hottest month being February; autumn during April and May succeeds, and is followed by winter until August. The rainy months are June to August; the quantity which falls is double that in England. One of the scourges is the periodic hot winds from the north, which blight the prospects of the agriculturist. During the intense heats of summer the country appears parched and arid, but in the winter it is all verdant. Corn-growing is one of the staple occupations of the colonists, and is in some parts very lucrative; sheep-grazing is the next in importance. Besides these, other branches of industry are daily growing into action. Gold has been recently found as had been predicted by Strzelecki; other minerals are abundant though but little worked.

PORT ROYAL, the principal seaport of Jamaica, situated on the W. end of a sandy peninsula that separates Kingston harbour from the sea. It is on the S. side of Jamaica in lat. 17. 56. N. and long. 76. 51. W. In 1692 the town contained 2000 houses, when an earthquake swallowed nine-tenths of it, covering the houses with 7 fathoms water. A new town was immediately built, but, ten years after, it was destroyed by fire, and being rebuilt, was a third time destroyed, by a hurricane in 1722. The succession of calamities caused the inhabitants to remove to Kingston on the N. side of the harbour, but the royal naval arsenal is at Port Royal. It has a good harbour, much frequented, though of course suffering under the depression incidental to the British fiscal regulations of 1848.

PORTSEA, an island between Chichester bay and the harbour of Portsmouth, in Hampshire. It is a low tract, about 14 miles in circumference, separated from the mainland on the N. by a creek, over which are two bridges, one for the entrance and the other for the departure of passengers. At the S.W. extremity of it is situated the town of Portsmouth.

PORTSMOUTH, a borough and seaport of Hampshire, governed by a mayor, with markets on Thursday and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament. It is the most considerable haven for men of war, and the most strongly fortified place in England. Its capacious harbour is made by a bay running up between the island of Portsea (on which the town is situated), and the opposite peninsula, having a narrow entrance, commanded by the town and forts. Many of the largest ships are always laid up here; and, in the time of war, it is the principal rendezvous of the grand channel fleet. The docks, arsenals, storehouses, barraecks, &c., are all of great magnitude, and kept in the most perfect order. To the S. of the town is the noted road of Spithead, where the men-of-war anchor when prepared for actual service. Portsmouth has one spacious church. Portsea, built on what was formerly called Portsmouth common is now become much larger than the parent town. Here are 8 chapels belonging to the establishment, and several places of worship for dissenters. It is connected with the system of railways extending to the metropolis and along the S. coast. It is 20 miles S.S.E. of Winchester, and 72 S.W. of London. Long. 1. 6. W. lat. 50. 48. N.

PORTSMOUTH, a town in the United States, the capital of New Hampshire, in Rockingham county, with eight churches. It is the largest town, and the only seaport in the state; seated on the Piscataqua, two miles from the ocean. Its harbour is one of the finest on the continent, well defended by nature, both against storms and an enemy. It is 56 miles N. by E. of Boston. Pop. 7887. Long. 70. 45. W. lat. 43. 5. N.

PORTSMOUTH, a town of Virginia, in Norfolk county, on the W. side of Elizabeth river, opposite Norfolk, from which it is one mile distant. It is 107 miles S.E. of Richmond. It is connected with Charleston by railroads. Pop. 65,000.

PORTSMOUTH, a town of Ohio, capital of Scioto county, on the E. side of the Scioto, at its confluence with the Ohio. It has a court-house, and is the depôt for the merchandise of the settlements of the upper parts of the Scioto. It is 60 miles S. of Chillicothe. Pop. 1500. Long. 83. 8. W. lat. 38. 22. N.

PORTSOY, a seaport of Scotland, in Banffshire. The vicinity is celebrated for its minerals, especially for a fine vein of serpentine, called Portsoy marble; a species of asbestos, of a greenish colour, which has been wrought into an incombustible cloth; and a brilliant kind of granite, of a flesh colour. Portsoy stands on a point of land projecting into Moray frith. It is 9 miles N.W. of Banff.

PORTUGAL, the most western country on the continent of Europe, bounded on the W. and S. by the Atlantic ocean, and E. and N. by Spain. It extends from 36. 56. to 42. 20. N. lat., and from 6. 25. to 9. 30. W. long. Its area and population are as follows:—

