Poetry.

HEART-SICK.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

Shelter me in your arms!
Your clinging, faithful arms!
And hide me away from the bleak, bleak day,
And the weird winds, wild alarms.
My life seems suddenly old! and the world
seems strangely cold,
And the shadows so drear are drooping near,
With never a tinge of gold.

Hold me close to your breast,
Your tender loving breast,
And hold me so near that I cannot hear
The weird winds' wild unrest.
O pillow my weary head! for my beautiful hopes are dead,
And the clouds of woe have dropped so low,
I shiver in nameless dread.

Touch my cheeks with your lips,
Your warm caressing lips,
And let me forget that the sun has set
In a rayless, drear eclipse;
In a rayless, riftless cloud, like a winding sheet or shroud.

And loud and shrill, o'er mead and hill,
The weird wind cries aloud.
Call me a tender name,
Some soothing, petting name.
I am sick of the strife and the toil of life,
Of the race for wealth and fame;
I am ill in heart and brain, with a nameless wearying pain.

And below or above these is naught but love
That is not poor and vain.

Sickness of the Prince of Wales.

The pageant in London to celebrate the recovery of the Heir Apparent to the British Throne, reminds us of an occurrence which ought to be kept before the people for the benefit of other princes and whom it may concern. We allude to the report that a few hours before the Prince's case, took a favorable turn, the treatment was changed from brandy to milk. For three days preceding this, the patient's condition seemed to be hopeless. The tri-daily bulletins gave no word of encouragement. But, during all this time of doubt and dependency the physicians were trying to keep the breath of life in the patient by frequent doses of brandy and other stimulants. The physicians of his father, the late Prince Albert, tried to keep him alive in the same manner, and thereby probably occasioned his death; for, on the sixth or seventh day from the "attack" of what his physicians termed a slight indisposition, the patient ceased to breathe.

The case of the Prince of Wales became so desperate, that his physicians diagnosed two fatal complications, in addition to the dangerous typhoid fever. One was a "goneness" of one lung—whatever that may mean—and the other was a "perforation of the bowels." But, in very despair another physician was called in consultation, when the stimulants were discontinued and milk substituted. The result was, as soon as the poisoned and intoxicated system had time to relieve itself of the medicine, the patient began to recover.

What a lesson is taught in this plain statement of facts! Yet how few will ever know these facts, or profit by them if known! Already the newspapers and medical journals are proposing honors, and the authorities are bestowing emoluments on the eminent medical gentlemen for their assiduous attentions to the Prince, and their marvellous skill in carrying him safely through the perils of so terrible a disease as the Sandringham typhoid! We have no desire to detract the pleasure of the grand performance at St. Paul's, although it cost a dozen persons their lives (they were not patients), to those who delight in doing homage to rank and position; but we deem it a solemn duty not to fail to point the moral of the story that involves the lives of hundreds and of thousands. If the doctors, in all similar cases, will give milk instead of brandy, or will even omit the stimulants without giving the milk, there will be less danger of the patients' dying, and no danger whatever of mistaking intoxication for "goneness" of one lung, nor of misjudging the vomiting of narcotics for "perforation of the bowels."—[From Science of Health.

Brandy and Typhoid Fever.

Now that the Prince of Wales has recovered, and the doctors are disputing whether the administration of brandy in his case was wise or otherwise, it may be well to glance at the authorities; for certainly, in view of the fact that alcoholic stimulants are generally resorted to by the medical profession in all parts of the world, in the treatment of all low fevers, whether mild or malignant, it becomes an interesting question whether this treatment tends towards recovery, or in the opposite direction. The lives of thousands every year depend on the decision of this question. Hygienic physicians have treated typhoid fevers for twenty years without losing a patient. But as they oppose all medicines, their testimony against alcohol must be ruled out, no matter how successful their practice may be. We go, therefore, to the head-quarters of those who use drugs, and believe in stimulants, for testimony, and there we find enough of it to condemn alcohol in fevers tetotally and forever.

Two hundred and sixty English physicians of eminence and experience have recently testified publicly that alcohol is unnecessary in the treatment of any disease, and injurious in many. (But this does not go far enough. And we propose to prove by authorities which cannot be gamed, that alcohol, in the very diseases for which the majority of physicians consider it indispensable, is not only unnecessary but positively pernicious.)

