ADVANCE.

CHAPTER I
They were simply heartbroken. Yes, I repeat it, heartbroken. No diamond cement that ever was made sufficed to repair the injured organs. For when Philip Gilman left London to go out to India he cried his eyes red over his sad farewells to Aggie Oswald. They were in love with one another madly in love—as boys and girls will be, with that unalterable affection which endures for eternity or, to be more precisely mathematical, for six months at least on an average computation. Philip had been pleased third in the Indian civil competition, and he had almost as much money as he could lay his hands on. He had inherited a fortune (in depreciated rupees) he proceeded forthwith to lay at the feet of pretty little Aggie. And no wonder he did so, for she was as arsy for a little butterfly as ever flitting through a ball-room among adoring lads of one and twenty. Everybody who saw her fell a victim at once to that fluffy brown hair and that arch little smile of hers. The Oxford undergraduate was ever known to resist that tripping tongue; no subaltern at Aldershot was ever known to withstand the winning grace of those pinky white cheeks and those cherry red lips of Aggie Oswald's.

CHAPTER II
Five years rolled on, and Philip Gilman prospered. He wasn't quite a vicar, to be sure, but he was a deputy collector. Not a man in the Decan got on better than he did. His excellency was pleased to promote Mr. Philip Gilman to successive posts in successively dreary up country districts. Phil saved and scraped, and all for Aggie. At the end of five years, with his own little income and the £2000 pay, he began to feel himself in a position to think about marrying. He would send home for Aggie now and ask her to come out to him. He could redeem that long standing pledge and make himself and her happy.

Five years had rolled on, but they had rolled on (as observant souls may often note to be the case) by one day at a time, through 12 months of each year, with long slow regularity. Now, all these months Philip Gilman had written by every mail to Aggie, and by every mail he had heard in return from Aggie again. At first he had set down to write each time with ardent affection. He had torn open Aggie's letters, when they came, with eager expectancy. But as months passed by and he never saw Aggie this first flush of young love began to die away imperceptibly, until at last, almost without knowing it himself, he set down so many times a week to write his budget as a pure matter of duty. Sometimes he had worried him to have to find something fresh to say to Aggie; he wrote, not so much because he wanted to write, as because he knew Aggie would be disappointed not to get a letter. And so she would have been, indeed; she would have cried very bitterly that Phil should have neglected her. Phil was always so punctual; what could be the meaning of this delay? Was it possible that Phil, her dear Phil, was forgetting her?

There was a vast deal of difference, however, between 21 and 26. For those five long years Phil had saved every penny (he said penny quite naturally now) annas had grown not only too common and unclear to him, and at the end of that time, when he began to think to himself he might now send home for his beloved Aggie—why, a strange sort of discovery had suddenly overtaken him. Great heavens! What was this? Was he overjoyed at the prospect? Did he hail with effusion the advent of that long wished for, that much desired day? Well, he had not with delight, had not with wild expectancy? If the truth must be told—oh, dear me, not a bit of it! It occurred to him all at once that for the last two years or thereabout he had been saving and writing not for pure love, but by mere force of habit. The original flame had died down, the original impulse had worn itself out, and now, in their place, strange, critical doubts and fears obtruded all unawares their unwelcome faces.

Did he really love Aggie quite as well as he used to do? Did Aggie really love him quite as well as she once said she did? Had they two changed much in those five years? The absence? Well, Aggie's fluffy hair be quite as entrancing and as ardent as ever? Would Aggie's simplicity be as engaging as of old? Or, again, let him see; she was 18 then; would there be any simplicity left in her now? Aggie, indeed! Looking at the matter philosophically (and Indian civil servants are ex officio philosophers—it's part of the examination), he saw for himself how near both five years older, and five years wiser, he had made a deal of difference to both of them. Each might have developed, and each might now take a fresh view of the situation and of the other.

Objectively Aggie might be some body else; subjectively, he himself might think quite differently of her. Now, when a man begins to talk of object and subject in these matters at all, you may be perfectly sure the first flush of love's young dream is pretty well over with him. We certainly don't philosophize in the first full rapture. Phil Gilman realized all at once that love's young dream was well over with himself; he was aware that the idea of Aggie's arrival in India awakened within him, not transport nor even calm joy, but a certain languid curiosity as to what she would look like and how he would feel towards her.

Nevertheless, mind you, Phil Gilman was a man of honor. He stuck to his guns. He hadn't the slightest idea of going back upon his word or even of letting poor Aggie herself doubt the depth of his affection for her. Perhaps this was wrong—who knows? Perhaps the wisest thing, after all for a man to do in such a case is just to make a clean breast of it, rather than involve himself and the girl he once loved in a marriage that may prove unhappy for both of them. But at any rate Phil Gilman didn't think so, and somehow, do you know, I feel as if any man of honor in Phil Gilman's place would have acted just as he did. There's something so horribly cold blooded in talking a girl who has waited five years for you that you really don't know whether you love her any longer or not that only a very brutal man, I fancy, could ever consent to do it. It may be wise to act like that, no doubt, but there are qualities, after all, more to be prized than wisdom. I wouldn't give twopenny myself, dear friends, for a young man so wise as all that comes to.

CRISSCROSS LOVE.

So, after a brief moment's struggle, Phil wrote to Aggie, impassioned, to be sure, as he could not say that now at last the desire of his hearts for so many years was to be fully gratified, and they two were to meet once more and be happy sweet. To be sure, when the letter was finished, Phil read it over once or twice, leaning back in his bungalow lounge, with a critically dissatisfied air. Its ardent, somewhat wanting in spontaneity, he decided. It had lost longer the genuine impassioned ring of four or five years ago. But what would you have? If one can't quite rise to the height of such an occasion of one's own mere emotion, one must try to gush gush for the lady's sake alone, with literary aptitude. A man would be hardly a whole man, Phil supposed, if he consented to let a woman see he had begun to forget her.