Though Spain and Portugal are in the same climate, yet the air of the latter is much more temperate than that of the former, on account of the neighbourhood of the sea. Agriculture is in a very backward state; the implements of industry are of the rudest construction, and very little corn is raised. Indian corn, imported from Africa, is used by the peasants instead of wheat. Olives, vineyards, oranges, lemons, nuts, almonds, figs, and raisins are plentiful, and in the low grounds rice and maize are cultivated. The inhabitants also make considerable quantities of salt with the sea water, especially in the bay of St. Ubes, whence a great deal is exported. Their export trade consists of the produce of their own country, and the merchandise which they receive from their foreign possessions, comprising Madeira, Cape Verd islands, some settlements in Africa, Goa, and Macao; the latter consists of wine, sugar, tobacco, cotton, indigo, hides, and many excellent drugs. The horses of Portugal were formerly in great esteem; but they are now so fond of mules, that horses are scarce. Towards the frontiers of Spain there are mountains, in which gold and silver were formerly found; and the river Tago was anciently celebrated by the poets for its golden sands. There are also mines of iron, tin, lead, quarries of marble, and some precious stones. The Portuguese are indolent, luxurious, and debased. Plays and church festivals, bull-fights, balls, music, &c., engross the whole attention of those who are not compelled to labour for their subsistence. The peasants are in a state of vassalage, and subsist on the hardest fare. In many respects they bear a striking resemblance to the Highlanders of Scotland. The principal rivers are the Tago, Douro, Guadiano, Mondego, and Caldas. The government is a limited monarchy. Formerly it had its cortes or representative body, but, from 1697 to the recent revolution they were never assembled. The religion is the Roman Catholic; and there are two archbishops, and 13 bishops. Portugal appears to have been known at an early period to the Phœnicians and Carthaginians. It subsequently followed the fortune of Spain, and, after being the scene of various military operations, was finally reduced and constituted a Roman province, under Augustus. The Romans were succeeded by the Goths and other barbarians. The Saracens, or Moors, invaded the peninsula from Africa, and, after the battle of Xeres, A.D. 712, set up several kingdoms, and were not expelled from Portugal till the 13th century. In 1092, Alphonso VI., king of Castile and Leon, made Henry of Burgundy, grandson of Robert king of France, count of Portugal, as a reward for assisting him against the Moors. Alphonso, son of Henry, was the first king. The last of his descendants by the male line dying in 1580, Philip II. of Spain took possession of the throne in right of his mother. The rapacity of the Spanish viceroys was so great, that in 1640 the Portuguese revolted, and made John IV., duke of Braganza, king. His successors were, 1656, Pedro II.; 1706, John V.; 1750, Joseph; 1777, Pedro III.; 1786, Mary, daughter of Joseph; and widow of Pedro III.; 1816, John VI.; 1826, Pedro IV.; 1828, Miguel I. The family compact, or the agreement of France, Spain, and the Two Sicilies, Parma, and Placentia, to guarantee each others' dominions, was concluded in August 1761. The first effect of this confederacy was an attempt by France and Spain upon the independence of Portugal, and the Spaniards had not only passed the frontiers, but had actually taken several towns when, by the aid of Britain, they were repelled, and Portugal was delivered from apparently inevitable destruction. Upon the death of Pedro III., the mental faculties of his widow began to decline, and in 1799, her son assumed the reins of government, as regent. In 1807, the British fleet preserved the royal family from falling into the hands of Bonaparte, and conveyed them to Brazil. Portugal itself, also, after a long and severe contest, was delivered from the French yoke by English armies under the command of the duke of Wellington and other generals. The queen died at Rio Janeiro, March 20, 1816, in the 82d year of her age, and the prince regent became king. At the conclusion of the general peace, the people became discontented, partly through the degradation of the kingdom to the situation of a dependent colony, and partly through the maladministration of the regency. Plot after plot was formed, in which many officers of distinction were implicated, who as soon as they were detected, were removed, and replaced by British officers. This only served to increase the discontent both of the people and of the army, and to hasten a revolution. Everything having been previously arranged between the civil and military authorities, a new constitution was announced at Oporto, August 24, 1820; and in September a council of regency was formed at Lisbon, and letters issued to assemble the cortes. John VI., by a royal decree issued at Rio Janeiro, February, 1821, approved of the constitution, and leaving his eldest son, Don Pedro, as regent of Brazil, returned to Portugal, and took an oath to maintain the new constitution, July 4, 1821. On the 12th of October, 1822, the Brazilians proclaimed the prince regent constitutional emperor of Brazil, and the independence of that empire has been since acknowledged by the court of Lisbon. On the 30th of April, 1824, Don Miguel, the king's youngest son, general of the army, surrounded with guards the palace of his father, in order to depose him, and to make his nephew regent. The foreign ambassadors discountenanced the conspiracy; the king took refuge on board an English man-of-war; under the protection of Britain he resumed the government, and Don Miguel left the kingdom. John VI. died in March, 1826. As soon as Pedro IV. heard of his father's death, he declared his determination to remain in Brazil, and to abdicate the throne of Portugal in favour of his daughter Donna Maria da Gloria (who was born in 1819), on condition that his brother Don Miguel should marry her, and that a free constitution should be adopted as contained in a charter which he sent over from Brazil. The acceptance of this charter was resisted by the ultra-royalist faction at Lisbon, and a rebellion took place under the direction of the Marquis of Chaves. In consequence of the invasion of the kingdom by the rebels, who had mustered their armies in Spain, the sister of Pedro IV., who had by him been appointed regent, claimed the assistance of George IV., who, in compliance with ancient treaties between the two kingdoms, sent an army to Lisbon in 1827, which checked the rebellion. Don Miguel, who resided at Vienna, returned to Lisbon in the spring of 1828, having first visited Paris and London, at both which places he professed his determination to adhere to the constitution. The English army then retired on board their fleet, having performed all that was required of them by the treaties between the two kingdoms. The professions of Don Miguel soon appeared to be insincere, and on the 30th of June he assumed the title of king of Portugal and Algarve. A weak resistance was made by the garrison and inhabitants of Oporto, but it was soon overcome. He was obliged to relinquish his sovereignty by the troops of his brother Don Pedro, late emperor of Brazil, who, before his death, succeeded in placing his daughter, the infanta, Donna Maria, on the throne. She was succeeded in 1853 by her son, Don Pedro V., whose early death, on November 11, 1861, at the age of twenty-four, evoked much regret. He is succeeded by his brother, Don Ferdinand II., born October 31, 1838. Lisbon is the capital.

PORTUMNA, a town of Ireland, county Galway. It is a great thoroughfare, and is rather irregularly built; it is 99 miles from Dublin.

POSEGA, a town of Slavonia; capital of a palatinate of the same name. It was taken from the Turks by the Austrians, in 1687. It is seated near the Orlava; 18 miles N.N.W. of Brod.

POSEN, GRAND DUCHY OF, a province of the Prussian states, comprising that part of Poland which was restored to Prussia in 1815. On the E. it is bounded by the new kingdom of Poland, and S. and W. by Silesia and Brandenburg. It is divided into the two governments of Posen and Bromberg, contains about 12,000 square miles, and is watered by the Netza, the Wartha, the Obra, and the Brahe. Pop. in 1837, 1,158,608.

POSEN, the capital of Prussian Poland, and of the government of the same name; is a bishop's see, and has a university, and a castle on an island on the river Warta. The cathedral is magnificent. The suburbs are extensive, and contain many fine buildings. The river Warta frequently inundates the town, but is very beneficial to its trade with Germany. By the partition of Poland, in 1773, Posen became subject to the king of Prussia. In 1806 it was entered by the French army, under Marshal Davoust, and added to the duchy of Warsaw, till 1815, when it was restored to Prussia. Railways connect it with Stettin, Königsberg, &c. Pop. in 1838, 32,456. Long. 17. 0. E. lat. 52. 24. N.

POSNECK, a town of Saxony, in the principality of Altenburg. It has manufactures of cloth and leather. It is seated on the Gams, near its conflux with the Orla; 8 miles N.E. of Snafeld.

POSSESSION ISLAND, an island in the S. Pacific, near the N. point of New Holland. Here Captain Cook hoisted the British colours, and took possession of all the E. or N.E. coast of New Holland, in the name of King George III., which he called New South Wales. Long. 141. 39. E. lat. 10. 33. S.

POSSESSION ISLAND, an uninhabited island in the South Pacific. Long. 141. 40. E. lat. 46. 30. S.

POSSINKO, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura; 10 miles N.E. of Santarém.

POTENZA, a town of Naples, in Basilicata; seated near the source of the Basiento; 11 miles S. by W. of Acerenza. Pop. 9000.

POTOMAC, a river of the United States, which rises in the N.W. part of Virginia, and separates that state from Maryland, almost its whole course, till it enters the W. side of Chesapeake bay. It is navigable for ships of the line for nearly 300 miles, to the navy yard at Washington. Above the navigation, it has numerous falls, some of which are obviated by canals and locks. At 60 miles above, the Shenandoah river joins it, and their passage through the Blue Ridge, is a magnificent curiosity.

POTOSI, a town of Bolivia, capital of a department of its name. Here are the best silver mines in all America, in a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf. Silver was as common in this place as iron is in Europe; but the mines are now much exhausted, or at least little is obtained in comparison of what was formerly. The country around is naked and barren. The town is seated at the bottom of the mountain of Potosi; 260 miles W.N.W. of Arica. Pop. 30,000. Long. 67. 30. W. lat. 19. 50. S.

POTOSI, SAN LUIS. See LUIS.

POTSDAM, a province of the Prussian states, in Brandenburg, comprehending the districts formerly termed the Ucker Mark, the Mark of Pregnitz, and the greatest part of the Middle Mark. It is bounded N. by Pomerania and W. Prussia, and S. and W. by Saxony. The city of Berlin, with a small district lying around it, forms a distinct government.