Of the twelve allopathic colleges in London, Guy's Hospital is the most renowned. Dr. Wilkes is one of its professors, and one of England's most distinguished physicians. On the subject of alcoholic medication, Dr. Wilkes uses the following remarkable language: "At the present time there are advocates for a universal method in favor of alcohol in all cases of fever. In my intercourse with medical men, I judge that very many are scarcely alive to the fact that typhus fever is very rarely fatal in young persons, and, therefore, that they are too apt to attribute recovery to their remedies. Young persons 'always do well if let alone.' Of this fact I could now quote a large number of cases in proof; and, on the contrary, the few instances which I have seen and fatally have been those in which a large amount of stimulants was given from the commencement of the disease; and what, perhaps, is even more to the point, the withdrawal of stimulants, in some cases where it was adopted as the method of treatment, has been attended with the most decided advantage. The only two cases which I have seen fatal of late, have been those of two students to whom a large amount of stimulant was given, and who had the care of the most assiduous nurses night and day."

No fewer patients die except those who take stimulants! This is the testimony of Dr. Wilkes. In commenting on the above, one of the leading medical journals, the London "Lancet," says:—"There are few things more remarkable in the recent history of medicine than the extent to which alcohol has been introduced, and the importance which has been attached to it in the treatment of disease. Judging from the London practice of the last few years, a cursory and casual observer might think that alcohol was a remedy of specific power."

Professor Gardiner, of the University of Glasgow, condemns stimulants in fevers pointedly and pungently. His language is: "To give wine, whisky, and beef-tea, while withholding milk, is simply in my opinion, to destroy your patient; because you are thereby poisoning blood. I believe that infinite mischief has been done in typhus fever, and in all fevers, by giving wine instead of milk. It is a fatal delusion."

Professor Carson, of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, explains the convalescence of the Prince of Wales a few hours after the treatment was changed from brandy to milk, on the theory that the brandy had operated well, and the patient was just ready to convalesce, and the treatment was changed. What will he say to testimonials such as those of Drs. Wilkes and Gardiner, and the London "Lancet"?—[Science of Health.

An Illinois editor has become so hollow from depending upon the printing business alone for bread, that he proposes to sell himself for stove pipe at three cents a foot. He was too fond of gas to succeed—and he will be smoked now.

Two Sides to It.

"Let's play 'make-believe!'" said Annie More, to her little friend Josie Horton. "You be blind Tom, and I'll be the boys! Here, put this old hat on first, and take this stick to walk with!" And away went the sweet face and the sunny curls, the blithe limbs and the merry feet, through the sunshine, down to the old oak tree.

Josie followed more slowly, for she had shut her blue eyes, and was walking blindly through the sunshine.

She put the stick carefully down before every step, as she had seen poor old Tom do, and walked along with her face bent down, as if the light hurt it.

"Halloo, there, old Tom! Can't you run a race with us this morning?" And Annie pulled the stick away, and knocked the hat off, and then laughed till the tears came to see the funny way in which Josie tried to be blind.

"Please let the old blind man be," pleaded Josie, in a sweet voice, trembling with hidden laughter. "I shall not know how to find my way home without my good stick."

"O," cried Annie, shouting with merriment, "you did that splendidly, Josie!"

"Do you think so, my children?" said a kind voice near them. And turning round in blushing surprise, they saw old Mr. Horton, Josie's grandfather, standing near and watching them.

"We were only playing, grandpa," said Josie, softly. "We would not really tease old Tom."

"I hope not, my darling; but it is cruel to mock at the sufferings of another person. If you knew how old Tom Lance came to be blind, I am sure you could never laugh at his misfortune."

"And do you know it, grandpa?" Wont you tell us?" pleaded Josie, with a warm kiss on the withered cheek, that seventy years before had been young and fair, and sweet, and marvelously like little Josie's own, of peach-bloom and lily.

"Sit down here on the old bench then, and I'll tell you the story, though a sad one."

"A long time ago, my darlings, when old Tom Lance was young, and strong, and active, one of the finest-looking men in the town where he lived, though only a serving man, he hired out to Farmer Rathburn to work on his farm. A very faithful servant he proved himself, never shirking any duty imposed on him, willing and ready to work out of hours if his master needed his services; but when the labor of the day was all over, he would put on a clean suit of clothes and go up to the house and beg permission to take little Lola walking. He was so honest and reliable that his father and mother were always glad to have him take her, and many a run over the fields, and many a ramble through the woods, did she get through Tom's kindness."