He was a good looking fellow, with a most manly mustache, and I'm bound to admit he took more pains over his dressing that evening than he had taken on any other occasion. He was dressed in a suit of dark blue cloth, with a white shirt and a dark tie. He was standing in the doorway, looking out at the night. He was looking at the night, but he was not looking at the night. He was looking at the night, but he was not looking at the night. He was looking at the night, but he was not looking at the night.

When he went down he found Freda Trevelyan already seated before a most hospitable teapot. You must have lived in a hot climate at least once in your life in order thoroughly to appreciate the art of tea drinking. One would say beforehand that nobody would care for hot drinks with the thermometer at 90. Experience proved the exact contrary. The hotter the weather gets the more hot tea does humanity absorb, and the better does it love it. Phil threw himself into an easy chair and looked, if not engaged, at least unengaged. He was considered the handsomest man on the Broomfield hills, and he certainly looked so that afternoon. There's nothing to make a man look and talk his way like a pretty woman. It was what is euphemistically described as "the cool season" at Bombay, and the windows were all wide open, as it looks and sounds, yet it was delightful to his ear after three long years spent away far inland. He enjoyed that afternoon more than he had enjoyed anything for months and months. Poor Aggie's chances of a whole lover's heart seemed to fade and pale at each successive half hour.

For Miss Trevelyan, it seemed, was simply charming. She talked so admirably. And besides she was so frank. She had heard before of course that Phil had come down to Bombay to meet his future bride, and when a woman knows a man's really monopolized she treats him as if he were married—that is, she says "Thee" to him like a rational creature and not like an animal specially created for the sole purpose of flirtation. The consequence was that before half an hour was over Freda Trevelyan and Phil Gilman were laughing and chatting together as if they'd known one another for half their lives instead of for just 30 minutes.

"You mustn't think of me like that. I really couldn't bear that you should imagine me wanting in due—consideration for Aggie. But remember, we were young—we were both very young—when I went away from England. He paused a second. Then he spoke still more seriously. "At the time we both loved one another dearly. It was heartrending to part if we'd married then and there, we should no doubt have gone on loving one another just as dearly to this very day. But then we should have seen a great deal meanwhile of each other. As it is, conceal it as we may from ourselves, we must meet as strangers. My first anxiety will be to see what kind of a girl has come out to marry me. Aggie's first anxiety will be to see what kind of a man she has come out to marry. May I speak to you frankly—only in self-defence, you know, and to tell you your charge of fickleness? Well, till the moment arrived when I could send home for Aggie, my one feeling was a longing to be able to marry her. I looked at her photograph day and night with a distinct rapture. I looked at it often. It gave me a thrill to look at it. It was only on the very day that I wrote home to ask her to come out to me that another side to the question occurred to me. Then I sickened. I sickened when I thought of England, and if that girl could come out now I would love her just equally. But how do I know I shall love the girl at 23 who now bears the same name? And if I find her altered out of all recognition what a terrible thing for her! What a blow for both of us! How appalling to think you are marrying a woman you don't really love! How appalling for her to be married to a man who can't really love her! We're taking one another now in the dark put the best face you can upon it."

"You're too frightened, Mr. Gilman," Freda answered, with that charming smile of hers. "The moment you see her face the moment she sees you, all your love will return again with a rush. I'm sure it will because I can see you in earnest. You think of her as well as yourself, and with your own eyes, a man thinks of the woman as well as of himself, you may be perfectly sure he's a really good fellow."

The undermentioned advantages are claimed for MacKenzie's spectacles. 1st.—That from the peculiar construction of the lenses they ASSIST AND PRESERVE the sight, rendering frequent changes unnecessary. 2nd.—That they confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision, with an amount of ease and comfort not hitherto enjoyed by spectacle wearers. 3rd.—That the material from which the Lenses are ground is manufactured especially for optic purposes, by DR. CHARLES BARDOU'S improved patent method, and is PURE, HARD AND BRILLIANT, and not liable to become scratched. 4th.—That the frames in which they are set, whether in Gold, Silver or Steel, are of the finest quality and finish, and guaranteed perfect in every respect.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE TONIC AND Stomach and Liver Cure. The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years. It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar. It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk. This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned and experienced physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the general public.

IT IS A GREAT REMEDY FOR THE CURE OF Nervousness, Broken Constitution, Debility of Old Age, Indigestion and Dyspepsia, Heartburn and Sour Stomach, Weight and Tenderness in Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Frightful Dreams, Dizziness and Ringing in the Ears, Weakness of Extremities and Fainting, Impure and Impoverished Blood, Boils and Carbuncles, Scrofula, Scrofulous Swellings and Ulcers, Consumption of the Lungs, Catarrh of the Lungs, Bronchitis and Chronic Cough, Liver Complaint, Chronic Diarrhea, Delicate and Scrofulous Children, Summer Complaint of Infants.

NERVOUS DISEASES. As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied, and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nervous system recovers. As the nervous system is the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutrition necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous derangement.

A SWORN CURE FOR ST. VITAS' DANCE OR CHOREA. My daughter, eleven years old, was severely visited with St. Vitus' Dance or Chorea. We gave her three and one-half bottles of South American Nervine and she was completely restored. I believe it will cure every case of St. Vitus' Dance. I have kept it in my family for two years, and am sure it is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion and Dyspepsia, and for all forms of Nervous Disorders and Falling Health, from whatever cause. J. H. HARRIS, Esq., Town, Montgomery Co., Md.

INDIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA. The Great South American Nervine Tonic. Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unalarming disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.