POTSDAM, the capital of the foregoing government, situated on an island formed by the rivers Spree and Havel. The public buildings display great magnificence and taste. The royal palace is an admirable structure; and the houses near it are almost all built in the Italian style. In the marketplace is a marble obelisk, 75 feet in height; also marble statues of the first four kings of Prussia. The garrison church is large, and has a marble pulpit, under which is the tomb of the Great Frederick, whose remains are enclosed in a wooden coffin covered with copper, without any ornament or victorious trophies, to recall the memory of his actions. On a hill, near the city, is the royal palace of Sans Souci, which is only one storey high, yet remarkable for its grandeur and magnificence. The inhabitants of Potsdam have manufactures of silk, velvet, cotton, linen, &c. It was entered without opposition on the 24th of October, 1805, by the French, who carried away with exultation the sword and scarf worn by the immortal Frederick during the seven years' war. It is 13 miles W.S.W. of Berlin, to which there is a railway. Pop. in 1837, 25,560. Long. 13. 49. E. lat. 52. 52. N.

POTTERIES, THE, a district in Staffordshire, extending about 10 miles in length, and one and a half in breadth. It comprises the towns and villages of Burslem, Hanley, Lane End, Etruria, Stoke-upon-Trent, Tunstall, Longport, Shelton, Brownhills, &c., situated in a part of the country abounding in coal, and clays of great variety in colour and texture, which, together with the great canal intercourses kept up with all parts of the kingdom, furnish a large portion of industry and wealth.

POTTON, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Saturday; 12 miles E. of Bedford, and 48 N. by W. of London.

POTTSGROVE, a town of Pennsylvania, on the Schuylkill; 35 miles N.W. of Philadelphia.

POUGHKEEPSIE, a town of New York, capital of Dutchess county. It is one of the most pleasant and wealthy villages on the Hudson, and has considerable manufacturing establishments. The convention met here in 1788, which adopted the constitution of the United States. Pop. 10,005. It is situated on the E. side of the Hudson; 74 miles N. of New York.

POUGUES, a village of France, department of Nièvre; noted for its ferruginous mineral spring. It is five miles N.W. of Nevres.

POULTON, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Monday. It is much frequented in the bathing season, and the population is increasing; the parish church is a plain and commodious edifice, erected in 1751, on the site of the old edifice, which had stood nearly 700 years. Here are four places of worship for dissenters, with various schools. It is 18 miles S.W. of Lancaster, to which there is a railway, and 234 N.N.W. of London.

POURÇAYN, ST., a town of France, department of Allier, seated on the Sioule; 19 miles S. by W. of Moulins. Pop. 3000.

POYANG-HOU, a lake of China, in the N. part of the province of Kiang-si; formed by the confluence of several rivers, which meet here from every point of the compass. It is 250 miles in circumference.

POYNTON, a chapelry in the parish of Prestbury, Cheshire, 5 miles S.S.E. of Stockport. Pop. in 1851, 1247.

PRACILAS, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; 7 miles W. of Turin.

PRAGUE, the capital of Bohemia, and formerly an archiepiscopal see. It comprehends four towns, the Old, New, and Little town, and the Hradschin. It is 15 miles in circumference, is built upon seven hills, and contains 85,000 inhabitants. The Muldau runs through the city, separating the Old town from the New; and over it is a bridge of 18 arches, with a strong tower at each end. The old town is very populous; the houses are high, and the streets narrow. In this part are the remains of a palace, where the ancient kings resided; but the finest ornament is the university, frequented by a great number of students; here also is a magnificent college, formerly belonging to the Jesuits; and the Jews have nine synagogues, and are about 7000 in number. The New town contains fine structures, handsome gardens, and large streets; also an arsenal, and a secular foundation, whose abbess was a princess of the empire. The Little town, which is the most ancient part of Prague, has broad streets, and is very populous. The Hradschin once belonged to the Little town, but in 1756, it was made the fourth town of Prague. Its principal buildings are the royal palace, in which is a hall, 100 paces long, and 40 broad, without any pillar to support the roof; the cathedral of St. Veit, containing the burial place of the kings, and many relics; the chapel of our Lady of Loretto; the magnificent archiepiscopal palace; and the large palace of Tschernin. Prague has suffered frequent devastations by war. The White mountain, without the gate of Strahow, is celebrated for the victory gained in 1620, by the Austrians, over Frederic V., the elector palatine, whom the Bohemians had chosen for their king. In 1631 Prague was taken by the Saxons; and by the Swedes in 1648. It was taken by storm in 1741 by the French, who were obliged to leave it in 1742. In 1757 it was besieged by the king of Prussia after a great victory, but was obliged to raise the siege. It is 75 miles, or 118 by railway, S.E. of Dresden, and 250 miles by railway from Vienna. Its castle, a noble Gothic structure, was burnt down in the commencement of the present century. This town was declared by a royal decree of 1536 the capital of Hungary, on account of its vicinity to Vienna, and the sovereigns are still crowned in its cathedral; but the principal officers of government reside at Buda, and the diets and supreme courts of judicature meet at Pesth. In Dec., 1805, a treaty of peace was concluded here between Austria and France; 38 miles E. by S. of Vienna, and 95 W.N.W. of Pesth, on the railway connecting these places.

PRESCOT, a town in Lancashire, with markets on Tuesday and Saturday. It is a long straggling town, and may be said to be almost built over coal-pits, several being worked close to its extremities. The parish church is a spacious edifice, dedicated to St. Mary. In the chancel is a large upright figure of John Ogle, one of the captains who defended Lathom House. The dissenters have places of worship, with various schools; and here is a free-school, established at an early period by the township. At the east entrance of the town are several almshouses, erected in 1708, by Oliver Lyme. It is estimated that 2000 persons are employed in the collieries of Prescott, whence Liverpool is chiefly supplied with fuel by the railway, which passes about a mile from this town. Here are manufactures of watch-movements, pinion wire, small files, and coarse earthenware, and also some manufactories of cotton, hats, &c.; 8 miles E. of Liverpool, and 197 N.N.W. of London.

PRESTON, a borough in Lancashire, governed by a mayor; with markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. It returns two members to parliament. Here is a court of chancery, with other offices of justice, for the county palatine of Lancaster. The chief manufactures are the various branches of cotton and muslin, which are now carried on to a considerable extent. Here are thirteen churches, two catholic chapels, eight meeting-houses for dissenters, and several schools, and other charitable institutions. It is noted for the defeat of the Pretender's adherents in 1715, when most of them were made prisoners; also for a kind of public carnival, or jubilee, held every 20 years, the last of which was in 1842. It is connected with other parts of the county, and the kingdom generally, by means of the North Union, the Lancaster and Preston railway, the Preston and Longridge, the Bolton and Preston, and the Preston and Wyre railways. From this extensive chain of railways, the town has rapidly risen in wealth and importance. It is seated near the Ribble and the Lancaster canal; 22 miles S.E. of Lancaster, and 217 N.N.W. of London.