"The child grew to love Tom, and Tom loved her from the first minute that he saw her curly head nodding at him from the sitting-room window the day he came."

"One night Farmer Rathburn's barn was set on fire. The night was cold, and the wind blowing hard, and in less than an hour the house itself was all in flames. Mr. Rathburn was busy getting out the furniture, Mrs. Rathburn had her baby in her arms, and Jenny, the nurse, had been sent up stairs for Lola. But she was a cowardly girl, and took the opportunity to secure all her own things and make her escape, just saying to Tom as she passed through the yard:

"Lola is in her bed yet, and nobody has thought of her."

"It took Tom about five minutes to dash up the stairs, secure the precious burden in his arms, and get down again. Her father met him at the door and took her from him, but at that instant a burning beam fell down right across brave Tom's face, and knocked him down. They drew him quickly away, and everything was done for him that could be done, but it was of no avail. Poor Tom Lance was blind for life."

For many weary years he has managed to earn his own living, but now he is old and feeble, and the town supports him."

Very quietly and with tears in his eyes Annie and Josie crept away, but never again did they laugh at a poor blind man.

Trifles.

One of the most fatal mistakes that I know of in household economy is a neglect of, or indifference to, the influence of little things. "Oh, it's only a trifle," is a saying which, set on, has wrecked the comfort of many a home. Let us think of a few "trifles" familiar to us all, and the consequences they frequently lead to, which by our want of thought or observation are unfamiliar.

It was a trifling fault in Mrs. Tilt's servant, which her mistress was too much occupied to remonstrate against, remedy, or prevent, that she seldom put the kettle lid on close and tight, so that the water became smoky; and poor Mr. Tilt, a delicate man, unwillingly to annoy his otherwise excellent wife by complaining of trifles, often was unable to relish his breakfast. Unrefreshed, and therefore uncomfortable he began his long day's work at his office in the city, and wondered at his feelings sinking, and yet with no appetite for "fool" at mid-day. He must have some thing; a little stimulant will set him right, he thinks, and give him working power for a while, and so the daily dram becomes a daily necessity, and then he loses its effect unless increased, and Mr. Tilt loses his relish for solid food, and becomes thinner and weaker every day, until people exclaim: "Desk-work is killing poor Tilt."

I wish he could eat such a breakfast as I do, says a vigorous man, quite as old and as hard worked as Tilt. Tilt might have answered, had he seen the well-spread and well-served breakfast-table of his acquaintance: "I wish I had—had a breakfast to eat."

Tea, coffee, or cocoa, smacking not smoky, G-d appetizing bread and butter, wholesome, well-cooked, well-served simply relishes to promote the appetite at this cheery morning meal, and the comfort on his bristling way to business so satisfied and well, that the toil of the day are cheerfully encountered, healthy appetite at accustomed hours come, and night finds him weary'd content, but not exhausted. Surely any cause that spoils the appetite for breakfast is not really a trifle.

A stair-rod comes loose in the carpet of a flight of stairs, just at that awkward turn in the staircase where the carpet always needs careful folding and exact laying. Mary the housemaid, thinks it a trifle. She is not going to bother herself to put it right till the regular day for cleaning the stairs comes round.

Perchance mischief won't notice it, for she's got a whole bundle of new books from the library and her eyes are quite as sharp then for every little trifle.

But, as it happened, the mistress had her faculties of observation still more sharpened that day, for she heard that a near neighbor had cut his foot in a loose stair carpet, and fell down a long flight, badly spraining his ankle, besides other injuries which his age made serious. The talkative servant, who told the incident to all the tradespeople, wound up with, "Only to think, such a trifle, just one stair-rod got out somehow."

I think that awkward nail left in the flooring at Mrs. Scamper's, which I know had a way of catching to everybody's dress that came near it, would have remained there until now in spite of that lady's remark—"Dear me, that nasty nail! I must have it removed. How those trifling annoyances make themselves felt!"—but that Am-lis Scamper, having tried on a beautiful work-maid dress her father gave her as a birthday present, came to exhibit herself to her parents, and, turning swiftly round, the delicate embroidery caught the retentive nail, and a frightful rent, all across the pattern into the front breadth, tore not only the dress, but the temper of the party. Amelia, who told you to swing round like that?