PRESTONPANS, a town of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire, with a safe harbour, called Morrison's haven, on the frith of Forth. It has manufactures of salt, and a considerable oyster fishery. At this place the royal army was defeated by the Pretender's adherents in 1745; 8 miles E. of Edinburgh.

PRUSSIA, a large and important kingdom of Europe, occupying a great part of the N. of Germany, and extending, with little interruption, from the confines of Russia to those of Belgium and the Netherlands. It is a very fertile country, producing a great deal of flax, hemp, and corn. There are a great number of domestic animals; and the sea, the rivers, and lakes, supply abundance of fish. One of the most remarkable productions of this country is amber, which is found along the seacoast. There are two large lakes, besides the rivers Vistula and Pregol. In the 13th century, Prussia belonged to the knights of the Teutonic order. In 1454, that part since denominated Polish, or West Prussia, revolted to Casimir IV., king of Poland, and was incorporated into the dominions of the republic. At the same time, the knights were constrained to hold the remaining part, called Ducal, or East Prussia, as a fief of the crown of Poland. In 1525 Albert, the grand master, betrayed the interests of his fraternity, and concluded a treaty with Sigismund, king of Poland, by which East Prussia was erected into an hereditary duchy, and given him as a Polish fief. Having adopted the tenets of Luther, he married a princess of Denmark, and transmitted this rich inheritance to his descendants; one of whom, Frederic William, was the duke that threw off his dependence on Poland. The foundation of the Prussian monarchy was established by him, between 1640 and 1688. His son and successor, Frederic, in 1701, assumed the title of King of Prussia, which was soon after acknowledged by all the Christian powers, except Poland, which did not acknowledge it till 1764. In 1742, Frederic II. acquired the duchy of Silesia from the house of Austria; and by his wonderful victories, and the still more wonderful resources by which he repaired occasional defeats, he became the admiration of the age. In 1772 he compelled the Poles to cede to him Western Prussia, excepting the cities of Dantzic and Thorn. He cultivated the arts of peace as well as war, distinguishing himself as a poet, philosopher, and legislator, and expending large sums in the improvement of the country. He was succeeded by his nephew, Frederic William II., in 1786, who forcibly annexed to his kingdom Dantzic and Thorn, with several considerable provinces, which he styled Southern Prussia. He had also a share in the general contest against France, in the early part of the revolution; but made peace with that country in April, 1795; and died at Berlin in 1797. His son, Frederic William III., continued on amicable terms with France, till the dissolution of the Germanic body in 1806, and the consequent formation of the Confederation of the Rhine; when, thinking himself aggrieved, he declared war against France. This war was of short duration, but of most disastrous consequences to Prussia. By the peace of Tilsit, the whole of the Polish dominions belonging to Prussia, with a few exceptions noticed under the article Poland, were transferred to another prince; and the king of Prussia had further to renounce his right to all the territories, without exception, situated between the Elbe and the Rhine; to those belonging to Saxony and the house of Anhalt on the right bank of the Elbe; and, lastly, to the circle of Rothau, in Lower Lusatia, which was ceded to Saxony. Thus was Prussia reduced to the lowest rank among the powers of Europe; an event solely owing to her acquiescence in the projects and policy of France against Austria, and her absurd system of neutrality during those great political contests, by which she hoped to raise herself to the rank of the first power in Germany, while she was in fact degraded to a situation among the weakest of the weak. On the memorable retreat of the French armies from Russia, and the arrival of the Russians within the territories of Prussia, she, however, threw off her alliance with France, joined Russia, and made such signal efforts to retrieve her character, that, on the conclusion of the war, all the countries wrested from her by the treaty of Tilsit, were restored. In 1845-6, in common with the rest of Europe, Prussia was seized with a desire of change, which resulted in a new constitution being granted by the king, February 3rd, 1847, calling the eight provincial diets into one united diet, now forming, with the kingly power, and an estate of nobles, the national government. The diet was opened, with great pomp, on April 11th, 1847.

miles long, and 12 broad, lying at the entrance of the bay of Guayaquil. It has an Indian town, of the same name, on its S. side. It is 115 miles N. of Paita.

PUNHETE, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, at the conflux of the Zezere with the Tajo; 6 miles N.W. of Abrantes.

PUNJAB, or PUNJAB, a territory on the N.W. frontier of India, comprised between the Indus, on the W., and Sutlej river, on the E. Its name signifies "the country of five waters," from the number of the rivers which intersect it, and which all fall into the Indus. It is the country of the Sikhs, an extraordinary sect of India, combining the principles of Hindooism and Mohammedanism. It was founded in the 15th century, and first became powerful in the last century, when they favoured the Mahrattas; but, on the downfall of that nation, their sacred city, Umritzir, was entirely destroyed; they however quickly recovered, and Runjeet Singh, one of their governors, took possession of the whole kingdom of Lahore, or the Punjab, which he retained until his death, and was succeeded by his son, who was soon deposed in favour of his grandson who was unpopular. Lahore is the capital. As a frontier country, this is of great importance, as it is the only side from which it can be menaced with invasion; and, were the Russians to advance to the Indus, their success would depend chiefly on their having the Sikhs for enemies or allies; and to the British it is doubly important, as it lies between their territory and that of their new ally, in Cabul. By the results of the recent warfare in this country, the Punjab has become a British province (1849).

PUNTA DEL GADA, the capital of St. Michael, one of the Azores, with a strong castle. It is situate on the S. side, and contains 10,000 inhabitants. The streets are regular and of convenient width; and the churches, religious houses, and public edifices, may be deemed elegant. There is no harbour in the vicinity of the town, and vessels usually anchor at a distance from the shore, in an open road. Long. 25. 42. W. lat. 37. 47. N.

PUNTA DE PIEDRA, once a mere fishing hamlet, but now a considerable town in the republic of Venezuela, in the province of Cumana. It is seated on a platform commanding the sea, on a fine plain, and in a district of prodigious fertility. At the extremity of the plain opens the beautiful and fertile valley of Yagunaparraro, in which are plantations of coffee and cocoa; for the growth of the latter both the soil and climate are particularly adapted. The valleys and the banks of the rivers of this district abound in logwood and Brazil wood.

PURBECK, ISLE OF, a rough and heathy tract in Dorsetshire, to the S. of Poole bay. It is insulated by the sea and rivers, and is famous for its stone quarries, the principal part of which lie at its eastern extremity, near Swanage, whence the stone is exported; it is of the calcareous kind, but distinguished into numerous sorts, the finest of which deserves the name of marble, and is used for chimney-pieces, hearths, &c.; while the coarser kinds are made use of in paving. Tobacco-pipe clay is dug up in several parts of the island, the finest near Corfe castle, of which much is exported, particularly for the Staffordshire potteries.

PURCHENA, a town of Spain, in the province of Granada; 70 miles E. of Granada. Long. 2. 25. W. lat. 37. 19. N.

PURFLEET, a village in Essex, situate on the Thames, 4 miles W. of Gray's Thurrock. It has extensive lime-works, and a large magazine for gunpowder.

PURIFICACION, a town of Mexico, in the province of Xalisco, 90 miles S. by E. of Compostella. Long. 105. 30. W. lat. 19. 58. N.

PURMEREND, a strong town of the Netherlands, in N. Holland. It is 10 miles N. by E. of Amsterdam.

PURNEAN, a town of Bengal, capital of a fertile and populous district of its name, seated on the Seraw; 125 miles N.N.W. of Moorshedabad.

PUSCHIAVO, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, 3 miles N. from a lake to which it gives name. It is 17 miles W.S.W. of Bormio, and 20 E. of Chiavenna.

PUTALA, or PATELI, a mountain of Tibet, near the banks of the Burrampooter; 7 miles E. of Lassa. On its summit is the palace of the grand lama, the high priest of Tibet.

PUTLITZ, a town of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg, with an old castle; 11 miles N.N.E. of Perleberg.

PUTNAM, a county in New York, capital, Carmel. Pop. in 1845, 13,258.—Also in Georgia, capital, Eatonton, Pop. 10,260.—Also in Ohio, capital, Kaidia, Pop. 5189.—Also in Indiana, capital, Greencastle, Pop. 16,842.—Also in Illinois, capital, Hennepin. Pop. 2131.

PUTNEY, a village in Surrey, seated on the Thames, over which is a wooden bridge; 4 miles W.S.W. of London. It was the birth-place of Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, whose father was a blacksmith; and of Nicholas West, bishop of Ely, his contemporary, a great statesman, whose father was a baker; and of Gibbon the Roman historian.

PUTTAN SOMNAUTH, or PUTTAN, a town of Hindostan, near the southern extremity of the Guzerat peninsula. Somnauth is one of the twelve images of Seeb, which are said to have descended from heaven to earth; and the great fame of its temple attracted the avidity, while it stimulated the bigotry of Sultan Mahmood, of Ghizni. According to Mohammedan authors, the image was destroyed, but the Hindoos assert that the god retired into the ocean. The symbol placed in the temple is deemed peculiarly propitious to those who desire offspring. It was visited by pilgrims from every quarter, who paid a trifling duty to the nabob for permission to perform the shrine. They have used State, in 18 pilgrimage 95 miles S. lat. 21. 2. N.

PUYLE, a city of France, capital of the department of Upper Loire, and a bishop's see. The cathedral is famous for a prodigious quantity of relics; and Our Lady of Pay is celebrated in the annals of superstition. Pay has manufactures of blankets, linen, lace, silk stuffs, and stoneware. It is seated on the mountain Anis, near the river Loire; 45 miles N.E. of Mende, and 65 S.E. of Clermont. Pop. in 1836, 14,738. Long. 3. 58. E. lat. 45. 58. N.

PUY DE DOME, a department of France, containing part of the former province of Auvergne. It has its name from a mountain, situate to the W. of Clermont, the capital of the department. Pop. 566,000.

PUY EN ANJOU, a town in the department of Maine-et-Loire. It is 10 miles S.S.W. of Saumur.

PUYERDA, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, capital of the county of Cerdagna; seated at the foot of the Pyrenees, near the source of the Segra; 48 miles W. by S. of Perpignan, and 78 N. by W. of Barcelona. It was taken by the French in 1794. Long. 1. 50. E. lat. 42. 36. N.

PUYLAURENS, a town of France, department of Tarn; 28 miles S. by W. of Alby.

PUZZOLI, or POZZUOLO, a celebrated, but now inconsiderable city of Italy, on the bay of Naples. Here are the remains of the temple of Jupiter Serapis, an interesting monument of antiquity, being different from the Roman and Greek temples, and built in the manner of the Asiatics; probably by the Egyptian and Asiatic merchants settled at Puzzuoli, which was the great emporium of Italy, till the Romans built Ostia and Antium. It has been converted into a christian cathedral, and so much modern work added, that at present only the front of the ancient edifice is visible. Many other remains of temples, amphitheatres, and other public buildings in this city, afford convincing proofs of its former magnificence. The ruins of Cicero's villa, near this place, are of such extent as to give a high idea of the wealth of that great orator. It is 9 miles W. of Naples.

PYRAMIDS, a range of ancient and stupendous Egyptian monuments, extending northward from Cairo for about 20 leagues; but on the opposite side of the river.

PYRNAUM, a town of Bavaria, capital of a lordship of its name; situate on the frontiers of Franconia; 13 miles S.E. of Nuremberg.

PYRENEES, a range of mountains which divides France from Spain, and the most celebrated in Europe, except the Alps. They reach from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, about 212 miles in length, and have different names, according to their different situations. The passages over them are not so difficult as those of the Alps. One of the most frequented is that from Pampeluna to St. Jean de Pied de Fort, by which the French under Soult marched to attack the British before Pampeluna, in July 1813. These mountains contain iron, copper, lead, silver, gold, cobalt, and zinc; they also furnish great quantities of timber, for ship-building, and an abundance of pitch and tar. The highest summits are Nethon, 12,424 feet, Mont Perdu, 11,168 feet, and Pic du Midi, 9544 feet; at the height of 7200 feet, snow is perpetual. See PEROU, MONT.

PYRENEES, ORIENTALES, a department of France, containing the provinces of Roussillon, Cerdagne, and part of Languedoc. Its area is estimated at 1650 square miles, and the population in 1836 at 157,052. Although great part of the country is mountainous, yet it is fertile in corn, excellent wine, olives, oranges, &c. Perpignan is the capital.

PYRENEES, BASSES, a department of France, comprehending the provinces of Bearn and Navarre. The principal products are corn, wine, flax, chestnuts and other fruits; the manufactures woolleu, linen, leather, and recently cotton. The province contains an area of about 3000 square miles, with 428,400 inhabitants, in 1836. Pau is the capital.

PYRENEES, HAUTES, a department of France, including the province of Bigorre, and comprising an area of 1800 square miles, with 233,031 inhabitants in 1836. Here are excellent horses, and good partridges. The valleys are very fertile, furnishing rye, millet, Spanish corn, and flax. The mountains have mines of lead, iron, and copper, and quarries of slate, marble, and jasper. Tarbes is the capital.

PYRMONT, a town of the N.W. part of Germany, capital of a small district of the same name, belonging to the prince of Waldeck. Near it are mineral waters, well known to all Europe, and frequented by persons of the highest rank. It is seated in a delightful valley, between high mountains, 38 miles S.W. of Hanover. Pop. 2000. Long. 9. 20. E. lat. 51. 57. N.

PYSTEIN, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Passau, insulated in Austria. It is 10 miles N.W. of Linz, and 22 E. of Passau.

QUACKENBRUCK, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Osnaburg, seated on the Hase; 28 miles N. of Osnaburg.

QUADRA and VANCOUVER'S ISLAND, an island on the N.W. coast of America, on the S.W. side of which is Nootka sound. It was so named by Captain Vancouver, in compliment to Senor Quadra, the Spanish commandant at Nootka. It is about 300 miles in length, and 80 in its greatest breadth, and is now a British colony (1851), under the Hudson's Bay Co. The capital is Victoria. The island seems capable of producing all the agricultural articles of Europe; and at its north end are some valuable coal deposits. It is now only called Vancouver's Island.