Mrs. Scamper, said the father, why ever do you not see that your servants do their work properly?—What business had that nail there?

Mrs. Scamper, you always say everything is my fault. I can't be answerable for every trifle—low can I?

After a this ranting of garments and feelings, I hope the nail was removed, but it would have been better, surely, had it been knocked in or taken out when first observed.

My dear, is Jane in the habit of leaving your street door ajar? said Mr. Scam, one evening on his return home, and finding his house entrance unguarded by the usual lock.

Oh, no; how can you ask such a question? She only just stepped out, for something is the matter with the latch key, I think, and she cannot use it.

Let me see it. The "something" was only crumbs of dust, easily removed, and the key was restored with the word: Keep it hang on its proper nail in the kitchen, and not fiddle about in the dust, for the future, for it is dangerous leaving the door unsecured in this crowded neighborhood.

How much, my dear, you do make of a little trifle, was the remark, in an injured tone, of Mrs. Scam.

Jane noticed that tone, and took it as proof that her mistress was not so particular as her master, and so she shaped her course by the "trifle" of those few words. I think it was not a month after that she rushed off to post her letters, the latch key was not on its nail, but up stairs in the pocket of the gown she had taken off that afternoon. Why should she go all the way up stairs for it, when the letter post was just round the corner—no, she would just step out on that trifling errand, and the door would be all safe of course. Away went Jane; and just as she was putting the letters into the post, a remarkably civil-spoken young man asked her, saying he was a stranger from the country, the name of the street, and how far it was from the Regent's Park? Would she just point it out, he did not quite understand? Jane gave him a very exact direction, and repeated it going on a step or two, so as to show him how there was a street round the next turning that branched off just in the route he sought. The young man, hardly staying to thank her, then went swiftly off, and Jane, looking after him with vacant stare, slowly retraced her steps to the house. The door was shut.

Bolter the wind, it's blown the door to, Or master has come home, and he'll be making another fuss, and vex the mistress, was, as she afterwards owned, the thought of the girl. She had to ring for admission. Mrs. Scam however was not pleased at all at having to open the door for her. But what was that momentary displeasure to her consternation when, on Jane lighting the last lamp, she exclaimed: "Why, Jane, what have you done with your master's great coat and his umbrella? Why his railroad rug was rolled up there to day?"

To this the only answer was a loud scream from Jane, who exclaimed: "I saw 'em there on a minute or so ago, when I just stepped out to post the letters." Up comes Mr. Scam at that moment. I leave my readers to judge whether he thought the matter a trifle; neither ultimately did poor Jane. She lost her place, and having been seen speaking to the young man who was justly considered an accomplice in the robbery, was very near losing her character. But her mistress said very justly, "I blame myself more than you; I am, I know, too apt to neglect little things and call them trifles."

Mr. Scam was not much in the humor to comfort himself with a quotation then, but afterwards I found both him and his wife fond of the old motto:

"Think naught a trifle, though it small appears, Sands make the mountain, moments make the years, And trifles life."

San Francisco.

You will find San Francisco one of the pleasantest and most novel of all the sights of California. The hotels are admirably kept; the streets are full of strange sights; the Cliff House, to which you ought to drive in the early morning and eat there an admirably cooked breakfast, amid the roar of the Pacific's surf and the howling of the sea lions, will make one of your pleasantest experiences; at Woodward's Garden a good collection of grizzly bears, and wild beasts native to California, will amuse and instruct children from fifteen to fifty years of age; the Chinese and Japanese shops have curiosities at all prices from twenty-five cents to five hundred dollars; and the Chinese quarter will occupy you several days, if you are at all curious.

You will easily find the streets devoted to the Chinese. They occupy a considerable part of the heart of the city; and their shops in Sacramento, though you will not find much to buy in them, nor many of the merchants or clerks able to speak or understand English. Ladies and children may safely and properly walk in the main streets in the Chinese quarter by day. The tourist who wishes to investigate further should get a policeman stationed among the Chinese to show him around after dark. He will see some strange and unpleasant sights at this hour. But all may go to the Chinese theatre. If you have a party of ladies and children, you should apply the day before to the manager of the theatre, a Chinaman, whom you will find on the premises, for a box. This will cost you two dollars, and fifty cents additional for every person in your party. Go about half past eight, and stay until ten or eleven. The boxes are up stairs, at one end of the gallery; opposite you will see the Chinese women huddled together in a place by themselves; the audience below vehemently resents the indecency of a woman in the pit. The play usually contains some admirable feats of tumbling; but the whole performance you will find most strange and extraordinary. The orchestra sit in the back of the stage, and the performers and actors smoke and sip tea in the intervals when they happen to be disengaged. The costumes are costly and elaborate; the acting appears to us Western barbarians as outrageously absurd; and the voices are the very soul of discordantly married to the music, which will set your teeth on edge and pierce your ears with its fierce and continual clangor and shrill screams.

John Fraser of Montreal, known in literary circles as "Cousin Sandy" was found drowned this afternoon in the river, and it is supposed he fell over the cliff.

London, June 6.
In the House of Lords to night the Earl of Derby read a letter from Sir Stafford Northcote, correcting the statement made by the former in his speech on Monday night, to the effect that there was no understanding between the members of the Joint High Commission that indirect claims were not to be presented, and that the Commissioners were, therefore, careless in drawing up the treaty. Sir Stafford Northcote declared positively that the Commission did understand that promise was given that the claims for indirect damages would be withdrawn.

Earl Granville also read a letter from Mr. Schenck, American Minister, affirming that the supplemental article is amply sufficient to exclude indirect claims, and authorizing the statement to be made as coming from Washington that that article is a final settlement of the question of said claims. The announcement was received with cheers.

Earl Derby said this put a new face on matters and he thought the debate ought to stop. Cheers.

A semi-official despatch from Washington says that neither the British Legation or the Department of State have advised from London of a decisive character concerning the additional article to the Treaty of Washington. Mr. Schenck again telegraphs reiterating his opinion that it will be accepted, and in this the official authorities here coincide.

MURDER OF TWO OFFICERS IN INDIA.

A deplorable occurrence is reported by the mail from India. A private named John Butler, of the 108th regiment, stationed at Deesa, a man of bad character, in a determined manner watched all night for Capt. A. H. Laurie, of his regiment, and on his going out in the morning for parade fired at him two or three times. Lieut. and Adj. Albert Munro, hearing the shots and the screams of Mrs. Laurie, who witnessed the occurrence, rode to the spot, and was shot dead by Butler. The wretch then fired again at Capt. Laurie, who was fearfully wounded, and at two other officers, who fortunately escaped, and when pursued he managed to blow his brains out, firing in all eleven shots from his gun in a few minutes. Captain Laurie died shortly after. Both officers were great favorites with their regiment. No motive for the horrible crime is assigned. Capt. Laurie served with the Saur Field Division in 1859 and obtained a medal.—[Homeward Mail.]

BRANCH BANK IN FREDERICTON.—The Bank of B. N. America, which has recently opened agencies in St. John, St. Stephen, and St. Andrews, is expected to establish another in Fredericton. The "Reporter" says:—

The Central Bank Building and grounds have been purchased by Alex. Gibson Esq.

Rumor has it that a branch of the Bank of British North America is shortly to be established in Fredericton, and that the premises have been purchased with this object in contemplation.

ARREST FOR ROBBERY.—The two innocent maidens who were found on the street on Wednesday night by a policeman, and taken to the station for protection, found themselves in custody again last night, under different circumstances, having been arrested by Detective Hunt on a charge of stealing money from a man named Griffin, at New Minas, Horton. Their names are Mary Spencer and Pauline Sanders. A constable arrived in town yesterday in search of them. The two were brought up to the Police Court, to-day, and handed over to the custody of the constable who departed with his charge in the afternoon train for Kentville.—[Halifax Reporter.]

Business of all kinds has been very brisk in Fredericton this spring. Our merchants, one and all, have been kept unusually busy, and our several manufactories have had more orders than usual and are, to use an every day expression "rushed with work." The mills in the neighborhood of the City are working long hours, and in fact every branch of industry seems to be flourishing. Wages are high, and the demand for mechanics and laborers is unprecedented. In a few words Fredericton is looking up.—[Id.]

The Standard.

SAINT ANDREWS, JUNE 12, 1872.