QUANG-SI, an inland province in the S. of China. It produces plenty of rice, being watered by several large rivers. The southern part is a flat country, and well cultivated; but the northern is full of mountains, covered with trees. It contains mines of all sorts, and particularly a gold mine. Here is a tree called quang-lang, the pith of which is made into bread; and a small species of insect, which produces white wax. Quei-ling is the capital.

QUANG-TONG, a province of China, bounded on the E. by Kiang-si and Fo-kien, on the S. by the ocean, and on the W. by Tonquin. It is diversified by valleys and mountains, and yields two crops of corn in a year. The northern frontier consists of a range of lofty mountains which abound in gold, jewels, tin, quicksilver, copper, and iron; ebony, and several sorts of odoriferous wood are produced in this province, as well as various sorts of fruit. There is a species of lemon as large as a man's head; and another sort which grows out at the trunk of the tree, whose rind is very hard, and contains a great number of little cells, full of an excellent yellow pulp. A prodigious number of ducks are bred in this province, their eggs being hatched in ovens. The mountains are covered with a kind of osiers, which creep along the ground, and are so tough that they make baskets, hurdles, mats, and even ropes of them. Here is also a tree, the timber of which is remarkably hard and heavy, and is thence called ironwood. Canton is the capital, but the viceroy resides at Chao-king.

QUANGTONG, a town on the N. borders of Birmah; in the province of Ava, with a fort, seated on the Irrawaddy; 150 miles N.N.E. of Ummerapoora.

QUARITZ, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Leignitz; 10 miles W.S.W. of Glogau.

QUARRE, a town of France, department of Yonne; 6 miles S. of Avallon.

QUARTO, two towns of Naples, in Capitanata; the one 6 miles W. and the other 12 S.W. of Salpes.

QUAHTEN, a town of Switzerland, near Wallenstadt lake; 5 miles E. of Glaris.

QUATRE BRAS, a hamlet of the Netherlands; which was the scene of an obstinate conflict between the British and the French, on the 16th of June, 1815.

QUEAUX, a town of France, department of Vienne; 21 miles S.E. of Poitiers.

QUEBEC, the capital of Canada, and of British America, is situated at the confluence of the rivers St. Lawrence and St. Charles, (or the Little river,) about 320 miles from the sea. It is built on a rock, which is partly of marble and partly of slate, and is divided into Upper and Lower. Near it is a fine lead mine. At the time it was founded on the site of the Indian village of Hochelaga, in 1608, the tide, it is said, reached the foot of the rock; but since that period, this river has sunk so far that a large spot of ground is left dry, and on this an extensive suburb is built, styled the Lower town, which stands at the foot of a rocky precipice, about 48 feet in height, and is chiefly inhabited by merchants. The houses in both towns are of stone, strong and well built. The fortifications are extensive, but irregular. The natural situation of the town renders its defence easy. If attacked by ships from the river, their guns cannot injure the works of the Upper town, though the ships themselves would be liable to great injury from the cannon and bombs from these elevated ramparts. The Lower town is defended by a platform, flanked with two bastions, which, at high water and spring tides, are almost level with the surface of the water. A little above the bastion, to the right, is a half bastion, cut out of the rock; a little higher, a large battery, and higher still, a square fort, the most regular of all the fortifications, and in which the governor resides. The passages which form a communication between these rocks are extremely rugged. The rock which separates the Upper from the Lower town extends, with a bold and steep front, a considerable distance W. along the river St. Lawrence. The Lower town is well supplied with water, which is sometimes scarce in the Upper town. This city was erected by the French in 1608; the English reduced it, with all Canada in 1629, but it was restored in 1632. In 1711 it was besieged by the English, without success; in 1759 it was again conquered, after a battle memorable for the death of General Wolfe in the moment of victory, and was confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. In 1775 it was attacked by QUEDLINBURG, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt, with a castle. The river Bode divides it into the Old and New Town. It has a trade in brandy and linen. It is 10 miles S. by E. of Halberstadt. Long. 11. 10. E. lat. 51. 50. N. Pop. in 1838, 12,903.

QUEEN ANN, a town of Maryland, in Prince George county, situated at the foot of a hill, on the Patuxent; 13 miles S.W. of Annapolis, and 22 E. of Washington. Pop. 12,633.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLAND, an island in the South Pacific, 6 miles long and 1 broad; discovered by Captain Wallis in 1767. Long. 138. 4. W. lat. 19. 18. S.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS, a group of islands in the North Pacific, explored by Captain Carteret in 1767. The most considerable he named Egmont, but the Spaniards call it Santa Cruz. It is 60 miles long, and from 20 to 30 broad, woody and mountainous, with many valleys intermixed. The inhabitants are very nimble, vigorous, and active; and their weapons are bows and arrows pointed with flint. On the N. side is a harbour named Swallow bay. Long. 164. 26. E. lat. 10. 42. S.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE SOUND, a sound at the N. extremity of the S. island of New Zealand, near Cook strait. Long. 174. 14. E. lat. 41. 6. S.

QUEENBOROUGH, a town in Kent, in the Isle of Sheppey; market on Monday. It had once a strong castle, remains of which are still to be seen. The town is seated near the mouth of the Medway; 20 miles N.W. of Canterbury, and 45 S. by E. of London. Long. 0. 49. E. lat. 51. 23. N.

QUEENBOROUGH, a town of S. Carolina, on the W. side of the Great Pedee river; 32 miles N.N.W. of Georgetown.

QUEEN'S COUNTY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 30 miles long, and 29 broad; bounded on the N. by King's county, E. by Kildare, S.E. by Carlow, S. by Kilkenny, and W. by Tipperary and King's county. It is divided into nine baronies and 50 parishes, and sends two members to parliament, and one for the borough of Portarlington. It was formerly full of woods and bogs, but is now much improved in cultivation. Maryborough is the capital.

QUEEN'S COUNTY, a county of New York, in the W. part of Long Island. Pop. in 1845, 31,849. North Hempstead is the chief town.

QUEENSFERRY, SOUTH, a burgh of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, seated on the frith of Forth, where it is not more than 2 miles wide. It has a trade in soap, and a much frequented ferry. In conjunction with Stirling, &c., it sends one member to parliament. It is 9 miles W.N.W. of Edinburgh.

QUEENSLAND, formerly called Moreton Bay, a colony of Australia—capital, Brisbane—on the north-east side, between the parallels of 11° and 30° S., without any definite boundary on the west. It is a mountainous, well-watered country, with several navigable rivers. The climate is said to be very healthy, and suitable for Europeans. The soil is fertile, and is adapted specially to the growth of cotton of the finest quality, as well as of wheat and corn generally. The quality and abundance of the vegetation also are very favourable to sheep-farming. Hence the colony offers great inducements to emigrants, and is likely to become a flourishing province.

QUEENSTOWN, a town of Upper Canada, on the river Niagara, just below the last rapid. Here, for a distance of 10 miles, the falls and broken course of the river render the navigation impracticable. 7 miles above Fort Niagara, and 20 N. by E. of Fort Erie.