GOLD.—Another sensation, which may end as previous discoveries have done, is the finding of a rich deposit of gold quartz not very far from the old mine town of Charlotte. A young man left at the STANDARD Office this week, a piece of quartz containing some specks of gold, which he said he broke off a rock, while "prospecting" a short time ago. The outside of the quartz is black and slaty and appears as though it had been exposed to the action of fire, and the particles of gold are soft and easily detached from the quartz. It is sufficiently rich, however, to warrant the expense of an investigation. The finder of the quartz says he is prepared to negotiate with persons willing to invest in mining.

Death of Capt. Hallet Whitlock.

We sincerely regret to state that a despatch was received this morning by W. Whitlock, Esq., from Cardenas, June 11, announcing the death of Capt. Whitlock, of the Bge. "Hesperus," on the night of the 10th inst. Capt. Whitlock was a native of St. Andrews, eldest son of S. H. Whitlock, Esq., and a young man of much promise; he was a general favorite, and respected by all who knew him. In common with the community, we sympathize with his family in their great distress. Alas! how many of the best young men of this Port, who adopted the sea as a profession, have been suddenly summoned from time to eternity.

The late heavy and frequent rains have brought forward the grass crop, which from present appearances will be an abundant one. The ground is so wet that many farmers have not been able to finish their ploughing, and others have not even begun. Some fears are entertained that the potatoes which have been planted will rot from the long continued wet, but we trust that the warm weather will bring them forward.

The County Court was opened yesterday, (Tuesday) His Honor Judge Stevens, presiding. A large number of strangers attended the opening of the Court. There were four criminal cases and five civil causes entered for trial.

The Hon. Mrs. Tilley and family arrived here on Monday by steamer. The Minister of Customs may be expected here before the end of the month.

The Election in Queens County to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of the hon. G. D. Bailey to the Council, will be held on the 21st instant.

Isaac Barpee, Esq., of Portland, is the coming man to represent St. John to the Commons, in the room of the hon. John H. Gray. Mr. Barpee's popularity is commensurate with his enterprise and public spirit, and that is all that is required to secure his election. The hon. S. L. Tilley it is admitted will be returned without opposition. Who will fill the third seat recently given to St. John, is unknown. Mr. D. S. Kerr, Mr. Elder, and another gentleman are candidates. With the people of St. John county rests the decision; we will not follow the example of some contemporaries and presume to dictate to the people of another county whom they shall elect.

Under the marriage head to-day, is the name of a gentleman well known and deservedly appreciated in St. Andrews, as one who on several occasions has written favorably of the town and people. A few years ago the ladies of the place presented him with a handsome dressing gown as acknowledgement of his valuable aid in writing up the town; and we heartily join with them in their congratulations on his marriage. It is greatly necessary to say, that the gentleman alluded to is Christopher Armstrong, Esq., one of the editors and proprietors of the "St. John Globe."

Was Campobello sold? is the latest conundrum propounded by the "Globe." Perhaps one of its city contemporaries can tell who was sold.

REVENGE!—"La Minerve," in commenting on the vote on the New Brunswick School law question, thus gives vent to its irate feelings, and "lets the cat out of the bag" with reference to what may be expected should the present Government be defeated at the polls, at the next election:—

"The vote of Wednesday affords in a serious manner the feelings we have entertained towards men who owe to us almost all their position they occupy. We cannot forget that these men of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, at present Ministers by favor of the Conservative party of Ontario and Quebec, be long to the so called Liberal school, and their present conduct forces us to consider their alliance as the saddest of political necessities. They have inflicted on us an odious injustice at this time. Let them rest assured that henceforth we shall look for REVENGE—to the day when we shall hiss them out at the door."

THE JULY NUMBER OF BALLOU'S MAGAZINE.—The July number of Ballou's Magazine commences a new volume, the 36th of this popular and prosperous monthly. It is good and cheap, its mission is to enlighten and amuse, to instruct and delight. The contents of the July number are excellent, and we do not hesitate to call our readers' attention to it. See what can be obtained for 15 cents, or $1.50 per year. Address Thomas & Talbot, 63 Congress Street, Boston.

PROSPECTS OF THE Spring Hill Mining Co., has been received from E. N. Sharpe, Esq. The capital is $400,000; shares $50 each. 2,600 shares are offered to public subscription; the remaining 5,400 shares being reserved to the original proprietors of the mines. We may refer this undertaking in the future number.