QUE-LING, a city of China, capital of the province of Quang-si. It has its name from a flower called quai, which grows on a tree resembling a laurel, and emits such a sweet odour, that it perfumes the whole country. It stands on a river that runs into the Ta, but with such rapidity as not to be navigable. It is 180 miles N. by W. of Canton, and 587 S. of Peking. Long. 109. 51. E. lat. 25. 12. N.

QUELPAERT, an island in the Yellow sea, off the N.E. coast of China, the southernmost and largest of the Korean Archipelago, and subject to Korea, of which it is supposed to be a penal colony. The island had not been visited by Europeans until it was surveyed by Captain Belcher in 1845. The highest peak of the island is 6544 feet high, and the capital, Quelpaert, is fortified, and on the N. side of the island.

QUENTIN, ST., a strong town of France, department of Aisne, with formerly a considerable manufacture of lawns and cambrics; also gauze, linen, and thread, but which branches of industry have been supplanted by the cotton manufacture. It is seated on an eminence on the river Somme; 21 miles S. of Cambrai, and 83 N. by E. of Paris. Long. 3. 17. E., lat. 49. 51. N.

QUENCH, a province of France, now forming the department of Lot.

QUERETARO, a city of North America, republic of Mexico, elevated 6347 feet above the sea. It has a magnificent church, and several grand squares, and is a busy, manufacturing town. Pop. 45,000. It is 95 miles N.W. of Mexico.

QUERFORT, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseberg, formerly the capital of a principality of its name, with a castle; 14 miles W. of Merseberg. Long. 11. 50. E. lat. 51. 23. N.

QUERIMBA, a cluster of small islands on the coast of Mosambique, fertile in fruits and pastures. The principal one, of the same name, is in long 41. 30. E. lat. 11. 40. S.

QUESNOY, a fortified town of France, department of Nord, with an old castle. In 1793 it was taken by the Austrians, but retaken the next year. It is seated on an extensive plain, on the rivulet Ronelle. It is 9 miles S.E. of Valenciennes, and 122 N.E. of Paris. Long. 3. 40. E. lat. 50. 15. N.

QUEZALTENANGO, a town of Guatemala, or Central America. Pop. about 14,000. It has some woollen and cotton manufactures. In its neighbourhood is a volcano, and a hot spring, the waters of which are thrown out, forming a jet d'eau, rising to the height of 20 or 30 feet.

QUERON, a town in the department of Morbihan, with a fort, situate at the extremity of a peninsula, to the N. of Belleisle. In 1795 it was taken by some French royalists in the pay of Great Britain; but, owing to the desertion and treachery of some of the soldiers, the republicans soon took it by surprise. It was taken by the English in 1800, but evacuated soon afterwards; 17 miles S.S.E. of l'ort Louis. Pop. 2000.

QUICARO, an island in the Pacific ocean; near the coast of Veragua; about 20 miles long, and 6 broad. Long. 82. 39. W. lat. 7. 50. N.

QUILIMANCY, a seaport of Zanguebar, in the kingdom of Melinda. It stands at the mouth of a river of the same name; 26 miles S.S.W. of Melinda. Long. 41. 40. E. lat. 3. 10. S.

QUILLEBEUF, a town in the department of Eure, seated on the Seine; 37 miles W. of Rouen, and 42 N.W. of Evreux.

QUILLOTA, a city of Chili, South America. It lies in a valley, 20 miles from the Pacific ocean, to the N.E. of Valparaiso. It is three leagues in circumference and contains several churches. Almost every house has a vineyard attached to it. It stands on the river Concon or Aconegua and has a population of 10,000 inhabitants.

QUILOA, a seaport of Zanguebar, capital of a kingdom of the same name, with a small citadel. This country was for some time in the possession of the Portuguese, from whom it was wrested by the imam of Mascat. It produces abundance of rice, millet, fruits, cattle and pontry. The inhabitants are Mohammedans, partly black, and partly tawny. The capital is well built, and stands on an island at the mouth of the river Coava. Long. 40. 0. E. lat. 8. 33. S.

QUIMPER, CORENTIN, a city of France, capital of the department of Finisterre, and a bishop's see. It is seated at the conflux of the Oder and Bonnetlet; 34 miles S.S.E. of Brest, and 112 W. by S. of Rennes. Pop. in 1836, 9715. Long. 4. 6. W. lat. 47. 58. N.

QUIMPERLE, a town in the department of Finisterre, seated on the Isolle; 30 miles E. S.E. of Quimper. Pop. 4200.

QUINCY, a town of Massachusetts, in Norfolk county; 10 miles S. by E. of Boston. It contains an inexhaustible supply of excellent granite which is much quarried. Pop. in 1840, 3486.

QUINCY, a town of Illinois, capital of Adams county, on a bluff on the E. side of the Mississippi, 125 miles above the mouth of the Illinois. Pop. in 1840, about 1500.

QUISTELLO, a town of Austrian Italy, famous for an action between the French and Austrians in 1734, when Marshal Broglio was surprised in his bed. It is seated on the Seezia; 15 miles S. of Mantua.

QUITO, a presidency of the republic of Colombia, forming part of the new state of Ecnador, lying between two chains of the high mountains called the Andes. The eastern governments are chiefly immense tracts, thinly scattered with missionary villages. The vegetable productions vary with the elevation of the ground. The campaign country produces abundant crops of maize; and the deep ravines, where the temperature is hot, produce sugar-cane. The elevated lands possess a colder climate, and produce wheat, barley, &c. Immense flocks of sheep are reared in the mountain plains, and their wool furnishes materials for the manufactures of this province. The lands are generally well cultivated, and there are a great number of towns and villages inhabited almost entirely by Indians. The streets are generally straight, and in the direction of the four cardinal points; and the roads are laid out in a line, crossing each other; so that the aspect of the country is that of a large garden. Although this country is situate on both sides the equator, yet it lies so high, and so near the snow-clad mountains, that the air is very temperate. There are no noxious animals; for the tigers and serpents are below in the forests. The soil has undergone since its delivery and the manufactures. Hats, cotton cloths, are made and exported to other parts. QUITO, the capital of the province of Pinelina, is seated on a high ground, 9500 feet above the sea. Having a fertile soil, it is chiefly supplied with cotton, wool, and fully supplied with the most delightful climate with the whole country of earthquakes. It has experienced the face of the whole of the most dreadful con-

Quito, the capital of the above country, is seated on the skirts of the volcanic mountain of Pinchincha, in a pleasant valley, but on high ground, 9510 feet above the level of the sea. Having no mines in its neighbourhood it is chiefly famous for its manufactures of cotton, wool, and flax. The town is plentifully supplied with water, and enjoys a delightful climate; but it is subject, together with the whole country, to the awful calamity of earthquakes. Of these a very destructive one was experienced in 1755. In 1797 the face of the whole district was changed by a most dreadful concussion, and 40,000 persons were in one moment hurled into eternity. Violent shocks of earthquakes have since been frequently experienced. It is, notwithstanding, very populous, and inhabited by several families of distinguished rank; 400 miles S.W. of St. Fé de Bogota. Pop. about 70,000. Long. 77. 55. W. lat. 0. 13. S.

RAMAGIRI, a town of Hindostan, in Mysore, seated on the W. side of the Arkawatti; with a strong fort on the opposite bank, on a large rocky hill, 50 miles N.E. of Seringapatam.

RAMGHUR, a district of British Hindostan, by far the largest under the Bengal presidency, occupying all the S. part of the province of Bahar; area 22,340 square miles. Pop. in 1832, 2,252,985. It lies between 22. and 25. N. lat. and 83. and 87. E. long.; a large proportion of its area is unproductive: iron, coal, lead, and antimony exist in the hilly region to the S. but they are not worked. There are many old brick-ports in the district, which afford shelter to hordes of banditti, &c., and has but few other durable buildings. The district has always been notorious for crime; and hitherto has been but of little service to the British.

RANGOON, a seaport of Pegu, once the principal mart for teak timber in the Birman empire, but now the seaport of the new British province of Pegu. It was founded by Atompro, king of Birman, in 1755. Here is a custom-house, built of brick, but the wharfs and dwelling-houses are all constructed of bamboo. It is a city spread upon part of a vast meadow, but little raised above high tides, and resembles a neglected swamp. The fortifications are of wood, and have no strength; and the whole town is as paltry in appearance as possible. In its neighbourhood are numerous convents, and 2 miles N. of the town, on a rocky eminence, is the Shoe-Dagon, a very grand temple, which is a splendid object at the distance of many miles. Rangoon surrendered to the British, February 1, 1825. It is seated on the most eastern branch of the Irrawaddy, which, hence to the sea, is called the Rangoon, or Syrian river; 18 miles N. of its mouth, and 60 S. of Pegu. Pop. in 1826, about 18,000 which is probably the present amount, though estimated by some much higher. Long. 96. 20. E. lat. 26. 42. N.

RATHFARNHAM, a town of Ireland, in the county of Dublin, 3 miles from Dublin.

RATHKEALE, a town of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, 13 miles from Dublin. It consists chiefly of one street a mile long, with several good houses and shops, and has a considerable retail trade.

RATHBOR, a town of Prussian Silesia, formerly the capital of a principality of the same name, with a castle. The cathedral and town-house are worthy of notice. It is seated on the Oder, 15 miles N.E. of Troppan, and 85 S.S.E. of Breslau. Pop. 3500.

RATIBON, a strong city of Bavaria, capital of the Upper Palatinate, and the see of an archbishop, transferred from Mentz to this place in 1798. It is one of the oldest towns in Germany, and has a proportionably antique appearance. The abbey of St. Emmeran contains the relics of St. Denys, a valuable library, and a fine collection of mathematical instruments. The town-house is magnificent, and in its hall the general diets of the empire used to meet. Ratibon has a great trade in salt, for which it is a depot, and sends large quantities of corn and wood to Vienna. In 1809 a battle was fought in the vicinity between the Austrians and French, in which the latter were victorious. It has an ancient bridge of 15 arches over the Danube, and stands on the S. side of that river, at the influx of the Regen; 62 miles N. by E. of Munich, and 195 W. by N. of Vienna. Pop. 22,000. Long. 12. 6. E. lat. 49. 1. N.

RATHOATH, a town of Ireland, in the county of Meath; 12 miles E. of Trim, and 12 N.W. of Dublin.

RATMANSDORF, a town of the Austrian states, in Carniola, with a castle; 20 miles S. by W. of Clagenfurt.

RATSHA, or RATSKA, a town and fortress of Slavonia, on the N. side of the Save opposite the influx of the Drin; 30 miles S.W. of Peterwardein.

RATTAN. See RUATAN.

RATZENBURG, a fortified town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, with a citadel. In its vicinity are copper mines, which also yield some silver. It is situate on the Inn; 26 miles E.N.E. of Innspruck, and 44 S.W. of Salzburg.

RATZBURG, a fortified town of Germany; capital of a principality, subject to the duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. It is seated on an island, in the midst of a lake 30 miles in circumference. The buildings are of brick, and almost every house is shaded with a tree. From the lake of Ratzburg issues the river Waknitz, which joins the Trave near Lubee. Ratzburg is noted for its excellent beer. It is 14 miles S. by E. of Lubee, and 22 S. of Lauenburgh. Long. 10. 52. E. lat. 53. 43. N.

RAUDNITZ, a town and castle of Bohemia, seated on the Elbe; 20 miles N. of Prague.

RAUMO, a town of Russia, in Finland; 20 miles S. of Bjorneburg, and 55 N. by W. of Abo.

RAUSCHENBERG, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel; 7 miles N.N.E. of Marburg, and 32 S.S.W. of Cassel.

RAUVEE, or RAVEE, a river of Hindostan in the Punjab; one of the five E. branches of the Indus. It rises in Lahore, on the borders of Tibet, flows by the city of Lahore to Toulomba, in the country of Moultan, and, 28 miles below, joins the Chumaut. The Rauvee is the Hydrates of Alexander.

RAVELLO, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, and a bishop's see; 10 miles W. of Salerno, and 25 S.E. of Naples.

RAVENGLASS, a seaport in Cumberland in Muncaster parish, with a market on Saturday. It stands on an inlet of the Irish sea, between the Mite and Esk, which, with the Ir, run into this inlet, and form a good harbour; but, the adjacent country furnishing little for exportation, its chief trade is in oysters; 2 miles from the town, on the S. side of the Esk, are ruins of 3 miles in circumference, called the city of Buræear, of which no historical documents appear to exist. It is 16 miles S.S.E. of Whitehaven, and 279 N.N.W. of London; on the Whitehaven and Furness railway.

RAVENNA, a city of Italy, in the states of the church, and an archbishop's see, with several colleges, a great number of religious houses, and a ruinous citadel. It has a celebrated harbour, but the sea has gradually withdrawn 4 miles from the town. It is chiefly deserving of notice for its architectural remains, having been the capital of Italy during the last days of the Western Empire and has many interesting remains and churches of the 5th and 6th centuries. The oldest remains are those of St. Vittore of the early part of the 4th century, but the earliest perfect church is that of Santa Agata Maggiore of the early part of the 5th century. The cathedral is modern, but was originally founded in the 4th century. But by far the most interesting of all the structures is the tomb of the immortal Dante who died in exile here on September 14th, 1321; his tomb is in the church of the Franciscan monastery, and was replaced by a magnificent sepulchre in 1780. The town has a few silk manufactures, and a large annual fair, but is very dull. Theodorie, king of the Goths, resided here, and afterwards the exarchs of the Greek emperors. The mausoleum of Theodorie is still to be seen, and is covered by a single stone, 21 feet in diameter and 15 thick. In 1512 the French under the Duke Nemours obtained a victory over the Spaniards which is commemorated by an obelisk near the town. Ravenna is seated on the river Mantone; 37 miles S.E. of Ferrara, and 162 N. of Rome. Pop. about 15,000. Long. 12. 5. E. lat. 44. 25. N.