About Crops.

A correspondent of the Springfield Republican thus exposes those harpies the flour speculators in the States:

"The recent excitement in the wheat market and consequent advance in the price of that commodity, were evidently results, in great measure, of a speculative influence. The silk of an impending flour famine is all sheer nonsense. In the first place a large proportion of last year's harvest still rests in the hands of the producers, who are awaiting anxiously for a still further advance in price. Then again the hue and cry echoing through the country at the present time, that the coming wheat harvest will prove a failure, is a false alarm, sounded for a purpose alike by speculators who hold large invoices of flour for sale, and by farmers who have not yet parted with their last year's crop. The report that winter wheat was all either seriously winter killed, or subsequently destroyed by spring drought, is only correct in the most limited sense. In some parts of New York state, wheat fields have suffered in part through these influences, but had every wheat field in the entire state been totally ruined in this or any other manner, the disaster should not advance the market price of wheat the value of a single penny per bushel. The fact is, New York, as a wheat producing state is essentially 'played out.' The farmers have 'wheat-died' the soil to death. The area given to this crop has diminished rapidly during the last twenty years, while the number of bushels per acre has decreased in about equal proportion. New York farmers are nearly through with raising wheat, and it is about time they found it out. If the very best wheat lands in the State produce twenty bushels per acre, it is called a first class crop, while ten or twelve bushels is considered a fair average harvest. The land is worn out for wheat; the majority of the farmers are learning the fact by experience, and are branching into the production of other staples. It is true that winter wheat and spring drought did injure the wheat fields of New York, as these in some other places I have heard of, but not, by any means, to the disastrous extent represented. Winter wheat fields, in most what producing districts throughout the Western States, promise a more than average harvest, while the average of spring wheat in the same districts far exceeds that of any previous season. With the present amount of that grain in store throughout the country, and the present prospect of a plentiful harvest, if the current price of flour is sustained, it must be achieved through a speculative influence alone. In spite of the general absence of rain, grass is coming forward gradually all through the Middle States and Ohio, and if June proves a propitious month, the yield of that great New England staple will be abundant. Everywhere in the New England States, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, the native fruits have displayed a perfect prodigality of bloom, and if one tenth of the fruit now setting, matures, there is certain to be an excess of all the common fruits in their season of harvest."

A dastardly attempt to set fire to the Temperance hall at Douglastown, occurred between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock on Thursday morning last. A lot of straw was placed under the building and set fire to, but the flames were kept by the workmen in Mr. Hutchinson's and extinguished before any serious damage was done. Such an outrage ought to be thoroughly investigated, and every effort made to bring the guilty party or parties to justice.

THE BANGOR WHIG says that between 3 and 4 o'clock Tuesday morning the police found a man near "City Point" terribly tattered and beaten, and took him to the lockup for shelter. He gave his name as Daniel C. Doyle and said he belonged in the Provinces. Some hours before he was found, he could not tell exactly at what time, he says he was attacked by some person or persons, who approaching from behind knocked him down. He had about $40 in his pocket when attacked, and when he had recovered his senses—for the blows he received stunned him—the money was gone. No clue has been obtained to the robbers, as there seems to be nothing to identify them.

You should also, during the day, visit the Chinese temples, or joss houses, to which a policeman will guide you. They are in the shabby style of the theatre, decorated with cheap tinsel; but you will see the Chinese manner of worship, and in one of the temples some curious carving in wood.

The Chinese quarter is perfectly safe and orderly; and you need no protection, even for ladies and children, in going to the theatre or elsewhere.—Charles Nordhoff, in Harper's Magazine for June.

An old bachelor recently gave utterance to the following jeu d'esprit: He was introduced to a beautiful widow of the same name as himself. The introduction was in this wise: "Mr. Evans, permit me to introduce you to Mrs. Evans." "Mrs. Evans?" exclaimed the spirited bachelor, "the very lady I have been in search of for the last forty years!"

A Chicago lady who is trying to break herself of the habit of smoking has cut herself down to fifteen cigars a day.

A famous English Judge had a habit of begging pardon on every occasion. At the close of the assize, as he was about to leave the bench, the officer of the court reminded him that he had not passed the sentence of death on one of the criminals, as he had intended. "Dear me," said his lordship; "I really beg his pardon. Bring him in."
